The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol \rightarrow (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole \rightarrow signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ∇ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE TWELFTH EDITION.

THIS edition has been carefully revised and corrected; and besides the considerable improvements which have been introduced in former editions of this Gazetteer, the publishers have availed themselves of all the latest and most approved publications, which could be of any utility in the compilation of this work. Park's Travels into Africa have been consulted, and the alterations introduced by that traveller into the geography of Africa have been particularly attended to; the late Embassy to Ava, and Journey to Thibet, have been carefully perused, and several alterations in the Geography of these countries have been introduced, besides the names of several towns and other topographical corrections. No pains have been spared to render this edition as correct as possible, and every publication has been consulted by the publishers, from which new geographical information could be obtained. The very material changes which have been introduced in the state of the different kingdoms of Europe within these few years, by the vicissitudes of war, or the still more uncertain operations of internal tumult, have been particularly noticed, and the historical events have been all brought down to 1801, except such as happened while the work was at press; and the distances, longitudes, and latitudes have been given with all possible accuracy.

In addition to the improvements detailed in the foregoing advertisement, the present edition being the first of this well known Gazetteer, that has issued from the American press, contains a description of at least 700 principal towns, &c. in the United States; which, doubtless, will render it the most valuable edition of the work that has yet appeared.

AN INTRODUCTION TO ASTRONOMY AND GEOGRAPHY.

ASTRONOMY, is the science of the celestial bodies; and GEOGRAPHY, is a description of the Earth. As these two sciences have, in many respects, a necessary connection, we shall take a cursory view of each.

OF ASTRONOMY.

ASTRONOMY is a science, which has been the study and admiration of the most remote ages. The true system of the universe appears to have been known in the earliest times. Pythagoras, in particular, who flourished near 500 years before Christ, was undoubtedly acquainted with the present doctrine of the planetary motions, which he is supposed to have learned during his residence with some more enlightened nations in the East. Hence this doctrine, for many ages was called the Pythagorean System. This system supposes the Earth at rest in the centre of the universe, and that the heavens revolve round it from east to west, carrying all the celestial bodies along with them, in twenty-four hours. Being consonant to appearances, it was adhered to for many ages, till happily in the year 1530, the true system was revived by Nicolaus Copernicus, a native of Thorn, in Western Prussia.

OF THE SOLAR SYSTEM.

As by the universe is to be understood the whole frame of nature, to the utmost extent of the creation, by the solar system is meant that portion only of the universe which comprehends the Sun, planets, satellites, and comets. Of this system the Sun is the centre; and there are seven planets which revolve round him, each in its path or orbit. The names of these planets, in the order of their distance from the Sun, are Mercury, Venus, the Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and the Georgian. The first two, because they move within the orbit of the Earth, are called inferior planets; and the last four, on account of their moving without that orbit, are called superior planets.

THE SUN.

The SUN, the centre of our system, the parent of the seasons, and "great delegated source of light and life," is in the form of a spheroid, higher under the equator than about the poles. His diameter is 763,000 miles, his solid bulk a million of times larger than the Earth's; and his distance from the Earth is 95,173,000 miles. This distance is so prodigious, that a cannon-ball, which moves at the rate of about eight miles in a minute, would be something more than twenty-two years and a half in going from the Earth to the Sun. A number of maculae, or dark spots, by means of a telescope, may be seen on different parts of his surface. These spots are supposed to be immense excavations in the body of the Sun. They have a motion from east to west; and as they are observed to move quicker when they are near the central regions, it follows that the Sun must be a spherical body, and revolve on his axis. The time in which he performs this revolution is twenty-five days and six hours.

THE PLANETS.

The planets are all opaque spherical bodies, and have no light of their own, but shine by means of that borrowed light which they receive from the Sun. From the regular appearance and disappearance of several remarkable dark spots, which, by means of a telescope, are constantly to be seen on their bodies, it may be demonstrated, that each has a motion round its axis, and from their seeming sometimes to be stationary, and at other times retrograde, it is equally certain, they must have a progressive motion round the Sun. As the Earth, moreover, is similar to the other six planets, it may reasonably be concluded, by analogy, that they must be designed for the same purposes, although, from their different proportions of heat and cold, it is not credible that beings of our make and temperament could live upon all of them. We now proceed to the consideration of each planet in particular.

1. MERCURY, the nearest planet to the sun, revolves round that luminary in about eighty-seven days and twenty-three hours, or little less than three of our months, which is the length of his year. Being seldom seen, however, on account of his proximity to the Sun, and no spots appearing on his disk, the time of his rotation on his axis, or the length of his days and nights is unknown. His distance from the Sun is 36,841,000 miles; his diameter 3,100, and in his annual revolution round the Sun, he moves at the rate of 105,000 miles an hour. These calculations, as well as those of the other planets which follow, are founded on astronomical observations made on the transit of Venus over the Sun, in the year 1761. Mercury seems, when viewed in different positions with a good telescope, to have all the phases or appearances of the Moon, except that he can, at no time, be seen entirely round, or quite full; because his enlightened side is never turned directly toward us, but when he is so near the Sun as to be hid in his beams.

2. VENUS, which is the brightest and in appearance the largest, of all the planets, is the next beyond Mercury. She is 68,891,000 miles from the Sun, and, by moving at the rate of 76,000 miles an hour, completes her annual revolution in 224 days and seventeen hours, or about seven months and a half. Her diameter is 7,360 miles, and her diurnal rotation on her axis is performed in twenty-four days and eight hours. When this planet appears to the west of the Sun, she rises before him in the morning, and is called the morning star; and when she appears to the east of that luminary, she shines to the evening, and is called the evening star. She is in each situation, alternately, for about 290 days; and during the whole of her revolution, appears, through a telescope, to have the various phases of the Moon.

3. The EARTH, the next planet beyond Venus, is 95,173,000 miles distant from the Sun, and by travelling at the rate of 58,000 miles an hour, performs its annual revolution in 365 days, five hours, and 49 minutes, which is the space of our year. This motion, although 120 times swifter than that of a cannon ball, is little more than half the velocity of Mercury in his orbit. The diameter of the Earth is 7,970 miles; and as it turns round its axis every twenty-four hours, from west to east, it occasions an apparent motion of all the heavenly bodies from east to west, in the same time. The line which it describes in its annual motion is called the ecliptic, and in this line it proceeds from west to east, according to the order of the signs of the zodiac. This motion is the cause of the different seasons of spring, summer, autumn, and winter, and consequently of the different length of day and night in these seasons. The rotation of the Earth on its axis in twenty-four hours, makes it day in those parts which are turned toward the Sun, and night in the parts which are turned from him. It is now received as an incontrovertible truth, that the Earth is of a spherical figure, nearly resembling that of a globe. This is evident from the voyages of several celebrated circumnavigators, who, by steering continually westward, arrived, at length, at the place whence they departed; which could never have happened, had the Earth been of any other than a spherical figure. This form is also evident from the circular appearance of the sea itself, and the circumstances which attend large objects when seen at a distance on its surface; for, when a ship is sailing from the shore, we first lose sight of the hull, afterward of the rigging, and, at last, discern the top of the mast only. This is evidently occasioned by the convexity of the water between the eye and the object; for, otherwise, the largest and most conspicuous part would be visible the longest. Another proof of the globular form of the Earth is taken from the circular form of its shadow on the face of the Moon, in the time of an eclipse. The unevennesses on the surface of the Earth, which are caused by mountains and vallies, do not afford an objection to its being considered as a circular body: for the most lofty mountains bear less proportion to the vast magnitude of the Earth, than the small risings on the coat of an orange do to the orange itself, or a grain of sand to an artificial globe of a foot in diameter. Accordingly, we find, that these trifling protuberances occasion no irregularities in the shadow of the earth, during the time of a lunar eclipse. It has been demonstrated, however, that the Earth is not a perfect globe. Sir Isaac Newton found, by mathematical calculations of the action of gravity on a revolving sphere, that the Earth must be flattened toward the poles; which hypothesis was fully confirmed by the mensuration of a degree in Lapland and France, from which it appeared, that the polar diameter of the Earth is to the equatorial as 229 is to 230; or, that the regions of the equator are elevated about thirty-five miles more than those of the poles; and that the true figure of the Earth, consequently, was that of an oblate spheroid, or a body nearly resembling an orange.

4. MARS, the next planet beyond the orbit of the Earth, is distant from the Sun 145,014,000 miles. He moves at the rate of 55,000 miles an hour, and completes his revolution round the Sun in little less than two of our years. His diameter is 5,150 miles, and his diurnal rotation on his axis is performed in twenty-four hours and thirty-nine minutes. He sometimes appears gibbous, but never horned, like the Moon; which evidently demonstrates, that his orbit includes that of the Earth, and that he shines not by any native light. This planet is diversified with spots like the Moon; and from his ruddy and obscure appearance, as well as from other circumstances, it is concluded, that his atmosphere is nearly of the same density, with that of the Earth.

5. JUPITER, the largest of all the planets, is the next in the system beyond Mars. His distance from the Sun is 494,990,000 miles. He travels at the rate of 29,000 miles an hour, and completes his annual revolution in something less than twelve of our years. His diameter is 94,100 miles; and, by a prodigious rapid motion on his axis, he performs his diurnal rotation in nine hours and fifty-six minutes. The telescopic appearance of his planet affords a vast field for the curious inquirer. It is surrounded by several faint substances, resembling belts or bands, which are parallel to the plane of its orbit. They are not regular or constant in their appearance; for sometimes one only is to be seen, and sometimes five; and, in the latter case, two of them have been known to disappear during the time of observation. This planet is also diversified with a number of large spots, which are on the brightest parts of the surface; but, like the belts, they are subject to various mutations, both in their figure and periods. His moons, or satellites, which are four in number, were discovered by Galileo, in 1610, soon after the invention of the telescope; but the belts were not discovered till near twenty years after.

6. SATURN, the next planet beyond Jupiter, is 907,956,000 miles from the Sun; and, by travelling at the rate of 22,000 miles an hour, performs his annual circuit round that luminary in about twenty-nine and a half of our years. His diameter is 77,990 miles; and he is surrounded by belts, like Jupiter, by observations on which Dr. Herschel determined, in January 1781, that his diurnal rotation is performed in ten hours and sixteen minutes. Saturn is observed to be attended by seven satellites. Of these, five were discovered in the last century; and the other two were first observed by Dr. Herschell, in 1788. A magnificent luminous ring encompasses this planet, at such a distance, that several of the stars may frequently be seen between the inward surface of the ring and the body of the planet; its distance from which is equal to its breadth, which is about 21,000 miles. This ring was discovered by Huygens, about the year 1655.

7. The GEORGIAN, the most remote planet in our system, had escaped the observation of every astronomer (at least as a planet) till the 13th of March 1781, when it was seen by Dr. Herschell, who gave it the name of Georgium Sidus, as a mark of respect to his present majesty, and to convey an idea to posterity of the time and place of the discovery. Its distance from the Sun is 1,816,455,000 miles, which is nineteen times greater than that of the Earth. Its diameter is 35,220 miles; and it revolves round the Sun at the rate of 7,000 miles an hour, in about 82 years. It shines with a faint steady light, somewhat paler and fainter than Jupiter; but its apparent diameter being only about four seconds, it can seldom be seen plainly by the naked eye, but may be easily discovered in a clear night, when above the horizon, by a good telescope. Six satellites, attending upon it have since been discovered.

INTRODUCTION.

THE SECONDARY PLANETS.

Besides the primary planets, there are eighteen others, called secondary planets, satellites, or moons, which regard their primaries as the centres of their motions, and revolve round them in the same manner as those primaries do round the Sun; namely, the Moon, which attends our Earth; the four satellites of Jupiter; the seven that belong to Saturn; and the six that attend the Georgian. From the continual change of their phases or appearances, it is evident that these also are opaque bodies, and shine only by the reflection of the light which they receive from the Sun.

The Moon, which is the constant attendant of our globe, is the most conspicuous of these satellites. She accompanies the Earth in its annual progress through the heavens, and revolves round it continually by a different motion, in the space of a month. The diameter of the Moon is 2,180 miles; her distance from the Earth 240,000 miles; and, in bulk, she is sixty times less than the Earth. The rotation of the Moon on her axis is performed exactly in the same time that she moves once round the Earth, as is evident from her always presenting the same face to us during the whole of her monthly revolution. On viewing the moon through a telescope, the hypothesis of planetary worlds receives additional confirmation. Vast cavities and asperities are observed upon various parts of her surface; exactly resembling vallies and mountains; and every other appearance seems to indicate, that she is a body of the same nature with the Earth. Dr Herschell, the superiority of whose telescopes is well known, has stated, in the Philosophical Transactions for 1787, his observations on three different volcanoes in the Moon. Several astronomers have given exact maps of the Moon, with the figure of every spot, as it appears through the best telescopes, distinguishing each of them by a proper name. One of the most remarkable circumstances attending the Moon, is the continual change of figure to which she is subject. While that half of her which is toward the Sun is illumined, the other half is dark and invisible. Hence, she disappears when she comes between the Earth and the Sun, because her dark side is then towards us. When she is gone somewhat forward we see a little of her enlightened side, which still increases to our view as she advances, until she comes to be opposite the Sun, when her entire enlightened side is toward the Earth, and she appears with a full illumined orb, which we call the Full Moon; her dark side being then turned away from the Earth. From the full she decreases gradually as she proceeds through the other half of her course; showing us less and less of her bright side, every day, till her next change or conjunction with the Sun, and then she disappears as before.

THE COMETS.

COMETS, are solid opaque bodies, of different magnitudes, like the planets. Their number is unknown; but they have been found to move round the Sun, and to cross the orbits of the planets in all manner of directions. They are principally distinguished from the planets by long ery tails, which continually issue from the side that is furthest from the Sun. The orbits, in which these vast bodies move, are exceedingly long ovals, or very eccentric ellipses, of such amazing circumferences, that in some parts of their circuit through the heavens, they approach so near the Sun as to be almost vitrified by his heat; and then go off again into the regions of infinite space, to such immense distances, as to be totally deprived of the light and heat which the rest of the planets receive from that luminary. The paths which they describe, and the laws to which they are subject, have been discovered by Newton. Their revolutions are governed throughout by the same law, of describing equal areas in equal times, which is known to regulate the motions of all the other bodies in the system.

INTRODUCTION.

OF THE FIXED STARS.

What a magnificent idea of the Creator and his works is presented in this account of the solar system! In the centre is placed the Sun, a stupendous body of fire, around whose orb, the planets, satellites, and comets, perform their revolutions with an exactness and regularity, which must fill the mind with the most sublime conceptions of their divine origin. Who can contemplate the magnitudes and distances of those vast bodies, and not be struck with the wonders of Omnipotence? But to form some idea, however imperfect, of the extent of the universe, and the more glorious works of creation, we must extend our views to those numerous and splendid orbs, which are dispersed far beyond the bounds of our solar system.

The fixed stars are distinguished from the planets by being more luminous, and by continually exhibiting that appearance which we call the twinkling of the stars. But a more remarkable property of the fixed stars (and from which they obtain their name) is their never changing their situation with regard to each other, as the planets do; for although the rotation of the Earth, on its axis, occasions an apparent diurnal motion of the whole frame of the heavens, in a contrary direction, yet any two fixed stars being observed, at distant intervals of time, will always be found to preserve the same relative position during the whole of this revolution.

The stars which are the nearest to us seem the largest, and are therefore called stars of the first magnitude, and so on as far as the sixth, which includes all the stars that are visible without a telescope; and since the invention of that instrument, their number is considered as immense. But the immensity of their number is not alone worthy of admiration; their immense distance from us, and from each other, must equally exalt our ideas of the wonders of Omnipotence, and the inconceivable extent of the creation. The nearest star to us, or that supposed to be such from being the largest in appearance, is Sirius, or the dog-star; its distance from the Sun is computed to be above 32 millions of millions of miles, which is further than a cannon ball would fly in seven millions of years.

The stars being at such immense distances from the Sun, cannot receive from him so strong a light as they seem to possess, nor even a degree of brightness sufficient to make them visible to us. They, there-

The vulgar and uninformed imagine, that all the stars were made only to give a faint glimmering light to the inhabitants of this globe, although many of these stars are so far from benefiting us that they cannot be seen without a telescope; and there are innumerable others which the eye, even by the aid of that instrument can never reach. It cannot be imagined therefore, that the omnipotent Creator who acts with infinite wisdom, and never acts in vain, should have created so many glorious suns fitted for so many important purposes, and placed at such distances from each other without suitable objects sufficiently near them to be benefited by their influence. On the contrary, it is reasonable to conclude, that they were created for the same purposes with our Sun; to bestow light, heat, and vegetation, on a certain number of planets revolving round them. And, from analogy we may infer, that all these innumerable systems are with equal wisdom contrived for the accommodation of rational inhabitants; perhaps of still higher orders of intelligent beings, all capable, in the different scales of existence, of a perpetual progression in knowledge and virtue, in perfection and felicity.

DESCRIPTION OF THE ARTIFICIAL SPHERE.

ON the convex part of the terrestrial globe, which is an artificial spherical body, is truly represented the whole world, as it consists of land and water. The circumference of the globe is divided into 360 degrees, every degree containing 60 geographic miles; consequently the globe is 21,600 such miles round: but as 60 geographic miles are about 69 miles English measure, the circuit of the globe is therefore 24,840 English miles. The circles represented on the globe are, 1. The Equator, and the circles parallel to it. 2. The Meridian, and the rest of the meridional lines. 3. The Horizon. 4. The Ecliptic. 5. The two Tropics; and 6. The two Polar Circles.

The EQUATOR, or EQUINOCTIAL, is a great circle, ninety degrees distant from the poles of the world, and so named, because it divides the world into two equal parts: that in which the arctic pole is found, is called the northern half; and that in which the antarctic pole is placed, is the southern half. It is divided into 360 degrees, or 180 degrees east, and the same west, from the first meridian, which on English globes passes through London; and its principal use is to show the longitude of any place, east or west, from such first meridian. When the Sun is in this circle, there is an equality of days and nights all over the world: hence these points are called the equinoxes.

The MERIDIAN is a great circle supposed to pass through the poles of the world and those of the horizon, cutting the sphere into two equal parts, the one oriental, and the other occidental. It also passes through the zenith and the nadir in every place, and cuts the horizon at right angles. It is called the Meridian, because it marks half the space of time during which the Sun and stars appear above the horizon. As there is an in-nite number of zeniths and horizons; the number of Meridians is also infinite; for the Meridian is changed, as well as the zenith and horizon every step we take toward the east or west; but if we pass in a right line northward or southward, we still continue under the same Meridian, though we constantly change the zenith and horizon. However, geographers only reckon 360 Meridians, which are supposed to pass through every degree of the equinoctial. It has been customary for geographers to establish a first Meridian; though this is altogether arbitrary: Ptolemy placed it at the island of Ferro, which is the most western of the Canaries; but the common method, at present, is for every geographer to make the Meridian of the capital of his country the First Meridian; and, accordingly, the longitudes in this Dictionary are reckoned east or west from the Meridian of London. The use of the brass Meridian of a globe is to show when it is noon or midnight at the place to which it is applied; and also to find the latitude of places, north or south from the equator.

The ECLIP TIC is a great circle that cuts the equator obliquely, and represents that path in the heavens which the sun seems to describe by the Earth's annual course round it. It is divided into 12 parts, called signs, and each of those into 30 more, called degrees, corresponding to the 12 months and the days of the month.

The HORIZON is a great circle, which divides the world into two equal parts or hemispheres, of which one is superior and visible, and the other inferior and invisible. When the Sun is above this circle it is then day, and when it is sunk 18 degrees beneath it, night then commences. This circle is of wood, and the brass meridian is inclosed therein with all the rest of the sphere: it is also immoveable, and on it are marked the degrees of the 12 signs of the ecliptic, and the days of the 12 months of the year.

The TROPICS are two small circles parallel to the equinoctial, described by the first points of the first degrees of the signs termed Cancer and Capricorn, that is, where they touch the ecliptic. They are distant from the equinoctial very near 23 degrees and a half. The Sun describes these Tropics about the 20th of June, and the 21st day of December. When he touches the Tropic of Cancer, he makes the longest day for the inhabitants between the equator and the north pole; and when he comes to the beginning of Capricorn, he makes the longest day for the people between the equator and the south pole. On the contrary, the shortest day to the former will be when the Sun touches the Tropic of Capricorn, and to the latter when he comes to the Tropic of Cancer. For this reason, those points are called the winter and the summer Tropics, or the southern and northern; and they are as it were the two barriers, beyond which the Sun never passes.

The POLAR CIRCLES are distinguished by the names of the arctic and antarctic, or the north and the south, and are circles parallel to the equinoctial. They are termed Polar, because they are near the poles of the world, being only 23 degrees and a half from each pole.

The Map of the World, at the beginning of this book represents the globe, taken out of its horizon, cut through, turned up and squeezed flat. The circles bounding the projection, represent the brass meridian; and the curve lines running across at every 10 degrees, show the latitude, north or south from the equator. The top and bottom are the north and south poles; and the curve lines uniting them, are the other meridians on the globe, which are drawn at every 10 degrees on the equator, and show the longitude, east or west, from the meridian of London. The equator or equinoctial is the straight line running across the meridians exactly in the middle. The tropics and polar circles are delineated at their proper distances on each side toward the north and south.

OF THE ZONES.

The ZONES are five broad spaces encompassing the globe, and are distinguished chiefly by the temperature of the air. The torrid Zone contains all the space between the two tropics, and is so called from its excessive heat, the Sun being vertical twice every year to all that inhabit it. This circle is about 47 degrees broad. The two temperate Zones are so called from their lying between the two extreme degrees of heat and cold, viz. between the torrid Zone and the frigid Zones, the one being called the Northern temperate Zone, and the other the Southern temperate Zone. These are both 43 degrees broad. Of the two frigid Zones, the one encompasses the arctic or north pole, and extends to the distance of 23 degrees and a half from it; and the other, the antarctic or south pole, to the same distance.

OF THE CLIMATES.

A CLIMATE is a space of the Earth comprehended between two parallels, at the end of which the length of the longest days are increased half an hour in the summer season. The better to understand this we must observe, that under the equator the longest day is no more than twelve hours, and that in proportion as we advance toward the polar circle, the days of each climate increase half an hour, till we arrive at the polar circles; for then the longest days consist of 24 hours. Thus there are 24 Climates in all, on each side of the equator. It is easy to know in what Climate a city is, by observing the longest day; as for instance, at London, where the days are 16 hours long we need only subtract 12 from the number, and there will remain four; then multiply this by two, and you will have eight, which is the Climate of London. The same may be done on any other Climate.

OF THE POINTS OF THE COMPASS.

The Earth may be considered, with regard to the four cardinal Points which are the north, south, east, and west; and all the points included between them may have respect to a particular place. By this means we know the situation of the different countries of the world, with regard to each other; for some are oriental or toward the east, with regard to those that are occidental, or lie westerly of them. Thus Ireland is to the west of England, Poland is to the east of Germany, and Africa is to the south of Europe. We may easily distinguish the points that lie between those that are cardinal; thus, though Spain is to the south of France, yet it likewise lies to the westward thereof: but as they do not lie exactly south or west of each other, Spain may be said to lie southwest of France; and for the same reason, on the contrary, France will be northeast with regard to Spain. The like may be said of any two other countries.

OF THE TERMS USED IN GEOGRAPHY.

The word Geography comes from the Greek, and signifies a description of the Earth. By the Earth is meant the terraqueous globe composed of land and water, and it is commonly called the terrestrial globe. Chorography is the description of a country, province, or county; as, for instance, Dorsetshire. Topography is the description of a particular place, as a town and the like. Hydrography is a description of the water, such as oceans, seas, and lakes.

As the Earth may be represented either in the whole, or in part, it forms the difference between geographical charts or maps, which, however, may be reduced to two kinds; namely, general and particular. Among the former is the map of the world, or planisphere, which shows the two surfaces of the whole terrestrial globe, cut in two by the meridian passing through the equinoxes; as also the maps which describe some principal part of the globe; such as Europe, Asia, or Africa; and even kingdoms; as Sweden, Spain, or Great Britain. However, those maps may be called particular, which represent any particular country; but they are more properly such as give an account only of a part, as Naples in Italy, Normandy in France, and Staffordshire in England.

After all, nothing can give a better or more general idea of the Earth than a globe, because it is of the same shape and figure; but as it is impossible to make one large enough to shew every part of the land and sea distinctly, there is a necessity of having recourse to general and particular maps.

Geography, as well as other arts and sciences, has terms proper to itself; some of which have relation to the land, and others to the water:

A Continent is a large part of land that comprehends several countries not separated by any sea: thus Europe is a continent.

An Island, or Isle, is a portion of land entirely surrounded by water.

A Peninsula, or Chersonesus, is a quantity of land which is joined to a continent only by a neck of the same, it being every where else encompassed with water; as the peninsula of the Crimea.

An Isthmus, or neck of land, is that part by which a peninsula is joined to the land; as the isthmus of Suez.

A Promontory is a high part of land, which projects into the sea, and is commonly called a Cape, when it appears like a mountain; but when the advanced part has little elevation, it is termed a Point. Thus the Cape of Good Hope is a mountainous promontory.

An Ocean is a large collection of waters surrounding a considerable part of the continent; such as the Atlantic and Northern Oceans.

A Sea is a smaller collection of waters, when understood in a strict sense, as the Irish Sea; but, in general, every part of the ocean may be called the sea; and it is still more general, when the terraqueous globe is said to consist of land and sea.

INTRODUCTION.

XXV

A Channel is a narrow sea, confined between an island and a continent, or between two islands; as the English Channel, and St. George's Channel.

A Gulf is a part of the sea surrounded by land, except in one part, where it communicates with the ocean; as the Gulf of Bengal, the Gulf of Florida; and yet these are more properly seas than the Mediterranean, the Baltic, and the Black Seas, which properly speaking, are gulfs, as well as the Gulf of Venice.

A Bay is said to differ from a gulf, only in being less, and more narrow at the entrance than within; but this is far from being true; for a bay has a wider entrance in proportion than a gulf, and it may be also larger than some gulfs; as for instance, the Bay of Biscay, though it must be acknowledged that bays in general are much smaller.

A Creek is a small inlet, and is always much less than a bay.

A Road is a place upon any coast where there is a good anchorage, and where vessels, in some sense, are sheltered from the wind.

A Strait is a narrow passage which joins two seas, two gulfs, or a sea and a gulf; such as the Sound, near the Baltic; and the Straits of Gibraltar, between the Atlantic Ocean and the Mediterranean Sea.

A Lake is a collection of standing water surrounded by land, having no visible communication with the sea. Thus the Caspian Sea is truly and properly a lake. Smaller lakes are those of Lagoda, Gopava, and several others.

DESCRIPTION OF A MAP.

The top of most modern Maps is considered as the north, the bottom as the south, the right hand as the east, and the left hand as the west. In old Maps, where this rule is not always strictly followed, a flower de luce is generally placed on some part of it, pointing toward the north, by which the other points are easily known.

On the top of the Map, between the marginal lines, are placed the several figures, which show the number of degrees of eastern or western longitude of every place that is directly under those figures. At the bottom of most Maps are placed the same figures as those at the top; but in Maps of the best sort, instead thereof are placed the number of hours or minutes every place in it lies distant, east or west, from its chief town or first meridian. For instance, every place which is situate one degree east of another, will appear to have the Sun four minutes of time before it; and any one place, situate one degree west of another, will appear to have the Sun four minutes of time after it. Again, a place situate fifteen degrees east of us, as Naples, will appear to have the Sun one complete hour before us at London; and any place situate fifteen degrees west of us, as the island of Madeira, will appear to have the Sun one hour after us at London.

On the right and left hand of every Map, between the marginal lines, are placed figures that shew the number of degrees, either north or south latitude which every place parallel with them is distant from the equator. Thus London is situate 51 degrees 30 minutes of north latitude; that is, it is so many degrees and minutes north from the equator. Over most Maps are drawn lines from the top to the bottom, and from the

A, a river of Dutch Brabant, which waters Helmont, and falls into the Dommel, a little above Bois-le-duc.

Aa, a river of the United Provinces, which waters Zwoil, and enters the Vecht, opposite Hasselt.

Aa, a small river of Germany in Westphalia, which rises near Munster, waters that city, and falls into the Emba.

Aa, a river that rises in the department of Somme in France, becomes navigable near St. Omer, passes on to Gravelines, where it falls into the German ocean.

Aa, a river of Courland, that rises in Samojitia, and falls into the gulf of Riga.

Aa, a river of Swisserland, which rises in the valley of Engelberg, crosses Underwalden, from S to N, and falls into the Waldstätter Sea. Near the abbey of Engelberg, it has a noble cataract.

Aar, a large river of Swisserland, which issues from a lake, near Mount Saalberg, in the S of the canton of Bern, and running N W through the whole extent of the lakes of Brients and Thun to Bern, takes a circuitous course to Soleure, whence it flows E to Arburg, and N E to Brug, below which it is joined by the Reufs and Abulak, a town in Siberia, two miles from Tobolsk; famous for an image of the Virgin, constantly visited by a great number of pilgrims; the clergy carry it every year in procession to Tobolsk. Lon. 68 20 E, lat. 58 11 N.

Abano, a village five miles S W of Padua, in Italy, famous for warm baths. In one called Bagno di Fango, the patients are covered with the warm mud, in hopes of a cure.

Abara, a town in the Greater Armenia, under the dominion of the Turks.

Abaraner, a town of Armenia, where the archbishop of Nakhivan often resides: he is an Armenian, and yet there are 300 Roman Catholics said to be in this place. It is 20 miles N of Nakhivan. Lon. 63 59 E, lat. 39 0 N.

Abascia, or Abas, a country in Asia, tributary to the Turks, situated on the coast of the Black sea. The people are poor, thievish and treacherous. Their commodities are furs, buck and tiger skins, linen yarn, box-wood, and bees-wax; but their greatest traffic is in selling their own children, and even one another to the Turks.

Abaskaja, a town of Siberia, on the river Isehim. The church is surrounded by a rampart and palisades, and garrisoned by dragoons. Lon. 69 5 E, lat. 50 10 N.

Abassus, a town of the Greater Phrygia in Asia.

Abbeville, the principal town of Abbeville county, South Carolina; seated on the N W side of St. John's creek, 25 miles N W of Cambridge, 120 W of Columbia, and 229 N W of Charleston. Here is a post office, and the seat of the county courts.

Abbeville, a town of France, in the department of Somme and late province of Picardy, seated in a pleasant valley, where the Somme divides into several branches, and separates the town into two parts. A manufacture of woollen cloth was set up here in 1665; they also make sail-cloth, coarse linen, and black and green soap. It is 52 miles S of Calais, and 80 N by W of Paris. Abbots-Bromley, called also Pageta-Bromley, a town of Staffordshire, with a market on Tuesday. It is six miles E of Stafford, and 129 N W of London. Lon. 1 53 W, lat. 52 51 N.

Abbotsbury, a town in Dorsetshire, where there is a famous swannery. It has a market on Thursday, and is seven miles S W of Dorchester, and 127 W by S of London. Lon. 2 42 W, lat. 50 38 N.

Abbots-Langley, a village in Herts, four miles S W of St. Alban's, famous for being the birth-place of Nicholas Breakspare, who, under the name of Adrian IV. was the only Englishman that ever became pope.

Abbotsfrown, a post town in York county, Pennsylvania, seven miles N of Hanover, 18 S W of York (the county town) and 93 N of the city of Washington.

Abenrade, a town of Denmark in Sleswick, in a territory of its own name. It is a flourishing place, and seated on a spacious bay of the Baltic, surrounded on three sides by high mountains. Lon. 9 14 E, lat. 55 6 N.

Abensburg, a town of Germany in the circle of Bavaria, on the river Abens, near the Danube, 15 miles S W of Ratibon. Lon. 11 55 E, lat. 48 46 N.

Aberavon, a town of Glamorganshire, seated at the mouth of the Avon, 19 miles N W of Cowbridge, and 195 W of London. Lon. 3 48 W, lat. 51 35 N.

Aberbratwick, or Arbrath, a royal borough of Angushire. It is a flourishing place, well built and still increasing. The town has been in an improving state for the last 40 years, and the number of inhabitants has greatly augmented; which is owing to the introduction of manufactures. The inhabitants principally consist of weavers of osnaburghs and sailcloth; others are employed in white and coloured threads. The glory of this place was the abbey, whose stupendous and magnificent ruins give some idea of its former magnificence. It was founded in 1178, by William the Lion, and dedicated to the celebrated Thomas a Becket. It is 15 miles N E of St. Andrews, and 40 N N E of Edinburgh. Lon. 2 39 W, lat. 56 36 N.

Aberdeen, Old, a city in Aberdeenshire, about a mile to the north of the new, at the mouth of the river Don, over which is a fine Gothic bridge of a single arch, greatly admired, which rests at both sides on two rocks. The old town was the seat of the bishop, and had a large cathedral, commonly called St. Machers. Two very antique spires and one aisle, which is used as a church, are now the only remains of it.

But the capital building is the Kings-col-

Aberdeen, New, a handsome city in Aberdeenshire, for largeness, trade, and beauty it greatly exceeds any town in the north of Scotland. It is built on a rising ground, and lies on a small bay formed by the Dee, over which about two miles from the town is an elegant bridge of seven arches. The buildings, which are of granite from the neighbouring quarries, are generally four stories high, and have for the most part gardens behind them, which give it a beautiful appearance. On the high street is a large church, which formerly belonged to the Franciscans. In the middle of Castle street is an octagon building with neat bas relievos of the kings of Scotland from James I. to James VII. The town-house makes a good figure, and has a handsome spire in the centre. The grammar school is a low but neat building. Gordon's hospital is handsome; in front is a good statue of the founder; it maintains 40 boys, who are apprenticed at proper ages. The infirmary is a large plain building, and sends out between 8 and 900 cured patients annually. But the chief public building in the new town is the Marischal college, founded by earl Marischal in 1593. In both colleges the languages, mathematics, natural philosophy, divinity, &c. are taught by very able professors. The harbour, which was formerly very dangerous, is defended by a pier, erected some years ago; this pier is 1200 feet in length, and gradually increases in height and thickness, as it approaches the sea, where the head or rounding is 60 feet diameter at the base, and the perpendicular elevation is 38 feet.
It was built under the direction of Mr.
Smeaton, and cost upwards of 17,000l.
Beside the coasting trade, vessels are sent hence to Norway, Holland, Portugal, Sweden, Spain, and Italy, and to the northern states of Europe. The principal manufacture is stockings. The thread manufacture is likewise carried to great perfection. A manufactory of sailcloth and ofenburghs has lately been established.
They have likewise excellent salmon fish-has a handsome townhall for the assizes, &c. and two churches. The town consists of several well built streets, which centre in a spacious corn-market; and great quantities of malt are made here, and sent in barges to London. It sends two members to parliament, and is six miles and a half S of Oxford, and 56 W of London. Lon. 1 12 W, lat. 51 42 N.

Abingdon, a post town, and the principal seat of justice in Washington county, Virginia; situated on the W side of Holstein river, 58 miles S W of Wythe court-house, 300 W of Richmond the capital of the state, and 24 N E of Blountsville in Tennessee.

Abul, a town of Beira in Portugal, containing upwards of 1300 inhabitants. Lon. 7 10 W, lat. 40 20 N.

Abbas, one of the seven nations in the countries comprehended between the Black Sea and the Caspian. Their principal and most ancient establishments are on the southern slope of the mountains comprehended between the river Cuban and the Black Sea. They are tributary to the Turks, and are divided into two governments, the western and the eastern; each subject to a bashaw, commonly chosen out of the principal native families; one of whom resides at Sotchukkale, and the other at Soghunkale. The Abkhas speak an original language, essentially different from all the known languages, though appearing to have a very remote affinity to that of the Circassians. They have, at present, very little religion, although they still preserve some traces of Christianity. Their capital is Anacopir formerly Nicopis.

Ablay, a country in Great Tartary, subject to the Russians; but their chief is a Calmuck prince. Lon. from 72 to 83 E, lat. 51 to 54 N.

Africa, bounded on the N by Nubia; on the E by the Red Sea and Dancala; on the W by Gorcham and part of Gingira; and on the S by Gingia and Alaba; lying between 6 and 20 N lat. and 26 and 40 E lon. It is about 900 miles long and 800 broad. The rainy season continues from April to September, which is succeeded, without interval, by a cloudless sky, and a vertical sun. Cold nights as immediately follow these scorching days. The earth, notwithstanding these days, is perpetually so cold, as to feel disagreeable to the soles of the feet; partly owing to the six months rain, when no sun appears, and partly to perpetual equality of nights and days. There is no country in the world that produces a greater variety of quadrupeds, both wild and tame; but there are no tigers. The hyenas, however, are very numerous, and dreadful in their ravages. Beside many species of eagles, vultures, &c. there is a species of glede, called had-dayan, which is very frequent in Egypt, and comes punctually into Abyssinia, at the return of the sun, after the tropical rains; and forsks cover the plains in May, when the rains become constant: there are few owls; but these are of an immense size and beauty. The most remarkable insect is the Tsfaltal or fly, which is so fatal to cattle, that in some particular countries, great emigrations are obliged to take place in the beginning of the rainy season, to prevent all their stock of cattle from being destroyed. Even the camel must yield to this insect, for when once attacked, his body, head, and legs, break out into large boils, which swell, break, and putrefy, to the certain destruction of the animal. According to Mr. Bruce, the celebrated river Nile has its source in this country, near the village of Geela, in lon. 36 55 E, and lat. 10 59 N. Gondar is the metropolis. There is a remarkable coincidence between the customs in the court of ancient Persia and those of Abyssinia. The religion of the country is a mixture of Judaism and of the Christianity of the Greek church; and the language is Ethiopic, which bears a great affinity to the Arabic.

Acadia. See Nova Scotia.

Acambou, a kingdom on the coast of Guinea, in Africa, whose king is absolute, and all his subjects slaves; which, however, does not prevent them from being haughty and insolent.

Acham, a country in Asia, bounded on the N by Boutan, on the E by China, on the S by Burmah, and on the W by Hindoostan.

Acheen, a kingdom in the N W part of the island of Sumatra, now very different from earlier times, when it was powerful enough to expel the Portuguese from the island, and its sovereigns received embassies from some of the greatest potentates of Europe. Achem is comparatively healthy, being more free from woods and swamps than most other parts of the island. The soil is light and fertile and produces fine fruits, rice, cotton, gold dust, and sulphur. The Achinese differ from the other Sumatrans and are, in general, taller, stouter, and much darker complexioned. They are more active and industrious than their neighbours, and have more sagacity and penetration. They are Mahometans.

Abeen, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in Sumatra, seated on a river which flows into the sea, near the N W point of the island, about two miles from the mouth; it lies in a wide valley, formed like an amphitheatre by two lofty ranges of hills. The river, by emptying itself in several channels, is very shallow at the bar. It is an open town, in the centre of which is the king's palace, a rude piece of architecture, designed to resist the force of an enemy, and surrounded for that purpose by a wide and deep moat, and strong walls. The houses are built of bamboos and rough timbers, and are raised some feet from the ground, on account of the place being overflowed in the rainy season. A large manufacture of a thick species of cotton-cloth, and of stuff for the short drawers worn by the Malays and Acheneſe, is established here. Payments are commonly made in gold dust, which is carried about in bladders. The Acheneſe are expert and bold navigators. The laws of the Acheneſe are very severe, but the poor suffer chiefly by their severity. Petty theft is punished by suspending the offender from a tree, with a gun, or heavy weight, tied to his feet; or by cutting off a finger, hand, or leg, according to the nature of the theft. Many of these mutilated people are to be seen daily in the streets. Highway-robbers and housebreakers are drowned; and their bodies are exposed, a few days, on a stake; but if a priest be robbed, the offender is burnt alive. An adulterer is not screened by his friends, but is delivered up to the relations of the husband, who take him to a large plain, and forming themselves into a circle, place him in the middle; a large weapon is then delivered to him by one of his family, and if he can force his way through, he is not liable to further prosecution; but he is generally cut in pieces in an instant; and his relations bury him as they would a dead buffalo, refusing to admit the corpse into their house, or to perform any funeral rites. Yet, after all, the Acheneſe are supposed to be the most dishonest and flagitious people in the East. Acheneſe is 1000 miles S E of Madras. Lon. 95 34 E, lat. 9 22 N.

Achim, a large town of Upper Egypt, on the eastern bank of the Nile. Though this town be fallen from its ancient splendor, it is still one of the most beautiful of Upper Egypt. An Arab prince commands there, and the police is well attended to. The streets are wide and clean, and commerce and agriculture flourish. It has a manu-Acron, a territory on the Gold coast of Guinea. The Dutch have a fort here called fort Patience: and under it is the village, inhabited only by fishermen. The other inhabitants are husbandmen, and sell their corn to other countries. There is plenty of game, which is very commodious for the Dutch factory. This is called Little Acron, Great Acron being further inland, and a kind of republic.

Acrotori, a town in the island of Santorini. Lon. 26 1 E, lat. 36 25 N.

Adon, East, a village six miles W of London, noted for its medicinal waters.

Adon-Burnel, a village in Shropshire, eight miles from Shrewsbury. A parliament was held here in the reign of Edward I. when the lords sat in the castle, and the commons in a barn, which is still standing. A great part of the castle remains, the walls exceedingly strong, and adorned with fine battlements and rows of windows curiously carved; it must have been a magnificent structure.

Adam's Pike, a high mountain in the island of Ceylon; on the top of which they believe the first man was created.

Africa, one of the four principal parts of the world; bounded on the N by the Mediterranean; on the W by the Atlantic; on the E by the isthmus of Suez, the Red Sea, and the Indian Ocean; and on the S by the southern Ocean. It is a peninsula of prodigious extent, being joined to Asia by the isthmus of Suez, which is 60 miles over. In its greatest length, from the most northerly part to the Cape of Good Hope, it is 4600 miles; and in the broadest part from Cape Verd to Cape Guardafui, it is 3500. The greatest part of it is within the torrid Zone, which renders the heat almost insupportable in many places. However, the coasts in general are very fruitful, the fruits excellent, and the plants extraordinary. There are more wild beasts in Africa, than in any other part of the world: there are also some animals peculiar to this country; as the hippopotamus, or river horse; the rhinoceros, with two horns on its nose; and the beautiful striped zebra. Beside these, they have crocodiles, ostriches, camels, and many other animals not to be met with in Europe. There are several deserts, particularly one of a large extent, called Zahara, which is almost without water; but these are not quite without inhabitants. There are many large rivers; but the chief are the Nile, Niger, Senegal and Gambia, the two last having been falsely supposed branches of the Niger. The most considerable mountains are the Atlas, the Mountains of the Moon, and the Sierra Leone, or the Mountains of the

A G A

Lions. The inhabitants consist of Pagans, Mahometans, and Christians. The first, which possess the greatest part of the country, from the Tropic of Cancer to the Cape of Good Hope, are the most numerous, and are generally black. The Mahometans, who are tawny, possess Egypt and the coast of Barbary. The people of Abyssinia are denominated Christians, but retain many Pagan and Jewish rites. In the N of Africa are some Jews, who manage all the little trade of that part of the country. The principal divisions of Africa are Barbary, Egypt, Biledulgerid, Zahara, Negroland, Guinea, Bornou, Cashna, Fezzan, Scenna, Nubia, Abyssinia, Abex, Congo, Angola, Benguela, Mataman, Zanguehar, Monomotapa, Monomugi, Sofala, Caffraria, and the country of the Hottentots. In 1788, an association was formed for the purpose of exploring the interior regions of Africa; and Mr. Ledyard and Mr. Lucas were selected as their missionaries. Mr. Ledyard died on his journey. Mr. Lucas was prevented from pursuing the plan sketched out for him, and was obliged to content himself with such imperfect information as his guides could give him. In 1795, the African association despatched Mr. Park to explore this immense continent. His journey has brought to our knowledge more important facts respecting the geography of Africa than the accounts of any former traveller. He has pointed out to us the sources of the great rivers, the Senegal, Gambia, and Niger; the course of this last he has determined to be from W to E, and thus set this much disputed point for ever at rest.

Ailisbury, the largest and most populous town in Buckinghamshire, with a market on Saturday. It consists of several streets though the houses are not very contiguous; these lie about the market place, in the middle of which is a convenient hall, in which this town shares the assizes with Buckingham. It is also the centre of the business of the vale of Ailisbury, which occupies the centre of the county, and is one of the most fertile tracts in England. The inhabitants of this town, and its neighbourhood, supply the London market with early ducklings. They carry this trade to such an extent, that it is said, 30000 have been received at Ailisbury from London in six weeks, for that article. This town sends two members to parliament; and is 16 miles S E of Buckingham, and 41 N W of London. Lon. 0 42 W, lat. 51 50 N.

Ailsa, a great insulated rock, to the S of the isle of Arran, in Scotland. Its base is two miles in circumference. It consists of a stupendous assemblage of precipitous cliffs, rising in a wild series, forming a pyramidal mountain, 900 feet high, accessible only on the N E. The lower parts are inhabited by goats and rabbits, and the lofty summits are the refuge of innumerable sea fowls. The depth of water at the base is from 7 to 48 fathoms. The ruins of a chapel, and of a castle, are still seen; and within 30 yards of the latter is a spring of fresh water.

fort of this island. It is 12 miles N W of Rochefort. Lon. 1 5 W, lat. 46 5 N.

Aix-la-chapelle, a free and imperial city of Westphalia. The emperor Charlemagne chose this place for his residence on account of its beauty. He is interred in the church of Notre Dame, where they keep his sword and helm, and the Four Evangelists, written in letters of gold, which are made use of at the coronation of the emperors. Its famous mineral waters draw a great number of persons every year. In 1668 and 1748, it was distinguished by two celebrated treaties of peace. The French took it in 1792; it was retaken by the Austrians in 1793, and again taken by the French in 1794.

Alban's, St. an ancient borough of Herts, on the river Coln, so called from St. Alban, who was the first martyr in England, and was buried on a hill in the neighbourhood. In memory of St. Alban, Offa, king of the Mercians, erected an abbey here, calling it St. Alban's. Edward VI. incorporated the town, which is governed by a mayor, high steward, recorder, 12 aldermen, &c. Here are three churches, beside the ancient one that belonged to the monastery, which the inhabitants purchased of Edward VI for 400l. and is now a parish church. The shrine of St. Alban stood in the east part; and in the pavement are to be seen six holes, in which the supporters of it were fixed. The church of the abbey is remaining to this day. In 1703 a tomb was discovered in this church said to be that of Humphrey duke of Gloucester; when the leaden coffin was opened, the body was pretty entire, being preserved in a sort of pickle. Not a vestige beside this church, remains of the abbey, except the gate-way. In the church of St. Michael is the monument of the illustrious Francis Bacon, viscount St. Alban's. In the centre of the town stood one of the magnificent crosses, erected by Edward I, in honour of his queen Eleanor; and a building erected in its stead, in 1703, still retains the name of the Cross. Near the town, is a kind of fortification, supposed by some to be the camp of Ostorius, the Roman proprator; but others imagine it to have been the site of the Saxon royal palace at Kingsbury. St. Alban's is famous for the victory obtained by Richard duke of York, in 1455, over Henry VI; and for a victory which queen Margaret gained in 1461, over the earl of Warwick. This town rose from the ruins of the ancient city of Verulam, nothing of which remains except the old walls. The market is on Wednesday and Saturday. St. Alban's sends two members to parliament; and is 21 miles N by W of London. Lon. 0 14 W, lat. 51 45 N.

A L B

Albany, a fortress belonging to the British, on the S W of Hudson's Bay. Lon. 81 20 W, lat. 52 20 N.

Albany, the chief town of Albany county, New York, and lately became the seat of state government. It is situated on the W side of Hudson river, 160 miles N of the city of New York and 340 S of Quebec, in the lat. of 42 36 N, and long. of 73 20 W of London. At the last enumeration in 1800 it contained 860 dwelling houses and 5309 inhabitants, one tenth of whom were slaves. The whites are a mixture of many nations, but a great proportion are the descendants of the early Dutch settlers.—The city stands on the side of Fort Orange, a fortification erected by the Hollanders in 1623; and is nearly as ancient as New York. It was incorporated by Governor Dougan in 1686, and is now under the jurisdiction of a mayor, aldermen and assistants.—The situation for trade is admirable, being surrounded by a fertile country and navigable waters, and has become the staple of a very extensive domestic commerce. The population increases rapidly, having gained 1800 persons in the last ten years.—The houses are mostly constructed on the margin of the river, many of them in the old Dutch fashion, with the gable ends turned to the streets; though those lately built are in a superior style. It is well supplied with wholesome water, conducted through pipes from a spring five miles distant.—The trade supports one bank of discount and deposit with approved reputation.—The principal public edifices are a hospital, city-hall, a jail, and six or seven houses for religious worship, some of which are handsomely constructed.

Albarain, a town of Spain, in Arragon, with a bishop's see, seated on the Guadalavir, 100 miles E of Madrid. It is an ancient and strong place, its wool is the best in Arragon. Lon. 1 16 W, lat. 40 30 N.

Albuquerque, a town of Spain, in Estramadura, defended by an almost impregnable castle. It carries on a great trade in wool and cloth, and is 22 miles S W of Alcantara. Lon. 7° 3' W, lat. 38° 50' N.

Alby, an ancient town of France, lately the capital of the territory of the Albigeois in Languedoc, and an archiepiscopal see. It is situated in the department of Tarn, and contains 10,000 inhabitants. In point of architecture and decorations, the principal church is one of the most curious in France. The inhabitants were called Albigenes; and were the first that disputed the authority of the pope; they were condemned by a council here in 1176. It has 4 gates through which you may view all the beauties of a delightful plain, which produces all kinds of grain, excellent wines, flax, hemp, saffron, aniseed, coriander, and wood. The fine pastures afford wool of a good quality, which is manufactured into knit stockings for the soldiers, rattens of all colours, shalloons, coarse woollens, &c. The wax candles of Alby are equal in whiteness to those of Maas. This town is 42 miles N E of Toulouse, and 335 S of Paris. Lon. 2° 14' E, lat. 44° 15' N.

Alcala-de-Guadaira, a town of Andalusia, in Spain, seated on the river Guadaira, five miles S E of Seville. Lon. 5° 16' W, lat. 37° 28' N.

Alcala-de-Henares, a large handsome town of Spain, in New Castile, with a famous university, a fine library, and a castle. It is seated on the river Henarez, 15 miles E N E of Madrid. Lon. 3° 6' W, lat. 40° 26' N.

Alcala-de-Real, a town of Spain, in Andalusia with a famous monastery; seated near the river Salado, six miles S of Seville. Lon. 5° 22' W, lat. 37° 38' N.

Alcama, a handsome town of the United Provinces, in N Holland. In the environs, they make the best butter and cheese in Holland, and have the finest tulips. It is 17 miles N by W of Amsterdam. Lon. 4° 44' E, lat. 52° 40' N.

Alcamo, a town of Sicily, in the valley of Mazaro, at the foot of Mount Bonifati. Lon. 13° 52' E, lat. 38° 2' N.

Alcantara, a small but strong town of Spain, in Estramadura, and the chief place of the knights of that name. It has a magnificent bridge over the Tajo, built by Trajan. It was taken by the earl of Galway in 1706, but retaken the same year. It is 42 miles N by W of Seville. It gives name to one of the three orders of knighthood. Lon. 6° 7' W, lat. 39° 20' N.

Alcantara, a town of Spain, in Andalusia. Lon. 5° 10' W, lat. 37° 40' N.

Alcassar, a city of Barbary in the kingdom of Fez. It was formerly a city of great note, but is now fallen into decay, so that of fifteen mosques there are only two that they make use of. Lon. 12° 35' W, lat. 35° 15' N.

Alcaran, a town of Spain, in La Mancha, defended by a strong castle and has a remarkable ancient aqueduct; it is situate near the source of the Guadalquivir, 135 miles S E of Madrid. Lon. 3° 5' W, lat. 38° 28' N.

Alcaraz, a town of Spain in New Castile, on the river Guadama. It has a fortress on a high hill, and lies in a very fruitful country, 100 miles N W of Carthage. Lon. 4° 20' W, lat. 38° 15' N.

Alcaraz Leguer, a town in the kingdom of Fez, seated on the straits of Gibraltar. It was taken by Alphonso, king of Portugal, in 1468; but soon after abandoned. Lon. 5° 30' W, lat. 35° 0' N.

Alcanar-de-Sal, a town of Portugal, in Estramadura, with a castle reckoned impregnable. They make fine white salt here, whence the town takes its name. It is seated on the river Cadoan, 15 miles from the sea, and 35 S E of Lisbon. Lon. 9° 0' W, lat. 38° 18' N.

Alcazar, a city in the United Provinces, about 4 miles from the sea, 15 from Haerlem, and 18 from Amsterdam. In 1799 it was taken by the British in their unfortunate expedition to Holland, who were forced soon after to abandon it.

Alconclon, a castle of Spain, on the frontiers of Estramadura, seated on the river Alcarague, that falls into the Guadiana, 20 miles S by W of Badajoz. Lon. 6° 58' W, lat. 38° 12' N.

Alcoutim, a small town of Portugal, in Algarva, seated on the river Guadiana, 16 miles from its entrance into the gulf of Cadiz, and 22 N N E of Tavira. Lon. 7° 20' W, lat. 37° 20' N.

Aldbury, a village in Wiltshire, on a healthy hill, two miles from Salisbury, and near the Avon. It carries on a manufacture of suitians, and received considerable damage by a fire in 1777, when 200 houses were destroyed.

Alderholm, a pleasant island of Sweden, formed by the three arms of a river, running through Gentle, a town of Norland, in Sweden. A considerable trade is carried on here in planks and deals.

Alderney, an island in the English Channel; it is eight miles in compass separated from the coast of Normandy by a strait called the Race of Alderney, which is a very dangerous passage, on account of the rocks under water. It is a healthful island, and fruitful in corn and pasture; but has only one church, in a town of the same name. Lon. 2 7 W, lat. 49 45 N.

Alderette, a small town of Portugal, in Alentejo, on the river Caia, which falls into the Guadiana, a little below Badajoz. It is seven miles S E of Portalegre. Lon. 7 25 W, lat. 39 2 N.

Alentejo, a fertile province of Portugal, between the Tajo and the Guadiana. The inhabitants are very industrious.

Alencon, a large handsome town of France, in the department of Orne and late province of Normandy. Near it are stone quarries, fit for building, wherein is found a sort of chrysal like Bristol stones. It is seated in an open country, abounding in all sorts of corn and fruits, on the river Sart, 20 miles N of Mans, and 97 S W of Paris. Lon. 0 10 E, lat. 48 18 N.

Aleppo, the capital of Syria, inhabited by Turks, and four sorts of Christians, who have each a bishop and a church, and the free exercise of their religion. The city and suburbs contain 235,000 persons. Next to Constantinople and Cairo, it is the most considerable city in the Turkish empire. It is situated in the vast plain, which extends from the Oroute to the Euphrates, and which towards the south terminates in the desert. It is built on eight hills, on the highest of which the castle is erected, and is supposed to be the castle of Beraa. The houses are large and commodious, having terraces on their tops, and generally skylights in form of a dome, to let the light into the rooms, which from their loftiness, the gilding on the window-shutters, cupboards, &c. have at first entrance a very agreeable effect. The streets are carefully paved; have gutters and a foot pavement on each side; and the middle of the street is laid with brick, the small end upwards, for the convenience of horses. There is also a cleanliness observed here, unknown to the other cities of Turkey, there being no drivers who go about the city and take up the rubbish and dust, which each inhabitant is obliged to sweep together. The mosques are numerous and some of them magnificent. Before each of them is an area, with a fountain in the middle, designed for ablutions before prayers. The bazars or market-places are long covered narrow streets, on each side of which are a great number of small shops, just sufficient to hold the tradesman and his goods, the buyer being obliged to stand without. The situation of Aleppo, besides the advantage of a rich and fruitful soil, possesses also that of a stream of fresh water, which never becomes dry. Near Aleppo, its banks are covered with a fertile earth, and laid out in gardens, or rather orchards, which in a hot country, and especially in Turkey, cannot but be delightful. The city is itself one of the most agreeable in Syria. On whatever side it is approached, its numerous minarets and domes present an agreeable prospect to the eye, fatigued with the continued sameness of the brown and parched plains. Aleppo is the emporium of Armenia and the Diarbekar; sends caravans to Bagdad and into Persia; and communicates with the Persian gulf and India, by Bassora, with Egypt and Mecca by Damascus, and with Europe by Alexandretta and Latakia. Their chief commodities are raw or spun cottons, clumsy linens fabricated in the villages, silk stuffs manufactured in the city, copper, coarse cloths, goats-hair, the gall nuts of the Kourdestan, the merchandises of India, such as shawls and muslins. Eighteen miles S E of Aleppo, is a large plain, called the Valley of Salt, bounded by low rocky hills, which form a kind of natural basin, that retains the rain descending from the rocks, together with the water rising from a few springs, and cause the whole to be overflowed in winter. The extent of the surface prevents this water from being of any great depth; so that it is soon evaporated by the sun, when it leaves a cake of salt, in some places half an inch thick; and, in April, people are employed to gather this salt, which is sufficient to supply all this part of the country. Aleppo is seated on a small hill, called the dretta, and is 37 20 E, lat. 36 30 N. Aleppo, called a town of the Gaul.

Alexandretta, or Scanderoon, a town of Syria, in Asia, at the extremity of the Mediterranean sea, and the seaport of Aleppo, from which it is distant 28 or 30 leagues. It is now properly speaking nothing else but a village without walls, in which the tombs are more numerous than the houses, and which entirely owes its existence to the road which it commands.
This is the only road of all Syria, where vessels anchor on a solid bottom, without their cables being liable to chafe: but in other respects it has many inconveniences.
It is infested, during winter, by a peculiar wind, which rushing from the snowy summits, frequently forces ships to drag their anchors several leagues. But the worst circumstance is the extreme unwholesome-ness of the air. It may be affirmed that this every year carries off one third of the crews of the vessels which remain here during the summer; nay, ships frequently lose all their men in two months. To this baneful epidemic, Alexandretta from its situation seems to be irretrievably condemned; for the plain on which the town is built is so low and flat, that the rivulets finding no declivity can never reach the sea. On this account, while the heats are excessive, the principal inhabitants retire to the neighbouring villages, among the mountains, where there is excellent water and delicious fruits. It is 70 miles W of Aleppo. Lon. 36 23 E, lat. 36 35 N.

Alexandria, a strong and considerable town of Italy, belonging to the duchy of Milan, with a bishop's see, and a strong castle. It was taken by Buonaparte when he over-ran Italy, taken by Suwarrow, and since taken by the French, June 1800.

It is seated on the Tanaro, 40 miles S by E of Milan. Lon. 8 43 E, lat. 44 55 N.

Alexandria, a town of Virginia, on the south bank of the river Potomac. The situation is elevated and pleasant, but the water so bad, that the inhabitants are obliged to send nearly a mile for what is drinkable. The original settlers laid out the streets on the plan of Philadelphia.
It contains upwards of 500 houses, many of which are handsome, and 4000 inhabitants. Nine miles below the town, on the Virginia bank of Potomac, where it is nearly two miles wide, is Mount Vernon, the celebrated seat of general Washington.
Alexandria is five miles from Washington, 100 miles N of Richmond. Lon. 77 0 W,
lat. 38 30 N.

Alexandria, or Scandaria, an ancient and once rich and famous town of Egypt, now much decayed, though there are still some remains of its ancient splendour. This city was built by Alexander the Great, about 333 years before Christ, and was a league and a half long, by one-third in breadth, which made the circumference of its walls about four leagues. Lake Mare-otis bathed its walls on the south, and the Mediterranean on the north. It was intersected lengthwise by straight parallel streets.
This direction left a free passage to the northerly wind, which alone conveys coolness and salubrity into Egypt. A street of 2000 feet wide began at the gate of the sea, and terminated at the gate of Canopus.
This street, the handsomest in the universe, was intersected by another of the same breadth, which formed a square at their junction of half a league in circumference.
At present the city of Alexandria is reckoned to have about 14,000 or 15,000 inhabitants; a strange colluvies of different nations, as well as from various parts of the Turkish empire. The present condition of Alexandria is very deplorable, being now so far ruined, that the rubbish in many places overtops the houses. The famous tower of Pharos has long since been deno-lified, and a castle, called Farillon, built in its place. Some parts of the old walls of the city are yet standing, and present us with a masterpiece of ancient masonry.
But what most engages the attention of travellers is the Pillar of Pompey, as it is commonly called, situated at a quarter of a league from the southern gate. It is composed of red granite. The capital is Carrinthian, with palm leaves, and not indented. It is nine feet high. The shaft and the upper member of the base are of one piece of 90 feet long, and 9 in diameter. The base is a square of about 15 feet on each side. This block of marble, 60 feet in circumference, rests on two layers of stone bound together with lead. Nothing can equal the majesty of this monument; seen from a distance, it overtops the town, and serves as a signal for vessels. Approaching it nearer, it produces an astonishment mixed with awe. One can never be tired with admiring the beauty of the capital, the length of the shaft, nor the extraordinary simplicity of the pedestal. It was formerly a place of great trade, all the treasures of the East Indies being deposited there: but since the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope, this trade is in a great measure lost. This place is subject to the grand signior, who, however, has but a limited authority. It is seated on the most westerly branch of the river Nile, 125 miles N W of Cairo. It was taken by the French under Buonaparte in their predatory expedition to Egypt, but they have been forced to abandon it. Lon. 31 11 E, lat. 30 21 N.

Alexandria, a post town of Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania; standing on the Franktown branch of the river Juniata, 25 miles S by W of Centre furnace, 43 W of Lewistown, and 190 of Philadelphia, with about 200 inhabitants.

Alfred, a post town of York county, Maine; situated on the Mousam river, 576 miles from Washington city. In 1800, the township contained 900 inhabitants.

Alfreton, a town in Derbyshire, with a market on Monday; pleasantly seated on a small hill, 13 miles N of Derby, and 141 N N W of London. Lon. 1 25 W, lat. 53 8 N.

Algajola, a small fortified seaport in Corsica. It was almost destroyed by the malecontents in 1737, but has since been restored. Lon. 8 55 E, lat. 42 30 N.

Algarva, a province of Portugal, 67 miles in length, and 20 in breadth: bounded on the W and S by the sea, on the E by the Guadiana, and on the N by Alentejo. It is fertile in figs, almonds, dates, olives, and excellent wine; the capital is Pharo.

Alcala, a strong town of Spain, in Andalusia, on the straits of Gibraltar; but at present in a mean condition, the harbour being decayed. It is 10 miles N W of Gibraltar. Lon. 5 22 W, lat. 36 14 N.

Alger, or Aleri, a town of Sardinia, on the N W coast, with a bishop's see. Lon. 8 40 E, lat. 40 40 N.

Algiers, one of the states of Barbary, bounded on the E by Tunis, on the N by the Mediterranean, on the S by Mount Atlas, and on the W by Morocco. It extends 600 miles from E to W. The air is very temperate, and the land toward the N fertile in corn. The valleys are full of fruit; but a great part is dry, mountainous, and barren. The melons have an exquisite taste, some of which are ripe in summer, and others in winter. The stems of the vines are so large, that a man can hardly grasp them with his arms; and the bunches of grapes are a foot and a half long. It is divided into three provinces, namely, Tlemfem on the W, Titeric on the S, and Constantia to the E of the city of Algiers. The Turks, who have the government in their hands, are not above 7000 in number; and yet the Moors, or natives of Africa, have no share in it. It is only a kind of republic under the protection of the grand signior, and it is governed by a sovereign called the dey, but he can do nothing of consequence without the council of the Janissaries. The Arabs, who live in tents, are a distinct people, governed by their own laws and magistrates, though the Turks interpose as often as they please. The dey of Algiers is an absolute monarch, but deposed by the Turkish soldiers, and frequently deposed, and put to death by them. The revenues of the government arise from the tribute paid by the Moors and Arabs, a detachment of the army being sent into each province every year to collect it; and the prizes they take at sea sometimes equal the taxes they lay upon the natives. The dey has several thousand Moors in his service, both horse and foot: and the dey or viceroys of the provinces, have each an army under his command. Their religion is Mahometanism, and their language a dialect of the Arabic. They have likewise a jargon, composed of Italian, French, and Spanish called Lingua, stood by the chants. This is tawny, and made.

are covered with earth, and serve for a sort of gardens. The streets are narrow, and serve to keep off the extreme heat of the sun. The mole of the harbour is 500 paces in length, extending from the continent to a small island, where there is a castle and a large battery of guns. The number of inhabitants is said to be 100,000 Mahometans, 15,000 Jews, and 4000 Christian slaves.
Their chief subsistence is derived from their piracies, for they make prizes of all Christian ships that are not at peace with them. The country about Algiers is adorned with gardens and fine villas, watered by fountains and rivulets; and thither the inhabitants resort in the hot seasons. Algiers tho' it has, for ages, braved the resentment of the most powerful states in Christendom, it is said, could make but a feint defence against a regular siege. The emperor Charles V. in 1541, lost a fine fleet and army, in an expedition against it. The English burnt their vessels in the harbour in 1635 and 1670. It was bombarded by the French in 1688. In 1775, the Spaniards made a descent near the city with a formidable army, but were defeated with great slaughter. In 1784, they sent a powerful fleet to attack the forts that defend the harbour; but they were repelled by the Algerines, although they made eight successive attacks with great spirit and bravery. In 1767, the Algerines took the lead of the other states of Barbary, in refusing to pay any longer their usual tribute to the Porte. Algiers is situate opposite Minorca, 380 miles W of Tunia. Lon.

Alhambra, the ancient fortress and residence of the Moorish monarchs of Granada. In many countries may be seen excellent modern as well as ancient architecture, both entire and in ruins; but nothing to be met with any where else can convey an idea of this edifice, except the decorations of an opera or the tales of the genii. The first place you come to is the court called the comuna, or common baths; an oblong square with a deep bason of clear water in the middle; two flights of marble steps leading down to the bottom; on each side a parterre of flowers, and a row of orange trees. The ceilings are gilt or painted, and the lower part of the walls is mosaic, disposed in fantastic knots and festoons, a work so novel, so exquisitely finished, as must afford a stranger the most agreeable sensations, while he treads this magic ground. Opposite the door of the communa, is another leading into the apartment of the lions, an oblong court 100 feet in length and 50 in breadth, environed with a colonnade. The gate that leads into the hall of the two sisters, exceeds all the rest in proportion of ornaments, and in beauty of prospect, which it affords through a range of apartments, where a multitude of arches terminate in a large window open to the country. In a gleam of sunshine, the variety of tints and lights thrown upon this enfilade are uncommonly rich.
It is seated near the confluence of the Oro with the Xenil, 125 miles S W of Murcia, and 225 S of Madrid. Lon. 3 30 W, lat. 37 8 N.

Alicant, a seaport of Spain, in Valencia; remarkable for its excellent wine, and the fertility of its soil, which produces excellent fruits, and plenty of rosemary of an extraordinary size.
The castle, on a high rock, was reckoned impregnable; but it was taken by the English in 1706. It was likewise taken by the French and Spaniards, after a siege of almost two years; and then part of the rock was blown up. It is seated on the Mediterranean, on a bay of the same name, 25 miles S of Valencia. Lon. 0 0, lat. 38 16 N.

Aligata, a town of Sicily, remarkable for corn and good wine. It is seated on a peninsula, 22 miles S E of Gergenti. Lon. 13 48 E, lat. 37 11 N.
Allahabad, a city of Oude, in Hindoostan Proper, seated at the confluence of the two great rivers, the Ganges and Jumna. It was founded by the emperor Acbar, who intended it as a place of arms: but its fortifications will hardly resist the battering of a field-piece. It is 470 miles N W of Calcutta. Lon. 82 0 E, lat. 24 45 N.

Alleghany, or Appalachian Mountains, a long range of mountains in N America, between the Atlantic, the Mississippi, and the lakes; extending nearly parallel with the seacoast, 900 miles in length, and from 60 to 200 in breadth. The different ridges which compose this immense range have different names in the different states. Advancing from the Atlantic, the first ridge of Pennsylvania, Virginia, and North Carolina, is the Blue Ridge, or South Mountain, from 130 to 200 miles from the sea, and about 4000 feet high from its base. Between this and the North Mountain, spreads a large fertile vale. Next lies the Alleghany, which is the principal ridge, and has been descriptively called the back-bone of the United States. Beyond this is the long ridge called the Laurel Mountains, in a spur of which, in lat. 36 is a spring of water, 50 feet deep, very cold, and as blue as indigo. From these several ridges proceed innumerable nameless branches or spurs. The Kittatiny, or Blue Mountain, run through the northern parts of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. These mountains are not confusedly scattered and broken, rising here and there into high peaks overtopping each other, but stretch along in uniform ridges, scarcely half a mile high. They spread as they proceed S, and some of them terminate in high perpendicular bluffs. Others gradually subside into a level country, giving rise to the rivers which run southerly into the gulf of Mexico. In the back parts of Pennsylvania, scarcely one acre in ten of this range is capable of culture: but this is not the case in all parts; for numerous tracts of fine arable and pasture land intervene between the ridges, having generally a rich black soil. Indeed, some of the mountains will admit of cultivation almost to their tops.

Alleghany, a river of North America, which rises in the Alleghany Mountains in lat. 42. At Fort Pitt it joins the Monongahela, being then called Ohio.

Allchurch, a village of Worcester-shire. It has an alms-house founded in 1580, and the Roman Ickneld street passes through it. Germany. They begin on the side of France towards the Mediterranean, between the territory of Genoa and county of Nice; and terminate at the gulf of Carnero, which is part of the gulf of Venice. They consist of lofty chains of mountains, ranging one upon another, with only narrow valleys between. They are composed of stupendous rocky masses, two, four, and even six being piled upon each other, and from 4000 to 12000 feet high. There are few passes over them, and those of difficult access. Swisserland takes up a good part of these mountains, or rather the vallies between them. The famous Hannibal attempted to cross the Alps on the side of Piedmont, in the winter season, when he invaded Italy, and lost most of his elephants among them.

Friesland, to whom the island was consigned by Christian II, at the request of his queen, for the purpose of supplying her with vegetables, cheese, and butter. From the intermarriages of these colonists with the Danes, the present inhabitants are chiefly descended; but as they wear their own dress, and enjoy peculiar privileges, they appear a distinct race. It has two churches, in which the ministers preach oc-asionally in Dutch and Danish. The men wear broad-brimmed hats, black jackets, full-glazed breeches of the same colour, loose at the knee, and tied round the waist. The women are chiefly dressed in black jackets and red petticoats, with a piece of blue glazed cloth bound on their heads. The island is laid out in gardens and pastures; and still, according to the original design, supplies Copenhagen with milk, butter, and vegetables.

Amazon, or Orellana, a great river of S America, which has its source in Peru, not far from the Pacific Ocean, and running E falls into the Atlantic Ocean by 84 channels, which in the rainy season overflow their banks, and fertilize the country. Its course is between 4 and 5000 miles, including all its windings. Its mouth is 150 miles broad; and it receives, in its progress, near 200 other rivers, many of which have a course of 5 or 600 leagues, some of them not inferior to the Danube or the Nile; and 1500 miles from its mouth, it is 30 or 40 fathoms deep.

Amazonia, a country in S America, bounded on the N by Terra Firma and Guiana, on the E by the Atlantic Ocean and Brasil, on the S by La Plata, and on the W by Peru. It is 1200 miles long, and 960 broad. It was discovered in 1580, by Francisco Orellana, who sailed down the river Amazon to the Atlantic. Observing companies of women in arms on its banks, he called the country Amazonia, and gave the name of Amazon to the river. But this was probably a fiction, for M. Condamine could perceive no such women.
It is generally a flat region, abounding in woods, lakes, rivers, bogs, and morrasses. The soil is very rich and fertile; the trees and plants are verdant all the year. The rivers and lakes are infested by alligators and water-serpents. Their banks are inhabited by different tribes of Indians, governed by petty sovereigns, the marks of whose dignity are a crown of parrots feathers, a chain of lions teeth or claws hung round his neck, and a wooden sword which he carries in his hand. The Spaniards have made many vain attempts to settle this country. On that part of the coast between Cape North and the mouth of the Amazon, the Portuguese, indeed have some settlements.

Amberg, a handsome town of Germa-

Amboise, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire and late province of Touraine, seated at the confluence of the Loire and Masse. The staircase of the castle, being without steps, may be ascended to the very top. Here Lewis XI. instituted the order of St. Michael; and here in 1506, was formed the famous conspiracy against the Guises, known by the name of Amboise. It is 12 miles E of Tours, and 118 S by W of Paris. Lon. 0 54 E, lat. 47. 25 N.

Amboy, sometimes called Perth Amboy, the capital of East Jersey, in Middlesex county. This town is finely situated for a seaport, lying open to Sandyhook, and approachable from the sea with any wind that blows. Some efforts have been made to introduce commerce, but with small success, the exports having hardly ever exceeded 60,000 dollars per annum. The inhabitants are about 600.—It lies in the lat. of 40 35 N. and Long. of 75 W. 35 miles from New York, and 70 from Philadelphia.

Ambayna, an island of Asia, in the Indian Ocean, with a garrison town of the same name. It is the chief of the Moluccas, and remarkable for the quantity of cloves and nutmegs it produces. The English and Dutch had factories here at the beginning of the 17th century; but the Dutch expelled the English, and tortured them with the most savage cruelty. The natives wear large whiskers, and their dress is only a slight piece of stuff wrapped round their middle. The men buy their wives Amelabad, a large and populous city of Indostan, and the capital of the province of Guzerat. It is one of the best fortified places in India, but was taken by general Goddard, in 1780, from the Poonah Mahrattas to whom it was restored in 1783. It stands in a beautiful plain on the banks of a navigable river that falls into the gulf of Cambay, 321 miles N of Bombay. Lon. 72 37 E, lat. 22 58 N.

Amelangur, a city of Hindoostan in the Deccan; once the capital of the soubah of the same name, which now is better known by that of Dowlatabad. This city was the residence of the emperor Aurungzebe, during his conquest of the Deccan and the Carnatic. It is 181 miles, by Poonah, from Bombay. Lon. 75 0 E, lat. 19 10 N.

Amelia, an episcopal city of Italy, in the state of the church, in the duchy of Spoleto, 20 miles S W of Spoleto, and 45 N of Rome. Lon. 12 30 E, lat. 41 33 N.

America, one of the four parts of the world, and by much the largest. It is bounded on all sides by the ocean, as appears from the latest discoveries; it being formerly supposed to join to the north east part of Asia. It took its name from Americus Vespucius, a Florentine, who is said to have discovered that part of the country seated under the line. But America was first discovered by Christopher Columbus, a Genoese, in 1491. It is called the New World with great propriety; for not only the men, but the birds and beasts differ, in some respects from those known before. It has likewise a great number of trees and plants, that grew no where else, before they were transplanted to other places. All the men, except the Eskimaux, near Greenland, seem to have the same original; for they agree in every particular, from the straits of Magellan, in the S, to Hudson's Bay, in the N. Their skins, unless daubed with grease or oil, are of a red copper colour, and they have no beards, or hair on any other part of their bodies, except the head, where it is black, straight, and coarse. Many are the conjectures about the peopling of this vast continent, and almost as various as their authors. America is so long, that it takes in not only all the Torrid, but also the Temperate and part of the Frigid Zones. It is hard to say how many different languages there are in America, a vast number being spoken by the different people in different parts; and as to their religion, there is no giving any tolerable account of it in general, though some of the most civilized among them seem to have worshipped the sun. The principal motive of the Spaniards in sending so many colonies here, was the thirst of gold; and indeed they and the Portuguese are possessed of all those parts where it is found in greatest plenty. This immense continent is divided into N and S America, which are joined by the isthmus of Darien. It has the loftiest mountains in the world, such as those that form the immense chain called the Andes; and the largest rivers, such as the Amazon, Plata, Oronoka, Mississippi, Illinois, Misaures, Ohio, St. Lawrence, Hudson, Delaware, Susquahanah, Potomac, &c. Beside the Indians who inhabit the interior parts, and the United States of America, who possess most of the territory that formerly belonged to Great Britain, the different European powers have rich and flourishing colonies here. The United States possess, New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Kentucky, and all the country to the N of the Ohio, extending from Pennsylvania on the E, the lakes on the N, and the Mississippi on the W. The countries possessed by Great Britain, are, Labrador or New Britain, Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. In N America, Spain possesses East and West Florida, Louisiana, New Mexico, California, and old Mexico or New Spain: in S America, they have Terra Firma, Peru, Chili, and Paragua. In S America, the Portuguese have Brasil: the French Cayenne; and the Dutch, Surinam, both in Guiana.

Amerham, or Agmondesham, a borough of Bucks, consisting of about 200 houses, with a market on Tuesday. It sends two members to parliament, and is 26 miles S E of Buckingham, and 23 N W of London. Lon. 0 35 W, lat. 51 40 N.

Amherst, a post town of Hillsborough county, New Hampshire. It lies on the Souhegan R. 18 miles E of Petersborough, 19 W of Londonderry, and about 6 W by S of Portsmouth, containing about 2000 inhabitants.

Amid, a town of Natolia, 40 miles E of Amasia. Lon. 36 49 E, lat. 40 30 N.

Amien, a principal city of Mesopotamia, called Amasa by Ptolemy; it is situated on a high mountain, on the borders of Assyria, on the Tigris, where it receives the Nymphius.

Amiens, an ancient city of France, in the department of Somme and late province of Picardy. The cathedral was one of the largest and most magnificent in France, previous to the French revolution. Three branches of the river Somme enter this city. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1597, but retaken by Henry IV, who built a citadel here. It has manufactures in linen and woollen cloth, established by Colbert, which employ in the city and adjacent country, 30,000 people. It is 20 miles S E of Abbeville, and 75 N of Paris. Lon. 2 28 E, lat. 49 54 N.

Ammercor, a fort in Hindoostan Proper, in a very extensive sandy desert, between the Indus, the territories of Aginere and Moultan, and the Puddar. This place is celebrated as the retreat of the emperor Humaion, during his troubles; and here was born his son, the illustrious Achar. It is 190 miles N by E of Tatta.

Amol, a town of Asia, in Usbec Tartary, seated on the river Gihon, 60 miles W of Bokhara. Lon. 64 30 E, lat. 39 20 N.

Amorgus, an island of the Archipelago, fertile in wine, oil, and corn. The best parts belong to a monastery; and the greatest inconvenience of this island is the want of fuel. It is 30 miles in circumference, and 67 N of Candia. Lon. 26 15 E, lat. 36 20 N.

Amour, a river of Asia, whose source is in Siberia; it runs E through Chinese Tartary, and falls into the bay of Corea.

Anoy, an island on the S W coast of China. The English had a factory here, but abandoned it on account of the impositions of the inhabitants.

Amphipolis, a town of Turkey in Europe, anciently the capital of Macedonia, on the river Strymon, 70 miles N E of Salonichi. Lon. 24 16 E, lat. 41 38 N.

Amplepuis, a town of France in the department of Rhone and Loire. It is celebrated for its wines, and is 16 miles E of Roanne.

Amphill, a town in Bedfordshire, with a market on Thursday, seated pleasantly between two hills, but in a barren soil. It is six miles S of Bedford, and 45 N W of London. Lon. 0 30 W, lat. 52 6 N.

Ampurias, a seaport of Spain, in Catalonia, seated at the mouth of the river Fluvia, 60 miles N E of Barcelona. Lon. 3 6 E, lat. 42 5 N.

Ambras, a very strong castle in Germany, seated in the Tirol, two miles S E of Inspruck. It is remarkable for a rich library, adorned with the portraits of many learned men. Lon. 11 29 E, lat. 47 9 N.

Amsterdam, a large, rich, and populous city in Holland, capital of the United Provinces. The walls are high, and well fortified; and the bridge which joins the rampart is built over the river amstel, and is one of the finest pieces of Architecture in these parts. Few cities have their public buildings so fine, numerous, and well kept. Here are many handsome churches, and hospitals for persons of all religions and countries. The exchange is one of the principal ornaments of the city, and the harbour is one of the largest and finest in Europe, where a vast number of merchant ships may always be seen; though there is a bar at its entrance, which is, however, a great security against foreign enemies. The foundation of this town is laid upon piles, driven into a morass, and under the stadthouse alone are 13,000. The streets are spacious and well paved, and most of them have canals, with rows of trees on each side. It is computed to be about half as big as London. It surrendered to the king of Prussia in 1787, when that prince invaded Holland, in favour of the stadtholder, but was evacuated on the restoration of the latter to his rights. Since it surrendered to the French in 1795, its trade has greatly diminished, and its merchants have been impoverished by the repeated exactions of their rapacious conquerors. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Amstel and Wye, 65 miles N of Ant-in depth from the surface of the sea. The triumphal arch of Trajan, remains almost entire, with its inscription. The streets are narrow and uneven, the cathedral is a low and dark structure; and though the front is covered with marble, the architecture has neither beauty nor regularity. Here likewise Clement erected a lazaretto, which advances a little way into the sea, in the form of a pentagon, and is a noble as well as useful edifice. Ancona was taken by the French in 1796. It is 116 miles N by E of Rome. Lon. 13 35 E, lat. 43 38 N.

Andalusia, a province of Spain, 250 miles in length, and 150 in breadth. It is bounded on the S by Granada, on the W by Algarva and the Atlantic, on the N by Estramadura, and on the E by Murcia. The Guadalquivir runs through its whole length; and it is the best, most fertile, and trading part in Spain. The capital is Seville.

Andaman Islands, on the E. side of the entrance into the bay of Bengal. The inhabitants are the most savage in the whole world. They go quite naked, the women wearing a fringe round their middle. The men are crafty and revengeful; and frequently express their aversion to strangers in a loud and threatening tone of voice. Sometimes they appear docile and quiet with the most hostile intent.

Andaye, a fortified town of France, in the department of the Lower Pyrenees and late territory of Basques, famous for its brandy. It is situated at the mouth of the river Bidassoa, opposite Fontarabia in Spain, 18 miles S W of Bayonne. Lon. 1 45 W, lat. 43 25 N.

Andely, a town of France, in the department of Eure and late province of Normandy, parted by a paved causeway into two little towns called Great and Little Andely, a mile from each other. Great Andely is in a valley, on the little river Gambons. It is 20 miles S E of Rouen, and 60 N W of Paris. Lon. 1 30 E, lat. 49 20 N.

Andes, or Cordilleras, a chain of mountains in South America, which running from the most northern part of Peru, to the Straits of Magellan, are the longest and most remarkable in the world. They divide the whole southern part of America, and run a length of 4300 miles. They are much superior in height to any other mountains; for the plain of Quito, which may be considered as the base of the Andes, is elevated further above the sea than the top of the Pyrenees; and they rise, in different places, more than one third above the Peak of Teneriffe, once thought to be the highest land in the ancient hemisphere. The Andes may literally be said to hide their heads in the clouds: the storms often roll, and the thunder bursts below their summits, which, though exposed to the rays of the sun in the torrid zone, are covered with everlasting snow. From experiments made with a barometer on the mountain of Cotopaxi, it appeared that its summit was elevated 6232 yards above the surface of the sea, something more than three geographical miles. In these mountains, there are said to be 16 volcanos.

Andover, a borough in Hampshire, with a market on Saturday. It sends two members to parliament, and is governed by a mayor. It is 10 miles N by W of Winchester, and 65 W by S of London. Lon. 1 20 W, lat. 51 14 N.

Andover, a town in Essex county, Massachusetts, about 20 miles N of Boston—And a town in Sussex county, New Jersey, about 10 miles S by E of Newton, famous for its iron works.

Andrarum, a town of Sweden, in Gothland, three miles S of Christianstad: where there is the greatest alum work in the kingdom.

Andrew, St. a fort of the United Provinces, at the E end of the isle of Bommel Waert.

Andrew, St. a town of Germany, in Carinthia, with a bishop's see, seated on the river Levant, 95 miles S by W of Vienna. Lon. 15 10 E, lat. 46 52 N.

Andrew's, St. a city in Fifeshire, with an university. It was formerly the see of an archbishop, and is seated at the bottom of a bay, on the level top of a small hill, extending E and W, having an open prospect of the German Ocean. The town of St. Andrew's was erected into a royal borough by David I. in the year 1140 and their privileges afterwards confirmed. The charter of Malcolm II. is preserved in the tolbooth; and appears written on a bit of parchment, but the contents equally valid with what would at this time require whole skins. Here also are kept the silver keys of the city; which, for form's sake, are delivered to the king, if he should visit the place, or to a victorious enemy, in token of submission. In this place, likewise, is to be seen the monstrous axe which, in 1646, took off the heads of Sir Robert Spotswood and other distinguished loyalists. St. Andrew's is now greatly reduced in the number of its inhabitants; at present scarcely exceeding 2000. It is impossible to ascertain the sum when it was the seat of the primate: all that can be known is, that during the period of its splendor, there were between 60 and 70 bakers; but now 9 or 10 are sufficient for the place. It is a mile in circuit, and contains three principal streets. On entering the west port, a well-built street, straight, and of vast length and breadth, appears, but so grass-grown, and presenting such a dreary solitude, that it forms the perfect idea of having been laid waste by the pestilence. The university, which was founded by bishop Wardlaw, in 1411, consists of three colleges. The cathedral, the chapel of St. Regulus, the church of St. Salvador, and the priory, have been noble Gothic structures. The castle was the scene of the cruelty and punishment of cardinal Beton: the window is still shown, from which he beheld the martyrdom of George Wishart, who was burnt on the spot beneath; and in this castle he himself was assassinated in 1546. The houses, though built of stone, are gone to decay, there being no manufactures to support the numerous inhabitants; nor is the harbour in a good condition. It is 30 miles N E of Edinburgh. Lon. 2 45 W, lat. 56 18 N.

Andria, a town of Naples, in Bari, with a bishop's see, four miles S of Barletta. Lon. 16 32 E, lat. 41 25 N.

Andros, an island and town in the Archipelago. The inhabitants are of the Greek church, and have a bishop and several monasteries. The principal riches of this island consist in silks, and the fields are very pleasant and fertile; being planted with oranges, citrons, mulberries, pomegranates, and figs. It lies to the N of Candia. Lon. 25 30 E, lat. 37 50 N.

Anduxar, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, seated on the Guadalquivir, defended by a castle. It is 35 miles E of Cordova. Lon. 64 7 W, lat. 37 55 N.

Anegada, one of the English Virgin Islands. Lon. 64 7 W, lat. 18 40 N.

Angelo, St. a small but strong town of Naples, in Capitanata, five miles N of Manfredonia, and two from the sea. Lon. 16 13 E, lat. 41 40 N.

Angelos, a populous and trading town of Mexico, with a bishop's see. The air is excellent, and the land abounds in corn. It is 62 miles S E of Mexico. Lon. 92 22 W, lat. 19 30 N.

Angers, an ancient town of France, in the department of Maine and Loire, and the late province of Anjou. It is seated near the confluence of the Sarthe and Loire, and is divided by the Maine into two parts; the western extending into the plain, and the eastern which rises on the acclivity of a hill. Its environs present a pleasing view of numerous country houses, upwards of a hundred windmills, well-cultivated kitchen-gardens, and eminences that produce good white wine. The cathedral is an elegant structure: the exquisite neatness of the wainscot of the choir, the width of the nave, and the principal gate, surrounded by three steeples (of which the centre one has no support but the bases of the other two) are particularly admired. In this cathedral is the tomb of Rene, king of Sicily, and several bishops, in white marble; and here is shown an urn, which is pretended to have been used at the wedding of Cana. Before the late dissolution of convents, monks of every order were to be seen at Angers; and out of four abbeys that belonged to the Benedictines, three were particularly beautiful. Here is an academy of belles lettres, established in 1683. The inhabitants are computed at 30,000; and here is a considerable manufacture of handkerchiefs and sailcloth. The produce of the slate quarries, at the extremity of the suburb of Bressigny, forms likewise an important article of commerce: this slate is so common, that the most paltry hovel in the suburbs is covered with it, on which account Angers has been called the Black City. The castle, flanked by 18 great round towers, is remarkable only for its advantageous situation Anglesey, an island and the most western county of N Wales. It is 24 miles in length, 14 in breadth, and sends two members to parliament. It is in the diocese of Bangor, is divided into six hundreds, containing two market towns, and 74 parishes. It is separated from Carnarvonshire by a long and narrow strait called the Menai. That part of the island which borders this strait is finely wooded, recalling to the mind its ancient state when it was the celebrated seat of the Druids, whose terrific religious rites were performed in the gloom of the thickest woods, where no soul ever entered but the priest, who at noon, and at midnight, with paleness on his brow, and tremor in his step, went thither to celebrate the horrible mysteries in honour of that terrific deity, whose aspect he yet dreaded more than death to behold. Rude mounds, and heaps of stones, said to be druidical remains, are still to be seen. But a little way within, the whole appears a naked tract, without trees or hedges, watered by numerous rills, fertile in grass and corn, and abounding in cattle. Vast quantities of copper are procured from a famous mine on Parys mountain. In the N W part of the island is a quarry of green marble, intermixed with that curious substance called asbestos.

Angol, a town of South America, in Chili, 125 miles N of Baldivia. Lon. 72 59 W, lat. 37 36 S.
Angola, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the N by Congo Proper, on the E by Malemba, on the S by Benguela, and on the W by the ocean. This country produces Indian corn, beans, oranges, lemons, and several other fruits. The inhabitants are very lazy, and generally idolaters, taking as many wives as they think fit. The country is divided among several petty princes, and the Portuguese have several settlements on the coast; but the English and Dutch traffic with the natives, and purchase a great number of slaves.

ANG

Angoulesme, a town of France, in the department of Charente and late province of Angoumois. It stands on a mountain surrounded by rocks. The river Charente runs at the foot of it; there were formerly fine paper manufactures in its environs. It is 20 miles W of Limoges, and 250 S by W of Paris. Lon. 0 14 E, lat. 45 39 N.
Angoumois, a late province of France, bounded on the N by Poitou, on the E by Limosin and Marche, on the S by Perigord, and on the W by Saintonge. It is now comprehended in the department of Charente.
Angora, a city of Natolia, in the territory of Amasia, formerly Ancyra, computed to contain 100,000 inhabitants. It is a Greek archbishop's see, and remarkable for some remains of antiquity. The castle has a triple inclosure, and the walls are of white marble and stone, resembling porphyry. Here they breed the finest goats in the world; and the hair is of a fine white, almost like silk, which they work into the finest stuffs, particularly camlets. It is 212 miles S E of Constantinople. Lon. 32 5 E, lat. 39 30 N.
Angra, the capital of Terceira, one of the Azores. It is a bishop's see, and the residence of the governor of the Azores. Lon. 27 7 W, lat. 38 39 N.
Angrogna, a town of Piedmont, seven miles W of Pignerol. Lon. 7 15 E, lat. 45 0 N.
Anguilla, or Snake Island, a long and narrow island, so called from its winding somewhat in the manner of a snake. It is woody, but perfectly level; and is the most northerly of the English Leeward Islands, in the West Indies, 60 miles N W of St Christopher's. Lon. 62 35 W, lat. 18 15 N.
Anguillaba, a small town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, 15 miles N W of Rome.
Angusshire, a county of Scotland (sometimes called Fofar, from the name of the county town) bounded on the N by Aberdeenshire, on the N E by Kincardineshire, on the E by the German Ocean, on the S by the frith of Tay, and on the W by Perthshire. Its length and breadth are nearly equal, about 35 miles. It has many lakes and hills, but is fruitful in corn and pastures. The principal rivers, are the North and South Esk, over both of which there is a bridge.

ANN

Anhalt, - principality of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, 42 miles in length, and eight in breadth; bounded on the S by Mansfield, on the W by Halberstadt, on the E by Saxony, and on the N by Magdeburg. It abounds in corn, and is watered by the Salde and the Mulda.

Anhalt, an island of Denmark, lying in the Categate, eight miles from the coast of Jutland, and 10 from Zealand. It is dangerous to seamen, for which reason there is a lighthouse.

Anian, a barren sandy desert on the E coast of Africa, near the Red Sea, lying between 40 and 50 E lon. and between the equator and 10 N lat.

Anjengo, a small town and factory on the coast of Malabar, belonging to the East India company. Their merchandise consists chiefly in pepper and calicoes. Lon. 77 1 E, lat. 9 0 N.

Anjou, a late province of France, bounded on the N by Maine, on the W by Bretagne, on the S by Poitou, and on the E by Touraine. It is now comprehended, with the late provinces of Maine and Touraine, under the departments of Maine and Loire, Indre and Loire, Maine and Sarthe.

Ankani, a rivulet in Lincolnshire, famous for its fine eels. It empties itself into the Humber, and has been made navigable for sloops as far as Glandford-bridge.

Anna, a town of Arabia Petrea, on the western bank of the Euphrates, and the pleasantest place in all these parts, there being plenty of olives, oranges, citrons, lemons, pomegranates, and dates. The fields are sown with cotton; and the corn grows extremely high. It is 130 miles W of Bagdad, and 120 S S W of Moussol. Lon. 41 0 E, lat. 33 35 N.

Annamooka, one of the friendly Islands, in the South Pacific Ocean, discovered by Tasman in 1643, and visited by captain Cook in 1774 and 1777. The island is well cultivated in many places, consisting of plantations of yams and plantains. Many of them are extensive, and often inclosed with neat fences of reed. The bread-fruit and cocoa-nut trees are interspersed with little order, but chiefly near the habitations of the natives, who are a friendly people, and much addicted to stealing. It is situate about 187 E lon. and 20 S lat.

Annan, the capital of Annandale, a division of Dumfriesshire, seated on the river Annan, about 60 miles S from Edinburgh. Lon. 15 4 W, lat. 55 0 N.

Annan, a river of Scotland, which rising in the Moffat Hills, and flowing, in a southerly direction, through Annandale, empties itself into Solway Frith.

Annandale, a district of Dumfriesshire in Scotland, so called from the river Annan. The mountains in the northern part of this district, sometimes named Moffat Hills, are the highest in the S of Scotland. From these descend the Tweed, the Clyde, and the Annan.

Annano, a strong fort in the dutchy of Milan, seated on the Tenaro, 12 miles S of Casal. Lon. 8 36 E, lat. 44 56 N.

Annapolis, the capital of Maryland, in North America, situate at the mouth of the Severn river, 30 miles S of Baltimore. The houses, about 260 and inhabitants 2000 in number, are generally large and elegant. The design of those who planned the city was to have the whole in the form of a circle, with the streets, like radii, beginning at the centre, where the stadhous stands, and thence diverging into every direction. The principal part of the buildings are arranged agreeable to this plan. The stadhous is the noblest building of the kind in America, possesses great wealth though but little commerce. Lon. 77 20 W, lat. 39 0 N.

Annapolis, a fortified town of Nova Scotia, in N America. It stands on the E side of the bay of Fundy, and has one of the finest harbours in the world. Lon. 64 5 W, lat. 44 52 N.

Anney, a town of Savoy, in the dutchy of Genevois, seated on the river Siers, and on a lake of its own name, about ten miles long, and four broad. It is 70 miles S of Geneva, and 22 NE of Chamberry. Lon. 65 E, lat. 45 53 N.

Annobona, an island of Africa, on the coast of Guinea, so called, because it was found out on New-year's-day. It is well stocked with cattle and fruit, and the air is more healthful than in other islands on the same coast. It abounds with palm-trees, cocoas, oranges, lemons, bananas, and several other fruits; with hogs, goats, sheep, and chickens, which are all extremely cheap. Lon. 5 10 E, lat. 1 50 S.

Dumfriesshire, seated on the south coast of Scotland, about 60 miles S from London. Lon. 15 4 W, lat. 55 0 N. It is a fertile country, the river of Scotland, which flows through the Moffat Hills, and flows in a westerly direction, through the Moffat Hills, and empties itself into Solway Firth.

A district of Dumfriesshire, so called from the mountains in the north of this district, some of which are the Moffat Hills, are the mountains of Scotland. From the mouth of the Tweed, the Clyde, and the Forth.

A strong fort in the dutchy of Friesland, on the Tenuaro, 12 miles from London. Lon. 8 36 E, lat. 44 56 N. It is the capital of Maryland, and is situated at the mouth of the Chesapeake river, 30 miles S of Baltimore, about 260 and 300 in number, are generally elegant. The design of the city was planned in the form of a circle, the streets, like radii, beginning from the centre, where the stadthouse stands, whence the streets diverge into every direction. The principal part of the city is arranged agreeable to the design of the stadthouse. The stadthouse is the most beautiful of the kind in America, and is of great wealth though but little. Lon. 77 20 W, lat. 39 0 N.

A fortified town of Nova Scotia, in the bay of Fundy, and has one of the best harbours in the world. Lon. 44 52 N.

A town of Savoy, in the province of Savoy, seated on the river Saône, and has a lake of its own name, which is 12 miles long, and four broad. Lon. 6 5 E, lat. 45 53 N.

An island of Africa, on the east coast, so called, because it is the first seen on New-year's-day. It is fertile, and produces much cattle and fruit, and is much healthier than in other parts of the same coast. It abounds with sugar, coconuts, lemons, and several other fruits; and the sheep, and chickens, are extremely cheap. Lon. 10 0 S.

A town of France in the department of Ardeche and late province of Dauphiny, formerly a fine manufactory for paper. It is seated on the confluence of the rivers Cance and Deumes, 12 miles S W of Vienna. Lon. 4 55 E, lat. 45 15 N.

Ano-Capri, the largest town in the island of Capri, belonging to the kingdom of Naples.

Anspach, a town and castle of Germany, in Franconia, and capital of the margravate of the same name. The king of Prussia found means to prevail upon the present prince to resign his dominions in his favour in consideration of a stated revenue; he has since married an English lady and settled in England. The palace at Anspach, which is near the castle, has a remarkable cabinet of curiosities. It is seated on a river of the same name, 25 miles S W of Nuremberg. Lon. 10 47 E, lat. 49 20 N.

Anstruther, a borough on the S E coast of Fifeshire, 25 miles N E of Edinburgh. Lon. 2 34 W, lat. 56 15 N.

Antequera, a town of Spain, in Granada, divided into the Upper and the Lower. The Upper is seated on a hill, and has a castle; the Lower stands in a fertile plain, and is watered with a great number of brooks. There is a large quantity of salt in the mountain; and five miles from the town, a spring famous for the cure of the gravel. It is 26 miles N of Malaga. Lon. 4 30 W, lat. 37 1 N.

Antequera, a town of N America, in New Spain, in the province of Guaxaquia, 75 miles S E of Guaxaquia.

Antibes, a seaport of France, in the late province of Provence, now in the department of Var, with a strong castle. Its territory produces excellent fruit; and it is seated on the Mediterranean, nine miles W of Nice. Lon. 7 13 E, lat. 43 35 N.

Anticosti, a barren island of N America, lying in the mouth of the river St. Lawrence. Lon. 64 16 W, lat. from 49 to 52 N.

Antigua, one of the English Leward Islands in the W Indies, about 20 miles in length and breadth. This island having no rivers and but few springs, or such as are brackish, the inhabitants are obliged to preserve the rain water in cisterns. The air here is not so wholesome as in the neighbouring islands, and it is more subject to hurricanes. It has excellent harbours. The chief produce is sugar, of which it annually makes 16,000 hogsheads. The capital is St. John's. It is 60 miles E of St. Christopher's. Lon. 62 5 W, lat. 71 5 N.

Antilles, the name which the French give to the Caribbee Islands, discovered by Columbus, in 1492. See Indies, West.

Antio, a promontory of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, near which is a harbour lately made. It takes its name from the ancient city of Antium, the ruins of which extend over a long tract of land.

Antiocha, or Antioch, an island in the Mediterranean, near Sardinia, taken from his Sardinian majesty, by the French in February 1793, but evacuated soon after.

Antioch, now Antakia, an ancient and celebrated town of Syria, of which it was formerly the capital; but it is now a ruinous town, whose houses, built with mud and straw, and narrow miry streets, exhibit every appearance of misery; the magnificent ruins which remain are sad memorials of its former grandeur. It is seated on the river Orontes, now called Assi, 15 miles E of the Mediterranean and 40 S W of Aleppo. Lon. 36 45 E, lat. 35 17 N.

Antiochetta, a town of Turkey in Asia, in Caramania, with a bishop's see, opposite the island of Cyprus. Lon. 32 15 E, lat. 36 42 N.

Antiparos, the ancient Olearos, an island of the Archipelago, two miles W of Paros. It is only a rock, 16 miles in circuit; yet in some parts it is well cultivated, and produces as much barley as serves a small village. It has a grotto, which is one of the greatest curiosities in nature; it appears to be about 80 yards high and 100 broad; and the roof forms a pretty good arch, which entertains the eye with a vast variety of figures, of white transparent crystalline substance. It was first discovered by an Italian traveller, who gives a very entertaining account of it. "Our candles being all lighted up, (says he) and the whole place completely illuminated, never could the eye be presented with a more glittering or more magnificent scene. The roof all hung with solid icicles, transparent as glass, yet solid as marble. The eye could scarce reach the noble and lofty ceiling; the sides were regularly formed with spars; and the whole presented the idea of a magnificent theatre, illu-

Antonio, St. one of the Cape de Verd Islands, 15 miles from St. Vincent. It is full of high mountains, whence proceed streams of excellent water, which render the land very fruitful. The principal town is seated among the mountains. Lon. 25 0 W, lat. 17 0 N.

Antrim, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, bounded on the E by St. George's Channel, on the W by Londonderry, on the N by the Ocean, and on the SE by Down. It is 46 miles in length, and 28 in breadth, and is pretty fruitful. It contains 56 parishes; and before the Irish Union, sent 10 members to the Irish parliament.

Antrim, the capital of the county of Antrim, at the N end of the lake Lough-Neal. It is a poor place, 13 miles W of Carrickfergus. Lon. 6 6 W, lat. 54 43 N.

Antwerp, a city of Brabant, capital of the marquisate of the same name, with a bishop's see. It lies in a low, marshy ground on the Scheldt, 24 miles N of Brussels. It is the third city in Brabant, large and well built, containing 22 squares, and above 200 streets, all straight and broad. Most of the houses are of free stone, and have an air of antiquity, being high, with courts before, and gardens behind. The cathedral is a fine structure, and contained an assemblage of paintings by the greatest masters of the Flemish school, particularly Rubens and Quintin Matsys. But of these it has probably been plundered by the French, who in their progress into Holland took this city. The stadhous and the exchange are magnificent structures: the latter is the first building of that kind in Europe, and on its model the exchanges of London and Amsterdam are built. Its pillars are all of blue marble, and carved, but all in a different manner. Antwerp towards the end of the 15th century was one of the most celebrated towns in the world. The Scheldt, on which it stands, being 20 feet at low water, and rising 20 feet more at flood, ships of the greatest burden came up to the keys; but when the United Provinces formed themselves into a free state, they got the entire command of the navigation of the Scheldt, which ruined the trade of Antwerp, and transferred it to Amsterdam. Among the cloisters, the most remarkable are, the noble and rich abbey of St. Michael, on the banks of the Scheldt, the apartments of which are truly royal. As to the fortifications of the city, it is environed with a fine wall, planted with rows of trees on each side, with walks between, broad enough for two coaches to go abreast, being also defended by a very strong, large, regular citadel, in form of a pentagon, erected by the duke of Alva, in 1568, which commands the town and the adjacent country. Antwerp was taken by the prince of Parma in 1585, after a long and memorable siege. It has been since taken by the French in 1700, by the allies in 1706, and by the French in 1746. It has been twice taken by the French, since the beginning of the present war, (1800.) It is 22 miles N of Brussels, 22 N E of Ghent, and 65 S of Amsterdam. Lon. 4 28 E, lat. 51 13 N.

Anzerma, a town and province of Popayan, in South America, where there are mines of gold. The town is seated on the river Coca. Lon. 75 25 W, lat. 4 58 N.

Aornus. See Bijore.

Aousta, a town of Piedmont, capital of a dutchy of the same name, and a bishop's see. It is remarkable for several monuments of the Romans. It is seated at the foot of the Alps, on the river Doria, 50 miles NW of Turin. Lon. 7 30 E, lat. 45 48 N.

Arabia, a country of Asia, bounded on the W by the Red Sea and the isth- mus of Suez; on the N E by the Euphrates, which divides it from Diarbe- kar, the ancient Mesopotamia; on the E by the gulfs of Persia and Ormus; and on the S by the Indian Ocean. It is divided into three parts, Arabia Petrea, Deserta, and Felix. Arabia Petrea is the smallest of the three, and toward the N, is full of mountains, with few inhabitants, on account of its barrenness. It had its name from the town Petrea, its ancient capital, now destroyed. It differs little from Arabia Deserta, so called from the nature of the soil, which is generally a barren sand; but there are great flocks of sheep, and herds of cattle near the Euphrates, where the land is good. In the desert are great numbers of ostriches, and there is a fine breed of camels in several places. Arabi- bit Felix is so called, on account of its fertility with regard to the rest. The Arabs in the desert live wandering lives, removing from place to place, partly for the sake of pasture, and partly to lie in wait for the caravans, which they often rob, as they travel over part of this desert from Bassora to Aleppo, and from Egypt to Mecca, in order to visit Mahomet's tomb. Arabia Felix pro- duces frankincense, myrrh, balm of Gi- lead, gum arabic, and coffee, of which latter they export prodigious quantities. The famous Mahomet was a native of this country, and his followers, soon af- ter his death, conquered a great part of Asia, Africa, and Europe, establishing their religion wherever they came. It lies between 35 and 60 E lon. and 12 and 33 N lat. extending 1430 miles in length, and 1200 in breadth.

g.l. It is a fertile but not populous country, governed by 12 princes, subject to the chief king, who resides in Aracan his capital. In his palace, which is very large, are contained seven golden idols, two inches thick, each of a man's height, and covered with diamonds, rubies, and other precious stones. They have only two seasons, the rainy season, which continues from April to October, and the fair season, which includes all the rest of the year, and is called the summer. The inhabitants are idolaters, and the women tolerably fair; but the longest ears are reckoned the most beautiful, and in these they wear many rings. There are such numbers of elephants, buffaloes, and tigers, that but few places are inhabited, on account of the ravages made by these animals. The commodities are Amber, lead, tin, and elephants teeth; and sometimes the traders meet with diamonds, rubies, and other precious stones.

Aral, a lake of Asia, 200 miles E of the Caspian sea. It is 300 miles in length, and in some places 150 in breadth. It lies between 58 and 62 of E lon. and between 42 and 47 N lat.

river Meuse, extending, in Cæsar's time, far into Germany. What remains of it lies between Thionville and Liege.

Ardrak, a small kingdom of Africa, in Guinea. It lies at the bottom of the gulf of St. Thomas. The inhabitants are very licentious, and have neither temple nor any place for religious worship. However they are very courageous, and their king was absolute, till the king of Dahomy reduced and burnt the towns. The air is very unwholesome to Europeans; yet the natives live to a great age; but the small pox makes great destruction among them.
This country is fertile in Indian corn, palm wine, plants, and fruits, which last all the year; and they make a great deal of salt. It has a town of the same name. Lon. 3 5 E, lat. 6 0 N.

per) near the river Dart, 19 miles S W of Exeter, and 193 W by S of London. It has a handsome church. Lon. 3 30 W, lat. 50 30 N.

Ashby de la Zouch, a town in Leicestershire, with a market on Saturday. It had a castle with a very high tower, great part of which is still standing, and it has a free school. A canal is now made from this town, which communicates with the Coventry canal. Ashby is 13 miles S of Derby, and 115 N N W of London. Lon. 3 30 W, lat. 50 30 N.

Ashden, a village in Essex, three miles N E of Saffron Walden.

Ashford, a town in Kent, with a market on Saturday, and a large church, that was formerly collegiate. It is seated on the river Ash or Esh, 24 miles S E of Maidstone and 57 of London. Lon. 0 52 E, lat. 51 4 N.

Ashton-under-Line, a village in Lancashire, seven miles E of Manchester, with a manufacture of cotton, and an iron foundry.

Ashwell, a village in Hertfordshire, on the river Rhec, that issues from a rock at the S end of the town. Near the church are the remains of a Roman camp, which consists of 12 acres of land, inclosed by a deep ditch, and formerly a rampart. It is four miles N of Baldock.

Asia, one of the four great parts of the world, situate between 25 and 180 E lon. and between the equator and 80 N lat. It extends 4,740 miles from the Dardanelles on the W, to the E shore of Tartary; and 4,380 miles from the most southern part of Malacca, to the most northern cape of Nova Zembla; being superior in extent, as well as in many other respects, to Africa and Europe. It is separated from Europe by the Mediterranean, the Archipelago, the Black Sea, the Palus Mæotis, the Don, and the Dwina, and from Africa by the Red Sea and the isthmus of Suez. All the other parts are surrounded by the ocean. The principal countries in this continent, are Siberia, Tartary, China, Thibet, Hindoostan, Siam, Burmah, Persia, Arabia, Syria, Palestine, Natolia, Diarbeckar, Irac, Armenia, Georgia, Curdistan, &c. Asia is looked upon as that part of the world, which of all others has been most peculiarly distinguished by heaven. There it was the first man was created; there the patriarchs lived; there the law was given to Moses, and the greatest and most celebrated monarchies were formed. Lastly, in Asia Jesus Christ appeared, and from thence it is that the light of the gospel was diffused over all the world. Laws, arts, sciences and religion, almost all had their original in Asia.

Asinara, an island in the Mediterranean, on the N W coast of Sardinia, 17 miles N by W of Sassari. It is 28 miles in compass. Lon. 8 30 E, lat. 41 0 N.

Askeycron, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Limerick, on the river Shannon.

Askrig, a town in the N riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Thursday, six miles S by E of York, and 243 N of London. Lon. 1 0 W, lat. 53 55 N.

Asne. See Esne.

Asola, a town of Italy, in Bresciano, 20 miles S E of Brescia. Lon. 10 30 E, lat. 45 48 N.

Asolo, a town of Italy, in Trevisano, on a mountain 17 miles N W of Treviso. Lon. 11 36 E, lat. 45 59 N.

Asoph, a sea, anciently the Palus Mæotis, lying N of the Black Sea, with which it has a communication by the strait of Caffa, the ancient Cimmerian Bosphorus. This sea, which is sometimes called the sea of Zabak, extends 390 miles from S W to N E. Lon. from 35 to 42 E, lat. from 45 to 47 N.

Asoph, a district of the Russian empire, in the province of Catharinenslaf, including a large tract of territory to the E and W of Asoph. Catharinenslaf is the capital.

Asoph, the late capital of a district of the same name, in Asia, seated near the mouth of the Don, to the E of the sea of Asoph. It has been several times taken and retaken by the Turks and Russians. The branch of the Don, upon which it stands, is now so choked with sand, as scarcely to admit the smallest vessel, which renders the place less important than it was formerly. Lon. 41 30 E, lat. 47 18 N.

Asperosa, a town of Turkey in Europe, with a bishop's see, on the coast of the Archipelago, 22 miles S E of Nicopoli. Lon. 24 50 E, lat. 40 58 N.

Assam, a country of Asia, bounded on the W by Bengal and Bootan, on the N by Thibet, and on the S E and

S by Meckley. Its capital is Ghergong, and the river Burrampooter flows through the whole length of it. The open parts are marked with population and tillage; the woods abound with elephants. The other inhabitants of Assam are base and unprincipled, have no fixed religion, nor any rule but their inclination. They eat all flesh except human, and even animals that die a natural death. They are enterprising, savage, vindictive, and fond of war. They have neither horses, asses, nor camels; but they are sometimes brought there from other countries. Asses they are fond of, but are so much afraid of a horse, that one trooper would put a hundred of them to flight. Assam lies between 91 and 96 E lon. and 25 and 28 N lat.

Assancale, a town of Armenia, on the river Arax, 22 miles E of Erzerum. Here are hot baths much frequented. Lon. 41 10 E, lat. 39 46 N.

Asanchif, a town of Asia, in Diarbek, seated on the Tigris, 40 miles S E of Diarbekar. Lon. 40 20 E, lat. 37 30 N.

Asens, a seaport of Denmark, in the island of Funen. It is the common passage from the dutchy of Sleswick to Copenhagen, and is 17 miles S W of Odensee. Lon. 10 2 E, lat. 55 17 N.

Assisio, a city of Italy, in the dutchy of Spole, on the side of a high mountain. The cathedral of St. Francis is magnificent, and composed of three churches, one above another. It is 70 miles N of Rome. Lon. 12 38 E, lat. 43 0 N.

Assos, a seaport of Natolia, on a bay of the Archipelago, 12 miles S E of Troas. Lon. 26 36 E, lat. 39 32 N.

Assumption, an episcopal city, the capital of Paraguay, in South America. It is a large, populous, and handsome town, and stands in a fertile country, on the river Paraguay. Lon. 57 40 W, lat. 26 0 S.

Assynt, a district of Sutherland in Scotland, containing plenty of limestone and marble.

Assyria, a country of Asia, celebrated in ancient history. It comprehended the provinces in Asia now called Diarbek Curdistan, and Irac.

Astabat, a town of Armenia, three miles from the river Aras, and 12 S of Naksivan. Lon. 45 30 E, lat. 38 28 N.

Ati, an ancient episcopal town of Italy, in Montserrat. It is seated on the Tanaro, 22 miles E of Turin. Lon. 8 8 E, lat. 43 3 N.

Astorga, a very ancient city of Spain, in Leon, well fortified by art and nature, seated in a pleasant plain, 25 miles S W of Leon. Lon. 5 32 W, lat. 42 22 N.

Astrabad, a large town of Persia, capital of a province of the same name, on the Caspian Sea, 200 miles N of Isaphan. Lon. 55 35 E, lat. 36 50 N.

Astracan, an episcopal city of the Russian empire, capital of a province of the same name. It is large and populous, has a good harbour, and is surrounded by strong walls. It seldom rains here: but the river Volga, on which it stands, overflows like the Nile; and when the water is run off, the grass grows in less than a month. The city of Astracan is about two miles and a half in circumference, surrounded by a brick wall, which is now in a ruinous condition: but, if we comprehend the suburbs, the circuit will be near five miles. The number of inhabitants amounts to 70,000, including Armenians and Tartars, as well as a few Persians and Indians. All round the city, at the distance of two miles, are seen a great number of gardens and orchards. This city is supposed to have been, in early times, the general staple for the productions of Persia, India, and Arabia. It is seated on an island formed by the river, 50 miles N W of the Caspian Sea. Lon. 47 40 E, lat. 46 22 N.

Asturias, a province of Spain, 120 miles in length, and 45 in breadth; bounded on the E by Biscay, on the S by Old Castile and Leon, on the W by Galicia, and on the N by the Atlantic. It is divided into two parts, Asturia d'Oviedo, and Asturia de Santillana. This province is full of mountains and forests, and its wine and horses are excellent. It has mines of gold, lapis lazuli, and vermilion, and belongs to the eldest son of the king of Spain, who is styled prince of Asturias.

Asylum, a town of Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, on the S W side of Susquehannah river, 67 miles N W of Wilkesbarre. Here there is a post-office 327 miles from Washington.

Atacama, a harbour of South America, in Peru. There is a great desert of the same name. Lon. 70 0 W, lat. 22 0 S. shelter to king Alfred.

Athens, now called Sotimes, once a celebrated city, the capital of Ancient Attica, but now of Livadia, in European Turkey. After many revolutions, the Turks finally wrested it from the Venetians; and it has now not more than 10,000 inhabitants, of whom three fourths are Christians of the Greek church; the remainder Turks. It is the see of an archbishop; and is defended by a citadel on the summit of a lofty rock. The town stands beneath the citadel; not encompassing the rock as formerly, but spreading into the plain to the W and N W. Some masses of brick work, standing separate without the town, belonged perhaps to the ancient wall, of which other traces also appear. The houses are mostly mean and straggling. In the lanes, the high walls on each side, which are commonly white washed, reflect strongly the light of the sun. The streets were very irregular; and anciently were neither uniform nor handsome.
There are many magnificent ruins, which testify its former grandeur. It is situate on the gulf of Engia, 100 miles N E of Lacedemon, and 320 S by W of Constantinople. Lon. 23 57 E, lat. 38 5 N.

Athens, or Tyoga Point, a post town of Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, seated at the confluence of Tyoga river, with the east branch of the Susquehannah, 90 miles N W of Wilkesbarre, and 150 N of Northumberland.—And, a part of Clark county, Georgia, 20 miles S E of Clarksborough, and 90 N W of Augusta.

Atherston, a town in Warwickshire, with a market on Tuesday; seated on the Anker, indifferently large and well built; 10 miles N of Coventry, and 104 N W of London. Lon. 1 30 W,
lat. 52 40 N.

Athlone, a town of Ireland, in the county of West Meath, seated on the Shannon, 60 miles W of Dublin. Lon.

7 41 W, lat. 53 22 N.

Athol, a district of Perthshire; a beautiful, romantic, and mountainous country, containing some fine lakes.

Athos, or Monte-Santo, a mountain of Macedonia, in a peninsula, to the S of the gulf of Confessa, about 30 miles in circumference and two in perpendicular height. It is inhabited by a great number of Greek monks, who have many fortified monasteries upon it. Here they cultivate olives and vines; and are carpenters, masons, &c. leading an austere life, and living to a great age. It is 70 miles E of Solonichi. Lon. 26 20 E, lat. 40 30 N.

Athy, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare, and province of Leinster, seated on the river Barrow, 12 miles S of Kildare. Lon. 6 37 W, lat. 52 58 N.

Atlantic, or Atlantic Ocean, takes its name from mount Atlas in Africa, and lies between the W continents of Africa and Europe, and the E continent of America. Its least breadth, from Guinea in Africa, to Brasil in South America, is 2309 miles. On one side of the equator, it is called the North Atlantic Ocean; and on the other the South Atlantic Ocean.

Atlas, a chain of high mountains in Africa, separating Barbary from Biledulgerid. They are inhabited almost in every place, except where the extreme cold will not permit.

Atooi, one of the Sandwich islands, discovered by captain Cook, in 1778.
Towards the N E and N W the face of the country is ragged and broken; but to the S it is more even. The hills rise from the sea-side with a gentle acclivity and at a little distance back are covered with wood. The natives are of a middle size, and in general stoutly made. They are active, vigorous, and most expert swimmers, the women with infants at their breasts often leaping over-board in a heavy surf, without endangering their little ones.

Atri, an episcopal town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ulteriore. It is seated on a craggy mountain, four miles from the gulf of Venice, and 10 S E of Teramo.
Lon. 13 48 E, lat. 41 35 N.

Attlebury, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Tuesday, 14 miles NE of Thetford and 93 of London. Lon. 1 5 E, lat. 52 35 N.

Attock, a city and fortress of Hindoostan Proper, on the E bank of the Indus; supposed to stand on the site of the Taxis of Alexander, where he crossed that river. It is 180 miles NW of Lahore. Lon. 70 36 E, lat. 32 27 N.

Attock, a river which rises in the Tatarian mountains, N of Hindoostan, passes by Cabul, and flows into the Indus above Attock.

Ava, a large river which rises in Thibet, and crossing the kingdoms of Burmah and Pegu, falls into the bay of Bengal by several mouths.

Ava, a large city in Asia, capital of the kingdom of Burmah, and seated on the river Ava. The houses are built with timber or bamboo canes, with thatched roofs, and floors made of teak plank or split bamboo. The streets are very straight with rows of trees planted on each side. The royal palace is a mean structure, although very large, and built with stone. The inhabitants are well-shaped, have good features, and an olive complexion; but the women, who are small, are whiter than the men. Ava is 1150 miles NE of Calcutta. Lon. 96 30 E, lat. 21 0 N.

Ava, a long tract of coast in Asia, on the E side of the gulf of Bengal, extending from the S extremity of Aracan to Cape Negrais, and divided from Pegu on the E by the river Ava.

Avalon, an ancient town of France, in the department of Yonne and late province of Burgundy. It is 20 miles S E of Auxerre. Lon. 3 52 E, lat. 47 30 N.

Aube, a department of France, the late province of Champagne.

Aubenas, a town of France, in the department of Ardeche and late province of Dauphiny. It has a manufacture of cloths of Spanish wool, and of red cotton, in imitation of Indian handkerchiefs. Beside corn and wine, its district produces truffles, oranges, figs, olives, chesnuts, and walnuts. The silk-worm and mulberry-tree succeed well here. Aubenas is seated on the Ardeche, at the foot of the Cevennes, near the mineral waters of Valtz, and 15 miles N W of Viviers. Lon. 4 30 E, lat. 44 40 N.

Aubigny, a town of France, in the department of Cher and late province of Berry. It has a castle, and is seated in a fine plain, on the river Nerre. It was a dukedom, and belonged to the dukes of Richmond; and was confirmed to the present duke. At the revolution in France it shared the fate of all other titles of nobility.

Aubin, a town of the island of Jersey, with a good harbour and a fort.

Aubin du Cormier, a town of France, in the department of Ille and Vilaine and late province of Bretagne; famous for a battle between viscount Tremouille and the duke of Orleans, afterward Lewis XII, in 1488, when the latter was made prisoner. It is ten miles E of Rennes. Lon. 1 23 W, lat. 48 15 N.

Aubonne, a handsome town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, on a river of the same name, 10 miles W of Lausanne. Lon. 6 30 E, lat. 46 30 N.

Auburn, a town in Wiltshire, with a market on Tuesday. It is but an indifferent town, seated on a branch of the Kennet, eight miles NE of Marlborough, and 81 W of London. Lon. 1 32 W, lat. 51 31 N.

Aubusson, a town of France, in the department of Creuse and late territory of Marche. It had a manufacture of tapestry, which made it populous. It is seated on the river Creuse, 37 miles NE of Limoges. Lon. 2 15 E, lat. 45 58 N.

Aucaugrel, a town of Africa, capital of the kingdom of Adal, seated on a mountain. Lon. 44 25 E, lat. 0 10 N.

Auch, an episcopal city of France, in the department of Gers, lately an archiepiscopal see, and the capital of Gascony. It lies on the summit and declivity of a steep hill, at the foot of which runs the Gers. The cathedral is one of the finest in France; the buildings are moderate and elegant, and the streets though generally narrow are clean and well paved. The inhabitants are computed to be 8000; and they have manufactures of velvet, serges, crapes, hats, and leather. Auch is 37 miles W of Toulouse. Lon. 0 40 E, lat. 43 39 N.

Auckland, Bishop's, a town in the bishopric of Durham, with a market on Thursday. It is pleasantly seated on the side of a hill, and noted for its beautiful castle and for its chapel, whose architecture is very curious. It is eight miles S by W of Durham, and 251 N N W of London. Lon. 1 31 W, lat. 54 43 N.

Aveiro, a town of Portugal, on the bank of the lake of Vouga, with a good harbour, 30 miles S of Oporto. Lon. 8 30 W, lat. 40 40 N.

Aveiron, a department of France, including the late province of Rouergue.

Avellino, an episcopal town of Naples, in Principato Citeriore. It was almost ruined by an earthquake in 1694, and is 25 miles E of Naples. Lon. 15 0 E, lat. 40 50 N.

Avenche, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, formerly capital of the province of Aargau, but now shows its former greatness only by its ruins. It is 15 miles W of Bern. Lon. 6 52 E, lat. 46 59 N.

Averno, a lake of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, two miles long, and one broad. Virgil and others have said that the water was so bad, that birds drop dead when flying over it, and hence they call it the lake of hell; but it is now found to have no poisonous quality; for birds not only fly over it, but swim upon it. A little to the W of the lake is a cave, where some pretend they went formerly to consult the Cumaean Sybil. There are also some old walls, which some suppose to be the ruins of a temple of Apollo, and others of Pluto.

Aversa, a town of Naples, with a bishop's see. It is seated in a very fine plain, eight miles N of Naples. Lon. 14 20 E, lat. 40 59 N.

Avery'sboro', a post town of Cumberland county, North Carolina: standing on the E side of the NW branch of Cape Fear river, 35 miles N of Fayetteville, and 36 S of Raleigh.

Aves, or the Islands of Birds, so called from the great number of birds that frequent them. They are 70 miles E by S of Curacao, and 100 N of the coast of Terra Firma.

Avesnes, a small but strong town of France, in the department of the North and late province of Hainault, seated on the bank of the Hesper, 25 miles E of Cambrai, and 100 N E of Paris. Lon. 3 58 E, lat. 50 8 N.

Augeburg, an ancient city of Suabia, in Germany. It is a bishop's see, and an imperial city, or sovereign state, being governed by the town-council and the representatives of the burghers, who are half protestants and half papists. The churches, townhouse, and other public buildings are magnificent. It is surrounded by beautiful plains, and large forests, full of all sorts of game. In the bishop's palace, the Lutherans presented their confession of faith to the emperor Charles V. in 1550 hence called the confession of Augsburg. The bishop is one of the princes of the empire, but has no share in the government of the town. It was taken by the French in 1703, but abandoned in the year following, after the battle of Hockstadt, and again taken by them August 24, 1796. It is seated between the rivers Werdach and Lech, 30 miles N W of Munich. Lon. 11 4 E, lat. 48 27 N.

Augusta, the capital of Georgia, in North America, situated on the S W bank of the river Savannah, 120 miles N W of the town of Savannah. The town does not consist of quite 300 houses; but as it is seated on a fine plain, and enjoys the best soil, with the advantage of a central situation between the upper and lower countries, it is rising into importance. Lon. 82 0 W, lat. 33 20 N.

Augusta, a town of Kennebec county, Maine; situated on the N side of Kennebec river, 26 miles N of Wiscasset; 190 N E of Boston. Here is a post-office 667 miles from Washington.

Auguste, or Austa, an island in the gulf of Venice, on the coast of Dalmatia, near Ragusa, subject to Venice. Lon. 17 0 E, lat. 42 55 N.

Augustin, St. a town of North America, on the E coast of Florida. It was ceded by the Spaniards to the English in 1763, but restored to them again by the peace of 1783. The town is situated at the foot of a pleasant hill, well covered with trees; but the coast is too shallow to be approached by vessels that draw more than 12 feet water; so that this place is ill situated for trade, though it is the chief town of E Florida. Lon. 81 10 W, lat. 30 10 N.

Augustine, a cape of S America, in Brazil, 300 miles NE of the bay of All Saints. Lon. 35 40 W, lat. 8 30 S.

Austria, an archduchy, in the circle of the same name. The river Ens divides it into Upper and Lower; Vienna is the capital of the Lower, and Linz of the Upper. Austria excels all the provinces of Germany in the fertility of its soil, the plenty of its pastures and the wholesomeness of the air.
Corn, wine, and fruit, are plentiful; and the saffron better than that of the East Indies.

Aun, an ancient town of France, the episcopal see of the department of Saone and Loire, in the late province of Burgundy; it contains a great many mines, and produces a great quantity of sulphur. It is seated at the foot of three mountains on the river of Arroux, which washes its ancient walls, whose ruins are so firm, and the stones so closely united, that they seem almost to be cut out of the solid rock, in this city are the ruins of three temples, one of which was dedicated to Janus, and the other to Diana. They have manufactures of tapestry from cows hair and thread, carpets, and coverlets. Their delft ware is degenerated into earthen, although with little industry, their ar-gill would be very proper for porcelain.
In St. Martin's church is the tomb of the cruel Brunchaud, whom Gregory of Tours mentions as the monster of the sixth century: she was accused of having poisoned her son Childebert, and of having procured the death of 10 kings; by the order of her grandson Clovis 11, she was tied to the tail of a wild mare, and thus miserably perished.
The cathedral of St. Lazarus, the college, and the seminary are worthy of Auvergne, a late province of France, 100 miles in length, and 75 in breadth;

bounded on the N by the Bourbonnois, on the E by Forez and Velay, on the W by Limosin, Querci, and La Marche, and on the S by Rouéigne and the Ce-vennes. It now forms the two departments of Cantal and Puy-de-Dome.

Awe Loch, one of the most beautiful lakes of Scotland, in Argyleshire, 30 miles long, and in some parts, above two broad. It contains many fine little islands, tufted with trees. The river Awe, the outlet of this lake, is discharged into Loch Etive, at the village of Bunawe.

Auxerre, an ancient town of France,

Auxonne, a town of France in the department of Cote d'Or and late province of Burgundy, with a castle, an arsenal, handsome barracks, and a foundery for cannon. It is seated on the Saone, over which there is a bridge of 23 arches, and is 17 miles E of Dijon.
Lon. 5 29 E, lat. 47 11 N.

Avatska-Bay, a harbour of Kamtschatka, the safest and most extensive that has been discovered, and the only one in that part of the world, that can admit vessels of a considerable burden. Lon. 158 48 E, lat. 52 51 N.

Avlen, a small imperial town of Suabia, on the river Cochen, 15 miles W

Axholm, an island in the N W part of Lincolnshire, in England. It is formed by the Trent, Dun, and Idle, and is ten miles long and five broad.
It is a rich tract, in which much flax is cultivated.

Axim, a territory on the Gold Coast of Guinea, containing two or three villages on the sea shore. The inhabitants are generally rich, and sell a great deal of gold to the English and Dutch. They are likewise industrious in fishing and tilling the ground. The excessive moisture of the climate renders it very unhealthy, but it produces plenty of rice, water-melons, lemons, oranges, &c. The Dutch have a fort and a factory here, called St. Anthony.

Axminster, a town of Devonshire, on the river Ax, with a market on Satur-

Assam, formerly a large city, and once the capital of Abyssinia. Its ruins are very extensive but consist altogether of public buildings. It is 125 miles W of the Red Sea. Lon. 36 4 E, lat. 14 6 N.

Ayamonte, a seaport of Spain, in Andalusia, with a strong castle built on a rock at the mouth of the river Gaudiara, opposite Castro-Marino, 80 miles N W of Cordiz. Lon. 7 15 W, lat. 37 12 N.

Aylsham, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday, 12 miles N of Norwich, and 121 N E of London. Lon. 1 17 E, lat. 52 53 N.

Ayrmouth, a town of Scotland, in Berwickshire, six miles N of Berwick, formerly fortified to curb the garrison of that town. Lon. 1 46 W, lat. 56 11 N.

Ayr, a borough of Scotland, capital of an extensive county of the same name. It is situate on a sandy plain, on both sides of the river Ayr, over which is a bridge of four arches. It appears from history and other documents to have been a considerable place at the time of the Norman conquest. Its chief trade is in coal and grain; the fishery being in a manner given up. In the new town are many good houses, and the ruins of a Dominican monastery, founded by Alexander II. in 1230. A mile N from the town, is a house called King's Chapel, founded for lepers by Robert Bruce; the leprosy being a disease so common in those days, as to be the subject of several parliamentary statutes. Ayr is 65 miles S W of Edinburgh. Lon. 4 39 E, lat. 55 30 N.

Ayrshire, a county of Scotland, bounded on the W and N by the Frith of Clyde and Renfrewshire, on the E by the counties of Lanerk and Dunfries, and on the S E and S by the shires of Kircudbright and Wigton. It exhibits the shape of two wings, extending to the N W and S W, and forming a vast bay at the mouth of the frith of Clyde. Between its extreme points it is about 50 miles; its greatest breadth is not quite 27. Its most northerly division is Cunningham, the N W angle of which though mountainous, is rich in pasture.

Azores, or Western Islands, a group of islands, in the Atlantic Ocean, between 23 and 33 W lon. and between 37 and 49 N lat. 900 miles W of Portugal, and as many E of Newfoundland. They were discovered by the Flemings in the 15th century, but were afterwards taken possession of by the Portuguese, to whom they have been subject ever since. They are nine in number, viz. St. Maria, St. Michael, Terceira, St. George, Gracioso, Fyal, Pico, Flores, and Corvo. They were called the Azores, from the number of hawks found among them. The two westernmost were named Flores and Corvo, from the abundance of flowers on the one, and of crows on the other. They are subject to a governor-general, who resides at Angra, in Terceira. No poisonous animal, it is said, is to be found in the Azores, and if carried thither it will expire in a few hours. All of them are fertile, and enjoy a salubrious air, but are subject to violent earthquakes.

However, we are sure that it was seated on the river Euphrates; and as some think over against Bagdad, which is by many travellers, falsely called Babylon. This was also the name of a city in Egypt, supposed to stand near the place where Cairo stands now. What authors tell us concerning the bigness of Old Babylon is almost incredible; for they affirm it was 366 stadia in circumference, which is about 50 of our statute miles; however, it was not full of houses; for within the walls, were not only gardens and orchards, but cultivated fields. It was divided by the Euphrates into two equal parts that communicated by a stone bridge 624 feet in length, and 30 cubits broad. The tower of Babel, within this city, was built in a square form, 460 cubits high; and the circumference at the bottom 4 or 3000. The hanging gardens at Babylon were such a prodigious work, that they passed for one of the seven wonders of the world; four of them contained each four acres of land, and were supported by vast columns, at the top of a palace 2,500 paces in circumference; they were disposed in the form of an amphitheatre. The walls of Babylon were also so astonishing, that these also passed for one of the seven wonders; they were built of bricks and bitumen; 50 miles in circumference, 200 feet high, and 50 cubits thick. There was also a temple consecrated to Belus, whose magnificence corresponded with the grandeur of the city, first the capital of the Assyrian empire, and afterwards that of the kingdom of Babylon founded by Nabonassar.

Baca, or Baza, a town of Spain, in the kingdom of Granada, 15 miles N E of Gaudix. Lon. 2 42 W, lat. 37 18 N.

Bacano, a village of Italy, in the patriarchy of St. Peter, on a small lake, near a river of the same name, well known on account of the defeat of the Fabii, in the 277th year of Rome.

cient Babylon, a populous city, capital of Irac Arabia, seated on the Tigris, and inhabited by Christians, Turks, &c. The city is large and populous; and the advantage of the Tigris is so considerable, with regard to commerce, that although the climate is excessive hot and in other respects far from being agreeable, yet the number of its inhabitants is computed at 300,000. The revenue would be immense if the government was mild; but instead of this the bashaw is continually extorting money from the poor inhabitants; from none more than from the Christians and Jews, many of whom are obliged to leave the city. In the months of June, July, and August, the weather is so extremely hot, as to oblige the inhabitants to live for these months in subterraneous apartments, which are arched over to admit the freer circulation of the air. The houses are generally large, built of brick, and cement, and are arched over; many of the windows are made of elegant Venetian glass; the ceilings are mostly ornamented with a kind of chequer-work, which has generally a noble appearance; most of the houses have a court-yard before them, in the middle of which is a plantation of orange trees, &c. that has a pleasing effect. The soil, which would produce not only every conveniency of life, but almost every luxury, is thro' the natural indolence of the Turks, in a great measure uncultivated and neglected. The bazars or markets here are large and extensive, being covered over with arches built of masonry, and divided into different streets filled with shops of all kinds of merchandise, to the number of 12,000. On the N side of the town is the citadel which commands the river. In the city are several large beautiful mosques. There are also a number of antique buildings. At the distance of about 10 miles stand the ruins of an ancient tower called the Tower of Nimrod. Whether this tower was at first of a square or round form is now difficult to determine. The height of the ruin is about 126 feet, the diameter of the largest and middle part about 100 feet. Bagdad was the capital of the Saracen empire, till taken by the Turks in the 13th century; since which it has been taken and retaken several times by the Turks and Persians; and last of all by the Turks in 1638. It is 250 miles N by W of Bassora. Lon. 43 52 E, lat. 33 29 N.

Baglana, or Bocclana, a country of Hindoostan, in the Deccan, which extends from the Surat river to Poonah, and is inclosed by a ridge of mountains, called the Gaats. It is bounded on the N by Candeish, on the S W by Visampour, and on the S E by Dowlatabad.

Bagnara, a seaport of Naples, eight miles S of Palma. In this town 3017 persons perished, by the dreadful earthquake in 1783. Lon. 16 8 E, lat. 38 15 N.

Bagnarea, a town of Italy, with a bishop's see, in the patrimony of St. Peter, five miles S of Orvieto. Lon. 12 28 E, lat. 42 36 N.

Begneres, a town of France in the department of the Upper Pyrenees and late province of Bigorre. It lies at the foot of the Pyrenees, on the river Adour. It is much frequented, on account of its hot mineral waters, and is 10 miles S E of Tarbes. Lon. 0 12 E, lat. 43 3 N.

Bagnols, a town of France, in the department of Herault and late province of Languedoc, near the river Cese, 8 miles S W of Pont St. Esprit. It has a handsome square and two fountains which rise in the middle of the town. Lon. 4 43 E, lat. 44 10 N.

Bahama, or Lucaya Islands, situate to the S of Carolina, between 22 and 27 N lat. and 73 and 81 W lon. They extend along the coast of Florida to Cuba, and are said to be 500 in number, some of them only mere rocks, but 12 of them are large, fertile, and in nothing different from the soil of Carolina. These islands were the first fruits of Columbus's discoveries, but they are all uninhabited, except Providence, and are subject to the English, to whom they were not known till 1667, when captain Seyle being driven among them in his passage to Carolina, gave his name to one of them, and, being a second time driven upon it, called it Providence. The cotton seed has been recently introduced into these islands from Georgia, and is well adapted to the soil and climate.

Baia, an inconsiderable town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro; it was famous, in the time of the Romans, for its hot baths and elegant palaces. Its splendor may be inferred from its innumerable ruins, heaps of marble, moi-sacs, stucco, and other precious fragments of taste. It flourished in full glory down to the days of Theodoric the Goth; but the destruction of these enchanted palaces followed quickly upon the irruption of the northern conquerors. Loss of fortune left not the Romans the means of supporting such expensive establishments. No sooner had opulence withdrawn its hand than the unbridled sea rushed back upon the ground from whence it had been forced back by Roman luxury; moles and buttresses were torn asunder and washed away; whole promontories with the proud towers that once crowned their brows, were undermined and tumbled headlong into the deep, where many feet below the surface, pavements of streets, foundations of houses, and masses of walls may still be seen;
yet Baia in its ruined state, and stripped of all its ornaments, still presents many beautiful and striking objects for the pencil. It is seated on the bay of Naples, 12 miles W of Naples. Lon.

Bain Gonga, or Bain River, a river of Hindoostan, which rises near the Nerbudda, runs southward through Berar, and, after a course of near 400 miles, unites with the Godavery, within the hills that bound the British Cir-ears.

Bairdston, a post town of Nelson county, Kentucky, with about 600 inhabitants. It is situated on the N side of Beech creek (a branch of Rolling river) 16 miles N E of Headsburg, and 53 S W of Frankfort.

Bakewell, a town in the Peak of Der-bysire, with a market on Moulday, seated on the river Wye, among the hills, 20 miles N N W of Derby and 131 of London. Lon. 2 42 W, lat. 53

Baku, a town of Persia, in the province of Schirvan, the most commodious haven of the Caspian Sea, on the W coast of which it is situate. The number of shoals and sandbanks render the entrance somewhat difficult. Baku is a fortress, surrounded by high brick walls, 300 miles S of Astracan. Lon.
49 15 E, lat. 40 2 N.

Bala, a town in Merionethshire, with a market on Saturday. It stands on the lake of Bala, or Pembreere, which is 13 miles in length, and six in breadth, and abounds with a fish called a guinard, resembling a salmon in shape, and tasting like a trout. The river Dee runs through this lake. The town is noted for a great trade in knit woollen stockings. It is 50 miles S S E of Holyhead, and 195 N W of London. Lon. 3 35 W, lat. 52 50 N.

Balagat, a province in the Deccan of Hindoostan, and the largest of the three which compose that kingdom. It consists of a vast extent of fertile and populous plains, supported in the nature of a terrace, by a stupendous wall of mountains, called the Gaats, which rises abruptly from the low country called the Concan. This tract is so elevated, that the air is cool and pleasant. It extends through the peninsula, to the southern extremity of Mysore.

Balasore, a seaport to the N W of the bay of Bengal. The inhabitants make stuffs of silk, cotton, and a sort of grass. It is 180 miles S W of Hoogly. Lon. 87 1 E, lat. 21 20 N.

Balastro, an episcopal town of Spain, in Arragon, on the river Vero, 42 miles N E of Saragossa. Lon. 0 27 E, lat. 42 8 N.

Balbec, a city of Asia in Syria, anciently called Heliopolis. It is situated at the foot of Anti-Lebanon, precisely on the last rising ground, where the mountain terminates in a plain. On the E side are the remains of ancient ruins, of whose magnificence it is difficult to give an adequate idea. Among the most magnificent are the ruins of the temple of the Sun, for a particular description of which we refer our readers to Mr. Wood and Mr. Dawkins and to Volney. The ground around this temple is strewn with broken columns, mutilated capitals, and the remains of pilastres, entablatures and cornices; around it is a row of ruined edifices which display all the ornaments of the richest architecture. Balbec is chiefly inhabited by Christians of the Greek church, and is 37 miles N of Damascus. Lon. 37 20 E, lat. 34 22 N.

Balch, a town of Usbec Tartary, on the frontiers of Persia, 200 miles S of Bokhara. Lon. 69 0 E, lat. 37 20 N.

Baldivia, a seaport of Chili, in South America. It was built by the Spanish general Baldivia, about 1551, after he had conquered Chili. It belongs to the Spaniards, and stands between the Callacalles and Portero, where they fall into the Pacific Ocean. Lon. 73 20 W, lat. 39 38 S.

Ballock, a town in Herts, with a market on Tuesday. It is seated between the hills, in a chalky soil, and chiefly of note for its trading in malt. It is nine miles W S W of Royston, and 37 N N W of London. Lon. 0 5 W, lat. 52 2 N.

Bali, an island forming the N side of the straits of Java, through which the East India ships sometimes return from China; but the passage is commonly very difficult, on account of contrary winds. This island is extremely populous, and abounds in rice and all sorts of fruits. The inhabitants are pagans, and very warlike. Lon. 115 50 E, lat. 7 10 S.

Ballynakill, a borough of Ireland, in Queen's county, 18 miles N W of Kilkenny. Lon. 7 25 W, lat. 52 50 N.

Ballyshannon, a large seaport of Ireland, in the county of Donnegal, with a good harbour, 110 miles N W of Dublin. Lon. 7 50 W, lat. 54 33 N.

Ballooistan, Littie, a country of Hindoostan Proper, bordering on the N of Mewat, and approaching within 14 miles of Delhi. It is 80 or 90 miles long, and from 30 to 40 broad. Westward it borders on the country of the Seiks.

Ballstown, a township of Saratoga county, New-York, with 2000 inhabitants. Here is a post-office, 25 miles N W of Waterford, and 30 N of Albany.

Ballstown Springs: these waters are within the precincts of the town, and are eminently celebrated for their medicinal virtues. There are several bathing houses erected, and the accommodations for visitors are very convenient.

Baltic, a large sea between Denmark and Sweden to the W, and Germany, Poland, and Russia to the E, from which run the gulfs of Bothnia, Finland, Riga, and Dantzic. It is remarkable that this sea neither ebbs nor flows, and a current always sets thro' the Sound into the Ocean. Yellow amber is found on the coast.

Baltimore, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, seated on a headland which runs into the sea, nine miles N E of Cape Clear. Lon. 9 14 W, lat. 51 24 N.

Baltimore is the principal town of Baltimore county, and the largest in the state of Maryland. It is seated on the N side of Potapscow river, at the head of Chesapeake bay, in the lat. of 39 21 N, and long. of 77 48 W. In point of size as well as commerce, this thriving city ranks as fourth in the United States. At the last enumeration (1800) the inhabitants were reckoned 26,514, having doubled in ten years: One eighth are in a state of slavery.—Fells Point which may be considered as part of the town, being separated from it only by a small creek, possesses an excellent harbour, where all large vessels belonging to the port of London, and the mouth of the harbour is defended by a fortress of considerable strength.—The imports of 1798 amounted to 12,000,000 of dollars, and the shipping to 59,000 tons. There are in the city nine places of public worship belonging to as many sects, three banks, besides a branch of the United States bank, and several insurance offices.—The streets are of a convenient width, being from 40 to 150 feet wide, and laid with considerable regularity, mostly paved and lighted.—The markets are regular and well supplied with fresh meat, fish and vegetables: the butter is not to be praised, and the cheese consumed is imported from Europe or the neighbouring states.

Bamberg, a large, handsome town of Franconia, formerly imperial, but now capital of a bishopric of the same name, of considerable extent, with a university. It surrendered to the French in 1796. It is seated at the confluence of the Main and Rednitz, 35 miles N of Nuremberg. Lon. 11 7 E, lat. 50 2 N.

Bamberg, a town of Bohemia, seated at the foot of a mountain, 30 miles S of Glatz. Lon. 16 50 E, lat. 49 55 N.

Banff. See Banff.

Bampton, a town in Oxfordshire, with a market on Monday, seated near the Thames, 12 miles W of Oxford, and 70 W by N of London. Lon. 1 25 W, lat. 51 46 N.

Bampton, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday, seated in a bottom surrounded by hills. It is 14 miles N N E of Exeter, and 163 W by S of London. Lon. 3 38 W, lat. 51 2 N.

Banbury, a borough in Oxfordshire, with a market on Thursday. It sends one member to parliament; and has been long noted for its cakes and cheese; it is seated on the Charwell, 75 miles N N W of London. Lon. 1 11 W, lat. 52 4 N.

Banca, an island of Asia, in the East Indies, on the E coast of Sumatra, with a town and strait of the same name. Lon. 106 50 E, lat. 2 35 S.

Bancalis, a seaport on the E coast of Sumatra, where the Dutch have a settlement. It is 130 miles W of Malacca. Lon. 100 7 E, lat. 1 15 N.

Bangkok, a town of Asia, in the kingdom of Siam, with a fort, once in the possession of the French, who were expelled in 1688. The houses are made of canes, and covered with palm-leaves. The inhabitants are almost naked, and having no furniture in their houses, sit on the floor. It is 17 miles N of the sea, and 40 S of Siam. Lon. 101 5 E, lat. 13 35 N.

Banda, the general name of five islands in the East Indies, of which Banda is the chief. If we except the production of the nutmeg the Banda islands are barren to a terrible degree. The climate is also very unhealthy. These islands have been subject to the Dutch, ever since 1609, when they expelled both the English and natives. Since the present war (1800) they have been captured by the British. They are all very small, the largest being scarcely 20 miles in length; and are subject to earthquakes. Banda is 75 miles S E of Amboyna. Lon. 128 5 E, lat. 4 50 S.

Bander Congo, a seaport of Persia, seated on the Persian gulf, 80 miles W of Gombroon. Lon. 55 8 E, lat. 27 10 N.

Bandora, the capital of Salsette, an island separated from Bombay by a narrow channel. Lon. 72 40 E, lat. 19 0 N.

Banff, a seaport, and the county-town of Banffshire, pleasantly situated on the side of a hill, at the mouth of the Deveron, over which is a handsome bridge of seven arches, erected by government. It has several streets, of which that with the town house in it, adorned with a new spire, is very handsome. The harbour is very bad, as the entrance at the mouth of the Deveron is very uncertain, being often stopped by the shifting of sands, which are continually changing in great storms; the pier which is defended by a battery, is therefore placed on the outside. Here is a manufacture of thread, and another of stockings; and the children attend the factory and school alternately; so that education and industry are united. In the middle of the town is Banff castle, belonging to the Findlater family; and near it is a most magnificent seat lately built by the earl of Fife. It lies in a beautiful plain washed by the Deveron, the lofty banks of which clothed with wood on the opposite side, afford a delightful contrast to the soft vale beneath. Banff is 32 miles N W of Aberdeen. Lon. 2 15 W, lat. 57 35 N.

Banffshire, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N by the Murray Frith, on the S E by Aberdeenshire, and on the N W by Murrayshire. Its greatest length is 30 miles, and its extent along the coast nearly 30.

Bangalore, a strong fortress of Mysore, in the peninsula of Hindoostan. It is a place of great political importance, as it is, from its situation, the key of Mysore, toward Arcot. It was taken by the English in 1791; but restored in 1792. It is 74 miles N E of Seringapatam. Lon. 77 37 E, lat. 13 0 N.

Banghir, a town of Ireland, in King's county, on the Shannon, 15 miles S of Athlone. Lon. 7 41 W, lat. 53 7 N.

Bangor, an episcopal city in Carnarvonshire, with a market on Wednesday. It was once so considerable, that it was called Bangor the Great, and defended by a castle. The principal buildings are the cathedral, the bishop's palace, and a free school. It is 36 miles W of St. Asaph, and 251 N W of London. Lon. 4 12 W, lat. 53 12 N.

Bangor, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Down, on the S shore of Carrickfergus, opposite the town of that name. Lon. 5 42 W, lat. 54 40 N.

Bangor, a post town of Hancock county, Maine; lying on the W side of the river Penobscot, at the head of navigation, about 37 miles N of Castine on the same river.

Banjar, a river in the island of Borneo, at the mouth of which there is a town, where the English have a factory.

Banstead, a village of Surry, noted for its downs, one of the most delightful spots in England, on account of its fine carpet ground, covered with short herbage, perfumed with thyme and juniper. These downs form a tract of 30 miles, extending, under different denominations, from Croydon to Farnham. Banstead is 13 miles S S W of London.

Bantam, a large town on the N W coast of Java. It is the capital of a kingdom of the same name, with a good harbour, and a castle. It is divided into two towns by a river. The English and Danes had factories here till 1682, when they were expelled by the Dutch, who deposed the kings of the ancient race, and suffer nothing to be done in this kingdom but what they please. The produce is pepper, of which they export vast quantities. Bantam, once populous and flourishing, is now a poor and wretched place. Lon. 105 26 E, lat. 6 20 S.

Bantry, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, on a bay of the Atlantic, to which it gives name; in this bay the French fleet lay for several days in their late attempt to invade Ireland 1799. Lon. 92 5 W, lat. 51 36 N.

Bapaume, a strong town of France, in the department of the Straits of Calais and late province of Artois, 12 miles S E of Arras. Lon. 2 35 E, lat. 50 8 N.

Bar, a strong town of Poland, in Podolia, on the river Bog, 40 miles N W of Bracklaw. Lon. 27 30 E, lat. 49 14 N.

Bar, or Barrois, a late dutchy of France, lying on both sides the Meuse, between Lorraine and Champagne. It now forms the department of Meuse.

Bar-le-duc, a town of France, in the department of Meuse, capital of the late dutchy of Bar, with a handsome castle. It is divided into the upper and lower town: the latter is watered by the rivulet Orney, in which are very fine trouts. The wine is excellent, and as delicate as Champagne. It is seated on the side of a hill, 30 miles W of Toul, and 138 E of Paris. Lon. 5 20 E, lat. 48 44 N.

Bar-sur-Aube, an ancient town of France, in the department of Aube and late province of Champagne, famous for its wines. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, 18 miles S W of Joinville. Lon. 4 55 E, lat. 48 15 N.

Bar-sur-Seine, a town of France, in the department of Aube and late province of Champagne, 20 miles S W of Bar-sur-Aube. Lon. 4 32 E, lat. 48 5 N.

Bara, one of the Hebrides of Scotland, to the S of S Uist. It is five miles long and three broad. At low water, it almost communicates with Benbecula; on which account, both islands are sometimes called the Long Island. The W coast of Baras is low, and the soil in many parts very fertile; but the ground rises to the E coast, where it is barren. Lon. 7 30 W, lat. 56 55 N.

Barbadoes, the easternmost of the Windward Islands, in the W Indies, 25 miles in length, and 15 in breadth.
It belongs to the English; and the number of the whites is about 20,000, who have 100,000 slaves. Their exports are sugar, rum, cotton, indigo, and ginger; and they have most of the fruits common to the climate. The sugar exported hence is whiter and finer than that of any other plantation; and they have one particular production, called Barbadoes tar, which rises out of the earth, and swims upon the surface of the water. This island has suffered much from hurricanes; particularly from a dreadful one, Oct. 10, 1780. It is 70 miles E of St. Vincent. The capital is Bridgetown.

Barbary, a country of Africa, between the Atlantic Ocean, the Mediterranean Sea, and Egypt, and containing the countries of Barca, Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, Fez, and Morocco. It is near 2000 miles in length, and, in some places 750 in breadth. It was known to the ancients by the names of Mauritania, Numidia Proper, Africa, and Libya. It is the best country in all Africa, except Egypt. The air is mild, and the soil fertile in corn, dates, almonds, apples, pears, cherries, plums, citrons, lemons, oranges, with plenty of roots and herbs in their kitchen gardens. Their chief trade consists in their fruits, in the horses called barbs, Morocco leather, ostrich-feathers, indigo, wax, tin, and coral. The established religion is the Mahometan, and there are some Jews; but no Christians, except the slaves.

Barbezieux, a town of France, in the department of Charente and late province of Angoumois. It has a mineral spring called Fontrouilleuse, and had a manufacture of linen cloth. It is 45 miles N E of Bourdeaux. Lon. 0 0,
lat. 45 30 N.

Barbuda, one of the British Caribbee islands, subject to the British, about 20 miles long, and 12 broad. The inhabitants (about 1500) are chiefly employed in raising corn, and breeding cattle, for which they find a ready market in the neighbouring islands. It is the property of the Codrington family, and is 19 miles N E of St. Christopher. Lon. 61 50 W, lat. 17 49 N.

Barca, a country of Barbary, on the S coast of the Mediterranean, between Tripoli and Egypt. It is a barren desert, inhabited by none but wandering Arabs. Here was seated the famous temple of Jupiter Ammon, so difficult of access on account of the burning sands.

Barcelona, a city of Spain, in Catslo-nia, of which it is the capital, seated on the Mediterranean Sea. Its shape is between a square and an oval; it contains about 15,000 houses, and is defended by a fort, called Mont Joy, which stands on a rocky mountain, a mile W of the town. It has double walls on the N and E, and the sea on the S, with a mole for the security of ships. The city is divided into two parts, the Old and the New, separated from each other by a wall and a large ditch; the streets are handsome, well paved with large stones, wide, and very clean. It is the residence of a viceroy, is a bishop's see, has a fine university, a mint, a good port, and is adorned with handsome buildings. The cathedral is large, handsome and adorned with two towers. The arsenal contains arms for several thousand men, and docks for the building of gallees.
It is a place of great trade, and they make curious works in glass; the knives are likewise in great reputation, as well as the blankets. In 1705, it was taken by the earl of Peterborough, after a siege of three weeks. In 1706, Philip V. invested it with a numerous army, but was obliged to raise the siege. In 1714, it was taken by the French and Spaniards, when it was deprived of all its privileges, and the Basil, or Basle, the capital of the canton of Basil, in Switzerland, with a bishop's see, and a famous university. It is divided into two parts by the Rhine; the larger of which is on the side of Switzerland, and the least on that of Germany; but they are joined by a handsome bridge. The largest has five gates, six suburbs, 200 streets, six large squares, and 46 fountains, and is partly seated on a hill. The other stands on a plain, and has but two gates with several streets and fountains. The cathedral is an elegant

BAS

Gothic building, but disfigured by a daubing of rose coloured paint, spread over the whole edifice. The great Erasmus is interred here under a marble tomb. The town-house, and fine paintings in fresco, particularly an exquisite piece of the sufferings of Christ by Holbein, are much admired. The library contains a prodigious number of books and manuscripts; and there is a rich collection of medals, among which are several exceedingly scarce. The clocks always go an hour too fast, according to some for the quick dispatch of business; others say it was owing to an assault, or according to some a conspiracy to murder the magistrates being prevented by that means. This town is surrounded by thick walls, flanked by towers and bastions. The art of making paper is said to have been invented here. They have several manufactures, particularly of ribands and cottons, and carry on an extensive trade. The bishops of Basle once possessed the sovereignty over the city and canton; but, in 1501, when the canton joined the Helvetic confederacy, they fixed their residence at Porentru; still retaining the dignity of princes of the empire. The sumptuary laws are very strict at Basle; and no person is allowed to have a servant behind his carriage. Three treaties of peace were concluded here in one year, 1795, with the French republic; by the king of Prussia April 5, the king of Spain July 22, and the landgrave of Hesse Cassel August 28. Basle is the largest, and seems to have been once one of the most populous towns in Switzerland. It is capable of containing 100,000 inhabitants; but their number is scarcely more than 14,000. Basle has now lost its independence, and has together with all Switzerland been obliged to bow to the tyrannical yoke of France, who without even the pretence of a provocation invaded and laid waste this tranquil country, and reduced it to slavery. It is 174 miles N by E of Geneva, and 250 E by S of Paris. Lon. 7 29 E, lat. 47 35 N.

Basilicata, a province of Naples abounding in corn, wine, oil, cotton, honey, and saffron. Cirenza is the capital.

Basilipotamo, a river of Turkey, in Europe, in the Morea, which falls into the gulf of Caloctina. It was called Eurotes by the ancients.

Basingstoke, a corporate town in Hampshire, with a market on Wednesday, 35 miles E by N of Salisbury, and 47 W by S of London. Lon. 1 4 W, lat. 51 19 N.

Baskinridge, a post town in Somerset county, New Jersey, on a branch of the Passaic river, 7 miles S W of Morristown; famous for the capture of General Lee, by Col. Harcourt of the British army, in the year 1776.

Basques, a late territory of France, which included Lower Navarre, Labourd, and Sould, and now forms, with Berne, the department of the Lower Pyrenees.

Bass, a great insulated rock in the German Ocean, one mile from the coast of Haddingtonshire, at a small distance from the town of North Berwick. It is inaccessible on all sides, except the S W, and there it is with great difficulty that a man can climb up by the help of a rope or ladder. In summer this remarkable rock, which overhangs the sea in a tremendous manner, rising in the form of a cone, is quite covered with the nests, eggs, and young birds of the gannets, or solan geese; so that it is scarce possible to walk without treading on them: and the flocks of birds, in flight, are so prodigious, as to darken the air, like clouds; and their noise is such, that people close by each other hear what is spoken with difficulty. These birds come hither to breed. The rock is one mile in circumference, and supplied with water by a spring at the top. A ruinous castle, once the state prison of Scotland, stands at the edge of the precipice. The garrison in 1694, surrendered to king William, and the fortifications were demolished. A cavern runs through the rock, quite dark in the centre, where, it is said, there is a deep pool of fresh water. It also contains a small warren for rabbits, and pasture for a few sheep. Lon. 2 35 W, lat. 55 3 N.

Bassano, a town of Vicentino, in the territory of Venice, on the river Brante, in a country fertile in excellent wine. Lon. 11 24 E, lat. 45 51 N.

Basse, a town of France, in the department of the North and late province of Flanders, famous for the many sieges it has sustained; but its fortifications are now demolished. It is 18 miles S W of Lisle. Lon. 2 52 E, lat. 50 28 N.

Basseterre, the capital of St. Christopher, built by the French, before the island was ceded to the English in 1713.

Basseterre, the capital of Gaudaloupe, in a district of the same name, in the W part of the island. It is defended by a citadel and other fortifications. Lon. 61 59 W, lat. 15 59 N.

Bassora, or Bussarah, a city and seaport of Turkey in Asia, 40 miles N W of the gulf of Persia. It stands on the Euphrates, a canal from which divides the city into two parts; and over it is a bridge of boats. The houses are constructed of bricks dried in the sun, and have a very mean aspect. The circumjacent tract is looked upon by the Arabs to be one of the most delightful spots in Asia, and even as one of the most beautiful gardens in the world. The hot winds that blow here are very troublesome to travellers, sometimes overwhelming them with sand driven out of the neighbouring deserts. Here are many Jews, who live by brokerage and exchanging money; but they are kept very poor. In 1691, the plague destroyed 80,000 of the inhabitants; but it was afterwards peopled by the wild Arabs, who were soon brought under the subjection of the Turks. The trade here is not so considerable as it was formerly. It is 240 miles S by E of Bagdad. Lon. 44 52 E, lat. 29 26 N.

Bastia, a seaport of Albania, in Turkey in Europe, opposite the island of Corfu, at the mouth of the river Calamu. Lon. 20 20 E, lat. 39 40 N.

Bastia, the capital of Corsica, with a good harbour, a strong castle, and a bishop's see. It surrendered to lord Hood in 1794, but has since revolted to France. It is 70 miles S S W of Leghorn. Lon. 9 30 E, lat. 42 36 N.

Batavia, the ancient name of an island in Dutch Guelderland, from which the Dutch are sometimes called Batavians.
See Betwee.

Batavia, a city of the island of Java, capital of all the Dutch settlements in the East Indies. The fort is built at a distance from the town of stone brought from Europe. In general, the place is very beautiful and built of white stones; they have canals in the principal streets, planted on each side with evergreen trees. Batavia contains a prodigious number of inhabitants, of every country in these parts. It is the residence of the governor-general of all the Dutch colonies in the East Indies. It has a handsome hospital and arsenal; and all the goods brought from other parts of the East Indies are laid up here, till they are exported to their places of destination. The air is very unwholesome; and this place is represented as the grave of European navigators. Its harbour is excellent, and seated on the NE part of the island. Shortly after the Dutch declared war against England, Batavia was captured by the Bri-

Bath, a city in Somersetshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday.
It has been famous from the time of the Romans, for its hot springs, which are not only used as baths, but internally as a medicine. The springs are distinguished by the names of the Cross-bath, the Hot-bath, and the King's-bath. The reputation of these waters has so much increased, that

Bath is become the principal resort, next to the metropolis, for the nobility and gentry, and the constant residence of many opulent invalids, as well as of numerous votaries of dissipation. In splendour and elegance of buildings, it exceeds every town in England; they are constructed of a white stone, and the fronts, which are all three stories high, are adorned with three rows of columns in pairs, of the Doric, Ionic and Corinthian orders. The principal seasons for the waters are spring and autumn. The poor who come here to drink the waters, may be received into a magnificent hospital. Bath is seated on the Avon, which has been made navigable hence to Bristol: 12 miles

The Nive and Adour, unite their streams in the middle of this city, and proceed to the sea, at the distance of a quarter of a league. A bank of sand, at the mouth of the Adour, renders the entrance of the harbour difficult; but vessels, when they have entered, find it a safe one. The citadel is the strongest in France. Bayonne was lately a bishop's see; and the ancient cathedral is remarkable for the height of the nef, and the delicacy of the pillars which support it. The military weapon, the bayonet, bears the name of this city, in which it was invented.
The hams and chocolate of Bayonne are famous. It is 25 miles S W of Dax, and 425 S by W of Paris. Lon.

ated, 17 miles N E of Chirenza. It is subject to the Turks: and the raisins, called Belvederes, come from this place. Lon. 21 45 E, lat. 38 0 N.

Belville, a village with a post-office, in Mifflin county, Pennsylvania, 190 miles from Washington.

Belvidere, a post-town in Sussex county, New Jersey, about 12 miles above Easton in Delaware, and 10 S by W of Hope.

Belvoir Castle, in Lincolnshire, four miles W of Grantham, the ancient seat of the dukes of Rutland, supposed to have been a Roman station, as many of their antiquities have been dug up here. Its foundation was laid soon after the Norman conquest.

Benares, a district of Hindoostan Proper, between Bahar and Oude; containing the circars of Benares, Jionpour, Chunar, and Gazypour. It was ceded to the English in 1775, and produces a clear annual revenue of 380,000*l*.

Benares, a populous city, capital of the district of the same name, in Hindoostan. It is more celebrated as the ancient seat of Braminical learning, than on any other account; and is built on the N side of the Ganges, which is here very broad, and the banks very high. Several Hindoo temples embellish the banks of the river; and many other public and private buildings are magnificent. The streets are narrow; the houses high, and some of them five stories each, inhabited by different families. The more wealthy Hindoos, however, live in detached houses with an open court, surrounded by a wall. Nearly in the centre of the city is a considerable Mahometan mosque, built by the emperor Aurungzebe, who destroyed a magnificent Hindoo temple, to make room for it; and round the city are many ruins of buildings, the effects of Mahometan intolerance. Notwithstanding this, the same manners and customs still prevail among these people, as at the most remote period that can be traced in history; and in no instance of religious or civil life have they admitted any innovations from foreigners. Benares is 425 miles S E of Delhi, and 400 N W of Calcutta. Lon. 83 10 E, lat. 25 20 N.

Benavarri, a town of Spain, in Arragon, 17 miles N of Lerida. Lon. 0 45 E, lat. 42 11 N.

Benavento, a town of Spain, in Leon.

B E N

It is seated on the river Ela, 23 miles S E of Astorga. Lon. 57 W, lat. 42 4 N.

Bencoolen, a fort and town on the S W of the island of Sumatra, belonging to the English. The country about Bencoolen is mountainous and woody; and there are several volcanos in the island. The chief trade is in pepper. Lon. 102 5 E, lat. 3 49 S.

Bendermassen, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in the island of Borneo, with a good harbour. Lon. 114 40 E, lat. 9 40 S.

Bender, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Bessarabia, on the river Dnicater, 100 miles N W of Belgorod. It was the residence of Charles XII. of Sweden, after his defeat at Pultowa. It was taken by the Russians in 1789, but restored by the treaty of Yassa in 1790. Lon. 29 0 E, lat. 46 58 N.

Benedetto, St. a town of Italy, in the Mantuan, 35 miles S E of Mantua. Lon. 11 25 E, lat. 44 44 N.

Beneseuf, a town of Egypt, remarkable for its hemp and flax; seated on the W shore of the Nile, 50 miles S of Cairo. Lon. 31 10 E, lat. 29 10 N.

Benevento, a city of Naples, agreeably situated in Principato Citeriore, with an archbishop's see. It has suffered greatly by earthquakes, particularly in 1688, when the archbishop, afterward pope Benedict XIII. was dug out of the ruins alive. When he was advanced to the papal chair, he rebuilt this place. It is subject to the pope, and seated near the confluence of the Saboro and Caloro, 35 miles N E of Naples. Lon. 14 57 E, lat. 41 6 N.

Benfeld, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Rhine and late province of Alsace: its fortifications were demolished in consequence of the treaty of Westphalia. It is situated on the river Ill, 12 miles S W of Strasbourg. Lon. 7 45 E, lat. 48 24 N.

Bengal, a country of Hindoostan Proper, bounded on the W by Orassa, and Bahar, on the N by Bootan, on the E by Assam and Meckley, and on the S by the bay of Bengl. Its greatest extent from W to E is about 720 miles, and from N to S above 300. The country consists of one vast plain, of the most fertile soil, which, in common with other parts of Hindoostan, annually renders two, and, in some parts, even three crops. It is sometimes subject to such extremes of-heat as render it fatal to Europeans. The great cause of the unhealthiness of Bengal, however, is owing to the inundations of the Ganges and Burrampooter, by which such quantities of putrescible matters are brought down as infect the air with the most malignant vapours when the waters retire. By the latter end of July, all the lower parts of Bengal, contiguous to the Ganges and Burrampooter, are overflowed, and present a surface of water more than 100 miles wide. This vast collection of fluid, however, is owing in a great measure to the rains which fall on the low country itself; for the lands in the neighbourhood are overflowed some time before the bed of the river is filled. As some of the lands in Bengal would receive damage from such a copious inundation, they must for this reason be guarded by strong dykes to resist the waters, and admit only a certain quantity. One particular branch of the Ganges is conducted for 70 miles between dykes: and when full, the passengers look down upon the adjacent country as from an eminence. Its principal products are sugar, silk, fruit, pepper, opium, rice, saltpetre, lac and civit. It is compared to Egypt for fertility; the Ganges dividing here into several streams, and, like the Nile, annually overflowing the country. Bengal has been subject, ever since 1765, to the English East India Company. Its annual revenue, including that of Benares is near £1,290,000, and its population is 11,000,000. Calcutta is the capital.

Benguela, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the N by Angola, on the S by Mataman, on the E by the river Rimba, and on the W by the Atlantic. Its coast begins at Cape Ledo on the N, and extends to Cape Negro on the S, that is, from lat. 9 20 to 16 30 S. The climate is very pernicious to Europeans. The men wear skins about their waists, and beads round their necks; and are armed with darts headed with iron, and with bows and arrows. The women wear a heavy collar of copper round their neck, a kind of cloth made of the bark of a tree, round their waist, and copper rings on their legs.

Benguela, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, where the Portuguese have a fort. It lies to the N of the bay of Benguela. Lon. 12 30 E. lat. 10 30 S.

Benin, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the W by Dahomy and the Atlantic, on the N by Biafara, on the E by parts unknown, and on the S by Loango. It begins in 1° S lat. and extends to about 9° N lat. The country exhibits many beautiful landscapes: but is very low and marshy; this renders it very unhealthy; there are here a great number of wild beasts, such as elephants, lions, tigers, leopards, &c. The dress of the natives is neat. The rich wear white calico or cotton petticoats, but the upper part of the body is commonly naked. The people are skilful in making various sorts of dyes; and they manufacture and export cotton cloths. With respect to food, they prefer the flesh of dogs and cats to that of any other animal. Polygamy is allowed among them, and the number of their wives is limited by the state of their circumstances only. Though jealous of each other, they are not so of the Europeans, and they think it impossible that the taste of the women can be so depraved as to grant any liberties to a white man. Their religion is paganism.

Benin, the capital of a kingdom of the same name in Africa, formerly a very closely built and populous city. In the streets, which are long and broad, are many shops filled with European merchandise, as well as with the commodities of the country. The women keep the streets clean. The king's palace makes great part of the town; and its great extent excepted, there is nothing worth taking notice of, being only a confused heap of buildings, made with boards or clay, without regularity or neatness. The houses are large, with clay walls, and at a distance from each other. They are covered with reeds, straw, and leaves. Benin is situate on the river Benin or Formosa. Lon. 5 4 E, lat. 7 30 N.

Bennevis, a mountain in Invernesshire, near Fort William. It is esteemed the highest in Britain, rising more than 4300 feet above the level of the sea, its pointed summit capped with snow.

Bennington, the chief town of Bennington county, Vermont, 36 miles W of Brattleborough, and 33 N of Pittsfield in Massachusetts. It contained 2283 inhabitants in 1800, and is famous for a victory obtained here by the Americans over a detachment of the British army, which was a prelude to the de-lake Champlaine; 9 miles N by W of Fairhaven, and 27 N W of Rutland. In 1800 it had 1159 inhabitants.

Bentheim, a town of Westphalia, capital of a county of the same name, seated on the Vecht, 32 miles N W of Munster. Lon. 7 25 E, lat. 52 23 N.

Bentivoglio, a town and castle of Italy in the Bolognese, 10 miles N E of Bologna. Lon. 11 34 E, lat. 44 37 N.

Berar, a soubah of the decan of Hindeostan, bounded by Malwa and Allahabad on the N, Orissa on the E, Gol-conda on the S, and Candcish and Dowlatabad on the W. Less is known of the interior parts of Berar, than of most of the other countries in Hindeostan. That about Nagpour is fertile and well cultivated; but the general appearance of the country, particularly between Nagpour and Orissa, is that of a forest, thinly set with villages and towns. Its capital is Nagpour.

Beraun, a town of Bohemia, and capital of a circle of the same name, 11 miles W of Prague. Lon. 14 25 E,
lat. 50 3 N.

Berbice, a Dutch settlement, on a river of the same name, in Guiana, two leagues W of Paramaribo. It was taken by the English fleet in May, 1796.

Berchtolsgaben, a town of Germany, in the archbishopric of Saltzburg. It serves all the neighbourhood with salt; and is seated on the river Aa, 10 miles S W of Saltzburg. Lon. 13 0 E, lat.

Berg, a dutchy of Westphalia, very mountainous and woody. Dusseldorp is the capital.

Bergamo, a province of Italy, in the territory of Venice, bounded by Brescia, the Valteline, and the Milanese.
Toward the N it is mountainous and rocky; but about the capital, Bergamo, it is very fertile. Their language is the most corrupt of any in Italy.

Bergamo, an ancient town of Italy, capital of Bergamo, with a strong citadel, and a bishop's see, famous for its sewing silk. It is 30 miles N E of Millan. Lon. 9 47 E, lat. 45 46 N.

Bergarac, a trading town of France, in the department of Dordogne, and late province of Perigord, seated on the river Dordogne, 50 miles E of Bourdeaux. Lon. 0 42 E, lat. 45 0 N.

Bergas, a town of Romania, and the see of a Greek archbishop. It is seated on the river Larissa, 40 miles S E of Adrianople. Lon. 27 40 E, lat. 41

Bergen, a town of Swedish Pomer-ania, capital of the isle of Rugen, 12 miles N E of Stralsund. Lon. 13 40 E,
lat. 54 23 N.

Bergen-op-Zoom, a town of Dutch Brabant in the marquisate of the same name. It is a handsome place, and one of the strongest in the Netherlands, seated partly on a hill, about a mile and a half from the Scheldt, with which it communicates by a canal; it has several times been besieged to no purpose; but was taken by the French in 1747, by treachery. It was likewise taken by the French in 1793. It is 15 miles N of Antwerp, and 22 S W of Breda.
Lon. 4 25 E, lat. 51 27 N.

Bergues, St. vinox, a fortified town of France, in the department of the North and late county of Flanders, seated on the river Colme, at the foot of a mountain, five miles S of Dunkirk. Lon. 2 manding a delightful view of the country and the Severn. In the civil wars it suffered considerably, as it did a few years ago by an accidental fire. The room in which Edward II. was imprisoned is still to be seen. It is seated on a brook that flows into the Severn, 18 miles S W of Gloucester, and 113 W of London. Lon. 2 23 W, lat. 51 45 N.

Berkley Springs, a village in Berkeley county, Virginia, where there is a post-office 104 miles from Washington.

Berkhamstead, a town of Herts, with a market on Monday. It was anciently a Roman town; and Roman coins have been often dug up here. On the N side are the remains of a castle, the residence of the kings of Mercia. In 697, a parliament was held here, and Ina's laws published. Here William the Conqueror swore to his nobility to maintain the laws made by his predecessors. Henry II. kept his court in this town, and granted to it many privileges, and James I. whose children were nursed here, made it a corporation; but this government was dropped in the civil wars. Here are two hospitals, a handsome Gothic church, and a freeschool. It is 26 miles N W of London. Lon. 0 31 W, lat. 51 46 N.

Berks, or Berkshire, an inland county of England, bounded on the E by Surry, on the S by Hants, on the W by Wilts, and on the N by Oxfordshire and Bucks. From E to W it extends above 50 miles, and from N to S it is 25 miles in the widest, though not more than six in the narrowest part. It lies in the diocese of Salisbury; contains 20 hundreds, 12 market-towns, and 140 parishes; and sends nine members to parliament. The air is healthy, even in the vales. Its chief rivers are the Thames, Kennet, Lamborn, and Loddon. The E part has much uncultivated land, as Windsor Forest and its appendages: the W and middle parts produce great plenty of wheat and barley. Reading is the capital.

Berks, a county of Pennsylvania, 67 miles long and 29 broad. The inhabitants in 1790, were 30,177. Reading is the capital.

Berlin, a considerable city of Germany, capital of the electorate of Brandenburg, where the king of Prussia resides. This city is one of the largest, best built, and best governed of any in Germany. The streets are large, clean, elegant, and some of them very long and well paved. There are also several large and beautiful squares, with pleasant walks. It is surrounded with handsome gardens, which produce excellent fruit. Berlin is divided into five parts without including the suburbs. The royal street is one of the longest and most frequented in the city. It is crossed by five others which are large and fine. On the new bridge over the Spree is an equestrian statue of William the Great, which is esteemed an exquisite piece of workmanship. After this bridge is past, the king's palace appears, which is a grand and superb edifice; it is four stories high, and the apartments are extremely magnificent. No palace in Europe has such a great quantity of silver-tables, lustres, branched candlesticks, &c. The opera-house is an elegant modern edifice. The front has a noble portico supported by Corinthian columns, and a pediment adorned with basso relievos and statues. The columns which support the roof throw the whole into a grand saloon. The arsenal consists of four grand buildings, that form a court in the middle, like a college; each front has three large porticos. There are other things worthy of observation, such as the cabinet of medals, and of the antiquities belonging to the king; and the royal library which has many scarce books and manuscripts. There is a canal cut from the river Spree to the Oder, on the E, and another thence to the Elbe on the W. It has a communication by water, both with the Baltic Sea and the German Ocean; and is seated on the Spree, 42 miles N W of Frankfort on the Oder, and 300 N by W of Vienna. Lon. 13 26 E, lat. 52 32 N.

Berlin, a post-town of Hartford county, Connecticut, 10 miles S of Hartford.

Berlin, a village with a post-office in Adams county, Pennsylvania, six miles N of Abbotstown, 20 S of Carlisle, and about 100 W of Philadelphia.

Bermuda, Somers, or Summer Islands, a cluster of small islands, nearly in the form of a shepherd's crook, and surrounded by rocks, which render them almost inaccessible to strangers. They lie in the Atlantic Ocean, 500 miles E of Carolina, and are inhabited by the English. They were discovered by Juan Bermudez, a Spaniard; but not inhabited till 1609, when Sir George Somers was cast away upon them, and they have belonged to Britain ever since. It is universally agreed that the nature of these islands has undergone a surprising alteration to the worse since they were discovered; the air being much more inclement, and the soil much more barren than formerly. The town of St. George, on St. George's Island, is the capital. Lon. 63 28 W, lat. 32 35 N.

Bern, the largest of the 13 cantons of Switzerland, 150 miles in length, and 75 in breadth. It is divided into two principal parts called the German and Roman; but the last is most commonly called the Pays de Vuud. The religion is Calvinism, and Bern the capital.

Bern, the capital of the canton of Bern in Switzerland. Here is a celebrated school, a rich library, and 12 companies of tradesmen, in one of which every inhabitant is obliged to be enrolled before he can enjoy any office. It is a strong place in a peninsula, formed by the river Aar. The houses are mostly built of white freestone, and in the principal streets have piazzas or arches under them, for the convenience of walking in wet weather. Criminals, with iron collars round their necks, are employed in removing rubbish from the streets and public walks. The public buildings are magnificent. In 1799 Bern was, together with the rest of Switzerland, obliged to surrender to the French. Bern is 70 miles N E of Geneva. Lon. 7 10 E, lat. 46 52 N.

Bernard, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Brandenburg, five miles from Berlin, famous for its excellent beer.

Bernard, Great St. a mountain of Switzerland, between Vallais and Val d'Aousta, at the source of the river Drance. The top of it is always covered with snow, and there is a large convent, where the monks entertain all strangers gratis for three days, without any distinction of religion.

Bernay, a trading town of France, in the department of Eure and late province of Normandy, seated on the river Carantonne, 20 miles S W of Rouen. Lon. 0 50 E, lat. 49 6 N.

Bernburg, a town of Germany, in the principality of Anhalt, where a branch Bertinero, a town of Italy in Romagna, with a strong citadel, and a bishop's see. It is seated on a hill, 50 miles N E of Florence. Lon. 11 40 E, lat. 44 18 N.

Bertrand, St. a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne and late province of Languedoc, 43 miles S of Auch. Lon. 0 48 E, lat. 42 56 N.

Bervie, a seaport and borough in the county of Kincardine, at the mouth of a river of the same name, 25 miles S W of Aberdeen. Lon. 2 0 W, lat. 56 40 N.

Berwick, a town and county of itself, on the borders of England and Scotland, with a market on Saturday. It is governed by a mayor; and was once a strong fortress, of great importance when England and Scotland were hostile nations. It is still fortified and has a ditch on the N and E; on the S and W it has high walls, regularly fortified and planted with cannon, to which the river serves as a moat. It had a strong castle now in ruins. It is large and populous, has a good trade in corn and salmon, and is seated on the Tweed, over which is a handsome bridge of 15 arches. It sends two members to parliament, and is 147 miles N of York, 52 S E of Edinburgh, and 336 N by W of London. Lon. 1 46 W, lat. 55 45 N.

Berwick-North, a borough in the county of East Lothian on the frith of Forth, 30 miles N W of Berwick upon Tweed. Lon. 2 33 W, lat. 56 5 N.

Berwickshire, a county of Scotland, sometimes called the Mers; bounded on the E by the German Ocean, on the S E by the Tweed, on the S by Roxburghshire, on the W by Edinburghshire, and on the N W by Haddingtonshire. It abounds with corn and grass, and being a low and flat country, is sometimes called the How [Hollow] of the Mers. The S E angle is occupied by Berwick Bounds; a district only eight miles in compass, governed by English laws, and accounted part of an English county. The principal rivers are the Tweed, Leather, Blackadder, Whiteadder, and Eye.

Berwick, a town of York county, Maine, on the E side of Piscataqua river, about seven miles from York, the county town. It has a post-office, and an academy. The township contains 3891 inhabitants.

Berwick, a village with a post-office, in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania; situated on the W side of Susquehanna river, opposite to the head of the turnpike road, between this river and the Lehigh, a branch of the river Delaware. It is 16 miles N E of Catawissey, 37 of Northumberland, and about 35 W of the navigable part of the Lehigh.

Berwyn Hills, lofty hills at the N E angle of Merionethshire, beneath which spreads the fine vale, in which flows the infant river Dee.

Besancon, an ancient and populous city of France, in the department of Doubs and late province of Franche Comté. It has a citadel, on a high rock, the base of which touches both sides of the Doubs, which here forms a peninsula. The triumphal arch of Aurelian, and other Roman antiquities are still to be seen. The streets are wide and handsome, and the houses are well built with free-stone. It is 52 miles E of Dijon, and 208 S E of Paris. Lon. 6 2 E, lat. 47 13 N.

Bessarabia, a territory of Turkey in Europe, between the Danube and the Dniester, along whose banks the Tartar inhabitants rove and maintain themselves by their cattle, by husbandry, and by robbery. Their common food is the flesh of oxen and horses, cheese, and mare's milk. Bender is the capital.

Betuwe, a fertile island of Dutch Guelderland, 40 miles long and 10 broad, containing, in that space, eight cities and several hundred villages. It is formed by the bifurcation of the Rhine above Nimeguen, and by the union of its streams, under different appellations, near Worcum. It was the ancient Batavia, and formerly gave the name of Batavians, to the inhabitants of the Dutch Netherlands. In this morass (as it then was) the ancestors of the present race first settled, when, they emigrated from Germany; and it was principally hence that the Dutch spread themselves over the different provinces.

Birmingham, a large town in War- wickshire, with a market on Thursday. It is no corporation, and therefore free for any person to settle there; which has contributed greatly not only to the increase of buildings, but also of the trade, which is the most flourishing of any in England for all sorts of iron work besides many other curious ma- nufactures. The town stands on the side of a hill, nearly in the form of a half-moon. The lower part is filled with workshops and warehouses, and consists chiefly of old buildings. The upper part contains a number of new and regular streets, and a handsome square, elegantly built. It has two churches; one in the lower part of the town, which is an ancient building, with a lofty spire; the other, a grand modern structure having a square stone tower, with a cupola, and turret above it; it has also two chapels and several meeting houses. It had an elegant theatre, which was burnt in 1792. Birmingham has been long famous for its hardware manufactures; but of late years, by great additions to its trade from a vast variety of articles, such as metal buttons, buckles, plated goods, japanned and paper ware, &c. it has become more populous than any of the modern trading towns in England. They export their goods in great quan- tities to foreign countries, where, in point of cheapness and elegance, they are unrivalled. It is plentifully supplied with coal by means of a canal to Wednesbury; and it has a communication with the Great Trunk from the Trent to the Severn, by a branch passing by Wolverhampton. The improved steam engines, made here by Bolton and Watt, deserve to rank high among the productions of human ingenuity: their application to various mechanical purposes, and particularly to the draining of mines, places them among the most valuable inventions of the age. Birmingham is 17 miles NW of Coventry and 116 of London. Lon. 1 50 W, lat. 52 30 N.

Birwiesca, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, 15 miles N of Burgos. Lon. 3 30 W, lat. 42 35 N.

Bokhara, a city of Usbec Tartary, capital of Bokharia. In 1219 it was besieged by Jenghiz Khan, taken and destroyed, but was by his orders rebuilt, and is now large and populous.
It is seated on a rising ground, with a slender wall of earth, and a dry ditch.
The houses are low, built mostly of mud; but the caravansaries and mosques, which are numerous, are all of brick. The bazars, or market-places which have been stately buildings, are now mostly in ruins. Here is also a stately building for the education of the priests. Great numbers of Jews and Arabians frequent this place; tho' they are frequently deprived of all their properties by the khan or his at-general name for all that vast tract of land lying between Karazm, and the sandy desert bordering on China. It is divided into Great and Little Bukharia. Great Bukharia is situated between 34 and 46° N lat. and 76 and 92° E lon. It is bounded on the N by the river Sir; on the E by the kingdom of Kashgar, on the S by Persia and the peninsula within the Ganges, and on the W by the country of Karazm. It is an exceeding rich and fertile country; the mountains abound with the richest mines; the valleys are of an astonishing fertility; the fields are covered with grass the height of a man, and the rivers abound with excellent fish. Little Bukharia is sufficiently populous and fertile; but the great el-vation of its land, joined to the height of the mountains which bound it in several parts, renders it much colder than from its situation might be expected. It contains rich mines of gold and silver.

at the foot of the Appennine mountains, in a fruitful plain and salubrious air.
The river Saronia runs near its walls, and the Reno, which turns 400 mills for the silk works, through the city.
There are a great number of palaces, particularly the Palazzo Publico, in which the cardinal legate, or viceroys of the pope resides. In the area before this palace, is a noble marble fountain, the principal figure of which, a Neptune in bronze, eleven feet high, the workmanship of Giovanni di Bologna, is highly esteemed. The anatomical theatre, besides its museum, is adorned with statues of celebrated physicians. The church of St. Petronius is the largest in Bologna; and on the pavement of this, Cassini drew his meridian line. There are 168 other churches. Though the nobility are not rich, many of their palaces are furnished in a magnificent taste, and contain paintings of great value; the palaces having been built and ornamented when the families of the proprietors were richer, and when the finest works of architecture and painting could be procured on easier terms. The private houses are well built, and the city contains 80,000 inhabitants. They carry on a considerable trade in silks and velvets, which are manufactured here in great perfection. The surrounding country produces immense quantities of oil, wine, flax, and hemp, and furnishes all Europe with sausages, macaroni, liqueurs, essences, and even lapdogs. Bologna was taken by the French in 1796, but has since been retaken by Suwarrow. It is seated at the foot of the Appennines, 22 miles S E of Modena, and 175 N W of Rome. Lon. 11 21 E, lat. 44 30 N.

Bolognese, a province of Italy, in the territory of the church, bounded on the N by the Ferrareses, on the W by Modena, on the S by the Romagna, and on the E by Romagna. It is watered by many small rivers, which render the soil the most fertile of any in Italy. It produces all sorts of grain and fruits, particularly muscadine grapes, which are in high esteem. The country round Bologna seems one continued garden. The vineyards are not divided by hedges, but by rows of elms and mulberry trees; the vines hanging in festoons, from one tree to another, in a beautiful manner. There are also mines of alum and iron. Bologna is the capital.

It is situated on the W coast of the Deccan, seven miles in length, and 20 in circumference. It came to the English by the marriage of Charles II. with Catharine of Portugal. It contains a strong and capacious fortress, a large city, dockyard and marine arsenal. The ground is barren, and good water scarce. It was formerly counted very unhealthy; but, by draining the bogs, and other methods, the air is greatly altered for the better. It has abundance of cocoa-nuts, but scarce any corn or cattle. The inhabitants are of several nations, and very numerous. It is 150 miles S of Surat. Lon. 72 38 E, lat. 18 58 N.

and the Simbani Wilderness; on the S W by Woolli; on the W by Foota Torra; and on the N by Kajaaga. The country, like that of Woolli, is very generally covered with woods, but the land is more elevated, and towards the Falceme river rises into considerable hills. In native fertility the soil is not surpassed, (according to Mr. Park,) by any part of Africa. From the central situation of Bondou, between the Gambia and Senegal rivers, it is become a place of great resort, both for the Slatees, who generally pass thro' it, in going from the Coast to the interior countries; and for occasional traders, who frequently come hither from the inland countries, to purchase salt. By means of the duties, which are very heavy, the king of Bondou is well supplied with arms and ammunition; a circumstance which makes him formidable to the neighbouring states. The chief inhabitants are the Foulahs who are in general of a tawny complexion, with small features, and soft silky hair. They are naturally of a mild and gentle disposition, but the uncharitable maxims of the Koran have made them less hospitable to strangers, and more reserved in their behaviour than the Mandingoes. They evidently consider all the Negro natives as their inferiors; and when talking of different nations, always rank themselves among the white people. Their government differs from that of the Mandingoes chiefly in this, that they are more immediately under the influence of the Mahomedan laws; for all the chief men (the king excepted) and a large majority of the inhabitants of Bondou, are Mussulmen, and the authority and laws of the Prophet, are every where looked upon as sacred and decisive. In the exercise of their faith, however, they are not very intolerant towards such of their countrymen as still retain their ancient superstitions. Religious persecution is not known among them, nor is it necessary: for the system of Mahomet is made to extend itself by means abundantly more efficacious. By establishing small schools in the different towns, where many of the Pagan as well as Mahomedan children are taught to read the Koran, and instructed in the tenets of the Prophet, the Mahomedan priests fix a bias on the minds, and form the character of their young disciples, which no accidents of life can ever afterwards remove or alter. Many of these little schools Mr. Park visited in his progress through the country, and observed with pleasure the great docility and submissive deportment of the children, Bormio, a town of the country of the Grisons, capital of a county of the same name, bounded on the S by the state of Venice, on the E by the territory of Austria, and on the S and W by Caddea. It contains about 1000 inhabitants, and has a desolate appearance. The houses are of stone plastered; a few make a tolerable figure amid many with paper windows; and several, like the Italian cottages, have only wooden window shutters. It is 40 miles S E of Coire. Lon. 10 5 E, lat. 46 25 N.

Borneo, an island in the Indian Ocean, discovered by the Portuguese in 1521, before the discovery of New Holland, thought to be the largest in the world, being 1800 miles in circumference. It is seated under the equator, that line cutting it almost thro' the middle. It is almost of a circular figure, abounds with gold, and the finest diamonds in the Indies are found in its rivers, being probably washed down from the hills by torrents. It produces likewise rice, pepper, fruits and beeswax, which last is used instead of money. The beasts are oxen, buffaloes, deer, goats, elephants, tigers and monkeys. This island has fine rivers especially toward the W and S. The rainy season continues for eight months in the year, and, as during that time all the flat country is overflowed, the air is rendered very unhealthy, and the inhabitants are forced to build their houses on floats which they make fast to trees. The houses have but one floor with partitions made of cane. The people are very swarthy, and go almost naked. There are Mahometans on the sea-coast; but the rest are Gentoos. The East India Company had factories here; but differences arising between them and the natives, they were driven away or murdered. The capital, of the same name, is large and populous, with a good harbour, and seated on the N W side. Lon. 112 27 E, lat. 4 55 N.

Bornholm, an island of the Baltic Sea, 20 miles S E of Schonen in Sweden. Lon. 14 56 E, lat. 54 55 N.

but all the rest is well watered by springs and rivers that tumble down with a dreadful noise from the mountains; rendering the country prolific in corn, grass, and fruits, and giving it a pleasing aspect. The eastern and western frontiers are divided into mountains and valleys, the latter being all covered with flocks of cattle, fields of rice and millet, and many of the mountains with wood, fruit-trees, and cotton.
The climate is said to be characterized by excessive, though not by uniform heat. Two seasons, one commencing soon after the middle of April, the other at the same period in October, divide the year. The first is introduced by violent winds, that bring with them, from the S E and S an intense heat, with a deluge of sultry rain, and such tempests of thunder and lightning as destroy multitudes of the cattle and many of the people. At the commencement of the second season, the ardent heat subsides; the air becomes soft and mild, and the weather perfectly serene.
The complexion of the natives is black;
but they are not of the Negro cast.
The dress of the greater part consists of shirts of blue cotton manufactured in the country, of a red cap imported from Tripoli, and a white muslin turban from Cairo. Noserings of gold are worn by the principal poeple. But the only covering of the poorer sort, is sometimes a kind of girdle for the waist. They cultivate Indian corn, the horse-bean of Europe, the common kidney bean, cotton, hemp, and Indigo.
They have figs, grapes, apricots, pomegranates, lemons, limes, and melons. Horses, asses, mules, dogs, horned cattle, goats, sheep, and camels (of the flesh of which they are very fond) are the common animals.
Their bees are so numerous, that the wax is often thrown away as an article of no value. Their game consists of the partridge, wild duck, and ostrich, the flesh of which they prize above every other. Their other wild animals are the lion, leopard, civet cat, wolf, fox; the elephant, which is not common, and of which they make no use; the antelope, camelopardalis, crocodile, and hippopotamus. They are much infested with snakes, scorpions, centi-pedes, and toads. More than thirty different languages are said to be spoken in Bornou and its dependencies; and the reigning religion is the Mahometan. Their monarchy is elective. On the death of the sovereign, the privilege of choosing a successor from among his sons, is conferred on three persons, whose age, and character for wisdom, are denoted by the title of elders.

BOR

These retire to a sequestered place, the avenues to which are guarded; and while their deliberations last, the princes are confined in separate chambers of the palace. The choice being made, they proceed to the apartment of the sovereign elect, and conduct him to the gloomy place where the corpse of his father, that cannot be interred till the conclusion of this awful ceremony, awaits his arrival. There the elders expatiate to him on the virtues and defects of his deceased parent; describing with panegyric or censure, the measures that exalted or sunk the glory of his reign. The sultan is said to have 500 ladies in his seraglio, and that his stud likewise contains 500 horses.
He has a vast army, which consists almost entirely of horse; the sabre, lance, pike, and bow, are their weapons of offence, and a shield of hides is their armour. In their manners the people are courteous and humane: they are passionately fond of play, the lower classes of draughts; and the higher excel in chess. The capital is of the same name.

Bornou, the capital of the empire of Bornou, situate in a flat country, on the banks of a small river. It consists of a multitude of houses, neatly plastered, both within and without, with clay or mud; but they are so irregularly placed, that the spaces between them cannot be called streets. Their mosques are constructed of brick and earth; and they have schools, in which the Koran is taught, as in the principal towns of Barbary. The royal palace, forming a kind of citadel, is built in a corner of the town. Bornou is surrounded by a wall, and is 650 miles S E of Mourzok.

Boston, the capital of Massachusetts, as well as of all the New England States, containing 2870 dwelling houses, and 24,937 inhabitants. It is seated at the bottom of Massachusetts bay, on a peninsula which was called by the Indians Shaamut, the first buildings being erected in 1631. The entrance is narrow and difficult, but the harbour is safe, and capacious enough to contain 500 sail of shipping in a good depth of water.—The quays and wharves are convenient, one of the latter, called the Long Wharf, extending 600 yards into the bay with a breadth of 100 feet, and far exceeds any other structure of the kind in the United States.—The principal public buildings are, a State House, a grand and superb edifice, erected in 1795, Fanuel Hall, an alms house, work house, bridewell, and 16 places of religious worship, besides banks and theatres. Some of these buildings are finished in a style of great elegance.—The entrance into the harbour is defended by a castle, formerly called Castle William, on which are mounted about 40 pieces of heavy artillery, besides many of a smaller size.—Great part of the town is built in a semi-circular form fronting the harbour, on which side it appears to great advantage.—The streets are irregular, with exception of a few, particularly the main street which leads from the long wharf, and exhibits thence a pleasing prospect of the town house, and a double range of well built dwelling houses.—It lies in the lat. of 42° 29' N, and lon. of 70° 52' W of London, 252 m. Bourdeaux, an ancient city of France, in the department of Gironde, and late province of Guienne. It was an archbishop's see; has a university, and an academy of arts and sciences. It is built in the form of a bow, of which the river Garonne is the string. This river is bordered by a large quay, and the water rises four yards at full tide, for which reason the largest vessels can come up to it very readily. The castle called the Trumpet is seated at the entrance of the quay, and the river runs round its walls. The town has 12 gates; and near another castle are fine walks under several rows of trees. The ancient city of Bourdeaux, though considerable in point of size, was ill built, badly paved, without police, or any of these municipal regulations, indispensably requisite to render a city splendid or elegant. It has entirely changed its appearance within these last 40 years. The public edifices are very noble, and all the streets newly built are regular and handsome. The quays are four miles in length, and the river itself is considerably broader than the Thames at London bridge. The beauty of the river Garonne and the beauty of the surrounding country were probably the causes which induced the Romans to lay the foundations of this city. The ruins of a very large amphitheatre yet remain, constructed under the emperor Galienus, built of brick; likewise several aqueducts. It is 87 miles S of Rochelle, and 325 S W of Paris. from Europe, increase prodigiously.

They have several animals not known in Europe; among the rest, a beautiful bird called Colibri which in size is not much larger than that of a Maybug, but sings as harmoniously as a nightingale. The Portuguese chiefly inhabit the coast; for they have not penetrated far into the country. The inland parts are full of people of different languages; but they all agree in wearing no sort of clothes. They are of a copper colour, with long coarse black hair on their heads, but without any on the other parts of their bodies, like the rest of the Americans. They are strong, lively, and gay, and being subject to few diseases, live a long time. They love to adorn themselves with feathers, and are fond of feasts, at which they dance immoderately. They have no temples, nor any other sign of religion; and they make no manner of scruple to marry their nearest relations. They have huts made of the branches of trees, and covered with palm leaves. Their furniture consists chiefly in their hammocks, and dishes, or cups made of calibashes, painted without of a red colour, and black within. Their knives are made of a sort of stone and split canes; and they have baskets of different sizes, chiefly made of palm leaves. Their arms are bows, arrows, and wooden clubs. When they travel they fasten their hammocks between two trees, and sleep all night therein.

Brechin, a borough in Angusshire.
It consists of one large handsome street, and two smaller; and is seated on the side of a small hill, washed by the river Southesk, over which there is a stone bridge of two large arches. It is a royal borough, and with four others sends a member to parliament. It lies at eight miles distance from Montrose, and the tide flows within two miles of the town. The cathedral is a Gothic pile, supported by 12 pillars. It is in length 166 feet; in breadth 61; part is ruinous, and part serves as a parish church. The west end of one of the aisles is entire; its door is Gothic, and the arch consists of many mouldings.
The steeple is a handsome tower, 120 feet high; the four lower windows in form of long narrow openings. The top is battlemented, and from it rises a handsome spire. At a small distance from the aisle stands one of those singular round towers, whose use has so long baffled the conjectures of antiquaries. This tower has been observed to shake with the wind. The castle of Brechin was built on an eminence a little S of the town, and was gallantly defended against the English in 1303, by Sir Thomas Maule. The family of Pannure have now a house in the situation of the old castle. Its manufactures of coarse linen and sail cloth are at present prosperous, it has a weekly market on Tuesday, to which great quantities of yarn are brought from the country for sale; there are also here several fairs through the year for cattle. It is 70 miles N E of Edinburgh. Lon. 2 18 E, lat. 56 40 N.

Brecknock, or Brecon, the capital of Brecknockshire, called by the Welsh Abber-Honddey, and seated at the confluence of the Honddey and Usk. It is an ancient place, as appears by the Roman coins that are often dug up here. It sends one member to parliament, and is 34 miles N W of Monmouth, and 162 W by N of London. Lon. 3 22 W, lat. 51 54 N.

Brecknockshire, a county of South Wales, 39 miles in length, and 27 in breadth; bounded on the E by Herefordshire and Monmouthshire, on the S by Glamorganshire, on the W by Carmarthenshire and Cardiganshire, and on the N by Radnorshire. It is full of mountains, some of which are exceedingly high, particularly Monuchdenny hill, not far from Brecknock; but there are large fertile plains and valleys, which yield plenty of corn, and feed great numbers of cattle. Its principal rivers are the Wye and the Usk.

Breda, a city of Dutch Brabant, large, populous and well built. It is regularly fortified after the modern way, and is one of the strongest places on the Dutch frontiers. It is seated on the river Meek, in a marshy country, which may be overflowed and rendered inaccessible to an army. The great church is a noble structure, with a fine spire, 362 feet high. It was taken by the French in 1793, and again in 1795, when they overran Holland. It is 22 miles W by S of Bois-le-duc, 25 N N E of Antwerp, and 60 S of Amsterdam. Lon. 4 50 E, lat. 51 35 N.

Bregentz, a town of Germany, capital of a county of the same name, in the Tirol. It is seated on the lake of Constance, 70 miles N E of Appenzel. Lon. 9 45 E, lat. 47 27 N.

Bremgarten, a town of Switzerland, in the free lower bailiwicks, watered by the Reuss between the cantons of Zuric and Bern. The inhabitants deal chiefly in paper; and are Papists. It is divided into the Upper and Lower Town, has a handsome bridge over the Reuss, and is 10 miles W of Zuric. Lon. 8 17 E, lat. 47 20 N.

Bremen, a considerable town of Germany, capital of a dutchy of the same name, with an archbishop's see, which is secularized. It is divided by the Weser into the Old and New Town. In 1739, while the inhabitants were asleep, the magazine of powder was set on fire by lightning, and all the houses were shaken, as if there had been an earthquake. It is 22 miles E of Oldenburg. Lon. 8 48 E, lat. 53 6 N.

Bremen, a dutchy of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, lying between the Weser and the Elbe, of which the former separates it from Oldenburg, and the other from Holstein. The air is cold; but the country is fertile and well peopled. It formerly belonged to the Swedes, but was sold to the elector of Hanover, in 1716. In the winter it is subject to inundations, and particularly in 1617, on Christmas-day, several thousand cattle were drowned; beside several hundreds of men. Bremen is the capital.

Breslaw, a large, rich, and populous town of Germany, capital of Silesia, with a bishop's see, and a university. It is seated at the conflux of the Oder and Ola, which last runs through several of the streets. All the houses are built with stone, and it is surrounded by good walls, strengthened with ramparts and other works. There are two islands near it, formed by the Oder; in one of which is a church, whose tower was burnt by lightning in 1730; in the other, called Thum, is the cathedral. The royal palace was obtained by the Jesuits, where they founded a university in 1702. The two principal churches belong to the Protestants; near one of which is a college. It is 112 miles N E of Prague, and 165 N of Vienna. Lon. 17 8 E, lat. 51 3 N.

the province of Poitou, now included in the department of the Two Sevrés.

Brest, a town of France, in the department of Finesterre and late province of Brittany, with a castle seated on a craggy rock by the seaside. The streets are narrow, crooked, and all upon a declivity. The quay is above a mille in length. The arsenal was built by Lewis XIV. whose successor established a marine academy here in 1752. This is the best port in France, and has every accommodation for the navy. The English attempted in vain to take this place in 1694. It is 30 miles S E of Morlaix, and 325 N of Paris. Lon. 4 30 W, lat. 48 22 N.

Bretagny or Brittany, a late province of France, 130 miles in length, and 112 in breadth. It is surrounded by the ocean except on the E where it is united to Anjou, Maine, Normandy, and Poitou. The air is temperate, and it has large forests. It now forms the departments of the North Coast, Finesterre, Isle and Villaine, Lower Loève, and Morbinan.

Bristol, a city and seaport in Gloucestershire and Somersetsire; to which last county it was accounted to belong, before it formed a separate jurisdiction. In wealth, trade, and population, it has long been reckoned the second in this kingdom. It is seated at the confluence of the Avon with the Frome, ten miles from the influx of the Avon into the Severn. Bristol has a prodigious trade; for it is reckoned that hence 2000 ships sail yearly. The tide rising to a great height in these narrow rivers, brings vessels of considerable burden to the quay. But the largest ships are discharged at Hung-road four miles below the city, and the goods are brought to the quay by lighters. For building, equipping and repairing ships, there are docks, yards, rope walks and ship-wrights. There are some considerable woollen manufactures; and no less than 15 glass-houses, and a sugar refinery which s one of its principal manufactures. Fo supplying the city with water there are six public conduits; and handsome hackney coaches may be hired at reasonable rates. There are also stage coaches which set out every day for Bath, London, and other places. Hither is a great resort in the summer of invalids as well as other company; for whose accommodation and entertainment there is a pump-room, ball-room, coffee-house, with taverns, and a great number of elegant lodging houses, both below, on a level with the well, and above in the delightful village of Clifton, which is situated on the brow of a hill, from whence there are downs extending several miles where the company ride out for exercise. It has 18 churches, beside the cathedral, a bridge over the Avon, a custom-house, and an exchange. The Hot Well, about a mile from the town, on the side of the Avon, is much resorted to: It is of great purity, and has obtained a high reputation in consumptive cases. In St. Vincent's Rock, above this well are found those native crystals, so well known under the name of Bristol stones. Besides this well, there is a cold spring which gushes out of a rock on the side of a river that supplies the cold bath. The city walls have been demolished long ago; but there are several gates yet standing. Here are used sledges instead of carts, because the vaults and common sewers would be injured by them. Bristol is governed by a mayor, has a market on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday, and sends two members to parliament. It is 12 miles W N W of Bath, 34 S S W of Gloucester, and 124 W of London. Brugna, a country of Germany, in the province of Lower Saxony, bounded by Lunenburg, on the W by the county of Westphalia, on the S by the principality of Anhalt, Halberstadt, and Magdeburg. The principal cities are the Weser, Ocker, &c. It is divided into three counties, Wolfenbüttele, Grubenhagen, and Calenberg, which also includes the duchy of Gottingen. The capital of Wolfenbüttele has a population of 10,000; but the other two have less than 5,000.

Brugna, a large city of Germany, in the principality of Brunswick. It was an imperial and hanseatic city, and was taken by the duke of Brunswick in 1671, who ordered it to be kept in awe. In 1707, before the castle is a fine statue, with a lion made of brass, done after the life. Here is also a rich monastery of St. Blaise, whose prior is a prince of the house of Bevern. This town is famous for the liquor called Mum, which has received the name of Brunswick Mum. The number of inhabitants is about 24,000. The academy of Brunswick has been newly modelled, and the plan of education improved, by the attention and under the patronage of the hereditary prince. It is seated on the Ocker, 55 miles W of Magdeburg. Lon. 10 42 E, lat. 52 25 N.

Brunswick, a post town of Georgia, in North America, in Glynn county. It has a safe harbour capable of containing a numerous fleet of men of war; from its situation, and the fertility of the inland country, it promises to be a place of consequence. It is 70 miles W S W of Savannah, and 752 from Washington. Lat. 31 10 N, lon. 82 2 W.

Brunswick, a city of New Jersey, in North America, situate on the Raritan, 12 miles above Perth Amboy. Its situation is low and unpleasant; but the inhabitants are beginning to build on a pleasant hill which rises at the back of the town. They have a considerable inland trade, and many small vessels belonging to the port. Here was formerly a flourishing college, called Queen's college, but has declined.

Brunswick, New, in North America, one of the two provinces into which Nova Scotia was divided in 1784; bounded on the W by New England, on the N by Canada, on the E by the gulf of St. Lawrence, and on the S by the bay of Fundy and Nova Scotia. St. John's is the capital.

Brussels, the capital of Brabant, and seat of the governor of the Austrian Low Countries. It is a rich and handsome city, and has many magnificent public buildings, and walks. No city in Europe, except Naples and Genoa, makes a finer appearance at a distance; but like them it is all up and down hill. It is encompassed with a double brick wall, and has seven gates; but being seven miles in compass, is too large to hold out a long siege. In Brussels are seven fine squares or market places; that of the great market is one of the most beautiful in the world. The town house takes up one quarter of it; and has a very high steeple, on the top of which is a brazen statue of St. Michael, fifteen feet high. The opera-house is built after the Italian manner, with rows of boxes, in which are chimneys. One is covered over with looking glass, so that they can sit by the fire, and see what is doing. There are 20 public fountains, adorned with statues at the corners of the most public streets; and in the middle of the town-house is one with Neptune, the Tritons, and the horses, spouting out water from their nostrils. The nunnery called the Beguinage is like a little town, being surrounded by a wall and ditch, and has little streets, where each nun has an apartment. This nunnery exists no longer, being abolished with several others, by the French, when they took Brussels, in 1794. It is seated partly on an eminence, and partly on the rivulet Senne. It has a communication with the Scheldt by a fine canal, and is 22 miles S of Antwerp, 26 S E of Ghent, and 148 N by E of Paris. Lon. 4 21 E, lat. 50 51 N.

Bruton, a town of Somersetshire, with a market on Saturday, a free-school, founded by Edward VI.; and a stately almshouse, consisting of the ruins of a priory. It is seated on the river Brew, 12 miles S E of Wells, and 109 W of London. Lon. 2 38 W, lat. 1 7 N.

Bruyiers, a town of France, in the department of the Vosges and late province of Lorraine, 22 miles S by E of Lunéville. Lon. 6 50 E, lat. 48 18 N.

Brayns-bridge, a town of Ireland, in the county of Clare, seated on the Shannon, eight miles N of Limerick. Lon. 8 34 W, lat. 52 50 N.

Bua, an island of the gulf of Venice, on the coast of Dalmatia, near the town of Traou, called likewise partridge Island, because frequented by those birds.

Buarcos, a town of Portugal in the province of Beira, 27 miles S of Aveira. Lon. 8 30 W, lat. 40 13 N.

Buchan, a district in the N E part of Aberdeenshire, from the sea to the river Ythan, on the S.

Buchanness, the most eastern promontory of Scotland, situate in the district of Buchan, in lon. 1 26 W, lat. 57 28 N. Between this promontory and the town of Peterhead is the place called the Boilers of Buchan; a large oval cavity, sunk into the steep rocks on the coast, to the depth of 150 feet. Boats frequently sail into this awful pit, under a natural arch opening to the sea at the E end, and resembling the window of some great cathedral. At a little distance, is a vast insulated rock, divided by a narrow and very deep chasm from the land; and in the middle of the rock, many feet above the level of the water, is a large triangular aperture, through which the sea, in a storm, rushes with a tremendous noise.

Buchaw, a free imperial town of Sussia, on the Tedersee, with a monastery, whose abbess has a voice in the diet of the empire. It is 27 miles S W of Ulm. Lon. 9 40 E, lat. 48 10 N.

Bucharest, a large and strong town of Walachia, where the hospodar commonly resides. It is 45 miles S E of Tergovisto. Lon. 26 27 E, lat. 45 7 N.

Bouchorn, a free imperial town of Sussia, on the lake of Constance, 18 miles E of Constance. Lon. 9 42 E, lat. 47 41 N.

Buckenham, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday, 12 miles E by N of Thetford, and 97 N E of London. Lon. 1 6 E, lat. 52 34 N.

Buckfield, a post town of Cumberland county, Maine, 10 miles W of Turner, on the Androscoggin river, and about 50 miles N of Portland. The inhabitants of the township were 1000 at the last census.

Buckingham, the chieftown in Buckinghamshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on low ground, and almost surrounded by the Ouse, over which are three stone bridges. There was formerly a castle, on a mount, in the middle of the town. It sends two members to parliament, and is 25 miles N E of Oxford, and 57 N W of London. Lon. 0 58 W, lat. 51 56 N.

Buckinghamshire, or Bucks, a county of England, bounded on the N by Northamptonshire; on the E by Bedfordshire, Herts, and Middlesex; on the W by Oxfordshire, and on the S by Berks. It is 39 miles in length, and 18 in breadth, of an oblong form whose greatest extent is from N to S. It sends 14 members to parliament, and lies in the diocese of Lincoln. Its principal rivers are the Thames, Coln, Ouse, and Tame. The most general manufacture is bonelace and paper; and the woods of the hills, chiefly beech, form a considerable article of profit, both as fuel and timber. The air is healthy, and the soil rich, being chiefly chalk or marle.

Buckland, a village with a post-office, in Prince George county, Virginia, 42 miles from Washington, in a S W direction.

Bucks, a county of Pennsylvania, 38 miles long and 15 broad.

Buckstown, a post town of Hancock county, Maine, with 624 inhabitants.

Buda, the capital of Lower Hungary, situate on the side of a hill, on the Danube. The churches and public buildings are handsome. In the adjacent country are vineyards, which produce excellent wine; and hot baths that were in excellent order, with magnificent rooms, while the Turks had possession of this place. It is 105 miles S E of Vienna, and 560 N W of Constantinople. Lon. 18 22 E, lat. 47 25 N.

Buddesdale, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Thursday, with a small chapel. It is seated in a valley, 15 miles N E of Bury, and 88 N E of London. Lon. 1 4 E, lat. 52 22 N.

Budelich, a town of Germany, in the archbishopric of Treves, on the Traen, ten miles E of Treves. Lon. 6 55 E, lat. 49 50 N.

Budoa, a strong episcopal town of Dalmatia, subject to the Venetians. It was almost ruined by an earthquake in 1667. It is 30 miles S E of Ragusa. Lon. 18 58 E, lat. 42 30 N.

Budrio, a town of Italy in the Bolognese, whose adjacent fields produce large quantities of fine hemp. It is eight miles E of Bologna. Lon. 11 37 E, lat. 44 30 N.

Budweis, a town of Bohemia, 70 miles S of Prague, and 85 N W of Vienna. Lon. 14 52 E, lat. 48 55 N.

Buen Ayre. See Bonaire.

Buenos Ayres, a country of South America, belonging to the Spaniards. This name given from the pleasantness of the climate, is extended to the country lying between Tucuman on the E, Paraguay on the N, and Terra Magellanica, on the S. No country in the world abounds more in horned cattle and horses, where the greatest expence of a horse or cow is the catching it. In such abundance are these useful animals, that the hide alone is deemed of any value, as this constitutes a main article in the trade of the country. Lon. 58 31 W, lat. 34 35 S.

BUL

Bud, the capital of the country called Buenos Ayres in South America, was founded in the year 1735, under the direction of Don Pedro de Mendoza, at that time governor. It stands on a point called Cape Blanco, on the S side of the Plata, 50 miles from the sea, fronting a small river. The situa- tion is in a fine plain, rising by a gentle ascent from the river; and truly del- ightful, whether we regard the tem- perature of the climate, the fertility of the soil, or the beautiful verdure which overspreads the whole face of the country. The city is very considerable in extent, containing 3000 houses. The streets are straight, broad and pretty equal in the heights and dimensions of the buildings. Most of the buildings are of chalk or brick, except the ca- thedral, a magnificent structure com- posed chiefly of stone.

Bugia, a province of Algiers, in Af- rica, surrounded with mountains, and very fertile in corn.

Bugia, a seaport of the kingdom of Algiers, at the mouth of the Major, on a bay of the Mediterranean. It has a handsome port formed by a narrow neck of land running into the sea; a great part of whose promontory was formerly faced with a wall of hewn stone. The city itself is built on the ruins of a large one, at the foot of a high mountain, where there is also a castle that commands the whole town, besides two others at the bottom, built for the security of the port. It is 75 miles E of Algiers. Lon. 3 58 E, lat. 36 49 N.

Builth, a town in Brecknockshire, seated on the Wye, over which is a wooden bridge into Radnorshire. It has a market on Monday and Saturday, and is 12 miles N of Brecknock, and 171 W by N of London. Lon. 3 14 W, lat. 52 8 N.

Buic, a town of France, now in the department of Drome, lately in the province of Dauphiny, 40 miles S W of Gap.

Bukari, a small but well built town of Hungarian Dalmatia, with a harbour on the gulf of Bikeriza, near the gulf of Venice, ten miles N E of Veglia. Lon. 14 59 E, lat. 45 29 N.

Bulac, a town of Egypt, on the Nile, two miles W of Grand Cairo, being the seaport of that city. On the N side of it is the Calisch, whose banks are cut every year to convey the waters of the Nile, by a canal, to Grand Cairo. Lon. 31 22 E, lat. 30 2 N.

Bulam, an island of Africa, at the mouth of the Rio Grande. The soil is good; and as it was uninhabited, a settlement of free blacks was formed here, in 1792, by the English, who purchased it of the neighbouring king, but has been since entirely relinquished. Lon. 15 0 W, lat. 11 0 N.

Bulgaria, a province of Turkey in Europe, bounded on the N by Wala- chia, on the E by the Black Sea, on the S by Romania and Macedonia, and on the W by Servia.

Bulness, or Bowness, a village in Cum- berland, at the end of the Picts Wall, on the Solway Frith. It was a Roman station, called Blatum Bulgium; and hence Antoninus began his Itinerary. It is 13 miles W by N of Carlise.

Bundela, or Bundelcund, a territory of Hindoostan Proper, on the S W of the river Junna, and separated from it by a narrow tract of low country. It is surrounded by the dominions of Oude, Benares and the Malharras. It is a mountainous tract of more than 100 miles square, and contains the cele- brated diamond mines of Panna, with some strong fortresses. Chatterpour is the capital. Lon. 79 75 E, lat. 25 0 N.

Bungay, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Thursday, seated on the Wavney, which is navigable hence to Yarmouth. It is 36 miles N by E of Ips- wich, and 107 N E of London. Lon. 1 30 E, lat. 52 35 N.

Bungo, a kingdom of Japan, in the island of Ximo, whose capital is Lunay.

Burlington, an ancient city, in Burlington county, New Jersey; seated on the S E bank of the river Delaware, opposite to Bristol, and 20 miles above Philadelphia. It was founded in 1677, and called New Beverly; it has a safe harbour for shipping, with a considerable depth of water, but has progressed slowly in population, containing at present (1805) but a few more than 2000 inhabitants. The municipal jurisdiction is vested in a mayor and aldermen. The buildings are principally of bricks, and constructed in a plain commodious style, with a large garden lot to each house. There is an episcopal church, two or three meeting houses, a considerable brewery, a court house, and gaol in this town, though the seat of justice has been lately removed to Mountholly.

Burlington, a post town of Chittenden county, Vermont, situated on the E side of Lake Champlain, four miles S of Onion river, and 20 miles northerly of Vergennes. The situation is healthy and pleasant, which induced the legislature to pass a law for the establishment of an university at this town. The township contains 815 inhabitants.

Burmah, an extensive kingdom of Asia, to the E of the Ganges; sometimes, but erroneously, called Ava, from its reputed capital. It is bounded by Pegu on the N and occupies both sides of the river Ava, as far as the frontiers of China; on the N W by Meckley; on the W it has Aracan, and on the E Upper Siam. This country, which is little known to Europeans, produces some of the best teek timber in India. Ships built of teek, upward of 40 years old, are no uncommon objects in the Indian seas, where an European ship is ruined in five years.

Burrampooter, a river of Asia, which rises near the head of the Ganges, in the mountains of Thibet. It first takes its course to the E directly opposite to that of the Ganges, and winding with a rapid current through Thibet, where it is named Sampoo, or Zanchin, it washes the border of the territory of Lassa, and proceeds S E to within 220 miles of Yuna; the westernmost province of China: then turning suddenly to the W through Assam, it enters Bengal on the N E, where it assumes the name of Borrampooter. It then makes a circle round the Western point of the Garrow mountains, and altering its course to S, meets the Ganges about 40 miles from the Sea, after having meandered for more than 2000 miles. During the last 60 miles before its junction with the Ganges, it forms a stream which is regularly from four to five miles wide; and, but for its freshness might pass for an arm of the sea. Common description fails in an attempt to convey an adequate idea of the grandeur of this magnificent object.

Bursa, or Prusa, one of the largest cities of Turkey in Asia, capital of Bec-sangil. It was the capital of the Ottoman empire before the taking of Censtantinople. It stands upon several little hills, at the foot of Mount Olym-pus, and on the edge of a fine plain full of fruit trees. So many springs proceed from the mount, that every house has its own fountain. The mosques are elegant, as are the caravansaries.
Bursa is 99 miles S of Constantinople.

Burton upon Trent, a town in Staffordshire, with a market on Thursday.
It had formerly a large abbey; and over the Trent is a famous bridge of freestone, a quarter of a mile in length, supported by 37 arches. It consists chiefly of one long street, which runs from the site of the abbey to the bridge, and has a good market for corn and provisions. Burton ale is accounted excellent, and great quantities are sent down the river to Hull, and exported to other parts of the kingdom and a-

Bury, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Thursday, seated on the Irwell, and noted for its fustian manufacture, and the coarse goods called half-thicks and kerseys. In 1787, the theatre fell, and buried under its ruins more than 300 persons, many of whom were killed or much bruised. Bury is Bury, St. Edmunds, a borough in Suffolk, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. The situation is very pleasant, and the air is supposed to be the best in England; for which reason it is frequented by genteel people. The noble ruins of its abbey, are still standing near the two churches, which are both large, and seated in one churchyard. In St. Mary's, lies Mary, queen of France, who was married to Charles Brandon duke of Suffolk. Bury sends two members to parliament, and took its name from St. Edmund the king, who was buried here, after being murdered in a wood. The assizes are held here. It is 14 miles E of Newmarket, Buttermere Water, a lake in Cumberland, eight miles S W of Keswick, two miles long, and nearly one broad. It is formed by a vast number of torrents which rushing down in never failing cataracts from a rock of vast height, called Honister Crag, forms the lake below. This lake is called the Upper Lake, and near a mile from it, to the N E is the Lower Lake, called also Cromack Water. The river Cocker flows through both these lakes to Cocker-mouth.

Butternuts, a town of Otsego county, New York. The township has 1390 inhabitants, and the post office is 440 miles from Washington.

Button's Bay, the N part of Hudson's Bay, through which attempts have been made to discover a N W passage to China. It is so called from Sir Thomas Button, who here lost his ship, and came back in a sloop built in the country. It lies between 60 and 66° N lat.

Butzaw, a town of Germany, in the bishopric of Schwerin, 17 miles S W of Rostock. Lon. 11 55 E, lat. 54 0 N.

Buxton, a village in Derbyshire, at the entrance of the Peak. The warm waters of Buxton are the bath consisting of nine springs, St. Anne's well and St. Peter's well. St. Anne's well formerly rose into a stone basin, over which an arch was erected, which still continues. It is 12 feet long and 12 broad, set round with stone-steps in the inside. In the midst of this dome the water now springs up into a stone basin two feet square. It appears by several ruins found here, that their waters were known in the time of the Romans. They are hot and sulphureous, but create an appetite, and open obstructions; and, if bathed in, give relief in scorbutic rheumatisms, nervous cases, &c. Much company resort to them in the summer. The duke of Devonshire has erected a beautiful building in the form of a crescent, which is divided into different hotels, shops, &c. with a public coffee room, and a very elegant room for assemblies and concerts. A mile from hence is another of the wonders, called Pool's Hole, at the foot of a mountain. The entrance is low and narrow, but it presently opens to a cave of considerable height, and is 696 feet long, with a roof resembling a Gothic cathedral: it contains many stalactitious concretions, and several curious representations both of art and nature, produced by the petrifying water continually dropping from the rock. Buxton is 32 miles N W of Derby, and 160 N N W of London.

Cabul, a province of Hindoostan Proper, bounded on the W by Persia, on the North by the Hindoo-ko, on the N E by Caferistan, and on the E by Rash-mere, and on the S by Candahar. It is a country highly diversified; consisting of mountains covered with eternal snow; hills of moderate height and easy ascent; rich plains and stately forests; and these enlivened by innumerable streams. It produces every article necessary to human life, with the most delicate fruits and flowers. It is sometimes called Zabulistan, from Zabul, one of the names of Ghizni, which was the ancient capital of the country. This province is subject to the king of Can-dahar.

Cabul, the capital of the province of Cabul, and of the dominions of the king of Candahar, seated near the foot of the Hindoo-ko, and the source of the Attock, which runs near it. Its situation is spoken of in terms of rapture by the Indian historians, being no less romantic than pleasant; and it has within its reach, the fruits and other products both of the temperate and torrid zone. In a political light it is considered as the gate of India towards Tartary. It is 680 miles N W of Delhi.

 the gulf of Tonquin. It contains 20,000 houses, whose walls are of mud, and the roofs covered with thatch. The houses of the English factory is the best in the place. The trading people are civil to strangers, but the great men are haughty, and the poor thievish. They are pagans and have a great number of pagodas. The factories

Cadix, a large and rich city of Spain in Andalusia, with a good harbour. It is a bishop's see, and seated on an island, 18 miles in length and nine in breadth; but the N W end, where the city stands, is not two broad. It has a communication with the continent, by a bridge. The bay formed by it is 12 miles in length and six in breadth. The S side is inaccessible by sea because it is edged with craggy rocks; and two forts, the Puntal and Matagorda, command the passage into the harbour.
 Except the Calle Ancha, all the streets are narrow, ill-paved and insufferably stinking. The roofs are flat, covered with an impenetrable cement, and few are without a turret for the purpose of commanding a view of the sea. High above all these, stands the tower of signals. Here flags are hung out on the first sight of a sail, marking the size of the ship and the nation it belongs to. The square of St. Antonio is large and tolerably handsome, and there are a few smaller openings of no great note. The public walk or Alameda is pleasant in the evening. The sea air prevents the trees from thriving, and destroys all hopes of future shade. Westward of the Alameda is Campesato, a large esplanade, fit only airing for coaches. Opposite to it is the fortress of St. Sebastian, built on a neck of land running out into the sea. The round tower at the extremity is supposed to have saved the city in the earthquake in 1753, from being swept away by the fury of the waves. The inhabitants are computed at 100,000. It is a very ancient place, being built by the Phœnicians; it was afterwards a Roman town; and there are still several remains of Roman antiquities. It is 43 miles W of Gibraltar, and 90 W by S of Malaga. Lon. 6 11 W, lat. 36 51 N.

Cadore, the capital of the district of Cadore, in Italy, 15 miles N of Belluno. Lon. 12 0 E, lat. 46 28 N.

Cadorino, a province of Italy, in the territory of Venice; bounded on the E by Friuli Proper, on the S and W by the Bellunese, and on the N by Brixen. The chief town is Cadore.

Cadauld, an island on the N coast of Flanders, at the mouth of the Scheldt, which river it commands.

Caen, a considerable city of France, in the department of Calvados and late province of Lower Normandy, of which it was the capital. It has a celebrated university, and an academy of literature, and the inhabitants are computed at 40,000. William the conqueror was buried here in the abbey of St. Stephen, which he founded. The river Orne runs through the city, to which the tide brings up large vessels. It is 65 miles W by S of Rouen, and 125 W of Paris. Lon. 0 17 W, lat. 49 11 N.

Caer. For some places that begin thus, see Caerhill, under Car.

Caerleon, a town in Monmouthshire, with a market on Thursday. It was a Roman town, as is evident from the antiquities found here; and it has the ruins of a castle. It is seated on the Usk, 19 miles S W of Monmouth, and 148 W by N of London. Lon. 3 0 W, lat. 51 40 N.

Caerphilly, a town in Glamorganshire, with a market on Thursday, five miles N of Landaff, and 158 W of London, Lon. 3 18 W, lat. 51 33 N.

Caerwent, a village in Monmouthshire, famous for a beautiful tessellated pavement, discovered here in 1777; and asserted to be superior to any such discovered on this side the Alps, and equal to those preserved at Portici.

Caffa, a town of the Crimea, with an excellent harbour: it is seated on the Black Sea, 150 miles N E of Constantinople. Lon. 35 45 E, lat. 45 8 N.

Caffa, Strait of, the ancient Cimmerian Bosphorus, a strait that forms the communication between the Black Sea and the sea of Asoph.

Caffraria, a very extensive country of Africa, bounded on the N by Negroland and Abyssinia, on the W by part of Guinea, Congo, and the sea; on the S by the Cape of Good Hope, and on the E by the sea. The Caffres are tall and well proportioned; and, in general, evince great courage in attacking lions and other beasts of prey. Their colour is a jet black; their teeth white as ivory, and their eyes large. The clothing of both sexes is the same, consisting entirely of the hides of oxen, which are as pliant as cloth. The men wear tails of different animals tied round their thighs; pieces of brass in their hair, and large ivory rings on their arms; they are adorned also with the hair of lions, and feathers fastened on their heads, with many other fantastical ornaments. They are extremely fond of dogs, and if one particularly pleases them, they will give two bullocks in exchange for it, their whole exercise is hunting, fighting, or dancing. They are expert in throwing their lances, and in time of war, use shields made of the hides of oxen. The women are employed in the cultivation of their gardens and corn. They cultivate several vegetables, which are not indigenous to the country, as tobacco, watermelons, kidneys, and hemp. The men have great pride in their cattle; and cut their horns in such a way as to be able to turn them into any shape they please; when they wish their cattle to return, they go a little way from the house and blow a whistle, which is made of bone, and so constructed as to be heard at a great distance, and in this manner bring them all home without any difficulty. Their huts are higher and more commodious than those of the Hottentots, and their lands more fertile; but their oxen and almost all their animals, are much smaller. They entertain a very high opinion of the Supreme Being, and of his power: they believe in a future state of rewards and punishments, but have no idea of the creation, thinking that the world had no beginning, and will ever continue in its present state. They have no sacred ceremonies, and never pray; they instruct their children themselves, having no priests; but instead of them a kind of conjurers whom they greatly revere. They are governed by an hereditary king, whose power is very limited, receiving no tax, and having no troops at his command; being permitted to take as many wives as he pleases, he has a larger portion of land to cultivate, and a greater number of cattle to tend and feed. His cabin is neither higher, nor better decorated than the rest; and his whole family live around him, composing a group of 12 or 15 huts. The distance of the different borders makes it necessary that they should have inferior chiefs, who are appointed by the king.

Cairngorm, a mountain of Scotland, in the E of Inverness-shire, famous for beautiful rock crystals of various tints, some of which having the lustre of fine gems, bring a high price. Its lofty top is patched with snow.

Cairo, or Grand Cairo, a large city, capital of Egypt, with a castle built on a rock. It is divided into the New and Old cities; Old Cairo is on the E side of the Nile, and almost uninhabited. New Cairo is a mile from the river Nile, and seven miles in circumference. The streets are so narrow and winding, that it is impossible to follow their direction amid the multitudes of houses which stand crowding on each other.

The castle includes the palaces of the sultans of Egypt, now almost buried under their own ruins; domes overthrown, heaps of rubbish, gilding, and pictures, the colours of which have defied corroding time, stately marble columns still standing, but in general without capitals; such are the tokens of its former magnificence. From Joseph's hall, there is a delightful prospect over the city, the pyramids, and all the country round. It was probably a terrace to that magnificent room which is now open on the top, and is adorned with large beautiful pillars of red granite. There are several public bagnios, very handsome within, and used as places of refreshment and diversion, especially for the women, who go there twice a week; but the wives of great men have baths at home. It is exceedingly populous; several families living in one house, and a number of people living in each room; and in the busy time of the day, the streets are so crowded, that it is difficult to pass along. The women have greater liberty here than in any part of the Turkish empire; and there are particular streets where the courtesans sit at the doors, richly dressed. The Calish is a canal which conveys the waters of the Nile into the city; it is 20 feet broad, and has houses on each side of it. As soon as the water begins to rise, they close the mouth of the canal with earth, and place a mark, to show the time when this and all other canals in the kingdom are to be opened, which is done with great solemnity. There are not less than 300 mosques in Cairo, the lofty minarets of which present a very picturesque appearance. The Europeans have consuls and factors here; and it was a place of very great trade, before the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope. It was taken by the French under Bonaparte, in their late expedition to Egypt. It is 100 miles S of the mouth of the Nile. Lon. 31 27 E, lat. 30 2 N.

Caitnesshire, the most northerly county of Scotland, bounded on the E by the ocean, on the S and S W by Strathnaven and Sutherland. On the N it is washed by the Pentland frith, which flows between this country and the Orkneys. Its greatest extent is 35 miles from N to S, and 20 from E to W. The whole S W part is occupied by great mountains, the abode of roes and a variety of game; and the lakes are often resorted to by numerous water-fowls. A vast ridge of hills forms the S W boundary, ending in the promontory called the Ord of Caitness. Along the side of this steep hill, impending, in a manner, above the sea, a winding road is cut, which is the only entrance into this shire from the S. The climate is good, and the soil around the coast very improveable. Its chief exports are beef, meal, barley, butter, cheese, yarn, skins, feathers, and kelp. English is chiefly spoken on the coast, but in the highlands the Gaelic prevails.

Calabria, a country of Naples, divided into Calabria Citeriore, and Calabria Ulteriore, or Hither and Further Calabria. The first is one of the 12 provinces of Naples, bounded on the S by Calabria Ulteriore, on the N by Basilicata, and on the W and E by the Mediterranean. Cosenza is the capital. Calabria Ulteriore is washed by the Mediterranean on the E, S, and W, and bounded by Calabria Citeriore on Beside the destruction of many towns, villages and farms, above 40,000 people perished by this calamity. Stupendous alterations were occasioned on the face of the country. Mountains were split, and valleys formed in an instant; new rivers began to flow; others choaked up by the falling in of the hills were converted into lakes or sunk into the earth and destroyed, plantations were removed from their situations, and hills carried to places far distant. The earthquakes (for there were many shocks) vented their greatest force from the foot of the Appennines, extending westward to the sea, in all which vast tract, there was not a single village or town, which was not either totally destroyed, or very much damaged.

Calcutta, or Fort William, the emporium of Bengal, situate on the E side of the Hoogly, or western arm of the Ganges, 100 miles from the sea, in the bay of Bengal. It is a modern city having risen on the site of the village of Govinpour, about 90 years ago. It extends from the western point of Fort William, along the banks of the river, almost to the village of Cossipour, four miles and a half; the breadth, in many parts inconsiderable. Generally speaking, the description of one Indian city is a description of all; being all built on one plan, with very narrow and crooked streets; an incredible number of reservoirs and ponds, and a great many gardens interspersed. A few of the streets are paved with brick. The houses are variously built: some of brick, others with mud, and a greater proportion with bamboos and mats: these different kinds of fabrics, intermixed with each other, form a motley appearance. Those of the latter kinds are invariably of one story, and covered with thatch; those of brick seldom exceed two floors, and have flat terraced roofs: the two former classes far outnumber the last, which are so thinly scattered, that fires, which often happen, do not, sometimes, meet with the obstruction of a brick-house through a whole street. Altho' by much the greatest part of Calcutta is built upon this plan, yet the quarter inhabited by the English is an exception to this rule of building; being composed entirely of brick-buildings, many of which have more the appearance of palaces than of private houses. The line of buildings that surrounds two sides of the esplanade of the fort is magnificent; and it adds greatly to the superb appearance, that the houses are detached from each other, and insulated in a great space. The buildings are all on a large scale, from the necessity of having a free circulation of air in a climate, the heat of which is extreme. The general approach to the houses is by a flight of steps with great projecting porticoes, or surrounded by colonnades or arcades, which give them the appearance of Grecian temples. But the remainder of the city, and by much the greater part, is built as before described. Within these 20 or 25 years, Calcutta has been wonderfully improved both in appearance and in the salubrity of the air, for the streets have been properly drained, and the ponds filled up. It is supposed to contain at least 500,000 inhabitants. The mixture of European and Asiatic manners that may be observed here, is curious: coaches, phaetons, chaises, with the palanquins and hackeries of the natives, the passing ceremonies of the Hindoos, and the different appearances of the fakirs form a sight more extraordinary, perhaps, than any other city can present. The hackery here mentioned is a small covered carriage upon two wheels, drawn by bullocks, and used generally for the female part of the family. The Ganges is navigable up to the town for the largest ships that visit India. Here is the seat of the governor-general and council of Bengal, who have a control over the presidencies of Madras, Bombay, and Bencoolen. Here is likewise a supreme court of judicature, in which justice is dispensed according to the laws of England, by a chief justice and three puisne judges. In 1756 Calcutta was taken by the soubah of Bengal, who forced the feeble garrison, to the amount of 146 persons, into a prison called the Black Hole, a cube of 13 feet, out of which only 23 came alive. It was retaken the next year; the victory of Plassey followed; and the inhuman soubah was deposed, and put to death by his successor. Immediately after this victory the erection of Fort William commenced, which is superior to any fortress in India. Calcutta is 1030 miles N N E of Madras. Lon. 88 28 E, lat. 22 23 N.

Calder, a river in Yorkshire, which rises on the borders of Lancashire, and falls into the Aire eight miles below Wakefield. It is navigable the greater part of its course. Caledonia, New, a large island, in the S Pacific Ocean, extending from 19 to 22° S lat. and from 163 to 167° E lon. It was discovered by captain Cook, in 1774. The inhabitants are stout, tall, and in general well proportioned, their hair and beards black, and much frizzled, so as to be somewhat woolly in some individuals; they besmear their faces with black pigment, and their only covering is a wrapper made from the bark of a tree, or of leaves. They cultivate the soil with some art and industry, but subsist chiefly on roots and fish. Plantains and sugar-canes are not plentiful, bread-fruit is very scarce, and the cocoa-nut trees are but thinly planted; but their yams and taras are in great abundance. Their houses are circular like a bee hive, and full as close and warm. The framing is of small spars and reeds; and both sides and roof are thick, and close covered with thatch made of dried grass, and the floor laid with dry grass. They deposit their dead in the ground, and decorate the grave of their chiefs with spears, darts, paddles, &c. all stuck upright in the ground about it. They are of a pacific disposition, and their women are much chaster than those of the more eastern islands.

Calenberg, a castle of Lower Saxony, capital of the dutchy of Brunswick Calenberg, seated on the river Leina, 10 miles S of Hanover. Lon. 10 5 E, lat. 52 15 N.

Cali, a town of Terra Firma, in Popayan, in a valley of the same name, on the river Canca. The governor of the province generally resides here. Lon. 77 5 W, lat. 3 15 N.

Calicut, a country on the coast of Malabar, 62 miles in length, and as much in breadth. It produces pepper, ginger, aloes, and rice; and the trees are always green. There is a tree, which produces a kind of dates, from which is obtained sugar and oil. This country was subject to Tippoo Sultan, regent of Mysore; of which he was finally stripped by the E. India Company in 1799.

Calicut, a city, capital of a country of the same name, on the coast of Malabar. It was the first Indian port visited by European shipping; being discovered by the Portuguese, when they came to the E. Indies by the Cape of Good Hope, in 1498, and was then the most flourishing place on the Malabar coast. The English have a factory here. It is 320 miles W S W of Madras. Lon. 74 24 E, lat. 11 18 N.

California, a peninsula of N America, in the N Pacific Ocean, separated from the W coast of America, by the Vermilion sea, or Gulf of California; extending S E, from lat. 32° N to Cape St. Lucar, in lat. 23° N. It was discovered by Cortes in 1536; and is said to have been visited by Sir Francis Drake, in 1578, and to have received from him the name of New Albion. This latter name, which belongs to no part of the peninsula, but to a country further N, between 37 and 45° latitude; the harbour of Sir Francis Drake being situate in about 110 23 W lon. and 38 23 N lat. At last, on the expulsion of the Jesuits, who were said to have studiously depreciated the country, the court of Madrid appointed don Joseph Galvez to visit this peninsula. His account of the country was favourable; he found the pearl fishery on its coast to be valuable, and he discovered mines of gold of a very promising appearance. At present, however, California (the natural history of which is very little known) still remains among the most desolate and useless districts of the Spanish empire.

Callao, a seaport of S America, in Peru. The harbour is the best in the S Sea. It was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake, in 1746. It is five miles from Lima, of which it is the port. Lon. 76 53 W, lat. 12 2 S.

Calla Susung, a town of the Island of Bouton, in the Indian Ocean. It is a mile from the sea, on the top of a hill, encompassed with cocoa-nut trees. There is a stone wall round the town, and the houses are built on posts. The religion of the inhabitants is the Mahometan, and they speak the Malayan language. The people are small, well-shaped, and of a dark olive colour. Lon. 123 45 E, lat. 50 S.

Callen, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kilkenny, 10 miles S W of Kilkenny. Lon. 7 6 W, lat. 53 28 N.

Calloo, a fortress of the Netherlands, in the territory of Waes, on the Scheld, subject to Austria: it is five miles W of Antwerp. Lon. 4 20 E, lat. 51 13 N.

Calmar, a strong seaport of Sweden, in the province of Smoland, divided from the isle of Oeland, by a strait about seven miles broad in its narrowest part. On an eminence, half a mile from the town, is the castle, the only remains of its ancient magnificence. This palace, once the residence of the illustrious queen Margaret, is now converted into a distillery. It is 150 miles Calvados, a department of France, comprehending part of the late province of Normandy.

Calvi, an episcopal town of Naples, in Terra di Lavora, eight miles N of Capua. Lon. 14 19 E, lat. 41 15 N.

Calvi, a town of Corsica, on a craggy mountain and gulf of the same name, with a strong fortress and a good harbour. It was taken from the French, by the English, Aug. 10, 1774; but has been since retaken. It is 32 miles S W of Bastia. Lon. 9 16 E, lat. 42 26 N.

Cam, or Grant, a river which rises in Herts, and running NE by Cambridge into the isle of Ely, there falls into the Ouse, to which river it is navigable from Cambridge.

Camarat, a seaport of France, in the department of Finisterre and late province of Brittany. It stands on a bay of the same name.

Cambay, a large city of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Guzerat. It stands on a deep and dangerous gulf of the same name, and was the Camanes of Ptolemy. Its products and manufactures are inferior to those of few towns in India; for the country abounds in corn, cattle, and silk; and cornelian and agate stones are found in its rivers. The inhabitants are noted for embroidery; and some of their quilts have been valued at 40l. It is subject to the Poonah Mahrattas, is the port of Amadabad, from which it is distant 56 miles. Lon. 72 10 E, lat. 22 25 N.

Cambodia, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N by Laos, on the E by Cochin-China and Ciampa, and on the S and W by the gulf and kingdom of Siam; divided by a large river called Mecan, or Cambodia, which annually overflows the country in the rainy season, between June and October.

Cambodia, the capital of a kingdom of the same name in Asia, seated on the river Mecan, or Cambodia, 150 miles from its mouth. Lon. 104 5 E, lat. 13 10 N.

Cambray, a fortified city of France, in the department of the North and late province of the Cambresis. It has a citadel and fort, and a considerable manufacture of cambricks, which took their name from this city. It is seated on the Scheld, 22 miles S E of Arras, and 102 N of Paris. Lon. 3 20 E, lat. 50 11 N.

Cambresis, a late province of France, 25 miles in length; bounded on the N and E by Hainault, on the S by Picardy, and on the W by Artois. Cambray is the capital; and it is now comprehended in the department of the North.

Cambridge, the county-town of Cambridgeshire, and seat of a celebrated university. It takes the name of Cambridge from the bridge over the Cam, which divides the town into two parts. It is governed by a mayor, who, on entering upon his office, takes an oath to maintain the privileges of the university. The town-hall and shire-house are the only buildings of note that do not belong to the university: the county-gaol is the gatehouse of an ancient castle, built by William the Conqueror.

It has a market on Wednesday and Saturday; and in the market-place, which consists of two spacious oblong squares, united together, is a conduit that is constantly running. The university is supposed to have been founded during the heptarchy. It enjoys great privileges and is governed by the chancellor, the high steward, the vice chancellor, and several other inferior officers. It contains 12 colleges and four halls, which, unlike those at Oxford, have equal privileges with the colleges. The colleges are Peter House, Corpus Christi or Bennet, King's, Queen's, Jesus, Christ's, St. John's, Magdalen, Trinity, Emmanuel, and Sidney Sussex. The halls are, Clare, Pembroke, Trinity, and Catharine. Of the colleges, Peter House is the most ancient, being founded in 1257; and King's and Trinity colleges the most considerable. King's college is the noblest foundation in Europe, and the chapel, for its contrivance and extent, its fine carved work in wood and stone, and painted windows, is one of the finest pieces of Gothic architecture in the world. The library, chapel, &c. of Trinity college justly place it in the first rank. The other structures belonging to the university are the senate-house, a fine edifice, which, with St. Mary's church, the schools, the university library, and other buildings forms a noble square. Here is also a botanical garden, and a general hospital, called Aiddenbrooke's, from the name of the founder. Cambridge has 14 parishes, and is pretty large; but the situation is low and dirty. It sends four members to parliament, two for the borough and two for the university. It is 17 miles S of Ely, and 51 N by E of London. Lon. 0 4 E, lat. 52 12 N.

Cambridge, a village in Gloucestershire, near Berkley, on the river Cam. Cambridge, a post town in Middlesex county, Massachusetts. It has 2450 inhabitants, and a flourishing university, which consists of four elegant brick houses, and is, with respect to its library, philosophical apparatus, and professorships, the first literary institution in America. It was established in 1638, and has generally from 120 to 150 students. It lies in the lat. of 42° 23' N. and 71° 7' W., about three miles from Boston.

Cambridgeshire, a county of England, bounded on the W by Lincolnshire, on the N E by Norfolk, on the E by Suffolk, on the S by Essex and Herts, and on the W by the counties of Huntingdon, Bedford and Northampton. It extends 50 miles from N to S, and 25 from E to W. It lies in the dioceses of Ely and Norwich; it contains 17 hundreds, a city, a university, seven market-towns, and 163 parishes; and sends six members to parliament. The principal rivers are the Grant, Ouse, Nen, and Cam. In the fens it is moist and foggy, and therefore not so wholesome; but in the S and E parts it is very good, these being much drier than the other; but both by the late improvements, have been rendered very fruitful, so that it produces plenty of corn, and affords the richest pastures. The fens called Bedford Level, consist of 30,000 acres of marshy ground, which receive all the waters of the middle part of England, which do not run into the Thames or the Trent. And in the latter part of the year, when they are overflowed by water, they appear covered with fogs; so that while the higher grounds of the adjacent country glitter with the beams of the sun, the isle of Ely appears wrapt in a mist. See Bedford Level.

Camden, a village in Gloucester county, New Jersey, on the E bank of the river Delaware, opposite to Philadelphia.

Camelford, a borough in Cornwall, with a market on Friday, seated on the river Camel, 24 miles W of Launceston, and 229 W by S of London. It is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. A great quantity of yarn is spun in this place and in its neighbourhood. Lon. 4 55 W, lat. 50 42 N.

Camerino, an ancient and populous town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, with a bishop's see. It is seated on a mountain near the Appennines and the river Chiento, 37 miles S W of Ancona. Lon. 13 0 E, lat. 43 15 N.

Caminha, a seaport of Portugal, in the province of Entre-Douero-e-Minho, at the mouth of the river Minho, 13 miles N of Viana. Lon. 8 29 W, lat. 41 50 N.

Cammin, a district of Prussian Pomerania, converted into a principality, in favour of the House of Brandenburg, by the treaty of Westphalia. Colberg is the capital.

Cammin, a seaport of Prussian Pomerania, in the principality of the same name; seated on the Oder, opposite the isle of Wollin, 30 miles N of Stetin. Lon. 14 55 E, lat. 54 4 N.

Campagna, or Campania, a town of Naples in Prir. cipato Ulteriore, with a bishop's see, 40 miles S E of Naples. Lon. 15 19 E, lat. 40 35 N.

Campagna di Roma, anciently Latium, a province of Italy, in the Ecclesiastical State, extending 60 miles S E along the Mediterranean, to the frontiers of Naples, formerly the most delightful and most populous country in the world; few villages, little cultivation, and scarcely any inhabitants are now to be seen; no trees, no inclosures; nothing, in short, but the scattered ruins of temples and tombs, which present the idea of a country depopulated by pestilence. Rome is the capital.

Canaan the son of Ham. It lies between the Mediterranean and the mountains of Arabia, and extends from Egypt to Phenicia. It is bounded to the E by the mountains of Arabia; to the S by the wilderness of Paran, Idumea, and Egypt; to the W by the Mediterranean; and the N by the mountains of Libanus. Its length is about 70 leagues, and its breadth in some places 30.

Canada, a large country of North America, bounded on the N by New Britain, on the E by the gulf of St.
Laurence, on the S by New Brunswick and the United States, and on the W by unknown lands. It lies between 61 and 81° W lon. and 45 and 52° N lat. and was discovered by John and Sebastian Cabot, father and son, in 1497.
This country, in general, is pretty good; but the winter continues for six months very severe. The land that is cleared is fertile, and the wheat sowed in May is reaped at the end of August.
The climate is not very different from that of the northern British colonies;

it has a much severer winter; and like most of the American tracts that do not lie too far to the N, the summers are very hot and exceeding pleasant. They have a great variety of animals, such as, stags, elks, deer, bears, foxes, martins, wild cats, ferrets, weasels, hares and rabbits. The marshes, and lakes with which this country abound swarm with otters and beavers, which are highly valued for their furs, which form a principal article of commerce in Canada. Canada turpentine is greatly esteemed for its balsamic qualities, and for its use in disorders of the breast and stomach. The different tribes of Indians, or original natives in Canada, are almost innumerable; but they have been observed to decrease in population where the Europeans are most numerous, owing chiefly to the immoderate use of spiritous liquors. Canada was conquered by the English, in 1759, and confirmed to them by the peace of 1763. In 1774, this country was formed into a province, called Quebec, from the name of the capital; a government was instituted conformably to the French laws of Canada; and the Roman Catholic religion was established. In 1791, the country was divided into two provinces, Upper Canada, and Lower Canada, of which latter province Quebec is the chief town; and a constitution, in imitation of that of England, was given to each of these provinces.

CAN

Cananore, a large seaport on the coast of Malabar. It was ceded by Tippoo Sultan, regent of Mysore, to the English East India Company, in 1792. Lon. 74 10 E, lat. 12 0 N.

Canandaiguu, a post town, and the principal seat of the courts in Ontario county, New-York. It is seated at the E end of Canandaigua lake, 16 miles W of Geneva, and 26 E of Hartford.

Canara, a province on the coast of Malabar, subject to the regent of Mysore. Its most northerly port is Onore, in lat. 14 20 N.

Canaria, or the Grand Canary, the principal of the Canary Islands, about 180 miles from the coast of Africa, which gives name to the whole. It is a fruitful island, and famous for the wine that bears its name; the temperature of its air is delightful; and it abounds with good water, with trees, herbs, and delicious fruits. Here are two wheat harvests, in February and May, and the corn makes bread as white as snow. It is 42 miles long, and 27 broad; and lies 18 leagues W by S of Fuertaventura. Lon. 15 34 W, lat. 28 14 N.

Canary Islands, anciently called the Fortunate Islands, on account of their temperate healthy air and excellent fruits, are seven in number, lying in the Atlantic Ocean, near the continent of Africa: namely, Palma, Ferro, Gomera, Teneriffe, Canaria, Fuertaventura, and Lancerota; to which may be added several smaller isles, as Graciosa, Rocas, Allegranza, St. Clare, Inferno, and Lobos. From these islands the Canary birds originally came. The N E point of these is in lon. 15 38 W, lat. 28 13 N.

Canary, the capital of the island of Canaria, with a bishop's see, an inquisition, supreme council of the Seven Islands, and a castle seated on a hill. They have sugarhouses, in which a great quantity of sugar is made. The wine called Sack, has hence been often termed Canary. It is computed that 10,000 hogsheads are sent annually to England in time of peace. Lon. 15 50 W, lat. 28 4 N.

Cancale, a bay on the coast of France, 10 miles E of St. Maloes, where the English made a descent, under the duke of Marlborough, in 1758, and hence proceeded to burn the ships at St. Maloes.

capital of a kingdom of the same name. While the Persian and Mogul empires were severally undivided, it was the frontier fortress of Hindoostan toward Persia: and was esteemed the key of the western provinces of the latter, and not unfrequently changed masters, although very strong by situation, being surrounded by fens and rocks. It is 145 miles S W of Cabul. Lon. 67 15 E, lat. 33 0 N.

Candahar, a kingdom of Asia, between the river Indus and Persia, bounded on the N by Cabul, on the E by Lahore, on the S E by Moultan, and on the W by Persia. The dominions of the king of this country extend westward to the neighbourhood of the city of Tarshish; including generally Cabul, Candahar, Ghizni, Gaur, Paisahawur, Korasan and Seistan; this tract is not less than 800 miles in length; its breadth is not well known, and on the E side of the Indus, he possesses the territory of Cashmere, and some districts above the city of Attock. These countries are all called by the general name of the country of the Abdalli. Ahmed Abdalla, the founder of this kingdom, was originally the chief of an Afghan tribe, named Abdal, (whence the name Abdalli) who was stript of his country by Nadir Shah, in 1739. On the death of Nadir, he suddenly appeared among his former subjects, and erected a considerable kingdom in the eastern part of Persia, adding to it most of the provinces to the W of the Indus, which had been ceded by the Great Mogul to Nadir Shah, together with Cashmere on the E of that river.

Candia, an island in the Mediterranean, formerly Crete, lying to the S of the Archipelago. The capital, of the same name, though populous formerly, is little better than a desert, there being nothing but rubbish, except at the bazar or market-place; and the harbour of Candia is now fit for nothing but boats; but the walls of the town are standing, and it is the see of a Greek archbishop. This island was taken by the Turks, in 1669, after a war of 25 years. It was attempted to be retaken by the Venetians, in 1692, without effect. The products are corn, wine, oil, wool, silk, and excellent honey. The climate of Candia is delightful. The heat is never excessive; and in the plains violent cold is never felt.

In the warmest days of summer the air is cooled by breezes from the sea. Except December and January the whole year is one continued fine day. The sky is always unclouded and serene; the winds mild and refreshing breezes. The mountains are covered with a great number of odoriferous plants; the rivulets which flow down the valleys, are overhung with myrtles, and laurel-roses; clumps of orange, citron, and almond trees are scattered over the fields; some extensive plains are arrayed in saffron, and the cavities of the rocks are fringed with sweet smelling dittany. In a word from the hills, the vales, and the plains, on all hands there arise clouds of exquisite perfumes, which embalm the air and render it a luxury to breathe it. Candia is 200 miles in length, and 50 in breadth. It is 500 miles S W of Constantinople. Lon. 25 18 E; lat. 35 18 N.

Candeish, a rich and populous province, in the Deccan of Hindoostan, subject to the Poonah Mahrattas. It is bounded on the N by Malwa, on the E by Berar, on the S by Dowlatabad, and on the W by Bagiana.

Candlemas Isles, near the coast of Sandwich Land. Lon. 27 13 W, lat. 57 10 S.

Candy, a kingdom of Ceylon, containing about a quarter of the island. It is full of hills, whence rivulets proceed, which abound with fish. The inhabitants are dexterous in turning these rivulets to water their land, which is fruitful in rice, pulse, and hemp. The king is absolute, and his subjects are idolaters.

Candy, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in the island of Ceylon. It was often burnt by the Portuguese, when they were masters of these coasts. Lon. 80 52 E, lat. 7 45 N.

Cane, Gratto del, a famous grotto, on the banks of Lake d'Agnano, seven miles from Puzzoli, in the kingdom of Naples. A suffocating vapour rises a foot above the bottom of this cave, and is destructive to animal life. A dog having his head held in this vapour, is convulsed in a few minutes, and soon after falls motionless to the earth. The fellows who attend at the cave, have always some miserable dogs, with ropes about their necks, ready for this cruel purpose.

Canea, a considerable town of the island of Candia, with a good harbour. The environs are adorned with forests of olive-trees, mixed with fields, vineyards, gardens, and brooks, bordered with myrtle-trees, and laurel-roses. Lon. 24 15 E, lat. 35 20 N.

Caneto, a town of Italy, in the Mantuan, on the river Oglio, often taken and retaken by the French and Austrians. It is 20 miles W of Mantua. Lon. 10 22 E, lat. 45 9 N.

Canfield, a small town with a post office, in Trumbull county, Ohio, 23 miles N by W of Fort McIntosh, and 321 from Washington.

Cangerecora, a large river of the peninsula of Hindoostan. It has its source in the Gaults, and running S W to the coast of Malabar, enters the Indian Ocean, four miles to the N of mount Dilla; before which its course is parallel with the seacoast for about 11 miles, being separated only by a spit of sand.

Caniaderago Lake, a narrow lake of North America, in the state of New-York, six miles W of Lake Otsego, and nine miles long.

Canina, the capital of a district of the same name, in the N part of Albania, a province of Turkey in Europe, lying near the entrance of the gulf of Venice, eight miles N of Valona. Lon. 19 25 E, lat. 41 12 N.

Cannay, one of the western isles of Scotland, S W of the isle of Skye. This island is fertile, and is noted for vast basaltic columns, which rise above each other to a great height, in many successive ranges, each separated from the other by a stratum of pebbly concretions. On the E side of the island, the tops of an immense number of these columns appear at low water, forming a sort of causeway of surprising extent, the surface of which is smooth and regular, like an ordinary paved street.

Canoge, the ruins of which are at present of great extent, is a town of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Agrara, seated on the Ganges, near its confluence with the Calini. It is now reduced to the size of a middling town. It is said to have been built more than 1000 years before the Christian era, and to have been the capital of all Hindoostan, under the predecessor of Porus, who fought against Alexander. In the 6th century, it was said to contain 30,000 shops, in which betel-nut was sold. It is 127 miles S E of Agra. Lon. 80 13 E, lat. 27 3 N.

Canobia, a town of Italy, in the Milanese, on Lake Maggiore, 35 miles N N W of Milan. Lon. 8 44 E, lat. 45 55 N.

Canonsburg, a post town 18 miles S W of Pittsburg, situated on the W side of Charters creek in Washington county, Pennsylvania.

Canosa, a town of the kingdom of Naples, in Terra di Barri. It contains not more than 300 houses, and occupies the site of the ancient Canusium, one of the most populous and magnificent cities of Italy. Between Canosa and the river Osanto, are still some traces of the ancient town of Canna, in the plain of which was fought the celebrated battle between Hannibal and the Romans. Lon. 16 32 E, lat. 41 30 N.

Canso, a seaport of Nova Scotia, in North America, on a strait which separates Nova Scotia from Cape Breton. Near this town is a fine fishery for cod. Lon. 60 55 W, lat. 45 20 N.

Canstat, a town of Susbia, in the duchy of Wirtemberg, seated on the Neckar, two miles N E of Stutgard. Lon. 9 14 E, lat. 48 53 N.

Cantal, a department of France, including part of the late province of Auvergne. The capital is St. Flour.

Canuzaro, an episcopal town of Naples, in Calabria Citeriore. It is seated near the sea, 20 miles E of Nicastro. Lon. 16 47 E, lat. 39 3 N.

Canterbury, an ancient city, the capital of Kent, with an archbishop's see, the metropolitan of all England. The cathedral, a large structure, was once famous for the shrine of Thomas Becket, to which so great was the resort, and so rich the offerings, that Erasmus, who was an eye witness of its wealth, says, the whole church and chapel in which he was interred, glittered with jewels. But Henry VIII. in 1538, not only pillaged this rich shrine, but caused the saint to be cited in court, tried, and condemned as a traitor; ordering his name to be struck out of the calendar, his bones to be burnt, and his ashes thrown into the air. In this cathedral are interred Henry IV. and Edward the Black Prince. The city has likewise 14 parish churches; the remains of many Roman antiquities; and an ancient castle, with walls and a deep ditch. It is governed by a mayor, and possesses a share of the silk manufactures introduced by the Walloons, who have here a church under the cathedral. This city is noted for its brawn, and the adjacent country produces abundance of hops. It has a market on Wednesday and Saturday, and sends two members to parliament, and is seated on the river Steur, 26 miles E S E of Rochester and 56 of London. Lon. 1 4 E, lat. 51 19 N.

Canterbury, a town in Windham county, Connecticut, on the Quinaboag river, 10 miles E of Windham, and 15 N by E of Norwich, with 1627 inhabitants. Here is a post office 412 miles from Washington.

Cantiv, Cape, a promontory of the Atlantic Ocean, on the coast of Morocco. Lon. 9 5 W, lat. 32 49 N.

Canton, or Quangtung, one of the southern provinces of China; bounded on the N E by Fokien; on the N by Kiangsi, on the W by Quang-si, and the kingdom Tonking, and every where else by the sea. The country is diversified with hills and plains, and the soil is in general so fertile that it produces two crops annually. Abundance of valuable aromatic woods are to be met with in this province, as well as eagle-wood, ebony, &c.; and in the mineral kingdom the province furnishes gold, precious stones, tin, quicksilver, and copper. Canton is the capital.

Canton, a large, populous, and wealthy city of China, capital of the province of that name, stands on the river Taa, one of the finest in the empire. The buildings of Canton are in general low, consisting of one story and a ground floor, which is covered with earth or red tiles to keep it cool; but the houses of the most respectable merchants and mandarins are comparatively lofty, and well built. The streets of Canton are long and narrow, paved with flintstones, adorned at intervals with triumphal arches, which have a pleasing effect and are much crowded with people. In Canton there are no carriages. The better sort of people are carried about in chairs; but the common sort walk barefooted and bareheaded; and their goods are carried by porters. At the end of every street is a barrier, which is shut every evening, as well as the gates of the city; so that people are obliged to be at home early

Cantyre, a southern division of Argykeshire in Scotland. It is a narrow peninsula 50 miles long, and from five to eight broad. It is connected on the N by an isthmus to the mountainous district of Knapdale. Across this isthmus, which is scarce a mile broad, a canal might easily be cut. To the S the peninsula terminates in a great promontory, surrounded by a group of dangerous rocks, called the Mull of Cantyre. The soil, in general, is fertile.

bounded on the N by the gulf of Venice, on the E by Terra di Bari, on the S by Basilicata and Principato Ulteriore, and on the W by Molise and Abruzzo. It is a level country, without trees; has a sandy soil, and a hot air; but the land, near the rivers, is fertile in pastures. The capital is Manfredonia.

Capo Fino, a barren rock, in the territory of Genoa, with a castle on its eastern peak. Near it is a small harbour of the same name, 13 miles E S E of Genoa. Lon. 8 36 E, lat. 44 20 N.

Capo D'Istria, a town of Italy, in Vennetian Istria, on the gulf of Triest, whose principal revenue consists in wine and salt. It is 8 miles S of Triest.
Lon. 14 6 E, lat. 45 49 N.

Capri, an island of Naples, in the Mediterranean, opposite Sorrento, famous for being the retreat of the emperor Tiberius. A vast quantity of quilts come here every year, forming the principal revenue of the bishop, who is hence called the Bishop of Quilts. It is five miles in length and two in breadth.

Capri, the capital of an island of the same name, with a strong castle. It was once a delightful place, embellished with magnificent works, which were demolished after the death of Tiberius. Lon. 14 8 E, lat. 40 11 N.

Capua, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, with an archbishop's see.
It is two miles from the ancient Ca-pua, and was built out of its ruins.
Here Hannibal and his officers trifled away their time in pleasure, and gave time to the Romans to recover from their consternation after the battle of Cannæ. It was taken by the Austrians in 1707; and is seated on the Volturno, 15 miles N of Naples. Lon. 14 19 E,
lat. 41 7 N.

Caraccas, a district of South America, in Terra Firma, included in the W part of the province of Venezuela.
It is bounded on the N by the gulf of Mexico, on the E by Cumana, and on the S by New Granada. The coast is rocky and mountainous, interspersed with small fertile valleys, blessed in general with a clear air and wholesome climate. The chief town is Caraccas.

The commerce of this town was for a long time open to all the subjects of the Spanish monarchy. But in 1728 a company was formed, who obtained an exclusive right of trading to this part of the world. It is sometimes called the Company of Caraccas, and sometimes the Company of Guipiscoa, from the province of Spain, in which it is Carasu, a river of Natolia, which rises in Caramania, crosses part of Aladula, and falls into the Mediterranean.

Carasu Mestro, a river of Romania, which rises in mount Rhodolpho, and falls into the Archipelago.

Carasui, a lake in Bulgaria, said to be 55 miles in circumference, and contain several islands. It is formed by a branch of the Danube, not far from its entrance into the Black Sea.

Caravacca, a town of Spain, among the mountains near the river Segura, in Murcia. It is 50 miles N W of Carthagena. Lon. 2 5 W, lat. 38 5 N.

Carcassone, an ancient town of France, in the Department of Aude and late province of Languedoc. It is divided into the Upper and Lower Town by the Aude, over which is a stone bridge. In the Upper Town are a strong castle and the cathedral. The Lower town is square, built after the modern taste, and kept very neat by means of an aqueduct, which brings the water of the Aude to different fountains. The Upper town, which is also called the City, is very ancient, and in the castle are preserved some old records written on the bark of trees. Here are manufactures of all sorts of cloth. It is 15 miles W of Narbonne, and 400 S of Paris. Lon. 2 25 E, lat. 43 14 N.

Cardiff, a borough of S Wales in Glamorganshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is a large and well built town, and has a castle, a wall, and four gates. It is seated on the Taafe, over which is a bridge, and it has a considerable trade with Bristol; for vessels of small burden may come to the bridge. The castle, tho' much decayed, makes a grand appearance at this time, and the walls of the castle are very strong and thick. The constable of the castle is the chief magistrate, whom they call mayor. Near the town are some iron-works; and a canal, extending 25 miles hence, to the iron-works at Morthyr-Tidvil. In the castle, died Robert, duke of Normandy, eldest son of William the Conqueror, after having been blinded, and confined 28 years, by his brother Henry I. Cardiff is 12 miles E of Cowbridge, and 164 W of London. Lon. 3 12 W, lat. 51 30 N.

Cardigan, the county-town of Cardiganshire, with a market on Tuesday and Saturday; situate on the river Tyvy, over which is a handsome stone bridge. The walls and castle are gone to ruin. Carbone, and 400 S of 25 E, lat. 43 14 N. Borough of S Wales in Glamorgan, with a market on Wednesday. It is a large town, and has a castle, four gates. It is seated over which is a bridge, considerable trade with vessels of small burden on the bridge. The castle, decayed, makes a grand appearance at this time, and the walls are very strong and thick. The chief of the castle is the mayor, whom they call mayor. There are some iron-works, extending 25 miles hence, works at Merthyr-Tydvil. died Robert, duke of the eldest son of William the Fourth having been blinded, 28 years, by his brother Edward, which is 12 miles E of Cowbridge. Lon. 4 38 W, lat. 51 30 N.

Cardigan, the county-town of Cardiganshire, with a market on Tuesday; situated on the river Tywi, which is a handsome stone bridge, the walls and castle are gone. It is governed by a mayor, and sends members to parliament, and is 12 miles E of St. David's and 225 miles W of London. Lon. 4 38 W, lat. 51 30 N.

Cardigan Bay, on the coast of Cardiganshire, at the mouth of the Tywi, Barsey island in Carnarvonshire is 40 miles from one cape to another, and affords secure shelter.

Cardiganshire, a county of S Wales, bounded to the N by Merionethshire, to the E by Brecknockshire, to the S by Carmarthenshire, and to the W by Pembrokeshire. It extends 42 miles from N to S, and is divided into 64 parishes, containing six towns, and 64 parishes. It is governed by a mayor, and sends members to parliament. The climate is milder here than in most parts of the county. To the S and W are hills, and the N and E a continued ridge of mountains, where the cattle breed in the mountains, but they have neither wood nor hay for fuel. They have fish in plenty with fowls both tame and wild. Near the rivers are great numbers of otters; and in the valleys are several lakes. The mountains are abundant with veins of lead and silver ore; and the mines have been worked several times to great advantage: Sir Hugh Middleton is said to have cleared 2000*l.* a month, for several years together, which enabled him to bring the New River water to London; but he expended the whole on that great object. The principal rivers are the Tywy, the Rydal, and the Istwith.

Cardona, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, with a castle. Near it is an inexhaustible mountain of salt, of several colours, which, when washed, becomes white; and there are vineyards, which produce excellent wine. It is seated on an eminence, near the river Cardenero, 30 miles N W of Barcelona. Lon. 1 30 E, lat. 41 36 N.

Carelia, the eastern part of Finland. It belongs partly to the Swedes, and partly to the Russians. See Widburgh.

Carentan, a town of France, in the department of the Channel and late province of Normandy, with an ancient castle, eight miles from sea. Lon. 1 4 W, lat. 49 16 N.

Caricati, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citeriore, with a bishop's see. It is two miles from the gulf of Taranto. Lon. 17 19 E, lat. 39 35 N.

Caribbean Sea, that part of the Atlantic, lying between Cuba, St. Domingo, and Porto Rico on the N, and Terra Firma on the S. It was formerly called the North Sea; for the Spaniards having crossed the isthmus of Darien from N to S, gave the sea they discovered the name of the South Sea, and this, of course, the North Sea, although with respect to the American continent, the Pacific is the western, and the Atlantic the Eastern ocean.

Caribbee Islands, the most eastern islands of the West Indies divided into Windward and Leeward islands. As the Caribbee islands are all between the tropics, their inhabitants are exposed to perpetual heat. In those places where the wind does not blow, the air is excessively hot, and none but easterly winds contribute to refresh it. The torrents of rain which fall refresh the air; but their humid exhalations render the climate unhealthy.

Carinola, an episcopal town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, seated near Mount Massico, 25 miles N W of Naples. Lon. 14 18 E lat. 41 15 N.

Carinthia, a fertile duchy of Germany in the circle of Austria, bounded on the N by Austria, on the E by Stiria, on the S by Carniola and Friuli, and on the W by Tirol and Salzburg. Clagenfurt is the capital.

Carisbrook Castle, an ancient castle, near Newport, in the Isle of Wight, where Charles I. was imprisoned.

Caristo, an episcopal town of Greece, in the E part of the island of Negropont. Lon. 24 45 E, lat. 38 4 N.

Carlingford, a seaport of Ireland, on Carlingford Bay, in the county of Lowth, 21 miles N of Drogheda. Lon. 6 0 W, lat. 54 11 N.

Carlisle, an ancient city, the capital of Cumberland, with a market on Saturday. It is walled round, and pleasantly situated above a rich tract of meadows, bordering the Eden and two other rivers, which here unite their streams. The gates of this city are called the English, Irish, and Scotch. It has a castle, on the W side of the town; and the cathedral is a stately structure. The eastern part which is the newest, is a curious piece of workmanship. The choir with the aisles, is 71 feet broad; and has a stately E window, 48 feet high and 30 broad, adorned with curious pillars. Carlisle has a considerable manufacture of printed lincens and checks, for which 3000*l.* per annum is paid in duties, and is noted for the making of whips and fish-hooks. It was taken by the rebels in 1745, but retaken by the duke of Cumberland. It is governed by a mayor, sends two members to parliament, and is 60 miles S of Edinburgh, and 30 miles N N W of London. Lon. 2 53 W, lat. 54 56 N.

Carlisle, a post town and the capital of Cumberland county, Pennsylvania, situated on the south side of Conedogwinnet creek, 18 miles W by S of Harrisburg, 37 N by W of York, about 54 N W of Lancaster, and 124 of Philadelphia. The county was divided from Lancaster, and Carlisle made the principal seat of justice of Cumberland county January, 1749-50. The town is pleasantly situated, and the houses are built principally with bricks, plain and commodious. The streets are laid out in straight lines, and of a convenient width. Here is a seminary of learning, called Dickenson college, which has hitherto been conducted with good reputation; the late principal Dr. Nesbit being a teacher of distinguished learning and piety. At the last enumeration in 1800 the inhabitants amounted to 2032.

Carlow, or Catherlaugh, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 28 miles in length, and eight in breadth; bounded on the E by Wicklow and Wexford, on the W by Queen's county and Kilkenny, and on the N by Kildare.

Carlow, or Catherlaugh, a town of Ireland, in a county of the same name, on the river Barrow, 16 miles N E of Kilkenny. Lon. 7 14 W, lat. 52 48 N.

Carlowitz, a town of Slavonia, seated on the Danube, 38 miles N W of Belgrade. Lon. 20 5 E, lat. 44 45 N.

Carlsrona or Carlsroon, a seaport of Sweden, in the province of Blekingen. It derives its origin and name from Charles XI. who first laid the foundations of a new town in 1680, and removed the fleet from Stockholm to this place on account of its advantageous situation in the centre of the Swedish seas and the superior security of its harbour, which has depth of water for first-rate ships to carry their lower tier of guns; the entrance into this harbour, is defended by two strong forts. The greatest part of the town stands upon a small rocky island, which rises gently in a bay of the Baltic: the suburbs extend over another small rock, and along the mole, close to the basin where the fleet is moored. The way into the town from the main land, is carried over a dyke to an island, and from thence along two long wooden bridges joined by a barren rock. The town contains about 18,000 inhabitants; and the suburbs are fortified toward the land, by a stone wall. Formerly, vessels in this port, when careened and repaired, were laid upon their sides in the open harbour; until a dock was hollowed in the solid rock, in 1724, capable of receiving a first rate man of war. A project for constructing 30 covered docks, and other improvements, was begun in 1759; but they have proceeded slowly. One dock was finished in 1779, and gives an idea of the expence and greatness of the plan: the bottom and sides are of hewn granite; rows of granite pillars support the roof; and bear rather the appearance of a colonnade to a temple than a receptacle for ships. Carlsrona is 230 miles S W of Stockholm. Lon. 15 26 E, lat. 56 20 N.

Carlsath, the capital of Croatia, on the river Kulp, 140 miles S of Vienna. Lon. 15 21 E, lat. 46 2 N.

Carlstadt, a town of Sweden, in Wermeland, on the island of Tingwalla, which is formed by two branches of the Clara Elb. It is a bishop's see. The town contains 1500 inhabitants, who carry on a trade in iron and wood across lake Wenner. It is 133 miles W of Stockholm. Lon. 13 43 E, lat. 59 16 N.

Carlstadt, a town of Germany, in the bishopric of Wurtzburg, seated on the Maine, 16 miles N of Wurtzburg. Lon. 9 12 E, lat. 49 56 N.

Carmagniola, a trading town of Piedmont, with a strong citadel. It was taken by the French in 1691, but retaken by prince Eugene the same year. It is seated on a small river, which runs into the Po, 14 miles S of Turin. Lon. 7 45 E, lat. 44 51 N.

Carmarthen, the county-town of Carmarthenshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated on the river Towy, over which is a stone bridge, to which small vessels may come up. It was once fortified with a wall and a castle, now in ruins. It sends one member to parliament, and is 24 miles S E of Cardigan, and 207 W by N of London. Lon. 4 23 W, lat. 51 52 N.

Carmarthenshire, a county of South Wales, 35 miles in length, and 20 in breadth; bounded by Cardiganshire on the N, the Bristol channel on the S, Brecknock and Glamorganshire on the E, and Pembrokeshire on the W. It lies in the diocese of St. David's, containing eight market-towns and 87 parishes; and sends two members to parliament. Its principal rivers are the Towy, Tyvy, and Tafae. A plan for constructing 30 covered docks, and other improvements, was proposed in 1759; but they have proceeded but little. Visby, a town of Sweden, in the island of Ringwalen, is formed by two branches of the river. It is a bishop's see, and contains 1500 inhabitants. It is famous for a trade in iron and wood, and is the seat of the Wenner. It is 133 miles S of Stockholm. Lon. 13 43 E, lat. 59 28 N.

Wurtzburg, a town of Germany, in the principality of Wurtzburg, seated on the Main, 6 miles N of Wurtzburg. Lon. 10 30 E, lat. 49 56 N.

Piedmont, a trading town of Piedmont, with a strong citadel. It was destroyed by the French in 1691, but retaken by Eugene the same year. It is situated on a small river, which discharges into the Po, 14 miles S of Turin. Lon. 7 44 E, lat. 44 51 N.

Cardigan, the county-town of Cardigan, with a market on Wednesday. It is seated on the river Towy, over which is a stone bridge, to which small vessels may pass. It was once fortified with a castle, now in ruins. It sends two members to parliament, and is 24 miles S of Cardigan, and 207 W by London. Lon. 4 23 W, lat. 51 51 N.

Cardiganshire, a county of South Wales, 55 miles in length, and 20 in breadth, bounded by Cardiganshire on the N, the Bristol channel on the S, Glamorganshire on the W, and Pembrokeshire on the E. It is the diocese of St. David's; contains eight market-towns and 87 parishes, and sends two members to parliament. Its principal rivers are the Tywy, Tyvy, and Taafe. It is a fertile soil, producing corn and grass, having many pleasant and rich meadows, also wood, coal, and sea-fish, especially salmon, which is exceeding good. The air is mild and wholesome, it not being so mountainous as the other counties of Wales.

Carmel, a mountain in Palestine, noted for having been the retreat of the prophet Elias, and for a monastery of Carmelites. It is 50 miles N of Jerusalem.

Carnona, a town of Italy in Austrian Friuli, on a mountain near the river Indri, seven miles N W of Goritz. Lon. 13 21 E, lat. 46 25 N.

Carnonia, an ancient town of Spain, in Andalusia. The gate toward Seville is one of the most extraordinary pieces of antiquity in all Spain. It is 25 miles E of Seville. Lon. 4 48 W, lat. 37 24 N.

Carnarvon, the county-town of Carnarvonshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on a strait of the Irish sea, called Menai, and carries on a considerable trade with Ireland and the principal English ports. It is a place of great strength, as well by nature as art, being surrounded on all sides, except the E, by the sea and two rivers. Carnarvon sends one member to parliament, and is governed by the constable of the castle, who, by patent, is always mayor. It is seven miles S W of Bangor, and 251 N W of London. Lon. 4 20 W, lat. 53 8 N.

Carnarvonshire, a county of North Wales, 50 miles in length, and 13 in breadth; bounded on the N and W by the Irish Sea, on the S by Merionethshire, and on the E by Denbighshire. It lies in the diocese of Bangor, and is about 40 miles in length, and 20 in breadth. The principal rivers are the Seint and Conway: the last of which rivers, though its course is only 12 miles, is navigable by ships of good burden for more than half its length. The air is piercing, owing partly to the snow that lies seven or eight months of the year on the mountains, and partly to the great number of lakes which are said to be not fewer than 60. Its central part is occupied by the famed Snowdon, and the several craggy summits, deep dells, moors, chasms, and lakes, which constitute its dreary regions. Cattle, sheep, and goats are almost its sole rural riches. These are fed, during the summer, very high on the mountains, tended by their owners, who reside for that season in temporary huts, and make butter and cheese for their own consumption. The prospects around are rude and savage in the highest degree; but not without a mixture of beauty, when the dimensions of the vales admit the varieties of wood, water and meadows. Many rare vegetables, met with only on the most elevated spots, grow here. Copper mines have been worked in various parts of these mountains, and are at present about Llanberria. Other places afford lead; and quantities of stone, excellent for hones, are dug near Snowdon; to the bleak region of which the vale of Conway below, in fertility and beauty, forms a very pleasing contrast.

Carnatic, a country of the peninsula of Hindoostan, extending from the Guntoor circar, along the whole coast of Coromandel, to Cape Comorin; including its appendages, which are Tanjore, Maravar, Trichinopoly, Madura and Tinavelley. It is 570 miles from N to S, but no where more than 120 wide, and commonly no more than 75. The annual revenue of the nabob of Arcot, its sovereign, is stated at about 1,500,000*l.* out of which he pays a subsidy of 160,000*l.* to the English East India Company, toward the expence of their military establishment. The British possessions in the Carnatic, are confined chiefly to the tract called the Jaghire, whose annual revenue is 150,000*l.* There is, besides, a land revenue dependant on Madras, of 725,000*l.* The Carnatic is rich, fertile, and populous; and contains an incredible number of fortresses; public monuments too, the unequivocal marks of civilization and opulence, are more common here than in the northern parts of India. In 1787, the East India Company took the whole administration of the Carnatic, and the collection of the nabob's revenues into their own hands. Arcot is the capital.

Carniola, a province of Germany, in the circle of Austria; bounded on the N by Carinthia and Stiria, on the E by Slavonia and Croatia, on the S by Morlachia and Istria, and on the W by Friuli. It is full of rocks and mountains, some of which are cultivated, others naked and barren, and others continually buried in snow. Laibach is the capital.

Carolina North, one of the United States of America; bounded on the N by Virginia, on the E by the Atlantic, on the S by South Carolina and Georgia, and on the W by the Mississippi. It is 758 miles long, and 110 broad; divided into eight districts and 58 counties. This country is seated between the extremities of heat and cold; the heat being more troublesome in summer, than the cold in winter. The air is generally serene and clear the greatest part of the year, but in February the inhabitants have a custom of burning the woods, which causes such a smoke as would seem to proceed from a thickness in the air. Beside the vegetable products common to America, there are ground peas, which run on the surface of the earth, and are covered by hand with a light mould, and the pods grow under ground; they are eaten raw or roasted, and taste much like a hazle nut. Cotton also is universally cultivated here. The most remarkable of their trees is the pitch pine, which affords pitch, tar, turpentine, and various kinds of lumber. Among their medicinal herbs and roots, this country abounds with the ginseng, Virginia and Seneca snake-root, and lion's-heart, a sovereign remedy for the bite of a serpent. The indigo is however inferior to what comes from the Caribbee Islands. The inhabitants of this state were estimated in 1790, at 210,000 whites, and 60,000 negroes. Newbern is the capital.

Carolina South, one of the United States of America; bounded on the E by the Atlantic, on the N by North Carolina, and on the S and S W by the river Savannah, which divides it from Georgia; its western boundary has not yet been accurately ascertained. It is 300 miles long, and 125 broad; divided into seven districts, and 35 counties. Beside Indian corn, wheat, &c. for home consumption, large quantities of tobacco, and some indigo and wheat are raised for exportation. Their rivers are large, and abound with delicate fish; besides water fowl of different kinds. The number of white inhabitants has been estimated at 30,000; the negroes the same number, but some compute the latter to be 120,000. Columbia is the capital.

Carron, a river of Stirlingshire, which rises on the S side of the Campsie Hills, and flows into the frith of Forth, below Falkirk. Its stream is small and scarcely deserves the notice of the traveller; yet there are few rivers which have been the scene of so many memorable transactions. When the Roman empire was in its glory the banks of Carron were its boundaries on the N W, and Antoninus' wall which was raised to mark the limits of that vast empire, ran parallel to this river for several miles. Two miles from its source, it forms a fine cascade, called the Fall of Auchinlilly.

Carron, a village in Stirlingshire, Scotland, remarkable for its extensive foundry, belonging to the Carron Company on the river Carron, one mile from Falkirk, consisting of the greatest iron works in Europe. All sorts of iron goods are made in it, from the most trifling article to a cannon that discharges a ball of 42 pounds. The short piece of ordnance called a carronade, and introduced into the navy in the last war, was first made here, and hence received its name. They export great quantities of large cannon to Russia, Germany, and other foreign parts. These works were erected in 1761; before which time there was not a single house on the spot. Carron, a river of Stirlingshire, which runs on the S side of the Campsey hills and flows into the frith of Forth, near Falkirk. Its stream is small and shallow, but it deserves the notice of the traveller; yet there are few rivers which have been the scene of so many memorable transactions. When the Roman emperor was in its glory the banks of the Carron were its boundaries on the north, and Antoninus' wall which was built to mark the limits of that vast empire, ran parallel to this river for 100 miles. Two miles from its mouth, it forms a fine cascade, called the Falls of Auchinlilly.

All the best iron goods are made in it, from the most trifling article to a cannon which discharges a ball of 42 pounds.

A short piece of ordinance called the Carronade, and introduced into the service in the last war, was first made at Carron, and hence received its name. It exports great quantities of large iron to Russia, Germany, and other parts. These works were first established in 1761; before which time there was not a single house on the Carron. At present the buildings are of vast extent, and the machinery constructed by Mr. Smeaton, is the first in Britain, both in elegance and correctness; 6500 tons of iron are smelted annually from the mineral with pit-coal, and cast into cannon, cylinders, &c. In one place, where coal is converted into coak, by discharging it of its sulphur, and the fire spreads of course over a large surface, the volumes of smoke, the spiry flames, and the suffocating heat of the glimmering air, are wonderfully affecting; and at night, its glare is inconceivably grand. How vast the fire is we may conceive, when we are told that it often burns 100 tons of coal in a day. The massy bellows which rouse the furnaces are put in motion by water, and receiving the air in large cylinders, force it out again through small orifices, roaring with astonishing noise. The fire of the furnace thus roused becomes a glowing spot, which the eye can no more look at than at the sun. Under such intense heat the rugged stone instantly dissolves in streams of liquid iron.

Cart, the name of two rivers in Renfrewshire, distinguished by the appellations of Black and White.

Cartama, a town of Spain in Granada, at the foot of a mountain near the river Guadalquivir, eight miles N W of Malaga. Lon. 4 43 W, lat. 36 40 N.

Carteret Island, an island in the South Pacific Ocean, seen by captain Carteret in 1767. It is six leagues long from E to W. Lon. 159 14 E, lat. 8 26 S.

Carthage, a famous city of antiquity in Africa, which for many years disputed the empire of the world with Rome, but was at length razed by the Romans. Some of the ruins are to be seen on the coast of the Mediterranean, 10 miles N E of Tunis, near a promontory called cape Carthage. Lon. 10 25 E, lat. 36 50 N.

Carthage, a town of New Spain, in the province of Costa Rica, with a bishop's see, 360 miles W N W of Panama. Lon. 85 45 W, lat. 10 15 S.

Carthage, or Moore Court-House, a post town, and the principal seat of justice of Moore county, North Carolina, about 40 miles from Fayetteville, and 390 from Washington.

Carthagina, a seaport of Spain, in the province of Murcia, built by Aadrubal, a Carthaginian general, and named after the city of Carthage. It has the best harbour in Spain, but nothing else very considerable. It was taken by Sir John Leake in 1706, but the duke of Berwick retook it. It is seated on a gulf of the same name, 27 miles S of Murcia. Lon. 0 8 W, lat. 37 37 N.

Carthagena, a province of South America, in Terra Firma, bounded on the W by the isthmus of Darien, on the N W and N by the Carribbean Sea, on the E by St. Martha, and on the S by Popayan. It is a mountainous country; but has many well watered and fertile vallies; yet, being thinly peopled, it is ill cultivated. The climate is exceedingly unhealthy. The Europeans are subject to a terrible disease called the black vomit, which sweeps off multitudes annually on the arrival of the galleons. It produces a variety of valuable drugs, and some precious stones, particularly emeralds.

Carthagena, the capital of the province of Carthagena, in Terra Firma, one of the most populous, opulent, and beautiful cities in South America. Its harbour is the safest and best fortified in the Spanish American dominions. This was not the only circumstance, to which Carthagena owed its splendour and importance; it was chosen as the port in which the galleons should first begin to trade; on their arrival from Europe, and, to which they were directed to return, in order to prepare for their voyage homeward. There is reason, however, to apprehend, that it has reached its highest point of exaltation, as it must be affected, in a great degree, by the change in the Spanish system of trade with America, which has withdrawn from it the desirable visits of the galleons. The fortifications both of the city and suburbs are built after the modern manner and lined with free stone. The streets are broad, uniform and well paved. All the houses are built of stone or brick, only one story high, neat and furnished with balconies of wood, which is more durable in that climate than iron, the latter being soon corroded by the acrimonious quality of the atmosphere. It was taken by the English in 1585, and by the French in 1697, who found a great booty; but admiral Vernon, in 1741, though he had taken the castles was obliged to abandon the siege. Lon. 75 26 W, lat. 10 24 N.

Carmel, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Monday, and a handsome church, built like a cathedral. It is seated among the hills called Cartmel Fells, not far from the sea, and near the river Kent, 12 miles N by W of Lancaster, and 260 N N W of London. Lon. 3 6 W, lat. 54 12 N.

Carwar, a seaport on the coast of Malabar, subject to the regent of Mysore. It is 60 miles S by E of Goa. Lon. 74 34 E, lat. 15 0 N.

Casal, a town of Italy, in Montserrat, with a citadel, and a bishop's see. It is seated on the river Po, 37 miles N E of Turin. Lon. 8 27 E, lat. 45 18 N.

Casal Maggiore, a town of Italy, in the Jutchy of Milan. It was forced to surrender to the French in May 1796, and is seated on the river Po, 20 miles S E of Cremona. Lon. 10 35 E, lat. 44 56 N.

Casal Nuova, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ulteriore. A terrible earthquake happened here in 1783, by which the princess Gerace, and upwards of 4000 inhabitants lost their lives.

Casbin, or Carwin, a town of Persia, in Irac Agemi, where several of the kings of Persia have resided. Nadir Shah built a palace here, inclosed by a wall a mile and a half in circumference; likewise the town is incircled by a wall four miles in circuit. It carries on a great trade and is seated near the high mountain Elwend, where there are fine quarries of white marble, 180 miles N of Ispahan. Lon. 52 16 E, lat. 35 30 N.

Casais, a town of Portugal, in Estramadura, at the mouth of the Tajo, 17 miles E of Lisbon. Lon. 8 43 W, lat. 38 40 N.

Cashmere, a province of Hindoostan Proper, subject to the King of Candahar, bounded on the W by the Indus, on the N by Himmaleh Mount, and on the E and S by Lahore. The valley or country of Cashmere is 80 miles long, and 40 broad; and is celebrated for its romantic beauties, the fertility of the soil, and the temperature of the atmosphere. All these particulars may be accounted for, when it is considered, that it is an elevated and extensive valley, surrounded by steep mountains that tower above the regions of snow; and that its soil is composed of the mud deposited by a capital river, which originally formed its waters into a lake, that covered the whole valley, until it opened itself a passage through the mountains, and left this fertilized valley an ample field to human industry, and to the accommodation of a happy race. It appears that the periodical rains, which almost deluge the rest of India, are shut out of Cashmere by the height of the mountains, so that only light showers fall there; these however are in abundance enough to feed some hundreds of cascades, which are precipitated into the valley, from every part of this stupendous and romantic bulwark that encircles it. The soil is the richest that can be conceived, and its productions those of the temperate zone. A vast number of streams from all quarters of the valley, bring their tribute to the Chelum, the parent of the soil, and a large navigable river. Many lakes are spread over the surface, and some of them contain floating islands. In a word the whole scenery is beautifully picturesque; and a part of the romantic circle of the mountains makes a part of every landscape. The superstition of the inhabitants has multiplied the places of worship, of Mahadeo, Reschan, and Brama. All Cashmere is holy land, and miraculous fountains abound. They are constantly subject to earthquakes; and, to guard against the most terrible effects, all their houses are built of wood. Among other curious manufactures of Cashmere is that of shawls; and the delicate wool of which they are made, is the product of a species of goat of this country, or of the adjoining Thibet. Cashna, an extensive empire of Africa, part of the region called Negro-land; bounded on the N by Fezzan and Zahara, on the S by the Niger, and on the E by Zamphara and Bornou.
 It resembles Bornou in climate, soil, and natural productions, and in the colour, genius, religion and government of the people. The rains, indeed, are less violent than those of Bornou. Its monkeys and parrots (but seldom seen in Bornou) are numerous and of various species. The common people are less courteous in Cashna than in Bornou.
 A thousand towns and villages are said to be included in this empire, which, like Bournou, consists of different tribes or nations, subject to the dominion of one ruling power.

Caspian Sea, a great inland sea of Asia; bounded on the N by the country of the Kalmucs, on the E by a tribe of the Turcomans, on the S by Persia, and on the W by Georgia and Circassia. It is 680 miles in length, reckoning from Gurief to Medshetifar, and in no part more than 260 miles in breadth.
 It has no tide; and, on account of its frequent shoals, is navigable only for vessels drawing from 9 to 10 feet water, it has strong currents, and, like all inland seas, is subject to violent storms. There are certain winds that domineer over it with such absolute sway, that vessels are often deprived of every resource, and in the whole extent of it there is not a port that can truly be called safe. Its waters are brackish. The fishery is a nursery for sailors. The Uralian Cossacs enjoy the right of fishing on the coast 47 miles on each side of the river Ural; and the inhabitants of Astracan have an exclusivprivilege on the remaining shores belonging to Russia. The fish, which are chiefly salted and dried, form a considerable article of consumption in the Russian empire. Seals are the only quad-rupeds that inhabit the Caspian sea, but they are in such quantities, that they afford the means of subsistence to great numbers of people. The Caspian abounds with sea-dogs, which are hunted and caught in great numbers.

Catalonia, a province of Spain, bounded on the N by the Pyrenees, on the E and S by the Mediterranean Sea, and on the W by Arragon and Valencia. Its greatest extent from E to W is 112 miles, and from N to S 148. It is 155 miles in length and 100 breadth. The air is wholesome; and it is full of high mountains, covered with forest and fruit-trees. It abounds in wine, corn, and pulse, and there are several quarries of marble of all colours, crystal, alabaster, amethysts and lapis lazuli. Gold dust has been found among the sand of one or two of the rivers, and there are mines of tin, alum, vitriol, and salt. They likewise fish for coral on the Eastern coast. Barcelona is the capital.

Catania, a celebrated city of Sicily on a gulf of the same name, with a bishop's see, and a university, the only one in the island. The church is a noble fabric, the largest in Sicily; and the organ is much admired by musical connoisseurs. The land about it is fertile in corn, excellent wine, and fruits. By an eruption of Etna, in 1669, it was almost totally destroyed; and in 1693, it was entirely swallowed up by an earthquake, which buried 18,000 people in the ruins. It is 52 miles S W of Messina. Cattaek, or Cattaek, the capital of Orissa, a province of Hindoostan, in the Deccan. It is a post of consequence on the Mahanuddy, as it lies on the only road between Bengal and the Northern Circars; and the possession of this city and its dependencies gives the Berar rajah (a Mahratta prince) more consequence in the eyes of the government of Bengal, than even his extensive domain and central position in Hindoostan. Cattaek is seated on the Mahanuddy, near its influx into the bay of Bengal, 220 miles S W of Calcutta. Lon. 86 1 E, lat. 20 51 N.

Cattarick, a village near Richmond, in the W riding of Yorkshire. It has a bridge over the river Swale, and a sort of cataract near it, from which it seems to have derived its name. It appears to have been a great city in the time of the Romans, one of whose highways crossed the river here, on the banks of which are the foundations of great walls, and a mount cast up to a vast height. Many coins and urns have been dug up here. The final destruction of this city was by the Danes.

Cattawessy, a thriving post town on the E bank of Susquehanna river in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, at the distance of 21 m. E by N of Northumberland, and 150 miles N W of Philadelphia. It has about 1500 inhabitants.

Catwick, a village of Holland, on the German Ocean, near which the only branch of the Rhine that retains its original name, is lost in the sands. It is six miles N by W of Leyden.

Cavan, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, 47 miles in length, and 23 in breadth; bounded on the N by Fermanagh and Monaghan, on the E by the latter county and Louth, on the W by Leitrim, and on the S by Lonford, West Meath and East Meath. It has but two towns of any note, Cavan and Kilmore. It sent six members to the Irish parliament, and it contains 37 parishes.

Cavan, a borough of Ireland, capital of the county of Cavan, 60 miles N W of Dublin. Lon. 7 23 W, lat. 54 51 N.

Caucasus, a very high mountain of Asia, being one of that great ridge of mountains that runs between the Black and Caspian seas. These mountains are inhabited by seven distinct nations, each speaking a different language: namely, the Turcomans, the Abkhas, the Circassians, the Ossi, the Kisti, the Lesguis, and the Georgians. They have fine complexions and the women are beautiful. Of this ridge mount Caucasus is the highest and most difficult to pass. It is 36 leagues over, and the summit eight leagues in breadth. The top is perpetually covered with snow, but the other parts are very fruitful, abounding in honey, corn, fruits, hogs, and large cattle.

Caucasus, a government of the Russian empire, divided into the two provinces of Astracai and Caucasus. The province of Caucasia comprises the Cuban, and all that district to the E and S, now in the possession of Russia, between the rivers Don and Cuban, and between the Black Sea and the Caspian, extending as far as the confines of Georgia.

Caudebec, a rich and populous trading town of France, in the department of Lower Seine and late province of Normandy, at the foot of a mountain, near the Seine, 18 miles N W of Rouen. Lon. 1 26 E, lat. 49 31 N.

Caxamalca, a town of Peru, capital of a territory of its own name. It was noted for a sumptuous palace belonging to the incas and a magnificent temple dedicated to the sun. Here Pizarro, the Spanish general, in 1532, perfidiously seized the inca Atahual-pha, and the next year, after a mock trial, caused him to be publicly executed. It is 300 miles N N E of Lima.
Lon. 74 53 W, lat. 7 25 S.

Caxton, a town in Cambridgeshire, with a market on Tuesday, 10 miles W

Caya, a river of Portugal which rises near Portalegre, and running S E divides Spain from Portugal, and falls into the Guadiana, at Badajoz.

Cayenne, a rich town and island on the coast of Guiana, in South America, capital of the French settlements there, and bounded on the W by the Dutch colony of Surinam. The French settled here in 1635, but left it in 1654, and it was successively in the possession of the English, French, and Dutch; but the latter were expelled by the French in 1677. The island is about 16 miles in circumference, and is only separated from the continent by two rivers. By a particular formation uncommon in islands, the land is highest near the water-side and low in the middle. Hence it is so full of morasses, that all communication between the different parts of it is impossible, without taking a great circuit. The entrance thro' the harbour is thro' a narrow channel, and ships can only get in at high water thro' the rocks and reefs that are scattered about this pass.

Cayenne pepper, sugar, and coffee are the principal commodities. Lon. 52

Cebu, one of the most southerly of the Philippine mountains.

Cedar Creek, a water of James River in Virginia, in the county of Rock-bridge; remarkable for its natural bridge, which is one of the most astonishing works of Nature. It stands on the ascent of a hill, which seems to have been cloven through its length by some great convulsion. The fissure, just at the bridge, is by some admea-surements 250 feet deep, 45 wide at the bottom, and 90 at the top. This of course, determines the length of the bridge and its height from the water.
Its breadth in the middle is about 60 feet, but more at the ends, and the thickness of the mass at the summit of the arch, about 40 feet. A part of this thickness is constituted by a coat of earth, which gives growth to many large trees. The residue, with the hills on both sides, is one solid rock of limestone. This bridge gives name to the county of Rockbridge, and affords a commodious passage over a valley, which cannot be crossed elsewhere for a considerable distance.

Ceylon, a large island in the Indian Ocean, 250 miles in length, and 195 in breadth. In general the air is very good, and though the country is full of moun- tains, there are fertile vallies. In some places there are rich mines, whence are got rubies, sapphires, topazes, and other stones of less value. Here is abundance of wood for all sorts of uses, and some proper for dying red. It is remarkable for abundance of cinna- mon; and in the kingdom of Candy is plenty of very large cardamoms. The pepper here is so good, that it sells dearer than that of other places. One of the most remarkable trees in Cey- lon is the tallipot, which grows straight and tall, and is as big as the mast of a ship: the leaves are so large as to co- ver 15 or 20 men; when dried, they are round, and fold up like a fan. The natives wear a piece of the leaf on their head when they travel to shade them from the sun, and they are so tough that they are not easily torn, though those that wear them make their way through the woods and bush- es. Every soldier carries one, and it serves for his tent. Common deer are found in this island in great abundance as well as Guinea deer: but the horn- ed cattle are both very small and very scarce. They have the largest and best elephants in the world; and the woods are infested by tigers the most terrible of all ravenous beasts. They abound also with snakes of a monstrous size, one of which has been known to devour a tiger at one meal. Mr. Ives saw one fifteen feet long, and thirty inches in circumference. Spiders, cen- tipedes, and scorpions, also grow here to an enormous size. Mr. Ives saw a spider here as large as a toad, with brown hair upon it, and legs as thick as the shank of a tobacco pipe. A scorpion taken out of a piece of wood was eight inches long, from head to tail exclusive of the claws; and the shell was as hard as that of a crab. The inhab- itants are divided into several tribes, from the nobleman to the maker of mats, and all the children follow the same business as their fathers; nor is it lawful to marry into any other tribe. They are Pagans; and though they ac- knowledge a supreme God, they wor- ship none but the inferior sort, and among these they reckon the sun and moon. In their temples are images, well executed, though their figures are monstrous: some are of silver, copper, &c. The different sorts of gods have various priests, who have all some pri- vileges. Their houses are small and low, with walls made of hurdles, smoothly covered with clay, and the roofs thatched. They have no chim- nels, and their furniture is only a few earthen vessels, with two copper ba- sins, and two or three stools; none but the king being allowed to sit in a chair. Their food is generally rice, and their common drink is water, which they pour into their mouths out of a vessel like a tea-pot, through the spout, never touching it with their lips. There are some inscriptions on the rocks, which must be very ancient, for they are not understood by any of the present inha- bitants. The Portuguese were the first Europeans who settled on this island; but the Dutch soon drove them away, and established themselves on all the principal places along the coast. In February 1796, all the Dutch forts and settlements were taken by the En- glish. Lon. from 80 to 82° E, lat. from 6 to 10° N.

Chablais, a province of Savoy, bound- ed on the N by the lake of Geneva, on the E by Vallais, on the S by Faucig- ny, and on the W by the Genevois. Thonon is the capital.

Chang-hai, a town of China, in the province of Kiang-nan. In this town, and the villages dependant on it, are more than 200,000 weavers of common cotton cloth.

Chang-tong, a province of China, bounded on the E by Petcheli and part of Honan, on the S by Kiang-nan, on the E by the sea, and on the N by the sea and part of Petcheli. The country is well watered by lakes, streams, and rivers; but is nevertheless liable to suffer from drought, as rain falls here but seldom. The locusts also sometimes make great devastation. However, it abounds greatly in game; and there is perhaps no country where quails, partridges, and pheasants, are sold cheaper, the inhabitants of this province being reckoned the keenest sportsmen in the empire. The province is greatly enriched by the river Yun, called the Grand Imperial Canal, through which all the barks bound to Pekin must pass in their way thither. The duties on this canal alone amount to more than 450,000 annually. The canal itself is greatly admired by European travellers on account of its strong and long dikes, the banks decorated with cut stone, the ingenious mechanism of its locks, and the great number of natural obstacles which have been overcome in the execution of the work. The capital is Tsi-nan-fou.

Chanmaning, a city of Thibet, which has been the residence of the grand lama. It is 130 miles W of Lassa. Lon. 89 45 E, lat. 31 0 N.

Channeray, a village in Ross-shire, near the frith of Murray, 30 miles W of Elgin.

Chan-si, a province of China, and one of the smallest in the empire, is bounded on the E by Petcheli, on the S by Honan, on the W by Chen-si, and on the N by the Great wall. The climate is healthy and agreeable, and the soil generally fertile, tho' the country is full of mountains. Some of these last are rough, wild, and uninhabited; but others are cultivated with the greatest care from top to bottom, and cut into terraces forming a very agreeable prospect;

Charles City, a town of Virginia, in a county of the same name, on the N side of James river, 35 miles S E of Richmond, and 167 from Washington.

Charite, a town of France, in the department of Nièvre and late province of Nivernois. Its situation on the road from Paris to Lyons, and the canal of Briare, has made its trade very brisk. Here are forges for converting the iron in the neighbourhood into steel, a woolen manufacture, and another for arms, helmets, and hardware in general. The suburb is situate in a kind of island, which forms about a fourth of the town. The stone bridge communicating with it was ruined by the melting of the ice in 1789. The town derives its name from the charity of the late prior of the Benedictine Clunistes, upon whose bounty it subsisted in a time of scarcity. Lon. 3 10 E, lat. 47 10 N.

Charles Fort, a fortress of Ireland, at the entrance of Kinsale harbour. Lon. 2 23 W, lat. 51 1 N.

Charleston, the principal town of Charleston county, and the metropolis of the state of South Carolina. It was planted in 1669 at the confluence of Cooper and Ashley Rivers, in the lat. of 32° 50' N, and lon. of 80° 15' W. Ashley river is navigable 20 miles above the city by vessels of considerable burden; but it being placed on a low spot of ground, and in the vicinity of the ocean, it is subject to be inundated by high tides, and has often suffered from this cause, as well as by fires and tremendous whirlwinds. Charleston is nevertheless a capital of great riches and commerce; the exports of 1803 amounting to $ 7,811,108.—The banks of the rivers above and below the town are beautified with fine plantations, and walks, interspersed with rows of trees. The streets that lie E and W run in straight lines, from river to river, and are intersected by others at right angles; though they have one common fault of being too narrow, some of them being not above 35 feet wide. Most, if not all of them are provided with subterranean drains that carry off the water and filth of the city.—The houses lately built are principally of bricks, and some of them in a style of comparative grandeur and elegance. The chief public edifices are an exchange, a state-house, a bank, an armoury, and a public alms-house, with ten or a dozen places of religious worship. Here are two banks, besides a branch of the United States' bank. The inhabitants in 1800 amounted to 18,824, nearly one half of them slaves. The entrance of the harbour is defended by a fort on Sullivan's Island, about six miles below the city. This fort repelled the attack of a British fleet under Sir P. Parker, in the revolution war, with a very destructive effect to the assailants.

Cherson, the capital of New Russia, in the government of Catharineslaf. It is a new town erected by Catharine II on the N bank of the Dneiper, 10 miles below the mouth of the Ingulec. It is not yet very large; but the church, and many of the houses are built of stone, in an excellent taste. It is intended to be the principal mart of all the commodities of export and import. It has a dock, for the construction of large vessels from which several men of war and merchant ships have been already launched. It is supplied with fuel by reeds only, of which there is an inexhaustible forest in the shallows of the Dneiper, opposite the town. Rafts, and even temporary houses, are made of them. They are tall and strong, and afford shelter to various kinds of aquatic birds, some of which are very beautiful. The fortifications are made, and the plantations formed, by malefactors, who amount to some hundreds. In 1787, the empress made a triumphant journey to this capital, and met the emperor Joseph II. Her intention it is said, was to be crowned here queen of Taurica, and empress of the East. But the design, whatever it was, did not take place; and she was content to have inscribed over one of the gates of the city, "Through this gate lies the road to Byzantium." In this place, in 1790, the excellent Mr. Howard, so well known for his plans of reform of the different hospitals and prisons of Europe, fell a victim to his indefatigable humanity. Cherson is 50 miles E of Oczakow. Lon. 33 10 E, lat. 46 5 N.

Cheshire, an English county palatine, bounded on the N by Lancashire, on the N E by Yorkshire, on the E by Derbyshire, on the S E by Staffordshire, on the S by Shropshire, on the W by Denbighshire and Flintshire, and on the N W by the Irish Sea.

This county extends 33 miles from N to S, and 42 from E to W, without including a peninsula 13 miles in length and six in breadth, which projects into the Irish Sea, or a narrow tract of land which stretches between Lancashire and Derbyshire, to Yorkshire, on the N E. It is supposed to contain 125,000 inhabitants. It is divided into seven hundreds, containing one city, 11 market-towns, and 101 parishes. It sends two members to parliament for the county, and two for Chester. Both the air and soil are good. In many places of the country are peat mosses, in which are often found trunks of fir trees, sometimes several feet under ground, that are used by the inhabitants both for fuel and candles. Here also are many lakes and pools well stored with fish; besides the rivers Mersec, Weaver, Dane, and Dee, which last falls into a creek of the Irish sea, near Chester.

It is rich in pasture and corn land; but there are several heaths upon which horses and sheep feed, among which are the extensive forests of Macclesfield and Delamere. The country is generally level, the highest hills in it are about Frodsham; and its extensive pastures feed a great number of cows, whose milk is peculiarly rich, and of which is made excellent cheese, for which this country is chiefly remarkable. This cheese has a peculiar flavour, and is not inferior to any of Europe. Such quantities of these cheeses are made, that London alone is said to take annually 14,000 tons; and vast quantities are also sent to Bristol, York, Scotland, Ireland, &c. This county is likewise famous for its salt springs at Namptwich, Middlewich, Northwich, and Winsford; and, at Northwich, there are vast pits of solid salt rock.

Chester, the capital of Cheshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is a very ancient city, supposed to have been founded by the Romans, and plainly appears to have been a Roman station, by the many antiquities which have been and are still discovered about the town; the walls are near two miles in circumference, and there are four gates, towards the four cardinal points. It has a strong castle, in which is the shire-hall, and 10 churches, besides the cathedral. The structure of the principal streets is very singular. They are as if ex- cavated out of the earth and sunk ma- ny feet below the surface; the carri- ages drive far beneath the level of the kitchens on a line with ranges of shops. The houses are mostly of wood, with galleries, paizzas, and covered walls before them; by which not only the shops, but those who are walking about the town are so hid that one would ima- gine there were scarce any inhabitants in it, though it is very populous. The back courts of all the houses are on a level with the ground; but to go into any of the four principal streets, it is necessary to descend a flight of several steps. It has a constant com- munication with Ireland; this and Holyhead being the principal places of taking shipping for Dublin. It has a small share of foreign trade; and its two annual fairs are the most noted in England, especially for the sale of Irish linen. It has a manufacture of gloves, and a considerable traffic of shop goods into North Wales. It gives the title of earl to the prince of Wales, is governed by a mayor, sends two members to parliament, and is a bishop's see. It is 20 miles S by E of Liverpool, 38 S W of Manchester, and 182 N W of London. Lon. 3 3 E, lat. W, 52 12 N.

Chester, a town in Rockingham coun- ty, New Hampshire, 30 miles westward from Portsmouth, and about the same distance N W of Newbury-Port. Here is a post-office 528 miles from Wash- ington.

Chesterfield, a town in Derbyshire, with a market on Saturday, and a hand- some church remarkable for its curved spire. It is a handsome populous town, governed by a mayor, and next to Der- by, is the most considerable trading town in the county. It has a manufac- ture of stockings, and also of carpets. There are potteries for brown ware, and near the town large iron founde- ries, the ore and coal for the supply of which are dug in the vicinity. Large quantities of lead are sent from hence, by a canal from this town to the Trent, which it joins below Gainsborough. It has a church, but its spire which is of timber covered with lead, is warped all away. Chesterfield is seated on a hill, between the rivulets Ibbor and Rother, 22 miles N of Derby, and 149 N N W of London. Lon. 1 27 W, lat. 53 18 N.

Chesterfield, a post town in Cheshire county, New Hampshire; situated on the E side of Connecticut river, 11 W miles of Marlborough, and opposite to Brattleboro', Vermont. It contained 2161 inhabitants at the last census in 1800.

Chesterfield, a town of Essex county, New-York, having a post-office 547 miles from Washington.

Chesterfield, a post town in Caroline county, Virginia, 34 miles S of Fredericksburg on the Rappahanoc, and 109 from Washington.

Chester, town, the chief town of Kent county, Maryland; situated on Ches- ter river, 17 miles N of Centerville, and about the same distance S W of Georgetown, on Sassafra river. It is a post town and the seat of a college.

Cheviot, a district in Northumber- land, to the S W of Wooller, on the borders of Scotland, famous for the free chase, much used here by the English and Scots gentry. The adja- cent country being hilly is called the Cheviot Hills, of which one is so high that it is seen 60 miles off; and is the first land discovered by ships coming from the E: near the chase are some fenny grounds called the Cheviot Muirs. This is the Cheviot famous for the fierce encounter between the English and Scots under the earls Percy and Douglas, which is cele- brated in the ballad of Chevy Chase.

Chiavenna, a town of Swisserland, capital of a county of the same name, under the sovereignty of the Grisons. It is a trading place, especially in wine and delicate fruits; but its chief support is the transport of merchandise, it being the principal communication between the Milanese and Germany. The governor's palace, and the churches are magnificent; and the inhabitants are Roman catholics. Chiavenna is seated near the lakes of Chiavenna and Como. Lon. 9 19 E, lat. 46 19 N.

Chiavenna, Laghetto di, a small lake of the country of the Grisons, in Swisserland, near the town of Chiavenna, remarkable for its delightful views, which are wild and magnificent. It is surrounded by barren rocks, craggy, and rising into spires sprinkled with snow. The bases of these dreadful precipices are lost in the overshadowed water, dangerous on account of its malignant vapours, and affording no asylum, scarcely a landing place, to the crews of those frail boats, which are caught unwarily in the violent storms to which it is subject.

Chicasaws, a nation of Indians, settled on the head branches of the Tombeche, Mobile, and Yazoo rivers, in the N W corner of Georgia. The number of these Indians has been reckoned at 1725, of which 575 are fighting men. They have seven towns, the central one of which is in lon. 89 43 W, lat. 34 23 N.

Chichester, the capital of Sussex, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is surrounded with a wall, which has four gates answering to the four cardinal points; from which run two streets that cross one another in the middle and form a square, where the market is kept, and where is a fine stone piazza built by bishop Red. The space between the W and S gates, is taken up with the cathedral church, and the bishop's palace. It has seven parish churches, and is seated on the little river Lavant, which washes it on all sides except the N. The principal manufacture is malt and needles. Its market is noted for fish, wheat, barley, malt and oats: the finest lobsters in England, are bred in the Lavant, and it is observable, that this river unlike most others is very low in winter, but in summer often overflows its banks. It is 61 miles S W of London. Lon. 0 48 W, lat. 50 50 N.

Chielefa, a town of Turkey in Europe, in the Morca. It was taken by the Venetians in 1685; but the Turks retook it. Lon. 22 28 E, lat. 36 35 N.

Chiemsee, a lake of Germany, in Bavaria, which contains an island and town of the same name, with a bishop's see. The island is 17 miles in circumference, and the town is 22 miles WSW of Saltzburg.

Chieri, a fortified town of Piedmont, seated on the declivity of a hill, in a pleasant country, bounded on all sides by hills covered with vines. It is eight miles E of Turin.

Chifiti, a town of Naples capital of Abruzzo Citeriore, with an archbishop's see. It is seated on a mountain near the river Pescara, eight miles S W of Pescara. Lon. 15 7 E, lat. 42 20 N.

Chigwell, a village in Essex, near Epping Forest, noted for a freeschool, founded by archbishop Harsnett, who had been vicar of this place. Chigwell is 10 miles N E of London.

Chihiri, or Port-Cheer, a seaport of Arabia Felix, which carries on a considerable trade. Lon. 49 25 E, lat. 14 40 N.

Chilesburg, a post town in Caroline county, Virginia, on the E side of Pamunkey river, 32 miles S by W of Fredericksburg, on the Rappahannoc, and 90 miles from Washington.

Chili, a large country of South America, on the coast of the South Pacific Ocean, discovered by Diego d'Almagro in 1525. The mountainous part of it is still possessed by the Puelches, Araucos, and other tribes of its original inhabitants, formidable neighbours to the Spaniards, with whom, during two centuries, they have been obliged to maintain almost perpetual hostility suspended only by a few intervals of insecure peace. The Spanish colonies, therefore, are dispersed on the borders of the South Sea, to an extent of about 900 miles. They are parted from Peru by a desert of 80 leagues in breadth, and bounded by the island of Chiloe, at the extremity next the straits of Magellan. The climate of delightful in the New World. Tho' bordering on the Torrid Zone, it never feels the extremities of heat, being rendered cool and agreeable by its vicinity to the Andes. The temperature of the air is so mild and equable, that the Spaniards give it the preference to that of the southern provinces in their native country. The fertility of the soil corresponds with the benignity of the climate, and is wonderfully accommodated to European productions, which have all improved in that happy climate. The most valuable of these, corn, wine, and oil, abound in Chili, as if they had been native in the country. Here all the fruits imported from Europe attain to full maturity; and the animals not only multiply, but improve. The horned cattle are of a larger size than those of Spain; and its horses excel in beauty and spirit, the famous Andalusian race from which they sprung. Nature too has enriched Chili with valuable mines of gold, silver, copper, and lead. Yet with all these advantages Chili has no direct communication with the mother-country. Their trade is confined to Peru, Paraguay, and the savages on their frontiers. Chili is governed by a chief, who is absolute in all civil, political and military affairs, and is also independent of the viceroy. If on some occasions the viceroy has interfered in the government of Chili, it was when he has been either authorized by a particular trust reposed in him, or by the deference paid to the eminence of his office. In the whole extent of Chili there are not above 80,000 white inhabitants, and 240,000 negroes and people of a mixed race.

Chillicothe, the capital of Ross county, in the state of Ohio; situated on the W side of Sciota river. Here is a post-office, 420 miles from Washington.

Chilka, a lake in the Decan of Hindoostan, which bounds the five Circars on the N. It lies on the coast of the bay of Bengal, and seems the effect of the breach of the sea, over a flat sandy surface, whose elevation was something above the level of the country within. It is 40 miles in length from N E to S W, and in most places 11 or 15 wide, with a narrow slip of sandy ground between it and the sea. It has many inhabited islands on it. On the N W it is bounded by a ridge of mountains, a continuation of that which extends from the Mahanuddy to the Go-davery river, and shuts up the Circars towards the continent. It affords an agreeable diversity of objects; mountains, islands, and forests; and an extended surface of water, with boats and small vessels sailing on it. To those who sail at some distance from the coast, this lake has the appearance of a deep bay; the slip of land not being visible.

Chiloe, an island of South America, on the coast of Chili, 125 miles in length, and 17 in breadth. The principal town is Castro.

Chiltern, a chain of chalky hills, running from E to W through Buckinghamshire, and forming the S part of the county. They are covered, in various parts, with woods; and some of the eminences are of considerable height, and afford rich prospects. The air on these heights is extremely healthful; the soil, tho' stony, produces good crops of wheat and barley. This district belongs to the crown, which, for time immemorial, has had an officer under it, with the title of Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds.

Chimay, a town of France, in the department of the North, and late province of Hainault, seated on the river Blanche, 20 miles S S W of Charleroy. Lon. 4 15 E, lat. 50 0 N.

Chimera, an ancient town of Turkey in Europe, in Albania, capital of a territory of the same name, including a chain of mountains, of which one part is free, and the other subject to the Turks. It is seated on a rock at the entrance of the gulf of Venice, 29 miles N of Corfu. Lon. 20 8 E, lat. 40 8 N.

Chimbeigh, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Wednesday. It is almost surrounded by the river Dart; and is 21 miles N W of Exeter, and 195 W by S of London. Lon. 3 53 W, lat. 50 57 N.

China, an extensive empire in Asia, bounded on the N by Tartary, from which it is separated by a great wall 500 leagues in length; on the E by the Yellow Sea and the Chinese Ocean; on the S by that ocean and the kingdoms of Tonquin, Laos, and Burmah; and on the W by Thibet. It lies between 100 and 125° E lon. and 20 and 41° N lat. It is 2000 miles from N to S, and 1500 from E to W, and divided into 15 provinces, which contain 4402 walled cities, divided into classes; the civil and the military; the civil class contains 2045, and that of the military 2337. It is in general a plain and level country, with few mountains of any note, but the rivers are very numerous and considerable; though the water commonly used is of a very indifferent quality, and sometimes requires boiling to render it fit for use. The numerous rivers are of great service for the inland navigation of the country, and it is besides assisted by such numbers of canals as are not to be met with in any country of the world. These are formed in a manner superior to that of other nations: the principal being lined with hewn stone, so deep that they are able to carry vessels of any burden, and extending in some places 1000 miles in length. They are furnished with stone quays, and sometimes with bridges of a surprising construction. The vessels are fitted with all the conveniences of life, and it has been supposed that the empire of China contains as many inhabitants by water as by land. Their navigation, however, is slow, and they are sometimes drawn by men. According to the calculations of father Amiot, China contains 200,000,000 inhabitants. Astonishing as this may appear to Europeans, Abbe Grosier is of opinion that this account is by no means exaggerated; and he himself not only states all the calculations of Amiot, but gives a variety of reasons, from circumstances almost peculiar to China, to account for this wonderful population in that remote corner of Asia. The climate and soil are various, as the different provinces are nearer to, or remote from, the S; severe cold being felt at Peking, while the southern provinces are exposed to excessive heat. In several of the provinces, the land yields two crops a-year; yet, though the husbandman cultivates it with such care, as not to lose the smallest portion of ground, China has been often desolated by famine. Its numerous mountains (which are chiefly in the N and W parts of the empire) contain mines of iron, tin, copper, quicksilver, gold, and silver; but those of gold and silver are not permitted to be opened; the emperors having always feared, that if the people should be exposed to the temptation of these artificial riches, they would be induced to neglect the more useful labours of agriculture. Quarries of marble, coal mines, lapis lazuli, rock crystals, pre-ciuous stones, and a kind of sonorous stones, of which musical instruments are composed, are abundant in China. They have potter's earth too of such various and superior kinds, that their celebrated fine porcelain will ever remain unrivalled. The whole of the finest is reserved for the emperor, so that none of it ever comes into the hands of other persons, unless it happen to be cracked or otherwise damaged in such a manner as to be unworthy of being presented to the sovereign. There is some doubt therefore, if any of the finest Chinese porcelain was ever seen in Europe. Beside the fruits peculiar to the country, China produces the greater part of those of Europe; but (excepting the grapes and pomeligranates) they are much inferior. Oranges were first brought us from China. They have also lemons, citrons, the tse-tse, a kind of fig peculiar to China; the li-tchi, of the size of a date, its stone covered with a soft juicy pulp of an exquisite taste, but dangerous when eaten to excess: the long-yen, or dragon's-eyes, its pulp, white, tart and juicy, not so agreeable to the taste, but more wholesome than the li-tchi. The Chinese surpass us in the art of managing kitchen-gardens, and have a number of vegetables unknown to us. They cultivate even the bottom of their waters; the beds of their lakes, ponds and rivulets, producing crops unknown to us, particularly of the pitsi, or water chesnut, the fruit of which (found in a cover formed by its root) is exceedingly wholesome, and of a very delicate taste. The mountains and vast forests abound with wild animals of every species; but that valuable quadruped, the musk-deer is peculiar to it. Of their birds, the most beautiful in China, and perhaps, in the world, is the kin-li, or golden fowl. The complexion of the Chinese is a sort of tawny, and they have large foreheads, small eyes, short noses, large ears, long beards, and black hair; and those are thought to be the most handsome who are the most bulky. The women affect a great deal of modesty, and are remarkable for their little feet. The men endeavour to make as pompous an appearance as possible, when they go abroad, and yet their houses are mean and low, consisting only of a ground floor. Learning, with the arts and sciences in general, is much cultivated in this country The government is absolute, and the emperor is more unlimited in his authority than any other monarch upon earth: his edicts are respected thro' the empire, as if they came from a divinity; he alone has the disposal of all places, and merit alone, real or supposed, rises to an office. He has likewise the privilege of choosing his successor, and there have been several instances of his making use of this right; but the chief mandarin has permission to tell him of his faults. He looks upon his subjects as his children, and professes to govern them with paternal affection. Their empire is very ancient, and they pretend that it existed many thousand years before Noah's flood; it is generally allowed to have continued 4000 years. The annual revenues of the crown are computed at 41,000,000, sterling, and the horse are said to consist of 5,000,000 in time of peace; but they have no enemies to cope with. The principal defence of the empire against a foreign enemy is the great wall which separates China from Tartary, extending more than 1500 miles in length, and of such thickness that six horsemen may easily ride abreast upon it. It is flanked with towers two bowshots distant from each other; and it is said that a third of the able-bodied men in the empire, were employed in constructing it. The workmen were ordered under pain of death to place the materials so closely, that not the least entrance might be afforded for any instrument of iron; and thus the work was constructed with such solidity, that it is still almost entire, though 2000 years have elapsed since it was constructed. Their religion is Paganism. The Chinese are allowed only to have one wife, whose rank and age must be nearly equal to that of their husbands; but they are allowed to have several concubines, whom they admit into their houses without any formality, after paying the parents a sum of money, and entering into a written engagement to use their daughters well. Divorces are allowed in China in cases of adultery, mutual dislike, incompatibility of tempers, jealousy, &c. No husband, however, can put away or sell his wife until a divorce is legally obtained; and if this regulation be not strictly observed, the buyer and seller become equally culpable. If a wife lately married, privately withdraws herself from her husband, he may immediately commence an action at law, by the sentence of which she becomes his slave, and he is at liberty to sell her to whom he pleases. On the other hand, if a husband leaves his wife for three years, she is at liberty, after laying her case before the mandarins, to take another husband; but if she were to anticipate their consent, she would be liable to a severe punishment. The Chinese pretend to have a great veneration for their ancestors; and some keep images of them in their houses, to which they pay a sort of adoration. They have laws which regulate the civilities and ceremonious salutations they pay to each other, for which reason they always appear to be extremely goodnatured; and yet they are as deceitful as any people in the world. Their writing is very particular, for every letter is a word, and consequently they have as many letters or characters, as words in their language. All their towns are so much alike, that those who know one, are acquainted with all. Peking is the capital.

Chinca, a seaport of Peru, seated on a river, in a valley of its own name, 90 miles S of Lima. Lon. 76 15 W, lat. 13 10 S.

Chinon, an ancient town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire, and late province of Touraine, with a castle, in which Henry II. king of England expired. Chinon is the birthplace of Rabelais and of Quillet. It is seated on the Vienne, 10 miles N of Richelieu, and 150 S W of Paris. Lon. 0 22 E, lat. 47 12 N.

Chinsura, a town of Hindoostan Proper, in Bengal. It is a settlement of the Dutch, and is seated on the river Hoogly, nearly midway between Chandernagore, and the old town of Hoogly. It contains several good houses, and a church, with a little mole projecting into the river. It was taken by the English in 1795.

Chiny, a town of the Netherlands, capital of a county of the same name, in Austrian Luxemburg, 57 miles W of Luxemburg. Lon. 5 37 E, lat. 49 45 N.

Chios, Scio, or Kio, by the Turks called Sabi Saduci, an island lying near the coast of Ionia, in Asia Minor, about 100 miles W of Smyrna. It is mountainous and rocky, and about 100 miles in circuit. The number of its inhabitants is almost incredible, having besides others upwards of a million of Greeks, who have 300 churches here, besides chapels and monasteries. It abounds with excellent wines; and from thence the ancients had their nectar.

Chios, the capital of the above island. It stands on the E coast, is as well built as most of the towns in the Levant, the Genoese having been long in the possession of it. Here is a Turkish garrison of 1400 men, and the port is the rendezvous of the Turkish shipping, which trade to Constantinople, and usually the station of a squadron of Turkish galleys. The natives pretend that Homer was born here, and shew a place they call his school, at the foot of mount Epos, about four miles from the city. Lon. 27 5 E, lat. 38 6 N.

Chiourlic, an ancient town of Romania, with the see of a Greek bishop. It is seated on a river of the same name, 47 miles W of Constantinople. Lon. 27 37 E, lat. 41 8 N.

Chiozzo, anciently Fossa Claudia, a town and island of Italy, in the territory of Venice, with a bishop's see, and a harbour defended by a fort. It is 18 miles S of Venice. Lon. 12 9 E, lat. 45 17 N.

Chippenham, a borough in Wilts, with a market on Saturday. It sends two members to parliament; and is seated on the Avon, over which is a stone bridge of 16 arches, 21 miles E of Bristol, and 94 W of London. Lon. 2 8 W, lat. 51 27 N.

Chirk, a village S of Wrexham, in Denbighshire. It had formerly two castles, on the top of a hill, one of which seems to have been a magnificent structure.

Chislehurst, a village in Kent, near Bromley. Here is Camden Place, the ancient seat of earl Camden, and the residence of the celebrated antiquary of that name, who died here. Here likewise were born Sir Nicholas Bacon, and Sir Francis Walsingham. It is 11 miles E S E of London.

Chisme, a seaport of Natolia, on the strait that parts the continent from the isle of Scio. It was anciently called Cyssus, was celebrated for the great victory which the Romans gained here over the fleet of Antiochus, in 191 B C, and has been distinguished by the destruction of the Turkish fleet by the Russians in 1770.

Chiswick, a village in Middlesex, on the Thames. Here is Chiswick House, a celebrated villa of the duke of Devonshire, built by the earl of Burlington, after a design of Palladio. In the churchyard is a monument to Hogarth, with an epitaph by Garrick. It is five miles W by S of London.

Chitor, the capital of a province of the same name in the Hither India. This city is supposed to have been the seat of Porus's dominions, who engaged Alexander. It lies 256 miles N E of Surat, and is subject to the Great Mogul. Lon. 76 10 E, lat. 23 30 N.

Chitor, a city of Piedmont in Italy, situated on the Po, ten miles N of Turin; it was taken by the French after a gallant defence in 1705, but recovered by the confederates the following year; it is subject to the king of Sardinia. Lon. 7 35 E, lat. 45 12 N.

Chitro, a town of Macedonia, on the bay of Salonichi, where the mother, wife, and son of Alexander were murdered by Cassander; and where Perseus was defeated by the Romans. Lon. 22 35 E, lat. 40 20 N.

Chitterdroog, a town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, in Mysore, 117 miles N by W of Seringapatam. Lon. 76 15 E, lat. 14 5 N.

Chivaa, a town of Piedmont, which has been several times taken and retaken. It is so advantageously situated near the river Po, that it is called the key of Italy. It is 12 miles N E of Turin. Lon. 7 47 E, lat. 45 13 N.

Chiusi, an episcopal town of Tuscany, poorly peopled, on account of its unwholesome air. It is 35 miles S E of Sienna. Lon. 10 52 E, lat. 43 0 N.

Chiuata, a town of Turkey in Asia, capital of Natolia Proper, and the residence of the Grand Signior before the taking of Constantinople. It is seated on the river Ayala, 75 miles E of Bursa. Lon. 30 47 E, lat. 39 30 N.

Choczim, a town of Moldavia, on the Dniester. It was taken by the Poles, in 1670, after they had totally defeated the Turkish army, before its walls. It surrendered in 1788 to the Russians and Austrians, but was restored to the Turks at the subsequent peace. It is 110 miles N W of Jassy. Lon. 26 25 W, lat. 48 46 N.

Christiania, a city of Southern Norway, in the government of Aggerhuys, situate at the extremity of a fertile valley, forming a semicircular bend along the shore of the beautiful bay of Biorn-ing, which forms the N extremity of the gulf of Christiania. The castle of Aggerhuys is built on a rocky eminence on the W side of the bay, at a small distance from the city. The town is divided into the city: the suburbs of Waterlandt, Peterwigen, and Fierdingen; the fortress of Aggerhuys; and the old town of Opaloe or Ansløe. The streets are carried in a straight line, and at right angles to each other, are uniformly 40 feet broad, and very neat and clean. The inhabitants amount to about 9000. The city was rebuilt in its present situation by Christian IV. after a plan designed by himself. The governor is the chief governor of Norway, and presides in the high court of justice. Opsløe was the site of the old city, burnt in 1624. It contains the episcopal palace. Christiana has an excellent harbour, and carries on a considerable trade. Its principal exports are tar, soap, iron, copper, planks, deals, and alum. The planks and deals are of superior estimation to those sent from America, or from Russia and the other parts of the Baltic. It has 136 privileged sawmills, of which 100 belong to a single family of the name of Anker. Christiania is 30 is small, but neatly built, and is esteemed the strongest fortress in Swedmostly stuccoed white. English vessels annually resort to this port, for alum, pitch, and tar. The inhabitants have manufactures of cloth and silken stuffs. The town is seated in a marshy plain, close to the river Helge-å, which flows into the Baltic at Ahus, about the distance of 20 miles, and is navigable only for small craft of seven tons burden. The inhabitants have manufac-

Christopher, St. or St. Kitt's, one of the Leeward Islands in the West Indies, 60 miles W of Antigua. It was formerly inhabited by the French and English; but, in 1713, it was ceded to the latter. It is 20 miles in breadth, and seven in length, and has high mountains in the middle, whence rivulets flow, which are of great use to the inhabitants. Between the mountains are dreadful rocks, horrid precipices, and thick woods; and in the S W parts, hot sulphureous springs at the foot of them. The air is good, the soil light, sandy, and fruitful; but it is subject to hurricanes. The produce is chiefly sugar, cotton, ginger, indigo, and the tropical fruits. It was taken by the French in 1782, but restored the next year. Basseterre is the capital.

Chunar, a fort of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Allahabad. It is seated on the Ganges, 20 miles above Benares, and is built on a rock, which is fortified all round by a wall, and towers at various distances. At the end, overlooking the river, is situated the citadel, which has formerly been strong. This fort is said to be of the highest antiquity, and originally built by the Hindoos. In the citadel is an altar, consisting of a plain black marble slab, on which the tutelary deity of the place is traditionally supposed to be seated at all times, except from sunrise till nine in the morning, when he is at Benares; during which time, from the superstition of the Hindoos, attacks may be made with a prospect of success. Chunar has always been considered as a post of great consequence on the Ganges, from its insulated situation, projecting forward to a great extent, and being of considerable height. It was unsuccessfully attempted by the English in 1764: the next year it was surrendered to them; they restored it to the nabob of Oude at the subsequent peace; but in 1772, it was finally ceded to the English by that prince, in exchange for Allahabad. At this place is kept the magazine of ammunition and artillery for the brigade of Cawnpore. It is 385 miles N W of Calcutta. Lon. 85 50 E, lat. 25 10 N.

Chunab, or Jenaub, a river of Hindoostan Proper, one of the five eastern branches of the Indus. It runs through Cashmere and Lahore, between the Chelum and the Rauvee. Its general course is from N E to S W, and after leaving Jummo, is through a flat country gradually approaching to the Chelum. It is united with both these rivers at some distance above Moultan. Its junction with the Chelum, about 50 miles above Moultan, is effected with great violence and noise, and no less danger to navigators. The Chunab is the Acesines of Alexander.

They seem to be among the rudest people in America united in the social state; they neither cultivate nor sow, but depend on the spontaneous productions of the earth, or on hunting or fishing. About the year 1771, the Spaniards in their expeditions against the fierce tribes in this and the province of Sonora, discovered that these neglected and thinly inhabited provinces, abounded in the richest gold mines, and might soon become as populous and valuable as any part of Spanish America; and, accordingly, the population in these parts has since very much increased. The town is seated

Cineguilla, a town of New Mexico in the province of Sonora. When the Spaniards attacked the natives in Cina-entered a plain of 14 leagues in extent, in which, at the depth of only 16 inches, they found gold in great abundant, and in grains of great size and weight. The consequence was, that in 1771, above 2000 persons were set-

Cinque Ports, certain ports on the coast of Kent and Sussex, so called by way of eminence, on account of their superior importance, as having been thought by our kings to merit a particular regard for their preservation against invasion. They were five in number when their first charter was granted by William I. in 1077. These were Dover, Hastings, Hythe, Romney, and Sandwich; to which were afterward added Winchelsea, Seaford, and Rye. That king appointed a constable of Dover Castle (who is now called Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports) and invested him with the command of these parts, whose inhabitants had considerable privileges. Amongst others they were each of them to send two barons to represent them in parliament; they were to be exempted from subsidies and aids; their heirs were to be free from personal ward-ship notwithstanding any tenure; and they were to be implicated in their own towns, not elsewhere. For these privileges, they were obliged to supply the government with 57 ships, at 40 days notice, and to pay their crews during 15 days. At that period, the opulent traders of London were styled barons; a privilege, which was enjoyed likewise by the merchants of these ports, whose representatives, to this day, are styled Barons of the Cinque Ports.

Circars, Northern, five provinces on the W coast of the Bay of Bengal.
They were originally denominated Northern from their position in respect to Madras, on which they depend.
Of the five Northern circars, Cicacole, Rajamundry, Ellore and Condapilly are in the possession of the English, and Guntoor is in the hands of the Nizam. The first four extend from the N bank of the Kistna to Chilka Lake; forming a narrow slip of country 350 miles long, and from 26 to 75 broad, bounded by mountains and extensive forests on the side opposite the sea.
The English Circars had been ceded to the French, by the nizam of the Dec-can in 1753; but they were conquered by colonel Clive in 1759, and produce an annual revenue of 360,000*l*. See Guntoor.

Circassia, a large country of Asia, situated between 45 and 50 degrees of N latitude, and between 40 and 50 of E longitude. It is bounded by Russia on the N; by Astracan and the Caspian sea on the E; by Georgia and Dagistan on the S; and by the river Don, the Palus Meotis, and the Black Sea on the W. This country has long been celebrated for the extraordinary beauty of its women; and here it was that the practice of inoculating for the small pox first began. Terki, the principal city, is seated in a very spacious plain, very swampy, towards the sea side, in 43 deg. 23 min. N latitude: it is about three wersts in compass, well fortified with ramparts and bastions in the modern style, well stored with cannon, and has always a considerable garrison in it, under the command of a governor. The Circassian prince who resides here, is allowed 500 Russians for his guard, but none of his own subjects are permitted to dwell within any part of the fortifications. Ever since the reduction of those parts to the obedience of Russia, they have put in all places of strength, not only Russian garrisons and governors, but magistrates, and priests for the exercise of the Christian religion; yet the Circassian Tartars are governed by their own princes, lords, and judges; but these administer justice in the name of the emperor, and in matters of importance, not without the presence of the Russian governors, being all obliged to take the oath of allegiance to his imperial majesty. The apparel of the men of Circassia, is much the same with that of the Nagayans; only their caps are something larger; and their cloaks being likewise of coarse cloth or sheep skins, are fastened only at the neck with a string, and as they are not large enough to cover the whole body, they turn them round according to the wind and weather. The men here are much better favoured than those of Nagaya, and the women extremely well shaped, with exceeding fine features, smooth clear complexions, and beautiful black eyes, which, with their black hair hanging in two tresses, one on each side the face, give them a most lovely appearance: they wear a black coif on their heads, covered with a fine white cloth tied under the chin. During the summer they all wear only a smock of divers colours, and that open so low before, that one may see below their navels: this, with their beautiful faces always uncovered (contrary to the custom of most of the other provinces of these parts), their good humour and lively freedom in conversation, altogether render them very attracting; notwithstanding which they have the reputation of being very chaste, though they seldom want opportunity; for according to the accounts of a late traveller, it is an established point of good manners among them, that as soon as any person comes in to speak to the wife, the husband goes out of the house; but whether this continency of theirs proceeds from their own generosity, to recompence their husbands for the confidence they put in them, or has its foundation only in fame, he pretends not to determine. The bridegroom pays for his bride a marriage present, consisting of arms or a coat of mail, but he must not see her, or cohabit with her, without the greatest mystery; and this reserve continues during life. The father makes the bride a present on the wedding-day, but reserves the greater part of what he intends to give her till the birth of her first child. On this occasion she pays him a visit, receives from him the remainder of her portion, and is clothed by him in the dress of a matron, the principal distinction of which consists in a veil. Until this time, the dress of the women is much like that of the men, excepting that the cloak is longer, and frequently white, a colour never worn by men: the cap too is generally red or rose-coloured. Before marriage, the youth of both sexes see each other freely at the little rejoicings which take place on festivals. Before the ball, the young men show their activity and address in a variety of military exercises, and the most alert have the privilege of choosing the most beautiful partners. Their musical instruments are a long flute with only three stops, a species of mandoline, and a tambourin. The dances are in the Asiatic style, with little gaiety or expression; the steps difficult, but not graceful. The women participate in the general character of the nation: they take pride in the courage of their husbands, and reproach them severely when defeated. They polish and take care of the armour of the men. Their language they have in common with the other neighbouring Tartars, although the chief people among them are also not ignorant of the Russian: their ree parts), their good hum-freedom in conversation, under them very attract-standing which they have neighbouring Tartars, although people among them are also ant of the Russian: their religion is Paganism; for notwithstanding they use circumcision among them, they have neither priest, alcoran, or mosque, like other Mahometans. Every body here offers his own sacrifice at pleasure; for which, however, they have certain days, established rather by custom than any positive command; their most solemn sacrifice is offered at the death of their nearest friends; upon which occasion both men and women meet in the field to be present at the offering, which is an he-goat; and having killed, they flay it, and stretch the skin with the head and horns on, upon a cross at the top of a long pole, placed commonly in a quickset hedge (to keep the cattle from it); and near the place the sacrifice is offered by boiling and roasting the flesh, which they afterwards eat. When the feast is over, the men rise, and having paid their adoration to the skin, and muttered over some certain prayers, the women withdraw, and the mer conclude the ceremony with drinking a great quantity of aquavitz; and this generally ends in a quarrel before they part. The face of the country is pleasantly diversified with mountains, valleys, woods lakes, and rivers; and, though not much cultivated, is far from being unfruitful. In summer the inhabitants quit the towns, and encamp in the fields like the neighbouring Tartars; occasionally shifting their stations along with their flocks and herds. Besides game, in which the country greatly abounds, the Circassians eat beef and mutton; but that which they prefer to all others is the flesh of a young horse. Their bread consists of thin cakes of barley meal, baked upon the hearth, which they always eat new; and their usual drink is water or mare's milk; from the latter of which they distil a spirit, as most of the Tartar nations. They allot no fixed hours for the refreshments of the table or sleep, which they indulge irregularly, as inclination or convenience dictates. When the men make excursions into an enemy's country, they will pass several days and nights successively without sleeping; but, at their return, devote as much time to repose as the space in which they had before with held from that gratification.

 When they eat, they sit cross-legged on the floor, the skin of some animal serving them instead of a carpet. In removing from one part of the country to another, the women and children are carried in waggons, which are a kind of travelling houses, and drawn by oxen or camels, they never using horses for draught. Their breed of the latter, however, is reckoned exceeding good; and they are accustomed to swim almost any river on horseback. The women and children smoke tobacco as well as the men; and this is the most acceptable commodity which a traveller can carry with him into the Tartar countries. There are here no public inns, which indeed are unnecessary; for so great is the hospitality of the people, that they will contend with each other who shall entertain any stranger that happens to come among them.—The principal branch of their traffic is their own children, especially their daughters, whom they sell for the use of the seraglios in Turkey and Persia, where they frequently marry to great advantage, and make the fortune of their families. Whatever may have been the original religion of this people, they have been successively converted to Christianity and Mahom-etanism, and have now no religion or worship among them. They break, without scruple, such oaths as they have taken on the bible and the koran; but there are certain forms of oaths, and certain places, in the neighbourhood of their ruins (supposed to be remains of Christian churches) which insure their fidelity. Their courage, great as it is, is not proof against religions terrors. Like all barbarians, they believe that what is called accident, may be influenced by particular ceremonies. The Circassians have not any letters of their own; those among them who wish to write their language being obliged to make use of Arabian characters.

Cirencester, a considerable borough

Citta-Nuova, a city of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, containing 16 churches and convents within its walls, and 15 without. It is seated on the gulf of Venice, 10 miles S of Loreto. Lon. 13 40 E, lat. 43 16 N.

Citta-Nuova, a seaport of Venetian Istria, with a bishop's see, 60 miles E of Venice. Lon. 14 2 E, lat. 45 36 N.

City Point, a post town of Prince George county, Virginia; situated on the S side of James river, 11 miles N E of Petersburg, 24 miles S E of Richmond, and 169 from Washington.

Ciudad-Real, a town of Spain, capital of Mancha. The inhabitants are noted for dressing leather for gloves. It is two miles from the Guadiana, and 90 S of Madrid. Lon. 3 25 W, lat. 38 58 N.

Ciudad-Rodrigo, a town of Spain, in Leon, with a bishop's see, seated on the river Aquada, 40 miles S W of Salamanca. Lon. 5 58 W, lat. 40 33 N.

Civita-di-Friuli, a small but ancient town of Italy, in Venetian Friuli, seated on the Natissona, 10 miles E of Udina. Lon. 13 15 E, lat. 46 12 N.

Civita-di-Penna, an ancient town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ulteriore, with a bishop's see, near the river Salino, 35 miles N E of Aquila. Lon. 14 52 E, lat. 42 27 N.

Civita-Castellana, a town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma, on a high rock, at the foot of which is a river, which falls into the Tiber. It is 25 miles N W of Rome. Lon. 12 35 E, lat. 42 25 N.

Civita-Vecchia, a seaport of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, with an arsenal. Here the pope's galleys were formerly stationed, and it was a free port; but the air is unwholesome. It is 35 miles N W of Rome. Lon. 11 51 E, lat. 42 5 N.

Clackmannan, a small town in Scotland, and capital of the county of the same name. It is seated on the N shore of the Forth, and stands on a hill, on the top of which is a castle, commanding a noble prospect. A large square tower in this castle derives its name from the illustrious Robert Bruce, whose great sword and casque are here preserved. A large sword is also shown, said to have belonged to Sir John Graham, the faithful attendant of the heroic Wallace. It is 23 miles N by E of Glasgow. Lon. 3 40 W, lat. 56 5 N.

Clackmannanshire, a county of Scotland, bounded on the E by Fifeshire, on the N and W by Perthshire, and on the S by the Forth. It is eight miles in length, and five in breadth. The country is plain and fertile towards the frith, producing corn and pasture in abundance. This shire, with Kinross, sends one member to parliament. It is watered by the rivers Forth and Deven.

Clagenfurt, a town of Germany, capital of Carinthia, 50 miles S W of Vienna. Lon. 14 20 E, lat. 45 53 N.

Clair, St. a lake of North America, half way between the lakes Huron and Erie, 90 miles in circumference. It receives the waters of the great lakes Superior, Michigan, and Huron, and discharges them, through the strait called Detroit, into the lake Erie.

Clameci, a town of France, in the department of Nièvre and late province of Nivernois. Clameci is seated at the confluence of the Beuvron and Yonne, 112 miles S by E of Paris. Lon. 3 36 E, lat. 47 28 N.

Clapham, a village in Surry, noted for many handsome villas, which chiefly surround a beautiful common. In the old parish church, divine service is performed at funerals only; an elegant new church having been erected on the common, but without an adjoining cemetery. Clapham is three miles S W of London.

Clara, St. a small island of South America, in Peru, in the bay of Guaiquil, 70 miles S W of Guaiquil. Lon. 82 20 W, lat. 2 20 S.

Claremont, a town in Cheshire county, New Hampshire. It has a post office, and contains 1900 inhabitants.

Clarendon, a village, three miles E of Salisbury, where Henry II. summoned a council of the barons and prelates, in 114, who enacted the laws, called the Constitutions of Clarendon; and here were two palaces built by king John.

Clarens, or Chatillard, a village of Switzerland, in the Pays de Vaud, celebrated as the chief scene of Rous-seau's Eloise, though its ancient castle by no means accords with the description in that work. It is delightfully situate, not far from Vevay, on an eminence, whose declivity slopes gradually towards the lake of Geneva.

Clarksburg, a post town in Montgomery county, Maryland, 29 miles from Washington.

Clarksburg, the principal town of Harrison county, Virginia, situated on the main branch of Monongahela river, 36 miles S by W of Morgantown.

Clarksburg, a post town in Jackson county, Georgia, situated on the N fork of the Apalachy river, 110 miles NW of Augusta, and 704 from Wash- ington, with a post office.

Clarkesville, a post town, and the capital of Montgomery county, Tennessee; situated on the N side of Cumberland river, about 45 miles NW of Nashville, and 790 from Washington.

Claude, St. a handsome city of France, in the department of Jura and late province of Franche Comte; with a bishop's see. It is seated between three high mountains, on the river Lison, and owes its origin to a celebrated abbey, built in 425, in this then barren and uninhabited country. The cathedral is extremely elegant. From Mount St.

Claude, which forms part of Mount Jura, is a fine prospect over Swisserland and Savoy, the lake and town of Geneva, and the Pays de Vaud. In this city are many public fountains with large basins. It is 35 miles N W of Geneva. Lon. 6 18 E, lat. 46 24 N.

Claverack, a post town in Columbia county, New York, 5 miles E of Hudson.

Clausenburg, a town of Transylvania, on the river Samos, 60 miles N W of Hermanstadt. On one of the gates is an inscription in honour of the emperor Trajan. Lon. 23 20 E, lat. 46 53 N.

Clay, a town in Norfolk, seated on an arm of the sea, between two rivers, 20 miles N W of Norwich. Here are some large salt-works.

Clear Cape, a promontory of a little island on the S of Ireland. Lon. 11 15
W, lat. 51 18 N.

Clebury, a town in Shropshire, with a market on Thursday, seated on the rivdepartment of Oise and late province of the Isle of France, 37 miles N of Paris. Lon. 2 25 E, lat. 49 25 N.

Clermont, a considerable city of France, in the department of Puy de Dome, and late province of Auvergne, with a bishop's see. The cathedral, public squares, and walks, are very fine; but the streets are narrow, and lined with houses built of stones of a sombre hue. Many Roman antiquities are found in the neighbourhood. There are also some mineral springs; and that of the suburb St. Allyre has formed a natural bridge over the brook into which it falls; it is called the Mineral Bridge, and carriages may pass over it. Clermont contains 30,000 inhabitants, and has manufactures of ratteens, druggets, serges, and leather. It is the birth place of the celebrated Pascal; and is 300 miles S of Paris. Lon. 3 10 E, lat. 45 47 N.

Clermont, a town in Columbia county, New York, on the E side of Hudson river, and 15 miles S of the city of Hudson. The township has 1150 inhabitants. The post office is 361 miles from Washington.

Clery, a village in France, nine miles S W of Orleans, once famous for the pilgrimages to our lady of Clery. Here was the tomb of that monster Lewis XI. who appeared, in white marble, as the saint and the patriot king.

Clerke's Island, lies in the North Pacific Ocean, between the coast of Kamtschatka and that of North America. It was discovered by Captain Cook in 1778, and was so named in honour of captain Clerke, his second in command. A landing could not be effected. At a distance it appeared to be of a considerable extent, and to have several hills connected with the low grounds, in such a manner as to make it look like a group of islands. Near its E extremity is a little island remarkable for having three elevated rocks upon it. It is quite uninhabited. Lon. 169 30 W, lat. 63 15 N.

Cleves, a dutchy of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, divided into two parts by the Rhine. It is a fine country, delightfully variegated with hills, woods, fields, towns and villages; and is subject to the king of Prussia.

Cleves, a city of Westphalia, capital of the dutchy of Cleves. It is seated on the eastern side of three hills, about a mile W of the Rhine; with which it communicates by means of a canal, which is large enough for great barges. It has a castle built by Julius Cæsar. Several of the streets from their elevated situation, extend their views many leagues deep into the country, on the opposite shore. It has been often taken and retaken; the last time by the French in 1794. It is 15 miles S E of Nimègue. Lon. 5 50 E, lat. 51 45 N.

Cleybrook, Great and Little, two villages in Leicestershire, on the N W side of Lutterworth. They are supposed to have been a part of Cleycester, situated one mile to the W, which was a flourishing city of the Romans, and where shire, extending from its upper end to the Irish Sea, above 20 miles; its breadth varying from three to eight, according to the approach or recess of the high mountains inclosing it, through which, in different parts, are gaps formed by nature for entrances.

 This delightful spot is in a high state of cultivation, even far up the ascent of the hills. A river of the same name, which rises in the middle of the county, runs along this vale and having entered Flintshire, falls into the Irish Sea.

Clyde, a river in Scotland, which arising in Annandale, falls into the sea over against the isle of Bute. Next to the Tay it is the largest river in Scotland; and is navigable for small craft up to Glasgow. The canal, which joins the Forth, falls into it a little below that city. Near Lanerk, this river runs, for several miles, between high rocks covered with wood; and in its course exhibits many astonishing cataracts. At Stonebyres, it is confined within a very narrow bed, and makes one entire shoot, falling about 60 feet over a perpendicular rock; the water then pouring over another precipice, is dashed into a deep chasm beneath. The horrid and incessant din with which this is accompanied, un-nerves and overcomes the heart. At Corralin, the falls are seen to most advantage from a solitary and ruined tower in a garden, placed in a lofty situation. The cataract which is precipitated at least 100 feet between two vast rugged precipices, is full in view, seen over the top of trees and bushes, precipitating itself for an amazing way, from rock to rock, with short interruptions, forming a rude slope of various foam. The sides are bounded by vast rocks, clothed on their tops with trees: on the summit and very verge of one is a ruined tower, and in front a wood overtopped by a verdant hill. A path conducts the traveller to the beginning of the fall, into which projects a high rock in floods insulated by the water; and from the top is a tremendous view of the furious stream.
 In floods, the rock and tower have been observed to shake in such a manner as to spill water in a glass standing on a table in the castle.

Clydesdale, a wild district in the S part of Lanerkshire. Amid the mountains here, particles of gold have sometimes been washed down by the rains and streams of water; but this tract is chiefly remarkable for producing metals of inferior worth. The veins of lead lie mostly N and E, and their thickness, which seldom exceeds 40 feet, varies greatly in different parts.

 The scanty pasture here feeds some sheep and cattle.

Coast Castle, Cape, the principal settlement of the English on the coast of Guinea, with a strong citadel. It is 30 miles E by N of St. George del Mina.
 Lon. 0 0 lat. 5 6 N.

Coblentz, an ancient city of Germany, in the electorate of Treves. It is the residence of the elector, who has lately built a new palace here; the old one being on the opposite side of the Rhine, in the vale of Elrenbreitstein.
 Over the Rhine is a bridge of twelve arches, built for the convenience of the inhabitants of Coblentz and the adjacent places. The castle appears to be almost inaccessible to an enemy, and entirely commands the city of Coblentz. It was taken by the French in 1794. It is seated at the confluence of the Rhine and Moselle, 50 miles N E of Treves. Lon. 7 32 E, lat. 50 24 N.

Coburg, a town of Germany in the circle of Franconia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a college, a fort, and a castle. This town, and its principality, belongs to the house of Saxony. It is seated on the Itch, 20 miles N of Bamberg. Lon. 11 13 E,
 lat. 50 22 N.

Coca, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, near which is a strong castle for state prisoners. It is seated among mountains, at the confluence of the Morvedro and Elezena, 25 miles N N E of Segovia. Lon. 3 34 W, lat. 41 17
 N.

Cochieim, a town in the electorate of Treves, formerly imperial. It was forced to surrender to the French in 1794, and is seated on the Moselle, 25 miles S W of Coblentz. Lon. 7 2 E,
 lat. 50 12 N.

Cochin, a seaport on the coast of Malabar, in Travancore. It is a Dutch settlement, and was captured by the British fleet in 1795. It is 120 miles S by E of Calicut. Lon. 73 30 E, lat.
 10 0 N.

Cochin China, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the E by the Eastern Ocean, on the N by Tonquin, on the W by Cambodia, and on the S by Ciampa. It abounds in gold, raw silk, and drugs. It is annually overflowed and consequently fruitful in rice. They have likewise sugar-canes; but no grapes, and therefore they drink a liquor brewed from rice. The religion of the inhabitants is much the same as that of China. Their cities and towns have gates at the end of each street, which are shut every night; and if any fire break out in a ward, all the inhabitants are destroyed, except the women and children.

Cocker, a river which rises in the S of Cumberland, and flowing through the lakes of Buttermere, Cromack-water, and Lowes-water, joins the Derwent, below Cocker-mouth.

Cockermouth, a populous borough in Cumberland, with a market on Monday. It lies between the Derwent and Cocker, over which latter are two stone bridges; and between two hills, on one of which stands a handsome church; and on the other a stately castle. It has a manufacture of shal-loons, worsted stockings and hats. The number of inhabitants are between 3 and 4000. It has a square building, and is strengthened with several square towers; on each side of the inner gate are two dungeons capable of holding 50 persons in either; they are vaulted at the top, and have only a small opening in order to lower thro' it the unhappy prisoner into this dire prison. It sends two members to parliament, and is 27 miles S W of Carlisle, and 290 N N W of London. Lon. 3 25 W, lat. 54 43 N.

Cocconato, a town of Piedmont, remarkable for being the birthplace of Columbus. It is 20 miles E of Turin. Lon. 8 9 E, lat. 45 5 N.

Cod, Cape, on the S side of Boston Bay, in the state of Massachusetts, in North America. Lon. 70 18 W, lat. 42 0 N.

Codogno, a town of Italy in the dutchy of Milan. It was taken by the French in May 1796. It is seated near the confluence of the Adda and Po, 33 miles E of Pavia. Lon. 10 49 E, lat. 45 6 N.

United Provinces in Overysse, seated in a morass, 30 miles S of Groningen. Lon. 6 44 E, lat. 52 44 N.

Cognac, a town of France, now in the department of Charente, lately in the province of Angoumois, with a castle, where Francis I. was born. It is remarkable for excellent brandy, and is seated on the Charente, 17 miles W of Angouleme. Lon. 0 10 W, lat. 45 44 N.

Cogni, an ancient town of Turkey in Asia, in Caramania, in a country abounding in corn, fruits, pulse, and cattle. Here are sheep, whose tails weigh 30 pounds. It is 270 miles S E of Constantinople. Lon. 35 56 E, lat. 37 56 N.

Cohasset, a seaport town, in Norfolk county, Massachusetts, about 25 miles N E of Boston. It has a post-office, and 849 inhabitants.

Cohgeshal, a town in Essex, with a market on Saturday, and a manufacture of bays. It is seated on the river Blackwater, 43 miles E N E of London. Lon. 0 47 E, lat. 51 52 N.

Coimbatore, a province and town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, in the kingdom of Mysore. It was taken by general Meadows in 1790, but retaken by Tippoo Sultan in 1791, and confirmed to him by the peace of 1792. Since the defeat and death of Tippoo, it belongs to the E India Company. It is 100 miles S by E of Seringapatam. Lon. 77 10 E, lat. 10 5 N.

Coimbra, a town of Portugal, capital of Beira, with a bishop's see, and an university. The cathedral and the fountains are magnificent. It stands on a mountain, by the side of the river Mondego, 100 miles N E of Lisbon, in a very pleasant country, abounding in vineyards, olive trees, and fruits. Lon. 8 17 W, lat. 40 12 N.

Coin, a town of Switzerland, capital of the country of the Grisons, with a bishop's see, whose prelate has the right of coining money. It is situated at the foot of the Alps, in a rich plain, and is surrounded by ancient brick walls, with square and round towers, in the style of fortification prior to the invention of gunpowder. The streets are narrow and dirty; and the inhabitants are computed at 3000. It was formerly divided into two parts, the least of which was of the Roman Catholic religion, and the greatest of the Protestant. But since it has been ta-which is navigable within a mile of the town, at a place called the Hythe, where the custom-house is situate.

The town was surrounded by a wall, which had six gates and three posterns; but these are now demolished.
There is a large manufacture of bays; and the town is famous for oysters and eringo roots. It is governed by a mayor; and to the E are the ruins of an old castle, in which is one of the town prisons. It is 22 miles E N E of Chelmsford and 51 of London. Lon.

Cologne, an electorate of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, bounded on the N by the dutchy of Cleves and Guelderland, on the E by the dutchy of Berg, on the S by the archbishopric of Treves, and on the W by the dutchy of Juliers. The elector is archchancellor of the empire for Italy, and has a right to consecrate the emperor for Italy, with that of Mentz. It is one of the most fertile countries in the empire, abounding with all the necessaries of life.

Cologne, an ancient city of Germany, capital of the electorate of Cologne, with a bishop's see, and a famous university, seated on the river Rhine. The city is fortified with strong walls, flanked with 83 large towers, and surrounded with three large ditches; but these fortifications, being executed after the ancient manner, could make but a poor defence at present. It lies in the shape of a half-moon, and is said to have 20 gates, 19 parishes, 37 monasteries, and about 10 collegiates, and 19 parochial churches, with about 50 chapels, all of which are candidates for the attention of the devout and curious by their fine paintings. The streets in general are badly paved, the windows of the houses composed of small bits of round glass, and the inhabitants are but few for so large a place. It is a free imperial city, and tho' the elector has a palace here, he has not the liberty of staying in it for many days together; nor is he admitted to come at all with a numerous attendance. The inhabitants are generally Roman Catholics, but there are some Protestants, who are obliged to perform divine service at Mulheim, three miles from the city. In the cathedral are the golden chamber or treasury, the riches of which are immense; and the chapel of the three Magi, in which they pretend to show the bodies of the three Magi, called the Three Kings. Cologne was once one of the Hanse Towns, celebrated for its commerce, which is now dwindled to the manufacture of a few ribands, stockings, lace, and some tobacco. To persecution it owes this decay; to the expulsion of the Jews in 1485, and of the Protestants in 1618. Two thirds of this city have since fallen into ruins, and streets and squares are converted into kitchen-gardens and vineyards. Cologne was taken by the French in 1794. It is seated on the Compostella, a celebrated town of Spain, capital of Galicia, with an archbishop's see, and a university. The public squares, and the churches, particularly the metropolitan church, are magnificent: and it has a great number of monasteries for both sexes, and contains about 2000 houses. It is pretened that the body of St. James was buried here, which draws a great number of pilgrims: they walk in procession to the church, and visit his wooden image, which stands on the great altar, and is illuminated by many wax-candles. They kiss it three times with a very respectful devotion, and then put their hats on its head. In the church there are 30 silver lamps, always lighted, and six chandeliers of silver, five feet high. The poor pilgrims are received into an hospital, built for that purpose, which stands near the church, and round it are galleries of free-stone, supported by large pillars. The archbishop is one of the richest prelates in Spain, having 70,000 crowns a year. From this town the military order of St. Jago, or St. James, had its origin. Condore, the capital of a number of islands, in the Indian Ocean. It produces mangoes, which grow on trees, as large as apple-trees; the fruit is of the size of a small peach, and when ripe has a pleasant smell and taste. The inhabitants are small in stature, well-shaped, and of a dark olive complexion; their faces are long, with black straight hair, small black eyes, high noses, thin lips, white teeth, and little mouths. They are very poor, and their chief employment is getting tar out of the trees. They are very free of their women, for when ships arrive there they will bring them on board, and offer them to the sailors. They have a little idol temple, built of wood, and thatched like their houses, which are very mean. The English East India Company had a settlement here in 1701; but the factors falling out with the natives, most of them were murdered, and the rest driven thence in 1705. It has a manufacture of leather gloves; and a more considerable one in silk, there being a large silk mill, which employs 700 hands. It is seated on the river Dane, seven miles S of Macclesfield, and 164 NW of London. Lon. 2 10 W, lat. 53 8 N.

Congo, a country of Africa, between the equinoctial line and 18 degrees of S lat. containing the kingdoms of Loango, Congo, Angola, and Benguela. It was discovered by the Portuguese in 1481, and is bounded on the N by Benin, by the inland part of Africa on the E, by Matamon on the S, and by the Atlantic Ocean on the W. It is sometimes called Lower Guinea; and the Portuguese have a great many settlements on the coast, as well as in the inland country. They have many desert places within land; but near the coast the soil is more fertile; and there are fruits of many kinds, besides palm-trees, from which they get wine and oil. In the lowlands the grass grows so high, rank and thick, that it becomes one of the most dangerous receptacles for wild beasts, serpents, and venomous insects: on this account travellers are in continual danger of being stung to death. The only method of guarding against all these evils effectually, is by setting fire to the grass in hot weather, but even this cannot be done without danger: as those animals being roused out of their lurking places, will fly furiously at those who happen to be in their way. Lions, leopards, tigers, wolves, and other beasts of prey abound here, and do much damage. Here are also a vast variety of monkeys of all shapes. The Zebra, well known for its extreme beauty and swiftness, is also met with in this country. The inhabitants are skilful in weaving cotton cloth; and the trade in slaves, ivory, cassia, and tamarinds; the greatest part of them go almost naked; worshipping the sun, moon, and stars, besides animals of different kinds; but the Portuguese have made many converts. Congo properly so called, is only 150 miles broad along the coast, but is 372 inland. From March to September is called the winter season, when it rains almost every day; and the summer is from October to March, when the weather is very hot. The river Zaïre is full of crocodiles and river-horses. The principal town is St. Salvador.

Coni, a town of Piedmont, capital of a territory of that name, with a citadel. It surrendered to the French in April 1796. It is seated at the confluence of the Gresse and Sture, 35 miles S of Turin. Lon. 7 45 E, lat. 44 30 N.

Connaught, a province of Ireland, 130 miles long, and 84 broad, bounded on the E by Leinster and Munster, on the S by the latter province, on the W and N by the Atlantic, and on the N W by Ulster. It has several convenient bays and creeks, and is fertile in many places, but the inhabitants being lazy, is the least cultivated of any of the four provinces. It contains one archbishopric, five bishoprics, six counties, seven market towns, 10 boroughs, and 330 parishes. It has no rivers of any great note except the Shannon.

Connecticut, one of the United States, in New England, 82 miles long and 57 broad; bounded on the N by Massachusetts, on the E by Rhode Island, on the W by New York, and on the S by the Sound, which divides it from Long Island. In the maritime towns, the weather is variable, according as the wind blows from the sea or land. As you advance into the country, the sea breezes have less effect upon the air, and consequently the weather is less variable. The N W winds, in the winter season, are often extremely severe. The clear and serene temperature of the sky, however, makes amends for the severity of the weather, and is favourable to health and longevity. The country is generally broken land, made up of mountains, hills, and valleys; and it is exceedingly well watered. It is the most populous in proportion to its extent, of any of the United States, and produces the necessaries of life in abundance. Its principal rivers are the Connecticut, Housatonic, and Thames. It contains the counties of Hartford, Newhaven, New London, Fairfield Windham; Litchfield, Middlesex, and Tolland. In 1782, the number of inhabitants was 276,395. Hartford and Newhaven are the capitals; the general assembly being annually holden at the former in May, and at the latter in October.

Connecticut, a large river of New England which gives name to one of the five colonies of that province. It rises in a swamp in lat. 45 10, lon. 4 E. After a sleepy course of eight or ten miles, it tumbles over four separate falls, and turning W, keeps close under the hills which form the N boundary of the vale, thro' which it runs. Between the towns of Walpole on the E, and Westminster on the W side of the river, are the great falls. The whole river, compressed between two rocks scarcely 30 feet asunder, shoots with amazing rapidity into a broad basin below. Over these falls, a bridge, 160 feet in length was built in 1784, under which the highest floods may pass without detriment. This is the first bridge erected over this noble river. The length of this beautiful river, in a straight line, is nearly 300 miles. On its banks, which are settled almost to its source, are many pleasant, neat, and well built towns.

Conneville, a post town in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, standing in the N E side of Yoghigany river, 12 miles N E of Union, 31 W of Somerset, and about 45 S E of Pittsburg.

Connor, a town of Ireland, in the county of Antrim, with a bishop's see, six miles N of Antrim. Lon. 6 6 E, lat. 54 59 N.

Conquet, a town of France, in the department of Finisterre and late province of Bretagne, with a good harbour and road. It is 12 miles W of Brest. Lon. 4 41 W, lat. 48 23 N.

Constance, a city of Suabia, with a bishops's see; seated on the Rhine, between the upper and lower lakes of Constance. The commerce of this once flourishing town has gone greatly to decay, and grass now grows in the principal streets. By the assistance of Zurich and Basil, with whom it was in alliance, it expelled the bishop, and embraced the reformation. But the Protestant cantons being worsted in 1531, Constance was obliged to submit to the emperor Charles V. and to readmit the catholic religion. It thus lost its independence, and being neglected by the house of Austria, fell by degrees into its present state. Constance is famous for a council, in 1514, which caused John Huss and Jerome of Prague to be burnt; and likewise condemned the doctrine of Wickliffe, and ordered his bones to be burned 40 years after he was dead. The French took possession of this city in July 1796. It is 35 miles N E of Zurich. The inhabitants scarcely amount to 3000. Lon. 9 10 E, lat. 47 38 N.

Constance, Lake of, one of the most considerable lakes of Swisserland, which it separates from Suabia, that part excepted, where the city of Constance is seated on its S side. Like all the lakes in Swisserland, this is deeper in summer than in winter; which is owing to the first melting of the snow from the adjacent mountains.

Constantia, a district at the Cape of Good Hope, consisting of two farms, which produce the well known wine so much prized in Europe, and known by the name of Cape or Constantia wine.

Constantina, a strong and considerable town of Africa, in the kingdom of Algiers, and capital of a territory of the same name. It is the largest and strongest in all the eastern parts, and seated at the top of a great rock. There is no way to it but by steps cut out of the rock; and the usual way of punishing criminals here is to throw them down the cliff. Here are many Roman antiquities, particularly a triumphal arch. It is 75 miles from the sea, and 210 E by S of Algiers. Lon. 7 0 E, lat. 36 4 N.

Constantina, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a castle seated on a mountain, 40 miles N E of Seville. Lon. 5 35 W, lat. 37 40 N.

Constantinople, the ancient Byzantium, one of the most celebrated cities in Europe, in Romania, and capital of the Ottoman empire. Constantine the Great chose this place for his abode, and rebuilt it after the model of Rome. It was taken, in 1453, by the Turks, who have kept possession of it ever since. It is seated at the eastern extremity of Romania, on a small neck of land which advances towards Natolia, from which it is separated by a channel of a mile in breadth. The sea of Marmora washes its walls on the S, and a gulf of the channel of Constantinople does the same on the N. It is delightfully situated between the Black Sea and the Archipelago, from whence it is supplied with all necessaries. The grand seignior's palace, called the Seraglio, is seated on the sea side, and is surrounded with walls flanked with towers, and separated from the city by canals. It is said the harbour will easily hold 12000 ships. The number of houses must needs be prodigious, since one fire has burnt down 30,000 in one day without greatly changing the aspect of the city. However, in general, they are but mean, especially on the outside, where there are few or no windows; and the streets being narrow, gives them a melancholy look. They reckon that there are 3770 streets, small and great: but they are seldom or never clean; and the people are infested with the plague almost every year. The inhabitants are half Turks, two-thirds of the other half Christians, and the rest Jews. Here are a great number of ancient monuments still remaining, and particularly the superb temple of Sophia, which is turned into a mosque, and far surpasses all the rest. The street called Adrianople is the longest and broadest in the city; and the bazars or bezesteins, are the markets for selling all sorts of merchandise. The old and the new are pretty near each other; and are large square buildings covered with domes, and supported by arches and pilasters. The new is the best and contains all sorts of goods which are there exposed to sale. The market for slaves of both sexes, is not far off; and the Jews are the principal merchants who bring them here to be sold. There are a great number of young girls brought from Hungary, Greece, Candia, Russia, Mingrelia, and Georgia, for the service of the Turks, who generally buy them for their seraglios. The great square, near the mosque of sultan Bajazet, is the place for public diversions, where the jugglers and mountebanks play a great variety of tricks. The circumference of this city is by some said to be 15 miles, and by Mr. Tournefort 23 miles: to which if we add the suburbs, it may be 34 miles in compass. The suburb called Pera is charmingly situated; and is the place where the ambassadors of England, France, Venice and Holland, reside. This city is built in the form of a triangle; and as the ground rises gradually, there is a view of the whole town from the sea. The public buildings, such as the palaces, the mosques, bagnios, and caravansaries for the entertainment of strangers, are many of them very magnificent. Lon. 29 20 E, lat. 41 4 N.

Constantinople, Strait of, anciently the Thracian Bosphorus, and forming the communication between the Euxine or Black Sea, and the Propontis, or sea of Marmora. It is 20 miles long, and a mile and a quarter broad, where narrowest. The Turks have built two castles opposite to each other, to defend the passage. It forms the separation here between Europe and Asia. On one side of it is situate Constantinople, and on the other, Scutari, where the grand signior has his seraglio.

Constantinow, a town of Poland, in Vollandia, on the river Selucza, 62 miles N E of Kamienieck. Lon. 27 20 E, lat. 49 58 N.

Contessa, a seaport of Turkey in Europe, on a gulf of the same name in the Archipelago, 200 miles W of Constantinople. Lon. 23 58 E, lat. 41 8 N.

Conti, a town of France, in the department of Somme and late province of Picardy. It formerly gave the title of prince to a branch of the late royal family of France. It is seated on the Seille, 14 miles S W of Amiens, and 62 N of Paris. Lon. 2 13 E, lat. 49 42 N.

Conversano, a town of Naples, in Terradi Bari, with a bishop's see, 12 miles S E of Bari. Lon. 17 6 E, lat. 41 20 N.

Conway, a town in Carnarvonshire, with a market on Friday; seated at the mouth of the Conway, and distinguished by the massy remains of its castle, formerly one of the most magnificent structures of the kind in the kingdom. It is 18 miles E N E of Carnarvon, and 235 W N W of London. Lon. 4 1 W, lat. 53 20 N.

Conway, a river of N Wales, which flowing through a fertile vale of the same name, along the whole eastern border of Carnarvonshire, falls into the Irish Sea, at the town of Conway.

Conza, an ancient town of Naples, in Principato Ulteriore, with an archbishop's see. It was so greatly ruined by an earthquake in 1694, that the place where the cathedral stood is hardly known. It is 52 miles E of Naples. Lon. 15 35 E, lat. 40 50 N.

Cook's River, a large river of N America, which flows into the N Pacific Ocean. It was discovered, in 1778, by Captain Cook, who left a blank for its name which was filled up by the earl of Sandwich. This river was traced as high as lat. 61 30 N, which is above 70 leagues from its mouth, in lon. 152 0 W.

Cook's Strait, a strait dividing the two islands of which New Zealand is composed: it is about four or five leagues broad.

Cooper's Town, a new and thriving town in Otsego county, New York. It has a post office, and is the principal seat of justice in Otsego county, being 77 miles W of Albany.

Coos, an island in the Archipelago, 56 miles N W of Rhodes, subject to the Turks. Lon. 27 44 E, lat. 37 1 N.

Coosawatchy, a post town in Beaufort county, South Carolina; lying on the river Coosa, about 75 miles westward from Charleston.

Cootestown, a village with a post office, in Berks county, Pennsylvania, situated on Maiden creek, a branch of the river Schuylkill, and about 17 miles N E of Reading.

Copenhagen, the capital of the king-

Copplestone, a town in Carnarvonshire, seated on the banks of the Conway; seated at the mouth of the river, and distinguished by the massive remains of its castle, one of the most magnificent of the kind in the kingdom. Lon. 5 E N E of Carnarvon, and 12 W of London. Lon. 4 1 W, lat. 52 30 N.

Copplestone, a river of N Wales, which flows through a fertile vale of the same name, along the whole eastern coast of Carnarvonshire, falls into the sea at the town of Conway.

Copertino, an ancient town of Naples, in the province of Ultraiore, with an archbishop's see. It was so greatly ruined by an earthquake in 1694, that the place where the cathedral stood is hardly to be seen. It is 52 miles E of Naples. Lon. 15 E, lat. 40 50 N.

Copplestone, a post town in Beaufort county, South Carolina; lying on the banks of the river, about 75 miles westward from Charleston.

Copplestone, a village with a post office, in Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, situated on the banks of the Maiden creek, a branch of the Susquehanna, about 17 miles N E of Harrisburg.

Copplestone, the capital of the kingdom of Denmark, situated on the eastern shore of the island of Zealand, upon a fine bay of the Baltic sea, not far from the strait called the Sound. Lon. 13 0 E, lat. 55 30 N. Copenhagen is the best built city of the north; for although Petersburg excels it in superb edifices, yet as it contains no wooden houses, it does not display that striking contrast of meanness and magnificence, but in general exhibits a more equable and uniform appearance. The town is surrounded towards the land with regular ramparts and bastions, a broad ditch full of water, and a few outworks; its circumference measures between four and five miles. The streets are well paved, with a foot-way on each side, but too narrow and inconvenient for general use. The greatest part of the buildings are of brick; and a few are of free-stone brought from Germany. The houses of the nobility are in general splendid, and constructed in the Italian style of architecture. The busy spirit of commerce is visible in this city, which contains about 80,000 inhabitants. The haven is always crowded with merchant ships; and the streets are intersected by broad canals, which bring the merchandise close to the warehouses that line the quays. This city owes its principal beauty to a dreadful fire in 1728 that destroyed five churches and 67 streets, which have been since rebuilt in the modern style. The new part of the town raised by the late King Frederic V. is extremely beautiful, scarcely inferior to Bath. It consists of an octagon, containing four uniform and elegant buildings of hewn stone, and of four broad streets leading to it in opposite directions. In the middle of the area stands an equestrian statue of Frederic V. in bronze, as big as life, which cost 80,000*l*. The Royal Museum, or Cabinet of Rarities, merits the attention of travellers. This collection, which was begun by Frederic III. is deposited in eight apartments, and ranged in the following order: animals, shells, minerals, paintings, antiquities, medals, dresses, arms and implements of the Laplanders. The royal palace, called Christianburg, built by Christian VI. one of the most commodious and sumptuously furnished in Europe, was destroyed by fire, Feb. 26, 1794: and on June 6, 1795, a fire broke out in the dock-yard, which soon communicated across the canal to the houses, and con-

of Arabian gallantry and magnificence, which rendered the Moors of Spain superior to all their contemporaries in arts and arms, and made Cordova one of the most splendid cities of the world. When Europe was buried in ignorance and debased by brutality of manners, it became the centre of politeness, industry and genius. Great and expensive monuments of architecture were undertaken and completed by many of these Spanish monarchs; whose remains nobody can behold without being strongly impressed with a high idea of the genius of the artists, as well as the grandeur of the prince who carried them into execution. It is seated on the Guadalquivir, over which is a magnificent stone bridge. The circumference is large, but it is not peopled in proportion to its extent, for there are many orchards and gardens within the walls. The palaces, churches, and religious houses are superb, particularly the cathedral, which is very magnificent. It was a mosque when the Moors possessed the town; for which reason it still retains the name of Mezquita. The square, called the Plaza Major, is surrounded by fine houses under which are piazzas. The trade consists in wine, silk and Cordovan leather; and in the neighbourhood are a vast number of orange and lemon trees. The best horses in Spain come hence. Corea, a peninsula of Asia, extending between China and Japan. It is bounded on the N by Chinese Tartary, on the E by the sea and isles of Japan, on the S by the ocean, and on the W by the gulf and province of Leao-tong. This Kingdom is commonly reckoned 200 leagues from N to S, and 100 from E to W. The king has absolute authority over his subjects, but is himself tributary to China. It is divided into eight provinces, which contain 33 cities of the first rank, 58 of the second, and 70 of the third. Kingkiao is the capital. Corea chiefly produces wheat, rice, and ginseng, with a kind of palm-tree which yields a gum capable of producing a yellow varnish little inferior to gilding. Hence also are exported castor and sable skins; also gold, silver, iron, and fossil salt; a kind of small brushes for painting, made of the hair of a wolf's tail, are likewise manufactured here, which are exported to China and highly esteemed there. The sea-coasts abound in fish, and great numbers of whales are found there every year towards the N E. The Coreans are well made, ingenious, brave and tractable; are fond of dancing, and show great docility in acquiring the sciences, to which they apply with great ardour, and honour in a particular manner. The northern Coreans are larger sized and more robust than those of the south; have a taste for arms, and become excellent soldiers. Their arms are cross-bows and long sabres. Men of learning are distinguished from other classes of people by two plumes of feathers in their caps; and when merchants present the Coreans with any books for sale, they dress themselves in their richest attire, and burn perfumes before they treat concerning the price. The Coreans mourn three years, as in China, for a father or mother; but the time of mourning for a brother is confined to three months. Their dead are not interred until three years after their decease; and when the ceremony of interment is performed, they place around the tomb the clothes, chariot, and horses, of the deceased, with whatever else he showed the greatest fondness for while alive; all which they leave to be carried off by the assistants. Their houses, as in China, consist only of one story, and are very ill built. Their writing, dress, religious ceremonies, and creed, as well as the greater part of their customs, are borrowed from the Chinese. Their women, however, are less confined, and have the liberty of appearing in public with the other sex, for which they are often ridiculed by their neighbours. They differ from the Chinese also in their ceremonies of marriage, and in the manner of contracting it; the parties in this country taking the liberty to choose for themselves, without consulting the inclinations of their parents, or suffering them to throw any obstacles in their way.

Corinth, now called Coranthe, or Go-rame, a celebrated city, in the Morea, with a Greek archbishop's see. It was one of the most important places in Greece, on account of its situation on the isthmus into the Morea; its castle on the top of an almost inaccessible rock; its harbours on the gulfs of Le-panto and Engia; its riches, and its architects, sculptors and painters, who were the most skilful in Greece. It once belonged to the Venetians, but the Turks became masters of it in 1715, and have kept it ever since. It is now greatly decayed; for the houses are not contiguous, but intermixed with fields and gardens, which make it look like a village. The country about it abounds with corn, wine, and oil, and from the castle is a fine prospect over

Corinth, Isthmus of, in the Morea, a neck of land which joins the Morea to Livadia, and reaches from the gulf of Lepanto to that of Engia. There are still the ruins of a town upon it, and of the temples dedicated to the Sun, Pluto, Diana, Neptune, Ceres, and Bacchus. The narrowest part of it is six miles over; and on a mount there, called Oneius, were formerly celebrated the Isthmian games. Julius Cesar, Caligula, and Nero, in vain attempted to cut a channel through the isthmus; they therefore built a wall across it, called Hexamilium, because it was six miles in length. This was demolished by Amurath II. rebuilt by the Venetians, and levelled a second time by Mahomet II.

the English Channel, and on the N W by St. George's Channel. This county is 80 miles long, 40 broad, and 250 in circumference, containing 960,000 acres, and 126,000 inhabitants. Its chief rivers are the Tamar, Tale, Cober, Loo, Camel, Fowe, Haile, Lemara, Kense and Aire. Its principal capes or head lands are the Land's End, the Lizard, Cape Cornwall, Deadman's Head, Rame Head, &c. and a cluster of islands, 145 in number called the Scilly isles, supposed formerly to have belonged to the mainland, though now 30 miles distant; abounding with antiquities particularly druidical. It lies in the diocese of Exeter; contains nine hundreds, 27 market-towns, and 161 parishes; and sends 44 members to parliament. As Cornwall is surrounded by the sea on all sides except the E, the summers are less hot, and the winters less cold, than in other parts of England, and the spring and harvest are observed to be more backward. High and sudden winds are also more common in this than in other counties of England. The soil, as it is shallow, is not very fruitful, especially in the centre or the hilly parts; the valleys are very pleasant and fertile, yielding great plenty both of corn and pasture. The lands near the sea-coast are manured and fertilized with sea-weed, and a kind of sand formed by the particles of broken shells as they are dashed against each other by the sea. It has plenty of sea-herbs, and some other plants peculiar to its insular situation. The Phenicians early visited these coasts, some think, 400 or 450 years before Christ. It derives its chief importance from its minerals. The mines of tin are numerous, and are, in general, very rich in ore; these have rendered this county famous in all ages. There has been sometimes found a small quantity of gold and silver, but not worthy of notice. With the metalline ore are intermixed large quantities of mundic and arsenic. Many sorts of stones are also found here, particularly moorstone which is used both in buildings and for millstones; when polished, it appears more beautiful than any of the marble kind, and makes the richest furniture, as tables, chimney-pieces, &c. but being exceedingly hard, the polishing is expensive. The copper mines are also numerous, and rich in ore. In many cavernous parts of the rocks are found transparent crystals, called Cornish diamonds, they being very brilliant when well polished. This county was one of the places to which the ancient Britons retreated, whose language was retained even to this century, but it is now quite extinct. The king's eldest son is born duke of Cornwall, and derives a revenue, not only from lands appertaining to the dutchy, but from the mines of tin and copper; he has under him an officer, called lord warden of the Stannary Courts, whose jurisdiction extends over the mines and miners of Cornwall and Devonshire; and he appoints in his privy council, the sheriff of the former county. Launceston is the capital.

Corsica, an island in the Mediterranean, between 8 and 10° E lon. and 41 and 43° N lat. On the S it is separated from Sardinia, by the strait of Bonifacio; to the E it has the Tuscan Sea; to the N the gulf of Genoa; and to the W it is opposite the coasts of France and Spain. It is 150 miles from N to S, and from 40 to 50 in breadth. It was known to the ancient Greeks by the names of Calista and Cyraus, and to the Romans by its present appellation. On the coast are many excellent harbours. The air is very unwholesome, and the land hilly, full of stones, and cultivated very poorly; however the vallies produce wheat, and the hills fruits, viz. olives, figs, grapes, almonds, and chesnuts. They have horses also of a very fiery nature. Besides, there are mines of iron, and a great deal of fish and coral on the coast. In the middle there is the mountain Gradaccio, where there are two lakes, near each other, from whence proceed the two principal rivers. There is a ridge of mountains, which divide the island into two parts, the N and S. The capital is Bastia. It belonged to the Genoese, but the natives having for many years taken up arms against them, that state surrendered its right to the king of France. After the French revolution in 1789, Corsica was admitted as an eighty-third department of France, at the particular request of a deputation, of which Paoli was at the head. In consequence, however, of some events which followed the revolution of 1792, Paoli revolted; the French, by the assistance of the English, were expelled from the island; and Corsica, on the 19th of June 1794, was declared annexed to the crown of Great Britain, according to a new constitution, which had been previously formed. It has since revolted to France and the English viceroy has been recalled.

Coventry, a city in Warwickshire, which, with Lichfield, is a bishop's see. Its market is on Friday. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. It has three parish-churches, two free-schools, and several hospitals. The houses being mostly old, and built of wood and plaster, with stories projecting over each other, make a mean appearance. The walls were ordered to be demolished at the Restoration, and now nothing remains of them but the gates, which are very lofty. The town-house is much admired for its painted windows, representing several kings and others that have been benefactors to the city. At present its principal branch is that of silk ribands; some gauzes, camblets, and lastings are also made here. It has a communication with the Staffordshire Grand Trunk, by a canal to Fradley; and by another canal, which joins the Oxford canal at Braunston, it has a communication with the Thames. Coventry is 91 miles N W of London. Lon. 1 28 W, lat. 52 28 N.

Cracatoa, the southernmost of a cluster of islands in the entrance of the straits of Sunda. It consists of elevated land, gradually rising on all sides from the sea, and is covered with trees, except a few spots, which have been cleared by the natives for the purpose of forming rice fields. The population is considerable, and its coral reefs afford small turtles in abundance. Lon. 105 56 E, lat. 8 6 S.

Cracow, a city, formerly the capital of Poland, where the kings were elected and crowned. It was once almost the centre of the Polish dominions, but since the partition of Poland in 1774, it is become a frontier town. Cracow stands in an extensive plain, watered by the Vistula, which is broad but shallow: the city and its suburbs occupy a vast tract of ground, but are so badly peopled, that they scarcely contain 16,000 inhabitants. The great square in the middle of the town is very spacious, and has several well built houses, once richly furnished and well inhabited, but most of them now either untenanted or in a state of melancholy decay. Many of the streets are broad and handsome; but almost every building bears the most striking marks of ruined grandeur: The churches alone seem to have preserved their original splendour. The devastation of this unfortunate town was begun by the Swedes at the commencement of the present century, when it was besieged and taken by Charles XII. but the mischiefs it suffered from that ravager of the N were far less destructive than those it experienced during the late dreadful commotions, when it underwent repeated sieges, and was alternately in possession of the Russians and confederates. The effects of cannon, grape, and musket shot, are still discernible on the walls and houses. In a word, Cracow exhibits the remains of ancient magnificence, and looks like a great capital in ruins: from the number of fallen and falling houses one would imagine it had lately been sacked, and that the enemy had left it only yesterday. The town is surrounded with high walls of brick, strengthened by round and square towers, of whimsical shapes, in the ancient styles of fortification: The university of Cracow was formerly, and not unjustly, called the mother of Polish literature as it principally supplied the other seminaries with professors and men of learning; but its lustre has been greatly obscured by the removal of the royal residence to Warsaw, and still more by the late intestine convulsions. Towards the southern part of the town, near the Vistula, rises a small eminence or rock, upon the top of which is built the palace, surrounded with brick walls and old towers, which form a kind of citadel to the town. When the general insurrection broke out, in 1794, against the Prussian and Russian usurpers of the Polish territory, Kosciuszko, the chief of the patriotic insurgents, expelled the Russian garrison from this city, on the 24th of March 1794; but having marched, in the sequel, to the protection of Warsaw, Cracow surrendered to the Prussians, on the 15th of June. It is seated on the Vistula, 130 miles S S W of Warsaw, Lon. 19 50 E, lat. 50 10 N.

Crimea, or Crim Tartary, the ancient Taurica Chersonesus, a peninsula in Asia, bounded on the S and W by the Black Sea; on the N by the province of Catharinenslaf, with which it communicates by the isthmus of Perekop; and on the S by the sea of Asoph and the strait of Caffa. The mountainous parts were inhabited by the Tauri, probably a colony of Scythians; and its coasts on the W, the E, and the S, by Greeks. The Scythians were driven out by Mithridates; the Greeks by the Sarmatians; and these again by the Alani and Goths, a northern herd of Scythians. The Hungarians, the Cossacks, and Tartars succeeded in their turn;

while the Genoese in the 12th century, held a temporary and precarious possession of the seaports, which they were obliged to yield to the Turks in 1475. At the peace of 1774, the Tartars of the Crimea were declared independent.

The mountains are well covered with woods fit for the purpose of ship-building, and contain plenty of wild beasts.
The valleys consist of fine arable land; on the sides of the hills grow corn and vines in great abundance, and the earth is rich in mines. But these mountaineers are as careless and negligent as the inhabitants of the deserts: slighting all these advantages; and, like their brethren of the lowlands, are sufficiently happy if they are in possession of a fat sheep and as much bread as serves them to eat. In 1783, the Russians took possession of the country with an army; the following year, it was ceded to them by the Turks; and the peaceable possession of the whole was secured to them in 1791, by the cession of the fortress of Oczakow. The Crimea is divided into two parts, by mountains which run E and W. The N division is flat, poor, and fit for pasturage only.
In the S parts, the valleys are astonishingly productive, and the climate extremely mild, from the exclusion of those violent winds by which the N division is frequently incommoded. Besides the ports of Kerth and Jenikale, the read of Caffa, and the harbour of Baluclava, there is, near Sebastopol, one of the finest harbours in the world.

The Crimea now forms one of the two fish and wild fowl, which are plentiful in the adjacent pools and marshes. It is 11 miles N of Peterborough, and 93 N by W of London. Lon. 0 10 W, lat. 52 41 N.

Crown Point, formerly a strong fort of the British, at the entrance of Lake Champlain, now a post town of Essex county, New York, with about 950 inhabitants, and distant 502 miles from Washington.

Croydon, a town in Surrey, with a market on Saturday. It is seated near the source of the Wandle, surrounded in a manner with hills, and has an hospital and freeschool, founded by archbishop Whitgift. In the church are many fine monuments of the archbishops of Canterbury, who had here an ancient palace, which was alienated from the see, by an act of parliament, in 1780: the building, and adjoining premises, are now occupied by some manufactures. Croydon is nine miles S of London. Lon. 0 1 W, lat. 51 20 N.

Cruzhaven, a small maritime town of Germany, in the N part of the dutchy of Bremen, seated at the mouth of the Elbe, 70 miles N W of Hamburg.

Cuba, an island of the West Indies, at the entrance of the gulf of Mexico, 700 miles in length, and 87 in breadth. On the E side it begins at 20 20 N lat. touches the tropic of Cancer on the N, and extends from 74 to 85 15 W lon. It lies 60 miles to the W of Hispaniola, 25 leagues N of Jamaica, 100 miles to the E of Yucatan, and as many to the E of Cape Florida. It commands the entrance of the gulphs both of Mexico and Florida, as also the windward passages. It was discovered by Columbus, in 1492. The Spaniards are entirely masters of it, having extirpated the natives. The soil is not extremely fertile; but there are pastures sufficient to feed a great number of sheep and hogs, which were originally brought thither. There are several sorts of mines in the mountains, and forests full of game. The produce is sugar-canes, ginger, cassia, wild cinnamon, and very good tobacco, called by the Spaniards Cigarros. The hills run through the middle of the island from E to W, but near the coast the land is generally level; and many rivulets flow from the hills to the N and S. The hundredth part of this island is not yet cleared. The true plantations are all confined to the beautiful plains Cumberland, a county of England, bounded on the N by Scotland; on the E by Northumberland, Durham, and Westmoreland; on the S by Lancashire, and on the W by the Irish Sea and Solway Frith. The length from north to south may amount to 55 miles, but the breadth does not exceed 40. It is well watered with rivers, lakes, and fountains; but none of its streams are navigable. In some places there are very high mountains. The air is keen and piercing on these mountains towards the north; and the climate is moist, as in all hilly countries. The soil varies with the face of the country; being barren on the moors and mountains, but fertile in the valleys and level ground bordering on the sea. In general the eastern parts of the shire are barren and desolate; yet even the least fertile parts are rich in metals and minerals. The mountains of Copland abound with copper: veins of the same metal, with a mixture of gold and silver, were found in the reign of queen Elizabeth among the fens of Derwent; and royal mines were formerly wrought at Keswick. The county produces great quantities of coal, some lead, abundance of the mineral earth called black lead, several mines of lapis calaminaris; and an inconsiderable pearl-fishery on the coast near Ravenglass. The Skiddaw is the principal mountain; and the chief rivers are the Eden and Derwent. This county and the adjoining one of Westmoreland, are celebrated for their lakes, which have been repeatedly described by the pen and pencil. The lakes in Cumberland are the Derwent-water, Bassenthwaite-water, Buttermere-water, Cromack-water, Lowes-water, Uls-water, West-water, Ennerdale-water, Elder-water, Broad-water, &c. Carlisle is the capital.

Cumberland, the principal town of Alleghany county, Maryland; situated at the junction of Wills creek with the Potowmac river, 148 miles from Washington. Hither retreated the remains of Braddock's army, after their defeat near Fort Pitt in 1755.

Cumberland, a county of Pennsylvania, 37 miles long, and 28 broad. The inhabitants were reckoned in 1790, at 18,243. Carlisle is the capital.

Cumbray, Urat and Little, two islands in the frith of Clyde, to the E of the isle of Bute. The former is remarkable for its excellent freestone quarries, and the ruins of an ancient cathedral dedicated to St. Columba.

Cunningham, the most northerly division of Ayrshire. The N W angle of this district, though mountainous affords rich pasturage. Its chief town is Irvin.

Roanne. Lon. 4 5 E, lat. 46 17 N.

Custrin, the capital of the new marche of Brandenburg, with a castle, seated at the confluence of the Oder and Warta. In 1760, it was bombarded and reduced to ashes by the Russians. Custrin is 46 miles E by N of Berlin. Lon. 14 40 E, lat. 52 40 N.

Custais, a town of Turkey, the capital of Imeritia, and the residence of its sovereign. The remains of its cathedral seem to prove that it was once a considerable place, but it now scarcely deserves the name of a village. Lon.
43 0 E, lat. 43 35 N.

Cutch, a territory in Hindoostan Proper, governed by a rajah, and situate on the S E of Sindy: the E branch of the Indus separating the two countries.
It extends along the N coast of the gulf of Cutch, and is separated from Guzerat by the river Puddar. It abounds with hills, woods, and sandy wilds. Its capital is Boodge-boodge.

Cuzco, a town of Peru, formerly the residence of the Incas. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, and is built in a square form, in the middle of which is the best market in all America; four large streets terminate in the square, which are all as straight as a line, and regard the four quarters of the world.
It contains eight large parishes, and five religious houses, and the number of the inhabitants is about 50,000, of which three-fourths are the original Americans. Streams of water run through the town, which are a great convenience in so hot a country where it seldom rains. It is 320 miles S of Lima. Lon. 73 47 W, lat. 12 0 S.

Cyprus, an island in the Mediterranean, near the coast of Syria. It was taken by the Turks from the Venetians in 1570. The soil is an excellent fertile clay; and, if the natives were industrious, they might make it a paradise. There is one archbishop and three bishops. The priests are extremely ignorant, and they submit to the most servile employment to get money. The people are very lascivious, and agree perfectly with the character given them by antiquity. The exports of the island are silk, wool and wine.
Nicosia is the capital.

Cyr, St. a village of France, two miles from Versailles, celebrated for a nunnery, founded by Lewis XIV. under the patronage of madame de Mainten-Dacca, a city of Hindoostan Proper, on the E quarter of Bengal, beyond the principal stream of the Gangea, altho' a very capital branch runs near it. Few situations are better calculated for an inland emporium of trade as the Dacca river communicates with all the other inland navigations. It is the provincial capital of this quarter, and is the third city in Bengal in point of extent and population. Indeed, within the present century it has been the capital of all Bengal. It has a vast trade in muslins, and manufactures the most delicate ones among those which are most sought after in Europe; the cotton is produced within the province. Dacca is situated 100 miles above the mouth of the Ganges, and 180 by the road from Calcutta. The country round it lies low, and is always covered with verdure during the dry months. It is with a little sand on the surface. But there is not to be found a stone so large as an egg in the whole country, so far as it has been visited by the Europeans, so that a pair of stones, which they use for grinding corn, weighing together about 12 or 14 pounds, are sold for five shillings. The country abounds with buffaloes, deer, sheep, goats, hogs, poultry of various kinds, particularly Guinea hens, and Muscovy ducks; and the lakes are plentifully stored with fish. Their religion consists of a jumble of superstitious nonsense, of which it is impossible to convey any idea to the reader. Their government is the most perfect despotism that exists perhaps on the face of the earth. There is no intermediate degree of subordination between the king and the slave, at least in the royal presence, where the prime minister is obliged to prostrate himself with as much abject submission as the meanest subject. On his entrance into the palace, he crawls towards the apartment of audience, on his hands and knees, till he arrives in the royal presence, where he lays himself flat upon his belly, rubbing his head in the dust, and uttering the most humiliating expressions. White visitors are honoured with a glass of some cordial liquor, filled by the king's own hand; which, if refused, is apt to give offence. Favours of this kind are received with avidity by his own subjects, on account of the honour conferred upon them. The subject lies on his back while the king holds the bottle to his mouth. He must drink till the royal hand be withdrawn, which sometimes does not happen till the whole contents be emptied, especially when he has a mind to sport with the drinker. A considerable standing army is maintained, who must hold themselves in readiness to take the field at the command of the sovereign. Within the different palaces, likewise, are immured no less than 3000 women, of whom several hundreds are trained to the use of arms. These warriors are regularly exercised, and go through their evolutions with as much expertness as the male soldiers. The king's palace is surrounded with a clay wall of a quad-rangular form, and about 20 feet high.

In the middle of each side is a guard house, with two centinels at the gate, and a guard of armed women and eu-nuchs within. On the thatched roofs of these guard houses are ranged, on small wooden stakes, many human skulls. Such of the inner apartments as the Europeans have an opportunity of seeing, consist of large courts, communicating with each other, generally square or oblong, encompassed by clay walls. In each of them is a sort of piazza, or shed, formed of posts about seven feet, planted in the ground, at the distance of about 12 or 14 feet from the wall. The whole has somewhat the resemblance of an assemblage of farm yards, with long thatched barns, hovels for cattle and carts, and low mud walls to separate them from each other.

Damascus, now called Sham, an ancient city of Syria, the form of which is an exact square, each side being a mile and a half long. It had three walls, now almost entirely ruined; and of the several suburbs which it formerly had, there remains only one, which extends three miles in length. The extraordinary beauty of this place is owing to several streams which run across the fertile plain of Damascus, and water all the gardens, supply the public fountains, and run into every house. The most remarkable things are the caravansaries, which consist of long galleries, supported by marble pillars, and surrounding a large square court. The houses are built of wood, with their fronts backward, and within is a court: in the streets there is nothing to be seen but walls without windows, and yet the insides are richly adorned. The castle is like a little town having its own streets and houses, and the famous Damascus steel was kept here in a magazine. The mosques are the handsomest buildings, of which there are about 2000 the most stately of which was a Christian church. Here is a street which runs across the city and suburbs in a direct line, on each side of which are shops, where all sorts of rich merchandises are sold; and they have several manufactures among which that of sabres and knives has been most famous. It is an archbishop's see, and contains great numbers of Christians and Jews. It stands on the river Barida, 112 miles S of Antioch, and 112 N E of Jerusalem. Lon. 37 0 E, lat. 33 45 N.

Damietta, an ancient and rich town of Egypt, seated at one of the eastern mouths of the Nile, with a good harbour. It is rounded in a semicircle, two leagues and a half from the mouth of the Nile. It has several squares, the most considerable of which still retains the name of Menchif. The bazars are filled with merchants. Spacious khans, collecting under their porticos the stuffs of India, the silks of mount Lebanon, sal-ammoniac, and pyramids of rice proclaim that it is a commercial town. The houses, particularly those on the banks of the river, are lofty. They have in general handsome saloons, built on the top of their terraces, which are open to every wind, where the Turks pass their life in smoking. Several large mosques adorned with lofty minarets are dispersed over the town. The port of Damietta is constantly filled with a multitude of small boats and vessels. It carried on a great trade with Syria, Cyprus, and Marseilles. They export great quantities of rice, which is cultivated in the neighbouring plains. The tongue of land on which Damietta is situated, straitened on one side by the river, and on the other by the W extremity of lake Menzalé, is only from two to six miles wide from E to W. It is intersected by innumerable rivulets in every direction, which render it the most fertile spot in Egypt. It is there that nature lavishing profusely her pomp and riches, presents flowers, fruits and harvests at every season of the year. Damietta was taken by the French in their expedition to Egypt, 1799.

Dantzic, the capital of Western Prussia, standing on a branch of the Vistula, about four miles above where it falls into the Baltic; in lon. 16 36 E, lat. 54 20 N. This city is famous in history on many accounts, particularly that of its being formerly at the head of the Hanseatic association, commonly called the Hansetowns. It is large, beautiful, populous, and rich; its houses generally are five stories high; and many of its streets are planted with Chesnut trees. The houses are well built of stone or brick, six or seven stories high; and the granaries are still higher, to which the ships lie close, and take in their lading.
The arsenal is well stored, the exchange is a handsome structure, and the college is provided with very learned professors. The established religion is the Lutheran; but Papists, Calvinists, and Anabaptists are tolerated. The inhabitants have been computed at 200,000, but other computations have made them considerably less. Though strongly fortified, and possessed of 150 large brass cannon, it could not stand a regular siege, being surrounded with eminences. In 1700, upwards of 30,000 persons died of the plague. The jurisdiction of this town extends about 50 miles round: and it maintains a garrison at its own expence. It has now lost its independence, being forced to submit to the king of Prussia, who forcibly usurped the sovereignty, in a second partition of the Polish dominions. Besides corn, of which great quantities are exported, they trade in naval stores, and a great variety of other articles. It is seated on the Vistula, near the gulf of Angil, in the Baltic, 30 miles S E of Marienburg, and 160 N W of Warsaw.

Danube, the largest river in Europe, called the Ister by the ancients. It rises at Doneschingen, in Suabia, and flows N E by Ulm; then E through Bavaria and Austria, by Ratibon, Passau, Ens, and Vienna: it then enters Hungary, and runs S E by Presburg, Buda, and Belgrade: after which it divides Bulgaria, from Morlachia and Moldavia, discharging itself by several channels into the Black Sea. It begins to be navigable for boats at Ulm, and receives several large rivers as it passes along. It is so deep between Buda and Belgrade, that the Turks and Germans have had men of war upon it; yet it is not navigable to the Black Sea, on account of the cataracts.

Darien, or Terra Firma Proper, a province of Terra Firma, in South America. It lies along the coast of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and is particularly distinguished by the name of the Isthmus of Darien, and, by some writers, the Isthmus of Panama. It is bounded on the N by the gulf of Mexico, on the E by the river and gulf of Darien, on the S by Popayan and the Pacific Ocean, and on the W by the same ocean and Veragua. It extends in the form of a crescent, round the bay of Panama. It is 300 miles in length, but not above 60 broad; but this isthmus which binds together the continents of N and S America, is strengthened by a chain of lofty mountains, stretching through its whole extent, which render it a barrier of solidity sufficient to resist the impulse of two opposite oceans. The mountains are covered with forests almost inaccessible. The country is mountainous and barren, and the lowlands are overflowed with perpetual rain, so that the inhabitants, in many places build their houses upon trees, to be elevated from the damp soil, and the odious reptiles engendered in the putrid waters. The natives go naked; and the men have a silver plate fastened to their nose, which hangs over their mouths, in the shape of a half-moon; the women have a ring hanging down in the same manner; and they have also several chains of teeth, shells, beads, and the like, hanging down from the neck to the pit of the stomach. The men clear the plantations, and the women cultivate them. The girls are employed in picking and spinning cotton, which the women weave, and the cloths are chiefly used for hammocks. Each man has several wives, who live together in great harmony. They have no distinction of days or weeks, but reckon their time by the course of the moon. The animals are the same as in other coun-

Dartmoor, an extensive moorish traci, in Devonshire, bounded on the N by bleak hills, and extending southward quite through the centre of the county to the sea. It is watered by the river Dart.

Dartmouth, a borough of Devonshire, with a market on Friday. The town which is a mile long, stands on the side of a craggy hill, with very irregular streets. It is seated near the river Dart, near its fall into the sea, and has a spacious harbour defended by a fort. It has a considerable trade to the S of Europe and to Newfoundland, as well as a share in the coasting traffic. It is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. It contains three churches, and is 30 miles S S W of Exeter, and 204 W by S of London. Lon. 3 45 W, lat. 50 22
N.

Dassen-Eyland, or Isle of Deer, one of the three small islands to the N of the Cape of Good Hope; so called, on account of the great number of deer which were first carried thither in 1601. Here are also sheep whose tails weigh 19 pounds. Lon. 18 7 E, lat. 33 25 S.

Daventry, a corporate town in Northamptonshire, with a market on Wednesday. It is governed by a mayor, and seated on the side of a hill, 10 miles W of Northampton and 72 N W of London. Lon. 1 10 W, lat. 52 15 N.

David's, St. a city in Pembrokeshire, with a market on Wednesday; seated in a barren soil, on the river Ilen, scarcely a mile from the sea-shore. It was once a considerable place, and the cathedral is said to have the highest roof of any in England. It is 24 miles N W of Pembroke, and 255 W by N of London. Lon. 5 15 W, lat.
51 56 N.

David, Fort St. an English fort, on the coast of Coromandel. It was taken and destroyed by the French in 1758, and has not yet been rebuilt. It is 80 miles S of Fort St. George. Lon.

zer, at the foot of a mountain, on which is a castle. It is 12 miles N of Mont Royal.

Dauphin, a county of Pennsylvania, 45 miles long, and 25 broad. In 1790, the inhabitants were computed at 18,177. Harrisburg is the capital.

Dauphin, Fort, a fort built by the French, on the E coast of Madagascar.
Lon. 45 10 E, lat. 24 55 S.

Dauphiny, a late province of France, extending 40 leagues from N to S, and 36 from E to W; bounded on the W by the Rhone, on the N by the Rhone and Savoy, on the S by Provence, and on the E by the A. Two thirds of Dauphiny are intersected by mountains, which afford good pasturage; plenty of timber, fir-trees in particular, for the building of ships; and very scarce simples. In these mountains, which are branches of the Alps, are bears, chamois, marmots, eagles, hawks, &c. The vallis afford wheat, and the hills, in the vicinity of the Rhone, excellent wines, olives, and silk. Mines of iron, copper, and lead, have been worked here to great advantage. The principal rivers are the Rhone, Durance, Isere, and Drome. It now forms the departments of Drome, Isere, and upper Alps.

Dax, or Acs, an ancient town of France, in the department of Landes and late province of Gascony, with a bishop's see, and some famous hot baths. It is seated on the Adour, 24 miles N E of Bayonne. Lon. 1 0 W,
lat. 43 42 N.

Deadman's-Head, a cape in Cornwall, between St. Maw's and Fowey.

Dead Sea, a lake of Palestine, into which the river Jordan runs. It is 70 miles long, and 20 broad, inclosed on the E and W by high mountains. It abounds in bitumen. It is supposed to be the site of Sodom and Gomorrha.

Deal, a seaport in Kent with a market on Thursday. It is seated on the strait of Dover, and is a member of the Cinque Port of Sandwich, governed by a mayor. It has about 1000 houses, which are mostly built of brick. The inhabitants amount to 4500, and, as no manufacture is carried on here, they chiefly depend on the seafaring men who resort hither. The port is defended by two castles; Deal or Walmer castle to the S, and Sandown castle to the N. Between this place and the Godwin Sands, are the Downs, where the ships usually ride at their leaving or coming into the river Thames. It is seven miles S by E of Sandwich, and 72 E by S of London. Lon. 1 29 E, lat. 51 13 N.

Dean, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Monday. It had its name from the forest of Dean, in which it is seated, 11 miles W of Gloucester and 112 W S W of London. Lon. 2 31 W, lat. 51 50 N.

Dean, a forest in Gloucestershire, including that part of the county which lies between the Severn and the shires of Monmouth and Hereford.

Deben, a river in Suffolk, which rises near Debenham, and expands into a long narrow arm of the German Ocean, a little to the N of Harwich.

Debenham, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Friday, seated near the head of the Deben, on the side of a hill, 24 miles E of Bury St. Edmund's, and 84 N E of London. Lon. 1 17 E, lat. 52 22 N.

Debrecen, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of a district of the same name. It is 107 miles E of Buda. Lon. 22 11 E, lat. 47 32 N.

Deccan, an extensive tract of country in Asia, which, in its most extensive signification, the South, includes the whole peninsula South of Hindoostan Proper. However, in its ordinary acceptance, it means only the countries situated between Hindoostan Proper, the Carnatic, and Orissa, that is the provinces of Candeish, Dowlatabad, Visiapour, Golconda, and the W part of Berar. It is bounded on the N by the river Nerbudda, by Bengal, and by Bahar; and the river Kistna forms its separation on the S. from the peninsula of Hindoostan. All this vast country was once a province of the Mogul empire. Candeish, Visiapour, and a part of Dowlatabad, are subject to the Mahrattas; the remainder, to the nizam of the Deccan.

Decise, an ancient town of France, in the department of Nièvre and late province of Nivernois, seated in an island formed by the Loire, 16 miles S E of Nevers. Lon. 4 31 E, lat. 46 50 N.

are consequently subject to intermitting fevers. It is divided into three counties, Newcastle, Kent, and Sussex, and in the convention held at Philadelphia in 1787, the inhabitants were computed at 37,000.

Delaware, a county of Pennsylvania, 20 miles long and 11 broad. In 1790, it contained 9,483 inhabitants. Chester is the capital.

Delaware, a river of N America, which rising in the state of New York, in Lake Ustayantho, divides New York from Pennsylvania, and passes through Delaware Bay to the Atlantic, having New Jersey on the E side, and Pennsylvania and the state of Delaware on the W. From the mouth of this bay, at Cape Henlopen, to Philadelphia, it is 118 miles, with a sufficient depth of water for a 74 gun ship; above Philadelphia it is navigable for sloops up to the great falls at Trenton; and for boats that carry eight or ten tons, 40 miles higher.

Delaware Bay, a bay of N America, which is 60 miles long, from Cape Henlopen to the entrance of the river Delaware at Bombay-hook. It is so wide in some parts, that a ship, in the middle of it, cannot be seen from the land. It opens into the Atlantic, between Cape Henlopen on the S, and Cape May on the N. These capes are 18 miles apart.

Delft, a city of the United Provinces, in Holland. It is clean and well-built, with canals in the streets, planted on each side with trees. The public buildings are very magnificent. Here are two churches, in one of which is the tomb of William I, Prince of Orange, who was assassinated. It is about two miles in circumference; and has a fine arsenal well furnished. It is noted for a considerable manufacture of earthen ware known by the name of Delft ware. It is seated on the Schie, eight miles N W of Rotterdam, and 30 S W of Amsterdam. Lon. 4 24 E, lat. 52 4 N.

Delfshaven, a fortified town of Holland, on the N side of the Maese, with a canal to Delft, &c. It is between Rotterdam and Schiedam, not three miles from each.

Delfzy, a fortress of the United Provinces, in Groningen. It is seated on the river Damster, 13 miles N E of Groningen.

Delhi, a province of Hindoostan Proper, bounded on the N W by Lahore, on the N E by Serinagur, on the E by the Rohilla country, on the S by Agra, and on the W by Moultan. Having been the seat of continual wars for above 50 years, it is almost depopulated: and a tract of country that possesses every advantage that can be derived from nature, contains the most miserable of inhabitants. It is now all that remains to the Great Mogul of his once extensive empire.

Delhi, the capital of a province of the same name, in Hindoostan Proper, seated on the river Jumna. It is the nominal capital of all Hindoostan, and was the actual capital during the greatest part of the time since the Mahometan conquest. In 1738, when Nadir Shah invaded Hindoostan, he entered Delhi, and dreadful were the massacres and famine that followed; 100,000 of the inhabitants perished by the sword, and plunder, to the amount of 62,000,000*l.* sterling, was said to be collected. The same calamities they endured on the subsequent invasions of Abdalla, king of Candahar. Delhi is 880 miles N N E of Bombay. Lon. 77 40 E, lat. 28 37 N.

Delichi, a river of Albania, the Acheron of the ancient poets, who feigned it to be in hell.

Delmenhorst, a town of Westphalia, in the county of Delmenhorst, belonging to Denmark. It is seated on the Delm, near the Weser, eight miles S W of Bremen.

Delos, an island of the Archipelago, now called Dili. There are abundance of fine ruins supposed to be of the temples of Diana and Apollo, whose birthplace it is said to be. It is six miles in circumference, but now destitute of inhabitants. Lon. 25 59 E, lat. 37 30 N.

Delphi, or Delphce, a town of Livadia, seated in a valley, near mount Parnassus. It was famous for the oracle of Apollo, which people came from all parts to consult.

Delberg, a town of Swisserland, in the bishopric of Basle, 10 miles N W of Soleure. Lon. 7 23 E, lat. 47 17 N.

Delta, a part of lower Egypt, between the branches of the Nile and the Mediterranean. The ancients called it the isle of Delta, because it is in the shape of a triangle, like the Greek letter of that name. It is 130 miles along the coast from Damietta to Alexandria, and 70 on the sides, from the place where the Nile begins to divide itself. It is the most plentiful country of all Egypt; and it rains more here than in other parts; but its fertility is chiefly owing to the inundations of the Nile. The principal towns on the coast are Damietta, Rosetta, and Alexandria.

Demer, a river which rises in the bishopric of Liege, waters Hasselt, Diest, Sichein, Arschot, and Mechlin, below which it joins the Senne, and takes the name of Rupel.

Demerary, a settlement formerly belonging to the Dutch in Guiana, on a river of the same name, three leagues W of Paramaribo. It surrendered to the English in 1781; but was taken by the French soon after, and by the treaty of peace in 1783 was restored to the Dutch. It was again taken by the English in April 1796.

Demmin, an ancient town of Swedish Pomerania, in the dutchy of Stetin, seated on the river Peen. Lon. 13 22 E, lat. 53 52 N.

Demona, a fort of Piedmont, on the river Sture, 10 miles S W of Coni. Lon. 7 28 E, lat. 48 18 N.

Denain, a village of France in the department of the North and late province of Hainault. It is seated on the Scheld eight miles W of Valenciennes.

Denbigh, the county-town of Denbighshire, situate on the side of a rocky hill, on a branch of the river Clwyde. Its ruined castle, with its vast inclosure crowning the top of the hill, forms a striking object. Denbigh has a considerable manufacture of gloves and shoes, which are sent to London for exportation. It has a market on Wednesday, sends one member to parliament, and is 27 miles W of Chester and 208 N W of London. Lon. 3 35 W, lat. 53 11 N.

Denbighshire, a county of Wales, bounded on the S by Merioneth and Montgomery shires, on the N by Flintshire and the Irish Sea, on the W by Caernarvon and part of Merionethshire. It is about 40 miles long and 21 broad. The air is wholesome, but sharp; the county being pretty hilly, and the snow lying long on the tops of the mountains. The soil in general is barren; but the vale of Clwyde, so called from its being watered by that river, is a very fertile pleasant spot, of great extent, and well inhabited. The chief commodities are black cattle, sheep, goats, rye, and lead ore. The county sends two members to parliament.

Dender, a river of Austrian Hainault, which waters Leuze, Ath, Lessines, Grammont, Ninove, and Alost, and joins the Scheld at Dendermonde.

Dendermonde, a city of Austrian Flanders, with a strong citadel. It was taken by the French in 1794, when they overran Holland. It is surrounded by marshes and fine meadows, which can be covered with water, and is seated at the confluence of the Dender and Scheld, 16 miles W of Mechlin. Lon. 4 10 E, lat. 51 3 N.

Denia, an ancient seaport of Spain, in Valencia. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, on the Mediterranean, 52 miles E of Alicant. Lon. 0 36 E, lat. 38 44 N.

Denmark, a kingdom of Europe, bounded on the E by the Baltic Sea, on the W and N by the ocean, and on the S by Germany. The country is generally flat, and the soil sandy. The air is rendered foggy by the neighbourhood of the seas and lakes, of which it is full, but it has no considerable river. Denmark, properly so called, consists of Jutland and the islands of Zealand and Funen, with the little isles about them; but the king of Denmark's dominions contain also Norway, and the dutchies of Holstein, Oldenburg, and Delmenhorst. Denmark was once a limited and elective monarchy; but, in 1660, it was made absolute and hereditary, by a revolution almost unparalleled in history; a free people voluntarily resigning their liberties into the hands of their sovereign. The inhabitants are Protestants since the year 1522, when they embraced the confession of Augsburg. By an actual enumeration in 1759 the inhabitants were said to amount to 2,444,000 souls. Their whole revenue, including what it received at Elsinour, amounts to about 1,002,000*l.* sterling yearly. The military force consists of 70,000 men, cavalry and infantry, the greatest part of which consists of a militia which receive no pay, but are exercised every Sunday. The fleet consists of about 36 ships of the line, and 18 frigates; but many of the ships being old, and wanting repairs, if they can send out 25 ships upon the greatest emergency, this is supposed to be the most they can do. They have 26,000 registered seamen, who cannot quit the kingdom

Dennis, a post town in Barnstable county, Massachusetts, about eight miles from Barnstable the shire town, containing 1400 inhabitants.

Denton, the capital of Caroline coun- ty, Maryland; standing on the E side of Choptank river, about seven miles E of Hillsborough and eight S of Greens- borough. Here is a post office, court house, &c.

Denys, St. a famous town of France, in the department of Paris. Here is an ancient and magnificent church, in which were the tombs of many of the French kings; and in the treasury, a- mong other curiosities, the swords of St. Lewis and the Maid of Orleans, and the sceptre of Charlemagne. The ab- bey of the late Benedictines, was a magnificent piece of modern architec- ture, but was destroyed by the mad- ness and fury of the revolutionists, and the name of the town was changed to Franciade. It is seated on the river Crould, near the Seine, five miles N of Paris. Lon. 2 26 E, lat. 48 56 N.

Deptford, a town of Kent, four miles E of London. It has a bridge over the river at Ravensbourn, near its influx into the Thames, where it once had a deep ford from whence it had its name. It is remarkable for its fine docks and for the king's yard and storehouses. It was anciently called West Greenwich. It is divided into Upper and Lower Deptford, and has two parish churches. Here is an hospital, incorporated by Henry VIII. called Trinity House of Deptford Strond. It contains 21 hous- es: a more modern structure, and a finer one, called Trinity Hospital, con- tains 38. Both these are for decay- ed pilots, or masters of ships, or their widows, who have a handsome month- ly allowance. Deptford is four miles E of London. Lon. 0 4 E, lat. 51 30 N.

Derbent, a seaport and fortress of Persia, in the province of Schirvan, on the W coast of the Caspian Sea. The town is inhabited chiefly by Persians, Tartars, and a few Armenians. It is said to have been built by Alexander the Great, and is surrounded by high brick walls. The fortress surrendered to the Russians, in May 1796, after a siege of ten days. It is seated at the foot of Mount Caucasus. Lon. 50 0 E, lat. 42 8 N.

DER

Derby, the county town of Derby- shire, with a market on Friday. It is seated on the Derwent, over which is a handsome stone bridge: and a brook runs through the town, under several stone bridges. It has five churches, of which All Saints is the chief, noted for its beautiful tower. In 1734, a machine was erected here by sir Thomas Lombe, for the manufacturing of silk, the model of which was brought from Italy. Derby possesses also a considerable manufacture of silk, cotton, and fine worsted stockings; and has a fabric of porcelain, equal, if not superior in qual- ity, to any in the kingdom. Several hands are employed in the lapidary and jewellery branches; and Derbyshire marbles, spars and crystals are wrought into a variety of ornamental articles. They likewise carry on a great trade in wool, corn, malt, and ale, of which considerable quantities are sent to Lon- don. Derby sends two members to parliament, and is governed by a may- or. It is 36 miles N of Coventry, and 126 N N W of London. Lon. 1 25 W, lat. 52 58 N.

Derby, a town in New Haven coun- ty, Connecticut, with a post office; situated on a branch of Stratford river, eight miles W of New Haven.

Derby, a pleasant village in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, on a creek of the same name, seven miles S by W of Philadelphia.

Derbyshire, an English county, bound- ed on the N by Yorkshire, on the E by Nottinghamshire, on the S by Leices- tershire and Warwickshire, on the W by Staffordshire, and on the N W by Cheshire. It lies in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, sends four members to parliament, and contains six hundreds, 11 market towns, and 106 parishes. It is near 59 miles in length from south to north; about 34 in breadth on the north side, but on the S no more than six. The air is pleasant and healthful, especially on the east side; but on the west, about the peak, it is sharper and more subject to wind and rain. The soil is very different in dif- ferent parts of the county; in the E and S parts it is very fruitful in all kinds of grain; but in the west, beyond the Derwent, it is barren and moun- tainous, producing nothing but a little oats. There is, however, plenty of grass in the valleys, which afford pas- ture to a great number of sheep. This part of the county is called the peak, from a Saxon word signifying an eminence. Its mountains are very bleak, high and barren; but extremely profitable to the inhabitants. They yield great quantities of the best lead, antimony, iron, scythe-stones, grind-stones, marble, alabaster, a coarse sort of crystal, azure, spar, and pit-coal. In these mountains are two remarkable caverns, named Pool's Hole, and Elden-Hole. The principal rivers are the Derwent, Dove, Erwash, and Trent.

Derham, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Friday. The market is noted for wool and yarn. It is 14 miles W of Norwich, and 100 N N E of London. Lon. 1 0 E, lat. 52 42 N.

Derenburg, a town of Lower Saxony, in the principality of Halberstadt.

Derbate, or Deiroute, a town of Egypt, in the isle formed by the canal from Cairo to Rosetta. Here is a magnificent temple. Lon. 31 45 E, lat. 30 40 N.

Derne, a town of Barbary. It is the capital of a district in Tripoli near the coast. Lon. 31 45 E, lat. 30 40 N.

Derp, a town of Russia, in the government of Riga, with a bishop's see, and a university. It lies near the river Ambe, 50 miles N W of Pskof. Lon. 26 15 E, lat. 58 30 N.

Deruyter, a post town in Chenango county, New York, with about 320 inhabitants, 466 miles from Washington.

Derwent, a river in Devonshire, which rises in the high Peak, passes Derby, and empties itself into the Trent on the borders of Leicestershire.

Derwent, a river of Yorkshire, which rises in the N riding, flows into the Ouse, below York.

Derwent, a river of Durham, which flowing for some time between Durham and Northumberland, falls into the Tyne, above Newcastle.

Derwent, a river of Cumberland, which flowing through the lakes of Derwent-water and Bassenthwaite-water to Cockermouth, enters the Irish Sea, near Workington.

Derwent-water, a lake of Cumberland, in the vale of Keswick. It is three miles in length, and a mile and a half wide. Five islands rise out of this lake, which add greatly to the beauty of the appearance. On one of them is an elegant modern-built house.

Descada, one of the French Caribbee Islands, in the West Indies. It is 10 miles long and five broad, and is generally the first land that is made in sailing to the West Indies. Lon. 61 20 W, lat. 16 40 N.

a river of Perthshire, over the beautiful vale of Glende-von, is a great curiosity, called the Rumbling Bridge. It consists of one arch, thrown over a horrible chasm, worn by the river, about 80 feet deep, and very narrow. In other places, the river has forced its way, in a surprising manner, through the rocks. At the Caldron-lin, it has worn away the softer parts of the stone, and formed immense pits, into which the water falls with a tremendous noise. Below this, the whole river is precipitated in one sheet, from a height of 40 feet.

Devonshire, an English county, 69 miles long, and 64 broad. It is 287 miles in circumference, of which its maritime coast is nearly 150 miles. In its figure it represents a parallelogram, and is bounded on the N and N W by the Bristol Channel, on the E by Som-er-setshire and Dorsetshire, on the S and SE by the English Channel, and on the W by Cornwall. Though there are some unwholesome situations, yet upon the whole this county enjoys a remarkable salubrity of air, and mild-ness of seasons. The tops of the mountains are cold and bleak, but the air in the vallies is mild and warm. The country is very beautifully interspersed with hills and vales, and the climate is no less various; the vallies being fruitful and the hills barren. In the eastern parts there is plenty not only of good corn, but of fine pasturage for sheep, where the grounds are dry and chalky. The southern part of the county is remarkably fertile, and is as justly called the Garden of Devonshire as Italy is the Garden of the World.
Fruit-trees are plentiful, especially apples, with which a great quantity of cider is made. The western parts abound with game, especially hares, pheasants, and woodcocks, which are in such abundance, as to render them very cheap; and here is a bird so very small, that it is reputed a hummingbird, and like that, constructs its nest on the extreme branches of trees. For a considerable extent to the S and W of Dartmoor, there are vast rocks of fine variegated marble, and in many places marble rocks are found to be the basis of the high road. In the N of the county there is a famous breed of bullocks, remarkable for their beauty. Numbers of these are bought at a high price, and sent even to Jamaica.
The principal rivers are the Tamar, Ex, Teigne, and Dart. Exeter is the capital.

Deux Ponts, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine, capital of a duchy of the same name, seated on Diarbeck, or Diarbekar, a province of Turkey in Asia, which extends along the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates from N N W to S E, that is, from Mount Taurus, which divides it from Turcomania on the N, to the inmost recess of the Persian gulf on the S, about 300 miles; and from E to W, that is, from Persia on the E to Syria and Arabia Deserta on the W, in some places 200, and in others about 300 miles, but in the southern or lower parts not above 150. Being a considerable frontier towards the kingdom of Persia, it is very well guarded and fortified; but as for those many cities once so renowned for their greatness and opulence, they are at present almost dwindled into heaps of ruins. Bagdad, Mossul, Caralimed, and a few more indeed continue to be populous and wealthy; but the rest can scarcely be called by any other name than that of sorry places.

The rivers Euphrates and Tigris have almost their whole course through this country.

Diarbekir, the capital of the above province, is situated in a delightful plain, on the banks and near the head of the Tigris, about 155 miles or 15 caravan days journey, N E from Aleppo, in lon. 40 50, lat. 37 35 E. The bridge of 10 arches over the said river is said to have been built by the order of Alexander the Great. It is one of the richest and most mercantile cities in all Asiatic Turkey; and is well fortified, being encompassed with a double wall, the outermost of which is flanked with 72 towers, said to have been raised in memory of our Saviour's 72 disciples. It has several stately piazzas or marketplaces, well stored with all kinds of rich merchandise, and 12 magnificent mosques, said to have been formerly Christian churches. Its chief manufacture is the dressing, tanning, and dying of goat-skins, commonly called Turkey-leather, of which the vent is almost incredible in many parts of Europe and Asia. The city is under the government of a bashaw, who has great power and very large dominions. He has commonly a body of 20,000 horse under him, for repelling the frequent incursions of the Curdees and Tartars, who always go on horsback to rob the caravans. The adjacent territory is very rich and beautiful; the bread, wine, and flesh excellent; the fruits exquisite, and the pigeons better and larger than any in Europe.

Die, a town of France in the department of Drome and late province of Dauphiny. It was lately an episcopal see, and is seated on the Drone, 24 miles S E of Valence. Lon. 5 23 E, lat. 44 42 N.

and fortified by a high stone wall, well furnished with cannon. The trade of the town, once so important, is almost entirely removed to Surat. It is 180 miles W by S of Surat, and 200 N W of Bombay. Lon. 69 52 E, lat. 20 43 N.

Dixan, the first town in Abyssinia, on the side of Taranta. It is built on the top of a hill, exactly in the form of a sugar-loaf; a deep valley surrounds it like a trench, and the road winds spirally up the hill till it ends among the houses. The town is well peopled by Moors and Christians, whose only trade is the selling of children. The Christians bring such as they have stolen in Abyssinia to Dixan, where the Moors receive them, and carry them to a market at Masuah, whence they are sent to Arabia or India. The priests of the province of Tigre, are openly concerned in this infamous traffic. Lon. 40 7 E, lat. 14 57 N.

Dixmude, a town of Austrian Flanders, which has been often taken. It was forced to surrender to the French in 1794. It is celebrated for its excellent butter; and is seated on the river Yperlee, 10 miles N W of Ypres. Lon. 2 57 E, lat. 51 2 N.

Dizier, St. a considerable town of France, in the department of Upper Marne and late province of Champagne, seated on the Marne, where it begins to be navigable for boats, 15 miles S E of Vitry le-Francois. Lon. 4 54 E, lat. 48 35 N.

Dnieper, anciently the Boristhenes, a large river of Russia, which rises in the government of Smolensko, and flowing in a southerly direction, enters the Black sea, between Cherson and Oczakow. From its source to its mouth, it now flows entirely through the Russian dominions; and through this whole course of above 800 miles, its navigation is only once interrupted by a series of cataracts, which begin below the mouth of the Samara, and continue for above 40 miles; but these may be passed in spring, without much hazard, even by loaded barks.

Dniester, a fine river which rises in Galicia, in Austrian Poland, and taking a S E direction visits Choczim, dividing Podolia from Moldavia; it then separates Bessarabia from the Russian government of Catharinenslaf, and having watered Bender, falls into the Black Sea, between the mouths of the Dnieper and the Danube.

Domingo, St. one of the richest islands in the West Indies, 400 miles in length, and 75 in breadth. It was discovered by Columbus, in 1492, and is surrounded by craggy rocks and dangerous shoals. The heat to the N and S E would be insupportable for six months of the year, if not qualified by the easterly winds, and frequent rains; but the latter soon spoil the flesh, bread, and fruits. It has a great many rivers, and mines of gold, talc, and crystal. The Spanish name of it, originally given by Columbus, is Hispaniola. Since the French revolution this island has been desolated by the most dreadful calamities. In 1791, a most alarming insurrection of the negroes began in the French plantations. A scene of the most horrid cruelties ensued. In a little time no less than 100,000 negroes were in rebellion, and all the manufactories and plantations of more than half the northern provinces appeared as one general conflagration. The plains and mountains were filled with carnage, and deluged with blood. In 1793, the royalists of fort St. Jerome invited the English to take possession of that part of the island. They were obliged, however, partly on account of the disorders which desolated the island, and partly on account of that dreadful scourge the yellow fever, to abandon this island altogether. By the peace concluded between France and Spain, the whole of this island has fallen into the hands of the French.

Domingo, St. the capital of the Spanish part of the island of St. Domingo, with an archbishop's see, whose cathedral is a superb structure. Dominica, one of the windward Caribbee islands in the West Indies. It lies about half-way between Guadeloupe and Martinico, and is near 28 miles in length, and 13 in breadth. It was taken by the English in 1761, and confirmed to them by the peace of 1763. The French took it in 1778, but restored it in 1783; and in 1795 they made an unsuccessful attempt, for all the Frenchmen that landed were either killed or taken prisoners. The soil is thin, and better adapted to the rearing of coffee than sugar; but the sides of the hills bear the finest trees in the West Indies, and the island is well supplied with rivulets. The capital is Charlotte Town, formerly Roseau.

Domremy-la-Pucelle, a village of France, in the department of Meuse and late province of Barrois, remarkable for the birth of Joan of Arc, the Maid of Orleans. It is seated on the Meuse, five miles from Neufchateau.

Don, a large river that separates Europe from Asia. It issues from lake St. John, in the government of Moscow, and divides, near Tcherkasle, into three streams which fall into the sea of Asoph. This river has so many windings, is in many parts so shallow, and abounds with such numerous shoals, as to be scarcely navigable, except in the spring, on the melting of the snows; and its mouths also are so choaked up with land, that only flat-bottom boats, except in the same season, can pass into the sea of Asoph.

Don, a river of Scotland, which rises in Aberdeenshire, joins the Urie Water at Inverary, and passing by Kintore, falls into the German Ocean at Aberdeen, within two miles of the mouth of the Dee. Upon both of these rivers is an excellent salmon fishery.

Don, a river in Yorkshire, which waters Sheffield, Rotherham, and Doncaster, and joins the Aire, near its termination with the Ouse.

Donawert, a strong town of Germany, on the frontiers of Suabia, subject to the duke of Bavaria. It is seated on the N side of the Danube, 25 miles N of Augsburg. Lon. 11 5 E, lat. 48 52 N.

Doncaster, a corporate town in the West riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the river Don, and has a castle now in ruins. It is large and well built, and governed by a mayor. It was noted for knitting worsted stockings, but that article of trade is now on the decline. It is 37 miles S of York, and 160 N by W of London. Lon. 1 12 W, lat. 53 33 N.

Doncherry, a handsome town of France, in the department of Ardennes and late province of Champagne, seated on the Meuse, three miles from Sedan. Lon. 5 2 E, lat. 49 42 N.

Donegal, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, 68 miles in length, and 44 in breadth; bounded on the E by Londonderry and Tyrone, on the W and N by the ocean, and on the S by Fermanagh and the bay of Donegal. It contains 40 parishes, and before the Irish Union sent 12 members to the Irish parliament. It is in general, a champaign country, and abounds with harbours.

Donegal, a town of Ireland, capital of a county of the same name, seated on the bay of Donegal, 10 miles N of Ballyshannon. Lon. 7 47 W, lat. 54 42 N.

Doneschingen, a town of Suabia, in the principality of Furstenburgh. It is the chief residence of the prince of Furstenburgh, in the court-yard of whose palace the Danube takes its rise. Some small springs bubbling from the ground, form a basin of clear water, about 30 feet square. From this issues the Danube, which is here only a little brook; and though the small rivers Bribach and Brege, uniting below the town, are far more considerable than this stream, which flows into them soon after their junction, yet has this alone the honour of being called the source of the Danube.

Dongala, or Dancala, a town of Nubia, with a cattle seated on the Nile, among mountains, 150 miles N of Senar. Lon. 30 35 E, lat. 21 0 N.

Donzy, a town of France in the department of Nievre, and late territory of Nivernois, 22 miles N of Nevers. Lon. 3 14 E, lat. 47 22 N.

Doaab, or Doabah, a tract of land in Hindoostan Proper, occupying all the flat country between the Ganges and the N mountains, as well as the principal part of that tract lying between the Ganges and Jumnah. It is so named by way of eminence; the word signifying a tract of land formed by the approximation of two rivers. The principal part of it is subject to the nabob of Oude.

Doon, Loch, a lake of Ayrshire, in the S E part of Kyle, six miles in length, and of considerable breadth. On an island in this lake stands Balloch Castle.

Doon, a river of Scotland, which issuing from Loch Doon, runs N W, divides the district of Kyle from Carrick, the southern division of Ayrshire, and falls into the frith of Clyde.

Dorat, a town of France, now in the department of Upper Vienne, lately in the territory of Limosin, seated on the Abrax, near its confluence with the Serre, 25 miles N of Limoges. Lon. 1 24 E, lat. 46 12 N.

Dorchester, the county-town of Dorsetshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is a town of great antiquity, was formerly a city, and much larger, the ruins of the walls being still to be seen in some places. It has three churches, sends two members to parliament, and is governed by a mayor. The streets are broad and paved, and a fine terrace-walk, planted with trees, almost surrounds the town. It has no manufactures, but is famous for excellent ale. At a mile's distance stands Maiden Castle, with intrincements thrown up in the time of the Romans. It gives the title of earl to the family of Damer, and is seated on the river Frome, on a Roman road, eight miles N of Weymouth, and 120 W by S of London. Lon. 2 43 W, lat. 50 42 N.

Dorchester, a town in Oxfordshire, which was a station of the Romans, and ruined in the wars with the Danes. It was the see of a bishop 500 years till 1086, when William the conqueror translated it to Lincoln. It gives the title of baron to the family of Carleton, and is seated on the Tame, 10 miles S E of Oxford, and 49 W N W of London. Lon. 1 0 W, lat. 51 39 N.

Dordagne, a department of France, which includes the late province of Perigord.

Dorn, a village in a detached part of Worcestershire, three miles S E of Campden in Gloucestershire, where have been found abundance of Roman and British coins.

Dornoch, a royal borough, the county-town of Sutherlandshire, at the entrance of a frith of the same name, over which it has a ferry to Tain. Part of the cathedral serves for a parish church; the other part is in ruins. It is a small place, and half in ruins, but was the residence of the bishops of Caithness. It is 40 miles N E of Inverness. Lon. 3 48 W, lat. 57 52 N.

Dorpi, or Dorpat, a town of Livonia, on the Ember, between the lakes Wozero and Pepas, 60 miles S of Narva. Lon. 27 52 E, lat. 58 18 N.

Dorsetshire, a county of England, bounded on the S by the English channel, on the N by Somersetshire and Wiltshire, on the E by Hampshire, and on the W by Devonshire, and some part of Somersetshire. It is between 40 and 50 miles long from E to W, and 34 broad from S to N, and contains 34 hundreds, 22 market-towns, and 248 parishes. This county enjoys a mild, pleasant, and wholesome air, and a deep, rich, and fertile soil, finely diversified. Towards the N it is level, under the high lands that divide it from Somersetshire, where there are fine arable grounds that will yield large crops of different kinds of grain. But on the S from the borders of Hampshire by the sea-coast, for an extent of almost 20 miles in length, and in some places four or five in breadth, is a heathy common, which renders this country less populous than it otherwise would be. From E to W run a ridge of hills called the Downs, abounding with sweet and short herbage, which nourishes a vast number of sheep equally esteemed for their flesh and fleece. The country is also very plentifully watered; and in all respects so well suited both for pleasure and profit, that it was distinguished by the Romans above all others. This county ields many and very valuable commodities. The quarries in Purbeck and Portland supply stones of different qualities suited to various uses, and in prodigious quantities, together with some very rich and beautiful marble.

The best tobacco-pipe clay in England is also found in this county. Madder, hemp, and flax, also thrive in many places, also grain of all sorts. The principal rivers are the Stour and Frome. Here is plenty of poultry of all sorts, swans, woodcocks, pheasants, partridges, fieldfares, &c. It is distinguished for its woollen manufactures, and its fine ale and beer. Dorchester is the capital. See Portland

Dort or Dordrecht, a city in Holland, famous for a protestant synod held in 1618, which condemned the tenets of Arminius. It is seated on an island of the Meuse, opposite that of Yssel-mond. It was detached from the mainland in 1421 by a flood occasioned by the breaking down of the dyke, which overwhelmed 70 villages and about 100,000 persons. In 1457, this city was almost entirely destroyed by fire. It was taken by the French in January 1795. It is 10 miles S E of Rotterdam. Lon. 4 48 E, lat. 51 50 N.

Dortmund, a strong imperial town of Westphalia, in the county of Marek, seated on the Emstor, 35 miles N E of Cologne. Lon. 7 35 E, lat. 51 26 N.

Douay, a city of France in the department of the North and late French Flanders. It is seated on the river Scarpe in a very pleasant and fertile country. The town is large and populous, and exceedingly well fortified.
You enter it by six gates, and the streets, from each of these gates, lead to the market place. It has a fine arsenal, a foundery for cannon, a military school, a citadel, and three famous colleges. The great square in the centre of the city, and the principal church, are worthy of notice. It was taken by the French in 1712, after the suspension of arms between Great Britain and France. It is seated on the river Scarpe, whence there is a canal to the Deule, 15 miles N W of Cambrai.
Lon. 3 10 E, lat. 50 22 N.

Doubs, a department of France, including part of the late province of Franche Comté.

Doue, a small town of France, in the department of Maine and Loire and late province of Anjou. It has one of the finest fountains in France; and near it is a vast Roman amphitheatre, cut out of the solid rock. It is nine miles S W of Saumur.

Dove, a river in Derbyshire, which rises in the Peak parts, the county from Staffordshire, and falls into the Trent, four miles N of Burton. The Staffordshire canal is carried over this river in an aqueduct of 23 arches.

Dovedale, one of the most romantic spots in Derbyshire, in the neighbourhood of Ashborn. Here the river Dove runs in a chasm between precipitous rocks.

Dover, a scaport of England in the county of Kent, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It sends two members to parliament, who are styled Barons of the cinque ports of which Dover is the chief. It is situate between two high cliffs, on one of which is an ancient castle, E from the town. It was repaired in 1756, and there are barracks in it for 3000 men. The town was once walled round, and had ten gates, but there now remain only three, and those much out of repair; also seven churches, which are now reduced to two in the town and one in the castle; and it was formerly deemed the key of the island. It is the station of the packet boats that, in time of peace, pass between Dover and Calais, from which it is distant only 21 miles. The harbour is made by a gap in the cliffs, whose height is truly sublime. Hence, in fine weather, is a prospect of the coast of France. Dover is 15 miles S E of Canterbury and 72 of London.
Lon. 1 23 E, lat. 51 8 N.

Dover, a post town of Strafford county, New Hampshire, lying on the river Cochocho, 12 miles N by W of Portsmouth.

Dover, the principal town of Kent county, Delaware, as well as the seat of state Government; situated on Jones' creek, near its junction with the river Delaware, about 36 m. S of New Castle. Here is a post office, and about 800 inhabitants. This small town is neatly built; the houses being mostly of bricks, and the streets disposed with regularity. In the centre is a handsome square, on which the state house and public offices are erected. It lies in the lat. of 39 10 N. and lon. 75 30 W.

Dresden, the capital city of the electorate of Saxony in Germany. It is seated on the river Elbe, which divides it into two parts. One part is called Old Dresden, and the other the New Town, in the German language New Stadt. They are joined together by a stone bridge, supported by 19 piers, 630 paces in length. It has a castle, a university and a magnificent church for the Roman catholics, and the principal church for the protestants; that of the Holy Cross, is also a noble structure. It is surrounded by strong and handsome fortifications; and contains according to the latest accounts 110,000 inhabitants. All the buildings of this city are constructed with square free stone, and are almost all of the same height. They have stone from the neighbourhood of Pirna, about ten miles from this city, which is readily brought down the Elbe. In general the houses are high and strong; the streets wide, straight, well paved, clean, and well illuminated in the night; and there are large squares, disposed in such a manner, that Dresden may pass for one of the handsomest cities in the world. The elector's palace is a magnificent structure, and abounds in many valuable curiosities both of nature and art. The collection of pictures is reckoned one of the finest that exists, and is valued at 500,000*l*. This city was taken by the king of Prussia in 1745, but was soon restored; and a-

Druses, a people of Syria, on the mountains Libanus and Antilibanus. They are warlike, inured to labour, are great enemies of the Turks, and have their particular princes, called Emirs.

Duanesburg, a post town of Albany county, New York, standing on the E side of Schoharrie river, 30 miles W of Albany. The township contained 2800 inhabitants at the last census in 1800.

Dublin, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 27 miles in length, and 17 in breadth; bounded on the E by the Irish Sea, on the N by East Meath and the Irish Sea, on the W by East Meath and Kildare, and on the S by Wicklow. Before the Union it sent ten members to the Irish parliament.

DUB

Dublin, the capital of Ireland, in a county of the same name, with a bishop's see; seated on the Liffey, in view of the Irish sea on the E. Its form is that of a square, two miles and a half in extent on each side, and it contains about 22,000 houses, whose inhabitants are estimated at 156,000. With respect to its streets, Dublin bears a near resemblance to London; some of the old streets were formerly narrow, but great improvements have been lately made, in regard both to convenience and embellishment, and the new streets are wide and commodious, the houses lofty, uniform, and elegant. Among these, on the N side of the river, are Gardiner's row, north Great George's street, Cranby-row, Cavendish-row, and Palace-row; the last three form a superb square, having the garden of the lying-in-hospital in the centre; the old wall that encompassed the garden has been lately taken down; there is now a full view of this delightful spot, surrounded with iron palisades, and upwards of 100 globes with double burners disposed at equal distances, which, added to the globes from the surrounding houses, have a most brilliant effect. Among new the streets and buildings on the S side of the river, those wherein persons of distinction reside, lie chiefly to the eastward of the college and Stephen's green; which last, though it does not rank with the new buildings, possesses much grandeur and elegance, being one of the largest squares in Europe: it is an English mile in circumference, surrounded by a gravel walk planted on each side with trees; within this walk is a smooth level meadow, having in the centre an equestrian statue of the late king: there are several fine edifices, though almost all differing in the style of their architecture. There are several magnificent squares, some of which are newly built. Among the principal public buildings are the Castle (the residence of the viceroy) the Parliament House, Trinity College, the Royal Exchange, the Customhouse, the Royal Hospital of Kilmainham for invalids, and Essex bridge, one of the five bridges over the Liffey, which being banked in through the whole length of the town, exhibits spacious and beautiful quays, where vessels below the bridge load and unload before the merchants doors and warehouses: it is navigable as far as Essexbridge. This bridge was first built in 1681, and took its name from the unfortunate earl of Essex, then viceroy of Ireland. It was taken down in 1753, and rebuilt in an elegant form, after the model of Westminster bridge, but much better proportioned, and on a more secure foundation. It has five arches, the buttresses between which support semicircular niches that project from the parapet; there are bal-lustrades between these niches, and continued to the ends of the bridge which is commodiously flagged for foot passages; the whole constructed with hewn stone in a very fine taste.

 There are four bridges besides this over the river. This city has two cathedrals, 18 parish churches, two chapels of ease, 15 Roman-catholic chapels, six meeting-houses for Presbyterians, one Anabaptists, four for Methodists, two for Quakers, a church for French Calvinists, a Danish and a Dutch church, and a Jewish synagogue. Christ-church, or the Holy Trinity, built in 1038 by Donat bishop of Dublin, is a venerable Gothic pile; and its present appearance evinces its antiquity. St. Patrick's cathedral is also a fine Gothic structure; it stands on the east side of Patrick street; the monuments here are more numerous than in Christ-church; and the steeple is the highest in the city. St.
 Werburgh's church was originally built in a very early age. In 1301, when a great part of the city was consumed by an accidental fire, this church suffered in the conflagration: it was burnt a second time in 1754, and repaired in its present beautiful form in 1759. The front and steeple are admired for their elegance, lightness, and symmetry: the spire is a fine octagon supported by eight pillars; and a gilt ball terminates the whole, being 160 feet from the ground. The House of Commons was destroyed by fire in 1792, but is now rebuilt. The harbour is choked up by two banks of sand, upon which at high water there is not above 17 feet; which prevents vessels of large burden from going over the bar; a defect which will be remedied, no doubt, by some fine projected improvement. A canal has been made from the Liffey, which Dulwich, a village in Surry, five miles S of Lonkon.

Dumbarton, a borough, the capital of Dumbartonshire, seated at the confluence of the Leven and Clyde, with a stone bridge over the former. Its principal manufacture is glass; but many of the young women are employed in the print-fields on the banks of the Leven. Dumbarton Castle, in which a garrison is still kept, is a strong place, and in ancient times was deemed impregnable; it is a vast rock, steep on every side, rising out of a plain to the height of 500 feet, and unconnected with any high ground for the space of a mile. It is almost surrounded by the Leven and the Clyde. Dumbarton is 15 miles W N W of Glasgow. Lon. 4 30 W, lat. 56 0 N.

Dumbartonshire, or Lenox, runs far N among a cluster of hills, and is bounded on the S by the Firth and river of Clyde; on the E by Lanerksire and Stirlingshire; on the NE by Perthshire and the Grampian-hills; and on the W by Argyleshire and Loch Long. It is above 20 miles broad from E to W, and about 40 long from N to S. That part which lies to the E is very fruitful in corn, the other parts being hilly, feed vast flocks of sheep.

Dumblane, a village in Perthshire, remarkable for a battle, called the battle of Sheriff-muir, between the duke of Argyle and the rebel earl of Mar, in 1715. At the upper end of the village is a ruinous cathedral. It is 30 miles N W of Edinburgh.

Dunfermline, a borough in Fifeshire, which is a considerable manufacturing town, and has a good trade in linen goods, particularly diapers. Here was a magnificent abbey and palace, where the princess Elizabeth, from whom the present royal family are descended, was born. Adjoining to this was a magnificent abbey, part of the remains of which now serve for a church. In this place were buried Malcolm and his queen, and several kings of Scotland. It is 15 miles N W of Edinburgh. Lon. 3 27 W, lat. 56 5 N.

Dumfries, a town of Virginia, on the river Potomac.

Dumfries, a royal borough of Scotland, capital of Dumfriesshire, pleasantly seated between two hills, on the river Nith. It is a regular well-built town, eight miles N of Solway Frith, and 30 W N W of Carlisle. Lon. 3 29 W, lat. 55 12 N.

Dumfries, a county of Scotland, which includes Annandale and Niddisdale; it is bounded on the N by part of Ayrshire, Lanerksire, Peeblesshire, and Selkirkshire; on the W by Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire; on the S by the Solway Firth; and on the W by the counties of Ayr and Kircudbright; extending about 50 miles in length and 30 in breadth. Eusdale is the most eastern division, and divided from Annandale by Eskdale. Annandale lies on the banks of the river Annan which runs through the middle of the county and falls into the Solway Firth, after a course of 27 miles. This division is a stewarty, abounding with pasture and pleasant woods, is about 27 miles long and 14 broad. Niddisdale or Nithdale receives its name from the river Nid, that passes through it and runs into the Solway Firth; this is the western division, abounds in pastures and arable lands, produces abundance of corn, and some woods and forests; gold has been found in some of its brooks after great rains. Its chief rivers are, the Esk, Annan, and Nid. Its chief towns are, Annan and Dumfries.

Dumfries, a post town and port of entry, in Prince William county, Virginia; situated on Quantico Creek, which communicates with Potomac, about 25 miles below Alexandria, and 36 from Washington.

Dunamond, a town of Russia, in the government of Riga. It is situated near the mouth of the Dwina, 15 miles N W of Riga.

Dunbar, a royal borough in Haddingtonshire, seated near the German Ocean. It has a good harbour, formerly defended by a castle. Under the rock, on which the castle stands, are two natural arches through which the tide flows: and between the harbour and the castle is a stratum of vast basaltic columns. Dunbar is remarkable for the defeat of John Baliol's army by earl Warenne, in 1296, and for a victory gained by Cromwell over the Scots, in Dundee, a royal borough in Angusshire, with an excellent harbour. Its situation for commerce is very advantageous. Trading vessels of the largest burden can get into the harbour; and on the quay there are three very convenient and handsome warehouses, built in 1756, as well as good room for ship-building, which is carried on to a large extent. The houses are built of stone, generally three or four stories high. The market-place or high street in the middle of the town is a very spacious oblong square, 350 feet long and 100 feet broad, from whence branch out the four principal streets, which with a number of lesser ones are all paved in the best manner. On the south side of the market-place stands the town-house, an elegant structure, with a very handsome front, piazzas below, and a neat spire over it 140 feet high. This building was finished in the year 1734, and contains the guild-hall, the court room, a very neat mason lodge, the bank, vaulted repositories for the records, and the common prison, which is in the upper story, and does honour to the taste and humanity of the magistrates, under whose auspices it was constructed, being well aired commodious rooms at the same time very strong and secure. Each prison is 20 feet by 12, and 7 feet and a half high, well arched above and below. Dundee, besides St. Andrew's church, has 4 other churches, and five ministers on the legal establishment. The old church, in which were originally four places of worship when entire, had been a very magnificent building, with a large square Gothic tower or steeple 186 feet high, on the west end of the church. This building was in the form of a cross, erected by David Earl of Huntingdon, brother to William I. of Scotland. This he did on his return from the third crusade, anno 1189, in gratitude for his deliverance from several imminent dangers, and particularly from shipwreck, by which he had nearly perished when in sight of this town. The principal and staple manufactures are osenburghs, sail-cloth, of which in 1788 were manufactured to the value of 112,587*l.*; this manufacture has since the commencement of the present war increased to an enormous extent. A manufacture of cotton has likewise been established, which has been carried on with considerable success for some years past. The Dundee coloured threads have been justly esteemed; indeed it was here that coloured threads first made a figure among the articles of trade in Scotland. A sugar-house was also erected here, but has been given up, as likewise a large glass-house, which was carried on for some years. The salmon-fishing in Tay is of much consequence, and the town is generally well supplied with fish of various kinds. The population in 1788 amounted to nearly 20,000, but the inhabitants have increased to 23 or 24000. It is seated on the N side of the Frith of Tay, 12 miles from its mouth, 40 N E of Edinburgh, 22 E of Perth, and 14 N W of St. Andrews. Lon. 2 55 W, lat. 56 30 N.

Dunkeld, a town of Scotland, in the shire of Perth, seated on the N side of the river Tay, in a situation truly romantic, under and among very high, and almost inaccessible crags, part naked, and part wooded. Its romantic situation, and the benefit of drinking goats whey, render this place the resort of much genteel company in summer. It is the market town of the Highlands on that side, and carries on a manufacture of linen. The duke of Athol has a fine seat here, screened by the Grampian mountains. His Grace's seat is a modern building, and not large, with pleasant walks and terraces, and near it is a fine cascade on the water of Bran, which in its way

Dunkirk, a considerable seaport of France, in the department of the North and late French Flanders. It was taken from the Spaniards by the English and French in 1658, and put into the hands of the English, but sold to the French, by Charles II. in 1662. Lewis XIV. made it one of the best fortified ports in the kingdom; but all the vast and expensive works were demolished, and the basins filled up, in consequence of the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713. The French afterward resumed the works; but they were ordered to be demolished by the peace of 1763. By the peace of 1783, the commissary was withdrawn, and the French were left to resume the works. This place was besieged by the English in 1793, but they were forced to retire with loss. It is 22 miles S W of Ostend. Lon. 2 28 E, lat. 51 2 N.

Eddystone, the name of some rocks in the English Channel, which cause variety of contrary sets of the tide or current in their vicinity. They are situate

SSW from the middle of Plymouth Sound, at the distance of 14 miles.

They are almost in the line which joins the Start and the Lizard Points, and their situation with regard to the Bay of Biscay and the Atlantic is such, that they lie open to the swells of the bay and ocean from all the S W points. so that all the heavy seas from the S W break upon Eddystone with the utmost fury. On the principal rock, (for the rest are under water) Mr. Winstanley in 1696, undertook to build a light-house; and he completed it in 1700.
This ingenious mechanic was so certain of the stability of this structure, that he declared it was his wish to be in it during the most tremendous storm. Unfortunately, he had his wish, it was destroyed in the dreadful storm, November 27, 1703, when he perished in it. In 1709, another built of wood, but on a different construction, was erected by Mr. Rudyard, which was consumed by fire in 1755. Another, of stone, was begun by the celebrated Mr.
Smeaton, on April 2, 1757, and finished

August 24, 1759. The rock, which slopes towards the S W, is cut into horizontal steps, into which are dovetailed, and united by a strong cement, Portland stone, and granite. The whole, to the height of 35 feet from the foundation, is a solid bed of stones, engrafted into each other, and united by every means of additional strength.
The building has four rooms, one over the other, and at the top a gallery and lantern. The stone floors are flat above but concave beneath, and are kept from pressing against the sides of the building by a chain, let into the walls. It is nearly 80 feet high, and has been standing 36 years, during which time it has been assaulted by the fury of the elements, without suffering the smallest injury; and, in all probability, nothing but an earthquake can destroy it. Its distance from the Ram Head, the nearest point of land, is 12 miles. Lon. 4 24 W, lat. 50 8 N.

Eden, a river which rises in Westmoreland, on the confines of Yorkshire,

Carolina; situated near the head of Albemarle Sound, 18 miles N by E of Plymouth, on the opposite shore, 22 E of Windsor, and about the same dis-distance from the middle of Plymouth Sound, at the distance of 14 miles.

tance S by W of Hertford. It contains about 1500 inhabitants, and lies in the lat. of $35^{\circ} 53'$ N, and lon. of $77^{\circ} 53'$ W.

Elgartown, a post town of Duke's county, Massachusetts; it is a port of entry, the chief town of the county, and the capital of Martha's Vineyard: situated in the lat. of $41^{\circ} 25'$ N, and lon. of $70^{\circ} 30'$ W.

Edgehill, a village in Warwickshire, where the first battle was fought between Charles I. and the parliament, in 1642. It is 14 miles S of Warwick.

Elgware, a town in Middlesex, with a market on Thursday, eight miles N W of London. Lon. $0^{\circ} 14'$ W, lat. $51^{\circ} 37'$ N.

Elkofen, a town of Germany in the palatinate of the Rhine. A bloody battle was fought here between the Prussians and the French in 1794, which terminated in favour of the French.

Edinburgh, the metropolis of Scotland, situated in a county of the same name. It may properly be divided into the Old and New Towns. The Old Town is situated on a narrow steep hill, about a mile in length, terminated abruptly on the W side by the castle, from which there is a gradual declivity to the palace of Holyrood-house, which is placed in a beautiful plain called St. Ann's Yards. From the level of this plain, and on each side of the ridge or hill on which the Old Town stands, run two narrow vallies, nearly parallel to each other; the southern one forms a street called the Cowgate, the northern continued a marsh till very lately, which was called the North Loch, but is now drained. The high-street which runs between the castle and Holyroodhouse, is long and spacious, and the houses are very high. From this street many narrow lanes or closes run off at right angles, towards the N and S. The castle is seated on a vast perpendicular rock, accessible only by a drawbridge on one side, and in ancient times was considered as almost impregnable. The apartment is still shewn to strangers where the unfortunate Mary brought forth James VI. who afterwards inherited the crowns of England and Scotland. The regalia of Scotland are kept here, in what is called the crown-room. The church of St. Giles, on the high street, is very ancient. It is a fine Gothic structure, and is at present divided into four churches. Near to this stands the parliament-house, now occupied by the courts of session and exchequer. The lofty roof of the great hall, 122 feet by 49, which has been lately repaired and embellished, is much admired. In the square adjoining, is a handsome equestrian statue of Charles II. The Royal Exchange, on the opposite side of the street, is an extensive building, founded in 1753; but not occupied as an Exchange; opposite to which stood the cross. The Tron-Church, founded in 1637, has been lately modernized, and has a neat appearance. The palace of Holyroodhouse forms a grand quadrangle, with a court in the centre surrounded by piazzas: the N W towers were built by James V. and the whole was completed in the reign of Charles II. A spacious gallery here is hung with the pictures of 111 monarchs, from Fergus I. to James VI. the greatest part of them imaginary. In the N W tower is shown the chamber where queen Mary sat at supper, when Rizzio was dragged from her side and murdered, and the private staircase by which Ruthven entered with the assassins to perpetrate the ruthless deed. Adjoining are the magnificent ruins of an abbey, founded by David I. in 1128, and converted by Charles II. into a royal chapel. The New Town is situated on the N side of the Old, on an elevated plain, from which the ground descends to the S and N with a gentle declivity. It forms an assemblage of very elegant and uniform streets and squares; the most remarkable of which are Prince's street, George street, Queen's street, St. Andrew's square, and Charlotte square. The public buildings are the Register Office, a vast pile of modern architecture, uniting elegance and stability; St. Andrew's Church, with an elegant slender spire; the Physician's Hall; the Exchequer Office; and the New Assembly Rooms. The communication between the N and S parts of the city is facilitated by two noble bridges, the N bridge founded by Provost Drummond in 1763; and the S bridge, by provost Hunter Blair, in 1785. Between the Old and New Town, considerably to the westward of the N bridge there is also a communication called the Earthen Mound, an immense pile of earth formed from the rubbish dug out of the foundations of the new houses. There are a number of public buildings in Edinburgh, besides those

&c. The places of public amusement are the Theatre Royal, Concert Hall, Assembly Rooms, and Equestrian Cir-has lately been erected a Bridewell, a very extensive building, on a plan equally elegant and commodious. At Jock's Lodge, to the eastward of the city, an elegant set of barracks, for 400 cavalry, have lately been erected. Edinburgh, with its dependences, is supposed to contain 100,000 inhabitants.

It is supplied with water, conveyed in iron pipes, from Comiston, four miles to the W. It is governed by a lord provost, four bailiffs, and a common council, and sends one member to parliament. It is two miles S of Leith, 54 W N W of Berwick upon Tweed, and 389 N by W of London. Lon. 3 7

Edinburghshire, the principal county in North Britain, both on account of its fertility, and containing the capital.
It is bounded on the E by Hadding-tonshire, on the S E by Berwickshire, on the S by Selkirkshire and Peeblesshire, and part of Lanerkshire; on the W by Linlithgowshire, and on the N by the Frith of Forth; extending about 21 miles in length; and in some places 16 or 17 broad, but in others not above six or seven. It yields corn of all sorts, with plenty of pasture; and is abundantly furnished with all necessaries, particularly coal, stone, limestone, and a sort of black marble; and not far from Edinburgh is a copper mine and stone quarries. Its chief rivers are, the Almond, Leith-water, the Esk, Tyne, and Gallawater, which receive a great variety of other lesser streams, so that few spots are better watered.

Edisto, a post town in Orange county, South Carolina: 577 miles from Washington.

Ednam, a village near Kelso, in Roxburghshire, seated on the Tweed, where Thomson, the author of the seasons, was born.

Efferding, a town of Upper Austria, defended by two castles, eight miles W of Lintz. Lon. 13 52 E, lat. 48 18 N.

Efingham, a village in Surry, once, according to tradition, a populous town, containing 16 churches. It is 12 miles N E of Guildford, and 17 S W of London.

Egg, a fertile little island, one of the Hebrides of Scotland, to the S of Skye.

Egham, a village in Surry, which has two neat almshouses for six men and six women, with a school for the education of 20 boys. Egham is seated near the Thanets, 18 miles W by S of London.

Eglisau, an ancient town of Swisserland, in the canton of Zurich, seated on the Rhine, 13 miles N of Zurich. Lon.
8 30 E, lat. 47 33 N.

Egra, a town of Bohemia, formerly imperial. It was taken by the French in 1742, but they were forced to evacuate it the next year. Its mineral waters are famous. It is seated on the Eger, 90 miles W of Prague. Lon. 12
40 E, lat. 50 9 N.

Egremont, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Saturday. It is seated near the Irish Sea, on the river Eben, over which are two bridges; and on the peak of a hill is a castle.
It sent members to parliament in the reign of Edward I. and is 14 miles S W of Cockermouth, and 299 N W of London. Lon. 3 35 W, lat. 54 32 N.

Egypt, a country of Africa, 600 miles in length, and 250 where broadest; bounded on the N by the Mediterranean, on the S by Nubia, on the E by the Red Sea and the isthmus of Suez, and on the W by the deserts to the E of Fezzan. The broadest part is from Alexandria to Damietta, and thence it gradually grows narrower, till it approaches Nubia. It is divided into the Upper, Middle, and Lower; which last comprehends the Delta; and though the air is naturally hot, and not very wholesome, it enjoys so many other advantages, that it has been always extremely populous. Egypt carried on a considerable trade in East India commodities, till the Portuguese found the way round the Cape of Good Hope. However the merchants of Europe visit the harbours in the Mediterranean, and import and export several sorts of merchandise; and from other parts the natives get elephants teeth, ebony, gold dust, musk, civet, ambergris, and coffee. The gold dust is brought from Negroland, to Fez, and Morocco, and thence to Cairo, over immense deserts. The principal commodities which the merchants purchase are coffee, senna, cassia, rhubarb, sal ammoniac, myrrh, saffron, saltpetre, aloes, opium, indigo, sugar, sandal wood, dates, cotton, cloth, &c.

The complexion of the Egyptians is tawny, and the further S the darker, so that those near Nubia are almost black. They are generally indolent and cowardly: the richer sort do nothing all day but drink coffee, smoke tobacco and sleep; and they are ignorant, proud, haughty, and ridiculously vain. From March to November, the heat, to an European, is almost insupportable; but the other months are more temperate. The S winds are by the natives called poisonous winds, or the hot winds, of the deserts: they are of such extreme heat and aridity, that no animated body exposed to it can withstand its fatal influence. During the three days that it generally lasts, the streets are deserted; and woe to the traveller whom this wind surprises remote from shelter. It rains very seldom in Egypt; but that want is fully supplied by the annual inundation of the Nile. When the waters retire, all the ground is covered with mud; then they only harrow their corn into it, and, in the following March, they have usually a plentiful harvest:
their rice fields are supplied with water from canals and reservoirs.
There is no place in the world better furnished with corn, flesh, fish, sugar, fruits, and all sorts of garden-stuff; and in Lower Egypt are oranges, lemons, figs, dates, almonds, cassia, and plantains, in great plenty. The sands are so subtle that they penetrate into the closets, chests, and cabinets, which, with the hot winds, are probably the cause of sore eyes being so very common here. The animals of Egypt are tigers, hyenas, antelopes, apes, black-cattle, fine horses, large asses, crocodiles, the hippopotamus, the camcleon, and a kind of rat called ichneumon; ostriches, eagles, hawks, pelicans, water fowls of all kinds, and the ibis which resembles a duck, and was deified by the ancient Egyptians, on account of its destroying serpents and noxious insects. Here is a serpent called the cerastes, or horned viper; whose bite is fatal to those who have not the secret of guarding against it; for some of the natives can play with the cerastes, and it will not attempt to bite them; but when applied to a hen, or any other animal, it has instantly bit and killed them. The pyramids of Egypt are noticed by all travellers; the largest takes up ten acres of ground, and is,

as well as the rest, built upon a rock.
Here are also caverns, out of which they get the mummies, or embalmed dead bodies, which are found in coffins, set upright in niches of the walls, and have continued there at least 4000 years; many of these have been brought to England, and were formerly deemed of great use in medicine.
The principal city is Cairo. The ancient kings governed Egypt, till Cambyses became master of it, 525 years B. C. and in their time all these wonderful structures were raised, which we cannot behold without astonishment. These are the pyramids, the labyrinth, the immense grottos of the Thebais; the obelisks, temples, and pompos palaces; the lake Moris, and the vast canals, which served both for trade and to render the land fruitful.
After this conquest Cambyses demolished the temples and persecuted the priests. After his death, this country continued under the Persian yoke till the time of Alexander the Great, who having conquered Persia, built the famous city of Alexandria. He was succeeded by Ptolemy, the son of Lagos, 324 years B. C. Ten kings of that name succeeded each other, till Cleopatra, the sister of the last Ptolemy, ascended the throne; when Egypt became a Roman province, and continued so till the reign of Omar, the second calif of the successors of Mahomet, who drove away the Romans, after it had been in their hands 700 years.
When the power of the califs declined, Saladine set up the empire of the Mam-louks, which became so powerful in time, that they extended their dominions over a great part of Africa, Syria, and Arabia. Egypt was then conquered by Selim, a Turkish emperor, and great numbers of its ancient inhabitants withdrew into the plains.
An attempt was then made to deprive the Ottoman Porte of its authority over Egypt by Ali Bey, who having been for some time extremely fortunate, was at last defeated and killed in 1773.
Egypt has been since torn by civil wars between the adherents of Ali, and other beys or princes, who rose on his ruins. Alternately expelled from Caito a hen, or any other animal, and instantly bit and killed. The pyramids of Egypt are the favourite objects of travellers; the largest is at Giza, and is built on a level of ground, and is a pyramid of rock, built upon a rock. There are also caverns, out of which mummies, or embalmed bodies, are found in coffins, which are found in niches of the walls, and are preserved there at least 4000 years. Many of these have been found in England, and were formerly of great use in medicine. The principal city is Cairo. The ancient name of Egypt, till Cambrage became master of it, 525 years before their time all those monuments were raised, which are now to be beheld without astonishment. These are the pyramids, the obelisks, temples, and statues; the lake Moeris, and the canals, which served both for irrigation and to render the land fruitful. The conquest of Cambrage demolished the temples and persecuted the priests. After his death, this country was under the Persian yoke till Alexander the Great, who conquered Persia, built a city at Alexandria. He was succeeded by Ptolemy, the son of Lagus, 323 years B. C. Ten kings of the Ptolemies succeeded each other, till the death of the last Ptolemy, who was deposed by the sister of the last Ptolemy, Cleopatra, who had the throne; when Egypt became a Roman province, and continued so till the reign of Omar, the successor of Mahomet, who drove away the Romans, after 642 years in their hands. The power of the califs declined, and the empire of the Mamulukes became so powerful in Egypt, that they extended their dominion over a great part of Africa, Syria, and Arabia. Egypt was then conquered by Selim, a Turkish emperor, who drew into the plains. The numbers of its ancient inhabitants were then made to decrease, and the Porte of its authority over Egypt was then made to decrease. Ali Bey, who having been time extremely fortunate, was defeated and killed in 1773. He had been since torn by civil wars, and the adherents of Ali, and his sons or princes, who rose on his death, were alternately expelled from Cairo, they finally agreed to a compromise in 1799. From this period nothing of importance occurs till 1799, when this country was invaded by the French under Bonaparte; they landed at Alexandria, which surrendered to them after a feeble resistance. They then proceeded to Rosetta and Cairo, which they took without much difficulty. They would probably have subdued the whole country, and finally overturned the Turkish empire, had not their progress been arrested at St. John d'Acre, by the gallant Sir Sidney Smith, who defended that inconsiderable place with such invincible courage and skill, that the enemy were compelled after innumerable desperate attacks to abandon the attempt. They were shortly afterwards deserted by their commander, who has returned to France. A treaty has since been entered into by Sir Sidney Smith, which has not met with the approbation of the British government.

Egypten, a town of Poland in the duchy of Courland, 100 miles S E of Mittau. Lon. 26 40 E, lat. 56 2 N.

Eligen, the name of two small towns of Suabia, the one near the Danube, and the other on the Neckar. They belong to the house of Austria. The former is in lon. 9 45 E, lat. 48 18 N. and the latter in lon. 8 45 E, lat. 48 25 N.

Ehrenbreitstein, a very ancient castle, in the electorate of Treves, on the E bank of the Rhine, opposite Coblenz. It stands on the summit of a stupendous rock, not less than 800 feet above the level of the river, and is thought, when supported by a competent garrison, to be impregnable. It has a communication with Coblenz, by subterraneous passages, cut out of the solid rock; and is plentifully supplied with water from a well 280 feet deep. The prospect from this castle is majestic, extensive, and variegated; and the stream at its foot is decorated with two small islands, on each of which is a convent. In the vale of Ehrenbreitstein, is the old palace of the elector. This fortress was besieged by the French, in 1796, above three months; but on the 17th of September, the Austrians compelled them to retreat.

Elephanta, an island on the W coast of the Deccan of Hindoostan, five miles from the castle of Bombay. It contains one of the most inexplicable antiquities in the world. It is about three miles in compass, and consists of almost all hill, at the foot of which as you land you see the figure of an elephant, of the natural size, cut coarsely in stone. An easy slope then leads to the portal of a magnificent temple, hewn out of the solid rock. It is an oblong square, 80 feet long, and 40 broad. The roof which is about 10 feet high, is cut flat, and is supported by regular rows of pillars, with capitals resembling round cushions, as if pressed by the incumbent mountain. At the further end are three gigantic figures, which were mutilated by the absurd zeal of the Portuguese, when this island was in their possession. Elephanta was ceded to the English by the Mahrattas.

Eleuthes, a kingdom of Tartary, lying to the N W of Chinese Tartary. It was conquered in 1759, by the emperor of China. See Kalmucks.

Elgin, the county-town of Murrayshire, pleasantly seated on the river Loos. Here are many large old buildings erected over piazzas. Its cathedral, founded in 1224, was one of the most magnificent Gothic structures in Scotland. Its magnificent ruins sufficiently prove its former grandeur. It is five miles S of Murray Frith, and 37 E of Inverness. Lon. 3 15 W, lat. 57 37 N.

Elsinore, a seaport of Denmark, seated on the Sound, in the isle of Zealand. It is the most commercial place in Denmark, next to Copenhagen; and contains 5000 inhabitants, among whom are a considerable number of foreign merchants, and the consuls of the principal nations trading to the Baltic.

The passage of the Sound is guarded by the castle of Cronborg, situated on the edge of a peninsular promontory, the nearest point of land from the opposite coast of Sweden. Every vessel, as it passes, lowers her top-sails and pays a toll at Elsinore. The constant discharge of the toll, is not so much owing to the strength of the fortress as to compliance with the public law of Europe. All vessels, beside a small duty are rated at one and one fourth per cent. of their cargoes, except the English, French Dutch, and Swedish, which pay only one per cent. and, in return, the crown takes the charge of constructing lighthouses, and erecting signals to mark the shoals and rocks, from the Categate to the entrance into the Baltic. The tolls of the Sound, and of the two Belts, produce an annual revenue of above 100,000*l*. Lon. 13 23 E, lat. 56 0 N. See Cronborg.

Elvas, a strong frontier town of Portugal, in Alentejo, with a castle and bishop's see. The streets are handsome, and the houses well-built. Here is a cistern so large, that it will hold water enough for the town for six months. It is brought by a magnificent aqueduct, three miles in length, which, in some places, is supported by four or five arches, one upon another. On the side of it is a forest of olive-trees, three miles in length, among which are walks and fine fountains. Elvas was bombarded by the French in 1706, to no purpose. A royal academy, for young gentlemen, was founded here in 1733. It is seated on a mountain, near the Guadiana, 50 miles N E of Evora, and 100 E of Lisbon. Lon. 7 3 W, lat. 38 43 N.

Embs, a river of Westphalia, which rises in the county of Lippe, and falls into the Dollart, a bay of the German Ocean, near Embden.

Emessa, a town of Syria, in the government of Damascus. There are still noble ruins, that show it was anciently a magnificent city.

Emmerick, a large city of Germany, in the Dutchy of Cleves. It carries on a considerable trade with Holland, and is seated near the Rhine, eight miles E of Cleves. Lon. 6 4 E, lat. 51 45 N.

Emmitsburg, a post town of Frederick county, Maryland, about 18 miles N W from Timetown, and about 50 in the same direction from Baltimore.

Emou, or Hiamen, an island of China, lying off the coast of the province of Fokien. It is celebrated for its port, which is inclosed, on one side, by the island, and on the other by the main land, and is so extensive, that it can contain many thousands of vessels; and so deep, that the largest ships may lie close to the shore without danger. This island is particularly celebrated on account of the magnificence of its principal pagod, dedicated to their god Fo. Lon. 116 27 E, lat. 24 3 N.

Empoli, a town of Tuscany, with a bishop's see, seated on the Arno, 17 miles S W of Florence. Lon. 11 6 E, lat. 43 42 N.

Enckansen, a seaport of N Holland, on the Zuider-Zee. It was once a flourishing place; but its harbour being obstructed by sand it has lost its former consequence. It is 25 miles N E of Amsterdam. Lon. 5 4 E, lat. 52 45 N.

Endeavour Strait, lies in the S Pacific Ocean, and separates New Guinea from New Holland. Its length is 10 leagues, and its breadth about five, except at the N E entrance, where it is contracted to less than two miles, by the islands called Prince of Wales' Islands. It was explored by Captain Cook in 1770, from whom it received its name.

Ending, a town of Suabia, in Austrian Brigaw, formerly free and imperial. It is seated near the Rhine, 10 miles below Brisach.

Endkioping, a town of Sweden, in Upland, situate on a river, close to an inlet of Lake Maelar. It consists chiefly of wooden houses, which are red. It is 40 miles W of Stockholm. Lon. 16 59 E, lat. 52 45 N.

Enfeld, a town in Middlesex, with a market on Saturday. It was once famous for an extensive royal chase, disforested in 1779. Here was a royal palace, whence Edward VI. went in procession to the Tower, on his accession to the throne, which is now taken down. It is 10 miles N of London. Lon. 0 2 E, lat. 51 41 N.

Engadina, a country of the Grisons, in the mountains of the Alps. It is divided into Upper and Lower, extending along the banks of the river Inn, from its source to the Tirolese. Upper Engadina is a beautiful valley; yet, on account of its elevation, produces nothing but rye and barley. The winter sets in early, and even in summer, the air is cold and piercing, and the corn occasionally much damaged by the hoar-frost.

Engers, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Treves, capital of a county of the same name. It is seated on the Rhine, 11 miles N of Coblentz. Lon. 7 32 E, lat. 50 35 N.

Englien, a town of Austrian Hainault, near which was fought the famous battle of Steenkirk. It is 15 miles S W of Brussels. Lon. 4 5 E, lat. 50 42 N.

Engia, or Engina, an island of Turkey in Europe, in a gulf of the same name, between Livadia and the Morea. There is a town upon it of the same name, 23 miles S of Athens. Lon. 23 59 E, lat. 37 45 N.

England, the south and most considerable part of the island of Great Britain, bounded on the N by Scotland, on the N E and E by the German Ocean, on the S by the English channel, and on the West by St. George's channel, the principality of Wales and the Irish Sea. It is of a triangular form. From the South Foreland in Kent, which may be termed the E point of the triangle, to Berwick upon Tweed, which is the N, its length in a straight line, is 345 miles; from that point to the Land's End, in Cornwall, which is the W, it is 425; and the breadth thence to the South Foreland is 340. the south and most considerable of the Island of Great Britain, bounded on the N by Scotland, on the E and E by the German Sea, on the S by the English channel, and on the West by St. George's channel, the principality of Wales and the Isle of Man. It is of a triangular form. The South Foreland in Kent, is termed the E point of the Island, and is distant from Berwick upon Tweed, 100 N. its length in a straight line is 160 miles; from that point to the E. end, in Cornwall, which is 100 miles, and the breadth of the South Foreland is 340 miles. The country in England, is of a beautiful variety which is not to be found in the most extensive parts of the globe. In some parts, the mountains extend as far as the eye can reach, watered by copious streams, and covered by innumerable cattle. In other parts, the pleasing vicissitudes of gently-rising hills and bending vales, fertile in corn, waving with wood, and interspersed with meadows, offer the most delightful landscapes of rural opulence and beauty. Some tracts abound with prospects of a more romantic kind; lofty mountains, craggy rocks, deep narrow dells, and tumbling torrents. Nor are there wanting, as a contrast to so many agreeable scenes, the gloomy features of black barren moors and wide uncultivated heaths. On the whole, however, few countries have a smaller proportion of land absolutely sterile and incapable of culture. The richest parts are in general the midland and southern. Toward the N. it partakes of the barrenness of the neighbouring Scotland. The E. coast is in many parts sandy and marshy. A range of rude and elevated land, sometimes rising into lofty mountains, extends from the borders of Scotland to the very heart of England, running from N. to S. and forming a natural division between the E. and W. sides of the kingdom. Cornwall is also a rough hilly tract; and a similar character prevails in part of the adjacent counties. These mountainous tracts abound with various mineral treasures. The rivers are numerous; but the comparatively small extent of England will not permit them to vie, in length of course, with the great rivers on the continent. The most considerable of them are the Thames, Severn, Medway, Trent, Ouse, Tyne, Tees, Eden, Avon, Derwent, Dee, Mersey, &c. The lakes are neither numerous nor extensive. They are chiefly in the N W counties; and those of Westmoreland and Cumberland, in particular, exhibit such varieties of beautifully romantic and picturesque scenery, as to have become, for some years past, the fashionable object of summer excursions from the metropolis, and every part of the country. With respect to climate, England is situated on the N part of the temperate zone, so that it enjoys but a scanty share of the genial influence of the sun. Its atmosphere is inclined to chillness and moisture, subject to frequent and sudden changes and is more favourable to the growth, than to the ripening, of the products of the earth. No country is clothed with so beautiful and lasting a verdure: but the harvests, especially in the northern parts, frequently suffer from unseasonable rains; and the fruits often fall short of their perfect maturity. The rigours of winter, however, as well as the parching heats of summer, are felt here in a much less degree than in parallel climates on the continent; a circumstance common to all islands. While the seaports of Holland and Germany are every winter locked up with ice, those of England, and even of Scotland, are never known to suffer this inconvenience. The western side of the kingdom, receiving first the great clouds from the Atlantic Ocean, which are afterward intercepted in their passage by the middle ridge of hills, is considerably more exposed to rain than the eastern; but the latter is more frequently involved in fogs and mists. The whole country, some particular spots excepted, is sufficiently healthy; and the natural longevity of its inhabitants is equal to that of almost any region. All the most valuable productions, both animal and vegetable, of this country, have been imported from the continent, and have been kept up and improved by constant attention. Originally, this great island seems to have been, like the wilds of America, overrun with wood, and peopled only by the inhabitants of the forest. Here formerly roamed the bear, the wolf, and the wild boar, now totally extirpated. Large herds of stags ranged through the woods, roebucks bounded over the hills, and wild bulls grazed in the marshy pastures. By degrees the woods were destroyed, in order to make way for cultivation; the marshes were drained; and the wild animals, invaded in their retreats, gradually disappeared, and their places were supplied by the domestic kinds. England now possesses no other wild quadrupeds than some of the smaller kinds; such as the fox, the wild cat, the badger, the marmot, and others of the weasel kind; the otter, the hedgehog, the hare and rabbit; the squirrel, dormouse, mole, and several species of the rat and mouse. On the other hand, every kind of domestic animal, imported from abroad, has been reared to the greatest degree of perfection. The horses are to be found in England of all sorts and fit for all kinds of service for the saddle, the race, and the carriage, all equally good though of very different natures, some small and hardy, others large and strong; so that asses are but little and mules still less used. The horned cattle have been brought to the largest size and the greatest justness of shape. The different races of sheep in England are variously distinguished, either for uncommon size, goodness of flesh, and plenty or fineness of wool. The deer of our parks, which are originally a foreign breed, are superior in beauty of skin, the delicacy of flesh, to those of most countries. Even the several kinds of dogs have been trained to degrees of courage, strength, and sagacity rarely to be met with elsewhere. The improvement in the vegetable products of this island is not less striking than in the animals. Nuts, acorns, crabs, and a few wild berries, were almost all the variety of vegetable food which our woods could boast. To foreign countries, and to the efforts of culture, we are indebted for our bread, the roots and greens of our tables, and all our garden fruits. The barley and hops for our malt liquors, and apples for our cider, are equally the gifts of other lands. The meanest labourer is now fed with more wholesome and delicate aliments than the petty kings of the country could obtain in its savage and uncultivated state. The rivers and seas of England are stocked with a great variety of fish, which yield a plentiful article of provision to all ranks of people. The river fish are in many parts diminished. But the sea is an inexhaustible source; and every exertion of industry to procure food from thence, is amply repaid. The fisheries, at present, are a great object of attention; and the whole sea-coast is enlivened by numerous inhabitants, who gain their chief subsistence from the deep. The manufactures and commerce of this country are so vast, extensive, and various, that a particular account of them would lead us beyond our limits. In the woollen, cotton, and hardware manufactures, in particular, it has long maintained a pre-eminence; and, though nature has denied it the rich fruits of other countries, yet the manufacture, if it may be so called, of home-made wines, in imitation of all the varieties of the foreign, has been brought to an uncommon degree of perfection. The government of England is a limited monarchy; the legislative power residing in the king, lords, and commons; and the executive in the king, the great officers of state, the judges, and all the inferior gradations of magistracy. The civil division of the country is into circuits, and shires, or counties; these last are subdivided into wapentakes, or hundreds, and parishes. The circuits are six in number, and in each of them, for the most part, two of the judges administer justice twice a year. They are, 1. The Home Circuit, containing the counties of Kent, Surry and Sussex. 2. The Norfolk Circuit, containing the counties of Bucks, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Suffolk, and Norfolk. 3. The Oxford Circuit, containing the counties of Oxford, Berks, Gloucester, Worcester, Monmouth, Hereford, Salop, and Stafford. 4. The Midland Circuit, containing the shires of Warwick, Leicester, Derby, Nottingham, Lincoln, Rutland, and Northampton. 5. The Northern Circuit, containing the counties of York, Durham, Northumberland, Lancaster, Westmoreland, and Cumberland. 6. The Western Circuit, containing Hants, Wilts, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall. Two other counties, Middlesex, and Cheshire, are not included in any circuit. The established religion, as contained in the 39 articles of the Church of England, is Calvinism; but these articles are interpreted, by the clergy in general, according to the more liberal principles of Arminius; and all other religions are tolerated. The ecclesiastical division of England is into two archbishoprics, called the provinces of Canterbury and York. That of Canterbury contains the dioceses of London, Winchester, Bath and Wells, Bristol, Chichester, Ely, Exeter, Gloucester, Hereford, Lichfield, and Coventry, Lincoln, Norwich, Oxford, Peterborough, Rochester, Salisbury, and Worcester, beside the four Welsh bishoprics of St. David, Bangor, Landaff, and St. Asaph. The province of York contains the dioceses of Durham, Chester, and Carlisle, and that of Sodor and Man. Every prelate of the sees enumerated, that of Sodor and Man excepted, has a seat in the house of lords. London is the capital, and the metropolis also of the whole British empire.

 hilly, and in some parts a mountainous country, formed by nature to be inhabited by a hardy race of free, independent republicans. The mountains are comparatively small, running nearly north and south in ridges parallel to each other. Between these ridges flow the great rivers in majestic meanders, receiving the innumerable rivulets and larger streams which proceed from the mountains on each side. It contains subject to the abbot of a Benedictine monastery of the same name, who was under the protection of the cantons of Lucern, Uri, Schweitz, and Underwalden. The romantic scenery of this country has always delighted the traveller, and engaged the attention of the naturalist. Glaciers, of a very great extent, and extremely diversified, are found on the side of very fertile mountains, and exhibit singular points of view. There is abundance of fine black marble, white veined; a vitriolic earth, slate impregnated with vitriol; small crystals, called Swiss diamonds; silver, and vitriol. The abbey is 12

Ephesus, an ancient and celebrated city of Natolia, in that part anciently called Ionia. It is now called Ajasaloue, by the Turks; but of its former splendour there is nothing to be seen but heaps of marble, returned walls, columns, capitals, and pieces of statues. The fortress, which is upon an eminence, seems to be the work of the Greek emperors. The eastern gate has three basso-relievos, taken from some ancient monuments; that in the middle was constructed by the Romans. The most remarkable structure of all, was the Temple of Diana, deemed one of the seven wonders of the world, and which the primitive Christians had converted into a church; but it is now so entirely ruined, that it is no easy matter to find the place where it stood: however, there are some ruins of the walls, and of five or six marble columns, all of a piece, 40 feet in length and seven in diameter. Ephesus is Ephrata, or Tunkerstown, a town of Pennsylvania, in the county of Lancaster. It is the principal settlement of a sect, who are professionally baptists, of German extraction, and first appeared in America in 1719. It is 60 miles W of Philadelphia.

Epinal, a town of France, in the department of the Vosges and late province of Lorraine. It is seated on the Moselle, near the mountains of the Vosges, and is 35 miles S E of Nanci. Lon. 6 0 E,
 lat. 48 9 N.

Epping, a town in Essex, with a market on Friday. Its butter is highly esteemed in London. Epping is seated at the N end of a forest of the same name, 17 miles N N E of London. Lon.

county, New Hampshire, about 20 miles W of Portsmouth, and eight S of Nottingham, with 1120 inhabitants.

Eppingen, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine, with a castle, seated on the Elfat, 20 miles N E of Phillipsburg. Lon. 9 0 E, lat. 49 24 N.

Epsom, a town in Surry, that has, from the number of opulent people residing in and near it, a daily market. It is celebrated for its mineral waters and salts. It is 15 miles S S W of London. Lon. 0 15 W, lat. 51 25 N.

Epsom, a town of New Hampshire, in the county of Rockingham, 34 miles W by N of Portsmouth, and 14 S E of Concord. Here is a post office 556 miles from Washington. The inhabitants at the last enumeration amounted to 1034.

Epsworth, a village of the isle of Ax-holm, in Lincolnshire, nine miles N of Gainsborough. It is the birthplace of John Wesley, one of the founders of the sect of the methodists.

Erfurt, a town of Germany, capital of Upper Thuringia, with a university. It was formerly imperial, but is now subject to the elector of Mentz, and is defended by two strong forts. The principal magistrate is sometimes a protestant and sometimes a papist; but the greatest part of the burghers are protestants. It has three fine libraries, one of which belongs to the papists, another to the university, and a third to the protestant ministers. A fire happened here in 1736, which burnt down 180 houses, and several churches. It is seated on the river Gere, 30 miles E S E of Malhausen. Lon. 11 23 E, lat. 51 0 N.

Eribol, Loch, an arm of the sea, on the N coast of Sutherlandshire, capable of affording a safe retreat to the largest vessels. It receives several streams; particularly that which flows from a lake called Loch Hope.

Ericht, Loch, a large lake in Perthshire, which extends several miles into Inverness-shire. Near this place the unfortunate Prince Charles wandered, after the battle of Culloden, in 1746, lurking in caves, and among rocks. The waters of this lake descend into another, called Loch Rannoch.

Erie, Lake, in North America, lies between 41 and 43° N lat. and 79 and 84° W lon. It is 290 miles long, and 40 in its broadest part. The islands and banks towards its W end are infestated with rattlesnakes, as to render it dangerous to land on them. The lake is covered near the banks of the islands with a large pond lily; the leaves of which are thickly spread on the surface of the water to an extent of many acres; on these, in the summer, lie myriads of watersnakes basking in the sun. It is also infested by the hissing snake, which is 18 inches long, small, and speckled; when approached it flattens itself in a moment, and its spots, which are of various colours, become visibly brighter through rage. This lake, at its N E end, communicates with lake Ontario by the river Niagara.

Erizzo, a town of Macedonia, with a bishop's see, at the bottom of the gulf of Monte Sancto.

Erith, a village in Huntingdonshire, on the Ouse, five miles E N E of St. Ives. Near this place is a piece of antiquity called Belfar's Hill, an artificial mount, generally supposed to be the place where the people took up arms against William the Norman, in 1066, after he had defeated Harold at the battle of Hastings.

Erivan, a city of Asia, in a province of the same name, and capital of Persian Armenia, with an Armenian patriarch. It is defended by a fortress, in which is the governor's palace, and by a castle, on the river Zuengui, near a lake of its own name, which is very deep, and 60 miles in circumference. The Meidan is an open square, 400 paces over, wherein are very fine trees. The baths and caravanseries have likewise their beauties, but the churches of the Christians are small, and half under ground. It is 10½ miles N W of Astrabad. Lon. 44 10 E, lat. 40 20 N.

Erkelens, a town of Westphalia, in the dutchy of Juliers, with a castle seated on the Roer, 10 miles N W of Juliers. Lon. 6 35 E, lat. 51 4 N.

Erzerum, a city of Turkish Armenia, with Armenian and Greek episcopal sees. It is situate between the two sources of the Euphrates, in a beautiful plain, at the foot of a chain of mountains, fruitful in all sorts of corn.
Wood is very scarce, for which reason their fuel is only cow dung. It is surrounded by double walls, defended by square towers. The Turks, who are all janizaries, are about 12,000 in number; but most of them are tradesmen and receive no pay. The Armenians have two churches, the Greeks but one; the latter are mostly brasiers, and live in the suburbs. They drive a great trade here in furs, Persian silks, cottons, calicoes, and drugs. This town is a thoroughfare, and a resting place, for the caravans to the East Indies. It is 104 miles S by E of Trebi-Escorial, a village of Spain, in New Castile, seated on the Guadara, 15 miles N W of Madrid. Here Philip II. built a famous structure, in 1563, in memory of the victory gained over the French near St. Quintin. It is called by the Spaniards the eighth wonder of the world. It consists of a royal palace, a church, a monastery, a college, a library, shops of different artists, apartments for a great number of people, beautiful walks, large alleys, an extensive park, and fine gardens. It stands in a dry barren country, surrounded by rugged mountains; and is built of gray stones, found in the neighbourhood, which was the principal reason of its being erected on such a disagreeable spot. They worked at this structure 22 years, and it cost 6,000,000 of crowns. It is a long square of 280 feet, and four stories high; they reckon 800 pillars, 11,000 square windows, and 14,000 doors.

The most remarkable part is the arched chapel; in which is a magnificent sepulchre, called the Pantheon, being built in imitation of that church at Rome; it is the burying-place of the kings and queens of Spain; and is thought by some to be the most curious piece of architecture in the world.
The fathers belonging to the monastery are 200 in number, and have an income of 40,000 ducats a year. The church is built after the model of St.
Peter's at Rome. Lon. 3 35 W, lat.

dinal Wolsey.

Esli, a river in Dumfriesshire, whicl forms part of the boundary between England and Scotland, and falls into Solway Frith.

Esk, a river in Edinburghshire, formed by the junction of two streams called N and S Esk. They seem to encircle the town of Dalkeith, passing on each side of the eminence on which it stands; and uniting a little below the town, this river enters the Frith of Forth, at Musselburgh.

Esk, North and South, two rivers in the shire of Angus, which rise in the Grampian hills. The former divides the county from Kincardineshire for several miles, and falls into the German Ocean about four miles N of Montrose.
The latter after traversing the whole breadth of the county, falls into the basin on the W of the same town.

Esne, Asne, or Esenay, a large town of Upper Egypt, on the Nile, supposed to be the ancient Syena, but Norden thinks it was Latopolis. It is situated on the edge of a rich country, and shaded by groves of orange trees loaded with fruits and flowers. In the middle of it is an ancient temple, with walls on three sides, and in the front 24 columns, very well preserved; within it are three stories of hieroglyphics, of men about three feet high; and the ceiling is adorned with all sorts of animals, painted in beautiful colours. On the N side of the town is another temple, with pillars somewhat of the Corinthian order; the whole building is richly carved with hieroglyphics, particularly with crocodiles heads, and whole crocodiles, that probably this animal was worshipped here. A mile to the S is the monastery of St. Helen, by whom some say it was founded: it now appears to have been a large burying-ground, and there are many magnificent tombs in it. Esne lies near the grand cataract of the Nile. Lon. 31 40 E, lat. 24 46 N.

Esquimaux, a people of North America, chiefly inhabiting Labrador. They have no fixed abode, but rove from place to place, and sometimes come as far S as Newfoundland. They are of a different race from the other native Americans; for, as they have no beads, these have them so thick and large, that it is difficult to discover any feature of their faces. They are always well clothed, for there is nothing to be seen but part of their faces and their hands. They have a sort of shirt, made of the guts of fish, with a coat of bear or birds skins, and a cap on their head. They have likewise breeches made of skins, with the hair within, and covered with furs without. They have also two pair of boots, one over another, of the same sort of skins.

In summer, they have nothing to cover them in the night; and in winter they lodge together promiscuously in caves. The dress of the women is nearly the same as that of the men. As for murder which is so common among all the tribes of southern Indians, it is seldom heard of among them. A murderer is shunned and detested by all the tribe, and is forsaken even by his relations and former friends. The women perform the most laborious offices; they pitch the tents, carry or haul burdens, make or mend clothes, and cook the victuals. When any thing is prepared for eating, the wives and daughters of the greatest captain in the country are never served, till all the males, even those in the capacity of servants have eaten what they think proper.

Esseck, a trading town of Sclavonia, with a strong castle. It has a bridge over the marshes, 8665 geometrical paces in length and 15 in breadth, with towers at a quarter of a mile distant from each other, and handsomely railed on each side. It is a difficult pass, and there have been several battles fought here between the Turks and Germans. There are trees in all the streets of the town, which was taken from the Turks in 1687, since which time it has continued in the hands of the house of Austria. It is seated on the river Drave, 80 miles W by N of Belgrade, and 175 S by E of Vienna. Lon. 19 58 E, lat. 45 40 N.

county is in the diocese of London, and gives the title of Earl to the family of Capel. It is divided into 19 hundreds, and contains 27 market towns, and 100 villages, with about 34,800 houses, and 208,000 inhabitants. Its S W part is occupied principally by the two forests of Epping and Hainault: and is noted for its butter, which is sold at a high price in London, under the name of Epping-butter. About Saffron Walden, the earth, after bearing saffron three years, it is said, will produce good barley for 18 years successively without any manure. Its produce, which is very plentiful, consists of corn, most excellent saffron, cattle, fowl, fish, and particularly oysters. The chief manufactures of this county are cloth, stuffs, and particularly baize. The middle part is a fine corn country, varied with gentle inequalities of surface, and sprinkled with woods. The air in the inland part is healthy; but in the marshes near the sea it produces agues, particularly in the part called the Hundreds. However their fertility is very great, and even the higher grounds in this county are very fruitful. The principal rivers are the Thames, Blackwater, Cohn, Chelmer, Stour, Crouch, and Roding. Beside vast quantities of corn of all kinds, abundance of calves are sent to the London market; also wild fowls, and oysters. The chief manufacture is bays, but that is not so flourishing as formerly. Chelmsford is the county town.

the Russian empire, bounded on the W by the Baltic, on the N by the gulf of Finland, on the E by Ingria, and on the S by Livonia. After having been long an object of bloody contention between the Russians, Poles, and Swedes, it was confirmed to the latter by the peace of Oliva in 1660; but it was subdued by Peter the Great, in 1710, and finally ceded to Russia in 1721.

Esthwaite Water, a lake in Lancashire, between Hawkshead and Windermere Water. It is two miles and a half in length, and half a mile broad, intersected by a peninsula from each side, jutting far into the lake. Its banks are adorned with villages and scattered houses, and clothed with delightful verdure.

Estramadura, a province of Spain, 175 miles in length, and 100 in breadth; bounded on the N by Leon and Old Castile, on the E by New Castile, on the S by Andalusia, and on the W by Portugal. It abounds with corn, wine, and fruits; but the air is bad for foreigners, on account of the excessive heat. It now makes a part of New Castile.

Estramadura, a province of Portugal, lying about the mouth of the Tajo; bounded on the N by Beira, on the E and S by Alentejo, and on the W by the Atlantic Ocean. It abounds with wine, excellent oil, honey, and oranges. Here the oranges were first planted that were brought from China, and which are known by the name of China oranges. Lisbon is the capital.

Estremos, a town of Portugal in Alentejo, divided into the upper town and the lower. The upper is commanded by a citadel, on the top of a hill, strongly fortified and surrounded by a large ditch. The houses are white, and the principal are adorned with fine marble pillars: here is also a tower of marble, finely polished. The lower town is the newest, and has a large square, in the middle of which is a basin. An earthen ware is made here, greatly esteemed for its beauty and fine smell. The Portuguese gained a complete victory over don John of Austria, near this place, in 1663. It is seated on the river Terra, which falls into the Tajo, 15 miles W of Ba-Ethiopia, a name by which a vast region of Africa, has been distinguished by some geographers, who have divided it into Upper and Lower Ethiopia. The first includes the central part of Africa, under the equinoctial line. The second contains what is now called Nigritia or Negroland. As each country will be described in its proper place, it is unnecessary further to lengthen this article.

Etienne, St. a city of France, in the department of Rhone and Loire and late province of Forez, remarkable for its manufactures in iron and steel, for the tempering of which, the water of the brook Eurens, on which it is seated is extremely good. It carries on likewise a considerable manufacture of ribbands. Coal is found in its neighbourhood, and also a soft stone fit for grindstones. Its merchandise is conveyed to Paris, Nantes, and Dunkirk, by the Loire, which begins to be navigable for small barges at St. Lambers. St. Etienne is 22 miles S E of Fuers, and 250 S by E of Paris. travellers vary greatly in their accounts both of its height and circumference. This mountains famous from the remotest antiquity, both for its bulk and terrible eruptions, stands in the eastern part of the island, in a very extensive plain. This single mountain affords an epitome of the different climates throughout the whole world: towards the foot it is very hot; farther up, more temperate; and grows gradually more and more cold the higher we ascend. At the very top, it is perpetually covered with snow; from thence the whole island is supplied with that article so necessary in a hot climate. Great quantities of snow and ice are likewise exported to Malta and Italy, making a considerable branch of commerce. In the middle of the snowy regions stands the great crater, or mouth of Etna. It is a little mountain about a quarter of a mile perpendicular, and very steep, situated in the middle of a gently inclining plain, of about nine miles in circumference. It is entirely formed of stones and ashes; which as Mr. Hamilton was informed by several people of Catania, had been thrown up 25 or 30 years before the time (1769) he visited Mount Etna. In the middle of the little mountain is a hollow, about 20 miles and a half in circumference. It goes shelving down, from the top, like an inverted cone. In the middle of this funnel is the tremendous and unfathomable gulph, so much celebrated in all ages. From this gulph continually issue terrible and confused noises, which in eruptions are increased to such a degree as to be heard at a prodigious distance. The first eruption of Etna, on record, is that mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, without fixing the period when it happened; but the second, recorded by Thucydides, was in the year 734 B C. From this period to the year 1447, there were 18 more eruptions. After this it ceased to emit fire near 90 years. The next was in 1536; others followed in 1537, 1567, 1603 (which continued till, 1636), 1664 (which continued 14 years) 1682, 1686, 1693, 1755, 1763, 1764, 1766, 1780, 1787, and 1794. Of all its eruptions, that of 1663 was the most terrible; it was attended with an earthquake that overturned the town of Catania; and buried 18,000 persons in its ruins. It is 10 miles W of Catania.

At the very top, it is perpetual snow; from thence the snow is supplied with that necessary in a hot climate. The mountains of snow and ice are transported to Malta and Italy, in considerable branches of commerce. In the middle of the snowy mountain stands the great crater, or crater. It is a little mountain of a mile perpendicularity steep, situated in the middle of a gently inclining plain, of 20 miles in circumference. It is formed of stones and ashes; the first eruption was in the reign of King Charles II. The principal trade is in serges and lace. It is seated in a valley, on the river Brele, 15 miles N E of Dieppe. Lon. 1 30 E, lat. 50 3 N.

Evieux, a town of France in the department of Creuse and late province of Marche, 20 miles from Mount Lacaen. Lon. 2 35 E, lat. 46 13 N.

Evesham, a borough in Worcestershire, with a market on Monday. It has a manufacture of stockings, is governed by a mayor and sends two members to parliament. It is seated on a gradual ascent from the Avon, which almost surrounds it, and over which is a stone bridge. It was formerly noted for its abbey, and still contains three parish churches. It gives name to an adjacent vale, remarkable for producing plenty of corn. It is 14 miles S E of Worcester, and 95 N W of London. Lon. 1 45 W, lat. 52 4 N.

Engubio, an episcopal town of Italy,

Eton, a town of Bucks seated on the Thames, over which is a bridge to Windsor. It is famous for a school and college; founded by Henry VI; and King's college in Cambridge admits no other students for fellows but what have been brought up here. It is 20 miles W of London. Lon. 0 36 W, lat. 50 30 N.

Etruria, a village in Staffordshire, near Newcastle. It is the principal seat of the potteries in this county, and here the most elegant vases of every use and form are made.

Etrick, a river in Selkirkshire, which rises from the mountainous region in the S W, and having formed a junction with the Yarrow, their united streams meet the Tweed, where that river enters Roxburghshire. From the woods, formerly on the banks of this river, the county obtained the name of Etrick Forest. Etrick Banks are the subject of a pastoral Scotch ditty.

Eu, a seaport of France, in the department of Lower Seine and late province of Normandy, with a strong castle, and a handsome square. The principal trade is in serges and lace. It is seated in a valley, on the river Brele, 15 miles N E of Dieppe. Lon. 1 30 E, lat. 50 3 N.

Evieux, a town of France in the department of Creuse and late province of Marche, 20 miles from Mount Lacaen. Lon. 2 35 E, lat. 46 13 N.

Evoli, an ancient town of Naples, in Principato Citeriore, 12 miles E of Salerno. Lon. 15 16 E, lat. 40 46 N.

Evora, a fortified town of Portugal, capital of Alentejo, with an archbishop's see, and a university. It is seated in a country, which, though a little unequal, is very pleasant, surrounded on all sides by mountains, and planted with large trees of divers sorts. It is 65 miles E by S of Lisbon. Lon. 7 30 W, lat. 38 28 N.

Euphemia, a seaport of Naples, in Calabria Ulteriore, seated on a bay, 50 miles N E of Reggio. Lon. 16 32 E, lat. 38 44 N.

Euphrates, one of the most celebrated rivers in the world, and the principal of Turkey in Asia. It has its rise near Erzerum, in Armenia, from two sources that lie to the eastward, on high mountains covered with snow almost the year round. The plain of Erzerum is inclosed between these two fine streams, which, when united, are called the Euphrates, or the Frat. After this junction it begins to be navigable for boats; but the channel is so rocky, that the navigation is not safe. It first divides Armenia from Natolia, then Syria from Diarbeck; after which it runs through Irac-Arabia, and receives the Tigris on the confines of the Persian province of Kusistan: it then waters Bussarah, and 40 miles S E of it enters the gulf of Persia. It is also the N E boundary of the great desert of Arabia.

Eure, a department of France, which includes part of the late province of Normandy.

Eure and Loire, a department of France, so called from the rivers of that name. It contains the late province of Beauce, and its capital is Chartres.

Evreux, an ancient town of France, seated in the department of Eure. It is the capital of the department, and its cathedral is a handsome structure. The trade consists in corn, linen, and woollen cloth; and it has a manufacture of cotton velvets, and another of tick. It is seated on the river Iton, Europe, one of the four general parts of the world, bounded on the N by the Frozen Ocean, on the S by the Mediterranean, on the W by the Atlantic and Northern Ocean, and on the E by Asia. From Cape St. Vincent to the mouth of the Ob, it is near 3,600 miles in length; and from Cape Matapan in the Morca, to the North cape in Lapland, about 2,200 in breadth. It is much less than either Asia or Africa, but surpasses them in many particulars. It is entirely within the temperate zone, except a small part of Norway and Russia; so that there is neither the excessive heat, nor the insupportable cold, of the other parts of the continent. It is much more populous, and better cultivated, than either Asia, or Africa; is fuller of villages, towns, and cities, and the buildings are stronger, more elegant and commodious. The inhabitants are all white, and, for the most part, much better made than the Africans, or even the Asiatics. With regard to arts and sciences, there is no manner of comparison; nor yet in trade, navigation, and war. Europe contains Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Great Britain, Ireland, France, Germany, Prussia, Poland, Spain, Italy, Portugal, Hungary, Switzerland, and part of Russia and Turkey, beside several islands in the Mediterranean, and elsewhere. The languages are the Italian, French, Spanish, and Portuguese, which are dialects of the Latin: the German Flemish, Dutch, Swedish, Danish, and English, which proceed from the Teutonic: the Sclavonian, which reigns (though in disguise) in Poland, Russia, Bohemia, and a great part of Turkey in Europe: the Celtic, of which there are dialects in Wales, the Highlands of Scotland, Ireland, Bretagne in France, and Lapland: the modern Greek, and several others. The principal rivers are the Danube, Dnieper, Dnieper, Vistula, Volga, Dwina, Bog, Oby, Don, Scheld, Rhine, Rhone, Seine, Loire, Garonne, Groyne, Tajo, Thames, and Severn. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lausanne, Wener, Ladoga, and Onega. The chief mountains are the Alps, Appennines, and Pyrenees. The prevailing religion is the Christian, divided into the Greek, Romish, and Protestant churches. There are also Jews in every country, and Mahometanism is the established religion of the Turks.

Eustatia, St. one of the smallest of the Leeward Islands in the West Indies. It is a mountain in the form of a sugar-loaf, whose top is hollow, and lies to the NW of St. Christopher. It was taken from the Dutch by the English in 1781; but was afterwards taken by the French and restored to the Dutch in 1783. Lon. 63 10 W, lat. 17 29 N.

Eutin, a town of Holstein, with a castle, where the bishop of Lubec resides. It is seven miles from Lubec.

Ewell, a town in Surry, with a market on Thursday, seated on a rivulet which empties itself into the Thames, at Kingston. It is 10 miles N N E of Darking, and 13 S S E of London. Lon. 0 15 W, lat. 51 26 N.

Ex, a river, which rises in the forest of Exmoor, in Somersetshire, and after being joined by several little streams leaves that county, below Dulverton, and runs to Tiverton, Exeter, and Topsham, from whence it forms an estuary, which terminates in the English Channel, at Exmouth, after a course of 40 miles.

Exeter, the capital city of Devonshire, situated on the river Ex, 10 miles N of the British channel. It is large, populous, and wealthy, with gates, walls, and suburbs; the circumference of the whole is about three miles. It is the see of a bishop, transferred hither from Crediton, by Edward the Confessor; and is one of the principal cities in the kingdom for its buildings, wealth, and number of its inhabitants. It had six gates, besides many turrets, several of which are now pulled down. Besides chapels and five large meeting-houses, there are now 15 churches within the walls, and four without. St. Peter's, the cathedral, is a magnificent pile; though little now remains of the ancient fabric of the church, except that part which is called Our Lady's Chapel. A most beautiful modern painted glass window has been lately erected at the western end of the cathedral, the eastern end having before a remarkable fine antique one. In the other windows there is much fine ancient painted glass. The altar is remarkable for its beautiful design and execution. The grand western end of the church is most magnificently adorned with the statues of the patriarchs, &c. The Chapter-house was built in 1439. The beautiful throne for the bishop was constructed about 1476, and is said to be the grandest of the kind in Britain. Ships of burden formerly came up to this city; but the navigation was almost destroyed by Henry Courtney, earl of Devon, and though repaired, could not be restored to its former state. Its port, therefore, is at Topsham, five miles below. It has 13 companies of tradesmen, a manufacture of serges and other woollen goods, an extensive foreign and domestic commerce, and a share in the fisheries of Newfoundland and Greenland. It is governed by a mayor, sends two members to parliament, and is 68 miles S W of Bristol, and 173 W by S of London. Lon. 3 33 W, lat. 50 44 N.

Exeter, a town of North Carolina, on the NE branch of Cape Fear River, 30 miles N of Wilmington.

Exeter, an ancient town in Rockingham county, New Hampshire, settled as early as 1637. It is a post town, and seaport, next in importance to Portsmouth, and lies in the lat. of 43° N and lon. of 71 W.—This town is famous in the annals of New England, as the asylum of the Rev. John Wheelwright, when he was disfranchised and banished by the government of Massachusetts for his religious opinions.

Exilles, a strong fort of France, now in the department of the Upper Alps, lately in the province of Dauphiny. It was taken by the duke of Savoy in 1708, but restored by the treaty of Utrecht. It is an important passage, six miles W of Suza, and 40 N E of Embrun.

Exmoor, a forest in Somersetshire, in the N W corner of that county, extending thence into Devonshire.

Exmouth, a village in Devonshire, on the E side of the bay which forms the mouth of the river Ex, 10 miles S by E of Exeter. It is much frequented for the benefit of sea-bathing.

Eye, a borough in Suffolk, with a market on Saturday. It sends two members to parliament, and has the ruins of a castle and a Benedictine abbey. It is a mean built place, with narrow streets; the chief manufacture is bonelace and spinning. It is 20 miles N of Ipswich, and 91 N E of London. Lon. 1 10 E, lat. 52 20 N.

F A I

Eye, a river, which rises in the N W of Berwickshire, and falls into the British Ocean at Eyemouth.

Eyemouth, a seaport in Berwickshire at the mouth of the Eye, formerly fortified to curb the garrison of Berwick from which it is distant nine miles. Lon. 1 50 W, lat. 55 51 N.

Eyesdale, a small island on the coast of Argyleshire, to the S E of Mull. It is noted for its slate quarries.

Eyndhoven, a town of Dutch Brabant, in the district of Bois-le-Duc, at the confluence of the Eyns and Dommel, 13 miles S E of Bois-le-Duc. Lon. 5 26 E, lat. 51 31 N.

Eysach, a river of the bishopric of Brixen, which waters the town of that name, and falls into the Adige below Meran.

F

FAABORG, a seaport of Denmark, on the S coast of the island of Funen. Lon. 10 16 E, lat. 55 12 N.

Fabriano, a town of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, famous for its good paper. It is 25 miles N E of Foligni. Lon. 12 32 E, lat. 43 10 N.

Faenza, an ancient town of Italy, in Romagna, with a bishop's see. It is famous for fine earthen ware, invented here; and is seated on the river Amona, 12 miles S W of Ravenna.

Fahlun, a town of Sweden, capital of Dalecarlia, situate in the midst of rocks and hills, between the lakes of Run and Warpen. It contains two churches, and (including the miners) 7000 inhabitants, whose houses are generally of wood, two stories high. It is chiefly celebrated for its copper mine, which is on the E side of the town. It is 39 miles N W of Hedemora. Lon. 16 42 E, lat. 60 34 N.

Fairfax, a post town of Franklin county, Vermont; situated about nine miles eastward from lake Champlain, and containing about 800 inhabitants.

Fairfield, a town of Connecticut, seated near the Sea, 100 miles S W of Boston. Lon. 73 30 W, lat. 41 12 N.

Fairfield, a town of Vermont, near the borders of Canada; situated in Franklin county, about 10 miles to the E of lake Champlain. Here is a post-office 573 miles from Washington.

Fairfield, the principal town of Fairfield county, Connecticut, lying about 20 miles S W of New Haven, in the lat. of $41^{\circ} 10' N$ and $73^{\circ} W$.

Fairford, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Thursday. The church has 28 large windows, curiously painted with scripture histories, in beautiful colours, and designed by the famous Albert Durer. It is seated on the Coln, 25 miles S E of Gloucester, and 80 W by N of London. Lon. $1^{\circ} 44' W$, lat. $51^{\circ} 40' N$.

Fairhaven, a post town of Vermont, in Rutland county, 18 miles W of Rutland, and 50 N of Bennington, with about 450 inhabitants.

Fair Isle, an island of the Northern Ocean, between Shetland and Orkney, from both which its high towering rocks are visible. On the E side, the duke of Medina Sidonia, admiral of the Spanish armada, was wrecked in 1588.

Fairtoosh, a small village in Rosshire, Scotland, the proprietor of which had formerly the privilege of distilling malt spirits free of duty.

Faisans, an island in the river Bidassoa, which separates France from Spain. It is also called the isle of Conference, because Lewis XIV. and Philip IV. here swore to observe the peace of the Pyrenees, in 1660, after 24 conferences between their ministers. Here also the hostages of France and Spain are received and delivered; this being a neutral island, the sole dominion of which can be claimed by neither kingdom. It is situate between Andaye and Fontarabia. Lon. $1^{\circ} 46' W$, lat. $43^{\circ} 20' N$.

Fakenham, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Thursday, situate on a hill, 20 miles N W of Norwich, and 110 N N E of London. Lon. $0^{\circ} 58' E$, lat. $52^{\circ} 53' N$.

Falaise, a town of France, in the department of Calvados and late province of Normandy, with a castle, and one of the finest towers in France. It is remarkable for being the birthplace of William the Conqueror. It has a good trade in serges, linen, and lace; and its fair, which begins on August 16, is the most famous in France, next to that of Beaucaire. It is seated on the river Ante, 20 miles S E of Caen, and 115 W of Paris. Lon. $0^{\circ} 2' W$, lat. $48^{\circ} 35' N$.

Falkirk, a town in Stirlingshire, remarkable for a battle gained by Edward I. over the Scots in 1298, and where the highlanders in 1746 defeated the king's forces. It is chiefly supported by the great markets for Highland cattle, called Trysts, which are held in its neighbourhood thrice a year: 15,000 head of cattle are sometimes sold at one tryst, which for the most part, are sent to England. It is nine miles S of Stirling. Lon. $4^{\circ} 58' W$, lat. $55^{\circ} 57' N$.

Falkland, a small town in Fifeshire, made a royal borough by James II. in 1458. It is situated at the foot of one of the beautiful green hills called the Lomonds. Here is a royal palace whose magnificent ruins evince its former elegance. Falkland has some linen manufacture, but its inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. It is 20 miles N of Edinburgh. Lon. $3^{\circ} 7' W$, lat. $56^{\circ} 18' N$.

Falkland Islands, near the straits of Magellan, in S America, discovered by sir Richard Hawkins, in 1594. In 1764, commodore Byron was sent by lord Egmond to take possession of them, and he made a settlement on a part which he called Port Egmont. Though this was then thought to be a very valuable possession, yet it was totally deserted by the English in 1774, owing to some applications by the Spanish court. In 1770, the Spaniards forcibly dispossessed the English, which produced an armament on the part of the British court; but the affair was settled by a convention, and the English regained possession: however, in 1774, it was abandoned. Lon. $69^{\circ} W$, lat. $52^{\circ} S$.

Falmouth, a corporate town and seaport in Cornwall, situated where the river Fale runs into the English channel. The harbour is so extensive and commodious that ships of the greatest burden come up to the quay. It is guarded by the castle of Maires and

Farnham, a town in Surry, with a market on Thursday. It has a castle, situated on an eminence, where the bishop of Winchester usually resides.
It is one of the greatest wheat markets in England. It is famous for hops, of which there are many plantations round the town. It is seated on the Wye, 12 miles W of Guildford, and 39 W S W of London. Lon. 0 46 W,
lat. 51 16 N.

Farnham, a post town in Richmond, Virginia, distant 159 miles S from the city of Washington.

Farn Islands, two groups of little islands and rocks, 17 in number, lying opposite to Bamborough castle in Northumberland. At low water the points of several others are visible besides the 17 just mentioned. The largest or House island is about one mile in compass, and has a fort and lighthouse.
It contains about six or seven acres of rich pasture; and the shore abounds with good coals which are dug at the ebb of tide.

F A Y

Femeren, a fertile island of Denmark, in the Baltic, three miles from the coast of Holstein.

Fenestrelle, a town and fort of Piedmont, in the valley of the Vaudois. It was taken by the duke of Savoy, from the French, in 1708, and ceded to him by the treaty of Utrecht. It is 18 miles W of Turin. Lon. 7 21 E, lat. 45 10 N.

Ferabad, a town of Persia, in the province of Mazanderan, seated among the mountains which bound the Caspian Sea to the S, and 12 miles from it. Shah Abbas often spent his winters here. It is 130 miles W of Astrabad. Lon. 53 21 E, lat. 37 14 N.

Ferabad, a town of Persia, two miles from Ispahan, and extending almost three miles along the banks of the Zenderoad. It was built by Shah Abbas, who brought the Armenians here from the preceding town, after they had revolted from the Turks.

Fere, a town of France, in the department of Aisne, and late province of Picardy, famous for its powder-mill, and school of artillery. Near this town is the castle of St. Gobin, famous for its manufacture of fine plate glass. Fere is seated at the confluence of the Serre and Oise, 20 miles N of Soissons and 75 N E of Paris. Lon. 3 25 E, lat. 49 29 N.

Ferentino, or Fiorento, an episcopal town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma, seated on a mountain, 44 miles S E of Rome. Lon. 13 27 E, lat. 41 46 N.

E by Tyrone and Monaghan, on the S by Cavan and Leitrim, and on the W by Leitrim. It contains 19 parishes, and before the Irish Union sent four members to the Irish parliament. Iniskilling is the capital.

Fermo, an ancient town of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, with an archbishop's see. It is seated near the gulf of Venice, 17 miles S E of Macerata. Lon. 13 30 E, lat. 43 7 N.

Fernando, Noronha, an island near the coast of Brasil, subject to the Portuguese. Lon. 32 33 W, lat. 3 56 S.

Fernando Po, an island of Africa, 25 miles W of the coast of Benin. It is 30 miles long, and 20 broad. Lon. 3 3 E, lat. 3 6 N.

Ferrara, a city of Italy, capital of a dutchy of the same name. It is seated in an agreeable and fertile plain, watered by the river Po, which is a defence on one side; and on the other is encompassed by a strong wall and deep broad ditches full of water, as well as by a good citadel, finished by pope Paul. In the middle of the city is a magnificent castle, which was formerly the palace of the dukes, and is not now the least ornament of Ferrara. It is quite surrounded with water; and the arsenal, which is near it, deserves the observation of travellers. Over against the palace is the duke's garden; with a park, called Belvidere, on account of its beauty. Behind the garden there is a palace, built with white marble, called the Palace of Diamonds, because all the stones are cut diamond fashion. Ferrara had formerly a considerable trade; but it is now almost deserted, being very poor, insomuch that there is hardly a person to be seen in the streets. The country about it is so marshy, that a shower or two of rain renders the roads impassable. Ferrara was taken by the French in 1796. It is 24 miles N E of Bologna, 38 N W of Ravenna, 70 N by W of Florence, and 190 N of Rome. Lon. 12 14 E, lat. 44 36 N.

Ferrara, the dutchy of; a province in the pope's territory, bounded on the N by the state of Venice, on the W by the dutchies of Mantua and Mirandola, on the S by the Bolognese and by Romania, of which it was formerly a part, and on the E by the gulf of Venice. It is 50 miles in length, and 43 in breadth along the coast; but grows narrower and narrower towards the Mantuan. This country is almost surrounded by the branches of the Po, which often overflow the country, and form the great morass of Comachia, which has a bad effect on the air. It is thin of people, and indifferently cultivated, though fit for corn, pulse and hemp. The Po and the lake of Comachio yield a large quantity of fish. Ferrara is the capital town; besides which there are Arano, Comachio, Magnavacca, Beltriguardo, Cento, Buendeno, and Ficherola.

Ferrendina, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, near the river Basianto, 25 miles S W of Matera. Lon. 16 34 E, lat. 40 40 N.

Ferro, the most westerly of the Canary Islands, near the African coast, where the first meridian was lately fixed in most maps. It is a dry and barren spot, affording no water except what is supplied by the fountain-tree, which distils waters from its leaves in such plenty, as to answer all the purposes of the inhabitants. Lon. 17 46 W, lat. 27 47 N.

Ferro, Faro, or Feroe Islands, a cluster of little islands, lying in the Northern Ocean, between 61° and 63° N lat. and between 5° and 8° W lon. They belong to Denmark. There are 17 which are habitable; each of which is a lofty mountain arising out of the waves, divided from the others by deep and rapid currents. Some of them are deeply indented with secure harbours; all are very steep, and most of them faced with most tremendous precipices. The surface of the mountains consists of a shallow soil of remarkable fertility; for barley, the only corn sown here, yields about 20 for one; and the grass affords abundant pasture for sheep. The exports are, salted mutton, and tallow, goose-quills, feathers, and eider-down, and by the industry of the inhabitants, knit woolen waistcoats, caps, and stockings. No trees beyond the size of juniper or stunted willows will grow here; nor are any wild quadrupeds to be met with except rats or mice, originally escaped from the shipping. Vast quantities of sea-fowl frequent the rocks; and the taking of them furnishes a very perilous employment to the natives. Among the numerous whirlpools of these seas, that of Suderoc, near the island of the same name, is the most noted. It is occasioned by a crater 61 fathoms in depth in the centre, and from 30 to 55 on the sides. The water forms four fierce circulations. The danger at most times, especially in storms, is very great. Ships are irresistibly drawn in; the rudder loses its power; and the waves beat as high as the masts; so that an escape is almost miraculous; yet at the reflux, and in very still weather, the inhabitants will venture in boats for the sake of fishing.

Ferrol, a seaport of Spain, in Galicia, on a bay of the Atlantic. Its harbour is one of the best in Europe, for the vessels lie safe from all winds; and here the Spanish squadrons frequently rendezvous in time of war. It is 90 miles NE of Corunna, and 65 W of Rivades. Lon. 8 4 W, lat. 43 30 N.

Ferrie-Alais, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise and late province of the Isle of France, 18 miles S of Paris. Lon. 2 27 E, lat. 48 30 N.

Ferte-Bernard, a town of France, in the department of Sarthe and late province of Maine, seated on the Huise, 20 miles NE of Mans. Lon. 0 39 E, lat. 48 8 N.

Feversham, a seaport in Kent, on a creek of the Medway, much frequented by small vessels. It is a member of the port of Dover, and governed by a mayor. It has a market on Wednesday and Saturday; and has several gunpowder mills in its neighbourhood. The London markets are supplied from hence with abundance of apples and cherries, and the best oysters for stewing. It is a populous flourishing place, consisting chiefly of two long broad streets, with a market-house in the centre. Here are the remains of a stately abbey, built by king Stephen; and here James II. attempted to embark, but was stopped by the populace. Feversham is nine miles W of Canterbury, and 48 E by S of London. Lon. 0 55 E, lat. 51 22 N.

Fuers, an ancient town of France, in the department of Rhone and Loire and late province of Forez, seated on the Loire, 23 miles S W of Lyons.

Fez, a kingdom of Barbary, 125 miles in length and breadth; bounded on the W by the Atlantic Ocean, on the N by the Mediterranean Sea, on the E by Algiers, and on the S by Morocco and Tafilet. The air is temperate and wholesome, and the country full of mountains, particularly to the W and S, where mount Atlas lies; but it is po-

Fez, the capital of the kingdom of Fez, and one of the largest cities in Africa. It is composed of three towns, called Beleyde, Old Fez, and New Fez. Old Fez is the most considerable, and contains about 80,000 inhabitants. The palaces are magnificent, and there are 700 mosques, 50 of which are very considerable, adorned with marble pillars and other ornaments.
The houses are built of brick or stone, and adorned with mosaic work; those of brick are ornamented with glazing and colours, like Dutch tiles, and the wood-work and ceilings are carved, painted, and gilt. The roofs are flat, and they sleep thereon in the summer.
There is a court to every house, in which are square marble basons. Here are two colleges for students, finely built of marble and adorned with paintings; one of these has 100 rooms, and the sides are adorned with marble pillars of various colours, whose capitals are gilt, and the roof glitters with gold, azure, and purple. Here are many hospitals, and above 100 public baths, many of which are stately structures.
All the trades live in a separate part of the city; and the exchange, full of all sorts of rich merchandise, is as large as a small town. The gardens are beautiful, and full of all kinds of fragrant flowers and shrubs, so that the city, in general, is a sort of terrestrial paradise.
The inhabitants are clothed like the Turks: the ladies dress is very expensive in the winter; but in the summer, they wear nothing but a shift. Fez is the centre of the trade of this empire; and hence caravans go to Mecca, carrying ready-made garments, Cordovan leather, indigo, cochineal, and ostrich feathers, for which they bring in return silks, muslins, and drugs. Other caravans go to Tumbuctoo, and the river Niger: one of which consists of 20,000 men. They travel over such dry barren deserts, that every other camel carries water. Their commodities are salt, cowries, wrought silk, British cloth, and the woollen manufactures of Barbary. Here are a great number of Jews, who have handsome synagogues; but the bulk of the inhabitants are Moors, of a tawny complexion.

Fezzan, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the N by Tripoli, on the E by deserts that divide it from Egypt, on the S by Bornou, and on the W by the deserts of Zahara, lying between 25 and 30° N lat. It is an extensive plain, encompassed by mountains, except to the W; and to the influence of these heights it may be owing, that here, as well as in Upper Egypt, no rain is ever known. Though the character of the surface (which, in general, is a light sand) and the want of rain, may seem to announce sterility, yet the springs are so abundant, that few of the regions in the N of Africa exhibit a richer vegetation. From wells of eight or 10 feet deep, with several of which every garden and field is furnished, the husbandman waters the natural or artificial productions of his land; among which are the date tree, the olive, lime, apricot, pomegranate, fig, Indian corn, and barley, wheat, pumpions or calabash, carrots, cucumbers, onions, and garlic. Among the tame animals are the sheep, cow, goat, camel, and a species of the domestic fowl of Europe.
The wild animals are the ostrich, and antelopes of various kinds; one of which is called the huaddee, and is celebrated for the singular address with which, when chased by the hunters, amid its craggy heights, it plunges from the precipice, and lighting on its hams, without danger of pursuit, continues till evening in the vale below. The heat of the climate from April to November, is so intense, that from nine in the morning to sunset, the streets are frequented by the labouring people only; and, even in the houses, respiration would be difficult, but for the expedient of wetting the rooms: from May to the end of August, when the wind is usually from the S. E to the S W, the heat is often such as to threaten instant suffocation; but if it change to the W or N W, a reviving freshness immediately succeeds. But nature and custom have formed their constitution to such high degrees of heat, that any approach to the common temperament of Europe entirely destroys their comfort. A multitude of noxious animals infest the country; adders, snakes, scorpions, and toads, are the constant inhabitants of the fields, gardens, and houses; the air is crowded with musquitos; and persons of every rank are overrun with the different kinds of vermin that attack the beggars of Europe. The towns are chiefly inhabited by husbandmen and shepherds: for, though they also contain the merchants, artificers, ministers of religion, and officers of government, yet agriculture and pasturage are the principal occupations. The houses are built of clay, with a flat roof composed of boughs of trees, on which a quantity of earth is laid. The natives are of a deep swarthy complexion; their hair a short curly black, their lips thick, their noses flat and broad; and their skin emitting a very fetid effluvia: they are tall, and well-shaped; but weakly, indolent, and inactive. Their dress is similar to that of the Moors of Barbary. In their common intercourse, all distinctions of rank seem forgotten; the shereef (or governor) and the lowest plebian, the rich, and the poor, the master and the servant, converse familiarly, and eat and drink together. Generous and hospitable, let his fare be scanty or abundant, the Fezzanner is desirous that others should partake of it; and if 20 persons were unexpectedly to visit his dwelling, they must all participate as far as it will go. When they settle their money transactions, they squat upon the ground, and having levelled a spot with their hands, make dots as they reckon; if they are wrong, they smooth the spot again, and repeat the calculation. Even the bystanders are as eager to correct mistakes as if the affair were their own. Gold dust constitutes the chief medium of payment; and value, in that medium, is always expressed by weight. In religion they are rigid, but not intolerant Mahometans. The government is monarchic; but its powers are administered with such regard to the happiness of the people, the rights of property are so revered, the taxes so moderate, and justice is directed by such a firm, yet temperate hand, that the people are ardently attached to their sovereign. Mourzook is the capital.

Fiano, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, seated on the Tiber, 15 miles N of Rome.

Fianona, a town of Venetian Istria, seated on the gulf of Carnaro, 17 miles N of Pola.

Fiascone, an episcopal town of Italy, in the territory of the church, noted for fine muscadine wine. It is seated on a mountain near Lake Bolsena, 12 miles N W of Viterbo. Lon. 12 13 E, lat. 42 34 N.

Ficherulolo, a fortified town of Italy, in the Ferrarese, seated on the Po, 12 miles W of Ferrara. Lon. 11 31 E, lat. 45 6 N.

Fieranzuolo, a town of Italy, in the Parmesan, 10 miles S E of Placentia. Lon. 9 44 E, lat. 44 59 N.

Fiesoli, an ancient town of Italy, in the Florentino, with a bishop's see, five miles N E of Florence. Lon. 11 11 E, lat. 43 49 N.

Fifehire, a county of Scotland. It is a fine peninsula, inclosed between the Forth and the Tay rivers, bounded on the E by the British or German ocean; on the S by the Frith of Forth; on the W by the Ochill-hills, Kinross and Perthshire; and on the N is divided from Forfar by the Tay. It is about 36 miles long from N E to S W, and about 17 where broadest. The eastern part is the most level. The N and S parts are fruitful in corn, and the middle fit for pasture. It has plenty of black cattle and sheep, whose wool, is much esteemed. On the S are coal pits, and much salt is made; and it produces crystals of various colours, freestone and lead. It has several mineral waters, viz. Kinghorn, Ballgrigy, &c. The principal rivers are the Leven, and the Eden, which abound with salmon, &c. The coast is well planted with little towns that are nurseries for seamen: and the sea produces great quantities of herrings, &c. The number of towns is almost unparalleled in an equal tract of coast; for the whole shore, from Crail to Culross, about 40 miles, is one continued chain of towns and villages. Cupar is the county-town.

Figari, a seaport of Corsica, at the mouth of a river of the same name, 22 miles W N W of Bonifacio.

Figeac, a town of France in the department of Lot and late province of Querci, and Guienne, seated on the Sellé, 22 miles E of Cahors, and 270 S of Paris. Lon. 1 58 E, lat. 44 32 N.

Figueiro-dos-Vinhos, a town of Portugal, in Estramadura, seated among mountains, near the river Zizere, and considerable trade in flax, linen, mats, raisins, and figs. The province contains a great number of canals and bridges built by the ancient Egyptians. The town is seated on a canal, that communicates with the Nile, 70 miles S W of Cairo. Lon. 30 49 E, lat. 29 2 N.

Fiume, or St. Veit, a seaport of Austrian Istria, with a castle and a good harbour formed by the river Fimarna, which enters the bay of Carnero, in the gulf of Venice. It is very populous, noted for wine, good figs, and other fruits; and the cathedral is worth observation. It is 37 miles E of Capo d'Istria. Lon. 14 46 E, lat. 45 40 N.

Flamborough Head, a lofty promontory in Yorkshire, whose snow-white cliffs serve for a direction to ships. Its rocks are occupied by innumerable multitudes of sea-fowls, which fill the air and ocean all around. It is five miles E of Burlington. Lon. 0 4 E, lat. 54 9 N.

Flanders, a country of the Netherlands, divided into Dutch, Austrian, and French Flanders; the last now included in the department of the North. It is 60 miles in length and 50 in breadth; bounded on the N by the German Ocean and the United Provinces, on the E by Brabant, on the S by Hainault and Artois, and on the W by Artois and the German Ocean. Flanders is perfectly champaign, with not a rising ground in it, and watered with many fine rivers and canals. Its chief commodities are fine lacc, linen and tapestry.

Flattery, Cape, on the W coast of N America, so named by Captain Cook, who discovered it in 1788, because he was disappointed at not finding a harbour. Lon. 124 57 W, lat. 48 25 N.

Flavigni, a town of France, in the department of Cote d'Or, and late province of Burgundy. It had before the French revolution a benedictine abbey. It is seated on a mountain, 12 miles E of Semur, and 140 E of Paris. Lon. 4 37 E, lat. 47 26 N.

Fleche, a town of France, in the department of Sarthe and late province of Maine. It is seated on the river Loire, 22 miles N of Angers. Lon. 0 3 W, lat. 47 52 N.

Flees, a river in Kircudbrightshire; it winds through a beautiful valley, skreened by woody hills, and enters Wigton Bay, at Gatehouse. On the W side of this river are the vestiges of a camp, a druidical circle, and a vitrified fort.

Flemington, a small town in Hunterdon county, New Jersey, about 14 miles from the river Delaware, eastward, and 25 W of New Brunswick. It has a post office, and possesses a considerable retail trade.

Flensburg, a pretty large town of Denmark, capital of Sleswick, with a strong citadel. It is situated on a bay of the Baltic, and has a harbour deep enough for large shipping. It is a place of considerable commerce, 15 miles N W of Sleswick. Lon. 9 47 E, lat. 54 50 N.

Fleurus, a village of the Austrian Netherlands, in the province of Namur, famous for a battle fought in its neighbourhood in 1690, between the French and the allies. Here also in June 1794, the Austrians made a general attack on the French posts, but were repulsed. It is 6 miles N E of Charleroy.

Fleury, a town of France in the department of Saone and Loire and late province of Burgundy, 30 miles N of Chalons. Lon. 4 50 E, lat. 47 13 N.

Flie, or Vlieland, an island on the coast of Holland, at the middle of the entrance of the Zuider-Zee.

Flint, a town in Flintshire which gives name to the county, and sends one member to parliament; but it is a small place, without trade, and the assizes are held at Mold. Here are the remains of a castle, in which Richard II. was delivered into the hands of his rival, afterwards Henry IV. It is seated on the river Dee, 12 miles W by N of Chester, and 193 N W of London. Lon. 3 2 W, lat. 53 16 N.

Flintshire, a county of N Wales, 29 miles in length, and 12 where broadest; bounded on the N and N E by a bay, at the mouth of the Dee, which divides it from Cheshire; on the N W by the Irish sea; on the E by the Dee, which continues to divide it from Cheshire, and on the S and S W from Denbighshire. Part of Flintshire extends on the E side of the Dee, about nine miles between Cheshire and Shropshire. It is divided into five hundreds; in which are two market-towns and 28 parishes, with 32,400 inhabitants. The greatest part of this county lies in the diocese of St. Asaph, and the rest belongs to that of Chester. It sends two members to parliament, one for the county and one for Flint; and pays one part of the land tax. The air is cold, but healthful. It is full of hills, intermixed with a few valleys, which are very fruitful, producing some wheat and plenty of rye. The cows, though small, yield a great quantity of milk in proportion to their size, and are excellent beef. The mountains are well stored with lead, coal, and mill stones. This county also produces good butter, cheese and honey.

Flix, a town of Spain, in Catalonia, strong both by art and nature. It is built on a peninsula in the river Ebro, where it makes an elbow, which serves the town instead of a ditch, and may be conducted quite round it. The side where the river does not pass, is covered by mountains, and defended by a castle on an eminence; and near it is a water-fall. It is 20 miles S of Lerida. Lon. 0 26 E, lat. 41 15 N.

Florence, the capital of the dutchy of Tuscany, and one of the finest cities in Italy. It is surrounded on all sides but one with high hills, which rise insensibly, and at last join the lofty mountains called the Appennines. Towards Pisa, there is a vast plain of 40 miles in length; which is so filled with villages and pleasure-houses, that they seem to be a continuation of the suburbs of the city. Independent of the churches and palaces of Florence, most of which are very magnificent, the architecture of the houses in general is in a good taste; and the streets are remarkably clean, and paved with large broad stones, hinged so as to prevent the horse from sliding. The city is divided into two unequal parts by the river Arno, over which there are no less than four bridges in sight of each other. That called the Ponte della Trivita, which is uncommonly elegant, is built entirely of white marble, and ornamented with four beautiful statues representing the Seasons. The quays, the buildings on each side, and the bridges, render that part of Florence through which the river runs by far the finest. Every corner of this beautiful city is full of wonders in the arts of painting, statuary, and architecture. The streets, squares, and fronts of the palaces are adorned with a great number of statues: some of them by the best modern masters, Michael, Angelo, Brandinelli, Donatello, Giovanni di Bologna, Benvenuto Cellini, and others. Some of the Florentine merchants formerly were men of vast wealth, and lived in a most magnificent manner. One of them, about the middle of the fifteenth century, built that noble fabric, which, from the name of its founder, is still called the Palazzo Pitti. The man was ruined by the prodigious expence of this building, which was immediately purchased by the Medici family, and has continued ever since to be the residence of the sovereigns. The gardens belonging to this palace are on the declivity of an eminence. On the summit there is a kind of fort called Belvedere. From this and from some of the higher walks, you have a complete view of the city of Florence, and the beautiful vale of Arno, in the middle of which it stands. This palace has been enlarged since it was purchased from the ruined family of Pitti. The furniture is rich and curious, particularly some tables of Florentine work, which are much admired. The most precious ornaments, however, are the paintings. The walls of what is called the Imperial Chamber, are painted in fresco, by various painters; the subjects are allegorical, and in honour of Lorenzo of Medicis distinguished by the name of the Magnificent. The famous gallery attracts every stranger. One of the most interesting parts of it in the eyes of many, is the series of Roman emperors, from Julius Cæsar to Gallienus, with a considerable number of their empresses arranged opposite to them. This series is almost complete; but wherever the bust of an emperor is wanting, the place is filled up by that of some other distinguished Roman. The celebrated Venus of Medicis, is thought to be the standard of taste in female beauty and proportion, stands in a room called the Tribunal. The inscription on its base mentions its being made by Cleomenes an Athenian, the son of Apollodorus. It is of white marble, and surrounded by other master-pieces of sculpture, some of which are said to be the works of Praxiteles and other Greek masters. In the same room are many valuable curiosities, besides a collection of admirable pictures by the best masters. There are various other rooms, whose contents are indicated by the names they bear; as, the Cabinet of Arts, of Astronomy, of Natural History, of Medals, of Porcelain, of Antiquities; the Saloon of the Hermaphrodite, so called from a statue which divides the admiration of the amateurs with that in the Borghese village at Rome, though the excellence of the execution is disgraced by the vileness of the subject; and the Gallery of Portraits, which contains the portraits of the most eminent painters (all executed by themselves) who have flourished in Europe during the three last centuries. Our limits will not admit of a detail of the hundredth part of the curiosities and buildings of Florence. We must however omit mentioning the chapel of St. Lorenzo, as being perhaps the finest and most expensive edification that ever was reared for the dead; it is encrusted with precious stones, and adorned by the workmanship of the best modern sculptors. Florence is a place of some strength, and contains an archbishop's see and a university. The number of inhabitants is calculated at 80,000. Florence is 45 miles S of Bologna, and 125 N W of Rome. Lon. 11 15 E, lat. 43 46 N.

Florent, St. a town of France, in the department of Maine and Loire and late province of Anjou. It lately had a rich Benedictine abbey. It is seated on the Loire, 20 miles W S W of Angers. Lon. 0 56 W, lat. 47 24 N.

Florentin, St. a town of France, in the department of Yonne, situated at the confluence of the Armance and Armancon, 15 miles N E of Auxerre, and 80 S E of Paris. Lon. 3 55 E, lat. 48 1 N.

Florentino, one of the three provinces of Tuscany, bounded on the W by the republic of Lucca and the Modenese, on the N by the Appennines, on the E by the duchy of Urbino, and on the S by the Siennese. It is a well watered province, and very fertile. Florence is the capital.

Flores, a fertile island, one of the Azores, so called from the abundance of flowers found upon it. Lon. 31 0 W, lat. 39 34 N.

Florida, a country of North America, 600 miles long, and 130 broad; bounded on the N by Georgia, on the E by the Atlantic Ocean, on the S by the gulf of Mexico, and on the W by Mississippi. It is divided into E and W Florida: St. Augustine the capital of the former, and Pensacola of the latter. The country about St. Augustine is the most unfruitful; yet, even here, two crops of Indian corn are annually produced: the banks of the rivers which water the Floridas are of a superior quality, and well adapted to the culture of rice and corn, while the interior country, which is high and pleasant, abounds with wood of almost every kind; particularly white and red oak, pine, hickory, cypress, red and white cedar; the intervals between the hilly parts, produce spontaneously the fruits common to Georgia and the Carolinas; and the whole country is valuable in a peculiar manner, for the extensive ranges for cattle. Florida was discovered by Sebastian Cabot in 1497. Having often changed masters, belonging alternately to the French and Spaniards, it was ceded by the latter to the English in 1763; in whose hands it continued till 1781, when it was taken by the Spaniards, and ceded to them in 1783.

Florida, a post town in Orange county, New York, about 60 miles N W of the city of New York, on the post road to Albany.

Flotz, a town of Walachia, seated on the Genissa, near its influx into the Danube.

Flour, St. an episcopal town of France, in the department of Cantal and late province of Auvergne. It carries on a considerable trade in knives, and its fairs are famous for the sale of mules and rye. It is seated on a mountain, 45 miles S of Clermont, and 250 of Paris. Lon. 3 11 E, lat. 45 2 N.

Flowden, a village in Northumberland, five miles N of Wooler, famous for a battle fought here by the English and Scots in 1513, in which James IV. was killed together with the flower of his nobility.

Flushing, a strong and considerable seaport of Dutch Zealand, in the island of Walcherin, with a good harbour, and a great foreign trade. It was put into the hands of queen Elisabeth as a security for the money she advanced. It was taken by the French in January 1795, and is four miles S W of Middleburg. Lon. 3 35 E, lat. 51 29 N.

Fochabers, a town in Banffshire, seated on a plain, near the river Spey. Here is Gordon Castle, the princely mansion of the duke of Gordon, now greatly modernized. It is surrounded by ancient trees and elegant pleasure-grounds, and the adjacent hills are crowned with fir and other trees. In the town, many girls are employed in spinning, and in the manufacture of sewing thread, under the patronage of the dutchess. It is 48 miles N W of Aberdeen.

Fo-chan, a village of China, in the province of Quang-tong. It is called a village because it has no walls nor a presiding governor, although it has a great trade, and contains more houses and inhabitants than Canton. It is reckoned to be nine miles in circumference, and to contain 1,000,000 of inhabitants. It is 12 miles from Canton.

Fochia Nooa, a town of Natolia, on the gulf of Sanderly, with a good harbour, and a castle. The Venetians beat the Turkish fleet, near this place, in 1650.

Fodgia, a town of Naples, in Capitanata, seated near the Cerbero, 10 miles E of Manfredonia.

Fodwar, a town of Hungary, seated on the Danube, opposite Colocza. Lon. 19 36 E, lat. 46 39 N.

Fogaras, a town and castle of Transylvania, on the river Alauta, 30 miles N E of Hermanstadt. Lon. 25 25 E, lat. 46 30 N.

Foglia, a river of Italy, which rises on the confines of Tuscany, crosses the duchy of Urbino, and falls into the gulf of Venice, at Pesaro.

Fogo. See Fuego.

Fohr, an island of Denmark, near the coast of Sleswick. It is about 12 miles in circumference.

Foia, an ancient town of Natolia on the gulf of Smyrna, with a good harbour, and a strong castle, 30 miles N of Smyrna.

Foix, a town of France, in the department of Arriege and late county of Foix. It is noted for its manufacture of coarse woollen cloths, and some copper-mills, which metal is a considerable object of commerce. It is seated on the Arriege, at the foot of the Pyrenees, eight miles S of Pamiers. Lon. 1 32 E, lat. 43 0 N.

Fo-kien, a province of China, bounded on the N by Tehe-kiang, on the W by Kiang-si, on the S by Quang-tong, and on the E by the Chinese Sea. It is commodiously seated for navigation and commerce, part of it bordering on the sea, in which they catch large quantities of fish, which they send salted to other parts of the empire. Its shores are very uneven, by reason of the number and variety of its bays. Its climate is warm; and yet the air is so pure, that no contagious diseases ever prevail here. The mountains are almost every where disposed into a kind of amphitheatres, by the labour of the inhabitants, with terraces placed one above another. The fields are watered with rivulets and springs, which issue out of the mountains, and which the husbandmen conduct in such a manner as to overflow the fields of rice when they please, because it thrives best in watery ground. They make use of pipes of bamboo for this purpose. They have all commodities in common with the rest of China; but more particularly musk, precious stones, quicksilver, silk, hempen-cloth, calico, iron, and all sorts of utensils wrought to the greatest perfection. From other countries they have cloves, cinnamon, pepper, sandal-wood, amber, coral, and many other things. The capital city is Foutcheou Fou. It contains nine cities of the first, and sixty of the third class.

Foligni, an episcopal and trading town of Italy, in the duchy of Umbria, remarkable for its sweetmeats, paper-mills, silk manufactures, and fairs. It is seated on the declivity of a mountain near a fertile plain, 69 miles N of Rome. Lon. 12 24 E, lat. 42 48 N.

Folktone, a town in Kent, with a market on Thursday. It was once a flourishing place, containing five churches, which are now reduced to one, and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in fishing. It is a member of the port of Dover, governed by a mayor, and is seated on the English Channel, eight miles S W of Dover, and 72 E by S of London. Lon. 1 14 E, lat. 51 5 N.

Fondi, an episcopal town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro. It is seated on a fertile plain, but in a bad air, near a lake of its own name, 42 miles N W of Capua, and 50 S E of Rome. Lon. 13 24 E, lat. 41 22 N.

Fong-taiang-fou, a city of China, in the province of Chen-si. Its district contains eight cities of the second and third class. It is 495 miles S W of Peking.

Fong-yang-fou, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan. It is seated on a mountain, which hangs over the Yellow River. It encloses within its walls several fertile little hills, and its jurisdiction is very extensive, as it comprehends five cities of the second and 13 of the third class. It is 70 miles N E of Nanking.

FOR

Fontainebleau, a town of France in the department of Seine and Marne and late province of the isle of France, remarkable for its fine palace, where the kings of France used to lodge, when hunting. It was first embellished by Francis I and each successive king added something to it; insomuch that it was one of the finest pleasure-houses in the world. It stands in the midst of a forest, 35 miles S E of Paris. Lon. 2 47 E, lat. 48 25 N.

Fontaine L'Eveque, a town of France, in the department of the North and late province of Hainault, near the river Sambre, three miles W of Charle-roy. Lon. 4 18 E, lat. 50 23 N.

Fontarabia, a seaport of Spain, in Biscay, seated on a peninsula in the bay of Biscay, and on the river Bidasoa. It is well fortified both by nature and art; has a good harbour, though dry at low water; and is surrounded on the land side by the Pyrenean mountains. It is a very important place, being accounted the key of Spain on that side. It surrendered to the French arms in 1794. It is 22 miles S W of Bayonne, and 63 E of Bilboa. Lon. 1 33 W, lat. 43 23 N.

Fontenai, a village of France, in the department of Yonne and late province of Burgundy, remarkable for a bloody battle fought, in 841, between the Germans and the French, in which the Germans were defeated with the loss of 100,000 men. It is 20 miles S E of Auxerre. Lon. 3 48 E, lat. 47 28 N.

Fontenai-le-Comte, a town of France, in the department of Vendee and late province of Poitou. It has a woollen manufacture, and its fair is famous for cattle, particularly for mules. It is seated on the Vendee, near the bay of Biscay, 25 miles N E of Rochelle. Lon. 0 55 W, lat. 46 30 N.

Fontenoy, a village of Austrian Hainault, remarkable for a battle between the allies and the French, in 1745, in which the former were defeated. It is four miles S W of Tournay.

Fontevault, a town of France, in the department of Maine and Loire and late province of Anjou. Here was a famous abbey, founded by Robert d'Arbrissel, in 1100. It was the chief of a religious order, which, by a singular whim of the founder, consisted of both sexes, and the general of which was a woman. Queen Bertrade, so famous in history, was among the first nuns that entered this abbey. It is nine miles S E of Saumur, and 160 S W of Paris. Lon. 0 0 E, lat. 47 9 N.

Forcalquier, an ancient town of France in the department of the Lower Alps, and late province of Provence, seated on a hill by the river Laye, 20 miles N E of Aix. Lon. 5 48 E, lat. 43 38 N.

Forchain, a strong town of Franconia, in the bishopric of Bamberg, with a fine arsenal. It was taken by the French in 1796, who were afterwards compelled to abandon it. It is seated on the Rednitz, 18 miles S by E of Bamberg. Lon. 11 13 E, lat. 49 44 N.

Fordingbridge, a town in Hampshire, with a market on Saturday, seated on the Avon, 20 miles W S W of Winchester, and 87 W by S of London. Lon. 1 49 W, lat. 50 36 N.

Fordun, a small village of Scotland, in Kincardineshire.

Fordwich, a member of the port of Sandwich, in Kent, seated on the river Stour, and governed by a mayor. It is noted for excellent trouts, and is three miles N E of Canterbury, and eight W of Sandwich.

Foreland, North, a promontory which is the N E point of the Isle of Thanet, in Kent. It is also the most southern part of the port of London, which is thence extended N, in a right line, to the point, called the Nase, in Essex, and forms what is properly called the mouth of the Thames. Here is a round brick tower, near 80 feet high, erected by the Trinity House, for a sea-mark.

Foreland, South, a headland, forming the E point of the Kentish coast, and called South, in respect to its bearing from the other Foreland, which is about six miles to the N. Between these two capes, is the noted road, called the Downs, to which they afford a great security.

Forest-Towns, four towns of Suabia, lying along the Rhine, and the confines of Swisserland, at the entrance of the Black Forest. Their names are Waldschut, Lauffenburg, Seckingen, and Rheinfelden; and they are subject to the house of Austria.

Forez, a province of France, bounded on the W by Auvergne, on the S by Velay and the Vivarais, on the E by the Lyonois, and on the N by Burgundy and the Bourbonnois. It is watered by the Loire, and several other streams, Forfar, a borough of Scotland, and capital of the county of the same name.

It stands on the valley of Strathmore that runs from Perth N E to the sea.
It is an ancient place, and here are the ruins of a palace built by Malcolm Canmore. The lake of Forfar, stretching two miles in length from E to W, and half a mile in breadth, covers the palace on the N. This lake abounds with trout, pike, perch, and eel. Of late years it has been greatly reduced by draining; to which the immense quantity of fine marle at the bottom is the principal inducement. Forfar is a fine flourishing place, and its inhabitants are doubled within these 30 years; the houses have also increased in proportion besides being greatly improved. The church has been rebuilt in an elegant and extensive plan, calculated to contain 2,000 hearers. Its principal manufacture is osnaburghs, and it is 20 miles W of Montrose. Lon.

Forges, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine and late province of Normandy, remarkable for its mineral waters. It is 60 miles N W of Paris. Lon. 0 40 E, lat. 49 38 N.

Forli, an ancient town of Romagna, capital of a territory of the same name, with a bishop's see. The public structures are very handsome, and it is seated in a fertile and healthy country, 10 miles S E of Faenza, and 40 N E of Florence. Lon. 11 44 E, lat. 44 16 N.

Formosa, an island in the Chinese Sea, 90 miles E of Canton, lying between 119 and 122° E lon. and 22 and 25° N lat. It is subject to the Chinese, who, notwithstanding its proximity, did not know of its existence till the year 1430. It is about 85 leagues in length, and 25 broad; and a chain of mountains running from N to S, divides it into two parts, the E and W. The Dutch built the fort of Zealand, in the W part, in 1634. They were driven thence, in 1661, by a Chinese pirate, who made himself master of all the W part, which in 1682, submitted to the emperor of China. This island presents extensive and fertile plains, watered by a great number of rivulets that fall from the E mountains. Its air is pure and wholesome; and it produces abundance of corn and rice, and the greater part of other grains. Most of the Indian fruits, many of those of Europe, tobacco, sugar, pepper, camphire, and cinnamon, are found here. The inhabitants rear a great number of oxen, which they use for riding, from a want of horses. They accustom them early to that kind of service, and, by daily exercise, train them to go as well as the best horses. These oxen are furnished with a bridle, saddle, and crupper. A Chinese looks as proud, when mounted in this manner, as if he were carried by the finest Barbary courser.

FOR

Wholesome water is the only thing wanting in Formosa. It is very extraordinary that every kind of water in it is a deadly poison to strangers, for which no remedy has yet been found.
On the 22d of May 1782, this fine island was overwhelmed, and almost desola-ted, by a furious hurricane and dreadful inundation of the sea, supposed to have been occasioned by an earthquake.
Tai-quang is the capital.

Forres, a town in Murrayshire, seated on an eminence, close to a rivulet, it is a small well built town pleasantly situated, two miles to the E of the river Fndhorn. A little to the N E near the road, is a remarkable column, called King Seven's or Sweno's Stone, above 20 feet high, and three broad, covered on both sides by antique sculpture. It is supposed to have been erected in memory of a victory obtained over the Danes, in 1008, before their final retreat from Scotland. Forres manufactures some linen and sewing thread, and is 15 miles W of Elgin.

Fort Ann, a small post town, of Washington county, New-York; at the distance of 10 miles N W of Fort Edward, and 459 from Washington.

Forteventura, one of the Canary Islands, 65 miles in length, and of a very irregular breadth, consisting of two peninsulas joined by an isthmus 12 miles in breadth. It produces plenty of wheat, barley, beeves, and goats.
Lon. 14 26 W, lat. 28 4 N.

Fort Edward, (formerly a considerable British fortress) now a post town of Washington county, New-York; situated on the E side of Hudson river, 50 miles N of Albany.

Fort George, a town in Washington county, New-York; on the S W corner of lake George. Here is a post-office 465 miles from Washington.

FOU

Forth, one of the most noble and commodious rivers in Scotland. It takes its rise near the bottom of Lomond hills, and running from E to W, receives in its passage many considerable streams, deriving their waters from the eminences in the midland counties of North Britain. Between Stirling and Alloa, the Forth winds in a most beautiful and surprising manner; so that, though it is but four miles by land, it is 24 by water, between those two places. Below Alloa the river expands itself to a great breadth between the counties of Lothian and Fife, till at Queen's-ferry it is contracted by promontories shooting into it from both coasts; so that, from being four or five, there it is not above two miles broad. At the mouth of it, from North Berwick to Fifeness, it is full five leagues broad; having the little island of May in the middle of it, and to the W of this the rocky island of Bass; notwithstanding which, the largest fleet may enter and sail up it many miles with the utmost facility and in the greatest safety. There is a communication between this river and the Clyde, by a canal 35 miles in length.

Fort Wilkinson, a post town in Hancock county, Georgia; situated on the river Appalachi, 30 miles W of Georgetown.

Fortrose, a borough in Ross-shire, situate on the frith of Murray, nearly opposite Fort George, and nine miles W of Inverness.

Fossano, a strong town of Piedmont, with a bishop's see, seated on the Stura, 10 miles N E of Coni, and 27 S E of Pignerol. Lon. 7 56 E, lat. 44 45 N.

Fossombrone, a town of Italy, in the dutchy of Urbino, with a bishop's see; seated near the river Metro, 16 miles S W of Pesaro, and 12 S E of Urbino. Lon. 12 48 E, lat. 43 40 N.

Fotheringay, a town in Northamptonshire, nine miles S of Stamford, near the river Nen. It is noted for the ruins of the castle where Richard III. was born, and where Mary, queen of Scotland, was beheaded.

Fourness, in Loynsdale Lancashire, is a tract, between the Kent, Leven, and Dudden-Sands which runs N parallel with the W sides of Cumberland and Westmoreland; and on the S runs out into the sea as a promontory. This whole tract, except on the coast, rises in hills and vast piles of rocks called Forness-Fells. In these mountainous parts are found quarries of a fine durable blue slate to cover buildings with, which are made use of in many other parts of the kingdom. The low or plain part of Fourness, produces all sorts of grain, but principally oats, whereof the bread eaten in this country is generally made; and there are found here veins of a very rich iron ore.

Fou-scheou-fou, a city of China, in Fo-kien; one of the most considerable in that province, on account of its trade, the convenience of its rivers and port, the number of its literati, and the magnificence of its principal bridge, which has more than 100 arches constructed of white stone, and ornamented with a double balustrade. It is the residence of a viceroys, has under its jurisdiction nine cities of the third class, and is 360 miles N E of Canton.

Fowey, a borough and seaport in Cornwall, with a market on Saturday. It is a populous place extending above one mile on the E side of a river of its own name, and has a considerable share in the pilchard fishery. It sends two members to parliament and is governed by a mayor. It is 32 miles S W of Launcester, and 240 W by S of London. Lon. 4 35 W, lat. 50 19 N.

a group of islands in the Northern Archipelago. They are 16 in number, and are situate between the E coast of Kamtschatka and the W coast of America, between 52 and 55° N lat. Each island has a particular name; but this general name is given to the whole group, on account of the great number of black, gray, and red foxes with which they abound. The dress of the inhabitants consists of a cap, and a fur coat that reaches down to the knee: some of them wear common caps of a party-coloured bird-skin, upon which they leave part of the wings and tail. On the forepart of their hunting and fishing caps, they place a small board, like a skreen, adorned with the jawbones of seabears, and ornamented with glass beads, which they receive in barter from the Russians. At their festivals and dancing parties they use a much more shewy sort of caps. They feed upon the flesh of all sorts of sea animals, and generally eat it raw; but when they dress their food, they place it in a hollow stone, they then cover it with another, and close the interstices with lime or clay; they next lay it horizontally on two stones, and light a fire under it. The provision intended for keeping, is dried without salt in the open air. Their weapons are bows, arrows, and darts; and for defence, they use wooden shields. The most perfect equality reigns among them; they have neither chiefs nor superiors, neither laws nor punishments. They live together in families, and societies of several families united, which form what they call, a race, who, in case of attack or defence, mutually aid each other. The inhabitants of the same island always pretend to be of the same race, and each one looks upon his island as a possession, the property of which is common to all individuals of the same society. Feasts are very common among them, and, more particularly, when the inhabitants of one island are visited by those of another. The men of the village meet their guests, beating drums, and preceded by the women, who sing and dance: at the conclusion of the dance, the hosts serve up their best provisions, and invite their guests to partake of the feast. They feed their children, when very young, with the coarsest flesh, and for the most part raw. If an infant cries, the mother immediately carries it to the sea-side, and whether it be summer or winter, holds it naked in the water till it is quiet. This is so far from doing the children any harm, that it hardens them against the cold; and they accordingly go barefooted through the winter, without the least inconvenience. They seldom heat their dwellings; but when they would warm themselves, they light a bundle of hay, and stand over it; or they set fire to train-oil, which they pour into a hollow stone. They have a good share of plain natural sense, but are rather slow of understanding. They seem cold and indifferent in most of their actions; but let an injury, or even a mere suspicion, rouse them from this phlegmatic state, and they become furious and inflexible, taking the most violent revenge, without any regard to the consequences.

The least affliction prompts them to suicide; the apprehension of even an uncertain event often leads them to despair; and they put an end to their days with great apparent insensibility.
The Russians call these islands the the remains of a castle said to have been built in the time of the Saxon heptarchy. To this castle the princess Mary (afterwards Mary I.) retired, when lady Jane Grey was proclaimed queen. Here is a stately church, in France, a country of Europe, bounded on the N by the English channel and the Austrian Netherlands; on the E by Germany, and the Alps, which separate it from Swisserland, Savoy, and Piedmont; on the S by the Mediterranean Sea and Spain, from which kingdom it is divided by the Pyrenees; and on the W by the Atlantic Ocean. From the Pyrenees in the S, to Dunkirk in the N, its extent is 625 miles; and something more from the most easterly part of Alsace to the most western point of Bretagne; which province, it must be observed, extends above 100 miles further into the ocean than any other part of the country. France was lately an absolute monarchy, and divided into several military governments, or provinces. These were Alsace, Angoumois, Anjou, Armagnac, Artois, Aunis, Auvergne, Barrois, Basques, Bearn, Berry, Bigorre, Blaisois, Boulonnois, Bourbonnois, Bresse, Bretagne, Burgundy, Cambresis, Champagne, Couserans, Dauphiny, Forez, Foix, Franche Comte, French Flanders, Gascony, Gevasidan, Guienne, French Hainault, Isle of France, Languedoc, Limosin, Lorrain, Lyonois, Marche, Maine, Marsan, Navarre, Nivernois, Normandy, Orleanois, Perche, Perigord, Picardy, Poitou, Provence, Querci, Rouerdne, Rousillon, Saintonge, Soissonnois, Touraine, Velay, and Vermandois. All these provinces were divided into districts, which had their particular names. The air of France is said to be peculiarly mild and wholesome. The soil in many places is excellent, though in others the heat in summer entirely consumes the verdure; and these parched spots are scarce found capable of producing rye and chesnuts sufficient for the maintenance of the poor people who inhabit them. It must be owned, however, that agriculture was never well understood in this country. France in general is not a mountainous country; though its boundaries on the land side are the high ridges called the Alps, which separate it from Italy, the Pyrenees which divide it from Spain, and mount Jura which separates it from Swisserland. Besides these, there are the Cevennes, in the province of Languedoc, and Mount Dor in that of Auvergne. The country abounds with many and fine rivers, as the Loire, which runs N and N W; its course including the windings, not less than 500 miles. The Rhone flows through the country in a S W direction, and then running due S falls into the Mediterranean. The Garonne rises in the Pyrenean mountains, and running N E communicates with the Mediterranean, by a canal made by order of Louia XIV. The Seine, the Some, Somme, Moselle, Var and Adour, are all considerable streams, which are of great service to the inland commerce of the country; and this is still further augmented by the great number of artificial canals which open a communication betwixt one part of the country and another. That of Languedoc was 16 years of being completed, and is carried through an extent of near 100 miles over hills and vallies, and in one place thro' a mountain. It was intended for a communication between the ocean and Mediterranean, to afford a more speedy passage for the French fleet; but did not answer the purpose. The greatest part of the fuel used by the inhabitants of this kingdom is wood; which in the northern parts is scarce, which proves very distressing to the people. In other places, however, there are large forests, particularly those of Orleans, which cover an extent of 14,000 acres. In Alsace there are mines of silver and copper, but too expensive to be brought; but there are mines of various metals in other parts, and coal is likewise met with in some provinces; there are several quarries of excellent stone, and a kind of a gem named the Tquoise is met with in Languedoc. Salt is made in great quantity in the island of Rhee, and at Rochefort, and in the southern parts of the Kingdoms, where they employ the heat of the sun successfully for the purpose of evaporating the sea water; but in general the commodity is scarce and dear all over the kingdom. There is great abundance of wine made in this country; the vines being the greatest care of the inhabitants, and next to these the cultivation of garden vegetables for soups and sallads. Formerly the French were celebrated for their skill in gardening, but they are now much inferior in this respect to the British. The animals are the same with those of Britain, wolves only excepted, which in some places are very numerous and very dangerous. The French breed of cattle of all kinds is much inferior to that of England, the wool of the sheep

is less fine, and the sea coasts are not so well supplied with fish. Such was the situation of France in the year 1789, when the revolution commenced, since which time it has been in such an unsettled state, as renders it impossible to give a true representation of the state of that country. It cannot be imagined that we can here minutely trace the progress of the French revolution. For a particular history of the events of that period, we must refer to more copious histories. On account of the deranged state of the finances Louis XVI. was induced to convocate an assembly of the notables, and afterwards the states general, which had not assembled since 1614. These consisted of the nobility, clergy, and the third estate or the commons, who were all mingled in one assembly. In the mean time it was reported that Paris was surrounded by an armed force. Notwithstanding this, on the removal of the popular minister, M. Neckar, in July 1789, a dreadful insurrection ensued in Paris; the military refused to fire upon the people; the formidable Bastille was captured by the citizens; the governor, and some other obnoxious persons, were beheaded, and their heads carried about in horrid triumph on poles; in a word, eight weeks after the opening of the states general on the fifth of May, a revolution was effected, which then excited astonishment, and since that period even terror and alarm in all Europe. On the 17th of July, the king visited the Hotel de Ville in Paris, and surrendered himself, as it were, to his people. From that moment, from being an absolute monarch, he became one of the most limited in Europe. The national assembly, now triumphant, proceeded to the most extraordinary measures. They abolished nobility and the whole feudal system, and, confiscating the possessions of the clergy, rendered them dependant for support, on a public allowance, like the servants of the state; and all the monasteries were suppressed. In October, in consequence of another dreadful riot at Versailles, the king, the royal family, and the national assembly, were removed to Paris. The king was now, in fact, a state prisoner treated with the formalities appendant to royalty, but watched in all his motions with the utmost circumspection. From this irksome situation he attempted to escape in June 1791, with the queen, his sister, the dauphin, and the princess his daughter. He had almost reached the frontiers, when he was arrested at Varennes, and conducted back to Paris. The national assembly completed a new constitution, which was accepted by the king in September of the same year, when a new national assembly was elected. But it was impossible that the king could long submit to the insults, which as they were not punished, seemed to be sanctioned by the national assembly. Some of their decrees which were quite contrary to the spirit of the New Constitution he refused to sanction. This refusal concurring with other circumstances excited the most violent tumults among the profligate populace of Paris. Innumerable libels issued from the press, full of the most malicious and absurd calumnies against the king, queen and the royal family, whom the Jacobin faction endeavoured by the vilest arts to render odious to the people. At last in August 1792, the mayor of Paris, at the head of a deputation from that city, appeared at the bar of the national assembly, and demanded the deposition of the king. Before they could deliberate on this demand, a dreadful insurrection ensued; the Tuilleries, the royal residence, was attacked; the Swiss guards were defeated and massacred; and the king and the royal family took refuge in the national assembly. That body instantly decreed the suspension of the executive power in the hands of the king, and the convocation of a national convention. The king and his family was conveyed to a house in Paris, called the Temple, and there kept in close confinement, with circumstances of the most humiliating degradation. Between the prison and the grave of a deposed sovereign, the distance, it has been observed, is not very remote. The convention met on the 21st of September, and instantly decreed the abolition of royalty, and the formation of a republic on the principles of liberty and equality. In December following, they decreed, that the king should be tried before them. The trial accordingly took place; and this tribunal, exercising at once the incompatible characters of accusers, prosecutors, and judges, condemned the unfortunate monarch; who, in pursuance of their sentence, was publicly beheaded, in the Place de la Revolution, lately called the Place de Louis XV. on the 21st of January 1793. All Europe exclaimed against the injustice and cruelty, not to say the impolicy, of this proceeding. Powers, hitherto neutral in the war, were eager to take an active part in it; and the new republic had to contend with the principal powers of Europe. After the murder of the king, France became a prey to the most afflicting calamities. The people either enslaved by bloody tyrants or oppressed by a lawless mob, harassed by proscriptions, arbitrary imprisonment, massacres, confiscations, submitted patiently to every new oppression, the nobility, clergy and men of landed property, being robbed of their estates, have been either brought to the scaffold; or been obliged to seek safety in poverty and in exile. The country has been wasted by the fury of contending factions; its fertile plains and populous cities desolated by civil war and polluted with blood. With respect to the war, it may be sufficient to state, in general, that after four campaigns, in which great reverses of fortune were experienced, the French nation displayed against the combined powers such wonderful energy and resources, that, before the conclusion of 1795, they were in the entire possession of Savoy, and of the Austrian and Dutch Netherlands, and the whole of Holland. In Spain, Italy, and Germany, they had made such progress as to procure a peace with Prussia and Spain, and form an alliance with the United Provinces. Their commerce, however, was ruined; their finances were supported by a vast emission of compulsive paper currency, and by plunder and confiscation; their armies which fought with the ardour of enthusiasm, were recruited by despotic requisitions. The campaign of 1796 was carried on with various success. In September they met with a reverse of fortune, and were driven from almost all their newly acquired dominions. The army under Bonaparte were more successful; they defeated the Imperialists in several obstinate engagements; took Mantua, and threatened the Imperial capital itself. The emperor was therefore induced to commence a negotiation for peace. Rastadt was the place appointed for a congress of deputies from the states of Germany. During this negotiation the French employed themselves in executing other ambitious enterprises. Under pretence of an insult offered to their ambassador at Rome, they declared war against the Pope, whose capital they took and plundered, and whose government they overturned. They likewise obtained possession of Mentz, blockaded Ehrenbretztein, and forced that important fortress to surrender. Intent upon plans of aggrandizement they sent a formidable fleet and army to Egypt, who overran that country with uninterrupted success till their progress was stopped at St. John D'Acre by the gallant efforts of Sir Sidney Smith. The emperor having now formed alliance with the emperor of Russia determined to submit no longer to the injuries and insults of the French. Hostilities were accordingly commenced, when the French gained some advantages. They were, however, under general Jourdan completely defeated by the archduke Charles, and forced to recross the Rhine. The Austrians in Italy were afterwards joined by the Russians under Suwarrow. The French were vanquished in repeated engagements, and were finally driven out of Italy. The emperor of Russia has since withdrawn from the confederacy, and the campaign of 1800 has terminated unfavourably for the allies by the fatal battle of Marengo. The internal government is at present directed by Bonaparte, who rules with despotic sway. How long the tyrant will remain in his present insecure situation is a question difficult to determine, and indeed foreign to this work. The geographical division of the country, however, requires to be noticed. By the first legislative assembly France was divided into departments, and these departments were subdivided into districts, cantons, and municipalities. The names of the departments, by the constitution of 1795, are Ain, Aisne, Allier, Alps Upper, Alps Lower, Ardeche, Ardennes, Arriege, Aube, Aude, Aveyron, Calvados, Cantal, Charente, Charente Lower, Cher, Correze, Cote d'Or, Cotes du Nord, Creuse, Dordogne, Doubs, Drome, Eure, Eure and Loire, Finisterre, Gard, Garonne Upper, Gers, Under the emperor's offer to their emperor, they declared war, whose capital was plundered, and whose emperor was overturned. They were the possession of Mentz, Metz, and forced the emperor to surrender. The emperor's aggrandizement of his army and navy was such that country after country fell under his power. At St. John's efforts of Sir John's emperor having been with the emperor refused to submit to his insults of the emperor were accordingly the French gained. They were, however, completely defeated by Duke Charles, and the emperor's Rhine. The emperor afterwards joined under Suwarrow, and was vanquished in retreat, and were finally expelled. The emperor of Austria was withdrawn from the campaign of 1800 unfavourably for the emperor's battle of Marengo. Each of these departments has an archiepiscopal or episcopal town; there being now only ten archbishoprics or metropolitan circles, and 73 bishop's sees. The population of France was formerly reckoned at 20,000,000. By an estimate of Mr. Neckar, which has been very much questioned, it amounted to 25,000,000. Since the revolution, on a moderate calculation, no less than 400,000 have perished by massacre or by war, which occasions a considerable diminution in the population of that country. Paris is the metropolis.

France, Isle of, a late province of France, so called, because it was formerly bounded by the rivers Seine, Marne, Oise, Aisne, and Ourque. It now comprehends the four departments of Oise, Seine and Oise, Seine and Marne, and Paris.

France, Isle of, or Mauritius, an island in the Indian Ocean, 200 leagues E of Madagascar. It was early discovered by the Portuguese. After them, the Dutch settled on the S E shore, and gave it the name of Mauritius, in honour of prince Maurice, their stadtholder. But they abandoned it, on their acquisition of the Cape of Good Hope. It then remained uninhabited, till the French landed there in 1720. This island is about 45 leagues in circumference. The climate is healthy; but the soil not very fertile. There are many mountains, some of which are so high that their tops are covered with snow; they produce the best ebony in the world. The vallies are well watered with rivers, and are made very productive by cultivation, of which indigo is the principal object. The town and harbour are called Fort Louis, and are strongly fortified; the town is large and covers a great deal of ground. But in the hurricane months, the harbour cannot afford shelter for more than eight vessels. Here are large storehouses and every thing necessary for the equipment of fleets. The number of inhabitants on the island exclusive of the military, is 8000 whites, and 12000 blacks. Lon. 57 28 E, lat. 20 9 S.

Franckfort on the Maine, an ancient and free imperial city of Germany, in the circle of Franconia. The chief structure is the townhouse, in which is preserved the golden bull, the origin of the fundamental laws of the empire, and here is the chamber in which the emperor is elected. All religions are tolerated at Franckfort under certain restrictions; but Lutheranism is the established faith. It has been repeatedly taken and retaken during the present war, the last time by the Austrians in September 1796. It is seated on the river Maine, 15 miles N E of Mentz, and 350 W by N of Vienna. Lon. 8 40 E, lat. 49 55 N.

Franckfort on the Oder, a flourishing city of Germany, in the middle marche of Brandenburg, formerly imperial, but now subject to the king of Prussia. It is remarkable for three great fairs, and its university. It is 45 miles S E of Berlin, and 72 S of Stetin. Lon. 14 39 E, lat. 52 23 N.

Franche Comte, a late province of France, bounded on the N by Lorraine, on the E by Alsace and Switzerland, on the W by Burgundy, and on the S by Brease. It is 126 miles in length, and 80 in breadth, and abounds in corn, wine, cattle, horses, mines of iron, copper and lead. It was conquered by France in 1674, and ceded to it by the treaty of Nimeguen in 1678. It now comprehends the three departments of Doubs, Jura, and Upper Saone.

Franchenont, a town of Germany, in the bishopric of Liege, 12 miles S E of Liege.

Franciade. See Denys, St.

Francistown, a post town of Hillsborough county, New Hampshire, 15 miles N W of Amherst, and about 85 W of Portsmouth, with 1400 inhabitants.

Francis, Cape, a fine town in the N part of the island of St. Domingo, belonging to the French, who often call it the Cape, by way of eminence. It was almost ruined by the dreadful commotions which attended the French revolution. Lon. 72 18 W, lat. 19 46 N.

F R A

Franconia, a circle of Germany, bounded on the N by the circle of Upper Saxony, on the E by that of Bavaria, on the S by that of Suabia, and on the W by the circles of the Rhine. The middle is fertile in corn, wine and fruits, but the borders are full of woods and barren mountains. The Franks, who conquered France, came from this province, and gave their name to that kingdom.

Franker, or Franker, a town of the United Provinces, in Friesland, with a castle and university. The public buildings and palaces are magnificent. It is seven miles W of Lewarden. Lon. 5 33 E, lat. 53 11 N.

Frankendal, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine. It has been often taken and retaken, the last time by the allies in 1794. It is seated near the Rhine, seven miles S of Worms. Lon. 8 29 E, lat. 49 25 N.

Frankenstein, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine, 12 miles N W of Landau. Lon. 7 55 E, lat. 49 18 N.

Frankfort, a handsome post town in Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, 5 miles N E of the city. This has been a favorite retreat of the citizens, whenever Philadelphia has been visited with the yellow fever, and has experienced a considerable increase as well as improvement in its buildings from this cause.

Frankfort, a post town of Hancock county, Maine; situated on the W side of Penobscot river, a few miles above the head of Penobscot Bay.

Frankfort, a town in Virginia, the capital of Pendleton county, situated at the foot of the Allegheny mountain, 55 miles N of Bath, on the S branch of the river Potowmac; here is a post office.

Frankfort, the capital of the state of Kentucky, situated in Franklin county, on the N side of the river Kentucky. Here is a post office; and the inhabitants are estimated at 800.

Franklin, a county of Pennsylvania, 30 miles long and 24 broad. The inhabitants in 1790 were computed at 15,665. Chambersburg is the capital.

Franklin, a post town of Pendleton county, Virginia, 191 miles W from the city of Washington.

Frauenfeld, a town of Switzerland, capital of the Thurgau. It is seated on an eminence, and was the place, where since 1712, the deputies of the Swiss cantons held their general diet. Lon. 8 56 E, lat. 47 35 N.

Fraustadt, a town of Silesia, remarkable for a battle gained by the Swedes over the Saxons, in 1706. It is 20 miles N W of Glogaw. Lon. 16 3 E, lat. 51 48 N.

Frazersburgh, a small town in Aberdeenshire, on the German Ocean, with a tolerable harbour. It is seated close by a promontory, called Kinnaird's Head, on which is a lighthouse, 40 miles N of Aberdeen. Lon. 1 37 W, lat. 57 35 N.

Fredenburgh, a town of Westphalia, 50 miles W of Cassel. Lon. 8 16 E, lat. 51 10 N.

Frederica, a town of the United States, in St. Simon's island, on the coast of Georgia. Lon. 80 20 W, lat. 31 6 N.

Frederica, a village (with a post office, in Kent county, Delaware) containing 250 inhabitants.

Frederica, a post town on St. Simons island, state of Georgia; situated at the mouth of Alatamaha river. Here Gen. Ogelthorpe planted a colony of Highlanders, and erected a fort in the year 1736; for which purpose the British parliament granted an aid of 10,000*l.* sterling.

Fredericsburg, a castle and palace of the king of Denmark, in the isle of Zealand, 15 miles N W of Copenhagen. Lon. 12 25 E, lat. 55 52 N.

Fredericksburg, a post town in Spottsylvania county, Virginia; seated on the S side of the river Rappahannoc, 66 miles N W of Richmond, and 62 S W of Washington.

Fredericsburg, a Danish fort on the Gold Coast of Guinea, near Cape Three-points, 62 miles W S W of Cape Coast Castle. Lon. 1 5 W, lat. 4 30 N.

Frederickshall, or Fredericksstadt, a sea port of Norway, in the province of Aggerhuys, situate on the extremity of the Swinesund, at the mouth of the river Tist. It is the most regular fortress in this part of Norway, containing an arsenal amply supplied. The harbour is safe and commodious; but the large quantity of saw-dust brought down the river, from the different saw mills, occasions an annual expence to clear it away. This town is 51 miles village (with a post office) in Delaware county, Delaware) contains about 100 inhabitants.

post town on St. Simons Island, Georgia; situated at the mouth of the Altamaha river. Here the Spaniards planted a colony of slaves, and erected a fort in the year 1733, for which purpose the British government granted an aid of £10,000.

a castle and palace of the king of Denmark, in the island of Hven, N W of Copenhagen. Lon. 55 52 N.

a post town in Spottsylvania county, Virginia; seated on the river Rappahannock, about 10 miles S W of Richmond, and 62 S W of Petersburg.

a Danish fort on the coast of Guinea, near Cape Mesurado, 2 miles W S W of Cape Mesurado. Lon. 1 5 W, lat. 4 30 N. It is called Frederickstadt, a sea fort, in the province of Agadez, on the extremity of the continent, at the mouth of the Niger, is the most regular port of Norway, containing about 1000 inhabitants, and is abundantly supplied. The harbor is commodious; but the trade is not so much as it was, from the different saw mills, which have brought an annual expence to the country. This town is 51 miles

S E of Christiania. Lon. 10 55 E, lat. 59 12 N.

Fredericksham, a neatly built town of Russia in Carelia, whose streets go off like radii from a centre. It is seated near the gulf Finland.

Frederickstadt, a town of Denmark, in S Jutland, seated on the river Eyder, 17 miles S W of Sleswick. Lon. 9 43 E, lat. 54 30 N.

Frederickstein, a strong fortress of Norway. It is situated on the summit of an almost perpendicular rock, which overhangs the town of Frederickshall, and has never been taken. It was besieged in 1718, by Charles XII. of Sweden, who was killed by a musket-shot.

Fredericktown, the principal town of Frederick county, Maryland, situated on Monocacy creek, about 42 miles W of Baltimore, 21 E by N of Harper's Ferry on the Potowmac, and 44 from Washington. This is a very thriving town, and contains 4500 inhabitants.

Fischel, a cape of France, in the department of the North Coast and late province of Bretagne, 13 miles W of St. Malo. Lon. 2 20 W, lat. 48 41 N.

Freehold, a post town, and the capital of Monmouth county, New Jersey, with about 3500 inhabitants. It is 13 miles S W of Shrewsbury and 22 N E of Allentown.

Freeport, a post town in Cumberland county, Maine, situated near the head of Casco Bay, about 17 miles N E of Portland.

Friesingen, a town of Germany, capital of a bishopric of the same name, in the circle of Bavaria. It surrendered to the French, September 3, 1796. It is seated on a mountain, near the Isar, 20 miles N by E of Munich. Lon. 11 50 E, lat. 48 26 N.

Frejus, a fortified town of Provence in France, now in the department of Var. By the Romans, it was called Forum Julii; and at that time had a good port on the Mediterranean, which is now above a mile from it. It is the birthplace of Agricola; and near it, some fine remains of antiquity are still visible. It is seated near the river Argens, in a morass, 40 miles N E of Toulon. Lon. 6 50 E, lat. 43 26 N.

Frescati, a town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma. It derives its name from the coolness of the air, and fresh verdure of the fields around. In its neighbourhood are situate some of the most magnificent villas in Italy. It is built on the ruins of the ancient Tusculum, the Tusculan villa of Cicero is at no great distance. Frescati, with Tivoli and Albano, is the favorite abode of the landscape painters who travel into Italy for improvement. Nothing can surpass the admirable assemblage of hills, meadows, lakes, cascades, gardens, ruins, groves, and terraces, which charm the eye, as it wanders among the shades of these delightful villages. Frescati is seated on the declivity of a hill, 12 miles S E of Romæ. Lon. 11 42 E, lat. 41 48 N.

Freudenstadt, a strong town of Swabia, in the Black Forest, built in 1600, to defend the passage into this forest. It is 12 miles S E of Strasburg. Lon. 21 E, lat. 48 28 N.

Freudenthal, a town of Silesia, celebrated for its breed of horses, and manufacture of fine linen. Lon. 17 21 E, lat. 50 3 N.

Freystadt, a town of Hungary, in the county of Neitra, with a strong castle, seated on the Waag, opposite Leopoldstadt. Lon. 18 10 E, lat. 48 32 N.

Freystadt, a town of Silesia, in the duchy of Treschen, 20 miles E of Troppaw. Lon. 18 15 E, lat. 50 0 N.

Frias, a considerable town of Spain, in Old Castile, seated on a mountain, near the river Ebro, 35 N W of Burgos. Lon. 3 46 W, lat. 42 52 N.

Friburg, one of the cantons of Switzerland, surrounded on all sides by the canton of Bern. It is fertile in corn, fruits and pastures.

Friburg, a town of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name. The public buildings, especially the cathedral, are very handsome, and the inhabitants are papists. It is governed in spirituals by the bishop of Lausanne, who resides here, and in temporal by a council, over which an avoyer presides. Its situation is very extraordinary, for only the W side is near plain ground, and all the rest is built upon rocks and precipices, several parts of which are accessible only by stairs and ladders. Three miles from this town is a celebrated hermitage, cut in a rock, which contains a church and steeple, a vestry, a kitchen, a large hall, two rooms on each side, two pair of stairs, and a cellar. The church is 63 feet long, 36 broad, and 22 high; but the most wonderful thing of all is the steeple, which is 70 feet high above the rock: and the chimney of the kitchen is 90 feet in height. It is almost inconceivable how one man, with his servant, could perform so difficult a work, though they were 25 years about it. Friburg is seated on the river San, 15 miles S W of Bern. Lon. 6 55 E, lat. 46 48 N.

Friburg, a town of Suabia, capital of Briagaw; remarkable for the steeple of the great church and for its university. The inhabitants are famous for polishing crystal and precious stones. It surrendered to the French in June 1796. It is seated on the river Triser, 10 miles E of Brisach, and 26 S of Strasburg. Lon. 7 57 E, lat. 48 10 N.

Fricenti, an episcopal town of Naples, in Principato Ulteriore, near the river Triapalto, 20 miles S E of Benevento. Lon. 15 9 E, lat. 40 59 N.

Friedberg, an imperial town of Germany, in Veteravia, seated on a mountain, 15 miles N E of Francfort. Lon. 8 46 E, lat. 50 10 N.

Friedberg, a town of Germany, in Bavaria, with a castle, taken and plundered by the Swedes in 1632. It is 30 miles N W of Munich. Lon. 11 10 E, lat. 40 23 N.

Friedberg, a town of Germany, in Misnia, remarkable for its mines, and for being the burying-place of the princes of the house of Saxony. It is seated on the Multa, 15 miles S W of Dresden. Lon. 23 36 W, lat. 51 0 N.

Friedberg, a town of Germany, in Thuringia, seated on the Unstrue, 30 miles W of Leipsick. Lon. 11 41 E, lat. 51 19 N.

Friedberg, the name of two small towns in Silesia; the one in the dutchy of Javer, and the other in the dutchy of Schweidnitz. The last is remarkable for a battle gained there by the king of Prussia, over the Austrians, in 1743.

Friding, a town of Suabia, on the Danube, 30 miles N E of Constance. Lon. 9 31 E, lat. 48 11 N.

Frieland, a town of Bohemia, on the confines of Silesia, 55 miles E of Dresden. Lon. 15 15 E, lat. 52 4 N.

Fridlingen, a town of Suabia, three miles E of the Rhine, and four N of Basle. Lon. 7 36 E, lat. 47 40 N.

Friendly Islands, a group of islands in the South Pacific Ocean, so named by capt. Cook, in 1773, on account of the friendship that appeared to subsist among the inhabitants; and their courteous behaviour to strangers. Tasman, a Dutch navigator, first touched here in 1643, and gave the names of New Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Middleburg, to three of the principal islands. Captain Cook explored the whole cluster, which he found to consist of more than 20 islands, the principal of which are Tongataboo, or Amsterdam; Eaoo-we, or Middleburg; Annamooka, or Rotterdam; Hapace, and Lefouga. The first, which is the largest, lies in 174 46 W, lon. and 21 9 S lat. The general appearance of these islands convey an idea of the most exuberant fertility; the surface, at a distance, seems entirely clothed with trees of various sizes, some of which are very large, particularly the tall cocoa-palm, and a species of fig with narrow pointed leaves. On closer examination, they are almost wholly laid out in plantations, in which are some of the richest productions of nature; such as bread-fruit and cocoa-nut trees, plantains, yams, sugar-canes, and a fruit like a nectarine. The stock of quadrupeds is scanty; but they received from captain Cook some valuable additions, both to the animal and vegetable kingdom. Their domestic fowls are as large as those of Europe. Among the birds are parrots and paroquets of various sorts, which furnish the red feathers so much esteemed in the Society Isles. The numerous reefs and shoals afford shelter for an endless variety of shell-fish. These islands are all inhabited by a race of people, who cultivate the earth with great industry; and nature, assisted by a little art, appears nowhere in greater splendour. Agriculture, architecture, boat-building, and fishing are the employments of the men; to the women is confined the manufacture of cloth.

Friesach, a town of Germany, in the archbishopric of Saltzburg, with a strong castle, on a mountain. It is 36 miles S E of Saltzburg. Lon. 14 12 E, lat. 47 12 N.

ater, on the E by the county of Oldenburg, on the W by the provinces of Groningen, and on the N by the sea, being about 50 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. The country being level and low, is obliged to be secured against inundations by expensive dykes.
It is a very fertile country, and feeds a great number of cattle; but it was greatly damaged by an inundation in 1717, and the repair of the dykes cost an immense sum. The principal towns are Norden, Leer, Essena, Whitmunde, and Aurick. Embden was an imperial city, and the principal place in the country; but now belongs also to the king of Prussia, who bought it of the Dutch.

Friesland, West, another name for that part of Holland, called North Holland. The states of Holland hence take the title of the states of Holland and West Friesland.

Friuli, a province of Italy, bounded on the N by Carinthia, on the S by the gulf of Venice, on the E by Carniola and the gulf of Triesto, and on the W by the Trevisano and Bellunese. It is fertile in wine and fruits, and subject partly to the Venetians, and partly to Austria. Udina is the capital.

Frobisher's Straits, a little N of Cape Farewell, and West Greenland, discovered by Sir Martin Frobisher. Lon.

Frodingham, a town in the E riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Thursday, 36 miles E of York, and 194 N of London. Lon. 0 12 W, lat. 53 36 N.

Frodsham, a town in Cheshire, with a castle at the Wend, and a market on Wednesday. It is seated near the Mersey, by Frodsham Hills, the highest in the county, 11 miles N E of Chester, and 182 N N W of London.
Lon. 2 48 W, lat. 53 21 N.

Frome, or Froom, a river in Dorset-shire, which comes from the S W part of the county to Dorchester, and proceeding to Wareham empties itself into the bay that forms the harbour of Poole.

Frome, a river in Somersetshire, which flows by the town of Frome, and unites with the Avon at Bristol.

Frome, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Wednesday. Their chief manufacture is second cloths. It is seated on the Frome, 12 miles S of Bath, and 104 W by S of London. Lon.

Fronteira, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, 19 miles N E of Estremos.

Frontigniac, a town of France, in the department of Herault and late province of Languedoc, remarkable for its excellent muscadine wines. It is seated on Lake Maguieone, 14 miles S W of Montpellier. Lon. 3 48 E, lat. 43 46 N.

Front Royal, a town in Frederick county, Virginia, on the E side of Shenandoah river, near the Blue-Ridge mountain, 20 miles S of Winchester, and 38 N of Culpepper. Here is a post-office.

Froyen, an island in the North Sea, about 35 miles in circumference, and situated near the coast of Norway.
Lon. 9 0 E, lat. 63 46 N.

Fruingen, a beautiful town of Swisserland, situated in the canton of Bern, 31 miles S E of Friburg.

Fryberg, a post town of York county, Maine; lying on the N branch of Saco river, 58 miles N W of Portland, and 648 from Washington.

Fuego, one of the Cape de Verd Islands, in the Atlantic Ocean. It is much higher than any of the rest, and seems to be a single mountain at sea, but on the sides there are deep vallies.
It is a volcano, which burns continually, and may be seen a great way off at sea. The Portuguese, who first inhabited it, brought negroes with them, and a stock of cows, horses, and hogs; but now the chief inhabitants are blacks, of the Romish religion. It is 300 miles W of Cape de Verd. Lon.
24 30 W, lat. 14 54 N.

Fuen-hou-fou, an extensive and populous city of China, in the province of Petcheli, celebrated for the beauty of its streets and triumphal arches. It has under its jurisdiction two cities of the second rank, eight of the third, and many fortresses, which bar the entrance of China against the Tartars. It is seated near the great wall, amid mountains.

Fuen-tcheou-fou, a commercial city of China, in the province of Chang-sii. It is noted for its baths and springs, which are almost as hot as boiling water, and attract a great number of strangers. Its district contains one city of the second, and seven of the third class. It is seated on the river Fuen-ho, 250 miles S W of Peking.

Fuente-Dueña, a town of Spain in New Castile, seated on the Tajo, 35 miles S E of Madrid. Lon. 3 0 W, lat. 40 14 N.

Fuensen, a town of Suabia, belonging to the bishop of Augsburg, with an ancient castle. It is seated on the Lech, 50 miles S by E of Augsburg. Lon. 11 15 E, lat. 47 40 N.

Fuidental, a town of Silesia, in the dutchy of Troppaw, seated near the Mohra, 16 miles W by S of Troppaw.

Fula, or Thule, one of the Shetland Islands, W of Mainland, thought by some to be the Ultimata Thule of the ancients.

Fulde, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, with a celebrated abbey, whose abbot is primate of the abbeys of the empire, and sovereign of a small territory between Hesse, Franconia, and Thuringia. It is seated on the Fulde, 55 miles S of Cassel. Lon. 9 43 E, lat. 50 40 N.

Fulham, a village in Middlesex, four miles W by S of London, seated on the Thames, over which is a wooden bridge to Putney. It has been the demesne of the bishops of London ever since the conquest: here they have a palace; and in the church-yard are the tombs of several of the prelates of that see.

Funchal, the capital of Madeira, situated round a bay, on the gentle ascent of the first hills, in form of an amphitheatre. An old castle, which commands the road, stands on the top of a steep black rock, surrounded by the sea, at high-water. On a neighbouring eminence above the town is another, called St. John's Castle; and on the seaside are several batteries. The streets are narrow, ill-paved, and dirty. The houses are built of freestone, or of brick; but they are dark, and only a few of the best, belonging to the English merchants, or the principal inhabitants, are provided with glass windows; all the others have a kind of lattice-work in their stead, which hangs on hinges, and may be lifted up occasionally. Lon. 17 6 W, lat. 32 38 N.

Fundy, a bay of North America, between New England and Nova Scotia, remarkable for its tides, which rise to the height of 50 or 60 feet, and flow very rapidly.

Funen, an island of Denmark, 340 miles in circumference; separated from Jutland by a strait called the Little Belt, and from Zealand by the Great Belt. It is remarkably fertile in pasture and grain, and exports to Norway, barley, oats, rye, and peas. Odensee is the capital.

Furness, a town of Austrian Flanders, seated near the German Ocean, on the canal from Bruges to Dunkirk, which was destroyed by the English forces in 1798. It was one of the barrier towns; but, in 1781, the emperor Joseph II. expelled the Dutch garrison. It surrendered to the French in 1793, and is 12 miles E of Dunkirk. Lon. 2 45 E, lat. 51 4 N.

Furruckabad, a district of Hindoostan Proper, contiguous to the W bank of the Ganges, and surrounded by the dominions of Oude. It is little more than 30 miles in extent, and belongs to a chief of the Patan Rohilla tribe. Its capital is of the same name. Lon. 79 30 W, lat. 27 28 N.

Furstenburg, a principality of Suabia, bounded by the dutchy of Wirtemberg, the county of Hohenburg and other territories of the house of Austria, by the Brigaw, the Black Forest, and the lake and bishopric of Constance. In this state the river Danube takes its rise.

Furstenburg, the capital of a principality of the same name, in Suabia, with a castle, seated on a mountain, near the Danube, 17 miles S of Rotweil. Lon. 9 0 E, lat. 47 53 N.

Furstenfeld, a town of Lower Stiria, with a castle, on the river Ausnitz, 50 miles S of Vienna. Lon. 16 5 E, lat. 47 23 N.

Furstenwall, a town of Germany, in the middle marche of Brandenburg; seated on the Spree, 20 miles W of Francfort on the Oder. It was taken by the Swedes in 1631. Lon. 14 8 E, lat. 52 23 N.

of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Agra, seated under a range of hills, the southern boundary of an immense plain, in which for the greatest part, not a shrub is to be seen, and the soil is light, and almost as fine as hair-powder; a circumstance productive of the most disagreeable effects, when this fine dust is taken up by the hot winds from the westward. Its situation too is unhealthy, from the indifferant water with which the whole country ab-bounds. However the country immediately near the town is in tolerable cultivation. On the summit of the highest hill is a large mosque built by the emperor Achar, in the first style of Moorish architecture; and at the foot of this hill are the ruins of an imperial palace, which occupy a great extent of ground. It is 42 miles W of Agra. Lon. 77 45 E, lat. 27 0 N.

Fyers, a river of Inverness-shire, in Scotland, which, descending from the S, flows toward Loch Ness. Over this river is built a stupendous bridge, on two opposite rocks; the top of the arch being above 100 feet above the surface of the water. A little below the bridge is the celebrated Fall of Fy-ers, where a great body of water darts through a narrow gap between two rocks, then falls over a vast precipice into the bottom of the chasm, where the foam rises and fills the air like a cloud of smoke.

Fyne, Loch, an inlet of the Atlantic in Argyleshire, near 40 miles in length, noted as the resort of the herringshoals, and numerous fishing vessels. It receives and returns a tide on each side of the isle of Arran, which is directly opposite its entrance.

Fyzabad, a large city of Hindoostan Proper, in the territory of Oude, of which it was once the capital. Here are the remains of a vast building, the palace of the late nabob Sujah ul Dow-lah. The city is very populous; but since the removal of the court of Oude to Lucknow, the people are of the lowest class. It is seated on the Go-gra, a large river from Thibet, and is 80 miles E of Lucknow, and 500 N W of Calcutta. Lon. 82 30 E, lat. 23 34 N.

Gaieta, an ancient town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, with a fort, a citadel, a harbour, and a bishop's see. It was taken by the Austrians, in 1707, and by the Spaniards in 1734. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, near the sea, 30 miles N W of Capua.
 Lon. 13 47 E, lat. 41 30 N.

Gaillac, a town of France, now in the department of Tarn, lately in the province of Languedoc, remarkable for its wines. It is seated on the Tarn, 1 miles S W of Alby. Lon. 2 5 E, lat.
 43 54 N.

Gaillon, a town of France, in the department of Eure and late province of Normandy, remarkable for its archiepiscopal palace, which lately belonged to the archbishop of Rouen. It is five miles from Andely, and 22 from Rouen.

Gainsborough, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Tuesday, seated near the river Trent, over which is a handsome stone bridge. It is a pretty large well-built town, its river being accessible to vessels of sufficient size to navigate the sea: and serves as a place of export and import for the N part of the county, and for Nottinghamshire.
 It is 17 miles N W of Lincoln, and 151 N by W of London. Lon. 0 36 W,
 lat. 53 28 N.

Gairloch, a large bay of Scotland, on the W coast of Ross-shire. In this bay, which gives name to a tract of land near it, the fishing of cod, and other white fish is very considerable.

Gaissee, a village of Switzerland in Rhode exterior, which is the protestant division of the county of Appenzel. It is much resorted to on account of its goat's whey, which is brought from a neighbouring mountain.

G A L

Galacz, a town of Bulgaria, seated near the Danube, between the mouths of the Pruth and Seret.

Galashiels, a village in Selkirkshire, seated on the Gala, near its confluence with the Tweed. Here is a flourishing manufacture of woollen cloth and flannels, and superior cloths have been tried with tolerable success. It is 25 miles S by E of Edinburgh.

Galaso, a river of Naples, in Otranto, which rises in the opening near Oria, and falls into the gulf of Taranto.

Galata, the principal suburb of Constantinople, seated opposite the seraglio, on the other side of the harbour. It is inhabited by Christians of all sorts, as well as Jews, who exercise their religion publicly; and here wine is sold in taverns, which is not allowed in the city itself.

Galfally, a town of Ireland, in the county of Tipperary, 23 miles S E of Limerick. Lon. 8 20 W, lat. 52 15 N.

Galicia, a large country in the S of Poland, which consists of that part of Little Poland, which lies on the S side of the Vistula, almost the whole of Red Russia, and a slip of Podolia. It was forcibly seized by the Austrians in 1772, and incorporated into the Austrian dominions, under the appellation of the kingdoms of Galicia and Lodomeria.

Galicia, a province of Spain, bounded on the N and W by the Atlantic, on the S by Portugal, and on the E by the Asturias and Leon. The air is temperate along the coast, but in other places cold and moist. It is thin of people. The produce is wine, flax, and citrons. Here also are good pastures, copper, and lead; and the forests yield wood for building of ships. St. Jago de Compostella is the capital.

Galicia, New. See Guadalajara.
Galistia, a town of Spain in Estramadura, 10 miles N W of Placentia. Lon. 5 8 E, lat. 40 2 N.

Gall, St. or St. Gallen, a town of Switzerland, in Thurgau, with a rich abbey, whose abbot is titular prince of the German empire, and formerly possessed the sovereignty of the town; but the inhabitants shook off his authority, and became independent. The town is entirely protestant, and its government aristo-democratical. The subjects of the abbot, whose territory is distinct, are mostly catholics. It is a cheerful neat town, situated in a fine well-watered valley in the centre of the abbot's territories, close to the abbey in which that prince resides, who is reciprocally surrounded by the town. In the abbey is an ancient library which contains several valuable MSS of the classics and gospels. The linen manufacture has flourished here for many years, and still preserves its reputation. Its effects are very sensibly felt in the competent wealth which it has diffused through all ranks. It carries on likewise manufactures of muslin and embroidery. It is 37 miles N E of Zurich. Lon. 9 20 E, lat. 47 26 N.

Galla, a fort of Ceylon, belonging to the Dutch, who drove the Portuguese thence in 1640. Some call it Punta de Gallo. Lon. 80 30 E, lat. 6 20 N.

Gallatin, a town in Sumner county, Tennessee, named in honour of a General who presides at the head of the treasury of the United States. This town is 33 miles N E of Nashville, and 714 from Washington, and has a post office.

Gallipago Islands, a number of islands in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by the Spaniards, to whom they belong. They are not inhabited; but the Spaniards touch here for fresh water and provisions, when they sail from America to Asia. Here are a great number of birds, and excellent tortoises. They lie under the equator, the centre island in lon. 85 30 W.

Gallipoli, a seaport of Naples, in Terra D'Otranto, with a bishop's see and a fort. This place is a great mart for olive oil. It is seated on a rock, surrounded by the sea, and joined to the mainland by a bridge, 23 miles W of Otranto. Lon. 18 5 E, lat. 40 20 N.

Gallipoli, a seaport of Turkey, in Europe, in Romania, with a bishop's see. It contains about 10,000 Turks, 3500 Greeks, beside a great number of Jews. It is an open place, and has no other defence than a sorry square castle. The houses of the Greeks and Jews have doors not above three feet and a half high, to prevent the Turks riding into their houses. It is seated on a strait of the same name 100 miles S W of Constantinople. Lon. 26 59 E, lat. 40 26 N.

Gallipoli, a strait between European and Asiatic Turkey. It is defended at the S W entrance by the Dardanelles, and forms the communication between the Archipelago and the sea of Mamo-ra.

Galway, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, 82 miles in length, and 42 in breadth; bounded on the N by the Atlantic, and the counties of Mayo and Roscommon; on the E by Roscommon, West Meath, and King's county; on the S W by Tipperary; on the S by Galway Bay and Clare; and on the W by the Atlantic. The river Shannon washes the frontiers of the E and S E, and forms a lake several miles in length. It contains 136 parishes, and formerly sent eight members to the Irish parliament.

Galway, a seaport of Ireland, capital of a county of the same name. It is surrounded by strong walls; the streets are large and straight; and the houses are generally well built of stone. Its harbour is defended by a fort, and it has a good foreign trade, being seated on a bay of the same name, on the Atlantic Ocean, 40 miles W S W of Athlone, and 100 W of London. Lon. 9 0

Balls-town, and 436 from Washington.

Gambia, a great river of Africa, which, running from E to W, falls into the Atlantic Ocean, between Cape Verd on the N, and Cape St. Mary on the S. It overflows the country annually, like the Nile. The Gambia was long supposed to be a branch of the Niger; but its source was determined by Mr. Park to be 130 geographical miles W of that river: its branches are numerous, and intersect the country for about 200 miles from E to W.
It abounds with fish, some species of which are excellent food: it is deep and muddy, and the banks are covered with impenetrable thickets of mangrove; the whole of the adjacent country, indeed, appears to be flat and swampy.

Gandicotta, a town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, remarkable for a strong fortress, and a diamond mine near it.
It is seated near the river Pehnar, between Gooty and Cuddapa.

Gangea, or Ganja, a town of Persia, in the province of Erivan, 105 miles S

Ganges, a large and celebrated river of Asia, which has its source in two springs, on the W side of Mount Ken-taiffe, in Thibet. There two streams take their course westward, inclining considerably to the N, for a course of about 300 miles, when meeting the great ridge of Mount Himmaleh, they turn to the S, in which course they unite their waters, and form what is properly called the Ganges. This great body of water now forces a passage through the ridge of Himmaleh, at the distance of 100 miles below the place of its first approach, and, sapping its very foundation, rushes through a cavern, and precipitates itself into a vast basin which it has worn in the rock, at the higher foot of the mountains. The Ganges thus appears, to incurious spectators, to derive its original springs from this chain of mountains. The mind of superstition has given to the mouth of the cavern, the form of the head of a cow; an animal held by the Hindoos in a degree of veneration, almost equal to that in which the Egyptians held their god Apis. From this second source (as it may be termed) of the Ganges, its course becomes easterly, through the rugged country of Siringur, until, at Hurdwar, it finally escapes from this mountainous tract in which it has wandered 800 miles.
From Hurdwar, where it gushes thro' an opening in the mountains, and enters Hindoostan, it flows with a smooth navigable stream thro' delightful plains, during the remainder of its course to the bay of Bengal, which is about 1350 miles. In its course through theseq plains, it receives 11 rivers, some of which are equal to the Rhine, and none smaller than the Thames, besides as many of lesser note. In the annual inundation of this immense river, the country is overflowed to the extent of more than 100 miles in width, nothing appearing but villages and trees, excepting very rarely, the top of an elevated spot, the artificial mound of some deserted village, appearing like an island. The rise of the water, is, on an average, 31 feet. In a word, it is, in every respect, one of the most beneficial rivers in the world, diffusing plenty immediately by means of its living productions, and secondarily by enriching the lands, affording an easy conveyance for the productions of its borders, and giving employment to many thousand boatmen.

G A R

Gangotri, a town of Thibet, situated on the Ganges, 133 miles N of Delhi. Lon. 76 35 E, lat. 33 8 N.

Gangpour, a town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, 226 miles S of Patna. It is in the country of Orissa. Lon. 83 57 E, lat. 21 25 N.

Ganjam, a town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, in one of the Northern Circars, subject to the English. It lies on the bay of Bengal, between a river and the S W end of Chilka Lake. Lon. 85 20 E, lat. 19 22 N.

Gannat, a town of France, in the department of Allier, and late province of Bourbonnois, 30 miles S of Moulins.

Gap, an ancient town of France, in the department of the Upper Alps, and late province of Dauphiny, and lately a bishop's see. It was taken, in 1692, by the duke of Savoy, who burnt a great part of it. Gap is seated on the small river Bene, at the foot of a mountain, in which some mineral waters are found that are deemed febrifuge. It is 27 miles N of Sistrion. Lon. 6 10 E, lat. 44 34 N.

Garack, an island of Asia, in the gulf of Persia, remarkable for the fine pearls fished up on its coasts. Lon. 48 0 E, lat. 28 15 N.

Geni, a town of Italy in the territory of Genoa, seated on the Lemo, 19 miles N W of Genoa. Lon. 8 57 E, lat. 45 40 N.

Gauts, or Indian Appennines, a stupendous wall of mountains, which extend 13 degrees of latitude from Cape Comorin, the S extremity of Hindoostan, to the Tapty, or Surat river, at unequal distances from the coast; seldom more than 70 miles, and commonly about 40; and within one short space only, it approaches within six miles. They rise abruptly from the low country, called the Concan, supporting, in the nature of a terrace, a vast extent of fertile and populous plains, which are so elevated, as to render the air cool and pleasant. This celebrated ridge does not terminate in a promontory, when it approaches the Tapty; but, departing from its meridional course, it bends eastward, in a wavy line, parallel with the river; and is afterward lost among the hills, in the neighbourhood of Burlampour. In its course along the Tapty, it forms several passes or descents toward that river.

Gaza, an ancient and celebrated town of Palestine, three miles from the Mediterranean, with a harbour called New Gaza. It is now very small; but, from appearance of the ruins, it was formerly a considerable place. There is a castle near it, where a bashaw resides. It is 50 miles S W of Jerusalem. Lon. 34 45 E, lat. 31 28 N.

Cawon, or Jaron, a town of Persia, in Farsistan, in whose territory the best dates of Persia are produced. Lon. 51 17 E, lat. 28 15 N.

Cefle, the capital of the province of Gestrike, in Sweden, seated on three branches of a river of the same name, which begins to be navigable here, and falls, in a short distance, into a bay of the Baltic. It is the most commercial town in this northern part of Sweden; and its exports are principally iron, pitch, tar, and planks. It is 65 miles N by W of Stockholm. Lon. 17 0 E, lat. 63 0 N.

Gegenbach, a free imperial city of Suabia, and under the protection of the house of Austria. It is seated on the Kinzia, 12 miles S E of Strasburg. Lon. 8 2 E, lat. 48 24 N.

Geildare, a town of Suabia, near the river Kocher, with a castle, belonging to the lords of Limburg.

Geislingen, an imperial town of Suabia, 17 miles N W of Ulm. Lon. 10 3 E, lat. 48 36 N.

Geismar, a town of Germany, in the principality of Hesse. Lon. 8 57 E, lat. 51 19 N.

Gelhausen, a small imperial town of Weteravia, under the protection of the elector palatine; with a castle, seated on the Kintzig, 25 miles E of Hanau. Lon. 9 15 E, lat. 50 7 N.

Gemappe, a village of Austrian Hainault, three miles W by S of Mons. It is remarkable for a bloody battle between the Austrians and the French, Nov. 5 1792, in which the Austrians were defeated with great loss.

Gembours, a town of Austrian Brabant, with an ancient abbey. Don John of Austria gained a battle here over the Dutch in 1578; and it was twice burnt down, in 1628 and 1712. It is seated on the Orneau, 22 miles S E of Brussels. Lon. 4 51 E, lat. 50 37 N.

Geminiani, St. a town of Tuscany, in the Florentino, seated on a mountain, in which is a mine of Vitriol, 25 miles S S W of Florence.

Gemmingen, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine, 30 miles E of Philipsburg. Lon. 9 13 E, lat. 49 6 N.

Gemund, an imperial town of Suabia, with a manufacture of chaplets or beads, which are sent to distant countries. It was taken by the French in August 1796; and is seated on the Reims, 30 miles N by W of Ulm. Lon. 9 48 E, lat. 48 48 N.

Gemund, a town of Westphalia, in the dutchy of Juliers, seated on the Roer, 24 miles S W of Cologne. Lon. 6 48 E, lat. 50 38 N.

Gemund, a town of Upper Austria, remarkable for its salt works; seated to the N of a lake of the same name, on the river Draun, 20 miles S S W of Lintz.

Genap, a town of Austrian Brabant, with an ancient castle, seated on the Dyle, 15 miles S E of Brussels. Lon. 4 40 E, lat. 50 40 N.

Genep or Gennep, a town of Westphalia, subject to the king of Prussia, and seated on the Neers, five miles S W of Cleves. Lon. 5 48 E, lat. 51 42 N.

Geneva, an ancient, large, and populous town, capital of a republic of the same name, near the confines of France and Switzerland. It is seated on the most narrow part of the lake of the same name, where the Rhone issues in two large narrow channels, which soon after unite. This river divides the city into two unequal parts. Geneva, which lies partly in the plain on the borders of the lake, and partly on a gently ascent, is irregularly built. It is the most populous town of Switzerland, containing 24,000 souls. The treaty of alliance which Geneva contracted with Bern and Friburgh, in 1526, may be considered as the era of its liberty and independence; for, not long after, the dukes of Savoy were deprived of the authority which they possessed over this city; the bishop was expelled; a republican form of government was established, and the reformation introduced. In 1584, Geneva concluded a treaty of perpetual alliance with Zurich and Bern, by which it is allied with the Swiss cantons. During the greater part of the last century, to the year 1789, the history of Geneva contains little more than a narrative of contests between the aristocratic and the popular parties, the history of which would require a volume to relate. It may suffice to observe here, that the years 1768, 1782, and 1789, were distinguished by great revolutions; and that, by the last, the constitution was wisely modelled into a mean between the too popular form established in 1768, and the too aristocratic form established in 1782. The houses of Geneva are lofty; and many, that stand in the trading part of the city, have arcades of wood, which are raised even to the upper stories. These arcades, supported by pillars, give a gloomy appearance to the street, but are useful to the inhabitants in protecting them from the sun and rain. Playing at cards, or drinking at public houses is not permitted; but they exercise their militia, play at bowls, and have other diversions on Sunday; where, however the duties of the day, during the hours appropriated to divine service, are observed with the utmost decorum. In 1794, by the intrigues of the French faction, a revolution or insurrection was brought about, resembling in miniature that of France, by which much mischief was done, and many of the principal inhabitants obliged to fly, after leaving their property at the mercy of the insurgents.

Geneva is 40 miles N E of Chamberry, and 135 N W of Turin. Lon. 6 5 E, lat. 46 12 N.

Geneva, Lake of, a magnificent expanse of water, in Switzerland, which, from the city of Geneva to Villeneuve, extends 34 miles in length; and its breadth in the widest part, is 12. It is in the shape of a crescent, of which Switzerland forms the concave, and Savoy the convex part. Savoy affords a rude and awful boundary of aspiring Alps, craggy, and covered with the ice of ages. From Geneva to the environs of Lausanne, the country slopes, for a considerable way, to the margin of the lake, and is enriched with all the varieties that nature can bestow. The long ridge of the Jura, fertile in pasturage, and varied with woods, backs this beautiful tract. Near Lausanne, the banks rise considerably, and form a charming terrace. A few miles beyond that town is a rapid descent. Near Vevey, begins a plain, which is continued far beyond the end of the lake, but contracting by the approach of the mountains, toward the water; the colour of which is extremely beautiful and clear; and at a distance seems of a lovely blue. The depth is various; the greatest yet found by sounding is 160 fathoms. Like all inland lakes, inclosed with high mountains, it is subject to sudden storms. Among the birds that frequent this lake are the tippet grebes (see Pennant's Brit. Zool. Vol. II. No. 222.) which appear in December, and retire in February. Their skins are an elegant article of luxury, and sell for 12 or 14s. each. These birds are obliged to breed in other places, this lake being almost totally destitute of reeds and rushes, in which they form their floating nests. The river Rhone runs through the whole extent of the lake, from its E to its S W extremity.

Geneva, a town in Ontario county, New York; situated on the N W corner of lake Seneca: here is a post office 42 miles E. of Hartford, and 432 from Washington.

Genevois, a duchy of Savoy, of which Geneva and its territory were formerly a part. Annecy is the capital.

Genoa, a territory and republic of Italy, extending along that part of the Mediterranean called the gulf of Genoa, 152 miles; but its breadth is very unequal, being from eight to 12 miles. Where it is not bounded by the sea, it is bordered from W to E by Piedmont, Montserrat, Milan, Placentia, Parma, Tuscany, and Lucca. It is populous, well cultivated, and fertile near the sea; but the inner parts are mountainous, and barren in several places, having neither trees nor grass upon them.

Genoa, an ancient city of Italy, capital of a republic of the same name. It is situated at the bottom of a little gulf, partly on the flat, and partly on the declivity of a pleasant hill; in consequence of which it appears to great advantage from the sea. It is defended on the land-side, by a double wall, which in circumference is about six miles. Two of the streets consist entirely of a double straight row of magnificent palaces. The others, though clean and well paved, are crooked and narrow. The palaces of the nobility are almost all of marble, and many of them are painted on the outside. The city contains a vast number of palaces, churches, and convents, and several hospitals. The palace where the doge resides, and where the great and little council, and the two colleges of the procuratori and governatori assemble, is a large stone building in the centre of the city; but it contains some fine paintings in fresco; two statues of Andrew and John Doria in white marble; and an arsenal, in which are said to be arms for thirty-four thousand men. All the inhabitants here except the principal ladies, who are carried in chairs, walk on foot, on account of the narrowness or steepness of the streets. The fortifications of the city, towards the sea, are remarkably strong. There are two fine stone bridges over the rivers Bonzevera and Bisagno, the first whereof washes the W, and the other the E side of the city, within which there is also a surprising stone-bridge joining two hills. The harbour, though large, is far from being safe; but no care or expence have been spared to render it as safe and commodious as possible. The trade of Genoa is chiefly in velvets, damasks, plush, and other silks, brocades, lace, gloves, sweatmeats, fruits, oil, Parmesan cheese, anchovies, and medicinal drugs from the Levant; but the badness of the harbour, and the high price of commodities, greatly check its commerce. The nobility carry on velvet, silk, and cloth manufactures. Another very profitable article of trade carried on by them is banking, and dealing in bills of exchange. Before Genoa was taken by the French, the government was aristocratic, and none but the nobility had any share in it. It was taken by the Austrians from the French in 1800; but by the convention after the fatal battle of Marengo, it was ceded to the French. Genoa is 62 miles SE of Turin, and 225 N W of Rome. Lon. 8 41 E, lat. 44 25 N.

George del mina, St. the best fort on the Gold Coast of Guinea, and the principal settlement of the Dutch in those parts. It was taken from the Portuguese in 1630. The town under it, called by the natives Oddena, is very long, and pretty broad. The houses are built of stone, which is uncommon, for in other places they are composed only of clay and wood. It was once very populous, but the inhabitants were Georgia, a beautiful country of Asia, called by the Persians Gurgistan, and by the Turks Gurtshi. It is one of the seven Caucasian nations, in the countries between the Black Sea, and the Caspian, and comprehends the ancient Iberia and Colchis. It is bounded on the N by Circassia, on the E by Dag-hestan and Schirvan, on the S by Armenia, and on the W by the Cuban, or new Russian government of Caucasus.

Georgia is as fertile a country as can be seen; the bread is as good here as in any part of the world; the fruit of an exquisite flavour, and of different sorts; no place in Europe yields better pears and apples, and no place in Asia better pomegranates. The country abounds with cattle, venison, and wild fowl, of all sorts; the river Kur is well stocked with fish; and the wine is so rich, that the king of Persia has always some of it for his own table. The inhabitants are robust, valiant, and of a jovial temper; great lovers of wine, and esteemed very trusty and faithful; endowed with good natural parts, but for want of education very vicious. The women are so fair and comely, that the wives and concubines of the king of Persia and his court are for the most part Georgian women. This country formerly abounded with great cities, as appears not only from its history, but from the ruins of many of them still visible, which show that they must have been very large, opulent, and magnificently built. These were all destroyed by the inundations of northern barbarians from mount Caucasus, as the Alans, Huns, Suevo, and some others, so much noted in history for their strength, courage, and conquests. The latest division of this country is into nine provinces; five of which form what is commonly called the kingdom of Georgia; and four compose the kingdom or principality of Imeritia. The hills are covered with forests of oak, ash, beech, chestnuts, walnuts, and elms, encircled with vines, growing perfectly wild, but producing vast quantities of grapes. From these is annually made as much wine as is necessary for their yearly consumption; the remainder are left to rot on the vines. Cotton grows spontaneously, as well as the finest European fruit-trees. Rice, wheat, millet, hemp, and flax, are raised on the plains, almost without culture. The vallies afford the finest pasturage in the world; the rivers are full of fish; the mountains abound in minerals; and the climate is delicious; so that nature appears to have lavished on this country every production that can contribute to the happiness of its inhabitants. rivers of Georgia, being fed by mountain torrents, are at all seasons either too rapid or too shallow for the purposes of navigation; the Black Sea, by which commerce and civilization might be introduced from Europe, has been till lately in the exclusive possession of the Turks; the trade of Georgia by land is greatly obstructed by the high mountains of Caucasus; and this obstacle is still increased, by the swarms of predatory nations, by which those mountains are inhabited. The Georgians are Christians of the Greek communion, and appear to have received their name from their attachment to St. George, the tutelary saint of these countries. Their dress nearly resembles that of the Cosacks; but men of rank frequently wear the habit of Persia. Travellers accuse the Georgians of drunkenness, superstition, cruelty, sloth, avarice, and cowardice; vices which are every where common to slaves and tyrants, and are by no means peculiar to the natives of this country. The descendants of the colonists, carried by Shach Abbas, and settled at Peria, near Ispahan, and in Masenderan, have changed their character with their government; and the Georgian troops, employed in Persia against the Afghans, were advantageously distinguished by their docility, their discipline, and their courage. The other inhabitants of Georgia are Tartars, Ossi, and Armenians. These last are found all over Georgia, sometimes mixed with the natives, and sometimes in villages of their own. They speak among themselves their own language, but all understand and can talk the Georgian. Their religion is partly the Armenian, and partly the Roman Catholic. They are the most oppressed of the inhabitants, but are still distinguished by that instinctive industry which every where characterizes the nation. Beside these, there are in Georgia considerable numbers of Jews, some having villages of their own, and others mixed with the Georgian, Armenian, and Tartar inhabitants, but never with the Ossi; they pay a small tribute above that of the natives. Teflis is the capital. See Imeritia.

Georgia, the most southern of the United States of America, 600 miles long and 250 broad; bounded on the E by the Atlantic Ocean, on the S by East and West Florida, on the W by the Mississippi, and on the N and NE by North and South Carolina. That part of Georgia which is laid out in counties is divided into the following; Chatham, Effingham, Burke, Richmond, Wilkes, Liberty, Glyn, Camden, Washington, Green, and Franklin. The principal rivers are the Savannah, Ogeechee, Alatamaha, Turtle river, Little Sitilla, Great Sitilla, Crooked River, St. Mary's, and Appalachikola, the Catahoche which springs in this state, and runs the greatest part of its course through it, and the Flint River, which is a considerable part of the same. The winters in Georgia are very mild and pleasant. Snow is seldom or never seen. The soil and its fertility are various, according to situation and different improvements. By culture are produced rice, indigo, cotton, silk, Indian corn, potatoes, oranges, figs, pomegranates, &c. Rice, at present, is the staple commodity; but great attention begins to be paid to the raising of tobacco; the soil being suited to the culture of that plant. The whole coast of Georgia is bordered with islands, the principal of which are Skidaway, Wassaw, Osahaw, St. Catharine's, Sapelo, Frederica, Jekyl, Cumberland, and Amelia. The capital of this state is Augusta.

Georgia, Southern, an island of the South Pacific Ocean, discovered by captain Cook in 1775, and so named by him. It is 31 leagues long, and 10 in its greatest breadth. It seems to abound with bays and harbours, which the vast quantities of ice render inaccessible the greatest part of the year. The valleys were covered with snow; and the only vegetation observed, was a bladed grass, growing in tufts; wild burnet; and a plant, like moss, which sprung from the rocks. Not a stream of fresh water was to be seen on the whole coast. This island lies between 38 13 and 35 34 W lon. and 53 57 and 54 57 S lat.

Gerbes, Gerbi, or Zorbi, an island on the coast of Tunis. It bears no other corn than barley; but has large quantities of figs, olives and grapes, which, when dried, form the principal trade. It depends on the dey of Tripoli. Lon. 10 30 E, lat. 33 56 N.

Gerbevillers, a town of France, in the department of Meurthe and late province of Lorraine, with a handsome castle. The Church of the late Carmelites is very elegant. It is seated on the A-gen, five miles from Luneville.

Gergenti, a town of Sicily, with a castle, and a bishop's see; seated near the river St. Blaise, 50 miles S of Palermo. Lon. 13 24 E, lat. 47 24 N.

Gerisau, a village of Swisserland, on the N side of the lake of Schweitz, at the foot of the Rigi. It is a republic, the smallest in Europe. Its territory is two leagues in length and one in breadth, composed entirely of scattered houses and cottages, of a very neat and picturesque appearance. The inhabitants are computed at about 1200 and are much employed in preparing silk for the manufactures at Basle. This republic is under the protection of the cantons of Lucern, Uri, Schweitz, and Underwalden; and, in case of war, furnishes its quota of men. Gerisau is 12 miles S W of Schweitz.

Germain, St. a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise and late province of the Isle of France, with a magnificent palace, embellished by several kings, particularly Lewis XIV. Here James II. found an asylum, when he fled to France. It is seated on the Seine, near a fine forest, 10 miles N W of Paris. Lon. 2 15 E, lat. 48 52 N.

Germain's, St. a borough in Cornwall, with a market on Friday. It was once the largest town in the county, with a bishop's see, and a cathedral. The town is now mean, consisting chiefly of fishermen's cottages, but is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. It stands near the sea, 10 miles W of Plymouth, and 224 W by S of London. Lon. 4 24 W, lat. 50 22 N.

Germano, St. a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavora, at the foot of Mount Cussano, and belonging to an abbey on the top of that mount. Lon. 13 59 E, lat. 41 13 N.

Germantown, an ancient town in Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania; pleasantly situated 7 miles N by W of Philadelphia: most of the houses are built in one street which is near two miles long. It was originally settled by Germans, and contains about 3500 inhabitants.

Germantown, a post town of Stokes county, North Carolina, 10 miles N E of Bethany the Moravian settlement.

Germany, a country of Europe, 640 miles in length, and 550, in breadth; bounded on the E by Hungary and Poland, on the N by the Baltic Sea and Denmark, on the west by France and the Netherlands, and on the S by the Alps, Swisserland, and Italy. It is divided into ten circles, three of which lie on the N, namely Upper Saxony, Lower Saxony, and Westphalia; three on the S, Austria, Bavaria, and Suabia; three about the middle, Franconia, the Upper and Lower Rhine; the tenth and last is the circle of Burgundy, or ancient Belgium, which formerly consisted of the dutchy of Burgundy, and the 17 provinces of the Low Countries, but these have been long since severed from the empire of Germany. In this country are upwards of 300 sovereign princes and states, most of them independent in their respective territories: the emperor, or head of the Germanic body, is chosen by the nine electors, spiritual and temporal; the ecclesiastical princes, consisting of archbishops, bishops, abbots and abbesses; secular princes, consisting of dukes, marquises, counts, landgraves, and barons, with free cities, either imperial or Hanse towns; both which are sovereign states, and send deputies to the general diet or parliament of the empire. Germany is for the most part level towards the N and E, being a barren sand or marshy soil. On the S. it is encumbered with the Alps; but in the mid-hills and dales, corn fields and meadows, especially on the banks of its rivers, namely, the Rhine, Danube, &c.

It has several fine cities, castles, palaces, and seats, and is more populous than France. Charlemagne, the son of Pepin, and king of France, was the founder of the German empire in the year 800 of the Christian era, being then sovereign of Italy, great part of Spain, and the S of Germany. The empire was divided among Charlemagne's descendants, and the sovereign of Italy and Germany only retained the style of emperor, the princes of the empire being then his feudaries or vassals.
The imperial crown continued hereditary for 300 years after Charlemagne, when the Pope of Rome, in order to diminish the emperor's authority, and increase his own, stirred up the German princes to alter the constitution, and make the imperial dignity elective.
So that during the mutual struggles between the head of the church and the empire, for superiority, several sovereign states were erected in Italy and Germany, independent of either. The emperors, after the breaking of the hereditary line, were at first elected by the body of the people; but the nobility, and great officers of state, observing that this gave occasion to endless confusion, excluded the people from their share in the election and assumed the right of choosing the emperor themselves; and at length the number of electors was reduced to seven, namely, the archbishops of Mentz, Trier, Cologne, the king of Bohemia, the duke of Saxony, the prince palatine of the Rhine, and the marquis of Brandenburg; but upon the palgrave Frederick incurring the ban of the empire, the duke of Bavaria was added as an eighth elector, and the duke of Hanover since that made the ninth. But though the imperial crown was elective, the house of Austria found means by the count of Hapsburg to continue it in their family upwards of 300 years, till upon the failure of the male issue of Austria, in the emperor Charlea VI. the elector of Bavaria was crowned emperor in 1742, who, contending with Maria Theresa queen of Hungary, and daughter to the said Charles, for the hereditary dominions of Austria, he brought himself into great distress, ruined his country, and after a short reign, died in his capital, January 9, 1745. But Francis, grand duke of Tuscany, who married Maria Theresa, was afterwards elected to the imperial dignity, through the interest of Great Britain and its prince the elector of Hanover; and his descendants still sway the Germanic sceptre. The nine above mentioned electors now chuse an emperor, when the imperial throne is vacant, unless a king of the Romans hath been elected in the preceding reign, who succeeds of course. The emperor is the fountain of honour in Germany, disposing of all places and dignities both civil and military, except those that are hereditary, as the great chancellor, treasurer, sword-bearer, cup-bearer, which are only honorary posts with little or no profit. Germany is a fruitful country, particularly in the valleys; and its mountains abound with mines, from which proceed some of the best medicinal springs and baths in Europe, as those at Pyrmont, Baden, Aix-la-Chapelle, &c. The inhabitants are excellent mechanics and chemists, yet among the latter have arisen several pretenders to the grand elixir; as among the former, several projectors have pretended to have found out the perpetual motion.

The invention of printing and gunpowder is generally ascribed to the Germans, and they have also brought clocks, watches, swords, locks, and fire-arms to very great perfection. The manufactures of tin-plates or white iron they have entirely monopolized. They are reputed good painters, engravers, enamellers, and engineers. Their foreign trade they carry on with great success, by means of the rivers Rhine, Elbe, Oder, Weser, and the Baltic Sea; more particularly from Hamburg, Lubeck, Bremen, Stetin, &c. and by land with Italy, Switzerland, France, and Holland.

Gerumenhi, an ancient town of Portugal, in Alentejo, with a strong castle; but was taken, in 1662, by the Spaniards. It is seated on a hill, near the river Guadiana, 18 miles below Badajoz.

Gestrike, a province of Sweden, bounded on the N by Helsingia, on the E by the gulf of Bothnia, on the S by Upland, and on the W by Dalecarlia. It is diversified by forests, rocks, hills and dales, pasture and arable land, lakes and rivers; and the river Dam meanders thro' the whole extent of the province.

Gettiaburg, a post town in Adams' county, Pennsylvania, 28 miles S W of Yorktown, the capital of York county, and 115 westward of Philadelphia.

Geaudan, a territory of Languedoc, in France, bounded on the N by Auvergne, on the W by Rouergue, on the S by the Cevennes, and on the E by Velay. It is a mountainous, barren country; and now forms the department of Lozere.

Geer, or Gower. See Goar, St.

Gex, a town of France, in the department of Aine and late province of Bresse, seated at the foot of Mount St. Claude, between the Rhone, the lake of Geneva, and Switzerland. It produces excellent cheese; and is 10 miles N W of Geneva. Lon. 6 1 E, lat. 46 20 N.

Gezira, a town of Diarbeck, in an island formed by the Tigris, 70 miles N W of Mousul. Lon. 40 50 E, lat. 36 36 N.

Ghanah, or Ghimah, a town of the empire of Cashna, in Africa. It is seated between a lake and the river Niger. It is 90 miles N E of the city of Cashna, and 208 S of Agadez. Lon. 13 12 E, lat. 15 55 N.

Ghent, the capital of Austrian Flanders, and a bishop's see. It is seated on four navigable rivers, the Scheldt, the Lys, the Lieve, and the Moere, which run through the city. It is well situated for foreign trade, and the silk, woollen, and linen manufactures flourish; it also deals considerably in corn. It contains 70,000 inhabitants; but is not populous in proportion to its extent. The cathedral is a noble ancient structure, dedicated to St. Duvoyn; beside this, there are only six parochial churches. The Benedictine abbey of St. Peter is a magnificent edifice; in which, as well as in the churches, are some capital paintings by the best masters. The emperor Charles V. was born here, and here, in 1376, was concluded the famous treaty, called the Pacification of Ghent, the first commencement of the separation of seven provinces from the seventeen which then formed the Austrian Netherlands. Ghent has been often taken; the last time, by the French, in 1794. The city is cut by many canals, which divide it into 26 isles, and over the canals are 300 bridges. It has also two navigable canals; the one to Sas van Ghent, the other to Bruges and Ostend, the last of which was destroyed in 1798, by the British. It is 26 miles N W of Brussels. Lon. 3 49 E, lat. 51 3 N.

Ghergong, a city of Asia, capital of the kingdom of Assam. It is seated on a river which runs, in a short distance, into the Burrampooter, 400 miles N E of Calcutta. Lon. 93 15 E, lat. 25 55 N.

Gheriah, a town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, on that part of the W side called the Pirate Coast. It was lately the capital and principal port of Angria. It is 295 miles S by E of Bombay. Lon. 73 8 E, lat. 17 59 N.

Ghilan, a province of Persia, on the S W side of the Caspian Sea; supposed to be the Hyrcania of the ancients. It is very agreeably situated, having the sea on one side, and high mountains on the other; and there is no entering it but through narrow passes, which may be easily defended. The sides of the mountains are covered with many sorts of fruit trees; and in the highest parts of them are deer, bears, wolves, leopards, and tigers. It is one of the most fruitful provinces of Persia, and produces abundance of silk, oil, wine, rice, tobacco, and excellent fruits. The inhabitants are brave; and the women are accounted extremely handsome. Resht is the capital.

Chilan, St. a town of France, in the department of the North and late province of French Hainault, seated on the Haina, five miles W of Mons. Lon. 3 53 E, lat. 50 28 N.

Chiani, a town of Hindoostan Proper, formerly the capital of an extensive empire of the same name. It is termed the second Medina, owing to the great number of illustrious persons interred here. Lon. 68 20 E, lat. 16 12 N.

Gibraltar, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, near a mountain of the same name, formerly called Calpe, which, with Abyla, on the opposite shore of Africa, were called the Pillars of Hercules. Tarick, a general of the Moors, built a fortress here, which he called Gibel Tarick, that is, Mount Tarick. Since that time a town has been built at the foot of this rock, which is strongly fortified. It can be approached only by a narrow passage between the mountain and the sea, across which the Spaniards have drawn a line, and fortified it, to prevent the garrison from having any communication with the country. It was formerly thought to be impregnable; but, in 1704, it was taken by the confederate fleet, commanded by Sir George Rooke. The Spaniards attempted to retake it the following year, and 500 of them crept up the rock in the night-time, but were driven down headlong in the morning. In 1727, the Spaniards besieged it again, and attempted to blow up the rock, which they found impracticable, and were obliged to raise the siege. It was besieged in the last war, from the 16th of July 1779 to the beginning of Feb. 1783, when the siege was finally raised. But it may be considered as terminated on the 13th of Sept. 1782, on the failure of the grand attack made by the Spaniards, whose dreadful floating batteries were destroyed by red-hot shot from the garrison. The garrison here are cooped up in a very narrow compass, and have no provisions but what are brought from Barbary and England. The strait of Gibraltar is 24 miles in length, and 15 in breadth, and a strong current always runs through it from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean. Gibraltar is 25 miles N of Ceuta, and 45 S E of Cadiz. Lon. 5 17 W, lat. 36 6 N.

Gien, a town of France, in the department of Loiret and late province of Orleannois, seated on the Loire, 76 miles S E of Paris. Lon. 2 43 E, lat. 47 34 N.

Gienzo, a town of Barbary, in Tripoli, 10 miles from the town of Tripoli.

Gierace, an episcopal town of Naples, in Calabria Ulteriori, seated on a mountain, near the sea, 32 miles N E of Reggio. Lon. 16 40 E, lat. 38 13 N.

Giesen, a town of Germany, in the landgrate of Hesse-Cassel, with a castle and a university. It belongs to the house of Darmstadt, and was taken by the French in 1796, but retaken the same year by the Austrians. It is seated on the Lahn, 16 miles W S W of Marburg. Lon. 8 41 E, lat. 50 30 N.

Giga, a small island on the W coast of Scotland, between the Isle of Skye and the peninsula of Cantyre, in Argyleshire, in which county it is included. The inhabitants annually export a considerable quantity of grain.

Giglia, a small island on the coast of Tuscany, with a castle. It makes part of the state of Sienna, and is 15 miles W of Porto Hercole. Lon. 11 16 E, lat. 42 1 N.

Gilolo, a large island, with a town of the same name, in the Archipelago of the Moluccas. It does not produce any fine spices, though it lies near the Spice Islands; but it has a great deal of rice, and the inhabitants are fierce and cruel. It is seated under the line, in lon. 130 0 E.

Gilmantown, a town of Stafford county, New Hampshire, about 52 miles N by W of Portsmouth. The township contained 3750 inhabitants in 1800, and has a post-office, 584 miles from Washington.

Gingen, a free imperial town of Swabia, 16 miles N of Ulm. Lon. 10 13 E, lat. 48 39 N.

Gingee, a large and populous town on the coast of Coromandel. It is strong both by art and nature, being seated on a mountain, whose top is divided into three points, on each of which is a castle. The Great Mogul, in 1690, began a siege, which continued three years to no purpose. It is 33 miles W of Pondicherry. Lon. 79 25 E, lat. 11 42 N.

Giordah, or Giddah, a seaport on the E coast of Arabia, on the Red Sea. It is the port of Mecca, and carries on a great trade. Lon. 39 27 E, lat. 21 30 N.

Giovanazza, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, seated on a mountain, near the sea, 10 miles N W of Bari. Lon. 16 50 E, lat. 41 26 N.

Girona, an ancient and strong town of Spain, in Catalonia, with a bishop's see. It is seated on a hill, on the side of the river Onhal, 45 miles NE of Barcelona. Lon. 2 52 E, lat. 42 0 N.

Giron, St. a town of France, in the department of Ariège, and late province of Couserans, seated on the Sarat, three miles S of St. Lisier. Lon. 1 16 E, lat. 42 53 N.

Girvan, a village in Ayrshire, at the mouth of a river of the same name, almost opposite the rock of Ailsa. Here are some manufactures; particularly in the tanning of leather, and the making of shoes and boots. It is 16 miles S by W of Ayr.

Gisborough, a town in the N riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Monday. It is noted for being the first place where alum was made, as it was formerly for its abbey. It is four miles from the mouth of the Tees, 22 N W of Whitby, and 247 N by W of London. Lon. 0 55 W, lat. 54 35 N.

Gisburn, a town in the W riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Monday. Lon. 2 22 W, lat. 53 55 N.

Giore, a town of France, in the department of Eure and late province of Normandy, seated on the Ept, 28 miles S E of Rouen. Lon. 1 43 E, lat. 49 15 N.

Givet a fortified town in the bishopric of Liege, divided in two by the river Maese, 21 miles S W of Namur. Lon. 4 34 E, lat. 50 13 N.

Givri, a town of Italy, in the Milanese, seated on a lake of the same name, eight miles from Anghierra.

Giula, a strong town of Upper Hungary, on the frontiers of Transylvania. It was taken by the Turks in 1566, and retaken in 1695. It is seated on the Keresblan, 30 miles S W of Great Waradin. Lon. 20 40 E, lat. 46 40 N.

Giuliana, a town of Sicily, on a craggy rock, 12 miles N N E of Zacca, and 30 S S W of Palermo.

Glaciers, a name given to some very extensive fields of ice among the Alps of Switzerland. These glaciers may be divided into two sorts: the first, occupying the deep vallies situated in the bosom of the Alps, and termed by the natives the Valley of Ice, but which Mr. Coxe distinguishes by the name of Lower Glaciers; the second, which clothe the summits and sides of the mountains, he calls the Upper Glaciers. The lower Glaciers are by far the most considerable in extent and depth. Some stretch several leagues in length, that of des Bois, in particular, is more than 15 miles long, and above three in its greatest breadth.

The Lower Glaciers do not as is generally imagined, communicate with each other, they mostly stretch in a transverse direction, and are bordered at the higher extremity by inaccessible rocks, and on the other extends into the cultivated vallies. The thickness of the ice varies in different parts. M. de Saussure found its general depth in the Glacier des Bois from 80 to 100 feet; but questions not the information of those who assert, that in some places, its thickness exceeds even 600 feet. These immense fields of ice usually rest on an inclined plane. Being pushed forward by the pressure of their own weight, and but weakly supported by the rugged rocks beneath, they are intersected by large transverse chasms; and present the appearance of walls, pyramids, and other fantastic shapes, observed at all heights, and in all situations, wherever the declivity exceeds 30 or 40 degrees. But in those parts where the plane on which they rest is horizontal, or only gently inclined, the surface of the ice is nearly uniform: the chasms are but few and narrow, and the traveller crosses on foot, without much difficulty. The surface of the ice is not so slippery as that of frozen ponds or rivers; it is rough and granulated, and is only dangerous to the passenger in steep descents: it is not transparent, is extremely porous and full of small bubbles, which seldom exceeds the size of a pea, and consequently is not so compact as common ice. For the theory of the formation of the Glaciers, the reader is referred to M. de Saussure. The Upper Glaciers may be subdivided into those which cover the summits, and those which extend along the sides of the Alps. Those which cover the summits of the Alps, owe their origin to the snow that falls at all seasons of the year, and which remains nearly in its original state, being congealed into a hard substance, and not converted into ice.

of the Alps is neither pure snow like that of the summits, nor ice which forms the Lower Glaciers, but is an assemblage of both. It contains less snow than the summits, because the summer heat has more power to dissolve it; and because the liquefied snow descending from above, the mass is penetrated with a larger quantity of water. It contains more snow than the Lower Glaciers, because the dissolution of the snow is comparatively less. In a word, there is a regular gradation from the snow on the summits to the ice of the Lower Glaciers, formed by the intermediate mixture of snow and ice, which becomes more compact and less porous in proportion as it approaches the Lower Glaciers, until it unites and assimilates with them.

Glamorganshire, a county of S Wales, 48 miles long and 26 broad; bounded on the N by Carmarthenshire and Brecknockshire, on the E by Monmouthshire, and on the S and W by the Bristol Channel. It lies in the diocese of Landaff; contains 10 hundreds, one city, eight market-towns, and 118 parishes; and sends two members to parliament. The air, in the S part, towards the sea, is temperate and healthful; but the northern part, which is mountainous, is cold and piercing, full of thick woods, extremely barren, and thin of inhabitants. The S part is so remarkably fertile, pleasant and populous, that it is generally styled the garden of Wales; but it has no manufacture. Its principal commodities are lead, coal, iron, and limestone. Its chief rivers are the Romney, Tafée, Elwy, Neath, and Tawy. Cardiff is the principal town, and Swansea the most commercial; but the assizes are held at Cowbridge. See Gower.

Glamis, a village in the S W part of Angussshire, near which is Glamis castle, the ancient seat of the earl of Strathmore, in which is shown the apartment where Malcolm II. was assassinated in 1034.

Glandfordbridge, or Brigg, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on Thursday; seated on the Ankam, which is famous for its fine eels, and has been lately made navigable for sloops to the Humber. It is 23 miles N of Lincoln, and 156 N by W of London. Lon. 0 23 W, lat. 53 35 N.

Glarus, a canton of Switzerland, bounded on the E by the Grissons; on the S by the same, the canton of Uri, and that of Schwetz; and on the N by the river Linth. It is a mountainous country; and the chief trade is in cattle, cheese, and butter. Glarus is surrounded by the Alps, except towards the N; and there is no other entrance but through this opening, which lies between the lake of Wallenstadt and the mountains separating this canton from that of Schwetz.

Glarus, a large town of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name, and seated on the river Linth, 32 miles S E of Zurich. The streets are large, and the houses kept in good repair. Lon. 9 1 E, lat. 46 36 N.

Glasgow, a city in Lanerkshire, which in point of size and importance may be esteemed the second city in Scotland. It is seated on the N side of the Clyde, over which are two stone bridges; one of them an elegant modern structure of seven arches, 500 feet long, and 32 wide; it was completed in 1772. The streets are clean and well paved; and several of them intersecting each other at right angles, produce a very agreeable effect. The four principal streets, which intersect each other at right angles, divide the city nearly into four equal parts; and the different views of them from the cross, or centre of intersection have an air of magnificence. Glasgow was once an archiepiscopal see. There are 11 churches in Glasgow, three of which are contained in the ancient cathedral, which is considered one of the most entire pieces of Gothic architecture in Scotland. St. Andrew's is the finest piece of modern architecture in the city. It was begun in 1739 and finished in 1756. The Tron Church, with the session house at the W end of it, which had been for some time, occupied as a guard-house by the town-guard, was destroyed by fire in 1793. There are several charitable establishments; particularly the merchant's Hospital, and that of the town. Here is a celebrated university; the single college belonging to which is an elegant building. The Tontine tavern, coffee-house, and hotel, for extent and accommodation is perhaps equal to any in Europe. The American and West Indian trade laid the foundation of the opulence of Glasgow; but the former having declined, the merchants, possessed of great capitals and an adequate spirit of industry, turned their view to manufactures, which in many instances they have carried to the highest perfection. The cotton manufacture in particular is carried on in a most extensive scale, and rivals that of Manchester in cheapness and elegance. A pottery has likewise been established which emulates in beauty the Staffordshire ware. The printing types cast here, have been long distinguished for their neatness and regularity; and the glass manufacture has been very successful. The inhabitants are computed at upwards of 70,000. It has the advantage of two canals, besides the Great Canal that joins the Clyde to the Forth; and is 15 miles E S E of Dumbarton, and 45 W of Edinburgh. Lon. 4 2 W, lat. 55 52 N.

Glasgow, Port, a town in Renfrewshire on the S side of the Clyde, erected, in 1710, to serve as the seaport of the city of Glasgow, whose magistrates appoint a bailiff for the government of it. It has an excellent harbour with a noble pier; but still most of the ships that trade to the West Indies, sail from Greenock, and return to that port. The herring fisheries, in the frith of Clyde, form a considerable part of its trade. This port is situated 21 miles W by N of Glasgow.

Glastonbury, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Tuesday. It is seated near a high hill, called the Tor, and is famous for an abbey, some ruins of which still remain; particularly the curious structure, called the abbot's kitchen, which is entire, and of a very unusual contrivance. The last abbot of this place was hanged on the top of the Tor, by order of Henry VIII. for not acknowledging his supremacy; this hill, so called from the tower which stands on it, commands an extensive prospect, and is an excellent seaport. Glastonbury has two churches, and a manufacture of stockings. It is six miles S W of Wells, and 129 W by S of London. Lon. 2 40 W, lat. 51 8 N.

Glatz, a county of Germany, seated between Silesia, Bohemia, and Moravia; and surrounded by mountains, which render it very difficult of access. It is 38 miles long, and 23 broad. It has mines of coal, copper, and iron, good quarries of marble and stone, and fine springs of mineral waters. In 1724, it was ceded to the king of Prussia, by the queen of Hungary.

Glatz, a city of Bohemia, and capital of a county of the same name. It is situated at the foot of the mountains which divide that kingdom from Silesia, near the river Neisse. On the top of the hill is an ancient castle; and the Prussians have not only greatly augmented and improved it, but have built a new citadel. It has been frequently besieged and taken. It is 48 miles S S E of Breslaw, and 82 E N E of Prague. Lon. 16 50 E, lat. 50 25 N.

Glencoe, Vale of, a valley in Scotland, near the head of Loch Etive, in Argyleshire, noted for the cruel massacre of its unsuspecting inhabitants in 1691. King William had published a proclamation, inviting the Highlanders, who had been in arms for King James II. to accept a general amnesty before the 1st of January, on pain of military execution after that period. Alexander Macdonald, laird of Glencoe, on the last day of December, went to Fort William, the governor of which referred him to a civil officer. This made it the first of January before he could reach Inverary, where he surrendered to the sheriff, who, however, accepted his submission, in consideration of his father having taken the oaths, returned to Glencoe, in full assurance of safety; notwithstanding which, he, and his whole clan, were butchered, on the 15th of February, and the whole of that beautiful valley rendered a scene of massacre and desolation.

Glencroy, Vale of, a wild and romantic tract, near the N E extremity of Loch Loung, in Argyleshire. The two ranges of mountains, which overhang this valley, approach each other, and between these the traveller is immured. Their stupendous height, and the roaring of numerous cataracts, that pour over their broken surface, produce an effect awfully sublime.

Glentuce, a town in Wigtonshire, seated on the river Luce, near its entrance into the bay of that name, 16 miles W by S of Wigton.

Glenshee, Spital of, a noted pass of the Grampian mountains in Scotland, a little S of the point where the counties of Perth, Angus, and Aberdeen meet. In 1718, a small body of Highlanders, with 300 S. aiards, took possession of this pass: but at the approach of the king's forces, they retired to the pass at Strachell. They were driven from one eminence to another till night, when the Highlanders dispersed; and the next day the Spaniards surrendered themselves prisoners of war.

Glagau, a town of Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, and well fortified on the side of Poland. It has a castle, with a tower, in which several counsellors were condemned by duke John, in 1498, to perish with hunger. Besides the Papists, there is a great number of Protestants and Jews. It was taken by assault by the king of Prussia, in 1741. After the peace, in 1742, that king settled the supreme court of justice here, it being next to Breslaw, the most populous place in Silesia. It is seated on the river Oder, 50 miles N W of Breslaw, and 115 N E of Prague. Lon. 16 13 E, lat. 51 40 N.

Glomme, the longest river of the province of Aggerhuys, in South Norway, which flows into the North Sea, at Fredericstadt. It receives the river Worme which issues from Lake Mioss. It is not navigable in any part of its course from this lake to Fredericstadt, its stream being intercepted by such frequent cataracts and shoals, as, in some places, to render it necessary to drag the trees, which are floated down, over the ground. At least 50,000 trees are annually floated by this river to Fredericstadt.

Gloucester, a city in Gloucestershire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated on the E side of the Severn, where, by two streams, it makes the isle of Alney. From the middle of the city, where the four principal streets meet, there is a descent every way, which makes it not only clean and healthy, but adds to the beauty of the place. It once contained 11 churches, but now has only five, beside the cathedral of St. Peter, which is an ancient but magnificent fabric, and has a tower, reckoned one of the neatest and most curious pieces of architecture in England. In which cathedral are the tombs of Robert duke of Normandy, son to William the Conqueror, and of Edward II. and there is a whispering palace like to that of St. Paul's at London. It has five hospitals, two free-schools, and a new county gaol; and was fortified with a wall which Charles II. after the restoration, ordered to be demolished. Gloucester is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. Great quantities of pins are made here; and there are 12 incorporated trading companies. Here is a good stone bridge over the river Severn, with a quay, wharfs and customhouse, but most of its business is engrossed by Bristol. It is 24 miles NE of Bristol, and 106 W by N of London. Lon. 2 16 W, lat. 51 50 N.

Gloucester, a maritime and post town in Essex county, Massachusetts, situated near Cape Ann, 14 miles N E of Beverly, and about 18 from Salem, and Marblehead, in the lat. of 42° 40' N. and lon. of 68° 45' W.

Gloucester, a most town and the capital of Gloucester county, Virginia, seated on the N side of York river, 12 miles N E of Williamsburg, and 45 E by S of Richmond.

Gloucester, a small town in Gloucester county, New Jersey, on the E bank of the river Delaware, four miles below Philadelphia.

Gloucestershire, a county of England, 63 miles in length, and 47 in breadth; bounded on the W by Herefordshire and Monmouthshire, on the N by Worcestershire, on the E by Warwickshire and Oxfordshire, and on the S by Wiltshire and Somersetshire. It contains 13 hundreds, one city, 27 market-towns, and 218 parishes; and sends eight members to parliament. The air is generally healthy; sharp in the E, or hilly part, which contains the Cotswold Hills; but, as mild in the rich vale of Severn, which occupies the centre. The W part, which is by much the smallest district, is varied by hill and dale, and is chiefly occupied by the forest of Dean. The staple commodities of the county are its woollen cloth and cheese. Its principal rivers, are the Severn, which is joined to the Thames by a navigable canal the Warwickshire, Avon, the Lower Avon, the Wye, Thames, Coln, and Lech. bishop's see, whose prelate is primate of Poland, and viceroy during the vacancy of the throne. It was the first town built in the kingdom, and formerly more considerable than at present. It is 90 miles N by E of Breslaw, and 125 W of Warsaw. Lon. 17 40 E, lat. 52 28 N.

Goa, a considerable city, of the Hither India with an harbour to the coast of Malabar, in the kingdom of Deccan, in Visiapor. It is the capital of the Portuguese settlements in India, and the seat of a viceroy. It stands in an island, 22 miles in length, and six in breadth; and the city built on the N side of it, having the conveniency of a fine river, capable of receiving ships of the greatest burden, where they lie within a mile of the town. The banks of the river are beautified with a great number of churches, castles, and gentlemen's houses. The viceroy's palace is a noble building, and stands at a small distance from the river, over one of the gates of the city, which leads to a spacious street, terminated by a beautiful church. This city contains a great number of handsome churches and convents, and a stately hospital, the market-place takes up an acre of ground; and in the shops about it may be had the produce of Europe, China, Bengal, and other countries. The houses are large, and make a fine appearance, but are poor furnished. The inhabitants are contented with greens, fruits, and roots, which, with a little bread, rice, and fish, is their principal diet, though they have hogs and fowls in plenty. Their religion is the Roman catholic, and they have a severe inquisition. The clergy are numerous and illiterate; the churches are finely embellished, and have a great number of images. It is remarkable, that only one of the churches has glass windows; for they make use of clear oyster-shells instead of glass, and all their fine houses have the same. Goa has few manufactures or productions, their best trade being in arrack, which they distil from the sap of the cocoa nut-tree. The harbour is defended by several forts and batteries. It is 292 miles S by E of Bombay. Lon. 7 45 E, lat. 15 28 N.

Goar, St. or Gower, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, subject to the landgrave of Hesse Cassel. It stands immediately under the stupendous rock of Rheinfels, and was taken by the French in 1794. It has a considerable commerce in wines and hides, and is 15 miles SE of Coblenz.

Gobcein, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine, 18 miles SE of Philipsburg. Lon. 8 56 E, lat. 49 6 N.

Gobin, St. See Fere.

Goch, a town of Germany, in the dutchy of Cleves, seated on the Neers, six miles S of Cleves. Lon. 5 52 E, lat. 51 39 N.

Goçiano, a town of Sardinia, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle, seated on the Thurso, 25 miles E of Algher.

Godalming, a town in Surry, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Wey, where it divides into several streams, four miles SW of Guildford and 54 of London. Lon. 0 34 W, lat. 51 13 N.

Godavery, or Gonga Godowry, a river of the Deccan of Hindoostan, which has its source 90 miles to the NE of Bombay. After crossing Dowlatabad and Golconda, from W to E, it turns to the SE, and receiving the Bain Gonga, about 90 miles above the sea, besides many smaller rivers separates into two principal channels at Rajamundry; and these subdividing again, form altogether several tide harbours, for vessels of moderate burden. Ingeram, Coringa, Yalam, Bandarmalanka, and Narsapour, are among the places situated at the mouths of this river, which appear to be the most considerable one between the Ganger and Cape Comorin. Extensive forests of teak timber border on its banks, within the mountains, and supply ship-timber for the use of the ports above mentioned.

Godmanchester, a large village in Huntingdonshire, parted from Huntingdon by the river Ouse. It is seated in a rich and fertile soil, which yields great plenty of corn; and is inhabited by a great number of yeomen and farmers. Here is a school called the Free Grammar School of queen Elizabeth.

Godwin Sands, famous sandbanks off the coast of Kent, lying between the N and S Forcland, and as they run parallel with the coast for three leagues together, at about two leagues and a half distant from it they give additional security to the Downs.

the United Provinces, in Zealand, and capital of the island of South Beveland. It communicates with the Scheld by a canal, and is 20 miles E of Middleburg. Lon. 3 50 E, lat. 51 33 N.

Gogmagog Hills, three miles from Cambridge, remarkable for the intrenchments and other works cast up here; whence some suppose it was a Roman camp; and others, that it was the work of the Danes. They are covered with a fine dry carpet of turf; and the people, near these hills, tell strange stories about them.

Gogra, or Soorjew River, a large river which rises in Lake Lankee Dhe, in Thibet, in lat. 33 17 N, and forcing its way through Mount Himmaleh, takes a S E direction, and unites with the Ganges, above Chuprah, in the province of Bahar.

Gohud, a territory of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Agra; subject to a rajah, who is tributary to the Poonah Mahrattas. Gwalior is the capital.

Goochland Court House, the principal seat of justice in Goochland county, Virginia. It is situated on the N side of James River, 30 miles W by N of Richmond, and has a post office, court house, gaol, &c.

Guito, a town of Italy, in the Mantuan, seated on the river Mincio, between the lake of Mantua and that of Garda, 15 miles N W of Mantua. Lon. 10 40 E, lat. 45 16 N.

Golconda, a country of the Deccan of Hindoostan, between the lower parts of the courses of Kistna and Godavery rivers and the principal part of Dowlatabad. It was formerly called Tellingama, or Tilling, and is subject to the nizam of the Deccan. It is most remarkable for its diamond mines, the most considerable in the world. Here are also mines of salt, fine iron for sword-blades, and curious calicoes and chintzes. Hydrabad or Bagnagur is the capital.

Golconda, a celebrated fortress, in a country of the same name, six miles W N W of Hydrabad, and joined to that city by a wall of communication. It occupies the summit of a hill of a conical form and is deemed impregnable. When Aurengzebe conquered the kingdom of Golconda, in 1687, this fortress was taken possession of by treachery.

Goldberg, a town of Silesia, in the duthey of Lignitz, 36 miles W of Breslaw. Lon. 16 23 E, lat. 51 3 N.

Gold Coast, a maritime country of Guinea, where the Europeans have several forts and settlements. It reaches from the Gold River, 12 miles W of Assine, and ends at the village of Poni, eight miles E of Acraw. It includes several districts, in which are two or three towns or villages, lying on the seashore. Seven of these districts are dignified with the title of kingdoms, though they contain but a small tract of land; for the whole Gold Coast is not above 180 miles in length. The negro inhabitants are generally very rich, as they carry on a great trade with the Europeans for gold; and many of them are employed in fishing, and cultivating their rice, which grows in incredible quantities. This they exchange with others for Indian corn, yams, potatoes, and palm oil. Most of the inhabitants go naked; and those who are best clothed have only some yards of stuff wrapped about their middle.

Golden Island, a barren island at the mouth of the river or gulf of Darien, where the Scots attempted to make a settlement in 1698. Lon. 77 10 W, lat. 9 0 N.

Goldingen, a town of Courland, with a castle, seated on the Wela, 60 miles W of Mittau. Lon. 22 21 E, lat. 56 48 N.

Goldsborough, a post town of Hancock county, Maine; situated on the E side of Frenchman's bay, about 50 miles of Eastime, in the lat. of 44° 22' N, and lon. of 67° 52' W.

Guleita, an island of Africa, at the entrance of the bay of Tunis; taken by the emperor Charles V. when he attempted the siege of Tunis, and kept by the Christians several years. It is 29 miles N of Tunis. Lon. 10 20 E, lat. 37 10 N.

Golnaw, a town of Prussian Pomerania, seated on the Ilna, 18 miles N E of Stetin. Lon. 14 59 E, lat. 53 46 N.

Gombroon, a considerable seaport of Persia, in Farsistan, called by the natives Bandar Abassi. The best houses are built of brick, flat at the top, with a square turret, having holes on each side for the free passage of the air; upon these roofs they sleep in the summer season. The common people have wretched huts, made with the boughs of palm-trees, and covered with leaves.

The streets are narrow and irregular. The English and Dutch have factories here, which is a great advantage to the trade of the place. The soil is barren, but provisions brought from other countries are very plentiful. The weather is so hot in June, July and August, that this place is extremely unhealthy; and therefore the English retire to Asseen during those months. It is frequented by people of several nations, as well Europeans as others; and the Banyans are so numerous, that they bribe the governor not to permit any cows to be killed in the town. It is seated in a bay of the strait of Ormus, 120 miles S S E of Kerman. Lon. 56 30 E, lat. 27 28 N.

Gomera, one of the Canary Islands, between Ferro and Teneriff. It has a town of the same name, with an excellent harbour, where the Spanish ships often take in refreshments. Here is corn sufficient to support the inhabitants, and one sugar-work, with great plenty of wine and fruits. Lon. 17 3 W, lat. 28 6 N.

Gondar, the metropolis of Abyssinia, situate on a hill of considerable height, and containing about 10,000 families in time of peace. It is about 10 miles in circumference, and the houses consist only of one story, and most of them resemble a funnel, with the narrow end upwards. They have no shops; but carry on their trade in a large square, where they expose their merchandise to sale, laid upon mats; and gold and rock salt are the only money made use of. Each bar of salt is a foot in length, and they break off as much as they agree for in the purchase of small wares. There are about 100 churches and their patriarch depends on that of Alexandria. The habit of the better sorts is made of silk and cottons; but the common people have only drawers to hide their nakedness. It is 180 miles S E of Sennar. Lon. 37 33 E, lat. 12 34 N.

Gondegama, or Gondlacomma, a river of the peninsula of Hindoostan, which rises near Combam, forms the nominal boundary of the Carnatic on the N, and falls into the bay of Bengal, at Mootapilly.

Gondrecourt, a town of France, in the department of Meuse and late dutchy of Bar, seated on the Orney, 20 miles S of St. Michel. Lon. 5 37 E, lat. 48 30 N.

Gondreville, a town of France, in the department of Meurthe and late province of Lorraine, with a castle and a magnificent hospital. It stands on a hill, on the river Moselle, eight miles from Nanci. Lon. 6 9 E, lat. 48 40 N.

Gonesse, a town of France in the department of Seine and Oise, and late province of the Isle of France, remarkable for the goodness of its bread, which is brought twice a week to Paris. It is the birthplace of king Philip Augustus; and is seated on the Crould, 10 miles N E of Paris. Lon. 2 30 E, lat. 48 58 N.

Gonga, an ancient town of Romania, seated near the sea of Marmora, 37 miles N E of Galipoli. Lon. 37 31 E, lat. 40 53 N.

Gonjah, a kingdom of Africa, between the coast of Guinea on the S, and Tombuctou on the N, supposed by major Rennel to be the Conche of M. d'Anville. Gonjah, the capital, is 870 miles W by S of Cashna. Lon. 6 10 W, lat. 13 20 N.

Good Hope, Cape of, the southern extremity of Africa, in 18 23 E lon. and 34 29 S lat. discovered by the Portuguese in 1493. The Dutch have here built a neat town and fort, which rises in the midst of a desert, surrounded by black and dreary mountains. From the shipping, the town appears pleasantly situated, but at the same time small. On landing, however, you are surprised, and agreeably disappointed, to find it not only extensive, but well built, and in a good style; the streets spacious, and intersecting each other at right angles with great precision. The only landing place is at the E end of the town, where there is a wooden quay running some paces into the sea. To this place excellent water is conveyed by pipes, which makes the watering of ships both easy and expeditious. Close to the quay, on the left hand, stands the castle and principal fortress: a strong extensive work, having excellent accommodations for the troops, and for many of the civil officers belonging to the company. Within the gates, the company have their principal stores; which are spacious as well as convenient. This fort covers and defends the E part of the town and harbour, as Amsterdam fort does the west part. There are two churches in the town and one plain and unadorned for the Calvinists, and a smaller one for the Lutherans. The religion Meurthe and late prom, with a castle and a hospital. It stands on a point of Moselle, eight miles from Metz, Lon. 69 E, lat. 48 40 N. A town of France in the department of Moselle, and late capital of France, remarkable for its bread, which is sent twice a week to Paris. Birthplace of king Philip the First, seated on the throne of France. Lon. 2 30 E, lat. 48 40 N.

A town of Romania, in the department of Marmora, 37 miles from Rome. Lon. 37 31 E, lat. 41 30 N.

A kingdom of Africa, between the equator and the S. coast, on the N. supposed by some to be the Conche of M. Senegal, the capital, is 870 miles from Cashna. Lon. 6 10 W, lat. 12 30 N.

A cape of the southern coast of Africa, in 18 23 E lon. and 34 30 S lat. It is covered by the Portuguese. The Dutch have here a fort, which rises above a desert, surrounded by mountains. From the top appears pleasantly the same time small. However, you are surprisingly disappointed, to find it extensive, but well-built, and of a fine style; the streets intersecting each other at right angles with great precision. The fort is at the E end of the cape, there is a wooden pier which paces into the sea. The water is excellent, which makes the watering both easy and expedient. On the left of the quay, on the left of the castle and principal fort, an extensive work, having accommodations for the many of the civil office of the company. With the company have their barracks; which are spacious and convenient. This fort covers the E part of the town. Amsterdam fort does not. There are two churches, one plain and unadorned, and a smaller one, the herans. The religion of the slaves is as little regarded here as in the colonies of other European states: in other respects, they are treated with humanity, and are lodged and boarded in a spacious house, where they are likewise kept at work. Another great building serves as an hospital for the sailors belonging to the Dutch East India ships which touch here. It is situated close to the Company's gardens, and is an honour to that commercial body, and an ornament to the town. The convalescents have free access to these gardens, where they enjoy the benefit of a wholesome air, perfumed by the fragrance of a number of rich fruit-trees, and odoriferous shrubs, plants, and flowers. The inhabitants of the Cape, though in their persons large, stout, and athletic, have not all that phlegm about them which is the characteristic of Dutchmen in general. The ladies are lively, good-natured, familiar, and gay. The heavy draught work about the Cape, is chiefly performed by oxen, which are here brought to an uncommon degree of docility and usefulness. It is not uncommon to see 16 and sometimes 18 in one of their teams, which the slaves have in the most perfect subjection. One of them places himself on the top of the load, and with a tremendous long whip, which he is obliged to hold with both his hands, manages those creatures with inexpressible address. The inhabitants, in general, travel in a kind of covered waggon, drawn by oxen, which better suit the roughness of the country than more elegant vehicles; but the governor, and some of the principal people, keep coaches, which are much in the English style, and are drawn by six horses. The mountains behind Cape Town are, the Table Mountain, which is the highest; the Sugar-loaf, so named from its form; the Lion's Head, Charles Mount, and James Mount, or the Lion's Rump. From these mountains descend several rivulets which fall into different bays, as Table Bay, False Bay, &c. The view from the Table Mountain is very extensive; and all along the valleys and rivulets among these mountains, is a great number of plantations, this fine colony surrendered to General Clarke and admiral Sir George Keith Elphinstone, September 16, 1795. See Hottentot's, Country of the.

Goompty, a river of Hindoostan Proper, which rises in the Rohilla Country, and flowing S E by Lucknow and Jiwopour, falls into the Ganges, a little below Benares.

Gooty, or Gutti, a strong fortress in the peninsula of Hindoostan, formerly the seat of government of a Mahratta prince, and now subject to the British. It is seated on the Pennar, 25 miles S by E of Adoni. Lon. 77 35 E, lat. 15 15 N.

Goreum, a town of the United Provinces, in Holland, which carries on a considerable trade in cheese and butter. It is seated at the junction of the Linghe with the Wahal, 12 miles E of Dort, and 32 S of Amsterdam. Lon. 4 51 E, lat. 51 51 N.

Gothland, the most southern province of Sweden, being a peninsula encompassed on three sides by the Baltic sea. It contains the provinces of Ostrogothia or East Gothland, Smoland, Westrogothia or West Gothland, the isles of Gothland and Oeland, Wermland, Dalia, Halland, Blekingen, and Scania or Schonen.

Gothland, an island of the Baltic, on the E coast of Sweden. Wisby is its only town. Lon. 19 45 E, lat. 57 0 N.

Gotheborg, or Gottenburg, a flourishing town of Sweden, in West Gothland, seated at the mouth of the Gotha, which forms an excellent harbour: the best situate for foreign trade of any in the kingdom, as it lies without the Sound. The inhabitants have increased considerably within these 30 years, and are now computed to be about 30,000. This flourishing state is attributed to the extension of its commerce, particularly its East India Company, and the success of the herring fishery. It was besieged by the Danes in 1788, who must have taken it, but for the interference of the British minister. Gotheborg is 188 miles S W of Stockholm. Lon. 11 44 E, lat. 57 42 N.

Gottingen, a city of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Brunswick, formerly free and imperial, but now subject to the elector of Hanover. Here George II. founded a university. It is seated on the Leine, 25 miles N E of Cassel. Lon. 9 53 E, lat. 51 32 N.

NE of Tournay. Lon. 3 59 E, lat. 50 47 N.

Grammont, a town of France, in the department of Upper Viene and late province of Limosin. It is 15 miles N E of Limoges. Lon. 1 30 E, lat. 46 1 N.

Grampian Hills, a chain of high mountains in Scotland, running from E to W, nearly the whole breadth of the kingdom. They take their name from the Mons Grampius of Tacitus, whence Galgacus waited the approach of Agricola, and where the battle was fought so fatal to the brave Caledonians.

Grampound, a borough in Cornwall, with a market on Saturday. It has a considerable manufacture of gloves, is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. It is seated on the Valles, 40 miles S W of Launceston, and 244 W by S of London. Lon. 4 49 W, lat. 50 22 N.

Gran, a town of Lower Hungary, with an archbishop's see. It has been several times taken and retaken, but last of all by the Austrians, in 1683. It is seated on the Danube, 87 miles E by S of Vienna. Lon. 18 6 E, lat. 47 46 N.

Granada, a province (formerly a kingdom) of Spain, bounded on the N and W by Andalusia, on the E by Murcia, and on the S by the Mediterranean Sea. It is 175 miles in length, and 75 in breadth. Though a mountainous country, the soil is good; but it has not been well cultivated since the Moors were expelled in 1492. However, it produces corn, wine, oil, sugar, flax, hemp, excellent fruits, honey, wax, and mulberry trees, which feed a great number of silk-worms. The forests produce gall nuts, palm trees, and oaks.

Granada, a large and handsome city of Spain, capital of the province of Granada, with an archbishop's see, and a university. It is built on four hills, and divided into four parts, in one of which is the large church, containing the tombs of Ferdinand and Isabella, who took this place from the Moors in 1492. In another is the palace of the kings of Spain, and an ancient palace of the Moorish kings, with so many rooms that it is like a labyrinth. In the third is the university; the fourth has nothing considerable; but all the public buildings are magnificent. It is seated near the confluence of the Oro with the Granada, an island in the West Indies, the principal of the Grenadines, situate in 61 40 W lon. and between 11 55 and 12 23 N lat. It is the last of the Windward Caribbees, and 30 leagues N W of Tobago. The chief port called Lewis, is on the west side, in the middle of a large bay, with a sandy bottom, and is very spacious. The island abounds with wild game and fish, and produces very fine timber, sugar, tobacco, and indigo. It has been often taken and retaken. In 1795, the French landed some troops and raised an insurrection in this island, which was not finally quelled till June 1796.

Granada, a town of North America, in the province of Nicaragua, seated on the lake Nicaragua. It was taken twice by the French buccancers, and pillaged. The inhabitants carry on a great trade by means of the lake, which communicates with the Atlantic Ocean. It is 54 miles S E of Leon. Lon. 87 0 W, lat. 12 5 N.

Granada, New, an extensive inland country in South America, denominated by the Spaniards the new kingdom of Granada. It is bounded on the W by Popayan; on the N by other provinces of Terra Firma, namely Santa Martha, Rio de la Hacha, and Venezuela; on the S by Peru; and on the E by a country which stretches along the banks of the Orinoko, and is little known, and imperfectly occupied by the Spaniards. New Granada was conquered by the Spaniards in 1536. It is so far elevated above the level of the sea, that though it approaches almost to the equator, the climate is remarkably temperate. The fertility of its vallies is not inferior to that of the richest districts in America; and its higher grounds yield gold and precious stones of various kinds. Its towns are populous and flourishing; and the capital is Santa-Fe-de-Bagota.

Grande-Pre, a town of France, in the department of Ardennes and late province of Champagne, seated on the Ayre, 32 miles E of Rheims. Lon. 4 55 E, lat. 49 21 N.

Granic, or Granicus, a small river of Natolia, which has its source in Mount Ida, near the ruins of ancient Troy, and falls into the sea of Marmora, to the E of Lampfaco. On its banks was fought the celebrated battle, in which Alexander the Great, obtained his first victory over the Persians.

Granson, a town of Switzerland, in the Pays de Vaud, capital of a bailiwick of the same name, with a castle. Charles the Bold, duke of Burgundy, took it by storm; but in a battle near it, in 1476, he was totally defeated. Lon. 6 30 E, lat. 46 50 N.

Grantham, a borough in Lincolnshire, with a market on Saturday. It sends two members to parliament, and has a church, famous for its high spire, which seems to lean on one side. It is seated on the Witham, 20 miles S by W of Lincoln, and 110 N by W of London. Lon. 0 36 W, lat. 52 59 N.

Gransere Water, a small lake of Westmoreland, to the W of Amhle-side. Its margin is hollowed into small bays, with bold eminences; some of rock, some of turf, that half conceal and half vary the figure of the little lake they command. From the shore, a low promontory projects far into the water; and on it stands a white village, with the parish church rising in the midst of it.

Granville, a seaport of France, in the department of the Channel and late province of Normandy, partly seated on a rock, and partly on a plain. It is 15 miles S by E of Coutances, and 185 W of Paris. Lon. 1 32 W, lat. 48 50 N.

Grasse, a town of France, now in the department of Var, lately in the province of Provence. It was lately a bishop's see; and is seated on an eminence, 15 miles W of Nice. Lon. 6 56 E, lat. 43 39 N.

Grasse, a town of France, in the department of Aude and late province of Languedoc, seated on the river Othieu, at the foot of the mountains of Courbiere, 18 miles S E of Carcassonne.

Grateley, a village in Hampshire, on the S E side of Quarley Hill, in the road from Andover to Salisbury, where, in 926, king Athelstan held a grand council of the nobility. Near it is a great Roman camp, and on Quarley hill is a large British camp.

Graz, a town of Germany, capital of Stiria, with a castle, and a university. Here are many palaces, and a fine arsenal. The castle stands on a rock, and communicates with the river by means of a deep well. It is seated on the Muehr, 85 miles S W of Vienna. Lon. 15 30 E, lat. 47 4 N.

Grudentz, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Culm, with a castle; seated on the Vistula, 30 miles N of Thorn, and 110 NW of Warsaw. Lon. 18 52 E, lat. 53 36 N.

Grave, a strong town of Dutch Brabant, seated on the river Maese, beyond which there is a fort. It has been often taken and retaken, the last time by the French in 1794. It is eight miles S of Nimeguen. Lon. 5 45 E, lat. 51 47 N.

Gravelines, a strong seaport of France, now in the department of the North, lately in French Flanders. It was ceded to France, by the treaty of the Pyrenees, and is seated on the A. 12 miles E of Calais. Lon. 2 13 E, lat. 50 59 N.

Gravenac, a town of Suabia, capital of a county of the same name, 30 miles W of Ulm. Lon. 9 28 E, lat. 48 22 N.

Graven Macheren, a town of Luxembourg, on the Moselle, taken in 1552, by the Marquis of Brandenburg, who burnt it.

Gravesande, a town of Holland, the residence of the ancient counts of Holland. It is seven miles W of Delft.

Gravesend, a town in Kent, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is situated on the banks of the Thames, and is a place of great resort, being the common landing-place for seamen and strangers in their passage to London. It has a blockhouse well mounted with cannon opposite Tilbury fort. A great part of the town was burnt down in 1727; and 50000. was granted by parliament for rebuilding its church. It is called the corporation of Gravesend and Milton, these two places being united under the government of a mayor. They were incorporated by queen Elizabeth; but, long before, Richard II. had granted them the exclusive privilege of conveying passengers to London in boats at twopence a head. They still enjoy this privilege; but the fare is now ninepence a head. Gravesend is famous for asparagus; which is preferred to that of Battersea; and the chief employment of the labouring people is spinning of hemp, to make nets for fishing, and ropes. It is 22 miles S E of London. Lon. 0 27 E, lat. 51 25 N.

Gravina, a town of Naples, in Terra di Bari, with a bishop's see, 32 miles S W of Bari.

Graultet, a town of France in the department of Tarn, 12 miles N W of Castres.

Gray, a town of France, in the department of Upper Saone and late province of Franche Comte. It carries on a trade in iron; and it is seated on the Saone, 25 miles N E of Dijon. Lon. 5 41 E, lat. 47 28 N.

Grayson Court House, the principal seat of the courts, in Grayson county, Virginia, 20 miles from Austinville, and 140 from Washington. Here is a post office.

Grays Thurrock, a town in Essex, with a market on Thursday, seated on the Thames, 24 miles E of London. Lon. 0 24 E, lat. 51 26 N.

Greece, the ancient name of that part of Turkey in Europe, which contains Macedonia, Albania, Livadia, the Moera, the Archipelago, and Candia.

Green, a post town in Kennebec county, Maine; situated on the E side of the river Androscoggin, about 25 miles above its junction with the Kennebec.

Greenbrier Court House, the principal seat of the courts in Greenbrier county, Virginia; it has a post office, and distant from the city of Washington 300 miles.

Greenfield, a post town in Hampshire county, Massachusetts; situated on the W side of Connecticut river, about 55 miles N W of Worcester.

Greenfield, a post town of Saratoga county, New York, 8 miles W by N of Saratoga springs.

Green Castle, a post town in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, 11 miles S of Chambersburg, and the same distance N of Hagerstown, Maryland, with about 1000 inhabitants.

Greensboro', a post town in Caroline county, Maryland, situated on the E branch of Choptank river, 8 miles N of Denton, and 10 miles E of Centreville.

Greensboro', a town in Green county, Georgia, 28 miles W. by S of Washington, and 67 N W of Louisville. Here is a post office.

Greenland, a general name by which are denoted the most easterly parts of America, stretching towards the north pole, and likewise some islands to the northward of the continent of Europe, lying in very high latitudes. This country is divided into W and E Greenland. W Greenland is now determined by our latest maps to be a part of the continent of America, though upon what authority is not very clear. That part of it which the Europeans have any knowledge of is bounded on the W by Baffin's Bay, on the S by Davis's Straits, and on the E by the northern part of the Atlantic Ocean. It is a very mountainous country, and some parts of it so high that they may be discerned 30 leagues off at sea. The inland mountains, hills, and rocks, are covered with perpetual snow; but the low lands on the sea-side are clothed with verdure in the summer season. The coast abounds with inlets, bays, and large rivers; and is surrounded with a vast number of islands of different dimensions. In a great many places, however, on the eastern coast especially, the shore is inaccessible by reason of the floating mountains of ice. The principal river, called Baal, falls into the sea in the 64th degree of latitude, where the first Danish lodge was built in 1721; and has been navigated above 40 miles up the country. East Greenland was for a long time considered as a part of the continent of West Greenland, but is now discovered to be an assemblage of islands lying between $76^{\circ} 46'$ and $80^{\circ} 30'$ of north latitude, and between 9° and 20° of east longitude. It was discovered by Sir Hugh Willoughby in 1553, who called it Groenland; supposing it to be a part of the western continent. In 1595, it was again visited by William Barentz and John Cornelius, two Dutchmen, who pretended to be the original discoverers, and called the country Spitzbergen, or Sharp Mountains, from the many sharp-pointed and rocky mountains with which it abounds. The only quadrupeds of either W or E Greenland, are deer, white bears, and foxes. To its frozen seas, the English and other nations repair annually, in the proper season, to fish for whales. See Spitzbergen.

Greenlaw, the county-town of Berwickshire, seated on a river that joins the Tweed, before it reaches Berwick. It is 18 miles W by S of that town. Lon. $2 10$ W, lat. $55 43$ N.

Greenock, a considerable seaport in Renfrewshire, at the mouth of the Clyde, which here expands into a ba-son four miles wide. It is a place of great resort for shipping, but its trade chiefly depends on Glasgow. It has a great share in the herring fishery. Here is a sugar-house, a rope and sail manufacture, and a small fort for the defence of the harbour. It is 22 miles W of Glasgow. Lon. $4 29$ W, lat. $55 54$ N.

Greensburg, a post town and the capital of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, 31 miles E by S of Pittsburg, and 264 W of Philadelphia; it has a court house, gaol, and about 800 inhabitants.

Greensburg, a post town in Green county, Kentucky; situated on the N side of Green river, about 56 miles S W of Springfield.

Greensted, a village in Essex, one mile W of Chipping Ongar, remarkable for its little church, the walls of which are formed of the solid trunks of trees placed in rows, and are entire tho' built before the conquest.

Greenville, a post town of Mecklenburg county, Kentucky, on the W side of Green river, 14 miles S W of Harford.

Greenville, a post town in Pitt county, North Carolina, on the S bank of Pamptico river, 23 miles above Washington, on the same stream.

Greenville, a post town in Green county, Tennessee, 82 miles N W of Knoxville.

Greenville, a post town in Greenville county, South Carolina, situated on the W side of the Great Pedee river, 20 miles N E of Camden.

Greenwich, a town in Kent, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is famous for a magnificent hospital for decayed seamen, and a royal observatory in a delightful park. The hospital is thought to be the finest structure of the kind in the world; the front to the Thames consists of two ranges of stone buildings. These buildings perfectly correspond with each other, and have their tops crowned with a stone balustrade. Under one of these is the hall, which is finely painted by Sir James Thornhill, and contains many royal portraits; and under the other the chapel, which by accident was destroyed by fire. This fire broke out in the hospital on the second of January 1779, and totally consumed the dome at the S E quarter of the building, with the chapel, which was the most elegant in the world, the

The observatory was built by Charles of that name, who was here the first astronomer royal. The English compute the longitude from the meridian of this place. Here was once a royal palace, in which Edward VI. died, and queen Mary and queen Elizabeth were born. It has been long pulled down, and on part of the site of it now stands the house belonging to the ranger of the park. Here is a college, called the Duke of Norfolk's College (though founded by Henry earl of Northampton, father of the celebrated earl of Surry) for the maintenance of 20 decayed housekeepers; and an hospital, called Queen Elizabeth's College, founded by Grenoble, an ancient town of France, in the department of Isere and late province of Dauphiny. It contained a great number of handsome structures particularly churches, and convents, which were destroyed by the French revolutionists. The cathedral was a fine ancient building in the Gothic taste; and St. Andrew's church is adorned with a curious spire. The leather and gloves that are made here are highly esteemed. It is seated on the Isere, over which are two bridges to pass into that part called Perreire, a large street on the side of the river.

It is 27 miles S of Chambery, and 105

Gretna, a village in Dumfriesshire, near the mouth of the Esk, and on the borders of Cumberland, nine miles N W of Carlisle. It has been long noted as the resort of the young persons in England, who are here united without incurring the penalties of the marriage act, notwithstanding the prohibitions of their parents and guardians. The ceremony is performed by a blacksmith.

Griffenhagen, a town of Prussian Pome-merania, in the dutchy of Stetin, seated on the Oder opposite Gartz. Lon. 14

Grimshy, Great, a seaport and borough in Lincolnshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It has now only one church, a large structure, like a cathedral. It sends two members to parliament, and is governed by a mayor. The harbour, at the mouth of the Humber, is almost choaked up. It is 35 miles N E of Lincoln, and 170 N of London. Lon. 0 6 E, lat. 53 34 N.

Grindon-Rig, a river in Northumberland, near Berwick, famous for the victory gained over the Scots, in 1558, by the earl of Northumberland, and his brother, when many of the Scots were drowned in this river. On a rising ground near Grindon, are four upright stone pillars, funeral monuments of the chieftains slain in that action.

Grinstead, East, a borough in Sussex, with a market on Thursday. The as-sises are sometimes held here, and it sends two members to parliament. It is 20 miles N of Lewes, and 29 S of London. Lon. 0 2 E, lat. 51 12 N.

Gripwald, a strong town of Swedish Pomerania, formerly imperial, with a good harbour, and a university. It is seated near the Baltic Sea, 15 miles S E of Stralsund, and 55 N W of Stetin.
Lon. 13 44 E, lat. 54 4 N.

Grisons, a people inhabiting the Alps, and in alliance with Swisserland. They are divided into three parts called the Leagues, which form one republic; namely, the Grey League; the League of the House of God; and that of the Ten jurisdictions. Throughout the three leagues the Roman law prevails, modified by the municipal customs. The courts of justice in each community are composed of the chief magistrate, who presides, and a certain number of jurymen, chosen by the people: they have no regular salaries, but receive for their attendance a small sum, arising in some communities from the expenses of the process, which are defrayed by the criminals; in others from a share of the fines. The country of the Grisons is about 87 miles in length, and very populous; bounded on the S by the dutchy of Milan and the territories of the Venetians, by Tyrol on the E and N, and by the Swiss cantons on the W. They are partly Papists and partly Protestants. They possess the Valteline, and the counties of Bormio and Chiavenna.

Grodno, a pretty large city of Lithuania, in Poland, and next to Wilna, the best in that dutchy. It is situated on the river Niemen, partly on a plain, and partly on a mountain. It is a large and straggling place, but contains no more than 3000 Christians, exclusive of the persons employed in the manufactures, and 1000 Jews. It has the appearance of a decayed town; containing a mixture of wretched hovels, falling houses, and ruined palaces, with magnificent gateways, remains of its ancient splendour. A few habitations in good repair make the contrast more striking. Here is a college and physic garden; the king of Poland having established a royal academy of physic for Lithuania. In the new palace, built by Augustus III. are the apartments, where the last diet was held in 1793, which was compelled, at the point of the bayonet, to consent to the second partition of Poland: and here, in 1795, the unfortunate Stanislaus III formally resigned his crown. Grodno is 125 miles N E of Warsaw. Lon. 24 15 E, lat. 53 28 N.

Groll, a town of Dutch Guelderland, in the county of Zutphen. The French took it in 1672, and demolished the fortifications. It is seated on the Slinghe, 15 miles S E of Zutphen.

Groningen, a populous city of the United Provinces, capital of a lordship of the same name, with a citadel and a university. It is seated on the rivers Hures and Aa; at 10 miles distance from the sea, with which it has a communication by a canal. It is 85 miles N E of Amsterdam. Lon. 6 31 E, lat. 53 10 N.

Groningen, one of the United Provinces, bounded on the E by East Friesland, on the W by Friesland, on the N by the German Ocean, and on the S by Overysseel. It is divided into two parts, of which the town of Groningen and its district are one, and the Ommelanden the other. The excellency of this country consists in pastures, which feed a great number of large horses, fit for the coach.

Groscia, an island of Dalmatia, in the gulf of Venice, near the coast of the county of Zara. It is 50 miles in circumference, and belongs to the Venetians.

Grossetto, a town of Tuscany, with a castle and a bishop's see; situate near the sea, 30 miles S W of Sienna. Lon. 11 1 E, lat. 42 40 N.

Grotokaw, a town of Silesia, capital of a province of the same name, 30 miles N E of Glatz. Lon. 17 25 E, lat. 50 37 N.

Grotokaw, a town of Servia, where the Turks defeated the Germans in 1739. Lon. 21 10 E, lat. 45 10 N.

Groton, a post town in Middlesex county, Massachusetts, 35 miles N W of Boston, which contained 1800 inhabitants at the last census in 1800.

Grayne, a river of Spain, in Galicia, which enters the bay of Biscay, at Corunna.

Grubenhagen, a town and castle of Lower Saxony, and the chief place of a principality of the same name, belonging to the house of Hanover. In the mountains near it are mines of silver, iron, copper, and lead. It is 45 miles S of Hanover. Lon. 10 3 E, lat. 51 31 N.

Gruckfeldt, a town of Carinthia, with a castle on the river Save. Lon. 15 45 E, lat. 46 7 N.

Grunberg, a town of Germany, in Upper Hesse. Here Charlemagne and the kings of the Merovingian race held their court.

Grunberg, a town of Silesia in the principality of Glogau; it is surrounded with vineyards, and has a manufacture of cloth.

Guadaloupe, one of the Leeward Caribbee islands in the West Indies, between Antigua and Dominica, in lon. 62 0 W, and lat. 16 20 N. The island, which is of an irregular figure, may be about 80 leagues in circumference. It is divided into two parts by a small arm of the sea, which is not above two leagues long, and from 15 to 40 fathoms broad. This canal, known by the name of the Salt River, is navigable, but will only carry vessels of 50 tons burden. The soil is exceedingly good, and well watered near the sea, by rivulets which fall from the mountains. The island toward the centre, is full of craggy rocks, where the cold is so intense, that nothing will grow upon them but fern, and some useless shrubs covered with moss. On the top of these rocks, a mountain rises to an immense height. It exhales through various openings, a thick black smoke, intermixed with sparks that are visible by night. The French settled in this island, in 1632. It has been often taken and retaken the last time by the French in 1794, in whose possession it still remains. Basseterre is the capital.

Guadalquivir, a river of Spain, which rises in the S part of New Castile, flows through Andalusia, and falls into the bay of Cadiz.

Guadarama, a town of Spain in Old Castile, remarkable for its great trade in cheese. It is seated on the Guadarama, 25 miles N W of Madrid. Lon. 3 48 W, lat. 41 45 N.

Guadiana, a river of Spain, which having its source in New Castile, crosses Estramadura into Portugal, and separating Algarva from Andalusia, falls into the bay of Cadiz.

Gaudix, a town of Spain, in Granada, with a bishop's see, 30 miles E of Granada. Lon. 2 47 W, lat. 37 4 N.

Gualdo, a town of Italy, in Ancona, eight miles N W of Nocera. In 1751, it was almost destroyed by an earthquake. Lon. 12 43 E, lat. 43 6 N.

Guam, the chief of the Ladrone Islands, in the North Pacific Ocean, 100 miles in circumference. It depends upon the Spaniards who have a garrison here, but the inhabitants are almost all natives of the country, and reputed to be very skilful in building boats. It abounds with excellent fruit, and the air is wholesome; notwithstanding which the natives are subject to a kind of leprosy. Lon. 145 15 E, lat. 13 5 N.

Guamanga, a town of Peru, capital of a province of the same name, with a bishop's see. It is remarkable for sweetmeats; and near it are mines of gold, silver, loadstone, and quicksilver. It is 200 miles S E of Lima. Lon. 74 15 W, lat. 13 20 S.

America, is bounded on the E and N by the Atlantic Ocean and the river Oroonoko; on the S by the river of the Amazons; and on the W by the provinces of Grenada and New Andalusia, in Terra Firma, from which it is separated both on the W and N by the river Oroonoko. It extends above 1200 miles from NE to SW, that is, from the mouth of the river Oroonoko to the mouth of the river Amazons, and near 600 in the contrary direction. The Portuguese, French, and Dutch, have all settlements along the coast. What lies S of Cape North belongs to the first of these nations; the coast between Cape North and Cape Orange is possessed by the natives; French Guiana, Old Cayenne, or Equinoctial France, extends from Cape Orange, about 240 miles along the coast, to the river Ma-rioni; where the Dutch territory begins, and extends to the mouth of the Oroonoko. The greatest heat takes place in October, and continues to March; this is succeeded by violent uninterrupted rain till June, when parching heat again takes place till July, which is again followed by incessant rain till October. The land of Dutch Guiana, for 50 miles up the country from the sea-coast is flat; and during the rainy seasons covered two feet high with water. This renders it incon-ceivably fertile, the earth, for 12 inches deep, being a stratum of such perfect manure; that an attempt was once made to carry some of it to Barbadoes.
On the banks of the Issequibo, 30 crops of ratan canes have been raised successively; whereas in the West India Islands, not more than two are ever expected from the richest land. The interior parts of the country are inhabited by savages, who have different languages and customs; and some of them build their houses on trees, to be secure from the inundations of the rivers.

Guiaquil, one of the nine jurisdictions of the province of Ouito, in Peru.
Chocolate is one of its principal products.

Guiaquil, a commercial city of Peru, capital of a jurisdiction of the same name. It stands partly on the side and partly at the foot of a hill, which descends gently toward the river Guia-

Guilford, a borough in Surry, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Wey, on the declivity of a hill, near which are the ruins of an old castle. The summer assizes are alternately held here and at Croydon; but the election of members for the county is always held here, and it sends two for the borough. The Wey is navigable to the Thames, and much timber and corn are carried upon it. It is a well built town, with two churches, and governed by a mayor. It is 23 miles WS W of Croydon, and 30 S W of London. Lon. 0 29 W, lat. 51 15 N.

river Haisne, six miles W of Mons.
Lon. 3 53 E, lat. 50 27 N.

Guillestree, a town and castle in the Alps, once belonging to Dauphiny, in France. It was taken by prince Eugene in 1692, and is nine miles N E of Embrum. Lon. 6 36 E, lat. 44 41 N.

Guimaraens, an ancient and considerable town of Portugal, in the province of Entre-Douero-e-Minho. It has formerly been the residence of their kings and is divided into the Old and New.
The public buildings are magnificent.
It is 165 miles N E of Lisbon. Lon. 8

Guinea, a country of Africa, of which little is known except the coast. It lies within the tropic of Cancer, between 12° W, and 80° E lon. and is divided into the Lower and Upper. This last comprehends the Grain Coast, the Tooth Coast, the Gold Coast, the Slave Coast, (which includes Whidah and Ardrah) and Benin. The lower part is commonly called Congo. It is very unhealthy for Europeans, though the negroes live a considerable time. The natives in general go almost naked, and there seems to be little religion or honesty among them. The commodities purchased here, are gum-seneca, at Senegal; grain, upon the Grain Coast; elephants' teeth, upon the Tooth Coast; the greatest plenty of gold, upon the Gold Coast; and all in general, furnish slaves. The English, Dutch, French, Danes, and other nations, have factories upon this coast, and purchase slaves and other commodities. There are many little states, whose chiefs the sailors dignify with the name of king; but very few deserve that title. They are often at war with each other, when the people taken, on both sides, are sold for slaves; and it is not uncommon for the nearest of kin to sell each other.

Guinea, New, an island of the South Pacific Ocean, to the N of New Holland. This island, which is long and narrow, extends SE from the equator to 12° S lat. and from 131 to 155° E lon. It was supposed to be connected with New Holland, till Captain Cook discovered the strait which separates them. The land in general is low, but is covered with such luxuriance of wood and herbage, as can scarcely be conceived. The cocoa-nut, bread-fruit, and plantain tree, flourish in the greatest perfection. The inhabitants make much the same appearance as the New Hollanders.

Guinecamp, a town of France, in the department of the North Coast and late province of Bretagne, seated on the Trieu, 13 miles S of Treguier. Lon. 3 8 W, lat. 48 36 N.

Guiscoa, the NE division of the province of Biscay, bounded on the N by the bay of that name, on the E by Navarre, on the W by Biscay Proper, and on the S by Alava. Tolosa is the capital.

Guise, a small town of France, now in the department of Picardy, lately in the province of Picardy, with a castle, seated on the Oise, 25 miles E of St. Quintin, and 95 NE of Paris. Lon. 3 42 E, lat. 49 54 N.

Guntoor, one of the Northern Circars, in the peninsula of Hindoostan. It is also called Mortinazagur and Condavir, and occupies the space between Condapilly, the southmost of the four English Circars, and the N part of the Carnatic; extending along the sea-coast of the bay of Bengal more than 30 miles. The maritime parts of this circar are flat and open, but the interior parts contain some very strong fortresses and posts. It was subject to the nizam of the Deccan, but has been ceded to the English.

Gunzberg, a town of Suabia, in the margravate of Burgaw, with a castle, seated on the Danube, 16 miles NE of Ulm. Lon. 10 25 E, lat. 48 35 N.

Guntzenhausen, a town of Franconia, five miles from Weissenberg. It is seated on the Altmul, near a forest, and subject to the king of Prussia.

Gurk, a town of Carinthia, with a bishop's see, seated on the river Gurk, 55 miles E of Saltzburg. Lon. 14 18 E, lat. 47 12 N.

Gustrow, a city of Germany, in the duchy of Mecklenburg Schwerin, and capital of the circle of Wenden. The chief courts of judicature for the duchy are held here; and it has an elegant palace, in which the dukes sometimes reside. It is 35 miles NE of Schwerin. Lon. 12 13 E, lat. 53 57 N.

Gutta, a town of Hungary, seated on the E side of the Danube, opposite the island of Schut, 29 miles E by S of Presburg. Lon. 17 47 E, lat. 48 10 N.

Gutskow, a town of Swedish Pomerania, capital of a county of the same name. It is seated on the Peene, 14 miles W of Wolgast. Lon. 13 39 E, lat. 54 0 N.

Guzerat, a peninsula of Hindoostan Proper, about 200 miles long, and 140 broad, formed by the Arabian Sea and the gulfs of Cambay and Cutch. The W part is mountainous and woody, and inhabited by a wild hardy race, governed by rajahs of their own. But the largest as well as the finest part is subject to the Mahrattas. Amedabad is the capital.

Gwalior, an ancient fortress of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Gohud. It stands on a vast rock, about four miles in length, but narrow and of unequal breadth, and nearly flat on the top. The sides are so steep as to appear almost perpendicular in every part; for where it was not naturally so it has been scarp'd away; and the height from the plain below, is from 200 to 300 feet. The rampart conforms to the edge of the precipice all around; and the only entrance to it is by steps running up the side of the rock, which are defended on the side next the country by a wall and bastions, and further Haddingtonshire, or East Lothian, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N and E by the Frith of Forth; S by Berwickshire, and W by Edinburghshire. It is about 27 miles long from E to W, and about 17 from N to S. It produces corn of all sorts, and has plenty of grass, coals, limestone, and some considerable woods. It feeds great flocks of sheep, especially near the hills of Lammermoor and W Lammerlow; and abounds with rabbits. A great deal of salt is made here, and the herring fishery is carried on with success at Dunbar, both for home consumption and exportation. Here are several convenient harbours, with the advantage of some fishing towns. This county may be reckoned as fruitful, rich, and pleasant as any in Scotland; or indeed as most in England. The chief towns are, Dunbar, Haddington, and North Berwick; and its principal river the Tyne, which receives several small streams.

Haddonfield, a town in Gloucester county, New Jersey, 8 miles E of Philadelphia, and six from Gloucester, where there is a post office.

Hadersleben, a maritime town of Denmark, in Sleswick, with a strong citadel, on a small island, in a bay of the Baltic, 25 miles E of Ripen. Lon. 9 50 E, lat. 55 18 N.

Hadley, a corporate town in Suffolk, with a market on Monday. It is a pretty large town, and has a very handsome church. Large quantities of yarn are spun here for the Norwich manufacture; and it had a considerable woollen manufacture, which is now decayed. sists of 36 persons. The town is divided into five parishes; and out of each are formed several colleges, or companies, who take care of public affairs, unless there is any thing too high for their determination, and then it is judged by a sort of general assembly. Hamburg, from its situation, has all possible advantages for foreign and domestic trade; particularly from its communication, by the Elbe, with some of the principal navigable rivers of Germany; and hence it is one of the most commercial places in the world. There are not less than 200 ships at a time, belonging to foreign merchants, at anchor before the city; and there is a handsome exchange. The inhabitants have the liberty of performing divine service in a chapel of their own. Other religions are tolerated at Altona, a large town near the harbour of Hamburg; except the Jews who have no synagogue. Besides the five principal churches, there are 11 smaller ones for particular occasions, some of which belong to hospitals. The cathedral of Our Lady is a very fine structure. Hampshire, Hantsire, or Hants, a county of England, bounded on the N by Berks, on the E by Surry and Sussex, on the S by the English Channel, and on the W by Dorsetshire and Wilts. It extends, exclusive of the Isle of Wight, 42 miles from N to S, and 38 from E W. The air is very pure and pleasant, especially upon the downs, on which vast flocks of sheep are kept and bred. In the champaign part of the county, where it is free of wood, the soil is very fertile, producing all kinds of grain. The country is extremely well wooded and watered; for besides many woods on private estates, in which there are vast quantities of well grown timber, there is the new forest of great extent, belonging to the crown, well stored with venerable oaks. In these woods and forests, great numbers of hogs run at large, and feed on the acorns; and hence it is that the Hampshire bacon so far exceeds that of most other countries. The rivers are the Avon, Anton, Arle, Test, Stowre, and Itchin; besides several smaller streams, all abounding in fish, especially trout. As its sea-coast is of a considerable extent, it possesses many good ports and harbours, and is well supplied with salt-water fish. Much honey is produced in the country. Here is also plenty of game, and on the downs is most delightful hunting.

Hebrides, or Western Islands, numerous islands on the W coast of Scotland, the principal of which are Skye, St.
Kilda, Lewis and Harris, Uist, Can-nary, Staffa, Mull, Jura, and Islay. The situation of these islands in the great Atlantic Ocean renders the air cold and moist in the most of them. In the most northerly isles the sun, at the summer solstice, is not above an hour under the horizon at midnight, and not longer above it at mid-day in the depth of winter. The soil of the Hebrides varies also in different isles, and in different parts of the same island; some are mountainous and barren, producing little else than heath, wild myrtle, fern, and a little grass; while others, being cultivated and manured with sea weed, yield plentiful crops of oats and barley.

Hebrides, New, a cluster of islands, lying in the South Pacific Ocean, discovered by Quiros in 1606, and considered as part of a great southern continent, under the name of Tierra Australia del Espiritu Santo. They were next visited by Bougainville in 1768, who did no more than discover that the land was not connected, but composed of islands, which he called the Great Cyclades. Captain Cook, in 1774, ascertained the extent and situation of the whole group, and gave them the name they now bear. They lie between 14 25 and 20 4 S lat. and 166 41 and 170 21 E lon. extending 125 leagues. The principal islands are Tierra del Espiritu Santo and Malicol-lo, besides several of less note, some of which are from 18 to 25 leagues in circuit. In general, they are high and mountainous, abounding with wood, water, and the usual productions of the tropical islands. The bread fruit, cocoa nuts, and plantains are neither so good nor so plentiful as at Otaheite; on the other hand, sugar canes, and yams, are not only in greater plenty, but of superior quality, and much larger, some of the latter weighing 56 pounds. The inhabitants are of very different appearances at different islands, but are chiefly of a slender make, and dark colour, and most of them have frizzled hair. Their canoes and houses are small, and poorly constructed; and except their arms, they have scarcely any manufacture, not even for clothing. They are, however, hospitable and good natured, when not prompted to a contrary conduct by the jealousy, which the unusual appearance of European visitors, may naturally be supposed to excite.

Helena, St. an island in the Atlantic Ocean, 20 miles in circumference, belonging to the English East India Company. It has some high mountains, particularly one called Diana's Peak, which is covered with wood to the very top. It is in general rocky and mountainous, but far from being barren, the interior vallies and even mountains being pleasant and fertile. Mr. Forster tells us, that "having travelled about half a mile from the town into the country, he was transported with one of the finest prospects he had ever seen, consisting of several little hills, covered with rich verdure, and interspersed with fertile vallies, which contained gardens, orchards, and various plantations; that many pastures surrounded by inclosures of stone, were filled with a small but fine breed of cattle, and with English sheep; that every valley was watered by a little rivulet; that the mountains in the centre of the island were lung with woods; that the soil, which covered the rocks and mountains, was in general a rich mould, from six to ten inches deep, clothed with a variety of plants and shrubs, among which was a tree, which the inhabitants call a cabbage tree, though only used for fuel, gum-trees, and red wood; that in the governor's garden, about three miles from the town, he saw several plants of Europe, Africa, and America, and particularly a profusion of roses and lilies, interspersed with myrtle and laurel; that several walks of peach-trees were loaded with fruit, which had a peculiar rich flavour, different from that of our peaches; but that the other European fruit-trees throve but indifferently, and never bore fruit; that vines had been planted several times, but had not succeeded, on account of the climate; that cabbages and other greens thrive extremely well, but are devoured by caterpillars; that barley, and other kinds of corn, are generally devoured by rats, which are immensely numerous; that the ground, for that reason, was laid out chiefly in pastures, the verdure of which was surprising; that the whole island could support 3000 head of their small cattle; that the beefs juicy, delicious, and very fat; that the island, besides cattle, abounds with goats, rabbits, a small breed of horses, ring-pheasants, red-legged partridges, rick-birds, pigeons, &c. of some of which the breed is indigenous, but others have been brought from Africa, Europe, or the East Indies; that the number of inhabitants on the island does not exceed 2000, including near 500 soldiers and 600 slaves, who are supplied with all sorts of manufactures and other necessaries by the company's ships, in return for refreshments; and that many of the slaves were employed in catching fish, which are very plentiful." England, there being nothing either in the soil or situation to render it otherwise. The soil throughout is excellent, and inferior to none, either for grain, fruit, or pasture, supplying the inhabitants plentifully with all the necessaries of life: but that by which it is distinguished from most others, is its fruit, especially apples, of which it produces such quantities, that the cyder made of them is not only sufficient for their own consumption, though it is their ordinary drink, but also in a great measure for that of London and other parts. The county is well supplied with wood and water; for, besides lesser streams, there are the rivers Frome, Loden, Lug, Wye, Wadell, Arrow, Dare, and Marow; the last of which is large, and all of them are well stored with fish, particularly the Wye, which breeds salmon.

Indian Ocean on the S, the Burrampoor and the bay of Bengal on the E, and the Indian ocean and Persia on the W. But this country must be considered under the three grand divisions of Hindoostan Proper, the Deccan, and the Peninsula. Hindoostan Proper includes all the countries on the N of the River Nerbuddah, which bounds it on the S as far as it goes; Bengal and Bahar compose the remainder of its southern boundary. It is divided into eleven soubahs, the names of which are Lahore, Aroutan (including Sindy) Agimere, Delhi, Agra, Oude, Allakabad, Bahar, Bengal, Malwa, and Guzerat. A 12th soubah, named Cubul, was formed out of the countries contiguous to the W sources of the Indus, and three new ones out of the conquests of the Deccan; Berar, Can-duste, and Amednagur. The Deccan in its most extensive signification is applied to the whole region of Hindoostan Proper; in its more limited sense it means only the countries situated between Hindoostan Proper, the Carratic, the W sea, and Orissa; that is the provinces of Candesh, Dowlatabad, Visiapour, Golconda, and the W part of Berar. The tract S of these, or the river Kistna, is generally called the Peninsula; although its form does by no means warrant it. There is no known history of Hindoostan extant before the Mahometan conquests. The first irruption of the Mahometans was in the year 1000. From this period the provinces of Hindoostan were held rather tributary kingdoms, than as provinces of the same empire; and they seldom failed to revolt when a favourable opportunity offered. In 1398, the Mogul Tartars, under the conduct of Timur, or Tamerlane, invaded Hindoostan; but the conquest of the country was not effected till 1525, by Sultan Babar, one of his descendants, who was the first of the line of Tamerlane who mounted the throne of Hindoostan; but their government was not established till the reign of Achar his son. Babar was however the real founder of the Mogul dynasty; and from this event Hindoostan came to be called the Mogul empire. The illustrious Achar, failed in his attack upon the Deccan; an attempt, in which many of his successors were equally unfortunate, and which tended, in the sequel, to the decline and dissolution of the empire. Achar was succeeded by Jhangubuc his son, who reigned 22 years. In his reign, in 1613, Sir Thomas Roe was sent as the first English ambassador to the emperor of Hindoostan; and the Portuguese had, by this time, acquired considerable settlements in Bengal and Guzerat. In 1660 Aurungzebe peaceably ascended the throne after he had deposed his father and murdered or expelled his brethren. During his reign Hindoostan enjoyed the most profound peace it had ever known. The conquest of the Deccan employed the last years of his life, from 1678 to 1707 during 15 years of which time he was actually in the field. This dereliction of his capital for nearly 30 years occasioned great disorders there, and laid the foundation of many more. Under his reign the empire attained to its full measure of extent, see Major Rennel's memoir of a map of Hindoostan, p. lxiii. In a word, instead of finding the emperors attempting now the conquest of the Deccan, their empire was attacked by the powerful nizam of that country, through whose contrivance, Nadir Shah, the Persian usurper, invaded Hindoostan in 1738. By the intrigues of the Nizam and his party Mahomed Shah was induced to throw himself on the clemency of the invader, who entered Delhi, and demanded 30 millions sterling, by way of ransom. Tumults, massacres, and famine were the result; 100,000 of the inhabitants were massacred, and 62 millions of plunder were said to be collected. He evacuated Delhi, however, and left the Nizam in possession of the whole remaining power of the empire, which he sacrificed to his own views in the Deccan, where he established an independent kingdom. Mahomed Shah died in 1747, having seen the Carnatic and Bengal become likewise independent, under their respective nabobs; an independent state too, formed by the Rohillas (a tribe from the mountains between India and Persia) on the E by the Ganges, within 80 miles of Delhi; and the kingdom of Candahar, erected by Abdalla, one of the generals of Nadir Shah. Ahmed Shah, the son of Mahomed, succeeded; in whose reign the entire division of the empire took place; nothing remaining to the house of Tamerlane but a small territory round Delhi, with the city itself (no longer a capital) exposed to depredations, massacres, and famines, by the contests of invaders. The last imperial army was defeated by the Rohillas in 1749. The Jats, a Hindoo tribe, founded a state in Agra; Oude was seized by the grandfather of the present nabob; Allahabad, by Mahomed Koili. The Mahrattas, besides their ancient domains in the Deccan, obtained great part of Malwa, Guzerat, Berar, and Orissa. The Mogul empire was now become merely nominal: and the emperors from this period, must be regarded as of no political consequence, otherwise than as their names and persons, were made use of, by different parties, to promote their own views. That the name and person of the emperor were of use, as retaining a considerable degree of veneration among the bulk of the people in Hindoostan, is evident, from the application made, at different times, for grants of territory, forcibly obtained by the grantee, but which required the sanction of the lord paramount, to reconcile the transaction to the popular opinion. Another instance of the effect of this opinion is, that the coin throughout the whole tract, known by the name of the Mogul Empire, is to this day struck in the name of the nominal emperor. Ahmed was deposed in 1753, and was succeeded by Allumguire, who was deposed and murdered in 1760. He was succeeded, however, by his son Shah Aulum, who was alternately dependent on the contending powers, and more particularly upon the English, who obtained from him a grant of the provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa, together with the Northern Circars on condition of paying him 360,000l. per annum by way of tribute. It was his misfortune however, that he could not accommodate his mind to his circumstances, and put himself into the hands of the Mahrattas, who promised to seat quel, he was dethroned and murdered by the Rohillas. These being defeated by Madajee Sindia, a Mahratta chief, his son, Jewan Bucht, was permitted to succeed him, and to live in the same deplorable state of degradation. The whole of Hindoostan in 1792, consisted of six principal states, which hold as tributaries, or feudatories, some inferior states. These six principal states, were, the British, the Poonah Mahrat-tas, the Berar Mahrattas, Nizam Ally, soubah of the Deccan; Mysore, or the dominions of Tippoo Sultan; and the Seiks. The British possessions are Bengal, Bahar, Benares, the Northern Circars, the Jaghire in the Carnatic, Bombay, Salsette, the district of Midnapour in Orissa, and some considerable cession from Tippoo Sultan, in 1792.

 Since 1792, war broke out with Tippoo, who was defeated, and his capital taken by assault, together with an immense quantity of plunder, Tippoo lost his life in the attack. By his fall, a great extent of territory will accrue to the British, and their power will be secured on a stable and permanent foundation. The allies of the British, who may be considered as dependent upon them, are the nabobs of Oude, and the Carnatic, and the rajahs of Travancore and Tanjore. For the five other principal states, see their respective names, and for an account of some inferior independent states, see Bundela, Ballo-gistan, the Jats, Rohilcund, &c. According to Mr. Orme, the inhabitants of Hindoostan are computed at 10,000,000 Mahometans, and 100,000,000 Hindoos.
 The Hindoos or Gentoos, are of a black complexion; their hair is long, their person straight and elegant. Their limbs are finely proportioned; their fingers long and tapering; their countenances open and pleasant. They differ materially from all other nations, by being divided into tribes or casts. The four principal tribes are, the Bramins, Soldiers, Labourers, and Mechanics.
 These are subdivided into a multiplicity of inferior distinctions. There are Bramins of various degrees of excellence, who have the care of religion allotted to them. These are held sacred by the rest. It is difficult to draw a general character of the Bramins, as they vary much in their pursuits, and in their degrees of knowledge. "Some that I have conversed with, (says Mr.

 Scrafton) acknowledge the errors that have crept into their religion, own one Supreme Being, and laugh at the idolatry of the multitude, but insist upon the necessity of working upon the weaknesses of the vulgar."—The generality of the Bramins are as ignorant as the laity. Such as are not engaged in worldly pursuits, are a very superstitious, innocent people, who promote clarity as much as they can, both to man and beast; but those who engage in the world are generally the worst of all the Gentoos; for, persuaded that the waters of the Ganges will purify them from their sins, and being exempt from the utmost rigour of the courts of justice (under the Gento government) they run into much greater excesses.
 The Soldiers are commonly called Ra-jah-Poots; that is, descended from Rajahs. They are much more robust than the rest, have a great share of courage, and a nice sense of military honour, which consists, among them, in fidelity to those they serve. Fighting is their profession; they readily enter into the service of any that will pay them, and will follow wherever he leads; but, should their leader fall in the battle, their cause is at an end, and they run off the field, without any stain to their reputation. The English East India Company have many battalions of them in their service; they are called Sepoys, and are clothed and disciplined in the European manner. The Labourers include farmers, and all who cultivate the land. The Mechanics include merchants, bankers, and all who follow any trade: these again are subdivided into each profession. Besides these, are the Hallachores, who cannot be called a tribe, being rather the refuse of all the tribes. They are a set of unhappy wretches, destined to misery from their birth. They perform all the vilest offices of life, bury the dead, and carry away everything that is polluted.
 All the different tribes are kept distinct from each other by insurmountable barriers; they are forbidden to inter-marry, to cohabit, to eat with each other, or even to drink out of the same vessel with one of another tribe. Every deviation from these points subjects them to be rejected by their tribe, renders them polluted for ever, and obliges them, from that instant, to herd with the Hallachores. "The members of each cast," (says Dr. Robertson) "adhere invariably to the profession of their forefathers; from generation to generation, the same families have followed, and will always continue to follow one uniform line of life. To this may be ascribed that high degree of perfection conspicuous in many of the Indian manufactures; and though veneration for the practices of their ancestors may check the spirit of invention, yet, by adhering to these, they acquire such an expertness and delicacy of hand, that Europeans, with all the advantages of superior science, and the aid of more complete instruments, have never been able to equal the execution of their workmanship. To this circumstance also Dr. Robertson ascribes a striking peculiarity in the state of Hindoostan, the permanency of its institutions, and the immutability in the manners of the inhabitants. Hence it is, that the Hindoos admit no converts, nor are themselves ever converted, whatever the Roman missionaries may pretend. The Hallachores may be here excepted, who are glad to be admitted into any society where they are treated as fellow creatures. The Hindoos vie with the Chinese, in respect to the antiquity of their nation; and the doctrine of transmigration is one of their distinguishing tenets. Their institutions of religion form a complete system of superstition, upheld by every thing which can excite the reverence of the people. The temples consecrated to their deities are magnificent; their religious ceremonies splendid; and the absolute dominion which the Bramins have obtained over the minds of the people, is supported by the command of the immense revenues, with which the liberality of princes, and the zeal of pilgrims and devotees, have enriched their pagodas. The dominion of religion extends to a thousand particulars, which, in other countries, are governed by the civil laws, or by taste, custom, or fashion. Their dress, their food, the common intercourses of life, their marriages, and professions, are all under the jurisdiction of religion. The food of the Hindoos is simple, consisting chiefly of rice, ghee (a kind of imperfect butter) milk, vegetables, and oriental spices. The warrior cast may eat of the flesh of goats, sheep, and poultry. Other superior casts may eat poultry and fish, but the inferior casts are prohibited from eating flesh or fish of any kind. Their greatest luxury consists in the use of the richest spiceries and perfumes, of which the great people are very lavish. They esteem milk the purest of food, because they think it partakes of some of the properties of the nectar of their gods, and because they esteem the cow itself almost as a divinity. Their manners are gentle. Their happiness consists in the solaces of domestic life; and they are taught by their religion, that matrimony is an indispensable duty in every man, who does not entirely separate himself from the world, from a principle of devotion. Their religion permits them to have several wives; but they seldom have more than one; and their wives are distinguished by a decency of demeanour, a solicitude in their families, and a fidelity to their vows, which might do honour to human nature in the most civilized countries. The custom of women burning themselves on the death of their husbands is still practised in Hindoostan. In some parts of India, as the Carnatic, it is asserted, that they dig a pit, in which is deposited a large quantity of combustible matter, which is set on fire, and the body being let down, the victim throws herself into the flaming mass. In other places, a pile is raised extremely high, and the body, with the wife, is placed upon it, and then the whole is set on fire. In the Code of Gentoo Laws, translated by Mr. Halhead, is the following passage concerning this practice? "It is proper for a woman, after her husband's death, to burn herself in the fire with his corpse. Every woman, who thus burns herself, shall remain in paradise with her husband three crores and fifty lacks of years, by destiny. If she cannot burn, she must, in that case, preserve an inviolable chastity: if she remain always chaste, she goes to paradise; and if she do not preserve her chastity, she goes to hell." This code of laws, with their sacred books, the Veidam and the Shastah, were written in the Sanscrit language, which is very copious and nervous, although the style of their best authors is wonderfully concise. Hindoostan, toward the N and oriental spices, may eat of the flesh and poultry. Other eat poultry and fish, casts are prohibited or fish of any kind. Luxury consists in the most spiceries and perhaps the great people are highly esteem milk because they think it of the properties of gods, and because it is almost as a manners are gentle. It consists in the solaces and they are taught that matrimony is an duty in every man, who separate himself from principle of devotion. It permits them to have and their wives are a decency of demeanour in their families, and dowry, which might do nature in the most. The custom of themselves on the death is still practised in some parts of India, it is asserted, that they is deposited a large combustible matter, which and the body being let throws herself into. In other places, a remedy high, and the life, is placed upon it, and is set on fire. In the Laws, translated by the following passage practice? "It is proffer after her husband's self in the fire with woman, who thus will remain in paradise three crores and fifty destiny. If she cannot, in that case, preserve chastity: if she refuse, she goes to paradise, do not preserve her to hell." This code of sacred books, the Manu, were written in Sanscrit, which is very ancient, although the style is wonderfully elegant, toward the N is pretty temperate; but hot toward the S, and it rains almost constantly for three months in the year. Its products, and various other particulars, will be found under the different names of its provinces, cities, towns, mountains, and rivers, described in the course of this work. See India.

Hinzuon, Joanna St. one of the Comora islands in the Indian Ocean. This island is a proper place of refreshment for the East India ships, whose crews, when ill of the scurvy, soon recover by the use of limes, lemons, and oranges, and from the air of the land. The town where the king resides is at the east side of the island; and though it is three quarters of a mile in length, it does not contain above 200 houses. Their principal houses are built with stone, with a quadrangle, in the middle, and are only one story high. All the other houses, or rather huts, are slightly composed of plastered reeds; and yet the mosques are tolerable structures, very neat and clean in the inside. The horned cattle are a kind of buffaloes, having a large hump on their shoulders, which is very delicious eating; but there is not one horse, mule, nor ass, in all the island.—The original natives, in number about 7000, occupy the hills, and are generally at war with the Arabian interlopers, who established themselves on the sea-coast by conquest, and are about 3000 in number. Though Joanna is not the largest, yet it may be reckoned the principal of the Comora Islands; it claims sovereignty over, and exacts tribute from all the others. They get their supplies of arms and ammunition from ships that touch here, as it is customary for all to make presents of arms and powder to the prince when he pays a visit on board, which he does to every one. They have a regular form of government, and exercise the Mahometan religion; both being introduced by the Arabs. The colour of these two races of men is very different: the Arabs have not so deep a tinge as the others, being of a copper complexion, with better features, and a more animated countenance. They consider a black streak under the eyes as ornamental, and this they make every day, with a brush dipped in a kind of ointment. The custom of chewing the betel-nut prevails here, as in most of the eastern countries, and answers to the fashion of taking snuff with us, except that with them it is more general. No one is without a purse or bag of betel; and it is looked on as a piece of civility to offer it to your friend when you meet him or take leave. Their religion licenses a plurality of wives and likewise concubines. They are extremely jealous of them, and never allow any man to see the women; but female strangers are admitted into the harem; and some English ladies, whose curiosity has led them there, make favourable reports of their beauty, and richness of apparel displayed in a profusion of ornaments of gold, silver, and beads, in form of necklaces, bracelets, and earrings; they wear half a dozen or more of each through holes bored all along the outer rim of the ear. The men seem not to look with an eye of indifference on our fair country women, notwithstanding they are of so different a complexion. They are very temperate and abstemious, wine being forbidden them by the law of Mahomet; and are frequent in prayer, attending their mosques three or four times a day. These people profess a particular regard for our nation, and are very fond of repeating to you, that Joanna-man and Englishman all brothers; and never fail to ask, How king George do? In general, they appear to be a courteous, and well-disposed people, and very fair and honest in their dealings, though there are among them, as in all other nations, some viciously inclined; and theft is much practised by the lower class, notwithstanding the punishment of it is very exemplary, being amputation of both hands of the delinquent. The climate here promotes vegetation to such a degree as requires little toil, but that little is denied; so that, beyond oranges, bananas, pine-apples, cocoa-nuts, yams, and purslain (all growing spontaneously) few vegetables are met with. The face of the country is very picturesque and pleasing. Lofty mountains, clothed to their very summits; deep and rugged vallies, adorned by frequent cataracts, cascades, woods, rocks, and rivulets, intermixed, form the landscape. Groves are seen extending over the plains to the very edge of the sea, formed principally by the palm and cocoa-nut trees, whose long and naked stems leave a clear and uninterrupted passage beneath; while their titled and overspreading tops form a thick shade above, and keep off the scorching rays of the sun. In the interior part of the island, surrounded by mountains of a prodigious height, and about 15 miles from the town, is a sacred lake, half a mile in circumference. The adjacent hills covered with lofty trees, and the solitude of the place seem more calculated to inspire religious awe, than any sanctity that is to be discovered in a parcel of wild ducks inhabiting it, which are deified and worshipped by the original natives. Holland, the largest of the seven United Provinces, is bounded on the W by the German Ocean, or North sea; to the E by the Zuyder-sea, the province of Utrecht, and part of Gelderland; to the S by Dutch Brabant and Zeeland; and to the N by the Zuyder-sea. Its greatest extent from N to S, including the island of Texel, is about 90 English miles; but from E to W its extent varies from 40 to 25. To defend it against the sea, dykes have been erected at an immense expence, and innumerable canals cut to drain it, as being naturally very low and marshy. Some parts of the province are very fruitful in corn; but the greater parts consist of rich pastures, wherein are kept large herds of kine, which supply them with incredible quantities of butter and cheese. Of the latter, that of Edam, in North Holland, is highly esteemed. The many rivers and canals that intersect the provinces are of great advantage to its commerce, but contribute to render the air foggy and unwholesome. There is a communication by water betwixt almost every town and village. Towards the middle also of the province are great numbers of turf-pits. It is so populous, that the number of inhabitants is computed at 1,200,000. In point of cleanliness no country surpasses, and few come up to it, especially in North Holland, and that even in the villages. It has considerable linen and woollen manufactures, and numerous docks for the building of ships. The French effected, by the aid of a severe frost, the entire conquest of this province in January 1795; and till the era of a general pacification, no account of any permanent government can be given. The established religion is Calvinism; but all religious sects are tolerated. Amsterdam is the capital.

Holland, one of the divisions of Lincolnshire in England. It so much resembles the province of that name upon the continent, in most respects, being low and marshy, with the sea on one side, and canals running through it, that it must either have had its name from thence, or on the same account. On the E it has what the ancient geographers call Estuarium Metaria, now the Washes, which are overflowed at high water, and part of Cambridgeshire on the S. The lower part of it is full of bogs and marshes, and has huge banks to defend it against the sea and land floods. The ground is so soft, that horses are worked unshod; and it produces plenty of grass, but little corn. The whole tract seems to have been gained from the sea; and is divided into Upper and Lower, the latter of which was impassable; but since the fens have been drained, the lands are grown more solid, and the inhabitants sow cole-seed upon them to their great profit. Though there are no stones to be found in or upon the ground, yet most of the churches are of stone. They have no fresh water but from the clouds, which is preserved in pits, but if these are deep, it soon turns brackish; and if they are shallow, they soon become dry.

Holland, New, the largest known land that does not bear the name of a continent: it extends from 10 30 to 43 42 S lat. and from 110 30 to 153 30 E lon. so that its square surface considerably exceeds that of Europe. When this vast island was first discovered, is uncertain. In the beginning of last century, the N and W coasts were traced by the Dutch: the S extremity was discovered by Tasman, in 1642. Captain Cook, in 1770, explored the E and N E from 38° S, and ascertained its separation from New Guinea; and, in 1773, captain Furneaux, by connecting Tasman's discoveries with Cook's, completed the circuit. In that part of it, which Tasman distinguished by the name of Van Diemen's Land, and which was visited by Furneaux in 1773, and again by Cook, in 1777, the land is, for the most part, of a good height, diversified with hills and vallies. Holstein, a dutchy of Germany, bounded by the German ocean on the W; the Baltic or the gulf of Lubeck, on the E; the dutchy of Mecklenburg on the S E; that of Bremen, with the river Elbe, on the S W; and Lauenburg, with the territory of Hamburg, on the S. Its greatest length is about 80 miles, and its breadth 60. A great part of this country consists of rich marshland, which being much exposed to inundations both from the sea and rivers, dykes have been raised at a great expence to guard and defend them. The pastures in the marshes are so rich, that cattle are bred in vast numbers and fattened in them, and great quantities of excellent butter and cheese made of their milk. They are also very fruitful in wheat, barley, pease, beans, and rape-seed. In the more barren, sandy, and heathy parts of the country, large flocks of sheep are bred and fed: nor are orchards wanting, or woods; especially of oak and beech; nor turf, poultry, game and wild-fowl. Notwithstanding this country's advantageous situation for commerce, there are few manufactures and little trade in it. Hamburg and Lubeck supply the inhabitants with what they want from abroad; from whence and Altena they export some grain, malt, groats, starch, buck-wheat, pease, beans, rape-seed, butter, cheese, sheep, swine, horned cattle, horses, and fish. The manufactures of the dutchy are chiefly carried on at Altena, Kiel, and Gluckstadt. Denmark now possesses, the whole dutchy; the imperial cities excepted.

Holt, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday, 20 miles N N W of Norwich, and 122 N E of London. Lon. 1 6 E, lat. 53 5 N.

Holy Island, an island on the coast of Northumberland, six miles S E of Berwick. It is two miles long, and one broad: the soil rocky and full of stones. It has a town and a castle, under which is a commodious harbour, defended by a blockhouse. On this island which is likewise called Lindisfarne, are the ruins of a stately monastery; and here was anciently a bishop's see, removed with the body of St. Cuthbert, first to Chester le Street, and afterward to Durham.

Holyhead, a seaport and cape of the isle of Anglesea. It is the most usual place of embarkation for Dublin, there being packet-boats that sail for that city every day, except Tuesday, wind and weather permitting. On the adjacent rocks the herb grows of which kelp is made; and in the neighbourhood is a large vein of white fuller's earth, and another of yellow. On the isle of Skerries, nine miles to the N, is a light-house. Holyhead is 93 miles W N W of Chester, and 276 N W of London. Lon. 4 22 W, lat. 53 19 N.

Holywell, a town in Flintshire with a market on Friday. It takes its name from the famous well of St. Winifred, concerning which so many fables and superstitious notions have prevailed. It is a copious stream, bursting out of the ground with a considerable degree of impetuosity. Besides the cold bath, celebrated for wonderful cures, formed at the spring-head, and covered with a beautiful Gothic shrine, it is now applied to the purpose of turning several mills for the working of copper, making brass wire, paper, and snuff, and spinning cotton. It is 10 miles E of St. Asaph, and 212 N E of London. Lon. 3 21 W, lat. 54 13 N.

Honduras, a large province of New Spain, bounded on the N by the bay of Honduras, on the E by the Mosquito Shore, on the S by Nicaragua, and on the W by Chiapa and Guatemala. This province, and the peninsula of Jucutan, on the other side of the bay of Honduras, do not, like the other territories of Spain, in the New World, derive their value either from the fertility of their soil, or the richness of their mines; but they produce in greater abundance than any part of America, the logwood-tree, which, in dying some colours, is so far preferable to any other material, that the consumption of it in Europe is considerable, and it is become an article in commerce of great value. During a long period, no European nation intruded upon the Spaniards in these provinces, or attempted to obtain any share in this branch of trade. But, after the conquest of Jamaica by the English, one of the first objects of the settlers on that island was the great profit arising from the logwood trade, and the facility of wresting some portion of it from the Spaniards. Their first attempt was made at Cape Catoche, the S E promontory of Yucatan. When most of the trees near this cape were felled, they removed to the island of Trist, in the bay of Campeachy; and, in later times, their principal station has been in the bay of Honduras. The Spaniards alarmed at this encroachment, endeavoured by negotiation, remonstrances, and open force, to prevent the English from obtaining any footing on that part of the American continent. But, after struggling against it for more than a century, the disasters of an unfortunate war extorted from the court of Madrid, in 1763, a reluctant consent to tolerate this settlement of foreigners in the heart of its territories. This privilege was confirmed by the definitive treaty of 1763, by which, however, it was stipulated, that they should confine themselves within a certain district, lying between the rivers Wallis, or Belize, and Rio Honda, taking the course of the said two rivers for unal-

HOR

terable boundaries, so as that the navigation of them be common to both nations. But by a convention signed in 1786 the English were not only permitted to cut logwood, but mahogany or any other kind of wood, and to carry away any other produce of the country; and also to occupy the small island called Casina. The capital of Honduras

Hottentots, Country of the, a large region in the S extremity of Africa, extending N by W, from the Cape of Good Hope, beyond the mouth of Orange River, and from that cape, in an E N E direction, to the mouth of the Great Fish River, which parts it from Caffraria. It lies between the tropic of Capricorn and 35° S lat. and is bounded on the west, south and east by the Atlantic, Southern, and Indian Oceans, and on the N by regions very little, if at all explored. The Hottentots are as tall as most Europeans, but are more slender; and the characteristic mark of this nation is, the smallness of their hands and feet compared with the other parts of their body. Their skin is of a yellowish brown hue, resembling that of an European who has the jaundice in a high degree. There are not such thick lips among the Hottentots as among their neighbours, the Negroes, the Caffres, and the Mozambiques; and their mouth is of the middling size, with the finest set of teeth imaginable. Their heads are covered with hair, more woolly, if possible, than that of the Negroes. With respect to shape, carriage, and every motion, their whole appearance indicates health and content. In their mien, moreover, a degree of carelessness is observable, that discovers marks of alacrity and resolution; qualities which, upon occasion, they certainly can exhibit. Not only the men, but the women also are clothed with sheep skins; the wool being worn outward in summer, and inward in winter. They wear one skin over their shoulders, the ends of it crossing each other before, and leaving their neck bare; another is fastened round their middle, and reaches down to their knees. They besmear their bodies all over with fat, in which a little soot is mixed: and this is never wiped off. They are likewise perfumed with powder of herbs, rubbing it all over them, when they besmear themselves. The odour of this powder is rank and aromatic, and comes nearest to that of the poppy mixed with spices. The women who are ambitious to please, not only grease all the naked parts of their body, to make them shine but braid or plait their hair as an additional elegance, and adorn themselves with necklaces of shells. A Hottentot lady thus bedizened, has exhausted all the arts of her toilette; and however unfavourable nature may have been, with regard to shape and stature, her pride is wonderfully flattered, while the splendour of her appearance gives her the highest degree of satisfaction. But with all this vanity, they are not devoid of modesty, for the females of this nation cover themselves much more scrupulously than the men. They seldom content themselves with one covering, but almost always have two, and very often three. These are made of well-greased skins, and are fastened about their bodies with a thong, almost like the aprons of our ladies. The outermost is the largest, finest, and most showy, and frequently adorned with glass beads strung in different figures. Both the men and women generally go bareheaded. Neither their ears, nor nose are adorned with any pendent ornaments, as they are among other savages; but the nose is sometimes, by way of greater state, marked with a black streak of soot, or with a large spot of red lead; of which latter, on high days, they likewise put a little on their cheeks. Both sexes wear rings on their arms and legs. Most of these are made of thick leather straps, cut in a circular shape; and these have given rise to the received notion, that the Hottentots wrap guts about their legs, in order to eat them occasionally. Rings of iron, copper, or brass, of the size of a goose-quill, are considered as more genteel than those of leather; but the girls are not allowed to use any rings till they are marriageable. The Hottentots seldom wear any shoes. What they do wear, are made of undressed leather, with the hairy side outward; they are rendered soft and pliable, by being beat and moistened, and are very light and cool. Their habitations are adapted to their wandering pastoral life. They are merely huts, resembling a round bee-hive or a vault, from 18 to 24 feet in diameter, and so low, as scarcely possible for a middle-sized man to stand upright. But neither the lowness of the hut, nor that of the door which is barely three feet high, can be considered as any inconvenience to a Hottentot, who finds no difficulty in stooping and crawling on all-fours, and who is, at any time, more inclined to lie down than stand. The fire-place is in the middle, and they sit or lie round it in a circle. The low door is the only place that admits the light, and the only outlet that is left for the smoke. The Hottentot, inured to it from his infancy, sees it hover round him, without feeling the least inconvenience arising from it to his eyes; and rolled up, like a hedge hog snug in his skin, he lies in the midst of this cloud, till he is now and then obliged to peep out from beneath his sheep-skin, in order to stir the fire, or perhaps to light his pipe, or turn the steak he is broiling over the fire. The order of these huts in a craal or clan, is most frequently in the form of a circle, with the doors inward; by which means a kind of yard is formed, where the cattle are kept at night. Such are the Hottentots in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope. In 1778, lieutenant Paterson visited a Hottentot village in the small Nimiqua Land, in the N W part of the country; it consisted of 19 huts and about 150 inhabitants. The ensign of authority, worn by their chief, was a cane with a brass top, given to him by the Dutch East India Company. The Hottentots amused them, part of the night, with music and dancing; their visitors, in return, treated them with tobacco and dacka, or hemp leaves, which they prefer even to tobacco. Their music was produced from flutes, made of the bark of trees, of different sizes. The men form themselves into a circle, with their flutes; and the women dance round them. Among other tribes of Hottentots are the Boshmans, who inhabit the mountains in the interior part of the country, NE of the Cape, and are enemies to the pastoral life. Their weapons are poisoned arrows, which shot from a small bow, will hit a mark with a tolerable degree of certainty, at the distance of 100 paces. Their habitations are not more agreeable than their manners and maxims. Like the wild beasts, bushes and clefts in rocks, serve them by turns for dwellings. Many of these savages are entirely naked; but some of them cover their body with the skin of any sort of animal, great or small, from the shoulder downward as far as it will reach, wearing it till it fall off their back in rags. As ignorant of agriculture as apes and monkeys, they are obliged, like them, to wander over hills and dales after certain wild roots, berries, and plants, which they eat raw. Their table, however, is composed of several other dishes, among which are caterpillars, termites, locusts, grasshoppers, snakes, and spiders. Another tribe of Hottentots, near the mouth of Orange River, were observed by lieutenant Paterson, in his journey to the N W in 1779. Their huts were loftier, and thatched with grass. Their mode of living is in the highest degree wretched, and they are apparently the most dirty of all the Hottentot tribes. Their dress is composed of the skins of seals and jackalls the flesh of which they eat. When a grampus is cast ashore, they remove their huts to the place, and subsist upon it as long as any part of it remains; and in this manner, it sometimes affords them sustenance for half a year, though in a great measure decayed and putrified by the sun. They smear their skin with the oil, the odour of which is so powerful, that their approach may be perceived some time before they appear in view. With respect to the Hottentots, in general, none of them seem to have any religion, nor do they appear willing to receive any instruction. All of them, however, have the firmest opinion of the power of magic; whence it might be inferred, that they believe in an evil being, but they pay no religious worship to him, though from this source they derive all the evils that happen; and among these they reckon cold, rain, and thunder. So monstrously ignorant are they, that the Boians will abuse the thunder with many opprobrious epithets, and threaten to assault the lightning. Even the most intelligent of them could not be convinced by Dr. Sparrman, that rain was not always an evil, and that it would be an unhappy circumstance, were it never to rain. They seem, however, to have some idea of a future state, as they reproach their friends, when dead with leaving them so soon, admonishing them to behave henceforth more properly; by which they mean, that their deceased friends should not come back again and haunt them, nor allow themselves to be made use of by wizards, to bring any mischief on those that survive them. The Hottentots sleep promiscuously in the same hut, and are neither acquainted with the difference of age, nor with that invincible horror which separates beings connected by blood. The country possessed by the Dutch is of a pretty considerable extent, comprehending not only the large tract between Table Bay and False Bay, but that which is called Hottentot Holland, extending from False Bay to the Cabo dos Agulhas, or Cape of Needles, and the country further E beyond St. Christopher's River, called Terra de Natal. The whole of this country is naturally barren and mountainous; but the industrious Dutch have overcome all natural difficulties, and it produces, not only a sufficiency of all the necessaries of life for the inhabitants, but also for the refreshment of all the European ships that touch here. The Dutch consider the year as divided into two seasons, which they term monsoons, the wet monsoon, or winter, begins in March; and the dry one, or summer, in September. Among the quadrupeds of this country are antelopes, which go in herds of 20,000 each; buffaloes; cameleopardises; the gems-boch, a species of antelope, which has remarkably long sharp horns, and when attacked by dogs will sit on its hind quarters, and defend itself; wild dogs, which travel in herds, and are very destructive to sheep; elephants; elks; hyenas; the koedo, an animal of a mouse colour, rather larger than our deer, with three white stripes over the back, and the male having very large twisted horns; lions; jackals; tigers; the quacha, a species of the zebra, but more tractable; rhinoceroses; horses; domestic horned cattle; common sheep, and a peculiar species of sheep covered with hair instead of wool. The hippopotamus or river-horse is frequently seen here. Among the birds are vultures, ostriches, whose eggs are excellent food; and the loxia, a species of gregarious bird; these latter build their curious nest in the mimosa tree, where they form a kind of thatched house, with a regular street of nests on both sides, at about two inches distance from each other, and containing under its roof, in one that lieutenant Paterson saw, upward of 800 birds. Among the insects are, the termites, or white ants, which do no injury to wood coast of Bretagne. It is 10 miles in circumference.

Howdan, a town of France, now in the department of Euro and Loire and lately in the province of Beauce, with a manufacture of woollen stockings. It is seated on the Vegre, 10 miles from Dreux, and 32 miles S W of Paris.
Lon. 1 41 E, lat. 48 47 N.

Hounslow, a town in Middlesex, with a market on Thursday. It is situate on a heath of the same name, on which are some powder-mills, on a branch of the river Coln. Here is a charity school and a chapel. The heath is noted for robberies and horse races.
Hounslow is 10 miles W by S of London.

Hou-quang, a province of China, which occupies nearly the centre of the empire. Yang-tse-kiang traverses it from E to W, and divides it into two parts. This province (the greater part of which is level, and watered by canals, lakes, and rivers) is celebrated for its fertility; the Chinese call it the storehouse of the empire. It contains 15 cities of the first class, and 114 of the second and third. Vout-chang-fou is the capital.

Hou-tcheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Tche-kiang. It takes its name from a lake of the same name, on which it is seated. The quantity of silk manufactured here is almost incredible. Its district contains one city of the second and six of the third class.
It is 160 miles N E of Nan-king. Lon.

9 39 E, lat. 51 50 N.

Hoy, one of the Orkney Islands, situate between the Island of Pomona and the N coast of Caithness-shire. It is 10 miles long. On this island, besides the great conic hill of Holyhead, which is a sea mark, there is a stupendous rock, called the Beary, where a bird, named the layer, supposed to be a species of penguin, is found. In a gloomy valley in this island, is a large stone, 36 feet long and 18 broad, called the Dwarfic stone. It is hollow within, having the form of a bed and pillow cut in the stone; and is supposed to have been the habitation of a hermit. Lon. 3 20 W, lat. 58 36 N.

Hoye, a town of Westphalia, capital of a county of the same name, subject to the elector of Hanover, seated on the Weser, 43 miles N W of Zell.
Lon. 9 6 E, lat. 52 57 N.

Hubert, St. a town of Austrian Luxemburg, with an abbey, 20 miles S E of Rochefort. Lon. 5 12 E, lat. 50 0 N.

Huddersfield, a town in the W riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Tuesday. It is the mart for narrow cloths, called plains. It is 42 miles S W of York, and 189 N N W of London.
Lon. 1 40 W, lat. 53 40 N.

Hudson, one of the most flourishing cities in the state of New York; situated on the E bank of Hudson river, in Columbia county, 132 miles N of the city of New York, and 40 S of Albany, in the lat. of 42 15 N and Lon. of 74 9 W. The foundation of the first house was laid in 1783, and in 1800 it contained 3664 inhabitants.
Here is a post office, and a bank whose capital is limited by act of Assembly, to 160,000 Dollars.

Hudson's Bay, a bay of North Amerira, lying between 51 and 69° N latitude, and discovered, in 1610, by captain Henry Hudson. He had made two voyages before on the same adventure; the first in 1607, and the second in 1608. In his third and last, in 1610, he entered the straits that lead into the bay known by his name; coasted a great part of it, and penetrated to 80° 30' N lat. His ardour for the discovery not being abated by the difficulties he struggled with in this empire of frost and snow, he staid here till the ensuing spring, and then prepared to pursue his discoveries; but his crew, who suffered equal hardships, without the same spirit to support them, mutinied, seized him and seven of those who were most faithful to him, and committed them to the icy seas in an open boat. Hudson and his companions were never heard of more; but the ship and the rest of the men returned home. Other attempts towards a discovery of that passage have been since made, but hitherto without effect. The entrance of this bay, from the ocean, is between Resolution Isles on the N, and Button's Isles on the Labrador coast to the S, forming the E extremity of the strait, distinguished by the name of its great discoverer. This bay communicates on the N, by two straits, with Baffin's Bay: on the E side it is bordered by Labrador, on the S W by New South Wales, and on the W by New North Wales. These countries are included under the name of New Britain, and abound with animals whose skins and furs are far superior in quality to those found in less northerly regions. The natives are called Esquimaux, and Northern Indians; and are materially different from all the Southern tribes. In 1670, a charter was granted to a company, which does not consist of above ten persons, for the exclusive trade to this bay. This company possess three forts on the S coast of James Bay, by which the S termination of Hudson's Bay is distinguished. These factories are called Rupert, Moose, and Albany, and they lie, from 51 to 52° N lat. and from 75 to 79° W lon. On the W side of Hudson's Bay, considerably up Hayes River, is a factory called Flam-borough; and beyond this is York Fort, on Nehon River, in lon. 92 30, and lat. 57 25: but the most northern settlement is Prince of Wales' Fort, at the mouth of Church-hill River, in lon. 94 7, and lat. 58 48. In December 1770, Mr. Hearne, in the service of the Hudson's Bay Company, set out from Prince of Wales' Fort to explore a river, that the Esquimaux, who came to the company's factories to trade, had brought to their knowledge; and which, on account of much copper being found near it, had obtained the name of Copper-mine River. Under the convoy of those Indians, he arrived at this river in June 1771, and traced it till he came in sight of the Pacific Ocean, finding it encumbered with shoals and falls to its mouth, which is in lat. 72° N, and lon. 119° W. In 1782, the settlement, &c. of the company, valued at 500,000*l.* were destroyed by a French squadron; but the damage has been repaired, and the commerce is again in a flourishing situation.

Hudson's River, one of the finest rivers of the United States of America. It rises in the mountainous country, between the lakes Ontario and Champlain, waters Albany and Hudson, and enters the Atlantic Ocean, at New York, after a course of 250 miles. It is navigable for sloops to Albany, and for ships to Hudson.

Huena, an island of the Baltic, three miles from the coast of Sweden, and subject to the Swedes, to whom it was ceded by the Danes in 1658. It has one scattered village, and produces hay and corn, more than sufficient for its own consumption. In this island was the observatory of the celebrated Tycho Brahe. It is six miles in circumference; nine miles S by E of Elsinore, and 14 N by E of Copenhagen. Lon. 12 38 E, lat. 55 54 N.

Huesca, an ancient town of Spain, in Arragon, with a bishop's see, and a university. It is seated on the Issuela, 35 miles N E of Saragossa. Lon. 0 2 W, lat. 42 18 N.

Huescar, a town of Spain, in the kingdom of Granada, with a castle, 60 miles N E of Granada. Lon. 2 20 W, lat. 37 45 N.

64 miles W of London. Lon. 1 26 W, lat. 51 26 N.

Huninguen, a fortified town of France, now in the department of Upper Rhine and lately in the province of Alsace, seated on the Rhine, five miles N of Basle. Lon. 11 40 E, lat. 47 40 N.

Hunmanby, a town in the E riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Tuesday, 34 miles N E of York, and 209 N of London. Lon. 0 12 W, lat. 54 12 N.

Huntingdon, the county-town of Huntingdonshire, with a market on Saturday. It is pleasantly seated on a rising ground, on the river Ouse, over which is a stone bridge to Godmanchester; and was once a large place, having no less than 15 churches, which are now reduced to two. It sends two members to parliament, and is governed by a mayor. Huntingdon is the birthplace of Oliver Cromwell. It is 16 miles W by N of Cambridge, and 65 N of London. Lon. 0 5 W, lat. 52 17 N.

Huntingdon, the capital town in Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania; situated on the N side of Juniata river, 90 miles W of Harrisburg, and 35 S W of Lewistown. It has a post-office, courthouse, jail, and 1250 inhabitants.

Huntingdon, a town in Chittenden county, Vermont, on the S side of Onion river, 10 miles northward of Bristol, and 16 S E of Burlington, with about 450 inhabitants.

Huntingdon, a town in Fairfield county, Connecticut, on the S side of Housatonic river, about 16 miles N of Fairfield.

Huntingdon, a town in Suffolk county, New-York; situated on Long Island, 14 miles S E of Smithtown, and 36 N E of the city of New York.

Huntingdonshire, a county of England, 25 miles in length, and 20 in its broadest part; bounded on the N and N W by Northamptonshire, on the E by Cambridgeshire, and on the S W by Bedfordshire. It contains four hundreds, six market-towns, and 79 parishes. The principal rivers are the Ouse and Nen. The S E part consists of beautiful meadows. The middle and western parts are fertile in corn, and sprinkled with woods; and the upland part was, anciently a forest, peculiarly adapted for hupping. The N E part consists of fens, which join those of Ely; but they are drained, so as to afford rich pasturage, and even large crops of corn. The air of this county is, in most parts pleasant and wholesome, except among the fens and meres there are great numbers of cattle and plenty of water-fowl, fish, and turf for firing; which last is of great service to the inhabitants, there being but little wood, though the whole county was a forest in the time of Henry II. This county sends four members to parliament; and the sheriff, who is chosen alternately from Cambridgeshire, the isle of Ely, and Huntingdonshire, is sheriff of both counties.

Huntspil, a small town in Somersetshire at the mouth of the river Parret, five miles N of Bridgewater, and 143 W by S of London. Lon. 3 12 W, lat. 51 11 N.

Huntsville, a small post town in Surry county, North Carolina, 15 miles S W of Bethania the Moravian town.

Huntsburg, a town in Franklin county, Vermont; situated near the line that divides this State from Lower Canada, at the distance of about 12 miles E of Lake Champlain. Here is a post-office.

Hurdwar, a town of the province of Delhi, where the Ganges first enters the plains of Hindoostan. It is 117 miles N by E of Delhi. Lon. 78 15 E, lat. 29 35 N.

Huron, a lake of North America, which lies between 80 and 85° W lon, and 42 and 46° N lat. from whence the country around is called the country of the Hurons.

Hurst Castle, a castle in Hampshire, near Lyminster. In this castle Charles I. was confined previously to his being brought to trial. It is seated on the extreme point of a neck of land, which shoots into the sea toward the isle of Wight from which it is distant two miles.

Hussingabad, a town of Hindoostan in the province of Malwa, the eastern division of the Mahratta empire. It is 140 miles N W of Nagpou. Lon. 77 54 E, lat. 22 42 N.

Husum, a town of Denmark, in the dutchy of Sleswick, with a strong citadel, and a very handsome church. It is seated near the river Ow, on the German Ocean, 20 miles W of Sleswick. Lon. 9 0 E, lat. 54 45 N.

Huy, a town of the Netherlands, in the bishopric of Liege; the Dutch, in 1718, demolished the fortifications, and surrendered it to the bishop of Liege. It is seated on the Maese, 12 miles civet-cats, and monkeys. Here are fowls, and birds of almost all sorts; and Indian corn, plantains, bananas, pumpions, oranges, lemons, tamarinds, pine-apples, cocoa-nuts, guavas, tar, apples, and sugar-canes. It has also some cedar trees, and plenty of cotton. St. Jago or Ribeira-Grande is the capital, but the governor resides at Praya.

Jago, St. a handsome and considerable town of South America, the capital of Chili, with a good harbour, a bishop's see, and a royal audience. It is seated in a beautiful plain, abounding in all the necessaries of life, at the foot of the Andes, on the river Mapocho. Here are several canals, and a dike, by means of which they water the gardens and cool the streets. It is subject to earthquakes, and the inhabitants are native Americana and Spaniards. Lon. 71 5 W, lat. 34 10 S.

Jago-de-Cuba, St. the capital of the island of Cuba, with a good harbour, at the bottom of a bay, and on a river of the same name. Lon. 76 10 W, lat. 20 5 N.

Jamaica, an island of the West Indies, discovered by Columbus, in 1494. It lies in the Atlantic Ocean, 30 leagues W of Hispaniola, nearly the same distance S of Cuba, and 145 leagues N of Carthagena, on the continent of South America. It is of an oval figure, 150 miles long, and 40 broad in the middle. It contains upwards of 4,000,000 acres, and is divided by a ridge of hills which run lengthwise from E to W. Here numerous fine rivers take their rise from both sides, yet none of them are navigable, even for bargeas; but some are so large, that the sugars are carried upon them in canoes from the remote plantations to the seaside; some of them run under ground for a considerable space, and particularly the Rio-Cobre and the Rio-Peara. The mountains, and great part of the island, are covered with woods, which look green at all times of the year; for here is an eternal spring. There are many different kinds of trees adorning the brow of every hill, and forming groves and cool retreats. Among these are the lignum vita, the cedar, and the mahogany-trees. In the vallies are sugar-canes, and such a variety of fruit-trees as to make the country look like a paland of the West Indies, discovered by Columbus, in 1494.

It is situated in the Atlantic Ocean, 30 leagues from the coast of South America, and 145 leagues N of the continent of South America, in an oval figure, 150 miles broad in the middle.
It contains 4,000,000 acres, and is a ridge of hills which run from E to W. Here the mountains take their rise and yet none of them are very high; but some of the sugars are carried to the seaside; some ground for a considerable quantity, particularly the Rio-de-Pedra. The mountains of the island, are very high, and look green all the year; for here it is very hot, and there are many different flowers adorning the brow, forming groves and among these are the cedar, and the mahoeny. The vallies are sugarcane, and a variety of fruit-trees the country look like a paradise. But to balance this, there are alligators in the rivers; guianoes and galliwags in the fens and marshes; and snakes and noxious animals in the mountains. The longest day is about 13 hours, and about nine in the morning it is so intolerably hot, that it would be difficult to live, if the sea-breezes did not arise to cool the air. Sometimes the nights are pretty cool, and there are great dews, which are deemed unwholesome, especially to newcomers. The year is distinguished into two seasons, the wet and dry; but the rains are not so frequent as formerly, which is supposed to be owing to the cutting down of the woods. The months of July, August, and September, are called the hurricane months, because then they are the most frequent; and there is lightning almost every night.

There is not above a third part of the island inhabited, for the plantations are all by the seaside. Here and there are savannas, or large plains, where the original natives used to plant their Indian corn, and which the Spaniards made use of for breeding their cattle.
The best houses are generally built low, being only one story, on account of the hurricanes and earthquakes; and the negroes huts are made of reeds, and will hold only two or three persons. The common drink is Madeira wine or rum punch. The common bread, or that which serves for it, is plantains, yams, and cassava-roots; but in 1793, a great number of the bread-fruit trees were brought here from O-taheite, and introduced into the different plantations. Hogs and sheep are plentiful, but the servants generally feed upon Irish salt-beef, and the negroes have herrings and salt-fish. The general produce of this island is sugar, rum, ginger, cotton, indigo, pimenta, chocolate, several kinds of woods, and medicinal drugs. It has some tobacco, but not good, and used only by the negroes, who can scarce live without it; also Indian corn, Guinea corn, and peas of various kinds, with variety of roots.
Fruits are in great plenty, such as oranges, lemons, shaddockes, citrons, pomegranates, mammees, sweet-sops, papaws, pine-apples, star-apples, prickly pears, melons, pompions, guavas, and many other sorts. There are four negroes to a white man; and of the former there are about 100,000, besides a mixed breed, between the blacks, whites, and mulattoes. This island was taken by the English in 1655, and is now the most valuable of their West India colonies. In June 1795, the Maroons, or original natives, who inhabit the mountains, rose against the English, and were not quelled till March 1796. The principal town is Kingston; but St. Jago de la Vega, or Spanish Town, is the seat of government.

Tonsa, and these are surrounded by a great number of smaller. All these are subject to one sovereign, or emperor, who has 50 or 60 vassal kings under his dominion, whom he can depose or punish at his pleasure. They are obliged one half of the year to attend his court, and therefore each of them has a house within the verge of the emperor's palace at Jeddo. The eldest sons of the nobility are also brought up at court, where they continue till they are promoted to some post. This prince, when he appears abroad is attended by 5000 or 6000 of his guards, and maintains an army of 20,000 horse, and 100,000 foot, though there seems to be no necessity for so large a body of men, unless he suspects the fidelity of his vassals. His revenues, according to the accounts given of this country, exceed those of all the monarchs upon earth added together: and the riches of the country are answerable, it being said by the Portuguese, and some of our own countrymen, who formerly traded to Japan, that their palaces are covered with gold plates instead of tiles. But Christians of no denomination have been suffered to settle in Japan for above a hundred years, on pretence of a conspiracy formed by the Portuguese and their proselytes against the government. The Dutch alone were admitted to traffic afterwards, upon declaring, it is said, they were no Christians, and then trampling upon the cross, to confirm the Japanese in this opinion; and they are so jealous even of the Dutch, that upon the arrival of any of their ships, they take away their guns, sails, and rudders, carrying them on shore till they are ready to sail. The goods which the Dutch import to Japan, are spices, sugars, silks, woollen and linen manufactures, elephants teeth, and haberdashery wares, for which they have in return, gold, silver, fine copper, cabinets, and other curious Japan works, and lacquered ware. The Japanese make no use of tables, beds, or chairs, but sit and lie upon carpets, in the same manner as the Turks and Persians.

Japara, a seaport on the N coast of the island of Java in Asia, with a good harbour. It was the capital of a considerable kingdom, till the Dutch made themselves masters of it; and now they have a colony here, and a considerable trade. It is 253 miles E by S

Java, an island of the East Indies, lying to the S of Borneo, and separated at its W end from Sumatra, by the strait of Sunda. It is sometimes called Great Java, to distinguish it from Bali, by some named Little Java, and is 420 miles in length, and of various breadth, extending from 105 to 118° E lon. and 6 to 8° S lat. The N coast has a great many commodious creeks, bays, harbours, and towns, with many little islands near the shore. In former times it had as many petty kings as there were large towns; but now it has two kingdoms only: one of which is under the king of Mataram, and the other under the king of Bantam. The Javanese are a barbarous, proud, and fierce people, of a brown complexion, short coal-black hair, large cheeks, small eyes, and large eyebrows. The men are very robust and strong limbed, but the women are small. The men wear a piece of calico wrapt two or three times round their middle; and the women wear them from their armpits down to their knees, but all other parts are bare. The men have two or three wives, and several concubines, according to their circumstances. Those that live near the sea-side are generally Mahometans; but within land they are Gentoos, abstaining from flesh of all kinds. This island has very high mountains, particularly the Pepper mountain on the S side; it has likewise impassable forests and wildernesses; but to the N, between Batavia and Bantam, is a very populous country, full of rice-fields, and plenty of salt and pepper, besides most sorts of fruits proper to the climate. Here also is plenty of hogs, bees, and sheep, with other tame animals; and likewise fowl, both wild and tame, in great abundance. In the woods are large tigers, rhinoceroses, and other wild beasts; and in the rivers are crocodiles. The air is as temperate and healthy as in any part of the East Indies. The serene season is from May till November, and then the rains begin, which lay the low grounds under water, kill the insects, and continue till May. In March they begin to sow, and in July the sugar and rice begin to ripen; but September and October are the best months for all sorts of fruits. Java has a river which rises in the mountains, and, dividing itself into many branches, waters the circumjacent country; these afterwards reunite and pass thro' Batavia, dividing it into two parts. This island is mostly under the dominion of the Dutch; and, besides the native Javanese, it is inhabited by Chinese, Malaysians, Amboynese, Topassese, Bugassese, Timoreans, and many other people brought from distant countries by the Dutch. In 1740, the Dutch pretended that the Chinese were going to make an insurrection, and upon that account disarmed them; and yet, after that, they barbarously massacred them, to the number of 20,000 men, women, and children, and seized their effects. Batavia is the capital.

Java, (the less) or Bally lies on the E of Java the great, the two islands being separated by a narrow channel.

Jawer, a strong town of Silesia, capital of a province of the same name, with a citadel, and a large square, surrounded by piazzas. It is 12 miles S of Lignitz, and 88 E of Prague. Lon. 16 56 E, lat. 50 58 N.

Jaypour. See Jypour.

Iberg, or Iberg, a town of Germany in the circle of Westphalia, and in the bishopric of Osnaburg, 10 miles S W of Osnaburg, and 30 N E of Munster. Lon. 8 20 E, lat. 52 14 N.

Iceland, a large island to the W of Norway, 300 miles in length, and 150 in breadth, lying between 64 and 66° N lat. For two months together the sun never sets; and in the winter it never rises for the same space, at least not entirely. The middle of this island is mountainous, stony, and barren; but in some places there are excellent pastures, and the grass has a fine smell. The ice which gets loose from the more northern country in May, brings with it a large quantity of wood and several animals, such as foxes, wolves, and bears. Mount Hecla is the most noted mountain, and is a volcano, which sometimes throws out sulphureous torrents. The inhabitants believe that some of the souls of the damned go to this mountain, and that others are confined to the ice near this island. Their houses are at a distance from each other, and many of them deep in the ground; but they are all miserable huts, covered with skins. Many of the inhabitants profess Christianity; but those that live at a distance are pagans. They are mostly clothed with the skins of beasts. The Danes trade with the natives for hides, tallow, trainoil, whalebone, and seahorse teeth, which are as good as ivory. Iceland, which was considered by the ancients as the Ultima Thule, or the extremity of the world, and by us as scarcely habitable, once abounded in learning and science, at a time when great part of Europe was involved in darkness. Their language was the old Gothic or Teutonic, the vernacular tongue of the Swedes, Danes, and Norwegians, before it branched into the several dialects since spoken by the natives of these three kingdoms.

Ickwell, a village in Bedfordshire, with a fair on April 5.

Ickleton, a village in Cambridgeshire, with a fair on August 2d.

Ickworth, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Friday. Here are the ruins of an ancient priory, and several Roman coins have been dug up. It is 23 miles N W of Ipswich, and 74 N N E of London. Lon. 1 0 E, lat. 52 22 N.

Icolmhill, formerly Iona, a famous little island, one of the Hebrides, near the S W point of the isle of Mull. It is only three miles long and one broad; but is very fertile. It has a mean village, and the ruins of an august monastery and cathedral, said to have been founded by St. Columba, where there are three chapels, or rather cemeteries in which several ancient kings of Scotland, Ireland, and Norway are buried. In former times, this island was the place, where the archives of Scotland, and many valuable and ancient MSS were kept. Many of these, it is said, were carried to the Scotch college at Douay in France. This once celebrated seat of royalty and learning is now almost destitute of an instructor, to teach the people the common duties of religion.

Ida, Mount, a lofty and pointed mountain, in the middle of the island of Candia, famous in ancient times. It is now nothing but a great monstrous ugly barren mountain, quite bare on the top, without the least shadow of a landscape, grotto, or spring. All the cattle that are bred on it are a few paltry horses, some sheep, and half starved goats.

Jean-d'Angely, a town of France, now in the department of Lower Charente lately in the province Saintonge, and formerly had a fine benedictine abbey. It was taken from the Huguenots, in 1621, by Lewis XIII. who demolished the fortifications. It is famous for its brandy, and is seated on the Boutonne, 15 miles N E of Saintes, and 32 S E of Rochelle. Lon. 0 20 W, lat. 45 59 N.

Jean-de-Laune, St. a town of France, now in the department of Cote d'Or, lately in the province of Burgundy. It is seated on the Saone, 15 miles S E of Dijon, and 155 S E of Paris. Lon. 5 19 E, lat. 47 8 N.

Jean-de-Luz, St. a town of France, now in the department of the Lower Pyrenees lately in the province of Basques. It is the last next Spain, with a harbour, and owes its opulence to the cod and whale fishery. It is seated on a small river, near the bay of Biscay, 10 miles N E of Fontarabia, and 12 S W of Bayonne. Lon. 40 E, lat. 43 23 N.

Jean-de-Maurienne, a town of Italy in Savoy, capital of a county of the same name, with a bishop's see. It is seated in a valley, on the river Arc, 15 miles S by W of Montier, and 25 N E of Grenoble. Lon. 6 20 E, lat. 45 17 N.

Jean-Pied-de-Port, St. a town of France, now in the department of the Lower Pyrenees, late province of Lower Navarre. It is seated on the river Nive, at the entrance of those passages, or defiles, in the Pyrenees, which in this country are called Ports, and defended by a citadel upon an eminence. It is 29 miles S E of Bayonne, and 30 N E of Pampeluna. Lon. 1 33 E, lat. 43 12 N.

Jean-d'Ulula, St. an island of North America, in New Spain, lying in the North Sea. Lon. 101 15 W, lat. 19 0 N.

Jed, a river in Roxburghshire, which joins the Teviot, a little below Jedburgh, at a place where the marquis of Lothian has a seat, called Mount Teviot, and near this on the W side of the river are the beautiful ruins of an abbey, founded by king David; a part of which ancient pile still serves for a parish church. On the banks of this river, are also several large caverns, which were the hiding places of the ancient border warriors.

Jedburgh, a borough in Roxburghshire, situate on the Jed, near its confluence with the Teviot. It has a good market for corn and cattle, and is the seat of the courts of justice for the county. It is 36 miles S E of Edinburgh. Lon. 2 25 W, lat. 55 33 N.

Jeddo, the capital town or city of the islands of Japan, where the emperor resides. It is open on all sides, having neither walls nor ramparts; and the houses are built with earth, and boarded on the outside to prevent the rain from destroying the walls. In every street there is an iron gate, which is shut up in the night, and a kind of custom-house or magazine, to put merchandises in. It is a large place being nine miles in length, and six in breadth, and contains 1,000,000 of inhabitants. A fire happened in 1658, which, in the space of 48 hours, burnt down 100,000 houses, and in which a vast number of inhabitants perished. The emperor's palace and all the rest were reduced to ashes; but they are all rebuilt again. The royal palace is in the middle of the town; and is defended with walls, ditches, towers, and bastions. Where the emperor resides, there are three towers nine stories high, each covered with plates of gold; and the hall of audience is said to be supported by pillars of massy gold. Near the palace are several others, where the relations of the emperor live. The empress has a palace of her own, and there are 20 small ones for the concubines. Besides, all the vassal kings have each a palace in the city, with a handsome garden, and stables for 2000 horses. The houses of the common sort are nothing but a ground floor, and the rooms are parted by folding screens; so that they can make the rooms larger or smaller at pleasure. It is seated in an agreeable plain, at the bottom of a fine bay, and the river which crosses it, is divided into several canals. Lon. 140 0 E, lat. 33 32 N.

Jersey, an island in the English Channel, 18 miles from the coast of Normandy in France, and 84 S of Portland in Dorsetshire. It is subject to the English; but is still governed by the ancient Norman laws. It is 30 miles in circumference, and difficult of access, on account of the rocks, sands, and forts erected for its defence. It contains 12 parishes; and the chief town is St. Helier, in the S part of the island. It is well watered with rivulets, well stocked with fruit trees, and has a noted manufacture for woollen stockings and caps. The soil is fertile though there is a great deficiency of arable land for corn on account of the vast quantity of apple trees planted here for cider, 24000 hogsheads having been made here in one year. In 1781, a body of French troops landed on this island, surprised the lieutenant governor, made him prisoner, and compelled him to sign a capitulation; but major Pierson, the commander of the English troops, refused to abide by this forced capitulation, and attacked the French in the town of St. Helier. The French were compelled to surrender prisoners of war; but the gallant major was killed in the moment of victory.

Jerusalem, an ancient and famous city of Palestine, capital of Judea, after David had conquered the Jebusites. It was taken by Nebuchadnezzar in the reign of Zedekiah, and the Jews were led captives to Babylon. It was afterwards taken by the Romans, and ruined, together with the Temple, 70 years after the birth of Christ, as had been foretold in the scriptures. The emperor Adrian built a new city, near the ruins of ancient Jerusalem. It was taken by the Persians in 614, and by the Saracens in 636. In 1099 it was retaken by the Crusaders, who founded a new kingdom which lasted 88 years, under nine kings. Saladin king of Egypt and Syria, got possession of it in 1187. The Turks expelled the Saracens in 1217, have kept possession of it ever since, and call it Heleods, that is, The Holy City. It is now inhabited by Turks, Arabs, Jews, and Christians. It stands on a high rock, with steep ascents on every side, except to the N. It is almost surrounded by vallies encompassed with mountains, so that it seems to stand in the middle of an amphitheatre. It is about three miles in circumference, and includes Mount Calvary, which was formerly without the walls. What renders it considerable is the great resort of pilgrims; for the inhabitants accommodate them with lodgings and provisions, which is their chief business. A bashaw, with a guard of janissaries, always resides here, to protect them from the Arabs. The church of the Holy Sepulchre, which the pilgrims come to visit, is a large structure, with a round nave, and has no light but what comes through the top, like the Pantheon at Rome. In the middle of the nave, and directly under the opening of the dome, is the Holy Sepulchre, which is placed in a chapel, whose door is three feet high and two broad. It is so small, that it will hold but three persons on their knees at a time. At the entrance, on the right hand, is the place where the body of our Saviour was laid. The table on which he was said to have been laid at first is two feet and a half high from the pavement, which is now covered with white marble, because its visitors were all for carrying away a small bit. This chapel is cut out of the rock, and there are three holes in the roof, to let out the smoke of the lamps, which are 44 in number, and always kept lighted. The whole is covered with white marble both within and without; and on the outside there are ten fine columns of the same. It is covered with a platform, the middle of which is exactly above the three holes, and forms a small dome, six feet in height, covered with lead, and supported by 12 columns of porphyry, placed by pairs on the platform, and so making six arches, having three lamps under each. Before the gate of the sepulchre is a silver lamp, so large, that two men cannot fathom it. Every year, on Good-Friday, all the parts of our Saviour's passion are solemnized and acted here. They have first a sermon, and then every one takes a lighted taper in his hand, with crucifixes &c. to begin the procession. Among the crucifixes is one as large as life, being crowned with thorns, and besmeared with blood. They visit first the pillar of flagellation; next the prison; afterwards the altar of the division of Christ's garments: then they advance to the chapel of derision, and thence to Mount Calvary, leaving their shoes at the bottom of the stairs. Here are two altars; one where our Lord was supposed to be nailed to the cross; and another where it was erected; here they set up the crucified image, then pull out the nails, take down the body, and wrap it in a winding-sheet, which finishes the ceremony. Jeso, a group of islands on the E coast of Asia, lying between those of Japan and the Kuriles. The southernmost, called Matmai, lies N of Nippon. It is governed, by a tributary prince, dependent on the empire of Japan, and fortified on the side toward the continent. It is full of woods; and the inhabitants, who live by fishing and hunting, are strong, robust, savage, and slovenly, when compared to the Japanese. The two islands to the N E of Matmai, Kunachir and Zellany, and likewise the three still further to the N E, called the three Sisters, are perfectly independent. The Japanese give the name of Jeso to the whole chain of islands between Japan and Kamachatka. See Kuriles.

Jionpour, a city of Hindoostan Proper, capital of a circar of the same name, in Benares. It is seated on the Goomty; and not far from the confluence of that river with the Ganges; the fort of Jionpour is a building of considerable extent, on a high bank commanding the bridge over thb Goomty. It is now chiefly in ruins, although, formerly, it commanded the country from the Ganges to Lucknow. The place was, at one time, the seat of an empire. Chaja Jahan, vizier to sultan Mahummud Shah, during the minority of his son, Mamood Shah, assumed the title of sultan Shirki, or king of the East, took possession of Bahar, and fixed his residence at Jionpour, where he built the great mussud, or mausoleum, which is still remaining, for himself and family. The stone bridge over the Goomty consists of 16 pointed arches: and on the top of it are many little shops on both sides. It was built in 1567, upon such sound principles, as to have withstood, for such a length of time, the force of the stream, which, in the time of the rains, is very great. The inundations have been known to rise frequently over the bridge, inasmuch that in 1774, a brigade of the British army passed over it in boats. Jionpour is 49 miles N W of Benares. Imeritia, a country of Asia, between the Black Sea and the Caspian, bounded on the S by Turkey, on the W by Mingrelia, on the N by Ossetia, and on the E by Georgia, of which it is, properly speaking, a part. The revenues of the sovereign, who is styled czar, arise from a contribution of the peasants in wine, grain and cattle, and from the tribute of the neighbouring princes; and among the extraordinary sources of revenue, confiscations have a considerable share. But as all this is insufficient for the subsistence of the prince, he usually travels from house to house, living on his vassals, and never changing his quarters till he has consumed every thing eatable. The court of Imeritia is, therefore, not remarkable for splendour, nor the prince's table sumptuously served. His usual fare consists of grom, (a species of millet, ground, and boiled into a paste) a piece of roasted meat, and some pressed caviare. These he eats with his fingers; forks and spoons being unknown in Imeritia. At table he is frequently employed in judging causes, which he decides at his discretion, there being no law but his own will. He usually wears a coarse dress of a brown colour, with a musket on his shoulder; but upon solemn occasions, he puts on a robe of rich gold brocade, and hangs round his neck a silver chain. He is distinguished from his subjects by riding upon an ass, perhaps the only one in Imeritia, and by wearing boots. He has no regular troops, but can collect an undisciplined army of 6,000 men, nor has he any artillery. His civil ordinances are issued every Friday, which is the market day, when one of his servants ascends a tree, and with a loud voice proclaims the edict, which is communicated to the people, by each person, upon his return to the place of his abode. The inhabitants, estimated at 20,000 families, are not collected into towns or villages, but scattered over the country in small hamlets. They send yearly considerable quantities of wine to the neighbouring parts of Georgia, in leathern bags, carried by horses. But they are without manufactures, very poor and miserable, and cruelly oppressed by their landlords. The Imeritians are of the Greek religion. Their patriarch, who is generally of the royal family, can seldom read or write; and the inferior clergy are not better instructed. Their churches are wretched buildings, scarcely to be distinguished from common cottages, but from a paper cross over the principal door, and some paintings of the virgin and the saints. Cutais is the capital.

Inchcolm, an island in the frith of Forth, near the coast of Fife, but within the county of Edinburgh. Here are the fine ruins of a monastery, founded in 1123, by Alexander I. in gratitude, it is said, for his escape, when driven on this island in a tempest, and for the hospitable treatment he received here, for three days, from a hermit, who entertained him with the milk of his cow, and a few shell-fish. It was of the order of Augustines and dedicated to St. Colomba.

But the name of India can be applied, with propriety to that country only, which is distinguished both in Asia and Europe, by the name of Hindoostan. The countries to the E of the river Burampooter (namely Aracan, Assam, Ava, Burmah, Cambodia, Cochinchina, Laos, Malacca, Pegu, Siam and Tonquin) which geographers have hitherto distinguished by the name of the Peninsula of India beyond the Ganges, are no more to be considered as belonging to India, than the bordering countries of Persia, Tartary, and Thibet. IND

In the Indian Ocean, extending from the peninsula of Hindoostan as far E as New Guinea, and from the bay of Bengal and the China Sea as far S as New Holland. The most western of them are the Maldives, and the most eastern the Molluccas; between which are several very large ones, as Ceylon, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, and Celebes, besides many others of considerable importance as to riches, though much inferior in extent. Their produce and other particulars, are described under their several heads.

Indies, West, the name given to a great number of islands in the Atlantic Ocean, which extend across the entrance of the gulf of Mexico, from the N W extremity of the Bahama Islands, off the coast of Florida. in lat. 27 45 N, in a SE direction, to the island of Tobago, 120 miles from the coast of Terra Firma, in lat. 11 30 N. Cuba is the most western, and Barbadoes the most eastern of these islands. When Columbus discovered them in 1492, he considered them as part of those vast regions in Asia, comprehended under the general name of India, to reach which, by a W course across the Atlantic Ocean, had been the grand object of his voyage; and this opinion was so general, that Ferdinand and Isabella, king and queen of Castile, in their ratification of an agreement, granted to Columbus, upon his return, gave them the name of Indies. Even after the error which gave rise to this opinion was detected, and the true position of the New World was ascertained, the name has remained, and the appellation of the West Indies is given by all the people of Europe to these islands, and that of Indians to the inhabitants, not only of these islands, but of the continent of America. They are likewise called the Caribbee Islands, from the aborigines of the country, and the sea in which they lie is called the Caribbean Sea. By the French, they are called the Antilles; and nautical men distinguish them, from the different courses taken by ships, into the Leeward and Windward Islands, which see. The name of Caribbee should properly be confined to the smaller islands, lying between Porto Rico and Tobago. These were inhabited by the Caribs, a fierce race of men, nowise resembling their timid neighbours in the larger islands. Columbus was a witness to their intrepid valour. The same character they have maintained invariably in all subsequent contests with the Europeans. The British Islands are Jamaica, Barbadoes, St. Christopher, Antigua, Aneguda, Nevis, Montserrat, Barbuda, Anguilla, Dominica, St. Vincent, Granada, the Bahama Islands; and part of the Virgin islands with Tobago, Martinico, and St. Lucia, conquered from the French, the first in 1793, and the other two in 1794. Cuba, Porto Rico, Trinidad, and Margarita, belong to the Spaniards, who have the eastern part of Hispaniola. The French have Guadaloupe, Marigalante, Desadea, and the possession of Hispaniola is disputed between the French and Mulattoes. The Dutch have St. Eustatia, Curacao, Saba, and St. Martin; the Danes, St. Thomas, St. Croix, and part of the Virgin Islands; and the Swedes, St. Bartholomew.

Indians of North and South America, the original natives of these two vast continents; of whom it is observable, that there is a natural distinction between the inhabitants of the temperate zones and those of the torrid; and that accordingly, they may be divided into two great classes. The one comprehends all the North Americans, from the river St. Lawrence to the gulf of Mexico, together with the people of Chili, and a few small tribes toward the extremity of the southern continent. To the other belong all the inhabitants of the islands, and those settled in the provinces, which extend from the isthmus of Darien almost to the southern confines of Brasil, along the E side of the Andes. In the former, which comprehends all the regions of the temperate zone in America, that are inhabited, the human species appears manifestly to be more perfect, the natives are more robust, active, intelligent, and courageous; and have defended their liberty with persevering fortitude against the Europeans, who subdued the other rude nations of America with the greatest ease. The natives of the temperate zone are the only people in the new world who are indebted for their freedom to their own valour. The North Americans, though long encompassed by three formidable European powers, retain part of their original possessions. The people of Chili, though early invaded, still maintain a gallant contest with the Spaniards, and have set bounds to their encroachments; whereas in the warmer regions, men are more feeble in their frame, less vigorous, in the efforts of their mind, of a gentle but dastardly spirit, more enslaved by pleasure, and more sunk in indolence. Accordingly, it is in the torrid zone that the Europeans have most effectually established their dominion over America; and, if several tribes there, still enjoy independence, it is either because they have never been attacked by an enemy already saturated with conquest, and possessed of larger territories than he was able to occupy, or because they have been saved from oppression by their remote and inaccessible situation. This distinction, however, although so conspicuous, is not universal. Of the manners of the North American Indians, a general idea may be formed, by an account of those who inhabit the countries to the E of the Mississippi. These consist of 28 different nations; the principal of which are the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks, Delawares, the six Nations, the Shawanese, Hurons, Illinois, &c. Allowing about 700 to a nation or tribe, they will contain, in all, 20,000 souls, and may furnish between 4 and 5000 warriors. These Indians take a great deal of pains to darken their complexion, by anointing themselves with grease, and lying in the sun. They also paint their face, breast, and shoulders, of various colours, but generally red; and in many parts of their bodies they prick in gun-powder in very pretty figures. Their features are well formed, especially those of the women. They are of a middle stature, their limbs clean and straight, and scarcely any crooked or deformed person is to be found among them. They shave, or pluck the hair off their heads, except a patch about the crown, which is ornamented with beautiful feathers, heads, wampum, and such like baubles. Their ears are bored, and stretched by a thong down to their shoulders. They are wound round with wire to expand them, and adorned with silver pendants, rings, and bells, which they likewise wear in their noses. Some of them will have a large feather through the cartilage of the nose; and those who can afford it, wear a collar of wampum, a silver breast plate, and bracelets on the arms and wrists. A bit of cloth about the middle, a shirt of the English make, on which they bestow innumerable stitches to adorn it, a sort of cloth boots and mockasons, which are shoes of a make peculiar to the Indians, ornamented with porcupine quills, with a blanket thrown over all, complete their dress at home; but when they go to war, they leave their trinkets behind. There is little difference between the dress of the men and women, excepting that a short petticoat, and the hair, which is exceedingly black and long, and clubbed behind, distinguish some of the latter. Except the head and eyebrows, they pluck the hair, with great diligence from all the parts of the body, especially the looser part of the sex. Their warlike arms are guns, bows and arrows, darts, scalping knives, and tomahawks; this is one of their most useful pieces of field-furniture, serving all the offices of the hatchet, pipe, and sword. They are exceedingly expert in throwing it, and will kill at a considerable distance. The world has no better marksmen with any weapon. They will kill birds flying, fishes swimming, and wild beasts running. They are not so ignorant as some suppose them, but are a very intelligent people, quick of apprehension, sudden in execution, subtle in business, exquisite in invention, and industrious in action. They are of a very gentle and amiable disposition to those they think their friends, but as implacable in their enmity; their revenge being completed only by the entire destruction of their enemies. They are very hardy, bearing heat, cold, hunger, and thirst, in a surprising manner; and yet no people are more addicted to excess in eating and drinking, when it is in their power. The follies, nay mischief they commit, when inebriated, are entirely laid to the liquor; and no one will revenge any injury, (murder excepted) received from one who is no more himself. Among the Indians all men are equal, personal qualities being most esteemed. No distinction of birth, or rank, renders any man capable of doing prejudice to the rights of private persons; and there is no pre-eminence from merit, which begets pride, and which makes others too sensible of their own inferiority. Their public conferences show them to be men of genius; and they have, in a high degree, the talent of natural eloquence.

 They live dispersed in villages, either in the woods, or on the banks of rivers, where they have little plantations of Indian corn, and roots, not enough to supply them in famines half the year; and they subsist, the remainder of it, by hunting, fishing, and fowling, and the fruits of the earth, which grow spontaneously in great plenty. Their huts are generally built of small logs, and covered with bark, each having a chimney, and a door, on which they place a padlock. One of their towns called Old Chelicothe, is built in the form of a parallelogram; and some of their houses are shingled. A long council-house extends the whole length of the town, where the king and chiefs of the nation frequently meet, and consult on all matters of importance, whether of a civil or military nature.
 Some huts are built by setting up a frame on forks, and placing bark against it; others of reeds and surrounded with clay. The fire is in the middle of the wigwam, and the smoke passes through a little hole. They join reeds together, by cords run through them, which serve them for tables and beds. They mostly lie upon skins of wild beasts, and sit on the ground.
 They have brass kettles and pots to boil their food. Gourds or calabashes, cut asunder, serve them for pails, cups, and dishes. The accounts of travellers concerning their religion, are various;
 and although it cannot be absolutely affirmed that they have none, yet it must be confessed very difficult to define what it is. All agree that they acknowledge one Supreme God, but do not adore him. They have not seen him, they do not know him, believing him to be too far exalted above them, and too happy in himself to be concerned about the trifling affairs of poor mortals. They seem also to believe in a future state, and that after death they shall be removed to their friends, who have gone before them, to an elysium, or paradise. The Wyandotts, near Detroit, and some others, have the Roman catholic religion introduced among them by missionaries. These have a church, a minister, and a regular burying ground. Many of them appear zealous, and say prayers in their families. These, by their acquaintance with white people, are a little civilized, which must of necessity precede Christianity. The Shawanese, Cherokees, Chickasaws, and some others, are little concerned about religion. Others continue their former superstitious worship of the objects of their love and fear, and especially those beings whom they most dread; though, at the same time, it is allowed they pray to the sun, and other inferior benevolent deities, for success in their undertakings, for plenty of food, and other necessaries of life. They have their festivals and other rejoicing days, on which they sing and dance in a ring, taking hands, having so painted and disguised themselves, that it is difficult to know any of them; and after enjoying this diversion for a while, they retire to the place where they have prepared a feast of fish, flesh, fowl and fruit; to which all are invited, and entertained with their country songs. They believe that there is great virtue in feasts for the sick. For this purpose, a young buck must be killed and boiled, the friends and near neighbours of the patient invited, and having first thrown tobacco on the fire, and covered it up close, they all sit down in a ring, and raise a lamentable cry. They then uncover the fire and kindle it; and the head of the buck is first sent about, every one taking a bit, and giving a loud croak, in imitation of crows. They afterward proceed to eat all the buck, making a most harmonious, melancholy song; in which strain their music is particularly excellent. As they approach their towns, when some of their people are lost in war, they make great lamentations for their dead, and bear them long after in remembrance. Some nations abhor adultery, do not approve of a plurality of wives and are not guilty of theft; but there are other tribes that are not so scrupulous. Among the Chicka-saws, a husband may cut off the nose of his wife, if guilty of adultery, but men are allowed greater liberty. This nation despises a thief. Among the Cherokees they cut off the nose and ears of an adulteress; afterward her husband gives her a discharge; and from this time she is not permitted to refuse any one who presents himself.

I N D

 Fornication is unnoticed; for they allow persons in a single state unbounded freedom. Their form of marriage is short; the man, before witnesses,

I N D

gives the bride a deer's foot, and she, in return, presents him with an ear of corn, as emblems of their several duties. The women are very slaves to the men; which is a common case in rude, unpolished nations, throughout the world. They are charged with being revengeful, but this revenge is only doing themselves justice on those who injure them and is seldom executed but in cases of murder or adultery. Their king has no power to put any one to death by his own authority; but the murderer is generally delivered up to the friends of the deceased, to do as they please. When one kills another, his friend kills him, and so they continue until much blood is shed; and at last the quarrel is ended by mutual presents. Their kings are hereditary, but their authority extremely limited. No people are a more striking evidence of the miseries of mankind in the want of government than they. Every chief, when offended, breaks off with a party, settles at some distance, and then commences hostilities against his own people. They are generally at war with each other. When they take captives in war, they are exceedingly cruel, treating the unhappy prisoners in such a manner, that death would be preferable to life. They load them with burdens, and when they arrive at their towns they must run the gauntlet. In this, the savages exercise so much cruelty, that one would think it impossible they should survive their sufferings. Many are killed; but if one outlives this trial, he is adopted into a family as a son, and treated with paternal kindness. And if he avoids their suspicions of going away, he is allowed the same privileges as their own people. But sometimes their prisoners are destined to be tortured to death, in order to satiate the revenge of their conquerors. While their lot is in suspense, the prisoners appear altogether unconcerned about what may befall them; they talk, they eat, they sleep, as if there were no danger impending; and when the fatal sentence is intimated to them they receive it with an unaltered countenance, raise their death-song, and prepare to suffer like men. The victors assemble as to a solemn festival, resolved to put the fortitude of the captives to the utmost proof. A scene ensues, the bare description of which is enough to chill the heart with horror, wherever men have been accustomed, by mild institutions, to respect their species, and to melt into tenderness at the sight of human sufferings. The prisoners are tied naked to a stake, but so as to be at liberty to move round it. All present, men, women, and children, rush upon them like furies; some burn their hands with red-hot irons, some mangle their bodies with knives, others tear their flesh from their bones, pluck out their nails by the roots, and rend and twist their sinews; and such is their cruel ingenuity in torturing, that, by avoiding to touch the vital parts, they often prolong this scene of anguish for several days. In spite of all their sufferings, the victims continue to chant their death-song with a firm voice, they boast of their own exploits, they insult their tormentors for their want of skill to avenge the death of their friends and relations, they swear them of the vengeance that awaits them on account of what they are now doing and excite their ferocity by the most provoking reproaches and threats. To display undaunted fortitude in such dreadful situations, is the noblest triumph of a warrior: to avoid the trial by a voluntary death, or to shrink under it, is deemed cowardly and infamous. If any one betrays symptoms of timidity, his tormentors dispatch him at once with contempt, as unworthy of being treated like a man. Animated by these ideas, they endure without a groan, what it seems almost impossible that human nature should sustain. Weary at length, of contending with men, whose constancy they cannot vanquish, some chief, in a rage, puts a period to their sufferings, by dispatching them with his dagger or his club. The people of South America gratify their revenge in a manner somewhat different, but with the same unrelenting rancour. Their prisoners, after meeting at their first entrance, with the same rough reception as among the North Americans, are not only exempt from injury, but treated with the greatest kindness. They are feasted and caressed, and some beautiful young women are appointed to attend and solace them. But, by a refinement of cruelty, while they seem studious to attach their captives to life, their doom is irrevocably fixed. On an appointed day, the er is brought forth with great solemnity, he meets his fate with undaunted firmness, and is dispatched by a single blow. The moment he falls, the women seize the body, and dress it for the feast. They besmear their children with the blood, in order to kindle in their bosoms a hatred of their enemies, and all join in feeding upon the flesh with amazing greediness and exultation. Wherever this practice prevails, captives never escape death; but they are not tortured with the same cruelty as among tribes which are less accustomed to such horrid feasts. The Indians of South America, immediately under the Spanish government, although the most depressed order of men in the country which belonged to their ancestors, are now far from being treated with that rigour and cruelty which was laid to the charge of the first conquerors of that continent. They are no longer considered as slaves; on the contrary, they are reputed as freemen, and entitled to the privileges of subjects. A certain tribute is, indeed, imposed upon them, and certain services required; but these are all under due regulations of policy and humanity. The Indians who live in the principal towns are entirely subject to the Spanish laws and magistrates; but, in their own villages, they are governed by caziques, some of whom are the descendants of their ancient lords; others are named by the Spanish viceroys. These regulate the petty affairs of the people under them, according to maxims of justice, transmitted to them by tradition. To the Indians, this jurisdiction, lodged in such friendly hands, affords some consolation; and so little formidable is this dignity to their new masters, that they often allow it to descend by hereditary right. For their further relief, the Spanish court has appointed an officer in every district, with the title of Protector of the Indians, whose duty is to assert the rights of the Indians; to appear as their defender in the courts of justice; and to set bounds to the exactions of his countrymen. A portion of the annual tribute is destined for the salaries of the caziques and protectors; another part is appropriated to the payment of their tribute in years of famine, or when a particular district is afflicted by any extraordinary local calamity. Provision too is made, by various laws, that hospitals should be founded in every new settlement, for the reception of Indians.

Such hospitals have accordingly been erected, both for the indigent and infirm, in Lima, Cusco, and Mexico, where the Indians are treated with tenderness and humanity. See *Esqui-Ingria, a province of the Russian empire, which now forms the government of St. Petersburg. It is 130 miles long and 50 broad; bounded on the N by the river Neva and the gulf of Finland, on the E and S by the government of Novogorod, and on the W by that of Livonia. The czar Peter the Great wrested it from the Swedes, and it was confirmed to him by the treaty of Nystadt in 1721. The Ischortzi have for a long time followed agriculture, as well as the other Finns. Their economy is an ill-chosen mean betwixt that of the Russians and that of the Finns. They assemble in small villages, of five or ten farms each; and live miserably in small dirty huts. Their household furniture indicates the greatest penury; and their manner of living is squalid and disgusting. Notwithstanding that the land each family occupies is of tolerable extent, their agriculture and their cattle are equally poor. Their inclination to idleness and drinking leads them often to sell their stock, and the very corn they have saved for sowing the fields; the money which that produces they squander away in a very short time, and are thus reduced to the most deplorable indigence. In this state they behold their cattle die of hunger and cold with the most perfect indifference. Some of them, however, imitate the Russian villagers, who are better managers, more at their ease, and in better circumstances. With their poverty and disorderly life, the Ingrians are a stupid, suspicious, thievish race, and dangerous from their phlegmatic and pilfering temperament. Those who live along the road to Riga greatly resemble the people we call gypsies; are vagabonds like them, and calculate nativities, and tell fortunes. Such, as come to Petersburg for those fraudulent purposes would scarcely be known from the gypsies about London. It is but a few years ago, that a whole village of these wretches were banished to a desert island in the gulf of Finland, for murders and other crimes committed on the highway. The boys from several villages together frequently elope at once; and there is every reason in the world to believe that this is for very bad purposes. The dress of the men is exactly like that of the Finn boors; but the habit of the women betrays a vanity, which, considering the poverty of this people, and the tyranny which their husbands and fathers exercise over them, may pass for luxury. When a man is inclined to marry, he buys himself a girl, and celebrates his nuptials. All the way to the church they are accompanied by two women in veils, who sing as they go compositions, if one may call them so, totally destitute of common sense. No sooner is the marriage ceremony performed, than the husband begins to treat his wife with the utmost severity, and thenceforward keeps her under strict discipline; though not always with the greatest attention to justice. She is often beaten for the faults of the children, and sometimes for those of the domestics. The dead are buried by the priests of the profession to which they belong; but these superstitious people return to the grave under covert of the night, and, having taken up the sod, deposit eatables for their departed friend, which they renew during a fortnight or three weeks.

Ipswich, a borough and seaport in Suffolk, with a market on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. It is a place of great antiquity, and was once surrounded by a wall, traces of which are yet to be seen. It contains 12 parish churches, a guildhall, two hospitals, a free-school, and a custom-house, with a good quay. It is populous and well inhabited, though irregularly built; but it has declined from its former consequence. The manufactures of the town are chiefly woollen and linen cloth. It has still a considerable foreign trade. The tide rises pretty high, and brings great ships within a small distance of the town. They export a great deal of corn to London, and sometimes to Holland. Formerly, they had a great trade in ship-building; but that having declined, they now send great quantities of timber to the King's yard at Chatham. It has several great fairs for cattle, cheese, and butter; and is admirably situated for the trade to Greenland, because the same wind that carries them out of the river will carry them to Greenland. It is worth remarking, that it is one of the best places in England for persons in narrow circumstances, house-rent being easy, provisions cheap and plentiful, the passage by land or water to London, &c. convenient, and the company of the place good. It gives title of viscount, as well as Thetford, to the duke of Grafton; and sends two members to parliament. It is noted for being the birthplace of cardinal Wolsey; and is seated on the Orwell, 26 miles S E of Bury St. Edmund's, and 69 N E of London. Lon. 1° 16' E, lat. 52° 8' N.

Ipswich, a sea port and post town in Essex county, Massachusetts; situated on the river Ipswich, 12 miles S of Newburyport, and 10 N W of Beverly; in the lat. of 42° 43' N. and lon. of 71° 15' W.

Irac, in Asia, divided into Irac Arabia, and Irac Agemi. Irac Arabia, or Babylonian Irac, is watered by the Euphrates and Tigris; and is almost all under the dominion of the Turks. Bagdad is the capital.

Irac Agemi, or Persian Irac, a province of Persia; bounded on the W by Irac Arabia and Kusistan, on the N by Aderbeistan and Ghilan, on the E by Couhestan, and on the S by Farsistan. Ispahan is the capital.

Ireby, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Thursday. It is seated in a valley, at the source of the river Ellan, and many Roman antiquities have been dug up here. It is 10 miles N E of Cocker-mouth, and 299 N W of London. Lon. 3° 18' W, lat. 54° 50' N.

Irekin, Jerkin, or Yarkan, a rich and populous town of Tartary, the capital of Bocharia, with a castle. It is the staple town of all the trade carried on between India and the N part of Asia. The Kalmucks are masters of it; and never disturb any one on account of their religion. It is eight miles N of Cashgur. Lon. 73° 25' E, lat. 41° 40' N.

Ireland, one of the British islands, lying to the W of that of Great Britain. It is bounded on the E by St. George's Channel and the Irish Sea, which separates it from England and Wales; on the N E by a channel about 15 miles broad, which separates it from Scotland; and on all other sides by the ocean, being about 300 miles in length, and 60 in breadth. It is divided into four large provinces; namely, Ulster to the N, Leinster to the E, Munster to the S, and Connaught to the W, and these again are subdivided into counties. The climate of Ireland differs little from that of England, except that it is more moist; the air in general is mild and temperate; the summers cooler, and the winters warmer, than those of England. The country in general, is level and well watered with lakes and rivers: and the soil though rocky, is in most parts very good and extremely fertile in those places where it has been properly cultivated. It produces corn, pastures, hemp, and flax in great plenty; and there are so many cattle, that their beef and butter is transported into divers countries; and not only the English, but other ships frequently come to be victualled here. The other commodities of Ireland are, wool, hides, tallow, wood, salt, honey, and wax. Their principal manufacture is fine linen, which they have brought to great perfection, and their trade in it has greatly increased. Mines have lately been discovered in Ireland; several of them contain silver and lead. There are also copper mines, iron ore, excellent marble, porphyry, coals, and slates. The many secure and commodious harbours in this country, render its situation very favourable for foreign trade. The inhabitants of this kingdom have been rated at 3,000,000; but this it is probable is considerably under the real number, which cannot be less than 4,000,000, perhaps something more. The lower classes in this country are rude, ignorant, and uncultivated, and the greater part of them Roman catholics. The established religion is the same as that of England, and their laws are not essentially different. This kingdom was formerly subordinate to that of Great Britain, whose parliament might make laws to bind the people of Ireland, and an appeal might be made from their courts of justice to the House of Peers of Great Britain; but in 1782 the principles of the American rebellion, making way into Ireland, they first demanded a repeal of the laws restricting their commerce, that being granted, they next required a renunciation on the part of Great Britain, of all right to interfere in the judgments of their courts, or to make laws to bind Ireland in time to come. The perilous situation of Great Britain at that period left her no choice, all the demands of Ireland were therefore agreed to in a bill passed by the British legislature soon after. These concessions, great and important as they were, did not prove satisfactory; the total repeal of all the disqualifications under which the Roman catholics laboured was demanded, and various schemes of parliamentary reform, were devised; the agitation of these topics served greatly to enflame the minds of the people, the breaking forth of the French revolution, and the introduction of its pernicious principles into Ireland, completed their discontent. A traitorous society was soon after formed, under the name of United Irishmen, which soon spread itself over the country; their pretended purpose was to obtain parliamentary reform, but their real views were to separate Ireland from Great Britain, and erect it into an independent republic, similar to and under the protection of France. The vigorous and active measures of government forced them into open rebellion before their schemes were fully ripe: the consequence was, that after great numbers of the insurgents were killed in various battles, the conspiracy was defeated, and tranquillity began gradually to be restored to the country. The consolidation of the empire by the union of both countries seemed now to be the only thing wanting to impart prosperity and mutual security both to Great Britain and Ireland. This measure was accordingly proposed in the parliaments of both countries, and after a good deal of opposition in Ireland especially, was at last finally agreed to, and will take place on the 1st of January, 1801, when the Imperial Parliament will assemble. Ireland contains 32 counties, four archbishoprics, and 18 bishoprics. Its principal rivers are, the Shannon, Boyne, Liffey, Sure, Blackwater, and Lee. Dublin is the capital.

Ironam, one of the Hebrides, in the South Sea, near Tanna. Lon. 170 26 E, lat. 19 31 S.

Irongate Mountains, in Transylvania, are part of the boundary between Christendom and Turkey.

Iroquois, a people of North America, inhabiting near the Lake Ontario, commonly called the Five Indian Nations.

Irtysk, a large river of Asia, in Siberia, which rises in the country of the Kalmucs, and running from the S to N E, falls into the Oby, near Tobolsk. The N W shore is low pasture ground; on the other side, are a prodigious number of black bears, wolves, red and gray foxes, and gray squirrels. This river abounds with fish; particularly sturgeons and delicate salmons.

Irvine, or Irwin, a river of Scotland, in Ayrshire, which descending from the mountains on the E, passes by Derval, Newmills, Galston, and Riccarton, and falls into the frith of Clyde, close by the town of Irvine.

Irvine or Irwin, a royal borough and seaport in Ayrshire, seated at the mouth of a river of the same name, on the frith of Clyde, 15 miles E of the isle of Arran, and 60 W by S of Edinburgh. Its chief trade is the exporting of coal to Ireland. Lon. 2 41 W, lat. 55 38 N.

Irwell, a river in Lancashire, which rises above Bolton, flows thence to Manchester, and falls into the Mersey, below Flixton.

Isabella, Fort, a fort of Austrian Flanders, seated on the W side of the Scheld, opposite Antwerp. Lon. 3 10 E, lat. 51 50 N. There is another fort of the same name, two miles S W of Sluys, in Dutch Flanders.

Isadagas, a town of Africa, in Barbary, in the kingdom of Morocco, and province of Esegura, seated in a country abounding in cattle.

Ischia, an island of Naples, 15 miles in circuit, lying three miles off the coast of Terra di Lavora. It is full of agreeable vallies, which produce excellent fruits; mountains, on which grow vines of an exquisite kind, rivers, and fine gardens.

Ischia, a city of Naples, capital of an island of the same name, with a bishop's see, and a strong fort. Both the city and fortress stand upon a rock, which is joined to the island by a bridge. The rock is about seven furlongs in circumference. The city is like a pyramid of houses piled one upon another, which makes a very singular appearance. At the end of the bridge, next the city, are iron gates which open into a subterranean passage, through which they enter the city. They are always guarded by soldiers, who are natives of the island. Lon. 14 2 E, lat. 40 41 N.

Isselstein, a town of the United Provinces, in that of Utrecht, seated on the Issel, four miles S W of Utrecht.

Isenarts, or Eisenarts, a town of Germany, in Stiria, famous for its iron mines, 30 miles N W of Gratz. Lon. 15 4 E, lat. 47 25 N.

Isebach, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, from whence a Saxon prince takes the title of duke. Lon. 9 17 E, lat. 51 0 N.

Iseburg, a large town of Germany, capital of a county of the same name, in the electorate of Treves, with a castle; seated on a river, 8 miles N by E of Coblenz. Lon. 7 34 E, lat. 50 32 N.

Iseghem, a town of the Austrian Netherlands, with the title of a principality, seated on the river Mandera. Lon. 3 18 E, lat. 50 44 N.

Iser, a river of Germany, which rises on the confines of Tirol and Bavaria, and passing by Munich and Landschut, falls into the Danube, between Straubing and Passau.

Iseré, a department of France, including part of the late province of Dauphiny. It is so named from a river which rises on the confines of Savoy, and falls into the Rhone, above Valence. Grenoble is the capital.

Iserohn, or Lohn, a town of Germa-Isernia, a town of Naples, in Molise, with a bishop's see. It is seated at the foot of the Appennines; 12 miles W of Molise, and 46 N of Naples. Lon. 14 24 E, lat. 41 36 N.

Isigni, a seaport of France, in the department of Calvados and late province of Normandy, noted for its salt-works, cider, and its butter. It is 15 miles W by N of Bayeux. Lon. 0 59 W, lat. 49 20 N.

Isis. See Thames.

Islands, Bay of, a bay of New Zealand, at the N extremity of the most northern of the two islands that go under that name. In 1772, M. Dufresne Marion, with two French sloops put into this bay, and, with 28 of his crew, was murdered by the natives.

Islay, or Ila, an island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, to the S W of Jura. Its greatest length is 25 miles; its breadth 18. The principal village is Bowmore, which has a convenient harbour. The face of the country is lilly. Several mines are wrought to great advantage, particularly iron and lead ore. Here likewise are copper, emery, native quicksilver, and black lead; with immense stores of limestone, marl, coral, and shell-sand, for manure. Much corn and flax is raised here, and a great number of cattle exported. In this, and some of the neighbouring islands, multitudes of adders infest the heath. On the N W side of the island is the cave of Sancmore, which is a grotto, divided into a number of far-winding passages, sometimes opening into fine expanses; again closing, for a long space, into galleries, and forming a curious subterraneous labyrinth. There are also many other caverns, the haunts of numerous wild pigeons, that lodge and breed in them. The goats that feed among the rocks are so wild, that they are obliged to be shot like deer. Some vestiges of antiquity are on this island; particularly, the remains of a circular dry stone building, on the hill of Losset, near the sound of Islay.

Isle-Adam, a town of France, now in the department of Seine and Oise, lately in the province of the Isle of France, with a castle seated on the Oise, 20 miles N by W of Paris. Lon. 2 13 E, lat. 49 0 N.

Isle of Becces, an island of N America, in the bay of Campeachy, 17 miles long and eight broad. It is fertile, and abounds in cattle and fruits.

Isle-Dieu, a small island of France, 14 miles from the coast of Poitou. It was taken by the English in 1795, but soon after evacuated. Lon. 2 15 W, lat. 46 45 N.

Isle-de-France. See France, Isle of.

Isle-Jourdain, a town of France, now in the department of Gers and lately in the province of Armagnac. It is seated in an island of the river Save, eight miles N of Lombez. Lon. 1 2 E, lat. 43 40 N.

Isle-Rousse, a town of Corsica, on the seacoast, 36 miles S W of Bastia.

Isle and Vilaine, a department of France, containing part of the late province of Bretagne. Rennes is the capital.

Isleben. See Eisleben.

Isleworth, a village in Middlesex, seated on the Thames, nine miles W of London. Near it is Sion House, the magnificent seat of the duke of Northumberland.

Islington, a village in the county of Middlesex, on the N side of London, to which it is almost contiguous, appears to be of Saxon origin; and in the conqueror's time, was written Isledon, or Isendon. Its houses are above 2000, including the Upper and Lower Holloways, three sides of Newington Green, and part of Kingsland, on the road to Ware. The White-Conduit House, in this place, so called from a white stone conduit that stands before the entrance, has handsome gardens, with good walks, and two large rooms one above the other for the entertainment of company at tea, &c. In the S W part of this village is that noble reservoir, improperly called New River Head; though they are only two basons, which receive that river from Hertfordshire, and from whence the water is thrown by an engine into the company's pipes for the supply of London.—Near this place is a house of entertainment called Saddler's Wells, where, during the summer season, people are amused with balance-masters, walking on the wire, rope dancing, tumbling, and pantomime entertainments.

Islip, a town in Oxfordshire, four miles N of Oxford. Islip was given by Edward the Confessor to Westminster Abbey, to which it still belongs.

Islip, a post town on Long Island in Suffolk county, New York, with 1000 inhabitants.

Ismail, a strong town of Turkey in Europe, in Bessarabia. It was taken by storm by the Russians in 1790; and it is said, that the long siege, and the capture, did not cost them less than 20,000 men. The garrison whose bravery merited, and from a generous foe would have received the highest honours, were massacred in cold blood by the merciless Russians, to the amount of 30,000 men; and the place was abandoned to the fury of the brutal soldiery. Ismail is seated on seated on the Isny, 14 miles N E of Lindau, and 62 S W of Augsburg.

Lon. 10 3 E, lat. 47 42 N.

Isnic, a town of Turkey in Asia in Natalia, with a Greek archbishop's see. It is the ancient Nice, famous for the first general council here in 325. Nothing remains of its ancient splendour, but an aqueduct. The Jews inhabit the greater part of it; and it is seated in a country fertile in corn and excellent wine, 75 miles S E of Constantinople. Lon. 30 9 E, lat. 40

Isona, a town of Spain in Catalonia, seated near a mountain at the foot of a rivulet.

Ispahan, a celebrated city, capital of Persia, in the province of Irac-Agemi, and thought by some to be the finest city in the East. It stands in the middle of a plain, surrounded on all sides by mountains at eight miles distance, and on a small river, called Sanderut, which supplies almost all the houses with water. It is 20 miles in circumference, with well built houses and flat roofs, on which they walk, eat, and lie, in summer, for the sake of the cool air. Here are a great number of magnificent palaces; and that of the king is two miles and a half in circumference. There are 160 mosques, 1800 large caravansaries, above 260 public baths, a prodigious number of coffee-houses, and very fine streets, in which are canals, planted on each side with trees. The streets are not paved; but always clean on account of the dryness of the air, for it seldom rains or snows here. The inhabitants were computed at above 1,000,000; but this kingdom having been long distracted by civil wars, the principal towns are greatly depopulated. Is-pahan has three large suburbs, called Juisa, Hasenbath, and Kebrabath.

Though at a distance from the sea, it carries on a great trade, people of several nations resorting there for the sake of traffic. It is 265 miles N E of Bussarah, and 1400 S E of Constantinople. Lon. 52 55 E, lat. 32 25 N.

Issel, or Yssel, a river of the United Provinces, which branches off from the Rhine, below Huessen; and running by Doesburg, Zutphen, Deventer, and Campen, falls into the Zuider-Zee.

Issel, or Yssel, Little, a river of the United Provinces, which waters Ysselstein, Montfort, and Gouda; and falls into the Merwe, above Rotterdam.

Issel, or Yssel, Old, a river which rises in the dutchy of Cleves, and enters the Issel, at Doesburg.

Issiquibo, a flourishing settlement of the Dutch in Guiana, on a river of the same name, and contiguous to that of Demerary. It was taken by the English in 1796.

Issoire, an ancient town of France, now in the department of Puy de Dome and lately in the province of Auvergne. At Vernet, near this town, are found amethysts, of colour as beautiful as those of the East, but not so hard. Issoire is seated on the Couz, near the Allier, 13 miles S of Clermont. Lon. 3 15 E, lat. 45 34 N.

Issoudun, a town of France, now in the department of Indre and lately in the province of Berry, with a castle.
Its trade is in wood, cattle, cloth, hats, and stockings, and is seated partly on an eminence and partly on a plain, 17 miles S W of Bourges, and 135 S of Paris. Lon. 2 6 E, lat. 46 57 N.

Is-sur-Tille, a town of France, now in the department of Cote d'Or and lately in the province of Burgundy, seated on the Igon, near the Tille, 12 miles N of Dijon.

Istria, a kind of peninsula of Italy, lying on the N E part of the gulf of Venice. It is bounded by Carniola on the N E, and on all other sides by the sea. The air is unwholesome especially near the coast; but the soil produces plenty of wine, oil, and pasture; there are also quarries of fine marble. One part of it belongs to the Venetians, and the rest to the house of Austria. Capo d'Istria is the capital.

Italy, one of the finest countries of Europe, lying between 7 and 19° E lon. and 38 and 47° N lat. On the N and N E it is bounded by Swisserland and Germany, on the E by the gulf of Venice, on the S by the Mediterranean, and on the W by that sea and France. Its figure bearing some resemblance to that of a boot. Its length from Aousta, in Savoy, to the utmost verge of Calabria, is 600 miles; but its breadth is very unequal, in some places near 400 miles, in others not above 25. It is the most celebrated country in Europe, having been formerly the seat of the Roman empire, and afterward, of that astonishing, universal usurpation, the spiritual dominion of the pope. Italy is divided into a great number of states, which differ much in extent and importance. Between the confines of France and Swisserland, on the W and N are the continental dominions of the king of Sardinia, namely, Piedmont, Savoy, Montferat, part of the Milanese, and Oneglia. To the N E are the territories of Venice, which are enumerated under that article. S of these, are the dominions of the emperor of Germany, namely, part of the Milanese and the Mantuan; and S of these, are Modena, Mirandola, and Reggio, belonging to the duke of Modena. West of these are the dutchies of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla, whose sovereign is of the house of Bourbon. To the S of Parma, lies the republic of Genoa; and S E of this, that of Lucca. Hence extends along the coast of the Mediterranean, the grand dutchy of Tuscany. The ecclesiastical State, or territory of the pope, lies N E and E of Tuscany, between the gulf of Venice and the Mediterranean; and all S of this, is the Kingdom of Naples, with its dependant islands, of which Sicily is the principal. The air of Italy is very different, according to the different situations of the several countries contained in it. In those on the N of the Appennines it is more temperate, but on the S it is generally very warm. The air of the Campania of Rome, and of the Ferrarese, is said to be unhealthy; which is owing to the lands not being duly cultivated, nor the marshes drained. That of the other parts is generally pure, dry, and healthy. In summer, the heat is very great in the kingdom of Naples, and would be almost intolerable, if it was not somewhat alleviated by the sea-breezes. The soil of Italy in general is very fertile, being watered by a great number of rivers. It produces a great variety of wines, and the best oil in Europe, excellent silk in abundance, corn of all sorts, but not in such plenty as in some other countries; oranges, lemons, citrons, pomegranates, almonds, raisins, sugar, mulberry-trees without number, figs, peaches, nectarines, apricots, pears, apples, filberts, chestnuts, &c. This country also yields good pasture; and abounds with cattle, sheep, goats, bullocks, wild boars, mules and horses. The forests are well stored with game, and the mountains yield not only mines of iron, lead, alum, sulphur, marble of all sorts, alabaster, jasper, porphyry, &c. but also gold and silver, with a great variety of aromatic herbs. The Italians are generally well proportioned, though their complexions are not of the best. With respect to their genius and taste in architecture, painting, carving and music, they are thought to excel greatly, and to leave the other nations of Europe far behind them; but their music seems too soft and effeminate to deserve all the praise bestowed on it; and their houses are far inferior to those of England in respect of convenience. No country hath produced better politicians, historians, poets, painters, and sculptors, we mean since the revival of the arts and sciences, exclusive of those of ancient times. The Italians are very affable, courteous, ingenious, sober, and ready-witted; but extremely jealous, vindictive, lascivious, ceremonious, and superstitious. Boiled snails, served up with oil and pepper, or fried in oil, and the hinder parts of frogs, are reckoned dainty dishes. Kites, jackdaws, hawks, and magpies, are also eaten not only by the common people but by the better sort. Wine is drank here both in summer and winter, cooled by ice or snow. The women affect yellow hair, as the Roman ladies and courtesans formerly did. They also use paint and washes, both for their hands and faces. The day here is reckoned from sun-set, as the Athenians did of old. See Lombardy.

Itchen, a river in Hants, which rising in the centre of the county, passes by Winchester, and enters the bay of Southampton, at the town of that name.

Itzehoa, an ancient and handsome town of Germany in Lower Saxony, in the dutchy of Holstein, seated on the Stoer, 15 miles N E of Gluckstadt, and 30 N W of Hamburg. Lon. 9 30 E, lat. 53 58 N.

Juan de la Frontera, St. a town of Chili, in South America, in the province of Chiquito, near the lake Guanachco. The territory of this town is inhabited by 20,000 native Americans, who are tributary to Spain. It contains mines of gold, and a kind of almonds that are very delicate. It is seated at the foot of the Andes, 98 miles N E of St. Jago. Lon. 65 55 W, lat. 33 25 S.

Juan de Puerto Rico, St. an island of the West Indies, 50 miles E of Hispaniola, and usually called Porto Rico. It is 100 miles long and 50 broad, and belongs to the Spaniards. It is full of very high mountains, and extremely fertile vallies, interspersed with woods and well watered by springs and rivulets. It produces sugar, rum, ginger, corn, and fruits, partly proper to the climate, and partly introduced from Spain; and there are so many cattle, that they often are killed for the sake of the skins alone. Here are a great number of uncommon trees, and there is a little gold in the N part of the island. It is commonly said, that the air is healthy, and yet, in the reign of queen Elisabeth, the earl of Cumberland, when he had taken this island, lost most of his men by sickness, and, on that account, was forced to abandon it. It is subject to storms and hurricanes, like the rest of these islands. The capital is of the same name. Lon. 67 4 W, lat. 18 17 N.

Juan de Puerto Rico, St. the capital of an island of the same name, with a good harbour, defended by several forts. It is a bishop's see, and seated on the N coast of the island. Lon. 69 1 W, lat. 18 29 N.

Juan Fernandez, an island in the S Pacific Ocean, lying in 83° W lon. and 33° S lat. 300 miles W of Chili. It is uninhabited, but is found extremely convenient to touch at and water. There are instances of two men living alone at different times on this island for several years; the one a Musquito Indian, the other Alexander Selkirk, a Scotchman, who having been left on shore, in this solitary place, by his captain, lived here five years, till he was discovered by captain Rogers, in 1709. From this remarkable history, Daniel de Foe is said to have derived the hints which gave rise to his celebrated production, The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe. This island is not quite 15 miles long and about six broad; its only safe harbour is on the N side. It is said to have plenty of excellent water, and to abound with a great variety of esculent vegetables highly antiscorbutic; besides which, commodore Anson sowed a variety of garden-seeds, and planted the stones of plums, apricots, and peaches, which he was, many years afterwards, informed, had thriven greatly; and now, doubtless furnish a very valuable addition to the natural productions of this spot.

Juan de Uluva, St. an island of New Spain, lying in the gulf of Mexico, near Vera Cruz. It was discovered in 1518, by Grijelva. Lon. 97 25 W, lat. 19 12 N.

Joanagorod. See Narva.

Jubo, capital of a kingdom of Africa of the same name, subject to the Portuguese. Lon. 43 20 E, lat. 0 50 N.

Yucatan, or Yucatan, a large peninsula of New Spain, opposite the island of Cuba. It projects from the continent 100 leagues, but does not exceed 25 in breadth. It contains a great quantity of timber, proper for the building of ships, as also sugar, cassia, and Indian corn. The original inhabitants are few, having been ill-treated by the Spaniards. It is a flat level country, and unhealthy. The inhabitants are abundantly supplied with water from pits, wherever they dig them. In all Yucatan, there is not a river or stream. Merida is the capital; but some say Campeachy. See Honduras.

Judda, a seaport of Arabia Felix, with a fort, seated on the Red Sea, 34 miles S W of Mecca, to which it is the port. Lon. 30 22 E, lat. 21 29 N.

Judenburg, a considerable town of Germany, the capital of Upper Stiria, with a handsome castle. The public buildings, with the square, are magnificent. It was taken by the French in April 1797, and here an armistice was settled between the archduke Charles and Bonaparte. It is seated on the Muehr, 45 miles W by N of Gratz, and 100 S W of Vienna. Lon. 14 26 E, lat. 47 10 N.

Judoigne, a town of Austrian Brabant, near which the duke of Marlborough gained that signal victory, in 1706, called the battle of Ramillies. It is seated on the river Geete, 13 miles S E of Louvain, and 16 N of Namur. Lon. 5 2 E, lat. 50 45 N.

Ives, St. a seaport and borough in Cornwall, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated on a bay of the same name, which being unsafe, is frequented by fishermen only for the taking of pilchards. It is governed by a mayor, sends two members to parliament, and is eight miles N E of Penzance, and 277 W by S of London. Lon. 5 30 W, lat. 50 18 N.

Ives, St. a town in Huntingdonshire, with a considerable market on Monday for cattle. Here was a priory, which is now in ruins. In the ninth century it had a mint, and was noted for its medicinal waters. It is seated on the river Ouse, over which is a stone bridge, six miles N E of Huntingdon, and 59 N by W of London. Lon. 0 20 W, lat. 52 26 N.

Juzon, a town of France, in the department of the North Coast, and late province of Bretagne, seated on the small river Arqueon, 12 miles from the English Channel.

Jugora, a considerable province of Muscovy, depending on the government of Archangel.

Jvica, an island of the Mediterranean, 56 miles S W of Majorca. It is about 60 miles in circumference, is mountainous, but fertile in corn, wine, and fruits; and is remarkable for the great quantity of salt made here. The capital, of the same name, has a good harbour. Lon. 1 25 E, lat. 38 52 N.

Ivingho, a village in Buckinghamshire, has a market on Friday, six miles S W of Dunstable, and 32 N W of London. Lon. 0 32 W, lat. 51 54 N.

Julian, Port, St. a harbour of Patagonia, where ships that are bound for the Pacific Ocean usually touch for refreshments. Lon. 68 44 W, lat. 49 10 S.

Julien, St. a town of France, in the department of Upper Vienne and late province of Limosin, 13 miles W of Limoges. Lon. 1 4 E, lat. 45 50 N.

Julien du Sault, St. a town of France in the department of Yonne and late province of Burgundy, seated between two mountains covered with vines, near the river Yonne, five miles from Joigny.

Juliers, a dutchy of Westphalia, 64 miles in length, and 36 in breadth; bounded on the N by Guelderland, on the E by the archbishopric of Cologne, on the S by Luxemburg and Treves, and on the W by Limburg. It is subject to the elector palatine, and is remarkable for the quantity of woad it produces, which is much used in dyeing.

Juliers, a town of Germany, capital of a dutchy of the same name, with a strong citadel. It fell into the hands of the French in 1794. It is seated on the Roer, 15 miles E of Aix-la-Chapelle, and 18 W of Cologne. Lon. 6 40 E, lat. 50 56 N.

Julpha, once the capital of Armenia, in Asia, now in ruins, the inhabitants having been transplanted to a suburb of Ispahan, called New Julpha, where they have several churches. Before the civil wars, which in this century have desolated Persia, the colony of New Julpha was very flourishing.

Jumella, a town of Spain in the province of Murcia, 22 miles S W of Murcia.

Jumiege, a town of France, in the department of Lower Seine and late province of Normandy, with a late celebrated Benedictine abbey. It is seated on the Seine, 12 miles S W of Rouen, and 77 N W of Paris. Lon. 0 55 E, lat. 49 24 N.

Jumnoo, or Jumbo, a town of Hindoostan Proper in the country of Lahore. It is situated on the side of a hill by the river Rawee. This city though in a decayed state, is a mart of the first note in that part of the country; it is 90 miles N of Lahore. Lon. 23 16 E, lat. 32 45 N.

Jura, one of the Western Isles of Scotland, N E of Islay, supposed to be 34 miles long and 10 broad. It is composed principally of vast mountains quite naked, and without a possibility of cultivation ; three of them called the paps of Jura are most remarkable ; they are of a conic form and stupen-

Jura, a department of France, including part of the late province of Franché Comté. It contains mines of iron of a superior quality, mines of copper and lead, and many quarries of black marble, jasper, and alabaster. It takes its name from Mount Jura.

Jura, Mount, a chain of mountains, which begins in the canton of Zurich, in Switzerland, extends along the Rhine into the canton of Soleure and the principality of Neuchatel, branches out toward the Pays de Vaud, separates that country from France, and continues beyond the frontiers of the Genevois as far as the Rhone. In various parts of the Pays de Vaud, this chain forms many elevated vallies ; of thes the most delightful is the valley of the lake of Joux, upon the top of that part called Mount Joux ; it is beautifully chequered with wood, arable, and pasture ; and is watered by two picturesque lakes ; the largest of which is called the lake of Joux, and the other, lake Brenet. This little vale is very populous, containing 3000 inhabitants ; some employed in making watches, but the greater part in polishing crystals, granites, and marcasites. These parts are much infested with bears and wolves. The descent from this delightful vale, through a variety of hill, valley, wood, and lawn, affords a very extensive prospect of great part of the Pays de Vaud, the lake of Geneva, with its mountains, and the lake of Neuchatel.

Jutland, a peninsula, the principal part of Denmark, 180 miles in length, and 50 in breadth ; bounded on the S E by the dutchy of Holstein, and on the other sides by the German Ocean and the Baltic. The air is very cold, but wholesome. The soil is fertile in corn and pastures, and feeds a great number of horses and beeves, which are sent to Germany, Holland, &c. It was anciently called Cimbrica Cher-soneaus, and is supposed to be the country whence the Saxons came, that conquered England. It is divided into two parts, called N and S Jutland ; the latter being the dutchy of Sleswick, and lies between N Jutland and Holstein.

Ivy Bridge, a village in Devonshire,

Kalisch, a town of Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, where the Jesuits had a magnificent college. It is seated on the river Proana, in a morass, which renders it difficult of access, 110 miles W of Warsaw. Lon. 18 5 W, lat. 52 0 N.

Kalkas, a tribe of the Mogul Tartars, in Chinese Tartary. They inhabit the country N of the Mogul Tartars, properly so called, which stretches as far as the kingdom of the Eleuthes; and is near 300 leagues in extent from E to W. They live in tents, on the banks of their numerous rivers. They adore a lama of the second order, who is held in such veneration, that bonzes from China, Hindoostan, Pegu, &c. come to pay their devotions at his residence in Iben Pira.

Kalmucs, a nation of Tartary in Russia; the deserts which they inhabit, with their herds, lie between the Don, and the Volga, and on the river Ural from Irgis to the Caspian sea. They consist of a strong loam, are quite arid, destitute of wood, abound in salt, contain many fresh-water lakes and brooks, and numbers of lakes that are perfectly salt. They produce wholesome plants and good herbage, for which reason the cattle are in general vigorous, and speedily become

fat. The Kalmucs are of a middling stature, seldom large: for the most part, raw-boned and stout. Their visage is so flat, that the skull of a Kalmuc may easily be known from that of any other man. The eyes too are smaller, and the corners of them flatter, than among the Europeans. They have thick lips, a small nose, a short chin; and their beard is scanty, and appears late. Their teeth are even and white. Their complexion is a reddish brown; generally indeed from the wind and sun, and their neglect of cleanliness, it is of a yellowish brown. Their ears are very large and prominent; their hair is black. Their knees always stand outwards, like a bow; this proceeds from their customary manner of sitting on their ankles, and their being almost constantly on horseback. Their senses of feeling and taste are dull: but those of smell, sight, and hearing, are wonderfully quick. The women are of the same shape and make with the men, only the skin of their face is very clear, and of a wholesome white and red. Their standing character is rough, but less dissolute and base than they are commonly supposed to be. Their prevailing temperament is a mixture of the sanguine and the choleric; the melancholy is seldom uppermost. They have a good understanding, and a quick comprehension; eager after novelties; of a tractable and teachable disposition; sprightly, hospitable, ready to do kind offices, active, and voluptuous; very much attached to their masters, though of other nations, and not dispirited or dejected by their fickleness and ill-nature, but contented with their lot. Their women are lively, frank, agreeable and very industrious. The clothing of the men is entirely Oriental, and their heads are exactly Chinese. They wind linen about their feet, and draw their buskins over it, which are of black or yellow, or some other coloured leather. Their breeches are large and ample: their under garment is of light stuff with narrow sleeves, and a girdle, to which is suspended the sabre, a knife, and the implements for smoking tobacco. The upper garment is of cloth, with wide sleeves. They let the beard grow; but shave the head to one lock, which they plait into three strings. The covering for the head is a flat yel-Kaluga, now a government of the Russian empire, but it was formerly a province in the government of Moscow. Its principal town, of the same name, is seated on the Occa.

Kamakura, a famous island of Japan, about three miles in circumference, lying on the S coast of Nippon. It is here they confine their great men, when they have committed any fault; and the coast is so steep, that they are forced to be lifted up by cranes.

Kamatschinze, is the name of a people in Tartary. In the year 1629 they were made tributary to Russia, and then led a rambling life. At present their habitations are in the neighbourhood of Kansk and Abakansk, two ostroms, situate one on the Yenisei, and the other on the Kan. Even at the time that they submitted to Russia, they were only a scanty people, or rather the remains of some ancient nation.

Kambala, Mount, a ridge of mountains in Thibet, between Lake Palte and the Burrampooter. From the top of this ridge may be seen, to the N, a range of still higher mountains, covered with snow. The foot of mount Kambala is 31 miles S of Lassa.

Kaminieck, a very strong town of Poland, capital of Podolia, with two castles and a bishop's see. When the Russians seized part of the Polish territories in 1793, this fortress held out a long time, but at last surrendered to their arms. The castle is seated on a craggy rock, 85 miles W of Bracklaw, and 100 S E of Lemburg. Lon. 26 30 E, lat. 48 58 N.

Kamtschatka, is a peninsula, formed by a chain of stony and barren mountains, which run toward the S S W from that part of the continent inhabited by the Koraiks. It is bounded by the Eastern Ocean, the gulf of Penschinkoi, and by the sea of Oghotzk; in all probability the Kourili, a range of isle which in many directions extend as far as Japan, are a part of Kamtschatka. It is situated between about 51 and 62° degrees N lat. The soil is stony, full of cold springs, destitute of the smallest piece of fertile ground, and so cold even in the summer, that the earth is totally unfit for culture, and of itself does not produce a sufficiency for the cattle. The Kamtschadales are for the most part of a low stature, with broad shoulders, large heads, long flat faces, flat noses, small eyes, thin lips, and short legs. The women have black eyes and eye-brows; their skin is rather delicate, of a lively red complexion, a pretty hand, and small foot, and they are in general very well made.

The Kamtschadales have a lively imagination, a strong memory, and such a genius for imitation that they can copy with ease whatever they see. Poverty gives them no concern; and nothing but the calls of hunger can drive them to the chase; and then they seldom go so far but they can return to pass the night in the arms of their women. They care not how their meat is prepared, so it does but fill their stomach; nor of what quality their liquor is, so it does but intoxicate them. Pleasure and inaction are their only objects; they therefore steal nothing but women and dogs, which formerly were the continual causes of national war. They are cowardly and base to an excessive degree, gratifying their revenge only by the darkest and most secret means.

Every family has its summer and winter house. The Kousoutch or winter house is in form of a square; a hole five feet deep is dug, which is surrounded with palisades, and covered with rafters laid across, branches of trees, hay and earth. To get into the house they descend through a hole at the top, this hole serves as a door, a window and a chimney, for the smoke has no other passage, and the light and air no other entrance. The Pelins or summer-houses are built like pigeon houses of barks, about two fathoms from the ground; some are built in a circular, others in an angular, form. They are very small, and built close to one another, so that boards are laid across as bridges of communication. The Kamtschadales, as well as the Tungusians and other Siberians, eat all kinds of quadrupeds, birds, and fish, excepting lizards, &c. Dogs and mice they eat only in times of scarcity. The bodies of whales, sea-dogs, and other sea animals, which are of a middling size: for the most part stout. Their visages are like the skull of a Kalindian, known from that of the eyes too are different from the Europeans. They have a small nose, a short ear, and their teeth are even. Their complexion is a reddish indeed from the neglect of their dress, and a yellowish brown. Their hair is large and prominent. Their knees are black. Their knees are like a bow; in their customary dress their ankles, and constantly on horseback, a sense of feeling and a sense of smell, sight, and hearing, wonderfully quick. The shape of the men, only the skin is very clear, and of a red. Their hair is rough, but less than they are compared. Their prevailing complexion is a mixture of the choleric; the melan- cholic; the phlegmatic; the sanguine; and the bilious. They are understanding, and a son; eager after notable and teachable; hospitable, ready, active, and very much attached to their other nations, and dejected by their nature, but contented their women are lively and very industrious of the men is and their heads are They wind linen and draw their buskins of black or yellow, lined with leather. Their dress is ample: their shoes of light stuff with a girdle, to which a sabre, a knife, and a pipe for smoking tobacco are attached. Their dress is of cloth, with a beard which they let the head to one lock, and three strings. The head is a flat yelthey find on the shore, are exceedingly agreeable to them. They use wild roots and fruit, and dry fish, roots, and different kinds of flesh, for winter provision. The way of preparing their victuals is as extraordinary as disgusting.

Kanagheri, or Chantegere, a town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, the site of the capital of the ancient kingdom of Narsinga. In 1599, it was the residence of a Hindoo king, whose dominion extended over Tanjore and Madura; and in 1640, a descendant of this prince reigned there; and permitted the English to settle there. It is 70 miles distant from Madrass. Lon. 79 24 E, lat. 13 46 N Kanem, a city of Africa, in the empire of Bornou, capital of a fertile province of the same name. The inhabitants raise great quantities of horses for the service of the king. It is 130 miles N W of Bornou.

Kanhawa court-house, the principal seat of justice in Kanhawa, one of the frontier counties of Virginia; situated on the S bank of Elk river, at its junction with the Kanhawa. Here is a post office 406 miles from Washington.

Kaniow, a strong town of Poland, in the palatinate of Kiow, seated near the Dnieper, 62 miles S by E of Kiow, and 10 miles N E of Bracklaw.

Kanisa, an impregnable town of Lower Hungary, capital of the county of Salawar. It was taken by the Austrians in 1690, and is seated on the Drave, 100 miles S by E of Vienna. Lon. 17 40 E, lat. 46 43 N.

Kan-tcheou-fou, a very rich and populous city of China, in the province of Kiang-si, it has an excellent port and is celebrated for its rivers. Its district contains 12 cities of the third class; and it is 250 miles N by E of Canton.

Kao-tcheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Quang-tong. The inhabitants of this city cut slabs and tables out of a kind of marble that is found in its vicinity, which represents, naturally, rivers, mountains, landscapes, and trees. Kao-tcheou-fou has one city of the second class, and five of the third, under its jurisdiction.

Kaposwar, a fort of Lower Hungary, on the river Kapos, which washes its walls. It is 55 miles W of Tolna. Lon. 18 13 E, lat. 46 31 N.

Karakassians, a people of Tartary, subject to Russia, who make a part of those small remnants of the different people comprehended under the name of the nations of Krasnoyarsk, related to the Samoyedes. They are so extremely poor, that, excepting a small number of rein-deer, they are in possession of no one thing in the world of any value. In winter they live entirely by the chase, in the summer wild roots and fish are all their food. For procuring these they commonly quit their station every three days during summer, to look out for the lakes most abundant in fish, and whose banks are the most productive of roots.

Kareck, an island in the Persian Gulf, lying nearly in the middle of it, about seven leagues from each side, and 30 from Bassorah River, where all the ships bound for that port must call for pilots. It is five miles long, and two broad. Here baron Kniphausen, about the middle of this century, formed a flourishing Dutch settlement; but on his quitting their service, it became subject to its former master, the sheick of Bundaric.

Karlsruhe, a city of Germany, in the circle of Susbia, in the margravate of Baden Darlach, with a magnificent palace. The city is built on a regular plan, and the houses are all as uniform as the streets. It is 12 miles N by E of Baden.

Kasan, a large country of the Russian empire, lying on both sides of the river Volga. It was formerly an independent kingdom, belonging to the Kalmauc Tartars, to whom the great dukes of Moscow, with other petty principalities of Russia, were tributary. But in 1552, Ivan Vassilievitch II. conquered Kasan, which now forms the three Russian governments of Kasan, Simbirsk, and Fenza.

Kasan, the capital of the Russian government of the same name, seated on the rivulet Casanka, where it falls into the Volga, 414 miles E by N of Moscow. Lon. 49 8 E, lat. 55 43 N.

Kaskaskia, a post town in Randolph county, Indiana Territory; situated on the W side of the River Kaskaskia, near its junction with the Mississippi, at the distance of eight miles from the latter river, and about 180 S W of Vincennes in the same territory. It is the principal seat of justice, and contains about 500 inhabitants.

Germany, in the circle of Suabia, in the territory of Kempten. It is seated on the Wardech, 18 miles N E of Kempten, and 30 S by W of Augsburg. Lon. 10 43 E, lat. 47 58 N.

Kaye's Island, an island in the North Pacific Ocean, discovered by captain Cook, in 1778. Its N E point is a naked rock, considerably elevated above the land within it. Some parts of the shore are interrupted by small vallies, filled with pine-trees. These also abound in other parts of the island, which is covered, in a manner, with a broad girdle of wood; but the trees are far from being of an extraordinary growth, so that they would be of no great use for shipping, unless as materials for small things. Lon. 131 48 W, lat. 59 51 N.

Kaysersberg, a town of France, now in the department of Upper Rhine, and late province of Alsace, 9 miles N W of Colmar, and 25 N W of Basil. Lon. 7 23 E, lat. 48 10 N.

Kayserslautern, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine. In the present war it was taken by the French, is seated on the Lauter, 22 miles S W of Worms, and 38 S by W of Mentz. Lon. 7 51 E, lat. 49 20 N.

Kaysersstuhl, a town of Swisserland, in the county of Baden, with a bridge over the Rhine, and a castle. It belongs to the bishop of Constance, and is eight miles S E of Zurzach. Lon. 8 24 E, lat. 47 8 N.

Kayserswerd, or Keiswert, a town of Germany in the circle of Westphalia, in the dutchy of Berg, seated on the Rhine, eight miles N of Dusseldorp, and 22 N W of Cologne. Lon. 6 45 E, lat. 51 14 N.

Keen, a post town in Cheshire county, New Hampshire, 14 miles S E of Walpole, and 95 W of Portsmouth; containing 1645 inhabitants at last census in 1800.

Kehl, a strong and important fortress of Germany, in Suabia, seated on the Rhine, over which is a bridge to Strasbourg. It was built after the design of Vauban, to defend that city. It was strongly fortified by the French, who took possession of it in 1684. Some of the ancient fortifications are in ruins, but it is still an important pass, between France and Germany. It was taken by the French in June 1796; retaken by the Austrians on Sept. 18th following; but the bridge not being destroyed, the French regained possession of it the same day. Lon. 7 53 E, lat. 48 34 N.

Kelso, a populous town in Roxburghshire, with a good market for corn, and a bridge of six arches over the Tweed, near its confluence with the Teviot. Magnificent ruins of the abbey, founded by David I. in 1128, still remain. Much wheat is raised in this neighbourhood, and the fleeces of the sheep are remarkably fine. Kelso is 20 miles S W of Berwick, and 338 N N W of London. Lon. 2 18 W, lat. 55 36 N.

Kelvin, a small river of Lanarkshire, in Scotland, over which the great canal is conveyed by an aqueduct bridge.

Kempen, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Cologne, seated on the Niers, 30 miles N W of Cologne. Lon. 6 30 E, lat. 51 18 N.

Kempten, a free imperial town of Suabia, in the territory of the abbot of Kempten, who is a prince of the empire. The inhabitants are protestants. It is seated on the Iller, 45 miles S by W of Augsburg. Lon. 10 21 E, lat. 47 49 N.

Ken, a river in Westmoreland, which has a cataract near its mouth, that obstructs the navigation; so that Milthorpe, situate below this cataract, is the only port of Westmoreland.

Ken, a river in Kirkcudbrightshire, that flows to New Calloway, below which it expands into a lake, four miles long and one broad. The stream that issues from this lake, falls into the river Dee, and their united waters meet the Irish Sea, at Kirkcudbright.

Kenil, a corporate town in Westmoreland, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Ken, over which are two stone bridges, and one of wood, which leads to the castle, now in ruins. The inhabitants have driven a trade with the cotton and woollen manufactory, throughout England, ever since the reign of Edward III. It is of note also for the manufactory of cottons, druggets, serges, hats, worsted and yarn stockings, &c. It has a large beautiful church, which stands on the other side of the brook called Blindbeck, out of the liberty of the town, a large neat and handsome building 180 feet long and 99 broad, with five aisles each parted by a row of eight pillars, and a strong square steeple. In 1755, a new chapel was erected in the middle of the town, besides which there are 12 chapels of ease belonging to it.

The dissenters and quakers have meeting-houses. Here is a free grammar-school well endowed; and also a charity-school for 10 boys and 16 girls, who are clothed as well as taught. It has fairs on May 6th, and November 8th; and between them a great beast-market every fortnight. The river here, which runs half through the town in a stony channel, abounds with trout and salmon. Lon. 25 2 W, lat. 54 15 N.

Kennebec, a river which rises in the northern part of the district of Maine, in New England, and falls into the Atlantic Ocean, between the bays of Casco and Penobscot.

Kennebunk, a post and seaport town in York county, Maine, 32 miles S by W of Portland, and about the same distance NE of Portsmouth, in New Hampshire.

Kennet, a river, which rises among the chalky hills in Wilts, and flows to Newbury, in Berks, where it becomes navigable; it is then augmented by the Lamborn, and runs to Reading, below which it mingles with the Thames.

Kennet-Square, a village in Chester county, Pennsylvania, about 30 miles S W of Philadelphia. It has a post office.

Kenoque, a fort of Austrian Flanders, six miles from Dixmude.

Kensington, a village in Middlesex, two miles W of London. Here is Kensington palace, formerly a seat of the lord chancellor Finch, afterward earl of Northampton, but purchased of that nobleman by William III. The extensive gardens, of late years, have become a very fashionable walk.

Kent, one of the counties of England, situated at the SE corner of the island, and from thence enjoying many advantages. As to the climate of this country it varies according to the situation of places. In the low flat land, and especially in the marshes, the air is heavy, moist and unhealthy; and yet not to such a degree as it has been sometimes represented; for, with a little care and caution, strangers, as well as natives, quickly reconcile their constitutions to the temperature even of these parts, and live in them without much inconvenience or apparent danger. But, in reference to the rest of the country, the air is thin, pure, and wholesome, as in any part of Britain. There is no region more happily or more beautifully diversified in regard to soil, so that every kind thereof is, somewhere or other, to be met with in its bounds; and in no shire are any of these soils more fertile than they are in this. The Weald yields variety of fine timber, particularly of chesnut; the middle part has very rich arable land, annually bearing every species of grain in immense plenty, and these excellent in their several sorts. There are also many beautiful orchards, which produce a variety of fine fruits, and more especially apples and cherries, which were introduced here from Flanders. The many rich commodities produced in this county, is the reason why most of our writers have represented it as in a manner void of manufactures which, however, as appears upon a strict and impartial examination, is very far from being the case. Of iron works there were anciently many; and there are still some, where kettles, bombs, bullets, cannon, and such like, are made. The principal rivers, besides the Thames, are the Medway, Darent, Stour, Cray, and Rother. Maidstone is the county-town.

KentaiFFE, Mount, a ridge of mountains in the S part of Thibet, bordering on Hindoostan Proper. On the W side of this ridge are the two heads of the Ganges, and from its E side issues the Burranpooter.

Kentsinguen, a town of Suabia, in the Brisgaw, seated on the river Elz. Lon. 7 57 E, lat. 48 18 N.

Kentucky, first discovered in 1754, formerly a part of Virginia, settled in 1773, and ceded to Congress in 1792. It is situated between 36° 30' and 39° 30' N lat. and 8° and 15° W lon. being 250 miles in length, and 200 in breadth. It is bounded N W by the river Ohio; W by Cumberland river; S by North Carolina; E by Sandy river, and a line drawn due S from its source till it strikes the northern boundary of North Carolina. This whole country, as far as has yet been discovered, lies upon a bed of lime-stone, which in general is about six feet below the surface, except in the valleys where the soil is much thinner. A tract of about 20 miles wide along the banks of the Ohio is hilly, broken land, interspersed with many fertile spots. The rest of the country is agreeably uneven, gently ascending and descending at no great distances. This country in general is well timbered; and such is the variety and beauty of the flowering shrubs and plants which grow spontaneously in it, that in the proper season the wilderness appears in blossom. The accounts of the fertility of the soil in this country have in some instances exceeded belief, and probably have been exaggerated. That some parts of Kentucky, particularly the high grounds, are remarkably good, all accounts agree. The lands of the first rate are too rich for wheat, and will produce 50 and 60, and in some instances it is affirmed 100 bushels of good corn an acre. In common the land will produce 30 bushels of wheat or rye an acre. Barley, oats, cotton, flax, hemp, and vegetables of all kinds common in this climate, yield abundantly. The old Virginia planters say, that if the climate does not prove too moist, few soils known will yield more and better tobacco.—The climate is healthy and delightful, some few places in the neighbourhood of ponds and low grounds excepted. The inhabitants do not experience the extremes of heat and cold. Snow seldom falls deep or lies long. The winter, which begins about Christmas, is never longer than three months, and is commonly but two, and is so mild as that cattle can subsist without fodder.

Kentucky, a river of North America, which rises from a mountainous part of the country of the same name. Its N branch, which interlocks with Cumberland river, falls into the Ohio in lat. 36 27 N. Its bank may be called precipices, for almost every where they consist of three or four hundred feet of a solid perpendicular lime-stone rock.

Kercolang, an island in the Indian Ocean, between 80 and 100 miles in circumference. The face of the country seems to be steep hills and extensive vallies, and every part to be covered with trees and verdure, with some pleasant cultivated grounds. Lon. 126 31 E, lat. 4 28 N.

Kerguelen's Land, an island in the Southern Ocean, visited by captain Cook, in 1779. From its sterility, it might properly have been called the Island of Desolation; but captain Cook was unwilling to rob M. Kerguelen of the honour of its bearing his name. Lon. 69 37 E, lat. 49 3 S.

Kerman, a province of Persia, lying on the gulf of Persia. The inhabitants drive a great trade in their wool.

Kerman, a town of Persia, capital of a province of the same name, called also Caramania. It is 120 miles NN W of Gombroon. Lon. 55 15 E, lat. 29 20 N.

Kerpen, a town of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, in the dutchy of Juliers, 14 miles S E of Juliers. Lon. 6 36 E, lat. 50 0 N.

Kerry, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, 57 miles long and 45 broad; bounded on the E by the counties of Limerick and Cork, on the W by the Atlantic Ocean, on the N by the Shannon, which separates it from Thomond, and on the S by Desmond and the ocean. It is a mountainous country, but in many places are good corn-fields. It contains 84 parishes, and sends eight members to parliament. Ardfert is the capital.

Kertsch, a fortress of great importance, as this and that of Yenikale command the passage which forms the communication between the sea of Asoph and the Black Sea. It is situate on the E coast of the Crimea, near the N entrance of the straits of Caffa.

Kesroan, a chain of mountains, on the coast of Syria, which makes a part of Mount Libanus.

Kessel, a town of Prussian Guelderland, with a handsome castle, seated on the Maese, between Ruremond and Venlo. Lon. 5 49 E, lat. 15 16 N.

Kesseldorf, a village of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, three miles below Dresden, remarkable for a victory gained by the king of Prussia, over the Saxons, in 1745.

Kesteven, one of the three grand divisions of Lincolnshire. It contains the W part of the county, from the middle to the S extremity.

Keswick, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Saturday; it is seated in a vale surrounded by hills, near the rapid river Greeta; near this vale the finest black lead in the world is dug up. It is 25 miles N W of Kendal, and 287 N N W of London. Lon. 3 16 W, lat. 58 35 N.

Keswick, Vale of, a district in the S part of Cumberland. Here is the lake of Derwent-water. To the N of this is the lofty mountain Skiddaw, one of the most distinguished in England; and to the S is the dreary region of Borrow-dale. See Borrowdale, Derwent-water, and Stiddaw.

Kettering, a town in Northamptonshire, with a market on Friday. It is pleasantly seated on an ascent, 12 miles N E. of Northampton, and 75 N W of London. Lon. 0 59 E, lat. 52 20 N.

Kew, a village in Surry, seven miles W by S of London. It is seated on the Thames, over which is a stone bridge of seven arches to Brentford. Here is a royal palace, fine gardens, and his majesty's exotic garden. Many new plants from the South Sea and Cape of Good Hope being transplanted to it. The latter has been brought to great perfection. Kew gardens are open to the public, every Monday, from Midsummer to the end of Autumn.

Kexholm, a town of the Russian government of Wiburgh. It is well fortified, and has a strong castle. The houses are built of wood. Near it is a considerable salmon fishery. It is seated on two islands of the lake Ladoga, 60 miles N E of Wiburg, and 67 N of Petersburg. Lon. 30 25 E, lat. 61 3 N.

Keynsham, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Thursday. It has some trade in malt, and is seated on the Avon, over which there is a bridge. It is five miles S E of Bristol, and 119 W of London. Lon. 2 54 W, lat. 51 24 N.

Kharkof, a government of the Russian empire, formerly comprised in the government of Ukraina-Slovodskaia. Its capital of the same name, is seated on the Uda, which falls into the Donetz.

Kia-king-fou, a city of China, in the province of Tche-kiang, remarkable for nothing but its streets, ornamented by beautiful piazzas, that shelter passengers from the sun and rain. Seven cities of the third class are dependant upon it.

Kiang-nan, a province of China, bounded on the W by Honan and Hou-quang, on the S by Tche-kiang and Kian-si, on the E by the gulf of Nan-king, and on the N by Chan-tong. It is of vast extent and contains 14 cities of the first rank, and 93 of the second and third. These cities are very populous, and all of them are great trading places, it is full of lakes, rivers, and canals; and their silks, japanned goods, ink, and paper, bring higher Kidderminster, a corporate town in Worcestershire, with a market on Thursday. It is seated under a hill, on the river Stour, and is the principal manufacturing place in the county, and it was particularly noted for a woollen manufacture called Kidderminster stuffs. Its former trade of stuffs is much declined, on account of the general use of cotton goods; but its carpet manufacture has greatly increased. It is the first market in England for pile or plush carpets, 1000 looms being employed in that branch of traffic, which, for beauty of colour and patterns, exceed any other. These are frequently called Wilton, from having been first made at that town. The worsted shag trade has also been introduced here, and employs many looms. It is 14 miles S E of Bridge-north, and 125 N W of London. Lon. 2 18 W, lat. 52 28 N.

Kidwelly, a town in Carmarthenshire in S Wales, with a market on Tuesday. It is seated on a creek of the Bristol Channel, near the mouth of the Towy. From this town, a canal has been cut to some collieries, whence coal is brought down and exported. It is eight miles S of Carmarthen, and 224 W by N of London. Lon. 4 20 W, lat. 56 44 N.

Kie, a strong and considerable town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, capital of Holstein, with a castle, and a university. It stands on a peninsula, in a bay of the Baltic, and has a commodious harbour for ships of the largest size. A canal was begun in 1777, by which the navigation of the Northern Sea is to be united with the Baltic; and is to be formed across Holstein, by the canal of Kiel, and the Kien-ning-fou, a city of China, in the province of Fo-kien. At the time of the conquest of China by the Tartars, it sustained two sieges, and after some time it was taken, and all the inhabitants were put to the sword. Hav-ing been since re-established by the same Tartars that destroyed it, it is ranked among cities of the first class, and has eight cities of the third class under its jurisdiction. It is 260 miles S E of Nan-king.

Kiernou, a town of Lithuania, seated on the Villia, where the duke resides. Lon. 35 21 E, lat. 54 50 N.

Kilbarchan, a village in Renfrew-shire; it is a manufacturing place, and has extensive bleaching grounds. It is five miles S W of Renfrew.

Kilbeggan, a borough of Ireland, in West Meath. It is seated on the Bos-na, and is 44 miles W of Dublin.

Kilburn, a village in Middlesex, in the vicinity of London; famous for a fine well of mineral water.

Kilua, St. a small island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, 18 leagues to the W of North Uist. A great number of the poor people in this island live chief-ly by fishing and catching wild fowls. In the latter employment, they are in-credibly adventurous; being often let down by a rope from the summit of high precipitous rocks, where they clamber among the rugged cliffs, in search of the eggs and nests of various birds. But the more safe and common method of catching these fowls is, by spreading a large net over the face of the rock where they lodge, in which great numbers are at once entangled, and lowered down into a boat. St. Kilda is the most westerly island of Great Britain.

Kildrummy, a town of Scotland, in Aberdeenshire, seated on the Don. Lon. 2 35 W, lat. 57 20 N.

Kilgarren, a town in Pembrokeshire, with a market on Wednesday. It is seated on the river Tyvy, is a long town consisting of one street, and had formerly a castle, now in ruins; and near it is a remarkable salmon-leap, where the fish are caught in great abundance. Above this place, are large works for fabricating tin plates. It is 30 miles N of Pembroke, and 227 W N W of London. Lon. 4 40 W, lat. 52 4 N.

Kilham, a town in the E riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Moulds, and is 36 miles N E of York, and 200 N of Lon-don. Lon. 0 16 W, lat. 54 5 N.

Kilia, a fortified town of Turkey in Europe, in the province of Bessarabia: seated in an island at the mouth of the Danube. It is 86 miles S W of Biolo-gorod, and 290 N E of Constantinople. Lon. 28 46 E, lat. 45 22 N.

Kilkenny, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 40 miles long and 29 broad; bounded on the E by Catterlough and Wexford, on the W by Tipperary, on the N by Queen's County, and on the S by Waterford. It is one of the most healthful pleasant and populous counties in Ireland, contains 96 parishes, and sends 16 members to parliament.

Kilkenny, a town of Ireland, capital of a county of the same name. It is one of the most populous and commercial towns of Ireland; and consists of the Irish and English Town, the best of which is the principal. It once had a bishop and the cathedral is yet stand-ing. It is 26 miles N of Waterford, and 54 S W of Dublin. Lon. 6 55 W, lat. 52 36 N.

Killala, a seaport of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, and province of Con-naught, with a bishop's see. It is 21 miles N of Castlebar. Lon. 9 11 W, lat. 54 15 E.

Killaloe, a city of Ireland, in the county of Clare, and province of Munster with a bishop's see, seated on the Shannon, over which is a bridge of 19 arches. Here is a considerable salmon and eel fishery. It is 10 miles N N E of Limerick. Lon. 8 27 W, lat. 52 50 N.

Killarney, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kerry and province of Munster, on the side of a lake of the same name. Within half a mile of this place are the ruins of the cathedral of Aghadoc, an ancient bishopric united to Ardferit. It is 143 miles S W of Dublin.

Killarney, a beautiful lake of Ireland, in the county of Kerry, otherwise called Lough Lean, from its being surrounded by high mountains. It is divided into three parts, called the Lower, Middle, and Upper Lake. The northern, or lower lake, is six miles in length, and from three to four in breadth. On the side of one of the mountains, is O'Sullivan's Cascade, which falls into the lake with a roar that strikes the timid with awe. The view of this sheet of water is uncommonly fine, appearing as if it were descending from an arch of wood, which overhangs it above 70 feet in height from the point of view. The islands are not so numerous in this as in the upper lake; but there is one of uncommon beauty, called Innisfallen, nearly opposite O'Sullivan's Cascade. It contains 18 Irish acres: and the coast is formed into a variety of bays and promontories, skirted and crowned with arbutus, holly, and other shrubs and trees. The promontory of Mucrus, which divides the upper from the lower lake, is a perfect land of enchantment; and a road is carried through the centre of this promontory, which unfolds all the interior beauties of the place. Among the distant mountains, Turk appears an object of magnificence: and Mangerton's more lofty, though less interesting summit, soars above the whole. The passage to the upper lake is round the extremity of Mucrus, which confines it on one side, and the approaching mountains on the other. Here is a celebrated rock, called the Eagle's Nest, which produces wonderful echoes: the report of a single cannon is answered by a succession of peals resembling the loudest thunder, which seems to travel the surrounding scenery, and die away among the distant mountains. The upper lake is four miles in length, and from two to three in breadth. It is almost surrounded by mountains, from which descend a number of beautiful cascades. The islands in this lake are numerous, and affords an amazing variety of picturesque views. The centre lake which communicates with the upper, is small in comparison with the other two, and cannot boast of equal variety; but the shores are, in many places, indented with beautiful bays, surrounded by dark groves of trees. The E boundary is formed by the base of Mangerton, down the steep side of which descends a cascade, visible for 150 yards. This fall of water is supplied by a circular lake near the summit of the mountain, called the Devil's Punch Bowl; which on account of its immense depth, and the continual overflow of water, is considered as one of the greatest curiosities in Killarney. One of the best prospects which this admired lake affords, is from a rising ground near the ruined cathedral of Aghadoc. In the several mountains adjacent to the lakes are still to be seen vestiges of mines of iron, lead and copper.

Killierankie, a noted pass in Perthshire, near the junction of the Tummel with the Garry. It is the grand entrance into the Highlands in those parts, and is formed by the lofty mountains impending over the Garry, which rushes through in a deep, darksome, and rocky channel, overhung with trees. In the last century, this was a pass of much difficulty and danger: a path hanging over a tremendous precipice threatened destruction to the least false step of the traveller. At present, a fine road gives an easy access to the remote Highlands; and the two sides are joined by a fine arch. Near the N end of this pass, in its open and unimproved state, king William's army under general Mackey, was defeated, in 1689, by the Highlanders, commanded by viscount Dundee, who was killed in the moment of victory. Here also a body of Hessians in 1746 made a full pause, refusing to march further, for it appeared to them by captain Cook, in 1778, to the harbour which he discovered on the W coast of North America, at the mouth of a great river, in lon. 126 48 W, and lat. 49 33 N. But the natives call it Noaka; the name now generally adopted by the English. Upon the seacoast, the land is tolerably high and level; but, within the island, it rises into steep hills, which have an uniform appearance. The trees, of which the woods are composed, are the Canadian pine, white cypress, and two or three other sorts of pine. In general, the trees grow here with great vigour, and are of a large size. About the rocks and borders of the woods were seen some strawberry plants, and raspberry, currant, and gooseberry bushes, all in a flourishing state. The stature of the natives is, in general below the common standard; but their persons are not proportionably slender, being usually pretty plump, though not muscular. The women are, in general, of the same size and form as the men; nor is it easy to distinguish them, as they possess no natural feminine delicacies. There was not a single one to be found, even among those who were in their prime, who had the least pretensions to beauty or comeliness. The irregularity and confusion of their houses is far exceeded by their nastiness and stench. Every thing about the house stinks of trainoil, fish, and smoke; and every part of it is as filthy as can be imagined. In 1780, a small association of British merchants, resident in the East Indies, formed the project of opening a trade to this place, for supplying China with furs, and took measures, in 1788, to secure themselves a permanent settlement; but the Spaniards being jealous of the intrusion of the English into that part of the world, sent a frigate from Mexico to put an end to this commerce. The frigate captured two English vessels, and took possession of the settlement that had been formed upon the coast. The British ministry immediately ordered a powerful armament to give weight to their demand of reparation; but the affair was amicably terminated by a convention, in 1790.

Kingston upon Hall. See Hall.

Kingston upon Thames, a corporate town in Surry, with a market on Saturday. A great national council was held here in the year 838, at which Egbert the first king of all England, and his son Athelwolf, were present; and several of the Saxon monarchs were crowned here. It is a populous trading town and sent members to parliament in the reigns of the second and third Edward. Queen Elizabeth founded here a freeschool; and the Lent assizes are constantly held at this place. The wooden bridge, over the Thames, is the most ancient on that river, except London bridge; and the corporation have a revenue for its support. It is 11 miles S W of London. Lon. 0 12 W, lat. 51 27 N.

King-te-ching, a town of China, in the province of Kiang-si and district of Jao-tcheou-fou. It is famous for its beautiful porcelain; and 500 furnaces are said to be employed in the making of it, and it is computed to contain a million of inhabitants, and extends a league and a half along the banks of a river, which here forms a kind of harbour, about a league in circumference.

King-nan-fou, a city of China in the province of Kiang-si, seated on the banks of a river in a very fertile canton, abounding with gold and silver.

King William, Court House, the principal seat of justice in King William county, Virginia; situated 35 miles N E of Richmond, about half way between Mattanony and Pamunkey rivers. Here is a post office.

Kinross, a borough in Kinross-shire, seated on a plain, near Loch-Leven, screened on the N by the Ochil Hills. Its manufactures are linen, and some cutlery ware; and it is 20 miles N of Edinburgh. Lon. 3 22 W, lat. 56 15 N.

Kinross-shire, a county of Scotland, between the shires of Perth and Fife, and 30 miles in circuit, and its length and breadth nearly equal. It sends one member to parliament, alternately with the county of Clackmannan.

Kinsale, a seaport and borough of Ireland, in the county of Cork, and province of Munster. It is a very populous trading place, and has an excellent harbour, 14 miles S of Cork. Lon. 8 26 W, lat. 51 41 N.

Kintail, a peninsula in Ross-shire, situated between Loch Garron and Loch Duich.

Kin-cheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Han-quang. Its district contains two cities of the second, and 11 of the third class.

Kin-ting, the capital of the islands of Lieou-kieou, in the China Sea. Its four gates correspond to the four Cardinal points and the western one forms the grand entry. The king's palace is reckoned to be four leagues in circumference. Kint-ting is seated in Cheonli, the S part of the island. Lon. 146 30 E, lat. 26 2 N.

Kintore, a borough in Aberdeenshire, 10 miles W by N of Aberdeen. Lon. 2 5 W lat. 57 8 N.

Kiof, a town of Poland, and capital of the Ukraine, in a palatinate of the same name, with an archbishop's see, and a castle. It is the capital of the Russian government of Kiof, and carries on a considerable trade. It is divided into the Old and New Town, and seated on the W side of the Dnieper, 180 miles N E of Kaminieck, and 335 E by S of Warsaw. Lon. 31 51 E, lat. 50 30 N.

Kiof, or Kiow, a government of the Russian empire, being part of the Ukraine, or little Russia. It lies on the E side of the Dnieper, although Kiof, the capital is on the W side. It was once a dutchy, belonging to the great dukes of Russia, and Kiof was their capital, and principal residence. This country was conquered by the Tartars, and came again into the possession of the great dukes, but was over-run and possessed by the Cossacks, under the protection of Poland. In 1664, the natives, discontented with John Casimer, king of Poland, submitted to Russia, and have ever since remained subject to that empire. The vast privileges that they enjoyed have been gradually abolished, and they are now reduced to the same state as the other provinces of the Russian empire. This government contains eleven districts; and its principal rivers are the Dnieper, Desna, Oster, Udai, Sula, Psol, and Trubesh.

Kiof, or Kiow, a palatinate of Poland in that part of the Ukraine which lies on the W side of the Dnieper. It contains only two districts, and several Kisti, an Asiatic nation, which extends from the highest ridge of Caucasus, along the Sundaha rivulets; they are bounded to the W by the little Cabarda, to the E by the Tartars and Lesguis, and to the S by the Lesguis and Georgians. The different tribes of this restless and turbulent nation are generally at variance with each other, and with all their neighbours.

Their dialects have no analogy with any known language, and their history and origin are at present utterly unknown. They are capable of arming about 5000 men; they call themselves Inguishi, Kisti, or Halha; they live in villages near each other, containing about 20 or 30 houses are diligent husbandmen, and rich in cattle. Many of their villages have a stone tower, which serves in time of war as a retreat to their women and children, and as a magazine for their effects. These people are all armed, and have the custom of wearing shields. Their religion is very simple, but has some traces of christianity: They believe in one God, whom they call Daild, but have no sainte or religious persons: they celebrate Sunday, not by any religious ceremony, but by resting from labour; they have a fast in spring, and another in summer; they observe no ceremonies either at births or deaths; they allow of polygamy, and eat pork.

Koriacs, a people of Tartary subject to Russia, who inhabit the northern coast of the gulf Penschinskoi, and the most northern part of Kamtschatka to the river Anadir. Their country extends westward from the river Olomon (which runs into the Kolyma) as far as the Indian ocean. Their neighbours are the Kamtschadales, the Tongusians, the Lemonts, and the Tschouktaches; the country which they perambulate in their nomadic courses is rude, marshy, full of small rocks, and in many places absolutely destitute of forests. The Koriacs are of a short stature, have small heads, little eyes, a round and meagre face, flat noses, their hair and beards black, in general very little beard, and their eyebrows long. They are of a slow and dull comprehension, have a high opinion of their country and constitution, are courageous, suspicious and revengeful; but, for the most part, laborious, sincere, susceptible of friendship, and faithful to their superiors. The Koriacs are divided according to their manner of living, into the settled and wandering, which are pretty equal in point of numbers. They speak a different dialect, and for the most part do not treat one another as two bodies belonging to the same community, but as open and avowed enemies. The manners of the settled Koriacs are by far more gentle than those of the Nomades. They occupy the southern part of their country near the gulf Penschinskoi, and have some settlements even in the very peninsula of Kamtschatka. The wandering Koriacs travel over the northern part of this country in the environs of the river Anadir, near the Tschouktaches, and they often come as far as Kamtschatka. Their disposition is so wild and untractable, that it would be very difficult to bring them into any manner of subordination. The very suspicion of such a design would be very dangerous. The chief employments of the wandering Koriacs are the care of their rein-deer and the chase. Fishing does not answer, as they are not expert at it. The poorest of them possess about fifty rein-deer, some have a hundred, the richest from one to two thousand. With these herds of rein-deer they travel over their deserts and mountains, without any apprehensions of meeting with rivers or forests, so they do but find moss on the ground, that being all that is necessary for the subsistence of the rein-deer. They do not milk the female rein-deer, of course they have no such thing as cheese. Even the wealthiest of the Koriacs never kill one of these quadrupeds unnecessarily, unless it has some defect; their kitchen is supplied with those which have died by some disease, or to which some accident has happened; to this it is owing that their herds become so large, and for the same reason, a great stock is necessary for their subsistence. The poor go into the service of the rich, and join their little herds to those of their masters. Every sort of game is agreeable to them. The women gather roots and wild fruit. Whatever provisions they find are consumed immediately, for they have not a thought of laying up against an exigency. The wandering Koriacs are much more wild, hardy, and dangerous than the settled. They very often make parties to seek adventures, and plunder some of their neighbours, or less turbulent countrymen. Before they enter on an enterprise, they always drink of the decoction of the intoxicating mushroom, to inspire themselves with more intrepidity and courage. Their arms are the bow and arrow, the lance, and the club. There are some to go to the chase and on their expeditions with no other arms than a stick. All their military art consists in falling on their enemy unawares. Theft, rapine, and murder, if committed among themselves, are criminal: if on another race, or upon strangers, they are heroic actions. Their greatest happiness consists in passing from one station to another, and seeing their numerous herds of rein-deer. When a herd has increased too much they divide it. There are few Koriacs who have herds so small that they are not able to count them; and yet if only on strays, it is immediately perceived. The Koriacs are all polygamists; some have four wives. They do not purchase them; but, like the Kamtschatsches, they first endeavour to gain the affections, and then to catch them, which marry among themselves, without any regard to consanguinity; the poor are obliged to get wives from among the poor. The wives of the settled Koriacs live in the same hut with them; those of the wandering are distributed among their different flocks, so that each has a flock under her care. These latter are exceedingly jealous, and torment their unhappy wives in a most cruel manner. Even an ill-founded suspicion sometimes drives the husband to sacrifice his innocent wife to his furious jealousy; and the suspected gallant falls likewise a victim to his rage. The settled Koriacs err as much on the other extreme; for their compliance towards their wives is unbounded. They are happy to see them charm strangers; and the caresses the wife receives is so much pleasure bestowed on the husband. They offer their wives and daughters to strangers as companions for the night. An acceptance of such offers is esteemed the greatest mark of friendship, and a refusal, of contempt, which highly displeases them. Yet this politeness is attended with some inconvenience to the stranger thus entertained: for, first of all, his polite bed-fellow makes water in his presence, and offers him a bowl of it to wash his mouth with. The wandering Koriacs burn the bodies of the dead. This custom is not uncommon among the settled Koriacs. They build up a pile, and carry the corpse thither on a sledge drawn by rein-deer, dressed in the best cloaths, and burn with it all the arms and utensils of the deceased. They kill the rein-deer that has drawn it thither, eat the flesh, and fling what remains into the fire. In order to celebrate the memory of the deceased, they make another feast of rein-deer.

K R A

Kubecha, is a large strong town situated on a hill between high mountains. Its inhabitants call themselves Franki (Franks, a name common in the east to all Europeans), and relate that their ancestors were brought hither by some accident, the particulars of which are now forgotten. The common conjecture is, that they were mariners cast away upon the coast; but those who pretend to be better versed in their history tell the story this way: The Greeks and Genoese, say they, carried on, during several centuries, a considerable trade, not only on the Black sea, but likewise on the Caspian, and were certainly acquainted with the mines contained in these mountains, from which they drew by their trade with the inhabitants great quantities of silver, copper, and other metals. In order to work these upon the spot, they sent hither

K U R

a number of workmen to establish manufactures, and instruct the inhabitants. The subsequent invasions of the Arabs, Turks, and Monguls, during which the mines were filled up, and the manufactures abandoned, prevented the strangers from effecting their return, so that they continued here and erected themselves into a republic. What renders this account the more probable is, that they are still excellent artists, and make very good fire-arms, as well rifled as plain; sabres, coats of mail, and several articles in gold and silver for exportation.
They have likewise, for their own defence, small copper cannons, of three pounds calibre, cast by themselves.
They coin Turkish and Persian silver money, and even rubles, which readily pass current, because they are of the full weight and value. In their valleys they have pasture and arable lands, as well as gardens; but they purchase the greater part of their corn, trusting chiefly for support to the sale of their manufactures, which are much admired in Persia, Turkey, and the Crimea.
They are generally in good circumstances, are a quiet inoffensive people, but high spirited and independent.
Their town is considered as a neutral spot, where the neighbouring princes can deposit their treasures with safety.
They elect yearly twelve magistrates, to whom they pay the most unlimited obedience; and as all the inhabitants are on a footing of perfect equality, each individual is sure to have in his turn a share in the government. In the year 1725, their magistrates, as well as the Usmei, acknowledged the sovereignty of Russia, but without paying any tribute. Lon. 67 59 E, lat.

Kuriles, a chain of islands, extending from lat. 45 to 51 N, running from the southern promontory of Kamtschatka to Japan, in a S W direction. The inhabitants of the neighbourhood of Lopatka, who were themselves called Kuriles, gave these islands the same name, as soon as they became acquainted with them. Spanbug says they are 22 in number, exclusive of the very small ones. The northernmost island, which is called Shoonska, is about three leagues distant from the promontory Lopatka, its inhabitants consisting of a mixture of natives and Kamtschadales. The next, which is named Paramonsic, is considerably larger than Shoonska, and is inhabited by the real natives. The Russians paid their first visit to these two islands in 1713, and added them to the dominions of the empress. Many of the inhabitants of those islands that are under the dominion of Russia, are now converted to Christianity. Perhaps the time is not far distant, when an advantageous commerce will be carried on between Kamtschatka and this extensive chain of islands, which may afterwards produce a communication with Japan itself.

Kursk, a government of the Russian empire, formerly part of that of Biélgorod. Its capital, of the same name, is seated on the Tukor, which falls into the Seine or Sena.

Kuzma Damianski, a town of the Russian empire, in Tartary, 32 miles N E of Vasigolorod from the river Wolga. Lon. 51 30 E, lat. 56 2 N.

Kusistan, a province of Persia, bounded on the N and E by Irac-Ageni, on the S by Farsistan, and on the W by Irac-Arabia. Suster is the capital.

Kuttenburg, a town of Bohemia, seated near a mountain, remarkable for its silver mines, 35 miles S E of Prague. Lon. 15 37 E, lat. 49 56 N.

Kuttore, a country of Asia, which contains a great number of towns and villages, and is exceedingly populous. Its principal towns are Tonkul and Jourkul; those being the residence of its rulers. It abounds in fruits, such as grapes, apples, plumbs, &c. It likewise yields rice, wheat and other sorts of grain. The natives are exceedingly fond of wine and hogs flesh; although their country is well stocked with cows and goats. They have a distinct language, and their arms consist of the bow and arrow, the sabre and the sling.

Kuynder, a fortress of the United Provinces, 23 miles S of Lewarden. Lon. 5 24 E, lat. 52 50 N.

Kyllburg, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Treves, seated on the Kyll, 16 miles N W of Treves. Lon. 6 37 E, lat. 50 1 N.

Kyneton, a town in Hertfordshire, with a good trade in narrow cloth, and a market on Wednesday. It is 15 miles N W of Hereford, and 149 W N W of London. Lon. 2 50 W, lat. 52 12 N.

Kyneton, a village in Somersetshire, N E of Somerton. It is naturally paved, for half a mile, with one smooth rock, which looks like ice.

Labia, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Servia, 62 miles S W of Nissa.

Labiau, a town of Western Prussia, at the mouth of the Deime, near the Curischhaff, with a strong castle, 30 miles N E of Koningsberg. Lon. 21 40 E, lat. 54 37 N.

Labourd, a late territory of France, part of that of Basques. It abounds in fruits, and the inhabitants are said to be the first that went to fish for whales. It is now included in the department of the Lower Pyrenees.

Labrador, a country on the E side of Hudson's Bay, in North America. The climate, in only lat. 57° N, is excessively cold during winter. Wine freezes in a solid mass; brandy coagulates; and the very breath falls on the blankets of a bed, in the form of a hoar-frost. The ice begins to disappear in May; and about the middle of June, commences hot weather, which, at times is so violent, as to scorch the faces of the hunters. Mock suns and halos are not unfrequent; they are very bright, and richly tinged with all the colours of the rainbow. The sun rises and sets with a large cone of yellowish light; and the night is enlivened by the aurora borealis, which spreads many different lights and colours over the whole sky. The animals are moosedeers, stags, reindeers, bears, tigers, buffaloes, wolves, foxes, beavers, otters, lynxes, martens, squirrels, ermines, wild cats, and hares. The feathered kinds are geese, bustards, ducks, partridges, and all kinds of wild fowls. The fish are whales, morses, seals, codfish, and a white fish preferable to herrings; and in their rivers and fresh waters are pike, perch, carp, and trout. In summer, there is here, as in other places, a variety in the colour of the several animals: when that season is over, which holds only for three months, they all assume the livery of winter, and every sort of beasts, and most of their fowls, are of the colour of the snow; every thing animate and inanimate is white. But one of the most striking things, that draws the most inattentive to an admiration of the wisdom and goodness of Providence, is that the dogs and cats from Great Britain, that have been carried to Hudson's Bay, on the approach of winter, have changed their appearance, and acquired a much longer, softer, and thicker coat of hair than they originally had. See New Britain, Esquimaux, and Hudson's Bay.

Lack, or Bischofs-Lack, a town of Germany in Carniola. Here is not only a great deal of iron, steel, quicksilver, and corn, but a large quantity of linen is made here, and sent to Fiume and Trieste. It is 26 miles W by N of Laubach, and 35 N of Trieste. Lon. 14 7 E, lat. 46 31 N.

Ladenburgh, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine, seated on the Neckar, eight miles N W of Hiedelberg. Lon. 8 42 E, lat. 49 30 N.

Ladoga, a lake in Russia, between the gulf of Finland and the lake of Onega. It is 150 miles long, and 90 broad; and is esteemed to be the largest lake in Europe. Among the fish with which it abounds, are seals. This induced Peter the Great to cut a canal 67 miles in length, from the S W extremity of this lake to the river Neva, by which it has a communication with the gulf of Finland.

Ladoga, New, a town in the Russian government of St. Petersburg, seated on the Volkhof, between the lake and canal of Ladoga. It is 70 miles E of St. Petersburg. Lon. 30 32 E, lat. 60 0 N. Old Ladoga, an inconsiderable place, is higher up the Volkhof.

Ladogna, or Lacedagna, a town of Naples, in Capitanata, with a bishop's see, 60 miles E of Naples. Lon. 15 46 E, lat. 41 1 N.

Ladrone Islands, islands of the N Pacific Ocean. They are 11 in number, exclusive of the small islets and rocks, and lie in about 140° E lon. and between 11 and 28° N lat. They were discovered by Magellan, in 1521. He touched first at the island of Guam, where the natives stole some of his goods, which caused him to name these islands the Ladrões, or Islands of Thieves. Beside the other fruits natural to the soil and climate, here is the bread-fruit tree in abundance. The names of the principal islands are Saypan, Tinian, Guam, and Rota.

Lagny, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Marne, and late province of the Isle of France, with a late famous Benedictine Abbey. It is seated on the Marne, 15 miles E of Paris. Lon. 2 45 E, lat. 48 50 N.

Lagoon, one of the new discovered islands in the S Sea, inhabited by a race of Indians, of a copper colour. This island was discovered by Captain Cook. Lon. 139 28 W, lat. 18 47 S.

Lagos, a seaport of Portugal, in Algarva, with a castle. Here the English fleets bound to the Straits usually take in fresh water. Near this town is Cape Lagos, off which, in 1759, admiral Boscawen defeated a French fleet. It is 120 miles S E of Lisbon. Lon. 8 33 W, lat. 37 2 N.

Laguna, a town of the island of Teneriffe, one of the Canaries, where the governor has a palace, but generally resides at Santa Cruz. The lake from which it has been supposed to derive its name, is now a very inconsiderable piece of water. Lon. 16 13 W, lat. 28 30 N.

Lagunes of Venice, the marshes or lakes in Italy, on which Venice is seated. They communicate with the sea, and are the security of the city. There are about 60 islands in these Lagunes, which together make a bishop's see. Euarano is the most considerable, next to those on which Venice stands.

Lahn, a river of Germany which rises in Hesse Cassel, and falls into the Rhine, above Coblentz.

Lahom, a seaport of Sweden, in the province of Halland, seated near the Baltic, with the castle, 50 miles N of Copenhagen. Lon. 12 40 E, lat. 56 31 N.

Lahore, a province of Hindoostan Proper, bounded on the W by Candahar, on the N by Cashmere, on the E by Sirinagur and Delhi, and on the S by Multan. It is often called Panjab, or the country of Five Rivers. It is very extensive and remarkably fertile; affording in addition to all the necessaries of life, wine, sugar, and cotton wood. In the tract between the Indus and the Chelun, are salt mines, wonderfully productive, and affording fragments of rock salt, hard enough to be formed into vessels, &c. See Panjah.

Lahore, a city, the capital of a province of the same name, in Hindoostan Proper. It is a place of high antiquity, and was one of the most considerable cities in the Mogul dominions, containing a great number of mosques, caravanseras, and pagods, and the residence of the Mahometan conquerors of Hindoostan, before they had established themselves in the central parts of the country. Lahore is now the capital of the Seiks, whose name was hardly known till the rapid decline of the Mogul empire, in the present century. Here they have manufactures of cotton cloths and stuffs of all kinds, and of very curious carpets. And here there is a magnificent walk of shady trees, upwards of 300 miles long. It is 210 miles S of Cashmere, and 290 N W of Delhi. Lon. 73 45 E, lat. 31 15 N.

Laino, a town of Naples, in Calabria Citeriore, near a river of the same name. Lon. 16 11 E, lat. 40 4 N.

Lai-tcheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Chang-tong, with a convenient harbour on the Yellow Sea, containing two cities of the first, and five of the third class.

Laland, a small island of Denmark, in the Baltic, lying S of Zealand, from which it is separated by a narrow channel. It is fertile in corn, with which it supplies Copenhagen. Naxkow is the capital.

Lambale, a town of France, in the department of the North Coast, and late province of Bretagne. It is the chief town of the late duchy of Penthièvre, and gave the title of princess to the unfortunate lady of that name. Lambale has a good trade in cattle, linsens and parchment, and is 37 miles N W of Rennes. Lon. 2 21 W, lat. 48 27 N.

Lambesc, a town of France, in the department of the Mouths of the Rhone and late province of Provence, nine miles N of Aix. Lon. 5 31 E, lat. 43 40 N.

Lambeth, a village in Surry, on the Thames opposite Westminster, where the archbishops of Canterbury have an ancient palace. By the vast increase of buildings, Lambeth is now joined to the metropolis, in a direction to each of the three bridges. Here is a manufacture of artificial stone, which answers every purpose of stone carving, and extends, not only to statues from the finest models, but to every kind of architectural ornaments. Here likewise are extensive works for vinegar and homemade wine, a patent shot manufacture, and numerous timber yards, supplied with almost incredible stores of foreign timber.

Lamborn, a town in Berks, with a market on Friday, seated on a river of the same name, which falls into the Kennet, below Newbury. It is seven miles N by W of Hungerford, and 68 W of London. Lon. 1 26 W, lat. 51 30 N.

Lamego, a town of Portugal in Beirs, with a bishop's see, and a strong citadel, containing two churches, an hospital, and four convents. It is 50 miles S E of Bragus, and 150 N of Lisbon. Lon. 7 30 W, lat. 41 12 N.

Lammermuir, a mountainous ridge in Scotland, which divides the county of Berwick from that of Haddington for above 20 miles. These mountains are, in general, very bleak and barren, affording but scanty pasture for the sheep that feed on them. Scouter Hill is the most elevated of this ridge.

Lamo, a kingdom and island of Africa, on the coast of Melinda, between the island of Pate and Cape Formosa. Its capital of the same name is well fortified. The king and government, being Mahometans, are frequently at war with the rest of the inhabitants, who are Pagans. Lamo is tributary to the Portuguese.

Lancashire, a large maritime province of England, washed by the Irish sea on the W, bordering on the N with that part of Cumberland and Westmoreland; bounded on the E by the W Riding of Yorkshire, and on the W by Cheshire, extending 73 miles in length, and 41 in breadth, comprehending about 260,000 inhabitants. The eastern parts of the province are rocky, and in the northern districts we see many single mountains remarkably high, such as Ingleborough hill, Cloughbohill, Pendle-hill, and Longridge-hill.
Nor is there any want of wood in this country, either for timber or fuel; witness Wiersdale forest and Bowland forest to the northward, and Simon's wood in the southern part of Lancashire. The air of Lancashire is pure, healthy, and agreeable, except among the fens and on the sea-shore, where the atmosphere is loaded with putrid exhalations, producing malignant and intermitting fevers, scurvy, rheumatism, dropsy, and consumption. The soil is various in different parts of the country, poor and rocky on the hills, fat and fertile in the valleys and champaign country. The level country produces plenty of wheat and barley, and the skirts of the hills yield good harvests of excellent oats; very good hemp is raised in divers parts of the province; and the pasture which grows in the valley is so peculiarly rich, that the cattle which feed upon it are much larger and fatter than in any other part of England. There is not any part of the world better supplied than Lancashire with provisions of all kinds at a very reasonable rate; such as beef, veal, mutton, lamb, pork, poultry, and game of all sorts, caught upon the moors, heathis, and commons, in the hilly part of the shire. Besides the sea-fowl common to the shires of England, such as ducks, easterlings, teal and plover, many uncommon birds are observed on the coast of Lancashire; the sea-crow, variegated with blue and black, the puffin, the cormorant, the curlew, the razor-bill, the copped wren, the red-shanks, the swan, the tropic bird, the king's fisher, &c. As a commercial and manufacturing county, it is distinguished beyond any other in the kingdom. Its principal manufactures are linen, silk, and cotton goods; fustians, counterpanes, shalloons, bays, serges, tapes, small ware, hats, sailcloth, sacking, pins, iron goods, cast plate-glass, &c.

Of the commerce of this county, it may suffice to observe, that Liverpool is the second port in the kingdom. The principal rivers are the Mersey, Irwell, Ribble, Lon, Levern, Wyre, Hodder, Roche, Duddon, Winster, Ken, and Calder; and it has two considerable lakes, Winander-mere, and Conistonmere. Lancaster is the county-town.

Lancaster, the county-town of Lancashire, with a market on Saturday. It is governed by a mayor: sends two members to parliament; and is seated on the Lon, which here forms a port for vessels of moderate burden, and over which is a stone bridge of five arches. It has but one church, on the side of a hill, on the summit of which is the castle, serving both as the shire-house, and the county-gaol. On the top of this castle is a square tower, called John of Gaunt's Chair, whence there is a fine prospect of the mountains of Cumberland, and the view toward the sea, extending to the Isle of Man. Five miles from this place is Dunald-Mill-Hole, a cave at the foot of a mountain, into which a large brook runs, after it has driven a mill near its entrance. Some of its vaults are so high, that they resemble the roof of a church, and in other parts so low, that they can be passed only by creeping on the hands and feet. Lancaster carries on a considerable trade, especially to the West Indies; and is noted for the making of mahogany cabinet ware. It is 68 miles S of Carlisle, and 235 N N W of London. Lon. 2 56 W, lat. 54 4

Lancaster, a county of Pennsylvania,

Lancaster, the capital of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania. This town was erected into a borough and incorporated in 1742. In 1800 the inhabitants amounted to 4292, who are principally Germans, or their immediate descendants. The streets are laid out in regular squares, and the buildings are mostly of bricks, some of them handsomely constructed. The principal public edifices, are a large courthouse, market-house and gaol, with six or seven places of religious worship. It is at present the seat of the State government, and has a bank, a college called Franklin college, and a post office. It is situated in the lat. of 40° N and lon. of $76^{\circ} 10'$ W, at the distance of 62 miles W from Philadelphia, and 11 E from Columbia, on the river Susquehanna.

Lancaster, a post town in Grafton county, New Hampshire, on the E side of Connecticut river, 54 miles N E of Haverhill, with 440 inhabitants.

Lancaster, a post town in Worcester county, Massachusetts, 35 miles N W of Boston, and 17 N E of Worcester, with 1584 inhabitants.

Lancerosa, one of the Canary Isles. It is very high, and may be discovered at a great distance. The goats and sheep are pretty plenty, and the valleys produce a little wheat and corn. It is about 15 miles long and 10 broad. Lon. 13 26 W, lat. 29 14 N.

Lanciano, a town of Naples, in Abfuzzo Citeriore, with an archbishop's see. It is seated on the Feltrinn, 87 miles N E of Naples. Lon. 14 50 E, lat. 42 18 N.

Landaff, a small place in Glamorganshire, but honoured with the appellation of a city, on account of its being an episcopal see. It is seated on an ascent, on the river Taaf, near Cardiff; but the cathedral, a large stately building, stands on low ground. It is 30 miles N W of Bristol, and 166 W of London. Lon. 3 10 W, lat. 51 24 N.

Landau, a strong town of Germany, in the palatinate of the Rhine. It was formerly imperial, but was ceded to the French in 1648. It is seated on the Queich, nine miles S of Newstadt, and 270 E of Paris. Lon. 8 12 E, lat. 49 12 N.

Landernau, a town of France, in the department of Finisterre and late province of Bretagne, seated on the Eihoro, 16 miles N E of Brest. Lon. 4 20 W, lat. 48 28 N.

Landes, a department of France, including the late territory of Marsan. It takes its name from a district, called Landes, extending along the coast of the Bay of Biscay. It is a barren sandy country, covered with fern, pines, and the holm-tree, of the bark of which corks are made. Mont-de-Marsan is the capital of this department, and Dox the episcopal see.

Languard Fort seems to belong to S. Hols, but is in the limits of Essex, and has a lovely prospect of the coasts of both counties. It was erected and is maintained for the defence of the port of Harwich over against it; for it commands the entry of it from the sea up the Manning-tree water, and will reach any ship that goes in or out. It is placed on a point of land so surrounded with the sea at high water, that it looks like a little island at least one mile from the shore. The making its foundation solid enough for so good a fortification cost many years labour, and a prodigious expence. It was built in the reign of king James I. when it was a much more considerable fortification than now, having four bastions mounted with 60 very large guns, particularly those on the royal bastion, which would throw a 28 pound ball over Harwich. Here is a small garrison, with a governor, and a platform of guns. This fort is refitted and greatly enlarged for the convenience of the officers of ordnance, engineers, and matrosses; and a barrack built for the soldiers.

Landrecy, a town of France, in the department of the North and late province of Hainault. It was besieged in vain by prince Eugene in 1712. It was taken by the allies, in April 1794; but retaken in July following. It is very well fortified, and seated on the Sambre, 28 miles S W of Maubeuge, and 100 N by E of Paris. Lanerk, a borough in Lanerkschire, seated on the Clyde, 20 miles S E of Glasgow. Lon. 3 49 W, lat. 55 40 N.

Lanerkschire, or Clydesdale; which latter name it has from that river which runs entirely through it from South-east to North-west, and near Lanerk town forms a cataract of 40 feet high. It is bounded on the N by part of Dumbartonshire, Stirlingshire, Linlithgowshire, and Edinburgishire; on the E by Peebleshire and part of Dumfriesshire, on the S by Dumfriesshire, and on the W by Airshire and Renfrewshire. It is near 24 miles where broadest, and about 16 in the narrowest part, and 40 long; and divided into the Uppr and Nether-ward; the one called the shire of Lanerk, and the other the barony of Glasgow; the one hilly, heathy, and fit for pasture; and the other level, and proper for corn. The principal rivers, all of which rise on the same hill, are the Clyde, which runs into the Frith of its own name, and the Annan, both of which run into the Irish Sea: also the Tweed, which falls into the German Ocean: besides which the Firth of Clyde is joined to Firth of Forth by a canal for the benefit of navigation and trade. It abounds with coal and limestone; has some lead mines, and abundance of Lapis Lazuli is dug up here. The chief towns are Hamilton, Lanerk, Rutherglen and Glasgow, the latter of which is the most flourishing town in Scotland, both in manufactures and trade to foreign parts. The manufactures are woollen cloth, shallons, cottons muslins, lawns, gauzes, nails, earthenware, distillery and sugar refining.

sists in corn and wine; it is advantageously seated on a mountain, 77 miles N E of Paris. Lon. 3 43 E, lat. 49 34 N.

Laos, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N by China, on the E by Tonquin and Cochin China, on the S by Cambodia, and on the W by Burmah. This country is full of forests, and abounds in rice, fruits, and fish. The inhabitants are well made, robust, of an olive complexion, and mild; but very superstitious, and much addicted to women. Their principal occupation is tilling the ground and fishing. The king is absolute, and has no other law than his own will: he shows himself but twice a year, and has a large revenue from elephant's teeth found in his dominions. Their religion is much the same as in China. Lancione is the capital.

Lapland, the most northerly country of Europe, extending from the N cape in 71° 30' N lat. to the White Sea under the arctic circle, is inhabited by the same people, though the country is subject to different powers. Norwegian Lapland, under the dominion of Denmark, lies between the northern sea, the river Pais, and the lake Enarak. Swedish Lapland comprehends all the country from the Baltic to the mountains that separate Norway from Sweden. Lapland may be termed a huge congeries of frightful rocks and stupendous mountains; interspersed, however, with many pleasant valleys, watered by an infinite number of rivulets that run into the rivers and lakes, which discharge themselves into the gulf of Bothnia. The names of the principal lakes in Lapland are the Great Uma, the Great Windel, the Oreavon, the Stor-avan, the Great Lula; the lakes of Kartom, Kali, Torno, Enara, and Kimi. Some of these extend 60 leagues in length, and contain a great number of islands: Stor-avan is said to contain 365; and Enora contains an archipelago of islands so large, that no Laplander has lived long enough to visit each particular island. The natives believe this country to be the terrestrial paradise; and indeed nothing could be more enchanting than such vast prospects of mountains, hills, forests, lakes, rivers, &c. if the country was in a moderate climate; though even here, in summer the roses are seen blowing wild on the banks of lakes and rivers, with all the wine; it is advantage-beautiful glow of colour which appears in those cultivated in our gardens.

But all the intervals between the mountains are not engrossed by these agreeable prospects; great part of the flat country is covered with brown dusky forests of fir and pine trees; and these are often skirted by wide extended morasses, the stagnating waters of which in summer produce myriads of mischlevous insects, that are more intolerable than even the cold of winter.
The cold in this country is very intense during the winter, freezing even brandy and the watery part of spirit of wine, if the latter is not highly recti-fied: all the lakes and rivers are frozen to a prodigious thickness; and the whole face of the country is always covered with snow. The heat of summer is almost as intolerable as the cold of winter. At the northern extremity of the country the sun never sets for three months in summer, and in winter there is an uninterrupted night of the same duration; but this is qualified in such a manner by a constant revolution of dawn and twilight, by a serene sky, moon-light, and aurora borealis, reflected from the white surface of the earth covered with snow, that the inhabitants are enabled to hunt, fish, and proceed with their ordinary occupations. The country abounds with excellent springs; and is remarkable for some surprising cataracts, in which the water rumbles over frightful precipices, and dashes among rocks with amazing impetuosity and noise. Its soil is generally so chilled and barren that it produces little or no grain or fruit-trees of any kind. This sterility, however, is not so much owing to the soil, which is in many places of a rich mould, as to want of industry. The Laplanders are very low in stature, and are likewise remarkable for having large heads.
They are also ill shapen, and their features harsh. They are, however, strong, hardy, and robust, inasmuch that they will bear incredible fatigue; and it is remarked that the stoutest Norwegian is not able to bend the bow of a Laplander. The women are much less homely than the men, and many of them are noted for a delicate and florid complexion. These people are simple, honest, hospitable, and timor-ous: their timidity, however, respects war alone; for to many other species of danger they expose themselves with surprising intrepidity, whether in ascending or descending mountains and precipices with their snow shoes and in sledges, or in venturing amidst whirlpools and cataracts in little slender boats made of thin fir-boards, fastened together with thongs of leather, sinews of wild-beasts, or tough and flexible twigs of willow and osier.

These boats are of different sizes, from two to six yards in length, managed with oars, and caulked with moss so tight as to keep out the water. The Laplanders are partly settled, and in part wild and roving: the latter live in tents made with coarse cloth; the former are fixed in small villages near the lakes, and chiefly follow fishing.
The commerce of the Laplanders is more considerable than one would expect in a desert country inhabited by a savage, ignorant people. They export great quantities of fish to the northern parts of Bothnia and White Russia.
They likewise trade with the neighbouring countries of Norway, Sweden, Muscovy, and Finland, by selling reindeer, fine furs, baskets and toys of their own manufacture, dried pikes, and cheese made of the Rein-deer's milk. In return for these commodities they receive rixdollars, woollen cloths, linens, copper, tin, flour, oil, hides, needles, knives, spirituous liquors, tobacco, and other necessaries.

Leeds, a corporate town in the W riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Tuesday and Saturday. It is situate in a vale, which trade has rendered one of the most populous spots in England, and is the principal of the clothing towns in Yorkshire. It is particularly the mart for the coloured and white broad cloths, of which vast quantities are sold in its cloth-halls. Leeds has a manufacture of camlets, which has declined, and a flourishing one of carpets resembling those of Wilts and Scotland. Here are also some mills for the cutting of tobacco, and a great pottery. Within three miles of the town are numerous collieries. Leeds has a magnificent stone bridge over the Aire, which is navigable for boats, that carry much coal from hence to York and Hull. It is 22 miles W S W

Liege. It is four miles N of Liege.

Leesburg, a town of Loudon coun-ty, Virginia; lying four miles S W of the Potomack river, and 43 N W of Washington. It is the principal town of the county; has a post-office, and about 400 inhabitants.

Leestown, a flourishing town of the state of Kentucky, in the county of Fayette, seated on the E bank of the river Kentucky. As the banks of the river are remarkably high, there are few crossing places; and the best being at Leestown is a circumstance which contributes to its increase. It is a few miles W of Lexington. See Leghorn, a strong and considerable city of Italy, in Tuscany. It has one of the most famous harbours in the Mediterranean; and, being a free port its commerce is prodigious. The Jews have a handsome synagogue and schools, the Greeks and Armenians have churches of their own, and no religion is disturbed. The inhabitants are computed at 40,000. The streets are wide and straight, and almost all the houses of the same height.

There are so many canals, that some have given it the title of New Venice.
Near the harbour is a large building, called Li Bagni, in which they shut up every night the Turkish and the galley slaves. At a little distance is a most commodious light house, on a small island, on the top of which there are 32 lamps lighted every night. In 1741, this city suffered greatly by an earthquake. On June 27, 1796, it was entered by a French army; but the British subjects here, with their merchandise, and all their vessels in the harbour, previously departed. It is 10 miles S of Pisa, 45 S W of Florence, and 145 N W of Rome. Lon. 10 17 E, lat. 43 34 N.

Legnago, a fortified town of Italy, in the Veronese. It surrendered to the French, September 13, 1796. It is seated on the Adige, 25 miles S E of Verona.

Leibnitz, a town of Germany, seated on the St. Im.

Leicester, a borough and the county town of Leicestershire, with a market on Saturday. It is a place of great antiquity, but much declined in magnitude and importance. It has five churches, sends two members to parliament, and is governed by a mayor. The combing and spinning of wool into stockings and other articles, is the chief business of this town and neighbourhood. At a parliament held here, in the reign of Henry V. was made the first law for the burning of heretics. In the meadows near the town, are the ruins of an abbey, where Cardinal Wolsey died. Leicester is seated on the Soar, one of the bridges over which called Bow Bridge, was long visited by the lovers of antiquity, on account of its having been the accidental monument over the grave of Richard III. but this bridge fell in 1791. Leicester is 24 miles S by E of Derby, and 99 N N W of London. Lon. 13 W, lat. 52 38 N.

Leicester, a post town of Worcester county, Massachusetts, 7 miles S W of Worcester, and 54 in the same direction from Boston. It contains 1100 inhabitants.

Leicestershire, an inland county of England, in form almost circular. It has Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire to the N; Rutlandshire and Lincolnshire on the E; Warwickshire on the W, from which it is separated by the Roman military way called Watling-street; and by Northamptonshire on the S; and is about 170 miles in circumference. As it lies at a great distance from the sea, and is free from bogs and marshes, the air is sweet and wholesome. It is a champaign country in general, and abundantly fertile in corn and grass, being watered by several rivers, as the Soare, or Sore, which passes through the middle of it, and abounds in excellent salmon and other fish; the Wreke, Trent, Eye, Sense, Aulker, and Avon. These rivers being mostly navigable, greatly facilitate the trade of the county. In some parts there is a great scarcity of fuel, both wood and coal; but in the more hilly parts there is plenty of both, together with great flocks of sheep. Besides wheat, barley, oats, and peas, it produces the best beans in England. They grow so tall and luxuriant in some places, particularly about Barton in the Beans, that they look towards the harvest-time, like a forest; and the inhabitants eat them not only when they are green, as in other places but all the year round; for which reason their neighbours nickname them bean-bellies. They have plenty of very good wool, of which they not only make great quantities of stockings, but send a great quantity unmanufactured into other parts of England. They make great profit of their corn and pulse; and likewise breed great numbers of coach and dray horses, most of the gentlemen being graziers; and it is not uncommon to rent grass farms from 500*l.* to 2000*l.* a year. It is in the midland circuit, and diocese of Lincoln, and sends four members to parliament, two for Leicester, and two for the county.

Leigh, a seaport in Essex, on a creek at the mouth of the Thames, noted for oysters. It has a good road for shipping, and is 18 miles S S E of Chelmsford, and 40 E of London. Lon. 0 42 E, lat. 51 31 N.

Leigh, a town in Lancashire, seven miles N N E of Warrington, and 191 N W of London.

Leinster, the eastern province of Ireland, bounded by Ulster on the N; St.
Georges's, or the Irish Channel, on the E and S; and by the provinces of Connaught and Munster on the W. The capital city of this province and of the kingdom is Dublin. It contains 12 counties, viz. Carlow, Dublin, Kildare, Kilkenny, King's-county, Longford, Louth, Meath, Queen's-county, Westmeath, Wexford, and Wicklow. It is the most level and best cultivated province in the kingdom; containing 2,642,958 Irish plantation acres, 858 parishes, 99 baronies, and 53 boroughs; it is about 124 miles long and 74 broad, and extends from 51° 45' to 55° 45' N latitude. This province gives title of Duke to the ancient and noble family of Fitzgerald. In the early ages, this district was almost one continued forest, and was principally the seat of the Kinselaghs.

Leipsic, a large strong and populous town of Misnia in Germany, with a castle, and a famous university.
It is neat, and regularly built, and the streets are lighted in the night; it carries on a great trade, and has a right to stop and sell the merchandises designed to pass through it, and the country for 75 miles round has the same privilege. The townhouse makes an indifferent appearance, but the exchange is a fine structure.
The town was taken by the king of Prussia, but given up by the peace in 1763. It is seated in a plain between the river Saale and Muld, near the confluence of the Playsse, the Elster, and the Bardc.

Leith, a seaport in Edinburghshire, on the frith of Forth, two miles N of Edinburgh, of which it is the port. It is large and populous, and being situate on both sides of the harbour, is divided into North and South Leith. The harbour is secured by a noble stone pier, at the mouth of a little river, called the Water of Leith; and is accommodated with an elegant draw bridge and a good quay. The commerce of Leith is very considerable; and the vessels employed in the London trade are, in general, of a large size; but the largest ships are those employed in the Greenland whale fishery. To Germany, Holland, and the Baltic, are exported lead, glass ware, linen, woollen stuffs, and a variety other goods; as also to the other countries of Europe, the W Indias, and America. Ships of great size are built at this port; and here are several extensive ropewalks. There are also flourishing manufactures of bottle-glass, window-glass, and crystal: a great carpet manufacture, a soap-work, and some iron forges. There are three churches in Leith, and an ancient hospital for disabled seamen. Lon. 3 7

Leitrim, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, bounded on the N by Donegal Bay, on the NE by Fermanah, on the E by Cavan; by Longford on the S E, Roscommon on the S W, and Sligo on the W. It is 42 miles long, and 17 broad; is a fertile country, and, though mountainous, produces great herds of black cattle, but contains few places of note. It contains 21 parishes, and sends six members to parliament.

Leitrim, the county town of Leitrim, in Ireland pleasantly situated on the river Shannon, 80 miles from Dublin and appears to have been formerly a place of some note. Lon. 8 30 W, lat.

Leixslip, a town of Ireland, in the county of Kildare seated on the Liffey.
It has a noble castle, with large gardens, on one side of which is a fine water-fall, called the salmon leap.
Near it are the ruins of the church and castle of Confy. Leixslip is eight miles W of Dublin.

Lemberg, or Leopold, a large commercial city of Poland, capital of the palatinate of Red Russia, and now of the Austrian kingdoms of Galicia and Lodomeria. It is well fortified, and defended by two citadels, one of which is on an eminence without the city.
The square, churches and public buildings, are magnificent. It has a Roman catholic archbishop, and an Armenian and Russian bishop. It is seated on Lepanto, a strong and very considerable town of Turkey, in Europe, and in Livadia, with an archbishop's see, and a strong fort. It is built on the top of a mountain, in form of a suggar-loaf, and is divided into four towns, surrounded by as many walls, and commanded by a castle, on the top of the mountain. The harbour is very small, and may be shut up with a chain; the entrance being but 50 feet wide. It was taken by the Venetians from the Turks, in 1687, but was afterwards evacuated, and the castle of Bomeli demolished by the Venetians, in 1699, in consequence of the treaty of Carlowitz. It was near this town that don John of Austria, obtained the famous victory over the Turkish fleet in 1571.

The produce of the adjacent country is wine, oil, corn, rice, Turkey-leather, and tobacco. The wine would be exceeding good if they did not pitch their vessels on the inside, which renders the taste very disagreeable to the Turks who are not used to it. The Turks have six or seven mosques here, and the Greeks two churches. It is Lestac, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Pyrenees and late province of Gascony, lately a bishop's see. It is seated on a hill, three miles N W of Pau, and 42 S E of Bayonne. Lon. 0 7 W, lat. 43 17 N.

Lesguis, one of the seven Caucasian nations, between the Black Sea and the Caspian. Their country is indifferently called by the Georgians, Lesquistan, or Daghestan. It is bounded on the S and E by Persia and the Caspian; on the S W and W by Georgia, the Ossi, and Kisti; and on the N by the Kisti and Tartar tribes. It is divided into a variety of districts, generally independent, and governed by chiefs elected by the people. The Lesguis are supposed to be descended from the tribes of mountaineers, known to ancient geographers under the name of Lesgæ or Ligyes. The strength of their country which is a region of mountains whose passes are known only to themselves, has probably, at all times, secured them from foreign invasion. They subsist by raising cattle, and by predatory expeditions into the countries of their more wealthy neighbours. During the troubles in Persia, toward the beginning of this century, they repeatedly sacked the towns of Shamachie and Ardebil, and ravaged the neighbouring districts. In their persons and dress, and general habits of life, as far as these are known to us, they greatly resemble the Circassians.

Leskeard, a borough in Cornwall, with a market on Saturday. It had formerly a castle, now in ruins, and is one of the coinage towns for tin. It sends two members to parliament, and has a considerable manufacture of yarn, which is chiefly disposed of at Exeter. It is 31 miles E N E of Truro, and 22 1/2 W by S of London. Lon. 4 36 W, lat. 50 27 N.

Lesparc, a town of France, in the department of Gironde and late province of Guienne. In the environs of which are found transparent pebbles, resembling the false diamonds of Alençon, and known by the name of cailloux de medoc, medoc stones. It is 30 miles N N W of Bourdeaux.

Lessines, a town of the Austrian Netherlands in Hainault, seated on the Dender, famous for its linen manufacture. It is six miles N E of Ath, and 28 S W of Brussels. Lon. 3 46 W, lat. 51 40 N.

Leistoff or Leostoff, a town of Suffolk, with a market on Wednesday. This town consists of 500 houses, and the coast is very dangerous to strangers. It is 7 miles S of Yarmouth and 115 N E of London. Lon. 1 45 E, lat. 52 37 N.

Leiwithiel, a borough in Cornwall, with a market on Friday. It is seated in a vale on the Fowey not far from its fall into Fowey Haven. Formerly ships came as far as the town; but the channel is now stopped up. Here is a woollen manufacture; and it is one of the tin coinage towns. It is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. Leiwithiel is 19 miles W N W of Plymouth, and 250 W by S of London. Lon. 4 48 W, lat. 50 27 N.

Lettere, a commercial town of Italy in the kingdom of Naples, in principato Citeriore, with a bishop's see. It is seated at the back of a mountain, 12 miles N W of Salerno, and 20 S E of Naples.

Levant. This word properly signifies the East; but it is generally used, when speaking of trade, for Turkey in Asia; comprehending Natolia, Syria, Palestine, Egypt, the island of Candia, and the adjacent parts. The Levant Sea means the E part of the Mediterranean Sea.

Levantine Valley, a valley of Switzerland, on the confines of Italy, lying between mount St. Gothard and the lake Maggiore. The lower part is populous, rich in pasturage, and produces much hemp and flax. It is a bailiwick, subject to the canton of Uri; and Ossogna, the residence of the bailiff, consists only of a few houses.

Leucate, a town of France, in the department of Aude and late province of Languedoc, seated near a lake of the same name, 18 miles S of Narbonne. Lon. 3 9 E, lat. 43 0 N.

Leuchsternberg, a town of Germany, in the upper palatinate of Bavaria, seated on a mountain, near the river Esreimpt, 50 miles N W of Ratisbon. Lon. 12 26 E, lat. 49 40 N.

Uverne, Loch, a beautiful lake in Kinrosshire, 12 miles in circumference, and somewhat of a circular form. It has several small islands, on one of which is a ruinous castle. Here the unfortunate Mary queen of Scots was confined by the confederate lords, after the murder of her husband lord Darnley, and her marriage with Bothwell. This lake produces trout of peculiar excellence; of which great quantities at certain seasons, are sent to the Edinburgh markets. In autumn, a singular species called the gully trout, is here salted and dried for winter provisions.

Uverne, a river in Dumbartonshire, which issues from Loch Lomond; and, after a meandering course through a delightful vale, enters the estuary of the Clyde, below Dumbarton. This river is the subject of a beautiful ode by Dr. Smollet, and on the W side of it is a pillar erected to his memory.

Uverne, a village of France, in the department of Upper Saone, and late province of Franche Comté, lying to the E of Vesoul. Here is a cavern 35 paces deep, and 60 wide, which serves as a barometer to all the country people. A fog, at the entrance of this glacier, is an infallible sign of rain the next day. From the roof, which is 50 feet high, descend columns of ice, of a prodigious size. The brook which runs through a part of this grotto, is frozen in summer, but flows in winter.

Uverne, a town of Switzerland, in the Upper Vallais, seated on an eminence, near the Rhone. It is one of the independent commonwealths of the Upper Vallais, and is remarkable for its natural strength, and its springs, whose water is so hot, that it will boil an egg, and is much frequented in the summer, on account of these springs, which nearly resemble those of Bath; but the accommodations are inconvenient. Lon. 7 39 E, lat. 46 12 N.

Uverne, a town of France, in the department of Indre and late province of Berry, with a castle, 35 miles S W of Bourges. Lon. 1 40 E, lat. 47 0 N.

Leutmeritz, a town of Bohemia, capital of a circle of the same name, with a bishop's see; seated on the Elbe, 30 miles N W of Prague, and 40 S E of Dresden. Lon. 14 30 E, lat. 50 31 N.

Leutnühl, a town of Germany, in Bohemia in the circle of Chrudim, 22 miles E of Chrudim and 72 from Prague.

Leutsch, a town of Germany in the duchy of Carniola.

Lewariden, a populous and strong town of the United Provinces, capital of Friesland. The buildings, as well public as private, are magnificent. It has several canals in the streets, which are a great assistance to its trade; which is very considerable, especially as they are continued not only to the sea, but to the most considerable towns in the province. It is 27 miles W of Groningen, and 65 N by E of Amsterdam. Lon. 5 32 E, lat. 53 11 N.

Lewenstein, a town of Germany in the circle of Franconia, capital of a county of the same name, with a fortress, 10 miles E of Hailbron. Lon. 9 38 E, lat. 49 18 N.

Lewentz, a town of Upper Hungary, in the county of Gran, and on a river of the same name, where the Turks were defeated in 1644. It is ten miles N of Gran. Lon. 18 31 E, lat. 48 21 N.

Lewes, a borough in Sussex, with a market on Saturday. It contains six parish churches, and is seated on the Ouse, which is navigable here for barges. The assizes are sometimes held here; and it sends two members to parliament. Lewes is situated at the edge of the South Downs, on the declivity of a hill, on which are the remains of an ancient castle, and contains 1500 houses and about 6200 inhabitants. It is 30 miles E of Chichester, and 49 S of London. Lon. 0 5 E, lat. 50 55 N.

Lewis, one of the largest of the Hebrides or western islands of Scotland, extending about 60 miles in length from N to S, and from 13 to 14 in breadth, consisting of a great number of isles and rocks, and parted by the sea into two divisions, called Lewis and Harris, the former lying to the westward of the other. The air is temperately cold, moist and healthy; great part of the low ground is flooded with lakes; the rest is arable in many places, and has been counted fruitful in oats, barley, rye, flax, and hemp. The inhabitants of Lewis are well proportioned, tall, fair, sanguine, strong, and healthy. They are in general sober, circumspect, and hospitable; dexterous in shooting, swimming, and leaping; bold and skilful mariners; and so temperate, that they will tug at the oar all day, without any other provision than bread and water, with a snush of tobacco.

Lewis, a town of the Netherlands in Brabant. It is seated on a morass 10 miles from Louvain. Lon. 4 10 E, lat. 50 50 N.

Lewistown, a post town in Lincoln county, Maine, lying on the E side of Andracoggin river, about 13 miles above its junction with the Kennebeck.

Lewistown, a post town, the capital of Sussex county, Delaware; situated on Lewis creek, about three miles from the light house at Cape Henlopen. It is inhabited principally by pilots, and supports a small coasting trade. It lies in the lat. of 38 25 N, and lon. of 75 10 W, about 113 S of Philadelphia.

Lewistown, a post town, and capital of Mifflin county, Pennsylvania; situated on the N side of Juniata river, 55 miles N W of Harrisburg, and 162 of Philadelphia; containing about 600 inhabitants.

Lewisburg, a town of North America and capital of the island of Cape Breton. It was ceded to the English by the peace of 1763. The fortifications are now demolished. Lon. 61 30 W, lat. 46 50 N.

Lewisham, a village in Kent, on the river Ravenshourn, five miles S E of London, with an elegant church.

Lexington, a town of North America, capital of the state of Kentucky, and county of Fayette. Near this town are to be seen curious sepulchres, full of human skeletons, which are thus fabricated. First on the ground are laid large broad stones; on these are placed the bodies, separated from each other by broad stones, covered with others, which served as a basis for the next arrangement of bodies. In this order they are built without mortar, growing still narrower to the height of a man. This method of burying appears to be totally different from that now practised by the Indians. In the neighbourhood of Lexington are also to be seen the remains of two ancient fortifications, with ditches and bastions; one containing about six acres of land, and the other nearly three. Pieces of earthen vessels have also been ploughed up near Lexington; a manufacture with which the Indians were never acquainted. These, with the fortifications, and the sepulchres, have been urged as an argument, that this country was formerly inhabited by a people different from the present Indians, and further advanced than they in the arts of life; and Mr. Filson, in his account of this country, has advanced arguments to prove, that these people were, in all probability, an ancient colony from Wales. Lexington stands at the head of the river Elkhorn, 470 miles W of Washington, and 26 S E of Frankfort. Lon. 85 10 W, lat. 38 20 N.

Lexington, a town of North America in Massachusetts. Here hostilities were first commenced between Britain and America, April 1775.

Leyden, a city of the United Provinces in Holland, four miles and a half in circumference. In this city are said to be eight gates, 24 canals, 50 islands, 180 streets, and 145 bridges, the greatest part built of freestone. The principal church is a superb structure, whose high roof is supported by three rows of columns; and the rest of the public buildings are very handsome. There are several large hospitals, and a university, which has generally 2000 students, though there are but two colleges; for the scholars board in the town, and have no dress to distinguish them. The school is a large pile of brick building; three stories high; in the uppermoat of which the famous Elzevir had his printing-office; contiguous to these is the physic-garden, where the professor reads lectures in botany. The library contains curious manuscripts; and the theatre for anatomy is one of the finest in Europe. Here were manufactures of the best cloths and stuffs in Holland which are now much decayed. Leyden is famous for the long siege it sustained in 1573, against the Spaniards. It is seated near the ancient bed of the Rhine, four miles E of the German Ocean, and 20 S W of Amsterdam. Lon. 4 33 E, lat. 51 10 N.

Leyna, a river of Germany, which rising in the confines of Hesse, runs N and falls into the Allert at Batmar.

Leyte, one of the Philippine islands, with ditches and basins about six acres each other nearly three. Several vessels have also been sent up near Lexington; with which the Indians are maintained. These, with the sepulchres, and the sepulchres, as an argument, that the island was formerly inhabited by the Indians from the present Indians advanced than they were. Mr. Filson, in this country, has added to prove, that these are all probably, an ancient Wales. Lexington is a town on the river Elk, 14 miles W of Washington, and 10 miles S of Fort. Lon. 85 10 W,

There are several hospitals, and a university, which has generally 2000 students. There are but two colleges, the board in the school is so dress to distinguish the school is a large pile of three stories high; in which the famous printing-office; contiguous to the physic-garden, where the lectures in botany are given. The curious manufactory of anatomy is in Europe. Here were the best cloths and which are now much in demand. It is famous for the stained in 1573, against the city. It is seated near the Rhine, four miles E of the Ocean, and 20 S W of London. Lon. 4 33 E, lat. 51 10 N. It is a town of Germany, which is in the landgraviate of Hesse, runs N E to Allert at Batmar. The Philippine islands, in the East Indies, about 40 leagues in length, and 95 in circumference. Its soil, on the E side, is very fertile; but there are very high mountains that cut it almost through the middle from E to W, and occasion so great an alteration in the air, that when the inhabitants of one part of the island reap, the others sow, and they have two plentiful harvests in the year, to which the rivers descending from the above mentioned mountains not a little contribute. The island contains 9000 inhabitants, who pay tribute to the Spaniards, in rice, wax, and quilts. Lon. 118 0 E, lat. 11 0 N.

Lezina, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, in Caputana, seated on a bay of the gulf of Venice, 75 miles N E of Naples. Lon. 15 14 E, lat. 41 44 N.

Libanus, mountains of Turkey in Asia, which lie between Syria and Palestine, extending from W to E from the Mediterranean sea as far as Arabia. The summits of these mountains are so high that they are always covered with snow; but below are very fruitful vallies. They were formerly famous for the great number of cedar-trees; but now scarcely any remain. Geographers distinguish them into Libanus and Anti-Libanus: the latter lies on the S side of the valley, rising near the ruins of Sidon, and terminates at others in Arabia, in lat. 34. They are separated from each other at an equal distance throughout, and form a country called by the ancients Calosyria.

Libau, a seaport of Courland, on the Baltic with a harbour. It is 35 miles N of Memel. Lon. 21 40 E, lat. 56 31 N.

Liberty, a post town in Bedford county, Virginia, 15 miles N W of New London, and 35 S E of Fincastle.

Libertytown, a small town in Frederick county, Maryland, 13 miles N E of Fredericktown, and 32 N W of Washington. Here is a post office.

Libourne, a small well built town of France, in the department of Gironde and late province of Guienne. It is one of the staples of commerce of Bourdeaux, and is seated on the Dordogne 20 miles N F of Bourdeaux, and 205 S W of Paris. Lon. 0 12 W, lat. 44 58 N.

Lich, or Licha, a town of Germany, in the landgraviate of Hesse, and county of Solms, 18 miles N of Francfort. Lon. 8 24 E, lat. 50 15 N.

Lichfeld, a city in Staffordshire, with a market on Tuesday and Saturday. It was, in the time of the Saxons, an archbishopric, but is now a county of itself, and unites with Coventry in forming one episcopal see. It has three parish churches, besides the cathedral, a freeschool, and two hospitals. Lichfield sends two members to parliament, and is divided by a little river that runs through it, over which are two causeways with sluices. It is seated in a fine champaign country, 14 miles S E of Stafford, and 119 N W of London. Lon. 144 W, lat. 52 54 N.

Lichtall, a handsome town of Germany, in the bishopric of Basle Lichtallen, or Liestal, a town of Swisserland in the county of Basle. It is seated on the Ergetz, eight miles S E of Basle. Lon. 7 39 E, lat. 47 29 N.

Lichtenau, a town of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, nine miles from Paderborn. Lon. 8 23 E, lat. 51 52 N.

Lichtenau, a town of Germany, in Hesse Cassel. It is 24 miles from Naumburg. Lon. 9 28 E, lat. 51 1 N.

Lichtenau, a fortress of Franconia, seated on the Revel. It is subject to the city of Nuremberg, and is 17 miles from that city. Lon. 11 12 E, lat. 49 10 N.

Lichtenberg, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, the vicinity of which abounds with quarries of marble and mines of iron and other metals. Lon. 11 41 E, lat. 50 16 N.

Lichtenberg, a castle of France, in the department of Lower Rhine and late province of Alsace, seated on a rock, near the Vosges mountains, and looked upon as impregnable. It is 12 miles N N W of Haguenau. Lon. 7 45 E, lat. 48 55 N.

Lichtenburg, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, in the margravate of Cullembach, 20 miles N E of Cullembach. Lon. 12 2 E, lat. 50 25 N.

Lichtenfels, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and bishopric of Bamberg, seated on the Main, 15 miles N E of Bamberg. Lon. 11 10 E, lat. 50 20 N.

Lichtensteig, a handsome town of Swisserland, the capital of the county of Tockenburgh. It is seated on the Thur, 31 miles E of Zurich. Lon. 9 8 E, lat. 47 15 N.

Lichtenstein, a castle of Germany, in the archduchy of Austria, in the neighbourhood of Vienna.

Licola, a lake in the Kingdom of Naples, formerly famous for plenty of excellent fish; but, in 1538, an explosion of a volcano, changed one part of it into a mountain of ashes, and the other into a morass. It was anciently known by the name of the Lucrine Lake.

Lilja, a town of Lithuania Proper, in the palatinate of Wilna, situated on the Desta, 56 miles S of Wilna. Lon. 25 34 E, lat. 53 30 N.

Lidd, a town of Kent, with a market on Thursday, one of the Cinque Ports. It is 26 miles from Canterbury, and 74 from London. Lon. 0 56 E, lat. 50 58 N.

Lid, a river in Roxburghshire, abounding in fish. It is the only one in that county that flows southward, and falls into Sulway Frith, near the mouth of the Esk.

Lidisdale, a district in Roxburghshire, comprehending the whole southern angle of that county. It admits of little cultivation, and is chiefly employed in pasture.

Lidford, a village of Devonshire, on the river Lid, seven miles N of Tavistock. It was once a famous town, with a castle; and though now a contemptible village, its parish may compare for lands and liberties with any in the kingdom, the whole forest of Dartmoor being in the verge of it. The bridge is thrown over a part of the river that is pent between two high rocks; and near it is a fine cataract.

Lieffinstock, a fortress of Dutch Flanders, eight miles from Antwerp. Lon. 4 10 E, lat. 51 30 N.

Liege, a bishopric of Westphalia, bounded on the N by Brabant and Guelderland, on the E by the dutchies of Limburg and Juliers, on the S by Luxemburg and the Ardennes, and on the W by Brabant and the county of Namur. It is fruitful in corn and fruits, and contains mines of iron, lead, and coal, besides quarries of marble. The bishop is elected by the chapter composed of 60 canons; and he is one of the most considerable ecclesiastical princes of Germany, and has an annual revenue of 300,000 ducats.

Liege, an ancient populous, and large city of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, capital of a bishopric of the same name with a castle. Here the river Maese is divided into three branches, which after having passed through the city under several bridges, unite again. Liege is four miles in circumference, and has 150 streets, and 16 gates; it has also ten large suburbs, in which are a great number of religious houses and churches; which last, with those in the city, make ten in all. The cathedral contains many relics; and the other public structures are the bishop's palace, the town house and the arsenal; here is also a famous university, and a convent of English nuns. It is commonly said of this city, that it is the Hell of Women, because they are obliged to live a laborious life, the purgatory of men, because they are almost all governed by their wives, and the paradise of Monks, because of their rich benefices. At this place is made a great quantity of fire-arms, which are exported to different countries. It was bombarded in 1691, and delivered up to the French in 1701. The allies retook it in 1702, and the French besieged it again in 1703, but were obliged to raise the siege, on the approach of the duke of Marlborough. In 1734, a fire happened here, which consumed the bishop's palace, with all the furniture and writings. In 1789, the inhabitants having complained of the oppression which they experienced under the government of their bishop, at last insisted upon a charter of privileges. As the bishop and chapter did not comply with their demands, they had recourse to arms; and the bishop apprehensive for his safety, left the city and appealed to the imperial chamber of Wetzlar. That chamber issued decrees in his favour: the king of Prussia in 1790, seemed to act as a mediator for the citizens: the sentences, however issued by the imperial chamber against the insurgents, were followed by requisitorial letters, addressed to the government of the Austrian Netherlands, desiring that his imperial majesty's troops would assist those of the electoral princes, in enforcing their decrees: in consequence of which, the Austrians entered Liege in 1791, restored the old magistracy that had been expelled to their functions, and reinstated the bishop and chapter. In 1792, the French took the city, and effected another revolution: but being driven thence, in 1793, the citizens were once more obliged to submit. Liege is 15 miles

Lieou-Kieou, the general name of a group of islands, 36 in number, lying between Corea, Formosa, and Japan.
These islands form a powerful and extensive empire, the inhabitants of which are civilized, and ought not to be confounded with other savage nations dispersed throughout the islands of Asia. The largest and principal is called Lieou-kieou, the rest have each a particular name. The largest island extends 120 miles from N to S, and 33 from E to W. Their king is tributary to China.

Mons. Lon. 3 45 E, lat. 50 35 N.

Lignieres, a town of France, in the department of Cher, and late province of Berry, surrounded with walls, towers, and ditches, 22 miles S S W of Bourges. Lon. 2 24 E, lat. 46 47 N.

Lignitz, a town of Germany, in Silesia, capital of a principality of the same name, with a castle, seated on the rivulet Cet, 30 miles S of Glogaw. Lon.
16 36 E, lat. 51 10 N.

Ligny, a handsome town of France, in the department of Meuse and late dutchy of Bai, with a castle, a collegiate church, and a handsome park. It is seated on the Orney, eight miles S E of Bar-le-Duc and 125 of Paris. Lon.
5 26 E, lat. 48 39 N.

Ligon, a seaport in the peninsula of Malacca, capital of a small territory of the same name, with a magazine belonging to the Dutch East India Company. It is seated on the E coast. Lon.
100 5 E, lat. 7 40 N.

Ligueil, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire and late province of Touraine, seated on a brook, in a very fertile country, 23 miles S S E of Tours. Lon. 0 52 E,
lat. 47 3 N.

Lillers, a town of France, in the department of the Straits of Calais and late province of Artois, whose fortifications are demolished. It is seated on the Navez, 17 miles N W of Arras.
Lon. 2 35 E, lat. 50 30 N.

Lillo, a fort of Dutch Brabant, on the E side of the Scheldt, seven miles N of Antwerp. It was taken in 1793, by the French, who soon after evacuated it, retaking it, however, in 1794.

Lima, a city, capital of Peru, with an archbishop's see, and a university.
It gives its name to the principal audience of Peru, and is surrounded by brick walls, with ramparts and bas-tions. The streets are handsome and as straight as a line: the houses are generally only one story high, on account of the earthquakes, with long galleries in the front. One part of the roofs is covered with coarse linen cloth, and the others only with reeds, which is not inconvenient, because it never rains here; but the rich inhabitants cover theirs with fine mats, or beautiful cotton cloths. There are trees planted all round their houses, to keep off the heat of the sun. What the houses want in height they have in length and depth; for some of them are 200 feet long, and proportionably broad, so that they have 10 or 12 large apartments on the ground floor. The river which crosses Lima forms canals in the streets, which ran to most of the houses, and serve to water their gardens, &c. The churches and convents are all extremely rich; and many images of the saints are of massy gold, adorned with jewels. The city is four miles in length and two in breadth, and is divided into eight parishes, containing only 28000 inhabitants, 9000 of whom are Spaniards. It is the seat of the viceroy, and contains several courts, as that of the viceroy, of the archbishop, of the inquisition, of the crusado, and of the wills. Earthquakes are very frequent, and some have done the city much damage, particularly that in 1746, by which it was almost destroyed, and if it was not for this it would be a perfect paradise. The inhabitants are so rich, that when the viceroy, sent from Spain, in 1682, made his public entrance into this city, they paved the streets he was to pass through with ingots of silver. They are also very debauched, but, at the same time, extremely superstitious; and they have a strong belief in the power of charms, about a fourth of the inhabitants are monks or nuns. Lima is 800 miles S of Quito. Lon. 7^h 44 W, lat. 12 1 S.

L I M

Lima, an audience of Peru, lying on the Pacific Ocean, bounded on the N by the audience of Quito, on the E by the Andes, on the S by the audience of Los Charcos, and on the W by the Pacific Ocean.

Limale, a town of Austrian Brabant, seated on the river Dyle, 13 miles S E of Brussels. Lon. 4 30 E, lat. 50 45 N.

Limavady, a town of Ireland. See Newtown Limavady.

Limbourg, or Limpurg, a town of Germany in the electorate of Treves, seated on the Lahn, 10 miles E of Nassau, and 20 N of Mentz. Lon. 7 51 E, lat. 50 24 N.

Limburg, a fertile province of the Netherlands, bounded on the N by the dutchy of Juliers, on the E by that dutchy and the territory of Aix-la-Chapelle, and on the S and W by the bishopric of Liege, from which it is separated by the Maese. It is 42 miles long, and 30 broad, and contains some of the best iron mines in the Netherlands, and the soil is good for corn, &c. It belongs in part to the Dutch and Austrians.

L I M

Limburg, the capital of Austrian Limburg. Here is a manufacture of woollen cloths, and it is famous for excellent cheese. It is seated on a mountain, almost inaccessible, near the river Verse, 15 miles S E of Liege. Lon. 6 5 E, lat. 50 38 N.

Lime, a town in Dorsetshire. See Lyme Regis.

Lime, or Limen, a village in Kent, three miles W of Hithe. It was formerly a port, till choked up by the sands, and is now a poor town. Here was formerly a castle, now converted into a farm-house.

Limerick, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, 48 miles long and 23 broad; bounded on the N by Shannon, on the W by Kerry; on the S by Cork, and on the E by Tipperary. It contains 130 parishes, and sent eight members to parliament before the Irish union. It is a fertile country, and well inhabited, though the W parts are mountainous.

Limerick, or Lough Meath, a city of Ireland, in the county of Limerick, and the metropolis of the province of Munster. Within a century, it was reckoned the second city in the kingdom; at present it has lost its rank; not because it flourishes less, but because Cork flourishes more. It is still a commercial and populous place; and consists of the Irish and English Town; the latter situate on King's island, formed by the Shannon. Limerick is three miles in circumference, and has a market on Wednesday and Saturday. The linen, woollen, and paper manufactures are carried on here to a great extent; and the export of provisions is very considerable. Here are many hospitals, and some handsome public structures, besides the cathedral and other churches. Ardferit and Aghadoc, in the county of Kerry, are united to the bishopric of Limerick. It was besieged by King William in 1690; and in 1691, the garrison surrendered on a very honourable capitulation. It is 40 miles S of Galway, and 94 S W of Dublin. Lon. 8 34 W, lat. 52 42 N.

Limerick, a post town in York county, Maine, about 12 miles W of the river Saco, and has about 800 inhabitants.

Limoges, an ancient and considerable town of France, capital of the department of Upper Vienne and late territory of Limosin, with a bishop's see. It is a trading place, and its horses are in great esteem. It is seated on the Vienne, 50 miles N E of Perignex, and 110 E of Bourdeaux. Lon. 1 20 E,
lat. 45 50 N.

Limousin, a late province of France, bounded on the N by Marche and the E by Auvergne, on the S by Querci, and on the W by Perigord and Angoumois. It is covered with forests of chestnut-trees, and contains mines of lead, copper, tin, and iron; but the principal trade consists in cattle and horses. It now forms the department of Upper Vienna.

Limoux, a populous and commercial town of France, in the department of Aude and late province of Languedoc.
It has a manufacture of cloth; and its environs produce excellent white wine.
It is seated on the Aude, 37 miles W by S of Narbonne, and 50 S E of Toulouse. Lon. 2 16 E, lat. 43 4 N.

Limpurg. See Limbourg.

Linche, or Linke, a strong town of France, in the department of the North and late province of French Flanders, seated on a river, 15 miles S W of Dunkirk. Lon. 2 20 E, lat. 51 0 N.

Lincoln, the capital of Lincolnshire, with a market on Friday. It is seated on the side of a steep hill, on the Witham, which here divides into three streams. It had formerly 50 churches now reduced to 13, besides the cathedral. It is a bishop's see whose diocese is the largest in England. The cathedral is one of the most superb structures of that kind in England, and its great bell, requires 12 men to ring it. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament.
The chief trade is in coal brought by the Trent and Fossdike; and oats and wool, which are sent by the Witham, and there is also a small manufacture of camlets. It is 32 miles N E of Nottingham, and 133 N of London. Lon.
0 25 W, lat. 53 15 N.

Lincolnshire, a county of England, bounded on the N by the Humber which divides it from Yorkshire; on the E by the German Ocean; on the S E by the Wash and part of Norfolk; on the S by Cambridge and Northamptonshire; on the S W by Rutland-shire; and on the W by the counties of Leicester and Nottingham. It is 77 miles from N to S, and 45 in breadth, where widest. It is divided into three parts; namely, Holland on the S E, Kesteven on the S W, and Lindsey on the N. It contains 30 hundreds, one city, 31 market-towns, and 630 parishes; and sends 12 members to parliament. Its principal rivers are the Humber, Trent, Witham, and Welland.

The air is unwholesome and foggy, on account of the fens and large marshes.
The soil of the N and W parts is very fertile, and abounds in corn and pastures. The E and S parts are not so proper for corn, but then they supply them with fish and fowl in great plenty, particularly ducks and geese. Lincoln is the principal town. It is in many places, very rich, the inland part producing corn in great plenty, and the fens cole-seed, and very rich pastures; whence their breed of cattle is larger than that of any other county in England, except Somersetshire.

Lincolnton, the principal town of Lincoln county, North Carolina. It has a post office, and is situated 45 miles S E of Morgantown, and about the same distance S W of Salisbury in Rowan county.

Lincolnton, the capital of Lincoln county, Georgia; situated on the W side of Savannah river, 29 miles N W of Augusta, in Richmond county.

see. It is seated on the lake Wenner, 12 miles N W of Skar, and 83 S W of Stockholm. Lon. 13 5 E, lat. 58 25 N.

Lindau, a free imperial town of Germany, in the circle of Suabia. Here is a celebrated abbey of canons, whose abbess is a princess of the empire, and a Roman Catholic, though the inhabitants of the town are Protestants.
It is a trading place, seated on an island of the lake of Constance, 12 miles S E of Buchoro, and 75 S by W of Augsburg. It surrendered to the French in 1796. Lon. 9 50 E, lat. 47 38 N.

Lindsey, the largest of the three principal divisions of Lincolnshire, including all the county that lies N of Lincoln, and the Fossdike, which Henry I. cut between the Witham and the Trent. It is the most elevated part of the country; and the air is generally esteemed healthy, especially on the W side. To the N E is a large tract of heathy land, called the Wolds, the S part of which is well inhabited, but the N is thin of people: great flocks of sheep are bred throughout this tract. See Axholm.

Lingen, a strong town of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, capital of a county of the same name. It belongs to the king of Prussia, and is seated on the river Embs, 30 miles W of Osnaburg, and 37 N of Munster. Lon. 7 30 E, lat. 52 32 N.

Lin-kiang-fou, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-si, seated on the river Yu-ho. It has four cities of the third class in its district: but it is so much deserted that the Chinese say one hog would maintain the city two days. One of its villages being the general mart for all the drugs sold in the empire, makes it of some note. It is 410 miles N by E of Canton.

Lin-tsin-tcheou, a city of China, in the province of Chan-tong, seated on the Great Canal. It is much frequented by vessels, and may be called a general magazine for every kind of merchandise. Among the edifices admired here, is an octagonal tower, divided into eight stories, the walls of which are covered on the outside with porcelain, loaded with various figures neatly executed; a stair-case, constructed from which there are passages that lead into magnificent galleries, ornamented with gilt balustrades.

Linlithgow, a borough, the county-town of Linlithgowshire. It stands on a rising ground, overlooking a lake at its E end. Here the kings of Scotland had one of their noblest palaces, now in ruins; but here is still shown the room in which Mary queen of Scots was born. Linlithgow is 16 miles W of Edinburgh. Lon. 3 34 W, lat. 56 0 N.

Linlithgowshire, or West Lothian, is bounded on the N by the Frith of Forth; on the E and S E by Mid Lothian; on the S W by Lanerksire; and on the W by Stirlingshire; extending about 14 miles in length, and 13 in breadth. In general it is pleasant, abounding with corn and pastures, and producing coals, limestone, iron and salt; with plenty of fish from the rivers and Frith. It has a manufacture of linen, and the water of a lake near Linlithgow is remarkable for bleaching. In this county Adrian or Severus's wall began, which extended across this part of Scotland.

Linosia, an island of the Mediterranean, on the coast of Africa, 12 miles from Lampedosa, and 12 miles in circumference. Lon. 12 31 E, lat. 36 50 N.

Lin-tcheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan. It has nothing to distinguish it but the excellence of the fruit with which it abounds. It includes in its jurisdiction, two cities of the second, and six of the third class.

Lintz, a town of Germany, capital of Upper Austria, with two castles, the one upon a hill, and the other below it. Here is a hall, in which the states assemble, a bridge over the Danube, and several manufactures, and a great deal of gun-powder is made here. It is seated at the confluence of the Danube and Traen, 42 miles E of Passau, and 100 W of Vienna. Lon. 14 3 E, lat. 48 16 N.

Lintz, a town of Germany, in the circle of the lower Rhine and electorate of Cologne, seated on the Rhine, 15 miles N W of Coblentz, and 18 S of Cologne. Lon. 7 10 E, lat. 50 37 N.

Linton, a town in Cambridgeshire, with a market on Thursday, 12 miles S E of Cambridge, and 46 N by E of London. Lon. 0 22 E, lat. 52 8 N.

Lipari, the largest, most fertile, and populous of the Lipari Islands, about 15 miles in circumference. It was celebrated among the ancients; and, by the description of Aristotle, it appears to have been considered by the sailors in his time, what Strombolo is in ours, as a light-house, as its fires were never extinguished. It abounds with the currant grape; cotton also grows here; and great quantities of pumice are gathered.

Lipari Islands, a group of Islands lying in the Mediterranean, to the N of Sicily, 12 in number; and nearly as follows, in the order of their size; namely, Liparia, Strombolo, Volcano, Salini, Felicudi, Alicudi, Panari, Volcanello, Vacheluse, Lisca, Dattolo, and Tila Navi. They are subject to the king of Naples, and bring in a good revenue.

Lippa, a town of Hungary, in the banat of Temeswar, with a castle. It was taken by the Turks in 1532, by the Austrians in 1688, and by the Turks again in 1698, who abandoned it in 1695, after having demolished the fortifications. It is seated on a mountain, 22 miles N E of Temeswar and 75 of Belgrade. Lon. 22 45 E, lat. 45 51 N.

Lippe, a river of Westphalia, which washes Paderborn, Lipstadt and Ham, and falls into the Rhine, above Wesel.

Lipstadt, a considerable town of Westphalia, capital of the county of Lippe. It was once free and imperial; afterward subject to its own counts, and now to the king of Prussia. It carries on a good trade in preparing timber for building vessels on the Rhine, with which it has a communication by the river Lippe. It is seated in a morass, 17 miles W S W of Paderborn, and 30 S E of Munster. Lon. 8 30 E, lat. 51 42 N.

Liquet, a town of France, in the department of the straits of Calais and late province of Artois, 12 miles W of St. Omer. Lon. 2 0 E, lat. 50 43 N.

Liqueo, or Liteo Islands. See Lieou-Kieou.

Lis, a river of the Netherlands, which has its source in Artois, and running N E into Flanders, passes by Aaire, St. Venant, Armentieres, Menin, Courtray, and Deynse, and then falls into the Scheld, at Ghent.

Lisbon, a considerable city, the capital of Portugal, with an archbishop's see, a university, a tribunal of the inquisition, and a strong castle. It was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake, Nov. 1, 1755. The harbour will contain 10,000 sail of ships, which ride in the greatest safety; and the city being viewed from the southern shore of the river, affords a beautiful prospect, as the buildings gradually rise above each other. It contained before the earthquake at most 150,000 inhabitants, and is seated on the Tajo, 10 miles from its mouth, 178 W by N of Seville, and 255 S by W of Madrid. Lon. 9 5 W, lat. 38 42 N.

Lisburn, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Antrim, and province of Ulster. It has a large manufacture of linen cloth, and is seated on the Laggan, eight miles S W of Belfast. Lon. 6 0 W, lat. 54 41 N.

Lisca, one of the Lipari islands, three miles from Lipari. It is a small desert spot.

Lisier, St. a town of France, in the department of Arriege, and late province of Conserans. It is a bishop's see, with a chapel, which was much resorted to by pilgrims. It is seated on the Satat, 50 miles S E of Auch, and 390 S by W of Paris. Lon. 1 15 E, lat. 42 56 N.

Lisieux, an ancient town of France, in the department of Calvados, and late province of Normandy. The churches, and the late episcopal palace and convents are all very handsome structures. It has a good trade, particularly in linen cloth, and is seated at the confluence of the Touque and Orbec, 12 miles from the sea, and 40 S W of Rouen. Lon. 0 20 E, lat. 49 11 N.

Lisle, a large, handsome, and strong town of France, in the department of the North, and late province of French Flanders, of which it was the capital. It is esteemed one of the richest and most commercial towns in France; and the inhabitants are computed to be 65,000. It is called Lisle (that is L'Isle, the island) because it was formerly surrounded by marshes, which have been drained by the industry of the inhabitants. Its citadel constructed by Vauhan, is supposed to be the finest in Europe next to that of Turin. The streets, particularly those of the New Town, are adorned with noble buildings. The Great Square, and the Little Square, are both distinguished in this respect, and among the public structures most worthy of notice, are the exchange, a magazine of vast extent, and a general hospital very lately built. In another hospital, called L'Hospital Comtesse, the poor were served (at least before the late revolution) upon plate. They have manufactures of all sorts; but their principal trade is in camlets. Lisle was taken by the duke of Marlborough, after three months siege, and the loss of many thousands of men, in 1708; but it was restored to the French by the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713, in consideration of their demolishing the fortifications of Dunkirk. In 1792, it sustained a severe bombardment from the Austrians; who, however, were obliged to raise the siege on the approach of a superior French army. It is seated on the river Deule, 14 miles W of Toumay, 32 S W of Ghent, 37 N W of Mons, and 130 N of Paris. Lon. 3 9 E, lat. 50 38 N.

Lisle, a post town in Tioga county, New York; situated on the Tioughnecoga river, near its junction with the Chenengo, and about 14 miles N E of Union. It contains about 100 families.

Lismore, one of the Western islands of Scotland, seated at the mouth of Loch Linhe, a capacious lake in Argyleshire. It is a fertile island, seven miles long and one and a half broad; and was the residence of the bishops of Argyle.

Lisonzo, a river of Italy, which rises in Carinthia, runs through part of the republic of Venice, and falls into the gulf of Venice, at the harbour of the same name.

Lissa, an island in the gulf of Venice, on the coast of Dalmatia, belonging to the Venetians, who have here a fishery of pilchards and anchovies. It produces excellent wine, and is 70 miles W of Ragusa. Lon. 17 0 E, lat. 43 52 N.

Lissa, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Posnia, of which it is the capital; 50 miles W of Kalisch. Lon. 16 50 E, lat. 52 0 N.

Lissa, a village of Sillesia, 16 miles from Breslaw. It is seated on the Weistriz, and remarkable for a great victory gained by the Prussians over the Austrians in 1757.

Lithuania, a large country of Europe, which now makes part of Poland, with the title of a grand dutchy. It is bounded on the S by Volhinia, and part of Red Russia; on the W by Upper Poland, Polachia, Ducal Prussia, and Samogitia; on the N by Livonia and Moscovia, which also bounds it on the E. It is about 300 miles in length and 250 in breadth, and is watered by several large rivers, the principal of which are the Nieper, the Dwina, the Neman, the Pripecz, and the Bogg. It is divided into eight palatinates; namely, Troki, Minski, Novogrodce, Bresta, Wilna, Mscislaw, Vitepsk, and Polocsk. It is a flat country, like Poland; and the lands are very proper for tillage. The soil is not only fertile in corn, but it produces honey, wood, pitch, and vast quantities of wool. They have also excellent little horses, which they never shoe, because their hoofs are very hard. In the forests, large pieces of yellow amber are frequently dug up. The country swarms with Jews, who, though numerous in every other part of Poland, seem to have fixed their head quarters in this dutchy; and this, perhaps, is the only country in Europe, where Jews cultivate the ground. The peasants are in a state of the most abject vassalage. In 1772 the empress Catharine compelled the Poles to cede to her all that part of Lithuania, bordering upon Russia, and including at least one third of the country. This she erected into the two governments of Polotsk and Mohilef. In 1793, in conjunction with the king of Prussia, she effected another partition of Poland in consequence of which she extended her dominions over almost the whole of Lithuania.

Liverpool, a considerable borough and seaport in Lancashire, with a market on Saturday. Its situation is low but extremely healthy, pleasant, and commodious, at the mouth of the river Mersey, which is here from twelve to fifteen hundred yards wide; is a populous town, the most flourishing seaport in these parts, and pretends to rival, if not excel Bristol. The inhabitants are universal merchants, and trade to all foreign parts but Turkey and the East Indies. It shares the trade to Ireland and Wales with Bristol. Ships of any burden may come up with their full lading, and ride before the town, which is quite open and unfortified. In 1644 it was besieged by prince Rupert; and after a stout resistance taken. The exchange, in which is the town hall, council-room, and assembly room, is a handsome Corinthian edifice, with a dome built in 1749, and since considerably enlarged. All the new buildings are handsome, and the streets spacious. Some merchants have houses here, which in Italy would pass for palaces. The custom house is a neat and commodious brick building, too small for its trade. There are eight public docks, which form an area of about twenty four acres, and can contain above 1000 ships, with the greatest safety. They are bounded by quays above a mile and a half in length, and able to contain 20,000 tons of shipping. These docks have been erected at a very great expence. One of them cost no less than 21,000*l*.

 There is a library, and a theatre royal was opened in 1772, which cost above 6000*l*. The whole number of harks employed here in 1763, was only 12, with 75 men; and there were then only 130 habitations, whereas in 1766, there were upwards of 8000 habitations, and they had 2800 vessels cleared outwards, and above 3000 inwards. so amazingly great has been the increase. The duties paid at the custom house in 1784 were 650,510*l*.
 There were four millions bushels of salt exported, besides what went coastwise: also 15,000 tons of coal, were exported, and 15,500 tons sent coastwise. The export of salt and salt rock is from 90,000 to 100,000 tons annually. There is a navigation from hence farther up the Mersey, and that for ships of burden too, as high almost as Warrington, and also up the S Channel, as they call the river Weever; but it is chiefly for rock salt and Cheshire cheese, of which great quantities are shipped off here for the W and S parts of England. Among the charitable foundations, are almshouses for the widows of mariners killed or lost at sea, or decayed seamen, and a new asylum for leprotics. Liverpool is 18 miles W of Warrington, and 203 N W of London. Lon. 2 54 W, lat. 53 23 N.

Livonia, a province of the Russian empire, which, with that of Esthonia, has been reciprocally claimed and possessed by Russia, Sweden, and Poland, and for more than two centuries, has been a perpetual scene of the most bloody wars. It was finally wrested from the Swedes by Peter the Great, and confirmed to the Russians by the peace of Nystadt, in 1721. It now forms the government of Riga, or Livonia, of which Riga is the capital.
 It is bounded on the N by the government of Esthonia, on the E by that of Rakof, on the S by that of Poletsk and part of Poland, and on the W by the gulf of Livonia. It is 250 miles from N to S, and 150 from E to W. The land is so fertile in corn, that it is called the granary of the N. and would produce a great deal more, if it was not so full of lakes. The fish that abound here are salmon, carps, pikes, flat fish, and many others. In the forests there are wolves, bears, elks, reindeer, stags, and hares. The domestic animals are very numerous: but the sheep bear very bad wool. Here are a great number of forests, which consist of birch trees, pines, and oaks; and all the houses of the inhabitants are built with wood. The merchandises which they send abroad are flax, hemp, honey, wax, leather, skins, and potashes.
