Noyes, Walter Chadwick. American railroad rates.

Boston: Little, Brown, and company, 1905. (10), 277 pp. 8°.

This writer is a judge of the court of common pleas in Connecticut, and a railroad president. Argues that the railroads should favor conservative legislation. In a chapter on "Federal regulation" he discusses effective legislation and proposes:

First. A special court should be created in accordance with the constitutional provisions concerning the federal judiciary. Complaints made by persons aggrieved—or in their behalf by a public official or board—that specific railroad rates upon interstate traffic are unreasonable and unjust should be presented to this court. After speedy notice to the carrier the court should summarily inquire into the reasonableness of the rate complained of. If found reasonable, the complaint should be dismissed; if found unreasonable, the court should enjoin its further collection. This would end the function of the court.

Patterson, Christopher Stuart. The United States and the states under the constitution. 2d ed., with notes and references to additional authorities, by Robt. P. Reeder.

Summarizes decided cases to show that at the passage of the Sherman antitrust act in 1890 it had been well worked out that the indirect effect upon interstate and foreign commerce proceeding from the regulation of its incidents by the States was not obnoxious to the Constitution, while the Northern Securities case presented a clear example of restraint which was not direct in fact but the presence only of a power to restrain, "and the court, departing from the principles of eighty years, held the mere power to restrain to be actual direct restraint."

1906. Congress, and the regulation of corporations. E. Parmalee Prentice.
Harvard law review, vol. 19 (Jan. 1906) : 168-199.
 Argues that the "power to regulate freights and fares for interstate transport" does not belong to the states as decided by the Supreme Court in Wabash Railroad Co. v. Illinois, in 1886. "The states being thus deprived of the power to regulate interstate rates, the doctrine has now become current that the Constitution gave this power to Congress." This proposition is examined in the light of precedent and constitutional interpretation with the conclusion that Congress has no control in the matter. So that the Constitution does not permit interference either by the States or Congress.
