MERRY WIVES

OF

WINDSOR.

* Merry Wives of Windsor.] A few of the incidents in this comedy might have been taken from an old tranflation of Il Pecorone by Giovanni Fiorentino. I have lately met with the fame ftory in a very contemptible performance, intitled, The fortunate, the deceived, and the unfortunate Lovers. Of this book, as I am told, there are feveral impreffions; but that in which I read it was publifhed in 1632, quarto. A fomewhat fimilar ftory occurs in Piacevoli Notti di Straparola, Nott. 4a. Fav. 4a.

This comedy was firft entered at Stationers' Hall, Jan. 18, 1601, by John Bufby. Steevens.

This play fhould be read between K. Henry IV. and K. Henry V. Johnson.

A paffage in the firft fketch of The Merry Wives of Windfor fhews, I think, that it ought rather to be read between The Firft and The Second Part of King Henry IV. in the latter of which young Henry becomes king. In the laft act, Falftaff fays:

> " Herne the hunter, quoth you? am I a ghoft?
> " 'Sblood, the fairies hath made a ghoft of me.
> " What, hunting at this time of night!
> " I'le lay my life the mad prince of Wales
> " Is ftealing his father's deare."

and in this play, as it now appears, Mr. Page difcountenances the addreffes of Fenton to his daughter, becaufe " he keeps company with the wild prince, and with Poins."

The Fifhwife's Tale of Brainford in Westward for Smelts, a book which Shakfpeare appears to have read, (having borrowed from it a part of the fable of Cymbeline,) probably led him to lay the fcene of Falftaff's love adventures at Windfor. It begins thus: " In Windfor not long agoe dwelt a fumpterman, who had to wife a very faire but wanton creature, over whom, not without caufe, he was fomething jealous; yet had he never any proof of her inconftancy."

The reader who is curious in fuch matters may find the ftory of The Lovers of Pifa, mentioned by Dr. Farmer in the following note, at the end of this play. Malone.

The adventures of Falftaff in this play feem to have been taken from the ftory of The Lovers of Pifa, in an old piece, called Tarleton's Newes out of Purgatorie. Mr. Capell pretended to much knowledge of this fort; and I am forry that it proved to be only pretenfion.

Mr. Warton obferves, in a note to the laft Oxford edition, that the play was probably not written, as we now have it, before 1607, at the earlieft. I agree with my very ingenious friend in this ſuppoſition, but yet the argument here produced for it may not be concluſive. Slender obſerves to maſter Page, that his greyhound was out-run on Cotſale [Cotſwold-Hills in Glouceſterſhire]; and Mr. Warton thinks, that the games, eſtabliſhed there by Captain Dover in the beginning of K. James's reign, are alluded to. But, perhaps, though the Captain be celebrated in the Annalia Dubrenſia as the founder of them, he might be the reviver only, or ſome way contribute to make them more famous; for in The Second Part of Henry IV. 1600, Juſtice Shallow reckons among the Swinge-bucklers, "Will Squeele, a Cotſole man."

In the firſt edition of the imperfect play, Sir Hugh Evans is called on the title page, the Welch Knight; and yet there are ſome perſons who ſtill affect to believe, that all our author's plays were originally publiſhed by himſelf. FARMER.

Dr. Farmer's opinion is well ſupported by "An Eclogue on the noble Aſſemblies revived on Cotſwold Hills, by Mr. Robert Dover." See Randolph's Poems, printed at Oxford, 4to. 1638, p. 114. The hills of Cotſwold, in Glouceſterſhire, are mentioned in K. Richard II. Act II. ſc. iii. and by Drayton, in his Polyolbion, ſong 14. STEEVENS.

Queen Elizabeth was ſo well pleaſed with the admirable character of Falſtaff in The Two Parts of Henry IV. that, as Mr. Rowe informs us, ſhe commanded Shakſpeare to contiune it for one play more, and to ſhew him in love. To this command we owe The Merry Wives of Windſor; which, Mr. Gildon ſays, [Remarks on Shakſpeare's Plays, 8vo. 1710,] he was very well aſſured our author finiſhed in a fortnight. But this muſt be meant only of the firſt imperfect ſketch of this comedy. An old quarto edition which I have ſeen, printed in 1602, ſays, in the title-page,—As it hath been divers times acted before her majeſty, and elſewhere. This, which we have here, was altered and improved by the author almoſt in every ſpeech. POPE. THEOBALD.

Mr. Gildon has likewiſe told us, "that our author's houſe at Stratford bordered on the Church-yard, and that he wrote the ſcene of the Ghoſt in Hamlet there." But neither for this, or the aſſertion that the play before us was written in a fortnight, does he quote any authority. The latter circumſtance was firſt mentioned by Mr. Dennis. "This comedy," ſays he, in his Epiſtle Dedicatory to The Comical Gallant, (an alteration of the preſent play,) 1702, "was written at her [Queen Elizabeth's] command, and by her direction, and ſhe was ſo eager to ſee it acted, that ſhe commanded it to be finiſhed in fourteen days; and was afterwards, as tradition tells us, very well pleaſed at the reprefentation." The information, it is probable, came originally from Dryden, who from his intimacy with Sir William Davenant had an opportunity of learning many particulars concerning our author.

At what period Shakfpeare new-modelled The Merry Wives of Windfor is unknown. I believe it was enlarged in 1603. See fome conjectures on the fubject in the Attempt to afcertain the Order of his Plays, Vol. II. MALONE.

It is not generally known, that the firft edition of The Merry Wives of Windfor, in its prefent ftate, is in the valuable folio, printed 1623, from whence the quarto of the fame play, dated 1630, was evidently copied. The two earlier quartos, 1602 and 1619, only exhibit this comedy as it was originally written, and are fo far curious, as they contain Shakfpeare's firft conceptions in forming a drama, which is the moft complete fpecimen of his comick powers. MERRY WIVES

ACT I. SCENE I.

Windſor. Before Page's Houſe.

Enter Juſtice SHALLOW, SLENDER, and Sir HUGH EVANS.

SHAL. Sir Hugh,[1] perſuade me not; I will make a Star-chamber matter of it:[2] if he were twenty ſir

[1] Sir Hugh,] This is the firſt, of ſundry inſtances in our poet, where a parſon is called Sir. Upon which it may be obſerved, that anciently it was the common deſignation both of one in holy orders and a knight. Fuller, ſomewhere in his Church Hiſtory ſays, that anciently there were in England more ſirs than knights; and ſo lately as temp. W. & Mar. in a depoſition in the Exchequer in a caſe of tythes, the witneſs ſpeaking of the curate, whom he remembered, ſtyles him, Sir Giles. Vide Gibſon's View of the State of the Churches of Door, Home-Lacy, &c. p. 36. SIR J. HAWKINS.

Sir is the deſignation of a Bachelor of Arts in the Univerſities of Cambridge and Dublin; but is there always annexed to the ſurname;—Sir Evans, &c. In conſequence, however, of this, all the inferior Clergy in England were diſtinguiſhed by this title affixed to their chriſtian names for many centuries. Hence our author's Sir Hugh in the preſent play,—Sir Topas in Twelfth Night, Sir Oliver in As you like it, &c. MALONE.

John Falſtaff's, he ſhall not abuſe Robert Shallow, eſquire.

Slen. In the county of Gloſter, juſtice of peace, and coram.

Shal. Ay, couſin Slender, and Cuſt-alorum.[3]

Sir ſeems to have been a title formerly appropriated to ſuch of the inferior clergy as were only Readers of the ſervice, and not admitted to be preachers, and therefore were held in the loweſt eſtimation; as appears from a remarkable paſſage in Machell's MS. Collections for the Hiſtory of Weſtmoreland and Cumberland, in ſix volumes, folio, preſerved in the Dean and Chapter's library at Carliſle. The reverend Thomas Machell, author of the Collections, lived temp. Car. II. Speaking of the little chapel of Martindale in the mountains of Weſtmoreland and Cumberland, the writer ſays, "There is little remarkable in or about it but a neat chapel-yard, which by the peculiar care of the old Reader, *Sir Richard, is kept clean, and as neat as a bowling-green."

* Richard Berket, Reader, Æt. 74. MS. note.

"Within the limits of myne own memory all Readers in chapels were called Sirs,† and of old have been writ ſo; whence, I ſuppoſe, ſuch of the laity as received the noble order of knighthood being called Sirs too, for diſtinction ſake had Knight writ after them; which had been ſuperfluous, if the title Sir had been peculiar to them. But now this Sir Richard is the only Knight Templar (if I may ſo call him) that retains the old ſtyle, which in other places is much laid aſide, and grown out of uſe." Percy.

See Mr. Douce's obſervations on the title "Sir," (as given to Eccleſiaſticks,) at the end of Act V. The length of this curious memoir obliges me to disjoin it from the page to which it naturally belongs. Steevens.

[2] —— a Star-chamber matter of it:] Ben Jonſon intimates, that the Star-chamber had a right to take cognizance of ſuch matters. See the Magnetic Lady, Act III. ſc. iv:

"There is a court above, of the Star-chamber,
"To puniſh routs and riots." Steevens.

[3] —— Cuſt-alorum.] This is, I ſuppoſe, intended for a corruption of Cuſtos Rotulorum. The miſtake was hardly deſigned by

† In the margin is a MS. note ſeemingly in the hand-writing of Bp. Nicholſon, who gave theſe volumes to the library:

"Since I can remember there was not a reader in any chapel but was called Sir."

Slen. Ay, and ratolorum too; and a gentleman born, maſter parſon; who writes himſelf armigero;[4] in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, armigero.

Shal. Ay, that we do;[5] and have done[6] any time theſe three hundred years.

Slen. All his ſucceſſors, gone before him, have done't: and all his anceſtors, that come after him, may: they may give the dozen white luces in their coat.

Shal. It is an old coat.

the author, who, though he gives Shallow folly enough, makes him rather pedantic than illiterate. If we read:

"Shal. Ay, couſin Slender, and Cuſtos Rotulorum."

It follows naturally:

"Slen. Ay, and Ratolorum too." Johnson.

I think with Dr. Johnſon, that this blunder could ſcarcely be intended. Shallow, we know, had been bred to the law at Clement's Inn. But I would rather read cuſtos only; then Slender adds naturally, "Ay, and rotulorum too." He had heard the words cuſtos rotulorum, and ſuppoſes them to mean different offices. Farmer.

Perhaps Shakſpeare might have intended to ridicule the abbreviations ſometimes uſed in writs and other legal inſtruments, with which his Juſtice might have been acquainted. In the old copy the word is printed Cuſt-alorum, as it is now exhibited in the text. If, however, this was intended, it ſhould be Cuſt-ulorum; and, it muſt be owned, abbreviation by cutting off the beginning of a word is not authorized by any precedent, except what we may ſuppoſe to have exiſted in Shallow's imagination. Malone.

[4] —— who writes himſelf armigero;] Slender had ſeen the Juſtice's atteſtations, ſigned "—jurat' coram me, Roberto Shallow, Armigero;" and therefore takes the ablative for the nominative caſe of Armiger. Steevens.

[5] Ay, that we do;] The old copy reads—"that I do." The preſent emendation was ſuggeſted to me by Dr. Farmer. Steevens.

[6] —— and have done —] i. e. all the Shallows have done. Shakſpeare has many expreſſions equally licentious. Malone.

Eva. The dozen white loufes do become an old coat well;[7] it agrees well, paffant: it is a familiar beaft to man, and fignifies—love.

Shal. The luce is the frefh fifh; the falt fifh is an old coat.[8]

[7] The dozen white loufes do become an old coat well; &c.] So, in The Pennilefs Parliament of thread-bare Poets, 1608: "But amongft all other decrees and ftatutes by us here fet downe, wee ordaine and commaund, that three thinges (if they be not parted) ever to continue in perpetuall amitie, that is, a Loufe in an olde doublet, a painted cloth in a painter's fhop, and a foole and his bable." STEEVENS.

[8] The luce is the frefh fifh; the falt fifh is an old coat.] That is, the frefh fifh is the coat of an ancient family, and the falt fifh is the coat of a merchant grown rich by trading over the fea. JOHNSON.

I am not fatisfied with any thing that has been offered on this difficult paffage. All that Mr. Smith told us was a mere gratis dictum. [His note, being worthlefs, is here omitted.] I cannot find that falt fifh were ever really borne in heraldry. I fancy the latter part of the fpeech fhould be given to Sir Hugh, who is at crofs purpofes with the Juftice. Shallow had faid juft before, the coat is an old one; and now, that it is the luce, the frefh fifh. No, replies the parfon, it cannot be old and frefh too—"the falt fifh is an old coat." I give this with rather the more confidence, as a fimilar miftake has happened a little lower in the fcene,—"Slice, I fay!" cries out Corporal Nym, "Pauca, pauca: Slice! that's my humour." There can be no doubt, but pauca, pauca, fhould be fpoken by Evans.

Again, a little before this, the copies give us:

"Slender. You'll not confefs, you'll not confefs.

"Shallow. That he will not—'tis your fault, 'tis your fault:—'tis a good dog."

Surely it fhould be thus:

"Shallow. You'll not confefs, you'll not confefs.

"Slender. That he will not.

"Shallow. 'Tis your fault, 'tis your fault," &c. FARMER.

This fugitive fcrap of Latin, pauca, &c. is ufed in feveral old pieces, by characters who have no more of literature about them than Nym. So, Skinke, in Look about you, 1600:

"But pauca verba, Skinke."

Again, in Every Man in his Humour, where it is called the benchers' phrafe. STEEVENS.

Slen. I may quarter, coz?

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Shakſpeare ſeems to frolick here in his heraldry, with a deſign not to be eaſily underſtood. In Leland's Collectanea, Vol. I. P. II. p. 615, the arms of Geffrey de Lucy are "de goules poudre a croiſil dor a treis luz dor." Can the poet mean to quibble upon the word poudré, that is, powdred, which ſignifies ſalted; or ſtrewed and ſprinkled with any thing? In Meaſure for Meaſure, Lucio ſays—"Ever your freſh whore and your powder'd bawd." Tollet.

The luce is a pike or jack: So, in Chaucer's Prol. of the Cant. Tales, Mr. Tyrwhitt's edit. pp. 351, 352:

"Full many a fair partrich hadde he in mewe,
"And many a breme, and many a luce in ſtewe."

In Ferne's Blazon of Gentry, 1586, quarto, the arms of the Lucy family are repreſented as an inſtance, that "ſigns of the coat ſhould ſomething agree with the name. It is the coat of Geffray Lord Lucy. He did bear gules, three lucies hariant, argent."

Mr. William Oldys, (Norroy King at Arms, and well known from the ſhare he had in compiling the Biographia Britannica, among the collections which he left for a Life of Shakſpeare,) obſerves that—"there was a very aged gentleman living in the neighbourhood of Stratford, (where he died fifty years ſince,) who had not only heard, from ſeveral old people in that town, of Shakſpeare's tranſgreſſion, but could remember the firſt ſtanza of the bitter ballad, which, repeating to one of his acquaintance, he preſerved it in writing; and here it is, neither better nor worſe, but faithfully tranſcribed from the copy which his relation very courteouſly communicated to me."

"A parliement member, a juſtice of peace,
"At home a poor ſcare-crowe, at London an aſſe,
"If lowſie is Lucy, as ſome volke miſcalle it,
"Then Lucy is lowſie whatever befall it:
"He thinks himſelf greate,
"Yet an aſſe in his ſtate,
"We allow by his ears but with aſſes to mate.
"If Lucy is lowſie, as ſome volke miſcalle it,
"Sing lowſie Lucy, whatever befall it."

"Contemptible as this performance muſt now appear, at the time when it was written it might have had ſufficient power to irritate a vain, weak, and vindictive magiſtrate; eſpecially as it was affixed to ſeveral of his park-gates, and conſequently pub-

Eva. It is marring, indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Eva. Yes, py'r-lady; if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three ſkirts for yourſelf, in my ſimple conjectures: but this is all one: If ſir John Falſtaff have committed diſparagements unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my beliſhed among his neighbours. It may be remarked likewiſe, that the jingle on which it turns, occurs in the firſt ſcene of The Merry Wives of Windſor."

I may add, that the veracity of the late Mr. Oldys has never yet been impeached; and it is not very probable that a ballad ſhould be forged, from which an undiſcovered wag could derive no triumph over antiquarian credulity. Steevens.

The luce is the freſh fiſh; the ſalt fiſh is an old coat.] Our author here alludes to the arms of Sir Thomas Lucy, who is ſaid to have proſecuted him in the younger part of his life for a miſdemeſnor, and who is ſuppoſed to be pointed at under the character of Juſtice Shallow. The text, however, by ſome careleſſneſs of the printer or tranſcriber, has been ſo corrupted, that the paſſage, as it ſtands at preſent, ſeems inexplicable. Dr. Farmer's regulation appears to me highly probable; and in further ſupport of it, it may be obſerved, that ſome other ſpeeches, beſide thoſe he has mentioned, are miſplaced in a ſubſequent part of this ſcene, as exhibited in the firſt folio. Malone.

Perhaps we have not yet conceived the humour of Maſter Shallow. Slender has obſerved, that the family might give a dozen white Luces in their coat; to which the Juſtice adds, "It is an old one." This produces the Parſon's blunder, and Shallow's correction. "The Luce is not the Louſe but the Pike, the freſh fiſh of that name. Indeed our Coat is old, as I ſaid, and the fiſh cannot be freſh; and therefore we bear the white, i. e. the pickled or ſalt fiſh."

In the Northumberland Houſehold Book, we meet with "nine barrels of white herringe for a hole yere, 4. 10. 0:" and Mr. Pennant in the additions to his London ſays, "By the very high price of the Pike, it is probable that this fiſh had not yet been introduced into our ponds, but was imported as a luxury, pickled."

It will be ſtill clearer if we read—"tho' ſalt fiſh in an old coat." Farmer.

nevolence, to make atonements and compromifes between you.

Shal. The Council fhall hear it; it is a riot.[9]

Eva. It is not meet the Council hear a riot; there is no fear of Got in a riot: the Council, look you, fhall defire to hear the fear of Got, and not to hear a riot; take your vizaments in that.[1]

Shal. Ha! o' my life, if I were young again, the fword fhould end it.

Eva. It is petter that friends is the fword, and end it: and there is alfo another device in my prain, which, peradventure, prings goot difcretions with it: There is Anne Page, which is daughter to mafter George Page,[2] which is pretty virginity.

[9] The Council fhall hear it; it is a riot.] By the Council is only meant the court of Star-chamber, compofed chiefly of the king's council fitting in Camerâ ftellatâ, which took cognizance of atrocious riots. In the old quarto, "the council fhall know it," follows immediately after "I'll make a Star-chamber matter of it." BLACKSTONE.

So, in Sir John Harrington's Epigrams, 1618:
"No marvel, men of fuch a fumptuous dyet
"Were brought into the Star-chamber for a ryot."
MALONE.

See Stat. 13. Henry IV. c. 7. GREY.

[1] —— your vizaments in that.] Advifement is now an obfolete word. I meet with it in the ancient morality of Every Man:
"That I may amend me with good advyfement."
Again:
"I fhall fmite without any advyfement."
Again:
"To do with good advyfement and delyberacyon."
It is often ufed by Spenfer in his Faery Queen. So, B. II. c. 9:
"Perhaps my fuccour and advizement meete." STEEVENS.

The whole fet of editions have negligently blundered one after another in Page's Chriftian name in this place; though Mrs. Page calls him George afterwards in at leaft fix feveral paffages.
THEOBALD.

Slen. Miſtreſs Anne Page? She has brown hair, and ſpeaks ſmall like a woman.[3]

Eva. It is that fery verſon for all the 'orld, as juſt as you will deſire; and ſeven hundred pounds of monies, and gold, and ſilver, is her grandſire, upon his death's-bed, (Got deliver to a joyful reſurrections!) give, when ſhe is able to overtake

[3] ——ſpeaks ſmall like a woman.] This is from the folio of 1623, and is the true reading. He admires her for the ſweetneſs of her voice. But the expreſſion is highly humorous, as making her ſpeaking ſmall like a woman one of her marks of diſtinction; and the ambiguity of ſmall, which ſignifies little as well as low, makes the expreſſion ſtill more pleaſant. Warburton.

Thus, Lear, ſpeaking of Cordelia:

" —— Her voice was ever ſoft,
" Gentle and low:—an excellent thing in woman."

Steevens.

Dr. Warburton has found more pleaſantry here than I believe was intended. Small was, I think, not uſed, as he ſuppoſes, in an ambiguous ſenſe, for "little, as well as low," but ſimply for weak, ſlender, feminine; and the only pleaſantry of the paſſage ſeems to be, that poor Slender ſhould characteriſe his miſtreſs by a general quality belonging to her whole ſex. In A Midſummer Night's Dream, Quince tells Flute, who objects to playing a woman's part, "You ſhall play it in a maſk, and you may ſpeak as ſmall as you will." Malone.

A ſmall voice is a ſoft and melodious voice. Chaucer uſes the word in that ſenſe, in The Flower and the Leaf, Speght's edit. p. 611:

" The company anſwered all,
" With voicè ſweet entuned, and ſo ſmall,
" That me thought it the ſweeteſt melody."

Again, in Fairfax's Godfrey of Bulloigne, l. 15, ſt. 62:

" She warbled forth a treble ſmall,
" And with ſweet lookes, her ſweet ſongs enterlaced."

When female characters were filled by boys, to ſpeak ſmall like a woman muſt have been a valuable qualification. So, in Marſton's What you will: " I was ſolicited to graunt him leave to play the lady in comedies preſented by children; but I knew his voice was too ſmall, and his ſtature too low. Sing a treble, Holofernes;—a very ſmall ſweet voice I'le aſſure you."

Holt White.

ſeventeen years old: it were a goot motion, if we leave our pribbles and prabbles, and deſire a marriage between maſter Abraham, and miſtreſs Anne Page.

SHAL. Did her grandſire leave her ſeven hundred pound?[4]

EVA. Ay, and her father is make her a petter penny.

SHAL. I know the young gentlewoman; ſhe has good gifts.

EVA. Seven hundred pounds, and poſſibilities, is good gifts.

SHAL. Well, let us ſee honeſt maſter Page: Is Falſtaff there?

EVA. Shall I tell you a lie? I do deſpiſe a liar, as I do deſpiſe one that is falſe; or, as I deſpiſe one [4] Shal. Did her grandſire leave her ſeven hundred pound?—I know the young gentlewoman; &c.] Theſe two ſpeeches are by miſtake given to Slender in the firſt folio, the only authentick copy of this play. From the foregoing words it appears that Shallow is the perſon here addreſſed; and on a marriage being propoſed for his kinſman, he very naturally enquires concerning the lady's fortune. Slender ſhould ſeem not to know what they are talking about; (except that he juſt hears the name of Anne Page, and breaks out into a fooliſh elogium on her;) for afterwards Shallow ſays to him,—"Coz, there is, as it were, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by Sir Hugh here; do you underſtand me?" to which Slender replies—"if it be ſo," &c. The tender, therefore, we ſee, had been made to Shallow, and not to Slender, the former of which names ſhould be prefixed to the two ſpeeches before us.

In this play, as exhibited in the firſt folio, many of the ſpeeches are given to characters to whom they do not belong. Printers, to ſave trouble, keep the names of the ſpeakers in each ſcene ready compoſed, and are very liable to miſtakes, when two names begin (as in the preſent inſtance) with the ſame letter, and are nearly of the ſame length.—The preſent regulation was ſuggeſted by Mr. Capell. MALONE.

that is not true. The knight, ſir John, is there; and, I beſeech you, be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door [knocks] for maſter Page. What, hoa! Got pleſs your houſe here!

Enter PAGE.

PAGE. Who's there?

EVA. Here is Got's pleſſing, and your friend, and juſtice Shallow: and here young maſter Slender; that, peradventures, ſhall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likings.

PAGE. I am glad to ſee your worſhips well: I thank you for my veniſon, maſter Shallow.

SHAL. Maſter Page, I am glad to ſee you; Much good do it your good heart! I wiſhed your veniſon better; it was ill kill'd:—How doth good miſtreſs Page?—and I love you [5] always with my heart, la; with my heart.

PAGE. Sir, I thank you.

SHAL. Sir, I thank you; by yea and no, I do.

PAGE. I am glad to ſee you, good maſter Slender.

SLEN. How does your fallow greyhound, ſir? I heard ſay, he was out-run on Cotſale.[6]

[5] ——I love you—] Thus the 4to. 1619. The folio—"I thank you—." Dr. Farmer prefers the firſt of theſe readings, which I have therefore placed in the text. STEEVENS.

[6] How does your fallow greyhound, ſir? I heard ſay, he was out-run on Cotſale.] He means Cotſwold, in Glouceſterſhire. In the beginning of the reign of James the Firſt, by permiſſion of the king, one Dover, a public-ſpirited attorney of Barton on the Heath, in Warwickſhire, inſtituted on the hills of Cotſwold an annual celebration of games, conſiſting of rural ſports and exerciſes. Theſe he conſtantly conducted in perſon, well mounted, and accoutred in a ſuit of his majeſty's old clothes; and they were frequented above forty years by the nobility and Page. It could not be judg'd, ſir.

Slen. You'll not confeſs, you'll not confeſs.

Shal. That he will not;—'tis your fault, 'tis your fault:[8]—'Tis a good dog.

gentry for ſixty miles round, till the grand rebellion aboliſhed every liberal eſtabliſhment. I have ſeen a very ſcarce book, entitled, "Annalia Dubrenſia. Upon the yearly celebration of Mr. Robert Dover's Olympick games upon Cotſwold hills," &c. London, 1636, 4to. There are recommendatory verſes prefixed, written by Drayton, Jonſon, Randolph, and many others, the moſt eminent wits of the times. The games, as appears from a curious frontiſpiece, were, chiefly, wreſtling, leaping, pitching the bar, handling the pike, dancing of women, various kinds of hunting, and particularly courſing the hare with greyhounds. Hence alſo we ſee the meaning of another paſſage, where Falſtaff, or Shallow, calls a ſtout fellow a Cotſwold-man. But, from what is here ſaid, an inference of another kind may be drawn, reſpecting the age of the play. A meager and imperfect ſketch of this comedy was printed in 1602. Afterwards Shakſpeare new-wrote it entirely. This alluſion therefore to the Cotſwold games, not founded till the reign of James the Firſt, aſcertains a period of time beyond which our author muſt have made the additions to his original rough draft, or, in other words, compoſed the preſent comedy. James the Firſt came to the crown in the year 1603. And we will ſuppoſe that two or three more years at leaſt muſt have paſſed before theſe games could have been effectually eſtabliſhed. I would therefore, at the earlieſt, date this play about the year 1607. T. Warton.

The Annalia Dubrenſia conſiſts entirely of recommendatory verſes. Douce.

The Cotſwold hills in Glouceſterſhire are a large tract of downs, famous for their fine turf, and therefore excellent for courſing. I believe there is no village of that name. Blackstone.

[8] ——'tis your fault, 'tis your fault:] Of theſe words, which are addreſſed to Page, the ſenſe is not very clear. Perhaps Shallow means to ſay, that it is a known failing of Page's not to confeſs that his dog has been out-run. Or, the meaning may be, 'tis your misfortune that he was out-run on Cotſwold; he is, however, a good dog. So perhaps the word is uſed afterwards by Ford, ſpeaking of his jealouſy:

"'Tis my fault, maſter Page; I ſuffer for it." Malone.

Shal. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog; Can there be more ſaid? he is good, and fair.—Is ſir John Falſtaff here?

Page. Sir, he is within; and I would I could do a good office between you.

Eva. It is ſpoke as a chriſtians ought to ſpeak.

Shal. He hath wrong'd me, maſter Page.

Page. Sir, he doth in ſome ſort confeſs it.

Shal. If it be confeſs'd, it is not redreſs'd; is not that ſo, maſter Page? He hath wrong'd me; indeed, he hath;—at a word, he hath;—believe me;—Robert Shallow, Eſquire, ſaith, he is wrong'd.

Enter Sir JOHN FALSTAFF, BARDOLPH, NYM, and PISTOL.

Fal. Now, maſter Shallow; you'll complain of me to the king?

Shal. Knight you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge.[9]

Fal. But not kiſs'd your keeper's daughter?

Shal. Tut, a pin! this ſhall be anſwer'd.

Fal. I will anſwer it ſtraight;—I have done all this:—That is now anſwer'd.

Shal. The Council ſhall know this.

Perhaps Shallow addreſſes theſe words to Slender, and means to tell him, "it was his fault to undervalue a dog whoſe inferiority in the chaſe was not aſcertained." STEEVENS.

[9] —— and broke open my lodge.] This probably alludes to ſome real incident, at that time well known. JOHNSON.

So probably Falſtaff's anſwer. FARMER.

Fal. 'Twere better for you, if it were known in counfel:[1] you'll be laugh'd at.

Eva. Pauca verba, fir John, good worts.

[1] 'Twere better for you, if it were known in counfel:] The old copies read—'Twere better for you, if 'twere known in council. Perhaps it is an abrupt fpeech, and muft be read thus:—'Twere better for you—if 'twere known in council, you'll be laugh'd at. 'Twere better for you, is, I believe, a menace. JOHNSON.

Some of the modern editors arbitrarily read—if 'twere not known in council:—but I believe Falftaff quibbles between council and counfel. The latter fignifies fecrecy. So, in Hamlet:

"The players cannot keep counfel, they'll tell all."

Falftaff's meaning feems to be—'twere better for you if it were known only in fecrecy, i. e. among your friends. A more publick complaint would fubject you to ridicule.

Thus, in Chaucer's Prologue to the Squires Tale, v. 10,305, Mr. Tyrwhitt's edit:

"But wete ye what? in confeil be it feyde,
"Me reweth fore I am unto hire teyde."

Again, in the ancient MS. Romance of the Sowdon of Babyloyne, p. 39:

"And faide, fir, for alle loves
"Lete me thy prifoneres feen,
"I wole thee gife both goolde and gloves,
"And counfail fhall it been."

Again, in Gammer Gurton's Needle, laft edit. p. 29:

"But firft for you in council, I have a word or twaine."
STEEVENS.

Mr. Ritfon fuppofes the prefent reading to be juft, and quite in Falftaff's infolent fneering manner. "It would be much better, indeed, to have it known in the council, where you would only be laughed at." REED.

The fpelling of the old quarto, (counfel,) as well as the general purport of the paffage, fully confirms Mr. Steevens's interpretation.—"Shal. Well, the Council fhall know it. Fal. 'Twere better for you 'twere known in counfell. You'll be laugh't at."

In an office-book of Sir Heneage Finch, Treafurer of the Chambers to Queen Elizabeth, (a MS. in the Britifh Mufeum,) I obferve that whenever the Privy Council is mentioned, the word is always fpelt Counfel; fo that the equivoque was lefs ftrained then than it appears now.

Fal. Good worts! good cabbage.[2]—Slender, I broke your head; What matter have you againſt me?

Slen. Marry, ſir, I have matter in my head againſt you; and againſt your coney-catching raſcals,[3] Bardolph, Nym, and Piſtol. They carried me to the tavern, and made me drunk, and afterwards picked my pocket.[4]

Bard. You Banbury cheeſe![5]

"Mum is Counſell, viz. ſilence," is among Howel's Proverbial Sentences. See his Dict. folio, 1660. Malone.

[2] Good worts! good cabbage.] Worts was the ancient name of all the cabbage kind. So, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Valentinian:

"Planting of worts and onions, any thing."

Again, in Tho. Lupton's Seventh Booke of Notable Thinges, 4to. bl. l. "——then anoint the burned place therwith, and lay a woort leafe upon it," &c. Steevens.

[3] —— coney-catching raſcals,] A coney-catcher was, in the time of Elizabeth, a common name for a cheat or ſharper. Green, one of the firſt among us who made a trade of writing pamphlets, publiſhed A Detection of the Frauds and Tricks of Coney-catchers and Couzeners. Johnson.

So, in Decker's Satiromaſtix:

"Thou ſhalt not coney-catch me for five pounds."

Steevens.

[4] They carried me, &c.] Theſe words, which are neceſſary to introduce what Falſtaff ſays afterwards, ["Piſtol, did you pick maſter Slender's purſe?"] I have reſtored from the early quarto. Of this circumſtance, as the play is exhibited in the folio, Sir John could have no knowledge. Malone.

We might ſuppoſe that Falſtaff was already acquainted with this robbery, and had received his ſhare of it, as in the caſe of the handle of miſtreſs Bridget's fan, Act II. ſc. ii. His queſtion, therefore, may be ſaid to ariſe at once from conſcious guilt and pretended ignorance. I have, however, adopted Mr. Malone's reſtoration. Steevens.

[5] You Banbury cheeſe!] This is ſaid in alluſion to the thin carcaſe of Slender. The ſame thought occurs in Jack Drum's Entertainment, 1601: "Put off your cloathes, and you are

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Mephostophilus?[6]

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

like a Banbury cheese,—nothing but paring." So Heywood, in his collection of epigrams:

" I never saw Banbury cheese thick enough,
" But I have oft seen Essex cheese quick enough."

Steevens.

[6] How now, Mephostophilus?] This is the name of a spirit or familiar, in the old story book of Sir John Faustus, or John Faust: to whom our author afterwards alludes, Act II. sc. ii. That it was a cant phrase of abuse, appears from the old comedy cited above, called A pleasant Comedy of the Gentle Craft, Signat. H 3. " Away you Islington whitepot; hence you hopper-arse, you barley-pudding full of maggots, you broiled carbonado: avaunt, avaunt, Mephostophilus." In the same vein, Bardolph here also calls Slender, " You Banbury cheese."

T. Warton.

Pistol means to calls Slender a very ugly fellow. So, in Nosce te, (Humors) by Richard Turner, 1607:

" O face, no face hath our Theophilus,
" But the right forme of Mephostophilus,
" I know 'twould serve, and yet I am no wizard,
" To play the Devil i'the vault without a vizard."

Again, in The Muses Looking Glass, 1638: " We want not you to play Mephostophilus. A pretty natural vizard!"

Steevens.

[7] Slice, I say! pauca, pauca;] Dr. Farmer (see a former note, p. 10, n. 8,) would transfer the Latin words to Evans. But the old copy, I think, is right. Pistol, in K. Henry V. uses the same language:

" —— I will hold the quondam Quickly
" For the only she; and pauca, there's enough."

In the same scene Nym twice uses the word solus. Malone.

[8] —— that's my humour.] So, in an ancient MS. play, entitled The Second Maiden's Tragedy:

" —— I love not to disquiet ghosts, sir,
" Of any people living; that's my humour, sir."

See a following note, Act II. sc. i. Steevens.

Slen. Where's Simple, my man?—can you tell, cousin?

Eva. Peace: I pray you! Now let us understand: There is three umpires in this matter, as I understand: that is—master Page, fidelicet, master Page; and there is myself, fidelicet, myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Garter.

Page. We three, to hear it, and end it between them.

Eva. Fery goot: I will make a prief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwards 'ork upon the cause, with as great discreetly as we can.

Fal. Pistol,—

Pist. He hears with ears.

Eva. The tevil and his tam! what phrase is this,[9] He hears with ear? Why, it is affectations.

Fal. Pistol, did you pick master Slender's purse?

Slen. Ay, by these gloves, did he, (or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else,) of seven groats in mill-sixpences,[1] and two Edward shovel-boards,[2] that cost me two shil-

[9] ——what phrase is this, &c.] Sir Hugh is justified in his censure of this passage by Peacham, who in his Garden of Eloquence, 1577, places this very mode of expression under the article Pleonasmus. Henderson.

[1] ——mill-sixpences,] It appears from a passage in Sir William Davenant's Newes from Plimouth, that these mill sixpences were used by way of counters to cast up money:

" —— A few mill'd sixpences, with which
" My purser casts accompt." Steevens.

[2] ——Edward shovel-boards,] One of these pieces of metal is mentioned in Middleton's comedy of The Roaring Girl, 1611:

" ——away slid I my man, like a shovel-board shilling," &c.
Steevens.

ling and two pence a-piece of Yead Miller, by theſe gloves.

"Edward ſhovel-boards," were the broad ſhillings of Edw. VI. —Taylor, the water-poet, in his Trauel of Twelve-pence, makes him complain:

"——— the unthrift every day
"With my face downwards do at ſhoave-board play;
"That had I had a beard, you may ſuppoſe,
"They had worne it off, as they have done my noſe."

And in a note he tells us: "Edw. ſhillings for the moſt part are uſed at ſhoave-board." FARMER.

In the Second Part of K. Henry IV. Falſtaff ſays, "Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a ſhove-groat ſhilling." This confirms Farmer's opinion, that pieces of coin were uſed for that purpoſe. M. MASON.

The following extract, for the notice of which I am indebted to Dr. Farmer, will aſcertain the ſpecies of coin mentioned in the text. "I muſt here take notice before I entirely quit the ſubject of theſe laſt-mentioned ſhillings, that I have alſo ſeen ſome other pieces of good ſilver, greatly reſembling the ſame, and of the ſame date 1547, that have been ſo much thicker as to weigh about half an ounce, together with ſome others that have weighed an ounce." Folkes's Table of Engliſh Silver Coins, p. 32. The former of theſe were probably what coſt Maſter Slender two ſhillings and two-pence a-piece. REED.

It appears, that the game of ſhovel-board was played with the ſhillings of Edward VI. in Shadwell's time; for in his Miſer, Act III. ſc. i. Cheatly ſays, "She perſuaded him to play with hazard at backgammon, and he has already loſt his Edward ſhillings that he kept for Shovel-board, and was pulling out broad pieces (that have not ſeen the ſun theſe many years) when I came away."

In Shadwell's Lancaſhire Witches, Vol. III. p. 232, the game is called Shuffle-board. It is ſtill played; and I lately heard a man aſk another to go into an alehouſe in the Broad Sanctuary, Weſtminſter, to play at it. DOUCE.

That Slender means the broad ſhilling of one of our kings, appears from comparing theſe words with the correſponding paſſage in the old quarto: "Ay by this handkerchief did he;—two faire ſhovel-board ſhillings, beſides ſeven groats in mill ſixpences."

How twenty eight pence could be loſt in mill-ſixpences, Slender, however, has not explained to us. MALONE.

Fal. Is this true, Piſtol?

Eva. No; it is falſe, if it is a pick-purſe.

Pist. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner!—Sir John and maſter mine,
I combat challenge of this latten bilbo:[3]
Word of denial in thy labras here;[4]
Word of denial: froth and ſcum, thou lieſt.

[3] I combat challenge of this latten bilbo:] Piſtol, ſeeing Slender ſuch a ſlim, puny wight, would intimate, that he is as thin as a plate of that compound metal, which is called latten: and which was, as we are told, the old orichalc. Theobald.

Latten is a mixed metal, made of copper and calamine. Malone.

The ſarcaſm intended is, that Slender had neither courage nor ſtrength, as a latten ſword has neither edge nor ſubſtance. Heath.

Latten may ſignify no more than as thin as a lath. The word in ſome counties is ſtill pronounced as if there was no h in it: and Ray, in his Dictionary of North Country Words, affirms it to be ſpelt lat in the North of England.

Falſtaff threatens, in another play, to drive prince Henry out of his kingdom with a dagger of lath. A latten bilboe means therefore, I believe, no more than a blade as thin as a lath—a vice's dagger.

Theobald, however, is right in his aſſertion that latten was a metal. So Turbervile, in his book of Falconry, 1575: "—— you muſt ſet her a latten baſon, or a veſſel of ſtone or earth." Again, in Old Fortunatus, 1600: "Whether it were lead or latten that haſp'd down thoſe winking caſements, I know not." Again, in the old metrical Romance of Syr Bevis of Hampton, bl. l. no date:

"Windowes of latin were ſet with glaſſe."

Latten is ſtill a common word for tin in the North. Steevens.

I believe Theobald has given the true ſenſe of latten, though he is wrong in ſuppoſing, that the alluſion is to Slender's thinneſs. It is rather to his ſoftneſs or weakneſs. Tyrwhitt.

[4] Word of denial in thy labras here;] I ſuppoſe it ſhould rather be read:

"Word of denial in my labras hear;"

That is, hear the word of denial in my lips. Thou ly'ſt. Johnson.

Slen. By theſe gloves, then 'twas he.

Nym. Be adviſed, ſir, and paſs good humours: I will ſay, marry trap,[5] with you, if you run the nuthook's humour[6] on me; that is the very note of it.

Slen. By this hat, then he in the red face had it: for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an aſs.

Fal. What ſay you, Scarlet and John?[7]

Bard. Why, ſir, for my part, I ſay, the gentleman had drunk himſelf out of his five ſentences.

Eva. It is his five ſenſes: fie, what the ignorance is!

We often talk of giving the lie in a man's teeth, or in his throat. Piſtol chooſes to throw the word of denial in the lips of his adverſary, and is ſuppoſed to point to them as he ſpeaks. STEEVENS.

There are few words in the old copies more frequently miſprinted than the word hear. "Thy lips," however, is certainly right, as appears from the old quarto: "I do retort the lie even in thy gorge, thy gorge, thy gorge." MALONE.

[5] —— marry trap,] When a man was caught in his own ſtratagem, I ſuppoſe the exclamation of inſult was—marry, trap! JOHNSON.

[6] —— nuthook's humour—] Nuthook is the reading of the folio. The quarto reads, baſe humour.

If you run the nuthook's humour on me, is, in plain Engliſh, if you ſay I am a thief. Enough is ſaid on the ſubject of hooking moveables out at windows, in a note on K. Henry IV. STEEVENS.

[7] —— Scarlet and John?] The names of two of Robin Hood's companions; but the humour conſiſts in the alluſion to Bardolph's red face; concerning which, ſee The Second Part of Henry IV. WARBURTON.

BARD. And being fap,[8] fir, was, as they fay, cafhier'd; and fo conclufions pafs'd the careires.[9]

SLEN. Ay, you fpake in Latin then too; but 'tis no matter: I'll ne'er be drunk whilft I live again, [8] And being fap,] I know not the exact meaning of this cant word, neither have I met with it in any of our old dramatic pieces, which have often proved the beft comments on Shakfpeare's vulgarifms.

Dr. Farmer, indeed, obferves, that to fib is to beat; fo that being fap may mean being beaten; and cafhiered, turned out of company. STEEVENS.

The word fap, is probably made from vappa, a drunken fellow, or a good-for-nothing fellow, whofe virtues are all exhaled. Slender, in his anfwer, feems to underftand that Bardolph had made ufe of a Latin word: "Ay, you fpake in Latin then too;" as Piftol had juft before. S. W.

It is not probable that any cant term is from the Latin; nor that the word in queftion was fo derived, becaufe Slender miftook it for Latin. The miftake, indeed, is an argument to the contrary, as it fhows his ignorance in that language. Fap, however, certainly means drunk, as appears from the gloffaries.
DOUCE.

[9] —— careires.] I believe this ftrange word is nothing but the French cariere; and the expreffion means, that the common bounds of good behaviour are overpaffed. JOHNSON.

To pafs the cariere was a military phrafe, or rather perhaps a term of the manege. I find it in one of Sir John Smythe's Difcourfes, 1589, where, fpeaking of horfes wounded, he fays—"they, after the firft fhrink at the entering of the bullet, doo pafs their carriere, as though they had verie little hurt." Again, in Harrington's tranflation of Ariofto, b. xxxviii. ftanza 35:

"To ftop, to ftart, to pafs carier, to bound."
STEEVENS.

Bardolph means to fay, "and fo in the end he reel'd about with a circuitous motion, like a horfe, paffing a carier." To pafs a carier was a technical term. So, in Nafhe's Have with you to Saffron Walden, &c. 1596: "—— her hotteft fury may be refembled to the paffing of a brave cariere by a Pegafus."

We find the term again ufed in K. Henry V. in the fame manner as in the paffage before us: "The king is a good king, but—he paffes fome humours and cariers." MALONE.

but in honeſt, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I be drunk, I'll be drunk with thoſe that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knaves.

Eva. So Got 'udge me, that is a virtuous mind.

Fal. You hear all theſe matters denied, gentlemen; you hear it.

Page. How now, miſtreſs Ford?

Fal. Miſtreſs Ford, by my troth, you are very well met: by your leave, good miſtreſs. [kiſsing her.

Page. Wife, bid theſe gentlemen welcome:—— Come, we have a hot veniſon paſty to dinner; come, gentlemen, I hope we ſhall drink down all unkindneſs.

[Exeunt all but SHAL. SLENDER and EVANS.

Slen. I had rather than forty ſhillings, I had my book of Songs and Sonnets here:[1]—

[1] —— my book of Songs and Sonnets here:] It cannot be ſuppoſed that poor Slender was himſelf a poet. He probably means the Poems of Lord Surrey and others, which were very popular in the age of Queen Elizabeth. They were printed in 1567, with this title: "Songes and Sonnettes, written by the Right Honourable Lord Henry Howard, late Earle of Surrey, and others."

Slender laments that he has not this faſhionable book about him, ſuppoſing it might have aſſiſted him in paying his addreſſes to Anne Page. MALONE.

Under the title mentioned by Slender, Churchyard very evidently points out this book in an enumeration of his own pieces, prefixed to a collection of verſe and proſe, called Churchyard's

Enter SIMPLE.

How now, Simple! Where have you been? I muſt wait on myſelf, muſt I? You have not The Book of Riddles[2] about you, have you?

SIM. Book of Riddles! why, did you not lend it to Alice Shortcake upon Allhallowmas laſt, a fortnight afore Michaelmas?[3]

SHAL. Come, coz; come, coz; we ſtay for you. A word with you, coz: marry, this, coz; There is, as 'twere, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by ſir Hugh here;—Do you underſtand me?

SLEN. Ay, ſir, you ſhall find me reaſonable; if it be ſo, I ſhall do that that is reaſon.

SHAL. Nay, but underſtand me.

Challenge, 4to. 1593: "—— and many things in the booke of ſonges and ſonets printed then, were of my making." By then he means "in Queene Maries raigne;" for Surrey was firſt publiſhed in 1557. STEEVENS.

[2] —— The Book of Riddles—] This appears to have been a popular book, and is enumerated with others in The Engliſh Courtier, and Country Gentleman, bl. l. 4to. 1586, Sign. H 4. See quotation in note to Much Ado about Nothing, Act II. ſc. i. REED.

[3] —— upon Allhallowmas laſt, a fortnight afore Michaelmas?] Sure, Simple's a little out in his reckoning. Allhallowmas is almoſt five weeks after Michaelmas. But may it not be urged, it is deſigned Simple ſhould appear thus ignorant, to keep up the character? I think not. The ſimpleſt creatures (nay, even naturals,) generally are very preciſe in the knowledge of feſtivals, and marking how the ſeaſons run: and therefore I have ventured to ſuſpect our poet wrote Martlemas, as the vulgar call it: which is near a fortnight after All-Saints day, i. e. eleven days, both incluſive. THEOBALD.

This correction, thus ſeriouſly and wiſely enforced, is received by Sir Thomas Hanmer; but probably Shakſpeare intended to blunder. JOHNSON.

Slen. So I do, ſir.

Eva. Give ear to his motions, maſter Slender: I will deſcription the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Slen. Nay, I will do as my couſin Shallow ſays: I pray you, pardon me; he's a juſtice of peace in his country, ſimple though I ſtand here.

Eva. But this is not the queſtion; the queſtion concerning your marriage.

Shal. Ay, there's the point, ſir.

Eva. Marry, is it; the very point of it; to miſtreſs Anne Page.

Slen. Why, if it be ſo, I will marry her, upon any reaſonable demands.

Eva. But can you affection the 'oman? Let us command to know that of your mouth, or of your lips; for divers philoſophers hold, that the lips is parcel of the mouth;[4]—Therefore, preciſely, can you carry your good will to the maid?

[4] —— the lips is parcel of the mouth;] Thus the old copies. The modern editors read—" parcel of the mind."

To be parcel of any thing, is an expreſſion that often occurs in the old plays.

So, in Decker's Satiromaſtix:

" And make damnation parcel of your oath."

Again, in Tamburlaine, 1590:

" To make it parcel of my empery."

This paſſage, however, might have been deſigned as a ridicule on another, in John Lyly's Midas, 1592:

" Pet. What lips hath ſhe?

" Li. Tuſh! Lips are no part of the head, only made for a double-leaf door for the mouth." Steevens.

The word parcel, in this place, ſeems to be uſed in the ſame ſenſe as it was both formerly and at preſent in conveyances. " Part, parcel, or member of any eſtate," are formal words ſtill to be found in various deeds. Reed.

Shal. Coufin Abraham Slender, can you love her?

Slen. I hope, fir,—I will do, as it fhall become one that would do reafon.

Eva. Nay, Got's lords and his ladies, you muft fpeak poffitable, if you can carry her your defires towards her.

Shal. That you muft: Will you, upon good dowry, marry her?

Slen. I will do a greater thing than that, upon your requeft, coufin, in any reafon.

Shal. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, fweet coz; what I do, is to pleafure you, coz: Can you love the maid?

Slen. I will marry her, fir, at your requeft; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet heaven may decreafe it upon better acquaintance, when we are married, and have more occafion to know one another: I hope, upon familiarity will grow more contempt:[5] but if you fay, marry her, I will marry her, that I am freely diffolved, and diffolutely.

[5] —— I hope upon familiarity will grow more contempt:] The old copy reads—content. Steevens.

Certainly, the editors in their fagacity have murdered a jeft here. It is defigned, no doubt, that Slender fhould fay decreafe, inftead of increafe; and diffolved and diffolutely, inftead of refolved and refolutely: but to make him fay, on the prefent occafion, that upon familiarity will grow more content, inftead of contempt, is difarming the fentiment of all its falt and humour, and difappointing the audience of a reafonable caufe for laughter. Theobald.

Theobald's conjecture may be fupported by the fame intentional blunder in Love's Labour's Loft:

"Sir, the contempts thereof are as touching me."

Steevens.

Eva. It is a fery difcretion anfwer; fave, the faul' is in the 'ort diffolutely: the 'ort is, according to our meaning, refolutely;—his meaning is good.

Shal. Ay, I think my coufin meant well.

Slen. Ay, or elfe I would I might be hanged, la.

Re-enter Anne Page.

Shal. Here comes fair miftrefs Anne:—Would I were young, for your fake, miftrefs Anne!

Anne. The dinner is on the table; my father defires your worfhips' company.

Shal. I will wait on him, fair miftrefs Anne.

Eva. Od's pleffed will! I will not be abfence at the grace.

[Exeunt Shallow and Sir H. Evans.

Anne. Will't pleafe your worfhip to come in, fir?

Slen. No, I thank you, forfooth, heartily; I am very well.

Anne. The dinner attends you, fir.

Slen. I am not a-hungry, I thank you, forfooth: Go, firrah, for all you are my man, go, wait upon my coufin Shallow:[6] [Exit Simple.] A juftice of peace fometime may be beholden to his friend for a man:—I keep but three men and a boy yet,[7]

[6] Anne. The dinner attends you, fir.
Slen.—Go, firrah, for all you are my man, go, wait upon my coufin Shallow:] This paffage fhews that it was formerly the cuftom in England, as it is now in France, for perfons to be attended at dinner by their own fervants, wherever they dined. M. Mason.

[7] —— I keep but three men and a boy yet,] As great a fool as the poet has made Slender, it appears, by his boafting of his wealth, his breeding and his courage, that he knew how to win till my mother be dead: But what though? yet I live like a poor gentleman born.

Anne. I may not go in without your worſhip: they will not ſit, till you come.

Slen. I'faith, I'll eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did.

Anne. I pray you, ſir, walk in.

Slen. I had rather walk here, I thank you: I bruiſed my ſhin the other day with playing at ſword and dagger with a maſter of fence,[8] three veneys a woman. This is a fine inſtance of Shakſpeare's knowledge of nature. Warburton.

[8] —— a maſter of fence,] Maſter of defence, on this occaſion, does not ſimply mean a profeſſor of the art of fencing, but a perſon who had taken his maſter's degree in it. I learn from one of the Sloanian MSS. (now in the Britiſh Muſeum, No. 2530, xxvi. d.) which ſeems to be the fragment of a regiſter formerly belonging to ſome of our ſchools where the "Noble Science of Defence," was taught from the year 1568 to 1583, that in this art there were three degrees, viz. a Maſter's, a Provoſt's, and a Scholar's. For each of theſe a prize was played, as exerciſes are kept in univerſities for ſimilar purpoſes. The weapons they uſed were the axe, the pike, rapier and target, rapier and cloke, two ſwords, the two-hand ſword, the baſtard ſword, the dagger and ſtaff, the ſword and buckler, the rapier and dagger, &c. The places where they exerciſed were commonly theatres, halls, or other encloſures ſufficient to contain a number of ſpectators; as Ely-Place in Holborn, the Bell Savage on Ludgate-Hill, the Curtain in Hollywell, the Gray Friars within Newgate, Hampton Court, the Bull in Biſhopſgate-Street, the Clink, Duke's Place, Saliſbury-Court, Bridewell, the Artillery Garden, &c. &c. &c. Among thoſe who diſtinguiſhed themſelves in this ſcience, I find Tarlton the Comedian, who "was allowed a maſter" the 23d of October, 1587 [I ſuppoſe, either as grand compounder, or by mandamus], he being "ordinary grome of her majeſties chamber," and Robert Greene, who "plaide his maiſter's prize at Leadenhall with three weapons," &c. The book from which theſe extracts are made, is a ſingular curioſity, as it contains the oaths, cuſtoms, regula-for a diſh of ſtewed prunes;[9] and, by my troth, I cannot abide the ſmell of hot meat ſince. Why do your dogs bark ſo? be there bears i' the town?

Anne. I think, there are, ſir; I heard them talked of.

Slen. I love the ſport well; but I ſhall as ſoon quarrel at it, as any man in England:—You are afraid, if you ſee the bear looſe, are you not?

Anne. Ay, indeed, ſir.

Slen. That's meat and drink to me now:[1] I have ſeen Sackerſon[2] looſe, twenty times; and tions, prizes, ſummonſes, &c. of this once faſhionable ſociety. K. Henry VIII. K. Edward VI. Philip and Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, were frequent ſpectators of their ſkill and activity. STEEVENS.

[9] —— three veneys for a diſh &c.] i. e. three venues, French. Three different ſet-to's, bouts, (or hits, as Mr. Malone, perhaps more properly, explains the word,) a technical term. So, in our author's Love's Labour's Loſt: "a quick venew of wit." Again, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Philaſter:—"thou wouldſt be loth to play half a dozen venies at Waſters with a good fellow for a broken head." Again, in The Two Maids of More-clacke, 1609: "This was a paſs, 'twas fencer's play, and for the after veny, let me uſe my ſkill." So, in The Famous Hiſtory, &c. of Capt. Tho. Stukely, 1605: "——for forfeits and venneys given upon a wager at the ninth button of your doublet."

Again, in the MSS. mentioned in the preceding note, "and at any prize whether it be maiſter's prize, &c. whoſoever doth play agaynſte the prizer, and doth ſtrike his blowe and cloſe with all, ſo that the prizer cannot ſtrike his blowe after agayne, ſhall wynne no game for any veneye ſo given, althoughe it ſhold breake the prizer's head." STEEVENS.

[1] That's meat and drink to me now:] Decker has this proverbial phraſe in his Satiromaſtix: "Yes faith, 'tis meat and drink to me." WHALLEY.

[2] —— Sackerſon —] Seckarſon is likewiſe the name of a bear in the old comedy of Sir Giles Gooſecap. STEEVENS.

Sackerſon, or Sacarſon, was the name of a bear that was exhibited in our author's time at Paris-Garden in Southwark.

"Publius, a ſtudent of the common law,
"To Paris-garden doth himſelf withdraw;—
"Leaving old Ployden, Dyer, and Broke, alone,
"To ſee old Harry Hunkes and Sacarſon."

Sacarſon probably had his name from his keeper. So, in the Puritan, a comedy, 1607: "How many dogs do you think I had upon me? Almoſt as many as George Stone, the bear; three at once." MALONE.

[3] —— that it paſs'd:] It paſs'd, or this paſſes, was a way of ſpeaking cuſtomary heretofore, to ſignify the exceſs, or extraordinary degree of any thing. The ſentence completed would be, This paſſes all expreſſion, or perhaps, This paſſes all things. We ſtill uſe paſſing well, paſſing ſtrange. WARBURTON.

[4] By cock and pye,] This was a very popular adjuration, and occurs in many of our old dramatic pieces. See note on Act V, ſc. i. K. Henry IV. P. II. STEEVENS.

Anne. I pray you, ſir.

Slen. I'll rather be unmannerly, than troubleſome: you do yourſelf wrong, indeed, la. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

The ſame.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Eva. Go your ways, and aſk of Doctor Caius' houſe, which is the way: and there dwells one miſtreſs Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurſe, or his dry nurſe, or his cook, or his laundry,[5] his waſher, and his wringer.

Simp. Well, ſir.

Eva. Nay, it is petter yet:——give her this letter; for it is a 'oman that altogether's acquaintance[6] with miſtreſs Anne Page: and the letter is, to deſire and require her to ſolicit your maſter's deſires to miſtreſs Anne Page: I pray you, be gone; I will make an end of my dinner; there's pippins and cheeſe to come. [Exeunt.

[5] ——or his laundry,] Sir Hugh means to ſay his launder. Thus, in Sidney's Arcadia, B. I. p. 44, edit. 1633: "——not only will make him an Amazon, but a launder, a ſpinner," &c. Steevens.

[6] ——that altogether's acquaintance—] The old copy reads—altogethers acquaintance; but ſhould not this be "that altogether's acquaintance," i. e. that is altogether acquainted? The Engliſh, I apprehend, would ſtill be bad enough for Evans. Tyrwhitt.

I have availed myſelf of this judicious remark. Steevens.

SCENE III.

A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter FALSTAFF, Hoſt, BARDOLPH, NYM, PISTOL, and ROBIN.

FAL. Mine hoſt of the Garter,—

HOST. What ſays my bully-rook?[7] Speak ſchollarly, and wiſely.

FAL. Truly, mine hoſt, I muſt turn away ſome of my followers.

HOST. Diſcard, bully Hercules; caſhier: let them wag; trot, trot.

FAL. I ſit at ten pounds a week.

HOST. Thou 'rt an emperor, Cæſar, Keiſar,[8] and Pheezar.[9] I will entertain Bardolph; he ſhall draw, he ſhall tap: ſaid I well,[1] bully Hector?

[7] —— my bully-rook?] The ſpelling of this word is corrupted, and thereby its primitive meaning is loſt. The old plays have generally bully-rook, which is right; and ſo it is exhibited by the folio edition of this comedy, as well as the 4to. 1619. The latter part of this compound title is taken from the rooks at the game of cheſs. STEEVENS.

Bully-rook ſeems to have been the reading of ſome editions: in others it is bully-rock. Mr. Steevens's explanation of it, as alluding to cheſs-men, is right. But Shakſpeare might poſſibly have given it bully-rock, as rock is the true name of theſe men, which is ſoftened or corrupted into rook. There is ſeemingly more humour in bully-rock. WHALLEY.

[8] —— Keiſar,] The preface to Stowe's Chronicle obſerves, that the Germans uſe the K for C, pronouncing Keyſar, for Cæſar, their general word for an emperor. TOLLET.

[9] —— and Pheezar.] Pheezar was a made word from pheeze. "I'll pheeze you," ſays Sly to the Hoſteſs, in The Taming of the Shrew. MALONE.

[1] —— ſaid I well,] The learned editor of the Canterbury

Fal. Do ſo, good mine hoſt.

Host. I have ſpoke; let him follow: Let me ſee thee froth, and lime:[2] I am at a word; follow. [Exit Hoſt.

Fal. Bardolph, follow him; a tapſter is a good trade: An old cloak makes a new jerkin; a withered ſervingman, a freſh tapſter:[3] Go; adieu.

Bard. It is a life that I have deſired; I will thrive. [Exit Bard.

Tales of Chaucer, in 5 vols. 8vo. 1775, obſerves, that this phraſe is given to the hoſt in the Pardonere's Prologue:

"Said I not wel? I cannot ſpeke in terme:" v. 12,246.

and adds, "it may be ſufficient with the other circumſtances of general reſemblance, to make us believe that Shakſpeare, when he drew that character, had not forgotten his Chaucer." The ſame gentleman has ſince informed me, that the paſſage is not found in any of the ancient printed editions, but only in the MSS. Steevens.

I imagine this phraſe muſt have reached our author in ſome other way; for I ſuſpect he did not devote much time to the peruſal of old MSS. Malone.

[2] ——Let me ſee thee froth, and lime:] Thus the quarto; the folio reads—"and live." This paſſage had paſſed through all the editions without ſuſpicion of being corrupted; but the reading of the old quartos of 1602 and 1619, Let me ſee thee froth and lime, I take to be the true one. The Hoſt calls for an immediate ſpecimen of Bardolph's abilities as a tapſter; and frothing beer and liming ſack were tricks practiſed in the time of Shakſpeare. The firſt was done by putting ſoap into the bottom of the tankard when they drew the beer; the other, by mixing lime with the ſack (i. e. ſherry) to make it ſparkle in the glaſs. Froth and live is ſenſe, but a little forced; and to make it ſo we muſt ſuppoſe the Hoſt could gueſs by his dexterity in frothing a pot to make it appear fuller than it was, how he would afterwards ſucceed in the world. Falſtaff himſelf complains of limed ſack. Steevens.

[3] ——a withered ſervingman, a freſh tapſter:] This is not improbably a parody on the old proverb—"A broken apothecary, a new doctor." See Ray's Proverbs, 3d edit. p. 2. Steevens.

Pist. O baſe Gongarian wight![4] wilt thou the ſpigot wield?

Nym. He was gotten in drink: Is not the humour conceited? His mind is not heroick, and there's the humour of it.[5]

Fal. I am glad, I am ſo acquit of this tinder-box; his thefts were too open: his filching was like an unſkilful finger, he kept not time.

[4] O baſe Gongarian wight! &c.] This is a parody on a line taken from one of the old bombaſt plays, beginning:

"O baſe Gongarian, wilt thou the diſtaff wield?"

I had marked the paſſage down, but forgot to note the play. The folio reads—Hungarian.

Hungarian is likewiſe a cant term. So, in The Merry Devil of Edmonton, 1608, the merry Hoſt ſays, "I have knights and colonels in my houſe, and muſt tend the Hungarians."

Again:

"Come ye Hungarian pilchers."

Again, in Weſtward Hoe, 1607:

"Play, you louzy Hungarians."

Again, in News from Hell, brought by the Devil's Carrier, by Thomas Decker, 1606: "——the leane-jaw'd Hungarian would not lay out a penny pot of ſack for himſelf."

STEEVENS.

The Hungarians, when infidels, over-ran Germany and France, and would have invaded England, if they could have come to it. See Stowe, in the year 930, and Holinſhed's invaſions of Ireland, p. 56. Hence their name might become a proverb of baſeneſs. Stowe's Chronicle, in the year 1492, and Leland's Collectanea, Vol. I. p. 610, ſpell it Hongarian (which might be miſprinted Gongarian;) and this is right according to their own etymology. Hongyars, i. e. domus ſuæ ſtrenui defenſores. TOLLET.

The word is Gongarian in the firſt edition, and ſhould be continued, the better to fix the alluſion. FARMER.

[5] —— humour of it.] This ſpeech is partly taken from the corrected copy, and partly from the ſlight ſketch in 1602. I mention it, that thoſe who do not find it in either of the common old editions, may not ſuſpect it to be ſpurious.

STEEVENS.

Nym. The good humour is, to ſteal at a minute's reſt.[6]

Pist. Convey, the wiſe it call:[7] Steal! foh; a fico for the phraſe![8]

Fal. Well, ſirs, I am almoſt out at heels.

Pist. Why then, let kibes enſue.

[6] —— at a minute's reſt.] Our author probably wrote:
"—— at a minim's reſt." Langton.

This conjecture ſeems confirmed by a paſſage in Romeo and Juliet: "—— reſts his minim," &c. It may, however, mean, that, like a ſkilful harquebuzier, he takes a good aim, though he has reſted his piece for a minute only.

So, in Daniel's Civil Wars, &c. B. VI:
"To ſet up's reſt to venture now for all." Steevens.

A minim was anciently, as the term imports, the ſhorteſt note in muſick. Its meaſure was afterwards, as it is now, as long as while two may be moderately counted. In Romeo and Juliet, Act II. ſc. iv. Mercutio ſays of Tibalt, that in fighting he "reſts his minim, one, two, and the third in your boſom." A minute contains ſixty ſeconds, and is a long time for an action ſuppoſed to be inſtantaneous. Nym means to ſay, that the perfection of ſtealing is to do it in the ſhorteſt time poſſible.
Sir J. Hawkins.

'Tis true (ſays Nym) Bardolph did not keep time; did not ſteal at the critical and exact ſeaſon, when he would probably be leaſt obſerved. The true method is, to ſteal juſt at the inſtant when watchfulneſs is off its guard, and repoſes but for a moment.

The reading propoſed by Mr. Langton certainly correſponds more exactly with the preceding ſpeech; but Shakſpeare ſcarcely ever purſues his metaphors far. Malone.

[7] Convey, the wiſe it call:] So, in the old morality of Hycke Scorner, bl. l. no date:
"Syr, the horeſons could not convaye clene;
"For an they could have carried by craft as I can," &c.
Steevens.

[8] —— a fico for the phraſe!] i. e. a fig for it. Piſtol uſes the ſame phraſeology in King Henry V:
"Die and be damn'd; and fico for thy friendſhip."
Steevens.

Fal. There is no remedy; I muſt coney-catch; I muſt ſhift.

Pist. Young ravens muſt have food.[9]

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town?

Pist. I ken the wight; he is of ſubſtance good.

Fal. My honeſt lads, I will tell you what I am about.

Pist. Two yards, and more.

Fal. No quips now, Piſtol; Indeed I am in the waiſt two yards about: but I am now about no waſte;[1] I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wiſe; I ſpy entertainment in her; ſhe diſcourſes, ſhe carves,[2] ſhe gives the leer of invitation: I can conſtrue the action of her familiar ſtyle; and the hardeſt voice of her behaviour, to be Engliſh'd rightly, is, I am ſir John Falſtaff's.

Pist. He hath ſtudied her well, and tranſlated her well;[3] out of honeſty into Engliſh.

[9] Young ravens muſt have food.] An adage. See Ray's Proverbs. Steevens.

[1] —— about no waſte;] I find the ſame play on words in Heywood's Epigrams, 1562:

"Where am I leaſt huſband? quoth he, in the waiſt;
"Which cometh of this, thou art vengeance ſtrait lac'd.
"Where am I biggeſt, wife? in the waſte, quoth ſhe,
"For all is waſte in you, as far as I ſee."

And again, in The Wedding, a comedy, by Shirley, 1629:

"He's a great man indeed;
"Something given to the waſt, for he lives within no reaſonable compaſs." Steevens.

[2] —— ſhe carves.] It ſhould be remembered, that anciently the young of both ſexes were inſtructed in carving, as a neceſſary accompliſhment. In 1508, Wynkyn de Worde publiſhed "A Boke of Kerving." So, in Love's Labour's Loſt, Biron ſays of Boyet, the French courtier: "—He can carve too, and liſp." Steevens.

[3] —— ſtudied her well, and tranſlated her well;] Thus the

Nym. The anchor is deep:[4] Will that humour paſs?

firſt quarto. The folio, 1623, reads—"ſtudied her will, and tranſlated her will." Mr. Malone obſerves, that there is a ſimilar corruption in the folio copy of King Lear. In the quarto, 1608, ſignat. B, we find—"ſince what I well intend;" inſtead of which the folio exhibits—"ſince what I will intend," &c.

Tranſlation is not uſed in its common acceptation, but means to explain, as one language is explained by another. So, in Hamlet:

"—— theſe profound heaves
"You muſt tranſlate; 'tis fit we underſtand them."

Again, in Troilus and Creſſida:

"Did in great Ilion thus tranſlate him to me."

STEEVENS.

[4] The anchor is deep:] I ſee not what relation the anchor has to tranſlation. Perhaps we may read—the author is deep; or perhaps the line is out of its place, and ſhould be inſerted lower, after Falſtaff has ſaid:

"Sail like my pinnace to thoſe golden ſhores."

It may be obſerved, that in the hands of that time anchor and author could hardly be diſtinguiſhed. JOHNSON.

"The anchor is deep," may mean—his hopes are well founded. So, in The Knight of the Burning Peſtle, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

"—— Now my lateſt hope,
"Forſake me not, but fling thy anchor out,
"And let it hold!"

Again, as Mr. M. Maſon obſerves, in Fletcher's Woman-Hater:

"Farewell, my hopes; my anchor now is broken."

In the year 1558 a ballad, intitled "Hold the ancer faſt," is entered on the books of the Stationers' Company. STEEVENS.

Dr. Johnſon very acutely propoſes "the author is deep." He reads with the firſt copy, "he hath ſtudied her well."—And from this equivocal word, Nym catches the idea of deepneſs. But it is almoſt impoſſible to aſcertain the diction of this whimſical character: and I meet with a phraſe in Fenner's Comptor's Commonwealth, 1617, which may perhaps ſupport the old reading: "Maſter Decker's Bellman of London, hath ſet forth the vices of the time ſo lively, that it is impoſſible the anchor of any other man's braine could ſound the ſea of a more deepe and dreadful miſcheefe." FARMER.

Nym, I believe, only means to ſay, the ſcheme for debauching Ford's wife is deep;—well laid. MALONE.

Fal. Now, the report goes, ſhe has all the rule of her huſband's purſe; ſhe hath legions of angels.[5]

Pist. As many devils entertain;[6] and, To her, boy, ſay I.

Nym. The humour riſes; it is good: humour me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her: and here another to Page's wife; who even now gave me good eyes too, examin'd my parts with moſt judicious eyliads:[7] ſometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, ſometimes my portly belly.[8]

Pist. Then did the ſun on dung-hill ſhine.[9]

Nym. I thank thee for that humour.[1]

[5] —— ſhe hath legions of angels.] Thus the old quarto. The folio reads—"he hath a legend of angels." Steevens.

[6] As many devils entertain;] i. e. do you retain in your ſervice as many devils as ſhe has angels. So, in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:

"Sweet lady, entertain him for your ſervant."

This is the reading of the folio. Malone.

The old quarto reads:

"As many devils attend her!" &c. Steevens.

[7] —— eyliads:] This word is differently ſpelt in all the copies. It occurs again, in King Lear, Act IV. ſc. v:

"She gave ſtrange æiliads, and moſt ſpeaking looks,
"To noble Edmund."

I ſuppoſe we ſhould write oëillades, French. Steevens.

[8] —— ſometimes the beam of her view gilded my foot, ſometimes my portly belly.] So, in our author's 20th Sonnet:

"An eye more bright than their's, leſs falſe in rolling,
"Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth." Malone.

[9] Then did the ſun on dung-hill ſhine.] So, in Lyly's Euphues, 1581:

"The ſun ſhineth upon the dunghill." Holt White.

[1] —— that humour.] What diſtinguiſhes the language of Nym from that of the other attendants on Falſtaff, is the conſtant repetition of this phraſe. In the time of Shakſpeare ſuch

FAL. O, ſhe did ſo courſe o'er my exteriors with ſuch a greedy intention,[2] that the appetite of her eye did ſeem to ſcorch me up like a burning glaſs! Here's another letter to her: ſhe bears the purſe too; ſhe is a region in Guiana, all gold and bounty.[3] I will be cheater to them both, and they ſhall be exchequers to me;[4] they ſhall be my Eaſt and Weſt Indies, and I will trade to them both. Go, bear thou this letter to miſtreſs Page; and thou this to miſtreſs Ford: we will thrive, lads, we will thrive.

an affectation ſeems to have been ſufficient to mark a character. In Sir Giles Gooſecap, a play of which I have no earlier edition than that of 1606, the ſame peculiarity is mentioned in the hero of the piece: " —his only reaſon for every thing is, that we are all mortal; then hath he another pretty phraſe too, and that is, he will tickle the vanity of every thing." STEEVENS.

[2] —— intention,] i. e. eagerneſs of deſire. So, in Chapman's tranſlation of Homer's Addreſs to the Sun:

" —— Even to horror bright,
" A blaze burns from his golden burgonet;
" Which to behold, exceeds the ſharpeſt ſet
" Of any eye's intention." STEEVENS.

[3] ——ſhe is a region in Guiana, all gold and bounty.] If the tradition be true (as I doubt not but it is) of this play being wrote at Queen Elizabeth's command, this paſſage, perhaps, may furniſh a probable conjecture that it could not appear till after the year 1598. The mention of Guiana, then ſo lately diſcovered to the Engliſh, was a very happy compliment to Sir Walter Raleigh, who did not begin his expedition for South America till 1595, and returned from it in 1596, with an advantageous account of the great wealth of Guiana. Such an addreſs of the poet was likely, I imagine, to have a proper impreſſion on the people, when the intelligence of ſuch a golden country was freſh in their minds, and gave them expectations of immenſe gain.
THEOBALD.

[4] I will be cheater to them both, and they ſhall be exchequers to me;] The ſame joke is intended here, as in The Second Part of Henry the Fourth, Act II:

" —— I will bar no honeſt man my houſe, nor no cheater."— By which is meant Eſcheatour, an officer in the Exchequer, in no good repute with the common people. WARBURTON.

Pist. Shall I ſir Pandarus of Troy become,
And by my ſide wear ſteel? then, Lucifer take all!

Nym. I will run no baſe humour: here, take the humour letter; I will keep the 'haviour of reputation.

Fal. Hold, ſirrah, [to Rob.] bear you theſe letters tightly;[5]
Sail like my pinnace[6] to theſe golden ſhores.—
Rogues, hence, avaunt! vaniſh like hail-ſtones, go;
Trudge, plod, away, o' the hoof; ſeek ſhelter, pack!

[5] —— bear you theſe letters tightly;] i. e. cleverly, adroitly. So, in Antony and Cleopatra, Antony, putting on his armour, ſays:

"My queen's a ſquire
"More tight at this, than thou." Malone.

No phraſe is ſo common in the eaſtern counties of this kingdom, and particularly in Suffolk, as good tightly, for briſkly and effectually. Henley.

It is uſed in this ſenſe in Don Sebaſtian, by Dryden, Act II. ſc. ii.—"tightly, I ſay, go tightly to your buſineſs." Reed.

[6] —— my pinnace—] A pinnace ſeems anciently to have ſignified a ſmall veſſel, or ſloop, attending on a larger. So, in Rowley's When you ſee me you know me, 1613:

"—— was lately ſent
"With threeſcore ſail of ſhips and pinnaces."

Again, in Muleaſſes the Turk, 1610:

"Our life is but a ſailing to our death
"Through the world's ocean: it makes no matter then,
"Whether we put into the world's vaſt ſea
"Shipp'd in a pinnace, or an argoſy."

At preſent it ſignifies only a man of war's boat.

A paſſage ſimilar to this of Shakſpeare occurs in The Humourous Lieutenant, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

"—— this ſmall pinnace
"Shall ſail for gold." Steevens.

A pinnace is a ſmall veſſel with a ſquare ſtern, having ſails and oars, and carrying three maſts; chiefly uſed (ſays Rolt, in his Dictionary of Commerce,) as a ſcout for intelligence, and for landing of men. Malone.

Falſtaff will learn the humour of this age,[7]
French thrift, you rogues; myſelf, and ſkirted page.
[Exeunt FALSTAFF and ROBIN.

PIST. Let vultures gripe thy guts![8] for gourd, and fullam holds,
And high and low beguile the rich and poor:[9]

[7] —— the humour of this age,] Thus the 4to. 1619: The folio reads—the honor of the age. STEEVENS.

[8] Let vultures gripe thy guts!] This hemiſtich is a burleſque on a paſſage in Tamburlaine, or The Scythian Shepherd, of which play a more particular account is given in one of the notes to Henry IV. P. II. Act II. ſc. iv. STEEVENS.

I ſuppoſe the following is the paſſage intended to be ridiculed:
"—— and now doth ghaſtly death
"With greedy talents [talons] gripe my bleeding heart,
"And like a harper [harpy] tyers on my life."
Again, ibid:
"Griping our bowels with retorted thoughts." MALONE.

[9] ——for gourd, and fullam holds,
And high and low beguile the rich and poor:] Fullam is a cant term for falſe dice, high and low. Torriano, in his Italian Dictionary, interprets Piſe by falſe dice, high and low men, high fullams and low fullams. Jonſon, in his Every Man out of his Humour, quibbles upon this cant term: "Who, he ſerve? He keeps high men and low men, he has a fair living at Fullam."—As for gourd, or rather gord, it was another inſtrument of gaming, as appears from Beaumont and Fletcher's Scornful Lady: "——And thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but GORDS or nine-pins." WARBURTON.

In The London Prodigal I find the following enumeration of falſe dice: "I bequeath two bale of falſe dice, videlicit, high men and low men, fulloms, ſtop cater-traies, and other bones of function."

Green, in his Art of Juggling, &c. 1612, ſays, "What ſhould I ſay more of falſe dice, of fulloms, high men, lowe men, gourds, and brizled dice, graviers, demies, and contraries?"

Again, in The Bellman of London, by Decker, 5th edit. 1640; among the falſe dice are enumerated, "a bale of fullams."—"A bale of gordes, with as many high-men as low-men for paſſage." STEEVENS.

Gourds were probably dice in which a ſecret cavity had been

Teſter I'll have in pouch, when thou ſhalt lack,
Baſe Phrygian Turk!

Nym. I have operations in my head,[1] which be humours of revenge.

Pist. Wilt thou revenge?

Nym. By welkin, and her ſtar!

Pist. With wit, or ſteel?

Nym. With both the humours, I:
I will diſcuſs the humour of this love to Page.[2]

Pist. And I to Ford ſhall eke unfold,
How Falſtaff, varlet vile,
His dove will prove, his gold will hold,
And his ſoft couch defile.

made; fullams, thoſe which had been loaded with a ſmall bit of lead. High men and low men, which were likewiſe cant terms, explain themſelves. High numbers on the dice, at hazard, are from five to twelve, incluſive; low, from aces to four. Malone.

High and low men were falſe dice, which, being chiefly made at Fulham, were thence called "high and low Fulhams." The high Fulhams were the numbers, 4, 5, and 6. See the manner in which theſe dice were made, in The Complete Gameſter, p. 12, edit. 1676, 12mo. Douce.

[1] —— in my head,] Theſe words, which are omitted in the folio, were recovered by Mr. Pope from the early quarto.
Malone.

[2] I will diſcuſs the humour of this love to Page.] The folio reads: "—— to Ford;" but the very reverſe of this happens. See Act II. where Nym makes the diſcovery to Page, and not to Ford, as here promiſed; and Piſtol, on the other hand, to Ford, and not to Page. Shakſpeare is frequently guilty of theſe little forgetfulneſſes. Steevens.

The folio reads—to Ford; and in the next line—and I to Page, &c. But the reverſe of this (as Mr. Steevens has obſerved) happens in Act II. where Nym makes the diſcovery to Page, and Piſtol to Ford. I have therefore corrected the text from the old quarto, where Nym declares he will make the diſcovery to Page; and Piſtol ſays, "And I to Ford will likewiſe tell—." Malone.

Nym. My humour ſhall not cool: I will incenſe Page[3] to deal with poiſon; I will poſſeſs him with yellowneſs,[4] for the revolt of mien[5] is dangerous: that is my true humour.

Pist. Thou art the Mars of malcontents: I ſecond thee; troop on. [Exeunt.

[3] I will incenſe Page, &c.] So, in K. Henry VIII:

"——— I have
"Incens'd the lords of the council, that he is
"A moſt arch heretic—."

In both paſſages, to incenſe has the ſame meaning as to inſtigate. Steevens.

[4] —— yellowneſs,] Yellowneſs is jealouſy. Johnson.

So, in Law Tricks, &c. 1608:

"If you have me you muſt not put on yellows."

Again, in The Arraignment of Paris, 1584:

"—— Flora well, perdie,
"Did paint her yellow for her jealouſy." Steevens.

[5] —— the revolt of mien —] The revolt of mine is the old reading. Revolt of mien, is change of countenance, one of the effects he has juſt been aſcribing to jealouſy. Steevens.

This Mr. Steevens truly obſerves to be the old reading, and it is authority enough for the revolt of mien in modern orthography. "Know you that fellow that walketh there?—ſays Eliot, 1593—he is an alchymiſt by his mine, and hath multiplied all to moonſhine." Farmer.

Nym means, I think, to ſay, that kind of change in the complexion, which is cauſed by jealouſy, renders the perſon poſſeſſed by ſuch a paſſion dangerous; conſequently Ford will be likely to revenge himſelf on Falſtaff, and I ſhall be gratified. I believe our author wrote—that revolt, &c. though I have not diſturbed the text—ye and yt in the MSS. of his time were eaſily confounded. Malone.

SCENE IV.

A Room in Dr. Caius's Houſe.

Enter Mrs. QUICKLY, SIMPLE, and RUGBY.[6]

QUICK. What; John Rugby!—I pray thee, go to the caſement, and ſee if you can ſee my maſter, maſter Doctor Caius, coming: if he do, i'faith, and find any body in the houſe, here will be an old abuſing of God's patience, and the king's Engliſh.

RUG. I'll go watch. [Exit RUGBY.

QUICK. Go; and we'll have a poſſet for't ſoon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a ſea-coal fire.[7] An honeſt, willing, kind fellow, as ever ſervant ſhall come in houſe withal; and, I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no breed-bate:[8] his worſt fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is ſomething peeviſh that way:[9]

[7] —— at the latter end, &c.] That is, when my maſter is in bed. JOHNSON.

[8] —— no breed-bate:] Bate is an obſolete word, ſignifying ſtrife, contention. So, in the Counteſs of Pembroke's Antonius, 1595:

"Shall ever civil bate
"Gnaw and devour our ſtate?"

Again, in Acolaſtus, a comedy, 1540:

"We ſhall not fall at bate, or ſtryve for this matter."

Stanyhurſt, in his tranſlation of Virgil, 1582, calls Erinnys a make-bate. STEEVENS.

[9] —— he is ſomething peeviſh that way:] Peeviſh is fooliſh. So, in Cymbeline, Act II: "—he's ſtrange and peeviſh." STEEVENS.

I believe, this is one of dame Quickly's blunders, and that ſhe means preciſe. MALONE.

but nobody but has his fault;—but let that paſs. Peter Simple, you ſay your name is?

Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.

Quick. And maſter Slender's your maſter?

Sim. Ay, forſooth.

Quick. Does he not wear a great round beard,[1] like a glover's paring-knife?

Sim. No, forſooth: he hath but a little wee face,[2] with a little yellow beard; a Cain-coloured beard.[3]

[1] ——a great round beard, &c.] See a note on K. Henry V. Act III. ſc. vi: "And what a beard of the general's cut," &c. MALONE.

[2] ——a little wee face,] Wee, in the northern dialect, ſignifies very little. Thus, in the Scottiſh proverb that apologizes for a little woman's marriage with a big man:—"A wee mouſe will creep under a mickle cornſtack." COLLINS.

So, in Heywood's Fair Maid of the Weſt, a comedy, 1631: "He was nothing ſo tall as I; but a little wee man, and ſomewhat hutch-back'd."

Again, in The Wiſdom of Doctor Dodypoll, 1600:
"Some two miles, and a wee bit, ſir."

Wee is derived from weenig, Dutch. On the authority of the 4to, 1619, we might be led to read whey-face: "—Somewhat of a weakly man, and has as it were a whey-coloured beard." Macbeth calls one of the meſſengers whey-face. STEEVENS.

Little wee is certainly the right reading; it implies ſomething extremely diminutive, and is a very common vulgar idiom in the North. Wee alone, has only the ſignification of little. Thus Cleveland:
"A Yorkſhire wee bit, longer than a mile."

The proverb is a mile and a wee bit; i. e. about a league and a half. RITSON.

[3] ——a Cain-colour'd beard.] Cain and Judas, in the tapeſtries and pictures of old, were repreſented with yellow beards. THEOBALD.

Theobald's conjecture may be countenanced by a parallel expreſſion in an old play called Blurt Maſter Conſtable, or, The Spaniard's Night-Walk, 1602:

Quick. A ſoftly-ſprighted man, is he not?

Sim. Ay, forſooth: but he is as tall a man of his hands,[4] as any is between this and his head; he hath fought with a warrener.

"——— over all,
"A goodly, long, thick, Abraham-colour'd beard."

Again, in Soliman and Perſeda, 1599, Baſiliſco ſays:

"—— where is the eldeſt ſon of Priam,
"That Abraham-colour'd Trojan?"

I am not, however, certain, but that Abraham may be a corruption of auburn.

So, in Reynolds's God's Revenge againſt Murder, Book IV. Hiſt. 16. "Harcourt had a light auburn beard, which (like a country gentleman) he wore negligently after the oval cut."

Again, in The Spaniſh Tragedy, 1603:

"And let their beards be of Judas his own colour."

Again, in A Chriſtian turn'd Turk, 1612:

"That's he in the Judas beard."

Again, in The InſatiateOunteſs, 1613:

"I ever thought by his red beard he would prove a Judas."

In an age, when but a ſmall part of the nation could read, ideas were frequently borrowed from repreſentations in painting or tapeſtry. A cane-colour'd beard, however, [the reading of the quarto,] might ſignify a beard of the colour of cane, i. e. a ſickly yellow; for ſtraw-colour'd beards are mentioned in A Midſummer Night's Dream. STEEVENS.

The words of the quarto,—a whey-colour'd beard, ſtrongly favour this reading; for whey and cane are nearly of the ſame colour. MALONE.

The new edition of Leland's Collectanea, Vol. V. p. 295, aſſerts, that painters conſtantly repreſented Judas the traytor with a red head. Dr. Plot's Oxfordſhire, p. 153, ſays the ſame. This conceit is thought to have ariſen in England, from our ancient grudge to the red-haired Danes. TOLLET.

See my quotation in King Henry VIII. Act V. ſc. ii. STEEVENS.

[4] —— as tall a man of his hands,] Perhaps this is an alluſion to the jockey meaſure, ſo many hands high, uſed by grooms when ſpeaking of horſes. Tall, in our author's time, ſignified not only height of ſtature, but ſtoutneſs of body. The ambiguity of the phraſe ſeems intended. PERCY.

Quick. How ſay you?—O, I ſhould remember him; Does he not hold up his head, as it were? and ſtrut in his gait?

Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.

Quick. Well, heaven ſend Anne Page no worſe fortune! Tell maſter parſon Evans, I will do what I can for your maſter: Anne is a good girl, and I wiſh—

Re-enter RUGBY.

Rug. Out, alas! here comes my maſter.

Quick. We ſhall all be ſhent:[5] Run in here, good young man; go into this cloſet. [Shuts SIMPLE in the cloſet.] He will not ſtay long.—What, John Rugby! John, what, John, I ſay!—Go, John,

Whatever be the origin of this phraſe, it is very ancient, being uſed by Gower:

"A worthie knight was of his honde,
"There was none ſuche in all the londe."

De Confeſſione Amantis, lib. v. fol. 118. b.
STEEVENS.

The tall man of the old dramatick writers, was a man of a bold, intrepid diſpoſition, and inclined to quarrel; ſuch as is deſcribed by Steevens in the ſecond ſcene of the third act of this play. M. MASON.

"A tall man of his hands" ſometimes meant quick-handed, active; and as Simple is here commending his maſter for his gymnaſtick abilities, perhaps the phraſe is here uſed in that ſenſe. See Florio's Italian Dictionary, 1598, in v. "Maneſco. Nimble or quick-handed; a tall man of his hands." MALONE.

[5] We ſhall all be ſhent:] i. e. Scolded, roughly treated. So, in the old Interlude of Nature, bl. l. no date:

"——I can tell thee one thyng,
"In fayth you wyll be ſhent."

Again, in Chapman's verſion of the twenty-third book of Homer's Odyſſey:

"——ſuch acts ſtill were ſhent,
"As ſimply in themſelves, as in th' event." STEEVENS.

go enquire for my maſter; I doubt, he be not well, that he comes not home:—and down, down, adown-a,[6] &c. [Sings.

Enter Doctor CAIUS.[7]

CAIUS. Vat is you ſing? I do not like deſe toys; Pray you, go and vetch me in my cloſet un boitier verd;[8] a box, a green-a box; Do intend vat I ſpeak? a green-a box.

[6] ——and down, down, adown-a, &c.] To deceive her maſter, ſhe ſings as if at her work. SIR J. HAWKINS.

This appears to have been the burden of ſome ſong then well known. In Every Woman in her Humour, 1609, ſign. E 1, one of the characters ſays, "Hey good boies! i'faith now a three man's ſong, or the old downe adowne: well, things muſt be as they may; fil's the other quart: muſkadine with an egg is fine; there's a time for all things, bonos nochios." REED.

[7] Enter Doctor Caius.] It has been thought ſtrange that our author ſhould take the name of Caius [an eminent phyſician who flouriſhed in the reign of Elizabeth, and founder of Caius College in our univerſity] for his Frenchman in this comedy; but Shakſpeare was little acquainted with literary hiſtory; and without doubt, from this unuſual name, ſuppoſed him to have been a foreign quack. Add to this, that the doctor was handed down as a kind of Roſicrucian: Mr. Ames had in MS. one of the "Secret Writings of Dr. Caius." FARMER.

This character of Dr. Caius might have been drawn from the life; as in Jacke of Dover's Queſt of Enquirie, 1604, (perhaps a republication,) a ſtory called The Foole of Winſor begins thus: "Upon a time there was in Winſor a certain ſimple outlandiſhe doctor of phyſicke belonging to the deane," &c. STEEVENS.

[8] ——un boitier verd;] Boitier in French ſignifies a caſe of ſurgeon's inſtruments. GREY.

I believe it rather means a box of ſalve, or caſe to hold ſimples, for which Caius profeſſes to ſeek. The ſame word, ſomewhat curtailed, is uſed by Chaucer, in The Pardoneres Prologue, v. 12,241:

"And every boiſt ful of thy letuarie."

Quick. Ay, forſooth, I'll fetch it you. I am glad he went not in himſelf: if he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mad. [Aſide.

Caius. Fe, fe fe, fe! ma foi, il fait fort chaud. Je m'en vais à la Cour,—la grand affaire.

Quick. Is it this, ſir?

Caius. Ouy; mette le au mon pocket; Depeche, quickly:—Vere is dat knave Rugby?

Quick. What, John Rugby! John!

Rug. Here, ſir.

Caius. You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby: Come, take-a your rapier, and come after my heel to de court.

Rug. 'Tis ready, ſir, here in the porch.

Caius. By my trot, I tarry too long:—Od's me! Qu'ay j'oublié? dere is ſome ſimples in my cloſet, dat I vill not for the varld I ſhall leave behind.

Quick. Ah me! he'll find the young man there, and be mad.

Caius. O diable, diable! vat is in my cloſet?—Villainy! larron! [Pulling Simple out.] Rugby, my rapier.

Quick. Good maſter, be content.

Caius. Verefore ſhall I be content-a?

Quick. The young man is an honeſt man.

Caius. Vat ſhall the honeſt man do in my cloſet? dere is no honeſt man dat ſhall come in my cloſet.

Again, in The Skynners' Play, in the Cheſter Collection of Myſteries, MS. Harl. p. 149, Mary Magdalen ſays:

"To balme his bodye that is ſo brighte,
"Boyſte here have I brought." Steevens.

Quick. I beſeech you, be not ſo flegmatick; hear the truth of it: He came of an errand to me from parſon Hugh.

Caius. Vell.

Sim. Ay, forſooth, to deſire her to——

Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Caius. Peace-a your tongue:—Speak-a your tale.

Sim. To deſire this honeſt gentlewoman, your maid, to ſpeak a good word to miſtreſs Anne Page for my maſter, in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, la; but I'll ne'er put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Caius. Sir Hugh ſend-a you?—Rugby, baillez me ſome paper: Tarry you a little-a while. [Writes.

Quick. I am glad he is ſo quiet: if he had been thoroughly moved, you ſhould have heard him ſo loud, and ſo melancholy;—But notwithſtanding, man, I'll do your maſter what good I can: and the very yea and the no is, the French Doctor, my maſter,—I may call him my maſter, look you, for I keep his houſe; and I waſh, wring, brew, bake, ſcour, dreſs meat and drink,[9] make the beds, and do all myſelf;—

Sim. 'Tis a great charge, to come under one body's hand.

Quick. Are you avis'd o'that? you ſhall find it a great charge: and to be up early and down late;—but notwithſtanding, (to tell you in your ear; I would have no words of it;) my maſter himſelf is in love with miſtreſs Anne Page: but notwithſtanding that,—I know Anne's mind,—that's neither here nor there.

Caius. You jack'nape; give-a dis letter to Sir Hugh; by gar, it is a ſhallenge: I vill cut his troat in de park; and I vill teach a ſcurvy jack-a-nape prieſt to meddle or make:—you may be gone; it is not good you tarry here:—by gar, I vill cut all his two ſtones; by gar, he ſhall not have a ſtone to trow at his dog. [Exit Simple.

Quick. Alas, he ſpeaks but for his friend.

Caius. It is no matter-a for dat:—do not you tell-a me dat I ſhall have Anne Page for myſelf?—by gar, I vill kill de Jack prieſt;[1] and I have appointed mine hoſt of de Jarterre to meaſure our weapon:—by gar, I vill myſelf have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all ſhall be well: we muſt give folks leave to prate: What, the good-jer![2]

Caius. Rugby, come to the court vit me;—By

[1] —— de Jack prieſt;] Jack, in our author's time, was a term of contempt: "So, ſaucy Jack," &c. See K. Henry IV. P. I. Act III. ſc. iii: "The prince is a Jack, a ſneak-cup;" and Much Ado about Nothing, Act I. ſc. i: "—do you play the flouting Jack?" Malone.

[2] What, the good-jer!] She means to ſay—"the goujere," i. e. morbus Gallicus. So, in K. Lear:

"The goujeres ſhall devour them."

See Hanmer's note, King Lear, Act V. ſc. iii. Steevens.

Mrs. Quickly ſcarcely ever pronounces a hard word rightly. Good-jer and Good-year were in our author's time common corruptions of goujere; and in the books of that age the word is as often written one way as the other. Malone.

gar, if I have not Anne Page, I ſhall turn your head out of my door:—Follow my heels, Rugby.

[Exeunt CAIUS and RUGBY.

QUICK. You ſhall have An fools-head[3] of your own. No, I know Anne's mind for that: never a woman in Windſor knows more of Anne's mind than I do; nor can do more than I do with her, I thank heaven.

FENT. [Within.] Who's within there, ho?

QUICK. Who's there, I trow? Come near the houſe, I pray you.

Enter FENTON.

FENT. How now, good woman; how doſt thou?

QUICK. The better, that it pleaſes your good worſhip to aſk.

FENT. What news? how does pretty miſtreſs Anne?

QUICK. In truth, ſir, and ſhe is pretty, and honeſt, and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way; I praiſe heaven for it.

FENT. Shall I do any good, thinkeſt thou? Shall I not loſe my ſuit?

QUICK. Troth, ſir, all is in his hands above: but notwithſtanding, maſter Fenton, I'll be ſworn on a [3] You ſhall have An fool's-head—] Mrs. Quickly, I believe, intends a quibble between Ann, ſounded broad, and one, which was formerly ſometimes pronounced on, or with nearly the ſame ſound. In the Scottiſh dialect one is written, and I ſuppoſe pronounced, ane.—In 1603 was publiſhed "Ane verie excellent and delectable Treatiſe, intitulit Philotus," &c.

book, ſhe loves you:—Have not your worſhip a wart above your eye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that?

Quick. Well, thereby hangs a tale;—good faith, it is ſuch another Nan;—but, I deteſt,[4] an honeſt maid as ever broke bread:—We had an hour's talk of that wart;—I ſhall never laugh but in that maid's company!—But, indeed, ſhe is given too much to allicholly[5] and muſing: But for you—Well, go to.

Fent. Well, I ſhall ſee her to-day: Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou ſeeſt her before me, commend me—

Quick. Will I? i'faith, that we will: and I will tell your worſhip more of the wart, the next time we have confidence; and of other wooers.

Fent. Well, farewell; I am in great haſte now. [Exit.

Quick. Farewell to your worſhip.—Truly, an honeſt gentleman; but Anne loves him not; for I know Anne's mind as well as another does:—Out upon't! what have I forgot?[6] [Exit.

[4] —— but, I deteſt,] She means—I proteſt. Malone.

The ſame intended miſtake occurs in Meaſure for Meaſure, Act II. ſc. i: "My wife, ſir, whom I deteſt before heaven and your honour," &c.—"Doſt thou deteſt her therefore?" Steevens.

[5] —— to allicholly—] And yet, in a former part of this very ſcene, Mrs. Quickly is made to utter the word—melancholy, without the leaſt corruption of it. Such is the inconſiſtency of the firſt folio. Steevens.

[6] —— Out upon't! what have I forgot?] This excuſe for leaving the ſtage, is rather too near Dr. Caius's "Od's me! qu'ay j'oublié?" in the former part of the ſcene. Steevens.

ACT II. SCENE I.

Before Page's House.

Enter Mistress PAGE, with a letter.

MRS. PAGE. What! have I 'scaped love-letters in the holy-day time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me see: [Reads.

Ask me no reason why I love you; for though love use reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor: [7] You are not young, no more am

[7] —— though love use reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor:] This is obscure: but the meaning is, though love permit reason to tell what is fit to be done, he seldom follows its advice.—By precisian, is meant one who pretends to a more than ordinary degree of virtue and sanctity. On which account they gave this name to the puritans of that time. So Osborne—" Conform their mode, words, and looks, to these PRECISIANS." And Maine, in his City Match:

" —— I did commend
" A great PRECISIAN to her for her woman."

WARBURTON.

Of this word I do not see any meaning that is very apposite to the present intention. Perhaps Falstaff said, Though love use reason as his physician, he admits him not for his counsellor. This will be plain sense. Ask not the reason of my love; the business of reason is not to assist love, but to cure it. There may however be this meaning in the present reading. Though love, when he would submit to regulation, may use reason as his precisian, or director, in nice cases, yet when he is only eager to attain his end, he takes not reason for his counsellor.

JOHNSON.

Dr. Johnson wishes to read physician; and this conjecture becomes almost a certainty from a line in our author's 147th sonnet:

" My reason the physician to my love," &c. FARMER.

The character of a precisian seems to have been very generally ridiculed in the time of Shakspeare. So, in The Malcon-

I; go to then, there's ſympathy: you are merry, ſo am I; Ha! ha! then there's more ſympathy: you love ſack, and ſo do I; Would you deſire better ſympathy? Let it ſuffice thee, miſtreſs Page, (at the leaſt, if the love of a ſoldier can ſuffice,) that I love thee. I will not ſay, pity me, 'tis not a ſoldier-like phraſe; but I ſay, love me. By me,

Thine own true knight,
By day or night,[8]
Or any kind of light,
With all his might,
For thee to fight, John Falſtaff.

tent, 1604: "You muſt take her in the right vein then; as, when the ſign is in Piſces, a fiſhmonger's wife is very ſociable: in Cancer, a preciſian's wife is very flexible."

Again, Dr. Fauſtus, 1604:

"I will ſet my countenance like a preciſian."

Again, in Ben Jonſon's Caſe is alter'd, 1609:

"It is preciſianiſm to alter that,
"With auſtere judgement, which is given by nature."

STEEVENS.

If phyſician be the right reading, the meaning may be this: A lover uncertain as yet of ſucceſs, never takes reaſon for his counſellor, but, when deſperate, applies to him as his phyſician.

MUSGRAVE.

[8] Thine own true knight,
By day or night,] This expreſſion, ludicrouſly employed by Falſtaff, is of Greek extraction, and means, at all times. So, in the twenty-ſecond Iliad, 433:

——ὅ μοι ΝΥΚΤΑΣ ΤΕ ΚΑΙ ΗΜΑΡ Εὐχωλὴ.

Thus faithfully rendered by Mr. Wakefield:

"My Hector! night and day thy mother's joy."

So likewiſe, in the third book of Gower, De Confeſſione Amantis:

"The ſonne cleped was Machayre,
"The daughter eke Canace hight,
"By daie bothe and eke by night."

Loud and ſtill was another phraſe of ſimilar meaning.

STEEVENS.

What a Herod of Jewry is this?—O wicked, wicked, world!—one that is well nigh worn to pieces with age, to ſhow himſelf a young gallant! What an unweighed behaviour[9] hath this Flemiſh drunkard[1] picked (with the devil's name) out of my converſation, that he dares in this manner aſſay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company!—What ſhould I ſay to him?—I was then frugal of my mirth:[2]—heaven forgive me!—Why, I'll exhibit a bill in the parliament for the putting down of men.[3] How ſhall I be revenged on him? for [9] —— What an unweighed behaviour &c.] Thus the folio 1623. It has been ſuggeſted to me, that we ſhould read—one. STEEVENS.

[1] —— Flemiſh drunkard—] It is not without reaſon that this term of reproach is here uſed. Sir John Smythe in Certain Diſcourſes, &c. 4to. 1590, ſays, that the habit of drinking to exceſs was introduced into England from the Low Countries "by ſome of our ſuch men of warre within theſe very few years: whereof it is come to paſſe that now-a-dayes there are very fewe feaſtes where our ſaid men of warre are preſent, but that they do invite and procure all the companie, of what calling ſoever they be, to carowſing and quaffing; and, becauſe they will not be denied their challenges, they, with many new conges, ceremonies, and reverences, drinke to the health and proſperitie of princes; to the health of counſellors, and unto the health of their greateſt friends both at home and abroad: in which exerciſe they never ceaſe till they be deade drunke, or, as the Flemings ſay, Doot dronken." He adds, "And this aforeſaid deteſtable vice hath within theſe ſix or ſeven yeares taken wonderful roote amongeſt our Engliſh nation, that in times paſt was wont to be of all other nations of Chriſtendome one of the ſobereſt." REED.

[2] —— I was then frugal of my mirth:] By breaking this ſpeech into exclamations, the text may ſtand; but I once thought it muſt be read, If I was not then frugal of my mirth, &c. JOHNSON.

[3] —— for the putting down of men.] The word which ſeems to have been inadvertently omitted in the folio, was reſtored by Mr. Theobald from the quarto, where the correfrevenged I will be, as ſure as his guts are made of puddings.

ponding ſpeech runs thus: "Well, I ſhall truſt fat men the worſe, while I live, for his ſake. O God; that I knew how to be revenged of him!"—Dr. Johnſon, however, thinks that the inſertion is unneceſſary, as "Mrs. Page might naturally enough, in the firſt heat of her anger, rail at the ſex for the fault of one." But the authority of the original ſketch in quarto, and Mrs. Page's frequent mention of the ſize of her lover in the play as it now ſtands, in my opinion fully warrant the correction that has been made. Our author well knew that bills are brought into parliament for ſome purpoſe that at leaſt appears practicable. Mrs. Page therefore in her paſſion might exhibit a bill for the putting down or deſtroying men of a particular deſcription; but Shakſpeare would never have made her threaten to introduce a bill to effect an impoſſibility, viz. the extermination of the whole ſpecies.

There is no error more frequent at the preſs than the omiſſion of words. In a ſheet of this work now before me [Mr. Malone means his own edition] there was an out, (as it is termed in the printing-houſe,) that is, a paſſage omitted, of no leſs than ten lines. In every ſheet ſome words are at firſt omitted.

The expreſſion, putting down, is a common phraſe of our municipal law. MALONE.

I believe this paſſage has hitherto been miſunderſtood, and therefore continue to read with the folio, which omits the epithet —fat.

The putting down of men, may only ſignify the humiliation of them, the bringing them to ſhame. So, in Twelfth Night, Malvolio ſays of the Clown—"I ſaw him, the other day, put down by an ordinary fool;" i. e. confounded. Again, in Love's Labour's Loſt—"How the ladies and I have put him down!" Again, in Much Ado about Nothing—"You have put him down, lady, you have put him down." Again, in Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, edit. 1632, p. 482—"Lucullus' wardrobe is put down by our ordinary citizens."

I cannot help thinking that the extermination of all men would be as practicable a deſign of parliament, as the putting down of thoſe whoſe only offence was embonpoint.

I perſiſt in this opinion, even though I have before me (in ſupport of Mr. Malone's argument) the famous print from P. Brueghel, repreſenting the Lean Cooks expelling the Fat ones. STEEVENS.

Enter Miſtreſs FORD.

MRS. FORD. Miſtreſs Page! truſt me, I was going to your houſe.

MRS. PAGE. And, truſt me, I was coming to you. You look very ill.

MRS. FORD. Nay, I'll ne'er believe that; I have to ſhow to the contrary.

MRS. PAGE. 'Faith, but you do, in my mind.

MRS. FORD. Well, I do then; yet, I ſay, I could ſhow you to the contrary: O, miſtreſs Page, give me ſome counſel!

MRS. PAGE. What's the matter, woman?

MRS. FORD. O woman, if it were not for one trifling reſpect, I could come to ſuch honour!

MRS. PAGE. Hang the trifle, woman; take the honour: What is it?——diſpenſe with trifles;—what is it?

MRS. FORD. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment, or ſo, I could be knighted.

MRS. PAGE. What?—thou lieſt!—Sir Alice Ford!——Theſe knights will hack; and ſo thou ſhouldſt not alter the article of thy gentry.[4]

[4] What?—thou lieſt!—Sir Alice Ford!—Theſe knights will hack; and ſo thou ſhouldſt not alter the article of thy gentry.] I read thus—Theſe knights we'll hack, and ſo thou ſhouldſt not alter the article of thy gentry. The puniſhment of a recreant, or undeſerving knight, was to hack off his ſpurs: the meaning therefore is; it is not worth the while of a gentlewoman to be made a knight, for we'll degrade all theſe knights in a little time, by the uſual form of hacking off their ſpurs, and thou, if thou art knighted, ſhalt be hacked with the reſt. JOHNSON.

Sir T. Hanmer ſays, to hack, means to turn hackney, or proſtitute. I ſuppoſe he means—Theſe knights will degrade themſelves, ſo that ſhe will acquire no honour by being connected with them.

Mrs. Ford. We burn day-light: [5]—here, read, read;—perceive how I might be knighted.—I ſhall

It is not, however, impoſſible that Shakſpeare meant by—theſe knights will hack—theſe knights will ſoon become hackneyed characters.—So many knights were made about the time this play was amplified (for the paſſage is neither in the copy 1602, nor 1619,) that ſuch a ſtroke of ſatire might not have been unjuſtly thrown in. In Hans Beer Pot's Inviſible Comedy, 1618, is a long piece of ridicule on the ſame occurrence:

"Twas ſtrange to ſee what knighthood once would do:
"Stir great men up to lead a martial life——
"To gain this honour and this dignity.——
"But now, alas! 'tis grown ridiculous,
"Since bought with money, ſold for baſeſt prize,
"That ſome refuſe it who are counted wiſe." Steevens.

Theſe knights will hack (that is, become cheap or vulgar,) and therefore ſhe adviſes her friend not to ſully her gentry by becoming one. The whole of this diſcourſe about knighthood is added ſince the firſt edition of this play [in 1602]; and therefore I ſuſpect this is an oblique reflection on the prodigality of James I. in beſtowing theſe honours, and erecting in 1611 a new order of knighthood, called Baronets; which few of the ancient gentry would condeſcend to accept. See Sir Henry Spelman's epigram on them, Gloſſ. p. 76, which ends thus:

"——dum cauponare recuſant
"Ex vera geniti nobilitate viri;
"Interea e caulis hic prorepit, ille tabernis,
"Et modo fit dominus, qui modo ſervus erat."

See another ſtroke at them in Othello, Act III. ſc. iv.

Blackstone.

Sir W. Blackſtone ſuppoſes that the order of Baronets (created in 1611) was likewiſe alluded to. But it appears to me highly probable that our author amplified the play before us at an earlier period. See An Attempt to aſcertain the Order of Shakſpeare's Plays, Vol. II. Article, Merry Wives of Windſor.

Between the time of King James's arrival at Berwick in April 1603, and the 2d of May, he made two hundred and thirty-ſeven knights; and in the July following between three and four hundred. It is probable that the play before us was enlarged in that or the ſubſequent year, when this ſtroke of ſatire muſt have been highly reliſhed by the audience. Malone.

[5] We burn day-light:] i. e. we have more proof than we want. The ſame proverbial phraſe occurs in The Spaniſh Tragedy:

think the worſe of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking:[6] And yet he would not ſwear; praiſed women's modeſty: and gave ſuch orderly and well-behaved reproof to all uncomelineſs, that I would have ſworn his diſpoſition would have gone to the truth of his words: but they do no more adhere and keep place together than the hundredth pſalm to the tune of Green ſleeves.[7] What tempeſt, I trow, threw this whale,

" Hier. Light me your torches."
" Pedro. Then we burn day-light."

Again, in Romeo and Juliet, Mercutio uſes the ſame expreſſion, and then explains it:

" We waſte our lights in vain like lamps by day."

STEEVENS.

I think, the meaning rather is, we are waſting time in idle talk, when we ought to read the letter; reſembling thoſe who waſte candles by burning them in the day-time. MALONE.

6 —— men's liking:] i. e. men's condition of body. Thus in the Book of Job: " Their young ones are in good liking." Falſtaff alſo, in King Henry IV. ſays—" I'll repent while I am in ſome liking."

Again, in A Courtlie Controverſie of Cupid's Cautels, &c. tranſlated out of French, &c. by H. W. [Henry Wotton] 4to. 1578, p. 20: " Your freſh colour and good liking teſtifieth, that melancholy conſumeth not your bodie." STEEVENS.

7 —— Green ſleeves.] This ſong was entered on the books of the Stationers' Company in September, 1580: " Licenſed unto Richard Jones, a newe northerne dittye of the Lady Green Sleeves." Again, " Licenſed unto Edward White, a ballad, beinge the Lady Green Sleeves, anſwered to Jenkyn hir friend." Again, in the ſame month and year: " Green Sleeves moralized to the Scripture," &c. Again, to Edward White:

" Green Sleeves and countenaunce.
" In countenaunce is Green Sleeves."

Again: " A new Northern Song of Green Sleeves, beginning,

" The bonnieſt laſs in all the land."

Again, in February 1580: " A reprehenſion againſt Greene Sleeves, by W. Elderton." From a paſſage in The Loyal Subject, by Beaumont and Fletcher, it ſhould ſeem that the original was a wanton ditty:

with ſo many tuns of oil in his belly, aſhore at Windſor? How ſhall I be revenged on him? I think, the beſt way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of luſt have melted him in his own greaſe.[8]—Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Page. Letter for letter; but that the name of Page and Ford differs!—To thy great comfort in this myſtery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit firſt; for, I proteſt, mine never ſhall. I warrant, he hath a thouſand of theſe letters, writ with blank ſpace for different names, (ſure more,) and theſe are of the ſecond edition: He will print them out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the preſs,[9] when he would put us two. I had rather be a gianteſs, and lie under mount Pelion.[1] Well, I will find you twenty laſcivious turtles, ere one chaſte man.

"And ſet our credits to the tune of Greene Sleeves."

But whatever the ballad was, it ſeems to have been very popular. Auguſt, 1581, was entered at Stationers' Hall, "A new ballad, entitled:

"Greene Sleeves is worn away,
"Yellow ſleeves come to decaie,
"Black ſleeves I hold in deſpite,
"But white ſleeves is my delight."

Mention of the ſame tune is made again in the fourth act of this play. Steevens.

[8] ——melted him in his own greaſe.] So Chaucer, in his Wif of Bathes Prologue, 6069:

"That in his owen greſe I made him frie." Steevens.

[9] ——preſs,] Preſs is uſed ambiguouſly, for a preſs to print, and a preſs to ſqueeze. Johnson.

[1] I had rather be a gianteſs, and lie under mount Pelion.] Mr. Warton judiciouſly obſerves, that in conſequence of Engliſh verſions from Greek and Roman authors, an inundation of claſſical pedantry very ſoon infected our poetry, and that perpetual alluſions to ancient fable were introduced, as in the preſent in-

Mrs. Ford. Why, this is the very ſame; the very hand, the very words: What doth he think of us?

Mrs. Page. Nay, I know not: It makes me almoſt ready to wrangle with mine own honeſty. I'll entertain myſelf like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, ſure, unleſs he know ſome ſtrain in me,[2] that I know not myſelf, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. Boarding, call you it? I'll be ſure to keep him above deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I; if he come under my hatches, I'll never to ſea again. Let's be revenged on him: let's appoint him a meeting; give him a ſhow of comfort in his ſuit; and lead him on with a fine-baited delay, till he hath pawn'd his horſes to mine Hoſt of the Garter.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will conſent to act any villainy againſt him, that may not ſully the charineſs of our honeſty.[3] O, that my huſband ſaw this letter![4] it would give eternal food to his jealouſy.

ſtance, without the leaſt regard to propriety; for Mrs. Page was not intended, in any degree, to be a learned or an affected lady. STEEVENS.

[2] ——ſome ſtrain in me,] Thus the old copies. The modern editors read—"ſome ſtain in me," but, I think, unneceſſarily. A ſimilar expreſſion occurs in The Winter's Tale:

"With what encounter ſo uncurrent have I
"Strain'd to appear thus?"

And again, in Timon:

"—— a noble nature
"May catch a wrench." STEEVENS.

[3] ——the charineſs of our honeſty.] i. e. the caution which ought to attend on it. STEEVENS.

[4] O, that my huſband ſaw this letter!] Surely Mrs. Ford does not wiſh to excite the jealouſy of which ſhe complains.

EATON.

Merry Wives of Windsor

Mrs. Page. Why, look, where he comes; and my good man too: he's as far from jealoufy, as I am from giving him caufe; and that, I hope, is an unmeafurable diftance.

Mrs. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mrs. Page. Let's confult together againft this greafy knight: Come hither. [They retire.

Enter Ford, Pistol, Page, and Nym.

Ford. Well, I hope, it be not fo.

Pist. Hope is a curtail dog[5] in fome affairs:
Sir John affects thy wife.

Ford. Why, fir, my wife is not young.

Pist. He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor,
Both young and old, one with another, Ford;
He loves thy gally-mawfry;[6] Ford, perpend.[7]

I think we fhould read—O, if my hufband, &c. and thus the copy, 1619: "O Lord, if my hufband fhould fee the letter! i'faith, this would even give edge to his jealoufie." Steevens.

[5] ——curtail dog—] That is, a dog that miffes his game. The tail is counted neceffary to the agility of a greyhound. Johnson.

——curtail dog—] That is, a dog of fmall value;—what we now call a cur. Malone.

[6] ——gally-mawfry;] i. e. a medley. So, in The Winter's Tale: "They have a dance, which the wenches fay is a gallimaufry of gambols." Piftol ludicroufly ufes it for a woman. Thus, in A Woman never vex'd, 1632:

"Let us fhow ourfelves gallants or galli-maufries." Steevens.

The firft folio has—the gallymaufry. Thy was introduced by the editor of the fecond. The gallymawfry may be right: He loves a medley; all forts of women, high and low, &c. Ford's reply, "Love my wife!" may refer to what Piftol had faid before: "Sir John affects thy wife." Thy gallymawfry founds,

Ford. Love my wife?

Pist. With liver burning hot:[8] Prevent, or go thou,
Like fir Actæon he, with Ring-wood at thy heels:—
O, odious is the name!

Ford. What name, fir?

Pist. The horn, I fay: Farewel.
Take heed; have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed, ere fummer comes, or cuckoo birds do fing.[9]—
Away, fir corporal Nym.——
Believe it, Page; he fpeaks fenfe.[1] [Exit Pistol.

however, more like Piftol's language than the other; and therefore I have followed the modern editors in preferring it.
Malone.

[7] —— Ford, perpend.] This is perhaps a ridicule on a pompous word too often ufed in the old play of Cambyfes:

"My fapient words I fay perpend."

Again:

"My queen perpend what I pronounce."

Shakfpeare has put the fame word into the mouth of Polonius.
Steevens.

Piftol again ufes it in K. Henry V.; fo does the Clown in Twelfth Night: I do not believe, therefore, that any ridicule was here aimed at Prefton, the author of Cambyfes. Malone.

[8] With liver burning hot:] So, in Much Ado about Nothing:

"If ever love had intereft in his liver."

The liver was anciently fuppofed to be the infpirer of amorous paffions. Thus, in an old Latin diftich:

"Cor ardet, pulmo loquitur, fel commovet iras;
"Splen ridere facit, cogit amare jecur." Steevens.

[9] —— cuckoo-birds do fing.] Such is the reading of the folio. The quartos, 1602, and 1619, read—when cuckoo-birds appear. The modern editors—when cuckoo-birds affright. For this laft reading I find no authority. Steevens.

[1] Away, fir corporal Nym.——
Believe it, Page; he fpeaks fenfe.] Nym, I believe, is out of place, and we fhould read thus:

Ford. I will be patient; I will find out this.

Nym. And this is true; [to Page.] I like not the humour of lying. He hath wronged me in ſome humours: I ſhould have borne the humoured letter to her; but I have a ſword, and it ſhall bite upon my neceſſity. He loves your wife;[2] there's the ſhort and the long. My name is corporal Nym; I ſpeak, and I avouch. 'Tis true:—my name is Nym, and Falſtaff loves your wife.—Adieu! I love not the humour of bread and cheeſe; and there's the humour of it. Adieu. [Exit Nym.

Away, ſir corporal.
Nym. Believe it, Page; he ſpeaks ſenſe. Johnson.

Perhaps Dr. Johnſon is miſtaken in his conjecture. He ſeems not to have been aware of the manner in which the author meant this ſcene ſhould be repreſented. Ford and Piſtol, Page and Nym, enter in pairs, each pair in ſeparate converſation; and while Piſtol is informing Ford of Falſtaff's deſign upon his wife, Nym is, during that time, talking aſide to Page, and giving information of the like plot againſt him.—When Piſtol has finiſhed, he calls out to Nym to come away; but ſeeing that he and Page are ſtill in cloſe debate, he goes off alone, firſt aſſuring Page, he may depend on the truth of Nym's ſtory. Believe it, Page, &c. Nym then proceeds to tell the remainder of his tale out aloud. And this is true, &c. A little further on in this ſcene, Ford ſays to Page, You heard what this knave (i. e. Piſtol) told me, &c. Page replies, Yes; And you heard what the other (i. e. Nym) told me. Steevens.

Believe it, Page; he ſpeaks ſenſe.] Thus has the paſſage been hitherto printed, ſays Dr. Farmer; but ſurely we ſhould read—Believe it, Page, he ſpeaks; which means no more than —Page, believe what he ſays. This ſenſe is expreſſed not only in the manner peculiar to Piſtol, but to the grammar of the times. Steevens.

[2] ——I have a ſword, and it ſhall bite upon my neceſſity. He loves your wife; &c.] Nym, to gain credit, ſays, that he is above the mean office of carrying love-letters; he has nobler means of living; he has a ſword, and upon his neceſſity, that is, when his need drives him to unlawful expedients, his ſword ſhall bite. Johnson.

Page. The humour of it,[3] quoth 'a! here's a fellow frights humour out of his wits.

Ford. I will ſeek out Falſtaff.

Page. I never heard ſuch a drawling, affecting rogue.

Ford. If I do find it, well.

Page. I will not believe ſuch a Cataian,[4] though

[3] The humour of it,] The following epigram, taken from Humor's Ordinarie, where a Man may bee verie merrie and exceeding well uſed for his Sixpence, quarto, 1607, will beſt account for Nym's frequent repetition of the word humour. Epig. 27:

> " Aſke Humors what a feather he doth weare,
> " It is his humour (by the Lord) he'll ſweare;
> " Or what he doth with ſuch a horſe-taile locke,
> " Or why upon a whore he ſpendes his ſtocke,—
> " He hath a humour doth determine ſo:
> " Why in the ſtop-throte faſhion he doth goe,
> " With ſcarfe about his necke, hat without band,—
> " It is his humour. Sweet ſir, underſtand,
> " What cauſe his purſe is ſo extreame diſtreſt
> " That oftentimes is ſcarcely penny-bleſt;
> " Only a humour. If you queſtion, why
> " His tongue is ne'er unfurniſh'd with a lye,—
> " It is his humour too he doth proteſt:
> " Or why with ſergeants he is ſo oppreſt,
> " That like to ghoſts they haunt him ev'rie day;
> " A raſcal humour doth not love to pay.
> " Object why bootes and ſpurres are ſtill in ſeaſon,
> " His humour anſwers, humour is his reaſon.
> " If you perceive his wits in wetting ſhrunke,
> " It cometh of a humour to be drunke.
> " When you behold his lookes pale, thin, and poore,
> " The occaſion is, his humour and a whoore:
> " And every thing that he doth undertake,
> " It is a veine, for ſenceleſs humour's ſake." Steevens.

[4] I will not believe ſuch a Cataian,] All the myſtery of the term Cataian, for a liar, is only this. China was anciently called Cataia or Cathay, by the firſt adventurers that travelled thither; ſuch as M. Paulo, and our Mandeville, who told ſuch incredible wonders of this new diſcovered empire, (in which they have not been outdone even by the Jeſuits themſelves, who the prieſt o' the town commended him for a true man.

Ford. 'Twas a good ſenſible fellow:[5] Well.

followed them,) that a notorious liar was uſually called a Cataian. WARBURTON.

"This fellow has ſuch an odd appearance, is ſo unlike a man civilized, and taught the duties of life, that I cannot credit him." To be a foreigner was always in England, and I ſuppoſe every where elſe, a reaſon of diſlike. So, Piſtol calls Sir Hugh, in the firſt act, a mountain foreigner; that is, a fellow uneducated, and of groſs behaviour; and again in his anger calls Bardolph, Hungarian wight. JOHNSON.

I believe that neither of the commentators is in the right, but am far from profeſſing, with any great degree of confidence, that I am happier in my own explanation. It is remarkable, that in Shakſpeare, this expreſſion—a true man, is always put in oppoſition (as it is in this inſtance) to—a thief. So, in Henry IV. P. I:

"——now the thieves have bound the true men."

The Chineſe (anciently called Cataians) are ſaid to be the moſt dextrous of all the nimble-fingered tribe; and to this hour they deſerve the ſame character. Piſtol was known at Windſor to have had a hand in picking Slender's pocket, and therefore might be called Cataian with propriety, if my explanation be admitted.

That by a Cataian ſome kind of ſharper was meant, I infer from the following paſſage in Love and Honour, a play by Sir William D'Avenant, 1649:

"Hang him, bold Cataian, he indites finely,
"And will live as well by ſending ſhort epiſtles,
"Or by the ſad whiſper at your gameſter's ear,
"When the great By is drawn,
"As any diſtreſt gallant of them all."

Cathaia is mentioned in The Tamer Tamed, of Beaumont and Fletcher:

"I'll wiſh you in the Indies, or Cathaia."

The tricks of the Cataians are hinted at in one of the old black letter hiſtories of that country; and again in a dramatick performance, called The Pedler's Prophecy, 1595:

"——in the eaſt part of Inde,
"Through ſeas and floods, they work all thieviſh."

STEEVENS.

Page. How now, Meg?

Mrs. Page. Whither go you, George?—Hark you.

Mrs. Ford. How now, ſweet Frank? why art thou melancholy?

Ford. I melancholy! I am not mélancholy.—Get you home, go.

Mrs. Ford. 'Faith, thou haſt ſome crotchets in thy head now.—Will you go, miſtreſs Page?

Mrs. Page. Have with you.—You'll come to dinner, George?—Look, who comes yonder: ſhe ſhall be our meſſenger to this paltry knight.
[Aſide to Mrs. Ford.

Enter Miſtreſs Quickly.

Mrs. Ford. Truſt me, I thought on her: ſhe'll fit it.

Mrs. Page. You are come to ſee my daughter Anne?

Quick. Ay, forſooth; And, I pray, how does good miſtreſs Anne?

Mrs. Page. Go in with us, and ſee; we have an hour's talk with you.

connection with the ſentiments of Page, who is likewiſe making his comment on what had paſſed, without attention to Ford.
Steevens.

Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?

Page. Hang 'em, ſlaves; I do not think the knight would offer it: but theſe that accuſe him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his diſcarded men; very rogues, now they be out of ſervice.[6]

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry, were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that.—Does he lie at the Garter?

Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he ſhould intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her looſe to him; and what he gets more of her than ſharp words, let it lie on my head.

Ford. I do not miſdoubt my wife; but I would be loath to turn them together: A man may be too confident: I would have nothing lie on my head:[7] I cannot be thus ſatisfied.

Page. Look, where my ranting hoſt of the Garter comes: there is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purſe, when he looks ſo merrily.—How now, mine hoſt?

Enter Hoſt, and Shallow.

Host. How now, bully-rook? thou'rt a gentleman: cavalero-juſtice,[8] I ſay.

[6] ——very rogues, now they be out of ſervice.] A rogue is a wanderer or vagabond, and, in its conſequential ſignification, a cheat. Johnson.

[7] ——I would have nothing lie on my head:] Here ſeems to be an alluſion to Shakſpeare's favourite topick, the cuckold's horns. Malone.

[8] ——cavalero-juſtice,] This cant term occurs in The Stately Moral of Three Ladies of London, 1590:

"Then know, Caſtilian cavaleros, this."

Shal. I follow, mine hoſt, I follow.—Good even, and twenty, good maſter Page! Maſter Page, will you go with us? we have ſport in hand.

Host. Tell him, cavalero-juſtice; tell him, bully-rook.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought, between ſir Hugh the Welch prieſt, and Caius the French doctor.

Ford. Good mine hoſt o' the Garter, a word with you.

Host. What ſay'ſt thou, bully-rook?

[They go aſide.

Shal. Will you [to Page] go with us to behold it? My merry hoſt hath had the meaſuring of their weapons; and, I think, he hath appointed them contrary places: for, believe me, I hear, the parſon is no jeſter. Hark, I will tell you what our ſport ſhall be.

Host. Haſt thou no ſuit againſt my knight, my gueſt-cavalier?

Ford. None, I proteſt: but I'll give you a pottle of burnt ſack to give me recourſe to him, and tell him, my name is Brook;[9] only for a jeſt.

Host. My hand, bully: thou ſhalt have egreſs and regreſs; ſaid I well? and thy name ſhall be

There is alſo a book printed in 1599, called, A Countercuffe given to Martin Junior; by the venturous, hardie, and renowned Paſquil of Englande, Cavaliero. Steevens.

[9] —— and tell him, my name is Brook;] Thus both the old quartos; and thus moſt certainly the poet wrote. We need no better evidence than the pun that Falſtaff anon makes on the name, when Brook ſends him ſome burnt ſack: Such Brooks are welcome to me, that overflow ſuch liquor. The players, in their edition, altered the name to Broom.

Theobald.

Brook: It is a merry knight.—Will you go on, hearts?[1]

Shal. Have with you, mine hoſt.

Page. I have heard, the Frenchman hath good ſkill in his rapier.[2]

Shal. Tut, ſir, I could have told you more: In theſe times you ſtand on diſtance, your paſſes, ſtoc-

[1] —— will you go on, hearts?] For this ſubſtitution of an intelligible for an unintelligible word, I am anſwerable.—The old reading is—an-heirs. See the following notes.

STEEVENS.

We ſhould read, Will you go ON, HERIS? i. e. Will you go on, maſter? Heris, an old Scotch word for maſter.

WARBURTON.

The merry Hoſt has already ſaluted them ſeparately by titles of diſtinction; he therefore probably now addreſſes them collectively by a general one—Will you go on, heroes? or, as probably,—Will you go on, hearts? He calls Dr. Caius Heart of Elder; and adds, in a ſubſequent ſcene of this play, Farewell my hearts. Again, in The Midſummer Night's Dream, Bottom ſays, "——Where are theſe hearts?" My brave hearts, or my bold hearts, is a common word of encouragement. A heart of gold expreſſes the more ſoft and amiable qualities, the mores aurei of Horace; and a heart of oak is a frequent encomium of rugged honeſty. Sir T. Hanmer reads—Mynheers.

STEEVENS.

There can be no doubt that this paſſage is corrupt. Perhaps we ſhould read—Will you go and hear us? So, in the next page—"I had rather hear them ſcold than fight." MALONE.

[2] —— in his rapier.] In the old quarto here follow theſe words:

"Shal. I tell you what, maſter Page; I believe the doctor is no jeſter; he'll lay it one [on]; for though we be juſtices and doctors and churchmen, yet we are the ſons of women, maſter Page.

"Shal. It will be found ſo, maſter Page.

"Page. Maſter Shallow, you yourſelf have been a great fighter, though now a man of peace."

Part of this dialogue is found afterwards in the third ſcene of the preſent act; but it ſeems more proper here, to introduce what Shallow ſays of the prowеſs of his youth. MALONE.

cadoes, and I know not what: 'tis the heart, maſter Page; 'tis here, 'tis here. I have ſeen the time, with my long ſword,[3] I would have made you four tall fellows[4] ſkip like rats.

[3] —— my long ſword,] Before the introduction of rapiers, the ſwords in uſe were of an enormous length, and ſometimes raiſed with both hands. Shallow, with an old man's vanity, cenſures the innovation by which lighter weapons were introduced, tells what he could once have done with his long ſword, and ridicules the terms and rules of the rapier. JOHNSON.

The two-handed ſword is mentioned in the ancient Interlude of Nature, bl. l. no date:

"Somtyme he ſerveth me at borde,
"Somtyme he bereth my two-hand ſword."

See a note to The Firſt Part of K. Henry IV. Act II.

STEEVENS.

Dr. Johnſon's explanation of the long ſword is certainly right; for the early quarto reads—my two-hand ſword; ſo that they appear to have been ſynonymous.

Carleton, in his Thankful Remembrance of God's Mercy, 1625, ſpeaking of the treachery of one Rowland York, in betraying the town of Deventer to the Spaniards in 1587, ſays: "he was a Londoner, famous among the cutters in his time, for bringing in a new kind of fight—to run the point of the rapier into a man's body. This manner of fight he brought firſt into England, with great admiration of his audaciouſneſs: when in England before that time, the uſe was, with little bucklers, and with broad ſwords, to ſtrike, and not to thruſt; and it was accounted unmanly to ſtrike under the girdle."

The Continuator of Stowe's Annals, p. 1024, edit. 1631, ſuppoſes the rapier to have been introduced ſomewhat ſooner, viz. about the 20th year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, [1578] at which time, he ſays, Sword and Bucklers began to be diſuſed. Shakſpeare has here been guilty of a great anachroniſm in making Shallow ridicule the terms of the rapier in the time of Henry IV. an hundred and ſeventy years before it was uſed in England. MALONE.

It ſhould ſeem from a paſſage in Naſh's Life of Jacke Wilton, 1594, that rapiers were uſed in the reign of Henry VIII. "At that time I was no common ſquire, &c.—my rapier pendant like a round ſtick faſtned in the tacklings, for ſkippers the better to climbe by." Sig. C 4. RITSON.

[4] —— tall fellows—] A tall fellow, in the time of our author, meant a ſtout, bold, or courageous perſon. In A Diſcourſe on Host. Here, boys, here, here! ſhall we wag?

Page. Have with you:—I had rather hear them ſcold than fight.

[Exeunt Hoſt, Shallow, and Page.

Ford. Though Page be a ſecure fool, and ſtands ſo firmly on his wife's frailty,[5] yet I cannot put off my opinion ſo eaſily: She was in his company at Page's houſe; and, what they made there,[6] I know

Uſury, by Dr. Wilſon, 1584, he ſays, "Here in England, he that can rob a man on the high-way, is called a tall fellow." Lord Bacon ſays, "that Biſhop Fox cauſed his caſtle of Norham to be fortified, and manned it likewiſe with a very great number of tall ſoldiers."

The elder quarto reads—tall fencers. Steevens.

[5] —— ſtands ſo firmly on his wife's frailty,] Thus all the copies. But Mr. Theobald has no conception how any man could ſtand firmly on his wife's frailty. And why? Becauſe he had no conception how he could ſtand upon it, without knowing what it was. But if I tell a ſtranger, that the bridge he is about to croſs is rotten, and he believes it not, but will go on, may I not ſay, when I ſee him upon it, that he ſtands firmly on a rotten plank? Yet he has changed frailty for fealty, and the Oxford editor has followed him. But they took the phraſe, to ſtand firmly on, to ſignify to inſiſt upon; whereas it ſignifies to reſt upon, which the character of a ſecure fool, given to him, ſhews. So that the common reading has an elegance that would be loſt in the alteration. Warburton.

To ſtand on any thing, does ſignify to inſiſt on it. So, in Heywood's Rape of Lucrece, 1630: "All captains, and ſtand upon the honeſty of your wives." Again, in Warner's Albion's England, 1602, Book VI. chap. 30:

"For ſtoutly on their honeſties doe wylie harlots ſtand."

The jealous Ford is the ſpeaker, and all chaſtity in women appears to him as frailty. He ſuppoſes Page therefore to inſiſt on that virtue as ſteady, which he himſelf ſuſpects to be without foundation. Steevens.

—— and ſtands ſo firmly on his wife's frailty,] i. e. has ſuch perfect confidence in his unchaſte wife. His wife's frailty is the ſame as—his frail wife. So, in Antony and Cleopatra, we meet with death and honour, for an honourable death. Malone.

[6] —— and, what they made there,] An obſolete phraſe ſignifying—what they did there. Malone.

not. Well, I will look further into't: and I have a difguife to found Falftaff: If I find her honeft, I lofe not my labour; if fhe be otherwife, 'tis labour well beftowed. [Exit.

SCENE II.

A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter FALSTAFF and PISTOL.

FAL. I will not lend thee a penny.

PIST. Why, then the world's mine oyfter,[7]
Which I with fword will open.—
I will retort the fum in equipage.[8]

So, in As you like it, Act I. fc. i:
"Now, fir, what make you here?" STEEVENS.

[7] —— the world's mine oyfter, &c.] Dr. Grey fuppofes Shakfpeare to allude to an old proverb, "The mayor of Northampton opens oyfters with his dagger,"—i. e. to keep them at a fufficient diftance from his nofe, that town being fourfcore miles from the fea. STEEVENS.

[8] I will retort the fum in equipage.] This is added from the old quarto of 1619, and means, I will pay you again in ftolen goods. WARBURTON.

I rather believe he means, that he will pay him by waiting on him for nothing. So, in Love's Pilgrimage, by Beaumont and Fletcher:
"And boy, be you my guide,
"For I will make a full defcent in equipage."
That equipage ever meant ftolen goods, I am yet to learn.
STEEVENS.

Dr. Warburton may be right; for I find equipage was one of the cant words of the time. In Davies' Papers Complaint, (a poem which has erroneoufly been afcribed to Donne,) we have feveral of them:
"Embellifh, blandifhment, and equipage."
Which words, he tells us in the margin, overmuch favour of witleffe affectation. FARMER.

Dr. Warburton's interpretation is, I think, right. Equipage indeed does not per fe fignify ftolen goods, but fuch goods as Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, ſir, you ſhould lay my countenance to pawn: I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you and your coach-fellow, Nym;[9] or elſe you had looked through the grate, like a geminy of baboons. I am damned in hell, for ſwearing to gentlemen my friends, you were good ſoldiers, and tall fellows:[1] and when miſtreſs Bridget loſt the handle of her fan,[2] I took't upon mine honour, thou hadſt it not.

Piſtol promiſes to return, we may fairly ſuppoſe, would be ſtolen. Equipage, which, as Dr. Farmer obſerves, had been but newly introduced into our language, is defined by Bullokar in his Engliſh Expoſitor, 8vo. 1616: "Furniture, or proviſion for horſemanſhip, eſpecially in triumphs or tournaments." Hence the modern uſe of this word. Malone.

[9] ——your coach-fellow, Nym;] Thus the old copies. Coach-fellow has an obvious meaning; but the modern editors read, couch-fellow. The following paſſage from Ben Jonſon's Cynthia's Revels may juſtify the reading I have choſen: "'Tis the ſwaggering coach-horſe Anaides, that draws with him there."

Again, in Monſieur D'Olive, 1606: "Are you he my page here makes choice of to be his fellow coach-horſe?" Again, in A true Narrative of the Entertainment of his Royal Majeſtie, from the Time of his Departure from Edinburgh, till his Receiving in London, &c. 1603: "—a baſe pilfering theefe was taken, who plaid the cutpurſe in the court: his fellow was ill miſt, for no doubt he had a walking-mate: they drew together like coach-horſes, and it is pitie they did not hang together." Again, in Every Woman in her Humour, 1609:

"For wit, ye may be coach'd together."

Again, in 10th Book of Chapmam's Tranſlation of Homer:

"—their chariot horſe, as they coach-fellows were."

Steevens.

——your coach-fellow, Nym;] i. e. he, who draws along with you; who is joined with you in all your knavery. So before, Page, ſpeaking of Nym and Piſtol, calls them a "yoke of Falſtaff's diſcarded men." Malone.

[1] ——tall fellows:] See p. 76. Steevens.

[2] ——loſt the handle of her fan,] It ſhould be remembered, that fans, in our author's time, were more coſtly than they are at preſent, as well as of a different conſtruction. They con-ſiſted of oſtrich feathers (or others of equal length and flexibility,) which were ſtuck into handles. The richer ſort of theſe were compoſed of gold, ſilver, or ivory of curious workmanſhip. One of them is mentioned in The Fleire, Com. 1610: "—ſhe hath a fan with a ſhort ſilver handle, about the length of a barber's ſyringe." Again, in Love and Honour, by Sir W. D'Avenant, 1649: "All your plate, Vaſco, is the ſilver handle of your old priſoner's fan." Again, in Marſton's III. Satyre, edit. 1598:

"How can he keepe a lazie waiting man,
"And buy a hoode and ſilver-handled fan
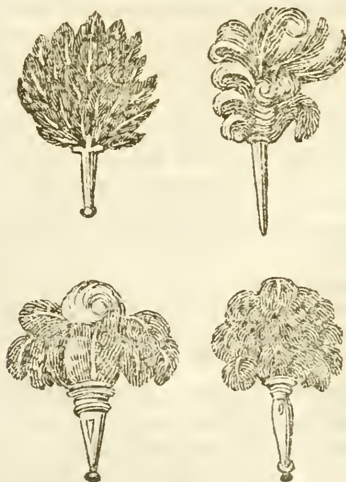
"With fortie pound?"

In the frontiſpiece to a play, called Engliſhmen for my Money, or A pleaſant Comedy of a Woman will have her Will, 1616, is a portrait of a lady with one of theſe fans, which, after all, may prove the beſt commentary on the paſſage. The three other ſpecimens are taken from the Habiti Antichi et Moderni di tutto il Mondo, publiſhed at Venice, 1598, from the drawings of Titian, and Ceſare Vecelli, his brother. This faſhion was perhaps imported from Italy, together with many others, in the reign of King Henry VIII. if not in that of King Richard II.



Steevens.

Fal. Reaſon, you rogue, reaſon: Think'ſt thou, I'll endanger my ſoul gratis? At a word, hang no more about me, I am no gibbet for you:—go.—A ſhort knife and a throng;[3]—to your manor of Pickt-hatch,[4] go.—You'll not bear a letter for me, you rogue!—you ſtand upon your honour!—Why,

Thus alſo Marſton, in The Scourge of Villanie, Lib. III. ſat. 8:

"———Another, he
"Her ſilver-handled fan would gladly be."

And in other places. And Biſhop Hall, in his Satires, publiſhed 1597, Lib. V. ſat. iv:

"Whiles one piece pays her idle waiting manne,
"Or buys a hoode, or ſilver-handled fanne."

In the Sidney papers, publiſhed by Collins, a fan is preſented to Queen Elizabeth for a new year's gift, the handle of which was ſtudded with diamonds. T. Warton.

[3] ——A ſhort knife and a throng;] So, Lear: "When cutpurſes come not to throngs." Warburton.

Part of the employment given by Drayton, in The Mooncalf, to the Baboon, ſeems the ſame with this recommended by Falſtaff:

"He like a gypſey oftentimes would go,
"All kinds of gibberiſh he hath learn'd to know:
"And with a ſtick, a ſhort ſtring, and a nooſe,
"Would ſhow the people tricks at faſt and looſe."

Theobald has throng inſtead of thong. The latter ſeems right. Langton.

Greene, in his Life of Ned Browne, 1592, ſays: "I had no other fence but my ſhort knife, and a paire of purſe-ſtrings." Steevens.

Mr. Dennis reads—thong; which has been followed, I think, improperly, by ſome of the modern editors.

Sir Thomas Overbury's Characters, 1616, furniſh us with a confirmation of the reading of the old copies: "The eye of this wolf is as quick in his head as a cutpurſe in a throng." Malone.

[4] ——Pickt-hatch,] Is frequently mentioned by contemporary writers. So, in Ben Jonſon's Every Man in his Humour:

"From the Bordello it might come as well,
"The Spital, or Pict-hatch."

thou unconfinable bafenefs, it is as much as I can do, to keep the terms of my honour precife. I, I,

Again, in Randolph's Mufes Looking-glafs, 1638:
" —— the Lordfhip of Turnbull,
" Which with my Pict-hatch Grange, and Shore-ditch farm," &c.

Pict-hatch was in Turnbull Street:
" ——— your whore doth live
" In Pict-hatch, Turnbull-ftreet."
Amends for Ladies, a Comedy, by N. Field, 1618.

The derivation of the word Pict-hatch may perhaps be difcovered from the following paffage in Cupid's Whirligig, 1607: " — Set fome picks upon your hatch, and, I pray, profefs to keep a bawdy-houfe." Perhaps the unfeafonable and obftreperous irruptions of the gallants of that age, might render fuch a precaution neceffary. So, in Pericles Prince of Tyre, 1609: " — if in our youths we could pick up fome pretty eftate, 'twere not amifs to keep our door hatch'd." STEEVENS.

Pict-hatch was a cant name of fome part of the town noted for bawdy-houfes; as appears from the following paffage in Marfton's Scourge for Villanie, Lib. III. fat. x:
" —— Looke, who yon doth go;
" The meager letcher lewd Luxurio.—
" No newe edition of drabbes comes out,
" But feen and allow'd by Luxurio's fnout.
" Did ever any man ere heare him talke
" But of Pick-hatch, or of fome Shoreditch baulke,
" Aretine's filth," &c.

Sir T. Hanmer fays, that this was " a noted harbour for thieves and pickpockets," who certainly were proper companions for a man of Piftol's profeffion. But Falftaff here more immediately means to ridicule another of his friend's vices; and there is fome humour in calling Piftol's favourite brothel, his manor of Pickt-hatch. Marfton has another allufion to Pickt-hatch or Pick-hatch, which confirms this illuftration:
" —— His old cynick dad
" Hath forc'd him cleane forfake his Pick-hatch drab."
Lib. I. fat. iii. T. WARTON.

Again, in Ben Jonfon's Epig. XII. on Lieutenant Shift:
" Shift, here in town, not meaneft among fquires
" That haunt Pickt-hatch, Merfh Lambeth, and White fryers."

Again, in The Blacke Booke, 1604, 4to. Lucifer fays: " I

I myſelf ſometimes, leaving the fear of heaven on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my neceſſity, am fain to ſhuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet you, rogue, will enſconce your rags,[5] your cat-a-mountain looks, your red-lattice phraſes,[6] and proceeded towards Pickt-hatch, intending to beginne their firſt, which (as I may fitly name it) is the very ſkirts of all Brothel-houſes." DOUCE.

[5] —— enſconce your rags, &c.] A ſconce is a petty fortification. To enſconce, therefore, is to protect as with a fort. The word occurs again in K. Henry IV. P. I. STEEVENS.

[6] —— red-lattice phraſes,] Your ale-houſe converſation. JOHNSON.

Red lattice at the doors and windows, were formerly the external denotements of an ale-houſe. So, in A Fine Companion, one of Shackerley Marmion's plays: "A waterman's widow at the ſign of the red lattice in Southwark." Again, in Arden of Feverſham, 1592:

"—— his ſign pulled down, and his lattice born away."

Again, in The Miſeries of inforc'd Marriage, 1607:

"—— tis treaſon to the red lattice, enemy to the ſign-poſt."

Hence the preſent chequers. Perhaps the reader will expreſs ſome ſurprize, when he is told that ſhops, with the ſign of the chequers, were common among the Romans. See a view of the left-hand ſtreet of Pompeii, (No. 9,) preſented by Sir William Hamilton, (together with ſeveral others, equally curious,) to the Antiquary Society. STEEVENS.

The following paſſage in Braithwaite's Strapado for the Divell, 1615, confirms Mr. Steevens's obſervation: "To the true diſcoverer of ſecrets, Monſieur Bacchus, maſter-gunner of the pottle-pot ordnance, prime-founder of red lattices," &c.

In King Henry IV. P. II. Falſtaff's page, ſpeaking of Bardolph, ſays, "he called me even now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could ſee no part of his face from the window." MALONE.

This deſignation of an ale-houſe is not altogether loſt, though the original meaning of the word is, the ſign being converted into a green lettuce; of which an inſtance occurs in Brownlow Street, Holborn.—In The Laſt Will and Teſtament of Lawrence Lucifer, the old Batchiler of Limbo, at the end of the "Blacke Booke," 1604, 4to. is the following paſſage: "—watched your bold-beating oaths, under the ſhelter of your honour! You will not do it, you?

Pist. I do relent; What would'ſt thou more of man?

Enter ROBIN.

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would ſpeak with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter Miſtreſs QUICKLY.

Quick. Give your worſhip good-morrow.

Fal. Good-morrow, good wife.

Quick. Not ſo, an't pleaſe your worſhip.

Fal. Good maid, then.

Quick. I'll be ſworn; as my mother was, the firſt hour I was born.

Fal. I do believe the ſwearer: What with me?

Quick. Shall I vouchſafe your worſhip a word or two?

Fal. Two thouſand, fair woman; and I'll vouchſafe thee the hearing.

Quick. There is one miſtreſs Ford, ſir;—I pray, come a little nearer this ways:—I myſelf dwell with maſter doctor Caius.

Fal. Well, on: Miſtreſs Ford, you ſay,——

Quick. Your worſhip ſays very true: I pray your worſhip, come a little nearer this ways.

Fal. I warrant thee, nobody hears;—mine own people, mine own people.

ſometimes ten houres together in an ale-houſe, ever and anon peeping forth, and ſampling thy noſe with the red Lattis."

DOUCE.

Quick. Are they ſo? Heaven bleſs them, and make them his ſervants!

Fal. Well: Miſtreſs Ford;—what of her?

Quick. Why, ſir, ſhe's a good creature. Lord, lord! your worſhip's a wanton: Well, heaven forgive you, and all of us, I pray!

Fal. Miſtreſs Ford;—come, miſtreſs Ford,—

Quick. Marry, this is the ſhort and the long of it; you have brought her into ſuch a canaries,[7] as 'tis wonderful. The beſt courtier of them all, when the court lay at Windſor,[8] could never have brought her to ſuch a canary. Yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches; I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift; ſmelling ſo ſweetly, (all muſk,) and ſo ruſhling, I warrant you, in ſilk and gold; and in ſuch alligant terms; and in ſuch wine and ſugar of the beſt, and the faireſt, that would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her.—I had myſelf twenty angels given me this morning: but I defy all angels, (in any ſuch ſort, as they ſay,) but in the way of honeſty:—and, I warrant you, they could never get her ſo much as ſip on a cup with the proudeſt of them all: and yet there has been earls, [7] —— canaries,] This is the name of a briſk light dance, and therefore is properly enough uſed in low language for any hurry or perturbation. Johnson.

So, Naſh, in Pierce Pennyleſs his Supplication, 1595, ſays: "A merchant's wife jets it as gingerly, as if ſhe were dancing the canaries." It is highly probable, however, that canaries is only a miſtake of Mrs. Quickly's for quandaries; and yet the Clown, in As you like it, ſays, "we that are true lovers, run into ſtrange capers." Steevens.

[8] ——lay at Windſor,] i. e. reſided there. Malone.

nay, which is more, penſioners;[9] but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Fal. But what ſays ſhe to me? be brief, my good ſhe Mercury.

Quick. Marry, ſhe hath received your letter; for the which ſhe thanks you a thouſand times: and ſhe gives you to notify, that her huſband will be abſence from his houſe between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven?

Quick. Ay, forſooth; and then you may come and ſee the picture, ſhe ſays, that you wot of;[1]—maſter Ford, her huſband, will be from home.

[9] ——earls, nay, which is more, penſioners;] This may be illuſtrated by a paſſage in Gervaſe Holles's Life of the Firſt Earl of Clare, Biog.Brit. Art. Holles: "I have heard the Earl of Clare ſay, that when he was penſioner to the queen, he did not know a worſe man of the whole band than himſelf; and that all the world knew he had then an inheritance of 4000l. a year." Tyrwhitt.

Barrett, in his Alvearie, or Quadruple Dictionary, 1580, ſays, that a penſioner was "a gentleman about his prince, alwaie redie, with his ſpeare." Steevens.

Penſioners were Gentlemen of the band of Penſioners.—"In the month of December," [1539] ſays Stowe, Annals, p. 973, edit. 1605, "were appointed to waite on the king's perſon fifty Gentlemen, called Penſioners, or Speares, like as they were in the firſt yeare of the king; unto whom was aſſigned the ſumme of fiftie pounds, yerely, for the maintenance of themſelves, and everie man two horſes, or one horſe and a gelding of ſervice." Their dreſs was remarkably ſplendid, and therefore likely to attract the notice of Mrs. Quickly. Hence, [as both Mr. Steevens and Mr. T. Warton have obſerved,] in A Midſummer Night's Dream, our author has ſelected from all the tribes of flowers the golden-coated cowſlips to be penſioners to the Fairy Queen:

"The cowſlips tall her penſioners be,
"In their gold coats ſpots you ſee;" &c. Malone.

[1] ——you wot of;] To wot is to know. Obſolete. So, in King Henry VIII: "—wot you what I found?" Steevens.

Alas! the ſweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealouſy man; ſhe leads a very frampold[2] life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven: Woman, commend me to her; I will not fail her.

Quick. Why, you ſay well: But I have another meſſenger to your worſhip: Miſtreſs Page hath her hearty commendations to you too;—and let me tell you in your ear, ſhe's as fartuous a civil modeſt wife, and one (I tell you) that will not miſs you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windſor, whoe'er be the other: and ſhe bade me tell your worſhip, that her huſband is ſeldom from home; but, ſhe hopes, there will come a time. I never knew a woman ſo dote upon a man; ſurely, I think you have charms, la; yes, in truth.

[2] ——frampold—] This word I have never ſeen elſewhere, except in Dr. Hacket's Life of Archbiſhop Williams, where a frampul man ſignifies a peeviſh troubleſome fellow. Johnson.

In The Roaring Girl, a comedy, 1611, I meet with a word, which, though differently ſpelt, appears to be the ſame:

"Lax. Coachman.
"Coach. Anon, ſir!
"Lax. Are we fitted with good phrampell jades?"

Ray, among his South and Eaſt country words, obſerves, that frampald, or frampard, ſignifies fretful, peeviſh, croſs, froward. As froward (he adds) comes from from; ſo may frampard.

Naſh, in his Praiſe of the Red Herring, 1599, ſpeaking of Leander, ſays: "the churliſh frampold waves gave him his belly full of fiſh-broth."

Again, in The Inner Temple Maſque, by Middleton, 1619: "—'tis ſo frampole, the puritans will never yield to it." Again, in The Blind Beggar of Bethnal-Green, by John Day: "I think the fellow's frampell," &c. And, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Wit at ſeveral Weapons:

"Is Pompey grown ſo malapert, ſo frampel?"

Steevens.

Thus, in The Iſle of Gulls—"What a goodyer aile you mother? are you frampull? know you not your own daughter?"

Henley.

Fal. Not I, I aſſure thee; ſetting the attraction of my good parts aſide, I have no other charms.

Quick. Bleſſing on your heart for't!

Fal. But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife, and Page's wife, acquainted each other how they love me?

Quick. That were a jeſt, indeed!—they have not ſo little grace, I hope:—that were a trick, indeed! But miſtreſs Page would deſire you to ſend her your little page, of all loves;[3] her huſband has a marvellous infection to the little page: and, truly, maſter Page is an honeſt man. Never a wife in Windſor leads a better life than ſhe does; do what ſhe will, ſay what ſhe will, take all, pay all, go to bed when ſhe liſt, riſe when ſhe liſt, all is as ſhe will; and, truly, ſhe deſerves it: for if there be a kind woman in Windſor, ſhe is one. You muſt ſend her your page; no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.

Quick. Nay, but do ſo then: and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and, in any

[3] —— to ſend her your little page, of all loves;] Of all loves, is an adjuration only, and ſignifies no more than if ſhe had ſaid, deſires you to ſend him by all means.

It is uſed in Decker's Honeſt Whore, P. I. 1635:—"conjuring his wife, of all loves, to prepare cheer fitting," &c. Again, in Holinſhed's Chronicle, p. 1064: "Mrs. Arden deſired him, of all loves, to come backe againe." Again, in Othello, Act III: "—the general ſo likes your muſick, that he deſires you, of all loves, to make no more noiſe with it."

A ſimilar phraſe occurs in a Letter from Gilbert Talbot to the Earl of Shrewſbury. See Lodge's Illuſtrations, &c. Vol. II. 101: "I earneſtly deſyred him, of all frendſhipp, to tell me whether he had harde any thing to ye contrary." Again, ibid "He charged me, of all love, that I ſhould kepe this ſecrete."

Steevens.

caſe, have a nay-word,[4] that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to underſtand any thing; for 'tis not good that children ſhould know any wickedneſs: old folks, you know, have diſcretion, as they ſay, and know the world.

FAL. Fare thee well: commend me to them both: there's my purſe; I am yet thy debtor.—Boy, go along with this woman.—This news diſtracts me! [Exeunt QUICKLY and ROBIN.

PIST. This punk is one of Cupid's carriers:[5]—Clap on more ſails; purſue, up with your fights;[6]

[4] —— a nay-word,] i. e. a watch-word. So, in a ſubſequent ſcene: "We have a nay-word to know one another," &c.
STEEVENS.

[5] This punk is one of Cupid's carriers:—] Punk is a plauſible reading, yet abſurd on examination. For are not all punks Cupid's carriers? Shakſpeare certainly wrote:

"This PINK is one of Cupid's carriers:

And then the ſenſe is proper, and the metaphor, which is all the way taken from the marine, entire. A pink is a veſſel of the ſmall craft, employed as a carrier (and ſo called) for merchants. Fletcher uſes the word in his Tamer Tamed:

"This PINK, this painted foiſt, this cockle-boat."
WARBURTON.

So, in The Ladies' Privilege, 1640: "Theſe gentlemen know better to cut a caper than a cable, or board a pink in the bordells, than a pinnace at ſea." A ſmall ſalmon is called a ſalmon-pink.

Dr. Farmer, however, obſerves, that the word punk has been unneceſſarily altered to pink. In Ben Jonſon's Bartholomew Fair, Juſtice Overdo ſays of the pig-woman: "She hath been before me, punk, pinnace, and bawd, any time theſe two and twenty-years." STEEVENS.

[6] —— up with your fights;] So again, in Fletcher's Tamer Tamed:

"To hang her fights out, and defy me, friends!
"A well-known man of war."——

As to the word fights, both in the text and in the quotation, it was then, and, for aught I know, may be now, a common ſea-term. Sir Richard Hawkins, in his Voyages, p. 66, ſays:

Give fire; ſhe is my prize, or ocean whelm them all! [Exit PISTOL.

"For once we cleared her deck; and had we been able to have ſpared but a dozen men, doubtleſs we had done with her what we would; for ſhe had no cloſe FIGHTS," i. e. if I underſtand it right, no ſmall arms. So that by fights is meant any manner of defence, either ſmall arms or cannon. So, Dryden, in his tragedy of Amboyna:

"Up with your FIGHTS,
"And your nettings prepare," &c. WARBURTON.

The quotation from Dryden might at leaſt have raiſed a ſuſpicion that fights were neither ſmall arms, nor cannon. Fights and nettings are properly joined. Fights, I find, are clothes hung round the ſhip to conceal the men from the enemy; and cloſe-fights are bulk-heads, or any other ſhelter that the fabrick of a ſhip affords. JOHNSON.

So, in Heywood and Rowley's comedy, called Fortune by Land and Sea: "—diſplay'd their enſigns, up with all their feights, their matches in their cocks," &c. Again, in The Chriſtian turned Turk, 1612: "Lace the netting, and let down the fights, make ready the ſhot," &c. Again, in The Fair Maid of the Weſt, 1615:

"Then now up with your fights, and let your enſigns,
"Bleſt with St. George's croſs, play with the winds."

Again, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Valentinian:

"—— while I were able to endure a tempeſt,
"And bear my fights out bravely, till my tackle
"Whiſtled i' th' wind."——

This paſſage may receive an additional and perhaps a ſomewhat different illuſtration from John Smith's Sea-Grammar, 4to. 1627. In p. 58 he ſays: "But if you ſee your chaſe ſtrip himſelf into fighting ſailes, that is, to put out his colours in the poope, his flag in the maine top, his ſtreamers or pendants at the end of his yards' arms, &c. provide yourſelf to fight." Again, p. 60: "Thus they uſe to ſtrip themſelves into their ſhort ſailes, or fighting ſailes, which is only the fore ſail, the maine and fore top ſailes, becauſe the reſt ſhould not be fired or ſpoiled; beſides they would be troubleſome to handle, hinder our fights and the uſing of our armes: he makes ready his cloſe fights fore and aft." In a former paſſage, p. 58, he has ſaid that "a ſhip's cloſe fights are ſmall ledges of wood laid croſſe one another, like the grates of iron in a priſon's window, Fal. Say'ſt thou ſo, old Jack? go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expence of ſo much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee: Let them ſay, 'tis groſsly done; ſo it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Sir John, there's one maſter Brook below would fain ſpeak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath ſent your worſhip a morning's draught of ſack.[7] betwixt the maine maſt and the fore maſt, and are called gratings or nettings," &c. Steevens.

[7] —— one maſter Brook below would fain ſpeak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath ſent your worſhip a morning's draught of ſack.] It ſeems to have been a common cuſtom at taverns, in our author's time, to ſend preſents of wine from one room to another, either as a memorial of friendſhip, or (as in the preſent inſtance) by way of introduction to acquaintance. Of the exiſtence of this practice the following anecdote of Ben Jonſon and Biſhop Corbet furniſhes a proof: "Ben Jonſon was at a tavern, and in comes Biſhop Corbet (but not ſo then) into the next room. Ben Jonſon calls for a quart of raw wine, and gives it to the tapſter. 'Sirrah, ſays he, carry this to the gentleman in the next chamber, and tell him, I ſacrifice my ſervice to him.' The fellow did, and in thoſe words. 'Friend,' ſays Dr. Corbet, 'I thank him for his love; but 'pr'ythee tell him from me that he is miſtaken; for ſacrifices are always burnt." Merry Paſſages and Jeaſts, MSS. Harl. 6395. Malone.

This practice was continued as late as the Reſtoration. In the Parliamentary Hiſtory, Vol. XXII. p. 114, we have the following paſſage from Dr. Price's Life of General Monk: "I came to the Three Tuns before Guildhall, where the general had quartered two nights before. I entered the tavern with a ſervant and portmanteau, and aſked for a room, which I had ſcarce got into but wine followed me as a preſent from ſome citizens, deſiring leave to drink their morning's draught with me."

Reed.

Fal. Brook, is his name?

Bard. Ay, ſir.

Fal. Call him in; [Exit Bardolph.] Such Brooks are welcome to me, that o'erflow ſuch liquor. Ah! ha! miſtreſs Ford and miſtreſs Page, have I encompaſſed you? go to; via![8]

Re-enter Bardolph, with Ford diſguiſed.

Ford. Bleſs you, ſir.

Fal. And you, ſir: Would you ſpeak with me?

Ford. I make bold, to preſs with ſo little preparation upon you.

Fal. You're welcome; What's your will? Give us leave, drawer. [Exit Bardolph.

Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have ſpent much; my name is Brook.

Fal. Good maſter Brook, I deſire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good ſir John, I ſue for yours: not to charge you;[9] for I muſt let you underſtand, I think myſelf in better plight for a lender than you are: the which hath ſomething embolden'd me to [8] —— go to; via!] This cant phraſe of exultation or defiance, is common in the old plays. So, in Blurt Maſter Conſtable:

"Via for fate! Fortune, lo! this is all." Steevens.

Markham uſes this word as one of the vocal helps neceſſary for reviving a horſe's ſpirits in galloping large rings, when he grows ſlothful. Hence this cant phraſe (perhaps from the Italian, via,) may be uſed on other occaſions to quicken or pluck up courage. Tollet.

[9] —— not to charge you;] That is, not with a purpoſe of putting you to expence, or being burthenſome. Johnson.

this unſeaſoned intruſion; for they ſay, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Fal. Money is a good ſoldier, ſir, and will on.

Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me: if you will help me to bear it, ſir John, take all, or half, for eaſing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deſerve to be your porter.

Ford. I will tell you, ſir, if you will give me the hearing.

Fal. Speak, good maſter Brook; I ſhall be glad to be your ſervant.

Ford. Sir, I hear you are a ſcholar,—I will be brief with you;——and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never ſo good means, as deſire, to make myſelf acquainted with you. I ſhall diſcover a thing to you, wherein I muſt very much lay open mine own imperfection: but, good ſir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the regiſter of your own; that I may paſs with a reproof the eaſier, ſith[1] you yourſelf know, how eaſy it is to be ſuch an offender.

Fal. Very well, ſir; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her huſband's name is Ford.

Fal. Well, ſir.

Ford. I have long loved her, and, I proteſt to you, beſtowed much on her; followed her with a doting obſervance; engroſſed opportunities to meet her; fee'd every ſlight occaſion, that could but niggardly give me ſight of her; not only bought many preſents to give her, but have given largely to many, to know what ſhe would have given: briefly, I have purſued her, as love hath purſued me; which hath been, on the wing of all occaſions. But whatſoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my means, meed,[2] I am ſure, I have received none; unleſs experience be a jewel: that I have purchaſed at an infinite rate; and that hath taught me to ſay this:

Love like a ſhadow flies, when ſubſtance love purſues;
Purſuing that that flies, and flying what purſues.[3]

Fal. Have you received no promiſe of ſatisfaction at her hands?

[2] —— meed,] i. e. reward. So Spenſer:
"A roſy garland was the victor's meed."
Again, in our author's Two Gentlemen of Verona:
"Vouchſafe me for my meed but one fair look."
STEEVENS.

[3] Love like a ſhadow flies, when ſubſtance love purſues;
Purſuing that that flies, and flying what purſues.] Theſe lines have much the air of a quotation, but I know not whether they belong to any contemporary writer. In Florio's Second Fruites, 1591, I find the following verſes:
"Di donne e, et ſempre fu natura,
"Odiar chi l'ama, e chi non l'ama cura."
Again:
"—— Sono ſimili a crocodilli
"Chi per prender l'huomo, piangono, e preſo la devorano,
"Chi le fugge ſequono, e chi le ſeque fuggono."
Thus tranſlated by Florio:
"—— they are like crocodiles,
"They weep to winne, and wonne they cauſe to die,
"Follow men flying, and men following fly." MALONE

Thus alſo in a Sonnet by Queen Elizabeth, preſerved in the Aſhmole Muſeum:
"My care is like my ſhaddowe in the ſunne,
"Follows me fliinge, flies when I purſue it." STEEVENS.

Ford. Never.

Fal. Have you importuned her to ſuch a purpoſe?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Of what quality was your love then?

Ford. Like a fair houſe, built upon another man's ground; ſo that I have loſt my edifice, by miſtaking the place where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpoſe have you unfolded this to me?

Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some ſay, that, though ſhe appear honeſt to me, yet, in other places, ſhe enlargeth her mirth ſo far, that there is ſhrewd conſtruction made of her. Now, ſir John, here is the heart of my purpoſe: You are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable diſcourſe, of great admittance,[4] authentick in your place and perſon, generally allowed[5] for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.

Fal. O, ſir!

Ford. Believe it, for you know it:—There is money; ſpend it, ſpend it; ſpend more; ſpend all I have; only give me ſo much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable ſiege[6] to the

[4] —— of great admittance,] i. e. admitted into all, or the greateſt companies. STEEVENS.

[5] —— generally allowed—] Allowed is approved. So, in King Lear:

"—— if your ſweet ſway
"Allow obedience," &c. STEEVENS.

[6] —— to lay an amiable ſiege—] i. e. a ſiege of love. So, in Romeo and Juliet:

"—— the ſiege of loving terms." MALONE.

honeſty of this Ford's wife: uſe your art of wooing, win her to conſent to you; if any man may, you may as ſoon as any.

Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I ſhould win what you would enjoy? Methinks, you preſcribe to yourſelf very prepoſterouſly.

Ford. O, underſtand my drift! ſhe dwells ſo ſecurely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my ſoul dares not preſent itſelf; ſhe is too bright to be looked againſt.[7] Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my deſires had inſtance and argument[8] to commend themſelves; I could drive her then from the ward of her purity,[9] her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thouſand other her defences, which now are too ſtrongly embattled againſt me: What ſay you to't, ſir John?

Fal. Maſter Brook, I will firſt make bold with your money; next, give me your hand; and laſt, as I am a gentleman, you ſhall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

[7] She is too bright to be looked againſt.]
"Nimium lubricus aſpici." Hor. MALONE.

[8] —— inſtance and argument—] Inſtance is example. JOHNSON.

[9] —— the ward of her purity,] i.e. The defence of it. STEEVENS.

What Ford means to ſay is, that if he could once detect her in a crime, he ſhould then be able to drive her from thoſe defences with which ſhe would otherwiſe ward off his addreſſes, ſuch as her purity, her reputation, her marriage vow, &c.

So, in The Winter's Tale, Hermione, ſpeaking of Polixenes, ſays to Leontes:

"——Tell him, you're ſure
"All in Bohemia's well," &c. "Say this to him,
"He's beat from his beſt ward." M. MASON.

Ford. O good ſir!

Fal. Maſter Brook, I ſay you ſhall.

Ford. Want no money, ſir John, you ſhall want none.

Fal. Want no miſtreſs Ford, maſter Brook, you ſhall want none. I ſhall be with her, (I may tell you,) by her own appointment; even as you came in to me, her aſſiſtant, or go-between, parted from me: I ſay, I ſhall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous raſcally knave, her huſband, will be forth. Come you to me at night; you ſhall know how I ſpeed.

Ford. I am bleſt in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, ſir?

Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not:—yet I wrong him, to call him poor; they ſay, the jealous wittolly knave hath maſſes of money; for the which his wife ſeems to me well-favoured. I will uſe her as the key of the cuckoldly rogue's coffer; and there's my harveſt-home.

Ford. I would you knew Ford, ſir; that you might avoid him, if you ſaw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanical ſalt-butter rogue! I will ſtare him out of his wits; I will awe him with my cudgel: it ſhall hang like a meteor o'er the cuckold's horns: maſter Brook, thou ſhalt know, I will predominate o'er the peaſant, and thou ſhalt lie with his wife.—Come to me ſoon at night:—Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his ſtile;[1] thou, maſter Brook, ſhalt know him for a knave and cuckold:—come to me ſoon at night.

[Exit.

[1] ——and I will aggravate his ſtile;] Stile is a phraſe from the Herald's office. Falſtaff means, that he will add

Ford. What a damned Epicurean rafcal is this! —My heart is ready to crack with impatience.— Who fays, this is improvident jealoufy? My wife hath fent to him, the hour is fixed, the match is made. Would any man have thought this?—See the hell of having a falfe woman! my bed fhall be abufed, my coffers ranfacked, my reputation gnawn at; and I fhall not only receive this villainous wrong, but ftand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong. Terms! names!——Amaimon founds well; Lucifer, well; Barbafon,[2] well; yet they are devils' additions, the names of fiends: but cuckold! wittol-cuckold![3] the devil himfelf hath not fuch a name. Page is an afs, a fecure afs; he will truft his wife, he will not be jealous: I will rather truft a Fleming with my butter, parfon Hugh the more titles to thofe he already enjoys. So, in Heywood's Golden Age, 1611:

"I will create lords of a greater ftyle."

Again, in Spenfer's Fairy Queen, B. V. c. 2:

"As to abandon that which doth contain
"Your honour's ftile, that is, your warlike fhield."

Steevens.

[2] ——Amaimon—Barbafon,] The reader who is curious to know any particulars concerning thefe dæmons, may find them in Reginald Scott's Inventarie of the Names, Shapes, Powers, Governments, and Effects of Devils and Spirits, of their feveral Segnories and Degrees: a ftrange Difcourfe worth the reading, p. 377, &c. From hence it appears that Amaimon was king of the Eaft, and Barbatos a great countie or earle. Randle Holme, however, in his Academy of Armory and Blazon, B. II. ch. 1, informs us, that "Amaymon is the chief whofe dominion is on the north part of the infernal gulph; and that Barbatos is like a Sagittarius, and hath 30 legions under him."

Steevens.

[3] ——wittol-cuckold!] One who knows his wife's falfehood, and is contented with it:—from wittan, Sax. to know.

Malone.

Welchman with my cheefe, an Irifhman with my aqua-vitæ bottle,[4] or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herfelf: then fhe plots, then fhe ruminates, then fhe devifes: and what they think in their hearts they may effect, they will break their hearts but they will effect. Heaven be praifed for my jealoufy!—Eleven o'clock[5] the hour;—I will prevent this, detect my wife, be revenged on Falftaff, and laugh at Page. I will about it; better three hours too foon, than a minute too late. Fie, fie, fie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold!

[Exit.

[4] ——an Irifhman with my aqua-vitæ bottle,] Heywood, in his Challenge for Beauty, 1636, mentions the love of aqua-vitæ as characteriftick of the Irifh:

"The Briton he metheglin quaffs,
"The Irifh aqua-vitæ."

The Irifh aqua-vitæ, I believe, was not brandy, but ufquebaugh, for which Ireland has been long celebrated. MALONE.

Dericke, in The Image of Ireland, 1581, Sign. F 2, mentions Ufkebeaghe, and in a note explains it to mean aqua vitæ. REED.

[5] ——Eleven o'clock—] Ford fhould rather have faid ten o'clock: the time was between ten and eleven; and his impatient fufpicion was not likely to ftay beyond the time. JOHNSON.

It was neceffary for the plot that he fhould miftake the hour, and come too late. M. MASON.

It is neceffary for the bufinefs of the piece that Falftaff fhould be at Ford's houfe before his return. Hence our author made him name the later hour. See Act III. fc. ii: "The clock gives me my cue;—there I fhall find Falftaff." When he fays above, "I fhall prevent this," he means, not the meeting, but his wife's effecting her purpofe. MALONE.

SCENE III.

Windſor Park.

Enter CAIUS and RUGBY.

CAIUS. Jack Rugby!

RUG. Sir.

CAIUS. Vat is de clock, Jack?

RUG. 'Tis paſt the hour, ſir, that ſir Hugh promiſed to meet.

CAIUS. By gar, he has ſave his ſoul, dat he is no come; he has pray his Pible vell, dat he is no come: by gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come.

RUG. He is wiſe, ſir; he knew, your worſhip would kill him, if he came.

CAIUS. By gar, de herring is no dead, ſo as I vill kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I vill tell you how I vill kill him.

RUG. Alas, ſir, I cannot fence.

CAIUS. Villainy, take your rapier.

RUG. Forbear; here's company.

Enter Hoſt, SHALLOW, SLENDER, and PAGE.

HOST. 'Bleſs thee, bully doctor.

SHAL. 'Save you, maſter doctor Caius.

PAGE. Now, good maſter doctor!

SLEN. Give you good-morrow, ſir.

CAIUS. Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?

Host. To ſee thee fight, to ſee thee foin,[6] to ſee thee traverſe, to ſee thee here, to ſee thee there; to ſee thee paſs thy punto, thy ſtock,[7] thy reverſe, thy diſtance, thy montánt. Is he dead, my Ethiopian? is he dead, my Franciſco?[8] ha, bully! What ſays my Æſculapius? my Galen? my heart of elder?[9] ha! is he dead, bully Stale?[1] is he dead?

Caius. By gar, he is de coward Jack prieſt of the vorld; he is not ſhow his face.

[6] —— to ſee thee foin,] To foin, I believe, was the ancient term for making a thruſt in fencing, or tilting. So, in The Wiſe Woman of Hogſdon, 1638:

"I had my wards, and foins, and quarter-blows."

Again, in The Devil's Charter, 1607:

"—— ſuppoſe my duelliſt
"Should falſify the foine upon me thus,
"Here will I take him."

Spenſer, in his Fairy Queen, often uſes the word foin. So, in B. II. c. 8:

"And ſtrook and foyn'd, and laſhed outrageouſly."

Again, in Holinſhed, p. 833: "Firſt ſix foines with hand-ſpeares," &c. Steevens.

[7] —— thy ſtock,] Stock is a corruption of ſtocata, Ital. from which language the technical terms that follow are likewiſe adopted. Steevens.

[8] —— my Franciſco?] He means, my Frenchman. The quarto reads—my Francoyes. Malone.

[9] —— my heart of elder?] It ſhould be remembered, to make this joke reliſh, that the elder tree has no heart. I ſuppoſe this expreſſion was made uſe of in oppoſition to the common one, heart of oak. Steevens.

[1] —— bully Stale?] The reaſon why Caius is called bully Stale, and afterwards Urinal, muſt be ſufficiently obvious to every reader, and eſpecially to thoſe whoſe credulity and weakneſs have enrolled them among the patients of the preſent German empiric, who calls himſelf Doctor Alexander Mayerſbach. Steevens.

Host. Thou art a Caſtilian[2] king, Urinal! Hector of Greece, my boy!

[2] ——Caſtilian—] Sir T. Hanmer reads—Cardalian, as uſed corruptedly for Cœur de Lion. JOHNSON.

Caſtilian and Ethiopian, like Cataian, appear in our author's time to have been cant terms. I have met with them in more than one of the old comedies. So, in a deſcription of the Armada introduced in the Stately Moral of the Three Lords of London, 1590:

"To carry, as it were, a careleſs regard of theſe Caſtilians, and their accuſtomed bravado."

Again:

"To parley with the proud Caſtilians."

I ſuppoſe Caſtilian was the cant term for Spaniard in general. STEEVENS.

I believe this was a popular ſlur upon the Spaniards, who were held in great contempt after the buſineſs of the Armada. Thus we have a Treatiſe Parænetical, wherein is ſhewed the right Way to reſiſt the Caſtilian King; and a ſonnet prefixed to Lea's Anſwer to the Untruths publiſhed in Spain, in glorie of their ſuppoſed Victory atchieved againſt our Engliſh Navie, begins:

"Thou fond Caſtilian king!"—and ſo in other places.

FARMER.

Dr. Farmer's obſervation is juſt. Don Philip the Second affected the title of King of Spain; but the realms of Spain would not agree to it, and only ſtyled him King of Caſtile and Leon, &c. and ſo he wrote himſelf. His cruelty and ambitious views upon other ſtates rendered him univerſally deteſted. The Caſtilians, being deſcended chiefly from Jews and Moors, were deemed to be of a malign and perverſe diſpoſition; and hence, perhaps, the term Caſtilian became opprobrious. I have extracted this note from an old pamphlet, called The Spaniſh Pilgrime, which I have reaſon to ſuppoſe is the ſame diſcourſe with the Treatiſe Parænetical, mentioned by Dr. Farmer. TOLLET.

Dr. Farmer, I believe, is right. The Hoſt, who, availing himſelf of the poor Doctor's ignorance of Engliſh phraſeology, applies to him all kinds of opprobrious terms, here means to call him a coward. So, in The Three Lords of London, 1590:

"My lordes, what means theſe gallantes to performe?
"Come theſe Caſtillian cowards but to brave?
"Do all theſe mountains move, to breed a mouſe?"

Caius. I pray you, bear vitneſs that me have ſtay ſix or ſeven, two, tree hours for him, and he is no come.

Shal. He is the wiſer man, maſter doctor: he is a curer of ſouls, and you a curer of bodies; if you ſhould fight, you go againſt the hair[3] of your profeſſions; is it not true, maſter Page?

Page. Maſter Shallow, you have yourſelf been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Shal. Bodykins, maſter Page, though I now be old, and of the peace, if I ſee a ſword out, my finger itches to make one: though we are juſtices, and doctors, and churchmen, maſter Page, we have ſome ſalt of our youth in us; we are the ſons of women, maſter Page.

Page. 'Tis true, maſter Shallow.

Shal. It will be found ſo, maſter Page. Maſter doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am ſworn of the peace; you have ſhowed yourſelf a wiſe phyſician, and ſir Hugh hath ſhown himſelf a wiſe and patient churchman: you muſt go with me, maſter doctor.

There may, however, be alſo an alluſion to his profeſſion, as a water-caſter.

I know not whether we ſhould not rather point—Thou art a Caſtilian, king-urinal! &c.

In K. Henry VIII. Wolſey is called count-cardinal.

MALONE.

[3] —— againſt the hair &c.] This phraſe is proverbial, and is taken from ſtroking the hair of animals a contrary way to that in which it grows. So, in T. Churchyard's Diſcourſe of Rebellion, &c. 1570:

"You ſhoote amis when boe is drawen to eare,
"And bruſh the cloth full ſore againſt the heare."

We now ſay againſt the grain. STEEVENS.

Host. Pardon, gueſt juſtice:—A word, monſieur Muck-water.[4]

[4] ——Muck-water.] The old copy reads—mock-water. STEEVENS.

The Hoſt means, I believe, to reflect on the inſpection of urine, which made a conſiderable part of practical phyſick in that time; yet I do not well ſee the meaning of mock-water. JOHNSON.

Dr. Farmer judiciouſly propoſes to read—muck-water, i. e. the drain of a dunghill.

Henry Cornelius Agrippa, of the Vanitie and Uncertainty of Arts and Sciences, Engliſhed by James Sanford, Gent. bl. l. 4to. 1569, might have furniſhed Shakſpeare with a ſufficient hint for the compound term muck-water, as applied by Dr. Caius. Dr. Farmer's emendation is completely countenanced by the ſame work, p. 145:

"Furthermore, Phiſitians oftentimes be contagious by reaſon of urine," &c. but the reſt of the paſſage (in which the names of Eſculapius, Hippocrates, &c. are ludicrouſly introduced) is too indelicate to be laid before the reader. STEEVENS.

Muck-water, as explained by Dr. Farmer, is mentioned in Evelyn's Philoſophical Diſcourſe on Earth, 1676, p. 160. REED.

A word, monſieur Muck-water.] The ſecond of theſe words was recovered from the early quarto by Mr. Theobald. Some years ago I ſuſpected that mock-water, which appears to me to afford no meaning, was corrupt, and that the author wrote—Make-water. I have ſince obſerved that the words mock and make are often confounded in the old copies, and have therefore now more confidence in my conjecture. It is obſervable that the Hoſt, availing himſelf of the Doctor's ignorance of Engliſh, annexes to the terms that he uſes a ſenſe directly oppoſite to their real import. Thus, the poor Frenchman is made to believe, that "he will clapper-claw thee tightly," ſignifies, "he will make thee amends." Again, when he propoſes to be his friend, he tells him, "for this I will be thy adverſary toward Anne Page." So alſo, inſtead of "heart of oak," he calls him "heart of elder." In the ſame way, he informs him that Make-water means "valour."—In the old play called The Life and Death of Lord Cromwell, 1602, a female of this name is mentioned. MALONE.

I have inſerted Dr. Farmer's emendation in my text. Where is the humour or propriety of calling a Phyſician—Make-water? It is ſurely a term of general application. STEEVENS.

Caius. Muck-vater! vat is dat?

Host. Muck-water, in our Engliſh tongue, is valour, bully.

Caius. By gar, then I have as much muck-vater as de Engliſhman:——Scurvy jack-dog prieſt! by gar, me vill cut his ears.

Host. He will clapper-claw[5] thee tightly, bully.

Caius. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?

Host. That is, he will make thee amends.

Caius. By gar, me do look, he ſhall clapper-de-claw me; for, by gar, me vill have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to't, or let him wag.

Caius. Me tank you for dat.

Host. And moreover, bully,—But firſt, maſter gueſt, and maſter Page, and eke cavalero Slender, go you through the town to Frogmore.

[Aſide to them.

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?

Host. He is there: ſee what humour he is in; and I will bring the doctor about by the fields: will it do well?

Shal. We will do it.

tience; throw cold water on thy choler:[6] go about the fields with me through Frogmore; I will bring thee where miſtreſs Anne Page is, at a farm-houſe a feaſting; and thou ſhall woo her: Cry'd game, ſaid I well?[7]

[6] —— throw cold water on thy choler:] So, in Hamlet:
"Upon the heat and flame of thy diſtemper
"Sprinkle cool patience." STEEVENS.

[7] —— cry'd game, ſaid I well?] Mr. Theobald alters this nonſenſe to try'd game; that is, to nonſenſe of a worſe complexion. Shakſpeare wrote and pointed thus, CRY AIM, ſaid I well? i. e. conſent to it, approve of it. Have not I made a good propoſal? for to cry aim ſignifies to conſent to, or approve of any thing. So, again in this play: And to theſe violent proceedings all my neighbours ſhall CRY AIM, i. e. approve them. And again, in King John, Act II. ſc. ii:
"It ill becomes this preſence to cry aim
"To theſe ill-tuned repetitions."
i. e. to approve of, or encourage them. The phraſe was taken, originally, from archery. When any one had challenged another to ſhoot at the butts, (the perpetual diverſion, as well as exerciſe, of that time,) the ſtanders-by uſed to ſay one to the other, Cry aim, i. e. accept the challenge. Thus Beaumont and Fletcher, in The Fair Maid of the Inn, Act V. make the Duke ſay:
" —— muſt I cry AIME
"To this unheard of inſolence?"——
i. e. encourage it, and agree to the requeſt of the duel, which one of his ſubjects had inſolently demanded againſt the other.— But here it is remarkable, that the ſenſeleſs editors, not knowing what to make of the phraſe, Cry aim, read it thus:
" —— muſt I cry AI-ME;"
as if it was a note of interjection. So again, Maſſinger, in his Guardian:
"I will CRY AIM, and in another room
"Determine of my vengeance."——
And again, in his Renegado:
" —— to play the pander
"To the viceroy's looſe embraces, and cry aim,
"While he by force or flattery," &c.
But the Oxford editor transforms it to Cock o' the Game; and his improvements of Shakſpeare's language abound with theſe

Caius. By gar, me tank you for dat: by gar, I love you; and I ſhall procure-a you de good gueſt, modern elegances of ſpeech, ſuch as mynheers, bull-baitings, &c. Warburton.

Dr. Warburton is right in his explanation of cry aim, and in ſuppoſing that the phraſe was taken from archery; but is certainly wrong in the particular practice which he aſſigns for the original of it. It ſeems to have been the office of the aim-crier, to give notice to the archer when he was within a proper diſtance of his mark, or in a direct line with it, and to point out why he failed to ſtrike it. So, in All's loſt by Luſt, 1633:

"He gives me aim, I am three bows too ſhort;
"I'll come up nearer next time."

Again, in Vittoria Corombona, 1612:

"I'll give aim to you,
"And tell how near you ſhoot."

Again, in The Spaniſh Gipſie, by Rowley and Middleton, 1653: "Though I am no great mark in reſpect of a huge butt, yet I can tell you, great bobbers have ſhot at me, and ſhot golden arrows; but I myſelf gave aim, thus:—wide, four bows; ſhort, three and a half;" &c. Again, in Green's Tu Quoque, (no date) "We'll ſtand by, and give aim, and holoo if you hit the clout." Again, in Jarvis Markham's Engliſh Arcadia, 1607: "Thou ſmiling aim-crier at princes' fall." Again, ibid. "—while her own creatures, like aim criers, beheld her miſchance with nothing but lip-pity." In Ames's Typographical Antiquities, p. 402, a book is mentioned, called "Ayme for Finſburie Archers, or an Alphabetical Table of the name of every Mark in the ſame Fields, with their true Diſtances, both by the Map and the Dimenſuration of the Line, &c. 1594." Shakſpeare uſes the phraſe again, in The Two Gentlemen of Verona, ſcene the laſt, where it undoubtedly means to encourage:

"Behold her that gave aim to all thy vows."

So, in The Palſgrave, by W. Smith, 1615:

"Shame to us all, if we give aim to that."

Again, in The Revenger's Tragedy, 1607:

"A mother to give aim to her own daughter!"

Again, in Fenton's Tragical Diſcourſes, bl. l. 1567: "Standyng rather in his window to—crye ayme, than helpyng any waye to part the fraye," p. 165. b.

The original and literal meaning of this expreſſion may be aſcertained from ſome of the foregoing examples, and its figurative one from the reſt; for, as Dr. Warburton obſerves, it can de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.

Host. For the which, I will be thy adverſary towards Anne Page; ſaid I well?

Caius. By gar, 'tis good; vell ſaid.

Host. Let us wag then.

Caius. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby. [Exeunt.

mean nothing in theſe latter inſtances, but to conſent to, approve, or encourage.—It is not, however, the reading of Shakſpeare in the paſſage before us, and, therefore, we muſt ſtrive to produce ſome ſenſe from the words which we find there—cry'd game.

We yet ſay, in colloquial language, that ſuch a one is—game—or game to the back. There is ſurely no need of blaming Theobald's emendation with ſuch ſeverity. Cry'd game might mean, in thoſe days,—a profeſſed buck, one who was as well known by the report of his gallantry, as he could have been by proclamation. Thus, in Troilus and Creſſida:

"On whoſe bright creſt, fame, with her loud'ſt O-yes,
"Cries, this is he."

Again, in All's well that ends well, Act II. ſc. i:

"—— find what you ſeek,
"That fame may cry you loud."

Again, in Ford's Lover's Melancholy, 1629:

"A gull, an arrant gull by proclamation."

Again, in King Lear: "A proclaimed prize." Again, in Troilus and Creſſida:

"Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think."

Cock of the Game, however, is not, as Dr. Warburton pronounces it, a modern elegancy of ſpeech, for it is found in Warner's Albion's England, 1602, B. XII. c. 74: "This cocke of game, and (as might ſeeme) this hen of that ſame fether." Again, in The Martial Maid, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

"O craven chicken of a cock o' th' game!"

And in many other places. STEEVENS.

ACT III. SCENE I.

A Field near Frogmore.

Enter Sir HUGH EVANS and SIMPLE.

EVA. I pray you now, good maſter Slender's ſerving-man, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for maſter Caius, that calls himſelf Doctor of Phyſick?

SIM. Marry, ſir, the city-ward,[8] the park-ward, every way; old Windſor way, and every way but the town way.

EVA. I moſt fehemently deſire you, you will alſo look that way.

SIM. I will, ſir.

EVA. 'Pleſs my ſoul! how full of cholers I am, and trempling of mind!—I ſhall be glad, if he have deceived me:—how melancholies I am!—I will knog his urinals about his knave's coſtard, when I have good opportunities for the 'ork:—'pleſs my ſoul! [Sings.

[8] —— the city-ward,] The old editions read—the Pittie-ward, the modern editors the Pitty-wary. There is now no place that anſwers to either name at Windſor. The author might poſſibly have written (as I have printed) the City-ward, i. e. towards London.

In the Itinerarium, however, of William de Worceſtre, p. 251, the following account of diſtances in the city of Briſtol occurs: " Via de Pyttey a Pyttey-yate, porta vocata Nether Pittey, uſque antiquam portam Pyttey uſque viam ducentem ad Wynch-ſtrete continet 140 greſſus," &c. &c. The word—Pittey, therefore, which ſeems unintelligible to us, might anciently have had an obvious meaning. STEEVENS.

To ſhallow rivers,[9] to whoſe falls
Melodious birds ſing madrigals;

[9] To ſhallow rivers, &c.] This is part of a beautiful little poem of the author's; which poem, and the anſwer to it, the reader will not be diſpleaſed to find here.

THE PASSIONATE SHEPHERD TO HIS LOVE.

" Come live with me, and be my love,
" And we will all the pleaſures prove
" That hills and vallies, dale and field,
" And all the craggy mountains yield.
" There will we ſit upon the rocks,
" And ſee the ſhepherds feed their flocks,
" By ſhallow rivers, by whoſe falls
" Melodious birds ſing madrigals:
" There will I make thee beds of roſes
" With a thouſand fragrant poſies,
" A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
" Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle;
" A gown made of the fineſt wool,
" Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
" Fair lined ſlippers for the cold,
" With buckles of the pureſt gold;
" A belt of ſtraw, and ivy buds,
" With coral claſps, and amber ſtuds:
" And if theſe pleaſures may thee move,
" Come live with me, and be my love.
" Thy ſilver diſhes for thy meat,
" As precious as the gods do eat,
" Shall on an ivory table be " Prepared each day for thee and me.
" The ſhepherd ſwains ſhall dance and ſing,
" For thy delight each May morning:
" If theſe delights thy mind may move,
" Then live with me, and be my love." *

THE NYMPH'S REPLY TO THE SHEPHERD.

" If that the world and love were young,
" And truth in every ſhepherd's tongue,

* The concluſion of this and the following poem ſeem to have furniſhed Milton with the hint for the laſt lines both of his Allegro and Penseroso.
STEEVENS.

There will we make our peds of roſes,
And a thouſand fragrant poſies.
To ſhallow——

"These pretty pleaſures might me move
" To live with thee, and be thy love.
" But time drives flocks from field to fold,
" When rivers rage, and rocks grow cold,
" And Philomel becometh dumb,
" And all complain of cares to come:
" The flowers do fade, and wanton fields
" To wayward winter reckoning yields.
" A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
" Is fancy's ſpring, but ſorrow's fall.
" Thy gowns, thy ſhoes, thy beds of roſes,
" Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy poſies,
" Soon break, ſoon wither, ſoon forgotten,
" In folly ripe, in reaſon rotten.
" Thy belt of ſtraw, and ivy buds,
" Thy coral claſps, and amber ſtuds;
" All theſe in me no means can move
" To come to thee, and be thy love.
" What ſhould we talk of dainties then,
" Of better meat than's fit for men?
" Theſe are but vain: that's only good
" Which God hath bleſs'd, and ſent for food.
" But could youth laſt, and love ſtill breed,
" Had joys no date, and age no need;
" Then theſe delights my mind might move
" To live with thee, and be thy love."

Theſe two poems, which Dr. Warburton gives to Shakſpeare, are, by writers nearer that time, diſpoſed of, one to Marlow, the other to Raleigh. They are read in different copies with great variations JOHNSON.

In England's Helicon, a collection of love-verſes printed in Shakſpeare's life-time, viz. in quarto, 1600, the firſt of them is given to Marlowe, the ſecond to Ignoto; and Dr. Percy, in the firſt volume of his Reliques of Ancient Engliſh Poetry, obſerves, that there is good reaſon to believe that (not Shakſpeare, but) Chriſtopher Marlowe wrote the ſong, and Sir Walter Raleigh the Nymph's Reply; for ſo we are poſitively aſſured by Iſaac Walton, a writer of ſome credit, who has inſerted them both in his Compleat Angler, under the character of " That smooth song which was made by Kit Marlowe, now at least fifty years ago; and an answer to it, which was made by Sir Walter Raleigh in his younger days . . . . . Old fashioned poetry, but choicely good." See The Reliques, &c. Vol. I. p. 218, 221, third edit.

'Mercy on me! I have a great dispositions to cry.

In Shakspeare's sonnets, printed by Jaggard, 1599, this poem was imperfectly published, and attributed to Shakspeare. Mr. Malone, however, observes, that "What seems to ascertain it to be Marlowe's, is, that one of the lines is found (and not as a quotation) in a play of his—The Jew of Malta; which, though not printed till 1633, must have been written before 1593, as he died in that year:"

"Thou in those groves, by Dis above,
"Shalt live with me, and be my love." STEEVENS.

Evans in his panick mis-recites the lines, which in the original run thus:

"There will we sit upon the rocks,
"And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
"By shallow rivers, to whose falls
"Melodious birds sing madrigals:
"There will I make thee beds of roses
"With a thousand fragrant posies," &c.

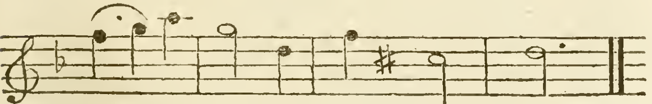
In the modern editions the verses sung by Sir Hugh have been corrected, I think, improperly. His mis-recitals were certainly intended.—He sings on the present occasion, to shew that he is not afraid. So Bottom, in A Midsummer Night's Dream: "I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear, I am not afraid." MALONE.

A late editor has observed that Evans in his panick sings, like Bottom, to shew he is not afraid. It is rather to keep up his spirits; as he sings in Simple's absence, when he has "a great dispositions to cry." RITSON.

The tune to which the former was sung, I have lately discovered in a MS. as old as Shakspeare's time, and it is as follows:

Melodious birds ſing madrigals;—
When as I ſat in Pabylon,[1]——
And a thouſand vagram poſies.
To ſhallow——



SIR J. HAWKINS.

[1] When as I ſat in Pabylon,—] This line is from the old verſion of the 137th Pſalm:

"When we did ſit in Babylon,
"The rivers round about,
"Then, in remembrance of Sion,
"The tears for grief burſt out."

The word rivers, in the ſecond line, may be ſuppoſed to have been brought to Sir Hugh's thoughts by the line of Marlowe's madrigal that he has juſt repeated; and in his fright he blends the ſacred and prophane ſong together. The old quarto has—"There lived a man in Babylon;" which was the firſt line of an old ſong, mentioned in Twelfth Night:—but the other line is more in character. MALONE.

Sim. Yonder he is coming, this way, ſir Hugh.

Eva. He's welcome:——

To ſhallow rivers, to whoſe falls——

Heaven proſper the right!—What weapons is he?

Sim. No weapons, ſir: There comes my maſter, maſter Shallow, and another gentleman from Frogmore, over the ſtile, this way.

Eva. Pray you, give me my gown; or elſe keep it in your arms.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Shal. How now, maſter parſon? Good-morrow, good ſir Hugh. Keep a gameſter from the dice, and a good ſtudent from his book, and it is wonderful.

Slen. Ah, ſweet Anne Page!

Page. Save you, good ſir Hugh!

Eva. 'Pleſs you from his mercy ſake, all of you!

Shal. What! the ſword and the word! do you ſtudy them both, maſter parſon?

Page. And youthful ſtill, in your doublet and hoſe, this raw rheumatick day?

Eva. There is reaſons and cauſes for it.

Page. We are come to you, to do a good office, maſter parſon.

Eva. Fery well: What is it?

Page. Yonder is a moſt reverend gentleman, who belike, having received wrong by ſome perſon, is at moſt odds with his own gravity and patience, that ever you ſaw.

Shal. I have lived fourſcore years, and upward;[2] I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, ſo wide of his own reſpect.

Eva. What is he?

Page. I think you know him; maſter doctor Caius, the renowned French phyſician.

Eva. Got's will, and his paſſion of my heart! I

[2] I have lived fourſcore years, and upward;] We muſt certainly read—threeſcore. In The Second Part of K. Henry IV. during Falſtaff's interview with Maſter Shallow, in his way to York, which Shakſpeare has evidently choſen to fix in 1412, (though the Archbiſhop's inſurrection actually happened in 1405,) Silence obſerves that it was then fifty-five years ſince the latter went to Clement's Inn; ſo that, ſuppoſing him to have begun his ſtudies at ſixteen, he would be born in 1341, and, conſequently, be a very few years older than John of Gaunt, who, we may recollect, broke his head in the tilt-yard. But, beſides this little difference in age, John of Gaunt at eighteen or nineteen would be above ſix feet high, and poor Shallow, with all his apparel, might have been truſs'd into an eelſkin. Dr. Johnſon was of opinion that the preſent play ought to be read between the Firſt and Second Part of Henry IV. an arrangement liable to objections which that learned and eminent critick would have found it very difficult, if not altogether impoſſible, to ſurmount. But, let it be placed where it may, the ſcene is clearly laid between 1402, when Shallow would be ſixty one, and 1412, when he had the meeting with Falſtaff: Though one would not, to be ſure, from what paſſes upon that occaſion, imagine the parties had been together ſo lately at Windſor; much leſs that the Knight had ever beaten his worſhip's keepers, kill'd his deer, and broke open his lodge. The alteration now propoſed, however, is in all events neceſſary; and the rather ſo, as Falſtaff muſt be nearly of the ſame age with Shallow, and fourſcore ſeems a little too late in life for a man of his kidney to be making love to, and even ſuppoſing himſelf admired by, two at a time, travelling in a buck-baſket, thrown into a river, going to the wars, and making priſoners. Indeed, he has luckily put the matter out of all doubt, by telling us, in The Firſt Part of K. Henry IV. that his age was "ſome fifty, or, by'r lady, inclining to threeſcore." Ritson.

Page. Why?

Eva. He has no more knowledge in Hibocrates and Galen,—and he is a knave beſides; a cowardly knave, as you would deſires to be acquainted withal.

Page. I warrant you, he's the man ſhould fight with him.

Slen. O, ſweet Anne Page!

Shal. It appears ſo, by his weapons:—Keep them aſunder;—here comes doctor Caius.

Enter Hoſt, Caius, and Rugby.

Page. Nay, good maſter parſon, keep in your weapon.

Shal. So do you, good maſter doctor.

Host. Diſarm them, and let them queſtion; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our Engliſh.

Caius. I pray you, let-a me ſpeak a word vit your ear: Verefore vill you not meet a-me?

Eva. Pray you, uſe your patience: In good time.

Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog, John ape.

Eva. Pray you, let us not be laughing-ſtogs to other men's humours; I deſire you in friendſhip, and I will one way or other make you amends:—I will knog your urinals about your knave's cogſcomb, for miſſing your meetings and appointments.[3]

[3] ——for miſſing your meetings and appointments.] Theſe words, which are not in the folio, were recovered from the quarto, by Mr. Pope. Malone.

CAIUS. Diable!—Jack Rugby,—mine Hoſt de Jarterre, have I not ſtay for him, to kill him? have I not, at de place I did appoint?

EVA. As I am a chriſtians ſoul, now, look you, this is the place appointed; I'll be judgement by mine hoſt of the Garter.

HOST. Peace, I ſay, Guallia and Gaul, French and Welch;[4] ſoul-curer and body-curer.

CAIUS. Ay, dat is very good! excellent!

HOST. Peace, I ſay; hear mine hoſt of the Garter. Am I politick? am I ſubtle? am I a Machiavel? Shall I loſe my doctor? no; he gives me the potions, and the motions. Shall I loſe my parſon? my prieſt? my ſir Hugh? no; he gives me the proverbs and the no-verbs.—Give me thy hand, terreſtial; ſo:—Give me thy hand, celeſtial; ſo.——Boys of art, I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places: your hearts are mighty, your ſkins are whole, and let burnt ſack be the iſſue.—Come, lay their ſwords to pawn:—Follow me, lad of peace; follow, follow, follow.

SHAL. Truſt me, a mad hoſt:—Follow, gentlemen, follow.

SLEN. O, ſweet Anne Page!

[Exeunt SHALLOW, SLENDER, PAGE, and Hoſt.

[4] Peace, I ſay, Guallia and Gaul, French and Welch;] Sir Thomas Hanmer reads—Gallia and Wallia: but it is objected that Wallia is not eaſily corrupted into Gaul. Poſſibly the word was written Guallia. FARMER.

Thus, in K. Henry VI. P. II. Gualtier for Walter. STEEVENS.

The quarto, 1602, confirms Dr. Farmer's conjecture. It reads—Peace I ſay, Gawle and Gawlia, French and Welch, &c. MALONE.

Caius. Ha! do I perceive dat? have you make-a de ſot of us?[5] ha, ha!

Eva. This is well; he has made us his vlouting-ſtog.—I deſire you, that we may be friends; and let us knog our prains together, to be revenge on this ſame ſcall, ſcurvy,[6] cogging companion, the hoſt of the Garter.

Caius. By gar, vit all my heart; he promiſe to bring me vere is Anne Page: by gar, he deceive me too.

Eva. Well, I will ſmite his noddles:—Pray you, follow. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

The Street in Windſor.

Enter Miſtreſs Page and Robin.

Mrs. Page. Nay, keep your way, little gallant; you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a leader: Whether had you rather, lead mine eyes, or eye your maſter's heels?

[5] —— make-a de ſot of us?] Sot, in French, ſignifies a fool. Malone.

[6] —— ſcall, ſcurvy,] Scall was an old word of reproach, as ſcab was afterwards.

Chaucer imprecates on his ſcrivener:

"Under thy longe lockes mayeſt thou have the ſcalle." Johnson.

Scall, as Dr. Johnſon interprets it, is a ſcab breaking out in the hair, and approaching nearly to the leproſy. It is uſed by other writers of Shakſpeare's time. You will find what was to be done by perſons afflicted with it, by looking into Leviticus, 13 ch. v. 30, 31, and ſeqq. Whalley.

Rob. I had rather, forfooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf.

Mrs. Page. O you are a flattering boy; now, I fee, you'll be a courtier.

Enter FORD.

Ford. Well met, miftrefs Page: Whither go you?

Mrs. Page. Truly, fir, to fee your wife: Is fhe at home?

Ford. Ay; and as idle as fhe may hang together, for want of company: I think, if your hufbands were dead, you two would marry.

Mrs. Page. Be fure of that,—two other hufbands.

Ford. Where had you this pretty weather-cock?

Mrs. Page. I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my hufband had him of: What do you call your knight's name, firrah?

Rob. Sir John Falftaff.

Ford. Sir John Falftaff!

Mrs. Page. He, he; I can never hit on's name.—There is fuch a league between my good man and he!—Is your wife at home, indeed?

Ford. Indeed, fhe is.

Mrs. Page. By your leave, fir;—I am fick, till I fee her. [Exeunt Mrs. PAGE and ROBIN.

Ford. Has Page any brains? hath he any eyes? hath he any thinking? Sure, they fleep; he hath no ufe of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty miles, as eafy as a cannon will fhoot point-blank twelve ſcore. He pieces-out his wife's inclination; he gives her folly motion, and advantage: and now ſhe's going to my wife, and Falſtaff's boy with her. A man may hear this ſhower ſing in the wind![7]—and Falſtaff's boy with her!—Good plots!—they are laid; and our revolted wives ſhare damnation together. Well; I will take him, then torture my wife, pluck the borrowed veil of modeſty from the ſo ſeeming miſtreſs Page,[8] divulge Page himſelf for a ſecure and wilful Actæon; and to theſe violent proceedings all my neighbours ſhall cry aim.[9] [Clock ſtrikes.] The clock gives me my cue, and my aſſurance bids me ſearch; there I ſhall find Falſtaff: I ſhall be rather praiſed for this, than mocked; for it is as poſitive as the earth is firm,[1] that Falſtaff is there: I will go.

[7] A man may hear this ſhower ſing in the wind!] This phraſe has already occurred in The Tempeſt, Act II. ſc. ii: "I hear it ſing in the wind." STEEVENS.

[8] ——ſo ſeeming miſtreſs Page,] Seeming is ſpecious. So, in K. Lear:

"If ought within that little ſeeming ſubſtance."

Again, in Meaſure for Meaſure, Act I. ſc. iv:

"—— Hence ſhall we ſee,
"If power change purpoſe, what our ſeemers be."

STEEVENS.

[9] ——ſhall cry aim.] i. e. ſhall encourage. So, in K. John, Act II. ſc. i:

"It ill beſeems this preſence, to cry aim
"To theſe ill-tuned repetitions."

The phraſe, as I have already obſerved, is taken from archery. See note on the laſt ſcene of the preceding act, where Dr. Warburton would read—cry aim, inſtead of—"cry'd game."

STEEVENS.

[1] —— as the earth is firm,] So, in Macbeth:

"—— Thou ſure and firm-ſet earth—," MALONE.

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, SLENDER, Hoſt, Sir HUGH EVANS, CAIUS, and RUGBY.

SHAL. PAGE, &c. Well met, maſter Ford.

FORD. Truſt me, a good knot: I have good cheer at home; and, I pray you, all go with me.

SHAL. I muſt excuſe myſelf, maſter Ford.

SLEN. And ſo muſt I, ſir; we have appointed to dine with miſtreſs Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I'll ſpeak of.

SHAL. We have lingered[2] about a match between Anne Page and my couſin Slender, and this day we ſhall have our anſwer.

SLEN. I hope, I have your good will, father Page.

PAGE. You have, maſter Slender; I ſtand wholly for you:—but my wife, maſter doctor, is for you altogether.

CAIUS. Ay, by gar; and de maid is love-a me; my nurſh-a Quickly tell me ſo muſh.

HOST. What ſay you to young maſter Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verſes, he ſpeaks holyday,[3] he ſmells April [2] We have lingered—] They have not lingered very long. The match was propoſed by Sir Hugh but the day before.

JOHNSON.

Shallow repreſents the affair as having been long in hand, that he may better excuſe himſelf and Slender from accepting Ford's invitation on the day when it was to be concluded.
STEEVENS.

[3] —— he writes verſes, he ſpeaks holyday,] i. e. in an high-flown, fuſtian-ſtyle. It was called a holy-day ſtyle, from the old cuſtom of acting their farces of the myſteries and moralities, which were turgid and bombaſt, on holy-days. So, in Much and May:[4] he will carry't, he will carry't; 'tis in his buttons;[5] he will carry't.

Ado about Nothing: "I cannot woo in festival terms." And again, in The Merchant of Venice:

"Thou spend'st such high-day wit in praising him."

WARBURTON.

I suspect that Dr. Warburton's supposition that this phrase is derived from the season of acting the old mysteries, is but an holyday hypothesis; and have preserved his note only for the sake of the passages he quotes. Fenton is not represented as a talker of bombast.

He speaks holiday, I believe, means only, his language is more curious and affectedly chosen than that used by ordinary men. MALONE.

So, in King Henry IV. P. I:

"With many holiday and lady terms." STEEVENS.

To speak holyday must mean to speak out of the common road, superior to the vulgar; alluding to the better dress worn on such days. RITSON.

[4] —— he smells April and May:] This was the phraseology of the time; not "he smells of April," &c. So, in Measure for Measure: "he would mouth with a beggar of fifty, though she smelt brown bread and garlick." MALONE.

[5] ——'tis in his buttons;] Alluding to an ancient custom among the country fellows, of trying whether they should succeed with their mistresses, by carrying the batchelor's buttons (a plant of the Lychnis kind, whose flowers resemble a coat button in form,) in their pockets. And they judged of their good or bad success by their growing, or their not growing there. SMITH.

Greene mentions these batchelor's buttons in his Quip for an upstart Courtier: "I saw the batchelor's buttons, whose virtue is, to make wanton maidens weep, when they have worne them forty weeks under their aprons," &c.

The same expression occurs in Heywood's Fair Maid of the West, 1631:

"He wears batchelor's buttons, does he not?"

Again, in The Constant Maid, by Shirley, 1640:

"I am a batchelor.

"I pray, let me be one of your buttons still then."

Again, in A Fair Quarrel, by Middleton and Rowley, 1617:

"I'll wear my batchelor's buttons still."

Page. Not by my conſent, I promiſe you. The gentleman is of no having:[6] he kept company with the wild Prince and Poins; he is of too high a region, he knows too much. No, he ſhall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the finger of my ſubſtance: if he take her, let him take her ſimply; the wealth I have waits on my conſent, and my conſent goes not that way.

Ford. I beſeech you, heartily, ſome of you go home with me to dinner: beſides your cheer, you ſhall have ſport; I will ſhow you a monſter.—— Maſter doctor, you ſhall go;—ſo ſhall you, maſter Page;—and you, ſir Hugh.

Shal. Well, fare you well:—we ſhall have the freer wooing at maſter Page's.

[Exeunt Shallow and Slender.

Caius. Go home, John Rugby; I come anon.

[Exit Rugby.

Host. Farewell, my hearts: I will to my honeſt knight Falſtaff, and drink canary with him.

[Exit Hoſt.

Ford. [Aſide.] I think, I ſhall drink in pipe-

Again, in A Woman never vex'd, comedy, by Rowley, 1632:
"Go, go and reſt on Venus' violets; ſhew her
"A dozen of batchelors' buttons, boy."
Again, in Weſtward Hoe, 1606: "Here's my huſband, and no batchelor's buttons are at his doublet." Steevens.

6 —— of no having:] Having is the ſame as eſtate or fortune. Johnson.

So, in Macbeth:
"Of noble having, and of royal hope."
Again, Twelfth Night:
"—— My having is not much;
"I'll make diviſion of my preſent with you:
"Hold, there is half my coffer." Steevens.

wine firſt with him; I'll make him dance.[7] Will you go, gentles?

[7] Hoſt. Farewell, my hearts: I will to my honeſt knight Falſtaff, and drink canary with him.

Ford. [Aſide.] I think, I ſhall drink in pipe-wine firſt with him; I'll make him dance.] To drink in pipe-wine is a phraſe which I cannot underſtand. May we not ſuppoſe that Shakſpeare rather wrote, I think I ſhall drink HORN-PIPE wine firſt with him: I'll make him dance?

Canary is the name of a dance, as well as of a wine. Ford lays hold of both ſenſes; but, for an obvious reaſon, makes the dance a horn-pipe. It has been already remarked, that Shakſpeare has frequent alluſions to a cuckold's horns. TYRWHITT.

So, in Paſquil's Night-cap, 1612, p. 118:

"It is great comfort to a cuckold's chance
"That many thouſands doe the Hornepipe dance."

STEEVENS.

Pipe is known to be a veſſel of wine, now containing two hogſheads. Pipe-wine is therefore wine, not from the bottle, but the pipe; and the jeſt conſiſts in the ambiguity of the word, which ſignifies both a caſk of wine, and a muſical inſtrument.

JOHNSON.

The jeſt here lies in a mere play of words. "I'll give him pipe-wine, which ſhall make him dance." Edinburgh Magazine, Nov. 1786. STEEVENS.

The phraſe,—"to drink in pipe-wine"—always ſeemed to me a very ſtrange one, till I met with the following paſſage in King James's firſt ſpeech to his parliament, in 1604; by which it appears that "to drink in" was the phraſeology of the time: "—who either, being old, have retained their firſt drunken-in liquor," &c. MALONE.

I have ſeen the phraſe often in books of Shakſpeare's time, but neglected to mark down the paſſages. One of them I have lately recovered: "If he goe to the taverne they will not onely make him paie for the wine, but for all he drinks in beſides." Greene's Ghoſt haunting Conicatchers, 1602, Sign. B 4.—The following alſo, though of ſomewhat later authority, will confirm Mr. Malone's obſervation: "A player acting upon a ſtage a man killed; but being troubled with an extream cold, as he was lying upon the ſtage fell a coughing; the people laughing, he ruſhed up, ran off the ſtage, ſaying, thus it is for a man to drink in porridg, for then he will be ſure to cough in his grave." Jocabella, or a Cabinet of Conceits, by Robert Chamberlaine, 1640, N° 84. REED.

All. Have with you, to ſee this monſter.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

A Room in Ford's Houſe.

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! what, Robert!

Mrs. Page. Quickly, quickly: Is the buck-baſket—

Mrs. Ford. I warrant:—What, Robin, I ſay.

Enter Servants with a Baſket.

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.

Mrs. Ford. Here, ſet it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge; we muſt be brief.

Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John, and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brew-houſe; and when I ſuddenly call you, come forth, and (without any pauſe, or ſtaggering,) take this baſket on your ſhoulders: that done, trudge with it in all haſte, and carry it among the whitſters[8] in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch, cloſe by the Thames ſide.

Mrs. Page. You will do it?

Mrs. Ford. I have told them over and over: they lack no direction: Be gone, and come when you are called. [Exeunt Servants.

[8] —— the whitſters—] i. e. the blanchers of linen.
Douce.

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter Robin.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eyas-mufket ?[9] what news with you ?

Rob. My mafter fir John is come in at your back-door, miftrefs Ford ; and requefts your company.

Mrs. Page. You litttle Jack-a-lent,[1] have you been true to us ?

[9] How now, my eyas-mufket ?] Eyas is a young unfledg'd hawk ; I fuppofe from the Italian Niafo, which originally fignified any young bird taken from the neft unfledg'd, afterwards a young hawk. The French, from hence, took their niais, and ufed it in both thofe fignifications ; to which they added a third, metaphorically, a filly fellow ; un garçon fort niais, un niais. Mufket fignifies a fparrow hawk, or the fmalleft fpecies of hawks. This too is from the Italian Mufchetto, a fmall hawk, as appears from the original fignification of the word, namely, a troublefome ftinging fly. So that the humour of calling the little page an eyas-mufket is very intelligible. Warburton.

So, in Greene's Card of Fancy, 1608 : " —no hawk fo haggard but will ftoop to the lure : no nieffe fo ramage but will be reclaimed to the lunes." Eyas-musket is the fame as infant Lilliputian. Again, in Spenfer's Fairy Queen, B. I. c. xi. ft. 34 :

" ——youthful gay,
" Like eyas-hauke, up mounts unto the fkies,
" His newly budded pinions to effay."

In The Booke of Haukyng, &c. commonly called The Book of St. Albans, bl. l. no date, is the following derivation of the word ; but whether true or erroneous is not for me to determine : " An hauk is called an eyeffe from her eyen. For an hauke that is brought up under a buffarde or puttock, as many ben, have watry eyen," &c. Steevens.

[1] ——Jack-a-lent,] A Jack o' lent was a puppet thrown at in Lent, like fhrove-cocks. So, in The Weakeft goes to the Wall, 1600 :

" A mere anatomy, a Jack of Lent."

Rob. Ay, I'll be ſworn: My maſter knows not of your being here; and hath threatened to put me into everlaſting liberty, if I tell you of it; for, he ſwears, he'll turn me away.

Mrs. Page. Thou'rt a good boy; this ſecrecy of thine ſhall be a tailor to thee, and ſhall make thee a new doublet and hoſe.—I'll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do ſo:—Go tell thy maſter, I am alone. Miſtreſs Page, remember you your cue.
[Exit Robin.

Mrs. Page. I warrant thee; if I do not act it, hiſs me. [Exit Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Go to then; we'll uſe this unwholeſome humidity, this groſs watry pumpion;—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.[2]

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel?[3] Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough;[4] this is the period of my ambition: O this bleſſed hour!

Again, in The Four Prentices of London, 1615:
"Now you old Jack of Lent, ſix weeks and upwards."
Again, in Greene's Tu Quoque: "—for if a boy, that is throwing at his Jack o' Lent, chance to hit me on the ſhins," &c. See a note on the laſt ſcene of this comedy. Steevens.

[2] ——from jays.] So, in Cymbeline:
"——ſome jay of Italy,
"Whoſe mother was her painting," &c. Steevens.

[3] Have I caught my heavenly jewel?] This is the firſt line of the ſecond ſong in Sidney's Aſtrophel and Stella. Tollet

[4] ——Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough;] This ſentiment, which is of ſacred origin, is here indecently introduced. It appears again, with ſomewhat leſs of profaneneſs, in The Winter's Tale, Act IV. and in Othello, Act II.
Steevens

Mrs. Ford. O ſweet ſir John!

Fal. Miſtreſs Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate, miſtreſs Ford. Now ſhall I ſin in my wiſh: I would thy huſband were dead; I'll ſpeak it before the beſt lord, I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I your lady, ſir John! alas, I ſhould be a pitiful lady.

Fal. Let the court of France ſhow me ſuch another; I ſee how thine eye would emulate the diamond: Thou haſt the right arched bent[5] of the brow, that becomes the ſhip-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian admittance.[6]

[5] —— arched bent —] Thus the quartos 1602, and 1619. The folio reads—arched beauty. Steevens.

The reading of the quarto is ſupported by a paſſage in Antony and Cleopatra:

"Eternity was in our lips and eyes,
"Bliſs in our brows-bent." Malone.

[6] —— that becomes the ſhip-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian admittance.] Inſtead of—Venetian admittance, the old quarto reads—"or any Venetian attire." Steevens.

The old quarto reads—tire-vellet, and the old folio reads—or any tire of Venetian admittance. So that the true reading of the whole is this, that becomes the ſhip-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian admittance. The ſpeaker tells his miſtreſs, ſhe had a face that would become all the head dreſſes in faſhion. The ſhip-tire was an open head dreſs, with a kind of ſcarf depending from behind. Its name of ſhip-tire was, I preſume, from its giving the wearer ſome reſemblance of a ſhip (as Shakſpeare ſays) in all her trim: with all her pendants out, and flags and ſtreamers flying.

This was an image familiar with the poets of that time. Thus Beaumont and Fletcher, in their play of Wit without Money: "She ſpreads ſattens as the king's ſhips do canvas every where; ſhe may ſpace her miſen," &c. This will direct us to reform the following word of tire-valiant, which I ſuſpect to be corrupt, valiant being a very incongruous epithet for a woman's head dreſs: I ſuppoſe Shakſpeare wrote tire-vailant. As the ſhip-tire was an open head dreſs, ſo the tire-

Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, ſir John: my brows become nothing elſe; nor that well neither.

vailant was a cloſe one, in which the head and breaſt were covered as with a veil. And theſe were, in fact, the two different head dreſſes then in faſhion, as we may ſee by the pictures of that time. One of which was ſo open, that the whole neck, breaſts, and ſhoulders, were opened to view: the other, ſo ſecurely incloſed in kerchiefs, &c. that nothing could be ſeen above the eyes, or below the chin. Warburton.

In the fifth act, Fenton mentions that his miſtreſs is to meet him—

"With ribbons pendant flaring 'bout her head."

This, probably, was what is here called the ſhip-tire.

Malone.

—— the tire valiant,] I would read—tire volant. Stubbes, who deſcribes moſt minutely every article of female dreſs, has mentioned none of theſe terms, but ſpeaks of vails depending from the top of the head, and flying behind in looſe folds. The word volant was in uſe before the age of Shakſpeare. I find it in Wilfride Holme's Fall and evil Succeſſe of Rebellion, 1537:

"——high volant in any thing divine."

Tire vellet, which is the reading of the old quarto, may be printed, as Mr. Tollet obſerves, by miſtake, for tire-velvet. We know that velvet-hoods were worn in the age of Shakſpeare. Steevens.

Among the preſents ſent by the Queen of Spain to the Queen of England, in April 1606, was a velvet cap with gold buttons. Catharine's cap, in The Taming of the Shrew, is likewiſe of velvet.

Tire-volant, however, I believe with Mr. Steevens, was the poet's word. "Their heads (ſays Naſhe in 1594) with their top and top-gallant lawne baby caps, and ſnow-reſembled ſilver curlings, they make a plain puppet-ſtage of. Their breaſts they embuſke up on hie, and their round roſeate buds they immodeſtly lay forth, to ſhew, at their hands there is fruit to be hoped." Chriſt's Tears over Jeruſalem, 4to. 1594. Malone.

—— of Venetian admittance.] i. e. of a faſhion received or admitted from Venice. So, in Weſtward Hoe, 1606, by Decker and Webſter:—"now ſhe's in that Italian head-tire you ſent her." Dr. Farmer propoſes to read—"of Venetian remittance."

Steevens.

Fal. Thou art a traitor[7] to ſay ſo: thou would'ſt make an abſolute courtier; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait, in a ſemi-circled farthingale. I ſee what thou wert, if fortune thy foe[8] were not; nature is thy friend:[9] Come, thou canſt not hide it.

In how much requeſt the Venetian tyre formerly was held, appears from Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, 1624:—"let her have the Spaniſh gate, [gait] the Venetian tire, Italian complements and endowments." MALONE.

May not the tire valiant be ſo called from the air of boldneſs and confidence which it might give the wearer? A certain court divine (who can hardly be called a courtly one) in a ſermon preached before King James the Firſt, thus ſpeaks of the ladies' head dreſſes: "Oh what a wonder it is to ſee a ſhip under ſaile with her tacklings and her maſts, and her tops and top gallants, with her upper decks and her nether decks, and ſo bedeckt with her ſtreames, flags and enſigns, and I know not what; yea but a world of wonders it is to ſee a woman created in God's image, ſo miſcreate oft times and deformed with her French, her Spaniſh and her fooliſh faſhions, that he that made her, when he looks upon her, ſhall hardly know her, with her plumes, her fans, and a ſilken vizard, with a ruffe, like a ſaile; yea, a ruffe like a rainbow, with a feather in her cap, like a flag in her top, to tell (I thinke) which way the wind will blow." The MERCHANT ROYALL, a ſermon preached at Whitehall before the King's Majeſtie, at the nuptialls of Lord Hay and his Lady, Twelfth-day, 1607, 4to. 1615. Again, "—it is proverbially ſaid, that far fetcht and deare bought is fitteſt for ladies; as now-a-daies what groweth at home is baſe and homely; and what every one eates is meate for dogs; and wee muſt have bread from one countrie, and drinke from another; and wee muſt have meate from Spaine, and ſauce out of Italy; and if wee weare any thing, it muſt be pure Venetian, Roman, or barbarian; but the faſhion of all muſt be French." Ibid. REED.

[7] —— a traitor—] i. e. to thy own merit. STEEVENS.

The folio reads—thou art a tyrant, &c. but the reading of the quarto appears to me far better. MALONE.

[8] ——fortune thy foe—] "was the beginning of an old ballad, in which were enumerated all the misfortunes that fall upon mankind, through the caprice of fortune." See note on

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no fuch thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? let that perfuade thee, there's fomething extraordinary in thee. Come, I cannot cog, and fay, thou art this and that, like a many of thefe lifping haw-thorn buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and fmell like Bucklers-bury[1] in fimple-time; I cannot: but I love thee;[2] none but thee; and thou deferveft it.

The Cuftom of the Country, Act I. fc. i. by Mr. Theobald; who obferves, that this ballad is mentioned again in a comedy by John Tatham, printed in 1660, called The Rump, or Mirror of the Times, wherein a Frenchman is introduced at the bonfire made for the burning of the rumps, and, catching hold of Prifcilla, will oblige her to dance, and orders the mufick to play Fortune my Foe. See alfo, Lingua, Vol. V. Dodfley's Collection, p. 188; and Tom Effence, 1677, p. 37. Mr. Ritfon obferves, that "the tune is the identical air now known by the fong of Death and the Lady, to which the metrical lamentations of extraordinary criminals have been ufually chanted for upwards of thefe two hundred years." Reed.

The firft ftanza of this popular ballad was as follows:

"Fortune, my foe, why doft thou frown on me?
"And will my fortune never better be?
"Wilt thou, I fay, for ever breed my pain,
"And wilt thou not reftore my joys again?" Malone.

This ballad is alfo mentioned by Burton, in his Anatomy of Melancholy, edit. 1632, p. 576: "What fhall we do in fuch a cafe?" fing "Fortune, my foe?" Steevens.

[9] —— nature is thy friend:] Is, which is not in the old copy, was introduced by Mr. Pope. Malone.

[1] —— like Buckler's-bury &c.] Buckler's-bury, in the time of Shakfpeare, was chiefly inhabited by druggifts, who fold all kinds of herbs, green as well as dry. Steevens.

[2] —— I cannot cog, and fay, thou art this and that, like a many of thefe lifping haw-thorn buds,—I cannot: but I love thee;] So, in Wily Beguil'd, 1606:

"I cannot play the diffembler,
"And woo my love with courting ambages,

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, ſir; I fear, you love miſtreſs Page.

Fal. Thou might'ſt as well ſay, I love to walk by the Counter-gate; which is as hateful to me as the reek of a lime-kiln.[3]

Mrs. Ford. Well, heaven knows, how I love you; and you ſhall one day find it.

Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll deſerve it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I muſt tell you, ſo you do; or elſe I could not be in that mind.

Rob. [within.] Miſtreſs Ford, miſtreſs Ford! here's miſtreſs Page at the door, ſweating, and blowing, and looking wildly, and would needs ſpeak with you preſently.

Fal. She ſhall not ſee me; I will enſconce me behind the arras.[4]

Mrs. Ford. Pray you, do ſo; ſhe's a very tattling woman.— [Falstaff hides himſelf.

Enter Miſtreſs Page and Robin.

What's the matter? how now?

" Like one whoſe love hangs on his ſmooth tongue's end;
" But in a word I tell the ſum of my deſires,
" I love faire Lelia." Malone.

3 —— as hateful to me as the reek of a lime-kiln.] Our poet has a ſimilar image in Coriolanus:
" —— whoſe breath I hate,
" As reek o' the rotten fens." Steevens.

4 —— behind the arras.] The ſpaces left between the walls and the wooden frames on which arras was hung, were not more commodious to our anceſtors than to the authors of their ancient dramatic pieces. Borachio in Much Ado about Nothing, and Polonius in Hamlet, alſo avail themſelves of this convenient receſs. Steevens.

Mrs. Page. O miſtreſs Ford, what have you done? You're ſhamed, you are overthrown, you are undone for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What's the matter, good miſtreſs Page?

Mrs. Page. O well-a-day, miſtreſs Ford! having an honeſt man to your huſband, to give him ſuch cauſe of ſuſpicion!

Mrs. Ford. What cauſe of ſuſpicion?

Mrs. Page. What cauſe of ſuſpicion?—Out upon you! how am I miſtook in you?

Mrs. Ford. Why, alas! what's the matter?

Mrs. Page. Your huſband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windſor, to ſearch for a gentleman, that, he ſays, is here now in the houſe, by your conſent, to take an ill advantage of his abſence: You are undone.

Mrs. Ford. Speak louder.[5]—[Aſide.]—'Tis not ſo, I hope.

Mrs. Page. Pray heaven it be not ſo, that you have ſuch a man here; but 'tis moſt certain your huſband's coming with half Windſor at his heels, to ſearch for ſuch a one. I come before to tell you: If you know yourſelf clear, why I am glad of it: but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out. Be not amazed; call all your ſenſes to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What ſhall I do?—There is a gentleman, my dear friend; and I fear not mine own [5] Speak louder.] i. e. that Falſtaff, who is retired, may hear. This paſſage is only found in the two elder quartos. Steevens.

ſhame, ſo much as his peril: I had rather than a thouſand pound, he were out of the houſe.

Mrs. Page. For ſhame, never ſtand you had rather, and you had rather; your huſband's here at hand, bethink you of ſome conveyance: in the houſe you cannot hide him.—O, how have you deceived me!—Look, here is a baſket; if he be of any reaſonable ſtature, he may creep in here; and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking: Or, it is whiting-time,[6] ſend him by your two men to Datchet mead.

Mrs. Ford. He's too big to go in there: What ſhall I do?

Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. Let me ſee't, let me ſee't! O let me ſee't! I'll in, I'll in;—follow your friend's counſel;—I'll in.

Mrs. Page. What! ſir John Falſtaff! Are theſe your letters, knight?

Fal. I love thee, and none but thee;[7] help me away: let me creep in here; I'll never—

[He goes into the baſket; they cover him with foul linen.

Mrs. Page. Help to cover your maſter, boy: Call your men, miſtreſs Ford:—You diſſembling knight!

[6] —— whiting-time,] Bleaching time; ſpring. The ſeaſon when "maidens bleach their ſummer ſmocks." Holt White.

[7] —— and none but thee;] Theſe words, which are characteriſtick, and ſpoken to Mrs. Page aſide, deſerve to be reſtored from the old quarto. He had uſed the ſame words before to Mrs. Ford. Malone.

Mrs. Ford. What, John, Robert, John! [Exit Robin. Re-enter Servants.] Go take up theſe clothes here, quickly; Where's the cowl-ſtaff?[8] look, how you drumble:[9] carry them to the laundreſs in Datchet mead;[1] quickly, come.

[8] ——the cowl-ſtaff?] Is a ſtaff uſed for carrying a large tub or baſket with two handles. In Eſſex the word cowl is yet uſed for a tub. Malone.

This word occurs alſo in Philemon Holland's tranſlation of the ſeventh Book of Pliny's Natural Hiſtory, ch. 56: "The firſt battell that ever was fought, was between the Africans and Ægyptians; and the ſame performed by baſtons, clubs and coulſtaves, which they call Phalangæ." Steevens.

[9] ——how you drumble:] The reverend Mr. Lambe, the editor of the ancient metrical hiſtory of the Battle of Floddon, obſerves, that—look how you drumble, means—how confuſed you are; and that in the North, drumbled ale is muddy, diſturbed ale. Thus, a Scottiſh proverb in Ray's collection:

"It is good fiſhing in drumbling waters."

Again, in Have with you to Saffron Walden, or Gabriel Harvey's Hunt is up, this word occurs: "—gray-beard drumbling over a diſcourſe." Again: "—your fly in a boxe is but a drumble-bee in compariſon of it." Again: "—this drumbling courſe." Steevens.

To drumble, in Devonſhire, ſignifies to mutter in a ſullen and inarticulate voice. No other ſenſe of the word will either explain this interrogation, or the paſſages adduced in Mr. Steevens's note. To drumble and drone are often uſed in connexion. Henley.

A drumble drone, in the weſtern dialect, ſignifies a drone or humble-bee. Mrs. Page may therefore mean—How lazy and ſtupid you are! be more alert. Malone.

[1] ——carry them to the laundreſs in Datchet mead;] Mr. Dennis objects, with ſome degree of reaſon, to the probability of the circumſtance of Falſtaff's being carried to Datchet mead, and thrown into the Thames. "It is not likely (he obſerves) that Falſtaff would ſuffer himſelf to be carried in the baſket as far as Datchet mead, which is half a mile from Windſor, and it is plain that they could not carry him, if he made any reſiſtance." Malone.

Enter FORD, PAGE, CAIUS, and Sir HUGH EVANS.

FORD. Pray you, come near: if I ſuſpect without cauſe, why then make ſport at me, then let me be your jeſt; I deſerve it.—How now? whither bear you this?

SERV. To the laundreſs, forſooth.

MRS. FORD. Why, what have you to do whither they bear it? You were beſt meddle with buck-waſhing.

FORD. Buck? I would I could waſh myſelf of the buck! Buck, buck, buck? Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck; and of the ſeaſon too; it ſhall appear.[1] [Exeunt Servants with the baſket.] Gentlemen, I have dreamed to-night; I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys: aſcend my chambers, ſearch, ſeek, find out: I'll warrant, we'll unkennel

[1] —— it ſhall appear.] Ford ſeems to allude to the cuckold's horns. So afterwards: "—and ſo buffets himſelf on the fore-head, crying, peer out, peer out." Of the ſeaſon is a phraſe of the foreſt. MALONE.

Mr. Malone points the paſſage thus: "Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck, and of the ſeaſon too; it ſhall appear." I am ſatiſfied with the old punctuation. In The Rape of Lucrece, our poet makes his heroine compare herſelf to an "unſeaſonable doe;" and, in Blunt's Cuſtoms of Manors, p. 168, is the ſame phraſe employed by Ford: "A bukke delivered him of ſeyſſòne, by the woodmaſter and keepers of Needwoode." STEEVENS.

So, in a letter written by Queene Catharine, in 1526, Howard's Collection, Vol. I. p. 212: "We will and command you, that ye delyver or cauſe to be delyvered unto our truſty and well-beloved John Creuſſe—one buck of ſeaſon."—"The ſeaſon of the hynd or doe (ſays Manwood) doth begin at Holy-rood-day, and laſteth till Candelmas." Foreſt Laws, 1598.
MALONE.

the fox:—Let me ſtop this way firſt:—So, now uncape.[2]

Page. Good maſter Ford, be contented: you wrong yourſelf too much.

Ford. True, maſter Page.—Up, gentlemen; you ſhall ſee ſport anon: follow me, gentlemen. [Exit.

Eva. This is fery fantaſtical humours, and jealouſies.

Caius. By gar, 'tis no de faſhion of France: it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen; ſee the iſſue of his ſearch. [Exeunt Evans, Page, and Caius.

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this?

[2] —— So, now uncape.] So the folio of 1623 reads, and rightly. It is a term in fox-hunting, which ſignifies to dig out the fox when earthed. And here is as much as to ſay, take out the foul linen under which the adulterer lies hid. The Oxford editor reads—uncouple, out of pure love to an emendation.
Warburton.

Dr. Warburton ſeems to have forgot that the linen was already carried away. The alluſion in the foregoing ſentence is to the ſtopping every hole at which a fox could enter, before they uncape or turn him out of the bag in which he was brought. I ſuppoſe every one has heard of a bag-fox. Steevens.

Warburton, in his note on this paſſage, not only forgets that the foul linen had been carried away, but he alſo forgets that Ford did not at that time know that Falſtaff had been hid under it; and Steevens forgets that they had not Falſtaff in their poſſeſſion, as hunters have a bag-fox, but were to find out where he was hid. They were not to chaſe him, but to rouze him. I therefore believe that Hanmer's amendment is right, and that we ought to read—uncouple.—Ford, like a good ſportſman, firſt ſtops the earths, and then uncouples the hounds. M. Mason.

Mr. M. Maſon alſo ſeems to forget that Ford at leaſt thought he had Falſtaff ſecure in his houſe, as in a bag, and therefore ſpeaks of him in terms applicable to a bag-fox. Steevens.

Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleaſes me better, that my huſband is deceived, or ſir John.

Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in, when your huſband aſked who was in the baſket![3]

Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid he will have need of waſhing; ſo throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, diſhoneſt raſcal! I would all of the ſame ſtrain were in the ſame diſtreſs.

Mrs. Ford. I think, my huſband hath ſome ſpecial ſuſpicion of Falſtaff's being here; for I never ſaw him ſo groſs in his jealouſy till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that: And we will yet have more tricks with Falſtaff: his diſſolute diſeaſe will ſcarce obey this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we ſend that fooliſh carrion,[4] miſtreſs Quickly, to him, and excuſe his throwing into the water; and give him another hope, to betray him to another puniſhment?

Mrs. Page. We'll do it; let him be ſent for to-morrow eight o'clock, to have amends.

[3] —— who was in the baſket!] We ſhould read—what was in the baſket: for though in fact Ford has aſked no ſuch queſtion, he could never ſuſpect there was either man or woman in it. The propriety of this emendation is manifeſt from a ſubſequent paſſage, where Falſtaff tells Maſter Brook—"the jealous knave aſked them once or twice what they had in their baſket." Ritson.

[4] —— that fooliſh carrion,] The old copy has—fooliſhion carrion. The correction was made by the editor of the ſecond folio. Malone.

Re-enter FORD, PAGE, CAIUS, and Sir HUGH EVANS.

FORD. I cannot find him: may be the knave bragged of that he could not compaſs.

MRS. PAGE. Heard you that?

MRS. FORD. Ay, ay, peace:[5]—You uſe me well, maſter Ford, do you?

FORD. Ay, I do ſo.

MRS. FORD. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

FORD. Amen.

MRS. PAGE. You do yourſelf mighty wrong, maſter Ford.

FORD. Ay, ay; I muſt bear it.

EVA. If there be any pody in the houſe, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the preſſes, heaven forgive my ſins at the day of judgement!

CAIUS. By gar, nor I too; dere is no bodies.

PAGE. Fie, fie, maſter Ford! are you not aſhamed? What ſpirit, what devil ſuggeſts this imagination? I would not have your diſtemper in this kind, for the wealth of Windſor Caſtle.

FORD. 'Tis my fault, maſter Page: I ſuffer for it.

EVA. You ſuffer for a pad conſcience: your wife is as honeſt a 'omans, as I will deſires among five thouſand, and five hundred too.

[5] Ay, ay, peace:] Theſe words were recovered from the early quarto by Mr. Theobald. But in his and the other modern editions, I, the old ſpelling of the affirmative particle, has inadvertently been retained. MALONE.

Caius. By gar, I ſee 'tis an honeſt woman.

Ford. Well;—I promiſed you a dinner:—Come, come, walk in the park: I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you, why I have done this.—Come, wife;—come, miſtreſs Page; I pray you pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.

Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but, truſt me, we'll mock him. I do invite you to-morrow morning to my houſe to breakfaſt; after, we'll a birding together; I have a fine hawk for the buſh: Shall it be ſo?

Ford. Any thing.

Eva. If there is one, I ſhall make two in the company.

Caius. If there be one or two, I ſhall make-a de turd.

Eva. In your teeth:[6] for ſhame.

Ford. Pray you go, maſter Page.

Eva. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the louſy knave, mine hoſt.

Caius. Dat is good; by gar, vit all my heart.

Eva. A louſy knave; to have his gibes, and his mockeries. [Exeunt.

[6] In your teeth:] This dirty reſtoration was made by Mr. Theobald. Evans's application of the doctor's words is not in the folio. Steevens.

SCENE IV.

A Room in Page's Houſe.

Enter FENTON and Miſtreſs ANNE PAGE.

FENT. I ſee, I cannot get thy father's love;
Therefore, no more turn me to him, ſweet Nan.

ANNE. Alas! how then?

FENT. Why, thou muſt be thyſelf.
He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that, my ſtate being gall'd with my expence,
I ſeek to heal it only by his wealth:
Beſides theſe, other bars he lays before me,——
My riots paſt, my wild ſocieties;
And tells me, 'tis a thing impoſſible
I ſhould love thee, but as a property.

ANNE. May be, he tells you true.

FENT. No, heaven ſo ſpeed me in my time to come!
Albeit, I will confeſs, thy father's wealth[7]
Was the firſt motive that I woo'd thee, Anne:
Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value
Than ſtamps in gold, or ſums in ſealed bags;
And 'tis the very riches of thyſelf
That now I aim at.

[7] ——father's wealth—] Some light may be given to thoſe who ſhall endeavour to calculate the increaſe of Engliſh wealth, by obſerving, that Latymer, in the time of Edward VI. mentions it as a proof of his father's proſperity, That though but a yeoman, he gave his daughters five pounds each for her portion. At the latter end of Elizabeth, ſeven hundred pounds were ſuch a temptation to courtſhip, as made all other motives ſuſpected. Congreve makes twelve thouſand pounds more than a counterbalance to the affectation of Belinda. No poet will now fly his favourite character at leſs than fifty thouſand. JOHNSON.

Anne. Gentle maſter Fenton,
Yet ſeek my father's love: ſtill ſeek it, ſir:
If opportunity and humbleſt ſuit
Cannot attain it, why then.—Hark you hither.
[They converſe apart.

Enter Shallow, Slender, and Mrs. Quickly.

Shal. Break their talk, miſtreſs Quickly; my kinſman ſhall ſpeak for himſelf.

Slen. I'll make a ſhaft or a bolt on't:[8] ſlid, 'tis but venturing.

Shal. Be not diſmay'd.

Slen. No, ſhe ſhall not diſmay me: I care not for that,—but that I am afeard.

Quick. Hark ye; maſter Slender would ſpeak a word with you.

Anne. I come to him.—This is my father's choice.
O, what a world of vile ill-favour'd faults
Looks handſome in three hundred pounds a year.!
[Aſide.

[8] I'll make a ſhaft or a bolt on't:] To make a bolt or a ſhaft of a thing is enumerated by Ray, amongſt others, in his collection of proverbial phraſes. Ray's Proverbs, p. 179, edit. 1742.

So, in a letter from James Howell, dated 19 Aug. 1623: "The prince is preparing for his journey. I ſhall to it again cloſely when he is gone, or make a ſhaft or bolt of it." Howell's Letters, p. 146, edit. 1754. Reed.

The ſhaft was ſuch an arrow as ſkilful archers employed. The bolt in this proverb means, I think, the fool's bolt.
Malone.

A ſhaft was a general term for an arrow. A bolt was a thick ſhort one, with a knob at the end of it. It was only employed to ſhoot birds with, and was commonly called a "bird-bolt." The word occurs again in Much Ado about Nothing, Love's Labour's Loſt, and Twelfth Night. Steevens.

Quick. And how does good maſter Fenton? Pray you, a word with you.

Shal. She's coming; to her, coz. O boy, thou hadſt a father!

Slen. I had a father, miſtreſs Anne;—my uncle can tell you good jeſts of him:—Pray you, uncle, tell miſtreſs Anne the jeſt, how my father ſtole two geeſe out of a pen, good uncle.

Shal. Miſtreſs Anne, my couſin loves you.

Slen. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any woman in Gloceſterſhire.

Shal. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.

Slen. Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail,[9] under the degree of a 'ſquire.

[9] —— come cut and long-tail,] i. e. come poor, or rich, to offer himſelf as my rival. The following is ſaid to be the origin of the phraſe:—According to the foreſt laws, the dog of a man, who had no right to the privilege of chace, was obliged to cut, or law his dog among other modes of diſabling him, by depriving him of his tail. A dog ſo cut was called a cut, or curt-tail, and by contraction cur. Cut and long-tail therefore ſignified the dog of a clown, and the dog of a gentleman.

Again, in The Firſt Part of the Eighth Liberal Science, entitled Ars Adulandi, &c. deviſed and compiled by Ulpian Fulwel, 1576: "—yea, even their very dogs, Rug, Rig, and Riſbie, yea, cut and long-taile, they ſhall be welcome." Steevens.

—— come cut and long-tail,] I can ſee no meaning in this phraſe. Slender promiſes to make his miſtreſs a gentlewoman, and probably means to ſay, he will deck her in a gown of the court-cut, and with a long train or tail. In the comedy of Eaſtward Hoe, is this paſſage: "The one muſt be ladyfied forſooth, and be attired juſt to the court cut and long tayle;" which ſeems to juſtify our reading—Court cut and long tail.

Sir J. Hawkins.

—— come cut and long-tail,] This phraſe is often found in old plays, and ſeldom, if ever, with any variation. The change therefore propoſed by Sir John Hawkins cannot be received, without great violence to the text. Whenever the words occur, they always bear the ſame meaning, and that meaning is obvious enough without any explanation. The origin of the phraſe may however admit of ſome diſpute, and it is by no means certain that the account of it, here adopted by Mr. Steevens from Dr. Johnſon, is well-founded. That there ever exiſted ſuch a mode of diſqualifying dogs by the laws of the foreſt, as is here aſſerted, cannot be acknowledged without evidence, and no authority is quoted to prove that ſuch a cuſtom at any time prevailed. The writers on this ſubject are totally ſilent, as far as they have come to my knowledge. Manwood, who wrote on the Foreſt Laws before they were entirely diſuſed, mentions expeditation or cutting off three claws of the fore-foot, as the only manner of lawing dogs; and with his account, the Charter of the Foreſt ſeems to agree. Were I to offer a conjecture, I ſhould ſuppoſe that the phraſe originally referred to horſes, which might be denominated cut and long tail, as they were curtailed of this part of their bodies, or allowed to enjoy its full growth; and this might be practiſed according to the difference of their value, or the uſes to which they were put. In this view, cut and long tail would include the whole ſpecies of horſes good and bad. In ſupport of this opinion it may be added, that formerly a cut was a word of reproach in vulgar colloquial abuſe, and I believe is never to be found applied to horſes, except to thoſe of the worſt kind. After all, if any authority can be produced to countenance Dr. Johnſon's explanation, I ſhall be ready to retract every thing that is here ſaid. See alſo a note on The Match at Midnight, Dodſley's Collection of Old Plays, Vol. VII. p. 424, edit. 1780. Reed.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds jointure.

Anne. Good maſter Shallow, let him woo for himſelf.

The laſt converſation I had the honour to enjoy with Sir William Blackſtone, was on this ſubject; and by a ſeries of accurate references to the whole collection of ancient Foreſt Laws, he convinced me of our repeated error, expeditation and genuſciſſion, being the only eſtabliſhed and technical modes ever uſed for diſabling the canine ſpecies. Part of the tails of ſpaniels, indeed, are generally cut off (ornamenti gratia) while they are puppies, ſo that (admitting a looſe deſcription) every kind of dog is comprehended in the phraſe of cut and long-tail, and every rank of people in the ſame expreſſion, if metaphorically uſed. Steevens.

Shal. Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, coz: I'll leave you.

Anne. Now, maſter Slender.

Slen. Now, good miſtreſs Anne.

Anne. What is your will?

Slen. My will? od's heartlings, that's a pretty jeſt, indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not ſuch a ſickly creature, I give heaven praiſe.

Anne. I mean, maſter Slender, what would you with me?

Slen. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you: Your father, and my uncle, have made motions: if it be my luck, ſo: if not, happy man be his dole![1] They can tell you how things go, better than I can: You may aſk your father; here he comes.

Enter Page, and Miſtreſs Page.

Page. Now, maſter Slender:—Love him, daughter Anne.—
Why, how now! what does maſter Fenton here?
You wrong me, ſir, thus ſtill to haunt my houſe:
I told you, ſir, my daughter is diſpos'd of.

Fent. Nay, maſter Page, be not impatient.

Mrs. Page. Good maſter Fenton, come not to my child.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fent. Sir, will you hear me?

[1] —— happy man be his dole!] A proverbial expreſſion. See Ray's Collection, p. 116, edit. 1737. Steevens.

Page. No, good maſter Fenton.
Come, maſter Shallow; come, ſon Slender; in:—
Knowing my mind, you wrong me, maſter Fenton.
[Exeunt PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER.

Quick. Speak to miſtreſs Page.

Fent. Good miſtreſs Page, for that I love your daughter
In ſuch a righteous faſhion as I do,
Perforce, againſt all checks, rebukes, and manners,
I muſt advance the colours of my love,[2]
And not retire: Let me have your good will.

Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to yond' fool.

Mrs. Page. I mean it not; I ſeek you a better huſband.

Quick. That's my maſter, maſter doctor.

Anne. Alas, I had rather be ſet quick i' the earth,
And bowl'd to death with turnips.[3]

Mrs. Page. Come, trouble not yourſelf: Good maſter Fenton,
I will not be your friend, nor enemy:
My daughter will I queſtion how ſhe loves you,
And as I find her, ſo am I affected;
'Till then, farewell, ſir:—She muſt needs go in;
Her father will be angry.
[Exeunt Mrs. PAGE and ANNE.

[2] I muſt advance the colours of my love,] The ſame metaphor occurs in Romeo and Juliet:
"And death's pale flag is not advanced there."
STEEVENS.

[3] —— be ſet quick i' the earth,
And bowl'd to death with turnips.] This is a common proverb in the ſouthern counties. I find almoſt the ſame expreſſion in Ben Jonſon's Bartholomew Fair: "Would I had been ſet in the ground, all but the head of me, and had my brains bowl'd at. COLLINS.

Fent. Farewell, gentle miſtreſs; farewell, Nan.[4]

Quick. This is my doing now;—Nay, ſaid I, will you caſt away your child on a fool, and a phyſician?[5] Look on maſter Fenton:—this is my doing.

Fent. I thank thee; and I pray thee, once to-night[6]

[4] Farewell, gentle miſtreſs; farewell, Nan.] Miſtreſs is here uſed as a triſſyllable. Malone.

If miſtreſs can be pronounced as a triſſyllable, the line will ſtill be uncommonly defective in harmony. Perhaps a monoſyllable has been omitted, and we ſhould read—

"Farewell, my gentle miſtreſs; farewell, Nan."

Steevens.

[5] —— fool, and a phyſician?] I ſhould read—fool or a phyſician, meaning Slender and Caius. Johnson.

Sir Thomas Hanmer reads according to Dr. Johnſon's conjecture. This may be right.—Or my Dame Quickly may allude to the proverb, a man of forty is either a fool or a phyſician; but ſhe aſſerts her maſter to be both. Farmer.

So, in Microcoſmus, a maſque by Nabbes, 1637:

"Choler. Phlegm's a fool.

"Melan. Or a phyſician."

Again, in A Maidenhead well loſt, 1632:

"No matter whether I be a fool or a phyſician."

Mr. Dennis, of iraſcible memory, who altered this play, and brought it on the ſtage, in the year 1702, under the title of The Comical Gallant, (when, thanks to the alterer, it was fairly damned,) has introduced the proverb at which Mrs. Quickly's alluſion appears to be pointed. Steevens.

I believe the old copy is right, and that Mrs. Quickly means to inſinuate that ſhe had addreſſed at the ſame time both Mr. and Mrs. Page on the ſubject of their daughter's marriage, one of whom favoured Slender, and the other Caius: "—on a fool or a phyſician," would be more accurate, but and is ſufficiently ſuitable to Dame Quickly, referendo ſingula ſingulis.

Thus: "You two are going to throw away your daughter on a fool and a phyſician; you, ſir, on the former, and you, madam, on the latter." Malone

[6] —— once to-night—] i. e. ſometime to-night. So, in a

Give my ſweet Nan this ring: There's for thy pains. [Exit.

QUICK. Now heaven ſend thee good fortune! A kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for ſuch a kind heart. But yet, I would my maſter had miſtreſs Anne; or I would maſter Slender had her; or, in ſooth, I would maſter Fenton had her: I will do what I can for them all three; for ſo I have promiſed, and I'll be as good as my word; but ſpeciouſly[7] for maſter Fenton. Well, I muſt of another errand to ſir John Falſtaff from my two miſtreſſes; What a beaſt am I to ſlack it?[8] [Exit.

Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

FAL. Bardolph, I ſay,—

BARD. Here, ſir.

be thrown into the Thames? Well, if I be ſerved ſuch another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift. The rogues ſlighted me into the river with as little remorſe as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies,[9] fifteen i' the litter: and you may know by my ſize, that I have a kind of alacrity in ſinking; if the bottom were as deep as hell, I ſhould down. I had been drowned, but that the ſhore was ſhelvy and ſhallow; a death that I abhor; for the water ſwells a man; and what a thing ſhould I have been, when I had been ſwelled! I ſhould have been a mountain of mummy.

Re-enter BARDOLPH, with the wine.

BARD. Here's miſtreſs Quickly, ſir, to ſpeak with you.

FAL. Come, let me pour in ſome ſack to the Thames water; for my belly's as cold, as if I had ſwallowed ſnow-balls for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

BARD. Come in, woman.

[9] —— a bitch's blind puppies,] The old copy reads—"a blind bitch's puppies." STEEVENS.

I have ventured to tranſpoſe the adjective here, againſt the authority of the printed copies. I know, in horſes, a colt from a blind ſtallion loſes much of the value it might otherwiſe have; but are puppies ever drowned the ſooner, for coming from a blind bitch? The author certainly wrote, as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies. THEOBALD.

The tranſpoſition may be juſtified from the following paſſage in The Two Gentlemen of Verona: "—one that I ſaved from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and ſiſters went to it." STEEVENS.

Enter Mrs. QUICKLY.

QUICK. By your leave; I cry you mercy: Give your worſhip good-morrow.

FAL. Take away theſe chalices: Go brew me a pottle of ſack finely.

BARD. With eggs, ſir?

FAL. Simple of itſelf; I'll no pullet-ſperm in my brewage.—[Exit BARDOLPH.]—How now?

QUICK. Marry, ſir, I come to your worſhip from miſtreſs Ford.

FAL. Miſtreſs Ford! I have had ford enough: I was thrown into the ford: I have my belly full of ford.

QUICK. Alas the day! good heart, that was not her fault: ſhe does ſo take on with her men; they miſtook their erection.

FAL. So did I mine, to build upon a fooliſh woman's promiſe.

QUICK. Well, ſhe laments, ſir, for it, that it would yearn your heart to ſee it. Her huſband goes this morning a birding; ſhe deſires you once more to come to her between eight and nine: I muſt carry her word quickly: ſhe'll make you amends, I warrant you.

FAL. Well, I will viſit her: Tell her ſo; and bid her think, what a man is: let her conſider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

QUICK. I will tell her.

FAL. Do ſo. Between nine and ten, ſay'ſt thou?

QUICK. Eight and nine, ſir.

FAL. Well, be gone: I will not miſs her.

Quick. Peace be with you, ſir! [Exit.

Fal. I marvel, I hear not of maſter Brook; he ſent me word to ſtay within: I like his money well. O, here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Bleſs you, ſir!

Fal. Now, maſter Brook? you come to know what hath paſſed between me and Ford's wife?

Ford. That, indeed, ſir John, is my buſineſs.

Fal. Maſter Brook, I will not lie to you; I was at her houſe the hour ſhe appointed me.

Ford. And how ſped you, ſir? [1]

Fal. Very ill-favouredly, maſter Brook.

Ford. How ſo, ſir? Did ſhe change her determination?

Fal. No, maſter Brook; but the peaking cornuto her huſband, maſter Brook, dwelling in a continual 'larum of jealouſy, comes me in the inſtant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kiſſed, proteſted, and, as it were, ſpoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his heels a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and inſtigated by his diſtemper, and, forſooth, to ſearch his houſe for his wife's love.

Ford. What, while you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he ſearch for you, and could not find you?

[1] —— how ſped you, ſir?] The word how I have reſtored from the old quarto. Malone.

Fal. You ſhall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one miſtreſs Page; gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and, by her invention, and Ford's wife's diſtraction, they conveyed me into a buck-baſket.[2]

Ford. A buck-baſket!

Fal. By the Lord, a buck-baſket:[3] rammed me in with foul ſhirts and ſmocks, ſocks, foul ſtockings, and greaſy napkins; that, maſter Brook, there was the rankeſt compound of villainous ſmell, that ever offended noſtril.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you ſhall hear, maſter Brook, what I have ſuffered to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus crammed in the baſket, a couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their miſtreſs, to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchet-lane: they took me on their ſhoulders; met the jealous knave their maſter in

[2] —— and, by her invention, and Ford's wife's diſtraction, they conveyed me into a buck-baſket.] As it does not appear that his being convey'd into the buck-baſket was owing to the ſuppoſed diſtraction of Miſtreſs Ford, I have no doubt but we ſhould read—" and Ford's wife's direction," which was the fact.

M. Mason.

[3] By the Lord, a buck-baſket:] Thus the old quarto. The editor of the firſt folio, to avoid the penalty of the ſtatute of King James I. reads—Yes, &c. and the editor of the ſecond, which has been followed by the moderns, has made Falſtaff deſert his own character, and aſſume the language of a Puritan.

Malone.

The ſecond folio reads—yea; and I cannot diſcover why this affirmative ſhould be conſidered as a mark of puritaniſm Yea, at the time our comedy appeared, was in as frequent uſe as—yes; and is certainly put by Shakſpeare into the mouths of many of his characters whoſe manners are widely diſtant from thoſe of canting puriſts. Steevens.

the door; who aſked them once or twice what they had in their baſket:[4] I quaked for fear, leſt the lunatic knave would have ſearched it; but fate, ordaining he ſhould be a cuckold, held his hand. Well; on went he for a ſearch, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the ſequel, maſter Brook: I ſuffered the pangs of three ſeveral deaths:[5] firſt, an intolerable fright, to be detected with[6] a jealous rotten bell-wether: next, to be compaſſed, like a good bilbo,[7] in the circumference of a peck,[8] hilt to point, heel to head: and then, to be [4] —— what they had in their baſket:] So, before: "What a taking was he in, when your huſband aſk'd who was in the baſket!" but Ford had aſked no ſuch queſtion. Our author ſeems ſeldom to have reviſed his plays. MALONE.

Falſtaff, in the preſent inſtance, may purpoſely exaggerate his alarms, that he may thereby enhance his merit with Ford, at whoſe purſe his deſigns are ultimately levelled. STEEVENS.

[5] —— ſeveral deaths:] Thus the folio and the moſt correct of the quartos. The firſt quarto reads—egregious deaths.
STEEVENS.

[6] —— detected with—] Thus the old copies. With was ſometimes uſed for of. So, a little after:

"I ſooner will ſuſpect the ſun with cold."

Detected of a jealous, &c. would have been the common grammar of the times. The modern editors read—by.
STEEVENS.

[7] —— bilbo,] A bilbo is a Spaniſh blade, of which the excellence is flexibleneſs and elaſticity. JOHNSON.

Bilbo, from Bilboa, a city of Biſcay, where the beſt blades are made. STEEVENS.

[8] —— of a peck,] Thus the folio. The old quarto reads—of a pack; and perhaps rightly. Pedlar's packs are ſometimes of ſuch a ſize as to admit of Falſtaff's deſcription; but who but a Lilliputian could be "compaſſed in a peck?" MALONE.

Falſtaff deſignedly exaggerates the inconveniences of his ſituation. When he tells us, that formerly he "was not an eagle's talon in the waiſt, and could have crept through an alderman's thumb-ring," are we to ſuppoſe he has a literal ftopped in, like a ftrong diftillation, with ftinking clothes that fretted in their own greafe: think of that,—a man of my kidney,[9]—think of that; that am as fubject to heat, as butter; a man of continual diffolution and thaw; it was a miracle, to 'fcape fuffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half ftewed in greafe, like a Dutch difh, to be thrown into the Thames, and cooled, glowing hot, in that furge, like a horfe fhoe; think of that,—hiffing hot,—think of that, mafter Brook.

Ford. In good fadnefs, fir, I am forry that for my fake you have fuffered all this. My fuit then is defperate; you'll undertake her no more.

Fal. Mafter Brook, I will be thrown into Ætna, as I have been into Thames, ere I will leave her thus. Her hufband is this morning gone a birding: I have received from her another embaffy of meeting; 'twixt eight and nine is the hour, mafter Brook.

Ford. 'Tis paft eight already, fir.

Fal. Is it? I will then addrefs me[1] to my ap-meaning?—and may not fome future critick enquire of us whether we ever faw any pedlar's pack of fuch a fize as would contain a perfon of Falftaff's bulk?

Befides;—to try the flexibility of fwords, it might have been ufual to incurvate them within a wooden circuit like that of a peck meafure; but who would have thought of making the fame experiment within a pedlar's pack? STEEVENS.

[9] —— kidney,] Kidney in this phrafe now fignifies kind or qualities, but Falftaff means, a man whofe kidnies are as fat as mine. JOHNSON.

[1] —— addrefs me—] i. e. make myfelf ready. So, in King Henry V:

"To-morrow for our march we are addreft."

Again, in Macbeth:

"But they did fay their prayers, and addrefs'd them
"Again to fleep." STEEVENS.

pointment. Come to me at your convenient leiſure, and you ſhall know how I ſpeed; and the concluſion ſhall be crowned with your enjoying her: Adieu. You ſhall have her, maſter Brook; maſter Brook, you ſhall cuckold Ford. [Exit.

Ford. Hum! ha! is this a viſion? is this a dream? do I ſleep? Maſter Ford, awake; awake, maſter Ford; there's a hole made in your beſt coat, maſter Ford. This 'tis to be married! this 'tis to have linen, and buck-baſkets!—Well, I will proclaim myſelf what I am: I will now take the lecher; he is at my houſe: he cannot 'ſcape me; 'tis impoſſible he ſhould; he cannot creep into a halfpenny purſe, nor into a pepper-box: but, leſt the devil that guides him ſhould aid him, I will ſearch impoſſible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet to be what I would not, ſhall not make me tame: if I have horns to make one mad, let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad.[2] [Exit.

[2] ——I'll be horn mad.] There is no image which our author appears ſo fond of, as that of cuckold's horns. Scarcely a light character is introduced that does not endeavour to produce merriment by ſome alluſion to horned huſbands. As he wrote his plays for the ſtage rather than the preſs, he perhaps reviewed them ſeldom and did not obſerve this repetition; or finding the jeſt, however frequent, ſtill ſucceſsful, did not think correction neceſſary. JOHNSON.

ACT IV. SCENE I.[3]

The Street.

Enter Mrs. PAGE, Mrs. QUICKLY, and WILLIAM.

MRS. PAGE. Is he at maſter Ford's already, think'ſt thou?

QUICK. Sure, he is by this; or will be preſently: but truly, he is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water. Miſtreſs Ford deſires you to come ſuddenly.

MRS. PAGE. I'll be with her by and by; I'll but bring my young man here to ſchool: Look, where his maſter comes; 'tis a playing-day, I ſee.

Enter Sir HUGH EVANS.

How now, ſir Hugh? no ſchool to-day?

EVA. No; maſter Slender is let the boys leave to play.

QUICK. Bleſſing of his heart!

MRS. PAGE. Sir Hugh, my huſband ſays, my

[3] This is a very trifling ſcene, of no uſe to the plot, and I ſhould think of no great delight to the audience; but Shakſpeare beſt knew what would pleaſe. JOHNSON.

We may ſuppoſe this ſcene to have been a very entertaining one to the audience for which it was written. Many of the old plays exhibit pedants inſtructing their ſcholars. Marſton has a very long one in his What you will, between a ſchoolmaſter, and Holofernes, Nathaniel, &c. his pupils. The title of this play was perhaps borrowed by Shakſpeare, to join to that of Twelfth Night. What you will appeared in 1607. Twelfth Night was firſt printed in 1623. STEEVENS.

ſon profits nothing in the world at his book; I pray you, aſk him ſome queſtions in his accidence.

Eva. Come hither, William; hold up your head; come.

Mrs. Page. Come on, ſirrah; hold up your head; anſwer your maſter, be not afraid.

Eva. William, how many numbers is in nouns?

Will. Two.

Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more; becauſe they ſay, od's nouns.

Eva. Peace your tattlings. What is fair, William?

Will. Pulcher.

Quick. Poulcats! there are fairer things than poulcats, ſure.

Eva. You are a very ſimplicity 'oman; I pray you, peace. What is lapis, William?

Will. A ſtone.

Eva. And what is a ſtone, William.

Will. A pebble.

Eva. No, it is lapis; I pray you remember in your prain.

Will. Lapis.

Eva. That is good William. What is he, William, that does lend articles?

Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun; and be thus declined, Singulariter, nominativo, hic, hæc, hoc.

Eva. Nominativo, hig, hag, hog;—pray you, mark: genitivo, hujus: Well, what is your accuſative caſe?

Will. Accuſativo, hinc.

Eva. I pray you, have your remembrance, child; Accuſativo, hing, hang, hog.

Quick. Hang hog is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.

Eva. Leave your prabbles, 'oman. What is the focative caſe, William?

Will. O—vocativo, O.

Eva. Remember, William; focative is, caret.

Quick. And that's a good root.

Eva. 'Oman, forbear.

Mrs. Page. Peace.

Eva. What is your genitive caſe plural, William?

Will. Genitive caſe?

Eva. Ay.

Will. Genitive,—horum, harum, horum.[4]

Quick. 'Vengeance of Jenny's caſe! fie on her! —never name her, child, if ſhe be a whore.

Eva. For ſhame, 'oman.

Quick. You do ill to teach the child ſuch words: he teaches him to hick and to hack,[5] which they'll do faſt enough of themſelves; and to call horum: —fie upon you!

Eva. 'Oman, art thou lunatics? haſt thou no underſtandings for thy caſes, and the numbers of [4] —— horum, harum, horum.] Taylor, the water-poet, has borrowed this jeſt, ſuch as it is, in his character of a ſtrumpet:

"And comes to horum, harum, whorum, then
"She proves a great proficient among men." Steevens.

[5] —— to hick and to hack,] Sir William Blackſtone thought, that this, in Dame Quickly's language, ſignifies "to ſtammer or heſitate, as boys do in ſaying their leſſons;" but Mr. Steevens, with more probability, ſuppoſes that it ſignifies, in her dialect, to do miſchief. Malone.

the genders? Thou art as foolish christian creatures as I would desires.

Mrs. Page. Pr'ythee hold thy peace.

Eva. Shew me now, William, some declensions of your pronouns.

Will. Forsooth, I have forgot.

Eva. It is ki, kæ, cod; if you forget your kies, your kæs,[6] and your cods, you must be preeches.[7] Go your ways, and play, go.

Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar, than I thought he was.

Eva. He is a good sprag[8] memory. Farewell, mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. Adieu, good sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Hugh.] Get you home, boy.—Come, we stay too long. [Exeunt.

[6] ——your kies, your kæs, &c.] All this ribaldry is likewise found in Taylor the water-poet. See fol. edit. p. 106. Steevens.

[7] ——you must be preeches.] Sir Hugh means to say—you must be breeched, i. e. flogged. To breech is to flog. So, in The Taming of the Shrew:

"I am no breeching scholar in the schools."

Again, in The Humorous Lieutenant, by Beaumont and Fletcher:

"Cry like a breech'd boy, not eat a bit." Steevens.

[8] ——sprag—] I am told that this word is still used by the common people in the neighbourhood of Bath, where it signifies ready, alert, sprightly, and is pronounced as if it was written—sprack. Steevens.

A spackt lad or wench, says Ray, is apt to learn, ingenious. Reed

SCENE II.

A Room in Ford's Houſe.

Enter FALSTAFF and Mrs. FORD.

FAL. Miſtreſs Ford, your ſorrow hath eaten up my ſufferance: I ſee, you are obſequious in your love,[9] and I profeſs requital to a hair's breadth; not only, miſtreſs Ford, in the ſimple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it. But are you ſure of your huſband now?

MRS. FORD. He's a birding, ſweet ſir John.

MRS. PAGE. [Within.] What hoa, goſſip Ford! what hoa!

MRS. FORD. Step into the chamber, ſir John.

[Exit FALSTAFF.

Enter Mrs. PAGE.

MRS. PAGE. How now, ſweetheart? who's at home beſides yourſelf?

MRS. FORD. Why, none but mine own people.

MRS. PAGE. Indeed?

MRS. FORD. No, certainly;—Speak louder.

[Aſide.

MRS. PAGE. Truly, I am ſo glad you have nobody here.

[9] ——your ſorrow hath eaten up my ſufferance: I ſee, you are obſequious in your love,] So, in Hamlet:

" ——for ſome term
" To do obſequious ſorrow."

The epithet obſequious refers, in both inſtances, to the ſeriouſneſs with which obſequies, or funeral ceremonies, are performed. STEEVENS.

Mrs. Ford. Why?

Mrs. Page. Why, woman, your hufband is in his old lunes[1] again: he fo takes on[2] yonder with my hufband; fo rails againft all married mankind; fo curfes all Eve's daughters, of what complexion foever; and fo buffets himfelf on the forehead, crying, Peer-out, peer-out![3] that any madnefs, I ever yet beheld, feemed but tamenefs, civility, and patience, to this his diftemper he is in now: I am glad the fat knight is not here.

Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?

Mrs. Page. Of none but him; and fwears, he was carried out, the laft time he fearched for him, in a bafket: protefts to my hufband, he is now here; and hath drawn him and the reft of their company from their fport, to make another experiment of his fufpicion: but I am glad the knight is not here; now he fhall fee his own foolery.

Mrs. Ford. How near is he, miftrefs Page?

[1] —— lunes—] i. e. lunacy, frenzy. See a note on The Winter's Tale, Act II. fc. ii. The folio reads—lines, inftead of lunes. The elder quartos—his old vaine again. STEEVENS.

The correction was made by Mr. Theobald. MALONE.

[2] —— he fo takes on—] To take on, which is now ufed for to grieve, feems to be ufed by our author for to rage. Perhaps it was applied to any paffion. JOHNSON.

It is ufed by Nafh in Pierce Pennilefs his Supplication to the Devil, 1592, in the fame fenfe: "Some will take on like a madman, if they fee a pig come to the table." MALONE.

[3] —— Peer-out!] That is, appear horns. Shakfpeare is at his old lunes. JOHNSON.

Shakfpeare here refers to the practice of children, when they call on a fnail to pufh forth his horns:

"Peer out, peer out, peer out of your hole,
"Or elfe I'll beat you black as a coal." HENLEY.

Mrs. Page. Hard by; at ſtreet end; he will be here anon.

Mrs. Ford. I am undone!—the knight is here.

Mrs. Page. Why, then you are utterly ſhamed, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you?—Away with him, away with him; better ſhame than murder.

Mrs. Ford. Which way ſhould he go? how ſhould I beſtow him? Shall I put him into the baſket again?

Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. No, I'll come no more i' the baſket: May I not go out, ere he come?

Mrs. Page. Alas, three of maſter Ford's brothers watch the door with piſtols,[4] that none ſhall iſſue out; otherwiſe you might ſlip away ere he came. But what make you here?[5]

Fal. What ſhall I do?—I'll creep up into the chimney.

Mrs. Ford. There they always uſe to diſcharge their birding-pieces: Creep into the kiln-hole.[6]

[4] —— watch the door with piſtols,] This is one of Shakſpeare's anachroniſms. Douce.

Thus, in Pericles, Prince of Tyre, Thaliard ſays:
" ———— if I
" Can get him once within my piſtol's length," &c.
and Thaliard was one of the courtiers of Antiochus the third, who reigned 200 years before Chriſt; a period rather too early for the uſe of piſtols. Steevens.

[5] But what make you here?] i. e. what do you here? Malone.

The ſame phraſe occurs in the firſt ſcene of As you like it:
" Now, ſir! what make you here?" Steevens.

[6] —— creep into the kiln-hole.] I ſuſpect, theſe words be-

Fal. Where is it?

Mrs. Ford. He will ſeek there, on my word. Neither preſs, coffer, cheſt, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abſtract[7] for the remembrance of ſuch places, and goes to them by his note: There is no hiding you in the houſe.

Fal. I'll go out then.

Mrs. Page. If you go[8] out in your own ſemblance, you die, ſir John. Unleſs you go out diſguiſed,—

Mrs. Ford. How might we diſguiſe him?

Mrs. Page. Alas the day, I know not. There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwiſe, he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and ſo eſcape.

Fal. Good hearts, deviſe ſomething: any extremity, rather than a miſchief.

Mrs. Ford. My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.

Mrs. Page. On my word, it will ſerve him; long to Mrs. Page. See Mrs. Ford's next ſpeech. That, however, may be a ſecond thought; a correction of her former propoſal: but the other ſuppoſition is more probable. MALONE.

[7] —— an abſtract——] i. e. a liſt, an inventory. STEEVENS.

Rather, a ſhort note or deſcription. So, in Hamlet:

"The abſtract, and brief chronicle of the times."

MALONE.

[8] Mrs. Page. If you go &c.] In the firſt folio, by the miſtake of the compoſitor, the name of Mrs. Ford is prefixed to this ſpeech and the next. For the correction now made I am anſwerable. The editor of the ſecond folio put the two ſpeeches together, and gave them both to Mrs. Ford. The threat of danger from without aſcertains the firſt to belong to Mrs. Page. See her ſpeech on Falſtaff's re-entrance. MALONE.

ſhe's as big as he is: and there's her thrum'd hat, and her muffler too:[9] Run up, ſir John.

Mrs. Ford. Go, go, ſweet ſir John: miſtreſs Page and I, will look ſome linen for your head.

Mrs. Page. Quick, quick; we'll come dreſs you ſtraight: put on the gown the while.

[Exit Falstaff.

Mrs. Ford. I would, my huſband would meet him in this ſhape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford; he ſwears, ſhe's a witch; forbade her my houſe, and hath threatened to beat her.

Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy huſband's cudgel; and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards!

Mrs. Ford. But is my huſband coming?

Mrs. Page. Ay, in good ſadneſs, is he; and talks of the baſket too, howſoever he hath had intelligence.

Mrs. Ford. We'll try that; for I'll appoint my [9] —— her thrum'd hat, and her muffler too:] The thrum is the end of a weaver's warp, and, we may ſuppoſe, was uſed for the purpoſe of making coarſe hats. So, in A Midſummer Night's Dream:

"O fates, come, come,
"Cut thread and thrum."

A muffler was ſome part of dreſs that covered the face. So, in The Cobler's Prophecy, 1594:

"Now is ſhe bare fac'd to be ſeen:—ſtrait on her Muffler goes."

Again, in Laneham's account of Queen Elizabeth's entertainment at Kenelworth caſtle, 1575: "—his mother lent him a nu mufflar for a napkin, that was tyed to hiz gyrdl for lozyng."
Steevens.

The muffler was a part of female attire, which only covered the lower half of the face. Douce.

A thrum'd hat was made of very coarſe woollen cloth. See Minſheu's Dict. 1617, in v. Thrum'd is, formed of thrums.
Malone.

men to carry the baſket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did laſt time.

Mrs. Page. Nay, but he'll be here preſently: let's go dreſs him like the witch of Brentford.

Mrs. Ford. I'll firſt direct my men, what they ſhall do with the baſket. Go up, I'll bring linen for him ſtraight. [Exit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, diſhoneſt varlet! we cannot miſuſe him enough.[1]

We'll leave a proof, by that which we will do,
Wives may be merry, and yet honeſt too:
We do not act, that often jeſt and laugh;
'Tis old but true, Still ſwine eat all the draff.[2]
[Exit.

Re-enter Mrs. Ford, with two Servants.

Mrs. Ford. Go, ſirs, take the baſket again on your ſhoulders; your maſter is hard at door; if he bid you ſet it down, obey him: quickly, deſpatch. [Exit.

1. Serv. Come, come, take it up.

2. Serv. Pray heaven, it be not full of the knight[3] again.

[1] —— miſuſe him enough.] Him, which was accidentally omitted in the firſt folio, was inſerted by the editor of the ſecond. Malone.

[2] —— Still ſwine &c.] This is a proverbial ſentence. See Ray's Collection. Malone.

[3] —— of the knight—] The only authentick copy, the firſt folio, reads—"full of knight." The editor of the ſecond—of the knight; I think, unneceſſarily. We have juſt had—"hard at door." Malone.

At door, is a frequent provincial ellipſis. Full of knight is a phraſe without example; and the preſent ſpeaker (one of Ford's drudges) was not meant for a dealer in groteſque language. I therefore read with the ſecond folio. Steevens.

1. Serv. I hope not; I had as lief bear ſo much lead.

Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, maſter Page, have you any way then to unfool me again?—Set down the baſket, villain:—Somebody call my wife:——You, youth in a baſket, come out here![4]—O, you panderly raſcals! there's a knot, a ging,[5] a pack, a conſpiracy againſt me: Now ſhall the devil be ſhamed. What! wife, I ſay! come, come forth; behold what honeſt clothes you ſend forth to bleaching.

Page. Why, this paſſes![6] Maſter Ford, you are not to go looſe any longer; you muſt be pinioned.

[4] You, youth in a baſket, come out here!] This reading I have adopted from the early quarto. The folio has only—" Youth in a baſket!" Malone.

[5] —— a ging,] Old copy—gin. Ging was the word intended by the poet, and was anciently uſed for gang. So, in Ben Jonſon's New Inn, 1631:

" The ſecret is, I would not willingly
" See or be ſeen to any of this ging,
" Eſpecially the lady."

Again, in The Alchemiſt, 1610:

" —— Sure he has got
" Some baudy picture to call all this ging;
" The friar and the boy, or the new motion," &c.

Malone.

The ſecond folio [1632] (ſo ſeverely cenſured by Mr. Malone, and yet ſo often quoted by him as the ſource of emendations,) reads—ging. Milton, in his Smectymnuus, employs the ſame word: " — I am met with a whole ging of words and phraſes not mine." See edit. 1753, Vol. I. p. 119. Steevens.

[6] —— this paſſes!] The force of the phraſe I did not underſtand, when a former impreſſion of Shakſpeare was prepared; and therefore gave theſe two words as part of an imperfect ſen-

Eva. Why, this is lunatics! this is mad as a mad dog!

Shal. Indeed, maſter Ford, this is not well; indeed.

Enter Mrs. Ford.

Ford. So ſay I too, ſir.—Come hither, miſtreſs Ford; miſtreſs Ford, the honeſt woman, the modeſt wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her huſband!—I ſuſpect without cauſe, miſtreſs, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witneſs, you do, if you ſuſpect me in any diſhoneſty.

Ford. Well ſaid, brazen-face; hold it out.——Come forth, ſirrah. [Pulls the clothes out of the baſket.

Page. This paſſes!

Mrs. Ford. Are you not aſhamed? let the clothes alone.

Ford. I ſhall find you anon.

Eva. 'Tis unreaſonable! Will you take up your wife's clothes? Come away.

Ford. Empty the baſket, I ſay.

Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why,—

Ford. Maſter Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my houſe yeſterday in this tence. One of the obſolete ſenſes of the verb, to paſs, is to go beyond bounds.

So, in Sir Clyomon, &c. Knight of the Golden Shield, 1599:

"I have ſuch a deal of ſubſtance here when Brian's men are ſlaine,
"That it paſſeth. O that I had while to ſtay!"

Again, in the tranſlation of the Menæchmi, 1595: "This paſſeth! that I meet with none, but thus they vexe me with ſtrange ſpeeches." Steevens.

baſket: Why may not he be there again? In my houſe I am ſure he is: my intelligence is true; my jealouſy is reaſonable: Pluck me out all the linen.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he ſhall die a flea's death.

Shal. By my fidelity, this is not well, maſter Ford; this wrongs you.[7]

Eva. Maſter Ford, you muſt pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is jealouſies.

Ford. Well, he's not here I ſeek for.

Page. No, nor no where elſe, but in your brain.

Ford. Help to ſearch my houſe this one time: if I find not what I ſeek, ſhow no colour for my extremity, let me for ever be your table-ſport; let them ſay of me, As jealous as Ford, that ſearched a hollow walnut for his wife's leman.[8] Satisfy me once more; once more ſearch with me.

Mrs. Ford. What hoa, miſtreſs Page! come you, and the old woman, down; my huſband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman! What old woman's that?

Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brentford.

[7] —— this wrongs you.] This is below your character, unworthy of your underſtanding, injurious to your honour. So, in Th Taming of the Shrew, Bianca, being ill treated by her rugged ſiſter, ſays:

"You wrong me much, indeed you wrong yourſelf."

JOHNSON.

[8] —— his wife's leman.] Leman, i. e. lover, is derived from leef, Dutch, beloved, and man. STEEVENS.

Ford. A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean! Have I not forbid her my houſe? She comes of errands, does ſhe? We are ſimple men; we do not know what's brought to paſs under the profeſſion of fortune-telling. She works by charms,[9] by ſpells, by the figure, and ſuch daubery[1] as this is; beyond our element: we know nothing.——Come down, you witch, you hag you; come down I ſay.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, ſweet huſband;—good gentlemen, let him not ſtrike the old woman.[2]

[9] She works by charms, &c.] Concerning ſome old woman of Brentford, there are ſeveral ballads; among the reſt, Julian of Brentford's laſt Will and Teſtament, 1599. Steevens.

This without doubt was the perſon here alluded to; for in the early quarto Mrs. Ford ſays—"my maid's aunt, Gillian of Brentford, hath a gown above." So alſo, in Weſtward Hoe, a comedy, 1607: "I doubt that old hag, Gillian of Brentford, has bewitched me." Malone.

Mr. Steevens, perhaps, has been miſled by the vague expreſſion of the Stationers' book. Iyl of Breyntford's Teſtament, to which he ſeems to allude, was written by Robert, and printed by William Copland, long before 1599. But this, the only publication, it is believed, concerning the above lady, at preſent known, is certainly no ballad. Ritson.

Julian of Brainford's Teſtament is mentioned by Laneham in his letter from Killingwoorth Caſtle, 1575, amongſt many other works of eſtabliſhed notoriety. Henley.

[1] ——ſuch daubery—] Dauberies are counterfeits; diſguiſes. So, in King Lear, Edgar ſays: "I cannot daub it further."
Again, in K. Richard III:

"So ſmooth he daub'd his vice with ſhew of virtue."
Steevens.

Perhaps rather—ſuch groſs falſhood, and impoſition. In our author's time a dauber and a plaſterer were ſynonymous. See Minſheu's Dict. in v. "To lay it on with a trowel" was a phraſe of that time, applied to one who uttered a groſs lie. Malone.

[2] —— let him not ſtrike the old woman.] Not, which was inadvertently omitted in the firſt folio, was ſupplied by the ſecond. Malone.

Enter FALSTAFF in women's clothes, led by Mrs. PAGE.

MRS. PAGE. Come, mother Prat, come, give me your hand.

FORD. I'll prat her:——Out of my door, you witch! [beats him] you rag,[3] you baggage, you polecat, you ronyon![4] out! out! I'll conjure you, I'll fortune-tell you. [Exit FALSTAFF.

MRS. PAGE. Are you not aſhamed? I think, you have killed the poor woman.

MRS. FORD. Nay, he will do it:—'Tis a goodly credit for you.

FORD. Hang her, witch!

EVA. By yea and no, I think, the 'oman is a witch indeed: I like not when a 'oman has a great peard; I ſpy a great peard under her muffler.[5]

[3] ——you rag,] This opprobrious term is again uſed in Timon of Athens: " —thy father, that poor rag—." Mr. Rowe unneceſſarily diſmiſſed this word, and introduced hag in its place. MALONE.

[4] ——ronyon!] Ronyon, applied to a woman, means, as far as can be traced, much the ſame with ſcall or ſcab ſpoken of a man. JOHNSON.

From Rogneux, Fr. So, in Macbeth:
" Aroint thee, witch, the rump-fed ronyon cries."
Again, in As you like it: " the roynish clown." STEEVENS.

[5] ——I ſpy a great peard under her muffler.] One of the marks of a ſuppoſed witch was a beard.
So, in The Duke's Miſtreſs, 1638:
" ——a chin, without all controverſy, good
" To go a fiſhing with; a witches beard on't."
See alſo Macbeth, Act I. ſc. iii.
The muffler (as I have learnt ſince our laſt ſheet was worked off) was a thin piece of linen that covered the lips and chin. See the figures of two market-women, at the bottom of G.

Ford. Will you follow, gentlemen? I beſeech you, follow; ſee but the iſſue of my jealouſy: if I cry out thus upon no trail,[6] never truſt me when I open again.

[Exeunt Page, Ford, Shallow, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Truſt me, he beat him moſt pitifully.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, by the maſs, that he did not; be beat him moſt unpitifully, methought.

Mrs. Page. I'll have the cudgel hallowed, and hang o'er the altar; it hath done meritorious ſervice.

Mrs. Ford. What think you? May we, with the warrant of womanhood, and the witneſs of a good conſcience, purſue him with any further revenge?

Hoefnagle's curious plate of Nonſuch, in Braunii Civitates Orbis Terrarum; Part V. Plate I. See likewiſe the bottom of the view of Shrewſbury, &c. ibid. Part VI. Plate II. where the female peaſant ſeems to wear the ſame article of dreſs. See alſo a country-woman at the corner of Speed's map of England. Steevens.

As the ſecond ſtratagem, by which Falſtaff eſcapes, is much the groſſer of the two, I wiſh it had been practiſed firſt. It is very unlikely that Ford, having been ſo deceived before, and knowing that he had been deceived, would ſuffer him to eſcape in ſo ſlight a diſguiſe. Johnson.

So, in Hamlet:

"How cheerfully on the falſe trail they cry:
"Oh! this is counter, ye falſe Daniſh dogs!"

Steevens.

Mrs. Page. The ſpirit of wantonneſs is, ſure, ſcared out of him; if the devil have him not in fee ſimple, with fine and recovery,[7] he will never, I think, in the way of waſte, attempt us again.[8]

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our huſbands how we have ſerved him?

Mrs. Page. Yes, by all means; if it be but to ſcrape the figures out of your huſband's brains. If they can find in their hearts, the poor unvirtuous fat knight ſhall be any further afflicted, we two will ſtill be the miniſters.

Mrs. Ford. I'll warrant, they'll have him publickly ſhamed: and, methinks, there would be no period[9] to the jeſt, ſhould he not be publickly ſhamed.

Mrs. Page. Come, to the forge with it then, ſhape it: I would not have things cool. [Exeunt.

[7] ——if the devil have him not in fee-ſimple, with fine and recovery,] Our author had been long enough in an attorney's office, to learn that fee-ſimple is the largeſt eſtate, and fine and recovery the ſtrongeſt aſſurance, known to Engliſh law. RITSON.

[8] ——in the way of waſte, attempt us again.] i. e. he will not make further attempts to ruin us, by corrupting our virtue, and deſtroying our reputation. STEEVENS.

[9] ——no period—] Shakſpeare ſeems, by no period, to mean, no proper cataſtrophe. Of this Hanmer was ſo well perſuaded, that he thinks it neceſſary to read—no right period. STEEVENS.

Our author often uſes period, for end or concluſion. So, in King Richard III:

"O, let me make the period to my curſe." MALONE.

SCENE III.

A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter HOST and BARDOLPH.

BARD. Sir, the Germans deſire to have three of your horſes: the duke himſelf will be to-morrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

HOST. What duke ſhould that be, comes ſo ſecretly? I hear not of him in the court: Let me ſpeak with the gentlemen; they ſpeak Engliſh?

BARD. Ay, ſir; I'll call them to you.[1]

HOST. They ſhall have my horſes; but I'll make them pay, I'll ſauce them: they have had my houſes a week at command; I have turned away my other gueſts: they muſt come off;[2] I'll ſauce them: Come. [Exeunt.

[1] ——I'll call them to you.] Old copy—I'll call him. Corrected in the third folio. MALONE.

[2] ——they muſt come off;] To come off, is, to pay. In this ſenſe it is uſed by Maſſinger, in The Unnatural Combat, Act IV. ſc. ii. where a wench, demanding money of the father to keep his baſtard, ſays: "Will you come off, ſir?" Again, in Decker's If this be not a good Play, the Devil is in it, 1612:

"Do not your gallants come off roundly then?"

Again, in Heywood's If you know not me you know Nobody, 1633, p. 2: "—and then if he will not come off, carry him to the compter." Again, in A Trick to catch the Old One, 1608:

"Hark in thine ear:—will he come off, think'ſt thou, and pay my debts?"

Again, in The Return from Parnaſſus, 1606:

"It is his meaning I ſhould come off."

Again, in The Widow, by Ben Jonſon, Fletcher, and Middleton, 1652: "I am forty dollars better for that: an 'twould

SCENE IV.

A Room in Ford's Houſe.

Enter PAGE, FORD, Mrs. PAGE, Mrs. FORD, and Sir HUGH EVANS.

EVA. 'Tis one of the peſt diſcretions of a 'oman as ever I did look upon.

PAGE. And did he ſend you both theſe letters at an inſtant?

MRS. PAGE. Within a quarter of an hour.

come off quicker, 'twere nere a whit the worſe for me." Again, in A merye Jeſt of a Man called Howleglas, bl. l. no date: "Therefore come of lightly, and geve me my mony."

STEEVENS.

"They muſt come off, (ſays mine hoſt,) I'll ſauce them." This paſſage has exerciſed the criticks. It is altered by Dr. Warburton; but there is no corruption, and Mr. Steevens has rightly interpreted it. The quotation, however, from Maſſinger, which is referred to likewiſe by Mr. Edwards in his Canons of Criticiſm, ſcarcely ſatisfied Mr. Heath, and ſtill leſs Mr. Capell, who gives us, "They muſt not come off." It is ſtrange that any one, converſant in old language, ſhould heſitate at this phraſe. Take another quotation or two, that the difficulty may be effectually removed for the future. In John Heywood's play of The Four P's, the pedlar ſays:

"——If you be willing to buy,
"Lay down money, come off quickly."

In The Widow, by Jonſon, Fletcher, and Middleton: "—if he will come off roundly, he'll ſet him free too." And again, in Fennor's Comptor's Commonwealth: "—except I would come off roundly, I ſhould be bar'd of that priviledge," &c.

FARMER.

The phraſe is uſed by Chaucer, Friar's Tale, 338 edit. Urry:

"Come off and let me riden haſtily,
"Give me twelve pence; I may no longer tarie."

TYRWHITT.

Ford. Pardon me, wife: Henceforth do what thou wilt;
I rather will ſuſpect the ſun with cold,[3]
Than thee with wantonneſs: now doth thy honour ſtand,
In him that was of late an heretick,
As firm as faith.

Page. 'Tis well, 'tis well; no more.
Be not as éxtreme in ſubmiſſion,
As in offence;
But let our plot go forward: let our wives
Yet once again, to make us publick ſport,
Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow,
Where we may take him, and diſgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way than that they ſpoke of.

Page. How! to ſend him word they'll meet him in the park at midnight! fie, fie; he'll never come.

Eva. You ſay, he has been thrown into the [3] I rather will ſuſpect the ſun with cold,] Thus the modern editions. The old ones read—with gold, which may mean, I rather will ſuſpect the ſun can be a thief, or be corrupted by a bribe, than thy honour can be betrayed to wantonneſs. Mr. Rowe ſilently made the change, which ſucceeding editors have as ſilently adopted. A thought of a ſimilar kind occurs in Henry IV. P. I:

"Shall the bleſſed ſun of heaven prove a micher?"

I have not, however, diſpláced Mr. Rowe's emendation; as a zeal to preſerve old readings, without diſtinction, may ſometimes prove as injurious to our author's reputation, as a deſire to introduce new ones, without attention to the quaintneſs of phraſeology then in uſe. STEEVENS.

So, in Weſtward for Smelts, a pamphlet which Shakſpeare certainly had read: "I anſwere in the behalfe of one, who is as free from diſloyaltie, as is the ſunne from darkneſs, or the fire from COLD." A huſband is ſpeaking of his wife. MALONE.

rivers; and has been grievoufly peaten, as an old 'oman: methinks, there fhould be terrors in him, that he fhould not come; methinks, his flefh is punifhed, he fhall have no defires.

Page. So think I too.

Mrs. Ford. Devife but how you'll ufe him when he comes,
And let us two devife to bring him thither.

Mrs. Page. There is an old tale goes, that Herne the hunter,
Sometime a keeper here in Windfor foreft,
Doth all the winter time, at ftill midnight,
Walk round about an oak, with great ragg'd horns;
And there he blafts the tree, and takes the cattle;[4]
And makes milch-kine yield blood, and fhakes a chain
In a moft hideous and dreadful manner:
You have heard of fuch a fpirit; and well you know,
The fuperftitious idle-headed eld[5]

[4] —— and takes the cattle;] To take, in Shakfpeare, fignifies to feize or ftrike with a difeafe, to blaft. So, in Lear:
" —— Strike her young bones,
" Ye taking airs, with lamenefs." Johnson.

So, in Markham's Treatife of Horfes, 1595, chap. 8: "Of a horfe that is taken. A horfe that is bereft of his feeling, mooving or ftyrring, is faid to be taken, and in footh fo he is, in that he is arrefted by fo villainous a difeafe; yet fome farriors, not well underftanding the ground of the difeafe, confter the word taken, to be ftricken by fome planet or evil-fpirit, which is falfe," &c. Thus our poet:
" —— No planets ftrike, no fairy takes." Tollet.

[5] —— idle-headed eld—] Eld feems to be ufed here, for what our poet calls in Macbeth—the olden time. It is employed in Meafure for Meafure, to exprefs age and decrepitude:
" —— doth beg the alms
" Of palfied eld." Steevens.

I rather imagine it is ufed here for old perfons. Malone.

HERNES OAK.

The Merry Wives of Windsor. Act IIII. Scene IIII.

Received, and did deliver to our age,
This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

Page. Why, yet there want not many, that do fear
In deep of night to walk by this Herne's oak:
But what of this?

Mrs. Ford. Marry, this is our device;
That Falſtaff at that oak ſhall meet with us,
Diſguiſed like Herne, with huge horns on his head.[6]

Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come,
And in this ſhape: When you have brought him thither,
What ſhall be done with him? what is your plot?

Mrs. Page. That likewiſe have we thought upon, and thus:
Nan Page my daughter, and my little ſon,
And three or four more of their growth, we'll dreſs
Like urchins, ouphes,[7] and fairies, green and white,
With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands; upon a ſudden,
As Falſtaff, ſhe, and I, are newly met,
Let them from forth a ſaw-pit ruſh at once

[6] Diſguiſed like Herne, with huge horns on his head.] This line, which is not in the folio, was properly reſtored from the old quarto by Mr. Theobald. He at the ſame time introduced another: "We'll ſend him word to meet us in the field;" which is clearly unneceſſary, and indeed improper: for the word field relates to two preceding lines of the quarto, which have not been introduced:

"Now, for that Falſtaff has been ſo deceiv'd,
"As that he dares not meet us in the houſe,
"We'll ſend him word to meet us in the field."

Malone.

[7] —— urchins, ouphes,] The primitive ſignification of urchin is a hedge-hog. In this ſenſe it is uſed in The Tempeſt. Hence it comes to ſignify any thing little and dwarfiſh. Ouph is the Teutonick word for a fairy or goblin. Steevens.

With ſome diffuſed ſong;[8] upon their ſight,
We two in great amazedneſs will fly:
Then let them all encircle him about,
And, fairy-like, to-pinch the unclean knight;[9]

[8] With ſome diffuſed ſong;] A diffuſed ſong ſignifies a ſong that ſtrikes out into wild ſentiments beyond the bounds of nature, ſuch as thoſe whoſe ſubject is fairy land. WARBURTON.

Diffuſed may mean confuſed. So, in Stowe's Chronicle, p. 553: "Rice quoth he, (i. e. Cardinal Wolſey,) ſpeak you Welch to him: I doubt not but thy ſpeech ſhall be more diffuſe to him, than his French ſhall be to thee." TOLLET.

By diffuſed ſong, Shakſpeare may mean ſuch unconnected ditties as mad people ſing. Kent, in K. Lear, when he has determined to aſſume an appearance foreign to his own, declares his reſolution to diffuſe his ſpeech, i. e. to give it a wild and irregular turn. STEEVENS.

With ſome diffuſed ſong;] i. e. wild, irregular, diſcordant. That this was the meaning of the word, I have ſhown in a note on another play by a paſſage from one of Greene's pamphlets, in which he calls a dreſs of which the different parts were made after the faſhions of different countries, "a diffuſed attire."
MALONE.

[9] And, fairy-like, to-pinch the unclean knight;] This uſe of to in compoſition with verbs, is very common in Gower and Chaucer, but muſt have been rather antiquated in the time of Shakſpeare. See, Gower, De Confeſſione Amantis, B. IV. fol. 7:

"All to-tore is myn araie."

And Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, 1169:

"—— mouth and noſe to-broke."

The conſtruction will otherwiſe be very hard. TYRWHITT.

I add a few more inſtances, to ſhow that this uſe of the prepoſition to was not entirely antiquated in the time of our author. So, in Spenſer's Fairy Queen, B. IV. c. 7:

"With briers and buſhes all to-rent and ſcratched."

Again, B. V. c. 8:

"With locks all looſe, and raiment all to-tore."

Again, B. V. c. 9:

"Made of ſtrange ſtuffe, but all to-worne and ragged,
"And underneath the breech was all to-torne and jagged."

Again, in The Three Lords of London, 1590:

"The poſt at which he runs, and all to-burns it."

And aſk him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their ſo ſacred paths he dares to tread,
In ſhape profane.

Mrs. Ford. And till he tell the truth,
Let the ſuppoſed fairies pinch him ſound,[1]
And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known,
We'll all preſent ourſelves; diſ-horn the ſpirit,
And mock him home to Windſor.

Ford. The children muſt
Be practiſed well to this, or they'll ne'er do't.

Eva. I will teach the children their behaviours; and I will be like a jack-an-apes alſo,[2] to burn the knight with my taber.

Again, in Philemon Holland's Tranſlation of the 10th Book of Pliny's Nat. Hiſt. ch. 74: "—ſhee againe to be quit with them, will all to-pinch and nip both the fox and her cubs." Steevens.

The editor of Gawin Douglas's Tranſlation of the Æneid, fol. Edinb. 1710, obſerves, in his General Rules for the Underſtanding the Language, that to prefixed, in ancient writers, has little or no ſignificancy, but with all put before it, ſignifies altogether. Since, Milton has "were all to-ruffled." See Comus, v. 380. Warton's edit. It is not likely that this practice was become antiquated in the time of Shakſpeare, as Mr. Tyrwhitt ſuppoſes. Holt White.

[1] —pinch him ſound,] i. e. ſoundly. The adjective uſed as an adverb. The modern editors read—round. Steevens.

[2] I will teach the children their behaviours; and I will be like a jack-an-apes alſo,] The idea of this ſtratagem, &c. might have been adopted from part of the entertainment prepared by Thomas Churchyard for Queen Elizabeth at Norwich: "And theſe boyes, &c. were to play by a deuiſe and degrees the Phayries, and to daunce (as neere as could be ymagined) like the Phayries. Their attire, and comming ſo ſtrangely out, I know made the Queenes highneſſe ſmyle and laugh withall, &c. I ledde the yong fooliſhe Phayries a daunce, &c. and as I heard ſaid, it was well taken." Steevens.

Ford. That will be excellent. I'll go buy them vizards.

Mrs. Page. My Nan ſhall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attired in a robe of white.

Page. That ſilk will I go buy;—and in that time[3]
Shall maſter Slender ſteal my Nan away, [Aſide.
And marry her at Eton.——Go, ſend to Falſtaff ſtraight.

Ford. Nay, I'll to him again in name of Brook:
He'll tell me all his purpoſe: Sure, he'll come.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that: Go, get us properties,[4]
And tricking for our fairies.[5]

Eva. Let us about it: It is admirable pleaſures, and fery honeſt knaveries.

[Exeunt Page, Ford, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Go, miſtreſs Ford,
Send Quickly to ſir John, to know his mind.

[Exit Mrs. Ford.

[3] That ſilk will I go buy;—and in that time—] Mr. Theobald, referring that time to the time of buying the ſilk, alters it to tire. But there is no need of any change; that time evidently relating to the time of the maſk with which Falſtaff was to be entertained, and which makes the whole ſubject of this dialogue. Therefore the common reading is right.
Warburton.

[4] ——properties,] Properties are little incidental neceſſaries to a theatre, excluſive of ſcenes and dreſſes. So, in The Taming of a Shrew: "—a ſhoulder of mutton for a property." See A Midſummer Night's Dream, Act I. ſc. ii. Steevens.

[5] ——tricking for our fairies.] To trick, is to dreſs out. So, in Milton:

"Not trick'd and frounc'd as ſhe was wont,
"With the Attic boy to hunt;
"But kerchief'd in a homely cloud." Steevens.

I'll to the doctor; he hath my good will,
And none but he, to marry with Nan Page.
That Slender, though well landed, is an idiot;
And he my hufband beft of all affects:
The doctor is well money'd, and his friends
Potent at court; he, none but he, fhall have her,
Though twenty thoufand worthier come to crave her. [Exit.

HOST. What would'ft thou have, boor? what, thick-fkin?[6] fpeak, breathe, difcufs; brief, fhort, quick, fnap.

SIM. Marry, fir, I come to fpeak with fir John Falftaff from mafter Slender.

HOST. There's his chamber, his houfe, his caftle, his ftanding-bed, and truckle-bed;[7] 'tis painted

[6] —— what, thick-fkin?] I meet with this term of abufe in Warner's Albion's England, 1602, Book VI. chap. 30:

"That he, fo foul a thick-skin, fhould fo fair a lady catch."

The eleventh Book, however, of Pliny's Nat Hift. (I fhall quote from P. Holland's Tranflation, 1601, p. 346,) will beft explain the meaning of this term of obloquy: "—men alfo, who are thicke skinned, be more groffe of fence and underftanding," &c. STEEVENS.

[7] ——ftanding-bed, and truckle-bed;] The ufual furniture of chambers in that time was a ftanding-bed, under which was a trochle, truckle, or running bed. In the ftanding-bed lay the mafter, and in the truckle bed the fervant. So, in Hall's Account of a Servile Tutor:

"He lieth in the truckle-bed,
"While his young mafter lieth o'er his head." JOHNSON.

about with the ſtory of the prodigal, freſh and new: Go, knock and call; he'll ſpeak like an Anthropophaginian[8] unto thee: Knock, I ſay.

Sim. There's an old woman, a fat woman, gone up into his chamber; I'll be ſo bold as ſtay, ſir, till ſhe come down: I come to ſpeak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman! the knight may be robbed: I'll call.—Bully knight! Bully ſir John! ſpeak from thy lungs military: Art thou there? it is thine hoſt, thine Epheſian,[9] calls.

Fal. [above.] How now, mine hoſt?

Host. Here's a Bohemian-Tartar[1] tarries the coming down of thy fat woman: Let her deſcend,

So, in The Return from Parnaſſus, 1606:

"When I lay in a trundle-bed under my tutor."

And here the tutor has the upper bed. Again, in Heywood's Royal King, &c. 1637: "—ſhew theſe gentlemen into a cloſe room with ſtanding-bed in't, and a truckle too." STEEVENS.

[8] ——Anthropophaginian—] i. e. a cannibal. See Othello, Act I. ſc. iii. It is here uſed as a ſounding word to aſtoniſh Simple. Epheſian, which follows, has no other meaning. STEEVENS.

[9] ——thine Epheſian,] This was a cant term of the time. So, in K. Henry IV. P. II. Act II. ſc. ii: "P. Henry. What company? Page. Epheſians, my lord, of the old church." See the note there. MALONE.

Hanmer ſuppoſes Epheſian to be a deſigned blunder for Ephæſtion. STEEVENS.

[1] ——Bohemian-Tartar—] The French call a Bohemian what we call a Gypſey; but I believe the Hoſt means nothing more than, by a wild appellation, to inſinuate that Simple makes a ſtrange appearance. JOHNSON.

In Germany there were ſeveral companies of vagabonds, &c. called Tartars and Zigens. "Theſe were the ſame in my opinion," ſays Mezeray, "as thoſe the French call Bohemians, and the Engliſh Gypſies." Bulteel's Tranſlation of Mezeray's Hiſtory of France, under the year 1417. TOLLET.

bully, let her deſcend; my chambers are honourable: Fye! privacy? fye!

Enter FALSTAFF.

FAL. There was, mine hoſt, an old fat woman even now with me; but ſhe's gone.

SIM. Pray you, ſir, was't not the wiſe woman of Brentford?[2]

FAL. Ay, marry, was it, muſcle-ſhell;[3] What would you with her?

SIM. My maſter, ſir, my maſter Slender, ſent to her, ſeeing her go thorough the ſtreets, to know, ſir, whether one Nym, ſir, that beguiled him of a chain, had the chain, or no.

FAL. I ſpake with the old woman about it.

SIM. And what ſays ſhe, I pray, ſir?

FAL. Marry, ſhe ſays, that the very ſame man, that beguiled maſter Slender of his chain, cozened him of it.

SIM. I would, I could have ſpoken with the woman herſelf; I had other things to have ſpoken with her too, from him.

FAL. What are they? let us know.

[2] —— wiſe woman of Brentford?] In our author's time female dealers in palmiſtry and fortune-telling were uſually denominated wiſe women. So the perſon from whom Heywood's play of The Wiſe Woman of Hogsden, 1638, takes its title, is employed in anſwering many ſuch queſtions as are the objects of Simple's enquiry. REED.

This appellation occurs alſo in our verſion of the Bible: "Her wiſe ladies anſwered her, yea ſhe returned anſwer to herſelf." Judges, v. 29. STEEVENS.

[3] —— muſcle-ſhell;] He calls poor Simple muſcle-ſhell, becauſe he ſtands with his mouth open. JOHNSON.

Host. Ay, come; quick.

Sim. I may not conceal them, ſir.

Fal. Conceal them, or thou dieſt.[4]

Sim. Why, ſir, they were nothing but about miſtreſs Anne Page; to know, if it were my maſter's fortune to have her, or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What, ſir?

Fal. To have her,—or no: Go; ſay, the woman told me ſo.

Sim. May I be ſo bold to ſay ſo, ſir?

Fal. Ay, ſir Tike; who more bold? [5]

Sim. I thank your worſhip: I ſhall make my maſter glad with theſe tidings. [Exit Simple.

Host. Thou art clerkly,[6] thou art clerkly, ſir John: Was there a wiſe woman with thee?

Fal. Ay, that there was, mine hoſt; one, that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before

[4] Simp. I may not conceal them, ſir.
Fal. Conceal them, or thou dieſt.] In both theſe inſtances Dr. Farmer thinks we ſhould read—reveal. Steevens.

Simp. I may &c.] In the old copy this ſpeech is given to Falſtaff. Corrected by Mr. Rowe. I mention this error, becauſe it juſtifies other ſimilar corrections that have been made. Malone.

[5] Ay, ſir Tike; who more bold?] In the firſt edition, it ſtands: "I Tike, who more bolde." And ſhould plainly be read here, Ay, ſir Tike, &c. Farmer.

The folio reads—Ay, ſir, like, &c. Malone.

[6] —— clerkly,] i. e. ſcholar-like. So, in Sidney's Arcadia, Lib. III:

"Lanquet, the ſhepheard beſt ſwift Iſter knew
"For clearkly reed," &c.

Again, in The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act II. ſc. i:

Enter BARDOLPH.

BARD. Out, alas, ſir! cozenage! meer cozenage!

HOST. Where be my horſes? ſpeak well of them, varletto.

BARD. Run away with the cozeners: for ſo ſoon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off, from behind one of them, in a ſlough of mire; and ſet ſpurs, and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Fauſtuſes.[8]

HOST. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain: do not ſay, they be fled; Germans are honeſt men.

Enter Sir HUGH EVANS.

EVA. Where is mine hoſt?

HOST. What is the matter, ſir?

EVA. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to town, tells me, there is three couzin germans, that has cozened all the

To pay, in our author's time, often ſignified to beat. So, in King Henry IV. P. I: "—ſeven of the eleven I paid." MALONE.

Enter Doctor CAIUS.

CAIUS. Vere is mine Hoſt de Jarterre?

HOST. Here, maſter doctor, in perplexity, and doubtful dilemma.

CAIUS. I cannot tell vat is dat: But it is tell-a me, dat you make grand preparation for a duke de Jarmany: by my trot, dere is no duke, dat de court is know to come: I tell you for good vill: adieu. [Exit.

HOST. Hue and cry, villain, go:—aſſiſt me, knight; I am undone:—fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone!

[Exeunt Hoſt and BARDOLPH.

FAL. I would, all the world might be cozened; for I have been cozened, and beaten too. If it ſhould come to the ear of the court, how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been waſhed and cudgeled, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor fiſhermen's boots with me; I warrant, they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as creſt-fallen as a dried pear.[9] I never proſpered ſince I foreſwore [9] ——creſt-fallen as a dried pear.] To aſcertain the propriety of this ſimilitude, it may be obſerved that pears, when they are dried, become flat, and loſe the erect and oblong form that, in their natural ſtate, diſtinguiſhes them from apples.

STEEVENS.

myſelf at primero.[1] Well, if my wind were but long enough to ſay my prayers,[2] I would repent.—

Enter Miſtreſs QUICKLY.

Now! whence come you?

QUICK. From the two parties, forſooth.

FAL. The devil take one party, and his dam the other, and ſo they ſhall be both beſtowed! I have

[1] ——primero.] A game at cards. JOHNSON.

Primero was in Shakſpeare's time the faſhionable game. In the Earl of Northumberland's letters about the powder plot, Joſc. Percy was playing at primero on Sunday, when his uncle, the conſpirator, called on him at Eſſex Houſe. This game is again mentioned in our author's Henry VIII. PERCY.

" Primero and primaviſta, two games of cards. Primum et primum viſum, that is, firſt, and firſt ſeene, becauſe he that can ſhow ſuch an order of cardes, wins the game." See Minſheu's DICT. 1617. REED.

In the Sydney Papers, Vol. II. p. 83, is the following account of an altercation that happened between our poet's generous patron, and one Willoughby, at this game:—" The quarrel of my Lord Southampton to Ambroſe Willoughby grew upon this: That he, with Sir Walter Rawley and Mr. Parker, being at primero in the preſence-chamber, the queen was gone to bed; and he being there, as ſquire of the body, deſired him to give over. Soon after he ſpoke to them againe, that if they would not leave, he would call in the guard to pull down the bord; which Sir Walter Rawley ſeeing, put up his money, and went his wayes; but my Lord Southampton took exceptions at hym, and told hym, he would remember yt: and ſo finding hym between the Tennis-Court wall and the garden, ſtrooke him; and Willoughby pull'd of ſome of his lockes." This happened in the beginning of 1598. MALONE.

The manner of playing at this game may be ſeen in an Epigram quoted in Dodſley's Collection of Old Plays, Vol. V. p. 168, edit. 1780. See alſo Vol. X. p. 368, and Vol. XII. p. 396. REED.

[2] —— to ſay my prayers,] Theſe words were reſtored from the early quarto by Mr. Pope. They were probably omitted in the folio on account of the Stat. 3 Jac. I. ch. 21. MALONE.

ſuffered more for their ſakes, more, than the villainous inconſtancy of man's diſpoſition is able to bear.

Quick. And have not they ſuffered? Yes, I warrant; ſpeciouſly one of them; miſtreſs Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot ſee a white ſpot about her.

Fal. What tell'ſt thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myſelf into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman,[3] deliver'd me, the knave conſtable had ſet me i' the ſtocks, i' the common ſtocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me ſpeak with you in your chamber: you ſhall hear how things go; and, I war-

[3] —— action of an old woman,] What! was it any dexterity of wit in Sir John Falſtaff to counterfeit the action of an old woman, in order to eſcape being apprehended for a witch? Surely, one would imagine, this was the readieſt means to bring him into ſuch a ſcrape: for none but old women have ever been ſuſpected of being witches. The text muſt certainly be reſtored a wood woman, a crazy, frantick woman; one too wild, and ſilly, and unmeaning, to have either the malice or miſchievous ſubtlety of a witch in her. Theobald.

This emendation is received by Sir Thomas Hanmer, but rejected by Dr. Warburton. To me it appears reaſonable enough. Johnson.

I am not certain that this change is neceſſary. Falſtaff, by counterfeiting ſuch weakneſs and infirmity, as would naturally be pitied in an old woman, averted the puniſhment to which he would otherwiſe have been ſubjected, on the ſuppoſition that he was a witch. Steevens.

The reading of the old copy is fully ſupported by what Falſtaff ſays afterwards to Ford: "I went to her, Maſter Brook, as you ſee, like a poor old man; but I came from her, Maſter Brook, like a poor old woman." Malone.

rant, to your content. Here is a letter will ſay ſomewhat. Good hearts, what ado here is to bring you together! Sure, one of you does not ſerve heaven well,[4] that you are ſo croſſed.

Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.

Another Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter FENTON and Hoſt.

Host. Maſter Fenton, talk not to me; my mind is heavy, I will give over all.

Fent. Yet hear me ſpeak: Aſſiſt me in my purpoſe,
And, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee
A hundred pound in gold, more than your loſs.

Host. I will hear you, maſter Fenton; and I will, at the leaſt, keep your counſel.

Fent. From time to time I have acquainted you
With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page;
Who, mutually, hath anſwer'd my affection
(So far forth as herſelf might be her chooſer,)
Even to my wiſh: I have a letter from her
Of ſuch contents as you will wonder at;
The mirth whereof[5] ſo larded with my matter,

[4] Sure, one of you does not ſerve heaven well, &c.] The great fault of this play is the frequency of expreſſions ſo profane, that no neceſſity of preſerving character can juſtify them. There are laws of higher authority than thoſe of criticiſm.

JOHNSON.

[5] The mirth whereof—] Thus the old copy. Mr. Pope and all the ſubſequent editors read—The mirth whereof's ſo larded, &c. but the old reading is the true one, and the phraſeology that

That neither, ſingly, can be manifeſted,
Without the ſhow of both;—wherein fat Falſtaff
Hath a great ſcene:[6] the image of the jeſt[7]
[Showing the letter.
I'll ſhow you here at large. Hark, good mine hoſt:
To-night at Herne's oak, juſt 'twixt twelve and one,
Muſt my ſweet Nan preſent the fairy queen;
The purpoſe why, is here;[8] in which diſguiſe, of Shakſpeare's age. Whereof was formerly uſed as we now uſe thereof; "—the mirth thereof being ſo larded," &c. So, in Mount Tabor, or Private Exerciſes of a Penitent Sinner, 8vo. 1639: "In the mean time [they] cloſely conveyed under the cloaths wherewithal he was covered, a vizard, like a ſwine's ſnout, upon his face, with three wire chains faſtened thereunto, the other end whereof being holden ſeverally by thoſe three ladies; who fall to ſinging again," &c. MALONE.

[6] —— wherein fat Falſtaff
Hath a great ſcene:] The firſt folio reads:
"Without the ſhow of both: fat Falſtaff," &c.
I have ſupplied the word that was probably omitted at the preſs, from the early quarto, where, in the correſponding place, we find—
"Wherein fat Falſtaff hath a mighty ſcare [ſcene]."
The editor of the ſecond folio, to ſupply the metre, arbitrarily reads—
"Without the ſhew of both:—fat Sir John Falſtaff—."
MALONE.

[7] —— the image of the jeſt—] Image is repreſentation. So, in K. Richard III:
"And liv'd by looking on his images."
Again, in Meaſure for Meaſure:—"The image of it gives me content already." STEEVENS.

Theſe words allude to a cuſtom ſtill in uſe, of hanging out painted repreſentations of ſhows.
So, in Buſſy d'Ambois:
"———like a monſter
"Kept onely to ſhow men for goddeſſe money:
"That falſe hagge often paints him in her cloth
"Ten times more monſtrous than he is in troth."
HENLEY.

[8] —— is here;] i. e. in the letter. STEEVENS.

While other jeſts are ſomething rank on foot,[9]
Her father hath commanded her to ſlip
Away with Slender, and with him at Eton
Immediately to marry: ſhe hath conſented:
Now, ſir,
Her mother, even ſtrong againſt that match,[1]
And firm for doctor Caius, hath appointed
That he ſhall likewiſe ſhuffle her away,
While other ſports are taſking of their minds,[2]
And at the deanery, where a prieſt attends,
Straight marry her: to this her mother's plot
She, ſeemingly obedient, likewiſe hath
Made promiſe to the doctor;—Now, thus it reſts:
Her father means ſhe ſhall be all in white;
And in that habit, when Slender ſees his time
To take her by the hand, and bid her go,
She ſhall go with him:—her mother hath intended,
The better to denote[3] her to the doctor,

[9] While other jeſts are ſomething rank on foot,] i. e. while they are hotly purſuing other merriment of their own.
STEEVENS.

[1] —— even ſtrong againſt that match,] Thus the old copies. The modern editors read—ever, but perhaps without neceſſity. Even ſtrong, is as ſtrong, with a ſimilar degree of ſtrength. So, in Hamlet, "—even chriſtian" is fellow chriſtian.
STEEVENS.

[2] —— taſking of their minds,] So, in K. Henry V:
"—— ſome things of weight
"That taſk our thoughts concerning us and France."
STEEVENS.

[3] —— to denote—] In the MSS. of our author's age n and u were formed ſo very much alike, that they are ſcarcely diſtinguiſhable. Hence it was, that in the old copies of theſe plays one of theſe letters is frequently put for the other. From the cauſe aſſigned, or from an accidental inverſion of the letter n at the preſs, the firſt folio in the preſent inſtance reads—deuote, u being conſtantly employed in that copy inſtead of v. The ſame miſtake has happened in ſeveral other places. Thus, in

(For they muſt all be maſk'd and vizarded,)
That, quaint in green,[4] ſhe ſhall be looſe enrob'd,
With ribbands pendant, flaring 'bout her head;
And when the doctor ſpies his vantage ripe,
To pinch her by the hand, and, on that token,
The maid hath given conſent to go with him.

Host. Which means ſhe to deceive? father or mother?

Fent. Both, my good hoſt, to go along with me:
And here it reſts,—that you'll procure the vicar
To ſtay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
And, in the lawful name of marrying,
To give our hearts united ceremony.

Much Ado about Nothing, 1623, we find, "he is turu'd orthographer," inſtead of turn'd. Again, in Othello:—"to the contemplation, mark, and deuotement of her parts," inſtead of denotement. Again, in King John: This expeditious charge, inſtead of expedition's. Again, ibid: involuerable for invulnerable. Again, in Hamlet, 1605, we meet with this very word put by an error of the preſs for denote:

"Together with all forms, modes, ſhapes of grief,
"That can deuote me truly."

The preſent emendation, which was ſuggeſted by Mr. Steevens, is fully ſupported by a ſubſequent paſſage, quoted by him: "the white will decipher her well enough." Malone.

[4] —— quaint in green,] —— may mean fantaſtically dreſt in green. So, in Milton's Maſque at Ludlow Caſtle:

"——— left the place,
"And my quaint habits, breed aſtoniſhment."

Quaintneſs, however, was anciently uſed to ſignify gracefulneſs. So, in Greene's Dialogue between a He and She Coney-Catcher, 1592: "I began to think what a handſome man he was, and wiſhed that he would come and take a night's lodging with me, ſitting in a dump to think of the quaintneſs of his perſonage." In The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act III. ſc. i. quaintly is uſed for ingeniouſly:

"—— a ladder quaintly made of cords." Steevens.

In Daniel's Sonnets, 1594, it is uſed for fantaſtick:

"Prayers prevail not with a quaint diſdayne." Malone.

Host. Well, huſband your device; I'll to the vicar:
Bring you the maid, you ſhall not lack a prieſt.

Fent. So ſhall I evermore be bound to thee;
Beſides, I'll make a preſent recompenſe. [Exeunt.

ACT V. SCENE I.

A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter FALSTAFF and Mrs. QUICKLY.

Fal. Pr'ythee, no more prattling;—go.——I'll hold:[5] This is the third time; I hope, good luck lies in odd numbers. Away, go; they ſay, there is divinity in odd numbers,[6] either in nativity, chance, or death.—Away.

Quick. I'll provide you a chain; and I'll do what I can to get you a pair of horns.

Fal. Away, I ſay; time wears: hold up your head, and mince.[7] [Exit Mrs. QUICKLY.

5 ——I'll hold:] I ſuppoſe he means—I'll keep the appointment. Or he may mean—I'll believe. So, in K. Henry VIII: "Did you not of late days hear," &c.—"Yes, but held it not." STEEVENS.

6 ——they ſay, there is divinity in odd numbers,] Alluding to the Roman adage———numero deus impare gaudet. Virgil, Ecl. viii. STEEVENS.

7 ——hold up your head, and mince.] To mince is to walk with affected delicacy. So, in The Merchant of Venice:
"——turn two mincing ſteps
"Into a manly ſtride." STEEVENS.

Enter FORD.

How now, maſter Brook? Maſter Brook, the matter will be known to-night, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's oak, and you ſhall ſee wonders.

FORD. Went you not to her yeſterday, ſir, as you told me you had appointed?

FAL. I went to her, maſter Brook, as you ſee, like a poor old man: but I came from her, maſter Brook, like a poor old woman. That ſame knave, Ford her huſband, hath the fineſt mad devil of jealouſy in him, maſter Brook, that ever governed frenzy. I will tell you.—He beat me grievouſly, in the ſhape of a woman; for in the ſhape of man, maſter Brook, I fear not Goliath with a weaver's beam; becauſe I know alſo, life is a ſhuttle.[8] I am in haſte; go along with me; I'll tell you all, maſter Brook. Since I plucked geeſe,[9] played truant, and whipped top, I knew not what it was to be beaten, till lately. Follow me: I'll tell you ſtrange things of this knave Ford: on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand.—Follow: Strange things in hand, maſter Brook! follow. [Exeunt.

[8] —— becauſe I know alſo, life is a ſhuttle.] An alluſion to the ſixth verſe of the ſeventh chapter of the Book of Job: "My days are ſwifter than a weaver's ſhuttle," &c. STEEVENS.

[9] —— Since I plucked geeſe,] To ſtrip a living gooſe of his feathers, was formerly an act of puerile barbarity. STEEVENS.

SCENE II.

Windsor Park.

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER.

PAGE. Come, come; we'll couch i' the castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies.—Remember, son Slender, my daughter.[1]

SLEN. Ay, forsooth; I have spoke with her, and we have a nay-word,[2] how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry, mum; she cries, budget;[3] and by that we know one another.

SHAL. That's good too: but what needs either your mum, or her budget? the white will decipher her well enough.—It hath struck ten o'clock.

PAGE. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil,[4] and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; follow me.

[Exeunt.

[1] —— my daughter.] The word daughter was inadvertently omitted in the first folio. The emendation was made by the editor of the second. MALONE.

[2] —— a nay-word,] i. e. a watch-word. Mrs. Quickly has already used it in this sense. STEEVENS.

[3] —— mum; she cries, budget;] These words appear to have been in common use before the time of our author. "And now if a man call them to accomptes, and aske the cause of al these their tragical and cruel doings, he shall have a short answer with mum budget, except they will peradventure allege this," &c. Oration against the unlawful Insurrections of the Protestants, bl. l. 8vo. 1615, sign. C 8. REED.

[4] —— No man means evil but the devil,] This is a double blunder; for some, of whom this was spoke, were women. We should read then, No ONE means. WARBURTON.

SCENE III.

The Street in Windſor.

Enter Mrs. PAGE, Mrs. FORD, and Dr. CAIUS.

MRS. PAGE. Maſter doctor, my daughter is in green: when you ſee your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and deſpatch it quickly: Go before into the park; we two muſt go together.

CAIUS. I know vat I have to do; Adieu.

MRS. PAGE. Fare you well, ſir. [Exit CAIUS.] My huſband will not rejoice ſo much at the abuſe of Falſtaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter: but 'tis no matter; better a little chiding, than a great deal of heart-break.

MRS. FORD. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies? and the Welch devil, Hugh? [5]

There is no blunder. In the ancient interludes and moralities, the beings of ſupreme power, excellence, or depravity, are occaſionally ſtyled men. So, in Much Ado about Nothing, Dogberry ſays: "God's a good man." Again, in an Epitaph, part of which has been borrowed as an abſurd one, by Mr. Pope and his aſſociates, who were not very well acquainted with ancient phraſeology:

"Do all we can,
"Death is a man
"That never ſpareth none."

Again, in Jeronimo, or The Firſt Part of the Spaniſh Tragedy, 1605:

"You're the laſt man I thought on, ſave the devil."

STEEVENS.

[5] —— and the Welch devil, Hugh?] The former impreſſions read—the Welch devil, Herne? But Falſtaff was to repreſent Herne, and he was no Welchman. Where was the attention or ſagacity of our editors, not to obſerve that Mrs. Ford is en-

Mrs. Page. They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak,[6] with obſcured lights; which, at the very inſtant of Falſtaff's and our meeting, they will at once diſplay to the night.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot chooſe but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

Mrs. Ford. We'll betray him finely.

Mrs. Page. Againſt ſuch lewdſters, and their lechery,
Thoſe that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on; To the oak, to the oak! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Windſor Park.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, and Fairies.

Eva. Trib, trib, fairies; come; and remember your parts: be pold, I pray you; follow me into the pit; and when I give the watch-'ords, do as I pid you; Come, come; trib, trib. [Exeunt.

quiring for [Sir Hugh] Evans by the name of the Welch devil? Dr. Thirlby likewiſe diſcovered the blunder of this paſſage.
Theobald.

I ſuppoſe only the letter H. was ſet down in the MS. and therefore, inſtead of Hugh, (which ſeems to be the true reading,) the editors ſubſtituted Herne. Steevens.

So, afterwards: "Well ſaid, fairy Hugh." Malone.

6 —— in a pit hard by Herne's oak,] An oak, which may be that alluded to by Shakſpeare, is ſtill ſtanding cloſe to a pit in Windſor foreſt. It is yet ſhown as the oak of Herne. Steevens.

Enter FALSTAFF disguised, with a buck's head on.

FAL. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on: Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me:—Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns.—O powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man; in some other, a man a beast.—You were also, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda;—O, omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose?—A fault done first in the form of a beast;—O Jove, a beastly fault! and then another fault in the semblance of a fowl; think on't, Jove; a foul fault.—When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? [7] For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, i' the forest: Send me a cool rut-time, Jove, or who can blame me to piss my tallow? [8] Who comes here? my doe?

[7] —— When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do?] Shakspeare had perhaps in his thoughts the argument which Cherea employed in a similar situation. Ter. Eun. Act III. sc. v:

" ———— Quia consimilem luserat
" Jam olim ille ludum, impendio magis animus gaudebat mihi
" Deum sese in hominem convertisse, atque per alienas tegulas
" Venisse clanculum per impluvium, fucum factum mulieri.
" At quem deum? qui templa cœli summa sonitu concutit.
" Ego homuncio hoc non facerem? Ego vero illud ita feci, ac lubens."

A translation of Terence was published in 1598.

The same thought is found in Lyly's Euphues, 1580:—" I think in those days love was well ratified on earth, when lust was so full authorized by the gods in heaven." MALONE.

MRS. FORD. Sir John? art thou there, my deer? my male deer?

Booke of Hunting, 1575: "During the time of their rut, the harts live with ſmall ſuſtenance.—The red muſhroome helpeth well to make them pyſſè their greace, they are then in ſo vehement heate," &c. FARMER.

In Ray's Collection of Proverbs, the phraſe is yet further explained: "He has piſs'd his tallow. This is ſpoken of bucks who grow lean after rutting-time, and may be applied to men."

The phraſe, however, is of French extraction. Jacques de Fouilloux in his quarto volume entitled La Venerie, alſo tells us that ſtags in rutting time live chiefly on large red muſhrooms, "qui aident fort à leur faire piſſèr le ſuif." STEEVENS.

[9] Let the ſky rain potatoes;—hail kiſſing-comfits, and ſnow eringoes; let there come a tempeſt of provocation,] Potatoes, when they were firſt introduced in England, were ſuppoſed to be ſtrong provocatives. See Mr. Collins's note on a paſſage in Troilus and Creſſida, Act V. ſc. ii.

Kiſſing-comfits were ſugar-plums, perfumed to make the breath ſweet.

Monſieur Le Grand D'Auſſi, in his Hiſtoire de la vie privée des Français, Vol. II. p. 273, obſerves—"Il y avait auſſi de petits drageoirs qu'on portait en poche pour avoir, dans le jour, de quoi ſe parfumer la bouche."

So, alſo in Webſter's Ducheſs of Malfy, 1623:

"—— Sure your piſtol holds
"Nothing but perfumes or kiſſing comfits."

In Swetnan Arraign'd, 1620, theſe confections are called—"kiſſing-cauſes."—"Their very breath is ſophiſticated with amber-pellets, and kiſſing-cauſes."

Again, in A Very Woman, by Maſſinger:

"Comfits of ambergris to help our kiſſes."

Eringoes, like potatoes, were eſteemed to be ſtimulatives. So, (ſays the late Mr. Henderſon,) in Drayton's Polyolbion:

"Whoſe root th' eringo is, the reines that doth inflame,
"So ſtrongly to performe the Cytherean game."

But Shakſpeare, very probably, had the following artificial tempeſt in his thoughts, when he put the words on which this note is founded into the mouth of Falſtaff.

Holinſhed informs us, that in the year 1583, for the entertainment of Prince Alaſco, was performed "a verie ſtatelie tragedie named Dido, wherein the queen's banket (with Æneas' narration of the deſtruction of Troie) was lively deſcribed in a marchpaine patterne,—the tempeſt wherein it hailed ſmall confects, rained roſe-water, and ſnew an artificial kind of ſnow, all ſtrange, marvellous and abundant."

Brantome alſo, deſcribing an earlier feaſt given by the Vidam of Chartres, ſays—"Au deſſert, il y eut un orage artificiel qui, pendant une demie heure entiere, fit tomber une pluie d'eaux odorantes, & un grêle de dragées." Steevens.

[1] Divide me like a bribe-buck,] i. e. (as Mr. Theobald obſerves,) a buck ſent for a bribe. He adds, that the old copies, miſtakingly, read—brib'd-buck. Steevens.

Cartwright, in his Love's Convert, has an expreſſion ſomewhat ſimilar:

"Put off your mercer with your fee-buck for that ſeaſon."
M. Mason.

[2] —— my ſhoulders for the fellow of this walk,] Who the fellow is, or why he keeps his ſhoulders for him, I do not underſtand. Johnson.

A walk is that diſtrict in a foreſt, to which the juriſdiction of a particular keeper extends. So, in Lodge's Roſalynde, 1592: "Tell me, foreſter, under whom maintaineſt thou thy walke?" Malone.

To the keeper the ſhoulders and humbles belong as a perquiſite. Grey.

So, in Friar Bacon, and Friar Bungay, 1599:

"Butter and cheeſe, and humbles of a deer,
"Such as poor keepers have within their lodge."

Mrs. Ford.
Mrs. Page. } Away, away. [They run off.

Again, in Holinfhed, 1586, Vol. I. p. 204: "The keeper, by a cuftom——hath the fkin, head, umbles, chine and fhoulders." Steevens.

[3] —— a woodman?] A woodman (fays Mr. Reed, in a note on Meafure for Meafure, Act IV. fc. iii.) was an attendant on the officer, called Forrefter. See Manwood on the Foreft Laws, 4to. 1615, p. 46. It is here, however, ufed in a wanton fenfe, for one who choofes female game as the objects of his purfuit.

In its primitive fenfe I find it employed in an ancient MS. entitled The Boke of Huntyng, that is cleped Mayfter of Game: "And wondre ye not though I fey wodemanly, for it is a poynt of a wodemannys crafte. And though it be wele fittyng to an hunter to kun do it, yet natheles it longeth more to a wodemannys crafte," &c. A woodman's calling is not very accurately defined by any author I have met with. Steevens.

Enter Sir HUGH EVANS, like a satyr; Mrs. QUICKLY, and PISTOL; ANNE PAGE, as the Fairy Queen, attended by her brother and others, dressed like fairies, with waxen tapers on their heads.[4]

QUICK. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
You moon-shine revellers, and shades of night,
You orphan-heirs of fixed destiny,[5]
Attend your office, and your quality.[6]——

[4] This stage-direction I have formed on that of the old quarto, corrected by such circumstances as the poet introduced when he new-modelled his play. In the folio there is no direction whatsoever. Mrs. Quickly and Pistol seems to have been but ill suited to the delivery of the speeches here attributed to them; nor are either of those personages named by Ford in a former scene, where the intended plot against Falstaff is mentioned. It is highly probable, (as a modern editor has observed,) that the performer who had represented Pistol, was afterwards, from necessity, employed among the fairies; and that his name thus crept into the copies. He here represents Puck, a part which in the old quarto is given to Sir Hugh. The introduction of Mrs. Quickly, however, cannot be accounted for in the same manner; for in the first sketch in quarto, she is particularly described as the Queen of the Fairies; a part which our author afterwards allotted to Anne Page. MALONE.

[5] You orphan-heirs of fixed destiny,] But why orphan-heirs? Destiny, whom they succeeded, was yet in being. Doubtless the poet wrote:

" You ouphen heirs of fixed destiny."

i. e. you elves, who minister, and succeed in some of the works of destiny. They are called in this play, both before and afterwards, ouphes; here ouphen; en being the plural termination of Saxon nouns. For the word is from the Saxon Alpenne, lamiæ, dæmones. Or it may be understood to be an adjective, as wooden, woollen, golden, &c. WARBURTON.

Dr. Warburton corrects orphan to ouphen; and not without plausibility, as the word ouphes occurs both before and afterwards. But, I fancy, in acquiescence to the vulgar doctrine, the address in this line is to a part of the troop, as mortals by birth, but adopted by the fairies: orphans in respect of their real parents, and now only dependent on deftiny herfelf. A few lines from Spenfer will fufficiently illuftrate this paffage:

"The man whom heavens have ordaynd to bee
"The fpoufe of Britomart is Arthegall.
"He wonneth in the land of Fayeree,
"Yet is no Fary borne, ne fib at all
"To elfes, but fprong of feed terreftriall,
"And whilome by falfe Faries ftolen away,
"Whiles yet in infant cradle he did crall," &c.

Edit. 1590. B. III. ft. 26. FARMER.

Dr. Warburton objects to their being heirs to Deftiny, who was ftill in being. But Shakfpeare, I believe, ufes heirs, with his ufual laxity, for children. So, to inherit is ufed in the fenfe of to poffefs. MALONE.

6 —— quality.] i. e. fellowfhip. See The Tempeft: "Ariel, and all his quality." STEEVENS.

7 Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy o-yes.
Pift. Elves, lift your names; filence, you airy toys.] Thefe two lines were certainly intended to rhyme together, as the preceding and fubfequent couplets do; and accordingly, in the old editions, the final words of each line are printed, oyes and toyes. This, therefore, is a ftriking inftance of the inconvenience, which has arifen from modernizing the orthography of Shakfpeare.

TYRWHITT.

8 Where fires thou find'ft unrak'd,] i. e. unmade up, by covering them with fuel, fo that they may be found alight in the morning. This phrafe is ftill current in feveral of our midland counties. So, in Chapman's verfion of the fixteenth Book of Homer's Odyffey:

"—— ftill rake up all thy fire
"In fair cool words:—" STEEVENS.

9 —— as bilberry:] The bilberry is the whortleberry. Fairies were always fuppofed to have a ftrong averfion to fluttery.

Eva. Where's Pede?[1]—Go you, and where you find a maid,
That, ere ſhe ſleep, has thrice her prayers ſaid,

Sleep ſhe as ſound as careleſs infancy;

Thus, in the old ſong of Robin Good-Fellow. See Dr. Percy's Reliques, &c. Vol. III:
"When houſe or hearth doth ſluttiſh lye,
"I pinch the maidens black and blue," &c.
STEEVENS.

[1] Evans. Where's Bede? &c.] Thus the firſt folio. The quartos—Pead.—It is remarkable that, throughout this metrical buſineſs, Sir Hugh appears to drop his Welch pronunciation, though he reſumes it as ſoon as he ſpeaks in his own character. As Falſtaff, however, ſuppoſes him to be a Welch Fairy, his peculiarity of utterance muſt have been preſerved on the ſtage, though it be not diſtinguiſhed in the printed copies. STEEVENS.

[2] —— Go you, and where you find a maid,—
Raiſe up the organs of her fantaſy;] The ſenſe of this ſpeech is—that ſhe, who had performed her religious duties, ſhould be ſecure againſt the illuſion of fancy; and have her ſleep, like that of infancy, undiſturbed by diſordered dreams. This was then the popular opinion, that evil ſpirits had a power over the fancy; and, by that means, could inſpire wicked dreams into thoſe who, on their going to ſleep, had not recommended themſelves to the protection of heaven. So Shakſpeare makes Imogen, on her lying down, ſay:
"From fairies, and the tempters of the night,
"Guard me, beſeech ye!"
As this is the ſenſe, let us ſee how the common reading expreſſes it:
Raiſe up the organs of her fantaſy;
i. e. inflame her imagination with ſenſual ideas; which is juſt the contrary to what the poet would have the ſpeaker ſay. We cannot therefore but conclude he wrote:
REIN up the organs of her fantaſy;

But thoſe as ſleep, and think not on their ſins,
Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, ſhoulders, ſides, and ſhins.

Quick. About, about;
Search Windſor caſtle, elves, within and out:

i. e. curb them, that ſhe be no more diſturbed by irregular imaginations, than children in their ſleep. For he adds immediately:
Sleep ſhe as ſound as careleſs infancy.
So, in The Tempeſt:
"Do not give dalliance
"Too much the rein."
And, in Meaſure for Meaſure:
"I give my ſenſual race the rein."
To give the rein, being juſt the contrary to rein up. The ſame thought he has again in Macbeth:
"——Merciful powers!
"Reſtrain in me the curſed thoughts that nature
"Gives way to in repoſe." WARBURTON.

This is highly plauſible; and yet, raiſe up the organs of her fantaſy, may mean, elevate her ideas above ſenſuality, exalt them to the nobleſt contemplation.

Mr. Malone ſuppoſes the ſenſe of the paſſage, collectively taken, to be as follows. STEEVENS.

Go you, and wherever you find a maid aſleep, that hath thrice prayed to the Deity, though, in conſequence of her innocence, ſhe ſleep as ſoundly as an infant, elevate her fancy, and amuſe her tranquil mind with ſome delightful viſion; but thoſe whom you find aſleep, without having previouſly thought on their ſins, and prayed to heaven for forgiveneſs, pinch, &c. It ſhould be remembered that thoſe perſons who ſleep very ſoundly, ſeldom dream. Hence the injunction to "raiſe up the organs of her fantaſy," "Sleep ſhe," &c. i. e. though ſhe ſleep as ſound, &c.

The fantaſies with which the mind of the virtuous maiden is to be amuſed, are the reverſe of thoſe with which Oberon diſturbs Titania in A Midſummer Night's Dream:
"There ſleeps Titania;—
"With the juice of this I'll ſtreak her eyes,
"And make her full of hateful fantaſies."

Dr. Warburton, who appears to me to have totally miſunderſtood this paſſage, reads—Rein up, &c. in which he has been followed, in my opinion too haſtily, by the ſubſequent editors.
MALONE.

Strew good luck, ouphes, on every ſacred room;[3]
That it may ſtand till the perpetual doom,
In ſtate as wholeſome,[4] as in ſtate 'tis fit;
Worthy the owner, and the owner it.[5]
The ſeveral chairs of order look you ſcour
With juice of balm,[6] and every precious flower:
Each fair inſtalment, coat, and ſeveral creſt,
With loyal blazon, evermore be bleſt!
And nightly, meadow-fairies, look, you ſing,
Like to the Garter's compaſs, in a ring:
The expreſſure that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile-freſh than all the field to ſee;

[3] —— on every ſacred room;] See Chaucer's Cant. Tales, v. 3482, edit. Tyrwhitt: "On four halves of the hous aboute," &c. MALONE.

[4] In ſtate as wholeſome,] Wholeſome here ſignifies integer. He wiſhes the caſtle may ſtand in its preſent ſtate of perfection, which the following words plainly ſhow:

—— as in ſtate 'tis fit. WARBURTON.

[5] Worthy the owner, and the owner it.] And cannot be the true reading. The context will not allow it; and his court to Queen Elizabeth directs us to another:

—— as the owner it.

For, ſure, he had more addreſs than to content himſelf with wiſhing a thing to be, which his complaiſance muſt ſuppoſe actually was, namely, the worth of the owner. WARBURTON.

Surely this change is unneceſſary. The fairy wiſhes that the caſtle and its owner, till the day of doom, may be worthy of each other. Queen Elizabeth's worth was not devolvable, as we have ſeen by the conduct of her fooliſh ſucceſſor. The prayer of the fairy is therefore ſufficiently reaſonable and intelligible without alteration. STEEVENS.

[6] The ſeveral chairs of order look you ſcour
With juice of balm, &c.] It was an article of our ancient luxury, to rub tables, &c. with aromatic herbs. Thus, in the Story of Baucis and Philemon, Ovid. Met. VIII:

" ———— menſam ——
" —— æquatam Mentha abſterſere virenti."

Pliny informs us, that the Romans did the ſame, to drive away evil ſpirits. STEEVENS.

And, Hony ſoit qui mal y penſe, write,
In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white;
Like ſapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery,[7]
Buckled below fair knight-hood's bending knee:
Fairies uſe flowers for their charactery.[8]

[7] In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white;
Like ſapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery,] Theſe lines are moſt miſerably corrupted. In the words—Flowers purple, blue and white—the purple is left uncompared. To remedy this, the editors, who ſeem to have been ſenſible of the imperfection of the compariſon, read—AND rich embroidery; that is, according to them, as the blue and white flowers are compared to ſapphire and pearl, the purple is compared to rich embroidery. Thus, inſtead of mending one falſe ſtep, they have made two, by bringing ſapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery, under one predicament. The lines were wrote thus by the poet:
In emerald tufts, flowers purfled, blue, and white;
Like ſapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery.
i. e. let there be blue and white flowers worked on the greenſward, like ſapphire and pearl in rich embroidery. To purfle, is to over-lay with tinſel, gold thread, &c. ſo our anceſtors called a certain lace of this kind of work a purfling-lace. 'Tis from the French pourfiler. So, Spenſer:
" —— ſhe was yclad,
" All in a ſilken camus, lilly white,
" Purfled upon, with many a folded plight."
The change of and into in, in the ſecond verſe, is neceſſary. For flowers worked, or purfled in the graſs, were not like ſapphire and pearl ſimply, but ſapphire and pearl in embroidery. How the corrupt reading and was introduced into the text, we have ſhown above. WARBURTON.

Whoever is convinced by Dr. Warburton's note, will ſhow he has very little ſtudied the manner of his author, whoſe ſplendid incorrectneſs in this inſtance, as in ſome others, is ſurely preferable to the inſipid regularity propoſed in its room. STEEVENS.

[8] —— charactery.] For the matter with which they make letters. JOHNSON.

So, in Julius Cæſar:

Bullokar, in his Englifh Expofitor improved by R. Browne, 12mo. fays that charactery is "a writing by characters in ftrange marks." In 1588 was printed—"Charactery, an arte of fhorte, fwift, and fecrete writing, by character. Invented by Timothie Brighte, Doctor of Phifike." This feems to have been the firft book upon fhort-hand writing printed in England. DOUCE.

[9] —— lock hand in hand;] The metre requires us to read—"lock hand*s*." Thus Milton, who perhaps had this paffage in his mind, when he makes Comus fay:

"Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
"In a light fantaftic round." STEEVENS.

[1] —— of middle earth.] Spirits are fuppofed to inhabit the ethereal regions, and fairies to dwell under ground; men therefore are in a middle ftation. JOHNSON.

So, in the ancient metrical romance of Syr Guy of Warwick, bl. l. no date:

"And win the fayreft mayde of middle erde."

Again, in Gower, De Confeffione Amantis, fol. 26:

"Adam, for pride loft his price
"In mydell erth."

Again, in the MSS. called William and the Werwolf, in the library of King's College, Cambridge, p. 15:

"And faide God that madeft man, and all middel erthe."

Ruddiman, the learned compiler of the Gloffary to Gawin Douglas's Tranflation of the Æneid, affords the following illuftration of this contefted phrafe: "It is yet in ufe in the North of Scotland among old people, by which we underftand this earth in which we live, in oppofition to the grave: Thus they fay, There's no man in middle erd is able to do it, i. e. no man alive, or on this earth, and fo it is ufed by our author. Or that life is as it were a middle betwixt non-entity, before we are born, and death, when we go hence and are no more feen; as life is called a coming into the world, and death a going out of it."—Again, among the Addenda to the Gloffary aforefaid: "Myddil erd is borrowed from the A. S. MIDDAN-EARD, MIDDANGEARD, mundus, MIDDANEARDLICE, mundanus, SE LAESSA MIDDAN-EARD, microcofmus." STEEVENS.

The author of The Remarks fays, the phrafe fignifies neither more nor lefs, than the earth or world, from its imaginary fituation in the midft or middle of the Ptolemaic fyftem, and has not the leaft reference to either fpirits or fairies. REED.

[2] Vile worm,] The old copy reads—vild. That vild, which fo often occurs in thefe plays, was not an error of the prefs, but the old fpelling and the pronunciation of the time, appears from thefe lines of Heywood, in his Pleafant Dialogues and Dramas, 1637:

"EARTH. What goddefs, or how ftyl'd?
"AGE. Age, am I call'd.
"EARTH. Hence falfe virago vild." MALONE.

[3] —— o'er-look'd even in thy birth.] i. e. flighted as foon as born. STEEVENS.

"In this flame his finger thruft,
"Which will burn him if he luft;
"But if not, away will turn,
"As loth unfpotted flefh to burn." STEEVENS.

[5] And turn him to no pain;] This appears to have been the common phrafeology of our author's time. So again, in The Tempeft:

Pist. A trial, come.

Again, in K. Henry VI. P. III:

"Edward, what fatisfaction canft thou make,
"For bearing arms, for ftirring up my fubjects,
"And all the trouble thou haft turn'd me to."

Of this line there is no trace in the original play, on which the Third Part of K. Henry VI. was formed. Malone.

[6] Eva. It is right; indeed &c.] This fhort fpeech, which is very much in character for Sir Hugh, I have inferted from the old quarto, 1619. Theobald.

I have not difcarded Mr. Theobald's infertion, though perhaps the propriety of it is queftionable. Steevens.

[7] —— and luxury!] Luxury is here ufed for incontinence. So, in King Lear: "To't luxury, pell-mell, for I lack foldiers." Steevens.

i. e. fanguine youth. Steevens.

In Sonnets by H. C. [Henry Conftable,] 1594, we find the fame image:

" To the fire i' the blood." MALONE.

[9] During this ſong,] This direction I thought proper to inſert from the old quartos. THEOBALD.

[1] —— the fairies pinch Falſtaff.] So, in Lyly's Endymion, 1591: " The fairies dance, and, with a ſong, pinch him." And, in his Maid's Metamorphoſis, 1600, they threaten the ſame puniſhment. STEEVENS.

See you thefe, hufband? do not thefe fair yokes
Become the foreft better than the town? [2]

Ford. Now, fir, who's a cuckold now?—Mafter Brook, Falftaff's a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, mafter Brook: And, mafter Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but his buck-bafket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money; which muft be paid to mafter Brook; [3] his horfes are arrefted for it, mafter Brook.

[2] See you thefe, hufband? do not thefe fair yokes
Become the foreft better than the town?] Mrs. Page's meaning is this. Seeing the horns (the types of cuckoldom) in Falftaff's hands, fhe afks her hufband, whether thofe yokes are not more proper in the foreft than in the town; i. e. than in his own family. THEOBALD.

The editor of the fecond folio changed yoaks to—oaks.
MALONE.

Perhaps, only the printer of the fecond folio is to blame, for the omiffion of the letter—y. STEEVENS.

I am confident that oaks is the right reading. I agree with Theobald that the words, "See you thefe, hufbands?" relate to the buck's horns; but what refemblance is there between the horns of a buck and a yoak? What connection is there between a yoak and a foreft? Why, none; whereas, on the other hand, the connection between a foreft and an oak is evident; nor is the refemblance lefs evident between a tree and the branches of a buck's horns; they are indeed called branches from that very refemblance; and the horns of a deer are called in French les bois. Though horns are types of cuckoldom, yoaks are not; and furely the types of cuckoldom, whatever they may be, are more proper for a town than for a foreft. I am furprifed that the fubfequent editors fhould have adopted an amendment, which makes the paffage nonfenfe. M. MASON.

I have inferted Mr. M. Mafon's note, becaufe he appears to think it brings conviction with it. Perhaps, however, (as Dr. Farmer obferves to me,) he was not aware that the extremities of yokes for cattle, as ftill ufed in feveral counties of England, bend upwards, and rifing very high, in fhape refemble horns.
STEEVENS.

[3] ——to mafter Brook;] We ought rather to read with the old quarto—"which muft be paid to mafter Ford;" for as

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again, but I will always count you my deer.

Fal. I do begin to perceive that I am made an aſs.

Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Fal. And theſe are not fairies? I was three or four times in the thought, they were not fairies: and yet the guiltineſs of my mind, the ſudden ſurprize of my powers, drove the groſſneſs of the foppery into a received belief, in deſpite of the teeth of all rhyme and reaſon, that they were fairies. See now, how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent,[4] when 'tis upon ill employment!

Eva. Sir John Falſtaff, ſerve Got, and leave your deſires, and fairies will not pinſe you.

Ford, to mortify Falſtaff, addreſſes him throughout his ſpeech by the name of Brook, the deſcribing himſelf by the ſame name creates a confuſion. A modern editor plauſibly enough reads— "which muſt be paid too, Maſter Brook;" but the firſt ſketch ſhows that to is right; for the ſentence, as it ſtands in the quarto, will not admit too. Malone.

[4] —— how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent,] A Jack o' Lent appears to have been ſome puppet which was thrown at in Lent, like Shrove-tide cocks.

So, in the old comedy of Lady Alimony, 1659:

"—— throwing cudgels
"At Jack-a-lents, or Shrove-cocks."

Again, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Tamer Tamed:

"—— if I forfeit,
"Make me a Jack o' Lent, and break my ſhins
"For untagg'd points, and counters."——

Again, in Ben Jonſon's Tale of a Tub:

"—— on an Aſh-Wedneſday,
"Where thou didſt ſtand ſix weeks the Jack o' Lent,
"For boys to hurl three throws a penny at thee."

Steevens.

Ford. Well ſaid, fairy Hugh.

Eva. And leave you your jealouſies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never miſtruſt my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good Engliſh.

Fal. Have I laid my brain in the ſun, and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent ſo groſs o'er-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welch goat too? Shall I have a coxcomb of frize? [5] 'tis time I were choked with a piece of toaſted cheeſe.

Eva. Seeſe is not good to give putter; your pelly is all putter.

Fal. Seeſe and putter! have I lived to ſtand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of Engliſh? This is enough to be the decay of luſt and late-walking, through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, ſir John, do you think, though we would have thruſt virtue out of our hearts by the head and ſhoulders, and have given ourſelves without ſcruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hodge-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs. Page. A puffed man?

Page. Old, cold, withered, and of intolerable entrails?

Ford. And one that is as ſlanderous as Satan?

[5] —— a coxcomb of frize?] i. e. a fool's cap made out of Welch materials. Wales was famous for this cloth. So, in K. Edward I. 1599: "Enter Lluellin, alias Prince of Wales, &c. with ſwords and bucklers, and frieze jerkins." Again: "Enter Suſſex, &c. with a mantle of frieze." "—my boy ſhall weare a mantle of this country's weaving, to keep him warm."

Steevens.

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Eva. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and sack, and wine, and metheglins, and to drinkings, and swearings, and starings, pribbles and prabbles?

Fal. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welch flannel:[6] ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me:[7] use me as you will.

[6] —— the Welch flannel;] The very word is derived from a Welch one, so that it is almost unnecessary to add that flannel was originally the manufacture of Wales. In the old play of K. Edward I. 1599: "Enter Hugh ap David, Guenthian his wench in flannel, and Jack his novice."

Again:

"Here's a wholesome Welch wench,
"Lapt in her flannel, as warm as wool." Steevens.

[7] —— ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me:] Though this be perhaps not unintelligible, yet it is an odd way of confessing his dejection. I should wish to read:

——ignorance itself has a plume o' me.

That is, I am so depressed, that ignorance itself plucks me, and decks itself with the spoils of my weakness. Of the present reading, which is probably right, the meaning may be, I am so enfeebled, that ignorance itself weighs me down and oppresses me. Johnson.

"Ignorance itself, says Falstaff, is a plummet o'er me." If any alteration be necessary, I think, "Ignorance itself is a planet o'er me," would have a chance to be right. Thus Bobadil excuses his cowardice: "Sure I was struck with a planet, for I had no power to touch my weapon." Farmer.

As Mr. M. Mason observes, there is a passage in this very play which tends to support Dr. Farmer's amendment.

"I will awe him with my cudgel; it shall hang like a meteor o'er the cuckold's horns: Master Brook, thou shalt know, I will predominate over the peasant."

Dr. Farmer might also have countenanced his conjecture by Ford. Marry, ſir, we'll bring you to Windſor, to one maſter Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you ſhould have been a pander: over and above that you have ſuffered, I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, huſband,[8] let that go to make amends:
Forgive that ſum, and ſo we'll all be friends.

Ford. Well, here's my hand; all's forgiven at laſt.

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou ſhalt eat a poſſet to-night at my houſe; where I will deſire thee to laugh at my wife,[9] that now laughs at a paſſage in K. Henry VI. where Queen Margaret ſays, that Suffolk's face

"—— rul'd like a wandering planet over me."

STEEVENS.

Perhaps Falſtaff's meaning may be this: "Ignorance itſelf is a plummet o'er me: i. e. above me;" ignorance itſelf is not ſo low as I am, by the length of a plummet line. TYRWHITT.

Ignorance itſelf is a plummet o'er me—i. e. ſerves to point out my obliquities. This is ſaid in conſequence of Evans's laſt ſpeech. The alluſion is to the examination of a carpenter's work by the plummet held over it; of which line Sir Hugh is here repreſented as the lead. HENLEY.

I am ſatisfied with the old reading. MALONE.

[8] Mrs. Ford. Nay, huſband,] This and the following little ſpeech I have inſerted from the old quartos. The retrenchment, I preſume, was by the players. Sir John Falſtaff is ſufficiently puniſhed, in being diſappointed and expoſed. The expectation of his being proſecuted for the twenty pounds, gives the concluſion too tragical a turn. Beſides, it is poetical juſtice that Ford ſhould ſuſtain this loſs, as a fine for his unreaſonable jealouſy. THEOBALD.

[9] —— laugh at my wife,] The two plots are excellently connected, and the tranſition very artfully made in this ſpeech.

JOHNSON.

thee: Tell her, maſter Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctors doubt that: If Anne Page be my daughter, ſhe is, by this, doctor Caius' wiſe. [Aſide.

Enter SLENDER.

Slen. Whoo, ho! ho! father Page!

Page. Son! how now? how now, ſon? have you deſpatched?

Slen. Deſpatched!—I'll make the beſt in Glo-ceſterſhire know on't; would I were hanged, la, elſe.

Page. Of what, ſon?

Slen. I came yonder at Eton to marry miſtreſs Anne Page, and ſhe's a great lubberly boy: If it had not been i' the church, I would have ſwinged him, or he ſhould have ſwinged me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never ſtir, and 'tis a poſt-maſter's boy.

Page. Upon my life then you took the wrong.

Slen. What need you tell me that? I think ſo, when I took a boy for a girl: If I had been mar-ried to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you, how you ſhould know my daughter by her garments?

Slen. I went to her in white,[1] and cry'd, mum,

[1] ——in white,] The old copy, by the inadvertence of either the author or tranſcriber, reads—in green; and in the two ſubſequent ſpeeches of Mrs. Page, inſtead of green we find white. The corrections, which are fully juſtified by what has preceded, (ſee p. 191,) were made by Mr. Pope. MALONE.

and ſhe cryed budget, as Anne and I had appointed; and yet it was not Anne, but a poſt-maſter's boy.

Eva. Jeſhu! Maſter Slender, cannot you ſee but marry boys? [2]

Page. O, I am vexed at heart: What ſhall I do?

Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpoſe; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, ſhe is now with the doctor at the deanery, and there married.

Enter Caius.

Caius. Vere is miſtreſs Page? By gar, I am cozened; I ha' married un garçon, a boy; un paiſan, by gar, a boy; it is not Anne Page: by gar, I am cozened.

Mrs. Page. Why, did you take her in green?

Caius. Ay, be gar, and 'tis a boy: be gar, I'll raiſe all Windſor. [Exit Caius.

Ford. This is ſtrange: Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart miſgives me: Here comes maſter Fenton.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

How now, maſter Fenton?

Anne. Pardon, good father! good my mother, pardon!

[2] —— marry boys?] This and the next ſpeech are likewiſe reſtorations from the old quarto. Steevens.

Page. Now, miſtreſs? how chance you went not with maſter Slender?

Mrs. Page. Why went you not with maſter doctor, maid?

Fent. You do amaze her:[3] Hear the truth of it.
You would have married her moſt ſhamefully,
Where there was no proportion held in love.
The truth is, She and I, long ſince contracted,
Are now ſo ſure, that nothing can diſſolve us.
The offence is holy, that ſhe hath committed:
And this deceit loſes the name of craft,
Of diſobedience, or unduteous title;
Since therein ſhe doth evitate and ſhun
A thouſand irreligious curſed hours,
Which forced marriage would have brought upon her.

Ford. Stand not amaz'd: here is no remedy:—
In love, the heavens themſelves do guide the ſtate;
Money buys lands, and wives are ſold by fate.

Fal. I am glad, though you have ta'en a ſpecial ſtand to ſtrike at me, that your arrow hath glanced.

Page. Well, what remedy?[4] Fenton, heaven give thee joy!

[3] —— amaze her;] i. e. confound her by your queſtions. So, in Cymbeline, Act IV. ſc. iii:
"I am amaz'd with matter."
Again, in Goulart's Memorable Hiſtories, &c. 4to. 1607: "I have ſeene two men (the father and the ſonne) have their bodies ſo amazed and deaded with thunder," &c. Steevens.

[4] Page. Well, what remedy?] In the firſt ſketch of this play, which, as Mr. Pope obſerves, is much inferior to the latter performance, the only ſentiment of which I regret the omiſſion, occurs at this critical time. When Fenton brings in his wife, there is this dialogue:

Mrs. Ford. Come, Mrs. Page, I muſt be bold with you.
'Tis pity to part love that is ſo true.

What cannot be eſchew'd, muſt be embrac'd.

Fal. When night-dogs run, all ſorts of deer are chas'd.[5]

Eva. I will dance and eat plums at your wedding.[6]

Mrs. Page. Well, I will muſe no further:— Maſter Fenton,
Heaven give you many, many merry days!—
Good huſband, let us every one go home,
And laugh this ſport o'er by a country fire;
Sir John and all.

Ford. Let it be ſo:—Sir John,

Mrs. Page. [Aſide.] Although that I have miſs'd in my intent,
Yet I am glad my huſband's match is croſs'd.
—— Here Fenton, take her.——

Eva. Come, maſter Page, you muſt needs agree.

Ford. I' faith, ſir, come, you ſee your wife is pleas'd.

Page. I cannot tell, and yet my heart is eas'd;
And yet it doth me good the doctor miſs'd.
Come hither, Fenton, and come hither daughter. JOHNSON.

[5] —— all ſorts of deer are chas'd.] Young and old, does as well as bucks. He alludes to Fenton's having juſt run down Anne Page, MALONE.

[6] I will dance and eat plums at your wedding.] I have no doubt but this line, ſuppoſed to be ſpoken by Evans, is miſplaced, and ſhould come in after that ſpoken by Falſtaff, which being intended to rhyme with the laſt line of Page's ſpeech, ſhould immediately follow it; and then the paſſage will run thus:

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, Heaven give thee joy!
What cannot be eſchew'd, muſt be embrac'd.
Fal. When night-dogs run, all ſorts of deer are chac'd.
Evans. I will dance and eat plums, &c. M. MASON.

I have availed myſelf of Mr. M. Maſon's very judicious remark, which had alſo been made by Mr. Malone, who obſerves that Evans's ſpeech—"I will dance," &c. was reſtored from the firſt quarto by Mr. Pope. STEEVENS.

To maſter Brook you yet ſhall hold your word;
For he, to-night, ſhall lie with miſtreſs Ford.[7]
[Exeunt.

[7] Of this play there is a tradition preſerved by Mr. Rowe, that it was written at the command of Queen Elizabeth, who was ſo delighted with the character of Falſtaff, that ſhe wiſhed it to be diffuſed through more plays; but ſuſpecting that it might pall by continued uniformity, directed the poet to diverſify his manner, by ſhewing him in love. No taſk is harder than that of writing to the ideas of another. Shakſpeare knew what the Queen, if the ſtory be true, ſeems not to have known—that by any real paſſion of tenderneſs, the ſelfiſh craft, the careleſs jollity, and the lazy luxury of Falſtaff muſt have ſuffered ſo much abatement, that little of his former caſt would have remained. Falſtaff could not love, but by ceaſing to be Falſtaff. He could only counterfeit love, and his profeſſions could be prompted, not by the hope of pleaſure, but of money. Thus the poet approached as near as he could to the work enjoined him; yet having perhaps in the former plays completed his own idea, ſeems not to have been able to give Falſtaff all his former power of entertainment.

This comedy is remarkable for the variety and number of the perſonages, who exhibit more characters appropriated and diſcriminated, than perhaps can be found in any other play.

Whether Shakſpeare was the firſt that produced upon the Engliſh ſtage the effect of language diſtorted and depraved by provincial or foreign pronunciation, I cannot certainly decide.* This mode of forming ridiculous characters can confer praiſe only on him who originally diſcovered it, for it requires not much of either wit or judgement: its ſucceſs muſt be derived almoſt wholly from the player, but its power in a ſkilful mouth, even he that deſpiſes it, is unable to reſiſt.

The conduct of this drama is deficient; the action begins and ends often, before the concluſion, and the different parts might change places without inconvenience; but its general power, that power by which all works of genius ſhall finally be tried, is ſuch, that perhaps it never yet had reader or ſpectator who did not think it too ſoon at the end. JOHNSON.

* In The Three Ladies of London, 1584, is the character of an Italian merchant, very ſtrongly marked by foreign pronunciation. Dr. Dodypoll, in the comedy which bears his name, is, like Caius, a French phyſician. This piece appeared at leaſt a year before The Merry Wives of Windsor. The hero of it ſpeaks ſuch another jargon as the antagoniſt of Sir Hugh, and like him is cheated of his miſtreſs. In ſeveral other pieces, more ancient than the earlieſt of Shakſpeare's, provincial characters are introduced.
STEEVENS.

The ſtory of The Two Lovers of Piſa, from which (as Dr. Farmer has obſerved) Falſtaff's adventures in this play ſeem to have been taken, is thus related in Tarleton's Newes out of Purgatorie, bl. l. no date. [Entered in the Stationers' Books, June 16, 1590.]

"In Piſa, a famous cittie of Italye, there liued a gentleman of good linage and lands, feared as well for his wealth, as honoured for his vertue; but indeed well thought on for both: yet the better for his riches. This gentleman had one onelye daughter called Margaret, who for her beauty was liked of all, and deſired of many: but neither might their ſutes, nor her own preuaile about her father's reſolution, who was determyned not to marrye her, but to ſuch a man as ſhould be able in abundance to maintain the excellency of her beauty. Diuers young gentlemen proffered large feoffments, but in vaine: a maide ſhee muſt bee ſtill: till at laſt an olde doctor in the towne, that profeſſed phiſicke, became a ſutor to her, who was a welcome man to her father, in that he was one of the welthieſt men in all Piſa. A tall ſtrippling he was, and a proper youth, his age about foureſcore; his head as white as milke, wherein for offence ſake there was left neuer a tooth: but it is no matter; what he wanted in perſon he had in the purſe; which the poore gentlewoman little regarded, wiſhing rather to tie herſelf to one that might fit her content, though they liued meanely, then to him with all the wealth in Italye. But ſhee was yong and foreſt to follow her father's direction, who vpon large couenants was content his daughter ſhould marry with the doctor, and whether ſhe like him or no, the match was made vp, and in ſhort time ſhe was married. The poore wench was bound to the ſtake, and had not onely an old impotent man, but one that was ſo jealous, as none might enter into his houſe without ſuſpicion, nor ſhe doo any thing without blame: the leaſt glance, the ſmalleſt countenance, any ſmile, was a manifeſt inſtance to him, that ſhee thought of others better than himſelfe; thvs he himſelfe liued in a hell, and tormented his wife in as ill perplexitie. At laſt it chaunced, that a young gentleman of the citie comming by her houſe, and ſeeing her looke out at her window, noting her rare and excellent proportion, fell in loue with her, and that ſo extreamelye, as his paſſion had no means till her fauour might mittigate his heartſicke content. The young man that was ignorant in amorous matters, and had neuer been vſed to courte anye gentlewoman, thought to reueale his paſſions to ſome one freend, that might give him counſaile for the winning of her loue; and thinking experience was the ſureſt maiſter, on a daye ſeeing the olde doctor walking in the churche, (that was Margarets huſband,) little knowing who he was, he thought this the fitteſt man to whom he might diſcouer his paſſions, for that hee was olde and knewe much, and was a phyſition that with his drugges might help him forward in his purpoſes: ſo that ſeeing the old man walke ſolitary, he ioinde vnto him, and after a curteous ſalute, told him he was to impart a matter of great import vnto him; wherein if hee would not onely be ſecrete, but endeauour to pleaſure him, his pains ſhould be euery way to the full conſidered. You muſt imagine, gentleman, quoth Mutio, for ſo was the doctors name, that men of our profeſſion are no blabs, but hold their ſecrets in their hearts' bottome; and therefore reueale what you pleaſe, it ſhall not onely be concealed, but cured; if either my art or counſaile may do it. Upon this Lionello, (ſo was the young gentleman called,) told and diſcourſt vnto him from point to point how he was falne in loue with a gentlewoman that was married to one of his profeſſion; diſcouered her dwelling and the houſe; and for that he was vnacquainted with the woman, and a man little experienced in loue matters, he required his favour to further him with his aduiſe. Mutio at this motion was ſtung to the hart, knowing it was his wife hee was fallen in love withal: yet to conceale the matter, and to experience his wiue's chaſtity, and that if ſhe plaide falſe, he might be reuenged on them both, he diſſembled the matter, and anſwered, that he knewe the woman very well, and commended her highly; but ſaide, ſhe had a churle to her huſband, and therefore he thought ſhee would bee the more tractable: trie her man, quoth hee; fainte hart neuer woonne fair lady; and if ſhee will not bee brought to the bent of your bowe, I will provide ſuch a potion as ſhall diſpatch all to your owne content; and to giue you further inſtructions for opportunitie, knowe that her huſband is foorth euery afternoone from three till ſixe. Thus farre I have aduiſed you, becauſe I pitty your paſſions as my ſelfe being once a louer: but now I charge thee, reueale it to none whomſoever, leſt it doo diſparage my credit, to meddle in amorous matters. The young gentleman not onely promiſed all carefull ſecrecy, but gaue him harty thanks for his good counſell, promiſing to meete him there the next day, and tell him what newes. Then hee left the old man, who was almoſt mad for feare his wife ſhould any way play falſe. He ſaw by experience, braue men came to beſiege the caſtle, and ſeeing it was in a woman's cuſtodie, and had ſo weake a gouernor as himſelfe, he doubted it would in time be deliuered up: which feare made him almoſt franticke, yet he driude of the time in great torment, till he might heare from his riual. Lionello, he haſtes him home, and ſutes him in his brauerye, and goes down towards the houſe of Mutio, where he ſees her at her windowe, whom he courted with a paſſionate looke, with ſuch an humble ſalute, as ſhee might perceiue how the gentleman was affectionate. Margaretta looking earneſtly upon him, and noting the perfection of his proportion, accounted him in her eye the flower of all Piſa; thinkte herſelfe fortunate if ſhe might haue him for her freend, to ſupply thoſe defaultes that ſhe found in Mutio. Sundry times that afternoone he paſt by her window, and he caſt not vp more louing lookes, then he receiued gratious fauours: which did ſo incourage him, that the next daye betweene three and ſixe hee went to her houſe, and knocking at the doore, deſired to ſpeake with the miſtris of the houſe, who hearing by her maid's deſcription what he was, commaunded him to come in, where ſhe interteined him with all curteſie.

"The youth that neuer before had giuen the attempt to couet a ladye, began his exordium with a bluſhe; and yet went forward ſo well, that he diſcourſt vnto her howe he loued her, and that if it might pleaſe her ſo to accept of his ſeruice, as of a freende euer vowde in all duetye to bee at her commaunde, the care of her honour ſhould bee deerer to him then his life, and hee would bee ready to priſe her diſcontent with his bloud at all times.

"The gentlewoman was a little coye, but before they part they concluded that the next day at foure of the clock hee ſhould come thither and eate a pound of cherries, which was reſolued on with a ſuccado des labras; and ſo with a loath to depart they took their leaues. Lionello, as joyfull a man as might be, hyed him to the church to meete his olde doctor, where hee found him in his olde walke. What newes, ſyr, quoth Mutio? How have you ſped? Even as I can wiſhe, quoth Lionello; for I haue been with my miſtreſſe, and haue found her ſo tractable, that I hope to make the old peaſant her huſband look broad-hedded by a pair of browantlers. How deepe this ſtrooke into Mutio's hart, let them imagine that can conjecture what ieloufie is; inſomuch that the olde doctor aſkte, when ſhould be the time: marry, quoth Lionello, to morrow at foure of the clocke in the afternoone; and then maiſter doctor, quoth hee, will I dub the olde ſquire knight of the forked order.

"Thus they paſt on in chat, till it grew late; and then Lyonello went home to his lodging, and Mutio to his houſe, couering all his ſorrowes with a merrye countenance, with full reſolution to revenge them both the next day with extremitie. He paſt the night as patiently as he could, and the next day after dinner awaye hee went, watching when it ſhould bee four of the clocke. At the houre juſtly came Lyonello, and was intertained with all curteſie: but ſcarſe had they kiſt, ere the maide cried out to her miſtreſſe that her maiſter was at the doore; for he hasted, knowing that a horne was but a litle while in grafting. Margaret at this alarum was amazed, and yet for a shifte chopt Lyonello into a great driefatte full of feathers, and sat her downe close to her woorke: by that came Mutio in blowing; and as though he came to looke somewhat in haste, called for the keyes of his chambers, and looked in euery place, searching so narrowlye in eurye corner of the house, that he left not the very priuie vnsearcht. Seeing he could not finde him, hee saide nothing, but fayning himself not well at ease, stayde at home, so that poore Lionello was faine to staye in the drifatte till the old churle was in bed with his wife: and then the maide let him out at a backe doore, who went home with a flea in his eare to his lodging.

"Well, the next daye he went again to meete his doctor, whome hee found in his woonted walke. What news, quoth Mutio? How have you sped? * A poxe of the old slaue, quoth Lionello, I was no sooner in, and had giuen my mistresse one kisse, but the iealous asse was at the door; the maide spied him, and, cryed, her maister: so that the poore gentlewoman for very shifte, was faine to put me in a driefatte of feathers that stoode in an olde chamber, and there I was faine to tarrie while he was in bed and asleepe, and then the maide let me out, and I departed.

"But it is no matter; 'twas but a chaunce; and I hope to crye quittance with him ere it be long. As how, quoth Mutio? Marry thus, quoth Lionello: she sent me woord by her maide this daye, that upon Thursday next the old churle suppeth with a patient of his a mile out of Pisa, and then I feare not but to quitte him for all. It is well, quoth Mutio; fortune bee your freende. I thank you, quoth Lionello; and so after a little more prattle they departed.

"To be shorte, Thursday came; and about sixe of the clocke foorth goes Mutio, no further than a freendes house of his, from whence hee might descrye who went into his house. Straight he sawe Lionello enter in; and after goes hee, insomuch that hee was scarselye sitten downe, before the mayde cryed out againe, my maister comes. The good wife that before had provided for afterclaps, had found out a priuie place between two seelings of a plauncher, and there she thrust Lionello; and her husband came sweting. What news, quoth shee, drives you home againe so soone, husband? Marrye, sweete wife, (quoth he,) a fearfull dreame that I had this night, which came to my remembrance; and that was this: Methought there was a villeine that came secretly into my house with a naked poinard in his hand, and hid himſelfe; but I could not finde the place: with that mine noſe bled, and I came backe; and by the grace of God I will ſeek euery corner in the houſe for the quiet of my minde. Marry I pray you doo, huſband, quoth ſhe. With that he lockt in all the doors, and began to ſearch euery chamber, euery hole, euery cheſt, euery tub, the very well; he ſtabd every featherbed through, and made hauocke, like a mad man, which made him thinke all was in vaine, and hee began to blame his eies that thought they ſaw that which they did not. Upon this he reſte halfe lunaticke, and all night he was very wakefull; that towards the morning he fell into a dead ſleepe, and then was Lionello conueighed away.

" In the morning when Mutio wakened, hee thought how by no means hee ſhould bee able to take Lyonello tardy; yet he laid in his head a moſt dangerous plot, and that was this. Wiſe, quoth he, I muſt the next Monday ride to Vycenſa to viſit an olde patient of mine; till my returne, which will be ſome ten dayes, I will have thee ſtay at our little graunge houſe in the countrey. Marry very well content, huſband, quoth ſhe: with that he kiſt her, and was verye pleaſant, as though he had ſuſpected nothing, and away hee flinges to the church, where he meetes Lionello. What ſir, quoth he, what newes? Is your miſtreſſe yours in poſſeſſion? No, a plague of the old ſlaue, quoth he: I think he is either a witch, or els woorkes by magick: for I can no ſooner enter in the doors, but he is at my backe, and ſo he was again yeſternight; for I was not warm in my ſeat before the maide cried, my maiſter comes; and then was the poore ſoule faine to conueigh me between two ſeelings of a chamber in a fit place for the purpoſe: wher I laught hartely to myſelf, too ſee how he ſought euery corner, ranſackt euery tub, and ſtabd every featherbed,—but in vaine; I was ſafe enough till the morning, and then when he was faſt aſleepe, I lept out. Fortune frowns on you, quoth Mutio: Ay, but I hope, quoth Lionello, this is the laſt time, and now ſhee will begin to ſmile; for on Monday next he rides to Vicenſa, and his wyfe lyes at a grange houſe a little of the towne, and there in his abſence I will revenge all forepaſſed misfortunes. God ſend it be ſo, quoth Mutio; and took his leaue. Theſe two louers longed for Monday, and at laſt it came. Early in the morning Mutio horſt himſelfe, and his wife, his maide, and a man, and no more, and away he rides to his grange houſe; where after he had brok his faſt he took his leaue, and away towards Vicenſa. He rode not far ere by a falſe way he returned into a thicket, and there with a company of cuntry peaſants lay in an ambuſcade to take the young gentleman. In the afternoon comes Lionello gallopping; and aſſoon as he came within ſight of the houſe, he ſent back his horſe by his boy, & went eaſily afoot, and there at the very entry was entertained by Margaret, who led him up yᵉ ſtaires, and conuaid him into her bedchamber, ſaying he was welcome into ſo mean a cottage: but quoth ſhe, now I hope fortune ſhal not envy the purity of our loues. Alas, alas, miſtris (cried the maid,) heer is my maiſter, and 100 men with him, with bils and ſtaues. We are betraid, quoth Lionel, and I am but a dead man. Feare not, quoth ſhe, but follow me; and ſtraight ſhe carried him downe into a lowe parlor, where ſtoode an old rotten cheſt full of writinges. She put him into that, and couered him with old papers and euidences, and went to the gate to meet her huſband. Why ſignior Mutio, what means this hurly burly, quoth ſhe? Vile and ſhameleſſe ſtrumpet as thou art, thou ſhalt know by and by, quoth he. Where is thy loue? All we haue watcht him, & ſeen him enter in: now quoth he, ſhal neither thy tub of feathers nor thy ſeeling ſerue, for periſh he ſhall with fire, or els fall into my hands. Doo thy worſt, iealous foole, quoth ſhe; I aſk thee no fauour. With that in a rage he beſet the houſe round, and then ſet fire on it. Oh! in what a perplexitie was poore Lionello, that was ſhut in a cheſt, and the fire about his eares? And how was Margaret paſſionat, that knew her louer in ſuch danger? Yet ſhe made light of the matter, and as one in a rage called her maid to her and ſaid: Come on, wench; ſeeing thy maiſter mad with iealouſie hath ſet the houſe and al my liuing on fire, I will be reuenged vpon him; help me heer to lift this old cheſt where all his writings and deeds are; let that burne firſt; and aſſoon as I ſee that on fire, I will walk towards my freends: for the old foole wil be beggard, and I will refuſe him. Mutio that knew al his obligations and ſtatutes lay there, puld her back, and bad two of his men carry the cheſt into the feeld, and ſee it were ſafe; himſelf ſtanding by and ſeeing his houſe burnd downe, ſticke and ſtone. Then quieted in his minde he went home with his wife, and began to flatter her, thinking aſſuredly yᵗ he had burnd her paramour; cauſing his cheſt to be carried in a cart to his houſe at Piſa. Margaret impatient went to her mothers, and complained to her and to her brethren of the iealouſie of her huſband; who maintained her it be true, and deſired but a daies reſpite to proue it. Wel, hee was bidden to ſupper the next night at her mothers, ſhe thinking to make her daughter and him freends againe. In the meane time he to his woonted walk in the church, & there præter expectationem he found Lionello walking. Wondring at this, he ſtraight enquires, what news? What newes, maiſter doctor, quoth he, and he fell in a great laughing: in faith yeſterday I ſcapt a ſcowring; for, ſyrrah, I went to the grange houſe, where I was appointed to come, and I was no ſooner gotten vp the chamber, but the magicall villeine her huſband beſet the houſe with bils and ſtaues, and that he might be ſure no ſeeling nor corner ſhould ſhrowde me, he ſet the houſe on fire, and ſo burnt it to the ground. Why, quoth Mutio, and how did you eſcape? Alas, quoth he, wel fare a woman's wit! She conueighed me into an old cheſte full of writings, which ſhe knew her huſband durſt not burne; and ſo was I ſaued and brought to Piſa, and yeſternight by her maide let home to my lodging. This, quoth he, is the pleaſanteſt ieſt that ever I heard; and vpon this I haue a ſute to you. I am this night bidden foorth to ſupper; you ſhall be my gueſt; onelye I will craue ſo much favour, as after ſupper for a pleaſant ſporte to make relation what ſucceſſe you haue had in your loues. For that I will not ſticke, quothe he; and ſo he carried Lionello to his mother-in-lawes houſe with him, and diſcourſed to his wiues brethren who he was, and how at ſupper he would diſcloſe the whole matter: for quoth he, he knowes not that I am Margarets huſband. At this all the brethren bad him welcome, & ſo did the mother too; and Margaret ſhe was kept out of ſight. Suppertime being come, they fell to their victals, & Lionello was carrowſt vnto by Mutio, who was very pleaſant, to draw him to a merry humor, that he might to the ful diſcourſe the effect & fortunes of his loue. Supper being ended, Mutio requeſted him to tel to the gentleman what had hapned between him & his miſtreſſe. Lionello with a ſmiling countenance began to deſcribe his miſtreſſe, the houſe and ſtreet where ſhe dwelt, how he fell in loue with her, and how he vſed the counſell of this doctor, who in al his affaires was his ſecretarye. Margaret heard all this with a greate feare; & when he came at the laſt point ſhe cauſed a cup of wine to be giuen him by one of her ſiſters wherein was a ring that he had giuen Margaret. As he had told how he eſcapt burning, and was ready to confirm all for a troth, the gentlewoman drunke to him; who taking the cup, and ſeeing the ring, hauing a quick wit and a reaching head, ſpide the fetch, and perceiued that all this while this was his louers huſband, to whome he had reuealed theſe eſcapes. At this drinking yͤ wine, and ſwallowing the ring into his mouth, he went forward: Gentlemen, quoth he, how like you of my loues and my fortunes? Wel, quoth the gentlemen; I pray you is it true? As true, quoth he, as if I would be ſo ſimple as to reueal what I did to Margaret's huſband: for know you, gentlemen, that I knew this Mutio to be her huſband whom I notified to be my louer; and for yͭ he was generally known through Piſa to be a iealous fool, therefore with theſe tales I brought him into this paradice, which indeed are follies of mine own braine: for truſt me, by the faith of a gentleman, I neuer ſpake to the woman, was never in her companye, neither doo I know her if I ſee her. At this they all fell in a laughing at Mutio, who was aſhamed that Lionello had ſo ſcoft him: but all was well,—they were made friends; but the ieſt went ſo to his hart, that he ſhortly after died, and Lionello enioyed the ladye: and for that they two were the death of the old man, now are they plagued in purgatory, and he whips them with nettles."

It is obſervable that in the foregoing novel (which, I believe, Shakſpeare had read,) there is no trace of the buck-baſket.—In the firſt tale of The Fortunate, the Deceived, and the Unfortunate Lovers, (of which I have an edition printed in 1684, but the novels it contains had probably appeared in Engliſh in our author's time,) a young ſtudent of Bologne is taught by an old doctor how to make love; and his firſt eſſay is practiſed on his inſtructors wife. The jealous huſband having tracked his pupil to his houſe, enters unexpectedly, fully perſuaded that he ſhould detect the lady and her lover together; but the gallant is protected from his fury by being concealed under a heap of linen half-dried; and afterwards informs him, (not knowing that his tutor was likewiſe his miſtreſs's huſband,) what a lucky eſcape he had. It is therefore, I think, highly probable that Shakſpeare had read both ſtories. MALONE.

Sir Hugh Evans.] See p. 7, and 8.

The queſtion whether prieſts were formerly knights in conſequence of being called Sir, ſtill remains to be decided. Examples that thoſe of the lower claſs were ſo called are very numerous; and hence it may be fairly inferred that they at leaſt were not knights, nor is there perhaps a ſingle inſtance of the order of knighthood being conferred upon eccleſiaſtics of any degree.

Having caſually, however, met with a note in Dyer's Reports, which ſeems at firſt view not only to contain ſome authority for the cuſtom of knighting prieſts by Abbots, in conſequence of a charter granted to the Abbot of Reading for that purpoſe, but likewiſe the opinion of two learned judges, founded thereupon, that prieſts were anciently knights, I have been induced to enter a little more fully upon this diſcuſſion, and to examine the validity of thoſe opinions. The extract from Dyer is a marginal note in p. 216. B. in the following words: "Trin. 3 Jac. Blanc le Roy Holcraft and Gibbons, cas Popham dit que il ad view un ancient charter grant al Abbot de Reading per Roy d'Angliterre, a fair knight, ſur que ſon conceit fuit que l'Abbot fait, eccleſiaſtical perſons, knights, d'illonque come a luy le nosmes de Sir John and Sir Will. que est done al ascun Clerks a cest jour fuit derive quel opinion Coke Attorney-General applaud disont que fueront milites cœlestes & milites terrestres." It is proper to mention here that all the reports have been diligently searched for this case of Holcraft and Gibbons, in hopes of finding some further illustration, but without success.

The charter then above-mentioned appears upon further enquiry to have been the foundation charter of Reading Abbey, and to have been granted by Henry I. in 1125. The words of it referred to by Chief Justice Popham, and upon which he founded his opinion, are as follow: "Nec faciat milites nisi in sacra veste Christi, in qua parvulos suscipere modestè caveat. Maturos autem seu discretos tam clericos quam laicos provide suscipiat." This passage is likewise cited by Selden in his notes upon Eadmer, p. 206, and to illustrate the word "clericos" he refers to Mathew Paris for an account of a priest called John Gatesdene, who was created a knight by Henry III. but not until after he had resigned all his benefices, "as he ought to have done," says the historian, who in another place relating the disgrace of Peter de Rivallis, Treasurer to Henry III. (See p. 405, edit. 1640,) has clearly shown how incompatible it was that the clergy should bear arms, as the profession of a knight required; and as a further proof may be added the well known story, related by the same historian, of Richard I. and the warlike Bishop of Beauvais. I conceive then that the word "clericos" refers to such of the clergy who should apply for the order of knighthood under the usual restriction of quitting their former profession; and from Selden's note upon the passage it may be collected that this was his own opinion; or it may possibly allude to those particular knights who were considered as religious or ecclesiastical, such as the knights of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, &c. concerning whom see Ashmole's Order of the Garter, p. 49, 51.

With respect to the custom of ecclesiastics conferring the order of knighthood, it certainly prevailed in this country before the conquest, as appears from Ingulphus, and was extremely disliked by the Normans; and therefore at a council held at Westminster in the third year of Henry I. it was ordained, "Ne Abbates faciant milites." See Eadmeri Hist. 68. and Selden's note, p. 207. However it appears that notwithstanding this prohibition, which may at the same time serve to show the great improbability that the order of knighthood was conferred upon ecclesiastics, some of the ceremonies at the creation of knights still continued to be performed by Abbots, as the taking the sword from the altar, &c. which may be seen at large in Selden's Titles of Honour, Part II. chap. v. and Dugd. Warw. 531, and accordingly this charter, which is dated twenty-three years after the council at Weftminfter, amongft other things directs the Abbot, "Nec faciat milites nifi in facra vefte Chrifti," &c. Lord Coke's acquiefcence in Popham's opinion is founded upon a fimilar mifconception, and his quaint remark "que fueront milites cœleftes & milites terreftres," can only excite a fmile. The marginal quotation from Fuller's Church Hiftory, B. VI. p. 352. "Moe Sirs than knights" referred to in a former note by Sir J. Hawkins, certainly means— "that thefe Sirs were not knights," and Fuller accounts for the title by fuppofing them ungraduated priefts.

Before I difmifs this comment upon the opinions of the learned judges, I am bound to obferve that Popham's opinion is alfo referred to, but in a very carelefs manner, in Godbold's Reports, p. 399, in thefe words: "Popham once Chief Juftice of this court faid that he had feen a commiffion directed unto a bifhop to knight all the parfons within his diocefe, and that was the caufe that they were called Sir John, Sir Thomas, and fo they continued to be called until the reign of Elizabeth." The idea of knighting all the parfons in a diocefe is too ludicrous to need a ferious refutation; and the inaccuracy of the affertion, that the title Sir lafted till the reign of Elizabeth, thereby implying that it then ceafed, is fufficiently obvious, not only from the words of Popham in the other quotation "que eft done al afcuns clerks ceft jour," but from the proof given by Sir John Hawkins of its exiftence at a much later period.

Having thus, I truft, refuted the opinion that the title of Sir was given to priefts in confequence of their being knights, I fhall venture to account for it in another manner.

This cuftom then was moft probably borrowed from the French, amongft whom the title Domnus is often appropriated to ecclefiaftics, more particularly to the Benedictines, Carthufians, and Ciftercians. It appears to have been originally a title of honour and refpect, and was perhaps at firft, in this kingdom as in France, applied to particular orders, and became afterwards general as well among the fecular as the regular clergy. The reafon of preferring Domnus to Dominus was, that the latter belonged to the fupreme Being, and the other was confidered as a fubordinate title, according to an old verfe:

"Cœleftem Dominum, terreftrem dicito Domnum."

Hence, Dom, Damp, Dan, Sire, and, laftly, Sir; for authorities are not wanting to fhow that all thefe titles were given to ecclefiaftics: but I fhall forbear to produce them, having, I fear, already trefpaffed too far upon the readers patience with this long note. DOUCE.

" And ſundry other Heathen nations had their Prieſts inſtead of Princes, as Kings to gouerne, as Preſbiter Iohn is at this preſent: and to this day the high Courts of Parliament in England do conſiſt by ancient cuſtome of calling to that honorable Court of the Lords ſpirituall and temporall, vnderſtood by the Lords ſpirituall, the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, as the moſt ancient inueſted Barrons (and ſome of them Earles and others Graces) of this land, & therefore alwaies firſt in place next vnder our Soueraigne King, Queene, Emperor & Empreſſe, Lord & Lady (for there is no difference of ſexe in Regall Maieſty.) This being ſo, and that by the lawes Armoriall, Ciuill, and of armes, a Prieſt in his place in ciuill conuerſation is alwayes before any Eſquire, as being a Knights fellow by his holy orders: & the third of the three ſyrs, which only were in requeſt of old (no Barron, Vicount, Earle nor Marqueſſe being then in vſe) to wit, Sir King, Sir Knight, and Sir Prieſt; this word Dominus in Latine being a nowne ſubſtantive common to them all, as Dominus meus Rex, Dominus meus Joab, Dominus Sacerdos: and afterwards when honors began to take their ſubordination one vnder another, & titles of princely dignity to be hereditarie to ſucceeding poſterity (which hapned vpon the fall of the Romane Empire) then Dominus was in Latine applied to all noble & generous harts, euen from the King to the meaneſt Prieſt or temporall perſon of gentle bloud, coate-armor perfect, & ancetry. But Sir in Engliſh was reſtraind to theſe foure, Sir Knight, Sir Prieſt, Sir Graduate, & in common ſpeech Sir Eſquire: ſo as alwayes ſince diſtinction of titles were, Sir Prieſt was euer the ſecond. And, if a Prieſt or Graduate be a Doctor of Diuinity or Preacher allowed, then is his place before any ordinary Knight; if higher aduanced & authoriſed, then doth his place allow him a congie with eſteeme to be had of him accordingly."

TWELFTH-NIGHT:*

OR,

WHAT YOU WILL.

* TWELFTH-NIGHT.] There is great reafon to believe, that the ferious part of this Comedy is founded on fome old tranflation of the feventh hiftory in the fourth volume of Belleforeft's Hiftoires Tragiques. Belleforeft took the ftory, as ufual, from Bandello. The comic fcenes appear to have been entirely the production of Shakfpeare. It is not impoffible, however, that the circumftances of the Duke fending his Page to plead his caufe with the Lady, and of the Lady's falling in love with the Page, &c. might be borrowed from the Fifth Eglog of Barnaby Googe, publifhed with his other original Poems in 1563:

" A worthy Knyght dyd love her longe,
" And for her fake dyd feale
" The panges of love, that happen ftyl
" By frowning fortune's wheale.
" He had a Page, Valerius named,
" Whom fo muche he dyd trufte,
" That all the fecrets of his hart
" To hym declare he mufte.
" And made hym all the onely meanes
" To fue for his redreffe,
" And to entreate for grace to her
" That caufed his diftreffe.
" She whan as firft fhe faw his page
" Was ftraight with hym in love,
" That nothynge coulde Valerius face
" From Claudia's mynde remove.
" By hym was Fauftus often harde,
" By hym his futes toke place,
" By hym he often dyd afpyre
" To fe his Ladyes face.
" This paffed well, tyll at the length
" Valerius fore did fewe,
" With many teares befechynge her
" His mayfter's gryefe to rewe.
" And tolde her that yf fhe wolde not " Releafe his mayfter's payne,
" He never wolde attempte her more
" Nor fe her ones agayne," &c.

Thus alfo concludes the firft fcene of the third act of the play before us:

" And fo adieu, good madam; never more
" Will I my mafter's tears to you deplore," &c.

I offer no apology for the length of the foregoing extract, the book from which it is taken, being fo uncommon, that only one copy, except that in my own poffeffion, has hitherto occurred. Even Dr. Farmer, the late Rev. T. Warton, Mr. Reed, and Mr. Malone, were unacquainted with this Collection of Googe's Poetry.

Auguft 6, 1607, a Comedy called What you will, (which is the fecond title of this play,) was entered at Stationers' Hall by Tho. Thorpe. I believe, however, it was Marfton's play with that name. Ben Jonfon, who takes every opportunity to find fault with Shakfpeare, feems to ridicule the conduct of Twelfth Night in his Every Man out of his Humour, at the end of Act III. fc. vi. where he makes Mitis fay, " That the argument of his comedy might have been of fome other nature, as of a duke to be in love with a countefs, and that countefs to be in love with the duke's fon, and the fon in love with the lady's waiting maid: fome fuch crofs wooing, with a clown to their ferving man, better than be thus near and familiarly allied to the time."
STEEVENS.

I fuppofe this comedy to have been written in 1614. If however the foregoing paffage was levelled at Twelfth-Night, my fpeculation falls to the ground. See An Attempt to afcertain the Order of Shakfpeare's Plays, Vol. II. MALONE.

TWELFTH-NIGHT:

OR,

WHAT YOU WILL.

ACT I. SCENE I.

An Apartment in the Duke's Palace.

Enter DUKE, CURIO, Lords; Muſicians attending.

DUKE. If muſick be the food of love, play on,
Give me exceſs of it; that, ſurfeiting,[1]
The appetite may ſicken, and ſo die.———
That ſtrain again;—it had a dying fall:[2]

[1] Give me exceſs of it; that, ſurfeiting, &c.] So, in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:

"And now exceſs of it will make me ſurfeit."

STEEVENS.

[2] That ſtrain again; it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear like the ſweet ſouth,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing, and giving odour.] Milton, in his Paradiſe Loſt, B. IV. has very ſucceſsfully introduced the ſame image:

"——now gentle gales,
"Fanning their odoriferous wings, diſpenſe
"Native perfumes, and whiſper whence they ſtole
"Thoſe balmy ſpoils." STEEVENS.

That ſtrain again; it had a dying fall:] Hence Pope, in his Ode on Saint Cecilia's Day:

O, it came o'er my ear like the ſweet ſouth,[3]
That breathes upon a bank of violets,[4]
Stealing, and giving odour.—Enough; no more;
'Tis not ſo ſweet now, as it was before.
O ſpirit of love, how quick and freſh art thou!
That, notwithſtanding thy capacity
Receiveth as the ſea, nought enters there,
Of what validity and pitch ſoever,[5]
But falls into abatement and low price,

"The ſtrains decay,
"And melt away,
"In a dying, dying fall."

Again, Thomſon, in his Spring, v. 722, ſpeaking of the nightingale:

"—— Still at every dying fall
"Takes up the lamentable ſtrain." HOLT WHITE.

[3] —— the ſweet ſouth,] The old copy reads—ſweet ſound, which Mr. Rowe changed into wind, and Mr. Pope into ſouth. The thought might have been borrowed from Sidney's Arcadia, Lib. I: "—— more ſweet than a gentle South-weſt wind, which comes creeping over flowery fields," &c. This work was publiſhed in 1590. STEEVENS.

I ſee no reaſon for diſturbing the text of the old copy, which reads—Sound. The wind, from whatever quarter, would produce a ſound in breathing on the violets, or elſe the ſimile is falſe. Beſides, ſound is a better relative to the antecedent, ſtrain. DOUCE.

[4] That breathes upon a bank of violets,] Here Shakſpeare makes the ſouth ſteal odour from the violet. In his 99th Sonnet, the violet is made the thief:

"The forward violet thus did I chide:
"Sweet thief, whence didſt thou ſteal thy ſweet that ſmells,
"If not from my love's breath?" MALONE.

[5] Of what validity and pitch ſoever,] Validity is here uſed for value. MALONE.

So, in King Lear:

"No leſs in ſpace, validity, and pleaſure." STEEVENS.

Even in a minute! ſo full of ſhapes is fancy,
That it alone is high-fantaſtical.[6]

Cur. Will you go hunt, my lord?

Duke. What, Curio?

Cur. The hart.

Duke. Why, ſo I do, the nobleſt that I have:
O, when mine eyes did ſee Olivia firſt,
Methought, ſhe purg'd the air of peſtilence;
That inſtant was I turn'd into a hart;
And my deſires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er ſince purſue me.[7]—How now? what news from her?

[6] That it alone is high-fantaſtical.] High-fantaſtical, means fantaſtical to the height.

So, in All's well that ends well:

" My high-repented blames
" Dear ſovereign, pardon me." Steevens.

[7] That inſtant was I turn'd into a hart;
And my deſires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er ſince purſue me.] This image evidently alludes to the ſtory of Acteon, by which Shakſpeare ſeems to think men cautioned againſt too great familiarity with forbidden beauty. Acteon, who ſaw Diana naked, and was torn to pieces by his hounds, repreſents a man, who indulging his eyes, or his imagination, with the view of a woman that he cannot gain, has his heart torn with inceſſant longing. An interpretation far more elegant and natural than that of Sir Francis Bacon, who, in his Wiſdom of the Ancients, ſuppoſes this ſtory to warn us againſt enquiring into the ſecrets of princes, by ſhewing, that thoſe who know that which for reaſons of ſtate is to be concealed, will be detected and deſtroyed by their own ſervants. Johnson.

This thought, (as I learn from an anonymous writer in the Gentleman's Magazine,) is borrowed from the 5th ſonnet of Daniel:

" Whilſt youth and error led my wand'ring mind,
" And ſette my thoughts in heedles waies to range.
" All unawares, a goddeſſe chaſte I finde,
" (Diana like) to worke my ſuddaine change.

Enter VALENTINE.

VAL. So pleaſe my lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid do return this anſwer:
The element itſelf, till ſeven years heat,[8]
Shall not behold her face at ample view;
But, like a cloiſtreſs, ſhe will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this, to ſeaſon
A brother's dead love, which ſhe would keep freſh,
And laſting, in her ſad remembrance.

DUKE. O, ſhe, that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,

"For her no ſooner had mine eye bewraid,
"But with diſdaine to ſee mee in that place,
"With faireſt hand the ſweet unkindeſt maid
"Caſts water-cold diſdaine upon my face:
"Which turn'd my ſport into a hart's deſpaire,
"Which ſtill is chac'd, while I have any breath,
"By mine own thoughts, ſette on me by my faire;

See Daniel's Delia & Roſamond, augmented, 1594.
STEEVENS.

[8] The element itſelf, till ſeven years heat,] Heat for heated. The air, till it ſhall have been warmed by ſeven revolutions of the ſun, ſhall not, &c. So, in King John:
"The iron of itſelf, though heat red hot—."
Again, in Macbeth:
"—— And this report
"Hath ſo exaſperate the king—." MALONE.

Again, in Chapman's verſion of the nineteenth Odyſſey:
"—— When the ſun was ſet,
"And darkneſs roſe, they ſlept till days fire het
"Th' enlighten'd earth." STEEVENS.

How will ſhe love, when the rich golden ſhaft,
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections[9] elſe
That live in her![1] when liver, brain, and heart,
Theſe ſovereign thrones,[2] are all ſupplied, and fill'd,
(Her ſweet perfections,)[3] with one ſelf king![4]—

[9] —— the flock of all affections——] So, in Sidney's Arcadia: "—has the flock of unſpeakable virtues." STEEVENS.

[1] O, ſhe, that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will ſhe love, when the rich golden ſhaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections elſe
That live in her!] Dr. Hurd obſerves, that Simo, in the Andrian of Terence, reaſons on his ſon's concern for Chryſis in the ſame manner:

"Nonnunquam conlacrumabat: placuit tum id mihi.
"Sic cogitabam: hic parvæ conſuetudinis
"Causâ mortem hujus tam fert familiariter:
"Quid ſi ipſe amâſſet? quid mihi hic faciet patri?"

STEEVENS.

[2] Theſe ſovereign thrones,] We ſhould read—three ſovereign thrones. This is exactly in the manner of Shakſpeare. So, afterwards, in this play: Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and ſpirit, do give thee fivefold blazon. WARBURTON.

[3] (Her ſweet perfections,)] Liver, brain, and heart, are admitted in poetry as the reſidence of paſſions, judgement, and ſentiments. Theſe are what Shakſpeare calls, her ſweet perfections, though he has not very clearly expreſſed what he might deſign to have ſaid. STEEVENS.

[4] ——with one ſelf king!] Thus the original copy. The editor of the ſecond folio, who in many inſtances appears to have been equally ignorant of our author's language and metre, reads—ſelf-ſame king; a reading, which all the ſubſequent editors have adopted. The verſe is not defective. Perfections is here uſed as a quadriſyllable. So, in a ſubſequent ſcene:

"Methinks I feel this youth's perfections."

Self-king means ſelf-ſame king; one and the ſame king. So, in King Richard II:

"—— that ſelf-mould that faſhion'd thee,
"Made him a man." MALONE.

Away before me to ſweet beds of flowers;
Love-thoughts lie rich, when canopied with bowers.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

The Sea-coaſt.

Enter VIOLA,[5] Captain, and Sailors.

VIO. What country, friends, is this?
CAP. Illyria, lady.[6]
VIO. And what ſhould I do in Illyria?
My brother he is in Elyſium.[7]
Perchance, he is not drown'd:—What think you, ſailors?

In my opinion, the reading of the ſecond folio ought to be adopted, as it improves both the language and the metre.

Malone has proved, that in Richard II. the word ſelf is uſed to ſignify—ſame; but there it is a licentious expreſſion. Once more he accuſes the editor of the ſecond folio as ignorant of Shakſpeare's language and metre. It is ſurely rather hardy in a commentator, at the cloſe of the 18th century, to pronounce that an editor in 1632, but 16 years after the death of Shakſpeare, was totally ignorant of his language and metre; and it happens unfortunately, that in both the paſſages on which Mr. Malone has preferred this accuſation, the ſecond folio is clearly a correction of the firſt, which is the caſe with ſome other paſſages in this very play. M. MASON.

[5] Enter Viola,] Viola is the name of a lady in the fifth book of Gower de Confeſſione Amantis. STEEVENS.

[6] Illyria, lady.] The old copy reads—"This is Illyria, lady." But I have omitted the two firſt words, which violate the metre, without improvement of the ſenſe. STEEVENS.

[7] —— in Illyria?
My brother he is in Elyſium.] There is ſeemingly a play upon the words—Illyria and Elyſium. DOUCE.

Cap. It is perchance, that you yourſelf were ſaved.

Vio. O my poor brother! and ſo, perchance, may he be.

Cap. True, madam: and, to comfort you with chance,
Aſſure yourſelf, after our ſhip did ſplit,
When you, and that poor number ſaved with you,[8]
Hung on our driving boat, I ſaw your brother,
Moſt provident in peril, bind himſelf
(Courage and hope both teaching him the practice)
To a ſtrong maſt, that lived upon the ſea;
Where, like Arion on the dolphin's back,
I ſaw him hold acquaintance with the waves,
So long as I could ſee.

Vio. For ſaying ſo, there's gold:
Mine own eſcape unfoldeth to my hope,
Whereto thy ſpeech ſerves for authority,
The like of him. Know'ſt thou this country?

Cap. Ay, madam, well; for I was bred and born,
Not three hours travel from this very place.

Vio. Who governs here?

Cap. A noble duke, in nature,
As in his name.[9]

Vio. What is his name?

Cap. Orſino.

[8] —— and that poor number ſaved with you,] We ſhould rather read—this poor number. The old copy has thoſe. The ſailors who were ſaved, enter with the captain. MALONE.

[9] A noble duke, in nature,
As in his name.] I know not whether the nobility of the name is compriſed in duke, or in Orſino, which is, I think, the name of a great Italian family. JOHNSON.

Vio. Orſino! I have heard my father name him:
He was a bachelor then.

Cap. And ſo is now,
Or was ſo very late: for but a month
Ago I went from hence; and then 'twas freſh
In murmur, (as, you know, what great ones do,
The leſs will prattle of,) that he did ſeek
The love of fair Olivia.

Vio. What's ſhe?

Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
That died ſome twelvemonth ſince; then leaving her
In the protection of his ſon, her brother,
Who ſhortly alſo died: for whoſe dear love,
They ſay, ſhe hath abjur'd the company
And ſight of men.

Vio. O, that I ſerved that lady:[1]
And might not be delivered to the world,[2]
Till I had made mine own occaſion mellow,
What my eſtate is.

[1] They ſay, ſhe hath abjur'd the company
And ſight of men.
O, that I ſerved that lady:]
The old copy reads:
They ſay ſhe hath abjur'd the ſight
And company of men.
O, that I ſerved that lady;
By the change I have made in the ordo verborum, the metre of three lines is regulated, and an anticlimax prevented. STEEVENS.

[2] And might not be delivered to the world,] I wiſh I might not be made public to the world, with regard to the ſtate of my birth and fortune, till I have gained a ripe opportunity for my deſign.

Viola ſeems to have formed a very deep deſign with very little premeditation: ſhe is thrown by ſhipwreck on an unknown coaſt, hears that the prince is a bachelor, and reſolves to ſupplant the lady whom he courts. JOHNSON.

Cap. That were hard to compaſs;
Becauſe ſhe will admit no kind of ſuit,
No, not the duke's.

Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain;
And though that nature with a beauteous wall
Doth oft cloſe in pollution, yet of thee
I will believe, thou haſt a mind that ſuits
With this thy fair and outward character.
I pray thee, and I'll pay thee bounteouſly,
Conceal me what I am; and be my aid
For ſuch diſguiſe as, haply, ſhall become
The form of my intent. I'll ſerve this duke;[3]
Thou ſhalt preſent me as an eunuch to him,[4]
It may be worth thy pains; for I can ſing,

[3] —— I'll ſerve this duke;] Viola is an excellent ſchemer, never at a loſs; if ſhe cannot ſerve the lady, ſhe will ſerve the duke. Johnson.

[4] Thou ſhalt preſent me as an eunuch to him,] This plan of Viola's was not purſued, as it would have been inconſiſtent with the plot of the play. She was preſented to the duke as a page, but not as a eunuch. M. Mason.

The uſe of Evirati, in the ſame manner as at preſent, ſeems to have been well known at the time this play was written, about 1600. Burney.

When the practice of caſtration (which originated certainly in the eaſt) was firſt adopted, ſolely for the purpoſe of improving the voice, I have not been able to learn. The firſt regular opera, as Dr. Burney obſerves to me, was performed at Florence in 1600: "till about 1635, muſical dramas were only performed occaſionally in the palaces of princes, and conſequently before that time eunuchs could not abound. The firſt eunuch that was ſuffered to ſing in the Pope's chapel, was in the year 1600."

So early, however, as 1604, eunuchs are mentioned by one of our poet's contemporaries, as excelling in ſinging:

"Yes, I can ſing, fool, if you'll bear the burthen; and I can play upon inſtruments ſcurvily, as gentlemen do. O that I had been gelded! I ſhould then have been a fat fool for a chamber, a ſqueaking fool for a tavern, and a private fool for all the ladies." The Malcontent, by J. Marſton, 1604. Malone.

And ſpeak to him in many ſorts of muſick,
That will allow me very worth his ſervice.[5]
What elſe may hap, to time I will commit;
Only ſhape thou thy ſilence to my wit.

Cap. Be you his eunuch, and your mute I'll be:
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not ſee!

Vio. I thank thee: Lead me on. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

A Room in Olivia's Houſe.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, and Maria.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece, to take the death of her brother thus? I am ſure, care's an enemy to life.

Mar. By by troth, ſir Toby, you muſt come in earlier o'nights; your couſin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir To. Why, let her except before excepted.[6]

Mar. Ay, but you muſt confine yourſelf within the modeſt limits of order.

Sir To. Confine? I'll confine myſelf no finer than I am: theſe clothes are good enough to drink in, and ſo be theſe boots too; an they be not, let them hang themſelves in their own ſtraps.

[5] That will allow me—] To allow is to approve. So, in King Lear, Act II. ſc. iv:
" ——if your ſweet ſway
" Allow obedience——" Steevens.

[6] ——let her except before excepted.] A ludicrous uſe of the formal law phraſe. Farmer.

Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undo you: I heard my lady talk of it yeſterday; and of a fooliſh knight, that you brought in one night here, to be her wooer.

Sir To. Who? Sir Andrew Ague-cheek?

Mar. Ay, he.

Sir To. He's as tall a man[7] as any's in Illyria.

Mar. What's that to the purpoſe?

Sir To. Why, he has three thouſand ducats a year.

Mar. Ay, but he'll have but a year in all theſe ducats; he's a very fool, and a prodigal.

Sir To. Fye, that you'll ſay ſo! he plays o' the viol-de-gambo,[8] and ſpeaks three or four languages

[7] ——as tall a man—] Tall means ſtout, courageous. So, in Wily Beguiled:

"Ay, and he is a tall fellow, and a man of his hands too."

Again:

"If he do not prove himſelf as tall a man as he."

STEEVENS.

[8] ——viol-de-gambo,] The viol-de-gambo ſeems, in our author's time, to have been a very faſhionable inſtrument. In The Return from Parnaſſus, 1606, it is mentioned, with its proper derivation:

"Her viol-de-gambo is her beſt content,
"For 'twixt her legs ſhe holds her inſtrument."

COLLINS.

So, in the Induction to the Mal-content, 1604:

"——come ſit between my legs here.
"No indeed, couſin; the audience will then take me for a viol-de-gambo, and think that you play upon me."

In the old dramatic writers, frequent mention is made of a caſe of viols, conſiſting of a viol-de-gambo, the tenor and the treble.

See Sir John Hawkins's Hiſt. of Muſick, Vol. IV. p. 32, n. 338, wherein is a deſcription of a caſe more properly termed a cheſt of viols. STEEVENS.

word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath, indeed,—almoſt natural:[9] for, beſides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller; and, but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the guſt he hath in quarelling, 'tis thought among the prudent, he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To. By this hand, they are ſcoundrels, and ſubſtractors, that ſay ſo of him. Who are they?

Mar. They that add moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

Sir To. With drinking healths to my niece; I'll drink to her, as long as there is a paſſage in my throat, and drink in Illyria: He's a coward, and a coyſtril,[1] that will not drink to my niece, till his brains turn o' the toe like a pariſh-top.[2] What,

[9] He hath indeed,—almoſt natural:] Mr. Upton propoſes to regulate this paſſage differently:

He hath indeed, all, moſt natural. MALONE.

[1] —— a coyſtril,] i. e. a coward cock. It may, however, be a keyſtril, or a baſtard hawk; a kind of ſtone-hawk. So, in Arden of Feverſham, 1592:

" ———— as dear
" As ever coyſtril bought ſo little ſport." STEEVENS.

A coyſtril is a paltry groom, one only fit to carry arms, but not to uſe them. So, in Holinſhed's Deſcription of England, Vol. I. p. 162: " Coſterels, or bearers of the armes of barons or knights." Vol. III. p. 248: " So that a knight with his eſquire and coiſtrell with his two horſes." P. 272: " women lackies, and coiſterels, are conſidered as the unwarlike attendants on an army." So again, in p. 127, and 217 of his Hiſtory of Scotland. For its etymology, ſee Couſtille and Couſtillier in Cotgrave's Dictionary. TOLLET.

[2] —— like a pariſh-top.] This is one of the cuſtoms now laid aſide. A large top was formerly kept in every village, to be whipped in froſty weather, that the peaſants may be kept warm by exerciſe, and out of miſchief, while they could not work. The ſame compariſon is brought forward in the Night Walker of Fletcher:

"And dances like a town-top, and reels and hobbles."

STEEVENS.

"To ſleep like a town-top," is a proverbial expreſſion. A top is ſaid to ſleep, when it turns round with great velocity, and makes a ſmooth humming noiſe. BLACKSTONE.

[3] —— Caſtiliano vulgo;] We ſhould read volto. In Engliſh, put on your Caſtilian countenance; that is, your grave, ſolemn looks. WARBURTON.

Caſtiliano vulgo;] I meet with the word Caſtilian and Caſtilians in ſeveral of the old comedies. It is difficult to aſſign any peculiar propriety to it, unleſs it was adopted immediately after the defeat of the Armada, and became a cant term capriciouſly expreſſive of jollity or contempt. The Hoſt, in The Merry Wives of Windſor, calls Caius a Caſtilian-king Urinal; and in The Merry Devil of Edmonton, one of the characters ſays: "Ha! my Caſtilian dialogues!" In an old comedy called Look about you, 1600, it is joined with another toper's exclamation very frequent in Skakſpeare:

"And Rivo will he cry, and Caſtile too."

So again, in Marlowe's Jew of Malta, 1633:

"Hey, Rivo Caſtiliano, man's a man."

Again, in The Stately Moral of the Three Lords of London, 1590:

"Three Cavaliero's Caſtilianos here," &c.

Cotgrave, however, informs us, that Caſtille not only ſignifies the nobleſt part of Spain, but contention, debate, brabling, altercation. Ils ſont en Caſtille. There is a jarre betwixt them; and prendre la Caſtille pour autruy: To undertake another man's quarrel. STEEVENS.

Mr. Steevens has not attempted to explain vulgo, nor perhaps can the proper explanation be given, unleſs ſome incidental application of it may be found in connection with Caſtiliano, where the context defines its meaning. Sir Toby here, having juſt declared that he would perſiſt in drinking the health of his niece, as long as there was a paſſage in his throat, and drink in Illyria, at the ſight of Sir Andrew, demands of Maria, with a banter, Caſtiliano vulgo. What this was, may be probably inferred from a ſpeech in The Shoemaker's Holiday, 4to. 1610: "—Away, firke, ſcower thy throat, thou ſhalt waſh it with Gaſtilian licuor." HENLEY.

Enter Sir ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK.

SIR AND. Sir Toby Belch! how now, Sir Toby Belch?

SIR TO. Sweet ſir Andrew!

SIR AND. Bleſs you, fair ſhrew.

MAR. And you too, ſir.

SIR TO. Accoſt, ſir Andrew, accoſt.[4]

SIR AND. What's that?

SIR TO. My niece's chamber-maid.

SIR AND. Good miſtreſs Accoſt, I deſire better acquaintance.

MAR. My name is Mary, ſir.

SIR AND. Good Miſtreſs Mary Accoſt,——

SIR TO. You miſtake, knight: accoſt, is, front her, board her,[5] woo her, aſſail her.

[4] Accoſt, ſir Andrew, accoſt.] To accoſt, had a ſignification in our author's time that the word now ſeems to have loſt. In the ſecond part of The Engliſh Dictionary, by H. C. 1655, in which the reader "who is deſirous of a more refined and elegant ſpeech," is furniſhed with hard words, "to draw near," is explained thus: "To accoſt, appropriate, appropinquate." See alſo Cotgrave's Dict. in verb. accoſter. MALONE.

[5] —— board her,] "I hinted that bourd was the better reading. Mr. Steevens ſuppoſed it ſhould then be bourd with her; but to the authorities which I have quoted for that reading in Jonſon, Catiline, Act I. ſc. iv. we may add the following:

"I'll bourd him ſtraight; how now Cornelio?"
All Fools, Act V. ſc. i.

"He brings in a paraſite that flowteth, and bourdeth them thus." Naſh's Lenten Stuff, 1599.

"I can bourd when I ſee occaſion."
'Tis Pity ſhe's a Whore, p. 38. WHALLEY.

I am ſtill unconvinced that board (the naval term) is not the proper reading. It is ſufficiently familiar to our author in other places. So, in The Merry Wives of Windſor, Act II. ſc. i:

Sir And. By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of accoſt?

Mar. Fare you well, gentlemen.

Sir To. An thou let part ſo, ſir Andrew, 'would thou might'ſt never draw ſword again.

Sir And. An you part ſo, miſtreſs, I would I might never draw ſword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?

Mar. Sir, I have not you by the hand.

Sir And. Marry, but you ſhall have; and here's my hand.

Mar. Now, ſir, thought is free:[6] I pray you, bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink.

Sir And. Wherefore, ſweet heart? what's your metaphor?

"——unleſs he knew ſome ſtrain in me, that I know not myſelf, he would never have boarded me in this fury.

"Mrs. Ford. Boarding, call you it? I'll be ſure to keep him above deck," &c. &c. Steevens.

Probably board her may mean no more than ſalute her, ſpeak to her, &c. Sir Kenelm Digby, in his Treatiſe of Bodies, 1643, fo. Paris, p. 253, ſpeaking of a blind man, ſays: "He would at the firſt aboard of a ſtranger, as ſoone as he ſpoke to him, frame a right apprehenſion of his ſtature, bulke, and manner of making." Reed.

To board is certainly to accoſt, or addreſs. So, in the Hiſtory of Celeſtina the Faire, 1596: "—whereat Alderine ſomewhat diſpleaſed for ſhe would verie faine have knowne who he was, boorded him thus." Ritson.

[6] Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand!——
Mar. Now, ſir, thought is free:] There is the ſame pleaſantry in Lyly's Euphues, 1581: "None (quoth ſhe) can judge of wit but they that have it; why then (quoth he) doeſt thou think me a fool? Thought is free, my Lord, quoth ſhe."
Holt White.

Mar. It's dry, ſir.[7]

Sir And. Why, I think ſo; I am not ſuch an aſs, but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jeſt?

Mar. A dry jeſt, ſir.

Sir And. Are you full of them?

Mar. Ay, ſir; I have them at my fingers' ends: marry, now I let go your hand, I am barren.

[Exit Maria.

Sir To. O knight, thou lack'ſt a cup of canary: When did I ſee thee ſo put down?

Sir And. Never in your life, I think; unleſs you ſee canary put me down: Methinks, ſometimes I have no more wit than a Chriſtian, or an ordinary man has: but I am a great eater of beef, and, I believe, that does harm to my wit.

[7] It's dry, ſir.] What is the jeſt of dry hand, I know not any better than Sir Andrew. It may poſſibly mean, a hand with no money in it; or, according to the rules of phyſiognomy, ſhe may intend to inſinuate, that it is not a lover's hand, a moiſt hand being vulgarly accounted a ſign of an amorous conſtitution. Johnson.

So, in Monſieur D'Olive, 1606: "But to ſay you had a dull eye, a ſharp noſe (the viſible marks of a ſhrew); a dry hand, which is the ſign of a bad liver, as he ſaid you were, being toward a huſband too; this was intolerable."

Again, in Decker's Honeſt Whore, 1635: "Of all dry-fiſted knights, I cannot abide that he ſhould touch me." Again, in Weſtward Hoe, by Decker and Webſter, 1606: "Let her marry a man of a melancholy complexion, ſhe ſhall not be much troubled by him. My huſband has a hand as dry as his brains," &c. The Chief Juſtice likewiſe, in The Second Part of K. Henry IV. enumerates a dry hand among the characteriſticks of debility and age. Again, in Antony and Cleopatra, Charmian ſays: "—if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognoſtication, I cannot ſcratch mine ear." All theſe paſſages will ſerve to confirm Dr. Johnſon's latter ſuppoſition. Steevens.

Sir To. No queſtion.

Sir And. An I thought that, I'd forſwear it. I'll ride home to-morrow, ſir Toby.

Sir To. Pourquoy, my dear knight?

Sir And. What is pourquoy? do or not do? I would I had beſtowed that time in the tongues, that I have in fencing, dancing, and bear-baiting: O, had I but followed the arts!

Sir To. Then hadſt thou had an excellent head of hair.

Sir And. Why, would that have mended my hair?

Sir To. Paſt queſtion; for thou ſeeſt, it will not curl by nature.[8]

Sir And. But it becomes me well enough, does't not?

Sir To. Excellent; it hangs like flax on a diſtaff; and I hope to ſee a houſewife take thee between her legs, and ſpin it off.

Sir And. 'Faith, I'll home to-morrow, Sir Toby: your niece will not be ſeen; or, if ſhe be, it's four to one ſhe'll none of me: the count himſelf, here hard by, wooes her.

Sir To. She'll none o' the count; ſhe'll not match above her degree, neither in eſtate, years, nor wit; I have heard her ſwear it. Tut, there's life in't, man.

Sir And. I'll ſtay a month longer. I am a fellow o' the ſtrangeſt mind i' the world; I delight in maſques and revels ſometimes altogether.

[8] —— it will not curl by nature.] The old copy reads—cool my nature. The emendation was made by Theobald. Steevens.

Sir To. Art thou good at theſe kick-ſhaws, knight?

Sir And. As any man in Illyria, whatſoever he be, under the degree of my betters; and yet I will not compare with an old man.[9]

Sir To. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?

Sir And. 'Faith, I can cut a caper.

Sir To. And I can cut the mutton to't.

Sir And. And, I think, I have the back-trick, ſimply as ſtrong as any man in Illyria.

Sir To. Wherefore are theſe things hid? wherefore have theſe gifts a curtain before them? are they like to take duſt, like miſtreſs Mall's picture?[1]

[9] —— and yet I will not compare with an old man.] This is intended as a ſatire on that common vanity of old men, in preferring their own times, and the paſt generation, to the preſent. WARBURTON.

This ſtroke of pretended ſatire but ill accords with the character of the fooliſh knight. Ague-cheek, though willing enough to arrogate to himſelf ſuch experience as is commonly the acquiſition of age, is yet careful to exempt his perſon from being compared with its bodily weakneſs. In ſhort, he would ſay with Falſtaff:—"I am old in nothing but my underſtanding." STEEVENS.

[1] —— miſtreſs Mall's picture?] The real name of the woman whom I ſuppoſe to have been meant by Sir Toby, was Mary Frith. The appellation by which ſhe was generally known, was Mall Cutpurſe. She was at once an hermaphrodite, a proſtitute, a bawd, a bully, a thief, a receiver of ſtolen goods, &c. &c. On the books of the Stationers' Company, Auguſt 1610, is entered—"A Booke called the Madde Prancks of Merry Mall of the Bankſide, with her Walks in Man's Apparel, and to what Purpoſe. Written by John Day." Middleton and Decker wrote a comedy, of which ſhe is the heroine. In this, they have given a very flattering repreſentation of her, as they obſerve in their preface, that "it is the excellency of a writer, to leave things better than he finds them."

why doſt thou not go to church in a galliard, and come home in a coranto? My very walk ſhould be

The title of this piece is—The Roaring Girl, or Moll Cutpurſe; as it hath been lately acted on the Fortune Stage, by the Prince his Players, 1611. The frontiſpiece to it contains a full length of her in man's clothes, ſmoaking tobacco. Nathaniel Field, in his Amends for Ladies, (another comedy, 1618,) gives the following character of her:

"———— Hence lewd impudent,
"I know not what to term thee; man or woman;
"For nature, ſhaming to acknowledge thee
"For either, hath produc'd thee to the world
"Without a ſex: Some ſay, that thou art woman;
"Others, a man: to many thou art both
"Woman and man; but I think rather neither;
"Or, man, or horſe, as Centaurs old were feign'd."

A life of this woman was likewiſe publiſhed, 12mo. in 1662, with her portrait before it in a male habit; an ape, a lion, and an eagle by her. As this extraordinary perſonage appears to have partook of both ſexes, the curtain which Sir Toby mentions would not have been unneceſſarily drawn before ſuch a picture of her as might have been exhibited in an age, of which neither too much delicacy or decency was the characteriſtick.

STEEVENS.

In our author's time, I believe, curtains were frequently hung before pictures of any value. So, in Vittoria Corombona, a tragedy, by Webſter, 1612:

"I yet but draw the curtain;—now to your picture."

MALONE.

See a further account of this woman in Dodſley's Collection of Old Plays, edit. 1780, Vol. VI. p. 1. Vol. XII. p. 398.

REED.

Mary Frith was born in 1584, and died in 1659. In a MS. letter in the Britiſh Muſeum, from John Chamberlain to Mr. Carleton, dated Feb. 11, 1611-12, the following account is given of this woman's doing penance: "This laſt Sunday Moll Cutpurſe, a notorious baggage that uſed to go in man's apparel, and challenged the field of diverſe gallants, was brought to the ſame place, [St. Paul's Croſs,] where ſhe wept bitterly, and ſeemed very penitent; but it is ſince doubted ſhe was maudlin drunk, being diſcovered to have tippel'd of three quarts of ſack before ſhe came to her penance. She had the daintieſt preacher or ghoſtly father that ever I ſaw in the pulpit, one Radcliffe of a jig; I would not ſo much as make water, but in a ſink-a-pace.[2] What doſt thou mean? is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent conſtitution of thy leg, it was formed under the ſtar of a galliard.

Sir And. Ay, 'tis ſtrong, and it does indifferent well in a flame-coloured ſtock.[3] Shall we ſet about ſome revels?

Brazen-Noſe College in Oxford, a likelier man to have led the revels in ſome inn of court, than to be where he was. But the beſt is, he did extreme badly, and ſo wearied the audience, that the beſt part went away, and the reſt tarried rather to hear Moll Cutpurſe than him." Malone.

It is for the ſake of correcting a miſtake of Dr. Grey, that I obſerve this is the character alluded to in the ſecond of the following lines; and not Mary Carleton, the German Princeſs, as he has very erroneouſly and unaccountably imagined:

"A bold virago ſtout and tall,
"As Joan of France, or Engliſh Mall."

Hudibras, P. I. c. iii.

The latter of theſe lines is borrowed by Swift in his Baucis and Philemon. Ritson.

[2] —— a ſink-a-pace.] i. e. a cinque-pace; the name of a dance, the meaſures whereof are regulated by the number five. The word occurs elſewhere in our author. Sir J. Hawkins.

So, in Sir John Harrington's Anatomie of the Metamorphoſed Ajax: "—the laſt verſe diſordered their mouthes, and was like a tricke of xvii in a ſinkapace." Steevens.

[3] —— flame-coloured ſtock.] The old copy reads—a damned coloured ſtock. Stockings were in Shakſpeare's time called ſtocks. So, in Jack Drum's Entertainment, 1601:

"Or would my ſilk ſtock ſhould loſe his gloſs elſe."

Again, in one of Heywood's Epigrams, 1562:

"Thy upper ſtocks, be they ſtuft with ſilke or flocks,
"Never become thee like a nether paire of ſtocks."

The ſame ſolicitude concerning the furniture of the legs makes part of maſter Stephen's character in Every Man in his Humour:

"I think my leg would ſhow well in a ſilk hoſe."

Steevens.

The emendation was made by Mr. Pope. Malone.

Sir To. What ſhall we do elſe? were we not born under Taurus?

Sir And. Taurus? that's ſides and heart.[4]

Sir To. No, ſir; it is legs and thighs. Let me ſee thee caper: ha! higher: ha, ha!—excellent! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Valentine, and Viola in man's attire.

Val. If the duke continue theſe favours towards you, Ceſario, you are like to be much advanced; he hath known you but three days, and already you are no ſtranger.

Vio. You either fear his humour, or my negligence, that you call in queſtion the continuance of his love: Is he inconſtant, ſir, in his favours?

Val. No, believe me.

Enter Duke, Curio, and Attendants.

Vio. I thank you. Here comes the count.

Duke. Who ſaw Ceſario, ho?

Vio. On your attendance, my lord; here.

Duke. Stand you awhile aloof.—Ceſario,
Thou know'ſt no leſs but all; I have unclaſp'd

[4] Taurus? that's ſides and heart.] Alluding to the medical aſtrology ſtill preſerved in almanacks, which refers the affections of particular parts of the body to the predominance of particular conſtellations. Johnson.

To thee the book even of my ſecret ſoul:[5]
Therefore, good youth, addreſs thy gait unto her;
Be not deny'd acceſs, ſtand at her doors,
And tell them, there thy fixed foot ſhall grow,
Till thou have audience.

Vio. Sure, my noble lord,
If ſhe be ſo abandon'd to her ſorrow
As it is ſpoke, ſhe never will admit me.

Duke. Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds,
Rather than make unprofited return.

Vio. Say, I do ſpeak with her, my lord; What then?

Duke. O, then unfold the paſſion of my love,
Surpriſe her with diſcourſe of my dear faith:
It ſhall become thee well to act my woes;
She will attend it better in thy youth,
Than in a nuncio of more grave aſpéct.

Vio. I think not ſo, my lord.

Duke. Dear lad, believe it;
For they ſhall yet belie thy happy years,
That ſay, thou art a man: Diana's lip
Is not more ſmooth, and rubious; thy ſmall pipe
Is as the maiden's organ, ſhrill, and ſound,
And all is ſemblative a woman's part.[6]
I know, thy conſtellation is right apt
For this affair:—Some four, or five, attend him;
All, if you will; for I myſelf am beſt,
When leaſt in company:—Proſper well in this,

[5] —— I have unclaſp'd
To thee the book even of my ſecret ſoul:] So, in The Firſt Part of K. Henry IV:
"And now I will unclaſp a ſecret book." Steevens.

[6] —— a woman's part.] That is, thy proper part in a play would be a woman's. Women were then perſonated by boys. Johnson.

And thou ſhalt live as freely as thy lord,
To call his fortunes thine.

Vio. I'll do my beſt,
To woo your lady: yet, [Aſide.] a barful ſtrife![7]
Whoe'er I woo, myſelf would be his wife.
[Exeunt.

SCENE V.

A Room in Olivia's Houſe.

Enter Maria, and Clown.[8]

Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou haſt been, or I will not open my lips, ſo wide as a briſtle may enter, in way of thy excuſe: my lady will hang thee for thy abſence.

Clo. Let her hang me: he, that is well hanged in this world, needs to fear no colours.[9]

[7] —— a barful ſtrife!] i. e. a conteſt full of impediments. Steevens.

[8] Clown.] As this is the firſt Clown who makes his appearance in the plays of our author, it may not be amiſs, from a paſſage in Tarleton's News out of Purgatory, to point out one of the ancient dreſſes appropriated to the character: "—I ſaw one attired in ruſſet, with a button'd cap on his head, a bag by his ſide, and a ſtrong bat in his hand; ſo artificially attired for a clowne, as I began to call Tarleton's woonted ſhape to remembrance." Steevens.

Such perhaps was the dreſs of the Clown in this comedy, in All's well that ends well, &c. The Clown, however, in Meaſure for Meaſure, (as an anonymous writer has obſerved,) is only the tapſter of a brothel, and probably was not ſo apparelled. Malone.

[9] ——fear no colours.] This expreſſion frequently occurs in the old plays. So, in Ben Jonſon's Sejanus. The perſons converſing are Sejanus, and Eudemus the phyſician to the Princeſs Livia:

Mar. Make that good.

Clo. He ſhall ſee none to fear.

Mar. A good lenten anſwer:[1] I can tell thee where that ſaying was born, of, I fear no colours.

Clo. Where, good miſtreſs Mary?

Mar. In the wars; and that may you be bold to ſay in your foolery.

Clo. Well, God give them wiſdom, that have it; and thoſe that are fools, let them uſe their talents.

Mar. Yet you will be hanged, for being ſo long abſent: or, to be turned away;[2] is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Clo. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and, for turning away, let ſummer bear it out.[3]

" Sej. You miniſter to a royal lady then?
" Eud. She is, my lord, and fair.
" Sej. That's underſtood
" Of all their ſex, who are or would be ſo;
" And thoſe that would be, phyſick ſoon can make 'em:
" For thoſe that are, their beauties fear no colours."

Again, in The Two angry Women of Abingdon, 1599:

" —— are you diſpoſed, ſir? ——
" Yes indeed: I fear no colours; change ſides, Richard."

STEEVENS.

[1] —— lenten anſwer:] A lean, or as we now call it, a dry anſwer. JOHNSON.

Surely a lenten anſwer, rather means a ſhort and ſpare one, like the commons in Lent. So, in Hamlet: " —what lenten entertainment the players ſhall receive from you." STEEVENS.

[2] —— or, to be turn'd away;] The editor of the ſecond folio omitted the word to, in which he has been followed by all ſubſequent editors. MALONE.

[3] —— and, for turning away, let ſummer bear it out.] This ſeems to be a pun from the nearneſs in the pronunciation of turning away and turning of whey.

Mar. You are refolute then?

Clo. Not fo neither; but I am refolved on two points.

Mar. That, if one break,[4] the other will hold; or, if both break, your gafkins fall.

Clo. Apt, in good faith; very apt! Well, go thy way; if fir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flefh as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace, you rogue, no more o' that; here comes my lady: make your excufe wifely, you were beft. [Exit.

I found this obfervation among fome papers of the late Dr. Letherland, for the perufal of which, I am happy to have an opportunity of returning my particular thanks to Mr. Glover, the author of Medea and Leonidas, by whom, before, I had been obliged only in common with the reft of the world.

I am yet of opinion that this note, however fpecious, is wrong, the literal meaning being eafy and appofite. For turning away, let fummer bear it out. It is common for unfettled and vagrant ferving-men, to grow negligent of their bufinefs towards fummer; and the fenfe of the paffage is: "If I am turned away, the advantages of the approaching fummer will bear out, or fupport all the inconveniencies of difmiffion; for I fhall find employment in every field, and lodging under every hedge." STEEVENS.

[4] ——if one (point) break,] Points were metal hooks, faftened to the hofe or breeches, (which had then no opening or buttons,) and going into ftraps or eyes fixed to the doublet, and thereby keeping the hofe from falling down. BLACKSTONE.

So, in King Henry IV. P. I: "Their points being broken,—down fell their hofe." Again, in Antony and Cleopatra:

"—— mingle eyes
"With one that ties his points?" STEEVENS.

Enter OLIVIA, and MALVOLIO.

CLO. Wit, and't be thy will, put me into good fooling! Thoſe wits, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools; and I, that am ſure I lack thee, may paſs for a wiſe man: For what ſays Quinapalus? Better a witty fool, than a fooliſh wit.[5] ——God bleſs thee, lady!

OLI. Take the fool away.

CLO. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

OLI. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: beſides, you grow diſhoneſt.

CLO. Two faults, madonna,[6] that drink and good counſel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; bid the diſhoneſt man mend himſelf; if he mend, he is no longer diſhoneſt; if he cannot, let the botcher mend him: Any thing, that's mended, is but patched:[7] virtue, that tranſgreſſes, is but patched with ſin; and ſin, that amends, is but patched with virtue: If that this ſimple ſyllogiſm will ſerve, ſo; if it will not, What remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calamity, ſo beauty's a flower:—the lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I ſay again, take her away.

OLI. Sir, I bade them take away you.

[5] —— Better a witty fool, than a fooliſh wit.] Hall, in his Chronicle, ſpeaking of the death of Sir Thomas More, ſays: "that he knows not whether to call him a fooliſh wiſe man, or a wiſe fooliſh man." JOHNSON.

[6] —— madonna,] Ital. miſtreſs, dame. So, La maddona, by way of pre-eminence, the Bleſſed Virgin. STEEVENS.

[7] —— Any thing, that's mended, is but patched:] Alluding to the patched or particoloured garment of the fool. MALONE.

Clo. Miſpriſion in the higheſt degree!—Lady, Cucullus non facit monachum; that's as much as to ſay, I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

Oli. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexteriouſly, good madonna.

Oli. Make your proof.

Clo. I muſt catechize you for it, madonna; Good my mouſe of virtue, anſwer me.

Oli. Well, ſir, for want of other idleneſs, I'll 'bide your proof.

Clo. Good madonna, why mourn'ſt thou?

Oli. Good fool, for my brother's death.

Clo. I think, his ſoul is in hell, madonna.

Oli. I know his ſoul is in heaven, fool.

Clo. The more fool you, madonna, to mourn for your brother's ſoul being in heaven.—Take away the fool, gentlemen.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes; and ſhall do, till the pangs of death ſhake him: Infirmity, that decays the wiſe, doth ever make the better fool.

Clo. God ſend you, ſir, a ſpeedy infirmity, for the better encreaſing your folly! Sir Toby will be ſworn, that I am no fox; but he will not paſs his word for two-pence that you are no fool.

Oli. How ſay you to that, Malvolio?

Mal. I marvel your ladyſhip takes delight in ſuch a barren raſcal; I ſaw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool, that has no more brain than a ſtone. Look you now, he's out of his guard already; unlefs you laugh and minifter occafion to him, he is gagged. I proteft, I take thefe wife men, that crow fo at thefe fet kind of fools, no better than the fools' zanies.[8]

Oli. O, you are fick of felf-love, Malvolio, and tafte with a diftempered appetite. To be generous, guiltlefs, and of free difpofition, is to take thofe things for bird-bolts, that you deem cannon-bullets: There is no flander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known difcreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now Mercury endue thee with leafing, for thou fpeakeft well of fools![9]

Re-enter Maria.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a young gentleman, much defires to fpeak with you.

Oli. From the count Orfino, is it?

Mar. I know not, madam; 'tis a fair young man, and well attended.

[8] —— no better than the fools' zanies.] i. e. fools' baubles, which had upon the top of them the head of a fool. Douce.

[9] Now Mercury endue thee with leafing, for thou fpeakeft well of fools!] This is a ftupid blunder. We fhould read, with pleafing, i. e. with eloquence, make thee a gracious and powerful fpeaker, for Mercury was the god of orators as well as cheats. But the firft editors, who did not underftand the phrafe, endue thee with pleafing, made this foolifh correction; more excufable, however, than the laft editor's, who, when this emendation was pointed out to him, would make one of his own; and fo, in his Oxford edition, reads, with learning; without troubling himfelf to fatisfy the reader how the firft editor fhould blunder in a word fo eafy to be underftood as learning, though they well might in the word pleafing, as it is ufed in this place. Warburton.

I think the prefent reading more humorous: May Mercury teach thee to lie, fince thou lieft in favour of fools! Johnson.

Oli. Who of my people hold him in delay?

Mar. Sir Toby, madam, your kinſman.

Oli. Fetch him off, I pray you; he ſpeaks nothing but madman: Fye on him! [Exit Maria.] Go you, Malvolio: if it be a ſuit from the count, I am ſick, or not at home; what you will, to diſmiſs it. [Exit Malvolio.] Now you ſee, ſir, how your fooling grows old, and people diſlike it.

Clo. Thou haſt ſpoke for us, madonna, as if thy eldeſt ſon ſhould be a fool: whoſe ſkull Jove cram with brains, for here he comes, one of thy kin, has a moſt weak pia mater.[1]

Enter Sir Toby Belch.

Oli. By mine honour, half drunk.—What is he at the gate, couſin?

Sir To. A gentleman.

Oli. A gentleman? What gentleman?

Sir To. 'Tis a gentleman here[2]—A plague o'theſe pickle-herrings!—How now, ſot?

[1] —— a moſt weak pia mater.] The pia mater is the membrane that immediately covers the ſubſtance of the brain. So, in Philemon Holland's Tranſlation of Pliny's Natural Hiſtory, Book XXIV. chap. 8: "—the fine pellicle called pia mater, which lappeth and enfoldeth the braine." Edit. 1601, p. 185. Steevens.

[2] 'Tis a gentleman here—] He had before ſaid it was a gentleman. He was aſked, what gentleman? and he makes this reply; which, it is plain, is corrupt, and ſhould be read thus:

'Tis a gentleman-heir.

i. e. ſome lady's eldeſt ſon juſt come out of the nurſery; for this was the appearance Viola made in men's clothes. See the character Malvolio draws of him preſently after. Warburton.

Can any thing be plainer than that Sir Toby was going to deſcribe the gentleman, but was interrupted by the effects of his pickle-herring? I would print it as an imperfect ſentence. Mr. Edwards has the ſame obſervation. Steevens.

Clo. Good ſir Toby,——

Oli. Couſin, couſin, how have you come ſo early by this lethargy?

Sir To. Lechery! I defy lechery: There's one at the gate.

Oli. Ay, marry; what is he?

Sir To. Let him be the devil, an he will, I care not: give me faith, ſay I. Well, it's all one. [Exit.

Oli. What's a drunken man like, fool?

Clo. Like a drown'd man, a fool, and a madman: one draught above heat [3] makes him a fool; the ſecond mads him; and a third drowns him.

Oli. Go thou and ſeek the coroner, and let him ſit o' my coz; for he's in the third degree of drink, he's drown'd: go, look after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet, madonna; and the fool ſhall look to the madman. [Exit Clown.

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, yond young fellow ſwears he will ſpeak with you. I told him you were ſick; he takes on him to underſtand ſo much, and therefore comes to ſpeak with you: I told him you were aſleep; he ſeems to have a fore-knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to ſpeak with you. What is to be ſaid to him, lady? he's fortified againſt any denial.

Oli. Tell him, he ſhall not ſpeak with me.

Mr. Steevens's interpretation may be right: yet Dr. Warburton's reading is not ſo ſtrange, as it has been repreſented. In Broome's Jovial Crew, Scentwell ſays to the gypſies: "We muſt find a young gentlewoman-heir among you." Farmer.

[3] ——above heat—] i. e. above the ſtate of being warm in a proper degree. Steevens.

Mal. He has been told ſo; and he ſays, he'll ſtand at your door like a ſheriff's poſt,[4] and be the ſupporter of a bench, but he'll ſpeak with you.

Oli. What kind of man is he?

Mal. Why, of man kind.

Oli. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner; he'll ſpeak with you, will you, or no.

Oli. Of what perſonage, and years, is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a ſquaſh is before 'tis a peaſcod, or a codling when 'tis almoſt an apple:[5]

[4] —ſtand at your door like a ſheriff's poſt,] It was the cuſtom for that officer to have large poſts ſet up at his door, as an indication of his office: the original of which was, that the king's proclamations, and other public acts, might be affixed thereon, by way of publication. So, Jonſon's Every Man out of his Humour:

"—— put off
"To the Lord Chancellor's tomb, or the Shrives poſts."

So again, in the old play called Lingua:

"Knows he how to become a ſcarlet gown? hath he a pair of freſh poſts at his door?" Warburton.

Dr. Letherland was of opinion, that "by this poſt is meant a poſt to mount a horſe from, a horſe-block, which, by the cuſtom of the city, is ſtill placed at the ſheriff's door."

In the Contention for Honour and Riches, a maſque by Shirley, 1633, one of the competitors ſwears:

"By the Shrive's poſt," &c.

Again, in A Woman never vex'd, com. by Rowley, 1632:

"If e'er I live to ſee thee ſheriff of London,
"I'll gild thy painted poſts cum privilegio." Steevens.

[5] —or a codling when 'tis almoſt an apple:] A codling anciently meant an immature apple. So, in Ben Jonſon's Alchemiſt:

"Who is it, Dol?
"A fine young quodling."

The fruit at preſent ſtyled a codling, was unknown to our gardens in the time of Shakſpeare. Steevens.

'tis with him e'en ſtanding water,[6] between boy and man. He is very well-favoured, and he ſpeaks very ſhrewiſhly; one would think, his mother's milk were ſcarce out of him.

Oli. Let him approach: Call in my gentlewoman.

Mal. Gentlewoman, my lady calls. [Exit.

Re-enter Maria.

Oli. Give me my veil: come, throw it o'er my face;
We'll once more hear Orſino's embaſſy.

Enter Viola.

Vio. The honourable lady of the houſe, which is ſhe?

Oli. Speak to me, I ſhall anſwer for her? Your will?

Vio. Moſt radiant, exquiſite, and unmatchable beauty,—I pray you, tell me, if this be the lady of the houſe, for I never ſaw her: I would be loath to caſt away my ſpeech; for, beſides that it is excellently well penn'd, I have taken great pains to con it. Good beauties, let me ſuſtain no ſcorn; I am very comptible,[7] even to the leaſt ſiniſter uſage.

[6] —— 'tis with him e'en ſtanding water,] The old copy has—in. The emendation was made by Mr. Steevens. In the firſt folio e'en and in are very frequently confounded. Malone.

[7] —— I am very comptible,] Comptible for ready to call to account. Warburton.

Viola ſeems to mean juſt the contrary. She begs ſhe may not be treated with ſcorn, becauſe ſhe is very ſubmiſſive, even to lighter marks of reprehenſion. Steevens.

Oli. Whence came you, ſir?

Vio. I can ſay little more than I have ſtudied, and that queſtion's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modeſt aſſurance, if you be the lady of the houſe, that I may proceed in my ſpeech.

Oli. Are you a comedian?

Vio. No, my profound heart: and yet, by the very fangs of malice, I ſwear, I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the houſe?

Oli. If I do not uſurp myſelf, I am.

Vio. Moſt certain, if you are ſhe, you do uſurp yourſelf; for what is yours to beſtow, is not yours to reſerve. But this is from my commiſſion: I will on with my ſpeech in your praiſe, and then ſhew you the heart of my meſſage.

Oli. Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praiſe.

Vio. Alas, I took great pains to ſtudy it, and 'tis poetical.

Oli. It is the more like to be feigned; I pray you, keep it in. I heard, you were ſaucy at my gates; and allowed your approach, rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reaſon, be brief:[8] 'tis not that time of moon with me, to make one in ſo ſkipping[9] a dialogue.

[8] ——If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reaſon, be brief:] The ſenſe evidently requires that we ſhould read:

"If you be mad, be gone," &c.

For the words be mad, in the firſt part of the ſentence, are oppoſed to reaſon in the ſecond. M. Mason.

[9] ——ſkipping—] Wild, frolick, mad. Johnson.

So, in K. Henry IV. P. I:

"The ſkipping king, he ambled up and down," &c.

Steevens.

Mar. Will you hoiſt ſail, ſir? here lies your way.

Vio. No, good ſwabber; I am to hull here[1] a little longer.—Some mollification for your giant,[2] ſweet lady.

Oli. Tell me your mind.

Vio. I am a meſſenger.[3]

Again, in The Merchant of Venice:
"——— take pain
"To allay, with ſome cold drops of modeſty,
"Thy ſkipping ſpirit." MALONE.

[1] ——I am to hull here—] To hull means to drive to and fro upon the water, without ſails or rudder. So, in Philemon Holland's tranſlation of the 9th Book of Pliny's Natural Hiſtory, 1601, p. 239: "—fell to be drowſie and ſleepie, and hulled to and fro with the waves, as if it had beene half dead." Again, in The Noble Soldier, 1634:
"That all theſe miſchiefs hull with flagging ſail."
STEEVENS.

[2] ——ſome mollification for your giant,] Ladies, in romance, are guarded by giants, who repel all improper or troubleſome advances. Viola, ſeeing the waiting-maid ſo eager to oppoſe her meſſage, intreats Olivia to pacify her giant. JOHNSON.

Viola likewiſe alludes to the diminutive ſize of Maria, who is called on ſubſequent occaſions, little villain, youngeſt wren of nine, &c. STEEVENS.

So, Falſtaff to his page:
"Sirrah, you giant," &c. K. Henry IV. P. II. Act I.
MALONE.

[3] Oli. Tell me your mind.
Vio. I am a meſſenger.] Theſe words (which in the old copy are part of Viola's laſt ſpeech) muſt be divided between the two ſpeakers.

Viola growing troubleſome, Olivia would diſmiſs her, and therefore cuts her ſhort with this command, Tell me your mind. The other, taking advantage of the ambiguity of the word mind, which ſignifies either buſineſs or inclination, replies as if ſhe had uſed it in the latter ſenſe, I am a meſſenger.
WARBURTON.

Oli. Sure, you have ſome hideous matter to deliver, when the courteſy of it is ſo fearful. Speak your office.

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage; I hold the olive in my hand: my words are as full of peace as matter.

Oli. Yet you began rudely. What are you? what would you?

Vio. The rudeneſs, that hath appear'd in me, have I learn'd from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as ſecret as maidenhead: to your ears, divinity; to any other's, prophanation.

Oli. Give us the place alone: we will hear this divinity. [Exit MARIA.] Now, ſir, what is your text?

Vio. Moſt ſweet lady,——

Oli. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be ſaid of it. Where lies your text?

Vio. In Orſino's boſom.

Oli. In his boſom? In what chapter of his boſom?

Vio. To anſwer by the method, in the firſt of his heart.

Oli. O, I have read it; it is hereſy. Have you no more to ſay?

Vio. Good madam, let me ſee your face.

Oli. Have you any commiſſion from your lord to negociate with my face? you are now out of your text: but we will draw the curtain, and ſhew you the picture. Look you, ſir, ſuch a one as I was this preſent: Is't not well done?[4] [Unveiling.

As a meſſenger, ſhe was not to ſpeak her own mind, but that of her employer. M. MASON.

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Oli. 'Tis in grain, ſir; 'twill endure wind and weather.

[4] —— Look you, ſir, ſuch a one as I was this preſent: Is't not well done?] This is nonſenſe. The change of was to wear, I think, clears all up, and gives the expreſſion an air of gallantry. Viola preſſes to ſee Olivia's face: The other at length pulls off her veil, and ſays: We will draw the curtain, and ſhew you the picture. I wear this complexion to-day, I may wear another to-morrow; jocularly intimating, that ſhe painted. The other, vext at the jeſt, ſays, "Excellently done, if God did all." Perhaps, it may be true, what you ſay in jeſt; otherwiſe 'tis an excellent face. 'Tis in grain, &c. replies Olivia. WARBURTON.

I am not ſatisfied with this emendation. We may read, "Such a one I was. This preſence, is't not well done?" i. e. this mien, is it not happily repreſented? Similar phraſeology occurs in Othello: "This fortification, ſhall we ſee it?" STEEVENS.

This paſſage is nonſenſe as it ſtands, and neceſſarily requires ſome amendment. That propoſed by Warburton would make ſenſe of it; but then the alluſion to a picture would be dropped, which began in the preceding part of the ſpeech, and is carried on through thoſe that follow. If we read preſents, inſtead of preſent, this alluſion will be preſerved, and the meaning will be clear. I have no doubt but the line ſhould run thus:

"Look you, ſir, ſuch as once I was, this preſents."

Preſents means repreſents. So Hamlet calls the pictures he ſhews his mother:

"The counterfeit preſentment of two brothers."

She had ſaid before—"But we will draw the curtain, and ſhew you the picture;" and concludes with aſking him, if it was well done. The ſame idea occurs in Troilus and Creſſida, where Pandarus, taking off her veil, ſays:

"Come draw this curtain, and let us ſee your picture." M. MASON.

I ſuſpect, the author intended that Olivia ſhould again cover her face with her veil, before ſhe ſpeaks theſe words. MALONE.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly blent,[5] whose red and white
Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on:
Lady, you are the cruel'st she alive,
If you will lead these graces to the grave,
And leave the world no copy.[6]

Oli. O, sir, I will not be so hard-hearted; I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: It shall be inventoried; and every particle, and utensil, labelled to my will: as, item, two lips indifferent

[5] 'Tis beauty truly blent,] i. e. blended, mixed together. Blent is the ancient participle of the verb to blend. So, in A Looking Glass for London and England, 1617:
" —— the beautiful encrease
" Is wholly blent."
Again, in Spenser's Fairy Queen, B. I. c. 6:
" —— for having blent
" My name with guile, and traiterous intent."
STEEVENS.

[6] If you will lead these graces to the grave,
And leave the world no copy.] How much more elegantly is this thought expressed by Shakspeare, than by Beaumont and Fletcher in their Philaster:
" I grieve such virtue should be laid in earth,
" Without an heir."
Shakspeare has copied himself in his 11th Sonnet:
" She carv'd thee for her seal, and meant thereby
" Thou should'st print more, nor let that copy die."
Again, in the 3d Sonnet:
" Die single, and thine image dies with thee."
STEEVENS.

Again, in his 9th Sonnet:
" Ah! if thou issueless shalt hap to die,
" The world will hail thee like a makeless wife;
" The world will be thy widow, and still weep
" That thou no form of thee hast left behind."
Again, in the 13th Sonnet:
" O that you were yourself! but, love, you are
" No longer yours than you yourself here live:
" Against this coming end you should prepare,
" And your sweet semblance to some other give."
MALONE.

red; item, two grey eyes, with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and ſo forth. Were you ſent hither to 'praiſe me? [7]

Vio. I ſee you what you are: you are too proud;
But, if you were the devil, you are fair.
My lord and maſter loves you; O, ſuch love
Could be but recompens'd, though you were crown'd
The nonpareil of beauty!

Oli. How does he love me?

Vio. With adorations, with fertile tears, [8]
With groans that thunder love, with ſighs of fire. [9]

[7] —— to 'praiſe me?] i. e. to appraiſe, or appretiate me. The foregoing words, ſchedules, and inventoried, ſhew, I think, that this is the meaning. So again, in Cymbeline: "I could then have looked on him without the help of admiration; though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his ſide, and I to peruſe him by items." MALONE.

Malone's conjecture is ingenious, and I ſhould have thought it the true reading, if the foregoing words, ſchedule and inventoried, had been uſed by Viola: but as it is Olivia herſelf who makes uſe of them, I believe the old reading is right, though Steevens has adopted that of Malone. Viola has extolled her beauty ſo highly, that Olivia aſks, whether ſhe was ſent there on purpoſe to praiſe her. M. MASON.

[8] —— with fertile tears,] With, which is not in the old copy, was added by Mr. Pope to ſupply the metre. Tears is here uſed as a diſſyllable, like fire, hour, ſwear, &c. "With adoration's fertile tears," i. e. with the copious tears that unbounded and adoring love pours forth. MALONE.

To read tears as a diſſyllable [i. e. tĕ-ārs] at the end of a verſe, is what no ancient examples have authoriſed, and no human ears can endure. STEEVENS.

[9] With groans that thunder love, with ſighs of fire.] This line is worthy of Dryden's Almanzor, and, if not ſaid in mockery of amorous hyperboles, might be regarded as a ridicule on a paſſage in Chapman's tranſlation of the firſt book of Homer, 1598:

"Jove thunder'd out a ſigh;"

Oli. Your lord does know my mind, I cannot love him:
Yet I ſuppoſe him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great eſtate, of freſh and ſtainleſs youth;
In voices well divulg'd,[1] free, learn'd, and valiant,
And, in dimenſion, and the ſhape of nature,
A gracious perſon: but yet I cannot love him;
He might have took his anſwer long ago.

Vio. If I did love you in my maſter's flame,
With ſuch a ſuffering, ſuch a deadly life,
In your denial I would find no ſenſe,
I would not underſtand it.

Oli. Why, what would you?

Vio. Make me a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my ſoul within the houſe;
Write loyal cantons of contemned love,[2]
And ſing them loud even in the dead of night;

Or, on another in Lodge's Roſalynde, 1592:
"The winds of my deepe ſighes
"That thunder ſtill for noughts," &c. STEEVENS.

So, in our author's Lover's Complaint:
"O, that forc'd thunder from his heart did fly!"
MALONE.

[1] In voices well divulg'd,] Well ſpoken of by the world.
MALONE.

So, in Timon:
"Is this the Athenian minion, whom the world
"Voic'd ſo regardfully?" STEEVENS.

[2] Write loyal cantons of contemned love,] The old copy has cantons; which Mr. Capell, who appears to have been entirely unacquainted with our ancient language, has changed into canzons.—There is no need of alteration. Canton was uſed for canto in our author's time. So, in The London Prodigal, a comedy, 1605: "What-do-you-call-him has it there in his third canton." Again, in Heywood's Preface to Britaynes Troy, 1609: "—in the judicial peruſal of theſe few cantons," &c. MALONE.

Holla your name to the reverberate hills,[3]
And make the babbling goſſip of the air[4]
Cry out, Olivia! O, you ſhould not reſt
Between the elements of air and earth,
But you ſhould pity me.

Oli. You might do much: What is your parentage?

Vio. Above my fortunes, yet my ſtate is well:
I am a gentleman.

Oli. Get you to your lord;
I cannot love him: let him ſend no more;
Unleſs, perchance, you come to me again,
To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well:
I thank you for your pains: ſpend this for me.

Vio. I am no fee'd poſt,[5] lady; keep your purſe;
My maſter, not myſelf, lacks recompenſe.
Love make his heart of flint, that you ſhall love;
And let your fervour, like my maſter's, be Plac'd in contempt! Farewell, fair cruelty. [Exit.

Oli. What is your parentage?

[3] Holla your name to the reverberate hills,] I have corrected, reverberant. THEOBALD.

Mr. Upton well obſerves, that Shakſpeare frequently uſes the adjective paſſive, actively. Theobald's emendation is therefore unneceſſary. B. Jonſon, in one of his maſques at court, ſays:
" ——— which ſkill, Pythagoras
" Firſt taught to men by a reverberate glaſs."
STEEVENS.

Johnſon, in his Dictionary, adopted Theobald's correction. But the following line from T. Heywood's Troja Britannica, 1609, canto xi. ſt. 9, ſhows that the original text ſhould be preſerved:
" Give ſhrill reverberat echoes and rebounds."
HOLT WHITE.

[4] ——the babbling goſſip of the air—] A moſt beautiful expreſſion for an echo. DOUCE.

[5] I am no fee'd poſt,] Poſt, in our author's time, ſignified a meſſenger. MALONE.

Above my fortunes, yet my ſtate is well:
I am a gentleman.——I'll be ſworn thou art;
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and ſpirit,
Do give thee five-fold blazon:—Not too faſt:—ſoft! ſoft!
Unleſs the maſter were the man.[6]—How now?
Even ſo quickly may one catch the plague?
Methinks, I feel this youth's perfections,
With an inviſible and ſubtle ſtealth,
To creep in at mine eyes. Well, let it be.—
What, ho, Malvolio!—

Re-enter MALVOLIO.

MAL. Here, madam, at your ſervice.

OLI. Run after that ſame peeviſh meſſenger,
The county's man:[7] he left this ring behind him,
Would I, or not; tell him, I'll none of it.
Deſire him not to flatter with his lord,[8]
Nor hold him up with hopes; I am not for him:
If that the youth will come this way to-morrow,
I'll give him reaſons for't. Hie thee, Malvolio.

[6] ——ſoft! ſoft!
Unleſs the maſter were the man.] Unleſs the dignity of the maſter were added to the merit of the ſervant, I ſhall go too far, and diſgrace myſelf. Let me ſtop in time. MALONE.

Perhaps ſhe means to check herſelf by obſerving,—This is unbecoming forwardneſs on my part, unleſs I were as much in love with the maſter as I am with the man. STEEVENS.

[7] The county's man:] County and count in old language were ſynonymous. The old copy has countes, which may be right: the Saxon genitive caſe. MALONE.

[8] —— to flatter with his lord,] This was the phraſeology of the time. So, in King Richard II:

"Shall dying men flatter with thoſe that live."

Many more inſtances might be added. MALONE.

Mal. Madam, I will. [Exit.

Oli. I do I know not what: and fear to find
Mine eye[9] too great a flatterer for my mind.
Fate, ſhew thy force: Ourſelves we do not owe;[1]
What is decreed, muſt be; and be this ſo! [Exit.

[9] Mine eye &c.] I believe the meaning is; I am not miſtreſs of my own actions; I am afraid that my eyes betray me, and flatter the youth without my conſent, with diſcoveries of love.
JOHNSON.

Johnſon's explanation of this paſſage is evidently wrong. It would be ſtrange indeed if Olivia ſhould ſay, that ſhe feared her eyes would betray her paſſion, and flatter the youth, without her conſent, with a diſcovery of her love, after ſhe had actually ſent him a ring, which muſt have diſcovered her paſſion more ſtrongly, and was ſent for that very purpoſe.—The true meaning appears to me to be thus: She fears that her eyes had formed ſo flattering an idea of Ceſario, that ſhe ſhould not have ſtrength of mind ſufficient to reſiſt the impreſſion. She had juſt before ſaid:

"Methinks, I feel this youth's perfections,
"With an inviſible and ſubtle ſtealth,
"To creep in at mine eyes."

Which confirms my explanation of this paſſage. M. MASON.

I think the meaning is, I fear that my eyes will ſeduce my underſtanding; that I am indulging a paſſion for this beautiful youth, which my reaſon cannot approve. MALONE.

[1] —— Ourſelves we do not owe;] i. e. we are not our own maſters. We cannot govern ourſelves. So, in Macbeth:

"—— the diſpoſition that I owe;" i. e. own, poſſeſs.
STEEVENS.

ACT II. SCENE I.

The Sea-coaſt.

Enter ANTONIO and SEBASTIAN.

ANT. Will you ſtay no longer? nor will you not, that I go with you?

SEB. By your patience, no: my ſtars ſhine darkly over me; the malignancy of my fate might, perhaps, diſtemper yours; therefore I ſhall crave of you your leave, that I may bear my evils alone: It were a bad recompenſe for your love, to lay any of them on you.

ANT. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound.

SEB. No, 'ſooth, ſir; my determinate voyage is mere extravagancy. But I perceive in you ſo excellent a touch of modeſty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in; therefore it charges me in manners the rather to expreſs myſelf.[2] You muſt know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebaſtian, which I called Rodorigo; my father was that Sebaſtian of Meſſaline,[3] whom I know, you have heard of: he left behind him, myſelf, and a ſiſter, both born in an hour. If the

[2] —— to expreſs myſelf.] That is, to reveal myſelf. JOHNSON.

[3] —— Meſſaline,] Sir Thomas Hanmer very judiciouſly offers to read Metelin, an iſland in the Archipelago; but Shakſpeare knew little of geography, and was not at all ſolicitous about orthographical nicety. The ſame miſtake occurs in the concluding ſcene of the play:

"Of Meſſaline; Sebaſtian was my father." STEEVENS.

heavens had been pleaſed, 'would we had ſo ended! but, you, ſir, altered that; for, ſome hour before you took me from the breach of the ſea,[4] was my ſiſter drowned.

Ant. Alas, the day!

Seb. A lady, ſir, though it was ſaid ſhe much reſembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but, though I could not, with ſuch eſtimable wonder,[5] overfar believe that, yet thus far I will boldly publiſh her, ſhe bore a mind that envy could not but call fair: ſhe is drowned already, ſir, with ſalt water,[6] though I ſeem to drown her remembrance again with more.

Ant. Pardon me, ſir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O, good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your ſervant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done,

[4] —— the breach of the ſea,] i. e. what we now call the breaking of the ſea. In Pericles it is ſtyled—" the rupture of the ſea." STEEVENS.

[5] —— with ſuch eſtimable wonder,] Theſe words Dr. Warburton calls an interpolation of the players, but what did the players gain by it? they may be ſometimes guilty of a joke without the concurrence of the poet, but they never lengthen a ſpeech only to make it longer. Shakſpeare often confounds the active and paſſive adjectives. Eſtimable wonder is eſteeming wonder, or wonder and eſteem. The meaning is, that he could not venture to think ſo highly as others of his ſiſter. JOHNSON.

Thus Milton uſes unexpreſſive notes, for unexpreſſible, in his Hymn on the Nativity. MALONE.

[6] ——ſhe is drowned already, ſir, with ſalt water,] There is a reſemblance between this and another falſe thought in Hamlet:

" Too much of water haſt thou, poor Ophelia,
" And therefore I forbid my tears." STEEVENS.

that is, kill him whom you have recovered, deſire it not. Fare ye well at once: my boſom is full of kindneſs; and I am yet ſo near the manners of my mother,[7] that upon the leaſt occaſion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the count Orſino's court: farewell. [Exit.

Ant. The gentleneſs of all the gods go with thee!
I have many enemies in Orſino's court,
Elſe would I very ſhortly ſee thee there:
But, come what may, I do adore thee ſo,
That danger ſhall ſeem ſport, and I will go. [Exit.

SCENE II.

A Street.

Enter VIOLA; MALVOLIO following.

Mal. Were not you even now with the counteſs Olivia?

Vio. Even now, ſir; on a moderate pace I have ſince arrived but hither.

Mal. She returns this ring to you, ſir; you might have ſaved me my pains, to have taken it away yourſelf. She adds moreover, that you ſhould put your lord into a deſperate aſſurance ſhe will none of him: And one thing more; that you be never ſo hardy to come again in his affairs, unleſs it be to report your lord's taking of this. Receive it ſo.[8]

[7] I am yet ſo near the manners of my mother,] So, in King Henry V. Act IV. ſc. vi:
"And all my mother came into my eyes." MALONE.

[8] Receive it ſo.] One of the modern editors reads, with ſome probability, receive it, ſir. But the preſent reading is ſufficiently intelligible. MALONE.

Vio. She took the ring of me; I'll none of it.[9]

Mal. Come, ſir, you peeviſhly threw it to her; and her will is, it ſhould be ſo returned: if it be worth ſtooping for, there it lies in your eye; if not, be it his that finds it. [Exit.

Vio. I left no ring with her: What means this lady?
Fortune forbid, my outſide have not charm'd her!

"Receive it ſo," is, underſtand it ſo. Thus, in the third Act of this play, Olivia ſays to Viola:
"To one of your receiving
"Enough is ſhewn—." STEEVENS.

[9] She took the ring of me; I'll none of it.] This paſſage has been hitherto thus pointed; which renders it, as it appears to me, quite unintelligible. The following punctuation:
She took the ring of me!—I'll none of it, was ſuggeſted by an ingenious friend, and certainly renders the line leſs exceptionable: yet I cannot but think there is ſome corruption in the text. Had our author intended ſuch a mode of ſpeech, he would probably have written:
She took a ring of me!—I'll none of it.
Malvolio's anſwer ſeems to intimate that Viola had ſaid ſhe had not given any ring. We ought, therefore, perhaps to read:
She took no ring of me!—I'll none of it.
So afterwards: "I left no ring with her." Viola expreſsly denies her having given Olivia any ring. How then can ſhe aſſert, as ſhe is made to do by the old regulation of the paſſage, that the lady had received one from her?
Since I wrote the above, it has occurred to me that the latter part of the line may have been corrupt, as well as the former: our author might have written:
She took this ring of me!—She'll none of it!
So before: "—he left this ring;—tell him, I'll none of it." And afterwards: "None of my lord's ring!"—Viola may be ſuppoſed to repeat the ſubſtance of what Malvolio has ſaid. Our author is ſeldom ſtudious on ſuch occaſions to uſe the very words he had before employed. MALONE.

I do not perceive the neceſſity of the change recommended. Viola finding the ring ſent after her, accompanied by a fiction, is prepared to meet it with another. This lady, as Dr. Johnſon has obſerved, is an excellent ſchemer; ſhe is never at a loſs, or taken unprepared. STEEVENS.

She made good view of me; indeed, ſo much,
That, ſure,[1] methought, her eyes had loſt her tongue,[2]
For ſhe did ſpeak in ſtarts diſtractedly.
She loves me, ſure; the cunning of her paſſion
Invites me in this churliſh meſſenger.
None of my lord's ring! why, he ſent her none.
I am the man;—If it be ſo, (as 'tis,)
Poor lady, ſhe were better love a dream.
Diſguiſe, I ſee, thou art a wickedneſs,
Wherein the pregnant enemy[3] does much.
How eaſy is it, for the proper-falſe
In women's waxen hearts to ſet their forms![4]

[1] That, ſure,] Sure, which is wanting in the old copy, was added, to complete the metre, by the editor of the ſecond folio. Sure, in the preſent inſtance, is not very likely to have been the word omitted in the firſt copy, being found in the next line but one. MALONE.

[2] —— her eyes had loſt her tongue,] We ſay a man loſes his company when they go one way and he goes another. So, Olivia's tongue loſt her eyes; her tongue was talking of the duke, and her eyes gazing on his meſſenger. JOHNSON.

It rather means that the very fixed and eager view ſhe took of Viola, perverted the uſe of her tongue, and made her talk diſtractedly. This conſtruction of the verb—loſt, is alſo much in Shakſpeare's manner. DOUCE.

[3] —— the pregnant enemy—] Is, I believe, the dexterous fiend, or enemy of mankind. JOHNSON.

Pregnant is certainly dexterous, or ready. So, in Hamlet:
"How pregnant ſometimes his replies are!" STEEVENS.

[4] How eaſy is it for the proper-falſe
In women's waxen hearts to ſet their forms!] This is obſcure. The meaning is, how eaſy is diſguiſe to women! how eaſily does their own falſehood, contained in their waxen changeable hearts, enable them to aſſume deceitful appearances! The two next lines are perhaps tranſpoſed, and ſhould be read thus:

For ſuch as we are made, if ſuch we be,
Alas, our frailty is the cauſe, not we. JOHNSON.

Alas, our frailty [5] is the cauſe not we;
For, ſuch as we are made of, ſuch we be.[6]

I am not certain that this explanation is juſt. Viola has been condemning thoſe who diſguiſe themſelves, becauſe Olivia had fallen in love with a ſpecious appearance. How eaſy is it, ſhe adds, for thoſe who are at once proper (i. e. fair in their appearance) and falſe (i. e. deceitful) to make an impreſſion on the eaſy hearts of women?—The proper-falſe is certainly a leſs elegant expreſſion than the fair deceiver, but ſeems to mean the ſame thing. A proper man, was the ancient phraſe for a handſome man:

"This Ludovico is a proper man." Othello.

To ſet their forms, means, to plant their images, i. e. to make an impreſſion on their eaſy minds. Mr. Tyrwhitt concurs with me in this interpretation. STEEVENS.

This paſſage, according to Johnſon's explanation of it, is ſo ſevere a ſatire upon women, that it is unnatural to ſuppoſe that Shakſpeare ſhould put it in the mouth of one of the ſex, eſpecially a young one. Nor do I think that the words can poſſibly expreſs the ſenſe which he contends for. Steevens's explanation appears to be the true one. The word proper certainly means handſome; and Viola's reflection, how eaſy it was for thoſe who are handſome and deceitful to make an impreſſion on the waxen hearts of women, is a natural ſentiment for a girl to utter who was herſelf in love. An expreſſion ſimilar to that of proper-falſe, occurs afterwards in this very play, where Antonio ſays:

"Virtue is beauty, but the beauteous-evil
"Are empty trunks o'er flouriſh'd by the devil."

M. MASON.

Mr. Steevens's explanation is undoubtedly the true one. So, in our author's Rape of Lucrece:

"——men have marble, women waxen minds,
"And therefore are they form'd as marble will;
"The weak oppreſs'd, the impreſſion of ſtrange kinds
"Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or ſkill:
"Then call them not the authors of their ill—."

Again, in Meaſure for Meaſure:

"Nay, call us ten times frail,
"For we are ſoft as our complexions are,
"And credulous to falſe prints." MALONE.

[5] ——our frailty—] The old copy reads—O frailty.
STEEVENS.

How will this fadge? [7] My maſter loves her dearly;
And I, poor monſter, fond as much on him;
And ſhe, miſtaken, ſeems to dote on me:
What will become of this! As I am man,
My ſtate is deſperate for my maſter's love;
As I am woman, now alas the day!
What thriftleſs ſighs ſhall poor Olivia breathe?
O time, thou muſt untangle this, not I;
It is too hard a knot for me to untie. [Exit.

The emendation was made by the editor of the ſecond folio.
MALONE.

[6] For, ſuch as we are made of, ſuch we be.] The old copy reads—made if. Mr. Tyrwhitt obſerves, that "inſtead of tranſpoſing theſe lines according to Dr. Johnſon's conjecture," he is inclined to read the latter as I have printed it. So, in The Tempeſt:

"——we are ſuch ſtuff
"As dreams are made of." STEEVENS.

I have no doubt that Mr. Tyrwhitt's conjecture is right. Of and if are frequently confounded in the old copies. Thus in the folio, 1632, King John, p. 6: "Lord of our preſence, Angiers, and if you." [inſtead of—of you.]

Again, of is printed inſtead of if, Merchant of Venice, 1623:

"Mine own I would ſay, but, of mine, then yours."

In As you like it, we have a line conſtructed nearly like the preſent, as now corrected:

"Who ſuch a one as ſhe, ſuch is her neighbour."
MALONE.

[7] How will this fadge?] To fadge, is to ſuit, to fit, to go with. So, in Decker's comedy of Old Fortunatus, 1600:

"I ſhall never fadge with the humour, becauſe I cannot lie."

So, in Mother Bombie, 1594:

"I'll have thy advice, and if it fadge, thou ſhalt eat."—
"But how will it fadge in the end?"—
"All this fadges well."—
"We are about a matter of legerdemain, how will this fadge?"
"——in good time it fadges." STEEVENS.

SCENE III.

A Room in Olivia's Houſe.

Enter Sir TOBY BELCH, and Sir ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK.

SIR TO. Approach, ſir Andrew: not to be a-bed after midnight, is to be up betimes; and diluculo ſurgere,[8] thou know'ſt,——

SIR AND. Nay, by my troth, I know not: but I know, to be up late, is to be up late.

SIR TO. A falſe concluſion; I hate it as an unfilled can: To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; ſo that, to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Do not our lives conſiſt of the four elements?[9]

SIR AND. 'Faith, ſo they ſay; but, I think, it rather conſiſts of eating and drinking.[1]

[8] ——diluculo ſurgere,] ſaluberrimum eſt. This adage our author found in Lilly's Grammar, p. 51. MALONE.

[9] ——Do not our lives conſiſt of the four elements?] So, in our author's 45th Sonnet:

" My life being made of four, with two alone
" Sinks down to death," &c.

So alſo, in King Henry V: " He is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him."
MALONE.

Again, in Antony and Cleopatra:

" I am fire and air; my other elements
" I give to baſer life." STEEVENS.

[1] ——I think, it rather conſiſts of eating and drinking.] A ridicule on the medical theory of that time, which ſuppoſed health to conſiſt in the juſt temperament and balance of the four elements in the human frame. WARBURTON.

Homer, Iliad IX. concurs in opinion with Sir Andrew:

" —— ſtrength conſiſts in ſpirits and in blood,
" And thoſe are ow'd to generous wine and food."
STEEVENS.

Sir To. Thou art a ſcholar; let us therefore eat and drink.—Marian, I ſay!——a ſtoop[2] of wine!

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool, i'faith.

Clo. How now, my hearts? Did you never ſee the picture of we three?[3]

Sir To. Welcome, aſs. Now let's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breaſt.[3] I had rather than forty ſhillings I had

[2] ——a ſtoop—] A ſtoop, cadus, à ſtoppa, Belgis, ſtoop. Ray's Proverbs, p. 111. In Hexham's Low Dutch Dictionary, 1660, a gallon is explained by een kanne van twee ſtoopen. A ſtoop, however, ſeems to have been ſomething more than half a gallon. In A Catalogue of the Rarities in the Anatomy Hall at Leyden, printed there, 4to. 1701, is "The bladder of a man containing four ſtoop (which is ſomething above TWO Engliſh gallons) of water." REED.

[3] ——Did you never ſee the picture of we three?] An alluſion to an old print, ſometimes paſted on the wall of a country ale-houſe, repreſenting TWO, but under which the ſpectator reads—

"We three are aſſes." HENLEY.

I believe Shakſpeare had in his thoughts a common ſign, in which two wooden heads are exhibited, with this inſcription under it; "We three loggerheads be." The ſpectator or reader is ſuppoſed to make the third. The Clown means to inſinuate, that Sir Toby and Sir Andrew had as good a title to the name of fool as himſelf. MALONE.

[4] ——By my troth, the fool has an excellent breaſt.] Breaſt, voice. Breath has been here propoſed: but many inſtances may be brought to juſtify the old reading beyond a doubt. In the ſtatutes of Stoke-College, founded by Archbiſhop Parker, 1535, Strype's Parker, p. 9: "Which ſaid queriſters, after their breaſts are changed," &c. that is, after their voices are broken. In Fiddes's Life of Wolſey, Append. p. 128: "Singing-men well-breaſted." In Tuſſer's Huſbandrie, p. 155, edit. P. Short:

"The better breſt, the leſſer reſt,
"To ſerve the queer now there now heere."

ſuch a leg; and ſo ſweet a breath to ſing, as the fool has. In ſooth, thou waſt in very gracious fooling laſt night, when thou ſpokeſt of Pigrogromitus, of the Vapians paſſing the equinoctial of Queubus; 'twas very good, i'faith. I ſent thee ſixpence for thy leman; Hadſt it? 5

Tuſſer, in this piece, called The Author's Life, tells us, that he was a choir-boy in the collegiate chapel of Wallingford Caſtle; and that, on account of the excellence of his voice, he was ſucceſſively removed to various choirs. T. WARTON.

B. Jonſon uſes the word breaſt in the ſame manner, in his Maſque of Gypſies, p. 623, edit. 1692. In an old play called The Four P's, written by J. Heywood, 1569, is this paſſage:

"Poticary. I pray you, tell me, can you ſing?
"Pedler. Sir, I have ſome ſight in ſinging.
"Poticary. But is your breaſt any thing ſweet?
"Pedler. Whatever my breaſt be, my voice is meet."

I ſuppoſe this cant term to have been current among the muſicians of the age. All profeſſions have in ſome degree their jargon; and the remoter they are from liberal ſcience, and the leſs conſequential to the general intereſts of life, the more they ſtrive to hide themſelves behind affected terms and barbarous phraſeology. STEEVENS.

5 I ſent thee ſixpence for thy leman; hadſt it?] The old copy reads—lemon. But the Clown was neither pantler, nor butler. The poet's word was certainly miſtaken by the ignorance of the printer. I have reſtored leman, i.e. I ſent thee ſixpence to ſpend on thy miſtreſs. THEOBALD.

I receive Theobald's emendation, becauſe it throws a light on the obſcurity of the following ſpeech.

Leman is frequently uſed by the ancient writers, and Spenſer in particular. So again, in The Noble Soldier, 1634:

"Fright him as he's embracing his new leman."

The money was given him for his leman, i.e. his miſtreſs. We have ſtill "Leman-ſtreet," in Goodman's-fields. He ſays he did impeticoat the gratuity, i.e. he gave it to his petticoat companion; for (ſays he) Malvolio's noſe is no whipſtock, i.e. Malvolio may ſmell out our connection, but his ſuſpicion will not prove the inſtrument of our puniſhment. My miſtreſs has a white hand, and the myrmidons are no bottle-ale houſes, i.e. my miſtreſs is handſome, but the houſes kept by officers of juſ-

Clo. I did impeticos thy gratillity;[6] for Malvolio's nofe is no whipftock: My lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houfes.

tice are no places to make merry and entertain her at. Such may be the meaning of this whimfical fpeech. A whipftock is, I believe, the handle of a whip, round which a ftrap of leather is ufually twifted, and is fometimes put for the whip itfelf. So, in Albumazar, 1615:

"———— out, Carter,
"Hence dirty whipftock——"

Again, in The Two angry Women of Abingdon, 1599:

"—— the coach-man fit!
"His duty is before you to ftand,
"Having a lufty whipftock in his hand."

This word occurs again in Jeronymo, 1605:

"Bought you a whiftle and a whipftock too." Steevens.

[6] I did impeticos thy gratillity;] This, Sir T. Hanmer tells us, is the fame with impocket thy gratuity. He is undoubtedly right; but we muft read—I did impetticoat thy gratuity. The fools were kept in long coats, to which the allufion is made. There is yet much in this dialogue which I do not underftand. Johnson.

Figure 12, in the plate of the Morris-dancers, at the end of K. Henry IV. P. I. fufficiently proves that petticoats were not always a part of the drefs of fools or jefters, though they were of ideots, for a reafon which I avoid to offer. Steevens.

It is a very grofs miftake to imagine that this character was habited like an ideot. Neither he nor Touchftone, though they wear a particoloured drefs, has either coxcomb or bauble, nor is by any means to be confounded with the Fool in King Lear, nor even, I think, with the one in All's well that ends well.—A Differtation on the Fools of Shakfpeare, a character he has moft judicioufly varied and difcriminated, would be a valuable addition to the notes on his plays. Ritson.

The old copy reads—"I did impeticos thy gratillity." The meaning, I think, is, I did impetticoat or impocket thy gratuity; but the reading of the old copy fhould not, in my opinion, be here difturbed. The Clown ufes the fame kind of fantaftick language elfewhere in this fcene. Neither Pigrogromitus, nor the Vapians would object to it. Malone.

Sir And. Excellent! Why, this is the beſt fooling, when all is done. Now, a ſong.

Sir To. Come on; there is ſix-pence for you: let's have a ſong.

Sir And. There's a teſtril of me too: if one knight give a———

Clo. Would you have a love-ſong, or a ſong of good life? [7]

Sir To. A love-ſong, a love-ſong.

Sir And. Ay, ay; I care not for good life.

SONG.

Clo. O miſtreſs mine, where are you roaming?
O, ſtay and hear; your true love's coming,
That can ſing both high and low:
Trip no further, pretty ſweeting;
Journeys end in lovers' meeting,
Every wiſe man's ſon doth know.

Sir And. Excellent good, i'faith!

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. What is love? 'tis not hereafter;
Preſent mirth hath preſent laughter;

[7] ——of good life?] I do not ſuppoſe that by a ſong of good life, the Clown means a ſong of a moral turn; though Sir Andrew anſwers to it in that ſignification. Good life, I believe, is harmleſs mirth and jollity. It may be a Galliciſm: we call a jolly fellow a bon vivant. Steevens.

From the oppoſition of the words in the Clown's queſtion, I incline to think that good life is here uſed in its uſual acceptation. In The Merry Wives of Windſor, theſe words are uſed for a virtuous character:

"Defend your reputation, or farewell to your good life for ever." Malone.

What's to come, is ſtill unſure:
In delay there lies no plenty;[8]
Then come kiſs me, ſweet-and-twenty,[9]
Youth's a ſtuff will not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very ſweet and contagious, i'faith.

Sir To. To hear by the noſe, it is dulcet in contagion. But ſhall we make the welkin dance[1]

[8] In delay there lies no plenty;] No man will ever be worth much, who delays the advantages offered by the preſent hour, in hopes that the future will offer more. So, in K. Richard III. Act IV. ſc. iii:

"Delay leads impotent and ſnail-pac'd beggary."

Again, in K. Henry VI. P. I:

"Defer no time, delays have dangerous ends."

Again, in a Scots proverb: "After a delay comes a let." See Kelly's Collection, p. 52. STEEVENS.

[9] Then come kiſs me, ſweet and twenty,] This line is obſcure; we might read:

Come, a kiſs then, ſweet and twenty.

Yet I know not whether the preſent reading be not right, for in ſome counties ſweet and twenty, whatever be the meaning, is a phraſe of endearment. JOHNSON.

So, in Wit of a Woman, 1604:

"Sweet and twenty: all ſweet and ſweet."

Again, in The Life and Death of the Merry Devil of Edmonton, &c. by T. B. 1631: "—his little wanton wagtailes, his ſweet and twenties, his pretty pinckineyd pigſnies, &c. as he himſelf uſed commonly to call them." STEEVENS.

Again, in The Merry Wives of Windſor:

"Good even, and twenty." MALONE.

[1] —— make the welkin dance—] That is, drink till the ſky ſeems to turn round. JOHNSON.

So, in Antony and Cleopatra, Act II. ſc. vii:

"Cup us till the world go round."

indeed? Shall we rouſe the night-owl in a catch, that will draw three ſouls out of one weaver?[2] ſhall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't: I am dog at a catch.

Again, Mr. Pope:

"Ridotta ſips and dances, till ſhe ſee
"The doubling luſtres dance as faſt as ſhe." Steevens.

[2] —— draw three ſouls out of one weaver?] Our author repreſents weavers as much given to harmony in his time. I have ſhewn the cauſe of it elſewhere. The expreſſion of the power of muſick is familiar with our author. Much Ado about Nothing: "Now is his ſoul raviſhed. Is it not ſtrange that ſheep's-guts ſhould hale ſouls out of men's bodies?"—Why, he ſays, three ſouls, is becauſe he is ſpeaking of a catch of three parts; and the peripatetic philoſophy, then in vogue, very liberally gave every man three ſouls. The vegetative or plaſtic, the animal, and the rational. To this, too, Jonſon alludes, in his Poetaſter: "What, will I turn ſhark upon my friends? or my friends' friends? I ſcorn it with my three ſouls." By the mention of theſe three, therefore, we may ſuppoſe it was Shakſpeare's purpoſe, to hint to us thoſe ſurprizing effects of muſick, which the ancients ſpeak of, when they tell us of Amphion, who moved ſtones and trees; Orpheus and Arion, who tamed ſavage beaſts; and Timotheus, who governed, as he pleaſed, the paſſions of his human auditors. So noble an obſervation has our author conveyed in the ribaldry of this buffoon character. Warburton.

In a popular book of the time, Carew's tranſlation of Huarte's Trial of Wits, 1594, there is a curious chapter concerning the three ſouls, "vegetative, ſenſitive, and reaſonable." Farmer.

I doubt whether our author intended any alluſion to this diviſion of ſouls. In The Tempeſt, we have—"trebles thee o'er;" i. e. makes thee thrice as great as thou wert before. In the ſame manner, I believe, he here only means to deſcribe Sir Toby's catch as ſo harmonious, that it would hale the ſoul out of a weaver (the warmeſt lover of a ſong) thrice over; or in other words, give him thrice more delight than it would give another man. Dr. Warburton's ſuppoſition that there is an alluſion to the catch being in three parts, appears to me one of his unfounded refinements. Malone.

Clo. By'r lady, ſir, and ſome dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Moſt certain: let our catch be, Thou knave.

Clo. Hold thy peace, thou knave, knight? I ſhall be conſtrain'd in't to call thee knave, knight.

Sir And. 'Tis not the firſt time I have conſtrain'd one to call me knave. Begin, fool; it begins, Hold thy peace.

Clo. I ſhall never begin, if I hold my peace.

Sir And. Good, i'faith! Come, begin.

[They ſing a catch.[3]

[3] They ſing a catch.] This catch is loſt. Johnson.

A catch is a ſpecies of vocal harmony to be ſung by three or more perſons; and is ſo contrived, that though each ſings preciſely the ſame notes as his fellows, yet by beginning at ſtated periods of time from each other, there reſults from the performance a harmony of as many parts as there are ſingers. Compoſitions of this kind are, in ſtrictneſs, called Canons in the uniſon; and as properly, Catches, when the words in the different parts are made to catch or anſwer each other. One of the moſt remarkable examples of a true catch is that of Purcel, Let's live good honeſt lives, in which, immediately after one perſon has uttered theſe words, "What need we fear the Pope?" another in the courſe of his ſinging fills up a reſt which the firſt makes, with the words "The devil."

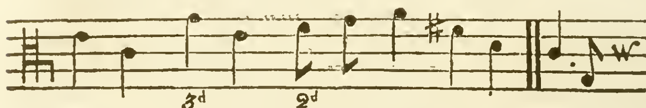
The catch above-mentioned to be ſung by Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and the Clown, from the hints given of it, appears to be ſo contrived as that each of the ſingers calls the other knave in turn; and for this the Clown means to apologize to the knight, when he ſays, that he ſhall be conſtrained to call him knave. I have here ſubjoined the very catch, with the muſical notes to which it was ſung in the time of Shakſpeare, and at the original performance of this comedy:

Enter MARIA.

MAR. What a catterwauling do you keep here! If my lady have not called up her ſteward, Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never truſt me.

SIR TO. My lady's a Cataian,[4] we are politicians; Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramſey,[5] and Three merry

A 3 voc.



The evidence of its authenticity is as follows: There is extant a book entitled, "PAMMELIA, Muſickes Miſcellanie, or mixed Varietie of pleaſant Roundelays and delightful Catches of 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 Parts in one." Of this book there are at leaſt two editions, the ſecond printed in 1618. In 1609, a ſecond part of this work was publiſhed with the title of DEUTEROMELIA, and in this book is contained the catch above given. SIR J. HAWKINS.

[4] —— a Cataian,] It is in vain to ſeek the preciſe meaning of this term of reproach. I have already attempted to explain it in a note on The Merry Wives of Windſor. I find it uſed again in Love and Honour, by Sir W. D'Avenant, 1649:

"Hang him, bold Cataian." STEEVENS.

[5] ——Peg-a-Ramſey,] In Durfey's Pills to purge Melancholy, is a very obſcene old ſong, entitled Peg-a-Ramſey. See alſo Ward's Lives of the Profeſſors of Greſham College, p. 207. PERCY.

Naſh mentions Peg of Ramſey among ſeveral other ballads men be we.[6] Am not I conſanguineous? am I not viz. Rogero, Baſilino, Turkelony, All the Flowers of the Broom, Pepper is black, Green Sleeves, Peggie Ramſie. It appears from the ſame author, that it was likewiſe a dance performed to the muſic of a ſong of that name. STEEVENS.

Peggy Ramſey is the name of ſome old ſong; the following is the tune to it:

Peggy Ramſey.

SIR J. HAWKINS.

[6] Three merry men &c.] Three merry men be we, is likewiſe a fragment of ſome old ſong, which I find repeated in Weſtward Hoe, by Decker and Webſter, 1607, and by Beaumont and Fletcher, in The Knight of the Burning Peſtle:

"Three merry men
"And three merry men
"And three merry men be we."

Again, in The Bloody Brother, of the ſame authors:

"Three merry boys, and three merry boys,
"And three merry boys are we,
"As ever did ſing, three parts in a ſtring,
"All under the triple tree."

Again, in Ram Alley, or Merry Tricks, 1611:

"And three merry men, and three merry men,
"And three merry men be we a." STEEVENS.

This is a concluſion common to many old ſongs. One of the moſt humorous that I can recollect, is the following:

"The wiſe men were but ſeaven, nor more ſhall be for me;
"The muſes were but nine, the worthies three times three;
"And three merry boyes, and three merry boyes, and three merry boyes are wee.

of her blood? Tilly-valley, lady! [7] There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady! [8] [Singing.

"The vertues they were seven, and three the greater bee;
"The Cæsars they were twelve, and the fatal sisters three.
"And three merry girles, and three merry girles, and three merry girles are wee."

There are ale-houses in some of the villages in this kingdom, that have the sign of The Three Merry Boys; there was one at Highgate in my memory. SIR J. HAWKINS.

Three merry men be we, may, perhaps, have been taken originally from the song of Robin Hood and the Tanner. Old Ballads, Vol. I. p. 89:

"Then Robin Hood took them by the hands,
"With a hey, &c.
"And danced about the oak-tree;
"For three merry men, and three merry men,
"And three merry men be we." TYRWHITT.

But perhaps the following, in The Old Wiues Tale, by George Peele, 1595, may be the original. Anticke, one of the characters, says: "—— let us rehearse the old proverb,

"Three merrie men, and three merrie men,
"And three merrie men be wee;
"I in the wood, and thou on the ground,
"And Jack sleepes in the tree." STEEVENS.

See An Antidote against Melancholy, made up in Pills, compounded of Witty Ballads, Jovial Songs, and Merry Catches, 4to. 1661, p. 69. REED.

[7] Tilley-valley, lady!] Tilly-valley was an interjection of contempt, which Sir Thomas More's lady is recorded to have had very often in her mouth. JOHNSON.

Tilly-valley is used as an interjection of contempt in the old play of Sir John Oldcastle; and is likewise a character in a comedy intituled Lady Alimony. Tillie-vallie may be a corruption of the Roman word (without a precise meaning, but indicative of contempt,) Titivilitium. See the Casina of Plautus, 2. 5. 39. STEEVENS.

Tilly-valley is a hunting phrase borrowed from the French. In the Venerie de Jacques Fouilloux, 1585, 4to. fo. 12, the following cry is mentioned: "Ty a hillaut & valleey;" and is set to music in pp. 49 and 50. DOUCE.

Clo. Beſhrew me, the knight's in admirable fooling.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough, if he be diſpoſed, and ſo do I too; he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir To. O, the twelfth day of December,— [Singing.

[8] There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady!] The ballad of Suſanna, from whence this line [There dwelt &c.] is taken, was licenſed by T. Colwell, in 1562, under the title of The goodly and conſtant Wyfe Suſanna. There is likewiſe a play on this ſubject. T. Warton.

There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady,] Maria's uſe of the word lady brings the ballad to Sir Toby's remembrance: Lady, lady, is the burthen, and ſhould be printed as ſuch. My very ingenious friend, Dr. Percy, has given a ſtanza of it in his Reliques of Ancient Poetry, Vol. I. p. 204. Juſt the ſame may be ſaid, where Mercutio applies it, in Romeo and Juliet, Act II. ſc. iv. Farmer.

I found what I once ſuppoſed to be a part of this ſong, in All's loſt by Luſt, a tragedy by William Rowley, 1633:

> " There was a nobleman of Spain, lady, lady,
> " That went abroad, and came not again
> " To his poor lady.
> " Oh, cruel age, when one brother, lady, lady,
> " Shall ſcorn to look upon another
> " Of his poor lady." Steevens.

This ſong, or, at leaſt, one with the ſame burthen, is alluded to in Ben Jonſon's Magnetic Lady, Vol. IV. p. 449:

> " Com. As true it is, lady, lady i' the ſong." Tyrwhitt.

The oldeſt ſong that I have ſeen with this burthen is in the old Morality, entitled The Trial of Treaſure, 4to. 1567. The following is one of the ſtanzas:

> " Helene may not compared be,
> " Nor Creſſida that was ſo bright,
> " Theſe cannot ſtain the ſhine of thee,
> " Nor yet Minerva of great might;
> " Thou paſſeſt Venus far away,
> " Lady, lady;
> " Love thee I will, both night and day,
> " My dere lady." Malone.

Mar. For the love o'God, peace.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. My maſters, are you mad? or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honeſty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouſe of my lady's houſe, that ye ſqueak out your coziers' catches[9] without any mitigation or remorſe of voice? Is there no reſpect of place, perſons, nor time, in you?

Sir To. We did keep time, ſir, in our catches. Sneck up![1]

[9] ——coziers' catches—] A cozier is a tailor, from coudre to ſew, part. couſu, Fr. Johnson.

Our author has again alluded to their love of vocal harmony in King Henry IV. P. I:

" Lady. I will not ſing.
" Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be redbreaſt teacher."

A cozier, it appears from Minſhieu, ſignified a botcher, or mender of old clothes, and alſo a cobler.—Here it means the former. Malone.

Minſhieu tells us, that cozier is a cobler or ſowter: and, in Northamptonſhire, the waxed thread which a cobler uſes in mending ſhoes, we call a codger's end. Whalley.

A coziers' end is ſtill uſed in Devonſhire for a cobler's end. Henley.

[1] Sneck up!] The modern editors ſeem to have regarded this unintelligible phraſe as the deſignation of a hiccup. It is however uſed in Beaumont and Fletcher's Knight of the Burning Peſtle, as it ſhould ſeem, on another occaſion: " Let thy father go ſneck up, he ſhall never come between a pair of ſheets with me again while he lives."

Again, in the ſame play: " Give him his money, George, and let him go ſneck up." Again, in Wily Beguiled: " An if my miſtreſs would be ruled by him, Sophos might go ſnick up." Again, in The Two angry Women of Abingdon, 1599: " —if they be not, let them go ſnick up." Again, in Heywood's Fair Maid of the Weſt, 1631, Blurt Maſter Conſtable, no date, &c.

Mal. Sir Toby, I muſt be round with you. My lady bade me tell you, that, though ſhe harbours you as her kinſman, ſhe's nothing allied to your diſorders. If you can ſeparate yourſelf and your miſdemeanors, you are welcome to the houſe; if not, an it would pleaſe you to take leave of her, ſhe is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir To. Farewell, dear heart,[2] ſince I muſt needs be gone.

Mar. Nay, good ſir Toby.

Clo. His eyes do ſhew his days are almoſt done.

Mal. Is't even ſo?

Sir To. But I will never die.

Clo. Sir Toby, there you lie.

Mal. This is much credit to you.

Sir To. Shall I bid him go? [Singing.

Clo. What an if you do?

Sir To. Shall I bid him go, and ſpare not?

Clo. O no, no, no, no, you dare not.

Perhaps in the two former of theſe inſtances, the words may be corrupted. In King Henry IV. P. I. Falſtaff ſays: "The Prince is a Jack, a Sneak-cup," i. e. one who takes his glaſs in a ſneaking manner. I think we might ſafely read ſneak-cup, at leaſt, in Sir Toby's reply to Malvolio. I ſhould not however omit to mention that ſneck the door is a north country expreſſion for latch the door.

Mr. Malone and others obſerve, that from the manner in which this cant phraſe is employed in our ancient comedies, it ſeems to have been ſynonymous to the modern expreſſion—Go hang yourſelf. Steevens.

[2] Farewell, dear heart, &c.] This entire ſong, with ſome variations, is publiſhed by Dr. Percy, in the firſt volume of his Reliques of Ancient Engliſh Poetry. Steevens.

Sir To. Out o'time? ſir, ye lie.[3]—Art any more than a ſteward? Doſt thou think, becauſe thou art virtuous, there ſhall be no more cakes and ale?[4]

Clo. Yes, by Saint Anne; and ginger ſhall be hot i'the mouth too.

Sir To. Thou'rt i'the right.—Go, ſir, rub your chain with crums:[5]—A ſtoop of wine, Maria!

[3] Out o'time? ſir, ye lie.] The old copy has—"out o'tune." We ſhould read, "out of time," as his ſpeech evidently refers to what Malvolio ſaid before:

"Have you no reſpect for place or time in you?
"Sir Toby. We did keep time, ſir, in our catches."

M. Mason.

The ſame correction, I find, had been ſilently made by Theobald, and was adopted by the three ſubſequent editors. Sir Toby is here repeating with indignation Malvolio's words.

In the MSS. of our author's age, tune and time are often quite undiſtinguiſhable; the ſecond ſtroke of the u ſeeming to be the firſt ſtroke of the m, or vice verſâ. Hence, in Macbeth, Act IV. ſc. ult. edit. 1623, we have "This time, goes manly," inſtead of "This tune goes manly." Malone.

[4] Doſt thou think, becauſe thou art virtuous, there ſhall be no more cakes and ale?] It was the cuſtom on holidays and ſaints' days to make cakes in honour of the day. The Puritans called this, ſuperſtition; and in the next page Maria ſays, that Malvolio is ſometimes a kind of Puritan. See Quarlous's Account of Rabbi Buſy, Act I. ſc. iii. in Ben Jonſon's Bartholomew Fair. Letherland.

[5] ——rub your chain with crums:] That ſtewards anciently wore a chain, as a mark of ſuperiority over other ſervants, may be proved from the following paſſage in The Martial Maid of Beaumont and Fletcher:

"Doſt thou think I ſhall become the ſteward's chair? Will not theſe ſlender haunches ſhew well in a chain?"——

Again:

"Pia. Is your chain right?
"Bob. It is both right and juſt, ſir;
"For though I am a ſteward, I did get it
"With no man's wrong."

The beſt method of cleaning any gilt plate, is by rubbing it

Mal. Miſtreſs Mary, if you prized my lady's favour at any thing more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule;[6] ſhe ſhall know of it, by this hand. [Exit.

Mar. Go ſhake your ears.

Sir And. 'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a hungry, to challenge him to the field; and then to break promiſe with him, and make a fool of him.

with crums. Naſh, in his piece entitled Have with you to Saffron Walden, 1595, taxes Gabriel Harvey with "having ſtolen a nobleman's ſteward's chain, at his lord's inſtalling at Windſor."

To conclude with the moſt appoſite inſtance of all. See Webſter's Dutcheſs of Malfy, 1623:

"Yea, and the chippings of the buttery fly after him, to ſcouer his gold chain." STEEVENS.

[6] —— rule;] Rule is method of life; ſo miſrule is tumult and riot. JOHNSON.

Rule, on this occaſion, is ſomething leſs than common method of life. It occaſionally means the arrangement or conduct of a feſtival or merry-making, as well as behaviour in general. So, in the 27th ſong of Drayton's Polyolbion:

"Caſt in a gallant round about the hearth they go,
"And at each pauſe they kiſs; was never ſeen ſuch rule
"In any place but here, at bon-fire, or at yeule."

Again, in Heywood's Engliſh Traveller, 1633:

"What gueſts we harbour, and what rule we keep."

Again, in Ben Jonſon's Tale of a Tub:

"And ſet him in the ſtocks for his ill rule."

In this laſt inſtance it ſignifies behaviour.

There was formerly an officer belonging to the court, called Lord of Miſrule. So, in Decker's Satiromaſtix: "I have ſome couſin-germans at court ſhall beget you the reverſion of the maſter of the king's revels, or elſe be lord of his Miſrule now at Chriſtmas." Again, in The Return from Parnaſſus, 1606: "We are fully bent to be lords of Miſrule in the world's wild heath." In the country, at all periods of feſtivity, and in the inns of court at their Revels, an officer of the ſame kind was elected. STEEVENS.

Sir To. Do't, knight; I'll write thee a challenge; or I'll deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Mar. Sweet ſir Toby, be patient for to-night; ſince the youth of the count's was to-day with my lady, ſhe is much out of quiet. For monſieur Malvolio, let me alone with him: if I do not gull him into a nayword,[7] and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie ſtraight in my bed: I know, I can do it.

Sir To. Poſſeſs us,[8] poſſeſs us; tell us ſomething of him.

Mar. Marry, ſir, ſometimes he is a kind of Puritan.

Sir And. O, if I thought that, I'd beat him like a dog.

Sir To. What, for being a Puritan? thy exquiſite reaſon, dear knight?

Sir And. I have no exquiſite reaſon for't, but I have reaſon good enough.

Mar. The devil a Puritan that he is, or any thing conſtantly but a time pleaſer; an affectioned aſs,[9] that cons ſtate without book, and utters it by [7] —— a nayword,] A nayword is what has been ſince called a byeword, a kind of proverbial reproach. Steevens.

[8] Poſſeſs us,] That is, inform us, tell us, make us maſters of the matter. Johnson.

So, in The Merchant of Venice, Shylock ſays:
"I have poſſeſs'd your grace of what I purpoſe."
Douce.

[9] —— an affection'd aſs,] Affection'd means affected. In this ſenſe, I believe, it is uſed in Hamlet: "—— no matter in it that could indite the author of affection," i. e. affectation.
Steevens.

great ſwarths:[1] the beſt perſuaded of himſelf, ſo crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies, that it is his ground of faith, that all, that look on him, love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cauſe to work.

Sir To. What wilt thou do?

Mar. I will drop in his way ſome obſcure epiſtles of love; wherein, by the colour of his beard, the ſhape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expreſſure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he ſhall find himſelf moſt feelingly perſonated: I can write very like my lady, your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make diſtinction of our hands.

Sir To. Excellent! I ſmell a device.

Sir And. I have't in my noſe too.

Sir To. He ſhall think, by the letters that thou wilt drop, that they come from my niece, and that ſhe is in love with him.

Mar. My purpoſe is, indeed, a horſe of that colour.

Sir And. And your horſe now would make him an aſs.[2]

Mar. Aſs, I doubt not.

[1] ——great ſwarths:] A ſwarth is as much graſs or corn as a mower cuts down at one ſtroke of his ſcythe. Thus Pope, in his verſion of the 18th Iliad:

"Here ſtretch'd in ranks the levell'd ſwarths are found."

STEEVENS.

[2] Sir And. And your horſe now &c.] This conceit, though bad enough, ſhews too quick an apprehenſion for Sir Andrew. It ſhould be given, I believe, to Sir Toby; as well as the next ſhort ſpeech: "O, 'twill be admirable." Sir Andrew does not uſually give his own judgement on any thing, till he has heard that of ſome other perſon. TYRWHITT.

Sir And. O, 'twill be admirable.

Mar. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know, my phyfick will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he fhall find the letter; obferve his conftruction of it. For this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell. [Exit.

Sir To. Good night, Penthefilea.[3]

Sir And. Before me, fhe's a good wench.

Sir To. She's a beagle, true-bred, and one that adores me; What o' that?

Sir And. I was adored once too.

Sir To. Let's to bed, knight.—Thou hadft need fend for more money.

Sir And. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a foul way out.

Sir To. Send for money, knight;[4] if thou haft her not i'the end, call me Cut.[5]

[3] ——Penthefilea.] i. e. Amazon. Steevens.

[4] Send for money, knight;] Sir Toby, in this inftance, exhibits a trait of Iago: "Put money in thy purfe." Steevens.

[5] ——call me Cut.] So, in A Woman's a Weathercock, 1612: "If I help you not to that as cheap as any man in England, call me Cut."

Again, in The Two angry Women of Abingdon, 1599:

"I'll meet you there; if I do not, call me Cut."

This term of contempt, perhaps, fignifies only—call me—gelding. Steevens.

——call me Cut.] i. e. call me horfe. So, Falftaff in King Henry IV. P. I: "—fpit in my face, call me horfe." That this was the meaning of this expreffion is afcertained by a paffage in The Two Noble Kinfmen:

"He'll buy me a white Cut forth for to ride."

Again, in Sir John Oldcaftle, 1600: "But mafter, 'pray ye, let me ride upon Cut." Curtal, which occurs in another of our author's plays, (i. e. a horfe, whofe tail has been docked,) and Cut, were probably fynonymous. Malone.

Sir And. If I do not, never truſt me, take it how you will.

Sir To. Come, come; I'll go burn ſome ſack, 'tis too late to go to bed now: come, knight; come, knight. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and others.

Duke. Give me ſome muſick:—Now, good morrow, friends:——
Now, good Ceſario, but that piece of ſong,
That old and antique ſong we heard laſt night;
Methought, it did relieve my paſſion much;
More than light airs and recollected[6] terms,
Of theſe moſt briſk and giddy-paced times:——
Come, but one verſe.

Cur. He is not here, ſo pleaſe your lordſhip, that ſhould ſing it.

Duke. Who was it?

Cur. Feſte, the jeſter, my lord; a fool, that the lady Olivia's father took much delight in: he is about the houſe.

---

[6] ——recollected—] Studied. Warburton.

I rather think, that recollected ſignifies, more nearly to its primitive ſenſe, recalled, repeated, and alludes to the practice of compoſers, who often prolong the ſong by repetitions.
Johnson.

Thus in Strada's Imitation of Claudian:
"——et ſe
"Multiplicat relegens—." Steevens.

Duke. Seek him out, and play the tune the while.
[Exit Curio.—Musick.
Come hither, boy; If ever thou shalt love,
In the sweet pangs of it, remember me:
For, such as I am, all true lovers are;
Unstaid and skittish in all motions else,
Save, in the constant image of the creature
That is belov'd.—How dost thou like this tune?

Vio. It gives a very echo to the seat
Where Love is thron'd.[7]

Duke. Thou dost speak masterly:
My life upon't, young though thou art, thine eye
Hath stay'd upon some favour that it loves;
Hath it not, boy?

Vio. A little, by your favour.[8]

Duke. What kind of woman is't?

Vio. Of your complexion.

Duke. She is not worth thee then. What years, i'faith?

Vio. About your years, my lord.

[7] —— to the seat
Where Love is thron'd.] i. e. to the heart. So, in Romeo and Juliet:
"My bosom's lord [i. e. Love] sits lightly on his throne."
Again, in Othello:
"Yield up, O Love, thy crown, and hearted throne—."
So before, in the first act of this play:
"—— when liver, brain, and heart,
"These sovereign thrones, are all supplied and fill'd
"(Her sweet perfections) with one self-king."
The meaning is, (as Mr. Heath has observed,) "It is so consonant to the emotions of the heart, that they echo it back again."
Malone.

[8] ——favour.] The word favour ambiguously used.
Johnson.

Favour, in the preceding speech, signifies countenance.
Steevens.

Duke. Too old, by heaven; Let ſtill the woman take
An elder than herſelf; ſo wears ſhe to him,
So ſways ſhe level in her huſband's heart.
For, boy, however we do praiſe ourſelves,
Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
More longing, wavering, ſooner loſt and worn,[9]
Than women's are.

Vio. I think it well, my lord.

Duke. Then let thy love be younger than thyſelf,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent:
For women are as roſes; whoſe fair flower,
Being once diſplay'd, doth fall that very hour.

Vio. And ſo they are: alas, that they are ſo;
To die, even when they to perfection grow!

Re-enter Curio, and Clown.

Duke. O fellow, come, the ſong we had laſt night:—
Mark it, Ceſario; it is old, and plain:
The ſpinſters and the knitters in the ſun,

[9] —— loſt and worn,] Though loſt and worn may mean loſt and worn out, yet loſt and won being, I think, better, theſe two words coming uſually and naturally together, and the alteration being very ſlight, I would ſo read in this place with Sir T. Hanmer. Johnson.

The text is undoubtedly right, and worn ſignifies, conſumed, worn out. So Lord Surrey, in one of his Sonnets, deſcribing the ſpring, ſays:

"Winter is worn, that was the flowers bale."

Again, in King Henry VI. P. II:

"Theſe few days' wonder will be quickly worn."

Again, in The Winter's Tale:

"—— and but infirmity,
"Which waits upon worn times—." Malone.

And the free[1] maids, that weave their thread with bones,
Do uſe to chaunt it; it is ſilly ſooth,[2]
And dallies with the innocence of love,[3]
Like the old age.[4]

Clo. Are you ready, ſir?

Duke. Ay; pr'ythee, ſing. [Muſick.

[1] ——free—] Is, perhaps, vacant, unengaged, eaſy in mind. JOHNSON.

I rather think, that free means here—not having yet ſurrendered their liberty to man;—unmarried. MALONE.

Is not free, unreſerved, uncontrolled by the reſtraints of female delicacy, forward, and ſuch as ſing plain ſongs? HENLEY.

The preciſe meaning of this epithet cannot very eaſily be pointed out. As Mr. Warton obſerves, on another occaſion,—"fair and free" are words often paired together in metrical romances. Chaucer, Drayton, Ben Jonſon, and many other poets, employ the epithet free, with little certainty of meaning. Free, in the inſtance before us, may commodiouſly ſignify, artleſs, free from art, uninfluenced by artificial manners, undirected by falſe refinement in their choice of ditties. STEEVENS.

[2] ——ſilly ſooth,] It is plain, ſimple truth. JOHNSON.

[3] And dallies with the innocence of love,] To dally is to play, to trifle. So, Act III: "They that dally nicely with words." Again, in Swetnam Arraign'd, 1620:

"———— he void of fear
"Dallied with danger——."

Again, in Sir W. D'Avenant's Albovine, 1629:

"Why doſt thou dally thus with feeble motion?"

STEEVENS.

[4] ——the old age.] The old age is the ages paſt, the times of ſimplicity. JOHNSON.

SONG.

CLO. Come away, come away, death,
And in ſad cypreſs let me be laid;[5]
Fly away, fly away,[6] breath;
I am ſlain by a fair cruel maid:
My ſhroud of white, ſtuck all with yew,
O, prepare it;
My part of death no one ſo true
Did ſhare it.[7]

Not a flower, not a flower ſweet,
On my black coffin let there be ſtrown;
Not a friend, not a friend greet
My poor corpſe, where my bones ſhall be thrown:
A thouſand thouſand ſighs to ſave,
Lay me, O, where
Sad true lover[8] ne'er find my grave,
To weep there.

[5] And in ſad cypreſs let me be laid;] i. e. in a ſhroud of cypreſs or cyprus. Thus Autolycus, in The Winter's Tale:
"Lawn as white as driven ſnow,
"Cyprus black as e'er was crow."
There was both black and white cyprus, as there is ſtill black and white crape; and ancient ſhrouds were always made of the latter. STEEVENS.

[6] Fly away, fly away,] The old copy reads—Fie away. The emendation is Mr. Rowe's. MALONE.

[7] My part of death no one ſo true
Did ſhare it.] Though death is a part in which every one acts his ſhare, yet of all theſe actors no one is ſo true as I.
JOHNSON.

[8] Sad true lover—] Mr. Pope rejected the word ſad, and other modern editors have unneceſſarily changed true lover to—true love. By making never one ſyllable the metre is preſerved. Since this note was written, I have obſerved that lover is elſewhere uſed by our poet as a word of one ſyllable. So, in A Midſummer Night's Dream:
"Tie up my lover's tongue; bring him in ſilently."

Duke. There's for thy pains.

Clo. No pains, ſir; I take pleaſure in ſinging, ſir.

Duke. I'll pay thy pleaſure then.

Clo. Truly, ſir, and pleaſure will be paid, one time or another.

Duke. Give me now leave to leave thee.

Clo. Now, the melancholy god protect thee; and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffata, for thy mind is a very opal! [9]—I would have men of ſuch conſtancy put to ſea, that their buſineſs might be every thing, and their intent every where; [1] for that's it, that always makes a good voyage of nothing.—Farewell. [Exit Clown.

Again, in King Henry VIII:

"Is held no great good lover of th' archbiſhop's."

There is perhaps, therefore, no need of abbreviating the word never in this line. Malone.

In the inſtance produced from A Midſummer Night's Dream, I ſuppoſe lover to be a miſprint for love; and in K. Henry VIII. I know not why it ſhould be conſidered as a monoſyllable.

Steevens.

[9] —— a very opal!] A precious ſtone of almoſt all colours.

Pope.

So, Milton, deſcribing the walls of heaven:

"With opal tow'rs, and battlements adorn'd."

The opal is a gem which varies its appearance as it is viewed in different lights. Thus, in The Muſes' Elizium, by Drayton:

"With opals more than any one
"We'll deck thine altar fuller,
"For that of every precious ſtone
"It doth retain ſome colour."

"In the opal, (ſays P. Holland's tranſlation of Pliny's Natural Hiſtory, B. XXXVII. c. 6,) you ſhall ſee the burning fire of the carbuncle or rubie, the glorious purple of the amethyſt, the green ſea of the emeraud, and all glittering together mixed after an incredible manner." Steevens.

[1] —— that their buſineſs might be every thing, and their intent every where;] Both the preſervation of the antitheſis,

Duke. Let all the reſt give place.——

[Exeunt Curio and Attendants.

Once more, Ceſario,

Get thee to yon' ſame ſovereign cruelty:
Tell her, my love, more noble than the world,
Prizes not quantity of dirty lands;
The parts that fortune hath beſtow'd upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune;
But 'tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks her in,[2] attracts my ſoul.

and the recovery of the ſenſe, require we ſhould read,—and their intent no where. Becauſe a man who ſuffers himſelf to run with every wind, and ſo makes his buſineſs every where, cannot be ſaid to have any intent; for that word ſignifies a determination of the mind to ſomething. Beſides, the concluſion of making a good voyage of nothing, directs to this emendation. Warburton.

An intent every where, is much the ſame as an intent no where, as it hath no one particular place more in view than another. Heath.

The preſent reading is preferable to Warburton's amendment. We cannot accuſe a man of inconſtancy who has no intents at all, though we may the man whoſe intents are every where; that is, are continually varying. M. Mason.

[2] But 'tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks her in,] What is that miracle, and queen of gems? we are not told in this reading. Beſides, what is meant by nature pranking her in a miracle?—We ſhould read:

But 'tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks, her mind,——

i. e. what attracts my ſoul, is not her fortune, but her mind, that miracle and queen of gems that nature pranks, i. e. ſets out, adorns. Warburton.

The miracle and queen of gems is her beauty, which the commentator might have found without ſo emphatical an enquiry. As to her mind, he that ſhould be captious would ſay, that though it may be formed by nature, it muſt be pranked by education.

Shakſpeare does not ſay that nature pranks her in a miracle,

Vio. But, if ſhe cannot love you, ſir?

Duke. I cannot be ſo anſwer'd.[3]

Vio. 'Sooth, but you muſt.
Say, that ſome lady, as, perhaps, there is,
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart
As you have for Olivia: you cannot love her;
You tell her ſo; Muſt ſhe not then be anſwer'd?

Duke. There is no woman's ſides,
Can bide the beating of ſo ſtrong a paſſion
As love doth give my heart: no woman's heart
So big, to hold ſo much; they lack retention.
Alas, their love may be call'd appetite,—
No motion of the liver, but the palate,—
That ſuffer ſurfeit, cloyment, and revolt;[4]
But mine is all as hungry as the ſea,[5]
And can digeſt as much: make no compare

but in the miracle of gems, that is, in a gem miraculouſly beautiful. JOHNSON.

To prank is to deck out, to adorn. See Lye's Etymologicon. HEATH.

So, in The Winter's Tale:
" ———— and me,
" Moſt goddeſs-like, prank'd up—." STEEVENS.

[3] I cannot be ſo anſwer'd.] The folio reads—It cannot be, &c. The correction by Sir Thomas Hanmer. STEEVENS.

[4] Alas, their love may be call'd appetite, &c.
That ſuffer ſurfeit, cloyment, and revolt;] The duke has changed his opinion of women very ſuddenly. It was but a few minutes before that he ſaid they had more conſtancy in love than men. M. MASON.

Mr. Maſon would read—ſuffers; but there is no need of change. Suffer is governed by women, implied under the words, " their love." The love of women, &c. who ſuffer. MALONE.

[5] ——as hungry as the ſea,] So, in Coriolanus:
" Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
" Fillip the ſtars—." STEEVENS.

Between that love a woman can bear me,
And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. Ay, but I know,—

Duke. What doſt thou know?

Vio. Too well what love women to men may owe:
In faith, they are as true of heart as we.
My father had a daughter lov'd a man,
As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman,
I ſhould your lordſhip.

Duke. And what's her hiſtory?

Vio. A blank, my lord: She never told her love,
But let concealment, like a worm i'the bud,[6]
Feed on her damaſk cheek: ſhe pin'd in thought;[7]
And, with a green and yellow melancholy,

[6] ——like a worm i'the bud,] So, in the 5th Sonnet of Shakſpeare:

"Which, like a canker in the fragrant roſe,
"Doth ſpot the beauty of thy budding name."

STEEVENS.

Again, in our author's Rape of Lucrece:

"Why ſhould the worm intrude the maiden bud?"

Again, in King Richard II:

"But now will canker ſorrow eat my bud,
"And chaſe the native beauty from his cheek."

MALONE.

[7] ——ſhe pin'd in thought;] Thought formerly ſignified melancholy. So, in Hamlet:

"Is ſicklied o'er with the pale caſt of thought."

Again, in The Tragical Hiſtory of Romeus and Juliet, 1562:

"The cauſe of this her death was inward care and thought." MALONE.

Mr. Malone ſays, thought means melancholy. But why wreſt from this word its plain and uſual acceptation, and make Shakſpeare guilty of tautology? for in the very next line he uſes "melancholy." DOUCE.

She ſat like patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief.[8] Was not this love, indeed?

[8] She ſat like patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief.] Mr. Theobald ſuppoſes this might poſſibly be borrowed from Chaucer:

"And her beſidis wonder diſcreetlie
"Dame pacience yſitting there I ſonde
"With facé pale, upon a hill of ſonde."

And adds: "If he was indebted, however, for the firſt rude draught, how amply has he repaid that debt, in heightening the picture! How much does the green and yellow melancholy tranſcend the old bard's pale face; the monument his hill of ſand."—I hope this critic does not imagine Shakſpeare meant to give us a picture of the face of patience, by his green and yellow melancholy; becauſe, he ſays, it tranſcends the pale face of patience given us by Chaucer. To throw patience into a fit of melancholy, would be indeed very extraordinary. The green and yellow then belonged not to patience, but to her who ſat like patience. To give patience a pale face was proper: and had Shakſpeare deſcribed her, he had done it as Chaucer did. But Shakſpeare is ſpeaking of a marble ſtatue of patience; Chaucer of patience herſelf. And the two repreſentations of her, are in quite different views. Our poet, ſpeaking of a deſpairing lover, judiciouſly compares her to patience exerciſed on the death of friends and relations; which affords him the beautiful picture of patience on a monument. The old bard, ſpeaking of patience herſelf directly, and not by compariſon, as judiciouſly draws her in that circumſtance where ſhe is moſt exerciſed, and has occaſion for all her virtue; that is to ſay, under the loſſes of ſhipwreck. And now we ſee why ſhe is repreſented as ſitting on a hill of ſand, to deſign the ſcene to be the ſea-ſhore. It is finely imagined; and one of the noble ſimplicities of that admirable poet. But the critic thought, in good earneſt, that Chaucer's invention was ſo barren, and his imagination ſo beggarly, that he was not able to be at the charge of a monument for his goddeſs, but left her, like a ſtroller, ſunning herſelf upon a heap of ſand. WARBURTON.

This celebrated image was not improbably firſt ſketched out in the old play of Pericles. I think, Shakſpeare's hand may be ſometimes ſeen in the latter part of it, and there only:

"—— thou [Marina] doſt look
"Like Patience, gazing on kings' graves, and ſmiling
"Extremity out of act." FARMER.

We men may ſay more, ſwear more: but, indeed,
Our ſhows are more than will; for ſtill we prove
Much in our vows, but little in our love.

So, in our author's Rape of Lucrece:

"So mild, that Patience ſeem'd to ſcorn his woes."

In the paſſage in the text, our author perhaps meant to perſonify GRIEF as well as PATIENCE; for we can ſcarcely underſtand "at grief" to mean "in grief," as no ſtatuary could, I imagine, form a countenance in which ſmiles and grief ſhould be at once expreſſed. Shakſpeare might have borrowed his imagery from ſome ancient monument on which theſe two figures were repreſented.

The following lines in The Winter's Tale ſeem to countenance ſuch an idea:

"I doubt not then, but innocence ſhall make
"Falſe accuſation bluſh, and TYRANNY
"Tremble at PATIENCE."

Again, in King Richard III:

"—— like dumb ſtatues, or unbreathing ſtones,
"Star'd on each other, and look'd deadly pale."

In King Lear, we again meet with two perſonages introduced in the text:

"Patience and Sorrow ſtrove,
"Who ſhould expreſs her goodlieſt."

Again, in Cymbeline, the ſame kind of imagery may be traced:

"—— nobly he yokes
"A ſmiling with a ſigh.
———— I do note
"That Grief and Patience, rooted in him both,
"Mingle their ſpurs together."

I am aware that Homer's δακρυθεν γελασασα, and a paſſage in Macbeth—

"—— My plenteous joys
"Wanton in fullneſs, ſeek to hide themſelves
"In drops of ſorrow—" may be urged againſt this interpretation; but it ſhould be remembered, that in theſe inſtances it is joy which burſts into tears. There is no inſtance, I believe, either in poetry or real life, of ſorrow ſmiling in anguiſh. In pain indeed the caſe is different: the ſuffering Indian having been known to ſmile in the midſt of torture.—But, however this may be, the ſculptor and the painter are confined to one point of time, and cannot exhibit ſucceſſive movements in the countenance.

Duke. But died thy ſiſter of her love, my boy?

Dr. Percy, however, thinks, that "grief may here mean grievance, in which ſenſe it is uſed in Dr. Powel's Hiſtory of Wales, quarto, p. 356: "Of the wrongs and griefs done to the noblemen at Stratolyn," &c. In the original, (printed at the end of Wynne's Hiſtory of Wales, octavo,) it is gravamina; i. e. grievances. The word is often uſed by our author in the ſame ſenſe, (So, in King Henry IV. P. I:

"—— the king hath ſent to know
"The nature of your griefs;)"

but never, I believe, in the ſingular number.

In ſupport of what has been ſuggeſted, the authority of Mr. Rowe may be adduced, for in his life of Shakſpeare he has thus exhibited this paſſage:

"She ſat like Patience on a monument,
"Smiling at Grief."

In the obſervations now ſubmitted to the reader, I had once ſome confidence, nor am I yet convinced that the objection founded on the particle at, and on the difficulty, if not impoſſibility, of a ſculptor forming ſuch a figure as theſe words are commonly ſuppoſed to deſcribe, is without foundation. I have therefore retained my note; yet I muſt acknowledge, that the following lines in King Richard II. which have lately occurred to me, render my theory ſomewhat doubtful, though they do not overturn it:

"His face ſtill combating with tears and ſmiles,
"The badges of his grief and patience."

Here we have the ſame idea as that in the text; and perhaps Shakſpeare never conſidered whether it could be exhibited in marble.

I have expreſſed a doubt whether the word grief was employed in the ſingular number, in the ſenſe of grievance. I have lately obſerved that our author has himſelf uſed it in that ſenſe in King Henry IV. P. II:

"—— an inch of any ground
"To build a grief on."

Dr. Percy's interpretation, therefore, may be the true one.

Malone.

I am unwilling to ſuppoſe a monumental image of Patience was ever confronted by an emblematical figure of Grief, on purpoſe that one might ſit and ſmile at the other; becauſe ſuch a repreſentation might be conſidered as a ſatire on human inſenſibility. When Patience ſmiles, it is to expreſs a Chriſtian triumph over the common cauſe of ſorrow, a cauſe, of which

Vio. I am all the daughters of my father's houſe,
And all the brothers too;[9]—and yet I know not:—
Sir, ſhall I to this lady?

the ſarcophagus, near her ſtation, ought very ſufficiently to remind her. True Patience, when it is her cue to ſmile over calamity, knows her office without a prompter; knows that ſtubborn lamentation diſplays a will moſt incorrect to heaven; and therefore appears content with one of its ſevereſt diſpenſations, the loſs of a relation or a friend. Ancient tombs, indeed, (if we muſt conſtrue grief into grievance, and Shakſpeare has certainly uſed the former word for the latter,) frequently exhibit cumbent figures of the deceaſed, and over theſe an image of Patience, without impropriety, might expreſs a ſmile of complacence:

"Her meek hands folded on her modeſt breaſt,
"With calm ſubmiſſion lift the adoring eye
"Even to the ſtorm that wrecks her."

After all, however, I believe the Homeric elucidation of the paſſage to be the true one. Tyrant poetry often impoſes ſuch complicated taſks as painting and ſculpture muſt fail to execute. I cannot help adding, that, to ſmile at grief, is as juſtifiable an expreſſion as to rejoice at proſperity, or repine at ill fortune. It is not neceſſary we ſhould ſuppoſe the good or bad event, in either inſtance, is an object viſible, except to the eye of imagination. STEEVENS.

She ſat like patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief.] So, in Middleton's Witch, Act iv. ſc. iii:
"She does not love me now, but painefully
"Like one that's forc'd to ſmile upon a grief." DOUCE.

[9] I am all the daughters of my father's houſe,
And all the brothers too;] This was the moſt artful anſwer that could be given. The queſtion was of ſuch a nature, that to have declined the appearance of a direct anſwer, muſt have raiſed ſuſpicion. This has the appearance of a direct anſwer, that the ſiſter died of her love; ſhe (who paſſed for a man) ſaying, ſhe was all the daughters of her father's houſe.
WARBURTON.

Such another equivoque occurs in Lyly's Galathea, 1592: "—— my father had but one daughter, and therefore I could have no ſiſter." STEEVENS.

Duke. Ay, that's the theme.
To her in haſte; give her this jewel; ſay,
My love can give no place, bide no denay.[1]
[Exeunt.

SCENE V.

Olivia's Garden.

Enter Sir TOBY BELCH, Sir ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK, and FABIAN.

Sir To. Come thy ways, ſignior Fabian.

Fab. Nay, I'll come; if I loſe a ſcruple of this ſport, let me be boiled to death with melancholy.

Sir To. Would'ſt thou not be glad to have the niggardly raſcally ſheep-biter come by ſome notable ſhame?

Fab. I would exult, man: you know, he brought me out of favour with my lady, about a bear-baiting here.

Sir To. To anger him, we'll have the bear again; and we will fool him black and blue:—Shall we not, ſir Andrew?

Sir And. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.

[1] —— bide no denay.] Denay, is denial. To denay is an antiquated verb ſometimes uſed by Holinſhed. So, p. 620: "—the ſtate of a cardinal which was naied and denaied him." Again, in Warner's Albion's England, 1602, B. II. ch. 10:

> " —— thus did ſay
> "The thing, friend Battus, you demand, not gladly I denay." STEEVENS.

Enter MARIA.

Sir To. Here comes the little villain:—How now, my nettle of India? [2]

[2] ——my nettle of India?] The poet muſt here mean a zoophite, called the Urtica Marina, abounding in the Indian ſeas.

"Quæ tacta totius corporis pruritum quendam excitat, unde nomen urticæ eſt ſortita."

Wolfgangi Franzii Hiſt. Animal, 1665, p. 620.

"Urticæ marinæ omnes pruritum quendam movent, et acrimonia ſuâ venerem extinctam et ſopitam excitant."

Johnſtoni Hiſt. Nat. de Exang. Aquat. p. 56.

Perhaps the ſame plant is alluded to by Greene in his Card of Fancy, 1608: "the flower of India, pleaſant to be ſeen, but whoſo ſmelleth to it, feeleth preſent ſmart." Again, in his Mamillia, 1593: "Conſider, the herb of India is of pleaſant ſmell, but whoſo cometh to it, feeleth preſent ſmart." Again, in P. Holland's tranſlation of the 9th Book of Pliny's Natural Hiſtory: "As for thoſe nettles, there be of them that in the night raunge to and fro, and likewiſe change their colour. Leaves they carry of a fleſhy ſubſtance, and of fleſh they feed. Their qualities is to raiſe an itching ſmart." Maria had certainly excited a congenial ſenſation in Sir Toby. The folio, 1623, reads—mettle of India, which may mean, my girl of gold, my precious girl. The change, however, which I have not diſturbed, was made by the editor of the folio, 1632, who, in many inſtances, appears to have regulated his text from more authentic copies of our author's plays than were in the poſſeſſion of their firſt collective publiſhers. STEEVENS.

——my metal of India?] So, in K. Henry IV. P. I: "Lads, boys, hearts of gold," &c.

Again, ibidem:

"——and as bountiful
"As mines of India."

Again, in K. Henry VIII:

"——To-day the French
"All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
"Shone down the Engliſh; and to-morrow they "Made Britain India; every man that ſtood,
"Shew'd like a mine."

Mar. Get ye all three into the box-tree: Malvolio's coming down this walk; he has been yonder i'the ſun, practiſing behaviour to his own ſhadow, this half hour: obſerve him, for the love of mockery; for, I know, this letter will make a contemplative ideot of him. Cloſe, in the name of jeſting! [The men hide themſelves.] Lie thou there; [throws down a letter.] for here comes the trout that muſt be caught with tickling.[3] [Exit Maria.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me, ſhe did affect me: and I have heard herſelf come thus near, that, ſhould ſhe fancy, it ſhould be one of my complexion. Beſides, ſhe uſes

So Lyly, in his Euphues and his England, 1580: "I ſaw that India bringeth gold, but England bringeth goodneſs."

Again, in Wily Beguil'd, 1606: "Come, my heart of gold, let's have a dance at the making up of this match."—The perſon there addreſſed, as in Twelfth-Night, is a woman. The old copy has mettle. The two words are very frequently confounded in the early editions of our author's plays. The editor of the ſecond folio arbitrarily changed the word to nettle; which all the ſubſequent editors have adopted. Malone.

Nettle of India, which Steevens has ingeniouſly explained, certainly better correſponds with Sir Toby's deſcription of Maria—here comes the little villain. The nettle of India is the plant that produces what is called cow-itch, a ſubſtance only uſed for the purpoſe of tormenting, by its itching quality.

M. Mason.

[3] —— here comes the trout that muſt be caught with tickling.] Cogan, in his Haven of Health, 1595, will prove an able commentator on this paſſage: "This fiſh of nature loveth flatterie: for, being in the water, it will ſuffer it ſelfe to be rubbed and clawed, and ſo to be taken. Whoſe example I would wiſh no maides to follow, leaſt they repent afterclaps." Steevens.

me with a more exalted reſpect, than any one elſe that follows her. What ſhould I think on't?

Sir To. Here's an over-weening rogue!

Fab. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him; how he jets[4] under his advanced plumes!

Sir And. 'Slight, I could ſo beat the rogue:—

Sir To. Peace, I ſay.

Mal. To be count Malvolio;—

Sir To. Ah, rogue!

Sir And. Piſtol him, piſtol him.

Sir To. Peace, peace!

Mal. There is example for't; the lady of the ſtrachy[5] married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

[4] —— how he jets—] To jet is to ſtrut, to agitate the body by a proud motion. So, in Arden of Feverſham, 1592:
"Is now become the ſteward of the houſe,
"And bravely jets it in a ſilken gown."
Again, in Buſſy D'Ambois, 1607:
"To jet in others' plumes ſo haughtily." Steevens.

[5] —— the lady of the ſtrachy—] We ſhould read Trachy, i. e. Thrace; for ſo the old Engliſh writers called it. Mandeville ſays: "As Trachye and Macedoigne, of the which Aliſandre was kyng." It was common to uſe the article the before names of places; and this was no improper inſtance, where the ſcene was in Illyria. Warburton.

What we ſhould read is hard to ſay. Here is an alluſion to ſome old ſtory which I have not yet diſcovered. Johnson.

Straccio (ſee Torriano's and Altieri's Dictionaries) ſignifies clouts and tatters; and Torriano, in his Grammar, at the end of his Dictionary, ſays that ſtraccio was pronounced ſtratchi. So that it is probable that Shakſpeare's meaning was this, that the lady of the queen's wardrobe had married a yeoman of the king's, who was vaſtly inferior to her. Smith.

Such is Mr. Smith's note; but it does not appear that ſtrachy

SIR AND. Fie on him, Jezebel!

was ever an Engliſh word, nor will the meaning given it by the Italians be of any uſe on the preſent occaſion.

Perhaps a letter has been miſplaced, and we ought to read—ſtarchy; i. e. the room in which linen underwent the once moſt complicated operation of ſtarching. I do not know that ſuch a word exiſts; and yet it would not be unanalogically formed from the ſubſtantive ſtarch. In Harſnet's Declaration, 1603, we meet with "a yeoman of the ſprucery;" i. e. wardrobe; and in the Northumberland Houſehold-Book, nurſery is ſpelt nurcy. Starchy, therefore, for ſtarchery, may be admitted. In Romeo and Juliet, the place where paſte was made is called the paſtry. The lady who had the care of the linen may be ſignificantly oppoſed to the yeoman, i. e. an inferior officer of the wardrobe. While the five different coloured ſtarches were worn, ſuch a term might have been current. In the year 1564, a Dutch woman profeſſed to teach this art to our fair country-women. "Her uſual price (ſays Stowe) was four or five pounds to teach them how to ſtarch, and twenty ſhillings how to ſeeth ſtarch." The alteration was ſuggeſted to me by a typographical error in The World toſs'd at Tennis, no date, by Middleton and Rowley; where ſtraches is printed for ſtarches. I cannot fairly be accuſed of having dealt much in conjectural emendation, and therefore feel the leſs reluctance to hazard a gueſs on this deſperate paſſage.
STEEVENS.

The place in which candles were kept, was formerly called the chandry; and in Ben Jonſon's Bartholomew Fair, a gingerbread woman is called lady of the baſket.—The great objection to this emendation is, that from the ſtarchy to the wardrobe is not what Shakſpeare calls a very "heavy declenſion." In the old copy the word is printed in Italicks as the name of a place—Strachy.

The yeoman of the wardrobe is not an arbitrary term, but was the proper deſignation of the wardrobe-keeper, in Shakſpeare's time. See Florio's Italian Dictionary, 1598: "Veſtiario, a wardrobe-keeper, or a yeoman of a wardrobe."

The ſtory which our poet had in view is perhaps alluded to by Lyly in Euphues and his England, 1580: "——aſſuring myſelf there was a certain ſeaſon when women are to be won; in the which moments they have neither will to deny, nor wit to miſtruſt. Such a time I have read a young gentleman found to obtain the love of the Dutcheſs of Milaine: ſuch a time I have heard that a poor yeoman choſe, to get the faireſt lady in Mantua." MALONE.

Fab. O, peace! now he's deeply in; look, how imagination blows him.[6]

Mal. Having been three months married to her, ſitting in my ſtate,—[7]

Sir To. O, for a ſtone-bow,[8] to hit him in the eye!

Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown; having come from a day-bed,[9] where I left Olivia ſleeping:

Sir To. Fire and brimſtone!

[6] —— blows him.] i. e. puffs him up. So, in Antony and Cleopatra:

"—— on her breaſt
"There is a vent of blood, and ſomething blown."
STEEVENS.

[7] —— my ſtate,—] A ſtate, in ancient language, ſignifies a chair with a canopy over it. So, in K. Henry IV. P. I:

"This chair ſhall be my ſtate." STEEVENS.

[8] ——ſtone-bow,] That is, a croſs-bow, a bow which ſhoots ſtones. JOHNSON.

This inſtrument is mentioned again in Marſton's Dutch Courteſan, 1605: "—— whoever will hit the mark of profit, muſt, like thoſe who ſhoot in ſtone-bows, wink with one eye." Again, in Beaumont and Fletcher's King and no King:

"—— children will ſhortly take him
"For a wall, and ſet their ſtone-bows in his forehead."
STEEVENS.

[9] —— come from a day-bed,] i. e. a couch. Spenſer, in the firſt Canto of the third Book of his Fairy Queen, has dropped a ſtroke of ſatire on this lazy faſhion:

"So was that chamber clad in goodly wize,
"And round about it many beds were dight,
"As whilome was the antique worldes guize,
"Some for untimely eaſe, ſome for delight." STEEVENS.

Eſtifania, in Rule a Wife and have a Wife, Act I. ſays, in anſwer to Perez:

"This place will fit our talk; 'tis fitter far, ſir;
"Above there are day-beds, and ſuch temptations
"I dare not truſt, ſir." REED.

Fab. O, peace, peace!

Mal. And then to have the humour of ſtate: and after a demure travel of regard,—telling them, I know my place, as I would they ſhould do theirs,—to aſk for my kinſman Toby:

Sir To. Bolts and ſhackles!

Fab. O, peace, peace, peace! now, now.

Mal. Seven of my people, with an obedient ſtart, make out for him: I frown the while; and, perchance, wind up my watch,[1] or play with ſome rich jewel.[2] Toby approaches; court'ſies there to me:[3]

[1] —— wind up my watch,] In our author's time watches were very uncommon. When Guy Faux was taken, it was urged as a circumſtance of ſuſpicion that a watch was found upon him. Johnson.

Again, in an ancient MS. play, entitled The Second Maiden's Tragedy, written between the years 1610 and 1611:

> " Like one that has a watche of curious making;
> " Thinking to be more cunning than the workman,
> " Never gives over tamp'ring with the wheels,
> " 'Till either ſpring be weaken'd, balance bow'd,
> " Or ſome wrong pin put in, and ſo ſpoils all."

In the Antipodes, a comedy, 1638, are the following paſſages:

> " —— your project againſt
> " The multiplicity of pocket-watches."

Again:

> " —— when every puny clerk can carry
> " The time o' th' day in his breeches."

Again, in The Alchemiſt:

> " And I had lent my watch laſt night to one
> " That dines to-day at the ſheriff's." Steevens.

Pocket-watches were brought from Germany into England, about the year 1580. Malone.

[2] —— or play with ſome rich jewel.] The old copy has—

> " Or play with my ſome rich jewel." Malone.

The reading of the old copy, however quaint and affected, may ſignify—and play with ſome rich jewel of my own, ſome ornament appended to my perſon. He is entertaining himſelf with ideas of future magnificence. Steevens.

Sir To. Shall this fellow live?

Fab. Though our ſilence be drawn from us with cars,[4] yet peace.

[3] ——court'ſies there to me:] From this paſſage one might ſuſpect that the manner of paying reſpect, which is now confined to females, was equally uſed by the other ſex. It is probable, however, that the word court'ſy was employed to expreſs acts of civility and reverence by either men or women indiſcriminately. In an extract from the Black Book of Warwick, Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica, p. 4, it is ſaid, "The pulpett being ſett at the nether end of the Earle of Warwick's tombe in the ſaid quier, the table was placed where the altar had bene. At the coming into the quier my lord made lowe curteſie to the French king's armes." Again, in the Book of Kervynge and Sewynge, printed by Wynkyn de Worde, ſign. A. IIII: "And whan your Soverayne is ſet, loke your towell be about your necke, then make your ſoverayne curteſy, then uncover your brede and ſet it by the ſalte, and laye your napkyn, knyfe, and ſpone afore hym, then kneel on your knee," &c. Theſe directions are to male ſervants. Lord Herbert of Cherbury, in his Life, ſpeaking of dancing, recommends that accompliſhment to youth, "that he may know how to come in and go out of a room where company is, how to make courteſies handſomely, according to the ſeveral degrees of perſons he ſhall encounter." Reed.

[4] Though our ſilence be drawn from us with cars,] i. e. though it is the greateſt pain to us to keep ſilence. Warburton.

I believe the true reading is: "Though our ſilence be drawn from us with carts, yet peace. In The Two Gentlemen of Verona, one of the Clowns ſays: "I have a miſtreſs, but who that is, a team of horſes ſhall not pluck from me." So, in this play: "Oxen and wainropes will not bring them together." Johnson.

The old reading is cars, as I have printed it. It is well known that cars and carts have the ſame meaning.

A ſomewhat ſimilar paſſage occurs in the old play of King Leir, 1605: "——ten teame of horſes ſhall not draw me away, till I have full and whole poſſeſſion."

"King. I, but one teame and a cart will ſerve the turne."

Steevens.

If I were to ſuggeſt a word in the place of cars, which I think is a corruption, it ſhould be cables. It may be worth remarking,

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar ſmile with an auſtere regard of control:

Sir To. And does not Toby take you a blow o'the lips then?

Mal. Saying, Couſin Toby, my fortunes having caſt me on your niece, give me this prerogative of ſpeech:—

Sir To. What, what?

Mal. You muſt amend your drunkenneſs.

Sir To. Out, ſcab!

Fab. Nay, patience, or we break the ſinews of our plot.

perhaps, that the leading ideas of Malvolio, in his humour of ſtate, bear a ſtrong reſemblance to thoſe of Alnaſchar, in The Arabian Nights' Entertainments. Some of the expreſſions too are very ſimilar. Tyrwhitt.

Many Arabian fictions had found their way into obſcure Latin and French books, and from thence into Engliſh ones, long before any profeſſed verſion of The Arabian Nights' Entertainments had appeared. I meet with a ſtory ſimilar to that of Alnaſchar, in The Dialoges of Creatures Moralyſed, bl. l. no date, but probably printed abroad: "It is but foly to hope to moche of vanyteys. Whereof it is tolde in fablys that a lady uppon a tyme delyuered to her mayden a galon of mylke to ſell at a cite. And by the waye as ſhe ſate and reſtid her by a dyche ſide, ſhe began to thinke y[t] with y[e] money of the mylke ſhe wolde bye an henne, the which ſhulde bring forth chekyns, and whan they were growyn to hennys ſhe wolde ſell them and by piggis, and eſchaunge them into ſhepe, and the ſhepe into oxen; and ſo whan ſhe was come to richeſſe ſhe ſholde be maried right worſhipfully vnto ſome worthy man, and thus ſhe reioycid. And whan ſhe was thus meruelouſly comfortid, & rauiſhed inwardely in her ſecrete ſolace thinkynge with howe great ioye ſhe ſhuld be ledde towarde the churche with her huſbond on horſebacke, ſhe ſayde to her ſelf, Goo wee, goo wee, ſodaynelye ſhe ſmote the grounde with her fote, myndynge to ſpurre the horſe; but her fote ſlypped and ſhe fell in the dyche, and there laye all her mylke; and ſo ſhe was farre from her purpoſe, and neuer had that ſhe hopid to haue." Dial. 100, LL. ii. b. Steevens.

MAL. Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight;

SIR AND. That's me, I warrant you.

MAL. One Sir Andrew:

SIR AND. I knew, 'twas I; for many do call me fool.

MAL. What employment have we here? [5]

[Taking up the letter.

FAB. Now is the woodcock near the gin.

SIR TO. O, peace! and the spirit of humours intimate reading aloud to him!

MAL. By my life, this is my lady's hand: these be her very C's, her U's, and her T's; and thus makes she her great P's.[6] It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

[5] What employment have we here?] A phrase of that time, equivalent to our common speech—What's to do here.

WARBURTON.

[6] ——her great P's.] In the direction of the letter which Malvolio reads, there is neither a C, nor a P, to be found.

STEEVENS.

I am afraid some very coarse and vulgar appellations are meant to be alluded to by these capital letters. BLACKSTONE.

This was perhaps an oversight in Shakspeare; or rather, for the sake of the allusion hinted at in the preceding note, he chose not to attend to the words of the direction. It is remarkable, that in the repetition of the passages in letters, which have been produced in a former part of a play, he very often makes his characters deviate from the words before used, though they have the paper itself in their hands, and though they appear to recite, not the substance, but the very words. So, in All's well that ends well, Act V. Helen says:

" ——here's your letter; This it says:
" When from my finger you can get this ring,
" And are by me with child;"— yet in Act III. sc. ii. she reads this very letter aloud; and there the words are different, and in plain prose: " When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and

Sir And. Her C's, her U's, and her T's: Why that?

Mal. [reads] To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wiſhes: her very phraſes!—By your leave, wax.—Soft![7]—and the impreſſure her Lucrece, with which ſhe uſes to ſeal: 'tis my lady: To whom ſhould this be?

Fab. This wins him, liver and all.

Mal. [reads] Jove knows, I love:
But who?
Lips do not move,
No man muſt know.

ſhew me a child begotten of thy body," &c. Had ſhe ſpoken in either caſe from memory, the deviation might eaſily be accounted for; but in both theſe places, ſhe reads the words from Bertram's letter. Malone.

From the uſual cuſtom of Shakſpeare's age, we may eaſily ſuppoſe the whole direction to have run thus: " To the *U*nknown belov'd, this, and my good wiſhes, with *C*are *P*reſent."
Ritson.

7 ——By your leave, wax.—Soft!] It was the cuſtom in our poet's time to ſeal letters with ſoft wax, which retained its ſoftneſs for a good while. The wax uſed at preſent would have been hardened long before Malvolio picked up this letter. See Your Five Gallants, a comedy, by Middleton: " Fetch a pennyworth of ſoft wax to ſeal letters." So, Falſtaff, in K. Henry IV. P. II: " I have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and ſhortly will I ſeal with him." Malone.

I do not ſuppoſe that—Soft! has any reference to the wax; but is merely an exclamation equivalent to Softly! i. e. be not in too much haſte. Thus, in The Merchant of Venice, Act IV. ſc. i: " Soft! no haſte." Again, in Troilus and Creſſida: " Farewel. Yet ſoft!"

I may alſo obſerve, that though it was anciently the cuſtom (as it ſtill is) to ſeal certain legal inſtruments with ſoft and pliable wax, familiar letters (of which I have ſeen ſpecimens from the time of K. Henry VI. to K. James I.) were ſecured with wax as gloſſy and firm as that employed in the preſent year.
Steevens.

No man muſt know.—What follows? the numbers altered!—No man muſt know:—If this ſhould be thee, Malvolio?

Sir To. Marry, hang thee, brock![8]

Mal. I may command, where I adore:
But ſilence, like a Lucrece knife,
With bloodleſs ſtroke my heart doth gore;
M, O, A, I, doth ſway my life.

Fab. A fuſtian riddle!

Sir To. Excellent wench, ſay I.

Mal. M, O, A, I, doth ſway my life.[9]—Nay, but firſt, let me ſee,—let me ſee,—let me ſee.

Fab. What a diſh of poiſon has ſhe dreſſed him!

Sir To. And with what wing the ſtannyel[1] checks at it!

[8] —— brock!] i. e. badger. He uſes the word as a term of contempt, as if he had ſaid, hang thee, cur! Out filth! to ſtink like a brock being proverbial. Ritson.

Marry, hang thee, brock!] i. e. Marry, hang thee, thou vain, conceited coxcomb, thou over-weening rogue!

Brock, which properly ſignifies a badger, was uſed in this ſenſe in Shakſpeare's time. So, in The merrie conceited Jeſts of George Peele, 4to. 1657: "This ſelf-conceited brock had George invited," &c. Malone.

[9] —— doth ſway my life.] This phraſe is ſeriouſly employed in As you like it, Act III. ſc. ii:

"Thy huntreſs name, that my full life doth ſway."
Steevens.

[1] ——ſtannyel—] The name of a kind of hawk is very judiciouſly put here for a ſtallion, by Sir Thomas Hanmer.
Johnson.

To check, ſays Latham, in his book of Falconry, is, "when crows, rooks, pies, or other birds, coming in view of the hawk, ſhe forſaketh her natural flight, to fly at them." The ſtannyel is the common ſtone-hawk, which inhabits old buildings and rocks; in the north called ſtanchil. I have this information from Mr. Lambe's notes on the ancient metrical hiſtory of the battle of Floddon. Steevens

MAL. I may command where I adore. Why, ſhe may command me; I ſerve her, ſhe is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity.[2] There is no obſtruction in this;—And the end,—What ſhould that alphabetical poſition portend? if I could make that reſemble ſomething in me,—Softly!—M, O, A, I.—

SIR TO. O, ay! make up that:—he is now at a cold ſcent.

FAB. Sowter[3] will cry upon't, for all this, though it be as rank as a fox.[4]

MAL. M,—Malvolio;—M,—why, that begins my name.

FAB. Did not I ſay, he would work it out? the cur is excellent at faults.

[2] ——formal capacity.] i. e. any one in his ſenſes, any one whoſe capacity is not diſ-arranged, or out of form. So, in The Comedy of Errors:

"Make of him a formal man again."

Again, in Meaſure for Meaſure:

"Theſe informal women." STEEVENS.

[3] Sowter—] Sowter is here, I ſuppoſe, the name of a hound. Sowterly, however, is often employed as a term of abuſe. So, in Like Will to Like, &c. 1587:

"You ſowterly knaves, ſhow you all your manners at once?"

A ſowter was a cobler. So, in Greene's Card of Fancy, 1608: "If Apelles, that cunning painter, ſuffer the greaſy ſowter to take a view of his curious work," &c. STEEVENS.

I believe the meaning is—This fellow will, notwithſtanding, catch at and be duped by our device, though the cheat is ſo groſs, that any one elſe would find it out. Our author, as uſual, forgets to make his ſimile anſwer on both ſides; for it is not to be wondered at that a hound ſhould cry or give his tongue, if the ſcent be as rank as a fox. MALONE.

[4] —— as rank as a fox.] Sir Thomas Hanmer reads,—"not as rank." The other editions, though it be as rank, &c.

JOHNSON.

MAL. M,—But then there is no confonancy in the fequel; that fuffers under probation: A fhould follow, but O does.

FAB. And O fhall end, I hope.[5]

SIR TO. Ay, or I'll cudgel him, and make him cry, O.

MAL. And then I comes behind;

FAB. Ay, an you had any eye behind you, you might fee more detraction at your heels, than fortunes before you.

MAL. M, O, A, I;—This fimulation is not as the former:—and yet, to crufh this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of thefe letters are in my name. Soft; here follows profe.—If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my ftars I am above thee; but be not afraid of greatnefs: Some are born great,[6] fome achieve greatnefs, and fome have greatnefs thruft upon them. Thy fates open their hands; let thy blood and fpirit embrace them. And, to inure thyfelf to what thou art like to be, caft thy humble flough, and appear frefh. Be oppofite[7] with a kinf-

[5] And O fhall end, I hope.] By O is here meant what we now call a hempen collar. JOHNSON.

I believe he means only, it fhall end in fighing, in difappointment. So, in Romeo and Juliet:

"Why fhould you fall into fo deep an O?"

Again, in Decker's Honeft Whore, fecond part, 1630: "—the brick houfe of caftigation, the fchool where they pronounce no letter well, but O!" Again, in Hymen's Triumph, by Daniel, 1623:

"Like to an O, the character of woe." STEEVENS.

[6] —— are born great,] The old copy reads—are become great. The alteration by Mr. Rowe. STEEVENS.

It is juftified by a fubfequent paffage in which the clown recites from memory the words of this letter. MALONE.

[7] Be oppofite—] That is, be adverfe, hoftile. An oppofite, in the language of our author's age, meant an adverfary. See a man, ſurly with ſervants: let thy tongue tang arguments of ſtate; put thyſelf into the trick of ſingularity: She thus adviſes thee, that ſighs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow ſtockings;[8] and wiſhed to ſee thee ever croſs-gartered:[9] I ſay, re-

note on K. Richard III. Act V. ſc. iv. To be oppoſite with was the phraſeology of the time. So, in Sir T. Overbury's Character of a Preciſian, 1616: "He will be ſure to be in oppoſition with the papiſt," &c. MALONE.

[8] ——yellow ſtockings;] Before the civil wars, yellow ſtockings were much worn. So, in D'Avenant's play, called The Wits, Act IV. p. 208. Works fol. 1673:

"You ſaid, my girl, Mary Queaſie by name, did find your uncle's yellow ſtockings in a porringer; nay, and you ſaid ſhe ſtole them." PERCY.

So, Middleton and Rowley in their maſque entitled The World toſs'd at Tennis, no date, where the five different-coloured ſtarches are introduced as ſtriving for ſuperiority, Yellow ſtarch ſays to white:

"—— ſince ſhe cannot
"Wear her own linen yellow, yet ſhe ſhows
"Her love to't, and makes him wear yellow hoſe."

Again, in Decker's Match me in London, 1631:

"——— becauſe you wear
"A kind of yellow ſtocking."

Again, in his Honeſt Whore, ſecond part, 1630: "What ſtockings have you put on this morning, madam? if they be not yellow, change them." The yeomen attending the Earl of Arundel, Lord Windſor, and Mr. Fulke Greville, who aſſiſted at an entertainment performed before Queen Elizabeth, on the Monday and Tueſday in Whitſun-week, 1581, were dreſſed in yellow worſted ſtockings. The book from which I gather this information was publiſhed by Henry Goldwell, gent. in the ſame year. STEEVENS.

[9] —— croſs-gartered:] So, in The Lover's Melancholy, 1629:

"As rare an old youth as ever walk'd croſs-gartered."

Again, in A Woman's a Weathercock, 1612:

"Yet let me ſay and ſwear, in a croſs-garter,
"Pauls never ſhew'd to eyes a lovelier quarter."

Very rich garters were anciently worn below the knee. So, in Warner's Albion's England, B. IX. ch. 47:

"Garters of liſtes; but now of ſilk, ſome edged deep with gold."

The fortunate-unhappy.

Day-light and champian discovers not more:[1] this is open. I will be proud, I will read politick authors, I will baffle Sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-de-vice, the very man.[2]

It appears, however, that the ancient Puritans affected this fashion. Thus, Barton Holyday, speaking of the ill success of his ΤΕΧΝΟΓΑΜΙΑ, says:

"Had there appear'd some sharp cross-garter'd man
"Whom their loud laugh might nick-name Puritan;
"Cas'd up in factious breeches, and small ruffe;
"That hates the surplice, and defies the cuffe.
"Then," &c.

In a former scene Malvolio was said to be an affecter of puritanism. STEEVENS.

[1] The fortunate-unhappy.
Day-light and champian discovers not more:] We should read—"The fortunate, and happy."—Day-light and champian discovers not more: i. e. broad day and an open country cannot make things plainer. WARBURTON.

The folio, which is the only ancient copy of this play, reads, the fortunate-unhappy, and so I have printed it. The fortunate-unhappy is the subscription of the letter. STEEVENS.

[2] —— I will be point-de-vice, the very man.] This phrase is of French extraction—a points-devisez. Chaucer uses it in the Romaunt of the Rose:

"Her nose was wrought at point-device."

i. e. with the utmost possible exactness.

Again, in K. Edward I. 1599:

"That we may have our garments point-device."

Kastril, in The Alchemist, calls his sister Punk-device: and again, in The Tale of a Tub, Act III. sc. vii:

"——and if the dapper priest
"Be but as cunning point in his devise,
"As I was in my lie." STEEVENS.

I do not now fool myſelf, to let imagination jade me; for every reaſon excites to this, that my lady loves me. She did commend my yellow ſtockings of late, ſhe did praiſe my leg being croſs-gartered; and in this ſhe manifeſts herſelf to my love, and, with a kind of injunction, drives me to theſe habits of her liking. I thank my ſtars, I am happy. I will be ſtrange, ſtout, in yellow ſtockings, and croſs-gartered, even with the ſwiftneſs of putting on. Jove, and my ſtars be praiſed!—Here is yet a poſtſcript. Thou canſt not chooſe but know who I am. If thou entertaineſt my love, let it appear in thy ſmiling; thy ſmiles become thee well: therefore in my preſence ſtill ſmile, dear my ſweet, I pr'ythee. Jove, I thank thee.—I will ſmile; I will do every thing that thou wilt have me. [Exit.

Fab. I will not give my part of this ſport for a penſion of thouſands to be paid from the Sophy.[3]

Sir To. I could marry this wench for this device:

Sir And. So could I too.

Sir To. And aſk no other dowry with her, but ſuch another jeſt.

Enter Maria.

Sir And. Nor I neither.

Fab. Here comes my noble gull-catcher.

Sir To. Wilt thou ſet thy foot o' my neck?

Sir And. Or o' mine either?

[3] —— a penſion of thouſands to be paid from the Sophy.] Alluding, as Dr. Farmer obſerves, to Sir Robert Shirley, who was juſt returned in the character of embaſſador from the Sophy. He boaſted of the great rewards he had received, and lived in London with the utmoſt ſplendor. Steevens.

Sir To. Shall I play my freedom at tray-trip,[4] and become thy bond-ſlave?

Sir And. I'faith, or I either.

Sir To. Why, thou haſt put him in ſuch a dream, that, when the image of it leaves him, he muſt run mad.

Mar. Nay, but ſay true; does it work upon him?

[4] ——tray-trip,] Tray-trip is mentioned in Beaumont and Fletcher's Scornful Lady, 1616:

"Reproving him at tray-trip, ſir, for ſwearing."

Again, in Glapthorne's Wit in a Conſtable, 1640: "——mean time, you may play at tray-trip or cockall, for black-puddings."

"My watch are above, at trea-trip, for a black-pudding," &c.

Again:

"With lanthorn on ſtall, at trea-trip we play,
"For ale, cheeſe, and pudding, till it be day," &c.

Steevens.

The following paſſage might incline one to believe that tray-trip was the name of ſome game at tables, or draughts: "There is great danger of being taken ſleepers at tray-trip, if the king ſweep ſuddenly." Cecil's Correſpondence, Lett. X. p. 136. Ben Jonſon joins tray-trip with mum-chance. Alchemiſt, Act V. ſc. iv:

"Nor play with coſtar-mongers at mum-chance, tray-trip." Tyrwhitt.

The truth of Mr. Tyrwhitt's conjecture will be eſtabliſhed by the following extract from Machiavel's Dogge, a ſatire, 4to. 1617:

"But leaving cardes, lett's goe to dice awhile,
"To paſſage, treitrippe, hazarde, or mum-chance,
"But ſubtill males will ſimple minds beguile,
"And blinde their eyes with many a blinking glaunce:
"Oh, cogges and ſtoppes, and ſuch like deviliſh trickes,
"Full many a purſe of golde and ſilver pickes.

"And therefore firſt, for hazard hee that liſt,
"And paſſeth not, puts many to a blancke:
"And trippe without a treye makes had I wiſt
"To ſitt and mourne among the ſleeper's ranke:
"And for mumchance, how ere the chance doe fall,
"You muſt be mum, for fear of marring all." Reed.

Sir To. Like aqua-vitæ[5] with a midwife.

Mar. If you will then ſee the fruits of the ſport, mark his firſt approach before my lady: he will come to her in yellow ſtockings, and 'tis a colour ſhe abhors; and croſs-gartered, a faſhion ſhe deteſts;[6] and he will ſmile upon her, which will now be ſo unſuitable to her diſpoſition, being addicted to a melancholy as ſhe is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt: if you will ſee it, follow me.

Sir To. To the gates of Tartar, thou moſt excellent devil of wit!

Sir And. I'll make one too. [Exeunt.

ACT III. SCENE I.

Olivia's Garden.

Enter Viola, and Clown with a tabor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy muſick: Doſt thou live by thy tabor?

Clo. No, ſir, I live by the church.[7]

[5] —— aqua-vitæ—] Is the old name of ſtrong waters. Johnson.

[6] ——croſs-gartered, a faſhion ſhe deteſts;] Sir Thomas Overbury, in his character of a footman without gards on his coat, preſents him as more upright than any croſſe-gartered gentleman-uſher. Farmer.

[7] —— by thy tabor?
Clo. No, ſir, I live by the church.] The Clown, I ſuppoſe, wilfully miſtakes Viola's meaning, and anſwers, as if he had been aſked whether he lived by the ſign of the tabor, the ancient deſignation of a muſic ſhop. Steevens.

Vio. Art thou a churchman?

Clo. No ſuch matter, ſir; I do live by the church: for I do live at my houſe, and my houſe doth ſtand by the church.

Vio. So thou may'ſt ſay, the king lies by a beggar,[8] if a beggar dwell near him: or, the church ſtands by thy tabor, if thy tabor ſtand by the church.

Clo. You have ſaid, ſir.—To ſee this age!—A ſentence is but a cheveril glove[9] to a good wit; How quickly the wrong ſide may be turned outward!

Vio. Nay, that's certain; they, that dally nicely with words, may quickly make them wanton.

Clo. I would therefore, my ſiſter had had no name, ſir.

Vio. Why, man?

Clo. Why, ſir, her name's a word; and to dally with that word, might make my ſiſter wanton: But, indeed, words are very raſcals, ſince bonds diſgraced them.

Vio. Thy reaſon, man?

Clo. Troth, ſir, I can yield you none without

It was likewiſe the ſign of an eating-houſe kept by Tarleton, the celebrated clown or fool of the theatre before our author's time, who is exhibited in a print prefixed to his Jeſts, quarto, 1611, with a tabor. Perhaps in imitation of him the ſubſequent ſtage-clowns uſually appeared with one. Malone.

[8] —— the king lies by a beggar,] Lies here, as in many other places in old books, ſignifies—dwells, ſojourns. See King Henry IV. P. II. Act III. ſc. ii. Malone.

[9] —— a cheveril glove—] i. e. a glove made of kid leather: chevreau, Fr. So, in Romeo and Juliet: "—a wit of cheveril—." Again, in a proverb in Ray's Collection: "He hath a conſcience like a cheverel's ſkin." Steevens.

words; and words are grown ſo falſe, I am loath to prove reaſon with them.

Vio. I warrant, thou art a merry fellow, and careſt for nothing.

Clo. Not ſo, ſir, I do care for ſomething: but in my conſcience, ſir, I do not care for you; if that be to care for nothing, ſir, I would it would make you inviſible.

Vio. Art not thou the lady Olivia's fool?

Clo. No, indeed, ſir; the lady Olivia has no folly: ſhe will keep no fool, ſir, till ſhe be married; and fools are as like huſbands, as pilchards are to herrings, the huſband's the bigger; I am, indeed, not her fool, but her corrupter of words.

Vio. I ſaw thee late at the count Orſino's.

Clo. Foolery, ſir, does walk about the orb, like the ſun; it ſhines every where. I would be ſorry, ſir, but the fool ſhould be as oft with your maſter, as with my miſtreſs: I think, I ſaw your wiſdom there.

Vio. Nay, an thou paſs upon me, I'll no more with thee. Hold, there's expences for thee.

Clo. Now Jove, in his next commodity of hair, ſend thee a beard!

Vio. By my troth, I'll tell thee; I am almoſt ſick for one; though I would not have it grow on my chin. Is thy lady within?

Clo. Would not a pair of theſe have bred, ſir? [1]

[1] —— have bred, ſir?] I believe our author wrote—have breed, ſir. The Clown is not ſpeaking of what a pair might have done, had they been kept together, but what they may do hereafter in his poſſeſſion; and therefore covertly ſolicits another piece from Viola, on the ſuggeſtion that one was uſeleſs to him,

Vio. Yes, being kept together, and put to uſe.

Clo. I would play lord Pandarus[2] of Phrygia, ſir, to bring a Creſſida to this Troilus.

Vio. I underſtand you, ſir; 'tis well begg'd.

Clo. The matter, I hope, is not great, ſir, begging but a beggar; Creſſida was a beggar.[3] My lady is within, ſir. I will conſtrue to them whence you come; who you are, and what you would, are out of my welkin: I might ſay, element; but the word is over-worn. [Exit.

Vio. This fellow's wiſe enough to play the fool;
And, to do that well, craves a kind of wit:
He muſt obſerve their mood on whom he jeſts,
The quality of perſons, and the time;
And, like the haggard,[4] check at every feather without another to breed out of. Viola's anſwer correſponds with this train of argument: ſhe does not ſay—"if they had been kept together," &c. but, "being kept together," i. e. Yes, they will breed, if you keep them together. Our poet has the ſame image in his Venus and Adonis:

"Foul cank'ring ruſt the hidden treaſure frets,
"But gold, that's put to uſe, more gold begets."
MALONE.

[2] —— lord Pandarus—] See our author's play of Troilus and Creſſida. JOHNSON.

[3] —— Creſſida was a beggar.]
"—— great penurye
"Thou ſuffer ſhalt, and as a beggar dye."
Chaucer's Teſtament of Creſeyde.
Creſſida is the perſon ſpoken of. MALONE.

Again, ibid:
"Thus ſhalt thou go begging from hous to hous,
"With cuppe and clappir, like a Lazarous."
THEOBALD.

[4] —— the haggard,] The hawk called the haggard, if not well trained and watched, will fly after every bird without diſtinction. STEEVENS.

That comes before his eye. This is a practice,
As full of labour as a wise man's art:
For folly, that he wisely shows, is fit;
But wise men, folly-fallen,[5] quite taint their wit.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir To. Save you, gentleman.

Vio. And you, sir.

Sir And. Dieu vous garde, monsieur.

Vio. Et vous aussi; votre serviteur.

The meaning may be, that he must catch every opportunity, as the wild hawk strikes every bird. But perhaps it might be read more properly:

Not like the haggard.

He must choose persons and times, and observe tempers; he must fly at proper game, like the trained hawk, and not fly at large like the unreclaimed haggard, to seize all that comes in his way. Johnson.

[5] *But wise men, folly-*fallen,] Sir Thomas Hanmer reads, folly shewn. Johnson.

The first folio reads, But wise men's folly falne, quite taint their wit. From whence I should conjecture, that Shakspeare possibly wrote:

But wise men, folly-fallen, quite taint their wit.

i. e. wise men, fallen into folly. Tyrwhitt.

The sense is: But wise men's folly, when it is once fallen into extravagance, overpowers their discretion. Heath.

I explain it thus: The folly which he shews with proper adaptation to persons and times, is fit, has its propriety, and therefore produces no censure; but the folly of wise men, when it falls or happens, taints their wit, destroys the reputation of their judgment. Johnson.

I have adopted Mr. Tyrwhitt's judicious emendation.

Steevens.

Sir And. I hope, ſir, you are; and I am yours.[6]

Sir To. Will you encounter the houſe? my niece is deſirous you ſhould enter, if your trade be to her.

Vio. I am bound to your niece, ſir: I mean, ſhe is the liſt[7] of my voyage.

[6] Sir To. Save you, gentleman.
Vio. And you, ſir.
Sir And. Dieu vous garde, monſieur.
Vio. Et vous auſſi; votre ſerviteur.
Sir And. I hope, ſir, you are; and I am yours.] Thus the old copy. Steevens.

I have ventured to make the two knights change ſpeeches in this dialogue with Viola; and, I think, not without good reaſon. It were a prepoſterous forgetfulneſs in the poet, and out of all probability, to make Sir Andrew not only ſpeak French, but underſtand what is ſaid to him in it, who in the firſt Act did not know the Engliſh of pourquoi. Theobald.

Mr. Theobald thinks it abſurd that Sir Andrew, who did not know the meaning of pourquoi in the firſt Act, ſhould here ſpeak and underſtand French; and therefore has given three of Sir Andrew's ſpeeches to Sir Toby, and vice verſâ, in which he has been copied by the ſubſequent editors, as it ſeems to me, without neceſſity. The words,—"Save you, gentleman,—" which he has taken from Sir Toby, and given to Sir Andrew, are again uſed by Sir Toby in a ſubſequent ſcene; a circumſtance which renders it the more probable that they were intended to be attributed to him here alſo.

With reſpect to the improbability that Sir Andrew ſhould underſtand French here, after having betrayed his ignorance of that language in a former ſcene, it appears from a ſubſequent paſſage that he was a picker up of phraſes, and might have learned by rote from Sir Toby the few French words here ſpoken. If we are to believe Sir Toby, Sir Andrew "could ſpeak three or four languages word for word without book."

Malone.

[7] —— the liſt—] is the bound, limit, fartheſt point.

Johnson.

Sir To. Taſte your legs, ſir,[8] put them to motion.

Vio. My legs do better underſtand me, ſir, than I underſtand what you mean by bidding me taſte my legs.

Sir To. I mean, to go, ſir, to enter.

Vio. I will anſwer you with gait and entrance: But we are prevented.[9]

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Moſt excellent accompliſhed lady, the heavens rain odours on you!

Sir And. That youth's a rare courtier! Rain odours! well.

Vio. My matter hath no voice, lady, but to your own moſt pregnant and vouchſafed ear.[1]

Sir And. Odours, pregnant, and vouchſafed:—I'll get 'em all three ready.[2]

[8] Taſte your legs, ſir, &c.] Perhaps this expreſſion was employed to ridicule the fantaſtic uſe of a verb, which is many times as quaintly introduced in the old pieces, as in this play, and in The True Tragedies of Marius and Scilla, 1594:

"A climbing tow'r that did not taſte the wind."

Again, in Chapman's verſion of the 21ſt Odyſſey:

"—— he now began
"To taſte the bow, the ſharp ſhaft took, tugg'd hard."

In the Frogs of Ariſtophanes, however, a ſimilar expreſſion occurs, v. 465: "ΓΕΥΣΑΙ της θυρας;" i. e. taſte the door, knock gently at it. Steevens.

[9] —— prevented.] i. e. our purpoſe is anticipated. So, in the 119th Pſalm:

"Mine eyes prevent the night-watches." Steevens.

[1] —— moſt pregnant and vouchſafed ear.] Pregnant for ready; as in Meaſure for Meaſure, Act I. ſc. i. Steevens.

Vouchſafe for vouchſafing. Malone.

[2] —— all three ready.] The old copy has—all three already. Mr. Malone reads—"all three all ready." Steevens.

Oli. Let the garden door be ſhut, and leave me to my hearing.

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria.

Give me your hand, ſir.

Vio. My duty, madam, and moſt humble ſervice.

Oli. What is your name?

Vio. Ceſario is your ſervant's name, fair princeſs.

Oli. My ſervant, ſir! 'Twas never merry world,
Since lowly feigning was call'd compliment:
You are ſervant to the count Orſino, youth.

Vio. And he is yours, and his muſt needs be yours;
Your ſervant's ſervant is your ſervant, madam.

Oli. For him, I think not on him: for his thoughts,
'Would they were blanks, rather than fill'd with me!

Vio. Madam, I come to whet your gentle thoughts
On his behalf:—

Oli. O, by your leave, I pray you;
I bade you never ſpeak again of him:
But, would you undertake another ſuit,
I had rather hear you to ſolicit that,
Than muſick from the ſpheres.

Vio. Dear lady,——

The editor of the third folio reformed the paſſage by reading only—ready. But omiſſions ought always to be avoided if poſſible. The repetition of the word all is not improper in the mouth of Sir Andrew. Malone.

Præferatur lectio brevior, is a well known rule of criticiſm; and in the preſent inſtance I moſt willingly follow it, omitting the uſeleſs repetition—all. Steevens.

Oli. Give me leave, I befeech you:[3] I did fend,
After the laft enchantment you did here,[4]

[3] —— I befeech you:] The firft folio reads—" 'befeech you."
STEEVENS.

This ellipfis occurs fo frequently in our author's plays, that I do not fufpect any omiffion here. The editor of the third folio reads—I befeech you; which fupplies the fyllable wanting, but hurts the metre. MALONE.

I read with the third folio; not perceiving how the metre is injured by the infertion of the vowel—I. STEEVENS.

[4] —— you did here,] The old copy reads—heare.
STEEVENS.

Nonfenfe. Read and point it thus:

After the laft enchantment you did here,

i. e. after the enchantment your prefence worked in my affections. WARBURTON.

The prefent reading is no more nonfenfe than the emendation.
JOHNSON.

Warburton's amendment, the reading, " you did here," though it may not perhaps be abfolutely neceffary to make fenfe of the paffage, is evidently right. Olivia could not fpeak of her fending him a ring, as a matter he did not know except by hearfay; for the ring was abfolutely delivered to him. It would, befides, be impoffible to know what Olivia meant by the laft enchantment, if fhe had not explained it herfelf, by faying—" the laft enchantment you did here." There is not, perhaps, a paffage in Shakfpeare, where fo great an improvement of the fenfe is gained by changing a fingle letter.
M. MASON.

The two words are very frequently confounded in the old editions of our author's plays, and the other books of that age. See the laft line of K. Richard III. quarto, 1613:

" That fhe may long live heare, God fay amen."

Again, in The Tempeft, folio, 1623, p. 3, l. 10:

" Heare, ceafe more queftions."

Again, in Love's Labour's Loft, 1623, p. 139:

" Let us complain to them what fools were heare."

Again, in All's well that ends well, 1623, p. 239:

" That hugs his kickfey-wickfey heare at home."

Again, in Peck's Defiderata Curiofa, Vol. I. p. 205:

" —— to my utmoft knowledge, heare is fimple truth and verity."

A ring in chaſe of you; ſo did I abuſe
Myſelf, my ſervant, and, I fear me, you:
Under your hard conſtruction muſt I ſit,
To force that on you, in a ſhameful cunning,
Which you knew none of yours: What might you think?
Have you not ſet mine honour at the ſtake,
And baited it with all the unmuzzled thoughts
That tyrannous heart can think? To one of your receiving[5]
Enough is ſhown; a cyprus,[6] not a boſom,
Hides my poor heart: So let me hear you ſpeak.[7]

Vio. I pity you.

Oli. That's a degree to love.

Vio. No, not a griſe;[8] for 'tis a vulgar proof,[9]
That very oft we pity enemies.

I could add twenty other inſtances, were they neceſſary. Throughout the firſt edition of our author's Rape of Lucrece, 1594, which was probably printed under his own inſpection, the word we now ſpell here, is conſtantly written heare.

Let me add, that Viola had not ſimply heard that a ring had been ſent (if even ſuch an expreſſion as—"After the laſt enchantment, you did heare," were admiſſible;) ſhe had ſeen and talked with the bearer of it. MALONE.

[5] To one of your receiving—] i. e. to one of your ready apprehenſion. She conſiders him as an arch page. WARBURTON.

See p. 281, n. 8. STEEVENS.

[6] ——a cyprus,] is a tranſparent ſtuff. JOHNSON.

[7] Hides my poor heart: So let me hear you ſpeak.] The word hear is uſed in this line, like tear, dear, ſwear, &c. as a diſſyllable. The editor of the ſecond folio, to ſupply what he imagined to be a defect in the metre, reads—Hides my poor heart; and all the ſubſequent editors have adopted his interpolation. MALONE.

I have retained the pathetic and neceſſary epithet poor. The line would be barbarouſly diſſonant without it. STEEVENS.

[8] ——a griſe;] is a ſtep, ſometimes written greeſe, from degres, French. JOHNSON.

Oli. Why, then, methinks, 'tis time to ſmile again:
O world, how apt the poor are to be proud!
If one ſhould be a prey, how much the better
To fall before the lion, than the wolf?
[Clock ſtrikes.
The clock upbraids me with the waſte of time.—
Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you:
And yet, when wit and youth is come to harveſt,
Your wife is like to reap a proper man:
There lies your way, due weſt.

Vio. Then weſtward-hoe:[1]
Grace, and good diſpoſition 'tend your ladyſhip!
You'll nothing, madam, to my lord by me?

Oli. Stay:
I pr'ythee, tell me, what thou think'ſt of me.

Vio. That you do think, you are not what you are.

Oli. If I think ſo, I think the ſame of you.

Vio. Then think you right; I am not what I am.

Oli. I would, you were as I would have you be!

Vio. Would it be better, madam, than I am,
I wiſh it might; for now I am your fool.

Oli. O, what a deal of ſcorn looks beautiful

So, in Othello:
"Which, as a griſe or ſtep, may help theſe lovers."
STEEVENS.

[9] ——'tis a vulgar proof,] That is, it is a common proof. The experience of every day ſhews that, &c. MALONE.

[1] Then weſtward-hoe:] This is the name of a comedy by T. Decker, 1607. He was aſſiſted in it by Webſter, and it was acted with great ſucceſs by the children of Paul's, on whom Shakſpeare has beſtowed ſuch notice in Hamlet, that we may be ſure they were rivals to the company patronized by himſelf.
STEEVENS.

In the contempt and anger of his lip![2]
A murd'rous guilt ſhows not itſelf more ſoon
Than love that would ſeem hid: love's night is noon.
Ceſario, by the roſes of the ſpring,
By maidhood, honour, truth, and every thing,
I love thee ſo, that, maugre[3] all thy pride,
Nor wit, nor reaſon, can my paſſion hide.
Do not extort thy reaſons from this clauſe,
For, that I woo, thou therefore haſt no cauſe:
But, rather, reaſon thus with reaſon fetter:
Love ſought is good, but given unſought, is better.

Vio. By innocence I ſwear, and by my youth,
I have one heart, one boſom, and one truth,
And that no woman has;[4] nor never none
Shall miſtreſs be of it, ſave I alone.[5]
And ſo adieu, good madam; never more
Will I my maſter's tears to you deplore.

Oli. Yet come again: for thou, perhaps, may'ſt move
That heart, which now abhors, to like his love.
[Exeunt.

[2] O, what a deal of ſcorn looks beautiful
In the contempt and anger of his lip!] So, in our author's Venus and Adonis:
"Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes."
STEEVENS.

[3] —— maugre—] i. e. in ſpite of. So, in David and Bethſabe, 1599:
"Maugre the ſons of Ammon and of Syria." STEEVENS.

[4] And that no woman has;] And that heart and boſom I have never yielded to any woman. JOHNSON.

[5] ——ſave I alone.] Theſe three words Sir Thomas Hanmer gives to Olivia probably enough. JOHNSON.

SCENE II.

A Room in Olivia's Houſe.

Enter Sir TOBY BELCH, Sir ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK, and FABIAN.

SIR AND. No, faith, I'll not ſtay a jot longer.

SIR TO. Thy reaſon, dear venom, give thy reaſon.

FAB. You muſt needs yield your reaſon, ſir Andrew.

SIR AND. Marry, I ſaw your niece do more favours to the count's ſerving man, than ever ſhe beſtowed upon me; I ſaw't i'the orchard.

SIR TO. Did ſhe ſee thee the while,[6] old boy? tell me that.

SIR AND. As plain as I ſee you now.

FAB. This was a great argument of love in her toward you.

SIR AND. 'Slight! will you make an aſs o' me?

FAB. I will prove it legitimate, ſir, upon the oaths of judgment and reaſon.

SIR TO. And they have been grand jury-men, ſince before Noah was a ſailor.

FAB. She did ſhow favour to the youth in your ſight, only to exaſperate you, to awake your dormouſe valour, to put fire in your heart, and brimſtone in your liver: You ſhould then have accoſted her; and with ſome excellent jeſts, fire-new from the mint, you ſhould have banged the youth into [6] Did ſhe ſee thee the while,] Thee is wanting in the old copy. It was ſupplied by Mr. Rowe. MALONE.

dumbneſs. This was looked for at your hand, and this was baulked: the double gilt of this opportunity you let time waſh off, and you are now ſailed into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard, unleſs you do redeem it by ſome laudable attempt, either of valour, or policy.

Sir And. And't be any way, it muſt be with valour; for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Browniſt,[7] as a politician.

Sir To. Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the baſis of valour. Challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places; my niece ſhall take note of it: and aſſure thyſelf, there is no love-broker in the world can more prevail in man's commendation with woman, than report of valour.

[7] —— as lief be a Browniſt,] The Browniſts were ſo called from Mr. Robert Browne, a noted ſeparatiſt in Queen Elizabeth's reign. [See Strype's Annals of Queen Elizabeth, Vol. III. p. 15, 16, &c.] In his life of Whitgift, p. 323, he informs us, that Browne, in the year 1589, "went off from the ſeparation, and came into the communion of the church."

This Browne was deſcended from an ancient and honourable family in Rutlandſhire; his grandfather Francis had a charter granted him by K. Henry VIII. and confirmed by act of parliament; giving him leave "to put on his hat in the preſence of the king, or his heirs, or any lord ſpiritual or temporal in the land, and not to put it off, but for his own eaſe and pleaſure."
Neal's Hiſtory of New-England, Vol. I. p. 58. Grey.

The Browniſts ſeem, in the time of our author, to have been the conſtant objects of popular ſatire. In the old comedy of Ram-Alley, 1611, is the following ſtroke at them:

"—— of a new ſect, and the good profeſſors will, like the Browniſt, frequent gravel-pits ſhortly, for they uſe woods and obſcure holes already."

Again, in Love and Honour, by Sir W. D'Avenant:
"Go kiſs her:—by this hand, a Browniſt is "More amorous——." Steevens.

Fab. There is no way but this, ſir Andrew.

Sir And. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

Sir To. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curſt[8] and brief; it is no matter how witty, ſo it be eloquent, and full of invention: taunt him with the licence of ink: if thou thou'ſt him ſome thrice,[9] it

[8] —— in a martial hand; be curſt—] Martial hand, ſeems to be a careleſs ſcrawl, ſuch as ſhewed the writer to neglect ceremony. Curſt, is petulant, crabbed. A curſt cur, is a dog that with little provocation ſnarls and bites. JOHNSON.

[9] —— taunt him with the licence of ink: if thou thou'ſt him ſome thrice,] There is no doubt, I think, but this paſſage is one of thoſe in which our author intended to ſhew his reſpect for Sir Walter Raleigh, and a deteſtation of the virulence of his proſecutors. The words quoted, ſeem to me directly levelled at the Attorney-General Coke, who, in the trial of Sir Walter, attacked him with all the following indecent expreſſions:—"All that he did was by thy inſtigation, thou viper; for I thou thee, thou traytor!" (Here, by the way, are the poet's three thou's.) "You are an odious man."—"Is he baſe? I return it into thy throat, on his behalf."—"O damnable atheiſt."—"Thou art a monſter; thou haſt an Engliſh face, but a Spaniſh heart."—"Thou haſt a Spaniſh heart, and thyſelf art a ſpider of hell."—"Go to, I will lay thee on thy back for the confident'ſt traytor that ever came at a bar," &c. Is not here all the licence of tongue, which the poet ſatirically preſcribes to Sir Andrew's ink? And how mean an opinion Shakſpeare had of theſe petulant invectives, is pretty evident from his cloſe of this ſpeech: "Let there be gall enough in thy ink; though thou write it with a gooſe-pen, no matter."—A keener laſh at the attorney for a fool, than all the contumelies the attorney threw at the priſoner, as a ſuppoſed traytor! THEOBALD.

The ſame expreſſion occurs in Shirley's Opportunity, 1640:

"Does he thou me?

"How would he domineer, an he were duke!"

The reſentment of our author, as Dr. Farmer obſerves to me, might likewiſe have been excited by the contemptuous manner in which Lord Coke has ſpoken of players, and the ſeverity he was always willing to exert againſt them. Thus, in his Speech and Charge at Norwich, with a Diſcoverie of the Abuſes and ſhall not be amiſs; and as many lies as will lie in thy ſheet of paper, although the ſheet were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, ſet 'em down; go, about it. Let there be gall enough in thy ink; though thou write with a gooſe-pen, no matter: About it.

Sir And. Where ſhall I find you?

Sir To. We'll call thee at the cubiculo:[1] Go.
[Exit Sir Andrew.

Fab. This is a dear manakin to you, ſir Toby.

Sir To. I have been dear to him, lad; ſome two thouſand ſtrong, or ſo.

Fab. We ſhall have a rare letter from him: but you'll not deliver it.

Corruption of Officers. Nath. Butter, 4to. 1607: "Becauſe I muſt haſt unto an end, I will requeſt that you will carefully put in execution the ſtatute againſt vagrants; ſince the making whereof I have found fewer theeves, and the gaole leſſe peſtered than before.

"The abuſe of ſtage-players wherewith I find the country much troubled, may eaſily be reformed; they having no commiſſion to play in any place without leave: and therefore, if by your willingneſſe they be not entertained, you may ſoone be rid of them." Steevens.

Though I think it probable Lord Coke might have been in Shakſpeare's mind when he wrote the above paſſage, yet it is by no means certain. It ought to be obſerved, that the conduct of that great lawyer, bad as it was on this occaſion, received too much countenance from the practice of his predeceſſors, both at the bar and on the bench. The State Trials will ſhew, to the diſgrace of the profeſſion, that many other criminals were thou'd by their proſecutors and judges, beſides Sir Walter Raleigh. In Knox's Hiſtory of the Reformation, are eighteen articles exhibited againſt Maſter George Wiſcharde, 1546, every one of which begins—thou falſe heretick, and ſometimes with the addition of thief, traitor, runagate, &c. Reed.

[1] —at the cubiculo:] I believe we ſhould read—at thy cubiculo. Malone.

Sir To. Never truſt me then; and by all means ſtir on the youth to an anſwer. I think, oxen and wainropes cannot hale them together. For Andrew, if he were opened, and you find ſo much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the reſt of the anatomy.

Fab. And his oppoſite,[2] the youth, bears in his viſage no great preſage of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Look, where the youngeſt wren of nine comes.[3]

Mar. If you deſire the ſpleen, and will laugh yourſelves into ſtitches, follow me: yon' gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegado; for there is no Chriſtian, that means to be ſaved by believing rightly, can ever believe ſuch impoſſible paſſages of groſſneſs. He's in yellow ſtockings.

[2] And his oppoſite,] Oppoſite in our author's time was uſed as a ſubſtantive, and ſynonymous to adverſary. Malone.

[3] Look, where the youngeſt wren of nine comes.] The women's parts were then acted by boys, ſometimes ſo low in ſtature, that there was occaſion to obviate the impropriety by ſuch kind of oblique apologies. Warburton.

The wren generally lays nine or ten eggs at a time, and the laſt hatched of all birds are uſually the ſmalleſt and weakeſt of the whole brood.

So, in A Dialogue of the Phœnix, &c. by R. Cheſter, 1601:

"The little wren that many young ones brings."

Again, in A mery Play betwene Johan the Huſband, Tyb his Wyfe, &c. fol. Raſtel, 1533:

"Syr, that is the leſt care I have of nyne."

The old copy, however, reads—"wren of mine." Steevens.

Again, in Sir Philip Sidney's Ourania, a poem, by N. Breton, 1606:

"The titmouſe, and the multiplying wren."

The correction was made by Mr. Theobald. Malone.

Sir To. And croſs-gartered?

Mar. Moſt villainouſly; like a pedant that keeps a ſchool i'the church.—I have dogged him, like his murderer: He does obey every point of the letter that I dropped to betray him. He does ſmile his face into more lines, than are in the new map, with the augmentation of the Indies:[4] you have not ſeen ſuch a thing as 'tis; I can hardly forbear hurling things at him. I know, my lady will ſtrike him;[5] if ſhe do, he'll ſmile, and take't for a great favour.

Sir To. Come, bring us, bring us where he is.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

A Street.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Seb. I would not, by my will, have troubled you;
But, ſince you make your pleaſure of your pains,
I will no further chide you.

Ant. I could not ſtay behind you; my deſire,
More ſharp than filed ſteel, did ſpur me forth;
And not all love to ſee you, (though ſo much,
As might have drawn one to a longer voyage,)

[4] He does ſmile his face into more lines, than are in the new map, with the augmentation of the Indies:] A clear alluſion to a Map engraved for Linſchoten's Voyages, an Engliſh tranſlation of which was publiſhed in 1598. This Map is multilineal in the extreme, and is the firſt in which the Eaſtern Iſlands are included. Steevens.

[5] I know, my lady will ſtrike him;] We may ſuppoſe, that in an age when ladies ſtruck their ſervants, the box on the ear which Queen Elizabeth is ſaid to have given to the Earl of Eſſex, was not regarded as a tranſgreſſion againſt the rules of common behaviour. Steevens.

But jealousy what might befall your travel,
Being skilless in these parts; which to a stranger,
Unguided, and unfriended, often prove
Rough and unhospitable: My willing love,
The rather by these arguments of fear,
Set forth in your pursuit.

Seb. My kind Antonio,
I can no other answer make, but, thanks,
And thanks, and ever thanks: Often good turns[6]
Are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay:
But, were my worth,[7] as is my conscience, firm,

[6] And thanks, and ever thanks: *Oft*en good turns—] The old copy reads—

"And thankes: and euer oft good turnes—." Steevens.

The second line is too short by a whole foot. Then, who ever heard of this goodly double adverb, ever-oft, which seems to have as much propriety as always-sometimes? As I have restored the passage, it is very much in our author's manner and mode of expression. So, in Cymbeline:

"Since when I have been debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be ever to pay, and yet pay still."

Again, in All's well that ends well:

"And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
"Which I will over-pay, and pay again
"When I have found it." Theobald.

I have changed the punctuation. Such liberties every editor has occasionally taken. Theobald has completed the line, as follows:

"And thanks and ever thanks, and oft good turns."
Steevens.

I would read: And thanks again, and ever. Tollet.

Mr. Theobald added the word—and [and oft, &c.] unnecessarily. Turns was, I have no doubt, used as a dissyllable.
Malone.

I wish my ingenious coadjutor had produced some instance of the word—turns, used as a dissyllable. I am unable to do it; and therefore have not scrupled to read—oft*en* instead of oft, to complete the measure. Steevens.

[7] But, were my worth,] Worth in this place means wealth or fortune. So, in The Winter's Tale:

You ſhould find better dealing. What's to do?
Shall we go ſee the reliques of this town? [8]

Ant. To-morrow, ſir; beſt, firſt, go ſee your lodging.

Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night;
I pray you, let us ſatisfy our eyes
With the memorials, and the things of fame,
That do renown this city.

Ant. 'Would, you'd pardon me;
I do not without danger walk theſe ſtreets:
Once, in a ſea-fight, 'gainſt the Count his gallies, [9]
I did ſome ſervice; of ſuch note, indeed,
That, were I ta'en here, it would ſcarce be anſwer'd.

Seb. Belike, you ſlew great number of his people.

Ant. The offence is not of ſuch a bloody nature;
Albeit the quality of the time, and quarrel,
Might well have given us bloody argument.
It might have ſince been anſwer'd in repaying
What we took from them; which, for traffick's ſake,

" —— and he boaſts himſelf
" To have a worthy feeding."

Again, in Ben Jonſon's Cynthia's Revels:

" Such as the ſatyriſt paints truly forth,
" That only to his crimes owes all his worth."

M. Mason.

[8] —— the reliques of this town?] I ſuppoſe, Sebaſtian means, the reliques of ſaints, or the remains of ancient fabricks.

Steevens.

Theſe words are explained by what follows:

" Let us ſatisfy our eyes
" With the memorials, and the things of fame,
" That do renown this city." Malone.

[9] —— the Count his gallies,] I ſuſpect our author wrote—county's gallies, i. e. the gallies of the county, or count; and that the tranſcriber's ear deceived him. However, as the preſent reading is conformable to the miſtaken grammatical uſage of the time, I have not diſturbed the text. Malone.

Moſt of our city did: only myſelf ſtood out:
For which, if I be lapſed in this place,
I ſhall pay dear.

Seb. Do not then walk too open.

Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, ſir, here's my purſe;
In the ſouth ſuburbs, at the Elephant,
Is beſt to lodge: I will beſpeak our diet,
Whiles you beguile the time, and feed your knowledge,
With viewing of the town; there ſhall you have me.

Seb. Why I your purſe?

Ant. Haply, your eye ſhall light upon ſome toy
You have deſire to purchaſe; and your ſtore,
I think, is not for idle markets, ſir.

Seb. I'll be your purſe-bearer, and leave you for An hour.

Ant. To the Elephant.—

Seb. I do remember.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Olivia's Garden.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Oli. I have ſent after him: He ſays, he'll come;[1]
How ſhall I feaſt him? what beſtow on him?[2]

[1] —— He ſays, he'll come;] i. e. I ſuppoſe now, or admit now, he ſays, he'll come. Warburton.

[2] —— what beſtow on him?] The old copy reads—"beſtow of him," a vulgar corruption of—on. Steevens.

Of, is very commonly, in the North, ſtill uſed for on. Henley.

For youth is bought more oft, than begg'd, or borrow'd.
I ſpeak too loud.——
Where is Malvolio?—he is ſad, and civil,[3]
And ſuits well for a ſervant with my fortunes;—
Where is Malvolio?

Mar. He's coming, madam;
But in ſtrange manner. He is ſure poſſeſs'd.[4]

Oli. Why, what's the matter? does he rave?

Mar. No, madam,
He does nothing but ſmile: your ladyſhip
Were beſt have guard about you, if he come;[5]
For, ſure, the man is tainted in his wits.

Oli. Go call him hither.—I'm as mad as he,
If ſad and merry madneſs equal be.—

[3] ——ſad, and civil,] Civil, in this inſtance, and ſome others, means only, grave, decent, or ſolemn. So, in As you like it:

"Tongues I'll hang on every tree,
"That ſhall civil ſayings ſhow—."

See note on that paſſage, Act III. ſc. ii.

Again, in Decker's Villanies diſcovered by Lanthorne and Candlelight, &c. 1616: "If before ſhe ruffled in ſilkes, now is ſhe more civilly attired than a mid-wife." Again—"civilly ſuited, that they might carry about them ſome badge of a ſcholler." Again, in David Rowland's tranſlation of Lazarillo de Tormes, 1586: "—he throwing his cloake ouer his leaft ſhoulder very civilly," &c. Steevens.

[4] But in ſtrange manner. He is ſure poſſeſs'd.] The old copy reads—

"But in very ſtrange manner. He is ſure poſſeſs'd, madam."

For the ſake of metre, I have omitted the unneceſſary words—very, and madam. Steevens.

[5] Were beſt have guard about you, if he come;] The old copy, redundantly, and without addition to the ſenſe, reads—

"Were beſt to have ſome guard," &c. Steevens.

Enter MALVOLIO.

How now, Malvolio?

MAL. Sweet lady, ho, ho. [Smiles fantaſtically.

OLI. Smil'ſt thou?
I ſent for thee upon a ſad occaſion.

MAL. Sad, lady? I could be ſad: This does make ſome obſtruction in the blood, this croſs-gartering; But what of that, if it pleaſe the eye of one, it is with me as the very true ſonnet is: Pleaſe one, and pleaſe all.

OLI. Why, how doſt thou, man? what is the matter with thee?

MAL. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs: It did come to his hands, and commands ſhall be executed. I think, we do know the ſweet Roman hand.

OLI. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio?

MAL. To bed? ay, ſweet-heart; and I'll come to thee.

OLI. God comfort thee! Why doſt thou ſmile ſo, and kiſs thy hand ſo oft? [6]

MAR. How do you, Malvolio?

MAL. At your requeſt? Yes; Nightingales anſwer daws.

[6] —— kiſs thy hand ſo oft?] This fantaſtical cuſtom is taken notice of by Barnaby Riche, in Faults and nothing but Faults, 4to. 1606, p. 6: "—and theſe Flowers of Courteſie, as they are full of affectation, ſo are they no leſs formall in their ſpeeches, full of fuſtian phraſes, many times delivering ſuch ſentences, as do betray and lay open their maſters' ignorance: and they are ſo frequent with the kiſſe on the hand, that word ſhall not paſſe their mouthes, till they have clapt their fingers over their lippes." REED.

Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldneſs before my lady?

Mal. Be not afraid of greatneſs:—'Twas well writ.

Oli. What meaneſt thou by that, Malvolio?

Mal. Some are born great,—

Oli. Ha?

Mal. Some achieve greatneſs,—

Oli. What ſay'ſt thou?

Mal. And ſome have greatneſs thruſt upon them.

Oli. Heaven reſtore thee!

Mal. Remember, who commended thy yellow ſtockings;—

Oli. Thy yellow ſtockings?

Mal. And wiſhed to ſee thee croſs-gartered.

Oli. Croſs-gartered?

Mal. Go to: thou art made, if thou deſireſt to be ſo;—

Oli. Am I made?

Mal. If not, let me ſee thee a ſervant ſtill.

Oli. Why, this is very midſummer madneſs.[7]

Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, the young gentleman of the count Orſino's is returned; I could hardly entreat him back: he attends your ladyſhip's pleaſure.

[7] —— midſummer madneſs.] Hot weather often hurts the brain, which is, I ſuppoſe, alluded to here. Johnson.

'Tis midſummer moon with you, is a proverb in Ray's Collection; ſignifying, you are mad. Steevens.

Oli. I'll come to him. [Exit Servant.] Good Maria, let this fellow be looked to. Where's my coufin Toby? Let fome of my people have a fpecial care of him; I would not have him mifcarry for the half of my dowry.

[Exeunt Olivia and Maria.

Mal. Oh, ho! do you come near me now? no worfe man than fir Toby to look to me? This concurs directly with the letter: fhe fends him on purpofe, that I may appear ftubborn to him; for fhe incites me to that in the letter. Caft thy humble flough, fays fhe;—be oppofite with a kinfman,[8] furly with fervants,—let thy tongue tang[9] with arguments of ftate,—put thyfelf into the trick of fingularity;——and, confequently, fets down the manner how; as, a fad face, a reverend carriage, a flow tongue, in the habit of fome fir of note, and fo forth. I have limed her;[1] but it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful! And, when fhe went away now, Let this fellow be looked to: Fellow![2] not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow. Why, every thing adheres together; that [8] —— be oppofite with a kinfman,] Oppofite, here, as in many other places, means—adverfe, hoftile. Malone.

So, in King Lear:

"Thou waft not bound to anfwer
"An unknown oppofite." Steevens.

[9] —— let thy tongue tang, &c.] Here the old copy reads—langer; but it fhould be—tang, as I have corrected it from the letter which Malvolio reads in a former fcene. Steevens.

The fecond folio reads—tang. Tyrwhitt.

[1] I have limed her;] I have entangled or caught her, as a bird is caught with birdlime. Johnson.

[2] Fellow!] This word, which originally fignified companion, was not yet totally degraded to its prefent meaning; and Malvolio takes it in the favourable fenfe. Johnson.

no dram of a ſcruple, no ſcruple of a ſcruple, no obſtacle, no incredulous or unſafe circumſtance,— What can be ſaid? Nothing, that can be, can come between me and the full proſpect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Re-enter MARIA, with Sir TOBY BELCH, and FABIAN.

SIR TO. Which way is he, in the name of ſanctity? If all the devils in hell be drawn in little, and Legion himſelf poſſeſſed him, yet I'll ſpeak to him.

FAB. Here he is, here he is:—How is't with you, ſir? how is't with you, man?

MAL. Go off; I diſcard you; let me enjoy my private; go off.

MAR. Lo, how hollow the fiend ſpeaks within him! did not I tell you?—Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

MAL. Ah, ha! does ſhe ſo?

SIR TO. Go to, go to; peace, peace, we muſt deal gently with him; let me alone. How do you, Malvolio? how is't with you? What, man! defy the devil: conſider, he's an enemy to mankind.[3]

MAL. Do you know what you ſay?

MAR. La you, an you ſpeak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart! Pray God, he be not bewitched!

FAB. Carry his water to the wiſe woman.

[3] —— enemy to mankind.] So, in Macbeth:
"—— mine eternal jewel,
"Given to the common enemy of man," &c. STEEVENS.

Mar. Marry, and it ſhall be done to-morrow morning, if I live. My lady would not loſe him for more than I'll ſay.

Mal. How now, miſtreſs?

Mar. O lord!

Sir To. Pr'ythee, hold thy peace; this is not the way: Do you not ſee, you move him? let me alone with him.

Fab. No way but gentleneſs; gently, gently: the fiend is rough, and will not be roughly uſed.

Sir To. Why, how now, my bawcock? how doſt thou, chuck?

Mal. Sir?

Sir To. Ay, Biddy, come with me. What, man! 'tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit [4] with Satan: Hang him, foul collier! [5]

Mar. Get him to ſay his prayers; good ſir Toby, get him to pray.

Mal. My prayers, minx?

[4] ——cherry-pit—] Cherry-pit is pitching cherry-ſtones into a little hole. Naſh, ſpeaking of the paint on ladies' faces, ſays: "You may play at cherry-pit in their cheeks." So, in a comedy called The Iſle of Gulls, 1606: "—if ſhe were here, I would have a bout at cobnut or cherry-pit." Again, in The Witch of Edmonton: "I have lov'd a witch ever ſince I play'd at cherry-pit." Steevens.

[5] Hang him, foul collier!] Collier was, in our author's time, a term of the higheſt reproach. So great were the impoſitions practiſed by the venders of coals, that R. Greene, at the concluſion of his Notable Diſcovery of Cozenage, 1592, has publiſhed what he calls, A pleaſant Diſcovery of the Coſenage of Colliers. Steevens.

The devil is called Collier for his blackneſs: Like Will to like, quoth the Devil to the Collier. Johnson.

Mar. No, I warrant you, he will not hear of godlineſs.

Mal. Go, hang yourſelves all! you are idle ſhallow things: I am not of your element; you ſhall know more hereafter. [Exit.

Sir To. Is't poſſible?

Fab. If this were played upon a ſtage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction.

Sir To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man.

Mar. Nay, purſue him now; leſt the device take air, and taint.

Fab. Why, we ſhall make him mad, indeed.

Mar. The houſe will be the quieter.

Sir To. Come, we'll have him in a dark room, and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he is mad; we may carry it thus, for our pleaſure, and his penance, till our very paſtime, tired out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him: at which time, we will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen.[6] But ſee, but ſee.

[6] —— a finder of madmen.] This is, I think, an alluſion to the witch-finders, who were very buſy. JOHNSON.

If there be any doubt whether a culprit is become non compos mentis, after indictment, conviction, or judgment, the matter is tried by a jury; and if he be found either an ideot or lunatick, the lenity of the Engliſh law will not permit him, in the firſt caſe, to be tried, in the ſecond, to receive judgment, or in the third, to be executed. In other caſes alſo inqueſts are held for the finding of madmen. MALONE.

Finders of madmen muſt have been thoſe who acted under the writ De lunatico inquirendo; in virtue whereof they found the man mad. It does not appear that a finder of madmen was ever a profeſſion, which was moſt certainly the caſe with witch-finders. RITSON.

Enter Sir ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK.

FAB. More matter for a May morning.[7]

SIR AND. Here's the challenge, read it; I warrant, there's vinegar and pepper in't.

FAB. Is't ſo ſawcy?

SIR AND. Ay, is it, I warrant him: do but read.

SIR TO. Give me. [reads.] Youth, whatſoever thou art, thou art but a ſcurvy fellow.

FAB. Good, and valiant.

SIR TO. Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why I do call thee ſo, for I will ſhow thee no reaſon for't.

FAB. A good note: that keeps you from the blow of the law.

SIR TO. Thou comeſt to the lady Olivia, and in my ſight ſhe uſes thee kindly: but thou lieſt in thy throat, that is not the matter I challenge thee for.

FAB. Very brief, and exceeding good ſenſe-leſs.

SIR TO. I will way-lay thee going home; where if it be thy chance to kill me,——

FAB. Good.

SIR TO. Thou killeſt me like a rogue and a villain.

FAB. Still you keep o'the windy ſide of the law: Good.

SIR TO. Fare thee well; And God have mercy

[7] More matter for a May morning.] It was uſual on the firſt of May to exhibit metrical interludes of the comic kind, as well as the morris-dance, of which a plate is given at the end of The Firſt Part of King Henry IV. with Mr. Tollet's obſervations on it. STEEVENS.

upon one of our ſouls! He may have mercy upon mine;[8] but my hope is better, and ſo look to thyſelf. Thy friend, as thou uſeſt him, and thy ſworn enemy. ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK.

SIR To. If this letter move him not, his legs cannot: I'll give't him.

MAR. You may have very fit occaſion for't; he is now in ſome commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.

SIR To. Go, ſir Andrew; ſcout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bum-bailiff: ſo ſoon as ever thou ſeeſt him, draw; and, as thou draweſt, ſwear horrible;[9] for it comes to paſs oft, that a terrible oath, with a ſwaggering accent ſharply twanged off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itſelf would have earned him. Away.

SIR AND. Nay, let me alone for ſwearing. [Exit.

SIR To. Now will not I deliver his letter: for the behaviour of the young gentleman gives him out to [8] He may have mercy upon mine;] We may read—He may have mercy upon thine, but my hope is better. Yet the paſſage may well enough ſtand without alteration.

It were much to be wiſhed that Shakſpeare, in this, and ſome other paſſages, had not ventured ſo near profaneneſs. JOHNSON.

The preſent reading is more humorous than that ſuggeſted by Johnſon. The man on whoſe ſoul he hopes that God will have mercy, is the one that he ſuppoſes will fall in the combat: but Sir Andrew hopes to eſcape unhurt, and to have no preſent occaſion for that bleſſing.

The ſame idea occurs in Henry V. where Mrs. Quickly, giving an account of poor Falſtaff's diſſolution, ſays: "Now I, to comfort him, bid him not think of God; I hoped there was no need to trouble himſelf with any ſuch thoughts yet."

M. MASON.

be of good capacity and breeding; his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no leſs; therefore this letter, being ſo excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth, he will find it comes from a clodpole. But, ſir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; ſet upon Ague-cheek a notable report of valour; and drive the gentleman, (as, I know, his youth will aptly receive it,) into a moſt hideous opinion of his rage, ſkill, fury, and impetuoſity. This will ſo fright them both, that they will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Enter OLIVIA and VIOLA.

FAB. Here he comes with your niece: give them way, till he take leave, and preſently after him.

SIR TO. I will meditate the while upon ſome horrid meſſage for a challenge.

[Exeunt Sir TOBY, FABIAN, and MARIA.

OLI. I have ſaid too much unto a heart of ſtone,
And laid mine honour too unchary out:[1]
There's ſomething in me, that reproves my fault;
But ſuch a headſtrong potent fault it is,
That it but mocks reproof.

VIO. With the ſame 'haviour that your paſſion bears,
Go on my maſter's griefs.

OLI. Here, wear this jewel for me,[2] tis my picture;

[1] —— too unchary out:] The old copy reads—on't. The emenda ion is Mr. Theobald's. MALONE.

[2] —— wear this jewel for me,] Jewel does not properly ſignify a ſingle gem, but any precious ornament or ſuperfluity. JOHNSON.

Refuſe it not, it hath no tongue to vex you:
And, I beſeech you, come again to-morrow.
What ſhall you aſk of me, that I'll deny;
That honour, ſav'd, may upon aſking give?

Vio. Nothing but this, your true love for my maſter.

Oli. How with mine honour may I give him that
Which I have given to you?

Vio. I will acquit you.

Oli. Well, come again to-morrow: Fare thee well;
A fiend, like thee, might bear my ſoul to hell. [Exit.

Re-enter Sir TOBY BELCH, and FABIAN.

Sir To. Gentleman, God ſave thee.

Vio. And you, ſir.

Sir To. That defence thou haſt, betake thee to't: of what nature the wrongs are thou haſt done him, I know not; but thy intercepter,[3] full of deſpight, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end: diſmount thy tuck, be yare in thy preparation, for thy aſſailant is quick, ſkilful, and deadly.

Vio. You miſtake, ſir; I am ſure, no man hath any quarrel to me; my remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man.

So, in Markham's Arcadia, 1607: "She gave him a very fine jewel, wherein was ſet a moſt rich diamond." See alſo Mr. T. Warton's Hiſtory of Engliſh Poetry, Vol. I. p. 121.
STEEVENS.

[3] —— thy intercepter,] Thus the old copy. Moſt of the modern editors read—interpreter. STEEVENS.

Sir To. You'll find it otherwiſe, I aſſure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your oppoſite hath in him what youth, ſtrength, ſkill, and wrath, can furniſh man withal.

Vio. I pray you, ſir, what is he?

Sir To. He is knight, dubbed with unhacked rapier, and on carpet conſideration;[4] but he is a [4] He is knight, dubbed with unhacked rapier, and on carpet conſideration;] That is, he is no ſoldier by profeſſion, not a knight banneret, dubbed in the field of battle, but, on carpet conſideration, at a feſtivity, or on ſome peaceable occaſion, when knights receive their dignity kneeling, not on the ground, as in war, but on a carpet. This is, I believe, the original of the contemptuous term a carpet knight, who was naturally held in ſcorn by the men of war. Johnson.

In Francis Markham's Booke of Honour, fo. 1625, p. 71, we have the following account of Carpet Knights: "Next unto theſe (i. e. thoſe he diſtinguiſhes by the title of Dunghill or Truck Knights) in degree, but not in qualitie, (for theſe are truly for the moſt part vertuous and worthie) is that rank of Knights which are called Carpet Knights, being men who are by the prince's grace and favour made knights at home and in the time of peace by the impoſition or laying on of the king's ſword, having by ſome ſpecial ſervice done to the common-wealth, or for ſome other particular virtues made known to the ſoveraigne, as alſo for the dignitie of their births, and in recompence of noble and famous actions done by their anceſtors, deſerved this great title and dignitie." He then enumerates the ſeveral orders of men on whom this honour was uſually conferred; and adds—"thoſe of the vulgar or common ſort are called Carpet Knights, becauſe (for the moſt part) they receive their honour from the king's hand in the court, and upon carpets, and ſuch like ornaments belonging to the king's ſtate and greatneſſe; which howſoever a curious envie may wreſt to an ill ſenſe, yet queſtionleſſe there is no ſhadow of diſgrace belonging unto it, for it is an honour as perfect as any honour whatſoever, and the ſervices and merits for which it is received, as worthy and well-deſerving both of the king and country, as that which hath wounds and ſcarres for his witneſſe." Reed.

devil in private brawl: ſouls and bodies hath he divorced three; and his incenſement at this moment is ſo implacable, that ſatisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and ſepulchre: hob, nob,[5] is his word; give't, or take't.

Greene uſes the term—Carpet-knights, in contempt of thoſe of whom he is ſpeaking; and, in The Downfal of Robert Earl of Huntington, 1601, it is employed for the ſame purpoſe:

"—— ſoldiers, come away:
"This Carpet-knight ſits carping at our ſcars."

In Barrett's Alvearie, 1580: "—thoſe which do not exerciſe themſelves with ſome honeſt affaires, but ſerve abhominable and filthy idleneſs, are, as we uſe to call them, Carpet-knightes." B. ante O. Again, among Sir John Harrington's Epigrams, B. IV. Ep. 6, Of Merit and Demerit:

"That captaines in thoſe days were not regarded,
"That only Carpet-knights were well rewarded."

The old copy reads—unhatch'd rapier; but a paſſage in King Henry IV. P. I. may ſerve to confirm the reading in the text: "How came Falſtaff's ſword ſo hack'd?—Why, he hack'd it with his dagger." STEEVENS.

—— with unhatch'd rapier,] The modern editors read—unhack'd. It appears from Cotgrave's Dictionary in v. hacher, [to hack, hew, &c.] that to hatch the hilt of a ſword, was a technical term. Perhaps we ought to read—with an hatch'd rapier, i. e. with a rapier, the hilt of which was richly engraved and ornamented. Our author, however, might have uſed unhatch'd in the ſenſe of unhack'd; and therefore I have made no change. MALONE.

[5] —— hob, nob,] This adverb is corrupted from hap ne hap; as would ne would, will ne will; that is, let it happen or not; and ſignifies at random, at the mercy of chance. See Johnſon's Dictionary. So, in Lyly's Euphues and his England, 4to. bl. l. 1580: "Thus Philautus determined, hab nab, to ſend his letters," &c. STEEVENS.

Is not this the origin of our hob nob, or challenge to drink a glaſs of wine at dinner? The phraſe occurs in Ben Jonſon's Tale of a Tub:

"I put it
"Ev'n to your worſhip's bitterment, hab nab.
"I ſhall have a chance o'the dice for't, I hope."

M. MASON.

Vio. I will return again into the houſe, and deſire ſome conduct of the lady. I am no fighter. I have heard of ſome kind of men, that put quarrels purpoſely on others, to taſte their valour: belike, this is a man of that quirk.

Sir To. Sir, no; his indignation derives itſelf out of a very competent injury; therefore, get you on, and give him his deſire. Back you ſhall not to the houſe, unleſs you undertake that with me, which with as much ſafety you might anſwer him: therefore, on, or ſtrip your ſword ſtark naked; for meddle[6] you muſt, that's certain, or forſwear to wear iron about you.

Vio. This is as uncivil, as ſtrange. I beſeech you, do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight what my offence to him is; it is ſomething of my negligence, nothing of my purpoſe.

Sir To. I will do ſo. Signior Fabian, ſtay you by this gentleman till my return. [Exit Sir Toby.

Vio. Pray you, ſir, do you know of this matter?

Fab. I know, the knight is incenſed againſt you, even to a mortal arbitrement; but nothing of the circumſtance more.

Vio. I beſeech you, what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promiſe, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is, indeed, ſir, the

So, in Holinſhed's Hiſt. of Ireland: "The citizens in their rage—ſhot habbe or nabbe, at random." Malone.

moſt ſkilful, bloody, and fatal oppoſite that you could poſſibly have found in any part of Illyria: Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Vio. I ſhall be much bound to you for't: I am one, that would rather go with ſir prieſt, than ſir knight: I care not who knows ſo much of my mettle. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Sir TOBY, with Sir ANDREW.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil;[7] I have not ſeen ſuch a virago.[8] I had a paſs with him, rapier, ſcabbard, and all, and he gives me the ſtuck-in,[9] with ſuch a mortal motion, that it is [7] Why, man, he's a very devil; &c.] Shakſpeare might have caught a hint for this ſcene from Ben Jonſon's Silent Woman, which was printed in 1609. The behaviour of Viola and Aguecheek appears to have been formed on that of Sir John Daw and Sir Amorous La Foole. STEEVENS.

[8] I have not ſeen ſuch a virago.] Virago cannot be properly uſed here, unleſs we ſuppoſe Sir Toby to mean, I never ſaw one that had ſo much the look of woman with the prowefs of man. JOHNSON.

The old copy reads—firago. A virago always means a female warrior, or, in low language, a ſcold, or turbulent woman. In Heywood's Golden Age, 1611, Jupiter enters "like a nymph or virago;" and ſays, "I may paſs for a bona-roba, a rounceval, a virago, or a good manly laſs." If Shakſpeare (who knew Viola to be a woman, though Sir Toby did not,) has made no blunder, Dr. Johnſon has ſupplied the only obvious meaning of the word. Firago may however be a ludicrous term of Shakſpeare's coinage. STEEVENS.

Why may not the meaning be more ſimple, "I have never ſeen the moſt furious woman ſo obſtreperous and violent as he is?" MALONE.

[9] —— the ſtuck—] The ſtuck is a corrupted abbreviation of the ſtoccata, an Italian term in fencing. So, in The Return from Parnaſſus, 1606: "Here's a fellow, Judicio, that carried Sir And. Pox on't, I'll not meddle with him.

Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can ſcarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague on't; an I thought he had been valiant, and ſo cunning in fence, I'd have ſeen him damned ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter ſlip, and I'll give him my horſe, grey Capilet.

Sir To. I'll make the motion: Stand here, make a good ſhow on't; this ſhall end without the perdition of ſouls: Marry, I'll ride your horſe as well as I ride you. [Aſide.

Re-enter FABIAN and VIOLA.

I have his horſe [to FAB.] to take up the quarrel; I have perſuaded him, the youth's a devil.

the deadly ſtock in his pen." Again, in Marſton's Mal-content, 1604: "The cloſe ſtock, O mortal," &c. Again, in Antonio's Revenge, 1602:

"I would paſs on him with a mortal ſtock." STEEVENS.

Again, in The Merry Wives of Windſor:

"—— thy ſtock, thy reverſe, thy montánt." MALONE.

[1] —— he pays you—] i. e. hits you, does for you. Thus, Falſtaff, in The Firſt Part of King Henry IV: "I followed me cloſe, and, with a thought, ſeven of the eleven I paid." STEEVENS.

[2] He is as horribly conceited of him;] That is, he has as horrid an idea or conception of him. MALONE.

Sir To. There's no remedy, ſir; he will fight with you for his oath ſake: marry, he hath better bethought him of his quarrel, and he finds that now ſcarce to be worth talking of: therefore draw, for the ſupportance of his vow; he proteſts, he will not hurt you.

Vio. Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

[Aſide.

Fab. Give ground, if you ſee him furious.

Sir To. Come, ſir Andrew, there's no remedy; the gentleman will, for his honour's ſake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duello[3] avoid it: but he has promiſed me, as he is a gentleman and a ſoldier, he will not hurt you. Come on; to't.

Sir And. Pray God, he keep his oath! [Draws.

Enter Antonio.

Vio. I do aſſure you, 'tis againſt my will. [Draws.

Ant. Put up your ſword;—If this young gentleman
Have done offence, I take the fault on me;
If you offend him, I for him defy you. [Drawing.

Sir To. You, ſir? why, what are you?

Ant. One, ſir, that for his love dares yet do more Than you have heard him brag to you he will.

Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker,[4] I am for you. [Draws.

[3] ——by the duello—] i. e. by the laws of the duello, which, in Shakſpeare's time, were ſettled with the utmoſt nicety.

Steevens.

[4] Nay, if you be an undertaker,] But why was an undertaker ſo offenſive a character? I believe this is a touch upon the times, which may help to determine the date of this play.

Enter two Officers.

Fab. O good ſir Toby, hold; here come the officers.

Sir To. I'll be with you anon. [To Antonio.

Vio. Pray, ſir, put up your ſword, if you pleaſe.
[To Sir Andrew.

Sir And. Marry, will I, ſir;—and, for that I promiſed you, I'll be as good as my word: He will bear you eaſily, and reins well.

1 Off. This is the man; do thy office.

2 Off. Antonio, I arreſt thee at the ſuit
Of count Orſino.

Ant. You do miſtake me, ſir.

At the meeting of the parliament in 1614, there appears to have been a very general perſuaſion, or jealouſy at leaſt, that the King had been induced to call a parliament at that time, by certain perſons, who had undertaken, through their influence in the Houſe of Commons, to carry things according to his Majeſty's wiſhes. Theſe perſons were immediately ſtigmatized with the invidious name of undertakers; and the idea was ſo unpopular, that the King thought it neceſſary, in two ſet ſpeeches, to deny poſitively (how truly is another queſtion) that there had been any ſuch undertaking. Parl. Hiſt. Vol. V. p. 277, and 286. Sir Francis Bacon alſo (then attorney-general) made an artful, apologetical ſpeech in the Houſe of Commons upon the ſame ſubject; when the houſe (according to the title of the ſpeech) was in great heat, and much troubled about the undertakers. Bacon's Works, Vol. II. p. 236, 4to edit. Tyrwhitt.

Undertakers were perſons employed by the King's purveyors to take up proviſions for the royal houſehold, and were no doubt exceedingly odious. But ſtill, I think, the ſpeaker intends a quibble; the ſimple meaning of the word being one who undertakes, or takes up the quarrel or buſineſs of another. Ritson.

I am of Ritſon's opinion, that by an undertaker Sir Toby means a man who takes upon himſelf the quarrel of another. Mr. Tyrwhitt's explanation is too learned to be juſt, and was probably ſuggeſted by his official ſituation. M. Mason.

1 Off. No, ſir, no jot; I know your favour well,
Though now you have no ſea-cap on your head.—
Take him away; he knows, I know him well.

Ant. I muſt obey.—This comes with ſeeking you;
But there's no remedy; I ſhall anſwer it.
What will you do? Now my neceſſity
Makes me to aſk you for my purſe: It grieves me
Much more, for what I cannot do for you,
Than what befalls myſelf. You ſtand amaz'd;
But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come, ſir, away.

Ant. I muſt entreat of you ſome of that money.

Vio. What money, ſir?
For the fair kindneſs you have ſhow'd me here,
And, part, being prompted by your preſent trouble,
Out of my lean and low ability
I'll lend you ſomething: my having is not much;
I'll make diviſion of my preſent with you:
Hold, there is half my coffer.

Ant. Will you deny me now?
Is't poſſible, that my deſerts to you
Can lack perſuaſion? Do not tempt my miſery,
Leſt that it make me ſo unſound a man,
As to upbraid you with thoſe kindneſſes
That I have done for you.

Vio. I know of none;
Nor know I you by voice, or any feature:
I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Than lying, vainneſs, babbling, drunkenneſs,
Or any taint of vice, whoſe ſtrong corruption
Inhabits our frail blood.

Ant. O heavens themſelves!

2 Off. Come, ſir, I pray you, go.

Ant. Let me ſpeak a little. This youth that you ſee here,
I ſnatch'd one half out of the jaws of death;
Reliev'd him with ſuch ſanctity of love,——
And to his image, which, methought, did promiſe
Moſt venerable worth, did I devotion.

1 Off. What's that to us? The time goes by; away.

Ant. But, O, how vile an idol proves this god!—
Thou haſt, Sebaſtian, done good feature ſhame.—
In nature there's no blemiſh, but the mind;
None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind:
Virtue is beauty; but the beauteous-evil
Are empty trunks, o'erflouriſh'd by the devil.[5]

1 Off. The man grows mad; away with him.
Come, come, ſir.

Ant. Lead me on.

[Exeunt Officers, with Antonio.

Vio. Methinks, his words do from ſuch paſſion fly,
That he believes himſelf; ſo do not I.[6]

[5] —— o'erflouriſh'd by the devil.] In the time of Shakſpeare, trunks, which are now depoſited in lumber-rooms, or other obſcure places, were part of the furniture of apartments in which company was received. I have ſeen more than one of theſe, as old as the time of our poet. They were richly ornamented on the tops and ſides with ſcroll-work, emblematical devices, &c. and were elevated on feet. Shakſpeare has the ſame expreſſion in Meaſure for Meaſure:

" —— your title to him
" Doth flouriſh the deceit—." Steevens.

Again, in his 60th Sonnet:

" Time doth transfix the flouriſh ſet on youth."

Malone.

[6] —— ſo do not I.] This, I believe, means, I do not yet believe myſelf, when, from this accident, I gather hope of my brother's life. Johnson.

Prove true, imagination, O, prove true,
That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you!

Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian; we'll whiſper o'er a couplet or two of moſt ſage ſaws.

Vio. He nam'd Sebaſtian; I my brother know
Yet living in my glaſs;[7] even ſuch, and ſo,
In favour was my brother; and he went
Still in this faſhion, colour, ornament,
For him I imitate: O, if it prove,
Tempeſts are kind, and ſalt waves freſh in love!
[Exit.

Sir To. A very diſhoneſt paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his diſhoneſty appears, in leaving his friend here in neceſſity, and denying him; and for his cowardſhip, aſk Fabian.

Fab. A coward, a moſt devout coward, religious in it.

Sir And. 'Slid, I'll after him again, and beat him.

Sir To. Do, cuff him ſoundly, but never draw thy ſword.

Sir And. An I do not,— [Exit.

Fab. Come, let's ſee the event.

Sir To. I dare lay any money, 'twill be nothing yet. [Exeunt.

[7] —— I my brother know
Yet living in my glaſs;] I ſuppoſe Viola means—As often as I behold myſelf in my glaſs, I think I ſee my brother alive; i. e. I acknowledge that his reſemblance ſurvives in the reflection of my own figure. Steevens.

ACT IV. SCENE I.

The Street before Olivia's Houſe.

Enter SEBASTIAN and Clown.

CLO. Will you make me believe, that I am not ſent for you?

SEB. Go to, go to, thou art a fooliſh fellow;
Let me be clear of thee.

CLO. Well held out, i'faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not ſent to you by my lady, to bid you come ſpeak with her; nor your name is not maſter Ceſario; nor this is not my noſe neither.—Nothing, that is ſo, is ſo.

SEB. I pr'ythee, vent thy folly ſomewhere elſe;
Thou know'ſt not me.

CLO. Vent my folly! He has heard that word of ſome great man, and now applies it to a fool.[8] Vent my folly! I am afraid this great lubber,[9] the world, will prove a cockney.[1]—I pr'ythee now, ungird thy ſtrangeneſs, and tell me what I ſhall

[8] Vent my folly! He has heard that word of ſome great man, &c.] This affected word ſeems to have been in uſe in Shakſpeare's time. In Melvil's Memoirs, p. 198, we have "My Lord Lindſay vented himſelf that he was one of the number," &c. REED.

[9] I am afraid this great lubber,] That is, affectation and foppery will overſpread the world. JOHNSON.

[1] —— prove a cockney.] So, in A Knight's Conjuring, by Decker: "——'tis not their fault, but our mothers', our cockering mothers, who for their labour make us to be called Cockneys," &c. STEEVENS.

vent to my lady; Shall I vent to her, that thou art coming?

Seb. I pr'ythee, foolish Greek,[9] depart from me;
There's money for thee; if you tarry longer,
I shall give worse payment.

Clo. By my troth, thou hast an open hand:—
These wise men, that give fools money, get themselves a good report after fourteen years' purchase.[3]

[2] I pr'ythee, foolish Greek,] Greek, was as much as to say bawd or pander. He understood the Clown to be acting in that office. A bawdy-house was called Corinth, and the frequenters of it Corinthians, which words occur frequently in Shakspeare, especially in Timon of Athens, and Henry IV. Yet the Oxford editor alters it to Geck. Warburton.

Can our author have alluded to St. Paul's epistle to the Romans, c. i. v. 23?

"—— to the Greeks foolishness." Steevens.

[3] —— get themselves a good report after fourteen years' purchase.] This seems to carry a piece of satire upon monopolies, the crying grievance of that time. The grants generally were for fourteen years; and the petitions being referred to a committee, it was suspected that money gained favourable reports from thence. Warburton.

Perhaps fourteen years' purchase was, in Shakspeare's time, the highest price for land. Lord Bacon's Essay on Usury mentions sixteen years purchase. "I will not give more than according to fifteen years purchase, said a dying usurer to a clergyman, who advised him to study for a purchase of the kingdom of heaven." Tollet.

Mr. Heath thinks the meaning is, "—purchase a good report [or character] at a very extravagant price." Malone.

Dr. Warburton's conjecture that there is here a reference to monopolies, is, I believe, unfounded. Mr. Tollett and Mr. Heath are probably right. Sir Josiah Child, in his Discourse on Trade, says, "—certainly anno 1621, the current price of lands in England was twelve years purchase; and so I have been assured by many ancient men whom I have questioned particularly as to this matter; and I find it so by purchases made about that time by my own relations and acquaintance." Sir Thomas Culpepper, senior, who wrote in 1621, affirms, "that land was then at twelve years purchase." Reed.

Enter Sir ANDREW, Sir TOBY, and FABIAN.

SIR AND. Now, ſir, have I met you again? there's for you. [Striking SEBASTIAN.

SEB. Why, there's for thee, and there, and there: Are all the people mad? [Beating Sir ANDREW.

SIR TO. Hold, ſir, or I'll throw your dagger o'er the houſe.

CLO. This will I tell my lady ſtraight: I would not be in ſome of your coats for two-pence.
[Exit Clown.

SIR TO. Come on, ſir; hold.
[Holding SEBASTIAN.

SIR AND. Nay, let him alone, I'll go another way to work with him; I'll have an action of battery againſt him, if there be any law in Illyria: though I ſtruck him firſt, yet it's no matter for that.

SEB. Let go thy hand.

SIR TO. Come, ſir, I will not let you go. Come, my young ſoldier, put up your iron: you are well fleſhed; come on.

SEB. I will be free from thee. What wouldſt thou now?
If thou dar'ſt tempt me further, draw thy ſword.
[Draws.

SIR TO. What, what? Nay, then I muſt have an ounce or two of this malapert blood from you.
[Draws.

Enter OLIVIA.

OLI. Hold, Toby; on thy life, I charge thee, hold.

SIR TO. Madam?

Oli. Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch,
Fit for the mountains, and the barbarous caves,
Where manners ne'er were preach'd! out of my ſight!
Be not offended, dear Ceſario:——
Rudeſby, be gone!—I pr'ythee, gentle friend,
[Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.
Let thy fair wiſdom, not thy paſſion, ſway
In this uncivil and unjuſt extent[4]
Againſt thy peace. Go with me to my houſe;
And hear thou there how many fruitleſs pranks
This ruffian hath botch'd up,[5] that thou thereby
May'ſt ſmile at this: thou ſhalt not chooſe but go;
Do not deny: Beſhrew his ſoul for me,
He ſtarted one poor heart of mine in thee.[6]

[4] In this uncivil and unjuſt extent—] Extent is, in law, a writ of execution, whereby goods are ſeized for the King. It is therefore taken here for violence in general. Johnson.

[5] This ruffian hath botch'd up,] A coarſe expreſſion for made up, as a bad tailor is called a botcher, and to botch is to make clumſily. Johnson.

Dr. Johnſon is certainly right. A ſimilar expreſſion occurs in Antony and Cleopatra:

"——if you'll patch a quarrel,
"As matter whole you've not to make it with."

Again, in King Henry V:

"Do botch and bungle up damnation." Steevens.

[6] He ſtarted one poor heart of mine in thee.] I know not whether here be not an ambiguity intended between heart and hart. The ſenſe however is eaſy enough. He that offends thee, attacks one of my hearts; or, as the ancients expreſſed it, half my heart. Johnson.

The equivoque ſuggeſted by Dr. Johnſon was, I have no doubt, intended. Heart in our author's time was frequently written hart; and Shakſpeare delights in playing on theſe words. Malone.

Seb. What relifh is in this?[7] how runs the ftream?
Or I am mad, or elfe this is a dream:—
Let fancy ftill my fenfe in Lethe fteep;
If it be thus to dream, ftill let me fleep!

Oli. Nay, come, I pr'ythee: 'Would thou'dft be rul'd by me!

Seb. Madam, I will.

Oli. O, fay fo, and fo be!
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

A Room in Olivia's Houfe.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, I pr'ythee, put on this gown, and this beard; make him believe, thou art fir Topas[8] the curate; do it quickly: I'll call fir Toby the whilft. [Exit Maria.

Clo. Well, I'll put it on, and I will diffemble myfelf[9] in't; and I would I were the firft that ever diffembled in fuch a gown. I am not fat enough

[7] What relifh is in this?] How does this tafte? What judgment am I to make of it? Johnson.

[8] ——fir Topas—] The name of Sir Topas is taken from Chaucer. Steevens.

[9] ——I will diffemble myfelf—] i.e. difguife myfelf. Malone.

Shakfpeare has here ftumbled on a Latinifm: Thus Ovid, fpeaking of Achilles:

to become the function well;[1] nor lean enough to be thought a good ſtudent: but to be ſaid, an honeſt man, and a good houſekeeper, goes as fairly, as to ſay, a careful man, and a great ſcholar.[2] The competitors enter.[3]

Enter Sir TOBY BELCH and MARIA.

SIR To. Jove bleſs thee, maſter parſon.

CLO. Bonos dies, ſir Toby: for as the old hermit of Prague,[4] that never ſaw pen and ink, very wittily ſaid to a niece of king Gorboduc, That, that is, is:[5] ſo I, being maſter parſon, am maſter parſon; For what is that, but that? and is, but is?

[1] I am not fat enough to become the function well;] The old copy reads—tall enough: but this cannot be right. The word wanted ſhould be part of the deſcription of a careful man. I ſhould have no objection to read—pale. TYRWHITT.

Not tall enough, perhaps means not of ſufficient height to overlook a pulpit. Dr. Farmer would read fat inſtead of tall, the former of theſe epithets, in his opinion, being referable to the following words—a good houſekeeper. STEEVENS.

[2] —— as to ſay, a careful man, and a great ſcholar.] This refers to what went before: I am not tall enough to become the function well, nor lean enough to be thought a good ſtudent: it is plain then Shakſpeare wrote:—as to ſay a graceful man, i. e. comely. To this the Oxford editor ſays, rectè.

WARBURTON.

A careful man, I believe, means a man who has ſuch a regard for his character, as to intitle him to ordination. STEEVENS.

[3] The competitors enter.] That is, the confederates or aſſociates. The word competitor is uſed in the ſame ſenſe in Richard III. and in the Two Gentlemen of Verona. M. MASON.

[4] —— the old hermit of Prague,] This refers to a real perſonage. STEEVENS.

Sir To. To him, ſir Topas.

Clo. What, hoa, I ſay,—Peace in this priſon!

Sir To. The knave counterfeits well; a good knave.

Mal. [in an inner chamber.] Who calls there?

Clo. Sir Topas, the curate, who comes to viſit Malvolio the lunatick.

Mal. Sir Topas, ſir Topas, good ſir Topas, go to my lady.

Clo. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexeſt thou this man? talkeſt thou nothing but of ladies?

Sir To. Well ſaid, maſter parſon.

Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged: good ſir Topas, do not think I am mad; they have laid me here in hideous darkneſs.

Clo. Fye, thou diſhoneſt Sathan! I call thee by the moſt modeſt terms; for I am one of thoſe gentle ones, that will uſe the devil himſelf with courteſy: Say'ſt thou, that houſe[6] is dark?

Mal. As hell, ſir Topas.

Clo. Why, it hath bay-windows[7] tranſparent as foundation of every ſcience in theſe maxims, whatſoever is, is; and it is impoſſible for the ſame thing to be and not to be; with much trifling of the like kind. WARBURTON.

[6] —— that houſe—] That manſion, in which you are now confined. The Clown gives this pompous appellation to the ſmall room in which Malvolio, we may ſuppoſe, was confined, to exaſperate him. The word it in the Clown's next ſpeech plainly means Malvolio's chamber, and confirms this interpretation. MALONE.

[7] —— it hath bay-windows—] A bay-window is the ſame as a bow-window; a window in a receſs, or bay. See A. Wood's Life, publiſhed by T. Hearne, 1730, p. 548 and 553. The following inſtances may likewiſe ſupport the ſuppoſition:

barricadoes, and the clear ſtones[8] towards the ſouth-north are as luſtrous as ebony; and yet complaineſt thou of obſtruction?

Mal. I am not mad, ſir Topas; I ſay to you, this houſe is dark.

Clo. Madman, thou erreſt: I ſay, there is no darkneſs, but ignorance; in which thou art more puzzled, than the Egyptians in their fog.

Mal. I ſay, this houſe is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I ſay, there was never man thus abuſed: I am no more mad than you are; make the trial of it in any conſtant queſtion.[9]

Cynthia's Revels, by Ben Jonſon, 1600:
"—— retired myſelf into a bay-window," &c.
Again, in Stowe's Chronicle of King Henry IV:
"As Tho. Montague reſted him at a bay-window, a gun was levell'd," &c.
Again, in Middleton's Women beware Women:
"Tis a ſweet recreation for a gentlewoman
"To ſtand in a bay-window, and ſee gallants."
Chaucer, in The Aſſemblie of Ladies, mentions bay-windows. Again, in King Henry the Sixth's Directions for building the Hall at King's College, Cambridge:—"on every ſide thereof a baie-window." Steevens.

See Minſheu's Dict. in v: "A bay-window,—becauſe it is builded in manner of a baie or rode for ſhippes, that is, round. L. Cavæ feneſtræ. G. Une feneſtre fort anthors de la maiſon." Malone.

[8] —— the clear ſtones—] The old copy has—ſtores. The emendation was made by the editor of the ſecond folio. Malone.

And yet, ſays Mr. Malone, the ſecond folio is not worth three ſhillings. Steevens.

[9] —— conſtant queſtion.] A ſettled, a determinate, a regular queſtion. Johnson.

Rather, in any regular converſation, for ſo generally Shakſpeare uſes the word queſtion. Malone.

Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras, concerning wild-fowl?

Mal. That the ſoul of our grandam might haply inhabit a bird.

Clo. What thinkeſt thou of his opinion?

Mal. I think nobly of the ſoul, and no way approve his opinion.

Clo. Fare thee well: Remain thou ſtill in darkneſs: thou ſhalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits; and fear to kill a woodcock,[1] leſt thou diſpoſſeſs the ſoul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.

Mal. Sir Topas, ſir Topas,—

Sir To. My moſt exquiſite ſir Topas!

Clo. Nay, I am for all waters.[2]

[1] —— to kill a woodcock,] The Clown mentions a woodcock particularly, becauſe that bird was ſuppoſed to have very little brains, and therefore was a proper anceſtor for a man out of his wits. Malone.

[2] Nay, I am for all waters.] A phraſe taken from the actor's ability of making the audience cry either with mirth or grief. Warburton.

I rather think this expreſſion borrowed from ſportſmen, and relating to the qualifications of a complete ſpaniel. Johnson.

A cloak for all kinds of knavery; taken from the Italian proverb, Tu hai mantillo da ogni acqua. Smith.

Nay, I am for all waters.] I can turn my hand to any thing; I can aſſume any character I pleaſe; like a fiſh, I can ſwim equally well in all waters. Montaigne, ſpeaking of Ariſtotle, ſays, that "he hath an oar in every water, and meddleth with all things." Florio's tranſlation, 1603. In Florio's Second Fruites, 1591, I find an expreſſion more nearly reſembling that of the text: "I am a knight for all ſaddles." The equivoque ſuggeſted in the following note may, however, have been alſo in our author's thoughts. Malone.

The word water, as uſed by jewellers, denotes the colour and the luſtre of diamonds, and from thence is applied, though with

Mar. Thou might'st have done this without thy beard, and gown; he sees thee not.

Sir To. To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou findest him: I would, we were well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would he were; for I am now so far in offence with my niece, that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber.

[Exeunt Sir TOBY and MARIA.

CLO. Hey Robin, jolly Robin,[3]
Tell me how thy lady does. [Singing.

less propriety, to the colour and hue of other precious stones. I think that Shakspeare, in this place, alludes to this sense of the word water, not to those adopted either by Johnson or Warburton. The Clown is complimented by Sir Toby, for personating Sir Topas so exquisitely; to which he replies, that he can put on all colours, alluding to the word Topaz, which is the name of a jewel, and was also that of the Curate.

M. MASON.

Mr. Henley has adopted the same idea; and adds, that "the Clown in his reply plays upon the name of Topas, and intimates that he could sustain as well the character of another person, let him be called by what gem he might." STEEVENS.

[3] Hey Robin, jolly Robin,] This song should certainly begin:

"Hey, jolly Robin, tell to me
"How does thy lady do?—
"My lady is unkind, perdy.—
"Alas, why is she so?" FARMER.

This ingenious emendation is now superseded by the proper readings of the old song itself, which is now printed from what appears the most ancient of Dr. Harrington's poetical MSS.—The first stanza appears to be defective, and it should seem that a line is wanting, unless the four first words were lengthened in the tune. PERCY.

The song, thus published, runs as follows:

"A Robyn,
"Jolly Robyn,
"Tell me how thy leman doeth,
"And thou shalt knowe of myn.

Mal. Fool,—

Clo. My lady is unkind, perdy.

Mal. Fool,—

Clo. Alas, why is ſhe ſo?

Mal. Fool, I ſay;—

Clo. She loves another—Who calls, ha?

Mal. Good fool, as ever thou wilt deſerve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper; as I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for't.

Clo. Maſter Malvolio!

Mal. Ay, good fool.

Clo. Alas, ſir, how fell you beſides your five wits? [4]

"My lady is unkynde perde."
"Alack! why is ſo?
"She loveth an other better than me;
"And yet ſhe will ſay no." &c. &c.

See Percy's Reliques of Ancient Engliſh Poetry, fourth edit. Vol. I. p. 194.

I hope to be excuſed if I add, that I do not immediately perceive how the copy of a ſong ſo metrically imperfect as the foregoing, can be permitted to extinguiſh the emendation propoſed by Dr. Farmer. Steevens.

This ſong ſeems to be alluded to in the following paſſage of The Merchandiſes of Popiſh Prieſts, 4to. 1629, ſign. F 2:—"There is no one ſo lively and jolly as St. Mathurine. I can beſt deſcribe you this arch ſinger, by ſuch common phraſe as we uſe of him whom we ſee very lively and pleaſantly diſpoſed, we ſay this, His head is full of jolly Robbins." Reed.

[4] —— your five wits?] Thus the five ſenſes were anciently called. So, in King Lear, Edgar ſays:
"Bleſs thy five wits! Tom's a cold."

Again, in the old Morality of Every Man: "And remember, beaute, fyve wittes, ſtrength, and dyſcrecyon." Steevens.

The wits, Dr. Johnſon ſome where obſerves, were reckoned five, in analogy to the five ſenſes. From Stephen Hawes's poem

Mal. Fool, there was never man ſo notoriouſly abuſed: I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.

Clo. But as well? then you are mad, indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.

Mal. They have here propertied me;[5] keep me in darkneſs, ſend miniſters to me, aſſes, and do all they can to face me out of my wits.

Clo. Adviſe you what you ſay; the miniſter is here.—Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens reſtore! endeavour thyſelf to ſleep, and leave thy vain bibble babble.

Mal. Sir Topas,——

Clo. Maintain no words with him,[6] good fellow.—Who, I, ſir? not I, ſir. God b'wi'you, good ſir Topas.—Marry, amen.—I will, ſir, I will.

Mal. Fool, fool, fool, I ſay,—

Clo. Alas, ſir, be patient. What ſay you, ſir? I am ſhent[7] for ſpeaking to you.

called Graunde Amoure, ch. xxiv. edit. 1554, it appears that the five wits were—"common wit, imagination, fantaſy, eſtimation, and memory." Wit in our author's time was the general term for the intellectual power. MALONE.

[5] ——propertied me;] They have taken poſſeſſion of me, as of a man unable to look to himſelf. JOHNSON.

[6] Maintain no words with him,] Here the Clown in the dark acts two perſons, and counterfeits, by variation of voice, a dialogue between himſelf and Sir Topas.—I will, ſir, I will, is ſpoken after a pauſe, as if, in the mean time, Sir Topas had whiſpered. JOHNSON.

[7] I am ſhent &c.] i. e. ſcolded, reproved. So, in Aſcham's Report and Diſcourſe: "A wonderfull follie in a great man himſelfe, and ſome piece of miſerie in a whole commonwealth, where fooles chiefly and flatterers may ſpeak freely what they will; and wiſe men, and good men ſhall commonly be ſhent if they ſpeak what they ſhould." See alſo note on Hamlet, Act III. ſc. ii. REED.

Mal. Good fool, help me to ſome light, and ſome paper; I tell thee, I am as well in my wits, as any man in Illyria.

Clo. Well-a-day,—that you were, ſir!

Mal. By this hand, I am: Good fool, ſome ink, paper, and light, and convey what I will ſet down to my lady; it ſhall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letter did.

Clo. I will help you to't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed? or do you but counterfeit? [8]

Mal. Believe me, I am not; I tell thee true.

Clo. Nay, I'll ne'er believe a madman, till I ſee his brains. I will fetch you light, and paper, and ink.

[8] —— tell me true, are you not mad indeed? or do you but counterfeit?] If he was not mad, what did he counterfeit by declaring that he was not mad? The fool, who meant to inſult him, I think, aſks, are you mad, or do you but counterfeit? That is, you look like a madman, you talk like a madman. Is your madneſs real, or have you any ſecret deſign in it? This, to a man in poor Malvolio's ſtate, was a ſevere taunt. Johnson.

The meaning of this paſſage appears to me to be this. Malvolio had aſſured the Clown that he was as well in his ſenſes as any man in Illyria; and the Clown in reply, aſks him this provoking queſtion: "Is it true that you are really not mad?" that is, that you are really in your right ſenſes, or do you only pretend to be ſo? M. Mason.

Dr. Johnſon, in my apprehenſion, miſinterprets the words, "—do you but counterfeit?" They ſurely mean, "do you but counterfeit madneſs, or, in other words, "aſſume the appearance of a madman, though not one." Our author ought, I think, to have written, either, "—are you mad indeed, or do you but counterfeit?" or elſe, "—are you not not mad indeed, and do you but counterfeit?" But I do not ſuſpect any corruption; for the laſt I have no doubt was what he meant, though he has not expreſſed his meaning accurately. He is often careleſs in ſuch minute matters. Mr. Maſon's interpretation removes the difficulty; but, conſidering the words that immediately precede, is very harſh, and appears to be inadmiſſible. Malone.

Mal. Fool, I'll requite it in the higheſt degree: I pr'ythee, be gone.

Clo. I am gone, ſir,
And anon, ſir,
I'll be with you again,
In a trice,
Like to the old vice,[9]
Your need to ſuſtain;

Who with dagger of lath,
In his rage and his wrath,
Cries, ah, ha! to the devil:
Like a mad lad,
Pare thy nails, dad,
Adieu, goodman drivel.[1] [Exit.

[9] Like to the old vice,] The vice was the fool of the old moralities. Some traces of this character are ſtill preſerved in puppet-ſhows, and by country mummers. Johnson.

This character was always acted in a maſk; it probably had its name from the old French word vis, for which they now uſe viſage, though they ſtill retain it in vis à vis, which is, literally, face to face. Steevens.

[1] Adieu, goodman drivel.] This laſt line has neither rhyme nor meaning. I cannot but ſuſpect that the fool tranſlates Malvolio's name, and ſays:

Adieu, goodman mean-evil. Johnson.

We have here another old catch; apparently, I think, not of Shakſpeare. I am therefore willing to receive the common reading of the laſt line:

Adieu, goodman drivel.

The name of Malvolio ſeems to have been formed by an accidental tranſpoſition in the word, Malivolo.

I know not whether a part of the preceding line ſhould not be thrown into a queſtion, "pare thy nails, dad?"

In Henry V. we again meet with "this roaring devil i'th' old play; every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger."

Farmer.

In the old tranſlation of the Menæchmi, 1595, Menæchmus ſays to Peniculus: "Away, filthie mad drivell, away! I will

SCENE III.

Olivia's Garden.

Enter SEBASTIAN.

SEB. This is the air; that is the glorious ſun;
This pearl ſhe gave me, I do feel't, and ſee't:
And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,
Yet 'tis not madneſs. Where's Antonio then?
I could not find him at the Elephant:

talk no longer with thee." As I cannot ſuppoſe the author of this ballad deſigned that devil ſhould be the correſponding rhyme to devil, I read with Dr. Farmer, drivel. STEEVENS.

I believe, with Johnſon, that this is an alluſion to Malvolio's name, but not in his reading, which deſtroys the metre. We ſhould read—that is, good Malvolio, literally tranſlated. M. MASON.

Adieu, good mean-evil:

The laſt two lines of this ſong have, I think, been miſunderſtood. They are not addreſſed in the firſt inſtance to Malvolio, but are quoted by the Clown, as the words, ah, ha! are, as the uſual addreſs in the old Moralities to the Devil. I do not therefore ſuſpect any corruption in the words "goodman Devil." We have in The Merry Wives of Windſor: "No man means evil but the devil;" and in Much Ado about Nothing, "God's a good man."

The compound, good-man, is again uſed adjectively, and as a word of contempt, in King Lear: "Part (ſays Edmund to Kent and the Steward). "With you, (replies Kent,) good-man boy, if you pleaſe."

The reaſon why the Vice exhorts the Devil to pare his nails, is, becauſe the Devil was ſuppoſed from choice to keep his nails always unpared, and therefore to pare them was an affront. So, in Camden's Remaines, 1615:

"I will follow mine own minde and mine old trade;
"Who ſhall let me? the divel's nailes are unparde."

MALONE.

Yet there he was; and there I found this credit,
That he did range the town to ſeek me out.[2]

[2] Yet there he was; and there I found this credit,
That he did range &c.] i. e. I found it juſtified, credibly vouched. Whether the word credit will eaſily carry this meaning, I am doubtful. The expreſſion ſeems obſcure; and though I have not diſturbed the text, I very much ſuſpect that the poet wrote:

—— and there I found this credent.

He uſes the ſame term again in the very ſame ſenſe in The Winter's Tale:

" Then 'tis very credent,
" Thou may'ſt cojoin with ſomething, and thou doſt," &c.
THEOBALD.

Credit, for account, information. The Oxford editor roundly alters it to current; as he does almoſt every word that Shakſpeare uſes in an anomalous ſignification. WARBURTON.

Theobald propoſes to read credent, but credent does not ſignify juſtified or vouched; it means probable only, as appears from the paſſage he himſelf has quoted. Warburton ſays, that credit means account or information; but as I know no inſtance of the word's being uſed in that acceptation, I believe we ſhould read, credited inſtead of credit. M. MASON.

Credent is creditable, not queſtionable. So, in Meaſure for Meaſure, Angelo ſays:

" For my authority bears a credent bulk." STEEVENS.

Perhaps credit is here uſed for credited. So, in the firſt ſcene of this play, heat for heated; and in Hamlet, hoiſt for hoiſted.
MALONE.

After all, I believe the word—credit, to have been rightly underſtood by Dr. Warburton, though he has given no example in ſupport of his interpretation.

Dr. Robertſon, ſpeaking of ſome memorandums included in the Letters to Mary Queen of Scots, obſerves, that they were not " the credit of the bearer;" i. e. points concerning which the Queen had given him verbal inſtructions, or information.

Credit therefore might have been the prevalent term for oral intelligence.

Again, in Mr. Whitaker's Vindication of the ſame Queen, Vol. II. p. 145: " —theſe are expreſsly underſtood from the makers of the letters themſelves, when they produced them at York to be ' the credit gifin to the berar.' This mode of referring to the credit of a bearer was no uncommon one in thoſe times."

His counſel now might do me golden ſervice:
For though my ſoul diſputes well with my ſenſe,
That this may be ſome error, but no madneſs,
Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune
So far exceed all inſtance, all diſcourſe,[3]
That I am ready to diſtruſt mine eyes,
And wrangle with my reaſon, that perſuades me
To any other truſt,[4] but that I am mad,
Or elſe the lady's mad; yet, if 'twere ſo,
She could not ſway her houſe, command her followers,
Take, and give back, affairs, and their deſpatch,
With ſuch a ſmooth, diſcreet, and ſtable bearing,
As, I perceive, ſhe does: there's ſomething in't,
That is deceivable.[5] But here comes the lady.[6]

Enter OLIVIA and a Prieſt.

OLI. Blame not this haſte of mine: If you mean well,
Now go with me, and with this holy man,

In this ſenſe alſo it occurs in the fragment of a Letter from the Earl of Shrewſbury to Queen Elizabeth. See Lodge's Illuſtrations, &c. Vol. II. p. 129: "—and becauſe Mr. Beale hys credyt ys wth yor Mate to make accompt of hyr anſure, and delyngs the Frēche have had here, I leave all to hys reporte."

See alſo Letter XXXIII in the Paſton Collection, Vol. II. p. 41, in which credence appears to have the ſame meaning. Again, ibid. p. 331. STEEVENS.

Into the chantry by:[7] there, before him,
And underneath that conſecrated roof,
Plight me the full aſſurance of your faith;
That my moſt jealous and too doubtful ſoul
May live at peace: He ſhall conceal it,
Whiles[8] you are willing it ſhall come to note;
What time we will our celebration keep
According to my birth.—What do you ſay?

SEB. I'll follow this good man, and go with you;
And, having ſworn truth,[9] ever will be true.

OLI. Then lead the way, good father;——And heavens ſo ſhine,[1]
That they may fairly note this act of mine!

[Exeunt.

ACT V. SCENE I.

The Street before Olivia's Houſe.

Enter Clown and FABIAN.

FAB. Now, as thou loveſt me, let me ſee his letter.

CLO. Good maſter Fabian, grant me another requeſt.

FAB. Any thing.

CLO. Do not deſire to ſee this letter.

FAB. That is, to give a dog, and, in recompenſe, deſire my dog again.

Enter DUKE, VIOLA, and Attendants.

DUKE. Belong you to the lady Olivia, friends?

CLO. Ay, ſir; we are ſome of her trappings.

DUKE. I know thee well; How doſt thou, my good fellow?

CLO. Truly, ſir, the better for my foes, and the worſe for my friends.

DUKE. Juſt the contrary; the better for thy friends.

CLO. No, ſir, the worſe.

DUKE. How can that be?

CLO. Marry, ſir, they praiſe me, and make an aſs of me; now my foes tell me plainly I am an aſs: ſo that by my foes, ſir, I profit in the knowledge of myſelf; and by my friends I am abuſed: ſo that, conclufions to be as kiffes, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives,[2] why, then the worfe for my friends, and the better for my foes.

Duke. Why, this is excellent.

Clo. By my troth, fir, no; though it pleafe you to be one of my friends.

Duke. Thou fhalt not be the worfe for me; there's gold.

Clo. But that it would be double-dealing, fir, I would you could make it another.

Duke. O, you give me ill counfel.

Clo. Put your grace in your pocket, fir, for this once, and let your flefh and blood obey it.

Duke. Well, I will be fo much a finner to be a double dealer; there's another.

Clo. Primo, fecundo, tertio, is a good play; and the old faying is, the third pays for all: the triplex, fir, is a good tripping meafure; or the bells of St. Bennet, fir, may put you in mind;[3] One, two, three.

[2] ——conclufions to be as kiffes, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives,] One cannot but wonder, that this paffage fhould have perplexed the commentators. In Marlowe's Luft's Dominion, the Queen fays to the Moor:

"Come, let's kiffe."

Moor. "Away, away."

Queen. "No, no, fayes, I; and twice away, fayes ftay."

Sir Philip Sidney has enlarged upon this thought in the fixty-third ftanza of his Aftrophel and Stella. Farmer.

[3] ——or the bells of St. Bennet, fir, may put you in mind;] That is, if the other arguments I have ufed are not fufficient, the bells of St. Bennet, &c. Malone.

We fhould read—"as the bells of St. Bennet," &c. inftead of or. M. Mason.

When in this play Shakfpeare mentioned the bed of Ware, he Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your lady know, I am here to ſpeak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clo. Marry, ſir, lullaby to your bounty, till I come again. I go, ſir; but I would not have you to think, that my deſire of having is the ſin of covetouſneſs: but, as you ſay, ſir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon. [Exit Clown.

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Vio. Here comes the man, ſir, that did reſcue me.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well;
Yet, when I ſaw it laſt, it was beſmear'd
As black as Vulcan, in the ſmoke of war:
A bawbling veſſel was he captain of,
For ſhallow draught, and bulk, unprizable; recollected that the ſcene was in Illyria, and added, in England; but his ſenſe of the ſame impropriety could not reſtrain him from the bells of St. Bennet. Johnson.

Shakſpeare's improprieties and anachroniſms are ſurely venial in compariſon with thoſe of contemporary writers. Lodge, in his True Tragedies of Marius and Sylla, 1594, has mentioned the razors of Palermo and St. Paul's ſteeple, and has introduced a Frenchman, named Don Pedro, who, in conſideration of receiving forty crowns, undertakes to poiſon Marius. Stanyhurſt, the tranſlator of four books of Virgil, in 1582, compares Chorœbus to a bedlamite, ſays, that old Priam girded on his ſword Morglay; and makes Dido tell Æneas, that ſhe ſhould have been contented had ſhe been brought to bed even of a cockney:

"Saltem ſi qua mihi de te ſuſcepta fuiſſet
"Ante fugam ſoboles—."
"—— yf yeet ſoom progenye from me
"Had crawl'd, by thee father'd, yf a cockney dandiprat hopthumb." Steevens.

With which such scathful[4] grapple did he make
With the most noble bottom of our fleet,
That very envy, and the tongue of loss,
Cry'd fame and honour on him.—What's the matter?

1 Off. Orsino, this is that Antonio,
That took the Phœnix, and her fraught, from Candy;
And this is he, that did the Tiger board,
When your young nephew Titus lost his leg:
Here in the streets, desperate of shame, and state,[5]
In private brabble did we apprehend him.

Vio. He did me kindness, sir; drew on my side;
But, in conclusion, put strange speech upon me,
I know not what 'twas, but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate! thou salt-water thief!
What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies,
Whom thou, in terms so bloody, and so dear,[6]
Hast made thine enemies?

Ant. Orsino, noble sir,
Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me;
Antonio never yet was thief, or pirate,
Though, I confess, on base and ground enough,
Orsino's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither:

[4] ——scathful—] i. e. mischievous, destructive. So, in Decker's If this be not a good Play, the Devil is in it, 1612:
"He mickle scath hath done me."
Again, in The Pinner of Wakefield, 1599:
"That offereth scath unto the town of Wakefield."
STEEVENS.

[5] ——desperate of shame, and state,] Unattentive to his character or his condition, like a desperate man. JOHNSON.

[6] ——and so dear,] Dear is immediate, consequential. So, in Hamlet:
"Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven," &c.
STEEVENS.

That moſt ingrateful boy there, by your ſide,
From the rude ſea's enrag'd and foamy mouth
Did I redeem ; a wreck paſt hope he was :
His life I gave him, and did thereto add
My love, without retention, or reſtraint,
All his in dedication : for his ſake,
Did I expoſe myſelf, pure for his love,
Into the danger of this adverſe town ;
Drew to defend him, when he was beſet :
Where being apprehended, his falſe cunning,
(Not meaning to partake with me in danger,)
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,
And grew a twenty-years-removed thing,
While one would wink ; denied me mine own purſe,
Which I had recommended to his uſe
Not half an hour before.

Vio. How can this be ?

Duke. When came he to this town ?

Ant. To-day, my lord ; and for three months before,
(No interim, not a minute's vacancy,)
Both day and night did we keep company.

Enter Olivia and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the counteſs ; now heaven walks on earth.——
But for thee, fellow, fellow, thy words are madneſs :
Three months this youth hath tended upon me ;
But more of that anon.——Take him aſide.

Oli. What would my lord, but that he may not have,
Wherein Olivia may ſeem ſerviceable ?—
Ceſario, you do not keep promiſe with me.

Vio. Madam ?

Duke. Gracious Olivia,——

Oli. What do you ſay, Ceſario?——Good my lord,——

Vio. My lord would ſpeak, my duty huſhes me.

Oli. If it be aught to the old tune, my lord,
It is as fat and fulſome [7] to mine ear,
As howling after muſick.

Duke. Still ſo cruel?

Oli. Still ſo conſtant, lord.

Duke. What! to perverſeneſs? you uncivil lady,
To whoſe ingrate and unauſpicious altars
My ſoul the faithfull'ſt offerings hath breath'd out,
That e'er devotion tender'd! What ſhall I do?

Oli. Even what it pleaſe my lord, that ſhall become him.

Duke. Why ſhould I not, had I the heart to do it,
Like to the Egyptian thief, at point of death,
Kill what I love; [8] a ſavage jealouſy,

[7] ——as fat and fulſome—] Fat means dull; ſo we ſay a fat-headed fellow; fat likewiſe means groſs, and is ſometimes uſed for obſcene. Johnson.

[8] Why ſhould I not, had I the heart to do it,
Like to the Egyptian thief, at point of death,
Kill what I love;] In this ſimile, a particular ſtory is preſuppoſed, which ought to be known to ſhow the juſtneſs and propriety of the compariſon. It is taken from Heliodorus's Æthiopics, to which our author was indebted for the alluſion. This Egyptian thief was Thyamis, who was a native of Memphis, and at the head of a band of robbers. Theagenes and Chariclea falling into their hands, Thyamis fell deſperately in love with the lady, and would have married her. Soon after, a ſtronger body of robbers coming down upon Thyamis's party, he was in ſuch fears for his miſtreſs, that he had her ſhut into a cave with his treaſure. It was cuſtomary with thoſe barbarians, when they deſpaired of their own ſafety, firſt to make away

That ſometime ſavours nobly?—But hear me this:
Since you to non-regardance caſt my faith,
And that I partly know the inſtrument
That ſcrews me from my true place[9] in your favour,
Live you, the marble-breaſted tyrant, ſtill;
But this your minion, whom, I know, you love,
And whom, by heaven I ſwear, I tender dearly,
Him will I tear out of that cruel eye,
Where he ſits crowned in his maſter's ſpite.—
Come boy, with me; my thoughts are ripe in miſchief:
I'll ſacrifice the lamb that I do love,
To ſpite a raven's heart within a dove. [Going.

Vio. And I, moſt jocund, apt, and willingly,
To do you reſt, a thouſand deaths would die.
[Following.

Oli. Where goes Ceſario?

Vio. After him I love,
More than I love theſe eyes, more than my life,
More, by all mores, than e'er I ſhall love wife:
If I do feign, you witneſſes above,
Puniſh my life, for tainting of my love!

Oli. Ah me, deteſted! how am I beguil'd!

Vio. Who does beguile you? who does do you wrong?

with thoſe whom they held dear, and deſired for companions in the next life. Thyamis, therefore, benetted round with his enemies, raging with love, jealouſy, and anger, went to his cave; and calling aloud in the Egyptian tongue, ſo ſoon as he heard himſelf anſwered towards the cave's mouth by a Grecian, making to the perſon by the direction of her voice, he caught her by the hair with his left hand, and (ſuppoſing her to be Chariclea) with his right hand plunged his ſword into her breaſt.
THEOBALD.

[9] That ſcrews me from my true place—] So, in Macbeth:
"But ſcrew your courage to the ſticking-place."
STEEVENS.

Oli. Haſt thou forgot thyſelf? Is it ſo long?—
Call forth the holy father. [Exit an Attendant.

Duke. Come away. [To Viola.

Oli. Whither my lord?—Ceſario, huſband, ſtay.

Duke. Huſband?

Oli. Ay, huſband; Can he that deny?

Duke. Her huſband, ſirrah?

Vio. No, my lord, not I.

Oli. Alas, it is the baſeneſs of thy fear,
That makes thee ſtrangle thy propriety:[1]
Fear not, Ceſario, take thy fortunes up;
Be that thou know'ſt thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fear'ſt.—O, welcome, father!

Re-enter Attendant and Prieſt.

Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence,
Here to unfold (though lately we intended
To keep in darkneſs, what occaſion now
Reveals before 'tis ripe,) what thou doſt know,
Hath newly paſt between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract of eternal bond of love,[2]
Confirm'd by mutual joinder of your hands,
Atteſted by the holy cloſe of lips,

[1] ——ſtrangle thy propriety:] Suppreſs, or diſown thy property. Malone.

So, in Macbeth:
"And yet dark night ſtrangles the travelling lamp."
Steevens.

[2] A contract of eternal bond of love,] So, in A Midſummer Night's Dream:
"The ſealing day between my love and me,
"For everlaſting bond of fellowſhip." Malone.

Strengthen'd by interchangement of your rings;[3]
And all the ceremony of this compáct
Seal'd in my function, by my teſtimony:
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave,
I have travelled but two hours.

Duke. O, thou diſſembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath ſow'd a grizzle on thy caſe?[4]
Or will not elſe thy craft ſo quickly grow,
That thine own trip ſhall be thine overthrow?
Farewell, and take her; but direct thy feet,
Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.

Vio. My lord, I do proteſt,—

Oli. O, do not ſwear;
Hold little faith, though thou haſt too much fear.

[3] —— interchangement of your rings;] In our ancient marriage ceremony, the man received as well as gave a ring. This cuſtom is exemplified by the following circumſtance in Thomas Lupton's Firſt Booke of Notable Things, 4°. bl. l: "If a marryed man bee let or hyndered through inchauntment, ſorcery, or witchcraft, from the acte of generation, let him make water through his maryage ring, and he ſhall be looſed from the ſame, and their doinges ſhall have no further power in him." Steevens.

[4] —— caſe?] Caſe is a word uſed contemptuouſly for ſkin. We yet talk of a fox-caſe, meaning the ſtuffed ſkin of a fox. Johnson.

So, in Cary's Preſent State of England, 1626: "Queen Elizabeth aſked a knight named Young, how he liked a company of brave ladies? He anſwered, as I like my ſilver-haired conies at home: the caſes are far better than the bodies." Malone.

The ſame ſtory perhaps was not unknown to Burton, who, in his Anatomy of Melancholy, edit. 1632, p. 480, has the following paſſage: "For generally, as with rich furred conies, their caſes are farre better than their bodies," &c. Steevens.

Enter Sir ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK, with his head broke.

SIR AND. For the love of God, a ſurgeon; ſend one preſently to Sir Toby.

OLI. What's the matter?

SIR AND. He has broke my head acroſs, and has given ſir Toby a bloody coxcomb too: for the love of God, your help: I had rather than forty pound, I were at home.

OLI. Who has done this, ſir Andrew?

SIR AND. The count's gentleman, one Ceſario: we took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incardinate.

DUKE. My gentleman, Ceſario?

SIR AND. Od's lifelings, here he is:—You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was ſet on to do't by ſir Toby.

VIO. Why do you ſpeak to me? I never hurt you:
You drew your ſword upon me, without cauſe;
But I beſpake you fair, and hurt you not.

SIR AND. If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me; I think, you ſet nothing by a bloody coxcomb.

Enter Sir TOBY BELCH, drunk, led by the Clown.

Here comes ſir Toby halting, you ſhall hear more: but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

DUKE. How now, gentleman? how is't with you?

SIR TO. That's all one; he has hurt me, and there's the end on't.—Sot, did'ſt ſee Dick ſurgeon, ſot?

Clo. O he's drunk, ſir Toby, an hour agone; his eyes were ſet at eight i'the morning.

Sir To. Then he's a rogue. After a paſſy-meaſure, or a pavin,[5] I hate a drunken rogue.

[5] Then he's a rogue. After a paſſy-meaſure, or a pavin, &c.] The old copy reads—"and a paſſy meaſures panyn." As the u in this word is reverſed, the modern editors have been contented to read—"paſt-meaſure painim."

A paſſy-meaſure pavin may, however, mean a pavin danced out of time. Sir Toby might call the ſurgeon by this title, becauſe he was drunk at a time when he ſhould have been ſober, and in a condition to attend on the wounded knight.

This dance, called the pavyn, is mentioned by Beaumont and Fletcher, in The Mad Lover:

"I'll pipe him ſuch a pavan."

And, in Stephen Goſſon's School of Abuſe, containing a pleaſant invective againſt poets, pipers, &c. 1579, it is enumerated as follows, among other dances:

"Dumps, pavins, galliards, meaſures, fancyes, or newe ſtreynes."

I do not, at laſt, ſee how the ſenſe will completely quadrate on the preſent occaſion. Sir W. D'Avenant, in one of his interludes, mentions "a doleful pavin." In The Cardinal, by Shirley, 1652: "Who then ſhall dance the pavin with Oſorio?" Again, in 'Tis Pity ſhe's a Whore, by Ford, 1633: "I have ſeen an aſs and a mule trot the Spaniſh pavin with a better grace." Laſtly, in Shadwell's Virtuoſo, 1676: "A grave pavin or almain, at which the black Tarantula only moved; it danced to it with a kind of grave motion much like the benchers at the revels." Steevens.

Bailey's Dictionary ſays, pavan is the loweſt ſort of inſtrumental muſic; and when this play was written, the pavin and the paſſamezzo might be in vogue only with the vulgar, as with Falſtaff and Doll Tearſheet: and hence Sir Toby may mean—he is a rogue, and a mean low fellow. Tollet.

Ben Jonſon alſo mentions the pavin, and calls it a Spaniſh dance, Alchemiſt, p. 97, [Whalley's edition]; but it ſeems to come originally from Padua, and ſhould rather be written pavane, as a corruption of paduana. A dance of that name

Oli. Away with him: Who hath made this havock with them?

(saltatio paduana) occurs in an old writer, quoted by the annotator on Rabelais, B. V. c. 30.

Paſſy meaſures is undoubtedly a corruption, but I know not how it ſhould be rectified. Tyrwhitt.

The pavan, from pavo a peacock, is a grave and majeſtick dance. The method of dancing it was anciently by gentlemen dreſſed with a cap and ſword, by thoſe of the long robe in their gowns, by princes in their mantles, and by ladies in gowns with long trains, the motion whereof in the dance reſembled that of a peacock's tail. This dance is ſuppoſed to have been invented by the Spaniards, and its figure is given with the characters for the ſtep, in the Orcheſographia of Thoinet Arbeau. Every pavin has its galliard, a lighter kind of air, made out of the former. The courant, the jig, and the hornpipe, are ſufficiently known at this day.

Of the paſſamezzo little is to be ſaid, except that it was a favourite air in the days of Queen Elizabeth. Ligon, in his Hiſtory of Barbadoes, mentions a paſſamezzo galliard, which in the year 1647, a Padre in that iſland played to him on the lute; the very ſame, he ſays, with an air of that kind which in Shakſpeare's play of Henry IV. was originally played to Sir John Falſtaff and Doll Tearſheet, by Sneak, the muſician, there named. This little anecdote Ligon might have by tradition; but his concluſion, that becauſe it was played in a dramatic repreſentation of the hiſtory of Henry IV. it muſt be ſo ancient as his time, is very idle and injudicious. Paſſy-meaſure is therefore undoubtedly a corruption from paſſamezzo. Sir J. Hawkins.

With the help of Sir John Hawkins's explanation of paſſy-meaſure, I think I now ſee the meaning of this paſſage. The ſecond folio reads—after a paſſy meaſures pavin. So that I ſhould imagine the following regulation of the whole ſpeech would not be far from the truth:

Then he's a rogue. After a paſſy-meaſure or a pavin, I hate a drunken rogue, i. e. next to a paſſy meaſure or a pavin, &c. It is in character, that Sir Toby ſhould expreſs a ſtrong diſlike of ſerious dances, ſuch as the paſſamezzo and the pavan are deſcribed to be. Tyrwhitt.

From what has been ſtated, I think, it is manifeſt that Sir Toby means only by this quaint expreſſion, that the ſurgeon is a rogue, and a grave ſolemn coxcomb. It is one of Shakſpeare's

Sir And. I'll help you, ſir Toby, becauſe we'll be dreſſed together.

Sir To. Will you help an aſs-head, and a coxcomb, and a knave? a thin-faced knave, a gull?[6]

Oli. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

[Exeunt Clown, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. I am ſorry, madam, I have hurt your kinſman;
But, had it been the brother of my blood, unrivalled excellencies, that his characters are always conſiſtent. Even in drunkenneſs they preſerve the traits which diſtinguiſhed them when ſober. Sir Toby, in the firſt Act of this play, ſhewed himſelf well acquainted with the various kinds of the dance.

The editor of the ſecond folio, who, when he does not underſtand any paſſage, generally cuts the knot, inſtead of untying it, arbitrarily reads—"after a paſſy-meaſures pavyn I hate a drunken rogue." In the ſame manner, in the preceding ſpeech, not thinking "an hour agone" good Engliſh, he reads—"O he's drunk, Sir Toby, above an hour agone." There is ſcarcely a page of that copy in which ſimilar interpolations may not be found. Malone.

I have followed Mr. Tyrwhitt's regulation, which appears to be well founded on one of the many judicious corrections that ſtamp a value on the ſecond folio. Steevens.

[6] —— an aſs-head, and a coxcomb, &c.] I believe, Sir Toby means to apply all theſe epithets either to the ſurgeon or Sebaſtian; and have pointed the paſſage accordingly. It has been hitherto printed, "Will you help an aſs-head," &c. but why ſhould Sir Toby thus unmercifully abuſe himſelf?
Malone.

As I cannot help thinking that Sir Toby, out of humour with himſelf, means to diſcharge theſe reproaches on the officious Sir Andrew, who alſo needs the ſurgeon's help, I have left the paſſage as I found it. Mr. Malone points it thus: "Will you help? An aſs-head," &c! Steevens.

I muſt have done no leſs, with wit, and ſafety.
You throw a ſtrange regard upon me, and
By that I do perceive it hath offended you;
Pardon me, ſweet one, even for the vows
We made each other but ſo late ago.

Duke. One face, one voice, one habit, and two perſons;
A natural perſpective,[7] that is, and is not.

Seb. Antonio, O my dear Antonio!
How have the hours rack'd and tortur'd me,
Since I have loſt thee.

Ant. Sebaſtian are you?

[7] A natural perſpective,] A perſpective ſeems to be taken for ſhows exhibited through a glaſs with ſuch lights as make the pictures appear really protuberant. The Duke therefore ſays, that nature has here exhibited ſuch a ſhow, where ſhadows ſeem realities; where that which is not appears like that which is.
JOHNSON.

I apprehend this may be explained by a quotation from a duodecimo book called Humane Induſtry, 1661, p. 76 and 77: "It it a pretty art that in a pleated paper and table furrowed or indented, men make one picture to repreſent ſeveral faces—that being viewed from one place or ſtanding, did ſhew the head of a Spaniard, and from another, the head of an aſs."—"A picture of a chancellor of France preſented to the common beholder a multitude of little faces; but if one did look on it through a perſpective, there appeared only the ſingle pourtraicture of the chancellor himſelf." Thus that, which is, is not, or in a different poſition appears like another thing. This ſeems alſo to explain a paſſage in King Henry V. Act V. ſc. ii: "Yes, my lord, you ſee them perſpectively, the cities turned into a maid." TOLLET.

I believe Shakſpeare meant nothing more by this natural perſpective, than a reflection from a glaſs or mirror. M. MASON.

Perſpective certainly means a glaſs uſed for optical deluſion, or a glaſs generally. In Franck's Northern Memoirs, p. 16, Theophilus, one of the diſcourſers, ſays—"he that reads his own heart without a perſpective, reads all the world." The book was written in 1658. DOUCE.

Seb. Fear'ſt thou that, Antonio?

Ant. How have you made diviſion of yourſelf?—
An apple, cleft in two, is not more twin
Than theſe two creatures. Which is Sebaſtian?

Oli. Moſt wonderful!

Seb. Do I ſtand there? I never had a brother:
Nor can there be that deity in my nature,
Of here and every where. I had a ſiſter,
Whom the blind waves and ſurges have devour'd:—
Of charity,[8] what kin are you to me? [To Viola.
What countryman? what name? what parentage?

Vio. Of Meſſaline: Sebaſtian was my father;
Such a Sebaſtian was my brother too,
So went he ſuited to his watery tomb:
If ſpirits can aſſume both form and ſuit
You come to fright us.

Seb. A ſpirit I am, indeed;
But am in that dimenſion groſsly clad,
Which from the womb I did participate.
Were you a woman, as the reſt goes even,
I ſhould my tears let fall upon your cheek,
And ſay—Thrice welcome, drowned Viola!

Vio. My father had a mole upon his brow.

Seb. And ſo had mine.

Vio. And died that day when Viola from her birth
Had number'd thirteen years.

Seb. O, that record is lively in my ſoul!
He finiſhed, indeed, his mortal act,
That day that made my ſiſter thirteen years.

[8] Of charity,] i. e. out of charity, tell me, &c. So, in The Taming of the Shrew:

"Now, let him ſpeak; 'tis charity, to ſhow," &c.

Steevens.

Vio. If nothing lets to make us happy both,
But this my maſculine uſurp'd attire,
Do not embrace me, till each circumſtance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere, and jump,
That I am Viola: which to confirm,
I'll bring you to a captain in this town,
Where lie my maiden weeds; by whoſe gentle help
I was preſerv'd, to ſerve this noble count:
All the occurrence[9] of my fortune ſince
Hath been between this lady, and this lord.

Seb. So comes it, lady, you have been miſtook:
[To Olivia.
But nature to her bias drew in that.
You would have been contracted to a maid;
Nor are you therein, by my life, deceiv'd,
You are betroth'd both to a maid and man.

Duke. Be not amaz'd; right noble is his blood.—
If this be ſo, as yet the glaſs ſeems true,
I ſhall have ſhare in this moſt happy wreck:
Boy, thou haſt ſaid to me a thouſand times,
[To Viola.
Thou never ſhould'ſt love woman like to me.

Vio. And all thoſe ſayings will I over-ſwear;
And all thoſe ſwearings keep as true in ſoul,
As doth that orbed continent the fire
That ſevers day from night.

Duke. Give me thy hand;
And let me ſee thee in thy woman's weeds.

Vio. The captain, that did bring me firſt on ſhore,
Hath my maid's garments: he, upon ſome action,
Is now in durance; at Malvolio's ſuit,
A gentleman, and follower of my lady's.

[9] —— occurrence—] I believe our author wrote—occurrents.
Malone.

Oli. He ſhall enlarge him:—Fetch Malvolio hither:—
And yet, alas, now I remember me,
They ſay, poor gentleman, he's much diſtract.

Re-enter Clown, with a letter.

A moſt extracting frenzy [1] of mine own
From my remembrance clearly baniſh'd his.—
How does he, ſirrah?

Clo. Truly, madam, he holds Belzebub at the ſtave's end, as well as a man in his caſe may do: he has here writ a letter to you, I ſhould have given it you to-day morning; but as a madman's epiſtles are no goſpels, ſo it ſkills not much, when they are delivered.

Oli. Open it, and read it.

Clo. Look then to be well edified, when the fool delivers the madman:—By the Lord, madam,—

Oli. How now! art thou mad?

Clo. No, madam, I do but read madneſs: an your ladyſhip will have it as it ought to be, you muſt allow vox.[2]

[1] A moſt extracting frenzy—] i. e. a frenzy that drew me away from every thing but its own object. Warburton.

So, William de Wyrceſter, ſpeaking of King Henry VI. ſays: "—ſubito cecidit in gravem infirmitatem capitis, ita quod extractus à mente videbatur." Steevens.

I formerly ſuppoſed that Shakſpeare wrote—diſtracting; but have ſince met with a paſſage in The Hiſtorie of Hamblet, bl. l. 1608, ſig. C 2, that ſeems to ſupport the reading of the old copy: "—to try if men of great account be extract out of their wits." Malone.

[2] ——you muſt allow vox.] I am by no means certain that I underſtand this paſſage, which, indeed, the author of The

Oli. Pr'ythee, read i'thy right wits.

Clo. So I do, madonna; but to read his right wits,[3] is to read thus: therefore perpend, my princeſs, and give ear.

Oli. Read it you, ſirrah. [To Fabian.

Fab. [reads.] By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world ſhall know it: though you have put me into darkneſs, and given your drunken couſin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my ſenſes as well as your ladyſhip. I have your own letter that induced me to the ſemblance I put on; with the which I doubt not but to do myſelf much right, or you much ſhame. Think of me as you pleaſe. I leave my duty a little unthought of, and ſpeak out of my injury. The madly-uſed Malvolio.

Oli. Did he write this?

Clo. Ay, madam.

Duke. This ſavours not much of diſtraction.

Reviſal pronounces to have no meaning. I ſuppoſe the Clown begins reading the letter in ſome fantaſtical manner, on which Olivia aſks him, if he is mad. No, madam, ſays he, I do but barely deliver the ſenſe of this madman's epiſtle; if you would have it read as it ought to be, that is, with ſuch a frantic accent and geſture as a madman would read it, you muſt allow vox, i. e. you muſt furniſh the reader with a voice, or, in other words, read it yourſelf. But Mr. Malone's explanation, I think, is preferable to mine. Steevens.

The Clown, we may preſume, had begun to read the letter in a very loud tone, and probably with extravagant geſticulation. Being reprimanded by his miſtreſs, he juſtifies himſelf by ſaying, If you would have it read in character, as ſuch a mad epiſtle ought to be read, you muſt permit me to aſſume a frantick tone. Malone.

[3] —— but to read his right wits,] To repreſent his preſent ſtate of mind, is to read a madman's letter, as I now do, like a madman. Johnson.

Oli. See him deliver'd, Fabian; bring him hither.
[Exit Fabian.
My lord, ſo pleaſe you, theſe things further thought on,
To think me as well a ſiſter as a wife,
One day ſhall crown the alliance on't, ſo pleaſe you,[4]
Here at my houſe, and at my proper coſt.

Duke. Madam, I am moſt apt to embrace your offer.—
Your maſter quits you; [To Viola.] and, for your ſervice done him,
So much againſt the mettle of your ſex,[5]
So far beneath your ſoft and tender breeding,
And ſince you call'd me maſter for ſo long,
Here is my hand; you ſhall from this time be
Your maſter's miſtreſs.

Oli. A ſiſter?—you are ſhe.

Re-enter Fabian, with Malvolio.

Duke. Is this the madman?

[4] One day ſhall crown the alliance on't, ſo pleaſe you,] The word on't, in this place, is mere nonſenſe. I doubt not the poet wrote:

" —— an't, ſo pleaſe you." Heath.

This is well conjectured; but on't may relate to the double character of ſiſter and wife. Johnson.

[5] So much againſt the mettle of your ſex,] So much againſt the weak frame and conſtitution of woman. Mettle is uſed by our author in many other places for ſpirit; and as ſpirit may be either high or low, mettle ſeems here to ſignify natural timidity, or deficiency of ſpirit. Shakſpeare has taken the ſame licence in All's well that ends well:

" 'Tis only title thou diſdain'ſt in her—."

i. e. the want of title. Again, in King Richard III:

" The forfeit, ſovereign, of my ſervant's life—."

that is, the remiſſion of the forfeit. Malone.

Oli. Ay, my lord, this ſame:
How now, Malvolio?

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.

Oli. Have I, Malvolio? no.

Mal. Lady, you have. Pray you, peruſe that letter:
You muſt not now deny it is your hand,
Write from it, if you can, in hand, or phraſe;
Or ſay, 'tis not your ſeal, nor your invention:
You can ſay none of this: Well, grant it then,
And tell me, in the modeſty of honour,
Why you have given me ſuch clear lights of favour;
Bade me come ſmiling, and croſs-garter'd to you,
To put on yellow ſtockings, and to frown
Upon ſir Toby, and the lighter[6] people:
And, acting this in an obedient hope,
Why have you ſuffer'd me to be impriſon'd,
Kept in a dark houſe, viſited by the prieſt,
And made the moſt notorious geck,[7] and gull,
That e'er invention play'd on? tell me why.

Oli. Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing,

[6] ——lighter—] People of leſs dignity or importance. JOHNSON.

[7] ——geck,] A fool. JOHNSON.

So, in the viſion at the concluſion of Cymbeline:
" And to become the geck and ſcorn
" Of th' other's villainy."

Again, in Ane verie excellent and delectabill Treatiſe intitulit PHILOTUS, &c. 1603:
" Thocht he be auld, my joy, quhat reck,
" When he is gane give him ane geck,
" And take another be the neck."

Again:
" The carle that hecht ſa weill to treat you,
" I think ſall get ane geck." STEEVENS.

Though, I confeſs, much like the character:
But, out of queſtion, 'tis Maria's hand.
And now I do bethink me, it was ſhe
Firſt told me, thou waſt mad; then cam'ſt in ſmiling,[8]
And in ſuch forms which here were preſuppos'd[9]
Upon thee in the letter. Pr'ythee, be content:
This practice hath moſt ſhrewdly paſs'd upon thee;
But, when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Thou ſhalt be both the plaintiff and the judge
Of thine own cauſe.

Fab. Good madam, hear me ſpeak;
And let no quarrel, nor no brawl to come,
Taint the condition of this preſent hour,
Which I have wonder'd at. In hope it ſhall not,
Moſt freely I confeſs, myſelf, and Toby,
Set this device againſt Malvolio here,
Upon ſome ſtubborn and uncourteous parts
We had conceiv'd againſt him:[1] Maria writ
The letter, at ſir Toby's great importance;[2]

[8] —— then cam'ſt in ſmiling,] i. e. then, that thou cam'ſt in ſmiling. MALONE.

I believe the lady means only what ſhe has clearly expreſſed: "—then thou cameſt in ſmiling;" not that ſhe had been informed of this circumſtance by Maria. Maria's account, in ſhort, was juſtified by the ſubſequent appearance of Malvolio. STEEVENS.

[9] —— here were preſuppos'd—] Preſuppos'd, for impoſed. WARBURTON.

Preſuppos'd rather ſeems to mean previouſly pointed out for thy imitation; or ſuch as it was ſuppoſed thou would'ſt aſſume after thou hadſt read the letter. The ſuppoſition was previous to the act. STEEVENS.

[1] Upon ſome ſtubborn and uncourteous parts
We had conceiv'd againſt him:] Surely we ſhould rather read—conceiv'd in him. TYRWHITT.

[2] —— at ſir Toby's great importance;] Importance is importunacy, importunement. STEEVENS.

In recompenſe whereof, he hath married her.
How with a ſportful malice it was follow'd,
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge;
If that the injuries be juſtly weigh'd,
That have on both ſides paſt.

Oli. Alas, poor fool![3] how have they baffled thee![4]

Clo. Why, ſome are born great, ſome achieve greatneſs, and ſome have greatneſs thrown upon them. I was one, ſir, in this interlude; one ſir Topas, ſir; but that's all one:—By the Lord, fool, I am not mad;—But do you remember? Madam,[5] why laugh you at ſuch a barren raſcal? an you ſmile not, he's gagg'd: And thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.

Mal. I'll be revenged on the whole pack of you. [Exit.

Oli. He hath been moſt notoriouſly abus'd.

Duke. Purſue him, and entreat him to a peace:[6]—
He hath not told us of the captain yet;

[3] Alas, poor fool!] See notes on King Lear, Act V. ſc. iii. Reed.

[4] —— how have they baffled thee?] See Mr. Tollet's note on a paſſage in the firſt ſcene of the firſt Act of King Richard II;
"I am diſgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled here." Steevens.

[5] But do you remember? Madam,] The old copy points this paſſage erroneouſly: "But do you remember, madam," &c. I have followed the regulation propoſed in the ſubſequent note. Steevens.

As the Clown is ſpeaking to Malvolio, and not to Olivia, I think this paſſage ſhould be regulated thus—but do you remember?—Madam, why laugh you &c. Tyrwhitt.

[6] —— and entreat him to a peace:] Thus in Fletcher's Two Noble Kinſmen:
"—— Go take her,
"And fluently perſuade her to a peace." Steevens.

When that is known and golden time convents,[7]
A ſolemn combination ſhall be made
Of our dear ſouls—Mean time, ſweet ſiſter,
We will not part from hence.—Ceſario, come;
For ſo you ſhall be, while you are a man;
But, when in other habits you are ſeen,
Orſino's miſtreſs, and his fancy's queen. [Exeunt.

SONG.

CLO. When that I was and a little tiny boy,[8]
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
A fooliſh thing was but a toy,
For the rain it raineth every day.

[7] ——convents,] Perhaps we ſhould read—conſents. To convent, however, is to aſſemble; and therefore, the count may mean, when the happy hour calls us again together. STEEVENS.

——convents] i. e. ſhall ſerve, agree, be convenient.
DOUCE.

[8] When that I was and a little tiny boy, &c.] Here again we have an old ſong, ſcarcely worth correction. 'Gainſt knaves and thieves muſt evidently be, againſt knave and thief. When I was a boy, my folly and miſchievous actions were little regarded; but when I came to manhood, men ſhut their gates againſt me, as a knave and a thief.

Sir Thomas Hanmer rightly reduces the ſubſequent words, beds and heads, to the ſingular number; and a little alteration is ſtill wanting at the beginning of ſome of the ſtanzas.

Mr. Steevens obſerves in a note at the end of Much Ado about Nothing, that the play had formerly paſſed under the name of Benedict and Beatrix. It ſeems to have been the court-faſhion to alter the titles. A very ingenious lady, with whom I have the honour to be acquainted, Mrs. Aſkew of Queen's-Square, has a fine copy of the ſecond folio edition of Shakſpeare, which formerly belonged to King Charles I. and was a preſent from him to Sir Thomas Herbert. Sir Thomas has altered five titles in the liſt of the plays, to "Benedick and Beatrice,—Pyramus and Thiſby,—Roſalinde,—Mr. Paroles,—and Malvolio."

It is lamentable to ſee how far party and prejudice will carry the wiſeſt men, even againſt their own practice and opinions.

But when I came to man's eſtate,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
'Gainſt knave and thief men ſhut their gate,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came, alas! to wive,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
By ſwaggering could I never thrive,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came unto my bed,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
With toſs-pots ſtill had drunken head,
For the rain it raineth every day.

A great while ago the world begun,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
But that's all one, our play is done,
And we'll ſtrive to pleaſe you every day.
[Exit.

Milton, in his Εικονοκλαστες, cenſures King Charles for reading "one whom (ſays he) we well knew was the cloſet companion of his ſolitudes, William Shakſpeare." FARMER.

I have followed the regulations propoſed by Sir T. Hanmer and Dr. Farmer; and conſequently, inſtead of knave*s*, thieve*s*, bed*s*, and head*s*, have printed "knave, thief," &c.

Dr. Farmer might have obſerved, that the alterations of the titles are in his Majeſty's own hand-writing, materially differing from Sir Thomas Herbert's, of which the ſame volume affords more than one ſpecimen. I learn from another manuſcript note in it, that John Lowine acted King Henry VIII. and John Taylor the part of Hamlet. The book is now in my poſſeſſion.

To the concluding remark of Dr. Farmer, may be added the following paſſage from An Appeal to all rational Men concerning King Charles's Trial, by John Cooke, 1649: "Had he but ſtudied ſcripture half ſo much as Ben Jonſon or Shakſpeare, he might have learnt that when Amaziah was ſettled in the kingdom, he ſuddenly did juſtice upon thoſe ſervants which killed his father Joash," &c. With this quotation I was furnished by Mr. Malone.

A quarto volume of plays attributed to Shakspeare, with the cypher of King Charles II. on the back of it, is preserved in Mr. Garrick's collection.

Though we are well convinced that Shakspeare has written slight ballads for the sake of discriminating characters more strongly, or for other necessary purposes, in the course of his mixed dramas, it is scarce credible, that after he had cleared his stage, he should exhibit his Clown afresh, and with so poor a recommendation as this song, which is utterly unconnected with the subject of the preceding comedy. I do not therefore hesitate to call the nonsensical ditty before us, some buffoon actor's composition, which was accidentally tacked to the Prompter's copy of Twelfth-Night, having been casually subjoined to it for the diversion, or at the call, of the lowest order of spectators. In the year 1766, I saw the late Mr. Weston summoned out and obliged to sing Johnny Pringle and his Pig, after the performance of Voltaire's Mahomet, at the Theatre Royal in Drury-Lane. STEEVENS.

The copy of the second folio of Shakspeare, which formerly belonged to King Charles, and mentioned in the preceding notes, is now in the library of his present Majesty, who has corrected a mistake of Dr. Farmer's, relative to Sir Thomas Herbert, inadvertently admitted by Mr. Steevens, but here omitted. REED.

This play is in the graver part elegant and easy, and in some of the lighter scenes exquisitely humorous. Ague-cheek is drawn with great propriety, but his character is, in a great measure, that of natural fatuity, and is therefore not the proper prey of a satirist. The soliloquy of Malvolio is truly comic; he is betrayed to ridicule merely by his pride. The marriage of Olivia, and the succeeding perplexity, though well enough contrived to divert on the stage, wants credibility, and fails to produce the proper instruction required in the drama, as it exhibits no just picture of life. JOHNSON.
