 To woods and caverns, when they spy
 Thy thrice-accursed sail !"

But now no sound of laughter
 Was heard among the foes ;
 A wild and wrathful clamor
 From all the vanguard rose.
 Six spears' length from the entrance,
 Halted that mighty mass,
 And for a space no man came forth
 To win the narrow pass.

But, hark ! the cry is Astur :
 And lo ! the ranks divide ;
 And the great lord of Luna
 Comes with his stately stride.
 Upon his ample shoulders
 Clangs loud the fourfold shield,
 And in his hand he shakes the brand
 Which none but he can wield.

He smiled on those bold Romans,
 A smile serene and high ;
 He eyed the flinching Tuscans,
 And scorn was in his eye.
 Quoth he, "The she-wolf's litter
 Stand savagely at bay ;
 But will ye dare to follow,
 If Astur clears the way ?"

Then, whirling up his broadsword
 With both hands to the height,
 He rushed against Horatius,
 And smote with all his might.
 With shield and blade Horatius
 Right deftly turned the blow.
 The blow, though turned, came yet too nigh ;
 It missed his helm, but gashed his thigh.
 The Tuscans raised a joyful cry
 To see the red blood flow.

He reeled, and on Herminius
 He leaned one breathing-space,
 Then, like a wild-cat mad with wounds,
 Sprang right at Astur's face.
 Through teeth and skull and helmet
 So fierce a thrust he sped,
 The good sword stood a handbreadth out
 Behind the Tuscan's head.

And the great lord of Luna
 Fell at that deadly stroke,
 As falls on Mount Avernus
 A thunder-smitten oak.
 Far o'er the crashing forest
 The giant arms lie spread ;
 And the pale augurs, muttering low,
 Gaze on the blasted head.

On Astur's throat Horatius
 Right firmly pressed his heel,
 And thrice and four times tugged amain,
 Ere he wrenched out the steel.
 And "See," he cried, "the welcome,
 Fair guests, that waits you here !
 What noble Lucumo comes next
 To taste our Roman cheer ?"

But at his haughty challenge
 A sullen murmur ran,
 Mingled with wrath and shame and dread,
 Along that glittering van.

There lacked not men of prowess,
Nor men of lordly race,
For all Etruria's noblest
Were round the fatal place.

But all Etruria's noblest
Felt their hearts sink to see
On the earth the bloody corpses,
In the path the dauntless three ;
And from the ghastly entrance,
Where those bold Romans stood,
All shrank, — like boys who, unaware,
Ranging the woods to start a hare,
Come to the mouth of the dark lair
Where, growling low, a fierce old bear
Lies amidst bones and blood.

Was none who would be foremost
To lead such dire attack ;
But those behind cried " Forward !"
And those before cried " Back !"
And backward now and forward
Wavers the deep array ;
And on the tossing sea of steel
To and fro the standards reel,
And the victorious trumpet-peal
Dies fitfully away.

Yet one man for one moment
Strode out before the crowd ;
Well known was he to all the three,
And they gave him greeting loud :
" Now welcome, welcome, Sextus !
Now welcome to thy home !
Why dost thou stay, and turn away ?
Here lies the road to Rome."

Thrice looked he at the city ;
Thrice looked he at the dead ;
And thrice came on in fury,
And thrice turned back in dread ;
And, white with fear and hatred,
Scowled at the narrow way
Where, wallowing in a pool of blood,
The bravest Tuscans lay.

But meanwhile axe and lever
Have manfully been plied ;
And now the bridge hangs tottering
Above the boiling tide.
" Come back, come back, Horatius !"
Loud cried the Fathers all, —
" Back, Lartius ! back, Herminius !
Back, ere the ruin fall !"

Back darted Spurius Lartius, —
Herminius darted back ;
And, as they passed, beneath their feet
They felt the timbers crack.

But when they turned their faces,
And on the farther shore
Saw brave Horatius stand alone,
They would have crossed once more ;

But with a crash like thunder
Fell every loosened beam,
And, like a dam, the mighty wreck
Lay right athwart the stream ;
And a long shout of triumph
Rose from the walls of Rome,
As to the highest turret-tops
Was splashed the yellow foam.

And like a horse unbroken,
When first he feels the rein,
The furious river struggled hard,
And tossed his tawny mane,
And burst the curb, and bounded,
Rejoicing to be free ;
And whirling down, in fierce career,
Battlement and plank and pier,
Rushed headlong to the sea.

Alone stood brave Horatius,
But constant still in mind, —
Thrice thirty thousand foes before,
And the broad flood behind.
" Down with him !" cried false Sextus,
With a smile on his pale face ;
" Now yield thee," cried Lars Porsena,
" Now yield thee to our grace !"

Round turned he, as not deigning
Those craven ranks to see ;
Naught spake he to Lars Porsena,
To Sextus naught spake he ;
But he saw on Palatinus
The white porch of his home ;
And he spake to the noble river
That rolls by the towers of Rome :

" O Tiber ! Father Tiber !
To whom the Romans pray,
A Roman's life, a Roman's arms,
Take thou in charge this day !"
So he spake, and, speaking, sheathed
The good sword by his side,
And, with his harness on his back,
Plunged headlong in the tide.

No sound of joy or sorrow
Was heard from either bank,
But friends and foes in dumb surprise,
With parted lips and straining eyes,
Stood gazing where he sank ;
And when above the surges

They saw his crest appear,
All Rome sent forth a rapturous cry,
And even the ranks of Tuscan
Could scarce forbear to cheer.

But fiercely ran the current,
Swollen high by months of rain ;
And fast his blood was flowing,
And he was sore in pain,
And heavy with his armor,
And spent with changing blows ;
And oft they thought him sinking,
But still again he rose.

Never, I ween, did swimmer,
In such an evil case,
Struggle through such a raging flood
Safe to the landing-place ;
But his limbs were borne up bravely
By the brave heart within,
And our good Father Tiber
Bare bravely up his chin.

“Curse on him !” quoth false Sextus, —
“Will not the villain drown ?
But for this stay, ere close of day
We should have sacked the town !”
“Heaven help him !” quoth Lars Porsena,
“And bring him safe to shore ;
For such a gallant feat of arms
Was never seen before.”

And now he feels the bottom ;
Now on dry earth he stands ;
Now round him throng the Fathers
To press his gory hands ;
And now, with shouts and clapping,
And noise of weeping loud,
He enters through the River-gate,
Borne by the joyous crowd.

They gave him of the corn-land,
That was of public right,
As much as two strong oxen
Could plough from morn till night ;
And they made a molten image,
And set it up on high, —
And there it stands unto this day
To witness if I lie.

It stands in the Comitium,
Plain for all folk to see, —
Horatius in his harness,
Halting upon one knee ;
And underneath is written,
In letters all of gold,
How valiantly he kept the bridge
In the brave days of old.

And still his name sounds stirring
Unto the men of Rome,
As the trumpet-blast that cries to them
To charge the Volscian home ;
And wives still pray to Juno
For boys with hearts as bold
As his who kept the bridge so well
In the brave days of old.

And in the nights of winter,
When the cold north-winds blow,
And the long howling of the wolves
Is heard amidst the snow ;
When round the lonely cottage
Roars loud the tempest's din,
And the good logs of Algidus
Roar louder yet within ;

When the oldest cask is opened,
And the largest lamp is lit ;
When the chestnuts glow in the embers,
And the kid turns on the spit ;
When young and old in circle
Around the firebrands close ;
When the girls are weaving baskets,
And the lads are shaping bows ;

When the goodman mends his armor,
And trims his helmet's plume ;
When the goodwife's shuttle merrily
Goes flashing through the loom ;
With weeping and with laughter
Still is the story told,
How well Horatius kept the bridge
In the brave days of old.

SEMPRONIUS'S SPEECH FOR WAR.

FROM "CATO," ACT II. SC. I.

MY voice is still for war.
Gods ! can a Roman senate long debate
Which of the two to choose, slavery or death ?
No ; let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And at the head of our remaining troops
Attack the foe, break through the thick array
Of his thronged legions, and charge home upon him.
Perhaps some arm, more lucky than the rest,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage.
Rise ! Fathers, rise ! 't is Rome demands your help :
Rise, and revenge her slaughtered citizens,
Or share their fate ! The corpse of half her senate

Manures the fields of Thessaly, while we Sit here deliberating, in cold debate,
 If we should sacrifice our lives to honor,
 Or wear them out in servitude and chains.
 Rouse up, for shame ! our brothers of Pharsalia Point at their wounds, and cry aloud, — “To battle !”

Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,

And Scipio's ghost walks unrevenged amongst us.

JOSEPH ADDISON.

CARACTACUS.

BEFORE proud Rome's imperial throne
 In mind's unconquered mood,
 As if the triumph were his own,
 The dauntless captive stood.
 None, to have seen his free-born air,
 Had fancied him a captive there.

Though, through the crowded streets of Rome,
 With slow and stately tread,
 Far from his own loved island home,
 That day in triumph led, —
 Unbound his head, unbent his knee,
 Undimmed his eye, his aspect free.

A free and fearless glance he cast
 On temple, arch, and tower,
 By which the long procession passed
 Of Rome's victorious power ;
 And somewhat of a scornful smile
 Upcurled his haughty lip the while.

And now he stood, with brow serene,
 Where slaves might prostrate fall,
 Bearing a Briton's manly mien
 In Cæsar's palace hall ;
 Claiming, with kindled brow and cheek,
 The liberty e'en there to speak.

Nor could Rome's haughty lord withstand
 The claim that look preferred,
 But motioned with uplifted hand
 The suppliant should be heard, —
 If he indeed a suppliant were Whose glance demanded audience there.

Deep stillness fell on all the crowd,
 From Claudius on his throne
 Down to the meanest slave that bowed
 At his imperial throne ;
 Silent his fellow-captive's grief
 As fearless spoke the Island Chief :

“Think not, thou eagle Lord of Rome,
 And master of the world,
 Though victory's banner o'er thy dome
 In triumph now is furled,
 I would address thee as thy slave,
 But as the bold should greet the brave !

“I might, perchance, could I have deigned
 To hold a vassal's throne,
 E'en now in Britain's isle have reigned
 A king in name alone,
 Yet holding, as thy meek ally,
 A monarch's mimic pageantry.

“Then through Rome's crowded streets to-day
 I might have rode with thee,
 Not in a captive's base array,
 But fetterless and free, —
 If freedom he could hope to find,
 Whose bondage is of heart and mind.

“But canst thou marvel that, freeborn,
 With heart and soul unquelled,
 Throne, crown, and sceptre I should scorn,
 By thy permission held ?
 Or that I should retain my right
 Till wrested by a conqueror's might ?

“Rome, with her palaces and towers,
 By us unwished, unrefit,
 Her homely huts and woodland bowers
 To Britain might have left ;
 Worthless to you their wealth must be,
 But dear to us, for they were free !

“I might have bowed before, but where
 Had been thy triumph now ?
 To my resolve no yoke to bear
 Thou ow'st thy laurelled brow ;
 Inglorious victory had been thine,
 And more inglorious bondage mine.

“Now I have spoken, do thy will ;
 Be life or death my lot,
 Since Britain's throne no more I fill,
 To me it matters not.
 My fame is clear ; but on my fate
 Thy glory or thy shame must wait.”

He ceased ; from all around upsprung
 A murmur of applause,
 For well had truth and freedom's tongue
 Maintained their holy cause.
 The conqueror was the captive then ;
 He bade the slave be free again.

BERNARD BARTON.

BOADICEA.

WHEN the British warrior queen,
Bleeding from the Roman rods,
Sought, with an indignant mien,
Counsel of her country's gods,

Sage beneath the spreading oak
Sat the Druid, hoary chief ;
Every burning word he spoke
Full of rage and full of grief.

"Princess ! if our aged eyes
Weep upon thy matchless wrongs,
'T is because resentment ties
All the terrors of our tongues.

"Rome shall perish — write that word
In the blood that she has spilt, —
Perish, hopeless and abhorred,
Deep in ruin as in guilt.

"Rome, for empire far renowned,
Tramples on a thousand states ;
Soon her pride shall kiss the ground, —
Hark ! the Gaul is at her gates !

"Other Romans shall arise,
Heedless of a soldier's name ;
Sounds, not arms, shall win the prize,
Harmony the path to fame.

"Then the urogeny that springs
From the forests of our land,
Armed with thunder, clad with wings,
Shall a wider world command.

"Regions Cæsar never knew
Thy posterity shall sway ;
Where his eagles never flew,
None invincible as they."

Such the bard's prophetic words,
Pregnant with celestial fire,
Bending as he swept the chords
Of his sweet but awful lyre.

She, with all a monarch's pride,
Felt them in her bosom glow ;
Rushed to battle, fought, and died, —
Dying, hurled them at the foe.

Ruffians, pitiless as proud,
Heaven awards the vengeance due ;
Empire is on us bestowed,
Shame and ruin wait for you !

WILLIAM COWPER.

RIENZI TO THE ROMANS.

FROM "RIENZL"

FRIENDS !

I come not here to talk. Ye know too well
The story of our thralldom. We are slaves !
The bright sun rises to his course, and lights
A race of slaves ! he sets, and his last beam
Falls on a slave ! Not such as, swept along
By the full tide of power, the conqueror leads
To crimson glory and undying fame,
But base, ignoble slaves ! — slaves to a horde
Of petty tyrants, fendal despots ; lords
Rich in some dozen paltry villages,
Strong in some hundred spearmen, only great
In that strange spell, — a name ! Each hour, dark fraud,

Or open rapine, or protected murder,
Cries out against them. But this very day
An honest man, my neighbor (pointing to PA-OLO), — there he stands, —
Was struck — struck like a dog — by one who wore

The badge of Ursini ! because, forsooth,
He tossed not high his ready cap in air,
Nor lifted up his voice in servile shouts,
At sight of that great ruffian ! Be we men,
And suffer such dishonor ? men, and wash not
The stain away in blood ? Such shames are common.

I have known deeper wrongs. I, that speak to ye.
I had a brother once, a gracious boy,
Full of all gentleness, of calmest hope,
Of sweet and quiet joy ; there was the look
Of Heaven upon his face which limners give
To the beloved disciple. How I loved
That gracious boy ! younger by fifteen years,
Brother at once and son ! He left my side ;
A summer bloom on his fair cheeks, a smile
Parting his innocent lips. In one short hour
The pretty, harmless boy was slain ! I saw
The corse, the mangled corse, and then I cried
For vengeance ! Rouse ye, Romans ! Rouse ye, slaves !

Have ye brave sons ? — Look in the next fierce brawl

To see them die ! Have ye fair daughters ? — Look
To see them live, torn from your arms, distained,
Dishonored ; and, if ye dare call for justice,
Be answered by the lash ! Yet this is Rome,
That sat on her seven hills, and from her throne
Of beauty ruled the world ! Yet we are Romans !
Why, in that elder day, to be a Roman
Was greater than a king ! And once again —
Hear me, ye walls, that echoed to the tread
Of either Brutus ! — once again, I swear,
The eternal city shall be free ; her sons shall walk with princes.

MARY RUSSELL MITFORD.

BRUCE AND THE SPIDER.

For Scotland's and for freedom's right
 The Bruce his part had played,
 In five successive fields of fight
 Been conquered and dismayed ;
 Once more against the English host
 His band he led, and once more lost
 The meed for which he fought ;
 And now from battle, faint and worn,
 The homeless fugitive forlorn
 A hut's lone shelter sought.

And cheerless was that resting-place
 For him who claimed a throne :
 His canopy, devoid of grace,
 The rude, rough beams alone ;
 The heather couch his only bed, —
 Yet well I ween had slumber fed
 From couch of eider-down !
 Through darksome night till dawn of day,
 Absorbed in wakeful thoughts he lay
 Of Scotland and her crown.

The sun rose brightly, and its gleam
 Fell on that hapless bed,
 And tinged with light each shapeless beam
 Which roofed the lowly shed ;
 When, looking up with wistful eye,
 The Bruce beheld a spider try
 His filmy thread to fling
 From beam to beam of that rude cot ;
 And well the insect's toilsome lot
 Taught Scotland's future king.

Six times his gossamery thread
 The wary spider threw ;
 In vain the filmy line was sped,
 For powerless or untrue
 Each aim appeared, and back recoiled
 The patient insect, six times foiled,
 And yet unconquered still ;
 And soon the Bruce, with eager eye,
 Saw him prepare once more to try
 His courage, strength, and skill.

One effort more, his seventh and last —
 The hero hailed the sign ! —
 And on the wished-for beam hung fast
 That slender, silken line !
 Slight as it was, his spirit caught
 The more than omen, for his thought
 The lesson well could trace,
 Which even "he who runs may read,"
 That Perseverance gains its meed,
 And Patience wins the race.

BERNARD BARTON.

BANNOCKBURN.

At Bannockburn the English lay, —
 The Scots they were na far away,
 But waited for the break o' day
 That glinted in the east.

But soon the sun broke through the heath
 And lighted up that field o' death,
 When Bruce, wi' saul-inspiring breath,
 His heralds thus addressed : —

Scots, wha hae wi' Wallace bled,
 Scots, wham Bruce has aften led ;
 Welcome to your gory bed,
 Or to victorie.

Now's the day, and now's the hour
 See the front o' battle lour ;
 See approach proud Edward's power, —
 Chains and slaverie !

Wha will be a traitor knave ?
 Wha can fill a coward's grave ?
 Wha sae base as be a slave ?
 Let him turn and flee !

Wha for Scotland's king and law
 Freedom's sword will strongly draw,
 Freeman stand, or freeman fa' ?
 Let him follow me !

By Oppression's woes and pains !
 By your sons in servile chains,
 We will drain our dearest veins,
 But they shall be free !

Lay the proud usurpers low !
 Tyrants fall in every foe !
 Liberty's in every blow !
 Let us do, or die !

ROBERT BURNS.

LOCHIEL'S WARNING.

WIZARD.—LOCHIEL.

WIZARD.

LOCHIEL, Lochiel ! beware of the day
 When the Lowlands shall meet thee in battle array !
 For a field of the dead rushes red on my sight,
 And the clans of Culloden are scattered in fight.
 They rally, they bleed, for their kingdom and crown ;
 Woe, woe to the riders that trample them down !
 Proud Cumberland prances, insulting the slain,
 And their hoof-beaten bosoms are trod to the plain.

But hark ! through the fast-flashing lightning of war,

What steed to the desert flies frantic and far ?
'T is thine, O Glenullin ! whose bride shall await,
Like a love-lighted watch-fire, all night at the gate.

A steed comes at morning : no rider is there ;
But its bridle is red with the sign of despair.
Weep, Albin ! to death and captivity led !
O, weep ! but thy tears cannot number the dead ;
For a merciless sword on Culloden shall wave,
Culloden ! that reeks with the blood of the brave.

LOCHIEL.

Go, preach to the coward, thou death-telling seer !

Or, if gory Culloden so dreadful appear,
Draw, dotard, around thy old wavering sight
This mantle, to cover the phantoms of fright.

WIZARD.

Ha ! laugh'st thou, Lochiel, my vision to scorn ?
Proud bird of the mountain, thy plume shall be torn !

Say, rushed the bold eagle exultingly forth
From his home in the dark rolling clouds of the north ?

Lo ! the death-shot of foemen outspeeding, he rode

Companionless, bearing destruction abroad ;
But down let him stoop from his havoc on high !
Ah ! home let him speed, — for the spoiler is nigh.

Why flames the far summit ? Why shoot to the blast

Those embers, like stars from the firmament cast ?
'T is the fire-shower of ruin, all dreadfully driven
From his eyrie, that beacons the darkness of heaven.

O crested Lochiel ! the peerless in might,
Whose banners arise on the battlements' height,
Heaven's fire is around thee, to blast and to burn ;
Return to thy dwelling ! all lonely return !
For the blackness of ashes shall mark where it stood,

And a wild mother scream o'er her famishing brood.

LOCHIEL.

False Wizard, avaunt ! I have marshalled my clan,
Their swords are a thousand, their bosoms are one !

They are true to the last of their blood and their breath,

And like reapers descend to the harvest of death.
Then welcome be Cumberland's steed to the shock !

Let him dash his proud foam like a wave on the rock !

But woe to his kindred, and woe to his cause,
When Albin her claymore indignantly draws ;
When her bonneted chieftains to victory crowd,
Clanronald the dauntless, and Moray the proud,
All plaided and plumed in their tartan array —

WIZARD.

— Lochiel, Lochiel ! beware of the day ;
For, dark and despairing, my sight I may seal,
But man cannot cover what God would reveal ;
'T is the sunset of life gives me mystical lore,
And coming events cast their shadows before.
I tell thee, Culloden's dread echoes shall ring
With the bloodhounds that bark for thy fugitive king.

Lo ! anointed by Heaven with the vials of wrath,
Behold where he flies on his desolate path !
Now in darkness and billows he sweeps from my sight —

Rise, rise ! ye wild tempests, and cover his flight !
'T is finished. Their thunders are hushed on the moors :

Culloden is lost, and my country depletes,
But where is the iron-bound prisoner ? Where ?
For the red eye of battle is shut in despair.

Say, mounts he the ocean-wave, banished, forlorn,
Like a limb from his country cast bleeding and torn ?

Ah no ! for a darker departure is near ;
The war-drum is muffled, and black is the bier ;
His death-bell is tolling : O mercy, dispel
Yon sight, that it freezes my spirit to tell !
Life flutters convulsed in his quivering limbs,
And his blood-streaming nostril in agony swims.
Accursed be the fagots that blaze at his feet,
Where his heart shall be thrown ere it ceases to beat,

With the smoke of its ashes to poison the gale —

LOCHIEL.

— Down, soothless insulter ! I trust not the tale ;
For never shall Albin a destiny meet,
So black with dishonor, so foul with retreat !
Though my perishing ranks should be strewed
in their gore,

Like ocean-weeds heaped on the surf-beaten shore,
Lochiel, untainted by flight or by chains,
While the kindling of life in his bosom remains,
Shall victor exult, or in death be laid low,
With his back to the field, and his feet to the foe ;
And leaving in battle no blot on his name,
Look proudly to Heaven from the death-bed of fame !

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

SCOTLAND.

FROM "THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL," CANTO VI.

O CALEDONIA ! stern and wild,
 Meet nurse for a poetic child !
 Land of brown heath and shaggy wood,
 Land of the mountain and the flood,
 Land of my sires ! what mortal hand
 Can e'er untie the filial band
 That knits me to thy rugged strand ?
 Still, as I view each well-known scene,
 Think what is now, and what hath been,
 Seems as, to me, of all bereft,
 Sole friends thy woods and streams were left ;
 And thus I love them better still,
 Even in extremity of ill.
 By Yarrow's stream still let me stray,
 Though none should guide my feeble way ;
 Still feel the breeze down Ettrick break,
 Although it chilled my withered cheek ;
 Still lay my head by Teviot stone,
 Though there, forgotten and alone,
 The bard may draw his parting groan.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

ENGLAND.

FROM "THE TIMEPIECE": "THE TASK," BOOK II.

ENGLAND, with all thy faults, I love thee still, —
 My country ! and, while yet a nook is left
 Where English minds and manners may be found,
 Shall be constrained to love thee. Though thy clime
 Be ficke, and thy year most part deformed
 With dripping rains, or withered by a frost,
 I would not yet exchange thy sullen skies,
 And fields without a flower, for warmer France
 With all her vines ; nor for Ausonia's groves
 Of golden fruitage and her myrtle bowers.
 To shake thy senate, and from height sublime
 Of patriot eloquence to flash down fire
 Upon thy foes, was never meant my task :
 But I can feel thy fortunes, and partake
 Thy joys and sorrows with as true a heart
 As any thunderer there. And I can feel
 Thy follies too ; and with a just disdain
 Frown at effeminates whose very looks
 Reflect dishonor on the land I love.
 How, in the name of soldiiership and sense,
 Should England prosper, when such things, as smooth
 And tender as a girl, all essenced o'er
 With odors, and as profligate as sweet,
 Who sell their laurel for a myrtle wreath,
 And love when they should fight, — when such as these

Presume to lay their hand upon the ark
 Of her magnificent and awful cause ?
 Time was when it was praise and boast enough
 In every clime, and travel where we might,
 That we were born her children. Praise enough
 To fill the ambition of a private man,
 That Chatham's language was his mother tongue,
 And Wolfe's great name compatriot with his own.

THE ROAST BEEF OF OLD ENGLAND.

WHEN mighty roast beef was the Englishman's food,
 It ennobled our hearts, and enriched our blood ;
 Our soldiers were brave, and our courtiers were good.

*O, the Roast Beef of old England,
 And O, the old English Roast Beef !*

But since we have learned from effeminate
 France
 To eat their ragouts, as well as to dance,
 We are fed up with nothing but vain complaisance.

O, the Roast Beef, etc.

HENRY FIELDING.

Our fathers of old were robust, stout, and strong,
 And kept open house with good cheer all day long,
 Which made their plump tenants rejoice in this song.

O, the Roast Beef, etc.

When good Queen Elizabeth sat on the throne,
 Ere coffee and tea, and such slip-slops, were known,
 The world was in terror, if e'en she did frown.

O, the Roast Beef, etc.

In those days, if fleets did presume on the main,
 They seldom or never returned back again ;
 As witness the vaunting Armada of Spain.

O, the Roast Beef, etc.

O, then we had stomachs to eat and to fight,
 And when wrongs were cooking, to set ourselves
 right ;
 But now we're a — hum ? — I could, but — good night !

O, the Roast Beef, etc.

The four last stanzas added by RICHARD LOVERIDGE.

RULE, BRITANNIA.

FROM "ALFRED," ACT II. SC. 5.

WHEN Britain first, at Heaven's command,
Arose from out the azure main,
This was the charter of the land,
And guardian angels sung the strain :
*Rule, Britannia, rule the waves !
For Britons never will be slaves.*

The nations not so blest as thee
Must, in their turns, to tyrants fall ;
Whilst thou shalt flourish, great and free,
The dread and envy of them all.
Rule, Britannia ! etc.

Still more majestic shalt thou rise,
More dreadful from each foreign stroke ;
As the loud blasts that tear the skies
Serve but to root thy native oak.
Rule, Britannia ! etc.

Thee haughty tyrants ne'er shall tame ;
All their attempts to bend thee down
Will but arouse thy generous flame,
And work their woe — but thy renown.
Rule, Britannia ! etc.

To thee belongs the rural reign ;
Thy cities shall with commerce shine ;
All thine shall be the subject main,
And every shore it circles thine.
Rule, Britannia ! etc.

The Muses, still with Freedom found,
Shall to thy happy coast repair ;
Blest Isle ! with matchless beauty crowned,
And manly hearts to guard the fair.
Rule, Britannia ! etc.

JAMES THOMSON.

NASEBY.

BY OBADIAH BIND-THEIR-KINGS-IN-CHAINS-AND-THEIR-NOBLES-WITH-LINKS-OF-IRON ; SERGEANT IN IRETON'S REGIMENT.

O, WHEREFORE come ye forth, in triumph from the north,
With your hands and your feet and your raiment
all red ?
And wherefore doth your rout send forth a joyous shout ?
And whence be the grapes of the wine-press that ye tread ?

O, evil was the root, and bitter was the fruit,
And crimson was the juice of the vintage that we trod ;

For we trampled on the throng of the haughty
and the strong,
Who sate in the high places and slew the saints
of God.

It was about the noon of a glorious day of June,
That we saw their banners dance and their cuirasses shine,
And the man of blood was there, with his long essenced hair,
And Astley, and Sir Marmaduke, and Rupert of the Rhine.

Like a servant of the Lord, with his Bible and his sword,
The General rode along us to form us to the fight ;
When a murmuring sound broke out, and swelled into a shout
Among the godless horsemen upon the tyrant's right.

And hark ! like the roar of the billows on the shore,
The cry of battle rises along their charging line !
For God ! for the cause ! — for the Church ! for the laws !
For Charles, king of England, and Rupert of the Rhine !

The furious German comes, with his clarions and his drums,
His bravoës of Alsatia, and pages of Whitehall ;
They are bursting on our flanks. Grasp your pikes ! Close your ranks !
For Rupert never comes but to conquer, or to fall.

They are here ! They rush on ! We are broken !
We are gone !
Our left is borne before them like stubble on the blast.
O Lord, put forth thy might ! O Lord, defend the right !
Stand back to back, in God's name ! and fight it to the last !

Stout Skippon hath a wound ; the centre hath given ground :
Hark ! hark ! what means the trampling of horsemen on our rear ?
Whose banner do I see, boys ? 'T is he ! thank God ! 't is he, boys !
Bear up another minute ! Brave Oliver is here.

Their heads all stooping low, their points all in a row,
Like a whirlwind on the trees, like a deluge on the dikes,

Our cuirassiers have burst on the ranks of the Acurst,
And at a shock have scattered the forest of his pikes.

Fast, fast the gallants ride, in some safe nook to hide
Their coward heads, predestined to rot on Temple Bar ;
And he, — he turns, he flies : — shame on those cruel eyes
That bore to look on torture, and dare not look on war !

Ho ! comrades, scour the plain ; and, ere ye strip
the slain,
First give another stab to make your search secure ;
Then shake from sleeves and pockets their broad-pieces and lockets,
The tokens of the wanton, the plunder of the poor.

Fools ! your doublets shone with gold, and your hearts were gay and bold,
When you kissed your lily hands to your lemans
to-day ;
And to-morrow shall the fox, from her chambers
in the rocks,
Lead forth her tawny cubs to howl above the prey.

Where be your tongues that late mocked at heaven and hell and fate ?
And the fingers that once were so busy with your blades,
Your perfumed satin clothes, your catches and your oaths !
Your stage-plays and your sonnets, your diamonds and your spades ?

Down ! down ! forever down, with the mitre and the crown !
With the Belial of the court, and the Mammon of the Pope !
There is woe in Oxford halls ; there is wail in Durham's stalls ;
The Jesuit smites his bosom ; the bishop rends his cope.

And she of the seven hills shall mourn her children's ills,
And tremble when she thinks on the edge of England's sword ;
And the kings of earth in fear shall shudder when they hear
What the hand of God hath wrought for the Houses and the Word !

THOMAS BABINGTON MACAULAY.

THE HARP THAT ONCE THROUGH TARA'S HALLS.

THE harp that once through Tara's halls
The soul of music shed,
Now hangs as mute on Tara's walls
As if that soul were fled.
So sleeps the pride of former days,
So glory's thrill is o'er,
And hearts that once beat high for praise
Now feel that pulse no more !

No more to chiefs and ladies bright
The harp of Tara swells ;
The chord alone that breaks at night
Its tale of ruin tells.
Thus Freedom now so seldom wakes,
The only throb she gives
Is when some heart indignant breaks,
To show that still she lives.

THOMAS MOORE.

AS BY THE SHORE AT BREAK OF DAY.

As by the shore, at break of day,
A vanquished chief expiring lay,
Upon the sands, with broken sword,
He traced his farewell to the free ;
And there the last unfinished word
He dying wrote, was " Liberty ! "

At night a sea-bird shrieked the knell
Of him who thus for freedom fell :
The words he wrote, ere evening came,
Were covered by the sounding sea ; —
So pass away the cause and name
Of him who dies for liberty !

THOMAS MOORE.

GOUGAUNE BARRA.

[The lake of Gougane Barra, i. e. the hollow, or recess of St. Finn Bar, in the rugged territory of Ibh-Laoghair (the O'Leary's country) in the west end of the county of Cork, is the parent of the river Lee. Its waters embrace a small but verdant island of about half an acre in extent, which approaches its eastern shore. The lake, as its name implies, is situate in a deep hollow, surrounded on every side (save the east, where its superabundant waters are discharged) by vast and almost perpendicular mountains, whose dark inverted shadows are gloomily reflected in its still waters beneath.]

THERE is a green island in lone Gougane Barra,
Where Allua of songs rushes forth as an arrow ;
In deep-valleyed Desmond — a thousand wild fountains
Come down to that lake from their home in the mountains.
There grows the wild ash, and a time-stricken willow
Looks chidingly down on the mirth of the billow ;

As, like some gay child, that sad monitor scorn-
ing,
It lightly laughs back to the laugh of the morning.

And its zone of dark hills, — O, to see them all brightening,
When the tempest flings out its red banner of lightning,
And the waters rush down, mid the thunder's deep rattle,
Like clans from their hills at the voice of the battle ;
And brightly the fire-crested billows are gleaming,
And wildly from Mullagh the eagles are screaming !

O, where is the dwelling, in valley or highland,
So meet for a bard as this lone little island ?

How oft, when the summer sun rested on Clara,
And lit the dark heath on the hills of Ivera,
Have I sought thee, sweet spot, from my home
by the ocean,
And trod all thy wilds with a minstrel's devotion,
And thought of thy bards, when assembling together,
In the cleft of thy rocks, or the depth of thy heather ;
They fled from the Saxon's dark bondage and slaughter,
And waked their last song by the rush of thy water.

High sons of the lyre, O, how proud was the feeling,
To think while alone through that solitude steal-
ing,
Though loftier minstrels green Erin can number,
I only awoke your wild harp from its slumber,
And mingled once more with the voice of those fountains
The songs even Echo forgot on her mountains ;
And gleaned each gray legend that darkly was sleeping
Where the mist and the rain o'er their beauty were creeping !

Least bard of the hills, — were it mine to inherit
The fire of thy harp and the wing of thy spirit,
With the wrongs which like thee to our country
have bound me,
Did your mantle of song fling its radiance around me,
Still, still in those wilds might young Liberty rally,
And send her strong shout over mountain and valley,
The star of the west might yet rise in its glory,
And the land that was darkest be brightest in story.

I too shall be gone ; — but my name shall be spoken

When Erin awakes and her fetters are broken.
Some minstrel will come, in the summer eve's
gleaming,
When Freedom's young light on his spirit is beaming,
And bend o'er my grave with a tear of emotion,
Where calm Avon-Buee seeks the kisses of ocean,
Or plant a wild wreath, from the banks of that river,
O'er the heart and the harp that are sleeping forever.

JAMES JOSEPH CALLANAN.

EXILE OF ERIN.

THERE came to the beach a poor exile of Erin,
The dew on his thin robe was heavy and chill ;
For his country he sighed, when at twilight repairing
To wander alone by the wind-beaten hill.
But the day-star attracted his eye's sad devotion,
For it rose o'er his own native isle of the ocean,
Where once, in the fire of his youthful emotion,
He sang the bold anthem of Erin go bragh.

Sad is my fate ! said the heart-broken stranger ;
The wild deer and wolf to a covert can flee,
But I have no refuge from famine and danger,
A home and a country remain not to me.
Never again in the green sunny bowers
Where my forefathers lived shall I spend the sweet hours,
Or cover my harp with the wild-woven flowers,
And strike to the numbers of Erin go bragh !

Erin, my country ! though sad and forsaken,
In dreams I revisit thy sea-beaten shore ;
But, alas ! in a far foreign land I awaken,
And sigh for the friends who can meet me no
more !
O cruel fate ! wilt thou never replace me
In a mansion of peace, where no perils can chase
me ?
Never again shall my brothers embrace me ?
They died to defend me, or live to deplore !

Where is my cabin door, fast by the wildwood ?
Sisters and sire, did ye weep for its fall ?
Where is the mother that looked on my childhood ?
And where is the bosom-friend, dearer than all ?
O my sad heart ! long abandoned by pleasure,
Why did it dote on a fast-fading treasure ?
Tears, like the rain-drop, may fall without measure,
But rapture and beauty they cannot recall.

Yet, all its sad recollections suppressing,
 One dying wish my lone bosom can draw, —
 Erin, an exile bequeaths thee his blessing!
 Land of my forefathers, Erin go bragh!
 Buried and cold, when my heart stills her motion,
 Green be thy fields, sweetest isle of the ocean!
 And thy harp-striking bards sing aloud with devotion, —
 Erin mavourneen, Erin go bragh !*

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

MY NATIVE LAND.

It chanced to me upon a time to sail
 Across the Southern ocean to and fro ;
 And, landing at fair isles, by stream and vale
 Of sensuous blessing did we ofttimes go.
 And months of dreamy joys, like joys in sleep,
 Or like a clear, calm stream o'er mossy stone,
 Unnoted passed our hearts with voiceless sweep,
 And left us yearning still for lands unknown.

And when we found one, — for 't is soon to find
 In thousand-isled Cathay another isle, —
 For one short noon its treasures filled the mind,
 And then again we yearned, and ceased to smile.

And so it was, from isle to isle we passed,
 Like wanton bees or boys on flowers or lips ;
 And when that all was tasted, then at last
 We thirsted still for draughts instead of sips.

I learned from this there is no Southern land
 Can fill with love the hearts of Northern men.
 Sick minds need change ; but, when in health they stand

'Neath foreign skies, their love flies home agen.
 And thus with me it was : the yearning turned
 From laden airs of cinnamon away,
 And stretched far westward, while the full heart burned

With love for Ireland, looking on Cathay !

My first dear love, all dearer for thy grief !
 My land, that has no peer in all the sea
 For verdure, vale, or river, flower or leaf, —
 If first to no man else, thou 'rt first to me.
 New loves may come with duties, but the first
 Is deepest yet, — the mother's breath and smiles :
 Like that kind face and breast where I was nursed
 Is my poor land, the Niobe of isles.

JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

* Ireland my darling, Ireland forever !

IRELAND.

1847.

THEY are dying ! they are dying ! where the golden corn is growing ;
 They are dying ! they are dying ! where the crowded herds are lowing ;
 They are gasping for existence where the streams
 of life are flowing,
 And they perish of the plague where the breeze
 of health is blowing !

God of justice ! God of power !
 Do we dream ? Can it be,
 In this land, at this hour,
 With the blossom on the tree,
 In the gladsome month of May,
 When the young lambs play,
 When Nature looks around
 On her waking children now,
 The seed within the ground,
 The bud upon the bough ?
 Is it right, is it fair,
 That we perish of despair
 In this land, on this soil,
 Where our destiny is set,
 Which we cultured with our toil,
 And watered with our sweat ?
 We have ploughed, we have sown
 But the crop was not our own ;
 We have reaped, but harpy hands
 Swept the harvest from our lands ;
 We were perishing for food,
 When lo ! in pitying mood,
 Our kindly rulers gave
 The fat fluid of the slave,
 While our corn filled the manger
 Of the war-horse of the stranger !

God of mercy ! must this last ?
 Is this land preordained,
 For the present and the past
 And the future, to be chained, —
 To be ravaged, to be drained,
 To be robbed, to be spoiled,
 To be hushed, to be whipt,
 Its soaring pinions clipt,
 And its every effort foiled ?

Do our numbers multiply
 But to perish and to die ?
 Is this all our destiny below, —
 That our bodies, as they rot,
 May fertilize the spot
 Where the harvests of the stranger grow ?

If this be, indeed, our fate,
 Far, far better now, though late,

That we seek some other land and try some other zone ;

The coldest, bleakest shore
Will surely yield us more Than the storehouse of the stranger that we dare not call our own.

Kindly brothers of the West,
Who from Liberty's full breast
Have fed us, who are orphans beneath a step-dame's frown,
Behold our happy state,
And weep your wretched fate
That you share not in the splendors of our empire and our crown !

Kindly brothers of the East, —
Thou great tiaraed priest,
Thou sanctified Rienzi of Rome and of the earth, —
Or thou who bear'st control
Over golden Istanbul,
Who felt for our misfortunes and helped us in our dearth, —

Turn here your wondering eyes,
Call your wisest of the wise,
Your muftis and your ministers, your men of deepest lore ;
Let the sagest of your sages
Ope our island's mystic pages,
And explain unto your highness the wonders of our shore.

A fruitful, teeming soil,
Where the patient peasants toil
Beneath the summer's sun and the watery winter
sky ;
Where they tend the golden grain
Till it bends upon the plain,
Then reap it for the stranger, and turn aside to die ;

Where they watch their flocks increase,
And store the snowy fleece
Till they send it to their masters to be woven o'er the waves ;
Where, having sent their meat
For the foreigner to eat,
Their mission is fulfilled, and they creep into their graves.

'T is for this they are dying where the golden corn is growing,

'T is for this they are dying where the crowded herds are lowing,

'T is for this they are dying where the streams
of life are flowing,

And they perish of the plague where the breeze
of health is blowing !

DENIS FLORENCE MAC-CARTHY.

SONG OF THE GREEK POET.

FROM "DON JUAN," CANTO III.

THE isles of Greece, the isles of Greece !
Where burning Sappho loved and sung, —
Where grew the arts of war and peace, —
Where Delos rose, and Phoebus sprung !
Eternal summer gilds them yet ;
But all, except their sun, is set.

The Scian and the Teian muse,
The hero's harp, the lover's lute,
Have found the fame your shores refuse ;
Their place of birth alone is mute
To sounds which echo farther west
Than your sires' "Islands of the Blest."

The mountains look on Marathon,
And Marathon looks on the sea ;
And musing there an hour alone,
I dreamed that Greece might still be free ;
For, standing on the Persians' grave,
I could not deem myself a slave.

A king sat on the rocky brow
Which looks o'er sea-born Salamis ;
And ships by thousands lay below,
And men in nations, — all were his !
He counted them at break of day, —
And when the sun set, where were they ?

And where are they ? and where art thou,
My country ? On thy voiceless shore
The heroic lay is tuneless now, —
The heroic bosom beats no more !
And must thy lyre, so long divine,
Degenerate into hands like mine ?

'T is something, in the dearth of fame,
Though linked among a fettered race,
To feel at least a patriot's shame,
Even as I sing, suffice my face ;
For what is left the poet here ?
For Greeks a blush, — for Greece a tear.

Must we but weep o'er days more blest ?
Must we but blush ? — our fathers' blood
Earth ! render back from out thy breast
A remnant of our Spartan dead !
Of the three hundred, grant but three
To make a new Thermopylæ !

What, silent still ? and silent all ?
Ah, no ! the voices of the dead
Sound like a distant torrent's fall,
And answer, " Let one living head,
But one, arise, — we come, we come !"
'T is but the living who are dumb.

In vain, — in vain ; strike other chords ;
 Fill high the cup with Samian wine !
 Leave battles to the Turkish hordes,
 And shed the blood of Scio's vine !
 Hark ! rising to the ignoble call,
 How answers each bold Bacchanal !

You have the Pyrrhic dance as yet, —
 Where is the Pyrrhic phalanx gone ?
 Of two such lessons, why forget
 The nobler and the manlier one ?
 You have the letters Cadmus gave, —
 Think ye he meant them for a slave ?

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine !
 We will not think of themes like these !
 It made Anacreon's song divine :
 He served, but served Polycrates, —
 A tyrant ; but our masters then
 Were still, at least, our countrymen.

The tyrant of the Chersonese
 Was freedom's best and bravest friend ;
 That tyrant was Miltiades !
 O that the present hour would lend
 Another despot of the kind !
 Such chains as his were sure to bind.

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine !
 On Suli's rock and Parga's shore
 Exists the remnant of a line
 Such as the Doric mothers bore ;
 And there perhaps some seed is sown
 The Heracleidan blood might own.

Trust not for freedom to the Franks, —
 They have a king who buys and sells ;
 In native swords, and native ranks,
 The only hope of courage dwells ;
 But Turkish force, and Latin fraud,
 Would break your shield, however broad.

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine !
 Our virgins dance beneath the shade, —
 I see their glorious black eyes shine ;
 But, gazing on each glowing maid,
 My own the burning tear-drop laves,
 To think such breasts must suckle slaves.

Place me on Sunium's marbled steep,
 Where nothing, save the waves and I,
 May hear our mutual murmurs sweep ;
 There, swan-like, let me sing and die.
 A land of slaves shall ne'er be mine, —
 Dash down your cup of Samian wine !

LORD BYRON.

GREECE.

FROM "CHILDE HAROLD," CANTO. II.

FAIR Greece ! sad relic of departed worth !
 Immortal, though no more ; though fallen, great !

Who now shall lead thy scattered children forth,
 And long-accustomed bondage uncreate ?
 Not such thy sons who whilom did await,
 The hopeless warriors of a willing doom,
 In bleak Thermopylæ's sepulchral strait, —
 O, who that gallant spirit shall resume,
 Leap from Eurotas' banks, and call thee from the tomb ?

Spirit of Freedom ! when on Phyle's brow
 Thou sat'st with Thrasybulus and his train, Couldst thou forebode the dismal hour which now

Dims the green beauties of thine Attic plain ?
 Not thirty tyrants now enforce the chain,
 But every earle can lord it o'er thy land ;
 Nor rise thy sons, but idly rail in vain,
 Trembling beneath the scourge of Turkish hand,
 From birth till death enslaved ; in word, in deed, unmanned.

In all save form alone, how changed ! and who
 That marks the fire still sparkling in each eye,
 Who but would deem their bosoms burned anew
 With thy unquenched beam, lost Liberty !
 And many dream withal the hour is nigh
 That gives them back their fathers' heritage ;
 For foreign arms and aid they fondly sigh,
 Nor solely dare encounter hostile rage,
 Or tear their name defiled from Slavery's mournful page.

Hereditary bondsmen ! know ye not,
 Who would be free themselves must strike the blow ?
 By their right arms the conquest must be wrought ?
 Will Gaul or Muscovite redress ye ? No !
 True, they may lay your proud despoilers low,
 But not for you will Freedom's altars flame.
 Shades of the Helots ! triumph o'er your foe !
 Greece ! change thy lords, thy state is still the same ;
 Thy glorious day is o'er, but not thy years of shame !

LORD BYRON.

GREECE.

FROM "THE CIAOUR."

CLIME of the unforgotten brave !
 Whose land, from plain to mountain-cave,
 Was Freedom's home or Glory's grave !
 Shrine of the mighty ! can it be

That this is all remains of thee ?
 Approach, thou craven, crouching slave ;
 Say, is not this Thermopylæ ?
 These waters blue that round you lave,
 O servile offspring of the free, —
 Pronounce what sea, what shore is this ?
 The gulf, the rock of Salamis !
 These scenes, their story not unknown,
 Arise, and make again your own ;
 Snatch from the ashes of your sires
 The embers of their former fires ;
 And he who in the strife expires
 Will add to theirs a name of fear
 That Tyranny shall quake to hear,
 And leave his sons a hope, a fame,
 They too will rather die than shame ;
 For Freedom's battle once begun,
 Bequeathed by bleeding sire to son,
 Though baffled oft is ever won.
 Bear witness, Greece, thy living page ;
 Attest it, many a deathless age :
 While kings, in dusty darkness hid,
 Have left a nameless pyramid,
 Thy heroes, though the general doom
 Hath swept the column from their tomb,
 A mightier monument command,
 The mountains of their native land !
 There points thy Muse to stranger's eye
 The graves of those that cannot die !
 'T were long to tell, and sad to trace,
 Each step from splendor to disgrace :
 Enough, — no foreign foe could quell
 Thy soul, till from itself it fell ;
 Yes ! self-abasement paved the way
 To villain-bonds and despot sway.

What can he tell who treads thy shore ?
 No legend of thine olden time,
 No theme on which the Muse might soar,
 High as thine own in days of yore,
 When man was worthy of thy clime.
 The hearts within thy valleys bred,
 The fiery souls that might have led
 Thy sons to deeds sublime,
 Now crawl from cradle to the grave,
 Slaves — nay, the bondsmen of a slave,
 And callous save to crime.

LORD BYRON.

MARCO BOZZARIS.

[Marco Bozzaris, the Epaminondas of modern Greece, fell in a night attack upon the Turkish camp at Laspi, the site of the ancient Platea, Aug. 20, 1823, and expired in the moment of victory. His last words were : " To die for liberty is a pleasure, and not a pain."]

At midnight, in his guarded tent,
 The Turk was dreaming of the hour
 When Greece, her knee in suppliance bent,
 Should tremble at his power.

In dreams, through camp and court, he bore
 The trophies of a conqueror ;
 In dreams his song of triumph heard ;
 Then wore his monarch's signet-ring,
 Then pressed that monarch's throne — a king ;
 As wild his thoughts, and gay of wing,
 As Eden's garden bird.

At midnight, in the forest shades,
 Bozzaris ranged his Suliote band, —
 True as the steel of their tried blades,
 Heroes in heart and hand.
 There had the Persian's thousands stood,
 There had the glad earth drunk their blood,
 On old Platea's day ;
 And now there breathed that haunted air
 The sons of sires who conquered there,
 With arm to strike, and soul to dare,
 As quick, as far, as they.

An hour passed on, the Turk awoke :
 That bright dream was his last ;
 He woke — to hear his sentries shriek,
 " To arms ! they come ! the Greek ! the Greek !"
 He woke — to die midst flame, and smoke,
 And shout, and groan, and sabre-stroke,
 And death-shots falling thick and fast
 As lightnings from the mountain-cloud ;
 And heard, with voice as trumpet loud,
 Bozzaris cheer his band :
 " Strike — till the last armed foe expires ;
 Strike — for your altars and your fires ;
 Strike — for the green graves of your sires,
 God, and your native land !"

They fought — like brave men, long and well ;
 They piled that ground with Moslem slain :
 They conquered — but Bozzaris fell,
 Bleeding at every vein.
 His few surviving comrades saw
 His smile when rang their proud hurrah,
 And the red field was won ;
 Then saw in death his eyelids close
 Calmly, as to a night's repose,
 Like flowers at set of sun.

Come to the bridal chamber, Death,
 Come to the mother, when she feels,
 For the first time, her first-born's breath ;
 Come when the blessed seals
 That close the pestilence are broke,
 And crowded cities wail its stroke ;
 Come in consumption's ghastly form,
 The earthquake shock, the ocean storm ;
 Come when the heart beats high and warm,
 With banquet song and dance and wine, —
 And thou art terrible ; the tear,

The groan, the knell, the pall, the bier,
And all we know, or dream, or fear
Of agony, are thine.

But to the hero, when his sword
Has won the battle for the free,
Thy voice sounds like a prophet's word,
And in its hollow tones are heard
The thanks of millions yet to be.
Come when his task of fame is wrought ;
Come with her laurel-leaf, blood-bought ;
Come in her crowning hour, — and then
Thy sunken eye's unearthly light
To him is welcome as the sight
Of sky and stars to prisoned men ;
Thy grasp is welcome as the hand
Of brother in a foreign land ;
Thy summons welcome as the cry
That told the Indian isles were nigh
To the world-seeking Genoese,
When the land-wind, from woods of palm,
And orange-groves, and fields of balm,
Blew o'er the Haytian seas.

Bozzaris ! with the storied brave
Greece nurtured in her glory's time,
Rest thee ; there is no prouder grave,
Even in her own proud clime.
She wore no funeral weeds for thee,
Nor bade the dark hearse wave its plume,
Like torn branch from death's leafless tree,
In sorrow's pomp and pageantry,
The heartless luxury of the tomb.

But she remembers thee as one
Long loved, and for a season gone.
For thee her poet's lyre is wreathed,
Her marble wrought, her music breathed ;
For thee she rings the birthday bells ;
Of thee her babes' first lisping tells ;
For thine her evening prayer is said
At palace couch and cottage bed.
Her soldier, closing with the foe,
Gives for thy sake a deadlier blow ;
His plighted maiden, when she fears
For him, the joy of her young years,
Thinks of thy fate, and checks her tears.

And she, the mother of thy boys,
Though in her eye and faded cheek
Is read the grief she will not speak,
The memory of her buried joys, —
And even she who gave thee birth, —
Will, by her pilgrim-circled hearth,
Talk of thy doom without a sigh ;
For thou art freedom's now, and fame's, —
One of the few, the immortal names
That were not born to die.

FITZ-GREENE HALLECK.

POLAND.

FROM "THE PLEASURES OF HOPE," PART I.

WARSAW'S last champion from her height surveyed,
Wide o'er the fields, a waste of ruin laid ;
"O Heaven !" he cried, "my bleeding country save ! —

Is there no hand on high to shield the brave ?
Yet, though destruction sweep these lovely plains,
Rise, fellow-men ! our country yet remains !
By that dread name, we wave the sword on high,
And swear for her to live — with her to die !"

He said, and on the rampart-heights arrayed
His trusty warriors, few, but undismayed ;
Firm-paced and slow, a horrid front they form,
Still as the breeze, but dreadful as the storm ;
Low murmuring sounds along their banners fly,
Revenge, or death, — the watchword and reply ;
Then pealed the notes, omnipotent to charm,
And the loud tocsin tolled their last alarm ! —

In vain, alas ! in vain, ye gallant few !
Fram rank to rank your volleyed thunder flew : —
O, bloodiest picture in the book of Time !
Sarmatia fell, unwept, without a crime ;
Found not a generous friend, a pitying foe,
Strength in her arms, nor mercy in her woe !
Dropped from her nerveless grasp the shattered
spear,
Closed her bright eye, and curbed her high career ;
Hope, for a season, bade the world farewell,
And Freedom shrieked — as Kosciusko fell !

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

MEN AND BOYS.

THE storm is out ; the land is roused ;
Where is the coward who sits well housed ?
Fie on thee, boy, disguised in curls,
Behind the stove, 'mong gluttons and girls !
A graceless, worthless wight thou must be ;
No German maid desires thee,
No German song inspires thee,
No German Rhine-wine fires thee.
Forth in the van,
Man by man,
Swing the battle-sword who can !

When we stand watching, the livelong night,
Through piping storms, till morning light,
Thou to thy downy bed canst creep,
And there in dreams of rapture sleep.
A graceless, worthless wight, etc.

When, hoarse and shrill, the trumpet's blast,
Like the thunder of God, makes our hearts beat fast,

Thou in the theatre lov'st to appear,
Where trills and quavers tickle the ear.
A graceless, worthless wight, etc.

When the glare of noonday scorches the brain,
When our parchèd lips seek water in vain,
Thou canst make champagne corks fly
At the groaning tables of luxury.
A graceless, worthless wight, etc.

When we, as we rush to the strangling fight,
Send home to our true-loves a long "Goodnight,"
Thou canst lie thee where love is sold,
And buy thy pleasure with paltry gold.
A graceless, worthless wight, etc.

When lance and bullet come whistling by,
And death in a thousand shapes draws nigh,
Thou canst sit at thy cards, and kill
King, queen, and knave with thy spadille.
A graceless, worthless wight, etc.

If on the red field our bell should toll,
Then welcome be death to the patriot's soul !
Thy pampered flesh shall quake at its doom,
And crawl in silk to a hopeless tomb.
A pitiful exit thine shall be ;
No German maid shall weep for thee,
No German song shall they sing for thee,
No German goblets shall ring for thee.
Forth in the van,
Man for man,
Swing the battle-sword who can !

lation of CHARLES T. BROOKS.

THE MARSEILLAISE.

YE sons of freedom, wake to glory !
Hark ! hark ! what myriads bid you rise !
Your children, wives, and grandsires hoary,
Behold their tears and hear their cries !
Shall hateful tyrants, mischiefs breeding,
With hireling hosts, a ruffian band,
Affright and desolate the land,
While peace and liberty lie bleeding ?
To arms ! to arms ! ye brave !
The avenging sword unsheathe ;
March on ! march on ! all hearts resolved
On victory or death.

Now, now the dangerous storm is rolling,
Which treacherous kings confederate raise ;
The dogs of war, let loose, are howling,
And lo ! our fields and cities blaze ;

And shall we basely view the ruin,
While lawless force, with guilty stride,
Spreads desolation far and wide,
With crimes and blood his hands imbruing.
To arms ! to arms ! ye brave, etc.

O Liberty ! can man resign thee,
Once having felt thy generous flame ?
Can dungeons, bolts, or bars confine thee ?
Or whips thy noble spirit tame ?
Too long the world has wept, bewailing
That falsehood's dagger tyrants wield,
But freedom is our sword and shield,
And all their arts are unavailing.
To arms ! to arms ! ye brave, etc.

Abbreviated; from the French of ROUCET DE LISLE.

MAKE WAY FOR LIBERTY.

[On the exploit of Arnold Winkelried at the battle of Sempach, in the fourteenth century, in which the Swiss, fighting for their independence, totally defeated the Austrians.]

"MAKE way for Liberty !" — he cried ;
Made way for Liberty, and died !
In arms the Austrian phalanx stood,
A living wall, a human wood !
A wall, where every conscious stone
Seemed to its kindred thousands grown ;
A rampart all assaults to bear,
Till time to dust their frames should wear ;
A wood, like that enchanted grove
In which with fiends Rinaldo strove,
Where every silent tree possessed
A spirit prisoned in its breast,
Which the first stroke of coming strife
Would startle into hideous life :
So dense, so still, the Austrians stood,
A living wall, a human wood !
Impregnable their front appears,
All horrent with projected spears,
Whose polished points before them shine,
From flank to flank, one brilliant line,
Bright as the breakers' splendors run
Along the billows to the sun.

Opposed to these, a hovering band
Contended for their native land :
Peasants, whose new-found strength had broke
From manly necks the ignoble yoke,
And forged their fetters into swords,
On equal terms to fight their lords,
And what insurgent rage had gained
In many a mortal fray maintained :
Marshall'd once more at Freedom's call,
They came to conquer or to fall,
Where he who conquered, he who fell,
Was deemed a dead, or living, Tell !

Such virtue had that patriot breathed,
So to the soil his soul bequeathed,
That wheresoe'er his arrows flew
Heroes in his own likeness grew,
And warriors sprang from every sod
Which his awakening footstep trod.

And now the work of life and death
Hung on the passing of a breath ;
The fire of conflict burnt within,
The battle trembled to begin :
Yet, while the Austrians held their ground,
Point for attack was nowhere found ;
Where'er the impatient Switzers gazed,
The unbroken line of lances blazed :
That line 't were suicide to meet,
And perish at their tyrants' feet, —
How could they rest within their graves,
And leave their homes the homes of slaves ?
Would they not feel their children tread
With clanging chains above their head ?

It must not be : this day, this hour,
Annihilates the oppressor's power ;
All Switzerland is in the field,
She will not fly, she cannot yield, —
She must not fall ; her better fate
Here gives her an immortal date.
Few were the numbers she could boast ;
But every freeman was a host,
And felt as though himself were he
On whose sole arm hung victory.

It did depend on one indeed ;
Behold him, — Arnold Winkelried !
There sounds not to the trump of fame
The echo of a nobler name.
Unmarked he stood amid the throng,
In rumination deep and long,
Till you might see, with sudden grace,
The very thought come o'er his face,
And by the motion of his form
Anticipate the bursting storm,
And by the uplifting of his brow
Tell where the bolt would strike, and how.

But 't was no sooner thought than done,
The field was in a moment won :—

“ Make way for Liberty ! ” he cried,
Then ran, with arms extended wide,
As if his dearest friend to clasp ;
Ten spears he swept within his grasp.

“ Make way for Liberty ! ” he cried ;
Their keen points met from side to side ;
He bowed amongst them like a tree,
And thus made way for Liberty.

Swift to the breach his comrades fly ;
“ Make way for Liberty ! ” they cry,
And through the Austrian phalanx dart,
As rushed the spears through Arnold's heart ;
While, instantaneous as his fall,
Rout, ruin, panic, scattered all :
An earthquake could not overthrow
A city with a surer blow.

Thus Switzerland again was free ;
Thus Death made way for Liberty !

JAMES MONTGOMERY.

SWITZERLAND.

FROM “ WILLIAM TELL.”

ONCE Switzerland was free ! With what a pride
I used to walk these hills, — look up to heaven,
And bless God that it was so ! It was free
From end to end, from cliff to lake 't was free !
Free as our torrents are, that leap our rocks,
And plough our valleys, without asking leave ;
Or as our peaks, that wear their caps of snow
In very presence of the regal sun !
How happy was I in it then ! I loved
Its very storms. Ay, often have I sat
In my boat at night, when, midway o'er the lake,
The stars went out, and down the mountain gorge
The wind came roaring, — I have sat and eyed
The thunder breaking from his cloud, and smiled
To see him shake his lightnings o'er my head,
And think — I had no master save his own !

JAMES SHERIDAN KNOWLES.

A COURT LADY.

HER hair was tawny with gold, her eyes with purple were dark,
Her cheeks' pale opal burnt with a red and restless spark.

Never was lady of Milan nobler in name and in race ;
Never was lady of Italy fairer to see in the face.

Never was lady on earth more true as woman and wife,
Larger in judgment and instinct, prouder in manners and life.

She stood in the early morning, and said to her maidens, “ Bring
That silken robe made ready to wear at the court of the king.

"Bring me the clasps of diamond, lucid, clear of the mote,
Clasp me the large at the waist, and clasp me
the small at the throat.

"Diamonds to fasten the hair, and diamonds to fasten the sleeves,
Laces to drop from their rays, like a powder of snow from the eaves."

Gorgeous she entered the sunlight which gathered her up in a flame,
While straight, in her open carriage, she to the hospital came.

In she went at the door, and gazing, from end to end,
"Many and low are the pallets, but each is the place of a friend."

Up she passed through the wards, and stood at a young man's bed :
Bloody the band on his brow, and livid the droop of his head.

"Art thou a Lombard, my brother? Happy art thou!" she cried,
And smiled like Italy on him : he dreamed in her face and died.

Pale with his passing soul, she went on still to a second :
He was a grave, hard man, whose years by dungeons were reckoned.

Wounds in his body were sore, wounds in his life were sorer.
"Art thou a Romagnole?" Her eyes drove lightnings before her.

"Austrian and priest had joined to double and tighten the cord
Able to bind thee, O strong one,—free by the stroke of a sword.

"Now be grave for the rest of us, using the life overcast
To ripen our wine of the present (too new) in glooms of the past."

Down she stepped to a pallet where lay a face like a girl's,
Young, and pathetic with dying,—a deep black hole in the curls.

"Art thou from Tuscany, brother? and seest
thou, dreaming in pain,
Thy mother stand in the piazza, searching the list of the slain?"

Kind as a mother herself, she touched his cheeks
with her hands :

"Blessed is she who has borne thee, although she should weep as she stands."

On she passed to a Frenchman, his arm carried off by a ball :
Kneeling, . . "O more than my brother! how shall I thank thee for all?"

"Each of the heroes around us has fought for his land and line,
But thou hast fought for a stranger, in hate of a wrong not thine.

"Happy are all free peoples, too strong to be dispossessed ;
But blessed are those among nations who dare to be strong for the rest!"

Ever she passed on her way, and came to a couch where pined
One with a face from Venetia, white with a hope out of mind.

Long she stood and gazed, and twice she tried at the name,
But two great crystal tears were all that faltered and came.

Only a tear for Venice?—she turned as in passion and loss,
And stooped to his forehead and kissed it, as if she were kissing the cross.

Faint with that strain of heart, she moved on then to another,
Stern and strong in his death. "And dost thou suffer, my brother?"

Holding his hands in hers :— "Out of the Piedmont lion
Cometh the sweetness of freedom! sweetest to live or to die on."

Holding his cold, rough hands,— "Well, O, well have ye done
In noble, noble Piedmont, who would not be noble alone."

Back he fell while she spoke. She rose to her feet with a spring,—
"That was a Piedmontese! and this is the Court of the King."

THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIM
FATHERS IN NEW ENGLAND.

THE breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and rock-bound coast,
And the woods against a stormy sky
Their giant branches tossed ;

And the heavy night hung dark
The hills and waters o'er,
When a band of exiles moored their bark
On the wild New England shore.

Not as the conqueror comes,
They, the true-hearted, came ;
Not with the roll of the stirring drums,
And the trumpet that sings of fame :

Not as the flying come,
In silence and in fear ; —
They shook the depths of the desert gloom
With their hymns of lofty cheer.

Amidst the storm they sang,
And the stars heard, and the sea ;
And the sounding aisles of the dim woods rang
To the anthem of the free.

The ocean eagle soared
From his nest by the white wave's foam,
And the rocking pines of the forest roared, —
This was their welcome home.

There were men with hoary hair
Amidst that pilgrim-band :
Why had they come to wither there,
Away from their childhood's land ?

There was woman's fearless eye,
Lit by her deep love's truth ;
There was manhood's brow serenely high,
And the fiery heart of youth.

What sought they thus afar ?
Bright jewels of the mine ?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war ? —
They sought a faith's pure shrine !

Ay, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod ;
They have left unstained what there they found, —
Freedom to worship God.

FELICIA HEMANS.

ON THE PROSPECT OF PLANTING ARTS
AND LEARNING IN AMERICA.

THE Muse, disgusted at an age and clime
Barren of every glorious theme,
In distant lands now waits a better time,
Producing subjects worthy fame.

In happy climes, where from the genial sun
And virgin earth such scenes ensue,
The force of art by nature seems outdone,
And fancied beauties by the true :

In happy climes, the seat of innocence,
Where nature guides and virtue rules,
Where men shall not impose for truth and sense
The pedantry of courts and schools :

There shall be sung another golden age,
The rise of empire and of arts,
The good and great inspiring epic rage,
The wisest heads and noblest hearts.

Not such as Europe breeds in her decay :
Such as she bred when fresh and young,
When heavenly flame did animate her clay,
By future poets shall be sung.

Westward the course of empire takes its way ;
The first four acts already past,
A fifth shall close the drama with the day ;
Time's noblest offspring is the last.

BISHOP GEORGE BERKELEY.

AMERICA.

O MOTHER of a mighty race,
Yet lovely in thy youthful grace !
The elder dames, thy haughty peers,
Admire and hate thy blooming years ;
With words of shame
And taunts of scorn they join thy name.

For on thy cheeks the glow is spread
That tints thy morning hills with red ;
Thy step, — the wild deer's rustling feet
Within thy woods are not more fleet ;
Thy hopeful eye
Is bright as thine own sunny sky.

Ay, let them rail, those haughty ones,
While safe thou dwellest with thy sons.
They do not know how loved thou art,
How many a fond and fearless heart
Would rise to throw
Its life between thee and the foe.

They know not, in their hate and pride,
What virtues with thy children bide, —
How true, how good, thy graceful maids
Make bright, like flowers, the valley shades ;
What generous men
Spring, like thine oaks, by hill and glen ;

What cordial welcomes greet the guest
By thy lone rivers of the west ;

How faith is kept, and truth revered,
And man is loved, and God is feared,
In woodland homes,
And where the ocean border foams.

There's freedom at thy gates, and rest
For earth's down-trodden and opprest,
A shelter for the hunted head,
For the starved laborer toil and bread.
Power, at thy bounds,
Stops, and calls back his baffled hounds.

O fair young mother! on thy brow
Shall sit a nobler grace than now.
Deep in the brightness of thy skies,
The thronging years in glory rise,
And, as they fleet,
Drop strength and riches at thy feet.

Thine eye, with every coming hour,
Shall brighten, and thy form shall tower;
And when thy sisters, elder born,
Would brand thy name with words of scorn,
Before thine eye
Upon their lips the taunt shall die.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

COLUMBIA.

COLUMBIA, Columbia, to glory arise,
The queen of the world, and the child of the skies!
Thy genius commands thee; with rapture behold,
While ages on ages thy splendors unfold.
Thy reign is the last and the noblest of time,
Most fruitful thy soil, most inviting thy clime;
Let the crimes of the east ne'er encrimson thy name,
Be freedom and science and virtue thy fame.

To conquest and slaughter let Europe aspire;
Whelm nations in blood, and wrap cities in fire;
Thy heroes the rights of mankind shall defend,
And triumph pursue them, and glory attend.
A world is thy realm; for a world be thy laws
Enlarged as thine empire, and just as thy cause;
On Freedom's broad basis that empire shall rise,
Extend with the main, and dissolve with the skies.

Fair Science her gates to thy sons shall unbar,
And the East see thy morn hide the beams of her star;
New bards and new sages unrivalled shall soar
To fame unextinguished when time is no more;
To thee, the last refuge of virtue designed,
Shall fly from all nations the best of mankind;
Here, grateful to Heaven, with transport shall bring
Their incense, more fragrant than odors of spring.

Nor less shall thy fair ones to glory ascend,
And genius and beauty in harmony blend;
The graces of form shall awake pure desire,
And the charms of the soul ever cherish the fire;
Their sweetness unmingled, their manners refined,
And virtue's bright image, enstamped on the mind,
With peace and soft rapture shall teach life to glow,
And light up a smile on the aspect of woe.

Thy fleets to all regions thy power shall display,
The nations admire, and the ocean obey;
Each shore to thy glory its tribute unfold,
And the East and the South yield their spices and gold.
As the dayspring unbounded thy splendor shall flow,
And earth's little kingdoms before thee shall bow,
While the ensigns of union, in triumph unfurled, Hush the tumult of war, and give peace to the world.

Thus, as down a lone valley, with cedars o'er-spread,
From war's dread confusion, I pensively strayed,—
The gloom from the face of fair heaven retired;
The wind ceased to murmur, the thunders expired;
Perfumes, as of Eden, flowed sweetly along,
And a voice, as of angels, enchantingly sung:
"Columbia, Columbia, to glory arise,
The queen of the world, and the child of the skies!"

TIMOTHY DWIGHT.

AMERICA TO GREAT BRITAIN.

ALL hail! thou noble land,
Our Fathers' native soil!
O, stretch thy mighty hand,
Gigantic grown by toil,
O'er the vast Atlantic wave to our shore!
For thou with magic might Canst reach to where the light
Of Phœbus travels bright
The world o'er!

The genius of our clime
From his pine-embattled steep
Shall hail the guest sublime;
While the Tritons of the deep
With their conchs the kindred league shall proclaim.
Then let the world combine, —
O'er the main our naval line
Like the Milky Way shall shine
Bright in fame!

Though ages long have passed
 Since our Fathers left their home,
 Their pilot in the blast,
 O'er untravelled seas to roam,
 Yet lives the blood of England in our veins !
 And shall we not proclaim
 That blood of honest fame
 Which no tyranny can tame
 By its chains ?

While the language free and bold
 Which the Bard of Avon sung,
 In which our Milton told
 How the vault of heaven rung
 When Satan, blasted, fell with his host ;
 While this, with reverence meet,
 Ten thousand echoes greet,
 From rock to rock repeat
 Round our coast ;

While the manners, while the arts,
 That mould a nation's soul,
 Still cling around our hearts, —
 Between let Ocean roll,
 Our joint communion breaking with the sun :
 Yet still from either beach
 The voice of blood shall reach,
 More audible than speech,
 "We are One."

WASHINGTON ALLSTON.

SONG OF MARION'S MEN.

OUR band is few, but true and tried,
 Our leader frank and bold ;
 The British soldier trembles
 When Marion's name is told.
 Our fortress is the good greenwood,
 Our tent the cypress-tree ;
 We know the forest round us,
 As seamen know the sea ;
 We know its walls of thorny vines,
 Its glades of reedy grass,
 Its safe and silent islands
 Within the dark morass.

Woe to the English soldiery
 That little dread us near !
 On them shall light at midnight
 A strange and sudden fear ;
 When, waking to their tents on fire,
 They grasp their arms in vain,
 And they who stand to face us
 Are beat to earth again ;
 And they who fly in terror deem
 A mighty host behind,
 And hear the tramp of thousands
 Upon the hollow wind.

Then sweet the hour that brings release
 From danger and from toil ;
 We talk the battle over,
 And share the battle's spoil.
 The woodland rings with laugh and shout,
 As if a hunt were up,
 And woodland flowers are gathered
 To crown the soldier's cup.
 With merry songs we mock the wind
 That in the pine-top grieves,
 And slumber long and sweetly
 On beds of oaken leaves.

Well knows the fair and friendly moon
 The band that Marion leads, —
 The glitter of their rifles,
 The scampering of their steeds.
 'T is life to guide the fiery barb
 Across the moonlight plain ;
 'T is life to feel the night-wind
 That lifts his tossing mane.
 A moment in the British camp —
 A moment — and away
 Back to the pathless forest,
 Before the peep of day.

Grave men there are by broad Santee,
 Grave men with hoary hairs ;
 Their hearts are all with Marion,
 For Marion are their prayers.
 And lovely ladies greet our band
 With kindest welcoming,
 With smiles like those of summer,
 And tears like those of spring.
 For them we wear these trusty arms,
 And lay them down no more
 Till we have driven the Briton
 Forever from our shore.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

HYMN :

SUNG AT THE COMPLETION OF THE CONCORD MONUMENT,
 APRIL 19, 1836.

By the rude bridge that arched the flood,
 Their flag to April's breeze unfurled,
 Here once the embattled farmers stood,
 And fired the shot heard round the world.

The foe long since in silence slept ;
 Alike the conqueror silent sleeps ;
 And Time the ruined bridge has swept
 Down the dark stream which seaward creeps.

On this green bank, by this soft stream,
 We set to-day a votive stone ;
 That memory may their deed redeem,
 When, like our sires, our sons are gone.

Spirit, that made those heroes dare
To die, or leave their children free,
Bid Time and Nature gently spare
The shaft we raise to them and thee.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

WARREN'S ADDRESS.

STAND ! the ground's your own, my braves !
Will ye give it up to slaves ?
Will ye look for greener graves ?
Hope ye mercy still ?
What's the mercy despots feel ?
Hear it in that battle-peal !
Read it on yon bristling steel !
Ask it, — ye who will.

Fear ye foes who kill for hire ?
Will ye to your homes retire ?
Look behind you ! — they're afire !
And, before you, see
Who have done it ! From the vale
On they come ! — and will ye quail ?
Leaden rain and iron hail
Let their welcome be !

In the God of battles trust !
Die we may, — and die we must :
But, O, where can dust to dust
Be consigned so well,
As where heaven its dew shall shed
On the martyred patriot's bed,
And the rocks shall raise their head,
Of his deeds to tell ?

JOHN PIERPONT.

CARMEN BELLICOSUM.

In their ragged regimentals
Stood the old Continentals,
Yielding not,
When the grenadiers were lunging,
And like hail fell the plunging Cannon-shot ;
When the files
Of the isles,
From the smoky night encampment, bore the banner of the rampant
Unicorn,
And grummer, grummer, grummer rolled the roll of the drummer,
Through the morn !

Then with eyes to the front all,
And with guns horizontal,
Stood our sires ;
And the balls whistled deadly,
And in streams flashing redly
Blazed the fires ;

As the roar
On the shore,
Swept the strong battle-breakers o'er the green-sodded acres
Of the plain ;
And louder, louder, louder, cracked the black gunpowder,
Cracking amain !

Now like smiths at their forges
Worked the red St. George's Cannoneers ;
And the "villanous saltpetre"
Rung a fierce, discordant metre
Round their ears ;
As the swift
Storm-drift,
With hot sweeping anger, came the horseguards' clangor
On our flanks ;
Then higher, higher, higher, burned the old-fashioned fire
Through the ranks !

Then the old-fashioned colonel
Galloped through the white infernal
Powder-cloud ;
And his broad sword was swinging,
And his brazen throat was ringing
Trumpet-loud.
Then the blue
Bullets flew,
And the trooper-jackets reddened at the touch of the leaden
Rifle-breath ;
And rounder, rounder, rounder, roared the iron six-pounder,
Hurling death !

GUY HUMPHREY MCMMASTER.

PAUL REVERE'S RIDE.

LISTEN, my children, and you shall hear
Of the midnight ride of Paul Revere,
On the eighteenth of April, in 'Seventy-five :
Hardly a man is now alive
Who remembers that famous day and year.

He said to his friend, "If the British march
By land or sea from the town to-night,
Hang a lantern aloft in the belfry arch
Of the North Church tower as a signal light, —
One, if by land, and two, if by sea ;
And I on the opposite shore will be,
Ready to ride and spread the alarm
Through every Middlesex village and farm,
For the country folk to be up and to arm."

Then he said, "Good night!" and with muffled oar

Silently rowed to the Charlestown shore,
Just as the moon rose over the bay,
Where swinging wide at her moorings lay
The Somerset, British man-of-war;
A phantom ship, with each mast and spar
Across the moon like a prison bar,
And a huge black hulk, that was magnified
By its own reflection in the tide.

Meanwhile, his friend, through alley and street,
Wanders and watches with eager ears,
Till in the silence around him he hears,
The muster of men at the barrack door,
The sound of arms, and the tramp of feet,
And the measured tread of the grenadiers,
Marching down to their boats on the shore.

Then he climbed the tower of the Old North Church

By the wooden stairs, with stealthy tread,
To the belfry-chamber overhead,
And startled the pigeons from their perch
On the sombre rafters, that round him made
Masses and moving shapes of shade, —
By the trembling ladder, steep and tall,
To the highest window in the wall,
Where he paused to listen and look down
A moment on the roofs of the town,
And the moonlight flowing over all.

Beneath, in the churchyard, lay the dead,
In their night-encampment on the hill,
Wrapped in silence so deep and still
That he could hear, like a sentinel's tread,
The watchful night-wind, as it went
Creeping along from tent to tent,
And seeming to whisper, "All is well!"
A moment only he feels the spell
Of the place and the hour, and the secret dread
Of the lonely belfry and the dead;
For suddenly all his thoughts are bent
On a shadowy something far away,
Where the river widens to meet the bay, —
A line of black that bends and floats
On the rising tide, like a bridge of boats.

Meanwhile, impatient to mount and ride,
Booted and spurred, with a heavy stride,
On the opposite shore walked Paul Revere.
Now he patted his horse's side,
Now gazed at the landscape far and near,
Then, impetuous, stamped the earth,
And turned and tightened his saddle-girth;
But mostly he watched with eager search
The belfry-tower of the Old North Church,

As it rose above the graves on the hill,
Lonely and spectral and sombre and still.
And lo! as he looks, on the belfry's height
A glimmer, and then a gleam of light!
He springs to the saddle, the bridle he turns,
But lingers and gazes, till full on his sight
A second lamp in the belfry burns!

A hurry of hoofs in a village street,
A shape in the moonlight, a bulk in the dark,
And beneath, from the pebbles, in passing, a spark

Struck out by a steed flying fearless and fleet:
That was all! And yet, through the gloom and the light,

The fate of a nation was riding that night;
And the spark struck out by that steed, in his flight,

Kindled the land into flame with its heat.

He has left the village and mounted the steep,
And beneath him, tranquil and broad and deep,
Is the Mystic, meeting the ocean tides;
And under the alders, that skirt its edge,
Now soft on the sand, now loud on the ledge,
Is heard the tramp of his steed as he rides.

It was twelve by the village clock
When he crossed the bridge into Medford town.
He heard the crowing of the cock,
And the barking of the farmer's dog,
And felt the damp of the river fog,
That rises after the sun goes down.

It was one by the village clock
When he galloped into Lexington.
He saw the gilded weathercock
Swim in the moonlight as he passed,
And the meeting-house windows, blank and bare,
Gaze at him with a spectral glare,
As if they already stood aghast
At the bloody work they would look upon.

It was two by the village clock
When he came to the bridge in Concord town.
He heard the bleating of the flock,
And the twitter of birds among the trees,
And felt the breath of the morning breeze
Blowing over the meadows brown.
And one was safe and asleep in his bed
Who at the bridge would be first to fall,
Who that day would be lying dead,
Pierced by a British musket-ball.

You know the rest. In the books you have read,
How the British Regulars fired and fled, —
How the farmers gave them ball for ball,
From behind each fence and farm-yard wall,

Chasing the redcoats down the lane,
Then crossing the fields to emerge again
Under the trees at the turn of the road,
And only pausing to fire and load.

So through the night rode Paul Revere ;
And so through the night went his cry of alarm
To every Middlesex village and farm, —
A cry of defiance and not of fear,
A voice in the darkness, a knock at the door,
And a word that shall echo forevermore !
For, borne on the night-wind of the Past,
Through all our history, to the last,
In the hour of darkness and peril and need,
The people will waken and listen to hear
The hurrying hoof-beats of that steed
And the midnight message of Paul Revere.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

THE AMERICAN FLAG.

WHEN Freedom, from her mountain height,
Unfurled her standard to the air,
She tore the azure robe of night,
And set the stars of glory there !
She mingled with its gorgeous dyes
The milky baldrick of the skies,
And striped its pure, celestial white
With streakings of the morning light ;
Then, from his mansion in the sun,
She called her eagle-bearer down,
And gave into his mighty hand
The symbol of her chosen land !

Majestic monarch of the cloud !
Who rear'st aloft thy regal form,
To hear the tempest trumping loud,
And see the lightning lances driven,
When strive the warriors of the storm,
And rolls the thunder-drum of heaven, —
Child of the Sun ! to thee 't is given
To guard the banner of the free,
To hover in the sulphur smoke,
To ward away the battle-stroke,
And bid its blendings shine afar,
Like rainbows on the cloud of war,
The harbingers of victory !

Flag of the brave ! thy folds shall fly,
The sign of hope and triumph high !
When speaks the signal-trumpet tone,
And the long line comes gleaming on,
Ere yet the life-blood, warm and wet,
Has dimmed the glistening bayonet,
Each soldier's eye shall brightly turn
To where thy sky-born glories burn,
And, as his springing steps advance,
Catch war and vengeance from the glance.

And when the cannon-mouthings loud
Heave in wild wreaths the battle shroud,
And gory sabres rise and fall
Like shoots of flame on midnight's pall,
Then shall thy meteor glances glow,
And covering foes shall shrink beneath
Each gallant arm that strikes below
That lovely messenger of death.

Flag of the seas ! on ocean wave
Thy stars shall glitter o'er the brave ;
When death, careering on the gale,
Sweeps darkly round the bellied sail,
And frightened waves rush wildly back
Before the broadside's reeling rack,
Each dying wanderer of the sea
Shall look at once to heaven and thee,
And smile to see thy splendors fly
In triumph o'er his closing eye.

Flag of the free heart's hope and home,
By angel hands to valor given !
Thy stars have lit the welkin dome,
And all thy hues were born in heaven.
Forever float that standard sheet !
Where breathes the foe but falls before us,
With Freedom's soil beneath our feet,
And Freedom's banner streaming o'er us !

JOSEPH RODMAN DRAKE.

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER.

O SAY, can you see by the dawn's early light
What so proudly we hailed at the twilight's last gleaming ? —
Whose broad stripes and bright stars, through the perilous fight
O'er the ramparts we watched, were so gallantly streaming !
And the rocket's red glare, the bombs bursting in air,
Gave proof through the night that our flag was still there ;
O say, does that star-spangled banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave ?

On that shore, dimly seen through the mists of the deep,
Where the foe's haughty host in dread silence
reposes,
What is that which the breeze, o'er the towering
steep,
As it fitfully blows, now conceals, now discloses ?
Now it catches the gleam of the morning's first beam,
In full glory reflected, now shines on the stream ;

'T is the star-spangled banner! O, long may it wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!

And where is that band who so vauntingly swore
That the havoc of war and the battle's confusion
A home and a country should leave us no more?
Their blood has washed out their foul footsteps' pollution.

No refuge could save the hireling and slave
From the terror of flight or the gloom of the grave;
And the star-spangled banner in triumph doth wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!

O, thus be it ever when freemen shall stand Between their loved homes and the war's desolation!

Blest with vict'ry and peace, may the Heaven-rescued land
Praise the Power that hath made and preserved us a nation.

Then conquer we must, when our cause it is just,
And this be our motto, "In God is our trust;"
And the star-spangled banner in triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

FRANCIS SCOTT KEY.

THE LITTLE CLOUD.

[1853.]

As when, on Carmel's sterile steep,
The ancient prophet bowed the knee,
And seven times sent his servant forth
To look toward the distant sea;

There came at last a little cloud,
Scarce larger than the human hand,
Spreading and swelling till it broke
In showers on all the herbless land;

And hearts were glad, and shouts went up,
And praise to Israel's mighty God,
As the sear hills grew bright with flowers,
And verdure clothed the valley sod, —

Even so our eyes have waited long;
But now a little cloud appears,
Spreading and swelling as it glides
Onward into the coming years.

Bright clond of Liberty! full soon,
Far stretching from the ocean strand,
Thy glorious folds shall spread abroad,
Encircling our beloved land.

Like the sweet rain on Judah's hills,
The glorious boon of love shall fall,
And our bond millions shall arise,
As at an angel's trumpet-call.

Then shall a shout of joy go up, —
The wild, glad cry of freedom come
From hearts long crushed by cruel hands,
And songs from lips long sealed and dumb;

And every bondman's chain be broke,
And every soul that moves abroad
In this wide realm shall know and feel
The blessed Liberty of God.

JOHN HOWARD BRYANT.

SONNET.

WRITTEN WHILE IN PRISON FOR DENOUNCING THE DOMESTIC SLAVE-TRADE.

HIGH walls and huge the body may confine,
And iron gates obstruct the prisoner's gaze,
And massive bolts may baffle his design,
And vigilant keepers watch his devious ways;
But scorns the immortal mind such base control:
No chains can bind it and no cell enclose.
Swifter than light it flies from pole to pole,
And in a flash from earth to heaven it goes.
It leaps from mount to mount; from vale to vale
It wanders, plucking honeyed fruits and flowers;
It visits home to hear the fireside tale
And in sweet converse pass the joyous hours;
'T is up before the sun, roaming afar,
And in its watches wearies every star.

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.

SLAVERY.

FROM "THE TIMEPIECE": "THE TASK," BOOK II.

O FOR a lodge in some vast wilderness,
Some boundless contiguity of shade,
Where rumor of oppression and deceit,
Of unsuccessful or successful war,
Might never reach me more! My ear is pained,
My soul is sick, with every day's report
Of wrong and outrage with which earth is filled.
There is no flesh in man's obdurate heart;
It does not feel for man; the natural bond
Of brotherhood is severed as the flax,
That falls asunder at the touch of fire.
He finds his fellow guilty of a skin
Not colored like his own, and, having power
To enforce the wrong, for such a worthy cause
Dooms and devotes him as his lawful prey.
Lands intersected by a narrow frith
Abhor each other. Mountains interposed

Make enemies of nations, who had else
 Like kindred drops been mingled into one.
 Thus man devotes his brother, and destroys ;
 And, worse than all, and most to be deplored
 As human nature's broadest, foulest blot,
 Chains him, and tasks him, and exacts his sweat
 With stripes, that Mercy, with a bleeding heart,
 Weeps, when she sees inflicted on a beast.
 Then what is man ? And what man, seeing this,
 And having human feelings, does not blush,
 And hang his head, to think himself a man ?
 I would not have a slave to till my ground,
 To carry me, to fan me while I sleep,
 And tremble when I wake, for all the wealth
 That sinews bought and sold have ever earned.
 No ; dear as freedom is, and in my heart's
 Just estimation prized above all price,
 I had much rather be myself the slave,
 And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.
 We have no slaves at home. — Then why abroad ?
 And they themselves once ferried o'er the wave
 That parts us are emancipate and loosed.
 Slaves cannot breathe in England ; if their lungs
 Receive our air, that moment they are free ;
 They touch our country, and their shackles fall.
 That's noble, and bespeaks a nation proud
 And jealous of the blessing. Spread it then,
 And let it circulate through every vein
 Of all your empire ; that, where Britain's power
 Is felt, mankind may feel her mercy too.

WILLIAM COWPER.

BATTLE-HYMN OF THE REPUBLIC.

MINE eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord :
 He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes
 of wrath are stored ;
 He hath loosed the fateful lightning of his terrible swift sword :
 His truth is marching on.

I have seen him in the watch-fires of a hundred circling camps ;
 They have builded him an altar in the evening
 dews and damps ;
 I can read his righteous sentence by the dim and flaring lamps :
 His day is marching on.

I have read a fiery gospel, writ in burnished rows of steel :
 "As ye deal with my contemners, so with you
 my grace shall deal ;
 Let the Hero, born of woman, crush the serpent
 with his heel,
 Since God is marching on."

He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat ;
 He is sifting out the hearts of men before his judgment-seat :
 O, be swift, my soul, to answer him ! be jubilant,
 my feet !
 Our God is marching on.

In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across
 the sea,
 With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me ;
 As he died to make men holy, let us die to make men free,
 While God is marching on.

JULIA WARD HOWE.

SHERIDAN'S RIDE.

Up from the South at break of day,
 Bringing to Winchester fresh dismay,
 The affrighted air with a shudder bore,
 Like a herald in haste, to the chieftain's door,
 The terrible grumble and rumble and roar,
 Telling the battle was on once more,
 And Sheridan twenty miles away.

And wider still those billows of war
 Thundered along the horizon's bar ;
 And louder yet into Winchester rolled
 The roar of that red sea uncontrolled,
 Making the blood of the listener cold
 As he thought of the stake in that fiery fray,
 With Sheridan twenty miles away.

But there is a road from Winchester town,
 A good, broad highway, leading down ;
 And there, through the flash of the morning light,
 A steed as black as the steeds of night
 Was seen to pass as with eagle flight.
 As if he knew the terrible need,
 He stretched away with the utmost speed ;
 Hills rose and fell, — but his heart was gay,
 With Sheridan fifteen miles away.

Still sprung from those swift hoofs, thundering
 South,
 The dust, like smoke from the cannon's mouth ;
 Or the trail of a comet, sweeping faster and faster,
 Foreboding to traitors the doom of disaster.
 The heart of the steed and the heart of the master
 Were beating, like prisoners assaulting their walls,
 Impatient to be where the battle-field calls ;
 Every nerve of the charger was strained to full
 play,
 With Sheridan only ten miles away.

Under his spurning feet, the road
 Like an arrowy Alpine river flowed,
 And the landscape sped away behind,
 Like an ocean flying before the wind ;
 And the steed, like a bark fed with furnace ire,
 Swept on, with his wild eyes full of fire ;
 But, lo ! he is nearing his heart's desire,
 He is snuffing the smoke of the roaring fray,
 With Sheridan only five miles away.

The first that the General saw were the groups
 Of stragglers, and then the retreating troops ;
 What was done, — what to do, — a glance told him both,

And, striking his spurs with a terrible oath,
 He dashed down the line mid a storm of huzzas,
 And the wave of retreat checked its course there,
 because

The sight of the master compelled it to pause.
 With foam and with dust the black charger was
 gray ;

By the flash of his eye, and his nostril's play,
 He seemed to the whole great army to say,
 " I have brought you Sheridan all the way
 From Winchester down, to save the day ! "

Hurrah, hurrah for Sheridan !
 Hurrah, hurrah for horse and man !
 And when their statues are placed on high,
 Under the dome of the Union sky, —
 The American soldier's Temple of Fame, —
 There with the glorious General's name
 Be it  $\tau$  id in letters both bold and bright :
 " Here is the steel that saved the day
 By carrying Sheridan into the fight,
 From Winchester, — twenty miles away ! "

THOMAS BUCHANAN READ.

THE BLACK REGIMENT.

[MAY 27, 1863.]

DARK as the clouds of even,
 Ranked in the western heaven,
 Waiting the breath that lifts
 All the dead mass, and drifts
 Tempest and falling brand
 Over a ruined land, —
 So still and orderly,
 Arm to arm, knee to knee,
 Waiting the great event,
 Stands the black regiment.

Down the long dusky line
 Teeth gleam and eyeballs shine ;
 And the bright bayonet,
 Bristling and firmly set,

Flashed with a purpose grand,
 Long ere the sharp command
 Of the fierce rolling drum
 Told them their time had come,
 Told them what work was sent
 For the black regiment.

" Now," the flag-sergeant cried,
 " Though death and hell betide,
 Let the whole nation see
 If we are fit to be
 Free in this land ; or bound
 Down, like the whining hound, —
 Bound with red stripes of pain
 In our cold chains again ! "
 O, what a shout there went
 From the black regiment !

" Charge ! " Trump and drum awoke ;
 Onward the bondmen broke ;
 Bayonet and sabre-stroke
 Vainly opposed their rush.
 Through the wild battle's crush,
 With but one thought aflush,
 Driving their lords like chaff,
 In the guns' mouths they laugh ;
 Or at the slippery brands
 Leaping with open hands,
 Down they tear man and horse,
 Down in their awful course ;
 Trampling with bloody heel
 Over the crashing steel, —
 All their eyes forward bent,
 Rushed the black regiment.

" Freedom ! " their battle-cry, —
 " Freedom ! or leave to die ! "
 Ah ! and they meant the word,
 Not as with us 't is heard,
 Not a mere party shout ;
 They gave their spirits out,
 Trusted the end to God,
 And on the gory sod
 Rolled in triumphant blood.
 Glad to strike one free blow,
 Whether for weal or woe ;
 Glad to breathe one free breath,
 Though on the lips of death ;
 Praying, — alas ! in vain ! —
 That they might fall again,
 So they could once more see
 That burst to liberty !
 This was what " freedom " lent
 To the black regiment.

Hundreds on hundreds fell ;
 But they are resting well ;
 Scourges and shackles strong
 Never shall do them wrong.

O, to the living few,
Soldiers, be just and true!
Hail them as comrades tried;
Fight with them side by side;
Never, in field or tent,
Scorn the black regiment!

GEORGE HENRY BOKER.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE.

Up from the meadows rich with corn,
Clear in the cool September morn,
The clustered spires of Frederick stand
Green-walled by the hills of Maryland.
Round about them orchards sweep,
Apple and peach tree fruited deep,
Fair as a garden of the Lord
To the eyes of the famished rebel horde,
On that pleasant morn of the early fall
When Lee marched over the mountain wall, —
Over the mountains, winding down,
Horse and foot into Frederick town.
Forty flags with their silver stars,
Forty flags with their crimson bars,
Flapped in the morning wind; the sun
Of noon looked down, and saw not one.
Up rose old Barbara Frietchie then,
Bowed with her fourscore years and ten;
Bravest of all in Frederick town,
She took up the flag the men hauled down;
In her attic-window the staff she set,
To show that one heart was loyal yet.
Up the street came the rebel tread,
Stonewall Jackson riding ahead.
Under his slouched hat left and right
He glanced: the old flag met his sight.
“Halt!” — the dust-brown ranks stood fast;
“Fire!” — out blazed the rifle-blast.
It shivered the window, pane and sash;
It rent the banner with seam and gash.
Quick, as it fell, from the broken staff
Dame Barbara snatched the silken scarf;
She leaned far out on the window-sill,
And shook it forth with a royal will.

“Shoot, if you must, this old gray head,
But spare your country’s flag,” she said.

A shade of sadness, a blush of shame,
Over the face of the leader came;

The nobler nature within him stirred
To life at that woman’s deed and word:

“Who touches a hair of yon gray head
Dies like a dog! March on!” he said.

All day long through Frederick street
Sounded the tread of marching feet;

All day long that free flag tost
Over the heads of the rebel host.

Ever its torn folds rose and fell
On the loyal winds that loved it well;

And through the hill-gaps sunset light
Shone over it with a warm good-night.

Barbara Frietchie’s work is o’er,
And the rebel rides on his raids no more.

Honor to her! and let a tear
Fall, for her sake, on Stonewall’s bier.

Over Barbara Frietchie’s grave,
Flag of freedom and union, wave!

Peace and order and beauty draw
Round thy symbol of light and law;

And ever the stars above look down
On thy stars below in Frederick town!

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

THE CAUSE OF THE SOUTH.

FROM “SENTINEL SONGS.”

THE fallen cause still waits, —
Its bard has not come yet,
His song — through one of to-morrow’s gates
Shall shine — but never set.

But when he comes — he’ll sweep
A harp with tears all stringed,
And the very notes he strikes will weep,
As they come, from his hand, woe-winged.

Ah! grand shall be his strain,
And his songs shall fill all climes,
And the Rebels shall rise and march again
Down the lines of his glorious rhymes.

And through his verse shall gleam
The swords that flashed in vain,
And the men who wore the gray shall seem
To be marshalling again.

But hush ! between his words
Peer faces sad and pale,
And you hear the sound of broken chords
Beat through the poet's wail.

Through his verse the orphans cry —
The terrible undertone !
And the father's curse and the mother's sigh,
And the desolate young wife's moan.

I sing, with a voice too low
To be heard beyond to-day,
In minor keys of my people's woe ;
And my songs pass away.

To-morrow hears them not —
To-morrow belongs to fame :
My songs — like the birds' — will be forgot,
And forgotten shall be my name.

And yet who knows ! betimes
The grandest songs depart,
While the gentle, humble, and low-toned rhymes
Will echo from heart to heart.

ABRAM J. RYAN.

LAUS DEO !

[On hearing the bells ring on the passage of the Constitutional Amendment abolishing slavery.]

It is done !
Clang of bell and roar of gun
Send the tidings up and down.
How the belfries rock and reel !
How the great guns, peal on peal,
Fling the joy from town to town !

Ring, O bells !
Every stroke exulting tells
Of the burial hour of crime.
Loud and long, that all may hear,
Ring for every listening ear
Of Eternity and Time !

Let us kneel :
God's own voice is in that peal,
And this spot is holy ground.
Lord, forgive us ! What are we,
That our eyes this glory see,
That our ears have heard the sound !

For the Lord
On the whirlwind is abroad ;
In the earthquake he has spoken ;
He has smitten with his thunder
The iron walls asunder,
And the gates of brass are broken !

Loud and long
Lift the old exulting song ;
Sing with Miriam by the sea :
He has cast the mighty down ;
Horse and rider sink and drown ;
He has triumphed gloriously !

Did we dare,
In our agony of prayer,
Ask for more than He has done ?
When was ever his right hand
Over any time or land
Stretched as now beneath the sun ?

How they pale,
Ancient myth and song and tale,
In this wonder of our days,
When the cruel rod of war
Blossoms white with righteous law,
And the wrath of man is praise !

Blotted out !
All within and all about
Shall a fresher life begin ;
Freer breathe the universe
As it rolls its heavy curse
On the dead and buried sin.

It is done !
In the circuit of the sun
Shall the sound thereof go forth.
It shall bid the sad rejoice,
It shall give the dumb a voice,
It shall belt with joy the earth !

Ring and swing,
Bells of joy ! On morning's wing
Send the song of praise abroad !
With a sound of broken chains,
Tell the nations that He reigns,
Who alone is Lord and God !

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

BOSTON HYMN.

READ IN MUSIC HALL, JAN. 1, 1863.

THE word of the Lord by night
To the watching Pilgrims came,
As they sat by the seaside,
And filled their hearts with flame.

God said, I am tired of kings,
I suffer them no more ;
Up to my ear the morning brings
The outrage of the poor.

Think ye I made this ball
A field of havoc and war,
Where tyrants great and tyrants small
Might harry the weak and poor ?

My angel, — his name is Freedom, —
Choose him to be your king ;
He shall cut pathways east and west,
And fend you with his wing.

Lo ! I uncover the land
Which I hid of old time in the West,
As the sculptor uncovers the statue
When he has wrought his best ;

I show Columbia, of the rocks
Which dip their foot in the seas,
And soar to the air-borne flocks
Of clouds, and the boreal fleece.

I will divide my goods ;
Call in the wretch and slave :
None shall rule but the humble,
And none but Toil shall have.

I will have never a noble,
No lineage counted great ;
Fishers and choppers and ploughmen
Shall constitute a state.

Go, cut down trees in the forest,
And trim the straightest boughs ;
Cut down trees in the forest,
And build me a wooden house.

Call the people together,
The young men and the sires,
The digger in the harvest-field,
Hireling, and him that hires ;

And here in a pine state-house
They shall choose men to rule
In every needful faculty,
In church and state and school.

Lo, now ! if these poor men
Can govern the land and sea,
And make just laws below the sun,
As planets faithful be.

And ye shall succor men ;
'T is nobleness to serve ;
Help them who cannot help again :
Beware from right to swerve.

I break your bonds and masterships,
And I unchain the slave :
Free be his heart and hand henceforth
As wind and wandering wave.

I cause from every creature
His proper good to flow ;
As much as he is and doeth,
So much he shall bestow.

But, laying hands on another
To coin his labor and sweat,
He goes in pawn to his victim
For eternal years in debt.

To-day unbind the captive,
So only are ye unbound ;
Lift up a people from the dust,
Trump of their rescue, sound !

Pay ransom to the owner,
And fill the bag to the brim.
Who is the owner ? The slave is owner,
And ever was. Pay him.

O North ! give him beauty for rags,
And honor, O South ! for his shame ;
Nevada ! coin thy golden crags
With Freedom's image and name.

Up ! and the dusky race
That sat in darkness long,
Be swift their feet as antelopes,
And as behemoth strong.

Come, East and West and North,
By races, as snow-flakes,
And carry my purpose forth,
Which neither halts nor shakes.

My will fulfilled shall be,
For, in daylight or in dark,
My thunderbolt has eyes to see
His way home to the mark.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

THE PEOPLE'S SONG OF PEACE.

FROM THE "SONG OF THE CENTENNIAL."

THE grass is green on Bunker Hill,
The waters sweet in Brandywine ;
The sword sleeps in the scabbard still,
The farmer keeps his flock and vine ;
Then who would mar the scene to-day
With vaunt of battle-field or fray ?

The brave corn lifts in regiments
 Ten thousand sabres in the sun ;
 The ricks replace the battle-tents,
 The bannered tassels toss and run.
 The neighing steed, the bugle's blast,
 These be but stories of the past.

The earth has healed her wounded breast,
 The cannons plough the field no more ;
 The heroes rest ! O, let them rest
 In peace along the peaceful shore !
 They fought for peace, for peace they fell ;
 They sleep in peace, and all is well.

The fields forget the battles fought,
 The trenches wave in golden grain :
 Shall we neglect the lessons taught,
 And tear the wounds agape again ?
 Sweet Mother Nature, nurse the land,
 And heal her wounds with gentle hand.

Lo ! peace on earth ! Lo ! flock and fold !
 Lo ! rich abundance, fat increase,
 And valleys clad in sheen of gold !
 O, rise and sing a song of peace !
 For Theseus roams the land no more,
 And Janus rests with rusted door.

JOAQUIN MILLER.

Perish with him the folly that seeks through evil good !
 Long live the generous purpose unstained with human blood !
 Not the raid of midnight terror, but the thought which underlies ;
 Not the borderer's pride of daring, but the Christian's sacrifice.

Nevermore may yon Blue Ridges the Northern rifle hear,
 Nor see the light of blazing homes flash on the negro's spear ;
 But let the free-winged angel Truth their guarded passes scale,
 To teach that right is more than might, and justice more than mail !

So vainly shall Virginia set her battle in array ;
 In vain her trampling squadrons knead the winter snow with clay !
 She may strike the pouncing eagle, but she dares not harm the dove ;
 And every gate she bars to Hate shall open wide to Love !

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

BROWN OF OSSAWATOMIE.

JOHN BROWN OF OSSAWATOMIE spake on his dying day :

“I will not have to shrive my soul a priest in Slavery's pay ;
 But let some poor slave-mother whom I have striven to free,
 With her children, from the gallows-stair put up a prayer for me !”

John Brown of Ossawatomie, they led him out to die ;
 And lo ! a poor slave-mother with her little child
 pressed nigh :
 Then the bold, blue eye grew tender, and the old
 harsh face grew mild,
 As he stooped between the jeering ranks and kissed the negro's child !

The shadow of his stormy life that moment fell apart ;
 And they who blamed the bloody hand forgave
 the moving heart ;
 That kiss from all its guilty means redeemed the good intent,
 And round the grisly fighter's hair the martyr's aureole bent !

And sovereign law, that State's collected will,
 O'er thrones and globes elate
 Sits empress, crowning good, repressing ill.
 Smit by her sacred frown,
 The fiend, Dissension, like a vapor sinks ;
 And e'en the all-dazzling crown
 Hides his faint rays, and at her bidding shrinks.

Such was this heaven-loved isle,
 Than Lesbos fairer and the Cretan shore !
 No more shall freedom smile ?
 Shall Britons languish, and be men no more ?
 Since all must life resign,
 Those sweet rewards which decorate the brave
 'T is folly to decline,
 And steal inglorious to the silent grave.

SIR WILLIAM JONES.

THE FREEMAN.

FROM "THE WINTER MORNING WALK :"
 "THE TASK," BOOK VI.

HE is the freeman whom the truth makes free,
 And all are slaves beside. There's not a chain
 That hellish foes confederate for his harm
 Can wind around him, but he casts it off
 With as much ease as Samson his green withes.
 He looks abroad into the varied field
 Of nature ; and though poor, perhaps, compared
 With those whose mansions glitter in his sight,
 Calls the delightful scenery all his own.
 His are the mountains, and the valley his,
 And the resplendent rivers. His to enjoy
 With a propriety that none can feel
 But who, with filial confidence inspired

His freedom is the same in every state ;
 And no condition of this changeful life,
 So manifold in cares, whose every day
 Brings its own evil with it, makes it less.
 For he has wings that neither sickness, pain,
 Nor penury can cripple or confine ;
 No nook so narrow but he spreads them there

With ease, and is at large. The oppressor holds
 His body bound ; but knows not what a range
 His spirit takes, unconscious of a chain ;
 And that to bind him is a vain attempt,
 Whom God delights in, and in whom he dwells.

WILLIAM COWPER.

THE REFORMER.

ALL grim and soiled and brown with tan,
 I saw a Strong One, in his wrath,
 Smiting the godless shrines of man
 Along his path.

The Church beneath her trembling dome
 Essayed in vain her ghostly charm :
 Wealth shook within his gilded home
 With strange alarm.

Fraud from his secret chambers fled
 Before the sunlight bursting in :
 Sloth drew her pillow o'er her head
 To drown the din.

"Spare," Art implored, "yon holy pile ;
 That grand old time-worn turret spare :"
 Meek Reverence, kneeling in the aisle,
 Cried out, "Forbear !"

Gray-bearded Use, who, deaf and blind,
 Groped for his old accustomed stone,
 Leaned on his staff, and wept to find
 His seat o'erthrown.

Young Romance raised his dreamy eyes,
 O'erhurling with paly locks of gold, —
 "Why smite," he asked in sad surprise,
 "The fair, the old ?"

Yet louder rang the Strong One's stroke,
 Yet nearer flashed his axe's gleam ;
 Shuddering and sick of heart I woke,
 As from a dream.

I looked : aside the dust-cloud rolled, —
 The Waster seemed the Builder too ;
 Upspringing from the ruined Old
 I saw the New.

'T was but the ruin of the bad, —
 The wasting of the wrong and ill ;
 Whate'er of good the old time had
 Was living still.

Calm grew the brows of him I feared ;
 The frown which awed me passed away,
 And left behind a smile which cheered
 Like breaking day.

The grain grew green on battle-plains,
 O'er swarded war-mounds grazed the cow ;
 The slave stood forging from his chains
 The spade and plough.

Where frowned the fort, pavilions gay
 And cottage windows, flower-entwined,
 Looked out upon the peaceful bay
 And hills behind.

Through vine-wreathed cups with wine once red,
 The lights on brimming crystal fell,
 Drawn, sparkling, from the rivulet head
 And mossy well.

Through prison-walls, like Heaven-sent hope,
 Fresh breezes blew, and sunbeams strayed,
 And with the idle gallows-rope
 The young child played.

Where the doomed victim in his cell
 Had counted o'er the weary hours,
 Glad school-girls, answering to the bell,
 Came crowned with flowers.

Grown wiser for the lesson given,
 I fear no longer, for I know
 That where the share is deepest driven
 The best fruits grow.

The outworn rite, the old abuse,
 The pious fraud transparent grown,
 The good held captive in the use
 Of wrong alone, —

These wait their doom, from that great law
 Which makes the past time serve to-day ;
 And fresher life the world shall draw
 From their decay.

O backward-looking son of time !
 The new is old, the old is new,
 The cycle of a change sublime
 Still sweeping through.

So wisely taught the Indian seer ;
 Destroying Seva, forming Brahm,
 Who wake by turn Earth's love and fear,
 Are one, the same.

Idly as thou, in that old day
 Thou mournest, did thy sire repine ;
 So, in his time, thy child grown gray
 Shall sigh for thine.

But life shall on and upward go ;
 Th' eternal step of Progress beats
 To that great anthem, calm and slow,
 Which God repeats.

Take heart ! — the Waster builds again, —
 A charmed life old Goodness hath ;
 The tares may perish, — but the grain
 Is not for death.

God works in all things ; all obey
 His first propulsion from the night :
 Wake thou and watch ! — the world is gray
 With morning light !

FRAGMENTS.

THE LOVE OF COUNTRY.

No factious voice
 Called them unto the field of generous fame,
 But the poor consecrated love of home ;

SOLDIERS OF FREEDOM.

Yet 't is not helm or feather, —
 For ask yon despot, whether
 His plumed bands
 Could bring such hands
 And hearts as ours together.
 Leave pomps to those who need 'em, —
 Give man but heart and freedom,
 And proud he braves
 The gaudiest slaves
 That crawl where monarchs lead 'em.
 The sword may pierce the beaver,
 Stone walls in time may sever;
 'T is mind alone,
 Worth steel and stone,
 That keeps men free forever.
O, the sight entrancing. — T. MOORE.

When once more her hosts assemble,
 Let the tyrants only tremble;
 Smile they at this idle threat?
 Crimson tears will follow yet.
Waterloo. BYRON.

But William said, "He don't deserve
 The name of Faith's defender,
 Who would not venture life and limb
 To make a foe surrender.

"Brave boys," he said, "be not dismayed,
 For the loss of one commander,
 For God will be our king this day,
 And I 'll be general under."
From the Battle of the Boyne. OLD BALLAD.

The Power that led his chosen, by pillared cloud and flame,
 Through parted sea and desert waste, that Power

 He fails not — He — the loyal hearts that firm on Him rely;
 So put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your powder dry.*

HUMANITY'S HEROES.

No common object to your sight displays,
 But what with pleasure Heaven itself surveys,
 A brave man struggling in the storms of fate,
 And greatly falling with a falling state.
 While Cato gives his little senate laws,
 What bosom beats not in his country's cause?
 Who hears him groan, and does not wish to bleed?
 Who sees him act, but envies every deed?
Prologue to Mr. Addison's Cato. POPE.

* Cromwell, on a certain occasion, when his troops were about crossing a river to attack the enemy, concluded an address with these words: "Put your trust in God; but mind to keep your powder dry."

But whether on the scaffold high
 Or in the battle's van,
 The fittest place where man can die
 Is where he dies for man!

M. J. BARRY.

FREEDOM.

I must have liberty
 Withal, as large a charter as the wind,
 To blow on whom I please.
As You Like It, Act ii. Sc. 7. SHAKESPEARE.

Of old sat Freedom on the heights,
 The thunders breaking at her feet:
 Above her shook the starry lights:
 She heard the torrents meet.

Her open eyes desire the truth.
 The wisdom of a thousand years
 Is in them. May perpetual youth
 Keep dry their light from tears;

That her fair form may stand and shine,
 Make bright our days and light our dreams,
 Turning to scorn with lips divine
 The falsehood of extremes!
Of old sat Freedom on the heights. TENNYSON.

So Thought flung forward is the prophecy
 Of Truth's majestic march, and shows the way
 Where future time shall lead the proud array
 Of peace, of power, and love of liberty.
 SIR JOHN BOWRING.

No. Freedom has a thousand charms to show,
 That slaves, howe'er contented, never know.

Religion, virtue, truth, whate'er we call
 A blessing — Freedom is the pledge of all.
Table Talk. COWPER.

ENGLAND.

Daddy Neptune, one day, to Freedom did say,
 "If ever I lived upon dry land,
 The spot I should hit on would be little Britain!"
 Says Freedom, "Why, that 's my own island!"
 O, it 's a snug little island!
 A right little, tight little island!
 Search the globe round, none can be found
 So happy as this little island.

The Tight Little Island. T. DIBDIN.

We must be free or die, who speak the tongue
 That Shakespeare spake; the faith and morals

Which Milton held. In everything we are sprung
 Of earth's first blood, have titles manifold.

Poems dedicated to National Independence, Part I. Sonnet xvi. WORDSWORTH.

This royal throne of kings, this sceptred isle,
 This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,
 This other Eden, demi-paradise ;
 This fortress, built by Nature for herself,
 Against infection and the hand of war ;
 This happy breed of men, this little world,
 This precious stone set in the silver sea,
 Which serves it in the office of a wall,
 Or as a moat defensive to a house,
 Against the envy of less happier lands ;
 This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England.

King Richard II., Act ii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

This England never did, nor never shall,
 Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror.

King John, Act v. Sc. 7.

SHAKESPEARE.

Fired at the sound, my genius spreads her wing,
 And flies where Britain courts the western spring ;

Pride in their port, defiance in their eye,
 I see the lords of humankind pass by ;
 Intent on high designs, a thoughtful band,
 By forms unfashioned fresh from nature's hand,
 Fierce in their native hardness of soul,
 True to imagined right, above control, —
 While even the peasant boasts these rights to scan,

And learns to venerate himself as man.

Thine, Freedom, thine the blessings pictured here,

Thine are those charms that dazzle and endear.

The Traveller.

GOLDSMITH.

A land of settled government,
 A land of just and old renown,
 Where freedom broadens slowly down,
 From precedent to precedent :

Where faction seldom gathers head ;
 But, by degrees to fulness wrought,
 The strength of some diffusive thought
 Hath time and space to work and spread.

The Land of Lands.

TENNYSON.

God save our gracious king,
 Long live our noble king,
 God save the king.
 Send him victorious,
 Happy and glorious,
 Long to reign over us,
 God save the king.

God save the King.

HENRY CAREY.

SWITZERLAND.

Thus every good his native wilds impart,
 Imprints the patriot passion on his heart ;
 And e'en those ills, that round his mansion rise,
 Enhance the bliss his scanty fund supplies.
 Dear is that shed to which his soul conforms,
 And dear that hill which lifts him to the storms ;
 And as a child, when scaring sounds molest,
 Clings close and closer to the mother's breast,
 So the loud torrent and the whirlwind's roar
 But bind him to his native mountains more.

AMERICA.

Hail Columbia ! happy land !
 Hail ye heroes, heaven-born band !

Who fought and bled in freedom's cause,
 Who fought and bled in freedom's cause,
 And when the storm of war was gone,
 Enjoyed the peace your valor won !

Let independence be our boast,
 Ever mindful what it cost ;
 Ever grateful for the prize,
 Let its altar reach the skies.

Firm — united — let us be,
 Rallying round our liberty ;
 As a band of brothers joined,
 Peace and safety we shall find.

Hail Columbia.

They love their land because it is their own,
 And scorn to give aught other reason why ;
 Would shake hands with a king upon his throne,
 And think it kindness to his majesty.

THE BALLOT-BOX.

Along the street
 The shadows meet
 Of Destiny, whose hands conceal
 The moulds of fate
 That shape the State,
 And make or mar the common weal.

Around I see
 The powers that be ;
 I stand by Empire's primal springs ;
 And princes meet
 In every street,
 And hear the tread of uncrowned kings !

Not lightly fall
 Beyond recall
 The written scrolls a breath can float ;
 The crowning fact
 The kingliest act
 Of Freedom is the freeman's vote !

WHITTIER.

A weapon that comes down as still
 As snow-flakes fall upon the sod ;
 But executes a freeman's will,
 As lightning does the will of God ;
 And from its force, nor doors nor locks
 Can shield you ; — 't is the ballot-box.

“CENTENNIAL” ECHOES.

Sun of the stately Day,
 Let Asia into the shadow drift,
 Let Europe bask in thy ripened ray,
 And over the severing ocean lift
 A brow of broader splendor !
 Give light to the eager eyes
 Of the Land that waits to behold thee rise :
 The gladness of morning lend her,
 With the triumph of noon attend her,
 And the peace of the vesper skies !
 For lo ! she cometh now
 With hope on the lip and pride on the brow,
 Stronger, and dearer, and fairer,
 To smile on the love we bear her, —
 To live, as we dreamed her and sought her,
 Liberty's latest daughter !
 In the clefts of the rocks, in the secret places,
 We found her traces ;
 On the hills, in the crash of woods that fall,
 We heard her call ;
 When the lines of battle broke,
 We saw her face in the fiery smoke ;
 Through toil, and anguish, and desolation,
 We followed, and found her
 With the grace of a virgin Nation
 As a sacred zone around her !
 Who shall rejoice
 With a righteous voice,
 Far-heard through the ages, if not she ?
 For the menace is dumb that defied her,
 The doubt is dead that denied her,
 And she stands acknowledged, and strong, and free !

BAYARD TAYLOR.

Our fathers' God ! from out whose hand
 The centuries fall like grains of sand,
 We meet to-day, united, free,
 And loyal to our land and thee,
 To thank thee for the era done,
 And trust thee for the opening one.

O, make thou us, through centuries long,
 In peace secure, in justice strong ;
 Around our gift of freedom draw
 The safeguards of thy righteous law ;
 And, cast in some diviner mould,
 Let the new cycle shame the old !

WHITTIER.

Long as thine Art shall love true love,
 Long as thy Science truth shall know,
 Long as thine Eagle harms no Dove,
 Long as thy Law by law shall grow,
 Long as thy God is God above,
 Thy brother every man below, —
 So long, dear Land of all my love,
 Thy name shall shine, thy fame shall glow !

Who cometh over the hills,
 Her garments with morning sweet,
 The dance of a thousand rills
 Making music before her feet ?
 Her presence freshens the air,
 Sunshine steals light from her face,
 The leaden footstep of Care
 Leaps to the tune of her pace,
 Fairness of all that is fair,
 Grace at the heart of all grace !
 Sweetener of hut and of hall,
 Bringer of life out of naught,
 Freedom, O, fairest of all
 The daughters of Time and Thought !

POEMS OF THE SEA.

They turned to the Earth, but she frowned on her child;

They turned to the Sea, and he smiled as of old:
Sweeter was the peril of the breakers white and wild,

Sweeter than the land, with its bondage and gold!

Bayard Taylor,

---

The star of love now shines above,

Cool zephyrs crisp the sea;

Among the leaves the wind-harp weaves
Its serenade for thee.

POEMS OF THE SEA.

THE SEA.

FROM "CHILDE HAROLD," CANTO IV.

THERE is a pleasure in the pathless woods,
There is a rapture on the lonely shore,
There is society where none intrudes
By the deep sea, and music in its roar :
I love not man the less, but nature more,
From these our interviews, in which I steal
From all I may be, or have been before,
To mingle with the universe, and feel
What I can ne'er express, yet cannot all conceal.

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue Ocean, — roll!
Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain ;
Man marks the earth with ruin, — his control
Stops with the shore ; — upon the watery plain
The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain
A shadow of man's ravage, save his own,
When, for a moment, like a drop of rain,
He sinks into thy depths with bubbling groan,
Without a grave, unknelt, uncoffined, and unknown.

His steps are not upon thy paths, — thy fields
Are not a spoil for him, — thou dost arise
And shake him from thee ; the vile strength
he wields
For earth's destruction thou dost all despise,
Spurning him from thy bosom to the skies,
And send'st him, shivering in thy playful spray
And howling, to his gods, where haply lies
His petty hope in some near port or bay,
And dashest him again to earth : — there let him
lay.

The armaments which thunderstrike the walls
Of rock-built cities, bidding nations quake
And monarchs tremble in their capitals,
The oak leviathans, whose huge ribs make
Their clay creator the vain title take
Of lord of thee and arbiter of war, —
These are thy toys, and, as the snowy flake,
They melt into thy yeast of waves, which mar
Alike the Armada's pride or spoils of Trafalgar.

Thy shores are empires, changed in all save
thee ;
Assyria, Greece, Rome, Carthage, what are they ?
Thy waters wasted them while they were free,
And many a tyrant since ; their shores obey
The stranger, slave, or savage ; their decay
Has dried up realms to deserts : not so thou ;
Unchangeable save to thy wild waves' play,
Time writes no wrinkles on thine azure brow ;
Such as creation's dawn beheld, thou rollest now.

Thou glorious mirror, where the Almighty's form
Glasses itself in tempests ; in all time,
Calm or convulsed, — in breeze, or gale, or storm,
Icing the pole, or in the torrid clime
Dark-heaving ; boundless, endless, and sublime,
The image of Eternity, — the throne
Of the Invisible ! even from out thy slime
The monsters of the deep are made ; each zone
Obeys thee ; thou goest forth, dread, fathomless, alone.

And I have loved thee, Ocean ! and my joy
Of youthful sports was on thy breast to be Borne, like thy bubbles, onward ; from a boy
I wantoned with thy breakers, — they to me
Were a delight ; and if the freshening sea
Made them a terror, 't was a pleasing fear ;
For I was as it were a child of thee,
And trusted to thy billows far and near,
And laid my hand upon thy mane, — as I do here.

LORD BYRON.

THE SEA.

BEAUTIFUL, sublime, and glorious ;
Mild, majestic, foaming, free, —
Over time itself victorious,
Image of eternity !

Sun and moon and stars shine o'er thee,
See thy surface ebb and flow,
Yet attempt not to explore thee
In thy soundless depths below.

Whether morning's splendors steep thee
With the rainbow's glowing grace,
Tempests rouse, or navies sweep thee,
'T is but for a moment's space.

Earth, — her valleys and her mountains,
Mortal man's behests obey ;
The unfathomable fountains
Scoff his search and scorn his sway.

Such art thou, stupendous Ocean !
But, if overwhelmed by thee,
Can we think, without emotion,
What must thy Creator be ?

BERNARD BARTON.

THE OCEAN.

[Written at Scarborough, in the Summer of 1805.]

ALL hail to the ruins, the rocks, and the shores !
Thou wide-rolling Ocean, all hail !
Now brilliant with sunbeams and dimpled with oars,
Now dark with the fresh-blowing gale,
While soft o'er thy bosom the cloud-shadows sail,
And the silver-winged sea-fowl on high,
Like meteors bespangle the sky,
Or dive in the gulf, or triumphantly ride,
Like foam on the surges, the swans of the tide.

From the tumult and smoke of the city set free,
With eager and awful delight,
From the crest of the mountain I gaze upon thee,
I gaze, — and am changed at the sight ;
For mine eye is illumined, my genius takes flight,
My soul, like the sun, with a glance
Embraces the boundless expanse,
And moves on thy waters, wherever they roll,
From the day-darting zone to the night-shadowed pole.

My spirit descends where the dayspring is born,
Where the billows are rubies on fire,
And the breezes that rock the light cradle of morn
Are sweet as the Phœnix's pyre.
O regions of beauty, of love and desire !
O gardens of Eden ! in vain
Placed far on the fathomless main,
Where Nature with Innocence dwelt in her youth,
When pure was her heart and unbroken her truth.

But now the fair rivers of Paradise wind
Through countries and kingdoms o'erthrown ;
Where the giant of tyranny crushes mankind,
Where he reigns, — and will soon reign alone ;
For wide and more wide, o'er the sun-beaming
zone

He stretches his hundred-fold arms,
Despoiling, destroying its charms ;
Beneath his broad footstep the Ganges is dry,
And the mountains recoil from the flash of his eye.

Thus the pestilent Upas, the demon of trees,
Its boughs o'er the wilderness spreads,
And with livid contagion polluting the breeze,
Its mildewing influence sheds ;
The birds on the wing, and the flowers in their beds,
Are slain by its venomous breath,
That darkens the noonday with death,
And pale ghosts of travellers wander around,
While their mouldering skeletons whiten the ground.

Ah ! why hath Jehovah, in forming the world,
With the waters divided the land,
His ramparts of rocks round the continent hurled,
And cradled the deep in his hand,
If man may transgress his eternal command,
And leap o'er the bounds of his birth,
To ravage the uttermost earth,
And violate nations and realms that should be
Distinct as the billows, yet one as the sea ?

There are, gloomy Ocean, a brotherless clan,
Who traverse thy banishing waves,
The poor disinherited outcasts of man,
Whom Avarice coins into slaves.
From the homes of their kindred, their forefathers' graves,
Love, friendship, and conjugal bliss,
They are dragged on the hoary abyss ;
The shark hears their shrieks, and, ascending
to-day,
Demands of the spoiler his share of the prey.

Then joy to the tempest that whelms them beneath,
And makes their destruction its sport ;
But woe to the winds that propitiously breathe,
And waft them in safety to port,
Where the vultures and vampires of Mammon resort ;
Where Europe exultingly drains
The life-blood from Africa's veins ;
Where man rules o'er man with a merciless rod,
And spurns at his footstool the image of God !

The hour is approaching, — a terrible hour !
 And Vengeance is bending her bow ;
 Already the clouds of the hurricane lower,
 And the rock-rending whirlwinds blow ;
 Back rolls the huge Ocean, hell opens below ;
 The floods return headlong, — they sweep
 The slave-cultured lands to the deep,
 In a moment entombed in the horrible void,
 By their Maker himself in his anger destroyed.

Shall this be the fate of the cane-planted isles,
 More lovely than clouds in the west,
 When the sun o'er the ocean descending in smiles,
 Sinks softly and sweetly to rest ?
 No! — Father of mercy ! befriend the opprest ;
 At the voice of thy gospel of peace
 May the sorrows of Africa cease ;
 And slave and his master devoutly unite
 To walk in thy freedom and dwell in thy light !

As homeward my weary-winged Fancy extends
 Her star-lighted course through the skies,
 High over the mighty Atlantic ascends,
 And turns upon Europe her eyes :
 Ah me ! what new prospects, new horrors, arise !
 I see the war-tempest flood
 All foaming, and panting with blood ;
 The panic-struck Ocean in agony roars,
 Rebounds from the battle, and flies to his shores.

For Britannia is wielding the trident to-day,
 Consuming her foes in her ire,
 And hurling her thunder with absolute sway
 From her wave-ruling chariots of fire.
 She triumphs ; the winds and the waters conspire
 To spread her invincible name ;
 The universe rings with her fame ;
 But the cries of the fatherless mix with her praise,
 And the tears of the widow are shed on her bays.

O Britain, dear Britain ! the land of my birth ;
 O Isle most enchantingly fair !
 Thou Pearl of the Ocean ! thou Gem of the Earth !

O my Mother, my Mother, beware,
 For wealth is a phantom, and empire a snare !
 O, let not thy birthright be sold
 For reprobate glory and gold !
 Thy distant dominions like wild graftings shoot,
 They weigh down thy trunk, they will tear up thy root, —

The root of thine oak, O my country ! that stands
 Rock-planted and flourishing free ;
 Its branches are stretched o'er the uttermost lands,
 And its shadow eclipses the sea.
 The blood of our ancestors nourished the tree ;

From their tombs, from their ashes, it sprung ;
 Its boughs with their trophies are hung ;
 Their spirit dwells in it, and — hark ! for it spoke,

The voice of our fathers ascends from their oak :

“Ye Britons, who dwell where we conquered of old,

Who inherit our battle-field graves ;
 Though poor were your fathers, — gigantic and
 bold,

We were not, we could not be, slaves ;
 But firm as our rocks, and as free as bur waves,
 The spears of the Romans we broke,
 We never stooped under their yoke.

In the shipwreck of nations we stood up alone, —
 The world was great Cæsar's, but Britain our own.”

JAMES MONTGOMERY.

HAMPTON BEACH.

The sunlight glitters keen and bright,
 Where, miles away,
 Lies stretching to my dazzled sight
 A luminous belt, a misty light,
 Beyond the dark pine bluffs and wastes of sandy
 gray.

The tremulous shadow of the Sea !
 Against its ground
 Of silvery light, rock, hill, and tree,
 Still as a picture, clear and free,
 With varying outline mark the coast for miles around.

On — on — we tread with loose-flung rein
 Our seaward way,
 Through dark-green fields and blossoming
 grain,
 Where the wild brier-rose skirts the lane,
 And bends above our heads the flowering locust spray.

Ha ! like a kind hand on my brow
 Comes this fresh breeze,
 Cooling its dull and feverish glow,
 While through my being seems to flow
 The breath of a new life, — the healing of the seas !

Now rest we, where this grassy mound
 His feet hath set
 In the great waters, which have bound
 His granite ankles greenly round
 With long and tangled moss, and weeds with cool spray wet.

Good-by to pain and care ! I take
 Mine ease to-day ;
 Here, where the sunny waters break,
 And ripples this keen breeze, I shake
 All burdens from the heart, all weary thoughts away.

I draw a freer breath — I seem Like all I see —
 Waves in the sun — the white-winged gleam
 Of sea-birds in the slanting beam —
 And far-off sails which flit before the south-wind
 free.

So when Time's veil shall fall asunder,
 The soul may know
 No fearful change, nor sudden wonder,
 Nor sink the weight of mystery under,
 But with the upward rise, and with the vastness grow.

And all we shrink from now may seem
 No new revealing, —
 Familiar as our childhood's stream,
 Or pleasant memory of a dream,
 The loved and cherished Past upon the new life stealing.

Serene and mild, the untried light
 May have its dawning ;
 And, as in summer's northern night
 The evening and the dawn unite,
 The sunset hues of Time blend with the soul's new morning.

I sit alone ; in foam and spray
 Wave after wave
 Breaks on the rocks which, stern and gray,
 Shoulder the broken tide away,
 Or murmurs hoarse and strong through mossy
 cleft and cave.

What heed I of the dusty land
 And noisy town ?
 I see the mighty deep expand
 From its white line of glimmering sand
 To where the blue of heaven or bluer waves shuts down !

In listless quietude of mind,
 I yield to all
 The change of cloud and wave and wind ;
 And passive on the flood reclined,
 I wander with the waves, and with them rise and fall.

But look, thou dreamer ! — wave and shore
 In shadow lie ;
 The night-wind warns me back once more

To where, my native hill-tops o'er,
 Bends like an arch of fire the glowing sunset
 sky !

So then, beach, bluff, and wave, farewell !
 I bear with me
 No token stone nor glittering shell,
 But long and oft shall Memory tell
 Of this brief thoughtful hour of musing by the Sea.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

TWILIGHT AT SEA.

The twilight hours, like birds, flew by,
 As lightly and as free,
 Ten thousand stars were in the sky,
 Ten thousand on the sea ;
 For every wave, with dimpled face,
 That leaped upon the air,
 Had caught a star in its embrace,
 And held it trembling there.

AMELIA B. WELBY.

OCEAN.

FROM "THE COURSE OF TIME," BOOK I.

GREAT Ocean ! strongest of creation's sons,
 Unconquerable, unreposed, untired,
 That rolled the wild, profound, eternal bass
 In nature's anthem, and made music such
 As pleased the ear of God ! original,
 Unmarred, unfaded work of Deity !
 And unburllesqued by mortal's puny skill ;
 From age to age enduring, and unchanged,
 Majestical, inimitable, vast,
 Loud uttering satire, day and night, on each
 Succeeding race, and little pompous work
 Of man ; unfallen, religious, holy sea !
 Thou bowedst thy glorious head to none, fearedst
 none,
 Heardst none, to none didst honor, but to God
 Thy Maker, only worthy to receive Thy great obeisance.

ROBERT POLLOK.

THE SEA.

BEHOLD the Sea,
 The opaline, the plentiful and strong,
 Yet beautiful as is the rose in June,
 Fresh as the trickling rainbow of July :
 Sea full of food, the nourisher of kinds,
 Purger of earth, and medicine of men ;
 Creating a sweet climate by my breath,
 Washing out harms and griefs from memory,
 And, in my mathematic ebb and flow,

Giving a hint of that which changes not.
 Rich are the sea-gods :— who gives gifts but they ?
 They grope the sea for pearls, but more than pearls:
 They pluck Force thence, and give it to the wise.
 For every wave is wealth to Dædalus,
 Wealth to the cunning artist who can work
 This matchless strength. Where shall he find,
 O waves !

A load your Atlas shoulders cannot lift ?
 I with my hammer pounding evermore
 The rocky coast, smite Andes into dust,
 Strewing my bed, and, in another age,
 Rebuild a continent of better men.
 Then I unbar the doors : my paths lead out
 The exodus of nations : I disperse
 Men to all shores that front the hoary main.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

THE DISAPPOINTED LOVER.

FROM "THE TRIUMPH OF TIME."

I WILL go back to the great sweet mother —
 Mother and lover of men, the Sea.
 I will go down to her, I and none other,
 Close with her, kiss her, and mix her with me ;
 Cling to her, strive with her, hold her fast.
 O fair white mother, in days long past
 Born without sister, born without brother,
 Set free my soul as thy soul is free.

O fair green-girdled mother of mine,
 Sea, that art clothed with the sun and the rain,
 Thy sweet hard kisses are strong like wine,
 Thy large embraces are keen like pain.
 Save me and hide me with all thy waves,
 Find me one grave of thy thousand graves,
 Those pure cold populous graves of thine, —
 Wrought without hand in a world without stain.

I shall sleep, and move with the moving ships,
 Change as the winds change, veer in the tide ;
 My lips will feast on the foam of thy lips,
 I shall rise with thy rising, with thee subside ;
 Sleep, and not know if she be, if she were, —
 Filled full with life to the eyes and hair,
 As a rose is full filled to the rose-leaf tips
 With splendid summer and perfume and pride.

This woven raiment of nights and days,
 Were it once cast off and unwound from me,
 Naked and glad would I walk in thy ways,
 Alive and aware of thy waves and thee ;
 Clear of the whole world, hidden at home,
 Clothed with the green, and crowned with the foam,
 A pulse of the life of thy straits and bays,
 A vein in the heart of the streams of the Sea.

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

DOVER BEACH.

THE sea is calm to-night,
 The tide is full, the moon lies fair
 Upon the Straits ;— on the French coast, the light
 Gleams and is gone ; the cliffs of England stand,
 Glimmering and vast, out in the tranquil bay.
 Come to the window ; sweet is the night air !
 Only, from the long line of spray
 Where the ebb meets the moon-blanch'd sand,
 Listen ! you hear the grating roar
 Of pebbles which the waves suck back, and fling,
 At their return, up the high strand.
 Begin and cease, and then again begin,
 With tremulous cadence slow, and bring
 The eternal note of sadness in.

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

ADDRESS TO THE OCEAN.

O THOU vast Ocean ! ever-sounding Sea !
 Thou symbol of a drear immensity !
 Thou thing that windest round the solid world
 Like a huge animal, which, downward hurled
 From the black clouds, lies weltering and alone,
 Lashing and writhing till its strength be gone !
 Thy voice is like the thunder, and thy sleep
 Is as a giant's slumber, loud and deep.
 Thou speakest in the east and in the west
 At once, and on thy heavily laden breast
 Fleets come and go, and shapes that have no life
 Or motion, yet are moved and meet in strife.
 The earth has naught of this : no chance or change
 Ruffles its surface, and no spirits dare
 Give answer to the tempest-wakened air ;
 But o'er its wastes the weakly tenants range
 At will, and wound its bosom as they go :
 Ever the same, it hath no ebb, no flow :
 But in their stated rounds the seasons come,
 And pass like visions to their wonted home ;
 And come again, and vanish ; the young Spring
 Looks ever bright with leaves and blossoming ;
 And Winter always winds his sullen horn,
 When the wild Autumn, with a look forlorn,
 Dies in his stormy manhood ; and the skies
 Weep, and flowers sicken, when the summer flies.
 O, wonderful thou art, great element,
 And fearful in thy spleeny humors bent,
 And lovely in repose ! thy summer form
 Is beautiful, and when thy silver waves
 Make music in earth's dark and winding caves,
 I love to wander on thy pebbled beach,
 Marking the sunlight at the evening hour,
 And hearken to the thoughts thy waters teach,— Eternity — Eternity — and Power.

BRYAN WALLER PROCTER (Barry Cornwall).

ON THE LOSS OF THE ROYAL GEORGE.

WRITTEN WHEN THE NEWS ARRIVED ; 1782.

TOLL for the brave, —
The brave that are no more !
All sunk beneath the wave,
Fast by their native shore.

Eight hundred of the brave,
Whose courage well was tried,
Had made the vessel heel,
And laid her on her side.

A land-breeze shook the shrouds,
And she was overset ;
Down went the Royal George,
With all her crew complete.

Toll for the brave !
Brave Kempenfelt is gone ;
His last sea-fight is fought,
His work of glory done.

It was not in the battle ;
No tempest gave the shock ;
She sprang no fatal leak ;
She ran upon no rock.

His sword was in its sheath,
His fingers held the pen,
When Kempenfelt went down
With twice four hundred men.

Weigh the vessel up,
Once dreaded by our foes !
And mingle with our cup
The tear that England owes.

Her timbers yet are sound,
And she may float again,
Full charged with England's thunder,
And plough the distant main.

But Kempenfelt is gone ;
His victories are o'er ;
And he and his eight hundred
Shall plough the wave no more.

WILLIAM COWPER.

THE SHIPWRECK.

In vain the cords and axes were prepared,
For now the audacious seas insult the yard ;
High o'er the ship they throw a horrid shade,
And o'er her burst in terrible cascade.
Uplifted on the surge, to heaven she flies,
Her shattered top half buried in the skies,

Then headlong plunging thunders on the ground ;
Earth groans ! air trembles ! and the deeps re-
sound !

Her giant-bulk the dread concussion feels,
And quivering with the wound in torment reels.
So reels, convulsed with agonizing throes,
The bleeding bull beneath the murderer's blows.
Again she plunges ! hark ! a second shock
Tears her strong bottom on the marble rock :
Down on the vale of death, with dismal cries,
The fated victims, shuddering, roll their eyes
In wild despair ; while yet another stroke,
With deep convulsion, rends the solid oak ;
Till like the mine, in whose infernal cell
The lurking demons of destruction dwell,
At length asunder torn her frame divides,
And, crashing, spreads in ruin o'er the tides.

O, were it mine with tuneful Maro's art
To wake to sympathy the feeling heart ;
Like him the smooth and mournful verse to dress
In all the pomp of exquisite distress,
Then too severely taught by cruel fate,
To share in all the perils I relate,
Then might I with unrivalled strains deplore
The impervious horrors of a leeward shore !

As o'er the surge the stooping mainmast hung,
Still on the rigging thirty seamen clung ;
Some, struggling, on a broken crag were cast,
And there by oozy tangles grappled fast.
Awhile they bore the o'erwhelming billows' rage,
Unequal combat with their fate to wage ;
Till, all benumbed and feeble, they forego
Their slippery hold, and sink to shades below.
Some, from the main-yard-arm impetuous thrown
On marble ridges, die without a groan.
Three with Palemon on their skill depend,
And from the wreck on oars and rafts descend.
Now on the mountain wave on high they ride,
Then downward plunge beneath the involving tide,

Till one, who seems in agony to strive,
The whirling breakers heave on shore alive ;
The rest a speedier end of anguish knew,
And pressed the stony beach, a lifeless crew !

WILLIAM FALCONER.

THE SEA FIGHT.

AS TOLD BY AN ANCIENT MARINER.

AH, yes, — the fight ! Well, messmates, well,
I served on board that Ninety-eight ;
Yet what I saw I loathe to tell.

To-night be sure a crushing weight
Upon my sleeping breast, a hell
Of dread, will sit. At any rate,
Though land-locked here, a watch I'll keep, —
Grog cheers us still. Who cares for sleep ?

That Ninety-eight I sailed on board ;
 Along the Frenchman's coast we flew ;
 Right aft the rising tempest roared ;
 A noble first-rate hove in view ;
 And soon high in the gale there soared
 Her streamered-out bunting, — red, white, blue !
 We cleared for fight, and landward bore,
 To get between the chase and shore.

Masters, I cannot spin a yarn
 Twice laid with words of silken stuff.
 A fact 's a fact ; and ye may learn
 The rights o' this, though wild and rough
 My words may loom. 'T is your consarn,
 Not mine, to understand. Enough ;—
 We neared the Frenchman where he lay,
 And as we neared, he blazed away.

We tacked, hove to ; we filled, we wore ;
 Did all that seamanship could do
 To rake him aft, or by the fore, —
 Now rounded off, and now broadsided to ;
 And now our starboard broadside bore,
 And showers of iron through and through
 His vast hull hissed ; our larboard then
 Swept from his threefold decks his men.

As we, like a huge serpent, toiled,
 And wound about, through that wild sea,
 The Frenchman each manœuvre foiled, —
 'Vantage to neither there could be.
 Whilst thus the waves between us boiled,
 We both resolved right manfully
 To fight it side by side ; — began
 Then the fierce strife of man to man.

Gun bellows forth to gun, and pain
 Rings out her wild, delirious scream !
 Redoubling thunders shake the main ;
 Loud crashing, falls the shot-rent beam.
 The timbers with the broadsides strain ;
 The slippery decks send up a steam
 From hot and living blood, and high
 And shrill is heard the death-pang cry.

The shredded limb, the splintered bone,
 The unstiffened corpse, now block the way !
 Who now can hear the dying groan ?
 The trumpet of the judgment-day,
 Had it pealed forth its mighty tone,
 We should not then have heard, — to say
 Would be rank sin ; but this I tell,
 That could alone our madness quell.

Upon the forecastle I fought
 As captain of the for'ad gun.
 A scattering shot the carriage caught !
 What mother then had known her son

Of those who stood around ? — distraught,
 And smeared with gore, about they run,
 Then fall, and writhe, and howling die !
 But one escaped, — that one was I !

Night darkened round, and the storm pealed ;
 To windward of us lay the foe.
 As he-to leeward over keeled,
 He could not fight his guns below ;
 So just was going to strike, — when reeled
 Our vessel, as if some vast blow
 From an Almighty hand had rent
 The huge ship from her element.

Then howled the thunder. Tumult then
 Had stunned herself to silence. Round
 Were scattered lightning-blasted men !
 Our mainmast went. All stifled, drowned,
 Arose the Frenchman's shout. Again
 The bolt burst on us, and we found
 Our masts all gone, — our decks all riven :
 Man's war mocks faintly that of heaven !

Just then, — nay, messmates, laugh not now, —
 As I, amazed, one minute stood Amidst that rout, — I know not how, —
 'T was silence all, — the raving flood,
 The guns that pealed from stem to bow,
 And God's own thunder, — nothing could
 I then of all that tumult hear,
 Or see aught of that scene of fear, —

My aged mother at her door
 Sat mildly o'er her humming wheel ;
 The cottage, orchard, and the moor, —
 I saw them plainly all. I'll kneel,
 And swear I saw them ! O, they wore
 A look all peace ! Could I but feel
 Again that bliss that then I felt,
 That made my heart, like childhood's, melt !

The blessed tear was on my cheek,
 She smiled with that old smile I know :
 "Turn to me, mother, turn and speak,"
 Was on my quivering lips, — when lo !
 All vanished, and a dark, red streak
 Glared wild and vivid from the foe,
 That flashed upon the blood-stained water, —
 For fore and aft the flames had caught her.

She struck and hailed us. On us fast
 All burning, helplessly, she came, —
 Near, and more near ; and not a mast
 Had we to help us from that flame.
 'T was then the bravest stood aghast, —
 'T was then the wicked on the name
 (With danger and with guilt appalled)
 Of God, too long neglected, called.

The eddying flames with ravening tongue
 Now on our ship's dark bulwarks dash, —
 We almost touched, — when ocean rung
 Down to its depths with one loud crash !
 In heaven's top vault one instant hung
 The vast, intense, and blinding flash !
 Then all was darkness, stillness, dread, —
 The wave moaned o'er the valiant dead.

She's gone ! blown up ! that gallant foe !
 And though she left us in a plight,
 We floated still ; long were, I know,
 And hard, the labors of that night
 To clear the wreck. At length in tow
 A frigate took us, when 't was light ;
 And soon an English port we gained, —
 A hulk all battered and blood-stained.

So many slain, — so many drowned !
 I like not of that fight to tell.
 Come, let the cheerful grog go round !
 Messmates, I've done. A spell, ho ! spell, —
 Though a pressed man, I'll still be found
 To do a seaman's duty well.
 I wish our brother landsmen knew
 One half we jolly tars go through.

CASABIANCA.

[Young Casabianca, a boy about thirteen years old, son of the Admiral of the Orient, remained at his post (in the Battle of the Nile) after the ship had taken fire and all the guns had been abandoned, and perished in the explosion of the vessel, when the flames had reached the powder.]

THE boy stood on the burning deck,
 Whence all but him had fled ;
 The flame that lit the battle's wreck
 Shone round him o'er the dead.

Yet beautiful and bright he stood,
 As born to rule the storm ;
 A creature of heroic blood,
 A proud though childlike form.

The flames rolled on ; he would not go
 Without his father's word ;
 That father, faint in death below,
 His voice no longer heard.

He called aloud, " Say, father, say,
 If yet my task be done !"
 He knew not that the chieftain lay
 Unconscious of his son.

" Speak, father !" once again he cried,
 " If I may yet be gone !"
 And but the booming shots replied,
 And fast the flames rolled on.

Upon his brow he felt their breath,
 And in his waving hair,
 And looked from that lone post of death
 In still yet brave despair ;
 And shouted but once more aloud,
 " My father ! must I stay ?"
 While o'er him fast, through sail and shroud,
 The wreathing fires made way.

They wrapt the ship in splendor wild,
 They caught the flag on high,
 And streamed above the gallant child,
 Like banners in the sky.

There came a burst of thunder sound ;
 The boy, — Oh ! where was he ?
 Ask of the winds, that far around
 With fragments strewed the sea, —

With shroud and mast and pennon fair,
 That well had borne their part, —
 But the noblest thing that perished there
 Was that young, faithful heart.

THE MARINER'S DREAM.

In slumbers of midnight the sailor-boy lay ;
 His hammock swung loose at the sport of the wind ;
 But watch-worn and weary, his cares flew away,
 And visions of happiness danced o'er his mind.

He dreamt of his home, of his dear native
 bowers,
 And pleasures that waited on life's merry
 morn ;
 While Memory stood sideways, half covered with flowers,
 And restored every rose, but secreted its thorn.

Then Fancy her magical pinions spread wide,
 And bade the young dreamer in ecstasy rise ;
 Now far, far behind him the green waters glide,
 And the cot of his forefathers blesses his eyes.

The jessamine clambers in flowers o'er the thatch,
 And the swallow chirps sweet from her nest in the wall ;
 All trembling with transport he raises the latch,
 And the voices of loved ones reply to his call.

A father bends o'er him with looks of delight ;
 His cheek is inpearled with a mother's warm
 tear ;
 And the lips of the boy in a love-kiss unite
 With the lips of the maid whom his bosom holds dear.

The heart of the sleeper beats high in his breast ;
Joy quickens his pulse, all his hardships seem o'er ;

And a murmur of happiness steals through his rest, —

“O God ! thou hast blest me, — I ask for no
more.”

Ah ! whence is that flame which now bursts on his eye ?

Ah ! what is that sound which now larums his ear ?

'Tis the lightning's red glare, painting hell on the sky !

'Tis the crash of the thunder, the groan of the sphere !

He springs from his hammock, he flies to the deck ;

Amazement confronts him with images dire ;
Wild winds and mad waves drive the vessel a wreck ;

The masts fly in splinters ; the shrouds are on fire.

Like mountains the billows tremendously swell ;
In vain the lost wretch calls on mercy to save ;

Unseen hands of spirits are ringing his knell,
And the death-angel flaps his broad wing o'er the wave !

O sailor-boy, woe to thy dream of delight !

In darkness dissolves the gay frost-work of bliss.

Where now is the picture that Fancy touched bright, —

Thy parents' fond pressure, and love's honeyed kiss ?

O sailor-boy ! sailor-boy ! never again

Shall home, love, or kindred thy wishes repay ;
Unblessed and unhonored, down deep in the main,

Full many a fathom, thy frame shall decay.

No tomb shall e'er plead to remembrance for
thee,

Or redeem form or fame from the merciless surge ;

But the white foam of waves shall thy winding-sheet be,

And winds in the midnight of winter thy dirge !

On a bed of green sea-flowers thy limbs shall be laid, —

Around thy white bones the red coral shall
grow ;

Of thy fair yellow locks threads of amber be made,

And every part suit to thy mansion below.

Days, months, years, and ages shall circle away,
And still the vast waters above thee shall roll ;

Earth loses thy pattern forever and aye, —

O sailor-boy ! sailor-boy ! peace to thy soul !

WILLIAM DIMOND.

POOR JACK.

Go, patter to lubbers and swabs, do ye see,

'Bout danger, and fear, and the like ;

A tight-water boat and good sea-room give me,
And it a'n't to a little I'll strike.

Though the tempest topgallant-masts smack smooth should smite,

And shiver each splinter of wood,

Clear the deck, stow the yards, and bouse everything tight,

And under reefed foresail we'll send :

Avast ! nor don't think me a milksop so soft

To be taken for trifles aback ;

For they say there's a Providence sits up aloft,

To keep watch for the life of poor Jack !

I heard our good chaplain palaver one day

About souls, heaven, mercy, and such ;

And, my timbers ! what lingo he'd coil and belay ;

Why, 't was just all as one as High Dutch ;

For he said how a sparrow can't founder, d'ye see,

Without orders that come down below ;

And a many fine things that proved clearly to me

That Providence takes us in tow :

“For,” says he, do you mind me, “let storms e'er so oft

Take the topsails of sailors aback,

There's a sweet little cherub that sits up aloft,

To keep watch for the life of poor Jack !”

I said to our Poll, — for, d'ye see, she would cry, —

When last we weighed anchor for sea,

“What argufies snivelling and piping your eye ?

Why, what a blamed fool you must be !

Can't you see, the world's wide, and there's room for us all,

Both for seamen and lubbers ashore ?

And if to old Davy I should go, friend Poll,

You never will hear of me more.

What then ? All's a hazard : come, don't be so soft :

Perhaps I may laughing come back ;

For, d'ye see, there's a cherub sits smiling aloft,

To keep watch for the life of poor Jack !”

D'ye mind me, a sailor should be every inch
 All as one as a piece of the ship,
 And with her brave the world, not offering to flinch
 From the moment the anchor's a-trip.
 As for me, in all weathers, all times, sides, and ends,
 Naught's a trouble from duty that springs,
 For my heart is my Poll's, and my rhino's my friend's,
 And as for my will, 't is the king's.
 Even when my time comes, ne'er believe me so soft
 As for grief to be taken aback;
 For the same little cherub that sits up aloft
 Will look out a good berth for poor Jack!

NAPOLEON AND THE BRITISH SAILOR.

I LOVE contemplating — apart
 From all his homicidal glory —
 The traits that soften to our heart
 Napoleon's glory!

'T was when his banners at Boulogne
 Armed in our island every freeman,
 His navy chanced to capture one
 Poor British seaman.

They suffered him — I know not how —
 Unprisoned on the shore to roam;
 And aye was bent his longing brow
 On England's home.

His eye, methinks! pursued the flight
 Of birds to Britain half-way over;
 With envy they could reach the white
 Dear cliffs of Dover.

A stormy midnight watch, he thought,
 Than this sojourn would have been dearer,
 If but the storm his vessel brought To England nearer.

At last, when care had banished sleep,
 He saw one morning, dreaming, doting,
 An empty hogshead from the deep
 Come shoreward floating;

He hid it in a cave, and wrought
 The livelong day laborious; lurking
 Until he launched a tiny boat
 By mighty working.

Heaven help us! 't was a thing beyond
 Description wretched; such a wherry
 Perhaps ne'er ventured on a pond,
 Or crossed a ferry.

For, ploughing in the salt-sea field,
 It would have made the boldest shudder;
 Untarred, uncompassed, and unkeeled, —
 No sail, no rudder.

From neighboring woods he interlaced
 His sorry skiff with wattled willows;
 And thus equipped he would have passed
 The foaming billows, —

But Frenchmen caught him on the beach,
 His little Argo sorely jeering;
 Till tidings of him chanced to reach
 Napoleon's hearing.

With folded arms Napoleon stood,
 Serene alike in peace and danger;
 And, in his wonted attitude,
 Addressed the stranger: —

“Rash man, that wouldst yon Channel pass
 On twigs and staves so rudely fashioned,
 Thy heart withsome sweet British lass
 Must be impassioned.”

“I have no sweetheart,” said the lad;
 “But — absent long from one another —
 Great was the longing that I had
 To see my mother.”

“And so thou shalt,” Napoleon said,
 “Ye've both my favor fairly won;
 A noble mother must have bred
 So brave a son.”

He gave the tar a piece of gold,
 And, with a flag of truce, commanded
 He should be shipped to England Old,
 And safely landed.

Our sailor oft could scarcely shift
 To find a dinner, plain and hearty,
 But never changed the coin and gift
 Of Bonapartè.

HOW'S MY BOY?

“Ho, sailor of the sea!
 How's my boy — my boy?”
 “What's your boy's name, good wife,
 And in what ship sailed he?”

“My boy John —
 He that went to sea —
 What care I for the ship, sailor?
 My boy's my boy to me.”

"You come back from sea,
And not know my John?
I might as well have asked some landsman,
Yonder down in the town.
There's not an ass in all the parish
But he knows my John.

"How's my boy — my boy?
And unless you let me know,
I'll swear you are no sailor,
Blue jacket or no,
Brass buttons or no, sailor,
Anchor and crown or no!
Sure his ship was the 'Jolly Briton' —
"Speak low, woman, speak low!"

"And why should I speak low, sailor,
About my own boy John?
If I was loud as I am proud
I'd sing him over the town!
Why should I speak low, sailor?"
"That good ship went down."

"How's my boy — my boy?
What care I for the ship, sailor?
I was never aboard her.
Be she afloat or be she aground,
Sinking or swimming, I'll be bound
Her owners can afford her!
I say, how's my John?"
"Every man on board went down,
Every man aboard her."

"How's my boy — my boy?
What care I for the men, sailor?
I'm not their mother —
How's my boy — my boy?
Tell me of him and no other!
How's my boy — my boy?"

SYDNEY DOBELL.

HERVÉ RIEL.

ON the sea and at the Hogue, sixteen hundred ninety-two,
Did the English fight the French, — woe to France!
And, the thirty-first of May, helter-skelter
through the blue,
Like a crowd of frightened porpoises a shoal of sharks pursue,
Came crowding ship on ship to St. Malo on the Rance,
With the English fleet in view.

'T was the squadron that escaped, with the victor in full chase,
First and foremost of the drove, in his great ship, Damfreville;
Close on him fled, great and small,
Twenty-two good ships in all;
And they signalled to the place,
"Help the winners of a race!
Get us guidance, give us harbor, take us quick,
— or, quicker still,
Here's the English can and will!"

Then the pilots of the place put out brisk and leaped on board.
"Why, what hope or chance have ships like these to pass?" laughed they;
"Rocks to starboard, rocks to port, all the passage scarred and scored,
Shall the Formidable here, with her twelve and eighty guns,
Think to make the river-mouth by the single narrow way,
Trust to enter where 't is ticklish for a craft of twenty tons,
And with flow at full beside?
Now 't is slackest ebb of tide.
Reach the mooring? Rather say,
While rock stands or water runs,
Not a ship will leave the bay!"

Then was called a council straight;
Brief and bitter the debate:
"Here's the English at our heels; would you have them take in tow
All that's left us of the fleet, linked together
stern and bow,
For a prize to Plymouth Sound?
Better run the ships aground!"
(Ended Damfreville his speech.)
"Not a minute more to wait!
Let the captains all and each Shove ashore, then blow up, burn the vessels on the beach!
France must undergo her fate."

"Give the word!" But no such word
Was ever spoke or heard;
For up stood, for out stepped, for in struck amid all these,
A captain? A lieutenant? A mate, — first, second, third?
No such man of mark, and meet
With his betters to compete!
But a simple Breton sailor pressed by Tourville for the fleet, —
A poor coasting-pilot he, Hervé Riel the Croi-sickese.

And "What mockery or malice have we here?"
cries Hervé Riel;

"Are you mad, you Malouins? Are you cowards, fools, or rogues?"

Talk to me of rocks and shoals, me who took the soundings, tell

On my fingers every bank, every shallow, every swell

'Twixt the offing here and Greve, where the river disembogues?

Are you bought by English gold? Is it love the lying's for?

Morn and eve, night and day,

Have I piloted your bay,

Entered free and anchored fast at the foot of Solidor.

Burn the fleet, and ruin France? That were worse than fifty Hogues!

Sirs, they know I speak the truth! Sirs, believe me, there's a way!

Only let me lead the line,

Have the biggest ship to steer,

Get this Formidable clear,

Make the others follow mine,

And I lead them most and least by a passage I know well,

Right to Solidor, past Greve,

And there lay them safe and sound;

And if one ship misbehave, —

Keel so much as grate the ground, —

Why, I've nothing but my life; here's my head!" cries Hervé Riel.

Not a minute more to wait.

"Steer us in, then, small and great!

Take the helm, lead the line, save the squadron!" cried its chief.

Captains, give the sailor place!

He is Admiral, in brief.

Still the north-wind, by God's grace.

See the noble fellow's face

As the big ship, with a bound,

Clears the entry like a hound,

Keeps the passage as its inch of way were the wide sea's profound!

See, safe through shoal and rock,

How they follow in a flock.

Not a ship that misbehaves, not a keel that grates the ground,

Not a spar that comes to grief!

The peril, see, is past,

All are harbored to the last;

And just as Hervé Riel halloos "Anchor!" — sure as fate,

Up the English come, too late.

So the storm subsides to calm;

They see the green trees wave

On the heights o'erlooking Greve:

Hearts that bled are stanch'd with balm.

"Just our rapture to enhance,

Let the English rake the bay,

Gnash their teeth and glare askance

As they cannonade away!

'Neath rampired Solidor pleasant riding on the Rance!"

How hope succeeds despair on each captain's countenance!

Outburst all with one accord,

"This is Paradise for Hell!

Let France, let France's King

Thank the man that did the thing!"

What a shout, and all one word,

"Hervé Riel,"

As he stepped in front once more,

Not a symptom of surprise

In the frank blue Breton eyes,

Just the same man as before.

Then said Damfreville, "My friend,
I must speak out at the end,

Though I find the speaking hard:

Praise is deeper than the lips;

You have saved the king his ships,

You must name your own reward.

Faith, our sun was near eclipse!

Demand what'er you will,

France remains your debtor still.

Ask to heart's content, and have! or my name's not Damfreville."

Then a beam of fun outbroke

On the bearded mouth that spoke,

As the honest heart laughed through

Those frank eyes of Breton blue:

"Since I needs must say my say,

Since on board the duty's done,

And from Malo Roads to Croisic Point, what is it but a run?

Since 't is ask and have I may, —

Since the others go ashore, —

Come! A good whole holiday!

Leave to go and see my wife, whom I call the Belle Aurore!"

That he asked, and that he got, — nothing more.

Name and deed alike are lost;

Not a pillar nor a post

In his Croisic keeps alive the feat as it befell;

Not a head in white and black

On a single fishing-smack

In memory of the man but for whom had gone to wrack

All that France saved from the fight whence

England bore the bell.

Go to Paris; rank on rank

Search the heroes flung pell-mell

On the Louvre, face and flank ;
 You shall look long enough ere you come to Hervé Riel.
 So, for better and for worse,
 Hervé Riel, accept my verse !
 In my verse, Hervé Riel, do thou once more Save the squadron, honor France, love thy wife
 the Belle Aurore.

ROBERT BROWNING.

TACKING SHIP OFF SHORE.

THE weather leach of the topsail shivers,
 The bowlines strain and the lee shrouds slacken,
 The braces are taut and the lithe boom quivers,
 And the waves with the coming squall-cloud blacken.

Open one point on the weather bow
 Is the light-house tall on Fire Island Head ;
 There's a shade of doubt on the captain's brow,
 And the pilot watches the heaving lead.

I stand at the wheel and with eager eye
 To sea and to sky and to shore I gaze,
 Till the muttered order of "FULL AND BY!"
 Is suddenly changed to "FULL FOR STAYS!"

The ship bends lower before the breeze,
 As her broadside fair to the blast she lays ;
 And she swifter springs to the rising seas
 As the pilot calls, "STAND BY FOR STAYS!"

It is silence all, as each in his place,
 With the gathered coils in his hardened hands,
 By tack and bowline, by sheet and brace,
 Waiting the watchword impatient stands.

And the light on Fire Island Head draws near,
 As, trumpet-winged, the pilot's shout
 From his post on the bowsprit's heel I hear,
 With the welcome call of "READY! ABOUT!"

No time to spare! it is touch and go,
 And the captain growls, "DOWN HELM! HARD
 DOWN!"

As my weight on the whirling spokes I throw,
 While heaven grows black with the stormcloud's frown.

High o'er the knight-heads flies the spray,
 As we meet the shock of the plunging sea ;
 And my shoulder stiff to the wheel I lay, —
 As I answer, "AY, AY, SIR! HARD A LEE!"

With the swerving leap of a startled steed
 The ship flies fast in the eye of the wind,

The dangerous shoals on the lee recede,
 And the headland white we have left behind.

The topsails flutter, the jibs collapse
 And belly and tug at the groaning cleats ;
 The spanker slaps and the mainsail flaps,
 And thunders the order, "TACKS AND SHEETS!"

Mid the rattle of blocks and the tramp of the crew
 Hisses the rain of the rushing squall ;
 The sails are aback from clew to clew,
 And now is the moment for "MAINSAIL, HAUL!"

And the heavy yards like a baby's toy
 By fifty strong arms are swiftly swung ;
 She holds her way, and I look with joy
 For the first white spray o'er the bulwarks flung.

"LET GO, AND HAUL!" 't is the last command,
 And the head-sails fill to the blast once more ;
 Astern and to leeward lies the land,
 With its breakers white on the shingly shore.

What matters the reef, or the rain, or the squall ?
 I steady the helm for the open sea ;
 The first-mate clamors, "BELAY THERE, ALL!"
 And the captain's breath once more comes free.

And so off shore let the good ship fly ;
 Little care I how the gusts may blow,
 In my fo'castle-bunk in a jacket dry, —
 Eight bells have struck, and my watch is below.

THE TREASURES OF THE DEEP.

WHAT hid'st thou in thy treasure-caves and cells ?

Thou hollow-sounding and mysterious main ! —
 Pale glistening pearls and rainbow-colored shells, Bright things which gleam unrecked of and in vain ! —

Keep, keep thy riches, melancholy sea !
 We ask not such from thee.

Yet more, the depths have more ! — what wealth untold,

Far down, and shining through their stillness lies !

Thou hast the starry gems, the burning gold,
 Won from ten thousand royal argosies ! —
 Sweep o'er thy spoils, thou wild and wrathful
 main !

Earth claims not these again.

Yet more, the depths have more! — thy waves have rolled

Above the cities of a world gone by!
Sand hath filled up the palaces of old,
Sea-weed o'ergrown the halls of revelry.
Dash o'er them, Ocean, in thy scornful play!
Man yields them to decay.

Yet more, the billows and the depths have more!
High hearts and brave are gathered to thy breast!

They hear not now the booming waters roar,
The battle-thunders will not break their rest. —
Keep thy red gold and gems, thou stormy grave!
Give back the true and brave!

Give back the lost and lovely! — those for whom
The place was kept at board and hearth so long!
The prayer went up through midnight's breathless gloom,

And the vain yearning woke midst festal song!
Hold fast thy buried isles, thy towers o'er-thrown, —
But all is not thine own.

To thee the love of woman hath gone down,
Dark flow thy tides o'er manhood's noble head,
O'er youth's bright locks, and beauty's flowery
crown;

Yet must thou hear a voice, — Restore the dead!
Earth shall reclaim her precious things from
thee! —
Restore the dead, thou sea!

FELICIA HEMANS.

“OLD IRONSIDES.”

[Written with reference to the proposed breaking up of the famous
U. S. frigate “Constitution.”]

Ax, tear her tattered ensign down!
Long has it waved on high,
And many an eye has danced to see
That banner in the sky;
Beneath it rung the battle-shout,
And burst the cannon's roar:
The meteor of the ocean air
Shall sweep the clouds no more!

Her deck, once red with heroes' blood,
Where knelt the vanquished foe,
When winds were hurrying o'er the flood
And waves were white below,
No more shall feel the victor's tread,
Or know the conquered knee:
The harpies of the shore shall pluck
The eagle of the sea!

O better that her shattered hulk
Should sink beneath the wave!
Her thunders shook the mighty deep,
And there should be her grave:
Nail to the mast her holy flag,
Set every threadbare sail,
And give her to the god of storms,
The lightning and the gale!

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

THE INCHCAPE ROCK.

No stir in the air, no stir in the sea, —
The ship was as still as she could be;
Her sails from heaven received no motion;
Her keel was steady in the ocean.

Without either sign or sound of their shock,
The waves flowed over the Inchcape rock;
So little they rose, so little they fell,
They did not move the Inchcape bell.

The holy Abbot of Aberbrothok
Had placed that bell on the Inchcape rock;
On a buoy in the storm it floated and swung,
And over the waves its warning rung.

When the rock was hid by the surges' swell,
The mariners heard the warning bell;
And then they knew the perilous rock,
And blessed the Abbot of Aberbrothok.

The sun in heaven was shining gay, —
All things were joyful on that day;
The sea-birds screamed as they wheeled around,
And there was joyance in their sound.

The buoy of the Inchcape bell was seen,
A darker speck on the ocean green;
Sir Ralph, the rover, walked his deck,
And he fixed his eye on the darker speck.

He felt the cheering power of spring, —
It made him whistle, it made him sing;
His heart was mirthful to excess;
But the rover's mirth was wickedness.

His eye was on the bell and float:
Quoth he, “My men, put out the boat;
And row me to the Inchcape rock,
And I'll plague the priest of Aberbrothok.”

The boat is lowered, the boatmen row,
And to the Inchcape rock they go;
Sir Ralph bent over from the boat,
And cut the warning bell from the float.

THE TREASURES OF THE DEEP.

*"Yet must thou hear a voice,—Restore the dead!
Earth shall reclaim her precious things from thee.
Restore the dead, thou sea!"*

Down sank the bell with a gurgling sound ;
 The bubbles rose, and burst around.
 Quoth Sir Ralph, "The next who comes to the rock
 Will not bless the Abbot of Aberbrothok."

Sir Ralph, the rover, sailed away, —
 He scoured the seas for many a day ;
 And now, grown rich with plundered store,
 He steers his course to Scotland's shore.

So thick a haze o'erspreads the sky
 They cannot see the sun on high ;
 The wind hath blown a gale all day ;
 At evening it hath died away.

On the deck the rover takes his stand ;
 So dark it is they see no land.
 Quoth Sir Ralph, "It will be lighter soon,
 For there is the dawn of the rising moon."

"Canst hear," said one, "the breakers roar ?
 For yonder, methinks, should be the shore.
 Now where we are I cannot tell,
 But I wish we could hear the Inchcape bell."

They hear no sound ; the swell is strong ;
 Though the wind hath fallen, they drift along ;
 Till the vessel strikes with a shivering shock, —
 O Christ ! it is the Inchcape rock !

Sir Ralph, the rover, tore his hair ;
 He cursed himself in his despair.
 The waves rush in on every side ;
 The ship is sinking beneath the tide.

But ever in his dying fear
 One dreadful sound he seemed to hear, —
 A sound as if with the Inchcape bell
 The Devil below was ringing his knell.

ROBERT SOUTHEY.

THE THREE FISHERS.

THREE fishers went sailing out into the west, —
 Out into the west as the sun went down ;
 Each thought of the woman who loved him the best,
 And the children stood watching them out of the town ;
 For men must work, and women must weep ;
 And there 's little to earn, and many to keep,
 Though the harbor bar be moaning.

Three wives sat up in the light-house tower,
 And trimmed the lamps as the sun went down ;
 And they looked at the squall, and they looked at the shower,
 And the rack it came rolling up, ragged and
 brown ;

But men must work, and women must weep,
 Though storms be sudden, and waters deep,
 And the harbor bar be moaning.

Three corpses lay out on the shining sands
 In the morning gleam as the tide went down,
 And the women are watching and wringing their hands,
 For those who will never come back to the town ;

For men must work, and women must weep, —
 And the sooner it 's over, the sooner to sleep, —
 And good-by to the bar and its moaning.

CHARLES KINGSLEY.

THE SANDS O' DEE.

"O MARY, go and call the cattle home,
 And call the cattle home,
 And call the cattle home,
 Across the sands o' Dee !"
 The western wind was wild and dank wi' foam,
 And all alone went she.

The creeping tide came up along the sand,
 And o'er and o'er the sand,
 And round and round the sand,
 As far as eye could see ;
 The blinding mist came down and hid the land :
 And never home came she.

"O, is it weed, or fish, or floating hair, —
 A tress o' golden hair,
 O' drown'd maiden's hair, —
 Above the nets at sea ?
 Was never salmon yet that shone so fair,
 Among the stakes on Dee."

They rowed her in across the rolling foam, —
 The cruel, crawling foam,
 The cruel, hungry foam, —
 To her grave beside the sea ;
 But still the boatmen hear her call the cattle home
 Across the sands o' Dee.

CHARLES KINGSLEY.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

THE sea crashed over the grim gray rocks,
 It thundered beneath the height,
 It swept by reef and sandy dune,
 It glittered beneath the harvest moon,
 That bathed it in yellow light.

Shell, and sea-weed, and sparkling stone,
 It flung on the golden sand.
 Strange relics torn from its deepest caves,
 Sad trophies of wild victorious waves,
 It scattered upon the strand.

Spars that had looked so strong and true,
 At many a gallant launch,
 Shattered and broken, flung to the shore,
 While the tide in its wild triumphant roar
 Rang a dirge for the vessel stanch.

Petty trifles that lovers had brought
 From many a foreign clime,
 Snatched by the storm from the clinging clasp
 Of hands that the lonely will never grasp,
 While the world yet measures time.

Back, back to its depths went the ebbing tide,
 Leaving its stores to rest,
 Unsought and unseen in the silent bay,
 To be gathered again, ere close of day,
 To the ocean's mighty breast.

Kinder than man art thou, O sea ;
 Frankly we give our best,
 Truth, and hope, and love, and faith,
 Devotion that challenges time and death
 Its sterling worth to test.

We fling them down at our darling's feet,
 Indifference leaves them there.
 The careless footstep turns aside,
 Weariness, changefulness, scorn, or pride,
 Bring little of thought or care.

No tide of human feeling turns ;
 Once ebb'd, love never flows ;
 The pitiful wreckage of time and strife,
 The flotsam and jetsam of human life,
 No saving reflux knows.

SEA WEED.

WHEN descends on the Atlantic
 The gigantic
 Storm-wind of the equinox,
 Landward in his wrath he scourges
 The toiling surges,
 Laden with sea-weed from the rocks :

From Bermuda's reefs ; from edges
 Of sunken ledges,
 In some far-off, bright Azore ;
 From Bahama, and the dashing,
 Silver-flashing
 Surges of San Salvador ;

From the tumbling surf, that buries
 The Orkneyan skerries,
 Answering the hoarse Hebrides ;
 And from wrecks of ships, and drifting
 Spars, uplifting
 On the desolate, rainy seas ;—

Ever drifting, drifting, drifting
 On the shifting
 Currents of the restless main ;
 Till in sheltered coves, and reaches
 Of sandy beaches,
 All have found repose again.

So when storms of wild emotion
 Strike the ocean
 Of the poet's soul, erelong,
 From each cave and rocky fastness
 In its vastness,
 Floats some fragment of a song :

From the far-off isles enchanted
 Heaven has planted
 With the golden fruit of Truth ;
 From the flashing surf, whose vision
 Gleams Elysian
 In the tropic clime of Youth ;

From the strong Will, and the Endeavor
 That forever
 Wrestles with the tides of Fate ;
 From the wreck of Hopes far-scattered,
 Tempest-shattered,
 Floating waste and desolate ;—

Ever drifting, drifting, drifting
 On the shifting
 Currents of the restless heart ;
 Till at length in books recorded,
 They, like hoarded
 Household words, no more depart.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

GULF-WEED.

A WEARY weed, tossed to and fro,
 Drearily drenched in the ocean brine,
 Soaring high and sinking low,
 Lashed along without will of mine ;
 Sport of the spume of the surging sea ;
 Flung on the foam, afar and near,
 Mark my manifold mystery, —
 Growth and grace in their place appear.

I bear round berries, gray and red,
 Rootless and rover though I be ;
 My spangled leaves, when nicely spread,
 Arboresece as a trunkless tree ;
 Corals curious coat me o'er,
 White and hard in apt array ;
 Mid the wild waves' rude uproar
 Gracefully grow I, night and day.

Hearts there are on the sounding shore,
 Something whispers soft to me,
 Restless and roaming forevermore,
 Like this weary weed of the sea ;
 Bear they yet on each beating breast
 The eternal type of the wondrous whole,
 Growth unfolding amidst unrest,
 Grace informing with silent soul.

CORNELIUS GEORGE FENNER.

SEA LIFE.

FROM "THE PELICAN ISLAND."

LIGHT as a flake of foam upon the wind
 Keel-upward from the deep emerged a shell,
 Shaped like the moon ere half her horn is filled ;
 Fraught with young life, it righted as it rose,
 And moved at will along the yielding water.
 The native pilot of this little bark
 Put out a tier of oars on either side,
 Spread to the wafting breeze a twofold sail,
 And mounted up and glided down the billow
 In happy freedom, pleased to feel the air,
 And wander in the luxury of light.
 Worth all the dead creation, in that hour,
 To me appeared this lonely Nautilus,
 My fellow-being, like myself, alive.
 Entranced in contemplation, vague yet sweet,
 I watched its vagrant course and rippling wake,
 Till I forgot the sun amidst the heavens.

It closed, sunk, dwindled to a point, then nothing ;
 While the last bubble crowned the dimpling
 eddy,

Through which mine eyes still giddily pursued it,
 A joyous creature vaulted through the air, —
 The aspiring fish that fain would be a bird,
 On long, light wings, that flung a diamond-shower

Of dew-drops round its evanescent form,
 Sprang into light, and instantly descended.
 Ere I could greet the stranger as a friend,
 Or mourn his quick departure on the surge,
 A shoal of dolphins tumbling in wild glee,
 Glowed with such orient tints, they might have been

The rainbow's offspring, when it met the ocean
 In that resplendent vision I had seen.
 While yet in ecstasy I hung o'er these,
 With every motion pouring out fresh beauties,
 As though the conscious colors came and went
 At pleasure, glorying in their subtle changes, —
 Enormous o'er the flood, Leviathan
 Looked forth, and from his roaring nostrils sent
 Two fountains to the sky, then plunged amain
 In headlong pastime through the closing gulf.

These were but preludes to the revelry
 That reigned at sunset : then the deep let loose
 Its blithe adventurers to sport at large,
 As kindly instinct taught them ; buoyant shells,
 On stormless voyages, in fleets or single,
 Wherried their tiny mariners ; aloof,
 On wing-like fins, in bow-and-arrow figures,
 The flying-fishes darted to and fro ;
 While spouting whales projected watery columns,

That turned to arches at their height, and seemed
 The skeletons of crystal palaces
 Built on the blue expanse, then perishing,
 Frail as the element which they were made of ;
 Dolphins, in gambols, lent the lucid brine
 Hues richer than the canopy of eve,
 That overhung the scene with gorgeous clouds,
 Decaying into gloom more beautiful
 Than the sun's golden liveries which they lost :
 Till light that hides, and darkness that reveals
 The stars, — exchanging guard, like sentinels
 Of day and night, — transformed the face of nature :

Above was wakefulness, silence around,
 Beneath, repose, — repose that reached even me.
 Power, will, sensation, memory, failed in turn ;
 My very essence seemed to pass away,
 Like a thin cloud that melts across the moon,
 Lost in the blue immensity of heaven.

JAMES MONTGOMERY.

THE CORAL INSECT.

TOIL on ! toil on ! ye ephemeral train,
 Who build in the tossing and treacherous main ;
 Toil on ! for the wisdom of man ye mock,
 With your sand-based structures and domes of
 rock,

Your columns the fathomless fountains' cave,
 And your arches spring up to the crested wave ;
 Ye're a puny race thus to boldly rear
 A fabric so vast in a realm so drear.

Ye bind the deep with your secret zone, —
 The ocean is sealed, and the surge a stone ;
 Fresh wreaths from the coral pavement spring,
 Like the terraced pride of Assyria's king ;
 The turf looks green where the breakers rolled ;
 O'er the whirlpool ripens the rind of gold ;
 The sea-snatched isle is the home of men,
 And mountains exult where the wave hath been.

But why do ye plant, 'neath the billows dark,
 The wrecking reef for the gallant bark ?
 There are snares enough on the tented field,
 Mid the blossomed sweets that the valleys yield ;
 There are serpents to coil ere the flowers are up,
 There's a poison drop in man's purest cup,

There are foes that watch for his cradle breath,
And why need ye sow the floods with death ?

With mouldering bones the deeps are white,
From the ice-clad pole to the tropics bright ;
The mermaid hath twisted her fingers cold
With the mesh of the sea-boy's curls of gold,
And the gods of the ocean have frowned to see
The mariner's bed in their halls of glee ;
Hath earth no graves, that ye thus must spread
The boundless sea for the thronging dead ?

Ye build — ye build — but ye enter not in,
Like the tribes whom the desert devoured in their sin ;

From the land of promise ye fade and die
Ere its verdure gleams forth on your weary eye :
As the kings of the cloud-crowned pyramid,
Their noiseless bones in oblivion hid,
Ye slumber unmarked mid the desolate main,
While the wonder and pride of your works remain.

LYDIA HUNTLEY SIGOURNEY.

THE CORAL REEF.

FROM "THE PELICAN ISLAND."

EVERY one, —
By instinct taught, performed its little task, —
To build its dwelling and its sepulchre,
From its own essence exquisitely modelled ;
There breed, and die, and leave a progeny,
Still multiplied beyond the reach of numbers,
To frame new cells and tombs ; then breed and die
As all their ancestors had done, — and rest,
Hermetically sealed, each in its shrine,
A statue in this temple of oblivion !
Millions of millions thus, from age to age,
With simplest skill and toil unweariable,
No moment and no movement unimproved,
Laid line on line, on terrace terrace spread,
To swell the heightening, brightening, gradual mound,
By marvellous structure climbing towards the day.

A point at first
It peered above those waves ; a point so small
I just perceived it, fixed where all was floating ;
And when a bubble crossed it, the blue film
Expanded like a sky above the speck ;
That speck became a hand-breadth ; day and night
It spread, accumulated, and erelong
Presented to my view a dazzling plain,
White as the moon amid the sapphire sea ;
Bare at low water, and as still as death,
But when the tide came gurgling o'er the surface
'T was like a resurrection of the dead :

From graves innumerable, punctures fine
In the close coral, capillary swarms
Of reptiles, horrent as Medusa's snakes,
Covered the bald-pate reef ;

Erelong the reef o'ertopt the spring-flood's height,
And mocked the billows when they leapt upon it,
Unable to maintain their slippery hold,
And falling down in foam-wreaths round its verge.

Steep were the flanks, with precipices sharp,
Descending to their base in ocean gloom.
Chasms few and narrow and irregular
Formed harbors, safe at once and perilous, —
Safe for defence, but perilous to enter.
A sea-lake shone amidst the fossil isle,
Reflecting in a ring its cliffs and caverns,
With heaven itself seen like a lake below.

JAMES MONTGOMERY.

THE CORAL GROVE.

DEEP in the wave is a coral grove,
Where the purple mullet and gold-fish rove ;
Where the sea-flower spreads its leaves of blue
That never are wet with falling dew,
But in bright and changeful beauty shine
Far down in the green and glassy brine.
The floor is of sand, like the mountain drift,
And the pearl-shells spangle the flinty snow ;
From coral rocks the sea-plants lift
Their boughs, where the tides and billows flow :
The water is calm and still below,
For the winds and waves are absent there,
And the sands are bright as the stars that glow
In the motionless fields of upper air.
There, with its waving blade of green,
The sea-flag streams through the silent water,
And the crimson leaf of the dulce is seen
To blush, like a banner bathed in slaughter.
There, with a light and easy motion,
The fan-coral sweeps through the clear deep sea ;
And the yellow and scarlet tufts of ocean
Are bending like corn on the upland lea :
And life, in rare and beautiful forms,
Is sporting amid those bowers of stone,
And is safe when the wrathful Spirit of storms
Has made the top of the wave his own.
And when the ship from his fury flies,
Where the myriad voices of Ocean roar ;
When the wind-god frowns in the murky skies,
And demons are waiting the wreck on shore ;
Then, far below, in the peaceful sea,
The purple mullet and gold-fish rove,
Where the waters murmur tranquilly,
Through the bending twigs of the coral grove.

JAMES GATES PERCIVAL.

THE CHAMBERED NAUTILUS.

THIS is the ship of pearl, which, poets feign,
Sails the unshaded main, —
The venturous bark that flings
On the sweet summer wind its purpled wings
In gulfs enchanted, where the Siren sings,
And coral reefs lie bare,
Where the cold sea-maids rise to sun their streaming hair.

Its webs of living gauze no more unfurl ;
Wrecked is the ship of pearl !
And every chambered cell,
Where its dim dreaming life was wont to dwell,
As the frail tenant shaped his growing shell,
Before thee lies revealed, —
Its irised ceiling rent, its sunless crypt unsealed !

Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread his lustrous coil ;
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step its shining archway through,
Built up its idle door,
Stretched in his last-found home, and knew the old no more.

Thanks for the heavenly message brought by
thee,
Child of the wandering sea,
Cast from her lap, forlorn !
From thy dead lips a clearer note is born
Than ever Triton blew from wreathèd horn !
While on mine ear it rings,
Through the deep caves of thought I hear a voice that sings : —

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll !
Leave thy low-vaulted past !
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting
sea !

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

THE SEA.

THE sea ! the sea ! the open sea !
The blue, the fresh, the ever free !
Without a mark, without a bound,
It runneth the earth's wide regions round ;
It plays with the clouds ; it mocks the skies ;
Or like a cradled creature lies.

I'm on the sea ! I'm on the sea !
I am where I would ever be ;
With the blue above, and the blue below,
And silence wheresoe'er I go ;
If a storm should come and awake the deep,
What matter ? I shall ride and sleep.

I love, O, how I love to ride
On the fierce, foaming, bursting tide,
When every mad wave drowns the moon,
Or whistles aloft his tempest tune,
And tells how goeth the world below,
And why the sou'west blasts do blow.

I never was on the dull, tame shore,
But I loved the great sea more and more,
And backwards flew to her billowy breast,
Like a bird that seeketh its mother's nest ;
And a mother she was, and is, to me ;
For I was born on the open sea !

The waves were white, and red the morn,
In the noisy hour when I was born ;
And the whale it whistled, the porpoise rolled,
And the dolphins bared their backs of gold ;
And never was heard such an outcry wild
As welcomed to life the ocean-child !

I've lived since then, in calm and strife,
Full fifty summers, a sailor's life,
With wealth to spend and a power to range,
But never have sought nor sighed for change ;
And Death, whenever he comes to me,
Shall come on the wild, unbounded sea !

BRYAN WALLER PROCTER (Barry Cornwall).

SONG OF THE EMIGRANTS IN BERMUDA.

WHERE the remote Bermudas ride
In the ocean's bosom unespied,
From a small boat that rowed along
The listening winds received this song :
" What should we do but sing His praise
That led us through the watery maze
Where he the huge sea monsters wracks,
That lift the deep upon their backs,
Unto an isle so long unknown,
And yet far kinder than our own ?
He lands us on a grassy stage,
Safe from the storms, and prelate's rage ;
He gave us this eternal spring
Which here enamels everything,
And sends the fowls to us in care
On daily visits through the air.
He hangs in shades the orange bright
Like golden lamps in a green night,

And does in the pomegranates close
 Jewels more rich than Ormus shows :
 He makes the figs our mouths to meet,
 And throws the melons at our feet ;
 But apples, plants of such a price,
 No tree could ever bear them twice.
 With cedars chosen by his hand
 From Lebanon he stores the land ;
 And makes the hollow seas that roar
 Proclaim the ambergris on shore.
 He cast (of which we rather boast)
 The gospel's pearl upon our coast ;
 And in these rocks for us did frame
 A temple where to sound his name.
 O, let our voice his praise exalt
 Till it arrive at heaven's vault,
 Which then perhaps rebounding may Echo beyond the Mexique bay !"—
 Thus sung they in the English boat
 A holy and a cheerful note ;
 And all the way, to guide their chime,
 With falling oars they kept the time.

ANDREW MARVELL.

A WET SHEET AND A FLOWING SEA.

A WET sheet and a flowing sea, —
 A wind that follows fast,
 And fills the white and rustling sail,
 And bends the gallant mast, —
 And bends the gallant mast, my boys,
 While, like the eagle free,
 Away the good ship flies, and leaves
 Old England on the lee.

O for a soft and gentle wind !
 I heard a fair one cry ;
 But give to me the snoring breeze
 And white waves heaving high, —
 And white waves heaving high, my boys,
 The good ship tight and free ;
 The world of waters is our home,
 And merry men are we.

There's tempest in yon horned moon,
 And lightning in yon cloud ;
 And hark the music, mariners !
 The wind is piping loud, —
 The wind is piping loud, my boys,
 The lightning flashing free ;
 While the hollow oak our palace is,
 Our heritage the sea.

ALLAN CUNNINGHAM.

SONG OF THE ROVER.

FROM "THE CORSAIR," CANTO I.

O'ER the glad waters of the dark blue sea,
 Our thoughts as boundless and our souls as free,
 Far as the breeze can bear, the billows foam,
 Survey our empire, and behold our home !
 These are our realms, no limits to their sway, —
 Our flag the sceptre all who meet obey.
 Ours the wild life in tumult still to range
 From toil to rest, and joy in every change.
 O, who can tell? not thou, luxurious slave !
 Whose soul would sicken o'er the heaving wave ;
 Not thou, vain lord of wantonness and ease !
 Whom slumber soothes not, — pleasure cannot please. —
 O, who can tell save he whose heart hath tried,
 And danced in triumph o'er the waters wide,
 The exulting sense, the pulse's maddening play,
 That thrills the wanderer of that trackless way ?
 That for itself can woo the approaching fight,
 And turn what some deem danger to delight ;
 That seeks what cravens shun with more than zeal,

And where the feebler faint can only feel —
 Feel to the rising bosom's inmost core,
 Its hope awaken and its spirit soar ?
 No dread of death — if with us die our foes —
 Save that it seems even duller than repose :
 Come when it will — we snatch the life of life —
 When lost — what reck's it — by disease or strife ?
 Let him who crawls enamored of decay,
 Cling to his couch and sicken years away ;
 Heave his thick breath, and shake his palsied
 head :
 Ours — the fresh turf, and not the feverish bed.
 While gasp by gasp he falters forth his soul,
 Ours with one pang — one bound — escapes control.

His corse may boast its urn and narrow cave,
 And they who loathed his life may gild his grave :
 Ours are the tears, though few, sincerely shed,
 When Ocean shrouds and sepulchres our dead.
 For us, even banquets fond regrets supply
 In the red cup that crowns our memory ;
 And the brief epitaph in danger's day,
 When those who win at length divide the prey,
 And cry, Remembrance saddening o'er each brow,
 How had the brave who fell exulted now !

LORD BYRON.

MY BRIGANTINE.

FROM "THE WATER WITCH."

Just in thy mould and beauteous in thy form,
 Gentle in roll and buoyant on the surge,
 Light as the sea-fowl rocking in the storm,
 In breeze and gale thy onward course we urge,

My water-queen !
 Lady of mine,
 More light and swift than thou none thread the sea
 With surer keel or steadier on its path,
 We brave each waste of ocean-mystery
 And laugh to hear the howling tempest's wrath,
     For we are thine.
 My brigantine !
 Trust to the mystic power that points thy way,
 Trust to the eye that pierces from afar ;
 Trust the red meteors that around thee play,
 And, fearless, trust the Sea-Green Lady's star,
     Thou bark divine !

JAMES FENIMORE COOPER.

THE HEAVING OF THE LEAD.

For England when with favoring gale
 Our gallant ship up channel steered,
 And, scudding under easy sail,
 The high blue western land appeared ;
 To heave the lead the seaman sprung,
 And to the pilot cheerly sung,
     " By the deep — nine ! "

And bearing up to gain the port,
 Some well-known object kept in view, —
 An abbey-tower, a harbor-fort,
 Or beacon to the vessel true ;
 While oft the lead the seaman flung,
 And to the pilot cheerly sung,
     " By the mark — seven ! "

And as the much-loved shore we near,
 With transport we behold the roof
 Where dwelt a friend or partner dear,
 Of faith and love a matchless proof.
 The lead once more the seaman flung,
 And to the watchful pilot sung,
     " Quarter less — five ! "

Now to her berth the ship draws nigh :
 We shorten sail, — she feels the tide, —
 " Stand clear the cable " is the cry, —
 The anchor's gone ; we safely ride.
 The watch is set, and through the night
 We hear the seamen with delight
     Proclaim, — " All 's well ! "

CHARLES DIBDIN.

ALL 'S WELL.

FROM "THE BRITISH FLEET."

DESERTED by the waning moon,
 When skies proclaim night's cheerless noon,
 On tower, or fort, or tented ground
 The sentry walks his lonely round ;

And should a footstep haply stray
 Where caution marks the guarded way,
 " Who goes there ? Stranger, quickly tell ! "
 " A friend ! " " The word ? " " Good-night ; "
     all 's well.

Or, sailing on the midnight deep,
 When weary messmates soundly sleep,
 The careful watch patrols the deck,
 To guard the ship from foes or wreck ;
 And while his thoughts oft homewards veer,
 Some friendly voice salutes his ear, —
 " What cheer ? Brother, quickly tell ;
 Above, — below." Good-night ; all 's well.

THOMAS DIBDIN.

THE TEMPEST.

We were crowded in the cabin,
 Not a soul would dare to sleep, —
 It was midnight on the waters
 And a storm was on the deep.

'T is a fearful thing in winter
 To be shattered by the blast,
 And to hear the rattling trumpet
 Thunder, " Cut away the mast ! "

So we shuddered there in silence, —
 For the stoutest held his breath,
 While the hungry sea was roaring,
 And the breakers talked with Death.

As thus we sat in darkness,
 Each one busy in his prayers,
 " We are lost ! " the captain shouted
 As he staggered down the stairs.

But his little daughter whispered,
 As she took his icy hand,
 " Is n't God upon the ocean
 Just the same as on the land ? "

Then we kissed the little maiden,
 And we spoke in better cheer,
 And we anchored safe in harbor
 When the morn was shining clear.

JAMES THOMAS FIELDS.

THE MINUTE-GUN.

WHEN in the storm on Albion's coast,
 The night-watch guards his weary post,
 From thoughts of danger free,
 He marks some vessel's dusky form,
 And hears, amid the howling storm,
 The minute-gun at sea.

Swift on the shore a hardy few
 The life-boat man with a gallant crew
 And dare the dangerous wave ;
 Through the wild surf they cleave their way,
 Lost in the foam, nor know dismay,
 For they go the crew to save.

But O, what rapture fills each breast
 Of the hopeless crew of the ship distressed !
 Then, landed safe, what joy to tell
 Of all the dangers that befell !
 Then is heard no more,
 By the watch on shore,
 The minute-gun at sea.

R. S. SHARPE.

THE BAY OF BISCAIY.

LOUD roared the dreadful thunder,
 The rain a deluge showers,
 The clouds were rent asunder
 By lightning's vivid powers ;
 The night both drear and dark,
 Our poor devoted bark,
 Till next day, there she lay,
 In the Bay of Biscay, O !

Now dashed upon the billow,
 Her opening timbers creak,
 Each fears a watery pillow,
 None stops the dreadful leak ;
 To cling to slippery shrouds
 Each breathless seaman crowds,
 As she lay, till the day,
 In the Bay of Biscay, O !

At length the wished-for morrow
 Broke through the hazy sky,
 Absorbed in silent sorrow,
 Each heaved a bitter sigh ;
 The dismal wreck to view
 Struck horror to the crew,
 As she lay, on that day,
 In the Bay of Biscay, O !

Her yielding timbers sever,
 Her pitchy seams are rent,
 When Heaven, all bounteous ever,
 Its boundless mercy sent, —
 A sail in sight appears !
 We hail her with three cheers ;
 Now we sail, with the gale,
 From the Bay of Biscay, O !

ANDREW CHERRY.

THE STORM.

CEASE, rude Boreas, blustering railer !
 List, ye landsmen all, to me ;
 Messmates, hear a brother sailor
 Sing the dangers of the sea ;

From bounding billows, first in motion,
 When the distant whirlwinds rise,
 To the tempest-troubled ocean,
 Where the seas contend with skies.

Hark ! the boatswain hoarsely bawling,
 By topsail-sheets and haulyards stand !
 Down top-gallants quick be hauling !
 Down your stay-sails, — hand, boys, hand !

Now it freshens, set the braces,
 Quick the topsail sheets let go ;
 Luff, boys, luff ! don't make wry faces,
 Up your topsails nimbly clew.

Round us roars the tempest louder,
 Think what fear our minds inthralls !
 Harder yet it blows, still harder,
 Now again the boatswain calls.

The topsail-yard point to the wind, boys,
 See all clear to reef each course ;
 Let the foresheet go, — don't mind, boys,
 Though the weather should be worse.

Fore and aft the spritsail-yard get,
 Reef the mizzen, see all clear ;
 Hand up, each preventer-brace set !
 Man the foreyards, — cheer, lads, cheer !

Now the dreadful thunder's roaring,
 Peal on peal contending clash,
 On our heads fierce rain falls pouring,
 In our eyes blue lightnings flash.

One wide water all around us,
 All above us one black sky ;
 Different deaths at once surround us :
 Hark ! what means that dreadful cry ?

The foremast's gone ! cries every tongue out,
 O'er the lee twelve feet 'bove deck ;
 A leak beneath the chest-tree's sprung out,
 Call all hands to clear the wreck.

Quick the lanyards cut to pieces ;
 Come, my hearts, be stout and bold ;
 Plumb the well, — the leak increases,
 Four feet water in the hold !

While o'er the ship wild waves are beating,
 We our wives and children mourn ;
 Alas ! from hence there 's no retreating,
 Alas ! to them there 's no return !

Still the leak is gaining on us !
 Both chain-pumps are choked below :
 Heaven have mercy here upon us !
 For only that can save us now.

O'er the lee-beam is the land, boys,
 Let the guns o'erboard be thrown ;
 To the pumps call every hand, boys,
 See ! our mizzen-mast is gone.

The leak we 've found, it cannot pour fast ;
 We 've lightened her a foot or more ;
 Up and rig a jury foremast,
 She rights ! she rights, boys ! we 're off shore.

GEORGE ALEXANDER STEVENS.

YE MARINERS OF ENGLAND.

YE mariners of England !
 That guard our native seas ;
 Whose flag has braved, a thousand years,
 The battle and the breeze !
 Your glorious standard launch again
 To match another foe !
 And sweep through the deep,
 While the stormy winds do blow ;
 While the battle rages loud and long,
 And the stormy winds do blow.

The spirits of your fathers
 Shall start from every wave ! —
 For the deck it was their field of fame,
 And ocean was their grave :
 Where Blake and mighty Nelson fell,
 Your manly hearts shall glow,
 As ye sweep through the deep,
 While the stormy winds do blow ;
 While the battle rages loud and long,
 And the stormy winds do blow.

Britannia needs no bulwarks,
 No towers along the steep ;
 Her march is o'er the mountain-waves,
 Her home is on the deep.
 With thunders from her native oak,
 She quells the floods below, —
 As they roar on the shore,
 When the stormy winds do blow ;
 When the battle rages loud and long
 And the stormy winds do blow.

The meteor flag of England
 Shall yet terrific burn ;
 Till danger's troubled night depart,
 And the star of peace return.
 Then, then, ye ocean warriors !
 Our song and feast shall flow
 To the fame of your name,
 When the storm has ceased to blow ;
 When the fiery fight is heard no more,
 And the storm has ceased to blow.

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

TOM BOWLING.

HERE, a sheer hulk, lies poor Tom Bowling,
 The darling of our crew ;
 No more he 'll hear the tempest howling,
 For death has broached him to.
 His form was of the manliest beauty,
 His heart was kind and soft ;
 Faithful, below, he did his duty ;
 But now he 's gone aloft.

Tom never from his word departed,
 His virtues were so rare,
 His friends were many and true-hearted,
 His Poll was kind and fair :
 And then he 'd sing, so blithe and jolly,
 Ah, many 's the time and oft !
 But mirth is turned to melancholy,
 For Tom is gone aloft.

Yet shall poor Tom find pleasant weather,
 When He who all commands
 Shall give, to call life's crew together,
 The word to "pipe all hands."
 Thus Death, who kings and tars despatches,
 In vain Tom's life has doffed ;
 For though his body 's under hatches,
 His soul has gone aloft.

CHARLES DIBDIN.

THE WHITE SQUALL.

THE sea was bright, and the bark rode well ;
 The breeze bore the tone of the vesper bell ;
 'T was a gallant bark with a crew as brave
 As ever launched on the heaving wave.
 She shone in the light of declining day,
 And each sail was set, and each heart was gay.

They neared the land where in beauty smiles
 The sunny shore of the Grecian Isles ;
 All thought of home, of that welcome dear
 Which soon should greet each wanderer's ear ;
 And in fancy joined the social throng
 In the festive dance and the joyous song.

A white cloud glides through the azure sky, —
 What means that wild despairing cry?
 Farewell the visioned scenes of home!
 That cry is "Help," where no help can come;
 For the White Squall rides on the surging wave,
 And the bark is 'gulfed in an ocean grave.

BRYAN WALLER PROCTER (Barry Cornwall).

OUR BOAT TO THE WAVES.

OUR boat to the waves go free,
 By the bending tide, where the curled wave breaks,
 Like the track of the wind on the white snowflakes:
 Away, away! 'T is a path o'er the sea.

Blasts may rave, — spread the sail,
 For our spirits can wrest the power from the wind,
 And the gray clouds yield to the sunny mind,
 Fear not we the whirl of the gale.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING.

TO SEA!

To sea! to sea! the calm is o'er,
 The wanton water leaps in sport,
 And rattles down the pebbly shore,
 The dolphin wheels, the sea-cows snort,
 And unseen mermaid's pearly song
 Comes bubbling up, the weeds among.
 Fling broad the sail, dip deep the oar:
 To sea! to sea! the calm is o'er.

To sea! to sea! our white-winged bark
 Shall billowing cleave its watery way,
 And with its shadow, fleet and dark,
 Break the caved Triton's azure day,
 Like mountain eagle soaring light
 O'er antelopes on Alpine height.
 The anchor heaves! The ship swings free!
 Our sails swell full! To sea! to sea!

THOMAS LOVELL BEDDOES.

THE SAILOR'S CONSOLATION.

ONE night came on a hurricane,
 The sea was mountains rolling,
 When Barney Buntline turned his quid,
 And said to Billy Bowling:
 "A strong nor'wester's blowing, Bill;
 Hark! don't ye hear it roar now?
 Lord help 'em, how I pity them
 Unhappy folks on shore now!

"Foolhardy chaps who live in towns,
 What danger they are all in,
 And now lie quaking in their beds,
 For fear the roof shall fall in:
 Poor creatures! how they envies us,
 And wishes, I've a notion,
 For our good luck, in such a storm,
 To be upon the ocean!

"And as for them who're out all day
 On business from their houses,
 And late at night are coming home,
 To cheer their babes and spouses, —
 While you and I, Bill, on the deck
 Are comfortably lying,
 My eyes! what tiles and chimney-pots
 About their heads are flying!

"And very often have we heard
 How men are killed and undone
 By overturns of carriages,
 By thieves and fires in London.
 We know what risks all landmen run,
 From noblemen to tailors;
 Then, Bill, let us thank Providence
 That you and I are sailors."

WILLIAM PITT.

A LIFE ON THE OCEAN WAVE.

A LIFE on the ocean wave,
 A home on the rolling deep;
 Where the scattered waters rave,
 And the winds their revels keep!
 Like an eagle caged I pine
 On this dull, unchanging shore:
 O, give me the flashing brine,
 The spray and the tempest's roar!

Once more on the deck I stand,
 Of my own swift-gliding craft:
 Set sail! farewell to the land;
 The gale follows fair abaft.
 We shoot through the sparkling foam,
 Like an ocean-bird set free, —
 Like the ocean-bird, our home
 We'll find far out on the sea.

The land is no longer in view,
 The clouds have begun to frown;
 But with a stout vessel and crew,
 We'll say, Let the storm come down!
 And the song of our hearts shall be,
 While the winds and the waters rave,
 A home on the rolling sea!
 A life on the ocean wave!

EPES SARGENT.

THE OCEAN.

THE Ocean at the bidding of the moon
 Forever changes with his restless tide :
 Flung shoreward now, to be regathered soon
 With kingly pauses of reluctant pride,
 And semblance of return. Anon from home
 He issues forth anew, high ridged and free, —
 The gentlest murmur of his seething foam
 Like armies whispering where great echoes be.
 O, leave me here upon this beach to rove,
 Mute listener to that sound so grand and lone !
 A glorious sound, deep drawn, and strongly thrown,
 And reaching those on mountain heights above,
 To British ears (as who shall scorn to own ?)
 A tutelar fond voice, a savior tone of love.

CHARLES TURNER.

FRAGMENTS.

THE SEA-SHORE.

I have seen
 A curious child, who dwelt upon a tract
 Of inland ground, applying to his ear
 The convolutions of a smooth-lipped shell ;
 To which, in silence hushed, his very soul
 Listened intently ; and his countenance soon
 Brightened with joy ; for from within were heard
 Murmurings, whereby the monitor expressed
 Mysterious union with its native sea.
 Even such a shell the universe itself
 Is to the ear of Faith ; and there are times,
 I doubt not, when to you it doth impart
 Authentic tidings of invisible things ;
 Of ebb and flow, and ever-during power ;
 And central peace, subsisting at the heart
 Of endless agitation.

The Excursion, Book iv.

WORDSWORTH.

And there, where the smooth, wet pebbles be,
 The waters gurgle longingly,
 As if they fain would seek the shore,
 To be at rest from the ceaseless roar,
 To be at rest forevermore.

THE LOW COUNTRIES.

To men of other minds my fancy flies,
Embosomed in the deep where Holland lies.
Methinks her patient sons before me stand,
Where the broad Ocean leans against the land,
And, sedulous to stop the coming tide,
Lift the tall rampire's artificial pride.
Onward methinks, and diligently slow,
The firm connected bulwark seems to grow,
Spreads its long arms amidst the watery roar,
Scoops out an empire, and usurps the shore.
While the pent Ocean, rising o'er the pile,
Sees an amphibious world beneath him smile;
The slow canal, the yellow-blossomed vale,
The willow-tufted bank, the gliding sail,
The crowded mart, the cultivated plain,
A new creation rescued from his reign.

The Wants of Man

"Man wants but little here below:

"Nor wants that little long:"

'Tis not with me, exactly so:

But 'tis so, in the long.

My wants are many, and if told

Would muster many a score:

And were each wish a mint of gold

I still should long for more

ADVENTURE.

CHEVY-CHASE.

[Percy, Earl of Northumberland, had vowed to hunt for three days in the Scottish border, without condescending to ask leave from Earl Douglas, who was either lord of the soil or lord warden of the Marches. This provoked the conflict which was celebrated in the old ballad of the "Hunting o' the Cheviot." The circumstances of the battle of Otterbourne (A. D. 1388) are woven into the ballad, and the affairs of the two events are confounded. The ballad preserved in the Percy Reliques is probably as old as 1574. The one following is a modernized form, of the time of James I.]

God prosper long our noble king,
Our lives and safeties all ;
A woful hunting once there did
In Chevy-Chase befall.

To drive the deer with hound and horn
Earl Percy took his way ;
The child may rue that is unborn
The hunting of that day.

The stout Earl of Northumberland
A vow to God did make,
His pleasure in the Scottish woods
Three summer days to take, —

The chiefest harts in Chevy-Chase
To kill and bear away.
These tidings to Earl Douglas came,
In Scotland where he lay ;

Who sent Earl Percy present word
He would prevent his sport.
The English earl, not fearing that,
Did to the woods resort,

With fifteen hundred bowmen bold,
All chosen men of might,
Who knew full well in time of need
To aim their shafts aright.

The gallant greyhounds swiftly ran
To chase the fallow deer ;
On Monday they began to hunt,
When daylight did appear ;

And long before high noon they had
A hundred fat bucks slain ;
Then, having dined, the drovers went
To rouse the deer again.

The bowmen mustered on the hills,
Well able to endure ;
And all their rear, with special care,
That day was guarded sure.

The hounds ran swiftly through the woods
The nimble deer to take,
That with their cries the hills and dales
An echo shrill did make.

Lord Percy to the quarry went,
To view the slaughtered deer ;
Quoth he, " Earl Douglas promised
This day to meet me here ;

" But if I thought he would not come,
No longer would I stay ;"
With that a brave young gentleman
Thus to the earl did say : —

" Lo, yonder doth Earl Douglas come, —
His men in armor bright ;
Full twenty hundred Scottish spears
All marching in our sight ;

" All men of pleasant Teviotdale, Fast by the river Tweed ;"
" Then cease your sports," Earl Percy said,
" And take your bows with speed ;

" And now with me, my countrymen,
Your courage forth advance ;
For never was there champion yet,
In Scotland or in France,

" That ever did on horseback come,
But if my hap it were,
I durst encounter man for man,
With him to break a spear."

Earl Douglas on his milk-white steed,
Most like a baron bold,
Rode foremost of his company,
Whose armor shone like gold.

“Show me,” said he, “whose men you be,
That hunt so boldly here,
That, without my consent, do chase
And kill my fallow-deer.”

The first man that did answer make,
Was noble Percy, he —
Who said, “We list not to declare,
Nor show whose men we be :

“Yet will we spend our dearest blood
Thy chiefest harts to slay.”
Then Douglas swore a solemn oath,
And thus in rage did say : —

“Ere thus I will out-braved be,
One of us two shall die ;
I know thee well, an earl thou art, —
Lord Percy, so am I.

“But trust me, Percy, pity it were,
And great offence, to kill
Any of these our guiltless men,
For they have done no ill.

“Let you and me the battle try,
And set our men aside.”
“Accused be he,” Earl Percy said,
“By whom this is denied.”

Then stepped a gallant squire forth,
Witherington was his name,
Who said, “I would not have it told
To Henry, our king, for shame,

“That e'er my captain fought on foot,
And I stood looking on.
You two be earls,” said Witherington,
“And I a squire alone ;

“I'll do the best that do I may,
While I have power to stand ;
While I have power to wield my sword
I'll fight with heart and hand.”

Our English archers bent their bows, —
Their hearts were good and true ;
At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full fourscore Scots they slew.

Yet stays Earl Douglas on the bent,
As chieftain stout and good ;
As valiant captain, all unmoved,
The shock he firmly stood.

His host he parted had in three,
As leader ware and tried ;
And soon his spearmen on their foes
Bore down on every side.

Throughout the English archery
They dealt full many a wound ;
But still our valiant Englishmen
All firmly kept their ground.

And throwing straight their bows away,
They grasped their swords so bright ;
And now sharp blows, a heavy shower,
On shields and helmets light.

They closed full fast on every side, —
No slackness there was found ;
And many a gallant gentleman
Lay gasping on the ground.

In truth, it was a grief to see
How each one chose his spear,
And how the blood out of their breasts
Did gush like water clear.

At last these two stout earls did meet ;
Like captains of great might,
Like lions wode, they laid on lode,
And made a cruel fight.

They fought until they both did sweat,
With swords of tempered steel,
Until the blood, like drops of rain,
They trickling down did feel.

“Yield thee, Lord Percy,” Douglas said,
“In faith I will thee bring
Where thou shalt high advanced be
By James, our Scottish king.

“Thy ransom I will freely give,
And this report of thee, —
Thou art the most courageous knight
That ever I did see.”

“No, Douglas,” saith Earl Percy then,
“Thy proffer I do scorn ;
I will not yield to any Scot
That ever yet was born.”

With that there came an arrow keen
Out of an English bow,
Which struck Earl Douglas to the heart, —
A deep and deadly blow ;

Who never spake more words than these :
“Fight on, my merry men all ;
For why, my life is at an end ;
Lord Percy sees my fall.”

Then leaving life, Earl Percy took
The dead man by the hand ;
And said, " Earl Douglas, for thy life
Would I had lost my land.

" In truth, my very heart doth bleed
With sorrow for thy sake ;
For sure a more redoubted knight
Mischance did never take."

A knight amongst the Scots there was
Who saw Earl Douglas die,
Who straight in wrath did vow avenge
Upon the Earl Percy.

Sir Hugh Mountgomery was he called,
Who, with a spear full bright,
Well mounted on a gallant steed,
Ran fiercely through the fight ;

And past the English archers all,
Without a dread or fear ;
And through Earl Percy's body then
He thrust his hateful spear.

With such vehement force and might
He did his body gore,
The staff ran through the other side
A large cloth-yard and more.

So thus did both these nobles die,
Whose courage none could stain.
An English archer then perceived
The noble earl was slain.

He had a bow bent in his hand,
Made of a trusty tree ;
An arrow of a cloth-yard long
To the hard head haled he.

Against Sir Hugh Mountgomery
So right the shaft he set,
The gray goose wing that was thereon
In his heart's blood was wet.

This fight did last from break of day
Till setting of the sun ;
For when they rung the evening-bell
The battle scarce was done.

With stout Earl Percy there were slain
Sir John of Egerton,
Sir Robert Ratcliff, and Sir John,
Sir James, that bold baron.

And with Sir George and stout Sir James,
Both knights of good account,
Good Sir Ralph Raby there was slain,
Whose prowess did surmount.

For Witherington my heart is woe
That ever he slain should be,
For when his legs were hewn in two,
He knelt and fought on his knee.

And with Earl Douglas there were slain
Sir Hugh Mountgomery,
Sir Charles Murray, that from the field
One foot would never flee ;

Sir Charles Murray of Ratcliff, too, —
His sister's son was he ;
Sir David Lamb, so well esteemed,
But saved he could not be.

And the Lord Maxwell in like case
Did with Earl Douglas die :
Of twenty hundred Scottish spears,
Scarce fifty-five did fly.

Of fifteen hundred Englishmen,
Went home but fifty-three ;
The rest in Chevy-Chase were slain,
Under the greenwood tree.

Next day did many widows come,
Their husbands to bewail ;
They washed their wounds in brinish tears,
But all would not prevail.

Their bodies, bathed in purple blood,
They bore with them away ;
They kissed them dead a thousand times,
Ere they were clad in clay.

The news was brought to Edinburgh,
Where Scotland's king did reign,
That brave Earl Douglas suddenly
Was with an arrow slain :

" O heavy news," King James did say ;
" Scotland can witness be
I have not any captain more
Of such account as he."

Like tidings to King Henry came Within as short a space,
That Percy of Northumberland
Was slain in Chevy-Chase :

" Now God be with him," said our King,
" Since 't will no better be ;
I trust I have within my realm
Five hundred as good as he :

" Yet shall not Scots or Scotland say
But I will vengeance take ;
I'll be revenged on them all
For brave Earl Percy's sake."

This vow full well the king performed
After at Humbledown ;
In one day fifty knights were slain
With lords of high renown ;

And of the rest, of small account,
Did many hundreds die :
Thus endeth the hunting of Chevy-Chase,
Made by the Earl Percy.

God save the king, and bless this land,
With plenty, joy, and peace ;
And grant, henceforth, that foul debate
'Twixt noblemen may cease.

RICHARD SHEALE.

LAMENT OF THE BORDER WIDOW.

[Sir Walter Scott says : " This ballad relates to the execution of Cockburne of Henderland, a border freebooter, hanged over the gate of his own tower by James V. in his famous expedition, in 1529, against the marauders of the border. In a deserted burial-place near the ruins of the castle, the monument of Cockburne and his lady is still shown. The following inscription is still legible, though defaced :—

" HERE LYES PERYS OF COKBURNE AND HIS WYFE MARJORY." ]

My love he built me a bonnie bower,
And clad it a' wi' lily flower ;
A brawer bower ye ne'er did see,
Than my true-love he built for me.

There came a man, by middle day,
He spied his sport, and went away ;
And brought the king that very night,
Who brake my bower, and slew my knight.

He slew my knight, to me sae dear ;
He slew my knight, and poin'd his gear :
My servants all for life did flee,
And left me in extremitie.

I sewed his sheet, making my mane ;
I watched the corpse mysell alane ;
I watched his body night and day ;
No living creature came that way.

I took his body on my back,
And whiles I gaed, and whiles I sat ;
I digged a grave, and laid him in,
And happed him with the sod sae green.

But think nae ye my heart was sair,
When I laid the mou' on his yellow hair ?
O, think nae ye my heart was wae,
When I turned about, away to gae ?

Nae living man I'll love again,
Since that my lively knight is slain ;
Wi' ae lock o' his yellow hair
I'll chain my heart forevermair.

ROBIN HOOD AND ALLEN-A-DALE.

[Of Robin Hood, the famous outlaw of Sherwood Forest, and his merry men, there are many ballads ; but the limits of this volume forbid our giving more than a single selection.

Various periods, ranging from the time of Richard I. to the end of the reign of Edward II., have been assigned as the age in which Robin Hood lived. He is usually described as a yeoman, abiding in Sherwood Forest, in Nottinghamshire. His most noted followers, generally mentioned in the ballads, are Little John, Friar Tuck, his chaplain, and his maid Marian. Nearly all the legends extol his courage, his generosity, his humanity, and his skill as an archer. He robbed the rich only, who could afford to lose, and gave freely to the poor. He protected the needy, was a champion of the fair sex, and took great delight in plundering prelates. The following ballad exhibits the outlaw in one of his most attractive aspects,—affording assistance to a distressed lover.]

COME, listen to me, you gallants so free,
All you that love mirth for to hear,
And I will tell you of a bold outlaw,
That lived in Nottinghamshire.

As Robin Hood in the forest stood,
All under the greenwood tree,
There he was aware of a brave young man,
As fine as fine might be.

The youngster was clad in scarlet red,
In scarlet fine and gay ;
And he did frisk it over the plain,
And chanted a roundelay.

As Robin Hood next morning stood
Amongst the leaves so gay,
There did he espy the same young man
Come drooping along the way.

The scarlet he wore the day before
It was clean cast away ;
And at every step he fetched a sigh,
" Alack and well-a-day ! "

Then stepped forth brave Little John,
And Midge, the miller's son ;
Which made the young man bend his bow,
Whenas he see them come.

" Stand off ! stand off ! " the young man said,
" What is your will with me ? "
" You must come before our master straight,
Under yon greenwood tree."

And when he came bold Robin before,
Robin asked him courteously,
" O, hast thou any money to spare,
For my merry men and me ? "

" I have no money," the young man said,
" But five shillings and a ring ;
And that I have kept these seven long years,
To have at my wedding.

"Yesterday I should have married a maid,
But she was from me ta'en,
And chosen to be an old knight's delight,
Whereby my poor heart is slain."

"What is thy name?" then said Robin Hood,
"Come tell me without any fail."
"By the faith of my body," then said the young
man,
"My name it is Allen-a-Dale."

"What wilt thou give me," said Robin Hood,
"In ready gold or fee,
To help thee to thy true-love again,
And deliver her unto thee?"

"I have no money," then quoth the young man,
"No ready gold nor fee,
But I will swear upon a book
Thy true servant for to be."

"How many miles is it to thy true-love?
Come tell me without guile."
"By the faith of my body," then said the young
man,
"It is but five little mile."

Then Robin he hasted over the plain,
He did neither stint nor lin,*
Until he came unto the church
Where Allen should keep his wedding.

"What hast thou here?" the bishop then said,
"I prithee now tell unto me."
"I am a bold harper," quoth Robin Hood,
"And the best in the north country."

"O, welcome, O, welcome," the bishop he said,
"That music best pleaseth me."
"You shall have no music," quoth Robin Hood,
"Till the bride and bridegroom I see."

With that came in a wealthy knight,
Which was both grave and old;
And after him a fuilkin lass,
Did shine like the glistering gold.

"This is not a fit match," quoth Robin Hood,
"That you do seem to make here;
For since we are come into the church,
The bride shall chuse her own dear."

Then Robin Hood put his horn to his mouth,
And blew blasts two and three;
When four-and-twenty yeomen bold
Came leaping over the lea.

* Stop nor stay.

And when they came into the churchyard,
Marching all in a row,
The very first man was Allen-a-Dale,
To give bold Robin his bow.

"This is thy true-love," Robin he said,
"Young Allen, as I hear say;
And you shall be married at this same time,
Before we depart away."

"That shall not be," the bishop he cried,
"For thy word shall not stand;
They shall be three times asked in the church,
As the law is of our land."

Robin Hood pulled off the bishop's coat,
And put it upon Little John;
"By the faith of my body," then Robin said,
"This cloth doth make thee a man."

When Little John went into the quire,
The people began to laugh;
He asked them seven times in the church
Lest three times should not be enough.

"Who gives me this maid?" said Little John,
Quoth Robin Hood, "That do I;
And he that takes her from Allen-a-Dale,
Full dearly he shall her buy."

And then, having ended this merry wedding,
The bride looked like a queen;
And so they returned to the merry greenwood,
Amongst the leaves so green.

JOCK JOHNSTONE, THE TINKLER.

"O, CAME ye ower by the Yoke-burn Ford,
Or down the King's Road of the clench?*" Or saw ye a knight and a lady bright, Wha ha'e gane the gate they baith shall rue?"

"I saw a knight and a lady bright
Ride up the clench at the break of day;
The knight upon a coal-black steed,
And the dame on one of a silver-gray.

"And the lady's palfrey flew the first,
With many a clang of silver bell:
Swift as the raven's morning flight
The two went scouring ower the fell.

"By this time they are man and wife,
And standing in St. Mary's faue;
And the lady in the grass-green silk
A maid you will never see again."

* Dell.

"But I can tell thee, saucy wight, —
And that the runaway shall prove, —
Revenge to a Douglas is as sweet
As maiden charms or maiden's love."

"Since thou say'st that, my Lord Douglas,
Good faith some clinking there will be ;
Beshrew my heart but and my sword,
If I winna turn and ride with thee !"

They whipped out ower the Shepherd Cleuch,
And down the links o' the Corsecleuch Burn ;
And aye the Douglas swore by his sword
To win his love, or ne'er return.

"First fight your rival, Lord Douglas,
And then brag after, if you may ;
For the Earl of Ross is as brave a lord
As ever gave good weapon sway.

"But I for ae poor siller merk,
Or thirteen pennies and a bawbee,
Will tak in hand to fight you baith,
Or beat the winner, whiche'er it be."

The Douglas turned him on his steed,
And I wat a loud laughter leuch he :
"Of a' the fools I have ever met,
Man, I ha'e never met ane like thee.

"Art thou akin to lord or knight,
Or courtly squire or warrior leal ?"
"I am a tinkler," quo' the wight,
"But I like croun-cracking unco weel."

When they came to St. Mary's kirk,
The chaplain shook for very fear ;
And aye he kissed the cross, and said,
"What deevil has sent that Douglas here !

"He neither values book nor ban,
But curses all without demur ;
And cares nae mair for a holy man
Than I do for a worthless cur."

"Come here, thou bland and brittle priest,
And tell to me without delay
Where you have hid the lord of Ross
And the lady that came at the break of day."

"No knight or lady, good Lord Douglas,
Have I beheld since break of morn ;
And I never saw the lord of Ross
Since the woful day that I was born."

Lord Douglas turned him round about,
And looked the Tinkler in the face ;
Where he beheld a lurking smile,
And a deevil of a dour grimace.

"How's this, how's this, thou Tinkler loun ?
Hast thou presumed to lie on me ?"
"Faith that I have !" the Tinkler said,
"And a right good turn I have done to thee ;

"For the lord of Ross and thy own true-love,
The beauteous Harriet of Thirlestane,
Rade west away, ere the break of day ;
And you 'll never see the dear maid again ;

"So I thought it best to bring you here,
On a wrang scent, of my own accord ;
For had you met the Johnstone clan,
They wad ha'e made mince-meat of a lord."

At this the Douglas was so wroth
He wist not what to say or do ;
But he strak the Tinkler o'er the croun,
Till the blood came dreeping ower his brow.

"Beshrew my heart," quo' the Tinkler lad,
"Thou bear'st thee most ungallantlie !
If these are the manners of a lord,
They are manners that winna gang down wi' me."

"Hold up thy hand," the Douglas cried,
"And keep thy distance, Tinkler loun !"
"That will I not," the Tinkler said,
"Though I and my mare should both go doun !"

"I have armor on," cried the Lord Douglas,
"Cuirass and helm, as you may see."
"The deil me care !" quo' the Tinkler lad ;
"I shall have a skelp at them and thee."

"You are not horsed," quo' the Lord Douglas,
"And no remorse this weapon brooks."
"Mine's a right good yaud," quo' the Tinkler lad,
"And a great deal better nor she looks.

"So stand to thy weapons, thou haughty lord,
What I have taken I needs must give ;
Thou shalt never strike a tinkler again,
For the longest day thou hast to live."

Then to it they fell, both sharp and snell,
Till the fire from both their weapons flew ;
But the very first shock that they met with,
The Douglas his rashness 'gan to rue.

For though he had on a sark of mail,
And a cuirass on his breast wore he,
With a good steel bonnet on his head,
Yet the blood ran trickling to his knee.

The Douglas sat upright and firm,
Aye as together their horses ran ;
But the Tinkler laid on like a very deil, —
Siccan strokes were never laid on by man.

"Hold up thy hand, thou Tinkler loun,"
Cried the poor priest, with whining din ;
"If thou hurt the brave Lord James Douglas,
A curse be on thee and all thy kin !"

"I care no more for Lord James Douglas
Than Lord James Douglas cares for me ;
But I want to let his proud heart know
That a tinkler 's a man as well as he."

So they fought on, and they fought on,
Till good Lord Douglas' breath was gone ;
And the Tinkler bore him to the ground,
With rush, with rattle, and with groan.

"O hon ! O hon !" cried the proud Douglas,
"That I this day should have lived to see !
For sure my honor I have lost,
And a leader again I can never be !

"But tell me of thy kith and kin,
And where was bred thy weapon hand ?
For thou art the wale of tinkler louns
That ever was born in fair Scotland."

"My name 's Jock Johnstone," quo' the wight ;
"I winna keep in my name frae thee ;
And here, tak thou thy sword again,
And better friends we two shall be."

But the Douglas swore a solemn oath,
That was a debt he could never owe ;
He would rather die at the back of the dike
Than owe his sword to a man so low.

"But if thou wilt ride under my banner,
And bear my livery and my name,
My right-hand warrior thou shalt be
And I 'll knight thee on the field of fame."

"Woe worth thy wit, good Lord Douglas,
To think I 'd change my trade for thine ;
Far better and wiser would you be,
To live a journeyman of mine,

"To mend a kettle or a casque,
Or clout a goodwife's yettlin' pan, —
Upon my life, good Lord Douglas,
You 'd make a noble tinkler-man !

"I would give you a dramma twice a day,
And sunkets on a Sunday morn,
And you should be a rare adept
In steel and copper, brass and horn !

"I 'll fight you every day you rise,
Till you can act the hero's part ;
Therefore, I pray you, think of this,
And lay it seriously to heart."

The Douglas writhed beneath the lash,
Answering with an inward curse, —
Like salmon wriggling on a spear,
That makes his deadly wound the worse.

But up there came two squires renowned ;
In search of Lord Douglas they came ;
And when they saw their master down,
Their spirits mounted in a flame.

And they flew upon the Tinkler wight,
Like perfect tigers on their prey ;
But the Tinkler heaved his trusty sword,
And made him ready for the fray.

"Come one to one, ye coward knaves, —
Come hand to hand, and steed to steed ;
I would that ye were better men,
For this is glorious work indeed !"

Before you could have counted twelve,
The Tinkler's wondrous chivalrye
Had both the squires upon the sward,
And their horses galloping o'er the lea.

The Tinkler tied them neck and heel,
And mony a biting jest gave he ;
"O fie, for shame !" said the Tinkler lad ;
"Siccan fighters I did never see !"

He slit one of their bridle reins, —
O, what disgrace the conquered feels ! —
And he skelpit the squires with that good tawse,
Till the blood ran off at baith their heels.

The Douglas he was forced to laugh
Till down his cheek the salt tear ran :
"I think the deevil be come here
In the likeness of a tinkler man !"

Then he has to Lord Douglas gone,
And he raised him kindly by the hand,
And he set him on his gallant steed,
And bore him away to Henderland :

"Be not cast down, my Lord Douglas,
Nor writhe beneath a broken bane ;
For the leech's art will mend the part,
And your honor lost will spring again.

"Tis true, Jock Johnstone is my name ;
I 'm a right good tinkler, as you see ;
For I can crack a casque betimes,
Or clout one, as my need may be.

"Jock Johnstone is my name, 't is true, -
But noble hearts are allied to me ;
For I am the lord of Annandale,
And a knight and earl as well as thee."

Then Douglas strained the hero's hand,
And took from it his sword again :
"Since thou art the lord of Annandale,
Thou hast eased my heart of meikle pain.

"I might have known thy noble form
In that disgnise thou 'rt pleased to wear ;
All Scotland knows thy matchless arm,
And England by experience dear.

"We have been foes as well as friends,
And jealous of each other's sway ;
But little can I comprehend
Thy motive for these pranks to-day."

"Sooth, my good lord, the truth to tell,
'T was I that stole your love away,
And gave her to the lord of Ross
An hour before the break of day ;

"For the lord of Ross is my brother,
By all the laws of chivalrye ;
And I brought with me a thousand men
To guard him to my ain countrye.

"But I thought meet to stay behind,
And try your lordship to waylay,
Resolved to breed some noble sport,
By leading yon so far astray.

"Judging it better some lives to spare, —
Which fancy takes me now and then, —
And settle our quarrel hand to hand,
Than each with our ten thousand men.

"God send you soon, my Lord Douglas,
To Border foray sound and hail !
But never strike a tinkler again,
If he be a Johnstone of Annandale."

JAMES HOGG.

MORT D'ARTHUR.

So all day long the noise of battle rolled
Among the mountains by the winter sea ;
Until King Arthur's Table, man by man,
Had fallen in Lyoness about their lord,
King Arthur : then, because his wound was deep,
The bold Sir Bedivere uplifted him,
Sir Bedivere, the last of all his Knights,
And bore him to a chapel nigh the field,
A broken chancel with a broken cross,
That stood on a dark strait of barren land.
On one side lay the Ocean, and on one
Lay a great water, and the moon was full.

Then spake King Arthur to Sir Bedivere :
"The sequel of to-day unsolders all

The goodliest fellowship of famous knights
Whereof this world holds record. Such a sleep
They sleep — the men I loved. I think that we Shall nevermore, at any future time,
Delight our souls with talk of knightly deeds,
Walking about the gardens and the halls
Of Camelot, as in the days that were.
I perish by this people which I made, —
Though Merlin sware that I should come again
To rule once more ; but let what will be, be.
I am so deeply smitten through the helm
That without help I cannot last till morn.
Thou therefore take my brand Excalibur,
Which was my pride : for thou rememberest
how

In those old days, one summer noon, an arm
Rose up from out the bosom of the lake,
Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,
Holding the sword — and how I rowed across
And took it, and have worn it, like a king ;
And, wheresoever I am sung or told
In after-time, this also shall be known :
But now delay not : take Excalibur,
And fling him far into the middle mere ;
Watch what thou seest, and lightly bring me
word.

To him replied the bold Sir Bedivere :
"It is not meet, Sir King, to leave thee thus,
Aidless, alone, and smitten through the helm.
A little thing may harm a wounded man ;
Yet I thy hest will all perform at full,
Watch what I see, and lightly bring thee word."

So saying, from the ruined shrine he stept
And in the moon athwart the place of tombs,
Where lay the mighty bones of ancient men,
Old knights, and over them the sea-wind sang Shrill, chill, with flakes of foam. He, stepping down

By zigzag paths, and juts of pointed rock,
Came on the shining levels of the lake.

There drew he forth the brand Excalibur,
And o'er him, drawing it, the winter moon,
Brightening the skirts of a long cloud, ran forth
And sparkled keen with frost against the hilt :
For all the haft twinkled with diamond studs,
Myriads of topaz-lights, and jacinth-work
Of subtlest jewelry. He gazed so long
That both his eyes were dazzled as he stood,
This way and that dividing the swift mind,
In act to throw : but at the last it seemed Better to leave Excalibur concealed
There in the many-knotted water-flags,
That whistled stiff and dry about the marge.
So strode he back slow to the wounded King.

Then spake King Arthur to Sir Bedivere :
 "Hast thou performed my mission which I gave ?
 What is it thou hast seen ? or what hast heard ?"

And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere :
 "I heard the ripple washing in the reeds,
 And the wild water lapping on the crag."

To whom replied King Arthur, faint and pale :
 "Thou hast betrayed thy nature and thy name,
 Not rendering true answer, as besemed
 Thy fealty, nor like a noble knight :
 For surer sign had followed, either hand,
 Or voice, or else a motion of the mere.
 This is a shameful thing for men to lie.
 Yet now, I charge thee, quickly go again,
 As thou art lief and dear, and do the thing
 I bade thee, watch, and lightly bring me word."

Then went Sir Bedivere the second time
 Across the ridge, and paced beside the mere,
 Counting the dewy pebbles, fixed in thought ;
 But when he saw the wonder of the hilt,
 How curiously and strangely chased, he smote
 His palms together, and he cried aloud : —

"And if indeed I cast the brand away,
 Surely a precious thing, one worthy note,
 Should thus be lost forever from the earth,
 Which might have pleased the eyes of many men.
 What good should follow this, if this were done ?
 What harm, undone ? deep harm to disobey,
 Seeing obedience is the bond of rule.
 Were it well to obey then, if a king demand
 An act unprofitable, against himself ?
 The King is sick, and knows not what he does.
 What record, or what relic of my lord
 Should be to after-time, but empty breath
 And rumors of a doubt ? but were this kept,
 Stored in some treasure-house of mighty kings,
 Some one might show it at a joust of arms,
 Saying, 'King Arthur's sword, Excalibur,
 Wrought by the lonely maiden of the Lake.
 Nine years she wrought it, sitting in the deeps
 Upon the hidden bases of the hills.'
 So might some old man speak in the after-time
 To all the people, winning reverence.
 But now much honor and much fame were lost."

So spake he, clouded with his own conceit,
 And hid Excalibur the second time,
 And so strode back slow to the wounded King.

Then spake King Arthur, breathing heavily :
 "What is it thou hast seen ? or what hast heard ?"

And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere :
 "I heard the water lapping on the crag,
 And the long ripple washing in the reeds."

To whom replied King Arthur, much in wrath :
 "Ah, miserable and unkind, untrue,
 Unknightly, traitor-hearted ! Woe is me !
 Authority forgets a dying king,
 Laid widowed of the power in his eye
 That bowed the will. I see thee what thou art,
 For thou, the latest-left of all my knights
 In whom should meet the offices of all,
 Thou wouldst betray me for the precious hilt ;
 Either from lust of gold, or like a girl
 Valuing the giddy pleasure of the eyes.
 Yet, for a man may fail in duty twice,
 And the third time may prosper, get thee hence :
 But, if thou spare to fling Excalibur,
 I will arise and slay thee with my hands."

Then quickly rose Sir Bedivere, and ran,
 And, leaping down the ridges lightly, plunged
 Among the bulrush-beds, and clutched the sword,
 And strongly wheeled and threw it. The great brand
 Made lightnings in the splendor of the moon,
 And flashing round and round, and whirled in an arch,
 Shot like a streamer of the northern morn,
 Seen where the moving isles of winter shock
 By night, with noises of the northern sea.
 So flashed and fell the brand Excalibur :
 But ere he dipt the surface, rose an arm
 Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,
 And caught him by the hilt, and brandished him
 Three times, and drew him under in the mere.
 And lightly went the other to the King.

Then spoke King Arthur, drawing thicker breath :
 "Now see I by thine eyes that this is done.
 Speak out : what is it thou hast heard, or seen ?"

And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere :
 "Sir King, I closed mine eyelids, lest the gems
 Should blind my purpose, for I never saw,
 Nor shall see, here or elsewhere, till I die,
 Not though I live three lives of mortal men,
 So great a miracle as yonder hilt.
 Then with both hands I flung him, wheeling
 him ;
 But when I looked again, behold an arm,
 Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,
 That caught him by the hilt, and brandished him
 Three times, and drew him under in the mere."

And answer made King Arthur, breathing hard :
 "My end draws nigh ; 't is time that I were gone.
 Make broad thy shoulders to receive my weight,
 And bear me to the margin ; yet I fear
 My wound hath taken cold, and I shall die."

So saying, from the pavement he half rose,
 Slowly, with pain, reclining on his arm,
 And looking wistfully with wide blue eyes
 As in a picture. Him Sir Bedivere
 Remorsefully regarded through his tears,
 And would have spoken, but he found not words ;
 Then took with care, and kneeling on one knee,
 O'er both his shoulders drew the languid hands,
 And rising bore him through the place of tombs.

But, as he walked, King Arthur panted hard,
 Like one that feels a nightmare on his bed
 When all the house is mute. So sighed the King,
 Muttering and murmuring at his ear "Quick,
 quick !

I fear it is too late, and I shall die."

But the other swiftly strode from ridge to ridge, Clothed with his breath, and looking, as he walked,

Larger than human on the frozen hills.
 He heard the deep behind him, and a cry
 Before. His own thought drove him like a goad.
 Dry clashed his harness in the icy caves
 And barren chasms, and all to left and right
 The bare black cliff clanged round him, as he based

His feet on juts of slippery crag that rang
 Sharp-smitten with the dint of armèd heels —
 And on a sudden, lo ! the level lake,
 And the long glories of the winter moon.

Then saw they how there hove a dusky barge,
 Dark as a funeral scarf from stem to stern,
 Beneath them ; and descending they were ware
 That all the decks were dense with stately forms, Black-stoled, black-hooded, like a dream, — by these

Three Queens with crowns of gold, — and from them rose

A cry that shivered to the tingling stars,
 And, as it were one voice, an agony
 Of lamentation, like a wind that shrills
 All night in a waste land, where no one comes,
 Or hath come, since the making of the world.

Then murmured Arthur, "Place me in the barge ;"

So to the barge they came. There those three Queens

Put forth their hands, and took the King, and wept.

But she that rose the tallest of them all,
 And fairest, laid his head upon her lap,
 And loosed the shattered casque, and chafed his hands,
 And called him by his name, complaining loud,

And dropping bitter tears against his brow
 Striped with dark blood : for all his face was white

And colorless, and like the withered moon
 Smote by the fresh beam of the springing east ;
 And all his greaves and cuisses dashed with drops
 Of onset ; and the light and lustrous curls —
 That made his forehead like a rising sun
 High from the daïs-throne — were parched with dust ;

Or, clotted into points and hanging loose,
 Mixed with the knightly growth that fringed his lips.

So like a shattered column lay the King ;
 Not like that Arthur, who, with lance in rest,
 From spur to plume a star of tournament,
 Shot through the lists at Camelot, and charged
 Before the eyes of ladies and of kings.

Then loudly cried the bold Sir Bedivere :
 " Ah ! my Lord Arthur, whither shall I go ?
 Where shall I hide my forehead and my eyes ?
 For now I see the true old times are dead,
 When every morning brought a noble chance,
 And every chance brought out a noble knight.
 Such times have been not since the light that led
 The holy Elders with the gift of myrrh.
 But now the whole Round Table is dissolved
 Which was an image of the mighty world ;
 And I, the last, go forth companionless,
 And the days darken round me, and the years,
 Among new men, strange faces, other minds."

And slowly answered Arthur from the barge :
 " The old order changeth, yielding place to new,
 And God fulfils himself in many ways,
 Lest one good custom should corrupt the world.
 Comfort thyself : what comfort is in me ?
 I have lived my life, and that which I have done
 May He within himself make pure ! but thou,
 If thou shouldst never see my face again,
 Pray for my soul. More things are wrought by prayer
 Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice

Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
 For what are men better than sheep or goats
 That nourish a blind life within the brain,
 If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
 Both for themselves and those who call them friend ?

For so the whole round earth is every way
 Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.
 But now farewell. I am going a long way
 With these thou seest, — if indeed I go
 (For all my mind is clouded with a doubt) —
 To the island-valley of Avilion ;

Where falls not hail, or rain, or any snow,
Nor ever wind blows loudly ; but it lies
Deep-meadowed, happy, fair with orchard-lawns
And bowery hollows crowned with summer sea,
Where I will heal me of my grievous wound."

So said he, and the barge with oar and sail
Moved from the brink, like some full-breasted swan,

That, fluting a wild carol ere her death,
Ruffles her pure cold plume, and takes the flood
With swarthy webs. Long stood Sir Bedivere
Revolving many memories, till the hull
Looked one black dot against the verge of dawn,
And on the mere the wailing died away.

ALFRED TENNYSON.

ALFRED THE HARPER.

DARK fell the night, the watch was set,
The host was idly spread,
The Danes around their watchfires met,
Caroused, and fiercely fed.

The chiefs beneath a tent of leaves,
And Guthrum, king of all,
Devoured the flesh of England's beeves,
And laughed at England's fall.
Each warrior proud, each Danish earl,
In mail and wolf-skin clad,
Their bracelets white with plundered pearl,
Their eyes with triumph mad.

From Humber-land to Severn-land,
And on to Tamar stream,
Where Thames makes green the towery strand,
Where Medway's waters gleam, —
With hands of steel and mouths of flame
They raged the kingdom through ;
And where the Norseman sickle came,
No crop but hunger grew.

They loaded many an English horse
With wealth of cities fair ;
They dragged from many a father's corse
The daughter by her hair.
And English slaves; and gems and gold,
Were gathered round the feast ;
Till midnight in their woodland hold,
O, never that riot ceased.

In stalked a warrior tall and rude
Before the strong sea-kings ;
"Ye Lords and Earls of Odin's brood,
Without a harper sings.

He seems a simple man and poor,
But well he sounds the lay ;
And well, ye Norseman chiefs, be sure,
Will ye the song repay."

In trod the bard with keen cold look,
And glanced along the board,
That with the shout and war-cry shook
Of many a Danish lord.

But thirty brows, inflamed and stern,
Soon bent on him their gaze,
While calm he gazed, as if to learn
Who chief deserved his praise.

Loud Guthrum spake, — "Nay, gaze not thus,
Thou Harper weak and poor !
By Thor ! who bandy looks with us
Must worse than looks endure.
Sing high the praise of Denmark's host,
High praise each dauntless Earl ;
The brave who stun this English coast
With war's unceasing whirl."

The Harper slowly bent his head,
And touched aloud the string ;
Then raised his face, and boldly said,
"Hear thou my lay, O King !
High praise from every mouth of man
To all who boldly strive,
Who fall where first the fight began,
And ne'er go back alive.

"Fill high your cups, and swell the shout,
At famous Regnar's name !
Who sank his host in bloody rout,
When he to Humber came.
His men were chased, his sons were slain,
And he was left alone.
They bound him in an iron chain
Upon a dungeon stone.

"With iron links they bound him fast ;
With snakes they filled the hole,
That made his flesh their long repast,
And bit into his soul.

"Great chiefs, why sink in gloom your eyes ?
Why champ your teeth in pain ?
Still lives the song though Regnar dies !
Fill high your cups again !
Ye too, perchance, O Norseman lords !
Who fought and swayed so long,
Shall soon but live in minstrel words,
And owe your names to song.

"This land has graves by thousands more
Than that where Regnar lies.
When conquests fade, and rule is o'er,
The sod must close your eyes.

How soon, who knows? Not chief, nor bard;
And yet to me 't is given,
To see your foreheads deeply scarred,
And guess the doom of Heaven.

"I may not read or when or how,
But, Earls and Kings, be sure
I see a blade o'er every brow,
Where pride now sits secure.
Fill high the cups, raise loud the strain!
When chief and monarch fall,
Their names in song shall breathe again,
And thrill the feastful hall."

Grim sat the chiefs; one heaved a groan,
And one grew pale with dread,
His iron mace was grasped by one,
By one his wine was shed.
And Guthrum cried, "Nay, bard, no more
We hear thy boding lay;
Make drunk the song with spoil and gore!
Light up the joyous fray!"

"Quick throbs my brain,"—so burst the song,—
"To hear the strife once more.
The mace, the axe, they rest too long;
Earth cries, My thirst is sore.
More blithely twang the strings of bows
Than strings of harps in glee;
Red wounds are lovelier than the rose
Or rosy lips to me.

"O, fairer than a field of flowers,
When flowers in England grew,
Would be the battle's marshalled powers,
The plain of carnage new.
With all its deaths before my soul
The vision rises fair;
Raise loud the song, and drain the bowl!
I would that I were there!"

Loud rang the harp, the minstrel's eye
Rolled fiercely round the throng;
It seemed two crashing hosts were nigh,
Whose shock aroused the song.
A golden cup King Guthrum gave
To him who strongly played;
And said, "I won it from the slave
Who once o'er England swayed."

King Guthrum cried, "'T was Alfred's own;
Thy song befits the brave:
The King who cannot guard his throne
Nor wine nor song shall have."
The minstrel took the goblet bright,
And said, "I drink the wine
To him who owns by justest right
The cup thou bid'st be mine.

"To him, your Lord, O shout ye all!
His meed be deathless praise!
The King who dares not nobly fall,
Dies basely all his days."

"The praise thou speakest," Guthrum said,
"With sweetness fills mine ear;
For Alfred swift before me fled,
And left me monarch here.
The royal coward never dared
Beneath mine eye to stand.
O, would that now this feast he shared,
And saw me rule his land!"

Then stern the minstrel rose, and spake,
And gazed upon the King,—
"Not now the golden cup I take,
Nor more to thee I sing.
Another day, a happier hour,
Shall bring me here again:
The cup shall stay in Guthrum's power,
Till I demand it then."

The Harper turned and left the shed,
Nor bent to Guthrum's crown;
And one who marked his visage said
It wore a ghastly frown.
The Danes ne'er saw that Harper more,
For soon as morning rose,
Upon their camp King Alfred bore,
And slew ten thousand foes.

JOHN STERLING.

THE EARL O' QUARTERDECK.

A NEW OLD EALLAD.

THE wind it blew, and the ship it flew;
And it was "Hey for hame!
And ho for hame!" But the skipper cried,
"Haud her oot o'er the saut sea faem."

Then up and spoke the King himsel':
"Haud on for Dumferline!"
Quo the skipper, "Ye're king upo' the land—
I'm king upo' the brine."

And he took the helm intil his hand,
And he steered the ship sae free;
Wi' the wind astarn, he crowded sail,
And stood right out to sea.

Quo the king, "There's treason in this, I vow;
This is something underhand!
'Bout ship!" Quo the skipper, "Yer grace forgets
Ye are king but o' the land!"

And still he held to the open sea ;
 And the east-wind sank behind ;
 And the west had a bitter word to say,
 Wi' a white-sea roarin' wind.

And he turned her head into the north.
 Said the king : " Gar fling him o'er."
 Quo the fearless skipper : " It's a' ye're worth !
 Ye'll ne'er see Scotland more."

The king crept down the cabin-stair,
 To drink the gude French wine.
 And up she came, his daughter fair,
 And luikit ower the brine.

She turned her face to the drivin' hail,
 To the hail but and the weat ;
 Her snood it brak, and, as lang's hersel',
 Her hair drave out i' the sleet.

She turned her face frae the drivin' win' —
 " What's that ahead ?" quo she.
 The skipper he threw himsel' frae the win',
 And he drove the helm a-lee.

" Put to yer hand, my lady fair !
 Put to yer hand," quo he ;
 " Gin she dinna face the win' the mair,
 It's the waur for yon and me."

For the skipper kenned that strength is strength,
 Whether woman's or man's at last.
 To the tiller the lady she laid her han',
 And the ship laid her cheek to the blast.

For that slender body was full o' soul,
 And the will is mair than shape ;
 As the skipper saw when they cleared the berg,
 And he heard her quarter scrape.

Quo the skipper : " Ye are a lady fair,
 And a princess grand to see ;
 But ye are a woman, and a man wad sail
 To hell in yer company."

She liftit a pale and queenly face ;
 Her een flashed, and syne they swim.
 " And what for no to heaven ?" she says,
 And she turned awa' frae him.

But she took na her han' frae the good ship's helm,
 Until the day did daw ;
 And the skipper he spak, but what he said
 It was said atween them twa.

And then the good ship she lay to,
 With the land far on the lee ;
 And up came the king upo' the deck,
 Wi' wan face and bluidshot ee.

The skipper he louted to the king :
 " Gae wa', gae wa'," said the king.
 Said the king, like a prince, " I was a' wrang,
 Put on this ruby ring."

And the wind blew lowne, and the stars cam' oot,
 And the ship turned to the shore ;
 And, afore the sun was up again,
 They saw Scotland ance more.

That day the ship hung at the pier-heid,
 And the king he stept on the land.
 " Skipper, kneel down," the king he said,
 " Hoo daur ye afore me stand ?"

The skipper he louted on his knee,
 The king his blade he drew :
 Said the king, " How daured ye contre me ?
 I'm aboard my ain ship noo.

" I canna mak ye a king," said he,
 " For the Lord alone can do that ;
 And besides ye took it intil yer ain han'
 And crooned yersel' sae pat !

" But wi' what ye will I redeem my ring ;
 For ance I am at your beck.
 And first, as ye loutit Skipper o' Doon,
 Rise up Yerl o' Quarterdeck."

The skipper he rose and looked at the king
 In his een for all his croon ;
 Said the skipper, " Here is yer grace's ring,
 And yer daughter is my boon."

The reid blude sprang into the king's face, —
 A wrathful man to see :
 " The rascal loon abuses our grace ;
 Gae hang him upon yon tree."

But the skipper he sprang aboard his ship,
 And he drew his biting blade ;
 And he struck the chain that held her fast,
 But the iron was ower weel made.

And the king he blew a whistle loud ;
 And tramp, tramp, down the pier,
 Cam' twenty riders on twenty steeds,
 Clankin' wi' spur and spear.

" He saved your life !" cried the lady fair ;
 " His life ye daurna spill !"
 " Will ye come atween me and my hate ?"
 Quo the lady, " And that I will !"

And on cam' the knights wi' spur and spear,
 For they heard the iron ring.
 " Gin ye care na for yer father's grace,
 Mind ye that I am the king."

"I kneel to my father for his grace,
Right lowly on my knee;
But I stand and look the king in the face,
For the skipper is king o' me."

She turned and she sprang upo' the deck,
And the cable splashed in the sea.
The good ship spread her wings sae white,
And away with the skipper goes she.

Now was not this a king's daughter,
And a brave lady beside?
And a woman with whom a man might sail
Into the heaven wi' pride?

GEORGE MACDONALD.

MARMION AND DOUGLAS.

FROM "MARMION," CANTO VI.

NOT far advanced was morning day,
When Marmion did his troop array
To Surrey's camp to ride;
He had safe-conduct for his band,
Beneath the royal seal and hand,
And Douglas gave a guide:
The ancient Earl, with stately grace,
Would Clara on her palfrey place,
And whispered in an undertone,
"Let the hawk stoop, his prey is flown."
The train from out the castle drew,
But Marmion stopped to bid adieu:—
"Though something I might plain," he said,
"Of cold respect to stranger guest,
Sent hither by your king's behest,

While in Tantallon's towers I stayed,
Part we in friendship from your land,
And, noble Earl, receive my hand."—
But Douglas round him drew his cloak,
Folded his arms, and thus he spoke:—
"My manors, halls, and bowers shall still
Be open, at my sovereign's will,
To each one whom he lists, howe'er
Unmeet to be the owner's peer.
My castles are my king's alone,
From turret to foundation-stone,—
The hand of Douglas is his own;
And never shall in friendly grasp
The hand of such as Marmion clasp."—

Burned Marmion's swarthy cheek like fire,
And shook his very frame for ire,

And—"This to me!" he said,—
"An't were not for thy hoary beard,
Such hand as Marmion's had not spared

To cleave the Douglas' head!
And, first, I tell thee, haughty Peer,
He who does England's message here,
Although the meanest in her state,

May well, proud Angus, be thy mate:
And, Douglas, more I tell thee here,
Even in thy pitch of pride,
Here in thy hold, thy vassals near,
(Nay, never look upon your lord,
And lay your hands upon your sword,)

I tell thee, thou'rt defied!
And if thou said'st I am not peer
To any lord in Scotland here,
Lowland or Highland, far or near,
Lord Angus, thou hast lied!"—
On the Earl's cheek the flush of rage
O'ercame the ashen hue of age:
Fierce he broke forth,— "And dar'st thou then
To beard the lion in his den,
The Douglas in his hall?

And hop'st thou hence unscathed to go?
No, by St. Bride of Bothwell, no!
Up drawbridge, grooms,— what, Warder, ho!
Let the portecullis fall."—
Lord Marmion turned,— well was his need!—
And dashed the rowels in his steed;
Like arrow through the archway sprung;
The ponderous grate behind him rung:
To pass there was such scanty room,
The bars, descending, razed his plume.

The steed along the drawbridge flies,
Just as it trembled on the rise;
Not lighter does the swallow skim
Along the smooth lake's level brim;
And when Lord Marmion reached his band,
He halts, and turns with clenched hand,
And shont of loud defiance pours,
And shook his gauntlet at the towers.
"Horse! horse!" the Douglas cried, "and chase!"

But soon he reined his fury's pace:
"A royal messenger he came,
Though most unworthy of the name.

St. Mary, mend my fiery mood!
Old age ne'er cools the Douglas blood,
I thought to slay him where he stood.
'T is pity of him too," he cried;
"Bold can he speak, and fairly ride:
I warrant him a warrior tried."
With this his mandate he recalls,
And slowly seeks his castle halls.

JAMES FITZ-JAMES AND ELLEN.

FROM "THE LADY OF THE LAKE," CANTO VI.

A FOOTSTEP struck her ear,
And Snowdoun's graceful Knight was near.
She turned the hastier, lest again
The prisoner should renew his strain.

“O welcome, brave Fitz-James !” she said ;
 “How may an almost orphan maid
 Pay the deep debt” — “O, say not so !
 To me no gratitude you owe.
 Not mine, alas ! the boon to give,
 And bid thy noble father live ;
 I can but be thy guide, sweet maid,
 With Scotland’s King thy suit to aid.
 No tyrant he, though ire and pride
 May lead his better mood aside.
 Come, Ellen, come ; ’t is more than time,
 He holds his court at morning prime.”
 With beating heart and bosom wrung,
 As to a brother’s arm she clung.
 Gently he dried the falling tear,
 And gently whispered hope and cheer ;
 Her faltering steps half led, half stayed,
 Through gallery fair and high arcade,
 Till, at his touch, its wings of pride
 A portal arch unfolded wide.

Within ’t was brilliant all and light,
 A thronging scene of figures bright ;
 It glowed on Ellen’s dazzled sight,
 As when the setting sun has given
 Ten thousand hues to summer even,
 And from their tissue fancy frames
 Aerial knights and fairy dames.
 Still by Fitz-James her footing stayed ;
 A few faint steps she forward made,
 Then slow her drooping head she raised,
 And fearful round the presence gazed :
 For him she sought who owned this state,
 The dreaded prince whose will was fate !
 She gazed on many a princely port
 Might well have ruled a royal court ;
 On many a splendid garb she gazed, —
 Then turned bewildered and amazed,
 For all stood bare ; and in the room
 Fitz-James alone wore cap and plume.
 To him each lady’s look was lent,
 On him each courtier’s eye was bent,
 Midst furs and silks and jewels sheen
 He stood, in simple Lincoln green,
 The centre of the glittering ring, —
 And Snowdoun’s Knight is Scotland’s King !

As wreath of snow, on mountain breast,
 Slides from the rock that gave it rest,
 Poor Ellen glided from her stay,
 And at the Monarch’s feet she lay ;
 No word her choking voice commands :
 She showed the ring, she clasped her hands.
 O, not a moment could he brook,
 The generous prince, that suppliant look !
 Gently he raised her, and the while
 Checked with a glance the circle’s smile ;
 Graceful, but grave, her brow he kissed,

And bade her terrors be dismissed : —
 “Yes, fair ; the wandering poor Fitz-James
 The fealty of Scotland claims.
 To him thy woes, thy wishes bring ;
 He will redeem his signet-ring.
 Ask naught for Douglas ; yester even
 His prince and he have much forgiven :
 Wrong hath he had from slanderous tongue,
 I, from his rebel kinsmen, wrong.
 We would not to the vulgar crowd
 Yield what they craved with clamor loud ;
 Calmly we heard and judged his cause,
 Our council aided and our laws.
 I stanch’d thy father’s death-fend stern,
 With stout De Vaux and gray Glencairn ;
 And Bothwell’s Lord henceforth we own
 The friend and bulwark of our Throne.
 But, lovely infidel, how now ?
 What clouds thy misbelieving brow ?
 Lord James of Douglas, lend thine aid ;
 Thou must confirm this doubting maid.”

Then forth the noble Douglas sprung,
 And on his neck his daughter hung.
 The Monarch drank, that happy hour,
 The sweetest, holiest draught of Power, —
 When it can say, the godlike voice,
 Arise, sad Virtue, and rejoice !
 Yet would not James the general eye
 On nature’s raptures long should pry :
 He stepped between — “Nay, Douglas, nay,
 Steal not my proselyte away !
 The riddle ’t is my right to read,
 That brought this happy chance to speed.
 Yes, Ellen, when disguised I stray
 In life’s more low but happier way,
 ’T is under name which veils my power,
 Nor falsely veils, — for Stirling’s tower
 Of yore the name of Snowdoun claims,
 And Normans call me James Fitz-James.
 Thus watch I o’er insulted laws,
 Thus learn to right the injured cause.”
 Then, in a tone apart and low,
 “Ah, little traitress ! none must know
 What idle dream, what lighter thought,
 What vanity full dearly bought,
 Joined to thine eye’s dark witchcraft, drew
 My spell-bound steps to Benvenue,
 In dangerous hour, and all but gave Thy Monarch’s life to mountain glaive !”
 Aloud he spoke, — “Thou still dost hold
 That little talisman of gold,
 Pledge of my faith, Fitz-James’s ring ;
 What seeks fair Ellen of the King ?”

Full well the conscious maiden guessed,
 He probed the weakness of her breast ;

But with that consciousness there came
 A lightening of her fears for Græme,
 And more she deemed the monarch's ire
 Kindled 'gainst him, who, for her sire,
 Rebellious broadsword boldly drew ;
 And, to her generous feeling true,
 She craved the grace of Roderick Dhu.
 "Forbear thy suit; the King of kings
 Alone can stay life's parting wings.
 I know his heart, I know his hand,
 Have shared his cheer, and proved his brand.
 My fairest earldom would I give
 To bid Clan-Alpine's Chieftain live !—
 Hast thou no other boon to crave ?
 No other captive friend to save ?"
 Blushing, she turned her from the King,
 And to the Douglas gave the ring,
 As if she wished her sire to speak
 The suit that stained her glowing cheek.
 "Nay, then, my pledge has lost its force,
 And stubborn justice holds her course.
 Malcolm, come forth !" — And, at the word,
 Down knelt the Græme to Scotland's Lord.
 "For thee, rash youth, no suppliant sues,
 From thee may Vengeance claim her dues,
 Who, nurtured underneath our smile,
 Hast paid our care by treacherous wile,
 And sought, amid thy faithful clan,
 A refuge for an outlawed man,
 Dishonoring thus thy loyal name,—
 Fetters and warder for the Græme !"
 His chain of gold the King unstrung,
 The links o'er Malcolm's neck he flung,
 Then gently drew the glittering band,
 And laid the clasp on Ellen's hand.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

NORVAL.

FROM THE TRAGEDY OF "DOUGLAS," ACT II. SC. I.

LADY RANDOLPH. How fares my lord ?

LORD RANDOLPH. That it fares well, thanks to this gallant youth,

Whose valor saved me from a wretched death.
 As down the winding dale I walked alone,
 At the cross way four armed men attacked me,
 Rovers, I judge, from the licentious camp,
 Who would have quickly laid Lord Randolph low,
 Had not this brave and generous stranger come,
 Like my good angel, in the hour of fate,
 And, mocking danger, made my foes his own.
 They turned upon him : but his active arm Struck to the ground, from whence they rose no
 more,

The fiercest two ; the others fled amain,
 And left him master of the bloody field.
 Speak, Lady Randolph ; upon beauty's tongue

Dwell accents pleasing to the brave and bold,
 Speak, noble dame, and thank him for thy lord.

LADY RAN. My lord, I cannot speak what now I feel.

My heart o'erflows with gratitude to Heaven,
 And to this noble youth, who, all unknown
 To you and yours, deliberated not,
 Nor paused at peril, but, humanely brave,
 Fought on your side against such fearful odds.
 Have you yet learnt of him whom we should thank,

Whom call the savior of Lord Randolph's life ?

LORD RAN. I asked that question, and he answered not ;But I must know who my deliverer is. (To the Stranger.)NORVAL. A low-born man, of parentage obscure,Who naught can boast but his desire to be A soldier, and to gain a name in arms.LORD RAN. Whoe'er thou art, thy spirit is ennobled

By the great King of kings : thou art ordained
 And stamped a hero by the sovereign hand
 Of nature ! Blush not, flower of modesty
 As well as valor, to declare thy birth.

NORV. My name is Norval : on the Grampian hills

My father feeds his flocks, — a frugal swain,
 Whose constant cares were to increase his store,
 And keep his only son, myself, at home.
 For I had heard of battles, and I longed
 To follow to the field some warlike lord :
 And Heaven soon granted what my sire denied.
 This moon which rose last night, round as my shield,

Had not yet filled her horns, when, by her light,
 A band of fierce barbarians from the hills
 Rushed like a torrent down upon the vale, Sweeping our flocks and herds. The shepherds fled

For safety and for succor. I alone,
 With bended bow, and quiver full of arrows,
 Hovered about the enemy, and marked
 The road he took ; then hastened to my friends,
 Whom, with a troop of fifty chosen men,
 I met advancing. The pursuit I led,
 Till we o'ertook the spoil-encumbered foe.
 We fought and conquered. Ere a sword was drawn

An arrow from my bow had pierced their chief,
 Who wore that day the arms which now I wear.
 Returning home in triumph, I disdained
 The shepherd's slothful life ; and having heard
 That our good king had summoned his bold peers
 To lead their warriors to the Carron side,
 I left my father's house, and took with me

A chosen servant to conduct my steps, —
Yon trembling coward, who forsook his master.
Journeying with this intent, I passed these towers,

And, Heaven-directed, came this day to do
The happy deed that gilds my humble name.

LORD RAN. He is as wise as brave : was ever tale

With such a gallant modesty rehearsed ?
My brave deliverer ! thou shalt enter now
A nobler list ; and, in a monarch's sight,
Contend with princes for the prize of fame.

I will present thee to our Scottish king,
Whose valiant spirit ever valor loved.
Ha ! my Matilda ! wherefore starts that tear ?

LADY RAN. I cannot say ; for various affections,

And strangely mingled, in my bosom swell :
Yet each of them may well command a tear.
I joy that thou art safe ; and I admire
Him and his fortunes, who hath wrought thy safety ;

Yea, as my mind predicts, with thine his own.
Obscure and friendless, he the army sought ;
Bent upon peril, in the range of death
Resolved to hunt for fame, and with his sword
To gain distinction which his birth denied.
In this attempt unknown he might have perished,
And gained with all his valor but oblivion.
Now graced by thee, his virtue serves no more
Beneath despair. The soldier now of hope,
He stands conspicuous : fame and great renown
Are brought within the compass of his sword.
On this my mind reflected, whilst you spoke,
And blessed the wonder-working hand of Heaven.

LORD RAN. Pious and grateful ever are thy thoughts !

My deeds shall follow where thou point'st the way.
Next to myself, and equal to Glenalvon,
In honor and command shall Norval be.

NORV. I know not how to thank you : rude
I am

In speech and manners ; never till this hour
Stood I in such a presence ; yet, my lord, There's something in my breast which makes me bold

To say that Norval ne'er will shame thy favor.

JOHN HOME.

JORASSE.

FROM "ITALY."

JORASSE was in his three-and-twentieth year ;
Graceful and active as a stag just roused ;
Gentle withal, and pleasant in his speech,
Yet seldom seen to smile. He had grown up
Among the hunters of the Higher Alps ;

Had caught their starts and fits of thoughtfulness,

Their haggard looks, and strange soliloquies.
Arising (so say they that dwell below)
From frequent dealings with the Mountain-Spirits.

But other ways had taught him better things ;
And now he numbered, marching by my side,
The great, the learned, that with him had crossed
The frozen tract, — with him familiarly
Through the rough day and rougher night conversed

In many a chalet round the Peak of Terror,
Round Tacul, Tour, Well-horn, and Rosenlau,
And her whose throne is inaccessible,

Who sits, withdrawn in virgin majesty,
Nor oft unveils. Anon an avalanche
Rolled its long thunder ; and a sudden crash,
Sharp and metallic, to the startled ear
Told that far down a continent of ice

Had burst in twain. But he had now begun ;
And with what transport he recalled the hour

When, to deserve, to win his blooming bride,
Madelaine of Annecy, to his feet he bound
The iron crampons, and, ascending, trod
The upper realms of frost ; then, by a cord
Let half-way down, entered a grot star-bright,

And gathered from above, below, around,
The pointed crystals ! — Once, nor long before

(Thus did his tongue run on, fast as his feet,
And with an eloquence that Nature gives

To all her children, — breaking off by starts
Into the harsh and rude, oft as the mule

Drew his displeasure), — once, nor long before,
Alone at daybreak on the Mettenberg,

He slipped, he fell ; and, through a fearful cleft
Gliding from ledge to ledge, from deep to deeper,

Went to the under-world ! Long while he lay Upon his rigged bed, — then waked like one
Wishing to sleep again and sleep forever !

For, looking round, he saw, or thought he saw,
Innumerable branches of a cave,

Winding beneath that solid crust of ice ;

With here and there a rent that showed the stars !
What then, alas ! was left him but to die ?

What else in those immeasurable chambers,
Strewed with the bones of miserable men,

Lost like himself ? Yet must he wander on,
Till cold and hunger set his spirit free !

And, rising, he began his dreary round ;

When hark ! the noise as of some mighty river
Working its way to light ! Back he withdrew,

But soon returned, and, fearless from despair,
Dashed down the dismal channel ; and all day,

If day could be where utter darkness was,
Travelled incessantly ; the craggy roof

Just overhead, and the impetuous waves,

Nor broad nor deep, yet with a giant's strength,
Lashing him on. At last, as in a pool,
The water slept; a pool sullen, profound,
Where if a billow chanced to heave and swell
It broke not; and the roof, that long
Had threatened, suddenly descending, lay
Flat on the surface. Statue-like he stood,
His journey ended, when a ray divine
Shot through his soul. Breathing a prayer to her
Whose ears are never shut, the Blessed Virgin,
He plunged, he swam, — and in an instant rose,
The barrier passed, in sunshine! Through a vale,
Such as in Arcady, where many a thatch
Glams through the trees, half seen and half embowered,
Glittering the river ran; and on the bank
The young were dancing ('t was a festival-day)
All in their best attire. There first he saw
His Madelaine. In the crowd she stood to hear,
When all drew round, inquiring; and her face,
Seen behind all, and varying, as he spoke,
With hope and fear and generous sympathy,
Subdued him. From that very hour he loved.

SAMUEL ROGERS.

THE GLOVE AND THE LIONS.

KING FRANCIS was a hearty king, and loved a royal sport,
And one day, as his lions fought, sat looking on the court.
The nobles filled the benches, with the ladies in their pride,
And 'mongst them sat the Count de Lorge, with one for whom he sighed:
And truly 't was a gallant thing to see that crowning show,
Valor and love, and a king above, and the royal beasts below.
Ramped and roared the lions, with horrid laughing jaws;
They bit, they glared, gave blows like beams, a wind went with their paws;
With wallowing might and stifled roar they rolled on one another,
Till all the pit with sand and mane was in a thunderous smother;
The bloody foam above the bars came whisking
through the air;
Said Francis then, "Faith, gentlemen, we're better here than there."
De Lorge's love o'erheard the King, a beauteous lively dame,
With smiling lips and sharp bright eyes, which always seemed the same;

She thought, the Count, my lover, is brave as brave can be;
He surely would do wondrous things to show his love of me;
King, ladies, lovers, all look on; the occasion is divine;
I'll drop my glove, to prove his love; great glory
will be mine.

She dropped her glove, to prove his love, then looked at him and smiled;
He bowed, and in a moment leaped among the lions wild;
The leap was quick, return was quick, he has regained his place,
Then threw the glove, but not with love, right in the lady's face.
"By Heaven," said Francis, "rightly done!"
and he rose from where he sat;
"No love," quoth he, "but vanity, sets love a task like that."

LEIGH HUNT.

PRINCE ADEB.

IN Sana, O, in Sana, God, the Lord,
Was very kind and merciful to me!
Forth from the Desert in my rags I came,
Weary and sore of foot. I saw the spires
And swelling bubbles of the golden domes
Rise through the trees of Sana, and my heart
Grew great within me with the strength of God;
And I cried out, "Now shall I right myself, —
I, Adeb the despised, — for God is just!"
There he who wronged my father dwelt in peace, —
My warlike father, who, when gray hairs crept
Around his forehead, as on Lebanon
The whitening snows of winter, was betrayed
To the sly Imam, and his tented wealth
Swept from him, 'twixt the roosting of the cock
And his first crowing, — in a single night:
And I, poor Adeb, sole of all my race,
Sincared with my father's and my kinsmen's blood,
Fled through the Desert, till one day a tribe
Of hungry Belouins found me in the sand,
Half mad with famine, and they took me up,
And made a slave of me, — of me, a prince!
All was fulfilled at last. I fled from them,
In rags and sorrow. Nothing but my heart,
Like a strong swimmer, bore me up against
The howling sea of my adversity.
At length o'er Sana, in the act to swoop,
I stood like a young eagle on a crag.
The traveller passed me with suspicious fear:
I asked for nothing; I was not a thief.
The lean dogs snuffed around me: my lank bones,
Fed on the berries and the crusted pools,

Were a scant morsel. Once a brown-skinned girl
 Called me a little from the common path,
 And gave me figs and barley in a bag.
 I paid her with a kiss, with nothing more,
 And she looked glad ; for I was beautiful,
 And virgin as a fountain, and as cold.
 I stretched her bounty, pecking like a bird
 Her figs and barley, till my strength returned.
 So when rich Sana lay beneath my eyes,
 My foot was as the leopard's, and my hand
 As heavy as the lion's brandished paw ;
 And underneath my burnished skin the veins
 And stretching muscles played, at every step,
 In wondrous motion. I was very strong.
 I looked upon my body, as a bird
 That bills his feathers ere he takes to flight, —
 I, watching over Sana. Then I prayed ;
 And on a soft stone, wetted in the brook,
 Ground my long knife ; and then I prayed again.
 God heard my voice, preparing all for me,
 As, softly stepping down the hills, I saw
 The Imam's summer-palace all ablaze
 In the last flash of sunset. Every fount
 Was spouting fire, and all the orange-trees
 Bore blazing coals, and from the marble walls
 And gilded spires and columns, strangely wrought,
 Glared the red light, until my eyes were pained
 With the fierce splendor. Till the night grew thick,
 I lay within the bushes, next the door,
 Still as a serpent, as invisible.
 The guard hung round the portal. Man by man
 They dropped away, save one lone sentinel,
 And on his eyes God's finger lightly fell ;
 He slept half standing. Like a summer wind
 That threads the grove, yet never turns a leaf,
 I stole from shadow unto shadow forth ;
 Crossed all the marble court-yard, swung the door,
 Like a soft gust, a little way ajar, —
 My body's narrow width, no more, — and stood
 Beneath the cresset in the painted hall.
 I marvelled at the riches of my foe ;
 I marvelled at God's ways with wicked men.
 Then I reached forth, and took God's waiting hand :
 And so he led me over mossy floors,
 Flowered with the silken summer of Shiraz,
 Straight to the Imam's chamber. At the door
 Stretched a brawn eunuch, blacker than my eyes :
 His woolly head lay like the Kaba-stone
 In Mecca's mosque, as silent and as huge.
 I stepped across it, with my pointed knife
 Just missing a full vein along his neck,
 And, pushing by the curtains, there I was, —
 I, Adeb the despised, — upon the spot
 That, next to heaven, I longed for most of all.
 I could have shouted for the joy in me.

Fierce pangs and flashes of bewildering light Leaped through my brain and danced before my eyes.
 So loud my heart beat, that I feared its sound
 Would wake the sleeper ; and the bubbling blood
 Choked in my throat till, weaker than a child,
 I reeled against a column, and there hung
 In a blind stupor. Then I prayed again :
 And, sense by sense, I was made whole once more.
 I touched myself ; I was the same ; I knew
 Myself to be lone Adeb, young and strong,
 With nothing but a stride of empty air
 Between me and God's justice. In a sleep,
 Thick with the fumes of the accursed grape,
 Sprawled the false Imam. On his shaggy breast,
 Like a white lily heaving on the tide
 Of some fount stream, the fairest woman slept
 These roving eyes have ever looked upon.
 Almost a child, her bosom barely showed
 The change beyond her girlhood. All her charms
 Were budding, but half opened ; for I saw
 Not only beauty wondrous in itself,
 But possibility of more to be
 In the full process of her blooming days.
 I gazed upon her, and my heart grew soft,
 As a parched pasture with the dew of heaven.
 While thus I gazed she smiled, and slowly raised
 The long curve of her lashes ; and we looked
 Each upon each in wonder, not alarm, —
 Not eye to eye, but soul to soul, we held
 Each other for a moment. All her life
 Seemed centred in the circle of her eyes.
 She stirred no limb ; her long-drawn, equal breath
 Swelled out and ebbed away beneath her breast,
 In calm unbroken. Not a sign of fear
 Touched the faint color on her oval cheek,
 Or pinched the arches of her tender mouth.
 She took me for a vision, and she lay
 With her sleep's smile unaltered, as in doubt
 Whether real life had stolen into her dreams,
 Or dreaming stretched into her outer life.
 I was not graceless to a woman's eyes.
 The girls of Damar paused to see me pass,
 I walking in my rags, yet beautiful.
 One maiden said, " He has a prince's air !"
 I am a prince ; the air was all my own.
 So thought the lily on the Imam's breast ;
 And lightly as a summer mist, that lifts
 Before the morning, so she floated up,
 Without a sound or rustle of a robe,
 From her coarse pillow, and before me stood
 With asking eyes. The Imam never moved.
 A stride and blow were all my need, and they
 Were wholly in my power. I took her hand,
 I held a warning finger to my lips,
 And whispered in her small, expectant ear,
 " Adeb, the son of Akem ! " She replied

In a low murmur whose bewildering sound
 Almost lulled wakeful me to sleep, and sealed
 The sleeper's lids in tenfold slumber, "Prince,
 Lord of the Imam's life and of my heart,
 Take all thou seest, — it is thy right, I know, —
 But spare the Imam for thy own soul's sake!"
 Then I arrayed me in a robe of state,
 Shining with gold and jewels; and I bound
 In my long turban gems that might have bought
 The lands 'twixt Babelmandeb and Sahān.
 I girt about me, with a blazing belt,
 A scimitar o'er which the sweating smiths
 In far Damascus hammered for long years,
 Whose hilt and scabbard shot a trembling light
 From diamonds and rubies. And she smiled,
 As piece by piece I put the treasures on,
 To see me look so fair, — in pride she smiled.
 I hung long purses at my side. I scooped,
 From off a table, figs and dates and rice,
 And bound them to my girdle in a sack.
 Then over all I flung a snowy cloak,
 And beckoned to the maiden. So she stole
 Forth like my shadow, past the sleeping wolf
 Who wronged my father, o'er the woolly head
 Of the swart eunuch, down the painted court,
 And by the sentinel who standing slept.
 Strongly against the portal, through my rags, —
 My old baserags, — and through the maiden's veil,
 I pressed my knife, — upon the wooden hilt
 Was "Adeb, son of Akem," carved by me
 In my long slavehood, — as a passing sign
 To wait the Imam's waking. Shadows cast
 From two high-sailing clouds upon the sand
 Passed not more noiseless than we two, as one,
 Glided beneath the moonlight, till I smelt
 The fragrance of the stables. As I slid
 The wide doors open, with a sudden bound
 Uprose the startled horses; but they stood
 Still as the man who in a foreign land
 Hears his strange language, when my Desert eall,
 As low and plaintive as the nested dove's,
 Fell on their listening ears. From stall to stall,
 Feeling the horses with my groping hands,
 I crept in darkness; and at length I came Upon two sister mares whose rounded sides,
 Fine muzzles, and small heads, and pointed ears,
 And foreheads spreading 'twixt their eyelids wide,
 Long slender tails, thin manes, and coats of silk,
 Told me, that, of the hundred steeds there stalled,
 My hand was on the treasures. O'er and o'er
 I felt their bony joints, and down their legs
 To the cool hoofs; — no blemish anywhere:
 These I led forth and saddled. Upon one
 I set the lily, gathered now for me, —
 My own, henceforth, forever. So we rode
 Across the grass, beside the stony path,
 Until we gained the highway that is lost,

Leading from Sana, in the eastern sands:
 When, with a cry that both the desert-born
 Knew without hint from whip or goading spur,
 We dashed into a gallop. Far behind
 In sparks and smoke the dusty highway rose;
 And ever on the maiden's face I saw,
 When the moon flashed upon it, the strange smile
 It wore on waking. Once I kissed her mouth,
 When she grew weary, and her strength returned.
 All through the night we scoured between the hills:
 The moon went down behind us, and the stars
 Dropped after her; but long before I saw
 A planet blazing straight against our eyes,
 The road had softened, and the shadowy hills
 Had flattened out, and I could hear the hiss
 Of sand spurned backward by the flying mares.
 Glory to God! I was at home again!
 The sun rose on us; far and near I saw
 The level Desert; sky met sand all round.
 We paused at midday by a palm-crowned well,
 And ate and slumbered. Somewhat, too, was said:
 The words have slipped my memory. That same eve

We rode sedately through a Hamoum camp, —
 I, Adeb, prince amongst them, and my bride.
 And ever since amongst them I have ridden,
 A head and shoulders taller than the best;
 And ever since my days have been of gold,
 My nights have been of silver, — God is just!

GEORGE HENRY BOKER.

HELVELLYN.

[In the spring of 1805, a young gentleman of talents, and of a most amiable disposition, perished by losing his way on the mountain Helvellyn. His remains were not discovered till three months afterwards, when they were found guarded by a faithful terrier, his constant attendant during frequent solitary rambles through the wilds of Cumberland and Westmoreland.]

I CLIMBED the dark brow of the mighty Hel-vellyn,
 Lakes and mountains beneath me gleamed
 misty and wide:
 All was still, save, by fits, when the eagle was yelling,
 And starting around me the echoes replied.
 On the right, Striden Edge round the Red Tarn was bending,
 And Catchedicam its left verge was defending,
 One huge nameless rock in the front was ascend-
 ing,
 When I marked the sad spot where the wanderer had died.
 Dark green was that spot mid the brown mountain heather,
 Where the Pilgrim of Nature lay stretched in decay,

Like the corpse of an outcast abandoned to weather,

Till the mountain winds wasted the tenantless
clay ;

Not yet quite deserted, though lonely extended,
For, faithful in death, his mute favorite attended,
Thé much-loved remains of her master defended,
And chased the hill-fox and the raven away.

How long didst thou think that his silence was slumber ?

When the wind waved his garment, how oft didst thou start ?

How many long days and long nights didst thou number

Ere he faded before thee, the friend of thy heart ?

And, O, was it meet that — no requiem read o'er
him,

No mother to weep, and no friend to deplore him,
And thou, little guardian, alone stretched before
him —

Unhonored the Pilgrim from life should depart ?

When a prince to the fate of the peasant has yielded,

The tapestry waves dark round the dim-lighted hall,

With 'scutcheons of silver the coffin is shielded,
And pages stand mute by the canopied pall :
Through the courts, at deep midnight, the torches are gleaming ;

In the proudly arched chapel the banners are
beaming ;

Far adown the long aisle sacred music is stream-
ing,

Lamenting a Chief of the People should fall.

But meeter for thee, gentle lover of nature,
To lay down thy head like the meek mountain
lamb,

When, wildered, he drops from some cliff huge in stature,

And draws his last sob by the side of his dam.
And more stately thy couch by this desert lake
lying,

Thy obsequies sung by the gray plover flying,
With one faithful friend but to witness thy dying,
In the arms of Helvellyn and Catchedicam.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

FITZ-JAMES AND RODERICK DHU.

FROM "THE LADY OF THE LAKE," CANTO V.

"I AM by promise tied

To match me with this man of pride :
Twice have I sought Clan-Alpine's glen
In peace ; but when I come again,

I come with banner, brand, and bow,
As leader seeks his mortal foe.

For lovorn swain, in lady's bower,
Ne'er panted for the appointed hour,
As I, until before me stand
This rebel Chieftain and his band."

"Have, then, thy wish!" — He whistled shrill,

And he was answered from the hill ;

Wild as the scream of the curlew,

From crag to crag the signal flew.

Instant, through copse and heath, arose

Bonnets and spears and bended bows ;

On right, on left, above, below,

Sprung up at once the lurking foe ;

From shingles gray their lances start,

The bracken bush sends forth the dart,

The rushes and the willow-wand

Are bristling into axe and brand,

And every tuft of broom gives life

To plaided warrior armed for strife.

That whistle garrisoned the glen

At once with full five hundred men,

As if the yawning hill to heaven

A subterranean host had given.

Watching their leader's beck and will,

All silent there they stood, and still.

Like the loose crags whose threatening mass

Lay tottering o'er the hollow pass,

As if an infant's touch could urge

Their headlong passage down the verge,

With step and weapon forward flung,

Upon the mountain-side they hung.

The Mountaineer cast glance of pride

Along Benedi's living side,

Then fixed his eye and sable brow

Full on Fitz-James : "How say'st thou now ?

These are Clan-Alpine's warriors true ;

And, Saxon, — I am Roderick Dhu !"

Fitz-James was brave ; — though to his heart

The life-blood thrilled with sudden start,

He manned himself with dauntless air,

Returned the Chief his haughty stare,

His back against a rock he bore,

And firmly placed his foot before : —

"Come one, come all ! this rock shall fly

From its firm base as soon as I."

Sir Roderick marked, — and in his eyes

Respect was mingled with surprise,

And the stern joy which warriors feel

In foemen worthy of their steel.

Short space he stood, — then waved his hand :

Down sunk the disappearing band ;

Each warrior vanished where he stood,

In broom or bracken, heath or wood :

Sunk brand and spear, and bended bow,

In osiers pale and copses low :

It seemed as if their mother Earth
Had swallowed up her warlike birth.
The wind's last breath had tossed in air
Pennon and plaid and plumage fair, —
The next but swept a lone hillside,
Where heath and fern were waving wide ;
The sun's last glance was glinted back,
From spear and glaive, from targe and jack, —
The next, all unreflected, shone
On bracken green, and cold gray stone.

Fitz-James looked round, — yet scarce believed
The witness that his sight received ;
Such apparition well might seem
Delusion of a dreadful dream.
Sir Roderick in suspense he eyed,
And to his look the Chief replied :
“ Fear naught — nay, that I need not say —
But — doubt not aught from mine array.
Thou art my guest ; — I pledged my word
As far as Coilantogle ford :
Nor would I call a clansman's brand
For aid against one valiant hand,
Though on our strife lay every vaul
Rent by the Saxon from the Gael.
So move we on ; — I only meant
To show the reed on which you leant,
Deeming this path you might pursue
Without a pass from Roderick Dhu.”
They moved ; — I said Fitz-James was brave,
As ever knight that belted glaive ;
Yet dare not say that now his blood
Kept on its wont and tempered flood,
As, following Roderick's stride, he drew
That seeming lonesome pathway through,
Which yet, by fearful proof, was rife
With lances, that, to take his life,
Waited but signal from a guide,
So late dishonored and defied.
Ever, by stealth, his eye sought round
The vanished guardians of the ground,
And still, from copse and heather deep,
Fancy saw spear and broadsword peep,
And in the plover's shrilly strain
The signal whistle heard again.
Nor breathed he free till far behind
The pass was left ; for then they wind
Along a wide and level green,
Where neither tree nor tuft was seen,
Nor rush nor bush of broom was near,
To hide a bonnet or a spear.

The Chief in silence strode before,
And reached that torrent's sounding shore,
Which, daughter of three mighty lakes,
From Vennachar in silver breaks,
Sweeps through the plain, and ceaseless mines
On Bochastle the mouldering lines,

Where Rome, the Empress of the world,
Of yore her eagle wings unfurled.
And here his course the Chieftain stayed,
Threw down his target and his plaid,
And to the Lowland warrior said :
“ Bold Saxon ! to his promise just,
Vieh-Alpine has discharged his trust.
This murderous Chief, this ruthless man,
This head of a rebellious clan,
Hath led thee safe through watch and ward,
Far past Clan-Alpine's outmost guard.
Now, man to man, and steel to steel,
A Chieftain's vengeance thou shalt feel.
See, here, all vantageless I stand,
Armed, like thyself, with single brand ;
For this is Coilantogle ford,
And thou must keep thee with thy sword.”

The Saxon paused : “ I ne'er delayed,
When foeman bade me draw my blade ;
Nay more, brave Chief, I vowed thy death :
Yet sure thy fair and generous faith,
And my deep debt for life preserved,
A better meed have well deserved :
Can naught but blood our feud atone ?
Are there no means ? ” “ No, Stranger, none
And hear, — to fire thy flagging zeal, —
The Saxon cause rests on thy steel ;
For thus spoke Fate, by prophet bred
Between the living and the dead :
‘ Who spills the foremost foeman's life,
His party conquers in the strife.’ ”
“ Then, by my word,” the Saxon said,
“ The riddle is already read.
Seek yonder brake beneath the cliff, —
There lies Red Murdoch, stark and stiff.
Thus Fate hath solved her prophecy,
Then yield to Fate, and not to me.
To James, at Stirling, let us go,
When, if thou wilt be still his foe,
Or if the King shall not agree
To grant thee graec and favor free,
I plight mine honor, oath, and word,
That, to thy native strengths restored,
With each advantage shalt thou stand,
That aids thee now to guard thy land.”

Dark lightning flashed from Roderick's eye :
“ Soars thy presumption, then, so high,
Because a wretched kern ye slew,
Homage to name to Roderick Dhu ?
He yields not, he, to man nor fate !
Thou add'st but fuel to my hate : —
My clansman's blood demands revenge.
Not yet prepared ? — By Heaven, I change
My thought, and hold thy valor light
As that of some vain carpet knight,

Who ill deserved my courteous care,
 And whose best boast is but to wear
 A braid of his fair lady's hair."
 "I thank thee, Roderick, for the word!
 It nerves my heart, it steels my sword;
 For I have sworn this braid to stain
 In the best blood that warms thy vein.
 Now, truce, farewell! and ruth, begone! —
 Yet think not that by thee alone,
 Proud Chief! can courtesy be shown;
 Though not from copse, or heath, or cairn,
 Start at my whistle clansmen stern,
 Of this small horn one feeble blast
 Would fearful odds against thee cast.
 But fear not — doubt not — which thou wilt —
 We try this quarrel hilt to hilt."
 Then each at once his falchion drew,
 Each on the ground his scabbard threw,
 Each looked to sun and stream and plain,
 As what they ne'er might see again;
 Then, foot and point and eye opposed,
 In dubious strife they darkly closed.

Ill fared it then with Roderick Dhu,
 That on the field his targe he threw,
 Whose brazen studs and tough bull-hide
 Had death so often dashed aside;
 For, trained abroad his arms to wield,
 Fitz-James's blade was sword and shield.
 He practised every pass and ward,
 To thrust, to strike, to feint, to guard;
 While less expert, though stronger far,
 The Gael maintained unequal war.
 Three times in closing strife they stood,
 And thrice the Saxon blade drank blood:
 No stinted draught, no scanty tide,
 The gushing floods the tartans dyed.
 Fierce Roderick felt the fatal drain,
 And showered his blows like wintry rain;
 And, as firm rock or castle-roof
 Against the winter shower is proof,
 The foe, invulnerable still,
 Foiled his wild rage by steady skill;
 Till, at advantage ta'en, his brand
 Forced Roderick's weapon from his hand,
 And, backwards borne upon the lea,
 Brought the proud Chieftain to his knee.
 "Now yield thee, or, by Him who made
 The world, thy heart's blood dyes my blade!"
 "Thy threats, thy mercy, I defy!
 Let recreant yield, who fears to die."
 Like adder darting from his coil,
 Like wolf that dashes through the toil,
 Like mountain-cat who guards her young,
 Full at Fitz-James's throat he sprung;
 Received, but recked not of a wound,
 And locked his arms his foeman round.
 Now, gallant Saxon, hold thine own!

No maiden's hand is round thee thrown!
 That desperate grasp thy frame might feel
 Through bars of brass and triple steel!
 They tug, they strain! down, down they go,
 The Gael above, Fitz-James below.
 The chieftain's gripe his throat compressed,
 His knee was planted in his breast;
 His clotted locks he backward threw,
 Across his brow his hand he drew,
 From blood and mist to clear his sight,
 Then gleamed aloft his dagger bright!
 But hate and fury ill supplied
 The stream of life's exhausted tide,
 And all too late the advantage came,
 To turn the odds of deadly game;
 For, while the dagger gleamed on high,
 Reeled soul and sense, reeled brain and eye.
 Down came the blow! but in the heath
 The erring blade found bloodless sheath.
 The struggling foe may now unclasp
 The fainting Chief's relaxing grasp;
 Unwounded from the dreadful close,
 But breathless all, Fitz-James arose.

He faltered thanks to Heaven for life,
 Redeemed, unhopel, from desperate strife;
 Next on his foe his look he cast,
 Whose every gasp appeared his last;
 In Roderick's gore he dipped the braid, —
 "Poor Blanche! thy wrongs are dearly paid:
 Yet with thy foe must die, or live,
 The praise that faith and valor give."
 With that he blew a bugle note,
 Undid the collar from his throat,
 Unbonneted, and by the wave
 Sat down his brow and hands to lave.
 Then faint afar are heard the feet
 Of rushing steeds in gallop fleet;
 The sounds increase, and now are seen
 Four mounted squires in Lincoln green;
 Two who bear lance, and two who lead,
 By loosened rein, a saddled steed;
 Each onward held his headlong course,
 And by Fitz-James reined up his horse, —
 With wonder viewed the bloody spot, —
 "Exclaim not, gallants! question not, —
 You, Herbert and Luffness, alight,
 And bind the wounds of yonder knight;
 Let the gray palfrey bear his weight,
 We destined for a fairer freight,
 And bring him on to Stirling straight;
 I will before at better speed,
 To seek fresh horse and fitting weed.
 The sun rides high; — I must be bouné
 To see the archer-game at noon;
 But lightly Bayard clears the lea.
 De Vaux and Herries, follow me."

RURAL SPORTS.

WAKEN, LORDS AND LADIES GAY.

WAKEN, lords and ladies gay,
 On the mountain dawns the day ;
 All the jolly chase is here,
 With hawk and horse and hunting-spear !
 Hounds are in their couples yelling,
 Hawks are whistling, horns are knelling,
 Merrily, merrily mingle they,
 "Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
 The mist has left the mountain gray,
 Springlets in the dawn are steaming,
 Diamonds on the brake are gleaming,
 And foresters have busy been
 To track the buck in thicket green ;
 Now we come to chant our lay,
 "Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
 To the greenwood haste away ;
 We can show you where he lies,
 Fleet of foot and tall of size ;
 We can show the marks he made
 When 'gainst the oak his antlers frayed ;
 You shall see him brought to bay ;
 Waken, lords and ladies gay.

Louder, louder chant the lay,
 Waken, lords and ladies gay !
 Tell them, youth and mirth and glee
 Run a course as well as we ;
 Time, stern huntsman, who can balk,
 Stanch as hound and fleet as hawk ?
 Think of this, and rise with day,
 Gentle lords and ladies gay !

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

THE STAG HUNT.

FROM "THE LADY OF THE LAKE," CANTO I.

THE stag at eve had drunk his fill,
 Where danced the moon on Monan's rill,
 And deep his midnight lair had made
 In lone Glenartney's hazel shade ;
 But, when the sun his beacon red
 Had kindled on Benvoirlich's head,
 The deep-mouthed bloodhound's heavy bay
 Resounded up the rocky way,
 And faint, from farther distance borne,
 Were heard the clanging hoof and horn.

As Chief who hears his warder call,
 "To arms ! the foemen storm the wall,"
 The antlered monarch of the waste
 Sprung from his heathery couch in haste.
 But, ere his fleet career he took,
 The dew-drops from his flanks he shook ;
 Like crested leader proud and high
 Tossed his beamed frontlet to the sky ;
 A moment gazed adown the dale,
 A moment snuffed the tainted gale,
 A moment listened to the cry,
 That thickened as the chase drew nigh ;
 Then, as the headmost foes appeared,
 With one brave bound the copse he cleared,
 And, stretching forward free and far,
 Sought the wild heaths of Uam-Var.

Yelled on the view the opening pack ;
 Rock, glen, and cavern paid them back ;
 To many a mingled sound at once
 The awakened mountain gave response.
 A hundred dogs bayed deep and strong,
 Clattered a hundred steeds along,
 Their peal the merry horns rung out,
 A hundred voices joined the shout ;
 With hark and whoop and wild halloo,
 No rest Benvoirlich's echoes knew.
 Far from the tumult fled the roe ;
 Close in her covert cowered the doe ;
 The falcon, from her cairn on high,
 Cast on the rout a wondering eye,
 Till far beyond her piercing ken
 The hurricane had swept the glen.
 Faint, and more faint, its falling din
 Returned from cavern, cliff, and linn,
 And silence settled, wide and still,
 On the lone wood and mighty hill.

'T were long to tell what steeds gave o'er,
 As swept the hunt through Cambus-stoer ;
 What reins were tightened in despair,
 When rose Benedi's ridge in air ;
 Who flagged upon Bochastle's heath,
 Who shunned to stem the flooded Teith, —
 For twice that day, from shore to shore,
 The gallant stag swam stoutly o'er.
 Few were the stragglers, following far,
 That reached the lake of Vennaehar ;
 And when the Brigg of Turk was won,
 The headmost horseman rode alone.
 Alone, but with unabated zeal,
 That horseman plied the scourge and steel

For, jaded now, and spent with toil,
Embossed with foam, and dark with soil,
While every gasp with sobs he drew,
The laboring stag strained full in view.
Two dogs of black St. Hubert's breed,
Unmatched for courage, breath, and speed,
Fast on his flying traces came,
And all but won that desperate game ;
For, scarce a spear's length from his haunch,
Vindictive toiled the bloodhounds stanch ;
Nor nearer might the dogs attain,
Nor farther might the quarry strain.
Thus up the margin of the lake,
Between the precipice and brake,
O'er stock and rock their race they take.

The hunter marked that mountain high,
The lone lake's western boundary,
And deemed the stag must turn to bay,
Where that huge rampart barred the way ;
Already glorying in the prize,
Measured his antlers with his eyes ;
For the death-wound and death-haloo
Mustered his breath, his whinyard drew ;
But thundering as he came prepared,
With ready arm and weapon bared,
The wily quarry shunned the shock,
And turned him from the opposing rock ;
Then, dashing down a darksome glen,
Soon lost to hound and hunter's ken,
In the deep Trosachs' wildest nook
His solitary refuge took.
There while, close couched, the thicket shed
Cold dews and wild-flowers on his head,
He heard the baffled dogs in vain
Rave through the hollow pass amain,
Chiding the rocks that yelled again.

Close on the hounds the hunter came,
To cheer them on the vanished game ;
But, stumbling in the rugged dell,
The gallant horse exhausted fell.
The impatient rider strove in vain
To rouse him with the spur and rein,
For the good steed, his labors o'er,
Stretched his stiff limbs, to rise no more ;
Then, touched with pity and remorse,
He sorrowed o'er the expiring horse :
" I little thought, when first thy rein
I slacked upon the banks of Seine,
That Highland eagle e'er should feed
On thy fleet limbs, my matchless steed !
Woe worth the chase, woe worth the day,
That costs thy life, my gallant gray ! "

Then through the dell his horn resounds,
From vain pursuit to call the hounds.

Back limped, with slow and crippled pace,
The sulky leaders of the chase ;
Close to their master's side they pressed,
With drooping tail and humbled crest ;
But still the dingle's hollow throat
Prolonged the swelling bugle-note.
The owlets started from their dream,
The eagles answered with their scream,
Round and around the sounds were cast,
Till echo seemed an answering blast ;
And on the hunter hied his way,
To join some comrades of the day ;
Yet often paused, so strange the road,
So wondrous were the scenes it showed.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

MY HEART 'S IN THE HIGHLANDS.

My heart 's in the Highlands, my heart is not
here ;
My heart 's in the Highlands a-chasing the deer ;
Chasing the wild deer, and following the roe,
My heart 's in the Highlands wherever I go.
Farewell to the Highlands, farewell to the North,
The birthplace of valor, the country of worth ;
Wherever I wander, wherever I rove,
The hills of the Highlands forever I love.

Farewell to the mountains high covered with snow ;
Farewell to the straths and green valleys below ;
Farewell to the forests and wild-hanging woods ;
Farewell to the torrents and loud-pouring floods.
My heart 's in the Highlands, my heart is not
here ;
My heart 's in the Highlands a-chasing the deer
Chasing the wild deer, and following the roe,
My heart 's in the Highlands wherever I go.

THE STAG HUNT.

FROM " THE SEASONS : AUTUMN. "

The stag too, singled from the herd where long
He ranged, the branching monarch of the shades,
Before the tempest drives. At first, in speed
He, sprightly, puts his faith ; and, roused by fear,
Gives all his swift aerial soul to flight.
Against the breeze he darts, that way the more
To leave the lessening murderous cry behind :
Deception short ! though fleetier than the winds
Blown o'er the keen-aired mountain by the north,
He bursts the thickets, glances through the glades,
And plunges deep into the wildest wood, —

If slow, yet sure, adhesive to the track
 Hot-steaming, up behind him come again
 The inhuman rout, and from the shady depth
 Expel him, circling through his every shift.
 He sweeps the forest oft; and sobbing sees
 The glades, mild opening to the golden day,
 Where, in kind contest, with his butting friends
 He went to struggle, or his loves enjoy.
 Oft in the full-descending flood he tries
 To lose the scent, and lave his burning sides;
 Oft seeks the herd; but fainting breathless toil,
 With selfish care avoid a brother's woe.
 What shall he do? His once so vivid nerves,
 So full of buoyant spirit, now no more
 Inspire the course; but fainting breathless toil,
 Sick, seizes on his heart: he stands at bay;
 And puts his last weak refuge in despair.
 The big round tears run down his dappled face;
 He groans in anguish; while the growling pack,
 Blood-happy, hang at his fair jutting chest,
 And mark his beauteous checkered sides with gore.

HART-LEAP WELL.

"Hart-Leap Well is a small spring of water about five miles from Richmond in Yorkshire, and near the side of the road that leads from Richmond to Askridge. Its name is derived from a remarkable chase, the memory of which is preserved by the monuments spoken of in the second part of the following poem, which monuments do now exist [1800] as I have there described them."—
 THE AUTHOR.

PART FIRST.

THE knight had ridden down from Wensley
 Moor,

With the slow motion of a summer's cloud;
 And now, as he approached a vassal's door,
 "Bring forth another horse!" he cried aloud.

"Another horse!"—That shout the vassal heard,
 And saddled his best steed, a comely gray;
 Sir Walter mounted him; he was the third
 Which he had mounted on that glorious day.

Joy sparkled in the prancing courser's eyes;
 The horse and horse-man are a happy pair;
 But, though Sir Walter like a falcon flies,
 There is a doleful silence in the air.

A rout this morning left Sir Walter's hall,
 That as they galloped made the echoes roar;
 But horse and man are vanished, one and all;
 Such race, I think, was never seen before.

Sir Walter, restless as the veering wind,
 Calls to the few tired dogs that yet remain:
 Blanche, Swift, and Music, noblest of their kind,
 Follow, and up the weary mountain strain.

The knight hallooed, he cheered and chid them on
 With suppliant gestures and upbraids stern;
 But breath and eyesight fail; and, one by one,
 The dogs are stretched among the mountain fern.

Where is the throng, the tumult of the race?
 The bugles that so joyfully were blown?
 — This chase it looks not like an earthly chase;
 Sir Walter and the hart are left alone.

The poor hart toils along the mountain-side;
 I will not stop to tell how far he fled,
 Nor will I mention by what death he died;
 But now the knight beholds him lying dead.

Dismounting, then, he leaned against a thorn;
 He had no follower, dog, nor man, nor boy:
 He neither cracked his whip, nor blew his horn,
 But gazed upon the spoil with silent joy.

Close to the thorn on which Sir Walter leaned Stood his dumb partner in this glorious feat;
 Weak as a lamb the hour that it is yeaned,
 And white with foam as if with cleaving sleet.

Upon his side the hart was lying stretched:
 His nostril touched a spring beneath a hill,
 And with the last deep groan his breath had fetched

The waters of the spring were trembling still.

And now, too happy for repose or rest,
 (Never had living man such joyful lot!)
 Sir Walter walked all round, north, south, and west,
 And gazed and gazed upon that darling spot.

And climbing up the hill (it was at least Four roods of sheer ascent), Sir Walter found
 Three several hoof-marks which the hunted beast
 Had left imprinted on the grassy ground.

Sir Walter wiped his face, and cried, "Till now
 Such sight was never seen by human eyes:
 Three leaps have borne him from this lofty brow,
 Down to the very fountain where he lies.

"I'll build a pleasure-house upon this spot,
 And a small arbor, made for rural joy;
 'T will be the traveller's shed, the pilgrim's cot,
 A place of love for damsels that are coy.

"A cunning artist will I have to frame
 A basin for that fountain in the dell!
 And they who do make mention of the same,
 From this day forth, shall call it Hart-Leap Well.

"And, gallant stag! to make thy praises known,
 Another monument shall here be raised;

Three several pillars, each a rough-hewn stone,
And planted where thy hoofs the turf have grazed.

“And in the summer-time, when days are long,
I will come hither with my paramour ;
And with the dancers and the minstrel’s song
We will make merry in that pleasant bower.

“Till the foundations of the mountains fail
My mansion with its arbor shall endure ; —
The joy of them who till the fields of Swale,
And them who dwell among the woods of Ure !”

Then home he went, and left the hart, stone-dead,
With breathless nostrils stretched above the spring.

— Soon did the knight perform what he had said,
And far and wide the fame thereof did ring.

Ere thrice the moon into her port had steered,
A cup of stone received the living well ;
Three pillars of rude stone Sir Walter reared,
And built a house of pleasure in the dell.

And near the fountain, flowers of stature tall
With trailing plants and trees were intertwined, —
Which soon composed a little sylvan hall,
A leafy shelter from the sun and wind.

And thither, when the summer days were long,
Sir Walter led his wondering paramour ;
And with the dancers and the minstrel’s song
Made merriment within that pleasant bower.

The knight, Sir Walter, died in course of time,
And his bones lie in his paternal vale. —
But there is matter for a second rhyme,
And I to this would add another tale.

PART SECOND.

THE moving accident is not my trade ;
To freeze the blood I have no ready arts :
’T is my delight, alone in summer shade,
To pipe a simple song for thinking hearts.

As I from Hawes to Richmond did repair,
It chanced that I saw standing in a dell
Three aspens at three corners of a square ;
And one, not four yards distant, near a well.

What this imported I could ill divine :
And, pulling now the rein my horse to stop,
I saw three pillars standing in a line, —
The last stone pillar on a dark hill-top.

The trees were gray, with neither arms nor head ;
Half wasted the square mound of tawny green ;
So that you just might say, as then I said,
“ Here in old time the hand of man hath been.”

I looked upon the hill both far and near, —
More doleful place did never eye survey ;
It seemed as if the spring-time came not here,
And nature here were willing to decay.

I stood in various thoughts and fancies lost,
When one, who was in shepherd’s garb attired,
Came up the hollow ; — him did I accost,
And what this place might be I then inquired.

The shepherd stopped, and that same story told
Which in my former rhyme I have rehearsed.
“ A jolly place,” said he, “ in times of old !
But something ails it now ; the spot is curst.

“ You see these lifeless stumps of aspen-wood, —
Some say that they are beeches, others elms, —
These were the bower ; and here a mansion stood,
The finest palace of a hundred realms !

“ The arbor does its own condition tell ;
You see the stones, the fountain, and the stream ;
But as to the great lodge ! you might as well
Hunt half a day for a forgotten dream.

“ There ’s neither dog nor heifer, horse nor sheep,
Will wet his lips within that cup of stone ;
And oftentimes, when all are fast asleep,
This water doth send forth a dolorous groan.

“ Some say that here a murder has been done,
And blood cries out for blood ; but, for my part,
I ’ve guessed, when I ’ve been sitting in the sun,
That it was all for that unhappy hart.

“ What thoughts must through the creature’s brain have past !
Even from the topmost stone, upon the steep,
Are but three bounds, — and look, sir, at this last !
O master ! it has been a cruel leap.

“ For thirteen hours he ran a desperate race ;
And in my simple mind we cannot tell
What cause the hart might have to love this place,
And come and make his death-bed near the well.

“ Here on the grass perhaps asleep he sank,
Lulled by the fountain in the summer-tide ;
This water was perhaps the first he drank
When he had wandered from his mother’s side.

“ In April here beneath the flowering thorn
He heard the birds their morning carols sing ;
And he, perhaps, for aught we know, was born
Not half a furlong from that self-same spring.

“ Now, here is neither grass nor pleasant shade ;
The sun on drearier hollow never shone ;
So will it be, as I have often said,
Till trees, and stones, and fountain, all are gone.”

"Gray-headed shepherd, thou hast spoken well ;
Small difference lies between thy creed and mine :
This beast not unobserved by nature fell ;
His death was mourned by sympathy divine.

"The Being, that is in the clouds and air,
That is in the green leaves among the groves,
Maintains a deep and reverential care
For the unoffending creatures whom he loves.

"The pleasure-house is dust : — behind, before,
This is no common waste, no common gloom ;
But Nature, in due course of time, once more
Shall here put on her beauty and her bloom.

"She leaves these objects to a slow decay,
That what we are, and have been, may be known ;
But at the coming of the milder day
These monuments shall all be overgrown.

"One lesson, shepherd, let us two divide,
Taught both by what she shows and what conceals ;
Never to blend our pleasure or our pride
With sorrow of the meanest thing that feels."

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

BETH GÉLERT.

THE spearmen heard the bugle sound,
And cheerily smiled the morn ;
And many a brach, and many a hound,
Obeyed Llewellyn's horn.

And still he blew a louder blast,
And gave a lustier cheer,
"Come, Gélert, come, wert never last Llewellyn's horn to hear.

"O, where does faithful Gélert roam,
The flower of all his race ;
So true, so brave, — a lamb at home,
A lion in the chase ?"

In sooth, he was a peerless hound,
The gift of royal John ;
But now no Gélert could be found,
And all the chase rode on.

That day Llewellyn little loved
The chase of hart and hare ;
And scant and small the booty proved,
For Gélert was not there.

Unpleas'd, Llewellyn homeward hied,
When, near the portal seat,
His truant Gélert he espied,
Bounding his lord to greet.

But, when he gained his castle-door,
Aghast the chieftain stood ;
The hound all o'er was smeared with gore ;
His lips, his fangs, ran blood.

Llewellyn gazed with fierce surprise ;
Unused such looks to meet,
His favorite checked his joyful guise,
And crouched, and licked his feet.

Onward, in haste, Llewellyn passed,
And on went Gélert too ;
And still, where'er his eyes he cast,
Fresh blood-gouts shocked his view.

O'erturned his infant's bed he found,
With blood-stained covert rent ;
And all around the walls and ground
With recent blood besprent.

He called his child, — no voice replied, —
He searched with terror wild ;
Blood, blood he found on every side,
But nowhere found his child.

"Hell-hound ! my child's by thee devoured,"
The frantic father cried ;
And to the hilt his vengeful sword
He plunged in Gélert's side.

Aroused by Gélert's dying yell,
Some slumberer wakened nigh :
What words the parent's joy could tell
To hear his infant's cry !

Concealed beneath a tumbled heap
His hurried search had missed,
All glowing from his rosy sleep,
The cherub boy he kissed.

Nor scathe had he, nor harm, nor dread,
But, the same couch beneath,
Lay a gaunt wolf, all torn and dead,
Tremendous still in death.

Ah, what was then Llewellyn's pain !
For now the truth was clear ;
His gallant hound the wolf had slain
To save Llewellyn's heir.

WILLIAM ROBERT SPENCER.

A HUNTING WE WILL GO.

THE dusky night rides down the sky,
And ushers in the morn ;
The hounds all join in glorious cry,
The huntsman winds his horn,
And a hunting we will go.

The wife around her husband throws
 Her arms to make him stay ;
 "My dear, it rains, it hails, it blows ;
 You cannot hunt to-day."
 Yet a hunting we will go.

Away they fly to 'scape the rout,
 Their steeds they soundly switch ;
 Some are thrown in, and some thrown out,
 And some thrown in the ditch.
 Yet a hunting we will go.

Sly Reynard now like lightning flies,
 And sweeps across the vale ;
 And when the hounds too near he spies,
 He drops his bushy tail.
 Then a hunting we will go.

Fond Echo seems to like the sport,
 And join the jovial cry ;
 The woods, the hills, the sound retort,
 And music fills the sky,
 When a hunting we do go.

At last his strength to faintness worn,
 Poor Reynard ceases flight ;
 Then hungry, homeward we return,
 To feast away the night,
 And a drinking we do go.

Ye jovial hunters, in the morn
 Prepare then for the chase ;
 Rise at the sounding of the horn
 And health with sport embrace,
 When a hunting we do go.

HENRY FIELDING.

LIFE IN THE AUTUMN WOODS.

[VIRGINIA.]

SUMMER has gone,
 And fruitful Autumn has advanced so far
 That there is warmth, not heat, in the broad sun,
 And you may look, with naked eye, upon
 The ardors of his ear ;
 The stealthy frosts, whom his spent looks embolden,
 Are making the green leaves golden.

What a brave splendor
 Is in the October air ! how rich, and clear,
 And bracing, and all-joyous ! We must render Love to the Spring-time, with its sproutings tender,
 As to a child quite dear ;
 But Autumn is a thing of perfect glory,
 A manhood not yet hoary.

I love the woods,
 In this good season of the liberal year ;
 I love to seek their leafy solitudes,
 And give myself to melancholy moods,
 With no intruder near,
 And find strange lessons, as I sit and ponder,
 In every natural wonder.

But not alone,
 As Shakespeare's melancholy courtier loved Ardennes,
 Love I the browning forest ; and I own
 I would not oft have mused, as he, but flown
 To hunt with Amiens —
 And little thought, as up the bold deer bounded,
 Of the sad creature wounded.

A brave and good,
 But world-worn knight — soul-wearied with his part
 In this vexed life — gave man for solitude,
 And built a lodge, and lived in Wantley wood,
 To hear the belling hart.
 It was a gentle taste, but its sweet sadness
 Yields to the hunter's madness.

What passionate
 And keen delight is in the proud swift chase !
 Go out what time the lark at heaven's red gate
 Soars joyously singing — quite infuriate
 With the high pride of his place ;
 What time the arisen sun arrays the morning
 In its first bright adorning.

Hark ! the quick horn —
 As sweet to hear as any clarion —
 Piercing with silver call the ear of morn ;
 And mark the steeds, stout Curtal and Topthorne,
 And Greysteil and the Don —
 Each one of them his fiery mood displaying
 With pawing and with neighing.

Urge your swift horse
 After the crying hounds in this fresh hour ;
 Vanquish high hills, stem perilous streams perforce,
 On the free plain give free wings to your course,
 And you will know the power
 Of the brave chase, — and how of griefs the sorest
 A cure is in the forest.

Or stalk the deer ;
 The same red lip of dawn has kissed the hills,
 The gladdest sounds are crowding on your ear,
 There is a life in all the atmosphere : —
 Your very nature fills
 With the fresh hour, as up the hills aspiring
 You climb with limbs untiring.

It is a fair
 And goodly sight to see the antlered stag
 With the long sweep of his swift walk repair
 To join his brothers ; or the plethoric bear
     Lying in some high crag,
 With pinky eyes half closed, but broad head shaking,
 As gadflies keep him waking.

And these you see,
 And, seeing them, you travel to their death
 With a slow, stealthy step, from tree to tree,
 Noting the wind, however faint it be.
     The hunter draws a breath
 In times like these, which, he will say, repays him
     For all care that waylays him.

A strong joy fills
 (A joy beyond the tongue's expressive power)
 My heart in Autumn weather — fills and thrills !
 And I would rather stalk the breezy hills
     Descending to my bower
 Nightly, by the sweet spirit of Peace attended,
     Than pine where life is splendid.

PHILIP FENDELTON COOKE.

THE ARAB TO HIS FAVORITE STEED.

My beautiful ! my beautiful ! that standest meekly by,
 With thy proudly arched and glossy neck, and dark and fiery eye,
 Fret not to roam the desert now, with all thy wingèd speed ;
 I may not mount on thee again, — thou 'rt sold,
 my Arab steed !
 Fret not with that impatient hoof, — snuff not the breezy wind, —
 The farther that thou liest now, so far am I behind ;
 The stranger hath thy bridle-rein, — thy master hath his gold, —
 Fleet-limbed and beautiful, farewell ; thou 'rt sold, my steed, thou 'rt sold.

Farewell ! those free, untired limbs full many a mile must roam,
 To reach the chill and wintry sky which clouds
 the stranger's home ;
 Some other hand, less fond, must now thy corn and bed prepare,
 Thy silky mane, I braided once, must be another's care !
 The morning sun shall dawn again, but never-more with thee

Shall I gallop through the desert paths, where we were wont to be ;
 Evening shall darken on the earth, and o'er the sandy plain
 Some other steed, with slower step, shall bear me home again.

Yes, thou must go ! the wild, free breeze, the brilliant sun and sky,
 Thy master's house, — from all of these my exiled one must fly ;
 Thy proud dark eye will grow less proud, thy step become less fleet,
 And vainly shalt thou arch thy neck, thy master's hand to meet.
 Only in sleep shall I behold that dark eye, glancing bright ; —
 Only in sleep shall hear again that step so firm
 and light ;
 And when I raise my dreaming arm to check or cheer thy speed,
 Then must I, starting, wake to feel, — thou 'rt
 sold, my Arab steed !

Ah ! rudely then, unseen by me, some cruel hand
 may chide,
 Till foam-wreaths lie, like crested waves, along thy panting side :
 And the rich blood that's in thee swells, in thy indignant pain,
 Till careless eyes, which rest on thee, may count
 each starting vein.
Will they ill-use thee ? If I thought — but no,
 it cannot be, —
 Thou art so swift, yet easy curbed ; so gentle,
 yet so free :
 And yet, if haply, when thou 'rt gone, my lonely heart should yearn, —
 Can the hand which casts thee from it now command thee to return ?

Return! alas ! my Arab steed ! what shall thy master do,
 When thou, who wast his all of joy, hast vanished
 from his view ?
 When the dim distance cheats mine eye, and through the gathering tears
 Thy bright form, for a moment, like the false mirage appears ;
 Slow and unmounted shall I roam, with weary
 step alone,
 Where, with fleet step and joyous bound, thou oft hast borne me on ;
 And sitting down by that green well, I'll pause and sadly think,
 "It was here he bowed his glossy neck when last
 I saw him drink !"

When last I saw thee drink! — Away! the fevered dream is o'er, —

I could not live a day, and know that we should meet no more!

They tempted me, my beautiful! — for hunger's power is strong, —

They tempted me, my beautiful! but I have loved too long.

Who said that I had given thee up? who said that thou wast sold?

'T is false, — 't is false, my Arab steed! I fling them back their gold!

Thus, thus, I leap upon thy back, and scour the distant plains;

Away! who overtakes us now shall claim thee for his pains!

CAROLINE ELIZABETH SARAH NORTON.

THE HORSEBACK RIDE.

WHEN troubled in spirit, when weary of life,
When I faint 'neath its burdens, and shrink from its strife,

When its fruits, turned to ashes, are mocking my taste,

And its fairest scene seems but a desolate waste,
Then come ye not near me, my sad heart to cheer

With friendship's soft accents or sympathy's tear.
No pity I ask, and no counsel I need,
But bring me, O, bring me my gallant young steed,

With his high archèd neck, and his nostril spread wide,

His eye full of fire, and his step full of pride!
As I spring to his back, as I seize the strong rein,

The strength to my spirit returneth again!
The bonds are all broken that fettered my mind,
And my cares borne away on the wings of the wind;

My pride lifts its head, for a season bowed down,
And the queen in my nature now puts on her crown!

Now we're off — like the winds to the plains
whence they came;

And the rapture of motion is thrilling my frame!
On, on speeds my courser, scarce printing the sod,
Scaree crushing a daisy to mark where he trod!

On, on like a deer, when the hound's early bay
Awakes the wild echoes, away, and away!

Still faster, still farther, he leaps at my cheer,
Till the rush of the startled air whirs in my ear!
Now 'long a clear rivulet lieth his track, —

See his glancing hoofs tossing the white pebbles
back!

Now a glen dark as midnight — what matter? —
we'll down,

Though shadows are round us, and rocks o'er us
frown;

The thick branches shake as we're hurrying through,

And deck us with spangles of silvery dew!

What a wild thought of triumph, that this girlish
hand

Such a steed in the might of his strength may command!

What a glorious creature! Ah! glance at him
now,

As I check him a while on this green hillock's brow;

How he tosses his mane, with a shrill joyous neigh,

And paws the firm earth in his proud, stately
play!

Hurrah! off again, dashing on as in ire,
Till the long, flinty pathway is flashing with fire!

Ho! a ditch! — Shall we pause? No; the bold leap we dare,

Like a swift-wingèd arrow we rush through the air!
O, not all the pleasures that poets may praise,

Not the 'wilderer waltz in the ball-room's blaze,
Nor the chivalrous joust, nor the daring race,

Nor the swift regatta, nor merry chase,
Nor the sail, high heaving waters o'er,

Nor the rural dance on the moonlight shore,
Can the wild and thrilling joy exceed

Of a fearless leap on a fiery steed!

SARA JANE LIPPINCOTT (Grace Greenwood).

A CANADIAN BOAT-SONG.

FAINTLY as tolls the evening chime,
Our voices keep tune, and our oars keep time.

Soon as the woods on shore look dim,
We'll sing at St. Ann's our parting hymn.

Row, brothers, row! the stream runs fast,
The rapids are near, and the daylight's past!

Why should we yet our sail unfurl? —
There is not a breath the blue wave to curl.

But when the wind blows off the shore,
O, sweetly we'll rest our weary oar!

Blow, breezes, blow! the stream runs fast,
The rapids are near, and the daylight's past!

Utawa's tide! this trembling moon
Shall see us float over thy surges soon.

Saint of this green isle, hear our prayers, —
O, grant us cool heavens and favoring airs!

Blow, breezes, blow! the stream runs fast,
The rapids are near, and the daylight's past!

THOMAS MOORE.

THE SNOWS.*

OVER the Snows
 Buoyantly goes
 The lumberers' bark canoe :
 Lightly they sweep,
 Wilder each leap,
 Rending the white-caps through.
 Away ! Away !
 With the speed of a startled deer,
 While the steersman true
 And his laughing crew
 Sing of their wild career :

“Mariners glide
 Far o'er the tide
 In ships that are stanch and strong :
 Safely as they
 Speed we away,
 Waking the woods with song.”
 Away ! Away !
 With the speed of a startled deer,
 While the laughing crew
 Of the swift canoe
 Sing of the raftsmen's cheer :

“Through forest and brake,
 O'er rapid and lake,
 We're sport for the sun and rain ;
 Free as the child
 Of the Arab wild,
 Hardened to toil and pain.
 Away ! Away !
 With the speed of a startled deer,
 While our buoyant flight
 And the rapid's might Heighten our swift career.”

Over the Snows
 Buoyantly goes
 The lumberers' bark canoe :
 Lightly they sweep,
 Wilder each leap,
 Tearing the white-caps through.
 Away ! Away !
 With the speed of a startled deer.
 There's a fearless crew
 In each light canoe
 To sing of the raftsmen's cheer.

CHARLES SANGSTER.

THE PLEASURE-BOAT.

COME, hoist the sail, the fast let go !
 They're seated side by side ;
 Wave chases wave in pleasant flow ;
 The bay is fair and wide.

* The name given to a foaming rapid on the Upper Ottawa River, in Canada.

The ripples lightly tap the boat ;
 Loose ! Give her to the wind !
 She shoots ahead ; they're all afloat ;
 The straud is far behind.

No danger reach so fair a crew !
 Thou goddess of the foam,
 I'll ever pay thee worship due,
 If thou wilt bring them home.

Fair ladies, fairer than the spray
 The prow is dashing wide,
 Soft breezes take you on your way,
 Soft flow the blessed tide.

O, might I like those breezes be,
 And touch that arching brow,
 I'd dwell forever on the sea
 Where ye are floating now.

The boat goes tilting on the waves ;
 The waves go tilting by ;
 There dips the duck, — her back she laves ;
 O'erhead the sea-gulls fly.

Now, like the gulls that dart for prey,
 The little vessel stoops ;
 Now, rising, shoots along her way,
 Like them, in easy swoops.

The sunlight falling on her sheet,
 It glitters like the drift,
 Sparkling, in scorn of summer's heat,
 High up some mountain rift.

The winds are fresh ; she's driving fast
 Upon the bending tide ;
 The crinkling sail, and crinkling mast,
 Go with her side by side.

Why dies the breeze away so soon ?
 Why hangs the pennant down ?
 The sea is glass ; the sun at noon. —
 Nay, lady, do not frown ;

For, see, the wingèd fisher's plume
 Is painted on the sea ;
 Below, a cheek of lovely bloom.
 Whose eyes look up to thee ?

She smiles ; thou need'st must smile on her.
 And see, beside her face,
 A rich, white cloud that doth not stir :
 What beauty, and what grace !

And pictured beach of yellow sand,
 And peaked rock and hill,
 Change the smooth sea to fairy-land ;
 How lovely and how still !

From that far isle the thresher's flail
 Strikes close upon the ear ;
 The leaping fish, the swinging sail
 Of yonder sloop, sound near.

The parting sun sends out a glow
 Across the placid bay,
 Touching with glory all the show. —
 'A breeze ! Up helm ! Away !

Carrening to the wind, they reach,
 With laugh and call, the shore.
 They 've left their footprints on the beach,
 But them I hear no more.

RICHARD HENRY DANA.

THE ANGLER'S TRYSTING-TREE.

SING, sweet thrushes, forth and sing !
 Meet the morn upon the lea ;
 Are the emeralds of the spring
 On the angler's trysting-tree ?
 Tell, sweet thrushes, tell to me !
 Are there buds on our willow-tree ?
 Buds and birds on our trysting-tree ?

Sing, sweet thrushes, forth and sing !
 Have you met the honey-bee,
 Circling upon rapid wing,
 Round the angler's trysting-tree ?
 Up, sweet thrushes, up and see !
 Are there bees at our willow-tree ?
 Birds and bees at the trysting-tree ?

Sing, sweet thrushes, forth and sing !
 Are the fountains gushing free ?
 Is the south-wind wandering
 Through the angler's trysting-tree ?
 Up, sweet thrushes, tell to me !
 Is there wind up our willow-tree ?
 Wind or calm at our trysting-tree ?

Sing, sweet thrushes, forth and sing !
 Wile us with a merry glee
 To the flowery haunts of spring, —
 To the angler's trysting-tree.
 Tell, sweet thrushes, tell to me !
 Are there flowers 'neath our willow-tree .
 Spring and flowers at the trysting-tree ?

THOMAS TOD STODDARD.

IN PRAISE OF ANGLING.

QUIVERING fears, heart-tearing cares,
 Anxious sighs, untimely tears,
 Fly, fly to courts,
 Fly to fond worldlings' sports,

Where strained sardonic smiles are glozing still,
 And grief is forced to laugh against her will,
 Where mirth 's but mummerly,
 And sorrows only real be.

Fly from our country pastimes, fly,
 Sad troops of human misery ;
 Come, serene looks,
 Clear as the crystal brooks,
 Or the pure azure heaven that smiles to see
 The rich attendance on our poverty ;
 Peace and a secure mind,
 Which all men seek, we only find.

Abused mortals ! did you know
 Where joy, heart's ease, and comforts grow,
 You 'd scorn proud towers
 And seek them in these bowers,
 Where winds, sometimes, our woods perhaps may shake,
 But blustering care could never tempest make ;
 Nor murmurs e'er come nigh us,
 Saving of fountains that glide by us.

Here 's no fantastic mask or dance,
 But of our kids that frisk and prance ;
 Nor wars are seen,
 Unless upon the green
 Two harmless lambs are butting one the other,
 Which done, both bleating run, each to his mother ;
 And wounds are never found,
 Save what the ploughshare gives the ground.

Here are no entrapping baits
 To hasten to, too hasty fates ;
 Unless it be
 The fond credulity
 Of silly fish, which (worldling like) still look
 Upon the bait, but never on the hook ;
 Nor envy, 'less among
 The birds, for price of their sweet song.

Go, let the diving negro seek
 For gems, hid in some forlorn creek :
 We all pearls scorn
 Save what the dewy morn
 Congeals upon each little spire of grass,
 Which careless shepherds beat down as they pass ;
 And gold ne'er here appears,
 Save what the yellow Ceres bears.

Blest silent groves, O, may you be,
 Forever, mirth's best nursery !
 May pure contents
 Forever pitch their tents

Upon these downs, these meads, these rocks, these mountains!
 And peace still slumber by these purling fountains,
 Which we may every year
 Meet, when we come a-fishing here.

SIR HENRY WOTTON.

THE ANGLER.

O THE gallant fisher's life,
 It is the best of any !
 'T is full of pleasure, void of strife,
 And 't is beloved by many ;
     Other joys
     Are but toys ;
     Only this Lawful is ;
     For our skill
     Breeds no ill,
 But content and pleasure.

In a morning, up we rise,
 Ere Aurora's peeping ;
 Drink a cup to wash our eyes,
 Leave the sluggard sleeping ;
     Then we go
     To and fro,
     With our knacks
     At our backs,
     To such streams
     As the Thames,
 If we have the leisure.

When we please to walk abroad
 For our recreation,
 In the fields is our abode,
 Full of delectation,
     Where, in a brook,
     With a hook, —
     Or a lake, —
     Fish we take ;
     There we sit,
     For a bit,
 Till we fish entangle.

We have gentles in a horn,
 We have paste and worms too ;
 We can watch both night and morn,
 Suffer rain and storms too ;
     None do here
     Use to swear :
     Oaths do fray
     Fish away ;
     We sit still,
     Watch our quill :
 Fishers must not wrangle.

If the sun's excessive heat
 Make our bodies swelter,
 To an osier hedge we get,
 For a friendly shelter ;
     Where, in a dike,
     Perch or pike,
     Roach or dace,
     We do chase,
     Bleak or gudgeon,
     Without grudging ;
 We are still contented.

Or we sometimes pass an hour
 Under a green willow,
 That defends us from a shower,
 Making earth our pillow ;
     Where we may Think and pray,
     Before death
     Stops our breath ;
     Other joys
     Are but toys,
 And to be lamented.

JOHN CHALKHILL.

THE ANGLER'S WISH.

I IN these flowery meads would be,
 These crystal streams should solace me ;
 To whose harmonious bubbling noise
 I, with my angle, would rejoice,
     Sit here, and see the turtle-dove
     Court his chaste mate to acts of love ;

Or, on that bank, feel the west-wind
 Breathe health and plenty ; please my mind,
 To see sweet dew-drops kiss these flowers,
 And then washed off by April showers ;
     Here, hear my Kenna* sing a song :
     There, see a blackbird feed her young,

Or a laverock build her nest ;
 Here, give my weary spirits rest,
 And raise my low-pitched thoughts above
 Earth, or what poor mortals love.
     Thus, free from lawsuits, and the noise
     Of princes' courts, I would rejoice ;

Or, with my Bryan and a book,
 Loiter long days near Shawford brook ;
 There sit by him, and eat my meat ;
 There see the sun both rise and set ;
 There bid good morning to next day ;
 There meditate my time away ;
     And angle on ; and beg to have
     A quiet passage to a welcome grave.

ISAAC WALTON.

* "Kenna," the name of his supposed mistress, seems to have been formed from the name of his wife, which was Ken.

ANGLING.

FROM "THE SEASONS: SPRING."

Just in the dubious point, where with the pool
Is mixed the trembling stream, or where it boils
Around the stone, or from the hollowed bank
Reverted plays in undulating flow,
There throw, nice-judging, the delusive fly ;
And, as you lead it round in artful curve,
With eye attentive mark the springing game.
Straight as above the surface of the flood
They wanton rise, or urged by hunger leap,
Then fix, with gentle twitch, the barb'd hook ;
Some lightly tossing to the grassy bank,
And to the shelving shore slow dragging some,
With various hand proportioned to their force.
If yet too young, and easily deceived,
A worthless prey scarce bends your pliant rod,
Him, piteous of his youth, and the short space
He has enjoyed the vital light of heaven,
Soft disengage, and back into the stream
The speckled infant throw. But should you lure
From his dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendent trees, the monarch of the brook,
Behooves you then to ply your finest art.
Long time he, following cautious, scans the fly ;
And oft attempts to seize it, but as oft
The dimpled water speaks his jealous fear.
At last, while haply o'er the shaded sun
Passes a cloud, he desperate takes the death,
With sullen plunge. At once he darts along,
Deep-struck, and runs out all the lengthened line ;
Then seeks the farthest ooze, the sheltering weed,
The caverned bank, his old secure abode ;
And flies aloft, and flounces round the pool,
Indignant of the guile. With yielding hand,
That feels him still, yet to his furious course
Gives way, you, now retiring, following now
Across the stream, exhaust his idle rage ;
Till, floating broad upon his breathless side,
And to his fate abandoned, to the shore
You gayly drag your unresisting prize.

JAMES THOMSON.

THE ANGLER.

But look ! o'er the fall see the angler stand,
Swinging his rod with skilful hand ;
The fly at the end of his gossamer line
Swims through the sun like a summer moth,
Till, dropt with a careful precision fine,
It touches the pool beyond the froth.
A-sudden, the speckled hawk of the brook
Darts from his covert and seizes the hook.
Swift spins the reel ; with easy slip
The line pays out, and the rod, like a whip,

Lithe and arrowy, tapering, slim,
Is bent to a bow o'er the brooklet's brim,
Till the trout leaps up in the sun, and flings
The spray from the flash of his finny wings ;
Then falls on his side, and, drunken with fright,
Is towed to the shore like a staggering barge,
Till beached at last on the sandy marge,
Where he dies with the hues of the morning light,
While his sides with a cluster of stars are bright.
The angler in his basket lays
The constellation, and goes his way.

THOMAS BUCHANAN READ.

SWIMMING.

FROM "THE TWO FOSCARL"

How many a time have I
Cloven, with arm still lustier, breast more daring,
The wave all roughened ; with a swimmer's stroke
Flinging the billows back from my drenched hair,
And laughing from my lip the audacious brine,
Which kissed it like a wine-cup, rising o'er
The waves as they arose, and prouder still
The loftier they uplifted me ; and oft,
In wantonness of spirit, plunging down
Into their green and glassy gulfs, and making
My way to shells and sea-weed, all unseen
By those above, till they waxed fearful ; then Returning with my grasp full of such tokens
As showed that I had searched the deep ; exult-
ing,
With a far-dashing stroke, and drawing deep
The long-suspended breath, again I spurned
The foam which broke around me, and pursued
My track like a sea-bird. — I was a boy then.

LORD BYRON.

BATHING.

FROM "THE SEASONS: SUMMER."

THE sprightly youth
Speeds to the well-known pool, whose crystal depth
A sandy bottom shows. A while he stands
Gazing th' inverted landscape, half afraid
To meditate the blue profound below ;
Then plunges headlong down the circling flood.
His ebon tresses and his rosy cheek
Instant emerge ; and through the obedient wave,
At each short breathing by his lip repelled,
With arms and legs according well, he makes,
As humor leads, an easy-winding path ;
While from his polished sides a dewy light
Effuses on the pleased spectators round.

This is the purest exercise of health,
 The kind refresher of the summer-heats ;
 Nor, when cold winter keens the brightening flood,
 Would I weak-shivering linger on the brink.
 Thus life redoubles, and is oft preserved,
 By the bold swimmer, in the swift elapse
 Of accident disastrous. Hence the limbs
 Knit into force ; and the same Roman arm,
 That rose victorious o'er the conquered earth,
 First learned, while tender, to subdue the wave.
 Even from the body's purity, the mind
 Receives a secret sympathetic aid.

JAMES THOMSON.

OUR SKATER BELLE.

ALONG the frozen lake she comes
 In linking crescents, light and fleet ;
 The ice-imprisoned Undine hums
 A welcome to her little feet.

I see the jaunty hat, the plume
 Sverve birdlike in the joyous gale, —
 The cheeks lit up to burning bloom,
 The young eyes sparkling through the veil.

The quick breath parts her laughing lips,
 The white neck shines through tossing curls ;
 Her vesture gently sways and dips,
 As on she speeds in shell-like whirls.

Men stop and smile to see her go ;
 They gaze, they smile in pleased surprise ;
 They ask her name ; they long to show
 Some silent friendship in their eyes.

She glances not ; she passes on ;
 Her steely footfall quicker rings ;
 She guesses not the benison
 Which follows her on noiseless wings.

Smooth be her ways, secure her tread
 Along the devious lines of life,
 From grace to grace successive led, —
 A noble maiden, nobler wife !

ANONYMOUS.

SLEIGH SONG.

JINGLE, jingle, clear the way,
 'T is the merry, merry sleigh !
 As it swiftly scuds along,
 Hear the burst of happy song ;
 See the gleam of glances bright,
 Flashing o'er the pathway white !
 Jingle, jingle, past it flies,
 Sending shafts from hooded eyes, —

Roguish archers, I'll be bound,
 Little heeding whom they wound ;
 See them, with capricious pranks,
 Ploughing now the drifted banks ;
 Jingle, jingle, mid the glee
 Who among them cares for me ?
 Jingle, jingle, on they go,
 Capes and bonnets white with snow,
 Not a single robe they fold
 To protect them from the cold ;
 Jingle, jingle, mid the storm,
 Fun and frolic keep them warm ;
 Jingle, jingle, down the hills,
 O'er the meadows, past the mills,
 Now 't is slow, and now 't is fast ;
 Winter will not always last.
 Jingle, jingle, clear the way !
 'T is the merry, merry sleigh.

G. W. PETTEE.

FRAGMENTS.

THE SOUL OF ADVENTURE.

Fierce warres, and faithfull loves shall moralize
 my song.

Fæerie Queene, Book i, Proem.

SPENSER.

Send danger from the east unto the west,
 So honor cross it from the north to south,
 And let them grapple : O ! the blood more stirs
 To rouse a lion than to start a hare !

By Heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap,
 To pluck bright honor from the pale-faced moon,
 Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
 Where fathom-line could never touch the ground,
 And pluck up drowned honor by the locks.

King Henry IV., Part I. Act i. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

ADVENTUROUS DARING.

On his bold visage middle age
 Had slightly pressed his signet sage,
 Yet had not quenched the open truth,
 And fiery vehemence of youth ;
 Forward and frolic glee was there,
 The will to do, the soul to dare,
 The sparkling glance, soon blown to fire
 Of hasty love or headlong ire.

The Lady of the Lake, Cant. i.

SCOTT.

Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
 Leap in with me into this angry flood,
 And swim to yonder point ? — Upon the word,
 Accounted as I was, I plunged in,
 And bade him follow.

Julius Caesar, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Through thick and thin, both over bank and bush,
In hope her to attain by hook or crook.

Fairie Queene, Book iii. Cant. i.

SPENSER.

The intent and not the deed
Is in our power ; and therefore who dares greatly Does greatly.

Barbarossa.

J. BROWN.

Out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower,
safety.

King Henry IV. Part I. Act ii. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

"You fool ! I tell you no one means you harm."
"So much the better," Juan said, "for them."

Don Juan.

BYRON.

HORSEMANSHIP.

I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly armed,
Rise from the ground like feathered Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropped down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.

King Henry IV., Part I. Act iv. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

"Stand, Bayard, stand !" The steed obeyed,
With arching neck and bended head,
And glancing eye, and quivering ear,
As if he loved his lord to hear.
No foot Fitz-James in stirrup staid,
No grasp upon the saddle laid,
But wreathed his left hand in the mane,
And lightly bounded from the plain,
Turned on the horse his armèd heel,
And stirred his courage with the steel.
Bounded the fiery steed in air,
The rider sate erect and fair,
Then, like a bolt from steel cross-bow
Forth launched, along the plain they go.

The Lady of the Lake, Cant. v.

SCOTT.

After many strains and heaves,
He got up to the saddle eaves,
From whence he vaulted into th' seat
With so much vigor, strength, and heat,
That he had almost tumbled over
With his own weight, but did recover,
By laying hold of tail and mane,
Which oft he used instead of rein.

Hudibras.

DR. S. BUTLER.

HUNTING.

Better to hunt in fields for health unbought,
Than fee the doctor for a nauseous draught.
The wise for cure on exercise depend ;
God never made his work for man to mend.

Cynon and Iphigenia.

DRYDEN.

Hunting is the noblest exercise,
Makes men laborious, active, wise,
Brings health, and doth the spirits delight,
It helps the hearing and the sight ;
It teacheth arts that never slip
The memory, good horsemanship,
Search, sharpness, courage and defence,
And chaseth all ill habits hence.

Musques.

BEN JONSON.

My hoarse-sounding horn
Invites thee to the chase, the sport of kings ;
Image of war without its guilt.

The Chase.

W. SOMERVILLE.

Contusion hazarding of neck or spine,
Which rural gentlemen call sport divine.

Needless Alarm.

COWPER.

My hawk is tired of perch and hood,
My idle greyhound loathes his food,
My horse is weary of his stall,
And I am sick of captive thrall.
I wish I were as I have been Hunting the hart in forests green,
With bended bow and bloodhound free,
For that 's the life is meet for me !

Lady of the Imprisoned Huntsman: The Lady of the Lake,
Cant. vi.

SCOTT.

The healthy huntsman, with a cheerful horn,
Summons the dogs and greets the dappled morn.

Rural Sports.

J. GAY.

Why, let the stricken deer go weep,
The hart ungalled play ;
For some must watch, while some must sleep ;
Thus runs the world away.

Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

SHOOTING.

See from the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings ;
Short is his joy ; he feels the fiery wound,
Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground.

Windsor Forest.

POPE.

But as some muskets so contrive it,
As oft to miss the mark they drive at,
And though well aimed at duck or plover,
Bear wide, and kick their owners over.

McFingal, Cant. i.

J. TRUMBULL.

SWIMMING.

The torrent roared ; and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews, throwing it aside,
And stemming it with hearts of controversy.

Julius Cæsar, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

I saw him beat the surges under him,
And ride upon their backs ; he trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted
The surge most swoln that met him.

The Tempest, Act ii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

ANGLING.

All 's fish they get
That cometh to net.

Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry.

T. TUSSER.

In genial spring, beneath the quivering shade,
Where cooling vapors breathe along the mead,
The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand ;
With looks unmoved, he hopes the scaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork, and bending reed.

Windsor Forest.

POPE.

Now is the time,
While yet the dark-brown water aids the guile,
To tempt the trout. The well-dissembled fly,
The rod fine tapering with elastic spring,
Snatched from the hoary steed the floating line,
And all thy slender wat'ry stores prepare.

The Seasons : Spring.

THOMSON.

His angle-rod made of a sturdy oak ;
His line a cable which in storms ne'er broke ;
His hook he baited with a dragon's tail,
And sat upon a rock, and bobbed for whale.

Upon a Giant's Angling.

W. KING.

SKATING.

All shod with steel,
We hissed along the polished ice, in games
Confederate, imitative of the chase
And woodland pleasures, — the resounding horn,
The pack loud-chiming, and the hunted hare.
So through the darkness and the cold we flew,
And not a voice was idle ; with the din
Smitten, the precipices rang aloud ;
The leafless trees and every icy crag
Tinkled like iron.

Influence of Natural Objects.

WORDSWORTH.

RURAL LIFE.

Rustic mirth goes round ;
The simple joke that takes the shepherd's heart,
Easily pleased ; the long loud laugh sincere ;
The kiss snatched hasty from the sidelong maid,
On purpose guardless, or pretending sleep ;
The leap, the slap, the haul ; and, shook to notes
Of native music, the respondent dance.
Thus jocund fleets with them the winter night.

The Seasons : Winter.

THOMSON.

God made the country, and man made the town ;
What wonder then, that health and virtue, gifts
That can alone make sweet the bitter draught
That life holds out to all, should most abound
And least be threatened in the fields and groves.

The Task, Book i. : The Sofa.

COWPER.

DESCRIPTIVE POEMS.

We shall walk no more through the sodden plain
With the fagot-bents o'erspread,

We shall stand no more by the setting main
While the dark wash strows o'erhead.

We shall part, no more in the braid & the rain
Where thy last farewell was said.

But perhaps I shall meet thee & know thee again
When the sea grows up her dead

Jeau Sullivan

DESCRIPTIVE POEMS.

A THING OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER.

FROM "ENDYMION," BOOK I.

A THING of beauty is a joy forever :
Its loveliness increases ; it will never Pass into nothingness ; but still will keep
A bower quiet for us, and a sleep
Full of sweet dreams, and health, and quiet breathing.

Therefore, on every morrow, are we wreathing
A flowery band to bind us to the earth,
Spite of despondence, of the inhuman dearth
Of noble natures, of the gloomy days,
Of all the unhealthy and o'er-darkened ways
Made for our searching : yes, in spite of all,
Some shape of beauty moves away the pall
From our dark spirits. Such the sun, the moon,
Trees old and young, sprouting a shady boon
For simple sheep ; and such are daffodils
With the green world they live in ; and clear rills
That for themselves a cooling covert make
'Gainst the hot season ; the mid-forest brake,
Rich with a sprinkling of fair musk-rose blooms :
And such too is the grandeur of the dooms
We have imagined for the mighty dead ;
All lovely tales that we have heard or read :
An endless fountain of immortal drink,
Pouring unto us from the heaven's brink.

JOHN KEATS.

MELROSE ABBEY.

FROM "THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL," CANTO II.

If thou wouldst view fair Melrose aright,
Go visit it by the pale moonlight ;
For the gay beams of lightsome day
Gild, but to flout, the ruins gray.
When the broken arches are black in night,
And each shafted oriel glimmers white ;
When the cold light's uncertain shower
Streams on the ruined central tower ;
When buttress and buttress, alternately,
Seem framed of ebon and ivory ;

When silver edges the imagery,
And the scrolls that teach thee to live and die ;
When distant Tweed is heard to rave,
And the owlet to hoot o'er the dead man's grave,
Then go, — but go alone the while, —
Then view St. David's ruined pile ;
And, home returning, soothly swear,
Was never scene so sad and fair !

The pillared arches were over their head,
And beneath their feet were the bones of the dead.

Spreading herbs and flowerets bright
Glistened with the dew of night ;
Nor herb nor floweret glistened there,
But was carved in the cloister-arches as fair.

The monk gazed long on the lovely moon,
Then into the night he looked forth ;
And red and bright the streamers light
Were dancing in the glowing north.
So had he seen, in fair Castile,
The youth in glittering squadrons start,
Sudden the flying jennet wheel,
And hurl the unexpected dart.

He knew, by the streamers that shot so bright,
That spirits were riding the northern light.

By a steel-clenched postern door,
They entered now the chancel tall ;
The darkened roof rose high aloof
On pillars lofty and light and small ;
The keystone, that locked each ribbed aisle,
Was a fleur-de-lys, or a quatre-feuille :
The corbells were carved grotesque and grim ;
And the pillars, with clustered shafts so trim,
With base and with capital flourished around,
Seemed bundles of lances which garlands had bound.

Full many a scutcheon and banner, riven,
Shook to the cold night-wind of heaven,
Around the screened altar's pale ;
And there the dying lamps did burn,
Before thy low and lonely urn,
O gallant Chief of Otterburne !
And thine, dark Knight of Liddesdale !

O fading honors of the dead !
O high ambition, lowly laid !

The moon on the east oriel shone
Through slender shafts of shapely stone,
By foliated tracery combined ;
Thou wouldst have thought some fairy's hand
'Twixt poplars straight the osier wand
In many a freakish knot had twined ;
Then framed a spell, when the work was done,
And changed the willow wreaths to stone.
The silver light, so pale and faint,
Showed many a prophet, and many a saint,
Whose image on the glass was dyed ;
Full in the midst, his Cross of Red
Triumphant Michael brandishèd,
And trampled the Apostate's pride.
The moonbeam kissed the holy pane,
And threw on the pavement a bloody stain.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

NORHAM CASTLE.

FROM "MARMION," CANTO I.

[The ruinous castle of Norham (anciently called Ubbanford) is situated on the southern bank of the Tweed, about six miles above Berwick, and where that river is still the boundary between England and Scotland. The extent of its ruins, as well as its historical importance, shows it to have been a place of magnificence as well as strength. Edward I. resided there when he was created umpire of the dispute concerning the Scottish succession. It was repeatedly taken and retaken during the wars between England and Scotland, and, indeed, scarce any happened in which it had not a principal share. Norham Castle is situated on a steep bank which overhangs the river. The ruins of the castle are at present considerable, as well as picturesque. They consist of a large shattered tower, with many vaults, and fragments of other edifices enclosed within an outward wall of great circuit.]

DAY set on Norham's castled steep,
And Tweed's fair river, broad and deep,
And Cheviot's mountains lone :
The battled towers, the donjon keep,
The loop-hole grates where captives weep,
The flanking walls that round it sweep,
In yellow lustre shone.
The warriors on the turrets high,
Moving athwart the evening sky,
Seemed forms of giant height ;
Their armor, as it caught the rays,
Flashed back again the western blaze
In lines of dazzling light.

St. George's banner, broad and gay,
Now faded, as the fading ray
Less bright, and less, was flung ;
The evening gale had scarce the power
To wave it on the donjon tower,
So heavily it hung.

The scouts had parted on their search,
The castle gates were barred ;
Above the gloomy portal arch,
Timing his footsteps to a march,
The warder kept his guard ;
Low humming, as he paced along,
Some ancient Border-gathering song.

A distant trampling sound he hears ;
He looks abroad, and soon appears,
O'er Horncliff hill, a plump of spears,
Beneath a pennon gay ;
A horseman, darting from the crowd,
Like lightning from a summer cloud,
Spurs on his mettled courser proud
Before the dark array.
Beneath the sable palisade,
That closed the castle barricade,
His bugle-horn he blew ;
The warder hastened from the wall,
And warned the captain in the hall,
For well the blast he knew ;
And joyfully that knight did call
To sewer, squire, and seneschal.

"Now broach ye a pipe of Malvoisie,
Bring pasties of the doe,
And quickly make the entrance free,
And bid my heralds ready be,
And every minstrel sound his glee,
And all our trumpets blow ;
And, from the platform, spare ye not
To fire a noble salvo-shot :
Lord Marmion waits below."
Then to the castle's lower ward
Sped forty yeomen tall,
The iron-studded gates unbarred,
Raised the portcullis' ponderous guard,
The lofty palisade unspared,
And let the drawbridge fall.

Along the bridge Lord Marmion rode,
Proudly his red-roan charger trode,
His helm hung at the saddle-bow ;
Well by his visage you might know
He was a stalworth knight, and keen,
And had in many a battle been.
The scar on his brown cheek revealed
A token true of Bosworth field ;
His eyebrow dark, and eye of fire,
Showed spirit proud, and prompt to ire ;
Yet lines of thought upon his cheek
Did deep design and counsel speak.
His forehead, by his casque worn bare,
His thick mustache, and curly hair,
Coal-black, and grizzled here and there,
But more through toil than age ;

THE CONVENT.

"Her hopes, her fears, her joys, were all Bounded within the cloister wall.

Ti
To
So

His square-turned joints, and strength of limb,
 Showed him no carpet-knight so trim,
 But in close fight a champion grim,
 In camps a leader sage.

Well was he armed from head to heel,
 In mail and plate of Milan steel ;
 But his strong helm, of mighty cost,
 Was all with burnished gold embossed ;
 Amid the plumage of the crest,
 A falcon hovered on her nest,
 With wings outspread, and forward breast ;
 E'en such a falcon, on his shield,
 Soared sable in an azure field :
 The golden legend bore aright,
 Who checks at me to death is right.
 Blue was the charger's brodered rein ;
 Blue ribbons decked his arching mane ;
 The knightly housing's ample fold
 Was velvet blue, and trapped with gold.

Behind him rode two gallant squires
 Of noble name and knightly sires ;
 They burned the gilded spurs to claim ;
 For well could each a war-horse tame,
 Could draw the bow, the sword could sway,
 And lightly bear the ring away ;
 Nor less with courteous precepts stored,
 Could dance in hall, and carve at board,
 And frame love-ditties passing rare,
 And sing them to a lady fair.

Four men-at-arms came at their backs,
 With halbert, bill, and battle-axe ;
 They bore Lord Marmion's lance so strong,
 And led his sumpter-mules along,
 And ambling palfrey, when at need
 Him listed ease his battle-steed.
 The last and trustiest of the four
 On high his forky pennon bore ;
 Like swallow's tail, in shape and hue,
 Fluttered the streamer glossy blue,
 Where, blazoned sable, as before,
 The towering falcon seemed to soar.
 Last, twenty yeomen, two and two,
 In hosen black, and jerkins blue,
 With falcons brodered on each breast,
 Attended on their lord's behest ;
 Each, chosen for an archer good,
 Knew hunting-craft by lake or wood ;
 Each one a six-foot bow could bend,
 And far a cloth-yard shaft could send ;
 Each held a boar-spear tough and strong,
 And at their belts their quivers rung.
 Their dusty palfreys and array
 Showed they had marched a weary way.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

ALNWICK CASTLE.

HOME of the Percy's high-born race,
 Home of their beautiful and brave,
 Alike their birth and burial place,
 Their cradle and their grave !
 Still sternly o'er the castle gate
 Their house's Lion stands in state,
 As in his proud departed hours ;
 And warriors frown in stone on high,
 And feudal banners "flout the sky"
 Above his princely towers.

A gentle hill its side inclines,
 Lovely in England's fadeless green,
 To meet the quiet stream which winds
 Through this romantic scene
 As silently and sweetly still
 As when, at evening, on that hill,
 While summer's wind blew soft and low,
 Seated by gallant Hotspur's side,
 His Katherine was a happy bride,
 A thousand years ago.

I wandered through the lofty halls
 Trod by the Percys of old fame,
 And traced upon the chapel walls
 Each high, heroic name,
 From him who once his standard set
 Where now, o'er mosque and minaret,
 Glitter the Sultan's crescent moons,
 To him who, when a younger son,
 Fought for King George at Lexington,
 A major of dragons.

That last half-stanza, — it has dashed
 From my warm lip the sparkling cup ;
 The light that o'er my eyebeam flashed,
 The power that bore my spirit up
 Above this bank-note world, is gone ;
 And Alnwick 's but a market town,
 And this, alas ! its market day,
 And beasts and borderers throng the way ;
 Oxen and bleating lambs in lots,
 Northumbrian boors and plaided Scots,
 Men in the coal and cattle line ;
 From Teviot's bard and hero land,
 From royal Berwick's beach of sand,
 From Wooller, Morpeth, Hexham, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

These are not the romantic times
 So beautiful in Spenser's rhymes,
 So dazzling to the dreaming boy ;
 Ours are the days of fact, not fable,
 Of knights, but not of the round table,
 Of Bailie Jarvie, not Rob Roy ;
 'T is what "Our President," Monroe,

Has called "the era of good feeling ;"
 The Highlander, the bitterest foe
 To modern laws, has felt their blow,
 Consented to be taxed, and vote,
 And put on pantaloons and coat,

And leave off cattle-stealing :
 Lord Stafford mines for coal and salt,
 The Duke of Norfolk deals in malt,
 The Douglas in red herrings ;
 And noble name and cultured land,
 Palace, and park, and vassal band,
 Are powerless to the notes of hand
 Of Rothschild or the Barings.

The age of bargaining, said Burke,
 Has come : to-day the turbaned Turk
 (Sleep, Richard of the lion heart !
 Sleep on, nor from your ceremonies start)
 Is England's friend and fast ally ;
 The Moslem tramples on the Greek,
 And on the Cross and altar-stone,
 And Christendom looks tamely on,
 And hears the Christian maiden shriek,
 And sees the Christian father die ;
 And not a sabre-blow is given
 For Greece and fame, for faith and heaven,
 By Europe's craven chivalry.

You'll ask if yet the Percy lives
 In the armed pomp of feudal state.
 The present representatives
 Of Hotspur and his "gentle Kate,"
 Are some half-dozen serving-men
 In the drab coat of William Penn ;
 A chambermaid, whose lip and eye,
 And cheek, and brown hair, bright and curling,
 Spoke nature's aristocracy ;
 And one, half groom, half seneschal,
 Who bowed me through court, bower, and hall,
 From donjon keep to turret wall,
 For ten-and-sixpence sterling.

FITZ-GREENE HALLECK.

SONNET.

COMPOSED UPON WESTMINSTER BRIDGE, LONDON, 1802.

EARTH has not anything to show more fair ;
 Dull would he be of soul who could pass by
 A sight so touching in its majesty :
 This city now doth, like a garment, wear
 The beauty of the morning ; silent, bare,
 Ships, towers, domes, theatres, and temples lie
 Open unto the fields, and to the sky,
 All bright and glittering in the smokeless air.
 Never did sun more beautifully steep
 In his first splendour valley, rock, or hill ;

Ne'er saw I, never felt, a calm so deep !
 The river glideth at his own sweet will :
 Dear God ! the very houses seem asleep ;
 And all that mighty heart is lying still !

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

NUREMBERG.

In the valley of the Pegnitz, where across broad meadow-lands
 Rise the blue Franconian mountains, Nuremberg, the ancient, stands.

Quaint old town of toil and traffic, quaint old town of art and song,
 Memories haunt thy pointed gables like the rooks
 that round them throng :

Memories of the Middle Ages, when the em-perors rough and bold
 Had their dwellings in thy castle, time-defying, centuries old ;

And thy brave and thrifty burghers boasted, in their uncouth rhyme,
 That their great, imperial city stretched its hand
 to every clime.

In the court-yard of the castle, bound with many an iron band,
 Stands the mighty linden planted by Queen
 Cunigunde's hand ;

On the square, the oriel window, where in old heroic days
 Sat the poet Melchior, singing Kaiser Maximilian's praise.

Everywhere I see around me rise the wondrous world of art ;
 Fountains wrought with richest sculpture standing in the common mart ;

And above cathedral doorways saints and bishops carved in stone,
 By a former age commissioned as apostles to our own.

In the church of sainted Sebald sleeps enshrined
 his holy dust,
 And in bronze the Twelve Apostles guard from age to age their trust :

In the church of sainted Lawrence stands a pix
 of sculpture rare,
 Like the foamy sheaf of fountains, rising through the painted air.

Here, when art was still religion, with a simple reverent heart,
Lived and labored Albrecht Dürer, the Evangelist of Art ;

Hence in silence and in sorrow, toiling still with busy hand,
Like an emigrant he wandered, seeking for the Better Land.

Emigravit is the inscription on the tombstone
where he lies,
Dead he is not — but departed — for the artist
never dies :

Fairer seems the ancient city, and the sunshine seems more fair
That he once has trod its pavement, that he once has breathed its air.

Through these streets so broad and stately, these obscure and dismal lanes,
Walked of yore the Mastersingers, chanting rude poetic strains ;

From remote and sunless suburbs came they to the friendly guild,
Building nests in Fame's great temple, as in spouts the swallows build.

As the weaver plied the shuttle, wove he too the mystic rhyme,
And the smith his iron measures hammered to the anvil's chime,

Thanking God, whose boundless wisdom makes the flowers of poesy bloom
In the forge's dust and cinders, in the tissues of the loom.

Here Hans Sachs, the cobbler-poet, laureate of the gentle craft,
Wisest of the Twelve Wise Masters, in huge folios sang and laughed.

But his house is now an alehouse, with a nicely
sanded floor,
And a garland in the window, and his face above
the door,

Painted by some humble artist, as in Adam
Puschman's song,
As the old man gray and dovelike, with his great beard white and long.

And at night the swart mechanic comes to drown
his cark and care,
Quaffing ale from pewter tankards, in the master's antique chair.

Vanished is the ancient splendor, and before my dreamy eye
Wave these mingling shapes and figures, like a faded tapestry.

Not thy Councils, not thy Kaisers, win for thee
the world's regard,
But thy painter, Albrecht Dürer, and Hans Sachs,
thy cobbler-bard.

Thus, O Nuremberg, a wanderer from a region far away,
As he paced thy streets and court-yards, sang in thought his careless lay ;

Gathering from the pavement's crevice, as a floweret of the soil,
The nobility of labor, — the long pedigree of toil.
HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

ITALY.

FROM "ITALY."

O ITALY, how beautiful thou art !
Yet I could weep, — for thou art lying, alas !
Low in the dust ; and they who come admire
thee

As we admire the beautiful in death.
Thine was a dangerous gift, the gift of beauty.
Would thou hadst less, or wert as once thou wast,
Inspiring awe in those who now enslave thee !
But why despair ? Twice hast thou lived already,
Twice shone among the nations of the world,
As the sun shines among the lesser lights
Of heaven ; and shalt again. The hour shall come,

When they who think to bind the ethereal spirit,
Who, like the eagle covering o'er his prey,
Watch with quick eye, and strike and strike again
If but a sinew vibrate, shall confess
Their wisdom folly.

VENICE.

FROM "ITALY."

THERE is a glorious City in the Sea.
The Sea is in the broad, the narrow streets,
Ebbing and flowing ; and the salt sea-weed
Clings to the marble of her palaces.
No track of men, no footsteps to and fro,
Lead to her gates. The path lies o'er the Sea,
Invisible ; and from the land we went,
As to a floating City, — steering in,
And gliding up her streets as in a dream,
So smoothly, silently, — by many a dome

Mosque-like, and many a stately portico,
 The statues ranged along an azure sky ;
 By many a pile in more than Eastern splendor,
 Of old the residence of merchant kings ;
 The fronts of some, though Time had shattered
 them,
 Still glowing with the richest hues of art,
 As though the wealth within them had run o'er.

A few in fear,
 Flying away from him whose boast it was
 That the grass grew not where his horse had trod,

Gave birth to Venice. Like the waterfowl,
 They built their nests among the ocean waves ;
 And where the sands were shifting, as the wind Blew from the north, the south ; where they that came

Had to make sure the ground they stood upon,
 Rose, like an exhalation, from the deep,
 A vast Metropolis, with glittering spires,
 With theatres, basilicas adorned ;
 A scene of light and glory, a dominion,
 That has endured the longest among men.

And whence the talisman by which she rose
 Towering ? 'T was found there in the barren sea.
 Want led to Enterprise ; and, far or near,
 Who met not the Venetian ? — now in Cairo ;
 Ere yet the Califa came, listening to hear
 Its bells approaching from the Red Sea coast ;
 Now on the Euxine, on the Sea of Azoph,
 In converse with the Persian, with the Russ,
 The Tartar ; on his lowly deck receiving
 Pearls from the gulf of Ormus, gems from Bagdad,
 Eyes brighter yet, that shed the light of love
 From Georgia, from Circassia. Wandering round,
 When in the rich bazaar he saw, displayed,
 Treasures from unknown climes, away he went,
 And, travelling slowly upward, drew erelong
 From the well-head supplying all below ;
 Making the Imperial City of the East
 Herself his tributary.

Thus did Venice rise,
 Thus flourish, till the unwelcome tidings came,
 That in the Tagus had arrived a fleet
 From India, from the region of the Sun,
 Fragrant with spices, — that a way was found,
 A channel opened, and the golden stream
 Turned to enrich another. Then she felt
 Her strength departing, and at last she fell,
 Fell in an instant, blotted out and razed ;
 She who had stood yet longer than the longest
 Of the Four Kingdoms, — who, as in an Ark,
 Had floated down amid a thousand wrecks,
 Uninjured, from the Old World to the New

ROME.

FROM "ITALY."

I AM in Rome ! Oft as the morning ray
 Visits these eyes, waking at once I cry, Whence this excess of joy ? What has befallen me ?

And from within a thrilling voice replies,
 Thou art in Rome ! A thousand busy thoughts
 Rush on my mind, a thousand images ;
 And I spring up as girt to run a race !

Thou art in Rome ! the City that so long
 Reigned absolute, the mistress of the world ;
 The mighty vision that the prophets saw,
 And trembled ; that from nothing, from the least,

The lowliest village (what but here and there
 A reed-roofed cabin by a river-side ?)
 Grew into everything ; and, year by year,
 Patiently, fearlessly working her way
 O'er brook and field, o'er continent and sea,
 Not like the merchant with his merchandise,
 Or traveller with staff and scrip exploring,
 But hand to hand and foot to foot through hosts,
 Through nations numberless in battle array,
 Each behind each, each, when the other fell,
 Up and in arms, at length subdued them all.

COLISEUM BY MOONLIGHT.

FROM "MANFRED," ACT III. SC. 4.

THE stars are forth, the moon above the tops
 Of the snow-shining mountains. — Beautiful !
 I linger yet with Nature, for the night
 Hath been to me a more familiar face
 Than that of man ; and in her starry shade
 Of dim and solitary loveliness
 I learned the language of another world.
 I do remember me, that in my youth,
 When I was wandering, — upon such a night
 I stood within the Coliseum's wall,
 Midst the chief relics of almighty Rome.
 The trees which grew along the broken arches
 Waved dark in the blue midnight, and the stars
 Shone through the rents of ruin ; from afar
 The watch-dog bayed beyond the Tiber ; and More near, from out the Cæsars' palace came
 The owl's long cry, and, interruptedly,
 Of distant sentinels the fitful song
 Begun and died upon the gentle wind.
 Some cypresses beyond the time-worn breach Appeared to skirt the horizon, yet they stood
 Within a bowshot, — where the Cæsars dwelt,
 And dwell the tuneless birds of night, amidst

A grove which springs through levelled battle-ments,
 And twines its roots with the imperial hearths.
 Ivy usurps the laurel's place of growth ; —
 But the gladiators' bloody Circus stands,
 A noble wreck in ruinous perfection,
 While Cæsar's chambers and the Augustan halls
 Grovel on earth in indistinct decay. —
 And thou didst shine, thou rolling moon, upon
 All this, and cast a wide and tender light,
 Which softened down the hoar austerity
 Of rugged desolation, and filled up,
 As 't were anew, the gaps of centuries,
 Leaving that beautiful which still was so,
 And making that which was not, till the place
 Became religion, and the heart ran o'er
 With silent worship of the great of old ! —
 The dead, but sceptred sovereigns, who still rule
 Our spirits from their urns.

LORD BYRON.

THE COLISEUM.

FROM "CHILDE HAROLD," CANTO IV.

ARCHES on arches ! as it were that Rome,
 Collecting the chief trophies of her line,
 Would build up all her triumphs in one dome,
 Her Coliseum stands ; the moonbeams shine
 As 't were its natural torches, for divine Should be the light which streams here, to illumine

This long-explored, but still exhanstless, mine
 Of contemplation ; and the azure gloom
 Of an Italian night, where the deep skies assume

Hues which have words, and speak to ye of heaven,
 Floats o'er this vast and wondrous monument,
 And shadows forth its glory. There is given
 Unto the things of earth, which Time hath bent,
 A spirit's feeling, and where he hath leant
 His hand, but broke his scythe, there is a power
 And magic in the ruined battlement,
 For which the palace of the present hour
 Must yield its pomp, and wait till ages are its dower.

And here the buzz of eager nations ran,
 In murmured pity, or loud-roared applause,
 As man was slaughtered by his fellow-man.
 And wherefore slaughtered ? wherefore, but because

Such were the bloody Circus' genial laws,
 And the imperial pleasure. — Wherefore not ?
 What matters where we fall to fill the maws
 Of worms, — on battle-plains or listed spot ?
 Both are but theatres where the chief actors rot.

I see before me the Gladiator lie ;
 He leans upon his hand, — his manly brow
 Consents to death, but conquers agony,
 And his drooped head sinks gradually low, —
 And through his side the last drops, ebbing slow
 From the red gash, fall heavy, one by one,
 Like the first of a thunder-shower ; and now
 The arena swims around him, — he is gone,
 Ere ceased the inhuman shout which hailed the wretch who won.

He heard it, but he heeded not, — his eyes
 Were with his heart, and that was far away.
 He recked not of the life he lost nor prize,
 But where his rude hut by the Danube lay,
 There were his young barbarians all at play,
 There was their Dacian mother, — he, their sire,
 Butchered to make a Roman holiday ! —
 All this rushed with his blood. — Shall he expire,
 And unavenged ? Arise, ye Goths, and glut your ire !

But here, where Murder breathed her bloody steam,
 And here, where buzzing nations choked the ways,
 And roared or murmured like a mountain stream
 Dashing or winding as its torrent strays ;
 Here, where the Roman millions' blame or praise
 Was death or life, the playthings of a crowd,
 My voice sounds much, — and fall the stars'
 faint rays
 On the arena void, seats crushed, walls bowed,
 And galleries, where my steps seem echoes strangely loud.

A ruin, — yet what ruin ! from its mass
 Walls, palaces, half-cities, have been reared ;
 Yet oft the enormous skeleton ye pass,
 And marvel where the spoil could have appeared.
 Hath it indeed been plundered, or but cleared ?
 Alas ! developed, opens the decay,
 When the colossal fabric's form is neared ;
 It will not bear the brightness of the day,
 Which streams too much on all years, man, have refit away.

But when the rising moon begins to climb
 Its topmost arch, and gently pauses there ;
 When the stars twinkle through the loops of
 time,
 And the low night-breeze waves along the air
 The garland-forest, which the gray walls wear,
 Like laurels on the bald first Cæsar's head ;
 When the light shines serene, but doth not glare, —
 Then in this magic circle raise the dead ;
 Heroes have trod this spot, — 't is on their dust
 ye tread.

“While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand;
When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall;
And when Rome falls — the World.” From our own land

Thus spake the pilgrims o'er this mighty wall
In Saxon times, which we are wont to call Ancient; and these three mortal things are still
On their foundations, and unaltered all;
Rome and her Ruin past Redemption's skill,
The World, the same wide den — of thieves, or what ye will.

LORD BYRON.

THE PANTHEON.

FROM “CHILDE HAROLD,” CANTO IV.

SIMPLE, erect, severe, austere, sublime, —
Shrine of all saints and temple of all gods,
From Jove to Jesus, — spared and blest by time;
Looking tranquillity, while falls or nods
Arch, empire, each thing round thee, and man plods
His way through thorns to ashes, — glorious dome!
Shalt thou not last? Time's scythe and tyrants' rods
Shiver upon thee, — sanctuary and home
Of art and piety, — Pantheon! — pride of Rome!

Relic of nobler days and noblest arts!
Despoiled yet perfect, with thy circle spreads
A holiness appealing to all hearts.
To art a model; and to him who treads
Rome for the sake of ages, Glory sheds
Her light through thy sole aperture; to those
Who worship, here are altars for their beads;
And they who feel for genius may repose
Their eyes on honored forms, whose busts around them close.

LORD BYRON.

A DAY IN THE PAMFILI DORIA,

NEAR ROME.

THOUGH the hills are cold and snowy,
And the wind drives chill to-day,
My heart goes back to a spring-time,
Far, far in the past away.

And I see a quaint old city,
Weary and worn and brown,
Where the spring and the birds are so early,
And the sun in such light goes down.

I remember that old-time villa
Where our afternoons went by,
Where the suns of March flushed warmly,
And spring was in earth and sky.

Out of the mouldering city, —
Mouldering, old, and gray, —
We sped, with a lightsome heart-thrill,
For a sunny, gladsome day, —

For a revel of fresh spring verdure,
For a race mid springing flowers,
For a vision of plashing fountains,
Of birds and blossoming bowers.

There were violet banks in the shadows,
Violets white and blue;
And a world of bright anemones,
That over the terrace grew, —

Blue and orange and purple,
Rosy and yellow and white,
Rising in rainbow bubbles,
Streaking the lawns with light.

And down from the old stone-pine trees,
Those far-off islands of air,
The birds are flinging the tidings
Of a joyful revel up there.

And now for the grand old fountains,
Tossing their silvery spray;
Those fountains, so quaint and so many,
That are leaping and singing all day;

Those fountains of strange weird sculpture,
With lichens and moss o'er-grown, —
Are they marble greenening in moss-wreaths,
Or moss-wreaths whitening to stone?

Down many a wild, dim pathway
We ramble from morning till noon;
We linger, unheeding the hours,
Till evening comes all too soon.

And from out the ilex alleys,
Where lengthening shadows play,
We look on the dreamy Campagna,
All glowing with setting day, —

All melting in bands of purple,
In swathings and foldings of gold,
In ribbons of azure and lilac,
Like a princely banner unrolled.

And the smoke of each distant cottage,
And the flash of each villa white,
Shines out with an opal glimmer,
Like gems in a casket of light.

And the dome of old St. Peter's
With a strange translucence glows,
Like a mighty bubble of amethyst
Floating in waves of rose.

In a trance of dreamy vagueness,
We, gazing and yearning, behold
That city beheld by the prophet,
Whose walls were transparent gold.

And, dropping all solemn and slowly,
To hallow the softening spell,
There falls on the dying twilight
The Ave Maria bell.

With a mournful, motherly softness,
With a weird and weary care,
That strange and ancient city
Seems calling the nations to prayer.

And the words that of old the angel
To the mother of Jesus brought
Rise like a new evangel,
To hallow the trance of our thought.

With the smoke of the evening incense
Our thoughts are ascending then
To Mary, the mother of Jesus,
To Jesus, the Master of men.

O city of prophets and martyrs !
O shrines of the sainted dead !
When, when shall the living day-spring
Once more on your towers be spread ?

When He who is meek and lowly
Shall rule in those lordly halls,
And shall stand and feed as a shepherd
The flock which his mercy calls, —

O, then to those noble churches,
To picture and statue and gem,
To the pageant of solemn worship,
Shall the meaning come back again.

And this strange and ancient city,
In that reign of his truth and love,
Shall be what it seems in the twilight,
The type of that City above.

A VIEW ACROSS THE ROMAN CAMPAGNA.

1861.

OVER the dumb campagna-sea,
Out in the offing through mist and rain,
St. Peter's Church heaves silently
Like a mighty ship in pain,
Facing the tempest with struggle and strain.

Motionless waifs of ruined towers,
Soundless breakers of desolate land !

The sullen surf of the mist devours
That mountain-range upon either hand,
Eaten away from its outline grand.

And over the dumb campagna-sea
Where the ship of the Church heaves on to wreck,
Alone and silent as God must be
The Christ walks ! — Ay, but Peter's neck
Is stiff to turn on the foundering deck.

Peter, Peter, if such be thy name,
Now leave the ship for another to steer,
And proving thy faith evermore the same
Come forth, tread out through the dark and drear,
Since He who walks on the sea is here !

Peter, Peter ! — he does not speak, —
He is not as rash as in old Galilee.
Safer a ship, though it toss and leak,
Than a reeling foot on a rolling sea !
— And he's got to be round in the girth, thinks he.

Peter, Peter ! — he does not stir, —
His nets are heavy with silver fish :
He reckons his gains, and is keen to infer,
“The broil on the shore, if the Lord should wish, —
But the sturgeon goes to the Cæsar's dish.”

Peter, Peter, thou fisher of men,
Fisher of fish wouldst thou live instead, —
Haggling for pence with the other Ten,
Cheating the market at so much a head,
Gripping the bag of the traitor dead ?

At the triple crow of the Gallic cock Thou weep'st not, thou, though thine eyes be dazed :

What bird comes next in the tempest shock ?
Vultures ! See, — as when Romulus gazed,
To inaugurate Rome for a world amazed !

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

NAPLES.

FROM “ITALY.”

THIS region, surely, is not of the earth.
Was it not dropt from heaven ? Not a grove,
Citron or pine or cedar, not a grot
Sea-worn and mantled with the gadding vine,
But breathes enchantment. Not a cliff but flings
On the clear wave some image of delight,
Some cabin-roof glowing with crimson flowers,
Some ruined temple or fallen monument,

To muse on as the bark is gliding by,
 And be it mine to muse there, mine to glide,
 From daybreak, when the mountain pales his fire
 Yet more and more, and from the mountain-top,
 Till then invisible, a smoke ascends,
 Solemn and slow, as erst from Ararat,
 When he, the Patriarch, who escaped the Flood,
 Was with his household sacrificing there, —
 From daybreak to that hour, the last and best,
 When, one by one, the fishing-boats come forth,
 Each with its glimmering lantern at the prow,
 And, when the nets are thrown, the evening hymn
 Steals o'er the trembling waters.

Everywhere

Fable and Truth have shed, in rivalry,
 Each her peculiar influence. Fable came,
 And laughed and sung, arraying Truth in flowers,
 Like a young child her grandam. Fable came ;
 Earth, sea, and sky reflecting, as she flew,
 A thousand, thousand colors not their own :
 And at her bidding, lo ! a dark descent
 To Tartarus, and those thrice happy fields,
 Those fields with ether pure and purple light
 Ever invested, scenes by him described
 Who here was wont to wander and record
 What they revealed, and on the western shore
 Sleeps in a silent grove, o'erlooking thee,
 Beloved Parthenope.

Yet here, methinks,
 Truth wants no ornament, in her own shape
 Filling the mind by turns with awe and love,
 By turns inclining to wild ecstasy
 And soberest meditation.

SAMUEL ROGERS.

DRIFTING.

My soul to-day
 Is far away,
 Sailing the Vesuvian Bay ;
 My winged boat,
 A bird aloft,
 Swims round the purple peaks remote : —

Round purple peaks
 It sails, and seeks
 Blue inlets and their crystal creeks,
 Where high rocks throw,
 Through deeps below,
 A duplicated golden glow.

Far, vague, and dim
 The mountains swim ;
 While, on Vesuvius' misty brim,
 With outstretched hands,
 The gray smoke stands
 O'erlooking the volcanic lands.

Here Ischia smiles
 O'er liquid miles ;
 And yonder, bluest of the isles,
 Calm Capri waits,
 Her sapphire gates
 Beguiling to her bright estates.

I heed not, if
 My rippling skiff
 Float swift or slow from cliff to cliff ; —
 With dreamful eyes
 My spirit lies
 Under the walls of Paradise.

Under the walls
 Where swells and falls
 The Bay's deep breast at intervals,
 At peace I lie,
 Blown softly by,
 A cloud upon this liquid sky.

The day, so mild,
 Is Heaven's own child,
 With Earth and Ocean reconciled ; —
 The airs I feel
 Around me steal
 Are murmuring to the murmuring keel.

Over the rail
 My hand I trail
 Within the shadow of the sail ;
 A joy intense,
 The cooling sense
 Glides down my drowsy indolence.

With dreamful eyes
 My spirit lies
 Where Summer sings and never dies, —
 O'er veiled with vines,
 She glows and shines
 Among her future oil and wines.

Her children, hid
 The cliffs amid,
 Are gambolling with the gambolling kid ;
 Or down the walls,
 With tipsy calls,
 Laugh on the rocks like waterfalls.

The fisher's child,
 With tresses wild,
 Unto the smooth, bright sand beguiled,
 With glowing lips
 Sings as she skips,
 Or gazes at the far-off ships.

You deep bark goes
 Where Traffic blows,
 From lands of sun to lands of snows ; —

This happier one,
Its course is run
From lands of snow to lands of sun.

O happy ship,
To rise and dip,
With the blue crystal at your lip !
O happy crew,
My heart with you
Sails, and sails, and sings anew !

No more, no more
The worldly shore
Upbraids me with its loud uproar !
With dreamful eyes
My spirit lies
Under the walls of Paradise !

In lofty lines,
Mid palms and pines,
And olives, aloes, elms, and vines,
Sorrento swings
On sunset wings,
Where Tasso's spirit soars and sings.*

THOMAS BUCHANAN READ.

WEEHAWKEN AND THE NEW YORK BAY.

FROM "FANNY."

WEEHAWKEN ! In thy mountain scenery yet,
All we adore of Nature in her wild
And frolic hour of infancy is met ;
And never has a summer's morning smiled
Upon a lovelier scene than the full eye
Of the enthusiast revels on, — when high

Amid thy forest solitudes he climbs
O'er crags that proudly tower above the deep,
And knows that sense of danger which sublimates
The breathless moment, — when his daring step
Is on the verge of the cliff, and he can hear
The low dash of the wave with startled ear,

Like the death-music of his coming doom,
And clings to the green turf with desperate
force,
As the heart clings to life ; and when resume
The currents in his veins their wonted course,
There lingers a deep feeling, — like the moan
Of wearied ocean when the storm is gone.

* The last stanza was written just before the author's death, and published shortly after in the Cincinnati Gazette.

In such an hour he turns, and on his view
Ocean and earth and heaven burst before him ;
Clouds slumbering at his feet, and the clear blue
Of summer's sky in beauty bending o'er him, —
The city bright below ; and far away,
Sparkling in golden light, his own romantic bay.

Tall spire, and glittering roof, and battlement,
And banners floating in the sunny air ;
And white sails o'er the calm blue waters bent,
Green isle, and circling shore, are blended
there

In wild reality. When life is old,
And many a scene forgot, the heart will hold

Its memory of this ; nor lives there one Whose infant breath was drawn, or boyhood's days
Of happiness were passed beneath that sun,
That in his manhood's prime can calmly gaze
Upon that bay, or on that mountain stand,
Nor feel the prouder of his native land.

FITZ-GREENE HALLECK.

CALM AND STORM ON LAKE LEMAN.

FROM "CHILDE HAROLD," CANTO III.

CLEAR, placid Lemana ! thy contrasted lake,
With the wild world I dwell in, is a thing
Which warns me, with its stillness, to forsake
Earth's troubled waters for a purer spring.
This quiet sail is as a noiseless winger
To waft me from distraction ; once I loved
Torn ocean's roar, but thy soft murmuring
Sounds sweet as if a sister's voice reproved,
That I with stern delights should e'er have been so moved.

It is the hush of night, and all between Thy margin and the mountains, dusk, yet clear,
Mellowed and mingling, yet distinctly seen,
Save darkened Jura, whose cap heights appear Precipitously steep ; and drawing near,
There breathes a living fragrance from the shore,
Of flowers yet fresh with childhood ; on the ear
Drops the light drip of the suspended oar,
Or chirps the grasshopper one good-night carol
more :

He is an evening reveller, who makes
His life an infancy, and sings his fill ;
At intervals, some bird from out the brakes
Starts into voice a moment, then is still.

There seems a floating whisper on the hill,
But that is fancy ; for the starlight dews
All silently their tears of love instill,
Weeping themselves away, till they infuse
Deep into Nature's breast the spirit of her hues.

The sky is changed !—and such a change !
O night,
And storm, and darkness, ye are wondrous strong,

Yet lovely in your strength, as is the light
Of a dark eye in woman ! Far along,
From peak to peak, the rattling crags among Leaps the live thunder ! Not from one lone cloud,

But every mountain now hath found a tongue,
And Jura answers, through her misty shroud,
Back to the joyous Alps, who call to her aloud !

And this is in the night :—most glorious
night !

Thou wert not sent for slumber ! let me be
A sharer in thy fierce and far delight, —
A portion of the tempest and of thee !
How the lit lake shines, a phosphoric sea,
And the big rain comes dancing to the earth !
And now again 't is black, —and now, the glee
Of the loud hills shakes with its mountain-mirth,

As if they did rejoice o'er a young earthquake's birth.

LORD BYRON.

THE HURRICANE.

LORD of the winds ! I feel thee nigh,
I know thy breath in the burning sky !
And I wait, with a thrill in every vein,
For the coming of the hurricane !

And lo ! on the wing of the heavy gales,
Through the boundless arch of heaven he sails.
Silent and slow, and terribly strong,
The mighty shadow is borne along,
Like the dark eternity to come ;
While the world below, dismayed and dumb,
Through the calm of the thick hot atmosphere
Looks up at its gloomy folds with fear.

They darken fast ; and the golden blaze
Of the sun is quenched in the lurid haze,
And he sends through the shade a funeral ray —
A glare that is neither night nor day,
A beam that touches, with hues of death,
The clouds above and the earth beneath.
To its covert glides the silent bird,
While the hurricane's distant voice is heard
Uplifted among the mountains round,
And the forests hear and answer the sound.

He is come ! he is come ! do ye not behold
His ample robes on the wind unrolled ?
Giant of air ! we bid thee hail ! —
How his gray skirts toss in the whirling gale ;
How his huge and writhing arms are bent
To clasp the zone of the firmament,
And fold at length, in their dark embrace,
From mountain to mountain the visible space !

Darker, — still darker ! the whirlwinds bear
The dust of the plains to the middle air ;
And hark to the erashing, long and loud,
Of the chariot of God in the thunder-cloud !
You may trace its path by the flashes that start
From the rapid wheels where'er they dart,
As the fire-bolts leap to the world below,
And flood the skies with a lurid glow.

What roar is that ? — 't is the rain that breaks
In torrents away from the airy lakes,
Heavily poured on the shuddering ground,
And shedding a nameless horror round.
Ah ! well-known woods, and mountains, and skies,
With the very clouds ! — ye are lost to my eyes.
I seek ye vainly, and see in your place
The shadowy tempest that sweeps through space,
A whirling ocean that fills the wall
Of the crystal heaven, and buries all.
And I, cut off from the world, remain
Alone with the terrible hurricane.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

THE DESERTED VILLAGE.

SWEET Auburn ! loveliest village of the plain,
Where health and plenty cheered the laboring swain,

Where smiling spring its earliest visit paid,
And parting summer's lingering blooms delayed.
Dear lovely bowers of innocence and ease,
Seats of my youth, when every sport could please,
How often have I loitered o'er thy green,
Where humble happiness endeared each scene !
How often have I paused on every charm,
The sheltered cot, the cultivated farm,
The never-failing brook, the busy mill,
The decent church that topped the neighboring hill,

The hawthorn-bush, with seats beneath the shade,

For talking age and whispering lovers made !
How often have I blessed the coming day,
When toil remitting lent its turn to play,
And all the village train, from labor free,
Led up their sports beneath the spreading tree,
While many a pastime circled in the shade,
The young contending as the old surveyed ;

And many a gambol frolicked o'er the ground,
And sleights of art and feats of strength went round ;

And still, as each repeated pleasure tired,
Succeeding sports the mirthful band inspired ;
The dancing pair that simply sought renown,
By holding out, to tire each other down ;
The swain mistrustless of his smutted face,
While secret laughter tittered round the place ;
The bashful virgin's sidelong looks of love,
The matron's glance that would those looks reprove, —

These were thy charms, sweet village ! sports like these,

With sweet succession, taught e'en toil to please ;
These round thy bowers their cheerful influence
shed,

These were thy charms, — but all these charms are fled !

Sweet smiling village, loveliest of the lawn,
Thy sports are fled, and all thy charms withdrawn ;

Amidst thy bowers the tyrant's hand is seen,
And desolation saddens all thy green ;
One only master grasps the whole domain,
And half a tillage stints thy smiling plain ;
No more thy glassy brook reflects the day,
But, choked with sedges, works its weedy way ;
Along thy glades, a solitary guest,
The hollow-sounding bittern guards its nest ;
Amidst thy desert walks the lapwing flies,
And tires their echoes with unvaried cries.
Sunk are thy bowers in shapeless ruin all,
And the long grass o'ertops the mouldering wall,
And, trembling, shrinking from the spoiler's hand,
Far, far away thy children leave the land.

All fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay ;
Princes and lords may flourish, or may fade ;
A breath can make them, as a breath has made ;
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroyed, can never be supplied.

A time there was, ere England's griefs began,
When every rood of ground maintained its man ;
For him light Labor spread her wholesome store,
Just gave what life required, but gave no more ;
His best companions, innocence and health ;
And his best riches, ignorance of wealth.

But times are altered ; trade's unfeeling train
Usurp the land and dispossess the swain ;
Along the lawn, where scattered hamlets rose,
Unwieldy wealth and cumbrous pomp repose,
And every want to luxury allied,
And every pang that folly pays to pride.

Those gentle hours that plenty bade to bloom,
Those calm desires that asked but little room,
Those healthful sports that graced the peaceful scene,

Lived in each look, and brightened all the green, —

These, far departing, seek a kinder shore,
And rural mirth and manners are no more.

Sweet Auburn ! parent of the blissful hour,
Thy glades forlorn confess the tyrant's power.
Here, as I take my solitary rounds,
Amidst thy tangling walks and ruined grounds,
And, many a year elapsed, return to view
Where once the cottage stood, the hawthorn grew,
Remembrance wakes, with all her busy train,
Swells at my breast, and turns the past to pain.

In all my wanderings round this world of care,
In all my griefs — and God has given my share —
I still had hopes my latest hours to crown,
Amidst these humble bowers to lay me down ;
To husband out life's taper at the close,
And keep the flame from wasting by repose ;
I still had hopes — for pride attends us still —
Amidst the swains to show my book-learned skill,
Around my fire an evening group to draw,
And tell of all I felt and all I saw ;
And, as a hare, whom hounds and horns pursue,
Pants to the place from whence at first she flew,
I still had hopes, my long vexations past,
Here to return, — and die at home at last.

O blest retirement ! friend to life's decline,
Retreats from care, that never must be mine,
How blest is he who crowns in shades like these
A youth of labor with an age of ease ;
Who quits a world where strong temptations try,
And, since 't is hard to combat, learns to fly !
For him no wretches, born to work and weep,
Explore the mine, or tempt the dangerous deep ;
No surly porter stands in guilty state,
To spurn imploring famine from the gate :
But on he moves to meet his latter end,
Angels around befriending virtue's friend ;
Sinks to the grave with unperceived decay,
While resignation gently slopes the way ;
And, all his prospects brightening to the last,
His heaven commences ere the world be past.

Sweet was the sound, when oft, at evening's close,

Up yonder hill the village murmur rose ;
There, as I passed with careless steps and slow,
The mingling notes came softened from below ;
The swain responsive as the milkmaid sung,
The sober herd that lowed to meet their young ;

The noisy geese that gabbled o'er the pool,
The playful children just let loose from school ;
The watch-dog's voice that bayed the whispering
wind,

And the loud laugh that spoke the vacant mind, —
These all in sweet confusion sought the shade,
And filled each pause the nightingale had made.
But now the sounds of population fail,
No cheerful murmurs fluctuate in the gale,
No busy steps the grass-grown foot-way tread,
But all the bloomy flush of life is fled.
All but you widowed, solitary thing,
That feebly bends beside the plashy spring ;
She, wretched matron, forced in age, for bread,
To strip the brook with mantling cresses spread,
To pick her wintry fagot from the thorn,
To seek her nightly shed, and weep till morn ;
She only left of all the harmless train,
The sad historian of the pensive plain.

Near yonder copse, where once the garden
smiled,

And still where many a garden-flower grows wild ;
There, where a few torn shrubs the place disclose,
The village preacher's modest mansion rose.
A man he was to all the country dear,
And passing rich with forty pounds a year ;
Remote from towns he ran his godly race,
Nor e'er had changed, nor wished to change, his place ;

Unskilful he to fawn, or seek for power,
By doctrines fashioned to the varying hour ;
Far other aims his heart had learned to prize,
More bent to raise the wretched than to rise.
His house was known to all the vagrant train.
He hid their wanderings, but relieved their pain ;
The long-remembered beggar was his guest,
Whose beard descending swept his aged breast.
The ruined spendthrift, now no longer proud,
Claimed kindred there, and had his claims allowed ;

The broken soldier, kindly bade to stay,
Sate by his fire, and talked the night away ;
Wept o'er his wounds, or tales of sorrow done,
Shouldered his crutch, and showed how fields were won.

Pleased with his guests, the good man learned to glow,

And quite forgot their vices in their woe ;
Careless their merits or their faults to scan,
His pity gave ere charity began.

Thus to relieve the wretched was his pride,
And e'en his failings leaned to Virtue's side ;
But in his duty prompt at every call,
He watched and wept, he prayed and felt for all ;
And, as a bird each fond endearment tries,
To tempt its new-fledged offspring to the skies,

He tried each art, reproved each dull delay,
Allured to brighter worlds, and led the way.

Beside the bed where parting life was laid,
And sorrow, guilt, and pain by turns dismayed,
The reverend champion stood. At his control,
Despair and anguish fled the struggling soul ;
Comfort came down the trembling wretch to raise,
And his last faltering accents whispered praise.

At church, with meek and unaffected grace,
His looks adorned the venerable place ;
Truth from his lips prevailed with double sway,
And fools, who came to scoff, remained to pray.
The service past, around the pious man,
With steady zeal, each honest rustic ran ;
E'en children followed with endearing wile,
And plucked his gown, to share the good man's smile.

His ready smile a parent's warmth expressed,
Their welfare pleased him, and their cares distressed ;

To them his heart, his love, his griefs were given,
But all his serious thoughts had rest in heaven.

As some tall cliff, that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,

Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

Beside you straggling fence that skirts the way,
With blossomed furze unprofitably gay,
There, in his noisy mansion, skilled to rule,
The village master taught his little school ;
A man severe he was, and stern to view,
I knew him well, and every truant knew ;
Well had the boding tremblers learned to trace
The day's disasters in his morning face ;
Full well they laughed with counterfeited glee
At all his jokes, for many a joke had he ;
Full well the busy whisper circling round
Conveyed the dismal tidings when he frowned ;
Yet he was kind, or, if severe in aught,
The love he bore to learning was in fault.
The village all declared how much he knew,
'T was certain he could write, and cipher too ;
Lands he could measure, times and tides passage,
And e'en the story ran that he could gauge ;
In arguing too, the parson owned his skill,
For, e'en though vanquished, he could argue still,
While words of learned length and thundering
sound

Amazed the gazing rustics ranged around ;
And still they gazed, and still the wonder grew
That one small head could carry all he knew.

But past is all his fame. The very spot
Where many a time he triumphed is forgot. —

Near yonder thorn, that lifts its head on high,
Where once the sign-post caught the passing eye,
Low lies that house where nut-brown draughts inspired,

Where graybeard mirth and smiling toil retired,
Where village statesmen talked with looks profound,

And news much older than their ale went round.
Imagination fondly stoops to trace
The parlor splendors of that festive place, —
The whitewashed wall; the nicely sanded floor;
The varnished clock that ticked behind the door;
The chest, contrived a double debt to pay,
A bed by night, a chest of drawers by day;
The pictures placed for ornament and use;
The twelve good rules; the royal game of goose;
The hearth, except when winter chilled the day,
With aspen boughs and flowers and fennel gay;
While broken teacups, wisely kept for show,
Ranged o'er the chimney, glistened in a row.

Vain, transitory splendor! could not all
Reprive the tottering mansion from its fall?
Obscure it sinks, nor shall it more impart
An hour's importance to the poor man's heart;
Thither no more the peasant shall repair
To sweet oblivion of his daily care;
No more the farmer's news, the barber's tale,
No more the woodman's ballad shall prevail;
No more the smith his dusky brow shall clear,
Relax his ponderous strength, and lean to hear;
The host himself no longer shall be found
Careful to see the mantling bliss go round;
Nor the coy maid, half willing to be prest,
Shall kiss the cup to pass it to the rest.

Yes! let the rich deride, the proud disdain,
These simple blessings of the lowly train;
To me now dear, congenial to my heart,
One native charm, than all the gloss of art.
Spontaneous joys, where nature has its play,
The soul adopts, and owns their first-born sway;
Lightly they frolic o'er the vacant mind,
Unenvied, unmolested, unconfined:
But the long pomp, the midnight masquerade,
With all the freaks of wanton wealth arrayed, —
In these, ere triflers half their wish obtain,
The toiling pleasure sickens into pain;
And, e'en while fashion's brightest arts decoy,
The heart, distrusting, asks if this be joy.

Ye friends to truth, ye statesmen, who survey
The rich man's joys increase, the poor's decay,
'T is yours to judge, how wide the limits stand
Between a splendid and a happy land.
Proud swells the tide with loads of freighted ore,
And shouting Folly hails them from her shore;

Hoards e'en beyond the miser's wish abound,
And rich men flock from all the world around.
Yet count our gains. This wealth is but a name
That leaves our useful products still the same.
Not so the loss. The man of wealth and pride
Takes up a space that many poor supplied;
Space for his lake, his park's extended bounds,
Space for his horses, equipage, and hounds:
The robe that wraps his limbs in silken sloth
Has robbed the neighboring fields of half their growth;

His seat, where solitary sports are seen,
Indignant spurns the cottage from the green;
Around the world each needful product flies,
For all the luxuries the world supplies:
While thus the land, adorned for pleasure all,
In barren splendor feebly waits the fall.

As some fair female unadorned and plain,
Secure to please while youth confirms her reign,
Slights every borrowed charm that dress supplies,
Nor shares with art the triumph of her eyes,
But when those charms are past, — for charms are frail, —

When time advances, and when lovers fail,
She then shines forth, solicitous to bless,
In all the glaring impotence of dress;
Thus fares the land by luxury betrayed,
In nature's simplest charms at first arrayed,
But verging to decline, its splendors rise,
Its vistas strike, its palaces surprise;
While, scourged by famine from the smiling land,
The mournful peasant leads his humble band;
And while he sinks, without one arm to save,
The country blooms, — a garden and a grave.

Where then, ah! where shall poverty reside,
To 'scape the pressure of contiguous pride?
If to some common's fenceless limits strayed
He drives his flock to pick the scanty blade,
Those fenceless fields the sons of wealth divide,
And e'en the bare-worm common is denied.
If to the city sped, — what waits him there?
To see profusion that he must not share;
To see ten thousand baneful arts combined
To pamper luxury and thin mankind;
To see each joy the sons of pleasure know
Extorted from his fellow-creature's woe.
Here while the courtier glitters in brocade,
There the pale artist plies the sickly trade;
Here while the proud their long-drawn pomps display,
There the black gibbet glooms beside the way.
The dome where Pleasure holds her midnight reign,
Here, richly decked, admits the gorgeous train;
Tumultuous grandeur crowds the blazing square,
The rattling chariots clash, the torches glare.

Sure scenes like these no troubles e'er annoy !
 Sure these denote one universal joy !
 Are these thy serious thoughts?— Ah, turn thine eyes

Where the poor houseless shivering female lies.
 She once, perhaps, in village plenty blest,
 Has wept at tales of innocence distressed ;
 Her modest looks the cottage might adorn,
 Sweet as the primrose peeps beneath the thorn ;
 Now lost to all : her friends, her virtue fled,
 Near her betrayer's door she lays her head,
 And, pinched with cold, and shrinking from the shower,

With heavy heart deploras that luckless hour,
 When idly first, ambitious of the town,
 She left her wheel and robes of country brown.

Do thine, sweet Auburn, thine, the loveliest
 train,

Do thy fair tribes participate her pain ?
 E'en now, perhaps, by cold and hunger led,
 At proud men's doors they ask a little bread !

Ah, no ! To distant climes, a dreary scene,
 Where half the convex world intrudes between,
 Through torrid tracks with fainting steps they go,
 Where wild Altama murmurs to their woe.
 Far different there from all that charmed before,
 The various terrors of that horrid shore, —
 Those blazing suns that dart a downward ray,
 And fiercely shed intolerable day ;
 Those matted woods where birds forget to sing,
 But silent bats in drowsy clusters cling ;
 Those poisonous fields with rank luxuriance
 crowned,

Where the dark scorpion gathers death around ;
 Where at each step the stranger fears to wake
 The rattling terrors of the vengeful snake ;
 Where crouching tigers wait their hapless prey,
 And savage men more murderous still than they ;
 While oft in whirls the mad tornado flies,
 Mingling the ravaged landscape with the skies.
 Far different these from every former scene,
 The cooling brook, the grassy vested green,
 The breezy covert of the warbling grove,
 That only sheltered thefts of harmless love.

Good Heaven ! what sorrows gloomed that parting day

That called them from their native walks away ;
 When the poor exiles, every pleasure past,
 Hung round the bowers, and fondly looked their last,

And took a long farewell, and wished in vain
 For seats like these beyond the western main ;
 And shuddering still to face the distant deep,
 Returned and wept, and still returned to weep.

The good old sire the first prepared to go
 To new-found worlds, and wept for others' woe ;
 But for himself in conscious virtue brave,
 He only wished for worlds beyond the grave.
 His lovely daughter, lovelier in her tears,
 The fond companion of his helpless years,
 Silent went next, neglectful of her charms,
 And left a lover's for her father's arms.
 With louder plaints the mother spoke her woes,
 And blessed the cot where every pleasure rose ;
 And kissed her thoughtless babes with many a tear,
 And clasped them close, in sorrow doubly dear ;
 Whilst her fond husband strove to lend relief
 In all the silent manliness of grief.

O Luxury ! thou curst by Heaven's decree,
 How ill exchanged are things like these for thee !
 How do thy potions, with insidious joy,
 Diffuse their pleasures only to destroy !
 Kingdoms by thee, to sickly greatness grown,
 Boast of a florid vigor not their own.
 At every draught more large and large they grow,
 A bloated mass of rank, unwieldy woe ;
 Till, sapped their strength, and every part un-
 sound,
 Down, down they sink, and spread a ruin round.

Even now the devastation is begun,
 And half the business of destruction done ;
 Even now, methinks, as pondering here I stand,
 I see the rural virtues leave the land.
 Down where yon anchoring vessel spreads the sail
 That idly waiting flaps with every gale,
 Downward they move, a melancholy band,
 Pass from the shore, and darken all the strand.
 Contented toil, and hospitable care,
 And kind commubial tenderness, are there ;
 And piety with wishes placed above,
 And steady loyalty, and faithful love.
 And thou, sweet Poetry, thou loveliest maid,
 Still first to fly where sensual joys invade ;
 Unfit, in these degenerate times of shame,
 To catch the heart, or strike for honest fame ;
 Dear charming nymph, neglected and decried,
 My shame in crowds, my solitary pride ;
 Thou source of all my bliss and all my woe,
 That found'st me poor at first, and keep'st me so ;
 Thou guide, by which the nobler arts excel,
 Thou nurse of every virtue, fare thee well !
 Farewell ; and O, where'er thy voice be tried,
 On Torno's cliffs, or Pambamarca's side,
 Whether where equinoctial fervors glow,
 Or winter wraps the polar world in snow,
 Still let thy voice, prevailing over time,
 Redress the rigors of the inclement clime ;
 Aid slighted truth with thy persuasive strain ;
 Teach erring man to spurn the rage of gain ;

FISHER'S ROCK.

*"We sat by the fisher's cottage
And looked at the stormy tide*

Teach him, that states of native strength possess,
 Though very poor, may still be very blest ;
 That trade's proud empire hastes to swift decay,
 As ocean sweeps the labored mole away ;
 While self-dependent power can time defy,
 As rocks resist the billows and the sky.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

THE FISHER'S COTTAGE.

WE sat by the fisher's cottage,
 And looked at the stormy tide ;
 The evening mist came rising,
 And floating far and wide.

One by one in the light-house
 The lamps shone out on high ;
 And far on the dim horizon
 A ship went sailing by.

We spoke of storm and shipwreck, —
 Of sailors, and how they live ;
 Of journeys 'twixt sky and water,
 And the sorrows and joys they give.

We spoke of distant countries,
 In regions strange and fair,
 And of the wondrous beings
 And curious customs there ;

Of perfumed lamps on the Ganges,
 Which are launched in the twilight hour ;
 And the dark and silent Brahmins,
 Who worship the lotos flower.

Of the wretched dwarfs of Lapland, —
 Broad-headed, wide-mouthed, and small, —
 Who crouch round their oil-fires, cooking,
 And chatter and scream and bawl.

And the maidens earnestly listened,
 Till at last we spoke no more ;
 The ship like a shadow had vanished,
 And darkness fell deep on the shore.

THE ISLAND.

FROM "THE BUCCANEER."

THE island lies nine leagues away.
 Along its solitary shore,
 Of craggy rock and sandy bay,
 No sound but ocean's roar,
 Save where the bold, wild sea-bird makes her home,
 Her shrill cry coming through the sparkling foam.

But when the light winds lie at rest,
 And on the glassy, heaving sea
 The black duck, with her glossy breast,
 Sits swinging silently,
 How beautiful ! no ripples break the reach,
 And silvery waves go noiseless up the beach.

And inland rests the green, warm dell ;
 The brook comes tinkling down its side ;
 From out the trees the Sabbath bell
 Rings cheerful, far and wide,
 Mingling its sound with bleatings of the flocks,
 That feed about the vale among the rocks.

Nor holy bell, nor pastoral bleat,
 In former days within the vale ;
 Flapped in the bay the pirate's sheet ;
 Curses were on the gale ;
 Rich goods lay on the sand, and murdered men ;
 Pirate and wrecker kept their revels then.

But calm, low voices, words of grace,
 Now slowly fall upon the ear ;
 A quiet look is in each face,
 Subdued and holy fear :
 Each motion 's gentle ; all is kindly done ; —
 Come, listen how from crime this isle was won.

RICHARD HENRY DANA.

SMOKE.

LIGHT-WINGED Smoke ! Icarian bird,
 Melting thy pinions in thy upward flight ;
 Lark without song, and messenger of dawn,
 Circling above the hamlets as thy nest ;
 Or else, departing dream, and shadowy form
 Of midnight vision, gathering up thy skirts ;
 By night star-veiling, and by day
 Darkening the light and blotting out the sun ;
 Go thou, my incense, upward from this heartily,
 And ask the gods to pardon this clear flame.

HENRY DAVID THOREAU.

MIST.

LOW-ANCHORED cloud,
 Newfoundland air,
 Fountain-head and source of rivers,
 Dew-cloth, dream-drapery,
 And napkin spread by fays ;
 Drifting meadow of the air,
 Where bloom the daisied banks and violets,
 And in whose fenny labyrinth
 The bittern booms and heron wades ;
 Spirit of lakes and seas and rivers, —
 Bear only perfumes and the scent
 Of healing herbs to just men's fields.

HENRY DAVID THOREAU.

THE EVENING CLOUD.

A CLOUD lay cradled near the setting sun,
 A gleam of crimson tinged its braided snow ;
 Long had I watched the glory moving on
 O'er the still radiance of the lake below.
 Tranquil its spirit seemed, and floated slow !
 Even in its very motion there was rest ;
 While every breath of eve that chanced to blow
 Wafted the traveller to the beauteous west.
 Emblem, methought, of the departed soul !
 To whose white robe the gleam of bliss is given,
 And by the breath of mercy made to roll
 Right onwards to the golden gates of heaven,
 Where to the eye of faith it peaceful lies,
 And tells to man his glorious destinies.

JOHN WILSON (Christopher North).

NEWPORT BEACH.

WAVE after wave successively rolls on
 And dies along the shore, until more loud
 One billow with concentrate force is heard
 To swell prophetic, and exultant rears
 A lucent form above its pioneers,
 And rushes past them to the farthest goal.
 Thus our unuttered feelings rise and fall,
 And thought will follow thought in equal waves,
 Until reflection nerves design to will,
 Or sentiment o'er chance emotion reigns,
 And all its wayward undulations blends
 In one o'erwhelming surge !

HENRY THEODORE TUCKERMAN.

A STILL DAY IN AUTUMN.

I LOVE to wander through the woodlands hoary
 In the soft light of an autumnal day,
 When Summer gathers up her robes of glory,
 And like a dream of beauty glides away.
 How through each loved, familiar path she lingers,
 Serenely smiling through the golden mist,
 Tinting the wild grape with her dewy fingers
 Till the cool emerald turns to amethyst ;
 Kindling the faint stars of the hazel, shining
 To light the gloom of Autumn's mouldering halls,
 With hoary plumes the clematis entwining
 Where o'er the rock her withered garland falls.
 Warm lights are on the sleepy uplands waning
 Beneath soft clouds along the horizon rolled,
 Till the slant sunbeams through their fringes raining
 Bathe all the hills in melancholy gold.

The moist winds breathe of crispèd leaves and flowers

In the damp hollows of the woodland sown,
 Mingling the freshness of autumnal showers
 With spicy airs from cedarn alleys blown.

Beside the brook and on the umbered meadow,
 Where yellow fern-tufts fleck the faded ground,
 With folded lids beneath their palmy shadow
 The gentian nods, in dewy slumbers bound.

Upon those soft, fringed lids the bee sits brooding,
 Like a fond lover loath to say farewell,
 Or with shut wings, through silken folds intruding,
 Creeps near her heart his drowsy tale to tell.

The little birds upon the hillside lonely
 Flit noiselessly along from spray to spray,
 Silent as a sweet wandering thought that only
 Shows its bright wings and softly glides away.

SARAH HELEN WHITMAN.

THE BIRCH STREAM.

AT noon, within the dusty town,
 Where the wild river rushes down,
 And thunders hoarsely all day long,
 I think of thee, my hermit stream,
 Low singing in thy summer dream
 Thine idle, sweet, old, tranquil song.

Northward, Katahdin's chasmed pile
 Looms through thy low, long, leafy aisle ;
 Eastward, Olamon's summit shines ;
 And I upon thy grassy shore,
 The dreamful, happy child of yore,
 Worship before mine olden shrines.

Again the sultry noontide hush
 Is sweetly broken by the thrush,
 Whose clear bell rings and dies away
 Beside thy banks, 'in coverts deep,
 Where nodding buds of orchis sleep
 In dusk, and dream not it is day.

Again the wild cow-lily floats
 Her golden-freighted, tented boats
 In thy cool coves of softened gloom,
 O'ershadowed by the whispering reed,
 And purple plumes of pickerel-weed,
 And meadow-sweet in tangled bloom.

The startled minnows dart in flocks
 Beneath thy glimmering amber rocks,
 If but a zephyr stirs the brake ;
 The silent swallow swoops, a flash
 Of light, and leaves, with dainty plash,
 A ring of ripples in her wake.

Without, the land is hot and dim ;
 The level fields in languor swim,
 Their stubble-grasses brown as dust ;
 And all along the upland lanes,
 Where shadeless noon oppressive reigns,
 Dead roses wear their crowns of rust.

Within, is neither blight nor death ;
 The fierce sun woos with ardent breath,
 But cannot win thy sylvan heart.
 Only the child who loves thee long,
 With faithful worship pure and strong,
 Can know how dear and sweet thou art.

So loved I thee in days gone by,
 So love I yet, though leagues may lie
 Between us, and the years divide ;
 A breath of coolness, dawn, and dew,
 A joy forever fresh and true,
 Thy memory doth with me abide.

ANNA BOYNTON AVERILL.

THE BLACKBIRD.

How sweet the harmonies of afternoon !
 The Blackbird sings along the sunny breeze
 His ancient song of leaves, and summer boon ;
 Rich breath of hayfields streams through whispering trees ;
 And birds of morning trim their bustling wings,
 And listen fondly — while the Blackbird sings.

How soft the lovelight of the west reposes
 On this green valley's cheery solitude,
 On the trim cottage with its screen of roses,
 On the gray belfry with its ivy hood,
 And murmuring mill-race, and the wheel that flings
 Its bubbling freshness — while the Blackbird sings.

The very dial on the village church
 Seems as 't were dreaming in a dozy rest ;
 The scribbled benches underneath the porch
 Bask in the kindly welcome of the west :
 But the broad casements of the old Three Kings
 Blaze like a furnace — while the Blackbird sings.

And there beneath the immemorial elm
 Three rosy revellers round a table sit,
 And through gray clouds give laws unto the realm,
 Curse good and great, but worship their own wit,
 And roar of fights, and fairs, and junketings,
 Corn, colts, and curs — the while the Blackbird sings.

Before her home, in her accustomed seat,
 The tidy grandam spins beneath the shade
 Of the old honeysuckle, at her feet
 The dreaming pug and purring tabby laid ;
 To her low chair a little maiden clings,
 And spells in silence — while the Blackbird sings.

Sometimes the shadow of a lazy cloud
 Breathes o'er the hamlet with its gardens green,
 While the far fields with sunlight overflowed
 Like golden shores of Fairyland are seen ;
 Again the sunshine on the shadow springs,
 And fires the thicket — where the Blackbird
 sings.

The woods, the lawn, the peaked manor-house,
 With its peach-covered walls, and rookery loud,
 The trim, quaint garden-alleys, screened with boughs,
 The lion-headed gates, so grim and proud,
 The mossy fountain with its murmurings,
 Lie in warm sunshine — while the Blackbird
 sings.

The ring of silver voices, and the sheen
 Of festal garments, — and my lady streams
 With her gay court across the garden green ;
 Some laugh and dance, some whisper their love-dreams ;
 And one calls for a little page : he strings
 Her lute beside her — while the Blackbird sings.

A little while, — and lo ! the charm is heard :
 A youth, whose life has been all summer, steals
 Forth from the noisy guests around the board,
 Creeps by her softly, at her footstool kneels,
 And, when she pauses, murmurs tender things
 Into her fond ear — while the Blackbird sings.

The smoke-wreaths from the chimneys curl up higher,
 And dizzy things of eve begin to float
 Upon the light ; the breeze begins to tire.
 Half-way to sunset with a drowsy note
 The ancient clock from out the valley swings ;
 The grandam nods — and still the Blackbird
 sings.

Far shouts and laughter from the farm-stead peal,
 Where the great stack is piling in the sun ;
 Through narrow gates o'erladen wagons reel,
 And barking curs into the tumult run ;
 While the inconstant wind bears off, and brings
 The merry tempest — and the Blackbird sings.

On the high wold the last look of the sun
 Burns, like a beacon, over dale and stream ;
 The shouts have ceased, the laughter and the fun ;
 The grandam sleeps, and peaceful be her dream ;

Only a hammer on an anvil rings ;
The day is dying — still the Blackbird sings.

Now the good vicar passes from his gate,
Serene, with long white hair ; and in his eye
Burns the clear spirit that hath conquered Fate,
And felt the wings of immortality ;
His heart is thronged with great imaginings
And tender mercies — while the Blackbird sings.

Down by the brook he bends his steps, and through
A lowly wicket ; and at last he stands
Awful beside the bed of one who grew
From boyhood with him, — who with lifted hands
And eyes seems listening to far welcomings
And sweeter music — than the Blackbird sings.

Two golden stars, like tokens from the blest,
Strike on his dim orbs from the setting sun ;
His sinking hands seem pointing to the west ;
He smiles as though he said, "Thy will be done !"

His eyes they see not those illuminings ;
His ears they hear not — what the Blackbird sings.

FREDERICK TENNYSON.

THE PHILOSOPHER TOAD.

Down deep in a hollow, so damp and so cold,
Where oaks are by ivy o'ergrown,
The gray moss and lichen creep over the mould,
Lying loose on a ponderous stone.
Now within this huge stone, like a king on his throne,
A toad has been sitting more years than is
known ;
And, strange as it seems, yet he constantly deems
The world standing still while he's dreaming his dreams, —
Does this wonderful toad, in his cheerful abode
In the innermost heart of that flinty old stone,
By the gray-haired moss and the lichen o'ergrown.

Down deep in the hollow, from morning till
night,
Dun shadows glide over the ground,
Where a watercourse once, as it sparkled with light,
Turned a ruined old mill-wheel around :
Long years have passed by since its bed became dry,
And the trees grow so close, scarce a glimpse of the sky

Is seen in the hollow, so dark and so damp,
Where the glow-worm at noonday is trimming
his lamp,
And hardly a sound from the thicket around,
Where the rabbit and squirrel leap over the
ground,
Is heard by the toad in his spacious abode
In the innermost heart of that ponderous stone,
By the gray-haired moss and the lichen o'ergrown.

Down deep in that hollow the bees never come,
The shade is too black for a flower ;
And jewel-winged birds, with their musical hum,
Never flash in the night of that bower ;
But the cold-blooded snake, in the edge of the brake,
Lies amid the rank grass, half asleep, half
awake ;
And the ashen-white snail, with the slime in its trail,
Moves wearily on like a life's tedious tale,
Yet disturbs not the toad in his spacious abode,
In the innermost heart of that flinty old stone,
By the gray-haired moss and the lichen o'ergrown.

Down deep in a hollow some wisecraces sit,
Like a toad in his cell in the stone ;
Around them in daylight the blind owlets fit,
And their creeds are with ivy o'ergrown ; —
Their streams may go dry, and the wheels
cease to ply,
And their glimpses be few of the sun and the
sky,
Still they hug to their breast every time-honored guest,
And slumber and doze in inglorious rest ;
For no progress they find in the wide sphere
of mind,
And the world's standing still with all of their kind ;
Contented to dwell deep down in the well,
Or move like the snail in the crust of his shell,
Or live like the toad in his narrow abode,
With their souls closely wedged in a thick wall
of stone,
By the gray weeds of prejudice rankly o'ergrown.

REBECCA S. NICHOLS.

THE MUSICAL DUEL.

FROM "THE LOVER'S MELANCHOLY."

MENAPHON. Passing from Italy to Greece the tales
Which poets of an elder time have feigned
To glorify their Tempe, bred in me
Desire of visiting that paradise.

To Thessaly I came ; and, living private,
Without acquaintance of more sweet companions
Than the old inmates to my love, my thoughts,
I day by day frequented silent groves
And solitary walks. One morning early
This accident encountered me : I heard
The sweetest and most ravishing contention
That art and nature ever were at strife in.

AMETHUS. I cannot yet conceive what you infer

By art and nature.

MEN. I shall soon resolve you.

A sound of music touched mine ears, or rather,
Indeed, entranced my soul. As I stole nearer,
Invited by the melancholy, I saw
This youth, this fair-faced youth, upon his lute,
With strains of strange variety and harmony,
Proclaiming, as it seemed, so bold a challenge
To the clear choristers of the woods, the birds,
That, as they flocked about him, all stood silent,
Wondering at what they heard. I wondered too.

AM. And so do I ; good ! — On !

MEN. A nightingale,
Nature's best skilled musician, undertakes
The challenge, and, for every several strain
The well-shaped youth could touch, she sung her
own ;

He could not run division with more art
Upon his quaking instrument than she,
The nightingale, did with her various notes
Reply to ; for a voice, and for a sound,
Amethus, 't is much easier to believe
That such they were than hope to hear again.

AM. How did the rivals part ?

MEN. You term them rightly ;
For they were rivals, and their mistress, Harmony. —

Some time thus spent, the young man grew at last
Into a pretty anger, that a bird
Whom art had never taught clefs, moods, or notes,

Should vie with him for mastery, whose study
Had busied many hours to perfect practice :
To end the controversy, in a rapture
Upon his instrument he plays so swiftly,
So many voluntaries, and so quick,
That there was curiosity and cunning,
Concord in discord, lines of differing method
Meeting in one full centre of delight.

AM. Now for the bird.

MEN. The bird, ordained to be Music's first martyr, strove to imitate
These several sounds ; which, when her warbling throat

Failed in, for grief, down dropped she on his lute,
And broke her heart ! It was the quaintest sadness

To see the conqueror upon her hearse
To weep a funeral elegy of tears ;
That, trust me, my Amethus, I could chide
Mine own unmanly weakness, that made me
A fellow-mourner with him.

AM. I believe thee.

MEN. He looked upon the trophies of his art,
Then sighed, then wiped his eyes, then sighed,
and cried,

“ Alas, poor creature ! I will soon revenge
This cruelty upon the author of it ;
Henceforth this lute, guilty of innocent blood,
Shall nevermore betray a harmless peace
To an untimely end ; ” and in that sorrow,
As he was pushing it against a tree,
I suddenly stept in.

THE CANTERBURY PILGRIMS.

FROM “ THE CANTERBURY TALES : PROLOGUE. ” *

WHAN that Aprille with hise shourès soote<sup>1</sup>
The droghte of March hath perced to the roote,
And bathed every veyne in swich<sup>2</sup> licour,
Of which vertue engendred is the flour ;
Whan Zephirus eek with his swete breeth
Inspired hath in every holt<sup>3</sup> and heeth
The tendre croppès, and the yongè somme
Hath in the Ram his halfè cours y-ronne,
And smalè fowelès maken melodye
That slepen al the nyght with open eye, —
So priketh hem nature in hir corages,<sup>4</sup> —
Thanne longen folk to goon on pilgrimages,
And palmeres for to seken straunge strondes,
To ferne halwes,<sup>5</sup> kowthe<sup>6</sup> in sondry londes ;
And specially, from every shirè ende
Of Engelond, to Caunterbury they wende
The hooly blisful martir<sup>7</sup> for to seke,
That hem hath holpen whan that they were seeke.

Bifil that, in that seson on a day,
In Southwerk at the Tabard as I lay,
Redy to wenden on my pilgrimage
To Caunterbury with ful devout corage,
At nyght were come in-to that hostelrye
Wel nyne-and-twenty in a compaignye,

* The following passages from the Prologue to The Canterbury Tales give excellent specimens of Chaucer's close observation of nature, men, and manners, and of his clear, graphic, descriptive style. The text followed is that of the “ Riverside Edition,” edited by Mr. Arthur Gilman, which is based chiefly on that of the manuscript in possession of Lord Ellesmere, published by the Chaucer Society of London. That edition, however, is not responsible for the explanatory notes, nor for the addition of the grave accent, used to indicate syllables which the rhythm requires to be pronounced, in order to simplify the reading for those unaccustomed to the old-time irregularities of spelling.

Of sondry folk, by aventure y-falle
In felawshipe, and pilgrymes were thei alle,
That toward Caunterbury wolden ryde.

A KNYGHT ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the tymè that he first bigan
To riden out, he lovèd chivalrie,
Trouthe and honour, fredom and curteisie.
Ful worthy was he in his lordès werre,
And therto hadde he riden, nonan ferre,<sup>1</sup>
As wel in cristendom as in hethenesse,
And evere honoured for his worthynesse.

And though that he were worthy, he was wys,
And of his port as meeke as is a mayde.
He nevere yet no vileynye<sup>2</sup> ne sayde
In al his lyf unto no maner wight.
He was a verray parfit, gentil knyght.

With hym ther was his sone, a yong SQUIER,
A lovyere and a lusty bachelere,
With lokkès crulle<sup>3</sup> as they were leyd in presse.
Of twenty yere of age he was I gesse.
Of his stature he was of evene lengthe,
And wonderly delyvere,<sup>4</sup> and of greet strengthe.
And he hadde ben somtyme in chyvachie,<sup>5</sup>
In Flaundres, in Artoys, and Pycardie,
And born hym weel, as of so litel space,
In hope to stonden in his lady grace.
Embrouded<sup>6</sup> was he, as it were a meede
Al ful of fresshè flourès whyte and reede.
Syngynge he was, or floytynge,<sup>7</sup> al the day ;
He was as fressh as is the monthe of May.
Short was his gowne, with slevès longe and wyde.
Wel cowde he sitte on hors, and faire ryde.
He kouldè songès make and wel endite, Juste and eek danche, and weel purtreye<sup>8</sup> and write.

So hoote he lovedè, that by nyghtertale<sup>9</sup>
He sleep nomore than dooth a nyghtyngale ;
Curteis he was, lowely and servysable,
And carf<sup>10</sup> bifrom his fader at the table.

Ther was also a Nonne, a PRIORESSE,
That of hire smylyng was ful symple and coy ;
Hire gretteste ooth ne was but by seint Loy ;<sup>11</sup>
And she was clepèd madame Eglyntyne.
Ful weel she soonge the servicè dyvyne,
Entunèd in hir nose ful seneely ;
And Frenssh she spak ful faire and fetisly.<sup>12</sup>
After the scole of Stratford-attè-Bowe,
For Frenssh of Parys was to hire unknowe.

At metè<sup>1</sup> wel ytaught was she with alle,
She leet no morsel from hir lippès falle,
Ne wette hire fyngres in hire saucè deepe.
Wel koude she carie a morsel and wel kepe,
That no dropè ne fille up-on hire breste ;
In curteisie was set ful muchel hir leste.<sup>2</sup>
Hire over-lippè wyppèd she so elene,
That in hir coppe ther was no ferthyng<sup>3</sup> sene
Of grece, whan she dronken hadde hir draughte.
Ful semèly after hir mete she raughte,<sup>4</sup>
And sikerly<sup>5</sup> she was of greet disport,
And ful plesaunt, and amiable of port,
And peynèd hir<sup>6</sup> to countrefetè cheere
Of Court, and to ben estatlich of manere,
And to ben holden digne of reverence ;
But for to speken of hire conscience,
She was so charitable and so pitous,
She woldè wepe if that she saugh a mous
Kaught in a trappe, if it were deed or blidde.
Of smalè houndès hadde she, that she fedde
With rosted flesh, or mylk and wastel-breed ;<sup>7</sup>
But soore wepte she if any of hem were deed,
Or if men smoot it with a yerdè<sup>8</sup> smerte :
And al was conscience and tendre herte.

Ful semèly hire wymful pynchèd was ;
Hire nose tretys,<sup>9</sup> hire eyèn greye as glas,
Hir mouth ful smal, and ther to softe and reed,
But sikerly she hadde a fair forheed ;
It was almoost a spannè brood, I trowe,
For hardily she was nat undergrowe.
Ful fetys was hir cloke, as I was war ;
Of smal coral aboute hire arm she bar
A peire of bedès gauded<sup>10</sup> al with grene ;
And ther-on heng a broch of gold ful schene,
On which ther was first write a crownèd A,
And after, Amor vincit omnia.

Another Nonnè with hire haddè she,
That was hire Chapeleyn, and Preestès thre.

A CLERK ther was of Oxenford also
That un-to logyk haddè longe ygo.
And leenè was his hors as is a rake,
And he nas nat right fat, I undertake,
But lookèd holwe, and ther to sobrelly ;
Ful thredbare was his overeste courtepy,<sup>11</sup>
For he haddè geten hym yet no benefice,
Ne was so worldly to have office ;
For hym was levere have at his beddes heed
Twenty bookès, clad in blak or reed,
Of Aristotle and his philosophie,
Than robès riche, or fithelè,<sup>12</sup> or gay sautrie.<sup>13</sup>
But al be that he was a philosophre,
Yet haddè he but litel gold in cofre ;

 On bookès and his lernynge he it spente,
 And bisily gan for the soulès preye
 Of hem that gaf him wher with to scoleye,<sup>2</sup>
 Of studie took he moost cure and moost heede,
 Noght o word spak he moorè than was neede,
 And that was seyð in forme and reverence
 And short and quyk and ful of hy sentence.
 Sownyng in<sup>3</sup> moral vertu was his speche
 And gladly wolde he lerne, and gladly teche.

A SERGEANT OF THE LAWE, war<sup>4</sup> and wys,
 That often haddè ben at the Parvys,<sup>5</sup>
 Ther was also ful riche of excellence.
 Discreet he was and of greet reverence ;
 He semèd swich, hise wordès weren so wise.
 Justice he was ful often in Assise,
 By patente, and by pleyn commissioun,
 For his science and for his heigh renoun.
 Of fees and robès hadde he many oon ;
 So gret a purchasour<sup>6</sup> was nowher noon.
 Al was fee symple to hym in effect,
 His purchasynge myghte nat ben infect.<sup>7</sup>
 Nowher so bisy a man as he ther nas,<sup>8</sup>
 And yet he semèd bisier than he was.

A good man was ther of religioun,
 And was a Povrè PERSON<sup>9</sup> OF A TOUN ;
 But riche he was of hooly thought and werk ;
 He was also a lernèd man, a clerk
 That Cristès Gospel trewely wolde preeche,
 Hise parissheis devoutly wolde he teche.
 Benygne he was, and wonder diligent,
 And in adversitee ful pacient ;
 And such he was y-privèd oftè sithes.<sup>10</sup>
 Ful looth were hym to cursè for his thythes,
 But rather wolde he geven,<sup>11</sup> out of doute,
 Un-to his povrè parissheis aboute,
 Of his offryng and eek of his substaunce.
 He koude in litel thyng have suffisaunce.
 Wyd was his parisshe, and houses fer a-sonder,
 But he ne laftè<sup>12</sup> nat for reyn ne thonder,
 In siknesse nor in meschief to visite
 The ferreste<sup>13</sup> in his parisshe muche and lite<sup>14</sup>
 Up-on his feet, and in his hand a staf.
 This noble ensample to his sheepe he gaf,<sup>15</sup>
 That firste he wroghte, and afterward he taughte.

A better preest, I trowe, that nowher noon is
 He waiteth after no pompe and reverence,
 Ne makèd him a spicèd conscience,

Now have I toold you shortly in a clause
 The staat, tharray, the nombre, and eek the cause
 Why that assembled was this compaignye
 In Southwerk at this gentil hostelrye,
 That highte the Tabard, fastè by the Belle.
 But now is tymè to yow for to telle
 How that we baren us that ilke<sup>1</sup> nyght,
 Whan we were in that hostelrie alyght,
 And after wol I telle of our viage,
 And al the remenaunt of oure pilgrimage.

But first, I pray yow of your curteisye,
 That ye narete it nat my vileinye,<sup>2</sup>
 Thogh that I pleyedly speke in this mateere,
 To tellè yow hir wordès and hir cheere ;
 Ne thogh I speke hir wordès proprely.
 For this ye knowen al so wel as I,
 Whoso shal telle a tale after a man,
 He moote reherce, as ny as evere he kan
 Everich a word, if it be in his charge,
 Al speke he never so rudeliche<sup>3</sup> or large ;<sup>4</sup>
 Or ellis he moot telle his tale untrewe,
 Or feynè thyng, or fyndè wordès newe.

He may nat spare al thogh he were his brother,
 He moot as wel seye o word as another.
 Crist spak hym self ful brode in hooly writ
 And wel ye woot no vileynye is it.
 Eek Plato seith, who so can hym rede,
 "The wordès moote be cosyn<sup>5</sup> to the dede."

Also I prey yow to forgeve it me,
 Al have I nat set folk in hir degree
 Heere in this tale, as that they sholdè stonde ;
 My wit is short, ye may wel understonde.

Greet chiere made oure host us everichon,
 And to the soper sette he us anon
 And servèd us with vitaille at the beste.
 Strong was the wyn and wel to drynke us leste.<sup>6</sup>

A semely man OURE HOOST he was withalle
 For to han been a marchal in an halle ;
 A largè man he was with eyen stepe,
 A fairer burgeys was ther noon in Chepe :
 Boold of his speche, and wys and wel ytaught,
 And of manhod hym lakkedè right naught.
 Eek therto he was right a myrie<sup>7</sup> man,
 And after soper pleyen he bygan,
 And spak of myrthè amonges othere thynges,
 Whan that we haddè maad our rekenynges ;
 And seyde thus : " Lo, lordynges, trewely
 Ye ben to me right welcome hertely :
 For by my trouthe, if that I shal nat lye,
 I saugh nat this yeer so myrie a compaignye

Fayn wolde I doon<sup>1</sup> yow myrthè, wiste I how.
And of a myrthe I am right now bythoght,
To doon you ese, and it shal costè noght.

Ye goon to Canterbury, God you speede,
The blisful martir quité yow youre meede!<sup>2</sup>
And wel I woot as ye goon by the weye
Ye shapen yow<sup>3</sup> to talen<sup>4</sup> and to pleye;
For trewely confort ne myrthe is noon
To ridè by the weye doumb as the stoon;
And therefore wol I maken you disport,
As I seyde erst, and doon you som confort.

That ech of yow to shortè with oure weye,
In this viage shal tellè talès tweye,<sup>5</sup> —
To Caunterburyward, I mean it so,
And homward he shal tellen othere two, —
Of adventures that whilom han bifalle.
And which of yow that bereth hym best of alle,
That is to seyn, that telleth in this caas
Talès of best sentence,<sup>6</sup> and most solaaas,<sup>7</sup>
Shal have a soper at oure aller cost,
Heere in this place, syttinge by this post,
Whan that we come agayn fro Caunterbury.
And, for to make you the moore mury,
I wol my-selfè gladly with yow ryde,
Right at myn owenè cost, and be youre gyde.
And who so wole my juggèment withseye<sup>8</sup>
Shal paye al that we spenden by the weye.
And if ye vouchè-sauf that it be so,
Tel me anon, with-ouren wordès mo,
And I wol erly shapè<sup>9</sup> me therefore."

This thyng was graunted, and oure othès swore
With ful glad herte, and preyden hym also
That he wold vouchè-sauf for to do so,
And that he woldè been oure governour,
And of oure talès juge and reportour,
And sette a soper at a certeyn pris
And we wol reulèd been<sup>10</sup> at his devys
In heigh and lough; and thus by oon assent
We been acorded to his juggèment.
And ther-up-on the wyn was fet anon;
We dronken and to restè wente echon
With-ouren any lenger taryngne.

CHRISTMAS IN THE OLDEN TIME.

FROM "MARMION," INTROD TO CANTO VI.

But, let it whistle as it will,
We'll keep our Christmas merry still.

The fittest time for festal cheer:
Even, heathen yet, the savage Dane
At Iol more deep the mead did drain;
High on the beach his galleys drew,
And feasted all his pirate crew;
Then in his low and pine-built hall,
Where shields and axes decked the wall,
They gorged upon the half-dressed steer;
Caroused in seas of sable beer;
While round, in brutal jest, were thrown
The half-gnawed rib and marrow-bone;
Or listened all, in grim delight,
While scalds yelled out the joys of fight.
Then forth in frenzy would they hie,
While wildly loose their red locks fly;
And, dancing round the blazing pile,
They make such barbarous mirth the while,
As best might to the mind recall
The boisterous joys of Odin's hall.

And well our Christian sires of old
Loved when the year its course had rolled
And brought blithe Christmas back again
With all his hospitable train.
Domestic and religious rite
Gave honor to the holy night:
On Christmas eve the bells were rung;
On Christmas eve the mass was sung;
That only night, in all the year,
Saw the stoled priest the chalice rear.
The damsel donned her kirtle sheen;
The hall was dressed with holly green;
Forth to the wood did merry-men go,
To gather in the mistletoe.
Then opened wide the baron's hall
To vassal, tenant, serf, and all;
Power laid his rod of rule aside,
And Ceremony doffed her pride.
The heir, with roses in his shoes,
That night might village partner choose;
The lord, underogating, share
The vulgar game of "post and pair."
All hailed, with uncontrolled delight,
And general voice, the happy night
That to the cottage, as the crown,
Brought tidings of salvation down.

The fire, with well-dried logs supplied,
Went roaring up the chimney wide;
The huge hall-table's oaken face,
Scrubbed till it shone, the day to grace,
Bore then upon its massive board
No mark to part the squire and lord.
Then was brought in the lusty brawn,
By old blue-coated serving-man;
Then the grim boar's-head frowned on high
Crested with bays and rosemary.
Well can the green-garbed ranger tell
How, when, and where the monster fell;

What dogs before his death he tore,
 And all the baiting of the boar.
 The wassail round, in good brown bowls,
 Garnished with ribbons, blithely trowls.
 There the huge sirloin reeked ; hard by
 Plum-porridge stood, and Christmas pie ;
 Nor failed old Scotland to produce,
 At such high-tide, her savory goose.
 Then came the merry maskers in,
 And carols roared with blithesome din ;
 If unmelodious was the song,
 It was a hearty note, and strong.
 Who lists may in their mumming see
 Traces of ancient mystery ;
 White skirts supplied the masquerade,
 And smutted cheeks the visors made :
 But, O, what maskers richly dight
 Can boast of bosoms half so light !
 England was merry England, when Old Christmas brought his sports again.
 'T was Christmas broached the mightiest ale ;
 'T was Christmas told the merriest tale ;
 A Christmas gambol oft could cheer
 The poor man's heart through half the year.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

O, THE PLEASANT DAYS OF OLD !

O, THE pleasant days of old, which so often people
 praise !
 True, they wanted all the luxuries that grace our modern days :
 Bare floors were strewed with rushes, the walls
 let in the cold ;
 O, how they must have shivered in those pleasant days of old !

O, those ancient lords of old, how magnificent they were !
 They threw down and imprisoned kings, — to thwart them who might dare ?
 They ruled their serfs right sternly ; they took from Jews their gold, —
 Above both law and equity were those great lords of old !

O, the gallant knights of old, for their valor so renowned !
 With sword and lance and armor strong they scoured the country round ;
 And whenever aught to tempt them they met by wood or wold,
 By right of sword they seized the prize, — those gallant knights of old !

O, the gentle dames of old ! who, quite free from fear or pain,
 Could gaze on joust and tournament, and see their champions slain ;
 They lived on good beefsteaks and ale, which made them strong and bold, —
 O, more like men than women were those gentle dames of old !

O, those mighty towers of old ! with their turrets,
 moat, and keep,
 Their battlements and bastions, their dungeons
 dark and deep.
 Full many a baron held his court within the castle hold ;
 And many a captive languished there, in those strong towers of old.

O, the troubadours of old ! with the gentle min-strelsie
 Of hope and joy, or deep despair, whiche'er their lot might be ;
 For years they served their ladye-loves ere they their passions told, —
 O, wondrous patience must have had those trou-badours of old !

O, those blessed times of old, with their chivalry and state !
 I love to read their chronicles, which such brave deeds relate ;
 I love to sing their ancient rhymes, to hear their legends told, —
 But, Heaven be thanked ! I live not in those blessed times of old !

FRANCES BROWN.

THE TRUMPETS OF DOOLKARNEIN.

[In Eastern history are two Iskanders, or Alexanders, who are sometimes confounded, and both of whom are called Doolkarnein, or the Two-Horned, in allusion to their subjugation of East and West, horns being an Oriental symbol of power.

One of these heroes is Alexander of Macedon ; the other a conqueror of more ancient times, who built the marvellous series of ramparts on Mount Caucasus, known in fable as the wall of Gog and Magog, that is to say, of the people of the North. It reached from the Euxine Sea to the Caspian, where its flanks originated the subsequent appellation of the Caspian Gates.]

WITH awful walls, far glooming, that possessed
 The passes 'twixt the snow-fed Caspian fountains,
 Doolkarnein, the dread lord of East and West,
 Shut up the northern nations in their mountains ;
 And upon platforms where the oak-trees grew,
 Trumpets he set, huge beyond dreams of wonder,

Craftily purposed, when his arms withdrew,
To make him thought still housed there, like
the thunder:

And it so fell; for when the winds blew right,
They woke these trumpets to their calls of might.

Unseen, but heard, their calls the trumpets blew,
Ringing the granite rocks, their only bearers,
Till the long fear into religion grew,
And nevermore those heights had human darters.

Dreadful Doolkarnein was an earthly god;
His walls but shadowed forth his mightier
frowning;

Armies of giants at his bidding trod
From realm to realm, king after king dis-crowning.

When thunder spoke, or when the earthquake stirred,
Then, muttering in accord, his host was heard.

But when the winters marred the mountain shelves,

And softer changes came with vernal mornings,
Something had touched the trumpets' lofty selves,
And less and less rang forth their sovereign warnings;

Fewer and feebler; as when silence spreads
In plague-struck tents, where haughty chiefs, left dying,

Fail by degrees upon their angry beds,
Till, one by one, ceases the last stern sighing.
One by one, thus, their breath the trumpets drew,
Till now no more the imperious music blew.

Is he then dead? Can great Doolkarnein die?

Or can his endless hosts elsewhere be needed?
Were the great breaths that blew his minstrelsy
Phantoms, that faded as himself receded?

Or is he angered? Surely he still comes;
This silence ushers the dread visitation;
Sudden will burst the torrent of his drums,
And then will follow bloody desolation.
So did fear dream; though now, with not a sound
To sear good hope, summer had twice crept
round.

Then gathered in a band, with lifted eyes,
The neighbors, and those silent heights ascended.

Giant, nor aught blasting their bold emprise,
They met, though twice they halted, breath
suspended:

Once, at a coming like a god's in rage
With thunderous leaps, — but 't was the piled snow, falling;

And once, when in the woods an oak, for age,
Fell dead, the silence with its groan appalling.

At last they came where still, in dread array,
As though they still might speak, the trumpets
lay.

Unhurt they lay, like caverns above ground,
The rifted rocks, for hands, about them cling-
ing,
Their tubes as straight, their mighty mouths as round

And firm as when the rocks were first set ringing.

Fresh from their unimaginable mould
They might have seemed, save that the storms had stained them

With a rich rust, that now, with gloomy gold
In the bright sunshine, beauteously ingrained them.

Breathless the gazers looked, nigh faint for awe,
Then leaped, then laughed. What was it now they saw?

Myriads of birds. Myriads of birds, that filled
The trumpets all with nests and nestling voices!

The great, huge, stormy music had been stilled
By the soft needs that nursed those small, sweet noises!

O thou Doolkarnein, where is now thy wall?
Where now thy voice divine and all thy forces?
Great was thy cunning, but its wit was small Compared with nature's least and gentlest courses.

Fears and false ereeds may fright the realms
awhile;

But heaven and earth abide their time, and smile.

LEIGH HUNT.

MAHMOUD.

THERE came a man, making his hasty moan
Before the Sultan Mahmoud on his throne,
And crying out, "My sorrow is my right,
And I will see the Sultan, and to-night."

"Sorrow," said Mahmoud, "is a reverend thing:
I recognize its right, as king with king;
Speak on." "A fiend has got into my house," Exclaimed the staring man, "and tortures us, —
One of thine officers; he comes, the abhorred,
And takes possession of my house, my board,
My bed; — I have two daughters and a wife,
And the wild villain comes and makes me mad with life."

"Is he there now?" said Mahmoud. "No; he left

The house when I did, of my wits bereft,
And laughed me down the street, because I vowed I'd bring the prince himself to lay him in his shroud.

I'm mad with want, I'm mad with misery,
And, O thou Sultan Mahmoud, God cries out for
thee !”

The Sultan comforted the man, and said,
“Go home, and I will send thee wine and bread”
(For he was poor) “and other comforts. Go ;
And should the wretch return, let Sultan Mahmoud know.”

In three days' time, with haggard eyes and beard,
And shaken voice, the suitor reappeared,
And said, “He's come.” Mahmoud said not a word,

But rose and took four slaves, each with a sword,
And went with the vexed man. They reach the place,

And hear a voice, and see a woman's face,
That to the window fluttered in affright :
“Go in,” said Mahmoud, “and put out the light ;
But tell the females first to leave the room ;
And when the drunkard follows them, we come.”

The man went in. There was a cry, and hark !
A table falls, the window is struck dark :
Forth rush the breathless women, and behind
With curses comes the fiend in desperate mind.
In vain : the sabres soon cut short the strife,
And chop the shrieking wretch, and drink his bloody life.

“Now light the light,” the Sultan cried aloud :
’T was done : he took it in his hand and bowed
Over the corpse, and looked upon the face ;
Then turned and knelt, and to the throne of grace
Put up a prayer, and from his lips there crept
Some gentle words of pleasure, and he wept.
In reverent silence the beholders wait,
Then bring him at his call both wine and meat ;
And when he had refreshed his noble heart,
He bade his host be blest, and rose up to depart.

The man amazed, all mildness now and tears,
Fell at the Sultan's feet with many prayers,
And begged him to vouchsafe to tell his slave
The reason first of that command he gave
About the light ; then, when he saw the face,
Why he knelt down ; and lastly, how it was
That fare so poor as his detained him in the place.

The Sultan said, with a benignant eye,
“Since first I saw thee come, and heard thy cry,
I could not rid me of a dread, that one
By whom such daring villainies were done,
Must be some lord of mine, — ay, e'en perhaps a son.

For this I had the light put out : but when
I saw the face, and found a stranger slain,

I knelt and thanked the sovereign Arbiter,
Whose work I had performed through pain and
fear ;
And then I rose and was refreshed with food,
The first time since thy voice had marred my solitude.”

LEIGH HUNT.

THE LEPER.

“Room for the leper ! room !” And as he came
The cry passed on, — “Room for the leper ! room !”

And aside they stood,
Matron, and child, and pitiless manhood, — all
Who met him on his way, — and let him pass.
And onward through the open gate he came
A leper with the ashes on his brow,
Sackcloth about his loins, and on his lip
A covering, stepping painfully and slow,
And with a difficult utterance, like one
Whose heart is with an iron nerve put down,
Crying, “Unclean ! unclean !”

Day was breaking
When at the altar of the temple stood
The holy priest of God. The incense-lamp
Burned with a struggling light, and a low chant
Swelled through the hollow arches of the roof,
Like an articulate wail, and there, alone,
Wasted to ghastly thinness, Helon knelt.
The echoes of the melancholy strain
Died in the distant aisles, and he rose up, Struggling with weakness, and bowed down his head

Unto the sprinkled ashes, and put off
His costly raiment for the leper's garb,
And with the sackcloth round him, and his lip
Hid in a loathsome covering, stood still,
Waiting to hear his doom : —

“Depart ! depart, O child
Of Israel, from the temple of thy God,
For he has smote thee with his chastening rod,
And to the desert wild
From all thou lov'st away thy feet must flee,
That from thy plague his people may be free.

“Depart ! and come not near
The busy mart, the crowded city, more ;
Nor set thy foot a human threshold o'er ;
And stay thou not to hear
Voices that call thee in the way ; and fly
From all who in the wilderness pass by.

“Wet not thy burning lip
In streams that to a human dwelling glide ;
Nor rest thee where the covert fountains hide,
Nor kneel thee down to dip

The water where the pilgrim bends to drink,
By desert well, or river's grassy brink.

"And pass not thou between
The weary traveller and the cooling breeze,
And lie not down to sleep beneath the trees
Where human tracks are seen ;
Nor milk the goat that browseth on the plain,
Nor pluck the standing corn or yellow grain.

"And now depart ! and when
Thy heart is heavy, and thine eyes are dim,
Lift up thy prayer beseechingly to Him
Who, from the tribes of men,
Selected thee to feel his chastening rod.
Depart ! O leper ! and forget not God !"

And he went forth — alone ! not one of all
The many whom he loved, nor she whose name
Was woven in the fibres of the heart
Breaking within him now, to come and speak
Comfort unto him. Yea, he went his way,
Sick and heart-broken and alone, — to die !
For God had cursed the leper !

It was noon,
And Helon knelt beside a stagnant pool
In the lone wilderness, and bathed his brow,
Hot with the burning leprosy, and touched
The loathsome water to his fevered lips,
Praying that he might be so blest, — to die !
Footsteps approached, and with no strength to flee,

He drew the covering closer on his lip,
Crying, "Unclean ! unclean !" and in the folds
Of the coarse sackcloth shrouding up his face,
He fell upon the earth till they should pass.
Nearer the stranger came, and, bending o'er
The leper's prostrate form, pronounced his name.
— "Helon !" — the voice was like the master-tone

Of a rich instrument, — most strangely sweet ;
And the dull pulses of disease awoke,
And for a moment beat beneath the hot
And leprous scales with a restoring thrill.
"Helon ! arise !" and he forgot his curse,
And rose and stood before him.

Love and awe
Mingled in the regard of Helon's eye
As he beheld the stranger. He was not
In costly raiment clad, nor on his brow
The symbol of a princely lineage wore ;
No followers at his back, nor in his hand
Buckler or sword or spear, — yet in his mien
Command sat throned serene, and if he smiled,
A kingly condescension graced his lips
The lion would have crouched to in his lair.
His garb was simple, and his sandals worn ;

His stature modelled with a perfect grace ;
His countenance, the impress of a God,
Touched with the open innocence of a child ;
His eye was blue and calm, as is the sky
In the serenest noon ; his hair unshorn
Fell to his shoulders ; and his curling beard
The fulness of perfected manhood bore.
He looked on Helon earnestly awhile,
As if his heart was moved, and, stooping down,
He took a little water in his hand
And laid it on his brow, and said, "Be clean !"
And lo ! the scales fell from him, and his blood
Coursed with delicious coolness through his veins,
And his dry palms grew moist, and on his brow
The dewy softness of an infant's stole.
His leprosy was cleansed, and he fell down
Prostrate at Jesus' feet, and worshipped him.

NATHANIEL PARKER WILLIS.

GODIVA.

NOT only we, the latest seed of Time,
New men, that in the flying of a wheel
Cry down the past ; not only we, that prate
Of rights and wrongs, have loved the people well,
And loathed to see them overtaxed ; but she Did more, and underwent, and overcame,
The woman of a thousand summers back,
Godiva, wife to that grim Earl who ruled
In Coventry : for when he laid a tax
Upon his town, and all the mothers brought Their children, clamoring, "If we pay, we starve !"

She sought her lord, and found him, where he strode
About the hall, among his dogs, alone,
His beard a foot before him, and his hair
A yard behind. She told him of their tears,
And prayed him, "If they pay this tax, they starve."

Whereat he stared, replying, half amazed,
"You would not let your little finger ache
For such as these ?" "But I would die," said she.
He laughed, and swore by Peter and by Paul :
Then filipped at the diamond in her ear ;
"O, ay, ay, ay, you talk !" "Alas !" she said,
"But prove me what it is I would not do."
And from a heart as rough as Esau's hand,
He answered, "Ride you naked through the town,
And I repeal it ;" and nodding, as in scorn,
He parted, with great strides among his dogs.

So left alone, the passions of her mind,
As winds from all the compass shift and blow,
Made war upon each other for an hour,
Till pity won. She sent a herald forth,
And bade him cry, with sound of trumpet, all
The hard condition ; but that she would loose

The people : therefore, as they loved her well,
From then till noon no foot should pace the street,
No eye look down, she passing ; but that all
Should keep within, door shut and window barred.

Then fled she to her inmost bower, and there
Unclasped the wedded eagles of her belt,
The grim Earl's gift ; but ever at a breath
She lingered, looking like a summer moon
Half dipt in cloud : anon she shook her head,
And showered the rippled ringlets to her knee ;
Unclad herself in haste ; adown the stair
Stole on ; and, like a creeping sunbeam, slid
From pillar unto pillar, until she reached
The gateway ; there she found her palfrey trapt
In purple blazoned with armorial gold.

Then she rode forth, clothed on with chastity :
The deep air listened round her as she rode,
And all the low wind hardly breathed for fear.
The little wide-mouthed heads upon the spout
Had cunning eyes to see : the barking cur
Made her cheek flame : her palfrey's footfall shot
Light horrors through her pulses : the blind walls
Were full of chinks and holes ; and overhead
Fantastic gables, crowding, stared : but she
Not less through all bore up, till, last, she saw
The white-flowered elder-thicket from the field
Gleam through the Gothic archways in the wall.

Then she rode back, clothed on with chastity :
And one low churl, compact of thankless earth,
The fatal byword of all years to come,
Boring a little auger-hole in fear,
Peeped — but his eyes, before they had their will,
Were shrivelled into darkness in his head,
And dropt before him. So the Powers, who wait
On noble deeds, cancelled a sense misused ;
And she, that knew not, passed : and all at once,
With twelve great shocks of sound, the shameless noon

Was clashed and hammered from a hundred towers,
One after one : but even then she gained
Her bower ; whence reissuing, robed and crowned,
To meet her lord, she took the tax away,
And built herself an everlasting name.

ALFRED TENNYSON.

THE PRISONER OF CHILLON.

ETERNAL spirit of the chainless mind !
Brightest in dungeons, Liberty ! thou art,
For there thy habitation is the heart, —
The heart which love of thee alone can bind ;
And when thy sons to fetters are consigned, —
To fetters, and the damp vault's dayless gloom, —
Their country conquers with their martyrdom,
And Freedom's fame finds wings on every wind.
Chillon ! thy prison is a holy place,
And thy sad floor an altar, — for 't was trod,

Until his very steps have left a trace
Worn, as if thy cold pavement were a sod,
By Bonnivard ! — May none those marks efface !
For they appeal from tyranny to God.

MY hair is gray, but not with years,
Nor grew it white
In a single night,

As men's have grown from sudden fears :
My limbs are bowed, though not with toil,

But rusted with a vile repose,
For they have been a dungeon's spoil,
And mine has been the fate of those
To whom the goodly earth and air
Are banned, and barred, — forbidden fare ;
But this was for my father's faith
I suffered chains and courted death ;
That father perished at the stake
For tenets he would not forsake ;
And for the same his lineal race
In darkness found a dwelling-place ;
We were seven, — who now are one,

Six in youth, and one in age,
Finished as they had begun,
Proud of Persecution's rage ;
One in fire, and two in field,
Their belief with blood have sealed !
Dying as their father died,
For the God their foes denied ;
Three were in a dungeon cast,
Of whom this wreck is left the last.

There are seven pillars of Gothic mould
In Chillon's dungeons deep and old,
There are seven columns, massy and gray,
Dim with a dull imprisoned ray, —
A sunbeam which hath lost its way,
And through the crevice and the cleft
Of the thick wall is fallen and left,
Creeping o'er the floor so damp,
Like a marsh's meteor lamp, —
And in each pillar there is a ring,

And in each ring there is a chain ;
That iron is a cankering thing,
For in these limbs its teeth remain
With marks that will not wear away,
Till I have done with this new day,
Which now is painful to these eyes,
Which have not seen the sun to rise
For years, — I cannot count them o'er,
I lost their long and heavy score
When my last brother drooped and died,
And I lay living by his side.

They chained us each to a column stone,
And we were three, yet each alone ;
We could not move a single pace,

We could not see each other's face,
 But with that pale and livid light
 That made us strangers in our sight ;
 And thus together, yet apart,
 Fettered in hand, but pined in heart ;
 'T was still some solace, in the dearth
 Of the pure elements of earth,
 To hearken to each other's speech,
 And each turn comforter to each
 With some new hope, or legend old,
 Or song heroically bold ;
 But even these at length grew cold.
 Our voices took a dreary tone,
 An echo of the dungeon-stone,
 A grating sound, — not full and free
 As that of yore were wont to be ;
 It might be fancy, — but to me
 They never sounded like our own.

I was the eldest of the three,
 And to uphold and cheer the rest
 I ought to do — and did — my best,
 And each did well in his degree.
 The youngest, whom my father loved,
 Because our mother's brow was given
 To him, with eyes as blue as heaven, —
 For him my soul was sorely moved ;
 And truly might it be distrest
 To see such bird in such a nest ;
 For he was beautiful as day
 (When day was beautiful to me
 As to young eagles, being free), —
 A polar day, which will not see
 A sunset till its summer's gone,
 Its sleepless summer of long light,
 The snow-clad offspring of the sun ;
 And thus he was as pure and bright,
 And in his natural spirit gay,
 With tears for naught but others' ills,
 And then they flowed like mountain rills,
 Unless he could assuage the woe
 Which he abhorred to view below.

The other was as pure of mind,
 But formed to combat with his kind ;
 Strong in his frame, and of a mood
 Which 'gainst the world in war had stood,
 And perished in the foremost rank
 With joy ; — but not in chains to pine ;
 His spirit withered with their clank,
 I saw it silently decline, —
 And so perchance in sooth did mine ;
 But yet I forced it on to cheer
 Those relics of a home so dear.
 He was a hunter of the hills,
 Had followed there the deer and wolf ;
 To him this dungeon was a gulf
 And fettered feet the worst of ills.

Lake Leman lies by Chillon's walls :
 A thousand feet in depth below
 Its massy waters meet and flow ;
 Thus much the fathom-line was sent
 From Chillon's snow-white battlement,
 Which round about the wave intralls ;
 A double dungeon wall and wave
 Have made, — and like a living grave.
 Below the surface of the lake
 The dark vault lies wherein we lay,
 We heard it ripple night and day ;
 Sounding o'er our heads it knocked ;
 And I have felt the winter's spray
 Wash through the bars when winds were high
 And wanton in the happy sky ;
 And then the very rock hath rocked,
 And I have felt it shake, unshocked,
 Because I could have smiled to see
 The death that would have set me free.

I said my nearer brother pined,
 I said his mighty heart declined,
 He loathed and put away his food ;
 It was not that 't was coarse and rude,
 For we were used to hunter's fare,
 And for the like had little care ;
 The milk drawn from the mountain goat
 Was changed for water from the moat.
 Our bread was such as captives' tears
 Have moistened many a thousand years,
 Since man first pent his fellow-men
 Like brutes within an iron den ;
 But what were these to us or him ?
 These wasted not his heart or limb ;
 My brother's soul was of that mould
 Which in a palace had grown cold,
 Had his free breathing been denied
 The range of the steep mountain's side ;
 But why delay the truth ? — he died.
 I saw, and could not hold his head,
 Nor reach his dying hand, — nor dead, —
 Though hard I strove, but strove in vain,
 To rend and gnash my bonds in twain.
 He died, — and they unlocked his chain,
 And scooped for him a shallow grave
 Even from the cold earth of our cave.
 I begged them, as a boon, to lay
 His corse in dust whereon the day
 Might shine, — it was a foolish thought,
 But then within my brain it wrought,
 That even in death his free-born breast
 In such a dungeon could not rest.
 I might have spared my idle prayer, —
 They coldly laughed, and laid him there.
 The flat and turfless earth above
 The being we so much did love ;
 His empty chain above it leant,
 Such murder's fitting monument !

But he, the favorite and the flower,
 Most cherished since his natal hour,
 His mother's image in fair face,
 The infant love of all his race,
 His martyred father's dearest thought,
 My latest care, for whom I sought
 To hoard my life, that his might be Less wretched now, and one day free ;
 He, too, who yet had held untired
 A spirit natural or inspired, —
 He, too, was struck, and day by day
 Was withered on the stalk away.
 O God ! it is a fearful thing
 To see the human soul take wing
 In any shape, in any mood : —
 I've seen it rushing forth in blood,
 I've seen it on the breaking ocean
 Strive with a swoln convulsive motion,
 I've seen the sick and ghastly bed
 Of Sin delirious with its dread :
 But these were horrors, — this was woe
 Unmixed with such, — but sure and slow :
 He faded, and so calm and meek,
 So softly worn, so sweetly weak,
 So tearless, yet so tender, — kind,
 And grieved for those he left behind ;
 With all the while a cheek whose bloom
 Was as a mockery of the tomb,
 Whose tints as gently sunk away
 As a departing rainbow's ray, —
 An eye of most transparent light,
 That almost made the dungeon bright,
 And not a word of murmur, — not
 A groan o'er his untimely lot, —
 A little talk of better days,
 A little hope my own to raise,
 For I was sunk in silence, — lost
 In this last loss, of all the most ;
 And then the sighs he would suppress
 Of fainting nature's feebleness,
 More slowly drawn, grew less and less :
 I listened, but I could not hear, —
 I called, for I was wild with fear ;
 I knew't was hopeless, but my dread
 Would not be thus admonished ;
 I called, and thought I heard a sound, —
 I burst my chain with one strong bound,
 And rushed to him : — I found him not,
 I only stirred in this black spot,
 I only lived, — I only drew
 The accursed breath of dungeon-dew ;
 The last — the sole — the dearest link
 Between me and the eternal brink,
 Which bound me to my failing race,
 Was broken in this fatal place.
 One on the earth, and one beneath, —
 My brothers — both had ceased to breathe.

I took that hand which lay so still,
 Alas ! my own was full as chill ;
 I had not strength to stir or strive,
 But felt that I was still alive, —
 A frantic feeling when we know
 That what we love shall ne'er be so.

I know not why

I could not die,

I had no earthly hope — but faith,
 And that forbade a selfish death.

What next befell me then and there

I know not well — I never knew.

First came the loss of light and air,

And then of darkness too ;

I had no thought, no feeling — none :

Among the stones I stood a stone,

And was, scarce conscious what I wist,

As shrubless crags within the mist ;

For all was blank and bleak and gray ;

It was not night, — it was not day ;

It was not even the dungeon-light,

So hateful to my heavy sight ;

But vacancy absorbing space,

And fixedness, without a place :

There were no stars — no earth — no time —

No check — no change — no good — no crime ;

But silence, and a stirless breath

Which neither was of life nor death : —

A sea of stagnant idleness,

Blind, boundless, mute, and motionless !

A light broke in upon my brain, —

It was the carol of a bird ;

It ceased, and then it came again, —

The sweetest song ear ever heard,

And mine was thankful till my eyes

Ran over with the glad surprise,

And they that moment could not see

I was the mate of misery ;

But then by dull degrees came back

My senses to their wonted track,

I saw the dungeon walls and floor

Close slowly round me as before,

I saw the glimmer of the sun

Creeping as it before had done,

But through the crevice where it came

That bird was perched, as fond and tame,

And tamer than upon the tree ;

A lovely bird, with azure wings,

And song that said a thousand things,

And seemed to say them all for me .

I never saw its like before,

I ne'er shall see its likeness more.

It seemed, like me, to want a mate,

But was not half so desolate,

And it was come to love me when

None lived to love me so again,
And cheering from my dungeon's brink,
Had brought me back to feel and think.

I know not if it late were free,
Or broke its cage to perch on mine,
But knowing well captivity,
Sweet bird ! I could not wish for thine !

Or if it were, in wingèd guise,
A visitant from Paradise :
For — Heaven forgive that thought ! the while
Which made me both to weep and smile —
I sometimes deemed that it might be
My brother's soul come down to me ;
But then at last away it flew,
And then 't was mortal, — well I knew,
For he would never thus have flown,
And left me twice so doubly lone, —
Lone — as the corse within its shroud,
Lone — as a solitary cloud,

A single cloud on a sunny day,
While all the rest of heaven is clear,
A frown upon the atmosphere,
That hath no business to appear
When skies are blue and earth is gay.

A kind of change came in my fate,
My keepers grew compassionate ;
I know not what had made them so,
They were inured to sights of woe,
But so it was : — my broken chain
With links unfastened did remain,
And it was liberty to stride
Along my cell from side to side,
And up and down, and then athwart,
And tread it over every part ;
And round the pillars one by one,
Returning where my walk begun,
Avoiding only, as I trod,
My brothers' graves without a sod ;
For if I thought with heedless tread
My step profaned their lowly bed,
My breath came gaspingly and thick,
And my crushed heart fell blind and sick.

I made a footing in the wall,
It was not therefrom to escape,
For I had buried one and all
Who loved me in a human shape :
And the whole earth would henceforth be
A wider prison unto me :
No child, — no sire, — no kin had I,
No partner in my misery ;
I thought of this and I was glad,
For thought of them had made me mad ;
But I was curious to ascend
To my barred windows, and to bend
Once more, upon the mountains high,
The quiet of a loving eye.

I saw them, — and they were the same,
They were not changed like me in frame ;
I saw their thousand years of snow
On high, — their wide long lake below,
And the blue Rhone in fullest flow ;
I heard the torrents leap and gush
O'er channelled rock and broken bush ;
I saw the white-walled distant town,
And whiter sails go skimming down ;
And then there was a little isle,
Which in my very face did smile,
The only one in view ;
A small green isle, it seemed no more,
Scarce broader than my dungeon floor,
But in it there were three tall trees,
And o'er it blew the mountain breeze,
And by it there were waters flowing,
And on it there were young flowers growing,

Of gentle breath and hue.
The fish swam by the castle wall,
And they seemed joyous each and all ;
The eagle rode the rising blast,
Methought he never flew so fast
As then to me he seemed to fly,
And then new tears came in my eye,
And I felt troubled, — and would fain
I had not left my recent chain ;
And when I did descend again,
The darkness of my dim abode
Fell on me as a heavy load ;
It was as in a new-dug grave
Closing o'er one we sought to save,
And yet my glance, too much oppressed,
Had almost need of such a rest.

It might be months, or years, or days,
I kept no count, — I took no note,
I had no hope my eyes to raise,
And clear them of their dreary mote ;
At last men came to set me free,
I asked not why and recked not where,
It was at length the same to me,
Fettered or fetterless to be,
I learned to love despair.

And thus when they appeared at last,
And all my bonds aside were cast,
These heavy walls to me had grown
A hermitage, and all my own !
And half I felt as they were come
To tear me from a second home ;
With spiders I had friendship made,
And watched them in their sullen trade,
Had seen the mice by moonlight play,
And why should I feel less than they ?
We were all inmates of one place,
And I, the monarch of each race,
Had power to kill, — yet, strange to tell !
In quiet we had learned to dwell, —

My very chains and I grew friends,
So much a long communion tends
To make us what we are : — even I Regained my freedom with a sigh.

LORD BYRON.

DIVINA COMMEDIA.

OFt have I seen, at some cathedral door,
A laborer, pausing in the dust and heat,
Lay down his burden, and with reverent feet
Enter, and cross himself, and on the floor
Kneel to repeat his paternoster o'er ;
Far off the noises of the world retreat ;
The loud vociferations of the street
Become an undistinguishable roar.
So, as I enter here from day to day,
And leave my burden at this minster gate,
Kneeling in prayer, and not ashamed to pray,
The tumult of the time disconsolate
To inarticulate murmurs dies away,
While the eternal ages watch and wait.

How strange the sculptures that adorn these towers !

This crowd of statues, in whose folded sleeves
Birds build their nests ; while canopied with leaves

Parvis and portal bloom like trellised bowers,
And the vast minster seems a cross of flowers !
But fiends and dragons on the gargoyled eaves
Watch the dead Christ between the living thieves,

And, underneath, the traitor Judas lowers !

Ah ! from what agonies of heart and brain,
What exultations trampling on despair,
What tenderness, what tears, what hate of wrong,

What passionate outcry of a soul in pain,
Uprose this poem of the earth and air,
This mediæval miracle of song !

I enter, and I see thee in the gloom
Of the long aisles, O poet saturnine !
And strive to make my steps keep pace with thine.

The air is filled with some unknown perfume ;
The congregation of the dead make room
For thee to pass ; the votive tapers shine ;
Like rocks that haunt Ravenna's groves of pine
The hovering echoes fly from tomb to tomb.

From the confessionals I hear arise
Rehearsals of forgotten tragedies,
And lamentations from the crypts below ;
And then a voice celestial, that begins
With the pathetic words, "Although your sins
As scarlet be," and ends with "as the snow."

With snow-white veil and garments as of flame,
She stands before thee, who so long ago
Filled thy young heart with passion and the woe
From which thy song and all its splendors came ;
And while with stern rebuke she speaks thy name,
The ice about thy heart melts as the snow
On mountain heights, and in swift overflow
Comes gushing from thy lips in sobs of shame.
Thou makest full confession ; and a gleam,
As if the dawn on some dark forest cast,
Seems on thy lifted forehead to increase ;
Lethè and Eunoe — the remembered dream
And the forgotten sorrow — bring at last
That perfect pardon which is perfect peace.

I lift mine eyes, and all the windows blaze
With forms of saints and holy men who died,
Here martyred and hereafter glorified ;
And the great Rose upon its leaves displays
Christ's Triumph, and the angelic roundelays,
With splendor upon splendor multiplied ;
And Beatrice again at Dante's side
No more rebukes, but smiles her words of praise.
And then the organ sounds, and unseen choirs
Sing the old Latin hymns of peace and love,
And benedictions of the Holy Ghost ;
And the melodious bells among the spires
O'er all the house-tops and through heaven above
Proclaim the elevation of the Host !

O star of morning and of liberty !

O bringer of the light, whose splendor shines
Above the darkness of the Apennines,
Forerunner of the day that is to be !

The voices of the city and the sea,
The voices of the mountains and the pines,
Repeat thy song, till the familiar lines
Are footpaths for the thought of Italy !

Thy fame is blown abroad from all the heights,
Through all the nations, and a sound is heard,
As of a mighty wind, and men devout,
Strangers of Rome, and the new proselytes,
In their own language hear thy wondrous word,
And many are amazed and many doubt.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

THE VILLAGE SCHOOLMISTRESS.

FROM "THE SCHOOLMISTRESS."

IN every village marked with little spire,
Embowered in trees, and hardly known to fame,
There dwells, in lowly shed and mean attire,
A matron old, whom we Schoolmistress name ;
Who boasts unruly brats with birch to tame :
They grieved sore, in piteous durance pent,
Awed by the power of this relentless dame ;

And ofttimes, on vagaries idly bent,
For unkempt hair, or task unconned, are sorely shent.

Her cap, far whiter than the driven snow,
Emblem right meet of decency does yield :
Her apron dyed in grain, as blue, I trowe,
As is the harebell that adorns the field :
And in her hand, for sceptre, she does wield
Tway birchen sprays ; with anxious fear entwined,

With dark distrust, and sad repentance filled ;
And steadfast hate, and sharp affliction joined,
And fury uncontrolled, and chastisement unkind.

A russet stole was o'er her shoulders thrown ;
A russet kirtle fenced the nipping air :
'T was simple russet, but it was her own ;
'T was her own country bred the flock so fair,
'T was her own labor did the fleece prepare ;
And, sooth to say, her pupils, ranged around,
Through pious awe, did term it passing rare ;
For they in gaping wonderment abound,
And think, no doubt, she been the greatest wight on ground.

Albeit ne flattery did corrupt her truth,
Ne pompous title did debauch her ear ;
Goody, good-woman, gossip, n'aunt forsooth,
Or dame, the sole additions she did hear ;
Yet these she challenged, these she held right
dear :
Ne would esteem him act as mought bebove,
Who should not honor eld with these revere ;
For never title yet so mean could prove,
But there was eke a mind which did that title love.

In elbow-chair (like that of Scottish stem,
By the sharp tooth of cankering eld defaced,
In which, when he receives his diadem,
Our sovereign prince and liefest hege is placed)
The matron sat; and some with rank she graced,
(The source of children's and of courtiers' pride!)
Redressed affronts, — for vile affronts there passed ;
And warned them not the fretful to deride,
But love each other dear, whatever them betide.

Right well she knew each temper to descry,
To thwart the proud, and the submiss to raise ;
Some with vile copper-prize exalt on high,
And some entice with pittance small of praise ;
And other some with baleful sprig she 'frays :
Even absent, she the reins of power doth hold,
While with quaint arts the giddy crowd she sways ;
Forewarned, if little bird their pranks behold,
'T will whisper in her ear, and all the scene unfold.

Lo ! now with state she utters her command ;
Eftsoons the urchins to their tasks repair,
Their books of stature small they take in hand,
Which with pellucid horn securéd are,
To save from finger wet the letters fair :
The work so gay, that on their back is seen,
St. George's high achievements does declare ;
On which thilk wight that has y-gazing been,
Kens the forthcoming rod, — unplasing sight, I ween !

But now Dan Phœbus gains the middle sky,
And Liberty unbars her prison door ;
And like a rushing torrent out they fly ;
And now the grassy cirque han covered o'er
With boisterous revel rout and wild uproar ;
A thousand ways in wanton rings they run.
Heaven shield their short-lived pastimes, I implore ;
For well may freedom erst so dearly won
Appear to British elf more gladsome than the sun.

WILLIAM SHENSTONE.

THE JOLLY OLD PEDAGOGUE.

'T WAS a jolly old pedagogue, long ago,
Tall and slender, and sallow and dry ;
His form was bent and his gait was slow,
His long thin hair was as white as snow,
But a wonderful twinkle shone in his eye ;
And he sang every night as he went to bed,
"Let us be happy down here below ;
The living should live, though the dead be dead,"
Said the jolly old pedagogue, long ago.

He taught his scholars the rule of three,
Writing, and reading, and history too ;
He took the little ones up on his knee,
For a kind old heart in his breast had he,
And the wants of the littlest child he knew :
"Learn while you 're young," he often said,
"There's much to enjoy down here below ;
Life for the living and rest for the dead !"
Said the jolly old pedagogue, long ago.

With the stupidest boys he was kind and cool,
Speaking only in gentlest tones ;
The rod was hardly known in his school, —
Whipping, to him, was a barbarous rule,
And too hard work for his poor old bones ;
"Besides, it is painful," he sometimes said ;
"We should make life pleasant down here
below,
The living need charity more than the dead,"
Said the jolly old pedagogue, long ago.

He lived in the house by the hawthorn lane,
 With roses and woodbine over the door ;
 His rooms were quiet and neat and plain,
 But a spirit of comfort there held reign,
 And made him forget he was old and poor ;
 " I need so little," he often said ;
 " And my friends and relatives here below
 Won't litigate over me when I am dead,"
 Said the jolly old pedagogue, long ago.

But the pleasantest times that he had, of all,
 Were the sociable hours he used to pass,
 With his chair tipped back to a neighbor's wall,
 Making an unceremonious call,
 Over a pipe and friendly glass :
 This was the finest pleasure, he said,
 Of the many he tasted here below ;
 " Who has no cronies had better be dead,"
 Said the jolly old pedagogue, long ago.

Then the jolly old pedagogue's wrinkled face
 Melted all over in sunshiny smiles ;
 He stirred his glass with an old-school grace,
 Chuckled, and sipped, and prattled apace,
 Till the house grew merry, from cellar to tiles.
 " I'm a pretty old man," he gently said,
 " I have lingered a long while here below ;
 But my heart is fresh, if my youth is fled,"
 Said the jolly old pedagogue, long ago.

He smoked his pipe in the balmy air
 Every night when the sun went down,
 While the soft wind played in his silvery hair,
 Leaving his tenderest kisses there,
 On the jolly old pedagogue's jolly old crown ;
 And feeling the kisses, he smiled, and said,
 'T was a glorious world, down here below ;
 " Why wait for happiness till we are dead ?"
 Said the jolly old pedagogue, long ago.

He sat at his door, one midsummer night,
 After the sun had sunk in the west,
 And the lingering beams of golden light
 Made his kindly old face look warm and bright,
 While the odorous night-wind whispered,
 " Rest !"
 Gently, gently, he bowed his head, —
 There were angels waiting for him, I know ;
 He was sure of happiness, living or dead, —
 This jolly old pedagogue, long ago !

GEORGE ARNOLD.

THE SETTLER.

His echoing axe the settler swung
 Amid the sea-like solitude,
 And, rushing, thundering, down were flung
 The Titans of the wood ;

Loud shrieked the eagle, as he dashed
 From out his mossy nest, which crashed
 With its supporting bough,
 And the first sunlight, leaping, flashed
 On the wolf's haunt below.

Rude was the garb and strong the frame
 Of him who plied his ceaseless toil :
 To form that garb the wildwood game
 Contributed their spoil ;
 The soul that warmed that frame disdained
 The tinsel, gaud, and glare that reigned
 Where men their crowds collect ;
 The simple fur, untrimmed, unstained,
 This forest-tamer decked.

The paths which wound mid gorgeous trees,
 The stream whose bright lips kissed their
 flowers,
 The winds that swelled their harmonies
 Through those sun-hiding bowers,
 The temple vast, the green arcade,
 The nestling vale, the grassy glade,
 Dark cave, and swampy lair ;
 These scenes and sounds majestic made
 His world, his pleasures, there.

His roof adorned a pleasant spot ;
 Mid the black logs green glowed the grain,
 And herbs and plants the woods knew not
 Throve in the sun and rain.
 The smoke-wreath curling o'er the dell,
 The low, the bleat, the tinkling bell,
 All made a landscape strange,
 Which was the living chronicle
 Of deeds that wrought the change.

The violet sprung at spring's first tinge,
 The rose of summer spread its glow,
 The maize hung out its autumn fringe,
 Rude winter brought his snow ;
 And still the lone one labored there,
 His shout and whistle broke the air,
 As cheerily he plied
 His garden-spade, or drove his share
 Along the hillock's side.

He marked the fire-storm's blazing flood
 Roaring and crackling on its path,
 And scorching earth, and melting wood,
 Beneath its greedy wrath ;
 He marked the rapid whirlwind shoot,
 Trampling the pine-tree with its foot,
 And darkening thick the day
 With streaming bough and severed root,
 Hurling whizzing on its way.

His gaunt hound yelled, his rifle flashed,
 The grim bear hushed his savage growl ;
 In blood and foam the panther gnashed
 His fangs, with dying howl ;
 The fleet deer ceased its flying bound,
 Its snarling wolf-foe bit the ground,
 And, with its moaning cry,
 The beaver sank beneath the wound
 Its pond-built Venice by.

Humble the lot, yet his the race,
 When Liberty sent forth her cry,
 Who thronged in conflict's deadliest place,
 To fight, — to bleed, — to die !
 Who cumbered Bunker's height of red,
 By hope through weary years were led,
 And witnessed Yorktown's sun
 Blaze on a nation's banner spread,
 A nation's freedom won.

ALFRED B. STREET.

THE CLOSING SCENE.

WITHIN the sober realm of leafless trees,
 The russet year inhaled the dreamy air ;
 Like some tanned reaper, in his hour of ease,
 When all the fields are lying brown and bare.

The gray barns looking from their hazy hills,
 O'er the dun waters widening in the vales,
 Sent down the air a greeting to the mills
 On the dull thunder of alternate flails.

All sights were mellowed and all sounds subdued,
 The hills seemed further and the stream sang
 low,
 As in a dream the distant woodman hewed
 His winter log with many a muffled blow.

The embattled forests, erewhile armed with gold,
 Their banners bright with every martial hue,
 Now stood like some sad, beaten host of old,
 Withdrawn afar in Time's remotest blue.

On slumb'rous wings the vulture held his flight ;
 The dove scarce heard its sighing mate's complaint ;
 And, like a star slow drowning in the light,
 The village church-vane seemed to pale and faint.

The sentinel-cock upon the hillside crew, —
 Crew thrice, — and all was stiller than before ;
 Silent, till some replying varden blew
 His alien horn, and then was heard no more.

Where erst the jay, within the elm's tall crest,
 Made garrulous tronble round her unfledged
 young ;
 And where the oriole hung her swaying nest,
 By every light wind like a censer swung ; —

Where sang the noisy martens of the caves,
 The busy swallows circling ever near, —
 Foreboding, as the rustic mind believes,
 An early harvest and a plenteous year ; —

Where every bird which charmed the vernal feast Shook the sweet slumber from its wings at morn,
 To warn the reaper of the rosy east : —
 All now was sunless, empty, and forlorn.

Alone from out the stubble piped the quail,
 And croaked the crow through all the dreamy
 gloom ;
 Alone the pheasant, drumming in the vale,
 Made echo to the distant cottage-loom.

There was no bud, no bloom upon the bowers ;
 The spiders moved their thin shrouds night by
 night,
 The thistle-down, the only ghost of flowers,
 Sailed slowly by, — passed noiseless out of sight.

Amid all this — in this most cheerless air,
 And where the woodbine shed upon the porch
 Its crimson leaves, as if the Year stood there Firing the floor with his inverted torch, —

Amid all this, the centre of the scene,
 The white-haired matron with monotonous
 tread
 Plied the swift wheel, and with her joyless mien
 Sat, like a fate, and watched the flying thread.

She had known Sorrow, — he had walked with her,
 Oft supped, and broke the bitter ashen crust ;
 And in the dead leaves still she heard the stir
 Of his black mantle trailing in the dust.

While yet her cheek was bright with summer
 bloom,
 Her country summoned and she gave her all ;
 And twice War bowed to her his sable plume, —
 Re-gave the swords to rust upon the wall.

Re-gave the swords, but not the hand that drew
 And struck for Liberty the dying blow ;
 Nor him who, to his sire and country true,
 Fell mid the ranks of the invading foe.

Long, but not loud, the droning wheel went on,
 Like the low murmur of a hive at noon ;
 Long, but not loud, the memory of the gone
 Breathed through her lips a sad and tremulous tune.

At last the thread was snapped ; her head was bowed ;
 Life dropt the distaff through his hands serene ;
 And loving neighbors smoothed her careful
 shroud,
 While Death and Winter closed the autumn
 scene.

THOMAS BUCHANAN READ.

SEVEN AGES OF MAN.

FROM "AS YOU LIKE IT," ACT II. SC. 7.

ALL the world's a stage,
 And all the men and women merely players :
 They have their exits and their entrances ;
 And one man in his time plays many parts,
 His Acts being seven ages. At first the Infant,
 Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms.
 Then the whining School-boy, with his satchel
 And shining morning face, creeping like snail
 Unwillingly to school. And then the Lover,
 Sighing like furnace, with a woful ballad
 Made to his mistress' eyebrow. Then a Soldier,
 Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the pard ;
 Jealous in honor, sudden and quick in quarrel,
 Seeking the bubble reputation
 Even in the cannon's mouth. And then the Justice,

 In fair round belly with good capon lined,
 With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
 Full of wise saws and modern instances, —
 And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
 Into the lean and slippered Pantaloon,
 With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side ;
 His youthful hose, well saved, a world too wide
 For his shrunk shank ; and his big manly voice,
 Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
 And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
 That ends this strange eventful history,
 Is second childishness, and mere oblivion, —
 Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything.

SHAKESPEARE.

GIRLHOOD.

AN exquisite incompleteness, blossom foreshadowing fruit ;
 A sketch faint in its beauty, with promise of future worth ;

A plant with some leaves unfolded, and the rest
 asleep at its root,
 To deck with their future sweetness the fairest thing on the earth.

Womanhood, wifehood, motherhood — each a possible thing,
 Dimly seen through the silence that lies between then and now ;
 Something of each and all has woven a magic ring,
 Linking the three together in glory on girl-hood's brow.

ANONYMOUS.

SONG.

How near to good is what is fair,
 Which we no sooner see,
 But with the lines and outward air
 Our senses taken be.
 We wish to see it still, and prove
 What ways we may deserve ;
 We court, we praise, we more than love,
 We are not grieved to serve.

BEN JONSON.

ADAM AND EVE.

FROM "PARADISE LOST," BOOK IV.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
 Godlike erect, with native honor clad
 In naked majesty, seemed lords of all :
 And worthy seemed ; for in their looks divine
 The image of their glorious Maker shone,
 Truth, wisdom, sanctitude severe and pure,
 (Severe, but in true filial freedom placed,) —
 Whence true authority in men ; though both
 Not equal, as their sex not equal seemed ;
 For contemplation he and valor formed ;
 For softness she and sweet attractive grace ;
 He for God only, she for God in him :
 His fair large front and eye sublime declared
 Absolute rule ; and hyacinthine locks
 Round from his parted forelock manly hung
 Clustering, but not beneath his shoulders broad ;
 She, as a veil, down to the slender waist
 Her unadorn'd golden tresses wore
 Dishevelled, but in wanton ringlets waved,
 As the vine curls her tendrils, which implied
 Subjection, but required with gentle sway,
 And by her yielded, by him best received,
 Yielded with coy submission, modest pride,
 And sweet, reluctant, amorous delay.

So passed they naked on, nor shunned the sight
 Of God or angel ; for they thought no ill :

So hand in hand they passed, the loveliest pair,
 That ever since in love's embraces met :
 Adam the goodliest man of men since born
 His sons, the fairest of her daughters Eve.
 Under a tuft of shade that on a green
 Stood whispering soft, by a fresh fountain side
 They sat them down : and, after no more toil
 Of their sweet gardening labor than sufficed
 To recommend cool Zephyr, and made ease
 More easy, wholesome thirst and appetite
 More grateful, to their supper-fruits they fell,
 Nectarine fruits which the compliant boughs
 Yielded them, sidelong as they sat recline
 On the soft downy bank damasked with flowers :
 The savory pulp they chew, and in the rind,
 Still as they thirsted, scoop the brimming stream ;
 Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles
 Wanted, nor youthful dalliance, as beseems
 Fair couple, linked in happy nuptial league,
 Alone as they. About them frisking played
 All beasts of the Earth, since wild, and of all chase
 In wood or wilderness, forest or den ;
 Sporting the lion ramped, and in his paw
 Dandled the kid ; bears, tigers, ounces, pards,
 Gambolled before them ; the unwieldy elephant,
 To make them mirth, used all his might, and wreathed

His little proboscis ; close the serpent sly,
 Insinuating, wove with Gordian twine
 His braided train, and of his fatal guile
 Gave proof unheeded ; others on the grass
 Couched, and now filled with pasture gazing sat,
 Or bedward ruminating ; for the Sun,
 Declined, was hastening now with prone career
 To the ocean isles, and in the ascending scale
 Of Heaven the stars that usher evening rose.

MILTON.

CLEOPATRA.

FROM "ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA," ACT II. SC. 2.

ENOBARBUS. The barge she sat in, like a burnished throne,
 Burned on the water : the poop was beaten gold ;
 Purple the sails, and so perfum'd that
 The winds were lovesick with them ; the oars were silver,
 Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
 The water, which they beat, to follow faster,
 As amorous of their strokes. For her own person,
 It beggared all description : she did lie
 In her pavilion (cloth-of-gold of tissue),
 O'erpeicturing that Venus, where we see
 The fancy outwork nature ; on each side her
 Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
 With divers-colored fans, whose wind did seem

To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,
 And what they undid, did.

AGRIPPA.

O, rare for Antony !

ENO. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
 So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes,
 And made their bends adornings : at the helm
 A seeming mermaid steers ; the silken tackle
 Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
 That yarely frame the office. From the barge
 A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
 Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast
 Her people out upon her ; and Antony,
 Enthroned in the market-place, did sit alone,
 Whistling to the air ; which, but for vacancy,
 Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
 And made a gap in nature.

AGR.

Rare Egyptian !

ENO. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
 Invited her to supper : she replied,
 It should be better he became her guest ;
 Which she entreated. Our courteous Antony,
 Whom ne'er the word of "No" woman heard
 speak,
 Being barbered ten times o'er, goes to the feast ;
 And, for his ordinary, pays his heart
 For what his eyes eat only.

AGR.

Royal wench ! -

MECENAS. Now Antony must leave her utterly.

ENO. Never ; he will not :

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
 Her infinite variety : other women cloy
 The appetites they feed, but she makes hungry
 Where most she satisfies. For vilest things
 Become themselves in her ; that the holy priests
 Bless her when she is riggish.

SHAKESPEARE.

THE VANITY OF THE BEAUTIFUL.

THEY course the glass, and let it take no rest ;
 They pass and spy who gazeth on their face ;
 They darkly ask whose beauty seemeth best ;
 They hark and mark who marketh most their
 grace ;
 They stay their steps, and stalk a stately pace ;
 They jealous are of every sight they see ;
 They strive to seem, but never care to be.

What grudge and grief our joys may then suppress,

To see our hairs, which yellow were as gold,
 Now gray as glass ; to feel and find them less ;
 To scrape the bald skull which was wont to hold
 Our lovely locks with curling sticks controul'd ;
 To look in glass, and spy Sir Wrinkle's chair
 Set fast on fronts which erst were sleek and fair.

GEORGE GASCOIGNE.

THE TOILET.

FROM "THE RAPE OF THE LOCK," CANTO I.

AND now, unveiled, the toilet stands displayed,
 Each silver vase in mystic order laid.
 First, robed in white, the nymph intent adores,
 With head uncovered, the cosmetic powers.
 A heavenly image in the glass appears,
 To that she bends, to that her eyes she rears ;
 The inferior priestess, at her altar's side,
 Trembling begins the sacred rites of pride.
 Unnumbered treasures ope at once, and here
 The various offerings of the world appear ;
 From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
 And decks the goddess with the glittering spoil.
 This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
 And all Arabia breathes from yonder box.
 The tortoise here and elephant unite,
 Transformed to combs, the speckled and the white.
 Here files of pins extend their shining rows,
 Puffs, powders, patches, bibles, billets-doux.
 Now awful beauty puts on all its arms ;
 The fair each moment rises in her charms,
 Repairs her smiles, awakens every grace,
 And calls forth all the wonders of her face ;
 Sees by degrees a purer blush arise,
 And keener lightnings quicken in her eyes.
 The busy sylphs surround their darling care,
 These set the head, and those divide the hair,
 Some fold the sleeve, while others plait the gown ;
 And Betty's praised for labors not her own.

ALEXANDER POPE.

FREEDOM IN DRESS.

FROM "EPICENE; OR, THE SILENT WOMAN," ACT I. SC. I.

STILL to be neat, still to be drest,
 As you were going to a feast ;
 Still to be powdered, still perfumed, —
 Lady, it is to be presumed,
 Though art's hid causes are not found,
 All is not sweet, all is not sound.

Give me a look, give me a face,
 That makes simplicity a grace ;
 Robes loosely flowing, hair as free, —
 Such sweet neglect more taketh me
 Than all the adulteries of art :
 They strike mine eyes, but not my heart.

BEN JONSON.

DELIGHT IN DISORDER.

A SWEET disorder in the dress
 Kindles in clothes a wantonness ;
 A lawn about the shoulders thrown
 Into a fine distraction ;

An erring lace, which here and there
 Intralls the crimson stomacher ;
 A cuff neglectful, and thereby
 Ribbons to flow confusedly ;
 A winning wave, deserving note,
 In the tempestuous petticoat ;
 A careless shoestring, in whose tie
 I see a wild civility ; —
 Do more bewitch me than when art
 Is too precise in every part.

ROBERT HERRICK.

SILLY FAIR.

WHEN Lesbia first I saw, so heavenly fair,
 With eyes so bright and with that awful air,
 I thought my heart which durst so high aspire
 As bold as his who snatched celestial fire.
 But soon as e'er the beauteous idiot spoke,
 Forth from her coral lips such folly broke,
 Like balm the trickling nonsense healed my wound,
 And what her eyes intralld her tongue unbound.

WILLIAM CONGREVE.

CONSTANCY.

ONE eve of beauty, when the sun
 Was on the streams of Guadalquivir,
 To gold converting, one by one,
 The ripples of the mighty river,
 Beside me on the bank was seated
 A Seville girl, with auburn hair,
 And eyes that might the world have cheated, —
 A wild, bright, wicked, diamond pair !

She stooped, and wrote upon the sand,
 Just as the loving sun was going,
 With such a soft, small, shining hand,
 I could have sworn 't was silver flowing.
 Her words were three, and not one more,
 What could Diana's motto be ?
 The siren wrote upon the shore, —
 " Death, not inconstancy ! "

And then her two large languid eyes
 So turned on mine, that, devil take me !
 I set the air on fire with sighs,
 And was the fool she chose to make me !
 Saint Francis would have been deceived
 With such an eye and such a hand ;
 But one week more, and I believed
 As much the woman as the sand.

ANONYMOUS.

TO IANTHE, SLEEPING.

FROM "QUEEN MAB": I.

How wonderful is Death !
 Death and his brother Sleep !
 One, pale as yonder waning moon,
 With lips of lurid blue ;
 The other, rosy as the morn
 When, throned on ocean's wave,
 It blushes o'er the world :
 Yet both so passing wonderful !

Hath then the gloomy Power,
 Whose reign is in the tainted sepulchres,
 Seized on her sinless soul ?
 Must then that peerless form
 Which love and admiration cannot view
 Without a beating heart, those azure veins
 Which steal like streams along a field of snow,
 That lovely outline, which is fair
 As breathing marble, perish ?
 Must putrefaction's breath
 Leave nothing of this heavenly sight
 But loathsomeness and ruin ?
 Spare nothing but a gloomy theme,
 On which the lightest heart might moralize ?
 Or is it only a sweet slumber
 Stealing o'er sensation,
 Which the breath of roseate morning
 Chaseth into darkness ?
 Will Ianthé wake again,
 And give that faithful bosom joy,
 Whose sleepless spirit waits to catch
 Light, life, and rapture from her smile ?

Yes ! she will wake again,
 Although her glowing limbs are motionless,
 And silent those sweet lips,
 Once breathing eloquence
 That might have soothed a tiger's rage,
 Or thawed the cold heart of a conqueror.
 Her dewy eyes are closed,
 And on their lids, whose texture fine
 Scarce hides the dark blue orbs beneath,
 The baby Sleep is pillowed :
 Her golden tresses shade
 The bosom's stainless pride,
 Curling like tendrils of the parasite
 Around a marble column.

A gentle start convulsed Ianthé's frame :
 Her veiny eyelids quietly unclosed ;
 Moveless awhile the dark blue orbs remained.
 She looked around in wonder, and beheld
 Henry, who kneeled in silence by her couch,
 Watching her sleep with looks of speechless love,
 And the bright-beaming stars
 That through the casement shone.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

THE BELLS.

HEAR the sledges with the bells —
 Silver bells !
 What a world of merriment their melody foretells !
 How they tinkle, tinkle, tinkle,
 In the icy air of night !
 While the stars that oversprinkle
 All the heavens seem to twinkle
 With a crystalline delight, —
 Keeping time, time, time,
 In a sort of Runic rhyme,
 To the tintinnabulation that so musically wells
 From the bells, bells, bells, bells,
 Bells, bells, bells, —
 From the jingling and the tinkling of the bells.

Hear the mellow wedding bells —
 Golden bells !
 What a world of happiness their harmony foretells !
 Through the balmy air of night
 How they ring out their delight !
 From the molten-golden notes,
 And all in tune,
 What a liquid ditty floats
 To the turtle-dove that listens, while she gloats
 On the moon !
 O, from out the sounding cells,
 What a gush of euphony voluminously wells !
 How it swells !
 How it dwells
 On the Future ! how it tells
 Of the rapture that impels
 To the swinging and the ringing
 Of the bells, bells, bells,
 Of the bells, bells, bells, bells,
 Bells, bells, bells, —
 To the rhyming and the chiming of the bells.

Hear the loud alarum bells —
 Brazen bells !
 What a tale of terror, now, their turbulency tells !
 In the startled ear of night
 How they scream out their affright !
 Too much horrified to speak,
 They can only shriek, shriek,
 Out of tune,
 In the clamorous appealing to the mercy of the fire,
 In a mad exostulation with the deaf and frantic fire
 Leaping higher, higher, higher,
 With a desperate desire,
 And a resolute endeavor,
 Now — now to sit, or never,
 By the side of the pale-faced moon.
 O the bells, bells, bells,
 What a tale their terror tells

Of despair !
 How they clang and clash and roar !
 What a horror they outpour
 On the bosom of the palpitating air !
 Yet the ear it fully knows,
 By the twanging,
 And the clanging,
 How the danger ebbs and flows ;
 Yet the ear distinctly tells,
 In the jangling,
 And the wrangling,
 How the danger sinks and swells,
 By the sinking or the swelling in the anger of the bells, —
 Of the bells, —
 Of the bells, bells, bells, bells,
 Bells, bells, bells, —
 In the clamor and the clangor of the bells !

Hear the tolling of the bells —
 Iron bells !
 What a world of solemn thought their monody compels !

In the silence of the night,
 How we shiver with affright
 At the melancholy menace of their tone !
 For every sound that floats
 From the rust within their throats
 Is a groan.

And the people — ah, the people —
 They that dwell up in the steeple,
 All alone,

And who tolling, tolling, tolling,
 In that muffled monotone,
 Feel a glory in so rolling

On the human heart a stone, —
 They are neither man nor woman, —
 They are neither brute nor human, —

They are ghouls :
 And their king it is who tolls ;
 And he rolls, rolls, rolls,

Rolls,
 A pæan from the bells !
 And his merry bosom swells
 With the pæan of the bells !
 And he dances and he yells ;
 Keeping time, time, time,
 In a sort of Runic rhyme,

To the pæan of the bells, —
 Of the bells :
 Keeping time, time, time,
 In a sort of Runic rhyme,
 To the throbbing of the bells, —
 Of the bells, bells, bells, —
 To the sobbing of the bells ;
 Keeping time, time, time,
 As he knells, knells, knells,

In a happy Runic rhyme,
 To the rolling of the bells, —
 Of the bells, bells, bells, —
 To the tolling of the bells,
 Of the bells, bells, bells, bells —
 Bells, bells, bells, —
 To the moaning and the groaning of the bells.

EDGAR ALLAN POE.

THE BELLS OF SHANDON.

Sabbata pango ;
 Funcra plango ;
 Solemnia clango.

INSCRIPTION ON AN OLD BELL.

WITH deep affection
 And recollection
 I often think of
 Those Shandon bells,
 Whose sounds so wild would,
 In the days of childhood,
 Fling round my cradle
 Their magic spells.

On this I ponder
 Where'er I wander,
 And thus grow fonder,
 Sweet Cork, of thee, —
 With thy bells of Shandon,
 That sound so grand on
 The pleasant waters
 Of the river Lee.

I've heard bells chiming
 Full many a clime in,
 Tolling sublime in Cathedral shrine,
 While at a glib rate
 Brass tongues would vibrate ;
 But all their music
 Spoke naught like thine.

For memory, dwelling
 On each proud swelling
 Of thy belfry, knelling
 Its bold notes free,
 Made the bells of Shandon
 Sound far more grand on
 The pleasant waters
 Of the river Lee.

I've heard bells tolling
 "Old Adrian's Mole" in,
 Their thunder rolling
 From the Vatican, —
 And cymbals glorious
 Swinging uproarious
 In the gorgeous turrets
 Of Notre Dame ;

But thy sounds were sweeter
 Than the dome of Peter
 Flings o'er the Tiber,
 Pealing solemnly.
 O, the bells of Shandon
 Sound far more grand on
 The pleasant waters
 Of the river Lee.

There's a bell in Moscow ;
 While on tower and kiosko
 In St. Sophia
 The Turkman gets,
 And loud in air
 Calls men to prayer,
 From the tapering summit
 Of tall minarets.

Such empty phantom
 I freely grant them ;
 But there's an anthem
 More dear to me, —
 'T is the bells of Shandon,
 That sound so grand on
 The pleasant waters
 Of the river Lee.

FRANCIS MAHONY (Father Prout).

CITY BELLS.

FROM "THE LAY OF ST. ALOYS."

LOUD and clear
 From the St. Nicholas tower, on the listening ear,
 With solemn swell,
 The deep-toned bell
 Flings to the gale a funeral knell ;
 And hark ! — at its sound,
 As a cunning old hound,
 When he opens, at once causes all the young whelps
 Of the cry to put in their less dignified yelps,
 So the little bells all,
 No matter how small,
 From the steeples both inside and outside the wall,
 With bell-metal throat
 Respond to the note,
 And join the lament that a prelate so pious is Forced thus to leave his disconsolate diocese,
 Or, as Blois' Lord May'r
 Is heard to declare,
 "Should leave this here world for to go to that there."

RICHARD HARRIS BARHAM.

THOSE EVENING BELLS.

THOSE evening bells ! those evening bells !
 How many a tale their music tells
 Of youth, and home, and that sweet time
 When last I heard their soothing chime !

Those joyous hours are passed away ;
 And many a heart that then was gay
 Within the tomb now darkly dwells,
 And hears no more those evening bells.

And so 't will be when I am gone, —
 That tuneful peal will still ring on ;
 While other bards shall walk these dells,
 And sing your praise, sweet evening bells.

THOMAS MOORE.

CARILLON.

IN the ancient town of Bruges,
 In the quaint old Flemish city,
 As the evening shades descended,
 Low and loud and sweetly blended,
 Low at times and loud at times,
 And changing like a poet's rhymes,
 Rang the beautiful wild chimes
 From the Belfry in the market
 Of the ancient town of Bruges.

Then, with deep sonorous clangor
 Calmly answering their sweet anger,
 When the wrangling bells had ended,
 Slowly struck the clock eleven,
 And, from out the silent heaven,
 Silence on the town descended.
 Silence, silence everywhere,
 On the earth and in the air,
 Save that footsteps here and there
 Of some burgher home returning,
 By the street lamps faintly burning,
 For a moment woke the echoes
 Of the ancient town of Bruges.

But amid my broken slumbers
 Still I heard those magic numbers,
 As they loud proclaimed the flight
 And stolen marches of the night ;
 Till their chimes in sweet collision
 Mingled with each wandering vision,
 Mingled with the fortune-telling
 Gypsy-bands of dreams and fancies,
 Which amid the waste expanses
 Of the silent land of trances
 Have their solitary dwelling.
 All else seemed asleep in Bruges,
 In the quaint old Flemish city.

And I thought how like these chimes
 Are the poet's airy rhymes,
 All his rhymes and roundelays,
 His conceits, and songs, and ditties,
 From the belfry of his brain,
 Scattered downward, though in vain,
 On the roofs and stones of cities !
 For by night the drowsy ear
 Under its curtains cannot hear,
 And by day men go their ways,
 Hearing the music as they pass,
 But deeming it no more, alas !
 Than the hollow sound of brass.

Yet perchance a sleepless wight,
 Lodging at some humble inn
 In the narrow lanes of life,
 When the dusk and hush of night
 Shut out the incessant din
 Of daylight and its toil and strife,
 May listen with a calm delight
 To the poet's melodies,
 Till he hears, or dreams he hears,
 Intermingled with the song,
 Thoughts that he has cherished long ;
 Hears amid the chime and singing
 The bells of his own village ringing,
 And wakes, and finds his slumberous eyes
 Wet with most delicious tears.

Thus dreamed I, as by night I lay
 In Bruges, at the Fleur-de-Blé,
 Listening with a wild delight
 To the chimes that, through the night,
 Rang their changes from the Belfry
 Of that quaint old Flemish city.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

THE CUCKOO CLOCK.

FROM "THE BIRTHDAY."

BUT chief — surpassing all — a cuckoo clock !
 That crowning wonder ! miracle of art !
 How have I stood entranced uncounted minutes,
 With held-in breath, and eyes intently fixed
 On that small magic door, that when complete
 The expiring hour — the irreversible —
 Flew open with a startling suddenness
 That, though expected, sent the rushing blood
 In mantling flushes o'er my upturned face ;
 And as the bird, (that more than mortal fowl !)
 With perfect mimicry of natural tone,
 Note after note exact Time's message told,
 How my heart's pulse kept time with the charmed
 voice !

And when it ceased made simultaneous pause
 As the small door clapt to, and all was still.

CAROLINE BOWLES (MRS. SOUTHEY).

OZYMANDIAS OF EGYPT.

I MET a traveller from an antique land
 Who said : Two vast and trunkless legs of stone
 Stand in the desert. Near them on the sand,
 Half sunk, a shattered visage lies, whose frown
 And wrinkled lip and sneer of cold command
 Tell that its sculptor well those passions read
 Which yet survive, stamped on these lifeless things,

The hand that mocked them and the heart that fed ;
 And on the pedestal these words appear :
 " My name is Ozymandias, king of kings :
 Look on my works, ye Mighty, and despair !"
 Nothing beside remains. Round the decay
 Of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare,
 The lone and level sands stretch far away.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

ADDRESS TO THE MUMMY AT BEL- ZONI'S EXHIBITION.

AND thou hast walked about (how strange a story !)

In Thebes's streets three thousand years ago,
 When the Memnonium was in all its glory,
 And time had not begun to overthrow
 Those temples, palaces, and piles stupendous,
 Of which the very ruins are tremendous.

Speak ! for thou long enough hast acted dummy ;
 Thou hast a tongue, — come, let us hear its
 tune ;
 Thou 'rt standing on thy legs, above ground,
 mummy !

Revisiting the glimpses of the moon, —
 Not like thin ghosts or disembodied creatures,
 But with thy bones and flesh and limbs and features.

Tell us — for doubtless thou canst recollect —
 To whom should we assign the Sphinx's fame ?
 Was Cheops or Cephrenes architect
 Of either pyramid that bears his name ?
 Is Pompey's Pillar really a misnomer ?
 Had Thebes a hundred gates, as sung by Homer ?

Perhaps thou wert a Mason, and forbidden
 By oath to tell the secrets of thy trade, —
 Then say what secret melody was hidden
 In Memnon's statue, which at sunrise played ?
 Perhaps thou wert a priest, — if so, my struggles
 Are vain, for priestcraft never owns its juggles.

Perhaps that very hand, now pinioned flat,
 Has hob-a-nobbed with Pharaoh, glass to glass ;
 Or dropped a halfpenny in Homer's hat ;
 Or doffed thine own to let Queen Dido pass ;

Or held, by Solomon's own invitation,
A torch at the great temple's dedication.

I need not ask thee if that hand, when armed,
Has any Roman soldier mauled and knuckled ;
For thou wert dead and buried and embalmed
Ere Romulus and Remus had been suckled :
Antiquity appears to have begun
Long after thy primeval race was run.

Thou couldst develop — if that withered tongue Might tell us what those sightless orbs have seen —

How the world looked when it was fresh and young,
And the great deluge still had left it green ;
Or was it then so old that history's pages
Contained no record of its early ages ?

Still silent ! incommunicative elf !
Art sworn to secrecy ? then keep thy vows ;
But prithee tell us something of thyself,
Reveal the secrets of thy prison-house ;
Since in the world of spirits thou hast slumbered,
What hast thou seen, what strange adventures numbered ?

Since first thy form was in this box extended
We have, above ground, seen some strange mutations :

The Roman empire has begun and ended,
New worlds have risen, we have lost old nations ;
And countless kings have into dust been humbled,
While not a fragment of thy flesh has crumbled.

Didst thou not hear the pother o'er thy head,
When the great Persian conqueror, Cambyses,
Marched armies o'er thy tomb with thundering
tread, —

O'erthrew Osiris, Orus, Apis, Isis ;
And shook the pyramids with fear and wonder,
When the gigantic Memnon fell asunder ?

If the tomb's secrets may not be confessed,
The nature of thy private life unfold :
A heart has throbb'd beneath that leathern breast,
And tears adown that dusty cheek have rolled ;
Have children climbed those knees, and kissed that face ?
What was thy name and station, age and race ?

Statue of flesh, — immortal of the dead !
Imperishable type of evanescence !
Posthumous man, — who quit'st thy narrow bed,
And standest undecayed within our presence !
Thou wilt hear nothing till the judgment morning,
When the great trump shall thrill thee with its warning.

Why should this worthless tegument endure,
If its undying guest be lost forever ?
O, let us keep the soul embalmed and pure
In living virtue, that when both must sever,
Although corruption may our frame consume,
The immortal spirit in the skies may bloom !

HORACE SMITH.

ODE ON A GRECIAN URN.

THOU still unravished bride of quietness !
Thou foster-child of Silence and slow Time,
Sylvan historian, who canst thus express
A flowery tale more sweetly than our rhyme :
What leaf-fringed legend haunts about thy shape
Of deities or mortals, or of both,
In Tempe or the dales of Arcady ?
What men or gods are these ? What maidens loath ?
What mad pursuit ? What struggles to escape ?
What pipes and timbrels ? What wild ecstasy ?

Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard
Are sweeter ; therefore, ye soft pipes, play on ;
Not to the sensual ear, but, more endeared,
Pipe to the spirit ditties of no tone.

Fair youth beneath the trees, thou canst not leave

Thy song, nor ever can those trees be bare.
Bold lover, never, never canst thou kiss,
Though winning near the goal, — yet do not grieve :

She cannot fade, though thou hast not thy
bliss ;

Forever wilt thou love, and she be fair !

Ah, happy, happy boughs ! that cannot shed
Your leaves, nor ever bid the spring adieu ;
And happy melodist, unwearied,
Forever piping songs forever new ;
More happy love ! more happy, happy love !
Forever warm and still to be enjoyed,
Forever panting and forever young ;
All breathing human passion far above,
That leaves a heart high-sorrowful and cloyed,
A burning forehead, and a parching tongue.

Who are these coming to the sacrifice ?
To what green altar, O mysterious priest,
Lead'st thou that heifer lowing at the skies,
And all her silken flanks with garlands drest ?
What little town by river or sea-shore,
Or mountain-built with peaceful citadel,
Is emptied of its folk, this pious morn ?
And, little town, thy streets forevermore
Will silent be, and not a soul to tell
Why thou art desolate can e'er return.

O Attic shape ! Fair attitude ! with brede
Of marble men and maidens overwrought,
With forest branches and the trodden weed ;
Thou, silent form ! dost tease us out of thought
As doth eternity. Cold Pastoral !

When old age shall this generation waste,
Thou shalt remain, in midst of other woe
Than ours, a friend to man, to whom thou say'st,

"Beauty is truth, truth beauty," — that is all
Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know.

JOHN KEATS.

Illumed with fluid gold, his near approach
Betoken glad. Lo ! now, apparent all
Aslant the dew-bright earth, and colored air,
He looks in boundless majesty abroad ;
And sheds the shining day, that burnished plays
On rocks, and hills, and towers, and wand'ring

SUNSET IN THE MOUNTAINS.

The western waves of ebbing day
Rolled o'er the glen their level way ;
Each purple peak, each flinty spire,
Was bathed in floods of living fire.
But not a setting beam could glow
Within the dark ravines below,
Where twined the path in shadow hid,
Round many a rocky pyramid,
Shooting abruptly from the dell
Its thunder-splintered pinnacle ;
Round many an insulated mass,
The native bulwarks of the pass,

Their rocky summits, split and rent,
Formed turret, dome, or battlement,

Or seemed fantastically set
With cupola or minaret,
Wild crests as pagod ever decked,
Or mosque of Eastern architect.
Nor were these earth-born castles bare,
Nor lacked they many a banner fair ;
For, from their shivered brows displayed,
Far o'er the unfathomable glade,
All twinkling with the dew-drops' sheen,
The brier-rose fell in streamers green,
And creeping shrubs, of thousand dyes,
Waved in the west-wind's summer sighs.

THE POET'S RETIREMENT.

Fair Quiet, have I found thee here,
And Innocence, thy sister dear ?
Mistaken long, I sought you then
In busy companies of men.
Your sacred plants, if here below,
Only among the plants will grow ;
Society is all but rude
To this delicious solitude.

Here at the fountain's sliding foot,
Or at some fruit-tree's mossy root,
Casting the body's vest aside,
My soul into the boughs does glide :
There, like a bird, it sits and sings,
Then whets and claps its silver wings,
And, till prepared for longer flight,
Waves in its plumes the various light.

EDEN.

Yea, more,
A heaven on earth : for blissful paradise
Of God the garden was, by him in the east
Of Eden planted.

Paradise Lost, Book iv.

MILTON.

ATHENS.

On the Ægean shore a city stands,
Built nobly, pure the air, and light the soil,
Athens, the eye of Greece, mother of arts
And eloquence, native to famous wits,

Or hospitable, in her sweet recess,
 City or suburban, studious walks and shades ;
 See there the olive grove of Academe,
 Plato's retirement, where the Attic bird
 Trills her thick-warbled notes the summer long.

Paradise Regained, Book iv.

MILTON.

ROME.

O Rome ! my country ! city of the soul !
 The orphans of the heart must turn to thee,
 Lone mother of dead empires !

The Niobe of nations ! there she stands,
 Childless and crowless, in her voiceless woe ;
 An empty urn within her withered hands,
 Whose holy dust was scattered long ago.

Childe Harold, Cant. iv.

BYRON.

TEMPLE OF THE CLITUMNUS.

But thou, Clitumnus ! in thy sweetest wave
 Of the most living crystal that was e'er
 The haunt of river nymph, to gaze and lave
 Her limbs where nothing hid them, thou dost rear

Thy grassy banks. . . .

And on thy happy shore a temple still,
 Of small and delicate proportion, keeps,
 Upon a mild declivity of hill,
 Its memory of thee ; beneath it sweeps
 Thy current's calmness ; oft from out it leaps
 The finny darter with the glittering scales,
 Who dwells and revels in thy glassy deeps ;
 While, chance, some scattered water-lily sails Down where the shallower wave still tells its bubbling tales.

Childe Harold, Cant. iv.

BYRON.

THE FALL OF TERNI.

The roar of waters ! — from the headlong height
 Velino cleaves the wave-worn precipice ;
 The fall of waters ! rapid as the light
 The flashing mass foams shaking the abyss ;
 The hell of waters ! where they howl and hiss,
 And boil in endless torture.

Childe Harold, Cant. iv.

BYRON.

VENICE.

I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs ;
 A palace and a prison on each hand :
 I saw from out the wave her structures rise
 As from the stroke of the enchanter's wand :
 A thousand years their cloudy wings expand
 Around me, and a dying glory smiles
 O'er the far times, when many a subject land
 Looked to the winged Lion's marble piles,
 Where Venice sate in state, throned on her hundred isles !

Childe Harold, Cant. iv.

BYRON.

AN ITALIAN RAVINE.

Beneath this crag,

Huge as despair, as if in weariness,
 The melancholy mountain yawns ; below,
 You hear but see not an impetuous torrent
 Raging among the caverns, and a bridge
 Crosses the chasin ; and high above there grow,
 With intersecting trunks, from crag to crag,
 Cedars and yews and pines, whose tangled hair
 Is matted into one solid roof of shade
 By the dark ivy's twine. At noonday here
 'Tis twilight, and at sunset blackest night.

The Cent.

SHELLEY.

THE RIVER THAMES.

My eye descending from the Hill, surveys
 Where Thames among the wanton valleys strays.
 Thames ! the most loved of all the Ocean's sons.

Though with those streams he no resemblance hold,

Whose foam is amber, and their gravel gold :
 His genuine and less guilty wealth to explore,
 Search not his bottom, but survey his shore,
 O'er which he kindly spreads his spacious wing
 And hatches plenty for the ensuing spring.

No unexpected inundations spoil
 The mower's hopes, nor mock the ploughman's toil ;
 But godlike his unwearied bounty flows ;
 First loves to do, then loves the good he does.

Cooper's Hill.

SIR J. DENHAM.

MACBETH'S CASTLE.

DUNCAN. This castle hath a pleasant seat : the air

Nimble and sweetly recommends itself
 Unto our gentle senses.

BANQUO. . . . The heaven's breath
 Smells wooingly here : no jutty, frieze,
 Buttress, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
 Hath made his pendent bed and procreant cradle :
 Where they most breed and haunt, I have observed,

The air is delicate.

Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 6.

SHAKESPEARE.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE.

Who hath not proved how feebly words essay
 To fix one spark of Beauty's heavenly ray ?
 Who doth not feel, until his failing sight
 Faints into dimness with its own delight,
 His changing cheek, his sinking heart confess
 The might — the majesty of Loveliness ?

The Bride of Abydos, Cant. i.

BYRON.

Framed in the prodigality of nature.

King Richard III., Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

First likes the whole, then separates what he sees ;
On several parts a several praise bestows,
The ruby lips, the well-proportioned nose,
The snowy skin, and raven-glossy hair,
The dimpled cheek, and forehead rising fair,
And e'en in sleep itself, a smiling air.
From thence his eyes descending viewed the rest,
Her plump round arms, white hands, and heaving
breast.

Cymon and Iphigenia.

DRYDEN.

That whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster.

Othello, Act v. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

There she sees a damsel bright,
Drest in a silken robe of white,
That shadowy in the moonlight shone :
The neck that made that white robe wan,
Her stately neck, and arms were bare ;
Her blue-veined feet unsandalled were,
And wildly glittered here and there
The gems entangled in her hair.
I guess, 't was frightful there to see
A lady so richly clad as she, —
Beautiful exceedingly !

Christabel.

S. T. COLERIDGE.

Rich and rare were the gems she wore,
And a bright gold ring on her wand she bore.

Rich and Rare.

MOORE.

Her beauty hangs upon the cheek of night
Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear.

Romeo and Juliet, Act i. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

Alas ! how little can a moment show
Of an eye where feeling plays
In ten thousand dewy rays ;
A face o'er which a thousand shadows go.

The Triad.

WORDSWORTH.

Stabbed with a white wench's black eye.

Romeo and Juliet, Act ii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

The fringed curtains of thine eye advance.

The Tempest, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Heart on her lips, and soul within her eyes,
Soft as her climate, and sunny as her skies.

Beppo.

BYRON.

As she fled fast through sun and shade,
The happy winds upon her played,
Blowing the ringlets from the braid.

Sir Lancelot and Queen Guinevere.

TENNYSON.

And ne'er did Grecian chisel trace
A Nymph, a Naiad, or a Grace,
Of finer form, or lovelier face.

What though no rule of courtly grace
To measured mood had trained her pace —
A foot more light, a step more true,
Ne'er from the heath-flower dashed the dew.

The Lady of the Lake, Cant. i.

SCOTT.

Her pretty feet

Like snailes did creep

A little out, and then,

As if they played at bo-peep,

Did soon draw in agen.

Upon her Feet.

R. HERRICK.

No longer shall thy bodice, aptly laced,
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,
That air and harmony of shape express,
Fine by degrees, and beautifully less.

Henry and Emma.

M. PRIOR.

A rosebud set with little wilful thorns,
And sweet as English air could make her, she.

The Princess.

TENNYSON.

It was a lovely sight to see
The Lady Christabel, when she
Was praying at the old oak-tree.

Amid the jagged shadows

Of mossy leafless boughs,

Kneeling in the moonlight,

To make her gentle vows ;

Her slender palms together prest,

Heaving sometimes on her breast ;

Her face resigned to bliss or bale, —

Her face, O, call it fair, not pale.

Christabel.

S. T. COLERIDGE.

Look here, upon this picture, and on this ;
The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.
See, what a grace was seated on this brow :
Hyperion's curls ; the front of Jove himself ;
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command ;
A station like the herald Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill ;
A combination, and a form, indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man.

Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

HOR. I saw him once : he was a goodly king.

HAM. He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Ay, every inch a king.

King Lear, Act iv. Sc. 6.

SHAKESPEARE.

The glass of fashion, and the mould of form,
The observed of all observers !

Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

The wealthy curled darlings of our nation.

Othello, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

We'll have a swashing and a martial outside.

As You Like It, Act i. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not expressed in faucey ; rich, not gaudy :
For the apparel oft proclaims the man.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-faced villain,

A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A threadbare juggler, and a fortune-teller,
A needy, hollow-eyed, sharp-looking wretch,
A living-dead man.

Comedy of Errors, Act v. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadowed livery of the burnished sun,
To whom I am a neighbor, and near bred.
Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the icicles,
And let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.

Merchant of Venice, Act ii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Falstaff sweats to death,
And lards the lean earth as he walks along.
Were't not for laughing, I should pity him.

King Henry IV., Part 1. Act ii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Yond' Cassius has a lean and hungry look ;
He thinks too much : such men are dangerous.

Julius Cæsar, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.

Sonnet LXX.

SHAKESPEARE.

My tables, my tables, — meet it is, I set it down,
That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

CONDITIONS OF LIFE.

My nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand.

Sonnet CXI.

SHAKESPEARE.

I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news ;
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers (which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet),
Told of a many thousand warlike French
That were embattalèd and ranked in Kent :

Another lean, unwashed artificer
Cuts off his tale and talks of Arthur's death.

King John, Act iv. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Mechanic slaves
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers.

Antony and Cleopatra, Act v. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

The charge is prepared, the lawyers are met,
The judges all ranged ; a terrible show !

The Beggar's Opera, Act iii. Sc. 2.

J. GAY.

The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven.

Midsummer Night's Dream, Act v. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

O, now, forever
Farewell the tranquil mind ! farewell content !
Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,
That make ambition virtue ! O, farewell !
Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife,
The royal banner, and all quality,
Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war !
And, O you mortal engines, whose rude throats
The immortal Jove's dread clamors counterfeit,
Farewell ! Othello's occupation's gone !

Othello, Act iii. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast
Ready with every nod to tumble down.

King Richard III., Act iii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

Not all the water in the rough rude sea
Can wash the balm from an anointed king.

King Richard II., Act iii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would,
Acts little of his will.

Hamlet, Act iv. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength.

King Richard III., Act v. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

High on a throne of royal state, which far
Outshone the wealth of Ormus and of Ind,
Or where the gorgeous East with richest hand
Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold,
Satan exalted sat, by merit raised
To that bad eminence.

Paradise Lost, Book ii.

MILTON.

PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS — WOMEN.

A maid
That paragons description and wild fame ;
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens
And in th' essential vesture of creation
Does bear all excellency.

Othello, Act ii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

I have marked
A thousand blushing apparitions
To start into her face, a thousand innocent
shames,
In angel whiteness, beat away those blushes.
Much Ado about Nothing, Act iv. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

Ladies like variegated tulips show,
'T is to their changes half their charms we owe.
Fine by defect, and delicately weak,
Their happy spots the nice admirer take.
Moral Essays, Part II. POPE.

Or ere those shoes were old
With which she followed my poor father's body,
Like Niobe, all tears ; — why she, even she (O God ! a beast that wants discourse of reason Would have mourned longer) married with my uncle,
My father's brother.
Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 2. SHAKESPEARE.

I have no other but a woman's reason ;
I think him so because I think him so.
Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act i. Sc. 2. SHAKESPEARE.

Had she been true,
If heaven would make me such another world
Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,
I'd not have sold her for it.
Othello, Act v. Sc. 2. SHAKESPEARE.

IAGO. Come on, come on ; you are pictures out of doors,
Bells in your parlors, wild-cats in your kitchens,
Saints in your injuries, devils being offended.

For I am nothing, if not critical.

DESDEMONA. . . . But what praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed ? . . .

IAGO. She that was ever fair and never proud,
Had tongue at will and yet was never loud,
Never lacked gold and yet went never gay,
Fled from her wish, and yet said, — "Now I may ;"

She that being angered, her revenge being nigh,
Bade her wrong stay and her displeasure fly ;
She that in wisdom never was so frail

To change the cod's head for the salmon's tail ;
She that could think and ne'er disclose her mind,
See suitors following and not look behind ;
She was a wight, — if ever such wight were, —

DES. To do what ?

IAGO. To suckle fools and chronicle small beer.

DES. O, most lame and impotent conclusion !

Othello, Act ii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low, — an excellent thing in woman.
King Lear, Act v. Sc. 3. SHAKESPEARE.

Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.
Romeo and Juliet, Act iv. Sc. 2. SHAKESPEARE.

Shalt show us how divine a thing
A woman may be made.
To a Young Lady. WORDSWORTH.

Earth's noblest thing, a woman perfected.
Irenè. J. R. LOWELL.

PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS — MEN.

Patience, my lord ! why, 't is the soul of peace ;
Of all the virtues 't is nearest kin to heaven ;
It makes men look like gods. The best of men
That e'er wore earth about him was a sufferer,
A soft, meek, patient, humble, tranquil spirit,
The first true gentleman that ever breathed.

The Honest Whore, Part I. Act i. Sc. 12. T. DEKKER.

O, could I flow like thee,* and make thy stream
My great example, as it is my theme !
Though deep yet clear, though gentle yet not dull ;

Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full.
Cooper's Hill. SIR J. DENHAM.

He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one ;
Exceeding wise, fair-spoken, and persuading :
Lofty, and sour to them that loved him not ;
But to those men that sought him sweet as summer.

King Henry VIII., Act iv. Sc. 2. SHAKESPEARE.

Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales,
And younger hearings are quite ravished,
So sweet and voluble is his discourse.

Love's Labor Lost, Act ii. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

Frank, haughty, rash, — the Rupert of debate.
The New Timon, Part I. E. BULWER-LYTTON.

For though I am not splenetic and rash,
Yet have I in me something dangerous.

Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter : that, when he speaks,
The air, a chartered libertine, is still.

King Henry V., Act i. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

A Daniel come to judgment ! . . .
O wise young judge !

Merchant of Venice, Act iv. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

* The river Thames.

A merrier man,

Within the limit of becoming mirth,
I never spent an hour's talk withal.

Love's Labor Lost, Act ii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

As merry as the day is long.

Much Ado about Nothing, Act ii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

In all thy humors, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a touchy, testy, pleasant fellow;
Hast so much wit and mirth and spleen about
thee,

There is no living with thee, nor without thee.

Spectator, No. 68.

J. ADDISON.

Who the silent man can prize,
If a fool he be or wise?
Yet, though lonely seem the wood,
Therein may lurk the beast of blood;
Often bashful looks conceal
Tongue of fire and heart of steel;
And deem not thou in forest gray,
Every dappled skin thy prey,
Lest thou rouse, with luckless spear,
The tiger for the fallow-deer!

The Gulistan.

BISHOP HEBER.

A shallow brain behind a senior's mask,
An oracle within an empty eask,
The solemn fop; significant and budge;
A fool with judges, amongst fools a judge.

Conversation.

COWPER.

A snapper-up of unconsidered trifles.

Winter's Tale, Act iv. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Dubious is such a scrupulous good man —
Yes — you may catch him tripping if you can,
He would not, with a peremptory tone,
Assert the nose upon his face his own;
With hesitation admirably slow,
He humbly hopes — presumes — it may be so.

Conversation.

COWPER.

Seemed washing his hands with invisible soap
In imperceptible water.

Miss Kilmansegg.

T. HOOD.

In a bondman's key,

With 'bated breath, and whisp'ring humbleness.

Merchant of Venice, Act 1. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

I am the very pink of courtesy.

Romeo and Juliet, Act ii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep,
And in his simple show he harbors treason.
The fox barks not, when he would steal the lamb.

King Henry VI., Part II. Act iii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

All was false and hollow; though his tongue
Dropped manna, and could make the worse appear

The better reason, to perplex and dash
Maturest counsels; for his thoughts were low;
To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful: yet he pleased the ear,
And with persuasive accent thus began.

Paradise Lost, Book ii.

MILTON.

A little more than kin, and less than kind.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Yet do I fear thy nature:
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness.

Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

Of manners gentle, of affections mild;
In wit a man, simplicity a child.

A safe companion and an easy friend
Unblamed through life, lamented in thy end.

Epitaph on Gay.

POPE.

Here lies David Garrick, describe me who can,
An abridgment of all that was pleasant in man.

Retaliation.

GOLDSMITH.

He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day for melting charity.

King Henry IV., Part II. Act iv. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

A happy soul, that all the way
To heaven hath a summer's day.

In Praise of Lessius's Rule of Health.

R. CRASHAW.

An idler is a watch that wants both hands;
As useless if it goes as if it stands.

Retirement.

COWPER.

A lazy lolling sort,
Unseen at church, at senate, or at court
Of ever-listless idlers, that attend
No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend.
There too, my Paridell! she marked thee there,
Stretched on the rack of a too easy chair,
And heard thy everlasting yawn confess
The pains and penalties of idleness.

The Dunciad, Book iv.

POPE.

I pray you, in your letters,
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me as I am; nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice: then, must you speak

Of one that loved, not wisely, but too well;
Of one not easily jealous, but, being wrought,
Perplexed in the extreme; of one, whose hand,
Like the base Indian, threw a pearl away,
Richer than all his tribe; of one, whose subdued
eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Set you down this.

Othello, Act v. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

MOODS.

Unpack my heart with words,
And fall a cursing, like a very drab.
A scullion !
Fie upon 't ! Foh !

Hamlet, Act ii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot myself,

But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
Into a towering passion.

Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

A woman moved is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty.

Taming of the Shrew, Act v. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Had it pleased Heaven
To try me with affliction ; had he rained
All kinds of sores and shames on my bare head,
Steeped me in poverty to the very lips,
Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes, —
I should have found in some part of my soul
A drop of patience : but, alas, to make me
A fixed figure, for the time of scorn
To point his slow unmoving finger at !

Othello, Act iv. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison-house,
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,

Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres,

Thy knotted and combinèd locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine :
But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

I feel my sinews slacken with the fright,
And a cold sweat thrills down o'er all my limbs,
As if I were dissolving into water.

The Tempest.

DRYDEN.

Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind :
The thief doth fear each bush an officer.

King Richard II., Act v. Sc. 6.

SHAKESPEARE.

I cannot speak, tears so obstruct my words,
And echoke me with unutterable joy.

Caius Marius.

T. OTWAY.

Men met each other with erected look,
The steps were higher that they took,
Friends to congratulate their friends made haste ;
And long-inveterate foes saluted as they passed.

Threnodia Augustalis.

DRYDEN.

There is a mood
(I sing not to the vacant and the young),
There is a kindly mood of melancholy,
That wings the soul and points her to the skies.

Ruins of Rome.

J. DYER.

BATTLE.

By Heaven ! it is a splendid sight to see
(For one who hath no friend, no brother there)
Their rival scarfs of mixed embroidery,
Their various arms that glitter in the air !
What gallant war-hounds rouse them from their lair,
And gnash their fangs, loud yelling for the prey !
All join the chase, but few the triumph share ;
The grave shall bear the chiefest prize away,
And havoc scarce for joy can number their array.

Childe Harold, Cant. i.

BYRON.

From the glittering staff unfurled
Th' imperial ensign, which, full high advanced,
Shone like a meteor, streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich emblazed,
Seraphic arms and trophies ; all the while
Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds :
At which the universal host up sent
A shout that tore hell's concave, and beyond
Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night.

Paradise Lost, Book i.

PANIC.

Such a numerous host
Fled not in silence through the frightened deep,
With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
Confusion worse confounded.

Paradise Lost, Book ii.

DISTANCE.

How he fell
From heaven they fabled, thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal battlements ; from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day ; and with the setting sun
Dropt from the zenith like a falling star.

ST. PETER'S AT ROME.

Vastness which grows, but grows to harmonize,
 All musical in its immensities ;
 Rich marbles, richer painting, shrines where flame
 The lamps of gold, and haughty dome which vies
 In air with earth's chief structures, though their frame
 Sits on the firm-set ground, — and this the cloud must claim.

Here condense thy soul
 To more immediate objects, and control
 Thy thoughts until thy mind hath got by heart
 Its eloquent proportions, and unroll
 In mighty graduations, part by part,
 The glory which at once upon thee did not dart.
Child Harold, Cant. iv. BYRON.

THE APOLLO BELVIDERE.

Or view the lord of the unerring bow,
 The god of life, and poesy, and light, —
 The sun in human limbs arrayed, and brow
 All radiant from his triumph in the fight ;
 The shaft hath just been shot, — the arrow
 bright
 With an immortal's vengeance ; in his eye
 And nostril beautiful disdain, and might
 And majesty, flash their full lightnings by,
 Developing in that one glance the Deity.

But in his delicate form — a dream of love,
 Shaped by some solitary nymph, whose breast
 Longed for a deathless lover from above,
 And maddened in that vision — are exprest
 All that ideal beauty ever blessed
 The mind with in its most unearthly mood,
 When each conception was a heavenly guest,
 A ray of immortality, and stood,
 Starlike, around, until they gathered to a god !
Child Harold, Cant. iv. BYRON.

A LADY'S CHAMBER.

The moon shines dim in the open air,
 And not a moonbeam enters here.
 But they without its light can see
 The chamber carved so curiously,
 Carved with figures strange and sweet,
 All made out of the carver's brain,
 For a lady's chamber meet :
 The lamp with twofold silver chain
 Is fastened to an angel's feet.
 The silver lamp burns dead and dim ;
 But Christabel the lamp will trim.
 She trimmed the lamp, and made it bright,
 And left it swinging to and fro,
 While Geraldine, in wretched plight,
 Sank down upon the floor below.

Christabel.

S. T. COLERIDGE.

MUSIC.

Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
 Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment ?
 Sure something holy lodges in that breast,
 And with these raptures moves the vocal air
 To testify his hidden residence.
 How sweetly did they float upon the wings
 Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night,
 At every fall smoothing the raven down
 Of darkness till it smiled.

Comus.

MILTON.

PERFECTION.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
 To throw a perfume on the violet,
 To smooth the ice, or add another hue
 Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
 To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
 Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

POEMS OF SENTIMENT AND REFLECTION.

In grief, I fondly hoped to sleep,
A friend whom Death alone could sever
But my will would not consent -
Grief,
Has torn thee from my breast - forever

POEMS OF SENTIMENT AND REFLECTION.

GOOD LIFE, LONG LIFE.

It is not growing like a tree
In bulk, doth make man better be ;
Or standing long an oak, three hundred year,
To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sear :
    A lily of a day
    Is fairer far in May,
    Although it fall and die that night, —
    It was the plant and flower of Light.
In small proportions we just beauties see,
And in short measures life may perfect be.

BEN JONSON.

MY MINDE TO ME A KINGDOM IS.

My minde to me a kingdom is ;
Such perfect joy therein I finde
As farre exceeds all earthly blisse
That God or nature hath assignde ;
Though much I want that most would have,
Yet still my minde forbids to crave.

Content I live ; this is my stay, —
I seek no more than may suffice.
I presse to beare no haughtie sway ;
Look, what I lack my mind supplies.
Loe, thus I triumph like a king,
Content with that my mind doth bring.

I see how plentie surfets oft,
And hastie clymbers soonest fall ;
I see that such as sit aloft
Mishap doth threaten most of all.
These get with toile, and keepe with feare ;
Such cares my mind could never beare.

No princely pompe nor welthie store,
No force to win the victorie,
No wylie wit to salve a sore,
No shape to winne a lover's eye, —
To none of these I yeeld as thrall ;
For why, my mind despiseth all.

Some have too much, yet still they crave ;
I little have, yet seek no more.
They are but poore, though much they have,
And I am rich with little store.
They poor, I rich ; they beg, I give ;
They lacke, I lend ; they pine, I live.

I laugh not at another's losse,
I grudge not at another's gaine ;
No worldly wave my mind can tosse ;
I brooke that is another's bane.
I feare no foe, I fawne no friend ;
I lothe not life, nor dread mine end.

I joy not in no earthly blisse ;
I weigh not Ceresus' wealth a straw ;
For care, I care not what it is ;
I feare not fortune's fatal law ;
My mind is such as may not move
For beautie bright, or force of love.

I wish but what I have at will ;
I wander not to seeke for more ;
I like the plaine, I clime no hill ;
In greatest stormes I sitte on shore,
And laugh at them that toile in vaine
To get what must be lost againe.

I kisse not where I wish to kill ;
I feigne not love where most I hate ;
I breake no sleepe to winne my will ;
I wayte not at the mightie's gate.
I scorne no poore, I feare no rich ;
I feele no want, nor have too much.

The court ne cart I like ne loath, —
Extreames are counted worst of all ;
The golden meane betwixt them both
Doth snrest sit, and feares no fall ;
This is my choyce ; for why, I finde
No wealth is like a quiet minde.

My wealth is health and perfect ease ;
My conscience clere my chiefe defence ;

I neither seeke by bribes to please,
 Nor by desert to breed offence.
 Thus do I live ; thus will I die ;
 Would all did so as well as I !

SIR EDWARD DYER.*

TO THE HON. CHARLES MONTAGUE.

Our hopes, like towering falcons, aim
 At objects in an airy height ;
 But all the pleasure of the game
 Is afar off to view the flight.

The worthless prey but only shows
 The joy consisted in the strife ;
 Whate'er we take, as soon we lose
 In Homer's riddle and in life.

So, whilst in feverish sleeps we think
 We taste what waking we desire,
 The dream is better than the drink,
 Which only feeds the sickly fire.

To the mind's eye things well appear,
 At distance through an artful glass ;
 Bring but the flattering objects near,
 They're all a senseless gloomy mass.

Seeing aright, we see our woes :
 Then what avails it to have eyes ?
 From ignorance our comfort flows,
 The only wretched are the wise.

MATTHEW PRIOR.

OF MYSELF.

THIS only grant me, that my means may lie
 Too low for envy, for contempt too high.

Some honor I would have,
 Not from great deeds, but good alone ;
 The unknown are better than ill known :
 Rumor can ope the grave.

Acquaintance I would have, but when 't depends
 Not on the number, but the choice, of friends.

Books should, not business, entertain the light,
 And sleep, as undisturbed as death, the night.

My house a cottaga more
 Than palace ; and should fitting be
 For all my use, no luxury.

My garden painted o'er
 With Nature's hand, not Art's ; and pleasures yield,

Horace might envy in his Sabine field.

* This is frequently attributed to William Byrd. Bartlett, however, gives it to Sir Edward Dyer, referring to Hannah's Courtesy Poets as authority : so, also, Ward, in his English Poets, Vol. 1., 1820.

Thus would I double my life's fading space ;
 For he that runs it well twice runs his race.

And in this true delight,
 These unbought sports, this happy state,
 I would not fear, nor wish, my fate ;

But boldly say each night,
 To-morrow let my sun his beams display,
 Or in clouds hide them ; I have lived to-day.

ABRAHAM COWLEY.

BEAUTY.

'T is much immortal beauty to admire,
 But more immortal beauty to withstand ;
 The perfect soul can overcome desire,
 If beauty with divine delight be scanned.
 For what is beauty but the blooming child
 Of fair Olympus, that in night must end,
 And be forever from that bliss exiled,
 If admiration stand too much its friend ?
 The wind may be enamored of a flower,
 The ocean of the green and laughing shore,
 The silver lightning of a lofty tower, —
 But must not with too near a love adore ;
 Or flower and margin and cloud-capped tower
 Love and delight shall with delight devour !

LORD EDWARD THURLOW.

BEAUTY.

FROM "HYMN IN HONOR OF BEAUTY."

So every spirit, as it is most pure,
 And hath in it the more of heavenly light,
 So it the fairer body doth procure
 To habit in, and it more fairly dight
 With cheerful grace and amiable sight ;
 For of the soul the body form doth take ;
 For soul is form, and doth the body make.

Therefore wherever that thou dost behold
 A comely corpse, with beauty fair endued,
 Know this for certain, that the same doth hold
 A beauteous soul, with fair conditions thowed,
 Fit to receive the seed of virtue strewed ;
 For all that fair is, is by nature good ;
 That is a sign to know the gentle blood.

Yet oft it falls that many a gentle mind
 Dwells in deformed tabernacle drowned,
 Either by chance, against the course of kind,
 Or through unaptness in the substance found,
 Which it assumed of some stubborn ground,
 That will not yield unto her form's direction,
 But is performed with some foul imperfection.

And oft it falls (aye me, the more to rue !)
That goodly beauty, albeit heavenly born,
Is foul abused, and that celestial hue,
Which doth the world with her delight adorn,
Made but the bait of sin, and sinners' scorn,
Whilst every one doth seek and sue to have it,
But every one doth seek but to deprave it.

Yet nathèmore is that faire beauty's blame,
But theirs that do abuse it unto ill :
Nothing so good, but that through guilty shame
May be corrupt, and wrested unto will :
Natheless the soule is fair and beauteous still,
However fleshe's fault it filthy make ;
For things immortal no corruption take.

EDWARD SPENSER.

THOUGHT.

THOUGHT is deeper than all speech,
Feeling deeper than all thought ;
Souls to souls can never teach
What unto themselves was taught.

We are spirits clad in veils ;
Man by man was never seen ;
All our deep communing fails
To remove the shadowy screen.

Heart to heart was never known ;
Mind with mind did never meet ;
We are columns left alone
Of a temple once complete.

Like the stars that gem the sky,
Far apart, though seeming near,
In our light we scattered lie ;
All is thus but starlight here.

What is social company
But a babbling summer stream ?
What our wise philosophy
But the glancing of a dream ?

Only when the sun of love
Melts the scattered stars of thought,
Only when we live above
What the dim-eyed world hath taught,

Only when our souls are fed
By the fount which gave them birth,
And by inspiration led
Which they never drew from earth,

We, like parted drops of rain,
Swelling till they meet and run,
Shall be all absorbed again,
Melting, flowing into one.

CONTENTMENT.

I WEIGH not fortune's frown or smile ;
I joy not much in earthly joys ;
I seek not state, I reck not style ;
I am not fond of fancy's toys :
I rest so pleased with what I have,
I wish no more, no more I crave.

I quake not at the thunder's crack ;
I tremble not at news of war ;
I swoond not at the news of wrack ;
I shrink not at a blazing star ;
I fear not loss, I hope not gain,
I envy none, I none disdain.

I see ambition never pleased ;
I see some Tantals starved in store ;
I see gold's dropsy seldom eased ;
I see even Midas gape for more ;
I neither want nor yet abound, —
Enough 's a feast, content is crowned.

I feign not friendship where I hate ;
I fawn not on the great (in show) ;
I prize, I praise a mean estate, —
Neither too lofty nor too low :
This, this is all my choice, my cheer, —
A mind content, a conscience clear.

JOSHUA SYLVESTER.

CONTENT.

FROM "FAREWELL TO FOLLIE," 1617.

SWEET are the thoughts that savor of content ;
The quiet mind is richer than a crown ;
Sweet are the nights in careless slumber spent, —
The poor estate scorns Fortune's angry frown :
Such sweet content, such minds, such sleep, such
bliss,
Beggars enjoy, when princes oft do miss.

The homely house that harbors quiet rest,
The cottage that affords no pride or care,
The mean, that 'grees with country music best,
The sweet consort of mirth's and music's fare.
Obscured life sets down a type of bliss ;
A mind content both crown and kingdom is.

ROBERT GREENE.

IN PRISON.

BEAT on, proud billows ; Boreas, blow ;
Swell, curlèd waves, high as Jove's roof ;
Your incivility doth show
That innocence is tempest proof ;
Though surly Nereus frown, my thoughts are calm ;
Then strike, Affliction, for thy wounds are balm.

That which the world miscalls a jail
 A private closet is to me ;
 Whilst a good conscience is my bail,
 And innocence my liberty :
 Locks, bars, and solitude together met,
 Make me no prisoner, but an anchorite.

I, whilst I wish to be retired,
 Into this private room was turned ;
 As if their wisdoms had conspired
 The salamander should be burned ;
 Or like those sophists, that would drown a fish,
 I am constrained to suffer what I wish.

The cynic loves his poverty ;
 The pelican her wilderness ;
 And 't is the Indian's pride to be
 Naked on frozen Caucasus :
 Contentment cannot smart ; stoics we see
 Make torments casier to their apathy.

These manacles upon my arm
 I as my mistress' favors wear ;
 And for to keep my ankles warm
 I have some iron shackles there :
 These walls are but my garrison ; this cell,
 Which men call jail, doth prove my citadel.

I'm in the cabinet lockt up,
 Like some high-prizèd margarite,
 Or, like the Great Mogul or Pope,
 Am cloistered up from public sight :
 Retiredness is a piece of majesty,
 And thus, proud Sultan, I'm as great as thee.

SIR ROGER L'ESTRANGE.

CLEON AND I.

CLEON hath a million acres, ne'er a one have I ;
 Cleon dwelleth in a palace, in a cottage I ;
 Cleon hath a dozen fortunes, not a penny I ;
 Yet the poorer of the twain is Cleon, and not I.

Cleon, true, possesseth acres, but the landscape I ;
 Half the charms to me it yieldeth money cannot buy.

Cleon harbors sloth and dulness, freshening vigor I ;
 He in velvet, I in fustian, richer man am I.

Cleon is a slave to grandeur, free as thought am I ;
 Cleon fees a score of doctors, need of none have I ;
 Wealth-surrounded, care-environed, Cleon fears to die ;

Death may come, he 'll find me ready, — happier man am I.

Cleon sees no charms in nature, in a daisy I ;
 Cleon hears no anthems ringing in the sea and sky ;
 Nature sings to me forever, earnest listener I ;
 State for state, with all attendants, who would change ? Not I.

CHARLES MACKAY.

THE WANTS OF MAN.

“MAN wants but little here below,
 Nor wants that little long.”
 'T is not with me exactly so ;
 But 't is so in the song.
My wants are many and, if told,
 Would muster many a score ;
 And were each wish a mint of gold,
 I still should long for more.

What first I want is daily bread —
 And canvas-backs — and wine —
 And all the realms of nature spread
 Before me, when I dine.
 Four courses scarcely can provide
 My appetite to quell ;
 With four choice cooks from France beside,
 To dress my dinner well.

What next I want, at princely cost,
 Is elegant attire :
 Black sable furs for winter's frost,
 And silks for summer's fire,
 And Cashmere shawls, and Brussels lace
 My bosom's front to deck, —
 And diamond rings my hands to grace,
 And rubies for my neck.

I want (who does not want ?) a wife, —
 Affectionate and fair ;
 To solace all the woes of life,
 And all its joys to share.
 Of temper sweet, of yielding will,
 Of firm, yet placid mind, —
 With all my faults to love me still
 With sentiment refined.

And as Time's car incessant runs,
 And Fortune fills my store,
 I want of daughters and of sons
 From eight to half a score.
 I want (alas ! can mortal dare
 Such bliss on earth to crave ?)
 That all the girls be chaste and fair,
 The boys all wise and brave.

I want a warm and faithful friend,
 To cheer the adverse hour ;

Who ne'er to flatter will descend,
 Nor bend the knee to power, —
 A friend to chide me when I'm wrong,
 My inmost soul to see ;
 And that my friendship prove as strong
 For him as his for me.

I want the seals of power and place,
 The ensigns of command ;
 Charged by the People's unbought grace
 To rule my native land.
 Nor crown nor sceptre would I ask
 But from my country's will,
 By day, by night, to ply the task
 Her cup of bliss to fill.

I want the voice of honest praise
 To follow me behind,
 And to be thought in future days
 The friend of human kind,
 That after ages, as they rise,
 Exulting may proclaim
 In choral union to the skies
 Their blessings on my name.

These are the Wants of mortal Man, —
 I cannot want them long,
 For life itself is but a span,
 And earthly bliss — a song.
 My last great Want — absorbing all —
 Is, when beneath the sod,
 And summoned to my final call,
 The Mercy of my God.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

CONTENTMENT.

"Man wants but little here below."

LITTLE I ask ; my wants are few ;
 I only wish a hut of stone,
 (A very plain brown stone will do,) —
 That I may call my own ;
 And close at hand is such a one,
 In yonder street that fronts the sun.

Plain food is quite enough for me ;
 Three courses are as good as ten ; —
 If nature can subsist on three,
 Thank Heaven for three. Amen !
 I always thought cold victual nice ; —
 My choice would be vanilla-ice.

I care not much for gold or land ; —
 Give me a mortgage here and there, —
 Some good bank-stock, — some note of hand,
 Or trifling railroad share, —
 I only ask that Fortune send
 A little more than I shall spend.

Honors are silly toys, I know,
 And titles are but empty names ;
 I would, perhaps, be Plenipo, —
 But only near St. James ;
 I'm very sure I should not care
 To fill our Gubernator's chair.

Jewels are baubles ; 't is a sin
 To care for such unfruitful things ; —
 One good-sized diamond in a pin, —
 Some, not so large, in rings, —
 A ruby, and a pearl or so,
 Will do for me ; — I laugh at show.

My dame should dress in cheap attire ;
 (Good heavy silks are never dear) —
 I own perhaps I might desire
 Some shawls of true Cashmere, —
 Some marrowy crapes of China silk,
 Like wrinkled skins on scalded milk.

I would not have the horse I drive
 So fast that folks must stop and stare ;
 An easy gait — two, forty-five —
 Suits me ; I do not care ; —
 Perhaps, for just a single spurt,
 Some seconds less would do no hurt.

Of pictures, I should like to own
 Titians and Raphaels three or four —
 I love so much their style and tone —
 One Turner, and no more,
 (A landscape — foreground golden dirt —
 The sunshine painted with a squirt.)

Of books but few, — some fifty score
 For daily use, and bound for wear ;
 The rest upon an upper floor ; —
 Some little luxury there
 Of red morocco's gilded gleam,
 And vellum rich as country cream.

Busts, cameos, gems, — such things as these,
 Which others often show for pride,
 I value for their power to please,
 And selfish churls deride ;
 One Stradivarius, I confess,
 Two meerschaums, I would fain possess.

Wealth's wasteful tricks I will not learn,
 Nor ape the glittering upstart fool ;
 Shall not carved tables serve my turn,
 But all must be of buhl ?
 Give grasping pomp its double share, —
 I ask but one recumbent chair.

Thus humble let me live and die,
 Nor long for Midas' golden touch ;

If Heaven more generous gifts deny,
I shall not miss them much, —
Too grateful for the blessing leant
Of simple tastes and mind content !

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

CONTENTATION.

DIRECTED TO MY DEAR FATHER, AND MOST WORTHY FRIEND, MR. ISAAK WALTON.

HEAVEN, what an age is this ! what race
Of giants are sprung up, that dare
Thus fly in the Almighty's face,
And with his providence make war !

I can go nowhere but I meet
With malcontents and mutineers,
As if in life was nothing sweet,
And we must blessings reap in tears.

O senseless man ! that murmurs still
For happiness, and does not know,
Even though he might enjoy his will,
What he would have to make him so.

Is it true happiness to be
By undiscerning Fortune placed
In the most eminent degree,
Where few arrive, and none stand fast ?

Titles and wealth are Fortune's toils,
Wherewith the vain themselves insnare :
The great are proud of borrowed spoils,
The miser's plenty breeds his care.

The one supinely yawns at rest,
The other eternally doth toil ;
Each of them equally a beast,
A pampered horse, a laboring moil :

The titulado's oft disgraced
By public hate or private frown,
And he whose hand the creature raised
Has yet a foot to kick him down.

The drudge who would all get, all save,
Like a brute beast, both feeds and lies ;
Prone to the earth, he digs his grave,
And in the very labor dies.

Excess of ill-got, ill-kept pelf
Does only death and danger breed ;
Whilst one rich worldling starves himself
With what would thousand others feed.

By which we see that wealth and power,
Although they make men rich and great,
The sweets of life do often sour,
And gull ambition with a cheat.

Nor is he happier than these,
Who, in a moderate estate,
Where he might safely live at ease,
Has lusts that are immoderate.

For he, by those desires misled,
Quits his own vine's securing shade,
To expose his naked, empty head
To all the storms man's peace invade.

Nor is he happy who is trim,
Tricked up in favors of the fair,
Mirrors, with every breath made dim,
Birds, caught in every wanton snare.

Woman, man's greatest woe or bliss,
Does oftener far than serve, enslave,
And with the magic of a kiss
Destroys whom she was made to save.

O fruitful grief, the world's disease !
And vainer man, to make it so,
Who gives his miseries increase
By cultivating his own woe !

There are no ills but what we make
By giving shapes and names to things, —
Which is the dangerous mistake
That causes all our sufferings.

We call that sickness which is health,
That persecution which is grace,
That poverty which is true wealth,
And that dishonor which is praise.

Alas ! our time is here so short
That in what state soe'er 't is spent,
Of joy or woe, does not import,
Provided it be innocent.

But we may make it pleasant too,
If we will take our measures right,
And not what Heaven has done undo
By an unruly appetite.

The world is full of beaten roads,
But yet so slippery withal,
That where one walks secure 't is odds
A hundred and a hundred fall.

Untrodden paths are then the best,
Where the frequented are unsure ;
And he comes soonest to his rest
Whose journey has been most secure.

It is content alone that makes
Our pilgrimage a pleasure here ;
And who buys sorrow cheapest takes
An ill commodity too dear.

CHARLES COTTON.

MILTON ON HIS BLINDNESS.

*"Doth God exact day-labor, light denied?"
I fondly ask: But Patience, to prevent
That murmur, soon replies, . . . .
"They also serve who only stand and wait."*

THE TOUCHSTONE.

A MAN there came, whence none could tell,
 Bearing a Touchstone in his hand,
 And tested all things in the land
 By its unerring spell.

A thousand transformations rose
 From fair to foul, from foul to fair :
 The golden crown he did not spare,
 Nor scorn the beggar's clothes.

Of heirloom jewels, prized so much,
 Were many changed to chips and clods ;
 And even statues of the Gods
 Crumbled beneath its touch.

Then angrily the people cried,
 " The loss outweighs the profit far ;
 Our goods suffice us as they are :
 We will not have them tried."

And, since they could not so avail
 To check his unrelenting quest,
 They seized him, saying, " Let him test
 How real is our jail ! "

But though they slew him with the sword,
 And in a fire his Touchstone burned,
 Its doings could not be o'erturned,
 Its undoings restored.

And when, to stop all future harm,
 They strewed its ashes on the breeze,
 They little guessed each grain of these
 Conveyed the perfect charm.

WILLIAM ALLINGHAM.

ON HIS OWN BLINDNESS.

TO CYRIACK SKINNER.

CYRIACK, this three years' day, these eyes, though
 clear,

To outward view, of blemish or of spot,
 Bereft of light, their seeing have forgot :
 Nor to their idle orbs doth sight appear
 Of sun, or moon, or star, throughout the year,
 Or man or woman, yet I argue not

Against Heaven's hand or will, nor bate a jot
 Of heart or hope ; but still bear up and steer
 Right onward. What supports me, dost thou ask ?
 The conscience, friend, to have lost them overplied
 In Liberty's defence, my noble task,
 Of which all Europe rings from side to side.
 This thought might lead me through the world's vain mask,

Content, though blind, had I no better guide.

THE HAPPY MAN.

FROM "THE WINTER WALK AT NOON:"
"THE TASK," BOOK VI.

HE is the happy man whose life even now
 Shows somewhat of that happier life to come ;
 Who, doomed to an obscure but tranquil state,
 Is pleased with it, and, were he free to choose,
 Would make his fate his choice ; whom peace,
 the fruit

Of virtue, and whom virtue, fruit of faith,
 Prepare for happiness ; bespeak him one Content indeed to sojourn while he must
 Below the skies, but having there his home.
 The world o'erlooks him in her busy search
 Of objects, more illustrious in her view ;
 And, occupied as earnestly as she,
 Though more sublimely, he o'erlooks the world.
 She scorns his pleasures, for she knows them
 not ;

He seeks not hers, for he has proved them vain,
 He cannot skim the ground like summer birds
 Pursuing gilded flies ; and such he deems
 Her honors, her emoluments, her joys.
 Therefore in contemplation is his bliss,
 Whose power is such that whom she lifts from
 earth

She makes familiar with a heaven unseen,
 And shows him glories yet to be revealed.
 Not slothful he, though seeming unemployed,
 And censured oft as useless. Stillest streams
 Oft water fairest meadows, and the bird
 That flutters least is longest on the wing.

WILLIAM COWPER.

THE PROBLEM.

I LIKE a church ; I like a cowl ;
 I love a prophet of the soul ;
 And on my heart monastic aisles
 Fall like sweet strains or pensive smiles ;
 Yet not for all his faith can see
 Would I that cowl'd churchman be.
 Why should the vest on him allure,
 Which I could not on me endure ?

Not from a vain or shallow thought
 His awful Jove young Phidias brought ;
 Never from lips of cunning fell
 The thrilling Delphic oracle :
 Out from the heart of nature roll'd
 The burdens of the Bible old ;
 The litanies of nations came,
 Like the volcano's tongue of flame,
 Up from the burning core below, —
 The canticles of love and woe.

The hand that rounded Peter's dome,
 And groined the aisles of Christian Rome,
 Wrought in a sad sincerity ;
 Himself from God he could not free ;
 He builded better than he knew ;—
 The conscious stone to beauty grew.

Know'st thou what wove yon woodbird's nest
 Of leaves, and feathers from her breast ?
 Or how the fish outbuilt her shell,
 Painting with morn each annual cell ?
 Or how the sacred pine-tree adds
 To her old leaves new myriads ?
 Such and so grew these holy piles,
 Whilst love and terror laid the tiles.
 Earth proudly wears the Parthenon,
 As the best gem upon her zone ;
 And Morning opes with haste her lids,
 To gaze upon the Pyramids ;
 O'er England's abbeys bends the sky,
 As on its friends, with kindred eye ;
 For, out of Thought's interior sphere,
 These wonders rose to upper air ;
 And Nature gladly gave them place,
 Adopted them into her race,
 And granted them an equal date
 With Andes and with Ararat.

These temples grew as grows the grass ;
 Art might obey, but not surpass.
 The passive Master lent his hand
 To the vast Soul that o'er him planned ;
 And the same power that reared the shrine
 Bestrode the tribes that knelt within.
 Ever the fiery Pentecost
 Girds with one flame the countless host,
 Trances the heart through chanting choirs,
 And through the priest the mind inspires.
 The word unto the prophet spoken
 Was writ on tables yet unbroken ;
 The word by seers or sibyls told,
 In groves of oak, or fanes of gold,
 Still floats upon the morning wind,
 Still whispers to the willing mind.
 One accent of the Holy Ghost
 The heedless world hath never lost.
 I know what say the fathers wise, —
 The Book itself before me lies, —
 Old Chrysostom, best Augustine,
 And he who blent both in his line,
 The younger Golden Lips or mines,
 Taylor, the Shakespeare of divines.
 His words are music in my ear,
 I see his cowl'd portrait dear ;
 And yet, for all his faith could see,
 I would not the good bishop be.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

HAPPINESS.

FROM "AN ESSAY ON MAN," EPISTLE IV.

O HAPPINESS ! our being's end and aim !
 Good, Pleasure, Ease, Content ! whate'er thy
 name :

That something still which prompts the eternal sigh,

For which we bear to live or dare to die,
 Which still so near us, yet beyond us lies,
 O'erlooked, seen double, by the fool, and wise.
 Plant of celestial seed ! if dropped below,
 Say, in what mortal soil thou deign'st to grow ?
 Fair opening to some court's propitious shine,
 Or deep with diamonds in the flaming mine ?
 Twined with the wreaths Parnassian laurels yield,
 Or reaped in iron harvests of the field ?
 Where grows ?— where grows it not ? If vain
 our toil,

We ought to blame the culture, not the soil :
 Fixed to no spot is happiness sincere ;
 'T is nowhere to be found, or everywhere :
 'T is never to be bought, but always free,
 And, fled from monarchs, St. John ! dwells with
 thee.

Ask of the learned the way ? The learned are blind ;

This bids to serve, and that to shun, mankind ;
 Some place the bliss in action, some in ease,
 Those call it pleasure, and contentment these ;
 Some, sunk to beasts, find pleasure end in pain ;
 Some, swelled to gods, confess even virtue vain ;
 Or, indolent, to each extreme they fall, —
 To trust in everything, or doubt of all.

Who thus define it, say they more or less
 Than this, that happiness is happiness ?

Take Nature's path, and mad Opinion's leave ;
 All states can reach it, and all heads conceive ;
 Obvious her goods, in no extreme they dwell ;
 There needs but thinking right, and meaning
 well ;

And, mourn our various portions as we please,
 Equal is common sense and common ease.

ALEXANDER POPE.

THE CHARACTER OF A HAPPY LIFE.

How happy is he born and taught
 That serveth not another's will ;
 Whose armor is his honest thought,
 And simple truth his utmost skill !

Whose passions not his masters are ;
 Whose soul is still prepared for death,
 Not tied unto the world with care
 Of public fame or private breath ;

Who envies none that chance doth raise,
Or vice ; who never understood
How deepest wounds are given by praise,
Nor rules of state, but rules of good ;

Who hath his life from rumors freed ;
Whose conscience is his strong retreat ;
Whose state can neither flatterers feed,
Nor ruin make accusers great ;

Who God doth late and early pray
More of his grace than gifts to lend,
And entertains the harmless day
With a well-chosen book or friend, —

This man is freed from servile bands
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall ;
Lord of himself, though not of lands ;
And, having nothing, yet hath all.

SIR HENRY WOTTON.

THE HERMIT.

At the close of the day, when the hamlet is still,
And mortals the sweets of forgetfulness prove,
When naught but the torrent is heard on the hill,
And naught but the nightingale's song in the grove,
'T was thus, by the cave of the mountain afar,
While his harp rung symphonious, a hermit began ;

No more with himself or with nature at war,
He thought as a sage, though he felt as a man :

" Ah ! why, all abandoned to darkness and woe,
Why, lone Philomela, that languishing fall ?
For spring shall return, and a lover bestow,
And sorrow no longer thy bosom intrall.
But, if pity inspire thee, renew the sad lay, —
Mourn, sweetest complainer, man calls thee to mourn !

O, soothe him whose pleasures like thine pass
away ;
Full quickly they pass, — but they never return.

" Now, gliding remote on the verge of the sky,
The moon, half extinguished, her crescent displays ;

But lately I marked when majestic on high
She shone, and the planets were lost in her blaze.
Roll on, thou fair orb, and with gladness pursue
The path that conducts thee to splendor again !
But man's faded glory what change shall renew ?
Ah, fool ! to exult in a glory so vain !

" 'T is night, and the landscape is lovely no more.
I mourn, — but, ye woodlands, I mourn not for
you ;

For morn is approaching your charms to restore,
Perfumed with fresh fragrance, and glittering with dew.

Nor yet for the ravage of winter I mourn, —
Kind nature the embryo blossom will save ;
But when shall spring visit the mouldering urn ?
O, when shall day dawn on the night of the grave ?

" 'T was thus, by the glare of false science betrayed,
That leads to bewilder, and dazzles to blind,
My thoughts wont to roam from shade onward to
shade,

Destruction before me, and sorrow behind.
' O pity, great Father of light, ' then I cried,
' Thy creature, who fain would not wander from
thee !

Lo, humbled in dust, I relinquish my pride ;
From doubt and from darkness thou only canst
free.'

" And darkness and doubt are now flying away ;
No longer I roam in conjecture forlorn.

So breaks on the traveller, faint and astray,
The bright and the balmy effulgence of morn.
See truth, love, and mercy in triumph descending,
And nature all glowing in Eden's first bloom !
On the cold cheek of death smiles and roses are blending,

And beauty immortal awakes from the tomb."

JAMES BEATTIE.

THE RETIREMENT.

FAREWELL, thou busy world, and may
We never meet again ;

Here I can eat and sleep and pray,
And do more good in one short day
Than he who his whole age outwears
Upon the most conspicuous theatres,
Where naught but vanity and vice appears.

Good God ! how sweet are all things here !
How beautiful the fields appear !

How cleanly do we feed and lie !
Lord ! what good hours do we keep !
How quietly we sleep !

What peace, what unanimity !
How innocent from the lewd fashion
Is all our business, all our recreation !

O, how happy here's our leisure !
O, how innocent our pleasure !
O ye valleys ! O ye mountains !
O ye groves and crystal fountains !
How I love, at liberty,
By turns to come and visit ye !

Dear solitude, the soul's best friend,
That man acquainted with himself dost make,
And all his Maker's wonders to intend,
With thee I here converse at will,
And would be glad to do so still,
For it is thou alone that keep'st the soul awake.

How calm and quiet a delight
Is it, alone,
To read and meditate and write,
By none offended, and offending none !
To walk, ride, sit, or sleep at one's own ease ;
And, pleasing a man's self, none other to displease.

O my belovèd nymph, fair Dove,
Princess of rivers, how I love
Upon thy flowery banks to lie,
And view thy silver stream,
When gilded by a summer's beam !
And in it all thy wanton fry
Playing at liberty,
And with my angle upon them
The all of treachery
I ever learned, industriously to try !

Such streams Rome's yellow Tiber cannot show,
The Iberian Tagus, or Ligurian Po ;
The Maese, the Danube, and the Rhine,
Are puddle-water, all, compared with thine ;
And Loire's pure streams yet too polluted are
With thine, much purer, to compare ;
The rapid Garonne and the winding Seine
Are both too mean,
Belovèd Dove, with thee
To vie priority ;
Nay, Tame and Isis, when conjoined, submit,
And lay their trophies at thy silver feet.

O my belovèd rocks, that rise
To awe the earth and brave the skies !
From some aspiring mountain's crown
How dearly do I love,
Giddy with pleasure to look down,
And from the vales to view the noble heights
above !

O my belovèd caves ! from dog-star's heat,
And all anxieties, my safe retreat ;
What safety, privacy, what true delight,
In the artificial night
Your gloomy entrails make,
Have I taken, do I take !
How oft, when grief has made me fly,
To hide me from society
E'en of my dearest friends, have I,
In your recesses' friendly shade,
All my sorrows open laid,
And my most secret woes intrusted to your privacy !

Lord ! would men let me alone,
What an over-happy one
Should I think myself to be, —
Might I in this desert place
(Which most men in discourse disgrace)
Live but undisturbed and free !
Here in this despised recess,
Would I, maugre winter's cold
And the summer's worst excess,
Try to live out to sixty full years old ;
And, all the while,
Without an envious eye
On any thriving under Fortune's smile,
Contented live, and then contented die.

CHARLES COTTON.

VERSES

SUPPOSED TO BE WRITTEN BY ALEXANDER SELKIRK
DURING HIS SOLITARY ABODE IN THE ISLAND OF JUAN FERNANDEZ.

I AM monarch of all I survey, —
My right there is none to dispute ;
From the centre all round to the sea,
I am lord of the fowl and the brute.
O Solitude ! where are the charms
That sages have seen in thy face ?
Better dwell in the midst of alarms
Than reign in this horrible place.

I am out of humanity's reach ;
I must finish my journey alone,
Never hear the sweet music of speech, —
I start at the sound of my own.
The beasts that roam over the plain
My form with indifference see ;
They are so unacquainted with man,
Their tameness is shocking to me.

Society, friendship, and love,
Divinely bestowed upon man !
O, had I the wings of a dove,
How soon would I taste you again !
My sorrows I then might assuage
In the ways of religion and truth, —
Might learn from the wisdom of age,
And be cheered by the sallies of youth.

Religion ! what treasure untold
Resides in that heavenly word ! —
More precious than silver and gold,
Or all that this earth can afford ;
But the sound of the church-going bell
These valleys and rocks never heard,
Never sighed at the sound of a knell,
Or smiled when a Sabbath appeared.

Ye winds that have made me your sport,
 Convey to this desolate shore
 Some cordial, endearing report
 Of a land I shall visit no more !
 My friends, — do they now and then send
 A wish or a thought after me ?
 O, tell me I yet have a friend,
 Though a friend I am never to see.

How fleet is a glance of the mind !
 Compared with the speed of its flight,
 The tempest itself lags behind,
 And the swift-winged arrows of light.
 When I think of my own native land,
 In a moment I seem to be there ;
 But, alas ! recollection at hand
 Soon hurries me back to despair.

But the sea-fowl is gone to her nest,
 The beast is laid down in his lair ;
 Even here is a season of rest,
 And I to my cabin repair.
 There's mercy in every place,
 And mercy — encouraging thought ! —
 Gives even affliction a grace,
 And reconciles man to his lot.

WILLIAM COWPER.

THE GOOD GREAT MAN.

How seldom, friend, a good great man inherits
 Honor and wealth, with all his worth and pains !
 It seems a story from the world of spirits
 When any man obtains that which he merits,
 Or any merits that which he obtains.

For shame, my friend ! renounce this idle strain !
 What wouldst thou have a good great man obtain ?
 Wealth, title, dignity, a golden chain,
 Or heap of corpses which his sword hath slain ?
 Goodness and greatness are not means, but ends.
 Hath he not always treasures, always friends, —
 The good great man ? Three treasures, — love,
 and light,
 And calm thoughts, equable as infant's breath ;
 And three fast friends, more sure than day or night, —
 Himself, his Maker, and the angel Death.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE.

EXAMPLE.

WE scatter seeds with careless hand,
 And dream we ne'er shall see them more ;
 But for a thousand years
 Their fruit appears,
 In weeds that mar the land,
 Or healthful store.

The deeds we do, the words we say, —
 Into still air they seem to fleet,
 We count them ever past ;
 But they shall last, —
 In the dread judgment they
 And we shall meet.

I charge thee by the years gone by,
 For the love's sake of brethren dear,
 Keep thou the one true way,
 In work and play,
 Lest in that world their cry
 Of woe thou hear.

JOHN KEBLE.

LIVING WATERS.

THERE are some hearts like wells, green-mossed and deep
 As ever Summer saw ;
 And cool their water is, — yea, cool and sweet ; —
 But you must come to draw.
 They hoard not, yet they rest in calm content,
 And not unsought will give ;
 They can be quiet with their wealth unspent,
 So self-contained they live.

And there are some like springs, that bubbling burst
 To follow dusty ways,
 And run with offered cup to quench his thirst
 Where the tired traveller strays ;
 That never ask the meadows if they want
 What is their joy to give ; —
 Unasked, their lives to other life they grant,
 So self-bestowed they live !

And One is like the ocean, deep and wide,
 Wherein all waters fall ;
 That girdles the broad earth, and draws the tide,
 Feeding and bearing all ;
 That broods the mists, that sends the clouds abroad,
 That takes, again to give ; —
 Even the great and loving heart of God,
 Whereby all love doth live.

CAROLINE S. SPENCER.

THE SEASIDE WELL.

"Waters flowed over my head ; then I said, I am cut off." —
Lamentations, iii. 54.

ONE day I wandered where the salt sea-tide
 Backward had drawn its wave,
 And found a spring as sweet as e'er hillside
 To wild-flowers gave.

Freshly it sparkled in the sun's bright look,
 And mid its pebbles strayed,
 As if it thought to join a happy brook
 In some green glade.

But soon the heavy sea's resistless swell
 Came rolling in once more,
 Spreading its bitter o'er the clear sweet well
 And pebbled shore.

Like a fair star thick buried in a cloud,
 Or life in the grave's gloom,
 The well, enwrapped in a deep watery shroud,
 Sunk to its tomb.

As one who by the beach roams far and wide,
 Remnant of wreck to save,
 Again I wandered when the salt sea-tide
 Withdrew its wave ;

And there, unchanged, no taint in all its sweet,
 No anger in its tone,
 Still as it thought some happy brook to meet,
 The spring flowed on.

While waves of bitterness rolled o'er its head,
 Its heart had folded deep
 Within itself, and quiet fancies led,
 As in a sleep ;

Till, when the ocean loosed his heavy chain,
 And gave it back to day,
 Calmly it turned to its own life again
 And gentle way.

Happy, I thought, that which can draw its life
 Deep from the nether springs,
 Safe 'neath the pressure, tranquil mid the strife,
 Of surface things.

Safe — for the sources of the nether springs
 Up in the far hills lie ;

Calm — for the life its power and freshness brings
 Down from the sky.

So, should temptations threaten, and should sin
 Roll in its whelming flood,
 Make strong the fountain of thy grace within
 My soul, O God !

If bitter scorn, and looks, once kind, grown
 strange,
 With crushing chillness fall,
 From secret wells let sweetness rise, nor change
 My heart to gall !

When sore thy hand doth press, and waves of thine
 Afflict me like a sea, —
 Deep calling deep, — infuse from source divine
 Thy peace in me !

And when death's tide, as with a brimful cup,
 Over my soul doth pour,
 Let hope survive, — a well that springeth up
 Forevermore !

Above my head the waves may come and go,
 Long brood the deluge dire,
 But life lies hidden in the depths below
 Till waves retire, —
 Till death, that reigns with overflowing flood,
 At length withdraw its sway,
 And life rise sparkling in the sight of God
 An endless day.

THE MEN OF OLD.

I KNOW not that the men of old
 Were better than men now,
 Of heart more kind, of hand more bold,
 Of more ingenuous brow ;
 I heed not those who pine for force
 A ghost of time to raise,
 As if they thus could check the course
 Of these appointed days.

Still it is true, and over-true,
 That I delight to close
 This book of life self-wise and new,
 And let my thoughts repose
 On all that humble happiness
 The world has since foregone, —
 The daylight of contentedness
 That on those faces shone !

With rights, though not too closely scanned,
 Enjoyed as far as known,
 With will by no reverse unmanned,
 With pulse of even tone,
 They from to-day, and from to-night,
 Expected nothing more
 Than yesterday and yesternight
 Had proffered them before.

To them was life a simple art
 Of duties to be done,
 A game where each man took his part,
 A race where all must run ;
 A battle whose great scheme and scope
 They little cared to know,
 Content, as men-at-arms, to cope
 Each with his fronting foe.

Man now his virtue's diadem
 Puts on, and proudly wears . —
 Great thoughts, great feelings, came to them,
 Like instincts unawares ;
 Blending their souls' sublimest needs
 With tasks of every day
 They went about their gravest deeds
 As noble boys at play.

And what if Nature's fearful wound
They did not probe and bare,
For that their spirits never swooned
To watch the misery there, —
For that their love but flowed more fast,
Their charities more free,
Not conscious what mere drops they cast
Into the evil sea.

A man's best things are nearest him,
Lie close about his feet ;
It is the distant and the dim
That we are sick to greet ;
For flowers that grow our hands beneath
We struggle and aspire, —
Our hearts must die, except they breathe
The air of fresh desire.

Yet, brothers, who up reason's hill
Advance with hopeful cheer, —
Oh, loiter not, those heights are chill,
As chill as they are clear ;
And still restrain your haughty gaze
The loftier that ye go,
Remembering distance leaves a haze
On all that lies below.

RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, LORD HOUGHTON.

HISTORY OF A LIFE.

DAY dawned ; — within a curtained room,
Filled to faintness with perfume,
A lady lay at point of doom.

Day closed ; — a Child had seen the light :
But, for the lady fair and bright,
She rested in undreaming night.

Spring rose ; — the lady's grave was green ;
And near it, oftentimes, was seen
A gentle Boy with thoughtful mien.

Years fled ; — he wore a manly face,
And struggled in the world's rough race,
And won at last a lofty place.

And then he died ! Behold before ye
Humanity's poor sum and story ;
Life, — Death, — and all that is of Glory.

BRYAN WALLER PROCTER (Barry Cornwall).

THE ROSE-BUSH.

A CHILD sleeps under a rose-bush fair,
The buds swell out in the soft May air ;
Sweetly it rests, and on dream-wings flies
To play with the angels in Paradise.
And the years glide by.

A Maiden stands by the rose-bush fair,
The dewy blossoms perfume the air ;
She presses her hand to her throbbing breast,
With love's first wonderful rapture blest.
And the years glide by.

A Mother kneels by the rose-bush fair,
Soft sigh the leaves in the evening air ;
Sorrowing thoughts of the past arise,
And tears of anguish bedim her eyes.
And the years glide by.

Naked and lone stands the rose-bush fair,
Whirled are the leaves in the autumn air,
Withered and dead they fall to the ground,
And silently cover a new-made mound.
And the years glide by.

From the German, by WILLIAM W. CALDWELL.

LIFE.

I MADE a posie, while the day ran by :
"Here will I smell my remnant out, and tie
My life within this band."
But Time did beckon to the flowers, and they
By noon most cunningly did steal away,
And withered in my hand.

My hand was next to them, and then my heart ;
I took, without more thinking, in good part
Time's gentle admonition ;
Who did so sweetly death's sad taste convey,
Making my minde to smell my fatal day,
Yet sug'ring the suspicion.

Farewell, dear flowers ! sweetly your time ye spent ;
Fit, while ye lived, for smell or ornament,
And after death for cures.
I follow straight without complaints or grief ;
Since, if my scent be good, I care not if
It be as short as yours.

GEORGE HERBERT.

THE RIVER OF LIFE.

THE more we live, more brief appear
Our life's succeeding stages ;
A day to childhood seems a year,
And years like passing ages.

The gladsome current of our youth,
Ere passion yet disorders,
Steals lingering like a river smooth
Along its grassy borders.

But, as the careworn cheek grows wan,
And sorrow's shafts fly thicker,
Ye stars, that measure life to man,
Why seem your courses quicker?

When joys have lost their bloom and breath,
And life itself is vapid,
Why, as we near the Falls of Death,
Feel we its tide more rapid?

It may be strange, — yet who would change
Time's course to slower speeding,
When one by one our friends have gone,
And left our bosoms bleeding?

Heaven gives our years of fading strength
Indemnifying fleetness;
And those of youth, a seeming length,
Proportioned to their sweetness.

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

THE VOYAGE OF LIFE.

FROM "THE SPLEEN."

Thus, then, I steer my bark, and sail
On even keel with gentle gale;
At helm I make my reason sit,
My crew of passions all submit.
If dark and blustering prove some nights,
Philosophy puts forth her lights;
Experience holds the cautious glass,
To shun the breakers, as I pass,
And frequent throws the wary lead,
To see what dangers may be hid;
And once in seven years I'm seen
At Bath or Tunbridge to careen.
Though pleased to see the dolphins play,
I mind my compass and my way.
With store sufficient for belief,
And wisely still prepared to reef,
Nor wanting the dispersive bowl
Of cloudy weather in the soul,
I make (may Heaven propitious send Such wind and weather to the end),
Neither becalmed nor overblown,
Life's voyage to the world unknown.

MATTHEW GREEN.

THE ROSARY OF MY TEARS.

SOME reckon their age by years,
Some measure their life by art;
But some tell their days by the flow of their tears,
And their lives by the moans of their heart.

The dials of earth may show
The length, not the depth of years, —

Few or many they come, few or many they go, —
But time is best measured by tears.

Ah! not by the silver gray
That creeps through the sunny hair,
And not by the scenes that we pass on our way,
And not by the furrows the fingers of care

On forehead and face have made, —
Not so do we count our years;
Not by the sun of the earth, but the shade
Of our souls, and the fall of our tears.

For the young are oftentimes old,
Though their brows be bright and fair;
While their blood beats warm, their hearts are cold —
O'er them the spring — but winter is there.

And the old are oftentimes young
When their hair is thin and white;
And they sing in age, as in youth they sung,
And they laugh, for their cross was light.

But, bead by bead, I tell
The Rosary of my years;
From a cross — to a cross they lead; 't is well,
And they're blest with a blessing of tears.

Better a day of strife
Than a century of sleep;
Give me instead of a long stream of life
The tempests and tears of the deep.

A thousand joys may foam
On the billows of all the years;
But never the foam brings the lone back home, —
He reaches the haven through tears.

ABRAM J. RYAN.

THE AIM OF LIFE.

FROM "FESTUS."

WE live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives,
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.
And he whose heart beats quickest lives the longest:
Lives in one hour more than in years do some Whose fat blood sleeps as it slips along their veins.
Life is but a means unto an end; that end,
Beginning, mean, and end to all things, — God.
The dead have all the glory of the world.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY.

LIFE.

My life is like the summer rose,
That opens to the morning sky,
But, ere the shades of evening close,
Is scattered on the ground — to die !
Yet on the rose's humble bed
The sweetest dews of night are shed,
As if she wept the waste to see, —
But none shall weep a tear for me !

My life is like the autumn leaf
That trembles in the moon's pale ray ;
Its hold is frail, — its date is brief,
Restless, and soon to pass away !
Yet, ere that leaf shall fall and fade,
The parent tree will mourn its shade,
The winds bewail the leafless tree, —
But none shall breathe a sigh for me !

My life is like the prints which feet
Have left on Tampa's desert strand ;
Soon as the rising tide shall beat,
All trace will vanish from the sand ;
Yet, as if grieving to efface
All vestige of the human race,
On that lone shore loud moans the sea, —
But none, alas ! shall mourn for me !

RICHARD HENRY WILDE.

"BLESSED ARE THEY THAT MOURN."

O, DEEM not they are blest alone
Whose lives a peaceful tenor keep ;
The Power who pities man has shown
A blessing for the eyes that weep.

The light of smiles shall fill again
The lids that overflow with tears ;
And weary hours of woe and pain
Are promises of happier years.

There is a day of sunny rest
For every dark and troubled night ;
And grief may bide an evening guest,
But joy shall come with early light.

And thou who, o'er thy friend's low bier,
Sheddest the bitter drops like rain,
Hope that a brighter, happier sphere
Will give him to thy arms again.

Nor let the good man's trust depart,
Though life its common gifts deny, —
Though with a pierced and bleeding heart,
And spurned of men, he goes to die.

For God hath marked each sorrowing day
And numbered every secret tear,
And heaven's long age of bliss shall pay
For all his children suffer here.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

HOPE.

FROM "THE PLEASURES OF HOPE."*

UNFADING Hope ! when life's last embers burn,
When soul to soul, and dust to dust return !
Heaven to thy charge resigns the awful hour !
O, then thy kingdom comes ! Immortal Power !
What though each spark of earth-born rapture fly
The quivering lip, pale cheek, and closing eye !
Bright to the soul thy seraph hands convey
The morning dream of life's eternal day, —
Then, then, the triumph and the trance begin,
And all the phoenix spirit burns within !

Daughter of Faith, awake, arise, illumine
The dread unknown, the chaos of the tomb ;
Melt, and dispel, ye spectre-doubts, that roll
Cimmerian darkness o'er the parting soul !
Fly, like the moon-eyed herald of Dismay,
Chased on his night-steed by the star of day !
The strife is o'er, — the pangs of Nature close,
And life's last rapture triumphs o'er her woes.
Hark ! as the spirit eyes, with eagle gaze,
The noon of Heaven undazzled by the blaze,
On heavenly winds that waft her to the sky,
Float the sweet tones of star-born melody ;
Wild as that hallowed anthem sent to hail
Bethlehem's shepherds in the lonely vale,
When Jordan hushed his waves, and midnight still Watched on the holy towers of Zion hill !

Eternal Hope ! when yonder spheres sublime
Pealed their first notes to sound the march of Time,
Thy joyous youth began, — but not to fade.
When all the sister planets have decayed ;
When wrapt in fire the realms of ether glow,
And Heaven's last thunder shakes the world
below ;
Thou, undismayed, shalt o'er the ruins smile,
And light thy torch at Nature's funeral pile.

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

THE VANITY OF THE WORLD.

FALSE world, thou ly'st : thou canst not lend
The least delight :
Thy favors cannot gain a friend,
They are so slight :

* This poem was written when the author was but twenty-one years of age.

Thy morning pleasures make an end
 To please at night :
 Poor are the wants that thou supply'st,
 And yet thou vaunt'st, and yet thou vy'st
 With heaven : fond earth, thou boasts ; false world, thou ly'st.

Thy babbling tongue tells golden tales
 Of endless treasure ;

Thy bounty offers easy sales
 Of lasting pleasure ;
 Thou ask'st the conscience what she ails,
 And swear'st to ease her ;

There 's none can want where thou supply'st ;
 There 's none can give where thou deny'st.
 Alas ! fond world, thou boasts ; false world, thou
 ly'st.

What well-advised ear regards
 What earth can say ?

Thy words are gold, but thy rewards
 Are painted clay :

Thy cunning can but pack the cards,
 Thou canst not play :
 Thy game at weakest, still thou vy'st ;
 If seen, and then revy'd, deny'st :
 Thou art not what thou seem'st ; false world,
 thou ly'st.

Thy tinsel bosom seems a mint
 Of new-coined treasure ;

A paradise, that has no stint,
 No change, no measure ;
 A painted cask, but nothing in 't,
 Nor wealth, nor pleasure :

Vain earth ! that falsely thus comply'st
 With man ; vain man ! that thou rely'st
 On earth ; vain man, thou dot'st ; vain earth,
 thou ly'st.

What mean dull souls, in this high measure,
 To haberdash

In earth's base wares, whose greatest treasure
 Is dross and trash ?
 The height of whose enchanting pleasure
 Is but a flash ?

Are these the goods that thou supply'st
 Us mortals with ? Are these the high'st ?
 Can these bring cordial peace ? false world, thou
 ly'st.

FRANCES QUARLES.

GOOD BY.

Good by, proud world, I'm going home :
 Thou art not my friend, and I'm not thine.
 Long through thy weary crowds I roam ;
 A river-ark on the ocean brine,
 Long I've been tossed like the driven foam,
 But now, proud world, I'm going home.

Good by to Flattery's fawning face ;
 To Grandeur with his wise grimace ;
 To upstart Wealth's averted eye ;
 To supple Office, low and high ;
 To crowded halls, to court and street ;
 To frozen hearts and hasting feet ;
 To those who go, and those who come ;
 Good by, proud world ! I'm going home.

I'm going to my own hearth-stone,
 Bosomed in yon green hills alone, —
 A secret nook in a pleasant land,
 Whose groves the frolic fairies planned ;
 Where arches green, the livelong day,
 Echo the blackbird's roundelay,
 And vulgar feet have never trod
 A spot that is sacred to thought and God.

O, when I am safe in my sylvan home,
 I tread on the pride of Greece and Rome ;
 And when I am stretched beneath the pines,
 Where the evening star so holy shines,
 I laugh at the lore and the pride of man,
 At the sophist schools, and the learned clan ;
 For what are they all, in their high conceit,
 When man in the bush with God may meet ?

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

THE NEVERMORE.

Look in my face ; my name is Might-have-been ;
 I am also called No-more, Too-late, Farewell ;
 Unto thine ear I hold the dead-sea shell
 Cast up thy Life's foam-fretted feet between ;
 Unto thine eyes the glass where that is seen
 Which had Life's form and Love's, but by my spell

Is now a shaken shadow intolerable,
 Of ultimate things unuttered the frail screen.

Mark me, how still I am ! But should there dart
 One moment through my soul the soft surprise
 Of that winged Peace which lulls the breath of sighs, —
 Then shalt thou see me smile, and turn apart
 Thy visage to mine ambush at thy heart
 Sleepless with cold commemorative eyes.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

THE GENIUS OF DEATH.

WHAT is death ? 'T is to be free,
 No more to love or hope or fear,
 To join the great equality ;
 All, all alike are humbled there.

The mighty grave
Wraps lord and slave ;
Nor pride nor poverty dares come
Within that refuge-house, — the tomb.

Spirit with the drooping wing
And the ever-weeping eye,
Thou of all earth's kings art king ;
Empires at thy footstool lie ;
    Beneath thee strewed,
    Their multitude
Sink like waves upon the shore ;
Storms shall never raise them more.

What's the grandeur of the earth
To the grandeur round thy throne ?
Riches, glory, beauty, birth,
To thy kingdom all have gone.
    Before thee stand
    The wondrous band, —
Bards, heroes, sages, side by side,
Who darkened nations when they died.

Earth has hosts, but thou canst show
    Many a million for her one ;
Through thy gates the mortal flow
    Hath for countless-years rolled on.
    Back from the tomb
    No step has come,
There fixed till the last thunder's sound
Shall bid thy prisoners be unbound.

GEORGE CROLY.

LINES

WRITTEN BY ONE IN THE TOWER, BEING YOUNG AND CONDEMNED TO DIE.

My prime of youth is but a frost of cares ;
    My feast of joy is but a dish of pain ;
My crop of corn is but a field of tares ;
    And all my good is but vain hope of gain :
The day is [fled], and yet I saw no sun ;
And now I live, and now my life is done !

The spring is past, and yet it hath not sprung ;
    The fruit is dead, and yet the leaves are green ;
My youth is gone, and yet I am but young ;
    I saw the world, and yet I was not seen :
My thread is cut, and yet it is not spun ;
And now I live, and now my life is done !

I sought my death, and found it in my womb ;
    I looked for life, and saw it was a shade ;
I trod the earth, and knew it was my tomb ;
    And now I die, and now I am but made :
The glass is full, and now my glass is run ;
And now I live, and now my life is done !

CHIDIACK TYCHEORN.

LINES

FOUND IN HIS BIBLE IN THE GATE-HOUSE AT WESTMINSTER.

E'EN such is time ; that takes in trust
    Our youth, our joys, our all we have,
And pays us but with earth and dust ;
    Who in the dark and silent grave,
When we have wandered all our ways,
Shuts up the story of our days :
But from this earth, this grave, this dust,
My God shall raise me up, I trust.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH.

THE SOUL'S ERRAND.

Go, soul, the body's guest,
    Upon a thankless arrant !
Fear not to touch the best,
    The truth shall be thy warrant :
Go, since I needs must die,
And give the world the lie.

Go, tell the court it glows
    And shines like rotten wood ;
Go, tell the church it shows
    What's good, and doth no good .
If church and court reply,
Then give them both the lie.

Tell potentates they live
    Acting by others' action,
Not loved unless they give,
    Not strong but by a faction :
If potentates reply,
Give potentates the lie.

Tell men of high condition
    That manage the estate,
Their purpose is ambition,
    Their practice only hate :
And if they once reply,
Then give them all the lie.

Tell them that brave it most,
    They beg for more by spending,
Who, in their greatest cost,
    Seek nothing but commending :
And if they make reply,
Then give them all the lie.

Tell zeal it wants devotion ;
    Tell love it is but lust ;
Tell time it is but motion ;
    Tell flesh it is but dust :
And wish them not reply,
For thou must give the lie.

Tell age it daily wasteth ;
 Tell honor how it alters ;
 Tell beauty how she blasteth ;
 Tell favor how it falters :
 And as they shall reply,
 Give every one the lie.

Tell wit how much it wrangles.
 In tickle points of niceness ;
 Tell wisdom she entangles
 Herself in over-wiseness :
 And when they do reply,
 Straight give them both the lie.

Tell physic of her boldness ;
 Tell skill it is pretension ;
 Tell charity of coldness ;
 Tell law it is contention :
 And as they do reply,
 So give them still the lie.

Tell fortune of her blindness ;
 Tell nature of decay ;
 Tell friendship of unkindness ;
 Tell justice of delay :
 And if they will reply,
 Then give them all the lie.

Tell arts they have no soundness,
 But vary by esteeming ;
 Tell schools they want profoundness,
 And stand too much on seeming :
 If arts and schools reply,
 Give arts and schools the lie.

Tell faith it's fled the city ;
 Tell how the country erreth ;
 Tell, manhood shakes off pity ;
 Tell, virtue least preferreth :
 And if they do reply,
 Spare not to give the lie.

So when thou hast, as I
 Commanded thee, done blabbing, —
 Although to give the lie
 Deserves no less than stabbing, —
 Yet, stab at thee that will,
 No stab the soul can kill.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH.

LETTERS.

EVERY day brings a ship,
 Every ship brings a word ;
 Well for those who have no fear,
 Looking seaward well assured
 That the word the vessel brings
 Is the word they wish to hear.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

BRAHMA.

IF the red slayer think he slays,
 Or if the slain think he is slain,
 They know not well the subtle ways
 I keep, and pass, and turn again.

Far or forgot to me is near ;
 Shadow and sunlight are the same ;
 The vanished gods to me appear ;
 And one to me are shame and fame.

They reckon ill who leave me out ;
 When me they fly, I am the wings ;
 I am the doubter and the doubt,
 And I the hymn the Brahmin sings.

The strong gods pine for my abode,
 And pine in vain the sacred Seven ;
 But thou, meek lover of the good !
 Find me, and turn thy back on heaven.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

BRAHMA'S ANSWER.

ONCE, when the days were ages,
 And the old Earth was young,
 The high gods and the sages
 From Nature's golden pages
 Her open secrets wrung.
 Each questioned each to know
 Whence came the Heavens above, and whence the Earth below.

Indra, the endless giver
 Of every gracious thing
 The gods to him deliver,
 Whose bounty is the river
 Of which they are the spring —
 Indra, with anxious heart,
 Ventures with Virochunu where Brahma is a part.

“ Brahma ! Supremest Being !
 By whom the worlds are made,
 Where we are blind, all-seeing,
 Stable, where we are fleeing,
 Of Life and Death afraid, —
 Instruct us, for mankind,
 What is the body, Brahma ? O Brahma ! what the mind ? ”

Hearing as though he heard not
 So perfect was his rest,
 So vast the soul that erred not,
 So wise the lips that stirred not —
 His hand upon his breast
 He laid, whereat his face
 Was mirrored in the river that girt that holy place.

They questioned each the other
 What Brahma's answer meant.
 Said Vivochunu, " Brother,
 Through Brahma the great Mother
 Hath spoken her intent :
 Man ends as he began, —

The shadow on the water is all there is of man ! "

" The earth with woe is cumbered,
 And no man understands ;
 They see their days are numbered
 By one that never slumbered
 Nor stayed his dreadful hands.

I see with Brahma's eyes —
 The body is the shadow that on the water lies : "

Thus Indra, looking deeper,
 With Brahma's self possessed.
 So dry thine eyes, thou weeper !
 And rise again, thou sleeper !
 The hand on Brahma's breast
 Is his divine assent,

Covering the soul that dies not. This is what Brahma meant.

RICHARD HENRY STODDARD.

RETRIBUTION.

'Οψὲ θεῶν ἀλέουσι μύλοι, ἀλέουσι δὲ λεπτά.

(" The mills of the gods grind late, but they grind fine.")

GREEK POET.

THOUGH the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small ;
 Though with patience he stands waiting, with exactness grinds he all.

From the German of F. VON LOGAU. Translation of H. W. LONGFELLOW.

TIME.

FROM "NIGHT THOUGHTS," NIGHT I.

THE bell strikes one : we take no note of time,
 But from its loss. To give it, then, a tongue,
 Is wise in man. As if an angel spoke,
 I feel the solemn sound. If heard aright,
 It is the knell of my departed hours :
 Where are they ? With the years beyond the flood.
 It is the signal that demands despatch ;
 How much is to be done ! my hopes and fears
 Start up alarmed, and o'er life's narrow verge
 Look down — on what ? a fathomless abyss ;
 A dread eternity ; how surely mine !
 And can eternity belong to me,
 Poor pensioner on the bounties of an hour ?

Time the supreme ! — Time is eternity ;
 Pregnant with all eternity can give ;
 Pregnant with all that makes archangels smile.
 Who murders time, he crushes in the birth
 A power ethereal, only not adored.

Ah ! how unjust to Nature and himself,
 Is thoughtless, thankless, inconsistent man !
 Like children babbling nonsense in their sports,
 We censure Nature for a span too short :
 That span too short, we tax as tedious too ;
 Torture invention, all expedients tire,
 To lash the lingering moments into speed,
 And whirl us (happy riddance !) from ourselves.
 Art, brainless Art ! our furious charioteer (For Nature's voice, unstified, would recall),
 Drives headlong towards the precipice of death !
 Death, most our dread ; death, thus more dreadful made :

O, what a riddle of absurdity !
 Leisure is pain ; takes off our chariot wheels :
 How heavily we drag the load of life !
 Blest leisure is our curse : like that of Cain,
 It makes us wander ; wander earth around
 To fly that tyrant, Thought. As Atlas groaned
 The world beneath, we groan beneath an hour.
 We cry for mercy to the next amusement :
 The next amusement mortgages our fields ;
 Slight inconvenience ! prisons hardly frown,
 From hateful Time if prisons set us free.
 Yet when Death kindly tenders us relief,
 We call him cruel ; years to moments shrink,
 Ages to years. The telescope is turned.
 To man's false optics (from his folly false)
 Time, in advance, behind him hides his wings,
 And seems to creep, decrepit with his age ;
 Behold him when past by ; what then is seen
 But his broad pinions, swifter than the winds ?
 And all mankind, in contradiction strong,
 Rueful, aghast, cry out on his career.

Ye well arrayed ! ye lilies of our land !
 Ye lilies male ! who neither toil nor spin
 (As sister-lilies might) if not so wise
 As Solomon, more sumptuous to the sight !
 Ye delicate ! who nothing can support,
 Yourselves most insupportable ! for whom
 The winter rose must blow, the sun put on
 A brighter beam in Leo ; silky-soft
 Favonius, breathe still softer, or be chid ;
 And other worlds send odors, sauce, and song,
 And robes, and notions, framed in foreign looms !
 O ye Lorenzos of our age ! who deem
 One moment unamused a misery
 Not made for feeble man ! who call aloud
 For every bawble drivelled o'er by sense ;
 For rattles, and conceits of every cast,
 For change of follies and relays of joy,

To drag you patient through the tedious length
Of a short winter's day, — say, sages ! say,
Wit's oracles ! say, dreamers of gay dreams !
How will you weather an eternal night,
Where such expedients fail ?

DR. EDWARD YOUNG.

PROCRASTINATION.

FROM "NIGHT THOUGHTS," NIGHT I.

BE wise to-day ; 't is madness to defer ;
Next day the fatal precedent will plead ;
Thus on, till wisdom is pushed out of life.
Procrastination is the thief of time ;
Year after year it steals, till all are fled,
And to the mercies of a moment leaves
The vast concerns of an eternal scene.
If not so frequent, would not this be strange ?
That 't is so frequent, this is stranger still.

Of man's miraculous mistakes this bears
The palm, "That all men are about to live,"
Forever on the brink of being born.
All pay themselves the compliment to think
They one day shall not drivel : and their pride
On this reversion takes up ready praise ;
At least, their own ; their future selves applaud :
How excellent that life they ne'er will lead !
Time lodged in their own hands is folly's veils ;
That lodged in Fate's, to wisdom they consign ;
The thing they can't but purpose, they postpone :
'T is not in folly not to scorn a fool,
And scarce in human wisdom to do more.
All promise is poor dilatory man,
And that through every stage. When young,
indeed,

In full content we sometimes nobly rest,
Unanxious for ourselves, and only wish,
As duteous sons, our fathers were more wise.
At thirty, man suspects himself a fool ;
Knows it at forty, and reforms his plan ;
At fifty, chides his infamous delay,
Pushes his prudent purpose to resolve ;
In all the magnanimity of thought,
Resolves, and re-resolves ; then dies the same.

And why ? Because he thinks himself immortal.
All men think all men mortal but themselves ;
Themselves, when some alarming shock of fate
Strikes through their wounded hearts the sudden dread ;
But their hearts wounded, like the wounded air,
Soon close ; where passed the shaft, no trace is found.

As from the wing no scar the sky retains,
The parted wave no furrow from the keel,
So dies in human hearts the thought of death :
Even with the tender tears which Nature sheds
O'er those we love, we drop it in their grave.

DR. EDWARD YOUNG.

WHAT IS TIME ?

I ASKED an aged man, with hoary hairs,
Wrinkled and curved with worldly cares :
"Time is the warp of life," said he ; "O, tell
The young, the fair, the gay, to weave it well !"
I asked the ancient, venerable dead,
Sages who wrote, and warriors who bled :
From the cold grave a hollow murmur flowed,
"Time sowed the seed we reap in this abode !"
I asked a dying sinner, ere the ide
Of life had left his veins : "Time !" he replied ;
"I've lost it ! ah, the treasure !" and he died.
I asked the golden sun and silver spheres,
Those bright chronometers of days and years :
They answered, "Time is but a meteor glare,"
And bade me for eternity prepare.
I asked the Seasons, in their annual round,
Which beautify or desolate the ground ;
And they replied (no oracle more wise),
"T is Folly's blank, and Wisdom's highest prize !"

I asked a spirit lost, — but O the shriek
That pierced my soul ! I shudder while I speak.
It cried, "A particle ! a speck ! a mite
Of endless years, duration infinite !"
Of things inanimate my dial I
Consulted, and it made me this reply, —
"Time is the season fair of living well,
The path of glory or the path of hell."
I asked my Bible, and methinks it said,
"Time is the present hour, the past has fled ;
Live ! live to-day ! to-morrow never yet
On any human being rose or set."
I asked old Father Time himself at last ;
But in a moment he flew swiftly past ;
His chariot was a cloud, the viewless wind
His noiseless steeds, which left no trace behind.
I asked the mighty angel who shall stand
One foot on sea and one on solid land :
"Mortal !" he cried, "the mystery now is o'er ;
Time was, Time is, but Time shall be no more !"

WILLIAM MARSDEN.

THE JESTER'S SERMON.

THE Jester shook his hood and bells, and leaped upon a chair ;
The pages laughed, the women screamed, and tossed their scented hair ;
The falcon whistled, staghounds bayed, the lap-dog barked without,
The scullion dropped the pitcher brown, the cook
railed at the lout ;
The steward, counting out his gold, let pouch and money fall, —
And why ? because the Jester rose to say grace in the hall !

The page played with the heron's plume, the steward with his chain ;
 The butler drummed upon the board, and laughed with might and main ;
 The grooms beat on their metal cans, and roared till they were red, —
 But still the Jester shut his eyes and rolled his witty head,
 And when they grew a little still, read half a yard of text,
 And, waving hand, struck on the desk, then frowned like one perplexed.

"Dear sinners all," the fool began, "man's life is but a jest,
 A dream, a shadow, bubble, air, a vapor at the best.
 In a thousand pounds of law I find not a single ounce of love ;
 A blind man killed the parson's cow in shooting at the dove ;
 The fool that eats till he is sick must fast till he is well ;
 The wooer who can flatter most will bear away
 the belle.

"Let no man halloo he is safe till he is through the wood ;
 He who will not when he may, must tarry when he should ;
 He who laughs at crooked men should need walk
 very straight ;
 O, he who once has won a name may lie abed till eight ;
 Make haste to purchase house and land, be very slow to wed ;
 True coral needs no painter's brush, nor need be daubed with red.

"The friar, preaching, cursed the thief (the pudding in his sleeve) ;
 To fish for sprats with golden hooks is foolish,
 by your leave ;
 To travel well, — an ass's ears, hog's mouth, and ostrich legs ;
 He does not care a pin for thieves who limps about and begs ;
 Be always first man at a feast and last man at a fray ;
 The short way round, in spite of all, is still the longest way ;
 When the hungry curate licks the knife, there's not much for the clerk ;
 When the pilot, turning pale and sick, looks up
 — the storm grows dark."

Then loud they laughed ; the fat cook's tears ran down into the pan ;
 The steward shook, that he was forced to drop the brimming can ;
 And then again the women screamed, and every staghound bayed, —
 And why ? because the motley fool so wise a sermon made.

GEORGE WALTER THORNBURY.

ON AN INTAGLIO HEAD OF MINERVA.

THE cunning hand that carved this face,
 A little helmeted Minerva, —
 The hand, I say, ere Phidias wrought,
 Had lost its subtle skill and fervor.
 Who was he ? Was he glad or sad,
 Who knew to carve in such a fashion ?
 Perchance he shaped this dainty head
 For some brown girl that scorned his passion.
 But he is dust : we may not know
 His happy or unhappy story :
 Nameless, and dead these thousand years,
 His work outlives him, — there's his glory !

Both man and jewel lay in earth
 Beneath a lava-buried city ;
 The thousand summers came and went,
 With neither haste nor hate nor pity.

The years wiped out the man, but left
 The jewel fresh as any blossom,
 Till some Visconti dug it up, —
 To rise and fall on Mabel's bosom !

O Roman brother ! see how Time
 Your gracious handiwork has guarded,
 See how your loving, patient art
 Has come, at last, to be rewarded !

Who would not suffer slights of men,
 And pangs of hopeless passion also,
 To have his carven agate-stone
 On such a bosom rise and fall so !

THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH.

ON A FAN

THAT BELONGED TO THE MARQUISE DE POMPADOUR.

(BALLADE.)

CHICKEN-SKIN, delicate, white,
 Painted by Carlo Vanloo,
 Loves in a riot of light,

Roses and vaporous blue ;
Hark to the dainty frou-frou!
Picture above, if you can,
Eyes that could melt as the dew, —
This was the Pompadour's fan !

See how they rise at the sight,
Thronging the Œil de Bœuf through,
Courtiers as butterflies bright,
Beauties that Fragonard drew,
Talon-rouge, falaba, queue,
Cardinal, duke, — to a man,
Eager to sigh or to sue, —
This was the Pompadour's fan !

Ah, but things more than polite
Hung on this toy, voyez-vous!
Matters of state and of might,
Things that great ministers do ;
Things that, maybe, overthrew
Those in whose brains they began ; —
Here was the sign and the cue, —
This was the Pompadour's fan !

ENVOY.

Where are the secrets it knew ?
Weavings of plot and of plan ?
— But where is the Pompadour, too ?
This was the Pompadour's fan !

AUSTIN DOBSON.

THE FLOOD OF YEARS.

A MIGHTY Hand, from an exhaustless urn,
Pours forth the never-ending Flood of Years
Among the nations. How the rushing waves
Bear all before them ! On their foremost edge,
And there alone, is Life ; the Present there
Tosses and foams and fills the air with roar
Of mingled noises. There are they who toil,
And they who strive, and they who feast, and they
Who hurry to and fro. The sturdy hind —
Woodman and delver with the spade — are there,
And busy artisan beside his bench,
And pallid student with his written roll.
A moment on the mounting billow seen —
The flood sweeps over them and they are gone.
There groups of revellers, whose brows are twined
With roses, ride the topmost swell awhile,
And as they raise their flowing cups to touch
The clinking brim to brim, are whirled beneath
The waves and disappear. I hear the jar
Of beaten drums, and thunders that break forth
From cannon, where the advancing billow sends
Up to the sight long files of armed men,
That hurry to the charge through flame and smoke.
The torrent bears them under, whelmed and hid,

Slayer and slain, in heaps of bloody foam.
Down go the steed and rider ; the plumed chief
Sinks with his followers ; the head that wears
The imperial diadem goes down beside
The felon's with cropped ear and branded cheek.
A funeral train — the torrent sweeps away
Bearers and bier and mourners. By the bed
Of one who dies men gather sorrowing,
And women weep aloud ; the flood rolls on ;
The wail is stifled, and the sobbing group
Borne under. Hark to that shrill sudden shout —
The cry of an applauding multitude
Swayed by some loud-tongued orator who wields
The living mass, as if he were its soul.
The waters choke the shout and all is still.
Lo, next, a kneeling crowd and one who spreads
The hands in prayer ; the engulfing wave o'er-takes

And swallows them and him. A sculptor wields
The chisel, and the stricken marble grows
To beauty ; at his easel, eager-eyed,
A painter stands, and sunshine, at his touch,
Gathers upon the canvas, and life glows ;
A poet, as he paces to and fro,
Murmurs his sounding line. Awhile they ride
The advancing billow, till its tossing crest Strikes them and flings them under while their tasks

Are yet unfinished. See a mother smile
On her young babe that smiles to her again —
The torrent vests it from her arms ; she shrieks,
And weeps, and midst her tears is carried down.
A beam like that of moonlight turns the spray
To glistening pearls ; two lovers, hand in hand,
Rise on the billowy swell and fondly look
Into each other's eyes. The rushing flood Flings them apart ; the youth goes down ; the maid,
With hands outstretched in vain and streaming
eyes,

Waits for the next high wave to follow him.
An aged man succeeds ; his bending form
Sinks slowly ; mingling with the sullen stream
Gleam the white locks and then are seen no more.

Lo, wider grows the stream ; a sea-like flood
Saps earth's walled cities ; massive palaces
Crumble before it ; fortresses and towers
Dissolve in the swift waters ; populous realms,
Swept by the torrent, see their ancient tribes
Engulfed and lost, their very languages
Stifled and never to be uttered more.

I pause and turn my eyes, and, looking back,
Where that tumultuous flood has passed, I see
The silent Ocean of the Past, a waste
Of waters weltering over graves, its shores Strewn with the wreck of fleets, where mast and hull

Drop away piecemeal ; battlemented walls
Frown idly, green with moss, and temples stand
Unroofed, forsaken by the worshippers.
There lie memorial stones, whence time has gnawed

The graven legends, thrones of kings o'ertumed,
The broken altars of forgotten gods,
Foundations of old cities and long streets
Where never fall of human foot is heard
Upon the desolate pavement. I behold
Dim glimmerings of lost jewels far within
The sleeping waters, diamond, sardonyx,
Ruby and topaz, pearl and chrysolite,
Once glittering at the banquet on fair brows
That long ago were dust ; and all around,
Strewn on the waters of that silent sea,
Are withering bridal wreaths, and glossy locks
Shorn from fair brows by loving hands, and scrolls
O'erwritten — haply with fond words of love
And vows of friendship — and fair pages flung
Fresh from the printer's engine. There they lie
A moment and then sink away from sight.

I look, and the quick tears are in my eyes,
For I behold, in every one of these,
A blighted hope, a separate history
Of human sorrow, telling of dear ties
Suddenly broken, dreams of happiness
Dissolved in air, and happy days, too brief,
That sorrowfully ended, and I think
How painfully must the poor heart have beat
In bosoms without number, as the blow
Was struck that slew their hope or broke their peace.

Sadly I turn, and look before, where yet
The Flood must pass, and I behold a mist
Where swarm dissolving forms, the brood of Hope,
Divinely fair, that rest on banks of flowers
Or wander among rainbows, fading soon
And reappearing, haply giving place
To shapes of grisly aspect, such as Fear
Moulds from the idle air ; where serpents lift
The head to strike, and skeletons stretch forth
The bony arm in menace. Further on
A belt of darkness seems to bar the way,
Long, low and distant, where the Life that Is Touches the Life to come. The Flood of Years
Rolls toward it, nearer and nearer. It must pass
That dismal barrier. What is there beyond ?
Hear what the wise and good have said. Beyond
That belt of darkness still the years roll on
More gently, but with not less mighty sweep.
They gather up again and softly bear
All the sweet lives that late were overwhelmed
And lost to sight — all that in them was good,
Noble, and truly great and worthy of love —
The lives of infants and ingenuous youths,
Sages and saintly women who have made

Their households happy — all are raised and borne
By that great current on its onward sweep,
Wandering and rippling with caressing waves
Around green islands, fragrant with the breath
Of flowers that never wither. So they pass,
From stage to stage, along the shining course
Of that fair river broadening like a sea.
As its smooth eddies curl along their way,
They bring old friends together ; hands are clasped

In joy unspeakable ; the mother's arms
Again are folded round the child she loved
And lost. Old sorrows are forgotten now,
Or but remembered to make sweet the hour
That overpays them ; wounded hearts that bled
Or broke are healed forever. In the room
Of this grief-shadowed Present there shall be
A Present in whose reign no grief shall gnaw
The heart, and never shall a tender tie
Be broken — in whose reign the eternal Change
That waits on growth and action shall proceed
With everlasting Concord hand in hand.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

THREE DAYS.

So much to do : so little done !
Ah ! yesternight I saw the sun
Sink beamless down the vaulted gray, —
The ghastly ghost of YESTERDAY.

So little done : so much to do !
Each morning breaks on conflicts new ;
But eager, brave, I 'll join the fray,
And fight the battle of TO-DAY.

So much to do : so little done !
But when it's o'er, — the victory won, —
Oh ! then, my soul, this strife and sorrow
Will end in that great, glad TO-MORROW.

JAMES R. GILMORE.

INSIGNIFICANT EXISTENCE.

THERE are a number of us creep
Into this world, to eat and sleep ;
And know no reason why we're born,
But only to consume the corn,
Devour the cattle, fowl, and fish,
And leave behind an empty dish.
The crows and ravens do the same,
Unlucky birds of hateful name ;
Ravens or crows might fill their places,
And swallow corn and carcasses,

Then if their tombstone, when they die,
Ben't taught to flatter and to lie,
There's nothing better will be said
Than that "they've eat up all their bread,
Drunk up their drink, and gone to bed."

ISAAC WATTS.

NEW YEAR'S EVE.

FROM "IN MEMORIAM."

RING out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light ;
The year is dying in the night ;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new ;
Ring, happy bells, across the snow ;
The year is going, let him go ;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more ;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind.

Ring out a slowly dying cause
And ancient forms of party strife ;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite ;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease,
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold ;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand ;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

ALFRED TENNYSON.

THE CLOSING YEAR.

'T is midnight's holy hour, — and silence now
Is brooding like a gentle spirit o'er
The still and pulseless world. Hark ! on the winds
The bell's deep tones are swelling, — 'tis the knell
Of the departed year. No funeral train
Is sweeping past ; yet, on the stream and wood,
With melancholy light, the moonbeams rest

Like a pale, spotless shroud ; the air is stirred
As by a mourner's sigh ; and on yon cloud
That floats so still and placidly through heaven,
The spirits of the seasons seem to stand, —
Young Spring, bright Summer, Autumn's solemn
form,

And Winter with its aged locks, — and breathe,
In mournful cadences that come abroad
Like the far wind-harp's wild and touching wail,
A melancholy dirge o'er the dead year,
Gone from the earth forever.

'T is a time
For memory and for tears. Within the deep,
Still chambers of the heart, a spectre dim,
Whose tones are like the wizard's voice of Time
Heard from the tomb of ages, points its cold
And solemn finger to the beautiful
And holy visions that have passed away,
And left no shadow of their loveliness
On the dead waste of life. That spectre lifts
The coffin-lid of Hope and Joy and Love,
And bending mournfully above the pale,
Sweet forms that slumber there, scatters dead
flowers

O'er what has passed to nothingness.

The year
Has gone, and with it, many a glorious throng
Of happy dreams. Its mark is on each brow,
Its shadow in each heart. In its swift course
It waved its sceptre o'er the beautiful,
And they are not. It laid its pallid hand
Upon the strong man, and the haughty form
Is fallen, and the flashing eye is dim.
It trod the hall of revelry, where thronged
The bright and joyous, and the tearful wail
Of stricken ones is heard where erst the song
And reckless shout resounded.

It passed o'er
The battle-plain where sword and spear and shield

Flashed in the light of midday, and the strength
Of serried hosts is shivered, and the grass,
Green from the soil of carnage, waves above
The crushed and mouldering skeleton. It came,
And faded like a wreath of mist at eve ;
Yet ere it melted in the viewless air
It heralded its millions to their home
In the dim land of dreams.

Remorseless Time !
Fierce spirit of the glass and scythe ! — what power

Can stay him in his silent course, or melt
His iron heart to pity ? On, still on,
He presses, and forever. The proud bird,
The condor of the Andes, that can soar

Through heaven's unfathomable depths, or brave
The fury of the northern hurricane,
And bathe his plumage in the thunder's home,
Furls his broad wings at nightfall, and sinks
down

To rest upon his mountain crag, — but Time
Knows not the weight of sleep or weariness,
And night's deep darkness has no chain to bind
His rushing pinions.

Revolutions sweep

O'er earth, like troubled visions o'er the breast
Of dreaming sorrow ; cities rise and sink
Like bubbles on the water ; fiery isles
Spring blazing from the ocean, and go back
To their mysterious caverns ; mountains rear
To heaven their bald and blackened cliffs, and bow

Their tall heads to the plain ; new empires rise,
Gathering the strength of hoary centuries,
And rush down like the Alpine avalanche,
Startling the nations ; and the very stars,
Yon bright and burning blazonry of God,
Glitter awhile in their eternal depths,
And, like the Pleiads, loveliest of their train,
Shoot from their glorious spheres, and pass away
To dangle in the trackless void, — yet Time,
Time the tomb-builder, holds his fierce career,
Dark, stern, all-pitiless, and pauses not
Amid the mighty wrecks that strew his path
To sit and muse, like other conquerors,
Upon the fearful ruin he has wrought.

GEORGE DENISON PRENTICE.

THE DEATH OF THE OLD YEAR.

FULL knee-deep lies the winter snow,
And the winter winds are wearily sighing :
Toll ye the church-bell sad and slow,
And tread softly and speak low,
For the old year lies a-dying.

Old year, you must not die ;
You came to us so readily,
You lived with us so steadily,
Old year, you shall not die.

He lieth still : he doth not move :
He will not see the dawn of day.
He hath no other life above,
He gave me a friend, and a true true-love,
And the New-year will take 'em away.

Old year, you must not go ;
So long as you have been with us,
Such joy as you have seen with us,
Old year, you shall not go.

He frothed his bumpers to the brim ;
A jollier year we shall not see.
But, though his eyes are waxing dim,
And though his foes speak ill of him,
He was a friend to me.

Old year, you shall not die ;
We did so laugh and cry with you,
I've half a mind to die with you,
Old year, if you must die.

He was full of joke and jest,
But all his merry quips are o'er.
To see him die, across the waste
His son and heir doth ride post-haste,
But he'll be dead before.

Every one for his own.
The night is starry and cold, my friend,
And the New-year, blithe and bold, my friend,
Comes up to take his own.

How hard he breathes ! over the snow
I heard just now the crowing cock.
The shadows flicker to and fro :
The cricket chirps : the light burns low :
'T is nearly twelve o'clock.

Shake hands before you die.
Old year, we'll dearly rue for you :
What is it we can do for you ?
Speak out before you die.

His face is growing sharp and thin.
Alack ! our friend is gone.
Close up his eyes : tie up his chin :
Step from the corpse, and let him in
That standeth there alone,
And waiteth at the door.
There's a new foot on the floor, my friend,
And a new face at the door, my friend,
A new face at the door.

ALFRED TENNYSON.

THE APPROACH OF AGE.

SONNET XII.

WHEN I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night ;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls all silvered o'er with white ;
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves,
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard ;
Then of thy beauty do I question make,
That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,

And die as fast as they see others grow ;
 And nothing 'gainst Time's scythe can make defence,
 Save breed, to brave him when he takes thee
 hence.

SHAKESPEARE.

 TO THE VIRGINS.

GATHER the rosebuds while ye may,
 Old Time is still a flying ;
 And this same flower that smiles to-day
 To-morrow will be dying.

The glorious lamp of Heaven, the sun,
 The higher he's a getting,
 The sooner will his race be run,
 And nearer he's to setting.

The age is best which is the first,
 When youth and blood are warmer ;
 But being spent, the worse and worst
 Times still succeed the former.

Then be not coy, but use your time,
 And, while ye may, go marry ;
 For having lost but once your prime,
 You may forever tarry.

ROBERT HERRICK.

 TO-MORROW.

FROM "IRENE."

TO-MORROW'S action ! can that hoary wisdom,
 Borne down with years, still doat upon to-morrow !
 The fatal mistress of the young, the lazy,
 The coward and the fool, condemned to lose
 An useless life in waiting for to-morrow,
 To gaze with longing eyes upon to-morrow,
 Till interposing death destroys the prospect.
 Strange that this general fraud from day to day
 Should fill the world with wretches, undetected !
 The soldier, laboring through a winter's march,
 Still sees to-morrow drest in robes of triumph ;
 Still to the lover's long-expecting arms
 To-morrow brings the visionary bride.
 But thou, too old to bear another cheat,
 Learn that the present hour alone is man's.

SAMUEL JOHNSON.

 GOING AND COMING.

GOING — the great round Sun,
 Dragging the captive Day
 Over behind the frowning hill,
 Over beyond the bay, —

Dying :
 Coming — the dusky Night,
 Silently stealing in,
 Wrapping himself in the soft warm couch
 Where the golden-haired Day hath been Lying.

Going — the bright, blithe Spring ;
 Blossoms ! how fast ye fall,
 Shooting out of your starry sky
 Into the darkness all Blindly !

Coming — the mellow days :
 Crimson and yellow leaves ;
 Languishing purple and amber fruits
 Kissing the bearded sheaves Kindly !

Going — our early friends ;
 Voices we loved are dumb ;
 Footsteps grow dim in the morning dew ;
 Fainter the echoes come
 Ringing :
 Coming to join our march, —
 Shoulder to shoulder pressed, —
 Gray-haired veterans strike their tents
 For the far-off purple West —
 Singing !

Going — this old, old life ;
 Beautiful world, farewell !
 Forest and meadow ! river and hill !
 Ring ye a loving knell
 O'er us !

Coming — a nobler life ;
 Coming — a better land ;
 Coming — a long, long, nightless day ;
 Coming — the grand, grand
 Chorus !

EDWARD A. JENKS.

 THE FOOLISH VIRGINS.

FROM "IDYLS OF THE KING."

THE Queen looked up, and said,
 "O maiden, if indeed you list to sing,
 Sing, and unbind my heart, that I may weep."
 Wherewith full willingly sang the little maid :

"Late, late, so late ! and dark the night and chill !
 Late, late, so late ! but we can enter still.
 Too late, too late ! Ye cannot enter now.

"No light had we : for that we do repent ;
 And learning this, the bridegroom will relent.
 Too late, too late ! Ye cannot enter now.

“No light ; so late ! and dark and chill the
night !
O, let us in, that we may find the light !
Too late, too late ! Ye cannot enter now.

“Have we not heard the bridegroom is so sweet ?
O, let us in, though late, to kiss his feet !
No, no, too late ! Ye cannot enter now.”

So sang the novice, while full passionately,
Her head upon her hands, wept the sad Queen.

OLD AGE AND DEATH.

FROM “VERSES UPON HIS DIVINE POESY.”

THE seas are quiet when the winds give o'er ;
So calm are we when passions are no more.
For then we know how vain it was to boast
Of fleeting things, too certain to be lost.
Clouds of affection from our younger eyes
Conceal that emptiness which age describes.

The soul's dark cottage, battered and decayed,
Lets in new light through chinks that time has
made :

Stronger by weakness, wiser men become,
As they draw near to their eternal home.
Leaving the old, both worlds at once they view,
That stand upon the threshold of the new.

EDMUND WALLER.

THE ONE GRAY HAIR.

THE wisest of the wise
Listen to pretty lies,

And love to hear them told ;
Doubt not that Solomon
Listened to many a one, —
Some in his youth, and more when he grew old.

I never sat among
The choir of Wisdom's song,
But pretty lies loved I
As much as any king, —
When youth was on the wing,
And (must it then be told ?) when youth had quite gone by.

Alas ! and I have not
The pleasant hour forgot,
When one pert lady said, —
“O Landor ! I am quite Bewildered with affright ;
I see (sit quiet now !) a white hair on your head !”

Another, more benign,
Drew out that hair of mine,
And in her own dark hair
Pretended she had found
That one, and twirled it round. —
Fair as she was, she never was so fair.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

GROWING GRAY.

“On a page de son cœur.” — A. D'HOUDETOT.

A LITTLE more toward the light.
Me miserum. Here's one that's white,
And one that's turning ;
Adieu to song and “salad days.”
My Muse, let's go at once to Jay's
And order mourning.

We must reform our rhymes, my dear,
Renounce the gay for the severe, —
Be grave, not witty ;
We have no more the right to find
That Pyrrha's hair is neatly twined,
That Chloe's pretty.

Young Love's for us a farce that's played ;
Light canzonet and serenade
No more may tempt us ;
Gray hairs but ill accord with dreams ;
From aught but sour didactic themes
Our years exempt us.

“A la bonne heure !” You fancy so ?
You think for one white streak we grow
At once satiric ?
A fiddlestick ! Each hair's a string
To which our graybeard Muse shall sing
A younger lyric.

Our heart's still sound. Shall “cakes and ale”
Grow rare to youth because we rail
At school-boy dishes ?
Perish the thought ! 'T is ours to sing,
Though neither Time nor Tide can bring Belief with wishes.

AUSTIN DOBSON.

TOO LATE.

“Ah ! si la jeunesse savait — si la vieillesse pouvait !”

THERE sat an old man on a rock,
And unceasing bewailed him of Fate, —
That concern where we all must take stock,
Though our vote has no hearing or weight ;
And the old man sang him an old, old song, —
Never sang voice so clear and strong
That it could drown the old man's long,
For he sang the song “Too late ! too late !”

“When we want, we have for our pains
 The promise that if we but wait
 Till the want has burned out of our brains,
 Every means shall be present to sate ;
 While we send for the napkin the soup gets
 cold,
 While the bonnet is trimming the face grows
 old,
 When we've matched our buttons the pattern is sold,
 And everything comes too late — too late !

“When strawberries seemed like red heavens,
 Terrapin stew a wild dream.
 When my brain was at sixes and sevens,
 If my mother had ‘folks’ and ice-cream,
 Then I gazed with a lickerish hunger
 At the restaurant man and fruit-monger
 But O, how I wished I were younger
 When the goodies all came in a stream — in a stream !

“I've a splendid blood-horse, and — a liver
 That it jars into torture to trot ;
 My row-boat's the gem of the river, —
 Gout makes every knuckle a knot !
 I can buy boundless credits on Paris and
 Rome,
 But no palate for menus, no eyes for a dome —
Those belonged to the youth who must tarry
 at home,
 When no home but an attic he'd got — he'd got !

“How I longed, in that lonest of garrets,
 Where the tiles baked my brains all July,
 For ground to grow two pecks of carrots,
 Two pigs of my own in a sty,
 A rosebush — a little thatched cottage —
 Two spoons — love — a basin of pottage ! —
 Now in freestone I sit — and my dotage —
 With a woman's chair empty close by — close by !

“Ah ! now, though I sit on a rock,
 I have shared one seat with the great ;
 I have sat — knowing naught of the clock —
 On love's high throne of state ;
 But the lips that kissed, and the arms that caressed,
 To a mouth grown stern with delay were pressed,
 And circled a breast that their clasp had blessed
 Had they only not come too late — too late !”

FITZ HUGH LUDLOW.

THE THREE WARNINGS.

THE tree of deepest root is found
 Least willing still to quit the ground ;
 'T was therefore said by ancient sages,
 That love of life increased with years
 So much, that in our latter stages,
 When pains grow sharp and sickness rages,
 The greatest love of life appears.
 This great affection to believe,
 Which all confess, but few perceive,
 If old assertions can't prevail,
 Be pleased to hear a modern tale.

When sports went round, and all were gay,
 On neighbor Dodson's wedding-day,
 Death called aside the jocund groom
 With him into another room,
 And, looking grave, “You must,” says he,
 “Quit your sweet bride, and come with me.”
 “With you ! and quit my Susan's side ?
 With you !” the hapless husband cried ;
 “Young as I am, 't is monstrous hard !
 Besides, in truth, I'm not prepared :
 My thoughts on other matters go ;
 This is my wedding-day, you know.”

What more he urged I have not heard,
 His reasons could not well be stronger ;
 So Death the poor delinquent spared,
 And left to live a little longer.
 Yet calling up a serious look,
 His hour-glass trembled while he spoke —
 “Neighbor,” he said, “farewell ! no more
 Shall Death disturb your mirthful hour ;
 And further, to avoid all blame
 Of cruelty upon my name,
 To give you time for preparation,
 And fit you for your future station,
 Three several warnings you shall have,
 Before you're summoned to the grave ;
 Willing for once I'll quit my prey,
 And grant a kind reprieve,
 In hopes you'll have no more to say,
 But when I call again this way,
 Well pleased the world will leave.”
 To these conditions both consented,
 And parted perfectly contented.

What next the hero of our tale befell,
 How long he lived, how wise, how well,
 How roundly he pursued his course,
 And smoked his pipe, and stroked his horse,
 The willing muse shall tell :
 He chattered then, he bought and sold,
 Nor once perceived his growing old,
 Nor thought of Death as near :

His friends not false, his wife no shrew,
 Many his gains, his children few,
 He passed his hours in peace,
 But while he viewed his wealth increase,
 While thus along life's dusty road
 The beaten track content he trod,
 Old Time, whose haste no mortal spares,
 Uncalled, unheeded, unawares,
 Brought on his eightieth year.
 And now, one night, in musing mood,
 As all alone he sate,
 The unwelcome messenger of Fate
 Once more before him stood.

Half killed with anger and surprise,
 "So soon returned!" Old Dodson cries.
 "So soon, d' ye call it!" Death replies;
 "Surely, my friend, you're but in jest!
 Since I was here before
 'Tis six-and-thirty years at least,
 And you are now fourscore."

"So much the worse," the clown rejoined;
 "To spare the aged would be kind:
 However, see your search be legal;
 And your authority, — is't regal?
 Else you are come on a fool's errand,
 With but a secretary's warrant.
 Beside, you promised me three warnings,
 Which I have looked for nights and mornings;
 But for that loss of time and ease
 I can recover damages."

"I know," cries Death, "that at the best
 I seldom am a welcome guest;
 But don't be captious, friend, at least:
 I little thought you'd still be able
 To stomp about your farm and stable:
 Your years have run to a great length;
 I wish you joy, though, of your strength!"

"Hold," says the farmer, "not so fast!
 I have been lame these four years past."

"And no great wonder," Death replies:
 "However, you still keep your eyes;
 And sure, to see one's loves and friends
 For legs and arms would make amends."

"Perhaps," says Dodson, "so it might,
 But latterly I've lost my sight."

"This is a shocking tale, 't is true;
 But still there's comfort left for you:
 Each strives your sadness to amuse;
 I warrant you hear all the news."

"There's none," cries he; "and if there were,
 I'm grown so deaf, I could not hear."

"Nay, then," the spectre stern rejoined,
 "These are unjustifiable yearnings:
 If you are lame and deaf and blind,

You've had your three sufficient warnings;
 So come along, no more we'll part."
 He said, and touched him with his dart.
 And now, Old Dodson, turning pale,
 Yields to his fate, — so ends my tale.

HESTER LYNCH THRALE.

 WITHOUT AND WITHIN.

If every man's internal care
 Were written on his brow,
 How many would our pity share
 Who raise our envy now?

The fatal secret, when revealed,
 Of every aching breast,
 Would prove that only while concealed
 Their lot appeared the best.

INTIMATIONS OF IMMORTALITY FROM RECOLLECTIONS OF EARLY CHILDHOOD.

THERE was a time when meadow, grove, and
 stream,
 The earth, and every common sight,
 To me did seem
 Apparelled in celestial light, —
 The glory and the freshness of a dream.
 It is not now as it hath been of yore:
 Turn wheresoe'er I may,
 By night or day,
 The things which I have seen I now can see no
 more.

The rainbow comes and goes,
 And lovely is the rose;
 The moon doth with delight
 Look round her when the heavens are bare;
 Waters on a starry night
 Are beautiful and fair;
 The sunshine is a glorious birth;
 But yet I know, where'er I go,
 That there hath passed away a glory from the earth.

Now, while the birds thus sing a joyous song,
 And while the young lambs bound
 As to the tabor's sound,
 To me alone there came a thought of grief;
 A timely utterance gave that thought relief,
 And I again am strong.
 The cataracts blow their trumpets from the steep, —
 No more shall grief of mine the season wrong.
 I hear the echoes through the mountains throng;
 The winds come to me from the fields of sleep,

And all the earth is gay ;
 Land and sea
 Give themselves up to jollity ;
 And with the heart of May Doth every beast keep holiday ; —
 Thou child of joy,
 Shout round me, let me hear thy shouts, thou happy shepherd boy !

Ye blessed creatures ! I have heard the call
 Ye to each other make ; I see
 The heavens laugh with you in your jubilee ;
 My heart is at your festival,
 My head hath its coronal, —
 The fulness of your bliss, I feel, I feel it all.
 O evil day ! if I were sullen
 While Earth herself is adorning,
 This sweet May morning,
 And the children are culling,
 On every side,
 In a thousand valleys far and wide,
 Fresh flowers ; while the sun shines warm,
 And the babe leaps up on his mother's arm ; —
 I hear, I hear, with joy I hear ! —
 But there's a tree, of many, one,
 A single field which I have looked upon, —
 Both of them speak of something that is gone ;
 The pansy at my feet
 Doth the same tale repeat.

Whither is fled the visionary gleam ?
 Where is it now, the glory and the dream

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting ;
 The soul that rises with us, our life's star,
 Hath had elsewhere its setting,
 And cometh from afar :
 Not in entire forgetfulness,
 And not in utter nakedness,
 But trailing clouds of glory, do we come
 From God, who is our home :
 Heaven lies about us in our infancy !
 Shades of the prison-house begin to close
 Upon the growing Boy ;
 But he beholds the light, and whence it flows, —
 He sees it in his joy ;
 The Youth, who daily farker from the east
 Must travel, still is nature's priest
 And by the vision splendid
 Is on his way attended :

At length the Man perceives it die away,
 And fade into the light of common day.

Earth fills her lap with pleasures of her own ;
 Yearnings she hath in her own natural kind,
 And even with something of a mother's mind,
 And no unworthy aim,
 The homely nurse doth all she can
 To make her foster-child, her inmate man,

Forget the glories he hath known,
 And that imperial palace whence he came.

Behold the child among his new-born blisses, —
 A six years' darling of a pygmy size !
 See, where mid work of his own hand he lies,
 Fretted by sallies of his mother's kisses,
 With light upon him from his father's eyes !
 See, at his feet, some little plan or chart,
 Some fragment from his dream of human life,
 Shaped by himself with newly learned art, —
 A wedding or a festival,
 A mourning or a funeral ; —
 And this hath now his heart,
 And unto this he frames his song :
 Then will he fit his tongue
 To dialogues of business, love, or strife ;
 But it will not be long
 Ere this be thrown aside,
 And with new joy and pride
 The little actor cons another part, —
 Filling from time to time his "humorous stage"
 With all the persons, down to palsied age,
 That Life brings with her in her equipage ;
 As if his whole vocation
 Were endless imitation.

Thou, whose exterior semblance doth belie
 Thy soul's immensity !

Thou best philosopher, who yet dost keep
 Thy heritage ! thou eye among the blind,
 That, deaf and silent, read'st the eternal deep,
 Haunted forever by the eternal mind ! —
 Mighty prophet ! Seer blest !
 On whom those truths do rest
 Which we are toiling all our lives to find,
 In darkness lost, the darkness of the grave ;
 Thou over whom thy immortality
 Broods like the day, a master o'er a slave,
 A presence which is not to be put by ;
 Thou little child, yet glorious in the night
 Of heaven-born freedom on thy being's height,
 Why with such earnest pains dost thou provoke
 The years to bring the inevitable yoke,
 Thus blindly with thy blessedness at strife ?
 Full soon thy soul shall have her earthly freight,
 And custom lie upon thee with a weight
 Heavy as frost, and deep almost as life !

O joy ! that in our embers
 Is something that doth live ;
 That Nature yet remembers
 -What was so fugitive !

The thought of our past years in me doth breed
 Perpetual benediction : not, indeed,
 For that which is most worthy to be blest, —
 Delight and liberty, the simple creed
 Of childhood, whether busy or at rest,

With new-fledged hope still fluttering in his breast : —

Not for these I raise
The song of thanks and praise ;

But for those obstinate questionings

Of sense and outward things,
Fallings from us, vanishings ;

Blank misgivings of a creature

Moving about in worlds not realized,

High instincts, before which our mortal nature

Did tremble like a guilty thing surprised :

But for those first affections,

Those shadowy recollections,

Which, be they what they may,

Are yet the fountain-light of all our day,

Are yet a master light of all our seeing ;

Uphold us, cherish, and have power to make

Our noisy years seem moments in the being

Of the eternal silence : truths that wake,

To perish never ;

Which neither listlessness, nor mad endeavor,

Nor man nor boy,

Nor all that is at enmity with joy,

Can utterly abolish or destroy !

Hence, in a season of calm weather,

Though inland far we be,

Our souls have sight of that immortal sea

Which brought us hither, —

Can in a moment travel thither,

And see the children sport upon the shore,

And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.

Then sing, ye birds, sing, sing a joyous song !

And let the young lambs bound

As to the tabor's sound !

We in thought will join your throng,

Ye that pipe and ye that play,

Ye that through your hearts to-day

Feel the gladness of the May !

What though the radiance which was once so bright

Be now forever taken from my sight,

Though nothing can bring back the hour

Of splendor in the grass, of glory in the flower ;

We will grieve not, rather find

Strength in what remains behind ;

In the primal sympathy

Which, having been, must ever be ;

In the soothing thoughts that spring

Out of human suffering ;

In the faith that looks through death,

In years that bring the philosophic mind.

And O ye fountains, meadows, hills, and groves,

Forebode not any severing of our loves !

Yet in my heart of hearts I feel your might ;

I only have relinquished one delight

To live beneath your more habitual sway.

I love the brooks which down their channels fret,
Even more than when I tripped lightly as they ;

The innocent brightness of a new-born day

Is lovely yet ;

The clouds that gather round the setting sun

Do take a sober coloring from an eye

That hath kept watch o'er man's mortality ;

Another race hath been, and other palms are won.

Thanks to the human heart by which we live,

Thanks to its tenderness, its joys, and fears, —

To me the meanest flower that blows can give

Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

SOLILOQUY : ON IMMORTALITY.

FROM "CATO," ACT V. SC. I.

SCENE. — CATO, sitting in a thoughtful posture, with Plato's book on the Immortality of the Soul in his hand, and a drawn sword on the table by him.

It must be so — Plato, thou reasonest well ! —

Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,

This longing after immortality ?

Or whence this secret dread, and inward horror,

Of falling into naught ? Why shrinks the soul

Back on herself, and startles at destruction ?

'T is the divinity that stirs within us ;

'T is Heaven itself, that points out a hereafter,

And intimates eternity to man.

Eternity ! — thou pleasing, dreadful thought !

Through what variety of untried being,

Through what new scenes and changes, must we pass !

The wide, the unbounded prospect lies before me ;

But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it.

Here will I hold. If there's a Power above us

(And that there is, all Nature cries aloud

Through all her works), he must delight in virtue ;

And that which he delights in must be happy.

But when ? or where ? This world was made for Cæsar.

I'm weary of conjectures, — this must end 'em.

(Laying his hand on his sword.)

Thus am I doubly armed : my death and life,

My bane and antidote, are both before me :

This in a moment brings me to an end ;

But this informs me I shall never die.

The soul, secured in her existence, smiles

At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.

The stars shall fade away, the sun himself

Grow dim with age, and Nature sink in years ;

But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,

Unhurt amid the war of elements,

The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds !

JOSEPH ADDISON.

O, MAY I JOIN THE CHOIR INVISIBLE !

O, MAY I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence ; live
In pulses stirred to generosity,
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
Of miserable aims that end with self,
In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars,
And with their mild persistence urge men's minds
To vaster issues.

So to live is heaven :

To make undying music in the world,
Breathing a beautiful order, that controls
With growing sway the growing life of man.
So we inherit that sweet purity
For which we struggled, failed, and agonized
With widening retrospect that bred despair.
Rebellious flesh that would not be subdued,
A vicious parent shaming still its child,
Poor anxious penitence, is quick dissolved ;
Its discords quenched by meeting harmonies,
Die in the large and charitable air.
And all our rarer, better, truer self,
That sobbed religiously in yearning song,
That watched to ease the burden of the world,
Laboriously tracing what must be,
And what may yet be better, — saw within
A worthier image for the sanctuary,
And shaped it forth before the multitude,
Divinely human, raising worship so
To higher reverence more mixed with love,
That better self shall live till human Time
Shall fold its eyelids, and the human sky
Be gathered like a scroll within the tomb,
Unread forever.

This is life to come,

Which martyred men have made more glorious
For us, who strive to follow.

May I reach

That purest heaven, — be to other souls
The cup of strength in some great agony,
Enkindle generous ardor, feed pure love,
Beget the smiles that have no cruelty,
Be the sweet presence of a good diffused,
And in diffusion ever more intense !
So shall I join the choir invisible,
Whose music is the gladness of the world.

MARIAN EVANS LEWES CROSS (George Eliot).

PRE-EXISTENCE.

WHILE sauntering through the crowded street,
Some half-remembered face I meet,
Albeit upon no mortal shore
That face, methinks, has smiled before.

Lost in a gay and festal throng,
I tremble at some tender song, —

Set to an air whose golden bars
I must have heard in other stars.

In sacred aisles I pause to share
The blessings of a priestly prayer, —

When the whole scene which greets mine eyes
In some strange mode I recognize

As one whose every mystic part
I feel prefigured in my heart.

At sunset, as I calmly stand,
A stranger on an alien strand,

Familiar as my childhood's home
Seems the long stretch of wave and foam.

One sails toward me o'er the bay,
And what he comes to do and say

I can foretell. A prescient lore
Springs from some life outlived of yore.

O swift, instinctive, startling gleams
Of deep soul-knowledge ! not as dreams

For aye ye vaguely dawn and die,
But oft with lightning certainty

Pierce through the dark, oblivious brain,
To make old thoughts and memories plain,

Thoughts which perchance must travel back
Across the wild, bewildering track

Of countless æons ; memories far,
High-reaching as yon pallid star,

Unknown, scarce seen, whose flickering grace
Faints on the outmost rings of space !

PAUL HAMILTON HAYNE.

A LOST CHORD.

SEATED one day at the organ,
I was weary and ill at ease,
And my fingers wandered idly
Over the noisy keys.

I do not know what I was playing,
Or what I was dreaming then,
But I struck one chord of music,
Like the sound of a great Amen.

It flooded the crimson twilight,
Like the close of an angel's psalm,
And it lay on my fevered spirit,
With a touch of infinite calm.

It quieted pain and sorrow,
Like love overcoming strife ;
It seemed the harmonious echo
From our discordant life.

It linked all perplexed meanings
Into one perfect peace,
And trembled away into silence,
As if it were loath to cease.

I have sought, but I seek it vainly,
That one lost chord divine,
That came from the soul of the organ,
And entered into mine.

It may be that Death's bright angel
Will speak in that chord again ;
It may be that only in heaven
I shall hear that grand Amen.

ADELAIDE ANNE PROCTER.

TO A SKELETON.

[The MS. of this poem, which appeared during the first quarter of the present century, was said to have been found in the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, in London, near a perfect human skeleton, and to have been sent by the curator to the Morning Chronicle for publication. It excited so much attention that every effort was made to discover the author, and a responsible party went so far as to offer a reward of fifty guineas for information that would discover its origin. The author preserved his incognito, and, we believe, has never been discovered.]

BEHOLD this ruin ! 'T was a skull
Once of ethereal spirit full.
This narrow cell was Life's retreat ;
This space was Thought's mysterious seat.
What baseless visions filled this spot !
What dreams of pleasure long forgot !
Nor hope, nor joy, nor love, nor fear
Has left one trace of record here.

Beneath this mouldering canopy
Once shone the bright and busy eye :
But start not at the dismal void, —
If social love that eye employed,
If with no lawless fire it gleamed,
But through the dews of kindness beamed,
That eye shall be forever bright
When stars and sun are sunk in night.

Within this hollow cavern hung
The ready, swift, and tuneful tongue :
If Falschood's honey it disdained,
And when it could not praise was chained ;
If bold in Virtue's cause it spoke,
Yet gentle concord never broke, —
This silent tongue shall plead for thee
When Time unveils Eternity !

Say, did these fingers delve the mine,
Or with the envied rubies shine ?
To hew the rock, or wear a gem,
Can little now avail to them ;
But if the page of Truth they sought,
Or comfort to the mourner brought,
These hands a richer meed shall claim
Than all that wait on Wealth and Fame.

Avails it whether bare or shod
These feet the paths of duty trod ?
If from the bowers of Ease they fled,
To seek Affliction's humble shed ;
If Grandeur's guilty bribe they spurned,
And home to Virtue's cot returned, —
These feet with angel wings shall vie,
And tread the palace of the sky !

THE BROTHERS.

SLUMBER, Sleep, — they were two brothers, servants to the gods above ;
Kind Prometheus lured them downwards, ever filled with earthly love ;
But what gods could bear so lightly, pressed too hard on men beneath ;
Slumber did his brother's duty, — Sleep was deepened into Death.

From the German of GOETHE.

INVOCATION TO SLEEP.

FROM "VALENTINIAN."

COME, Sleep, and with thy sweet deceiving
Lock me in delight awhile ;
Let some pleasing dreams beguile
All my fancies, that from thence
I may feel an influence,
All my powers of care bereaving !

Though but a shadow, but a sliding,
Let me know some little joy !
We that suffer long annoy
Are contented with a thought,
Through an idle fancy wrought :
O, let my joys have some abiding !

JOHN FLETCHER.

SLEEP.

COME, gentle sleep ! attend thy votary's prayer,
And, though death's image, to my couch repair ;
How sweet, though lifeless, yet with life to lie,
And, without dying, O how sweet to die !

DR. JOHN WOLCOTT (Peter Pindar).

SLEEP.

WEEP ye no more, sad fountains !
 What need you flow so fast ?
 Look how the snowy mountains
 Heaven's sun doth gently waste.
 But my sun's heavenly eyes
 View not your weeping,
 That now lies sleeping
 Softly, now softly lies
 Sleeping.

Sleep is a reconciling, —
 A rest that peace begets ;
 Doth not the sun rise smiling,
 When fair at even he sets ?
 Rest you then, rest, sad eyes, —
 Melt not in weeping,
 While she lies sleeping
 Softly, now softly lies
 Sleeping.

JOHN DOWLAND.

SLEEP.

FROM "ASTROPHEL AND STELLA"

COME, Sleep, O Sleep, the certain knot of peace,
 The baiting-place of wit, the balm of woe,
 The poor man's wealth, the prisoner's release,
 The indifferent judge between the high and low,
 With shield of proof shield me from out the prease*
 Of those fierce darts Despair at me doth throw ;
 O, make me in those civil wars to cease :
 I will good tribute pay, if thou do so.
 Take thou of me smooth pillows, sweetest bed,
 A chamber deaf to noise, and blind to light,
 A rosy garland, and a weary head :
 And if these things, as being thine in right,
 Move not thy heavy grace, thou shalt in me
 Livelier than elsewhere Stella's image see.

SLEEP.

"He giveth his beloved sleep." — Psalms cxxvi. 2.

OF all the thoughts of God that are
 Borne inward unto souls afar,
 Among the Psalmist's music deep,
 Now tell me if that any is,
 For gift or grace, surpassing this, —
 "He giveth his beloved sleep" ?

What would we give to our beloved ?
 The hero's heart, to be unmoved, —
 The poet's star-tuned harp, to sweep, —
 The patriot's voice, to teach and rouse, —
 The monarch's crown, to light the brows ?
 "He giveth his beloved sleep."

* Press — throng.

What do we give to our beloved ?
 A little faith, all undisproved, —
 A little dust to overweep,
 And bitter memories, to make
 The whole earth blasted for our sake,
 "He giveth his beloved sleep."

"Sleep soft, beloved !" we sometimes say,
 But have no tune to charm away
 Sad dreams that through the eyelids creep ;
 But never doleful dream again
 Shall break the happy slumber when
 "He giveth his beloved sleep."

O earth, so full of dreary noise !
 O men, with wailing in your voice !
 O delvèd gold the wailers heap !
 O strife, O curse, that o'er it fall !
 God strikes a silence through you all,
 And "giveth his beloved sleep."

His dews drop mutely on the hill,
 His cloud above it saileth still,
 Though on its slope men sow and reap ;
 More softly than the dew is shed,
 Or cloud is floated overhead,
 "He giveth his beloved sleep."

For me, my heart, that erst did go
 Most like a tired child at a show,
 That sees through tears the nummers leap,
 Would now its wearied vision close,
 Would childlike on his love repose
 Who "giveth his beloved sleep."

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

SLEEP.

FROM "SECOND PART OF HENRY IV.," ACT III. SC. 1.

KING HENRY. How many thousand of my poorest subjects
 Are at this hour asleep ! — O sleep ! O gentle
 sleep !
 Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
 That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
 And steep my senses in forgetfulness ?
 Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
 Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
 And hushed with buzzing night-flies to thy
 slumber,
 Than in the perfumed chambers of the great,
 Under the canopies of costly state,
 And lulled with sounds of sweetest melody ?
 O thou dull god ! why liest thou with the vile,
 In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
 A watch-case, or a common 'larum-bell ?

Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast
 Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains
 In cradle of the rude imperious surge,
 And in the visitation of the winds,
 Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
 Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them
 With deafening clamors in the slippery clouds,
 That, with the hurly, death itself awakes ?
 Canst thou, O partial sleep ! give thy repose
 To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude ;
 And in the calmest and most stillest night,
 With all appliances and means to boot,
 Deny it to a king ? Then, happy low, lie down ;
 Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

SHAKESPEARE.

SLEEPLESSNESS.

A FLOCK of sheep that leisurely pass by
 One after one ; the sound of rain, and bees
 Murmuring ; the fall of rivers, winds and seas,
 Smooth fields, white sheets of water, and pure
 sky ;—

I've thought of all by turns, and still I lie
 Sleepless ; and soon the small birds' melodies
 Must hear, first uttered from my orchard trees,
 And the first cuckoo's melancholy cry.
 Even thus last night, and two nights more, I lay,
 And could not win thee, Sleep, by any stealth :
 So do not let me wear to-night away :
 Without thee what is all the morning's wealth ?
 Come, blessed barrier between day and day,
 Dear mother of fresh thoughts and joyous health !

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

HYMN TO NIGHT.

YES ! bear them to their rest ;
 The rosy babe, tired with the glare of day,
 The prattler, fallen asleep e'en in his play ;
 Clasp them to thy soft breast,
 O night !
 Bless them in dreams with a deep, hushed delight.

Yet must they wake again,
 Wake soon to all the bitterness of life,
 The pang of sorrow, the temptation strife,
 Aye to the conscience pain :

O night !
 Canst thou not take with them a longer flight ?

Canst thou not bear them far
 E'en now, all innocent, before they know
 The taint of sin, its consequence of woe,
 The world's distracting jar,

O night !
 To some ethereal, holier, happier height ?

Canst thou not bear them up
 Through starlit skies, far from this planet dim
 And sorrowful, e'en while they sleep, to Him
 Who drank for us the cup,
 O night !
 The cup of wrath, for hearts in faith contrite ?

To Him, for them who slept
 A babe all holy on his mother's knee,
 And from that hour to cross-crowned Calvary,
 In all our sorrow wept,
 O night !
 That on our souls might dawn Heaven's cheering light.

Go, lay their little heads
 Close to that human heart, with love divine
 Deep-breathing, while his arms immortal twine
 Around them, as he sheds,
 O night !
 On them a brother's grace of God's own boundless night.

Let them immortal wake
 Among the deathless flowers of Paradise,
 Where angel songs of welcome with surprise
 This their last sleep may break,
 O night !
 And to celestial joy their kindred souls invite.

There can come no sorrow ;
 The brow shall know no shade, the eye no tears,
 Forever young, through heaven's eternal years
 In one unfading morrow,
 O night !

Nor sin nor age nor pain their cherub beauty blight.

Would we could sleep as they,
 So stainless and so calm, — at rest with Thee, —
 And only wake in immortality !

Bear us with them away,
 O night !
 To that ethereal, holier, happier height.

GEORGE WASHINGTON BETHUNE.

WATCHING.

SLEEP, love, sleep !
 The dusty day is done.
 Lo ! from afar the freshening breezes sweep
 Wide over groves of balm,
 Down from the towering palm,
 In at the open casement cooling run,
 And round thy lowly bed,
 Thy bed of pain,
 Bathing thy patient head,
 Like grateful showers of rain,

They come ;
 While the white curtains, waving to and fro,
 Fan the sick air ;
 And pitying the shadows come and go,
 With gentle human care,
 Compassionate and dumb.

The dusty day is done,
 The night begun ;
 While prayerful watch I keep,
 Sleep, love, sleep !
 Is there no magic in the touch
 Of fingers thou dost love so much ?
 Fain would they scatter poppies o'er thee now ;
 Or, with its mute caress,
 The tremulous lip some soft nepenthe press
 Upon thy weary lid and aching brow ;
 While prayerful watch I keep,
 Sleep, love, sleep !

On the pagoda spire
 The bells are swinging,
 Their little golden circlet in a flutter
 With tales the wooing winds have dared to utter,
 Till all are ringing,
 As if a choir
 Of golden-nested birds in heaven were singing,
 And with a lulling sound
 The music floats around,
 And drops like balm into the drowsy ear ;
 Commingling with the hum
 Of the Sepoy's distant drum,
 And lazy beetle ever droning near.
 Sounds these of deepest silence born,
 Like night made visible by morn ;
 So silent that I sometimes start
 To hear the throbbings of my heart,
 And watch, with shivering sense of pain,
 To see thy pale lids lift again.

The lizard, with his mouse-like eyes,
 Peeps from the mortise in surprise
 At such strange quiet after day's harsh din ;
 Then boldly ventures out,
 And looks about,
 And with his hollow feet
 Treads his small evening beat,
 Darting upon his prey
 In such a tricky, winsome sort of way,
 His delicate marauding seems no sin.
 And still the curtains swing,
 But noiselessly ;
 The bells a melancholy murmur ring,
 As tears were in the sky :
 More heavily the shadows fall,
 Like the black foldings of a pall,
 Where juts the rough beam from the wall ;

The candles flare
 With fresher gusts of air ;
 The beetle's drone
 Turns to a dirge-like, solitary moan ;
 Night deepens, and I sit, in cheerless doubt alone.

EMILY CHUBBUCK JUDSON.

THE DREAM.

OUR life is twofold ; sleep hath its own world,
 A boundary between the things misnamed
 Death and existence : sleep hath its own world,
 And a wide realm of wild reality,
 And dreams in their development have breath,
 And tears, and tortures, and the touch of joy ;
 They leave a weight upon our waking thoughts,
 They take a weight from off our waking toils,
 They do divide our being ; they become
 A portion of ourselves as of our time,
 And look like heralds of eternity ;
 They pass like spirits of the past, — they speak
 Like sibyls of the future ; they have power, —
 The tyranny of pleasure and of pain ;
 They make us what we were not, — what they will,
 And shake us with the vision that's gone by,
 The dread of vanished shadows. — Are they so ?
 Is not the past all shadow ? What are they ?
 Creations of the mind ? — The mind can make Substances, and people planets of its own
 With beings brighter than have been, and give
 A breath to forms which can outlive all flesh.
 I would recall a vision which I dreamed
 Perchance in sleep, — for in itself a thought,
 A slumbering thought, is capable of years,
 And curdles a long life into one hour.

I saw two beings in the hues of youth
 Standing upon a hill, a gentle hill,
 Green and of a mild declivity, the last
 As 't were the cape of a long ridge of such,
 Save that there was no sea to lave its base,
 But a most living landscape, and the wave
 Of woods and cornfields, and the abodes of men
 Scattered at intervals, and wreathing smoke
 Arising from such rustic roofs ; the hill
 Was crowned with a peculiar diadem
 Of trees, in circular array, so fixed,
 Not by the sport of nature, but of man :
 These two, a maiden and a youth, were there
 Gazing, — the one on all that was beneath
 Fair as herself, — but the boy gazed on her ; —
 And both were young, and one was beautiful ;
 And both were young, — yet not alike in youth.
 As the sweet moon on the horizon's verge,
 The maid was on the eve of womanhood ;

The boy had fewer summers, but his heart
 Had far outgrown his years, and to his eye
 There was but one beloved face on earth,
 And that was shining on him ; he had looked Upon it till it could not pass away ;
 He had no breath, no being, but in hers ;
 She was his voice ; he did not speak to her,
 But trembled on her words ; she was his sight,
 For his eye followed hers, and saw with hers,
 Which colored all his objects ; — he had ceased
 To live within himself : she was his life,
 The ocean to the river of his thoughts,
 Which terminated all ; upon a tone,
 A touch of hers, his blood would ebb and flow,
 And his cheek change tempestuously, — his heart
 Unknowing of its cause of agony.
 But she in these fond feelings had no share :
 Her sighs were not for him ; to her he was Even as a brother, — but no more ; 't was much,
 For brotherless she was, save in the name
 Her infant friendship had bestowed on him ;
 Herself the solitary scion left
 Of a time-honored race. It was a name
 Which pleased him, and yet pleased him not, — and why ?

Time taught him a deep answer — when she loved

Another ; even now she loved another,
 And on the summit of that hill she stood,
 Looking afar if yet her lover's steed
 Kept pace with her expectancy, and flew.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
 There was an ancient mansion, and before
 Its walls there was a steed caparisoned ;
 Within an antique oratory stood
 The boy of whom I spake ; — he was alone,
 And pale, and pacing to and fro : anon
 He sate him down, and seized a pen, and traced
 Words which I could not guess of ; then he leaned His bowed head on his hands and shook, as 't were

With a convulsion, — then arose again,
 And with his teeth and quivering hands did tear
 What he had written, but he shed no tears,
 And he did calm himself, and fix his brow
 Into a kind of quiet ; as he paused,
 The lady of his love re-entered there ;
 She was serene and smiling then, and yet
 She knew she was by him beloved ; she knew —
 For quickly comes such knowledge — that his heart

Was darkened with her shadow, and she saw
 That he was wretched, but she saw not all.
 He rose, and with a cold and gentle grasp
 He took her hand ; a moment o'er his face
 A tablet of unutterable thoughts

Was traced, and then it faded, as it came ;
 He dropped the hand he held, and with slow steps

Retired, but not as bidding her adieu,
 For they did part with mutual smiles ; he passed
 From out the massy gate of that old Hall,
 And mounting on his steed he went his way ;
 And ne'er repassed that hoary threshold more.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
 The boy was sprung to manhood ; in the wilds
 Of fiery climes he made himself a home,
 And his soul drank their sunbeams ; he was girt
 With strange and dusky aspects ; he was not Himself like what he had been ; on the sea
 And on the shore he was a wanderer ;
 There was a mass of many imagers
 Crowded like waves upon me, but he was
 A part of all ; and in the last he lay
 Reposing from the noontide sultriness,
 Couched among fallen columns, in the shade
 Of ruined walls that had survived the names
 Of those who reared them ; by his sleeping side
 Stood camels grazing, and some goodly steeds
 Were fastened near a fountain ; and a man,
 Clad in a flowing garb, did watch the while,
 While many of his tribe slumbered around :
 And they were canooped by the blue sky,
 So cloudless, clear, and purely beautiful,
 That God alone was to be seen in heaven.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
 The lady of his love was wed with one
 Who did not love her better : in her home,
 A thousand leagues from his, — her native home,
 She dwelt, begirt with growing infancy,
 Daughters and sons of beauty, — but behold !
 Upon her face there was the tint of grief,
 The settled shadow of an inward strife,
 And an unquiet drooping of the eye,
 As if its lid were charged with unshed tears.
 What could her grief be ? — she had all she loved,
 And he who had so loved her was not there
 To trouble with bad hopes, or evil wish,
 Or ill-repressed affliction, her pure thoughts.
 What could her grief be ? — she had loved him
 not,

Nor given him cause to deem himself beloved,
 Nor could he be a part of that which preyed
 Upon her mind — a spectre of the past.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
 The wanderer was returned. — I saw him stand
 Before an altar — with a gentle bride ;
 Her face was fair, but was not that which made
 The starlight of his boyhood ; — as he stood
 Even at the altar, o'er his brow there came

The selfsame aspect and the quivering shock
That in the antique oratory shook
His bosom in its solitude ; and then —
As in that hour — a moment o'er his face
The tablet of unutterable thoughts
Was traced, — and then it faded as it came,
And he stood calm and quiet, and he spoke
The fitting vows, but heard not his own words,
And all things reeled around him ; he could see
Not that which was, nor that which should have been, —

But the old mansion, and the accustomed hall,
And the remembered chambers, and the place,
The day, the hour, the sunshine, and the shade,
All things pertaining to that place and hour,
And her who was his destiny, came back
And thrust themselves between him and the light ;
What business had they there at such a time ?

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
The lady of his love ; — O, she was changed,
As by the sickness of the soul ! her mind
Had wandered from its dwelling, and her eyes,
They had not their own lustre, but the look
Which is not of the earth ; she was become
The queen of a fantastic realm ; her thoughts
Were combinations of disjointed things,
And forms impalpable and unperceived
Of others' sight familiar were to hers.
And this the world calls frenzy ; but the wise
Have a far deeper madness, and the glance
Of melancholy is a fearful gift ;
What is it but the telescope of truth,
Which strips the distance of its fantasies,
And brings life near in utter nakedness,
Making the cold reality too real !

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream.
The wanderer was alone as heretofore,
The beings which surrounded him were gone,
Or were at war with him ; he was a mark
For blight and desolation, compassed round
With hatred and contention ; pain was mixed
In all which was served up to him, until,
Like to the Pontic monarch of old days,
He fed on poisons, and they had no power,
But were a kind of nutriment ; he lived
Through that which had been death to many men,
And made him friends of mountains : with the stars

And the quick Spirit of the universe
He held his dialogues ; and they did teach
To him the magic of their mysteries ;
To him the book of Night was opened wide,
And voices from the deep abyss revealed
A marvel and a secret. — Be it so.

My dream was past ; it had no further change.
It was of a strange order, that the doom
Of these two creatures should be thus traced out
Almost like a reality, — the one
To end in madness — both in misery.

LORD BYRON.

THE SCHOLAR.

FROM "EDWIN THE FAIR."

THIS life, and all that it contains, to him
Is but a tissue of illuminous dreams
Filled with book-wisdom, pictured thought and love

That on its own creations spends itself.
All things he understands, and nothing does.
Profusely eloquent in copious praise
Of action, he will talk to you as one
Whose wisdom lay in dealings and transactions ;
Yet so much action as might tie his shoe
Cannot his will command ; himself alone
By his own wisdom not a jot the gainer.
Of silence, and the hundred thousand things
'T is better not to mention, he will speak,
And still most wisely.

HENRY TAYLOR.

UNKNOWN POETS.

FROM "THE EXCURSION," BOOK I.

O, MANY are the poets that are sown
By nature ; men endowed with highest gifts,
The vision and the faculty divine ;
Yet wanting the accomplishment of verse
(Which, in the docile season of their youth,
It was denied them to acquire, through lack
Of culture and the inspiring aid of books,
Or haply by a temper too severe,
Or a nice backwardness afraid of shame),
Nor having e'er, as life advanced, been led
By circumstance to take unto the height
The measure of themselves, these favored beings,
All but a scattered few, live out their time,
Husbanding that which they possess within,
And go to the grave, unthought of. Strongest minds
Are often those of whom the noisy world
Hears least.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

THE POET OF NATURE.

FROM "FESTUS."

HE had no times of study, and no place ;
All places and all times to him were one.
His soul was like the wind-harp, which he loved,
And sounded only when the spirit blew,

Sometime in feasts and follies, for he went Lifelike through all things; and his thoughts then rose

Like sparkles in the bright wine, brighter still;
Sometimes in dreams, and then the shining words
Would wake him in the dark before his face.
All things talked thoughts to him. The sea went mad

To show his meaning; and the awful sun
Thundered his thoughts into him; and at night
The stars would whisper theirs, the moon sigh hers.

PHILIP JAMES BAILEY.

THE POET'S IMPULSE.

FROM "CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE," CANTO III.

SKY, mountains, river, winds, lake, lightnings!
ye!

With night, and clouds, and thunder, and a soul

To make these felt and feeling, well may be Things that have made me watchful; the far roll

Of your departing voices is the knoll
Of what in me is sleepless, — if I rest.

But where of ye, O tempests! is the goal?

Are ye like those within the human breast?

Or do ye find, at length, like eagles, some high nest?

Could I embody and unbosom now
That which is most within me, — could I wreak
My thoughts upon expression, and thus throw Soul, heart, mind, passions, feelings, strong or weak,

All that I would have sought, and all I seek,
Bear, know, feel, and yet breathe — into one
word,

And that one word were Lightning, I would
speak;

But as it is, I live and die unheard,

With a most voiceless thought, sheathing it as a sword.

LORD BYRON.

THE INNER VISION.

Most sweet it is with unuplifted eyes
To pace the ground, if path there be or none,
While a fair region round the traveller lies
Which he forbears again to look upon;
Pleased rather with some soft ideal scene,
The work of fancy, or some happy tone
Of meditation, slipping in between
The beauty coming and the beauty gone.

If Thought and Love desert us, from that day
Let us break off all commerce with the Muse:
With Thought and Love companions of our way, —
Whate'er the senses take or may refuse, —
The mind's internal Heaven shall shed her dew
Of inspiration on the humblest lay.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

THE POET OF TO-DAY.

MORE than the soul of ancient song is given
To thee, O poet of to-day! — thy dower
Comes, from a higher than Olympian heaven,
In holier beauty and in larger power.

To thee Humanity, her woes revealing,
Would all her griefs and ancient wrongs rehearse;

Would make thy song the voice of her appealing,
And sob her mighty sorrows through thy verse.

While in her season of great darkness sharing,
Hail thou the coming of each promise-star
Which climbs the midnight of her long despair-
ing,

And watch for morning o'er the hills afar.

Wherever Truth her holy warfare wages,
Or Freedom pines, there let thy voice be heard;
Sound like a prophet-warning down the ages
The human utterance of God's living word.

But bring not thou the battle's stormy chorus,
The tramp of armies, and the roar of fight,
Not war's hot smoke to taint the sweet morn
o'er us,

Nor blaze of pillage, reddening up the night.

O, let thy lays prolong that angel-singing,
Girdling with music the Redeemer's star,
And breathe God's peace, to earth "glad tidings" bringing

From the near heavens, of old so dim and far!

SARAH JANE LIPPINCOTT (Grace Greenwood).

BOOKS.

FROM "THE KALÉDER OF SHEPERDES," 1528.

HE that many bokes redys,
Cumyng shall he be.
Wysedome is soone caught;
In many leues it is sought;
But slouth, that no boke bought,
For reason taketh no thought;

BOOKS.

For why, who writes such histories as these
Doth often bring the reader's heart such ease,
As when they sit and see what he doth note,
Well fare his heart, say they, this book that wrote !

JOHN HIGGINS.

THE FLOWER.

How fresh, O Lord, how sweet and clean
Are thy returns ! even as the flowers in spring ;
To which, besides their own demean,
The late-past frosts tributes of pleasure bring.
Grief melts away
Like snow in May,
As if there were no such cold thing.

Who would have thought my shrivelled heart
Could have recovered greenness ? It was gone
Quite underground ; as flowers depart
To see their mother root, when they have blown ;
Where they together
All the hard weather,
Dead to the world, keep house unknown.

These are thy wonders, Lord of power,
Killing and quickning, bringing down to hell
And up to heaven in an hour ;
Making a chiming of a passing-bell.

We say amisse,
This or that is :
Thy word is all, if we could spell.

O that I once past changing were,
Fast in thy paradise, where no flower can wither !
Many a spring I shoot up fair,
Offering at heav'n, growing and groning thither ;
Nor doth my flower
Want a spring-showre,
My sinnes and I joining together.

But, while I grow in a straight line,
Still upwards bent, as if heav'n were mine own,
Thy anger comes, and I decline :
What frost to that ? what pole is not the zone
Where all things burn,
When thou dost turn,
And the least frown of thine is shown ?

And now in age I bud again ;
After so many deaths I live and write ;
I once more smell the dew and rain,
And relish versing : O my only light,
It cannot be
That I am he
On whom thy tempests fell all night !

These are thy wonders, Lord of love,
To make us see we are but flowers that glide ;
Which when we once can finde and prove,
Thou hast a garden for us where to bide.
Who would be more,
Swelling through store,
Forfeit their paradise by their pride.

GEORGE HERBERT.

YUSSOUF.

A STRANGER came one night to Yussouf's tent,
Saying, " Behold one outcast and in dread,
Against whose life the bow of power is bent,
Who flies, and hath not where to lay his head ;
I come to thee for shelter and for food,
To Yussouf, called through all our tribes 'The Good.' "

" This tent is mine," said Yussouf, " but no more Than it is God's ; come in, and be at peace ;
Freely shalt thou partake of all my store
As I of his who buildeth over these
Our tents his glorious roof of night and day,
And at whose door none ever yet heard Nay."

So Yussouf entertained his guest that night,
And, waking him ere day, said : " Here is gold,
My swiftest horse is saddled for thy flight,
Depart before the prying day grow bold."
As one lamp lights another, nor grows less,
So nobleness enkindleth nobleness.

That inward light the stranger's face made grand,
Which shines from all self-conquest ; kneeling low,
He bowed his forehead upon Yussouf's hand,
Sobbing : " O Sheik, I cannot leave thee so ;
I will repay thee ; all this thou hast done
Unto that Ibrahim who slew thy son ! "

" Take thrice the gold," said Yussouf, " for with
thee
Into the desert, never to return,
My one black thought shall ride away from me ;
First-born, for whom by day and night I yearn,
Balanced and just are all of God's decrees ;
Thou art avenged, my first-born, sleep in peace ! "

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

ABOU BEN ADHEM.

ABOU BEN ADHEM (may his tribe increase !)
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw within the moonlight in his room,
Making it rich and like a lily in bloom,
An angel writing in a book of gold :
Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold,

And to the presence in the room he said,
 "What writest thou?" The vision raised its head,

And, with a look made of all sweet accord,
 Answered, "The names of those who love the Lord."

"And is mine one?" said Abou. "Nay, not so,"
 Replied the angel. Abou spoke more low,
 But cheerily still; and said, "I pray thee, then,
 Write me as one that loves his fellow-men."

The angel wrote, and vanished. The next night
 It came again, with a great wakening light,
 And showed the names whom love of God had blessed, —

And, lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest!

LEIGH HUNT.

HARMOSAN.

Now the third and fatal conflict for the Persian throne was done,
 And the Moslem's fiery valor had the crowning victory won.

Harmosan, the last and boldest the invader to defy,
 Captive, overborne by numbers, they were bringing forth to die.

Then exclaimed that noble captive: "Lo, I perish in my thirst;
 Give me but one drink of water, and let then arrive the worst!"

In his hand he took the goblet; but awhile the draught forbore,
 Seeming doubtfully the purpose of the foeman to explore.

Well might then have paused the bravest, — for around him angry foes
 With a hedge of naked weapons did that lonely man enclose.

"But what fear'st thou?" cried the caliph;
 "is it, friend, a secret blow?
 Fear it not! our gallant Moslems no such treacherous dealing know.

"Thou mayst quench thy thirst securely, for thou shalt not die before
 Thou hast drunk that cup of water, — this reprieve is thine — no more!"

Quick the satrap dashed the goblet down to earth with ready hand,
 And the liquid sank forever, lost amid the burning sand.

"Thou hast said that mine my life is, till the water of that cup
 I have drained; then bid thy servants that spilled water gather up!"

For a moment stood the caliph as by doubtful passions stirred;
 Then exclaimed, "Forever sacred must remain
 a monarch's word.

"Bring another cup, and straightway to the noble Persian give:
 Drink, I said before, and perish, — now I bid thee drink and live!"

RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH.

VANITY.

THE sun comes up and the sun goes down,
 And day and night are the same as one;
 The year grows green, and the year grows brown,
 And what is it all, when all is done?
 Grains of sombre or shining sand,
 Gliding into and out of the hand.

And men go down in ships to the seas,
 And a hundred ships are the same as one;
 And backward and forward blows the breeze,
 And what is it all, when all is done?
 A tide with never a shore in sight
 Getting steadily on to the night.

The fisher droppeth his net in the stream,
 And a hundred streams are the same as one;
 And the maiden dreameth her love-lit dream,
 And what is it all, when all is done?
 The net of the fisher the burden breaks,
 And away the dreaming the dreamer wakes.

HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD.

A PSALM OF LIFE.

TELL me not, in mournful numbers,
 Life is but an empty dream!
 For the soul is dead that slumbers,
 And things are not what they seem.

Life is real! Life is earnest!
 And the grave is not its goal;
 Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
 Was not spoken of the soul.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
 Is our destined end or way;
 But to act, that each to-morrow
 Find us farther than to-day.

Art is long, and Time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still, like muffled drums, are beating
Funeral marches to the grave.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of Life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle !
Be a hero in the strife !

Trust no Future, howe'er pleasant !
Let the dead Past bury its dead !
Act, — act in the living Present !
Heart within, and God o'erhead !

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time ; —

Footprints, that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate ;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

MY LEGACY.

THEY told me I was heir : I turned in haste,
And ran to seek my treasure,
And wondered, as I ran, how it was placed, —
If I should find a measure
Of gold, or if the titles of fair lands
And houses would be laid within my hands.

I journeyed many roads ; I knocked at gates ;
I spoke to each wayfarer
I met, and said, "A heritage awaits
Me. Art not thou the bearer
Of news ? some message sent to me whereby
I learn which way my new possessions lie ?"

Some asked me in ; naught lay beyond their door ;
Some smiled, and would not tarry,
But said that men were just behind who bore
More gold than I could carry ;
And so the morn, the noon, the day, were spent,
While empty-handed up and down I went.

At last one cried, whose face I could not see,
As through the mists he hasted :
"Poor child, what evil ones have hindered thee
Till this whole day is wasted ?

Hath no man told thee that thou art joint heir
With one named Christ, who waits the goods to share ?"

The one named Christ I sought for many days,
In many places vainly ;
I heard men name his name in many ways ;
I saw his temples plainly ;
But they who named him most gave me no sign
To find him by, or prove the heirship mine.

And when at last I stood before his face,
I knew him by no token
Save subtle air of joy which filled the place ;
Our greeting was not spoken ;
In solemn silence I received my share,
Kneeling before my brother and "joint heir."

My share ! No deed of house or spreading lands,
As I had dreamed ; no measure
Heaped up with gold ; my elder brother's hands
Had never held such treasure.
Foxes have holes, and birds in nests are fed :
My brother had not where to lay his head.

My share ! The right like him to know all pain
Which hearts are made for knowing ;
The right to find in loss the surest gain ;
To reap my joy from sowing
In bitter tears ; the right with him to keep
A watch by day and night with all who weep.

My share ! To-day men call it grief and death ;
I see the joy and life to-morrow ;
I thank my Father with my every breath,
For this sweet legacy of sorrow ;
And through my tears I call to each "joint heir"
With Christ, "Make haste to ask him for thy share."

HELEN HUNT JACKSON.

SYMPATHY.

FROM "ION," ACT I. SC. 2.

"T is a little thing
To give a cup of water ; yet its draught
Of cool refreshment, drained by fevered lips,
May give a shock of pleasure to the frame
More exquisite than when nectarean juice
Renews the life of joy in happier hours.
It is a little thing to speak a phrase
Of common comfort which by daily use
Has almost lost its sense, yet on the ear
Of him who thought to die unmournd 't will fall
Like choicest music, fill the glazing eye
With gentle tears, relax the knotted hand
To know the bonds of fellowship again ;
And shed on the departing soul a sense,

More precious than the benison of friends
About the honored death-bed of the rich,
To him who else were lonely, that another
Of the great family is near and feels.

SIR THOMAS NOON TALFOURD.

ALEXANDER'S FEAST ; OR, THE POWER OF MUSIC.

AN ODE.

'T WAS at the royal feast, for Persia won
By Philip's warlike son :
Aloft in awful state
The godlike hero sate
On his imperial throne :
His valiant peers were placed around,
Their brows with roses and with myrtles bound
(So should desert in arms be crowned) ;
The lovely Thais, by his side,
Sate like a blooming Eastern bride
In flower of youth and beauty's pride.
Happy, happy, happy pair !
None but the brave,
None but the brave,
None but the brave deserves the fair.

CHORUS.

*Happy, happy, happy pair !
None but the brave,
None but the brave,
None but the brave deserves the fair.*

Timotheus, placed on high
Amid the tuneful choir,
With flying fingers touched the lyre ;
The trembling notes ascend the sky,
And heavenly joys inspire.
The song began from Jove,
Who left his blissful seats above
(Such is the power of mighty love).
A dragon's fiery form belied the god ;
Sublime on radiant spires he rode,
When he to fair Olympia pressed,
And while he sought her snowy breast ;
Then round her slender waist he curled,
And stamped an image of himself, a sovereign of the world.
The listening crowd admire the lofty sound,
A present deity ! they shout around ;
A present deity ! the vaulted roofs rebound.
With ravished ears
The monarch hears,
Assumes the god,
Affects to nod,
And seems to shake the spheres.

CHORUS.

*With ravished ears
The monarch hears,
Assumes the god,
Affects to nod,
And seems to shake the spheres.*

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung,
Of Bacchus — ever fair and ever young :
The jolly god in triumph comes ;
Sound the trumpets ; beat the drums :
Flushed with a purple grace
He shows his honest face :
Now give the hautboys breath. He comes ! he comes !
Bacchus, ever fair and young,
Drinking joys did first ordain ;
Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure ;
Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

CHORUS.

*Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure ;
Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.*

Soothed with the sound the king grew vain ;
Fought all his battles o'er again ;
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew the slain.
The master saw the madness rise ;
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes ;
And, while he heaven and earth defied,
Changed his hand and checked his pride.
He chose a mournful muse,
Soft pity to infuse :
He sung Darius, great and good,
By too severe a fate,
Fallen, fallen, fallen, fallen,
Fallen from his high estate,
And weltering in his blood ;
Deserted, at his utmost need,
By those his former bounty fed ;
On the bare earth exposed he lies,
With not a friend to close his eyes.
With downcast looks the joyless victor sate,
Revolving in his altered soul
The various turns of chance below ;
And, now and then, a sigh he stole ;
And tears began to flow.

CHORUS.

*Revolving in his altered soul
The various turns of chance below ;
And, now and then, a sigh he stole ;
And tears began to flow.*

The mighty master smiled, to see
That love was in the next degree ;
'T was but a kindred sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love.
Softly sweet, in Lydian measures,
Soon he soothed his soul to pleasures.
War, he sung, is toil and trouble ;
Honor, but an empty bubble ;
Never ending, still beginning,
Fighting still, and still destroying :
If the world be worth thy winning,
Think, O, think it worth enjoying !
Lovely Thais sits beside thee,
Take the good the gods provide thee.
The many rend the skies with loud applause ;
So Love was crowned, but Music won the cause.
The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gazed on the fair
Who caused his care,
And sighed and looked, sighed and looked,
Sighed and looked, and sighed again :
At length, with love and wine at once oppressed,
The vanquished victor sunk upon her breast.

CHORUS.

*The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gazed on the fair
Who caused his care,
And sighed and looked, sighed and looked,
Sighed and looked, and sighed again :
At length, with love and wine at once oppressed,
The vanquished victor sunk upon her breast.*

Now strike the golden lyre again :
A louder yet, and yet a louder strain.
Break his bands of sleep asunder,
And rouse him, like a rattling peal of thunder.
Hark, hark, the horrid sound
Has raised up his head ;
As awaked from the dead,
And amazed, he stares around.
Revenge ! revenge ! Timotheus cries,
See the furies arise !
See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair,
And the sparkles that flash from their eyes !
Behold a ghastly band,
Each a torch in his hand !
Those are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were slain,
And unburied remain,
Inglorious on the plain :

Give the vengeance due
To the valiant crew.
Behold how they toss their torches on high,
How they point to the Persian abodes,
And glittering temples of their hostile gods !
The princes applaud with a furious joy ;
And the king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy :
Thais led the way,
To light him to his prey,
And, like another Helen, fired another Troy !

CHORUS.

*And the king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy :
Thais led the way,
To light him to his prey,
And, like another Helen, fired another Troy !*

Thus, long ago,
Ere heaving bellows learned to blow,
While organs yet were mute ;
Timotheus, to his breathing flute,
And sounding lyre,
Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft desire.
At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame ;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown
before.
Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown ;
He raised a mortal to the skies,
She drew an angel down.

GRAND CHORUS.

*At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame ;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown
before.
Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown ;
He raised a mortal to the skies,
She drew an angel down.*

JOHN DRYDEN.

INVOCATION.

FROM "THE DAVIDEIS."

AWAKE, awake, my Lyre !
And tell thy silent master's humble tale
In sounds that may prevail ;
Sounds that gentle thoughts inspire :

Though so exalted she,
And I so lowly be,
Tell her, such different notes make all thy harmony.

Hark ! how the strings awake :
And, though the moving hand approach not near,
Themselves with awful fear
A kind of numerous trembling make.
Now all thy forces try ;
Now all thy charms apply ;
Revenge upon her ear the conquests of her eye.

Weak Lyre ! thy virtue sure
Is useless here, since thou art only found
To cure, but not to wound,
And she to wound, but not to cure.
Too weak, too, wilt thou prove
My passion to remove ;
Physic to other ills, thou 'rt nourishment to love.

Sleep, sleep again, my Lyre !
For thou canst never tell my humble tale
In sounds that will prevail,
Nor gentle thoughts in her inspire ;
All thy vain mirth lay by,
Bid thy strings silent lie,
Sleep, sleep again, my Lyre, and let thy master die.

ABRAHAM COWLEY.

THE PASSIONS.

AN ODE FOR MUSIC.

WHEN Music, heavenly maid, was young,
While yet in early Greece she sung,
The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
Thronged around her magic cell, —
Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting, —
Possessed beyond the muse's painting ;
By turns they felt the glowing mind
Disturbed, delighted, raised, refined ;
Till once, 't is said, when all were fired,
Filled with fury, rapt, inspired,
From the supporting myrtles round
They snatched her instruments of sound ;
And, as they oft had heard apart
Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
Each (for madness ruled the hour)
Would prove his own expressive power.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewildered laid,
And back recoiled, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made.

Next Anger rushed ; his eyes, on fire,
In lightnings owned his secret stings :
In one rude clash he struck the lyre,
And swept with hurried hand the strings.

With woful measures wan Despair,
Low, sullen sounds, his grief beguiled, —
A solemn, strange, and mingled air ;
'T was sad by fits, by starts 't was wild.

But thou, O Hope, with eyes so fair, —
What was thy delightful measure ?
Still it whispered promised pleasure,
And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail !
Still would her touch the strain prolong ;
And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
She called on Echo still, through all the song ;
And where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft responsive voice was heard at every close ;
And Hope, enchanted, smiled, and waved her golden hair.

And longer had she sung — but, with a frown,
Revenge impatient rose ;
He threw his blood-stained sword in thunder
down ;

And, with a withering look,
The war-denouncing trumpet took,
And blew a blast so loud and dread,
Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of woe !
And ever and anon he beat
The doubling drum with furious heat ;
And though, sometimes, each dreary pause between,

Dejected Pity, at his side,
Her soul-subduing voice applied,
Yet still he kept his wild, unaltered mien,
While each strained ball of sight seemed bursting from his head.

Thy numbers, Jealousy, to naught were fixed, —
Sad proof of thy distressful state ;
Of differing themes the veering song was mixed ;
And now it courted Love, — now, raving,
called on Hate.

With eyes upraised, as one inspired,
Pale Melancholy sate retired ;
And from her wild sequestered seat,
In notes by distance made more sweet,
Poured through the mellow horn her pensive
soul :

And, dashing soft from rocks around,
Bubbling runnels joined the sound ;
Through glades and glooms the mingled measure stole ;
Or o'er some haunted stream, with fond delay,
Round an holy calm diffusing,
Love of peace, and lonely musing,
In hollow murmurs died away.

But O, how altered was its sprightlier tone
 When Cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue,
 Her bow across her shoulder flung,
 Her buskins gemmed with morning dew,
 Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung, —
 The hunter's call, to faun and dryad known !
 The oak-crowned sisters, and their chaste-eyed queen,
 Satyrs and sylvan boys, were seen
 Peeping from forth their alleys green :
 Brown Exercise rejoiced to hear ;
 And Sport leapt up, and seized his beechen
 spear.

Last came Joy's ecstatic trial :
 He, with viny crown advancing,
 First to the lively pipe his hand address ;
 But soon he saw the brisk-awakening viol,
 Whose sweet entrancing voice he loved the best ;
 They would have thought, who heard the strain,
 They saw, in Tempe's vale, her native maids
 Amidst the festal-sounding shades,
 To some unwearied minstrel dancing,
 While, as his flying fingers kissed the strings,
 Love framed with Mirth a gay fantastic round :
 Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound ;
 And he, amidst his frolic play,
 As if he would the charming air repay,
 Shook thousand odors from his dewy wings.

O Music ! sphere-descended maid,
 Friend of pleasure, wisdom's aid !
 Why, goddess, why, to us denied,
 Lay'st thou thy ancient lyre aside ?
 As, in that loved Athenian bower,
 You learned an all-commanding power,
 Thy mimic soul, O nymph endeared,
 Can well recall what then it heard.

Where is thy native simple heart,
 Devote to virtue, fancy, art ?
 Arise, as in that elder time,
 Warm, energetic, chaste, sublime !
 Thy wonders, in that godlike age,
 Fill thy recording sister's page ;
 'T is said — and I believe the tale —
 Thy humblest reed could more prevail,
 Had more of strength, diviner rage,
 Than all which charms this laggard age, —
 E'en all at once together found, —
 Ceecilia's mingled world of sound.
 O, bid our vain endeavors cease ;
 Revive the just designs of Greece !
 Return in all thy simple state, —
 Confirm the tales her sons relate !

WILLIAM COLLINS.

THE NIGHTINGALE'S SONG.

FROM "MUSIC'S DUEL."

Now westward Sol had spent the richest beams
 Of noon's high glory, when, hard by the streams
 Of Tiber, on the scene of a green plat,
 Under protection of an oak, there sat
 A sweet lute's-master, in whose gentle airs
 He lost the day's heat and his own hot cares.
 Close in the covert of the leaves there stood
 A nightingale, come from the neighboring wood
 (The sweet inhabitant of each glad tree,
 Their muse, their siren, harmless siren she) :
 There stood she listening, and did entertain
 The music's soft report, and mould the same
 In her own murmurs ; that whatever mood
 His curious fingers lent, her voice made good.

This lesson too

She gives them back ; her supple breast thrills out
 Sharp airs, and staggers in a warbling doubt
 Of dallying sweetness, hovers o'er her skill,
 And folds in waved notes, with a trembling bill,
 The pliant series of her slippery song ;
 Then starts she suddenly into a throng
 Of short thick sobs, whose thundering volleys float,

And roll themselves over her lubric throat
 In panting murmurs, stilled out of her breast ;
 That ever-bubbling spring, the sugared nest
 Of her delicious soul, that there does lie
 Bathing in streams of liquid melody ;
 Music's best seed-plot ; when in ripened airs
 A golden-headed harvest fairly rears
 His honey-dropping tops ploughed by her breath
 Which there reciprocally laboreth.
 In that sweet soil it seems a holy quire,
 Sounded to the name of great Apollo's lyre ;
 Whose silver roof rings with the sprightly notes
 Of sweet-lipped angel-imps, that swill their throats

In cream of morning Helicon, and then
 Prefer soft anthems to the ears of men,
 To woo them from their beds, still murmuring
 That men can sleep while they their matins sing
 (Most divine service), whose so early lay
 Prevents the eyelids of the blushing day.
 There might you hear her kindle her soft voice
 In the close murmur of a sparkling noise ;
 And lay the groundwork of her hopeful song,
 Still keeping in the forward stream so long,
 Till a sweet whirlwind (striving to get out)
 Heaves her soft bosom, wanders round about,
 And makes a pretty earthquake in her breast,
 Till the sledged notes at length forsake their nest,
 Fluttering in wanton shoals, and to the sky,
 Winged with their own wild echoes, prattling fly.

She opes the floodgate, and lets loose a tide
Of streaming sweetness, which in state doth ride
On the waved back of every swelling strain,
Rising and falling in a pompous train ;
And while she thus discharges a shrill peal
Of flashing airs, she qualifies their zeal
With the cool epode of a graver note ;
Thus high, thus low, as if her silver throat
Would reach the brazen voice of war's hoarse bird ;
Her little soul is ravished, and so poured
Into loose ecstasies, that she is placed
Above herself, music's enthusiast.

RICHARD CRASHAW.

A SONG FOR ST. CECILIA'S DAY, 1687.

FROM harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began ;
When Nature underneath a heap
Of jarring atoms lay,
And could not heave her head,
The tuneful voice was heard from high,
Arise, ye more than dead !
Then cold and hot, and moist and dry,
In order to their stations leap,
And Music's power obey.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began :
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man.

What passion cannot Music raise and quell ?
When Jubal struck the chorded shell,
His listening brethren stood around,
And, wondering, on their faces fell,
To worship that celestial sound.
Less than a God they thought there could not dwell
Within the hollow of that shell,
That spoke so sweetly and so well.

What passion cannot Music raise and quell ?

The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms.
The double double double beat
Of the thundering drum
Cries, Hark ! the foes come ;
Charge, charge, 't is too late to retreat !

The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whispered by the warbling lute.

Sharp violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs, and desperation,
Fury, frantic indignation,
Depth of pains, and height of passion
For the fair, disdainful dame.
But O, what art can teach,
What human voice can reach,
The sacred organ's praise ?
Notes inspiring holy love,
Notes that wing their heavenly ways
To mend the choirs above.

Orpheus could lead the savage race ;
And trees uprooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre ;
But bright Cecilia raised the wonder higher ;
When to her organ vocal breath was given,
An angel heard, and straight appeared
Mistaking earth for heaven.

GRAND CHORUS.

*As from the power of sacred lays
The spheres began to move,
And sung the great Creator's praise
To all the blessed above ;
So, when the last and dreadful hour
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And Music shall untune the sky.*

JOHN DRYDEN.

MUSIC.

FROM "THE MERCHANT OF VENICE," ACT V. SC. I.

LORENZO. How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank !

Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears : soft stillness, and the night,
Become the touches of sweet harmony.
Sit, Jessica : look, how the floor of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patines of bright gold :
There's not the smallest orb which thou be-hold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins ;
Such harmony is in immortal souls :
But whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.

JESSICA. I am never merry when I hear sweet music.

LOR. The reason is your spirits are attentive.

Therefore the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods ;

Since naught so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils ;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus :
Let no such man be trusted.

SHAKESPEARE.

TO ———.

MUSIC, when soft voices die,
Vibrates in the memory, —
Odors, when sweet violets sicken,
Live within the sense they quicken.

Rose-leaves, when the rose is dead,
Are heaped for the beloved's bed ;
And so thy thoughts, when thou art gone,
Love itself shall slumber on.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

MAN.

FROM "NIGHT THOUGHTS," NIGHT I.

How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicate, how wonderful, is man !
How passing wonder He who made him such !
Who centred in our make such strange extremes,
From different natures marvellously mixed,
Connection exquisite of distant worlds !
Distinguished link in being's endless chain !
Midway from nothing to the Deity !
A beam ethereal, sullied, and absorpt !
Though sullied and dishonored, still divine !
Dim miniature of greatness absolute !
An heir of glory ! a frail child of dust !
Helpless immortal ! insect infinite !
A worm ! a god ! — I tremble at myself,
And in myself am lost. At home a stranger,
Thought wanders up and down, surprised, aghast,
And wondering at her own. How reason reels !
O, what a miracle to man is man !
Triumphantly distressed ! What joy ! what dread !
Alternately transported and alarmed !
What can preserve my life ? or what destroy ?
An angel's arm can't snatch me from the grave ;
Legions of angels can't confine me there.

DR. EDWARD YOUNG.

MAN — WOMAN.

Man's home is everywhere. On ocean's flood,
Where the strong ship with storm-defying tether
Doth link in stormy brotherhood
Earth's utmost zones together,

Where'er the red gold glows, the spice-trees wave,
Where the rich diamond ripens, mid the flame
Of vertic suns that ope the stranger's grave,
He with bronzed cheek and daring step doth
rove ;
He, with short pang and slight,
Doth turn him from the checkered light
Of the fair moon through his own forests dancing,

Where music, joy, and love
Were his young hours entrancing ;
And where ambition's thunder-claim
Points out his lot,
Or fitful wealth allures to roam,
There doth he make his home,
Repining not.

It is not thus with Woman. The far halls,
Though ruinous and lone,
Where first her pleased ear drank a nursing-mother's tone ;
The home with humble walls,
Where breathed a parent's prayer around her
bed ;

The valley where, with playmates true,
She culled the strawberry, bright with dew ;
The bower where Love her timid footsteps led ;
The hearthstone where her children grew ;
The damp soil where she cast
The flower-seeds of her hope, and saw them bide
the blast, —
Affection with unfading tint recalls,
Lingering round the ivied walls,
Where every rose hath in its cup a bee,
Making fresh honey of remembered things, —
Each rose without a thorn, each bee bereft of stings.

LYDIA HUNTLEY SIGOURNEY.

WOMAN.

THERE in the fane a beauteous creature stands,
The first best work of the Creator's hands,
Whose slender limbs inadequately bear
A full-orbed bosom and a weight of care ;
Whose teeth like pearls, whose lips like cherries,
show,
And fawn-like eyes still tremble as they glow.

From the Portuguese of CALIDASA.
Translation of WILSON.

APRÈS.

DOWN, down, Ellen, my little one,
Climbing so tenderly up to my knee ;
Why should you add to the thoughts that are
taunting me,
Dreams of your mother's arms clinging to me ?

CONTENTMENT.

*"Turn, Fortune, turn thy wheel with smile or frown;
With that wild wheel we go not up or down;
Our hoard is little, but our hearts are great."*

Cease, cease, Ellen, my little one,
 Warbling so fairly close to my ear ;
 Why should you choose, of all songs that are haunting me,
 This that I made for your mother to hear ?

Hush, hush, Ellen, my little one,
 Wailing so wearily under the stars ;
 Why should I think of her tears, that might light to me
 Love that had made life, and sorrow that mars ?

Sleep, sleep, Ellen, my little one !
 Is she not like her whenever she stirs ?
 Has she not eyes that will soon be as bright to me,
 Lips that will some day be honeyed like hers ?

Yes, yes, Ellen, my little one,
 Though her white bosom is stilled in the grave,
 Something more white than her bosom is spared
   to me, —
 Something to cling to and something to crave.

Love, love, Ellen, my little one !
 Love indestructible, love undefiled,
 Love through all deeps of her spirit lies bared
   to me,
 Oft as I look on the face of her child.

ARTHUR J. MUNBY.

FORTUNE.

FROM "FANNY."

BUT Fortune, like some others of her sex,
 Delights in tantalizing and tormenting.
 One day we feed upon their smiles, — the next
   Is spent in swearing, sorrowing, and repenting.

Ever never walked in Paradise more pure
 Than on that morn when Satan played the devil
 With her and all her race. A lovesick wooer
 Ne'er asked a kinder maiden, or more civil,
 Than Cleopatra was to Antony
 The day she left him on the Ionian sea.

The serpent — loveliest in his coiled ring,
 With eye that charms, and beauty that outvies
 The tints of the rainbow — bears upon his sting
 The deadliest venom. Ere the dolphin dies
 Its hues are brightest. Like an infant's breath
 Are tropical winds before the voice of death

Is heard upon the waters, summoning
 The midnight earthquake from its sleep of years
 To do its task of woe. The clouds that fling
 The lightning brighten ere the bolt appears ;

The pantings of the warrior's heart are proud Upon that battle-morn whose night-dews wet his shroud ;

The sun is loveliest as he sinks to rest ;
 The leaves of autumn smile when fading fast ;
 The swan's last song is sweetest.

FITZ-GREENE HALLECK.

ENID'S SONG.

FROM "IDYLS OF THE KING."

TURN, Fortune, turn thy wheel and lower the proud ;
 Turn thy wild wheel through sunshine, storm,
   and cloud ;
 Thy wheel and thee we neither love nor hate.

Turn, Fortune, turn thy wheel with smile or
   frown ;
 With that wild wheel we go not up or down ;
 Our hoard is little, but our hearts are great.

Smile and we smile, the lords of many lands ;
 Frown and we smile, the lords of our own hands ;
 For man is man and master of his fate.

Turn, turn thy wheel above the staring crowd ;
 Thy wheel and thou are shadows in the cloud ;
 Thy wheel and thee we neither love nor hate.

ALFRED TENNYSON.

EXCELSIOR.

THE shades of night were falling fast,
 As through an Alpine village passed
 A youth, who bore, 'mid snow and ice,
 A banner with the strange device —
   Excelsior !

His brow was sad ; his eye beneath
 Flashed like a falchion from its sheath ;
 And like a silver clarion rung
 The accents of that unknown tongue —
   Excelsior !

In happy homes he saw the light
 Of household fires gleam warm and bright :
 Above, the spectral glaciers shone,
 And from his lips escaped a groan —
   Excelsior !

"Try not the pass," the old man said :
 "Dark lowers the tempest overhead ;
 The roaring torrent is deep and wide !" —
 And loud that clarion voice replied,
   Excelsior !

"O stay," the maiden said, "and rest
Thy weary head upon this breast!"
A tear stood in his bright blue eye,
But still he answered, with a sigh,
Excelsior!

"Beware the pine-tree's withered branch!
Beware the awful avalanche!"
This was the peasant's last good-night:
A voice replied, far up the height,
Excelsior!

At break of day, as heavenward
The pious monks of Saint Bernard
Uttered the oft-repeated prayer,
A voice cried, through the startled air,
Excelsior!

A traveller, by the faithful found,
Half buried in the snow was found,
Still grasping in his hand of ice
That banner with the strange device —
Excelsior!

There in the twilight cold and gray,
Lifeless, but beautiful, he lay,
And from the sky, serene and far,
A voice fell, like a falling star —
Excelsior!

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

THE GIFTS OF GOD.

WHEN God at first made man,
Having a glass of blessings standing by,
Let us (said he) pour on him all we can:
Let the world's riches, which dispersed lie,
Contract into a span.

So strength first made a way;
Then beauty flowed, then wisdom, honor, pleasure:
When almost all was out, God made a stay,
Perceiving that, alone, of all his treasure,
Rest in the bottom lay.

For if I should (said he)
Bestow this jewel also on my creature,
He would adore my gifts instead of me,
And rest in Nature, not the God of Nature:
So both should losers be.

Yet let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessness:
Let him be rich and weary, that, at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
May toss him to my breast.

GEORGE HERBERT.

A RIDDLE.*

THE LETTER "H."

'T WAS in heaven pronounced, and 't was muttered in hell,
And echo caught faintly the sound as it fell;
On the confines of earth 't was permitted to rest,
And the depths of the ocean its presence confessed;
'T will be found in the sphere when 't is riven asunder,
Be seen in the lightning and heard in the thunder.
'T was allotted to man with his earliest breath,
Attends him at birth, and awaits him in death,
Presides o'er his happiness, honor, and health,
Is the prop of his house, and the end of his wealth.
In the heaps of the miser 't is hoarded with care,
But is sure to be lost on his prodigal heir.
It begins every hope, every wish it must bound,
With the husbandman toils, and with monarchs is crowned.
Without it the soldier, the seaman may roam,
But woe to the wretch who expels it from home!
In the whispers of conscience its voice will be found,
Nor e'en in the whirlwind of passion be drowned.
'T will not soften the heart; but though deaf be the ear,
It will make it acutely and instantly hear.
Yet in shade let it rest, like a delicate flower,
Ah, breathe on it softly, — it dies in an hour.

CATHARINE FANSHAW.

FATHER LAND AND MOTHER TONGUE.

OUR Father Land! and wouldst thou know
Why we should call it Father Land?
It is that Adam here below
Was made of earth by Nature's hand;
And he, our father made of earth,
Hath peopled earth on every hand;
And we, in memory of his birth,
Do call our country Father Land.

At first, in Eden's bowers, they say,
No sound of speech had Adam caught,
But whistled like a bird all day, —
And maybe 't was for want of thought:
But Nature, with resistless laws,
Made Adam soon surpass the birds;
She gave him lovely Eve because
If he'd a wife they must have words.

And so the native land, I hold,
By male descent is proudly mine;
The language, as the tale hath told,
Was given in the female line.

* Sometimes attributed to Byron.

And thus we see on either hand
 We name our blessings whence they've sprung;
 We call our country Father Land,
 We call our language Mother Tongue.

SAMUEL LOVER.

SMALL BEGINNINGS.

A TRAVELLER through a dusty road strewed acorns on the lea;
 And one took root and sprouted up, and grew into a tree.

Love sought its shade, at evening time, to breathe
 its early vows;
 And age was pleased, in heats of noon, to bask
 beneath its boughs;
 The dormouse loved its dangling twigs, the birds
 sweet music bore;
 It stood a glory in its place, a blessing evermore.

A little spring had lost its way amid the grass and fern,

A passing stranger scooped a well, where weary men might turn;
 He walled it in, and hung with care a ladle at the brink;

He thought not of the deed he did, but judged that toil might drink.

He passed again, and lo! the well, by summers never dried,

Had cooled ten thousand parching tongues, and saved a life beside.

A dreamer dropped a random thought; 't was old, and yet 't was new;

A simple fancy of the brain, but strong in being true.

It shone upon a genial mind, and lo! its light became

A lamp of life, a beacon ray, a monitory flame.
 The thought was small; its issue great; a watch-
 fire on the hill,

It sheds its radiance far adown, and cheers the valley still!

A nameless man, amid a crowd that thronged
 the daily mart,

Let fall a word of Hope and Love, unstudied,
 from the heart;

A whisper on the tumult thrown, — a transitory
 breath, —

It raised a brother from the dust; it saved a soul from death.

O germ! O fount! O word of love! O thought at random cast!

Ye were but little at the first, but mighty at the last.

CHARLES MACKAY.

THE RULING PASSION.

FROM "MORAL ESSAYS," EPISTLE I.

SEARCH thou the ruling passion; there, alone,
 The wild are constant, and the cunning known;
 The fool consistent and the false sincere;
 Priests, princes, women, no dissemblers here.

In this the lust, in that the avarice,
 Were means, not ends; ambition was the vice.

In this one passion man can strength enjoy,
 As fits give vigor just when they destroy.
 Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
 Yet tames not this; it sticks to our last sand.
 Consistent in our follies and our sins,
 Here honest Nature ends as she begins.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
 And totter on in business to the last;
 As weak, as earnest; and as gravely out,
 As sober Lanesborough dancing in the rout.

Behold a reverend sire, whom want of grace
 Has made the father of a nameless race,
 Shoved from the wall perhaps, or rudely pressed
 By his own son, that passes by unblest:
 Still to his wench he crawls on knocking knees,
 And envies every sparrow that he sees.

A salmon's belly, Helluo, was thy fate.
 The doctor, called, declares all help too late.
 "Mercy!" cries Helluo, "mercy on my soul!
 Is there no hope? — Alas! — then bring the jowl."

The frugal crone, whom praying priests attend,
 Still tries to save the hallowed taper's end,
 Collects her breath, as ebbing life retires,
 For one puff more, and in that puff expires.

"Odious! in woollen! 't would a saint provoke,"

Were the last words that poor Narcissa spoke;
 "No, let a charming chintz and Brussels lace
 Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face:
 One would not, sure, be frightful when one's dead, —

And — Betty — give this cheek a little red."

The courtier smooth, who forty years had shined

An humble servant to all human-kind,
 Just brought out this, when scarce his tongue
 could stir,

"If — where I'm going — I could serve you, sir?"

"I give and I devise" (old Euclid said,
 And sighed) "my lands and tenements to Ned."
 Your money, sir? "My money, sir! what, all?
 Why — if I must" (then wept) — "I give it Paul."

The manor, sir? "The manor, hold!" he cried,
 "Not that, — I cannot part with that," — and died.

And you, brave Cobham ! to the latest breath
 Shall feel your ruling passion strong in death ;
 Such in those moments as in all the past,
 " O, save my country, Heaven ! " shall be your last.

ALEXANDER POPE.

CONTRADICTION.

FROM "CONVERSATION."

YE powers who rule the tongue, if such there are,

And make colloquial happiness your care,
 Preserve me from the thing I dread and hate,
 A duel in the form of a debate.
 The clash of arguments and jar of words,
 Worse than the mortal brunt of rival swords,
 Decide no question with their tedious length,
 For opposition gives opinion strength,
 Divert the champions prodigal of breath,
 And put the peacefully disposed to death.
 O, thwart me not, Sir Soph, at every turn,
 Nor carp at every flaw you may discern !
 Though syllogisms hang not on my tongue,
 I am not surely always in the wrong ;
 'T is hard if all is false that I advance,
 A fool must now and then be right by chance.
 Not that all freedom of dissent I blame ;
 No, — there I grant the privilege I claim.
 A disputable point is no man's ground ;
 Rove where you please, 't is common all around.
 Discourse may want an animated No,
 To brush the surface, and to make it flow ;
 But still remember, if you mean to please,
 To press your point with modesty and ease.
 The mark at which my juster aim I take,
 Is contradiction for its own dear sake.
 Set your opinion at whatever pitch,
 Knots and impediments make something hitch ;
 Adopt his own, 't is equally in vain,
 Your thread of argument is snapped again.
 The wrangler, rather than accord with you,
 Will judge himself deceived, and prove it too.
 Vociferated logic kills me quite ;
 A noisy man is always in the right.
 I twirl my thumbs, fall back into my chair,
 Fix on the wainscot a distressful stare,
 And, when I hope his blunders are all out,
 Reply discreetly, — " To be sure — no doubt ! "

WILLIAM COWPER.

DUELLING.

FROM "CONVERSATION."

THE point of honor has been deemed of use,
 To teach good manners, and to curb abuse ;
 Admit it true, the consequence is clear,
 Our polished manners are a mask we wear,

And, at the bottom, barbarous still and rude,
 We are restrained, indeed, but not subdued.
 The very remedy, however sure,
 Springs from the mischief it intends to cure,
 And savage in its principle appears,
 Tried, as it should be, by the fruit it bears.
 'T is hard, indeed, if nothing will defend Mankind from quarrels but their fatal end ;
 That now and then a hero must decease,
 That the surviving world may live in peace.
 Perhaps at last close scrutiny may show
 The practice dastardly and mean and low ;
 That men engage in it compelled by force,
 And fear, not courage, is its proper source ;
 The fear of tyrant custom, and the fear
 Lest fops should censure us, and fools should sneer ;

At least, to trample on our Maker's laws,
 And hazard life for any or no cause,
 To rush into a fixed eternal state
 Out of the very flames of rage and hate,
 Or send another shivering to the bar
 With all the guilt of such unnatural war,
 Whatever Use may urge, or Honor plead,
 On Reason's verdict is a madman's deed.
 Am I to set my life upon a throw Because a bear is rude and surly ? No, —
 A moral, sensible, and well-bred man
 Will not affront me ; and no other can.
 Were I empowered to regulate the lists,
 They should encounter with well-loaded fists ;
 A Trojan combat would be something new,
 Let Dares beat Entellus black and blue ;
 Then each might show, to his admiring friends,
 In honorable bumps his rich amends,
 And carry, in contusions of his skull,
 A satisfactory receipt in full.

WILLIAM COWPER.

FAME.

FROM "AN ESSAY ON MAN," EPISTLE IV.

WHAT'S fame? — a fancied life in others'
 breath,
 A thing beyond us, e'en before our death.
 Just what you hear, you have ; and what's unknown
 The same (my lord) if Tully's, or your own.
 All that we feel of it begins and ends
 In the small circle of our foes or friends ;
 To all beside, as much an empty shade
 A Eugene living as a Caesar dead ;
 Alike or when or where they shone or shine,
 Or on the Rubicon, or on the Rhine.
 A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod ;
 An honest man's the noblest work of God.

Fame but from death a villain's name can save,
 As justice tears his body from the grave ;
 When what to oblivion better were resigned
 Is hung on high, to poison half mankind.
 All fame is foreign, but of true desert ;
 Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart :
 One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
 Of stupid starers and of loud huzzas ;
 And more true joy Marcellus exiled feels
 Than Cæsar with a senate at his heels.

ALEXANDER POPE.

FAME.

HER house is all of Echo made
 Where never dies the sound ;
 And as her brows the clouds invade,
 Her feet do strike the ground.

BEN JONSON.

PERSEVERANCE.

IN facile natures fancies quickly grow,
 But such quick fancies have but little root.
 Soon the narcissus flowers and dies, but slow
 The tree whose blossoms shall mature to fruit.
 Grace is a moment's happy feeling, Power
 A life's slow growth ; and we for many an hour
 Must strain and toil, and wait and weep, if we
 The perfect fruit of all we are would see.

From the Italian of LEONARDO DA VINCI.
 Translation of W. W. STORY.

GREATNESS.

FROM "AN ESSAY ON MAN," EPISTLE IV.

HONOR and shame from no condition rise ;
 Act well your part, there all the honor lies.
 Fortune in men has some small difference made,
 One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade ;
 The cobbler aproned, and the parson gowned,
 The friar hooded, and the monarch crowned.
 "What differ more (you cry) than crown and cowl ?"

I'll tell you, friend ; a wise man and a fool.
 You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk
 Or, cobbler-like, the parson will be drunk,
 Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow ;
 The rest is all but leather or prunella.

Stuck o'er with titles, and hung round with strings,
 That thou mayst be by kings, or whores of kings ;
 Boast the pure blood of an illustrious race,
 In quiet flow from Lucrece to Lucrece ;
 But by your fathers' worth if yours you rate,
 Count me those only who were good and great.

Go ! if your ancient but ignoble blood
 Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,
 Go ! and pretend your family is young,
 Nor own your fathers have been fools so long.
 What can ennoble sots, or slaves, or cowards ?
 Alas ! not all the blood of all the Howards.

Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave,
 Is but the more a fool, the more a knave.
 Who noble ends by noble means obtains,
 Or, failing, smiles in exile or in chains,
 Like good Aurelius let him reign, or bleed
 Like Socrates, that man is great indeed.

ALEXANDER POPE.

REASON AND INSTINCT.

FROM "AN ESSAY ON MAN," EPISTLE III.

WHETHER with reason or with instinct blest,
 Know, all enjoy that power which suits them best ;
 To bliss alike by that direction tend,
 And find the means proportioned to their end.
 Say, where full instinct is the unerring guide,
 What pope or council can they need beside ?
 Reason, however able, cool at best,
 Cares not for service, or but serves when prest,
 Stays till we call, and then not often near ;
 But honest instinct comes a volunteer,
 Sure never to o'ershoot, but just to hit ;
 While still too wide or short is human wit,
 Sure by quick nature happiness to gain,
 Which heavier reason labors at in vain.
 This too serves always, reason never long ;
 One must go right, the other may go wrong.
 See then the acting and comparing powers
 One in their nature, which are two in ours ;
 And reason raise o'er instinct as you can,
 In this 't is God directs, in that 't is man.

Who taught the nations of the field and wood
 To shun their poison and to choose their food ?
 Prescient, the tides or tempests to withstand,
 Build on the wave, or arch beneath the sand ?
 Who made the spider parallels design,
 Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line ?
 Who bid the stork, Columbus-like, explore
 Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before ?
 Who calls the council, states the certain day,
 Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way ?

ALEXANDER POPE.

SCANDAL.

FROM "EPISTLE TO DR. ARBUTHNOT," BEING THE "PROLOGUE TO THE SATIRES."

CURSED be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
 That tends to make one worthy man my foe,
 Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
 Or from the soft-eyed virgin steal a tear !

But he who hurts a harmless neighbor's peace,
 Insults fallen worth, or beauty in distress,
 Who loves a lie, lame slander helps about,
 Who writes a libel, or who copies out ;
 That fop whose pride affects a patron's name,
 Yet absent wounds an author's honest fame ;
 Who can your merit selfishly approve,
 And show the sense of it without the love ;
 Who has the vanity to call you friend,
 Yet wants the honor, injured, to defend ;
 Who tells what'er you think, what'er you

say,
 And, if he lie not, must at least betray ;
 Who to the Dean and silver bell can swear,
 And sees at Canons what was never there ;
 Who reads but with a lust to misapply,
 Make satire a lampoon, and fiction lie ;
 A lash like mine no honest man shall dread,
 But all such babbling blockheads in his stead.

ALEXANDER POPE.

HUMANITY.

FROM "THE WINTER WALK AT NOON :"
 "THE TASK," BOOK VI.

I WOULD not enter on my list of friends (Though graced with polished manners and fine sense,

Yet wanting sensibility) the man
 Who needlessly sets foot upon a worm.
 An inadvertent step may crush the snail
 That crawls at evening in the public path ;
 But he that has humanity, forewarned,
 Will tread aside, and let the reptile live.
 The creeping vermin, loathsome to the sight,
 And charged perhaps with venom, that intrudes,
 A visitor unwelcome, into scenes
 Sacred to neatness and repose, the alcove,
 The chamber, or refectory, may die :
 A necessary act incurs no blame.
 Not so when, held within their proper bounds,
 And guiltless of offence, they range the air,
 Or take their pastime in the spacious field :
 There they are privileged ; and he that hunts
 Or harms them there is guilty of a wrong,
 Disturbs the economy of Nature's realm,
 Who, when she formed, designed them an abode.
 The sum is this : If man's convenience, health,
 Or safety interfere, his rights and claims
 Are paramount, and must extinguish theirs.
 Else they are all — the meanest things that are —
 As free to live, and to enjoy that life,
 As God was free to form them at the first,
 Who in his sovereign wisdom made them all.
 Ye, therefore, who love mercy, teach your sons
 To love it too.

WILLIAM COWPER.

OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

FROM "PROVERBIAL PHILOSOPHY."

SHAME upon thee, savage monarch-man, proud monopolist of reason ;
 Shame upon creation's lord, the fierce ensanguined despot :
 What, man ! are there not enough, hunger and diseases and fatigue, —
 And yet must thy goad or thy thong add another sorrow to existence ?
 What ! art thou not content thy sin hath dragged down suffering and death
 On the poor dumb servants of thy comfort, and yet must thou rack them with thy spite ?
 The prodigal heir of creation hath gambled away his all, —
 Shall he add torment to the bondage that is galling his forfeit serfs ?
 The leader in nature's pæan himself hath marred her psaltery, —
 Shall he multiply the din of discord by over-straining all the strings ?
 The rebel hath fortified his stronghold, shutting in his vassals with him, —
 Shall he aggravate the woes of the besieged by oppression from within ?
 Thou twice-deformed image of thy Maker, thou hateful representative of Love,
 For very shame be merciful, be kind unto the creatures thou hast ruined !
 Earth and her million tribes are cursed for thy sake,
 Earth and her million tribes still writhe beneath thy cruelty :
 Liveth there but one among the million that shall not bear witness against thee,
 A pensioner of land or air or sea that hath not whereof it will accuse thee ?
 From the elephant toiling at a launch, to the shrew-mouse in the harvest-field,
 From the whale which the harpooner hath stricken, to the minnow caught upon a pin,
 From the albatross wearied in its flight, to the wren in her covered nest,
 From the death-moth and lace-winged dragon-fly
 to the lady-bird and the gnat,
 The verdict of all things is unanimous, finding their master cruel :
 The dog, thy humble friend, thy trusting, honest
 friend ;
 The ass, thine uncomplaining slave, drudging from morn till even ;
 The lamb, and the timorous hare, and the laboring ox at plough ;
 The speckled trout basking in the shallow, and the partridge gleaming in the stubble,

And the stag at bay, and the worm in thy path,
 and the wild bird pining in captivity,
 And all things that minister alike to thy life and thy comfort and thy pride,
 Testify with one sad voice that man is a cruel master.

MARTIN FARQUHAR TUPPER.

PLEA FOR THE ANIMALS.

FROM "THE SEASONS: SPRING."

ENSANGUINED man

Is now become the lion of the plain,
 And worse. The wolf, who from the nightly fold Fierce drags the bleating prey, ne'er drunk her milk,

Nor wore her warming fleece; nor has the steer,
 At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
 E'er ploughed for him. They too are tempered high,

With hunger stung and wild necessity;
 Nor lodges pity in their shaggy breast.
 But man, whom nature formed of milder clay,
 With every kind emotion in his heart,
 And taught alone to weep, — while from her lap
 She pours ten thousand delicacies, herbs,
 And fruits as numerous as the drops of rain
 Or beams that gave them birth, — shall he, fair
 form!

Who wears sweet smiles, and looks erect on
 heaven,

E'er stoop to mingle with the prowling herd,
 And dip his tongue in gore? The beast of prey,
 Blood-stained, deserves to bleed; but you, ye flocks,

What have ye done? ye peaceful people, what,
 To merit death? you who have given us milk
 In luscious streams, and lent us your own coat
 Against the winter's cold? And the plain ox,
 That harmless, honest, guileless animal,
 In what has he offended? he whose toil,
 Patient and ever-ready, clothes the land
 With all the pomp of harvest, — shall he bleed,
 And struggling groan beneath the cruel hand,
 Even of the clown he feeds? and that, perhaps,
 To swell the riot of the autumnal feast,
 Won by his labor?

JAMES THOMSON.

QUACK MEDICINES.

FROM "THE BOROUGH."

BUT now our Quacks are gamesters, and they play
 With craft and skill to ruin and betray;
 With monstrous promise they delude the mind,
 And thrive on all that tortures human-kind.

Void of all honor, avaricious, rash,
 The daring tribe compound their boasted trash, —
 Tincture or syrup, lotion, drop or pill;
 All tempt the sick to trust the lying bill;
 And twenty names of cobblers turned to squires
 Aid the bold language of these blushing liars.
 There are among them those who cannot read,
 And yet they'll buy a patent, and succeed;
 Will dare to promise dying sufferers aid.
 For who, when dead, can threaten or upbraid?
 With cruel avarice still they recommend
 More draughts, more syrup, to the journey's end.
 "I feel it not." "Then take it every hour."
 "It makes me worse." "Why, then it shows its power."
 "I fear to die." "Let not your spirits sink, You're always safe while you believe and drink."

Troubled with something in your bile or blood,
 You think your doctor does you little good;
 And, grown impatient, you require in haste
 The nervous cordial, nor dislike the taste;
 It comforts, heals, and strengthens; nay, you think

It makes you better every time you drink;
 Who tipples brandy will some comfort feel,
 But will he to the medicine set his seal?

No class escapes them — from the poor man's pay
 The nostrum takes no trifling part away;
 See! those square patent bottles from the shop
 Now decoration to the cupboard's top;
 And there a favorite hoard you'll find within,
 Companions meet! the julep and the gin.

Observe what ills to nervous females flow,
 When the heart flutters and the pulse is low;
 If once induced these cordial sips to try,
 All feel the ease, and few the danger fly;
 For, while obtained, of drams they've all the
 force,

And when denied, then drams are the resource.
 Who would not lend a sympathizing sigh,
 To hear yon infant's pity-moving cry?
 Then the good nurse (who, had she borne a brain,
 Had sought the cause that made her babe complain)

Has all her efforts, loving soul! applied
 To set the cry, and not the cause, aside;
 She gave her powerful sweet without remorse,
The sleeping cordial, — she had tried its force,
 Repeating oft; the infant, freed from pain,
 Rejected food, but took the dose again,
 Sinking to sleep, while she her joy expressed,
 That her dear charge could sweetly take his rest.
 Soon may she spare her cordial; not a doubt Remains but quickly he will rest without.

GEORGE CRABBE.

TO THE UNCO GUID.

My son, these maxims make a rule
 And lump them aye thegither :
 The Rigid Righteous is a fool,
 The Rigid Wise anither :
 The cleanest corn that e'er was dight
 May hae some pyles o' caff in ;
 Sae e'er a fellow-creature slicht
 For random fits o' daffin.

SOLOMON, Eccles. vii. 16.

O YE wha are sae guid yoursel',
 Sae pious and sae holy,
 Ye've nought to do but mark and tell
 Your neebor's fauts and folly : —
 Whase life is like a weel-gaun mill,
 Supplied wi' store o' water,
 The heapèd happer's ebbing still,
 And still the clap plays clatter.

Hear me, ye venerable core,
 As counsel for poor mortals,
 That frequent pass dounce Wisdom's door,
 For glaikit Folly's portals !
 I, for their thoughtless, careless sakes,
 Would here propone defences,
 Their donsie tricks, their black mistakes,
 Their failings and mischances.

Ye see your state wi' theirs compared,
 And shudder at the niffer ;
 But cast a moment's fair regard,
 What maks the mighty differ ?
 Discount what scant occasion gave
 That purity ye pride in,
 And (what's aft mair than a' the lave)
 Your better art o' hidin'.

Think, when your castigated pulse
 Gies now and then a wallop,
 What ragings must his veins convulse,
 That still eternal gallop :
 Wi' wind and tide fair y' your tail,
 Right on ye send your sea-way ;
 But in the teeth o' baith to sail,
 It makes an unco leeway.

See Social life and Glee sit down,
 All joyous and unthinking,
 Till, quite transmogrified, they're grown
 Debauchery and Drinking :
 O, would they stay to calculate
 The eternal consequences ;
 Or your more dreaded hell to state,
 Damnation of expenses !

Ye high, exalted, virtuous dames,
 Tied up in godly laces,
 Before ye gie poor Frailty names,
 Suppose a change o' cases ;

A dear-loved lad, convenience snug,
 A treacherous inclination, —
 But, let me whisper i' your lug,
 Ye're aiblins nae temptation.

Then gently scan your brother man,
 Still gentler sister woman ;
 Though they may gang a kennin' wrang,
 To step aside is human.
 One point must still be greatly dark,
 The moving why they do it ;
 And just as lamely can ye mark
 How far perhaps they rue it.

Who made the heart, 't is He alone
 Decidedly can try us ;
 He knows each chord, — its various tone,
 Each spring, — its various bias :
 Then at the balance let's be mute,
 We never can adjust it ;
 What's done we partly may compute,
 But know not what's resisted.

ROBERT BURNS.

JUDGE NOT.

JUDGE not ; the workings of his brain
 And of his heart thou canst not see ;
 What looks to thy dim eyes a stain,
 In God's pure light may only be
 A scar, brought from some well-won field,
 Where thou wouldst only faint and yield.

The look, the air, that frets thy sight
 May be a token that below
 The soul has closed in deadly fight
 With some infernal fiery foe,
 Whose glance would scorch thy smiling grace,
 And cast thee shuddering on thy face !

The fall thou darest to despise, —
 May be the angel's slackened hand
 Has suffered it, that he may rise
 And take a firmer, surer stand ;
 Or, trusting less to earthly things,
 May henceforth learn to use his wings.

And judge none lost ; but wait and see,
 With hopeful pity, not disdain ;
 The depth of the abyss may be
 The measure of the height of pain
 And love and glory that may raise
 This soul to God in after days !

ADELAIDE ANNE PROCTER.

L' ALLEGRO.

HENCE, loathed Melancholy,
Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born,
In Stygian cave forlorn,
'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy !

Find out some uncouth cell,
Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous wings,
And the night-raven sings ;
There under ebon shades, and low-browed rocks,
As ragged as thy locks,

In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell.
But come, thou goddess fair and free,
In heaven yeled Euphrosyne,
And, by men, heart-easing Mirth ;
Whom lovely Venus, at a birth,
With two sister Graces more,
To ivy-crownèd Bacchus bore ;
Or whether (as some sager sing)
The frolic wind that breathes the spring,
Zephyr, with Aurora playing, —
As he met her once a-Maying, —
There, on beds of violets blue
And fresh-blown roses washed in dew,
Filled her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonair.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Jest, and youthful Jollity, —
Quips and cranks and wanton wiles,
Nods and becks and wreathèd smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek, —
Sport, that wrinkled Care derides,
And Laughter, holding both his sides.
Come ! and trip it, as you go,
On the light fantastic toe ;
And in thy right hand lead with thee
The mountain nymph, sweet Liberty ;
And if I give thee honor due,
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her, and live with thee,
In unprovèd pleasures free, —
To hear the lark begin his flight,
And singing startle the dull Night,
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise ;
Then to come, in spite of sorrow,
And at my window bid good morrow,
Through the sweet-brier, or the vine,
Or the twisted eglantine ;
While the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of darkness thin,
And to the stack, or the barn door,
Stontly struts his dames before ;
Oft listening how the hounds and horn

Cheerly rouse the slumbering Morn,
From the side of some hoar hill
Through the high wood echoing shrill ;
Sometime walking, not unseen,
By hedgerow elms, on hillocks green,
Right against the eastern gate,
Where the great Sun begins his state,
Robed in flames, and amber light,
The clouds in thousand liveries dight ;
While the ploughman, near at hand,
Whistles o'er the furrowed land,
And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his scythe,
And every shepherd tells his tale
Under the hawthorn in the dale.

Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures,
Whilst the landscape round it measures
Russet lawns, and fallows gray,
Where the nibbling flocks do stray, —
Mountains, on whose barren breast
The laboring clouds do often rest, —
Meadows trim with daisies pied,
Shallow brooks, and rivers wide.
Towers and battlements it sees
Bosomed high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The cynosure of neighboring eyes.
Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes
From betwixt two aged oaks,
Where Corydon and Thyrsis, met,
Are at their savory dinner set
Of herbs, and other country messes,
Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses :
And then in haste her bower she leaves,
With Thestylis to bind the sheaves ;
Or, if the earlier season lead,
To the tanned haycock in the mead.
Sometimes with secure delight
The upland hamlets will invite,
When the merry bells ring round,
And the jocund rebecks sound
To many a youth and many a maid,
Dancing in the cheeked shade ;
And young and old come forth to play
On a sunshine holiday,
Till the livelong daylight fail ;
Then to the spiey nut-brown ale
With stories told of many a feat :
How fairy Mab the junkets eat, —
She was pinched and pulled, she said,
And he, by friar's lantern led ;
Tells how the drudging goblin sweat
To earn his cream-bowl duly set,
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail had thrashed the corn
That ten day-laborers could not end ;
Then lies him down the lubber fiend,

And, stretched out all the chimney's length,
Basks at the fire his hairy strength,
And, crop-full, out of doors he flings
Ere the first cock his matin rings.
Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whispering winds soon lulled asleep.

Towered cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men,
Where throngs of knights and barons bold
In weeds of peace high triumphs hold, —
With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
Rain influence, and judge the prize
Of wit or arms, while both contend
To win her grace whom all commend.
There let Hymen oft appear
In saffron robe, with taper clear,
And pomp and feast and revelry,
With masque, and antique pageantry, —
Such sights as youthful poets dream
On summer eves by haunted stream ;
Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learnèd sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild.

And ever, against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs,
Married to immortal verse, —
Such as the meeting soul may pierce,
In notes with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out,
With wanton heed and giddy cunning
The melting voice through mazes running,
Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony, —
That Orpheus' self may heave his head
From golden slumber on a bed
Of heaped Elysian flowers, and hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto, to have quite set free
His half-regained Eurydice.

These delights if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

MILTON.

IL PENSEROSO.

HENCE, vain deluding joys,
The brood of Folly without father bred !
How little you bestead,
Or fill the fixèd mind with all your toys !
Dwell in some idle brain,
And fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the sunbeams, —
Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train.

But hail, thou goddess, sage and holy !
Hail, divinest Melancholy !
Whose saintly visage is too bright
To hit the sense of human sight,
And therefore, to our weaker view,
O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue, —
Black, but such as in esteem
Prince Memnon's sister might beseem,
Or that starred Ethiop queen that strove
To set her beauty's praise above
The Sea-Nymphs, and their powers offended.
Yet thou art higher far descended ;
Thee bright-haired Vesta, long of yore,
To solitary Saturn bore, —
His daughter she (in Saturn's reign
Such mixture was not held a stain).
Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her, and in secret shades
Of woodsy Ida's inmost grove,
While yet there was no fear of Jove.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,
Sober, steadfast, and demure,
All in a robe of darkest grain
Flowing with majestic train,
And sable stole of cyprus-lawn
Over thy decent shoulders drawn.
Come, but keep thy wonted gait,
With even step, and musing gait,
And looks commercing with the skies,
Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes ;
There held in holy passion still,
Forget thyself to marble, till
With a sad, leaden, downward cast
Thou fix them on the earth as fast ;
And join with thee calm Peace, and Quiet, —
Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet,
And hears the Muses in a ring
Aye round about Jove's altar sing ;
And add to these retirèd Leisure,
That in trim gardens takes his pleasure :
But first and chiefest, with thee bring
Him that yon soars on golden wing,
Guiding the fiery-wheelèd throne, —
The cherub Contemplation ;
And the mute Silence hist along,
'Less Philomel will deign a song
In her sweetest, saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of Night,
While Cynthia checks her dragon yoke
Gently o'er the accustomed oak.
Sweet bird, that shun'st the noise of folly, —
Most musical, most melancholy !
Thee, chantress, oft, the woods among,
I woo, to hear thy even-song.
And, missing thee, I walk unseen
On the dry, smooth-shaven green,

To behold the wandering moon
 Riding near her highest noon,
 Like one that had been led astray
 Through the heaven's wide pathless way ;
 And oft, as if her head she bowed,
 Stooping through a fleecy clond.
 Oft, on a plat of rising ground,
 I hear the far-off curfew sound
 Over some wide-watered shore,
 Swinging slow with sullen roar ;
 Or if the air will not permit,
 Some still removèd place will fit,
 Where glowing embers through the room
 Teach light to counterfeit a gloom, —
 Far from all resort of mirth,
 Save the cricket on the hearth,
 Or the bellman's drowsy charm,
 To bless the doors from nightly harm ;
 Or let my lamp at midnight hour
 Be seen in some high lonely tower,
 Where I may oft out-watch the Bear
 With thrice-great Hermes, or unsphere
 The spirit of Plato, to unfold
 What worlds or what vast regions hold
 The immortal mind that hath forsook
 Her mansion in this fleshly nook ;
 And of those demons that are found
 In fire, air, flood, or under ground,
 Whose power hath a true consent
 With planet or with element.
 Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
 In sceptred pall come sweeping by,
 Presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line,
 Or the tale of Troy divine,
 Or what (though rare) of later age
 Ennobled hath the buskined stage.

But, O sad Virgin, that thy power
 Might raise Musæus from his bower !
 Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing
 Such notes as, warbled to the string,
 Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
 And made hell grant what love did seek !
 Or call up him that left half told
 The story of Cambusean bold, —
 Of Camball, and of Algarsife, —
 And who had Canacé to wife,
 That owned the virtuous ring and glass, —
 And of the wondrous horse of brass,
 On which the Tartar king did ride !
 And, if aught else great bards beside
 In sage and solemn tunes have sung, —
 Of tourneys and of trophies hung,
 Of forests, and enchantments drear,
 Where more is meant than meets the ear.

Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
 Till civil-suited Morn appear, —

Not tricked and frownced, as she was wont
 With the Attic boy to hunt,
 But kerchiefed in a comely cloud,
 While rocking winds are piping loud,
 Or ushered with a shower still
 When the gust hath blown his fill,
 Ending on the rustling leaves,
 With minute drops from off the eaves.
 And when the sun begins to fling
 His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
 To archèd walks of twilight groves,
 And shadows brown, that Sylvan loves,
 Of pine, or monumental oak,
 Where the rude axe with heavèd stroke
 Was never heard the Nymphs to daunt,
 Or fright them from their hallowed haunt.
 There in close covert by some brook,
 Where no profaner eye may look,
 Hide me from day's garish eye,
 While the bee with honeyed thigh,
 That at her flowery work doth sing,
 And the waters murmuring
 With such consort as they keep,
 Entice the dewy-feathered Sleep ;
 And let some strange mysterious dream
 Wave at his wings, in airy stream
 Of lively portraiture displayed,
 Softly on my eyelids laid ;
 And, as I wake, sweet music breathe
 Above, about, or underneath,
 Sent by some Spirit to mortals good,
 Or the unseen Genius of the wood.

But let my due feet never fail
 To walk the studious cloisters pale,
 And love the high embowèd roof,
 With antic pillars massy proof,
 And storied windows, richly dight,
 Casting a dim religious light.
 There let the pealing organ blow
 To the full-voiced quire below,
 In service high and anthems clear,
 As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
 Dissolve me into ecstasies,
 And bring all heaven before mine eyes.

And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell
 Of every star that heaven doth shew,
 And every herb that sips the dew,
 Till old experience do attain
 To something like prophetic strain.

These pleasures, Melancholy, give,
 And I with thee will choose to live.

HALLOWED GROUND.

WHAT 's hallowed ground? Has earth a clod
 Its Maker meant not should be trod
 By man, the image of his God,
 Erect and free,
 Unscourged by Superstition's rod
 To bow the knee?

That 's hallowed ground where, mourned and missed,
 The lips repose our love has kissed; —
 But where 's their memory's mansion? Is 't
 Yon churchyard's bowers?
 No! in ourselves their souls exist,
 A part of ours.

A kiss can consecrate the ground
 Where mated hearts are mutual bound:
 The spot where love's first links were wound,
 That ne'er are riven,
 Is hallowed down to earth's profound,
 And up to heaven!

For time makes all but true love old;
 The burning thoughts that then were told
 Run molten still in memory's mould;
 And will not cool
 Until the heart itself be cold
 In Lethe's pool.

What hallows ground where heroes sleep?
 'T is not the sculptured piles you heap!
 In dews that heavens far distant weep
 Their turf may bloom;
 Or Genii twine beneath the deep
 Their coral tomb.

But strew his ashes to the wind
 Whose sword or voice has served mankind, —
 And is he dead, whose glorious mind
 Lifts thine on high? —
 To live in hearts we leave behind
 Is not to die.

Is 't death to fall for Freedom's right?
 He's dead alone that lacks her light!
 And murder sullies in heaven's sight
 The sword he draws: —
 What can alone ennoble fight?
 A noble cause!

Give that, — and welcome War to brace
 Her drums, and rend heaven's reeking space!
 The colors planted face to face,
 The charging cheer,
 Though Death's pale horse lead on the chase,
 Shall still be dear.

And place our trophies where men kneel
 To Heaven! — but Heaven rebukes my zeal!
 The cause of Truth and human weal,
 O God above!
 Transfer it from the sword's appeal
 To Peace and Love.

Peace, Love! the cherubim, that join
 Their spread wings o'er Devotion's shrine,
 Prayers sound in vain, and temples shine,
 Where they are not, —
 The heart alone can make divine
 Religion's spot.

To incantations dost thou trust,
 And pompons rites in domes august?
 See mouldering stones and metal's rust
 Belie the vault,
 That man can bless one pile of dust
 With chime or chant.

The ticking wood-worm mocks thee, man!
 Thy temples, — creeds themselves grow wan!
 But there's a dome of nobler span,
 A temple given
 Thy faith, that bigots dare not ban, —
 Its space is heaven!

Its roof, star-pictured Nature's ceiling,
 Where, trancing the rapt spirit's feeling,
 And God himself to man revealing,
 The harmonious spheres
 Make music, though unheard their pealing
 By mortal ears.

Fair stars! are not your beings pure?
 Can sin, can death, your worlds obscure?
 Else why so swell the thoughts at your Aspect above?
 Ye must be heavens that make us sure
 Of heavenly love!

And in your harmony sublime
 I read the doom of distant time;
 That man's regenerate soul from crime
 Shall yet be drawn,
 And reason on his mortal clime
 Immortal dawn.

What's hallowed ground? 'T is what gives birth
 To sacred thoughts in souls of worth! —
 Peace! Independence! Truth! go forth
 Earth's compass round;
 And your high-priesthood shall make earth
 All hallowed ground.

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

CEDARMERE.

BRYANT'S HOME AT ROSLYN.

*"What's hallowed ground? 'Tis what gives birth
To sacred thoughts in souls of worth!"*

FLOWERS WITHOUT FRUIT.

PRUNE thou thy words ; the thoughts control
That o'er thee swell and throng ; —
They will condense within thy soul,
And change to purpose strong.

But he who lets his feelings run
In soft luxurious flow,
Shrinks when hard service must be done,
And faints at every woe.

Faith's meanest deed more favor bears,
Where hearts and wills are weighed,
Than brightest transports, choicest prayers,
Which bloom their hour, and fade.

JOHN HENRY NEWMAN.

REVENGE OF INJURIES.

FROM "MARIAM."

THE fairest action of our human life
Is scorning to revenge an injury :
For who forgives without a further strife
His adversary's heart to him doth tie :
And 't is a firmer conquest truly said
To win the heart than overthrow the head.

If we a worthy enemy do find,
To yield to worth, it must be nobly done ;
But if of baser metal be his mind,
In base revenge there is no honor won.
Who would a worthy courage overthrow ?
And who would wrestle with a worthless foe ?

We say our hearts are great, and cannot yield ;
Because they cannot yield, it proves them poor :
Great hearts are tasked beyond their power but seld :

The weakest lion will the loudest roar.
Truth's school for certain does this same allow,
High-heartedness doth sometimes teach to bow.

LADY ELIZABETH CAREW.

A TEAR.

O THAT the chemist's magic art
Could crystallize this sacred treasure !
Long should it glitter near my heart,
A secret source of pensive pleasure.

The little brilliant, ere it fell,
Its lustre caught from Chloe's eye ;
Then, trembling, left its coral cell, —
The spring of Sensibility !

Sweet drop of pure and pearly light !
In thee the rays of Virtue shine,
More calmly clear, more mildly bright,
Than any gem that gilds the mine.

Benign restorer of the soul !
Who ever fliest to bring relief,
When first we feel the rude control
Of Love or Pity, Joy or Grief.

The sage's and the poet's theme,
In every clime, in every age,
Thou charm'st in Fancy's idle dream,
In Reason's philosophic page.

That very law which moulds a tear,
And bids it trickle from its source, —
That law preserves the earth a sphere,
And guides the planets in their course.

SAMUEL ROGERS.

MIGNON'S SONG.

FROM "WILHELM MEISTER."

KNOW'ST thou the land where bloom the citron
bowers,
Where the gold-orange lights the dusky grove ?
High waves the laurel there, the myrtle flowers,
And through a still blue heaven the sweet winds
rove.

Know'st thou it well ?

There, there with thee,
O friend, O loved one ! fain my steps would flee.

KNOW'ST thou the dwelling ? — there the pillars rise,

Soft shines the hall, the painted chambers glow ;
And forms of marble seem with pitying eyes
To say, " Poor child ! what thus hath wrought thee woe ? "

Know'st thou it well ?

There, there with thee,
O my protector ! homewards might I flee !

KNOW'ST thou the mountain ? — high its bridge is hung,

Where the mule seeks through mist and cloud
his way ;

There lurk the dragon-race, deep caves among,
O'er beetling rocks there foams the torrent spray.
Know'st thou it well ?

With thee, with thee,
There lies my path, O father ! let us flee !

From the German of GOETHE. Translation of FELICIA HEMANS.

THE OLD MAID.

WHY sits she thus in solitude? Her heart
 Seems melting in her eyes' delicious blue;
 And as it heaves, her ripe lips lie apart,
 As if to let its heavy throbbings through;
 In her dark eye a depth of softness swells,
 Deeper than that her careless girlhood wore;
 And her cheek crimson with the hue that tells
 The rich, fair fruit is ripened to the core.

It is her thirtieth birthday! With a sigh
 Her soul hath turned from youth's luxuriant
 bowers,
 And her heart taken up the last sweet tie
 That measured out its links of golden hours!
 She feels her inmost soul within her stir
 With thoughts too wild and passionate to speak;
 Yet her full heart — its own interpreter —
 Translates itself in silence on her cheek.

Joy's opening buds, affection's glowing flowers,
 Once lightly sprang within her beaming track;
 O, life was beautiful in those lost hours,
 And yet she does not wish to wander back!
 No! she but loves in loneliness to think
 On pleasures past, though nevermore to be;
 Hope links her to the future, — but the link
 That binds her to the past is memory.

AMELIA B. WELBY.

LOVE AGAINST LOVE.

As unto blowing roses summer dews,
 Or morning's amber to the tree-top choirs,
 So to my bosom are the beams that use
 To rain on me from eyes that love inspires.
 Your love, — vouchsafe it, royal-hearted Few,
 And I will set no common price thereon;
 O, I will keep, as heaven his holy blue,
 Or night her diamonds, that dear treasure won.
 But aught of inward faith must I forego,
 Or miss one drop from truth's baptismal hand,
 Think poorer thoughts, pray cheaper prayers,
 and grow

Less worthy trust, to meet your heart's demand, —
 Farewell! Your wish I for your sake deny:
 Rebel to love, in truth to love, am I.

DAVID A. WASSON.

A RENUNCIATION.

If women could be fair, and yet not fond,
 Or that their love were firm, not fickle still,
 I would not marvel that they make men bond
 By service long to purchase their good-will;

But when I see how frail those creatures are,
 I muse that men forget themselves so far.

To mark the choice they make, and how they change,
 How oft from Phœbus they do flee to Pan;
 Unsettled still, like haggards wild they range,
 These gentle birds that fly from man to man;
 Who would not scorn and shake them from the fist,
 And let them fly, fair fools, which way they list?

Yet for disport we fawn and flatter both,
 To pass the time when nothing else can please,
 And train them to our lure with subtle oath,
 Till, weary of their wiles, ourselves we ease;
 And then we say when we their fancy try,
 To play with fools, O, what a fool was I!

EDWARD VERE, EARL OF OXFORD.

FAITH.

BETTER trust all and be deceived,
 And weep that trust and that deceiving,
 Than doubt one heart that, if believed,
 Had blessed one's life with true believing.

O, in this mocking world too fast
 The doubting fiend o'takes our youth;
 Better be cheated to the last
 Than lose the blessed hope of truth.

FRANCES ANNE KEMBLE BUTLER.

THE SUM OF LIFE.

FROM "THE GARDEN": "THE TASK," BOOK VI.

I WAS a stricken deer, that left the herd
 Long since; with many an arrow deep infix'd
 My panting side was charged, when I withdrew,
 To seek a tranquil death in distant shades.
 There was I found by one who had himself
 Been hurt by the archers. In his side he bore,
 And in his hands and feet, the cruel scars.
 With gentle force soliciting the darts,
 He drew them forth, and healed, and bade me live.
 Since then, with few associates, in remote
 And silent woods I wander, far from those
 My former partners of the peopled scene;
 With few associates, and not wishing more.
 Here much I ruminate, as much I may,
 With other views of men and manners now
 Than once, and others of a life to come.
 I see that all are wanderers, gone astray
 Each in his own delusions; they are lost
 In chase of fancied happiness, still woo'd
 And never won. Dream after dream ensues;

And still they dream, that they shall still succeed ;
 And still are disappointed. Rings the world
 With the vain stir. I sum up half mankind,
 And add two-thirds of the remaining half,
 And find the total of their hopes and fears
 Dreams, empty dreams.

WILLIAM COWPER.

THE WILL.

BEFORE I sigh my last gasp, let me breathe,
 Great Love, some legacies : here I bequeathe
 Mine eyes to Argus, if mine eyes can see,
 If they be blind, then, Love, I give them thee ;
 My tongue to Fame ; to ambassadors mine ears ;
     To women, or the sea, my tears ;
     Thou, Love, hast taught me heretofore
 By making me serve her who had twenty more,
 That I should give to none, but such as had too much before.

My constancy I to the planets give ;
 My truth to them who at the court do live ;
 Mine ingenuity and openness
 To Jesuits ; to buffoons my pensiveness ;
 My silence to any who abroad have been ;
     My money to a Capuchin.
     Thou, Love, taught'st me, by appointing me
 To love there, where no love received can be,
 Only to give to such as have an incapacity.*

My faith I give to Roman Catholics ;
 All my good works unto the schismatics
 Of Amsterdam ; my best civility
 And courtship to an University ;
 My modesty I give to shoulders bare ;
     My patience let gamesters share.
     Thou, Love, taught'st me, by making me
 Love her, that holds my love disparity,
 Only to give to those that count my gifts indignity.

I give my reputation to those
 Which were my friends ; mine industry to foes ;
 To schoolmen I bequeathe my doubtfulness ;
 My sickness to physicians, or excess ;
 To Nature all that I in rhyme have writ ;
     And to my company my wit.
     Thou, Love, by making me adore
 Her, who begot this love in me before,
 Taught'st me to make, as though I gave, when I do but restore.

To him, for whom the passing-bell next tolls,
 I give my physic-books ; my written rolls
 Of moral counsels I to Bedlam give :
 My brazen medals unto them which live

* No good capacity.

In want of bread ; to them which pass among
     All foreigners, mine English tongue.
     Thou, Love, by making me love one
     Who thinks her friendship a fit portion
 For younger lovers, dost my gifts thus disproportion.

Therefore I'll give no more, but I'll undo
 The world by dying ; because Love dies too.
 Then all your beauties will be no more worth
 Than gold in mines, where none doth draw it forth ;
 And all your graces no more use shall have,
     Than a sun-dial in a grave.
     Thou, Love, taught'st me, by making me
     Love her, who doth neglect both me and thee,
 To invent and practise this one way to annihilate
 all three.

DR. JOHN DONNE.

FRAGMENTS.

THE COURSE OF LIFE.

TIME.

Time rolls his ceaseless course.

Lady of the Lake, Cant. iii.

SCOTT.

The heavens on high perpetually do move ;
 By minutes meal the hour doth steal away,
 By hours the days, by days the months remove,
 And then by months the years as fast decay ;
 Yea, Virgil's verse and Tully's truth do say
 That Time fieth, and never claps her wings ;
 But rides on clouds, and forward still she flings.

G. GASCOIGNE.

On our quick'st decrees
 Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of Time
 Steals, ere we can effect them.

All's Well that Ends Well, Act v. Sc. 3. SHAKESPEARE.

And then he drew a dial from his poke,
 And, looking on it with lack-lustre eye,
 Says very wisely, " It is ten o'clock :
 Thus may we see," quoth he, " how the world
 wags :
 'T is but an hour ago since it was nine ;
 And after one hour more 't will be eleven ;
 And so, from hour to hour, we ripe and ripe,
 And then, from hour to hour, we rot and rot ;
 And thereby hangs a tale."

As You Like It, Act ii. Sc. 7.

SHAKESPEARE.

Come what come may,
 Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

LIFE.

Let us (since life can little more supply
Than just to look about us, and to die)
Expatriate free o'er all this scene of man ;
A mighty maze ! but not without a plan.

Together let us beat this ample field,
Try why the open, what the covert yield.

Essay on Man, Epistle I.

POPE.

The world's a theatre, the earth a stage
Which God and nature do with actors fill.

Apology for Actors.

T. HEYWOOD.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time ;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle !
Life's but a walking shadow ; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more : it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing.

Macbeth, Act v. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

Life is a jest, and all things show it ;
I thought so once, but now I know it.

My Own Epitaph.

J. GAY.

The web of our life is of a mingled
Yarn, good and ill together.

All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

And what's a life ?— a weary pilgrimage,
Whose glory in one day doth fill the stage
With childhood, manhood, and decrepit age.

What is Life ?

F. QUARLES.

But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool.

King Henry IV., Pt. I. Act v. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

On life's vast ocean diversely we sail,
Reason the card, but passion is the gale.

Essay on Man, Epistle II.

POPE.

MANKIND.

Man !

Thou pendulum betwixt a smile and tear.

Childe Harold, Cant. iv.

BYRON.

More servants wait on man
Than he'll take notice of. In ev'ry path
He trends down that which doth befriend him
When sickness makes him pale and wan.
O mightie love ! Man is one world, and hath Another to attend him.

Man.

G. HERBERT.

Like leaves on trees the race of man is found,
Now green in youth, now withering on the ground :
Another race the following spring supplies ;
They fall successive, and successive rise.

Iliad, Book vi. Translation of POPE.

HOMER.

Know then thyself, presume not God to scan ;
The proper study of mankind is man.

Created half to rise, and half to fall ;
Great lord of all things, yet a prey to all ;
Sole judge of truth, in endless error hurled ;
The glory, jest, and riddle of the world !

Essay on Man, Epistle II.

POPE.

THE PAST.

O, call back yesterday, bid time return.

To-day, unhappy day, too late.

King Richard II., Act iii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Things without all remedy,
Should be without regard : what's done is done.

Macbeth, Act iii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Gone, glimmering through the dream of things that were,

A school-boy's tale, the wonder of an hour !

Childe Harold, Cant. ii.

BYRON.

Not heaven itself upon the past has power ;
But what has been, has been, and I have had my hour.

Imitation of Horace, Book i. Ode 29.

DRYDEN.

Applause

To that blest son of foresight ; lord of fate !
That awful independent on to-morrow
Whose work is done ; who triumphs in the past ;
Whose yesterdays look backwards with a smile.

Night Thoughts, Night ii.

DR. E. YOUNG.

ACHILLES. . . . What ! are my deeds forgot ?
ULYSSES. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his
back,
Wherein he puts alms for oblivion.

For time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand,

And with his arms outstretched, as he would fly,
Grasps-in the comer. Welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing.

Troilus and Cressida, Act iii. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

THE PRESENT.

This narrow isthmus 'twixt two boundless seas,
The past, the future, two eternities!

Lalla Rookh: The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan. T. MOORE.

Lo! on a narrow neck of land,
'Twixt two unbounded seas I stand.

Hymn.

C. WESLEY.

Heaven from all creatures hides the book of Fate,
All but the page prescribed, their present state.

Essay on Man, Epistle I.

POPE.

Nothing is there to come, and nothing past,
But an eternal Now does always last.

Davidels, Vol. I. Book i.

A. COWLEY.

Defer not till to-morrow to be wise,
To-morrow's sun to thee may never rise.

Letter to Cobham.

W. CONGREVE.

Happy the man, and happy he alone,
He who can call to-day his own:

He who, secure within, can say,

To-morrow, do thy worst, for I have lived to-day.

Imitation of Horace, Book i. Ode 29.

DRYDEN.

THE FUTURE.

The best of prophets of the Future is the Past.

Letter, Jan. 28, 1821.

BYRON.

As though there were a tie,
And obligation to posterity.
We got them, bear them, breed and nurse.
What has posterity done for us,
That we, lest they their rights should lose,
Should trust our necks to gripe of noose.

McFingal, Cant. ii.

J. TRUMBULL.

All that's bright must fade, —
The brightest still the fleetest;
All that's sweet was made
But to be lost when sweetest!

National Airs: All that's bright must fade.

T. MOORE.

When I consider life, 't is all a cheat.
Yet, fooled with hope, men favor the deceit;
Trust on, and think to-morrow will repay:
To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lies worse; and, while it says we shall be blest
With some new joys, cuts off what we possess.
Strange cozenage! none would live past years
again,

Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain.

Aureng-Zebe; or, The Great Mogul, Act iv. Sc. 1. DRYDEN.

Beware of desperate steps. The darkest day,
Live till to-morrow, will have passed away.

The Needless Alarm.

COWPER.

FATE.

Men at some time are masters of their fates;
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

Julius Cæsar, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Man is his own star, and the soul that can Render an honest and a perfect man
Commands all light, all influence, all fate.
Nothing to him falls early, or too late.

Upon an Honest Man's Fortune.

J. FLETCHER.

Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie,
Which we ascribe to Heaven: the fated sky
Gives us free scope; only, doth backward pull
Our slow designs, when we ourselves are dull.

All's Well that Ends Well, Act i. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

I'll make assurance doubly sure,
And take a bond of Fate.

Macbeth, Act iv. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

YOUTH.

Gay hope is theirs, by fancy fed,
Less pleasing when possessed;
The tear forgot as soon as shed,
The sunshine of the breast.
Theirs buxom health of rosy hue,
Wild wit, invention ever new,
And lively cheer of vigor born;
The thoughtless day, the easy night,
The spirits pure, the slumbers light.
That fly the approach of morn.

On a Distant Prospect of Eton College.

T. GRAY.

Long as the year's dull circle seems to run
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one.

Imitations of Horace, Epistle I. Book 1.

POPE.

Returning, he proclaims by many a grace,
By shrugs and strange contortions of his face,
How much a dunce that has been sent to roam,
Excels a dunce that has been kept at home.

The Progress of Error.

COWPER.

The nimble-footed mad-cap Prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside,
And bid it pass.

King Henry IV., Part I. Act iv. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

MANHOOD.

Be wise with speed:
A fool at forty is a fool indeed.

Love of Fame, Satire ii.

DR. E. YOUNG.

Not two strong men the enormous weight could raise ;
Such men as live in these degenerate days.

Iliad, Book v. Translation of POPE.

HOMER.

Nor love thy life, nor hate ; but what thou liv' st
Live well ; how long or short permit to heaven.

Paradise Lost, Book xi.

MILTON.

What tho' short thy date ?

Virtue, not rolling suns, the mind matures.
That life is long which answers life's great end.
The time that bears no fruit deserves no name.
The man of wisdom is the man of years.
In hoary youth Methusalems may die ;
O, how misdated on their flatt'ring tombs !

Night Thoughts, Night v.

DR. E. YOUNG.

Live while you live, the epicure would say,
And seize the pleasures of the present day ;
Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries,
And give to God each moment as it flies.
Lord, in my views, let both united be ;
I live in pleasure when I live to thee.

Epigram on his Family Arms. [Dum vivimus vivamus.]

P. DODDRIDGE.

OLD AGE.

My May of life

Is fall'n into the sear, the yellow leaf ;
And that which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have ; but, in their stead,
Curses, not loud, but deep, mouth-honor, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, and dare
not.

Macbeth, Act v. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

And wrinkles, the d——d democrats, won't flatter.

Don Juan, Cant. x.

BYRON.

Strange ! that a harp of thousand strings
Should keep in tune so long.

Hymns and Spiritual Songs, Book ii. Hymn 19.

WATTS.

In sober state,
Through the sequestered vale of rural life,
The venerable patriarch guileless held
The tenor of his way.

Death.

B. PORTEUS.

Time has laid his hand
Upon my heart, gently, not smiting it,
But as a harper lays his open palm
Upon his harp, to deaden its vibrations.

The Golden Legend.

LONGFELLOW.

But grant, the virtues of a temp'rate prime
Bless with an age exempt from scorn or crime ;
An age that melts with unperceived decay,
And glides in modest innocence away.

Vanity of Human Wishes.

DR. S. JOHNSON.

The soul's dark cottage, battered and decayed,
Lets in new light through chinks that time has
made.

Stronger by weakness, wiser men become,
As they draw near to their eternal home,

Verses upon his Divine Poesy.

E. WALLER.

DEATH.

Man wants but little, nor that little long.
How soon he must resign his very dust !

Night Thoughts, Night iv.

DR. E. YOUNG.

"While there is life, there's hope," he cried ;
"Then why such haste ?" so groaned and died.

The Sick Man and the Angel.

J. GAY.

Lovely in death the beauteous ruin lay ;
And if in death still lovely, lovelier there ;
Far lovelier ! pity swells the tide of love.

Night Thoughts, Night iii.

DR. E. YOUNG.

Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail
Or knock the breast, no weakness, no contempt,
Dispraise or blame, nothing but well and fair,
And what may quiet us in a death so noble.

Samson Agonistes.

MILTON.

There is a calm for those who weep,
A rest for weary pilgrims found,
They softly lie and sweetly sleep
Low in the ground.

The Grave.

J. MONTGOMERY.

IMMORTALITY.

I know no evil death can show, which life
Has not already shown to those who live
Embodied longest. If there be indeed
A shore, where mind survives, 't will be as mind
All unincorporate.

Sardanapalus.

BYRON.

To be no more — sad cure ; for who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallowed up and lost
In the wide womb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense and motion ?

Paradise Lost, Book ii.

MILTON.

I have asked that dreadful question of the hills
That look eternal ; of the flowing streams
That lucid flow forever ; of the stars,
Amid whose fields of azure my raised spirit
Hath trod in glory : all were dumb ; but now,
While I thus gaze upon thy living face,
I feel the love that kindles through its beauty
Can never wholly perish : we shall meet Again, Clemanthe !

Ion.

T. N. TALFOURD.

THE SEXES.

WOMAN.

First, then, a woman will, or won't, depend on 't ;
If she will do 't, she will ; and there 's an end on 't.
But if she won't, since safe and sound your trust is,
Fear is affront, and jealousy injustice.

Epilogue to Zara.

A. HILL.

Women, like princes, find few real friends.

Advice to a Lady.

LORD LYTTELTON.

What mighty ills have not been done by woman ?
Who was 't betrayed the Capitol ? A woman !
Who lost Mark Antony the world ? A woman !
Who was the cause of a long ten years' war,
And laid at last old Troy in ashes ? Woman !
Destructive, damnable, deceitful woman !

The Orphan, Act iii. Sc. 1.

T. OTWAY.

She and comparisons are odious.

The Comparison.

DR. J. DONNE.

So doth one sound the sleeping spirit wake
To brave the danger, and to bear the harm —
A low and gentle voice — dear woman's chiefest charm.

An excellent thing it is ! and ever lent

To truth and love, and meekness ; they who own

This gift, by the all-gracious Giver sent,

Ever by quiet step and smile are known ;

By kind eyes that have wept, hearts that have sorrowed —

By patience never tired, from their own trials borrowed.

Woman's Voice.

E. ARNOLD.

Woman's gentle brain.

As You Like It, Act iv. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

Not she with traitorous kiss her Saviour stung,
Not she denied him with unholy tongue ;
She, while apostles shrank, could danger brave,
Last at his cross and earliest at his grave.

Woman, her Character and Influence.

E. S. BARRETT.

And yet believe me, good as well as ill,
Woman's at best a contradiction still.

Moral Essays, Epistle II.

POPE.

A native grace

Sat fair-proportioned in her polished limbs,
Veiled in a simple robe their best attire,
Beyond the pomp of dress ; for loveliness
Needs not the foreign aid of ornament,
But is, when unadorned, adorned the most.

The Seasons : Autumn.

J. THOMSON.

The maid who modestly conceals
Her beauties, while she hides, reveals ;
Give but a glimpse, and fancy draws Whate'er the Grecian Venus was.

The Spider and the Bee.

E. MOORE.

Th' adorning thee with so much art
Is but a barb'rous skill ;
'T is like the poisoning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill.

The Waiting-Maid.

A. COWLEY.

For where is any author in the world
Teaches such beauty as a woman's eye ?

Love's Labor's Lost, Act iv. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

Neither her outside formed so fair, nor aught

So much delights me, as those graceful acts,
Those thousand decencies that daily flow
From all her words and actions, mixed with love
And sweet compliance, which declare unfeigned
Union of mind, or in us both one soul ;
Harmony to behold in wedded pair
More grateful than harmonious sound to the ear.

Paradise Lost, Book viii.

MILTON.

Accuse not Nature, she hath done her part ;
Do thou but thine.

Paradise Lost, Book viii.

MILTON.

MAN — WOMAN.

If the heart of a man is depressed with cares,
The mist is dispelled when a woman appears.

The Beggar's Opera, Act ii. Sc. 1.

J. GAY.

Without the smile from partial beauty won,
O, what were man ? — a world without a sun.

Pleasures of Hope, Part II.

T. CAMPBELL.

She's beautiful, and therefore to be wooed ;
She is a woman, therefore to be won.

King Henry VI., Part I. Act v. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

He was a lover of the good old school,
Who still become more constant as they cool.

Beppo, Cant. xxxiv.

BYRON.

The man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.

Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

I give thee all — I can no more,
Though poor the offering be ;
My heart and lute are all the store
That I can bring to thee.

My Heart and Lute.

T. MOORE.

Maidens, like moths, are ever caught by glare,
And Mammon wins his way where Seraphs might despair.

Childe Harold, Cant. i.

BYRON.

The woman that deliberates is lost.

Cato, Act iv. Sc. 1.

T. ADDISON.

My friends were poor but honest ; so 's my love.
Be not offended, for it hurts not him
That he is loved of me.

All's Well that Ends Well, Act i. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

In her first passion, woman loves her lover :
In all the others, all she loves is love.

Don Juan, Cant. iii.

BYRON.

True as the needle to the pole,
Or as the dial to the sun ;
Constant as gliding waters roll,
Whose swelling tides obey the moon ;
From every other charmer free,
My life and love shall follow thee.

Song.

B. BOOTH.

Was ever woman in this humor wooed ?
Was ever woman in this humor won ?

King Richard III., Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Man's love is of man's life a thing apart ;
'T is woman's whole existence. Man may range
The court, camp, church, the vessel, and the mart,
Sword, gown, gain, glory, offer in exchange
Pride, fame, ambition, to fill up his heart,
And few there are whom these cannot estrange :
Men have all these resources, we but one, —
To love again, and be again undone.

Don Juan, Cant. i.

BYRON.

Thou wouldst be loved ? — then let thy heart
From its present pathway part not !
Being everything which now thou art,
Be nothing which thou art not.
So with the world thy gentle ways,
Thy grace, thy more than beauty,
Shall be an endless theme of praise,
And love — a simple duty.

To F. S. O.

E. A. POE.

All these good parts a perfect woman make ;
Add love to me, they make a perfect wife ;
Without her love, her beauty I should take
As that of pictures dead — that gives it life ;
Till then her beauty, like the sun, doth shine
Alike to all ; — that only makes it mine.

A Wife.

SIR T. OVERBURY.

And oft, when half induced to tread
Such paths as unto sin decoy,
I've felt her fond hand press my head,
And that soft touch hath saved her boy !

The Mother's Hand.

C. SWAIN.

CHARACTER AND ACTION.

VIRTUE.

The world in all doth but two nations bear,
The good, the bad, and these mixed everywhere.
The Loyal Scot.

A. MARVELL.

He that has light within his own clear breast
May sit in the centre and enjoy bright day ;
But he that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts
Benighted walks under the midday sun.

Comus.

MILTON.

What nothing earthly gives or can destroy, —
The soul's calm sunshine, and the heartfelt joy,
Is Virtue's prize.

Essay on Man, Epistle IV.

POPE.

The morning pearls
Dropt in the lily's spotless bosom
Are less chastely cold,
Ere the meridian sun
Has kissed them into heat.

Chastity.

W. CHAMBERLAYNE.

1ST BROTHER. What hidden strength,
Unless the strength of Heaven, if you mean that ?
2D BROTHER. I mean that too, but yet a hidden strength

Which, if Heaven gave it, may be termed her arm ;
'T is chastity, my Brother, chastity :
She that has that is clad in complete steel.

So dear to heaven is saintly chastity,
That, when a soul is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels lacky her,
Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt.

Comus.

MILTON.

Adieu, dear, amiable youth !
Your heart can ne'er be wanting !
May prudence, fortitude, and truth
Erect your brow undaunting !
In ploughman phrase, " God send you speed,"
Still daily to grow wiser ;
And may you better reckon the rede,
Than ever did the adviser !

Epistle to a Young Friend.

R. BURNS.

What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted ?
Thrice is he armed that has his quarrel just ;
And he but naked, though locked up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.

King Henry VI., Part II. Act iii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

True, conscious honor is to feel no sin ;
He's armed without that's innocent within.

Imitations of Horace, Epistle I. Book 1.

POPE.

Be noble ! and the nobleness that lies
In other men, sleeping, but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own.

Sonnet.

J. R. LOWELL.

This above all, — to thine own self be true ;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

And thus he bore without abuse
The grand old name of gentleman,
Defamed by every charlatan,
And soiled with all ignoble use.

In Memoriam, cx.

TENNYSON.

NOBLE LIVING.

If our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 't were all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touched,

But to fine issues ; nor Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor —
Both thanks and use.

Measure for Measure, Act i. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it.

Macbeth, Act iv. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Our acts our angels are, or good or ill,
Our fatal shadows that walk by us still.

An Honest Man's Fortune.

J. FLETCHER.

That light we see is burning in my hall.
How far that little candle throws his beams !
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Merchant of Venice, Act v. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

DUTY.

When I'm not thanked at all, I'm thanked enough.

I've done my duty, and I've done no more.

Tom Thumb the Great, Act i. Sc. 3.

H. FIELDING.

Stern Daughter of the Voice of God !
O Duty !

Through no disturbance of my soul,
Or strong compunction in me wrought,
I supplicate for thy control ;
But in the quietness of thought.

To humbler functions, awful Power !
I call thee : I myself commend
Unto thy guidance from this hour ;
O, let my weakness have an end !
Give unto me, made lowly wise,
The spirit of self-sacrifice ;
The confidence of reason give ;
And in the light of truth thy bondman let me live !

Ode to Duty.

WORDSWORTH.

HONESTY.

You yourself
Are much condemned to have an itching palm.

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats ;
For I am armed so strong in honesty,
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect not.

Julius Caesar, Act iv. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

FALSEHOOD.

Who dares think one thing, and another tell,
My heart detests him as the gates of hell.

Iliad, Book ix. Translation of POPE.

HOMER.

Like one,
Who having, unto truth, by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie.

The Tempest, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

He was a man
Who stole the livery of the court of Heaven
To serve the Devil in.

Course of Time, Book viii.

R. POLLOK.

The Devil can cite Scripture for his purpose.
An evil soul, producing holy witness,
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek,
A goodly apple rotten at the heart.
O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath !

Merchant of Venice, Act i. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

BENEVOLENCE.

That man may last, but never lives,
Who much receives but nothing gives ;
Whom none can love, whom none can thank,
Creation's blot, creation's blank.

When Jesus dwelt.

T. GIBBONS.

Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame.

Epilogue to Satires, Dial. i.

POPE.

Who builds a church to God, and not to fame,
Will never mark the marble with his name :
Go, search it there, where to be born and die,
Of rich and poor makes all the history ;
Enough that virtue filled the space between,
Proved by the ends of being to have been.

Moral Essays, Epistle III.

POPE.

B.* O say, what sums that generous hand supply ?

What mines to swell that boundless charity ?

P.† Of debts and taxes, wife and children clear,
This man possessed — five hundred pounds a year.
Blush, grandeur, blush ; proud courts, withdraw your blaze !

Ye little stars, hide your diminished rays !

Moral Essays, Epistle III.

POPE.

* Lord Bathurst.

† Pope.

MERCY.

Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge.

Titus Andronicus, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

The quality of mercy is not strained, —
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath : it is twice blessed, —
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes :
'T is mightiest in the mightiest ; it becomes
The thronèd monarch better than his crown ;
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings :
But mercy is above this sceptred sway, —
It is enthronèd in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God himself ;
And earthly power doth then show likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice.

Merchant of Venice, Act iv. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

FOLLY AND WISDOM.

Wisdom is oftentimes nearer when we stoop
Than when we soar.

The Excursion, Book iii.

WORDSWORTH.

To know
That which before us lies in daily life
Is the prime wisdom.

Paradise Lost, Book viii.

MILTON.

Good sense, which only is the gift of Heaven,
And though no science, fairly worth the seven.

Moral Essays, Epistle IV.

POPE.

The weak have remedies, the wise have joys,
Superior wisdom is superior bliss.

Night Thoughts, Night viii.

DR. E. YOUNG.

Be wisely worldly, be not worldly wise.

Emblems, Book ii.

F. QUARLES.

With wisdom fraught,
Not such as books, but such as practice taught.

On the King's Return.

E. WALLER.

Who are a little wise the least fools be.

The Triple Fool.

DR. J. DONNE.

For fools rush in where angels fear to tread.

Essay on Criticism, Part III.

POPE.

Those that I rev'rence, those I fear — the wise ;
At fools I laugh, not fear them.

Cymbeline, Act iv. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

In idle wishes fools supinely stay ;
Be there a will, and wisdom finds a way.

The Birth of Flattery.

G. CRABBE.

Some positive, persisting fools we know,
Who, if once wrong, will need be always so ;
But you with pleasure own your errors past,
And make each day a critique on the last.

POPE.

Yet proud of parts, with prudence some dispense,
And play the fool because they're men of sense.

Epistle to Pope.

DR. E. YOUNG.

This fellow's wise enough to play the fool ;
And to do that well craves a kind of wit.

Twelfth Night, Act iii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

GOOD NATURE AND RECKLESSNESS.

Poor Jack, farewell.

I could have better spared a better man.

King Henry IV., Part I. Act v. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

But evil is wrought by want of thought
As well as want of heart.

The Lady's Dream.

T. HOOD.

FORGIVENESS AND RESENTMENT.

The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on.
And doves will peck in safeguard at their brood.

King Henry VI., Part III. Act ii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Forgiveness to the injured does belong ;
But they ne'er pardon who have done the wrong.

Conquest of Granada, Part II. Act i. Sc. 2.

DRYDEN.

Good nature and good sense must ever join ;
To err is human, to forgive divine.

Essay on Criticism, Part II.

POPE.

AMBITION.

I have no spur

To prick the sides of my intent ; but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'er-leaps itself,
And falls on the other.

Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 7.

SHAKESPEARE.

But wild ambition loves to slide, not stand,
And Fortune's ice prefers to Virtue's land.

Absalom and Achitophel, Part I.

DRYDEN.

And he that stands upon a slippery place
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up.

King John, Act iii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

No ; let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp ;
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning.

Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber-upward turns his face ;
But when he once attains the utmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend.

Julius Cæsar, Act ii. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

To reign is worth ambition, though in hell :
Better to reign in hell, than serve in heaven.

Paradise Lost, Book i. MILTON.

THE RULING PASSION.

The ruling passion, be it what it will,
The ruling passion conquers reason still.

Hear then the truth : 'Tis Heav'n each passion sends,

And different men directs to different ends.
Extremes in nature equal good produce ;
Extremes in man concur to general use.

Moral Essays, Epistle III. POPE.

And hence one master-passion in the breast,
Like Aaron's serpent, swallows up the rest.

Essay on Man, Epistle II. POPE.

SELF-CONCEIT.

To observations which ourselves we make,
We grow more partial for the observer's sake.

Moral Essays, Epistle I. POPE.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own.

Essay on Criticism, Part I. POPE.

PRIDE AND VANITY.

'Tis pride, rank pride, and haughtiness of soul ;
I think the Romans call it stoicism.

Cato, Act i. Sc. 4. J. ADDISON.

In pride, in reasoning pride, our error lies ;
All quit their sphere and rush into the skies.

Essay on Man, Epistle I. POPE.

Pride, like an eagle, builds among the stars.

Night Thoughts, Night v. DR. E. YOUNG.

Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never failing vice of fools.

Essay on Criticism, Part II. POPE.

As eddies draw things frivolous and light,
How is man's heart by vanity drawn in !

Night Thoughts, Night viii. DR. E. YOUNG.

The fashion wears out more apparel than the man.

Much Ado about Nothing, Act iii. Sc. 3. SHAKESPEARE.

Nothing exceeds in ridicule, no doubt,
A fool in fashion, but a fool that's out ;
His passion for absurdity's so strong
He cannot bear a rival in the wrong.

Though wrong the mode, comply : more sense is shown

In wearing others' follies than our own.

Night Thoughts. DR. E. YOUNG.

Sir Plume (of amber snuff-box justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane),
With earnest eyes, and round unthinking face,
He first the snuff-box opened, then the case.

Rape of the Lock. POPE.

PHASES OF FEELING.

PAIN AND WEARINESS.

So when a raging fever burns,
We shift from side to side by turns,
And 't is a poor relief we gain
To change the place, but keep the pain.

Hymns and Spiritual Songs, Book ii. Hymn 146. WATTS.

Till this heroic lesson thou hast learned :
To frown at pleasure, and to smile in pain.

Night Thoughts, Night viii. DR. E. YOUNG.

There's nothing in this world can make me joy :
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man.

King John, Act iii. Sc. 4. SHAKESPEARE.

My heart is drowned with grief,
My body round engirt with misery ;
For what's more miserable than discontent ?

King Henry VI., Part II. Act iii. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

Grief hath changed me,
And careful hours, with Time's deformed hand,
Hath written strange defeatures in my face.

Comedy of Errors, Act v. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

REMORSE AND RETRIBUTION.

The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven.

Paradise Lost, Book i. MILTON.

Amid the roses fierce Repentance rears
Her snaky crest.

The Seasons : Spring. J. THOMSON.

The thorns which I have reaped are of the tree
I planted — they have torn me, and I bleed ;
I should have known what fruit would spring
from such a seed.

Childe Harold, Cant. iv.

BYRON.

We but teach

Bloody instructions, which, being taught, return
To plague the inventor. This even-handed justice

Commends the ingredients of our poisoned chalice
To our own lips.

Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 7.

SHAKESPEARE.

So the struck eagle, stretched upon the plain,
No more through rolling clouds to soar again,
Viewed his own feather on the fatal dart,
And winged the shaft that quivered in his heart.

English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

BYRON.

DESPAIR.

Talk not of comfort ; 't is for lighter ills :
I will indulge my sorrows, and give way
To all the pangs and fury of despair.

Cato.

J. ADDISON.

And, in that deep and utter agony,
Though then than ever most unfit to die,
I fell upon my knees and prayed for death.

Bertram.

C. MATURIN.

All hope is lost

Of my reception into grace ; what worse,
For where no hope is left, is left no fear.

Paradise Regained.

MILTON.

No one is so accursed by fate,
No one so utterly desolate,
But some heart, though unknown,
Responds unto his own.

Endymion.

LONGFELLOW.

It is to hope, though hope were lost.

Come here, fond youth.

A. L. BARBAULD.

FEAR AND DOUBT.

Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt.

Measure for Measure, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

LADY MACBETH. Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i' the adage.

MACBETH. Prythee, peace :
I dare do all that may become a man ;
Who dares do more, is none.

Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 7.

SHAKESPEARE.

But now, I am cabined, cribbed, confined, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears.

Macbeth, Act iii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

Attempt the end, and never stand to doubt ;
Nothing's so hard but search will find it out.

Seek and Find.

R. HERRICK.

Tender-handed stroke a nettle,
And it stings you for your pains ;
Grasp it like a man of mettle,
And it soft as silk remains.

Verses written on a Window in Scotland.

A. HILL.

Fortune her gifts may variously dispose,
And these be happy called, unhappy those ;
But Heaven's just balance equal will appear,
When those are placed in hope, and these in fear.
Not present good or ill the joy or curse,
But future views of better or of worse.

Essay on Man, Epistle III.

POPE.

Often do the spirits
Of great events stride on before the events,
And in to-day already walks to-morrow.

The Death of Wallenstein.

S. T. COLERIDGE.

HOPE.

Hope ! of all ills that men endure,
The only cheap and universal cure !

Hope ! thou first-fruits of happiness !
Thou gentle dawning of a bright success !

Brother of Faith ! 'twixt whom and thee
The joys of Heaven and Earth divided be !

For Hope.

A. COWLEY.

Hope ! thou nurse of young desire.

Love in a Village, Act i. Sc. 1.

I. BICKERSTAFF.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings ;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.

King Richard III., Act v. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

The wretch, condemned with life to part,
Still, still on hope relies,
And every pang that rends the heart
Bids expectation rise.

Hope, like the glimm'ring taper's light,
Adorns and cheers the way ;
And still, as darker grows the night,
Emits a brighter ray.

The Captivity.

GOLDSMITH

Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought.

King Henry IV., Part II, Act iv. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

Cease, every joy, to glimmer on my mind,
But leave — oh ! leave the light of Hope behind !

Pleasures of Hope, Part II.

T. CAMPBELL.

Besides what hope the never-ending flight
Of future days may bring.

Paradise Lost, Book ii.

MILTON.

Hope humbly then ; with trembling pinions
soar ;

Wait the great teacher Death, and God adore.
What future bliss he gives not thee to know,
But gives that hope to be thy blessing now.
Hope springs eternal in the human breast :
Man never is, but always to be, blest.
The soul, uneasy and confined from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come.

Essay on Man, Epistle I.

POPE.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear ;
Heaven were not heaven, if we knew what it were.

Against Fruition.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

We're charmed with distant views of happiness,
But near approaches make the prospect less.

Against Enjoyment.

T. VALDEN.

Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises ; and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits.

All's Well that Ends Well, Act ii. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE:

As distant prospects please us, but when near
We find but desert rocks and fleeting air.

The Dispensatory, Cant. iii.

S. GARTH.

Why wish for more ?
Wishing, of all employments, is the worst ;
Philosophy's reverse and health's decay.

Night Thoughts, Night iv.

DR. E. YOUNG.

MEMORY.

While memory holds a seat
In this distracted globe. Remember thee ?
Yea, from the table of my memory
I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation copied there ;
And thy commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

The leaves of memory seem to make
A mournful rustling in the dark.

The Fire of Drift-wood.

LONGFELLOW.

Remembrance and reflection how allied !
What thin partitions sense from thought divide !

Essay on Man, Epistle I.

POPE.

And, when the stream
Which overflowed the soul was passed away,
A consciousness remained that it had left,
Deposited upon the silent shore
Of memory, images and precious thoughts
That shall not die, and cannot be destroyed.

The Excursion, Book vii.

WORDSWORTH.

Joys too exquisite to last,
—And yet more exquisite when past.

The Little Cloud.

J. MONTGOMERY.

How blessings brighten as they take their flight !

Night Thoughts, Night ii.

DR. E. YOUNG.

The face recalls some face, as 't were with pain,
You once have seen, but ne'er will see again.

Beppo, Cant. xiii.

BYRON.

Absent or dead, still let a friend be dear,
(A sigh the absent claims, the dead a tear.)

Epistle to Robert, Earl of Oxford, and Earl of Mortimer. POPE.

For it so falls out,
That what we have we prize not to the worth,
Whiles we enjoy it, but being lacked and lost,
Why, then we rack the value ; then we find
The virtue, that possession would not show us
Whiles it was ours. So will it fare with Claudio:
When he shall hear she died upon his words,
Th' idea of her life shall sweetly creep
Into his study of imagination,
And every lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparelled in more precious habit,
More moving-delicate, and full of life,
Into the eye and prospect of his soul,
Than when she lived indeed.

Much Ado about Nothing, Act iv. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

PHASES OF FORTUNE.

FORTUNE.

Fortune, men say, doth give too much to many,
But yet she never gave enough to any.

Epigrams.

SIR J. HARRINGTON.

Are there not, dear Michal,
Two points in the adventure of the diver,
One — when, a beggar, he prepares to plunge ?
One — when, a prince, he rises with his pearl ?
Festus, I plunge.

Paracelsus.

R. BROWNING.

When Fortune means to men most good,
She looks upon them with a threatening eye.

King John, Act iii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

Yet true it is, as cow chews cud,
And trees, at spring, do yield forth bud,
Except wind stands, as never it stood,
It is an ill wind turns none to good.

The Winds.

T. TUSSER.

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out.

King Henry V., Act iv. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

For 't is a truth well known to most,
That whatsoever thing is lost,
We seek it, ere it come to light,
In every cranny but the right.

The Retired Cat.

COWPER.

I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die.

King Richard III., Act v. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

ELEMENTS OF SUCCESS.

MACBETH. If we should fail, —

LADY MACBETH.

We fail !

But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail.

Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 7.

SHAKESPEARE.

In the lexicon of youth, which fate reserves
For a bright manhood, there is no such word
As — fail.

Richelieu, Act ii. Sc. 2.

BULWER-LYTTON.

The star of the unconquered will.

The Light of Stars.

LONGFELLOW.

'T is not in mortals to command success,
But we'll do more, Sempronius ; we'll deserve it.

Cato, Act i. Sc. 2.

J. ADDISON.

To maken vertue of necessite.

The Knightes Tale.

CHAUCER.

And many strokes, though with a little axe,
Hew down and fell the hardest-timbered oak.

King Henry VI., Part III., Act ii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.

King Lear, Act i. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

A wild dedication of yourselves
To unpathed waters, undreamed shores.

Winter's Tale, Act iv. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune ;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat ;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

Julius Caesar, Act iv. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advisèd watch,
To find the other forth ; and by adventuring both,
I oft found both.

Merchant of Venice, Act 1. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Who breaketh his credit, or cracketh it twice,
Trust such, with a sierty, if ye be wise :
Or if he be angry, for asking thy due,
Once even, to him afterward, lend not anew.

Good Husbandry Lessons.

T. TUSSER.

He is well paid that is well satisfied.

Merchant of Venice, Act iv. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

A PROPHECY OF ENTERPRISE.

[1781.]

Soon shall thy arm, unconquered steam ! afar
Drag the slow barge, or drive the rapid car ;
Or on wide waving wings expanded bear
The flying-chariot through the field of air.

The Botanic Garden, Part I. Ch. 1.

E. DARWIN.

POVERTY.

Take physic, pomp ;

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel.

King Lear, Act iii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

Through tattered clothes small vices do appear ;
Robes and furred gowns hide all.

King Lear, Act iv. Sc. 6.

SHAKESPEARE.

Yon friendless man, at whose dejected eye
Th' unfeeling proud one looks, and passes by,
Condemned on penury's barren path to roam,
Scorned by the world, and left without a home.

Pleasures of Hope.

T. CAMPBELL.

Rest here, distress by poverty no more.

Epitaph on C. Philips.

DR. S. JOHNSON.

RICHES.

Gold ! gold ! gold ! gold !

Bright and yellow, hard and cold,
Molten, graven, hammered and rolled ;
Heavy to get, and light to hold ;
Hoarded, bartered, bought, and sold,
Stolen, borrowed, squandered, doled :
Spurned by the young, but lugged by the old
To the very verge of the churchyard mould ;
Price of many a crime untold :

Gold ! gold ! gold ! gold !

Good or bad a thousand-fold !

How widely its agencies vary, —
To save, to ruin, to curse, to bless, —
As even its minted coins express,
Now stamped with the image of good Queen Bess,
And now of a Bloody Mary.

Miss Kilmansegg.

T. HOOD.

Mammon, the least erected spirit that fell
From heaven ; for even in heaven his looks and thoughts

Were always downward bent, admiring more
The riches of heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than aught divine or holy else enjoyed
In vision beatific.

Paradise Lost, Book i.

MILTON.

Religious, punctual, frugal, and so forth ;
His word would pass for more than he was worth.
One solid dish his week-day meal affords,
An added pudding solemnized the Lord's.
Constant at church and change, his gains were sure,

His giving rare, save farthings to the poor.

Moral Essays, Epistle III.

POPE.

The devil was piqued such saintship to behold,
And longed to tempt him, like good Job of old ;
For Satan now is wiser than of yore,
And tempts by making rich, not making poor.

Moral Essays, Epistle III.

POPE.

Here Wisdom calls, " Seek virtue first, be bold ;
As gold to silver, virtue is to gold."
There London's voice, " Get money, money still,
And then let Virtue follow if she will."

Imitations of Horace, Epistle I. Book i.

POPE.

Be but great,

With praise or infamy — leave that to fate ;
Get place and wealth ; if possible, with grace ;
If not, by any means get wealth and place.

Imitations of Horace, Epistle I. Book i.

POPE.

For what is worth in anything,
But so much money as 't will bring ?

Hudibras, Part II.

DR. S. BUTLER.

You have too much respect upon the world :
They lose it, that do buy it with much care.

Merchant of Venice, Act i. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

INTELLECTUAL ACTIVITY.

CONVERSATION.

Words are like leaves ; and where they most abound,

Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.

Essay on Criticism, Part II.

POPE.

And I oft have heard defended,
Little said is soonest mended.

The Shepherd's Hunting.

G. WITHER.

Therefore, since brevity is the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flour-ishes,

I will be brief.

Hamlet, Act ii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

KING RICHARD. Be eloquent in my behalf to her.

QUEEN ELIZABETH. An honest tale speeds best, being plainly told.

King Richard III., Act iv. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

And, when you stick on conversation's butts,
Don't strew your pathway with those dreadful

URS.

Urania.

O. W. HOLMES.

In his brain —

Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit
After a voyage — he bath strange places crammed
With observation, the which he vents
In mangled forms.

As You Like It, Act ii. Sc. 7.

SHAKESPEARE.

They never taste who always drink ;
They always talk who never think.

Upon a Passage in the Scaligerana.

M. PRIOR.

O dear discretion ! how his words are suited.

Merchant of Venice, Act iii. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

His wit invites you by his looks to come,
But, when you knock, it never is at home.

Conversation.

COWPER.

Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear.

Venus and Adonis.

SHAKESPEARE.

And Thought leapt out to wed with Thought
Ere Thought could wed itself with Speech.

In Memoriam, xxiii.

TENNYSON.

And gentle Dulness ever loves a joke.

The Dunciad, Book ii.

POPE.

O, many a shaft, at random sent,
Finds mark the archer little meant !
And many a word, at random spoken,
May soothe, or wound, a heart that 's broken !

Lord of the Isles, Cant. v.

SCOTT.

ARGUMENT.

And why, sir, must they so ?

The why is plain as way to parish church.

As You Like It, Act ii. Sc. 7.

SHAKESPEARE.

Who shall decide, when doctors disagree,
And soundest casuists doubt, like you and me ?

Moral Essays, Epistle III.

POPE.

Much may be said on both sides.

The Covent Garden Tragedy, Sc. 8.

H. FIELDING.

He that complics against his will
Is of his own opinion still.

Hudibras, Part III.

DR. S. BUTLER.

Quoth she, I've heard old cunning stages
Say, fools for arguments use wagers.

Hudibras, Part II.

DR. S. BUTLER.

A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew !
Now, infidel, I have thee on the hip.

A Daniel, still say I ; a second Daniel !—
I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word.
Merchant of Venice, Act iv. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

To leave this keen encounter of our wits.
King Richard III., Act i. Sc. 2. SHAKESPEARE.

ORATORY.

For rhetoric, he could not open
His mouth, but out there flew a trope.

For all a rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools.
Hudibras, Part I. Cant. i. DR. S. BUTLER.

Where nature's end of language is declined,
And men talk only to conceal the mind.
Love of Fame, Satire ii. DR. E. YOUNG.

To syllable-dissectors they appeal.
Allow them accent-cadence, — fools may feel ;
But, spite of all the criticising elves,
Those who would make us feel — must feel themselves.

The Rosciad. C. CHURCHILL.

Thence to the famous orators repair,
Those ancient, whose resistless eloquence
Wielded at will that fierce democratic,
Shook the arsenal, and fulminated over Greece,
To Macedon, and Artaxerxes' throne.
Paradise Regained, Book iv. MILTON.

Words that weep and tears that speak.
The Prophet. A. COWLEY.

THE STAGE.

I have heard
That guilty creatures, sitting at a play,
Have by the very cunning of the scene
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaimed their malefactions.

The play's the thing
Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the King.
Hamlet, Act ii. Sc. 2. SHAKESPEARE.

Lo, where the stage, the poor, degraded stage,
Holds its warped mirror to a gaping age.
Curiosity. C. SPRAGUE.

Nay, an thou'lt mouth,
I'll rant as well as thou.
Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

There still remains, to mortify a wit,
The many-headed monster of the pit.
Imitations of Horace, Epistle I. Book ii. POPE.

New forms arise, and different views engage,
Superfluous lags the vet'ran on the stage,
Till pitying Nature signs the last release,
And bids afflicted worth retire to peace.
Vanity of Human Wishes. DR. S. JOHNSON.

A veteran see ! whose last act on the stage
Entreats your smiles for sickness and for age ;
Their cause I plead, — plead it in heart and
mind ;

A fellow-feeling makes one wondrous kind.
Prologue on Quitting the Stage in 1776. D. GARRICK.

I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano ;
A stage, where every man must play a part,
And mine a sad one.
Merchant of Venice, Act i. Sc. 1 SHAKESPEARE.

LEARNING.

'Tis education forms the common mind ;
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined.
Moral Essays, Epistle I. POPE.

With too much quickness ever to be taught ;
With too much thinking to have common
thought.

Moral Essays, Epistle II. POPE.

Glad that you thus continue your resolve
To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy ;
Only, good master, while we do admire
This virtue and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stoics, nor no stocks, I pray.

No profit grows where is no pleasure ta'en ;
In brief, sir, study what you most affect.
Taming of the Shrew, Act i. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

Some, for renown, on scraps of learning dote,
And think they grow immortal as they quote.
Love of Fame, Satire i. DR. E. YOUNG.

With just enough of learning to misquote.
English Bards and Scotch Reviewers. BYRON.

Whence is thy learning ? Hath thy toil
O'er books consumed the midnight oil ?
Fables: The Shepherd and the Philosopher. J. GAY.

Small have continual plodders ever won,
Save base authority from others' books.
These earthly godfathers of heaven's lights,
That give a name to every fixed star,
Have no more profit of their shining nights
Than those that walk, and wot not what they are.

Love's Labor Lost, Act i. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

Love seldom haunts the breast where learning
lies,

And Venus sets ere Mercury can rise.

The Wife of Bath: Her Prologue.

POPE.

A little learning is a dangerous thing ;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring :
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again.

Essay on Criticism, Part II.

POPE.

AUTHORS.

Shut, shut the door, good John ! fatigued I said,
Tie up the knocker, say I 'm sick, I 'm dead.
The Dog-star rages ! nay, 't is past a doubt,
All Bedlam, or Parnassus, is let out :
Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land.

Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot: Prologue to the Satires.

POPE.

Why did I write ? what sin to me unknown
Dipped me in ink, — my parents', or my own ?

Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot: Prologue to the Satires.

POPE.

Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grow romantic, I must paint it.

Moral Essays, Epistle II.

POPE.

Beneath the rule of men entirely great
The pen is mightier than the sword.

Richelieu, Act ii. Sc. 2.

E. BULWER-LYTTON.

And so I penned

It down, until at last it came to be,
For length and breadth, the bigness which you see.

Pilgrim's Progress: Apology for his Book.

J. BUNYAN.

BOOKS.

If there 's a hole in a' your coats,

I rede ye tent it ;

A chiel 's amang ye takin' notes,

And, faith, he'll prent it.

On Captain Gross's Peregrinations through Scotland.

BURNS.

'T is pleasant, sure, to see one's name in print ;
A book 's a book, although there 's nothing in 't.

English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

BYRON.

Lest men suspect your tale untrue,
Keep probability in view.
The traveller leaping o'er those bounds,
The credit of his book confounds.

The Painter who pleased Nobody and Everybody.

J. GAY.

Immodest words admit of no defence,
For want of decency is want of sense.

But foul descriptions are offensive still,
Either for being like or being ill.

Essay on Translated Verse.

EARL OF ROSCOMMON.

But words are things, and a small drop of ink,
Falling, like dew, upon a thought, produces
That which makes thousands, perhaps millions,
think.

Don Juan, Cant. iiii.

BYRON.

Me, poor man ! — My library
Was dukedom large enough.

Tempest, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

His study ! with what authors is it stored ?
In books, not authors, curious is my lord ;
To all their dated backs he turns you round ;
These Aldus printed, those Du Sueil has bound !
Lo, some are vellum, and the rest as good
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood.
For Locke or Milton 't is in vain to look,
These shelves admit not any modern book.

Moral Essays, Epistle IV.

POPE.

'T is strange — but true ; for truth is always strange ;
Stranger than fiction.

Don Juan, Cant. xiv.

BYRON.

Oh ! rather give me commentators plain,
Who with no deep researches vex the brain ;
Who from the dark and doubtful love to run,
And hold their glimmering tapers to the sun.

The Parish Register, Part I., Introduction.

G. CRABBE.

The readers and the hearers like my books,
But yet some writers cannot them digest ;
But what care I ? for when I make a feast
I would my guests should praise it, not the cooks.

Epigrams.

SIR J. HARRINGTON.

Dreams, books, are each a world ; and books, we know,
Are a substantial world, both pure and good ;
Round these, with tendrils strong as flesh and blood,

Our pastime and our happiness will grow.

Personal Talk.

WORDSWORTH.

And choose an author as you choose a friend.

Essay on Translated Verse.

EARL OF ROSCOMMON.

Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
When a new planet swims into his ken ;
Or like stout Cortez when with eagle eyes
He stared at the Pacific — and all his men
Looked at each other with a wild surmise —
Silent, upon a peak in Darien.

On first looking into Chapman's Homer.

KEATS.

My days among the Dead are passed ;
 Around me I behold,
 Where'er these casual eyes are cast,
 The mighty minds of old ;
 My never-failing friends are they,
 With whom I converse day by day.

Occasional Pieces, xviii.

R. SOUTHEY.

There studious let me sit,
 And hold high converse with the mighty dead ;
 Sages of ancient time, as gods revered,
 As gods beneficent, who blest mankind
 With arts, with arms, and humanized a world.

The Seasons : Winter.

THOMSON.

CRITICISM AND SATIRE.

And finds, with keen, discriminating sight,
 Black 's not so black ; — nor white so very white.

New Morality.

G. CANNING.

In words, as fashions, the same rule will hold,
 Alike fantastic if too new or old :
 Be not the first by whom the new are tried,
 Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.

Essay on Criticism, Part II.

POPE.

Poets lose half the praise they should have got,
 Could it be known what they discreetly blot.

Upon Roscommon's Translation of Horace's De Arte Poetica.

E. WALLER.

Even copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
 The last and greatest art, the art to blot.

Imitations of Horace, Epistle I, Book ii.

POPE.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance,
 As those move easiest who have learned to dance.
 'T is not enough no harshness gives offence ;
 The sound must seem an echo to the sense.
 Soft is the strain when zephyr gently blows,
 And the smooth stream in smoother numbers flows ;

But when loud surges lash the sounding shore,
 The hoarse rough verse should like the torrent roar.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,

The line too labors, and the words move slow ;
 Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
 Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.

Essay on Criticism, Part II.

POPE.

Then, at the last and only couplet fraught
 With some unmeaning thing they call a thought,
 A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
 That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length
 along.

Essay on Criticism, Part II.

POPE.

As soon
 Seek roses in December, — ice in June ;
 Hope constancy in wind, or corn in chaff,
 Believe a woman, or an epitaph,
 Or any other thing that 's false, before
 You trust in critics.

English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

BYRON.

Of all the griefs that harass the distressed,
 Sure the most bitter is a scornful jest ;
 Fate never wounds more deep the generous heart
 Than when a blockhead's insult points the dart.

London.

DR. S. JOHNSON.

Prepare for rhyme — I 'll publish, right or wrong :
 Fools are my theme, let satire be my song.

English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

BYRON.

Satire 's my weapon, but I 'm too discreet
 To run amuck, and tilt at all I meet.

Imitation of Horace, Satire I, Book ii.

DRYDEN.

Satire should, like a polished razor keen,
 Wound with a touch that 's scarcely felt or seen.

To the Imitator of the first Satire of Horace, Book ii.

LADY M. W. MONTAGU.

POETS AND POETRY.

Of all those arts in which the wise excel,
 Nature's chief masterpiece is writing well ;
 No writing lifts exalted man so high
 As sacred and soul-moving poesy.

Essay on Poetry.

DUKE OF BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.

For his chaste Muse employed her heaven-taught lyre

None but the noblest passions to inspire,
 Not one immoral, one corrupted thought,
 One line which, dying, he could wish to blot.

Prologue to Thomson's Coriolanus.

LORD LYTTELTON.

Wisdom married to immortal verse.

The Excursion, Book vii.

WORDSWORTH.

There is a pleasure in poetic pains
 Which only poets know.

The Timepiece : The Task, Book ii.

COWPER.

Most wretched men
 Are cradled into poetry by wrong ;
 They learn in suffering what they teach in song.

Julian and Maddalo.

SHELLEY.

Lovers and madmen have such seething brains,
 Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
 More than cool reason ever comprehends.
 The lunatic, the lover, and the poet
 Are of imagination all compact.

Midsummer Night's Dream, Act v. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

I do but sing because I must,
And pipe but as the linnets sing.

In Memoriam, xxi.

TENNYSON.

While pensive poets painful vigils keep,
Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep.

The Dunciad, Book I.

POPE.

For wheresoe'er I turn my ravished eyes,
Gay gilded scenes and shining prospects rise,
Poetic fields encompass me around,
And still I seem to tread on classic ground.

A Letter from Italy.

ADDISON.

Eye Nature's walks, shoot folly as it flies,
And catch the manners living as they rise ;
Laugh where we must, be candid where we can,
But vindicate the ways of God to man.

Essay on Man, Epistle I.

POPE.

Poets, like painters, thus unskilled to trace
The naked nature and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover every part,
And hide with ornaments their want of art.
True wit is nature to advantage dressed,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well expressed.

Essay on Criticism, Part II.

POPE.

Apt alliteration's artful aid.

The Prophecy of Famine.

C. CHURCHILL.

But those that write in rhyme still make
The one verse for the other's sake ;
For one for sense, and one for rhyme,
I think 's sufficient at one time.

Hudibras, Part II.

DR. S. BUTLER.

For rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which, like ships, they steer their courses.

Hudibras, Part I.

DR. S. BUTLER.

I had rather be a kitten, and cry, mew,
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers ;
I had rather hear a brazen can'stick turned,
Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree ;
And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing poetry :
'T is like the forced gait of a shuffling nag.

King Henry IV., Part I. Act iii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Go boldly forth, my simple lay,
Whose accents flow with artless ease,
Like orient pearls at random strung.

A Persian Song of Hafiz.

SIR W. JONES.

One simile that solitary shines
In the dry desert of a thousand lines.

Imitations of Horace, Epistle I. Book II.

POPE.

That on the stretched forefinger of all time
Sparkle forever.

The Princess, Cant. ii.

TENNYSON.

Choice word and measured phrase above the reach
Of ordinary men.

Resolution and Independence.

WORDSWORTH.

A poem round and perfect as a star.

A Life Drama.

A. SMITH.

My eyes make pictures, when they are shut.

A Day-Dream.

S. T. COLERIDGE.

Then feed on thoughts, that voluntary move
Harmonious numbers ; as the wakeful bird
Sings darkling and in shadiest covert hid
Tuncs her nocturnal note : thus with the year
Seasons return ; but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of even or morn,
Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose,
Or flocks, or herds, or human face divine ;
But cloud instead, and ever-during dark
Surrounds me, from the cheerful ways of men
Cut off, and for the book of knowledge fair
Presented with a universal blank
Of nature's works to me expunged and rased,
And wisdom at one entrance quite shut out.
So much the rather thou celestial Light
Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers Irradiate.

Paradise Lost, Book iii.

MILTON.

Still govern thou my song,
Urania, and fit audience find, though few.

Paradise Lost, Book vii.

MILTON.

Thanks untraced to lips unknown
Shall greet me like the odors blown
From unseen meadows newly mown,
Or lilies floating in some pond,
Wood-fringed, the wayside gaze beyond ;
The traveller owns the grateful sense
Of sweetness near, he knows not whence,
And, pausing, takes with forehead bare
The benediction of the air.

Snow-Bound.

J. G. WHITTIER.

THE MIND.

How small, of all that human hearts endure,
That part which laws or kings can cause or cure !
Still to ourselves in every place consigned,
Our own felicity we make or find.
With secret course, which no loud storms annoy,
Glides the smooth current of domestic joy.

Lines added to Goldsmith's Traveller.

DR. S. JOHNSON.

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh.

Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Measure your mind's height by the shade it casts!

Paracelsus.

R. BROWNING.

He that of such a height hath built his mind,
And reared the dwelling of his thoughts so strong,
As neither fear nor hope can shake the frame
Of his resolvèd powers; nor all the wind
Of vanity or malice pierce to wrong
His settled peace, or to disturb the same;
What a fair seat hath he, from whence he may
The boundless wastes and wilds of man survey?

Unless above himself he can
Erect himself, how poor a thing is man!

To the Countess of Cumberland.

S. DANIEL.

Were I so tall to reach the pole,
Or grasp the ocean with my span,
I must be measured by my soul:
The mind's the standard of the man.

Horæ Lyricæ, Book ii.: False Greatness.

DR. I. WATTS.

PHILOSOPHY.

HORATIO. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

HAMLET. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome.

There are more things in heaven and earth,
Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

Philosophy will clip an angel's wings.

Lamia, Part II.

J. KEATS.

Sure, He that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason,
To fust in us unused.

Hamlet, Act iv. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

Thinking is but an idle waste of thought,
And naught is everything and everything is naught.

Rejected Addresses: Cui Bono?

H. and J. SMITH.

When Bishop Berkeley said "there was no matter,"

And proved it — 't was no matter what he said.

Don Juan, Cant. xi.

BYRON.

His cogitative faculties immersed
In cogibundity of cogitation.

Chronon, Act I. Sc. 1.

H. CAREY.

Hot philosophers

Stood banding factions, all so strongly propt;
I staggered, knew not which was firmer part,
But thought, quoted, read, observed, and pried,
Stufft noting-books: and still my spaniel slept.
At length he waked, and yawned; and by yon sky
For aught I know, he knew as much as I.

A Scholar and his Dog.

J. MARSTON.

He knew what's what, and that's as high
As metaphysic wit can fly.

Hudibras, Part I.

DR. S. BUTLER.

There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so.

Hamlet, Act ii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Not so the son; he marked this oversight,
And then mistook reverse of wrong for right;
(For What to shun, will no great knowledge need,
But What to follow, is a task indeed!)

Moral Essays, Epistle III.

POPE.

The intellectual power, through words and things,
Went sounding on, a dim and perilous way!

The Excursion, Book iii.

WORDSWORTH.

In discourse more sweet,

(For eloquence the soul, song charms the sense,)
Others apart sat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevate, and reasoned high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate,
Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute;
And found no end, in wand'ring mazes lost.
Of good and evil much they argued then,
Of happiness and final misery,
Passion and apathy, and glory and shame;
Vain wisdom all, and false philosophy.

Paradise Lost, Book ii.

MILTON.

Slave to no sect, who takes no private road,
But looks through nature up to nature's God.

And knows where faith, law, morals, all began,
All end, in love of God and love of man.

Essay on Man, Epistle IV.

POPE.

MUSIC.

If music be the food of love, play on;
Give me excess of it, that, surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die.
That strain again — it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear like the sweet south,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing, and giving odour.

Twelfth Night, Act I. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

There is a charm, a power, that sways the breast ;
Bids every passion revel or be still ;
Inspires with rage, or all our cares dissolves ;
Can soothe distraction, and almost despair.

Art of Preserving Health.

J. ARMSTRONG.

Music hath charms to soothe a savage breast,
To soften rocks, or bend a knotted oak.
I've read that things inanimate have moved,
And, as with living souls, have been informed
By magic numbers and persuasive sound.

The Mourning Bride, Act i. Sc. 1.

W. CONGREVE.

Where music dwells
Lingering and wandering on, as loath to die,
Like thoughts whose very sweetness yieldeth proof
That they were born for immortality.

Ecclesiastical Sonnets, Part III. xliii.

WORDSWORTH.

SCULPTURE.

As when, O lady mine,
With chiselled touch
The stone unhewn and cold
Becomes a living mould,
The more the marble staves
The more the statue grows.

Sonnet. Tr. of Mrs. HENRY ROSCOE. M. ANGELO.

THE PROFESSIONS.

THE CLERGY AND THE PULPIT.

O for a forty parson power !

Don Juan, Cant. v.

BYRON

Wel oughte a prest ensample for to yive,
By his clenness, how that his sheep shulde lyve.

To draw folk to heven by fairnesse
By good ensample, this was his busynesse.

Canterbury Tales : Prologue.

CHAUCER.

What makes all doctrines plain and clear ?
About two hundred pounds a year.
And that which was proved true before,
Prove false again ? Two hundred more.

Hudibras, Part III.

DR. S. BUTLER.

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Show me the steep and thorny way to Heaven,
Whilst, like a puffed and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own rede.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

He 'stablishes the strong, restores the weak,
Reclaims the wanderer, binds the broken heart.

The Timepiece : The Task, Book ii.

COWPER.

Of right and wrong he taught
Truths as refined as ever Athens heard ;
And (strange to tell !) he practised what he preached.

Art of Preserving Health.

J. ARMSTRONG.

MEDICINE AND DOCTORS.

I do remember an apothecary.

Sharp misery had worn him to the bones :
And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuffed, and other skins
Of ill-shaped fishes ; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes.

Romco and Juliet, Act v. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

With us ther was a Doctour of Phisik,
In al this world ne was ther non him lyk
To speke of phisik and of surgerye.

He knew the cause of every maladye,
Were it of hoot or colde, or moyste or drye,
And wher engendered and of what humour ;
He was a verrey parfight practisour.

For gold in phisik is a cordial,
Therefore he lovedè gold in special.

Canterbury Tales : Prologue.

CHAUCER.

"Is there no hope ?" the sick man said.
The silent doctor shook his head
And took his leave with signs of sorrow,
Despairing of his fee to-morrow.

The Sick Man and the Angel.

J. GAY.

But when ill indeed,
E'en dismissing the doctor don't always succeed.

Lodgings for Single Gentlemen. G. COLMAN, the Younger.

LAWYERS AND THE LAW.

So wise, so grave, of so perplexed a tongue
And loud withal, that could not wag, nor scarce
Lie still, without a fee.

Valpone.

B. JONSON.

While lawyers have more sober sense
Than t' argue at their own expense,
But make their best advantages
Of others' quarrels, like the Swiss.

Hudibras.

DR. S. BUTLER.

Each wanton judge new penal statutes draw,
Laws grind the poor, and rich men rule the law.

The Traveller.

GOLDSMITH.

Laws, as we read in ancient sages,
Have been like cobwebs in all ages.
Cobwebs for little flies are spread,
And laws for little folks are made ;
But if an insect of renown,
Hornet or beetle, wasp or drone,
Be caught in quest of sport or plunder,
The flimsy fether flies in sunder.

J. BEATTIE.

Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch,
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,
Between two horses, which both bear him best,
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,
I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment ;

But in these nice sharp quillets of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.

King Henry VI., Part I. Act ii. Sc. 4. SHAKESPEARE.

Mastering the lawless science of our law,
That codeless myriad of precedent,
That wilderness of single instances.

Aylmer's Field. TENNYSON.

For twelve honest men have decided the cause,
Who are judges alike of the facts and the laws.

The Honest Fury. W. PULTENEY.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang, that jurymen may dine.

Rape of the Lock, Cant. iii. POPE.

Dame Justice, weighing long the doubtful right,
Takes, opens, swallows it before their sight.
The cause of strife removed so rarely well,
There, take (says Justice), take ye each a shell ;
We thrive at Westminster on fools like you ;
'T was a fat oyster — live in peace — adieu.

Verbatim from Boileau. POPE.

THE PRESS.

Now stir the fire, and close the shutters fast,
Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round,
And while the bubbling and loud hissing urn
Throws up a steamy column, and the cups,
That cheer but not inebriate, wait on each,
So let us welcome peaceful evening in.

This folio of four pages, happy work !
Which not e'en critics criticise ; that holds
Inquisitive attention while I read,

What is it but a map of busy life,
Its fluctuations and its vast concerns ?
'T is pleasant, through the loop-holes of retreat,
To peep at such a world, — to see the stir
Of the great Babel, and not feel the crowd.

While fancy, like the finger of a clock,
Runs the great circuit, and is still at home.

Winter Evening: The Task, Book iv. COWPER.

THE JESTER.

When I did hear
The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,
That fools should be so deep contemplative ;
And I did laugh, sans intermission,
An hour by his dial. — O noble fool !
A worthy fool ! — Motley's the only wear.

As You Like It, Act ii. Sc. 7. SHAKESPEARE.

PERSONAL AND PUBLIC OPINION.

PRAISE.

The love of praise, how'er concealed by art,
Reigns more or less, and glows in every heart.

Love of Fame, Satire i. DR. E. YOUNG.

To things of sale a seller's praise belongs.

Love's Labor Lost, Act iv. Sc. 3. SHAKESPEARE.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people.

Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 7. SHAKESPEARE.

Whohath not owned, with rapture-smitten frame,
The power of grace, the magic of a name ?

Pleasures of Hope, Part II. T. CAMPBELL.

FLATTERY.

'T is an old maxim in the schools,
That flattery's the food of fools ;
Yet now and then your men of wit
Will condescend to take a bit.

Cadenus and Vanessa. DEAN SWIFT.

But flattery never seems absurd ;
The flattered always takes your word :
Impossibilities seem just ;
They take the strongest praise on trust.
Hyperboles, though ne'er so great,
Will still come short of self-conceit.

The Painter who pleased Nobody and Everybody. J. GAY.

He loves to hear
That unicorns may be betrayed with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes,
Lions with toils, and men with flatterers.
But when I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does, being then most flattered.

Julius Caesar, Act ii. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

Ne'er
Was flattery lost on Poet's ear :
A simple race ! they waste their toil
For the vain tribute of a smile.
Lay of the Last Minstrel, Cant. iv. SCOTT.

SCANDAL AND SLANDER.

There's nothing blackens like the ink of fools.
If true, a woful likeness ; and, if lies,
"Praise undeserved is scandal in disguise."
Imitations of Horace, Epistle 1. Book ii. POPE.

And there's a lust in man no charm can tame
Of loudly publishing our neighbor's shame ;
On eagles' wings immortal scandals fly,
While virtuous actions are but born and die.
Satire ix. Trans. of S. HARVEY. JUVENAL.

A third interprets motions, looks and eyes ;
At every word a reputation dies.
Rape of the Lock, Can. iii. POPE.

No, 't is slander,
Whose edge is sharper than the sword ; whose tongue
Outvenoms all the worms of Nile ; whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All comers of the world.
Cymbeline, Act iii. Sc. 4. SHAKESPEARE.

REPUTATION.

Good name in man and woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls :
Who steals my purse, steals trash ; 'tis something,
nothing ;
'T was mine, 't is his, and has been slave to thousands ;
But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed.
Othello, Act iii. Sc. 3. SHAKESPEARE.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honor from corruption,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.
King Henry VIII., Act v. Sc. 2. SHAKESPEARE.

HAMLET. Horatio, I am dead ;
Thou liv'st ; report me and my cause aright
To the unsatisfied.

HORATIO. Never believe it :
(Taking the cup.)
I am more an antique Roman than a Dane :
Here's yet some liquor left.
HAM. As thou'rt a man,

Give me the cup : let go ; by heaven I'll have 't. —
(Struggling : HAMLET gets the cup.)
O God ! — Horatio, what a wounded name,
Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind
me !

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity awhile,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my story.
Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 2. SHAKESPEARE.

FAME.

What shall I do to be forever known,
And make the age to come my own ?
The Motto. A. COWLEY.

By Jove ! I am not covetous for gold ;
But, if it be a sin to covet honor,
I am the most offending soul alive.
King Henry V., Act iv. Sc. 3. SHAKESPEARE.

Your name is great
In mouths of wisest censure.
Othello, Act ii. Sc. 3. SHAKESPEARE.

It deserves with characters of brass
A fortified residence 'gainst the tooth of time
And rature of oblivion.
Measure for Measure, Act v. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

What is glory but the blaze of fame,
The people's praise, if always praise unmixt ?
And what delight to be by such extolled,
To live upon their tongues and be their talk,
Of whom to be dispraised were no small praise ?
Paradise Regained, Book iii. MILTON.

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin, —
That all with one consent praise new-born gawds,
And give to dust, that is a little gilt,
More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.
Troilus and Cressida, Act iii. Sc. 3. SHAKESPEARE.

Thrice happy he whose name has been well spelt
In the despatch : I knew a man whose loss
Was printed Grove, although his name was Grose.
Don Juan, Cant. viii. BYRON.

What is the end of Fame ? 'T is but to fill
A certain portion of uncertain paper.
Don Juan, Cant. i. BYRON.

Nor Fame I slight, nor for her favors call ;
She comes unlooked for, if she comes at all.

Unblemished let me live, or die unknown ;
O grant an honest fame, or grant me none !
The Temple of Fame. POPE.

Ah ! who can tell how hard it is to climb
The steep where fame's proud temple shines afar !

Ah ! who can tell how many a soul sublime
Has felt the influence of malignant star,
And waged with Fortune an eternal war ;
Checked by the scoff of pride, by envy's frown,
And poverty's unconquerable bar,
In life's low vale remote has pined alone,
Then dropt into the grave, unpitied and unknown !

The Minstrel, Book i.

J. BEATTIE.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise (That last infirmity of noble mind )
To scorn delights, and live laborious days ;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind Fury with the abhorred shears,
And slits the thin-spun life. But not the praise,
Phœbus replied, and touched my trembling ears ;
Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,

But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes
And perfect witness of all-judging Jove.
As he pronounces lastly in each deed,
Of so much fame in heaven expect thy need.

Lycidas.

MILTON.

CLASS AND CASTE.

ARISTOCRACY.

Order is Heaven's first law, and, this confest,
Some are, and must be, greater than the rest.

Essay on Man, Epistle IV.

POPE.

Who'er amidst the sons
Of reason, valor, liberty, and virtue,
Displays distinguished merit, is a noble
Of Nature's own creating.

Coriolanus, Act iii. Sc. 3.

J. THOMSON.

None but himself can be his parallel.

The Double Falsehood.

LOUIS THEOBALD.

He lives to build, not boast, a generous race ;
No tenth transmitter of a foolish face.

The Bastard.

R. SAVAGE.

Such souls,
Whose sudden visitations daze the world,
Vanish like lightning, but they leave behind
A voice that in the distance far away
Wakens the slumbering ages.

Philip Van Artevelde, Act i. Sc. 7.

SIR H. TAYLOR.

SNOBBERY.

Let wealth and commerce, laws and learning die,
But leave us still our old nobility.

England's Trust, and other Poems. LORD J. MANNERS.

In men this blunder still you find,
All think their little set mankind.

Florio, Part I.

HANNAH MORE.

GLENDOWER. And all the courses of my life
do show,

I am not in the roll of common men.

I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

HOTSPUR. Why, so can I, or so can any man ;
But will they come when you do call for them ?

King Henry IV., Part I. Act iii. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

Know ye not then, said Satan, filled with scorn.—
Know ye not me ?

Not to know me argues yourselves unknown,
The lowest of your throng.

Paradise Lost, Book iv.

MILTON.

And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter ;
For new-made honor doth forget men's names.

King John, Act i. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

What woful stuff this madrigal would be
In some starved hackney sonneteer, or me,
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens ! how the style refines !

Essay on Criticism, Part II.

POPE.

'T is from high life twice characters are drawn ;
A saint in crape is twice a saint in lawn.

Moral Essays, Epistle I.

POPE.

STATE-CRAFT.

For just experience tells, in every soil,
That those that think must govern those that toil.

The Traveller.

GOLDSMITH.

'T is thus the spirit of a single mind
Makes that of multitudes take one direction.

Don Juan.

BYRON.

What should it be, that thus their faith can bind ?
The power of Thought — the magic of the Mind !
Linked with success, assumed and kept with skill,
That moulds another's weakness to its will.

The Corsair.

BYRON.

Treason doth never prosper : what's the reason ?
For if it prosper, none dare call it treason.

Epigrams.

SIR J. HARRINGTON.

A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket !

Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

Measures, not men, have always been my mark.

The Good-Natured Man, Act ii.

GOLDSMITH.

ABUSE OF AUTHORITY.

Oh ! it is excellent

To have a giant's strength ; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

Could great men thunder
As Jove himself does, Jove would ne'er be quiet ;
For every pelting, petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder, —
Nothing but thunder. Merciful Heaven !
Thou rather, with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt,
Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle : but man, proud man !
Drest in a little brief authority, —
Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
His glassy essence, — like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep ; who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal.

Measure for Measure, Act ii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

THE PEOPLE.

Who o'er the herd would wish to reign,
Fantastic, fickle, fierce, and vain ! —
Vain as the leaf upon the stream,
And fickle as a changeful dream ;
Fantastic as a woman's mood,
And fierce as Frenzy's fevered blood.
Thou many-headed monster thing,
O, who would wish to be thy king !

Lady of the Lake, Cant. v.

SCOTT.

He that depends
Upon your favors swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye !
Trust ye ?

With every minute you do change a mind ;
And call him noble that was now your hate,
Him vile that was your garland.

Coriolanus, Act i. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

The scum
That rises upmost when the nation boils.

Don Sebastian.

DRYDEN.

From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,
The place is dignified by the doer's deed.

All's Well that Ends Well, Act ii. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

Through all disguise, form, place or name,
Beneath the flaunting robes of sin,
Through poverty and squalid shame,
Thou lookest on the man within.

On man, as man, retaining yet,
Howe'er debased, and soiled, and dim,
The crown upon his forehead set —
The immortal gift of God to him.

Democracy.

J. G. WHITTIER.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SOLITUDE.

Alone ! — that worn-out word,
So idly spoken, and so coldly heard ;
Yet all that poets sing, and grief hath known,
Of hopes laid waste, knells in that word — ALONE !
The New Timon, Part II. E. BULWER-LYTTON.

All heaven and earth are still, — though not in
sleep,
But breathless, as we grow when feeling most ;
And silent, as we stand in thoughts too deep ; —
All heaven and earth are still ; from the high host
Of stars, to the lulled lake and mountain-coast,
All is concentrated in a life intense,
Where not a beam, nor air, nor leaf is lost,
But hath a part of being, and a sense
Of that which is of all Creator and defence.

Then stirs the feeling infinite, so felt
In solitude, where we are least alone.

Childe Harold, Cant. iii.

BYRON.

Such was that happy garden-state,
While man there walked without a mate :
After a place so pure and sweet,
What other help could yet be meet !
But 't was beyond a mortal's share
To wander solitary there :
Two paradises are in one,
To live in paradise alone.

The Garden (Translated).

A. MARVELL.

Pacing through the forest,
Chewing the end of sweet and bitter fancy.

As You Like It, Act iv. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

A feeling of sadness and longing,
That is not akin to pain,
And resembles sorrow only
As the mist resembles the rain.

The Day is Done.

LONGFELLOW.

That inward eye
Which is the bliss of solitude.

I wandered Lonely.

WORDSWORTH.

But if much converse perhaps
Thee satiate, to short absence I could yield ;
For solitude sometimes is best society,
And short retirement urges sweet return.

Paradise Lost, Book ix.

MILTON.

SOCIAL PLEASURES.

Here thou, great Anna ! whom three realms obey,
Dost sometimes counsel take — and sometimes tea.

Rape of the Lock, Cant. iii.

POPE.

She that asks
Her dear five hundred friends, contemns them all,
And hates their coming.

C. MORRIS.

We may live without poetry, music, and art ;
We may live without conscience and live without
heart ;

We may live without friends ; we may live without books ;

But civilized man cannot live without cooks.
We may live without books, — what is knowledge but grieving ?

We may live without hope, — what is hope but deceiving ?

We may live without love, — what is passion but pining ?

But where is the man that can live without dining ?

*Lucile, Cant. ii.*R. BULWER LYTTON (Owen Meredith).

There my retreat the best companions grace,
Chiefs out of war, and statesmen out of place ;
There St. John mingles with my friendly bowl,
The feast of reason and the flow of soul.

J. THOMSON.

Sublime tobacco ! which from east to west,
Cheers the tar's labor or the Turkman's rest,

Divine in hookahs, glorious in a pipe,
When tipped with amber, mellow, rich and ripe ;
Like other charmers, wooing the caress
More dazzlingly when daring in full dress ;
Yet thy true lovers more admire by far
Thy naked beauties — Give me a cigar !

The Island, Cant. ii.

BYRON.

Yes, social friend, I love thee well,
In learned doctors' spite ;
Thy clouds all other clouds dispel,
And lap me in delight.

To my Cigar.

C. SPRAGUE.

And when the smoke ascends on high,
Then thou behold'st the vanity
Of worldly stuff,
Gone with a puff :

Thus think, and smoke tobacco.

And seest the ashes cast away,
Then to thyself thou mayest say,
That to the dust
Return thou must.

Thus think, and smoke tobacco.

DIFFERING TASTES.

Different minds

Incline to different objects : one pursues
The vast alone, the wonderful, the wild ;
Another sighs for harmony, and grace,
And gentlest beauty.

Such and so various are the tastes of men.

That gives it all its flavor.

The Timepiece: The Task, Book ii. COWPER.

Not chaos-like together crushed and bruised,
But, as the world, harmoniously confused,
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, all agree.

Small sands the mountain, moments make the year,
And trifles life.

Love of Fame, Satire vi. DR. E. YOUNG.

Pretty! in amber to observe the forms

Reason's whole pleasure, all the joys of sense,
Lie in three words, — health, peace, and competence.

But health consists with temperance alone,
And peace, O Virtue! peace is all thine own.

Essay on Man, Epistle IV. POPE.

These violent delights have violent ends,

This soon too rude an exercise they find ;
Straight on the couch their limbs again they

Where hours on hours they sighing lie reclined,
And court the vapory god, soft breathing in the wind.

Hang sorrow ! care will kill a cat,
And therefore let's be merry.

POEMS OF FANCY.

FANTASY.

FROM "THE VISION OF DELIGHT."

BREAK, Fantasy, from thy cave of cloud,
And spread thy purple wings,
Now all thy figures are allowed,
And various shapes of things ;
Create of airy forms a stream,
It must have blood, and naught of phlegm ;
And though it be a waking dream,
Yet let it like an odor rise
To all the senses here,
And fall like sleep upon their eyes,
Or music in their ear.

BEN JONSON.

DELIGHTS OF FANCY.

FROM "THE PLEASURES OF IMAGINATION."

As Memnon's marble harp renowned of old
By fabling Nilus, to the quivering touch
Of Titan's ray, with each repulsive string
Consenting, sounded through the warbling air
Unbidden strains ; e'en so did Nature's hand
To certain species of external things
Attune the finer organs of the mind ;
So the glad impulse of congenial powers,
Or of sweet sound, or fair-proportioned form,
The grace of motion, or the bloom of light,
Thrills through imagination's tender frame,
From nerve to nerve ; all naked and alive
They catch the spreading rays ; till now the soul
At length discloses every tuneful spring,
To that harmonious movement from without,
Responsive. Then the inexpressive strain
Diffuses its enchantment ; Fancy dreams
Of sacred fountains and Elysian groves,
And vales of bliss ; the Intellectual Power
Bends from his awful throne a wondering ear,
And smiles ; the passions gently soothed away,
Sink to divine repose, and love and joy
Alone are waking ; love and joy serene
As airs that fan the summer. O attend,
Whoe'er thou art whom these delights can touch,

Whose candid bosom the refining love
Of nature warms ; O, listen to my song,
And I will guide thee to her favorite walks,
And teach thy solitude her voice to hear,
And point her loveliest features to thy view.

MARK AKENSIDE.

FANCY.

EVER let the Fancy roam,
Pleasure never is at home :
At a touch sweet Pleasure melteth,
Like to bubbles when rain pelteth ;
Then let winged Fancy wander
Through the thought still spread beyond her :
Open wide the mind's cage-door,
She'll dart forth, and cloudward soar.

O sweet Fancy ! let her loose ;
Summer's joys are spoilt by use,
And the enjoying of the Spring
Fades as does its blossoming :
Autumn's red-lipped fruitage too,
Blushing through the mist and dew,
Cloys with tasting. What do then ?
Sit thee by the ingle, when
The sear fagot blazes bright,
Spirit of a winter's night ;
When the soundless earth is muffled,
And the caked snow is shuffled
From the ploughboy's heavy shoon ;
When the Night doth meet the Noon
In a dark conspiracy
To banish Even from her sky.
— Sit thee there, and send abroad
With a mind self-overawed
Fancy, high-commissioned : — send her !
She has vassals to attend her ;
She will bring, in spite of frost,
Beauties that the earth hath lost ;
She will bring thee, all together,
All delights of summer weather ;
All the buds and bells of May
From dewy sward or thorny spray ;

All the heapèd Autumn's wealth,
 With a still, mysterious stealth ;
 She will mix these pleasures up
 Like three fit wines in a cup,
 And thou shalt quaff it ; — thou shalt hear
 Distant harvest-carols clear ;
 Rustle of the reapèd corn ;
 Sweet birds antheming the morn ;
 And in the same moment — hark !
 'T is the early April lark,
 Or the rooks, with busy caw,
 Foraging for sticks and straw.
 Thou shalt, at one glance, behold
 The daisy and the marigold ;
 White-plumèd lilies, and the first
 Hedge-grown primrose that hath burst ;
 Shaded hyacinth, always
 Sapphire queen of the mid-May ;
 And every leaf, and every flower
 Pearlèd with the self-same shower.
 Thou shalt see the field-mouse peep
 Meagre from its cellèd sleep ;
 And the snake all winter-thin
 Cast on sunny bank its skin ;
 Freckled nest-eggs thou shalt see
 Hatching in the hawthorn tree,
 When the hen-bird's wing doth rest
 Quiet on her mossy nest ;
 Then the hurry and alarm
 When the bee-hive casts its swarm ;
 Acorns ripe down-pattering
 While the autumn breezes sing.

O sweet Fancy ! let her loose ;
 Everything is spoilt by use :
 Where 's the check that doth not fade,
 Too much gazed at ? Where 's the maid
 Whose lip mature is ever new ?
 Where 's the eye, however blue,
 Doth not weary ? Where 's the face
 One would meet in every place ?
 Where 's the voice, however soft,
 One would hear so very oft ?
 At a touch sweet Pleasure melteth
 Like to bubbles when rain pelteth.
 Let then wingèd Fancy find
 Thee a mistress to thy mind :
 Dulcet-eyed as Ceres' daughter,
 Ere the god of torment taught her
 How to frown and how to chide ;
 With a waist and with a side
 White as Hebe's, when her zone
 Slipt its golden clasp, and down
 Fell her kirtle to her feet
 While she held the goblet sweet,
 And Jove grew languid. — Break the mesh
 Of the Fancy's silken leash ;

Quickly break her prison-string,
 And such joys as these she 'll bring :
 — Let the wingèd Fancy roam,
 Pleasure never is at home.

JOHN KEATS.

HALLO, MY FANCY.

[1650.]

In melancholic fancy,
 Out of myself,
 In the vulcan dancy,
 All the world surveying,
 Nowhere staying,
 Just like a fairy elf ;
 Out o'er the tops of highest mountains skipping,
 Out o'er the hills, the trees and valleys tripping,
 Out o'er the ocean seas, without an oar or shipping,
 Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

Amidst the misty vapors,
 Fain would I know
 What doth cause the tapers ;
 Why the clouds beight us,
 And affright us
 While we travel here below.
 Fain would I know what makes the roaring thunder,
 And what these lightnings be that rend the clouds asunder,
 And what these comets are on which we gaze
 and wonder.
 Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

Fain would I know the reason
 Why the little ant,
 All the summer season,
 Layeth up provision,
 On condition
 To know no winter's want :
 And how these little fishes, that swim beneath salt water,
 Do never blind their eye ; methinks it is a matter
 An inch above the reach of old Erra Pater !
 Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

Fain would I be resolved
 How things are done ;
 And where the bull was calved
 Of bloody Phalaris,
 And where the tailor is
 That works to the man i' the moon !
 Fain would I know how Cupid aims so rightly ;
 And how these little fairies do dance and leap so lightly ;
 And where fair Cynthia makes her ambles nightly.
 Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

In conceit like Phaeton,
I'll mount Pheebus' chair,
Having ne'er a hat on,
All my hair a-burning
In my journeying,
Hurrying through the air.

Fair would I hear his fiery horses neighing,
And see how they on foamy bits are playing ;
All the stars and planets I will be surveying !
Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

O, from what ground of nature
Doth the pelican,
That self-devouring creature,
Prove so froward
And untoward,
Her vitals for to strain ?
And why the subtle fox, while in death's wounds is lying,
Doth not lament his pangs by howling and by crying ;
And why the milk-white swan doth sing when she's a-dying.
Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

Fain would I conclude this,
At least make essay,
What similitude is ;
Why fowls of a feather
Flock and fly together,
And lambs know beasts of prey :
How Nature's alchemists, these small laborious creatures,
Acknowledge still a prince in ordering their matters,
And suffer none to live, who slothing lose their features.
Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

I'm rapt with admiration,
When I do ruminate,
Men of an occupation,
How each one calls him brother,
Yet each envieth other,
And yet still intimate !
Yea, I admire to see some natures farther sun-
d' red,
Than antipodes to us. Is it not to be wond' red ?
In myriads ye'll find, of one mind scarce a hundred ?
Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

What multitude of notions
Doth perturb my pate,
Considering the motions,
How the heavens are preserved,
And this world served
In moisture, light, and heat !

If one spirit sits the outmost circle turning,
Or one turns another, continuing in journeying,
If rapid circles' motion be that which they call burning !

Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

Fain also would I prove this,
By considering
What that, which you call love, is :
Whether it be a folly
Or a melancholy,
Or some heroic thing !

Fain I'd have it proved, by one whom love hath wounded,
And fully upon one his desire hath founded.
Whom nothing else could please though the world were rounded.

Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

To know this world's centre,
Height, depth, breadth, and length,
Fain would I adventure
To search the hid attractions
Of magnetic actions,
And adamantine strength.

Fain would I know, if in some lofty mountain,
Where the moon sojourns, if there be trees or fountain ;
If there be beasts of prey, or yet be fields to hunt in.

Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

Fain would I have it tried
By experiment,
By none can be denied !
If in this bulk of nature,
There be voids less or greater,
Or all remains complete.

Fain would I know if beasts have any reason ;
If falcons killing eagles do commit a treason ;
If fear of winter's want make swallows fly the season.

Hallo, my fancy, whither wilt thou go ?

Hallo, my fancy, hallo !
Stay, stay at home with me,
I can thee no longer follow,
For thou hast betrayed me,
And bewrayed me ;
It is too much for thee.

Stay, stay at home with me ; leave off thy lofty soaring ;
Stay thou at home with me, and on thy books
be poring ;
For he that goes abroad lays little up in storing :
Thou'rt welcome home, my fancy, welcome home to me.

THE CLOUD.

I BRING fresh showers for the thirsting flowers,
 From the seas and the streams ;
 I bear light shade for the leaves when laid
 In their noonday dreams.
 From my wings are shaken the dews that waken
 The sweet birds every one,
 When rocked to rest on their mother's breast,
 As she dances about the sun.
 I wield the flail of the lashing hail,
 And whiten the green plains under ;
 And then again I dissolve it in rain,
 And laugh as I pass in thunder.

I sift the snow on the mountains below,
 And their great pines groan aghast ;
 And all the night 't is my pillow white,
 While I sleep in the arms of the blast.
 Sublime on the towers of my skyey bowers
 Lightning, my pilot, sits :
 In a cavern under is fettered the thunder ;
 It struggles and howls by fits.

Over earth and ocean, with gentle motion,
 This pilot is guiding me,
 Lured by the love of the genii that move
 In the depths of the purple sea ;
 Over the rills and the crags and the hills,
 Over the lakes and plains,
 Wherever he dream, under mountain or stream,
 The spirit he loves remains ;
 And I all the while bask in heaven's blue smile,
 Whilst he is dissolving in rains.

The sanguine sunrise, with his meteor eyes,
 And his burning plumes outspread,
 Leaps on the back of my sailing rack,
 When the morning star shines dead.

As, on the jag of a mountain crag
 Which an earthquake rocks and swings,
 An eagle, alit, one moment may sit
 In the light of its golden wings ;
 And when sunset may breathe, from the lit sea
 beneath,
 Its ardors of rest and of love,
 And the crimson pall of eve may fall
 From the depth of heaven above,
 With wings folded I rest on mine airy nest,
 As still as a brooding dove.

That orbèd maiden with white fire laden,
 Whom mortals call the moon,
 Glides glimmering o'er my fleece-like floor
 By the midnight breezes strewn ;
 And wherever the beat of her unseen feet,
 Which only the angels hear,
 May have broken the woof of my tent's thin roof,
 The stars peep behind her and peer ;

And I laugh to see them whirl and flee,
 Like a swarm of golden bees,
 When I widen the rent in my wind-built tent,
 Till the calm rivers, lakes, and seas,
 Like strips of the sky fallen through me on high,
 Are each paved with the moon and these.

I bind the sun's throne with a burning zone,
 And the moon's with a girdle of pearl ;
 The volcanoes are dim, and the stars reel and swim,
 When the whirlwinds my banner unfurl.
 From cape to cape, with a bridge-like shape,
 Over a torrent sea,
 Sunbeam-proof, I hang like a roof,
 The mountains its columns be.
 The triumphal arch through which I march
 With hurricane, fire, and snow,
 When the powers of the air are chained to my chair,
 Is the million-colored bow ;
 The sphere-fire above its soft colors wove,
 While the moist earth was laughing below.

I am the daughter of the earth and water ;
 And the nursling of the sky ;
 I pass through the pores of the ocean and shores ;
 I change, but I cannot die.
 For after the rain, when, with never a stain,
 The pavilion of heaven is bare,
 And the winds and sunbeams, with their convex gleams,
 Build up the blue dome of air, —
 I silently laugh at my own cenotaph,
 And out of the caverns of rain,
 Like a child from the womb, like a ghost from
 the tomb,
 I rise and upbuild it again.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

FANCY IN NUBIBUS.

O, IT is pleasant, with a heart at ease,
 Just after sunset, or by moonlight skies,
 To make the shifting clouds be what you please,
 Or let the easily persuaded eyes
 Own each quaint likeness issuing from the mould
 Of a friend's fancy ; or, with head bent low,
 And cheek aslant, see rivers flow of gold,
 'Twixt erinson banks ; and then a traveller go
 From mount to mount, through Cloudland, gorgeons land !
 Or, listening to the tide with closed sight,
 Be that blind Bard, who on the Chian strand,
 By those deep sounds possessed with inward light,
 Beheld the Iliad and the Odyssey,
 Rise to the swelling of the voiceful sea.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE.

THE SUNSET CITY.

THERE'S a city that lies in the Kingdom of Clouds,
In the glorious country on high,
Which an azure and silvery curtain enshrouds,
To screen it from mortal eye ;

A city of temples and turrets of gold,
That gleam by a sapphire sea,
Like jewels more splendid than earth may behold,
Or are dreamed of by you and by me.

And about it are highlands of amber that reach
Far away till they melt in the gloom ;
And waters that hem an immaculate beach
With fringes of luminous foam.

Aerial bridges of pearl there are,
And belfries of marvellous shapes,
And lighthouses lit by the evening star,
That sparkle on violet capes ;

And hanging gardens that far away
Enchantedly float aloof ;
Rainbow pavilions in avenues gay,
And banners of glorious woof !

When the Summer sunset's crimsoning fires
Are aglow in the western sky,
The pilgrim discovers the domes and spires
Of this wonderful city on high ;

And gazing enrapt as the gathering shade
Creeps over the twilight lea,
Sees palace and pinnacle totter and fade,
And sink in the sapphire sea ;

Till the vision loses by slow degrees
The magical splendor it wore ;
The silvery curtain is drawn, and he sees
The beautiful city no more !

HENRY SYLVESTER CORNWELL.

THE CASTLE IN THE AIR.

ADDRESSED TO A LADY WHO DATED HER LETTERS FROM
"THE LITTLE CORNER OF THE WORLD."

IN the region of clouds, where the whirlwinds arise,
My castle of fancy was built.
The turrets reflected the blue of the skies,
And the windows with sunbeams were gilt.

The rainbow sometimes in its beautiful state
Enamelled the mansion around ;
And the figures that fancy in clouds can create
Supplied me with gardens and ground.

I had grottos and fountains and orange-tree
groves ;
I had all that enchantment has told ;
I had sweet shady walks for the gods and their
loves ;
I had mountains of coral and gold.

But a storm that I felt not had risen and rolled,
While wrapped in a slumber I lay ;
And when I awoke in the morning, behold,
My castle was carried away !

It passed over rivers and valleys and groves ;
The world, it was all in my view ;
I thought of my friends, of their fates, of their
loves,
And often, full often, of you.

At length it came over a beautiful scene,
Which Nature in silence had made ;
The place was but small, but 't was sweetly serene,
And checkered with sunshine and shade.

I gazed and I envied, with painful good-will,
And grew tired of my seat in the air,
When all of a sudden my castle stood still
As if some attraction was there.

Like a lark in the sky it came fluttering down,
And placed me exactly in view,
When, whom should I meet in this charming retreat,
This corner of calmness, but you ?

Delighted to find you in honor and ease,
I felt no more sorrow nor pain,
But, the wind coming fair, I ascended the breeze,
And went back to my castle again.

IN THE MIST.

SITTING all day in a silver mist,
In silver silence all the day,
Save for the low, soft kiss of spray
And the lisp of sands by waters kissed,
As the tide draws up the bay.

Little I hear and nothing I see,
Wrapped in that veil by fairies spun ;
The solid earth is vanished for me,
And the shining hours speed noiselessly,
A woof of shadow and sun.

Suddenly out of the shifting veil
A magical bark, by the sunbeams lit,
Flits like a dream—or seems to flit—
With a golden prow and a gossamer sail
And the waves make room for it.

A fair, swift bark from some radiant realm, —
 Its diamond cordage cuts the sky
 In glittering lines; all silently
 A seeming spirit holds the helm,
 And steers. Will he pass me by!

Ah! not for me is the vessel here;
 Noiseless and swift as a sea-bird's flight
 She swerves and vanishes from the sight;
 No flap of sail, no parting cheer, —
 She has passed into the light.

Sitting some day in a deeper mist,
 Silent, alone, some other day,
 An unknown bark, from an unknown bay,
 By unknown waters lapped and kissed,
 Shall near me through the spray.

No flap of sail, no scraping of keel,
 Shadowy, dim, with a banner dark,
 It will hover, will pause, and I shall feel
 A hand which grasps me, and shivering steal
 To the cold strand, and embark, —

Embark for that far, mysterious realm
 Where the fathomless, trackless waters flow.
 Shall I feel a Presence dim, and know
 Thy dear hand, Lord, upon the helm,
 Nor be afraid to go?

And through black waves and stormy blast
 And out of the fog-wreaths, dense and dun,
 Guided by thee, shall the vessel run,
 Gain the fair haven, night being past,
 And anchor in the sun?

SARAH WOOLSEY (Susan Coolidge).

THE BLESSED DAMOZEL.

THE blessed damozel leaned out
 From the gold bar of heaven;
 Her eyes were deeper than the depth
 Of waters stilled at even;
 She had three lilies in her hand,
 And the stars in her hair were seven.

Her robe, ungirt from clasp to hem,
 No wrought flowers did adorn,
 But a white rose of Mary's gift,
 For service neatly worn;
 Her hair that lay along her back
 Was yellow like ripe corn.

Her seemed she scarce had been a day
 One of God's choristers;
 The wonder was not yet quite gone
 From that still look of hers;

Albeit, to them she left, her day
 Had counted as ten years.

It was the rampart of God's house
 That she was standing on;
 By God built over the sheer depth
 The which is space begun;
 So high, that looking downward thence
 She scarce could see the sun.

It lies in heaven, across the flood
 Of ether, as a bridge.
 Beneath, the tides of day and night
 With flame and darkness ridge
 The void, as low as where this earth
 Spins like a fretful midge.

Heard hardly, some of her new friends
 Amid their loving games
 Spake evermore among themselves
 Their virginal chaste names;
 And the souls mounting up to God
 Went by her like thin flames.

And still she bowed herself and stopped
 Out of the circling charm;
 Until her bosom must have made
 The bar she leaned on warm,
 And the lilies lay as if asleep
 Along her bended arm.

From the fixed place of heaven she saw
 Time like a pulse shake fierce
 Through all the worlds. Her gaze still strove
 Within the gulf to pierce
 The path; and now she spoke as when
 The stars sang in their spheres.

"I wish that he were come to me,
 For he will come," she said.
 "Have I not prayed in heaven? — on earth,
 Lord, Lord, has he not prayed?
 Are not two prayers a perfect strength?
 And shall I feel afraid?"

She gazed and listened, and then said,
 Less sad of speech than mild, —
 "All this is when he comes." She ceased.
 The light thrilled toward her, filled
 With angels in strong level flight.
 Her eyes prayed, and she smiled.

(I saw her smile.) But soon their path
 Was vague in distant spheres;
 And then she cast her arms along
 The golden barriers,
 And laid her face between her hands,
 And wept. (I heard her tears.)

THE SUNKEN CITY,

HARK ! the faint bells of the sunken city
Peal once more their wonted evening chime !
From the deep abysses floats a ditty,
Wild and wondrous, of the olden time.

Temples, towers, and domes of many stories
There lie buried in an ocean grave, —
Undescried, save when their golden glories
Gleam, at sunset, through the lighted wave.

And the mariner who had seen them glisten,
In whose ears those magic bells do sound,
Night by night bides there to watch and listen,
Though death lurks behind each dark rock
round.

So the bells of memory's wonder-city
Peal for me their old melodious chime ;
So my heart pours forth a changeful ditty,
Sad and pleasant, from the bygone time.

Domes and towers and castles, fancy-built,
There lie lost to daylight's garish beams, —
There lie hidden till unveiled and gilded,
Glory-gilded, by my nightly dreams !

And then hear I music sweet upknelling
From many a well-known phantom band,
And, through tears, can see my natural dwelling
Far off in the spirit's luminous land !

From the German of WILHELM MUELLER. Translation of JAMES CLARENCE MANGAN.

THE LORE-LEI.

I KNOW not whence it rises,
This thought so full of woe ; —
But a tale of the times departed
Haunts me — and will not go.

The air is cool, and it darkens,
And calmly flows the Rhine ;
The mountain peaks are sparkling
In the sunny evening-shine.

And yonder sits a maiden,
The fairest of the fair ;
With gold is her garment glittering,
And she combs her golden hair.

With a golden comb she combs it,
And a wild song singeth she,
That melts the heart with a wondrous
And powerful melody.

The boatman feels his bosom
With a nameless longing move ;
He sees not the gulfs before him,
His gaze is fixed above,

Till over boat and boatman
The Rhine's deep waters run ;
And this with her magic singing
The Lore-Lei hath done !

From the German of HEINRICH HEINE.

THE FISHER.

THE waters purred, the waters swelled, —
A fisher sat near by,
And earnestly his line beheld
With tranquil heart and eye ;
And while he sits and watches there,
He sees the waves divide,
And, lo ! a maid, with glistening hair,
Springs from the troubled tide.

She sang to him, she spake to him, —
" Why lur'st thou from below,
In cruel mood, my tender brood,
To die in day's fierce glow ?
Ah ! didst thou know how sweetly there
The little fishes dwell,
Thou wouldst come down their lot to share,
And be forever well.

" Bathes not the smiling sun at night —
The moon too — in the waves ?
Comes he not forth more fresh and bright
From ocean's cooling caves ?
Canst thou unmoved that deep world see,
That heaven of tranquil blue,
Where thine own face is beckoning thee
Down to the eternal dew ? "

The waters purred, the waters swelled, —
They kissed his naked feet ;
His heart a nameless transport held,
As if his love did greet.
She spake to him, she sang to him ;
Then all with him was o'er, —
Half drew she him, half sank he in, —
He sank to rise no more.

From the German of GOETHE. Translation of CHARLES T. BROOKS.

THE SIRENS' SONG.

FROM THE "INNER TEMPLE MASQUE."

STEER hither, steer your wingèd pines,
All beaten mariners :
Here lie undiscovered mines,
A prey to passengers ;

Perfumes far sweeter than the best
That make the phoenix urn and nest :
Fear not your ships,
Nor any to oppose you save our lips ;
But come on shore,
Where no joy dies till love has gotten more.

For swelling waves our panting breasts,
Where never storms arise,
Exchange ; and be awhile our guests :
For stars, gaze on our eyes.
The compass, love shall hourly sing ;
And, as he goes about the ring,
We will not miss
To tell each point he nameth with a kiss.

WILLIAM BROWNE.

THE FORSAKEN MERMAN.

COME, dear children, let us away ;
Down and away below.
Now my brothers call from the bay ;
Now the great winds shorewards blow ;
Now the salt tides seaward flow ;
Now the wild white horses play,
Champ and chafe and toss in the spray.
Children dear, let us away.
This way, this way.

Call her once before you go.
Call once yet,
In a voice that she will know :
"Margaret ! Margaret !"
Children's voices should be dear
(Call once more) to a mother's ear :
Children's voices wild with pain,
Surely she will come again.
Call her once, and come away,
This way, this way.
"Mother dear, we cannot stay !
The wild white horses foam and fret,
Margaret ! Margaret !"

Come, dear children, come away down.
Call no more.
One last look at the white-walled town,
And the little gray church on the windy shore,
Then come down.
She will not come, though you call all day.
Come away, come away.

Children dear, was it yesterday
We heard the sweet bells over the bay ?
In the caverns where we lay,
Through the surf and through the swell,
The far-off sound of a silver bell ?

Sand-stream sheens cool and deep,
Where the winds are all asleep ;
Where the spent lights quiver and gleam ;
Where the salt weed sways in the stream ;
Where the sea-beasts, ranged all round,
Feed in the ooze of their pasture-ground ;
Where the sea-snakes coil and twine,
Dry their mail and bask in the brine ;
Where great whales come sailing by,
Sail and sail, with unshut eye,
Round the world forever and aye ?
When did music come this way ?
Children dear, was it yesterday ?

Children dear, was it yesterday
(Call yet once) that she went away ?
Once she sat with you and me,
On a red gold throne in the heart of the sea.
And the youngest sat on her knee.
She combed its bright hair, and she tended it well,
When down swung the sound of the far-off bell,
She sighed, she looked up through the clear
green sea,
She said, "I must go, for my kinsfolk pray
In the little gray church on the shore to-day.
'T will be Easter-time in the world, — ah me !
And I lose my poor soul, Merman, here with
thee."
I said : "Go up, dear heart, through the waves :
Say thy prayer, and come back to the kind sea-caves."
She smiled, she went up through the surf in the bay,
Children dear, was it yesterday ?

Children dear, were we long alone ?
"The sea grows stormy, the little ones moan ;
Long prayers," I said, "in the world they say."
"Come," I said, and we rose through the surf in the bay.
We went up the beach in the sandy down
Where the sea-stocks bloom, to the white-walled
town,
Through the narrow paved streets, where all was still,
To the little gray church on the windy hill.
From the church came a murmur of folk at their prayers,
But we stood without in the cold blowing airs.
We climbed on the graves, on the stones worn with rains,
And we gazed up the aisle through the small leaded panes,
She sat by the pillar ; we saw her clear ;
"Margaret, hist ! come quick, we are here.
Dear heart," I said, "we are here alone.
The sea grows stormy, the little ones moan."

But, ah, she gave me never a look,
For her eyes were sealed to the holy book.
"Loud prays the priest; shut stands the door."

Come away, children, call no more,
Come away, come down, call no more.

Down, down, down,
Down to the depths of the sea.
She sits at her wheel in the humming town,
Singing most joyfully.
Hark what she sings: "O joy, O joy,
From the humming street, and the child with its toy,

From the priest and the bell, and the holy well,
From the wheel where I spun,
And the blessed light of the sun."

And so she sings her fill,
Singing most joyfully,
Till the shuttle falls from her hand,
And the whizzing wheel stands still.
She steals to the window, and looks at the sand,
And over the sand at the sea;
And her eyes are set in a stare;
And anon there breaks a sigh,
And anon there drops a tear,
From a sorrow-clouded eye,
And a heart sorrow-laden,

A long, long sigh,
For the cold strange eyes of a little Mermaiden,
And the gleam of her golden hair.

Come away, away, children,
Come, children, come down.
The hoarse wind blows colder,
Lights shine in the town.
She will start from her slumber
When gusts shake the door;
She will hear the winds howling,
Will hear the waves roar.
We shall see, while above us
The waves roar and whirl,
A ceiling of amber,
A pavement of pearl, —
Singing, "Here came a mortal,
But faithless was she,
And alone dwell forever
The kings of the sea."

But, children, at midnight,
When soft the winds blow,
When clear falls the moonlight,
When spring-tides are low;
When sweet airs come seaward
From heaths starred with broom;
And high rocks throw mildly
On the blanched sands a gloom:

Up the still, glistening beaches,
Up the creeks we will hie;
Over banks of bright seaweed
The ebb-tide leaves dry.
We will gaze from the sand-hills,
At the white sleeping town;
At the church on the hillside —
And then come back, down.
Singing, "There dwells a loved one,
But cruel is she:
She left lonely forever
The kings of the sea."

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

UNA AND THE RED CROSSE KNIGHT.

FROM "THE FAERIE QUEENE," BOOK I. CANTO I.

A GENTLE Knight was pricking on the plaine,
Ycladd in mightie armes and silver shielde,
Wherein old dints of deepe woundes did re-
maine,
The cruell markes of many a bloody field; —
Yet armes till that time did he never wield:
His angry steede did chide his foming bitt,
As much disdayning to the curbe to yield:
Full iolly knight he seemd, and faire did sitt,
As one for knightly giusts and fierce encounters fitt.

And on his brest a bloodie crosse he bore,
The deare remembrance of his dying Lord,
For whose sweete sake that glorious badge he wore,
And dead, as living ever, him ador'd:
Upon his shield the like was also scor'd,
For soveraine hope, which in his helpe he had,
Right, faithfull, true he was in deede and word;
But of his cheere,* did seeme too solemne sad;
Yet nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad.†

Upon a great adventure he was bond,
That greatest Gloriana to him gave,
That greatest glorious queene of Faery lond,
To winne him worshipp, and her grace to have,
Which of all earthly thinges he most did crave:
And ever, as he rode, his hart did earne
To prove his puissance in battell brave
Upon his foe, and his new force to learne;
Upon his foe, a Dragon horrible and stearne.

A lovely Ladie rode him faire beside,
Upon a lowly asse more white then snow;
Yet she much whiter; but the same did hide
Under a veile, that wimpled was full low;

* countenance.

† dreaded.

And over all a blacke stole shee did throw :
As one that inly mournd, so was she sad,
And heavie sate upon her palfrey slow ;
Seemèd in heart some hidden care she had ;
And by her in a line a milke-white lambe she lad.

So pure and innocent as that same lambe
She was in life and every vertuous lore ;
And by descent from royall lynage came
Of ancient kinges and queenes, that had of yore
Their scepters stretcht from east to westernne
shore,

And all the world in their subiection held ;
Till that infernall feend with foule uprore
Forwasted * all their land, and then expeld ;
Whom to avenge, she had this Knight from farr compeld.

Behind her farre away a Dwarfe did lag,
That lasie seemd, in being ever last,
Or wearied with bearing of her bag
Of needments at his backe. Thus as they past,
The day with cloudes was suddleine overcast,
And angry Iove an hideous storme of raine
Did poure into his lemans lap so fast,
That everie wight to shrowd it did constrain ;
And this faire couple eke to shroud themselves were fain.

Enforst to seeke some covert nigh at hand,
A shadie grove not farr away they spide,
That promist ayde the tempest to withstand ;
Whose loftie trees, yclad with sommers pride,
Did spred so broad, that heavens light did hide,
Not perceable with power of any starr :
And all within were pathes and alleies wide,
With footing worne, and leading inward farr :
Faire harbour that them seemes ; so in they entred ar.

THE CAVE OF SLEEP.

FROM THE "FAERIE QUEENE," BOOK I. CANTO I.

HE, making speedy way through spersèd † ayre,
And through the world of waters wide and deepe,
To Morpheus house doth hastily repaire,
Amid the bowels of the earth full steepe,
And low, where dawning day doth never peepe,
His dwelling is ; there Tethys his wet bed

In silver deaw his ever-drouping hed,
Whiles sad Night over him her mantle black doth

And, more to lulle him in his slumber soft,
A trickling streame from high rock tumbling

sowne *

Of swarming bees, did cast him in a swowne. †

UNA AND THE LION.

FROM THE "FAERIE QUEENE," BOOK I. CANTO III.

ONE day, nigh wearie of the yrkesome way,
From her unhastie beast she did alight ;
And on the grasse her dainty limbs did lay
In secrete shadow, far from all mens sight ;
From her fayre head her fillet she undight,
And layd her stole aside. Her angels face,
As the great eye of heaven, shynd bright,
And made a sunshine in the shady place ;
Did never mortall eye behold such heavenly grace.

It fortunèd, out of the thickest wood
A ramping lyon rushèd suddainly,
Hunting full greedy after salvage blood : †
Soone as the royall virgin he did spy,
With gaping mouth at her ran greedily,
To have attained devoured her tender corse ;
But to the pray whenas he drew more ny,
His bloody rage aswagèd with remorse, §
And, with the sight amazd, forgat his furious forse.

Instead thereof, he kist her wearie feet,
And lickt her lilly hands with fawning tong ;
As he her wrongèd innocence did weat. ||
O how can beautie maister the most strong,
And simple truth subdue avenging wrong !
Whose yielded pryde and proud submission,
Still dreading death, when she had markèd long,
Her hart gan melt in great compassion ;
And drizling teares did shed for pure affection.

"The lyon, lord of everie beast in field," Quoth she, "his princely puissance doth abate,
And mightie proud to humble weake does yield,
Forgetfull of the hungry rage, which late
Him prickt, in pittie of my sad estate : —
But he, my lyon, and my noble lord,
How does he find in cruell hart to hate
Her, that him lovèd, and ever most adord
As the god of my life ? why hath he me abhord ?"

* sound.

† swoon — deep sleep.

Redounding tears did choketh' end of her plaint,
Which softly echoed from the neighbour wood ;
And, sad to see her sorrowfull constraint,
The kingly beast upon her gazing stood ;
With pittie calmd, downe fell his angry mood.
At last, in close hart shutting up her payne,
Arose the virgin borne of heavenly brood,
And to her snowy palfrey got agayne,
To seeke her strayed champion if she might at-tayne.

The lyon would not leave her desolate,
But with her went along, as a strong gard
Of her chast person, and a faythfull mate
Of her sad troubles and misfortunes hard :
Still, when she slept, he kept both watch and
ward ;
And, when she wakt, he wayted diligent,
With humble service to her will prepard ;
From her fayre eyes he took commandment,
And ever by her lookes conceivèd her intent.

THE BOWER OF BLISS.

FROM THE "FAERIE QUEENE," BOOK II. CANTO XII.

THERE the most daintie paradise on ground
Itselfe doth offer to his sober eye,
In which all pleasures plenteously abownd,
And none does others happinesse envy ;
The painted flowres ; the trees upshooting hye ;
The dales for shade ; the hills for breathing space ;
The trembling groves ; the christall running by ;
And, that which all faire workes doth most aggrace,*
The art, which all that wrought, appeared in no
place.

One would have thought (so cunningly the rude
And scornèd partes were mingled with the fine)
That Nature had for wantonnesse ensude †
Art, and that Art at Nature did repine ;
So striving each th' other to undermine,
Each did the others worke more beautify ;
So differing both in willes agreed in fine :
So all agreed, through sweete diversity,
This garden to adorne with all variety.

And in the midst of all a fountaine stood,
Of richest substance that on earth might bee,
So pure and shiny that the silver flood
Through every channell running one might see ;
Most goodly it with curious ymagere

* give grace to.

† imitated.

Was over wrought, and shapes of naked boyes,
Of which some seemed with lively iollitee
To fly about, playing their wanton toyes, Whylest others did themselves embay * in liquid
ioyes.

And over all, of purest gold, was spred
A trayle of yvie in his native hew ;
For the rich metall was so coloured,
That wight, who did not well advised † it vew,
Would surely deeme it to bee yvie trew :
Low his lascivious armes adown did creepe,
That, themselves dipping in the silver dew,
Their fleecy flowres they fearefully did steepe,
Which drops of christall seemed for wantones to weep.

Infinit streames continually did well
Out of this fountaine, sweet and faire to see,
The which into an ample laver fell,
And shortly grew to so great quantitie,
That like a little lake it seemed to bee ;
Whose depth exceeded not three cubits hight,
That through the waves one might the bottom
see,
All pav'd beneath with iaspar shining bright,
That seemd the fountaine in that sea did sayle upright.

Eftsoons ‡ they heard a most melodious sound,
Of all that mote delight a daintie eare,
Such as attonce might not on living ground,
Save in this paradise, be heard elsewhere.
Right hard it was for wight which did it heare,
To read what manner musicke that mote bee ;
For all that pleasing is to living eare
Was there consorted in one harmonnee ;
Birdes, voices, instruments, windes, waters, all agreed :

The ioyous birdes, shrouded in chearefull shade,
Their notes unto the voice attempted sweet ;
Th' angelical soft trembling voyces made
To th' instruments divine response meet ;
The silver-sounding instruments did meet
With the base murmure of the waters fall ;
The waters fall, with difference discreet,
Now soft, now loud, unto the wind did call ;
The gentle warbling wind low answered to all.

THE LADY LOST IN THE WOOD.

FROM "COMUS."

THIS way the noise was, if mine ear be true,
My best guide now ; methought it was the sound
Of riot and ill-managed merriment,
Such as the jocund flute or gamesome pipe

* bathe.

† with attention.

‡ immediately.

Stirs up amongst the loose, unlettered hinds,
 When for their teeming flocks and granges full
 In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan,
 And thank the gods amiss. I should be loath
 To meet the rudeness and swilled insolence
 Of such late wassailers ; yet O, where else
 Shall I inform my unacquainted feet

In the blind mazes of this tangled wood ?
 My brothers, when they saw me wearied out
 With this long way, resolving here to lodge
 Under the spreading favor of these pines,
 Stepped, as they said, to the next thicket side
 To bring me berries, or such cooling fruit
 As the kind, hospitable woods provide.
 They left me then, when the gray-hooded even,
 Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
 Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain.
 But where they are, and why they came not
 back,

Is now the labor of my thoughts : 't is likeliest
 They had engaged their wandering steps too far,
 And envious darkness, ere they could return,
 Had stole them from me ; else, O thievish night,
 Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
 In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
 That nature hung in heaven, and filled their lamps

With everlasting oil, to give due light
 To the misled and lonely traveller ?
 This is the place, as well as I may guess,
 Whence even now the tumult of loud mirth
 Was rife, and perfect in my listening ear,
 Yet naught but single darkness do I find.
 What might this be ? A thousand fantasies
 Begin to throng into my memory,
 Of calling shapes, and beckoning shadows dire,
 And airy tongues, that syllable men's names
 On sands and shores and desert wildernesses.
 These thoughts may startle well, but not astound
 The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended
 By a strong-siding champion, Conscience.
 O welcome, pure-eyed Faith, white-handed Hope,
 Thou hovering angel girt with golden wings,
 And thou unblemished form of Chastity ;
 I see you visibly, and now believe
 That he, the Supreme Good, to whom all things ill
 Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
 Would send a glistening guardian, if need were,
 To keep my life and honor unassailed.

THE NYMPH OF THE SEVERN.

FROM "COMUS."

THERE is a gentle nymph not far from hence
 That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn
 stream.
 Sabrina is her name, a virgin pure ;

Whilom she was the daughter of Loecine,
 That had the sceptre from his father Brute.
 She, guiltless damsel, flying the mad pursuit
 Of her enraged stepdame Guendolen,
 Commended her fair innocence to the flood,
 That stayed her flight with his cross-flowing course.

The water-nymphs that in the bottom played,
 Held up their pearlèd wrists, and took her in,
 Bearing her straight to aged Nereus' hall,
 Who, piteous of her woes, reared her lank head,
 And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
 In nectared lavers strewed with asphodel,
 And through the porch and inlet of each sense
 Dropped in ambrosial oils, till she revived,
 And underwent a quick immortal change,
 Made Goddess of the river : still she retains
 Her maiden gentleness, and oft at eve
 Visits the herds along the twilight meadows,
 Helping all urchin blasts, and ill-luck signs
 That the shrewd meddling elf delights to make,
 Which she with precious vialèd liquors heals ;
 For which the shepherds at their festivals
 Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays,
 And throw sweet garland wreaths into her stream
 Of pansies pinks, and gaudy daffodils.

THE HAUNT OF THE SORCERER.

FROM "COMUS."

WITHIN the navel of this hideous wood,
 Immured in cypress shades a sorcerer dwells,
 Of Bacchus and of Circè born, great Comus,
 Deep skilled in all his mother's witcheries ;
 And here to every thirsty wanderer
 By sly enticement gives his baneful cup,
 With many murmurs mixed, whose pleasing poison

The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
 And the inglorious likeness of a beast
 Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage
 Charactered in the face : this I have learnt
 Tending my flocks hard by i' the hilly crofts,
 That brow this bottom-glade, whence night by
 night,

He and his monstrous rout are heard to howl,
 Like stabled wolves, or tigers at their prey,
 Doing abhorred rites to Hecatè
 In their obscurèd haunts of inmost bowers.
 Yet have they many baits, and guileful spells,
 T' inveigle and invite the unwary sense
 Of them that pass unweeting by the way.
 This evening late, by them the chewing flocks
 Had ta'en their supper on the savory herb
 Of knot-grass dew-besprent, and were in fold,

I sat me down to watch upon a bank
 With ivy canopied, and interwove
 With flaunting honeysuckle, and began,
 Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
 To meditate my rural minstrelsy,
 Till fancy had her fill, but ere a close,
 The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,
 And filled the air with barbarous dissonance ;
 At which I ceased, and listened then awhile,
 Till an unusual stop of sudden silence
 Gave respite to the drowsy frighted steeds,
 That draw the litter of close-curtained sleep ;
 At last a soft and solemn-breathing sound
 Rose like a stream of rich distilled perfumes,
 And stole upon the air, that even Silence
 Was took ere she was ware, and wished she might Deny her nature, and be never more,
 Still to be so displaced. I was all ear,
 And took in strains that might create a soul
 Under the ribs of death : but O, ere long
 Too well I did perceive it was the voice
 Of my most honored Lady, your dear sister.
 Amazed I stood, harrowed with grief and fear,
 And O, poor hapless nightingale, thought I,
 How sweet thou sing'st, how near the deadly snare !

THE CASTLE OF INDOLENCE.

FROM CANTO I.

The castle hight of Indolence,
 And its false luxury ;
 Where for a little time, alas !
 We lived right jollily.

O MORTAL man, who livest here by toil,
 Do not complain of this thy hard estate ;
 That like an emmet thou must ever moil,
 Is a sad sentence of an ancient date ;
 And, certes, there is for it reason great ;
 For, though sometimes it makes thee weep and wail,
 And curse thy star, and early drudge and late ;
 Withouten that would come a heavier bale,
 Loose life, unruly passions, and diseases pale.

In lowly dale, fast by a river's side,
 With woody hill o'er hill encompassed round
 A most enchanting wizard did abide,
 Than whom a fiend more fell is nowhere found.
 It was, I ween, a lovely spot of ground ;
 And there a season atween June and May,
 Half pranked with spring, with summer half embrowned,
 A listless climate made, where, sooth to say,
 No living wight could work, ne cared even for play.

Was naught around but images of rest :
 Sleep-soothing groves, and quiet lawns between ;
 And flowery beds that slumbrous influence kest,
 From poppies breathed ; and beds of pleasant
 green,
 Where never yet was creeping creature seen.
 Meantime, unnumbered glittering streamlets played,
 And hurled everywhere their waters sheen ;
 That, as they bickered through the sunny glade,
 Though restless still themselves, a lulling murmur made.

Joined to the prattle of the purling rills
 Were heard the lowing herds along the vale,
 And flocks loud beating from the distant hills,
 And vacant shepherds piping in the dale :
 And, now and then, sweet Philomel would wail,
 Or stockdoves plain amid the forest deep,
 That drowsy rustled to the sighing gale ;
 And still a coil the grasshopper did keep ;
 Yet all these sounds yblent inclined all to sleep.

Full in the passage of the vale, above,
 A sable, silent, solemn forest stood ;
 Where naught but shadowy forms was seen to move,
 As Idless fancied in her dreaming mood :
 And up the hills, on either side, a wood
 Of blackening pines, aye waving to and fro,
 Sent forth a sleepy horror through the blood ;
 And where this valley winded out, below,
 The murmuring main was heard, and scarcely heard, to flow.

A pleasing land of drowsyhed it was,
 Of dreams that wave before the half-shut eye ;
 And of gay castles in the clouds that pass,
 Forever flushing round a summer sky :
 There eke the soft delights, that witchingly
 Instil a wanton sweetness through the breast,
 And the calm pleasures always hovered nigh ;
 But whate'er smacked of noyance or unrest
 Was far, far off expelled from this delicious nest.

The landscape such, inspiring perfect ease,
 Where Indolence (for so the wizard hight)
 Close-hid his castle mid embowering trees,
 That half shut out the beams of Phœbus bright,
 And made a kind of checkered day and night ;
 Meanwhile, unceasing at the massy gate,
 Beneath a spacious palm, the wicked wight
 Was placed ; and to his lute, of cruel fate
 And labor harsh, complained, lamenting man's estate.

Thither continual pilgrims crowded still,
From all the roads of earth that pass there by :
For, as they chanced to breathe on neighboring hill,

The freshness of this valley smote their eye,
And drew them ever and anon more nigh ;
Till clustering round the enchanter false they hung,

Ymolten with his siren melody ;
While o'er the enfeebling lute his hand he flung,

And to the trembling chords these tempting
verses sung :

“ Behold ! ye pilgrims of this earth, behold !
See all, but man, with unearned pleasure gay :
See her bright robes the butterfly unfold,
Broke from her wintry tomb in prime of May !
What youthful bride can equal her array ?
Who can with her for easy pleasure vie ?
From mead to mead with gentle wing to stray,
From flower to flower on balmy gales to fly,
Is all she has to do beneath the radiant sky.

“ Behold the merry minstrels of the morn,
The swarming songsters of the careless grove,
Ten thousand throats ! that, from the flowering thorn,

Hymn their good God, and carol sweet of love,
Such grateful kindly raptures them emove :
They neither plough nor sow ; ne, fit for flail,
E'er to the barn the nodden sheaves they drove :

Yet theirs each harvest dancing in the gale,
Whatever crowns the hill, or smiles along the vale.

“ Outcast of nature, man ! the wretched thrall
Of bitter dropping sweat, of sweltry pain,
Of cares that eat away the heart with gall,
And of the vices, an inhuman train,
That all proceed from savage thirst of gain :
For when hard-hearted interest first began
To poison earth, Astræa left the plain ;
Guile, violence, and murder seized on man,
And, for soft milky streams, with blood the rivers ran.

“ Come, ye who still the cumbrous load of life
Push hard up hill ; but as the furthest steep
You trust to gain, and put an end to strife,
Down thunders back the stone with mighty sweep,

And hurls your labors to the valley deep,
Forever vain : come, and withouten fee,
I in oblivion will your sorrows steep,
Your cares, your toils ; will steep you in a sea
Of full delight : O, come, ye weary wights, to me !

“ With me, you need not rise at early dawn,
To pass the joyless day in various stounds ;
Or, louting low, on upstart fortune fawn,
And sell fair honor for some paltry pounds ;
Or through the city take your dirty rounds,
To cheat, and dun, and lie, and visit pay,
Now flattering base, now giving secret wounds ;
Or prowl in courts of law for human prey,
In venal senate thief, or rob on broad highway.

“ No cocks, with me, to rustic labor call,
From village on to village sounding clear ;
To tardy swain no shrill-voiced matrons squall ;
No dogs, no babes, no wives, to stun your ear ;
No hammers thump ; no horrid blacksmith
sear,
Ne noisy tradesman your sweet slumbers start,
With sounds that are a misery to hear :
But all is calm, as would delight the heart
Of Sybarite of old, all nature, and all art.

“ Here naught but candor reigns, indulgent ease,
Good-natured lounging, sauntering up and
down :
They who are pleased themselves must always
please ;
On others' ways they never squint a frown,
Nor heed what haps in hamlet or in town :
Thus, from the source of tender Indolence,
With milky blood the heart is overflown,
Is soothed and sweetened by the social sense ;
For interest, envy, pride, and strife are banished
hence.

“ What, what is virtue, but repose of mind,
A pure ethereal calm, that knows no storm ;
Above the reach of wild ambition's wind,
Above those passions that this world deform,
And torture man, a proud malignant worm ?
But here, instead, soft gales of passion play,
And gently stir the heart, thereby to form
A quicker sense of joy ; as breezes stray Across the enlivened skies, and make them still more gay.

“ The best of men have ever loved repose :
They hate to mingle in the filthy fray ;
Where the soul sours, and gradual rancor grows,
Imbittered more from peevish day to day.
E'en those whom fame has lent her fairest ray,
The most renowned of worthy wights of yore,
From a base world at last have stolen away :
So Scipio, to the soft Cumæan shore
Retiring, tasted joy he never knew before.

“ But if a little exercise you choose,
Some zest for ease, 't is not forbidden here :
Amid the groves you may indulge the Muse,
Or tend the blooms, and deck the vernal year ;
Or softly stealing, with your watery gear,
Along the brooks, the crimson-spotted fry
You may delude : the whilst, amused, you hear
Now the hoarse stream, and now the zephyr's
sigh,
Attuned to the birds, and woodland melody.

“ O grievous folly ! to heap up estate,
Losing the days you see beneath the sun ;
When, sudden, comes blind unrelenting fate,
And gives the untasted portion you have won
With ruthless toil, and many a wretch undone,
To those who mock you, gone to Pluto's reign,
There with sad ghosts to pine, and shadows
dun :
But sure it is of vanities most vain,
To toil for what you here untoiling may obtain.”

He ceased. But still their trembling ears retained
The deep vibrations of his witching song ;
That, by a kind of magic power, constrained
To enter in, pell-mell, the listening throng.
Heaps poured on heaps, and yet they slipt
along,
In silent ease ; as when beneath the beam
Of summer moons, the distant woods among,
Or by some flood all silvered with the gleam,
The soft-embodied fays through airy portal
stream :

By the smooth demon so it ordered was,
And here his baneful bounty first began :
Though some there were who would not further pass,
And his alluring baits suspected han.
The wise distrust the too fair-spoken man.
Yet through the gate they cast a wishful eye :
Not to move on, perdie, is all they can :
For do their very best they cannot fly,
But often each way look, and often sorely sigh.

When this the watchful wicked wizard saw,
With sudden spring he leaped upon them
straight ;
And soon as touched by his unhallowed paw,
They found themselves within the cursed gate :
Full hard to be repassed, like that of fate.
Not stronger were of old the giant crew,
Who sought to pull high Jove from regal state ;
Though feeble wretch he seemed, of sallow hue :
Certes, who bides his grasp, will that encounter ruo.

Ye gods of quiet, and of sleep profound !
Whose soft dominion o'er this castle sways,
And all the widely silent places round,
Forgive me, if my trembling pen displays
What never yet was sung in mortal lays.
But how shall I attempt such arduous string ?
I who have spent my nights and nightly days
In this soul-deadening place loose-loitering :
Ah ! how shall I for this uprear my moulted wing ?

Come on, my Muse, nor stoop to low despair,
Thou imp of Jove, touched by celestial fire !
Thou yet shalt sing of war, and actions fair,
Which the bold sons of Britain will inspire :
Of ancient bards thou yet shalt sweep the lyre ;
Thou yet shalt tread in tragic pall the stage,
Paint love's enchanting woes, the hero's ire,
The sage's calm, the patriot's noble rage,
Dashing corruption down through every worthless age.

The doors, that knew no shrill alarming bell
Ne cursed knocker plied by villain's hand,
Self-opened into halls, where who can tell
What elegance and grandeur wide expand ;
The pride of Turkey and of Persia land ?
Soft quilts on quilts, on carpets carpets spread,
And couches stretched around in seemly band ;
And endless pillows rise to prop the head ;
So that each spacious room was one full-swelling
bed ;

And everywhere huge covered tables stood,
With wines high-flavored and rich viands
crowned ;
Whatever sprightly juice or tasteful food
On the green bosom of this earth are found,
And all old ocean 'genders in his round :
Some hand unseen these silently displayed,
Even undemanded by a sign or sound ;
You need but wish, and instantly obeyed,
Fair ranged the dishes rose, and thick the glasses
played.

Here freedom reigned, without the least alloy ;
Nor gossip's tale, nor ancient maiden's gail,
Nor saintly spleen durst murmur at our joy,
And with envenomed tongue our pleasures pall.
For why ? there was but one great rule for all ;
To wit, that each should work his own desire,
And eat, drink, study, sleep, as it may fall,
Or melt the time in love, or wake the lyre,
And carol what, unbid, the Muses might inspire.

The rooms with costly tapestry were hung,
Where was inwoven many a gentle tale ;
Such as of old the rural poets sung,
Or of Arcadian or Sicilian vale :

Reclining lovers, in the lonely dale,
 Poured forth at large the sweetly tortured
 heart ;
 Or, sighing tender passion, swelled the gale,
 And taught charmed echo to resound their smart ;
 While flocks, woods, streams around, repose and peace impart.

Each sound too here to languishment inclined,
 Lulled the weak bosom, and induced ease ;
 Aerial music in the warbling wind,
 At distance rising oft, by small degrees,
 Nearer and nearer came, till o'er the trees
 It hung, and breathed such soul-dissolving airs,
 As did, alas ! with soft perdition please :
 Entangled deep in its enchanting snares,
 The listening heart forgot all duties and all cares.

A certain music, never known before,
 Here lulled the pensive, melancholy mind ;
 Full easily obtained. Behooves no more,
 But sidelong, to the gently waving wind,
 To lay the well-tuned instrument reclined ;
 From which, with airy flying fingers light,
 Beyond each mortal touch the most refined,
 The god of winds drew sounds of deep delight :
 Whence, with just cause, the harp of Æolus it hight.

Ah me ! what hand can touch the string so fine ?
 Who up the lofty diapason roll
 Such sweet, such sad, such solemn airs divine,
 Then let them down again into the soul :
 Now rising love they fanned ; now pleasing dole
 They breathed, in tender musings, through the
 heart ;
 And now a graver sacred strain they stole,
 As when seraphic hands a hymn impart :
 Wild warbling nature all, above the reach of art !

JAMES THOMSON.

KUBLA KHAN.*

IN Xanadu did Kubla Khan
 A stately pleasure-dome decree
 Where Alph, the sacred river, ran,
 Through caverns measureless to man,
 Down to a sunless sea.

* "In the summer of the year 1797 the author, then in ill-health, had retired to a lonely farm-house between Porlock and Linton, on the Exmoor confines of Somerset and Devonshire. In consequence of a slight indisposition, an anodyne had been prescribed, from the effect of which he fell asleep in his chair at the moment he was reading the following sentence, or words of the same substance, in Purchas's Pilgrimage: 'Here the Khan Kubla commanded a palace to be built, and a stately garden thereunto; and thus ten miles of fertile ground were enclosed with a wall.' The author continued for about three hours in a profound sleep, at least of the external

So twice five miles of fertile ground
 With walls and towers were girdled round ;
 And there were gardens, bright with sinuous rills,
 Where blossomed many an incense-bearing tree ;
 And here were forests ancient as the hills,
 Infolding sunny spots of greenery.

But O that deep romantic chasm, which slanted
 Down the green hill athwart a cedarn cover !
 A savage place ! as holy and enchanted
 As e'er beneath a waning moon was haunted
 By woman wailing for her demon-lover !
 And from this chasm, with ceaseless turmoil seething,
 As if this earth in fast thick pants were breathing,
 A mighty fountain momently was forced,
 Amid whose swift, half-intermitted burst
 Huge fragments vaulted like rebounding hail,
 Or chaffy grain beneath the thresher's flail ;
 And mid these dancing rocks at once and ever
 It flung up momently the sacred river.
 Five miles, meandering with a mazy motion
 Through wood and dale, the sacred river ran, —
 Then reached the caverns measureless to man,
 And sank in tumult to a lifeless ocean,
 And mid this tumult Kubla heard from far
 Ancestral voices prophesying war.

The shadow of the dome of pleasure
 Floated midway on the waves
 Where was heard the mingled measure
 From the fountain and the caves.
 It was a miracle of rare device, —
 A sunny pleasure-dome with caves of ice !
 A damsel with a dulcimer
 In a vision once I saw ;
 It was an Abyssinian maid,
 And on her dulcimer she played,
 Singing of Mount Abora.
 Could I revive within me
 Her symphony and song,
 To such a deep delight 't would win me
 That, with music loud and long,
 I would build that dome in air, —
 That sunny dome ! those caves of ice !

senses, during which time he has the most vivid confidence that he could not have composed less than from two to three hundred lines ; if that indeed can be called composition in which all the images rose up before him as things, with a parallel production of the correspondent expressions, without any sensation or consciousness of effort. On awaking he appeared to himself to have a distinct recollection of the whole, and, taking his pen, ink, and paper, instantly and eagerly wrote down the lines that are here preserved. At this moment he was unfortunately called out by a person on business from Porlock, and detained by him above an hour, and on his return to his room found, to his no small surprise and mortification, that though he still retained some vague and dim recollection of the general purport of the vision, yet, with the exception of some eight or ten scattered lines and images, all the rest had passed away, like the images on the surface of a stream into which a stone had been cast, but, alas ! without the after restoration of the latter."—THE AUTHOR, 1816.

And all who heard should see them there,
 And all should cry, Beware ! beware
 His flashing eyes, his floating hair !
 Weave a circle round him thrice,
 And close your eyes with holy dread,
 For he on honey-dew hath fed,
 And drunk the milk of Paradise.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE.

SONG OF WOOD-NYMPHS.

Come here, come here, and dwell
 In forest deep !
 Come here, come here, and tell
 Why thou dost weep !
 Is it for love (sweet pain !)
 That thus thou dar'st complain
 Unto our pleasant shades, our summer leaves,
 Where naught else grieves ?

Come here, come here, and lie
 By whispering stream !
 Here no one dares to die
 For love's sweet dream ;
 But health all seek, and joy,
 And shun perverse annoy,
 And race along green paths till close of day,
 And laugh — alway !

Or else, through half the year,
 On rushy floor,
 We lie by waters clear,
 While skylarks pour
 Their songs into the sun !
 And when bright day is done,
 We hide 'neath bells of flowers or nodding corn,
 And dream — till morn !

BRYAN WALLER PROCTER (Barry Cornwall).

THE FAIRIES' LULLABY.

FROM "MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM," ACT II. SC. 3.

Enter TITANIA, with her train.

TITANIA. Come, now a roundel, and a fairy
 song ;
 Then, for the third part of a minute, hence ; —
 Some, to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds ;
 Some war with rear-mice for their leathern wings,
 To make my small elves coats ; and some keep
 back
 The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots, and wonders
 At our quaint spirits. Sing me now asleep ;
 Then to your offices, and let me rest.

SONG.

1 FAIRY. *You spotted snakes, with double tongue,
 Thorny hedgehogs, be not seen ;
 Newts and blind-worms, do no wrong :
 Come not near our fairy queen.*

CHORUS. *Philomel, with melody,
 Sing in our sweet lullaby ;
 Lulla, lulla, lullaby ; lulla, lulla, lullaby :
 Never harm,
 Nor spell nor charm,
 Come our lovely lady nigh ;
 So, good-night, with lullaby.*

2 FAIRY. *Weaving spiders, come not here,
 Hence, you long-legged spinners,
 hence !
 Beetles black, approach not near ;
 Worm, nor snail, do no offence.*

CHORUS. Philomel, with melody, etc.

1 FAIRY. Hence away ; now all is well :
 One, aloof, stand sentinel.
 [Exit Fairies. TITANIA sleeps.
 SHAKESPEARE.]

FAIRIES' SONG.

WE the fairies blithe and antic,
 Of dimensions not gigantic,
 Though the moonshine mostly keep us,
 Oft in orchards frisk and peep us.

Stolen sweets are always sweeter ;
 Stolen kisses much completer ;
 Stolen looks are nice in chapels ;
 Stolen, stolen be your apples.

When to bed the world are bobbing,
 Then 's the time for orchard-robbing ;
 Yet the fruit were scarce worth peeling
 Were it not for stealing, stealing.

From the Latin of THOMAS RANDOLPH.*
 Translation of LEIGH HUNT.

COMPLIMENT TO QUEEN ELIZABETH.

FROM "MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM," ACT II. SC. 2.

OBERON. My gentle Puck, come hither. Thou remember'st
 Since once I sat upon a promontory,
 And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
 Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,

* Randolph was a masterly scholar, and a profound student of the Greek and Latin poets, whose writings he imitated in those languages, and whose influence was marked in his English writings. He died (1634) at the age of twenty-nine, not fulfilling the fame promised by his early years.

That the rude sea grew civil at her song,
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-maid's music.

PUCK. I remember.

OBE. That very time I saw (but thou couldst not),

Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all armed : a certain aim he took
At a fair vestal throned by the west,
And loosed his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts :
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quenched in the chaste beams of the watery moon,
And the imperial votaress passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy free.
Yet marked I where the bolt of Cupid fell :
It fell upon a little western flower
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,
And maidens call it Love-in-idleness.
Fetch me that flower.

QUEEN MAB.

FROM "ROMEO AND JULIET," ACT I. SC. 4.

O, THEN, I see, Queen Mab hath been with you.
She is the fairies' midwife ; and she comes
In shape no bigger than an agate-stone
On the fore-finger of an alderman,
Drawn with a team of little atomies
Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep :
Her wagon-spokes made of long spinners' legs ;
The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers ;
The traces, of the smallest spider's web ;
The collars, of the moonshine's watery beams ;
Her whip, of cricket's bone ; the lash, of film ;
Her wagoner, a small gray-coated gnat,
Not half so big as a round little worm
Pricked from the lazy finger of a maid :
Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,
Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub,
Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers.
And in this state she gallops night by night
Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love ;
On courtiers' knees, that dream on courtiers
straight ;
O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees ;
O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream, —
Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,
Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are :
Sometime she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,
And then dreams he of smelling out a suit ;
And sometime comes she with a tithe-pig's tail,
Tickling a parson's nose as 'a lies asleep,
Then dreams he of another benefice :

Sometime she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
And then dreams he of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,
Of healths five fathom deep ; and then anon
Drums in his ear, at which he starts, and wakes ;
And, being thus frightened, swears a prayer or two,
And sleeps again. This is that very Mab
That plats the manes of horses in the night ;
And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes :
This is the hag, when maids lie on their backs,
That presses them, and learns them first to bear,
Making them women of good carriage.

SHAKESPEARE.

THE FAIRIES.

UP the airy mountain,
Down the rushy glen,
We daren't go a hunting
For fear of little men ;
Wee folk, good folk,
Trooping all together ;
Green jacket, red cap,
And white owl's feather !

Down along the rocky shore
Some make their home, —
They live on crispy pancakes
Of yellow tide-foam ;
Some in the reeds
Of the black mountain-lake,
With frogs for their watch-dogs,
All night awake.

High on the hill-top
The old King sits ;
He is now so old and gray
He's nigh lost his wits.
With a bridge of white mist
Columbkil he crosses,
On his stately journeys
From Slieveleague to Rosses ;
Or going up with music
On cold starry nights,
To sup with the queen
Of the gay Northern Lights.

They stole little Bridget
For seven years long ;
When she came down again
Her friends were all gone.
They took her lightly back,
Between the night and morrow ;
They thought that she was fast asleep,
But she was dead with sorrow.

They have kept her ever since
 Deep within the lakes,
 On a bed of flag-leaves,
 Watching till she wakes.

By the craggy hillside,
 Through the mosses bare,
 They have planted thorn-trees
 For pleasure here and there.
 Is any man so daring
 To dig one up in spite,
 He shall find the thornies set
 In his bed at night.

Up the airy mountain,
 Down the rushy glen,
 We dare n't go a hunting
 For fear of little men ;
 Wee folk, good folk,
 Trooping all together ;
 Green jacket, red cap,
 And white owl's feather !

KILMENY.

FROM "THE QUEEN'S WAKE."

BONNY Kilmeny gaed up the glen ;
 But it wasna to meet Duneira's men,
 Nor the rosy monk of the isle to see,
 For Kilmeny was pure as pure could be.
 It was only to hear the yorlin sing,
 And pu' the cress-flower round the spring, —
 The scarlet hypp, and the hindberry,
 And the nut that hung frae the hazel-tree ;
 For Kilmeny was pure as pure could be.
 But lang may her minny look o'er the wa',
 And lang may she seek i' the green-wood shaw ;
 Lang the laird of Duneira blame,
 And lang, lang greet or Kilmeny come hame.

When many a day had come and fled,
 When grief grew calm, and hope was dead,
 When mass for Kilmeny's soul had been sung,
 When the bedesman had prayed, and the dead-
 bell rung ;

Late, late in a gloamin, when all was still,
 When the fringe was red on the westlin hill,
 The wood was sear, the moon i' the wane,
 The reek o' the cot hung over the plain, —
 Like a little wee cloud in the world its lane ;
 When the ingle lowed with an eiry leme,
 Late, late in the gloamin Kilmeny came hame !

"Kilmeny, Kilmeny, where have you been ?
 Lang hae we sought baith holt and den, —
 By linn, by ford, and green-wood tree ;
 Yet you are halesome and fair to see.

Where got you that joup o' the lily sheen ?
 That bonny snood of the birk sae green ?
 And these roses, the fairest that ever was seen ?
 Kilmeny, Kilmeny, where have you been ?"

Kilmeny looked up with a lovely grace,
 But nae smile was seen on Kilmeny's face ;
 As still was her look, and as still was her ee,
 As the stillness that lay on the emercant lea,
 Or the mist that sleeps on a waveless sea.
 For Kilmeny had been she knew not where,
 And Kilmeny had seen what she could not declare.

Kilmeny had been where the cock never crew,
 Where the rain never fell, and the wind never blew ;

But it seemed as the harp of the sky had rung,
 And the airs of heaven played round her tongue,
 When she spake of the lovely forms she had seen,
 And a land where sin had never been, —
 A land of love, and a land of light,
 Withouten sun or moon or night ;
 Where the river swa'd a living stream,
 And the light a pure celestial beam :
 The land of vision it would seem,
 A still, an everlasting dream.

In yon green-wood there is a waik,
 And in that waik there is a wene,
 And in that wene there is a maik,
 That neither has flesh, blood, nor bane ;
 And down in yon green-wood he walks his lane.

In that green wene Kilmeny lay,
 Her bosom happed wi' the flowerets gay ;
 But the air was soft, and the silence deep,
 And bonny Kilmeny fell sound asleep ;
 She kend nae mair, nor opened her ee,
 Till waked by the hymns of a far countrie.

She awaked on a couch of the silk sae slim,
 All striped wi' the bars of the rainbow's rim ;
 And lovely beings around were rife,
 Who erst had travelled mortal life ;
 And aye they smiled, and 'gan to speer :
 "What spirit has brought this mortal here ?"

"Lang have I journeyed the world wide,"
 A meek and reverend fere replied ;
 "Baith night and day I have watched the fair
 Eident a thousand years and mair.
 Yes, I have watched o'er ilk degree,
 Wherever blooms femenitye ;
 But sinless virgin, free of stain,
 In mind and body, fand I nane.
 Never, since the banquet of time,
 Found I a virgin in her prime,
 Till late this bonny maiden I saw,
 As spotless as the morning snaw.

Full twenty years she has lived as free
As the spirits that sojourn in this countrye.
I have brought her away frae the snares of men,
That sin or death she may never ken."

They clasped her waist and her hands sae fair ;
They kissed her cheek, and they kemed her hair ;
And round came many a blooming fere,
Saying, "Bonny Kilmeny, ye're welcome here ;
Women are freed of the littand scorn ;
O, blest be the day Kilmeny was born !
Now shall the land of the spirits see,
Now shall it ken, what a woman may be !
Many a lang year in sorrow and pain,
Many a lang year through the world we've gane,
Commissioned to watch fair womankind,
For it's they who nurice the immortal mind.
We have watched their steps as the dawning
shone,

And deep in the greenwood walks alone ;
By lily bower and silken bed
The viewless tears have o'er them shed ;
Have soothed their ardent minds to sleep,
Or left the couch of love to weep.
We have seen ! we have seen ! but the time must come,
And the angels will weep at the day of doom !

"O, would the fairest of mortal kind
Aye keep the holy truths in mind,
That kindred spirits their motions see,
Who watch their ways with anxious e'e,
And grieve for the guilt of humanitee !
O, sweet to Heaven the maiden's prayer,
And the sigh that heaves a bosom sae fair !
And dear to Heaven the words of truth
And the praise of virtue frae beauty's mouth !
And dear to the viewless forms of air
The minds that kythe as the body fair !

"O bonny Kilmeny ! free frae stain,
If ever you seek the world again, —
That world of sin, of sorrow and fear, —
O, tell of the joys that are waiting here ;
And tell of the signs you shall shortly see ;
Of the times that are now, and the times that shall be."

They lifted Kilmeny, they led her away,
And she walked in the light of a sunless day ;
The sky was a dome of crystal bright,
The fountain of vision, and fountain of light ;
The emerald fields were of dazzling glow,
And the flowers of everlasting blow.
Then deep in the stream her body they laid,
That her youth and beauty never might fade ;
And they smiled on heaven, when they saw her lie
In the stream of life that wandered by.

And she heard a song, — she heard it sung,
She kend not where ; but sae sweetly it rung,
It fell on her ear like a dream of the morn, —
"O, blest be the day Kilmeny was born !
Now shall the land of the spirits see,
Now shall it ken, what a woman may be !
The sun that shines on the world sae bright,
A borrowed gleid frae the fountain of light ;
And the moon that sleeks the sky sae dun,
Like a gouden bow, or a beamless sun,
Shall wear away, and be seen nae mair ;
And the angels shall miss them, travelling the air.
But lang, lang after baith night and day,
When the sun and the world have edyed away,
When the sinner has gane to his wesome doom,
Kilmeny shall smile in eternal bloom !"

They bore her away, she wist not how,
For she felt not arm nor rest below ;
But so swift they wained her through the light,
'T was like the motion of sound or sight ;
They seemed to split the gales of air,
And yet nor gale nor breeze was there.
Unnumbered groves below them grew ;
They came, they past, and backward flew,
Like floods of blossoms gliding on,
In moment seen, in moment gone.
O, never vales to mortal view
Appeared like those o'er which they flew,
That land to human spirits given,
The lowermost vales of the storied heaven ;
From whence they can view the world below,
And heaven's blue gates with sapphires glow, —
More glory yet unmeet to know.

They bore her far to a mountain green,
To see what mortal never had seen ;
And they seated her high on a purple sward,
And bade her heed what she saw and heard,
And note the changes the spirits wrought ;
For now she lived in the land of thought. —
She looked, and she saw nor sun nor skies,
But a crystal dome of a thousand dyes ;
She looked, and she saw nae land aright,
But an endless whirl of glory and light ;
And radiant beings vent and came,
Far swifter than wind or the linkèd flame ;
She hid her een frae the dazzling view ;
She looked again, and the scene was new.

She saw a sun on a summer sky,
And clouds of amber sailing by ;
A lovely land beneath her lay,
And that land had glens and mountains gray ;
And that land had valleys and hoary piles,
And marlèd seas, and a thousand isles ;
Its fields were speckled, its forests green,
And its lakes were all of the dazzling sheen,

Like magic mirrors, where slumbering lay
The sun and the sky and the cloudlet gray,
Which heaved and trembled, and gently swung ;
On every shore they seemed to be hung ;
For there they were seen on their downward plain
A thousand times and a thousand again ;
In winding lake and placid firth, —
Little peaceful heavens in the bosom of earth.

Kilmeny sighed and seemed to grieve,
For she found her heart to that land did cleave ;
She saw the corn wave on the vale ;
She saw the deer run down the dale ;
She saw the plaid and the broad claymore,
And the brows that the badge of freedom bore ;
And she thought she had seen the land before.

She saw a lady sit on a throne,
The fairest that ever the sun shone on :
A lion licked her hand of milk,
And she held him in a leish of silk ;
And a leifu' maiden stood at her knee,
With a silver wand and melting ee ;
Her sovereign shield till love stole in,
And poisoned all the fount within.

Then a gruff untoward bedesman came,
And hundit the lion on his dame ;
And the guardian maid wi' the dauntless ee,
She dropped a tear, and left her knee ;
And she saw till the queen frae the lion fled,
Till the bonniest flower of the world lay dead ;
A coffin was set on a distant plain,
And she saw the red blood fall like rain :
Then bonny Kilmeny's heart grew sair,
And she turned away, and could look nae mair.

Then the gruff grim carle girnèd amain,
And they trampled him down, but he rose again ;
And he baited the lion to deeds of weir,
Till he lapped the blood to the kingdom dear ;
And weening his head was danger-preef,
When crowned with the rose and clover leaf,
He gowled at the carle, and chased him away
To feed wi' the deer on the mountain gray.
He gowled at the carle, and he gecked at Heaven ;
But his mark was set, and his arles given.
Kilmeny a while her een withdrew ;
She looked again, and the scene was new.

She saw below her fair unfurled
One half of all the glowing world,
Where oceans rolled, and rivers ran,
To bound the aims of sinful man.
She saw a people, fierce and fell,
Burst frae their bounds like fiends of hell ;
There lilies grew, and the eagle flew,
And she herked on her ravening crew,

Till the cities and towers were wrapt in a blaze,
And the thunder it roared o'er the lands and the seas.

The widows they wailed, and the red blood ran,
And she threatened an end to the race of man :
She never lened, nor stood in awe,
Till caught by the lion's deadly paw.
Oh ! then the eagle swinked for life,
And brainzelled up a mortal strife ;
But flew she north, or flew she south,
She met wi' the gowl of the lion's mouth.

With a mooted wing and waefu' maen,
The eagle sought her eiry again ;
But lang may she cower in her bloody nest,
And lang, lang sleek her wounded breast,
Before she sey another flight,
To play wi' the norland lion's might.

But to sing the sights Kilmeny saw,
So far surpassing nature's law,
The singer's voice wad sink away,
And the string of his harp wad cease to play.
But she saw till the sorrows of man were by,
And all was love and harmony ; —
Till the stars of heaven fell calmly away,
Like the flakes of snaw on a winter's day.

Then Kilmeny begged again to see
The friends she had left in her own countrie,
To tell the place where she had been,
And the glories that lay in the land unseen ;
To warn the living maidens fair,
The loved of heaven, the spirits' care,
That all whose minds unmeled remain
Shall bloom in beauty when time is gane.

With distant music, soft and deep,
They lulled Kilmeny sound asleep ;
And when she awakened, she lay her lane,
All happed with flowers in the green-wood wene.
When seven long years had come and fled ;
When grief was calm, and hope was dead ;
When scarce was remembered Kilmeny's name,
Late, late in a gloamin, Kilmeny came hame !
And O, her beauty was fair to see,
But still and steadfast was her ee !
Such beauty bard may never declare,
For there was no pride nor passion there ;
And the soft desire of maidens' een
In that mild face could never be seen.
Her seymar was the lily flower,
And her cheek the moss-rose in the shower ;
And her voice like the distant melodye
That floats along the twilight sea.
But she loved to raike the lanely glen,
And kepted afar frae the haunts of men ;

Her holy hymns unheard to sing,
 To suck the flowers and drink the spring.
 But wherever her peaceful form appeared,
 The wild beasts of the hills were cheered;
 The wolf played blythely round the field;
 The lordly byson lowed and kneeled;
 The dun deer wooed with manner bland,
 And cowered aneath her lily hand.
 And when at even the woodlands rung,
 When hymns of other worlds she sung
 In ecstasy of sweet devotion,
 O, then the glen was all in motion!
 The wild beasts of the forest came,
 Broke from their bughts and faulds the tame,
 And goved around, charmed and amazed;
 Even the dull cattle crooned, and gazed,
 And murmured, and looked with anxious pain
 For something the mystery to explain.
 The buzzard came with the throstle-cock,
 The corby left her houf in the rock;
 The blackbird along wi' the eagle flew;
 The hind came tripping o'er the dew;
 The wolf and the kid their raikie began;
 And the tod, and the lamb, and the leveret ran;
 The hawk and the hern attour them hung,
 And the merl and the navis forhooyed their
 young;
 And all in a peaceful ring were hurled:
 It was like an eve in a sinless world!

When a month and day had come and gane,
 Kilmeny sought the green-wood wene;
 There laid her down on the leaves sae green,
 And Kilmeny on earth was never mair seen.
 But O the words that fell from her mouth
 Were words of wonder, and words of truth!
 But all the land were in fear and dread,
 For they kend na whether she was living or dead.
 It wasna her hame, and she couldna remain;
 She left this world of sorrow and pain,
 And returned to the land of thought again.

JAMES HOGG.

THE FAIRY CHILD.

THE summer sun was sinking
 With a mild light, calm and mellow;
 It shone on my little boy's bonnie cheeks,
 And his loose locks of yellow.

The robin was singing sweetly,
 And his song was sad and tender;
 And my little boy's eyes, while he heard the song,
 Smiled with a sweet, soft splendor.

My little boy lay on my bosom
 While his soul the song was quaffing;

The joy of his soul had tinged his cheek,
 And his heart and his eye were laughing.

I sate alone in my cottage,
 The midnight needle plying;
 I feared for my child, for the rush's light
 In the socket now was dying;

There came a hand to my lonely latch,
 Like the wind at midnight moaning;
 I knelt to pray, but rose again,
 For I heard my little boy groaning.

I crossed my brow and I crossed my breast,
 But that night my child departed,—
 They left a weakling in his stead,
 And I am broken-hearted!

O, it cannot be my own sweet boy,
 For his eyes are dim and hollow;
 My little boy is gone—is gone,
 And his mother soon will follow.

The dirge for the dead will be sung for me,
 And the mass be chanted meetly,
 And I shall sleep with my little boy,
 In the moonlight churchyard sweetly.

JOHN ANSTER.

THE CULPRIT FAY.

* My visual orbs are purged from film, and, lo!
 Instead of Anster's turnip-bearing vales,
 I see old fairy land's miraculous show!
 Her trees of tinsel kissed by freakish gales,
 Her ouphs that, cloaked in leaf-gold, skim the breeze,
 And fairies, swarming ————"

TENNANT'S ANSTER FAIR.

'T is the middle watch of a summer's night,—
 The earth is dark, but the heavens are bright;
 Naught is seen in the vault on high
 But the moon, and the stars, and the cloudless
 sky,

And the flood which rolls its milky hue,
 A river of light on the welkin blue.
 The moon looks down on old Cro'nest;
 She mellows the shades on his shaggy breast,
 And seems his huge gray form to throw
 In a silver cone on the wave below.
 His sides are broken by spots of shade,
 By the walnut bough and the cedar made;
 And through their clustering branches dark
 Glimmers and dies the firefly's spark,—
 Like starry twinkles that momentarily break
 Through the rifts of the gathering tempest's rack.

The stars are on the moving stream,
 And fling, as its ripples gently flow,
 A burnished length of wavy beam
 In an eel-like, spiral line below;

The winds are whist, and the owl is still ;
 The bat in the shelvy rock is hid ;
 And naught is heard on the lonely hill
 But the cricket's chirp, and the answer shrill
 Of the gauze-winged katydid ;
 And the plaint of the wailing whippoorwill,
 Who moans unseen, and ceaseless sings
 Ever a note of wail and woe,
 Till morning spreads her rosy wings,
 And earth and sky in her glances glow.

'T is the hour of fairy ban and spell :
 The wood-tick has kept the minutes well ;
 He has counted them all with click and stroke
 Deep in the heart of the mountain-oak,
 And he has awakened the sentry elfe
 Who sleeps with him in the haunted tree,
 To bid him ring the hour of twelve,
 And call the fays to their revelry ;
 Twelve small strokes on his tinkling bell
 ('T was made of the white snail's pearly shell):
 " Midnight comes, and all is well !
 Hither, hither wing your way !
 'T is the dawn of the fairy-day."

They come from beds of lichen green,
 They creep from the mullein's velvet screen ;
 Some on the backs of beetles fly
 From the silver tops of moon-touched trees,
 Where they swung in their cobweb hammocks
 high,
 And rocked about in the evening breeze ;
 Some from the hum-bird's downy nest, —
 They had driven him out by elfin power,
 And, pillowed on plumes of his rainbow breast,
 Had slumbered there till the charmed hour ;
 Some had lain in the scoop of the rock,
 With glittering ising-stars inlaid ;
 And some had opened the four-o'clock,
 And stole within its purple shade.
 And now they throng the moonlight glade,
 Above, below, on every side, —
 Their little mimin forms arrayed
 In the tricky pomp of fairy pride !

They come not now to print the lea,
 In freak and dance around the tree,
 Or at the mushroom board to sup,
 And drink the dew from the buttercup :
 A scene of sorrow waits them now,
 For an ouphe has broken his vestal vow ;
 He has loved an earthly maid,
 And left for her his woodland shade ;
 He has lain upon her lip of dew,
 And sunned him in her eye of blue,
 Fanned her cheek with his wing of air,
 Played in the ringlets of her hair,

And, nestling on her snowy breast,
 Forgot the lily-king's behest.
 For this the shadowy tribes of air
 To the elfin court must haste away :
 And now they stand expectant there,
 To hear the doom of the culprit fay.

The throne was reared upon the grass,
 Of spice-wood and of sassafraz ;
 On pillars of mottled tortoise-shell
 Hung the burnished canopy, —
 And o'er it gorgeous curtains fell
 Of the tulip's crimson drapery.
 The monarch sat on his judgment-seat,
 On his brow the crown imperial shone,
 The prisoner fay was at his feet,
 And his peers were ranged around the throne.
 He waved his sceptre in the air,
 He looked around and calmly spoke ;
 His brow was grave and his eye severe,
 But his voice in a softened accent broke :

" Fairy ! fairy ! list and mark :
 Thou hast broke thine elfin chain ;
 Thy flame-wood lamp is quenched and dark,
 And thy wings are dyed with a deadly stain, —
 Thou hast sullied thine elfin purity
 In the glance of a mortal maiden's eye ;
 Thou hast scorned our dread decree,
 And thou shouldst pay the forfeit high.
 But well I know her sinless mind
 Is pure as the angel forms above,
 Gentle and meek, and chaste and kind,
 Such as a spirit well might love.
 Fairy ! had she spot or taint,
 Bitter had been thy punishment :
 Tied to the hornet's shardy wings ;
 Tossed on the pricks of nettles' stings ;
 Or seven long ages doomed to dwell
 With the lazy worm in the walnut-shell
 Or every night to writhe and bleed
 Beneath the tread of the centipede ;
 Or bound in a cobweb-dungeon dim,
 Your jailer a spider, huge and grim,
 Amid the carrion bodies to lie
 Of the worm, and the bug, and the murdered fly :
 These it had been your lot to bear,
 Had a stain been found on the earthly fair.
 Now list, and mark our mild decree, —
 Fairy, this your doom must be :

" Thou shalt seek the beach of sand
 Where the water bounds the elfin land ;
 Thou shalt watch the oozy brine
 Till the sturgeon leaps in the bright moonshine,
 Then dart the glistening arch below,
 And catch a drop from his silver bow.

The water-sprites will wield their arms
 And dash around, with roar and rave,
 And vain are the woodland spirits' charms ;
 They are the imps that rule the wave.
 Yet trust thee in thy single might :
 If thy heart be pure and thy spirit right,
 Thou shalt win the warlock fight.

“ If the spray-bead gem be won,
 The stain of thy wing is washed away ;
 But another errand must be done
 Ere thy crime be lost for aye :
 Thy flame-wood lamp is quenched and dark,
 Thou must re-illuminate its spark.
 Mount thy steed, and spur him high
 To the heaven's blue canopy ;
 And when thou seest a shooting star,
 Follow it fast, and follow it far, —
 The last faint spark of its burning train
 Shall light the elfin lamp again.
 Thou hast heard our sentence, fay ;
 Hence ! to the water-side, away ! ”

The goblin marked his monarch well ;
 He spake not, but he bowed him low,
 Then plucked a crimson colen-bell,
 And turned him round in act to go.
 The way is long, he cannot fly,
 His soiled wing has lost its power,
 And he winds adown the mountain high,
 For many a sore and weary hour.
 Through dreary beds of tangled fern,
 Through groves of nightshade dark and dem,
 Over the grass and through the brake,
 Where toils the ant and sleeps the snake ;
 Now o'er the violet's azure flush
 He skips along in lightsome mood ;
 And now he thrives the bramble-bush,
 Till its points are dyed in fairy blood.
 He has leaped the bog, he has pierced the brier,
 He has swum the brook, and waded the mire,
 Till his spirits sank, and his limbs grew weak,
 And the red waxed fainter in his cheek.
 He had fallen to the ground outright,
 For rugged and dim was his onward track,
 But there came a spotted toad in sight,
 And he laughed as he jumped upon her
 back ;
 He bridled her mouth with a silkweed twist,
 He lashed her sides with an osier thong ;
 And now, through evening's dewy mist,
 With leap and spring they bound along,
 Till the mountain's magic verge is past,
 And the beach of sand is reached at last.

Soft and pale is the moony beam,
 Moveless still the glassy stream ;

The wave is clear, the beach is bright
 With snowy shells and sparkling stones ;
 The shore-surge comes in ripples light,
 In murmurings faint and distant moans ;
 And ever afar in the silence deep
 Is heard the splash of the sturgeon's leap,
 And the bend of his graceful bow is seen, —
 A glittering arch of silver sheen,
 Spanning the wave of burnished blue,
 And dripping with gems of the river-dew.

The elfin cast a glance around,
 As he lighted down from his courser toad,
 Then round his breast his wings he wound,
 And close to the river's brink he strode ;
 He sprang on a rock, he breathed a prayer,
 Above his head his arms he threw,
 Then tossed a tiny curve in air,
 And headlong plunged in the waters blue.

Up sprung the spirits of the waves
 From the sea-silk beds in their coral caves ;
 With snail-plate armor, snatched in haste,
 They speed their way through the liquid waste ;
 Some are rapidly borne along
 On the mailed shrimp or the prickly prong ;
 Some on the blood-red leeches glide,
 Some on the stony star-fish ride,
 Some on the back of the lancing squab,
 Some on the sideling soldier-crab ;
 And some on the jellied quarl, that flings
 At once a thousand streamy stings ;
 They cut the wave with the living oar,
 And hurry on to the moonlight shore,
 To guard their realms and chase away
 The footsteps of the invading fay.

Fearlessly he skims along,
 His hope is high, and his limbs are strong ;
 He spreads his arms like the swallow's wing,
 And throws his feet with a frog-like fling ;
 His locks of gold on the waters shine,
 At his breast the tiny foam-bees rise,
 His back gleams bright above the brine,
 And the wake-line foam behind him lies.
 But the water-sprites are gathering near
 To check his course along the tide ;
 Their warriors come in swift career
 And hem him round on every side ;
 On his thigh the leech has fixed his hold,
 The quarl's long arms are round him rolled,
 The prickly prong has pierced his skin,
 And the squab has thrown his javelin ;
 The gritty star has rubbed him raw,
 And the crab has struck with his giant claw ;
 He howls with rage, and he shrieks with pain ;
 He strikes around, but his blows are vain ;

Hopeless is the unequal fight,
Fairy ! naught is left but flight.

He turned him round, and fled amain,
With hurry and dash, to the beach again ;
He twisted over from side to side,
And laid his cheek to the cleaving tide ;
The strokes of his plunging arms are fleet,
And with all his might he flings his feet,
But the water-sprites are round him still,
To cross his path and work him ill.
They bade the wave before him rise ;
They flung the sea-fire in his eyes ;
And they stunned his ears with the scallop-stroke,
With the porpoise heave and the drum-fish croak.
O, but a weary wight was he

When he reached the foot of the dogwood-tree.
Gashed and wounded, and stiff and sore,
He laid him down on the sandy shore ;
He blessed the force of the charmed line,

And he banned the water-goblins' spite,
For he saw around in the sweet moonshine
Their little wee faces above the brine,
Giggling and laughing with all their might
At the piteous hap of the fairy wight.

Soon he gathered the balsam dew
From the sorrel-leaf and the henbane bud ;
Over each wound the balm he drew,
And with cobweb lint he stanchèd the blood.
The mild west-wind was soft and low,
It cooled the heat of his burning brow ;
And he felt new life in his sinews shoot,
As he drank the juice of the calamus-root ;
And now he treads the fatal shore
As fresh and vigorous as before.

Wrapped in musing stands the sprite ;
'T is the middle wane of night ;

His task is hard, his way is far,
But he must do his errand right
Ere dawning mounts her beamy car,
And rolls her chariot wheels of light ;
And vain are the spells of fairy-land, —
He must work with a human hand.

He cast a saddened look around ;
But he felt new joy his bosom swell,
When, glittering on the shadowed ground,
He saw a purple muscle-shell ;
Thither he ran, and he bent him low,
He heaved at the stern and he heaved at the bow,
And he pushed her over the yielding sand
Till he came to the verge of the haunted land.
She was as lovely a pleasure-boat
As ever fairy had paddled in,
For she glowed with purple paint without,
And shone with silvery pearl within ;

A sculler's notch in the stern he made,
An oar he shaped of the bootle-blade ;
Then sprung to his seat with a lightsome leap,
And launched afar on the calm, blue deep.

The imps of the river yell and rave.
They had no power above the wave ;
But they heaved the billow before the prow,
And they dashed the surge against her side,
And they struck her keel with jerk and blow,
Till the gunwale bent to the rocking tide.
She wimpled about to the pale moonbeam,
Like a feather that floats on a wind-tossed stream ;
And momentarily athwart her track
The quarl upreared his island back,
And the fluttering scallop behind would float,
And patter the water about the boat ;
But he bailed her out with his colen-bell,
And he kept her trimmed with a wary tread,
While on every side, like lightning, fell
The heavy strokes of his bootle-blade.

Onward still he held his way,
Till he came where the column of moonshine lay,
And saw beneath the surface dim
The brown-backed sturgeon slowly swim ;
Around him were the goblin train, —
But he sculled with all his might and main,
And followed wherever the sturgeon led,
Till he saw him upward point his head ;
Then he dropped his paddle-blade,
And held his colen-goblet up
To catch the drop in its crimson cup.

With sweeping tail and quivering fin
Through the wave the sturgeon flew,
And, like the heaven-shot javelin,
He sprung above the waters blue.
Instant as the star-fall light
He plunged him in the deep again.
But he left an arch of silver bright,
The rainbow of the moony main.
It was a strange and lovely sight
To see the puny goblin there ;
He seemed an angel form of light,
With azure wing and sunny hair,
Throned on a cloud of purple fair,
Circled with blue and edged with white,
And sitting, at the fall of even,
Beneath the bow of summer heaven.

A moment, and its lustre fell ;
But ere it met the billow blue
He caught within his crimson bell
A droplet of its sparkling dew ! —
Joy to thee, fay ! thy task is done,
Thy wings are pure, for the gem is won, —

Cheerly ply thy dripping oar,
And haste away to the elfin shore.

He turns, and, lo ! on either side
The ripples on his path divide ;
And the track o'er which his boat must pass
Is smooth as a sheet of polished glass.
Around, their limbs the sea-nymphs lave,

With snowy arms half swelling out,
While on the glossed and gleamy wave
Their sea-green ringlets loosely float.
They swim around with smile and song ;
They press the bark with pearly hand,
And gently urge her course along
Toward the beach of speckled sand,
And, as he lightly leaped to land,
They bade adieu with nod and bow ;
Then gayly kissed each little hand,
And dropped in the crystal deep below.

A moment stayed the fairy there ;
He kissed the beach and breathed a prayer ;
Then spread his wings of gilded blue,
And on to the elfin court he flew.
As ever ye saw a bubble rise,
And shine with a thousand changing dyes,
Till, lessening far, through ether driven,
It mingles with the hues of heaven ;
As, at the glimpse of morning pale,
The lance-fly spreads his silken sail,
And gleams with blendings soft and bright
Till lost in the shades of fading night, —
So rose from earth the lovely fay ;
So vanished, far in heaven away !

* * * * *

Up, fairy ! quit thy chickweed bower,
The cricket has called the second hour ;
Twice again, and the lark will rise
To kiss the streaking of the skies, —
Up ! thy charmed armor don,
Thou'lt need it ere the night be gone.

He put his acorn helmet on ;
It was plumed of the silk of the thistle-down ;
The corselet plate that guarded his breast
Was once the wild bee's golden vest ;
His cloak, of a thousand mingled dyes,
Was formed of the wings of butterflies ;
His shield was the shell of a lady-bug queen,
Studs of gold on a ground of green ;
And the quivering lance which he brandished
bright

Was the sting of a wasp he had slain in fight.
Swift he bestrode his firefly steed ;

He bared his blade of the bent-grass blue ;
He drove his spurs of the cockle-seed,
And away like a glance of thought he flew

To skim the heavens, and follow far
The fiery trail of the rocket-star.

The moth-fly, as he shot in air,
Crept under the leaf, and hid her there ;
The katydid forgot its lay,
The prowling gnat fled fast away,
The fell mosquito checked his drone
And folded his wings till the fay was gone.
And the wily beetle dropped his head,
And fell on the ground as if he were dead ;
They crouched then close in the darksome shade,

They quaked all o'er with awe and fear,
For they had felt the blue-bent blade,
And writhed at the prick of the elfin spear.
Many a time, on a summer's night,
When the sky was clear, and the moon was bright,
They had been roused from the haunted ground
By the yelp and bay of the fairy hound ;

They had heard the tiny bugle-horn,
They had heard the twang of the maize-silk string,
When the vine-twigg bows were tightly drawn,

And the needle-shaft through air was borne,
Feathered with down of the hum-bird's wing ;
And now they deemed the courier ouphe
Some hunter-sprite of the elfin ground,
And they watched till they saw him mount the roof

That canopies the world around ;
Then glad they left their covert lair,
And freaked about in the midnight air.

Up to the vaulted firmament
His path the firefly courser bent,
And at every gallop on the wind
He flung a glittering spark behind ;
He flies like a feather in the blast
Till the first light cloud in heaven is past.

But the shapes of air have begun their work,
And a drizzly mist is round him cast ;

He cannot see through the mantle murk ;
He shivers with cold, but he urges fast ;

Through storm and darkness, sleet and shade,
He lashes his steed, and spurs amain, —
For shadowy hands have twitched the rein,

And flame-shot tongues around him played,
And near him many a fiendish eye
Glared with a fell malignity,
And yells of rage, and shrieks of fear,
Came screaming on his startled ear.

His wings are wet around his breast,
The plume hangs dripping from his crest,
His eyes are blurred with the lightning's glare,
And his ears are stunned with the thunder's blare.
But he gave a shout, and his blade he drew,

He thrust before and he struck behind,
Till he pierced their cloudy bodies through,
And gashed their shadowy limbs of wind :

Howling the misty spectres flew,
They rend the air with frightful cries ;
For he has gained the welkin blue,
And the land of clouds beneath him lies.

Up to the cope careering swift,
In breathless motion fast,
Fleet as the swallow cuts the drift,
Or the sea-roc rides the blast,
The sapphire sheet of eve is shot,
The spherèd moon is past,
The earth but seems a tiny blot
On a sheet of azure vast.
O, it was sweet, in the clear moonlight,
To tread the starry plain of even !
To meet the thousand eyes of night,
And feel the cooling breath of heaven !
But the elfin made no stop or stay
Till he came to the bank of the Milky Way ;
Then he checked his courser's foot,
And watched for the glimpse of the planet-shoot.

Sudden along the snowy tide
That swelled to meet their footsteps' fall,
The sylphs of heaven were seen to glide,
Attired in sunset's crimson pall ;
Around the fay they weave the dance,
They skip before him on the plain,
And one has taken his wasp-sting lance,
And one upholds his bridle-rein ;
With warblings wild they lead him on
To where, through clouds of amber seen,
Studded with stars, resplendent shone
The palace of the sylphid queen.
Its spiral columns, gleaming bright,
Were streamers of the northern light ;
Its curtain's light and lovely flush
Was of the morning's rosy blush ;
And the ceiling fair that rose aboon,
The white and feathery fleece of noon.

But, O, how fair the shape that lay
Beneath a rainbow bending bright !
She seemed to the entranced fay
The loveliest of the forms of light ;
Her mantle was the purple rolled
At twilight in the west afar ;
'T was tied with threads of dawning gold,
And buttoned with a sparkling star.
Her face was like the lily roon
That veils the vèstal planet's hue ;
Her eyes, two beamlets from the moon,
Set floating in the welkin blue.
Her hair is like the sunny beam,
And the diamond gems which round it gleam
Are the pure drops of dewy even
That ne'er have left their native heaven.

She raised her eyes to the wondering sprite,
And they leaped with smiles ; for well I ween
Never before in the bowers of light
Had the form of an earthly fay been seen.
Long she looked in his tiny face ;
Long with his butterfly cloak she played ;
She smoothed his wings of azure lace,
And handled the tassel of his blade ;
And as he told, in accents low,
The story of his love and woe,
She felt new pains in her bosom rise,
And the tear-drop started in her eyes.
And "O, sweet spirit of earth," she cried,
"Return no more to your woodland height,
But ever here with me abide
In the land of everlasting light !
Within the fleecy drift we 'll lie,
We 'll hang upon the rainbow's rim ;
And all the jewels of the sky
Around thy brow shall brightly beam !
And thou shalt bathe thee in the stream
That rolls its whitening foam aboon,
And ride upon the lightning's gleam,
And dance upon the orbèd moon !
We 'll sit within the Pleiad ring,
We 'll rest on Orion's starry belt,
And I will bid my sylphs to sing
The song that makes the dew-mist melt ;
Their harps are of the umber shade
That hides the blush of waking day,
And every gleamy string is made
Of silvery moonshine's lengthened ray ;
And thou shalt pillow on my breast,
While heavenly breathings float around,
And, with the sylphs of ether blest,
Forget the joys of fairy ground."

She was lovely and fair to see,
And the elfin's heart beat fitfully ;
But lovelier far, and still more fair,
The earthly form imprinted there ;
Naught he saw in the heavens above
Was half so dear as his mortal love,
For he thought upon her looks so meek,
And he thought of the light flush on her cheek.
Never again might he bask and lie
On that sweet cheek and moonlight eye ;
But in his dreams her form to see,
To clasp her in his revelry,
To think upon his virgin bride,
Was worth all heaven, and earth beside.

"Lady," he cried, "I have sworn to-night,
On the word of a fairy knight,
To do my sentence-task aright ;
My honor scarce is free from stain, —
I may not soil its snows again ;

Betide me weal, betide me woe,
 Its mandate must be answered now."
 Her bosom heaved with many a sigh,
 The tear was in her drooping eye ;
 But she led him to the palace gate,
 And called the sylphs who hovered there,
 And bade them fly and bring him straight,
 Of clouds condensed, a sable car.
 With charm and spell she blessed it there,
 From all the fiends of upper air ;
 Then round him cast the shadowy shroud,
 And tied his steed behind the cloud ;
 And pressed his hand as she bade him fly
 Far to the verge of the northern sky,
 For by its wane and wavering light
 There was a star would fall to-night.

Borne afar on the wings of the blast,
 Northward away he speeds him fast,
 And his courser follows the cloudy wain
 Till the hoof-strokes fall like pattering rain.
 The clouds roll backward as he flies,
 Each flickering star behind him lies,
 And he has reached the northern plain,
 And backed his firefly steed again,
 Ready to follow in its flight
 The streaming of the rocket-light.

The star is yet in the vault of heaven,
 But it rocks in the summer gale ;
 And now 't is fitful and uneven,
 And now 't is deadly pale ;
 And now 't is wrapped in sulphur-smoke,
 And quenched is its rayless beam ;
 And now with a rattling thunder-stroke
 It bursts in flash and flame.
 As swift as the glance of the arrowy lance
 That the storm-spirit flings from high,
 The star-shot flew o'er the welkin blue,
 As it fell from the sheeted sky.
 As swift as the wind in its train behind
 The elfin gallops along :
 The fiends of the clouds are bellowing loud,
 But the sylphid charm is strong ;
 He gallops unhurt in the shower of fire,
 While the cloud-fiends fly from the blaze ;
 He watches each flake till its sparks expire,
 And rides in the light of its rays.
 But he drove his steed to the lightning's speed,
 And caught a glimmering spark ;
 Then wheeled around to the fairy ground,
 And sped through the midnight dark.

* * * * *

Ouphe and goblin ! imp and sprite !
 Elf of eve ! and starry fay !
 Ye that love the moon's soft light,
 Hither, — hither wend your way ;

Twine ye in a jocund ring,
 Sing and trip it merrily,
 Hand to hand, and wing to wing,
 Round the wild witch-hazel tree.

Hail the wanderer again
 With dance and song, and lute and lyre ;
 Pure his wing and strong his chain,
 And doubly bright his fairy fire.
 Twine ye in an airy round,
 Brush the dew and print the lea ;
 Skip and gambol, hop and bound,
 Round the wild witch-hazel tree.

The beetle guards our holy ground,
 He flies about the haunted place,
 And if mortal there be found,
 He hums in his ears and flaps his face ;
 The leaf-harp sounds our roundelay,
 The owlet's eyes our lanterns be ;
 Thus we sing and dance and play
 Round the wild witch-hazel tree.

But hark ! from tower to tree-top high,
 The sentry-elf his call has made ;
 A streak is in the eastern sky,
 Shapes of moonlight ! flit and fade !
 The hill-tops gleam in morning's spring,
 The skylark shakes his dappled wing,
 The day-glimpse glimmers on the lawn,
 The cock has crowed, and the fays are gone.

JOSEPH RODMAN DRAKE.

FAIRY SONG.

SHED no tear ! O, shed no tear !
 The flower will bloom another year.
 Weep no more ! O, weep no more !
 Young buds sleep in the root's white core.
 Dry your eyes ! O, dry your eyes !
 For I was taught in Paradise
 To ease my breast of melodies, —
 Shed no tear.

Overhead ! look overhead !
 'Mong the blossoms white and red, —
 Look up, look up ! I flutter now
 On this fresh pomegranate bough.
 See me ! 't is this silvery bill
 Ever cures the good man's ill,
 Shed no tear ! O, shed no tear !
 The flower will bloom another year.
 Adieu, adieu — I fly — adieu !
 I vanish in the heaven's blue, —
 Adieu, adieu !

JOHN KEATS.

FAREWELL TO THE FAIRIES.

FAREWELL rewards and fairies,
 Good housewives now may say,
 For now foul sluts in dairies
 Do fare as well as they.
 And though they sweep their hearths no less
 Than maids were wont to do,
 Yet who of late, for cleanliness,
 Finds sixpence in her shoe ?

Lament, lament, old Abbeys,
 The fairies' lost command :
 They did but change priests' babies,
 But some have changed your land ;
 And all your children sprung from thence
 Are now grown Puritans,
 Who live as changelings ever since,
 For love of your domains.

At morning and at evening both,
 You merry were and glad,
 So little care of sleep or sloth
 These pretty ladies had ;
 When Tom came home from labor,
 Or Cis to milking rose,
 Then merrily went their tabor,
 And nimbly went their toes.

Witness those rings and roundelays
 Of theirs, which yet remain,
 Were footed in Queen Mary's days
 On many a grassy plain ;
 But since of late Elizabeth,
 And later, James came in,
 They never danced on any heath
 As when the time hath been.

By which we note the fairies
 Were of the old profession,
 Their songs were Ave-Maries,
 Their dances were procession :
 But now, alas ! they all are dead,
 Or gone beyond the seas ;
 Or farther for religion fled,
 Or else they take their ease.

A tell-tale in their company
 They never could endure,
 And whoso kept not secretly
 Their mirth, was punished sure ;
 It was a just and Christian deed,
 To pinch such black and blue :
 O, how the commonwealth doth need
 Such justices as you !

RICHARD CORBET.

TAM O'SHANTER.

A TALE.

"Of Brownie and of Bogilie full is this Buke."

GAWIN DOUGLASS.

WHEN chapman billies leave the street,
 And drouthy neebors neebors meet,
 As market-days are wearing late,
 An' folk begin to tak the gate ;
 While we sit bousing at the nappy,
 An' getting fou and unco happy,
 We think na on the lang Scots miles,
 The mosses, waters, slaps, and styles,
 That lie between us and our hame,
 Where sits our sulky, sullen dame,
 Gathering her brows like gathering storm,
 Nursing her wrath to keep it warm.

This truth fand honest Tam O'Shanter,
 As he frae Ayr ae night did canter
 (Auld Ayr, wham ne'er a town surpasses,
 For honest men and bonnie lasses).

O Tam ! hadst thou been but sae wise
 As taen thy ain wife Kate's advice !
 She tauld thee weel thou was a skellum,
 A blethering, blustering, drunken blellum :
 That frae November till October,
 Ae market-day thou was na sober ;
 That ilka melder, wi' the miller,
 Thou sat as lang as thou had siller ;
 That every naig was ca'd a shoe on,
 The smith and thee gat roaring fou on ;
 That at the L—d's house, ev'n on Sunday,
 Thou'drank wi' Kirton Jean till Monday.
 She prophesied that, late or soon,
 Thou would be found deep drowned in Doon ;
 Or catched wi' warlocks in the mirk,
 By Alloway's auld haunted kirk.

Ah, gentle dames ! it gars me greet
 To think how monie counsels sweet,
 How monie lengthened sage advices,
 The husband frae the wife despises !

But to our tale : Ae market night
 Tam had got planted unco right,
 Fast by an ingle, bleezing finely,
 Wi' reaming swats, that drank divinely ;
 And at his elbow souter Johnny,
 His ancient, trusty, drouthy crony.
 Tam lo'ed him like a vera brither ;
 They had been fou for weeks thegither.
 The night drave on wi' sangs and clatter,
 And aye the ale was growing better ;
 The landlady and Tam grew gracious,
 Wi' favors secret, sweet, and precious ;
 The souter tauld his queerest stories ;
 The landlord's laugh was ready chorus ;
 The storm without might rair and rustle,
 Tam did na mind the storm a whistle.

Care, mad to see a man sae happy,
E'en drowned himself among the nappy ;
As bees flee hame wi' lades o' treasure,
The minutes winged their way wi' pleasure ;
Kings may be blest, but Tam was glorious,
O'er a' the ills o' life victorious.

But pleasures are like poppies spread ;
You seize the flower, its bloom is shed ;
Or like the snow-fall in the river,
A moment white, — then melts forever ;
Or like the borealis race,
That flit ere you can point their place ;
Or like the rainbow's lovely form
Evanishing amid the storm.
Nae man can tether time or tide ;
The hour approaches Tam maun ride ;
That hour o' night's black arch the keystone,
That dreary hour he mounts his beast in ;
And sic a night he takes the road in
As ne'er poor sinner was abroad in.

The wind blew as 't wad blawn its last ;
The rattling showers rose on the blast ;
The speedy gleams the darkness swallowed ;
Loud, deep, and lang the thunder bellowed ;
That night a child might understand
The Deil had business on his hand.

Weel mounted on his gray mare, Meg,
(A better never lifted leg),
Tam skelpit on thro' dub and mire,
Despising wind and rain and fire, —
Whyles holding fast his guid blue bonnet,
Whyles crooning o'er some auld Scots sonnet,
Whyles glowering round wi' prudent cares,
Lest bogles catch him unawares ;
Kirk-Alloway was drawing nigh,
Whare ghaists and houlets nightly cry.

By this time he was cross the ford,
Whare in the snaw the chapman smooored ;
And past the birks and meikle stane,
Whare drunken Charlie brak 's neck-bane ;
And through the whins, and by the cairn,
Whare hunters fand the murdered bairn ;
And near the thorn, aboon the well,
Whare Mungo's mither hanged hersel'.
Before him Doon pours all his floods ;
The doubling storm roars through the woods ;
The lightnings flash from pole to pole ;
Near and more near the thunders roll ;
When, glimmering through the groaning trees,
Kirk-Alloway seemed in a breeze !
Through ilka bore the beams were glancing,
And loud resounded mirth and dancing.

Inspiring bold John Barleycorn !
What dangers thon canst make us scorn !
Wi' tippenny we fear nae evil ;
Wi' usquebae we 'll face the Devil ! —
The swats sae reamed in Tammie's noddle,

Fair play, he cared na Deils a bodle.
But Maggie stood right sair astonished,
Till, by the heel and hand admonished,
She ventured forward on the light ;
And, wow ! Tam saw an unco sight !
Warlocks and witches in a dance ;
Nae cotillon brent new frae France,
But hornpipes, jigs, strathspeys, and reels
Put life and mettle in their heels.
A winnock-bunker in the east,
There sat auld Nick, in shape o' beast, —
A towzie tyke, black, grim, and large, —
To gie them music was his charge ;
He screwed the pipes and gart them skirl
Till roof an' rafters a' did dirl.
Coffins stood round like open presses,
That shawed the dead in their last dresses ;
And by some devilish cantrip sleight,
Each in its cauld hand held a light, —
By which heroic Tam was able
To note, upon the haly table,
A murderer's banes, in gibbet arms ;
Twa span-lang, wee, unchristened bairns ;
A thief, new cutted frae a rape,
Wi' his last gasp his gab did gape ;
Five tomahawks, wi' bluid red rusted ;
Five scymitars, wi' murder crusted ;
A garter, which a babe had strangled ;
A knife, a father's throat had mangled,
Whom his ain son o' life bereft, —
The gray hairs yet stack to the heft ;
Three lawyers' tongues turned inside out,
Wi' lies seamed like a beggar's clout ;
And priests' hearts, rotten, black as muck,
Lay stinking, vile, in every nook :
Wi' mair o' horrible and awfu'
Which even to name wad be unlawfu'.

As Tammie glowered, amazed and curious,
The mirth and fun grew fast and furious ;
The piper loud and louder blew ;
The dancers quick and quicker flew ;
They reeled, they set, they crossed, they cleekit,
Till ilka carlin swat and reekit,
And coost her duddies to the wark,
And linket at it in her sark !

Now Tam, O Tam ! had they been queans,
A' plump and strapping in their teens :
Their sarks, instead of creeshie flannen,
Been snaw-white seventeen-hunder linen ;
Thir brecks o' mine, my only pair,
That ance were plush, o' guid blue hair,
I wad hae gi'en them aff my hurdies
For ae blink o' the bonnie burdies !

But withered beldams, auld and droll,
Rigwoodie hags wad spean a foal,
Lowping an' flinging on a crummock, —
I wonder didna turn thy stomach.

But Tam kenn'd what was what fu' brawlie,
 There was ae winsome wench and walie,
 That night inlisted in the core (Lang after kenn'd on Carrick shore ;
 For monie a beast to dead she shot,
 And perished monie a bonnie boat,
 And shook baith meikle corn and bear,
 And kept the country-side in fear).
 Her cutty-sark o' Paisley harn,
 That while a lassie she had worn,
 In longitude though sorely scanty,
 It was her best, and she was vauntie. —
 Ah ! little kenned thy reverend grannie
 That sark she coft for her wee Nannie
 Wi' twa pund Scots ('t was a' her riches)
 Wad ever graced a dance o' witches !

But here my Muse her wing maun cower,
 Sic flights are far beyond her power ;
 To sing how Nannie lap and slang
 (A souple jade she was and strang),
 And how Tam stood like ane bewitched,
 And thought his very een enriched.
 Ev'n Satan glowered, and fidget fu' fain,
 And hotched and blew wi' might and main ;
 Till first ae caper, syne anither, —
 Tam tint his reason a' thegither,
 And roars out, " Weel done, Cutty-sark !"
 And in an instant a' was dark ;
 And scarcely had he Maggie rallied,
 When out the hellish legion sallied.

As bees bizz out wi' angry fyke,
 When plundering herds assail their byke ;
 As open passie's mortal foes,
 When, pop ! she starts before their nose ;
 As eager runs the market-crowd,
 When Catch the thief ! resounds aloud ;
 So Maggie runs, — the witches follow,
 Wi' monie an eldritch screech and hollow.

Ah, Tam ! ah, Tam ! thou 'll get thy fairin' !
 In hell they 'll roast thee like a herrin' !
 In vain thy Kate awaits thy comin' —
 Kate soon will be a woofu' woman !
 Now, do thy speedy utmost, Meg,
 And win the key-stane of the brig ;
 There at them thou thy tail may toss, —
 A running stream they dare na cross.
 But ere the key-stane she could make,
 The fient a tail she had to shake ;
 For Nannie, far before the rest,
 Hard upon noble Maggie prest,
 And flew at Tam wi' furious ettle ;
 But little wist she Maggie's mettle, —
 Ae spring brought aff her master hale,
 But left behind her ain gray tail :
 The earlin claut her by the rump,
 And left poor Maggie scarce a stump.

Now, wha this tale o' truth shall read,
 Ilk man and mother's son take heed ;
 Whene'er to drink you are inclined,
 Or cutty-sarks run in your mind,
 Think, ye may buy the joys o'er dear,
 Remember Tam O'Shanter's mare.

ROBERT BURNS.

THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN.

HAMELIN Town 's in Brunswick,
 By famous Hanover City ;
 The river Weser, deep and wide,
 Washes its wall on the southern side ;
 A pleasanter spot you never spied ;
 But when begins my ditty,
 Almost five hundred years ago,
 To see the townsfolk suffer so
 From vermin was a pity.

Rats !

They fought the dogs, and killed the cats,
 And bit the babies in the cradles,
 And ate the cheeses out of the vats,
 And licked the soup from the cook's own ladles,
 Split open the kegs of salted sprats,
 Made nests inside men's Sunday hats,
 And even spoiled the women's chats,
 By drowning their speaking
 With shrieking and squeaking
 In fifty different sharps and flats.

At last the people in a body
 To the Town Hall came flocking :
 " 'T is clear," cried they, " our Mayor 's a noddy ;
 And as for our Corporation, — shocking
 To think we buy gowns lined with ermine
 For dolts that can't or won't determine
 What 's best to rid us of our vermin !"
 At this the Mayor and Corporation
 Quaked with a mighty consternation.

An hour they sate in counsel, —
 At length the Mayor broke silence :
 " For a guilder I 'd my ermine gown sell ;
 I wish I were a mile hence !
 It 's easy to bid one rack onc's brain, —
 I 'm sure my poor head aches again.
 I 've scratched it so, and all in vain.
 O for a trap, a trap, a trap !"
 Just as he said this, what should hap
 At the chamber door but a gentle tap ?
 " Bless us," cried the Mayor, " what 's that ?"
 " Come in !" — the Mayor cried, looking bigger ;
 And in did come the strangest figure ;
 He advanced to the council-table :
 And, " Please your honours," said he, " I 'm able,

By means of a secret charm, to draw
All creatures living beneath the sun,
That creep or swim or fly or run,
After me so as you never saw!

Yet," said he, "poor piper as I am,
In Tartary I freed the Cham,
Last June, from his huge swarm of gnats;
I eased in Asia the Nizam
Of a monstrous brood of vampire-bats;
And as for what your brain bewilders,—
If I can rid your town of rats,
Will you give me a thousand guilders?"
"One? fifty thousand!" was the exclamation
Of the astonished Mayor and Corporation.

Into the street the piper stept,
Smiling first a little smile,
As if he knew what magic slept
In his quiet pipe the while;
Then, like a musical adept,
To blow the pipe his lips he wrinkled,
And green and blue his sharp eyes twinkled,
Like a candle flame where salt is sprinkled;
And ere three shrill notes the pipe uttered,
You heard as if an army muttered;
And the muttering grew to a grumbling;
And the grumbling grew to a mighty rumbling;
And out of the houses the rats came tumbling.
Great rats, small rats, lean rats, brawny rats,
Brown rats, black rats, gray rats, tawny rats,
Grave old plodders, gay young friskers,
Fathers, mothers, uncles, cousins,
Cocking tales and pricking whiskers;
Families by tens and dozens,
Brothers, sisters, husbands, wives,—
Followed the piper for their lives.
From street to street he piped advancing,
And step for step they followed dancing,
Until they came to the river Weser,
Wherein all plunged and perished
Save one who, stout as Julius Cæsar,
Swam across and lived to carry
(As he the manuscript he cherished)
To Rat-land home his commentary,
Which was: "At the first shrill notes of the pipe,
I heard a sound as of scraping tripe,
And putting apples, wondrous ripe,
Into a cider-press's gripe,—
And a moving away of pickle-tub-boards,
And a leaving ajar of conserve-cupboards,
And a drawing the corks of train-oil-flasks,
And a breaking the hoops of butter-casks;
And it seemed as if a voice
(Sweeter far than by harp or by psaltery
Is breathed) called out, O rats, rejoice!
The world is grown to one vast drysaltery!
So munch on, crunch on, take your nuncheon,

Breakfast, supper, dinner, luncheon!
And just as a bulky sugar-puncheon,
Already staved, like a great sun shone
Glorious scarce an inch before me,
Just as methought it said, Come, bore me!—
I found the Weser rolling o'er me."

You should have heard the Hamelin people
Ringing the bells till they rocked the steeple;
"Go," cried the Mayor, "and get long poles!
Poke out the nests and block up the holes!
Consult with carpenters and builders,
And leave in our town not even a trace
Of the rats!"—when suddenly, up the face
Of the piper perked in the market-place,
With a "First, if you please, my thousand guilders!"

A thousand guilders! the Mayor looked blue;
So did the Corporation too.
For council-dinners made rare havoc
With Claret, Moselle, Vin-de-Grave, Hock;
And half the money would replenish
Their cellar's biggest butt with Rhenish.
To pay this sum to a wandering fellow
With a gypsy coat of red and yellow!
"Beside," quoth the Mayor, with a knowing wink,
"Our business was done at the river's brink;
We saw with our eyes the vermin sink,
And what's dead can't come to life, I think.
So, friend, we're not the folks to shrink
From the duty of giving you something to drink,
And a matter of money to put in your poke;
But as for the guilders, what we spoke
Of them, as you very well know, was in joke.
Beside, our losses have made us thrifty;
A thousand guilders! Come, take fifty!"

The piper's face fell, and he cried,
"No trifling! I can't wait! beside,
I've promised to visit by dinner time
Bagdat, and accept the prime
Of the head cook's pottage, all he's rich in,
For having left, in the Caliph's kitchen,
Of a nest of scorpions no survivor,—
With him I proved no bargain-driver;
With you, don't think I'll bate a stiver!
And folks who put me in a passion
May find me pipe to another fashion."

"How?" cried the Mayor, "d'ye think I'll brook
Being worse treated than a cook?
Insulted by a lazy ribald
With idle pipe and vesture piebald?
You threaten us, fellow? Do your worst,
Blow your pipe there till you burst!"

Once more he stept into the street ;
 And to his lips again
 Laid his long pipe of smooth straight cane ;
 And ere he blew three notes (such sweet
 Soft notes as yet musician's cunning
 Never gave the enraptured air)
 There was a rustling that seemed like a bustling
 Of merry crowds justling at pitching and hustling ;
 Small feet were pattering, wooden shoes clatter-
 ing,
 Little hands clapping, and little tongues chattering ;
 And, like fowls in a farm-yard when barley is scattering,

Out came the children running :
 All the little boys and girls,
 With rosy cheeks and flaxen curls,
 And sparkling eyes and teeth like pearls,
 Tripping and skipping, ran merrily after
 The wonderful music with shouting and laughter.

The Mayor was dumb, and the Council stood
 As if they were changed into blocks of wood,
 Unable to move a step, or cry
 To the children merrily skipping by, —
 And could only follow with the eye
 That joyous crowd at the piper's back.
 But how the Mayor was on the rack,
 And the wretched Council's bosoms beat,
 As the piper turned from the High Street
 To where the Weser rolled its waters
 Right in the way of their sons and daughters !
 However, he turned from south to west,
 And to Koppelberg Hill his steps addressed,
 And after him the children pressed ;
 Great was the joy in every breast.
 " He never can cross that mighty top !
 He's forced to let the piping drop,
 And we shall see our children stop ! "
 When, lo, as they reached the mountain's side,
 A wondrous portal opened wide,
 As if a cavern was suddenly hollowed ;
 And the piper advanced and the children followed ;
 And when all were in, to the very last,
 The door in the mountain-side shut fast.
 Did I say all ? No ! One was lame,
 And could not dance the whole of the way ;
 And in after years, if you would blame
 His sadness, he was used to say, —
 " It's dull in our town since my playmates left !
 I can't forget that I'm bereft.
 Of all the pleasant sights they see,
 Which the piper also promised me ;
 For he led us, he said, to a joyous land,
 Joining the town and just at hand,
 Where waters gushed, and fruit-trees grew,
 And flowers put forth a fairer hue,
 And everything was strange and new ;

The sparrows were brighter than peacocks here,
 And their dogs outran our fallow deer,
 And honey-bees had lost their stings,
 And horses were born with eagles' wings ;
 And just as I became assured
 My lame foot would be speedily cured,
 The music stopped and I stood still,
 And found myself outside the Hill,
 Left alone against my will,
 To go now limping as before,
 And never hear of that country more ! "

ROBERT BROWNING.

THE TOAD'S JOURNAL.

[It is said that Belzoni, the traveller in Egypt, discovered a living toad in a temple, which had been for ages buried in the sand.]

IN a land for antiquities greatly renowned
 A traveller had dug wide and deep under ground,
 A temple, for ages entombed, to disclose, —
 When, lo ! he disturbed, in its secret repose,
 A toad, from whose journal it plainly appears
 It had lodged in that mansion some thousands of years.

The roll which this reptile's long history records,
 A treat to the sage antiquarian affords :
 The sense by obscure hieroglyphics concealed,
 Deep learning at length, with long labor, revealed.
 The first thousand years as a specimen take, —
 The dates are omitted for brevity's sake :
 " Crawled forth from some rubbish, and winked with one eye ;

Half opened the other, but could not tell why ;
 Stretched out my left leg, as it felt rather queer,
 Then drew all together and slept for a year.
 Awakened, felt chilly, — crept urcher a stone ;
 Was vastly contented with living alone.
 One toe became wedged in the stone like a peg,
 Could not get it away, — had the cramp in my leg,
 Began half to wish for a neighbor at hand
 To loosen the stone, which was fast in the sand ;
 Pulled harder, then dozed, as I found 't was no use ; —

Awoke the next summer, and lo ! it was loose.
 Crawled forth from the stone when completely
 awake ;

Crept into a corner and grinned at a snake.
 Retreated, and found that I needed repose ;
 Curled up my damp limbs and prepared for a doze ;
 Fell sounder to sleep than was usual before,
 And did not awake for a century or more ;
 But had a sweet dream, as I rather believe :
 Methought it was light, and a fine summer's eve ;
 And I in some garden deliciously fed
 In the pleasant moist shade of a strawberry-bed :
 There fine speckled creatures claimed kindred with me,

And others that hopped, most enchanting to see.

Here long I regaled with emotion extreme ; —
Awoke, — disconcerted to find it a dream ;
Grew pensive, — discovered that life is a load ;
Began to get weary of being a toad ;
Was fretful at first, and then shed a few tears ”—
Here ends the account of the first thousand years.

MORAL.

It seems that life is all a void,
On selfish thoughts alone employed ;
That length of days is not a good,
Unless their use be understood.

JANE TAYLOR.

THE RAVEN.

ONCE upon a midnight dreary, while I pondered,
weak and weary,
Over many a quaint and curious volume of forgotten lore, —
While I nodded, nearly napping, suddenly there came a tapping,
As of some one gently rapping, rapping at my chamber door.
“T is some visitor,” I muttered, “tapping at my chamber door ;
Only this, and nothing more.”

Ah, distinctly I remember, it was in the bleak
December,
And each separate dying ember wrought its ghost
upon the floor.
Eagerly I wished the morrow ; vainly I had sought to borrow
From my books surcease of sorrow, — sorrow for the lost Lenore, —
For the rare and radiant maiden whom the angels named Lenore, —
Nameless here forevermore.

And the silken, sad, uncertain rustling of each purple curtain
Thrilled me, — filled me with fantastic terrors never felt before ;
So that now, to still the beating of my heart, I stood repeating,
“T is some visitor entreating entrance at my chamber door, —
Some late visitor entreating entrance at my
chamber door ;
That it is, and nothing more.”

Presently my soul grew stronger ; hesitating then no longer,
“Sir,” said I, “or madam, truly your forgiveness I implore ;
But the fact is, I was napping, and so gently you came rapping,

And so faintly you came tapping, tapping at my
chamber door,
That I scarce was sure I heard you ” — Here I opened wide the door ;
Darkness there, and nothing more.

Deep into that darkness peering, long I stood there, wondering, fearing,
Doubting, dreaming dreams no mortal ever dared to dream before ;
But the silence was unbroken, and the darkness gave no token,
And the only word there spoken was the whispered word “ Lenore ! ”
This I whispered, and an echo murmured back the word “ Lenore ! ”
Merely this, and nothing more.

Back into the chamber turning, all my soul within me burning,
Soon again I heard a tapping, something louder than before :
“ Surely,” said I, “ surely that is something at my window-lattice ;
Let me see then what thereat is, and this mystery explore, —
Let my heart be still a moment, and this mystery explore ; —
’T is the wind, and nothing more.”

Open then I flung the shutter, when, with many a flirt and flutter,
In there stepped a stately raven of the saintly
days of yore.
Not the least obeisance made he ; not an instant stopped or stayed he ;
But, with mien of lord or lady, perched above
my chamber door, —
Perched upon a bust of Pallas, just above my chamber door, —
Perched, and sat, and nothing more.

Then this ebony bird beguiling my sad fancy into smiling,
By the grave and stern decorum of the countenance it wore,
“ Though thy crest be shorn and shaven, thou,”
I said, “ art sure no craven ;
Ghastly, grim, and ancient raven, wandering
from the nightly shore,
Tell me what thy lordly name is on the night’s
Plutonian shore ? ”
Quoth the raven, “ Nevermore ! ”

Much I marvelled this ungainly fowl to hear discourse so plainly,
Though its answer little meaning, little relevancy bore ;

For we cannot help agreeing that no living human being Ever yet was blessed with seeing bird above his
 chamber door,
 Bird or beast upon the sculptured bust above his
 chamber door,
 With such name as "Nevermore!"

But the raven, sitting lonely on the placid bust, spoke only

That one word, as if his soul in that one word he did outpour.

Nothing further then he uttered, — not a feather
 then he fluttered, —

Till I scarcely more than muttered, "Other friends have flown before, —

On the morrow he will leave me, as my hopes have flown before."

Then the bird said, "Nevermore!"

Startled at the stillness, broken by reply so aptly
 spoken,

"Doubtless," said I, "what it utters is its only stock and store,

Caught from some unhappy master, whom unmerciful disaster

Followed fast and followed faster, till his song
 one burden bore,

Till the dirges of his hope that melancholy burden bore, —

Of 'Nevermore, — nevermore!'"

But the raven still beguiling all my sad soul into smiling,

Straight I wheeled a cushioned seat in front of bird and bust and door,

Then, upon the velvet sinking, I betook myself to linking

Fancy unto fancy, thinking what this ominous bird of yore —

What this grim, ungainly, ghastly, gaunt, and ominous bird of yore —

Meant in croaking "Nevermore!"

This I sat engaged in guessing, but no syllable expressing

To the fowl whose fiery eyes now burned into my bosom's core ;

This and more I sat divining, with my head at ease reclining

On the cushion's velvet lining that the lamplight gloated o'er,

But whose velvet violet lining, with the lamp-
 light gloating o'er,

She shall press — ah ! nevermore !

Then methought the air grew denser, perfumed
 from an unseen censer,

Swung by seraphim, whose footfalls tinkled on the tufted floor.

"Wretch," I cried, "thy God hath lent thee, —
 by these angels he hath sent thee

Respite, — respite and nepenthe from the memories of Lenore!

Quaff, O, quaff this kind nepenthe, and forget this lost Lenore!"

Quoth the raven, "Nevermore!"

"Prophet!" said I, "thing of evil! — prophet
 still, if bird or devil!

Whether tempter sent, or whether tempest
 tossed thee here ashore,

Desolate yet all undaunted, on this desert land enchanted, —

On this home by horror haunted, — tell me truly,
 I implore, —

Is there — is there balm in Gilead? — tell me, — tell me, I implore!"

Quoth the raven, "Nevermore!"

"Prophet!" said I, "thing of evil! — prophet
 still, if bird or devil!

By that heaven that bends above us, — by that God we both adore,

Tell this soul with sorrow laden, if, within the distant Aidenn,

It shall clasp a sainted maiden, whom the angels
 name Lenore,

Clasp a fair and radiant maiden, whom the angels
 name Lenore!"

Quoth the raven, "Nevermore!"

"Be that word our sign of parting, bird or fiend!" I shrieked, upstarting, —

"Get thee back into the tempest and the night's Plutonian shore!

Leave no black plume as a token of that lie thy soul hath spoken!

Leave my loneliness unbroken! — quit the bust above my door!

Take thy beak from out my heart, and take thy form from off my door!"

Quoth the raven, "Nevermore!"

And the raven, never flitting, still is sitting, still is sitting

On the pallid bust of Pallas, just above my
 chamber door;

And his eyes have all the seeming of a demon
 that is dreaming,

And the lamplight o'er him streaming throws
 his shadow on the floor;

And my soul from out that shadow that lies floating on the floor

Shall be lifted — nevermore!

EDGAR ALLAN POE.

RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINER.

PART I.

An Ancient Mariner meeteth three galleons hidden to a wedding feast, and detaineth one.

IT is an Ancient Mariner,
And he stoppeth one of three.
"By thy long gray beard and glittering
eye,
Now wherefore stopp'st thou me?
The Bridegroom's doors are opened wide,
And I am next of kin;
The guests are met, the feast is set, —
Mayst hear the merry din."

He holds him with his skinny hand:
"There was a ship," quoth he.
"Hold off! unhand me, graybeard loon!" —
Eftsoons his hand dropt he.

The Wedding-Guest is spell-bound by the eye of the old seafaring man, and constrained to hear his tale.

He holds him with his glittering eye, —
The Wedding-Guest stood still;
He listens like a three years' child;
The Mariner hath his will.

The Wedding-Guest sat on a stone, —
He cannot choose but hear;
And thus spake on that ancient man,
The bright-eyed Mariner:

"The ship was cheered, the harbor cleared;
Merrily did we drop
Below the kirk, below the hill,
Below the light-house top.

The Mariner tells how the ship sailed southward, with a good wind and fair weather, till it reached the line.

The sun came up upon the left,
Out of the sea came he;
And he shone bright, and on the right
Went down into the sea;

Higher and higher every day,
Till over the mast at noon —"
The Wedding-Guest here beat his breast,
For he heard the loud bassoon.

The Wedding-Guest heareth the bridal music; but the Mariner continueth his tale.

The Bride hath paced into the hall —
Red as a rose is she;
Nodding their heads before her goes
The merry minstrelsy.

The Wedding-Guest he beat his breast,
Yet he cannot choose but hear;
And thus spake on that ancient man,
The bright-eyed Mariner:

The ship drawn by a storm toward the south pole.

"And now the Storm-blast came, and he
Was tyrannous and strong;
He struck with his o'ertaking wings,
And chased us south along.

With sloping masts and dipping prow —
As who pursued with yell and blow
Still treads the shadow of his foe,
And forward bends his head —
The ship drove fast; loud roared the blast,
And southward aye we fled.

And now there came both mist and snow,
And it grew wondrous cold;
And ice, mast-high, came floating by,
As green as emerald.

And through the drifts the snowy cliffs
Did send a dismal sheen;
Nor shapes of men nor beasts we ken —
The ice was all between.

The land of ice and of fearful sounds, where no living thing was to be seen.

The ice was here, the ice was there,
The ice was all around;
It cracked and growled, and roared and howled,
Like noises in a swound!

At length did cross an Albatross —
Thorough the fog it came;
As if it had been a Christian soul,
We hailed it in God's name.

Till a great sea-bird, called the Albatross, came through the snow-fog, and was received with great joy and hospitality.

It ate the food it ne'er had eat,
And round and round it flew.
The ice did split with a thunder-fit;
The helmsman steered us through!

And a good south wind sprung up behind;
The Albatross did follow,
And every day, for food or play,
Came to the mariners' hollo!

And lo! the Albatross proved a bird of good omen, and followeth the ship as it returned northward through fog and floating ice.

In mist or cloud, on mast or shroud,
It perched for vespers nine;
While all the night, through fog-smoke
white,
Glimmered the white moonshine."

"God save thee, Ancient Mariner!
From the fiends, that plague thee thus! — Why look'st thou so?" — "With my cross-bow
I shot the Albatross.

The Ancient Mariner inhospitably killeth the pious bird of good omen.

PART II.

THE Sun now rose upon the right:
Out of the sea came he,
Still hid in mist, and on the left
Went down into the sea.

And the good south wind still blew behind,
But no sweet bird did follow,

Nor any day, for food or play,
Came to the mariners' hollo !

His shipmates cry out against the Ancient Mariner, for killing the bird of good luck.

And I had done an hellish thing,
And it would work 'em woe :
For all averred, I had killed the bird
That made the breeze to blow.
Ah wretch ! said they, the bird to slay,
That made the breeze to blow !

But when the fog cleared off, they justify the same,
and thus make themselves accomplices in the crime.

Nor dim nor red, like God's own head
The glorious Sun uprist :
Then all averred, I had killed the bird
That brought the fog and mist.
'T was right, said they, such birds to slay,
That bring the fog and mist.

The fair breeze continues ; the ship enters the Pacific Ocean, and sails northward, even till it reaches the line.

The fair breeze blew, the white foam flew,
The furrow followed free ;
We were the first that ever burst
Into that silent sea.

The ship
hath been suddenly becalm'd ;

Down dropt the breeze, the sails dropt
down, —

'T was sad as sad could be ;
And we did speak only to break
The silence of the sea.

All in a hot and copper sky
The bloody Sun, at noon,
Right up above the mast did stand,
No bigger than the Moon.

Day after day, day after day,
We stuck, — nor breath nor motion ;
As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean.

and the Albatross begins to be avenged.

Water, water everywhere,
And all the boards did shrink ;
Water, water everywhere,
Nor any drop to drink.

The very deep did rot : O Christ !
That ever this should be !
Yea, slimy things did crawl with legs
Upon the slimy sea !

About, about, in reel and rout,
The death-fires danced at night ;
The water, like a witch's oils,
Burnt green, and blue, and white.

A Spirit
had followed them ;
one of the invisible inhabitants of this planet,

And some in dreams assurèd were
Of the Spirit that plagued us so ;
Nine fathom deep he had followed us
From the land of mist and snow.

neither departed souls nor angels ; concerning whom the learned Jew Josephus, and the Platonic Constantinopolitan, Michael Psellus, may be consulted. They are very numerous, and there is no climate or element without one or more.

And every tongue, through utter drought,

Was withered at the root ;
We could not speak, no more than if
We had been choked with soot.

Ah ! well-a-day ! what evil looks
Haa I from old and young !
Instead of the cross the Albatross
About my neck was hung.

The ship-
mates, in their sore distress, would fain throw the whole guilt on the Ancient Mariner : in sign whereof they hang the dead sea-bird round his neck.

PART III.

THERE passed a weary time. Each throat

Was parched, and glazed each eye —
A weary time ! a weary time !
How glazed each weary eye ! —
When, looking westward, I beheld
A something in the sky.

The Ancient
Mariner beholdeth a sign in the element afar off.

At first it seemed a little speck,
And then it seemed a mist ;
It moved and moved, and took at last
A certain shape, I wist —

A speck, a mist, a shape, I wist !
And still it neared and neared ;
As if it dodged a water-sprite,
It plunged and tacked and veered.

With throats unslaked, with black lips
baked,

We could nor laugh nor wail ;
Through utter drought all dumb we stood !

I bit my arm, I sucked the blood,
And cried, 'A sail ! a sail !'

At its nearer approach
it seemeth him to be a ship ; and at a dear ransom he freeth his speech from the bonds of thirst.

With throats unslaked, with black lips
baked,

Agape they heard me call ;
Gramercy ! they for joy did grin,
And all at once their breath drew in,
As they were drinking all.

A flash of joy.

'See ! see !' I cried, 'she tacks no more !
Hither to work us weal —
Without a breeze, without a tide,
She steadies with upright keel !'

And horror follows. For can it be a ship that comes onward without wind or tide ?

The western wave was all a-flame ;
The day was well nigh done ;
Almost upon the western wave
Rested the broad bright sun,
When that strange shape drove suddenly
Betwixt us and the Sun.

And straight the Sun was flecked with bars,
(Heaven's Mother send us grace !)

It seemeth him but the skeleton of a ship.

As if through a dungeon-grate he peered
With broad and burning face.

Alas! thought I — and my heart beat loud —

How fast she nears and nears!
Are those her sails that glance in the sun,
Like restless gossameres?

And its ribs are seen as bars on the face of the setting sun.
The spectre-woman and her death-mate,
and no other on board the skeleton ship.

Are those her ribs through which the Sun
Did peer, as through a grate?
And is that woman all her crew?
Is that a death? and are there two?
Is Death that woman's mate?

Like vessel,
like crew!

Her lips were red, her looks were free,
Her locks were yellow as gold;
Her skin was as white as leprosy:
The night-mare, Life-in-Death, was she,
Who thickens man's blood with cold.

Death and Life-in-Death have diced for the ship's crew, and she (the latter) winneth the Ancient Mariner.

The naked hulk alongside came,
And the twain were casting dice:
'The game is done. I've won! I've won!'
Quoth she, and whistles thrice.

No twilight within the courts of the Sun.

The Sun's rim dips; the stars rush out;
At one stride comes the dark;
With far-heard whisper, o'er the sea,
Off shot the spectre-bark.

At the rising
of the Moon.

We listened and looked sideways up!
Fear at my heart, as at a cup;
My life-blood seemed to sip!
The stars were dim, and thick the night,
The steersman's face by his lamp
gleamed white;
From the sails the dew did drip —
Till clomb above the eastern bar,
The hornèd Moon, with one bright star
Within the nether tip.

one after another,

One after one, by the star-dogged Moon,
Too quick for groan or sigh,
Each turned his face with a ghastly pang,
And cursed me with his eye.

His shipmates drop down dead.

Four times fifty living men
(And I heard nor sigh nor groan),
With heavy thump, a lifeless lump,
They dropped down one by one.

But Life-in-Death begins her work on the Ancient
Mariner.

The souls did from their bodies fly, —
They fled to bliss or woe!
And every soul, it passed me by,
Like the whizz of my cross-bow!

PART IV.

"I FEAR thee, Ancient Mariner!
I fear thy skinny hand!
And thou art long, and lank, and
brown,
As is the ribbed sea-sand.

The Wedding-Guest feareth that a spirit is talking to him;

I fear thee and thy glittering eye,
And thy skinny hand so brown." —
"Fear not, fear not, thou Wedding-Guest!
This body dropt not down.

but the Ancient Mariner assureth him of his bodily life,
and proceedeth to relate his horrible pncance.

Alone, alone, all, all alone,
Alone on a wide, wide sea!
And never a saint took pity on
My soul in agony.

The many men so beautiful!
And they all dead did lie:
And a thousand thousand slimy things
Lived on; and so did I.

He despis-eth the creatures of the calm;

I looked upon the rotting sea,
And drew my eyes away;
I looked upon the rotting deck,
And there the dead men lay.

and envieth that they should live,
and so many
he dead.

I looked to heaven, and tried to pray;
But, or ever a prayer had gusht,
A wicked whisper came, and made
My heart as dry as dust.

I closed my lids, and kept them close,
And the balls like pulses beat;
For the sky and the sea, and the sea
and the sky,
Lay like a load on my weary eye,
And the dead were at my feet.

The cold sweat melted from their limbs,
Nor rot nor reek did they:
The look with which they looked on me
Had never passed away.

But the curse liveth for him in the eye of the dead
men.

An orphan's curse would drag to hell
A spirit from on high;
But oh! more horrible than that
Is a curse in a dead man's eye!
Seven days, seven nights, I saw that curse,
And yet I could not die.

The moving Moon went up the sky,
And nowhere did abide:
Softly she was going up,
And a star or two beside —

In his loneliness and fixedness he yearneth towards the journeying
Moon, and

the stars that still sojourn, yet still move onward; and everywhere the blue sky belongs to them, and is their appointed rest, and their native country, and their own natural homes, which they enter unannounced, as lords that are certainly expected, and yet there is a silent joy at their arrival.

Her beams bemocked the sultry main,
Like April hoar-frost spread ;
But where the ship's huge shadow lay
The charmed water burnt alway,
A still and awful red.

By the light of the Moon
he behold-eth God's creatures of the great calm.

Beyond the shadow of the ship
I watched the water-snakes ;
They moved in tracks of shining white ;
And when they reared, the elfish light
Fell off in hoary flakes.

Within the shadow of the ship
I watched their rich attire —
Blue, glossy green, and velvet black,
They coiled and swam ; and every track
Was a flash of golden fire.

Their beauty and their happiness.

O happy living things ! no tongue
Their beauty might declare ;
A spring of love gushed from my heart,
And I blessed them unaware —
Sure my kind saint took pity on me,
And I blessed them unaware.

He blesteth them in his heart.

The spell begins to break.

The selfsame moment I could pray ;
And from my neck so free
The Albatross fell off, and sank
Like lead into the sea.

PART V.

O SLEEP ! it is a gentle thing,
Beloved from pole to pole !
To Mary Queen the praise be given !
She sent the gentle sleep from heaven
That slid into my soul.

By grace of the holy Mother, the Ancient Mariner is refreshed with rain.

The silly buckets on the deck,
That had so long remained,
I dreamt that they were filled with dew ;
And when I awoke, it rained.

My lips were wet, my throat was cold,
My garments all were dank ;
Sure I had drunken in my dreams,
And still my body drank.

I moved, and could not feel my limbs ;
I was so light — almost
I thought that I had died in sleep,
And was a blessed ghost.

He heareth sounds and seeth strange sights and commotions in the sky and the element.

And soon I heard a roaring wind —
It did not come anear ;
But with its sound it shook the sails,
That were so thin and sere.

The upper air burst into life ;
And a hundred fire-flags sheen,
To and fro they were hurried about ;

And to and fro, and in and out,
The wan stars danced between.

And the coming wind did roar more loud,
And the sails did sigh like sedge ;
And the rain poured down from one black cloud —
The Moon was at its edge.

The thick black cloud was cleft, and still
The Moon was at its side ;
Like waters shot from some high crag,
The lightning fell with never a jag —
A river steep and wide.

The loud wind never reached the ship,
Yet now the ship moved on !
Beneath the lightning and the Moon
The dead men gave a groan.

The bodies of the ship's crew are inspired, and the ship
moves on ;

They groaned, they stirred, they all uprose —
Nor spake, nor moved their eyes ;
It had been strange, even in a dream,
To have seen those dead men rise.

The helmsman steered, the ship moved on ;
Yet never a breeze up blew ;
The mariners all 'gan work the ropes,
Where they were wont to do ;
They raised their limbs like lifeless tools —
We were a ghastly crew.

The Body of my brother's son
Stood by me, knee to knee :
The Body and I pulled at one rope,
But he said naught to me."

"I fear thee, Ancient Mariner !"
"Be calm, thou Wedding-Guest !
'T was not those souls that fled in pain,
Which to their corsers came again,
But a troop of spirits blest :

but not by the souls of the men, nor by demons of earth or middle air, but by a blessed troop of angelic spirits, sent down by the invocation
of the guardian saint.

For when it dawned — they dropped their arms,
And clustered round the mast ;
Sweet sounds rose slowly through their mouths,
And from their bodies passed.

Around, around, flew each sweet sound,
Then darted to the Sun ;
Slowly the sounds came back again,
Now mixed, now one by one.

Sometimes a-dropping from the sky,
I heard the skylark sing ;
Sometimes all little birds that are,
How they seemed to fill the sea and air
With their sweet jargoning !

And now 't was like all instruments,
Now like a lonely flute ;
And now it is an angel's song
That makes the heavens be mute.

It ceased ; yet still the sails made on
A pleasant noise till noon,
A noise like of a hidden brook
In the leafy month of June,
That to the sleeping woods all night
Singeth a quiet tune.

Till noon we quietly sailed on,
Yet never a breeze did breathe :
Slowly and smoothly went the ship,
Moved onward from beneath.

The lonesome spirit from the south pole carries on the ship as fir as the line, in obedience to the angelic troop, but still requir-eth vengeance.

Under the keel nine fathom deep,
From the land of mist and snow,
The Spirit slid : and it was he
That made the ship to go.
The sails at noon left off their tune,
And the ship stood still also.

The Sun, right up above the mast,
Had fixed her to the ocean :
But in a minute she 'gan stir,
With a short uneasy motion —
Backwards and forwards half her length
With a short uneasy motion.

Then like a pawing horse let go,
She made a sudden bound :
It flung the blood into my head
And I fell down in a swoond.

The Polar
Spirit's fellow-demons, the invisible inhabitants of the element, take part in his wrong ;
and two of them relate,
one to the other, that penance long and heavy for the Ancient Mariner hath been accorded to the Polar Spirit, who returneth southward.

How long in that same fit I lay,
I have not to declare ;
But ere my living life returned,
I heard, and in my soul discerned
Two voices in the air.

'Is it he ?' quoth one, 'Is this the man ?
By Him who died on cross,
With his cruel bow he laid full low
The harmless Albatross !

The Spirit who bideth by himself
In the land of mist and snow,
He loved the bird that loved the man
Who shot him with his bow.'

The other was a softer voice,
As soft as honey-dew :
Quoth he, 'The man hath penance done,
And penance more will do.'

PART VI.

FIRST VOICE.

'But tell me, tell me ! speak again,
Thy soft response renewing —
What makes that ship drive on so fast ?
What is the ocean doing ?'

SECOND VOICE.

'Still as a slave before his lord,
The ocean hath no blast ;
His great bright eye most silently
Up to the Moon is cast —

If he may know which way to go ;
For she guides him smooth or grim.
See, brother, see ! how graciously
She looketh down on him.'

FIRST VOICE.

'But why drives on that ship so fast,
Without or wave or wind ?'

SECOND VOICE.

'The air is cut away before,
And closes from behind.

Fly, brother, fly ! more high, more high !
Or we shall be belated ;
For slow and slow that ship will go,
When the Mariner's trance is abated.'

The Mariner
hath been cast into a trance ; for the angelic power causeth the vessel to drive northward faster than human life could endure.

I woke, and we were sailing on
As in a gentle weather ;
'T was night, calm night — the moon was high ;
The dead men stood together.

The supernatural motion is reflected ; the Mariner awakes, and his penance begins anew.

All stood together on the deck,
For a charnel-dungeon fitter ;
All fixed on me their stony eyes,
That in the Moon did glitter.

The pang, the curse, with which they died,
Had never passed away ;
I could not draw my eyes from theirs,
Nor turn them up to pray.

And now this spell was snapt ; once more
I viewed the ocean green,
And looked far forth, yet little saw
Of what had else been seen —

The curse is finally expiated.

Like one that on a lonesome road
Doth walk in fear and dread,

And, having once turned round, walks
on,

And turns no more his head ;
Because he knows a frightful fiend
Doth close behind him tread.

But soon there breathed a wind on me,
Nor sound nor motion made ;
Its path was not upon the sea,
In ripple or in shade.

It raised my hair, it fanned my cheek,
Like a meadow-gale of Spring—
It mingled strangely with my fears,
Yet it felt like a welcoming.

Swiftly, swiftly flew the ship,
Yet she sailed softly too ;
Sweetly, sweetly blew the breeze —
On me alone it blew.

O dream of joy ! is this indeed
The light-house top I see ?
Is this the hill ? is this the kirk ?
Is this mine own countree ?

And the Ancient Mariner beholdeth his native country.

We drifted o'er the harbor-bar,
And I with sobs did pray —
O let me be awake, my God !
Or let me sleep away.

The harbor-bay was clear as glass,
So smoothly it was strewn !
And on the bay the moonlight lay,
And the shadow of the moon.

The rock shone bright, the kirk no less
That stands above the rock ;
The moonlight steeped in silentness
The steady weatherecock.

And the bay was white with silent light,
Till rising from the same,
Full many shapes, that shadows were,
In crimson colors came.

The angelic spirits leave the dead bodies,

and appear in their own forms of light.

A little distance from the prow
Those crimson shadows were :
I turned my eyes upon the deck—
O Christ ! what saw I there !

Each corse lay flat, lifeless and flat,
And, by the holy rood !
A man all light, a seraph man,
On every corse there stood.

This seraph-band, each waved his hand :
It was a heavenly sight !

They stood as signals to the land,
Each one a lovely light ;

This seraph-band, each waved his hand,
No voice did they impart —
No voice ; but oh ! the silence sank
Like music on my heart.

But soon I heard the dash of oars,
I heard the pilot's cheer ;
My head was turned perforce away,
And I saw a boat appear.

The pilot and the pilot's boy,
I heard them coming fast :
Dear Lord in Heaven ! it was a joy
The dead men could not blast.

I saw a third — I heard his voice :
It is the hermit good !
He singeth loud his godly hymns
That he makes in the wood.
He'll shrive my soul, he'll wash away
The Albatross's blood.

PART VII.

THIS hermit good lives in that wood
Which slopes down to the sea.
How loudly his sweet voice he rears !
He loves to talk with mariners
That come from a far countree.

The hermit of the wood

He kneels at morn, and noon, and eve —
He hath a cushion plump :
It is the moss that wholly hides
The rotted old oak-stump.

The skiff-boat neared : I heard them talk,
' Why, this is strange, I trow !
Where are those lights so many and fair,
That signal made but now ? '

' Strange, by my faith ! ' the hermit
said —

approacheth the ship with wonder.

' And they answered not our cheer !
The planks look'd warped ! and see those sails

How thin they are and sere !
I never saw aught like to them,
Unless perchance it were

Brown skeletons of leaves that lag
My forest-brook along ;
When the ivy-tod is heavy with snow,

And the owlet whoops to the wolf below,
That eats the she-wolf's young.'

'Dear Lord! it hath a fiendish look
(The pilot made reply) —
I am a-feared.' — 'Push on, push on!'
Said the hermit cheerily.

The boat came closer to the ship,
But I nor spake nor stirred;
The boat came close beneath the ship,
And straight a sound was heard.

The ship
suddenly sinketh.

Under the water it rumbled on,
Still louder and more dread:
It reached the ship, it split the bay;
The ship went down like lead.

The Ancient
Mariner is saved in the pilot's boat.

Stunned by that loud and dreadful
sound,

Which sky and ocean smote,
Like one that hath been seven days drowned

My body lay afloat;
But swift as dreams, myself I found
Within the pilot's boat.

Upon the whirl where sank the ship
The boat span round and round;
And all was still, save that the hill
Was telling of the sound.

I moved my lips — the pilot shrieked
And fell down in a fit;
The holy hermit raised his eyes,
And prayed where he did sit.

I took the oars; the pilot's boy,
Who now doth crazy go,
Laughed loud and long; and all the while
His eyes went to and fro:
'Ha! ha!' quoth he, 'full plain I see,
The Devil knows how to row.'

And now, all in my own countree,
I stood on the firm land!
The hermit stepped forth from the boat,
And scarcely he could stand.

The Ancient
Mariner earnestly entreateth the hermit to shrieve him;
and the penance of life
falls on him.

'O shrieve me, shrieve me, holy
man!' —

The hermit crossed his brow:
'Say quick,' quoth he, 'I bid thee
say —

What manner of man art thou?'

Forthwith this frame of mine was wrenched

With a woful agony,

Which forced me to begin my tale —
And then it left me free.

Since then, at an uncertain hour,
That agony returns;
And till my ghastly tale is told
This heart within me burns.

And ever and anon throughout his future life an agony constraineth him to travel from land to land;

I pass, like night, from land to land;
I have strange power of speech;
That moment that his face I see
I know the man that must hear me —
To him my tale I teach.

What loud uproar bursts from that
door!

The wedding-guests are there;
But in the garden-bower the Bride
And bride-maids singing are;
And hark the little vesper bell,
Which biddeth me to prayer!

O Wedding-Guest! this soul hath been
Alone on a wide, wide sea —
So lonely 't was, that God himself
Scarce seem'd there to be.

O sweeter than the marriage-feast,
'T is sweeter far to me,
To walk together to the kirk
With a goodly company! —

To walk together to the kirk,
And all together pray,
While each to his great Father bends —
Old men, and babes, and loving friends,
And youths and maidens gay!

Farewell! farewell! but this I tell
To thee, thou Wedding-Guest!
He prayeth well who loveth well
Both man and bird and beast.

and to teach
by his own example,
love and reverence to all things,
that God made and loveth.

He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small;
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all."

The Mariner, whose eye is bright,
Whose beard with age is hoar,
Is gone. And now the Wedding-Guest
Turned from the Bridegroom's door.

He went like one that hath been stunned,

And is of sense forlorn;
A sadder and a wiser man
He rose the morrow morn.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE

ALONZO THE BRAVE AND THE FAIR
IMOGINE.

A WARRIOR so bold, and a virgin so bright,
 Conversed as they sat on the green ;
 They gazed on each other with tender delight :
 Alonzo the Brave was the name of the knight, —
 The maiden's, the Fair Imogine.

"And O," said the youth, "since to-morrow I go
 To fight in a far distant land,
 Your tears for my absence soon ceasing to flow,
 Some other will court you, and you will bestow
 On a wealthier suitor your hand !"

"O, hush these suspicions," Fair Imogine said,
 "Offensive to love and to me ;
 For, if you be living, or if you be dead,
 I swear by the Virgin that none in your stead
 Shall husband of Imogine be.

"If e'er I, by lust or by wealth led aside,
 Forget my Alonzo the Brave,
 God grant that, to punish my falsehood and pride,
 Your ghost at the marriage may sit by my side,
 May tax me with perjury, claim me as bride,
 And bear me away to the grave !"

To Palestine hastened the hero so bold,
 His love she lamented him sore ;
 But scarce had a twelvemonth elapsed when, behold !

A baron, all covered with jewels and gold,
 Arrived at Fair Imogine's door.

His treasures, his presents, his spacious domain,
 Soon made her untrue to her vows ;
 He dazzled her eyes, he bewildered her brain ;
 He caught her affections, so light and so vain,
 And carried her home as his spouse.

And now had the marriage been blest by the priest ;
 The revelry now was begun ;
 The tables they groaned with the weight of the feast,

Nor yet had the laughter and merriment ceased,
 When the bell at the castle tolled — one.

Then first with amazement Fair Imogine found
 A stranger was placed by her side :
 His air was terrific ; he uttered no sound, —
 He spake not, he moved not, he looked not around, —
 But earnestly gazed on the bride.

His visor was closed, and gigantic his height,
 His armor was sable to view ;
 All pleasure and laughter were hushed at his
 sight ;

The dogs, as they eyed him, drew back in affright ;
 The lights in the chamber burned blue !

His presence all bosoms appeared to dismay ;
 The guests sat in silence and fear ;
 At length spake the bride, — while she trembled,
 — "I pray,
 Sir knight, that your helmet aside you would lay,
 And deign to partake of our cheer."

The lady is silent ; the stranger complies —
 His visor he slowly unclosed ;
 O God ! what a sight met Fair Imogine's eyes !
 What words can express her dismay and surprise,
 When a skeleton's head was exposed !

All present then uttered a terrified shout,
 All turned with disgust from the scene ;
 The worms they crept in, and the worms they crept out,
 And sported his eyes and his temples about,
 While the spectre addressed Imogine :

"Behold me, thou false one, behold me !" he cried,

"Remember Alonzo the Brave !
 God grants that, to punish thy falsehood and pride,
 My ghost at thy marriage should sit by thy side ;
 Should tax thee with perjury, claim thee as bride,
 And bear thee away to the grave !"

Thus saying his arms round the lady he wound,
 While loudly she shrieked in dismay ;
 Then sunk with his prey through the wideyawning ground,
 Nor ever again was Fair Imogine found,
 Or the spectre that bore her away.

Not long lived the baron ; and none, since that
 time,

To inhabit the castle presume ;
 For chronicles tell that, by order sublime,
 There Imogine suffers the pain of her crime,
 And mourns her deplorable doom.

At midnight, four times in each year, does her sprite,

When mortals in slumber are bound,
 Arrayed in her bridal apparel of white,
 Appear in the hall with the skeleton knight,
 And shriek as he whirls her around !

While they drink out of skulls newly torn from
 the grave,

Dancing round them the spectres are seen ;
 Their liquor is blood, and this horrible stave
 They howl : "To the health of Alonzo the Brave,
 And his consort, the Fair Imogine !"

THE KING OF THULE.

MARGARET'S SONG IN "FAUST."

THERE was a king in Thule,
Was faithful till the grave, —
To whom his mistress, dying,
A golden goblet gave.

Naught was to him more precious ;
He drained it at every bout :
His eyes with tears ran over,
As oft as he drank thereout.

When came his time of dying,
The towns in his land he told,
Naught else to his heir denying
Except the goblet of gold.

He sat at the royal banquet
With his knights of high degree,
In the lofty hall of his fathers,
In the Castle by the Sea.

There stood the old carouser,
And drank the last life-glow ;
And hurled the hallowed goblet
Into the tide below.

He saw it plunging and filling,
And sinking deep in the sea, —
Then fell his eyelids forever,
And never more drank he.

lation of BAYARD TAYLOR.

THE PHILOSOPHER'S SCALES.

A MONK, when his rites sacerdotal were o'er,
In the depth of his cell with its stone-covered floor,
Resigning to thought his chimerical brain,
Once formed the contrivance we now shall explain ;
But whether by magic's or alchemy's powers
We know not ; indeed, 't is no business of ours.

Perhaps it was only by patience and care,
At last, that he brought his invention to bear.
In youth 't was projected, but years stole away,
And ere 't was complete he was wrinkled and
gray ;
But success is secure, unless energy fails ;
And at length he produced THE PHILOSOPHER'S SCALES.

"What were they?" you ask. You shall presently see ;
These scales were not made to weigh sugar and tea.

O no ; for such properties wondrous had they,
That qualities, feelings, and thoughts they could weigh,
Together with articles small or immense,
From mountains or planets to atoms of sense.

Naught was there so bulky but there it would lay,
And naught so ethereal but there it would stay,
And naught so reluctant but in it must go :
All which some examples more clearly will show.

The first thing he weighed was the head of Voltaire,
Which retained all the wit that had ever been
there ;
As a weight, he threw in the torn scrap of a leaf
Containing the prayer of the penitent thief ;
When the skull rose aloft with so sudden a spell
That it bounced like a ball on the roof of the cell.

One time he put in Alexander the Great,
With the garment that Dorcas had made, for a weight ;
And though clad in armor from sandals to crown,
The hero rose up, and the garment went down.

A long row of almshouses, amply endowed
By a well-esteemed Pharisee, busy and proud, Next loaded one scale ; while the other was pressed
By those mites the poor widow dropped into the chest :
Up flew the endowment, not weighing an ounce,
And down, down the farthing-worth came with a bounce.

By further experiments (no matter how)
He found that ten chariots weighed less than one plough ;
A sword with gilt trapping rose up in the scale,
Though balanced by only a ten-penny nail ;
A shield and a helmet, a buckler and spear,
Weighed less than a widow's uncrystallized tear.
A lord and a lady went up at full sail,
When a bee chanced to light on the opposite scale ;
Ten doctors, ten lawyers, two courtiers, one earl,
Ten counsellors' wigs, full of powder and curl,
All heaped in one balance and swinging from thence,
Weighed less than a few grains of candor and
sense ;
A first-water diamond, with brilliants begirt,
Than one good potato just washed from the dirt ;
Yet not mountains of silver and gold could suffice
One pearl to outweigh, — 't was THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE.

Last of all, the whole world was bowled in at the grate,
 With the soul of a beggar to serve for a weight,
 When the former sprang up with so strong a re-buff
 That it made a vast rent and escaped at the roof !
 When balanced in air, it ascended on high,
 And sailed up aloft, a balloon in the sky ;
 While the scale with the soul in 't so mightily fell
 That it jerked the philosopher out of his cell.

THE NIGHTINGALE AND GLOW-WORM.

A NIGHTINGALE, that all day long
 Had cheered the village with his song,
 Nor yet at eve his note suspended,
 Nor yet when eventide was ended,
 Began to feel — as well he might —
 The keen demands of appetite ;
 When, looking eagerly around,
 He spied, far off, upon the ground,
 A something shining in the dark,
 And knew the glow-worm by his spark ;
 So, stooping down from hawthorn top,
 He thought to put him in his cop.
 The worm, aware of his intent,
 Harangued him thus, quite eloquent, —
 “ Did you admire my lamp,” quoth he,
 “ As much as I your minstrelsy,
 You would abhor to do me wrong,
 As much as I to spoil your song ;
 For 't was the self-same Power divine
 Taught you to sing, and me to shine ;
 That you with music, I with light,
 Might beautify and cheer the night.”
 The songster heard his short oration,
 And, warbling out his approbation,
 Released him, as my story tells,
 And found a supper somewhere else.

THE PETRIFIED FERN.

IN a valley, centuries ago,
 Grew a little fern-leaf, green and slender,
 Veining delicate and fibres tender ;
 Waving when the wind crept down so low.
 Rushes tall, and moss, and grass grew round it,
 Playful sunbeams darted in and found it,
 Drops of dew stole in by night, and crowned it,
 But no foot of man e'er trod that way ;
 Earth was young, and keeping holiday.

Monster fishes swam the silent main,
 Stately forests waved their giant branches,
 Mountains hurled their snowy avalanches,
 Mammoth creatures stalked across the plain ;
 Nature revelled in grand mysteries,
 But the little fern was not of these,
 Did not number with the hills and trees ;
 Only grew and waved its wild sweet way,
 No one came to note it day by day.

Earth, one time, put on a frolic mood,
 Heaved the rocks and changed the mighty motion

Of the deep, strong currents of the ocean ;
 Moved the plain and shook the haughty wood,
 Crushed the little fern in soft moist clay, —
 Covered it, and hid it safe away.
 O, the long, long centuries since that day !
 O, the changes ! O, life's bitter cost,
 Since that useless little fern was lost !

Useless ? Lost ? There came a thoughtful man
 Searching Nature's secrets, far and deep ;
 From a fissure in a rocky steep
 He withdrew a stone, o'er which there ran
 Fairy pencillings, a quaint design,
 Veinings, leafage, fibres clear and fine.
 And the fern's life lay in every line !
 So, I think, God hides some souls away,
 Sweetly to surprise us, the last day.

THE COMET.

OCTOBER, 1858.

ERRATIC Soul of some great Purpose, doomed
 To track the wild illimitable space,
 Till sure propitiation has been made
 For the divine commission unperformed !
 What was thy crime ? Ahasuerus' curse
 Were not more stern on earth than thine in heaven !

Art thou the Spirit of some Angel World,
 For grave rebellion banished from thy peers,
 Compelled to watch the calm, immortal stars
 Circling in rapture the celestial void,
 While the avenger follows in thy train
 To spur thee on to wretchedness eterne ?

Or one of Nature's wildest fantasies,
 From which she flies in terror so profound,
 And with such whirl of torment in her breast,
 That mighty earthquakes yawn where'er she treads ;
 While War makes red its terrible right hand,
 And Famine stalks abroad all lean and wan ?

To us thou art as exquisitely fair
As the ideal visions of the seer,
Or gentlest fancy that e'er floated down
Imagination's bright, unruffled stream,
Wedding the thought that was too deep for words
To the low breathings of inspired song.

When the stars sang together o'er the birth
Of the poor Babe at Bethlehem, that lay
In the coarse manger at the crowded Inn,
Didst thou, perhaps a bright exalted star,
Refuse to swell the grand, harmonious lay,
Jealous as Herod of the birth divine ?

Or when the crown of thorns on Calvary
Pierced the Redeemer's brow, didst thou disdain
To weep, when all the planetary worlds
Were blinded by the fulness of their tears ?
E'en to the flaming sun, that hid his face
At the loud cry, "Lama Sabachthani !"

No rest ! No rest ! the very damned have that
In the dark councils of remotest Hell,
Where the dread scheme was perfected that sealed
Thy disobedience and accruing doom.
Like Adam's sons, hast thou, too, forfeited
The blest repose that never pillowed Sin ?

No ! none can tell thy fate, thou wandering
Sphinx !
Pale Science, searching by the midnight lamp
Through the vexed mazes of the human brain,
Still fails to read the secret of its soul
As the superb enigma flashes by,
A loosed Prometheus burning with disdain.

CHARLES SANGSTER.

SONG OF THE LIGHTNING.

"PUCK. I'll put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes."

Midsummer's Night Dream.

AWAY ! away ! through the sightless air
Stretch forth your iron thread !
For I would not dim my sandals fair
With the dust ye tamely tread !
Ay, rear it up on its million piers,
Let it circle the world around,
And the journey ye make in a hundred years
I'll clear at a single bound !

Though I cannot toil, like the groaning slave
Ye have fettered with iron skill
To ferry you over the boundless wave,
Or grind in the noisy mill,
Let him sing his giant strength and speed !
Why, a single shaft of mine

Would give that monster a flight indeed, —
To the depths of the ocean's brine !

No ! no ! I'm the spirit of light and love !
To my unseen hand 't is given
To pencil the ambient clouds above
And polish the stars of heaven !
I scatter the golden rays of fire
On the horizon far below,
And deck the sky where storms expire
With my red and dazzling glow.

With a glance I cleave the sky in twain ;
I light it with a glare,
When fall the boding drops of rain
Through the darkly curtained air !
The rock-built towers, the turrets gray,
The piles of a thousand years,
Have not the strength of potter's clay
Beneath my glittering spears.

From the Alps' or the Andes' highest crag,
From the peaks of eternal snow,
The blazing folds of my fiery flag
Illumine the world below.
The earthquake heralds my coming power,
The avalanche bounds away,
And howling storms at midnight's hour
Proclaim my kingly sway.

Ye tremble when my legions come, —
When my quivering sword leaps out
O'er the hills that echo my thunder down,
And rend with my joyous shout.
Ye quail on the land, or upon the sea
Ye stand in your fear aghast,
To see me burn the stalworth trees,
Or shiver the stately mast.

The hieroglyphs on the Persian wall, —
The letters of high command, —
Where the prophet read the tyrant's fall,
Were traced by my burning hand.
And oft in fire have I wrote since then
What angry Heaven decreed ;
But the sealed eyes of sinful men
Were all too blind to read.

At length the hour of light is here,
And kings no more shall bind,
Nor bigots crush with craven fear
The forward march of mind.
The words of Truth and Freedom's rays
Are from my pinions hurled ;
And soon the light of better days
Shall rise upon the world.

GEORGE W. CUTTER.

ORIGIN OF THE OPAL.

A DEW-DROP came, with a spark of flame
He had caught from the sun's last ray,
To a violet's breast, where he lay at rest
Till the hours brought back the day.

The rose looked down, with a blush and frown ;
But she smiled all at once, to view
Her own bright form, with its coloring warm,
Reflected back by the dew.

Then the stranger took a stolen look
At the sky, so soft and blue ;
And a leaflet green, with its silver sheen,
Was seen by the idler too.

A cold north-wind, as he thus reclined,
Of a sudden raged around ;
And a maiden fair, who was walking there,
Next morning, an opal found.

ANONYMOUS.

THE ORIGIN OF THE HARP.

'T is believed that this harp, which I wake now for thee,
Was a Siren of old, who sung under the sea ;
And who often, at eve, through the bright billow
roved,
To meet, on the green shore, a youth whom she loved.

But she loved him in vain, for he left her to
weep,
And in tears, all the night, her gold ringlets to
steep,
Till Heaven looked with pity on true-love so warm,
And changed to this soft harp the sea-maiden's
form.

Still her bosom rose fair — still her cheek smiled
the same —
While her sea-beauties gracefully curled round the frame ;
And her hair, shedding tear-drops from all its bright rings,
Fell o'er her white arm, to make the gold strings !

Hence it came, that this soft harp so long hath been known
To mingle love's language with sorrow's sad tone ;
Till thou didst divide them, and teach the fond lay
To be love when I'm near thee, and grief when away !

THOMAS MOORE.

ECHO AND SILENCE.*

In eddying course when leaves began to fly,
And Autumn in her lap the store to strew,
As mid wild scenes I chanced the Muse to woo,
Through glens untrod, and woods that frowned
on high,

Two sleeping nymphs with wonder mute I spy !
And, lo, she's gone ! — In robe of dark-green hue,
'T was Echo from her sister Silence flew,
For quick the hunter's horn resounded to the sky !
In shade affrighted Silence melts away.
Not so her sister. Hark ! for onward still,
With far-heard step, she takes her listening way,
Bounding from rock to rock, and hill to hill.
Ah, mark the merry maid in mockful play
With thousand mimic tones the laughing forest fill !

SIR SAMUEL EGERTON BRYDGES.

A MUSICAL INSTRUMENT.

WHAT was he doing, the great god Pan,
Down in the reeds by the river ?
Spreading ruin and scattering ban,
Splashing and paddling with hoofs of a goat,
And breaking the golden lilies afloat
With the dragon-fly on the river ?

He tore out a reed, the great god Pan,
From the deep, cool bed of the river,
The limpid water turbidly ran,
And the broken lilies a-dying lay,
And the dragon-fly had fled away,
Ere he brought it out of the river.

High on the shore sat the great god Pan,
While turbidly flowed the river,
And hacked and hewed as a great god can
With his hard, bleak steel at the patient reed,
Till there was not a sign of a leaf indeed
To prove it fresh from the river.

He cut it short, did the great god Pan,
(How tall it stood in the river !)
Then drew the pith like the heart of a man,
Steadily from the outside ring,
Then notched the poor dry empty thing
In holes, as he sate by the river.

"This is the way," laughed the great god Pan, (Laughed while he sate by the river !)
"The only way since gods began
To make sweet music, they could succeed."
Then dropping his mouth to a hole in the reed,
He blew in power by the river.

* Declared by Wordsworth to be the best Sonnet in the English language.

Sweet, sweet, sweet, O Pan,
 Piercing sweet by the river !
 Blinding sweet, O great god Pan !
 The sun on the hill forgot to die,
 And the lilies revived, and the dragon-fly
 Came back to dream on the river.

Yet half a beast is the great god Pan,
 To laugh, as he sits by the river,
 Making a poet out of a man.
 The true gods sigh for the cost and the pain, —
 For the reed that grows nevermore again
 As a reed with the reeds of the river.

THE CALIPH AND SATAN.

VERSIFIED FROM THOLUCK'S TRANSLATION OUT OF THE PERSIAN.

IN heavy sleep the Caliph lay,
 When some one called, "Arise, and pray !"

The angry Caliph cried, "Who dare
 Rebuke his king for slighted prayer ?"

Then, from the corner of the room,
 A voice cut sharply through the gloom :

"My name is Satan. Rise ! obey Mohammed's law ; awake, and pray !"

"Thy words are good," the Caliph said,
 "But their intent I somewhat dread.

For matters cannot well be worse
 Than when the thief says, 'Guard your purse !'

I cannot trust your counsel, friend,
 It surely hides some wicked end."

Said Satan, "Near the throne of God,
 In ages past, we devils trod ;

Angels of light, to us 't was given
 To guide each wandering foot to heaven.

Not wholly lost is that first love,
 Nor those pure tastes we knew above.

Roaming across a continent,
 The Tartar moves his shifting tent,

But never quite forgets the day
 When in his father's arms he lay ;

So we, once bathed in love divine,
 Recall the taste of that rich wine.

God's finger rested on my brow, —
 That magic touch, I feel it now !

I fell, 't is true — O, ask not why,
 For still to God I turn my eye.

It was a chance by which I fell,
 Another takes me back from hell.

'T was but my envy of mankind,
 The envy of a loving mind.

Jealous of men, I could not bear
 God's love with this new race to share.

But yet God's tables open stand,
 His guests flock in from every land ;

Some kind act toward the race of men
 May toss us into heaven again.

A game of chess is all we see, —
 And God the player, pieces we.

White, black — queen, pawn, — 't is all the same,
 For on both sides he plays the game.

Moved to and fro, from good to ill,
 We rise and fall as suits his will."

The Caliph said, "If this be so,
 I know not, but thy guile I know ;

For how can I thy words believe,
 When even God thou didst deceive ?

A sea of lies art thou, — our sin
 Only a drop that sea within."

"Not so," said Satan, "I serve God,
 His angel now, and now his rod.

In tempting I both bless and curse,
 Make good men better, bad men worse.

Good coin is mixed with bad, my brother,
 I but distinguish one from the other."

"Granted," the Caliph said, "but still
 You never tempt to good, but ill.

Tell then the truth, for well I know
 You come as my most deadly foe."

Loud laughed the fiend. "You know me well,
 Therefore my purpose I will tell.

If you had missed your prayer, I knew
 A swift repentance would ensue ;

And such repentance would have been
 A good, outweighing far the sin.

I chose this humbleness divine,
Borne out of fault, should not be thine,

Preferring prayers elate with pride
To sin with penitence allied."

AIRY NOTHINGS.

FROM "THE TEMPEST," ACT IV. SC. 1.

OUR revels now are ended. These our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
Are melted into air, into thin air ;
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.

SHAKESPEARE.

FRAGMENTS.

IMAGINATION.

Within the soul a faculty abides,
That with interpositions, which would hide
And darken, so can deal that they become Contingencies of pomp ; and serve to exalt
Her native brightness. As the ample moon,
In the deep stillness of a summer even
Rising behind a thick and lofty grove,
Burns, like an unconsuming fire of light,
In the green trees ; and, kindling on all sides
Their leafy umbrage, turns the dusky veil
Into a substance glorious as her own.

The Excursion, Book iv.

WORDSWORTH.

And, as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
A local habitation and a name.

Midsummer Night's Dream, Act v. Sc. 1. SHAKESPEARE.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention !

King Henry V., Chorus.

SHAKESPEARE.

Hark, his hands the lyre explore !
Bright-eyed fancy, hovering o'er,
Scatters from her pictured urn
Thoughts that breathe and words that burn.

CONCEPTION AND EXECUTION.

We figure to ourselves
The thing we like, and then we build it up
As chance will have it, on the rock or sand ;
For thought is tired of wandering o'er the world,
And home-bound Fancy runs her bark ashore.

Philip Van Artevelde, Part I. Act i. Sc. 5. SIR H. TAYLOR.

Of its own beauty is the mind diseased,
And fevers into false creation : — where,
Where are the forms the sculptor's soul hath seized ?
In him alone. Can Nature show so fair ?
Where are the charms and virtues which we dare
Conceive in boyhood and pursue as men,
The unreach'd Paradise of our despair,
Which o'er-informs the pencil and the pen,
And overpowers the page where it would bloom
again ?

Childe Harold, Cant. iv.

BYRON.

CLOUD-VISIONS.

A step,
A single step, that freed me from the skirts
Of the blind vapor, opened to my view
Glory beyond all glory ever seen
By waking sense or by the dreaming soul !
The appearance, instantaneously disclosed,
Was of a mighty city, — boldly say
A wilderness of building, sinking far
And self-withdrawn into a boundless depth,
Far sinking into splendor, — without end !
Fabric it seemed of diamond and of gold,
With alabaster domes, and silver spires,
And blazing terrace upon terrace, high
Uplifted ; here, serene pavilions bright,
In avenues disposed ; there, towers begirt
With battlements that on their restless fronts
Bore stars, — illumination of all gems !

The Excursion, Book ii.

WORDSWORTH.

THE MIND'S EYE.

HAMLET. My father, — methinks I see my father.

HORATIO. O ! where, my lord !

HAM. In my mind's eye, Horatio.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

On man, on nature, and on human life,
Musing in solitude, I oft perceive
Fair trains of imagery before me rise,
Accompanied by feelings of delight,
Pure, or with no unpleasant sadness mixed.

The Excursion: Prelude.

WORDSWORTH.

But O, what solemn scenes on Snowdon's height
 Descending slow their glittering skirts unroll?
 Visions of glory, spare my aching sight!
 Ye unborn ages, crowd not on my soul!

SPIRITS.

Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth
 Unseen, both when we wake, and when we sleep.

Spirits when they please
 Can either sex assume, or both,

Can execute their airy purposes,
 And works of love or enmity fulfil.

Worse

Than fables yet have feigned, or fear conceived,
 Gorgons, and Hydras, and Chimæras dire.

Paradise Lost, Book ii.

MILTON.

'Tis the djinns' wild-streaming swarm
 Whistling in their tempest-flight;
 Snap the tall yews 'neath the storm,
 Like a pine-flame crackling bright;
 Swift and heavy, low, their crowd
 Through the heavens rushing loud!—
 Like a lurid thunder-cloud
 With its bolt of fiery night!

The Djinnus. Trans. of J. L. O'SULLIVAN. V. HUGO.

But shapes that come not at an earthly call
 Will not depart when mortal voices bid;
 Lords of the visionary eye, whose lid,
 Once raised, remains aghast, and will not fall!

WORDSWORTH.

GHOSTS OF THE DEAD.

MACBETH. Thou canst not say I did it; never shake thy gory locks at me.

LADY MACBETH. O proper stuff!
 This is the very painting of your fear;
 This is the air-drawn dagger which, you said,
 Led you to Duncan.

MACBETH. Pr'ythee, see there! behold! look!
 lo! how say you?

The times have been,
 That, when the brains were out, the man would
 die,

And there an end; but now they rise again,
 With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
 And push us from our stools.

Avant! and quit my sight. Let the earth hide
 thee!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
 Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
 Which thou dost glare with!

Hence, horrible shadow!

Unreal mockery, hence!

Macbeth, Act iii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

And then it started, like a guilty thing
 Upon a fearful summons. I have heard,
 The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
 Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
 Awake the god of day; and at his warning,
 Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air,
 The extravagant and erring spirit hies
 To his confine.

WITCHES.

BANQUO. What are these,
 So withered, and so wild in their attire;
 That look not like the inhabitants o' the earth,
 And yet are on 't?

The earth hath bubbles, as the water has,
 And these are of them.—Whither have they vanished?

MACBETH. Into the air, and what seemed corporal melted
 As breath into the wind.

ARIEL. Where the bee sucks, there suck I :
In a cowslip's bell I lie ;
There I couch when owls do cry.
On the bat's back I do fly
After summer, merrily.
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

The Tempest, Act v. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

PUCK. How now, spirit, whither wander you ?

FAIRY. Over hill, over dale,
Thorough bush, thorough brier,
Over park, over pale,
Thorough flood, thorough fire,
I do wander everywhere,
Swifter than the moon's sphere ;
And I serve the fairy queen,
To dew her orbs upon the green :
The cowslips tall her pensioners be ;
In their gold coats spots you see ;
Those be rubies, fairy favors,
In those freckles live their savors :
I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

WATER SPRITES.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands ;
Court'sied when you have, and kissed
The wild waves whist,
Foot it featly here and there ;
And, sweet sprites, the burden bear.
Hark, hark !
Bowgh, wough.
The watch-dogs bark :
Bowgh, wough.
Hark, hark ! I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer
Cry, Cock-a-doodle-doo.

Full fathom five thy father lies
Of his bones are coral made :

Those are pearls that were his eyes :

Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell :

[Burden] Ding-dong.

Hark ! now I hear them, — Ding-dong, bell.

The Tempest, Act i. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Sabrina fair,

Listen where thou art sitting,
Under the glassy, cool, translucent wave,
In twisted braids of lilies knitting
The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair.

Listen for dear honor's sake,
Goddess of the silver lake,
Listen and save.

Comus.

MILTON.

WOOD-NYMPHS.

Egeria ! sweet creation of some heart
Which found no mortal resting-place so fair
As thine ideal breast ; whate'er thou art
Or wert, — a young Aurora of the air,
The nympholepsy of some fond despair ;
Or, it might be, a beauty of the earth,
Who found a more than common votary there
Too much adoring ; whatsoe'er thy birth,
Thou wert a beautiful thought, and softly bodied forth.

Childe Harold, Cant. iv.

BYRON.

Quite spent and out of breath he reached the tree,
And, listening fearfully, he heard once more
The low voice murmur "Rhœcus !" close at hand:
Whereat he looked around him, but could see Naught but the deepening glooms beneath the oak.

Then sighed the voice, "O Rhœcus ! nevermore
Shalt thou behold me or by day or night,
Me, who would fain have blessed thee with a love
More ripe and bounteous than ever yet
Filled up with nectar any mortal heart ;
But thou didst scorn my humble messenger,
And sent'st him back to me with bruised wings.
We spirits only show to gentle eyes,
We ever ask an undivided love.
And he who scorns the least of Nature's works
Is thenceforth exiled and shut out from all.
Farewell ! for thou canst never see me more."

Rhœcus.

J. R. LOWELL.

And though the land is thronged again, O sea,
Strange sadness trickles all that go with thee.
The small birds' plaintive note, the wild, sharp call,
Shave their own spirits; it is saddest all!
How dark & stern upon the waves looks down
Gyden Fald Cliff! — he with the iron crown.
And see! those noble pines along the steep
Are come to join thy requiem, gloomy deep!
Like stolid monks they stand & chant the dirge
O'er the dead with thy low-belling surge. —

POEMS OF TRAGEDY.

This is Love, who, deaf to prayers,
Floods with blessings unaware.
Loave, if thou canst, the mystic line
Severing rightly his from thine,
Which is human, which divine.

POEMS OF TRAGEDY.

IPHIGENEIA AND AGAMEMNON.

IPHIGENEIA, when she heard her doom
At Aulis, and when all beside the king
Had gone away, took his right hand, and said :
" O father ! I am young and very happy.
I do not think the pious Calchas heard
Distinctly what the goddess spake ; old age
Obscures the senses. If my nurse, who knew
My voice so well, sometimes misunderstood,
While I was resting on her knee both arms,
And hitting it to make her mind my words,
And looking in her face, and she in mine,
Might not he, also, hear one word amiss,
Spoken from so far off, even from Olympus ?"
The father placed his cheek upon her head,
And tears dropt down it ; but the king of men
Replied not. Then the maiden spake once more :
" O father ! sayest thou nothing ? Hearest thou not

Me, whom thou ever hast, until this hour,
Listened to fondly, and awakened me
To hear my voice amid the voice of birds,
When it was inarticulate as theirs,
And the down deadened it within the nest ?'
He moved her gently from him, silent still ;
And this, and this alone, brought tears from her,
Although she saw fate nearer. Then with sighs :
" I thought to have laid down my hair before
Benignant Artemis, and not dimmed
Her polished altar with my virgin blood ;
I thought to have selected the white flowers
To please the nymphs, and to have asked of each
By name, and with no sorrowful regret,
Whether, since both my parents willed the change,
I might at Hymen's feet bend my clipt brow ;
And (after these who mind us girls the most)
Adore our own Athene, that she would Regard me mildly with her azure eyes, —
But, father, to see you no more, and see
Your love, O father ! go ere I am gone !"
Gently he moved her off, and drew her back,
Bending his lofty head far over hers ;
And the dark depths of nature heaved and burst.
He turned away, — not far, but silent still.

She now first shuddered ; for in him, so nigh,
So long a silence seemed the approach of death,
And like it. Once again she raised her voice :
" O father ! if the ships are now detained,
And all your vows move not the gods above,
When the knife strikes me there will be one prayer
The less to them ; and purer can there be Any, or more fervent, than the daughter's prayer
For her dear father's safety and success ?"
A groan that shook him shook not his resolve.
An aged man now entered, and without
One word stepped slowly on, and took the wrist
Of the pale maiden. She looked up, and saw
The fillet of the priest and calm, cold eyes.
Then turned she where her parent stood, and cried :
" O father ! grieve no more ; the ships can sail."

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

THE ROMAN FATHER'S SACRIFICE.

FROM " VIRGINIA."

STRAIGHTWAY Virginius led the maid
A little space aside,
To where the reeking shambles stood,
Piled up with horn and hide ;
Close to yon low dark archway,
Where, in a crimson flood,
Leaps down to the great sewer
The gurgling stream of blood.

Hard by, a flesher on a block
Had laid his whittle down :
Virginius caught the whittle up,
And hid it in his gown.
And then his eyes grew very dim,
And his throat began to swell,
And in a hoarse, changed voice he spake,
" Farewell, sweet child ! Farewell !

" O, how I loved my darling !
Though stern I sometimes be,
To thee, thou know'st, I was not so, —
Who could be so to thee ?

And how my darling loved me !
 How glad she was to hear
 My footstep on the threshold
 When I came back last year !

“ And how she danced with pleasure
 To see my civic crown,
 And took my sword, and hung it up,
 And brought me forth my gown !
 Now, all those things are over, —
 Yes, all thy pretty ways,
 Thy needlework, thy prattle,
 Thy snatches of old lays ;

“ And none will grieve when I go forth,
 Or smile when I return,
 Or watch beside the old man’s bed,
 Or weep upon his urn.

The house that was the happiest
 Within the Roman walls,
 The house that envied not the wealth
 Of Capua’s marble halls,

“ Now, for the brightness of thy smile,
 Must have eternal gloom,
 And for the music of thy voice,
 The silence of the tomb.
 The time is come ! See how he points
 His eager hand this way !
 See how his eyes gloat on thy grief,
 Like a kite’s upon the prey !

“ With all his wit, he little deems
 That, spurned, betrayed, bereft,
 Thy father hath, in his despair,
 One fearful refuge left.
 He little deems that in this hand
 I clutch what still can save
 Thy gentle youth from taunts and blows,
 The portion of the slave ;

“ Yea, and from nameless evil,
 That passeth taunt and blow, —
 Foul outrage which thou knowest not,
 Which thou shalt never know.
 Then clasp me round the neck once more,
 And give me one more kiss ;
 And now, mine own dear little girl,
 There is no way but this.”

With that he lifted high the steel,
 And smote her in the side,
 And in her blood she sank to earth,
 And with one sob she died.
 Then, for a little moment,
 All people held their breath ;
 And through the crowded forum
 Was stillness as of death ;

And in another moment
 Brake forth, from one and all,
 A cry as if the Volscians
 Were coming o’er the wall.
 Some with averted faces
 Shrieking fled home amain ;
 Some ran to call a leech ; and some
 Ran to lift up the slain.

Some felt her lips and little wrist,
 If life might there be found ;
 And some tore up their garments fast,
 And strove to stanch the wound.
 In vain they ran, and felt, and stanch’d ;
 For never truer blow
 That good right arm had dealt in fight Against a Volscian foe.

When Appius Claudius saw that deed,
 He shuddered and sank down,
 And hid his face some little space
 With the corner of his gown ;
 Till, with white lips and bloodshot eyes,
 Virginius tottered nigh,
 And stood before the judgment-seat,
 And held the knife on high.

“ O dwellers in the nether gloom,
 Avengers of the slain,
 By this dear blood I cry to you
 Do right between us twain ;
 And even as Appius Claudius
 Hath dealt by me and mine,
 Deal you by Appius Claudius,
 And all the Claudian line !”

So spake the slayer of his child,
 And turned and went his way ;
 But first he cast one haggard glance
 To where the body lay,
 And writhed, and groaned a fearful groan,
 And then, with steadfast feet,
 Strode right across the market-place
 Unto the Sacred Street.

Then up sprang Appius Claudius :
 “ Stop him ; alive or dead !
 Ten thousand pounds of copper
 To the man who brings his head.”
 He looked upon his clients ;
 But none would work his will.
 He looked upon his lictors ;
 But they trembled, and stood still.

And as Virginius through the press
 His way in silence cleft,
 Ever the mighty multitude
 Fell back to right and left.

And he hath passed in safety
 Unto his woful home,
 And there ta'en horse to tell the camp
 What deeds are done in Rome.

THOMAS BABINGTON MACAULAY.

LUCIUS JUNIUS BRUTUS OVER THE BODY OF LUCRETIA.

FROM "BRUTUS."

WOULD you know why I summoned you together?
 Ask ye what brings me here? Behold this dagger,
 Clotted with gore! Behold that frozen corpse!
 See where the lost Lucretia sleeps in death!
 She was the mark and model of the time,
 The mould in which each female face was formed,
 The very shrine and sacristy of virtue!
 Fairer than ever was a form created
 By youthful fancy when the blood strays wild,
 And never-resting thought is all on fire!
 The worthiest of the worthy! Not the nymph
 Who met old Numa in his hallowed walks,
 And whispered in his ear her strains divine,
 Can I conceive beyond her; — the young choir
 Of vestal virgins bent to her. 'Tis wonderful
 Amid the darnel, henlock, and base weeds,
 Which now spring rife from the luxurious compost
 Spread o'er the realm, how this sweet lily rose, —
 How from the shade of those ill-neighboring plants

Her father sheltered her, that not a leaf
 Was blighted, but, arrayed in purest grace,
 She bloomed unsullied beauty. Such perfections
 Might have called back the torpid breast of age
 To long-forgotten rapture; such a mind
 Might have abashed the boldest libertine
 And turned desire to reverential love
 And holiest affection! O my countrymen!
 You all can witness when that she went forth
 It was a holiday in Rome; old age
 Forgot its crutch, labor its task, — all ran,
 And mothers, turning to their daughters, cried,
 "There, there's Lucretia!" Now look ye where she lies!

That beauteous flower, that innocent sweet rose,
 Torn up by ruthless violence, — gone! gone! gone!

Say, would you seek instruction? would ye ask
 What ye should do? Ask ye you conscious walls,
 Which saw his poisoned brother, —
 Ask yon deserted street, where Tullia drove O'er her dead father's corpse, 't will cry, Revenge!
 Ask yonder senate-house, whose stones are purple
 With human blood, and it will cry, Revenge!
 Go to the tomb where lies his murdered wife,

And the poor queen, who loved him as her son,
 Their unappeas'd ghosts will shriek, Revenge!
 The temples of the gods, the all-viewing heavens,
 The gods themselves, shall justify the cry,
 And swell the general sound, Revenge! Revenge!
 And we will be revenged, my countrymen!
 Brutus shall lead you on; Brutus, a name
 Which will, when you're revenged, be dearer to
 him

Than all the noblest titles earth can boast.

Brutus your king! — No, fellow-citizens!
 If mad ambition in this guilty frame
 Had strung one kingly fibre, yea, but one, —
 By all the gods, this dagger which I hold
 Should rip it out, though it entwined my heart.

Now take the body up. Bear it before us
 To Tarquin's palace; there we'll light our torches,
 And in the blazing conflagration rear
 A pile, for these chaste relics, that shall send Her soul amongst the stars. On! Brutus leads you!

JOHN HOWARD PAYNE.

ANTONY'S ORATION OVER THE BODY
 OF CÆSAR.

FROM "JULIUS CÆSAR," ACT III. SC. 2.

ANTONY. Omighty Cæsar! dost thou lie so low?
 Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
 Shrunk to this little measure? — Fare thee well. —

(To the people.)

Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;

I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.
 The evil that men do lives after them;
 The good is oft interrèd with their bones;
 So let it be with Cæsar. The noble Brutus
 Hath told you Cæsar was ambitious:
 If it were so, it was a grievous fault;
 And grievously hath Cæsar answered it.
 Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest,
 (For Brutus is an honorable man;
 So are they all, all honorable men,)
 Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.
 He was my friend, faithful and just to me:
 But Brutus says he was ambitious;
 And Brutus is an honorable man.
 He hath brought many captives home to Rome,
 Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill:
 Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?
 When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept:
 Ambition should be made of sterner stuff:
 Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;
 And Brutus is an honorable man.
 You all did see that on the Lupercal

I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse : was this ambition ?
Yet Brutus says he was ambitious ;
And, sure, he is an honorable man.
I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,
But here I am to speak what I do know.
You all did love him once, — not without cause .
What cause withholds you, then, to mourn for
him ?

O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason ! — Bear with me ;
My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,
And I must pause till it come back to me.

But yesterday, the word of Cæsar might
Have stood against the world . now lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence.
O masters ! if I were disposed to stir
Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,
I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,
Who, you all know, are honorable men :
I will not do them wrong ; I rather choose
To wrong the dead, to wrong myself, and you,
Than I will wrong such honorable men.
But here 's a parchment, with the seal of Cæsar, —
I found it in his closet, — 't is his will .
Let but the commons hear this testament,
(Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read,)
And they would go and kiss dead Cæsar's wounds,
And dip their napkins in his sacred blood :
Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,
And, dying, mention it within their wills,
Bequeathing it, as a rich legacy,
Unto their issue.

4 CITIZEN. We 'll hear the will : read it, Mark Antony.

CITIZENS. The will, the will ! we will hear Cæsar's will.

ANT. Have patience, gentle friends, I must not read it ;

It is not meet you know how Cæsar loved you.
You are not wood, you are not stones, but men ;
And, being men, hearing the will of Cæsar,
It will inflame you, it will make you mad :
'T is good you know not that you are his heirs,
For if you should, O, what would come of it !

4 CIT. Read the will ; we 'll hear it, Antony ;
You shall read us the will, — Cæsar's will.

ANT. Will you be patient ? Will you stay awhile ?

I have o'ershot myself to tell you of it.
I fear I wrong the honorable men
Whose daggers have stabbed Cæsar ; I do fear it.

4 CIT. They were traitors : honorable men !

CIT. The will ! the testament !

2 CIT. They were villains, murderers : the will ! read the will !

ANT. You will compel me, then, to read the will ?

Then make a ring about the corse of Cæsar,
And let me show you him that made the will.
Shall I descend ? and will you give me leave ?

CITIZENS. Come down.

ANT. Nay, press not so upon me ; stand far off.
CITIZENS. Stand back ; room ; bear back.

ANT. If you have tears, prepare to shed them
now.

You all do know this mantle : I remember
The first time ever Cæsar put it on ;
'T was on a summer's evening, in his tent ;
That day he overcame the Nervii : —
Look, in this place ran Cassius' dagger through :
See what a rent the envious Casca made :
Through this the well-belovèd Brutus stabbed ;
And, as he plucked his cursèd steel away,
Mark how the blood of Cæsar followed it,
As rushing out of doors, to be resolved
If Brutus so unkindly knocked, or no ;
For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel :
Judge, O you gods, how dearly Cæsar loved him !
This was the most unkindest cut of all ;
For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,
Quite vanquished him : then burst his mighty
heart ;

And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
Even at the base of Pompey's statua,
Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell.
O, what a fall was there, my countrymen !
Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,
Whilst bloody treason flourished over us.
O, now you weep ; and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity : these are gracious drops.
Kind souls, what, weep you when you but behold
Our Cæsar's vesture wounded ? Look you here,
Here is himself, marred, as you see, with traitors.

Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir
you up

To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
They that have done this deed are honorable ; —
What private griefs they have, alas, I know not,
That made them do it ; — they are wise and honorable,

And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.
I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts ;
I am no orator, as Brutus is ;
But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,
That love my friend ; and that they know full well

That gave me public leave to speak of him :
For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,
To stir men's blood : I only speak right on ;

I tell you that which you yourselves do know ;
 Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor, poor dumb mouths,
 And bid them speak for me : but were I Brutus,
 And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
 Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
 In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
 The stones of Rome to rise in mutiny.

Here is the will, and under Cæsar's seal : —
 To every Roman citizen he gives,
 To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.

2 CIT. Most noble Cæsar ! — we'll revenge his death.

3 CIT. O royal Cæsar !

ANT. Hear me with patience.

CITIZENS. Peace, ho !

ANT. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,
 His private arbors, and new-planted orchards,
 On this side Tiber ; he hath left them you,
 And to your heirs forever, — common pleasures,
 To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves.

Here was a Cæsar ! when comes such another ?

1 CIT. Never, never ! — Come away, away !
 We'll burn his body in the holy place,
 And with the brands fire the traitors' houses.
 Take up the body.

SHAKESPEARE.

OTHELLO'S REMORSE.

FROM "OTHELLO," ACT V. SC. 2.

BEHOLD, I have a weapon ;
 A better never did itself sustain
 Upon a soldier's thigh : I have seen the day,
 That, with this little arm and this good sword,
 I have made my way through more impediments
 Than twenty times your stop : — but, O vain boast !

Who can control his fate ? 't is not so now. —
 Be not afraid, though you do see me weaponed ;
 Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
 And very sea-mark of my utmost sail.
 Do you go back dismayed ? 't is a lost fear ;
 Man but a rush against Othello's breast,
 And he retires : — where should Othello go ? —
 Now, how dost thou look now ? O ill-starred wench !

Pale as thy smock ! when we shall meet at compt,
 This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven,
 And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl ?
 Even like thy chastity — O, cursed slave ! —
 Whip me, ye devils,
 From the possession of this heavenly sight !
 Blow me about in winds ! roast me in sulphur !
 Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire ! —
 O Desdemona ! Desdemona ! dead ? O ! O !

SHAKESPEARE.

THE EXECUTION OF MONTROSE.

[James Graham, Marquis of Montrose, was executed in Edinburgh, May 21, 1650, for an attempt to overthrow the Commonwealth, and restore Charles II.]

COME hither, Evan Cameron !
 Come, stand behind my knee —
 I hear the river roaring down
 Toward the wintry sea.
 There's shouting on the mountain-side,
 There's war within the blast —
 Old faces look upon me,
 Old forms go trooping past.
 I hear the pibroch wailing
 Amidst the din of fight,
 And my dim spirit wakes again
 Upon the verge of night.

'T was I that led the Highland host
 Through wild Lochaber's snows,
 What time the plaided clans came down
 To battle with Montrose.
 I've told thee how the Southrons fell
 Beneath the broad claymore,
 And how we smote the Campbell clan
 By Inverlochry's shore.
 I've told thee how we swept Dundee,
 And tamed the Lindsays' pride ;
 But never have I told thee yet
 How the great Marquis died.

A traitor sold him to his foes ; —
 O deed of deathless shame !
 I charge thee, boy, if e'er thou meet
 With one of Assynt's name —
 Be it upon the mountain's side,
 Or yet within the glen,
 Stand he in martial gear alone,
 Or backed by armed men —
 Face him as thou wouldst face the man
 Who wronged thy sire's renown ;
 Remember of what blood thou art,
 And strike the caitiff down !

They brought him to the Watergate,
 Hard bound with hempen span,
 As though they held a lion there,
 And not a fenceless man.
 They set him high upon a cart —
 The hangman rode below —
 They drew his hands behind his back,
 And bared his noble brow.
 Then, as a hound is slipped from leash,
 They cheered the common throng,
 And blew the note with yell and shout,
 And bade him pass along.

It would have made a brave man's heart
 Grow sad and sick that day,
 To watch the keen, malignant eyes
 Bent down on that array.
 There stood the Whig west-country lords
 In balcony and bow ;
 There sat their gaunt and withered dames,
 And their daughters all a-row.
 And every open window
 Was full as full might be
 With black-robed Covenanting carles,
 That goodly sport to see !

But when he came, though pale and wan,
 He looked so great and high,
 So noble was his manly front,
 So calm his steadfast eye ; —
 The rabble rout forbore to shout,
 And each man held his breath,
 For well they knew the hero's soul
 Was face to face with death.
 And then a mournful shudder
 Through all the people crept,
 And some that came to scoff at him
 Now turned aside and wept.

But onward — always onward,
 In silence and in gloom,
 The dreary pageant labored,
 Till it reached the house of doom.
 Then first a woman's voice was heard
 In jeer and laughter loud,
 And an angry cry and a hiss arose
 From the heart of the tossing crowd :
 Then, as the Græme looked upward,
 He saw the ugly smile
 Of him who sold his king for gold —
 The master-fiend Argyle !

The Marquis gazed a moment,
 And nothing did he say,
 But the cheek of Argyle grew ghastly pale,
 And he turned his eyes away.
 The painted harlot by his side,
 She shook through every limb,
 For a roar like thunder swept the street,
 And hands were clenched at him ;
 And a Saxon soldier cried aloud,
 " Back, coward, from thy place !
 For seven long years thou hast not dared
 To look him in the face."

Had I been there with sword in hand,
 And fifty Camerons by,
 That day through high Dunedin's streets
 Had pealed the slogan-cry.

Not all their troops of trampling horse,
 Nor might of mailed men —
 Not all the rebels in the south
 Had borne us backward then !
 Once more his foot on Highland heath
 Had trod as free as air,
 Or I, and all who bore my name,
 Been laid around him there !

It might not be. They placed him next
 Within the solemn hall,
 Where once the Scottish kings were throned
 Amidst their nobles all.
 But there was dust of vulgar feet
 On that polluted floor,
 And perjured traitors filled the place
 Where good men sate before.
 With savage glee came Warriston
 To read the murderous doom ;
 And then uprose the great Montrose
 In the middle of the room :

" Now, by my faith as belted knight
 And by the name I bear,
 And by the bright St. Andrew's cross
 That waves above us there —
 Yea, by a greater, mightier oath —
 And O that such should be ! —
 By that dark stream of royal blood
 That lies 'twixt you and me —
 I have not sought in battle-field
 A wreath of such renown,
 Nor dared I hope on my dying day
 To win the martyr's crown !

" There is a chamber far away
 Where sleep the good and brave,
 But a better place ye have named for me
 Than by my fathers' grave.
 For truth and right, 'gainst treason's might,
 This hand hath always striven,
 And ye raise it up for a witness still
 In the eye of earth and heaven.
 Then nail my head on yonder tower —
 Give every town a limb —
 And God whō made shall gather them :
 I go from you to Him !"

The morning dawned full darkly,
 The rain came flashing down,
 And the jagged streak of the levin-bolt
 Lit up the gloomy town.
 The thunder crashed across the heaven,
 The fatal hour was come ;
 Yet aye broke in, with muffled beat,
 The 'larum of the drum.

There was madness on the earth below
 And anger in the sky,
 And young and old, and rich and poor,
 Came forth to see him die.

Ah God ! that ghastly gibbet !
 How dismal 't is to see
 The great tall spectral skeleton,
 The ladder and the tree !
 Hark ! hark ! it is the clash of arms, —
 The bells begin to toll, —
 "He is coming ! he is coming !
 God's mercy on his soul !"
 One last long peal of thunder, —
 The clouds are cleared away,
 And the glorious sun once more looks down
 Amidst the dazzling day.

"He is coming ! he is coming !"
 Like a bridegroom from his room
 Came the hero from his prison
 To the scaffold and the doom.
 There was glory on his forehead,
 There was lustre in his eye,
 And he never walked to battle
 More proudly than to die.
 There was color in his visage,
 Though the cheeks of all were wan ;
 And they marvelled as they saw him pass,
 That great and goodly man !

He mounted up the scaffold,
 And he turned him to the crowd ;
 But they dared not trust the people,
 So he might not speak aloud.
 But he looked upon the heavens,
 And they were clear and blue,
 And in the liquid ether
 The eye of God shone through :
 Yet a black and murky battlement
 Lay resting on the hill,
 As though the thunder slept within, —
 All else was calm and still.

The grim Geneva ministers
 With anxious scowl drew near,
 As you have seen the ravens flock
 Around the dying deer.
 He would not deign them word nor sign,
 But alone he bent the knee ;
 And veiled his face for Christ's dear grace
 Beneath the gallows-tree.
 Then, radiant and serene, he rose,
 And cast his cloak away ;
 For he had ta'en his latest look
 Of earth and sun and day.

A beam of light fell o'er him,
 Like a glory round the shriven,
 And he climbed the lofty ladder
 As it were the path to heaven.
 Then came a flash from out the cloud,
 And a stunning thunder-roll ;
 And no man dared to look aloft, —
 Fear was on every soul.
 There was another heavy sound,
 A hush, and then a groan ;
 And darkness swept across the sky, —
 The work of death was done !

WILLIAM EDMONDSTOUNE AYTOUN.

GOD'S JUDGMENT ON A WICKED BISHOP.

[Hatto, Archbishop of Mentz, in the year 914, barbarously murdered a number of poor people to prevent their consuming a portion of the food during that year of famine. He was afterwards devoured by rats in his tower on an island in the Rhine.—Old Legend.]

THE summer and autumn had been so wet,
 That in winter the corn was growing yet :
 'T was a piteous sight to see all around
 The grain lie rotting on the ground.

Every day the starving poor
 Crowded around Bishop Hatto's door ;
 For he had a plentiful last-year's store,
 And all the neighborhood could tell
 His granaries were furnished well.

At last Bishop Hatto appointed a day
 To quiet the poor without delay ;
 He bade them to his great barn repair,
 And they should have food for the winter there.

Rejoiced the tidings good to hear,
 The poor folks flocked from far and near ;
 The great barn was full as it could hold
 Of women and children, and young and old.

Then, when he saw it could hold no more,
 Bishop Hatto he made fast the door ;
 And whilst for mercy on Christ they call,
 He set fire to the barn, and burnt them all.

"'T faith 't is an excellent bonfire !" quoth he ;
 "And the country is greatly obliged to me
 For ridding it, in these times forlorn,
 Of rats that only consume the corn."

So then to his palace returnèd he,
 And he sate down to supper merrily,
 And he slept that night like an innocent man ;
 But Bishop Hatto never slept again.

In the morning, as he entered the hall,
Where his picture hung against the wall,
A sweat like death all over him came,
For the rats had eaten it out of the frame.

As he looked, there came a man from his farm, —
He had a countenance white with alarm :
“ My lord, I opened your granaries this morn,
And the rats had eaten all your corn.”

Another came running presently,
And he was pale as pale could be.
“ Fly ! my lord bishop, fly ! ” quoth he,
“ Ten thousand rats are coming this way, —
The Lord forgive you for yesterday ! ”

“ I ’ll go to my tower in the Rhine,” replied he ;
“ T is the safest place in Germany, —
The walls are high, and the shores are steep,
And the tide is strong, and the water deep.”

Bishop Hatto fearfully hastened away ;
And he crossed the Rhine without delay,
And reached his tower, and barred with care
All the windows, doors, and loop-holes there.

He laid him down and closed his eyes,
But soon a scream made him arise ;
He started, and saw two eyes of flame
On his pillow, from whence the screaming came.

He listened and looked, — it was only the cat ;
But the bishop he grew more fearful for that,
For she sate screaming, mad with fear,
At the army of rats that were drawing near.

For they have swum over the river so deep,
And they have climbed the shores so steep,
And now by thousands up they crawl
To the holes and the windows in the wall.

Down on his knees the bishop fell,
And faster and faster his beads did he tell,
As louder and louder, drawing near,
The saw of their teeth without he could hear.

And in at the windows, and in at the door,
And through the walls, by thousands they pour ;
And down from the ceiling and up through the floor,
From the right and the left, from behind and
before,
From within and without, from above and below, —
And all at once to the bishop they go.

They have whetted their teeth against the stones,
And now they pick the bishop’s bones ;
They gnawed the flesh from every limb,
For they were sent to do judgment on him !

ROBERT SOUTHEY.

THE SACK OF BALTIMORE.

[Baltimore is a small seaport in the barony of Carbery, in South Munster. It grew up around a castle of O’Driscoll’s, and was, after his ruin, colonized by the English. On the 20th of June, 1631, the crews of two Algerine galleys landed in the dead of the night, sacked the town, and bore off into slavery all who were not too old, or too young, or too fierce, for their purpose. The pirates were steered up the intricate channel by one Hackett, a Dunganan fisherman, whom they had taken at sea for the purpose. Two years after, he was convicted of the crime and executed. Baltimore never recovered from this.]

THE summer sun is falling soft on Carbery’s hundred isles,
The summer sun is gleaming still through Gabriel’s rough defiles, —
Old Inisherkin’s crumbled fane looks like a moulting bird ;
And in a calm and sleepy swell the ocean tide is heard :
The hookers lie upon the beach ; the children
cease their play ;
The gossips leave the little inn ; the households
kneel to pray ;
And full of love and peace and rest, — its daily labor o’er, —
Upon that cosy creek there lay the town of Baltimore.

A deeper rest, a starry trance, has come with midnight there ;
No sound, except that throbbing wave, in earth
or sea or air.
The massive capes and ruined towers seem conscious of the calm ;
The fibrous sod and stunted trees are breathing
heavy balm.
So still the night, these two long barks round
Dunashad that glide
Must trust their oars — methinks not few — against the ebbing tide.
O, some sweet mission of true love must urge them to the shore, —
They bring some lover to his bride, who sighs in Baltimore !

All, all asleep within each roof along that rocky street,
And these must be the lover’s friends, with gently gliding feet.
A stifled gasp ! a dreamy noise ! The roof is in a flame !
From out their beds, and to their doors, rush
maid and sire and dame,
And meet, upon the threshold stone, the gleaming sabre’s fall,
And o’er each black and bearded face the white or crimson shawl.
The yell of “ Allah ! ” breaks above the prayer and shriek and roar —
O blessed God ! the Algerine is lord of Baltimore !

Then flung the youth his naked hand against the shearing sword ;
Then sprung the mother on the brand with which her son was gored ;
Then sunk the grandsire on the floor, his grandbabes clutching wild ;
Then fled the maiden moaning faint, and nestled with the child.
But see, yon pirate strangling lies, and crushed
with splashing heel,
While o'er him in an Irish hand there sweeps his Syrian steel ;
Though virtue sink, and courage fail, and misers
yield their store,
There's one hearth well avenged in the sack of Baltimore !

Midsummer morn, in woodland nigh, the birds
begin to sing ;
They see not now the milking-maids, deserted is the spring !
Midsummer day, this gallant rides from distant
Bandon's town,
These hookers crossed from stormy Skull, that skiff from Afladown.
They only found the smoking walls with neighbors' blood besprent,
And on the strewed and trampled beach awhile
they wildly went,
Then dashed to sea, and passed Cape Clear, and saw, five leagues before,
The pirate-galleys vanishing that ravaged Balti-
more.

O, some must tug the galley's oar, and some must tend the steed, —
This boy will bear a Scheik's chibouk, and that a Bey's jerreed.
O, some are for the arsenals by beauteous Dardanelles,
And some are in the caravan to Mecca's sandy dells.
The maid that Bandon gallant sought is chosen for the Dey,
She's safe, — she's dead, — she stabbed him in the midst of his Serai ;
And when to die a death of fire that noble maid
they bore,
She only smiled, — O'Driscoll's child, — she thought of Baltimore.

'T is two long years since sunk the town beneath that bloody band,
And all around its trampled hearths a larger concourse stand,
Where high upon a gallows-tree a yelling wretch is seen, —

'T is Hackett of Dungarvan, — he who steered the Algerine !
He fell amid a sullen shout, with scarce a passing prayer,
For he had slain the kith and kin of many a hundred there :
Some muttered of MacMorrogh, who had brought the Norman o'er,
Some cursed him with Iscariot, that day in Baltimore.

THOMAS DAVIS.

PARRHASIUS.

PARRHASIUS stood, gazing forgetfully
Upon the canvas. There Prometheus lay,
Chained to the cold rocks of Mount Caucasus,
The vulture at his vitals, and the links
Of the lame Lemnian festering in his flesh ;
And, as the painter's mind felt through the dim
Rapt mystery, and plucked the shadows forth
With its far-reaching fancy, and with form
And color clad them, his fine, earnest eye
Flashed with a passionate fire, and the quick curl
Of his thin nostril, and his quivering lip,
Were like the winged god's breathing from his flights.

“Bring me the captive now !
My hand feels skilful, and the shadows lift
From my waked spirit airily and swift ;
And I could paint the bow
Upon the bended heavens, — around me play
Colors of such divinity to-day.

“Ha ! bind him on his back !
Look ! as Prometheus in my picture here ;
Quick, — or he faints ! — stand with the cordial near !

Now, — bend him to the rack !
Press down the poisoned links into his flesh !
And tear agape that healing wound afresh !

“So, — let him writhe ! How long
Will he live thus ? Quick, my good pencil, now !
What a fine agony works upon his brow !
Ha ! gray-haired, and so strong !
How fearfully he stifles that short moan !
Gods ! if I could but paint a dying groan !

“Pity thee ! so I do !
I pity the dumb victim at the altar,
But does the robed priest for his pity falter ?
I'd rack thee, though I knew
A thousand lives were perishing in thine ;
What were ten thousand to a fame like mine ?

"Ah! there's a deathless name! —
A spirit that the smothering vaults shall spurn,
And, like a steadfast planet, mount and burn;
And though its crown of flame
Consumed my brain to ashes as it shone,
By all the fiery stars, I'd bind it on!

"Ay! though it bid me rifle
My heart's last fount for its insatiate thirst, —
Though every life-strung nerve be maddened first, —

Though it should bid me stifle
The yearnings in my heart for my sweet child,
And taunt its mother till my brain went wild, —

"All, — I would do it all, —
Sooner than die, like a dull worm, to rot
Thrust foully in the earth to be forgot.

O Heavens! — but I appall
Your heart, old man! — forgive — ha! on your lives
Let him not faint! rack him till he revives!

"Vain, — vain, — give o'er. His eye
Glazes apace. He does not feel you now, —
Stand back! I'll paint the death-dew on his brow!

Gods! if he do not die,
But for one moment — one — till I eclipse
Conception with the scorn of those calm lips!

"Shivering! Hark! he mutters
Brokenly now, — that was a difficult breath, —
Another? Wilt thou never come, O Death?

Look! how his temple flutters!
Is his heart still? Aha! lift up his head!
He shudders, — gasps, — Jove help him! — so,
— he's dead!"

How like a mounting devil in the heart
Rules the unreined ambition! Let it once
But play the monarch, and its haughty brow
Glow with a beauty that bewilders thought
And unthrones peace forever. Putting on
The very pomp of Lucifer, it turns
The heart to ashes, and with not a spring
Left in the bosom for the spirit's lip,
We look upon our splendor, and forget
The thirst of which we perish!

A DAGGER OF THE MIND.

FROM "MACBETH," ACT II. SC. 1.

(MACBETH before the murder of Duncan, meditating alone, sees the image of a dagger in the air, and thus soliloquizes.)

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee: —
I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?
I see thee yet, in form as palpable
As this which now I draw.

Thou marshal'st me the way that I was going;
And such an instrument I was to use.
Mine eyes are made the fools o' the other senses,
Or else worth all the rest: I see thee still;
And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood,
Which was not so before. — There's no such thing:

It is the bloody business, which informs
Thus to mine eyes. — Now o'er the one half world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse
The curtained sleep; witchcraft celebrates
Pale Hecate's offerings; and withered murder,
Alarumed by his sentinel, the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,

With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his design
Moves like a ghost. — Thou sure and firm-set
earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear

The very stones prate of my whereabouts,
And take the present horror from the time,
Which now suits with it. — Whiles I threat, he
lives:

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

(A bell rings.)

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.
Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell
That summons thee to heaven or to hell.

SHAKESPEARE.

THE MURDER.

FROM "MACBETH," ACT II. SC. 2.

SCENE in the Castle. Enter LADY MACBETH.

LADY MACBETH. That which hath made them drunk hath made me bold,
What hath quenched them hath given me fire.
Hark! — Peace!

It was the owl that shrieked, the fatal bellman,
Which gives the stern'st good night. He is about it:

The doors are open; and the surfeited grooms
Do mark their charge with snores: I have drugged their possets,

That death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live or die.

MACBETH (within). Who's there? What, ho!

LADY M. Alack, I am afraid they have awaked
And 't is not done :—the attempt and not the deed

Confounds us. — Hark !— I laid their daggers ready ;

He could not miss them. — Had he not resembled My father, as he slept, I had done 't. — My husband !

MACB. I have done the deed. Didst thou not hear a noise ?

LADY M. I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry.
Did not you speak ?

MACB. When ?

LADY M. Now.

MACB. As I descended ?

LADY M. Ay.

MACB. Hark !—

Who lies i' the second chamber ?

LADY M. Donalbain.

MACB. (looking on his hands). This is a sorry sight.

LADY M. A' foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.

MACB. There's one did laugh in 's sleep, and one cried, "Murder !"

That they did wake each other : I stood and heard them :

But they did say their prayers, and addressed them

Again to sleep.

LADY M. There are two lodged together.

MACB. One cried, "God bless us !" and, "Amen," the other ;

As they had seen me with these hangman's hands.

Listening their fear, I could not say, "Amen,"

When they did say, "God bless us."

LADY M. Consider it not so deeply.

MACB. But wherefore could not I pronounce "Amen" ?

I had most need of blessing, and "Amen"

Stuck in my throat.

LADY M. These deeds must not be thought After these ways ; so, it will make us mad.

MACB. Methought I heard a voice cry, "Sleep no more !

Macbeth does murder sleep,"—the innocent sleep,

Sleep that knits up the ravelled sleeve of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labor's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast, —

LADY M. What do you mean ?

MACB. Still it cried, "Sleep no more !" to all the house :

"Glamis hath murdered sleep ; and therefore Cawdor

Shall sleep no more, — Macbeth shall sleep no more !"

LADY M. Who was it that thus cried ? Why, worthy thane,

You do unbend your noble strength, to think So brainsickly of things. — Go, get some water, And wash this filthy witness from your hand.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place ? They must lie there : go carry them ; and smear The sleepy grooms with blood.

MACB. I'll go no more !
I am afraid to think what I have done ;

Look on 't again, I dare not.

LADY M. Infirm of purpose !

Give me the daggers : the sleeping, and the dead,

Are but as pictures : 't is the eye of childhood

That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,

I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal ;

For it must seem their guilt.

[Exit. Knocking within.]

MACB. Whence is that knocking ?

How is 't with me, when every noise appalls me ?

What hands are here ! Ha ! they pluck out mine eyes !

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand ? No ; this my hand will rather

The multitudinous seas incarnadine,

Making the green — one red.

(Re-enter LADY MACBETH.)

LADY M. My hands are of your color ; but I shame

To wear a heart so white. (Knocking.) I hear a knocking

At the south entry : — retire we to our chamber :

A little water clears us of this deed :

How easy is it, then ! Your constancy

Hath left you unattended. (Knocking.) Hark, more knocking.

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,

And show us to be watchers : — be not lost

So poorly in your thoughts.

MACB. To know my deed, 't were best not know myself. (Knocking.)

Wake Duncan with thy knocking ! I would thou couldst.

SHAKESPEARE.

RIDING TOGETHER.

FOR many, many days together

The wind blew steady from the east ;

For many days hot grew the weather,

About the time of our Lady's feast.

For many days we rode together,
 Yet met we neither friend nor foe ;
 Hotter and clearer grew the weather,
 Steadily did the east-wind blow.

We saw the trees in the hot, bright weather,
 Clear-cut, with shadows very black,
 As freely we rode on together
 With helms unlaced and bridles slack.

And often as we rode together,
 We, looking down the green-banked stream,
 Saw flowers in the sunny weather,
 And saw the bubble-making bream.

And in the night lay down together,
 And hung above our heads the rood,
 Or watched night-long in the dewy weather,
 The while the moon did watch the wood.

Our spears stood bright and thick together,
 Straight out the banners streamed behind,
 As we galloped on in the sunny weather,
 With faces turned towards the wind.

Down sank our threescore spears together,
 As thick we saw the pagans ride ;
 His eager face in the clear fresh weather
 Shone out that last time by my side.

Up the sweep of the bridge we dashed together,
 It rocked to the crash of the meeting spears,
 Down rained the buds of the dear spring weather,
 The elm-tree flowers fell like tears.

There, as we rolled and writhed together,
 I threw my arms above my head,
 For close by my side, in the lovely weather,
 I saw him reel and fall back dead.

I and the slayer met together,
 He waited the death-stroke there in his place,
 With thoughts of death, in the lovely weather
 Gapingly mazed at my maddened face.

Madly I fought as we fought together ;
 In vain : the little Christian band
 The pagans drowned, as in stormy weather,
 The river drowns low-lying land.

They bound my blood-stained hands together,
 They bound his corpse to nod by my side :
 Then on we rode, in the bright March weather,
 With clash of cymbals did we ride.

We ride no more, no more together ;
 My prison-bars are thick and strong,
 I take no heed of any weather,
 The sweet Saints grant I live not long.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

THE ROSE AND THE GAUNTLET.

Low spake the knight to the peasant maid,
 "O, be not thus of my suit afraid !
 Fly with me from this garden small,
 And thou shalt sit in my castle hall.

"Thou shalt have pomp and wealth and pleasure,
 Joys beyond thy fancy's measure ;
 Here with my sword and horse I stand,
 To bear thee away to my distant land.

"Take, thou fairest ! this full-blown rose
 A token of love that as ripely blows."
 With his glove of steel he plucked the token,
 And it fell from the gauntlet crushed and broken.

The maiden exclaimed, "Thou seest, Sir Knight,
 Thy fingers of iron can only smite ;
 And, like the rose thou hast torn and scattered,
 I in thy grasp should be wrecked and shattered !"

She trembled and blushed, and her glances fell,
 But she turned from the knight, and said, "Farewell."

"Not so," he cried, "will I lose my prize ;
 I heed not thy words, but I read thine eyes."

He lifted her up in his grasp of steel,
 And he mounted and spurred with fiery heel ;
 But her cry drew forth her hoary sire,
 Who snatched his bow from above the fire.

Swift from the valley the warrior fled,
 But swifter the bolt of the cross-bow sped ;
 And the weight that pressed on the fleet-foot horse
 Was the living man and the woman's corse.

That morning the rose was bright of hue,
 That morning the maiden was sweet to view ;
 But the evening sun its beauty shed
 On the withered leaves and the maiden dead.

THE KING IS COLD.

RAKE the embers, blow the coals,
 Kindle at once a roaring fire ;
 Here 's some paper — 't is nothing, sir —
 Light it (they've saved a thousand souls),
 Run for fagots, ye scurvy knaves,
 There are plenty out in the public square,
 You know they fry the heretics there.
 (But God remember their nameless graves !)
 Fly, fly, or the king may die !

Ugh ! his royal feet are like snow,
And the cold is mounting up to his heart.
(But that was frozen long ago !)
Rascals, varlets, do as you are told, —
The king is cold.

His bed of state is a grand affair,
With sheets of satin and pillows of down,
And close beside it stands the crown, —
But that won't keep him from dying there !
His hands are wrinkled, his hair is gray,
And his ancient blood is sluggish and thin ;
When he was young it was hot with sin, —
But that is over this many a day !
Under these sheets of satin and lace
He slept in the arms of his concubines ;
Now they carouse with the prince instead,
Drinking the maddest, merriest wines ;
It's pleasant to hear such catches trolled,
Now the king is cold !

What shall I do with His Majesty now ?
For, thanks to my potion, the man is dead ;
Suppose I bolster him up in bed,
And fix the crown again on his brow ?
That would be merry ! but then the prince
Would tumble it down, I know, in a trice ;
'T would puzzle the Devil to name a vice
That would make his Excellent Highness wince !
Hark ! he's coming, I know his step ;
He's stealing to see if his wishes are true ;
Sire, may your father's end be yours !
(With just such a son to murder you !)
Peace to the dead ! Let the bells be tolled —
The king is cold !

ROBERT BROWNING.

FRA GIACOMO.

ALAS, Fra Giacomo,
Too late ! — but follow me ;
Hush ! draw the curtain, — so ! —
She is dead, quite dead, you see.
Poor little lady ! she lies
With the light gone out of her eyes,
But her features still wear that soft
Gray meditative expression,
Which you must have noticed oft,
And admired too, at confession.
How saintly she looks, and how meek !
Though this be the chamber of death,
I fancy I feel her breath
As I kiss her on the cheek.
With that pensive religious face,
She has gone to a holier place !
And I hardly appreciated her, —
Her praying, fasting, confessing,
Poorly, I own, I mated her ;

I thought her too cold, and rated her
For her endless image-caressing.
Too saintly for me by far,
As pure and as cold as a star,
Not fashioned for kissing and pressing, —
But made for a heavenly crown.
Ay, father, let us go down, —
But first, if you please, your blessing.
Wine ? No ? Come, come, you must !
You'll bless it with your prayers,
And quaff a cup, I trust,
To the health of the saint up stairs ?
My heart is aching so !
And I feel so weary and sad,
Through the blow that I have had, —
You'll sit, Fra Giacomo ?
My friend ! (and a friend I rank you
For the sake of that saint,) — nay, nay !
Here's the wine, — as you love me, stay ! —
'T is Montepulciano ! — Thank you.

Heigh-ho ! 'T is now six summers
Since I won that angel and married her :
I was rich, not old, and carried her
Off in the face of all comers.
So fresh, yet so brimming with soul !
A tenderer morsel, I swear,
Never made the dull black coal
Of a monk's eye glitter and glare.
Your pardon ! — nay, keep your chair !
I wander a little, but mean
No offence to the gray gaberdine ;
Of the church, Fra Giacomo,
I'm a faithful upholder, you know,
But (humor me !) she was as sweet
As the saints in your convent windows,
So gentle, so meek, so discreet,
She knew not what lust does or sin does.
I'll confess, though, before we were one,
I deemed her less saintly, and thought
The blood in her veins had caught
Some natural warmth from the sun.
I was wrong, — I was blind as a bat, —
Brute that I was, how I blundered !
Though such a mistake as that Might have occurred as pat
To ninety-nine men in a hundred.
Yourself, for example ? you've seen her ?
Spite her modest and pious demeanor,
And the manners so nice and precise,
Seemed there not color and light,
Bright motion and appetite,
That were scarcely consistent with ice ?
Externals implying, you see,
Internals less saintly than human ? —
Pray speak, for between you and me
You're not a bad judge of a woman !

A jest, — but a jest ! — Very true :

'T is hardly becoming to jest,
And that saint up stairs at rest, —
Her soul may be listening, too !
I was always a brute of a fellow !
Well may your visage turn yellow, —
To think how I doubted and doubted,
Suspected, grumbled at, flouted
That golden-haired angel, — and solely Because she was zealous and holy !
Noon and night and morn

She devoted herself to piety ;
Not that she seemed to scorn
Or dislike her husband's society ;
But the claims of her soul superseded
All that I asked for or needed,
And her thoughts were far away
From the level of sinful clay,
And she trembled if earthly matters
Interfered with her aves and paters.
Poor dove, she so fluttered in flying

Above the dim vapors of hell —
Bent on self-sanctifying —
That she never thought of trying
To save her husband as well.
And while she was duly elected
For place in the heavenly roll,
I (brute that I was !) suspected
Her manner of saving her soul.
So, half for the fun of the thing,
What did I (blasphemer !) but fling
On my shoulders the gown of a monk —

Whom I managed for that very day
To get safely out of the way —
And seat me, half sober, half drunk,
With the cowl thrown over my face,
In the father confessor's place.
Eheu ! benedicite !
In her orthodox sweet simplicity,
With that pensive gray expression,
She sighfully knelt at confession,
While I bit my lips till they bled,
And dug my nails in my hand,
And heard with averted head
What I 'd guessed and could understand.
Each word was a serpent's sting,
But, wrapt in my gloomy gown,
I sat, like a marble thing,
As she told me all ! — SIT DOWN.

More wine, Fra Giaeomo !
One cup, — if you love me ! No ?
What, have these dry lips drank
So deep of the sweets of pleasure —
Sub rosa, but quite without measure —
That Montepulciano tastes rank ?
Come, drink ! 't will bring the streaks

Of crimson back to your cheeks ;
Come, drink again to the saint
Whose virtues you loved to paint,
Who, stretched on her wifely bed,
With the tender, grave expression
You used to admire at confession,
Lies poisoned, overhead !

Sit still, — or by heaven, you die !
Face to face, soul to soul, you and I
Have settled accounts, in a fine
Pleasant fashion, over our wine.
Stir not, and seek not to fly, —
Nay, whether or not, you are mine !
Thank Montepulciano for giving
You death in such delicate sips ;
'T is not every monk ceases living
With so pleasant a taste on his lips ;
But, lest Montepulciano unsurely should kiss,
Take this ! and this ! and this !

Cover him over, Pietro,
And bury him in the court below, —
You can be secret, lad, I know !
And, hark you, then to the convent go, —
Bid every bell of the convent toll,
And the monks say mass for your mistress' soul.

ROBERT BUCHANAN.

COUNTESS LAURA.

It was a dreary day in Padua.
The Countess Laura, for a single year
Fernando's wife, upon her bridal bed,
Like an uprooted lily on the snow,
The withered outcast of a festival,
Lay dead. She died of some uncertain ill,
That struck her almost on her wedding day,
And clung to her, and dragged her slowly down,
Thinning her cheeks and pinching her full lips,
Till, in her chance, it seemed that with a year
Full half a century was overpast.
In vain had Paracelsus taxed his art,
And feigned a knowledge of her malady ;
In vain had all the doctors, far and near,
Gathered around the mystery of her bed,
Draining her veins, her husband's treasury,
And physic's jargon, in a fruitless quest
For causes equal to the dread result.
The Countess only smiled when they were gone,
Hugged her fair body with her little hands,
And turned upon her pillows wearily,
As though she fain would sleep no common sleep,
But the long, breathless slumber of the grave.
She hinted nothing. Feeble as she was,
The rack could not have wrung her secret out.
The Bishop, when he shrived her, coming forth,

Cried, in a voice of heavenly ecstasy,
 "O blessed soul! with nothing to confess Save virtues and good deeds, which she mistakes —

So humble is she — for our human sins!"
 Praying for death, she tossed upon her bed
 Day after day; as might a shipwrecked bark
 That rocks upon one billow, and can make
 No onward motion towards her port of hope.
 At length, one morn, when those around her said,
 "Surely the Countess mends, so fresh a light Beams from her eyes and beautifies her face," —
 One morn in spring, when every flower of earth
 Was opening to the sun, and breathing up
 Its votive incense, her impatient soul
 Opened itself, and so exhaled to heaven.

When the Count heard it, he reeled back a pace;
 Then turned with anger on the messenger;
 Then craved his pardon, and wept out his heart
 Before the menial; tears, ah me! such tears
 As love sheds only, and love only once.
 Then he bethought him, "Shall this wonder die,
 And leave behind no shadow? not a trace
 Of all the glory that environed her,
 That mellow nimbus circling round my star?"

So, with his sorrow glooming in his face,
 He paced along his gallery of art,
 And strode among the painters, where they stood,
 With Carlo, the Venetian, at their head,
 Studying the Masters by the dawning light
 Of his transcendent genius. Through the groups
 Of gayly vested artists moved the Count,
 As some lone cloud of thick and leaden hue,
 Packed with the secret of a coming storm,
 Moves through the gold and crimson evening
 mists,

Deadening their splendor. In a moment still
 Was Carlo's voice, and still the prattling crowd;
 And a great shadow overwhelmed them all,
 As their white faces and their anxious eyes
 Pursued Fernando in his moody walk.

He paused, as one who balances a doubt,
 Weighing two courses, then burst out with this:
 "Ye all have seen the tidings in my face;
 Or has the dial ceased to register
 The workings of my heart? Then hear the bell,
 That almost cracks its frame in utterance;
 The Countess, — she is dead!" "Dead!" Carlo groaned.

And if a bolt from middle heaven had struck
 His splendid features full upon the brow,
 He could not have appeared more scathed and blanched.

"Dead! — dead!" He staggered to his easel-frame,

And clung around it, buffeting the air
 With one wild arm, as though a drowning man

Hung to a spar and fought against the waves.
 The Count resumed: "I came not here to grieve,
 Nor see my sorrow in another's eyes.

Who 't paint the Countess, as she lies to-night
 In state within the chapel? Shall it be
 That earth must lose her wholly? that no hint
 Of her gold tresses, beaming eyes, and lips
 That talked in silence, and the eager soul
 That ever seemed outbreaking through her clay,
 And scattering glory round it, — shall all these
 Be dull corruption's heritage, and we,
 Poor beggars, have no legacy to show
 That love she bore us? That were shame to love,
 And shame to you, my masters." Carlo stalked
 Forth from his easel stiffly as a thing
 Moved by mechanic impulse. His thin lips,
 And sharpened nostrils, and wan, sunken cheeks,
 And the cold glimmer in his dusky eyes,
 Made him a ghastly sight. The throng drew
 back

As though they let a spectre through. Then he,
 Fronting the Count, and speaking in a voice
 Sounding remote and hollow, made reply:
 "Count, I shall paint the Countess. 'T is my fate, —

Not pleasure, — no, nor duty." But the Count,
 Astray in woe, but understood assent,
 Not the strange words that bore it; and he flung
 His arm round Carlo, drew him to his breast,
 And kissed his forehead. At which Carlo shrank;
 Perhaps 't was at the honor. Then the Count,
 A little reddening at his public state, —
 Unseemly to his near and recent loss, —
 Withdrew in haste between the downcast eyes
 That did him reverence as he rustled by.

Night fell on Padua. In the chapel lay
 The Countess Laura at the altar's foot.
 Her coronet glittered on her pallid brows;
 A crimson pall, weighed down with golden work,
 Sown thick with pearls, and heaped with early
 flowers,

Draped her still body almost to the chin;
 And over all a thousand candles flamed
 Against the winking jewels, or streamed down
 The marble aisle, and flashed along the guard
 Of men-at-arms that slowly wove their turns,
 Backward and forward, through the distant
 gloom.

When Carlo entered, his unsteady feet
 Scarce bore him to the altar, and his head
 Drooped down so low that all his shining curls
 Poured on his breast, and veiled his countenance.
 Upon his easel a half-finished work,
 The secret labor of his studio,
 Said from the canvas, so that none might err,
 "I am the Countess Laura." Carlo kneeled,

And gazed upon the picture ; as if thus,
Through those clear eyes, he saw the way to heaven.

Then he arose ; and as a swimmer comes
Forth from the waves, he shook his locks aside,
Emerging from his dream, and standing firm
Upon a purpose with his sovereign will.
He took his palette, murmuring, " Not yet !"
Confidingly and softly to the corpse,
And as the veriest drudge, who plies his art
Against his fancy, he addressed himself
With stolid resolution to his task,
Turning his vision on his memory,
And shutting out the present, till the dead,
The gilded pall, the lights, the pacing guard,
And all the meaning of that solemn scene
Became as nothing, and creative Art
Resolved the whole to chaos, and reformed
The elements according to her law :
So Carlo wrought, as though his eye and hand
Were Heaven's unconscious instruments, and worked

The settled purpose of Omnipotence.
And it was wondrous how the red, the white,
The ochre, and the umber, and the blue,
From mottled blotches, hazy and opaque,
Grew into rounded forms and sensuous lines ;
How just beneath the lucid skin the blood
Glimmered with warmth ; the scarlet lips apart
Bloomed with the moisture of the dews of life ;
How the light glittered through and underneath
The golden tresses, and the deep, soft eyes
Became intelligent with conscious thought,
And somewhat troubled underneath the arch
Of eyebrows but a little too intense
For perfect beauty ; how the pose and poise
Of the lithe figure on its tiny foot
Suggested life just ceased from motion ; so
That any one might cry, in marvelling joy,
" That creature lives, — has senses, mind, a soul
To win God's love or dare hell's subtleties !"
The artist paused. The ratifying " Good !"
Trembled upon his lips. He saw no touch
To give or soften. " It is done," he cried, —
" My task, my duty ! Nothing now on earth
Can taunt me with a work left unfulfilled !"
The lofty flame, which bore him up so long,
Died in the ashes of humanity ;
And the mere man rocked to and fro again
Upon the centre of his wavering heart.
He put aside his palette, as if thus
He stopped from sacred vestments, and assumed
A mortal function in the common world.
" Now for my rights !" he muttered, and approached

The noble body. " O lily of the world !
So withered, yet so lovely ! what wast thou

To those who came thus near thee — for I stood
Without the pale of thy half-royal rank —
When thou wast budding, and the streams of life
Made eager struggles to maintain thy bloom,
And gladdened heaven dropped down in gracious dews

On its transplanted darling ? Hear me now !
I say this but in justice, not in pride,
Not to insult thy high nobility,
But that the poise of things in God's own sight
May be adjusted ; and hereafter I
May urge a claim that all the powers of heaven
Shall sanction, and with clarions blow abroad. —
Laura, you loved me ! Look not so severe,
With your cold brows, and deadly, close-drawn lips !

You proved it, Countess, when you died for it, —
Let it consume you in the wearing strife
It fought with duty in your ravaged heart.
I knew it ever since that summer day
I painted Lilla, the pale beggar's child,
At rest beside the fountain ; when I felt — O Heaven ! — the warmth and moisture of your breath

Blow through my hair, as with your eager soul —
Forgetting soul and body go as one —
You leaned across my easel till our cheeks —
Ah me ! 't was not your purpose — touched, and clung !

Well, grant 't was genius ; and is genius naught ?
I ween it wears as proud a diadem —
Here, in this very world — as that you wear.
A king has held my palette, a grand-duke
Has picked my brush up, and a pope has begged
The favor of my presence in his Rome.
I did not go ; I put my fortune by.
I need not ask you why : you knew too well.
It was but natural, it was no way strange,
That I should love you. Everything that saw,
Or had its other senses, loved you, sweet,
And I among them. Martyr, holy saint, —
I see the halo curving round your head, —
I loved you once ; but now I worship you,
For the great deed that held my love aloof,
And killed you in the action ! I absolve
Your soul from any taint. For from the day
Of that encounter by the fountain-side
Until this moment, never turned on me
Those tender eyes, unless they did a wrong
To nature by the cold, defiant glare
With which they chilled me. Never heard I word
Of softness spoken by those gentle lips ;
Never received a bounty from that hand
Which gave to all the world. I know the cause.
You did your duty, — not for honor's sake,
Nor to save sin, or suffering, or remorse,
Or all the ghosts that haunt a woman's shame,

But for the sake of that pure, loyal love
 Your husband bore you. Queen, by grace of God,
 I bow before the lustre of your throne !
 I kiss the edges of your garment-hem,
 And hold myself ennobled ! Answer me, —
 If I had wronged you, you would answer me
 Out of the dusty porches of the tomb : —
 Is this a dream, a falsehood ? or have I
 Spoken the very truth ? ” “ The very truth ! ”
 A voice replied ; and at his side he saw
 A form, half shadow and half substance, stand,
 Or, rather, rest ; for on the solid earth
 It had no footing, more than some dense mist
 That wavers o'er the surface of the ground
 It scarcely touches. With a reverent look
 The shadow's waste and wretched face was bent
 Above the picture ; as though greater awe
 Subdued its awful being, and appalled,
 With memories of terrible delight
 And fearful wonder, its devouring gaze.
 “ You make what God makes, — beauty,” said
 the shape.

“ And might not this, this second Eve, console
 The emptiest heart ? Will not this thing outlast
 The fairest creature fashioned in the flesh ?
 Before that figure, Time, and Death himself,
 Stand baffled and disarmed. What would you ask

More than God's power, from nothing to create ? ”
 The artist gazed upon the boding form,
 And answered : “ Goblin, if you had a heart,
 That were an idle question. What to me
 Is my creative power, bereft of love ?
 Or what to God would be that self-same power,
 If so bereaved ? ” “ And yet the love, thus mourned,

You calmly forfeited. For had you said
 To living Laura — in her burning ears —
 One half that you professed to Laura dead,
 She would have been your own. These contraries
 Sort not with my intelligence. But speak,
 Were Laura living, would the same stale play
 Of raging passion tearing out its heart
 Upon the rock of duty be performed ? ”

“ The same, O phantom, while the heart I bear
 Trembled, but turned not its magnetic faith
 From God's fixed centre. ” “ If I wake for you
 This Laura, — give her all the bloom and glow
 Of that midsummer day you hold so dear, —
 The smile, the motion, the impulsive soul,
 The love of genius, — yea, the very love,
 The mortal, hungry, passionate, hot love,
 She bore you, flesh to flesh, — would you receive
 That gift, in all its glory, at my hands ? ”
 A smile of malice curled the tempter's lips,
 And glittered in the caverns of his eyes,
 Mocking the answer. Carlo paled and shook ;

A woful spasm went shuddering through his frame,

Curdling his blood, and twisting his fair face
 With nameless torture. But he cried aloud,
 Out of the clouds of anguish, from the smoke
 Of very martyrdom, “ O God, she is thine !
 Do with her at thy pleasure ! ” Something grand,
 And radiant as a sunbeam, touched the head
 He bent in awful sorrow. “ Mortal, see — ”
 “ Dare not ! As Christ was sinless, I abjure
 These vile abominations ! Shall she bear
 Life's burden twice, and life's temptations twice,
 While God is justice ? ” “ Who has made you judge

Of what you call God's good, and what you think God's evil ? One to him, the source of both,
 The God of good and of permitted ill.

Have you no dream of days that might have been,
 Had you and Laura filled another fate ? —
 Some cottage on the sloping Apennines,
 Roses and lilies, and the rest all love ?

I tell you that this tranquil dream may be Filled to repletion. Speak, and in the shade
 Of my dark pinions I shall bear you hence,
 And land you where the mountain-goat himself
 Struggles for footing. ” He outspread his wings,
 And all the chapel darkened, as though hell
 Had swallowed up the tapers ; and the air
 Grew thick, and, like a current sensible,
 Flowed round the person, with a wash and dash,
 As of the waters of a nether sea.

Slowly and calmly through the dense obscure,
 Dove-like and gentle, rose the artist's voice :

“ I dare not bring her spirit to that shame !
 Know my full meaning, — I who neither fear
 Your mystic person nor your dreadful power.
 Nor shall I now invoke God's potent name
 For my deliverance from your toils. I stand
 Upon the founded structure of his law,
 Established from the first, and thence defy
 Your arts, reposing all my trust in that ! ”
 The darkness eddied off ; and Carlo saw
 The figure gathering, as from outer space,
 Brightness on brightness ; and his former shape
 Fell from him, like the ashes that fall off,
 And show a core of mellow fire within.

Adown his wings there poured a lambent flood,
 That seemed as molten gold, which plashing fell
 Upon the floor, enringing him with flame ;
 And o'er the tresses of his beaming head
 Arose a stream of many-colored light,
 Like that which crowns the morning. Carlo stood Steadfast, for all the splendor, reaching up
 The outstretched palms of his untainted soul Towards heaven for strength. A moment thus ;
 then asked,

With reverential wonder quivering through

His sinking voice, "Who, spirit, and what, art thou?"

"I am that blessing which men fly from, — Death."

"Then take my hand, if so God orders it ; For Laura waits me." "But, bethink thee, man, What the world loses in the loss of thee !

What wondrous art will suffer with eclipse !

What unwon glories are in store for thee !

What fame, outreaching time and temporal shocks,

Would shine upon the letters of thy name

Graven in marble, or the brazen height

Of columns wise with memories of thee !"

"Take me ! If I outlived the Patriarchs,

I could but paint those features o'er and o'er :

Lo ! that is done." A smile of pity lit

The seraph's features, as he looked to heaven,

With deep inquiry in his tender eyes.

The mandate came. He touched with downy wing

The sufferer lightly on his aching heart ;

And gently, as the skylark settles down

Upon the clustered treasures of her nest,

So Carlo softly slid along the prop

Of his tall easel, nestling at the foot

As though he slumbered ; and the morning broke

In silver whiteness over Padua.

GEORGE HENRY BOKER.

GINEVRA.

If thou shouldst ever come by choice or chance
To Modena, where still religiously

Among her ancient trophies is preserved

Bologna's bucket (in its chain it hangs

Within that reverend tower, the Guirlandina),

Stop at a palace near the Reggio gate,

Dwelt in of old by one of the Orsini.

Its noble gardens, terrace above terrace,

And rich in fountains, statues, cypresses,

Will long detain thee ; through their archèd walks,

Dim at noonday, discovering many a glimpse

Of knights and dames, such as in old romance,

And lovers, such as in heroic song,

Perhaps the two, for groves were their delight,

That in the spring-time, as alone they sat,

Venturing together on a tale of love,

Read only part that day. — A summer sun

Sets ere one half is seen ; but ere thou go,

Enter the house — prythee, forget it not —

And look awhile upon a picture there.

'Tis of a Lady in her earliest youth,

The last of that illustrious race ;

Done by Zampieri — but I care not whom.

He who observes it, ere he passes on,

Gazes his fill, and comes and comes again,
That he may call it up when far away.

She sits inclining forward as to speak,
Her lips half open, and her finger up,
As though she said "Beware !" her vest of gold Brodered with flowers, and clasped from head to foot,

An emerald stone in every golden clasp ;

And on her brow, fairer than alabaster,

A coronet of pearls. But then her face,

So lovely, yet so arch, so full of mirth,

The overflowings of an innocent heart, —

It haunts me still, though many a year has fled,

Like some wild melody !

Alone it hangs
Over a mouldering heirloom, its companion,

An oaken chest, half eaten by the worm,

But richly carved by Antony of Trent

With Scripture stories from the life of Christ ;

A chest that came from Venice, and had held

The dual robes of some old Ancestor,

That, by the way — it may be true or false —

But don't forget the picture ; and thou wilt not

When thou hast heard the tale they told me there.

She was an only child ; from infancy

The joy, the pride, of an indulgent Sire ;

Her Mother dying of the gift she gave,

That precious gift, what else remained to him ?

The young Ginevra was his all in life,

Still as she grew, for ever in his sight ;

And in her fifteenth year became a bride,

Marrying an only son, Francesco Doria,

Her playmate from her birth, and her first love.

Just as she looks there in her bridal dress,

She was all gentleness, all gayety,

Her pranks the favorite theme of every tongue.

But now the day was come, the day, the hour ;

Now, frowning, smiling, for the hundredth time,

The nurse, that ancient lady, preached decorum ;

And, in the lustre of her youth, she gave

Her hand, with her heart in it, to Francesco.

Great was the joy ; but at the Bridal-feast,
When all sate down, the bride was wanting
there,

Nor was she to be found ! Her Father cried,

"'T is but to make a trial of our love !"

And filled his glass to all ; but his hand shook,

And soon from guest to guest the panic spread.

'T was but that instant she had left Francesco,

Laughing and looking back, and flying still,

Her ivory tooth imprinted on his finger.

But now, alas, she was not to be found ;

Nor from that hour could anything be guessed,

But that she was not !

Weary of his life,
 Francesco flew to Venice, and, forthwith,
 Flung it away in battle with the Turk.
 Orsini lived, — and long mightst thou have seen
 An old man wandering as in quest of something,
 Something he could not find, he knew not what.
 When he was gone, the house remained awhile
 Silent and tenantless, — then went to strangers.

Full fifty years were past, and all forgot,
 When, on an idle day, a day of search
 Mid the old lumber in the Gallery,
 That mouldering chest was noticed; and 't was said

By one as young, as thoughtless as Ginevra,
 "Why not remove it from its lurking-place?"
 'T was done as soon as said; but on the way
 It burst, it fell; and lo, a skeleton,
 With here and there a pearl, an emerald stone,
 A golden clasp, clasping a shred of gold!
 All else had perished, — save a nuptial-ring,
 And a small seal, her mother's legacy,
 Engraven with a name, the name of both,
 "GINEVRA."

There then had she found a grave!
 Within that chest had she concealed herself,
 Fluttering with joy, the happiest of the happy;
 When a spring-lock, that lay in ambush there,
 Fastened her down for ever!

SAMUEL ROGERS.

THE MISTLETOE BOUGH.

THE mistletoe hung in the castle hall,
 The holly branch shone on the old oak wall;
 And the baron's retainers were blithe and gay,
 And keeping their Christmas holiday.
 The baron beheld with a father's pride
 His beautiful child, young Lovell's bride;
 While she with her bright eyes seemed to be
 The star of the goodly company.

"I'm weary of dancing now," she cried;
 "Here tarry a moment, — I'll hide, I'll hide!
 And, Lovell, be sure thou'rt first to trace
 The clew to my secret lurking-place."
 Away she ran, — and her friends began
 Each tower to search, and each nook to scan;
 And young Lovell cried, "O, where dost thou
 hide?"
 I'm lonesome without thee, my own dear bride."

They sought her that night, and they sought her next day,
 And they sought her in vain when a week passed
 away:

In the highest, the lowest, the loneliest spot,
 Young Lovell sought wildly, — but found her not.

And years flew by, and their grief at last
 Was told as a sorrowful tale long past;
 And when Lovell appeared, the children cried,
 "See! the old man weeps for his fairy bride."

At length an oak chest, that had long lain hid,
 Was found in the castle, — they raised the lid,
 And a skeleton form lay mouldering there
 In the bridal wreath of that lady fair!
 O, sad was her fate! — in sportive jest
 She hid from her lord in the old oak chest.
 It closed with a spring! — and, dreadful doom,
 The bride lay clasped in her living tomb!

THOMAS HAYNES BAYLY.

THE YOUNG GRAY HEAD.

GRIEF hath been known to turn the young head
 gray, —

To silver over in a single day
 The bright locks of the beautiful, their prime Scarcely o'erpast; as in the fearful time
 Of Gallia's madness, that discrowned head
 Serene, that on the accursed altar bled
 Miscalled of Liberty. O martyred Queen!
 What must the sufferings of that night have been —

That one — that sprinkled thy fair tresses o'er
 With time's untimely snow! But now no more,
 Lovely, august, unhappy one! of thee —
 I have to tell a humbler history;
 A village tale, whose only charm, in sooth
 (If any), will be sad and simple truth.

"Mother," quoth Ambrose to his thrifty dame, —
 So oft our peasant's use his wife to name,
 "Father" and "Master" to himself applied,
 As life's grave duties matronize the bride, —
 "Mother," quoth Ambrose, as he faced the north
 With hard-set teeth, before he issued forth
 To his day labor, from the cottage door, —
 "I'm thinking that, to-night, if not before,
 There'll be wild work. Dost hear old Chewton *
 roar?"

It's brewing up, down westward; and look there,
 One of those sea-gulls! ay, there goes a pair;
 And such a sudden thaw! If rain comes on,
 As threats, the waters will be out anon.
 That path by the ford's a nasty bit of way, —
 Best let the young ones bide from school to-day."

"Do, mother, do!" the quick-eared urchins cried;
 Two little lasses to the father's side

* A fresh-water spring rushing into the sea, called Chewton Bunny.

Close clinging, as they looked from him, to spy
The answering language of the mother's eye.
There was denial, and she shook her head :

"Nay, nay, — no harm will come to them," she
said,

"The mistress lets them off these short dark days
An hour the earlier ; and our Liz, she says,
May quite be trusted — and I know 't is true —
To take care of herself and Jenny too.

And so she ought, — she's seven come first of
May, —

Two years the oldest ; and they give away
The Christmas bounty at the school to-day."

The mother's will was law (alas, for her
That hapless day, poor soul !) — she could not err,
Thought Ambrose ; and his little fair-haired Jane
(Her namesake) to his heart he hugged again,
When each had had her turn ; she clinging so
As if that day she could not let him go.

But Labor's sons must snatch a hasty bliss
In nature's tenderest mood. One last fond kiss,
"God bless my little maids !" the father said,
And cheerily went his way to win their bread.
Then might be seen, the playmate parent gone,
What looks demure the sister pair put on, —
Not of the mother as afraid, or shy,
Or questioning the love that could deny ;
But simply, as their simple training taught,
In quiet, plain straightforwardness of thought (Submissively resigned the hope of play)
Towards the serious business of the day.

To me there's something touching, I confess,
In the grave look of early thoughtfulness,
Seen often in some little childish face
Among the poor. Not that wherein we trace (Shame to our land, our rulers, and our race !)
The unnatural sufferings of the factory child,
But a staid quietness, reflective, mild,
Betokening, in the depths of those young eyes,
Sense of life's cares, without its miseries.

So to the mother's charge, with thoughtful brow,
The docile Lizzy stood attentive now,
Proud of her years and of imputed sense,
And prudence justifying confidence, —
And little Jenny, more demurely still,
Beside her waited the maternal will.
So standing hand in hand, a lovelier twain
Gainsborough ne'er painted : no — nor he of Spain,

Glorious Murillo ! — and by contrast shown
More beautiful. The younger little one,
With large blue eyes and silken ringlets fair,
By nut-brown Lizzy, with smooth parted hair,
Sable and glossy as the raven's wing,
And lustrous eyes as dark.

"Now, mind and bring Jenny safe home," the mother said, — "don't stay

To pull a bough or berry by the way :
And when you come to cross the ford, hold fast
Your little sister's hand, till you're quite past, —
That plank's so crazy, and so slippery
(If not o'erflowed) the stepping-stones will be.
But you're good children — steady as old folk —
I'd trust ye anywhere." Then Lizzy's cloak,
A good gray duffle, lovingly she tied,
And amply little Jenny's lack supplied
With her own warmest shawl. "Be sure," said she,

"To wrap it round and knot it carefully
(Like this), when you come home, just leaving
free

One hand to hold by. Now, make haste away —
Good will to school, and then good right to play."

Was there no sinking at the mother's heart
When, all equipt, they turned them to depart ?
When down the lane she watched them as they went

Till out of sight, was no forefeeling sent
Of coming ill ? In truth I cannot tell :
Such warnings have been sent, we know full well
And must believe — believing that they are —
In mercy then — to rouse, restrain, prepare.

And now I mind me, something of the kind
Did surely haunt that day the mother's mind,
Making it irksome to bide all alone
By her own quiet hearth. Though never known
For idle gossipry was Jenny Gray,
Yet so it was, that morn she could not stay
At home with her own thoughts, but took her way

To her next neighbor's, half a loaf to borrow, —
Yet might her store have lasted out the morrow, —

And with the loan obtained, she lingered still.
Said she, "My master, if he'd had his will,
Would have kept back our little ones from school
This dreadful morning ; and I'm such a fool,
Since they've been gone, I've wished them back.

But then

It won't do in such things to humor men, —
Our Ambrose specially. If let alone
He'd spoil those wenchens. But it's coming on,
That storm he said was brewing, sure enough, —
Well ! what of that ? To think what idle stuff
Will come into one's head ! And here with you
I stop, as if I'd nothing else to do —
And they'll come home, drowned rats. I must be gone

To get dry things, and set the kettle on."

His day's work done, three mortal miles, and
more,

Lay between Ambrose and his cottage-door.
A weary way, God wot, for weary wight !
But yet far off the curling smoke in sight
From his own chimney, and his heart felt light.
How pleasantly the humble homestead stood,
Down the green lane, by sheltering Shirley wood !
How sweet the wafting of the evening breeze,
In spring-time, from his two old cherry-trees,
Sheeted with blossom ! And in hot July,
From the brown moor-track, shadowless and dry,
How grateful the cool covert to regain
Of his own avenue, — that shady lane,
With the white cottage, in a slanting glow
Of sunset glory, gleaming bright below,
And jasmine porch, his rustic portico !

With what a thankful gladness in his face,
(Silent heart-homage, — plant of special grace !)
At the lane's entrance, slackening off his pace,
Would Ambrose send a loving look before,
Conceiting the caged blackbird at the door ;
The very blackbird strained its little throat,
In welcome, with a more rejoicing note ;
And honest Tinker, dog of doubtful breed,
All bristle, back, and tail, but "good at need,"
Pleasant his greeting to the accustomed ear ;
But of all welcomes pleasantest, most dear,
The ringing voices, like sweet silver bells,
Of his two little ones. How fondly swells
The father's heart, as, dancing up the laue,
Each clasps a hand in her small hand again,
And each must tell her tale and "say her say,"
Impeding as she leads with sweet delay
(Childhood's biest thoughtlessness !) his onward way.

And when the winter day closed in so fast ;
Scarce for his task would dreary daylight last ;
And in all weathers — driving sleet and snow —
Home by that bare, bleak moor-track must he go,
Darkling and lonely. O, the blessed sight
(His polestar) of that little twinkling light
From one small window, through the leafless trees, —

Glimmering so fitfully ; no eye but his
Had spied it so far off. And sure was he,
Entering the lane, a steadier beam to see,
Ruddy and broad as peat-fed hearth could pour,
Streaming to meet him from the open door.
Then, though the blackbird's welcome was unheard, —

Silenced by winter, — note of summer bird
Still hailed him from no mortal fowl alive,
But from the cuckoo cloek just striking five.
And Tinker's ear and Tinker's nose were keen, —
Off started he, and then a form was seen

Darkening the doorway ; and a smaller sprite,
And then another, peered into the night,
Ready to follow free on Tinker's track,
But for the mother's hand that held her back :
And yet a moment — a few steps — and there,
Pulled o'er the threshold by that eager pair,
He sits by his own hearth, in his own chair ;
Tinker takes post beside with eyes that say,
"Master, we've done our business for the day."
The kettle sings, the cat in chorus purrs,
The busy housewife with her tea-things stirs ;
The door's made fast, the old stuff curtain
drawn ;

How the hail clatters ! Let it clatter on !
How the wind raves and rattles ! What cares he ?
Safe housed and warm beneath his own roof-tree,
With a wee lassie prattling on each knee.

Such was the hour — hour sacred and apart —
Warmed in expectancy the poor man's heart.
Summer and winter, as his toil he plied,
To him and his the literal doom applied,
Pronounced on Adam. But the bread was sweet
So earned, for such dear mouths. The weary feet,
Hope-shod, stept lightly on the homeward way ;
So specially it fared with Ambrose Gray
That time I tell of. He had worked all day
At a great clearing ; vigorous stroke on stroke Striking, till, when he stopt, his back seemed broke,
And the strong arms dropt nerveless. What of that ?

There was a treasure hidden in his hat, —
A plaything for the young ones. He had found
A dormouse nest ; the living ball coiled round
For its long winter sleep ; and all his thought,
As he trudged stontly homeward, was of naught
But the glad wonderment in Jenny's eyes,
And graver Lizzy's quieter surprise,
When he should yield, by guess and kiss and prayer
Hard won, the frozen captive to their care.

'T was a wild evening, — wild and rough. "I knew,"

Thought Ambrose, "those unlucky gulls spoke
true, —

And Gaffer Chewton never growls for naught, —
I should be mortal 'mazed now if I thought
My little maids were not safe housed before
That blinding hail-storm, — ay, this hour and
more, —

Unless by that old crazy bit of board,
They've not passed dry-foot over Shallow ford,
That I'll be bound for, — swollen as it must be —

Well ! if my mistress had been ruled by me — "
But, checking the half-thought as heresy,

He looked out for the Home Star. There it
shone,
And with a gladdened heart he hastened on.

He's in the lane again, — and there below,
Streams from the open doorway that red glow,
Which warms him but to look at. For his prize
Cautious he feels, — all safe and snug it lies. — “Down, Tinker! down, old boy! — not quite so
free, —

The thing thou sniffest is no game for thee. —
But what's the meaning? no lookout to-night!
No living soul astir! Pray God, all's right!
Who's flittering round the peat-stack in such weather?

Mother!” you might have felled him with a feather,
When the short answer to his loud “Hillo!”
And hurried question, “Are they come?” was “No.”

To throw his tools down, hastily unhook
The old cracked lantern from its dusty nook,
And, while he lit it, speak a cheering word,
That almost choked him, and was scarcely heard,
Was but a moment's act, and he was gone
To where a fearful foresight led him on.
Passing a neighbor's cottage in his way, —
Mark Fenton's, — him he took with short delay
To bear him company, — for who could say
What need might be? They struck into the track
The children should have taken coming back
From school that day; and many a call and shout
Into the pitchy darkness they sent out,
And, by the lantern light, peered all about,
In every roadside thicket, hole, and nook,
Till suddenly — as nearing now the brook —
Something brushed past them. That was Tink-er's bark, —

Unheeded, he had followed in the dark,
Close at his master's heels; but, swift as light,
Darted before them now. “Be sure he's right, —
He's on the track,” cried Ambrose. “Hold the light

Low down, — he's making for the water. Hark!
I know that whine, — the old dog's found them,
Mark.”

So speaking, breathlessly he hurried on
Toward the old crazy foot-bridge. It was gone!
And all his dull contracted light could show
Was the black void and dark swollen stream below.
“Yet there's life somewhere, — more than Tink-er's whine, —

That's sure,” said Mark. “So, let the lantern shine

Down yonder. There's the dog, — and, hark!”
“O dear!”

And a low sob came faintly on the ear,

Mocked by the sobbing gust. Down, quick as thought,

Into the stream leapt Ambrose, where he caught
Fast hold of something, — a dark huddled heap, —
Half in the water, where 't was scarce knee-deep
For a tall man, and half above it, propped
By some old ragged side-piles, that had stopt
Endways the broken plank, when it gave way
With the two little ones that luckless day!
“My babes! — my lambkins!” was the father's cry.

One little voice made answer, “Here am I!”
'T was Lizzy's. There she crouched with face as white,

More ghastly by the flickering lantern-light
Than sheeted corpse. The pale blue lips drawn tight,

Wide parted, showing all the pearly teeth,
And eyes on some dark object underneath,
Washed by the turbid water, fixed as stone, —
One arm and hand stretched out, and rigid grown,

Grasping, as in the death-gripe, Jenny's frock.
There she lay drowned. Could he sustain that shock,

The doting father? Where's the unriven rock
Can bide such blasting in its flintiest part
As that soft sentient thing, — the human heart?

They lifted her from out her watery bed, —
Its covering gone, the lovely little head
Hung like a broken snowdrop all aside;
And one small hand, — the mother's shawl was tied,

Leaving that free, about the child's small form,
As was her last injunction — “fast and warm” —
Too well obeyed, — too fast! A fatal hold Affording to the scrag by a thick fold
That caught and pinned her in the river's bed,
While through the reckless water overhead
Her life-breath bubbled up.

“She might have lived, Struggling like Lizzy,” was the thought that rived

The wretched mother's heart, when she knew all,
“But for my foolishness about that shawl!
And Master would have kept them back the day;
But I was wilful, — driving them away
In such wild weather!”

Thus the tortured heart
Unnaturally against itself takes part,
Driving the sharp edge deeper of a woe
Too deep already. They had raised her now,
And parting the wet ringlets from her brow,
To that, and the cold cheek, and lips as cold,
The father glued his warm ones, ere they rolled
Once more the fatal shawl — her winding-sheet —
About the precious clay. One heart still beat,

Warmed by his heart's blood. To his only child
 He turned him, but her piteous moaning mild
 Pierced him afresh, — and now she knew him not.
 "Mother!" she murmured, "who says I forgot?
 Mother! indeed, indeed, I kept fast hold,
 And tied the shawl quite close—she can't be cold—
 But she won't move—we slept—I don't know
 how—

But I held on—and I'm so weary now—
 And it's so dark and cold! O dear! O dear!—
 And she won't move;—if daddy was but here!"

Poor lamb! she wandered in her mind, 't was clear;

But soon the piteous murmur died away,
 And quiet in her father's arms she lay,—
 They their dead burden had resigned, to take
 The living, so near lost. For her dear sake,
 And one at home, he armed himself to bear
 His misery like a man,—with tender care
 Doffing his coat her shivering form to fold
 (His neighbor bearing that which felt no cold),
 He clasped her close, and so, with little said,
 Homeward they bore the living and the dead.

From Ambrose Gray's poor cottage all that night
 Shone fitfully a little shifting light,
 Above, below,—for all were watchers there,
 Save one sound sleeper. Her, parental care,
 Parental watchfulness, availed not now.
 But in the young survivor's throbbing brow,
 And wandering eyes, delirious fever burned;
 And all night long from side to side she turned,
 Piteously plaining like a wounded dove,
 With now and then the murmur, "She won't move."

And lo! when morning, as in mockery, bright
 Shone on that pillow, passing strange the sight,—
 That young head's raven hair was streaked with white!

No idle fiction this. Such things have been,
 We know. And now I tell what I have seen.

Life struggled long with death in that small frame,
 But it was strong, and conquered. All became
 As it had been with the poor family,—
 All, saving that which nevermore might be:
 There was an empty place,—they were but three.

CAROLINE BOWLES SOUTHEY.

THE DREAM OF EUGENE ARAM.

'T WAS in the prime of summer time,
 An evening calm and cool,
 And four-and-twenty happy boys
 Came bounding out of school;

There were some that ran, and some that leapt
 Like troutlets in a pool.

Away they sped with gamesome minds
 And souls untouched by sin;
 To a level mead they came, and there
 They drove the wickets in:
 Pleasantly shone the setting sun
 Over the town of Lynn.

Like sportive deer they coursed about,
 And shouted as they ran,
 Turning to mirth all things of earth
 As only boyhood can;
 But the usher sat remote from all,
 A melancholy man!

His hat was off, his vest apart,
 To catch heaven's blessed breeze;
 For a burning thought was in his brow,
 And his bosom ill at ease;
 So he leaned his head on his hands, and read
 The book between his knees.

Leaf after leaf he turned it o'er,
 Nor ever glanced aside,—
 For the peace of his soul he read that book
 In the golden eventide;
 Much study had made him very lean,
 And pale, and leaden-eyed.

At last he shut the ponderous tome:
 With a fast and fervent grasp
 He strained the dusky covers close,
 And fixed the brazen hasp:
 "O God! could I so close my mind,
 And clasp it with a clasp!"

Then leaping on his feet upright,
 Some moody turns he took,—
 Now up the mead, then down the mead,
 And past a shady nook,—
 And, lo! he saw a little boy
 That pored upon a book.

"My gentle lad, what is't you read,—
 Romance or fairy fable?
 Or is it some historic page,
 Of kings and crowns unstable?"
 The young boy gave an upward glance,—
 "It is 'The Death of Abel.'"

The usher took six hasty strides,
 As smit with sudden pain,—
 Six hasty strides beyond the place,
 Then slowly back again;
 And down he sat beside the lad,
 And talked with him of Cain;

And, long since then, of bloody men,
Whose deeds tradition saves ;
And lonely folk cut off unseen,
And hid in sudden graves ;
And horrid stabs, in groves forlorn ;
And murders done in caves ;

And how the sprites of injured men
Shriek upward from the sod ;
Ay, how the ghostly hand will point
To show the burial clod ;
And unknown facts of guilty acts
Are seen in dreams from God.

He told how murderers walk the earth
Beneath the curse of Cain, —
With crimson clouds before their eyes,
And flames about their brain ;
For blood has left upon their souls
Its everlasting stain !

“And well,” quoth he, “I know for truth
Their pangs must be extreme —
Woe, woe, unutterable woe ! —
Who spill life’s sacred stream.
For why ? Methought, last night I wrought
A murder, in a dream !

“One that had never done me wrong, —
A feeble man and old ;
I led him to a lonely field, —
The moon shone clear and cold :
Now here, said I, this man shall die,
And I will have his gold !

“Two sudden blows with a ragged stick,
And one with a heavy stone,
One hurried gash with a hasty knife, —
And then the deed was done :
There was nothing lying at my feet
But lifeless flesh and bone !

“Nothing but lifeless flesh and bone,
That could not do me ill ;
And yet I feared him all the more
For lying there so still :
There was a manhood in his look
That murder could not kill !

“And, lo ! the universal air
Seemed lit with ghastly flame, —
Ten thousand thousand dreadful eyes
Were looking down in blame ;
I took the dead man by his hand,
And called upon his name.

“O God ! it made me quake to see
Such sense within the slain ;

But, when I touched the lifeless clay,
The blood gushed out amain !
For every clot a burning spot
Was scorching in my brain !

“My head was like an ardent coal,
My heart as solid ice ;
My wretched, wretched soul, I knew,
Was at the Devil’s price.
A dozen times I groaned, — the dead
Had never groaned but twice.

“And now, from forth the frowning sky,
From the heaven’s topmost height,
I heard a voice, — the awful voice
Of the blood-avenging sprite :
‘Thou guilty man ! take up thy dead,
And hide it from my sight !’

“And I took the dreary body up,
And cast it in a stream, —
The sluggish water black as ink,
The depth was so extreme : —
My gentle boy, remember, this
Is nothing but a dream !

“Down went the corse with a hollow plunge,
And vanished in the pool ;
Anon I cleansed my bloody hands,
And washed my forehead cool,
And sat among the urchins young,
That evening, in the school.

“O Heaven ! to think of their white souls,
And mine so black and grim !
I could not share in childish prayer,
Nor join in evening hymn ;
Like a devil of the pit I seemed,
Mid holy cherubim !

“And Peace went with them, one and all,
And each calm pillow spread ;
But Guilt was my grim chamberlain,
That lighted me to bed,
And drew my midnight curtains round
With fingers bloody red !

“All night I lay in agony,
In anguish dark and deep ;
My fevered eyes I dared not close,
But stared aghast at Sleep ;
For Sin had rendered unto her
The keys of hell to keep !

“All night I lay in agony,
From weary chime to chime ;
With one besetting horrid hint
That racked me all the time, —

A mighty yearning, like the first
Fierce impulse unto crime, —

“One stern tyrannic thought, that made
All other thoughts its slave!
Stronger and stronger every pulse
Did that temptation crave, —
Still urging me to go and see
The dead man in his grave!

“Heavily I rose up, as soon
As light was in the sky,
And sought the black accursed pool
With a wild, misgiving eye;
And I saw the dead in the river-bed,
For the faithless stream was dry.

“Merrily rose the lark, and shook
The dew-drop from its wing;
But I never marked its morning flight,
I never heard it sing,
For I was stooping once again
Under the horrid thing.

“With breathless speed, like a soul in chase,
I took him up and ran;
There was no time to dig a grave
Before the day began, —
In a lonesome wood, with heaps of leaves,
I hid the murdered man!

“And all that day I read in school,
But my thought was elsewhere;
As soon as the midday task was done,
In secret I was there, —
And a mighty wind had swept the leaves,
And still the corse was bare!

“Then down I cast me on my face,
And first began to weep,
For I knew my secret then was one
That earth refused to keep, —
Or land or sea, though he should be
Ten thousand fathoms deep.

“So wills the fierce avenging sprite,
Till blood for blood atones!
Ay, though he's buried in a cave,
And trodden down with stones,
And years have rotted off his flesh, —
The world shall see his bones!

“O God! that horrid, horrid dream
Besets me now awake!
Again — again, with dizzy brain,
The human life I take;
And my red right hand grows raging hot,
Like Cranmer's at the stake.

“And still no peace for the restless clay
Will wave or mould allow;
The horrid thing pursues my soul, —
It stands before me now!
The fearful boy looked up, and saw
Huge drops upon his brow.

That very night, while gentle sleep
The urchin's eyelids kissed,
Two stern-faced men set out from Lynn
Through the cold and heavy mist;
And Eugene Aram walked between,
With gyves upon his wrist.

THOMAS HOOD.

RAMON.

REFUGIO MINE, NORTHERN MEXICO.

DRUNK and senseless in his place,
Prone and sprawling on his face,
More like brute than any man
Alive or dead, —
By his great pump out of gear,
Lay the peon engineer,
Waking only just to hear,
Overhead,
Angry tones that called his name,
Oaths and cries of bitter blame, —
Woke to hear all this, and waking, turned and fled!

“To the man who 'll bring to me,”
Cried Intendant Harry Lee, —
Harry Lee, the English foreman of the mine, —
“Bring the sot alive or dead,
I will give to him,” he said,
“Fifteen hundred pesos down,
Just to set the rascal's crown
Underneath this heel of mine:
Since but death
Deserves the man whose deed,
Be it vice or want of heed,
Stops the pumps that give us breath, —
Stops the pumps that suck the death
From the poisoned lower levels of the mine!”

No one answered, for a cry
From the shaft rose up on high;
And shuffling, scrambling, tumbling from below,
Came the miners each, the bolder
Mounting on the weaker's shoulder,
Grappling, clinging to their hold or Letting go,
As the weaker gasped and fell
From the ladder to the well, —
To the poisoned pit of hell
Down below!

"To the man who sets them free,"
 Cried the foreman, Harry Lee, —
 Harry Lee, the English foreman of the mine, —
 "Brings them out and sets them free,
 I will give that man," said he,
 "Twice that sum, who with a rope
 Face to face with death shall cope :
 Let him come who dares to hope !"
 "Hold your peace !" some one replied,
 Standing by the foreman's side ;
 "There has one already gone, whoe'er he be !"

Then they held their breath with awe,
 Pulling on the rope, and saw
 Fainting figures reappear,
 On the black rope swinging clear,
 Fastened by some skilful hand from below ;
 Till a score the level gained,
 And but one alone remained, —
 He the hero and the last,
 He whose skilful hand made fast
 The long line that brought them back to hope and cheer !

Haggard, gasping, down dropped he
 At the feet of Harry Lee, —
 Harry Lee, the English foreman of the mine ;
 "I have come," he gasped, "to claim
 Both rewards, Señor, — my name
 Is Ramon !
 I'm the drunken engineer, —
 I'm the coward, Señor —" Here
 He fell over, by that sign
 Dead as stone !

REVELRY OF THE DYING.

[Supposed to be written in India, while the plague was raging, and playing havoc among the British residents and troops stationed there. This has been attributed to Alfred Domett and to Bartholomew Dowling, but was written by neither of them. It first appeared in the New York Albion, but the author is absolutely unknown.]

WE meet 'neath the sounding rafter,
 And the walls around are bare ;
 As they shout to our peals of laughter,
 It seems that the dead are there.
 But stand to your glasses, steady !
 We drink to our comrades' eyes ;
 Quaff a cup to the dead already —
 And hurrah for the next that dies !

Not here are the goblets glowing,
 Not here is the vintage sweet ;
 'T is cold, as our hearts are growing,
 And dark as the doom we meet.

But stand to your glasses, steady !
 And soon shall our pulses rise ;
 A cup to the dead already —
 Hurrah for the next that dies !

Not a sigh for the lot that darkles,
 Not a tear for the friends that sink ;
 We 'll fall, midst the wine-cup's sparkles,
 As mute as the wine we drink.
 So stand to your glasses, steady !
 'T is this that the respite buys ;
 One cup to the dead already —
 Hurrah for the next that dies !

'T ime was when we frowned at others ;
 We thought we were wiser then ;
 Ha ! ha ! let those think of their mothers,
 Who hope to see them again.
 No ! stand to your glasses, steady !
 The thoughtless are here the wise ;
 A cup to the dead already —
 Hurrah for the next that dies !

There 's many a hand that 's shaking,
 There 's many a cheek that 's sunk ;
 But soon, though our hearts are breaking,
 They 'll burn with the wine we 've drunk.
 So stand to your glasses, steady !
 'T is here the revival lies ;
 A cup to the dead already —
 Hurrah for the next that dies !

There 's a mist on the glass congealing,
 'T is the hurricane's fiery breath ;
 And thus does the warmth of feeling
 Turn ice in the grasp of Death.
 Ho ! stand to your glasses, steady !
 For a moment the vapor flies ;
 A cup to the dead already —
 Hurrah for the next that dies !

Who dreads to the dust returning ?
 Who shrinks from the sable shore,
 Where the high and haughty yearning
 Of the soul shall sting no more !
 Ho ! stand to your glasses, steady !
 The world is a world of lies ;
 A cup to the dead already —
 Hurrah for the next that dies !

Cut off from the land that bore us,
 Betrayed by the land we find,
 Where the brightest have gone before us,
 And the dullest remain behind —
 Stand, stand to your glasses, steady !
 'T is all we have left to prize ;
 A cup to the dead already —
 And hurrah for the next that dies !

FRAGMENTS.

THE FIRST TRAGEDY.

So saying, her rash hand in evil hour
Forth reaching to the fruit, she plucked, she eat :
Earth felt the wound ; and Nature from her seat,
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe,
That all was lost.

Paradise Lost, Book ix.

MILTON.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge, not deceived,
But fondly overcome with female charm.
Earth trembled from her entrails, as again
In pangs, and Nature gave a second groan.

Paradise Lost, Book ix.

MILTON.

Death
Grinned horrible a ghastly smile, to hear
His famine should be filled, and blessed his maw
Destined to that good hour.

Paradise Lost, Book ii.

MILTON.

EFFECTS OF CRIME AND GRIEF.

The stings of Falschood those shall try,
And hard Unkindness' altered eye,
That mocks the tear it forced to flow ;
And keen Remorse with blood defiled,
And moody Madness laughing wild
Amid severest woe.

On a Distant Prospect of Eton College.

T. GRAY.

My heart is as an anvil unto sorrow,
Which beats upon it like a Cyclop's hammer,
And with the noise turns up my giddy brain
And makes me frantic !

Edward II.

C. MARLOWE.

Every sense
Had been o'erstrung by pangs intense ;
And each frail fibre of her brain
(As bowstrings, when relaxed by rain,
The erring arrow launch aside)
Sent forth her thoughts all wild and wide.

Parisina.

BYRON.

I am not mad ; — I would to heaven I were !
For then, 't is like I should forget myself ;
O, if I could, what grief I should forget !

King John, Act iii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

PORTENTS AND FEARS.

CÆSAR. Speak ! Cæsar is turned to hear.
SOOTHSAYER. Beware the Ides of March !

Julius Cæsar, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Fierce fiery warriors fought upon the clouds,
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol.
O Cæsar ! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

When beggars die there are no comets seen ;
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.

Julius Cæsar, Act ii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Danger knows full well
That Cæsar is more dangerous than he.
We are two lions littered in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible.

Julius Cæsar, Act ii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

What is danger
More than the weakness of our apprehensions ?
A poor cold part o' th' blood ; who takes it hold of ?
Cowards and wicked livers : valiant minds
Were made the masters of it.

Chances.

BEAUMONT and FLETCHER.

CÆSAR. The Ides of March are come.
SOOTHSAYER. Ay, Cæsar ; but not gone.

Julius Cæsar, Act iii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Eyes, look your last :
Arms, take your last embrace ; and lips,
O ! you,
The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless bargain to engrossing death.

Romeo and Juliet, Act v. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

THE KING'S ENEMY.

Thou art a traitor. —
Off with his head ! — now by Saint Paul I swear
I will not dine until I see the same.

King Richard III., Act iii. Sc. 4.

SHAKESPEARE.

Off with his head ! so much for Buckingham !

Shakespeare's Richard III. (Altered), Act iv. Sc. 3.

C. CIBBER.

REVENGE.

And if we do but watch the hour,
There never yet was human power
Which could evade, if unforgiven,
The patient search and vigil long
Of him who treasures up a wrong.

Mazepa.

BYRON.

I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him.

Merchant of Venice, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

If it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge.

Merchant of Venice, Act iii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

Vengeance to God alone belongs ;
But when I think on all my wrongs,
My blood is liquid flame.

Marmion, Cant. vi.

SCOTT.

FORETHOUGHT OF MURDER.

There shall be done

A deed of dreadful note.

Macbeth, Act iii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing,
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream :
The Genius, and the mortal instruments,
Are then in council ; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.

Julius Caesar, Act i. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

If it were done, when 't is done, then 't were well
It were done quickly : if the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch
With his surcease, success ; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
But here, upon this bank and shoal of time, —
We'd jump the life to come.

Besides, this Duncan

Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off.

Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 7.

SHAKESPEARE.

Put out the light, and then — put out the light.
If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,
I can again thy former light restore,
Should I repent me ; but once put out thy light,
Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heat,
That can thy light relume. When I have plucked thy rose

I cannot give it vital growth again,
It needs must wither.

Othello, Act v. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Stop up th' access and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
Th' effect and it.

Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 5.

SHAKESPEARE.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully ;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcase fit for hounds.

Julius Caesar, Act ii. Sc. 1.

SHAKESPEARE.

AFTERWARDS.

O, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven ;
It hath the primal eldest curse upon 't,
A brother's murder.

Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 3.

SHAKESPEARE.

O horror ! horror ! horror ! Tongue nor heart
Cannot conceive nor name thee.

Confusion now hath made his master-piece.
Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o' the building.

Macbeth, Act ii. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

Blood, though it sleep a time, yet never dies :
The gods on murderers fix revengeful eyes.

Widow's Tears.

CHAPMAN.

Foul deeds will rise,
Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes.

Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 2.

SHAKESPEARE.

O blisful God, that art so just and trewe !
Lo, howe that thou biwreyest mordre alway !
Mordre wol out, that se we day by day.

The Nonnes Preestes Tale.

CHAUCER.

THE HARDENED CRIMINAL.

I have almost forgot the taste of fear.
The time has been, my senses would have quailed
To hear a night-shriek ; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse, and stir,
As life were in 't. I have supped full with horrors :

Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.

Is one of these two cowards ;
Either to wish to die
When he should live, or live when he should die.

He

That kills himself t' avoid misery, fears it,
And at the best shows but a bastard valor :
This life's a fort committed to my trust,
Which I must not yield up, till it be forced ;
Nor will I : he's not valiant that dares die,
But he that boldly bears calamity.

PERSONAL POEMS.

Epitaph.

Here rests his Head upon the Lap of Earth
At Youth, to Fortune & to Fame unknown:
Fair Science frown'd not on his humble Birth,
And Melancholy mark'd him for her own.

Large was his Bounty, & his Soul sincere;
Heav'n did a Recompense as largely send:
He gave to Misery all, he had, a Tear,
He gain'd from Heav'n ('twas all he wish'd) a Friend
No farther seek his Merits to disclose,
Or draw his Frailties from their dread Abode,
There they alike in trembling Hope repose,
The Bosom of his Father, & his God.

Gray.

Run ye, ye run on little year
And so much gone
And yet the even flow of life shines calmly on;

Hark! to the tolling bells
In echoes deep and slow,
While on the breeze our banner floats
Draped in the weeds of woe.

PRAXITELES.

FROM THE GREEK.

VENUS (loquitur). Paris, Anchises, and Adonis
— three,
Three only, did me ever naked see ;
But this Praxiteles— when, where, did he ?

DIRGE OF ALARIC THE VISIGOTH.

[Alaric stormed and spoiled the city of Rome, and was afterwards buried in the channel of the river Busentius, the water of which had been diverted from its course that the body might be interred.]

WHEN I am dead, no pageant train
Shall waste their sorrows at my bier,
Nor worthless pomp of homage vain
Stain it with hypocritic tear ;
For I will die as I did live,
Nor take the boon I cannot give.

Ye shall not raise a marble bust
Upon the spot where I repose ;
Ye shall not fawn before my dust,
In hollow circumstance of woes ;
Nor sculptured clay, with lying breath,
Insult the clay that moulds beneath.

Ye shall not pile with servile toil
Your monuments upon my breast,
Nor yet within the common soil
Lay down the wreck of power to rest ;
Where man can boast that he has trod
On him that was "the scourge of God."

But ye the mountain-stream shall turn,
And lay its secret channel bare
And hollow, for your sovereign's urn
A resting-place forever there :
Then bid its everlasting springs
Flow back upon the king of kings ;
And never be the secret said,
Until the deep give up his dead.

My gold and silver ye shall fling
Back to the clods that gave them birth ;—
The captured crowns of many a king,
The ransom of a conquered earth ;
For e'en though dead will I control
The trophies of the capitol.

But when, beneath the mountain-tide,
Ye've laid your monarch down to rot,
Ye shall not rear upon its side
Pillar or mound to mark the spot ;
For long enough the world has shook
Beneath the terrors of my look ;
And now, that I have run my race,
The astonished realms shall rest a space.

My course was like a river deep,
And from the northern hills I burst,
Across the world in wrath to sweep,
And where I went the spot was cursed,
Nor blade of grass again was seen
Where Alaric and his hosts had been.

See how their haughty barriers fail
Beneath the terror of the Goth,
Their iron-breasted legions quail
Before my ruthless sabaoth,
And low the queen of empires kneels,
And grovels at my chariot-wheels.

Not for myself did I ascend
In judgment my triumphal car ;
'T was God alone, on high, did send
The avenging Scythian to the war,
To shake abroad, with iron hand,
The appointed scourge of his command.

With iron hand that scourge I reared
O'er guilty king and guilty realm ;
Destruction was the ship I steered,
And Vengeance sat upon the helm,
When, launched in fury on the flood,
I ploughed my way through seas of blood,
And, in the stream their hearts had spilt,
Washed out the long arrears of guilt.

Across the everlasting Alp
 I poured the torrent of my powers,
 And feeble Cæsars shrieked for help,
 In vain, within their seven-hilled towers !
 I quenched in blood the brightest gem
 That glittered in their diadem,
 And struck a darker, deeper dye
 In the purple of their majesty,
 And bade my Northern banners shine
 Upon the conquered Palatine.

My course is run, my errand done ;
 I go to Him from whom I came ;
 But never yet shall set the sun
 Of glory that adorns my name ;
 And Roman hearts shall long be sick,
 When men shall think of Alaric.

My course is run, my errand done ;
 But darker ministers of fate,
 Impatient, round the eternal throne,
 And in the caves of vengeance, wait ;
 And soon mankind shall blench away
 Before the name of Attila.

* "From this unique petition," says Mr. Gilman in his "River-side" Chaucer, "there seems to have resulted an additional pension of forty marks a year, on the strength of which Chaucer took a lease of a house in the garden of St. Mary's Chapel, Westminster, for fifty-three years, at an annual rent of two pounds thirteen shillings and fourpence, the lease to be void on the poet's death." So that the practical results of this poetical plaint show that Chaucer well described one of his own characteristics in his description of the MERCHANT, among his Canterbury Pilgrims. —

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY.

FROM "AN ELEGY ON A FRIEND'S PASSION FOR HIS ASTROPHILL."

WITHIN these woods of Arcadie
 He chiefe delight and pleasure tooke,
 And on the mountaine Parthenie,
 Upon the chrystall liquid brooke,
 The Muses met him ev'ry day,
 That taught him sing, to write, and say.

When he descended downe to the mount,
 His personage seemed most divine,
 A thousand graces one might count
 Upon his lovely, cheerfull eie ;
 To heare him speake and sweetly smile,
 You were in Paradise the while.

A sweet attractive kinde of grace,
 A full assurance given by lookes,
 Continual comfort in a face,
 The lineaments of Gospell bookes ;
 I trowe that countenance cannot lie,
 Whose thoughts are legible in the eie.

Was never eie did see that face,
 Was never eare did heare that tong,
 Was never minde did minde his grace,
 That ever thought the travell long ;
 But eies, and eares, and ev'ry thought,
 Were with his sweete perfections caught.

ANNE HATHAWAY.

TO THE IDOL OF MY EYE AND DELIGHT OF MY HEART,
ANNE HATHAWAY.

WOULD ye be taught, ye feathered throng,
 With love's sweet notes to grace your song,
 To pierce the heart with thrilling lay,
 Listen to mine Anne Hathaway !

* The Albion of Brutus, a descendant of Eneas.

† King Henry IV. seems to be meant.

‡ may.

She hath a way to sing so clear,
 Phœbus might wondering stop to hear.
 To melt the sad, make blithe the gay,
 And nature charm, Anne hath a way ;
     She hath a way,
     Anne Hathaway ;
 To breathe delight Anne hath a way.

When Envy's breath and rancorous tooth
 Do soil and bite fair worth and truth,
 And merit to distress betray,
 To soothe the heart Anne hath a way ;
 She hath a way to chase despair,
 To heal all grief, to cure all care,
 Turn foulest night to fairest day.
 Thou know'st, fond heart, Anne hath a way ;
     She hath a way,
     Anne Hathaway ;
 To make grief bliss, Anne hath a way.

Talk not of gems, the orient list,
 The diamond, topaz, amethyst,
 The emerald mild, the ruby gay ;
 Talk of my gem, Anne Hathaway !
 She hath a way, with her bright eye,
 Their various lustres to defy, —
 The jewels she, and the foil they,
 So sweet to look Anne hath a way ;
     She hath a way,
     Anne Hathaway ;
 To shame bright gems, Anne hath a way.

But were it to my fancy given
 To rate her charms, I'd call them heaven ;
 For, though a mortal made of clay,
 Angels must love Anne Hathaway ;
 She hath a way so to control,
 To rapture, the imprisoned soul,
 And sweetest heaven on earth display,
 That to be heaven Anne hath a way ;
     She hath a way,
     Anne Hathaway ;
 To be heaven's self, Anne hath a way.

ON THE PORTRAIT † OF SHAKESPEARE.

THIS figure, that thou here seest put,
 It was for gentle Shakespeare cut ;
 Wherein the Graver had a strife
 With Nature to outdo the life :
 O, could he but have drawn his wit
 As well in brass, as he hath hit

His face ; the Print would then surpass
 All that was ever writ in brass.
 But since he cannot, Reader, look
 Not at his picture, but his book.

BEN JONSON.

SHAKESPEARE.

FROM "PROLOGUE" SPOKEN BY MR. GARRICK AT THE OPENING OF THE THEATRE IN DRURY LANE, IN 1747.

WHEN Learning's triumph o'er her barbarous foes

First reared the stage, immortal Shakespeare rose ;
 Each change of many-colored life he drew,
 Exhausted worlds, and then imagined new :
 Existence saw him spurn her bounded reign,
 And panting Time toiled after him in vain :
 His powerful strokes presiding Truth impressed,
 And unresisted Passion stormed the breast.

DR SAMUEL JOHNSON.

TO THE MEMORY OF MY BELOVED
MASTER, WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, AND WHAT HE HATH LEFT US.

To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy name,
 Am I thus ample to thy book and fame ;
 While I confess thy writings to be such
 As neither man nor Muse can praise too much.
 'T is true, and all men's suffrage. But these ways
 Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise ;
 For silliest ignorance on these would light,
 Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right ;
 Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
 The truth, but gropes, and urges all by chance ;
 Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
 And think to ruin, where it seemed to raise.

But thou art proof against them, and, indeed,
 Above the ill fortune of them, or the need.
 I therefore will begin : Soul of the age !
 The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage !
 My Shakespeare, rise ! I will not lodge thee by Chancer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie
 A little further off, to make thee room :
 Thou art a monument without a tomb,
 And art alive still, while thy book doth live,
 And we have wits to read, and praise to give.
 That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses,
 I mean with great but disproportioned Muses :
 For if I thought my judgment were of years,
 I should commit thee surely with thy peers,
 And tell how far thou didst our Lyly outshine,
 Or sporting Kyd or Marlowe's mighty line.
 And though thou had small Latin and less Greek,
 From thence to honour thee I will not seek
 For names ; but call forth thundering Eschylus,
 Euripides, and Sophocles to us,

* This poem has sometimes, but without much reason, been attributed to Shakespeare.

† The engraving by Martin Droeshout.

Pacuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead,
 To live again, to hear thy buskin tread,
 And shake a stage : or when thy socks were on,
 Leave thee alone for the comparison
 Of all, that insolent Greece or haughty Rome
 Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
 Triumph, my Britain, thou hast one to show,
 To whom all scenes of Europe homage owe.
 He was not of an age, but for all time !
 And all the Muses still were in their prime,
 When, like Apollo, he came forth to warn
 Our ears, or like a Mercury, to charm !
 Nature herself was proud of his designs,
 And joyed to wear the dressing of his lines !
 Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
 As, since, she will vouchsafe no other wit.
 The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,
 Neat Terence, witty Plautus, now not please :
 But antiquated and deserted lie,
 As they were not of nature's family.
 Yet must I not give nature all ; thy art,
 My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.
 For though the poet's matter nature be,
 His art doth give the fashion ; and, that he
 Who casts to write a living line, must sweat
 (Such as thine are) and strike the second heat
 Upon the Muses' anvil ; turn the same,
 And himself with it, that he thinks to frame ;
 Or for the laurel, he may gain a scorn ;
 For a good poet's made as well as born.
 And such wert thou ! Look how the father's face Lives in his issue, even so the race
 Of Shakespeare's mind and manners brightly shines

In his well turned and true filed lines :
 In each of which he seems to shake a lance,
 As brandished at the eyes of ignorance.
 Sweet Swan of Avon ! what a sight it were
 To see thee in our water yet appear,
 And make those flights upon the banks of Thames
 That so did take Eliza and our James !
 But stay, I see thee in the hemisphere
 Advanced, and made a constellation there !
 Shine forth, thou Star of Poets, and with rage,
 Or influence, chide, or cheer the drooping stage
 Which since thy flight from hence hath mourned like night,
 And despairs day, but for thy volume's light !

BEN JONSON.

SHAKESPEARE.

THE soul of man is larger than the sky,
 Deeper than ocean, or the abysmal dark
 Of the unfathomed centre. Like that ark,
 Which in its sacred hold uplifted high,
 O'er the drowned hills, the human family,

And stock reserved of every living kind,
 So, in the compass of the single mind,
 The seeds and pregnant forms in essence lie,
 That make all worlds. Great poet, 't was thy art

To know thyself, and in thyself to be Whate'er love, hate, ambition, destiny,
 Or the firm fatal purpose of the heart
 Can make of man. Yet thou wert still the same,

Serene of thought, unhurt by thy own flame.

HARTLEY COLERIDGE.

AN EPITAPH ON THE ADMIRABLE
DRAMATIC POET, W. SHAKESPEARE.

WHAT needs my Shakespeare for his honored
 bones,

The labor of an age in piled stones ?
 Or that his hallowed relics should be hid
 Under a star-y-pointing pyramid ?
 Dear son of memory, great heir of fame,
 What need'st thou such weak witness of thy name ?

Thou in our wonder and astonishment
 Hast built thyself a livelong monument.
 For whilst to the shame of slow-endeavoring art
 Thy easy numbers flow, and that each heart
 Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued book
 Those Delphic lines with deep impression took,
 Then thou our fancy of itself bereaving,
 Dost make us marble with too much conceiv-
 ing ;
 And so sepulchred in such pomp dost lie,
 That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

MILTON.

TO THE MEMORY OF BEN JONSON.

THE Muse's fairest light in no dark time,
 The wonder of a learned age ; the line
 Which none can pass ! the most proportioned wit, —

To nature, the best judge of what was fit ;
 The deepest, plainest, highest, clearest pen ;
 The voice most echoed by consenting men ;
 The soul which answered best to all well said
 By others, and which most requital made ;
 Tuned to the highest key of ancient Rome,
 Returning all her music with his own ;
 In whom, with nature, study claimed a part,
 And yet who to himself owed all his art :
 Here lies Ben Jonson ! every age will look
 With sorrow here, with wonder on his book.

JOHN CLEVELAND.

ODE TO BEN JONSON.

AH Ben !
 Say how or when
 Shall we, thy guests,
 Meet at those lyric feasts,
     Made at the Sun,
 The Dog, the Triple Tun ;
 Where we such clusters had
 As made us nobly wild, not mad ;
     And yet each verse of thine
 Outdid the meat, outdid the frolic wine.

    My Ben !
 Or come again,
     Or send to us
 Thy wit's great overplus ;
     But teach us yet
 Wisely to husband it,
 Lest we that talent spend :
 And having once brought to an end
     That precious stock, the store
 Of such a wit, the world should have no more.

ROBERT HERRICK.

BEN JONSON'S COMMONPLACE BOOK.

His learning such, no author, old or new,
 Escaped his reading that deserved his view ;
 And such his judgment, so exact his taste,
 Of what was best in books, or what books best,
 That had he joined those notes his labors took
 From each most praised and praise-deserving book,
 And could the world of that choice treasure boast,
 It need not care though all the rest were lost.

LUCIUS CARY (LORD FALKLAND).

EPITAPH ON THE COUNTESS OF PEMBROKE.

UNDERNEATH this sable hearse
 Lies the subject of all verse,
 Sydney's sister, — Pembroke's mother.
 Death, ere thou hast slain another
 Fair and wise and good as she,
 Time shall throw a dart at thee !

Marble piles let no man raise
 To her name in after days ;
 Some kind woman, born as she,
 Reading this, like Niobe
 Shall turn marble, and become
 Both her mourner and her tomb.

BEN JONSON.

EPITAPH ON ELIZABETH L. H.

WOULDST thou heare what man can say
 In a little ? — reader, stay !
 Underneath this stone doth lye
 As much beauty as could dye, —
 Which in life did harbor give
 To more vertue than doth live.
 If at all she had a fault,
 Leave it buried in this vault.
 One name was Elizabeth, —
 The other, let it sleep with death :
 Fitter where it dyed to tell,
 Than that it lived at all. Farewell !

BEN JONSON.

UNDER THE PORTRAIT OF JOHN
MILTON.

PREFIXED TO "PARADISE LOST."

THREE Poets, in three distant ages born,
 Greece, Italy, and England did adorn.
 The first in loftiness of thought surpassed ;
 The next in majesty ; in both the last.
 The force of nature could no further go ;
 To make a third, she joined the former two.

JOHN DRYDEN.

TO MILTON.

"LONDON, 1802."

MILTON ! thou shouldst be living at this hour :
 England hath need of thee : she is a fen
 Of stagnant waters : altar, sword, and pen,
 Fireside, the heroic wealth of hall and bower,
 Have forfeited their ancient English dower
 Of inward happiness. We are selfish men ;
 Oh ! raise us up, return to us again ;
 And give us manners, virtue, freedom, power.
 Thy soul was like a star, and dwelt apart :
 Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the sea :
 Pure as the naked heavens, majestic, free,
 So didst thou travel on life's common way,
 In cheerful godliness ; and yet thy heart
 The lowliest duties on herself did lay.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

THE SONNET.

SCORN not the sonnet ; critic, you have frowned,
 Mindless of its just honors ; with this key
 Shakespeare unlocked his heart ; the melody
 Of this small lute gave ease to Petrarch's wound ;
 A thousand times this pipe did Tasso sound ;
 With it Camoëns soothed an exile's grief ;
 The sonnet glittered a gay myrtle leaf

Amid the cypress with which Dante crowned
His visionary brow; a glow-worm lamp,
It cheered mild Spenser, called from fairy-land
To struggle through dark ways; and when a damp
Fell round the path of Milton, in his hand
The thing became a trumpet; whence he blew
Soul-animating strains, — alas! too few.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

ON A BUST OF DANTE.

SEE, from this counterfeit of him
Whom Arno shall remember long,
How stern of lineament, how grim,
The father was of Tuscan song!
There but the burning sense of wrong,
Perpetual care, and scorn, abide —
Small friendship for the lordly throng,
Distrust of all the world beside.

Faithful if this wan image be,
No dream his life was — but a fight;
Could any Beatrice see
A lover in that anchorite?
To that cold Ghibeline's gloomy sight
Who could have guessed the visions came
Of beauty, veiled with heavenly light,
In circles of eternal flame?

The lips as Cumæ's cavern close,
The cheeks with fast and sorrow thin,
The rigid front, almost morose,
But for the patient hope within,
Declare a life whose course hath been
Un sullied still, though still severe,
Which, through the wavering days of sin,
Kept itself icy-chaste and clear.

Not wholly such his haggard look
When wandering once, forlorn, he strayed,
With no companion save his book,
To Corvo's hushed monastic shade;
Where, as the Benedictine laid
His palm upon the pilgrim guest,
The single boon for which he prayed
The convent's charity was rest.

Peace dwells not here — this rugged face
Betrays no spirit of repose;
The sullen warrior sole we trace,
The marble man of many woes.
Such was his mien when first arose
The thought of that strange tale divine —
When hell he peopled with his foes,
The scourge of many a guilty line.

War to the last he waged with all
The tyrant canker-worms of earth;
Baron and duke, in hold and hall,
Cursed the dark hour that gave him birth;
He used Rome's harlot for his mirth;
Plucked bare hypocrisy and erime;
But valiant souls of knightly worth
Transmitted to the rolls of time.

O time! whose verdicts mock our own,
The only righteous judge art thou;
That poor, old exile, sad and lone,
Is Latium's other Virgil now.
Before his name the nations bow;
His words are parcel of mankind,
Deep in whose hearts, as on his brow,
The marks have sunk of Dante's mind.

THOMAS WILLIAM PARSONS.

WALTON'S BOOK OF LIVES.

FROM "ECCLESIASTICAL SONNETS," PART III.

THERE are no colors in the fairest sky
So fair as these. The feather, whence the pen
Was shaped that traced the lives of these good
men,
Dropped from an angel's wing. With moistened
eye

We read of faith and purest charity
In statesman, priest, and humble citizen:
O, could we copy their mild virtues, then
What joy to live, what blessedness to die!
Methinks their very names shine still and bright;
Apart, — like glow-worms on a summer night;
Or lonely tapers when from far they fling
A guiding ray; or seen, like stars on high,
Satellites burning in a lucid ring
Around meek Walton's heavenly memory.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

CHARACTER OF THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

FROM "ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL," PART I.

FOR close designs and crooked councils fit;
Sagacious, bold, and turbulent of wit;
Restless, unfixed in principles and place;
In power unpleas'd, impatient of disgrace:
A fiery soul, which, working out its way,
Fretted the pygmy-body to decay,
And o'er informed the tenement of clay.
A daring pilot in extremity;
Pleased with the danger, when the waves went high

He sought the storms ; but for a calm unfit,
 Would steer too nigh the sands to boast his wit.
 Great wits are sure to madness near allied,
 And thin partitions do their bounds divide.

JOHN DRYDEN.

ZIMRI.

[GEORGE VILLIERS, DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM, 1632.]

FROM "ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL," PART I.

SOME of their chiefs were princes of the land ;
 In the first rank of these did Zimri stand ;
 A man so various, that he seemed to be
 Not one, but all mankind's epitome :
 Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong ;
 Was everything by starts, and nothing long ;
 But, in the course of one revolving moon,
 Was chymist, fiddler, statesman, and buffoon ;
 Then all for women, painting, rhyming, drinking,
 Besides ten thousand freaks that died in thinking.
 Blest madman, who could every hour employ,
 With something new to wish or to enjoy !
 Railing and praising were his usual themes ;
 And both, to show his judgment, in extremes :
 So over-violent or over-civil,
 That every man with him was god or devil.
 In squandering wealth was his peculiar art ;
 Nothing went unrewarded but desert.
 Beggared by fools, whom still he found too late :
 He had his jest, and they had his estate.
 He laughed himself from court, then sought relief
 By forming parties, but could ne'er be chief ;
 For, spite of him, the weight of business fell
 On Absalom, and wise Achitophel.
 Thus, wicked but in will, of means bereft,
 He left no faction, but of that was left.

JOHN DRYDEN.

CHARLES XII.

FROM "VANITY OF HUMAN WISHES."

ON what foundations stands the warrior's pride,
 How just his hopes, let Swedish Charles decide:
 A frame of adamant, a soul of fire,
 No dangers fright him, and no labors tire ;
 O'er love, o'er fear, extends his wide domain,
 Unconquered lord of pleasure and of pain.
 No joys to him pacific sceptres yield,
 War sounds the trump, he rushes to the field ;
 Behold surrounding kings their power combine,
 And one capitulate, and one resign ;
 Peace courts his hand, but spreads her charms in vain ;
 "Think nothing gained," he cries, "till naught remain,

On Moscow's walls till Gothic standards fly,
 And all be mine beneath the polar sky."
 The march begins in military state,
 And nations on his eye suspended wait ;
 Stern famine guards the solitary coast,
 And winter barricades the realms of frost.
 He comes, nor want nor cold his course delay ;
 Hide, blushing glory, hide Pultowa's day !
 The vanquished hero leaves his broken bands,
 And shows his miseries in distant lands ;
 Condemned a needy supplicant to wait,
 While ladies interpose and slaves debate.
 But did not chance at length her error mend ?
 Did no subverted empire mark his end ?
 Did rival monarchs give the fatal wound,
 Or hostile millions press him to the ground ?
 His fall was destined to a barren strand,
 A petty fortress, and a dubious hand ;
 He left the name, at which the world grew pale,
 To point a moral or adorn a tale.

DR. SAMUEL JOHNSON.

TO THE LORD-GENERAL CROMWELL.

CROMWELL, our chief of men, who through a
 cloud,
 Not of war only, but detractions rude,
 Guided by faith and matchless fortitude,
 To peace and truth thy glorious way hast
 ploughed,
 And on the neck of crown'd fortune proud
 Hast reared God's trophies, and his work pursued,
 While Darwen stream, with blood of Scots imbued,
 And Dunbar field resounds thy praises loud,
 And Worcester's laureate wreath. Yet much remains
 To conquer still ; Peace hath her victories
 No less renowned than War : new foes arise,
 Threatening to bind our souls with secular chains :
 Help us to save free conscience from the paw
 Of hireling wolves, whose gospel is their maw.

SPORUS.

[LORD HERVEY.]

FROM THE "PROLOGUE TO THE SATIRES."

LET Sporus tremble. — A.* What? that thing of silk,
 Sporus, that mere white curd of asses' milk ?
 Satire of sense, alas ! can Sporus feel ?
 Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel ?

* Arbutnot.

P.* Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
 This painted child of dirt that stinks and stings ;
 Whose buzz the witty and the fair annoys,
 Yet wit ne'er tastes, and beauty ne'er enjoys :
 So well-bred spaniels civilly delight
 In muzzling of the game they dare not bite.
 Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
 As shallow streams run dimpling all the way.
 Whether in florid impotence he speaks,
 And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks,
 Or at the ear of Eve, familiar toad,
 Half froth, half venom, spits himself abroad,
 In puns, or politics, or tales, or lies,
 Or spite, or smut, or rhymes, or blasphemies ;
 His wit all seesaw, between that and this,
 Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
 And he himself one vile antithesis.
 Amphibious thing ! that, acting either part,
 The trifling head, or the corrupted heart,
 Fop at the toilet, flatterer at the board,
 Now trips a lady, and now struts a lord.
 Eve's tempter thus the rabbins have exprest,
 A chernub's face, a reptile all the rest ;
 Beauty that shocks you, parts that none will trust,
 Wit that can creep, and pride that licks the dust.

ADDISON.

FROM THE "PROLOGUE TO THE SATIRES."

PEACE to all such! but were there one whose fires
 True genius kindles, and fair fame inspires ;
 Blest with each talent and each art to please,
 And born to write, converse, and live with ease :
 Should such a man, too fond to rule alone,
 Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the throne,
 View him with scornful, yet with jealous eyes,
 And hate for arts that caused himself to rise ;
 Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
 And, without sneering, teach the rest to sneer ;
 Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
 Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike ;
 Alike reserved to blame, or to commend,
 A timorous foe, and a suspicious friend ;
 Dreading even fools, by flatterers besieged,
 And so obliging that he ne'er obliged ;
 Like Cato, give his little senate laws,
 And sit attentive to his own applause ;
 Whilst wits and templars every sentence raise,
 And wonder with a foolish face of praise : —
 Who but must laugh, if such a one there be ?
 Who would not weep, if Atticus were he ?

TO THE EARL OF WARWICK, ON THE DEATH OF ADDISON.

If, dumb too long, the drooping Muse hath stayed,
 And left her debt to Addison unpaid,
 Blame not her silence, Warwick, but bemoan,
 And judge, O, judge my bosom by your own.
 What mourner ever felt poetic fires !
 Slow comes the verse that real woe inspires :
 Grief unaffected suits but ill with art,
 Or flowing numbers with a bleeding heart.

Can I forget the dismal night that gave
 My soul's best part forever to the grave ?
 How silent did his old companions tread,
 By midnight lamps, the mansions of the dead,
 Through breathing statues, then unheeded things,
 Through rows of warriors and through walks of kings !
 What awe did the slow, solemn knell inspire ;
 The pealing organ, and the pausing choir ;
 The duties by the lawn-robed prelate paid ;
 And the last words, that dust to dust conveyed !
 While speechless o'er thy closing grave we bend,
 Accept these tears, thou dear departed friend.
 O, gone forever ! take this long adieu ;
 And sleep in peace next thy loved Montague.
 To strew fresh laurels let the task be mine,
 A frequent pilgrim at thy sacred shrine ;
 Mine with true sighs thy absence to bemoan,
 And grave with faithful epitaphs thy stone.
 If e'er from me thy loved memorial part,
 May shame afflict this alienated heart ;
 Of thee forgetful if I form a song,
 My lyre be broken, and untuned my tongue,
 My grief be doubled, from thy image free,
 And mirth a torment, unchastised by thee !

Oft let me range the gloomy aisles alone,
 Sad luxury ! to vulgar minds unknown,
 Along the walls where speaking marbles show
 What worthies form the hallowed mould below ;
 Proud names, who once the reins of empire held ;
 In arms who triumphed, or in arts excelled ;
 Chiefs, graced with scars, and prodigal of blood,
 Stern patriots, who for sacred freedom stood ;
 Just men, by whom impartial laws were given ;
 And saints, who taught and led the way to heaven ;
 Ne'er to these chambers, where the mighty rest,
 Since their foundation came a nobler guest ;
 Nor e'er was to the bowers of bliss conveyed
 A fairer spirit or more welcome shade.

In what new region, to the just assigned,
 What new employments please the unbodied mind ?

A wingèd Virtue, through the ethereal sky,
From world to world unwearied does he fly?
Or curious trace the long laborious maze
Of Heaven's decrees, where wondering angels gaze?

Does he delight to hear bold seraphs tell
How Michael battled and the dragon fell;
Or, mixed with milder cherubim, to glow
In hymns of love, not ill-essay'd below?
Or dost thou warn poor mortals left behind,
A task well suited to thy gentle mind?
O, if sometimes thy spotless form descend,
To me thy aid, thou guardian genius, lend!
When rage misguides me, or when fear alarms,
When pain distresses, or when pleasure charms,
In silent whisperings purer thoughts impart,
And turn from ill a frail and feeble heart;
Lead through the paths thy virtue trod before,
Till bliss shall join, nor death can part us more.

That awful form which, so the heavens decree,
Must still be loved and still deplored by me,
In nightly visions seldom fails to rise,
Or, roused by fancy, meets my waking eyes.
If business calls, or crowded courts invite,
The unblemished statesman seems to strike my
sight;

If in the stage I seek to soothe my care,
I meet his soul which breathes in Cato there;
If pensive to the rural shades I rove,
His shape o'ertakes me in the lonely grove;
'T was there of just and good he reasoned strong,
Cleared some great truth, or raised some serious
song:

There patient showed us the wise course to steer,
A candid censor and a friend severe;
There taught us how to live, and (O, too high
The price for knowledge!) taught us how to die.

Thou Hill, whose brow the antique structures
grace,
Reared by bold chiefs of Warwick's noble race,
Why, once so loved, when'er thy bower appears,
O'er my dim eyeballs glance the sudden tears?
How sweet were once thy prospects fresh and fair,
Thy sloping walks, and unpolluted air!
How sweet the glooms beneath thy aged trees,
Thy noontide shadow, and thy evening breeze!
His image thy forsaken bowers restore;
Thy walks and airy prospects charm no more;
No more the summer in thy glooms allay,
Thy evening breezes, and thy noonday shade.

From other hills, however fortune frowned,
Some refuge in the Muse's art I found;
Reluctant now I touch the trembling string,
Bereft of him who taught me how to sing;

And these sad accents, murmured o'er his urn,
Betray that absence they attempt to mourn.
O, must I then (now fresh my bosom bleeds,
And Craggs in death to Addison succeeds)
The verse, begun to one lost friend, prolong,
And weep a second in the unfinished song!

These works divine, which on his death-bed laid
To thee, O Craggs! the expiring sage conveyed,
Great, but ill-omened, monument of fame,
Nor he survived to give, nor thou to claim.
Swift after him thy social spirit flies,
And close to his, how soon! thy coffin lies.
Blest pair! whose union future bards shall tell
In future tongues: each other's boast! farewell!
Farewell! whom, joined in fame, in friendship tried,
No chance could sever, nor the grave divide.

THOMAS TICKELL.

THE POET'S FRIEND.

[LORD BOLINGBROKE.]

FROM "AN ESSAY ON MAN," EPISTLE IV.

COME then, my friend! my genius! come along;
O master of the poet, and the song!
And while the muse now stoops, or now ascends,
To man's low passions, or their glorious ends,
Teach me, like thee, in various nature wise,
To fall with dignity, with temper rise;
Formed by thy converse happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe;
Correct with spirit, eloquent with ease,
Intent to reason, or polite to please.
O, while along the stream of time thy name
Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame;
Say, shall my little bark attendant sail,
Pursue the triumph, and partake the gale?
When statesmen, heroes, kings, in dust repose,
Whose sons shall blush their fathers were thy foes,
Shall then this verse to future age pretend
Thou wert my guide, philosopher, and friend!
That, urged by thee, I turned the tuneful art
From sounds to things, from fancy to the heart:
For wit's false mirror held up Nature's light;
Showed erring pride, WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT.

ALEXANDER POPE.

NAPOLEON.

FROM "CHILDE HAROLD," CANTO III.

THERE sunk the greatest, nor the worst of men,
Whose spirit antithetically mixed
One moment of the mightiest, and again
On little objects with like firmness fixed,

Extreme in all things! hadst thou been betwixt,
Thy throne had still been thine, or never been ;
For daring made thy rise as fall : thou seek'st
Even now to reassume the imperial mien,
And shake again the world, the Thunderer of the scene !

Conqueror and captive of the earth art thou !
She trembles at thee still, and thy wild name
Was ne'er more bruited in men's minds than
now

That thou art nothing, save the jest of Fame,
Who wooed thee once, thy vassal, and became
The flatterer of thy fierceness, till thou wert
A god unto thyself : nor less the same
To the astounded kingdoms all inert,
Who deemed thee for a time whate'er thou didst assert.

O more or less than man — in high or low,
Battling with nations, flying from the field ;
Now making monarchs' necks thy footstool,
now

More than thy meanest soldier taught to yield :
An empire thou couldst crush, command, rebuild,

But govern not thy pettiest passion, nor
However deeply in men's spirits skilled,
Look through thine own, nor curb the lust of war,
Nor learn that tempted Fate will leave the loft-est star.

Yet well thy soul hath brooked the turning
tide

With that untaught innate philosophy,
Which, be it wisdom, coldness, or deep pride,
Is gall and wormwood to an enemy.
When the whole host of hatred stood hard by,
To watch and mock thee shrinking, thou hast
smiled

With a sedate and all-enduring eye, —
When Fortune fled her spoiled and favorite child,

He stood unbowed beneath the ills upon him piled.

Sager than in thy fortunes ; for in them
Ambition steeled thee on too far to show
That just habitual scorn which could contemn
Men and their thoughts ; 't was wise to feel,
not so

To wear it ever on thy lip and brow,
And spurn the instruments thou wert to use
Till they were turned unto thine overthrow ;
'T is but a worthless world to win or lose ;
So hath it proved to thee, and all such lot who choose.

If, like a tower upon a headlong rock,
Thou hadst been made to stand or fall alone,
Such scorn of man had helped to brave the shock ;

But men's thoughts were the steps which paved thy throne,

Their admiration thy best weapon shone ;
The part of Philip's son was thine, not then (Unless aside thy purple had been thrown)
Like stern Diogenes to mock at men ;

For sceptred cynics earth were far too wide a den.

But quiet to quick bosoms is a hell,
And there hath been thy vane ; there is a fire
And motion of the soul which will not dwell
In its own narrow being, but aspire
Beyond the fitting medium of desire ;
And, but once kindled, quenchless evermore,
Preys upon high adventure, nor can tire
Of aught but rest ; a fever at the core,
Fatal to him who bears, to all who ever bore.

This makes the madmen who have made men mad

By their contagion ! Conquerors and Kings,
Founders of sects and systems, to whom add
Sophists, Bards, Statesmen, all unquiet things
Which stir too strongly the soul's secret springs,
And are themselves the fools to those they
fool ;

Enviied, yet how unenviable ! what stings
Are theirs ! One breast laid open were a school
Which would unteach mankind the lust to shine or rule.

Their breath is agitation, and their life
A storm whereon they ride, to sink at last,
And yet so nursed and bigoted to strife,
That should their days, surviving perils past,
Melt to calm twilight, they feel overcast
With sorrow and supineness, and so die ;
Even as a flame, unfed, which runs to waste
With its own flickering, or a sword laid by,
Which eats into itself, and rusts ingloriously.

He who ascends to mountain-tops shall find
The loftiest peaks most wrapt in clouds and snow ;

He who surpasses or subdues mankind
Must look down on the hate of those below.
Though high above the sun of glory glow,
And far beneath the earth and ocean spread,
Round him are icy rocks, and loudly blow
Contending tempests on his naked head,
And thus reward the toils which to those summits led.

LORD BYRON.

POPULAR RECOLLECTIONS OF BONAPARTE.

A RENDERING OF BÉRANGER'S "SOUVENIRS DU PEUPLE."

THEY'll talk of him for years to come,
In cottage chronicle and tale ;
When, for aught else, renown is dumb,
His legend shall prevail !
When in the hamlet's honored chair
Shall sit some aged dame,
Teaching to lowly clown and villager
That narrative of fame.
" 'T is true," they'll say, " his gorgeous throne
France bled to raise ;
But he was all our own !"
" Mother, say something in his praise, —
O, speak of him always !"

" I saw him pass, — his was a host
Countless beyond your young imaginings, —
My children, he could boast
A train of conquered kings !
And when he came this road,
' T was on my bridal day,
He wore, for near to him I stood,
Cocked hat and surcoat gray.
I blushed ; he said, ' Be of good cheer !
Courage, my dear !'
That was his very word."
" Mother ! O, then, this really occurred,
And you his voice could hear."

" A year rolled on, when next at Paris I,
Lone woman that I am,
Saw him pass by,
Girt with his peers to kneel at Notre Dame,
I knew, by merry chime and signal gun,
God granted him a son,
And O, I wept for joy !
For why not weep when warrior men did,
Who gazed upon that sight so splendid,
And blessed the imperial boy ?
Never did noonday sun shine out so bright !
O, what a sight !"
" Mother, for you that must have been A glorious scene."

" But when all Europe's gathered strength
Burst o'er the French frontier at length,
' T will scarcely be believed
What wonders, single-handed, he achieved ;
Such general ne'er lived !
One evening on my threshold stood
A guest, — 't was he ! Of warriors few
He had a toil-worn retinue.
He flung himself into this chair of wood,

Muttering, meantime, with fearful air,
' Quelle guerre ! O, quelle guerre !"
" Mother ! and did our emperor sit there,
Upon that very chair ?"

" He said, ' Give me some food.'
Brown loaf I gave, and homely wine,
And made the kindling fire-blocks shine
To dry his cloak with wet bedewed.
Soon by the bonny blaze he slept,
Then waking chid me, — for I wept ;
' Courage !' he cried, ' I'll strike for all
Under the sacred wall
Of France's noble capital !'
Those were his words : I've treasured up
With pride that same wine-cup ;
And for its weight in gold
It never shall be sold !"
" Mother, on that proud relic let us gaze.
O, keep that cup always !"

" But through some fatal witchery
He, whom a pope had crowned and blest,
Perished, my sons, by foulest treachery,
Cast on an isle far in the lonely West !
Long time sad rumors were afloat, —
The fatal tidings we would spurn,
Still hoping from that isle remote
Once more our hero would return.
But when the dark announcement drew
Tears from the virtuous and the brave,
When the sad whisper proved too true,
A flood of grief I to his memory gave.
Peace to the glorious dead !"
" Mother, may God his fullest blessing shed Upon your aged head !"

FRANCIS MAHONY (Father Proud).

MURAT.

FROM "ODE FROM THE FRENCH."

THERE, where death's brief pang was quickest,
And the battle's wreck lay thickest,
Strewed beneath the advancing banner
Of the eagle's burning crest —
(There with thunder-clouds to fan her,
Who could then her wing arrest —
Victory beaming from her breast ?)
While the broken line enlarging
Fell, or fled along the plain : —
There be sure Murat was charging !
There he ne'er shall charge again !

ON A PORTRAIT OF WORDSWORTH,

BY R. B. HAYDON.

WORDSWORTH upon Helvellyn ! Let the cloud
 Ebb audibly along the mountain-wind,
 Then break against the rock, and show behind
 The lowland valleys floating up to crowd
 The sense with beauty. He, with forehead bowed
 And humble-lidded eyes, as one inclined
 Before the sovran thought of his own mind,
 And very meek with inspirations proud, —
 Takes here his rightful place as poet-priest
 By the high-altar, singing prayer and prayer
 To the higher Heavens. A noble vision free,
 Our Haydon's hand hath flung out from the mist !
 No portrait this, with Academic air, —
 This is the poet and his poetry.

BURNS.

A POET'S EPITAPH.

STOP, mortal ! Here thy brother lies, —
 The poet of the poor.
 His books were rivers, woods, and skies,
 The meadow and the moor ;
 His teachers were the torn heart's wail,
 The tyrant, and the slave,
 The street, the factory, the jail,
 The palace, — and the grave !
 Sin met thy brother everywhere !
 And is thy brother blamed ?
 From passion, danger, doubt, and care
 He no exemption claimed.
 The meanest thing, earth's feeblest worm,
 He feared to scorn or hate ;
 But, honoring in a peasant's form
 The equal of the great,
 He blessed the steward, whose wealth makes
 The poor man's little more ;
 Yet loathed the haughty wretch that takes
 From plundered labor's store.
 A hand to do, a head to plan,
 A heart to feel and dare, —
 Tell man's worst foes, here lies the man
 Who drew them as they are.

BURNS.

ON RECEIVING A SPRIG OF HEATHER IN BLOSSOM

No more these simple flowers belong
 To Scottish maid and lover ;
 Sown in the common soil of song,
 They bloom the wide world over.

In smiles and tears, in sun and showers,
 The minstrel and the heather,
 The deathless singer and the flowers
 He sang of live together.

Wild heather-bells and Robert Burns !
 The moorland flower and peasant !
 How, at their mention, memory turns
 Her pages old and pleasant !

The gray sky wears again its gold
 And purple of adorning,
 And manhood's noonday shadows hold
 The dews of boyhood's morning :

The dews that washed the dust and soil
 From off the wings of pleasure,
 The sky, that flecked the ground of toil
 With golden threads of leisure.

I call to mind the summer day,
 The early harvest mowing,
 The sky with sun and clouds at play,
 And flowers with breezes blowing.

I hear the blackbird in the corn,
 The locust in the haying ;
 And, like the fabled hunter's horn,
 Old tunes my heart is playing.

How oft that day, with fond delay,
 I sought the maple's shadow,
 And sang with Burns the hours away,
 Forgetful of the meadow !

Bees hummed, birds twittered, overhead
 I heard the squirrels leaping ;
 The good dog listened while I read,
 And wagged his tail in keeping.

I watched him while in sportive mood
 I read "The Twa Dogs'" story,
 And half believed he understood
 The poet's allegory.

Sweet day, sweet songs ! — The golden hours
 Grew brighter for that singing,
 From brook and bird and meadow flowers
 A dearer welcome bringing.

New light on home-seen Nature beamed,
New glory over Woman ;
And daily life and duty seemed
No longer poor and common.

I woke to find the simple truth
Of fact and feeling better
Than all the dreams that held my youth
A still repining debtor :

That Nature gives her handmaid, Art,
The themes of sweet discoursing ;
The tender idyls of the heart
In every tongue rehearsing.

Why dream of lands of gold and pearl,
Of loving knight and lady,
When farmer boy and barefoot girl
Were wandering there already ?

I saw through all familiar things
The romance underlying ;
The joys and griefs that plume the wings
Of Fancy skyward flying.

I saw the same blithe day return,
The same sweet fall of even,
That rose on wooded Craigie-burn,
And sank on crystal Devon.

I matched with Scotland's heathery hills
The sweet-brier and the clover ;
With Ayr and Doon, my native rills,
Their wood-hymns chanting over.

O'er rank and pomp, as he had seen,
I saw the Man uprising ;
No longer common or unclean,
The child of God's baptizing.

With clearer eyes I saw the worth
Of life among the lowly ;
The Bible at his Cotter's hearth
Had made my own more holy.

And if at times an evil strain,
To lawless love appealing,
Broke in upon the sweet refrain
Of pure and healthful feeling,

It died upon the eye and ear,
No inward answer gaining ;
No heart had I to see or hear
The discord and the staining.

Let those who never erred forget
His worth, in vain bewailings ;
Sweet Soul of Song ! — I own my debt
Uncancelled by his failings !

Lament who will the ribald line
Which tells his lapse from duty,
How kissed the maddening lips of wine,
Or wanton ones of beauty ;

But think, while falls that shade between
The erring one and Heaven,
That he who loved like Magdalen,
Like her may be forgiven.

Not his the song whose thunderous chime
Eternal echoes render, —
The mournful Tuscan's haunted rhyme,
And Milton's stary splendor ;

But who his human heart has laid
To Nature's bosom nearer ?
Who sweetened toil like him, or paid
To love a tribute dearer ?

Through all his tuneful art, how strong
The human feeling gushes !
The very moonlight of his song
Is warm with smiles and blushes !

Give lettered pomp to teeth of Time,
So "Bonny Doon" but tarry ;
Blot out the Epic's stately rhyme,
But spare his "Highland Mary" !

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

TO A ROSE BROUGHT FROM NEAR ALLOWAY KIRK, IN AYR-SHIRE, IN THE AUTUMN OF 1822.

WILD rose of Alloway ! my thanks :
Thou 'mind'st me of that autumn noon
When first we met upon "the banks
And braes o' bonny Doon."

Like thine, beneath the thorn-tree's bough,
My sunny hour was glad and brief ;
We've crossed the winter sea, and thou
Art withered — flower and leaf.

And will not thy death-doom be mine —
The doom of all things wrought of clay ?
And withered my life's leaf like thine,
Will rose of Alloway ?

Not so his memory for whose sake
My bosom bore thee far and long —
His, who a humbler flower could make Immortal as his song,

The memory of Burns — a name
That calls, when brimmed her festal cup,
A nation's glory and her shame,
In silent sadness up.

A nation's glory — be the rest
 Forgot — she 's canonized his mind,
 And it is joy to speak the best
 We may of humankind.

I've stood beside the cottage-bed
 Where the bard-peasant first drew breath ;
 A straw-thatched roof above his head,
 A straw-wrought couch beneath.

And I have stood beside the pile,
 His monument — that tells to Heaven
 The homage of earth's proudest isle
 To that bard-peasant given.

Bid thy thoughts hover o'er that spot,
 Boy-minstrel, in thy dreaming hour ;
 And know, however low his lot,
 A poet's pride and power ;

The pride that lifted Burns from earth,
 The power that gave a child of song
 Ascendency o'er rank and birth,
 The rich, the brave, the strong ;

And if despondency weigh down
 Thy spirit's fluttering pinions then,
 Despair — thy name is written on
 The roll of common men.

There have been loftier themes than his,
 And longer scrolls, and louder lyres,
 And lays lit up with Poesy's
 Purer and holier fires ;

Yet read the names that know not death ;
 Few nobler ones than Burns are there ;
 And few have won a greener wreath
 Than that which binds his hair.

His is that language of the heart
 In which the answering heart would speak,
 Thought, word, that bids the warm tear start,
 Or the smile light the cheek ;

And his that music to whose tone
 The common pulse of man keeps time,
 In cot or castle's mirth or moan,
 In cold or sunny clime.

And who hath heard his song, nor knelt
 Before its spell with willing knee,
 And listened and believed, and felt
 The poet's mastery

O'er the mind's sea, in calm and storm,
 O'er the heart's sunshine and its showers,
 O'er Passion's moments, bright and warm,
 O'er Reason's dark, cold hours ;

On fields where brave men "die or do,"
 In halls where rings the banquet's mirth,
 Where mourners weep, where lovers woo,
 From throne to cottage hearth ?

What sweet tears dim the eye unshed,
 What wild vows falter on the tongue,
 When "Scots' wha hae wi' Wallace bled,"
 Or "Auld Lang Syne," is sung !

Pure hopes, that lift the soul above,
 Come with his Cotter's hymn of praise,
 And dreams of youth, and truth, and love
 With "Logan's" banks and braes.

And when he breathes his master-lay
 Of Alloway's witch-haunted wall,
 All passions in our frames of clay
 Come thronging at his call.

Imagination's world of air,
 And our own world, its gloom and glee,
 Wit, pathos, poetry, are there,
 And death's sublimity.

And Burns — though brief the race he ran,
 Though rough and dark the path he trod —
 Lived, died, in form and soul a man,
 The image of his God.

Through care, and pain, and want, and woe,
 With wounds that only death could heal,
 Tortures the poor alone can know,
 The proud alone can feel ;

He kept his honesty and truth,
 His independent tongue and pen,
 And moved, in manhood as in youth,
 Pride of his fellow-men.

Strong sense, deep feeling, passions strong,
 A hate of tyrant and of knave,
 A love of right, a scorn of wrong,
 Of coward and of slave ;

A kind, true heart, a spirit high,
 That could not fear, and would not bow,
 Were written in his manly eye
 And on his manly brow.

Praise to the bard ! his words are driven,
 Like flower-seeds by the far winds sown,
 Where'er, beneath the sky of heaven,
 The birds of fame have flown.

Praise to the man ! a nation stood
 Beside his coffin with wet eyes,
 Her brave, her beautiful, her good,
 As when a loved one dies.

And still, as on his funeral-day,
Men stand his cold earth-couch around,
With the mute homage that we pay
To consecrated ground.

And consecrated ground it is,
The last, the hallowed home of one
Who lives upon all memories,
Though with the buried gone.

Such graves as his are pilgrim-shrines,
Shrines to no code or creed confined —
The Delphian vales, the Palestines,
The Meccas, of the mind.

Sages, with Wisdom's garland wreathed,
Crowned kings, and mitred priests of power,
And warriors with their bright swords sheathed,
The mightiest of the hour ;

And lowlier names, whose humble home
Is lit by Fortune's dimmer star,
Are there — o'er wave and mountain come,
From countries near and far ;

Pilgrims, whose wandering feet have pressed
The Switzer's snow, the Arab's sand,
Or trod the piled leaves of the West,
My own green forest-land.

All ask the cottage of his birth,
Gaze on the scenes he loved and sung,
And gather feelings not of earth
His fields and streams among.

They linger by the Doon's low trees,
And pastoral Nith, and wooded Ayr,
And round thy sepulchres, Dumfries !
The Poet's tomb is there.

But what to them the sculptor's art,
His funeral columns, wreaths, and urns ?
Wear they not graven on the heart
The name of Robert Burns ?

FITZ-GREENE HALLECK.

A BARD'S EPITAPH.

Is there a whim-inspired fool,
Owre fast for thought, owre hot for rule,
Owre blate * to seek, owre proud to snool ; †
Let him draw near,
And owre this grassy heap sing dool,
And drap a tear.

* bashful.

† tamely submit.

Is there a bard of rustic song,
Who, noteless, steals the crowd among,
That weekly this area throng ;
O, pass not by ;
But, with a frater-feeling strong,
Here heave a sigh !

Is there a man whose judgment clear
Can others teach the course to steer,
Yet runs himself life's mad career,
Wild as the wave ;
Here pause, and, through the starting tear,
Survey this grave.

The poor inhabitant below
Was quick to learn and wise to know,
And keenly felt the friendly glow,
And sober flame ;
But thoughtless follies laid him low,
And stained his name !

Reader, attend, — whether thy soul
Soars fancy's flights beyond the pole,
Or darkly grubs this earthly hole,
In low pursuit ;
Know, prudent, cautious self-control
Is wisdom's root.

ROBERT BURNS.

ELEGY ON CAPTAIN MATTHEW HENDERSON.

HE 's gane, he 's gane ! he 's frae us torn,
The ae best fellow e'er was born !
Thee, Matthew, Nature's sel' shall mourn
By wood and wild,
Where, haply, pity strays forlorn,
Frae man exiled.

Ye hills, near neebors o' the starns,
That proudly cock your cresting cairns !
Ye cliffs, the haunts of sailing yearns,*
Where echo slumbers !
Come join, ye Nature's sturdiest bairns,
My wailing numbers !

Mourn, ilka grove the cushat kens !
Ye hazelly shaws and briery dens !
Ye burnies, wimplin' down your glens,
Wi' toddlin' din.
Or foaming strang, wi' hasty dens,
Frae lin to lin !

Mourn, little harebells o'er the lea,
Ye stately foxgloves fair to see ;
Ye woodbines hanging bonnie

* eagles.

In scented bowers ;
Ye roses on your thorny tree,
The first o' flowers.

At dawn, when every grassy blade
Droops with a diamond at his head,
At even, when beans their fragrance shed,
I' the rustling gale,
Ye maukins whiddin through the glade,
Come join my wail.

Mourn, ye wee songsters o' the wood ;
Ye grouse that crap the heather bud ;
Ye curlews calling through a clud ;
Ye whistling plover ;
And mourn, ye whirring patrick brood ;
He's gane forever !

Mourn, sooty coots, and speckled teals,
Ye fisher herons, watching eels ;
Ye duck and drake, wi' airy wheels
Circling the lake ;
Ye bitterns, till the quagmire reels,
Rair for his sake.

Mourn, clamoring craiks at close o' day,
'Mang fields o' flowering clover gay ;
And when ye wing your annual way
Frae our cauld shore,
Tell thae far warlds wha lies in clay,
Wham we deplore.

Ye houlets, frae your ivy bower,
In some auld tree, or eldritch tower,
What time the moon, wi' silent glower,
Sets up her horn,
Wail thro' the dreary midnight hour
Till wankrife morn.

O rivers, forests, hills and plains !
Oft have ye heard my canty strains :
But now, what else for me remains
But tales of wo ?
And frae my een the drapping rains
Maun ever flow.

Mourn, Spring, thou darling of the year !
Ilk cowslip cup shall keep a tear :
Thou, Simmer, while each corny spear
Shoots up its head,
Thy gay, green flowery tresses shear,
For him that 's dead !

Thou, Autumn, wi' thy yellow hair,
In grief thy fallow mantle tear !
Thou, Winter, hurling through the air
The roaring blast,
Wide o'er the naked world declare
The worth we've lost.

Mourn him, thou sun, great source of light !
Mourn, empress of the silent night !
And you, ye twinkling starnies bright,
My Matthew mourn !
For thro' your orbs he's ta'en his flight,
Ne'er to return.

O Henderson, the man ! the brother !
And art thou gone, and gone forever !
And hast thou crost that unknown river,
Life's dreary bound !
Like thee where shall I find another,
The world around !

Go to your sculptured tombs, ye great,
In a' the tinsel trash o' state !
But by thy honest turf I'll wait,
Thou man of worth !
And weep the ae best fellow's fate
E'er lay in earth.

ROBERT BURNS.

BYRON.

FROM "THE COURSE OF TIME," BOOK IV.

TAKE one example — to our purpose quite.
A man of rank, and of capacious soul,
Who riches had, and fame, beyond desire,
An heir of flattery, to titles born,
And reputation, and luxurious life :
Yet, not content with ancestral name,
Or to be known because his fathers were,
He on this height hereditary stood,
And, gazing higher, purposed in his heart
To take another step. Above him seemed,
Alone, the mount of song, the lofty seat
Of canonizèd bards ; and thitherward,
By nature taught, and inward melody,
In prime of youth, he bent his eagle eye.
No cost was spared. What books he wished, he read ;
What sage to hear, he heard ; what scenes to see,
He saw. And first, in rambling school-boy days,
Britannia's mountain-walks, and heath-girt lakes,
And story-telling glens, and founts, and brooks,
And maids, as dew-drops pure and fair, his soul
With grandeur filled, and melody, and love.
Then travel came, and took him where he wished :
He cities saw, and courts, and princely pomp ;
And mused alone on ancient mountain-brows ;
And mused on battle-fields, where valor fought
In other days ; and mused on ruins gray
With years ; and drank from old and fabulous wells,
And plucked the vine that first-born prophets plucked ;

And mused on famous tombs, and on the wave
Of ocean mused, and on the desert waste ;
The heavens and earth of every country saw :
Where'er the old inspiring Genii dwelt,
Aught that could rouse, expand, refine the soul,
Thither he went, and meditated there.

He touched his harp, and nations heard entranced.

As some vast river of unfailling source,
Rapid, exhaustless, deep, his numbers flowed,
And opened new fountains in the human heart.
Where Fancy halted, weary in her flight,
In other men, his fresh as morning rose,
And soared untrodden heights, and seemed at home,

Where angels bashful looked. Others, though great,
Beneath their argument seemed struggling ;
whiles

He, from above descending, stooped to touch
The loftiest thought ; and proudly stooped, as though

It scarce deserved his verse. With Nature's self
He seemed an old acquaintance, free to jest
At will with all her glorious majesty.

He laid his hand upon " the Ocean's mane,"
And played familiar with his hoary locks ;
Stood on the Alps, stood on the Apennines,
And with the thunder talked as friend to friend ;
And wove his garland of the lightning's wing,
In sportive twist, — the lightning's fiery wing,
Which, as the footsteps of the dreadful God,
Marching upon the storm in vengeance, seemed ;
Then turned, and with the grasshopper, who sung

His evening song beneath his feet, conversed.
Suns, moons, and stars, and clouds his sisters were ;

Rocks, mountains, meteors, seas, and winds, and storms

His brothers, younger brothers, whom he scarce
As equals deemed. All passions of all men,
The wild and tame, the gentle and severe ;
All thoughts, all maxims, sacred and profane ;
All creeds ; all seasons, time, eternity ;
All that was hated, and all that was dear ;
All that was hoped, all that was feared, by man, —
He tossed about, as tempest-withered leaves ;
Then, smiling, looked upon the wreck he made.
With terror now he froze the cowering blood,
And now dissolved the heart in tenderness ;
Yet would not tremble, would not weep himself ;
But back into his soul retired, alone,
Dark, sullen, proud, gazing contemptuously
On hearts and passions prostrate at his feet.
So Ocean, from the plains his waves had late
To desolation swept, retired in pride,

Exulting in the glory of his might,
And seemed to mock the ruin he had wrought.

As some fierce comet of tremendous size,
To which the stars did reverence as it passed,
So he, through learning and through fancy, took
His flight sublime, and on the loftiest top
Of Fame's dread mountain sat ; not soiled and worn,

As if he from the earth had labored up,
But as some bird of heavenly plumage fair
He looked, which down from higher regions came,
And perched it there, to see what lay beneath.

The nations gazed, and wondered much and praised.

Critics before him fell in humble plight ;
Confounded fell ; and made debasing signs
To catch his eye ; and stretched and swelled themselves

To bursting nigh, to utter bulky words
Of admiration vast ; and many too,
Many that aimed to imitate his flight,
With weaker wing, unearthly fluttering made,
And gave abundant sport to after days.

Great man ! the nations gazed and wondered much,

And praised ; and many called his evil good.

Wits wrote in favor of his wickedness ;
And kings to do him honor took delight.
Thus full of titles, flattery, honor, fame ;
Beyond desire, beyond ambition, full, —
He died, — he died of what ? Of wretchedness ;
Drank every cup of joy, heard every trump
Of fame ; drank early, deeply drank ; drank draughts

That common millions might have quenched, — then died

Of thirst, because there was no more to drink.
His goddess, Nature, wooed, embraced, enjoyed,
Fell from his arms, abhorred ; his passions died ;
Died, all but dreary, solitary Pride ;
And all his sympathies in being died.

As some ill-guided bark, well built and tall,
Which angry tides cast out on desert shore,
And then, retiring, left it there to rot
And moulder in the winds and rains of heaven ;
So he, cut from the sympathies of life,
And cast ashore from pleasure's boisterous surge,
A wandering, weary, worn, and wretched thing,
A scorched and desolate and blasted soul,
A gloomy wilderness of dying thought, —
Repined, and groaned, and withered from the earth.

His groanings filled the land his numbers filled ;
And yet he seemed ashamed to groan. — Poor man !

Ashamed to ask, and yet he needed help.

ROBERT POLLOK.

TO CAMPBELL.

TRUE bard and simple, — as the race
Of heaven-born poets always are,
When stooping from their starry place
They 're children near, though gods afar.

THOMAS MOORE.

CAMP-BELL.

CHARADE.

COME from my first, ay, come !
The battle-dawn is nigh ;
And the screaming trump and the thundering drum
Are calling thee to die !

Fight as thy father fought ;
Fall as thy father fell ;
Thy task is taught ; thy shroud is wrought ;
So forward and farewell !

Toll ye my second, toll !
Fling high the flambeau's light,
And sing the hymn for a parted soul
Beneath the silent night !

The wreath upon his head,
The cross upon his breast,
Let the prayer be said and the tear be shed,
So, — take him to his rest !

Call ye my whole, — ay, call
The lord of lute and lay ;
And let him greet the sable pall
With a noble song to-day.

Go, call him by his name !
No fitter hand may crave
To light the flame of a soldier's fame
On the turf of a soldier's grave.

WINTHROP MACKWORTH PRAED.

TO THOMAS MOORE.

MY boat is on the shore,
And my bark is on the sea ;
But before I go, Tom Moore,
Here 's a double health to thee !

Here 's a sigh to those who love me,
And a smile to those who hate ;
And, whatever sky 's above me,
Here 's a heart for every fate !

Though the ocean roar around me,
Yet it still shall bear me on ;
Though a desert should surround me,
It hath springs that may be won.

Were 't the last drop in the well,
As I gasped upon the brink,
Ere my fainting spirit fell,
'T is to thee that I would drink.

With that water, as this wine,
The libation I would pour
Should be, — Peace with thine and mine,
And a health to thee, Tom Moore !

LORD BYRON.

BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE.

NOT a drum was heard, not a funeral note,
As his corse to the rampart we hurried ;
Not a soldier discharged his farewell shot
O'er the grave where our hero we buried.

We buried him darkly, at dead of night,
The sods with our bayonets turning ;
By the struggling moonbeams' misty light,
And the lantern dimly burning.

No useless coffin enclosed his breast,
Not in sheet or in shroud we wound him ;
But he lay, like a warrior taking his rest,
With his martial cloak around him.

Few and short were the prayers we said,
And we spoke not a word of sorrow ;
But we steadfastly gazed on the face of the dead,
And we bitterly thought of the morrow.

We thought, as we hollowed his narrow bed,
And smoothed down his lonely pillow,
That the foe and the stranger would tread o'er his head,
And we far away on the billow !

Lightly they 'll talk of the spirit that 's gone,
And o'er his cold ashes upbraid him ;
But little he 'll reek, if they let him sleep on
In the grave where a Briton has laid him !

But half of our heavy task was done,
When the clock struck the hour for retiring ;
And we heard the distant and random gun
That the foe was suddenly firing.

Slowly and sadly we laid him down,
From the field of his fame fresh and gory !
We carved not a line, and we raised not a stone,
But we left him alone with his glory.

CHARLES WOLFE.

EMMET'S EPITAPH.

[Robert Emmet, the celebrated Irish Revolutionist, at his trial for high treason, which resulted in his conviction and execution, September 20, 1803, made an eloquent and pathetic defence, concluding with these words: "Let there be no inscription upon my tomb. Let no man write my epitaph. Let my character and my motives repose in security and peace till other times and other men can do them justice. Then shall my character be vindicated; then may my epitaph be written. I have done." It was immediately upon reading this speech that the following lines were written.]

"LET no man write my epitaph; let my grave
Be uninscribed, and let my memory rest
Till other times are come, and other men,
Who then may do me justice."

Emmet, no!

No withering curse hath dried my spirit up,
That I should now be silent, — that my soul
Should from the stirring inspiration shrink,
Now when it shakes her, and withhold her voice,
Of that divinest impulse nevermore
Worthy, if impious I withheld it now,
Hardening my heart. Here, here in this free Isle,
To which in thy young virtue's erring zeal
Thou wert so perilous an enemy,
Here in free England shall an English hand
Build thy imperishable monument;
O, to thine own misfortune and to ours,
By thine own deadly error so beguiled,
Here in free England shall an English voice
Raise up thy mourning-song. For thou hast paid
The bitter penalty of that misdeed;
Justice hath done her unrelenting part,
If she in truth be Justice who drives on,
Bloudy and blind, the chariot-wheels of death.

So young, so glowing for the general good,
O, what a lovely manhood had been thine,
When all the violent workings of thy youth
Had passed away, hadst thou been wisely spared,
Left to the slow and certain influences
Of silent feeling and maturing thought!
How had that heart, — that noble heart of thine,
Which even now had snapped one spell, which beat

With such brave indignation at the shame
And guilt of France, and of her miscreant lord, —
How had it clung to England! With what love,
What pure and perfect love, returned to her,
Now worthy of thy love, the champion now
For freedom, — yea, the only champion now,
And soon to be the avenger. But the blow
Hath fallen, the indiscriminating blow,
That for its portion to the grave consigned
Youth, Genius, generous Virtue. O, grief, grief!
O, sorrow and reproach! Have ye to learn,
Deaf to the past, and to the future blind,
Ye who thus irremissibly exact
The forfeit life, how lightly life is staked,
When in distempered times the feverish mind

To strong delusion yields? Have ye to learn
With what a deep and spirit-stirring voice
Pity doth call Revenge? Have ye no hearts
To feel and understand how Mercy tames
The rebel nature, maddened by old wrongs,
And binds it in the gentle bands of love,
When steel and adamant were weak to hold
That Samson-strength subdued!

Let no man write

Thy epitaph! Emmet, nay; thou shalt not go Without thy funeral strain! O young and good,
And wise, though erring here, thou shalt not go Unhonored or unsung. And better thus Beneath that indiscriminating stroke,
Better to fall, than to have lived to mourn,
As sure thou wouldst, in misery and remorse,
Thine own disastrous triumph; to have seen,
If the Almighty at that awful hour
Had turned away his face, wild Ignorance
Let loose, and frantic Vengeance, and dark zeal,
And all bad passions tyrannous, and the fires
Of Persecution once again ablaze.
How had it sunk into thy soul to see,
Last curse of all, the ruffian slaves of France
In thy dear native country lording it!
How happier thus, in that heroic mood
That takes away the sting of death, to die,
By all the good and all the wise forgiven!
Yea, in all ages by the wise and good
To be remembered, mourned, and honored still!

ROBERT SOUTHEY.

O, BREATHE NOT HIS NAME!

ROBERT EMMET.

O, BREATHE not his name! let it sleep in the shade,
Where cold and unhonored his relics are laid;
Sad, silent, and dark be the tears that we shed,
As the night-dew that falls on the grave o'er his head.

But the night-dew that falls, though in silence
it weeps,
Shall brighten with verdure the grave where he sleeps;
And the tear that we shed, though in secret it
rolls,
Shall long keep his memory green in our souls.

THOMAS MOORE.

TO TOUSSAINT L'OUVERTURE.

TOUSSAINT! the most unhappy man of men!
Whether the whistling rustic tend his plough
Within thy hearing, or thy head be now
Pillowed in some deep dungeon's earless den,

O miserable chieftain ! where and when Wilt thou find patience ? Yet die not ; do thou

Wear rather in thy bonds a cheerful brow :
Though fallen thyself, never to rise again,
Live and take comfort. Thou hast left behind Powers that will work for thee ; air, earth, and skies :

There's not a breathing of the common wind
That will forget thee ; thou hast great allies ;
Thy friends are exultations, agonies,
And love, and man's unconquerable mind.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

DEATH-BED OF BOMBA, KING OF NAPLES,

AT BARI, 1859.

COULD I pass those lounging sentries, through the aloe-bordered entries, up the sweep of squalid stair,

On through chamber after chamber, where the sunshine's gold and amber turn decay to beauty rare,

I should reach a guarded portal, where for strife of issue mortal, face to face two kings are met :

One the grisly King of Terrors ; one a Bourbon, with his errors, late to conscience-clearing set.

Well his fevered pulse may flutter, and the priests their mass may mutter with such fervor as they may :

Cross and chrism, and genuflection, mop and mow, and interjection, will not frighten
Death away.

By the dying despot sitting, at the hard heart's portals hitting, shocking the dull brain to work,

Death makes clear what life has hidden, chides what life has left unhidden, quickens truth life tried to burke.

He but ruled within his borders after Holy Church's orders, did what Austria bade him do ;

By their guidance flogged and tortured ; high-born men and gently nurtured chained with crime's felonious crew.

What if summer fevers gripped them, what if winter freezings nipped them, till they rotted in their chains ?

He had word of Pope and Kaiser ; none could holier be or wiser ; theirs the counsel, his the reins.

So he pleads excuses eager, clutching, with his fingers meagre, at the bedclothes as he speaks ;

But King Death sits grimly grinning at the Bourbon's cobweb-spinning, — as each cobweb-cable breaks.

And the poor soul, from life's eyot, rudderless, without a pilot, drifteth slowly down the dark ;

While mid rolling incense vapor, chanted dirge, and flaring taper, lies the body, stiff and stark.

PUNCH.

TO THE MEMORY OF THOMAS HOOD.

TAKE back into thy bosom, earth,

This joyous, May-eyed morrow,

The gentlest child that ever mirth

Gave to be reared by sorrow !

'T is hard — while rays half green, half gold,

Through vernal bowers are burning,

And streams their diamond mirrors hold

To Summer's face returning —

To say we're thankful that his sleep

Shall nevermore be lighter,

In whose sweet-tongued companionship

Stream, bower, and beam grow brighter !

But all the more intensely true

His soul gave out each feature

Of elemental love, — each hue

And grace of golden nature, —

The deeper still beneath it all

Lurked the keen jags of anguish ;

The more the laurels clasped his brow

Their poison made it languish.

Seemed it that, like the nightingale

Of his own mournful singing,

The tenderer would his song prevail

While most the thorn was stinging.

So never to the desert-worn

Did fount bring freshness deeper

Than that his placid rest this morn

Has brought the shrouded sleeper.

That rest may lap his weary head

Where charnels choke the city,

Or where, mid woodlands, by his bed

The wren shall wake its ditty ;

But near or far, while evening's star

Is dear to hearts regretting,

Around that spot admiring thought

Shall hover, unforgetting.

A VOICE, AND NOTHING ELSE.

"I WONDER if Brougham thinks as much as he talks,"

Said a punster, perusing a trial :

"I vow, since his lordship was made Baron Vaux,

He 's been Vaux et præterea nihil!"

MACAULAY.

THE dreamy rhymers' measured snore
Falls heavy on our ears no more ;
And by long strides are left behind
The dear delights of womankind,
Who wage their battles like their loves,
In satin waistcoats and kid gloves,
And have achieved the crowning work
When they have trussed and skewered a Turk.
Another comes with stouter tread,
And stalks among the statelier dead.
He rushes on, and hails by turns
High-crested Scott, broad-breasted Burns ;
And shows the British youth, who ne'er
Will lag behind, what Romans were,
When all the Tuscans and their Lars
Shouted, and shook the towers of Mars.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

SONNETS TO GEORGE SAND.

A DESIRE.

THOU large-brained woman and large-hearted man,
Self-called George Sand ! whose soul amid the lions

Of thy tumultuous senses, moans defiance,
And answers roar for roar, as spirits can,
I would some mild miraculous thunder ran
Above the applauded circus, in appliance
Of thine own nobler nature's strength and science,

Drawing two pinions, white as wings of swan,
From thy strong shoulders, to amaze the place
With holier light ! that thou to woman's claim,
And man's, might join beside the angel's grace
Of a pure genius sanctified from blame ;
Till child and maiden pressed to thine embrace,
To kiss upon thy lips a stainless fame.

A RECOGNITION.

TRUE genius, but true woman ! dost deny
Thy woman's nature with a manly scorn,
And break away the gauds and armlets worn
By weaker women in captivity ?

Ah, vain denial ! that revolted cry
Is sobbed in by a woman's voice forlorn ;
Thy woman's hair, my sister, all unshorn,
Floats back dishevelled strength in agony,
Disproving thy man's name ; and while before
The world thou burnest in a poet-fire,
We see thy woman-heart beat evermore
Through the large flame. Beat purer, heart, and higher,
Till God unsex thee on the heavenly shore,
Where unincarnate spirits purely aspire.

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

HEINE'S GRAVE.

"HENRI HEINE" — 't is here !
The black tombstone, the name
Carved there — no more ! and the smooth,
Swarded alleys, the limes
Touched with yellow by hot Summer, but under them still
In September's bright afternoon
Shadow and verdure and cool !
Trim Montmartre ! the faint
Murmur of Paris outside ;
Crisp everlasting-flowers,
Yellow and black on the graves.

Half blind, palsied, in pain,
Hither to come, from the streets'
Up roar, surely not loath
Wast thou, Heine, — to lie
Quiet ! to ask for closed
Shutters, and darkened room,
And cool drinks, and an eased
Posture, and opium, no more !
Hither to come, and to sleep
Under the wings of Renown.

Ah ! not little, when pain
Is most quelling, and man
Easily quelled, and the fine
Temper of genius alive
Quickest to ill, is the praise
Not to have yielded to pain !
No small boast for a weak
Son of mankind, to the earth
Pinned by the thunder, to rear
His bolt-scathed front to the stars,
And, undaunted, retort
'Gainst thick-crashing, insane,
Tyrannous tempests of bale,
Arrowy lightnings of soul !

Hark ! through the alley resounds
Mocking laughter ! A film
Creeps o'er the sunshine ; a breeze
Ruffles the warm afternoon,

Saddens my soul with its chill.
 Gibing of spirits in scorn
 Shakes every leaf of the grove,
 Mars the benignant repose
 Of this amiable home of the dead.
 Bitter spirits ! ye claim
 Heine ? — Alas, he is yours !
 Only a moment I longed
 Here in the quiet to snatch
 From such mates the outworn
 Poet, and steep him in calm.
 Only a moment ! I knew
 Whose he was who is here
 Buried ; I knew he was yours !
 Ah, I knew that I saw
 Here no sepulchre built
 In the laurelled rock, o'er the blue
 Naples bay, for a sweet
 Tender Virgil ! no tomb
 On Ravenna sands, in the shade
 Of Ravenna pines, for a high
 Austere Dante ! no grave
 By the Avon side, in the bright
 Stratford meadows, for thee,
 Shakespeare ! loveliest of souls,
 Peerless in radiance, in joy.

What so harsh and malign,
 Heine ! distils from thy life,
 Poisons the peace of thy grave ?

Charm is the glory which makes
 Song of the poet divine ;
 Love is the fountain of charm.
 How without charm wilt thou draw,
 Poet, the world to thy way ?
 Not by the lightnings of wit,
 Not by the thunder of scorn !
 These to the world, too, are given ;
 Wit it possesses, and scorn, —
 Charm is the poet's alone.
*Hollow and dull are the great,
 And artists envious, and the mob profane.*
 We know all this, we know !
 Cam'st thou from heaven, O child
 Of light ! but this to declare ?
 Alas ! to help us forget
 Such barren knowledge awhile,
 God gave the poet his song.
 Therefore a secret unrest
 Tortured thee, brilliant and bold !
 Therefore triumph itself
 Tasted amiss to thy soul.
 Therefore, with blood of thy foes,
 Trickled in silence thine own.
 Therefore the victor's heart
 Broke on the field of his fame.

Ah ! as of old from the pomp
 Of Italian Milan, the fair
 Flower of marble of white
 Southern palaces, — steps
 Bordered by statues, and walks
 Terraced, and orange bowers
 Heavy with fragrance, — the blond
 German Kaiser full oft
 Longed himself back to the fields,
 Rivers, and high-roofed towns
 Of his native Germany ; so,
 So, how often ! from hot
 Paris drawing-rooms, and lamps
 Blazing, and brilliant crowds,
 Starred and jewelled, of men
 Famous, of women the queens
 Of dazzling converse, and fumes
 Of praise, — hot, heady fumes, to the poor brain
 That mount, that madden ! — how oft
 Heine's spirit, outworn,
 Longed itself out of the din
 Back to the tranquil, the cool,
 Far German home of his youth !
 See ! in the May afternoon,
 O'er the fresh short turf of the Hartz,
 A youth, with the foot of youth,
 Heine ! thou climbest again.
 Up, through the tall dark firs
 Warming their heads in the sun,
 Checkering the grass with their shade,
 Up, by the stream with its huge
 Moss-hung bowlders and thin
 Musical water half-hid,
 Up o'er the rock-strewn slope,
 With the sinking sun, and the air
 Chill, and the shadows now
 Long on the gray hillside,
 To the stone-roofed hut at the top.

Or, yet later, in watch
 On the roof of the Brocken tower
 Thou standest, gazing ! to see
 The broad red sun, over field,
 Forest and city and spire
 And mist-tracked stream of the wide,
 Wide German land, going down
 In a bank of vapors, — again
 Standest ! at nightfall, alone ;
 Or, next morning, with limbs
 Rested by slumber, and heart
 Freshened and light with the May,
 O'er the gracious spurs coming down
 Of the lower Hartz, among oaks,
 And beechen coverts, and copse
 Of hazels green in whose depth
 Ilse, the fairy transformed,
 In a thousand water-breaks light

Pours her petulant youth, —
Climbing the rock which juts
O'er the valley, the dizzily perched
Rock ! to its Iron Cross
Once more thou cling'st ; to the Cross
Clingest ! with smiles, with a sigh.

But something prompts me : Not thus Take leave of Heine, not thus Speak the last word at his grave !
Not in pity, and not
With half-censure, — with awe
Hail, as it passes from earth,
Scattering lightnings, that soul !

The spirit of the world,
Beholding the absurdity of men, —
Their vanunts, their feats, — let a sardonic smile
For one short moment wander o'er his lips.
That smile was Heine ! for its earthly hour
The strange guest sparkled ; now 't is passed away.

That was Heine ! and we,
Myriads who live, who have lived,
What are we all, but a mood,
A single mood, of the life
Of the Being in whom we exist,
Who alone is all things in one.
Spirit, who fillest us all !
Spirit, who utterest in each
New-coming son of mankind
Such of thy thoughts as thou wilt !
O thou, one of whose moods,
Bitter and strange, was the life
Of Heine, — his strange, alas !
His bitter life, — may a life
Other and milder be mine !
Mayst thou a mood more serene,
Happier, have uttered in mine !
Mayst thou the rapture of peace
Deep have embreathed at its core !
Made it a ray of thy thought,
Made it a beat of thy joy !

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

A WELCOME TO "BOZ."

ON HIS FIRST VISIT TO THE WEST

COME as artist, come as guest,
Welcome to the expectant West,
Hero of the charmed pen,
Loved of children, loved of men.
We have felt thy spell for years ;
Oft with laughter, oft with tears,
Thou hast touched the tenderest part
Of our inmost, hidden heart.
We have fixed our eager gaze
On thy pages nights and days,

Wishing, as we turned them o'er,
Like poor Oliver, for "more,"
And the creatures of thy brain
In our memory remain,
Till through them we seem to be
Old acquaintances of thee.
Much we hold it thee to greet,
Gladly sit we at thy feet ;
On thy features we would look,
As upon a living book,
And thy voice would grateful hear,
Glad to feel that Boz were near,
That his veritable soul
Held us by direct control :
Therefore, author loved the best.
Welcome, welcome to the West.

In immortal Weller's name,
By the rare Micawber's fame,
By the flogging wreaked on Squeers,
By Job Trotter's fluent tears,
By the beadle Bumble's fate
At the hands of shrewish mate,
By the famous Pickwick Club,
By the dream of Gabriel Grubb,
In the name of Snodgrass' muse,
Tupman's amorous interviews,
Winkle's ludicrous mishaps,
And the fat boy's countless naps ;
By Ben Allen and Bob Sawyer,
By Miss Sally Brass, the lawyer,
In the name of Newman Noggs,
River Thames, and London fogs,
Richard Swiveller's excess,
Feasting with the Marchioness,
By Jack Bunsby's oracles,
By the chime of Christmas bells,
By the cricket on the hearth,
By the sound of childish mirth,
By spread tables and good cheer,
Wayside inns and pots of beer,
Hostess plump and jolly host,
Coaches for the turnpike post,
Chambermaid in love with Boots,
Toodles, Traddles, Tapley, Toots,
Betsey Trotwood, Mister Dick,
Susan Nipper, Mistress Chick,
Snevellicci, Lilyvick,
Mantolini's predilections
To transfer his warm affections,
By poor Barnaby and Grip,
Flora, Dora, Di, and Gip,
Perrybingle, Pinch, and Pip, —
Welcome, long-expected guest,
Welcome to the grateful West.

In the name of gentle Nell,
Child of light, beloved well, —

Weeping, did we not behold
 Roses on her bosom cold?
 Better we for every tear
 Shed beside her snowy bier,—
 By the mournful group that played
 Round the grave where Sniike was laid.
 By the life of Tiny Tim,
 And the lesson taught by him,
 Asking in his plaintive tone
 God to "bless us every one,"
 By the sounding waves that bore
 Little Paul to Heaven's shore,
 By thy yearning for the human
 Good in every man and woman,
 By each noble deed and word
 That thy story-books record,
 And each noble sentiment
 Dickens to the world hath lent,
 By the effort thou hast made
 Truth and true reform to aid,
 By thy hope of man's relief
 Finally from want and grief,
 By thy never-failing trust
 That the God of love is just,—
 We would meet and welcome thee,
 Preacher of humanity:
 Welcome fills the throbbing breast
 Of the sympathetic West.

W. H. VENABLE.

DICKENS IN CAMP.

ABOVE the pines the moon was slowly drifting,
 The river sang below;
 The dim Sierras, far beyond, uplifting
 Their minarets of snow.

The roaring camp-fire, with rude humor, painted
 The ruddy tints of health
 On haggard face and form that drooped and fainted
 In the fierce race for wealth;

Till one arose, and from his pack's scant treasure
 A hoarded volume drew,
 And cards were dropped from hands of listless leisure,
 To hear the tale anew;

And then, while round them shadows gathered faster,
 And as the firelight fell,
 He read aloud the book wherein the Master
 Had writ of "Little Nell."

Perhaps 't was boyish fancy,—for the reader
 Was youngest of them all,—
 But, as he read, from clustering pine and cedar
 A silence seemed to fall:

The fir-trees, gathering closer in the shadows,
 Listened in every spray,
 While the whole camp, with "Nell," on English meadows
 Wandered and lost their way.

And so in mountain solitudes—o'er-taken
 As by some spell divine—
 Their cares dropped from them like the needles shaken
 From out the gusty pine.

Lost is that camp, and wasted all its fire;
 And he who wrought that spell?—
 Ah, towering pine and stately Kentish spire,
 Ye have one tale to tell!

Lost is that camp! but let its fragrant story
 Blend with the breath that thrills
 With hop-vines' incense all the pensive glory
 That fills the Kentish hills.

And on that grave where English oak and holly
 And laurel wreaths intwine,
 Deem it not all a too presumptuous folly,—
 This spray of Western pine.

BRET HARTE.

TO VICTOR HUGO.

VICTOR in poesy! Victor in romance!
 Cloud-weaver of phantasmal hopes and fears!
 French of the French and lord of human tears!
 Child-lover, bard, whose fame-lit laurels glance,
 Darkening the wreaths of all that would advance
 Beyond our strait their claim to be thy peers!
 Weird Titan, by thy wintry weight of years
 As yet unbroken! Stormy voice of France,
 Who does not love our England, so they say;
 I know not! England, France, all men to be,
 Will make one people, ere man's race be run;
 And I, desiring that diviner day,
 Yield thee full thanks for thy full courtesy
 To younger England in the boy, my son.

ALFRED TENNYSON.

DANIEL BOONE.

FROM "DON JUAN."

OF all men, saving Sylla the man-slayer,
 Who passes for in life and death most lucky,
 Of the great names which in our faces stare,
 The General Boone, backwoodsman of Kentucky,

Was happiest amongst mortals anywhere ;
 For, killing nothing but a bear or buck, he Enjoyed the lonely, vigorous, harmless days
 Of his old age in wilds of deepest maze.

Crime came not near him, she is not the child
 Of solitude ; Health shrank not from him, for
 Her home is in the rarely trodden wild,
 Where if men seek her not, and death be more
 Their choice than life, forgive them, as beguiled
 By habit to what their own hearts abhor,
 In cities caged. The present case in point I
 Cite is, that Boone lived hunting up to ninety ;

And, what's still stranger, left behind a name
 For which men vainly decimate the throng,
 Not only famous, but of that good fame,
 Without which glory's but a tavern song, —
 Simple, serene, the antipodes of shame,
 Which hate nor envy e'er could tinge with
 wrong ;
 An active hermit, even in age the child
 Of nature, or the Man of Ross run wild.

'T is true he shrank from men, even of his nation ;
 When they built up unto his darling trees,
 He moved some hundred miles off, for a station
 Where there were fewer houses and more ease ;
 The inconvenience of civilization
 Is that you neither can be pleased nor please ;
 But where he met the individual man,
 He showed himself as kind as mortal can.

He was not all alone ; around him grew
 A sylvan tribe of children of the chase,
 Whose young, unawakened world was ever new ;
 Nor sword nor sorrow yet had left a trace
 On her unwrinkled brow, nor could you view
 A frown on nature's or on human face :
 The freeborn forest found and kept them free,
 And fresh as is a torrent or a tree.

And tall, and strong, and swift of foot, were they,
 Beyond the dwarfing city's pale abortions,
 Because their thoughts had never been the prey
 Of care or gain : the green woods were their portions ;
 No sinking spirits told them they grew gray ;
 No fashion made them apes of her distortions ;
 Simple they were, not savage ; and their rifles,
 Though very true, were not yet used for trifles.

Motion was in their days, rest in their slumbers,
 And cheerfulness the handmaid of their toil ;
 Nor yet too many nor too few their numbers ;
 Corruption could not make their hearts her soil.

The lust which stings, the splendor which en-cumbers,

With the free foresters divide no spoil :
 Serene, not sullen, were the solitudes
 Of this unsighing people of the woods.

LORD BYRON.

WASHINGTON.

FROM "UNDER THE ELM," READ AT CAMBRIDGE, JULY 3, 1875, ON THE HUNDRETH ANNIVERSARY OF WASHING-TON'S TAKING COMMAND OF THE AMERICAN ARMY.

BENEATH our consecrated elm
 A century ago he stood,
 Famed vaguely for that old fight in the wood,
 Which redly foamed round him but could not overwhelm
 The life foredoomed to wield our rough-hewn helm.

From colleges, where now the gown
 To arms had yielded, from the town,
 Our rude self-summoned levies flocked to see
 The new-come chiefs and wonder which was he.
 No need to question long ; close-lipped and tall,
 Long trained in murder-brooding forests lone
 To bridle others' clamors and his own,
 Firmly erect, he towered above them all,
 The incarnate discipline that was to free
 With iron curb that armed democracy.

Haughty they said he was, at first, severe,
 But owned, as all men owned, the steady hand
 Upon the bridle, patient to command,
 Prized, as all prize, the justice pure from fear,
 And learned to honor first, then love him, then revere.

Such power there is in clear-eyed self-restraint,
 And purpose clean as light from every selfish taint.

Musing beneath the legendary tree,
 The years between furl off : I seem to see
 The sun-flecks, shaken the stirred foliage through,
 Dapple with gold his sober buff and blue,
 And weave prophetic aureoles round the head
 That shines our beacon now, nor darkens with
 the dead.

O man of silent mood,
 A stranger among strangers then,
 How art thou since renowned the Great, the Good,

Familiar as the day in all the homes of men !
 The winged years, that winnow praise and blame,
 Blow many names out : they but fan to flame
 The self-renewing splendors of thy fame.

O, for a drop of that terse Roman's ink
 Who gave Agricola dateless length of days,

To celebrate him fitly, neither swerve
 To phrase unkempt, nor pass discretion's brink,
 With him so statuelike in sad reserve,
 So diffident to claim, so forward to deserve!
 Nor need I shun due influence of his fame
 Who, mortal among mortals, seemed as now
 The equestrian shape with unimpassioned brow,
 That paces silent on through vistas of acclaim.
 What figure more immovably august
 Than that grave strength so patient and so pure,
 Calm in good fortune, when it wavered, sure,
 That soul serene, impenetrably just,
 Modelled on classic lines, so simple they endure?
 That soul so softly radiant and so white
 The track it left seems less of fire than light,
 Cold but to such as love distemperature?
 And if pure light, as some deem, be the force
 That drives rejoicing planets on their course,
 Why for his power benign seek an impurer source?

His was the true enthusiasm that burns long,
 Domestically bright,
 Fed from itself and shy of human sight,
 The hidden force that makes a lifetime strong,
 And not the short-lived fuel of a song.
 Passionless, say you? What is passion for
 But to sublime our natures and control
 To front heroic toils with late return,
 Or none, or such as shames the conqueror?
 That fire was fed with substance of the soul,
 And not with holiday stubble, that could burn
 Through seven slow years of unadvancing war,
 Equal when fields were lost or fields were won,
 With breath of popular applause or blame,
 Nor fanned nor damped, unquenchably the same,
 Too inward to be reached by flaws of idle fame.

Soldier and statesman, rarest unison;
 High-poised example of great duties done
 Simply as breathing, a world's honors worn
 As life's indifferent gifts to all men born;
 Dumb for himself, unless it were to God,
 But for his barefoot soldiers eloquent,
 Tramping the snow to coral where they trod,
 Held by his awe in hollow-eyed content;
 Modest, yet firm as Nature's self; unblamed
 Save by the men his nobler temper shamed;
 Not honored then or now because he wooed
 The popular voice, but that he still withstood;
 Broad-minded, higher-souled, there is but one
 Who was all this, and ours, and all men's,— Washington.

Minds strong by fits, irregularly great,
 That flash and darken like revolving lights,
 Catch more the vulgar eye unschooled to wait
 On the long curve of patient days and nights,

Rounding a whole life to the circle fair
 Of orb'd completeness; and this balanced soul,
 So simple in its grandeur, coldly bare
 Of draperies theatric, standing there
 In perfect symmetry of self-control,
 Seems not so great at first, but greater grows
 Still as we look, and by experience learn
 How grand this quiet is, how nobly stern
 The discipline that wrought through life-long throes

This energetic passion of repose.
 A nature too decorous and severe,
 Too self-respectful in its griefs and joys
 For ardent girls and boys,
 Who find no genius in a mind so clear
 That its grave depths seem obvious and near,
 Nor a soul great that made so little noise.
 They feel no force in that calm, cadenced phrase,
 The habitual full-dress of his well-bred mind,
 That seems to pace the minuet's courtly maze
 And tell of ampler leisures, roomier length of days.

His broad-built brain, to self so little kind
 That no tumultuary blood could blind,
 Formed to control men, not amaze,
 Looms not like those that borrow height of haze:
 It was a world of statelier movement then
 Than this we fret in, he a denizen
 Of that ideal Rome that made a man for men.

Placid completeness, life without a fall
 From faith or highest aims, truth's breachless
 wall,
 Surely if any fame can bear the touch,
 His will say "Here!" at the last trumpet's call,
 The unexpressive man whose life expressed so much.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

By broad Potomac's silent shore
 Better than Trajan lowly lies,
 Gilding her green declivities
 With glory now and evermore;
 Art to his fame no aid hath lent;
 His country is his monument.

ANONYMOUS.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

WHEN, stricken by the freezing blast,
 A nation's living pillars fall,
 How rich the storied page, how vast,
 A word, a whisper, can recall!

No medal lifts its fretted face,
 Nor speaking marble cheats your eye ;
 Yet, while these pictured lines I trace,
 A living image passes by :

A roof beneath the mountain pines ;
 The cloisters of a hill-girt plain ;
 The front of life's embattled lines ;
 A mound beside the heaving main.

These are the scenes : a boy appears ;
 Set life's round dial in the sun,
 Count the swift arc of seventy years,
 His frame is dust ; his task is done.

Yet pause upon the noontide hour,
 Ere the declining sun has laid
 His bleaching rays on manhood's power,
 And look upon the mighty shade.

No gloom that stately shape can hide,
 No change uncrown his brow ; behold !
 Dark, calm, large-fronted, lightning-eyed,
 Earth has no double from its mould !

Ere from the fields by valor won
 The battle-smoke had rolled away,
 And bared the blood-red setting sun,
 His eyes were opened on the day.

His land was but a shelving strip,
 Black with the strife that made it free ;
 He lived to see its banners dip
 Their fringes in the western sea.

The boundless prairies learned his name,
 His words the mountain echoes knew ;
 The northern breezes swept his fame
 From icy lake to warm bayou.

In toil he lived ; in peace he died ;
 When life's full cycle was complete,
 Put off his robes of power and pride,
 And laid them at his Master's feet.

His rest is by the storm-swept waves,
 Whom life's wild tempests roughly tried,
 Whose heart was like the streaming caves
 Of ocean, throbbing at his side.

Death's cold white hand is like the snow
 Laid softly on the furrowed hill ;
 It hides the broken seams below,
 And leaves the summit brighter still.

In vain the envious tongue upbraids ;
 His name a nation's heart shall keep,
 Till morning's latest sunlight fades
 On the blue tablet of the deep !

ICHABOD.

DANIEL WEBSTER. 1850.

So fallen ! so lost ! the light withdrawn,
 Which once he wore !
 The glory from his gray hairs gone
 Forevermore !

Revile him not, — the Tempter hath
 A snare for all !
 And pitying tears, not scorn and wrath,
 Befit his fall !

O, dumb be passion's stormy rage,
 When he who might
 Have lighted up and led his age
 Falls back in night !

Scorn ! would the angels laugh to mark
 A bright soul driven,
 Fiend-goaded, down the endless dark,
 From hope and heaven ?

Let not the land, once proud of him,
 Insult him now ;
 Nor brand with deeper shame his dim,
 Dishonored brow.

But let its humbled sons instead,
 From sea to lake,
 A long lament, as for the dead,
 In sadness make.

Of all we loved and honored, naught
 Save power remains, —
 A fallen angel's pride of thought,
 Still strong in chains.

All else is gone ; from those great eyes
 The soul has fled :
 When faith is lost, when honor dies,
 The man is dead !

Then pay the reverence of old days
 To his dead fame ;
 Walk backward, with averted gaze,
 And hide the shame !

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

THE DEAD CZAR NICHOLAS.

LAY him beneath his snows,
 The great Norse giant who in these last days
 Troubled the nations. Gather decently
 The imperial robes about him. 'T is but man, —

This demi-god. Or rather it was man,
And is — a little dust, that will corrupt
As fast as any nameless dust which sleeps
'Neath Alma's grass or Balaklava's vines.

No vineyard grave for him. No quiet tomb
By river margin, where across the seas
Children's fond thoughts and women's memories
    come,
Like angels, to sit by the sepulchre,
Saying : "All these were men who knew to count,
Front-faced, the cost of honor, nor did shrink
From its full payment ; coming here to die,
They died — like men."

    But this man ? Ah ! for him
Funereal state, and ceremonial grand,
The stone-engraved sarcophagus, and then Oblivion.

    Nay, oblivion were as bliss
To that fierce howl which rolls from land to land
Exulting, — "Art thou fallen, Lucifer,
Son of the morning ?" or condemning, — "Thus Perish the wicked !" or blaspheming, — "Here
Lies our Belshazzar, our Sennacherib,
Our Pharaoh, — he whose heart God hardened,
So that he would not let the people go."

Self-glorifying sinners ! Why, this man
Was but like other men, — you, Levite small,
Who shut your saintly ears, and prate of hell
And heretics, because outside church-doors,
Your church-doors, congregations poor and small
Praise Heaven in their own way ; you, autocrat
Of all the hamlets, who add field to field
And house to house, whose slavish children cower
Before your tyrant footstep ; you, foul-tongued
Fanatic or ambitious egotist,
Who think God stoops from his high majesty
To lay his finger on your puny head,
And crown it, that you henceforth may parade
Your maggotskip throughout the wondering world, —
"I am the Lord's anointed !"

    Fools and blind !
This czar, this emperor, this disthroned corpse,
Lying so straightly in an icy calm
Grander than sovereignty, was but as ye, —
No better and no worse : Heaven mend us all !

Carry him forth and bury him. Death's peace
Rest on his memory ! Mercy by his bier
Sits silent, or says only these few words, —
"Let him who is without sin 'mongst ye all Cast the first stone."

DINAH MARIA MULOCK CRAIK.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

FROM THE "COMMEMORATION ODE."

LIFE may be given in many ways,
And loyalty to Truth be sealed
As bravely in the closet as the field,
    So bountiful is Fate ;
    But then to stand beside her,
    When craven churls deride her,
To front a lie in arms and not to yield,
    This shows, methinks, God's plan
    And measure of a stalwart man,
    Limbed like the old heroic breeds,
    Who stand self-poised on manhood's solid
    earth,
Not forced to frame excuses for his birth,
Fed from within with all the strength he needs.

Such was he, our Martyr-Chief,
Whom late the Nation he had led,
With ashes on her head,
Wept with the passion of an angry grief :
Forgive me, if from present things I turn
To speak what in my heart will beat and burn,
And hang my wreath on his world-honored urn.
    Nature, they say, doth donate,
    And cannot make a man
    Save on some worn-out plan,
    Repeating us by rote :
For him her Old-World moulds aside he threw,
And, choosing sweet clay from the breast
    Of the unexhausted West,
With stuff untainted shaped a hero new,
Wise, steadfast in the strength of God, and true.
    How beautiful to see
Once more a shepherd of mankind indeed,
Who loved his charge, but never loved to lead ;
One whose meek flock the people joyed to be,
    Not lured by any cheat of birth,
    But by his clear-grained human worth,
And brave old wisdom of sincerity !
    They knew that outward grace is dust ;
    They could not choose but trust
In that sure-footed mind's unfaltering skill,
    And supple-tempered will
That bent like perfect steel to spring again and thrust.

His was no lonely mountain-peak of mind,
Thrusting to thin air o'er our cloudy bars,
A sea-mark now, now lost in vapors blind ;
Broad prairie rather, genial, level-lined,
Fruitful and friendly for all human kind,
Yet also nigh to heaven and loved of loftiest stars.
    Nothing of Europe here,
Or, then, of Europe fronting mornward still,
    Ere any names of Serf and Peer
    Could Nature's equal scheme deface ;

Here was a type of the true elder race,
And one of Plutarch's men talked with us face to face.

I praise him not ; it were too late ;
And some innative weakness there must be
In him who condescends to victory
Such as the Present gives, and cannot wait,
Safe in himself as in a fate.

So always firmly lie :
He knew to bide his time,
And can his fame abide,
Still patient in his simple faith sublime,
Till the wise years decide.
Great captains, with their guns and drums,
Disturb our judgment for the hour,
But at last silence comes ;
These all are gone, and, standing like a tower,
Our children shall behold his fame,
The kindly-earnest, brave, foreseeing man,
Sagacious, patient, dreading praise, not blame,
New birth of our new soil, the first American.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.*

FOULLY ASSASSINATED APRIL 14, 1865.

You lay a wreath on murdered Lincoln's bier,
You, who with mocking pencil went to trace,
Broad for the self-complacent British sneer,
His length of shambling limb, his furrowed face,

His gaunt, gnarled hands, his unkempt, bristling hair,
His garb uncouth, his bearing ill at ease,
His lack of all we prize as debonair,
Of power or will to shine, of art to please ;

You, whose smart pen backed up the pencil's laugh,
Judging each step as though the way were plain,
Reckless, so it could point its paragraph
Of chief's perplexity, or people's pain :

Beside this corpse, that bears for winding-sheet
The Stars and Stripes he lived to rear anew,
Between the mourners at his head and feet,
Say, scurrile jester, is there room for you ?

Yes : he had lived to shame me from my sneer,
To lame my pencil, and confute my pen ;
To make me own this hind of princes peer,
This rail-splitter a true-born king of men.

* This tribute appeared in the London Punch, which, up to the time of the assassination of Mr. Lincoln, had ridiculed and maligned him with all its well-known powers of pen and pencil.

My shallow judgment I had learned to rue,
Noting how to occasion's height he rose ;
How his quaint wit made home-truth seem more
true ;
How, iron-like, his temper grew by blows.

How humble, yet how hopeful, he could be ;
How, in good fortune and in ill, the same ;
Nor bitter in success, nor boastful he,
Thirsty for gold, nor feverish for fame.

He went about his work, — such work as few
Ever had laid on head and heart and hand, —
As one who knows, where there's a task to do,
Man's honest will must Heaven's good grace
command ;

Who trusts the strength will with the burden
grow,
That God makes instruments to work his will,
If but that will we can arrive to know,
Nor tamper with the weights of good and ill.

So he went forth to battle, on the side
That he felt clear was Liberty's and Right's,
As in his peasant boyhood he had plied
His warfare with rude Nature's thwarting mights ;

The uncleared forest, the unbroken soil,
The iron-bark, that turns the lumberer's axe,
The rapid, that o'erbears the boatman's toil,
The prairie, hiding the mazed wanderer's tracks,

The ambushed Indian, and the prowling bear, —
Such were the deeds that helped his youth to train :
Rough culture, but such trees large fruit may bear,
If but their stocks be of right girth and grain.

So he grew up, a destined work to do,
And lived to do it : four long-suffering years'
Ill-fate, ill-feeling, ill-report, lived through,
And then he heard the hisses change to cheers,

The taunts to tribute, the abuse to praise,
And took both with the same unwavering mood ;
Till, as he came on light, from darkling days,
And seemed to touch the goal from where he stood,

A felon hand, between the goal and him,
Reached from behind, his back, a trigger prest,
And those perplexed and patient eyes were dim,
Those gaunt, long-laboring limbs were laid to rest !

The words of mercy were upon his lips,
 Forgiveness in his heart and on his pen,
 When this vile murderer brought swift eclipse
 To thoughts of peace on earth, good-will to men.

The Old World and the New, from sea to sea,
 Utter one voice of sympathy and shame :
 Sore heart, so stopped when it at last beat high ;
 Sad life, cut short just as its triumph came !

A deed accurst ! Strokes have been struck before
 By the assassin's hand, whereof men doubt
 If more of horror or disgrace they bore ;
 But thy foul crime, like Cain's, stands darkly
 out.

Vile hand, that brandest murder on a strife,
 What'er its grounds, stoutly and nobly striven ;
 And with the martyr's crown crownest a life
 With much to praise, little to be forgiven.

TOM TAYLOR.

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.

"Some time afterward, it was reported to me by the city officers that they had ferreted out the paper and its editor ; that his office was an obscure hole, his only visible auxiliary a negro boy, and his supporters a few very insignificant persons of all colors."—Letter of H. G. OTIS.

In a small chamber, friendless and unseen,
 Toiled o'er his types one poor, unlearned young
 man ;

The place was dark, unfurnished, and mean :
 Yet there the freedom of a race began.

Help came but slowly ; surely no man yet
 Put lever to the heavy world with less :
 What need of help ? He knew how types were set,
 He had a dauntless spirit, and a press.

Such earnest natures are the fiery pith,
 The compact nucleus, round which systems
 grow :

Mass after mass becomes inspired therewith,
 And whirls impregnate with the central glow.

O Truth ! O Freedom ! how are ye still born
 In the rude stable, in the manger nursed !
 What humble hands unbar those gates of morn
 Through which the splendors of the New Day
 burst !

What ! shall one monk, scarce known beyond his cell,
 Front Rome's far-reaching bolts, and scorn her
 frown ?

Brave Luther answered Yes ; that thunder's swell Rocked Europe, and disarmed the triple crown.

Whatever can be known of earth we know,
 Sneered Europe's wise men, in their snail-shells curled ;

No ! said one man in Genoa, and that No
 Out of the dark created this New World.

Who is it will not dare himself to trust ?
 Who is it hath not strength to stand alone ?
 Who is it thwarts and bilks the inward Must ?
 He and his works, like sand, from earth are blown.

Men of a thousand shifts and wiles, look here !
 See one straightforward conscience put in pawn
 To win a world ; see the obedient sphere
 By bravery's simple gravitation drawn !

Shall we not heed the lesson taught of old,
 And by the Present's lips repeated still,
 In our own single manhood to be bold,
 Fortressed in conscience and impregnable will ?

We stride the river daily at its spring,
 Nor, in our childish thoughtlessness, foresee
 What myriad vassal streams shall tribute bring,
 How like an equal it shall greet the sea.

O small beginnings, ye are great and strong,
 Based on a faithful heart and weariless brain !
 Ye build the future fair, ye conquer wrong,
 Ye earn the crown, and wear it not in vain.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

THE OLD ADMIRAL.

ADMIRAL STEWART, U. S. NAVY.

GONE at last,
 That brave old hero of the past !
 His spirit has a second birth,
 An unknown, grander life ;
 All of him that was earth
 Lies mute and cold,
 Like a wrinkled sheath and old,
 Thrown off forever from the shimmering blade
 That has good entrance made
 Upon some distant, glorious strife.

From another generation,
 A simpler age, to ours Old Ironsides came ;
 The morn and noontide of the nation
 Alike he knew, nor yet outlived his fame, —
 O, not outlived his fame !
 The dauntless men whose service guards our shore
 Lengthen still their glory-roll
 With his name to lead the scroll,
 As a flagship at her fore
 Carries the Union, with its azure and the stars,
 Symbol of times that are no more
 And the old heroic wars.

He was the one
Whom Death had spared alone
Of all the captains of that lusty age,
Who sought the foeman where he lay,
On sea or sheltering bay,
Nor till the prize was theirs repressed their rage.
They are gone, — all gone :
They rest with glory and the undying Powers ;
Only their name and fame, and what they saved, are ours !

It was fifty years ago,
Upon the Gallie Sea,
He bore the banner of the free,
And fought the fight whereof our children
know, —
The deathful, desperate fight !
Under the fair moon's light
The frigate squared, and yawed to left and right.
Every broadside swept to death a score !
Roundly played her guns and well, till their fiery ensigns fell,
Neither foe replying more.
All in silence, when the night-breeze cleared the
air,
Old Ironsides rested there,
Locked in between the twain, and drenched with blood.
Then homeward, like an eagle with her prey !
O, it was a gallant fray, —
That fight in Biscay Bay !
Fearless the captain stood, in his youthful hardi-
hood :
He was the boldest of them all,
Our brave old Admiral !

And still our heroes bleed,
Taught by that olden deed.
Whether of iron or of oak
The ships we marshal at our country's need,
Still speak their cannon now as then they spoke ;
Still floats our unstruck banner from the mast
As in the stormy past.

Lay him in the ground :
Let him rest where the ancient river rolls ;
Let him sleep beneath the shadow and the sound
Of the bell whose proclamation, as it tolls,
Is of Freedom and the gift our fathers gave.
Lay him gently down :
The clamor of the town
Will not break the slumbers deep, the beautiful, ripe sleep,
Of this lion of the wave,
Will not trouble the old Admiral in his grave.

Earth to earth his dust is laid.
Methinks his stately shade
On the shadow of a great ship leaves the shore ;
Over cloudless western seas
Seeks the far Hesperides,
The islands of the blest,
Where no turbulent billows roar, —
Where is rest.
His ghost upon the shadowy quarter stands
Nearing the deathless lands.
There all his martial mates, renewed and
strong,
Await his coming long.
I see the happy Heroes rise
With gratulation in their eyes :
" Welcome, old comrade," Lawrence cries ;
" Ah, Stewart, tell us of the wars !
Who win the glory and the scars ?
How floats the skyey flag, — how many stars ?
Still speak they of Decatur's name ?
Of Bainbridge's and Perry's fame ?
Of me, who earliest came ?
Make ready, all :
Room for the Admiral !
Come, Stewart, tell us of the wars !"

EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN.

KANE.

DIED FEBRUARY 16, 1857.

ALOFT upon an old basaltic crag,
Which, scalped by keen winds that defend the Pole,
Gazes with dead face on the seas that roll
Around the secret of the mystic zone,
A mighty nation's star-bespangled flag
Flutters alone,
And underneath, upon the lifeless front
Of that drear cliff, a simple name is traced ;
Fit type of him who, famishing and gaunt,
But with a rocky purpose in his soul,
Breasted the gathering snows,
Clung to the drifting flocks,
By want beleaguered, and by winter chased,
Seeking the brother lost amid that frozen waste.
Not many months ago we greeted him,
Crowned with the icy honors of the North,
Across the land his hard-won fame went forth,
And Maine's deep woods were shaken limb by limb.
His own mild Keystone State, sedate and prim,
Burst from decorous quiet, as he came.
Hot Southern lips, with eloquence aflame,
Sounded his triumph. Texas, wild and grim,

Proffered its horny hand. The large-lunged West,
 From out his giant breast,
 Yelled its frank welcome. And from main to main Jubilant to the sky,
 Thundered the mighty cry,
 HONOR TO KANE !

In vain, — in vain beneath his feet we flung
 The reddening roses ! All in vain we poured
 The golden wine, and round the shining board
 Sent the toast circling, till the rafters rung
 With the thrice-tripled honors of the feast !
 Scarce the buds wilted and the voices ceased
 Ere the pure light that sparkled in his eyes,
 Bright as auroral fires in Southern skies,
 Faded and faded ! And the brave young heart
 That the relentless Arctic winds had robbed
 Of all its vital heat, in that long quest
 For the lost captain, now within his breast
 More and more faintly throbbled.

His was the victory ; but as his grasp
 Closed on the laurel crown with eager clasp,
 Death launched a whistling dart ;
 And ere the thunders of applause were done
 His bright eyes closed forever on the sun !
 Too late, — too late the splendid prize he won
 In the Olympic rae of Science and of Art !
 Like to some shattered berg that, pale and lone,
 Drifts from the white North to a Tropic zone,
 And in the burning day
 Wastes peak by peak away,
 Till on some rosy even
 It dies with sunlight blessing it ; so he Tranquilly floated to a Southern sea,
 And melted into heaven !

He needs no tears who lived a noble life !
 We will not weep for him who died so well ;
 But we will gather round the hearth, and tell
 The story of his strife ;
 Such homage suits him well,
 Better than funeral pomp or passing bell !

What tale of peril and self-sacrifice !
 Prisoned amid the fastnesses of ice,
 With hunger howling o'er the wastes of snow !
 Night lengthening into months ; the ravenous floe
 Crunching the massive ships, as the white bear
 Crunches his prey. The insufficient share
 Of loathsome food ;
 The lethargy of famine ; the despair
 Urging to labor, nervelessly pursued ;
 Toil done with skinny arms, and faces hued
 Like pallid masks, while dolefully behind
 Glimmered the fading embers of a mind !
 That awful hour, when through the prostrate band
 Delirium stalked, laying his burning hand

Upon the ghastly foreheads of the crew ;
 The whispers of rebellion, faint and few
 At first, but deepening ever till they grew
 Into black thoughts of murder, — such the throng
 Of horrors bound the hero. High the song
 Should be that hymns the noble part he played !
 Sinking himself, yet ministering aid
 To all around him. By a mighty will Living defiant of the wants that kill,
 Because his death would seal his comrades' fate ;
 Cheering with ceaseless and inventive skill
 Those polar waters, dark and desolate.
 Equal to every trial, every fate,
 He stands, until spring, tardy with relief,
 Unlocks the icy gate,
 And the pale prisoners thread the world once
 more,
 To the steep cliffs of Greenland's pastoral shore
 Bearing their dying chief !

Time was when he should gain his spurs of gold !
 From royal hands, who wooed the knightly
 state ;
 The knell of old formalities is tolled,
 And the world's knights are now self-conse-
 crate.
 No grander episode doth chivalry hold
 In all its annals, back to Charlemagne,
 Than that lone vigil of unceasing pain,
 Faithfully kept through hunger and through cold,
 By the good Christian knight, Elisha Kane !

FITZ-JAMES O'BRIEN.

MAZZINI.

A LIGHT is out in Italy,
 A golden tongue of purest flame.
 We watched it burning, long and lone,
 And every watcher knew its name,
 And knew from whence its fervor came :
 That one rare light of Italy,
 Which put self-seeking souls to shame !

This light which burnt for Italy
 Through all the blackness of her night,
 She doubted, once upon a time,
 Because it took away her sight.
 She looked and said, ' There is no light !'
 It was thine eyes, poor Italy !
 That knew not dark apart from bright.

This flame which burnt for Italy,
 It would not let her haters sleep.
 They blew at it with angry breath,
 And only fed its upward leap,
 And only made it hot and deep.

Its burning showed us Italy,
And all the hopes she had to keep.

This light is out in Italy,
Her eyes shall seek for it in vain !
For her sweet sake it spent itself,
Too early flickering to its wane, —
Too long blown over by her pain.
Bow down and weep, O Italy,
Thou canst not kindle it again !

Laura C. Redden (Howard Glynedd).

JOHN CHARLES FREMONT.

Thy error, Fremont, simply was to act
A brave man's part, without the statesman's tact,
And, taking counsel but of common sense,
To strike at cause as well as consequence.
O, never yet since Roland wound his horn
At Roncesvalles has a blast been blown
Far-heard, wide-echoed, startling as thine own,
Heard from the van of freedom's hope forlorn !
It had been safer, doubtless, for the time,
To flatter treason, and avoid offence
To that Dark Power whose underlying crime
Heaves upward its perpetual turbulence.
But, if thine be the fate of all who break
The ground for truth's seed, or forerun their years
Till lost in distance, or with stout hearts make
A lane for freedom through the level spears, Still take thou courage ! God has spoken through
    thee,
Irrevocable, the mighty words, Be free !
The land shakes with them, and the slave's dull
    ear
Turns from the rice-swamp stealthily to hear.
Who would recall them now must first arrest
The winds that blow down from the free Northwest,
Ruffling the Gulf ; or like a scroll roll back
The Mississippi to its upper springs.
Such words fulfil their prophecy, and lack
But the full time to harden into things.

John Greenleaf Whittier.

TO THE MEMORY OF FLETCHER
HARPER.

No soldier, statesman, hierophant, or king ;
None of the heroes that you poets sing ;
A toiler ever since his days began,
Simple, though shrewd, just-judging, man to
    man ;

God-fearing, learned in life's hard-taught school ;
By long obedience lessoned how to rule ;
Through many an early struggle led to find
That crown of prosperous fortune, — to be kind.
Lay on his breast these English daisies sweet !
Good rest to the gray head and the tired feet
That walked this world for seventy steadfast years !

Bury him with fond blessings and few tears,
Or only of remembrance, not regret.
On his full life the eternal seal is set,
Unbroken till the resurrection day.
So let his children's children go their way,
Go and do likewise, leaving 'neath this sod
An honest man, "the noblest work of God."

Dinah Maria Mulock Craik.

THE FIFTIETH BIRTHDAY OF AGASSIZ.

MAY 28, 1857.

It was fifty years ago,
In the pleasant month of May,
In the beautiful Pays de Vaud,
A child in its cradle lay.

And Nature, the old nurse, took
The child upon her knee,
Saying, "Here is a story-book
Thy Father has written for thee."

"Come, wander with me," she said,
"Into regions yet untrod,
And read what is still unread
In the manuscripts of God."

And he wandered away and away
With Nature, the dear old nurse,
Who sang to him night and day
The rhymes of the universe.

And whenever the way seemed long,
Or his heart began to fail,
She would sing a more wonderful song,
Or tell a more marvellous tale.

So she keeps him still a child,
And will not let him go,
Though at times his heart beats wild
For the beautiful Pays de Vaud ;

Though at times he hears in his dreams
The Ranz des Vaches of old,
And the rush of mountain streams
From glaciers clear and cold ;

And the mother at home says, "Hark!
For his voice I listen and yearn:
It is growing late and dark,
And my boy does not return!"

THE PRAYER OF AGASSIZ.

ON the isle of Penikese,
Ringed about by sapphire seas,
Fanned by breezes salt and cool,
Stood the Master with his school.
Over sails that not in vain
Wooded the west-wind's steady strain,
Line of coast that low and far
Stretched its undulating bar,
Wings aslant along the rim
Of the waves they stooped to skim,
Rock and isle and glistening bay,
Fell the beautiful white day.

Said the Master to the youth:
"We have come in search of truth,
Trying with uncertain key
Door by door of mystery;
We are reaching, through His laws,
To the garment-hem of Cause,
Him, the endless, unbegun,
The Unnameable, the One,
Light of all our light the Source,
Life of life, and Force of force.
As with fingers of the blind,
We are groping here to find
What the hieroglyphics mean
Of the Unseen in the seen,
What the Thought which underlies
Nature's masking and disguise,
What it is that hides beneath
Blight and bloom and birth and death.
By past efforts unavailing,
Doubt and error, loss and failing,
Of our weakness made aware,
On the threshold of our task
Let us light and guidance ask,
Let us pause in silent prayer!"

Then the Master in his place
Bowed his head a little space,
And the leaves by soft airs stirred,
Lapse of wave and cry of bird,
Left the solemn hush unbroken
Of that wordless prayer unspoken,
While its wish, on earth unsaid,
Rose to heaven interpreted.
As in life's best hours we hear
By the spirit's finer ear
His low voice within us, thus

The All-Father heareth us;
And his holy ear we pain
With our noisy words and vain.
Not for him our violence,
Storming at the gates of sense,
His the primal language, his
The eternal silences!
Even the careless heart was moved,
And the doubting gave assent,
With a gesture reverent,
To the Master well-beloved.
As thin mists are glorified
By the light they cannot hide,
All who gazed upon him saw,
Through its veil of tender awe,
How his face was still uplift
By the old sweet look of it,
Hopeful, trustful, full of cheer,
And the love that casts out fear.
Who the secret may declare
Of that brief, unuttered prayer?
Did the shade before him come
Of the inevitable doom,
Of the end of earth so near,
And Eternity's new year?

In the lap of sheltering seas
Rests the isle of Penikese;
But the lord of the domain
Comes not to his own again:
Where the eyes that follow fail,
On a vaster sea his sail
Drifts beyond our beck and hail!
Other lips within its bound
Shall the laws of life expound;
Other eyes from rock and shell
Read the world's old riddles well;
But when breezes light and bland
Blow from Summer's blossomed land,
When the air is glad with wings,
And the blithe song-sparrow sings,
Many an eye with his still face
Shall the living ones displace,
Many an ear the word shall seek
He alone could fitly speak.
And one name forevermore
Shall be uttered o'er and o'er
By the waves that kiss the shore,
By the curlew's whistle, sent
Down the cool, sea-scented air;
In all voices known to her
Nature own her worshipper,
Half in triumph, half lament.
Thither love shall tearful turn,
Friendship pause uncovered there,
And the wisest reverence learn
From the Master's silent prayer.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER

TO HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW,

ON HIS BIRTHDAY, 27TH FEBRUARY, 1867.

I NEED not praise the sweetness of his song,
 Where limpid verse to limpid verse succeeds Smooth as our Charles, when, fearing lest he wrong
 The new moon's mirrored skiff, he slides along,
 Full without noise, and whispers in his reeds.

With loving breath of all the winds his name
 Is blown about the world, but to his friends
 A sweeter secret hides behind his fame,
 And Love steals shyly through the loud acclaim
 To murmur a God bless you! and there ends.

As I muse backward up the checkered years,
 Wherein so much was given, so much was lost,
 Blessings in both kinds, such as cheapen tears —
 But hush! this is not for profaner ears;
 Let them drink molten pearls nor dream the cost.

Some suck up poison from a sorrow's core,
 As naught but nightshade grew upon earth's
 ground;
 Love turned all his to heart's-ease, and the more
 Fate tried his bastions, she but forced a door,
 Leading to sweeter manhood and more sound.

Even as a wind-waved fountain's swaying shade
 Seems of mixed race, a gray wraith shot with sun,
 So through his trial faith translucent rayed,
 Till darkness, half disnatured so, betrayed
 A heart of sunshine that would fain o'errun.

Surely if skill in song the shears may stay,
 And of its purpose cheat the charmed abyss,
 If our poor life be lengthened by a lay,
 He shall not go, although his presence may,
 And the next age in praise shall double this.

Long days be his, and each as lusty-sweet
 As gracious natures find his song to be;
 May Age steal on with softly cadenced feet
 Falling in music, as for him were meet
 Whose choicest verse is harsher-toned than he!

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

JOSEPH RODMAN DRAKE.

DIED IN NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER, 1820.

GREEN be the turf above thee,
 Friend of my better days!
 None knew thee but to love thee,
 Nor named thee but to praise.

Tears fell, when thou wert dying,
 From eyes unused to weep,
 And long, where thou art lying,
 Will tears the cold turf steep.

When hearts, whose truth was proven,
 Like thine, are laid in earth,
 There should a wreath be woven
 To tell the world their worth;

And I, who woke each morrow
 To clasp thy hand in mine,
 Who shared thy joy and sorrow,
 Whose weal and woe were thine,

It should be mine to braid it
 Around thy faded brow,
 But I've in vain essayed it,
 And feel I cannot now.

While memory bids me weep thee,
 Nor thoughts nor words are free,
 The grief is fixed too deeply
 That mourns a man like thee.

FITZ-GREENE HALLECK.

FITZ-GREENE HALLECK.

READ AT THE UNVEILING OF HIS STATUE IN CENTRAL PARK, MAY, 1877.

AMONG their graven shapes to whom
 Thy civic wreaths belong,
 O city of his love! make room
 For one whose gift was song.

Not his the soldier's sword to wield,
 Nor his the helm of state,
 Nor glory of the stricken field,
 Nor triumph of debate.

In common ways, with common men,
 He served his race and time
 As well as if his clerkly pen
 Had never danced to rhyme.

If, in the thronged and noisy mart,
 The Muses found their son,
 Could any say his tuneful art
 A duty left undone?

He toiled and sang; and year by year
 Men found their homes more sweet,
 And through a tenderer atmosphere
 Looked down the brick-walled street.

The Greek's wild onset Wall Street knew,
 The Red King walked Broadway;
 And Alnwick Castle's roses blew
 From Palisades to Bay.

Fair City by the Sea ! upraise
His veil with reverent hands ;
And mingle with thy own the praise
And pride of other lands.

Let Greece his fiery lyric breathe
Above her hero-urns ;
And Scotland, with her holly, wreath
The flower he culled for Burns.

O, stately stand thy palace walls,
Thy tall ships ride the seas ;
To-day thy poet's name recalls
A prouder thought than these.

Not less thy pulse of trade shall beat,
Nor less thy tall fleets swim,
That shaded square and dusty street
Are classic ground through him.

Alive, he loved, like all who sing,
The echoes of his song ;
Too late the tardy meed we bring,
The praise delayed so long.

Too late, alas ! — Of all who knew
The living man, to-day
Before his unveiled face, how few
Make bare their locks of gray !

Our lips of praise must soon be dumb,
Our grateful eyes be dim ;
O, brothers of the days to come,
Take tender charge of him !

New hands the wires of song may sweep,
New voices challenge fame ;
But let no moss of years o'erereep
The lines of Halleck's name.

THE DUKE OF GLOSTER.

I, that am rudely stamped and want love's majesty

To strut before a wanton ambling nymph ;
I, that am curtailed of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deformed, unfinished, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionable
That dogs bark at me as I halt by them, —
Why, I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to see my shadow in the sun.

The admired mirror, glory of our isle,
Thou far, far more than mortal man, whose style
Struck more men dumb to hearken to thy song
Than Orpheus' harp, or Tully's golden tongue.
To him, as right, for wit's deep quintessence,
For honor, valor, virtue, excellence,
Be all the garlands, crown his tomb with bay,
Who spake as much as e'er our tongue can say.

BEN JONSON.

O rare Ben Jonson !

Epitaph.

SIR J. YOUNG.

What things have we seen
Done at the Mermaid ! heard words that have been

So nimble, and so full of subtle flame,
As if that every one from whence they came
Had meant to put his whole wit in a jest,
And had resolved to live a fool the rest
Of his dull life : then when there hath been thrown

Wit able enough to justify the town
For three days past ; wit that might warrant be
For the whole city to talk foolishly
Till that were cancelled ; and when that was gone,
We left an air behind us, which alone
Was able to make the two next companies (Right witty, though but downright fools) more wise.

Letter to Ben Jonson.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Far from the sun and summer gale,
In thy green lap was Nature's darling laid,
What time, where lucid Avon strayed,

To him the mighty mother did unveil
Her awful face : the dauntless child
Stretched forth his little arms and smiled.
"This pencil take," she said, "whose colors clear
Richly paint the vernal year :
Thine too these golden keys, immortal boy !
This can unlock the gates of joy ;
Of horror that, and thrilling fears,
Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic tears."

A little nearer Spenser, to make room
For Shakespeare in your threefold, fourfold tomb.

ABRAHAM COWLEY.

Old mother-wit and nature gave Shakespeare and Fletcher all they have ;
In Spenser and in Jonson art
Of slower nature got the start ;
But both in him so equal are,
None knows which bears the happiest share ;
To him no author was unknown,
Yet what he wrote was all his own.

JOHN WICKLIFFE.

As thou these ashes, little Brook ! wilt bear
Into the Avon, Avon to the tide
Of Severn, Severn to the narrow seas,
Into main ocean they, this deed accused
An emblem yields to friends and enemies,
How the bold Teacher's doctrine, sanctified
By truth, shall spread, throughout the world dispersed.

Eccles. Sonnets, Part II. xvii. : To Wickliffe. WORDSWORTH.

[Bartlett quotes, in this connection, the following.]

"Some prophet of that day said :

"The Avon to the Severn runs,

The Severn to the sea ;

And Wickliffe's dust shall spread abroad,

Wide as the waters be.' "

From Address before the "Sons of New Hampshire" (1849).

DANIEL WEBSTER.

JOHN MILTON.

Nor second he, that rode sublime
Upon the seraph-wings of ecstasy,
The secrets of the abyss to spy.

He passed the flaming bounds of place and time :
The living throne, the sapphire blaze,
Where angels tremble while they gaze,
He saw ; but, blasted with excess of light,
Closed his eyes in endless night.

Progress of Poesy.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

How shall I then begin, or where conclude,
To draw a fame so truly circular ?
For in a round what order can be showed,
Where all the parts so equal perfect are ?

His grandeur he derived from Heaven alone ;
For he was great, ere fortune made him so :
And wars, like mists that rise against the sun,
Made him but greater seem, not greater grow.

Oliver Cromwell.

J. DRYDEN.

Or, ravished with the whistling of a name,
See Cromwell, damned to everlasting fame !

KING CHARLES II.

Here lies our sovereign lord the king,
Whose word no man relies on ;
He never says a foolish thing,
Nor ever does a wise one.

Written on the Bedchamber Door of Charles II.
EARL OF ROCHESTER.

JAMES THOMSON.

A bard here dwelt, more fat than bard beseems
Who, void of envy, guile, and lust of gain,
On virtue still, and nature's pleasing themes,
Poured forth his unpremeditated strain :
The world forsaking with a calm disdain,
Here laughed he careless in his easy seat ;
Here quaffed, encircled with the joyous train,
Oft moralizing sage : his ditty sweet
He loathèd much to write, ne carèd to repeat.

Stanza introduced into Thomson's "Castle of Indulgence," Cant. i.
LORD LYTTELTON.

In yonder grave a Druid lies,
Where slowly winds the stealing wave ;
The year's best sweets shall duteous rise
To deck its poet's sylvan grave.

And see, the fairy valleys fade ;
Dun night has veiled the solemn view !
Yet once again, dear parted shade,
Meek Nature's child, again adieu !

Ode on the Death of Thomson. W. COLLINS.

WILLIAM HOGARTH.

The hand of him here torpid lies
That drew the essential form of græce ;
Here closed in death the attentive eyes
That saw the manners in the face.

Epitaph. DR. S. JOHNSON.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

Thine is a strain to read among the hills,
The old and full of voices ; — by the source
Of some free stream, whose gladdening presence fills

The solitude with sound ; for in its course
Even such is thy deep song, that seems a part
Of those high scenes, a fountain from their heart.

Wordsworth. F. D. HEMANS.

RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN.

Whose humor, as gay as the firefly's light,
Played round every subject, and shone as it played ; —

Whose wit, in the combat, as gentle as bright,
Ne'er carried a heart-stain away on its blade ; —

Whose eloquence — brightening whatever it tried,

Whether reason or fancy, the gay or the grave —
Was as rapid, as deep, and as brilliant a tide,
As ever bore freedom aloft on its wave !

Lines on the Death of Sheridan. T. MOORE.

Ye men of wit and social eloquence !
He was your brother, — bear his ashes hence !
While powers of mind almost of boundless range,
Complete in kind, as various in their change, —
While eloquence, wit, poesy, and mirth,
That humbler harmonist of care on earth,
Survive within our souls, — while lives our sense
Of pride in merit's proud pre-eminence,
Long shall we seek his likeness, — long in vain,
And turn to all of him which may remain,
Sighing that Nature formed but one such man,
And broke the die — in moulding Sheridan !

Monody on the Death of Sheridan. BYRON.

AMOS COTTLE.

Oh ! Amos Cottle ! * — Phœbus ! what a name
To fill the speaking trump of future fame ! —
Oh ! Amos Cottle ! for a moment think
What meagre profits spring from pen and ink !

English Bards and Scotch Reviewers. BYRON.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

O good gray head which all men knew,
O voice from which their omens all men drew,
O iron nerve to true occasion true,
O fallen at length that tower of strength
Which stood four-square to all the winds that blew !

Such was he whom we deplore.
The long self-sacrifice of life is o'er.
The great World-victor's victor will be seen no
more.

On the Death of the Duke of Wellington. TENNYSON.

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE.

There in seclusion and remote from men
The wizard hand lies cold,
Which at its topmost speed let fall the pen,
And left the tale half told.

Ah ! who shall lift that wand of magic power,
And the lost clew regain ?
The unfinished window in Aladdin's tower
Unfinished must remain !

HUMOROUS POEMS.

KING JOHN AND THE ABBOT OF CANTERBURY.

FROM "PERCY'S RELIQUES."

An ancient story I'll tell you anon
Of a notable prince that was called King John ;
And he ruled England with main and with might,
For he did great wrong, and maintained little right.

And I'll tell you a story, a story so merry,
Concerning the Abbot of Canterbury ;
How for his house-keeping and high renown,
They rode poste for him to fair London towne.

An hundred men the king did heare say,
The abbot kept in his house every day ;
And fifty golde chaynes without any doubt,
In velvet coates waited the abbot about.

"How now, father abbot, I heare it of thee,
Thou keepest a farre better house than mee ;
And for thy house-keeping and high renowne,
I feare thou work'st treason against my crown."

"My liege," quo' the abbot, "I would it were knowne

I never spend nothing, but what is my owne ;
And I trust your grace will doe me no deere,
For spending of my owne true-gotten geere."

"Yes, yes, father abbot, thy fault it is highe,
And now for the same thou needest must dye ;
For except thou canst answer me questions three,
Thy head shall be smitten from thy bodie.

"And first," quo' the king, "when I'm in this stead,

With my crowne of golde so faire on my head,
Among all my liege-men so noble of birthe,
Thou must tell me to one penny what I am worthe.

"Secondly, tell me, without any doubt,
How soone I may ride the whole world about ;
And at the third question thou must not shrink,
But tell me here truly what I do think."

"O these are hard questions for my shallow witt.
Nor I cannot answer your grace as yet :
But if you will give me but three weeks' space,
Ile do my endeavor to answer your grace."

"Now three weeks' space to thee will I give,
And that is the longest time thou hast to live ;
For if thou dost not answer my questions three,
Thy lands and thy livings are forfeit to mee."

Away rode the abbot all sad at that word,
And he rode to Cambridge, and Oxenford ;
But never a doctor there was so wise,
That could with his learning an answer devise.

Then home rode the abbot of comfort so cold,
And he met his shepheard a-going to fold :
"How now, my lord abbot, you are welcome
home ;
What neues do you bring us from good King
John ?"

"Sad news, sad news, shepheard, I must give,
That I have but three days more to live ;
For if I do not answer him questions three,
My head will be smitten from my bodie.

"The first is to tell him, there in that stead,
With his crowne of golde so fair on his head,
Among all his liege-men so noble of birth,
To within one penny of what he is worth.

"The seconde, to tell him without any doubt,
How soone he may ride this whole world about ;
And at the third question I must not shrinke,
But tell him there truly what he does thinke."

"Now cheare up, sire abbot, did you never hear yet,
That a fool he may learne a wise man witt ?
Lend me horse, and serving-men, and your apparel,
And Ile ride to London to answere your quarrel.

"Nay, frowne not, if it hath bin told unto me,
I am like your lordship, as ever may be ;

And if you will but lend me your gowne,
There is none shall know us at fair London towne."

"Now horses and serving-men thou shalt have,
With sumptuous array most gallant and brave,
With crozier, and mitre, and rochet, and cope,
Fit to appear 'fore our fader the pope."

"Now welcome, sire abbot," the king he did say,
"T is well thou 'rt come back to keepe thy day :
For and if thou canst answer my questions three,
Thy life and thy living both saved shall be.

"And first, when thou seest me here in this stead,
With my crowne of golde so fair on my head,
Among all my liege-men so noble of birthe,
Tell me to one penny what I am worth."

"For thirty pence our Saviour was sold
Among the false Jewes, as I have bin told,
And twenty-nine is the worth of thee,
For I thinke thou art one penny worser than he."

The king he laughed, and swore by St. Bittel,
"I did not think I had been worth so littel !
— Now secondly tell me, without any doubt,
How soone I may ride this whole world about."

"You must rise with the sun, and ride with the same
Until the next morning he riseth againe ;
And then your grace need not make any doubt
But in twenty-four hours you 'll ride it about."

The king he laughed, and swore by St. Jone,
"I did not think it could be gone so soone !
— Now from the third question thou must not shrinke,
But tell me here truly what I do thinke."

"Yea, that shall I do, and make your grace merry ;
You thinke I 'm the Abbot of Canterbury ;
But I 'm his poor shepheard, as plain you may see,
That am come to beg pardon for him and for me."

The king he laughed, and swore by the Masse,
"He make thee lord abbot this day in his place !"
"Now naye, my liege, be not in such speede,
For alacke I can neither write ne reade."

"Four nobles a week then I will give thee,
For this merry jest thou hast showne unto me ;
And tell the old abbot when thou comest home,
Thou hast brought him a pardon from good King
John."

ANONYMOUS.

JOHN BARLEYCORN.*

THERE was three kings into the East,
Three kings both great and high,
And they hae sworn a solemn oath
John Barleycorn should die.

They took a plough and ploughed him down,
Put clods upon his head,
And they hae sworn a solemn oath,
John Barleycorn was dead.

But the cheerful spring came kindly on,
And showers began to fall ;
John Barleycorn got up again,
And sore surprised them all.

The sultry suns of summer came,
And he grew thick and strong,
His head well armed wi' pointed spears,
That no one should him wrong.

The sober autumn entered mild,
When he grew wan and pale ;
His bending joints and drooping head
Showed he began to fail.

His color sickened more and more,
He faded into age ;
And then his enemies began
To show their deadly rage.

They 've ta'en a weapon long and sharp,
And cut him by the knee ;
And tied him fast upon the cart,
Like a rogue for forgerie.

They laid him down upon his back,
And endgelled him full sore ;
They hung him up before the storm,
And turned him o'er and o'er.

They fillèd up a darksome pit
With water to the brim,
They heavèd in John Barleycorn,
There let him sink or swim.

They laid him out upon the floor,
To work him further woe,
And still, as signs of life appeared,
They tossed him to and fro.

They wasted, o'er a scorching flame,
The marrow of his bones ;
But a miller used him worst of all,
For he crushed him between two stones.

* An improvement on a very old ballad found in a black-letter volume in the Pepys library, Cambridge University.

And they hae ta'en his very heart's blood,
 And drank it round and round ;
 And still the more and more they drank,
 Their joy did more abound.

John Barleycorn was a hero bold,
 Of noble enterprise ;
 For if you do but taste his blood,
 'T will make your courage rise.

Then let us toast John Barleycorn,
 Each man a glass in hand ;
 And may his great posterity
 Ne'er fail in old Scotland !

OF A CERTAINE MAN.

THERE was (not certaine when) a certaine preacher,
 That never learned, and yet became a teacher,
 Who having read in Latine thus a text
 Of erat quidam homo, much perplext,
 He seemed the same with studie great to scan,
 In English thus, There was a certaine man.
 But now (quoth he), good people, note you this,
 He saith there was, he doth not say there is ;
 For in these daies of ours it is most plaine
 Of promise, oath, word, deed, no man's certaine ;
 Yet by my text you see it comes to passe
 That surely once a certaine man there was :
 But yet, I think, in all your Bible no man
 Can finde this text, There was a certaine
woman.

SIR JOHN HARRINGTON.

LOGIC OF HUDIBRAS.

FROM "HUDIBRAS," PART I. CANTO I.

HE was in logic a great critic,
 Profoundly skilled in analytic ;
 He could distinguish and divide
 A hair, 'twixt south and southwest side ;
 On either which he would dispute,
 Confute, change hands, and still confute ;
 He'd undertake to prove, by force
 Of argument, a man's no horse ;
 He'd prove a buzzard is no fowl,
 And that a lord may be an owl,
 A calf an alderman, a goose a justice,
 And rooks committee-men and trustees.
 He'd run in debt by disputation,
 And pay with ratiocination :
 All this by syllogism true,
 In mood and figure he would do.

DR. SAMUEL BUTLER.

THE VICAR OF BRAY.

[“The Vicar of Bray in Berkshire, England, was Simon Alleyn, or Allen, and held his place from 1540 to 1538. He was a Papist under the reign of Henry the Eighth, and a Protestant under Edward the Sixth. He was a Papist again under Mary, and once more became a Protestant in the reign of Elizabeth. When this scandal to the gown was reproached for his versatility of religious creeds, and taxed for being a turn-coat and an inconstant changeling, as Fuller expresses it, he replied : ‘Not so neither ; for if I changed my religion, I am sure I kept true to my principle, which is to live and die the Vicar of Bray.’”—DISRAELI.]

IN good King Charles's golden days,
 When loyalty no harm meant,
 A zealous high-churchman was I,
 And so I got preferment.
 To teach my flock I never missed :
 Kings were by God appointed,
 And lost are those that dare resist
 Or touch the Lord's anointed.
And this is law that I'll maintain
Until my dying day, sir,
That whatsoever king shall reign,
Still I'll be the Vicar of Bray, sir.

When royal James possessed the crown,
 And popery came in fashion,
 The penal laws I hooted down,
 And read the Declaration ;
 The Church of Rome I found would fit
 Full well my constitution ;
 And I had been a Jesuit
 But for the Revolution.
And this is law, etc.

When William was our king declared,
 To ease the nation's grievance ;
 With this new wind about I steered,
 And swore to him allegiance ;
 Old principles I did revoke,
 Set conscience at a distance ;
 Passive obedience was a joke,
 A jest was non-resistance.
And this is law, etc.

When royal Anne became our queen,
 The Church of England's glory,
 Another face of things was seen,
 And I became a Tory ;
 Occasional conformists base,
 I blamed their moderation ;
 And thought the Church in danger was,
 By such prevarication.
And this is law, etc.

When George in pudding-time came o'er,
 And moderate men looked big, sir,
 My principles I changed once more,
 And so became a Whig, sir ;

And thus preferment I procured
From our new faith's-defender,
And almost every day abjured
The Pope and the Pretender.
And this is law, etc.

The illustrious house of Hanover,
And Protestant succession,
To these I do allegiance swear—
While they can keep possession :
For in my faith and loyalty
I nevermore will falter,
And George my lawful king shall be—
Until the times do alter.
And this is law, etc.

GOOD ALE.

I CANNOT eat but little meat, —
My stomach is not good ;
But, sure, I think that I can drink
With him that wears a hood.
Though I go bare, take ye no care ;
I nothing am a-cold, —
I stuff my skin so full within
Of jolly good ale and old.
*Back and side go bare, go bare ;
Both foot and hand go cold ;
But, belly, God send thee good ale enough,
Whether it be new or old !*

I love no roast but a nut-brown toast,
And a crab laid in the fire ;
A little bread shall do me stead, —
Much bread I not desire.
No frost, nor snow, nor wind, I trow,
Can hurt me if I wold, —
I am so wrapt, and thorowly lapt
Of jolly good ale and old.
Back and side, etc.

And Tyb, my wife, that as her life
Loveth well good ale to seek,
Full oft drinks she, till you may see
The tears run down her cheek ;
Then doth she trowl to me the bowl,
Even as a malt-worm should ;
And saith, "Sweetheart, I took my part
Of this jolly good ale and old."
Back and side, etc.

Now let them drink till they nod and wink,
Even as good fellows should do ;
They shall not miss to have the bliss
Good ale doth bring men to ;

And all poor souls that have scoured bowls,
Or have them lustily trowled,
God save the lives of them and their wives,
Whether they be young or old !
Back and side, etc.

GLUGGITY GLUG.

FROM "THE MYRTLE AND THE VINE."

A JOLLY fat friar loved liquor good store,
And he had drunk stoutly at supper ;
He mounted his horse in the night at the door,
And sat with his face to the crupper :
"Some rogue," quoth the friar, "quite dead to remorse,
Some thief, whom a halter will throttle,
Some scoundrel has cut off the head of my horse,
While I was engaged at the bottle,
Which went gluggity, gluggity — glug
— glug — glug."

The tail of the steed pointed south on the dale,
'T was the friar's road home, straight and level ;
But, when spurred, a horse follows his nose, not his tail,
So he scampered due north, like a devil :
"This new mode of docking," the friar then said,
"I perceive does n't make a horse trot ill ;
And 't is cheap, — for he never can eat off his head
While I am engaged at the bottle,
Which goes gluggity, gluggity — glug
— glug — glug."

The steed made a stop, — in a pond he had got,
He was rather for drinking than grazing ;
Quoth the friar, "T is strange headless horses should trot,
But to drink with their tails is amazing !"
Turning round to see whence this phenomenon
rose,
In the pond fell this son of a pottle ;
Quoth he, "The head's found, for I'm under his nose, —
I wish I were over a bottle,
Which goes gluggity, gluggity — glug
— glug — glug !"

GEORGE COLMAN, THE YOUNGER.

THE VIRTUOSO.*

"Videmus
Nugari solitos," — PERSIUS.

WHILOM by silver Thames's gentle stream,
In London town there dwelt a subtle wight, —
A wight of mickle wealth, and mickle fame,
Book-learned and quaint : a Virtuoso hight.

* In imitation of Spenser's style and stanza.

Uncommon things, and rare, were his delight ;
From musings deep his brain ne'er gotten ease,

Nor ceased he from study, day or night,
Until (advancing onward by degrees)
He knew whatever breeds on earth or air or seas.

He many a creature did anatomize,
Almost unpeopling water, air, and land ;
Beasts, fishes, birds, snails, caterpillars, flies,
Were laid full low by his relentless hand,
That oft with gory crimson was stained ;
He many a dog destroyed, and many a cat ;
Of fleas his bed, of frogs the marshes drained,
Could tellen if a mite were lean or fat,
And read a lecture o'er the entrails of a gnat.

He knew the various modes of ancient times,
Their arts and fashions of each different guise,
Their weddings, funerals, punishments for crimes,

Their strength, their learning eke, and rarities ;
Of old habiliments, each sort and size,
Male, female, high and low, to him were known ;
Each gladiator dress, and stage disguise ;
With learnèd, clerkly phrase he could have shown
How the Greek tunic differed from the Roman gown.

A curious medallist, I wot, he was,
And boasted many a course of ancient coin ;
Well as his wife's he knewen every face,
From Julius Cæsar down to Constantine :
For some rare sculpture he would oft ypine,
(As green-sick damosels for husbands do ;)
And when obtainèd, with enraptured eyne,
He'd run it o'er and o'er with greedy view,
And look, and look again, as he would look it through.

His rich museum, of dimensions fair,
With goods that spoke the owner's mind was fraught :

Things ancient, curious, value-worth, and rare,
From sea and land, from Greece and Rome,
were brought,

Which he with mighty sums of gold had bought :
On these all tides with joyous eyes he pored ;
And, sooth to say, himself he greater thought,
When he beheld his cabinets thus stored,
Than if he'd been of Albion's wealthy cities lord.

MARK AKENSIDE.

THE SPLENDID SHILLING.*

"Sing, heavenly Muse, Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme ;"
A shilling, breeches, and chimeras dire.

HAPPY the man, who, void of cares and strife,
In silken or in leathern purse retains
A Splendid Shilling : he nor hears with pain
New oysters cried, nor sighs for cheerful ale ;
But with his friends, when nightly mists arise,
To Juniper's Magpie, or Town Hall repairs ;
Where, mindful of the nymph, whose wanton eye
Transfixed his soul, and kindled amorous flames,
Chloe or Phyllis, he each circling glass
Wiseth her health and joy and equal love.
Meanwhile he smokes, and laughs at merry tale,
Or pun ambiguous or conundrum quaint.
But I, whom griping penury surrounds,
And hunger, sure attendant upon want,
With scanty offals, and small acid tiff
(Wretched repast ! ) my meagre corpse sustain :
Then solitary walk, or doze at home
In garret vile, and with a warming puff
Regale chilled fingers ; or from tube as black
As winter-chimney or well-polished jet,
Exhale mundungus, ill-perfuming scent.
Not blacker tube, nor of a shorter size,
Smokes Cambro-Briton (versed in pedigree,
Sprung from Cadwallador and Arthur, kings Full famous in romantic tale) when he
O'er many a craggy hill and barren cliff,
Upon a cargo of famed Cestrian cheese,
High overshadowing rides, with a design
To wend his wares at the Arvonian mart,
Or Maridunum, or the ancient town
Yeleeped Brechinia, or where Vaga's stream
Encircles Ariconium, fruitful soil !

Whence flow nectareous wines, that well may vie
With Massic, Setin, or renowned Falern.

Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
With looks demure, and silent pace, a Dun,
Horrible monster ! hated by gods and men,
To my aerial citadel ascends. †

With vocal heel thrice thundering at my gate,
With hideous accent thrice he calls ; I know
The voice ill-boding, and the solemn sound,
What should I do ? or whither turn ? Amazed,
Confounded, to the dark recess I fly
Of wood-hole ; straight my bristling hairs erect
Through sudden fear ; a chilly sweat bedews
My shuddering limbs, and (wonderful to tell ! )
My tongue forgets her faculty of speech ;
So horrible he seems ! His faded brow
Intrenched with many a frown, and conic beard,
And spreading band, admired by modern saints,
Disastrous acts forebode ; in his right hand

* A burlesque imitation of Milton's style.
† To wit, his garret.

Long scrolls of paper solemnly he waves,
With characters and figures dire inscribed,
Grievous to mortal eyes, (ye gods, avert
Such plagues from righteous men !) Behind him stalks

Another monster, not unlike itself,
Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar called
A Catchpole, whose polluted hands the gods
With force incredible, and magic charms,
First have endued : if he his ample palm
Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay
Of debtor, straight his body to the touch
Obsequious (as whilom knights were wont)
To some enchanted castle is conveyed,
Where gates impregnable, and coercive chains,
In durance strict detain him, till, in form
Of money, Pallas sets the captive free.

Beware, ye debtors ! when ye walk, beware,
Be circumspect ; oft with insidious ken
The caittiff eyes your steps aloof, and oft
Lies perdue in a nook or gloomy cave,
Prompt to enchant some inadvertent wretch
With his unhallowed touch. So (poets sing)
Grimalkin to domestic vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Portending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin. So her disembowelled web
Arachne, in a hall or kitchen, spreads
Obvious to vagrant flies : she secret stands
Within her woven cell ; the humming prey,
Regardless of their fate, rush on the toils
Inextricable, nor will aught avail
Their arts, or arms, or shapes of lovely hue.
The wasp insidious, and the buzzing drone,
And butterfly proud of expanded wings
Distinct with gold, entangled in her snares,
Useless resistance make ; with eager strides,
She towering flies to her expected spoils :
Then with envenomed jaws the vital blood
Drinks of reluctant foes, and to her cave
Their bulky carcasses triumphant drags.

So pass my days. But when nocturnal shades
This world envelop, and the inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumbing frosts
With pleasant wines and crackling blaze of wood,
Me, lonely sitting, nor the glimmering light
Of make-weight candle, nor the joyous talk
Of loving friend, delights ; distressed, forlorn,
Amidst the horrors of the tedious night,
Darkling I sigh, and feed with dismal thoughts
My anxious mind ; or sometimes mournful verse
Indite, and sing of groves and myrtle shades,
Or desperate lady near a purling stream,
Or lover pendent on a willow-tree.
Meanwhile I labor with eternal drought,
And restless wish, and rave ; my parchèd throat

Finds no relief, nor heavy eyes repose :
But if a slumber haply does invade
My weary limbs, my fancy, still awake,
Thoughtful of drink, and eager, in a dream,
Tipples imaginary pots of ale ;
In vain ; — awake I find the settled thirst
Still gnawing, and the pleasant phantom curse.

Thus do I live, from pleasure quite debarred,
Nor taste the fruits that the sun's genial rays
Mature, joln-apple, nor the downy peach,
Nor walnut in rough-furrowed coat secure,
Nor medlar fruit delicious in decay ;
Afflictions great ! yet greater still remain.
My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The winter's fury and encroaching frosts,
By time subdued, (what will not time subdue !)
An horrid chasm disclose with orifice
Wide, discontinuous ; at which the winds
Eurus and Auster and the dreadful force
Of Boreas, that congeals the Cronian waves,
Tumultuous enter with dire chilling blasts,
Portending agues. Thus a well-fraught ship,
Long sails secure, or through the Ægean deep,
Or the Ionian, till cruising near
The Lilybean shore, with hideous crush
On Scylla or Charybdis (dangerous rocks)
She strikes rebounding ; whence the shattered
oak,

So fierce a shock unable to withstand,
Admits the sea. In at the gaping side
The crowding waves gush with impetuous rage,
Resistless, overwhelming ; horrors seize
The mariners ; Death in their eyes appears,
They stare, they lave, they pump, they swear,
they pray :
(Vain efforts !) still the battering waves rush in,
Implacable, till, deluged by the foam,
The ship sinks foundering in the vast abyss.

ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF A MAD DOG.

Good people all, of every sort,
Give ear unto my song ;
And if you find it wondrous short,
It cannot hold you long.

In Islington there was a man
Of whom the world might say,
That still a godly race he ran —
Whene'er he went to pray.

A kind and gentle heart he had,
To comfort friends and foes :
The naked every day he clad —
When he put on his clothes.

And in that town a dog was found,
As many dogs there be,
Both mongrel, puppy, whelp, and hound,
And curs of low degree.

This dog and man at first were friends ;
But when a pique began,
The dog, to gain his private ends,
Went mad, and bit the man.

Around from all the neighboring streets
The wondering neighbors ran,
And swore the dog had lost his wits,
To bite so good a man !

The wound it seemed both sore and sad
To every Christian eye :
And while they swore the dog was mad,
They swore the man would die.

But soon a wonder came to light,
That showed the rogues they lied : —
The man recovered of the bite,
The dog it was that died !

OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

ELEGY ON MADAM BLAIZE.

Good people all, with one accord,
Lament for Madam Blaize ;
Who never wanted a good word —
From those who spoke her praise.

The needy seldom passed her door,
And always found her kind ;
She freely lent to all the poor —
Who left a pledge behind.

She strove the neighborhood to please,
With manner wondrous winning ;
She never followed wicked ways —
Unless when she was sinning.

At church, in silk and satins new,
With hoop of monstrous size,
She never slumbered in her pew —
But when she shut her eyes.

Her love was sought, I do aver,
By twenty beaux, or more ;
The king himself has followed her —
When she has walked before.

But now, her wealth and finery fled,
Her hangers-on cut short all,
Her doctors found, when she was dead —
Her last disorder mortal.

Let us lament, in sorrow sore ;
For Kent Street well may say,
That, had she lived a twelvemonth more —
She had not died to-day.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

THE DEVIL'S WALK.

FROM his brimstone bed at break of day
A walking the Devil has gone,
To look at his little, snug farm of the world,
And see how his stock went on.

Over the hill and over the dale,
And he went over the plain,
And backward and forward he swished his tail,
As a gentleman swishes a cane.

How then was the Devil dressed ?
O, he was in his Sunday's best ;
His coat was red, and his breeches were blue,
And there was a hole where his tail came through.

A lady drove by in her pride,
In whose face an expression he spied,
For which he could have kissed her ;
Such a flourishing, fine, clever creature was she,
With an eye as wicked as wicked can be :
" I should take her for my aunt," thought he ;
" If my dam had had a sister."

He met a lord of high degree, —
No matter what was his name, —
Whose face with his own when he came to compare
The expression, the look, and the air,
And the character too, as it seemed to a hair, —
Such a twin-likeness there was in the pair,
That it made the Devil start and stare ;
For he thought there was surely a looking-glass
there
But he could not see the frame.

He saw a lawyer killing a viper
On a dunghill beside his stable ;
" Ho !" quoth he, " thou put'st me in mind
Of the story of Cain and Abel."

An apothecary on a white horse
Rode by on his vocation ;
And the Devil thought of his old friend
Death in the Revelation.

He passed a cottage with a double coach-house,
A cottage of gentility ;
And he owned with a grin
That his favorite sin
Is pride that apes humility.

He saw a pig rapidly
Down a river float ;
The pig swam well, but every stroke
Was cutting his own throat ;

And Satan gave thereat his tail
A twirl of admiration ;
For he thought of his daughter War
And her suckling babe Taxation.

Well enough, in sooth, he liked that truth,
And nothing the worse for the jest ;
But this was only a first thought ;
And in this he did not rest :
Another came presently into his head ;
And here it proved, as has often been said,
That second thoughts are best.

For as piggy<sup>4</sup> plied, with wind and tide,
His way with such celerity,
And at every stroke the water dyed
With his own red blood, the Devil cried,
" Behold a swinish nation's pride
In cotton-spun prosperity ! "

He walked into London leisurely ;
The streets were dirty and dim ;
But there he saw Brothers the prophet,
And Brothers the prophet saw him.*

He entered a thriving bookseller's shop ;
Quoth he, " We are both of one college,
For I myself sate like a cormorant once
Upon the tree of knowledge."

As he passed through Cold-Bath Fields, he looked
At a solitary cell ;
And he was well pleased, for it gave him a hint
For improving the prisons of hell.

He saw a turnkey tie a thief's hands
With a cordial tug and jerk ;
" Nimble," quoth he, " a man's fingers move
When his heart is in his work."

He saw the same turnkey unfettering a man
With little expedition ;
And he chuckled to think of his dear slave-trade,
And the long debates and delays that were made Concerning its abolition.

At this good news, so great
The Devil's pleasure grew,
That with a joyful swish he rent
The hole where his tail came through.

* " After this I was in a vision, having the angel of God near me, and saw Satan walking leisurely into London." — BROTHERS' Prophecies, Part I. p. 41.

His countenance fell for a moment
When he felt the stitches go ;
" Ah ! " thought he, " there's a job now
That I've made for my tailor below."

" Great news ! bloody news ! " cried a newsman ;
The Devil said, " Stop, let me see !
Great news ? bloody news ? " thought the Devil,
" The bloodier the better for me."

So he bought the newspaper, and no news
At all for his money he had.
" Lying varlet," thought he, " thus to take in Old Nick !
But it's some satisfaction, my lad,
To know thou art paid beforehand for the trick,
For the sixpence I gave thee is bad."

And then it came into his head,
By oracular inspiration,
That what he had seen and what he had said,
In the course of this visitation,
Would be published in the Morning Post
For all this reading nation.

Therewith in second-sight he saw
The place and the manner and time,
In which this mortal story
Would be put in immortal rhyme.

That it would happen when two poets
Should on a time be met
In the town of Nether Stowey,
In the shire of Somerset.

There, while the one was shaving,
Would he the song begin ;
And the other, when he heard it at breakfast,
In ready accord join in.

So each would help the other,
Two heads being better than one ;
And the phrase and conceit
Would in unison meet,
And so with glee the verse flow free
In ding-dong chime of sing-song rhyme,
Till the whole were merrily done.

And because it was set to the razor,
Not to the lute or harp,
Therefore it was that the fancy
Should be bright, and the wit be sharp.

" But then," said Satan to himself,
" As for that said beginner,
Against my infernal Majesty
There is no greater sinner."

“He hath put me in ugly ballads
With libellous pictures for sale ;
He hath scoffed at my hoofs and my horns,
And has made very free with my tail.

“But this Mister Poet shall find
I am not a safe subject for whim ;
For I’ll set up a school of my own,
And my poets shall set upon him.”

As he went along the Strand
Between three in the morning and four,
He observed a queer-looking person *
Who staggered from Perry’s door.

And he thought that all the world over
In vain for a man you might seek,
Who could drink more like a Trojan,
Or talk more like a Greek.

The Devil then he prophesied
It would one day be matter of talk,
That with wine when smitten,
And with wit moreover being happily bitten,
This erudite bibber was he who had written
The story of this walk.

“A pretty mistake,” quoth the Devil ;
“A pretty mistake, I opine !
I have put many ill thoughts in his mouth ;
He will never put good ones in mine.”

Now the morning air was cold for him,
Who was used to a warm abode ;
And yet he did not immediately wish
To set out on his homeward road.

For he had some morning calls to make
Before he went back to hell ;
“So,” thought he, “I’ll step into a gaming-house,
And that will do as well ;”
But just before he could get to the door
A wonderful chance befell.

For all on a sudden, in a dark place,
He came upon General —’s burning face ;
And it struck him with such consternation,
That home in a hurry his way did he take,
Because he thought by a slight mistake
’T was the general conflagration.

THE DEVIL AT HOME.

FROM “THE DEVIL’S PROGRESS.”

The Devil sits in his easy-chair,
Sipping his sulphur tea,
And gazing out, with a pensive air,
O’er the broad bitumen sea ;
Lulled into sentimental mood
By the spirits’ far-off wail,
That sweetly, o’er the burning flood,
Floats on the brimstone gale ! —
The Devil, who can be sad at times,
In spite of all his mummery,
And grave, — though not so prosy quite
As drawn by his friend Montgomery, —
The Devil to-day has a dreaming air,
And his eye is raised, and his throat is bare.
His musings are of many things,
That — good or ill — befell,
Since Adam’s sons macadamized
The highways into hell : —
And the Devil — whose mirth is never loud —
Laughs with a quiet mirth,
As he thinks how well his serpent-tricks
Have been mimicked upon earth ;
Of Eden and of England, soiled
And darkened by the foot
Of those who preach with adder-tongues,
And those who eat the fruit ;
Of creeping things, that drag their slime
Into God’s chosen places,
And knowledge leading into crime,
Before the angels’ faces ;
Of lands — from Nineveh to Spain —
That have bowed beneath his sway,
And men who did his work, — from Cain
To Viscount Castlereagh !

THE NOSE AND THE EYES.

BETWEEN Nose and Eyes a strange contest arose ;
The spectacles set them, unhappily, wrong ;
The point in dispute was, as all the world knows,
To whom the said spectacles ought to belong.

So Tongue was the lawyer, and argued the cause,
With a great deal of skill, and a wig full of learning,
While chief baron Ear sat to balance the laws, —
So famed for his talent in nicely discerning.

“In behalf of the Nose, it will quickly appear (And your lordship,” he said, “will undoubtedly find)

That the Nose has the spectacles always to wear,
Which amounts to possession, time out of mind."

Then, holding the spectacles up to the court,
"Your lordship observes, they are made with a straddle,

As wide as the ridge of the Nose is ; in short,
Designed to sit close to it, just like a saddle.

"Again, would your lordship a moment suppose (T is a case that has happened, and may happen again)

That the visage or countenance had not a Nose, Pray, who would, or who could, wear spectacles then ?

"On the whole, it appears, and my argument shows,

With a reasoning the court will never condemn,
That the spectacles, plainly, were made for the Nose,

And the Nose was, as plainly, intended for them."

Then shifting his side (as a lawyer knows how),
He pleaded again in behalf of the Eyes :

But what were his arguments, few people know,
For the court did not think them equally wise.

So his lordship decreed, with a grave, solemn tone,

Decisive and clear, without one if or but,
That whenever the Nose put his spectacles on,
By daylight or candlelight, — Eyes should be shut.

ADDRESS TO THE TOOTHACHE.

My curse upon thy venom'd stang,
That shoots my tortured gums along ;
An' through my lugs gies mony a twang,
Wi' gnawing vengeance !
Tearing my nerves wi' bitter pang,
Like racking engines.

When fevers burn, or ague freezes,
Rheumatics gnaw, or cholic squeezes ;
Our neighbor's sympathy may ease us,
Wi' pitying moan ;
But thee, — thou hell o' a' diseases,
Aye mocks our groan.

Adown my beard the slavers trickle ;
I throw the wee stools o'er the mickle,
As round the fire the giglets keckle
To see me loup ;
While, raving mad, I wish a heckle
Were in their doup.

O' a' the numerous human dools,
Ill har'sts, daft bargains, cutty-stools,
Or worthy friends raked i' the mools,
Sad sight to see !
The tricks o' knaves or fash o' fools,
Thou bear'st the gree.

Where'er that place be priests ca' hell,
Whence a' the tones o' mis'ry yell,
And rankèd plagues their numbers tell,
In dreadfu' raw,
Thou, Toothache, surely bear'st the bell,
Among them a' ;

O thou grim mischief-making chiel,
That gars the notes of discord squeal,
Till daft mankind aft dance a reel
In gore a shoe-thick ! —
Gie a' the faes o' Scotland's weal
A fowmond's Toothache !

THE FRIEND OF HUMANITY AND THE KNIFE-GRINDER.*

FRIEND OF HUMANITY.

NEEDY knife-grinder ! whither are you going ?
Rough is the road ; your wheel is out of order.
Bleak blows the blast ; — your hat has got a hole in 't ;
So have your breeches !

Weary knife-grinder ! little think the proud ones,
Who in their coaches roll along the turnpike-
Road, what hard work 't is crying all day,
' Knives and
Scissors to grind O !'

Tell me, knife-grinder, how came you to grind knives ?
Did some rich man tyrannically use you ?
Was it the squire ? or parson of the parish ?
Or the attorney ?

Was it the squire for killing of his game ? or Covetous parson for his tithes distraining ?
Or roguish lawyer made you lose your little
All in a lawsuit ?

(Have you not read the Rights of Man, by Tom Paine ?)

Drops of compassion tremble on my eyelids,
Ready to fall as soon as you have told your Pitiful story.

* A burlesque upon the humanitarian sentiments of Southey in his younger days, as well as of the Sapphic stanzas in which he sometimes embodied them.

KNIFE-GRINDER.

Story! God bless you! I have none to tell, sir;
Only, last night, a-drinking at the Chequers,
This poor old hat and breeches, as you see, were Torn in a scuffle.

Constables came up for to take me into Custody; they took me before the justice;
Justice Oldmixon put me into the parish
Stocks for a vagrant.

I should be glad to drink your honor's health in
A pot of beer, if you will give me sixpence;
But for my part, I never love to meddle
With politics, sir.

FRIEND OF HUMANITY.

I give thee sixpence! I will see thee damned
first, —
Wretch! whom no sense of wrongs can rouse to vengeance, —
Sordid, unfeeling, reprobate, degraded,
Spiritless outcast!

(Kicks the knife-grinder, overturns his wheel, and cavit in a transport of republican enthusiasm and universal philanthropy.)

GEORGE CANNING.

EPITAPH

FOR THE TOMBSTONE ERECTED OVER THE MAR-QUIS OF ANGLESEA'S LEG, LOST AT THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO.

HERE rests, and let no saucy knave
Presume to sneer and laugh,
To learn that mouldering in the grave
Is laid a British Calf.

For he who writes these lines is sure,
That those who read the whole
Will find such laugh was premature,
For here, too, lies a sole.

And here five little ones repose,
Twin born with other five,
Unheeded by their brother toes,
Who all are now alive.

A leg and foot, to speak more plain,
Rests here of one commanding;
Who, though his wits he might retain,
Lost half his understanding.

And when the guns, with thunder fraught,
Poured bullets thick as hail,
Could only in this way be taught
To give the foe leg-bail.

And now in England, just as gay
As in the battle brave,
Goes to a rout, review, or play,
With one foot in the grave.

Fortune in vain here showed her spite,
For he will still be found,
Should England's sons engage in fight,
Resolved to stand his ground.

But Fortune's pardon I must beg;
She meant not to disarm,
For when she lopped the hero's leg,
She did not seek his harm,

And but indulged a harmless whim;
Since he could walk with one,
She saw two legs were lost on him,
Who never meant to run.

GEORGE CANNING.

THE PILGRIMS AND THE PEAS.

A BRACE of sinners, for no good,
Were ordered to the Virgin Mary's shrine,
Who at Loretto dwelt, in wax, stone, wood,
And in a fair white wig looked wondrous fine.
Fifty long miles had those sad rogues to travel,
With something in their shoes much worse than gravel;

In short, their toes so gentle to amuse,
The priest had ordered peas into their shoes:
A nostrum famous in old popish times
For purifying souls that stunk of crimes:
A sort of apostolic salt,
Which popish parsons for its powers exalt,
For keeping souls of sinners sweet,
Just as our kitchen salt keeps meat.

The knaves set off on the same day,
Peas in their shoes, to go and pray;
But very different was their speed, I wot:
One of the sinners galloped on,
Swift as a bullet from a gun;
The other limped, as if he had been shot.
One saw the Virgin soon, Peccavi cried,
Had his soul whitewashed all so clever;
Then home again he nimbly hied,
Made fit with saints above to live forever.

In coming back, however, let me say,
He met his brother rogue about half-way, —
Hobbling, with outstretched arms and bended knees,
Cursing the souls and bodies of the peas;
His eyes in tears, his cheeks and brow in sweat,
Deep sympathizing with his groaning feet.

"How now," the light-toed, whitewashed pilgrim broke,
"You lazy lubber!"
"Ods curse it!" cried the other, "'t is no joke;
My feet, once hard as any rock,
Are now as soft as blubber.

"Excuse me, Virgin Mary, that I swear,
As for Loretto, I shall not get there;
No, to the devil my sinful soul must go,
For damme if I ha'n't lost every toe.
But, brother sinner, pray explain
How 't is that you are not in pain.

What power hath worked a wonder for your toes,
Whilst I just like a snail am crawling,
Now swearing, now on saints devoutly bawling,
Whilst not a rascal comes to ease my woes?

"How is 't that you can like a greyhound go,
Merry as if that naught had happened, burn
ye!"

"Why," cried the other, grinning, "you must know,
That just before I ventured on my journey,
To walk a little more at ease,
I took the liberty to boil my peas."

DR. JOHN WOLCOTT (Peter Pindar).

THE RAZOR-SELLER.

A FELLOW in a market-town,
Most musical, cried razors up and down,
And offered twelve for eighteen pence;
Which certainly seemed wondrous cheap,
And, for the money, quite a heap,
As every man would buy, with cash and sense.

A country bumpkin the great offer heard, —
Poor Hodge, who suffered by a broad black beard,
That seemed a shoe-brush stuck beneath his
nose :

With cheerfulness the eighteen pence he paid,
And proudly to himself in whispers said,
"This rascal stole the razors, I suppose.

"No matter if the fellow be a knave,
Provided that the razors shave;
It certainly will be a monstrous prize."
So home the clown, with his good fortune, went,
Smiling, in heart and soul content,
And quickly soaped himself to ears and eyes.

Being well lathered from a dish or tub,
Hodge now began with grinning pain to grub,
Just like a hedger cutting furze;

'T was a vile razor! — then the rest he tried, —
All were impostors. "Ah!" Hodge sighed,
"I wish my eighteen pence within my purse."

In vain to chase his beard, and bring the graces,
He cut, and dug, and winced, and stamped,
and swore;
Brought blood, and danced, blasphemed, and made wry faces,
And cursed each razor's body o'er and o'er :

His muzzle formed of opposition stuff,
Firm as a Foxite, would not lose its ruff;
So kept it, — laughing at the steel and suds.
Hodge, in a passion, stretched his angry jaws,
Vowing the direst vengeance with clenched claws,
On the vile cheat that sold the goods.
"Razors! a mean, confounded dog,
Not fit to scrape a hog!"

Hodge sought the fellow, — found him, — and began :

"P'rhaps, Master Razor-rogue, to you 't is fun,
That people flay themselves out of their lives.
You rascal! for an hour have I been grubbing,
Giving my crying whiskers here a scrubbing,
With razors just like oyster-knives.
Sirrah! I tell you you 're a knave,
To cry up razors that can't shave!"

"Friend," quoth the razor-man, "I 'm not a knave;

As for the razors you have bought,
Upon my soul, I never thought
That they would shave."
"Not think they 'd shave!" quoth Hodge, with wondering eyes,
And voice not much unlike an Indian yell;
"What were they made for, then, you dog?"
he cries.

"Made," quoth the fellow with a smile, —
"to sell."

EPIGRAMS BY S. T. COLERIDGE.

COLOGNE.

IN KÖLN, a town of monks and bones,
And pavements fanged with murderous stones,
And rags, and hags, and hideous wenches, —
I counted two-and-seventy stenches,
All well-defined and several stinks!
Ye nymphs that reign o'er sewers and sinks,
The river Rhine, it is well known,
Doth wash your city of Cologne;
But tell me, nymphs! what power divine
Shall henceforth wash the river Rhine?

SLY Beelzebub took all occasions
To try Job's constancy and patience.
He took his honor, took his health ;
He took his children, took his wealth,
His servants, oxen, horses, cows —
But cunning Satan did not take his spouse.

But Heaven, that brings out good from evil,
And loves to disappoint the devil,
Had predetermined to restore
Twofold all he had before ;
His servants, horses, oxen, cows —
Short-sighted devil, not to take his spouse !

HOARSE Mævius reads his hobbling verse
To all, and at all times,
And finds them both divinely smooth,
His voice as well as rhymes.

Yet folks say Mævius is no ass ;
But Mævius makes it clear
That he's a monster of an ass, —
An ass without an ear !

SWANS sing before they die, — 't were no bad thing
Did certain persons die before they sing.

THE WELL OF ST. KEYNE.

"In the parish of St. Neots, Cornwall, is a well arched over with the robes of four kinds of trees, — withy, oak, elm, and ash, — and dedicated to St. Keyne. The reported virtue of the water is this, that, whether husband or wife first drink thereof, they get the mastery thereby." — FULLER.

A WELL there is in the West country,
And a clearer one never was seen ;
There is not a wife in the West country
But has heard of the Well of St. Keyne.

An oak and an elm tree stand beside,
And behind does an ash-tree grow,
And a willow from the bank above
Droops to the water below.

A traveller came to the Well of St. Keyne ;
Pleasant it was to his eye,
For from cock-crow he had been travelling,
And there was not a cloud in the sky.

He drank of the water so cool and clear,
For thirsty and hot was he,
And he sat down upon the bank,
Under the willow-tree.

There came a man from the neighboring town
At the well to fill his pail,
On the well-side he rested it,
And bade the stranger hail.

"Now art thou a bachelor, stranger ?" quoth he,
"For an if thou hast a wife,
The happiest draught thou hast drank this day
That ever thou didst in thy life.

"Or has your good woman, if one you have,
In Cornwall ever been ?
For an if she have, I'll venture my life
She has drunk of the Well of St. Keyne."

"I have left a good woman who never was here,"
The stranger he made reply ;
"But that my draught should be better for that,
"I pray you answer me why."

"St. Keyne," quoth the countryman, "many a time
Drank of this crystal well,
And before the angel summoned, her
She laid on the water a spell.

"If the husband of this gifted well
Shall drink before his wife,
A happy man thenceforth is he,
For he shall be master for life.

"But if the wife should drink of it first, Heaven help the husband then !"
The stranger stooped to the Well of St. Keyne,
And drank of the waters again.

"You drank of the well, I warrant, betimes ?"
He to the countryman said.
But the countryman smiled as the stranger spake,
And sheepishly shook his head.

"I hastened, as soon as the wedding was done,
And left my wife in the porch.
But 'f faith, she had been wiser than me,
For she took a bottle to church."

ROBERT SOUTHEY.

THE EGGS AND THE HORSES.

A MATRIMONIAL EPIC.

JOHN DOBBINS was so captivated
By Mary Trueman's fortune, face, and cap, (With near two thousand pounds the hook was baited,)

That in he popped to matrimony's trap.

One small ingredient towards happiness,
It seems, ne'er occupied a single thought ;

For his accomplished bride
Appearing well supplied
With the three charms of riches, beauty, dress,
He did not, as he ought,
Think of aught else ; so no inquiry made he
As to the temper of the lady.

And here was certainly a great omission ;
None should accept of Hymen's gentle fetter,
"For worse or better,"

Whatever be their prospect or condition,
Without acquaintance with each other's nature ;
For many a mild and quiet creature
Of charming disposition,
Alas ! by thoughtless marriage has destroyed it.
So take advice ; let girls dress e'er so tastily,
Don't enter into wedlock hastily
Unless you can't avoid it.

Week followed week, and, it must be confessed,
The bridegroom and the bride had both been blest ;

Month after month had languidly transpired,
Both parties became tired :
Year after year dragged on ;
Their happiness was gone.

Ah ! foolish pair !
"Bear and forbear"
Should be the rule for married folks to take.
But blind mankind (poor discontented elves !)
Too often make
The misery of themselves.

At length the husband said, "This will not do !
Mary, I never will be ruled by you ;
So, wife, d' ye see ?
To live together as we can't agree,
Suppose we part !"
With woman's pride,
Mary replied,
"With all my heart !"

John Dobbins then to Mary's father goes,
And gives the list of his imagined woes.

"Dear son-in-law !" the father said, "I see
All is quite true that you've been telling me ;
Yet there in marriage is such strange fatality,
That when as much of life
You shall have seen
As it has been
My lot to see, I think you'll own your wife
As good or better than the generality.

"An interest in your case I really take,
And therefore gladly this agreement make :
An hundred eggs within this basket lie,
With which your luck, to-morrow, you shall try ;
Also my five best horses, with my cart ;
And from the farm at dawn you shall depart.
All round the country go,
And be particular, I beg ;
Where husbands rule, a horse bestow,
But where the wives, an egg.

And if the horses go before the eggs,
I'll ease you of your wife, — I will, — I' fegs !"

Away the married man departed,
Brisk and light-hearted :
Not doubting that, of course,
The first five houses each would take a horse.
At the first house he knocked,
He felt a little shocked
To hear a female voice, with angry roar,
Scream out, — "Hullo !
Who's there below ?
Why, husband, are you deaf ? go to the door,
See who it is, I beg."
Our poor friend John
Trudged quickly on,
But first laid at the door an egg.

I will not all his journey through
The discontented traveller pursue ;
Suffice it here to say
That when his first day's task was nearly done,
He'd seen an hundred husbands, minus one,
And eggs just ninety-nine had given away.
"Ha ! there's a house where he I seek must dwell,"
At length cried John ; "I'll go and ring the bell."

The servant came, — John asked him,
"Pray,
Friend, is your master in the way ?"
"No," said the man, with smiling pliz,
"My master is not, but my mistress is ;
Walk in that parlor, sir, my lady's in it :
Master will be himself there—in a minute."
The lady said her husband then was dressing,
And, if his business was not very pressing,
She would prefer that he should wait until
His toilet was completed ;
Adding, "Pray, sir, be seated."
"Madam, I will,"
Said John, with great politeness ; "but I own
That you alone
Can tell me all I wish to know ;
Will you do so ?
Pardon my rudeness,
And just have the goodness
(A wager to decide) to tell me — do —
Who governs in this house, — your spouse or you ?"

"Sir," said the lady, with a doubting nod,
"Your question's very odd ;
But as I think none ought to be Ashamed to do their duty (do you see ?)
On that account I scruple not to say
It always is my pleasure to obey.

But here's my husband (always sad without me);
Take not my word, but ask him, if you doubt me."

"Sir," said the husband, "'t is most true;
I promise you,
A more obedient, kind, and gentle woman
Does not exist."

"Give us your fist,"
Said John, "and, as the case is something more than common,
Allow me to present you with a beast
Worth fifty guineas at the very least.

"There's Smiler, sir, a beauty, you must own,
There's Prince, that handsome black,
Ball the gray mare, and Saladin the roan,
Besides old Dunn;
Come, sir, choose one;
But take advice from me,
Let Prince be he;
Why, sir, you'll look the hero on his back."

"I'll take the black, and thank you too."
"Nay, husband, that will never do;
You know, you've often heard me say
How much I long to have a gray;
And this one will exactly do for me."

"No, no," said he,
"Friend, take the four others back,
And only leave the black."

"Nay, husband, I declare
I must have the gray mare;"
Adding (with gentle force),

"The gray mare is, I'm sure, the better horse."

"Well, if it must be so, — good sir,
The gray mare we prefer;
So we accept your gift." John made a leg:

"Allow me to present you with an egg;
'T is my last egg remaining,
The cause of my regaining,
I trust, the fond affection of my wife,
Whom I will love the better all my life.

"Home to content has her kind father brought me;
I thank him for the lesson he has taught me."

THE MILKMAID.

A MILKMAID, who poised a full pail on her head,
Thus mused on her prospects in life, it is said:
"Let me see, — I should think that this milk will procure
One hundred good eggs, or fourscore, to be sure."

"Well then, — stop a bit, — it must not be forgotten,
Some of these may be broken, and some may be rotten;

But if twenty for accident should be detached,
It will leave me just sixty sound eggs to be hatched.

"Well, sixty sound eggs, — no, sound chickens,
I mean:

Of these some may die, — we'll suppose seventeen,
Seventeen! not so many, — say ten at the most,
Which will leave fifty chickens to boil or to roast.

"But then there's their barley: how much will they need?

Why, they take but one grain at a time when they feed, —

So that's a mere trifle; now then, let us see,
At a fair market price how much money there'll be.

"Six shillings a pair — five — four — three-and-six,

To prevent all mistakes, that low price I will fix;
Now what will that make? fifty chickens, I said, —
Fifty times three-and-sixpence — I'll ask Brother Ned.

"O, but stop, — three-and-sixpence a pair I must sell 'em;

Well, a pair is a couple, — now then let us tell 'em;

A couple in fifty will go (my poor brain!)
Why, just a score times, and five pair will remain.

"Twenty-five pair of fowls — now how tiresome it is

That I can't reckon up so much money as this!
Well, there's no use in trying, so let's give a guess, —

I'll say twenty pounds, and it can't be no less.

"Twenty pounds, I am certain, will buy me a cow,
Thirty geese, and two turkeys, — eight pigs and a sow;

Now if these turn out well, at the end of the year,
I shall fill both my pockets with guineas, 't is clear."

Forgetting her burden, when this she had said,
The maid superciliously tossed up her head;
When, alas for her prospects! her milk-pail descended,

And so all her schemes for the future were ended.

This moral, I think, may be safely attached, —
"Reckon not on your chickens before they are hatched."

JEFFREYS TAYLOR.

WHERE ARE YOU GOING, MY PRETTY
MAID ?

"WHERE are you going, my pretty maid ?"
 "I am going a-milking, sir," she said.
 "May I go with you, my pretty maid ?"
 "You're kindly welcome, sir," she said.
 "What is your father, my pretty maid ?"
 "My father's a farmer, sir," she said.
 "What is your fortune, my pretty maid ?"
 "My face is my fortune, sir," she said.
 "Then I won't marry you, my pretty maid ?"
 "Nobody asked you, sir," she said.

TOBY TOSSPOT.

ALAS ! what pity 't is that regularity,
 Like Isaac Shove's, is such a rarity !
 But there are swilling wights in London town,
 Termed jolly dogs, choice spirits, alias swine,
 Who pour, in midnight revel, bumpers down,
 Making their throats a thoroughfare for wine.

Thesependthrifts, wholife'spleasures thus run on,
 Dozing with headaches till the afternoon,
 Lose half men's regular estate of sun,
 By borrowing too largely of the moon.

One of this kidney — Toby Tossopot hight —
 Was coming from the Bedford late at night ;
 And being Bacchi plenus, full of wine,
 Although he had a tolerable notion
 Of aiming at progressive motion,
 'T was n't direct, — 't was serpentine.
 He worked with sinusities, along,
 Like Monsieur Corkscrew, worming through a cork,
 Not straight, like Corkscrew's proxy, stiff Don Prong, — a fork.

At length, with near four bottles in his pate,
 He saw the moon shining on Shove's brass plate,
 When reading, "Please to ring the bell,"
 And being civil beyond measure,
 "Ring it !" says Toby, — "very well ;
 I'll ring it with a deal of pleasure."
 Toby, the kindest soul in all the town,
 Gave it a jerk that almost jerked it down.

He waited full two minutes, — no one came ;
 He waited full two minutes more ; — and then Says Toby, "If he's deaf, I'm not to blame ;
 I'll pull it for the gentleman again."

But the first peal woke Isaac in a fright,
 Who, quick as lightning, popping up his head,
 Sat on his head's antipodes, in bed,
 Pale as a parsnip, — bolt upright.

At length he wisely to himself doth say, calming his fears, —

"Tush ! 't is some fool has rung and run away ;"
 When peal the second rattled in his ears.

Shove jumped into the middle of the floor ;
 And, trembling at each breath of air that stirred,
 He groped down stairs, and opened the street
 door,
 While Toby was performing peal the third.

Isaac eyed Toby, fearfully askant,
 And saw he was a strapper, stout and tall ;
 Then put this question, "Pray, sir, what d' ye want ?"
 Says Toby, "I want nothing, sir, at all."

"Want nothing ! Sir, you've pulled my bell, I vow,
 As if you'd jerk it off the wire."
 Quoth Toby, gravely making him a bow,
 "I pulled it, sir, at your desire."

"At mine ?" "Yes, yours ; I hope I've done
 it well.

High time for bed, sir ; I was hastening to it ;
 But if you write up, 'Please to ring the bell,'
 Common politeness makes me stop and do it."

GEORGE COLMAN THE YOUNGER.

SIR MARMADUKE.

SIR MARMADUKE was a hearty knight, —
 Good man ! old man !
 He's painted standing bolt upright,
 With his hose rolled over his knee ;
 His periwig's as white as chalk,
 And on his fist he holds a hawk ;
 And he looks like the head
 Of an ancient family.

His dining-room was long and wide, —
 Good man ! old man !
 His spaniels lay by the fireside ;
 And in other parts, d' ye see,
 Cross-bows, tobacco-pipes, old hats,
 A saddle, his wife, and a litter of cats ;
 And he looked like the head
 Of an ancient family.

He never turned the poor from the gate, —
 Good man ! old man !
 But was always ready to break the pate
 Of his country's enemy.

What knight could do a better thing
Than serve the poor and fight for his king?
And so may every head
Of an ancient family.

GEORGE COLMAN THE YOUNGER.

THE FINE OLD ENGLISH GENTLEMAN.*

I'll sing you a good old song,
Made by a good old pate,
Of a fine old English gentleman
Who had an old estate,
And who kept up his old mansion
At a bountiful old rate;
With a good old porter to relieve
The old poor at his gate,
Like a fine old English gentleman
All of the olden time.

His hall so old was hung around
With pikes and guns and bows,
And swords, and good old bucklers,
That had stood some tough old blows;
'T was there "his worship" held his state
In doublet and trunk hose,
And quaffed his cup of good old sack,
To warm his good old nose,
Like a fine, etc.

When winter's cold brought frost and snow,
He opened house to all;
And though threescore and ten his years,
He featly led the ball;
Nor was the houseless wanderer
E'er driven from his hall;
For while he feasted all the great,
He ne'er forgot the small;
Like a fine, etc.

But time, though old, is strong in flight,
And years rolled swiftly by;
And Autumn's falling leaves proclaimed
This good old man must die!
He laid him down right tranquilly,
Gave up life's latest sigh;
And mournful stillness reigned around,
And tears bedewed each eye,
For this good, etc.

Now surely this is better far
Than all the new parade
Of theatres and fancy balls,
"At home" and masquerade:

* Modelled upon an old black-letter song, called "The Old and Young Courtier."

And much more economical,
For all his bills were paid.
Then leave your new vagaries quite,
And take up the old trade
Of a fine old English gentleman,
All of the olden time.

THE DIVERTING HISTORY OF JOHN GILPIN.

SHOWING HOW HE WENT FARTHER THAN HE INTENDED,
AND CAME SAFE HOME AGAIN.

JOHN GILPIN was a citizen
Of credit and renown,
A trainband captain eke was he
Of famous London town.

John Gilpin's spouse said to her dear—
"Though wedded we have been
These twice ten tedious years, yet we
No holiday have seen.

"To-morrow is our wedding-day,
And we will then repair
Unto the Bell at Edmonton
All in a chaise and pair.

"My sister and my sister's child,
Myself and children three,
Will fill the chaise; so you must ride
On horseback after we."

He soon replied, "I do admire
Of womankind but one,
And you are she, my dearest dear:
Therefore it shall be done.

"I am a linendraper bold,
As all the world doth know,
And my good friend the calender
Will lend his horse to go."

Quoth Mrs. Gilpin, "That's well said;
And for that wine is dear,
We will be furnished with our own,
Which is both bright and clear."

John Gilpin kissed his loving wife;
O'erjoyed was he to find,
That, though on pleasure she was bent,
She had a frugal mind.

The morning came, the chaise was brought,
But yet was not allowed
To drive up to the door, lest all
Should say that she was proud.

So three doors off the chaise was stayed,
Where they did all get in ;
Six precious souls, and all agog
To dash through thick and thin.

Smack went the whip, round went the wheels,
Were never folks so glad ;
The stones did rattle underneath,
As if Cheapside were mad.

John Gilpin at his horse's side
Seized fast the flowing mane,
And up he got, in haste to ride,
But soon came down again ;

For saddle-tree scarce reached had he,
His journey to begin,
When, turning round his head, he saw
Three customers come in.

So down he came ; for loss of time,
Although it grieved him sore,
Yet loss of pence, full well he knew,
Would trouble him much more.

'T was long before the customers
Were suited to their mind,
When Betty screaming came down stairs,
"The wine is left behind !"

"Good lack !" quoth he, "yet bring it me,
My leathern belt likewise,
In which I bear my trusty sword
When I do exercise."

Now Mistress Gilpin (careful soul !)
Had two stone bottles found,
To hold the liquor that she loved,
And keep it safe and sound.

Each bottle had a curling ear,
Through which the belt he drew,
And hung a bottle on each side,
To make his balance true.

Then over all, that he might be Equipped from top to toe,
His long red cloak, well brushed and neat,
He manfully did throw.

Now see him mounted once again
Upon his nimble steed,
Full slowly pacing o'er the stones,
With caution and good heed.

But finding soon a smoother road
Beneath his well-shod feet,
The snorting beast began to trot,
Which galled him in his seat.

"So, fair and softly," John he cried,
But John he cried in vain ;
That trot became a gallop soon,
In spite of curb and rein.

So stooping down, as needs he must
Who cannot sit upright,
He grasped the mane with both his hands,
And eke with all his might.

His horse, who never in that sort
Had handled been before,
What thing upon his back had got
Did wonder more and more.

Away went Gilpin, neck or naught ;
Away went hat and wig ;
He little dreamt, when he set out,
Of running such a rig.

The wind did blow, the cloak did fly,
Like streamer long and gay,
Till, loop and button failing both,
At last it flew away.

Then might all people well discern
The bottles he had slung ;
A bottle swinging at each side,
As hath been said or sung.

The dogs did bark, the children screamed,
Up flew the windows all ;
And every soul cried out, "Well done !"
As loud as he could bawl.

Away went Gilpin, — who but he ?
His fame soon spread around,
"He carries weight ! he rides a race !"
"T is for a thousand pound !"

And still as fast as he drew near,
'T was wonderful to view,
How in a trice the turnpike men
Their gates wide open threw.

And now, as he went bowing down
His reeking head full low,
The bottles twain behind his back
Were shattered at a blow.

Down ran the wine into the road,
Most piteous to be seen,
Which made his horse's flanks to smoko
As they had basted been.

But still he seemed to carry weight,
With leathern girdle braaced ;
For all might see the bottle necks
Still dangling at his waist.

Thus all through merry Islington
 These gambols did he play,
 Until he came unto the Wash
 Of Edmonton so gay ;

And there he threw the wash about
 On both sides of the way,
 Just like unto a trundling mop,
 Or a wild goose at play.

At Edmonton his loving wife
 From the balcony spied
 Her tender husband, wondering much
 To see how he did ride.

"Stop, stop, John Gilpin !— Here's the house,"
 They all at once did cry ;
 "The dinner waits, and we are tired."
 Said Gilpin, "So am I !"

But yet his horse was not a whit
 Inclined to tarry there ;
 For why ? — his owner had a house
 Full ten miles off, at Ware.

So like an arrow swift he flew,
 Shot by an archer strong ;
 So did he fly — which brings me to
 The middle of my song.

Away went Gilpin out of breath,
 And sore against his will,
 Till at his friend the calender's
 His horse at last stood still.

The calender, amazed to see
 His neighbor in such trim,
 Laid down his pipe, flew to the gate,
 And thus accosted him :

"What news ? what news ? your tidings tell ;
 Tell me you must and shall, —
 Say why bareheaded you are come,
 Or why you come at all ?"

Now Gilpin had a pleasant wit,
 And loved a timely joke ;
 And thus unto the calender
 In merry guise he spoke :

"I came because your horse would come ;
 And, if I well forebode,
 My hat and wig will soon be here,
 They are upon the road."

The calender, right glad to find
 His friend in merry pin,
 Returned him not a single word,
 But to the house went in ;

Whence straight he came with hat and wig ;
 A wig that flowed behind,
 A hat not much the worse for wear,
 Each comely in its kind.

He held them up, and in his turn
 Thus showed his ready wit,
 "My head is twice as big as yours,
 They therefore needs must fit.

"But let me scrape the dirt away
 That hangs upon your face ;
 And stop and eat, for well you may
 Be in a hungry case."

Said John, "It is my wedding-day,
 And all the world would stare,
 If wife should dine at Edmonton,
 And I should dine at Ware."

So turning to his horse, he said,
 "I am in haste to dine ;
 'T was for your pleasure you came here,
 You shall go back for mine."

Ah, luckless speech, and bootless boast !
 For which he paid full dear ;
 For, while he spake, a braying ass
 Did sing most loud and clear ;

Whereat his horse did snort, as he
 Had heard a lion roar,
 And galloped off with all his might,
 As he had done before.

Away went Gilpin, and away
 Went Gilpin's hat and wig :
 He lost them sooner than at first,
 For why ? — they were too big.

Now Mistress Gilpin, when she saw
 Her husband posting down
 Into the country far away,
 She pulled out half a crown ;

And thus unto the youth she said,
 That drove them to the Bell,
 "This shall be yours when you bring back
 My husband safe and well."

The youth did ride, and soon did meet
 John coming back amain ;
 Whom in a trice he tried to stop
 By catching at his rein ;

But not performing what he meant,
 And gladly would have done,
 The frightened steed he frightened more,
 And made him faster run.

Away went Gilpin, and away
Went postboy at his heels,
The postboy's horse right glad to miss
The lumbering of the wheels.

Six gentlemen upon the road,
Thus seeing Gilpin fly,
With postboy scampering in the rear,
They raised the hue and cry:—

“Stop thief! stop thief!—a highwayman!”
Not one of them was mute;
And all and each that passed that way
Did join in the pursuit.

And now the turnpike-gates again
Flew open in short space;
The toll-men thinking, as before,
That Gilpin rode a race.

And so he did, and won it too,
For he got first to town;
Nor stopped till where he had got up
He did again get down.

Now let us sing, “Long live the king,
And Gilpin, long live he;
And when he next doth ride abroad,
May I be there to see!”

WILLIAM COWPER.

THE GOUTY MERCHANT AND THE STRANGER.

In Broad Street building (on a winter night),
Sung by his parlor-fire, a gouty wight
Sat all alone, with one hand rubbing
His feet, rolled up in fleecy hose:
With t' other he'd beneath his nose
The Public Ledger, in whose columns grubbing,
He noted all the sales of hops,
Ships, shops, and slops;
Gum, galls, and groceries; ginger, gin,
Tar, tallow, turmeric, turpentine, and tin;
When lo! a decent personage in black
Entered and most politely said,—

“Your footman, sir, has gone his nightly track
To the King's Head,
And left your door ajar; which I Observed in passing by,
And thought it neighborly to give you notice.”
“Ten thousand thanks; how very few get,
In time of danger,
Such kind attentions from a stranger!
Assuredly, that fellow's throat is Doomed to a final drop at Newgate:

He knows, too, (the unconscionable elf!)
That there's no soul at home except myself.”
“Indeed,” replied the stranger (looking grave),
“Then he's a double knave;
He knows that rogues and thieves by scores
Nightly beset unguarded doors:
And see, how easily might one
Of these domestic foes,
Even beneath your very nose,
Perform his knavish tricks;
Enter your room, as I have done,
Blow out your candles—thus—and thus—
Pocket your silver candlesticks,
And—walk off—thus”—
So said, so done; he made no more remark
Nor waited for replies,
But marched off with his prize,
Leaving the gouty merchant in the dark.

HORACE SMITH.

ORATOR PUFF.

MR. ORATOR PUFF had two tones in his voice,
The one squeaking thus, and the other down so;
In each sentence he uttered he gave you your choice,
For one half was B alt, and the rest G below.
O! O! Orator Puff,
One voice for an orator's surely enough.

But he still talked away, spite of coughs and of frowns,
So distracting all ears with his ups and his downs,
That a wag once, on hearing the orator say, “My voice is for war!” asked, “Which of them, pray?”
O! O! Orator Puff, etc.

Reeling homewards one evening, top-heavy with gin,
And rehearsing his speech on the weight of
the crown,
He tripped near a saw-pit, and tumbled right in,
“Sinking fund” the last words as his noddle came down.
O! O! Orator Puff, etc.

“Good Lord!” he exclaimed, in his he-and-she tones,
“HELP ME OUT! Help me out! I have broken my bones!”
“Help you out?” said a Paddy who passed,
“what a bother!
Why, there's two of you there—can't you help
one another?”
O! O! Orator Puff,
One voice for an orator's surely enough.

MORNING MEDITATIONS.

LET Taylor preach, upon a morning breezy,
How well to rise while nights and larks are flying,—
For my part, getting up seems not so easy
By half as lying.

What if the lark does carol in the sky,
Soaring beyond the sight to find him out,—
Wherefore am I to rise at such a fly?
I'm not a trout.

Talk not to me of bees and such-like hums,
The smell of sweet herbs at the morning prime,—
Only lie long enough, and bed becomes
A bed of time.

To see Dan Phœbus and his car are naught,
The steeds that paw impatiently about,—
Let them enjoy, say I, as horses ought,
The first turn-out!

Right beautiful the dewy meads appear
Besprinkled by the rosy-fingered girl;
What then,—if I prefer my pillow-beer
To early pearl?

My stomach is not ruled by other men's,
And, grumbling for a reason, quaintly begs
Wherefore should master rise before the hens
Have laid their eggs?

Why from a comfortable pillow start
To see faint flushes in the east awaken?
A fig, say I, for any streaky part,
Excepting bacon.

An early riser Mr. Gray has drawn,
Who used to haste the dewy grass among,
"To meet the sun upon the upland lawn,"—
Well,—he died young.

With charwomen such early hours agree,
And sweeps that earn betimes their bit and sup;
But I'm no climbing boy, and need not be
All up,—all up!

So here I lie, my morning calls deferring,
Till something nearer to the stroke of noon;—
A man that's fond precociously of stirring
Must be a spoon.

THOMAS HOOD.

FAITHLESS SALLY BROWN.

YOUNG Ben he was a nice young man,
A carpenter by trade;
And he fell in love with Sally Brown,
That was a lady's maid.

But as they fetched a walk one day,
They met a press-gang crew;
And Sally she did faint away,
Whilst Ben he was brought to.

The boatswain swore with wicked words
Enough to shoek a saint,
That, though she did seem in a fit,
'T was nothing but a feint.

"Come, girl," said he, "hold up your head,
He'll be as good as me;
For when your swain is in our boat
A boatswain he will be."

So when they'd made their game of her,
And taken off her elf,
She roused, and found she only was
A coming to herself.

"And is he gone, and is he gone?"
She cried and wept outright;
"Then I will to the water-side,
And see him out of sight."

A waterman came up to her;
"Now, young woman," said he,
"If you weep on so, you will make Eye-water in the sea."

"Alas! they've taken my beau, Ben,
To sail with old Benbow;"
And her woe began to run afresh,
As if she'd said, Gee woe!

Says he, "They've only taken him
To the tender-ship, you see."
"The tender-ship," cried Sally Brown,—
"What a hard-ship that must be!"

"O, would I were a mermaid now,
For then I'd follow him!
But O, I'm not a fish-woman,
And so I cannot swim.

"Alas! I was not born beneath
The Virgin and the Scales,
So I must curse my cruel stars,
And walk about in Wales."

Now Ben had sailed to many a place
That's underneath the world;
But in two years the ship came home,
And all her sails were furled.

But when he called on Sally Brown,
To see how she got on,
He found she'd got another Ben,
Whose Christian-name was John.

"O Sally Brown! O Sally Brown!
How could you serve me so?
I've met with many a breeze before,
But never such a blow!"

Then, reading on his 'bacco box,
He heaved a heavy sigh,
And then began to eye his pipe,
And then to pipe his eye.

And then he tried to sing, "All's Well!"
But could not, though he tried;
His head was turned, — and so he chewed
His pigtail till he died.

His death, which happened in his berth,
At forty-odd befell;
They went and told the sexton, and
The sexton tolled the bell.

THOMAS HOOD.

FAITHLESS NELLY GRAY.

A PATHETIC BALLAD.

BEN BATTLE was a soldier bold,
And used to war's alarms;
But a cannon-ball took off his legs,
So he laid down his arms.

Now as they bore him off the field,
Said he, "Let others shoot;
For here I leave my second leg,
And the Forty-second Foot."

The army-surgeons made him limbs:
Said he, "They're only pegs;
But there's as wooden members quite,
As represent my legs."

Now Ben he loved a pretty maid, —
Her name was Nelly Gray;
So he went to pay her his devours,
When he devoured his pay.

But when he called on Nelly Gray,
She made him quite a scoff;
And when she saw his wooden legs,
Began to take them off.

"O Nelly Gray! O Nelly Gray!
Is this your love so warm?
The love that loves a scarlet coat
Should be more uniform."

said she, "I loved a soldier once,
For he was blithe and brave;
But I will never have a man
With both legs in the grave.

"Before you had those timber toes
Your love I did allow;
But then, you know, you stan'd upon Another footing now."

"O Nelly Gray! O Nelly Gray!
For all your jeering speeches,
At duty's call I left my legs
In Badajos's breaches."

"Why, then," said she, "you've lost the feet
Of legs in war's alarms,
And now you cannot wear your shoes
Upon your feats of arms!"

"O false and fickle Nelly Gray!
I know why you refuse:
Though I've no feet, some other man
Is standing in my shoes.

"I wish I ne'er had seen your face;
But, now, a long farewell!
For you will be my death; — alas!
You will not be my Nell!"

Now when he went from Nelly Gray
His heart so heavy got,
And life was such a burden grown,
It made him take a knot.

So round his melancholy neck
A rope he did intwine,
And, for his second time in life,
Enlisted in the Line.

One end he tied around a beam,
And then removed his pegs;
And, as his legs were off, — of course
He soon was off his legs.

And there he hung till he was dead
As any nail in town;
For, though distress had cut him up,
It could not cut him down.

A dozen men sat on his corpse,
To find out why he died, —
And they buried Ben in four cross-roads,
With a stake in his inside.

THOMAS HOOD.

I AM A FRIAR OF ORDERS GRAY.

FROM THE OPERA OF "ROBIN HOOD."

I AM a friar of orders gray,
And down in the valleys I take my way;
I pull not blackberry, haw, or hip, —
Good store of venison fills my scrip;

My long bead-roll I merrily chant ;
 Where'er I walk no money I want ;
 And why I'm so plump the reason I tell, —
 Who leads a good life is sure to live well.
     What baron or squire,
     Or knight of the shire,
 Lives half so well as a holy friar ?

After supper of heaven I dream,
 But that is a pullet and clouted cream ;
 Myself, by denial, I mortify —
 With a dainty bit of a warden-pie ;
 I'm clothed in sackcloth for my sin, —
 With old sack wine I'm lined within ;
 A chirping cup is my matin song,
 And the vesper's bell is my bow, ding dong.
     What baron or squire,
     Or knight of the shire,
 Lives half so well as a holy friar ?

JOHN O'KEEFE.

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

THE Jackdaw sat on the Cardinal's chair !
 Bishop and abbot and prior were there ;
     Many a monk, and many a friar,
     Many a knight, and many a squire,
 With a great many more of lesser degree, —
 In sooth, a goodly company ;
 And they served the Lord Primate on bended knee.

Never, I ween,
 Was a prouder seen,
 Read of in books, or dreamt of in dreams,
 Than the Cardinal Lord Archbishop of Rheims !
     In and out,
     Through the motley rout,
 That little Jackdaw kept hopping about :
     Here and there,
     Like a dog in a fair,
     Over comfits and cates,
     And dishes and plates,
 Cowl and cope, and rochet and pall,
 Mitre and crosier, he hopped upon all.
     With a saucy air,
     He perched on the chair
 Where, in state, the great Lord Cardinal sat,
 In the great Lord Cardinal's great red hat ;
     And he peered in the face
     Of his Lordship's Grace,
 With a satisfied look, as if he would say,
 " WE TWO are the greatest folks here to-day !"
     And the priests, with awe,
     As such freaks they saw,
 Said, "The Devil must be in that little Jackdaw !"

The feast was over, the board was cleared,
 The flaws and the custards had all disappeared,
 And six little Singing-boys, — dear little souls
 In nice clean faces, and nice white stoles, —
     Came, in order due,
     Two by two,

Marching that grand refectory through !
 A nice little boy held a golden ewer,
 Embossed and filled with water, as pure
 As any that flows between Rheims and Namur,
 Which a nice little boy stood ready to catch
 In a fine golden hand-basin made to match.
 Two nice little boys, rather more grown,
 Carried lavender-water and eau-de-Cologne ;
 And a nice little boy had a nice cake of soap,
 Worthy of washing the hands of the Pope !
     One little boy more
     A napkin bore,
 Of the best white diaper, fringed with pink,
 And a cardinal's hat marked in "permanent ink."

The great Lord Cardinal turns at the sight
 Of these nice little boys dressed all in white ;
     From his finger he draws
     His costly turquoise :
 And, not thinking at all about little Jackdaws,
     Deposits it straight
     By the side of his plate,
 While the nice little boys on his Eminence wait ;
 Till, when nobody's dreaming of any such thing,
 That little Jackdaw hops off with the ring !

There's a cry and a shout,
 And a deuce of a rout,
 And nobody seems to know what they're about,
 But the monks have their pockets all turned inside out ;
     The friars are kneeling,
     And hunting and feeling
 The carpet, the floor, and the walls, and the ceiling.
 The Cardinal drev
 Off each plum-colored shoe,
 And left his red stockings exposed to the view ;
     He peeps, and he feels
     In the toes and the heels.
 They turn up the dishes, — they turn up the plates, —
 They take up the poker and poke out the grates,
     — They turn up the rugs,
     They examine the mugs ;
     But, no ! — no such thing, —
     They can't find THE RING !
 And the Abbot declared that "when nobody twigged it,
 Some rascal or other had popped in and prigged
     it !"

The Cardinal rose with a dignified look,
 He called for his candle, his bell, and his book !
 In holy anger and pious grief
 He solemnly cursed that rascally thief !
 He cursed him at board, he cursed him in bed ;
 From the sole of his foot to the crown of his
 head ;
 He cursed him in sleeping, that every night
 He should dream of the Devil, and wake in a fright.
 He cursed him in eating, he cursed him in drinking,
 He cursed him in coughing, in sneezing, in winking ;
 He cursed him in sitting, in standing, in lying ;
 He cursed him in walking, in riding, in flying ;
 He cursed him living, he cursed him dying ! —
 Never was heard such a terrible curse !
 But what gave rise
 To no little surprise,
 Nobody seemed one penny the worse !

The day was gone,
 The night came on,
 The monks and the friars they searched till dawn ;
 When the sacristan saw,
 On crumpled claw,
 Come limping a poor little lame Jackdaw !
 No longer gay,
 As on yesterday ;
 His feathers all seemed to be turned the wrong
 way ; —
 His pinions drooped, — he could hardly stand, —
 His head was as bald as the palm of your hand ;
 His eye so dim,
 So wasted each limb,
 That, heedless of grammar, they all cried,
 "THAT 'S HIM ! —
 That 's the scamp that has done this scandalous
 thing,
 That 's the thief that has got my Lord Cardinal's
 Ring !"
 The poor little Jackdaw,
 When the monks he saw,
 Feebly gave vent to the ghost of a caw ;
 And turned his bald head as much as to say,
 " Pray be so good as to walk this way !"
 Slower and slower
 He limped on before,
 Till they came to the back of the belfry-door,
 Where the first thing they saw,
 Midst the sticks and the straw,
 Was the RING, in the nest of that little Jackdaw !
 Then the great Lord Cardinal called for his book,
 And off that terrible curse he took :
 The mute expression
 Served in lieu of confession,

And, being thus coupled with full restitution,
 The Jackdaw got plenary absolution !
 — When those words were heard,
 That poor little bird
 Was so changed in a moment, 't was really absurd :
 He grew sleek and fat ;
 In addition to that,
 A fresh crop of feathers came thick as a mat !
 His tail wagged more
 Even than before ;
 But no longer it wagged with an impudent air,
 No longer he perched on the Cardinal's chair :
 He hopped now about
 With a gait devout ;
 At Matins, at Vespers, he never was out ;
 And, so far from any more pilfering deeds,
 He always seemed telling the Confessor's beads.
 If any one lied, or if any one swore,
 Or slumbered in prayer-time and happened to snore,
 That good Jackdaw
 Would give a great " Caw !"
 As much as to say, " Don't do so any more !"
 While many remarked, as his manners they saw,
 That they " never had known such a pious Jack-
 daw !"
 He long lived the pride
 Of that country side,
 And at last in the odor of sanctity died ;
 When, as words were too faint
 His merits to paint,
 The Conclave determined to make him a Saint.
 And on newly made Saints and Popes, as you
 know,
 It 's the custom of Rome new names to bestow,
 So they canonized him by the name of Jem Crow !

MISADVENTURES AT MARGATE.

MR. SIMPKINSON (loquitur).

I was in Margate last July, I walked upon the pier,
 I saw a little vulgar Boy, — I said, " What make you here ?
 The gloom upon your youthful cheek speaks anything but joy ;"
 Again I said, " What make you here, you little vulgar Boy ?"
 He frowned, that little vulgar Boy, — he deemed
 I meant to scoff, —
 And when the little heart is big, a little " sets it off."

He put his finger in his mouth, his little bosom
rose, —
He had no little handkerchief to wipe his little nose !

“Hark ! don’t you hear, my little man ?—it’s striking Nine,” I said,
“An hour when all good little boys and girls should be in bed.

Run home and get your supper, else your Ma
will scold, — O fie !
It’s very wrong indeed for little boys to stand and cry !”

The tear-drop in his little eye again began to spring,
His bosom throbbed with agony, — he cried like anything !
I stooped, and thus amidst his sobs I heard him murmur, — “ Ah !
I have n’t got no supper ! and I have n’t got no
Ma !

“ My father, he is on the seas, — my mother’s dead and gone !
And I am here, on this here pier, to roam the world alone ;
I have not had, this livelong day, one drop to cheer my heart,
Nor ‘brown’ to buy a bit of bread with, — let alone a tart.

“ If there’s a soul will give me food, or find me in employ,
By day or night, then blow me tight !” (he was a vulgar Boy ;)
“ And now I’m here, from this here pier it is my fixed intent
To jump as Mister Levi did from off the Monument !”

“ Cheer up ! cheer up ! my little man, — cheer up !” I kindly said, “ You are a naughty boy to take such things
into your head ;
If you should jump from off the pier, you’d surely break your legs,
Perhaps your neck, — then Bogey’d have you,
sure as eggs are eggs !

“ Come home with me, my little man, come home with me and sup !
My landlady is Mrs. Jones, — we must not keep her up, —
There’s roast potatoes at the fire, — enough for me and you, —
Come home, you little vulgar Boy, — I lodge at Number 2.”

I took him home to Number 2, the house beside “The Foy,”
I bade him wipe his dirty shoes, — that little vulgar Boy, —
And then I said to Mistress Jones, the kindest of her sex,
“ Pray be so good as go and fetch a pint of double X !”

But Mrs. Jones was rather cross, she made a little noise,
She said she “ did not like to wait on little vulgar Boys.”
She with her apron wiped the plates, and, as she rubbed the delf,
Said I might “ go to Jericho, and fetch my beer myself !”

I did not go to Jericho, — I went to Mr. Cobb, —
I changed a shilling (which in town the people call a Bob), —
It was not so much for myself as for that vulgar
child, —
And I said, “ A pint of double X, and please to draw it mild !”

When I came back I gazed about, — I gazed on stool and chair, —
I could not see my little friend, because he was not there !
I peeped beneath the table-cloth, beneath the sofa, too, —
I said, “ You little vulgar Boy ! why, what’s become of you !”

I could not see my table-spoons, — I looked, but could not see
The little fiddle-patterned ones I use when I’m at tea ;
I could not see my sugar-tongs, my silver watch,
— O, dear !
I know ’t was on the mantel-piece when I went out for beer.

I could not see my Macintosh, — it was not to be seen !
Nor yet my best white beaver hat, broad-brimmed and lined with green ;
My carpet-bag, — my cruet-stand, that holds my sauce and soy, —
My roast potatoes ! — all are gone ! — and so’s that vulgar Boy !

I rang the bell for Mrs. Jones, for she was down
below,
“ O Mrs. Jones, what do you think ? — ain’t this a pretty go ?

That horrid little vulgar Boy whom I brought here to-night
He's stolen my things and run away!" Says she, "And sarve you right!"

Next morning I was up betimes, — I sent the Crier round,
All with his bell and gold-laced hat, to say I'd give a pound
To find that little vulgar Boy, who'd gone and used me so;
But when the Crier cried, "O Yes!" the people
cried, "O No!"

I went to "Jarvis' Landing-place," the glory of
the town,
There was a common sailor-man a walking up and down,
I told my tale, — he seemed to think I'd not been treated well,
And called me "Poor old Buffer!" — what that means I cannot tell.

That Sailor-man, he said he'd seen that morning
on the shore
A son of — something — 't was a name I'd never heard before, —
A little "gallows-looking chap," — dear me, what could he mean? —
With a "carpet-swab" and "mucking-togs,"
and a hat turned up with green.

He spoke about his "precious eyes," and said he'd seen him "sheer," —
It's very odd that Sailor-men should talk so very queer;
And then he hitched his trousers up, as is, I'm told, their use, —
It's very odd that Sailor-men should wear those things so loose.

I did not understand him well, but think he meant to say
He'd seen that little vulgar Boy, that morning, swim away
In Captain Large's Royal George, about an hour
before,
And they were now, as he supposed, "some-wheres" about the Nore.

A landsman said, "I twig the chap, he's been upon the Mill, —
And 'cause he gammons so the flats, ve calls him
Veeping Bill!"
He said "he'd done me werry brown, and nicely
storced the swag," —
That's French, I fancy, for a hat, or else a carpet-bag.

I went and told the constable my property to track;

He asked me if "I did not wish that I might get it back."

I answered, "To be sure I do! — it's what I'm come about."

He smiled and said, "Sir, does your mother know that you are out?"

Not knowing what to do, I thought I'd hasten back to town,

And beg our own Lord Mayor to catch the boy
who'd "done me brown,"

His Lordship very kindly said he'd try and find him out,

But he "rather thought that there were several vulgar boys about."

He sent for Mr. Whithair then, and I described "the swag,"

My Macintosh, my sugar-tongs, my spoons, and carpet-bag;

He promised that the New Police should all their powers employ,

But never to this hour have I beheld that vulgar
Boy!

MORAL.

Remember, then, that when a boy I've heard my Grandma tell,

"BE WARNED IN TIME BY OTHERS' HARM, AND YOU SHALL DO FULL WELL!"

Don't link yourself with vulgar folks, who've got no fixed abode,

Tell lies, use naughty words, and say they "wish they may be blowed!"

Don't take too much of double X! — and don't at night go out

To fetch your beer yourself, but make the pot-boy bring your stout!

And when you go to Margate next, just stop,
and ring the bell,

Give my respects to Mrs. Jones, and say I'm pretty well!

THE YARN OF THE "NANCY BELL."

FROM "THE BAE BALLADS."

'T WAS on the shores that round our coast
From Deal to Ramsgate span,
That I found alone, on a piece of stone,
An elderly naval man.

His hair was weedy, his beard was long,
And weedy and long was he ;
And I heard this wight on the shore recite,
In a singular minor key :—

“ O, I am a cook and a captain bold,
And the mate of the Nancy brig,
And a bo’sun tight, and a midshipmite,
And the crew of the captain’s gig.”

And he shook his fists and he tore his hair,
Till I really felt afraid,
For I could n’t help thinking the man had been drinking,
And so I simply said :—

“ O elderly man, it ’s little I know
Of the duties of men of the sea,
And I ’ll eat my hand if I understand
How you can possibly be

“ At once a cook and a captain bold,
And the mate of the Nancy brig,
And a bo’sun tight, and a midshipmite,
And the crew of the captain’s gig !”

Then he gave a hitch to his trowsers, which
Is a trick all seamen larn,
And having got rid of a thumping quid
He spun this painful yarn :—

“ ’T was in the good ship Nancy Bel,
That we sailed to the Indian sea,
And there on a reef we come to grief,
Which has often occurred to me.

“ And pretty nigh all o’ the crew was drowned
(There was seventy-seven o’ soul) ;
And only ten of the Nancy’s men
Said ‘ Here ’ to the muster-roll.

“ There was me, and the cook, and the captain bold,
And the mate of the Nancy brig,
And the bo’sun tight, and a midshipmite,
And the crew of the captain’s gig.

“ For a month we ’d neither wittles nor drink,
Till a-hungry we did feel,
So we drewed a lot, and, accordin’, shot
The captain for our meal.

“ The next lot fell to the Nancy’s mate,
And a delicate dish he made ;
Then our appetite with the midshipmite
We seven survivors stayed.

“ And then we murdered the bo’sun tight,
And he much resembled pig ;
Then we wittled free, did the cook and me,
On the crew of the captain’s gig.

“ Then only the cook and me was left,
And the delicate question, ‘ Which
Of us two goes to the kettle ? ’ arose,
And we argued it out as sich.

“ For I loved that cook as a brother, I did,
And the cook he worshipped me ;
But we ’d both be blowed if we ’d either be stowed
In the other chap’s hold, you see.

“ ‘ I ’ll be eat if you dines off me,’ says Tom.
‘ Yes, that,’ says I, ‘ you ’ll be.
I ’m boiled if I die, my friend,’ quoth I ;
And ‘ Exactly so,’ quoth he.

“ Says he : ‘ Dear James, to murder me
Were a foolish thing to do,
For don’t you see that you can’t cook me,
While I can — and will — cook you ? ’

“ So he boils the water, and takes the salt
And the pepper in portions true
(Which he never forgot), and some chopped sha-lot,
And some sage and parsley too.

“ ‘ Come here,’ says he, with a proper pride,
Which his smiling features tell ;
‘ T will soothing be if I let you see
How extremely nice you ’ll smell.’

“ And he stirred it round, and round, and round,
And he sniffed at the foaming froth ;
When I ups with his heels, and smothers his squeals
In the scum of the boiling broth.

“ And I eat that cook in a week or less,
And as I eating be
The last of his chops, why I almost drops,
For a vessel in sight I see.

* * * * *

“ And I never larf, and I never smile,
And I never lark nor play ;
But I sit and croak, and a single joke
I have — which is to say :

“ O, I am a cook and a captain bold
And the mate of the Nancy brig,
And a bo’sun tight, and a midshipmite,
And the crew of the captain’s gig !”

WILLIAM SCHWENCK GILBERT.

CAPTAIN REECE.*

Of all the ships upon the blue,
No ship contained a better crew
Than that of worthy Captain Reece,
Commanding of The Mantelpiece.

He was adored by all his men,
For worthy Captain Reece, R. N.,
Did all that lay within him to Promote the comfort of his crew.

If ever they were dull or sad,
Their captain danced to them like mad,
Or told, to make the time pass by,
Droll legends of his infancy.

A feather-bed had every man,
Warm slippers and hot-water can,
Brown windsor from the captain's store,
A valet, too, to every four.

Did they with thirst in summer burn,
Lo, seltzogenes at every turn,
And on all very sultry days
Cream ices handed round on trays.

Then currant wine and ginger pops
Stood handily on all the "tops :"
And, also, with amusement rife,
A "Zoetrope, or Wheel of Life."

New volumes came across the sea
From Mister Mudie's libraree ;
The Times and Saturday Review
Beguiled the leisure of the crew.

Kind-hearted Captain Reece, R. N.,
Was quite devoted to his men ;
In point of fact, good Captain Reece
Beatified The Mantelpiece.

One summer eve, at half past ten,
He said (addressing all his men),
"Come, tell me, please, what I can do,
To please and gratify my crew.

"By any reasonable plan
I'll make you happy if I can ;
My own convenience count as nil ;
It is my duty, and I will."

Then up and answered William Lee
(The kindly captain's coxswain he,
A nervous, shy, low-spoken man) ;
He cleared his throat, and thus began :

"You have a daughter, Captain Reece,
Ten female cousins and a niece,
A ma, if what I'm told is true,
Six sisters, and an aunt or two.

"Now, somehow, sir, it seems to me,
More friendly-like we all should be,
If you united of 'em to Unmarried members of the crew.

"If you'd ameliorate our life,
Let each select from them a wife ;
And as for nervous me, old pal,
Give me your own enchanting gal !"

Good Captain Reece, that worthy man,
Debated on his coxswain's plan :
"I quite agree," he said, "O Bill ;
It is my duty, and I will.

"My daughter, that enchanting girl,
Has just been promised to an earl,
And all my other familee
To peers of various degree.

"But what are dukes and viscounts to
The happiness of all my crew ?
The word I gave you I'll fulfil ;
It is my duty, and I will.

"As you desire it shall befall,
I'll settle thousands on you all,
And I shall be, despite my board,
The only bachelor on board."

The boatswain of The Mantelpiece,
He blushed and spoke to Captain Reece :
"I beg your honor's leave," he said,
"If you would wish to go and wed,

"I have a widowed mother who
Would be the very thing for you —
She long has loved you from afar,
She washes for you, Captain R."

The captain saw the dame that day —
Addressed her in his playful way —
"And did it want a wedding-ring ?
It was a tempting ickle sing !

"Well, well, the chaplain I will seek,
We'll all be married this day week
At yonder church upon the hill ;
It is my duty, and I will !"

The sisters, cousins, aunts, and niece,
And widowed ma of Captain Reece,
Attended there as they were bid ;
It was their duty, and they did.

WILLIAM SCHWENCK GILBERT.

* In this delicious piece of absurdity will be found the germs of Gilbert's two famous comic operas, — "H. M. S. Pinafore," with its amiable captain, cheerful crew, and the "sisters and the cousins and the aunts," and "The Pirates of Penzance, or The Slave of Duty."

LITTLE BILLEE.

THERE were three sailors of Bristol City
Who took a boat and went to sea,
But first with beef and captain's biscuits
And pickled pork they loaded she.

There was gorging Jack, and guzzling Jimmy,
And the youngest he was little Billee ;
Now when they 'd got as far as the Equator,
They 'd nothing left but one split pea.

Says gorging Jack to guzzling Jimmy,
" I am extremely hungaree."
To gorging Jack says guzzling Jimmy,
" We 've nothing left, us must eat we."

Says gorging Jack to guzzling Jimmy,
" With one another we should n't agree !
There 's little Bill, he 's young and tender,
We 're old and tough, so let 's eat he."

" O Billy ! we 're going to kill and eat you,
So undo the button of your chemie."
When Bill received this information,
He used his pocket-handkerchie.

" First let me say my catechism
Which my poor mother taught to me."
" Make haste ! make haste !" says guzzling Jimmy,
While Jack pulled out his snickersnee.

Billy went up to the main-top-gallant mast,
And down he fell on his bended knee,
He scarce had come to the Twelfth Commandment

When up he jumps — " There 's land I see !

" Jerusalem and Madagascar
And North and South Amerikee,
There 's the British flag a riding at anchor,
With Admiral Napier, K. C. B."

So when they got aboard of the Admiral's,
He hanged fat Jack and flogged Jimmee,
But as for little Bill he made him
The Captain of a Seventy-three.

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.

THE BELLE OF THE BALL.

YEARS, years ago, ere yet my dreams
Had been of being wise or witty,
Ere I had done with writing themes,
Or yawned o'er this infernal Chitty, —
Years, years ago, while all my joys
Were in my fowling-piece and filly ;
In short, while I was yet a boy,
I fell in love with Laura Lilly.

I saw her at the county ball ;
There, when the sounds of flute and fiddle
Gave signal sweet in that old hall
Of hands across and down the middle,
Hers was the subtlest spell by far
Of all that sets young hearts romancing :
She was our queen, our rose, our star ;
And then she danced, — O Heaven ! her dancing.

Dark was her hair ; her hand was white ;
Her voice was exquisitely tender ;
Her eyes were full of liquid light ;
I never saw a waist so slender ;
Her every look, her every smile,
Shot right and left a score of arrows :
I thought 't was Venus from her isle,
And wondered where she 'd left her sparrows.

She talked of politics or prayers,
Of Southey's prose or Wordsworth's sonnets,
Of dangles or of dancing bears,
Of battles or the last new bonnets ;
By candle-light, at twelve o'clock, —
To me it mattered not a tittle, —
If those bright lips had quoted Locke,
I might have thought they murmured Little.

Through sunny May, through sultry June,
I loved her with a love eternal ;
I spoke her praises to the moon,
I wrote them to the Sunday Journal.
My mother laughed ; I soon found out
That ancient ladies have no feeling :
My father frowned ; but how should gout
See any happiness in kneeling ?

She was the daughter of a dean, —
Rich, fat, and rather apoplectic ;
She had one brother just thirteen,
Whose color was extremely hectic ;
Her grandmother for many a year
Had fed the parish with her bounty ;
Her second cousin was a peer,
And lord-lieutenant of the county.

But titles and the three-per-cents,
And mortgages, and great relations,
And India bonds, and tithes and rents,
O, what are they to love's sensations ?
Black eyes, fair forehead, clustering locks, —
Such wealth, such honors Cupid chooses ;
He cares as little for the stocks
As Baron Rothschild for the muses.

She sketched ; the vale, the wood, the beach,
Grew lovelier from her pencil's shading :
She botanized ; I envied each
Young blossom in her boudoir fading :

She warbled Handel ; it was grand, —
 She made the Catilina jealous :
 She touched the organ ; I could stand
 For hours and hours to blow the bellows.

She kept an album too, at home,
 Well filled with all an album's glories, —
 Paintings of butterflies and Rome,
 Patterns for trinnings, Persian stories,
 Soft songs to Julia's cockatoo,
 Fierce odes to famine and to slaughter,
 And autographs of Prince Leeboo,
 And receipts for elder-water.

And she was flattered, worshipped, bored ;
 Her steps were watched, her dress was noted ;
 Her poodle-dog was quite adored ;
 Her sayings were extremely quoted.
 She laughed, — and every heart was glad,
 As if the taxes were abolished ;
 She frowned, — and every look was sad,
 As if the opera were demolished.

She smiled on many just for fun, —
 I knew that there was nothing in it ;
 I was the first, the only one,
 Her heart had thought of for a minute.
 I knew it, for she told me so,
 In phrase which was divinely moulded ;
 She wrote a charming hand, — and O,
 How sweetly all her notes were folded !

Our love was most like other loves, —
 A little glow, a little shiver,
 A rosebud and a pair of gloves.
 And " Fly Not Yet," upon the river ;
 Some jealousy of some one's heir,
 Some hopes of dying broken-hearted ;
 A miniature, a lock of hair,
 The usual vows, — and then we parted.

We parted : months and years rolled by ;
 We met again four summers after.
 Our parting was all sob and sigh,
 Our meeting was all mirth and laughter !
 For in my heart's most secret cell
 There had been many other lodgers ;
 And she was not the ball-room's belle,
 But only Mrs. — Something — Rogers !

SORROWS OF WERTHER.

WERTHER had a love for Charlotte
 Such as words could never utter ;
 Would you know how first he met her ?
 She was cutting bread and butter.

Charlotte was a married lady,
 And a moral man was Werther,
 And for all the wealth of Indies
 Would do nothing for to hurt her.

So he sighed and pined and ogled,
 And his passion boiled and bubbled,
 Till he blew his silly brains out,
 And no more was by it troubled.

Charlotte, having seen his body
 Borne before her on a shutter,
 Like a well-conducted person,
 Went on cutting bread and butter.

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.

A LIFE'S LOVE.

I LOVED him in my dawning years —
 Far years, divinely dim ;
 My blithest smiles, my saddest tears,
 Were evermore for him.
 My dreaming when the day began,
 The latest thought I had,
 Was still some little loving plan
 To make my darling glad.

They deemed he lacked the conquering wiles,
 That other children wear ;
 To me his face, in frowns or smiles,
 Was never aught but fair.
 They said that self was all his goal,
 He knew no thought beyond ;
 To me, I know, no living soul
 Was half so true and fond.

In love's eclipse, in friendship's dearth,
 In grief and feud and bale,
 My heart has learnt the sacred worth
 Of one that cannot fail ;
 And come what must, and come what may,
 Nor power, nor praise, nor pelf,
 Shall lure my faith from thee to stray,
 My sweet, my own — Myself.

ON AN OLD MUFF.

TIME has a magic wand !
 What is this meets my hand,
 Moth-eaten, mouldy, and Covered with fluff,
 Faded and stiff and scant ?
 Can it be ? no, it can't, —
 Yes, — I declare 't is Aunt Prudence's Muff !

Years ago — twenty-three !
 Old Uncle Barnaby
 Gave it to Aunty P.,

Laughing and teasing, — “ Pru. of the breezy curls,
 Whisper these solemn churls,
What holds a pretty girl's Hand without squeezing ? ”

Uncle was then a lad,
 Gay, but, I grieve to add,
 Gone to what's called “ the bad,” —

Smoking, — and worse !
 Sleek sable then was this Muff, lined with pinkiness, —
 Bloom to which beauty is Seldom averse.

I see in retrospect
 Aunt, in her best bedecked,
 Gliding, with mien erect,
 Gravely to meeting :
 Psalm-book, and kerchief new,
 Peeped from the Muff of Pru.,
 Young men — and pious, too —
 Giving her greeting.

Pure was the life she led
 Then : from her Muff, 't is said,
 Tracts she distributed ; —

Scapegraces many,
 Seeing the grace they lacked,
 Followed her ; one attacked
 Prudence, and got his tract
 Oftener than any !

Love has a potent spell !
 Soon this bold ne'er-do-well,
 Aunt's sweet susceptible
 Heart undermining,
 Slipped, so the scandal runs,
 Notes in the pretty nun's
 Muff, — triple-covered ones, —
 Pink as its lining !

Worse, even, soon the jade
 Fled (to oblige her blade !)
 Whilst her friends thought that they'd Locked her up tightly :
 After such shocking games,
 Aunt is of wedded dames
 Gayest, — and now her name's
 Mrs. Golightly.

In female conduct flaw
 Sadder I never saw,
 Still I've faith in the law
 Of compensation.

Once uncle went astray, —
 Smoked, joked, and swore away ;
 Sworn by, he's now, by a
 Large congregation !

Changed is the child of sin ;
 Now he's (he once was thin)
 Grave, with a double chin, —
 Blest be his fat form !
 Changed is the garb he wore :
 Preacher was never more
 Prized than is uncle for Pulpit or platform.

If all 's as best befits
 Mortals of slender wits,
 Then beg this Muff, and its Fair owner pardon ;
All's for the best, — indeed,
 Such is my simple creed ;
 Still I must go and weed
 Hard in my garden.

JACK HORNER.

FROM “ MOTHER GOOSE FOR CROWN FOLKS.”

“ Little Jack Horner
 Sat in a corner
 Eating a Christmas Pie ;
 He put in his thumb,
 And pulled out a plum,
 And said, ‘ What a great boy am I ! ’ ”

Ah, the world hath many a Horner,
 Who, seated in his corner,
 Finds a Christmas Pie provided for his thumb ;
 And cries out with exultation,
 When successful exploration
 Doth discover the predestinated plum !

Little Jack outgrows his 'tire,
 And becometh John, Esquire ;
 And he finds a monstrous pasty ready made,
 Stuffed with stocks and bonds and bales,
 Gold, currencies, and sales,
 And all the mixed ingredients of Trade.

And again it is his luck
 To be just in time to pluck,
 By a clever “ operation,” from the pie
 An unexpected “ plum ; ”
 So he glorifies his thumb,
 And says proudly, “ What a mighty man am I ! ”

Or, perchance to science turning,
 And with weary labor learning
 All the formulas and phrases that oppress her, —
 For the fruit of others' baking
 So a fresh diploma taking,
 Comes he forth, a full accredited Professor !

Or he's not too nice to mix
In the dish of politics ;
And the dignity of office he puts on ;
And he feels as big again
As a dozen nobler men,
While he writes himself the Honorable John !

Ah me, for the poor nation !
In her hour of desperation,
Her worst foe is that unsparing Horner thumb !
To which War and Death and Hate,
Right, Policy, and State,
Are but pies wherefrom his greed may grasp a plum !

O, the work was fair and true,
But 't is riddled through and through,
And plundered of its glories everywhere ;
And before men's cheated eyes
Doth the robber triumph rise
And magnify itself in all the air.

Why, if even a good man dies,
And is welcomed to the skies
In the glorious resurrection of the just,
They must ruffle it below
With some vain and wretched show,
To make each his little mud-pie of the dust !

Shall we hint at Lady Horners,
Who, in their exclusive corners,
Think the world is only made of upper-crust ?
Who in the queer mince-pie
That we call Society,
Do their dainty fingers delicately thrust ;

Till, if it come to pass,
In the spiced and sugared mass,
One should compass — don't they call it so ? —
a catch,
By the gratulation given
It would seem the very heaven
Had outdone itself in making such a match !

Or the Woman Horner, now,
Who is raising such a row
To prove that Jack's no bigger boy than Jill ;
And that she won't sit by,
With her little saucer pie,
While he from the Great Pastry picks his fill.

Jealous-wild to be a sharer
In the fruit she thinks the fairer,
Flings by all for the swift gaining of her wish ;
Not discerning in her blindness,
How a tender Loving Kindness
Hid the best things in her own rejected dish !

O, the world keeps Christmas Day
In a queer, perpetual way ;
Shouting always, "What a great big boy am I !"
Yet how many of the crowd
Thus vociferating loud,
And their honors or pretensions lifting high,
Have really, more than Jack,
With their boldness or their knack,
Had a finger in the making of the Pie ?

ADELINE D. T. WHITNEY.

COMFORT.

Who would care to pass his life away
Of the Lotos-land a dreamful denizen, —
Lotos-islands in a waveless bay,
Sung by Alfred Tennyson ?

Who would care to be a dull new-comer
Far across the wild sea's wide abysses,
Where, about the earth's three thousandth summer,
Passed divine Ulysses ?

Rather give me coffee, art, a book,
From my windows a delicious sea-view,
Southdown mutton, somebody to cook, —
"Music ?" — I believe you.

Strawberry icebergs in the summer time, —
But of elm-wood many a massive splinter,
Good ghost stories, and a classic rhyme,
For the nights of winter.

Now and then a friend and some Sauterne,
Now and then a haunch of Highland venison,
And for Lotos-land I'll never yearn, Malgré Alfred Tennyson.

MORTIMER COLLINS.

THE WOMEN FOK.*

O, SAIRLY may I rue the day
I fancied first the womenkind ;
For aye sinsyne I ne'er can hae
Ae quiet thought or peace o' mind !
They hae plagued my heart an' pleased my e'e,
An' teased an' flattered me at will,
But aye for a' their witcherye,
The pawky things I lo'e them still.

* The air of this song is my own. It was first set to music by Heather, and most beautifully set too. It was afterwards set by Dewar, whether with the same accompaniments or not, I have forgot. It is my own favorite humorous song, when forced to sing by ladies against my will, which too frequently happens ; and, notwithstanding my wood-notes wild, it will never be sung by any so well again. — THE AUTHOR.

O the women fo'k ! O the women fo'k !
 But they hae been the wreck o' me ;
 O weary fa' the women fo'k,
 For they winna let a body be !

I hae thought an' thought, but darena tell,
 I've studied them wi' a' my skill,
 I've lo'd them better than mysell,
 I've tried again to like them ill.
 Wha sairest strives, will sairest rue,
 To comprehend what nae man can ;
 When he has done what man can do,
 He'll end at last where he began.
 O the women fo'k, etc.

That they hae gentle forms an' meet,
 A man wi' half a look may see ;
 An gracefu' airs, an' faces sweet,
 An' waving curls aboon the bree ;
 An' smiles as soft as the young rosebud,
 And een sae pawky, bright, an' rare,
 Wad lure the laverock frae the cludd, —
 But, laddie, seek to ken nae mair !
 O the women fo'k, etc.

Even but this night nae farther gane,
 The date is neither lost nor lang,
 I tak ye witness ilka ane,
 How fell they fought, and fairly dang.
 Their point they've carried right or wrang,
 Without a reason, rhyme, or law,
 An' forced a man to sing a sang,
 That ne'er could sing a verse ava.

O the women fo'k ! O the women fo'k !
 But they hae been the wreck o' me ;
 O weary fa' the women fo'k,
 For they winna let a body be !

 WOMAN.

WHEN Eve brought woe to all mankind
 Old Adam called her wo-man ;
 But when she wooded with love so kind,
 He then pronounced her woo-man.
 But now, with folly and with pride,
 Their husbands' pockets trimming,
 * The women are so full of whims
 That men pronounce them wimmen !

 PAPER.

A CONVERSATIONAL PLEASANTRY.

SOME wit of old — such wits of old there were,
 Whose hints showed meaning, whose allusions
 care —

By one brave stroke to mark all human kind,
 Called clear, blank paper every infant mind ;

Where still, as opening sense her dictates wrote,
 Fair virtue put a seal, or vice a blot.

The thought was happy, pertinent, and true ;
 Methinks a genius might the plan pursue.
 I (can you pardon my presumption ?) — I,
 No wit, no genius, yet for once will try.

Various the paper various wants produce, —
 The wants of fashion, elegance, and use.
 Men are as various ; and, if right I scan,
 Each sort of paper represents some man.

Pray note the fop, half powder and half lace ;
 Nice, as a bandbox were his dwelling-place ;
 He's the gilt-paper, which apart you store,
 And lock from vulgar hands in the 'scutoire.

Mechanics, servants, farmers, and so forth,
 Are copy-paper, of inferior worth ;
 Less prized, more useful, for your desk decreed ;
 Free to all pens, and prompt at every need.

The wretch whom avarice bids to pinch and spare,
 Starve, cheat, and pilfer, to enrich an heir,
 Is course brown paper, such as pedlers choose
 To wrap up wares, which better men will use.

Take next the miser's contrast, who destroys Health, fame, and fortune in a round of joys ;
 Will any paper match him ? Yes, throughout ;
 He's a true sinking-paper, past all doubt.

The retail politician's anxious thought
 Deems this side always right, and that stark
 naught ;

He foams with censure ; with applause he raves ;
 A dupe to rumors, and a tool of knaves ;
 He'll want no type, his weakness to proclaim,
 While such a thing as foolscap has a name.

The hasty gentleman, whose blood runs high,
 Who picks a quarrel, if you step awry,
 Who can't a jest, a hint, or look endure, —
 What is he ? — what ? Touch-paper, to be sure.

What are our poets, take them as they fall,
 Good, bad, rich, poor, much read, not read at all ?
 They and their works in the same class you'll find ;

They are the mere waste-paper of mankind.

Observe the maiden, innocently sweet !
 She's fair, white paper, an unsullied sheet ;
 On which the happy man whom fate ordains
 May write his name, and take her for his pains.

One instance more, and only one I'll bring ;
 'T is the great man who scorns a little thing ;

Whose thoughts, whose deeds, whose maxims,
are his own,
Formed on the feelings of his heart alone,
True, genuine, royal paper is his breast ;
Of all the kinds most precious, purest, best.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

OLD GRIMES.

OLD Grimes is dead, that good old man, —
We ne'er shall see him more ;
He used to wear a long black coat,
All buttoned down before.

His heart was open as the day,
His feelings all were true ;
His hair was some inclined to gray, —
He wore it in a queue.

Whene'er he heard the voice of pain,
His breast with pity burned ;
The large round head upon his cane
From ivory was turned.

Kind words he ever had for all ;
He knew no base design ;
His eyes were dark and rather small,
His nose was aquiline.

He lived at peace with all mankind,
In friendship he was true ;
His coat had pocket-holes behind,
His pantaloons were blue.

Unharm'd, the sin which earth pollutes
He passed securely o'er, —
And never wore a pair of boots
For thirty years or more.

But good Old Grimes is now at rest,
Nor fears misfortune's frown ;
He wore a double-breasted vest, —
The stripes ran up and down.

He modest merit sought to find,
And pay it its desert ;
He had no malice in his mind,
No ruffles on his shirt.

His neighbors he did not abuse, —
Was sociable and gay ;
He wore large buckles on his shoes,
And changed them every day.

His knowledge, hid from public gaze,
He did not bring to view,
Nor make a noise, town-meeting days,
As many people do.

His worldly goods he never threw
In trust to fortune's chances,
But lived (as all his brothers do)
In easy circumstances.

Thus undisturbed by anxious cares
His peaceful moments ran ;
And everybody said he was
A fine old gentleman.

THE HEIGHT OF THE RIDICULOUS.

I WROTE some lines once on a time
In wondrous merry mood,
And thought, as usual, men would say
They were exceeding good.

They were so queer, so very queer,
I laughed as I would die ;
Albeit, in the general way,
A sober man am I.

I called my servant, and he came ;
How kind it was of him,
To mind a slender man like me,
He of the mighty limb !

"These to the printer," I exclaimed,
And, in my humorous way,
I added (as a trifling jest),
"There 'll be the devil to pay."

He took the paper, and I watched,
And saw him peep within ;
At the first line he read, his face
Was all upon the grin.

He read the next ; the grin grew broad,
And shot from ear to ear ;
He read the third ; a chuckling noise
I now began to hear.

The fourth ; he broke into a roar ;
The fifth ; his waistband split ;
The sixth ; he burst five buttons off,
And tumbled in a fit.

Ten days and nights, with sleepless eye,
I watched that wretched man,
And since, I never dare to write
As funny as I can.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

THE ONE-HOSS SHAY ;

OR, THE DEACON'S MASTERPIECE.

A LOGICAL STORY.

HAVE you heard of the wonderful one-hoss shay,
That was built in such a logical way
It ran a hundred years to a day,
And then of a sudden, it — ah, but stay,
I 'll tell you what happened without delay,
Searing the parson into fits,
Frightening people out of their wits, —
Have you ever heard of that, I say ?

Seventeen hundred and fifty-five.
Georgius Secundus was then alive, —
Smuffy old drone from the German hive.
That was the year when Lisbon-town
Saw the earth open and gulp her down,
And Braddock's army was done so brown,
Left without a scalp to its crown.
It was on the terrible Earthquake-day
That the Deacon finished the one-hoss shay.

Now in building of chaises, I tell you what,
There is always somewhere a weakest spot, —
In hub, tire, felloe, in spring or thill,
In panel, or crossbar, or floor, or sill,
In screw, bolt, thoroughbrace, — lurking still,
Find it somewhere you must and will, —
Above or below, or within or without, —
And that's the reason, beyond a doubt,
A chaise breaks down, but does n't wear out.

But the Deacon swore (as Deacons do,
With an "I dew vum," or an "I tell yeou,")
He would build one shay to beat the taown
'n' the keounty 'n' all the kentry raoun' ;
It should be so built that it could n' break down ;
— "Fur," said the Deacon, "'t's mighty plain
That the weakes' place mus' stan' the strain ;
'n' the way t' fix it, uz I maintain,
Is only jest
T' make that place uz strong uz the rest."

So the Deacon inquired of the village folk
Where he could find the strongest oak,
That could n't be split nor bent nor broke, —
That was for spokes and floor and sills ;
He sent for laneewood to make the thills ;
The crossbars were ash, from the straightest trees ;
The panels of whitewood, that euts like eheese,
But lasts like iron for things like these ;
The hubs of logs from the "Settler's ellum," —
Last of its timber, — they could n't sell 'em,
Never an axe had seen their chips,
And the wedges flew from between their lips,
Their blunt ends fizzled like celery-tips ;

Step and prop-iron, bolt and screw,
Spring, tire, axle, and linepin too,
Steel of the finest, bright and blue ;
Thoroughbrace bison-skin, thick and wide ;
Boot, top, dasher, from tough old hide
Found in the pit when the tanner died.
That was the way he "put her through."
"There !" said the Deacon, "naow she 'll dew !"

Do ! I tell you, I rather guess
She was a wonder, and nothing less !
Colts grew horses, beards turned gray,
Deacon and deaconess dropped away,
Children and grandchildren, — where were they ?
But there stood the stout old one-hoss shay
As fresh as on Lisbon-earthquake-day !

EIGHTEEN HUNDRED ; — it came and found
The Deacon's masterpiece strong and sound.
Eighteen hundred increased by ten ; —
"Hahnsum kerridge" they called it then.
Eighteen hundred and twenty came ; —
Running as usual ; much the same.
Thirty and forty at last arrive,
And then came fifty, and FIFTY-FIVE.

Little of all we value here
Wakes on the morn of its hundredth year
Without both feeling and looking queer.
In fact, there's nothing that keeps its youth,
So far as I know, but a tree and truth.
(This is a moral that runs at large ;
Take it. — You're welcome. — No extra charge.)

FIRST OF NOVEMBER, — the Earthquake-day. —
There are traces of age in the one-hoss shay,
A general flavor of mild decay,
But nothing local as one may say.
There could n't be, — for the Deacon's art
Had made it so like in every part
That there was n't a chance for one to start.
For the wheels were just as strong as the thills,
And the floor was just as strong as the sills,
And the panels just as strong as the floor,
And the whippetree neither less nor more,
And the back-crossbar as strong as the fore,
And spring and axle and hub encore.
And yet, as a whole, it is past a doubt
In another hour it will be worn out !

First of November, 'Fifty-five !
This morning the parson takes a drive.
Now, small boys, get out of the way !
Here comes the wonderful one-hoss shay,
Drawn by a rat-tailed, ewe-necked bay.
"Huddup !" said the parson. — Off went they.
The parson was working his Sunday's text, —
Had got to fishly, and stopped perplexed

At what the — Moses — was coming next.
 All at once the horse stood still,
 Close by the meet'n'-house on the hill.
 — First a shiver, and then a thrill,
 Then something decidedly like a spill, —
 And the parson was sitting upon a rock,
 At half past nine by the meet'n'-house clock, —
 Just the hour of the Earthquake shock !
 — What do you think the parson found,
 When he got up and stared around ?
 The poor old chaise in a heap or mound,
 As if it had been to the mill and ground !
 You see, of course, if you 're not a dunce,
 How it went to pieces all at once, —
 All at once, and nothing first, —
 Just as bubbles do when they burst.

End of the wonderful one-hoss shay.
 Logic is logic. That 's all I say.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

RUDOLPH THE HEADSMAN.

RUDOLPH, professor of the headsman's trade,
 Alike was famous for his arm and blade.
 One day a prisoner Justice had to kill
 Knelt at the block to test the artist's skill.
 Bare-armed, swart-visaged, gaunt, and shaggybrowed,
 Rudolph the headsman rose above the crowd.
 His falchion lightened with a sudden gleam,
 As the pike's armor flashes in the stream.
 He sheathed his blade ; he turned as if to go ;
 The victim knelt, still waiting for the blow.
 " Why strikest not ? Perform thy murderous act,"

The prisoner said. (His voice was slightly cracked.)

" Friend, I have struck," the artist straight replied ;

" Wait but one moment, and yourself decide."

He held his snuff-box, — " Now then, if you
 please !"

The prisoner sniffed, and, with a crashing sneeze,
 Off his head tumbled, bowled along the floor,
 Bounced down the steps ; — the prisoner said no
 more !

THE BOYS.

HAS there any old fellow got mixed with the boys ?

If there has, take him out, without making a noise.

Hang the Almanac's cheat and the Catalogue's spite !

Old Time is a liar ! We're twenty to-night !

We're twenty ! We're twenty ! Who says we are more ?

He 's tipsy, — young jackanapes ! — show him the door !

" Gray temples at twenty ?" — Yes ! white, if we
 please ;

Where the snow-flakes fall thickest there 's nothing can freeze !

Was it snowing I spoke of ? Excuse the mistake !

Look close, — you will see not a sign of a flake !
 We want some new garlands for those we have shed, —

And these are white roses in place of the red.

We've a trick, we young fellows, you may have been told,

Of talking (in public) as if we were old :

That boy we call " Doctor," and this we call
 " Judge ;" —

It's a neat little fiction, — of course it 's all fudge.

That fellow 's the " Speaker," — the one on the right ;

" Mr. Mayor," my young one, how are you tonight ?

That 's our " Member of Congress," we say when we chaff ;

There 's the " Reverend " What 's his name ? —
 don't make me laugh !

That boy with the grave mathematical look

Made believe he had written a wonderful book,

And the ROYAL SOCIETY thought it was true !

So they chose him right in, — a good joke it was too !

There 's a boy, we pretend, with a three-decker brain,

That could harness a team with a logical chain ;

When he spoke for our manhood in syllabled
 fire,

We called him " The Justice," but now he 's
 " The Squire."

And there 's a nice youngster of excellent pith, —
 Fate tried to conceal him by naming him Smith,

But he shouted a song for the brave and the free, —

Just read on his medal, " My country," " of
 thee !"

You hear that boy laughing?— You think he's all fun ;
But the angels laugh, too, at the good he has done ;

The children laugh loud as they troop to his call,
And the poor man that knows him laughs loudest of all !

Yes, we're boys, — always playing with tongue or with pen ;

And I sometimes have asked, Shall we ever be
men ?

Shall we always be youthful, and laughing, and gay,

Till the last dear companion drop smiling away ?

Then here's to our boyhood, its gold and its
gray !

The stars of its winter, the dews of its May !
And when we have done with our life-lasting toys,

Dear Father, take care of thy children, THE Boys.

THE OLD MAN DREAMS.

O FOR one hour of youthful joy !
Give back my twentieth spring !
I'd rather laugh a bright-haired boy
Than reign a gray-beard king !

Off with the spoils of wrinkled age !
Away with learning's crown !
Tear out life's wisdom-written page,
And dash its trophies down !

One moment let my life-blood stream
From boyhood's fount of flame !
Give me one giddy, reeling dream
Of life all love and fame !

My listening angel heard the prayer,
And, calmly smiling, said,
"If I but touch thy silvered hair,
Thy hasty wish hath sped.

"But is there nothing in thy track
To bid thee fondly stay,
While the swift seasons hurry back
To find the wished-for day?"

Ah! truest soul of womankind !
Without thee what were life ?
One bliss I cannot leave behind :
I'll take — my — precious — wife !

The angel took a sapphire pen
And wrote in rainbow dew,
"The man would be a boy again,
And be a husband, too !"

"And is there nothing yet unsaid
Before the change appears ?
Remember, all their gifts have fled
With those dissolving years !"

"Why, yes ; for memory would recall
My fond paternal joys ;
I could not bear to leave them all :
I'll take — my — girl — and — boys !"

The smiling angel dropped his pen —
"Why, this will never do ;
The man would be a boy again,
And be a father, too !"

And so I laughed — my laughter woke
The household with its noise —
And wrote my dream, when morning broke,
To please the gray-haired boys.

WHITTLING.

A "NATIONAL PORTRAIT."

THE Yankee boy, before he's sent to school,
Well knows the mysteries of that magic tool,
The pocket-knife. To that his wistful eye
Turns, while he hears his mother's lullaby ;
His hoarded cents he gladly gives to get it,
Then leaves no stone unturned till he can whet it ;
And in the education of the lad
No little part that implement hath had.
His pocket-knife to the young whittler brings
A growing knowledge of material things.

Projectiles, music, and the sculptor's art,
His chestnut whistle and his shingle dart,
His elder popgun with its hickory rod,
Its sharp explosion and rebounding wad,
His cornstalk fiddle, and the deeper tone
That murmurs from his pumpkin-stalk trombone,
Conspire to teach the boy. To these succeed
His bow, his arrow of a feathered seed,
His windmill, raised the passing breeze to win,
His water-wheel, that turns upon a pin ;
Or, if his father lives upon the shore,
You'll see his ship, "beam ends upon the floor,"
Full rigged with raking masts, and timbers
stanch,
And waiting near the wash-tub for a launch.

Thus by his genius and his jack-knife driven,
 Ere long he'll solve you any problem given ;
 Make any gimcrack musical or mute,
 A plough, a couch, an organ or a flute ;
 Make you a locomotive or a clock,
 Cut a canal, or build a floating-dock,
 Or lead forth Beauty from a marble block ; —
 Make anything in short, for sea or shore,
 From a child's rattle to a seventy-four ; —
 Make it, said I ? — Ay, when he undertakes it, He'll make the thing and the machine that makes it.

And when the thing is made, — whether it be
 To move on earth, in air, or on the sea ;
 Whether on water, o'er the waves to glide,
 Or upon land to roll, revolve, or slide ;
 Whether to whirl or jar, to strike or ring,
 Whether it be a piston or a spring,
 Wheel, pulley, tube sonorous, wood or brass,
 The thing designed shall surely come to pass ;
 For, when his hand's upon it, you may know
 That there's go in it, and he'll make it go.

RAILROAD RHYME.

SINGING through the forests,
 Rattling over ridges ;
 Shooting under arches,
 Rumbling over bridges ;
 Whizzing through the mountains,
 Buzzing o'er the vale, —
 Bless me ! this is pleasant,
 Riding on the rail !

Men of different "stations"
 In the eye of fame,
 Here are very quickly
 Coming to the same ;
 High and lowly people,
 Birds of every feather,
 On a common level,
 Travelling together.

Gentleman in shorts,
 Looming very tall ;
 Gentleman at large
 Talking very small ;
 Gentleman in tights,
 With a loose-ish mien ;
 Gentleman in gray,
 Looking rather green ;

Gentleman quite old,
 Asking for the news ;

Gentleman in black,
 In a fit of blues ;
 Gentleman in claret,
 Sober as a vicar ;
 Gentleman in tweed,
 Dreadfully in liquor !

Stranger on the right
 Looking very sunny,
 Obviously reading
 Something rather funny.
 Now the smiles are thicker, —
 Wonder what they mean !
 Faith, he's got the Knicker-Bocker Magazine !

Stranger on the left
 Closing up his peepers ;
 Now he snores amain,
 Like the Seven Sleepers ;
 At his feet a volume
 Gives the explanation,
 How the man grew stupid
 From "Association" !

Ancient maiden lady
 Anxiously remarks,
 That there must be peril
 'Mong so many sparks ;
 Roguish-looking fellow,
 Turning to the stranger,
 Says it's his opinion
She is out of danger !

Woman with her baby,
 Sitting vis-à-vis ;
 Baby keeps a-squalling,
 Woman looks at me ;
 Asks about the distance,
 Says it's tiresome talking,
 Noises of the cars
 Are so very shocking !

Market-woman, careful
 Of the precious casket,
 Knowing eggs are eggs,
 Tightly holds her basket ;
 Feeling that a smash,
 If it came, would surely
 Send her eggs to pot,
 Rather prematurely.

Singing through the forests,
 Rattling over ridges ;
 Shooting under arches,
 Rumbling over bridges ;

Whizzing through the mountains,
 Buzzing o'er the vale, —
 Bless me ! this is pleasant,
 Riding on the rail !

JOHN GODFREY SAXE.

WOMAN'S WILL.

AN EPIGRAM.

MEN, dying, make their wills, but wives
 Escape a work so sad ;
 Why should they make what all their lives
 The gentle dames have had ?

JOHN GODFREY SAXE.

"NOTHING TO WEAR."

MISS FLORA McFLIMSEY, of Madison Square,
 Has made three separate journeys to Paris,
 And her father assures me, each time she was
 there,

That she and her friend Mrs. Harris (Not the lady whose name is so famous in history,

But plain Mrs. H., without romance or mystery)
 Spent six consecutive weeks without stopping
 In one continuous round of shopping, —
 Shopping alone, and shopping together,
 At all hours of the day, and in all sorts of weather, —

For all manner of things that a woman can put
 On the crown of her head or the sole of her foot,
 Or wrap round her shoulders, or fit round her waist,

Or that can be sewed on, or pinned on, or laced,
 Or tied on with a string, or stitched on with a
 bow,

In front or behind, above or below ;
 For bonnets, mantillas, capes, collars, and shawls ;
 Dresses for breakfasts and dinners and balls ;
 Dresses to sit in and stand in and walk in ;
 Dresses to dance in and flirt in and talk in ;
 Dresses in which to do nothing at all ;
 Dresses for winter, spring, summer, and fall ;
 All of them different in color and pattern,
 Silk, muslin, and lace, crape, velvet, and satin,
 Brocade, and broadcloth, and other material,
 Quite as expensive and much more ethereal ;
 In short, for all things that could ever be thought of,

Or milliner, modiste, or tradesmen be bought of,
 From ten-thousand-francs robes to twentysous frills ;

In all quarters of Paris, and to every store, While McFlimsey in vain stormed, scolded, and swore,
 They footed the streets, and he footed the bills.

The last trip, their goods shipped by the steamer
 Arago,
 Formed, McFlimsey declares, the bulk of her cargo,

Not to mention a quantity kept from the rest,
 Sufficient to fill the largest-sized chest,
 Which did not appear on the ship's manifest,
 But for which the ladies themselves manifested
 Such particular interest, that they invested
 Their own proper persons in layers and rows
 Of muslins, embroideries, workedunder-clothes,
 Gloves, handkerchiefs, scarfs, and such trifles as those ;

Then, wrapped in great shawls, like Circassian beauties,

Gave good-by to the ship, and go-by to the duties.
 Her relations at home all marvelled, no doubt,
 Miss Flora had grown so enormously stout

For an actual belle and a possible bride ;
 But the miracle ceased when she turned inside
 out,

And the truth came to light, and the dry-goods beside,

Which, in spite of collector and custom-house
 sentry,

Had entered the port without any entry.

And yet, though scarce three months have passed since the day

This merchandise went, on twelve carts, up
 Broadway,

This same Miss McFlimsey, of Madison Square,
 The last time we met was in utter despair,
 Because she had nothing whatever to wear !

NOTHING TO WEAR ! Now, as this is a true ditty,
 I do not assert — this, you know, is between us —

That she 's in a state of absolute nudity,
 Like Powers' Greek Slave, or the Medici Venus ;
 But I do mean to say, I have heard her declare,

When, at the same moment, she had on a dress
 Which cost five hundred dollars, and not a cent less,

And jewelry worth ten times more, I should guess,

That she had not a thing in the wide world to wear !

I should mention just here, that out of Miss Flora's

Two hundred and fifty or sixty adorers,
 I had just been selected as he who should throw all
 The rest in the shade, by the gracious bestowal

On myself, after twenty or thirty rejections,
Of those fossil remains which she called her
"affections,"

And that rather decayed, but well-known work
of art,

Which Miss Flora persisted in styling "her heart."

So we were engaged. Our troth had been plighted,
Not by moonbeam or starbeam, by fountain or grove,

But in a front parlor, most brilliantly lighted,
Beneath the gas-fixtures we whispered our love,
Without any romance or raptures or sighs,
Without any tears in Miss Flora's blue eyes,
Or blushes, or transports, or such silly actions,
It was one of the quietest business transactions,
With a very small sprinkling of sentiment, if any,
And a very large diamond imported by Tiffany.
On her virginal lips while I printed a kiss,
She exclaimed, as a sort of parenthesis,

And by way of putting me quite at my ease,
"You know, I'm to polka as much as I please,
And flirt when I like, — now, stop, don't you speak, —

And you must not come here more than twice in the week,

Or talk to me either at party or ball,
But always be ready to come when I call ;
So don't prose to me about duty and stuff,
If we don't break this off, there will be time
enough

For that sort of thing ; but the bargain must be
That, as long as I choose, I am perfectly free,
For this is a sort of engagement, you see,
Which is binding on you but not binding on me."

Well, having thus wooed Miss McFlimsey and gained her,

With the silks, crinolines, and hoops that contained her,

I had, as I thought, a contingent remainder
At least in the property, and the best right
To appear as its escort by day and by night ;
And it being the week of the Stuckups' grand ball, —

Their cards had been out a fortnight or so,

And set all the Avenue on the tiptoe, —

I considered it only my duty to call,

And see if Miss Flora intended to go.

I found her, — as ladies are apt to be found,
When the time intervening between the first
sOUND

Of the bell and the visitor's entry is shorter

Than usual, — I found — I won't say, I caught
her, —

Intent on the pier-glass, undoubtedly meaning
To see if perhaps it did n't need cleaning.

She turned as I entered, — "Why, Harry, you sinner,

I thought that you went to the Flashers' to dinner !"

"So I did," I replied ; "but the dinner is swallowed

And digested, I trust, for 'tis now nine and
more,

So being relieved from that duty, I followed Inclination, which led me, you see, to your
door ;

And now will your ladyship so condescend
As just to inform me if you intend
Your beauty and graces and presence to lend (All of which, when I own, I hope no one will borrow)

To the Stuckups, whose party, you know, is tomorrow ?"

The fair Flora looked up with a pitiful air,
And answered quite promptly, "Why, Harry,
mon cher,

I should like above all things to go with you
there ;

But really and truly — I've nothing to wear."

"Nothing to wear ! go just as you are ;
Wear the dress you have on, and you'll be by far,

I engage, the most bright and particular star
On the Stuckup horizon" — I stopped — for her eye,

Notwithstanding this delicate onset of flattery,
Opened on me at once a most terrible battery
Of scorn and amazement. She made no reply,
But gave a slight turn to the end of her nose
(That pure Grecian feature), as much as to say,
"How absurd that any sane man should suppose
That a lady would go to a ball in the clothes,
No matter how fine, that she wears every day !"

So I ventured again : "Wear your crimson brocade"

(Second turn-up of nose) — "That's too dark by a shade."

"Your blue silk" — "That's too heavy." "Your pink" — "That's too light."

"Wear tulle over satin" — "I can't endure
white."

"Your rose-colored, then, the best of the batch" —

"I have n't a thread of point lace to match."

"Your brown moire antique" — "Yes, and look like a Quaker."

"The pearl-colored" — "I would, but that plaguy dressmaker

Has had it a week." "Then that exquisite lilac
In which you would melt the heart of a Shylock,"

(Here the nose took again the same elevation)—
 "I would n't wear that for the whole of creation."

"Why not? It's my fancy, there's nothing could strike it

As more comme il faut"—"Yes, but, dear me!
 that lean

Sophronia Stuckup has got one just like it,
 And I won't appear dressed like a chit of sixteen."

"Then that splendid purple, that sweet Maza-rine,

That superb point d'aiguille, that imperial green,
 That zephyr-like tarlatan, that rich grenadine"—

"Not one of all which is fit to be seen,"

Said the lady, becoming excited and flushed.

"Then wear," I exclaimed, in a tone which quite crushed

Opposition, "that gorgeous toilette which you sported

In Paris last spring, at the grand presentation,
 When you quite turned the head of the head of the nation ;

And by all the grand court were so very much courted."

The end of the nose was portentously tipped up,
 And both the bright eyes shot forth indignation,
 As she burst upon me with the fierce exclamation,
 "I have worn it three times at the least calculation,

And that and most of my dresses are ripped up!"

Here I ripped out something, perhaps rather rash, Quite innocent, though; but, to use an expression

More striking than classic, it "settled my hash,"

And proved very soon the last act of our session.

"Fiddlesticks, is it, sir? I wonder the ceiling Does n't fall down and crush you—oh! you men have no feeling;

You selfish, unnatural, illiberal creatures,
 Who set yourselves up as patterns and preachers,
 Your silly pretence,—why, what a mere guess
 it is!

Pray, what do you know of a woman's necessities?
 I have told you and showed you I've nothing to wear,

And it's perfectly plain you not only don't care,
 But you do not believe me" (here the nose went still higher),

"I suppose, if you dared, you would call me a liar.

Our engagement is ended, sir—yes, on the spot;
 You're a brute, and a monster, and—I don't know what."

I mildly suggested the words—Hottentot,
 Pickpocket, and cannibal, Tartar, and thief,
 As gentle expletives which might give relief;

But this only proved as a spark to the powder,
 And the storm I had raised came faster and louder;

It blew and it rained, thundered, lightened, and hailed

Interjections, verbs, pronouns, till language quite failed

To express the abusive, and then its arrears
 Were brought up all at once by a torrent of tears,
 And my last faint, despairing attempt at an observation was lost in a tempest of sobs.

Well, I felt for the lady, and felt for my hat,
 too,

Improvised on the crown of the latter a tattoo,
 In lieu of expressing the feelings which lay Quite too deep for words, as Wordsworth would say;

Then, without going through the form of a bow,
 Found myself in the entry— I hardly knew how,—

On doorstep and sidewalk, past lamp-post and square,

At home and up stairs, in my own easy-chair;
 Poked my feet into slippers, my fire into blaze,
 And said to myself, as I lit my cigar,

Supposing a man had the wealth of the Czar
 Of the Russias to boot, for the rest of his days,
 On the whole, do you think he would have much to spare,

If he married a woman with nothing to wear?

Since that night, taking pains that it should not be bruited

Abroad in society, I've instituted
 A course of inquiry, extensive and thorough,
 On this vital subject, and find, to my horror,
 That the fair Flora's case is by no means surprising,

But that there exists the greatest distress
 In our female community, solely arising
 From this unsupplied destitution of dress,
 Whose unfortunate victims are filling the air
 With the pitiful wail of "Nothing to wear."
 Researches in some of the "Upper Ten" districts
 Reveal the most painful and startling statistics,
 Of which let me mention only a few:

In one single house, on Fifth Avenue,
 Three young ladies were found, all below twenty-two,

Who have been three whole weeks without anything new

In the way of flounced silks, and thus left in the lurch

Are unable to go to ball, concert, or church.
 In another large mansion, near the same place,
 Was found a deplorable, heartrending case

Of entire destitution of Brussels point lace.
 In a neighboring block there was found, in three calls,
 Total want, long continued, of camel's-hair shawls ;
 And a suffering family, whose case exhibits
 The most pressing need of real ermine tippets ;
 One deserving young lady almost unable
 To survive for the want of a new Russian sable ;
 Another confined to the house, when it's windier
 Than usual, because her shawl is n't India.
 Still another, whose tortures have been most terrific
 Ever since the sad loss of the steamer Pacific,
 In which were engulfed, not friend or relation (For whose fate she perhaps might have found consolation,
 Or borne it, at least, with serene resignation),
 But the choicest assortment of French sleeves and collars
 Ever sent out from Paris, worth thousands of dollars,
 And all as to style most recherché and rare,
 The want of which leaves her with nothing to wear,
 And renders her life so drear and dyspeptic
 That she's quite a recluse, and almost a sceptic ;
 For she touchingly says that this sort of grief
 Cannot find in Religion the slightest relief,
 And Philosophy has not a maxim to spare
 For the victim of such overwhelming despair.
 But the saddest by far of all these sad features
 Is the cruelty practised upon the poor creatures
 By husbands and fathers, real Bluebeards and Timons,
 Who resist the most touching appeals made for diamonds
 By their wives and their daughters, and leave them for days
 Unsupplied with new jewelry, fans, or bouquets,
 Even laugh at their miseries whenever they have a chance,
 And deride their demands as useless extravagance ;
 One case of a bride was brought to my view,
 Too sad for belief, but, alas ! 't was too true,
 Whose husband refused, as savage as Charon,
 To permit her to take more than ten trunks to Sharon.
 The consequence was, that when she got there,
 At the end of three weeks she had nothing to wear,
 And when she proposed to finish the season
 At Newport, the monster refused out and out,
 For his infamous conduct alleging no reason,
 Except that the waters were good for his gout.

Such treatment as this was too shocking, of course,
 And proceedings are now going on for divorce.
 But why harrow the feelings by lifting the curtain
 From these scenes of woe ? Enough, it is certain,
 Has here been disclosed to stir up the pity
 Of every benevolent heart in the city,
 And spur up Humanity into a canter
 To rush and relieve these sad cases instanter.
 Won't somebody, moved by this touching description,
 Come forward to-morrow and head a subscription ?
 Won't some kind philanthropist, seeing that aid is
 So needed at once by these indigent ladies,
 Take charge of the matter ? Or won't Peter Cooper
 The corner-stone lay of some splendid super-Structure, like that which to-day links his name
 In the Union unending of honor and fame ;
 And found a new charity just for the care
 Of these unhappy women with nothing to wear,
 Which, in view of the cash which would daily
 be claimed,
 The Laying-out Hospital well might be named ?
 Won't Stewart, or some of our dry-goods importers,
 Take a contract for clothing our wives and our daughters ?
 Or, to furnish the cash to supply these distresses,
 And life's pathway strew with shawls, collars,
 and dresses,
 Ere the want of them makes it much rougher and thornier,
 Won't some one discover a new California ?
 O ladies, dear ladies, the next sunny day
 Please trundle your hoops just out of Broadway,
 From its whirl and its bustle, its fashion and pride,
 And temples of trade which tower on each side,
 To the alleys and lanes, where Misfortune and Guilt
 Their children have gathered, their city have built ;
 Where Hunger and Vice, like twin beasts of prey,
 Have hunted their victims to gloom and despair ;
 Raise the rich, dainty dress, and the fine broided skirt,
 Pick your delicate way through dampness and dirt,
 Grope through the dark dens, climb the rickety stair
 To the garret, where wretches, the young and the old,

Half starved and half naked, lie crouched from the cold.

See those skeleton limbs, those frost-bitten feet,
All bleeding and bruised by the stones of the street ;

Hear the sharp cry of childhood, the deep groans that swell

From the poor dying creature who writhes on the floor,

Hear the curses that sound like the echoes of Hell,

As you sicken and shudder and fly from the
door ;

Then home to your wardrobes, and say, if you
dare, —

Spoiled children of Fashion, — you've nothing to wear !

And O, if perchance there should be a sphere
Where all is made right which so puzzles us
here,

Where the glare and the glitter and tinsel of Time
Fade and die in the light of that region sublime,
Where the soul, disenchanted of flesh and of
sense,

Unscreened by its trappings and shows and pretence,

Must be clothed for the life and the service above,
With purity, truth, faith, meekness, and love ;
O daughters of Earth ! foolish virgins, beware !
Lest in that upper realm you have nothing to wear !

WILLIAM ALLEN BUTLER.

THE PROUD MISS MACBRIDE.

A LEGEND OF GOTHAM.

O, TERRIBLY proud was Miss MacBride,
The very personification of pride,
As she minced along in fashion's tide,
Adown Broadway — on the proper side —

When the golden sun was setting ;
There was pride in the head she carried so high,
Pride in her lip, and pride in her eye,
And a world of pride in the very sigh
That her stately bosom was fretting !

O, terribly proud was Miss MacBride,
Proud of her beauty, and proud of her pride,
And proud of fifty matters beside —

That would n't have borne dissection ;
Proud of her wit, and proud of her walk,
Proud of her teeth, and proud of her talk,
Proud of "knowing cheese from chalk,"
On a very slight inspection !

Proud abroad, and proud at home,
Proud wherever she chanced to come —
When she was glad, and when she was glum ;

Proud as the head of a Saracen
Over the door of a tipping-shop ! —
Proud as a duchess, proud as a fop,
"Proud as a boy with a brand-new top,"
Proud beyond comparison !

It seems a singular thing to say,
But her very senses led her astray
Respecting all humility ;
In sooth, her dull auricular drum
Could find in humble only a "hum,"
And heard no sound of "gentle" come,
In talking about gentility.

What lowly meant she did n't know,
For she always avoided "everything low,"
With care the most punctilious ;
And, queerer still, the audible sound
Of "super-silly" she never had found
In the adjective supercilious !

The meaning of mock she never knew,
But imagined the phrase had something to do
With "Moses," a peddling German Jew,
Who, like all hawkers, the country through,
Was "a person of no position ;"
And it seemed to her exceedingly plain,
If the word was really known to pertain
To a vulgar German, it was n't germane
To a lady of high condition !

Even her graces — not her grace —
For that was in the "vocative case" —
Chilled with the touch of her icy face,
Sat very stiffly upon her !
She never confessed a favor aloud,
Like one of the simple, common crowd —
But coldly smiled, and faintly bowed,
As who should say, "You do me proud,
And do yourself an honor !"

And yet the pride of Miss MacBride,
Although it had fifty hobbies to ride,
Had really no foundation ;
But, like the fabrics that gossips devise —
Those single stories that often arise
And grow till they reach a four-story size —
Was merely a fancy creation !

Her birth, indeed, was uncommonly high —
For Miss MacBride first opened her eye
Through a skylight dim, on the light of the sky ;

But pride is a curious passion —
And in talking about her wealth and worth,
She always forgot to mention her birth
To people of rank and fashion !

Of all the notable things on earth,
The queerest one is pride of birth
Among our "fierce democracie !"
A bridge across a hundred years,
Without a prop to save it from sneers, —
Not even a couple of rotten peers, —
A thing for laughter, fleers, and jeers,
Is American aristocracy !

English and Irish, French and Spanish,
German, Italian, Dutch and Danish,
Crossing their veins until they vanish
In one conglomeration !
So subtle a tangle of blood, indeed,
No Heraldry Harvey will ever succeed
In finding the circulation.

Depend upon it, my snobbish friend,
Your family thread you can't ascend,
Without good reason to apprehend
You may find it waxed, at the farther end,
By some plebeian vocation !
Or, worse than that, your boasted line
May end in a loop of stronger twine,
That plagued some worthy relation !

But Miss MacBride had something beside
Her lofty birth to nourish her pride —
For rich was the old paternal MacBride,
According to public rumor ;
And he lived "up town," in a splendid square,
And kept his daughter on dainty fare,
And gave her gems that were rich and rare,
And the finest rings and things to wear,
And feathers enough to plume her.

A thriving tailor begged her hand,
But she gave "the fellow" to understand,
By a violent manual action,
She perfectly scorned the best of his clan,
And reckoned the ninth of any man
An exceedingly vulgar fraction !

Another, whose sign was a golden boot,
Was mortified with a bootless suit,
In a way that was quite appalling ;
For, though a regular sutor by trade,
He was n't a suitor to suit the maid,
Who cut him off with a saw — and bade
"The cobbler keep to his calling !"

A rich tobacconist comes and snees,
And, thinking the lady would scarce refuse
A man of his wealth, and liberal views,
Began, at once, with "If you choose —
And could you really love him —"
But the lady spoiled his speech in a luff,
With an answer rough and ready enough,
To let him know she was up to snuff,
And altogether above him !

A young attorney, of winning grace,
Was scarce allowed to "open his case,"
Ere Miss MacBride had closed his case
With true judicial celerity ;
For the lawyer was poor, and "seedy" to boot,
And to say the lady discarded his suit,
Is merely a double verity !

The last of those who came to court,
Was a lively bean, of the dapper sort,
"Without any visible means of support,"
A crime by no means flagrant
In one who wears an elegant coat,
But the very point on which they vote
A ragged fellow "a vagrant !"

Now dapper Jim his courtship plied
(I wish the fact could be denied)
With an eye to the purse of the old MacBride,
And really "nothing shorter !"
For he said to himself, in his greedy lust,
"Whenever he dies — as die he must —
And yields to Heaven his vital trust,
He's very sure to 'come down with his dust,'
In behalf of his only daughter."

And the very magnificent Miss MacBride,
Half in love, and half in pride,
Quite graciously relented ;
And, tossing her head, and turning her back,
No token of proper pride to lack —
To be a bride, without the "Mac,"
With much disdain, consented !

Old John MacBride, one fatal day,
Became the unresisting prey
Of fortune's undertakers ;
And staking all on a single die,
His foundered bark went high and dry
Among the brokers and breakers !

But, alas, for the haughty Miss MacBride,
'T was such a shock to her precious pride !
She could n't recover, although she tried
Her jaded spirits to rally ;

'T was a dreadful change in human affairs,
From a place "up town" to a nook "up stairs,"
From an avenue down to an alley!

'T was little condolence she had, God wot,
From her "troops of friends," who had n't forgot
The airs she used to borrow!
They had civil phrases enough, but yet
'T was plain to see that their "deepest regret"
Was a different thing from sorrow!

And one of those chaps who make a pun,
As if it were quite legitimate fun
To be blazing away at every one
With a regular, double-loaded gun —
Remarked that moral transgression
Always brings retributive stings
To candle-makers as well as kings;
For "making light of cercous things"
Was a very wick-ed profession!

And vulgar people — the saucy churls —
Inquired about "the price of pearls,"
And mocked at her situation:
"She was n't ruined — they ventured to hope —
Because she was poor, she need n't mope;
Few people were better off for soap,
And that was a consolation!"

And to make her cup of woe run over,
Her elegant, ardent plighted lover
Was the very first to forsake her;
"He quite regretted the step, 't was true —
The lady had pride enough 'for two,'
But that alone would never do
To quiet the butcher and baker!"

And now the unhappy Miss MacBride —
The merest ghost of her early pride —
Bewails her lonely position;
Cramped in the very narrowest niche,
Above the poor, and below the rich —
Was ever a worse condition!

MORAL.

Because you flourish in worldly affairs,
Don't be haughty, and put on airs,
With insolent pride of station!
Don't be proud, and turn up your nose
At poorer people in plainer clothes,
But learn, for the sake of your mind's repose,
That wealth 's a bubble that comes — and goes!
And that all proud flesh, wherever it grows,
Is subject to irritation!

JOHN GODFREY SAXE.

PLAIN LANGUAGE FROM TRUTHFUL
JAMES.

POPULARLY KNOWN AS THE "HEATHEN CHINEE."

WHICH I wish to remark —
And my language is plain —
That for ways that are dark
And for tricks that are vain,
The heathen Chinee is peculiar:
Which the same I would rise to explain.

Ah Sin was his name;
And I shall not deny
In regard to the same
What that name might imply;
But his smile it was pensive and childlike,
As I frequent remarked to Bill Nye.

It was August the third,
And quite soft was the skies,
Which it might be inferred
That Ah Sin was likewise;
Yet he played it that day upon William
And me in a way I despise.

Which we had a small game,
And Ah Sin took a hand:
It was euchre. The same
He did not understand,
But he smiled, as he sat by the table,
With the smile that was childlike and bland.

Yet the cards they were stocked
In a way that I grieve,
And my feelings were shocked
At the state of Nye's sleeve,
Which was stuffed full of aces and bowers,
And the same with intent to deceive.

But the hands that were played
By that heathen Chinee,
And the points that he made,
Were quite frightful to see, —
Till at last he put down a right bower,
Which the same Nye had dealt unto me.

Then I looked up at Nye,
And he gazed upon me;
And he rose with a sigh,
And said, "Can this be?
We are ruined by Chinese cheap labor," —
And he went for that heathen Chinee.

In the scene that ensued
I did not take a hand,
But the floor it was strewed,
Like the leaves on the strand,
With the cards that Ah Sin had been hiding
In the game "he did not understand."

In his sleeves, which were long,
 He had twenty-four jacks, —
 Which was coming it strong,
 Yet I state but the facts.
 And we found on his nails, which were taper, —
 What is frequent in tapers, — that's wax.

Which is why I remark,
 And my language is plain,
 That for ways that are dark,
 And for tricks that are vain,
 The heathen Chinese is peculiar, —
 Which the same I am free to maintain.

THE SOCIETY UPON THE STANISLAUS.

I RESIDE at Table Mountain, and my name is Truthful James :
 I am not up to small deceit or any sinful games ;
 And I'll tell in simple language what I know about the row
 That broke up our Society upon the Stanislaw.

But first I would remark, that 't is not a proper plan
 For any scientific gent to whale his fellow-man ;
 And, if a member don't agree with his peculiar whim,
 To lay for that same member for to " put a head " on him.

Now, nothing could be finer, or more beautiful to see,
 Than the first six months' proceedings of that same society ;
 Till Brown of Calaveras brought a lot of fossil bones
 That he found within a tunnel near the tenement of Jones.

Then Brown he read a paper, and he reconstructed there,
 From those same bones, an animal that was extremely rare ;
 And Jones then asked the Chair for a suspension of the rules,
 Till he could prove that those same bones was one of his lost mules.

Then Brown he smiled a bitter smile, and said
 he was at fault ;
 It seemed he had been trespassing on Jones's family vault ;
 He was a most sarcastic man, this quiet Mr.
 Brown,
 And on several occasions he had cleaned out
 the town.

Now I hold it is not decent for a scientific gent
 To say another is an ass, — at least, to all intent ;
 Nor should the individual who happens to be meant
 Reply by heaving rocks at him to any great extent.

Then Abner Dean of Angel's raised a point of order, when
 A chunk of old red sandstone took him in the abdomen ;
 And he smiled a kind of sickly smile, and curled up on the floor,
 And the subsequent proceedings interested him
 no more.

For in less time than I write it, every member did engage
 In a warfare with the remnants of a palæozoic age ;
 And the way they heaved those fossils in their anger was a sin,
 Till the skull of an old mammoth caved the head of Thompson in.

And this is all I have to say of these improper games,
 For I live at Table Mountain and my name is Truthful James,
 And I've told in simple language what I know about the row
 That broke up our Society upon the Stanislaw.

THE NANTUCKET SKIPPER.

MANY a long, long year ago,
 Nantucket skippers had a plan
 Of finding out, though " lying low,"
 How near New York their schooners ran.

They greased the lead before it fell,
 And then by sounding, through the night,
 Knowing the soil that stuck so well,
 They always guessed their reckoning right.

A skipper gray, whose eyes were dim,
 Could tell, by tasting, just the spot,
 And so below he'd " douse the glim,"—
 After, of course, his " something hot."

Snug in his birth, at eight o'clock,
 This ancient skipper might be found ;
 No matter how his craft would rock,
 He slept, — for skippers' naps are sound.

The watch on deck would now and then
 Run down and wake him, with the lead ;
 He'd up, and taste, and tell the men
 How many miles they went ahead.

One night 't was Jotham Marden's watch,
A curious wag, — the pedler's son ;
And so he mused, (the wanton wretch !)
"To-night I'll have a grain of fun.

"We're all a set of stupid fools,
To think the skipper knows, by tasting,
What ground he's on ; Nantucket schools
Don't teach such stuff, with all their basting!"

And so he took the well-greased lead,
And rubbed it o'er a box of earth
That stood on deck, — a parsnip-bed, —
And then he sought the skipper's berth.

"Where are we now, sir? Please to taste."
The skipper yawned, put out his tongue,
Opened his eyes in wondrous haste,
And then upon the floor he sprung!

The skipper stormed, and tore his hair,
Hauled on his boots, and roared to Marden,
"Nantucket's sunk, and here we are.
Right over old Marm Hackett's garden!"

JAMES THOMAS FIELDS.

THE ART OF BOOK-KEEPING.

How hard, when those who do not wish
To lend, thus lose, their books,
Are snared by anglers — folks that fish
With literary hooks —
Who call and take some favorite tome,
But never read it through ;
They thus complete their set at home
By making one at you.

I, of my "Spenser" quite bereft,
Last winter sore was shaken ;
Of "Lamb" I've but a quarter left,
Nor could I save my "Bacon ;"
And then I saw my "Crabbe" at last,
Like Hamlet, backward go,
And, as the tide was ebbing fast,
Of course I lost my "Rowe."

My "Mallet" served to knock me down,
Which makes me thus a talker,
And once, when I was out of town,
My "Johnson" proved a "Walker."
While studying o'er the fire one day
My "Hobbes" amidst the smoke,
They bore my "Colman" clean away,
And carried off my "Coke."

They picked my "Locke," to me far more
Than Bramah's patent worth,
And now my losses I deplore,
Without a "Home" on earth.

If once a book you let them lift,
Another they conceal,
For though I caught them stealing "Swift,"
As swiftly went my "Steele."

"Hope" is not now upon my shelf,
Where late he stood elated,
But, what is strange, my "Pope" himself
Is excommunicated.
My little "Suckling" in the grave
Is sunk to swell the ravage,
And what was Crusoe's fate to save,
'T was mine to lose — a "Savage."

Even "Glover's" works I cannot put
My frozen hands upon,
Though ever since I lost my "Foote"
My "Bunyan" has been gone.
My "Hoyle" with "Cotton" went oppressed,
My "Taylor," too, must fail,
To save my "Goldsmith" from arrest,
In vain I offered "Bayle."

I "Prior" sought, but could not see
The "Hood" so late in front,
And when I turned to hunt for "Lee,"
O, where was my "Leigh Hunt" ?
I tried to laugh, old Care to tickle,
Yet could not "Tickell" touch,
And then, alack ! I missed my "Mickle,"
And surely mickle's much.

'T is quite enough my griefs to feed,
My sorrows to excuse,
To think I cannot read my "Reid,"
Nor even use my "Hughes."
My classics would not quiet lie, —
A thing so fondly hoped ;
Like Dr. Primrose, I may cry,
My "Livy" has eloped.

My life is ebbing fast away ;
I suffer from these shocks ;
And though I fixed a lock on "Gray,"
There's gray upon my locks.
I'm far from "Young," am growing pale,
I see my "Butler" fly,
And when they ask about my ail,
'T is "Burton" I reply.

They still have made me slight returns,
And thus my griefs divide ;
For O, they cured me of my "Burns,"
And eased my "Akenside."
But all I think I shall not say,
Nor let my anger burn,
For, as they never found me "Gay,"
They have not left me "Sterne."

THOMAS HOOD.

ODE TO TOBACCO.

Thou who, when fears attack,
 Bid'st them avant, and Black
 Care, at the horseman's back
 Perching, unseatest ;
 Sweet when the morn is gray ;
 Sweet, when they 've cleared away
 Lunch ; and at close of day
 Possibly sweetest :

I have a liking old
 For thee, though manifold
 Stories, I know, are told,
 Not to thy credit ;
 How one (or two at most)
 Drops make a cat a ghost —
 Useless, except to roast —
 Doctors have said it :

How they who use fuseses
 All grow by slow degrees
 Brainless as chimpanzees,
 Meagre as lizards ;
 Go mad, and beat their wives ;
 Plunge (after shocking lives)
 Razors and carving-knives
 Into their gizzards.

Confound such knavish tricks !
 Yet know I five or six
 Smokers who freely mix
 Still with their neighbors ;
 Jones — (who, I 'm glad to say,
 Asked leave of Mrs. J.) —
 Daily absorbs a clay
 After his labors.

Cats may have had their goose
 Cooked by tobacco-juice ;
 Still why deny its use
 Thoughtfully taken ?
 We 're not as tabbies are :
 Smith, take a fresh cigar !
 Jones, the tobacco-jar !
 Here 's to thee, Bacon !

CHARLES S. CALVERLEY.

DISASTER.

'T WAS ever thus from childhood's hour
 My fondest hopes would not decay ;
 I never loved a tree or flower
 Which was the first to fade away !
 The garden, where I used to delve
 Short-frooked, still yields me pinks in plenty ;
 The pear-tree that I climbed at twelve,
 I see still blossoming, at twenty.

I never nursed a dear gazelle.
 But I was given a paroquet —
 How I did nurse him if unwell !
 He 's imbecile, but lingers yet.
 He 's green, with an enchanting tuft ;
 He melts me with his small black eye :
 He 'd look inimitable stuffed,
 And knows it — but he will not die !

I had a kitten — I was rich
 In pets — but all too soon my kitten
 Became a full-sized cat, by which
 I 've more than once been scratched and bitten ;
 And when for sleep her limbs she curled
 One day beside her untouched plateful,
 And glided calmly from the world,
 I freely own that I was grateful.

And then I bought a dog — a queen !
 Ah, Tiny, dear departing pug !
 She lives, but she is past sixteen,
 And scarce can crawl across the rug.
 I loved her beautiful and kind ;
 Delighted in her pert Bow-wow ;
 But now she snaps if you don't mind ;
 'T were lunacy to love her now.

I used to think, should e'er mishap
 Betide my crumple-visaged Ti,
 In shape of prowling thief, or trap,
 Or coarse bull-terrier — I should die.
 But ah ! disasters have their use ;
 And life might e'en be too sunshiny :
 Nor would I make myself a goose,
 If some big dog should swallow Tiny.

CHARLES S. CALVERLEY.

MOTHERHOOD.

SHE laid it where the sunbeams fall
 Unscanned upon the broken wall.
 Without a tear, without a groan,
 She laid it near a mighty stone,
 Which some rude swain had haply cast
 Thither in sport, long ages past,
 And Time with mosses had o'erlaid,
 And fenced with many a tall grass-blade,
 And all about bid roses bloom
 And violets shed their soft perfume.
 There, in its cool and quiet bed,
 She set her burden down and fled :
 Nor flung, all eager to escape,
 One glance upon the perfect shape,
 That lay, still warm and fresh and fair,
 But motionless and soundless there.

No human eye had marked her pass
 Across the linden-shadowed grass
 Ere yet the minster clock chimed seven :
 Only the innocent birds of heaven —
 The magpie, and the rook whose nest
 Swings as the elm-tree waves his crest —
 And the lithe cricket, and the hoar
 And huge-limbed hound that guards the door,
 Looked on when, as a summer wind
 That, passing, leaves no trace behind,
 All unapparelled, barefoot all,
 She ran to that old ruined wall,
 To leave upon the chill dank earth
 (For ah ! she never knew its worth),
 Mid hemlock rank, and fern and ling,
 And dews of night, that precious thing !
 And then it might have lain forlorn
 From morn to eve, from eve to morn :
 But that, by some wild impulse led,
 The mother, ere she turned and fled,
 One moment stood erect and high ;
 Then poured into the silent sky
 A cry so jubilant, so strange,
 That Alice — as she strove to range
 Her rebel ringlets at her glass —
 Sprang up and gazed across the grass ;
 Shook back those curls so fair to see,
 Clapped her soft hands in childish glee ;
 And shrieked — her sweet face all aglow,
 Her very limbs with rapture shaking —
 “ My hen has laid an egg, I know ;
 And only hear the noise she’s making ! ”

CHARLES S. CALVERLEY.

THE HEN.

A FAMOUS hen’s my story’s theme,
 Which ne’er was known to tire
 Of laying eggs, but then she’d scream
 So loud o’er every egg, ’t would seem
 The house must be on fire.
 A turkey-cock, who ruled the walk,
 A wiser bird and older,
 Could bear ’t no more, so off did stalk
 Right to the hen, and told her :
 “ Madam, that scream, I apprehend,
 Adds nothing to the matter ;
 It surely helps the egg no whit ;
 Then lay your egg, and done with it !
 I pray you, madam, as a friend,
 Cease that superfluous clatter !
 You know not how’t goes through my head.”
 “ Humph ! very likely ! ” madam said,
 Then, proudly putting forth a leg, —
 “ Uneducated barnyard fowl !
 You know, no more than any owl,

The noble privilege and praise
 Of authorship in modern days —
 I’ll tell you why I do it :
 First, you perceive, I lay the egg,
 And then — review it.”

From the German of CLAUDIUS.

THE COSMIC EGG.

UPON a rock yet uncreate,
 Amid a chaos inchoate,
 An uncreated being sate ;
 Beneath him, rock,
 Above him, cloud.
 And the cloud was rock,
 And the rock was cloud.
 The rock then growing soft and warm,
 The cloud began to take a form,
 A form chaotic, vast, and vague,
 Which issued in the cosmic egg.
 Then the Being uncreate
 On the egg did incubate,
 And thus became the incubator ;
 And of the egg did allegate,
 And thus became the alligator ;
 And the incubator was potentate,
 But the alligator was potentator.

MORTIMER COLLINS.

TO THE PLIOCENE SKULL.

A GEOLOGICAL ADDRESS.

“ A human skull has been found in California, in the Pliocene formation. This skull is the remnant, not only of the earliest pioneer of this State, but the oldest known human being. . . . The skull was found in a shaft one hundred and fifty feet deep, two miles from Angel’s, in Calaveras County, by a miner named James Matson, who gave it to Mr. Scribner, a merchant, and he gave it to Dr. Jones, who sent it to the State Geological Survey. . . . The published volume of the State Survey on the Geology of California states that man existed contemporaneously with the mastodon, but this fossil proves that he was here before the mastodon was known to exist.” — Daily Paper.

“ SPEAK, O man, less recent ! Fragmentary fossil !
 Primal pioneer of Pliocene formation,
 Hid in lowest drifts below the earliest stratum
 Of Volcanic tufa !

“ Older than the beasts, the oldest Palæotherium ;
 Older than the trees, the oldest Cryptogamia ;
 Older than the hills, those infantile eruptions
 Of earth’s epidermis !

“Eo — Mio — Plio — whatsoe'er the ‘cene’ was That those vacant sockets filled with awe and wonder, —

Whether shores Devonian or Silurian beaches, —
Tell us thy strange story !

“Or has the Professor slightly antedated
By some thousand years thy advent on this planet,
Giving thee an air that’s somewhat better fitted
For cold-blooded creatures ?

“Wert thou true spectator of that mighty forest,
When above thy head the stately Sigillaria Reared its columned trunks in that remote and distant
Carboniferous epoch !

“Tell us of that scene, — the dim and watery woodland,
Songless, silent, hushed, with never bird or insect,
Veiled with spreading fronds and screened with tall club-mosses,
Lycopodiacea —

“When beside thee walked the solemn Plesiosaurus,
And around thee crept the festive Ichthyosaurus, While from time to time above thee flew and circled
Cheerful Pterodactyls.

“Tell us of thy food, — those half-marine refec-
tions,
Crinoids on the shell, and Brachipods au natu-rel, —
Cattle-fish to which the oeuvre of Victor Hugo
Seems a periwinkle.

“Speak, thou awful vestige of the earth’s creation, —
Solitary fragment of remains organic !
Tell the wondrous secrets of thy past existence, —
Speak ! thou oldest primate !”

Even as I gazed, a thrill of the maxilla
And a lateral movement of the condyloid process,
With post-pliocene sounds of healthy mastica-
tion,
Ground the teeth together ;

And from that imperfect dental exhibition,
Stained with expressed juices of the weed Nico-tiana,
Came these hollow accents, blent with softer murmurs
Of expectoration :

“Which my name is Bowers, and my crust was busted

Falling down a shaft, in Calaveras County,
But I’d take it kindly if you’d send the pieces
Home to old Missouri !”

BEING A MATHEMATICAL MADRIGAL IN THE SIMPLEST FORM.

CHARMER, on a given straight line,
And which we will call B C,
Meeting at a common point A,
Draw the lines A C, A B.
But, my sweetest, so arrange it
That they’re equal, all the three ;
Then you’ll find that, in the sequel,
All their angles, too, are equal.

Equal angles, so to term them,
Each one opposite its brother !
Equal joys and equal sorrows,
Equal hopes, ’t were sin to smother,
Equal, — O, divine ecstasies, —
Based on Hutton’s mathematics !

THE LAWYER’S INVOCATION TO SPRING.

WHEREAS, on certain boughs and sprays
Now divers birds are heard to sing,
And sundry flowers their heads upraise,
Hail to the coming on of spring !

The songs of those said birds arouse
The memory of our youthful hours,
As green as those said sprays and boughs,
As fresh and sweet as those said flowers.

The birds aforesaid, — happy pairs, —
Love, mid the aforesaid boughs, inshrines
In freehold nests ; themselves, their heirs,
Administrators, and assigns.

O busiest term of Cupid's Court,
Where tender plaintiffs actions bring, —
Season of frolic and of sport,
Hail, as aforesaid, coming Spring !

THE COURTIN'.

GOD makes sech nights, all white an' still Fur 'z you can look or listen ;
Moonshine an' snow on field an' hill,
All silence an' all glisten.

Zekle crep' up quite unbeknown
An' peeked in thru' the winder,
An' there sot Huldly all alone,
'Ith no one hing to hender.

A fireplace filled the room's one side,
With half a cord o' wood in —
There warn't no stoves (tell comfort died)
To bake ye to a puddin'.

The wa'nut logs shot sparkles out
Towards the pootiest, bless her !
An' leetle flames danced all about
The chiny on the dresser.

Agin the chimbley crook-necks hung,
An' in amongst 'em rnsted
The ole queen's arm thet gran'ther Young
Fetched back from Concord busted.

The very room, coz she was in,
Seemed warm from floor to ceilin',
An' she looked full ez rosy agin
Ez the apples she was peelin'.

'T was kin o' kingdom-come to look
On sech a blessed cretur,
A dogrose blushin' to a brook
Ain't modester nor sweeter.

He was six foot o' man, A 1,
Clean grit an' human natur' ;
None could n't quicker pitch a ton,
Nor dror a furrer straighter.

He 'd sparked it with full twenty gals,
Hed squired 'em, danced 'em, druv 'em,
Fust this one, an' then thet, by spells —
All is, he could n't love 'em.

But long o' her his veins 'ould run
All crinkly like curled maple,
The side she breshed felt full o' sun
Ez a south slope in Ap'il.

She thought no v'ice hed such a swing
Ez hisn in the choir ;
My ! when he made Ole Hundred ring,
She knowed the Lord was nigher.

An' she 'd blush scarlit, right in prayer,
When her new meetin'-bunnet
Felt somehow thru' its crown a pair
O' blue eyes sot upon it.

Thet night, I tell ye, she looked some !
She seemed to 've gut a new soul,
For she felt sartin-sure he 'd come,
Down to her very shoe-sole.

She heered a foot, an' knowed it tu,
A-raspin' on the scraper, —
All ways to once her feelin's flew
Like sparks in burnt-up paper.

He kin' o' l'itered on the mat,
Some doubtfie o' the sekle,
His heart kep' goin' pitty-pat,
But hern went pity Zekle.

An' yit she gin her cheer a jerk
Ez though she wished him furdur,
An' on her apples kep' to work,
Parin' away like murder.

"You want to see my Pa, I s'pose ?"
"Wal . . . no . . . I come dasignin' " —
"To see my Ma ? She 's sprinklin' clo'es Agin to-morrer's i'nin'."

To say why gals acts so or so,
Or don't, 'ould be presumin' ;
Mebby to mean yes an' say no
Comes nateral to women.

He stood a spell on one foot fust,
Then stood a spell on t' other,
An' on which one he felt the wust
He couldn't ha' told ye nuther.

Says he, "I 'd better call agin ;"
Says she, "Think likely, Mister ;"
Thet last word pricked him like a pin,
An' . . . Wal, he up an' kist her.

When Ma bimeby upon 'em slips,
Huldy sot pale ez ashes,
All kin' o' smily roun' the lips
An' teary roun' the lashes.

For she was jes' the quiet kind
Whose naturs never vary,
Like streams that keep a summer mind
Snow-hid in Jenooary.

The blood clost roun' her heart felt glued
Too tight for all expressin',
Tell mother see how metters stood,
And gin 'em both her blessin'.

Then her red come back like the tide
Down to the Bay o' Fundy,
An' all I know is they was cried
In meetin' come nex' Sunday.

WHAT MR. ROBINSON THINKS.*

FROM "THE BIGLOW PAPERS," NO. III.

GUVENER B. is a sensible man ;
He stays to his home an' looks arter his folks ;
He draws his furrer ez straight ez he can,
An' into nobody's tater-patch pokes ; —
But John P.
Robiuson he
Sez he wunt vote fer Guvener B.

My ! ain't it terrible ? Wut shall we du ?
We can't never choose him o' course, — thet 's flat ;
Guess we shall hev to come round, (don't you ?)
An' go in fer thunder an' guns, an' all that ;
Fer John P.
Robinson he
Sez he wunt vote fer Guvener B.

GINERAL C. is a dreffle smart man :
He's ben on all sides thet give places or pelf ;
But consistency still wuz a part of his plan, —
He 's ben true to one party, — an' thet is himself ; —
So John P.
Robinson he
Sez he shall vote fer Gíneral C.

GINERAL C. he goes in fer the war ; †
He don't vally principle more 'n an old cud ;
Wut did God make us raytional creeturs fer,
But glory an' gunpowder, plunder an' blood ?

* Preserved here because the essential humor of the satire has outlived its local and temporary application.

† Written at the time of the Mexican war, which was strongly opposed by the Antislavery party as being unnecessary and wrong.

So John P.
Robinson he
Sez he shall vote fer General C.

We were gittin' on nicely up here to our village,
With good old idees o' wut's right an' wut
ain't,

We kind o' thought Christ went agin war an'
pillage,

An' thet epyletts worn't the best mark of a saint ;

But John P.

Robinson he

Sez this kind o' thing's an exploded idee.

The side of our country must ollers be took,
An' Presidunt Polk, you know, he is our country ;

An' the angel thet writes all our sins in a book
Puts the debit to him, an' to us the per contry ;

An' John P.

Robinson he

Sez this is his view o' the thing to a T.

Parson Wilbur he calls all these argimunts lies ;
Sez they're nothin' on airth but jest fee, favo,
fum.

And thet all this big talk of our destinies
Is half ov it ign'ance, an' t' other half rum ;

But John P.

Robinson he

Sez it ain't no sech thing ; an', of course, so must we.

Parson Wilbur sez he never heerd in his life
Thet th' Apostles rigged out in their swallertail coats,

An' marched round in front of a drum an' a fife,
To git some on 'em office, an' some on 'em votes ;

But John P.

Robinson he

Sez they didn't know everythin' down in Judee.

Wal, it's a marcy we've gut folks to tell us
The rights an' the wrongs o' these matters, I vow, —

God sends country lawyers, an' other wise fellers,
To drive the world's team wen it gits in a slough ;

Fer John P.

Robinson he

Sez the world'll go right, ef he hollers out
Gee !

WIDOW BEDOTT TO ELDER SNIFFLES.

FROM "THE WIDOW BEDOTT PAPERS."

O REVEREND sir, I do declare
It drives me most to frenzy,
To think of you a lying there
Down sick with influenzy.

A body'd thought it was enough
To mourn your wive's departer,
Without sich trouble as this ere
To come a follerin' arter.

But sickness and affliction
Are sent by a wise creation,
And always ought to be underwent
By patience and resignation.

O, I could to your bedside fly,
And wipe your weeping eyes,
And do my best to cure you up,
If 't would n't create surprise.

It's a world of trouble we tarry in,
But, Elder, don't despair ;
That you may soon be movin' again
Is constantly my prayer.

Both sick and well, you may depend
You'll never be forgot
By your faithful and affectionate friend,
PRISCILLA POOL BEDOTT.

FRANCES MIRIAM WHITCHER.

THE NEW CHURCH ORGAN.

THEY've got a bran new organ, Sue,
For all their fuss and search ;
They've done just as they said they'd do,
And fetched it into church.
They're bound the critter shall be seen,
And on the preacher's right,
They've hoisted up their new machine
In everybody's sight.
They've got a chorister and choir,
Ag'in my voice and vote ;
For it was never my desire
To praise the Lord by note !

I've been a sister good an' true,
For five an' thirty year ;
I've done what seemed my part to do,
An' prayed my duty clear ;
I've sung the hymns both slow and quick,
Just as the preacher read ;
And twice, when Deacon Tubbs was sick,
I took the fork an' led !

An' now, their bold, new-fangled ways
Is comin' all about ;
And I, right in my latter days,
Am fairly crowded out !

To-day, the preacher, good old dear,
With tears all in his eyes,
Read — "I can read my tittle clear
To mansions in the skies." —
I al'ays liked that blessed hymn —
I s'pose I al'ays will ;
It somehow gratifies my whim,
In good old Ortonville ;
But when that choir got up to sing,
I could n't catch a word ;
They sung the most dog-gonedest thing
A body ever heard !

Some worldly chaps was standin' near,
An' when I see them grin,
I bid farewell to every fear,
And boldly waded in.
I thought I'd chase the tune along,
An' tried with all my might ;
But though my voice is good an' strong,
I could n't steer it right.
When they was high, then I was low,
An' also contra'wise ;
And I too fast, or they too slow,
To "mansions in the skies."

An' after every verse, you know,
They played a little tune ;
I did n't understand, an' so
I started in too soon.
I pitched it purty middlin' high,
And fetched a lusty tone,
But O, alas ! I found that I
Was singin' there alone !
They laughed a little, I am told ;
But I had done my best ;
And not a wave of trouble rolled
Across my peaceful breast.

And Sister Brown, — I could but look, —
She sits right front of me ;
She never was no singin' book,
An' never went to be ;
But then she al'ays tried to do
The best she could, she said ;
She understood the time, right through,
An' kep' it with her head ;
But when she tried this mornin', O,
I had to laugh, or cough !
It kep' her head a bobbin' so,
It e'en a'most comé off !

An' Deacon Tubbs, — he all broke down,
As one might well suppose ;
He took one look at Sister Brown,
And meekly scratched his nose.
He looked his hymn-book through and through,
And laid it on the seat,
And then a pensive sigh he drew,
And looked completely beat.
An' when they took another bout,
He did n't even rise ;
But drew his red bandanner out,
An' wiped his weeping eyes.

I've been a sister, good an' true,
For five an' thirty year ;
I've done what seemed my part to do,
An' prayed my duty clear ;
But death will stop my voice, I know,
For he is on my track ;
And some day, I'll to meetin' go,
And nevermore come back.
And when the folks get up to sing —
Whene'er that time shall be —
I do not want no patent thing
A squealin' over me !

WILL M. CARLETON.

THE RETORT.

OLD Birch, who taught the village school,
Wedded a maid of homespun habit ;
He was as stubborn as a mule,
And she as playful as a rabbit.
Poor Kate had scarce become a wife
Before her husband sought to make her
The pink of country polished life,
And prim and formal as a Quaker.

One day the tutor went abroad,
And simple Katie sadly missed him ;
When he returned, behind her lord
She shyly stole, and fondly kissed him.
The husband's anger rose, and red
And white his face alternate grew :
"Less freedom, ma'an !" Kate sighed and said,
"O, dear ! I did n't know 't was you !"

GEORGE PERKINS MORRIS.

DOW'S FLAT.

1856.

Dow's Flat. That's its name.
And I reckon that you
Are a stranger ? The same ?
Well, I thought it was true,
For thar is n't a man on the river as can't spot
the place at first view.

It was called after Dow, —
Which the same was an ass ;
And as to the how
Thet the thing kem to pass, —
Just tie up your hoss to that buckeye, and sit ye down here in the grass.

You see this yer Dow
Hed the worst kind of luck ;
He slipped up somehow
On each thing that he struck.
Why, ef he 'd a' straddled thet fence-rail the derned thing 'ed get up and buck.

He mined on the bar
Till he could n't pay rates ;
He was smashed by a car
When he tunnelled with Bates ;
And right on the top of his trouble kem his wife and five kids from the States.

It was rough, — mighty rough ;
But the boys they stood by,
And they brought him the stuff
For a house, on the sly ;
And the old woman, — well, she did washing, and took on when no one was nigh.

But this yer luck of Dow's
Was so powerful mean
That the spring near his house
Dried right up on the green ;
And he sunk forty feet down for water, but nary
a drop to be seen.

Then the bar petered out,
And the boys would n't stay ;
And the chills got about,
And his wife fell away ;
But Dow, in his well, kept a peggin' in his usual ridikilons way.

One day, — it was June, —
And a year ago, jest, —
This Dow kem at noon
To his work like the rest,
With a shovel and pick on his shoulder, and a derringer hid in his breast.

He goes to the well,
And he stands on the brink,
And stops for a spell
Jest to listen and think :
For the sun in his eyes, (jest like this, sir !) you see, kinder made the cuss blink.

His two ragged gals
In the gulch were at play,
And a gownd that was Sal's

Kinder flapped on a bay :
Not much for a man to be leavin', but his all, — as I 've heer'd the folks say.

And — that 's a peart hoss
Thet you 've got — ain't it now ?
What might be her cost ?
Eh ? Oh ! — Well then, Dow —
Let 's see, — well, that forty-foot grave was n't his, sir, that day, anyhow.

For a blow of his pick
Sorter caved in the side,
And he looked and turned sick,
Then he trembled and cried.
For you see the dern cuss had struck — “Water?” — beg your parding, young man,
there you lied !

It was gold, — in the quartz,
And it ran all alike ;
And I reckon five onghts
Was the worth of that strike ;
And that house with the coopilow 's his'n, —
which the same is n't bad for a Pike.

Thet 's why it 's Dow's Flat ;
And the thing of it is
That he kinder got that
Through sheer contrairiness :
For 't was water the derned cuss was seekin', and his luck made him certain to miss.

Thet 's so. Thar 's your way
To the left of yon tree ;
But — a — look h'yr, say,
Won't you come up to tea ?
No ? Well, then the next time you 're passin' ;
and ask after Dow, — and thet 's me.

BRET HARTE.

◆◆◆
JIM.

SAY there ! P'r'aps
Some on you chaps
Might know Jim Wild ?
Well, — no offence :
Thar ain't no sense
In gittin' riled !

Jim was my chum
Up on the Bar :
Thet 's why I come
Down from up thar,
Lookin' for Jim.
Thank ye, sir ! you
Ain't of that crew, —
Blest if you are !

Money? — Not much :
That ain't my kind ;
I ain't no such.
Rum ? — I don't mind,
Seein' it's you.

Well, this yer Jim,
Did you know him ? —
Jess 'bout your size ;
Same kind of eyes ? —
Well, that is strange :
Why, it 's two year
Since he come here,
Sick, for a change.

Well, here 's to us ;
Eh ?
The deuce you say !
Dead ? —
That little cuss ?

What makes you star, —
You over thar ?
Can't a man drop
's glass in yer shop
But you must rar' ?
It would n't take
Derned much to break
You and your bar.

Dead !
Poor — little — Jim !
— Why, there was me,
Jones, and Bob Lee,
Harry and Ben, —
No-account men :
Then to take him !

Well, thar — Good-by, —
No more, sir, — I —
Eh ?

What 's that you say ? —
Why, dern it ! — sho ! —
No ? Yes ! By Jo !
Sold !
Sold ! Why you limb,
You ornery,
Derned old
Long-legged Jim !

BANTY TIM.

[Remarks of Sergeant Tilmon Joy to the White Man's Committee of Spunky Point, Illinois.]

I RECKON I git your drift, gents —
You 'low the boy sha'n't stay ;
This is a white man's country :
You 're Democrats, you say :

And whereas, and seein', and wherefore,
The times bein' all out o' jint,
The nigger has got to monkey
From the limits o' Spunky P'int !

Let's reason the thing a minute ;
I 'm an old-fashioned Democrat, too,
Though I laid my politics out o' the way
For to keep till the war was through.
But I come back here allowin'
To vote as I used to do,
Though it gravels me like the devil to train
Along o' sich fools as you.

Now dog my cats of I kin see,
In all the light of the day,
What you 've got to do with the question
Ef Tim shall go or stay.
And furdur than that I give notice,
Ef one of you tetches the boy,
He kin check his trunks to a warmer clime
Than he 'll find in Illanoy.

Why, blame your hearts, jist hear me !
You know that ungodly day
When our left struck Vicksburg Heights, how ripped
And torn and tattered we lay.
When the rest retreated, I stayed behind,
Fur reasons sufficient to me, —
With a rib caved in, and a leg on a strike,
I sprawled on that cursed glacee.

Lord ! how the hot sun went for us,
And br'iled and blistered and burned !
How the rebel bullets whizzed round us
When a cuss in his death-grip turned !
Till along toward dusk I seen a thing
I could n't believe for a spell :
That nigger — that Tim — was a-crawlin' to me
Through that fire-proof, gilt-edged hell !

The rebels seen him as quick as me,
And the bullets buzzed like bees ;
But he jumped for me, and shouldered me,
Though a shot brought him once to his knees ;
But he staggered up, and packed me off,
With a dozen stumbles and falls,
Till safe in our lines he drapped us both,
His black hide riddled with balls.

So, my gentle gazelles, thar 's my answer,
And here stays Banty Tim :
He trumped Death's ace for me that day,
And I 'm not goin' back on him !
You may rezoloot till the cows come home,
But ef one of you tetches the boy,
He 'll wrastle his hash to-night in hell,
Or my name 's not Tilmon Joy !

JOHN HAY.

LITTLE BREECHES.

A PIKE COUNTY VIEW OF SPECIAL PROVIDENCE.

I DON'T go much on religion,
 I never ain't had no show ;
 But I've got a middlin' tight grip, sir,
 On the handful o' things I know.
 I don't pan out on the prophets
 And free-will, and that sort of thing, —
 But I b'lieve in God and the angels,
 Ever sence one night last spring.

I come into town with some turnips,
 And my little Gabe come along, —
 No four-year-old in the county
 Could beat him for pretty and strong,
 Peart and chipper and sassy,
 Always ready to swear and fight, —
 And I'd larnt him ter chaw terbacker,
 Jest to keep his milk-teeth white.

The snow come down like a blanket
 As I passed by Taggart's store ;
 I went in for a jug of molasses
 And left the team at the door.
 They scared at something and started, —
 I heard one little squall,
 And hell-to-split over the prairie
 Went team, Little Breeches and all.

Hell-to-split over the prairie !
 I was almost froze with skeer ;
 But we rousted up some torches,
 And sarched for 'em far and near.
 At last we struck hosses and wagon,
 Snowed under a soft white mound,
 Upsot, dead beat, — but of little Gabe
 No hide nor hair was found.

And here all hope soured on me
 Of my fellow-critter's aid, —
 I jest flopped down on my marrow-bones,
 Crotch-deep in the snow, and prayed.

* * * * *

By this, the torches was played out,
 And me and Isrul Parr
 Went off for some wood to a sheepfold
 That he said was somewhar thar.

We found it at last, and a little shed
 Where they shut up the lambs at night.
 We looked in, and seen them huddled thar,
 So warm and sleepy and white ;
 And THAR sot Little Breeches and chirped,
 As peart as ever you see,
 "I want a chaw of terbacker,
 And that's what's the matter of me."

How did he git thar? Angels.
 He could never have walked in that storm.
 They jest scooped down and toted him
 To whar it was safe and warm.
 And I think that saving a little child,
 And bringing him to his own,
 Is a derned sight better business
 Than loafing around The Throne.

HANS BREITMANN gife a barty,
 Dey had biano-blayin ;
 I felled in lofe mit a Merican frau,
 Her name was Madilda Yane.
 She had haar as prawn ash a pretzel,
 Her eyes vas himmel-plue,
 Und ven dey locket into mine,
 Dey shplit mine heart in two.

Hans Breitmann gife a barty,
 I vent dere you'll pe pound.
 I valtzet mit Madilda Yane
 Und vent shpinnen round und round.
 De pootiest Frauelein in de House,
 She vayed 'pout dwo hoodred pound,
 Und efery dime she gife a shoomp
 She make de vindows sound.

Hans Breitmann gife a barty,
 I dells you it cost him dear.
 Dey rolled in more as sefen kecks
 Of foost-rate Lager Beer.
 Und venefer dey knocks de shpickett in De Deutschers gifes a cheer.
 I dinks dat so vine a barty
 Nefer coom to a het dis year.

Hans Breitmann gife a barty ;
 Dere all vas Souse und Brouse.
 Ven de sooper comed in, de gompany
 Did make demselves to house ;
 Dey ate das Brot und Gensy broost,
 De Bratwurst und Braten fine,
 Und vash der Abendessen down
 Mit four parrels of Neckarwein.

Hans Breitmann gife a barty ;
 We all eot tronk ash bigs.
 I poot mine mout to a parrel of bier,
 Und emptied it oop mit a schwigs.
 Und denn I gissed Madilda Yane
 Und she shlog me on de kop,
 Und de gompany fited mit duple-lecks
 Dill de coonshtable made oos shtop.

Hans Breitmänn gife a barty —
 Where ish dat barty now ?
 Where ish de lovely golden cloud
 Dat float on de moundain's prow ?
 Where ish de himmelstrahlende Stern —

RITTER HUGO.

DER noble Ritter Hugo
 Von Schwillensanfenstein
 Rode out mit shpeer und helmet,
 Und he coom to de panks of de Rhine.

Und oop dere rose a meermaid,
 Vot had n't got nodings on,
 Und she say, "O, Ritter Hugo,
 Vare you goes mit yourself alone ?"

Und he says, "I ride in de green-wood,
 Mit helmet and mit shpeer,
 Till I cooms into ein Gasthaus,
 Und dere I drinks some peer."

Und den outshpoke de maiden,
 Vot had n't got nodings on,
 "I ton't dink mooch of beebles
 Dat goes mit demselfs alone.

"You 'd petter coom down in de wasser,
 Vare dere 's heaps of dings to see,
 Und hafe a shplendid dinner,
 Und trafel along mit me.

"Dare you sees de fish a schwimmin, Und you catches dem efery one."
 So sang dis wasser maiden,
 Vat had n't got nodings on.

"Dare is drunks all full mit money,
 In ships dat vent down of old ;
 Und you helpsh yourself, by dunder !
 To shimmerin crowns of gold.

"Shoost look at dese shpoons und vatches !
 Shoost look at dese diamond rings !
 Come down and fill your bockets,
 Und I 'll kiss you like eferydings !

"Vat you vantsh mit your schnapps und your lager ?
 Coom down into der Rhine !
 Dere ish pottles der Kaiser Charlemagne,
 Vonce filled mit gold-red wine !"

Dat fetched him, — he shtood all shpell-pound,
 She pulled his coat-tails down,
 She drewed him under de wasser,
 Dis maiden mit nodings on.

CHARLES G. LELAND.

COLLUSION BETWEEN A ALEGAITER
AND A WATER-SNAIK.TRIUMPH OF THE WATER-SNAIK : DETH OF THE ALEGAITER.

THERE is a niland on a river lying,
 Which runs into Gautimaly, a warm country,
 Lying near tha Tropicks, covered with sand ;
 Hear and their a symptum of a Wilow,
 Hanging of its umberagious limbs & branches
 Over the clear streme meandering far below.
 This was the home of the now silent Alegaiter,
 When not in his other element confine'd :
 Here he wood set upon his eggs asleep
 With 1 ey observant of flis and other passing
 Objects : a while it kept a going on so :
 Fereles of danger was the happy Alegaiter !
 But a las ! in a nevil our he was fourced to Wake ! that dreame of Blis was two sweet for him.

I morning the sun arose with unusool splendor
 Which also did our Alegaiter, coming from the water,

His scails a flinging of the rais of the son back,
 To the fountain-head which tha originly sprung,
 But having not had nothing to eat for some time,
 he

Was slepy and gap'd, in a short time, widely.
 Unfoalding soon a welth of perl-white teth,
 The rais of the son soon shet his sinister ey
 Because of their mutool splendor and warmth.
 The evil Our (wlích I sed) was now come ;
 Evidently a good chans for a water snaik
 Of the large specie, which soon appeared
 Into the horison, near the bank where repos'd
 Calmly in slepe the Alegaiter before spoken of,
 About 60 feet was his Length (not the 'gaiter)
 And he was aperiently a well-proportioned snaik.
 When he was all ashore he glared upon
 The iland with approval, but was soon
 "Astonished with the view and lost to wonder"
 (from Wats)

(For jest then he began to see the Alegaiter)
 Being a nateral enemy of his'n, he worked hisself

Into a fury, also a ni position.

Before the Alegaiter well could ope
 His eye (in other words perceive his danger)
 The Snaik had enveloped his body just 19
 Times with "foalds voluminous and vast" (from Milton)

And had tore off several scails in the confusion,
 Besides squeazing him awfully into his stomoc.
 Just then, by a fortunate turn in his affairs,
 He ceazed into his mouth the careless tale
 Of the unreflecting water-snaik! Grown desperate

He, finding that his tale was fast squesed
 Terrible while they roaled all over the island.

It was a well-conduckted Affair; no noise
 Disturbed the harmony of the seen, ecept Onct when a Wilow was snapped into by the roaling.

Each of the combatence had n't a minit for holering.

So the conflick was naterally tremenjous!
 But soon by grate force the tale was bit completely of; but the eggzeration was too much
 For his delicate Constitootion: he felt a compression

Onto his chest and generally over his body;
 When he ecspres'd his breathing, it was with Grate difficulty that he felt inspired again onct
 more.

Of course this State must suffer a revoolootion.
 So the Alegaiter give but one yel, and eggspired.
 The waiter-snaik realed hisself off, & survay'd
 For say 10 minits, the condition of
 His fo: then wondering what made his tail hurt,
 He sloly went off for to cool.

SWELL'S SOLILOQUY.

I DON'T appwove this hawid waw;
 Those dweadful bannaahs hawt my eyes;
 And guns and dwuns are such a baw,—
 Why don't the pawties compwamise?

Of cawce, the twoilet has its chawms;
 But why must all the vulgah cwowd
 Pawsist in spawting unifawms,
 In cullahs so extwemely loud?

And then the ladies, pweecious deahs! —
 I mawk the change on ev'wy bwow;
 Bai Jove! I weally have my feahs
 They wathah like the hawid wow!

To heah the chawming cweatures talk,
 Like patwons of the bloody wing,
 Of waw and all its dawty wawk,—
 It does n't seem a pwappah thing!

I called at Mrs. Gweene's last night,
 To see her niece, Miss Mawy Hertz,
 And found her making — cwushing sight! —
 The weddest kind of flannel shirts!

Of cawce, I wose, and sought the daw,
 With fawyah flashing from my eyes!
 I can't appwove this hawid waw; —
 Why don't the pawties compwamise?

TO THE "SEXTANT."

O SEXTANT of the meetin house, wich sweeps
 And dusts, or is supposed to! and makes fires,
 And lites the gass, and sumtimes leaves a screw loose,

in wich case it smells orful, worse than lamp ilc;
 And wrings the Bel and toles it when men dyes,
 to the grief of survivin pardners, and sweeps pathis
 And for the servusses gets $100 per annum,
 Wich them that thinks deer, let 'em try it;
 Gettin up before starlite in all wethers and Kindlin fires when the wether is as cold
 As zero, and like as not green wood for kindlin
 i would n't be hired to do it for no sun,
 But O Sextant! there are 1 kermoditty
 Wich 's more than gold, wich doant cost nothin.
 Worth more than anything except the sole of man!
 i mean pewer Are, Sextant, i mean pewer are!
 O it is plenty out of doors, so plenty it doant no
 What on airth to dew with itself, but flys about Scatterin leaves and bloin off men's hatts!
 in short, it 's jest as "fre as are" out dores,
 But O Sextant, in our church its scarce as buty,
 Scarce as bank bills, when agints begs for mischuns,

Wich some say is purty often (taint nothin to me, wat I give aint nothin to nobody) but O Sextant

U shet 500 men, wimmin, and children,
 Sheshally the latter, up in a tite place,
 And every 1 on em brethes in and out, and out
 and in,

Say 50 times a minnit, or 1 million and a half breths an our.

Now how long will a church ful of are last at that rate,

I ask you — say 15 minits — and then wats to be did?

Why then they must brethe it all over agin,
 And then agin, and so on till each has took it
 down

At least 10 times, and let it up agin, and wats
 more

The same individuol don't have the priviledge of brethin his own are, and no ones else,
 Each one must take whatever comes to him.
 O Sextant, doant you no our lungs is bellusses,
 To blo the fier of life, and keep it from goin out;
 and how can bellusses blo without wind
 And aint wind are? i put it to your conschens.

Are is the same to us as milk to babies,
 Or water is to fish, or pendlums to clox,
 Or roots and airbs unto an injun doctor,
 Or little pills unto an omeopath,
 Or boys to gurls. Are is for us to brethe,
 What signifies who preaches if i cant brethe?
 Wats Pol? Wats Pollus to sinners who are ded?

Ded for want of breth, why Sextant, when we dy lts only coz we cant brethe no more, thats all.
 And now O Sextant, let me beg of you
 To let a little are into our church.
 (Pewer are is certain proper for the pews)
 And do it weak days, and Sundays tew,
 It aint much trouble, only make a hole
 And the are will come of itself;
 (It lvs to come in where it can git warm)
 And O how it will rouze the people up,
 And sperrit up the preacher, and stop garps,
 And yawns and figgits, as effectooal
 As wind on the dry boans the Profit tells of.

ARABELLA M. WILLSON.

MR. MOLONY'S ACCOUNT OF THE BALL.

GIVEN TO THE NEPAULESE AMBASSADOR BY THE PENIN-SULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY.

O, WILL ye choose to hear the news?

Bedad, I cannot pass it o'er:
 I'll tell you all about the ball
 To the Nayppaulase Ambassador.
 Begor! this fête all balls does bate,
 At which I worn a pump, and I
 Must here relate the splendthor great
 Of th' Oriental Company.

These men of sinse dispoised expinse,
 To fête these black Achilleuses.

"We'll show the blacks," says they, "Almack's,
 And take the rooms at Willis's."

With flags and shawls, for these Nepauls,
 They hung the rooms of Willis up,
 And decked the walls and stairs and halls
 With roses and with lilies up.

And Jullien's band it tuck its stand
 So sweetly in the middle there,
 And soft bassoons played heavenly chunes,
 And violins did fiddle there.
 And when the Coort was tired of spoort,
 I'd lave you, boys, to think there was
 A nate bullet before them set,
 Where lashins of good dhrink there was!

At ten before the ball-room door,
 His moighty Excellency was;

He smoled and bowed to all the crowd,
 So gorgeous and immense he was.
 His dusky shuit, sublime and mute,
 Into the doorway followed him;
 And O the noise of the blackguard boys,
 As they hurrood and hollowed him!

The noble Chair stud at the stair,
 And bade the dthrums to thump; and he Did thus evince to that Black Prince
 The welcome of his Company.
 O fair the girls, and rich the curls,
 And bright the oys, you saw there, was;
 And fixed each oye, ye there could spoi,
 On General Jung Bahawther was!

This General great then tuck his sate,
 With all the other generals
 (Bedad, his troat, his belt, his coat,
 All bleezed with precious minerals);
 And as he there, with princely air,
 Reclouin on his cushion was,
 All round about his royal chair,
 The squeezein and the pushin was.

O Pat, such girls, such Jukes and Earls,
 Such fashion and nobilitee!
 Just think of Tim, and fancy him
 Amidst the hoigh gentility!
 There was Lord De L'Huys, and the Portygeese
 Ministher and his lady there,
 And I reckonized, with much surprise,
 Our messmate, Bob O'Grady, there;

There was Baroness Brunow, that looked like Juno,
 And Baroness Rehausen there,
 And Countess Roullier, that looked peculiar
 Well, in her robes of gauze in there.
 There was Lord Crowhurst (I knew him first When only Mr. Pips he was),
 And Mick O'Toole, the great big fool,
 That after supper tipsy was.

There was Lord Fingall and his ladies all,
 And Lords Killeen and Dufferin,
 And Paddy Fife, with his fat wife, —
 I wondther how he could stuff her in.
 There was Lord Belfast, that by me past,
 And seemed to ask how should I go there?
 And the Widow Maeræ, and Lord A. Hay,
 And the Marchioness of Sligo there.

Yes, Jukes and Earls, and diamonds and pearls,
 And pretty girls, was spoorting there;
 And some beside (the rogues!) I spied,
 Behind the windies, coorting there.

O, there 's one I know, bedad, would show
 As beautiful as any there ;
 And I 'd like to hear the pipers blow,
 And shake a fut with Fanny there !

WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY.

WIDOW MALONE.

DID you hear of the Widow Malone,
 Ohone !

Who lived in the town of Athlone,
 Alone !

O, she melted the hearts
 Of the swains in them parts :

So lovely the Widow Malone,
 Ohone !

So lovely the Widow Malone.

Of lovers she had a full score,
 Or more,

And fortunes they all had galore,
 In store ;

From the minister down
 To the clerk of the Crown
 All were courting the Widow Malone,
 Ohone !

All were courting the Widow Malone.

But so modest was Mistress Malone,
 'T was known

That no one could see her alone,
 Ohone !

Let them ogle and sigh,
 They could ne'er catch her eye,
 So bashful the Widow Malone,
 Ohone !

So bashful the Widow Malone.

Till one Misther O'Brien, from Clare
 (How quare !

It 's little for blushing they care
 Down there),

Put his arm round her waist, —
 Gave ten kisses at laste, —
 "O," says he, "you 're my Molly Malone,
 My own !

O," says he, "you 're my Molly Malone !"

And the widow they all thought so shy,
 My eye !

Ne'er thought of a simper or sigh, —
 For why ?

But, "Lucius," says she,
 "Since you 've now made so free,
 You may marry your Mary Malone,
 Ohone !

You may marry your Mary Malone."

There 's a moral contained in my song,
 Not wrong ;

And one comfort, it 's not very long,
 But strong, —

If for widows you die,
 Learn to kiss, not to sigh ;
 For they 're all like sweet Mistress Malone,
 Ohone !

O, they 're all like sweet Mistress Malone !

CHARLES LEVER.

BACHELOR'S HALL.

BACHELOR'S HALL, what a quare-lookin' place
 it is !

Kape me from such all the days of my life !
 Sure but I think what a burnin' disgrace it is,
 Niver at all to be gettin' a wife.

Pots, dishes, pans, an' such grasy commodities,
 Ashes and praty-skins, kiver the floor ;
 His cupboard 's a storehouse of comical oddities,
 Things that had niver been neighbors before.

Say the old bachelor, gloomy an' sad enough,
 Placin' his tay-kettle over the fire ;
 Soon it tips over — Saint Patrick ! he 's mad
 enough,

If he were prisent, to fight with the squire !

He looks for the platter — Grimalkin is scourin'
 it !

Sure, at a baste like that, swearin' 's no sin ;
 His disheloth is missing ; the pigs are devourin'
 it —

Tunder and turf ! what a pickle he 's in !

When his male 's over, the table 's left sittin'
 so ;

Dishes, take care of yourselves if you can ;
 Divil a drop of hot water will visit ye, —
 Och, let him alone for a baste of a man !

Now, like a pig in a mortar-bed wallowin',
 Say the old bachelor kneading his dough ;
 Troth, if his bread he could ate without swal-lowin',

How it would favor his palate, ye know !

Late in the night, when he goes to bed shiverin',
 Niver a bit is the bed made at all ;

He crapes like a terrapin under the kiverin' ; —
 Bad luck to the pictur of Bachelor's Hall !

JOHN FINLEY.

ST. PATRICK WAS A GENTLEMAN.

O, ST. PATRICK was a gentleman,
 Who came of decent people ;
 He built a church in Dublin town,
 And on it put a steeple.
 His father was a Gallagher ;
 His mother was a Brady ;
 His aunt was an O'Shaughnessy,
 His uncle an O'Grady.
 So, success attend St. Patrick's fist,
 For he 's a Saint so clever ;
 O, he gave the snakes and toads a twist,
 And bothered them forever !

The Wicklow hills are very high,
 And so 's the Hill of Howth, sir ;
 But there 's a hill, much bigger still,
 Much higher nor them both, sir.
 'T was on the top of this high hill
 St. Patrick preached his sarmint
 That drove the frogs into the bogs,
 And banished all the varmint.
 So, success attend St. Patrick's fist, etc.

There 's not a mile in Ireland's isle
 Where dirty varmin musters,
 But there he put his dear fore-foot,
 And murdered them in clusters.
 The toads went pop, the frogs went hop,
 Slap-dash into the water ;
 And the snakes committed suicide
 To save themselves from slaughter.
 So, success attend St. Patrick's fist, etc.

Nine hundred thousand reptiles blue
 He charmed with sweet discourses,
 And dined on them at Killaloe
 In soups and second courses.
 Where blind worms crawling in the grass
 Disgusted all the nation,
 He gave them a rise, which opened their eyes
 To a sense of their situation.
 So, success attend St. Patrick's fist, etc.

No wonder that those Irish lads
 Should be so gay and frisky,
 For sure St. Pat he taught them that,
 As well as making whiskey ;
 No wonder that the saint himself
 Should understand distilling,
 Since his mother kept a shebeen shop
 In the town of Enniskillen.
 So, success attend St. Patrick's fist, etc.

O, was I but so fortunate
 As to be back in Munster,
 'T is I 'd be bound that from that ground
 I nevermore would once stir.

For there St. Patrick planted turf,
 And plenty of the praties,
 With pigs galore, ma gra, ma 'store,
 And cabbages — and ladies !
 Then my blessing on St. Patrick's fist,
 For he 's the darling Saint O !
 O, he gave the snakes and toads a twist ;
 He 's a beauty without paint, O !

HENRY BENNETT.

THE BIRTH OF ST. PATRICK.

On the eighth day of March it was, some people
 say,
 That Saint Pathrick at midnight he first saw the day ;
 While others declare 't was the ninth he was born,
 And 't was all a mistake between midnight and
 morn ;
 For mistakes will occur in a hurry and shock,
 And some blamed the baby — and some blamed the clock —
 Till with all their cross-questions sure no one could know
 If the child was too fast, or the clock was too
 slow.

Now the first faction-fight in owld Ireland, they say,
 Was all on account of Saint Pathrick's birthday :
 Some fought for the eighth — for the ninth more would die,
 And who would n't see right, sure they blackened
 his eye !
 At last, both the factions so positive grew,
 That each kept a birthday, so Pat then had two,
 Till Father Mulcahy, who showed them their sins,
 Said, "No one could have two birthdays, but a twins."

Says he, "Boys, don't be fightin' for eight or for nine,
 Don't be always dividin' — but sometimes combine ;
 Combine eight with nine, and seventeen is the mark,
 So let that be his birthday," — "Amen," says
 the clerk.
 "If he was n't a twins, sure our hist'ry will show
 That, at least, he 's worthy any two saints that we know !"
 Then they all got blind dhrunk — which com-
 plated their bliss,
 And we keep up the practice from that day to this.

SAMUEL LOVER.

THE LOVERS.

SALLY SALTER, she was a young teacher who taught,
And her friend, Charley Church, was a preacher who praught,
Though his enemies called him a screecher who scraught.

His heart, when he saw her, kept sinking and sunk,
And his eye, meeting hers, began winking, and wunk ;
While she, in her turn, kept thinking, and thunk.

He hastened to woo her, and sweetly he wooed,
For his love grew until to a mountain it grewed,
And what he was longing to do then he doed.

In secret he wanted to speak, and he spoke,
To seek with his lips what his heart long had soke ;
So he managed to let the truth leak, and it loke.

He asked her to ride to the church, and they rode ;
They so sweetly did glide that they both thought they glode,
And they came to the place to be tied, and were toed.

Then homeward, he said, let us drive, and they drove,
And as soon as they wished to arrive, they arrove,
For whatever he could n't contrive, she controve.

The kiss he was dying to steal, then he stole ;
At the feet where he wanted to kneel then he knole ;
And he said, "I feel better than ever I fole."

So they to each other kept clinging, and elung,
While Time his swift circuit was winging, and wung ;
And this was the thing he was bringing, and brung :

The man Sally wanted to catch, and had caught ;
That she wanted from others to snatch, and had snaught ;
Was the one she now liked to scratch, and she seraught.

And Charley's warm love began freezing, and froze,
While he took to teasing, and eruelly toze
The girl he had wished to be squeezing, and squoze.

"Wretch!" he cried, when she threatened to leave him, and left,
"How could you deceive me, as you have de-ceft?"
And she answered, "I promised to cleave, and I've cleft."

PHOEBE CARY.

DEBORAH LEE.*

'T is a dozen or so of years ago,
Somewhere in the West countree,
That a nice girl lived, as ye Hoosiers know
By the name of Deborah Lee ;
Her sister was loved by Edgar Poe,
But Deborah by mine.

Now I was green, and she was green,
As a summer's squash might be ;
And we loved as warmly as other folks, —
I and my Deborah Lee, —
With a love that the lasses of Hoosierdom
Coveted her and me.

But somehow it happened a long time ago,
In the aguish West countree,
That a chill March morning gave the shakes
To my beautiful Deborah Lee ;
And the grim steam-doctor (drat him !) came,
And bore her away from me, —
The doctor and death, old partners they, —
In the aguish West countree.

The angels wanted her in heaven
(But they never asked for me),
And that is the reason, I rather guess,
In the aguish West countree,
That the cold March wind, and the doctor, and death,
Took off my Deborah Lee —
My beautiful Deborah Lee —
From the warm sunshine and the opening flower,
And bore her away from me.

Our love was as strong as a six-horse team,
Or the love of folks older than we,
Or possibly wiser than we ;
But death, with the aid of doctor and steam,
Was rather too many for me ;
He closed the peepers and silenced the breath
Of my sweetheart Deborah Lee,
And her form lies cold in the prairie mould,
Silent and cold, — ah me !

The foot of the hunter shall press her grave,
And the prairie's sweet wild flowers
In their odorous beauty around it wave
Through all the sunny hours, —

* See page 235.

The still, bright summer hours ;
 And the birds shall sing in the tufted grass
 And the nectar-laden bee,
 With his dreamy hum, on his gauze wings pass, —
 She wakes no more to me ;
 Ah, nevermore to me !
 Though the wild birds sing and the wild flowers
 spring,
 She wakes no more to me.

Yet off in the hush of the dim, still night,
 A vision of beauty I see
 Gliding soft to my bedside, — a phantom of light,
 Dear, beautiful Deborah Lee, —
 My bride that was to be ;
 And I wake to mourn that the doctor, and
 death,
 And the cold March wind, should stop the breath
 Of my darling Deborah Lee, —
 Adorable Deborah Lee, —
 That angels should want her up in heaven
 Before they wanted me.

ONLY SEVEN.*

A PASTORAL STORY, AFTER WORDSWORTH.

I MARVELLED why a simple child,
 That lightly draws its breath,
 Should utter groans so very wild
 And look as pale as Death.

Adopting a parental tone,
 I asked her why she cried.
 The damsel answered, with a groan,
 " I've got a pain inside !

" I thought it would have sent me mad
 Last night about eleven."
 Said I, " What is it makes you bad ?
 How many apples have you had ?"
 She answered, " Only seven !"

" And are you sure you took no more,
 My little maid ?" quoth I.
 " O, please, sir, mother gave me four,
 But they were in a pie !"

" If that's the case," I stammered out,
 " Of course you've had eleven."
 The maiden answered with a pout,
 " I ain't had more nor seven !"

I wondered hugely what she meant,
 And said, " I'm bad at riddles,
 But I know where little girls are sent
 For telling taradiddles.

* See page 87.

" Now if you don't reform," said I,
 " You'll never go to heaven !"
 But all in vain ; each time I try
 The little idiot makes reply,
 " I ain't had more nor seven !"

POSTSCRIPT.

To borrow Wordsworth's name was wrong,
 Or slightly misapplied ;
 And so I'd better call my song,
 " Lines after Ache-inside."

A TALE OF DRURY LANE.*

FROM " REJECTED ADDRESSES."

" Thus he went on, stringing one extravagance upon another, in the style his books of chivalry had taught him, and imitating, as near as he could, their very phrase." — DON QUIXOTE.

To be spoken by Mr. Kemble, in a suit of the Black Prince's armor, borrowed from the Tower.

REST there awhile, my bearded lance,
 While from green curtain I advance
 To yon foot-lights, no trivial dance,
 And tell the town what sad mischance
 Did Drury Lane befall.

As Chaos, which, by heavenly doom,
 Had slept in everlasting gloom,
 Started with terror and surprise
 When light first flashed upon her eyes, —
 So London's sons in nightcap woke,
 In bedgown woke her dames ;
 For shouts were heard mid fire and smoke,
 And twice ten hundred voices spoke, —
 " The playhouse is in flames !"
 And, lo ! where Catherine Street extends,
 A fiery tail its lustre lends

To every window-pane ;
 Blushes each spout in Martlet Court,
 And Barbican, moth-eaten fort,
 And Covent Garden kennels sport,
 A bright ensanguined drain ;
 Meux's new Brevhouse shows the light,
 Rowland Hill's Chapel, and the height
 Where Patent Shot they sell ;
 The Tennis Court, so fair and tall,
 Partakes the ray, with Surgeons' Hall,
 The Ticket-Porters' House of Call,
 Old Bedlam, close by London Wall,
 Wright's shrimp and oyster shop withal,
 And Richardson's Hotel.

Nor these alone, but far and wide,
 Across red Thames's gleaming tide,
 To distant fields the blaze was borne,
 And daisy white and hoary thorn

* An imitation of Sir Walter Scott.

In borrowed lustre seemed to sham
The rose, or red Sweet Wil-li-am.
To those who on the hills around
Beheld the flames from Drury's mound,

As from a lofty altar rise,
It seemed that nations did conspire
To offer to the god of fire

Some vast, stupendous sacrifice !
The summoned firemen woke at call,
And hied them to their stations all :
Starting from short and broken snooze,
Each sought his ponderous hob-nailed shoes,
But first his worsted hosen plied ;
Push breeches next, in crimson dyed,

His nether bulk embraced ;
Then jacket thick, of red or blue,
Whose massy shoulder gave to view
The badge of each respective crew,
In tin or copper traced.

The engines thundered through the street,
Fire-hook, pipe, bucket, all complete,
And torches glared, and clattering feet
Along the pavement paced.

And one, the leader of the band,
From Charing Cross along the Strand,
Like stag by beagles hunted hard,
Ran till he stopped at Vin'gar Yard.
The burning badge his shoulder bore,
The belt and oil-skin hat he wore,
The cane he had, his men to bang,
Showed foreman of the British gang, —
His name was Higginbottom. Now

'T is meet that I should tell you how
The others came in view :

The Hand-in-Hand the race begun,
Then came the Phoenix and the Sun,
The Exchange, where old insurers run,

The Eagle, where the new ;
With these came Runford, Bunford, Cole,
Robins from Hockley in the Hole,
Lawson and Dawson, cheek by jowl,

Crump from St. Giles's Pound :
Whitford and Mitford joined the train,
Huggins and Muggins from Chick Lane,
And Clutterbuck, who got a sprain
Before the plug was found.

Hobson and Jobson did not sleep,
But ah ! no trophy could they reap,
For both were in the Donjon Keep

Of Bridewell's gloomy mound !
E'en Higginbottom now was posed,
For sadder scene was ne'er disclosed ;

Without, within, in hideous show,
Devouring flames resistless glow,
And blazing rafters downward go,
And never halloo " Heads below !"
Nor notice give at all.

The firemen terrified are slow
To bid the pumping torrent flow,
For fear the roof should fall.
Back, Robins, back ! Crump, stand aloof !
Whitford, keep near the walls !
Huggins, regard your own behoof,
For, lo ! the blazing, rocking roof
Down, down in thunder falls !
An awful pause succeeds the stroke,
And o'er the ruins volumed smoke,
Rolling around its piteous shroud,
Concealed them from the astonished crowd.
At length the mist awhile was cleared,
When, lo ! amid the wreck appeared,
Gradual a moving head appeared,

And Eagle fireman knew
'T was Joseph Muggins, name revered,
The foreman of their crew.

Loud shouted all in signs of woe,
" A Muggins ! to the rescue, ho !"

And poured the hissing tide :
Meanwhile the Muggins fought amain,
And strove and struggled all in vain,
For, rallying but to fall again,
He tottered, sunk, and died !

Did none attempt, before he fell,
To succor one they loved so well ?

Yes, Higginbottom did aspire
(His fireman's soul was all on fire)

His brother chief to save ;
But ah ! his reckless generous ire
Served but to share his grave !

Mid blazing beams and scalding streams,
Through fire and smoke he dauntless broke,
Where Muggins broke before.

But sulphury stench and boiling drench,
Destroying sight, o'erwhelmed him quite,

He sunk to rise no more.
Still o'er his head, while Fate he braved,
His whizzing water-pipe he waved :

" Whitford and Mitford, ply your pumps !
You, Clutterbuck, come, stir your stumps !
Why are you in such doleful dumps ?
A fireman, and afraid of bumps ! —
What are they feared on ? fools ! 'od rot 'em !"
Were the last words of Higginbottom.

POEMS

RECEIVED IN RESPONSE TO AN ADVERTISED CALL FOR A
NATIONAL ANTHEM.

NATIONAL ANTHEM.

BY DR. OLIVER WENDELL H—

A DIAGNOSIS of our history proves
Our native land a land its native loves :

Its birth a deed obstetric without peer,
Its growth a source of wonder far and near.

To love it more, behold how foreign shores
Sink into nothingness beside its stores.
Hyde Park at best — though counted ultra grand —
The "Boston Common" of Victoria's land —

The committee must not be blamed for rejecting the above after reading thus far, for such an "anthem" could only be sung by a college of surgeons or a Beacon Street tea-party.

Turn we now to a

NATIONAL ANTHEM.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN B.—

THE sun sinks softly to his evening post,
The sun swells grandly to his morning crown ;
Yet not a star our flag of heaven has lost,
And not a sunset stripe with him goes down.

So thrones may fall ; and from the dust of those
New thrones may rise, to totter like the last ;
But still our country's nobler planet glows,
While the eternal stars of Heaven are fast.

Upon finding that this does not go well to the air of "Yankee Doodle," the committee feel justified in declining it ; it being furthermore prejudiced against it by a suspicion that the poet has crowded an advertisement of a paper which he edits into the first line.

Next we quote from a

NATIONAL ANTHEM.

BY GENERAL GEORGE P. M.—

IN the days that tried our fathers,
Many years ago,
Our fair land achieved her freedom
Blood-bought, you know,
Shall we not defend her ever,
As we'd defend
That fair maiden, kind and tender,
Calling us friend ?

Yes ! Let all the echoes answer,
From hill and vale ;
Yes ! Let other nations hearing,
Joy in the tale.
Our Columbia is a lady,
High-born and fair,
We have sworn allegiance to her, —
Touch her who dare.

The tone of this "anthem" not being devotional enough to suit the committee, it should be printed on an edition of linen-cambrie handkerchiefs for ladies especially.

Observe this

NATIONAL ANTHEM.

BY N. P. W.—

ONE hue of our flag is taken
From the cheeks of my blushing pet,
And its stars beat time and sparkle
Like the studs on her chemisette.

Its blue is the ocean shadow
That hides in her dreamy eyes,
And it conquers all men, like her,
And still for a Union flies.

Several members of the committee find that this "anthem" has too much of the Anacreon spice to suit them.
We next peruse a

NATIONAL ANTHEM.

BY THOMAS BAILEY A.—

THE little brown squirrel hops in the corn,
The cricket quaintly sings ;
The emerald pigeon nods his head,
And the shad in the river springs ;
The dainty sunflower hangs its head
On the shore of the summer sea ;
And better far that I were dead,
If Maud did not love me.

I love the squirrel that hops in the corn,
And the cricket that quaintly sings ;
And the emerald pigeon that nods his head,
And the shad that gayly springs.
I love the dainty sunflower, too,
And Maud with her snowy breast ;
I love them all ; but I love — I love —
I love my country best.

This is certainly very beautiful, and sounds somewhat like Tenyson. Though it may be rejected by the committee, it can never lose its value as a piece of excellent reading for children. It is calculated to fill the youthful mind with patriotism and natural history, beside touching the youthful heart with an emotion palpitating for all.

ROBERT H. NEWELL (Orpheus C. Kerr).

THE COCK AND THE BULL.*

You see this pebble-stone? It's a thing I bought
Of a bit of a chit of a boy i' the mid o' the day —
I like to dock the smaller parts-o'-speech,
As we curtail the already cur-tailed cur
(You catch the paronomasia, play o' words ?) —
Did, rather, i' the pre-Landseerian days.
Well, to my muttons. I purchased the concern,
And clapt it i' my poke, and gave for same
By way, to-wit, of barter or exchange —
"Chop" was my snickering dandiprat's own term —
One shilling and fourpence, current coin o' the realm.
O-n-e one and f-o-u-r four
Pence, one and fourpence — you are with me,
Sir ? —
What hour it skills not: ten oreleven o' the clock,
One day (and what a roaring day it was !)

* In imitation of Robert Browning.

In February, eighteen sixty-nine,
Alexandrina Victoria, Fidei
Hm — hm — how runs the jargon? — being on throne.

Such, sir, are all the facts, succinctly put,
The basis or substratum — what you will —
Of the impending eighty thousand lines.
“Not much in ‘em either,” quoth perhaps simple Hodge.
But there’s a superstructure. Wait a bit.

Mark first the rationale of the thing :
Hear logic rival and levigate the deed.
That shilling — and for matter o’ that, the pence —

I had o’ course upo’ me — wi’ me, say — (Mecum’s the Latin, make a note o’ that)
When I popped pen i’ stand, blew snout, scratched ear,
Sniffed — tch ! — at snuff-box ; tumbled up, he-heed,
Haw-hawed (not hee-hawed, that’s another guess thing :)

Then fumbled at, and stumbled out of, door,
I shoved the door ope wi’ my omoplat ;
And in vestibulo, i’ the entrance-hall,
Donned galligaskins, antigropeloes,
And so forth ; and, complete with hat and gloves,
One on and one a-dangle i’ my hand.
And ombrifuge, (Lord love you ! ) case o’ rain,
I flopped forth, ’s buddikins ! on my own ten toes,
(I do assure you there be ten of them,)
And went clump-clumping up hill and down dale
To find myself o’ the sudden i’ front o’ the boy.
Put case I had n’t ‘em on me, could I ha’ bought
This sort-o’-kind-o’-what-you-might-call toy,
This pebble-thing, o’ the boy-thing ? Q. E. D.
That’s proven without aid from mumping Pope,
Sleek porporate or bloated Cardinal,
(Is n’t it, old Fatchaps ? You’re in Euclid now.)
So, having the shilling — having i’ fact a lot —
And pence and halfpence, ever so many o’ them,
I purchased, as I think I said before,
The pebble (lapis, lapidis, — di, — dem, — de, —
What nouns ‘erease short i’ the genitive, Fatchaps, eh ?)

O’ the boy, a bare-legged beggarly son of a gun,
For one and fourpence. Here we are again.

Now Law steps in, big-wigged, voluminous-jawed ;
Investigates and re-investigates.
Was the transaction illegal ? Law shakes head.
Perpend, sir, all the bearings of the case.

At first the coin was mine, the chattel his.
But now (by virtue of the said exchange
And barter) vice versa all the coin,

Per juris operationem, vests
I’ the boy and his assigns till ding o’ doom ;
(In secula seculo-o-o-orum ;
I think I hear the Abbate mouth out that.)
To have and hold the same to him and them . . .
Confer some idiot on Conveyancing,
Whereas the pebble and every part thereof,
And all that appertaineth thereunto,
Or shall, will, may, might, can, could, would, or should,
(Subandi cetera — clap me to the close —
For what’s the good of law in a case o’ the kind ?)
Is mine to all intents and purposes.
This settled, I resume the thread o’ the tale.

Now for a touch o’ the vendor’s quality.
He says a gen’lman bought a pebble of him,
(This pebble i’ sooth, sir, which I hold i’ my hand) —
And paid for’t, like a gen’lman, on the nail.
“Did I o’ercharge him a ha’penny ? Devil a bit.
Fiddlestick’s end ! Get out, you blazing ass !
Gabble o’ the goose. Don’t bugaboo-baby me !
Go double or quits ? Yah ! tittup ! what’s the odds ?”
— There’s the transaction viewed, i’ the vendor’s light.

Next ask that dumped hag, stood snuffing by,
With her three frowsy-browsy brats o’ babes,
The scum o’ the kennel, cream o’ the filth-heap
— Faugh !

Aie, aie, aie, aie ! ὀτοτοτοτοτοῖ,
(‘Stead which we blurt out Hoightly-toightly
now) —

And the baker and candlestick-maker, and Jack and Gill,
Bleared Goody this and queasy Gaffer that.
Ask the schoolmaster. Take schoolmaster first.

He saw a gentleman purchase of a lad
A stone, and pay for it rite, on the square,
And carry it off per saltum, jauntily,
Propria que maribus, gentleman’s property now
(Agreeably to the law explained above),
In proprium usum, for his private ends.
The boy he chucked a brown i’ the air, and bit
I’ the face the shilling : heaved a thumping stone
At a lean hen that ran cluck-clucking by,
(And hit her, dead as nail i’ post o’ door,)
Then abiit — what’s the Ciceronian phrase ? —
Excessit, evasit, erupit, — off slogs boy ;
Off in three flea-skips. Hactenus, so far,
So good, tam bene. Bene, satis, male, —
Where was I ? who said what of one in a quag ?
I did once hitch the syntax into verse :
Verbum personale, a verb personal,
Concordat, — ay, “agrees,” old Fatchaps — cum

Nominativo, with its nominative,
Genre, i' point o' gender, numero,
 O' number, et persona, and person. Ut,
 Instance : Sol ruit, snuff flops sun, et, and,
Montes umbrantur, snuffs out mountains. Pah!
 Excuse me, sir, I think I'm going mad.
 You see the trick on 't though, and can yourself
 Continue the discourse ad libitum.
 It takes up about eighty thousand lines,
 A thing imagination boggles at :
 And might, odds-bobs, sir ! in judicious hands,
 Extend from here to Mesopotamy.

CHARLES S. CALVERLEY.

LOVERS, AND A REFLECTION.*

In moss-prankt dells which the sunbeams flatter
 (And heaven it knoweth what that may mean ;
 Meaning, however, is no great matter)
 Where woods are a-tremble, with rifts atween ;

Through God's own heather we wanned together,
 I and my Willie (O love my love) :
 I need hardly remark it was glorious weather,
 And flitterbats wavered alow, above :

Boats were curtseying, rising, bowing
 (Boats in that climate are so polite),
 And sands were a ribbon of green endowing,
 And O the sun-dazzle on bark and bight !

Through the rare red heather we danced together,
 (O love my Willie !) and smelt for flowers :
 I must mention again it was glorious weather,
 Rhymes are so scarce in this world of ours :—

By rises that flushed with their purple favors,
 Through becks that brattled o'er grasses sheen,
 We walked or waded, we two young shavers,
 Thanking our stars we were both so green.

We journeyed in parallels, I and Willie,
 In "fortunate parallels !" Butterflies,
 Hid in weltering shadows of daffodilly
 Or marjoram, kept making peacock's eyes :

Song-birds darted about, some inky
 As coal, some snowy (I ween) as curds ;
 Or rosy as pinks, or as roses pinky—
 They reck of no eerie To-come, those birds !

But they skim over bents which the mill-stream washes,
 Or hang in the lift 'neath a white cloud's hem ;
 They need no parasols, no galoshes ;
 And good Mrs. Trimmer she feedeth them.

* In imitation of Jean Ingelow.

Then we thrid God's cowslips (as erst his heather)
 That endowed the wan grass with their golden blooms ;

Andsnapt—(it was perfectly charming weather)—
 Our fingers at Fate and her goddess-glooms :

And Willie 'gan sing—(O, his notes were fluty ;
 Wafts fluttered them out to the white-winged sea)—

Something made up of rhymes that have done much duty,

Rhymes (better to put it) of "ancientry :"

Bowers of flowers encountered showers

In William's carol (O love my Willie !)

When he bade sorrow borrow from blithe Tomorrow

I quite forget what—say a daffodilly :

A nest in a hollow, "with buds to follow,"

I think occurred next in his nimble strain ;

And clay that was "kneaden" of course in Eden—
 A rhyme most novel, I do maintain :

Mists, bones, the singer himself, love-stories,

And all least furlable things got "furred ;"

Not with any design to conceal their glories,
 But simply and solely to rhyme with "world."

O, if billows and pillows and hours and flowers,

And all the brave rhymes of an elder day,

Could be furled together this genial weather,

And carted, or carried on wafts away,

Nor ever again trotted out—ay me !

How much fewer volumes of verse there 'd be !

CHARLES S. CALVERLEY.

THE ARAB.

Ox, on, my brown Arab, away, away !
 Thou hast trotted o'er many a mile to-day,
 And I trow right meagre hath been thy fare
 Since they roused thee at dawn from thy straw-piled lair,

To tread with those echoless, unshod feet
 Yon weltering flats in the noontide heat,
 Where no palm-tree proffers a kindly shade,
 And the eye never rests on a cool grass blade ;
 And lank is thy flank, and thy frequent cough,
 O, it goes to my heart— but away, friend, off !

And yet, ah ! what sculptor who saw thee stand,
 As thou standest now, on thy native strand,
 With the wild wind ruffling thine uncombed hair,
 And thy nostril upturned to the odorous air,
 Would not woo thee to pause, till his skill might trace

At leisure the lines of that eger face ;

The collarless neck and the coal-black paws
And the bit grasped tight in the massive jaws ;
The delicate curve of the legs, that seem
Too slight for their burden — and, O, the gleam
Of that eye, so sombre and yet so gay !
Still away, my lithe Arab, once more away !

Nay, tempt me not, Arab, again to stay ;
Since I crave neither Echo nor Fun to-day.
For thy hand is not Echoless — there they are,
Fun, Glowworm, and Echo, and Evening Star,
And thou hintest withal that thou fain wouldst
shine,

As I read them, these bulgy old boots of mine.
But I shrink from thee, Arab ! Thou eatest
eel-pie,

Thou evermore hast at least one black eye ;
There is brass on thy brow, and thy swarthy hues
Are due not to nature, but handling shoes ;
And the bit in thy mouth, I regret to see,
Is a bit of tobacco-pipe — Flee, child, flee !

CHARLES S. CALVERLEY.

THE MODERN HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT.

BEHOLD the mansion reared by dædal Jack.

See the malt, stored in many a plethoric sack,
In the proud cirque of Ivan's bivouac.

Mark how the rat's felonious fangs invade
The golden stores in John's pavilion laid.

Anon, with velvet foot and Tarquin strides,
Subtle grimalkin to his quarry glides, —
Grimalkin grim, that slew the fierce rodent
Whose tooth insidious Johann's sackcloth rent.

Lo ! now the deep-mouthed canine foe's assault,
That vexed the avenger of the stolen malt ;
Stored in the hallowed precincts of the hall
That rose complete at Jack's creative call.

Here stalks the impetuous cow, with crumpled horn,

Whereon the exacerbating hound was torn,
Who bayed the feline slaughter-beast, that slew
The rat predacious, whose keen fangs ran through
The textile fibres that involved the grain
That lay in Hans' inviolate domain.

Here walks forlorn the damsel crowned with rue,
Lactiferous spoils from vaccine dugs who drew,
Of that corniculate beast whose tortuous horn
Tossed to the clouds, in fierce vindictive scorn,

The harrowing hound, whose braggart bark and stir

Arched the lithe spine and reared the indignant fur
Of puss, that with verminicidal claw
Struck the weird rat, in whose insatiate maw Lay reeking malt, that erst in Ivan's courts we saw.

Robed in senescent garb, that seemed, in sooth,
Too long a prey to Chronos' iron tooth,
Behold the man whose amorous lips incline,
Full with young Eros' osculative sign,
To the lorn maiden, whose lac-albic hands
Drew albu-lactice wealth from lacteal glands
Of the immortal bovine, by whose horn,
Distort, to realm ethereal was borne
The beast catulean, vexer of that sly
Ulysses quadrupedal who made die
The old mordacious rat, that dared devour
Antecedaneous ale in John's domestic bower.

Lo ! here, with hirsute honors doffed, succinct
Of saponaceous locks, the priest who linked
In Hymen's golden bands the torn unthrift,
Whose means exiguous stared from many a rift,
Even as he kissed the virgin all forlorn,
Who milked the cow with implicated horn,
Who in fine wrath the canine torturer skied,
That dared to vex the insidious muricide,
Who let auroral effluence through the pelt
Of the sly rat that robbed the palace Jack had built.

The loud cantankerous Shanghai comes at last,
Whose shouts aroused the shorn ecclesiast,
Who sealed the vows of Hymen's sacrament
To him who, robed in garments indigent,
Exosculates the damsel lachrymose,
The emulgator of that hornèd brute morose
That tossed the dog that worried the cat that kill
The rat that ate the malt that lay in the house that Jack built.

JONES AT THE BARBER'S SHOP.

SCENE, a Barber's Shop. Barber's man engaged in cutting hair, making wigs, and other barberesque operations.

Enter JONES, meeting OILY the barber.

JONES. I wish my hair cut.

OILY.

Pray, sir, take a seat.

(OILY puts a chair for JONES, who sits. During the following dialogue OILY continues cutting JONES's hair.)

OILY. We've had much wet, sir.

JONES.

Very much indeed.

OILY. And yet November's days were fine.
 JONES. They were.
 OILY. I hoped fair weather might have lasted us
 Until the end.
 JONES. At one time — so did I.
 OILY. But we have had it very wet.
 JONES. We have.

(A pause of some ten minutes.)

OILY. I know not, sir, who cut your hair last
 time ;
 But this I say, sir, it was badly cut :
 No doubt 't was in the country.

JONES. No ! in town !
 OILY. Indeed ! I should have fancied otherwise.

JONES. 'T was cut in town and in this very room.

OILY. Amazement ! — but I now remember
 well —

We had an awkward, new provincial hand,
 A fellow from the country. Sir, he did
 More damage to my business in a week
 Than all my skill can in a year repair.
 He must have cut your hair.

JONES (looking at him). No, 't was yourself.
 OILY. Myself ? Impossible ! You must mistake.

JONES. I don't mistake — 't was you that cut my hair.

(A long pause, interrupted only by the clipping of the scissors.)

OILY. Your hair is very dry, sir.

JONES. Oh ! indeed.

OILY. Our Vegetable Extract moistens it.

JONES. I like it dry.

OILY. But, sir, the hair when dry
 Turns quickly gray.

JONES. That color I prefer.

OILY. But hair, when gray, will rapidly fall
 off,

And baldness will ensue.

JONES. I would be bald.

OILY. Perhaps you mean to say you 'd like a wig, —

We've wigs so natural they can't be told
 From real hair.

JONES. Deception I detest.

(Another pause ensues, during which OILY blows down JONES's neck, and relieves him from the linen wrapper in which he has been enveloped during the process of hair-cutting.)

OILY. We've brushes, soaps, and scent of every kind.

JONES. I see you have. (Pays 6d.) I think you 'll find that right.

OILY. If there is nothing I can show you, sir.
 JONES. No ; nothing. Yet — there may be something, too,
 That you may show me.

OILY. Name it, sir.

JONES. The door.

OILY (to his man). That's a rum customer at any rate.

Had I cut him as short as he cut me,
 How little hair upon his head would be !
 But if kind friends will all our pains requite,
 We'll hope for better luck another night.

[Shop bell rings, and curtain falls.]
 PUNCH.

TO THE TERRESTRIAL GLOBE.

BY A MISERABLE WRETCH.

ROLL on, thou ball, roll on !
 Through pathless realms of space

Roll on !

What though I'm in a sorry case ?
 What though I cannot meet my bills ?
 What though I suffer toothache's ills ?
 What though I swallow countless pills ?

Never you mind !

Roll on !

Roll on, thou ball, roll on !

Through seas of inky air

Roll on !

It's true I've got no shirts to wear,
 It's true my butcher's bill is due,
 It's true my prospects all look blue, —
 But don't let that unsettle you !

Never you mind !

Roll on !

[It rolls on.]

MY LOVE.*

I ONLY knew she came and went Powell.
 Like troutlets in a pool ; Hood.
 She was a phantom of delight, Wordsworth.
 And I was like a fool. Eastman.

One kiss, dear maid, I said, and sighed, Coleridge.
 Out of those lips unshorn : Longfellow.
 She shook her ringlets round her head, Stoddard.
 And laughed in merry scorn. Tennyson.

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky, Tennyson.
 You heard them, O my heart ; Alice Cary.
 'Tis twelve at night by the castle clock, Coleridge.
 Beloved, we must part. Alice Cary.

* A specimen of what are called " Cento Verses ; " patchwork.

"Come back, come back!" she cried in grief,
Campbell.

"My eyes are dim with tears, — Bayard Taylor.
How shall I live through all the days? Osgood.
All through a hundred years?" T. S. Perry.

'T was in the prime of summer time Hood.
She blessed me with her hand; Hoyt.
We strayed together, deeply blest, Edwards.
Into the dreaming land. Cornwall.

The laughing bridal roses blow, Patmore.
To dress her dark-brown hair; Bayard Taylor.
My heart is breaking with my woe, Tennyson.
Most beautiful! most rare! Read.

I clasped it on her sweet, cold hand, Browning.
The precious golden link! Smith.
I calmed her fears, and she was calm, Coleridge.
"Drink, pretty creature, drink." Wordsworth.

And so I won my Genevieve, Coleridge.
And walked in Paradise; Hervey.
The fairest thing that ever grew Wordsworth.
Atween me and the skies. Osgood.

RECIPES.

ROASTED SUCKING-PIG.

AIR, — Scots wha hae," etc.

COOKS who 'd roast a sucking-pig,
Purchase one not over big;
Coarse ones are not worth a fig;
So a young one buy.
See that he is scalded well
(That is done by those who sell),
Therefore on that point to dwell
Were absurdity.

Sage and bread, mix just enough,
Salt and pepper quantum suff.,
And the pig's interior stuff,
With the whole combined.
To a fire that's rather high,
Lay it till completely dry;
Then to every part apply
Cloth, with butter lined.

Dredge with flour o'er and o'er,
Till the pig will hold no more;
Then do nothing else before
'T is for serving fit.
Then scrape off the flour with care;
Then a buttered cloth prepare;
Rub it well; then cut — not tear —
Off the head of it.

Then take out and mix the brains
With the gravy it contains;
While it on the spit remains,
Cut the pig in two.
Chop the sage and chop the bread
Fine as very finest shred;
O'er it melted butter spread, —
Stinginess won't do.

When it in the dish appears,
Garnish with the jaws and ears;
And when dinner-hour nears,
Ready let it be.
Who can offer such a dish
May dispense with fowl and fish;
And if he a guest should wish,
Let him send for me!

PUNCH'S Poetical Cookery Book.

A RECIPE FOR SALAD.

To make this condiment your poet begs
The pounded yellow of two hard-boiled eggs;
Two boiled potatoes, passed through kitchen sieve,
Smoothness and softness to the salad give;
Let onion atoms lurk within the bowl,
And, half suspected, animate the whole;
Of mordant mustard add a single spoon,
Distrust the condiment that bites so soon;
But deem it not, thou man of herbs, a fault
To add a double quantity of salt;
Four times the spoon with oil from Lucca
crown,
And twice with vinegar, procured from town;
And lastly, o'er the flavored compound toss
A magic soupeçon of anchovy sauce.
O green and glorious! O herbaceous treat!
'T would tempt the dying anchorite to eat;
Back to the world he'd turn his fleeting soul,
And plunge his fingers in the salad-bowl;
Serenely full, the epicure would say,
"Fate cannot harm me, — I have dined to-day."
SYDNEY SMITH.

SIEGE OF BELGRADE.

AN Austrian army, awfully arrayed,
Boldly by battery besieged Belgrade.
Cossack commanders cannonading come,
Dealing destruction's devastating doom.
Every endeavor engineers essay,
For fame, for fortune fighting, — furious fray!
Generals'gainst generals grapple — gracious God!
How honors Heaven heroic hardihood!

Infuriate, indiscriminate in ill,
 Kindred kill kinsmen, kinsmen kindred kill.
 Labor low levels longest loftiest lines ;
 Men march mid mounds, mid moles, mid murderous mines ;
 Now noxious, noisy numbers nothing, naught
 Of outward obstacles, opposing ought ;
 Poor patrióts, partly purchased, partly pressed,
 Quite quaking, quickly "Quarter ! Quarter !" quest.
 Reason returns, religious right redounds,
 Suwarrow stops such sanguinary sounds.
 Truce to thee, Turkey ! Triumph to thy train,
 Unwise, unjust, unmerciful Ukraine !
 Vanish, vain victory ! vanish, victory vain !
 Why wish we warfare ? Wherefore welcome were Xerxes, Ximenes, Xanthus, Xavier ?
 Yield, yield, ye youths ! ye yeomen, yield your yell !
 Zeus's, Zarpater's, Zoroaster's zeal,
 Attracting all, arms against acts appeal !

ECHO AND THE LOVER.

Lover. Echo ! mysterious nymph, declare
 Of what you're made, and what you are.
Echo. Air !
Lover. Mid airy cliffs and places high,
 Sweet Echo ! listening love, you lie.
Echo. You lie !
Lover. Thou dost resuscitate dead sounds, —
 Hark ! how my voice revives, resounds !
Echo. Zounds !
Lover. I'll question thee before I go, —
 Come, answer me more apropos !
Echo. Poh ! poh !
Lover. Tell me, fair nymph, if e'er you saw
 So sweet a girl as Phœbe Shaw.
Echo. Pshaw !
Lover. Say, what will turn that frisking coney
 Into the toils of matrimony ?
Echo. Money !
Lover. Has Phœbe not a heavenly brow ?
 Is not her bosom white as snow ?
Echo. Ass ! No !
Lover. Her eyes ! was ever such a pair ?
 Are the stars brighter than they are ?
Echo. They are !
Lover. Echo, thou liest, but can't deceive me.
Echo. Leave me !
Lover. But come, thou saucy, pert roncancer,
 Who is as fair as Phœbe ? Answer !
Echo. Ann, sir.

ECHO.

I ASKED of Echo, t' other day,
 (Whose words are few and often funny,)
 What to a novice she could say
 Of courtship, love, and matrimony.
 Quoth Echo, plainly, — "Matter-o'-money !"
 Whom should I marry ? — should it be
 A dashing damsel, gay and pert,
 A pattern of inconstancy ;
 Or selfish, mercenary flirt ?
 Quoth Echo, sharply, — "Nary flirt !"
 What if, weary of the strife
 That long has lured the dear deceiver,
 She promise to amend her life,
 And sin no more ; can I believe her ?
 Quoth Echo, very promptly, — "Leave her !"
 But if some maiden with a heart
 On me should venture to bestow it,
 Pray, should I act the wiser part
 To take the treasure or forego it ?
 Quoth Echo, with decision, — "Go it !"

But what if, seemingly afraid
 To bind her fate in Hymen's fetter,
 She vow she means to die a maid,
 In answer to my loving letter ?
 Quoth Echo, rather coolly, — "Let her !"

What if, in spite of her disdain,
 I find my heart intertwined about
 With Cupid's dear delicious chain
 So closely that I can't get out ?
 Quoth Echo, laughingly, — "Get out !"

But if some maid with beauty blest,
 As pure and fair as Heaven can make her,
 Will share my labor and my rest
 Till envious Death shall overtake her ?
 Quoth Echo (sotto voce), — "Take her !"

JOHN GODFREY SANE.

NOCTURNAL SKETCH.

BLANK VERSE IN RHYME.

EVEN is come ; and from the dark Park, hark,
 The signal of the setting sun — one gun !
 And six is sounding from the chime, prime time
 To go and see the Drury-Lane Dane slain, —
 Or hear Othello's jealous doubt spout out, —
 Or Macbeth raving at that shade-made blade,
 Denying to his frantic clutch much touch ;
 Or else to see Ducrow with wide stride ride
 Four horses as no other man can span ;
 Or in the small Olympic pit sit split
 Laughing at Liston, while you quiz his phiz.

Anon Night comes, and with her wings brings things

Such as, with his poetic tongue, Young sung ;
The gas upblazes with its bright white light,
And paralytic watchmen prowl, howl, growl
About the streets, and take up Pall-Mall Sal,
Who, hastening to her nightly jobs, robs fobs.

Now thieves to enter for your cash, smash, crash,
Past drowsy Charley, in a deep sleep, creep,
But, frightened by Policeman B. 3, flee,
And while they 're going, whisper low, "No go !"

Now puss, when folks are in their beds, treads leads,
And sleepers, waking, grumble, "Drat that cat !"
Who in the gutter caterwauls, squalls, mauls
Some feline foe, and screams in shrill ill-will.

Now Bulls of Bashan, of a prize size, rise
In childish dreams, and with a roar gore poor
Georgy, or Charley, or Billy, willy-nilly ;—
But Nursemaid in a nightmare rest, chest-pressed,
Dreameth of one of her old flames, James Games.
And that she hears— what faith is man's !—
Ann's banns

And his, from Reverend Mr. Rice, twice, thrice ;
White ribbons flourish, and a stout shout out,
That upward goes, shows Rose knows those bows' woes !

THOMAS HOOD.

ODE FOR A SOCIAL MEETING ;

WITH SLIGHT ALTERATIONS BY A TEETOTALER.

COME ! fill a fresh bumper, — for why should we go

While the <sup>logwood</sup> ~~nectar~~ still reddens our cups as they flow ?

Pour out the <sup>decoction</sup> ~~rich juices~~ still bright with the sun,

Till o'er the brimmed crystal the <sup>dye-stuff</sup> ~~rubies~~ shall run.

The <sup>half-ripened apples</sup> ~~purple globed clusters~~ their life-dews have bled ;

How sweet is the <sup>taste</sup> ~~breath~~ of the <sup>sugar of lead</sup> ~~fragrance~~ they shed !

For summer's <sup>rank poisons</sup> ~~last roses~~ lie hid in the <sup>wines !!!</sup> ~~wines~~

That were garnered by <sup>stable-boys smoking four-pines</sup> ~~maidens who laughed~~ ~~through the vines.~~

Then a <sup>scowl</sup> ~~smile~~, and a <sup>howl</sup> ~~glass~~, and at <sup>scoff</sup> ~~least~~, and a <sup>sneer</sup> ~~cheer~~,
<sup>strychnine and whiskey, and ratsbane and beer</sup>

For all the <sup>Down, down with the tyrant that masters us all !</sup> ~~good wine, and we've some of it here !~~
In cellar, in pantry, in attic, in hall,

Long live the <sup>Down, down with the tyrant that masters us all !</sup> ~~gay servant that laughs for us all !~~

LINES WRITTEN IN AN ALBUM.

[A farmer's daughter, during the rage for albums, handed to the author an old account-book ruled for pounds, shillings, and pence, and requested a contribution.]

| THIS world 's a scene as dark as Styx, |    |    |    |
| Where hope is scarce worth             |    | 2  | 6  |
| Our joys are borne so fleeting hence   |    |    |    |
| That they are dear at                  |    |    | 18 |
| And yet to stay here most are willing, |    |    |    |

WILLIS GAYLORD.

METRICAL FEET.

TROCHEE trips from long to short ;
From long to long in solemn sort
Slow Spondee stalks ; strong foot ! yet ill able Ever to come up with dactyl trisyllable.
Iambics march from short to long ;—
With a leap and a bound the swift Anapests throng ;
One syllable long, with one short at each side,
Amphibrachys hastes with a stately stride ;—
First and last being long, middle short, Amphimacer
Strikes his thundering hoofs like a proud high-bred racer.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE.

SNEEZING.

WHAT a moment, what a doubt !
All my nose is inside out, —
All my thrilling, tickling caustic,
Pyramid rhinocerositic,
Wants to sneeze and cannot do it !
How it yearns me, thrills me, stings me,
How with rapturous torment wrings me !
Now says, "Sneeze, you fool, — get through it."
Shee — shee — oh ! 't is most del-ishi —
Ishi — ishi — most del-ishi !
(Hang it, I shall sneeze till spring !)
Snuff is a delicious thing.

LEIGH HUNT.

TO MY NOSE.

Knows he that never took a pinch,
Nosey, the pleasure thence which flows ?
Knows he the titillating joys
Which my nose knows ?
O nose, I am as proud of thee
As any mountain of its snows ;
I gaze on thee, and feel that pride
A Roman knows !

| Ah, then, how sweetly closed those crowded days.....                         | 87   | Appeared the princess with that merry child.....    | 172  |
| Ah, the world hath many a Horner.....  | 973  | Arches on arches! as it were that Rome.....         | 631  |
| Ah! what is love? It is a pretty thing.....                                  | 136  | Art thou poor, yet hast thou golden slumbers?.....  | 550  |
| Ah! whence yon glare.....  | 499  | Art thou weary, art thou languid.....               | 364  |
| Ah, yes,—the fight? Well, messmates, well.....                               | 612  | A ruddy drop of manly blood.....                    | 112  |
| A jolly fat friar loved liquor good store.....                               | 946  | As beautiful Kitty one morning was tripping.....    | 187  |
| Alas, Fra Giacomo.....   | 885  | As by the shore, at break of day.....               | 577  |
| Alas, how light a cause may move.....  | 264  | A sentinel angel sitting high in glory.....         | 270  |
| Alas! they had been friends in youth.....                                    | 116  | A simple child.....                                 | 87   |
| Alas! what pity 't is that regularity.....                                   | 958  | As into blowing roses summer dews.....              | 790  |
| A life on the ocean wave.....  | 630  | As it fell upon a day.....                          | 480  |
| A lighter scarf of richer fold.....  | 81   | As Memnon's marble harp renowned of old.....        | 819  |
| A light is out in Italy.....   | 934  | A soldier of the Legion lay dying in Algiers.....   | 521  |
| A little more toward the light.....  | 755  | As once a Grecian maiden wove.....                  | 103  |
| All day long the storm of battle through the start-led valley swept..... | 523  | A song for the plant of my own native West.....     | 455  |
| All grim and soiled and brown with tan.....                                  | 600  | A song to the oak, the brave old oak.....           | 454  |
| All hail! thou noble land.....   | 588  | As, rising on its purple wing.....                  | 267  |
| All hail to the ruins, the rocks, and the shores!.....                       | 608  | As ships becalmed at eve, that lay.....             | 233  |
| All in our marriage garden.....  | 83   | As slow our ship her foamy track.....               | 237  |
| All in the Downs the fleet was moored.....                                   | 235  | A stranger came one night to Yussouf's tent.....    | 763  |
| "All quiet along the Potomac".....   | 524  | A swallow in the spring.....                        | 477  |
| All the world 's a stage.....  | 711  | A sweet disorder in the dress.....                  | 713  |
|  |      | As when, on Carmel's sterile steep.....             | 693  |

|   |      |   |      |
|---|------|---|------|
| At Bannockburn the English lay.....                     | 573  | But now our quacks are gamesters.....                 | 783  |
| At early dawn I marked them in the sky.....             | 480  | But where to find that happiest spot below.....       | 229  |
| "A temple to friendship," cried Laura.....              | 130  | But who the melodies of morn can tell?.....           | 409  |
| A thing of beauty is a joy forever.....                 | 675  | "But why do you go?" said the lady.....               | 217  |
| A thousand miles from land are we.....                  | 483  | By broad Potomac's silent shore.....                  | 928  |
| At midnight, in his guarded tent.....                   | 582  | By Nebo's lonely mountain.....                        | 383  |
| At noon, within the dusty town.....                     | 692  | By the flow of the inland river.....                  | 533  |
| At Paris it was, at the opera there.....                | 264  | By the rude bridge that arched the flood.....         | 589  |
| A traveller through a dusty road.....                   | 779  | By the wayside, on a mossy stone.....                 | 323  |
| At setting day and rising morn.....                     | 161  |   |      |
| At the close of the day, when the hamlet is still.....  | 737  | Calm is the morn without a sound.....                 | 290  |
| Ave Maria! o'er the earth and sea.....                  | 413  | Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable night.....       | 414  |
| A violet in her lovely hair.....                        | 126  | Ca' the yowes to the knowes.....                      | 153  |
| Awake, awake, my Lyre.....                              | 772  | Cease, rude Boreas, blustering railer.....            | 623  |
| A warrior so bold, and a virgin so bright.....          | 861  | Charmer, on a given straight line.....                | 992  |
| Away! away! through the sightless air.....              | 864  | Cheeks as soft as July peaches.....                   | 76   |
| A weary weed, tossed to and fro.....                    | 622  | Chicken-skin, delicate, white.....                    | 749  |
| A well there is in the West country.....                | 955  | Child of the later days!.....                         | 662  |
| A wet sheet and a flowing sea.....                      | 625  | Chilly Dovebber with its boadigg blast.....           | 1016 |
| A widow—she had only one!.....                          | 282  | Chloe, we must not always be in heaven.....           | 192  |
| A wind came up out of the sea.....                      | 408  | Christ! I am Christ's! and let the name.....          | 359  |
| Ay, but I know.....                                     | 251  | Christmas is here.....                                | 117  |
| Ay, tear her tattered ensign down!.....                 | 620  | Clear and cool, clear and cool.....                   | 443  |
|   |      | Clear, placid Leman! thy contrasted lake.....         | 685  |
| Bachelor's hall, what a quare-lookin' place it is!..... | 1003 | Clear the brown path to meet his coulter's gleam..... | 551  |
| Backward, turn backward, O Time, in your flight.....    | 222  | Cleon hath a million acres.....                       | 732  |
| Balow, my babe, ly stil and sleipe!.....                | 269  | Clime of the forgotten brave!.....                    | 581  |
| Beat on, proud billows, Boreas, blow.....               | 731  | Cling to thy home! if there the meanest shed.....     | 225  |
| Beautiful Evelyn Hope is dead.....                      | 284  | Close his eyes; his work is done!.....                | 531  |
| Beautiful, sublime, and glorious.....                   | 607  | Columbia, Columbia, to glory arise.....               | 588  |
| Beautiful was the night.....                            | 432  | Come a little nearer, doctor.....                     | 541  |
| Because I breathe not love to everie one.....           | 144  | Come, all ye jolly shepherds.....                     | 163  |
| Before I sigh my last gasp, let me breathe.....         | 791  | Come as artist, come as guest.....                    | 925  |
| Before I trust my fate to thee.....                     | 143  | Come, brother, turn with me from pining thought.....  | 363  |
| Behave yourself! before folk.....                       | 157  | Come, dear children, let us away.....                 | 827  |
| Behold, I have a weapon.....                            | 877  | Come, dear old comrade, you and I.....                | 112  |
| Behold the mansion reared by daedal Jack.....           | 1011 | Come! fill a fresh bumper, for why should we go.....  | 1015 |
| Behold the sea.....                                     | 610  | Come from my first, ay, come!.....                    | 920  |
| Behold the young, the rosy Spring.....                  | 422  | Come, gentle sleep, attend thy votary's prayer.....   | 761  |
| Behold this ruin! 'T was a skull.....                   | 761  | Come here, come here, and dwell.....                  | 825  |
| Believe me, if all those endearing young charms.....    | 174  | Come hither, Evan Cameron.....                        | 877  |
| Ben Battle was a soldier bold.....                      | 964  | Come, hoist the sail, the fast let go!.....           | 666  |
| Beneath a shivering canopy reclined.....                | 410  | Come in the evening, or come in the morning.....      | 152  |
| Beneath our consecrated elm.....                        | 927  | Come into the garden, Maud.....                       | 152  |
| Beneath this stony roof reclined.....                   | 406  | Come, let us plant the apple-tree.....                | 457  |
| Better trust all and be deceived.....                   | 730  | Come, listen to me, you gallants so free.....         | 638  |
| Between Nose and Eyes a strange contest arose.....      | 951  | Come live with me, and be my love.....                | 157  |
| Between the dark and the daylight.....                  | 98   | Come, now a roundel, and a fairy song.....            | 835  |
| Be wise to-day; 't is madness to defer.....             | 748  | Come ou, sir: here's the place.....                   | 445  |
| Beyond the smiling and the weeping.....                 | 296  | Come, O thou Traveller unknown.....                   | 371  |
| Beyond these chilling winds and gloomy skies.....       | 368  | Come over, come over.....                             | 153  |
| Bird of the wilderness.....                             | 473  | Come, rest in this bosom.....                         | 185  |
| Birds, the free tenants of land, air, and ocean.....    | 470  | Come, see the Dolphin's anchor forged.....            | 554  |
| Blessings on thee, little man.....                      | 99   | Come, Sleep, and with thy sweet deceiving.....        | 761  |
| Elest as the immortal gods is he.....                   | 184  | Come, Sleep, O Sleep, the certain knot of peace.....  | 762  |
| Blossom of the almond-trees.....                        | 457  | Come then, my friend! my genius! come along.....      | 911  |
| Blow, blow, thou winter wind.....                       | 316  | Come to me, dearest.....                              | 247  |
| Blue gulf all around us.....                            | 573  | Come to me, O my Mother!.....                         | 223  |
| Bobolink! that in the meadow.....                       | 475  | Come to these scenes of peace.....                    | 403  |
| Bonnie wee thing! cannie wee thing.....                 | 123  | Comrades, leave me here a little.....                 | 254  |
| Bonny Kilmeny gaed up the glen.....                     | 837  | Cooks who 'd roast a sucking pig.....                 | 1013 |
| Break, break, break.....                                | 315  | Could I pass those lounging sentries.....             | 922  |
| Break, Fantasy, from thy cave of cloud.....             | 819  | Could ye come back to me, Douglas, Douglas.....       | 289  |
| Breathes there the man with soul so dead.....           | 563  | Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear.....         | 321  |
| Buried to-day.....                                      | 272  | Cromwell, our chief of men.....                       | 909  |
| Burly, dozing humble-bee!.....                          | 484  | Cupid and my Campaspe played.....                     | 186  |
| But chief-surpassing all—a cuckoo clock.....            | 717  | Cursed be the verse, how well soe'er it flow.....     | 781  |
| But Enoch yearned to see her face again.....            | 223  | Cyriack, this three years' day.....                   | 735  |
| But Fortune, like some others of her sex.....           | 777  |   |      |
| But happy they! the happiest of their kind.....         | 214  | Dark as the clouds of even.....                       | 595  |
| But I remember, when the fight was done.....            | 506  | Dark fell the night, the watch was set.....           | 645  |
| But look! o'er the fall see the angler stand.....       | 669  | Darkness is thinning.....                             | 360  |

- Daughter of God! that sitt'st on high..... 534

 Go from me. Yet I feel that I shall stand..... 189
 Going—the great round Sun..... 754
 Golden hair climbed up on Grandpapa's knee..... 85
 Go, lovely rose!..... 125
 Gone at last..... 992
 Go now! and with some daring drug..... 546
 Good-by, proud world, I'm going home..... 744
 Good Hamlet, cast thy nightingale color off..... 294
 Good morrow to thy sable beak..... 477
 Good night!..... 553
 Good people all of every sort..... 943
 Good people all, with one accord..... 949
 Go, pater to lubbers, and swabs, do ye see..... 615
 Go, soul, the body's guest..... 745
 Go to thy rest, fair child..... 282
 Go where glory waits thee..... 237
 Great ocean! strongest of creation's sons..... 610
 Green be the turf above thee..... 937
 Green grow the rushes O..... 191
 Green little vaulter in the sunny grass..... 485
 Grief hath been known to turn..... 891
 Guvener B. is a sensible man..... 904
 Ha! bully for me again when my turn for picket is over..... 525

| Hail, beauteous stranger of the grove ! .....                    | 471 | How fine has the day been ! how bright the sun ! ..   | 431  |
| Hail, holy Light, offspring of Heaven ! .....                    | 407 | How fresh, O Lord, how sweet and clean .....          | 763  |
| Hail to the Chief who in triumph advances ! .....                | 519 | How happy is he born and taught .....                 | 736  |
| Hail to thee, blithe spirit ! .....                              | 473 | How hard when those who do not wish .....             | 989  |
| Half a league, half a league .....                               | 517 | How many a time have I .....                          | 669  |
| Hamelin Town 's in Brunswick .....                               | 343 | How many summers, love .....                          | 219  |
| Hans Breitmann gife a barty .....                                | 999 | How many thousand of my poorest subjects .....        | 762  |
| Happy insect ! ever blest .....                                  | 484 | How near to good is what is fair .....                | 711  |
| Happy insect, what can be .....                                  | 484 | How poor, how rich, how abject, how august .....      | 776  |
| Happy the man, whose wish and care .....                         | 225 | How pure at heart and sound of head .....             | 291  |
| Happy the man who, void .....                                    | 947 | How seldom, friend, a good great man inherits .....   | 739  |
| Hark ! ah, the nightingale ! .....                               | 479 | How shall I know thee in the sphere which keeps ..... | 373  |
| Hark ! hark ! the lark at heaven's gate sings .....              | 474 | How sleep the brave, who sink to rest .....           | 563  |
| Hark ! the faint bells of the sunken city .....                  | 825 | How still the morning of the hallowed day .....       | 378  |
| Harness me down with your iron bands .....                       | 555 | How sweet it was to breathe that cooler air .....     | 530  |
| Has there any old fellow got mixed with the boys .....           | 978 | "How sweetly," said the trembling maid .....          | 251  |
| Hast thou a charm to stay the morning star .....                 | 376 | How sweet the harmonies of afternoon .....            | 693  |
| Have other lovers—say my love .....                              | 194 | How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank ! ..... | 775  |
| Have you heard of the wonderful one-hoss shay .....              | 977 | How wonderful is death ! .....                        | 714  |
| Have you not heard the poets tell .....                          | 79  | Husband and wife ! no converse now ye hold .....      | 304  |
| Ha ! where ye gann, ye crawlin' ferlie ? .....                   | 486 | Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber .....            | 76   |
| Heap on more wood ! the wind is chill .....                      | 698 | I am a friar of orders gray .....                     | 964  |
| Hear the sledges with the bells .....                            | 714 | I am by promise tied .....                            | 655  |
| Heaven, what an age is this .....                                | 734 | I am dying, Egypt, dying .....                        | 296  |
| He clasps the crag with hooked hands .....                       | 483 | I am in Rome ! Oft as the morning ray .....           | 680  |
| He had no times of study, and no place .....                     | 766 | I am monarch of all I survey .....                    | 738  |
| Heigh-ho ' daisies and buttercups .....                          | 86  | I am undone : there is no living, none .....          | 242  |
| He is gone on the mountain .....                                 | 283 | I am watching for the early buds to wake .....        | 289  |
| He is the freeman whom the truth makes free .....                | 600 | I arise from dreams of thee .....                     | 188  |
| He is the happy man whose life even now .....                    | 735 | I asked an aged man with hoary hairs .....            | 748  |
| He making speedy way through spersed ayre .....                  | 828 | I asked of echo, t'other day .....                    | 1014 |
| Hence, all ye vain delights .....                                | 315 | I bring fresh showers for the thirsting flowers ..... | 822  |
| Hence, loathed Melancholy .....                                  | 785 | I cannot eat but little meat .....                    | 946  |
| Hence, vain deluding joys .....                                  | 786 | I cannot make him dead ! .....                        | 278  |
| "Henri Heine"—'t is here ! .....                                 | 923 | I cannot think that thou shouldst pass away .....     | 216  |
| Here, a sheer hulk, lies poor Tom Bowling .....                  | 629 | I care not, though it be .....                        | 131  |
| Here I come creeping, creeping everywhere .....                  | 465 | I climbed the dark brow of the mighty Helvellyn ..... | 454  |
| Here in this leafy place .....                                   | 529 | I come from haunts of coot and hern .....             | 446  |
| Here is one leaf reserved for me .....                           | 133 | I'd been away from her three years,—about that .....  | 201  |
| Here rests, and let no saucy knave .....                         | 953 | I do not love thee for that fair .....                | 126  |
| Here rests his head upon the lap of earth .....                  | 307 | I don't approve this hawid waw .....                  | 1001 |
| Here's the garden she walked across .....                        | 147 | I don't go much on religion .....                     | 999  |
| Here's to the maiden of bashful fifteen .....                    | 131 | If all the world and love were young .....            | 153  |
| Her hair was tawny with gold .....                               | 585 | If doughty deeds my lady please .....                 | 146  |
| Her house is all of echo made .....                              | 781 | I bear thy kisses, gentle maiden .....                | 131  |
| Her window opens to the bay .....                                | 241 | If dumb too long the drooping muse hath stayed .....  | 910  |
| He's gane, he's gane ! .....                                     | 917 | I feel a newer life in every gale .....               | 423  |
| He that loves a rosy cheek .....                                 | 141 | If every man's internal care .....                    | 757  |
| He that many bokes redys .....                                   | 767 | I fill this cup to one made up .....                  | 129  |
| He was in logic a great critic .....                             | 945 | If it be true that any beauteous thing .....          | 135  |
| He was of that stubborn crew .....                               | 387 | If I were told that I must die to-morrow .....        | 331  |
| He who hath bent him o'er the dead .....                         | 303 | If love were what the rose is .....                   | 148  |
| High walls and huge the body may confine .....                   | 593 | If sleep and death be truly one .....                 | 290  |
| His echoing axe the settler swung .....                          | 709 | If solitude hath ever led thy steps .....             | 412  |
| His learning such, no author, old or new .....                   | 907 | If stores of dry and learned lore we gain .....       | 112  |
| His puissant sword unto his side .....                           | 506 | If the red slayer think he slays .....                | 746  |
| Home of the Percy's high-born race .....                         | 677 | If this fair rose offend thy sight .....              | 123  |
| Home they brought her warrior dead .....                         | 292 | If thou must love me, let it be for naught .....      | 189  |
| Honor and shame from no condition rise .....                     | 781 | If thou shouldst ever come by choice or chance .....  | 890  |
| Ho ! pretty page with the dimpled chin .....                     | 202 | If thou wert by my side, my love .....                | 219  |
| Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man .....                       | 111 | If thou wilt ease thine heart .....                   | 303  |
| Ho, sailor of the sea ! .....                                    | 616 | If thou wouldst view fair Melrose aright .....        | 675  |
| How beautiful is the rain ! .....                                | 428 | If to be absent were to be .....                      | 242  |
| How beautiful this night ! the balmiest sigh .....               | 415 | If women could be fair and never fond .....           | 790  |
| How calm they sleep beneath the shade .....                      | 305 | If you're waking, call me early .....                 | 528  |
| How dear to this heart are the scenes of my child-hood ..... | 100 | I gazed upon the glorious sky .....                   | 425  |
| How delicious is the winning .....                               | 185 | I grew assured before I asked .....                   | 170  |
| How desolate were nature .....                                   | 488 | I had sworn to be a bachelor .....                    | 119  |
| How does the water come down at Lodore .....                     | 449 | I have seen great anes and set in great ha's .....    | 227  |
| How do I love thee ? Let me count the ways .....                 | 190 | I have a name, a little name .....                    | 89   |
| How fares my lord ? .....  | 650 | I have a son, a little son .....                      | 89   |

|   |      |  |      |
|---|------|--|------|
| I have got a new-born sister.....                     | 76   | I prithee send me back my heart.....                     | 146  |
| I have had playmates.....                             | 274  | I reckon I git your drift, gents.....                    | 998  |
| I have ships that went to sea.....                    | 261  | I remember, I remember.....                              | 93   |
| I heard the trailing garments of the night.....       | 416  | I reside at Table Mountain.....                          | 983  |
| I in these flowery meads would be.....                | 608  | I saw him kiss your cheek.....                           | 186  |
| I knew by the smoke that so gracefully curled.....    | 228  | I saw him once before.....                               | 323  |
| I know not that the men of old.....                   | 740  | I saw thee when, as twilight fell.....                   | 393  |
| I know not whence it rises.....                       | 825  | I saw two clouds at morning.....                         | 137  |
| L lay me down to sleep.....                           | 295  | Is it the palm, the cocoa palm.....                      | 455  |
| I leaned out of window, I smelt the white clover..... | 172  | I slept and dreamed that life was Beauty.....            | 557  |
| I lent my girl a book one day.....                    | 253  | I sometimes hold it half a sin.....                      | 290  |
| I like a church; I like a cowl.....                   | 735  | I sprang to the stirrup, and Joris and he.....           | 573  |
| I like that ancient Saxon phrase.....                 | 306  | Is there a whim-inspired fool.....                       | 917  |
| I'll sing you a good old song.....                    | 959  | Is there for honest poverty.....                         | 341  |
| I love, and have some cause to love, the earth.....   | 360  | Is there when the winds are singing.....                 | 84   |
| I love at eventide to walk alone.....                 | 427  | Is this a dagger which I see before me.....              | 832  |
| I love contemplating—apart.....                       | 616  | Is this a fast,—to keep.....                             | 361  |
| I loved him in my dawning years.....                  | 972  | I stood, one Sunday morning.....                         | 334  |
| I loved him not; and yet, now he is gone.....         | 260  | It chanced to me upon a time to sail.....                | 579  |
| I loved thee once, I'll love no more.....             | 267  | I thought our love at full, but I did err.....           | 216  |
| I love it, I love it! and who shall dare.....         | 101  | I thought to pass away before.....                       | 529  |
| I love thee, love thee, Giulio!.....                  | 236  | It is an Ancient Mariner.....                            | 854  |
| I love to hear thine earnest voice.....               | 485  | It is done!.....   | 597  |
| I love to wander through the woodlands hoary.....     | 692  | It is not beauty I demand.....                           | 141  |
| I made a posie, while the day ran by.....             | 741  | It is not growing like a tree.....                       | 729  |
| I marvelled why a simple child.....                   | 1006 | It is the miller's daughter.....                         | 183  |
| I met a traveller from an antique land.....           | 717  | It kindles all my soul.....                              | 372  |
| I'm in love with you, baby Louise!.....               | 78   | It lies around us like a cloud.....                      | 387  |
| I'm sitting alone by the fire.....                    | 199  | It must be so. Plato, thou reasonest well!.....          | 759  |
| I'm sittin' on the stile, Mary.....                   | 292  | It's we two, it's we two for aye.....                    | 213  |
| I'm wearin' awa', Jean.....                           | 296  | It was a beauty that I saw.....                          | 123  |
| In a dirty old house lived a dirty old man.....       | 253  | It was a dreary day in Padua.....                        | 886  |
| In a land for antiquities greatly renowned.....       | 851  | It was a friar of orders gray.....                       | 137  |
| In a small chamber, friendless and unseen.....        | 932  | It was a summer evening.....                             | 538  |
| In a valley, centuries ago.....                       | 863  | It was a time of sadness, and my heart.....              | 374  |
| In Broad Street building (on a winter night).....     | 962  | It was fifty years ago.....                              | 935  |
| Indeed this very love which is my boast.....          | 189  | It was many and many a year ago.....                     | 235  |
| In eddying course when leaves began to fly.....       | 865  | "It was our wedding day".....                            | 218  |
| I need not praise the sweetness of his song.....      | 937  | It was the autumn of the year.....                       | 250  |
| In either hand the hastening angel caught.....        | 321  | It was the wild midnight.....                            | 564  |
| I never gave a lock of hair away.....                 | 189  | It was upon an April morn.....                           | 504  |
| In every village marked with little spire.....        | 707  | I've wandered east, I've wandered west.....              | 242  |
| In facile natures fancies quickly grow.....           | 781  | I wandered by the brookside.....                         | 149  |
| In good King Charles's golden days.....               | 945  | I wandered lonely as a cloud.....                        | 463  |
| In heavy sleep the Caliph lay.....                    | 866  | I was a stricken deer, that left the herd.....           | 790  |
| In holy might we made the vow.....                    | 269  | I was in Margate last July.....                          | 966  |
| In Köln, a town of monks and bones.....               | 954  | I weigh not fortune's frown or smile.....                | 731  |
| In May, when sea-winds pierced our solitudes.....     | 461  | I will go back to the great sweet mother.....            | 611  |
| In melancholic fancy.....                             | 820  | I will not have the mad Clytie.....                      | 460  |
| In moss-prankt dells which the sunbeams flatter.....  | 1010 | I will not let you say a woman's part.....               | 143  |
| In my poor mind it is most sweet to muse.....         | 86   | I will paint her as I see her.....                       | 97   |
| In Sana, O, in Sana, God, the Lord.....               | 652  | I wish my hair cut.....                                  | 1011 |
| In s'umbers of midnight the sailor-boy lay.....       | 614  | I wonder if Brougham.....                                | 923  |
| In summer, when the days were long.....               | 160  | I would I were an excellent divine.....                  | 362  |
| In the ancient town of Bruges.....                    | 716  | I would not enter on my list of friends.....             | 732  |
| In the barn, the tenant cock.....                     | 403  | I wrote some lines.....                                  | 976  |

| Lady Clara Vere de Vere.....                                | 267  | Merrily swinging on brier and weed.....             | 476 |
| Lars Porsena of Clusium.....                                | 565  | Merry Margaret.....                                 | 122 |
| Last night, among his fellow roughs.....                    | 514  | Methinks it were no pain to die.....                | 295 |
| Lay him beneath his snows.....                              | 929  | Mica, mica, parva stella.....                       | 993 |
| Lead, kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom.....          | 364  | Michaël bid sound the archangel trumpet.....        | 500 |
| Let me be your servant.....                                 | 546  | Midnight past! Not a sound of aught.....            | 265 |
| Let me not to the marriage of true minds.....               | 208  | Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam.....   | 225 |
| Let no man write my epitaph.....                            | 921  | Mild offspring of a dark and sullen sire!.....      | 461 |
| Let not woman e'er complain.....                            | 194  | Milton! thou shouldst be living.....                | 907 |
| Let Sporus tremble.....                                     | 909  | Mine be a cot beside the hill.....                  | 225 |
| Let Taylor preach, upon a morning breezy.....               | 963  | Mine eyes have seen the glory.....                  | 594 |
| Life! I know not what thou art.....                         | 303  | Mine eyes he closed, but open left the cell.....    | 209 |
| Life may be given in many ways.....                         | 930  | Miss Flora McFlimsy.....                            | 981 |
| Light as a flake of foam upon the wind.....                 | 623  | Moan, moan, ye dying gales!.....                    | 315 |
| Light-winged smoke! Icarian bird.....                       | 691  | More than the soul of ancient song.....             | 767 |
| Like as the arm'd Knight.....                               | 366  | Most potent, grave, and reverend.....               | 145 |
| Like as the danask rose you see.....                        | 302  | Most sweet it is with unuplifted eyes.....          | 767 |
| Like to the clear in highest sphere.....                    | 127  | Mr. Orator Puff had two tones in his voice.....     | 962 |
| Like to the falling of a star.....                          | 301  | Muses, that sing Love's sensual empiric.....        | 135 |
| Linger not long. Home is not home without thee.....         | 244  | Music, when soft voices die.....                    | 776 |
| Listen, my children, and you shall hear.....                | 590  | My beautiful, my beautiful!.....                    | 664 |
| Lithe and long as the serpent train.....                    | 456  | My boat is on the shore.....                        | 920 |
| Little Ellie sits alone.....                                | 102  | My curse upon thy venom'd stang.....                | 952 |
| Little Gretchen, little Gretchen wanders.....               | 336  | My dear and only love, I pray.....                  | 150 |
| Little I ask; my wants are few.....                         | 733  | "My ear-rings, my ear-rings".....                   | 171 |
| Little inmate, full of mirth.....                           | 485  | My eyes! how I love you.....                        | 195 |
| Little thinks, in the field, yon red-cloaked clown.....     | 405  | My fairest child, I have no song.....               | 97  |
| Lochiel, Lochiel! beware of the day.....                    | 573  | My gentle Puck, come hither.....                    | 835 |
| Long porch St. Austin o'er the sacred page.....             | 362  | My girl hath violet eyes and yellow hair.....       | 181 |
| Look at me with thy large brown eyes.....                   | 75   | My God, I love thee! not because.....               | 360 |
| Look in my face; my name is Might-have-been.....            | 744  | My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness pains.....    | 316 |
| Look round our world; behold the chain of love.....         | 405  | My heart leaps up when I behold.....                | 432 |
| Lord! call thy pallid angel.....                            | 557  | My heart's in the Highlands.....                    | 659 |
| Lord of the winds! I feel thee nigh.....                    | 686  | My held is like to rend, Willie.....                | 269 |
| Lord! when those glorious lights I see.....                 | 376  | My letters! all dead paper, mute and white.....     | 189 |
| Lo, when the Lord made north and south.....                 | 128  | My life is like the summer rose.....                | 743 |
| Lo! where she comes along with portly pace.....             | 212  | My little love, do you remember.....                | 160 |
| Lo! where the rosy-bosomed Hours.....                       | 421  | My loved, my honored, much-respected friend.....    | 335 |
| Loud and clear.....   | 716  | My love and I for kisses played.....                | 136 |
| Loud roared the dreadful thunder.....                       | 623  | My love he built me a bonnie bower.....             | 638 |
| Loud divine, all love excelling.....                        | 392  | My love, I have no fear that thou shouldst die..... | 216 |
| Love in my bosom like a bee.....                            | 194  | My mind to me a kingdom is.....                     | 729 |
| Love is a little golden fish.....                           | 185  | My mule refreshed, his bells.....                   | 446 |
| Love is a sickness full of woes.....                        | 136  | My prime of youth is but a frost of cares.....      | 745 |
| Love me little, love me long!.....                          | 141  | My sister! my sweet sister! if a name.....          | 223 |
| Love not, love not! ye hapless sons of clay!.....           | 320  | My soul to-day.....                                 | 694 |
| Love not me for comely grace.....                           | 141  | Mysterious night! when our first parent knew.....   | 415 |
| Love scorns degrees; the low he fifteth high.....           | 136  | My time, O ye Muses, was happily spent.....         | 245 |
| Low-angled cloud.....                                       | 691  | My true love hath my heart, and I have his.....     | 137 |
| Low burns the summer afternoon.....                         | 412  | My voice is still for war.....                      | 570 |
| Low on the utmost boundary of the sight.....                | 432  | Nae shoon to hide her tiny tae.....                 | 79  |
| Low spake the Knight.....                                   | 881  | Naked on parent's knees.....                        | 78  |
| Lucy is a golden girl.....                                  | 732  | Nay! if you will not sit upon my knee.....          | 488 |
| Maiden! with the meek brown eyes.....                       | 104  | Nay, you wrong her, my friend.....                  | 263 |
| Maid of Athens, ere we part.....                            | 234  | Nearer, my God, to thee.....                        | 373 |
| "Make way for Liberty!" he cried.....                       | 584  | Neddy knife-grinder! whither are you going?.....    | 952 |
| Man's home is every where. On ocean's flood.....            | 776  | Never any more.....                                 | 260 |
| "Man wants but little here below".....                      | 732  | Never wedding, ever wooing.....                     | 144 |
| Many a green isle needs must be.....                        | 441  | Next to thee, O fair gazelle.....                   | 454 |
| Many a long, long year ago.*.....                           | 988  | Night is the time for rest.....                     | 416 |
| Many a year is in its grave.....                            | 291  | No baby in the house, I know.....                   | 80  |
| Margarita first possessed.....                              | 191  | No more these simple flowers belong.....            | 914 |
| Martial, the things that do attain.....                     | 226  | No soldier, statesman.....                          | 935 |
| Maud Muller, on a summer's day.....                         | 158  | No splendor 'neath the sky's proud dome.....        | 126 |
|   |      | No stir in the air, no stir in the sea.....         | 620 |
|   |      | No sun—no moon!.....                                | 425 |

|   |     |  |      |
|---|-----|--|------|
| Not a drum was heard, nor a funeral note.....         | 920 | O Mary, at thy window be !.....                            | 149  |
| Not as you meant, O learned man.....                  | 391 | O Mary, go and call the cattle home.....                   | 621  |
| Not far advanced was morning day.....                 | 648 | O, may I join the choir invisible.....                     | 760  |
| Nothing but leaves; the spirit grieves.....           | 370 | O melancholy bird, a winter's day.....                     | 482  |
| Not in the laughing bowers.....                       | 330 | O mighty Caesar! dost thou lie so low.....                 | 875  |
| Not only we, the latest seed of Time.....             | 702 | O Mistress mine, where are you roaming?.....               | 122  |
| Not ours the vows of such as plight.....              | 213 | O mortal man, who livest here by toil.....                 | 831  |
| Not yet, the flowers are in my path.....              | 270 | O mother dear, Jerusalem.....                              | 358  |
| Now came still evening on, and twilight gray.....     | 413 | O mother of a mighty race.....                             | 597  |
| Now gentle sleep hath closed up those eyes.....       | 186 | O, my love's like the steadfast sun.....                   | 219  |
| Now the bright morning star, day's harbinger.....     | 422 | O, my love's like a red, red rose.....                     | 234  |
| Now the third and fatal conflict.....                 | 769 | On a hill there grows a flower.....                        | 124  |
| Now upon Syria's land of roses.....                   | 451 | On Alpine heights the love of God is shed.....             | 445  |
| Now went forth the morn.....                          | 500 | O Nancy, wilt thou go with me.....                         | 156  |
| Now westward Sol had spent the richest beam.....      | 774 | Once in the flight of ages past.....                       | 308  |
| O, a dainty plant is the ivy green.....               | 465 | Once more unto the breach, dear friends.....               | 503  |

Wechawken! In thy mountain scenery yet..... 685
Wee, modest, crimson-tipped flower..... 462
Weep ye no more, sad fountains!..... 762
Wee, sleekit, cow'rin, tim'rous beastie..... 468
Wee Willie Winkie rins through the town..... 88
We have been friends together..... 116
We knew it would rain, for all the morn..... 427
We know not what it is, dear, this sleep so deep..... 297
Welcome, maids of honor!..... 461
Welcome, welcome, do I sing..... 126
We live in deeds, not years..... 742
We meet 'neath the sounding rafter..... 898
We parted in silence, we parted by night..... 240
We pledged our hearts, my love and I..... 192
Were I as base as is the lowly plain..... 135
Werther had a love for Charlotte..... 972
We sat by the fisher's cottage..... 691
We scatter seeds with careless hand..... 739
We see not, know not; all our way..... 375
We stood upon the ragged rocks..... 412
We the fairies blithe and antic..... 835
We were crowded in the cabin..... 627
We were not many,—we who stood..... 523
We wretched about our darling's head..... 280
Whan that Aprille with hise shourès soote..... 695
What a moment, what a doubt!..... 1015
What ails this heart o' mine..... 245
What change has made the pastures sweet..... 167
What constitutes a state?..... 599
What does little birdie say..... 80
What hid'st thou in thy treasure caves and cells?..... 619
What hope is here for modern rhyme..... 291

When the lamp is shattered..... 262
When the lessons and tasks are all ended..... 230
When the sheep are in the fold..... 249
When to the sessions of sweet silent thought..... 115
When troubled in spirit, when weary of life..... 665
When your beauty appears..... 185
Where are the men who went forth in the morning..... 538
Where are the swallows fled?..... 318
Where are you going, my pretty maid..... 958
Whereas, on certain boughs and sprays..... 992
Where did you come from, baby dear?..... 78
Where is the grave of Sir Arthur O'Kellyn?..... 538
Where the remote Bermudas ride..... 625
Whether with reason or with instinct blest..... 781
Which is the wind that brings the cold?..... 451
Which I wish to remark, and my language is plain..... 987
Which shall it be? which shall it be?..... 230
While on the cliff with calm delight she kneels..... 81
While sauntering through the crowded street..... 760
Whilom by silver Thames's gentle stream..... 946
Whither, midst falling dew..... 481
Who'er she be..... 192
Who has not dreamed a world of bliss..... 410
Who has not heard of the Vale of Cashmere..... 452
Who would care to pass his life..... 974
Why came the rose? Because the sun is shining... 148
Why, lovely charmer, tell me why..... 146
Why sits she thus in solitude?..... 790
Why so pale and wan, fond lover?..... 263
Why thus longing, thus forever sighing..... 392

ANALYTICAL INDEX

OF FAMOUS AND ART POETICAL QUOTATIONS.

The Poetical Quotations referred to in this Index will be found—as indicated by the page-number following the line or phrase indexed—either in the body of some poem, or as a brief or “fragment” in its appropriate Division. The key-words, under which these are indexed, will ordinarily be the  nouns  of the quotation, although there is many a “bold expressive phrase,” the essential peculiarities of which are indexed, whatever they may be. Take two familiar instances, the key-words being here italicized:

“Truth crushed to earth shall rise again”

is found in WM. CULLEN BRYANT’S poem entitled “The Battle-Field,” on page 534; while

“Sighed and looked unutterable things”

on page 204 is found to be a fragment from “The Seasons: Summer,” by JAMES THOMSON. Thus the reader may ascertain the position in this volume, the original source or poem, the name of the author, and the correct reading of the thousands of poetical quotations given in the book.

 smells to heaven, 220.
 Frail a thing is man, so, 308.
 as glasses, women are, 232.
 Frailties from their dread abode, 307.
 Frailty thy name is foul, 207.
 Frame, quit this mortal, 365.
 this universal, began, 775.
 Framed to make women false, 207.
 Framing of a deathless lay, 70.
 Frauds and holy shifts, 396.
 Fray, eager for the, 541.
 Free, land of the, 693.
 must be, or die, 602.
 nature's grace, rob me of, 489.
 who would be, must strike, 681.
 Freedom broadens slowly down, 603.
 from her mountain height, 595.
 has a thousand charms, 602.
 in my love, if I have, 147.
 of old sat, on the heights, 602.
 shall awhile repair, 583.
 shrieked as Kosciusko fell, 583.
 to worship God, 587.
 Freedom's banner streaming, 592.
 battle once begun, 582.
 cause, fought and led in, 603.
 soil beneath our feet, 592.
 Freeman whom truth makes free, 600.
 Freeman's will, harasses a, 604.
 Freeze thy life, harrow thy soul, 725.
 French she spake of fair, 696.
 of Paris was to hire unknowe, 696.
 Frenchman's darling, 495.
 Frezy, eye in fire, rolling, 722.
 Frezy's fevered blood, 813.
 Fresh as a bridegroom, 506.
 gales and gentle airs, 209.
 Freshly ran he on, 309.
 Fret thy soul with crosses, 204.
 hooded clove, like, 497.
 Fretted the pygmy body, 908.
 vault, long-drawn aisle and, 306.
 Friar of orders gray, 187.
 Friars, eremites and, 397.
 hooded clove, like, 497.
 Friend after friend departs, 114.
 as you choose a, an author, 805.
 candid, save me from the, 121.
 departed, defend your, 120.
 gained from heaven a, 307.
 house to lose a, 121.
 in my retreat, 120.
 knolling a departed, 346.
 more a, than e'er an enemy, 115.
 of all who have no friend, 311.
 of my better days, 687.
 of pleasure wisdom's aid, 774.
 of woe, sleep the, 816.
 philosopher and, my guide, 911.
 rarely find a, 121.
 thou art not my, 311.
 to close his eyes, 771.
 to himself, look if he be, 121.
 who hath not lost a, 114.
 who lost no, 120.
 Friendliest to sleep and silence, 816.
 Friend's infirmities, should bear his, 121.
 Friends are exultations agonies, 922.
 dear five hundred, 814.
 defend me from my, 782.
 cat and drink as, 121.

Friends, multitude of, 120.
never-failing, are they, 806.
old, like old warriors trusted, 121.
to talk, 118.
out of sight, as we lose, 120.
the poor make no new, 232.
like summer, 121.
Romans countrymen, 875.
thou hast, grapple the, 121.
to bless the present scene, 120.
to congratulate their, 725.
troops of, 794.
were poor but honest, 796.
women find few real, 735.

image of eternity, 120.
is a sheltering tree, 120.
like love is but a name, 121.
might divide, 120.
no cold medium knows, 120.
O summer, 120.
sudden, springs from wine, 121.
what is, but a name, 130.
Friendship's laws, true, 121.
name speaks to thee in, 121.
Frightful fiend behind him, 559.
Fringed curtains of thine eyes, 721.
Fringing the dusty road with gold, 495.
Front, fair large, and eye sublime, 711.
of battle he, 573.
of Jove, 721.
of my offending, head and, 145.

Lineaments of gospel books, 904.
Linen you're wearing out, it's not, 338.
Lines, and outwa d air, 711.
dry desert of a thousand, 807.
let a torch burn the happy, 312.
where beauty lingers, 303.
Lingering look behind, one lingering, 306.

- Linked sweetness long drawn out, 786.
Linnets sing, pipe but as the, 807.
Lion, heard thee, in his den, 648.
    hind mated by the, 242.
    pawing to free his hinder parts, 496.
    to rouse a, blood more stirs, 670.
Lions, winged, marble piles, 720.
    two, littered in one day, 820.
Lip or a coral, admirers, 141.
    pretty redness on his, 145.

    where my Julia's smile lies, 154.
    whispering with th, the foe, 511.
Liquefaction of her clothes, 126.
Liquid notes portend success, 406.
Liquor, he's yet some left, 811.
Lisped in numbers for the numbers
    came, 107.
List of friends, enter on my, 732.
Litel gold in cofre, 636.
Littered in one day, two lions, 820.
Little, go far with, 365.
    learning is a dangerous thing, 805.
    man wants but, 130, 794.
    month, a, 207.
    more than a little is too much, 815.
    more than kin, less than kind, 724.
    said is soonest mended, 803.
    senate laws, give his, 602, 910.
    thing, to give a cup of water, 770.
Live in hearts we lead behind, 763.
Live in pleasure when I live in thee, 794.
    not in myself, 493.
    past years again, none would, 733.
    taught us how to, 911.
    fill to-morrow, the darkest day, 793.
    unblemished, or die unknown, 811.
    unseen unknown, thus let me, 225.
    well what thou liv'st, 794.
    while you live, 794.
    wish to, when he should die, 900.
    with thee and be thy love, 158.
    with them is far less sweet, 243.
    without cooks, 814.
Lived and loved, better to have, 207.
    to-day, do thy worst, I have, 793.
Livelier iris, in the spring, a, 254.
Lively to sever, grave to gay, 911.
Liveried angels lacky her, 796.
Livers, humble, in content, 347.
Livory of heaven, stole the, 797.
    shadowed, of the sun, 722.
    sober, all things clad in her, 413.
Lives along the line, 496.
    like a drunken sailor on a mast, 722.
    most, who thinks most, 722.
    of great men all remind us, 770.
    other heights in other, 399.
    sublime, we can make our, 770.
Living, dead man, 722.
    no, with thee or without, 794.
Lo! the poor Indian, 399.
