Kettles and pans for defense! That's the watchword these days as housewives all over the nation are setting aside their aluminum utensils to be contributed next week during the aluminum collection campaign. There is a temporary shortage of aluminum in the defense industries. More of this essential metal is needed just now for planes and other defense equipment. So everywhere in the United States local committees are getting ready to gather aluminum. The job of the individual homemaker and that means you----is to select as many aluminum kettles, pots, and pans as she can spare. They will be collected next week. You'll hear about the details from your local committee----but go through your kitchen cupboards now----and set aside all the aluminum utensils that you can do without. They'll help to guarantee the safety of our American homes.
