Lomond, Ben, a great mountain, in the North of Shropshire, about 3200 feet above the level of the lake, at its bottom. It stretches along the E side of Loch Lomond several miles; and its broad base extends so far into the country, that the ascent of this mountain, though steep, is computed to be six miles. Ptarmigans, and other heath-fowls, frequent its upper regions; its lower are the haunts of the roebuck; and herds of cattle feed in the irriguous vallies at its base. From this lofty mountain are seen Loch Lomond, the Clyde, the Forth, Edinburgh, the eastern coast as far as the Cheviot Fells, the isles of Bute and Arran, the rock of Ailsa, Ireland, the mountain of Plynlimmon in Wales, the Skiddaw in Cumberland, and the hills far beyond it.

Lomond, Loch, a beautiful lake in Dumbartonshire, Loch-lomond, the last, the most beautiful of the Caledonian lakes. The first view of it from Tarbat presents an extensive serpentine winding amidst lofty hills; on the N, barren, black, and rocky, which darken with their shade that contracted part of the water. On the W side, the mountains are clothed near the bottoms with woods of oak quite to the water-edge; their summits lofty, naked and craggy. On the east side, the mountains are equally high; but the tops form a more even ridge parallel to the lake, except where Ben-lomond, like Saul al palace, now containing some public offices, a magazine and arsenal, the regalia of the kingdom, the mint, and a menagerie; the Horse Guards, the Treasury, and the Admiralty, at Whitehall; the noble collection of public offices which form that magnificent structure called Somerset Place; the Royal Exchange, in Cornhill; the Bank of England, in Threadneedle-street; the Custom-house, in Thames-street; the Excise Office, in Broad-street; the East India House, in Leadenhall-street; the South Sea House, in Throgmorton street; the Mansion House for the lord mayor; the Monument in commemoration of the great fire in 1666; and the ancient bridge, called London-bridge. It is in agitation to pull this down, and rebuild it on a most extensive plan, making one arch the span of which shall be so high as to admit vessels of large burden under it; the two magnificent modern bridges of Blackfriars and Westminster. The British Museum in Great Russel-street, Bloomsbury; and the Leverian Museum, in Great Surry-street, are, perhaps, the noblest of their kind in Europe. The Inns of Court for the study of the law; the colleges, learned societies, and public seminaries; the halls of the different trading companies; the noble hospitals and other charitable institutions; the prisons, public places of diversion; with its fine squares and streets, which are numerous, and built with great regularity, are all too numerous to be particularly mentioned. London, then, in its large sense, including Westminster, Southwark, and part of Middlesex, forms one great metropolis, of vast extent and of prodigious wealth. When considered with all its advantages, it is now what ancient Rome once was; the seat of liberty, the encourager of arts, and the admiration of the whole world. It is the centre of trade; has an intimate connection with all the counties in the kingdom; and is the grand mart of the nation, to which all parts send their commodities, from whence they are again sent back into every town in the nation, and to every part of the world. From hence innumerable carriages by land and water are constantly employed; and from hence arises that circulation in the national body which renders every part healthful, vigorous, and in a prosperous condition; a circulation that is equally beneficial to the head and the most distant members. Merchants are here as rich as noblemen: witness their incredible loans to government; and there is no place in the world where the shops of tradesmen make such a noble and elegant appearance, or are better stocked. The Thames, on the banks of which London is situated, is a river which, though not the largest, is the richest and most commodious for commerce of any in the world. It is continually filled with fleets, sailing to or from the most distant climates: and its banks, from London bridge to Blackwall, form almost one continued great magazine of naval stores; containing three large wet-docks, 32 dry-docks, and 33 yards for the building of ships for the use of the merchants; besides the places allotted for the building of boats and lighters, and the king's yards lower down the river for the building of men-of-war. As the city is about 60 miles distant from the sea, it enjoys, by means of this beautiful river, all the benefits of navigation, without the danger of being surprised by foreign fleets, or of being annoyed by the moist vapours of the sea. It rises regularly, from the water-side, and, extending itself on both sides along its banks, reaches a prodigious length from E to W, in a kind of amphitheatre towards the N, and is continued for near 20 miles on all sides, in a succession of magnificent villas and populous villages, the country-seats of gentlemen and tradesmen; whither the latter retire for the benefit of fresh air, and to relax their minds from the hurry of business. The regard paid by the legislature to the property of the subject, has hitherto prevented any bounds being fixed for its extension. The irregular form of London makes it difficult to ascertain its extent. However, its length from E to W is generally allowed to be above seven miles from Hyde-park corner to Poplar; and its breadth in some places three, in others two, and in others again not much above half a mile. Hence the circumference of the whole is almost 18 miles; or, according to a later measurement, the extent of continued buildings is 35 miles, two furlongs and 39 rods. But it is much easier to form an idea of the large extent of a city so irregularly built by the number of the people, who are computed to be above a million; and from the number

 The Thames, on the London is situated, is a rough not the largest, is the most commodious for any in the world. It is filled with fleets, sailing to distant climates: and London bridge to Blackfriars one continued great street, containing 22 dry-docks, and the building of ships for the merchants; besides the building of houses, and the king's yards on the river for the building of ships.
 As the city is about 60 miles from the sea, it enjoys, by the beautiful river, all the benefit, without the danger of foreign fleets, or the moist vapours which rise regularly, from the Thames, extending itself on its banks, reaches a distance from E to W, in a straight line towards the N, for near 20 miles on the occasion of magnificent villages, the countenances and tradesmen: they retire for the benefit of business. The legislature, has hitherto preferred being fixed for its irregular form of London, difficult to ascertain its length from E to W, allowed to be above Hyde-park corner to breadth in some places two, and in others again half a mile. Hence the extent of the whole is about 35 miles, two furlongs. But it is much easier to of the large extent of early built by the number who are computed to be; and from the number of edifices devoted to the service of religion. Of these, there are 305 in the compass of this vast pile of buildings, without reckoning the 21 out-parishes usually included in the bills of mortality, and a great number of Methodist tabernacles. There are also in and near this city 100 almshouses, about 20 hospitals and infirmaries, three colleges, 10 public prisons, 15 flesh-markets; one market for live cattle; two other markets more particularly for herbs; and 23 other markets for corn, coals, hay, &c. 15 inns of court, 27 public squares, besides those within single buildings, as the Temple, &c. three bridges, 55 halls for companies, eight public schools, called free-schools; and 131 charity schools, which provide education for 5034 poor children; 207 inns, 447 taverns, 551 coffee houses, 5975 alehouses; 1000 hackney-coaches; 400 ditto chairs; 7000 streets, lanes, courts and alleys, and 150,000 dwelling-houses, containing, as has been already observed, above 1,000,000 inhabitants; who, according to a moderate estimate, are supposed to consume weekly provisions, clothing, &c. to the amount of £ 500,000. London is the seat of many considerable manufactures; some almost peculiar to itself, others in which it participates with the manufacturing towns in general. The most important of its peculiar manufactures is the silk-weaving, established in Spitalfields by refugees from France. A variety of works in gold, silver, and jewellery; the engraving of prints; the making of optical and mathematical instruments, are likewise principally or solely executed here, and some of them in greater perfection than in any other country. To its port are likewise confined some branches of foreign commerce, as the vast East India trade, and those to Turkey and Hudson's Bay. The common firing is pit-coal, commonly called sea-coal, of which there are consumed upwards of 766,880 chaldrons every year. The annual consumption of oil in London and Westminster for lamps amounts to 400,000. In 1787, the quantity of porter brewed in London for home-consumption and foreign exportation, amounted to 1,176,856 barrels. Thus London has risen to its present rank of the first city in Europe, both with respect to opulence and to number of inhabitants. London is a bishop's see, and sends four members to parliament. To enumerate all the events by which this great capital has been distinguished, would greatly exceed our limits: we shall only mention therefore, the great plague, in 1665, which cut off 90,000 people, and the dreadful conflagration, in 1666, by which it received damage to the amount of £ 10,689,000. London is 165 miles N W of Paris, 180 W by S of Amsterdam, and 264 S E of Dublin. Lat. 51 31 N.

London, New, a seaport in the state of Connecticut, and county of New London. Its harbour is the best in Connecticut, and as good as any in the United States. It is defended by two forts, and seated on the Thames, near its entrance into the Sound, 80 miles N E of New York. Lon. 72 45 W, lat. 41 15 N.

London, New, a town of the United States, in Virginia, on James river.

Londonderry, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, 32 miles long and 30 broad; bounded on the W by Donegal, on the N by the ocean, on the S and S W by Tyrone, and on the E by Antrim. It contains 31 parishes, and sends eight members to parliament. It is a fruitful champaign country; and the greater part of it was given by James I. to an incorporated company of London merchants. The linen manufacture flourishes through every part of it.

Londonderry, a handsome town of Ireland, capital of a county of the same name. It is still surrounded by walls, and is remarkable for a long siege it sustained against James II. in 1689, till a naval force from England, with some troops under general Kirke, broke the boom across the harbour, and brought a seasonable relief; by which the enemy were so dispirited, as to raise the siege. It is a modern place, built by a company of London adventurers in the reign of James I. The principal commerce of Londonderry is with America and the West Indies. It contains 10,000 inhabitants, and is seated on the river Foyle, over which a wooden bridge, 1068 feet in length, and of singular and excellent construction, was erected in 1791. Londonderry is four miles S of Lough Foyle, and 194 N W of Dublin. Lon. 7 5 W, lat 55 4 N.

Lors Howe's Group, an extensive group of islands in the South Pacific Ocean, discovered, in 1791, by captain Hunter, who from the mast head distinctly descried 32 of them, some of considerable extent. They appeared thickly covered with wood, among which the cocco-nut was very distinguishable. The natives are a stout, clean, well made people, of a dark copper colour; their hair tied in a knot on the back of the head; and they appeared as if clean-shaved. The arms and thighs were tattooed, and some were painted with red and white streaks. They wore a wrapper round their middle. Lon. from 159 14 to 159 37 E, lat. 5 30 S.

Lors Howe's Island, an island of the South Pacific Ocean, discovered by lieutenant King. Many excellent turtle have been caught here, and it abounds with a variety of birds. The island is 140 leagues E of New South Wales, three miles and a half long, and very narrow. Lon. 159 0 E, lat. 31 36 S.

Loretto, a fortified town of Italy, in the marquisate of Ancona, with a bishop's see. It contains the Casa Santa, or House of Nazareth, in which it is pretended Jesus Christ was brought up; and that it was carried by angels into Dalmatia, and thence to the place where it now stands. Four walls of white Parian marble have been erected to surround the holy chamber, which itself is built of bricks of unequal size; it is 40 feet long, 20 broad, and 20 high, without any roof or covering; in it is an image of the Blessed Virgin, placed in a niche, with the heavenly infant on her right arm, and a triple crown on her head; the whole statue is covered with diamonds and pearls, and round is a sort of rainbow of precious stones of divers colours; all the chairs, utensils, and ornaments in the place are immensely rich. The sacristy, or treasury, is filled with jewels, gold vessels, and ornaments more precious than gold itself, the votive presents of emperors, kings, princes, queens, popes, and other persons of both sexes for these many hundred years past. Works in silver are not thought worthy to be admitted here. The whole is reckoned to be worth nine millions of rix-dollars. And we ought not to omit the wine cellar belonging to the holy house, which is very richly stored. The town itself, exclusive of the chapel, is neither considerable nor agreeable; nor does it contain above 300 inhabitants who are almost all shoemakers, tailors, or sellers of chaplets. It is seated on a mountain, three miles from the gulf of Venice, 12 S E of Ancona, and 112 N E of Rome. Lon. 13 38 E, lat. 43 27 N.

Louisiana, a large country of North America, bounded on the E by the Mississippi, on the S by the gulf of Mexico, on the W by New Mexico, and running indefinitely N. It is agreeably situate between the extremes of heat and cold; its climate varying as it extends toward the N. The timber is as fine as any in the world; and the quantities of oak, ash, mulberry, walnut, cherry, cypress, and cedar, are astonishing. The neighbourhood of the Mississippi, besides, furnishes the richest fruits in great variety. The soil is particularly adapted for hemp, flax, and tobacco; and indigo is a staple commodity, which commonly yields the planter three or four cuttings a year. It is intersected by a number of fine rivers, among which are the Natchitoches, and the Adayes, or Mexicano. This country was discovered by Ferdinand de Soto, in 1541; traversed by M. de la Salle, in 1682; and settled by Lewis XIV. in the beginning of this century. In 1763, it was ceded to Spain; in 1800 reconveyed to France; and in 1803 purchased by the United States.

Lubec, a seaport town of Germany, in Lower Saxony, in the dutchy of Holstein, with a bishop's see. It is a free, imperial, Hanseatic town, and the streets are handsome, large, and neat. The houses are all built with free stone, and have large apartments, with spacious cellars. The doors of the houses are so high and so wide, that a cart loaded with hay may pass through them. The town house is a superb structure, and has several towers. On the ground floor is the hall of audience, which is well furnished, and where the senate assembles regularly three times a week. Above is another large hall, where the deputies of the Hanseatic League formerly held their assemblies. Here is also a fine exchange, which was built in 1683. The senate is composed of 20 persons, four of which are borgo-masters, the others consist of the nobility, men of letters, and merchants. Add to these a syndic, a prothonotary, and four secretaries. The inhabitants are all Lutherans; and there are 21 preachers, whose chief has the title of Superintendent. There are five large churches and palaces, one of which is the cathedral, whose body is of an extraordinary length, containing several curiosities: such as, an handsome statue of the Virgin Mary, a curious clock, and a prodigious large organ. There are 14 hospitals, one for lunatics, a pest house, and four others for sick persons. It is seated on the river Trave, ten miles SW of the Baltic Sea, and 17 N E of Hamburg. Lon. 10 51 E, lat. 53 37 N.

ritory of Italy, lying on the Tuscan Sea; about 20 miles in length, and 10 in breadth. The soil does not produce much corn; but there is plenty of wine, oil, silk, wool, and chesnuts; their oil in particular is in high esteem, and the common people usually eat chesnuts instead of bread. It is a sovereign state, under the protection of the emperor, and the government aristocratic. The usual revenues amount to about 30,000 per annum, and they can raise and pay 10,000 men upon occasion.

Lucern, one of the cantons of Swisserland, and the most considerable, except Zurich and Berne. It is 30 miles in length, and 20 in breadth: bounded on the E by the cantons of Underwalden, Schweiz, and Zug, and on all the other sides, by the canton of Bern. The inhabitants of this canton are reckoned about 100,000, and are Roman catholics. The government was formerly aristocratical, consisting of a senate of 36, and a council of 64, in which some plebeian burghers were admitted every election; but the Helvetic confederacy, as well as the constitution of the several cantons is now dissolved, the French having cruelly and unjustly enslaved this brave and virtuous people.

Lucern, the capital of the canton of Lucern, in Switzerland. It is divided into two by a branch of the Reuss, which falls into the lake, on the N W end of which the town is seated, and commands an extensive prospect. It scarcely contains 3000 inhabitants, has no manufactures of consequence, and little commerce. The pope has always a nuncio resident here. In the cathedral is an organ of a fine tone, and of an extraordinary size; the centre pipe is 40 feet in length, near three in breadth, and weighs 1100 pounds. The bridges which skirt the town, round the edge of the lake, are the fashionable walk of the place, and remarkable for their length. They are decorated with coarse paintings, representing the histories of the Old Testament, the battles of the Swiss, and the dance of death.

Lucknow, an ancient city of Hindootan Proper, capital of Oude. It is an extensive place, but meanly built: the houses are chiefly mud walls covered with thatch; and many consist entirely of mats and bambous, and are thatched with leaves of the cocoa-nut, palm-tree, and sometimes with straw. Very few of the houses of the natives are built with brick: the streets are crooked, narrow, and worse than most in India. In the dry season, the dust and heat are intolerable; in the rainy season, the mire is so deep as to be scarcely passable; and there is a great number of elephants belonging to the Na-bob and the great men of his court, which are continually passing the streets, either to the palace, or to the river, to the great danger and annoyance of the foot passenger, as well as the inferior class of shopkeepers. The comforts, conveniency, or property of this class of people, are indeed little attended to, either by the great men or their servants; the elephant itself being frequently known to be infinitely more attentive to them as he passes, and to children in particular. The palace of the Nabob is seated on a high bank near the Goomty, and commands an extensive view both of that river and the country on the eastern side. Lucknow Luconia, or Manilla, the chief of the Philippine Islands, in the N Pacific Ocean, 400 miles in length and 100 in breadth. It is not so hot as may be expected, because it is well watered by large lakes and rivers, and the periodical rains which inundate all the plains. There are several volcanos in the mountains, which occasion earthquakes; and a variety of hot baths. The produce of this island is wax, cotton, wild cinnamon, sulphur, coconuts, rice, gold, horses, buffaloes, and game. Philip II. of Spain, formed a scheme of planting a colony in the Philippine Islands, which had been neglected since the discovery of them by Magellan, in 1521. Manilla, in this island, was the station chosen for the capital of the new establishments. Hence an active commercial intercourse began with the Chinese, a considerable number of whom settled in the Philippine Islands, under the Spanish protection. These supplied the colony so amply with all the valuable productions and manufactures of Asia, as enabled it to open a trade with America, by a direct course of navigation, the longest from land to land on our globe. This trade, at first, was carried on with Callao, on the coast of Peru; but it was afterward removed to Acapulco on the coast of New Spain. From this port annually sail one or two ships, which are permitted to carry out silver to the amount of 500,000 crowns, in return for which they bring back from Manilla, spices, drugs, China and Japan wares, calicoes, chintz, muslins, silks, &c. The inhabitants are a mixture of several nations, besides Spaniards; and they all produce a mixed breed, distinct from any of the rest. The blacks have long hair, and good features; and there is one tribe, who prick their skins, and draw figures on them, as they do in most other countries where they go naked. See Manilla.

church of St. Michael, in which are interred the ancient dukes; it also contains a famous table, eight feet long, and four wide, plated over with chased gold, and the rim embellished with precious stones of an immense value, which was taken from the Saracens by the emperor Otho; but, in 1698, a gang of robbers stripped it of 200 rubies and emeralds, a large diamond, and most of the gold. The salt springs near this place, produce great quantities of salt, which bring in a good revenue to the sovereign, and chiefly employ the inhabitants. It is seated on the Ilmenau, 31 miles S E of Hamburg, and 60 N of Brunswick. Lon. 10 31 E, lat. 55 16 N.

Lunenburg Court House, the principal seat of justice in Lunenburg county, Virginia, where there is a post office. It lies on the N E side of Meherrin river, about 50 miles S W of Richmond.

Lunera, a mountain of Italy, between Naples and Puzzoli. It contains a great deal of sulphur and alum: and the springs that rise from it are excellent for curing wounds.

Luneville, a handsome town of France, in the department of Meurthe and late dutchy of Lorraine, with a castle, where the dukes formerly kept their court, as did afterwards king Stanislaus. Luton, a town in Bedfordshire, with a market on Monday, seated among hills, 18 miles S of Bedford, and 31 N by W of London. Lon. 0 25 W, lat. 52 27 N.

Lutschinen, a river of the canton of Bern, in Switzerland, formed by the junction of two streams; the one called the Weiss Lutschinen, flowing through the valley of Lauterbrunnen; and the other called the Schwartz Lutschinen, which comes from the valley of Grindelwalde. In a rainy season, the river forms a torrent, which rushes impetuously through the great masses of rock that obstruct its course, and, with inconceivable violence, forces from their beds the most enormous fragments. The road to Zwey Lutschinen and Lauterbrunnen is over this roaring torrent, by a kind of bridge, which is fixed against the sides of rocks, that are almost in a leaning position. A huge vertical stone, raised in the middle of the river, supports some thick planks, so badly joined, as to be neither steady nor solid, and these form the wretched bridge, over which the inhabitants daily pass, with a firm step and undaunted eye; a passage, which the traveller, unaccustomed to such strange communications, would tremble to attempt. Hence the Lutschinen flows till it falls into the lake of Brienz.

Lutter, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, in the dutchy of Brunswick, remarkable for the battle gained here over the Imperialists, by the Danes, in 1626. It is eight miles N W of Goslar, and 13 S E of Hildesheim. Lon. 10 25 E, lat. 52 4 N.

Lutterworth, a town in Leicestershire, with a market Thursday. It is seated on the river Great Ouse, in a fertile soil, Luxemburg, a dutchy of the Austrian Netherlands; bounded on the E by the archbishopric of Treves; on the S by Lorraine; on the W by Champagne, and Liege, and on the N by Limburgh and Liege. It lies in the forest of Ardenne, which is one of the most famous in Europe. In some places it is covered with mountains and woods, but is in general fertile in corn and wine; and here are a great number of iron mines. The principal rivers are, the Moselle, the Sour, the Ourte, and the Senoy. It belongs partly to the house of Austria, and partly to the French; and Thionville is the capital of the French part.

Luxemburg, a city of the Austrian Netherlands, capital of a dutchy of the same name. It was more than once taken and retaken in the wars of the 16th century. In 1684, it was taken by the French, who augmented the fortifications so much, that it is one of the strongest places in Europe. It was ceded to the house of Austria in 1715. In the present war it surrendered by capitulation to the French June 1, 1795. It is divided by the Aisitz into the upper and lower towns; the former almost quite surrounded by rocks, but the lower seated in a plain. It is 25 miles S W of Treves, and 100 W of Metz. Lynn Regis, or King's Lynn, a bor-market on Tuesday and Saturday. The situation of this town near the fall of the Ouse into the sea, after having received several other rivers, of which some are navigable, gives it an opportunity of extending its trade into eight different counties, by which many considerable cities and towns, viz. Peterborough, Ely, Stamford, Bedford, St.

Ive's, Huntingdon, St. Neot's, Northampton, Cambridge, St. Edmundsbury, and the N part of Bucks, as well as the inland parts of Norfolk and Suffolk, are supplied with heavy goods, not only of home produce, as coals and salt from Newcastle, but also of merchandise imported from abroad, especially wine, of which two articles, viz. coals and wine, this is the greatest port for importation of any place on all the eastern coast of England; and those wherein the Lynn merchants deal more largely than any town in England, except London, Bristol and New Castle. In return for this, Lynn receives back all the corn which the counties just mentioned produce, for exportation; and therefore sends more of it abroad than any port, except Hull. The foreign trade of the merchants here is very considerable, especially to Holland, Norway, and the Baltic, and also to Spain and Portugal and formerly they drove a good trade to France till it was turned off, by treaties on one hand, and prohibitions, high duties, &c. on the other, to Spain and Portugal. Lyonois, a late province of France, which, with that of Forez, forms the department of Rhone and Loire.

Lyons, the second city of France for beauty, commerce, and opulence. It is the capital of the department of Rhone and Loire, and is seated at the confluence of the Rhone and Saone. It was founded about the year 42 B. C. by the Romans who made it the centre of the commerce of the Gauls. About the year 145, it was totally destroyed by fire, but was rebuilt by the munificence of Nero. Many antiquities are still observed, that evince its Roman origin. Lyons is the see of an archbishop, and before its recent calamities contained 150,000 inhabitants, upward of 30,000 of whom were employed in various manufactures, particularly of rich stuffs, of the most exquisite workmanship, in silk, gold, silver, &c. The quays were adorned with magnificent structures. The Hotel-de-ville vied with that of Amsterdam; and the theatre was not surpassed by any in France. The other principal public buildings were the Hotel de Dieu, the Hospital of Charity, the Exchange, the Custom-house, the Palace of Justice, the Arsenal, a public library, and two colleges. The bridge, which unites the city with the suburb de la Guillotiere, is 1560 feet long; and there are three other principal suburbs, six gates, and several fine churches. Such was Lyons before the fatal year 1793, when the mischiefs of the revolution were poured upon this devoted city in all their horrors. In June 1793 it revolted against the national convention, and being obliged to surrender in October following, became a prey to the merciless victors, who satiated their rage by barbarities for which language has no name. It is reckoned that not less than 70,000 in this city alone were either massacred or forced into exile. It was also decreed by the convention that the walls and public buildings of Lyons should be destroyed, and the name of the city changed to that of Ville Affranchie. In 1794, however, on the destruction of the faction of the Jacobins, the convention decreed that the city should resume its ancient name, and that measures should be taken to restore its manufactures and commerce. This city is 15 miles N of Vienne, and 220 S E of Paris. Lon. $4^{\circ} 55' E$, lat. $45^{\circ} 46' N$.

Madagascar, a large island of Africa, discovered by the Portuguese, in 1492.
It lies 40 leagues E of the continent of Africa, from which it is separated by the strait of Mosambique. It extends 290 miles from N to S, and is from 200 to 300 broad. The natives are commonly tall, well made, of an olive complexion, and some of them pretty black.
They are a civil and good natured people but easily provoked, and apt to shew their resentment on the least provocation. Their hair is not woolly, like that of the negroes of Guinea; but it is always black, and for the most part curls naturally: their nose is small though not flat, and they have not thick lips. They have no cities or towns, but a great number of villages a small distance from each other. Their houses are pitiful huts, without windows or chimnies, and the roofs covered with reeds or leaves. All the women of Madagascar, except the poorest sort, wear a covering over their breasts and shoulders, ornamented with glass beads, and none go without a cloth about their loins; the men are allowed polygamy.
Both men and women are fond of bracelets and necklaces, and they anoint their bodies with stinking grease or oil.
There are a great many petty kings, whose riches consist in cattle and slaves, and they are always at war with each other. It is hard to say what their religion is, for they have neither churches nor priests. They have no rules relating to marriage, for the men and women cohabit together for some time, and then leave each other as freely again. Here are a great number of locusts, crocodiles, camellions, and other animals common to Africa. The abundance and variety of provisions of every kind, which a fine climate and fertile soil can produce are on no part of the globe superior to those of Madagascar. The French have attempted to settle here, but have always been repelled. There are only some parts on the coast yet known. Lat. from 12 to 26° S.

Madeira, an island in the Atlantic Ocean, 120 miles in circumference, and 240 N by E of Teneriff. In 1419, when the Portuguese, under the patronage of prince Henry, had made their second voyage to their recently-discovered island of Porto Santo, they observed towards the S, a fixed spot in the horizon, like a small black cloud. By degrees, they were led to conjecture that it might be land, and steering toward it, they arrived at a considerable island, uninhabited, and covered with wood, which on that account, they called Madeira. Prince Henry, the next year, settled a colony here, and not only furnished it with the seeds and plants, and domestic animals common in Europe, but he procured slips of the vine from Cyprus, the rich wines of which were then in great request, and plants of the sugar-cane from Sicily, into which it had been lately introduced. These thrive so prosperously, that the sugar and wine of Madeira quickly became articles of some consequence in the commerce of Portugal; but its wine, in particular, is in the highest estimation, especially such as has been a voyage to the East or West Indies, for it matures best in the hottest climate. The scorching heat of summer, and the icy chill of winter, are here equally unknown; for spring and Autumn reign continually, and produce flowers, and fruits throughout the year. Many brooks and small rivulets descend from the mountains in deep chasms or glens, which separate the various parts of the island. The beds of the brooks are in some places covered with stones of all sizes, carried down from the higher parts by the violence of winter rains or floods of melted snow. The water is conducted by weirs and channels in the vineyards, where each proprietor has the use of it for a certain time; some being allowed to keep a constant supply of it, some to use it thrice, others twice, and others only once a week. As the heat of the climate renders this supply of water to the vineyards absolutely necessary, it is not without great expence that a new vineyard can be planted: for the maintenance of which, the owners must purchase water at a high price, from those who are constantly supplied, and are thus enabled to spare some of it. The cedar tree is found in great abundance, and extremely beautiful; most of the ceilings and furniture at Madeira are made of that wood, which yields a very fragrant smell. The dragon tree is a native of this island. Flowers nursed in the English greenhouses grow wild here in the fields; the hedge-roses are mostly formed of the myrtle, rose, jasmine, and honeysuckle; while the lark-spur, fleur-de-lis, lupin, &c. spring up spontaneously in the meadows. There are very few reptiles to be seen in the island; the lizard is the most common. Canary birds and goldfinches are found in the mountains; of the former numbers are sent every year to England. This island is well watered and populous. Funchal is the capital.

Madia, or Maggia, a town, river, valley, and bailiwick of Switzerland, in Upper Vallais. The valley is long and narrow, between high mountains, watered throughout its whole length by the river; and it is the fourth transalpine bailiwick. The town is 10 miles N W of Locarno.

Madras, or Fort St. George, the principal settlement of the English East India Company on the E side of the peninsula of Hindoostan, on the coast of Coromandel. It is a fortress of great strength, including within it a regular well-built city. It is close on the margin of the bay of Bengal, from which it has a rich and beautiful appearance; the houses being covered with a stucco called chunam, which is nearly as compact as the finest marble, and bears as high a polish. They consist of long colonnades, with open porticos, and flat roof; and the city contains many handsome and spacious streets. But the inner apartments of the houses are not highly decorated; presenting to the eye only white walls; which, however, from the marble-like appearance of the stucco, give a freshness grateful in so hot a country. Ceilings are very uncommon in the rooms; it being impossible to find any which will resist the ravages of the white ant. These animals are chiefly formidable from the immen-

" The approach to Madras, from the sea (says Mr. Hodges) offers to the eye an appearance similar to what we may conceive of a Grecian city in the age of Alexander. The clear, blue, cloudless sky, the polished, white buildings, the bright sandy beach, and the dark green sea, present a combination totally new to the eye of an Englishman, just arrived from London, who, accustomed to the sight of rolling masses of clouds floating in a damp atmosphere, cannot but contemplate the difference with delight; and the eye being thus gratified, the mind soon assumes a gay and tranquil habit, analogous to the pleasing objects with which it is surrounded. Some time before the ship arrives at her anchoring ground, she is hailed by the boats of the country filled with people of business, who come in crowds on board. This is the moment in which an European feels the great distinction between Asia and his own country. The rustling of fine linen, and the general hum of unusual conversation, presents to his mind for a moment the idea of an assembly of females. When he ascends upon the deck, he is struck with the long muslin dresses, and black faces adorned with very large gold earrings and white turbans. The first salutation he receives from these strangers is by bending their bodies very low, touching the deck with the back of the hand, and the forehead three times. The natives first seen in India by the European voyager are Hindoos, the original inhabitants of the peninsula. In this part of India they are delicately framed; their hands, in particular, are more like those of tender females; and do not appear to be what is considered a proper proportion to the rest of the person, which is usually above the middle size. Correspondent to this delicacy of appearance, are their manners; mild, tranquil, and sedulously attentive; in this last respect they are indeed remarkable, as they never interrupt any person who is speaking; but wait patiently till he has concluded; and then answer with the most perfect respect and composure. From the ship, a stranger is conveyed on shore in a boat of the country, called a Masoolah boat; a work of curious construction, and well calculated to elude the violent shucks of the surf, that breaks here with great violence: they are formed without a keel, flat bottomed, with the sides raised high, are sewed together with the fibres of the cocconut tree, and caulked with the same material; they are remarkably light, and are managed with great dexterity by the natives; they are usually attended by two Kattamarans (rafts) paddled by one man each, the intention of which is, that, should the boat be overtaken by the violence of the surf, the persons in it may be preserved. The boat is driven, as the sailors say, high and dry; and the passengers are landed on a fine, sandy beach; and immediately enter the fort of Madras. The appearance of the natives is exceedingly varied; some are wholly naked, and others so clothed, that nothing but the face and neck is to be discovered; besides this, the European is struck with many other objects, such as women carried on men's shoulders, on palankeens, and men riding on horseback clothed in linen dresses like women; which, with the very different face of the country from all he had ever seen, or conceived of, excites the strongest emotions of surprise!" There is a second city, called the Black Town, separated from Madras by the breadth of a proper esplanade only; and, although near four miles in circuit, fortified in such a manner as to prevent a surprise from the enemy's horse; an evil, to which every town in the Carnatic is subject, from the dryness and evenness of the country. Madras was settled by the English about the year 1640. It was taken by the French in 1746, but restored in 1748. The present fort, which was erected since the destruction of Fort St. David, in 1758, is, perhaps, one of the best fortresses in the possession of the British nation. Madras, in common with all the European settlements on this coast, has no port for shipping; the coast forming nearly a straight line; and it is incommoded also with a high and dangerous surf. It is 100 miles N by E of Pondicherry, 758 S E of Bombay, and 1030 S W of Calcutta. Lon. 80 25 E, lat. 13 5 N.

Madrid, the capital of Spain, in New Castile. It was formerly an inconsiderable place, belonging to the archbishop of Toledo; but the purity of the air engaged the court to remove hither, and it is now a considerable city, and very populous. The houses are all built with brick, and the streets are long, broad, and straight, and adorned, at proper distances, with handsome fountains. There are above 100 towers or steeples, in different places, which contribute greatly to the embellishment of the city. It is seated in a large plain, surrounded by high mountains, but has no wall, rampart, or ditch. The royal palace is built on an eminence, at the extremity of the city; and as it is but two stories high, it does not make any extraordinary appearance. A fire happened in 1734, which almost reduced it to ashes. The finest square in Madrid is the Plaza Mayor, or Market place, which is surrounded with 300 houses, five stories high, all of an equal height; every story being adorned with a handsome balcony, and the fronts supported by columns, which form very fine arcades. Here the market is held; and here they have their famous bull-fights. The finest houses have no glass windows, there being only lattices in place of them. Casa-del-Campo, is a royal house of pleasure, a little more than half a mile from Madrid, with very fine gardens, pleasant walks, and a great many uncommon animals. Buen Retiro is another royal palace near the city, and is a proper place to retire to in the heat of summer, there being a great number of fish-ponds, grottos, tents, groves, and hermitages. Madrid is seated on the river Manzanares, which, though small, is adorned with two magnificent bridges. It is 265 miles N E of Lisbon, 590 S by W of London, and 625 S S W of Paris. Madrisio, a small town of Italy, in the state of Venice, 32 miles from Venice.

Madrogam, a large town of Africa, capital of Monomotapa, with a spacious royal palace. The upper part of the houses is in the shape of a bell. Lon. 31 40 E, lat. 18 0 S.

Madura, a large town, and capital of an island of the same name, in the Indian Sea. Lon. 12 49 E, lat. 9 30 N.

Madura, a town of the Carnatic, capital of a province of the same name, on the coast of Coromandel, 130 miles N by E of Cape Comorin, and 300 S S W of Madras. Lon. 78 12 E, lat. 9 55 N.

Maeler, a lake of Sweden, situated between the provinces of Westmania and Sudermania, containing several fine islands. It is usually frozen during a few weeks in winter, and an easy communication is opened by means of sledges, between the interior parts of Sweden and the city of Stockholm.

Maelstrom, a very extraordinary and dangerous whirlpool, on the coast of Norway, in 68° N lat. in the province of Nordland and district of Lofoden, near the island of Moskoe, whence it is also named Moskoestrom. The mountain of Helseggen, in Lofoden, lies a league from the island of Moskoe, and between these two, runs this large and dreadful stream, the depth of which is from 36 to 40 fathoms. When it is flood, the stream runs up the country between Lofoden and Moskoe with a boisterous rapidity; but the roar of its impetuous ebb to the sea is scarce equalled by the loudest and most dreadful cataracts; and the vortices or pits are of such an extent and depth, that if a ship comes within its attraction, it is inevitably absorbed and carried down to the bottom, and there beat to pieces against the rocks; and when the water relaxes, the fragments thereof are thrown up again. But these intervals of tranquillity are only at the turn of the ebb and flood, and calm weather; and last but a quarter of an hour, its violence gradually returning. When the stream is most boisterous, and its fury heightened by a storm, it is dangerous to come within six miles of it;

boats and ships having been carried away, by not guarding against it before they were within its reach. It like wise happens frequently, that whales come too near the stream, and are overpowered by its violence: and then it is impossible to describe the noise they make in their fruitless struggles to dis-engage themselves. A bear once attempting to swim from Lofoden to Mos-koe, with a design of preying upon the sheep in that island, the stream caught him and bore him down, while he roared so terribly, as to be heard on shore.
Large stocks of fir and pine trees, after being absorbed by the current, rise gree as if bristles grew on them. This plainly shews the bottom to consist of craggy rocks, among which they are whirled to and fro.

Maese, or Meuse, a river, which takes its rise in France, near the village of Meuse, in the department of Upper Marne, and watering Verdun, Stenay, Sedan, Doncherry, Mezieres, and Charleville; enters the Netherlands at Givet, flows to Charlemont, Dinaut, Nanur, Huy, Liege, Maestricht, Ruremonde, Venlo, Grave, Battenburg, Itavestein, and Voorn, where it is joined by the Wahal. At Dort it divides into four principal branches. These form the islands of Ysselmonde, Voorn, and Overflackee, and enter the German ocean, below the Briel, Helvoetsluis, and Goree.

Maeslandsluis, a town of the United Provinces, in Holland, 7 miles S W of Delft. Lon. 4 18 E, lat. 51 57 N.

Maestricht, an ancient and strong town of the Netherlands, about four miles in circumference. The inhabitants are noted for making excellent fire-arms. Both papists and protestants are allowed the free exercise of their religion, and the magistrates are composed of both. It is seated on the Ma-ese, opposite Wyck, with which it communicates by a bridge. This city revolted from Spain in 1579. It was retaken by the prince of Parma in 1579.
In 1632, Frederic Henry prince of Orange reduced it, after a memorable siege; and it was confirmed to the Dutch in 1648. Lewis XIV. took it in 1673; William prince of Orange invested it in vain, in 1676; but, in 1678, it was restored to the Dutch. In 1748, it was besieged by the French, who were permitted to take possession of it on condition of its being restored at the peace then negotiating. In 1794, it was again taken by the French. Maestricht is 15 miles N of Liege, and 55 E of Brussels. Lon. 5 41 E, lat. 50 52 N.

Maeseyck, a town of Germany, in the bishopric of Liege, on the river Maese, eight miles S W of Ruremonde.

Magadoxa, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in Africa, on the coast of Ajan; seated near the mouth of a river of the same name, defended by a citadel, and has a good harbour.
The inhabitants are Mahometans. Lon.
44 0 E, lat. 2 30 N.

Magdalen's Cave, a cave of Germany, in Carinthia, ten miles E of Goritz.
It is divided into several apartments, with a vast number of pillars formed by nature, which give it a beautiful appearance, they being as white as snow, and almost transparent. The bottom is of the same substance.

Magdeburg, a duchy of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, bounded on the N by the old marche of Brandenburg, on the E by the middle marche, on the S by Anhalt and Halberstadt, and on the W by Brunswick.
The parts which are not marshy and overgrown with wood, are very fertile.
It is 60 miles in length and 30 in breadth, and belongs to the king of Prussia.

Magdeburg, a large and ancient city of Germany, capital of a duchy of the same name, with a handsome palace, a fine arsenal, and a magnificent cathedral, which contains the superb manuo-leum of Otho the Great. This city is happily situated for trade having an easy communication with Hamburg by the Elbe, therefore they carry on manufactures of cotton, linen, &c. to a great extent, but their principal merchandise is silk and woollen. It is the strongest place belonging to his Prussian majesty, where his principal magazines and foundries are established. It was taken by storm, in 1631, by the imperial general Tilly, who burnt the town, and massacred the inhabitants, of whom only 80 escaped out of 40,000; and many young women plunged into the Elbe, to escape violation. It is 40 miles W of Brandenburg, and 125 S E of Hamburg. Lon. 11 45 E, lat. 52 11 N.

Magdalena, a river of North America, in Louisiana. It has its source in the mountains which separate Louisiana from New Mexico, and falls into the Pacific Ocean below Madre de Popa to the S W of the bay of St. Lewis.

Magellan, a famous strait of South America, discovered in 1520, by Magellan, a Portuguese in the service of Spain, since which time it has been sailed through by several navigators; but the passage being dangerous and troublesome, they now sail to the Pacific Ocean round Cape Horn. The Spaniards call the country to the N of this strait Tierra Magellanica, and reckon it a part of Chili.

Maggia. See Madia.

Maggiore, or Locarno, a lake of Italy, partly in the duchy of Milan, and partly in the country of the Grisons, being about 35 miles in length and six in breadth.

Magliano, a small but populous town of Italy, in the territory of the pope, and district of Sabina, seated on a mountain, near the river Tiber, 30 miles S W of Spoleto, and 30 N of Rome. Lon. 12 35 E, lat. 42 25 N.

Magnavacca, a town of Italy, in the Ferrarese, with a fort, seated at the mouth of the lake of Comacchio, in the gulf of Venice, 18 miles N of Ravenna. Lon. 12 4 E, lat. 44 52 N.

Magnezia. See Manachia.

Maguy, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise and late province of the Isle of France, 32 miles N W of Paris. Lon. 1 34 E, lat. 49 10 N.

Magra, a river of Italy, which rises in the Appennines, in the valley of Magra, washes Pont-Remoli and Sarzana, below which it falls into the Mediterranean.

Magra, a valley in the duchy of Tuscany, 27 miles in length and 15 in breadth.

Maguelone, a lake of France, in the department of Herault and late province of Languedoc, near a town of the same name, which is seated on the coast of the Mediterranean, into which the lake enters by a canal, the beginning of the famous canal of Languedoc.

Mahadia. See Elmadia.

Mahaleu, a town of Egypt, capital of Garbia. It carries on a considerable trade in linen, cottons, and sal-ammoniac; and the inhabitants have ovens to hatch chickens. Lon. 30 31 E, lat. 31 30 N.

Mahanuddy, or Mahanady, a river of Hindoostan, which takes its rise in the N W part of Berar. It falls by several months into the bay of Bengal, at Catak; these mouths form an assemblage of low woody islands. At the mouth of the principal channel, near False Point, is a fortified island, named Cadjung or Codjung.

Mahrattas, two large and powerful states of India, which derive their name from Marhat, an ancient province of the Deccan. They are called the Poonah, or Western Mahrattas; and the Berar, or Eastern. Collectively they occupy all the S part of Hindoostan Proper, with a large proportion of the Deccan. Malwa, Orissa, Candelah, and Visiapour; the principal parts of Berar, Guzerat, and Agimere; and a small part of Fowlatabad, Agra, and Allahabad, are comprised within their empire, which extends from sea to sea, across the widest part of the peninsula; and from the confines of Agra northward to the river Kishna southward; forming a tract of 1000 miles long and 700 broad. The western state, the capital of which is Ponnah, is divided among a number of chiefs or princes, whose obedience to the paishwah, or head, like that of the German princes to the emperor, is merely nominal at any time; and, in some cases, an opposition of interests begets wars, not only between the members of the empire themselves, but also between the members and the head. Nagpore is the capital of the Eastern Mahrattas. Both these states, with the nizam of the Deccan, were in alliance with the English East India company, in the late war against Tippoo Sultan, regent of Mysore, from whose territories, on the termination of the war, they gained some considerable acquisitions. Their armies are principally composed of light horse.

Maidenhead, a corporate town in Berkshire, with a market on Wednesday. It carries on a pretty considerable trade in malt, meal, and timber; and is governed by a mayor. It is seated on the Thames, over which is a bridge, 12 miles E by N of Reading, and 26 W by N of London. Lon. 0 40 W, lat. 51 32 N.

Maidstone, a borough, and the county town of Kent, with a market on Thursday. It is seated on the Medway, a branch of which runs through the town over which there is a bridge, and enjoys a brisk trade in exporting the commodities of the county, parti-Mainungen, a town of Franconia, capital of a small district belonging to the house of Saxe-Gotha. It is eight miles N of Henneberg. Lon. 10 39 E, lat. 50 46 N.

Majorca, an island formerly subject to the king of Spain, but in 1799 it was taken by the British; it is situate in the Mediterranean Sea, between Ivica and Minorca. It is 60 miles in length and 45 in breadth; is a mountainous country, but produces good corn, olive-trees, and delicate wine. It has no rivers, though there are a great many fine fountains and wells. The inhabitants are robust, lively, and very good sailors.

Majorez, a large rich and strong city, capital of an island of the same name with a bishop's see. The public squares, the cathedral, and the royal palace, are magnificent. It contains 6000 houses, built after the antique manner; a university, more ancient than celebrated. It has 22 churches, besides the cathedral, and the harbour is extremely good. It was taken by the English in 1706, and retaken in 1715. It is seated on the S W side of the island. Lon. 2 15 E, lat. 39 30 N.

Maire, Le, a strait of South America, between Staten Island and Tierra del Fuego, in lat. 55° S. Through this strait ships sometimes sail in their passage to Cape Horn.

Maisey, a town of France in the department of Calvados, and late province of Normandy. Lon. 1 2 W, lat. 49 24 N.

Maixant, St. an ancient town of France, in the department of the two Sevres and late province of Poitou. It is a bishop's see, and carries on a trade in corn, stockings, and woollen stuffs; and is seated on the Sevre, 26 miles S W of Poitiers. Lon. 0 7 W, lat. 46 24 N.

Makran. See Mackeran.

Malabar, the W coast of the peninsula of Hindoostan, lying between 9 and 14° N lat. It is divided among several petty princes and states; but as these are mentioned in their proper places, they need not be enumerated here; especially as the customs and manners of the inhabitants are very different, as well as the productions. However it may be observed, in general, that the inhabitants are all blacks, or at least, of a dark olive complexion, with long black hair, and tolerable features. In some places they are distinguished into tribes, all of which are brought up to the same employments as their parents. These are the Gentoos, of whom see an account under the article Hindoostan.

Malacca, a peninsula in Asia, containing a kingdom of the same name; bounded on the N by Siam, on the E by the ocean, and on the S W by the straits of Malacca, which separate it from Sumatra. It is 600 miles in length and 200 in breadth. It produces few commodities for trade, except tin and elephants teeth; but there are a great many excellent fruits and ronts. The pine-apples are the best in the world; and the cocoa-nuts have shells that will hold an English quart. There is but little corn, and sheep and bullocks are scarce; but hogs and poultry are pretty plentiful. The religion of the natives is a mixture of Mahometanism; and they are addicted to juggling. The inland inhabitants are a savage, barbarous people, who take delight in doing mischief to their neighbours.

Malacca, a seaport, and the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in the peninsula of Malacca. The Dutch had a factory here, which they took from the Portuguese in 1640; and it was taken from them by the English, in August 1795. Malacca is seated on the straits of its own name, 480 miles S E of Acheen. Lon. 101 50 E, lat. 2 30 N.

Malaga, an ancient and strong town of Spain, in Granada, with two castles, a bishop's see, and a good harbour. Its commerce is principally in fruits and wine. It is seated on the Mediterranean, at the foot of a craggy mountain, 15 miles S of Cordova and 235 of Madrid. Lon. 4 10 W, lat. 36 35 N.

Malamocco, a small island and seaport town in the Lagoon of Venice, five miles S of that city.

Malathia, an ancient town of Turkey in Asia, capital of Lesser Armenia, seated on the Arzu, with an archbishop's see. Lon. 43 25 E, lat. 39 8 N.

Malchin, a town of Germany in Lower Saxony, in the dutchy of Mecklenburg, seated on the river Peene, where it falls into the lake Camrow, 10 miles N of Wahren. Lon. 13 12 E, lat. 53 0 N.

Malden, a borough in Essex, with a market on Saturday. It has two Malacca, a peninsula in Asia, containing a kingdom of the same name; on the N by Siam, on the E by the Malay, and on the S W by the Straits of Malacca, which separate it from Sumatra. It is 600 miles in length and 200 in breadth. It produces various commodities for trade, except tin and iron; its climate is very pleasant; it has many excellent fruits and roots. Apples are the best in the East; the cocoa-nuts have shells which hold an English quart. There are also corn, and sheep and bullock; but hogs and poultry are not plentiful. The religion of the Malaccas is a mixture of Mahometanism and Christianity; they are addicted to juggling. The inhabitants are a savage people, who take delight in the chief to their neighbours. Malacca is a seaport, and the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in the East Indies. The Dutch had Malacca in 1640; and it was taken from them by the English in 1795. Malacca is seated on the coast of its own name, 480 miles S of London. Lon. 101 50 E, lat. 2 30 N.

Malaga, an ancient and strong town in Granada, with two castles, a bishop's see, and a good harbour. Its commerce is principally in fruits. It is seated on the Mediterranean at the foot of a craggy mountain, 16 miles S of Cordova and 235 miles S of Malaga. Lon. 4 10 W, lat. 36 35 N.

Maldivas, a small island and sea in the Lagunes of Venice, the capital of that city.

Malatya, an ancient town of Turkey, capital of Lesser Armenia, the Arzi; with an archbishop's see. Lon. 43 25 E, lat. 39 8 N.

Malch, a town of Germany in Saxony, in the duchy of Mecklenburg, seated on the river Peene, which falls into the lake Camrow, 10 miles N of Wahren. Lon. 13 12 E, lat. 53 34 N.

Malton, a borough in Essex, with a market on Saturday. It has two parish churches; a third church, which it had formerly, having been long converted into a freeschool. It is seated on an eminence, near the confluence of the Chelmer with the Blackwater. Vessels of a moderate burden come up to the bridge over the Chelmer, but large ships are obliged to unload at a distance below, in Blackwater Bay. Malden sends two members to parliament, and carries on a considerable trade, chiefly in corn, coal, iron, wine, brandy, and rum. It is 10 miles E of Chelmsford, and 37 N E of London. Lon. 0 41 E, lat. 51 46 N.

Malden, a village in Surry, two miles S E of Kingston, with some gunpowder mills, on a stream that flows from Ewel to Kingston.

Maldives, a cluster of small islands 533 miles S W of Ceylon in the East Indies. The northernmost called Head of the Isles, or Kelly, is in lon. 73 4 E, lat. 7 5 N; and Maldiva, in which the king resides, is in lon. 75 35 E, lat. 4 15 N. Of these there are no less than 1000 in number; all low, sandy, and barren, having only a few cocoa-nuts. The inhabitants are partly Mahometans and partly pagans; and their chief trade is in coiries, a small shell-fish, whose shells serve instead of money.

Malesherbes, a town of France in the department of Loiret. Lon. 26 E, lat. 48 20 N.

Malesroit, a town of France in the department of Morbihan and late province of Bretagne, seated on the Oust, 37 miles E of Port l'Orient. Lon. 2 23 W, lat. 47 45 N.

Malio, Cape of, or St. Angelo, a cape of the Morea at the S entrance of the Gulph of Napoli, 15 miles E of Malvasia.

Malicollo, one of the largest of the New Hebrides, in the Pacific Ocean, lying in 16 15 S lat. and 167 45 E lon. It extends 20 leagues from N to S. Its inland mountains are very high, and clad with forests. Its vegetable productions are luxuriant, and in great variety; cocoa nuts, bread fruit, bananas, sugar-canes, yams, eddoes, turmeric, and oranges. Hogs and common poultry are their domestic animals. The inhabitants appear to be of a race totally distinct from those of the Friendly and Society Islands. Their form, language, and manners, are widely different. They seem to correspond in many particulars with the natives of New Guinea, particularly in their black colour and woolly hair. They go almost quite naked, are of a slender make, have lively, but very irregular ugly features, and tie a rope fast round their belly. They use bows and arrows as their principal weapons, and the arrows are said to be sometimes poisoned. Their keeping their bodies entirely free from punctures is one particular, that remarkably distinguishes them from the other tribes of the Pacific Ocean.

Malling, West, a town in Kent, with a market on Saturday, six miles W of Maidstone, and 30 E by S of London. Lon. 0 33 E, lat. 51 20 N.

Mallow, a small town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, and province of Munster, seated on the Blackwater, 17 miles N of Cork. Lon. 8 32 W, lat. 52 10 N.

Malmedy, a town of the Netherlands, in the bishopric of Liege, with an abbey. It was taken by the French in 1794, seated on the Recht, nine miles S of Limburg, and 40 N of Luxemburg. Lon. 6 2 E, lat. 50 18 N.

Malmistra, an ancient town of Asia in Natolia, with an archbishop's see, seated at the mouth of a river of the same name, which divides it into the Old and New Town. It is 30 miles S E of Terraso. Lon. 36 15 E, lat. 36 50 N.

Malmoe, a seaport of Sweden, in the province of Gothland, seated on the Sound, with a large harbour and a strong citadel. It is 15 miles S E of Copenhagen. Lon. 13 7 E, lat. 53 38 N.

Malshury, an ancient borough in Wiltshire with a market on Saturday. It is pleasantly seated on a hill, on the river Avon which almost surrounds it, over which it has six bridges. In its church, is to be seen the sepulchral monument of king Arthur, who was buried under the high altar. It drives a trade in the woollen manufacture, and sends two members to parliament. It is 26 miles E by N of Bristol, and 95 W of London. Lon. 2 0 W, lat. 51 34 N.

Malst, St. a seaport of France, in the department of Morbihan, and late province of Bretagne, with an episcopal see of the province of Bretagne. It has a spacious harbour, but difficult of access, on account of the rocks that surround it; it is a trading place, of great importance, defended by a strong castle. It was bombarded by the English in 1693, but without success. In 1758, they landed in Cancele Bay, went to the harbour by land, and burnt about one hundred ships. St. Malo is seated on an island, united to the mainland by a causeway. It is chiefly inhabited by seafaring men who in the time of war fit out a great many privateers to cruise upon the English coast, 17 miles N W of Dol, and 205 W of Paris. Lon. 1 57 W, lat. 48 39 N.

Motruia, a small island of Italy, on the coast of Tuscany, 10 miles W of Leghorn. Lon. 10 4 E, lat. 43 34 N.

Malpartido, a town of Spain, in Estramadura, 14 miles S of Placentia. Lon. 5 30 W, lat. 39 36 N.

Matpus, a town in Cheshire, with a market on Monday. It is seated on a high eminence, near the river Dee, 15 miles S E of Chester, and 166 N W of London. Lon. 2 45 W, lat. 53 2 N.

Malplaquet, a village of Austrian Hainault. It is famous for a victory gained over the French, by the duke of Marlborough, in 1709, and sometimes called the Battle of Blaregnies, from an adjacent village, and is seven miles from Mons.

Malta, an island of the Mediterranean, between Africa and Sicily, 20 miles long and 12 broad. It was formerly reckoned a part of Africa, but now belongs to Europe. It was anciently little else than a barren rock; but such quantities of soil have been brought from Sicily, that it is now become a fertile island, though it does not grow corn sufficient to support the inhabitants. Here are cultivated large quantities of lemon trees, cotton trees, and vines, which produce excellent wine. The heat is so excessive, that the water breeds great numbers of gnats, which are the plague of the country. The number of the inhabitants is said to be 90,000. The common people speak Arabic, but the better sort Italian. After the taking of Rhodes, the emperor Charles V. gave this island to the grand master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem. It was attacked in 1566 by the Turks, who were obliged to abandon the enterprise, with the loss of 30,000 men. In 1798 the grand master treacherously delivered up Malta to the French under the command of Buonaparte, but it was taken by the English after a blockade of near two years, and is still possessed by them. The knights of Malta, formerly consisted of eight nations; but now they are but seven, the English having forbidden them. They are obliged to suppress all pirates, and are at perpetual war with the Turks and other Mahometans. They are all under a vow of celibacy and chastity; and yet they make no scruple of taking Grecian women for mistresses. Malta is 60 miles S of Sicily. Valetta is the capital.

Malta, Melita, or Citta Vecchia, an ancient city of the island of Malta. The city of Valetta has certainly the happiest situation that can be imagined. It stands upon a peninsula between two of the finest ports in the world, which are defended by almost impregnable fortifications. That on the south side of the city is the largest. It runs about two miles into the heart of the island; and is so very deep, and surrounded by such high grounds and fortifications, that they assured us the largest ships of war might ride here in the most stormy weather, almost without a cable. This beautiful basin is divided into five distinct harbours, all equally safe, and each capable of containing an immense number of shipping. The mouth of the harbour is scarcely a quarter of a mile broad, and is commanded on each side by batteries that would tear the strongest ship to pieces before she could enter. Besides this, it is fronted by a quadruple battery, one above the other, the largest of which is a flour d'eau, or on a level with the water. These are mounted with about 90 of their heaviest artillery: so that this harbour I think, may really be considered as impregnable; and indeed the turks have ever found it so, and I believe ever will. The harbour on the N side of the city, although they only use it for fishing, and as a place of quarantine, would, in any other part of the world, be considered as inestimable. It is likewise defended by very strong works; and in the centre of the basin is an island on which they have built a castle and a lazaret. The fortifications of Malta are indeed a most stupendous work. All the boasted catacombs of Rome and Naples are a trifle to the immense excavations that have been made in this little island. The ditches, of a vast size, are all cut out of the solid rock. These extend Manilla, a large and populous city, capital of Luconia and the other Philippine Islands. Most of the public structures are built of wood, on account of the frequent earthquakes, by one of which, in 1617, a mountain was levelled; in 1625 a third part of the city was overthrown by another, when 3000 persons perished in the ruins; and, the next year, there was another less violent. This city is seated on the SE side of the island, where a large river falls into the sea, and forms a noble bay 30 leagues in compass, to which the Spaniards have given the name of Bahua, because the river runs out of the great lake Bahi, which lies at the distance of six leagues behind it. In compass it is two miles, in length one third of a mile; the shape irregular, being narrow at both ends, and wide in the middle. On the S it is washed by the sea, and on the N and E by the river; being also strongly fortified with walls, bastions, forts, and batteries. Manilla contains about 30,000 souls, who are a very motly race. Here stands the arsenal where the galleons are built, for which there are from 300 to 600 or 800 men constantly employed, who are relieved every month, and while upon duty, are maintained at the king's expence. Margate, a seaport in Kent, in the isle of Thanet. It has much increased of late years, by the great resort to it for sea-bathing. Great quantities of corn are exported hence, and vessels are frequently passing to and from the coast of Flanders. There are also regular passage boats, to and from London, some of which are elegantly fitted up. It is 14 miles N of Deal, and 72 E by S of London. Lon. 1 28 E, lat. 51 24 N.

Margentheim, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, subject to the grand master of the Teutonic order, seated on the river Tauber, 16 miles S W of Wurtzburg. Lon. 8 50 E, lat. 49 30 N.

Margozza, a town of Italy in the Milanese, situate near a small lake from which it takes its name.

Marian Islands. See Latrones.

Maria, St. an island of the Indian Ocean, five miles from Madagascar. It is 27 miles in length and five in breadth; well-watered, and surrounded by rocks. The air is extremely moist, for it rains almost every day. It is inhabited by about 600 negroes, but seldom visited by ships passing that way.

Maria, St. the most southern of the Azores, or Western Islands, in the Atlantic, producing plenty of wheat, and has about 5000 inhabitants.

Maria, St. a considerable town of Spain, in Andalusia, with a small castle. It was taken by the English and Dutch in 1702; and is seated on the Guadaleta, at the mouth of which is a tower, and a battery, 18 miles N of Cadiz. Lon. 6 6 W, lat. 36 39 N.

Maria, St. a considerable town of Terra Firma Proper, in the audience of Panama, built by the Spaniards after they had discovered the gold mines that are near it, and soon after taken by the English. It is seated at the bottom of the gulf of St Michael, at the mouth of a navigable river of the same name. Lon. 78 12 W, lat. 7 43 N.

Mariagalante, one of the Leeward Caribbee Islands, in the W Indies, subject to the French, extending 16 miles from N to S, and four from E to W. It is full of hills, and along the E shore are lofty perpendicular rocks, that shelter vast numbers of tropical birds. It has several large caverns, Marmande, a town of France, in the department of Lot and Garonne and late province of Guienne. It carries on a great trade in corn, wine, and Brandy, and is seated on the Garonne, 40 miles S E of Bourdeaux, and 320 S by W of Paris. Lon. 0 15 E, lat. 44 20 N.

Marmora, a sea between Europe and Asia, which communicates with the Archipelago, by the strait of Gallipoli on the S W, and with the Black Sea, by the strait of Constantinople on the N E. It has two castles, one on the Asian, and one on the European side, is 120 miles in length, and 50 in breadth, and was anciently called the Propontis.

Marmora, the name of four islands in the sea of the same name. The largest is about 30 miles in circumference, and they all produce corn, wine, and fruits.

Marmora, a celebrated cascade of Italy, in the duchy Spoleto, three miles from Terni.

Marne, a town of Persia, in the province of Chorazin.

Marne, a department of France, including part of the late province of Champagne. It takes its name from a river which rises near Langres, and flowing N W joins the Seine, a little above Paris. Rheims is the archiepiscopal see, but Chalons is the capital.

Marne, Upper, a department of France, including part of the late province of Champagne. Chaumont is the capital.

Marnhull, a village in Dorsetshire, on the Stour. The church is an ancient lofty building; the tower of which fell down in 1710, in time of divine service, but was handsomely rebuilt.

Maro, a town of Italy, on the coast of Genoa, in a valley of the same name, eight miles N W of Oneglia, and 48 W S W of Genoa. Lon. 7 41 E, lat. 44 55 N.

Marogna, a town of Romania, with a Greek archbishop's see, seated near the Mediterranean, 150 miles S W of Constantinople. Lon. 25 41 E, lat. 40 59 N.

Marotier, a town of France, in the department of Lower Rhine and late province of Alsace, with a late Benedictine abbey, 18 miles N W of Strasburg. Lon. 7 33 E, lat. 48 38 N.

Marpurg, a strong town of Germany, in the landgravate of Hesse Cassel, with a university, a castle, a palace, a handsome square, and a magnificent town-house. It is seated on the river Lahn, 15 miles S of Waldeck, and 47 S W of Cassel. Lon. 9 0 E, lat. 50 33 N.

Marquesas, a group of islands in the S Pacific Ocean, of which the most considerable are, St. Christina and St. Pedro. Captain Cook, in his second voyage, lay some time at the first of these, which is situate in lon. 139 9 W, and lat. 9 55 S. The products of these islands are breadfruit, bananas, plantains, cocoa nuts, scarlet beans, paper mulberries, of the bark of which their cloth is made, casuarinas, with other tropical plants and trees, and with hogs and fowls. They have also plenty of fish. Mr. Foster says he never saw a single deformed, or even ill-proportioned man among the natives; all were strong, tall, well limbed, and active in the highest degree. Their arms are clubs and spears, and their government, like that of the Society Islands, monarchical. But they are not quite so cleanly as the inhabitants of the Society Isles, who, in that respect, surpass, perhaps, any other people in the world. The drink of the Marquesans is purely water, cocoa nuts being rather scarce. They are much given to pilfering, like the lower sort among the Otahitians. Their music, musical instruments, dances, and canoes, very much resemble those of Otahite. In short the inhabitants of the Marquesas, Society, and Friendly Islands, Easter Island, and New Zealand, seem to have all the same origin, their language, manners, customs, &c. bearing a great affinity in many respects.

Mur-Forest, a district in Aberdeenshire, consisting of vast woodland mountains, which occupy the western angle of the county. The river Dee rises among these mountains.

Marsal, a town of France, in the department of Meurthe and late province of Lorrain, remarkable for its salt-works, and seated on the Selle, in a marsh of difficult access; which, with the fortifications, renders it an important place. It is 17 miles N E of Nanci. Lon. 6 41 E, lat. 48 49 N.

Marsala, a populous and strong town of Sicily, in the valley of Mazara. It is built on the ruins of the ancient Lilybæum, 53 miles S W of Palermo. Lon. 12 29 E, lat. 38 4 N.

ty, a castle, a palace, a square, and a magnificent church, is seated on the river S of Walleck, and 47 miles S of Palermo, Lon. 9 0 E, lat. 50 35 N.

A group of islands in the Mediterranean Sea, of which the most famous are St. Christina and St. Paul, discovered by Cook, in his second voyage, in the year 1770, and situated in lon. 139 9 W, and lat. 50 35 N.

The products of these islands are breadfruit, bananas, plantains, scarlet beans, paper mulberry, and the bark of which their casuarinas, with other trees, and with which they have also plenty. Foster says he never saw a more deformed, or even ill-proportioned, among the natives; all tall, well limbed, and of the highest degree. Their arms and spears, and their dress, are like that of the Society Islands. But they are not so civilized as the inhabitants of the Society Islands, who, in that respect, are superior to any other people in the world. The drink of the Marquesas is water, cocoa nuts being the most common. They are much given to the lower sort of amusements. Their music, dances, and canoes, resemble those of Otaheite. The inhabitants of the Marquesas, and Friendly Islands, Tonga, and New Zealand, all the same origin, their customs, &c. bear a strong resemblance to each other in many respects.

A district in Aberdeenshire, of vast woodland which occupy the western part of the county. The river Dees flows through these mountains.

A town of France, in the department of the Gironde, and late province of Gascony, remarkable for its salt-works on the Selle, in a fertile soil, which, with its salt access, renders it an important town. It is 17 miles N E of Bordeaux, Lon. 10 54 1 E, lat. 48 49 N.

A populous and strong town in the valley of Mazara. It is situated on the ruins of the ancient city of Mazara, 15 miles S W of Palermo, Lon. 13 4 N, lat. 38 4 N.

Marsalquivier, or Marsalquivier, a strong and ancient town of Africa, on the coast of Barbary, in the kingdom of Algiers, with one of the best harbours in Africa. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1752, and is seated on a rock, near a bay of the Mediterranean, three miles from Oran. Lon. 0 10 W, lat. 36 1 N.

Marsilles, a strong city of France, in the department of the Mouths of the Rhone and late province of Provence. It was lately an episcopal see, and the inhabitants, before the late revolution were computed at 100,000, but now are only 80,000. It is seated on the Mediterranean, at the upper end of a gulf, covered and defended by many small islands; and it is partly on the declivity of a hill, and partly in a plain. It is divided into the Old and the New Town. The houses are not so well built in the Old as in the New, the first appears like an amphitheatre to the vessels which enter the port; but the streets are dirty, narrow, and steep. In this part is the principal church, built by the Goths, on the ruins of the temple of Diana. The New Town is a perfect contrast to the Old, with which it communicates by a most beautiful street; and its other streets, the squares, and the public buildings are beautiful. The variety of dresses and languages which are seen and heard here, are surprising, and on that account this city has been called Europe in Miniature. The port is a basin of an oval form, 3480 feet long, by 960 in its widest part, with 18 or 20 feet depth of water; and is defended by a citadel and a fort. In 1649, the plague raged with great violence, and with still greater in 1720, when it carried off 50,000 of the inhabitants. In 1793, Marsilles revolted against the French National Convention, but was very soon reduced. It is 13 miles N W of Toulon, and 362 S by E of Paris. Lon. 5 37 E, lat. 43 18 N.

Marshfield, a post town in Plymouth county, Massachusetts; situated near Marshfield point, 36 miles S E of Boston.

Marshfield, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Tuesday, seated on the Cotswold Hills, 11 miles E of Bristol, and 102 W of London. Lon. 2 15 W, lat. 51 30 N.

Marsico Nuovo, a town of Naples, in Principato Citeriore, with a bishop's see. It is seated at the foot of the Appennines, near the river Agri, 73 miles S E of Naples. Lon. 15 49 E, lat. 40 28 N.

Marstrand, a small island in the Cattegat, which for its strength is called the Gibraltar of Sweden, is a rocky island, about two miles in circumference; the town, which lies on the eastern side, contains about 160 houses, and about 1,200 inhabitants. Since the peace the commerce has greatly diminished, and the inhabitants now chiefly subsist by the herring fishery. The harbour is extremely secure and commodious, but of difficult entrance, and in tempestuous weather dangerous, without a pilot of the place. It is capable of containing 200 vessels, and of sufficient depth for the largest. It is 23 miles N W of Gotheborg. Lon. 11 30 E, lat. 57 59 N.

Marta, a town of Italy, in the patriarchy of St. Peter, and in the duchy of Castro, seated on a lake of the same name, called also Bolsena, 35 miles N of Rome. Lon. 12 40 E, lat. 42 26 N.

Martaban, a province of Asia, in the kingdom of Pegu, on the Bay of Bengal. The soil is fertile in rice, fruits, and wines of all kinds. It is subject to the king of Burmah, who, in 1754, subdued the kingdom of Pegu, and rendered it a dependant province.

Martaban, the capital of a province of the same name in Pegu. In the wars between Pegu and Siam, ships were sunk at the entrance of the harbour to choke it up, before which it was a trading place. It is seated on the bay of Bengal, 80 miles S of the city of Pegu. Lon. 96 56 E, lat. 15 30 N.

Martago, a town of Spain, in the province of Leon.

Martel, a town of France, in the department of Lot and late province of Querey, seated near the Dordogne, 18 miles E of Sarlat. Lon. 1 44 E, lat. 44 51 N.

Martha, St. a province of Terra Firma, bounded on the N by the Caribbean Sea, on the E by Venezuela, on the S by New Granada, and on the W by Carthage. It is 300 miles in length, and 200 in breadth; is a mountainous country, and the land very high. Here the famous ridge of mountains begin, called the Cordillera-de-los-Indus, or the Andes, which run the whole length of South America, from

N to S. It abounds with fruits proper to the climate, and there are mines of gold and precious stones, and salt-works.

Martha, St. the capital of a province of the same name in Terra Firma, with a bishop's see, and a harbour surrounded by high mountains. It was once flourishing and populous, when the Spanish galleons were sent thither, but is now almost come to nothing. The air about the town is wholesome and the houses are built of canes, and covered mostly with palmeto leaves. It is seated on one of the mouths of the Rio Grande, 1000 miles W by S of Rio-de-la-Hacha. Lon. 73 56 W, lat. 11 24 N.

Martha's Vineyard, an island of North America, near the coast of Massachusetts, 80 miles S of Boston. The inhabitants apply themselves chiefly to their fisheries, in which they have great success. Lon. 70 22 W, lat 41 16 N.

Marthalen, a considerable town of Switzerland, in that part of the county of Kyburg, subject to Zoric. It is seated near the Rhine, six miles S of Schaffhausen.

Martiques, a seaport of France, in the department of the Mouths of the Rhone and late province of Provence. It is seated near a lake, 12 miles long and five broad, which is navigable throughout, but less considerable than it was formerly, but whence they get very fine fish and excellent salt. Martiques is 20 miles N W of Marseilles. Lon. 52 E, lat. 43 19 N.

Martin, Cape, a promontory of Valencia, in Spain, which separates the gulf of Valencia from that of Alicante. Lon. 0 36 E, lat. 38 54 N.

Martin, St. a town of France in the isle of Rhe, with a harbour and strong citadel, 15 miles W of Rochelle. Lon. 1 17 W, lat. 46 10 N.

Martin, St. one of the Leeward Caribbean Islands, in the West Indies, lying to the N W of St. Bartholomew, and to the S W of Anguilla. It is 42 miles in circumference, has neither harbour nor river, but several salt-pits. It was long jointly possessed by the French and Dutch; but at the commencement of the present war, the former were expelled by the latter. Lon. 63 0 W, lat. 8 14 N.

40 miles in length, and 100 in circumference. It was taken by the English from the French in 1794. There are many high mountains covered with trees, as well as several rivers and fertile valleys, but they will not bear either wheat or vines; however, the former is not much wanted, for the natives prefer cassava to wheat bread. It produces sugar, cotton, ginger, indigo, chocolate, aloes, pimento, plantains, and other tropical fruits; and is extremely populous, some of the ancient inhabitants still remain. It has several safe and commodious harbours, well fortified. Fort St. Pierre, the principal place, is in lon. 61 20 W, lat. 14 14 N.

Martinburg, a post town in Berkeley county, Virginia, 19 miles S W of Hagerstown in Maryland, and about 18 N W of Harper's ferry on the Potowmac.

Masbrough, a flourishing village, in Yorkshire, on the river Don, adjoining the bridge of Rotherham. All sorts of hammered and cast iron goods are made here, from the most trifling article to a large cannon, of which great quantities are exported.

Mascat, a town of Asia on the coast of Arabia Felix, with a castle on a rock. It is seated at the bottom of a small bay, and was fortified, in 1650, by the Portuguese; but afterward taken by the Arabs, who put all the garrison to the sword, except 18, who turned Mahometans. It is very strong both by nature and art, though the buildings are mean. The cathedral, built by the Portuguese, is now the king's palace. There are neither trees, shrubs, nor grass to be seen on the sea-coast near it, and only a few date-trees in a valley at the back of the town, though they have all things in plenty. The weather is so hot from May to September, that no people are to be seen in the streets from ten in the morning till four in the afternoon. The bazars or market places are covered with the leaves of date-trees, laid on beams which reach from the housetops on one side to those on the other. The religion of the inhabitants is Mahometanism, and yet, contrary to the custom of the Turks, they suffer any one to go into their mosques. The products of the country are horses, dates, fine brimstone, coffee, and ruinosa, a root that dies red. Lon. 57 26 E, lat. 24 0 N.

Mas-D'Asil, a town of France, in the department of Arriège and late county of Foix, with a late rich Benedictine abbey. It is seated on the rivulet Rise, eight miles S W of Pamiers.

here, opposite Pendennis castle, on the E side of Falmouth haven, for the better security of that important port. It sends two members to parliament and is three miles E of Falmouth, and 250 W by S of London. Lon. 4 56 W, lat. 50 8 N.

Maximin, St. a town of France, in the department of Var and late province of Provence. Before the revolution, here was a convent for Dominicans, on which they pretended to preserve the body of Mary Magdalen, which brought them great riches by the resort of superstitious visitors. It is seated on the Argens, 20 miles N of Toulon. Lon. 5 57 E, lat. 43 30 N.

May, a small island of Scotland, at the mouth of the frith of Forth, seven miles S E of Crail. It is surrounded by rocks which render it almost inaccessible. It has a lighthouse, of great benefit to vessels entering the frith.

May, Cape, a cape of North America, on the N side of the mouth of the Delaware. Lon. 75 W, lat. 39 0 N.

Mayahoun, a very ancient city of Pegu, situated on the Irrawaddy. It stretches two miles along the margin of the river, and is distinguished by numerous gilded temples, and spacious convents, and a great variety of tall wide-spreading trees gives it an air of venerable grandeur. Its quays are frequented by great numbers of trading boats some of them of 60 tons burden. The neighbourhood is fruitful in rice, of which large quantities are exported to Ummerrampoora, the capital of the Birman dominions.

Mayence. See Mentz.
Mayenne. See Maine.

Mayo, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, 62 miles long and 52 broad; bounded on the E by Roscommon, on the S by Galway, on the W and N by the Atlantic, and on the N E by Sligo. It is a fertile country, and abounds in cattle, deer, hawks, and honey. It contains 75 parishes, and sends four members to parliament. The principal town, of the same name, is much decayed. Lon. 9 39 W, lat. 53 40 N.

Mayo, or the Isle of May, one of the Cape de Verd Islands, in the Atlantic Ocean, 300 miles from Cape de Verd in Africa, about 17 miles in circumference. The soil in general is very bar-ren, and water scarce; but there are plenty of heeves, goats, and asses; as also, some corn, yams, potatoes, plantains, figs, and watermelons. The chief commodity is salt, with which many English ships are freighted in the summer time. Pinosa is the principal town, and has two churches. The inhabitants are negroes, who speak the Portuguese language, and many of them go naked. Lon. 23 0 W, lat. 15 10 N.

Mazagan, a strong town of Africa in the kingdom of Morocco, seated near the Atlantic, eight miles W of Azamor, and 120 N of Morocco. Lon. 8 15 W, lat. 33 12 N.

Mazara, an ancient town of Sicily, capital of a fertile valley of the same name, with a good harbour and a bishop's see, 25 miles S W of Trapani. Lon. 12 30 E, lat. 37 53 N.

Meaco, a city of the island of Nippon, in Japan, of which it was formerly the capital. It is the great magazine of all the manufactures in Japan, and the principal place for trade. The inhabitants are said to be 600,000. Lon. 134 25 E, lat. 35 30 N.

Meadia, a town of Hungary, in the bannat of Temeswar, seated on the N side of the Danube, 15 miles E of Belgrade. It was dismantled by the Turks in 1738. Lon. 12 0 E, lat. 45 0 N.

Meadsville, the principal town of Crawford county, Pennsylvania, situate on the E side of French creek, 25 miles N W of Fort Franklin. Here is a post office.

Meao, a small island, one of the Moluccas, in the Indian Ocean, with a good harbour. Lon. 127 5 E, lat. 1 12 N.

Mearns. See Kincardineshire.

Meath, or East Meath, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 36 miles long, and 35 broad; bounded on the N by Cavan and Louth, on the E by the Irish Sea and Dublin, on the S by that county and Kildare, and on the W by West Meath. It contains 139 parishes and sends 14 members to parliament. Trim is the capital.

Meath, West, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster; bounded on the N by Cavan, on the NE and E by East Meath, on the S by King's county, on the W by Roscommon, from which it is separated by the Shannon, and on the N W by Longford. It is one of the most populous and fertile counties in Ireland, contains 62 parishes, and sends ten members to parliament. Mullenger is the county town.

Meaux, an ancient and lately an episcopal town of France, in the department of Seine and Marne and late province of the Isle of France, with a bishop's see, seated on the Marne which divides it into two parts. It is 10 miles N W of Colomiers, and 25 N E of Paris. Lon. 2 58 E, lat. 48 58 N.

Mecan, a large river of Thibet. It rises in that country and flowing S E through Laos and Cambodia, falls by two mouths into the Eastern Ocean, and forms an island below the city of Cambodia, which here gives name to the eastern branch.

Mecca, an ancient and very famous town of Asia, in Arabia the Happy; seated on a barren spot, in a valley, surrounded with little hills, about a day's journey from the Red Sea. It is a place of no strength, having neither walls nor gates, and the buildings are very mean. That which supports it is the resort of a great many thousand pilgrims annually, for the shops are scarcely open all the year besides. The inhabitants are poor, very thin, lean, and swarthy. The hills about the town are very numerous, and all consist of a blackish rock, and some of them are half a mile in circumference.

On the top of one of them is a cave, where they pretend Mahomet usually retired to perform his devotions, and hither they affirm the greatest part of the alcoran was brought him by the angel Gabriel. The town has plenty of water, and yet little garden stuff; but there are several sorts of good fruits to be had, such as grapes, melons, water-melons, and cucumbers. There are also plenty of sheep brought thither to be sold to the pilgrims. It stands in a very hot climate, and the inhabitants usually sleep on the tops of their houses, for the sake of coolness. The temple of Mecca, has 42 doors, and its form resembles the Royal Exchange in London, but is near ten times as large. It is open in the middle, and the ground covered with gravel, except in two or three places that led to the Beat-Allah through certain doors, and these are paved with short stones. There are cloisters all round, and in the sides are little rooms or life. The Beat-Allah stands in the middle of the temple, is a square structure, each side about 20 paces long, and 24 feet high; covered all over from top to bottom with a thick sort of silk, and the middle embroidered with letters of gold, each letter being about two feet in length, and two inches broad. The door is covered with silver plates, and there is a curtain before it thick with gold embroidery.

This Beat is the principal object of the pilgrims devotion, and is open but two days in the space of six weeks, namely, one day for the men, and the next for the women. Within there is only two wooden pillars in the middle to support the roof, with a bar of iron fastened thereto, on which hang three or four silver lamps. The walls on the inside are marble, and covered with silk, unless when the pilgrims enter. About 12 paces from the Beat is the sepulchre of Abraham, as they pretend, and they affirm that he erected the Beat-Allah. The tomb is handsome enough, and not unlike those of people of fashion in England. When they have performed their devotions here, they repair to a gibel or hill, which however is not large enough to contain them all at once, for there are no less than 70,000 pilgrims every year. When certain ceremonies are over, they then receive the title of hadgies or saints, and the next morning they move to a place where they say Abraham went to offer up his son Isaac, which is about two or three miles from Mecca; here they pitch their tents, and then throw seven small stones against a little square stone building. This, as they affirm, is performed in defiance of the devil. Every one then purchases a sheep, which is brought for that purpose, eating some of it themselves, and giving the rest to the poor people who attend upon the occasion. It is 25 miles from Jodda, the seaport town of Mecca, and 220 S E of Medina. Lon.

Mecklenburgh, a dutchy of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony; bounded on the N by the Baltic, on the E by Pomerania, on the S by Brandenburg, and on the W by Holstein and Lunenburg. It extends 135 miles in length, and 90 where broadest. It is a fruitful country well watered with inland lakes and rivers, and abounds in corn, pastures, and game. Its situation on the Baltic, renders it very convenient for foreign trade. This country was formerly subject to one prince, but in 1592 on the death of the sovereign, it was divided between his two sons, the one possessing the dutchy of Mecklenburg Schwerin, and the other the dutchy of Mecklenburgh Strelitz.

Mecklenburg a post town and the capital of Mecklenburg county, Virginia; situated on the N side of Roanoke river, about 65 miles S W of Petersburg, on the Appomatox.

Mecklin, a city of the Austrian Netterlands, capital of a district of the same name, with an archbishop's see.
It consists of several small islands made by artificial canals, over which are a great many bridges; and its cathedral is a superb structure, with a very high steeple. Here is a great foundry for ordnance of all kinds; and it is famous for fine lace, and a sort of beer; which is sent into the neighbouring provinces. The territory of this town is a lordship, which comprehends two small districts, containing nine towns of little consequence, and some villages.
It submitted to the duke of Marlborough in 1706, and was taken by the French in 1746, but restored in 1748.
In 1792, the French again took it, evacuated it the next year, and re-entered it in 1794. It is seated on the Den-der, 10 miles N E of Brussels, and 15 S E of Antwerp. Lon. 4 34 E, lat. 51

Mechoachan, a province of New Spain, in the audience of Mexico; bounded on the N W by New Biscay, on the N E by Panuco, on the E by Mexico Proper, on the S by the Pacific Ocean, and on the W by New Galicia. It is 200 miles in circumference, and is very rich, abounding in all the necessaries of life. It has also mines of silver and copper, great plenty of cocoa nuts, and much silk.

Mechoachan, or Valladolid, a considerable town of New Spain, capital of the province of Mechoacan, with a bishop's see. It is seated near a great lake 110 miles W of Mexico. Lon.

Medford, a post town in Middlesex county, Massachusetts, on the Mystic river, five miles N W of Boston, with 1114 inhabitants in 1800.

Medina, a town of Arabia Deserta, celebrated for being the burial place of Mahomet. It is a small, poor place, but walled round, and has a large mosque, but nothing like the temple at Mecca. In one corner is a place 14 paces square, with great windows, and brass gates; and in the middle, the tomb of Mahomet, inclosed with curtains, and lighted by a great many lamps. The tomb is not exposed to any, except the eunuchs appointed to take care of it, and to light the lamps; but the story of its being suspended in the air by a loadstone is known to be a fiction. Medina is called the city of the Prophet, because here he was protected by the inhabitants when he fled from Mecca; and here he was first invested with regal power. The time of his death was in 637; but the Mahometan epoch begins in 622, from the time of his flight. It is seated on a plain, abounding in palm-trees, 200 of Paris. Lon. 3 35 E, lat. 44 31 N.

Mendip-Hills, a mountainous tract, in the N E of Somersetshire, famous for its coal, calamine, and lead; the latter said to be of a harder quality than that of other counties. Copper, manganese, bole, and red ochre, are also found in these hills. On their summits are large swampy flats, dangerous to cross.

Menarah, a province of the kingdom of Fezzan, with a town of the same name, 60 miles S of Mourzook. - Although much of the land in this province is a continued level of hard and barren soil, the quantity of irons, a species of fossil alkali, that floats on the surface, or settles on the banks of its numerous smocking lakes, has given it a higher importance than that of the most fertile districts.

Menchould, St. an ancient and considerable town of France, in the department of Marne and late province of Champagne. It is seated in a morass, on the river Aisne, between two rocks, with a castle advantageously situated; it has suffered several sieges, but its fortifications are now demolished. It was here, on September 20, 1792, the victorious Prussians were first checked by the French, by which they were at last compelled to a disgraceful retreat.
 St. Menchould is 20 miles N E of Chalons, and 110 E of Paris. Lon. 4 59 E, lat. 49 2 N.

Menie. See Mumia.

Menin, a strongly fortified town of Austrian Flanders, seated on the Lis.
 In 1685, it was almost entirely destroyed by fire. It is the key of the country; and in every war, from the middle of the 17th century, the possession of it has been always of the utmost consequence. It was taken by the French in April 1794, when the garrison (in order to save the unhappy emigrants) bravely forced their way through the enemy. It is eight miles S E of Ypres, and 10 N of Lisse. Lon. 3 9 E, lat. 50

Mentz, an archbishopric and electorate of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and lying upon that river. It is bounded on the N by Weter-avia and Hesse, on the S by Franconia, and the palatinate of the Rhine, and on the W by the electorate of Treves; is 50 miles long, and 20 broad; and is very fertile. The elector is also aove-reign of Eichsfeld, Bissfeld, or Eifeld (a country surrounded by Hesse, Thu-ringia, Grubenhagen, and Calenberg) and of the city and territory of Erfort, in Thuringia.

Mentz, or Mayence, a considerable city of Germany, capital of the electorate of Mentz, with a university, and an archbishop's see. The archbishop is an elector and arch-chancellor of the empire, keeper of the archives and director of the general and particular as-semblies. The northern part of the city is built in an irregular manner, but there are three regular streets called the Blachen, which run parallel to each other from the Rhine, and are cut regularly by cross streets. Here is a cathedral, which is said to be the largest in Germany, in which there is a valuable treasury. Mentz is one of the towns which claim the invention of printing. It was attacked by the French in 1793, but they were defeated before it, both in April and October, by the Austrians, who also relieved it from a blockade of two months, in September 1796. Many of the churches, public buildings, and private houses were destroyed, or greatly injured, during the siege, as well as some fine villages, vineyards, and country houses. Mentz is seated on the Rhine, just below its confluence with the Maine; and opposite to it, on the E side, is the strong town of Cussel, connected with it by a bridge of boats. It is 15 miles W of Francfort, and 75 E of Treves. Lon. 8 10 E, lat. 49 56 N.

Mephen, a town of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, which depends on the bishop of Munster, seated on the Embs, 15 miles N of Lingon, and 50 N W of Munster. Lon. 7 36 E, lat. 52 45 N.

Mequinenza, an ancient town of Spain, in Arragon, strongly defended by a good castle. It is seated at the confluence of the Ebro and Segra, in a fertile country, 39 miles N W of Tortosa, and 180 N E of Madrid. Lon. 0 29 E, lat. 41 36 N.

Mequinez, a city of Fez, in the empire of Morocco, seated in a delightful plain, having a serene and clear air; for which reason the emperor resides in this place in preference to Fez. In the middle of the city, the Jews have a place to themselves, the gates of which are locked every night; and there is an alcald to protect them against the common people, who otherwise would plunder their substance. It is death for them to curse, or lift up a hand against the meanest Moor; and they are obliged to wear black clothes and caps, and to pull off their shoes whenever they pass by a mosque. Close by Mequinez, on the N W side, stands a large negro town, which takes up as much ground as the city, but the houses are not so high, nor so well built. The inhabitants are all blacks, or of a dark tawny colour; and thence the emperor recruits the soldiers for his court. The palace stands on the S side, and is guarded by several hundreds of black eunuchs, who are cleanly dressed, and their knives and scimitars are covered with wrought silver. The houses are very good, but the streets exceedingly narrow, and hardly any of the windows to be seen. The light comes in the back of the houses, where there is a square court, in the middle of which is a fountain; if the house belong to a person of any rank. They are flat at the top; so that in many places they can walk a great way upon them. The women live in the upper apartments, and often visit each other from the tops of the houses. When these go abroad, they have their heads covered with their outward garment, which comes down close to their eyes; and underneath they tie a piece of white cloth, to hide the lower part of their face. They are quite covered all over, except their legs, which are generally naked; but within doors they appear in their hair, and have only a single fillet over their foreheads. Their customs and manners are much the same as those of other Mahometans. Mequinez is 66 miles W of Fez. Lon. 6 6 W, lat. 33 16 N.

Mer, a small town of France, in the department of Loir and Cher, and late province of Blaisois, 10 miles N E of Blois.

Merionethshire, a county of North Wales, bounded on the N by Carnarvonshire and Denbighshire, on the E, by the county of Montgomery, on the S by Cardiganshire, and on the W by the Irish Sea. It is 36 miles long and 34 broad. The face of this county is varied throughout with a romantic mixture of all the peculiar scenery belonging to a wild and mountainous region. The principal rivers are the Dee and Dovy; and it has a great mountain, the Cader Idris, one of the highest in Wales.
 The air of this county is sharp but it feeds great herds of cattle. Merion-ethshire contains six hundreds, four market-towns, 37 parishes, and sends one member to parliament. Harlech is the capital.

Meritz, Meritch, or Merrich, an important fortress and city of the Deccan Mersey, a river, which rises in the N extremity of the Peak in Derbyshire, passes by Warrington, and receives the Weaver at Frodsham, where it forms a broad estuary, below Liverpool, and enters the Irish Sea. This river not only affords salmon, but is visited by annual shoals of smelts, here called sparlings, of a remarkable size and flavour. It is connected by the Staffordshire canal with the Trent and in course with the Irish Sea and the German Ocean.

Mersey Island, an island in Essex, 60 miles S of Evora, and 100 S E of Lisbon. Lon. 7 40 W, lat. 37 30 N.

Merton, a village near Oxford, situated near two military ways. There were intrenchments in the neighbouring woods, supposed to be thrown up by King Ethelred or the Danes, whom he defeated in 871.

Merton, a village in Surrey, seated on the Wandel, seven miles S W of London. It had a celebrated abbey, founded in the reign of Henry I. in which several important transactions took place; particularly at a parliament held here, in 1236, were enacted the famous Provisions of Merton (the most ancient body of laws after Magna Charta) and the barons gave that celebrated answer to the clergy, Nolumus leges Anglie mutare—We will not change the laws of England. Nothing remains of this abbey, but the E window of a chapel; and the walls that surrounded the premises, which are built of flint, are nearly entire, and include about 60 acres. Upon the site of this abbey are two calico manufactures, and a copper-mill; and about 1000 persons are now employed on a spot once the abode of monastic indolence. Merton is 7 miles S W of London.

Merve, the N branch of the river

Meskirk, a handsome town of Germany in the Circle of Sushia, in the country of Furstenburg, 15 miles N of Uberlingen.

Messa, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Morocco. It is composed of three fortified towns, at a small distance from each other, and a temple, built, (as the inhabitants suppose) with the bones of the whale which swallowed Jonah. It is seated at the foot of Mount Atlas, 165 miles S W of Morocco.

Messerburg, a post town in Franklin county, Pennsylvania; situated on the E side of the N mountain, 17 miles S W of Chambersburg, and about 12 N W of Hagerstown Maryland.

M^cConnelstown, a post town in Bedford county, Pennsylvania; situated in the Great Cove, 30 miles E by S of Bedford, the county town.

Messina, an ancient city of Sicily, in the Val-di-Demona, with a citadel, several farts, a spacious harbour, and an archbishop's see. It is five miles in circumference, and has four large suburbs. The harbour, whose quay is above a mile in length, is one of the safest in the Mediterranean, and in the form of a half moon, five miles in circumference, and extremely deep. The viceroy of Sicily, resides here six months in the year; and it is a place of great trade in silk, oil, fruit, corn, and excellent wine, especially since it has been declared a free port. Messina, in 1783, was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake, most of the public places and streets being laid in ruins, but the buildings have since been considerably increased, so that more than one half of the city has been rebuilt, and the people have taken possession of the new houses. It is seated on the sea-side, 110 miles E of Palermo, and 180 S E of Naples. Lon. 15 50 E, lat. 38 10 N.

Meistre, a town of Italy, in the dogado of Venice, 16 miles N E of Padua. Lon. 12 2 E, lat. 45 26 N.

ancient, large, and strong town, in the department of the province of Lorraine, the seat of the bishop and of a prince of the empire. The cathedral is one of the finest in France. The Jews live in a ghetto by themselves, where there is a synagogue, and they may amount to 3000. The sweetmeats here are in high esteem. The town is strongly fortified, and contains the strongest citadels in Europe. The inhabitants are computed to be 10,000. It is the seat of the Moselle, 10 miles N W of Nancy, 37 miles E, and 19 0 N E of Paris, lat. 49 7 N.

Meuse, a department in France, including the late duchy of Bar. It takes its name from the river Meuse, or Maese. Bar-le-Duc is the capital. See Meuse.

Mewari, a considerable town of Japan, in the island of Nippon, with a royal palace, where the king sometimes resides. It is seated on a hill at the foot of which are vast fields of wheat and rice, with fine orchards, full of excellent plums.

Mewat, a hilly and woody tract of Hindoostan Proper, lying on the S W of Delhi, and on the W of Agra, confining the low country, along the W bank of the Jumna, to a comparatively narrow slip, and extending westward about 130 miles in length. From N to S it is 90 miles. Although situated in the heart of Hindoostan, within 25 miles of its former capital, (Delhi) its inhabitants, the Mewatti, have been ever characterised as the most savage and brutal; and their chief employment has been robbery and plunder. In 1265, 100,000 of these wretches were put to the sword; but they are still so famous as thieves and robbers, that parties of them are taken into pay by the chiefs of Upper Hindoostan, in order to distress the countries that are the seat of warfare. Mewat contains some strong fortresses on steep or inaccessible hills, and was almost entirely subject to the late Madajee Sindia, a Mahratta chief.

Mepat-Ali, a town of Persia, in Arabia, famous for the superb and rich mosque of Ali, to which the Persians go in pilgrimage from all parts. However it is not so considerable as it was formerly. It is 100 miles S W of Bagdad. Lon. 42 57 E, lat. 32 0 N.

Mexat-Ocem, a considerable town of Asia, in Persia, which takes its name from a mosque dedicated to Ocem, the son of Ali. It is seated in a fertile country, on the river Euphrates, about 40 miles from Bagdad. Lon. 42 57 E, lat. 33 0 N.

Mexicano, or Adajés, a river of North America, in Louisiana, which empties itself into the gulf of Mexico.

Mexico, a town of North America, capital of New Spain. It was a flourishing place before the Spaniards entered the country, seated on an island, in a salt-water lake, to which there was no entrance, but by three causeways, two miles in length each. It contained about 80,000 houses, with several large temples, full of rich idols, and three palaces, where the emperor resided. Mexico was taken by Cortez, in 1521. As the Mexicans defended themselves from street to street, it was almost ruined, but afterward rebuilt by the Spaniards. It is now the capital of the province of Mexico Proper, of the audience of Mexico and of all New Spain. The streets are so straight, and so exactly disposed, that, in point of regularity, it is the finest city in the world; and the great causeways leading to it, with the want of walls, gates, and artillery, render Mexico extremely remarkable. The great square in the centre of the city, and the public buildings, are magnificent. There are 29 cathedrals and churches, and 22 convents, of the riches of which an idea may be formed from the revenues of the grand cathedral amounting to 80,000*l.* a year, of which the archbishop has 15,000*l.* There is also a tribunal of the inquisition, a mint, and a university. The goldsmiths here are immensely rich, and it carries on a great trade to Europe by St. Juan de Ulhua, and to Asia by Acapulco. This place was overflowed by an inundation, in 1629, in which 40,000 persons were drowned. This obliged the Spaniards to make a great conduit through a mountain, in order to empty the lake: which being done, part of the town became seated on dry land. Mexico is supplied with fresh water by an aqueduct three miles long. It is 200 miles E N E of St. Juan de Ulhua, and 250 N E of Acapulco. Lon. 100 34 W, lat. 20 2 N.

Beau Sea. It lies between 83 and 110° W lon. and extends from 7 30 to 30 40 N. lat. being 2000 miles long, and from 600 to 60 broad. In general, it is a mountainous country, intermixed with many rich vallies; but the highest mountains are near the coast of the Pacific Ocean, many of which are volcanoes. The eastern shore is a flat country, full of bogs and morasses, overflowed in the rainy season, which is at the same time as our summer. Although Mexico is within the torrid zone, the climate is temperate and healthy. No country abounds more with grain, fruits, roots, and vegetables; many of them peculiar to the country, or, at least to America. It is celebrated for its mines of gold and silver, and has quarries of jasper, porphyry, and exquisite marble. Cochineal is almost peculiar to this country; its indigo and cocoa are superior to any in America; and its logwood has long been an important article of commerce. The domestic animals of Europe, particularly, horned cattle, have multiplied here almost with incredible rapidity. Numbers of these having been suffered to run wild, now range over the vast plains, in herds of from 30 to 40,000; they are killed merely for the sake of their hides, which are annually exported, in vast quantities, to Europe. New Spain is divided into the three audiences of Guadalajara, Mexico, and Guatimala. The whole country is governed by a viceroy, the extent of whose jurisdiction, however, has been wisely circumscribed, in the course of this century, by the erection of the four remote provinces of Sonora, Cinaloa, California, and New Navarre, into a separate government.

Mexico, New, a large country of North America, bounded on the W by the gulf of California, on the S by New Spain, on the E by Louisiana, and on the N by unknown countries, so that its extent cannot be ascertained. The air is very temperate, and the soil generally fertile, its mines are rich and its productions various and valuable. This country lies within the temperate zone, and it is chiefly inhabited by native Americans, hitherto unsuldued by the Spaniards. Santa Fe is the capital.

Middlesex, a county of England, bounded on the N by Hertfordshire, on the E by Essex, on the S by Surry and Kent, and on the W by Buckinghamshire. It is the smallest county in England, except Rutlandshire, extending only 22 miles from E to W, and 17 from N to S; but as it contains the two cities of London and Westminster, is by far the richest and most populous county of England. It contains 126 parishes, besides London, and four market towns, and sends eight members to parliament. The air is very pleasant and healthy, to which a fine gravelly soil does not a little contribute. The soil produces plenty of corn, and the county abounds with fertile meadows and gardeners grounds. In a word, the greater part of the county is so prodigiously assisted by the rich compost from London, that the whole of the cultivated part may be considered as a garden. Besides the Thames, the Lea, and the Coln, which are its boundaries to the S and S E, and the W, Middlesex is watered by several small streams; one of which, called the New River, is artificially brought from Amwell, in Herts, for the purpose of supplying London with water.

Milan, a city of Italy, capital of a dutchy of the same name. It was the ancient capital of Lombardy, and although it is thought rather to exceed Naples in size, it does not contain above half the number of inhabitants. It is seated in a delightful plain, between the rivers Adda and Tesin; is ten miles in circumference, and called by the Italians, Milan the Great. It contains many fine palaces, but that of the governor is the most magnificent; and a great number of churches, convents, hospitals, and schools. The cathedral is in the centre of the city, and though it is not so large as St. Peter's, at Rome, it far excels it in the number and excellence of its sculptures and beauty of its ornaments. This vast fabric, which the Milanese call the eighth wonder of the world, is entirely built of solid white marble, and the roof which is vastly high is supported by 160 columns of marble so large that three men cannot fathom them. From the roof hangs a case of crystal, inclosing a nail, which, they say, is one of those by which our Saviour was fixed to the cross. The treasury belonging to this church is reckoned the richest in Italy, next to that of Loretto. The college of St. Ambrose has a library, which, besides a prodigious number of manuscripts, contains, 45,000 printed books; and its superb gallery is adorned with rich paintings. Milan has considerable commerce in grain (especially rice) cattle, and cheese; and has manufactures of silk and velvet stuffs, stockings, handkerchiefs, ribbands, gold and silver lace, and embroideries, woollen and linen cloths, glass, and earthenware in imitation of China. It was taken by the French from the Austrians in 1800. It is the see of an archbishop; and is 70 miles N of Genoa, 72 N E of Turin, and 145 N W of Florence. Lon. 9 16 E, lat. 45 28 N.

Milan, the dutchy of, a considerable country of Italy, bounded on the N by the Swiss and Grisons; on the E by the republic of Venice, and by the dutchies of Parma and Mantua; on the S by the dutchy of Parma and the territory of Genoa; and on the W by Piedmont and Montferrat; being 150 miles in length, and 78 in breadth. The soil is every where fertile in corn, wine, fruits, rice, and olives; there are also plenty of cattle. The rivers are, the Secchia, the Tesin, the Adda, and the Oglio. There are likewise several lakes, the three principal of which are those of Maggiore, Como, and Lugano. This country was formerly possessed by the French, Spaniards, and Germans, who have stamped a character on the inhabitants of this dutchy, different from what prevails in any other part of Italy. This dutchy was entirely subdued by the French in 1796, but was reconquered in 1799 by the Allies under Suwarrow, and taken possession of by Bonaparte in 1800.

Mindanao, the largest of the Philippine islands, next to Luconia. It is 180 miles long and 120 broad, and is governed by a sultan, who is absolute. It is a mountainous country, full of hills and vallies; and the mould is generally deep, black, and fruitful. The sides of the hills and vallies are stony, and yet there are tall trees, of kinds not known in Europe; some of the mountains yield very good gold, and the vallies are well watered with rivulets. The libby trees produce the sago, which the poor people eat instead of bread, three or four months in the year. It produces all sorts of fruit, proper to the climate, besides plenty of rice. The air is temperate; and the winds are easterly one part of the year, and westerly the other; while the former blow, it is fair weather; but while the latter, it is rainy, stormy, and tempestuous. The Mississippi, a river of North America, which receives the waters of the Ohio and Illinois from the E, and of the Missouri, and other rivers from the W. It rises from a considerable lake in the central mountains; its length, to its entrance into the gulf of Mexico, is supposed to be upward of 3000 miles. It is the E boundary of Louisiana. In this river, in lat. 44 30 N, are the falls of St. Anthony, where the stream more than 250 yards wide, falls perpendicularly about 30 feet.

Missouri, a river of North America, whose source is unknown. It joins the Mississippi in lat. 39° N, but is a longer, broader, and deeper river, and is, in fact, the principal stream. It has been ascended by the French traders upwards of 1200 miles, and from its depth and breadth at that distance, appeared to be navigable much higher.

Mitcham, a village in Surry, seated on the Wandle, on which are some snuff-mills, and two calico-printing manufactures. It is eight miles S W of London.

Mittau, a strong town of Poland, the capital of Courland, remarkable for its large ducal palace. It is seated on the Bolderau, 45 miles E of Goldingen, and 270 N N E of Warsaw. Lon. 23 50 E, lat. 56 40 N.

Mocha, or Moka, a considerable town of Arabia Felix, surrounded by walls.

The women, except a small number of the common sort, never appear in the streets in the day time, but visit each other in the evening. When they meet any man in the way, they stand close up against the wall to let them pass. Their dress is much like that of other women of the East, and over all they wear a large veil of painted calico, so thin that they can see through it, without being seen. They have also little buskins of Morocco leather. It carries on a great trade, especially in coffee; and the inhabitants are computed at 10,000, without including the poor Armenians, or the Jews, who inhabit the suburbs. Mocha is seated in a sandy country, near the straits of Babelmandel 240 miles S S W of Suana, and 560 S S E of Mecca. Lon. 44 35 E, lat. 14 0 N.

Molburry, a town in Devonshire, with a market on Thursday. It is seated in a bottom, between two hills, 36 miles S S W of Exeter, and 208 W S W of London. Lon. 3 54 W, lat. 50 23 N.

Molena, an ancient city of Italy, capital of the Modenese, with a bishop's see. It is the usual residence of the duke, and stands in a pleasant and fruitful country, is large and populous, but the streets are narrow and the houses unequal. The cathedral, several of the churches, and some of the monasteries are handsome structures; and the ducal palace is an elegant structure, richly furnished, and contains fine paintings; among others, a famous night-piece of Corregio. The citadel is very regular, but has been often taken, particularly by the king of Sardinia, in 1742. The inhabitants are said to be 40,000; and they make here the best masks for masquerades in all Italy. It is seated between the rivers Secchia and Panaro, 22 miles W by N of Bologna, 34 S by E of Mantua, and 60 N N W of Florence. Lon. 11 0 E, lat. 44 34 N.

Moguls, Country of the, or Western Chinese Tartary, is bounded on the N by Siberia, on the E by Eastern Tartary, on the S by the great Wall and Lea-tong, and on the W by Independent Tartary. The Mogul Tartars have neither towns, villages, nor houses: they form themselves only into wandering hordes, and live under tents, which they transport from one place to another, according as the temperature of the different seasons, or the wants of their flocks require: they pass the summer on the banks of their rivers, and the winter at the foot of some mountain or hill, which shelters them from the cutting N wind. They are naturally clownish, and dirty in their dress, as well as in their tents, where they live amid the dung of their flocks, which when dried, they use for fuel instead of wood. Enemies to labour, they choose rather to be satisfied with the food with which their flocks supply them, than take the trouble of cultivating the earth; it even appears that they neglect agriculture from pride.
During the summer, they live only on milk, which they get from their flocks, using without distinction that of the cow, mare, ewe, goat, and camel.

Their ordinary drink is warm water, in which a little coarse tea has been infused; with this they mix cream, milk, or butter, according to their circumstances. They have also a method of making a kind of spirituous liquor of sour milk, especially of that of the mare.
The Moguls are free, open and sincere.
They pride themselves chiefly on their dexterity in handling the bow and arrow, mounting on horseback, and hunting wild beasts. Polygamy is permitted among them; but they generally have only one wife. They are unacquainted with the use of money, and trade only by barter. They use sheepskins for cloathing, wearing the wool inmost, and the skin on the outside, from which exhales a rank and disagreeable smell, on which account they are called by the Chinese, Stinking Tartars. The religion of the Mogul Tartars is confined to the worship of Fo. They have the most superstitious veneration for their lamas, who are clownish, ignorant, and licentious priests, to whom they attribute the power of calling down hail or rain. All the Moguls are governed by khans, or particular princes, independent of each other; but all subject to the emperor of China, whom they consider as the grand khan of the Tartars. The limits of their respective territories, and the laws by which they are at present governed, were settled by the emperor of China. These tributary khans have not the power of condemning their subjects to death, nor of confiscation; these two cases are reserved for the supreme tribunal established at Peking for the affairs of the Moguls, to which every individual may appeal from the sentence of his prince, who is obliged to appear in person wherever he is cited.
The best cultivated canton of all the Mogul territories is the district of Cart-ching, near the great Wall, where the emperor goes every year to enjoy the pleasure of hunting, and where he generally passes the summer: for that purpose he has caused several beautiful pleasure houses to be built there, the principal of which is Gelo. All the Mogul nations under the Chinese government, may be divided into four principal tribes, which are the Moguls properly so called, the Kalkas,

Mohawk River, a river of North America, which rises in the state of New York, and empties itself, by two mouths, into Hudson's River. About two miles above its junction with that river it has a cataract where the stream, 100 yards wide, falls perpendicularly about 70 feet.

Mohawks, a once powerful tribe of Indians, in North America, living on the Mohawks River. Only one family are left of them in the state of New York, the rest having, in 1776, emigrated, with sir John Johnson, into Canada.

Mohilla, or Mohila, one of the Comora Islands, between the N end of Madagascar and the continent of Africa. The inland parts are mountainous and woody, and there are villages scattered here and there, whose houses are made of reeds and straw. The people are blacks, with great heads, large lips, flat noses, sharp chins, and strong limbs. They go quite naked, except only a few leaves. Their skins are cut and pricked, so as to make several figures on all parts of their bodies. Some of the inhabitants are Mahometans, who have a few wretched mosques, built of wood and straw without, and matted neatly within. This island abounds in animals, such as buffaloes, goats, tortoises, hens, large bats, and camclions; and here are a great number of birds, whose names are not known in Europe. It produces plenty of rice, peas, honey, cocoa-nuts, plantains, oranges, lemons, citrons, pineapples, cucumbers, tamarinds, and sugar-canes. There are several fine streams, and the grass and trees are green all the year, so that in short it is a kind of paradise. Lon. 45 0 E, lat. 11 55 S.

The other principal rivers are the Pruth, Moldau, and Baralalch. The soil is rich, and it abounds in good pastures, which feed a great number of horses, oxen, and sheep: it also produces corn, pulse, honey, wax, fruits, with plenty of game and fowls. The sovereign, who is styled Hospodar, is tributary to the grand scignior, and is obliged to raise a large body of troops at his own expence in time of war. The inhabitants are Christians of the Greek church, and Jassy is the principal town.

Mole, a river in Surry, which runs to Darking, and passing beneath Box Hill, is believed to disappear in its vicinity, and to rise again near Leatherhead. Hence it is supposed to derive its name: but the fact is, that in very dry seasons the waste water is absorbed by a tract of soft ground, two miles in length, called the Swallows, in caverns in the sides of the banks; but not so as to prevent a constant stream from flowing in an open channel above ground. The Mole enters the Thames at E Moulsey.

Montrose, a borough and seaport in Angushire, near the estuary of the South Esk. Over this river, a new bridge was erected in 1795. At high water the town is almost surrounded by the sea; and the harbour is a fine semi-circular basin, with a stone pier. The buildings are neat; and the most remarkable are the town-house, the church, an elegant episcopal chapel, an hospital for lunatics, and its parish church is the largest in Scotland except the parish church of Glasgow. A great number of trading vessels belong to this tow. and a considerable trade is carried on to the Baltic, Hamburg, Ri-ga, Archangel, &c. Malt is likewise made here in great quantities, and its manufactures of sailcloth, linen and thread of late years have become very extensive. The salmon fisheries on the N and S Esk form a valuable branch of commerce. The inhabitants of Mont-Morlachia, a mountainous country in Hungarian Dalmatia, the inhabitants of which are called Morlacks, or Morlacchi. They inhabit the pleasant valleys of Koter, along the rivers Kerna, Cetina, Narenta, and among the inland mountains of Dalmatia. They are said by some, to be of Walachian extraction; but others think their origin involved in the darkness of barbarous ages. The Morlacchi are so different from the inhabitants of the sea-coasts in dialect, dress, disposition and customs, that they seem clearly to be of a different original. With regard to their character, we are informed that they are much injured by their maritime neighbours. The inhabitants of the sea-coast of Dalmatia tell many frightful stories of their avarice and cruelty; but these are all either of an ancient date, or if any have happened in latter times, they ought rather to be ascribed to the corruption of a few individuals, than to the bad disposition of the nation in general; and though thievish tricks are frequent among them, a stranger may travel securely through their country, where he is faithfully escorted, and hospitably treated. Friendship, that among us is so subject to change on the slightest motives, is lasting among the Morlacchi. They have even made it a kind of religious point, and tie the sacred bond at the foot of the altar. The Slavonian ritual, contains a particular benediction for the solemn union of two male or two female friends in the presence of the congregation. The male friends thus united are called Pobratimi, and the female Posestreime, which mean half-brothers and half-sisters. Friendships between these of different sexes are not at this day bound with so much solemnity, though perhaps in more ancient and innocent ages it was also the custom. If discord happens to arise between two friends, it is talked of over all the country as a scandalous novelty; and there has been some examples of it of late years, to the great affliction of the old Morlacchi, who attribute the depravation of their countrymen to their intercourse with the Italians. Wine and strong liquors, of which the nation is beginning to make daily abuse, will of course produce the same bad effects as among others. But as the friendships of the Morlacchi are strong and sacred, so their quarrels are commonly unextinguishable. They pass from the father to the son; and so deeply is revenge rooted in the minds of this nation, that all the missionaries in the world would not be able to eradicate it.

Morlaix, a considerable seaport of France, in the department of Finisterre and late province of Bretagne, with a castle and a tide harbour. The church of Notre-Dame is a singular structure, and the hospital very handsome. The inhabitants carry on a considerable trade in linen, hemp, and tobacco. It is seated on a river of the same name, 30 miles N E of Brest. Lon. 3 46 W, lat. 48 53 N.

Morocco, an empire of Africa, comprehending a considerable part of the ancient Mauritania, lying between 28 and 36° N lat. It is bounded on the W by the Atlantic; on the E by the river Mulvia, which separates it from Algiers; on the N by the Mediterranean; and on the S by mount Atlas. Its greatest length, from N E to S W, is above 590 miles, and, where widest, not more than 260 broad. This empire contains the kingdoms of Sus, Tarridan, Morocco Proper, Tassilet, Sugelmessa, Fez, and Mequinez. The air of this country is pretty pure and temperate, especially near mount Atlas. The soil though sandy and dry in some places, is so fertile in others; and the fruits, as well as the pastures, so good, that it would be a delightful country if it was well cultivated. The inhabitants are Mahometans, of a tawny complexion, robust, and very skilful in managing a horse, and wielding a lance; but they are jealous, deceitful, superstitious, and cruel. There are two sorts of inhabitants; the Arabs, who dwell in moveable villages, composed of about 100 tents, and the Berberics, who are the ancient inhabitants, and live in cities and towns. There are a great number of Christian slaves, and some merchants, upon the coast, besides a multitude of Jews, who carry on almost all the trade; especially by land with the Negroes, to whom they send large caravans, which travel over vast deserts, almost destitute of water. They carry with them woollen goods, silk, salt, &c. and in return, have slaves, gold, and elephants teeth, and out of them the emperor recruits his cavalry. They also send large caravans to Mecca every year, partly out of devotion, and partly for trade, consisting of several thousand camels, horses, and mules. Their commodities are Morocco leather, indigo, cochineal, and ostrich feathers; in return for which they have silks, muslins, calicoes, coffee, and drugs. The deserts abound with lions, tigers, leopards, and serpents of several kinds. The fruits are dates, figs, almonds, lemons, oranges, pomegranates, and many others. There is also flax, and hemp, but little timber. The emperor is absolute, his will being a law, and he often exercises great cruelties. His naval force consists chiefly of rovers, who now and then take large prizes. He can bring 160,000 men into the field, half of which are foot and half horse; but they are poorly armed, and know little of the art of war. It has three capital cities, Morocco, Mequinez, and Fez.

Morocco, one of the capital cities of the kingdom of Morocco, seated in a beautiful valley, formed by a chain of mountains on the N, and those of the Atlas on the S and E. It has nothing to recommend it but its great extent, and the royal palace, which takes up so much ground that it resembles a small city. It is inclosed by strong walls, the circumference of which is eight miles; they are flanked by square towers, and surrounded by a wide and deep ditch. The mosques are more numerous than magnificent. The best houses are enclosed in gardens; but the generality of them serve only to impress the traveller with the idea of a miserable and deserted city. The Jews have a market of their own, and live in a separate town, walled in, and shut up every evening at nine, after which no person can enter or depart, till next morning. Morocco is 90 miles E of Mogador, and 400 S of Gibraltar. Lon. 6 45 W, lat. 31 12 N.

Mosambique, a strait or channel of the Indian Ocean, lying between the E coast of Africa and the island of Madagascar, and between 11 and 25° S lat. It is 240 miles over, in its narrowest place.

Mosambique, a kingdom of Africa, on the W side of a channel of the same name, and on the coast of Zanguebar; consisting of three islands. The principal island, called Mosambique, is not more than three miles in length, and half as much in breadth, and is about two miles from the continent. The air of this country is very unwholesome where it is but thin of people, and the Portuguese stay only on account of their trade. It was seized by the Portuguese in 1497, and they have kept possession of it ever since.

Mosambique, the capital of an island of the same name, on the E coast of Africa. It is a large well fortified place, having a strong citadel for the defence of the harbour. It belongs to the Portuguese, who have generally a good garrison here, and trade with the natives for gold, elephant's teeth, and slaves. They have built several churches and monasteries. Their slips al-

Moscow, one of the most considerable governments of Russia, containing 15 districts, bounded on the N by the government of Tver, on the E by that of great Volodimir, on the S by the governments of Kaluga and Resan, and on the W by those of Tver and Smolensko. Its capital is of the same name.

Moscow, a large city of Russia, capital of the government of Moscow, and formerly of the whole empire. It may be considered as a town built upon the Asiatic model, but gradually becoming more and more European; exhibiting, in its present state, a motley mixture of discordant architecture. It is divided into five parts. 1. Kremlin, which is in the central and highest part of the city, near the confluence of the Moskva and Neglina, which wash two of its sides, is of a triangular form, surrounded by high walls of stone and brick, about two miles in circumference. This division is not deformed by wooden houses. It contains the ancient palace of the czars, now only remarkable for being the birthplace of Peter the Great; also several churches, two convents, the patriarchal palace, and the arsenal now in ruins. 2. The second division, called Khitaigorod, which is much larger than the Kremlin; it contains the university, the printing house, and many other public buildings, with all the tradesmen's shops. The houses are mostly stuccoed or white-washed; and it has the only street in Moscow in which the houses stand close to each other. 3. The Bielgorod, or White Town, which runs round the two preceding divisions: it is supposed to derive its name from a white wall, by which it was formerly surrounded, and of which some remains are still to be seen. 4. Semlainogorod, which environs all the other three quarters, is so denominated from a circular rampart of earth by which it is encompassed. The last two divisions exhibit a grotesque group of churches, convents, palaces, brick and wooden houses, and mean hovels. 5. The Sloboda, or suburbs, which form a vast exterior circle round all the parts already described, and are invested by a low rampart and ditch. These suburbs contain, besides buildings of all kinds, corn-fields, much open pasture, and some small lakes, which give rise to the Neglina. The Moskva, from which the city takes its name, flows through it in a winding channel; but, excepting in spring, is only navigable for rafts. It receives the Yausa in the Semlainogorod, and the Neglina at the western extremity of the Kremlin; but the beds of both these last mentioned rivulets are nearly dry in summer. Moscow exhibits an astonishing degree of extent and variety, irregularity and contrast. The streets, in general, are very long and broad. Some of them are paved; others, particularly in the suburbs, are formed with trunks of trees, or are boarded with planks like the floor of a room. Wretched hovels are blended with large palaces; cottages of one story stand next to the most stately mansions; many brick structures are covered with wooden tops; some of the wooden houses are painted; others have iron doors and roofs. Numerous churches appear in every quarter, built in a peculiar style of architecture: some with domes of copper, others of tin, gilt or painted green; and many are roofed with wood. In a word, some parts of this vast city have the appearance of a sequestered desert; other quarters, of a populous town; some, of a contemptible village; others, of a great capital. Moscow is certainly the largest city in Europe; its circumference within the rampart, which incloses the suburbs, being 26 miles; but it is built in so disjointed and straggling a manner that its population corresponds, in no degree, with its extent. It contains within the ramparts, and in the adjacent villages, 300,000 souls, and is the most populous city in the empire. The places of divine worship, at Moscow, are extremely numerous; including the chapels, they amount to above 1000; there are 484 public churches; 199 of which are of brick, stuccoed, or white washed; and the others of wood, painted red. Some of their bells which form no inconsiderable part of divine worship, are of a stupendous size; they are hung in belfries detached from the church, are fixed immovably to the beams, and rung by a rope tied to the clapper. It has always been esteemed a meritorious act of religion to present a church with bells; and the piety of the donor has been measured by their magnitude. Accordingly, Boris Godunov, who gave a bell of 288,000 pounds to the cathedral of Moscow, was the most pious sovereign of Russia, till he was surpassed by the empress Anne, at whose expence a bell was cast, weighing 432,000 pounds, and is the largest in the known world. In the cathedral of St. Michael, the sovereigns of Russia were formerly interred: the bodies are deposited in raised sepulchres, mostly of brick, in the shape of a coffin, above the pavement, and about two feet in height. Each tomb has, at its lower extremity, a small silver plate, upon which is engraved, the name of the deceased prince, and the era of his death. They are covered with palls of red cloth or red velvet; but upon great festivals, all these sepulchres are covered with rich palls of gold or silver brocade, studded with pearls and jewels. The cathedral of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary is the most magnificent in the city, and has been long appropriated to the coronation of the Russian sovereigns; from the centre of the roof hangs an enormous chandelier of massy silver of English workmanship. Moscow is the centre of the inland commerce of Russia, particularly connecting the trade between Europe and Siberia. The navigation to this city is formed solely by the Moskva, which falling into the Oeca, near Colonna, communicates, by that river, with the Volga. But as the Moskva is navigable in the spring only, upon the melting of the snows, the principal merchandise is conveyed upon sledges in winter. This city is 655 miles S S E of Petersburg, and 1200 N by E of Constantinople. Lon. 37 31 E. lat. 55 45 N.

Mosquito Shore; a country of New Spain, in North America, lying on the Atlantic Ocean. The interior part of the country is bounded by the lake Nicitraqua, and fenced by mountains stretching to the west. In magnitude it exceeds Portugal; is well watered by navigable rivers and lakes; abounds in fish, game, and provisions of all sorts; furnishes every necessary for raising cattle and stock, on plantations of every kind, and to any extent; and is clothed with woods; producing timber for every purpose at land or sea. The soil is superior to that of the West India Islands; the air and climate are more salubrious; and the destructive ravages of hurricanes and earthquakes have never been known here. The Spaniards esteem it a part of the principality of Honduras, though they have no colonies in the Mosquito country.
When they first invaded this part of Mexico, they massacred the greatest part of the natives, which gave those that escaped into the inaccessible part of the country an insuperable aversion to them; and they have always appeared ready to join any Europeans that come upon their coasts against the Spaniards, and particularly the English, who frequently come thither; and the Mosquito men being excellent marksmen, the English employ them in striking the mantee fish, &c. and many of the Mosquito Indians come to Jamaica, and sail with the English in their voyages. The Mosquito Indians are so situate between morasses and inaccessible mountains, and a coast full of rocks and shoals, that no attempts against them by the Spaniards, could ever succeed. Nevertheless, they are a mild and inoffensive people, of great probity, and will never trust a man who has once deceived them. They had so great a veneration for the English, that they spontaneously put themselves under the protection of the crown of Great Britain. This was first done, when the duke of Albemarle was governor of Jamaica; and the king of the Mosquitoes received a commission from his grace, under the seal of that island; since which time, they were not only steady in their alliance with the English, but warm in their affection, and very useful to them on many occasions. When the king died, the male heir went to Jamaica, to certify that he was next in blood, and received a commission in form from the governor of Jamaica, to be king of the Mosquitoes; till which, he could not be acknowledged as such by his countrymen. So fond were they of every thing English, that the common people were proud of every Christian or surname given them by our seamen, who conferred on their chief men the titles of some of our nobility. But the connection between the English and the Mosquitoes no longer subsists. By a convention with Spain, in 1763, the English, in consideration of certain ces-sions on the coast of Honduras, agreed to evacuate this country totally; and it is now a province of Spain. See *Hon-in cloth, and all sorts of cottons and silks. At some distance from Mosul is a mosque, in which they pretend the prophet Jonah lies. The inhabitants are Mahometans; but there are a great number of Christians. In 1743, it was besieged by the Persians, but to no purpose. In 1758, this city and the adjacent country were visited by a dreadful famine, in consequence of the preceding hard winter, and of the insents an appearance of verdure and fertility. Near the W point of the smaller peninsula is a spacious bay, with a sandy beach shaded with cocoa-nut trees; the country behind has a most romantic appearance, the hills rising in a great variety of peaked forms; and their steep sides, and the deep chasms between them, are cover-

Mull, one of the Hebrides of Scotland, is an island of considerable size, being 25 miles in length, and in some places of equal breadth. There are many good natural harbours; but there is only one village, called Tobermorey, where a fishing station has been lately established by the British society. The soil is, for the most part, rocky and barren; it is fertile in corn and grass but has no wood; the hills abound with springs, and are covered with cattle: these, with the fishery, and a considerable quantity of kelp, are the only articles of commerce. The ruins of several ancient castles are seen on this island.

The walls of the town inclose a circumference of not more than two miles; and its whole territory is confined within a precinct of eight miles. The town contains 6000 inhabitants, who are protestants; and there are 2000 subjects in its adjacent villages. It owes its present flourishing state to its manufactures, which are chiefly of printed linens and cottons. The government is aristo-democratical. The supreme power resides in the great and little council, consisting together of 78 persons, and drawn from the Burgers, whose number amounts to 700, distributed into six tribes. It is well built, adorned with handsome structures and seated in a pleasant fertile country on an island formed by the river Ill. It is 15 miles N W of Basle, and 20 E of Befort. Munich, one of the most elegant and populous cities in Germany, capital of the duchy of Bavaria. The houses are high, and the streets large, and spacious, with canals, running through many of them. The palace of the elector palatine of the Rhine, as duke of Bavaria, is a stupendous structure, magnificently adorned, and is thought to be one of the largest and most commodious palaces in Europe. The cabinet of curiosities, the library, the arsenal, and ducal gardens merit attention.

The cathedral contains 25 chapels, and 30 altars; also the tomb of one of the emperors, of black marble, adorned with statues of Bronze. The market place is very beautiful; and here are manufactures of silk, velvet, woollen cloth, and tapestry. This place has been often taken and retaken in the wars of Germany; and, in September 1796, it was attacked by the French, but the Austrians compelled them to retreat. It is seated on the Isar, 15 miles S E of Augsburg, and 62 S by W of Ratisbon. Lon. 11 36 E, lat. 48 10 N.

Munnersdorf, a town of Germany in the circle of Franconia. It is seated Munster, a province of Ireland, 135 miles long and 120 broad; bounded on the N by Connaught, on the E by Leinster, and on the S and W by the Western ocean. The chief rivers are the Suro, Audliffe, Lee, Bante, Leane, and Cashlon. There are a great many bays and harbours, and many rich towns, and the air is mild and temperate.

Some places are mountainous, but the vallis are fruitful. The most general commodities are corn, cattle, wool, wool, and fish. It contains six counties, viz. Clare, Tipperary, Waterford, Cork, Limerick and Kerry, one archbishopric, and five bishoprics. The principal town is Cork.

Munster, a sovereign bishopric of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, 120 miles in length, and 80 in breadth.
The river Emba runs through it from E to W. It is bounded on the N by the counties of Bentheim and Steptfurt, on the E by the bishoprics of Osnaburgh and Paderborn, on the S by the county of Marck, and on the W by the duchy of Cleves and county of Zutphen.

Munster, a large and populous city of Germany, capital of the bishopric of Munster and of all Westphalia, whose bishop is one of the sovereigns of the empire. It was a free and imperial city; but a citadel was built in 1661 to keep the inhabitants in awe, which stands distinct from the city. The famous treaty, called the treaty of Westphalia, was concluded here in 1648, which ended the religious wars of 30 years continuance. It is seated on the Au, 70 miles N by E of Colog-Murcia, a province, formerly a kingdom of Spain; bounded on the N by New Castile, on the E by Valencia, on the W by Andalusia, and Granada, and on the S by the Mediterranean. It is 62 miles long and 58 broad; and the principal river is Segura. The soil is dry, and it produces little corn or wine; but there is plenty of oranges, citrons, lemons, olives, almonds, mulberries, rice, pulse, and sugar. It has also a great deal of silk. The air of this province is very healthful, and the principal town is of the same name.

Murcia, a populous city of Spain, capital of a province of the same name, with a bishop's see. It has a superb cathedral, the stairs of whose steeple are so contrived, that a man may ride up to the top either on horseback or in a coach. There are fine gardens about the city, in which are the best fruits in Spain. It is seated on the Segura, 27 miles N of Carthagena, and 212 S E of Madrid. Lon. 0 36 W, lat. 38 2 N.

Muret, a town of France, in the department of Upper Garonne and late province of Gascony, seated on the Garonne, 10 miles S of Toulouse. Lon. 1 18 E, lat. 43 26 N.

Mysore, a kingdom in the peninsula of Hindoostan, subject to a celebrated prince, named Tippoo Sultan, who styles himself regent of the country. His dominions comprehend, generally, the provinces of Mysore Proper, Bednora, Coimbertore, Canara, and Dindigul; besides the conquests of his father Hyder Ally (who usurped the throne) to the northward, which are Meritz, Soonda, Chittledroog, Harponelly, Sanore, Bancapour, Roydroog, Gooty, Condanore, Canoul, and Cuddappa. The extent of his territory, from N to S, is 550 miles; its breadth, in the widest place (the N part of the peninsula) 330 miles, but, proceeding to the S, it diminishes till it ends in a point. Its area has been compared to that of Great Britain. By the peace of 1782, Hyder Ally was to relinquish all but his ancient possessions. How far his successor fulfilled the terms of that treaty, cannot easily be ascertained; but, on the termination of the war in 1792, that prince agreed, over and above a large payment in money, to cede one half of his dominions to the English E India Company, and their allies, the Mahrattas, and the nizam of the Deccan. A new war broke out in 1799; when Seringapatam, Tippoo's capital was taken by the English troops, and he himself killed in the assault; in consequence of which his dominions have been divided between the East India company and their allies. Mysore, in general is dry, rugged, mountainous, and barren. It lies between 10 and 16° N lat. The capital is Seringapatam.

Nantwich, a town in Cheshire, with a market on Saturday. It is well built, and has a large church, in the form of a cross, with the tower in the middle. Here are salt springs, on the banks of a fresh water stream, from which are made great quantities of white salt, in which article and cheese this town carries on a considerable trade. The principal dairies of Cheshire are in its neighbourhood. It is seated on the Weaver, 26 miles S E of Chester, and 162 N W of London. Lon. 2 25 W, lat. 53 6 N.

Namur, a county of the Austrian Netherlands, divided by the river Sambre and Meuse into three equal parts, bounded on the N by Brabant, on the E and S by the bishopric of Liege, and on the W by Hainault. This province is pretty fertile; has several forests, marble quarries, and mines of iron, lead, and coal.

lands, capital of the county of Namur, with a strong castle, several forts and a bishop's see. This castle is built in the middle of the town on a craggy rock. In 1692, this place was taken by Louis XIV. in person, after a siege of six days only; but in 1695, it was taken by King William, after a long and bloody siege, although it was defended by 16,000 men under the command of marshal Boufflers, and marshal Villeroy was in the neighbourhood, at the head of 100,000. On the death of Charles II. king of Spain the French seized this city, but it was ceded to the house of Austria by the peace of Utrecht. In 1715, it was allowed to be garrisoned by Dutch troops, as one of the barrier towns of the United Provinces. In 1746, it was again taken by the French, but restored at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. In 1781, the emperor Joseph II. destroyed the fortifications of all the barrier towns, except these of Namur, from which, however, in violation of solemn treaty, he expelled the Dutch garrison. In 1792, it was once more taken by the French; but they were compelled to evacuate it the following year. It soon afterwards, however, again fell into their hands. It is seated between two mountains, at the confluence of the Meuse and Sambre, 24 miles W S W of Liege, and 32 S E of Brussels. Lon. 4 50 E, lat. 50 29 N.

Nanci, a famous city of France, in the department of Meurthe and late dutchy of Lorraine, with a bishop's see. It contains 74,000 inhabitants, and is divided by a canal, into the old town and new. The first though irregularly built, is very populous, and contains the ducal palace. The primatial church is a magnificent structure, and in that of the Cordeliers are the tombs of the ancient dukes of Lorraine. The new town whose streets are perfectly straight, was already one of the finest in Europe, before the magnificent works with which Stanislaus I. titular king of Poland, and duke of Lorraine, enriched it. The cathedral is a superb structure. Nanci is 25 miles S by E of Metz, and 212 E of Paris. Lon. 6 17 E, lat. 48 41 N.

Nanjemoy, a post town in Charles county, Maryland; situated on the N E side of Nanjemoy river, six miles W by S of port Tobacco, and 44 S of the city of Washington.

Nan-king, or Kiang-ning-fou, a city of China, and capital of the province of Kiang-nan, and said to have been one of the most beautiful cities in the world. It is still the largest in China, being 17 miles in circumference, and three distant from the river Yang-tse-kiang, from which canals are cut, so large, that vessels may enter the town. Nan-king has lost much of its ancient splendour; it had formerly a magnificent palace, no vestige of which is now to be seen; an observatory at present neglected, temples, tombs of the emperors, and other superb monuments, of which nothing remains but the remembrance. A third of the city is deserted, but the rest is well inhabited. Some quarters of it are extremely populous, and full of business. The streets are not so broad as those of Peking; they are, however, very beautiful, well paved, and bordered with rich shops. The public buildings are mean except a few temples, the city gates, and a tower of porcelain, 200 feet high. It is 500 miles S S E of Peking. Lon. 119 25 E, lat. 32 46 N.

Nan-ngan-fou, a beautiful and populous city of China in the most southern part of the province of Kiang-si; it is a beautiful, populous and commercial city, and much frequented. It contains in its district, four cities of the third class. It is 200 miles N by E of Canton.

Nan-tchang-fou, a city of China, capital of the province of Kiang-si. It is the residence of a viceroy, and comprehends eight cities in its district.

Nantes, an ancient rich and very considerable town of France, in the department of Lower Loire, and late province of Bretagne. It formerly had a university, and a bishop's see, and was the residence of the dukes of Bretagne, who built a strong castle on the side of the river which still exists. The cathedral contains the tombs of the ancient dukes. The bridges over the Loire, in which are some islands, are almost a league in length. The suburbs are so large that they exceed the city. The inhabitants are computed at 60,000. Since the peace in 1763, Nantes has had a considerable share in the commerce with the United States. A great quantity of salt is made in the territory of Nantes, both at the bay of Bourgneuf, and in the salt marshes of Geurande and Croisic. Large vessels can come no higher than port Lunnai, where they are unloaded into smaller vessels which go up to Nantes, being a distance of 12 miles. It was in this place that Henry IV. promulgated the famous edict, in 1598, in favour of the Protestants, which was revoked in 1685, by Lewis XIV. In 1796, the theatre here took fire, during a time of performance, and several persons lost their lives. Nantes is 58 miles S by E of Rennes, and 217 S W of Paris. Lon. 1 45 W, lat. 47 13 N.

Nantua, a town of France, in the department of Ain and late province of Bresse, situate at the extremity of a great lake of the same name, 18 miles S E of Bourg. Here Charles the Bold was interred.

Nantucket, an island of North America, in the state of Massachusetts, of which it is a county. The inhabitants of which have a considerable whale fishing on the coast, and even in Greenland. It lies to the S of Cape Cod, and is a low, sandy, and barren island, the inhabitants depend almost entirely on the watery element for subsistence. It contains 5617 inhabitants.

Napul, a province of Hindoostan Proper, bounded on the S by Bahar, on the W by Oude and Rohilcund, on the N W by Sirinagur, and on the N E and E by the ridge of Mountains called Himalch, by which it is separated from Thibet. Catmandu is the capital.

Naples, a kingdom of Italy, comprehending the ancient countries of Samnium, Campania, Apulia, and Magna Græcia. It is bounded on the N W by the Ecclesiastical State, on the S and W by the Mediterranean, and on the E by the gulf of Venice. Its extent from N W to S E is 280 miles, and from N E to S W from 96 to 160. It is divided into 12 provinces; namely, Terra di Lavoro, (the ancient Campania Felix) Principato Citeriore and Ulteriore, Molise, Basilicata, Calabria Citeriore and Ulteriore, Abruzzo Citeriore and Ulteriore, Capitanata, Terra di Bari, and Terra d'Otranto; the last three forming the ancient Apulia, now called Puglia, on the E side of the kingdom. After many revolutions, the Normans became masters of this country, in the eleventh century; and the sovereigns were called counts, then dukes, and afterwards kings of Puglia: but in 1282, Peter III. King of Arragon, caused all the Normans in the island of Sicily to be massacred; and this massacre was called the Sicilian Vespers. After this, Puglia was joined to Sicily; and hence the sovereigns took the title of King of the Two Sicilies. It has also been called the kingdom of Naples, from the city of that name which is its capital. France and Spain contended for the sovereignty in the sequel, and bloody wars and revolutions ensued. The country was then torn by the contentions of France and Spain for its sovereignty. The French being defeated by the Spaniards in 1504, Lewis XII. was obliged formally to give up all pretensions to the crown, and the country was governed by Spanish viceroys. In 1647, happened the dreadful insurrection of Massaniello in the city of Naples, by which the Spaniards were nearly expelled. The people, however, returning to their allegiance, on the assassination of Massaniello, the Spaniards continued in peaceable possession of the kingdom till 1707, when it was conquered by prince Eugene, and ceded to the Emperor by the treaty of Rastadt, in 1714. It was recovered, however, by the Spaniards in 1734; and the eldest son of the king of Spain is now king of Naples and Sicily. The title of the king's eldest son is prince of Calabria. The climate of Naples is extremely hot, especially in July, August, and September; and is said to be one of the most inconstant and unfavourable to valetudinarians. In some seasons it rains every day for six or seven weeks together. In winter there is seldom any ice or snow except on the mountains. But the most disagreeable part of the climate is the sirocco, or S E wind, which is very common in May, and is infinitely more relaxing, and gives rise to vapours in a much higher degree, than the worst of the rainy month of November, in Great Britain. In winter there is seldom any ice or snow, except on the mountains. The country, on account of its fertility, is justly termed a terrestrial paradise: for it abounds with: "scots of grain, the finest fruits and rice, flax, oil, and wine, saffron, garden productions of every kind, with manna, allum, vitriol, sulphur, rock-crystal, marble in the greatest plenty and perfection. It affords also wool and silk, and several sorts of minerals. Besides the manufactures noticed in the account of the city of Naples, waistcoats, caps, stockings, and gloves are also made of the hair or filaments of a shell-fish, which are warmer than those of wool, and of a beautiful glossy green. The principal mountains are the Appennines, which traverse this from S to N, and the celebrated volcano, Mount Vesuvius, five Italian miles from Naples. One of the greatest inconveniences to which this kingdom is exposed is earthquakes (see Calabria) which the eruptions of Mount Vesuvius contribute, in some measure, to prevent. Another inconveniency is the great number of reptiles and insects engendered by the heat, some of which are very poisonous. The established religion is the Roman catholic; and the clergy and convents were said to possess formerly two thirds of the whole kingdom. The inhabitants of this country have, at all times, borne but an indifferent character among other nations. Provisions are plentiful and cheap, therefore the lower class of people work but little; their delight is to bask in the sun and to do nothing. Persons of a middle rank pass too much of their time in cof-

 few pursue their callings with the zeal and activity we are wont to meet with in the professional men of colder countries. Gluttony is a much more predominant vice than ebriety, of which instances are extremely rare. In the female sex, the passion for finery is almost superior to all others, and, notwithstanding any effect the genial warmth of the climate may have on the constitution of a Neapolitan woman, Mr. Swinburne doubts whether she would not nine times out of ten prefer a present to a lover; yet I apprehend chastity is not the characteristic virtue of this place more than it is of any other populous metropolis; that furious jealously for which the nation was so remarkable some generations ago, is almost eradicated; the breach of the conjugal vow sometimes occasions quarrels and assassinations among people of an inferior station, but the case is rare, and rivalry between lovers is more frequently productive of such scenes. Of these vices, many are doubtless owing to the slavery and oppression under which they groan, and to a radical defect in the administration of justice.

Naples, an ancient and large commercial city of Italy, capital of a kingdom of the same name, with an archbishop's see, and an university, lying in the province called Terra di Lavoro.
 It is seated at the bottom of the bay of Naples, which is one of the finest in the world, being almost of a round figure, of about 30 miles diameter, and three parts of it sheltered with a noble circuit of woods and mountains. It is built in the form of a vast amphitheatre, sloping from the hills to the sea.
 Although the style of architecture is inferior to what prevails at Rome, and it cannot vie with that city in the number of palaces, or in the magnificence of the churches, the private houses, in general, are better built. The circumference, including the suburbs, is said not to be less than 18 Italian miles, and the number of the inhabitants therein little less than 400,000. The houses are of stone, flat-roofed, and generally lofty and uniform; but many of them have balconies, with lattice-windows.
 The streets are well paved; but they are not lighted at night, and in the daytime are disfigured, in many places, by stalls, on which provisions are exposed to sale. Here are a great number of fine churches, convents, fountains, and palaces of the nobility, many of whom constantly reside here. It is usual to walk on the tops of the houses in the evenings, to breathe the sweet cool air, after a hot sultry day. The climate here is so mild and warm, even in the winter, that plenty of green pease, artichokes, asparagus, and other vegetables, may be had so early as the beginning of the new year, and even all the winter. The fortress of St. Elmo is built on a mountain of the same name, and has the entire command of the town. Lower down on the same mountain, in a delightful situation, is a convent of Carthusians, on which much expence has been lavished, to render the building and the gardens equal to the situation. Naples is admirably situate for commerce, and has all the necessaries and luxuries of life in great profusion; but trade is in a languishing condition. Pictures, statues, and antiquities, are not so common in Naples as might be expected in so great and ancient a city, many of the most valuable pieces having been sent to Spain by the viceroys. Owing to the populousness of the place, many of its streets are more crowded than those of London, and a great proportion of the poorest sort are obliged to spend the night in them for want of habitations. There is not a city in the world, perhaps, with the same number of inhabitants, in which so few contribute to the wealth of the community, by useful and productive labour, as Naples; for the number of priests, monks, fiddlers, lawyers, nobility, footmen, and lazzaroni, or vagabonds, surpasses all reasonable proportion; and the last alone are computed at above 30,000. The greater part of these wretches have no dwelling-houses, but sleep every night under porticos, piazzas, or any kind of shelter they can find. Those of them who have wives and children, live in the suburbs of Naples near Pausilippo, in huts, or in caverns or chambers dug out of that mountain. They are generally represented as a lazy, licentious, and turbulent set of people, as indeed by far the greater part of the rabble are, who prefer begging or robbing, or running errands, to any fixed and permanent employment. Yet there are in Naples some flourishing manufactures, particularly of silk stockings, soap, snuff-boxes of tortoise shells, and the lava of Mount Vesuvius, tables, and ornamental furniture of marble. The city is supplied with a vast quantity of water, by means of a very costly aqueduct, from the foot of Mount Vesuvius. The nobility are excessively fond of splendour and show; as appears by the brilliancy of their equipages, the number of their attendants, the richness of their dress, and the grandeur of their titles. The king, it is said, counts a hundred persons with the title of prince, and still a greater number with that of duke, among his subjects. A few of these have estates, from 10 to 13,000*l.* a year; a considerable number have fortunes of about half that amount; and the annual revenue of many is under 2000*l.* The inferior orders of nobility are much poorer; many counts and marquises not having 400*l.* a year paternal estate; many still less; and not a few enjoy the title without any estate whatever. Although the churches and convents of Naples are not to be compared with those at Rome in point of architecture, they surpass them in rich jewels, and in the quantity of silver and golden crucifixes, vessels and other ornaments. Of all the palaces, that of the king is not only the most magnificent, but also in the best style of architecture. The cathedral though Gothic is a very splendid edifice. Here are kept the head and blood of St. Januarius, the tutelary saint of Naples; the latter in two glass or crystal vials. The pretended liquefaction of the dry blood, as soon as brought near the head of the saint, is well known; and Mr. Addison says, it is one of the most bungling tricks he ever saw. The harbour, which is spacious, is kept in good repair. It is protected by a mole, two castles, and several batteries, but these could not protect the city from a bombardment. The mole runs above a quarter of a mile into the sea, and at the extremity has a high lantern to direct ships safely into the harbour. Naples is 110 miles S E of Rome, 217 S S E of Florence, and 300 S by E of Venice. Lon. 14 20 E, lat. 40 55 N.

Napoli-di-Malvasia, a seaport of Turkey in the Morea, capital of the island of Malvasia, seated on a rock, at the entrance of the bay of Napoli-di-Romania. It is very strong, and defended by a good citadel; has a fine harbour, and a long wooden bridge which joins it to the mainland. It gives name to that excellent wine called Malmsey; and was anciently noted for the temple of Æsculapius. It is 42 miles S E of Napoli-di-Romania. Lon. 23 22 E, lat. 36 57 N.

Napoli-di-Romania, a seaport, and an archiepiscopal town of Turkey in the Morea, seated at the bottom of a bay of the same name. It has a large harbour, with a narrow mouth, through which one ship only can enter at a time, and is inhabited by 60,000 Greeks, besides people of different nations, and very strong both by nature and art. It is 56 miles S W of Athens. Lon. 23 4 E, lat. 37 36 N.

Nara, a town of Japan, in the island of Nippon, with a magnificent castle, 25 miles N W of Meaco. Lon. 134 15 E, lat. 35 50 N.

Narbadh, a town in Pembrokeshire, with a market on Wednesday. It has an old castle, and is seated on a hill, 12 miles N E of Pembroke, and 229 W by N of London. Lon. 4 46 W, lat. 51 50 N.

Narbonne, an ancient city of France, in the department of Aude and late province of Lower Languedoc. Before the revolution of 1789, it was an archiepiscopal see. In the time of the Romans, it was the capital of that part of Gaul, called Gallia Narbonensis; and here the emperor Marcus Aurelius was born. Some Roman inscriptions, in different parts of the city, are still visible; and the canal, from the river Aude, through the city, to the Mediterranean, by which vessels come close up to it, was cut by the Romans. Narbonne is famous for its honey, and the cathedral is remarkable for its noble choir. It is five miles from the Mediterranean, and 75 E by S of Toulouse. Lon. 3 6 E, lat. 43 11 N.

Narborough, an island of South America, on the coast of Chili, so called because Sir John Narborough refreshed his men here, when sent to the S Sea in the reign of Charles II. Lon. 74 35 W, lat. 45 0 N.

Narcondam, a barren rock rising abruptly out of the Indian ocean, uninhabited, and seemingly destitute of vegetation. It is about 20 leagues E of the Andamans.

Narni, an ancient episcopal town of Italy, in Sabina. Here are the ruins of a marble bridge, built by Augustus, one of whose arches was 150 feet high, and 200 broad; as also of an aqueduct that brought water from a spring at the distance of 15 miles. It contains a great many noble families, and is seated on the Nera, 20 miles S W of Spoleto, and 40 N E of Rome.

Narva, a river of the Russian empire, which issues from the lake Peipus, and watering Narva, flows into the gulf of Finland, eight miles below that town. It is noted for two picturesque water-falls, pompously described by travellers, but far inferior to that of the Rhine, at Schaffhausen. The breadth of the river is about 200 feet, and the perpendicular height of the falls scarcely exceeds 20 feet.

Narsingapatan, a town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, in the territory of Bisnagur. It was the residence formerly of a king, and is situated 400 miles S E of Bombay. Lon. 76 10 E, lat. 15 30 N.

Narva, a strong town of the Russian empire, in Ingria, or the government of Petersburg. The houses are built of brick, stuccoed white; and it has more the appearance of a German than of a Russian town. In the suburbs, called Ivangorod, or John's town, the colossal remains of an ancient fortress, built by Ivan Vassilievitch the Great, impend in a picturesque manner over the steep banks of the Narova. Near Narva is the spot celebrated for the victory which Charles XII. in the 19th year of his age gained over the Russian army in 1700. The town was taken by the czar about five years after, who traversed the streets on horseback with his drawn sword in his hand, restrained his troops from pillage, and placed guards at the doors of the principal houses, and before the churches. The principal exports from Narva are hemp, flax, timber, and corn; the imports, salt, tobacco, wine, salted herrings, spices, tea, sugar, and other grocery wares. It is situated on the Narova, Narwah, or Narwha, a town of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Agra, seated a little above the confluence of the Sinde with the Jumna. It is 127 miles S of Agra. Lon. 79 17 E, lat. 25 40 N.

Naseby, a village in Northamptonshire, famous for the decisive victory gained by the army of the parliament over that of Charles I. in 1645. It is 12 miles N of Northampton.

Nashville, the capital of Davidson county, Tennessee; situated on the S bank of Cumberland river, 33 miles S by W of Gallatine, 185 W of Knoxville, the capital of the State, and 737 S W of Washington. It contained 346 inhabitants at the last census; it is a post town, and supports a considerable trade with New Orleans.

Nassau, a county of Germany in the circle of the Upper Rhine; bounded on the N by Westphalia, on the E by the county of Solmes, on the S by the territory of Mentz, and on the W by the electorate of Treves. It is very fertile, and contains mines of iron, copper, and lead.

Nassau, a town of Germany, capital of a county of the same name, the house of whose sovereign is divided into several branches. It is seated on the river Lahn, 12 miles S E of Coblenz. Lon. 7 42 E, lat. 50 18 N.

Nassuck, a town of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Guzerat, 128 miles W of Aurungabad, and 95 S S W of Surat. Lon. 73 49 E, lat. 19 30 N.

It is bounded on the N by the Black Sea, and on the S by the Mediterranean. The air is temperate and wholesome, and the soil generally fertile. It is crossed by a chain of mountains, formerly called Taurus, from E to W. and watered by a great number of rivers.

Nattam, a town and fortress of the peninsula of Hindoostan, in the country of Madura, 18 miles N of Madura, and 45 S S W of Trichinopoly. Lon. 78 18 E, lat. 10 10 N.

Navarino, a strong and populous town of the Morea, with an excellent large harbour, defended by two forts. It is seated on a hill, near the sea, eight miles N E of Modon, and 17 N W of Coron. Lon. 21 40 E, lat. 37 2 N.

Navarre, a kingdom of Europe, lying between France and Spain, and divided into the Upper and Lower. The Upper belongs to Spain, and is 75 miles in length, and 60 in breadth. The air is more mild, temperate, and wholesome, than in the neighbouring provinces of Spain; and, though a mountainous country, it is pretty fertile, abounding in all sorts of game, and in iron mines. It is divided into five districts, whose capital towns are Pampeluna, Estella, Tudela, Olita, and St. Guesea. Lower Navarre belongs to France, and now forms the territory of Basques, and department of the Lower Pyrenees. It is separated from Spanish Navarre by the Pyrenees, and is a mountainous, barren country, 20 miles in length and 12 in breadth. From this country, the late king of France took his other title of the king of Navarre. See Palais, St.

Naxos, or Naxia, a considerable island of the Archipelago, 25 miles in length and 88 in circumference. It abounds with orange, olive, lemon, cedar, citron, pomegranate, fig, and mulberry-trees; and though it has no harbour, carries on a considerable trade in barley, wine, oil, cheese, figs, cotton, silk, flax, salt, oxen, sheep, and mules. It is inhabited both by Greeks and Latins, has four archiepiscopal sees, and a great many villages; but the whole island does not contain above 8000 inhabitants, the highest mountain is Zia, which signifies the mountain of Jupiter; but there are no antiquities, except some small remains of a temple of Bacchus. The female dress of this island has something ridiculous in its appearance. The two wings of black velvet, which they fix behind to their shoulders, are altogether preposterous. The Greek women at Smyrna cover their breasts with a single gauze; at Naxia, they wear a heavy stomacher or breast piece of velvet, covered with embroidery and small pearls. They add to this romantic cumbrous dress all the coquetry of behaviour they can assume. They paint, blacken their eyebrows and eyelashes, and cover their faces with patches, made of a black shining talc, which they find in the island. This island was anciently famous for a fort Neagh Lough, a lake of Ireland situate in the counties of Armagh, Down, Antrim, Londonderry, and Tyrone. It is the largest in Europe, those of Ladoga, and Onega in Russia, and that of Geneva in Switzerland, excepted, being 20 miles long and 15 broad. It is remarkable for a healing virtue, and also for petrifying wood, which is not only found in the water, but in the adjacent soil, at a considerable depth. On its shores several beautiful gems have been discovered.

Neath, a corporate town in Glamorganshire, with a market on Saturday. It is situate on the Neath, over which is a bridge, where small vessels come to load coal. On the other side of the river are the ruins of a fine monastery, and in the neighbourhood are iron forges, smelting works for copper, and coal mines. It is governed by a por-

Netherlands, or Low Countries, a large country of Europe, anciently called Gallia Belgica. In the ninth century, the sons of the emperor Lewis the Pious having divided the dominions of their father, who possessed Germany, France, and Italy, a new kingdom was formed, comprehending Germany and France, and a part of the Netherlands.
It was called Lotharia, but did not long subsist; for it was soon divided into two; and that seated near the Mediterranean was called the kingdom of Burgundy; while the other, to the N, had the name of Austrasia. Neither did this last continue long, it being divided into 17 provinces, under different names, which still depended on the empire of Germany, and were called Lower Germany. In process of time, the house of Burgundy purchased many of them, and was about to form them, with Burgundy, into a kingdom; but

Charles the Bold, the last duke of Burgundy, being killed by the Swiss, in 1477, his part of the Netherlands devolved on Mary his only child; who, marrying the emperor Maximilian, the Netherlands fell to the house of Austria. The emperor Charles V. king of Spain, in 1555, abdicated the sovereignty of the Netherlands, and soon after, the Spanish crown, in favour of his son Philip II. who endeavoured to introduce the inquisition into the Low Countries, with the barbarities of the duke of Alva, exasperated the people to such a degree, that they, under the conduct of William I. prince of Orange, formed the famous league of Utrecht, in 1579, which proved the foundation of the republic of the Seven United Provinces. After a long and bloody war, the Spaniards agreed to a truce with the United Provinces, the very first article of which acknowledged them to be free and independent states. The war was renewed in 1621; but, at last, by the treaty of Westphalia, in 1648, Philip IV. of Spain expressly renounced all claim to sovereignty over the United Provinces. The other ten provinces, however, returned under the dominion of Spain, but with very favourable stipulations with respect to their ancient laws and liberties. On the death of Charles II. king of Spain, and the subsequent accession of a branch of the house of Bourbon to that monarchy, it was stipulated, by the treaty of Baden in 1714, that the Spanish Netherlands should return to the German branch of the house of Austria. Some considerable parts, however, fell by conquest, or cession, to the French and Dutch; the province of Artois, the Cambresis, and part of Luxemburg, Flanders, and Hainault, were in the hands of the French, and called the French Netherlands; while the Dutch possessed the N part of Brabant and Flanders, from them denominated Dutch Brabant and Flanders. The emperor Charles VI. left the Austrian Netherlands to his daughter Maria Theresa, queen of Hungary and Bohemia, who married Francis, grand duke of Tuscany, afterwards emperor. During her reign, no sovereign could be more beloved; no people more content and happy. But her son, Joseph II. having projected many innovations, in the constitutions, both in church and state, and enforcing them with violence, an universal spirit of revolt broke out; an army of 40,000 men rose, as if by magic, to support the renunciation of all allegiance, which several of the provinces now openly made; a congress was formed from the different states, in whom the supreme government was vested; and by the end of December 1790, the Austrian forces were entirely expelled from the Netherlands. The new government, however, was not of long duration; for which, indeed, the manner in which the congress exercised its powers was far from being calculated. Leopold II. (the successor of the capricious and unfortunate Joseph, who died in the early part of 1790) was enabled, partly by force of arms, partly by conciliatory measures, and partly by the mediation of the courts of London, Berlin, and Hague, to recover the entire possession of his authority in these provinces, and that, in a great measure to the satisfaction of the people; the ministers of the mediating courts having guaranteed the restoration of the ancient Belgic constitution, as enjoyed under the happy reign of the empress queen Maria Theresa. In 1792, the French overrun the Netherlands, and endeavoured to effect another revolution, but were driven out of the country in 1793. In 1794 they again recovered possession; and in 1795 the Netherlands were decreed to form a part of the territory of the French republic. The Netherlands, in general, are 360 miles long, and 260 broad; lying between 2 and 7° E lon. and 49 and 54° N lat. They are bounded on the W and N by the German Ocean, on the E by Germany, and on the S by France. They once constituted a part of the German empire, under the name of the circle of Burgundy. The principal rivers are the Scheldt, Rhine, Maese, Moselle, and Lis; and there are many fine navigable canals, which are of great advantage to the commerce of the country. The air is temperate; but the mouths of the rivers and harbours are frozen up in the winter. The soil is extremely fertile in corn and pastures; and there are several fine manufactures of lace, lawns, cambrics, tapestry, &c. See United Provinces of the Netherlands.

forcing them with violence, a spirit of revolt broke out; 40,000 men rose, as if by support the renunciation of the crown, which several of the nobles openly made; a confederation formed from the different provinces, and the supreme government vested; and by the end of 1790, the Austrian forces were expelled from the empire. The new government, which was not of long duration, was indeed, in the manner in which it exercised its powers, being calculated. Leopold II, successor of the capricious and tyrannical Joseph, who died in the year 1790, was enabled, partly by conciliatory measures, and partly by the mediation of the courts of London, Berlin, and Vienna, to recover the entire empire, and to re-establish his authority in these provinces. In a great measure to the mediation of the courts, the restoration of the ancient constitution, as enjoyed by the empress Maria Theresa. In 1792, the French invaded the Netherlands, and endeavored to effect another revolution, which were driven out of the country in 1793. In 1794 they again invaded the Netherlands, and in 1795 they were decreed to form the territory of the French Republic. The Netherlands, in general, are 360 miles long, and 260 miles broad, between 52° and 7° E. lon. and 54° N. lat. They are bounded to the N. by the German Ocean, to the E. by Germany, and on the S. by the English Channel. They once constituted a part of the empire of France, under the name of Burgundy. The principal rivers are the Scheldt, Rhine, Moselle, and Lis; and there are several navigable canals, which afford great advantage to the commerce of the country. The air is temperate, and the mouths of the rivers are frozen up in the winter; the soil is extremely fertile in corn, and there are several manufactures of lace, lawns, cambric, &c. Neuchâtel, a territory of Switzerland, which, with that of Valengin, forms one principality, between the lake of Neuchâtel and the borders of France; extending 36 miles from N. to S., and 18 in its greatest breadth. By the death of the dutchess of Nemours, in 1707, the sovereignty of Neuchâtel and Valengin was claimed by Frederick I. of Prussia, as heir to the prince of Orange; and his right was acknowledged by the states of the country. The constitution is a kind of limited monarchy. The inhabitants are protestants, except in the two districts of Landeron and Cressier, where there are most catholics. In 1529, this principality entered into an alliance with the cantons of Bern, Friburg, Soleure, and Lucern. The air is healthy and temperate; but the soil is not equally temperate every where, however there are large vineyards that produce white and red wine, which last is excellent. The pastures on the mountains feed a great number of all sorts of cattle, and there are plenty of deer in the forests, and a great many fish in the lakes and rivers. The people are ingenious, polite, active and industrious.

Neuchâtel, a town of Switzerland, capital of a principality of the same name. It contains not more than 3000 souls, and is situate partly on the plain between the lake of Neuchâtel and the Jura, and partly on the declivity of that mountain. The chief article of exportation is wine, which is much esteemed, and produced from the vineyards in its vicinity; and there are here manufactures of printed lins and cottons. Among the many public works which have been lately executed here, are the new town-house, and a superb causeway leading toward the valley of St. Imier. Neuchâtel is governed by a great and little council; the first is composed of 40 persons; the second consists of 24 members, comprehending the mayor, who is president. It is 25 miles N. E. of Lausanne, and 25 W. of Bern. Lon. 7 0 E. lat. 47 5 N.

Neuchâtel, or Yverdun, a lake of Switzerland, which takes its name from a town of the same name, stretches about 20 miles in length from the town of Yverdun to that of Neuchâtel, in a direction from S. Newcastle, or Newcastle upon Tyne, a large borough and sea port in Northumberland, situate between the Picts Wall and the Tyne. The river is so deep, that ships of 600 tons burthen may come up to the town, in ballast but the colliers wait at Shields for their lading which is brought down the river in lighters. The town may be considered as divided into two parts, of which Gates-head, on the Durham side, is one; and both were joined by a stone bridge, which originally consisted of 12 arches; but by the embankment of the river to form the quays on the N side, they were reduced to nine. In 1771, a dreadful flood carried away four of those arches, with some houses that stood upon them; and the bridge was entirely rebuilt in 1779. Through this place went part of that wall which extended from sea to sea, and was built by the Romans to defend the Britons against the incursions of the Picts. The town was defended by a strong wall, in which were seven gates, and as many turrets, with several casements bomb proof; but the castle and walls are now in ruins. Here is a noble exchange; and the finest quay in England except that of Great Yarmouth, being longer than that of London and Bristol. Here are four parish churches, beside one at Gateshead. St. Nicholas church stands on the top of a high hill, and has a lofty steeple of curious architecture. Among the other public buildings is a mansion house for the mayor, who is allowed 600 a year for his table, besides a coach and barge, a hall for the surgeons; a large hospital, built by the contribution of the keel men, for the maintenance of the poor of their fraternity, and several charitable foundations, situate in the centre of the great collieries, which have for centuries supplied London and most of the southern parts of the kingdom with coal. This is the staple trade of, and has been the source of great wealth to Newcastle, the coals carried thence annually are computed to amount to 1,137,000 tons; it also manufactures steel, iron, glass, woollen cloth, earthen ware, white lead, milled lead, &c. to a great extent, and here is a round tower for the manufactory of patent shot; it exports large quantities of lead, salt, salmon, butter, tallow, and is particularly famous for its grindstones, that scarce a vessel goes from thence without some of them; hence the proverb, "that a Scotchman and a Newcastle grindstone travel all the world over." Ships are sent hence to the Greenland fishery, and the trade to the West Indies has become very considerable. The streets in the old part of the town are narrow, and very uneven, being built on the declivity of a steep hill, but the Upper or N part of the town, which is inhabited by the politer sort of people, is much pleasanter and has several level, well built, and spacious streets. The suburbs are chiefly used as glass houses, iron manufactories, and breweries, where beer is made which has obtained great reputation, and they are inhabited by keel men a rough and sturdy race, employed in carrying the coal down the river in keels, or lighters, to the large ships. The annual revenue of the customs here is computed to amount to near 100,000*l*. Newcastle was made a borough by William I. and the first charter for digging coal was granted by Henry III. in 1239. It is 34 miles S of Alnwick, 94 N of York, and 271 N by W of London. Lon. 127 W, lat. 55 5 N.

Newcastle, a post town and the capital of Newcastle county, Delaware, situated on the W bank of Delaware river, 6 miles S of Wilmington, and 34 S W of Philadelphia. New Forest, a forest in Hampshire, situate in that part of the county which is bounded on the E by Southampton Water, and on the S by the English Channel. It was afforested by William the Conqueror, who expelled the inhabitants for that purpose, and was then 10 miles longer than it is now. His son William Rufus was killed in this forest, by an arrow shot by Walter Tyrrel, which had accidentally glanced against a tree. The spot is pointed out by a triangular stone, its timber is now appropriated to the use of the royal navy.

Newfoundland, a large island on the E coast of North America, between 47 and 52° N lat. Its form is triangular; the N point is separated from Labrador by the strait of Belleisle, and from this apex it is 350 miles in length to the base, which is 200 in breadth. It is a mountainous country, and the climates rather severe, the ground being covered with snow five months in the year.
 The coasts are high and the shores most remarkably wooded, and the hills are clothed with birch, hazel, spruce, fir, and pine. In some parts of it there are trees sufficiently large for the building of merchantmen, the hull is made of juniper, and the pine furnishes masts and yards, but no masts have yet been found for a large cutter. It seems to have no inhabitants of its own, but in the summer time is visited by the Esquimaux Indians. It has several bays and harbours, and there are about 500 English families who continue here all the year, besides the garrison of St.
 John's Placentia, and other forts. The great importance of this island arises from its fishery, which begins in May and ends in September; the great fishing-banks to the S E of this island, are resorted to by at least 10,000 people, and 8 or 900 sail of ships, and the fish when cured are exported to Spain, Portugal, Italy, and the West Indies. In winter the chief employment of the inhabitants is to cut wood; and the smallest kind, used for fuel, is drawn by their large dogs, trained up and bar-nessed for that purpose. There is great plenty of game, fish, and fowl, but very little corn, fruit, or cattle. St. John's is the principal settlement.

Newtonstewart, a town in Wigtonshire, situate on the navigable river Cree, over which there is a handsome bridge, and whose mouth, in Wigton Bay, affords a valuable salmon-fishery. Several manufactures have been commenced with success in this town. It is 26 miles E by N of Port-Patrick.

Newton, a village in Renfrewshire, to the S of Paisley. It is noted for several large print-fields.

Newtown Limavady, a borough of Ireland, in the county of Londonderry, seated near the E coast of Lough Foyle, 15 miles E N E of Londonderry.

New-Year's-Harbour, a part of Staten Land, in South America. Lon. 64 11 W, lat. 54 48 S.

New-Year's-Islands, small islands of South America, on the N side of Staten Land. Great numbers of sea lions, seals, &c. resort to these islands.

New York, the metropolis of the county and state of New York, situated on the point of York Island, at the confluence of Hudson and East rivers, in lat. 40° 42' N, and lon. 74° 10' W. It was founded by the Dutch in 1615, and called New Amsterdam—incorporated by the British government in 1696, and is now governed by a mayor, aldermen, and common council. The city is divided into seven wards. The streets are extremely irregular, and most of them inconveniently narrow; though it can boast of one or two, that are superior to those of any city in the United States. The buildings are mostly of brick or stone, and some of the public edifices are constructed with considerable elegance and grandeur, particularly, Federal Hall, the New State Prison, and one or two places of religious worship. In point of population this is the second city in the United States, containing 60,000 inhabitants, and in respect of trade, the first; the exports in 1801 having been estimated at 13,792,276 dols. The harbour is safe and spacious, with water sufficient for an 80 gun ship; and the navigation is seldom interrupted by ice. There is a college liberally endowed, four banks and several insurance offices. The water consumed by the inhabitants is conveyed principally through pipes from springs at the north end of the city, as that in the common wells is hardly potable. The distance from New York to Philadelphia is 96 miles, to Boston 252; to Baltimore, 197; and to Washington 242.

Neyland, a town in Suffolk, with a market on Friday, and a manufacture of says and bays. It is seated on the Stour, over which is a bridge, 16 miles S W of Ipswich, and 37 N E of London. Lon. 1 5 E, lat. 52 1 N.

Neytrachs, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, with a bishop's see. It is seated on the Neytra, 40 miles N E of Presburg. Lon. 17 49 E, lat. 48 28 N.

Ngan-King-fou, the capital of the western part of the province of Kiangnan in China; its situation is delightful. It is governed by a particular viceroy, who keeps a large garrison in a fort built on the banks of the river Yang-tse-kiang. The commerce and riches of this city render it very considerable; and every thing that goes from the southern part of China, to Nan-king, must pass through it. All the country belonging to it is level, pleasant, and fertile. It has under its jurisdiction only six cities of the third class. Lon. 116 45 E, lat. 30 35 N.

Ngan-to-fou, a rich and populous city of China, in the province of Hou-quang, containing in its district, two cities of the second and five of the third class. It is 425 miles W by S of Nanking.

Niagara, a river of North America, which forms the communication between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, and runs from S to N about 30 miles. At the entrance of this river, on its eastern shore, is Fort Niagara; and 18 miles N of this are those remarkable falls, which are reckoned among the greatest natural curiosities in the world. Above the falls in the middle of the river, is an island 800 or 900 feet long; the lower end of which is just at the perpendicular edge of the fall. On both sides of this island all the waters that come from the lakes of Canada, rush with astonishing grandeur, down a stupendous precipice of 137 feet perpendicular; and in a strong rapid that extends to the distance of nine miles below, fall near as much more. Before the water comes to this island, it runs but slowly compared with its motion afterwards, when it grows the most rapid in the world. Before it comes to the fall it is perfectly white and in

Niagara, a post town in Genesee county, New York; situated on the E side of Niagara river, at its junction with lake Ontario, in lat. 43° 15' N. and long. 79° W. This important place was strongly fortified by the British while it was in their possession, and delivered to the Americans in the same good condition. It is 370 miles N W Nicaragua, a province of New Spain, in the audience of Guatimala, bounded on the N by Honduras, on the E by the Atlantic Ocean, on the S E by Costa Rica, and on the S W by the South Pacific Ocean, being about 400 miles from E to W, and 120 from N to S. It is one of the most fruitful provinces of Mexico, and is well watered by lakes and rivers. The air is temperate and wholesome; and the country produces plenty of sugar, cochineal, and fine chocolate. Leon de Nicaragua is the capital.

Nicaragua, a lake of New Spain, in a province of the same name. It is 200 miles in circumference, has some islands in it, and stretching from the city of Leon N W to S E; communicates with the Atlantic Ocean by the river St.
Juan.

Nice, a county of Italy, bounded on the W by the river Var and the Maritime Alps, which divide it from France; on the N by Piedmont; on the E by the territories of Genoa; and on the S by the Mediterranean. It was anciently an appendage of Provence, in France; but has for many years, belonged to the king of Sardinia. In 1792, it was conquered by the French. The inhabitants supply Genoa with timber for ship building, and carry on a trade in paper and other articles. It is 60 miles long and 30 broad, and contains about 125,000 inhabitants.

Nice, an ancient and considerable city of Italy, capital of a county of the same name, with a strong citadel and a bishop's see. It is of a triangular form, and confined in its situation, having a high rock on the E, the river Pag-lion on the W, and the Mediterranean on the S; from which last it is separated by a beautiful and extensive terrace, used as a public walk. The harbour is on the E side of the rock, and called Limpinia, from a small river that falls into it. The exports are silk, sweet oil, wine, cordials, rice, oranges, lemons, and all sorts of dried fruits.
It has been several times taken by the French, and last of all in 1800. It is four miles E of the mouth of the Var, and 83 S by W of Turin. Lon. 7 23 E, lat. 43 42 N.

Nice, a city of Asia. See Isnic.

town, harbour, and cape of the West Indies, at the N W extremity of St. Domingo, commanding the strait called the Windward Passage. The harbour is very capacious at the entrance; and ships of any burden may ride at anchor in the basin, during the greatest storm. It was taken by the English, aided by the French royalists, in 1793. Lon. 73 20 W, lat. 19 15 N.

Nicklesburg, a town of Germany, in Moravia, with a castle, 27 miles N of Vienna.

Nicobar Islands, several islands at the entrance of the gulf of Bengal. They are almost entirely uncultivated; but the cocoa-nut, the mellioli or lerum (a kind of bread-fruit) and other tropical fruits, grow spontaneously to the greatest perfection. The largest of these islands is about 40 miles long, 15 broad, and the inhabitants are said to be a harmless sort of people, low in stature but very well made, and surprisingly active and strong. They are naturally good humoured and gay, and are very fond of sitting at table with Europeans, and eat most enormously. There subsists among them a perfect equality. A few aged people, have a little more respect paid them, but there is no appearance of authority over one another. These islands extend northward, from the N point of Sumatra. The largest of them, which gives name to the rest, is 40 miles in length and 15 in breadth. Its S extremity is in lon. 94 23 E, lat. 8 0 N.

Nicolas, St. one of the largest of the Cape de Verd Islands, between St. Lucia and St. Jago. It is 75 miles in length; and the land is stony, mountainous, and barren. Lon. 14 10 W, lat. 16 32 N.

Nicolo, St. the most considerable and most populous town of the isle of Tremeti, in the gulf of Venice. It has a harbour, defended by a fortress, in which is an abbey and a church. Lon. 15 37 E, lat. 42 10 N.

Nicomedia, a town of Turkey in Asia in Natolia, now called Ischimich, or Schmit. It was formerly a large place, as appears by the fine ruins; and now contains 30,000 inhabitants, who consist of Greeks, Armenians, and Turks. It is still a place of consequence and carries on a trade in silk, cotton, glass, and earthen ware. It is the see of a Greek archbishop, and is 50 miles S W of Constantinople. Lon. 29 30 E, lat. 40 30 N.

Nicopoli, a town of Bulgaria, famous for the first battle fought between the Turks and the Christians in 1396, when the emperor Sigismund lost the day, and had 20,000 men killed. It is seated on the Danube, 130 miles N W of Adrianople. Lon. 25 33 E, lat. 44 26 N.

Nicopoli, or Glanish, an ancient town of Armenia, built by Pompey the Great, in memory of a victory gained over Mithridates. It is seated on the Cerana, 165 miles S W of Erzerum. Lon. 37 55 E, lat. 38 15 N.

Nicosia, a strong town, capital of the island of Cyprus, and the residence of a Turkish bashaw, delightfully seated between the mountain Olympus and a chain of other mountains. It was formerly well fortified by the Venetians, but now the works are in ruins. It is three miles in circumference; and there are plantations of olives, almonds, lemons, oranges, mulberries, and cyprus-trees, interspersed among the houses, which give the town a delightful appearance. The church of St. Sophia is an old Gothic structure, which the Turks have turned into a mosque, and destroyed the ornaments. It is 100 miles W of Tripoli, and 160 S W of Aleppo. Lon. 34 45 E, lat. 34 54 N.

now determined by Mr. Parke to be from W to E. In tracing the rise of the Niger Mr. Parke proceeded as far as Silla, the end of his journey Eastward; he was disabled from proceeding farther by sickness, hunger and fatigue; particularly as he must have relied on the charity of the Moors, if he had continued his journey, who seemed to be a set of merciless fanatics. So great is the rapidity with which the Niger traverses the empire of Cashua, that no vessel can ascend the stream; and in the rainy season, it swells above its banks, floods the adjacent lands, and often sweeps before it the cattle and cottages of the inhabitants.

Nile, a large and celebrated river of Africa, to which the country of Egypt owes its fertility; and the exploring of whose sources has, from the remotest ages, been accounted an impracticable undertaking. This discovery has however, been lately made by Mr. Bruce, who spent several years at the court of Abyssinia, and by the favour of the emperor and great people of the country, was enabled to accomplish this arduous task. In the middle of a marsh, near the bottom of the mountain of Geesh, arises a hillock of a circular form, about three feet from the surface of the marsh itself, though apparently founded much deeper in it. The diameter of this is something short of twelve feet; it is surrounded by a shallow trench, which collects the water, and voids it eastward; it is firmly built with sod or earthen turf, brought from the sides, and constantly kept in repair, and this is the altar upon which all their religious ceremonies are performed. This mouth, or opening of the source, is some parts of an inch less than three feet in diameter, and the water stood about two inches from the lip or brim. This spring is about six inches deep. This is the first fountain of the Nile. Ten feet distant from the first of these springs, a little to the west of south, is the sacred fountain, about eleven inches in diameter; but this is eight feet three inches deep. And about twenty feet distant from the first, is the third source, its mouth being something more than two feet large, and it is five feet eight inches deep. The Nile thus formed by the union of streams from these three fountains, runs E for about 50 yards, with very little increase of water, till it is turned gradually N E and then N by the grassy brink of the land descending from Saeala. Here it receives the addition of several springs, and becomes capable of turning a common mill. From this it turns W about four miles farther, where is a cataract of about six feet, after which it leaves the mountainous country, and takes its course thro' the plains of Goutto. Here it flows so gently, that its motion is scarcely discernible, and its direction is so winding, that it forms more than 20 sharp angular peninsulas, in a course of five miles. Its course then inclines to the N E and E, when it falls down another cataract, and then receives the Jenima, a stream not inferior in size to itself. Proceeding to the N, it crosses the southern part of the lake Tzana, or Dembea, and issues out at the W side of it in the territory of Dara. After emerging from this lake, it first receives the name of the Nile. The banks in the course of a few miles become very high, and are covered with the most beautiful and variegated verdure that can be conceived. It is now confined by the mountains of Bejemder till it reaches Alata, where is the third cataract, which is represented by Mr. Bruce as the most magnificent sight he ever beheld. The river had been considerably increased by rains, and fell in one sheet of water without any interval, about half an English mile in breadth, with a force and noise that was truly terrible, and which stunned, and made him for a time, perfectly dizzy. A thick fume, or haze, covered the fall all round, and hung over the course of the stream both above and below, marking its track, though the water is not seen. The river, though swelled with rain, preserved its natural clearness, and fell, as far as he could discern, into a deep pool, or basin, in the solid rock, which was full, and in twenty different eddies to the very foot of the precipice; the stream when it fell, seeming part of it to run back with great fury upon the rock, as well as forward in the line of its course, raising a wave, or violent ebullition, by chafing against each other. About half a mile below the cataract, the Nile is confined between two rocks, where it runs into a narrow channel with impetuous velocity and great noise. Below this tremendous waterfall the Nile takes a S E direction along the W side of Begemder and Amhara, on the right inclosing the province of Gojam. It receives a great number of streams from both sides, and after several turns takes at last a direction almost due N. and approaches within 62 miles of its source. It now seems to have forced its passage through a gap in some very high mountains, which bound the country of the Ganges, and falls down a cataract 280 feet high, and immediately below this are two others of very considerable height. It now runs close by Sennaar, in a direction nearly N and S, and afterwards makes a sharp turn to the E. Leaving Sennaar, it passes by many large towns inhabited by Arabs, and turning to the N E it joins the Tecazze, and passes a large and populous town named Chendi. Having at length received the great river Atbara, it turns directly N for about two degrees; it then turns to W by S for more than two degrees in longitude, and arrives at Korti. From Korti it runs almost S W till it passes Dongola, after which it comes to Moscho. From thence turning to the N E, it meets with a chain of mountains in about 22° 15' of N lat. where is the seventh cataract named Jan Adel. This is likewise very tremendous, though not above half as high as that of Alata. This course is now continued till it falls into the Mediterranean, there being only one other cataract in the whole space which is much inferior to any of those already described. The Nile overflows regularly every year; the causes of its inundations are thus described by Mr. Bruce. The sun being nearly stationary for some days in the tropic of Capricorn, the air there becomes so much rarified, that the heavier winds, charged with watery particles, rush in upon it from the Atlantic on the W, and from the Indian ocean on the E. Having thus gathered such a quantity of vapours as it were to a focus, the sun now puts them in motion, and drawing them after it in its rapid progress northward, on the 7th of January, for two raising a wave, or violent by chafing against each other half a mile below the Nile is confined between where it runs into a narrow channel with impetuous velocity and force. Below this tremendous cataract the Nile takes a S E direction on the W side of Begemder, on the right inclosing the Gojam. It receives a great stream from both sides, and then turns takes at last a direct due N. and approaches 1000 miles of its source. It now have forced its passage up in some very high mountains bound the country of the Nile falls down a cataract 280 and immediately below this there is a series of very considerable rapids now runs close by Senaar, then nearly N and S, and afterwards a sharp turn to the E. Senaar, it passes by many islands inhabited by Arabs, and then the N E it joins the Tecazze, a large and populous town on the Nile. Having at length reached the great river Athara, it turns to the W for about two degrees; it then flows W by S for more than two degrees of longitude, and arrives at Gondar where it runs almost S W. Below Gondar, after which it is called the Atoscho. From thence turning to the N E, it meets with a chain of mountains in about 22° 15' of N lat. Below the seventh cataract named Alata. This is likewise very treacherous, though not above half as high as the first. This course is now the Nile falls into the Mediterranean being only one other cataract the whole space which is inferior to any of those already mentioned. The Nile overflows regularly every year; the causes of its inundation thus described by Mr. Bruce, the sun being nearly stationary in the tropic of Cancer the air there becomes so much heated that the heavier winds, charged with fiery particles, rush in upon the Atlantic on the W, and the lighter on the E. Having gathered such a quantity of heat as were to a focus, the sun then moves in motion, and drawing the air in its rapid progress northward the 7th of January, for two years together, seemed to have extended its power to the atmosphere of Gondar, when for the first time, there appeared in the sky white, dappled, thin clouds, the sun being then distant 34° from the Zenith, without any one cloudy or dark speck having been seen for several months before. Advancing to the line with increased velocity, and describing larger spirals, the sun brings on a few drops of rain at Gondar the 1st of March, being then distant 3° from the zenith; these are greedily absorbed by the thirsty soil, and this seems to be the farthest extent of the sun's influence, capable of causing rain, which then only falls in large drops, and lasts but a few minutes; the rainy season, however, begins most seriously upon its arrival at the zenith of every place, and these rains continue constant and increasing after he has passed it, in his progress northward. In April, all the rivers in Amhara, Begemder, and Tasta, first discoloured, and then beginning to swell, join the Nile in several parts of its course nearest them; the river then, from the height of its angle of inclination, forces itself through the stagnant lake without mixing with it. In the beginning of May, hundreds of streams pour themselves from Gojam, Damot, Maitsha, and Demben, into the lake Tzana, which had become low by intense evaporation, but now begins to fill insensibly, and contributes a large quantity of water to the Nile, before it falls down the cataract of Alata. In the beginning of June, the sun, having now passed all Abyssinia, the rivers there are all full, and then is the time of the greatest rains in Abyssinia, while it is for some days, as it were, stationary in the tropic of Cancer.

Nimequen, a large and commercial city, capital of Dutch Guelderland, with a citadel, an ancient palace, and several forts. It is noted for the peace concluded here in 1695; and has been often taken and retaken, the last time by the French in 1794. It is seated on the Waal, 35 miles S E of Utrecht, and 70 N E of Antwerp. Lon. 5 45 E, lat. 51 55 N.

Ning-Koue-fou, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan, noted for its manufactures of paper, made of a species of reed; and containing in its district six cities of the third class.

Ning-so-fou, called by the Europeans Lianpo, an excellent seaport of China, on the E coast, opposite to Japan, in the province of Tche-kiang. The silks manufactured here are much esteemed in foreign countries, especially in Japan, where they are exchanged by the Chinese for copper, gold, and silver. This city has four others under its jurisdiction, besides a great number of fortresses. It is 850 miles S E of Peking. Lon. 120 18 E, lat. 29 57 N.

Ningouta, a city of Eastern Chinese Tartary, in the department of Kirin. It is surrounded by a wooden wall, composed of plain stakes driven into the earth. Without this palisado, there is another of the same kind, a league in circumference, which has four gates, corresponding to the four cardinal points.

Ninove, a town of Austrian Flanders, on the river Dender, with an abbey, 13 miles W of Brussels. Lon. 4 5 E, lat. 50 52 N.

Nis, an island of the Archipelago, to the S of Naxia, anciently called Ios. It is 35 miles in circumference, and fertile in corn, but has very little wood or oil. It has several commodious harbours, and is remarkable for nothing but Homer's tomb, who is said to be buried here. Lon. 25 35 W, lat. 36 43 N.

Niort, a town of France, in the department of the Two Sevres, and late province of Poitou. Its dry sweet wines are much esteemed, and it is noted for manufactures of coarse woollen goods. It is 28 miles N E of Rochelle. Lon. 0 33 W, lat. 46 20 N.

Nippon, the largest island of Japan, 600 miles long, and 150 broad, containing 55 provinces. It was discovered in 1542, by the Portuguese, who were cast on shore by a tempest. The chief town is Jedo. It is 134 miles E of China.

Nisherei-Novogorod, an archiepiscopal town of Russia, in a government of the same name, with a citadel. It is seated on a mountain at the confluence of the Volga and Occa, 280 miles E by N of Moscow. Lon. 45 30 E, lat. 56 34 N.

Nisiben, or Nesbin, a very ancient and celebrated town of Diarbeck, now only the shadow of what it was, and seated in a vast plain, 70 miles S W of Diarbeck. Lon. 38 26 E, lat. 36 10 N.

Nisita, a small island on the coast of Naples, very fertile, and would be more so but for the great number of rabbits. It has a harbour, called Porto Favone.

Nîmes, a flourishing city of France in the department of Gard and late province of Languedoc, with a bishop's see. Here are several monuments of antiquity, of which the amphitheatre, built by the Romans, is the principal. The Maison Quarree, or the square house, is a piece of architecture of the Corinthian order, and one of the finest in the world. The temple of Diana is, in part, gone to ruin. Nîmes was taken by the English in 1417. The inhabitants were all Calvinists; but Lewis XIV. demolished their church, in 1685; and built a castle to keep them in awe. The population of Nîmes is computed at near 50,000. It is seated in a plain, abounding in wine and oil, 12 miles N W of Arles, and 75 N E of Narbonne. Lon. 4 26 E, lat. 43 51 N.

Nissa, or Nesava, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Servia, seated on the Moravia. It was burnt by the Imperialists in 1689, and is 20 miles E of Precep, and 120 S E of Belgrade. Lon. 22 32 E, lat. 43 32 N.

Nith, a river in Dumfriesshire, which issues from a lake in the mountains to the N W, and passing the towns of Sanquhar, Morton, and Drumlanrig, joins the Cairn, a little above Dumfries, and their united streams form a fine estuary in Solway Frith.

Nithdale, a division of Dumfriesshire, Scotland, lying to the W of Annandale. It is a large and mountainous country, and derives its name from the river Nith. It was formerly shaded with noble forests, which are now almost destroyed. It yields lead, and the mountains are covered with sheep and black cattle.

Nitria, a famous desert of Egypt, 37 miles in length, on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea. It had formerly a great number of monasteries, which are now reduced to four: and it takes its name from a salt lake, out of which is got the natrum of the ancients.

Nivelle, a town of Austrian Brabant, remarkable for its abbey, of noble canonesses, whose abbess is styled princess of Nivelle. Here also is John of Nivelle, so much admired by the common people; which is the figure of a man in iron, standing on the top of a tower near the clock, who strikes the hours with a hammer. The place enjoys great privileges, and has a manufacture of cumbries. It is 13 miles S E of Brussels. Lon. 4 36 E, lat. 50 35 N.

N O G

Nivernois, a late province of France, between Burgundy, Bourbonnais, and Berry. It is pretty fertile, contains mines of iron, and is watered by a great number of rivers, of which the Loire, Allier, and the Yonne are the principal. It now forms the department of Nièvre.

Nixabour, a town of Persia, in Khorasan, 80 miles S E of Mesched. Lon. 61 32 E, lat. 35 40 N.

Nixapa, a considerable town of New Spain, with a rich Dominican convent. The country near it produces a great deal of indigo, cochineal, and sugar. It is 30 miles S E of Antequera. Lon. 97 15 W, lat. 16 42 N.

Nixonton, a post town in Pasquotank county, North Carolina; situated on the E side of Little river, 36 miles N E of Edenton, and 13 S W of Jonesburg on Pasquotank river. This is the capital of the county, and principal seat of justice.

Nizza-della-Paglia, a town of Italy, in Monterrat, seated on the Belbo, 15 miles S W of Alexandria. Lon. 8 36 E, lat. 45 15 N.

Noanagar, a town of Hindoostan Proper, situated on the S coast of the gulf of Cutch. It is capital of a district inhabited by a piratical tribe, called Sangarians. It is 300 miles N W of Bombay.

Nocera, an ancient town of Italy in the duchy of Spoleto, with a bishop's see; seated at the foot of the Appennines, 18 miles N E of Spoleto. Lon. 12 49 E, lat. 43 1 N.

Nocera-di-Pagani, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavora, 15 miles S of Naples. Lon. 14 20 E, lat. 40 36 N.

Nogarcot, a town of Hindoostan Proper, noted for a celebrated pagoda. It lies in the province of Napoul, and is 50 miles N E of Catmandu. Lon. 85 12 E, lat. 28 40 N.

Nogajans, the name of a Tartar nation which occupy the deserts on the northern side of the Euxine and the Caspian sea, and on the northern side of Mount Caucasus; besides several settlements to the W and N W of the Euxine; in such a manner that they occupy the lower part of Volga, the rivers Terek, Kouma, and Kouban, the environs of the Palus Mæotis, the borders of the Tanais in the peninsula of Krimea, and the banks of the Borysthenes and the Dniester, to the other side of the Danube.

a late province of France, in the department of Aude and late province of Champagne, seated on the Seine, 25 miles N W of Troyes. Lon. 3 40 E, lat. 48 30 N.

Nogent-le-Rotrou, a pretty populous town of France, in the department of Eure and Loire and late provinces of Beauce, seated on the Hilaire, 35 miles N E of Mans. Lon. 0 50 E, lat. 48 26 N.

Noir Cape, a promontory of South America, at the S extremity of Terra del Fuogo. Lon. 73 3 W, lat. 54 32 S.

Noirmatier, an island of France, near the mouth of the river Loire. It is 17 miles in length and eight in breadth, full of bogs, and yet there are good pastures. The English attacked it without success in 1795. The principal town is of the same name. Lon. 2 10 W, lat. 47 0 N.

Nola, an ancient town of Naples, in Terra di Lavora, with a bishop's see, 10 miles N E of Naples. The ruins of its ancient edifices are almost obliterated, and nothing remains of the two amphitheatres but some brick walls, the marble casing having been taken away by an earl of Nola to build his palace. Lon. 14 28 E, lat. 40 56 N.

Noli, a town of Italy, in the territory of Genoa, with a bishop's see, and a good harbour. It is five miles N E of Final, and 30 S W of Genoa. Lon. 8 41 E, lat. 44 18 N.

Nombre-de-Dios, a town of Terra Firma, in the province of Darien, a little E of Porto-Bello, to which its once flourishing trade is now transferr'd. Lon. 78 35 W, lat. 9 40 N.

Nomeny, a town of France, in the department of Meurthe and late province of Lorraine, seated on the Selle, 15 miles N of Nanci. Lon. 6 13 E, lat. 48 56 N.

Nona Cape, a promontory of Africa, opposite the Canary Islands. It was long considered by the Portuguese, in their attempts to explore Africa as an impassable boundary denoted by its name. But they doubled it at last, in 1412. Lon. 10 30 W, lat. 28 30 N.

Nona, a small but strong town of Hungarian Dalmatia, with a bishop's see. It is seated near the sea, seven miles N by W of Zara. Lon. 16 10 E, lat. 44 35 N.

Nontron, a town of France, in the department of Dordogne, and late province of Perigord, 21 miles N of Peri-gnetz, and 30 SSW of Limoges. Lon. 0 33 E, lat. 46 32 N.

Noopour, a town of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Guzerat, 55 miles E of Surat, and 142 W of Burhampour. Lon. 73 50 E, lat. 21 11 N.

Nootho. See King George's Sound.

Norberg, a town of Sweden, in Westmanland, 34 miles N of Stromsholm. In its vicinity are the best iron mines in the province. Lon. 16 12 E, lat. 60 2 N.

Norcia, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Spoleto. It is a kind of republic, and seated among the mountains, 20 miles S E of Spoleto. Lon. 13 4 E, lat. 42 36 N.

Nord. See Norta.

Nordburg, a town of Denmark, at the N extremity of the isle of Alsen, with a castle, nine miles N N W of Sunderburg.

Nordgau. See Bavaria, Upper Palatinate of.

Nordhausen, an imperial town of Lower Saxony, under the protection of the elector of Saxony. The inhabitants are protestants. It is 25 miles S W of Halberstadt. Lon. 11 3 E, lat. 51 45 N.

Nordheim, a town of Lower Saxony, in the duchy of Brunswick, situate between the Ruhme and Leina, ten miles N of Gottingen, and 45 S of Hanover. It carries on a pretty considerable commerce. Lon. 9 32 E, lat. 51 34 N.

Nordkioping, a town of Sweden, in E Gothland. It is one of the largest and most commercial provincial towns in Sweden, and covers a large space of ground, being 10 miles in circumference; but the houses are scattered, and the inhabitants do not exceed 10,000. The river Motala flows through the town, forms a series of cataracts, and is divided into four principal streams, which encircle several rocky islands, covered with buildings: at the extremity of the town it is navigable for small vessels. Here are manufactures of cloth, which employ 1500 men; three sugar-houses; one of snuff; fifty mills for grinding corn, which is exported in large quantities; and a brass foundery. They have also a salmon fishery which gives employment and riches to many of the inhabitants. It is 90 miles S W of Stockholm. Lon. 15 50 E, lat. 59 23 N.

Nordland, a province of Northern Norway, included in the government of Drontheim.

Norlingen, a commercial and free imperial town of Suabia, seated on the Aigre, 38 miles N W of Augsburg. Lon. 11 49 E, lat. 48 52 N.

Nordstrand, an island of Denmark, in the dutchy of Sleswick, which was entirely overflowed in 1634. Lon. 9 15 E, lat 54 40 N.

Norfolk, a county of England, 77 miles long and 45 broad; bounded on the N and E by the German Ocean, on the W by Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire, and on the S and S E by Suffolk. It contains 31 hundreds, one city, 32 market-towns, and 660 parishes; and sends 12 members to parliament. The air differs in different parts of the county according to the soil, which in some places is marshy, especially on the sea coast, and there the air is foggy and unwholesome; in others it is clayey and chalky, poor, lean and sandy, and there the air is good. The county is almost all champaign, except in some places where rise gentle hills. The marsh lands yield rich pasture for cattle; the clay grounds, pease, rye and barley; and the sandy heaths feed vast flocks of large sheep, of which some villages are said to keep 4000 or 5000. These heaths also abound in rabbits of a silver grey colour. Great quantities of mackarel and herring are caught upon the coast of this county, the former in the spring, and the latter in September; especially at Yarmouth, where they are cured in a particular manner, and to great perfection. Wood and honey are also very plentiful in this county, and on the coasts jet and amber-grease are sometimes found. Turnips are also more generally grown here than in any other part of the country; likewise buckwheat, which is used for feeding swine and poultry. The manufactures of the county, which is exceedingly populous, are chiefly woollen and worsted stuffs and stockings, for which they are well supplied with wool from the vast flocks of sheep fed on it. The county is well watered and supplied with fish by the rivers Yare, Thyrn, Waveney, the Greater and Lesser Ouse, and the Bure, besides rivulets. Turkeys are reared here to a larger size than elsewhere, and there is a bundance of game especially pheasants. Norwich is the capital.

Norfolk, a port of entry and post town in Norfolk county, Virginia; as well as the capital of the county. It is seated on the E side of Elizabeth river, about 20 miles W of Cape Henry, 18 S. Hampton, on the opposite side of the bay, and 54 S E of Williamsburg, in lat. 36° 55' N. and long. 76° 25' W. This is a very thriving town, being finely situated for foreign trade, and possessing more of it than any other in the State of Virginia. The exports of one year have amounted to 2,000,000 of dollars, and those principally of domestic produce. It is a borough town, and governed by a Mayor and Aldermen. The inhabitants in 1800 were reckoned 6,946, one third of whom, at least, were slaves.

Norfolk Island, an island in the Pacific Ocean, lying E of New South Wales, and settled by a colony of convicts, subordinate to that government. It is very hilly, but some of the vallies are tolerably large. Mount Pitt, the only remarkable hill, is 12,000 feet high. The island is well watered; at or near Mount Pitt, rises a copious stream which, flowing through a very fine valley, divides itself into several branches, each of which retains sufficient force to be used in turning mills. The whole island is covered by a very thick forest, choaked with underwood, and the principal timber tree is the pine, which is very useful in building, and seems to be durable. The woods are inhabited by innumerable tribes of birds, many of them, very gay in plumage. The soil, when cleared, may be rendered very productive; and the air is very wholesome. The spring is perceptible in August; but the trees are in a constant succession of flowering and fruiting the year round. In summer, the heat is excessive; from February to August may be called the rainy season; and the winter, from April to July, is very pleasant. The cliffs round the coast are 240 feet high, quite perpendicular; and the want of a safe harbour is a great inconvenience. The settlement is formed in Sidney Bay, on the S side of the island, in lon. 168 12 E, lat. 29 4 S.

Norfolk Sound, is a very extensive place; it lies in Lon. 135 36 W, lat. 57 3 N. How far it stretches to the N is not known.

Normandy, a late province of France, bounded on the W by the Atlantic, on the N by the English Channel, on the E by Picardy and the Isle of France, and on the S by Perche, Maine, and Bretagne. It is one of the most fertile in France, and abounds in all things except wine, but that defect is supplied by cyder and perry. It contains iron, copper, and a great number of rivers and harbours. This province now comprehends the departments of Calvados, Eure, the Channel, Orne, and Lower Seine.

Norridgewock, a post town in Kennebec county, Maine, lying on the S side of Kennebec river, 35 miles N W of Augusta, with 633 inhabitants.

Norristown, the capital of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania; 17 miles N by W of Philadelphia; situated on the N E side of Schuylkill river, and containing 922 inhabitants. The Delaware and Schuylkill canal passes between this town and Schuylkill.

Nortelga, or Nor Telge, a maritime town of Sweden, in the province of Uppland, near which is a forge for making fire arms. It was much injured by the Russians in 1719, who ravaged the town. It is 30 miles N E of Stockholm. Lon. 10 32 E, lat. 50 44 N.

Northampton, a post town in Hampshire county, Massachusetts; on the W side of Connecticut river, 48 miles W of Worcester, and 40 N of Hartford, in Connecticut. It has 2190 inhabitants.

Northampton, the county-town of Northamptonshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Nen, which is navigable to Lynn. Its fairs are noted for horses both for the draught and saddle; and it is besides a great thoroughfare for the W and N roads. Its principal manufactures is shoes, of which great numbers are sent beyond sea; and next to that stockings and lace. The horse market is reckoned to exceed all others in the kingdom, it being deemed the centre of all its horse-markets, and horse-fairs, both for saddle and harness, and the chief rendezvous of the jockies from York and London. It is a handsome town, has a spacious market-place, and had seven churches, which are now reduced to four. It was almost entirely destroyed by fire in 1675, but was soon rebuilt.

It sends two members to parliament, is governed by a mayor, and has a good free-school, and a county infirmary and gaol. In the meadows below the town, a battle was fought, in 1460, between Henry VI. and the Yorkists, in which the former was defeated and made prisoner; and near it is a fine Gothic structure, called Queen's Cross, erected by Edward I. in memory of his queen Eleanor. This town is 30 miles S E of Coventry, and 66 N W of London. Lon. 1 11 W, lat. 52 11 N.

Northamptonshire, a county of England, 60 miles long and 22 where broadest; bounded on the S by Bucks and Oxfordshire, on the W by that county and Warwickshire, on the N W by Leicestershire, and Rutlandshire, on the N by Lincolnshire, and on the E by the counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon and Bedford. It lies in the diocese of Peterborough, contains 20 hundreds, one city, 12 market towns, and 330 parishes, and there are 150,000 inhabitants. As this county is dry, well cultivated, free from marshes, except the fens of Peterborough, in the centre of the kingdom, and of course at a distance from sea, it enjoys a very pure and wholesome air. In consequence of this it is very populous, and so full of towns and churches, that 30 spires or steeples may be seen in many places at one view; and even in the fens the inhabitants seem to enjoy a good state of health, and to be little affected by the water which frequently overflows their grounds, especially in winter, but it is never suffered to remain long upon it. Its soil is fertile both in corn and pasturage in which it is peculiarly celebrated; but it labours under a scarcity of fuel, as it doth not produce much wood, and by lying at a distance from the sea cannot be easily supplied with coal. Horned cattle, and other animals, are fed to extraordinary sizes; and many horses of the large black breed are reared. Wood for the dyers is cultivated here; but the county is not distinguished for manufactures. Besides many lesser brooks it is well watered by the rivers Nen, Well and Oluse, Leam, Cherwell and Avon, the three first of which are for the most part navigable.

Northcurry, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Tuesday and Saturday. It is seated on the Tone, 20 miles S W of Wells, and 134 W by S of London. Lon. 3 0 W, lat. 51 0 N.

Northfield, a post town of Hampshire county, Massachusetts, on the E bank of Connecticut river, nearly opposite to Greenfield, and 80 miles W by N of Boston.

Northfleet, a village in Kent, seated on the Thames, one mile W of Gravesend, and 21 from London. The church is very large, and contains fragments of monuments, as ancient as the fourteenth century. Vast quantities of lime are made, and great numbers of extraneous fossils have been dug up here.

Northford, a town in New Haven county, Connecticut, 10 miles E of New Haven. Here is a post office.

Northleach, a corporate town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Wednesday, several almshouses, and a free grammar-school. It is seated on the Lech, 25 miles E of Gloucester, and 80 W by N of London. Lon. 1 43 W, lat. 51 46 N.

Northumberland, a county of England, which received its name from being situate N of the Humber. In the Saxon heptarchy it was a part of the kingdom of the Northumbrians, which contained also the counties of York, Lancaster, Durham, Cumberland, and Westmoreland. It forms the N extremity of England, and is bounded on the E by the German Ocean, on the S by the bishopric of Durham, on the S W and W by Cumberland, and on the N W and N by Scotland, from which it is separated by the Tweed. It extends 70 miles from N to S, and 50 from E, to W. It lies in the diocese of Durham; contains 12 market-towns, and 460 parishes; and sends eight members to parliament. The air of this county is not so cold as might be imagined from the lat. in which it lies; for its situation between two seas, in the narrowest part of England, gives it the advantage of having the cold moderated by the vapours of each; and, for this reason, the snow seldom lies long in this county, except on the tops of high hills. The air is very healthful, and the people who generally live to a great age, are seldom afflicted with sickness. The soil is various, the eastern part, which is fruitful, having very good wheat, and most sorts of corn, and has rich meadows on the banks of the rivers; but the western part is generally barren, it being mostly heathy and mountainous. The S E part abounds with pit-coal, of which 658,858 chaldrons are computed to be annually shipped from thence to London. There are also large quantities of lead and timber. The rivers cause the country to be well watered, and afford great plenty of salmon and trout. The principal of these are the Tyne, the Tweed, and the Cocket, Alnwick is the county town, but the largest is Newcastle.

Northumberland, a county of Pennsylvania, 180 miles long and 80 broad. A computation was made of its inhabitants in 1790, when it contained 17,161.

Northwich, a town in Cheshire, with a market on Friday. It is seated on the Weaver, near its conflux with the Dane, and is noted for its salt-works. The stratum of salt lies about 40 yards deep and some of them are hollowed into the form of a tetra-ple. Vast pits of solid rock salt have been dug here to a great depth, from which immense quantities are raised; and much of it, in its crude state, goes to Liverpool by the river Weaver, to be

Norway, a kingdom of Europe, the most westerly part of the ancient Scandinavia, lying between the 57th and 72d degrees of N lat. and between the 5th and 31st degrees of E lon. extending in length about 1000 miles in a direct line from Lindisnaes, in the diocese of Christiansand to the N cape at the extremity of Finmark. It is bounded on the N and W by the Northern Ocean, on the E by Swedish Lapland and Sweden, and on the S by the Categate. Its breadth, which is very unequal, is from 30 to 280 miles. It is divided into the four governments of Aggerhuya or Christiania, Christiansand, Bergen, and Drontheim. From its rocky soil and northern position, Norway is not populous in proportion to its extent. Mr. Coxe has calculated the number of inhabitants to be 750,000, but he is supposed to have overrated them considerably. They maintain their own army, which consists of 24,000 foot, and 6000 cavalry. Their troops are much esteemed for their bravery, and, like the Swiss mountaineers, are exceedingly attached to their country. Norway is blessed with a particular code, called the Norway Law, compiled by Griefelfeld, at the command of Christian V. the great legislator of his country. By this law peasants are free, a few only excepted, on some noble estates near Fredericstادت; and the benefits of this code are visible in the great difference, in their appearance, between the free peasants in Norway and the enslaved vassals of Denmark, though both living under the same government. The Norwegians are generally well formed, tall, sturdy and robust, brave, hardy, honest, hospitable and ingenious; yet savage, rash, quarrelsome and litigious. Their women are well shaped, tall, comely remarkably fair and obliging. The mountaineers acquire surprising strength and dexterity by hard living, cold, laborious exercise, climbing rocks, skating on the snow, and handling arms. Those who dwell in the maritime parts of Norway exercise the employment of fishing and navigation, and become very expert mariners. The peasants never employ any handicraftsmen for necessities to themselves and families; they are their own hatters, shoemakers, tailors, tanners, weavers, carpenters, smiths, and joiners; they are even expert in ship-building; and some of them make excellent violins. Great part of Norway is covered with forests of wood, which constitute the principal article of commerce in this country. They chiefly consist of fir and pine, for which great sums are received from foreigners, who export an immense number of masts, beams, planks, and boards. The climate of Norway is very different in different parts of the kingdom. At Bergen the winter is so moderate, that the seas are always open and practicable, except in creeks and bays. On the E side of Norway, from the frontiers of Sweden to Filefield, the cold generally sets in about the middle of October with great severity, and lasts till the middle of April. The soil of Norway varies in different places, according to the situation of rock or valley. The mountains are bare and barren; but the earth washed down from them, enriches and fertilizes the vallies. In these the soil generally consists of black mould, sand, loam, chalk and gravel, lying over one another in unequal strata. The face of the country is in many places deformed by large swamps and marshes, very dangerous to the traveller. The ploughed lands in respect to mountains, woods, meadows and wastes do not exceed the proportion of 1 to 80, so that the whole country does not produce corn to maintain above half the number of its inhabitants. The principal trees, as noticed above, are the fir and pine; it produces likewise oak, plenty of elm trees, ash, hazel, and birch. They carry on a considerable trade with foreign nations. Their exports are copper wrought and unwrought; iron cast into cannon, stoves, and pots, or forged into bars; masts, timber, deal-boards, planks, marble, mill-stones, herring, cod, ling, flounders, cow-hides, goat-skins, seal-skins, the furs of bears, &c. down, feathers, butter, tallow, train-oil, tar, juniper and other sorts of berries and nuts. They have inexhaustible quarries of excellent marble, black, white, blue, grey and variegated. Gold has likewise been found in a small quantity, and a considerable silver mine is at present wrought at Koningsberg at the risk of his Danish majesty. These were visited by Mr. Coxe, who says that they formerly produced 70,000*l.*; but they now produce only 50,000*l.* The mines of cobalt and the preparation of Prussian blue is much more productive. It abounds in lakes and rivers; the former so large, that they appear like inlets of the sea. Norway was formerly governed by its own hereditary sovereigns. On the demise of Hagen V. in 1319, without male issue, his grandson in the female line, Magnus Smek, united in his person the kingdoms of Sweden and Norway. Magnus was succeeded in the kingdom of Norway by his son Hagen VI. husband of the celebrated Margaret; and at his decease, in 1380, Norway was united to Denmark by their son Olof V. who dying without issue, Margaret herself was raised to the throne by the unanimous voice of the nation. On her death, it descended with Denmark and Sweden, to her nephew Eric. Sweden was afterward separated from Denmark by the valour and address of Gustavus Vasa; but Norway continues united to Denmark. The capital is Christiania.

Norwich, an ancient and populous city, the capital of Norfolk, with a market on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday. It is surrounded by a wall, now much decayed, and seated on the Yare, which runs through it, and is navigable to Yarmouth without locks. Though, as it has been said, it is a populous city, yet there is void enough in it for another colony; and, from the intermixture of its houses with trees, it is called a city in an orchard. It adds much to the trade of Yarmouth, by the vast cargoes of coal, wine, fish, oil, and all other heavy goods, which come to it from thence by the river Yare. Its manufactures are generally sent to London, though considerable quantities are exported from Yarmouth to Holland, Germany, Sweden, and Norway, &c. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. There are, besides the cathedral, 36 parish churches, two churches for the Flemings, some dissenting meeting-houses, and a Romm catholic chapel. It has a stately castle, on a hill which is the shire-house, and the county gaol; the assizes for the city being held at the Guildhall. The city is reckoned six miles in compass. It has 12 gates, and six bridges over the Yare, and contains about 45,000 inhabitants. This town is famous for its worsted manufacture. By a late calculation from the number of looms at work in the city only, it appeared there were no less than 120,000 people employed in their manufactures of wool, silk, &c. in and about the town, including those employed in spinning the yarn used for such goods as are all made in this city. There is a stocking manufactory also here, which has been computed at 60,000*l.* a year. It is 43 miles N of Ipswich, and 109 N E of London. Lon. 1 20 E. lat. 52 40 N.

Nottingham, the county-town of Not- tinghamshire, with a market on Wed- nesday and Saturday. It is situate on a rocky eminence, crowned by its cas- tle; a magnificent modern structure, belonging to the duke of Newcastle, and built on the site of an ancient for- tress, celebrated in English history. It is a populous and handsome town, distinguished by its spacious market- place, and noted for its excellent ale. It is one of the principal seats of the stocking manufacture, particularly of the finer kinds, as those of silk and cotton, and has also a manufacture of coarse earthen ware. It has three parish churches, and several meetings for the dissenters. The streets are well paved, and from their situation in a rock always clean. It is remark- able for its vaults, or cellars, cut into the rock; and in the neighbourhood are many coalpits, which afford plenty of fuel, at little expence. At this town Charles I. set up his standard, at the commencement of the civil war. Not- tingham is governed by a mayor, sends two members to parliament, and is seated on a river which communicates with the Trent, one mile to the S. It is 16 miles E of Derby, and 123 N by W of London. Lon. 1 2 W, lat. 52 58 N.

Nottinghamshire, a county of Eng- land, 48 miles long and 20 broad; bounded on the N by Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, on the E by the latter county, on the S by Leicestershire, and on the W by Devonshire. It lies in the Diocese of York: contains 95,000 inhabitants, and sends eight members to parliament. No county in England enjoys a pleasanter and healthier air. As for the soil, it dif- fers widely in various parts of the county. Towards the W where lies the forest of Sherwood, which takes up the greatest part of it, it is sandy, but the S and E parts, watered by the Trent and rivers that fall into it, are fruitful both in corn and pasture; but the former produces little, except, wood, coal, and some lead. The county has a variety of manufactures and commodities, as wool, leather, tallow, stockings, earthen ware, and strong ale. The principal rivers are the Trent, and Idle; the former inferior only to the Severn, Thames, and Hum- ber.

Nova Scotia, or Acadia, a country of British North America, bounded on the W by the United States, on the N by the river St. Lawrence, on the E by the gulf of that name, and on the S by the Atlantic and bay of Fundy; being so indented by the latter, that its eastern part forms a peninsula. It extends from cape Sable, its most southern point, in lat. 43 23 to 49 30 N, and from 60 15 to 67 0 W lon. In 1784, part of this country was formed into a new province. See New Brunswick. It is very unhealthy on account of the thick fogs which obscures the atmosphere for a great part of the year, and for four or five months it is intensely cold. The most part of the country is one continued tract of forest, and the soil, except on the rivers' banks, is thin and barren. Halifax is the capital.

Novogorod, one of the most ancient cities, and once the metropolis of Russia, now capital of a government of the same name, and formerly called Great Novogorod, to distinguish it from other Russian towns of the same appellations. It was for a long time, governed by its own dukes; and was in fact, a republic, under the jurisdiction of a nominal sovereign. It was the great mart of trade between Russia and the hanseatic cities, and made the most rapid advances in opulence and population. At this period its dominions were so extensive, extending to the N as far as the frontiers of Livonia, and Finland: comprising great part of the province of Archangel, and a large district beyond the N W limits of Siberia, its power so great, and its situation so impregnable, as to give rise to a proverb, Who can resist the gods and the Great Novogorod? It continued in this flourishing state till the 15th century, when Ivan Vassilievitch grand Duke of Russia laid siege to the town. The inhabitants were constrained to surrender and deliver up the charter of their liberties. It still continued to be the most flourishing and commercial town of Russia, and at this period contained 400,000 souls. The prosperity of Novogorod at this time experienced a most fatal downfall from which it never recovered. Ivan having discovered a conspiracy between the inhabitants and the king of Poland, butchered about 25,000 or 30,000 of the inhabitants. But the splendour of this once flourishing town was not totally obscured, until Peter the Great founded Petersburg to which he transferred the commerce of the Baltic. It now contains scarce 7000 souls; but a vast number of churches and convents stand melancholy monuments of its former magnificence. The town stretches on both sides of the Volkoff, a river of considerable depth and rapidity, which separates it into two divisions; namely, the Trading Part and the quarter of St. Sophia, which are united by a bridge. Novogorod is situate near the lake Ilmen, 125 miles S S E of Petersburg. Lon. 32 45 E, lat. 58 20 N.

Nur aburg, or Nuvenberg, a free im-circle of Franconia, with a university.

It is six miles in circumference, surrounded by high walls, flanked with 363 towers; and the river Pegnitz, over which are 12 stone bridges, runs through the middle, and divides it into two parts. The government is aristocratical; and the townsmen are divided into eight quarters, each of which has a captain. The burgeses are very industrious, and the best workmen in arts; their maps and prints are in high esteem, as well as their musical and mathematical instruments; nor are they less curious in clockwork, and in the several manufactures of iron, steel, ivory, wood, and alabaster. The best toys are made here, which are commonly known in England by the name of Dutch toys. Here is a famous academy for painting, an anatomical theatre, and a public library. The ancient and superb castle or palace, which the inhabitants bought of the burgraves, is still standing at the extremity of the city; and the arsenal is one of the best in Germany. The houses are built of freestone, and are four or five stories high. Though their religion is the Lutheran, the church of the Holy Ghost has a variety of relics, as also the imperial crown and sceptre, the globe of the empire, the sword of St. Maurice, the imperial mantle, the white robe of the emperors, called the dalmatic, the golden surplice, the mantle of the choir, and the gloves, slippers, and hereditary crown of the Emperor Rodolph II. All these rarities are placed in a chest, which is suspended by a rope in the dome, and they are never taken down but at the coronation of an emperor, or when any person of high distinction wants to see them. No Jews are suffered to lodge a single night here; nor can they enter the city at all without paying a certain tax. Omega, a river and lake of Russia, in the government of Olonetz. It is 100 miles long and 40 broad, and has a communication with Lake Ladoga, and consequently with Petersburg. The river gives its name to a country full of wood, and falls into the White Sea.

Onglia, a principality of Italy, surrounded by the territory of Genoa, but subject to the king of Sardinia. It abounds in olive-trees, fruits and wine.

Onglia, a seaport of Italy, in a principality of the same name. The French and Spaniards had possession of it in 1744, but were driven from it by the Piedmontese. It was taken by the French, in 1794. It is seated on a small river, 30 miles S E of Cogni, and 50 W by S of Genoa. Lon. 7 31 E, lat. 43 58 N.

Oneida or Onondago, a lake of N America, in the state of New York. It is 20 miles W of Fort Stanwix, and extends westward about 25 miles where its outlet, the Onondago river, runs into Lake Ontario, at Oswego.

Ongar, or Chipping Ongar, a town in Essex, with a market on Saturday, 12 miles W of Chelmsford, and 21 E N E of London. Lon. 0 16 E, lat. 51 43 N.

Ongole, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, seated on a river which falls into the Bay of Bengal, not far from its mouth, and is 829 miles S W of Calcutta. Lon. 80 5 E, lat. 15 30 N.

Onondago, a lake, and river, in the state of New York. The river flows W from the lake till it meets the Seneca, when its course turns N, to Oswego, where it enters Lake Ontario. It is boatable from its mouth to the head of the lake, except one fall which causes a portage of 20 yards. Towards the head waters of this river, salmon are caught in great quantities.

Onondago, a small post town in Onondago county, New York, formerly the seat of the general council of the six nations; situated about ten miles S by E of Salt Lake, and 60 W by S of old Fort Schuyler.

Oonust, a small island, at the mouth of the harbour of Batavia, where the Dutch build and careen their ships.

Oontario, a lake of N America, situate between 71 and 74° W lon. and 41 and 43° N lat. On its S W part it receives the waters of Lake Erie (by means of the river Niagara) and near the S E the Onondago river; and on the N E its waters enter the river Iroquois.
It is 600 miles in circumference, and abounds with fish of an excellent flavour, among which are the Oswego bass, weighing three or four pounds.

Oodooanullah, a town of Hindoostan Proper, in Bengal, seated on the W bank of the Ganges, at the foot of a chain of hills. The situation is esteemed unhealthy, on account of the forests in its vicinity. It was the seat of the government of Bengal, under Sultan Sujah, till he fell in the contest for empire with his brother Aurungzebe. The numberless ruins here, and in the neighbourhood, evince his passion for building, and the great extent of them.

There still remains a part of the palace, which, in his time, was nearly destroyed by fire. Here is an elegant bridge over the Ganges, built by the same prince, famous for the victory gained over Meer Cossim, in 1764, by Major Adams. Oodooanullah is 82 miles N by W of Moorshedabad. Lon. 87 55 E, lat. 24 58 N.

Oonulastu, one of the islands of the Northern Archipelago, visited by captain Cook in his last voyage. The native inhabitants of this island are to all appearance a very peaceable people, having been much polished by the Russians, who now keep them in a state of subjection. As the island furnishes them with subsistence, so it does, in some measure with clothing, which is chiefly composed of skins. The upper garment, which is made like a w-ggoner's frock, reaches down to the knees. Besides this, they wear a waistcoat or two, a pair of breeches, a fur cap, and a pair of boots, the legs of which are formed of some kind of strong gut; but the soles and upper part are of Russia leather. Fish and other sea animals, birds, roots, berries, and even sea-weed, compose their food.
They dry quantities of fish during the summer, which they lay up in small huts for their use in winter. They did not appear to very be desirous of iron, nor to want any other instrument except sewing needles, their own being formed of bone. With these they sew their canoes, and make their clothes, and also work very curious embroidery. They use, instead of thread, the fibres of plants, which they split to the thickness required. All sewing is performed by the females, who are shoemakers, tailors and boat-builders. They manufacture mats, and baskets of grass, which are both strong and beautiful. There is, indeed, a neatness and perfection in most of their works, that shows that they are deficient neither in ingenuity nor perseverance. Lon. 165 0 W, lat. 53 5 N.

Orach, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Bosnia, near the river Drino, 60 miles S W of Belgrade.

Oran, a strong and important seaport in the kingdom of Algiers, and province of Tremesen, with several forts, and an excellent harbour. It is seated partly on the side of a hill, and partly in a plain, almost opposite to Carthage, in Spain. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1509, and retaken in 1708. In 1732, the Spaniards became masters of it again, and have kept it ever since. In 1790, it was destroyed by an earthquake, nothing but the exterior walls being left standing; and 2000 persons perished. The bey of Mascara, taking advantage of the distressed state of the garrison, attacked it with a considerable force, was but compelled to retire, after three obstinate attacks. It is 124 miles W by S of Algiers. Lon. 08 W, lat. 36 2 N.

Orange, an ancient city of France, in the department of Drome and late province of Dauphiny, and before the French revolution, an episcopal see. It was an important place in the time of the Romans. A triumphal arch, 200 paces from the town, was formerly within its limits; and here are also the remains of a fine amphitheatre, some aqueducts, &c. which escaped the fury of the Goths and Saracens. The fortifications were demolished by Lewis XIV. in 1682. It is seated in a fine plain, on the river Aigues, 12 miles N of Avignon, and 50 N E of Montpellier. Lon. 4 49 E, lat. 44 9 N.

Orangeburg, a post town, the capital of Orange county, South Carolina, situated on the E side of Edisto river, about 70 miles N W of Charleston, and 43 S E of Columbia, the present capital of the state.

Oranienbaum, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, in the dutchy of Anhalt Dessau, six miles S E of Dessau.

Orkney, a town of Schonen in Sweden, 24 miles N of Christianstadt. Lon. 14 9 E, lat. 56 48 N.

Orkney Islands, a cluster of islands to the N of Scotland, from which they are separated by Pentland Firth. They are about 30 in number; but many of them are uninhabited, the greater part being small, and producing only pasturage for cattle. The principal islands are denominated by the names of Mainland, South Ronaldsha, Swinna, Flotta, Copinsha, Strupensha, Stronsa, Sanda, &c. The currents and tides flowing between the islands are extremely rapid and dangerous. Near an island called Swinna are two great whirlpools called the wells of Swinna, which are counted dangerous by mariners especially in a calm. The largest of these islands is called Pomona, in length 33, and in breadth 9 miles, containing 9 parish churches, and 4 excellent harbours. The air is moist, on account of the neighbourhood of the sea; and frost and snow do not continue long. In some places the soil is bare and mountainous, and in others sandy and barren; however, many of the islands produce large crops of barley and oats, but no wheat or other grain excepting what is enclosed in gardens. These, when duly cultivated, produce all kinds of kitchen herbs and roots, bringing even fruit-trees to maturity, but out of them, in the open country, there is scarce a tree or shrub to be seen, except juniper, wild myrtle, heath, and the cyr-boden. The Orkneys produce great variety of herbs and berries, grass and corn, which last is exported as far as Edinburgh. In some of the islands, the natives have discovered mines of tin, lead, and silver, though none of them are wrought to any advantage; in others, we find abundance of marl, grey and red slate, quarries of freestone, and even of marble and alabaster. Besides the abundance of little horses, black cattle, sheep, swine, and rabbits, the inhabitants of the Orkneys rear all sorts of domestic animals and tame poultry. The gentry of the Orkneys are civilized, polite, and hospitable; and live like those of Scotland, from whom they are chiefly descended. They live comfortably, are remarkably courteous to strangers, and drink a

The people of Orkney export annually great numbers of black cattle, swine, and saeep; together with large quantities of corn, butter, tallow, salt, and stuffs made in the country, over and above the skins of seals, otters, lambs, and rabbits, down, feathers, writingquills, hams, kelp and wool. In the Orkney Islands they see to read at midnight in June and July; and during four of the summer months they have frequent communications, both for business and curiosity, with each other, and with the continent: the rest of the year, however, they are almost inaccessible, through fogs, darkness, and storms.

Orlamund, a town of Upper Saxony,

Orleanois, a late province of France, now forming the department of Loiret.
It is divided by the river Loire into the Upper and Lower, and is a very plentiful country.

Orleans, an ancient city of France, capital of the department of Loiret and late province of Orleanois, with an episcopal see. It stands about 20 leagues S of Paris, on the northern bank of the Loire; across which there is an elegant bridge of nine arches, the entrance by which is exceedingly noble and striking, the street which leads from it being composed of most elegant modern buildings. In general, however, excepting this street, it is very meanly built; the streets are narrow, and the inhabitants in general poor. It is surrounded with walls, and fortified with 40 towers. The streets almost all terminate at the quay for the convenience of trade. It is a place of considerable magnitude; and before the revolution had several inferior courts of justice, and an university of no great repute. It was also a bishop's see; and the cathedral is a most superb Gothic structure, and had the finest steeple in France till it was damaged in the time of the civil wars. There were 22 parishes in it, and a great number of churches, some of which were collegiate, and religious houses. There is also a public walk, planted with several rows of trees; and there used to be some sugar bakers; a manufacture of stockings and sheep skins; a seminary in which divinity was taught; a great trade in brandy, wine, spices and several manufactures, which with many other commodities used to be conveyed to Paris by means of the Loire, and the canal which takes its name from the city. Under the sons of Clovis, it was the capital of a kingdom.

It stood a memorable siege in 1428, against the English, which was raised by the celebrated Joan of Arc, called the Maid of Orleans. Near the city is a forest containing 100,000 acres, planted with oak and other valuable trees.
Orleans is 30 miles N E of Blois, and 60 S S W of Paris. Lon. 1 59 E, lat.

Portuguese, who fortified it; and it was afterward frequented by a number of rich merchants. In 1622, the Persians, by the assistance of the English, conquered this place, and demolished the houses, which were 4000 in number, containing 40,000 inhabitants. Some time after, the Persians rebuilt the fort, and placed a garrison in it; but they could never bring it to be a place of trade as before; however it is the key of the gulf of Persia, on account of the commodiousness of the harbour. It is almost deserted; for it produces nothing but salt, which sometimes is two inches deep upon the surface of the earth. Lon. 56 25 E, lat. 27 20 N.

Ornyah, a town of the kingdom of Persia, seated in the province of Tauris, 120 miles S W of Tauris.

Ornans, a town of France in the department of Doubs and late province of Franche Comte. Osnaburg, a bishopric of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, 40 miles long and 30 broad. It is remarkable that this bishopric is possessed by the papists, and protestants alternately, according to the treaty of Westphalia.
The protestant bishop is always chosen by the house of Brunswick Lunenburg, and the catholic by the papists. The present bishop is Frederick duke of York, second son of the king of Great Britain. The inspection and administration of ecclesiastical affairs, however, belong to the elector of Cologne, as metropolitan.

Osnaburg, a rich city of Germany, capital of a bishopric of the same name, with a university and a castle. It is re-

Ostend, a fortified seaport of Austrian Flanders, famous for the long siege it sustained against the Spaniards, from July 5, 1601, to September 22, 1604, when it surrendered by an honourable capitulation. In this siege the Dutch lost 50,000, and the Spaniards 80,000 men. Upon the death of Charles II. king of Spain, the French seized Ostend, but it was besieged and taken by the allies after the battle of Ramillies in 1706. The emperor Charles VI. had formed a scheme of establishing an East India company here; but this giving umbrage to the maritime powers, it was laid aside. Ostend was taken by the French in 1745, but was restored to the house of Austria by the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1748. In the last war as a neutral port it became a great mart for trade; and it was greatly augmented both in population and buildings. In 1792, the French once more took Ostend, which they were compelled to evacuate in 1793, when it was garrisoned by British troops. It was again taken by them in 1794. Ostend is seated among a number of canals, and is almost surrounded by two of the largest of them, into which ships of great burden may enter with the tide. A secret expedition was sent out by the British government for the purpose of destroying one of these canals in 1797; after effecting their purpose they were all taken prisoners. It is 10 miles W of Bruges, 23 N E of Dunkirk, and 60 N W of Brussels. Lon. 3 1 E, lat. 51 14 N.

bananas, mulberries, sugar-canes, and others peculiar to the climate, particularly a kind of pineapple and the dragon-tree. The people have mild features, and a pleasing countenance. They are about the ordinary size of Europeans, of a pale mahogany brown, with fine black hair and eyes, and wear a piece of cloth round their middle of their own manufacture, and another wrapped about the head, in various picturesque shapes, like a turban. The women who are far from being ugly and unhand-some, wear a piece of cloth, with a hole in the middle, through which they pass their heads, so that one part of the garment hangs down behind, and the other before, to the knees; a fine white cloth, like muslin, passes over this in various elegant turns round the body, a little below the breasts forming a kind of tunic, of which one turn sometimes falls gracefully across the shoulder. Both sexes are adorned, or rather disfigured, by those black stains, occasioned by puncturing the skin, and rubbing a black colour into the wounds. The birds most common are two sorts of parrots, one of a beautiful sapphirine blue, another of a greenish colour, with a few red spots; a king's fisher, of a dark green, with a collar of the same hue round his white throat; a large cuckoo; several sorts of pigeons or doves; and a bluish heron. The only quadrupeds found on the island are hogs, dogs, and rats, which are suffered to run about at pleasure. Their houses consist only of a roof, thatched with the long prickly leaves of the palm-tree, and supported by a few pillars made of the bread-fruit tree. As a roof is sufficient to shelter the natives from rains and nightly dews, and as the climate is one of the happiest in the world, the houses have seldom any walls, but are open on all sides. Their cloth is made of the fibrous bark of the mulberry tree, which is beaten with a kind of mallet; and a glue, made of the hibiscus esculentus, is employed to make the pieces of bark cohere. Some of these pieces are two or three yards wide, and 50 yards long. Though the natives far excel most of the Americans in the knowledge and practice of the arts of ingenuity, yet they had not invented any method of boiling water; and having no vessel that could bear the fire, they had no more idea that water could be made hot, than that it could be made solid. Long nails on the fingers are a mark of distinction among them, as among the Chinese; for they imply that such persons only as have no occasion to work, could suffer them to grow to that length. The two sexes here eat separately, as in many other countries. Their provisions are chiefly fish, pork, cocoa-nuts, bread-fruit and bananas; and they employ sea-water as a sauce both to fish and pork. Nothing can exceed their agility in swimming, diving, and climbing trees. Mr. Foster is lavish in his praises of the gentleness, goodnature, and hospitality of this people; and also of the beauty, elegance, and gracefulness of the air, features and persons of many of them, especially of the better sort, to whose voyage, and Captain Cook's, in the Endeavour, compiled by Dr. Hawkesworth, we must refer the reader, as well as to the account of Captain Cook's last voyage, published in 1785, for a more particular account of their dress, dwellings, food, domestic amusements, navigation, diseases, religion, funeral rites, wars, weapons, and government.

Oude, a province of Hindoostan Proper, subject to a nabob, whose dominions lie on both sides of the Ganges, occupying, (with the exception of the district of Rampour) all the flat country between that river and the northern mountains, as well as the principal part of that fertile tract, lying between the Ganges and Jumna, known by the name of Doab, to within 40 miles of the city of Delhi. Oude and its dependencies are estimated at 360 miles in length from E to W, and in breadth from 150 to 180. The nabob is in alliance with the British; and a brigade of the Bengal army is constantly stationed on his western frontiers; which answers the purpose of covering Oude as well as Bengal, and of keeping the western states in awe; and, in consideration of this, the nabob pays an annual subsidy of 420,000*l*. His capital is Lucknow.

Oude, an ancient city of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Oude, the remains of which are seated on the Gogra, nearly adjoining Fytzabad. It is said to have been the first imperial city of Hindoostan, and to have been the capital of a great kingdom, 1200 years before the Christian era; and it is frequently mentioned in the Mahabret, a famous Hindoo work in Sanscrit, under the name of Adjudiah. But whatever may have been its former magnificence, no traces of it are left. It is considered as a place of sanctity; and the Hindoos frequently come hither, in pilgrimage, from all parts of India.

Oudenard, a strong town of Austrian Flanders, in the middle of which is a fort, seated on both sides of the river Scheld. Here is a manufacture of very fine linen and of curious tapestry. Asturia d'Oviedo, with a Bishop's see, and a university. It is situated at the confluence of the Ove and Duva, which form the Asta, 50 miles N W of Leon and 208 of Madrid. Lon. 4 44 W, lat. 43 25 N.

Oulz, a town of Piedmont, 12 miles W of Susa. Lon. 6 46 E, lat. 45 20 N.

Oundle, a town in Northamptonshire, with a market on Saturday. It is a well built town, seated on the Olen, over which are two bridges, 26 miles N E of Northampton, and 83 N by W of London. Lon. 0 42 W, lat. 52 26 N.

Ouren, a town of Portugal, in Estramadura, with a castle, on a mountain, between the rivers Leira and Tomar. Lon. 7 40 W, lat. 39 34 N.

Ourique, a town of Portugal, in Alentejo, remarkable for a victory obtained by Alphonso, king of Portugal, over five Moorish kings, in 1139. The leads of these five kings are the arms of Portugal. It is 32 miles S E of Lisbon. Lon. 8 49 W, lat. 38 26 N.

Ouse, a river in Yorkshire, which is formed by the junction of the streams of the Ure and Swale, which have their sources near each other in the tract called Richmondshire, and after collecting all the rills from this mountainous region, unite at Aldborough, and thence take the name of Ouse, which is here a considerable river. It flows through York, where it is navigable for considerable vessels; and afterward receiving the Wharf, Derwent, Aire, and Don, it falls into the Humber.

Ouse, a river in Sussex, rising from two branches, which unite their streams near Lewes, and entering the English Channel, form the harbour of Newhaven.

Ouse, Great, a river which rises in Northamptonshire, near Brackley, and running through the counties of Buckingham, Bedford, and Cambridge, and dividing this last county from Norfolk, falls into a part of the German Sea called the Washes, at Lynn Regis; is navigable to some distance above Downham, where there is a good harbour for barges.

Ouse, Little, a river, which rises in the S part of Norfolk, and separating on the S W that county from Suffolk, near Downham, as it flows westward, becomes navigable at Thetford, and discharges itself into the Great Ouse.

Oussore, a town of Hindoostan, in the Mysore country. It was taken by the English in July 1792, and is 19 miles S E of Bangalore, and 69 E N E of Seringapatam. Lon. 77 47 E, lat. 12 50 N.

Outeiro, a town and fortress of Portugal, in the province of Tra-los-Montes, and 21 miles N W of Mirando de Douero. Lon. 6 37 W, lat. 41 55 N.

Coerra de Oeiras, a town and territory of Guinea, in the kingdom of Benin. The air is unwholesome, and the soil dry and lean; but there are several kinds of fruits, such as bananas and cocoa-nuts. Lon. 6 0 E, lat. 6 0 N.

Owyhee, the easternmost, and by much the largest of the Sandwich Islands. Its greatest length from N to S is 28 leagues, its breadth 24, and its circumference about 293 English miles. It is divided into six large districts, two of which, on the N E side, are separated by a mountain that rises in three peaks, perpetually covered with snow, and may be seen clearly at 40 leagues distance. To the N of this mountain the coast consists of high and abrupt cliffs, down which fall many beautiful cascades of water, and the whole country is covered with coconut and bread fruit trees. The peaks of the mountain on the N E side appear to be about half a mile high, and entirely covered with snow. To the S of this mountain the coasts present a prospect of the most horrid and dreary kind, the whole country appearing to have undergone a total change from the effects of some dreadful convulsion. The ground is every where covered with cinders, and intersected in many places with black streaks, which seem to mark the course of a lava that has flowed not many ages back, from the mountain to the shore. The southern promontory looks like the mere dregs of a volcano. The projecting headland is composed of broken and craggy rocks, piled irregularly on one another, and terminating in sharp points: yet, amidst these ruins, there are many patches of rich soil, which are carefully laid out in plantations, and the neighbouring sea abounds with a great variety of excellent fish; so that this quarter is much better inhabited than the more verdant parts. The fields are inclosed with stone fences, and interspersed with groves of coconut trees. There are supposed to be on this island about 150,000 inhabitants. So long as the name of capt. Cook

Oxford, the capital of Oxfordshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is a bishop's see, and a university, and, besides the cathedral, has 13 parish churches. It is seated at the confluence of the Thames and Cherwell, and, with the suburbs is of a circular form, three miles in circumference. The university is said to have been founded by the great Alfred, but is generally supposed to have been a seminary of learning before his time, although it owed its revival and consequence to his liberal patronage, receiving from him grants of many privileges and large revenues. Here are 20 colleges, and five halls, several of which stand in the streets, and give the city an air of magnificence. The colleges are provided with sufficient revenues for the maintenance of a master, fellows, and students. In the halls, the students live, either wholly, or in part, at their own expence. The colleges are, University, Balliol, Merton, Exeter, Oriel, Queen's New, Lincoln, All Souls, Magdalen, Brazen Nose, Corpus Christi, Christ Church, Trinity, St. John Baptist's, Jesus, Wadham, Pembroke, Worcester, and Hertford. Of these the most ancient is University College, founded before the year 872; and to Christ's Church College, begun by cardinal Wolsey, and finished by Henry VIII. belongs the cathedral. The halls are Alban, Edmund, St. Mary's, New Inn, and St. Mary Magdalen. Among the libraries in the university, the most distinguished is the Bodleian, founded by Sir Thomas Bodley; those of All Souls College, Christ Church, Queen's New, St. John's Exeter, and Corpus Christi. Among other public buildings are the Ashmolean Museum, the Clarendon Printing-house, Radcliff Infirmary, and an Observatory. Magdalen Bridge, besides the beauty of its architecture, has this singularity that more than half of it is on dry ground, and the rest covers two small stripes of the Cherwell; this bridge is 526 feet long. The theatre, more magnificent than any thing of the kind in the world. The physic-garden of above five acres, walled round with fine gates, one of which cost 500*l*. parliament to meet, in 1258; the proceedings of which were so disorderly, that it was known afterward by the name of the Mad Parliament. Oxford is governed by a Mayor, dependent on the chancellor and vice-chancellor of the university; and sends four members to parliament, two for the university and two for the city. It is 20 miles S W of Buckingham, and 58 W by N of London. Lon. 1 10 W, lat. 51 45 N.

Oxfordshire, a county of England, bounded on the E by Buckinghamshire, on the W by Gloucestershire, on the S by Berkshire, and on the N by Warwickshire and Northamptonshire. Its extreme length is 48 miles; its greatest breadth 26. It contains one city, 15 market towns, 250 parishes, 14 hundreds, 354,000 acres, and about 120,000 souls. The air is sweet and pleasant, and the soil rich and fertile. The lower parts consist of meadows and cornfield, and the higher were covered with woods till the civil wars; in which they were so entirely destroyed, that wood is now extremely scarce and dear, except in what is called the chiltern, and so is coal; of consequence fuel bears an exorbitant price. The county is extremely well watered, by the Windrush, Evenlode, Cherwell, and Tame; the latter, although an inconsiderable rivulet, has obtained some importance from having been supposed to give name to the Thames. The products of Oxfordshire are chiefly those common to the midland farming counties. Its hills yield ochre, pipe clay, and other earths, useful for various purposes. Corn and malt are conveyed from it, by the Thames to the metropolis. Good cheese is made in the grazing parts. The greatest want in this county is that of fuel; for the woods, with which it once abounded, being greatly diminished, it is necessary to supply the deficiency with coal brought by a long and troublesome navigation from London. The junction of the Thames with the Trent and Mersey, by the canal from Braunston to Hampton Gay, and by another canal from Braunston to Brentford, will greatly remedy this inconvenience.

Pachuca, a town of Mexico, famous for its silver mines. Some authors say, that in the space of six leagues there are not less than a thousand. One of which called Trinity, is supposed to be as rich as any in the Spanish dominions.

 It is subject to Venice.

Pacific Ocean, that vast ocean which separates Asia from America. It is called Pacific, from the moderate weather the first mariners who sailed in it met with between the tropics; and it was called South Sea, because the Spaniards crossed the isthmus of Darien from north to south when they first discovered it; though it is properly the Western Ocean with regard to America. Geographers call the South Sea Mare Pacificum, "The Pacific Ocean," as being less infested with storms than the Atlantic; but M. Frezier affirms it does not deserve that appellation, and that he has seen as violent storms there in as in any other sea; but Magellan happening to have a very favourable wind, and not meeting with any thing to ruffle him when he first traversed this vast ocean in 1520, gave it the name which it has retained ever since.
 Maty, however, adds, that the wind is so regular there, that the vessels would frequently go from Acapulco to the Philippine Islands without shifting a sail.

Padua, an ancient, large, and celebrated city of Italy, capital of the Pa-duano, with a university and a bishop's see. It is seven miles in circumference, and much less considerable than formerly; for it now contains only 30,000, whereas it formerly contained 100,000 inhabitants. The houses are for the most part gone to ruin, and the town in general is so thinly inhabited, that grass is seen in many places, between the stones with which the streets are paved.
 The houses are built on piazzas, which, when the town was in a flourishing state, may have made a magnificent appearance; but they now rather give it a more gloomy air. The hall of the townhouse is one of the largest in Europe, and contains the cenotaph of Livy, the historian, who was a native of Padua. The university, once so celebrated, is now on the decline. Here is a cloth manufacture; and it said that the inhabitants of Venice wear no other cloth than what is made here. The city, however, swarms with beggars, who ask charity in the name of St. Antonio. Padua was taken by the Venetians in 1706. It is seated on the Brenta and Barchiglione, in a fine plain, 20 miles S E of Vicenza, and 225 N of Rome. Lon. 12 1 E, lat. 45 22 N.

Paduana, a province of Italy, in the territory of Venice, 40 miles long, and 35 broad; bounded on the E by the Dogado, on the S by the Polesino, di Rovigo, on the W by the Veronese, and on the N by the Vicentino. Its soil is well watered, and is one of the most fertile in Italy. Padua is the capital.

Paimbois, a seaport of France, in the department of Lower Loire and late province of Bretagne, at the mouth of the Loire. What makes it of consequence is, that all ships belonging to Nantes, take their departure hence, and here they anchor on their arrival. It is 20 miles W of Nantea. Lon. 1 53 W, lat. 47 15 N.

Painewick, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Tuesday. It has a manufacture of white cloths for the army, and for the India and Turkey trade; and hence is brought a stone remarkable for its beauty and neatness, for the pavement of floors. It is seven miles S E of Gloucester, and 101 W by N of London. Lon. 2 11 W, lat. 51 46 N.

Painted Post, a post town in Steuben county, New-York; situated on the N W bank of Tioga river, near the mouth of Cohocton creek, 43 miles N W of Athens, and about 60 miles S of Jerusalem.

Paisley, a large manufacturing town in Renfrewshire. Paisley is the first manufacturing town in Scotland, and is greatly celebrated on account of some of its branches. The manufactory of silk gauze, in this respect, first claims our notice. This branch is brought here to the utmost perfection, and is wrought to an amazing variety of patterns. It has been computed, that there have been no less than 5000 weavers employed in Paisley and in the country adjacent; and the others necessary in other parts of the silk manufacture, has been likewise computed to be no less than 5000. Each loom will produce on an average value 70*l.* yearly; the whole will then be 350,000*l.* In the year 1784, the manufactures of Paisley, in silk gauze, lawn, and linen gauze, and white sewing thread, amounted to the value of 579,183*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* and that no fewer than 26,484 persons were employed in carrying them on. Besides these principal manufactures, there are some others carried on there; for instance, considerable tan-works, four in number, two soap and candle works, a manufacture of ribbons, and another of inkle or tape. In 1789, the annual value of all the manufactures in Paisley of every sort, amounted to 660,385*l.* 16*s.* and the inhabitants considerably exceeded 20,000. Paisley is six miles W of Glasgow. Lon. 4 20 W, lat. 55 52 N.

Paita, a seaport of Peru, in the audience of Quito, with an excellent harbour. It has frequently been plundered by the buccancers; and, in 1741, it was plundered and burnt by commodore Anson, because the governor refused to ransom it. Lon. 8 19 W, lat. 12 6 S.

Palacios, a town of Spain in Andalusia, 12 miles S of Seville. Lon. 5 24 W, lat. 37 20 N.

Palais, a town of France, capital of the island of Belleisle, off the coast of Bretagne. It has a strong citadel, which stood a long siege against the English, in 1761, and then surrendered on honourable terms. Lon. 3 2 W, lat. 47 18 N.

Palermo, a city of Sicily in the Val-di-Mazara, with an archbishop's see, and a large harbour. This city, which is the capital of Sicily, is of great antiquity; and if a conjecture may be formed from its ancient name Panor-mus, which signifies an universal harbour, it was formerly in a very flourishing condition. By whom it was founded is uncertain, nor have we any authentic accounts of its inhabitants till it became a colony of the Phœnicians, after which it passed into the hands of the various nations that became masters of this island. The present city principally consists of two wide, uniform, and well-built streets, each about a mile in length, crossing each other at right angles in the centre, where there is a small octagon space, ornamented with four statues.

Most of the cities of Sicily have surnames: Palermo is denominated The Happy. It has gained this epithet, no doubt, on account of the advantages of its situation. It has two harbours: in the one, which is very large, and in which there is a mole 1300 paces in length, ships lie at anchor; in the other their cargoes are laden and unladen. Both the harbours open to the W: there is also a superb quay which extends a mile from W to E, in a rectilinear direction, and is called La Marine. The prospect is, on the one side, lost in the wide expanse of the ocean, and on the other confined by the walls of the city:
the walls appear adorned with pilasters, and crowned with a row of balustrades through which the eye discovers a long range of palaces. These objects altogether form a delightful spectacle.
Indeed nothing can be more picturesque than the bay of Palermo. It forms a large amphitheatre, with the capital of Sicily in the centre; surrounded for some miles by a most delightful country, and inclosed by romantic rocks and mountains. The town was formerly surrounded by a strong wall; but the fortifications are now entirely neglected, except towards the sea, where there are still a few weak works. The quay is the principal public walk here. Palermo is embellished all round with avenues of trees, and has four principal entrances, facing the four cardinal points, which are at the extremities of the two spacious streets which cross each other. The most frequented of these two streets is called Cassero. It begins where the quay ends, with the N gate called Porta Felice, the happy gate; and terminates on the S. The Porta Felice opens to the Marino, a delightful walk, that has on one side the wall of the city, and on the other, the sea; and in the centre is an elegant kind of temple, which in summer is made use of as an orchestra. Palermo is quite filled with public monuments, churches, monasteries, palaces, fountains, statues, and columns. The churches amount to 300, and many of them are very rich and magnificent. Spring-waters are very copious in this city. Not a quarter but is liberally supplied with fountains, most of which are marble, all of them adorned with pieces of sculpture, and all afford large quantities of water. The situation of this city is truly happy; the sea, the hills, the lofty mountains, present on all sides beautiful and striking objects. Freed from the fetters of the Inquisition, the abolition of which was procured by the marquis of Caraccioli, and from the influence of some other unfavourable institutions which are rapidly declining, Palermo must become one of the finest cities in the world; and the island of which it is the capital, being all cultivated like a garden, one of the most enchanting spots on the face of the earth. Palermo is the principal residence of the greater part of the Sicilian nobility; and as it is not the custom for any gentlemen to walk in the streets, at least 1000 carriages are said to be kept in the town. They are for the most part in the English taste, very elegant, shown to the greatest advantage, with beautiful horses richly caparisoned, and as many footmen in splendid liveries as can be crowded together, behind. Every evening all the people of rank drive about in this manner on the grand public terrace by the sea-side. There are also very convenient hackney-coaches, covered and open, waiting all day in their respective stations. It is very remarkable that the dead in Palermo are never buried. The dead bodies are carried to the capuchin convent, which is one of the largest in Italy; where after the funeral service is performed, they are dried in a stone, heated by a composition of lime, which makes the skin adhere to the bones. They are then placed erect in niches, and fastened to the wall by the back or neck. A piece of coarse drab is thrown over the shoulders and round the waist; and their hands are tied together, holding a piece of paper with their epitaph, which is simply their name, age, and when they died. The number of the inhabitants is above 200,000; and the harbour, though very large, is not so commodious as might be expected, and the vessels that ride therein are not always very safe. There is a magnificent castle, built near the sea-side wherein the viceroy resides six months in the year; and his presence draws a great number of nobility to this place. This city has suffered greatly by earthquakes, particularly in 1693; and it was greatly damaged by a fire in 1730, when a magazine of powder was blown up, containing 400 tons. It stands in a pleasant fruitful country, on the N E end of the island, and at the bottom of a gulf of the same name. Lon. 13 23 E, lat. 38 15 N.

Palestine, a part of Turkey in Asia, so called from the Philistines who inhabited its sea coasts; it is called also Judæa, from the patriarch Judah, and the Holy Land, from its having been the residence and scene of our Saviour's passion, and in scripture Canaan, and the Promised Land. It is bounded by Mount Libanus, which divides it from Syria on the N, by Mount Hermon, which separates it from Arabia Deserta on the E, by the mountains of Seir and the deserts of Arabia Petraea on the S, and by the Mediterranean on the W. It is in general a fruitful country, abounding in corn, wine, and oil, where cultivated, and might supply the neighbouring countries with all these, as it anciently did, were its present inhabitants equally industrious. The parts about Jerusalem, its once famous capital, are the most mountainous and rocky, but they feed numerous herds, and flocks, and yield plenty of honey, excellent wine and oil; and the vallies large crops of corn.

Paraguay, a large country of South America, bounded on the N by Ama-zonias, on the E by Brasil, on the S by Patagonia, and on the W by Chili and Peru. It contains six provinces; namely, Paraguay Proper, Parana, Guaria, Ura-guay, Tucuman, and La Plata, from which the whole country is also called La Plata. It has numerous lakes and rivers; of the latter, the three principal are the Paraguay, Uragua, and Pa-rana; the united streams of which form the celebrated Rio-de-la-Plata. These rivers annually overflow their banks, and, on their recess, leave them enriched by a slime, that renders the soil extremely fertile. This vast country is far from being wholly subdued or planted by the Spaniards; many parts being still unknown. The principal province of which we have any knowledge is that called La Plata, toward the mouth of the Rio-de-la-Plata. This province, with all the adjacent parts, is one continued plain for several hundred miles; extremely fertile, and producing cotton in great abundance, tobacco, and the valuable herb called Paraguay, which is peculiar to this country, and the infusion of which is drank in all the Spanish provinces of South America, instead of tea. They have also a variety of fruits, and very rich pastures; but the country is destitute of woods. The air is remarkably sweet and serene. The Spaniards discovered this country, by sailing up the Rio-de-la-Plata, in 1515, and founded the town of Buenos Ayres. In 1580, the Jesuits were admitted into these fertile regions, and in the next century, founded the famous missions of Paraguay; which were a number of colonies, each governed by two Jesuits, one of whom was rector, the other his curate. They had long resisted the Spaniards and Portuguese; but the Jesuits, by learning their language, conforming to their manners, &c. soon acquired great authority among them; till at last, by steadily pursuing the same artful measures, they arrived at the highest degree of power and influence, being in a manner the absolute sovereigns of a great part of this extensive country; for above 350,000 families are said to have been subject to them, living in obedience and awe bordering on adoration, yet produced without the least violence or constraint. In 1767, the court expelled the Jesuits, and the natives were put upon the same footing with the other Indians of the Spanish part of South America.

Paramaribo, the capital of Surinam, in Guiana, and before Surinam was taken by the British, was the chief place of the Dutch colonies in South America. It has a strong citadel; and a noble road for shipping, where there are seldom less than 80 vessels loading coffee, sugar, cotton, and indigo for Europe. The streets are perfectly straight, and lined with orange, shaddock, tamarind, and lemon trees in ever-lasting bloom. It is situate on the E side of the river Surinam, 16 miles from its mouth. Lon. 55 25 W, lat. 5 48 N.

Paris, the capital of France, one of the largest, finest, and most populous cities of Europe. The river Seine, which crosses it, forms two small islands; and it is six leagues in circumference, including the suburbs. The inhabitants are computed to be 800,000. There are nine principal bridges in Paris, two of which, and the most distinguished, occupy the whole breadth of the Seine; namely, Pont Neuf, and the tiles used in Paris. The garden of the Thuilleries, in front of the palace, and on the banks of the Seine, is unquestionably the finest public walk in Paris. From this palace, when attacked by the enraged mob, on the 10th of August, 1793, the unfortunate Louis XVI. went for an asylum to the hall of the national assembly, thence to a prison, and thence to the scaffold. The Palais Royal was built by cardinal Richelieu in 1629, and had the name of the Cardinal's Palace, till Anne of Austria came to reside in it, in 1643, with her son Louis XIV. It has been long the property of the late duke of Orleans; and the interior has been recently embellished with many beautiful buildings, with shops, colleehouses, and a garden, which render it like a perpetual fair, and one of the most pleasing walks in the city. The palace of Luxemburg was built by Mary of Medicia in 1715, and, in form, somewhat resembles Queen's College, Oxford. Its gardens are open to the public on festival days. The Hotel des Invalides, for the wounded and superannuated soldiery, is a magnificent structure, built by Louis XIV. as is the Military School, in the Champ de Mars, which was founded by Louis XV. The two principal theatres are the Theatre de la Nation and the Italian Theatre; which in point of elegance and convenience, are worthy, in every respect, of the capital of a great nation. The Monnoie, or Mint, is also a noble building, situate on that side of the Seine which is opposite the Louvre. The Hotel-de-Ville, or Guildhall of the city, is an ancient structure, in the Place de Greve, which was heretofore the common place of execution. Paris is an archbishopric, and the seat of a university. It is situated in the late province of the Isle of France; and it now forms, with a small district round it, one of the 83 departments of France. It is 70 miles S of Rouen, 265 S E of London, 635 N W of Vienna, and 630 N E of Madrid. Lat. 48 50 N. lon. 2 25 E.

Paris, the name of several considerable post towns in the United States, adopted in the honey moon of our passion for the French. Parlgate, a village in Cheshire, 12 miles N W of Chester, situate on the N E coast of the river Dee. It is a station for packet boats that frequently sail to Ireland.

Parkestein, a town of Germany in the circle of Bavaria, and principality of Saltzbach, 16 miles N of Naburg. Lon. 12 14 E, lat. 59 40 N.

Parma, a duchy of Italy, bounded on the N by the river Po, on the N E by the Mantuan, on the E by the Duchy of Modena, on the S by Tuscany, and on the W by Placentia. The air is very wholesome; on which account the people live to a great age, and the soil is fertile in corn, wine, oil, and hemp. The celebrated Parmesan cheese is no longer made in this country; the pastures feed a great number of cattle. There are some inconsiderable mines of copper and silver, and plenty of truffles.

Parma, an ancient rich and populous city of Italy, capital of the duchy of the same name, with a citadel, a bishop's see, and a university. It has a magnificent cathedral, and has the largest opera-house in Europe, having seats for 8000 people. The cupola of the cathedral, and the church of St. John, are painted by the famous Correggio, who was a native of this place. In 1748, by the treaty of Aix la Chapelle, the duchies of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla, were given to Don Philip, brother to Don Carlos, king of the Two Sicilies. Parma is 40 miles N W of Modena, and 60 S E of Milan. Lon. 10 30 E, lat. 44 50 N.

Parnassus, now called Parnasso, a mountain of Turkey in Livadia. It has two heads, one of which was famous for being consecrated to Apollo and the Muses, and the other to Bacchus. It is the highest in Greece, and from the top is a prospect as far as Corinth; the Turks call it Licaoura. Here also is a fine fountain, supposed to be the ancient Castalia.

Paros, an island of the Archipelago, one of the Cyclades, about ten miles long and eight broad. The soil is well cultivated, and the pastures feed a great number of cattle. The trade consists in wheat, barley, wine, pulse, and calicoes. It once produced a great deal of oil, but the Venetian army was anciently dedicated to Bacchus, on account of its excellent wines; and has been so famous for its marble, that the best carvers would make use of no other. Those excellent statues, the Phidias and Praxiteles, were natives of this island; and the famous Arundelian this place. It lies to the W of Nazia.

Paros, a town of the Archipelago, capital of the isle of Paros, which was anciently the largest and most powerful town of the Cyclades; but is at present nothing to what it was. The walls of the castle are built of ancient palaces of marble, and most of the columns are placed longwise: some of them that stand upright, support cornices of amazing size. The natives build their houses of marble, which they find ready cut to their hands; but they take no care to place the pieces in a regular manner: their fields likewise are inclosed with friezes, altars, and bassorelievs. The inhabitants are so ignorant now, that, instead of great sculptors and skilful architects, they have nothing but carvers of mortars and saltcellars. Paros is a bishop's see, and situate on the W coast of the island.

Parramatta, a town or settlement of English convicts, in New South Wales.
It is seated at the head of the harbour of Port Jackson, 11 miles W of Sydney Cove, between Rose Hill and the landing place in the creek which forms the head. In 1791, near 1000 acres of land were either in cultivation, or cleared for that purpose. The soil in most places, is remarkably good, and only wants cultivation to be fit for any use. Lon. 151 39 E, lat. 33 50 S.

Parys, a mountain in the isle of Anglesey, famous for a copper mine, probably the largest bed of ore of that metal hitherto discovered in the world.
"It is not wrought (says Dr. Aikin) in the common manner of subterraneous mines, but, like a stone quarry, open to day; and the quantities of ore raised are prodigious. The ore is poor in quality, and very abundant in sulphur.
The purest part is exported raw to the smelting works at Swansea and other places: the more impure is first calcined and deprived of most of its sulphur on the spot. Quantities of nearly pure copper are obtained from the waters lodged beneath the bed of ore, by the intervention of iron. A lead ore, rich in silver, is also found in this mountain. The wealth and population of Anglesey have received a great increase from the discovery of this copper mine.

Passarvan, a town of the island of Java, in the East Indies. Lon. 114 15 E, lat. 7 0 S.

Passau, an ancient city of Germany, in Lower Bavaria, capital of a bishopric of the same name, with a fort. The houses are well built, and the cathedral is thought to be the finest in all Germany. It is divided into four parts, namely, the town of Passau, Instadt, Illtztadt, and the quarter in which the episcopal palace is built. The first three are fortified, but the last has no fortifications, being only a suburb. It is seated at the confluence of the Inn and Illz, 62 miles E by S of Ratisbon, and 135 W of Vienna. Patagonia, a country of S America, comprehending all that country extending from Chili and Paraguay to the utmost extremity of South America; that is, from 35° almost to 54° of latitude: being surrounded by the countries just mentioned, the South and North Sea and the Straits of Magellan, which separate it from the island called Terra del Fuego. It is inhabited by a race of men, who long afforded a subject of controversy to the learned. They are supposed to be one of the wandering tribes, which occupy that vast, but least known region of America, which extends from the Rio-de-la-Plata to the straits of Magellan. Their proper station is in that part of the interior country which lies on the river Negro; but, in the hunting season, they often roam as far as the straits which separate Terra del Fuego from the mainland. The first accounts of this people were brought to Europe by the companions of Magellan, who described them as a gigantic race, above eight feet high, and of strength in proportion to their uncommon size. Captain Wallis landed here in 1766, and having purposely provided himself with measuring rods, found that the tallest man among them measured only six feet seven inches high; several were within an inch or two as tall; but the ordinary size was from five feet ten inches to six feet. It is pity that none of our voyagers thought of measuring the whole size of one of those gigantic men. They tell us indeed, that they are well made, that they are proportionably large, and that they are robust and bony; but they give us no criterion to judge of their bulk, nor one instance of their extraordinary strength. As they are represented not only peaceable, but remarkably tractable, some trials might have been made of the weight they could have lifted, and how much they could exceed in that respect the strongest man in the ships. This in a great measure, would have determined the point, which is yet left doubtful by the different relations that are given by the different voyagers who have seen these people, no two of them agreeing in the same description. Those seen by commodore Byron were painted round both eyes, no two of them alike; those seen by captain Wallis had only a red circle round the left eye; and those seen by Bougainville had no circle round their eyes, but had their cheeks painted red; their colour is a kind of Bronze. Another very remarkable particular is, that they had none of the characters of a ferocious people; there was no offensive weapon among them, except a scimitar. They have no other clothing than skins, Pathhead, a considerable manufacturing village in Fifeshire, a little to the E of Kirkcaldy.

Patmos, one of the Sporades; 30 miles in compass; concerning which we read little in authors. It was rendered famous by the exile of St. John, and the Revelation shewed him there. The greatest part of interpreters think that St. John wrote them in the same place during the two years of his exile; but others think that he did not commit them to writing till after his return to Ephesus. The island of Patmos is between the island of Icaria and the promontory of Miletus. Nothing has done it more honour than to have been the place of the banishment of St. John. It is now called Patina. Its circuit is five or twenty or thirty miles. It has a city called Patmos, with a harbour, and some monasteries of Greek monks.

It is at present in the hands of the Turks. It is considerable for its harbours; but the inhabitants derive little benefit from them, because the corsairs have obliged them to quit the town, and retire to a hill on which St. John's convent stands. This convent is a citadel consisting of several irregular towers, and is a substantial building seated on a very steep rock. The whole island is very barren, and without wood; however, it abounds with partridges, rabbits, quails, turtles, pigeons, and snipes. All their corn does not amount to 1000 barrels in a year. In the whole island there are scarce 300 men; but there are above 20 women to one man, who expect that all strangers who land in the island should carry some of them away. To the memory of St. John is an hermitage on the side of a mountain, where there is a chapel not above eight paces long and five broad. Over head they show a chink in the rock, through which they pretend that the Holy Ghost dictated to St. John. E Lon. 26 84 N, lat. 37 24.

Patna, a large city of Hindoostan Proper, capital of Bahar, and a place of considerable trade. It is fortified in the Indian manner with a wall and citadel. In the citadel were confined the prisoners taken in 1764 by Meer Cassim, nabob of Bengal, by whose order they were massacred. The buildings are high, but the streets are narrow. It is seated on the S bank of the Ganges, 400 miles N W of Calcutta. Lon. 85 0 E, lat. 25 35 N.

Peebleshire, or Tweeddale, a county of Scotland, bounded on the E by Selkirk-shire; on the N by Edinburgshire; W by Lanerkshire; and S by Dumfries-shire; and contains 308 square miles, is 28 miles long, and 18 where broadest.
The climate is temperate and the air clear. Its numerous hills are verdant, and feed great quantities of sheep, and its vallies fruitful in oats, barley and pasture, which feed great numbers of black cattle, yielding cheese and butter.
It has several rivers which fall into the Tweed, which produce plenty of fine salmon, as does West-water Loch, eels, &c. in such abundance in Angus, that during the W winds, they have overturned the people that catched them.
Loch-geneen falls from a precipice 250 paces high. Its chief mountain is Braidalb, from whence may be seen the seas on each side of the island.
This county yields limestone, &c. with every necessary of life. The chief ma-

Pegu, a kingdom of Asia, lying to the S E of Bengal. It is bounded on the N by Burmah, on the W and S by the Ocean, and on the E by Laos and Siam. Its products are timber for building, elephants, elephants teeth, bees wax, lac, saltpetre, iron, lead, tin, petroleum, very fine rubies, small diamonds, and plenty of lead, of which they make their money. It is very fruitful in corn, roots, pulse, and fruits. The government is arbitrary, for the king's will is a law; and yet he does not often abuse his power. The inhabitants are but thinly clad, and the best among them wear neither shoes nor stockings. The women are much fairer than the men, small, but well proportioned. If the wife proves false, the husband may sell her for a slave; and if he go astray, she will give him a dose of poison. There are a vast number of temples in this country, but mostly of wood, which are varnished and gilt. The priests have ground allowed them, which they cultivate for their subsistence; and they are said to be strict observers of morality. They are called Talapains, and incline to charity as the highest virtue; affirming that religion to be the best which teaches men to do the most good. They have idols in their temples, in a sitting posture, like tailors, and with very large ears. They have various sorts of music, but the pipe and tabor are esteemed the best. In the low flat part of the country, which is liable to be overflowed, the houses are built upon stakes, and in time of inundations, the inhabitants communicate with each other by boats. Pegu was an independent kingdom, till 1751, when it was reduced, by the king of Burmah, to the state of a dependant province.

Pegu, a town, in a kingdom of the same name, in Asia. It is above 20 miles in circumference; but not one twentieth part of it is inhabited, for it was ruined by the king of Burmah. It is seated on a river of the same name, 320 miles S of Ava. Lon. 96 30 E, lat. 18 10 N.

Peitz, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and marche of Brandenburgh. In the vicinity of which iron mines are wrought to advantage, and manufactures of pitch and turpentine are carried on to great extent. It is 30 miles S S W of Franckfort on the Ouer. Lon. 8 35 E, lat. 52 5 N.

Pekin, the capital of the empire of China, is situated in a very fertile plain, twenty leagues distant from the great wall; this name, which signifies the Northern Court, is given it, to distinguish it from another considerable city called Nan-king, or the Southern Court. This capital forms an exact square, and is divided into two cities; the first is inhabited by Chinese; the second by Tartars. These two cities, without including the suburbs, are six full leagues in circumference, according to the most accurate measurement made by the express order of the emperor. The height and enormous thickness of the walls of the Tartar city excite admiration; twelve horsemen might easily ride abreast upon them; they have spacious towers raised at intervals, a bow-shot distant from one another, and large enough to contain bodies of reserve in case of necessity. The city has nine gates, which are lofty and well arched; over them are large pavilion roofed towers divided in to nine stories, each having several apertures or port-holes; the lower story forms a large hall for the use of the soldiers and officers who quit guard, and those appointed to relieve them. Before each gate a space is left of more than three hundred and sixty feet: this is a kind of place of arms, enclosed by a semicircular wall equal in height and thickness to that surrounding the city. The streets are perfectly straight, most of them three miles in length, and 120 feet wide, with shops on both sides; but the houses are poorly built, and have only a ground-floor. It is surprising to see what numbers of people there are in the streets, and not one woman among them. There is always a great confusion, occasioned by the vast numbers of horses, camels, mules, asses, waggons, carts, and chairs, without reckoning the several mobs which gather about the jugglers, ballad-singers, &c. Persons of distinction have always a horseman who goes before them to clear the way. All the great streets are guarded by soldiers, who patrol night and day with swords by their sides, and whips in their hands, to chastise those who make any disturbance, or take them into custody. The little streets have lattice-gates at their entrance into the great streets, which are shut up at night, and guarded by soldiers, who suffer no assemblies in the streets at that time. The support of this police costs the emperor a great deal; for part of the soldiers we have mentioned are maintained for this purpose only. They are all infantry, and their pay is generally very high; their employment consists not only in watching for those who may occasion disturbance in the day-time, or walk abroad during the night; they must also take care that the streets are kept clean and swept every day; that they are watered morning and evening in time of dry weather; and that every nuisance is removed; they have orders also to assist in this labour themselves, and to clear the kennels, that the water may have a free course. The emperor's palace stands in the middle of the Tartar city. It presents a prodigious assemblage of vast buildings, extensive courts and magnificent gardens, and is shut up on all sides by a double wall, the intervening space being occupied by houses belonging to the officers of the court, eunuchs, and by different tribunals. To some of these is assigned the care of providing necessaries for the use of the emperor; others are for determining disputes, and punishing faults committed by the domestics of the imperial family. The exterior circumference of this immense palace is reckoned a league and a half. Although the Chinese architecture has no resemblance to that of Europe, the imperial palace of Pekin does not fail to strike beholders by its extent, grandeur, and the regular disposition of its apartments, and by the singular structure of its pavilion-roofs, ornamented at each corner with a carved plat band, the lower extremity of which is turned upwards; these roofs are covered with varnished tiles of so beautiful a yellow colour, that, at a distance, they make as splendid an appearance as if they were gilded. The temples, and the towers of this city, are so numerous, that it is difficult to count them. The country about it is sandy, and not very fruitful; yet provisions of all kinds are exceedingly plentiful, they being, as well as the merchandise, brought from other parts by canals cut from the rivers, and always crowded with vessels of different sizes. An earthquake, which happened here in 1731, buried above 100,000 persons in the ruins of the houses. The inhabitants of Pekin are estimated at 2,000,000. A Russian church is established here with a seminary, in which the students are permitted to reside for the purpose of learning the Chinese language. Since this establishment, many interesting publications have appeared at Petersburg, relative to the laws, history, and geography of China, translated from the originals published at Pekin. This city is 500 miles N by W of Nanking. Lon. 116 14 E, lat. 39 54 N.

Pelagnisi, an island in the Archipelago in the Mediterranean sea, eight miles in circumference. Lon. 24 12 E, lat. 39 30 N.

Pelegrino, Mount, a promontory on the N coast of the island of Sicily, nearly two miles W of Palermo. The prospect from this mount is beautiful and extensive: most of the Lipari Islands are discovered in a clear day, and also a large portion of Mount Etna, although at the distance of almost the whole length of Sicily. On this mount is a cavern, in which is the image of St. Rosalia, who is said to have died here ; and round the cave of this saint (who is the patroness of Palermo) a church is built, where priests attend to watch the precious relics, and receive the offerings of the pilgrims.

Pelew Islands, (The), were, in all probability, first discovered by the Spaniards of the Philippines, and by them called the Paloo Islands from the tall palm-trees that grow there in great numbers, and which at a distance have the appearance of masts of ships ; the word palos, in the Spanish language, sometimes signifying a mast. There is every reason to suppose, that no European had ever been upon them, before the Antelope, a packet belonging to the East India company, and commanded by captain Henry Wilson, was wrecked there in the night between the 9th and 10th of August 1783.—This misfortune was the more distressing to the crew, as they were utterly ignorant what resources the islands afforded, or supposing them to be inhabited, what might be the disposition of the inhabitants. However, they found these islands inhabited, and that the natives were simple in their manners, delicate in their sentiments, friendly in their disposition, and, in short, a people that do honour to the human race. The natives are of a deep copper colour, and go naked ; and the astonishment which those, who first discovered the English, manifested on seeing their colour, plainly shewed, that they had never before seen a white man.—The cloaths of the strangers also puzzled them exceedingly ; for it seemed to be a matter of doubt with them, whether these and their bodies did not form one substance. When one of the crew, the captain's brother, was deputed to wait upon the king, who resided at an island at some distance from that whereon they had saved their lives, he accidentally pulled off his hat, at which the gazing spectators were all struck with astonishment, as if they thought it had formed a part of his head. They had no idea of the nature of powder and shot, and were exceedingly amazed on seeing its effects. The principal arms of this people consist of bamboo darts, of five to eight feet long, pointed with the wood of the beetle-nut tree ; but there are short ones for distant marks, which are thrown by means of a stick two feet long. The cupacks, or chiefs, may be considered in the same light as the European nobles. They wear a bone round one of their wrists, in the form of a bracelet, which being a mark of great honour conferred by the king on officers of state, commanders, or persons who by valour or otherwise have greatly distinguished themselves, is never to be parted with but with life. They are not all of the same degree, as appeared from a difference in the bone they wore. Captain Wilson was invested with the highest order of the bone. With respect to property in these islands, a man's house, or canoe, is considered as his own, as is also the land allotted him, as long as he occupies and cultivates it ; but, whenever he removes with his family to another place, the ground reverts to the king, who gives it to whom he pleases, or to those who solicit to cultivate it. The country is well covered with timber trees, the trunks of which furnish the natives with canoes, some large enough to carry 30 men. There are but few other trees of much use to the natives. Yams and cocoa-nuts being their chief articles of subsistence, are attended to with the utmost care. From the scanty produce of the country, it is plain no luxury can reign among the inhabitants in their diet, and the milk of the cocoa-nut was their common drink. On particular occasions, they added to their ordinary fare certain sweetmeats and sweet drink, obtained by the aid of a syrup, extracted either from the palm-tree, or the sugar-cane. The houses are raised about three feet from the ground, the foundation beams being laid on large stones, whence spring the upright supports of their sides, which are crossed by other timbers grooved together, and fastened by wooden pins, the intermediate space being closely filled up with bamboos and palm-tree leaves, platted together. The tops of the houses are thatched with bamboos and palm-trees ; and the inside of the house is without any division, forming one great room. As to domestic implements, they have little baskets very nicely woven from slips of the plantain-tree, and wooden baskets with covers, neatly carved and inlaid with shells. No one ever stirs abroad without a basket, which usually contains some beetlenut, a comb, knife, and a little twine. The best knives are made of a piece of the large mother of outward side a little polished. The combs are made of the orange-tree, of which there are a few of the Seville kind; the handle and teeth are fasten-books are of tortoise shell; and twine, cord, and fishing-nets, are well manufactured from the husks of the cocoa-nut. Of the plantain leaf are formed mats, which serve the people as beds.

 They also use a plantain leaf at meals, instead of a plate, and the shell of a cocoa-nut supplies the place of a cup.
 There are vessels of a kind of earthen ware, of a reddish brown colour, in which they boil their fish, yams, &c.
 A bundle of cocoa-nut husks tied together, serves them for a broom; and thick bamboos, with bores five or six inches in diameter, are their buckets or cisterns.—Their hatchets are like those of the South Sea islands. They have also a few articles, which in these islands may be called luxuries. The shell of the tortoise there is remarkably beautiful, and the natives of Pelew have discovered the art of moulding it into little trays or dishes, and spoons.
 Some of the great ladies have also bracelets of the same manufacture, and ear rings inlaid with shells. The natives in general are a stout well made people, rather above the middling stature, and of a very deep copper colour, but black. The men are entirely naked; the women wear two little aprons, one before, the other behind. Both men and women are tatooed, and their teeth made Black by art. Both sexes are very expert at swimming, and the men are such admirable divers, that they will readily fetch up any thing from the bottom of the sea which attracts their notice.
 The conduct of these people towards the English was, from first to last, uniformly courteous and attentive, accompanied with a politeness which surprised those who were the objects of it. Such an opinion had the king of the island entertained of the English, that on their departure he suffered his second son, Lee Boo, to accompany them to England, where this hopeful youth unhappily died of the small pox, in Dec. 1784. The East India Company erected a monument over his grave in Rotherhithe church-yard where he was buried. These islands were lately visited by captain M'Cleure,

P E M

who confirms the account given of them and their inhabitants by captain Wilson. In his journal, captain M'Cleure says, "having pitched my tent in a bay opposite to the ship, I found myself in a perfect paradise, and could have been happy to have continued here the remainder of my days." They are situated between 5 and 9 degrees of N lat. and 130 and 136 degrees of E lon. They are long, but narrow, well covered with wood, at least such of the islands as our people had an opportunity of seeing. They are encircled on the west side by a reef of corral, of which no end could be seen from any eminence our people were on.

Pembrokeshire, is the S W extremity of Wales, derives its name from, Pembroke the county-town, and is bounded on the E by Carmarthenshire, on the N E by Cardiganshire, and on all other sides by the Irish Sea. It extends in length from N to S, 35 miles, and from E to W 29, and is about 140 in circumference. It is divided into seven hundreds, in which are one city, eight market-towns, 145 parishes, about 2300 houses, and 25,900 inhabitants. It lies in the province of Caerterbury, and diocese of St. David's, and sends one member to parliament. The air of this county is esteemed very salubrious, and the soil is fertile, for here are but few mountains, and these, which are chiefly situated in the N E part of the county, yield good pasture for cattle and sheep; towards the sea-coast, the land extends into rich meadows and corn fields. The country abounds with horned cattle, sheep, goats, and wild fowl of various kinds, some of which are seldom seen in any other part of Britain. These are migratory sea birds, that breed in the isle of Ramsey, and the adjoining rocks, called the Bishop and his Clerks. Thither yearly resort, about the beginning of April, such flocks of birds, of several sorts, as appear incredible to those who have not seen them.

Persia, a large kingdom of Asia, consisting of several provinces, which, at different times, have had their particular kings. It is bounded on the N by Georgia, the Caspian Sea, and Usbec Tartary; on the W by Turkey and Arabia; on the S by the gulfs of Persia and Ormus, and the Arabian Sea; and on the E by Hindoostan Proper. It is 1220 miles from E to W, and 900 from N to S. The chief rivers are the Tiggris and Amuc. In the N and E parts it is mountainous and cold; in the middle and S E parts sandy and desert; in the S and W, level and extremely fertile, though for several mouths very hot.
The soil is far from being luxuriant towards Tartary and the Caspian Sea, but with cultivation it might produce abundance of corn and fruit. South of Mount Taurus, the fertility of the country in corn, fruits, wine, and the other luxuries of life, is equalled by few countries. It produces wine and oil in plenty, senna, rhubarb, and the finest of drugs. The fruits are delicious, especially their dates, oranges, pistachio-nuts; melons, cucumbers, and garden stuffs, not to mention vast quantities of excellent silk; and the gulf of Bassora formerly furnished great part of Europe and Asia with very fine pearls.

PER

In short, the fruits, vegetables, and flowers of Persia, are of a most exalted flavour; and had the natives the art of horticulture to as great perfection as some nations in Europe, by transplanting, engrafting, and other meliorations, they would add greatly to the natural riches of the country. The breed of horses in the province of Fars is at present very indifferent, owing to the ruinous state of the country; but in the province of Dushistan, lying to the S W, it is remarkably good. The sheep are of a superior flavour, owing to the excellence of the pasturage in the neighbourhood of Shiraz, and are also celebrated for the fineness of their fleece; they have tails of an extraordinary size, some of which weigh upwards of thirty pounds; but those which are sold in the markets do not weigh above six or seven. Their oxen are large and strong, but their flesh is seldom eaten by the natives, who confine themselves chiefly to that of sheep and fowls. Their camels, mules, asses, oxen, and buffaloes, are the best of their kind, and are indifferently used for carrying passengers or burdens; but the horses are only used for the saddle. Persia contains mines of iron, copper, lead, and above all, turquoise stones, which are found in Chorasan.
Sulphur, salt-petre, and antimony, are found in the mountains. Quarries of red, white, and black marble, have also been discovered near Tauris. The Persians equal, if not exceed, all the manufactures in the world in silk, woollen, mohair, carpets, and leather.
Their works in these join fancy, taste, and elegance, to richness, neatness, and shew; and yet they are ignorant of painting, and their drawings are very rude. Their dying excels that of Europe. Their silver and gold laces, and threads, are admirable for preserving their lustre. Their embroideries and horse furniture are not to be equalled; nor are they ignorant of the pottery and Window-glass manufactures. On the other hand, their carpenters are very indifferent artists, which is said to be owing to the scarcity of timber all over Persia. Their jewellers and goldsmiths are clumsy workmen; and they are ignorant of lock-making, and the manufacture of looking-glasses. During almost the whole of this century, Persia has been desolated by competitors for the sovereignty. On the assassination of the usurper Nadir Shah, in 1747, Ahmed Abdallah, one of his generals, founded the kingdom of Candahar, to which he annexed the provinces of Korasan and Segestan, in the E part of Persia, and those provinces of Hindoostan Proper, W of the Indus, that had been ceded by the great mogul, in 1737, to Nadir Shah. Kerim Khan, another of Nadir's officers, obtained the sovereignty of all the southern provinces. He transferred the seat of government from Ispahan to Schiras. He refused the title of Shah, or king, being satisfied with that of Protector of Persia. He was beloved by his subjects, and revered by foreign powers. On his death, in 1779, new competitors for the throne sprung up, and have almost ever since continued to spread slaughter and desolation over this unhappy country. The Persians are generally Mahometans, of the sect of Ali. Ispahan is the capital.

Persia, Gulf of, a gulf between Persia and Arabia Felix. The entrance near Ormus is not above 30 miles over, but within it is 180 in breadth, and the length from Ormus to the mouth of the Euphrates is 420 miles.

Perth, a royal borough in Scotland, and the county town of Perthshire, is a populous and flourishing place, containing about 12,000 inhabitants, pleasantly situated on the river Tay, which is navigable thus far for pretty large vessels. The town is built upon a regular plan, and the houses in general in the modern style. There is an elegant stone bridge of nine arches over the Tay at the E. end of the town. Here is a linen and cotton manufacture, and several extensive bleachfields; and the salmon fishery is carried on to a great extent, immense quantities being sent to the London market. Perth is 30 miles N of Edinburgh. Lon. 3 27 W, lat. 56 22 N.

Perthshire, a large, plentiful and rich county of Scotland, bounded on the E by Forfarshire and Fifeshire; on the S by Ciackmannanshire, Stirlingshire with the river Firth of Forth; on the W and S W by Argyleshire and Dumbartonshire; and on the N by Invernesshire and Aberdeenshire. It is above 60 miles long from N to S, and above 50 broad from E to W. It contains Perth proper, part of Gowrie, Stratherne, Monteith, Breadalbane, and Athol. It is fruitful both in corn and pasture, and its principal rivers are the Tay, which is the largest in Scotland; the Keith, famous for its salmon fishery, and has a cataract, the noise of which is extremely loud; the Allan, and the Erne, which falls into the Tay. In Stratherne are found various minerals and metals, particularly copper, lapis calaminaria, and lead. It has a great number of lochs, that produce great variety of excellent fish.

 rica between lat. 1 30 N. and extending nearly 2000 miles long and 350 in breadth. It is bounded to the N by Popayan, a part of the Andes; on the E by the Andillera mountains, which divides the country of the Amararyaguay; on the S by Chili and on the W by the Pacific Ocean. Its capital is Lima, formerly Cusco.
 The soil is mostly barren, excepted, into which the streams from the hills turn. Between the hills are very extensive valleys, yielding all manner of grain and fruit, and the weather temperate. The Andes are covered with snow the greatest part of the year, and consequently cold.

 The sea bordering on Peru is called the South Sea, but more properly the Pacific Ocean, the weather on this coast, from lat. 4 to 25 S being generally serene. No rain falls in this tract unless within four or five degrees of the Equator, where they have it constantly when the sun is vertical, as is the case within this distance all over the globe. On the Cordilleras or high mountains, it rains or snows two thirds of the year. The vintage here is in the fair season, and vines thrive best in the valleys near the sea, where little or no rain falls, and which are watered by the rivulets coming down from the hills, collected and turned into the fields and gardens; where they have this opportunity, they have ripe grapes when they please, and they make excellent wines, which cannot be done in any other country between the tropics.
 The fiercest beasts of prey in Peru are the puma and jaguar, inaccurately called lions and tigers by the Europeans, but possessing neither the undaunted courage of the former, nor the ravenous cruelty of the latter; they are hardly formidable to man, and often turn their backs upon the least resistance. A quadruped called the lama, peculiar to this country, was tamed to domestic purposes by the ancient Peruvians. In form it bears some resemblance to a deer, and some to a camel, and is of a size somewhat larger than a sheep. Its wool furnished the Peruvians with clothing, its flesh with food.
 It was even employed as a beast of burden, and carried a moderate load with much patience and docility; but it was never used for draught. Among the birds, the most remarkable is the condor, which is entitled to pre-eminence over the flying tribe, in bulk, strength and courage. The river Guy-aquil abounds with alligators, and the neighbouring country swarms almost as much with snakes and vipers as that round Porto Bello does with toads.
 Besides their fruit-trees, which have been transplanted hither from Europe, they have those of the Caribbee islands, asanas, guayavas, plantains, bananas, melons, and water melons; besides others peculiar to Peru. The tree most valued is that which furnishes them with quinquina, or Peruvian bark, of the size of a cherry-tree, principally growing in the province of Quito, about 5° S of the Equator; it bears a long reddish flower, which turns to a pod, but the fruit is not of equal virtue with the bark. Near the Equator grow cecilians, cotton-trees, coconuts, sugar canes, palms, and a great deal of good timber; but very few forest trees in other parts of Peru. But what the Spaniards value this country most for is the vast treasure of gold and silver they have drawn from thence for upwards of 200 years, the mountain of Potosi alone, in 22 S lat. having yielded two thousand millions of pieces of eight the first 40 years the mines were wrought. When the Spaniards landed in this country in 1530, they found it governed by sovereigns called Incas, who were revered by their subjects as divinities; and the inhabitants were found to be much more polished than the natives of other parts of America, those of Mexico excepted. These were soon subdued by a few Spaniards, under the command of Francis Pizarro.

 Peru is inhabited by the Spaniards, the native Americans, and a mixture arising from both, called Mestics. The native Americans, who live among the forests, form, as it were, so many small republics, which are directed by a Spanish priest, and by their governor, assisted by the original natives, who serve as officers. They go naked, and paint their bodies with a red drug, called rocu. The same man is of all trades, for he builds his own hut, constructs his own canoe, and weaves his own cloth; but if a large house is to be built for common use, every one lends a helping hand. The natives who live at Quito seem to be of a different temper; for they are extremely idle, and so stupid, that they will sit whole days together upon their heels, without stirring or speaking. Their garment is a sort of sack, with holes to put their arms through; and this is given them by their masters as part of their wages.
 The Mestics, though illegitimate, have all the privileges of a Spaniard, and are the persons who carry on all trades; for the Spaniards think it beneath them to meddle with any thing of this sort: they behave in a more tyrannical manner over the real Americans, than even the Spaniards themselves, insomuch that the governor is obliged to repress their insolence. Peru is now divided into three great audiences, which are Quito, Lima, or Los Reyes, and Loa Charcos: the whole under the government of a viceroy, whose authority once extended over all South America possessed by the Spaniards: but as some of the countries in this vast jurisdiction are above 2000 miles distant from the supreme seat of justice at Lima, the inhabitants were subject to the greatest inconveniences; to remedy which two new viceroalties have been established. The first is fixed at St. Fe de Bogota, the capital of the new kingdom of Granada, and extends over the whole of Terra Firma, and the audience of Quito. In the jurisdiction of the second, established in 1776, are the provinces of Plata, Buenos Ayres, Paraguay, Tucuman, Potosi, St. Cruz de la Sierra, and the towns of Mendoza and St. Juan. Lima is the capital. See Andes.

P E S

Peru, a post town in Clinton county, New York, on the W side of lake Champlain, 41 miles S of the line that divides this State from Lower Canada, nearly opposite to Burlington, on the E side of the lake.

Perugia, an ancient and populous city of Italy, capital of Perugino, with a strong citadel, a university, and a bishop's see. The churches, and many other buildings, public and private, are very handsome. It is seated on a hill, 75 miles N of Rome. Lon. 12 20 E, lat. 43 6 N.

Perugia, a lake of Italy, of a circular form, almost five miles in diameter with three islands in the middle of it. It is eight miles from the city of that name, in the province of Perugino.

Perugino, a province of Italy in the Ecclesiastical State, bounded on the W by Tuscany, on the S by Orvieto, on the W by the duchies of Spoleto and Urbino, and on the N by the county of Citta Castellana. It is 25 miles in length, and near as much in breadth. The air is pure, and the soil fertile in corn and good wine. The capital is Perugia.

Pesaro, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Urbino, with a bishop's see. It is a large place, and the streets are paved with bricks. The castle is well fortified, the harbour excellent, and the cathedral magnificent. The environs are remarkable for producing good figs, of which large quantities are sent to Venice. It is seated on an eminence, at the mouth of the Foglia, on the gulf of Venice, 17 miles E N E of Urbino, and 130 of Rome. Lon. 13 2 E, lat. 43 52 N.

Pescara, a strong town of Naples, in Abruzzo Citeriore. It is seated at the mouth of a river of the same name, on the gulf of Venice, eight miles E by S of Civita-di-Penna, and 100 N E of Naples. Lon. 15 2 E, lat. 42 27 N.

Peschiera, a town of Italy, in the Veronese, with a castle, and a strong fort. It was taken by the French in July 1796, who have been since expelled by Suwarrow. It is seated on the Mincio, which proceeds from the Garda, 16 miles W of Verona. Lon. 11 4 E, lat. 45 26 N.

Pescia, an episcopal town of Tuscany, noted for the excellent oil it produces. It is 10 miles S W of Pistoia. Lon. 11 22 E, lat. 43 47 N.

Pesenac, an ancient town of France, in the department of Herault and late province of Languedoc. It is delightfully seated on the river Pein, 12 miles N E of Beziers. Lon. 3 34 E, lat. 43 28 N.

Pest, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, seated on the Danube, opposite Buda, 85 miles S E of Presburg. Lon. 18 25 E, lat. 47 24 N.

Petaw, an ancient town of Germany, in the duchy of Stiria, seated on the Drave, 100 miles S of Vienna. Lon. 15 35 E, lat. 46 40 N.

Petcheli, Tcheli, or Li-pa-fou, the principal province of China, bounded on the N by the great Wall and part of Tartary, on the E by the Yellow Sea, on the S by Chang-tong and Honan, and on the W by the mountains of Chan-si. It contains nine cities of the first class, which have several others under their jurisdiction. The temperature of the air in this province does not seem to agree with its latitude; for although Petcheli extends no further than the 42d. degree N, yet all its rivers are so much frozen during four months in the year, that waggons with the heaviest loads may safely pass them. The soil is sandy, and produces very little rice; but it abounds with all other kind of grain, and with the greater part of the fruit trees we have in Europe. Peking is the capital.

Pekin, or Li-pa-fou, the principal city of China, bounded on the north by the Great Wall and part of Tartary, on the east by the Yellow Sea, on the south by the mountains of Honan, and on the west by the mountains of Chan-si. It is one of the first class cities, and has several others under its jurisdiction. The temperature of the province does not seem to admit of agriculture; for although Peking is situated no further than the 42d. degree of latitude, yet all its rivers are so much frozen in winter, that for four months in the year, the boats with the heaviest loads cannot pass them. The soil is sandy, and produces very little rice; but it produces all other kind of grain, and the greater part of the fruit raised in Europe. Peking is the Peter and Paul, St. or Petropawloskoi, a seaport of Kamtschatka, in the Russian government of Irkutsk. The town consists of some miserable log-houses and a few conical huts. Captain Clarke, who succeeded captain Cook, and died at sea, was interred here. Lon. 158 43 E, lat. 53 0 N.

Peterborough, a city in Northamptonshire, with a bishop's see, and a market on Saturday. It is seated on the Nen, over which is a bridge into Huntingdonshire. It has but one church, beside the cathedral, which was formerly a monastery; but the marketplace is spacious, and the streets regular. It carries on a trade in corn, coal, and timber, is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. It is 42 miles N E of Northampton, and 81 N of London. Lon. 0 10 W, lat. 52 30 N.

Petersboro', a post town in Hillsboro' county, Northamptonshire; 18 miles W of Amherst, 74 W by N of Newburyport, and the same distance from Boston.

Petersburg, a port of entry and post-town in Dinwiddie county, Virginia; situated on the S side of Appomattox river, in lat. 37° 12' N, and long. 78° 8' W. It is 25 miles S of Richmond, and 79 W of the borough of Norfolk. This is a place of considerable trade in grain, flour, and tobacco; the exports of one year having amounted to 1,390,000 dollars. Being in the centre of one of the earliest settled parts of the State, it is surrounded by a wealthy and populous country. The inhabitants at the last enumeration amounted to 3521, including 1487 slaves.

Peterhead, a town in Aberdeenshire, situated near the mouth of the Ugie, on the east easterly point of Scotland. It has an excellent harbour, defended by a new pier; which can contain 40 or 50 vessels in perfect safety. A considerable trade is carried on directly to the Baltic, for iron, hemp, tar, and other articles. It has likewise a manufacture of sewing thread. A mineral spring, of a powerful diuretic quality, and the sea-bathing bring a great resort of company, for whose accommodation there is a ball-room and many elegant houses. It is a little to the W of Buchanness, and 34 miles N E of Aberdeen. Lon. 1 28 W, lat. 57 28 N.

Peterhoff, in Russia, is situated about 20 miles from Petersburg, and is distinguished for its palace and gardens, which for taste and elegance have been compared to those of Versailles.

Petersburgh, a post town in York county, Pennsylvania; 25 miles S W of York town, and 48 N W of the city of Baltimore.

Petersburgh, a post town in Elbert county, Georgia; situated on the W side of Savannah river, near the mouth of Broad river, and opposite to Vienna in South Carolina; 46 miles N W of Augusta, and 86 N of Louisville.

Petersburgh, or St. Petersburg, the metropolis of the empire of Russia, in the government of the same name. It is seated on the Neva, near the gulf of Finland, and is built partly on some islands in the mouth of the river, and partly upon the continent. At the beginning of this century, the ground on which Petersburg now stands was only a vast morass occupied by a few fishermen's huts. Peter the Great first began this city by the erection of a citadel with six bastions, in 1703, he built also a small hut for himself, and some wooden hovels. In 1710, count Golovkin built the first house of brick; and the next year, the emperor, with his own hands, laid the foundation of a house of the same materials. From these small beginnings rose the imperial city of Petersburg; and, in less than nine years after the wooden hovels were erected, the seat of empire was transferred to it from Moscow. The streets, in general, are broad and spacious; and three of the principal ones, which meet in a point at the Admiralty, and reach to the extremities of the suburbs, are at least two miles in length; most of them are paved, but a few are still suffered to remain floored with planks. In several parts, wooden houses, scarcely superior to common cottages, are blended with the public buildings. The brick houses are ornamented with a white stucco, which has led several travellers to say that they are built with stone. The mansions of the nobility are vast piles of buildings, furnished with great cost and in the same elegant style as at London. The Neva is, in many places, as broad as the Thames at London, deep, rapid, and transparent as crystal. Its banks are lined on each side with a continued range of handsome buildings. On the N side the fortress, the academy of sciences, and the academy of arts, are the most striking objects. On the S side are the imperial palace, the Admiralty, the mansions of many Russian nobles, and the English line, so called, because (a few houses excepted) the whole row is occupied by English merchants. In the front of these buildings, on the S side, is the quay, which extends three miles, except where it is interrupted by the Admiralty; and the Neva, during the whole of that space, has been embarked at the expense of the late empress, by a wall, parapet, and pavement of hewn granite. Petersburg, although it is more compact than the other Russian cities, and has the houses in many streets contiguous to each other; yet still bears a resemblance to the towns of this country, and is built in a very straggling manner. It was in 1783 inclosed within a rampart, the circumference of which is 14 miles. The inhabitants are computed to be 130,000. Petersburg, from its low and marshy situation, is subject to inundations, which have occasionally risen so high as to threaten the town with a total submersion. These floods are chiefly occasioned by a west or south west wind, which, blowing directly from the gulf, obstructs the current of the Neva, and causes a vast accumulation of its waters. The opposite divisions of Petersburg, situate on each side of the Neva, are connected by a bridge on pontoons, which, on account of the large masses of ice driven down the stream from the lake Ladoga, is usually removed when they first make their appearance; and, for a few days, till the river is frozen hard enough to bear carriages, there is no communication between the opposite parts of the town. Among the noblest ornaments of Petersburg is an equestrian statue of Peter the Great, in bronze, of a colossal size; the pedestal of which is a huge rock, brought to the spot by the empress at an immense expense: by this contrivance the great legislator and civilizer of his country appears in the attitude of ascending a precipice, the summit of which he has nearly attained. It was erected with great solemnity by Catharine II. in 1782. Within the walls of the fortress is the cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, in which are deposited the remains of Peter the Great, and of the successive sovereigns, except Peter II. buried at Moscow. Petersburg is 425 miles N W of Mos-

Philadelphia, the capital of Pennsylvania, and the largest city in the United States, is situated on the West bank of Delaware river, extending Westward to the Schuylkill, 10893 feet in length; and from Cedar street in the South to Vine street in the North, 5340 feet in breadth. This was the original plan prescribed by the proprietor William Penn, and contained ten streets in breadth, with 23 in length; which intersecting at right angles formed 184 squares of various dimensions. However there have been considerable deviations from the original plan: the squares have been divided and subdivided, and the streets, courts and alleys have been vastly multiplied. The built parts of Southwark and the Northern Liberties have increased rapidly within the last thirty years. In the year 1800 the enumeration of the city and precincts amounted to 70,000 inhabitants and about 12,000 houses; and in one year since there have been 543 new buildings, principally of bricks, added to the existing stock. The private houses exhibit an appearance of neatness, uniformity and commodiousness: the public edifices are numerous, and some of them constructed in great elegance of style, particularly the banks of Pennsylvania, and the United States; the State-house with the two halls erected at the ends of the E and W wings of the same, and filling together the front of a square; the Prison; City Library, Hospital, and Alms House. Nor do the religious edifices, which are 28 in number, yield in appropriate beauty and grandeur. As Philadelphia is the only port of entry in the state, all exports and imports pass through it: in 1795 the exports amounted to 11,518,260 Dols. and the imports cannot be much less than nine millions, communibus annis. There are four banks of discount and deposit, with five commercial and two fire insurance companies. The land stages that set out from the city, one half of them at least daily (Sunday excepted) amount to forty-five, and the water stages or packets to thirteen. This city was founded in 1682, and incorporated in 1701. The charter being abrogated at the revolution, it remained under a provincial government till 1789; when it was incorporated a second time, and is governed by a Mayor, Recorder, two Councils, together with seven Aldermen. The Councils are elected by the people, and the Mayor by the Councils, annually: the Recorder and Aldermen are appointed by the governor and hold their offices during good behaviour. Philadelphia lies in lat. 39° 56' N, and lon. 75° 8' W. 347 miles S W of Boston, 95 S W of New York, 102 N E of Baltimore, and 144 N E of Washington.

Philippi, an ancient town of Macedonia, enlarged by Philip, father of Alexander the Great, who gave it his own name. Ploermet, a small town of France, in the department of Morbihan and late province of Bretagne, 27 miles N E of Vannes.

Pludentz, a town of Germany, in the Austrian dominions, capital of a county of the same name. It is seated in a pleasant plain, on the river Ill, 65 miles W of Inspruc. Lon. 12 10 E, lat. 47 10 N.

Plumstead, a village in Bucks county, Pennsylvania; where there is a post office, 7 miles N of Doyle's town, 32 miles N of Philadelphia, and 178 of Washington.

Ploermet, a town of France, in the department of Eure and Loire, and late province of Beauce, 20 miles N of Orleans. Lon. 2 0 E, lat. 48 14 N.

Plymouth, a seaport in Devonshire, with a market on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday. It is seated between the mouths of the Plym and Tamar; and next to Portsmouth, is the most considerable harbour in England for men of war. There are, properly speaking, three harbours, called Catwater, Sutton Pool, and Hamouze. The first is the mouth of the Plym, and affords a safe and commodious harbour for merchant ships, but is seldom entered by ships of war. The second is frequented by merchant ships only, is almost surrounded by the houses of the town, and has lately been further secured by an extensive pier. The third is near the mouth of the Tamar, and is the harbour for the reception of the British navy, being fitted with moorings for about 100 sail, and having good anchorage for a much greater number. Adjoining to it, are docks, arsenals, and other conveniences for the building and fitting out of ships of war. These harbours are defended by a fort on St. Nicholas' Island, and by a citadel nearly opposite to that island, upon a hill which overlooks the town. Plymouth contains two parish churches, sends two members to parliament, and is governed by a mayor. It is well supplied with fresh water, first brought here, from a place seven miles off, by the famous Sir Francis Drake, who was a native of this town. It carries on a considerable foreign and domestic trade, and is 43 miles S W of Exeter, and 216 W by S of London. Lon. 4 10 W, lat. 50 22 N.

Plymouth, the capital of Plymouth county, Massachusetts; 42 miles S by E of Boston, and 23 N W of Barnstable, in lat. 41° 58' N, and long. 70° 30' W. This is a post town, and port of entry, and was the first town planted by English emigrants in New England; as such it is respected by the present inhabitants, the rock on which their fathers landed, having been removed to the centre of the town.

Plymouth, a post town in Crafton county, New Hampshire; 33 miles S E of Haverhill, and 79 N W of Portsmouth.

Plymouth, a post town in Washington county, North Carolina; situate on the S side of Roanoke river, near Albemarle sound, 18 miles S of Edenton.

Plymouth Dock, a populous town, adjoining to the harbour of Haymouz, in Devonshire, with a chapel in the dock-yard, and a church about a quarter of a mile from the town.

Plympton, a borough in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday. It had formerly a castle, now in ruins, and is seated on the Plynn, seven miles E of Plymouth, and 218 W by S of London. Lon. 4 0 W, lat. 50 22 N.

Plynlimmon Hills, a vast and lofty mountain of Wales, partly in Montgomeryshire, and partly in Cardiganshire. The Severn, the Wye, and other rivers, have their source in this mountain.

Po, a celebrated river of Italy, which has its source at mount Viso in Piedmont. It runs through Montferrat, the Milanese, and the Mantuan; thence on the borders of the Parmesan, and a part of the Modenese; and having entered the Ferrarese, it divides at Ficherulolo, and flows into the gulf of Venice by four principal mouths. In its course it receives several rivers, and often overflows its banks, as most of those rivers descend from the Alps, and are increased by the melting of the snow.

Po, a river of China, in the province of Kiang-si, which empties itself into the lake Poyang-hou, a small distance from Jao-tehou-fou.

Pocklington, a town in the E riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Saturday, seated on a stream that falls into the Derwent, 14 miles E of York, and 196 N by W of London. Lon. 0 40 W, lat. 53 58 N.

Podenstein, a town of Germany, in Franconia, in the bishopric of Bamberg, seated among forests, near the source of the Putlach, 30 miles S E of Bamberg.

Polonia, a province in the S E part of Poland, wrested from that country by the late empress of Russia, in 1793. The Dniester separates it from Moldavia on the S W, and the Bog crosses it from W to E. It is divided into the Upper and Lower. Kaminierek is the capital of the former, and Bracklaw of the latter.

Poggibonzi, a town of Tuscany, famous for its excellent tobacco. It had a citadel, now in ruins; and is seated near the Elsa, 16 miles S of Florence.

Poggio, a town of Tuscany, near Florence, famous for a handsome palace of the great duke.

Poirino, or Foverino, a town of Piedmont, 15 miles S E of Turin.

Poissey, an ancient town of France, in the Isle of France; seated near the forest of St Germain, 15 miles N W of Paris. Lon. 2 12 E, lat. 48 56 N.

Poitiers, a town of France, capital of the department of Vienne and late province of Poitou, with a bishop's see. Its population is not in proportion to its extent; for it includes a number of gardens and fields within its circuit; and the inhabitants are not estimated at more than 16,000. It has several Roman antiquities, particularly an amphitheatre, partly demolished; and a triumphal arch, which serves as a gate to the great street. Here, in 1536, Edward the Black Prince gained a victory over the French, taking prisoners King John and his son Philip, whom he brought to England. The environs abound with vipers in such numbers, that they are exported to Venice to make treacle. This town is seated on a hill, on the river Clain, 52 miles S W of Tours, and 120 N by E of Bordeaux. Lon. 0 25 E, lat. 46 35 N.

Poitou, a late province of France, bounded on the N by Bretagne, Anjou, and part of Touraine; on the E by Touraine, Berry, and Marche; on the S by Angoumois, Saintonge, and Aunis; and on the W by the bay of Biscay. It is fertile in corn and wine, and feeds a great number of cattle, particularly mules. It now forms the three departments of Vendee, Vienne, and the two Sevres.

Pola, an ancient episcopal strong support of Italy, in the S part of Istria, with a citadel and a bishop's see. Here are the ruins of a Roman amphitheatre and a triumphal arch. It is seated at the bottom of a bay, and has a spacious harbour, 80 miles S E of Venice. Lon. 14 9 E, lat. 45 13 N.

Polachia, a palatinate of Poland, 88 miles long and 30 broad; bounded on the N by Prussia and Lithuania, on the E by Lithuania, on the S by the palatinate of Lublin, and on the W by that of Masovia. Bielsk is the capital.

Poland, a large country of Europe, bounded on the W by the Baltic, Brandenburg, and Silesia; on the S by Hungary and Moldavia; on the N by Prussia, Courland, Livonia, and Russia; and on the E by Russia and the territories wrested by that power from the Turks. It is divided into three large parts, Great Poland, Little Poland, and Lithuania; each of which is subdivided into palatinates, or provinces. The government was monarchical and aristocratical; all the acts of state being in the name of the king and republic of Poland. The king was the only elective sovereign in Europe; being chosen by a general diet summoned by the archbishop of Gnesna, as chief of the republic during the interregnum. This circumstance proved the source of great calamities; for, on the demise of every sovereign, the country was generally involved in a war, between contending factions, respectively supported by foreign powers. In 1772, a partition of this country, projected by the king of Prussia, was effected by that monarch, in conjunction with the empress of Russia and the emperor of Germany. By this partition, one third of the country was wrested from the republic, the diet being compelled by a foreign force, to make and to ratify this important cession. The part allotted to Russia comprises Polish Livonia, that part of the palatinate of Polotsk which lies to the E of the Dwina or Duna; the palatinate of Vitpeck, Mich-

Touraine; on the E by Touraine, and Marche; on the S by Anjou, Saintonge, and Anis; on the W by the bay of Biscay. It produces corn and wine, and feeds a great number of cattle, particularly horses. It now forms the three departments of Vendee, Vienne, and the two ancient episcopal strong seats. It is in the S part of Istria, and has a bishop's see. Here is a Roman amphitheatre and a triumphal arch. It is seated at the mouth of a bay, and has a spacious harbour, 30 miles S E of Venice. Lon. 45 13 N.

Polonia, a palatinate of Poland, 88 miles long and 30 broad; bounded on the N by Prussia and Lithuania, on the S by Prussia, on the E by the palatinates of Lublin, and on the W by that of Cracow. Bielsk is the capital.

Polonia, a large country of Europe, bounded on the W by the Baltic, Brandenburg, and Silesia; on the S by Hungary, Moldavia; on the N by Prussia, Poland, Livonia, and Russia; on the E by Russia and the territories of that power from the Baltic. It is divided into three large parts, Great Poland, Little Poland, and Lithuania; each of which is subdivided into palatinates, or provinces. The government was monarchical and hereditary; all the acts of state bore the name of the king and republic. The king was the only sovereign in Europe; being elected by a general diet summoned by the bishop of Gnesna, as chief magistrate, during the interregnum. The circumstance proved the source of the calamities; for, on the demise of a sovereign, the country was involved in a war, between the different factions, respectively supported by foreign powers. In 1772, a partition of this country, projected by Prussia, was effected by Prussia, in conjunction with the Empress of Russia and the emperor of Austria.

By this partition, one third of the country was wrested from the diet being compelled by Prussia, to make and to ratify this partition. The part allotted to Prussia comprises Polish Livonia, and the palatinate of Polotsk, and the E of the Dwina or Dnieper, and the palatinate of Vitepsk, Mich-

low; and two small portions to the N and S E of the palatinate of Minsk. This tract of land (Polish Livonia excepted), is situated in White Russia, and includes at least one third of Lithuania. The king of Prussia took possession of all the western parts of Pomerania, bounded on the S by the river Netze or Nette, with the whole of Polish or Western Prussia, the cities of Dantzic and Thorn excepted. Of these dismembered countries the Russian part is the largest, the Austrian the most populous, and the Prussian the most commercial. The population of the whole amounts to near 5,000,000 of souls; the first containing 1,600,000, the second 2,500,000, and the third 800,000. The three partitioning powers, moreover, forcibly effected a great change in the constitution. By this all foreign candidates for the elective throne of Poland are excluded; none can be chosen king of Poland, and great duke of Lithuania, in future, but a native Pole; the son or grandson of a king cannot be elected immediately upon the death of his father or grandfather, nor be eligible till after an interval of two reigns; and a permanent council is established, in which the executive power is vested. By this change, the house of Saxony, and all foreign princes, who might be likely to give weight to Poland by their hereditary dominions, are rendered incapable of filling the throne; the faintest prospect of an hereditary sovereignty is removed; the exorbitant privileges of the equestrian order are confirmed in their utmost latitude; and the prerogatives of the crown, before too greatly reduced, are still further diminished. In 1791, the king and the nation, in concurrence, almost unanimously, and without any foreign intervention, established another constitution. By this the evils of an elective monarchy, by which Poland, on almost every vacancy of the throne, had been involved in the calamities of war, were avoided, the throne being declared hereditary in the house of Saxony. The rights and privileges of all orders in the republic (the king, the nobles, the citizens, and the peasants), were alike equitably consulted. In a word, it was not, on the one hand, the haughty despot dictating a constitution to his people; nor, on the other, a proud aristocracy, or a mad democracy, that wrested from their sovereign his just prerogatives; but it was the universal wish of the nation, the sentiment that inspired which was universal happiness. A few of the nobility, however, discontented at the generous sacrifices of some of their privileges, repaired to the court of Russia; and their representations concurring with the ambitious views of the empress, she sent an army into Poland, under pretence of being a guarantee of the constitution of 1772. Her interference was too powerful to be resisted; and this new constitution was overthrown. But the principal object for which the Russian army entered Poland was not yet attained. The empress had planned, in conjunction with the king of Prussia, a second partition of this unhappy country, which actually took place in 1793; and in 1795, the act of partition and abdication was signed by the unfortunate Stanislaus at Warsaw. By this the empress obtained nearly the remaining part of Lithuania, with the palatinates of Poloffia, Kiof, and Bratzlaw. Besides the voivodships or provinces of Posen, Gnesen, Kalish, Siradia, Wielun, Lenschitz, Cujavia, Doorzyn, Rawa, part of Plotsk, &c. with the city and monastery of Czestokow (the Loretto of Poland), and its rich treasures, the king of Prussia obtained the great object of his wishes, the cities of Dantzic and Thorn. By the constitution of 1772, the Roman Catholic religion is declared the established; but although the Dissidents continue excluded from the diet, the senate, and the permanent council, they enjoy the free exercise of their religion; are permitted to have churches without bells, and schools and seminaries of their own. They are capable also of sitting in the inferior courts of justice; and in the tribunal appointed to receive appeals in matters of religion; three of their communion are admitted as assessors. In consequence of this toleration, the Dissidents have constructed churches in different parts of the kingdom, and the Lutherans, in particular, have built one at Warsaw. The air is generally cold, and they have but little wood; however, it is so fertile in corn in many places, that it supplies Sweden and Holland with large quantities. There are extensive pastures, and they have a large quantity of leather, furs, hemp, flax, saltpetre, honey, and wax. They have mines of salt of a great depth, out of which they

Pondicherry, a town of Hindoostan, on the coast of Coromandel. It was first settled by the French in 1674. Previously to the war of 1756, it was, perhaps, the finest city in India. It extended along the seacoast above a mile, and was three quarters of a mile in breadth. It was well built, and, besides many public buildings, had a citadel, then the best of its kind in India. This city was taken by colonel Coote, in 1761, and the fortifications were demolished. It was restored in 1763; taken by the English in 1778; restored in 1783; and again taken by the English in 1793. It is 100 miles S

Pont St. Esprit, a town of France, in the department of Gard and late province of Languedoc. It is seated on the river Rhone, over which is one of the finest bridges in Europe, consisting of 19 great and four small arches. To facilitate the passage of the water in time of floods, apertures are made through each pier, six feet above the common level of the river; and to stem its current, the bridge is built in the form of a curve. This passage is defended by a citadel, within which is the church of the Holy Spirit, projecting into the river. As the bridge is so slight, the goods are conveyed over in sledges, by way of precaution. Pont St. Esprit is 17 miles S of Viviers, and 55 N E of Montpellier. Lon. 4 46 E, lat. 44 13 N.

Pont St. Maigence, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise and late province of the Isle of France, seated on the Oise, five miles N of Seins. Lon. 2 40 E, lat. 49 18 N.

Pont-sur-Seine, a town of France, in the department of Aube and late province of Campagne, with a castle, seated on the Seine, 17 miles N W of Troyes, and 55 S E of Paris. Lon. 3 40 E, lat. 48 28 N.

Pont-Sur-Yonne, a town of France, in the department of Yonne and late province of Burgundy, seated on the Yonne, eight miles N W of Sens. Lon. 3 14 E, lat. 48 16 N.

Pontepool, a town in Monmouthshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated between two hills, on the river Avon, and is 15 miles S W of Monmouth, and 146 W by N of London. Lon. 3 6 W, lat. 51 42 N.

Poole, a borough and seaport in Dorsetshire, with a market on Monday and Thursday. It is situate on a peninsula projecting into a capacious bay, branching into many creeks, and forming several islands. The harbour admits vessels of moderate size only; but for them it is very secure. Poole rose into some consequence several centuries ago, when the ancient town of Wareham fell into decay; and its trade and population are rapidly increasing. The principal branch of business here is the Newfoundland fishery. It has also a large importation of deals, from Norway, a general commerce with America and various parts of Europe, and a fine coasting trade, particularly in corn and coal. POP Populic State, a country of Italy; bounded on the N by the territories of Venice, on the E by the gulf of Venice, on the S E by the Kingdom of Naples, on the S by the Mediterranean, and on the W by Tuscany and Modena. It extends from S to N, 240 miles, and from S W to N E in some parts 120, but in others scarce 20 miles.

It is divided into the following provinces, the Campagna di Roma, the Patrimony of St. Peter, Spoleto, Ancona, Urbino, Romagna, the Bolognese, and the Ferrarese. The papal government appears to be ill calculated to promote the happiness of the inhabitants; for all these provinces (the Bolognese excepted) are badly cultivated and thinly inhabited. Trade and manufactures are but little encouraged; and were it not for dates, figs, almonds, olives, and other fruits, which grow spontaneously, the indolence of the inhabitants is such, that they would be absolutely starved. This indolence is not wonderful, since they know, that the more they acquire, the more will be demanded of them. The numerous holidays are great impediments to the exertions of industry; and the number of young sturdy beggars, who stroll about as pilgrims, instead of increasing the common stock by their industry, lie as a dead weight on their fellow-subjects. Various other causes might be mentioned; as the multitude of hospitals and convents; the inconceivable wealth which lies useless in these convents and in the churches; the inquisition, and the rigour of the papal government. Hence it is, that in no part of Europe are to be found people more wretched than the pope's temporal subjects. The pope, according to the ancient canon law, is the supreme, universal, and independent head of the church, and invested with sovereignty over all christian sovereigns, communities, and individuals. His arrogant pretensions are so well known, that it is needless to expatiate upon them. Happily, the Reformation begun by Luther dispelled the delusion in many parts of Europe; and the progress of learning, and the spirit of free inquiry, has enlightened many even of the Roman catholic countries, where the papal political system is treated with contempt. The pope has the title of Holy Father and Holiness; and he is elected, at every vacancy, from among the cardinals, each of whom is styled His Eminence. Their number was fixed by Sixtus V. at 70, in allusion to the number of the disciples who were sent out by Christ to teach the world; an allusion, without any singular propriety, as no two classes of people could be more unlike. But this number is seldom complete. Every nation of the Roman catholic religion has a cardinal for its protector. Besides the Ecclesiastical State the pope is possessed of the dutchy of Benevento, in the kingdom of Naples; and, before the late revolution in France, he had the territories of Avignon and Venaissin in that country. The annual revenue of the pope is computed to be 8,700,000 scudi, or upward of £2,000,000 sterling. His military force is inconsiderable, his body guard is 40 Swiss, 75 cuirassiers, and 75 light horse. His naval force consists of a few gallees, stationed at Civita Vecchia. Rome is the capital.

Poperinguen, a town of Austrian Flanders, on a river of the same name, six miles W of Ypres. Lon. 2 38 E, lat. 50 51 N.

Popo, a kingdom on the Slave Coast of Guinea. The inhabitants have scarcely any houses to dwell in, besides the king's village, which is in an island in the midst of a river. Their chief trade is in slaves.

Porcah, a town of Hindoostan, in Travancore, taken from the Dutch by the English in 1795. It is 140 miles S of Calicut. Lon. 74 35 E, lat. 8 11 N.

Porchester, a village in Hampshire, at the upper end of the harbour of Portsmouth, between Fareham and Portsca Island. It has an ancient castle, which has served of late years, for the reception of prisoners of war.

Port Patrick, a seaport of Scotland, in Wigtonshire, confined by the sea on one side, and on the other by over-hanging rocks and hills. It is noted for its ferry to Donaghadee in Ireland, from which it is only 20 miles distant; and a packet boat sails from hence to that place, every day. The harbour is good; and has one of the finest quays in Great Britain, with a reflecting light house.
It is computed that 11000 head of cat-

Porto. See Oporto.

Porto Bello, a seaport of South America, on the N coast of the isthmus of Darien, having a large commodious harbour, with good anchorage and shelter for ships: its entrance is narrow, and defended by several forts. The town, which is very unhealthy, is situated on the declivity of a mountain, which surrounds the whole harbour, and consists of one principal street, extending along the strand, with others crossing it, and running from the declivity of the mountains to the shore. It is a very unhealthy place; and the country around it swarms with toads in such multitudes, as to hide the surface of the earth. Before the abolition of the trade by the galleons, in 1748, and the introduction of register ships, Porto Bello was the great mart for the rich commerce of Peru and Chili. Porto Bello was taken, in 1742, by admiral Vernon, who demolished the fortifications. It is 70 m les N of Panama, and 300 W of Carthagena. Lon. 80 45 W, lat. 9 33 N.

Portree, a town of Skye one of the Western islands of Scotland. The chief trade of the inhabitants is in black cattle, small horses, and kelp.

Porto Royal, a post town of Virginia, situated on the S W side of Rappa-hamoc river, in Caroline county, 22 miles S E of Fredericksburg on the same water, and 84 S of Washington.
 It has about 1500 inhabitants.

Portsea, an island between Chichester Bay and the harbour of Portsmouth, in Hampshire. It is a low tract of considerable extent, separated from the mainland by a creek, over which is a bridge. At the S W ex-trinity of it is situate the town of Portsmouth.

Portsmouth, a seaport and borough in Hampshire, on the isle of Portsea, with a market on Thursday and Saturday.
 It is the most considerable haven for men of war, in England. The capacious harbour is made by a bay, running up between this island and an opposite peninsula, having a narrow entrance commanded by the town and forts. Portsmouth is the most strongly fortified place in Great Britain, and its high importance renders it worthy of every attention. Many of the largest ships are always laid up here; and in time of war it is the rendezvous of the grand channel fleet.
 The docks, arsenals, storehouses, barracks, &c. are all of capital magnitude, and kept in perfect order. The town itself is supported entirely by the resort of the army and navy; and the country round, to a great extent, is benefited by the demand for provisions which they create. Off the point of land which terminates the peninsula, and opposite to Portsmouth, is the noted road of Spithead, where the men of war anchor when prepared for actual service. Portsmouth is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. It has one church, and two chapels; one in the garrison, and one in a part of the town, called the common, for the use of the dock. It is 20 miles S E of Winchester, and 72 S W of London. Lon. 1 1 W, lat. 50 49 N.

Portsmouth, a post town and port of entry in Rockingham county, New Hampshire, being the capital of the state. It is seated on the S bank of Piscataqua river and harbour, in lat. 43° 9' N, and lon. 70 16 W, at the distance of 22 miles N of Newbury-port, and 65 N E of Boston. In 1800 the inhabitants were enumerated at 5339. The harbour is one of the best in the United States, and the trade very considerable, the exports of one year having amounted to $ 153,000. It has two banks of discount and deposit; and at the entrance of the harbour is a light house.

Portsmouth, a post town in Norfolk county, Virginia; situated on Elizabeth river, opposite to the borough of Norfolk, 41 miles S E of Williamsburg and 28 N E of Suffolk on Nansmond river.
 It supports a considerable trade, and contains above 2000 inhabitants.

Portsoy, a seaport in Banffshire, six miles E of Cullen. It has manufactures of snuff and sewing thread.

Port Tobacco, a post town, the capital of Charles county, Maryland; lying on the N side of Potowmack river, 34 miles S of the city of Washington, and 45 S W of Annapolis. It contains about 500 inhabitants.

Portugal, the most western country of Europe, 310 miles in length, and 150 in breadth; bounded on the W and S by the Atlantic, and on the E and N by Spain. It is divided into six provinces, Estramadura, Beira, Entre-Douro-e-Minho, Tra-los-Montes, Alentejo, and Algarva. Though Spain and Portugal are in the same climate, the air of the latter is more temperate than that of the former, on account of the neighbourhood of the sea. Corn is not plentiful, because the inhabitants do not attend much to husbandry; and they import Indian corn from Africa, which is used by the peasants instead of wheat. There is a great number of barren mountains, and yet there is plenty of olives, vines, oranges, lemons, nuts, almonds, figs, and raisins; and it is famous for excellent wines. Much salt is made also from the sea-water, especially in the bay of St. Ubes, whence a great deal is exported. The foreign trade consists either of the exportation of the produce of the country, or in the merchandise which is received from its foreign settlements; such as sugar, tobacco, rum, cotton, indigo, hides, Brazil and other woods for dyeing, and many excellent drugs. Besides these, it has gold, silver, diamonds, and other precious stones from America. The horses of Portugal were formerly in great esteem, but now mules are preferred; and the born cattle are small and lean. Toward the frontiers of Spain there are mountains in which was formerly got gold and silver; and the river Tajo, the Tagus of the ancients, was celebrated by their poets for its golden sands; but the Portuguese do not think them worth minding. There are also mines of iron, tin, lead, quarries of marble, and some precious stones. The principal rivers are the Tajo, Douro Guadiana, Minho, and Mondego. The Portuguese are indolent, and so fond of luxury, that they spend all their wealth in the purchase of foreign merchandise. The women are addicted to gallantry, for which reason the men are jealous of their wives, and allow them little liberty. The government is monarchical, but the royal authority is limited; for the sovereign cannot raise any more taxes than were settled in 1674. The established religion is the Roman Catholic, and there are three archbishops and ten bishops, besides a patriarch; also three severe inquisitions, and yet there are a great number of concealed Jews. The authority of the pope was so great, that the king would not confer any benefice without his consent, but of late years it has declined here as well as in other countries. In 1580, there was a failure in the royal line, and then Philip II. king of Spain, subdued the country; but in 1640, there was a great revolution, and the crown was conferred on John duke of Braganza, (king John IV.) whose descendants still enjoy it. Lisbon is the capital.

Ugalete, a town of Spain, in Biscay, seated on the Bay of Biscay, 12 miles N of Bilboa. Lon. 3 18 W, lat. 43 40 N.

Pozana, a town on the E coast of the island of Sardinia. Lon 9 30 E, lat. 40 36 N.

Posega, a strong town of Slavonia, capital of a county of the same name. It was taken from the Turks by the Austrians, in 1687. It is seated in a fertile country, on the river Oriana, 120 miles W by N of Belgrade. Lon. 18 59 E, lat. 45 36 N.

Pozania, or Posen, a commercial town of Great Poland, in a palatinate of the same name, with a good castle and a bishop's see. The cathedral is magnificent. By the late partition of Poland, it became subject to the king of Prussia. It is a trading place seated in a pleasant plain, on the river Warta, 27 miles W of Gnesna, and 127 W of Warsaw.

Potenza, a town of Naples, in Basilicata, with a bishop's see. It was almost ruined by an earthquake in 1694. It is seated near the source of the Basiento, eight miles S E of Naples.

Peru, in the audience of Los Charcos. Here is the best silver mine in all America, in a mountain in the form of a sugar-loaf. Silver was as common in this place as iron is in Europe; but it is almost exhausted, or at least little is got in comparison of what was formerly; and the mountain itself is said to be little better than a shell. The country around is so naked and barren, that the inhabitants get their provisions from the neighbouring provinces. It is seated at the bottom of the mountain of Potosi, 300 miles S E of Africa. Lon. 64 25 W, lat. 19 40 S.

Potsdam, a city of Upper Saxony, in the middle marche of Brandenburg, with a palace belonging to the king of Prussia. It is the most elegant and singular city in Europe. Many new houses, on the finest ancient and modern plans, were raised by the late king, Frederick III. and presented to the inhabitants; and the various public buildings display at once great magnificence and taste: In 1795, it was damaged by fire. It is seated on an island 10 miles in circumference, formed by the rivers Spree and Havel, 12 miles W of Berlin. Lon. 13 46 E, lat. 51 52 N.

Poton, a town in Bedfordshire, with a market on Saturday, 12 miles E of Bedford, and 48 N by W of London. Lon. 0 18 W, lat. 52 11 N.

Pottsgrove, a pleasant village in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania; situated on the N E side of Schuylkill river, 37 miles W by N of Philadelphia, and 17 S E of Reading.

Poughkeepsie, a post town, the capital of Dutchess county, New York; situated on the E bank of Hudson river, 47 miles S of the city of Hudson, and 85 N of the city of New York, containing 3246 inhabitants at the last enumeration.

Pongues, a village of France, in the department of Nièvre and late province of Nivernois, noted for its ferruginous mineral waters. It is five miles N W of Nevers.

Poultney, a town of Vermont, in Rutland county, 8 miles S of Fairhaven, and 6 N E of Hampton, near the head of lake Champlaine. Here is a post office, and the township contained 1600 inhabitants at last census.

Prades, a small handsome town of France, in the department of the Eastern Pyrenees, and late province of Rousillon. It is seated in a fine plain on the river Tet, in the middle of mountains, 22 miles S E of Montlouis. Lon. 2 35 E, lat. 42 26 N.

Pragilar, a town of Piedmont, seven miles W of Turin. Lon. 7 30 E, lat. 45 5 N.

Prague, a large and famous city, capital of Bohemia, and an archiepiscopal see. It is about 3 miles long and 2 broad, but its population by no means answers to its extent. It comprehends three towns, the Old, the New, and the Little Town, and is 15 miles in circumference. It is built upon seven mountains, and has above 100 churches, and as many palaces. The Moldaw runs through the city, separating the Old Town from the New, and over it is a bridge of 18 arches, 700 feet long, with a strong tower at each end. The Old Town is very populous; the houses are high, and the streets narrow. In this part is the old palace, where the ancient kings resided; but the finest ornament is the university, frequented by a great number of students. The Jesuits had a magnificent college here; and here the Jews have nine synagogues. The New Town contains fine structures, handsome gardens, and large streets. The royal castle is a very large irregular building, but it is built on a hill, which commands a very fine prospect over the whole city and country round. Not far from hence stands the archbishop's house (a pretty modern building), and the old cathedral, in which there are some pieces of architecture, which deserve to be seen. Though the city is in general ill built the situation of it is extremely fine. The mass of houses rise like an amphitheatre to a considerable height. To the right the hill rises above them as far as the imperial palace, majestically situated on the top. To the left it is covered as far as the middle with beautiful gardens and pleasure houses, which have a fine effect, and form a most magnificent amphitheatre. Prague was taken by storm by the French in 1741; but they were obliged to leave it in 1742. In 1744 it was taken by the king of Prussia; but he was obliged to abandon it the same year. It was besieged again by the king of Prussia, in 1757 after a great victory, obtained near this city, over the Austrians; but being defeated some time after, he was obliged to raise the siege. It is 75 miles S E of Dresden, 158 S E of Berlin, and 235 N W of Vienna. Lon. 14 45 E, lat. 50 4 N.

county, New-Jersey, 18 miles S W of New-Brunswick, 12 N E of Trenton, and 42 of Philadelphia, in lat. 40° 22 N and lon. 74° 34 W. This town contains about 500 inhabitants, and has long been the seat of an eminent seminary of learning. The college erected here, called Nassau-hall College, is a handsome stone building 180 feet wide, by 54 deep, placed on a small eminence that commands a pleasing view of the adjacent country.—The students are generally about 70 in number; the presidents have been distinguished for learning and piety, and the institution has produced men of extensive usefulness in church and state.

Prince William Henr's Island, an island in the Eastern Ocean, lying W N W of Tench's Island. It is pretty high, and 70 miles in circuit. It is well wooded, and had something growing on it, resembling in appearance Indian corn or sugar cane, and has a luxuriant and picturesque appearance, and is supposed to be fertile and well peopled. The natives are quite naked, and seem to be the same sort of people as those on Tench's Island, and their canoes of the same construction. It was discovered by lieutenants Ball and King, in 1790.
A high mountain, rising in the centre of it, was called Mount Philip. Lon.

Prince Wilham Henry's Island, an island of the S Pacific Ocean, discovered by captain Wallis, in 1767. Lon. 141 6 W, lat. 17 0 S.

Prince William's Sound, a gulf on the N W coast of America, so named by captain Cook, in 1778. The men, women and children, are here all clothed in the same manner. Their ordinary dress is a sort of close robe, which sometimes reaches only to the knees, but generally down to the ancles. They are composed of the skins of various animals, and are commonly worn with the hairy side outwards. The men often paint their faces of a black colour, and of a bright red, and sometimes of a bluish or leaden hue; but not in any regular figure. The women puncture or stain the chin with black, that comes to a point in each of their cheeks. Their canoes are of two sorts; the one large and open, the other small and covered. The framing consists of slender pieces of wood, and the outside is composed of the skins of seals, or other sea animals, stretched over the wood. Their weapons and implements for hunting and fishing, are the same as those used by the Greenlanders or Esquimaux. Many of their spears are headed with iron, and their arrows are generally pointed with bone. The food they were seen to eat was the flesh of some animal, either roasted or broiled, and dried fish. Our knowledge of the animals of this part of the continent is entirely derived from the skins that were brought by the natives for sale. These were principally of bears, common and pine martens, sea otters, seals, racoons, small ermines, foxes, and the whitish cat or lynx. The birds found here were the halcyon, or great king fisher, which had fine bright colours; the white-headed eagle, and the humming-bird. Few vegetables of any kind were observed; and the trees that chiefly grew about the Sound, were the Canadian spruce pine, some of which are of a considerable size. Lon. 147 21 W, lat. 59 33 N.

Principato, a province of Naples, divided into Principato Ulteriore and Principato Citeriore, that is, the Further and Hither Principality. Principato Citeriore is bounded on the N by Principato Ulteriore and Terra-di-Lavora, on the W and S by the Mediterranean, and on the E by Basilicata. It is 60 miles long and 30 broad; the soil is fertile in wine, corn, oil, and saffron; and it has a great deal of silk, and several mineral springs. Salerno is the capital. Principato Ulteriore is bounded on the N by the Molise and Terra-di-Lavora, on the W by the Mediterranean, on the S by Principato Citeriore, and on the E by Capitanata. It is 37 miles long and 30 broad. The Ap-pennine mountains render the air cold, and the soil is not very fertile, either in corn or wine; but it produces chestnuts, and has excellent pastures. Benevento is the capital.

Prisdenia, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Bosnia, with a bishop's see, and a magnificent church. It is seated on the Drinn, 32 miles N E of Albanapolis, and 195 N of Belgrade. Lon. 21 3 E, lat. 42 0 N.

Pristina, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Servia. It was pillaged by the Austrians in 1689; and is seated on the Rusca, 58 miles N W of Niassa, and 150 S E of Belgrade. Lon. 22 5 E, lat. 42 43 N.

It lies 30 miles N by W of Newport, and 45 S W of Boston. The inhabitants of this metropolis were 7614 at the last enumeration. The harbour is safe and commodious, though inferior to that of Newport; and the trade to the neighbouring states, and the West Indies is very considerable, the exports of one year exceeding 600,000 Dols. The private buildings are mostly composed of wood, though the public are principally of bricks or stone, and constructed with a degree of elegance worthy of a highly polished people. The baptist college, founded in this city, is conducted on catholic principles, and is supported with a credit, that does honour to its patrons. As the men of Rhode Island and Providence plantations have long been famous for emissions of paper money, they still make the greatest possible use of Banks and Bank-paper.

Prussia, a large country of Europe, bounded on the N by the Baltic; on the E by Lithuania, Samogitia, and Poland; on the S by Poland; and on the W by Brandenburg and Pomerania; about 500 miles in length, and 100 in breadth, where it is narrowest. It is a very fertile country, and produces a great deal of flax, hemp, and corn. There are a great number of domestic animals; and the sea, rivers, and lakes, supply them with great plenty of fish. Besides the common game, there are elk, wild asses, and ur, in the forests. These last are of a monstrous size, and have some resemblance to beavers. Their hides are extremely thick and strong, and they sell them to foreigners at a great price. One of the most remarkable productions of this country is yellow amber, which is got along the sea-coast. There are two large lakes, besides the rivers Vistula and Pregel. The inhabitants are of a good constitution, laborious, robust, and good soldiers. There are a great number of mechanics, but their principal business is husbandry, and feeding of cattle. In the 13th century, all Prussia belonged to the knights of the Teutonic Order. In 1454, that part, since denominated Polish, Royal, or Western Prussia, revoked to Casimir IV. king of Poland, and was incorporated into the dominions of the republic. At the same time, the knights were constrained to hold the remaining part, called Eastern or Ducal Prussia, as a fief of the crown of Poland. In 1525, Albert of Brandenburg, their grand master having become a convert to the doctrines of Luther, took advantage of the confusions of the empire to betray the interests of his fraternity, and concluded a treaty with Sigismund king of Poland, by which Eastern Prussia was erected into an hereditary dutchy, and given to him as a polish fief. He married a princess of Denmark, and transmitted this rich inheritance to his descendants; one of whom, Frederic William, the Great Elector, was the first duke that threw off his feudal dependance on Poland. His son, Frederic I in 1701, assumed the title of King of Prussia, which was soon after acknowledged by all the Christian powers, except Poland, which did not acknowledge it till 1764. In 1772, Frederic III. compelled the Poles to cede to him the whole of Western Prussia, the cities of Dantzic and Thorn excepted: and in 1793, the present king of Prussia, by another forced cession, obtained possession of those cities, with some other provinces, (see Poland) to which he has given the name of Southern Prussia. Pyramids of Egypt, structures formerly counted one of the Seven Wonders of the World. They are built upon a rock, at the foot of the high mountains which accompany the Nile in its course, and separate Egypt from Lybia. Various have been the conjectures how and when they were built, yet no two authors agree exactly about them; however, this is certain that they are extremely ancient, and that there is no account, in any author of credit, when or for what reason they were founded:

Most imagine they were designed for tombs, though there is no entrance into two of them. There are many of these edifices at a greater distance in the desert, of which very little notice is taken by travellers. The principal pyramids are E S E of Gize, a village seated on the western shore of the Nile. There are four of them that deserve the attention of the curious; for though there are seven or eight others in the neighbourhood, they are nothing in comparison of the former: The two largest pyramids are 500 feet in perpendicular height. The plain they stand on is a continual rock, almost covered with a moving sand, in which are great numbers of shells and petrified oysters; a thing the more surprising, as the Nile never risesa high enough to overflow this plain; nor are there any shellfish in that river. The most northern of these great pyramids is the only one that is open; and those who enter it, and clamber up to a sort of room, find a tomb, or sarcophagus. The external part is chiefly built of great square stones, of an equal size; but have all the figure of a prism, that they may adhere to each other the closer; for they have neither lime, nor cramps of any metal. This pyramid is three hours journey from Old Cairo, and the entrance into it is on the north side. The opening leads successively to five different passages, which though running upwards, downwards, and horizontally, tend all towards the S and terminate in chambers, the one underneath, and the other in the centre of the pyramid. In the upper chamber is the sarcophagus just mentioned; it is of granite, and, if you strike upon it with a key, it sounds like a bell. The ascents to the top of the pyramid on the outside, are by steps, which are the height of each stone, the lowermost of which is four feet high, and three broad, but they were not originally designed for this purpose. The base at the N side of it is 693 feet, and as the pyramid is exactly square, the other sides must be of the same length. If we imagine four equilateral triangles, mutually inclining till they all meet in a point at the top, we shall then have a true notion of the dimension and figure of this pyramid; the perimeter of each triangle comprehending 2079 feet, and the perimeter of the basis 2772 feet. Whence the whole area of the base confine they were designed for though there is no entrance in them. There are many of these at a greater distance in some of which very little notice is taken by travellers. The principal one is E S E of Gize, a village on the western shore of the Nile. Four of them that deserve the name of the curious, for though seven or eight others in the neighbourhood, they are nothing in comparison of the former: The two great pyramids are 500 feet in perpendicular height. The plain they stand on is of continual rock, almost covered with a fine sand, in which are great numbers of shells and petrified oysters; the more surprising, as the sand rises high enough to overwhelm the plain; nor are there any shells at the river. The most northern great pyramid is the only one that is open; and those who enter it find their way up to a sort of room, find a sarcophagus. The external is chiefly built of great square stones of an equal size; but have all the appearance of a prison, that they may adjoin to each other the closer; for they are of a different lime, nor cramps of any kind. This pyramid is three hours journey from Old Cairo, and the entrance to it is on the north side. The ascent leads successively to five different passages, which though running downwards, and horizontally, all lead towards the S and terminate in four chambers, the one underneath the other in the centre of the pyramid. The upper chamber is the same as the one just mentioned; it is of granite, and if you strike upon it with a hammer it sounds like a bell. The ascent to the top of the pyramid on the outside is by steps, which are the height of the stone, the lowermost of which are about six feet high, and three broad, but they were not originally designed for steps. The base at the N side is 753 feet, and as the pyramid is of a square, the other sides must be of the same length. If we imagine the four lateral triangles, mutually inclined, they all meet in a point at the top; we shall then have a true notion of the dimension and figure of this pyramid. The perimeter of each triangle is 2079 feet, and the area of the basis 2772 feet. The whole area of the base contains 430,049 square feet, or 11 English acres of ground, and somewhat more. However, the top does not end in a point, but in a little flat, or square, where some imagine the Egyptian priests made their astronomical observations; but this is denied by others.

Pyrenean Mountains, or Pyrenees, a large chain of mountains, the principal of which are in the kingdom of Spain, which they divide from France; they equal the Alps in height, and extend from the Mediterranean Sea to the Atlantic Ocean, 200 miles in length, and 108 in breadth. They begin near the harbour of Vendres, in Roussillon and run as far as Fontarabia. Near Roussillon, they divide into two principal branches, one of which separates Roussillon from Languedoc, and is called Antipyrenee; and the other, which separates it from Catalonia, is denominated Col de Pertuis. Over them are five passages, but all extremely difficult, and between them several fertile valleys.

Pyrenees, Eastern, a department of France, containing the late province of Roussillon. Although great part of the country is mountainous, it is fertile; producing corn, excellent wines, olives, oranges, and leather of a superior quality. Perpignan is the capital.

Pyrenees, Lower, a department of France, containing the late provinces of Basques and Béarn. Pau is the capital. See Navarre.

Pyrenees, Upper, a department of France, containing the late province of Bigorre. Here are excellent horses and good partridges. The vallies are very fertile; furnishing rye, millet, Spanish corn, and flax. The mountains have mines of lead, iron, and copper, and quarries of slate, marble and jasper. Tarbes is the capital.

Pyrmont, a town of Westphalia, in a county of the same name, subject to the prince of Waldeck, with a castle, the residence of the governor. Quang-ping-fou, a city of China, in the N part of Pe-tcheli, between the provinces of Chang-tong and Ho-nan. It has nine cities of the third class dependant on it; all its plains are well watered by rivers. Among its temples, there is one dedicated to those men, who, as the Chinese pretend, discovered the secret of rendering themselves immortal.

Quang-si, a province of China, bounded on the N by Koei-tcheou and Hou-quang, on the W by Yunnan and the kingdom of Tonquin, on the S by the gulf of Tonquin and the province of Quang-tong, and on the E by the same and Hou-quang. Neither its extent nor commerce is equal to that of the other provinces; however, it is so abundant in rice, that it supplies, for six months in the year, the province of Quang-tong, the inhabitants of which without this assistance could not subsist. The mountains with which it is covered, especially towards the N abound with mines of gold, silver, copper, and tin. A very singular tree grows in this province; instead of pith, it contains a soft pulp, which yields a kind of flour: the bread made of it is said to be exceedingly good. Besides paroquets, hedge-hogs, and the rhinoceros, a prodigious number of wild animals, curious birds and uncommon insects are found here. This province contains 12 villages of the first class, and 80 of the second and third. Quei-ling-sou is the capital

Quang-tong, the most considerable of the southern provinces of China; bounded on the N E by Fo-Kien, on the N by Kiang-si, on the W by Quang-si and the kingdom of Tong-king; the rest is washed by the sea. The country is diversified with plains and mountains, and the land is so fertile, that it produces two crops every year. Trade and the fecundity of the soil supply this province with every thing that can contribute to the pleasures of life: it furnishes gold, precious stones, silk, pearls, eagle-wood, tin, quicksilver, sugar, copper, iron, steel, saltpetre, ebony, and abundance of aromatic woods, which are in great request. All the coasts abound with fish, and furnish great quantities of oysters, crabs and tortoises of an immense size; of their shells the Chinese make several pretty toys. A prodigious number of tame ducks are raised in this province; the particular care and industry employed by the Chinese in breeding them, have multiplied them here exceedingly. They load a great number of small barks with them, and carry them in flocks to feed on the sea-shore, where at low-water these fowls find shrimps, oysters and other kinds of shell-fish. These small fleets generally go in company, and the ducks soon mix together on the shore; but when night approaches, they are collected together by only beating on a hason: they immediately form themselves into different flocks, and each returns to the vessel it belongs to. Although the climate of this province is warm, the air is pure, and the people are robust and healthy. They are very industrious; and it must be allowed, that they possess, in an eminent degree, the talent of imitation: if they are only shewn any of our European works, they execute others like them with the most surprising exactness. This province is divided into ten districts, which contain ten cities of the first class; and eighty-four of the second and third. Canton is the capital; but the viceroy resides at Chao king.

Quarten, a town of Swisserland, near the lake Wallen stadt, 5 miles E of Glarus.

Quebec, a city of N America, capital of Lower Canada, situate at the confluence of the rivers St. Lawrence and St. Charles. It is built on a rock, and is divided into the upper and lower town. The houses in each are of stone, and the fortifications strong, though not regular. The governor resides in a citadel, which covers the town, and is both regular and handsome. The river St. Lawrence here narrows all of a sudden to the breadth of a mile: but from hence to the sea it is four or five leagues broad, and navigable for large men of war. The harbour is safe and commodious, and flanked by two bastions, that are raised 25 feet from the ground, which is the height of the tides at the time of the equinox. This city was erected by the French in 1605. The English reduced it, with all Canada, in 1626; but it was restored in 1632. In 1759, it was again taken by the English, after a battle memorable for the death of general Wolfe, in the arms of victory, and confirmed to them by the peace of 1763. It is 400 miles by the river, from the Atlantic Ocean, and 590 N W of Boston. Lon. 69° 48 W, lat. 46 55 N.

Queda, a kingdom in the peninsula beyond the Ganges, tributary to Siam. The principal town of the same name, is subject to the Dutch. It has a harbour, and is 300 miles N of the city of Malacca. Lon. 100 5 E, lat. 7 5 N.

Quedlingburg, a town of Germany in Upper Saxony, in the principality of Anhalt, with a famous protestant Abbey, whose abbess is a princess of the empire, and whose contingent is one horseman and 10 footmen. Zealand, near Cook's Strait. The country here is not so steep as at Dusky Bay, and the hills near the seaside are in general of an inferior height, but covered with forests equally intricate and impenetrable. The dogs here are of the long haired sort, with pricked ears, and much resemble the common shepherd's cur, but they are very stupid.

Chesapeake bay, and about 18 miles below Chestertown.
Queil-ling-fou, a city of China, capital of the province of Quang-si. It has its name from a flower called quei, which grows on a tree resembling a laurel, and emits such a sweet and agreeable odour, that the whole country is perfumed by it. Queil-ling-fou is situate on the banks of a river, which throws itself into the Ta-ho; but it flows with such rapidity, and amidst so narrow valleys, that it is neither navigable nor of any utility to commerce. This city is large, and the whole of it is built almost after the model of our ancient fortresses; but it is much inferior to the greater part of the capitals of the other provinces. A great number of birds are found in the territories belonging to it, the colours of which are so bright and variegated, that the artists of this country, in order to add to the lustre of their silks, interweave with them some of their feathers, which have a splendour and beauty that cannot be imitated. Queil ling fou has under its jurisdiction two cities of the second class, and seven of the third, and is 180 miles N by W of Canton. Lon. 109° 55'

Quito, an audience of Peru, lying between two chains of the high mountains called the Andes. The lands are generally well cultivated, and there are a great number of towns and villages inhabited by the Spaniards or native Americans. Every village is adorned with a large square, and a church stands on one side of it. The streets are generally straight, and respect the four quarters of the world; and all the roads are laid out in a line, crossing each other, that the aspect of the country has the appearance of a large garden. Although this country is situate on both sides of the equator, yet it is so high, and so near the mountains covered with snow, that the air is very temperate. There are no noxious animals; for the tigers and serpents are below in the forests. Several districts of this country are occupied almost intirely by Indians; and the city of Quito alone contains between 50 and 60,000 of all the different races. This is the only province in Spanish America that can be called a manufacturing country. Hats cotton-stuffs, and coarse woollen cloths, are made here in such quantities, as to be sufficient, not only for the consumption of the province, but to furnish a considerable article for exportation to other parts of Spanish America. This province is under the jurisdiction of the new viceroyalty of St. Fe-de-Bogota, the capital of the New Kingdom of Granada.

Ramsgate, a seaport in Kent, in the Isle of Thanet. An act of parliament was lately passed, by which its harbour was considerably improved, and new piers erected, capable of resisting the strongest winds, or the most raging sea that rolls in from the Downs. These piers have cost immense sums; and although the harbour which they form is still an indifferent one, on account of the accumulation of mud, it has been unquestionably the means of saving a great number of ships, that have been driven in here by stress of weather, when they could make no other port.
Ramsgate has some trade to the Baltic, and is frequented as a bathing-place. It is four miles S of Margate, Ravenna, an ancient and archiepiscopal city of Italy, capital of Romagna, with several colleges, and a great number of religious houses. It had a very flourishing trade, but has greatly suffered since the sea has withdrawn two miles from it. The fortifications are of little importance, and the citadel is gone to ruin. It is most remarkable now for the excellent wine produced in its neighbourhood. Theodoric king of the Goths resided here, and afterwards the exarchs of the Greek emperors.

 In the sixth century, when there were three popes at the same time, one lived at Ravenna. The mausoleum of Theo-

Revel, a strong seaport of Russia, capital of the government of Estonia, with a bishop's see. It is surrounded by high walls and deep ditches, and defended by a castle and good bastions.
The houses are well built, and have very fine gardens. There is a college, with four professors: and, in 1733, two churches were allowed to the protestants. It is become a place of great trade, since the Russians obtained possession of it; and there are two great fairs, in May and September, frequented by English and Dutch merchants.

The Russians took this important place in 1711, most of the inhabitants being carried off by the plague. It is seated Rhe, an island on the W coast of France, in the department of Lower Charente. It is four leagues long and two broad, and very populous. Its products are bitter wine, abundance of salt, excellent brandy, and the liquor called aniseed. It is defended by four forts, and is eight miles W of Rochelle. St. Martin is the capital.

Rheda, a town of Germany in the circle of Westphalia, and county of Lingen, 10 miles N of Lipstadt. Lon. 7 22 E, lat. 51 47 N.

Rheims, an ancient city of France, in the department of Marne, and late province of Champagne, with an archbishop's see, whose archbishop was a duke and peer of France. The inhabitants are computed to be 30,000. The principal church, built before the year 406, is a very beautiful Gothic structure. That of St. Nicaise, is remarkable for its fine architecture. It is about 4 miles in circumference, and contains several fine squares, large streets, well built houses, and magnificent churches. The metropolitan church is considerable for its largeness, fine architecture, and the beauty of its front, being full of figures in relief. It has a mint, an university, and five abbeys, the most famous of which is that of St. Remy, in which the corpse of the archbishop is preserved in a magnificent shrine. The remains of an amphitheatre, a castle, and a triumphal arch, are among the ancient monuments of the Romans. Rheims is long and narrow, and the houses are low. Here are manufactures of flannel, coverlets, and other woollen stuffs: and the gingerbread is famous. Rhein, a celebrated river of Germany, its source in the country of the Grisons in Swisserland, and in the valley of the Alps. It is formed of two principal streams, the Upper or Hinder Rhine, to the E, and the Lower Rhine, (formed by two small streams, called the Middle and the Further Rhine) to the W. The Upper and Lower Rhine, uniting at Reichenau, form a fine river, over which is a curious bridge of one arch, the span of which is 220 feet long. It takes its course N by Coira, and continues on till it forms the lake of Constance in Suabia; thence turning W, it passes by the cities of Constance and Schaffhausen, and watering Basil, runs from thence directly N, dividing Suabia from Alsace. Leaving Alsace and Suabia, the river gives name to the two German circles of the Upper and Lower Rhine, waters many considerable cities and towns, and receives the streams of the Neckar, Main, and Moselle, in its course to the United Provinces. Below Emmerick, in the duchy of Cleves, it divides into two streams. That which bends to the W, and flows by Nimeguen, is called the Waal, but loses that name on its junction with the Maese, at Bommel. Below Worcum, it divides into four principal branches, forming the isles of Ysselmonde, Voorn, and Overflackee: the most northern branch is called the Merwe, and passing by Rotterdam, and Schiedam, is joined by the branch from the S side of Ysselmonde, and enters the German Ocean, below the Briel; the other two branches make their exit at Helvoetsluis and Goree. The other stream which had branched off to the N W below Emmerick, retains its name; but another soon branches off to the N, takes the name of Yssel, and enters the Zuider Zee, below Campen. The old river proceeds W by Rhenen to Wyck-by-Duerstede, when it again divides into two streams: that to the left is called the Leck, and enters the Merwe above Rotterdam. The branch to the right, which retains its name, but is now an inconsiderable stream, passes on to Utrecht, Woerden, and Leyden, and is literally choked up by mountains of sand, near the village of Catwyck.

Rhine, Lower, a circle of Germany, which extends from the circle of Suabia, on the S, to that of Westphalia, on the N. It contains the electorates of Mentz, Treves, and Cologne, and the palatinate of the Rhine.

Rhine, Lower, a department of

R H O

France, containing the late province of Lower Alsace. Strasburg is the capital.

Rhine, Upper, a department of France, containing the late province of Upper Alsace. Colmar is the capital.

Rhin, Upper, a circle of Germany, which includes the territory Hesse-Cassel, Hesse-Darmstadt, Hesse-Rheinfeld, and Hesse-Homburg; the counties of Nassau, Solms, Hanau, Spanheim, Wied, Westerburg, and Waldeck, with the abbeys of Fulda and Hirschfeld, the imperial towns of Francfort, Friedberg, and Wetzlar; the bishoprics of Spire and Worms, and the duchies of Deux-Ponts.

Rhine, Palatinate of the, an electorate of Germany, in the circle of Lower Rhine; bounded on the N by the archbishoprics of Mentz and Treves, on the E by Franconia and Suabia; and on the W and S by France. It is 100 miles in length, and 70 in breadth, and the principal rivers are the Rhine and Neckar. It has suffered more by the wars with France, than all the provinces of Germany put together; for, in the last century, Lewis XIV. ordered the whole country to be laid waste by fire and sword. Heidelberg is the principal town, but Mannheim is the elector's residence. This electorate is also called the Lower Palatinate, to distinguish it from the Upper Palatinate of Bavaria.

Rhinebeck, a post town in Dutchess county, New York; situated on the E side of Hudson river, 29 miles S of the city of Hudson, and 108 N of New York.

Rhode Island, one of the United States of America, bounded on the N and E by the commonwealth of Massachusetts, on the S by the Atlantic, and on the W by Connecticut. These limits comprehend what has been called Rhode Island and Providence plantations. It contains five counties, and 29 townships. It is as healthful as any part of N America, and is principally a country for pasture. Providence and Newport are the chief towns.

Rhode Island, an island of North America, in a state of the same name. It is 13 miles long from N to S, and four broad, and divided into three townships. This island is a noted resort of invalids from the southern climates, being exceedingly pleasant and healthful, and is called with propriety, the Eden of America.

Rhodes, an island of the Mediterranean, on the S side of Natolia, 40 miles long and 15 broad. The air is good, and the soil pretty fertile, but badly cultivated. The principal town of the same name, is an archbishop's see, and has a good harbour, with a narrow entrance between two rocks, on which are two towers to defend the passage. Here, in all probability, stood the famous Colossus, a statue in bronze, 70 cubits high, reckoned one of the seven wonders of the world; it was thrown down by an earthquake; and when the Saracens became masters of this island, in 665, they knocked it to pieces, with which they loaded 900 camels. The knights of Jerusalem took Rhodes from the Saracens in 1309, and kept it till it was taken from them by the Turks, in 1623. It is looked upon as an impregnable fortress, being surrounded by triple walls and double ditches. It is inhabited by Turks and Jews; for the Christians are obliged to live in the suburbs, they not being suffered to be within the walls in the night-time. Lon. 28 25 E, lat. 36 24 N.

Rhonez. See Rozes.

Rhone, a large river of Europe, which rises in Switzerland, from the glacier of Furca, between the two rocky mountains of Glechterberg and Satzberg. Crossing the Vallais, it runs through the lake and city of Geneva, and there receives the river Arve. Four leagues below is a cataract, or prodigious chasm in the rock $\frac{1}{4}$ h of a mile long, but not above three fathoms in breadth where narrowest. After which it widens, and becomes navigable near Seissel; then running S. W. to Lyons, and receiving several other streams, particularly the river Saone, continues its course due S, and passing by Orange, Avignon, and Arles, it falls to the westward of Marseilles into the Mediterranean by three mouths, namely, Gras de Sanze, Sainte Anne, and le Grand Gras. The Rhone, contrary to most other rivers, swells as the days increase; its waters being at the highest when the days are longest, probably owing to the melting of the snow on the Alps.

Rhone, Mouths of the, a department of France, containing part of the late province of Provence. Aix is the capital.

Rhens and Loire, a department of France, including the late provinces of Forez and Lyonois. The capital is Lyons.

Rhayidergow, a town in Radnorshire, with a market on Wednesday. Near it is a cataract of the river Wye. It is 20 miles W N W of New Radnor, and 177 of London. Lon. 3 27 W, lat. 52 17 N.

Rochester, an episcopal city in Kent, with a market on Wednesday and Friday. It is an ancient city, but of little consequence now. Its castle, which once rendered it of great importance, being in ruins. Rochester has, besides the cathedral, three parish churches, and there are some remains of a priory.
The inhabitants are chiefly tradesmen and innkeepers; no sort of manufacture being carried on here. It has two free-schools, and an almshouse for six poor travellers, who are supplied with a supper, a bed, and a breakfast, with Rome, a very ancient city, formerly the mistress of the world, and seat of the Roman empire, lately the residence of the pope, head of the Roman church; none can compare with it in respect to the magnificence of its buildings and antiquities, the number of its monuments and curiosities, and the singularity of its historical events. Before it was plundered by the French in 1799, it was the centre and magazine of all that is exquisite in painting, sculpture, and architecture. It was founded, according to some, 753 years before the birth of Christ, by Romulus the first king. Its form and site have frequently been changed, particularly after the seven principal devastations of it by the ancient Gauls, Vandals, Heruli, East and West Goths, and by the Germans under Charles of Bourbon in 1527, when it was taken and miserably sacked, and the pope being closely besieged in the castle of St. Angelo, was obliged to submit to the conqueror. At present it stands upon 12 hills, but great part of them being washed down in the valleys, the Tarpeian rock, once a terrible precipice, from which malefactors were thrown, is now no more than 20 feet high. The city is surrounded with a wall about 10 Italian miles in circuit; but not half of this space is occupied by houses, as many places where stately structures once stood, are now gardens, fields, meadows, and vineyards.

 According to an account taken by pope Clement XI. in 1714, the number of its inhabitants amounted to 143,000, and are at present computed to amount to 170,000. How far short of what old Rome was in Trajan's time, when the walls of this city were 50 miles in circuit, and the number of its inhabitants 6,800,000! Some of the principal streets are of considerable length, and perfectly straight. That called the Corso is the most frequented. Here the nobility display their equipages during the carnival, and take the air in the evenings in fair weather. The shops on each side are three or four feet higher than the street; and there is a path for the convenience of foot passengers, on a level with the shops. The palaces, of which there are several in this street, range in a line with the houses, having no courts before them.

R O M

 The Strada Felice, and the Strada di Porta Pia, are also very long and noble streets. There are no lamps lighted in the streets at night; and all Rome would be in utter darkness, were it not for the candles which the devotion of individuals sometimes places before the statues of the Virgin: these appear glimmering, at vast intervals, like stars in a cloudy night. The footmen carry dark lanterns behind the carriages of people of the first distinction. This darkness, it may be supposed, is not unfavorable to assignments among the inferior people; and when a carriage with a lantern behind it, accidentally comes near a couple who do not wish to be known, one of them calls out, volti la lanterna, turn the lantern; and is immediately obeyed. Rome exhibits a strange mixture of magnificent and interesting, and of common and beg-garly objects: the former consists of palaces, churches, fountains, and the remains of antiquity; the latter comprehend all the rest of the city. The church of St. Peter, in the opinion of many, surpasses, in size and magnificence, the finest monuments of ancient architecture. It is incrusted without with marble; its length is 730 feet, the breadth 520, and the height from the pavement to the top of the cross, which crowns the cupola, 450. A complete description of this church, and of its statues, basso-relievos, columns, and various other ornaments, would fill volumes. Adjoining to St. Peter's is the Vatican, or winter palace of the pope, with the richest library of the choicest books and manuscripts in the world. The Vatican consists of several thousand rooms and other parts, of which the most admired are its grand staircase, and a charming garden, called by way of eminence Belvidere, having the finest collection of exotics in Europe. The Pantheon is the most perfect of the Roman temples which now remain, and notwithstanding the depredations it has sustained from Goths, Vandals, and popes, is still a beautiful monument of Roman taste.
 The pavilion of the great altar, which stands under the cupola of St. Peter, and the four wreathed pillars of Corinthian brass which support it, were formed out of the spoils of the Pantheon, which, after 1800 years, has still a probability of outliving its proud capacious rival. From the circular form of this temple, it has obtained the name of the Rotundo. Its height is 150 feet, and its breadth nearly the same. There are no windows; the central opening in the dome admitting a sufficiency of light. The rain which falls through this aperture, immediately drains through holes, which perforate a large piece of porphyry, that forms the centre of the pavement. Being converted into a christian temple, the Pantheon, originally erected to the honour of all the gods, is now dedicated to the Virgin, and to all the martyrs and saints. As the Pantheon is the most entire, the Amphitheatre of Vespasian is the most stupendous monument of antiquity in Rome. About one half of the external circuit still remains; from which a pretty exact idea may be formed of the original structure. By a computation of Mr. Byres, it could contain 85,000 spectators. The Campidoglio is an elegant structure, raised on part of the ruins of the ancient capitol. But the antiquities of Rome are too numerous to be minutely described. We shall, therefore, pass over the ancient Forum, now a cow-market; the beautiful Column of Trajan, 120 feet high, on the top of which is the statue of St. Peter, instead of that of Trajan, &c. The church of St. John Lateran, &c. The church of St. John Lateran, the Romans say, is the most ancient of all the churches of Rome, and the mother of all the churches in Christendom. To this church, every new pope constantly goes first, in a magnificent procession, to take possession of the holy see. In Rome, the connoisseur will meet with innumerable paintings by the greatest masters, and with the finest works of sculpture, &c. The castle of St. Angelo serves more to keep the city in awe, than to repel any foreign attack. War was declared against the pope by the French in 1798, in consequence of a tumult, in which their general Duphot was killed. The city was entered by them in February, and they overturned the papal government. They likewise plundered the city of its most valuable monuments of antiquity, its ancient statues and paintings, and levied heavy contributions on the inhabitants. However, in September, 1799, the city was retaken by the allies, and the new French government overthrown. Rome is seated on the Tiber, 810 miles S E of London, 740 S by E of Amsterdam, 410 S S W of Vienna, 600 S E of Paris, 730 E by N of Madrid, and 760 W of Constantinople. Lon. 12 35 E, lat. 41 54 N.

Roschild, a town of Denmark, in the island of Zealand, with a bishop's see, and a university. It was formerly the metropolis of Denmark and the residence of its kings; it stands at a small distance from the bay of Iseford, not far from Copenhagen. In its flourishing state it was of great extent, and comprised within its walls 27 churches and as many convents. Its present circumference is scarcely half an English mile, and it contains only 1620 souls. The houses are of brick, and of a neat appearance. The only remains of its original magnificence are the ruins of a palace and a cathedral, a brick building with two spires in which the kings of Denmark are interred. A treaty of peace was concluded here in 1658. It is seated at the bottom of a small bay, 16 miles W of Copenhagen. Lon. 12 15 E, lat. 55 43 N.

Roscommon, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, 50 miles long and 28 broad; bounded on the E by Longford and W Meath, on the N by Sligo and Leitrim, on the S by Galway, and on the W by Galway and Mayo. Rotterdam, a city of the United Provinces, in Holland, with one of the finest harbours in the Netherlands. It is the most considerable place in Holland, for size, beauty of its buildings and trade, next to Amsterdam.
It is a large and populous city, of a triangular figure, handsomely built of brick, the streets wide and well paved.
Its port is very commodious; for the canals which run through most parts of the town, bring the ships some of 200 or 300 tons, up to the merchant's door; a conveniency for loading and unloading which is not to be found in other places. The great ships go up into the middle of the town by the canal into which the Maese enters by the old head, as it comes out by the new. A stranger upon his first entering this place, is astonished at the beautiful confusion of chimneys intermixed with tops of trees with which the canals are planted, and streamers of vessels; insomuch that he can hardly tell whether it be fleet, city, or forest.

This port is much more frequented by the British merchants than Amsterdam, insomuch that, after a frost, when the sea is open, sometimes 300 sail of British vessels sail out of the harbour at once. There is always a large number of British subjects who reside in this town, and live much in the same manner as in Great Britain.

The reason of the great traffic between this place and England, is because the ships can generally load and unload, and return to England from Rotterdam, before a ship can get clear from Amsterdam, and the Texel. Hence the English merchants find it cheaper and more commodious, after their goods are arrived at Rotterdam, to send them in boats over the canals to Amsterdam. Another great advantage they have here for commerce, is, that the

ROU

Maese is open, and the passage free from ice, much sooner in the spring than in the Y and Zuyder-sea, which leads to Amsterdam. Erasmus was born in this city, and his statue in bronze stands in an open place, at the head of one of the canals; and in a narrow street, leading from the statue to the great church, is the house in which he was born, with an inscription, in front, to his honour. Rotterdam received the French troops, Jan. 23, 1795. It is seated on the Merwe (the most northern branch of the Maese) 13 miles S E Hague, and 30 S S W of Amsterdam. Lon. 4 28 E, lat. 51 56 N.

Lon. 8 44 E, lat. 48 9 N.

Rouen, a city of France, capital of the department of Lower Seine, in the late province of Normandy with an archbishop's see. It is seated on the N side of the Seine. The streets are narrow, crooked, dirty, and consist of wooden houses; notwithstanding which, it is one of the most opulent and important places in France. It is seven miles in circuit including its six suburbs, and contains 70,000 inhabitants. Among the public buildings, the most distinguished are, the Great Hall of the palace, in which the late parliament of Rouen met; the old castle; and the principal church, which has a very handsome front with two steeples, whence there is a fine view of the town; in one of the streets is the great bell, which bears the name of cardinal George d'Amboise, 13 feet high and 11 in diameter. Near this church, which is not the only remarkable one, is the public library. The steeple of the late Benedictines of St. Owen is an elegant Gothic structure. The linens of Rouen, particularly what are called the Siamoise, are much esteemed. They have also manufactures of cloth, and one of oil of vitriol. The suburb of St. Sever, communicates with the city by a bridge of boats, 270 paces long which rises and falls with the tide, and is made to open, so as to admit the passage of ships; it is also paved, and there are ways for foot passengers on each side. Rouen is the birth place of the two Cornilleis, and of Fontenelle. It is 30 miles S W of Amiens, and 70 N W of Paris. Lon. 1 10 E, lat. 49 27 N.

Rovereto, or Rovere, a town of Austria, in the Tyrol, seated on the Adige, at the foot of a mountain, and on the side of a stream, over which is a bridge, defended by two large towers and a strong castle; the French took possession of the town in 1796, after having defeated the Austrians before it, but they were obliged to abandon it soon afterwards. Roxburgh, a village and castle of Scotland, which gives name to a county, situate near the Tiviot, 19 miles S W of Berwick, and 32 S E of Edinburgh. Lon. 2 47 W, lat. 53 46 N.

Roxburghshire, a county of Scotland, formerly called Tiviotdale, is bounded on the E by Northumberland; S E by Dumfriesshire; S S W by Selkirkshire; and N W by Berwickshire. It is fruitful in pasture and corn, especially oats, and abounds with sheep, horses and black cattle. The most considerable of its mountains are Cork-row, from which runs a tract of hills W, dividing Scotland from England, in many places impassable. Here are many ancient seats of the nobility. On its borders are these called the Debatable lands, that were formerly claimed by the borderers of each nation; but judged to the Scots by King James VI. In this shire are great remains of Roman encampments, and a military Roman way. The towns of chief note are Jedburgh, Kelso, Hawick, Melross and Roxburgh. It extends 30 miles in length from E to W and 15 in breadth; and is divided into Tiviotdale, Liddesdale, Eusdale and Eskdale. It has plenty of lime and freestone. Through this country is the new road from Edinburgh to Newcastle. namely, Red Russia, which see; White Russia, which comprehends Lithuania; and Black Russia, which comprehends the governments of Kaluga, Moscow, Tula, Rezan, Volodimir, and Yaroslaf; and hence his imperial Majesty takes the title of emperor of all the Russias. This empire, exclusive of the late acquisitions from the Turks and from Poland, (see Poland) may be compared to a square, whose sides are 2000 miles each. Russia occupies more than a seventh part of the known continent, and nearly the 26th part of the whole globe. Its greatest extent from W to E, viz. from the 39th to the 207 degree of lon. is 168 degrees; and if the islands of the Eastern Ocean be included, it will then be 185. Its greatest extent from N to S, that is, from the 78th to the 50 deg. of lat. is 27 degrees. The greater part of this empire lies in the temperate zone, and a part of it, viz. that which is beyond the 66th deg. of lat. lies in the frigid zone, and the whole surface contains above 2,150,000 square versts. There therefore is not at present, and never has been in any period, an empire, the extent of which could be compared to that of Russia. The seas of Russia are, the Baltic, the White Sea, the Frozen Ocean, the Black Sea, and the Caspian Sea. There are also five large rivers; namely, the Dnieper, Volga, Don, Dwina, and Oly. Its lakes are Ladoga, the largest in Europe, Omega, Tchude-Ilnen, Bielo, Ozero, Allin, Baical, and many others of less consequence, most of them abounding in fish. A country of such vast extent must lie in different climates, and the soil and products must be as different. The most fertile part is near the frontiers of Poland; insomuch that the inhabitants are able to supply their neighbours with corn; the N part is not only more cold, but very marshy, and over-run with forests, inhabited chiefly by wild beasts. Besides domestic animals, there are wild beavers, reindeer, martins, white and black foxes, weasels, ermines, and sables, whose skins make the best furs in the world, as also lynxes. Those that hunt these creatures for their skins, use no fire-arms, for fear of spoiling them. The seas, the lakes, and the rivers, supply the inhabitants with large quantities of fish, part of which they dry. There are vast quantities of sturgeon, and in some places they have melons which weigh

30 pounds, but there were no vines till Peter the Great caused them to be planted. In Russia, are large quantities of cotton and silk, (with which they make all sorts of stuffs) skins, furs, Russia leather, talc, tallow, hemp, Russia cloth, honey, wax, and almost all the merchandise of China, India, Persia, Turkey, and some European countries. This vast empire was divided by the late empress into 41 governments; namely, Petersburg, Olanetz, Wiburg, Revel, Riga, Pskof, Novogorod, Tver, Smolensko, Polotsk, Mohilef, Orel, Kaluga, Moscow, Tula, Rezan, Volodimir, Yaroslaf, Vologda, Archangel, Kostroma, Nishnei-Novogorod, Rasan, Simbirsk, Penza, Tambof, Voronetz, Kursk, Novogorod-Severskoi, Tchernigof, Kiof, Kahrkof, Catharinenslaf, Caucasus, Saratof, Usa, Viatka, Perm, Tobolsk, Kolyvan, and Irkutsk; all which see. The inhabitants in general, are robust, well-shaped, and of pretty good complexion. They are great eaters, and very fond of brandy. They use bathing, but smoke no tobacco, lest the smoke should dishonour the images of the saints, which they have in great veneration; however, they take a great deal of snuff made of the tobacco brought from the Ukraine. They were formerly the most ignorant, brutish people in the world, and many of them are now little better. Formerly no Russians were seen in other countries, and they seldom or never sent ambassadors to foreign courts; but now the gentlemen are more polite, and study the interests of different nations. Their armies are always very numerous. They had no men of war, nor merchant ships before the reign of Peter the Great; but, in the late reign, powerful Russian squadrons appeared, not only in the Baltic, but in the Black Sea, and in the Mediterranean. They have images in their churches; and believe no man sure of salvation in this life, for which reason the priests give a passport to those that are dying, addressed to St. Nicholas, who is desired to entreat St. Peter to open the gates of Heaven, as they have certified that the bearer is a good christian. The church is governed by a patriarch, under whom are the archbishops, and bishops. Every priest is called a pope, and of these there were 4000 in Moscow only. Formerly he was thought a learned man who could read and write : but Peter the Great undertook to introduce the arts and sciences ; and, in 1724, the first university was founded that ever was in Russia ; there is also an academy of sciences at Petersburg, supplied with some of the best professors in Europe. With respect to dress the merchants and commonalty still retain their beards, and regard them with the utmost veneration, notwithstanding the edicts of Peter I. and it is only those depending upon government, in the army and navy, who have yet complied with the custom and the wish of the court, as no person in any place can retain their beards and ancient dress. The clergy only excepted, none can procure any place, or favour from court, upon other conditions than banishing the Asiatic sheep-skin robes. The worn-out veteran retires with a pension, upon the express terms of never again assuming the habit of his fathers. But so zealously attached are the multitude to former manners, and so honourably do they esteem them, that a Russian dressed in his beard and gown, tells you by his looks, that he has not prostituted the memory of his ancestors. The inhabitants in general may be divided into four orders. 1. The nobles and gentry ; 2. The clergy ; 3. The merchants, burghers and other free-men ; 4. Peasants. The three first include the free subjects of the empire, and the latter, the vassals or slaves. The first comprehends the nobles or gentry, who are the sole persons that have a right to possess land in Russia, (the conquered provinces excepted) and who are obliged to furnish recruits in proportion to the extent of their estates. The second are divided into regular and secular, the latter, who may, and ought to be the most useful members of society, are generally the refuse of the people. The dignitaries of the church are chosen from the first ; these are archbishops, and bishops, abbots and priors. The third comprehends that class of men between the nobles and the peasants, who being neither gentlemen nor peasants, follow the arts and sciences, navigation, commerce, or exercise trades. The fourth comprehends the peasants, who are slaves, and may be divided into peasants of the crown, peasants belonging to individuals. The former inhabit the imperial demesnes, and may form the sixth part of peasants in Russia. They are governed by imperial bailiffs, and although subject to great exactions from these petty tyrants, yet they are much more secure of their property than peasants belonging to individuals, who are the private property of the land-holders, as much as implements of agriculture, or herds of cattle ; and the value of an estate is estimated as in Poland, by the number of boors, not by the number of acres. The Russian peasants are in general a large coarse hardy race, and of great bodily strength. Their dress is a round hat or cap with a very high crown, a coarse robe of druggot, (or in the winter, of sheep-skin with the wool turned inwards) reaching below the knee, and bound round their waist by a sash, trowsers of linen, almost as thick as sack-cloth, a woollen or flannel cloth wrapped round the leg instead of stockings ; sandals woven from strips of a plant bark, and fastened by strings of the same materials, which are afterwards twined round the leg, and serve as garters to the woollen or flannel wrappers. In warm weather the peasants frequently wear only a short coarse shirt and trowsers. The dress of the women is the reverse of the men, both in fashion and colour ; every part of it being as short and tight as decency will allow, and very gaudy. It is exactly the same with that of the Highland women in Scotland ; both have the short jacket, the striped petticoat, and the tartan plaid ; and both too, in general, have a napkin rolled about their head. The Russian women are, however, far more elegant and rich in their attire ; nor is gold lace and paint wanting to set off their charms. The young generation are modernizing these antic vestments ; the stiff embroidered napkin is supplanted by one of flowing silk, the jacket and petticoat are of muslin, or other fine stuffs ; and the plaid is exchanged for a silk or satin cloak, in the cold season lined with fur. The better class of females wear velvet boots. The dress of the higher ranks is after the French and English fashion ; and all wear a covering of fur, six months of the year. The sovereign of Russia is absolute. He was formerly called grand duke, which is now the title of the heir apparent ; he afterwards assumed the title of czar, which the natives pronounce tzar, or zoar, a of peasants in Russia. They are ruled by imperial bailiffs, and are subject to great exactions from petty tyrants, yet they are secure of their property. The lands belonging to individuals, are the private property of the owners, as much as implements of husbandry, or herds of cattle; and the value of an estate is estimated as in England, by the number of boors, not by the number of acres. The Russian dress is in general a large coarse woollen coat, and of great bodily strength. The cap is a round hat or cap with a high crown, a coarse robe of sheep-wool (or in the winter, of sheep-wool turned inward) below the knee, and bound round the waist by a sash, trowsers almost as thick as sack-cloth, or flannel cloth wrapped round the leg instead of stockings; woven from strips of a pliant material fastened by strings of the same material, which are afterwards bound round the leg, and serve as a woollen or flannel wrap- ping in warm weather the peasants only wear only a short coarse trowsers. The dress of the women is the reverse of the men, both in colour and every part of it is short and tight as decency requires, and very gaudy. It is the same with that of the High-landers in Scotland; both have a jacket, the striped petticoat, tartan plaid; and both too, they have a napkin rolled about the waist. The Russian women are, far more elegant and rich in dress; nor is gold lace and paint to set off their charms. The younger generation are modernizing these ornaments; the stiff embroidered petticoat is supplanted by one of flowing ruffles; the jacket and petticoat are of other fine stuffs; and the cold season lined with fur. The dress of the higher ranks is the French and English fashion; they wear a covering of fur, six months of the year. The sovereign is absolute. He was formerly called czar and duke, which is now the title he is apparent; he afterwards assumed the title of czar, which the Russians pronounce tsar, or zair, a corruption of Cesar, emperor; from some fancied relation to the Roman emperors; on account of which they also bear the eagle as a symbol of their empire. The first who bore the title of czar, was Basil, son of Basilides, who freed his country from its subjection to the Tartars, about the year 1470. In 1782, the population of Russia and the conquered provinces was reckoned at twenty-seven million souls: the revenue 7,000,000*l.* and the army amounted to 200,000. In 1778, her navy consisted of 28 ships of the line, 15 frigates, and 109 galleys. Perhaps no country ever exhibited, in so short a time, the wonders that may be effected by the genius and exertions of one man. Much has been written concerning the great civilization which Peter I. introduced into this country; that he obliged them to relinquish their beards and their national dress; that he naturalized the arts and sciences; that he disciplined his army, and created a navy; and that he made a total change throughout each part of his extensive empire. We may readily allow the truth of this eulogium with respect to his improvements in the discipline of his army, and the creation of a navy, for these were objects within the reach of the persevering genius of a despotic sovereign; but the pompous accounts of the total change which he effected in the national manners, seem to have been the mere echoes of foreigners, who have never visited the country, and who have collected the history of Peter from the most partial information. The bulk of the people still continue in the grossest barbarism. The principal nobles indeed are perfectly civilized, and as refined in their entertainments, mode of living, and social intercourse, as those of other European countries. But there is a wide difference between polishing a nation, and polishing a few individuals. The merchants and peasants still universally retain their original manners, and resemble, in their general mode of living, the inhabitants of the smallest village. The greatest part of the peasants, who form the bulk of the nation, are still almost as deficient in the arts as they were before Peter's time, although the sciences have flourished in the capital. But the civilization of a numerous and widely dispersed people cannot be the work of a moment, and can only be effected by a gradual and almost insensible progress. The national improvements however, made by Peter the Great, have been continued since his time, and Russia now holds a rank among the nations of Europe, of which human foresight, at the commencement of the eighteenth century, could have formed no conception, and perhaps it is not too much to say, that the empire of Russia, though the people are but just emerging from barbarism, is at this day the most powerful in Europe. Petersburg is the capital of the whole empire.

It contained in 2125 inhabitants in 1800.

Rutlandshire, the smallest county in England, encircled by the counties of Lincoln, Leicester, and Northampton, seeming as if it were cut out of the two former. It is of a roundish figure, in length fifteen miles, and in breadth ten. It is supposed to have received its name from the red colour of the soil, which, in some parts, is a sort of ruddle, staining the fleeces of the sheep. Rutland is blest with a pure air and a fertile soil, and is beautifully varied in its surface with gentle swells and depressions. It abounds in clear soft springs, gushing from the sides of the hills. Its products are chiefly corn and Salisbury, or New Sarum, an episcopal city in Wiltshire, of which it is the capital with a market on Tuesday and Saturday. It is a well built town situated in a chalky soil, on the confluence of the Bourn, Nadder, Willey, and Avon, by whose waters it is almost surrounded, and is rendered particularly clean by a small stream flowing through every street. It has a fine cathedral, which was finished in 1258, and consecrated in presence of Henry III. and many of the nobility and prelates. This fabric, which cost above 26,000*l.* is the most elegant and regular Gothic structure in the kingdom, being built in form of a lantern, with its spire of free-stone in the middle, the loftiest in England. The town-hall is a handsome building, and stands in a spacious market place. Salisbury is governed by a mayor, sends two members to parliament, and has manufactures of Cloths, linseys, hardware, and cutlery. It is 21 miles N E of Southampton, and 23 W by S of London. Lon. 1° 52' W, lat. 51° 3' N.

Salisbury-Plain, in the county of Wilts, extends 25 miles E to Winchester, and 28 W to Weymouth: and in some places is from 35 to 40 in breadth. There are so many cross roads in it, and so few houses to take directions from, that the late earl of Pembroke's father planted a tree at the end of every mile, from hence to Shaftesbury, for the traveller's guide. That part of it about the city is a chalky down, like East Kent. The other parts are noted for feeding numerous flocks of sheep, some of which contain from 3000 to 5000 each; and several private farmers hereabouts have two or three such flocks. By folding the sheep upon the lands here, after they are turned up with the plough, they become abundantly fruitful, and bear very good wheat, as well as rye and barley. On this plain, besides the famous monument of Stonehenge, six miles N of the city, there are the traces of many old Roman and British camps, and other remains of the battles, fortifications, sepulchres, &c. of the ancient inhabitants of this kingdom.

Salisbury Craig, a hill on the E side of the city of Edinburg. It is remarkable for a great precipice of solid rock, about one mile long, and in some parts, 100 feet high; which passes with some regularity along its brow.

Sallee, an ancient town of the kingdom of Fez, with an harbour and several forts. Its harbour is one of the best in the country, and yet, on account of a bar that lies across it, ships of the smallest draught are forced to unload and take out their guns, before they can get into it. There are docks to build ships, but they are seldom used, for want of skill and materials. It is divided into the Old and New Town, by the river Guero; and has long been famous for its pirates, which make prizes of all Christian ships that come in their way, except there is a treaty to the contrary. It is 100 miles W of Fez, and 150 S of Gibraltar. Lon. 6° 31' W, lat. 34° 0' N.

Samoeyedes, once a numerous and powerful nation of Tartary. They inhabit the coasts of the Frozen Sea, from the 65 degree of N lat. to the sea shore. The countries they occupy are marshy and full of rocks, so that from the 67 degree of lat. there are no trees of any kind; and the cold that prevain these climates prevents vegetation to such a point, that even the little brush wood, here and there to be seen, dwindles away to nothing as you advance towards the north. In stature the Sa-moyedes are scarcely of a middling height; it being rare to meet with a man of more than five feet, though it must at the same time be confessed, that the shortest, who are about four feet, are equally scarce. They seem all of a heap; have short legs, small neck, a large head, flat nose and face, with the lower part of the face projecting outwards; they have large mouths and ears, little black eyes, but wide eyelids, small lips, and little feet. Their winter huts are made half way in the ground, like those of the Ostiaks, and are seldom more than two or three by the side of one another. Poles placed so as to lean against each other, and covered with the skins of reindeers, or bark of birch, make the whole of their composition. In summer they travel from lake to lake for the purpose of fishing; and wherever they stop for a time, there they build temporary hovels upon the ground. Hunting, fishing, and tending their rein-deer, make the whole of their employment.
 The two former are the common business of all, as furnishing them with the principal part of their subsistence.
 Like all savage nations they treat their wives with the utmost contempt, and often with a severity absolutely inhuman.

same name. It is 87 miles in circumference. Lon. 139 30 E, lat. 38 35 N.

Sandomir, a strong town of Little Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, with a castle, seated on a hill, on the Vistula, 75 miles E of Cracow, and 112 S of Warsaw. Lon. 22 0 E, lat. 50 21 N.

Sandugal, a small town of Portugal, in the province of Beira, seated on the Coa, 12 miles S S E of Guarda.

Sandwilet, a town of Brabant, seated on the river Scheldt, 12 miles N W of Antwerp. Lon. 1 12 E, lat. 51 22 N.

Sandwich, a town in Kent, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is one of the cinque ports, governed by a mayor and jurats, and sends two members to parliament. It has three churches, and about 1500 houses, most of them built with wood, others with brick and flints, and 6,000 inhabitants. It is walled round, and fortified with ditches and ramparts, but the walls are much decayed, though four of the gates are yet standing. It had once a considerable trade, but is now much decayed, the river Stour, on which it is seated, being so choked up with sand, as to admit only small vessels. It is 13 miles E of Canterbury, and 67 E by S of London. Lon. 1 25 E, lat. 51 19 N.

Sandwich, a port town in Barnstable county, Massachusetts; situated on Barnstable Bay, 12 miles W of Barnstable, 18 N E of Falmouth, and 64 S E of Boston, containing 2000 inhabitants.

Sandwich, a town of New-Hampshire, in Strafford county, a few miles W of Winnipiokee lake, with 1434 inhabitants.

Sandwich Islands, a group of islands in the S Sea, among the last discoveries of captain Cook, who so named them, in honour of the earl of Sandwich, under whose administration these discoveries were made. They consist of eleven islands, extending in lat. from 18 54 to 22 15 N. and in lon. from 150 54 to 160 24 W. They are called by the natives, Owhyhee, Mowee, Ranai, Morotoi, Tahoorowa, Woahoo, Atooi, Neehceehow, Oreehoua, Morotinne, and Tahoora, all inhabited excepting the two last. An account of all the inhabited islands will be found in their proper places in this work. The climate of these islands differs very little from that of the West Indies in the same latitude, though perhaps more temperate; and there are no traces of those violent winds and hurricanes which render the stormy months in the West Indies so dreadful. There is also more rain at the Sandwich Isles, where the mountainous parts being generally enveloped in a cloud, successive showers fall in the inland parts, with fine weather, and a clear sky, on the sea shore. Hence it is, that few of those inconveniences, to which many tropical countries are subject, either from heat or moisture, are experienced here. The winds, in the winter months, are generally from E S E to N E. The vegetable productions are nearly the same as those of the other islands in this ocean; but the taro root is here of a superior quality. The bread-fruit trees thrive not in such abundance as in the rich plains of Otaheite, but produce double the quantity of fruit. The sugar-canes are of a very unusual size, some of them measuring eleven inches and a quarter in circumference, and having 14 feet eatable. There is also a root of a brown colour, shaped like a yam, and from six to ten pounds in weight, the juice of which is very sweet, of a pleasant taste, and is an excellent substitute for sugar. The quadrupeds are confined to the three usual sorts, hogs, dogs, and rats. The fowls are also of the common sort; and the birds are beautiful and numerous, though not various. Goats, pigs, and European seeds, were left by captain Cook; but the possession of the goats soon gave rise to a contest between two districts, in which the breed was entirely destroyed. The inhabitants are undoubtedly of the same race that possesses the islands south of the equator; and in their persons, language, customs, and manners, approach nearer to the New Zealanders, than to their less distant neighbours, either of the Society or Friendly islands. They are in general above the middle size, and well made; they walk very gracefully, run nimbly, and are capable of bearing very great fatigue. Many of both sexes have fine open countenances, and the women in particular have good eyes and teeth, with a sweetness and sensibility of look that render them very engaging. There is one peculiarity, characteristic of every part of this great nation, that even in the handsomest

There is also a root of a yellow colour, shaped like a yam, and weighing six to ten pounds in weight, the taste of which is very sweet, of a pleasant odour, and is an excellent substitute for sugar. The quadrupeds are divided into the three usual sorts, hogs, dogs, and rats. The fowls are also of the common sort; and the birds are numerous, and the European animals, such as goats, pigs, and sheep, were left by captain Cook; and the possession of the goats soon gave rise to a contest between two divisions in which the breed was entirely destroyed. faces there is a fulness of the nostril, without any flatness or spreading of the nose. They suffer their beards to grow, and wear their hair after various fashions. The dress of both men and women nearly resembles those of New Zealand, and both sexes wear necklaces of small variegated shells. Tattooing the body is practised by every colony of this nation. The hands and arms of the women are also very neatly marked, and they have the singular custom of tattooing the tip of the tongue. Like the New Zealanders, they have adopted the method of living in villages, containing from 100 to 200 houses built pretty closely together, without any order, and having a winding path between them. They are generally flanked towards the sea with detached walls, which are meant both for shelter and defence. These walls consist of loose stones, and the inhabitants are very dexterous in shifting them suddenly to such places as the direction of the attack may require. In the sides of the hills or surrounding eminences, they have also little holes or caves, the entrance to which is also secured by a fence of the same kind. They serve for places of retreat in cases of extremity, and may be defended by a single person against several assailants. Their houses are of different sizes, some of them being large and commodious, from 40 to 50 feet long, and from 20 to 30 broad; while others are mere hovels. The food of the lower class consists principally of fish and vegetables, to which the people of higher rank add the flesh of dogs and hogs. The manner of spending their time admits of little variety. They rise with the sun, and, after enjoying the cool of the evening, retire to rest a few hours after sun set. The making of canoes, mats, &c. forms the occupations of the men; the women are employed in manufacturing cloth, and the servants are principally engaged in the plantations and fishing. Their idle hours are filled up with various amusements, such as dancing, boxing, wrestling, &c. Their agriculture and navigation bear a great resemblance to those of the South Sea Islands. Their plantations, which are spread over the whole sea coast, consist of the taro, or eddy root, and sweet potatoes, with plants of the cloth tree set in rows. The bottoms of their canoes are of a single piece of wood, hollowed out to the thickness of an inch, and brought to a point at each end. The sides consist of three boards, each about an inch thick, neatly fitted and lashed to the bottom part. Some of their double canoes measure 70 feet in length, three and a half in depth, and 12 in breadth. Their cordage, fish-hooks and fishing tackle, differ but little from those of the other islands. Among their arts must not be forgotten that of making salt, which they have in great abundance and of a good quality. Their instruments of war are spears, daggers, clubs, and slings; and for defensive armour, they wear strong mats which are not easily penetrated by such weapons as theirs. As the islands are not united under one sovereign, wars are frequent among them, which, no doubt, contribute greatly to reduce the number of inhabitants, which, according to the proportion assigned to each island does not exceed 400,000.—The same system of subordination prevails here as at the other islands, the same absolute authority on the part of the chiefs, and the same unresisting submission on the part of the people. The government is likewise monarchical and hereditary. At Owhyhee there is a regular society of priests living by themselves, and distinct in all respects from the rest of the people. Human sacrifices are here frequent; not only at the commencement of a war, or any signal enterprise, but the death of every considerable chief calls for a repetition of these horrid rites. Notwithstanding the irreparable loss in the death of captain Cook, who was here murdered through sudden resentment and violence, they are acknowledged to be of the most mild and affectionate disposition. They live in the utmost harmony and friendship with each other; and in hospitality to strangers they are not exceeded even by the inhabitants of the Friendly Islands. Their natural capacity seems in no respect below the common standard of mankind; and their improvements in agriculture, and the perfection of their manufactures, are certainly adequate to the circumstances of their situation, and the natural advantages which they enjoy.

Sandwich Land, a barren and desolate country in the southern Ocean. This is the greatest S latitude ever yet explored, and the most southern part that was seen lies in lon. 27 45 W, lat. 59 34 S.

Sandy Hook, a small island of the United States, near the coast of New Jersey.

Sanguhar, a borough of Dumfriesshire, Scotland; with a ruined castle; a coal trade, and a manufacture of worsted mittens and stockings. It is seated on the small river Nith, 24 miles N of Dumfries. Lon. 3 36 W, lat. 55 30 N.

Santa Clara, an island of South America, in the S Pacific Ocean, and in the bay of Guyaquil, 90 miles W of Guyaquil. Lon. 82 37 W, lat. 2 18 S.

Santa Cruz, a seaport on the E side of Teneriff, on a fine bay of the same name, defended by many small batteries, and a strong fort. It has a well built pier, and an excellent quay, on which is a handsome mall, shaded by several rows of trees. The town is irregularly built; the principal street is broad, and has more the appearance of a square than a street: at the upper end, is the governor's house, and at the lower a square monument, commemorating the appearance of Nuestra Señora (Our Lady) to the Guanches, the original inhabitants of the island. Lon. 16 26 W, lat. 28 27 N.

Santa Cruz, a seaport of Africa, on the coast of Morocco, with a fort. The Moors took it from the Portuguese in 1536. It is seated at the extremity of Mount Atlas, on Cape Aguer. Lon. 10 7 W, lat. 30 58 N.

Santa Cruz, one of the Caribbee Islands. Lon. 64 35 W, lat. 17 45 N.

Santa Cruz, an island in the S Pacific Ocean, one of the most considerable of those of Solomon, being 250 miles in circumference. Lon. 130 0 W, lat. 10 21 S.

Santa Cruz, a seaport on the N side of the island of Cuba, in the West Indies, 60 miles E of Havannah. Lon. 81 10 W, lat. 23 10 N.

Santa Cruz-de-la-Sierra, a town of South America, in Peru, and capital of a government of that name, in the audience of Los-Charcos, with a bishop's see. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, in a country abounding in good fruits, on the river Guapy, 300 miles E of Plata. Lon. 59 55 W, lat. 19 46 S.

Santa Fe, the capital of New Mexico, in N America, seated among mountains, near the Rio-del-Norte, 950 miles N of Mexico. Lon. 106 35 W, lat. 35 32 N.

Santa-Fé-de-Bogota, a town of South America, and the capital of New Granada, with an archbishop's see and a university. It is the seat of a new vice-royalty established in the present century. It is seated on the river Magdalena, in a country abounding in corn and fruit, with mines of silver in the mountains, 360 miles S of Carthagena. Lon. 73 5 W, lat. 3 58 N.

Santarem, a town of Portugal, in Estremadura, seated on a mountain, near the river Tajo, in a country fertile in wheat, wine, and oil. It was taken from the Moors in 1447, and is 55 miles N E of Lisbon. Lon. 8 25 W, lat. 39 2 N.

Santen, a town of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, and dutchy of Cleves. It has a handsome church belonging to the papists, wherein is an image of the Virgin, which, they pretend, performs a great many miracles. It is seated on the Rhine, 15 miles E of Cleves. Lon. 6 25 E, lat. 51 50 N.

Santillana, a seaport of Spain, in Asturias de Santillana, of which it is the capital; seated on the Bay of Biscay, 50 miles E of Oviedo, and 200 W of Madrid. Lon. 4 32 W, lat. 43 34 N.

Santarini, an island of the Archipelago, to the N of Candia, and to the N of Nio. It is eight miles in length, and nearly as much in breadth; and no it are three or four other small islands each of which bears evident marks of volcanic origin, being all covered with pumice stone. It produces plenty of barley, cotton, and wine, in which, the cotton manufactures, its trade consists. Fruit is scarce, except figs, it has neither oil nor wood. Sapienza, three small islands, and a cape, near the S coast of the Morca. The largest island was anciently named Sphacteria. The pirates of Barbary conceal themselves behind it, to surprise vessels which come from the gulf of Venice, or the coast of Sicily. Lon. 21 35 E, lat. 36 50 N.

Saracens, a people celebrated some centuries ago, who came from the deserts of Arabia: Sarac in their language signifying a desert. They were the first disciples of Mahomet, and within 40 years after his death, conquered a great part of Asia, Africa, and Europe. They kept possession of Spain several hundred years, till 1511, when they were expelled. They maintained a war in the Holy Land, a long time, against the Western Christians, and at length drove them out. There are now no people known by this name, for the descendants of those who conquered Spain are called Moors.

Saragossa, a city of Spain, in Arragon, with an archbishop's see, a university, and a court of inquisition. It is said to have been built by the Phoenicians; and the Romans sent a colony hither in the reign of Augustus, whence it had the name of Cæsar Augustus, which by corruption has been changed into Saragossa. It is adorned with many magnificent buildings, and there are 17 large churches, and 14 handsome monasteries, besides others less considerable. The river Ebro runs through the city, dividing it into two parts; and on its banks is a handsome quay, which serves for a public walk. The Holy street is the largest, and so broad, it may be taken for a square; and here they have their bull-fights. The cathedral is a spacious Gothic building; but the finest church is that of Nuestra Senora del Pilar, and a place of the greatest devotion in Spain. They tell us, that the Virgin, while yet living, appeared to St. James, who was preaching the gospel, and left him her image, with a handsome pillar of jasper, still shown in this church, which they pretend is the first in the world built to her honour. This image stands on a marble pillar, with a little Jesus in her arms, illuminated by 50 lamps, balustrades and chandeliers of massy silver. The ornaments of this image are the richest that can be imagined, her crown being full of jewels of an inestimable price, and scarcely any thing is to be seen but gold and jewels; and a vast number of people come in pilgrimage hither. The town-house is a sumptuous structure; in the hall are the pictures of all the kings of Arragon, and in the corner of it St. George on horseback, with a dragon of white marble under him. Saragossa is seated in a large plain, where the Ebro receives two other rivers; and over it are two bridges, one of stone and the other of wood, which last has been thought the most beautiful in Europe. A victory was obtained here over the French and Spaniards in 1710, but it was abandoned by the allies soon after. It is 137 miles W of Barcelona, and 150 N E of Madrid. Lon. 0 28 W, lat. 41 53 N.

Saratof, a government of Russia, formerly a province of Astracan. It contains 11 districts, of which that of the same name is the principal.

Saratof, a town of Russia, capital of the government of the same name. It is seated on the side of a mountain, near the river Volga, 220 miles S of Kasan, and 300 N W of Astracan. Lon. 49 25 E, lat. 52 4 N.

Saratoga Springs, a post town in Saratoga county, New York. These waters are 10 miles N of Balltown springs, 25 N of Skenectady, and 41 N by W of Albany. They are esteemed salutary in gravelly complaints, chronic rheumatism, general debility, and various other diseases that "flesh is heir to," and are therefore much frequented.

Sarbourg, a town of Germany, in the electorate of Treves, seated on the Sare, eight miles S of Treves. Lon. 5 40 E, lat. 49 37 N.

Sarbourg, a town of France, in the department of Meurthe, and late province of Lorraine, seated on the Sare. Lon. 7 9 E, lat. 48 46 N.

Sarbruck, a town of France, in the department of Moselle and late province of Lorraine, seated on the Sare, 14 miles E S E of Sarlouis, and 40 E by N of Metz. Lon. 7 2 E, lat. 49 14 N.

Sardam, a seaport of N Holland, where there are vast magazines of timber for building ships, and naval stores, with a great number of shipwrights; Peter the Great resided in this town while he worked as a shipwright and his hut is still to be seen. Sardam is seated on the Wye, seven miles N W of Amsterdam. Lon. 4 45 E, lat. 52 28 N.

Sarlinia, an island of the Mediterranean, 142 miles from N to S, and 80 from E to W. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, oranges, citrons, and olives. On the coast is a fishery for anchovies, and coral, of which large quantities are sent to Genoa and Leghorn. Bees and sheep are numerous, as well as horses, which are good for labour and the road. They are fed in the little islands about it, which abound in game; and in that of Asmaria are a great number of turtles. The air is very unhealthy, from the marshy land. Here are mines of silver, lead, sulphur, and alum; and they make a good deal of salt. This island has undergone various revolutions: in 1708 it was taken by the English for the Emperor Charles VI.; and in 1720, ceded to the duke of Savoy, as an equivalent for that of Sicily, and erected into a kingdom; but his Sardinian majesty keeps his court at Turin, the capital of his Piedmontese territories. He has a viceroy at Cagliari, the capital of this island.

Sardo, a town of Turkey in Asia, in Natolia. It was formerly called Sardis, and was the capital of Lydia, under the famous king Croesus. It was one of the seven churches of Asia, celebrated in the book of Revelation. It now contains only a few wretched huts. However, here is a large caravansery, where there are handsome lodgings for travellers, it being in the great road from Smyrna to Aleppo; and the Turks have a mosque formerly a christian church. The inhabitants are now almost all shepherds, who feed their flocks in the neighbouring plains. There are also a few Christians, who employ themselves in gardening, but they have neither church nor priest. It is 70 miles E of Smyrna. Lon. 28 30 E, lat. 28 44 N.

Sare, a river which rises at Salm, in France, runs N into Germany, and falls into the Moselle, a little above Treves.

Sarepta, Colony of, a flourishing colony of Moravian brethren, seated on the banks of the little river Sarpa, to which the founders have given the name of Sarepta, borrowed from the sacred writers. The beginning of this settlement is dated in 1765, and in the same year the most distinguished privileges were granted it by the Imperial Court. The foundation was laid by five of the brethren, deputed to make choice of a spot of ground proper for a colony, and to mark out the site of the chief house; since which time it has been augmented every year by families of the Unitas Fratrum, who have come voluntarily to assemble in this place in quality of colonists. They amounted in 1773 to 250 persons of both sexes, and it is annually increasing by new comers. The chief house is not yet entirely finished, at least according to the intended plan; but there are a considerable number of dwelling houses already extremely well built, partly of timber, and partly of carpentry and brick.

Sargans, a town of Switzerland, capital of a county of the same name, in the canton of Zurich, with a castle on a rock, where Andrew Doria, was defeated by Barbarossa. It is seated on the top of a hill, and near it are mineral springs, good for various diseases.

Sargel, a large and ancient seaport of the kingdom of Morocco, and province of Tremesen, with a castle, seated on the seacoast, 25 miles S S W of Algiers. Lon. 2 15 E, lat. 36 30 N.

Sargumine, a town of France, in the department of Moselle, seated on the Sare, nine miles from Sarback. Lon. 7 6 E, lat. 49 8 N.

Sari, an ancient town of Persia, in Mesanderan, 20 miles S W of Ferabad.

Sark, a little island belonging to Great Britain on the coast of Normandy, situated between Guernsey and Jersey.

Sark, a river of Scotland, which rises in the E part of Dumfriesshire, and for many miles forms the boundary with England.

Sarlat, formerly an episcopal town of France, in the department of Dordogne, and late province of Perigord. It is a poor place, seated in a valley, surrounded by mountains, 27 miles S E of Perigueux, and 87 E by N of Bordeaux. Lon. 1 19 E, lat. 44 5 N.

Savannah, a river of N America, which forms a part of the divisional line that separates the state of Georgia from that of S Carolina. Its course is nearly from N W to S E. It is formed principally of two branches, which spring from the mountains. It is navigable for large vessels up to Savannah, and for boats of 100 feet keel as far as Augusta. It falls into the ocean at Tybee Bar, in lat. 31 57 N, where it has 16 feet water at half tide.

Savannah, the largest town in Georgia, and formerly the seat of government. It is situated on the S W of Savannah river, in Chatham county, in lat. 32° 5' N, and lon. 81° 24' W, and about 15 miles from the ocean. The town is accounted healthy for so hot a climate, being seated on a bluff in a bend of the river, and elevated considerably above the surrounding plantations. Vessels of large burden can moor close to the town; but from its vicinity to the ocean they are often exposed to tremendous floods. The inhabitants enumerated in 1800, were 5146, of whom 2367 were slaves. The trade is great, and increases rapidly. In 1803 the exports amounted to $2,370,875, which almost doubled those of the ancient State of Connecticut. Here is a bank of discount and deposit. The town is 115 miles S W of Charleston (South Carolina,) 100 S E of Louisville, and 653 S by W of Washington.

Savona, an episcopal town of Italy, in the territory of Genoa. It is a place of great strength, has two castles, and several fine churches. The Genoese, fearing that it would hurt their trade, ruined the harbour, and rendered it unfit for large vessels. It was taken by the king of Sardinia in 1746, restored in 1748, and taken by the French in 1793. The surrounding country is well cultivated, and abounds in silks and all sorts of fruits. It is seated on the Mediterranean, 20 miles S W of Genoa. Lon. 8 20 E, lat. 44 18 N.

Savoniers, a town of France, in the department of Indre and Loire, and late province of Touraine, five miles from Tours. Near it are caverns, famous for their petrifications.

Savoie, a duchy of Europe, between France and Italy, 83 miles long and 67 broad; bounded on the N by the lake of Geneva, which separates it from Switzerland; on the E by the Alps, which divides it from Piedmont and Vallais; on the W by the Rhone, which parts it from Bresse; and on the S by Dauphiny and Piedmont. The air is cold on account of high mountains, which are almost always covered with snow; but the soil is pretty fertile. The mountains which are not covered with snow in winter, abound with pastures that feed a vast number of cattle. There are also stags, fallow deer, roebucks, wild boars, bears, marmots, white hares, red and gray partridges, woodcocks, and pheasants. The lakes are full of fish, and the principal rivers are the Isere, Arc, and Arve. This country was subdued in 1792 by the French, and the National convention decreed that it should constitute the 84th department of France, by the name of Mont Blanc. Chamberry is the capital.

Scarborough, a seaport and borough, in the N riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Thursday. It is seated on a steep rock, near which are such craggy cliffs that it is almost inaccessible on every side. On the top of this rock, is a large green plain, with two wells of fresh water springing out of the rock. It has of late been greatly frequented on account of its mineral waters, called the Scarborough Spa, and also for sea-bathing; on which account it is much mended in the number and beauty of its buildings. The spring was under the cliff, part of which fell down in 1737, and the water was lost; but in clearing away the ruins in order to rebuild the wharf, it was recovered to the great joy of the town. The waters of Scarborough are chalybeate and purging. Here are assemblies and balls in the same manner as at Tunbridge. Scarborough sends two members to parliament, has a good harbour, and possesses a considerable trade, and is much engaged in the fisheries. It is 36 miles N E of York, and 237 N of London. Schaffhausen, the smallest canton of Switzerland, bounded on the N and W by Suabia, on the E by the canton of Zuric and the bishopric of Constance, and on the S by the same and Thurgaw.

It is but five leagues in length and three in breadth, and contains 30,000 inhabitants. It produces all the necessaries, as wine, fish, wood, flax, horses, sheep, wool, black cattle, and deer. Before the invasion of Switzerland by the French, who completely overturned the ancient and long established government of the Swiss cantons, the revenues of this state were not very considerable, the salary of the burgomaster only amounting to 150*l*. a year. The clergy were paid by the state, but their revenues were too scanty for their maintenance. Sumptuary laws were in force here, as well as in most parts of Swisserland; and no dancing was allowed except upon particular occasions. The principal article of trade is wine, the country abounding in vineyards; and as the canton affords but little corn, it is procured from Suabia in exchange for wine.

Schaffhausen, a town of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name.
It is seated on the Rhine, and owes its origin to the interruption of the navigation of that river by the cata-tract at Lauffen; huts being at first constructed, for the conveniency of unloading the merchandise from the boats, by degrees increased to a large town.

Though a frontier town, it has no garrison, and the fortifications are weak; but it lately had a famous wooden bridge over the Rhine, which was burnt by the French in 1779, being defeated by the Austrians, and obliged to evacuate Schaffhausen. This river being extremely rapid here, had destroyed several stone bridges of the strongest construction, when Ulric Gruben-man, a carpenter, offered to throw a wooden bridge, of a single arch, over the river, which is near 400 feet wide.

The magistrates, however, required that it should consist of two arches, and that he should, for that purpose, employ the middle pier of the old bridge.

He did so; but contrived to leave it a matter of doubt, whether the bridge was supported by the middle pier. The sides and top of it were covered; and it was a kind of hanging bridge; the road which is almost level, not being carried, as usual, over the top of the arch, but let into the middle of it, and there suspended. Schaffhausen contains about 6000 inhabitants, and is 22 miles N by E of Zurich, and 39 E of Bassil. Lon. 3 41 E, lat. 47 39 N.

Schalholt, an episcopal town of Ice-

Scheldt, a considerable river of the Netherlands, which rises in France, in the late province of Picardy. It passes through Flanders, and divides into two branches below Fort Lillo, and both forming several islands, enter the German Ocean. In 1647, Philip IV. of Spain acknowledged the independence of the Seven United provinces, and ceded to them the sovereignty of the Scheldt; stipulating, moreover, that no large ship should go directly to Antwerp, but should unload its cargo in Holland. In 1792, when the French took Antwerp, they insisted upon opening the navigation of this river, on the plea that all rivers were free, and that the consequent right of navigating it could not be ceded by any treaty whatever. This, with their invasion of Holland, drew that country and Great Britain into the general coalition against them, at the commencement of 1793.

Schilta, a strong town of Upper Hungary, in the county of Neitra, seated on the river Waag.

Schintznach, a town of Switzerland, in Bern, remarkable for its agreeable position on the Aar, and its waters, which flow warm from a rock. Near it, on a lofty eminence, are the ruins of the famous castle of Hapsburg.

Schiras, a famous city of Persia, in Farsistan, and the capital of all Persia. It is three miles in length, but not so much in breadth; and is seated at the end of a spacious plain, surrounded by high hills, under one of which the town stands. The houses are built of bricks dried in the sun, the roofs are flat and terraced. There are 15 handsome mosques, tiled with stones of a bluish green colour, and lined within with black polished marble. There are many large and beautiful gardens, surrounded by walls 14 feet high, and four thick, containing various kinds of fine trees, with fruits almost of every kind. The wines of Schiras are not only the best in Persia, but some think, in the whole world. The women are much addicted to gallantry, Schwarzenburg, a town of Swisserland, in Bern, 17 miles S S W of Bern. Lon. 7 1 E, lat. 46 40 N.

Schweidnitz, a strong city of Bohemia, in Silesia, capital of a province of the same name, with a castle. The streets are large and the fortifications considerable, all the magistrates are catholics, but most of the inhabitants are protestants, who have a church without the town, as also a public-school. In 1716, the greatest part of this city was burnt down, but was rebuilt in an elegant manner. It is seated on an eminence, on the river Weistritz, 22 miles S W of Breslaw, and 27 S E of Lignitz. Lon. 16 54 E, lat. 50 46 N.

Schweinfurt, a strong, free and imperial town of Germany in Franconia, with a palace, where the senators meet, who are twelve in number. The environs are rich in cattle, corn, and wine, the inhabitants are Protestants, and carry on a large trade in wine, woollen and linen cloth, goose-quills, and feathers: the French took this town in July 1796, but they abandoned it in September following. It is seated on the river Maine, 25 miles W of Bamberg. Lon. 10 25 E, lat. 50 15 N.

Schweinnunder, a town of Germany in the circle of Upper Saxony, in the isle of Usedom. Lon. 14 18 E, lat. 54 3 N.

Schweitz, a canton of Swisserland, which gives name to them all. It is bounded on the W by the Lake of the Four Cantons on the S by the canton of Uri, on the E by that of Glarus, and on the N by those of Zurich and Zug. The government of Schweitz and Uri is entirely democratical, and nearly the same. They contain, including their subjects, 50,000 souls; and, in case of necessity, could furnish above 12,000 militia. The same kind of soil, and the same productions, are common to the two cantons. Luxury is scarcely known in these cantons; and a purity of morals prevails, which can scarcely be imagined by the inhabitants of great and opulent cities. The Roman catholic religion is here exclusively established. The canton suffered in common with all Swisserland when invaded by the French in 1798, being dreadfully wasted and desolated.

Schweitz, a town of Swisserland, capital of the canton of that name, seated near the Waldstatter See, on a hill, with a large and magnificent church. It is 10 miles S E of Lucern. Lon. 8 30 E, lat. 46 55 N.

Schewelm, a town of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, with a medicinal spring near it. Lon. 7 25 E, lat. 51 10 N.

Schwerin, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and dutchy of Mecklenburgh Schwerin, of which it is the capital. It is nearly surrounded by a beautiful lake, on an island on which stands the ducal palace and gardens which have communication with the town by a drawbridge. It is 35 miles W of Gustrow. Lon. 11 48 E, lat. 53 48 N.

Schwerte, a town of Germany in Westphalia, 38 miles N N E of Cologne. Lon. 7 15 E, lat. 51 38 N.

Schwinburg, a town of Denmark, on the S coast of the island of Funen, 23 miles S S E of Odensee. Lon. 10 30 E, lat. 55 10 N.

Sciari, an island of the Archipelago, near the coast of Janna, 20 miles to the N of Negropont and almost at the entrance of the gulf of Salonichi. It is 22 miles in length and eight in breadth. Lon. 23 40 E, lat. 39 26 N.

Sciglio, or Scilla. See Scylla.

Scilly, a cluster of islands and rocks, lying almost 10 leagues W of the Land's End, in Cornwall, and are easily discerned from it. Of these only five or six are inhabited. They are supposed formerly to have produced much tin, but are now chiefly known as a resort for seafowl, and a place of shelter for ships in bad weather. The inhabitants principally subsist by fishing, burning kelp, and acting as pilots. The chief of the islands is St. Mary's, which has a good port, is the best cultivated, and contains more inhabitants than all the rest put together. In this island, and in two or three others, are various antiquities, particularly the remains of a temple of the Druids, and ancient sepulchres; but the greatest ornament is the lighthouse, which, with the gallery, is 51 feet high, and is a very fine column. The Scilly rocks have been fatal to numbers of ships entering the English Channel. One of the most disastrous events of this kind happened in Scio, anciently called Chios, a celebrated island of the Archipelago, near the coast of Naxos, N W of Samos. It is 32 miles long, and 15 broad, and a mountainous country; yet fruits of various kinds grow in the fields, such as oranges, citrons, olives, mulberries, and pomegranates, interspersed with myrtles and jasmines. The wine of Scio, so celebrated by the ancients, is still in great esteem; but the island is now principally distinguished by the profitable culture of the mastic; it has also some trade in silk, wool, cheese, and figs. The women are better bred than in other parts of the Levant, and their dress is odd, but very neat. They have tame partridges which they send every day into the fields to feed, and in the evening call back with a whistle. It is computed that there are 10,000 Turks, 10,000 Greeks, and 10,000 Latins, on this island. The Turks became masters of it in 1566.

Scio, a seaport, the capital of an island of the same name, and a bishop's see. It is the best built town in the Archipelago; the houses being commodious, some of them terraced, and others covered with tiles. The castle is an old citadel built by the Genoese, in which the Turks have a garrison of 1400 men. The harbour is a rendezvous for ships that go to or come from the Constantinople; it will contain 80 vessels, and is protected by a low mole and two lighthouses. It is seated on the E side of the island, 47 miles W of Smyrna, and 210 S W of Constantinople.

Scipio, a military township in Cayuga county, New York; situated on the E side of Cayuga lake, where is a post office 18 miles N W of Milton, 30 miles S W of Marcellus, 30 miles W of Tully, and in the neighbourhood of Pompey, Sempronius, and many other townships designated by great names of antiquity.

Scituate, a post town in Plymouth county, Massachusetts; eight miles N W of Marshfield, and 28 S E of Boston, with 2728 inhabitants.

Sciro, or Siro, an island of the Archipelago, W of Metelian. It is 15 miles long and eight broad, and a mountainous country, but has no mines. The vines make the beauty of the island, and the wine is excellent; nor do the natives want wood. It contains only the village and convent of St. George, both built on a conical rock, 10 miles from the harbour of St. George. The superior of the convent exercises despotic sway over the inhabitants, whose superstition is more excessive than that of the other Greeks in the Archipelago. The inhabitants are all Greeks, but the Cadi is a Turk.

Skeneclady, the capital of Skeneclady county, New York; lying on the S side of Mohock river, 16 miles N W of Albany, and the same distance S of Ballstown. This, though comparatively an ancient town, and planted on navigable water in the bosom of a fertile country, has but about 3000 inhabitants, the descendants of early Dutch emigrants. Many of the dwelling houses are built in the old Dutch style.

Selawonia, a country of Europe, between the rivers Save, Drave, and Danube. It is divided into six counties, and belongs to the house of Austria; it was formerly a kingdom, and is not above 75 miles in breadth; but it is 300 in length, from the frontiers of Austria to Belgrade. The eastern part is called Ratzia, and the inhabitants Rascians. These form a particular nation, and are of the Greek church. The language of Selawonia is the mother of four others, namely those of Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, and Russia.

Scone, or Schoone, a village in Perthshire, on the E side of the river Tay, N by W of Perth. Here is the ancient royal palace (now a seat of the earl of Mansfield) and the celebrated stone chair, now in Westminster abbey, in which the kings of Scotland were crowned. It is 30 miles N of Edinburgh.

Scopelo, an island of the Archipelago, five miles E of Sciat, and 17 N of Negropont. It lies at the entrance of the gulf of Salonichi, and is ten miles long and five broad. It is very fertile, produces plenty of good wine, and contains 12,000 inhabitants, who are almost all Greeks.

Scopia, or Uscapia, an archiepiscopal town of Turkey, in Europe, in Bulgaria, seated on the Vardar, over which is a bridge of 12 arches, 67 miles W S W of Sofia. Lon. 22 25 E, lat. 42 10 N.

Scotsburgh, a post town in Halifax county, Virginia; 256 miles from Washington.

Scotland, or North Britain, the northern of the two kingdoms into which the island of Great Britain was formerly divided. It is bounded on the W by the Atlantic Ocean, on the N by the North Sea, on the E by the German Ocean, on the S E by England, and on the S by the Irish Sea. To Scotland also appertain the Hebrides, or Western Islands, the Orkney, and Shetland Islands, and many others amounting in all to 300. From N to S it extends 270 miles, and its greatest breadth is 150, but in some places not above 30. Its form is extremely irregular, being greatly broken and indented by arms of the sea, inasmuch that there is no place in Scotland above 50 miles distant from the shore. This country may be divided into three parts, viz. the N, the Middle, and the South divisions. The boundaries of these are strongly marked by the hand of nature. The first is cut off by a chain of lakes which cross the island in an oblique direction from N E to S W stretching from Inverness to the isle of Mull. The second, or middle division, is separated from the southern by the hollow tract between the Forth and the Clyde, through which the great Canal is carried. The face of the country, in the northern division, exhibits, in general, little else than an assemblage of vast dreary mountains. On the northern and eastern shores of this division, however, there are many vales and level tracts of considerable fertility. The middle division contains many great ranges of mountains, which traverse this part of the island in various directions. The most southerly ridge, called the Grampian Hills, extends from Aberdeenshire in a S W direction, terminating in the Great mountain Benlomon, in Stirlingshire. In this division too, cultivation and improvement are chiefly found on the eastern coast: and one of the finest tracts in Scotland, perhaps is the great vale called Strathmore, stretching along the southern base of the Grampian Mountains. In both these divisions, however, which comprehend more than two thirds of Scotland, the arable ground bears but a small proportion to the mountainous regions, of which the sterility will ever, in a great measure, defy the efforts of human industry. On the eastern shores of the middle, and in the whole southern division, the country bears more resemblance to England; and the proportion of cultivated ground is very considerable. The rivers in Scotland are in general rapid, and remarkably transparent. In so narrow a country, indeed, we cannot expect to find rivers equal to the Rhine or the Danube; but, when their rapidity and the shortness of their course are kept in view, we must allow that the Scottish streams are by no means inconsiderable; half the water they discharge, would in a level country, make very broad and deep rivers. Though there are many large and rapid streams in the northern and middle divisions, yet the Spey may be reckoned the most northerly great river. It descends from the centre of Invernesshire, with all the fury of a mountain torrent, rushing along, impetuous and irresistible. The Don and the Dee, which pass through Aberdeenshire, are large rivers; and the Tay discharges into the sea, two miles from Dundee, the greatest body of water perhaps of any river in Britain. In the southern parts, the Tweed, the Clyde, and the Forth, are noble rivers, the pride of the natives, and the admiration of strangers. After these, we may notice the Esk, the Annan, the Nith, and the Southern Dec, which, with several other fine streams, fall into the Solway Frith. The lakes of this country are numerous, and some of them very extensive. Any attempt to describe, or even to enumerate these, in this place, would greatly exceed our limits. The climate of Scotland is various in different places. The northern extremity, which is on the same parallel of lat. with some parts of Norway, is very cold; but the frosts are much less intense here than in any part of the continent equally far N, an advantage arising from an insular situation. The whole W coast is subjected to frequent summer rains, and sudden changes in the atmosphere, equally unfavourable to the ripening and gathering in of the products of the earth. The climate in many places on the eastern coast, and in the whole south division, is not inferior to that of the northern part of England. The air in Scotland is in general healthy; nor do we here find any such extensive fens as those of Lincolnshire, and other low tracts in South Britain.

The produce of the soil in the northern parts of Scotland and its isles is not considerable, but lime-stone, shell-sand, and marl, those rich manures, are found in great plenty in different places. Even the rocky shores produce abundance of kelp, an article of considerable importance in several manufactures. The fisheries in the surrounding seas have long been esteemed an object of national importance; and when increasing commerce shall enable the inhabitants to form roads, erect towns, and open canals, in those remote parts of the country, these fisheries may become a real source of wealth to the nation. The products of Scotland, in general, however, are multifarious and valuable. It feeds vast herds of cattle, and its hills are covered with sheep; it produces much grain and flax; its woods of oak and fir might furnish masts and timber for the use of the British navy; its mines are rich in coal, lead, and iron; freestone, lime stone, and slate are found in abundance; neither Greece nor Italy can boast a greater store of beautiful marble; fine rock crystals, pearls, and variegated pebbles, are not uncommon; and its rivers and lakes are richly stored with salmon and trout, and a variety of other fishes. The Scottish mountains, in former times, were infested by the wolf and the bear; but happily those ferocious animals have long been extirpated. The wild ox was also an inhabitant of the Caledonian forest: herds of wild roes, to this day, range at large in the northern mountains; and the stag is often seen in the woods. There, too, the beautiful bird called capercailzie, or cock of the wood, is sometimes found. The lofty summits are the haunt of the ptarmigan and the Alpine hare and black game, and grouse swarm among the heath, and often become the prey of the eagle and the falcon. Among the wild animals which Scotland possesses in common with England, are the fox, the badger, the otter, the hedgehog, the hare and rabbit; the weazle, the mole, and other small quadrupeds; the partridge, the quail, the snipe, the plover, and many other birds. The cattle and sheep are small, but much valued for the delicacy of their flesh; and the fleece of the Scottish sheep often emulates the finest Spanish wool. Even the shepherd's dog peculiar to Scotland, so hardy, docile, and sagacious, is not unworthy of mention. Though the cattle in the high grounds be diminutive, yet in many parts of the country the horses and cows are not inferior in size and beauty to those of the English breed. Scotland is divided into 33 counties; namely, Shetland and Orkney, Bute, Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, Cromarty, Nairne, Inverness, Murray, Banff, Aberdeen, Kincardine, Angus, Perth, Fife, Kinross, Clackmannan, Stirling, Dumbarton, Argyll, Renfrew, Ayr, Wigton, Kirkcudbright, Dumfries, Roxburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Lanerk, Linlithgow, Edinburgh, Haddington, and Berwick. These send one member each to parliament, except Bute, and Caithness, Cromarty and Nairne, Kinross and Clackmannan, which send members in conjunction; so that the counties send 30 members, which, with 15 sent by the boroughs, make the 45 members sent by Scotland. The established religion is the Presbyterian. The trade and population of great towns have considerably increased of late. Some districts, however, on the western shores, especially, have been greatly thinned by emigration; the spirit of which, however, is now happily subsided.

Scrican, a seaport of Terra Firna Proper, 50 miles E of Porto Bello. Lon. 78 49 W, lat. 9 40 N.

Scutari, a strong town of Turkey in Europe, capital of Upper Albania, with a bishop's see. It is seated on the lake Zeta, at the mouth of the river Bocana, 20 miles NE of Antivari, and 47 N W of Albanopolis. Lon. 19 25 E, lat. 42 35 N.

Scutari, a town of Turkey in Asia, in Natolia, with a good harbour, seated on the E side of Constantinople, of which it is considered as a suburb, being directly opposite. It contains a handsome mosque, and is built on the side of a hill. Lon. 29 4 E, lat. 41 0 N.

Scylla, a rock, near the Faro of Messina, on the coast of Calabria, opposite the celebrated Charybdis. It is about a mile from the entrance of the Faro, and forms a small promontory, which runs a little out to sea, and meets the whole force of the waters as they come out of the narrowest part of the straits. The head of this promontory is the famous Scylla of the ancient poets. It does not come up to the formidable description that Homer gives of it, nor is the passage so extremely narrow and difficult as he represents it; but it is probable that its breadth is greatly increased since his time, by the violent impetuosity of the current; and this violence must always have diminished, in proportion as the breadth of the channel increased. There are many small rocks that show their heads near the base of the large ones. These are probably the dogs that are described as howling round the monster Seylla. There are likewise many caverns that add greatly to the noise of the water, and tend to increase the horror of the scene. The rock is nearly 200 feet high; and there is a kind of castle or fort on its summit.

Seylla, or Sciglio, a town of Sicily, situate on the side of the rock Seylla. In the terrible earthquake of 1783 (see Calabria) a wave of the sea, which had swept the country for three miles, carried off, on its return 2473 of the inhabitants with the prince at their head. It is 10 miles N E of Messina.

Seaford, a borough and seaport in Sussex, which sends two members to parliament, but has no market. It is eight miles S S E of Lewes, and 59 S by E of London. Lon. 0 16 E, lat. 50 50 N.

Seaton, or Port Seaton, a seaport in Haddingtonshire. Here is a ruinous palace, in which Mary queen of Scots occasionally kept her court, after her return from France. In the chapel are several curious monuments of marble. Seaton has a considerable trade in salt and coal, and is situate on the frith of Forth, nine miles E of Edinburgh. Lon. 2 54 W, lat. 56 0 N.

Sebastia, a town of Turkey in Palestine, said to be the remains of Samaria. It is 34 miles N N E of Jerusalem. Lon. 35 40 E, lat. 32 15 N.

Sebastian, St. a populous seaport of Spain, in Guipuscoa. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, on the top of which is a strong citadel; and the harbour is secured by two moles, and a narrow entrance for the ships. The town is surrounded by a double wall, and is fortified toward the sea. It carries on a great trade, particularly in iron, steel, and wool. St. Sebastian was taken by the French in 1754. It is 50 miles E of Bilbao, and 50 N W of Pampeluna. Lon. 1 56 W, lat. 43 24 N.

Sebastian, St. a town of South America in Mexico, capital of the province of Chiamethan. Lon. 105 5 E, lat. 24 20 N.

Sebastian, St. a large city of Brasil, capital of the province of Rio Janeiro, and a bishop's see. It has a very extensive and commodious harbour, defended by numerous forts. The city stands on low ground, and is surrounded by high hills, which exclude the benefit of the refreshing sea and land breezes; so that it is suffocatingly hot, and unhealthy in the summer. St. Sebastian is seated near the mouth of the Rio Janeiro, in the Atlantic. Lon. 42 44 W, lat. 22 54 S.

Sebastopolis, a town of Mingrelia, under the protection of Russia, 250 miles N N W of Erivan. Lon. 55 15 E, lat. 40 16 N.

Sebenico, a strong seaport of Venetian Dalmatia, capital of a county of the same name, with a bishop's see, a fort, and a castle. The Turks have often attempted in vain to take it. It is seated near the mouth of the Cherez, in the gulf of Venice, 25 miles S E of Zara. Lon. 16 46 E, lat. 44 17 N.

Sebourg, a town of France, in the department of the Nord, and late province of Hainault, 12 miles E of Valenciennes and 12 S E of Conde. Lon. 3 50 E, lat. 50 22 N.

Sechura, a town of South America in Peru, in the bishopric of Truxillo, 30 miles S S E of Paiza. Lon. 81 10 E, lat. 5 55 S.

Seckau, a town of Germany, in the circle of Austria and in Upper Stiria, with a bishop's see; seated on the Gayle, nine miles N of Judenburg, and 90 S W of Vienna. Lon. 14 27 E, lat. 47 19 N.

Seckenleim, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Rhine, four miles E of Mosheim.

Seckingen, a town of Germany in Swabia, one of the forest towns. It belongs to the house of Austria, and is seated on an isle, formed by the Rhine, six miles S E of Rheinfelden, and 27 W of Schaffhausen. Lon. 7 57 E, lat. 47 34 N.

Seckington, a village in Warwickshire. On the N side of its church are the ruins of a fort, and near it an artificial hill, 45 feet high.

Sedan, a strong town of France, in the department of the Ardennes, and late province of Champagne. It is one of the most important keys of the country; and has a strong castle, in which the famous Marshal Turenne was born, an arsenal, a foundry of cannon, and a manufacture of fine black cloths. Segorbe, an episcopal town of Spain, in Valencia, with the title of a duchy.
It is seated on the side of a hill, between two mountains, in a soil fertile in corn and wine, and where there are quarries of fine marble. It is seated near the river Morvedro, 27 miles N W of Valencia, and 150 E of Madrid.
Lon. 0 3 W, lat. 39 48 N.

Segovia, an ancient and populous city of Spain, in Old Castile, with a bishop's see, and a castle, called the Alcazar.
It is surrounded by a strong wall, flanked with towers and ramparts; and is supplied with water by a Roman aqueduct, 3000 paces in length, and supported by 177 arches of a prodigious height, consisting of two rows, one placed above the other. Here the best cloth in Spain is made, from the fine Spanish wool so much esteemed in other countries. This is one part of their trade, and another is, very fine paper. The cathedral stands on one side of the great square, and contains the statue of the Virgin Mary in massy silver. The Alcazar is seated in the highest part of the town, and has 16 rooms richly adorned with tapestry, and ornaments of marble and porphyry.
The royal chapel is magnificently gilded, and embellished with very fine paintings. The most remarkable structure is the Mint, seated in a valley, surrounded by a river, on which are mills, employed in coining. Segovia is seated on a mountain, near the river Arayadda, 45 miles N W of Madrid. Lon. 3 44 W, Seharanpou, a town of Hindoostan Proper, capital of a district of the same name, between the Jumna and the Ganges, in the country of Delhi. It is 86 miles N of Delhi. Lon. 77 15 E, lat. 30 4 N.

Seiks, or Sicques, the most western, and a very powerful nation of Hindoostan; they do not form one entire state; but a number of small ones, independent of each other, in their internal government, and only connected by a federal union. They possess the whole province of Lahore, the principal part of Moultan, and the W part of Delhi: the dimensions of which tract are about 400 miles from N W to S E; and from 150 to 200 broad, in general: although the part between Attock and Bcbker cannot be less than 320 miles in extent. We know but little concerning the state of their government and politics; but the former is represented as being mild. In their mode of making war they are unquestionably savage and cruel. Their army consists almost entirely of horse, of which they are said to be able to bring at least 100,000 into the field. The founder of their sect was named Nanock, and lived in the beginning of the 16th century. They are the descendants of his disciples: the word seiks in the Sanscrit language signifying disciples. The forces of this nation are very numerous, a Sicque will confidently say, that his country can furnish 300,000 cavalry; but if we admit that the Sicques when united can bring 200,000 horse into the field, their force in cavalry is greater than that of any other state in Hindoostan. The civil and military government of the Seiks, before a common interest had ceased to actuate its operations, was conducted by general assemblies. The army met in a grand convention called Coori- motta, and transacted the most important affairs; such as declaring war or peace, forming alliances, or settling the necessary contributions; but since their dominions have been so widely extended, the grand assembly is now rarely summoned. The Sicques are in general strong and well made; accustomed from their infancy to the most laborious life, and hardest fare, they make marches, and undergo fatigues that really appear astonishing. They have commonly two, some of them three horses each, of the middle size, strong, active, and mild tempered. Though they make merry on the demise of any of their brethren, they mourn for the death of a horse: thus shewing their love of an animal so necessary to them in their professional capacity. Their dress is extremely scanty: a pair of long blue drawers, and a kind of checkered plaid, a part of which is fastened round the waist, and the other thrown over the shoulder, with a mean turban, form their clothing and equipage. The chiefs are distinguished by wearing some heavy gold bracelets on their wrists, and sometimes a chain of the same metal bound round their turbans, and by being mounted on better horses: otherwise, no distinction appears amongst them. The chiefs are numerous, some of whom have the command of 10 or 12 thousand cavalry; but this power is confined to a small number, the inferior officers maintaining from 1 to 2000, and many not more than 20 or 30 horses; a certain quota of which is furnished by the chief, the greater part being the individual property of the horsemen. The Seiks are now become one of the most powerful states in Hindoostan. Their capital is Lahore.

Senegal, one of the three principal rivers of Africa, formerly supposed to be one of the branches of the Niger, but determined by Mr. Park to have its source 80 geographical miles W of that river. Its branches are very numerous, and intersect the country for about 200 miles from E to W. Below the falls of Felow Mr. Park judged that it might be equal in size to the Tweed at Melross. It is by no means a capital stream, except in the rainy season, when its bed is filled, and will not contain the additional waters.

Senegal, a kingdom of Negroland, lying on a river of the same name, which overflows like the Nile, and much about the same time of the year. The French once sent 30 men up this river, who rowed 1000 miles, undergoing great hardships, insomuch that only five returned back alive. The kingdom of Senegal was formerly considerable, but is now reduced into a very narrow compass. It is populous and full of trees, but the soil being sandy, they never sow till the rainy season comes on, in June, and get in their harvest in September. The French had a fort and factory, in an island at the mouth of the river, and were entire masters of the gum-trade. It is called Fort Louis, was taken by the English in 1758, and confirmed to them by the peace of 1763; but, in 1783, it was restored to France. Lon. 16 31 W, lat. 15 53 N.

Senes, a town of France, in the department of Lower Alps, and late province of Provence, seated in a rough barren country, 46 miles N E of Aix, and 49 N W of Nice. Lon. 6 40 E, lat. 43 59 N.

Sentis, an ancient town of France, in the department of Oise, and late province of the Isle of France, lately a bishop's see. The cathedral has one of the highest steeples in France. It is seated on the side of a hill, on the river Nonette, almost surrounded by a large forest, 20 miles N W of Meaux, and 27 N E of Paris. Lon. 2 40 E, lat. 49 12 N.

Sennar, the capital of a kingdom of the same name in Africa. See Nubia. It is five miles in circumference, and contains near 100,000 inhabitants. The houses are all one story high, with flat roofs; but the suburbs contain only cottages covered with reeds. The palace is surrounded by high walls, of bricks dried in the sun, but is only a confused heap of buildings. The heats are almost insupportable in the day time, except in the rainy season, which begins in April, and continues three months, at which time the air is unwholesome. The commodities are elephants teeth, tamarinds, civet, tobacco, and gold dust. There is a market near the palace, where slaves are sold; the females sit on one side, the males on another, and the Egyptian merchants buy great numbers of them every year. The women of quality have slight garments of silk, and wear rings of various metals on their hair, arms, legs, ears, and fingers. Women of a low rank, and girls, have clothes wrapped round them from the waist to the knees. The men go almost naked. The merchandise required at Sennar are spices, paper, brass, hardware, glass beads, and a black drug, with which they colour their eyelids and eyebrows. It is seated on an eminence, near the river Nile. Lon. 30 0 E; lat. 15 4 N.

Sens, an ancient town of France, in the department of Yonne and late province of Burgundy. The metropolitan church is a handsome Gothic structure. The dauphin and dauphiness, parents of Lewis XVI. were interred in this church, and here was lately their monument, a masterpiece of Coustou's, crowned by two urns united, expressive of the unalterable affection of this virtuous pair. Sens is seated in a fertile country at the confluence of the Vanne with the Yonne, 25 miles N of Auxerre, and 60 S E of Paris. Lon. 3 22 E, lat. 48 12 N.

Seringapatam, a city of Hindoostan, capital of Mysore, situate in an island of the river Canvery. The Mausoleum of Hyder Aly is one of the most magnificent objects in the place: it is on the S angle of the island, surrounded by a grove of beautiful cypress trees. This city is strongly fortified. It was closely besieged in 1792 by lord Cornwallis, and was only saved from being captured, by Tippoo's agreeing to sign a treaty by which he ceded half of his dominions, and agreed to pay a vast sum of money to the East India Company and their allies. A fresh war broke out in 1799, when the city was taken by assault, and Tippoo was killed. The town was plundered of every thing valuable, and an immense quantity of spoil was divided among the troops. Seringapatam is 290 miles W S W of Madras, and 350 S by E of Vistapour. Lon. 76 46 E, lat. 12 31 N.

Shannon, the largest river of Ireland, which issues from Lough Allen, in the province of Connaught, and running S divides the provinces of Leinster and Connaught; it then turns S W, passes by the city of Limerick, and falls into the Atlantic Ocean between the counties of Clare and Limerick.

Shap, a village in Westmoreland, at the source of the Loder, between Orton and Penrith. It had once a famous abbey, built in 1119; but is now of little note, except for some great stones, like pyramids, placed almost in a direct line, for a mile together, at eight, ten, and 12 yards distance, of such immense weight, that carriages now in use could not support them. The abbey stood about a mile W from the church, of which little remains, except the tower at the W end of the destroyed church, and the ruins of an old bridge.

Shapleigh, a post town in York county, Maine; situated on the E side of Piscataqua river, about 40 miles N of Portsmouth, in New Hampshire.

Sharon, a post town in Litchfield county, Connecticut; situate on the border of New-York State, 51 miles W by N of Hartford, and 20 N E of Poughkeepsie, on Hudson river.

Sheffield, a large and populous town in the W riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Tuesday. This town has been noted several hundred years for cutlers and smiths manufactures, which were encouraged and advanced by the neighbouring mines of iron, particularly for files and knives, or whittles; for the last of which especially it has been a staple for above 300 years; and it is reputed to excel Birmingham in these wares, as that does this town in locks, hinges, nails, and polished steel. The first mills in England for turning grindstones were also set up here. Here are also lead works and a silk mill. It is seated on the Don, which is navigable within two or three miles of the town, and its neighbourhood abounds with coal. It has two large churches, and a spacious market place, furnished with neat shops for butchers, &c. It is 54 miles S S W of York, and 161 N N W of London. Lon. 1 29 W, lat. 53 20 N.

Sheriff-Muir, a heath in Perthshire, Scotland, between the Ochils and the Grampian mountains; famous for a bloody but undecisive battle, in 1715, between the royal army and the rebel forces under the earl of Mar.

Shetland, the general name of about 40 islands, lying 100 miles N N E of Caithnesshire, in Scotland, between 59 56 and 61 11 N lat. The names of the principal are Mainland, Yell, Unst, and Pula or Thule. The Aurora Boreales, or Merry Dancers, as they are called in these islands, are the constant attendants of clear evenings, and prove great reliefs amid the gloom of the long winter nights. What the inhabitants have been hitherto able to do, their natural advantages considered, does not deserve that name, notwithstanding they export large quantities of cod, tusk, ling, and skate, insomuch that the bounty allowed by acts of parliament amounts from 1400l. to 2000 annually. They have besides, haddocks, whittings, turbot, and a variety of other fish. In many of the inlets there are prodigious quantities of excellent oysters, lobsters, muscles, cockles, and other shell-fish. As to amphibious creatures, they have multitudes of otters and seals; add to these that number, ambergris, and other spoils of the ocean, are frequently found upon the coasts. The inhabitants are stout, well-made and comely; the lower sort of a swarthy complexion, a hardy, robust, and laborious people, who, generally speaking, get their bread by fishing in all weathers in their yawls, which are little bigger than Gravesend wherries, live hardly, and in the summer season mostly on fish. Shetland, with Orkney, forms one of the counties of Scotland.

Shogle, a town of Asia in Syria, seated on the Asia anciently called Oronetes, over which is a bridge of 13 arches. It is 18 miles S by E of Antioch, and 45 S W of Aleppo. L on. 36 40 E, lat. 35 20 N.

Shoomska, one of the Kuriles in Kamtschatka, which is inhabited by a mixture of natives and Kamtschadales. See Kuriles.

Shooter's Hill, a village in Kent, situate on a hill so called, eight miles E S E of London. From this hill is a fine extensive prospect, and the Thames makes a magnificent appearance from it. Lady James built a lofty tower on this hill in honour of her husband commodore James, who reduced the Fort of Severndroog in the East Indies in 1756. It is called Severndroog Castle, is of a triangular form, and contains some of the arms, ornaments, &c. taken from the enemy.

Shoreham, a borough in Sussex, with a market on Saturday. It sends two members to parliament, and is commonly called New Shoreham, to distinguish it from the old, which lies near it, and is now of little account. It is seated on an arm of the sea, which makes it a place of some trade, and many small vessels are built here. It is 16 miles N W of New-haven, and 56 S by W of London. Lon. 0 15 W, lat. 50 54 N.

Shrewsbury, a borough in Shropshire, and the capital of that county, with a market on Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday. It is beautifully seated on a peninsula formed by the Severn, over which are two bridges, and is surrounded by a wall, with three gates. Here was formerly a castle and abbey, both now in ruins. It contains five churches, is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. It is the chief mart for a coarse kind of woollen cloth, made in Montgomeryshire, called Welsh webs, and for all sorts of Welsh commodities, which are generally bought in a rough state at Welsh pool, and finished here, whence they are exported to America and Flanders. It is also famous for its excellent brawn, which is sent to various parts of the kingdom. In 1283, Edward I. held a parliament here, when the lords sat in the castle, and the commons in a barn. Another parliament was held here in 1397, by Richard II. Close to this town, in 1403, was fought the battle between Henry IV. and Henry Percy, surnamed Hotspur, in which the latter was defeated and slain. Shrewsbury is 18 miles E of Welshpool, 36 W of Lichfield, and 160 N W of London. Lon. 2 41 W, lat. 52 43 N.

Shrewsbury, a post town in Monmouth county, New Jersey; situated on a high and dry soil, near the sea shore, and therefore resorted to in summer by the gentry of New York and Philadelphia, as a bathing place. It lies partly in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and partly in that of Hereford; contains 14 hundreds, 16 market-towns, and 170 parishes; and sends 12 members to parliament. The air is salubrious, and not very sharp, except on the hills. Shropshire has a variety of soil, but in general is well cultivated, producing large quantities of grain of all sorts, much of which is sent down the Severn for exportation. Its level parts feed many cattle; and much of the cheese sold under the name of Cheshire is made in this county. The sheep of its hilly tracts afford a fine wool, which supplies the manufactories of the W, there being none of any con-

Siam, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N by China, on the E by Laos and Cambodia, on the S by the gulf of Siam, and on the W by the bay of Bengal and Pegu. It is 550 miles in length, and 250 in breadth, though in some places not above 50. It is divided into the Higher and Lower, and the soil produces plenty of rice, cotton, and fruits, but different from those in Eu- rope. The inhabitants, both men and women go almost naked. The better sort indeed wear rich garments; and yet those about the court are under a miserable subjection to the king, who shows himself but once a year to the common people. He is proprietor of all the lands in the country, and no one can buy any merchandises till he has the refusal of them. He generally keeps a numerous army, among which there are 1000 elephants, and it is said he can bring 250,000 men into the field. It is a flat country, which in the rainy sea- son is overflowed; for which reason most of the houses are built on pillars, and they have no communication for some months but by boats. The women are the only merchants in buying goods, the mer being generally main- tained by the industry of their wives.

The inhabitants are well shaped, have large foreheads, little noses, handsome mouths, plump lips, and black sparkling eyes. Both sexes go bare-headed, and the men are of an olive colour, with little beards, but the women of a straw complexion, and some have their cheeks a little red. They have abundance of wild animals in the woods, as elephants, rhinoceroses, leopards, and tigers. Their tame cattle are beeves, buffaloes, and hogs, of which they have plenty about their farms. Besides which, there are large and dangerous crocodiles, and serpents 20 feet long. Their temples and priests are very numerous; the latter distinguished from the laity by an orange coloured gar-

Siberia, a large country comprehend- ing the most northern part of the Rus- sian empire in Asia. It is bounded on the E by the Eastern Ocean, on the S by Great Tartary, on the W by Russia, and on the N by the Frozen Ocean. It extends 2000 miles from E to W, and 750 from N to S. The south part is a fertile country, producing all the neces- saries of life; but the N part is ex- tremely cold, almost uncultivated, and thin of people. The principal riches of Siberia consist in fine skins and furs. The inhabitants are of three sorts, pagans, or the natives of the country; Mometans, or Russians. The former dwell in forests in the winter, and in the summer on the banks of rivers.

They are clothed with the skins of wild beasts, and their riches consist in bows, arrows, a knife and a kettle. They make use of reindeer and dogs, instead of horses, to draw their sledges. They have several idols, which they are sometimes displeas'd with, and will either beat or burn them. They all live in wretched huts, which they remove from place to place. Those in the south- ern parts are not much more polite; but they have horses with which they go a hunting, and their houses, though poor, are not shifted from place to place. Nor are the Mahometan Tartars, who dwell in these parts, so ugly as in other places. The Russians settled here are such the same as their native country. Through this vast tract the Rus- sian caravans travel every year, with their merchandis, to China. The priuprincipal rivers are the Oby, Lena, Irtysh, Yenise, and Okota. In this country are not only a great number of fresh water lakes, but likewise several whose waters are salt; and these reciprocally change their nature, the salt sometimes becoming fresh, and the fresh changing into saline. Some lakes also dry up, and others appear where none were ever seen before. The salt lake of Yamusha, in the province of Tobolsk, is the most remarkable of all; for it contains a salt as white as snow, consisting entirely of cubic crystals. One finds also in Siberia saline springs, salt-water brooks, and a hill of salt. The W part of Siberia is comprised in the Russian governments of Tobolsk and Kolyvan; the E part in the government of Irkutsk. Tobolsk is the capital.

Sicily, an island of the Mediterranean Sea, almost in the form of a triangle, terminating in three points or capes; that which is nearest Italy is called Cape del Faro: the second regards the Morea, Capo Paonaro; and the third which points to Africa, Capo di Boco. As Sicily is an island it can be only bounded by the sea; how ever it is separated from the kingdom of Naples by a narrow strait, called the Faro; but as Messina is seated on it, it is called the Faro di Messina. This is about five miles in breadth, and in it are the famous shelves called Scylla and Charybdis, so much celebrated by the Latin poets, but these are now said to have been removed by the terrible earthquake, which happened here and in Calabria, in the beginning of the year 1783, and which destroyed many cities and villages, and above 40,000 inhabitants. The two kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, are under the same climate, and the productions are much more in corn, particularly in the vallies of Noto and Mazara; but then there are fewer trees and fruits: The valley of Demona has more forest and fruit trees than the two others. It is said to contain one million of inhabitants, who in general have a very bad character. They formerly cultivated sciences here, and there was a university at Catania, but now they are greatly neglected. It is said there are mines of all kinds, but it does not appear that they derive any advantage from them. It is divided into the vallies just mentioned, called by them Val di Demona, Val di Noto, and Val di Mazara, which are taken notice of in their proper places. Don Carlos became king of the two Sicilies in 1736, in consequence of the treaty of Vienna; but the king of Spain dying in 1760, he succeeded to that crown, and his third son Ferdinand became king of the two Sicilies. Mount Etna, now called Gibello, the famous volcano, is in Val di Demona. It is about 165 miles in length, and 112 in breadth; and its produce not already mentioned, is wine, oil, silk, and excellent fruits.

Sienna, a celebrated city of Tuscany, capital of the Siennese, with an arch-

It is about four miles in circumference, and surrounded by a wall. The architecture of the Gothic metropolitan church is admirable, and much esteemed by all travellers; it is built with black and white marble, and the pavement is of Mosaic work. Sienna is not very populous; but the women have more freedom than in most parts of Italy. It is adorned with a great number of palaces, fountains, and superb churches. The great area is round, and the houses about it are of the same height, supported by piazzas, under which people may walk in all weathers. In the middle is a basin, which they can fill with water at any time, and represent a sea-fight with small vessels. The Italian language is taught here with such purity, that many foreigners frequent it on that account.
It is seated on three eminences, 36

Sierra Leone, a country on the W coast of Africa, so named, according to some authors, by the Portuguese, on account of its mountains on this coast abounding with lions. Some extend its limits from the Grain Coast on the S E, to Cape Verga or Vega on the N W; that is, between 7 and 10° N lat. Others, however, confine the country between Cape Verga and Cape Tagrin. In the open and plain parts, on the banks of a river of the same name, the heat of the sun before any breeze arises, is almost intolerable; but as a refreshing gale constantly springs up about noon, it renders the country supportable. The whole tract, on each side the river, is rich in rice and millet, which is the chief sustenance of the inhabitants; and upon the whole it is one of the best countries on the coast. In 1791, an act of Parliament was obtained, incorporating a company called the Sierra Leone Company, for the purpose of cultivating West India, and other tropical productions on the banks of this river. The first settlers amounted to 200 white persons, besides a number of free blacks from Nova Scotia. The natives appeared to be extremely friendly, and a few, in 1792, had come to work for the colony. On the setting in of the rains, about the latter end of May, the same year, a considerable degree of sickness and mortality prevailed, occasioned chiefly by the insufficiency of the temporary habitations, which could not be completed before the rains set in.

Thirty-five white persons (of whom fourteen were soldiers) and many of the blacks died of this sickness. The next year the setting in of the rains was not productive of the same effects.
The colonists were in good health, and were all put into possession of small lots of land, and a new town, on a regular and extended scale, was begun to be built. Besides the Nova Scotia blacks, a large party of the natives were at work for the company, and the experiments in sugar, cotton, &c. appeared to be promising. The native chiefs and people appeared to be extremely friendly, and the Company's schools were regularly attended by 300 children, among whom were some children of the natives. But this cheerful scene was soon overcast, and this beautiful and prosperous colony overwhelmed with ruin. In Sept. 1794, a French squadron arrived at Sierra Leone, fired upon the town and did much damage. In the afternoon the enemy landed, finding the town almost destitute of people, but rich in provisions, clothing, and other stores. They began immediately to break open the houses and to plunder. What they did not want, they destroyed, burnt, or threw into the river. They killed all the cattle and animals they found in the fields or streets, yards, or elsewhere, not sparing even asses, dogs, and cats. These proceedings they continued the whole succeeding week, till they had entirely ruined this beautiful and prospering colony; and when they found nothing more worth plundering, they set fire to the public buildings and all the houses belonging to the Europeans.

M m m m

Sierra Leone, a river of Africa, in a country of the same name. Its source is uncertain, but its mouth, in lon. 12 30 W, lat. 8 15 N, is nine miles wide.

Sierra Leone, or Lion Mountains, mountains of Africa, which divide Nigritia from Guinea, and extend as far as Abyssinia. They were styled by the ancients the Mountains of God, on account of their being subject to thunder and lightning.

Sierra Morena, mountains in Spain, which divide the kingdoms of Estramadura and New Castile from that of Andalusia. Cervantes has placed the most entertaining adventures of his hero, Don Quixote, among these mountains which has made them famous all over Europe.

Si-Fans, the name of a people subject to China. Their country is only a continued ridge of mountains, bounded by the rivers Hoang-ho on the N, Ya-long on the W, and Yang-tse-kiang on the E, between 30 and 35° of N lat. The greater part of the Si-fans live in tents; but some of them have houses built of earth, and even brick. Their habitations are not contiguous; they form at most but small hamlets, consisting of five or six families. They feed a great number of flocks, and are in no want of any of the necessaries of life. The principal article of their trade is rhubarb, which their country produces in great abundance. These people are of a proud and independent spirit, and acknowledge with reluctance the superiority of the Chinese government, to which they have been subjected. They have lost much of their ancient splendour; for the Si-fans, who at present are confined in a wild country, where they have not a single city, enjoyed formerly an extensive dominion, and formed a powerful and formidable empire. The Chinese annals fix the epocha of the downfall of their empire, about the year 1227: since that time, the Si-fans have retired to their native mountains, where, from being a conquering and polished people, they have again sunk into their original barbarity.

avia and Hungary, on the and on the W by Lower Lusatia and Bohemia. The principal rivers are, the Oder, the Vistula, the Neisse, the Bober, the Queis, the Op-pa, and the Else. There is a long chain of mountains, which separate Silesia from Bohemia, one half belonging to the one, and the other to the other, and they have their particular names.

On the top of the mountain of giants, is a famous spring frequented by a great number of people, partly out of devotion, and partly to drink the waters.
There were mines of gold, silver, and other metals; but they have not been worked for many years. There are also some precious stones, but too much time is required to procure them. The highest mountain of Silesia is called Zotenberg, situated in the principality of Schweidnitz, and is 104 miles in circumference. The most considerable silver-mines at present, are at Reit-stein, in the principality of Breig.
There are also mines of lead, copper, and iron, and quarries of various stones; besides antimony, salt-petre, sulphur, alum, vitriol, quick-silver, sealed earth, and other minerals. The principal manufactory is linen-cloth, and they have also some woollen manufactories, and glass-houses. They feed a great number of cattle, have large studs of horses, and plenty of game in the woods. They have but few lynxes and bears, and fewer wolves, because they give a ducat a head for every one that is killed. They have a great many lakes full of pikes, carps, and other good fish; also plenty of bees, which produce a great deal of honey and wax.
They have wheat, barley, oats, milletseed, and turnips, sufficient for the use of the inhabitants; and in some places they cultivate saffron; but their wine is very bad, and therefore they turn it mostly into vinegar. Silesia is divided into the Upper and the Lower.
In the Upper, the inhabitants are generally Roman-Catholics, speaking the Polish language, and in the Lower, almost all Protestants, and speak their mother-tongue. Silesia is divided into 17 small duchies, and 7 free states, without comprehending the county of Glatz. These are taken notice of in their proper places. The greatest part of this country was ceded to the king of Prussia, in 1742, by the treaty of Breslaw.

Sindelfingen, a town of Germany, in the circle of Suabia, six miles S W of Stuttgart. Lon. 9 5 E, lat. 48 45 N.

Sindy, or Scind, a province of Hindoostan Proper, bounded on the W by Persia, on the N by the territories of the king of Candahar, on the N E by those of the Seiks, on the E by a sandy desert, and on the S E by Cutch. It extends along the course of the Indus, from its mouth, to the frontiers of Moultan, 300 miles; and its breadth, in the widest part, is 160. In many particulars of soil and climate, and the general appearance of its surface, it resembles Egypt; the lower part being composed of rich vegetable mould, and extended into a wide delta; while the upper part is a narrow slip of country, confined on the Persian side by a ridge of mountains, and on the other by a sandy desert; the Indus, equal at least to the Nile, winding through the midst of this level valley; and annually overflowing it. During great part of the S W monsoon, or at least in July, August, and part of September (which is the rainy season in most other parts of India) the atmosphere is here generally clouded; but no rain falls except near the sea. Indeed very few showers fall during the whole year. Owing to this, and the neighbourhood of the sandy deserts on the E and on the N W the heats are so violent, and the winds from those quarters so pernicious, that the houses are contrived so as to be occasionally ventilated by apertures on the top, resembling the funnels of small chimnies. When the hot winds prevail, the windows are closely shut, by which the hottest current of air, near the surface, is excluded; and a cooler part, because more elevated, descends into the house through the funnels. By this also vast clouds of dust are excluded; the entrance of which would alone be sufficient to render the houses uninhabitable. The roofs are composed of thick layers of earth instead of terraces. Few countries are more unwholesome to European constitutions, particularly the lower part of the Delta. The Hindoos, who were the original inhabitants of Sindy, and who are reckoned to outnumber the Mahometans, as ten to one, are treated with great rigour by their Mahometan governors, and are not permitted to erect any pagodas, or places of worship: and this severity drives vast numbers of them into other countries. The inland parts of Sindy, produce saltpetre, salammioniac, borax, bezoar, lapis-lazuli, and raw silk. They have also manufactures of cotton and silk of various kinds; and they make fine cabinets, inlaid with ivory, and finely lacquered. They also export great quantities of butter, clarified and wrapped up in duppas, made of the hides of cattle. The ladies wear hoops of ivory on both their arms and legs, and when they die they are burnt with them. They have large black cattle, excellent mutton, and small hardy horses. Their wild game are deer, hares, antelopes, and foxes, which they hunt with dogs, leopards, and a small fierce creature called a shiahgush. The prince of this province is tributary to the sultan of Candahar. He resides at Hyderabad, though Tatta is the capital.

Sines, a town of Portugal, in the province of Estremadura. Lon. 8 55 W, lat. 37 40 N.

Si-ngan-fou, a large city and capital of the province of Chen-si in China. Next to Pe-king it is one of the most beautiful and largest cities in China; its walls are thick, exceedingly high, and four leagues in circumference; they are flanked with a great number of towers, a bow-shot distant one from the other, and surrounded by a deep ditch. A large block of marble was dug up in the neighbourhood of this city, with an inscription, partly in Chinese, partly in Syriac characters; the substance of which was, that an angel had declared, that the Messias was born of a Virgin in Judea, and that his birth was indicated by a new star in the heavens; that the kings of the East down in great quantities. All of them abound with heath and grass, which afford good pasturage for cattle and sheep. The arable ground is generally in the vallies betwixt the mountains, and which have always a river running through the middle. The soil is extremely fertile, insomuch that some places are said to produce constant crops without manure for 40 years.

When manured with seaware, the general produce is from 20 to 30 fold, and instances are even recorded of 100 fold produce. Skye abounds with rivers, all of which afford fish of different kinds.
Some abound with salmon, and some with the black muscules which produce pearl. The climate of Skye is cold and moist, the S W wind blowing over a vast tract of sea, brings abundance of rain; but the E wind blowing over the northern part of Scotland brings fair weather, which holds good also in the other western isles. The N wind is very Smolensko, a city of Russia, capital of a government of the same name. It is situate on the Dnieper, and stands upon two hills, and the valley between them. It is surrounded by walls 50 feet high and 15 thick; the lower part of stone, the upper of brick, and their circumference four miles and three quarters. The houses are mostly of wood, and little better than cottages: they are only of one story, except a few scattered here and there, which are dignified with the title of palaces. One long broad street, which is paved, intersects the whole length of the town in a straight line; the other streets generally wind in circular directions, and are floored with planks. The walls stretching over the uneven sides of the hills till they reach the banks of the Dnieper, their antient style of architecture, their grotesque towers, the spires of churches shooting above the trees, which are so numerous as almost to conceal the buildings from view, the appearance of meadows and the arable ground, all these objects blended together, exhibit a scene of the most singular and contrasted kind. On the further side of the Dnieper are a number of straggling wooden houses that form the suburbs of the town, and are joined to it by a wooden bridge. According to Mr. Coxe, it contains about 4,000 inhabitants; it has no manufactures, but carries on some commerce with the Ukraine, Dantzic, and Riga. The principal articles of its trade are flax, hemp, honey, wax, hides, hogs bristles, masts, planks, and Siberian furs. It is 197 miles N E of Novogrodeck, and 230 N of Kiof. Lon. 32 34 E, lat. 54 50 N.

Snow, a noted cavern, on the N coast of Sutherlandshire, between Cape Wrath and Loch Erribol. It runs so far under ground, that its extremity, it is said, could never be explored.

Smyrna, a seaport of Turkey in Asia, in Natolia, and one of the largest and richest cities of the Levant. The goodness of the harbour has caused it to be rebuilt several times, after having been destroyed by earthquakes. It is the rendezvous of merchants from almost d by Poland and Russia, and ceded to Russia in 1666. It is the 41 Russian go-ty of Russia, capital of the same name. It is deeper, and stands up the valley between rounded by walls 30 thick; the lower part of brick, and their four miles and three houses are mostly of better than cottages: one story, except a few and there, which are the title of palaces. One, which is paved, in the length of the town; the other streets in circular directions, with planks. The walls on the uneven sides of the city the banks of the ancient style of architecture towers, the spires rising above the trees, numerous as almost to things from view, the meadows and the arable objects blended to the scene of the most situated kind. On the banks of the Dnieper are a number of wooden houses that of the town, and are a wooden bridge. According to it contains about 100,000; it has no manufactures, on some commerce with Dantzic, and Riga. Articles of its trade are wax, hides, hogs planks, and Siberian furs. It is 100 miles N E of Novogorod, and 100 miles S of Kiev. Lon. 32 34 E, govern, on the N coast of the sea, between Cape Eribol. It runs so far that its extremity never be explored. It is the port of Turkey in Asia, one of the largest and the Levant. The good weather has caused it to be the most, after having been the most. It is the most frequented by merchants from almost all parts of the world, and the magazine of their merchandise. The Turks have 19 mosques, the Greeks two churches, the Jews eight synagogues, the Armenians one church, and the Latins three convents. There are three bishops, one Greek, the other Latin, and the third Armenian. The streets are more open, better paved, and the houses better built, than in other towns of the continent. The street of the Franks is the finest in Smyrna, and lies all along the harbour. It is eight days journey from Constantinople by land, 25 days from Aleppo, by the caravans, six from Cogni, seven from Catania, and six from Satalia. The caravans of Persia often bring 200 bales of silk in a year, besides drugs and cloths. The other commodities brought here, are thread made of goats hair, cotton yarn, cotton in bags, various kinds of drugs, and all sorts of carpets. The English and Dutch factors have protestant chapels, and taverns are as open here as in Europe. The fortifications consist of a fort, a castle, a mountain, and an old citadel. It is seated at the bottom of a large bay, 183 miles W by S of Constantinople. Lon. 27 19 E, lat. 38 28 N.

Snackerburg, a commercial town of Lower Saxony, in Brunswick-Lunen- burg, seated at the confluence of the Utent with the Elbe, 35 miles E by S of Danneberg. Lon. 12 22 E, lat. 53 10 N.

Snaith, a town in the W riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Friday, seated near the Aire, 22 miles S of York, and 174 N by W of London. Lon. 1 2 W, lat. 53 39 N.

Snetsham, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Friday, seated on a small inlet of the sea, 12 miles N N E of Lynn, and 111 N by E of London. Lon. 0 32 E, lat. 52 55 N.

Sniatin, a trading town of Little Poland, capital of Poketia, seated on the Pruth, eight miles E of Coloni, and 45 S E of Halitz. Lon. 26 7 E, lat. 48 44 N.

Snowdon, a famous mountain in Carnarvonshire, generally thought to be the highest in Britain, tho' some think that its height is equalled, and even exceeded, by mountains in Scotland. Its name signifies literally, the Hill of Snow, from snow and down. This is the most noted eminence in the whole region of the Welsh Hills, and may, with propriety, be styled the British Alps. The height of this mountain was measured in 1682, when it was computed to be 3720 feet; but more modern calculations make it only 3568, reckoning from the quay of Carnarvon to the highest peak. The stone that composes this mountain is excessively hard. Large coarse crystals, and frequently cubic pyrites are found in the fissures. An immense quantity of water rushes down its sides in numerous rivulets. It is boggy on the top, and has two lakes that abound with fish, particularly the char and the guinard. It was held sacred by the ancient Britons, as Parnassus was by the Greeks. From its summit may be seen a part of Ireland, of Scotland, and of Cumberland, Lancashire, Cheshire, and all North Wales.

Snow Hill, the capital of Worcester county, Maryland, situated on the E side of Pocomoke river, 20 miles E of Princess Ann, and 31 S by W of Dagsbury in Delaware state. This is a post town and port of entry, lying in lat. 38 12 N. and lon. 75 15 W.

Sienna, or Suane, and ancient episcopal town of Italy, in Tuscany. It is now reduced to a village, on account of the unwholesomeness of the air. It is seated on a mountain, near the river Flora, 30 miles S E of Sienna. Lon. 11 46 E, lat. 42 40 N.

Siene, a river of Hindoostan Proper, which rises on the S confines of Allahabad issuing from the same lake which is the source of the Nerbudda; and flowing in an opposite direction to that river 1500 miles it falls into the Ganges above Patna. This river in conjunction with the Nerbudda and the Ganges makes as it were an island of the southern part of Hindoostan.

Society Isles, islands in the Pacific Ocean, discovered by Captain Cook in 1769, situate between 150 37 and 152 0 W lon. and 16 10 and 16 55 S lat. They are seven in number, Huahine, Ulitea, Otaha, Balahola, Mouroua, Toobae, and Tabooyamatoo, or Saundor's island, which is here included, as being subject to Huahine. The soil, the productions, the people, their language, religion, customs, and manners, are so nearly the same as of Otaheite, that little need be added here on that subject. Nature has been equally bountiful in uncultivated plenty, and the inhabitants are as luxurious, and as indolent. A plantain branch is the emblem of peace, and changing names the greatest token of friendship. Their dances are more elegant, their dramatic entertainments have something of plot and consistency, and they exhibit temporary occurrences as the objects of praise or satire; so that the origin of ancient comedy may be already discerned among them. The people of Huancine are in general stouter and fairer than those of Otaheite, and this island is remarkable for its populousness and fertility. Those of Ulitea, on the contrary, are smaller and blacker, and much less orderly.

Captain Cook put on shore a Cape ewe at Bahabola, where a ram had been left by the Spaniards; and also an English boar and sow, with two goats, at Ulitea. If the valuable animals which have been transported thither from Europe should be suffered to multiply, no part of the world will equal these islands in variety and abundance of refreshments for future navigators.

Soconusco, a province of New Spain, in the audience of Mexico, 88 miles long, and nearly as much broad; bounded on the N by Chiapi, on the E by Guatemala, on the S by the Pacific Ocean, and on the W by Guaxaca. It is sheltered from the N winds by high mountains, which render the air exceeding hot; and the soil is not very fertile. There are few Spaniards settled here.

Soconusco, or Guevetlan, a town of New Spain, capital of a province of the same name, 440 miles S E of Mexico. Lon. 98 16 W, lat. 15 12 N.

Socotora, an island of Asia, between Arabia Felix and Africa, about 50 miles long and 22 broad. It abounds in fruit and cattle, and is particularly noted for its fine aloes, known by the name of Socotrine aloes. The natives are Mahometans, with a mixture of paganism, and they have a king who depends on Arabia.

Socozona, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Malivia, seated on the Seret, 32 miles S W of Jassy. Lon. 26 20 E, lat. 47 16 N.

Sohagepour, a town of Hindoostan Proper, in the province of Allahabad. Lon. 82 20 E, lat. 23 50 N.

Soham, a town in Cambridgeshire, with a market on Saturday, seated on a fen of the same name, near Solihull mere, which takes up 1000 acres of land. It is five miles S E of Ely, and 70 N by E of London. Lon. 0 14 E, lat. 52 21 N.

Soho, a village in Staffordshire, two miles N W of Birmingham. This village was founded by Mr. Bolton, who established a manufactory for every article common to the Birmingham trade, the plated ware usually made at Sheffield, and of elegant pieces of silver both light and massive. Here also are made the improved steam engines, now adopted in numerous manufactures and other concerns throughout the kingdom. The copper coinage of penny and two penny pieces issued by government in 1797, were stamped here; and in 1799, a coinage of half-penny and farthing pieces were manufactured here by a new and very ingenious apparatus.

Soignies, a town of Austrian Hainault, seated near a forest of the same name, on the river Senne, eight miles N E of Mons, and 17 W of Brussels. Lon. 4 14 E, lat. 53 29 N.

Soissonois, a late province of France, bounded on the N by Lyonnois, on the E by Champagne, on the S by La Brie, and on the W by Valois. It abounds in corn, wood, and pastures; and with the late province of Vermandois, now forms the department of Aisne.

Soissons, a city of France, in the department of Aisne, and late province of Soissonnois, anciently the capital of a kingdom of the same name, under the first race of the French monarchs. It contains 12,000 inhabitants, and is a bishop's see. Here St. Lewis, Philip the Bold, and Lewis XIV. were crowned. The fine cathedral has one of the most considerable chapters in the kingdom; and the bishop, when the archbishop of Rheims was absent, had a right to crown the king. The castle though ancient, is not that in which the kings of the first race resided. Soissons is seated in a fertile valley, on the river Aisne, 30 miles W by N of Rheims, and 60 N E of Paris. Lon. 3 18 E, lat. 49 23 N.

Soleure, or Solothurn, a canton of Switzerland, which holds the eleventh rank in the Helvetic confederacy, into which it was admitted in 1481. It stretches partly through the plain, and partly along the chains of the Jura, 36 miles in length, and 35 in breadth, and contains 50,000 inhabitants. The soil, for the most part is fertile in corn; and the districts within the Jura abound in excellent pastures. It is divided into 11 bailiwicks, the inhabitants of which are all Roman Catholics, except those of the bailiwick of Buckeburg, who profess the reformed religion. The government of this canton was entirely aristocratical before the French invaded Switzerland; they overturned the ancient government, and erected a democracy in its place.

Soleure, or Solothurn, an ancient town of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name. It contains 4000 inhabitants, and is seated on the Aar, which here expands into a noble river. Among the most remarkable objects, is the new church of St. Urs, finished in 1772; it is a noble edifice of a whitish grey stone, drawn from the neighbouring quarries, which admits a polish, and is a species of rude marble. Soleure is surrounded by regular stone fortifications, and is 20 miles N by E of Bern, and 27 S S W of Basle. Lon. 7 20 E, lat. 47 15 N.

Solfataria, a lake of Italy, in the Campagna of Rome near Trivoli; which empties itself by a whitish muddy stream into the Teverone, the ancient Anio; a vapour of a sulphureous smell arising from it as it flows. The waters of this lake had anciently a high medical reputation, but are no longer in esteem. In the middle are several floating islands, formed of matted serge and herbage, springing from a soil of dust and sand blown from the adjacent ground, and glued together by the bitumen which swims on the surface of the lake, and the sulphur with which its waters are impregnated. Some of these islands are 15 yards long, and will bear five or six people, who, by a pole, may move to different parts of the lake. From this lake issues a whitish muddy stream, which emits vapour of a sulphureous smell, till it reaches the Teverone.

Solfaterra, a mountain of Italy in the kingdom of Naples, and Terra di Lavoro. This mountain appears evidently to have been a volcano in ancient times; and the soil is yet so hot, that the workmen employed there in making alum need nothing else besides the heat of the ground for evaporating their liquors. In the plain within the crater, smoke issues from many parts, as also from its sides: here, by means of stones and tiles heaped over the crevices, through which the smoke passes, they collect in an awkward manner what they call sale armoniaco; and from the sand of the plain they extract sulphur and alum. The hollow sound produced by throwing a heavy stone on the plain of the crater of the Solfaterra, seems to indicate that it is supported by a sort of arched natural vault, and one is induced to think that there is a pool of water beneath this vault (which boils by the heat of a subterraneous fire still deeper), by the very moist stream that issues from the cracks in the plain of the Solfaterra, which, like that of boiling water, runs off a sword or knife, presented to it, in great drops. Near it is a small lake full of black thick water, which seems to be always boiling.

Solfwitzborg, a town of Sweden, in the province of Blekingen. Lon. 14 31 E, lat. 56 2 N.

Solithul, a town in Warwickshire, near which, to the W, is a triangular Danish camp, on an eminence, containing about nine acres. It is 20 miles N E of Worcester, and 107 N W of London.

Salingen, a town of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, and dutchy of Berg, seated near the river Wipper, 15 miles S E of Dusseldorf. Lon. 7 10 E, lat. 51 10 N.

Sousa, or Susa, a strong town of the kingdom of Tunis, in Africa, capital of a province of the same name, with a castle and a good harbour. It is a place of some trade, and seated on a high rock, near the sea, 65 miles S E of Tunis. Lon. 11 15 E, lat. 33 52 N.

Sou-tcheou-fou, a city in China, the second in the province of Kiang-nan, and one of the most agreeable in China; Europeans who have seen it, compare it to Venice, with this difference, that the latter is built in the sea, and Sou-tcheou-fou is intersected by canals of fresh water. There is not perhaps, in the universe, a country more delightful, either by the pleasantness of its situation; or the mildness of its climate; the air is so temperate, provisions so plentiful and cheap, the soil so fruitful, and the manners of the people so gentle, that this city is considered as the paradise of China. Above (say the Chinese authors) is the celestial paradise; but the paradise of this world is Sou-tcheou. To see the continual motion of its immense number of inhabitants, and the confusion caused every where by their commercial intercourse with strangers, one would be induced to believe that the trade of all the provinces centered in it. Southampton, a seaport and borough in Hampshire, with a market on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. It is conveniently situated between the Itchen and Test, which here flow into an inlet of the sea, called Southampton Water which is so deep that ships of 1500 tons have been launched here, and it is navigable almost to the head for vessels of considerable burthen. Both rivers are navigable for some way up the country, from whence, especially from the New Forest, vast quantities of timber are brought down, which lie on the shore here sometimes for two miles in length, and are fetched by the shipbuilders at Portsmouth dock, few ships being of late built at Southampton. It was formerly a port of great commerce, still possesses a trade in French and port wines, and has a particular connection with Guernsey and Jersey. It is a large and well built town, and contains five churches; is surrounded by walls and several watchtowers; and had a strong castle now in ruins. It is a county of itself, governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. It is a fashionable place of resort for sea-bathing; and it was on this beach that the Danish king Canute gave that striking reproof to his flattering courtiers, when the disobedient tide washed his feet. Two miles from this town is Woodmills, where is a very curious manufacture of ship-blocks, from which all the king's yards are supplied.

site to Northampton, and 96 miles W of Boston. Here is a post office, and the inhabitants are about 800.

Southwark, a borough in Surry which belongs to the metropolis, being under the jurisdiction of the corporation of London, who have an officer here called the bailiff of Southwark. It is called the Borough, by way of distinction, and is a populous place. It sends two members to parliament. It contains six parishes, a Roman catholic chapel, many places of worship for dissenters, and several charitable foundations, particularly St. Thomas' Hospital, City's Hospital, and the Magdalen Hospital; also the King's Bench and Marshalsea prisons, and a county gaol. See *Lon-

Suffolk, with a market on Thursday.
It is seated on a cliff, near a fine bay, with a harbour to the S, and the river Blythe, and a drawbridge on the W, is strongly seated, being almost surrounded with water, especially at very high tides. Here a much esteemed salt is made, and it has also a trade in corn, beer, and the herring fishery established here contributes to the advantage of the town. It is a corporation commonly called Sowle or Sole.

Sotra Hill, the most elevated hill in the mountainous ridge of Lammermuir, in the N part of Berwickshire in Scotland. In former times it was a noted sea mark. In this dreary part of the country there is scarce a tree or a bush, and few houses or villages worthy of mention. Some successful exertions, however, have been made to improve the southern side of this mountain, near the village of Channelkirk.

Soyotes, or Soyotes, the name of a people in Siberia, subject to Russia and China. They dwell in the higher part of the Sayane mountains, toward the S W border of the lake Baikal, on the frontiers of Mongolia. The Soyotes, both Chinese and Russian, are poor herdsmen, traversing uncultivated mountains, and drawing after them miserable huts, covered with the bark of the birch tree. Some few of them possess a small number of rein-deer; but with the greatest part dogs are the favourite animal. They live solely by the chase, fishing, and on wild roots; and their whole method of living is miserable and dirty. They are all pagan Schamanes; and differ in no respect from most of the other savages in Siberia as to dress, ceremonies and national manners.

Sow, a river in Staffordshire, which rises near Healy Castle, in the W part of the county, runs parallel to the river Trent till it falls into it near Stafford, below which it receives the Pink.

Spa, a town of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, and bishopric of Liege, famous for its mineral waters. It is situated at one end of a deep valley on the banks of a small rivulet, and is surrounded on all sides by high mountains. The sides of these mountains next to Spa are rude and uncultivated, presenting a rugged appearance as if shattered by the convulsions of earthquakes; but as they are strewn with tall oaks and abundance of shrubs, the country around forms a wild romantic, and beautiful landscape. The access to the town is very beautiful. The road winds over the mountains till it descends to their bottom, when it runs along a smooth valley for a mile or a mile and a half. The town consists of four streets in form of a cross, and contains about 400 inhabitants. Spa has no wealth to boast of. It can scarcely furnish the necessaries of life to its own inhabitants during the winter, and almost all the luxuries, which are requisite for the great concourse of affluent visitors during the summer, are carried from Liege by women. Its only source of wealth is its mineral waters. The names of the five principal wells are Pouhon, Gerondard, Saviniere, Watpotz, and Tummelot. The inhabitants are employed in making toys for strangers. Spa was taken by the French in 1794. It is seated in a valley, surrounded by mountains, 17 miles S E of Liege. Lon. 5 50 E, lat. 50 30 N.

Spain, a considerable kingdom of Europe; bounded on the N by the bay of Biscay; on the N E by the Pyrenees, which separate it from France; on the E S E, and S by the Mediterranean; on the S W by the Atlantic; and on the W by Portugal and the Atlantic. It is 700 miles long and 500 broad; and contains the provinces of Old and New Castile, Andalusia, Arragon, Estremadura, Galicia, Leon, Catalonia, Granada, Valencia, Biscay, the Asturias, Murcia, and Upper Navarre, some of which have been separate kingdoms. The air of Spain, during the months of June, July, and August, is excessively hot in the day-time; but the rest of the year it is pleasant and temperate. Even during the above months it is very cool in the shade; and so cold in the night, that it makes a traveller shiver; and in the day-time the violent heat continues only for about four or five hours. In the N on the mountains, and near the sea coast, the air is much less sultry in summer than in the S, especially in the lower parts of the country, and at a distance from the sea. It seldom rains here, except about the equinoxes: the frosts are very gentle towards the S; but on the mountains in the N and N E the air is very sharp in winter. Though there are some sandy barren mountains in the S, and many barren mountains in the N, yet in the greater part of the country, particularly in the valleys and plains, the soil is good, producing a great variety of rich wines, oil, and fruits; such as oranges, lemons, prunes, citrons, almonds, raisins, dates, tain above nine; and this, among other causes, is owing to the pride and laziness of the inhabitants, want of manufactures and good regulations, neglect of the mines and agriculture, the expulsion of the Moors, the peopling of America, heavy taxes, the great number of convents, excessive venery, and the consequent infecundity of both sexes. Their debauchery and sterility are partly occasioned by their way of living; for they make great use of spices, and drink a great deal of chocolate, and strong wine mixed with brandy. The causes assigned for the want of people in Spain will account in some measure for its poverty; notwithstanding it is computed that it receives one year with another, setting aside other sums, above 26 millions of pieces of eight, in registered gold and silver. As most of the manufactures that are sent to America are furnished by Britain, France, Italy, and Holland, so a great part of the treasure brought home by the galleons is paid to the merchants of those nations. In the last century, the revenues of Spain amounted to 32 or 33 millions of livres; but afterwards they were so reduced, that they did not exceed seven or eight millions. At present, the revenues of the crown arising in Spain are computed at five millions Sterling per annum, besides what arises from America. The silver mines there are inexhaustible; and of the produce of these, a fifth belongs to the king. The taxes in Spain are numerous and heavy. The land forces, in time of peace, are computed at about 80,000; and in time of war, must be much more numerous. Their navy at present cannot be ascertained. The language of this country, especially that spoken in Castile, which is by far the purest, approaches the nearest to the Latin of any language in Europe, mixed with Arabic words and terminations introduced by the Moors. The Spaniards in general are tall, their complexions swarthy, their countenances expressive. As to what regards the character of the Spaniards, they do not want either an inclination or capacity for the sciences; but have hardly an opportunity of acquiring any true learning or knowledge, at least in their schools and universities. They are admired for their secrecy, constancy, gravity, patience in adversity, and loyalty. They are also said to be true to their word, great enemies to lying, and so nice and jealous in point of honour, that they will stick at nothing to wipe off any stain that is cast upon it. The beauty of the ladies reigns chiefly in their novels and romances; in their persons they are small and slender. Jealousy is no longer the characteristic of a Spanish husband; the married ladies have here the cortejo, or male attendant, in the same manner as the Italians have their cicisbeos. The established religion is popery; and here the inquisition once reigned in all its horrors; but, although it still exists, it has been lately rendered, by the intervention of the royal authority, comparatively harmless. Spain, once the most free, is now one of the most despotic monarchies in Europe. They had once their cortes, or parliaments, which had great privileges: but though not absolutely abolished, they have no part in the government. They are assembled indeed, occasionally (as at the accession of the monarch) but merely as an appendage to the royal state, without power or any other consequence than what results from their individual rank. Madrid is the capital.

one of the Hebrides, a little to the W of Mull. It is one mile long, and half a mile broad. The whole S W end is supported by ranges of natural pillars mostly above 50 feet high, standing in colonades, according as the bays or points of land form themselves upon a firm basis of solid unformed rock, above these, the stratum which reaches to the soil or surface of the island, varied in thickness, as is the island itself fur-med into hills and valleys; each hill, which hangs over the columns below, forming an ample pediment; some of these above 60 feet in thickness, from the base to the point, formed by the sloping of the hill on each side, almost into the shape of those used in architecture. Here is also a cavern, called Fin-ma-coul, or Fingal's Cave, which extends 250 feet under ground. Its entrance is a natural arch, more than 100 feet high; it is supported on each side by ranges of columns, and roofed by the fragments of others that have been broken off in forming it. The mind can hardly form an idea more magnificent than such a space, supported on each side by ranges of columns; and roofed by the bottoms of those, which have been broken off in order to form it; between the angles of which a yellow stalagmitic matter has exuded, which serves to define the angles precisely; and at the same time vary the colour with a great deal of elegance, and to render it still more agreeable, the whole is lighted from without; so that the farthest extremity is very plainly seen from without, and the air within being agitated by the flux and reflux of the tides, is perfectly dry and wholesome, free entirely from the damp vapours with which natural caverns in general abound. This island is every where supported by basaltic rocks and pillars, superior in beauty and grandeur to those which form the Giants Causeway in Ireland.

Staffordshire, a county of England, 55 miles long and 42 broad. This is a long and narrow tract of country, ending in a point at the N and S extremities, having to the W the counties of Chester and Salop; to the E those of Derby and Warwick; and to the S Worcestershire. The rivers Dove and Trent form a natural boundary on the Derbyshire side; on the other sides it has no remarkable limits. It lies in the diocese of Litchfield and Coventry; contains five hundreds, one city, 17 market-towns, and 130 parishes; and sends 10 members to parliament. The N part of Staffordshire, called the Moorlands, is a wild hilly country, resembling the adjacent Derbyshire.
The valley along which the Trent glides is for the most part very fertile and beautiful, adorned with seats and plantations, and affording a variety of beautiful prospects. The middle and S parts of the county in general are agreeably diversified with wood, pasture, and arable. The great forest of Cank or Cannock, in the centre, once covered with oaks, is now, and has long been, a wide naked tract. At the S extremity the Clent-hills, Hagley, and its neighbourhood, are well known for the more romantic beauties which they possess. Coal is abundant in various parts of Staffordshire; particularly in the moorlands and the neighbourhood of Newcastle; and also about Wolver-hampton, at Bilston and Wednesbury, whence Birmingham is chiefly supplied with its fuel. The N and S parts also contain much iron ore. This county has long been noted, and is now particularly famous, for its potteries; the chief seat of which is near Newcastle, in a line of villages extending about 10 miles. The S extremity of the county is enlivened by various branches of the hardware manufacture, in which it participates with the neighbouring Birmingham. The trade of this county is in a peculiar manner assisted by the grand system of canal navigation, of which it is, as it were, the centre, and which is carried through its whole length. The grand trunk, as it has been ingeniously termed, enters the north of the county from Cheshire, and after piercing Harecastle-hill, by a subterraneous passage of a mile and a half in length, passes through the potteries, and thence southwards across the Trent almost to Litchfield, from whence it turns short over the Trent again, and over the Dove, in its way to mix with the Trent at Wilden-ferry. From the neighbourhood of Stallord it sends off a branch, which runs directly southwards by Pinkridge, and near Wolverhampton, to join the Severn near Kidderminster. With this a canal from Birmingham and another from Stourbridge communicate. Thus the great ports of Bristol, Liverpool, and Hull, are all accessible to the various products and manufactures of Staffordshire. The principal rivers are the Trent, Dove, Sow, Churnet, Stour, Peak and Manyfold.

Stiria, a duchy of Germany, in the circle of Austria, bounded on the N by the archduchy of Austria, on the E by Hungary, on the S by Carniola, and on the W by Carinthia and Salzburg. It is 125 miles long, and contains 200,000 inhabitants. Though a mountainous country, there is much land fit for tillage, and the soil is fertile. The mountains are clothed with oak, beech, and pine; every kind of grain is well cultivated, and the white wine is very pleasant. It contains mines of very good iron, whence the arms made here are in great esteem. The inhabitants are zealous worshippers of the Virgin Mary. Gratz is the capital.

S T I

Stirling, the capital of Stirlingshire, situated on the S side of the Forth, on a hill, which rising from the E, terminates abruptly in a steep rock, the site of the castle, resembling, on a smaller scale, the appearance of Edinburgh. The castle is of great antiquity, but its origin is not exactly known. The Scottish kings often resided here, and almost the whole minority of James VI. was spent here, under his tutor Buchanan. In the last rebellion, it was successfully defended by general Blackeney. The outside of the palace is curiously encircled with various grotesque figures. The church is a magnificent Gothic structure, and serves for two separate places of worship. The view of the river Forth from the castle is remarkable on account of its windings, for though the distance between Stirling and Alloa be only four miles by land, yet by water it is above twenty. In the town and its neighbourhood are manufactures of carpets, shalons, and other woollen stuffs; that of tartans, formerly very flourishing, is now on the decline. Stirling, from its commodious situation, commands the pass between the N and S part of Scotland. It is 30 miles N W of Edinburgh. Lon. 4 59 W, lat. 56 6 N.

Stirlingshire, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N by the river Forth, which divides it from Perthshire, and Clackmannanshire; on the N E by the mouth of the Forth; on the S E by Linlithgowshire, on the S by Lanarkshire; and on the S W and W by Dumfriesshire. It is about 25 miles from E to W, and 15 from N to S. The S part of this country is mountainous, but that part which is near the Forth is fertile, and abounds with coal. This county produces corn, pasture, black cattle, sheep, and horses; besides salmon and other fish from the rivers. The Forth, which is the most famous, though not the largest river in Scotland, runs from W to E into the Firth of Forth, receiving a great number of smaller streams; besides which, this country is watered by the Carron, Glazert, and Avon waters; and has the advantage of the new canal from Glasgow running through it, to the Carron mouth. Its principal towns are, Stirling with its fine castle, Falkirk, Kilayth, and Kirkintulloch.

Stirum, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Berg, seated on the Roer, 12 miles N of Dusseldorp. Lon. 6 52 E, lat. 41 24 N.

St. Leonard's, a post town in Calvert county, Maryland, situated on the W side of Chesapeak bay, about ten miles N W of Drumpoint, 12 N E of the town of Benedict on Potowmack, and 58 from Washington.

Stockerau, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Austria. It is situated on the Danube, and is six miles N W of Neuburg.

Stockholm, the capital of Sweden, in a situation remarkable for its romantic scenery. This capital which is very long and irregular, occupies, besides two peninsulas, seven small rocky islands, scattered in the Maeler, in the streams which issue from that lake, and in a bay of the Baltic. A variety of contrasted views are formed by numberless rocks of granite, rising boldly from the surface of the water, partly bare and partly craggy, and partly dotted with houses, or feathered with wood. The harbour is an inlet of the Baltic; the water is as clear as crystal, and of such depth, that ships of the largest burden can approach the quay, which is very large, and lined with spacious buildings. Towards the sea, about two or three miles from the town, the harbour is contracted into a narrow strait, and winding among high rocks disappears from the sight; and the prospect is terminated by distant hills overspread with forest. It is far beyond the power of words, or of the pencil, to delineate these singular views. The central island, from which the city derives its name, and the Ritterholm, are the handsomest parts of the town. At the extremity of the harbour, several streets rise one above another, in the form of an amphitheatre; and the royal palace, a magnificent building, crowns the summit. Except in the suburbs, where several houses are of wood, painted red, the generality of the buildings are of brick. There are here an academy of sciences, and an arsenal. Stockholm is 200 miles N E of Copenhagen, and 900 N E of London. Lon. 18 9 E, lat. 59 20 N.

Stockport, a town in Cheshire with a market on Friday. It has a considerable manufacture of cotton and printed goods, and is seated on the Mersey, six miles S of Manchester, and 175 N W of London. Lon. 2 18 W, lat. 55 33 N.

Stolhoffen, a town of Germany, in Suabia, in the marquisate of Baden, seated in a morass, near the Rhine, eight miles S W of Baden, and 12 N E of Strasburg. Lon. 8 10 E, lat. 48 41 N.

Stolpen, a town of Germany, in Upper Saxony, in Prussian Pomerania, seated in a valley, on a river of the same name, 50 miles N E of Colberg, and 66 N W of Dantzic. Lon. 16 85 E, lat. 54 32 N.

Stone, a town in Staffordshire, with a market on Tuesday, seated on the Trent, seven miles N by W of Stafford, and 140 N W of London. Lon. 2 6 W, lat. 52 54 N.

Stoneham, North, a village in Hants, seated on the Itchen, three miles N E of Southampton. In its church is an elegant monument erected in 1783 to the memory of Admiral Hawke.

Stonehenge, a remarkable heap of stones, on Salisbury Plain, six miles N E of Salisbury. It consists of several very large stones, placed on one another; and is supposed to have been a temple of the ancient Druids, because it is in a circular form, and seems to have been much more regular than it appears to be at present. It has puzzled many diligent inquirers to account for the laying of those enormous stones one upon another for they are so heavy, that it is thought no method now known is sufficient to have raised those that lie across, to that height.

Stonehaven, the county town of Kincardineshire, Scotland; with a good harbour secured by a stone pier. Near it stands Dunnoter castle on a lofty perpendicular rock, almost surrounded by the sea. Not far hence, is a precipitous cliff, called Fowl's Henge, remarkable for the resort of the birds called kittiwakes, the young of which are thought a delicacy and are much sought after in the hatching season. In this town is a manufacture of canvass and some trade in dried fish and oil. It is 14 miles S by W of Aberdeen.

Stonington, a post town in New London county, Connecticut; lying on Long Island Sound, 15 miles eastward of New London, and near the W line of Rhode Island; in lat. 41° 30' N, and long. 72° W. The township contained 5437 souls at last enumeration.

Strasbourg, a commercial city of France, in the department of Lower Rhine, and late province of Alsace. It is situate a quarter of a league from the Rhine; and the river Ill runs through it, and forms many canals.
There are six bridges of communication between the different quarters of the city; and the inhabitants, exclusive of the garrison, are computed to be 46,000. The principal structures are made of a red stone, dug from the quarry, which are along the Rhine. This town formerly imperial, was taken by Lewis XIV. in 1691. The citadel and fortifications, which he constructed, have been so much augmented, that Strasbourg may be considered as one of the strongest places in Europe. It was conferred to France by the peace of Ryswick in 1697. The town is entered by six gates. Before the French revolution it was an archiepiscopal see. In the cathedral is a clock which shews the motions of the constellations, the revolutions of the sun and moon, the days of the weeks, the hours, &c. Another remarkable circumstance in this cathedral is its pyramidal tower, which is 549 feet high. Here is a school of artillery, and, in one of the Lutheran churches the mausoleum of Marshal Saxe. Strasbourg is 55 miles N of Brasil, and 255 E of Paris. Lon.

Stromboli, the most northern of the Lipari islands. It is a volcano, which rises in a conical form above the surface of the sea. On the E side, it has three or four little craters ranged near each other, not at the summit, but on the declivity, nearly at two thirds of its height. It is inhabited, notwithstanding its fires; but care is taken to avoid the proximity of the crater, which is yet much to be feared. Of all the volcanoes recorded in history, Stromboli seems to be the only one that burns without ceasing. Etna and Vesuvius often lie quiet for many months, and even years, without the least appearance of fire; but Stromboli is continually flaming, and for ages past, has been looked upon as the great lighthouse of the Mediterranean Sea. Suez, a seaport of Egypt, with a castle, seated at the N end of the W gulf of the Red Sea, called the gulf of Suez. This gulf is separated from the Mediterranean, by an isthmus, 125 miles over, which joins Asia to Africa. The town is surrounded by a sandy country, and is without water. It is crowded with people, when the Turkish galleys arrive there, but at other times is almost deserted; and the harbour is too shallow to admit ships of great burden. It is 65 miles E of Cairo. Lon. 32 45 E, lat. 30 2 N.

Suffield, a post town in Hartford county, Connecticut; situated on the W bank of Connecticut river, 18 miles N of Hartford, and 55 N by E of New Haven. In 1800 the township contained 2686 inhabitants.

Suffolk, a county of England, 58 miles long and 28 broad; bounded on the W by Cambridgeshire, on the N by Norfolk, on the S by Essex, and on the E by the German Ocean. It lies in the diocese of Norwich; contains 22 hundreds, 28 market-towns, and 375 parishes; and sends 16 members to parliament. Suffolk is in general a level country, without any considerable eminences. In respect to soil it may be divided into three portions. The sea-coast, to some distance inland, is for the most part sandy, and is distributed into arable land, heaths and marshes. The arable produces excellent barley; and towards the S E great quantities of carrots are grown. The heaths afford extensive sheep-walks; and the marshes feed numbers of cattle. The soil has in many parts been much improved by shell-marl, (called here crang) of which vast beds have been discovered, particularly in the neighbourhood of Woodbridge. The sea shore is chiefly composed of loamy cliffs, which are continually falling down, undetermined by the waves. Hence great changes have been effected on this coast; and some towns, once considerable, as Dunwich and Aldborough, have been almost washed away by the sea. About Orfordness there are various salt-water creeks and inlets, which form extensive marshes. The internal part of the county, from N to S, and across quite to the S W angle, is in general a strong clayey soil, fertile to a great degree in all the objects of husbandry. A part of it called high Suffolk, has a soil so stiff and tenacious, that its roads in wet seasons are scarcely passable. The great product of this tract is butter, which is exported to London and other parts in great quantities. Much cheese too is made here; but as it is only supplementary to the butter, it has gained, almost proverbially, the character of the worst in England. Besides grain of all sorts, beans are grown abundantly in the middle parts of Suffolk. Hemp is likewise cultivated to a considerable extent, and spun and woven on the spot into cloth of various degrees of fineness. Some hops are grown not far from Sudbury. The N W portion of Suffolk is an open country, and forms a considerable part of the wide tract of barren heath which occu-

300 the township contains.

County of England, 58 miles long; bounded on the W by Shire, on the N by Norfolk, on the E by Essex, and on the S by the Ocean. It lies in the north; contains 22 hundred-ports, and 375 parishes; 16 members to parliament. It is in general a level country, but has some considerable eminences. The soil is in general of a good quality, but in some parts it is sandy, and in others it is marly. It produces excellent barley, and the S E great quantities of wheat are grown. The heaths are very fertile; and the numbers of cattle. The many parts been much improved by shell-marl, (called here hich vast beds have been particularly in the neighborhood of Woodbridge. The sea is composed of lousy cliffs, continually falling down, under the waves. Hence great damage has been effected on this coast, since the towns, once considerable, such as Orford, and Aldborough, most washed away by the Orfordness there are water-creeks and inlets, which are very fertile. The internal county, from N to S, and to the S W angle, is in general clayey soil, fertile to a degree in all the objects of husbandry; it called high Suffolk soil so stiff and tenacious, and in wet seasons are scarce.

The great product of this county, which is exported to other parts in great quantities, is cheese; too is made here: only supplementary to the wool gained, almost proverbially the worst in England. Grain of all sorts, beans, and hemp, are raised abundantly in the middle of the county. Hemp is likewise cultivated to a considerable extent, and spun into the spot into cloth of various fineness. Some hops are raised near Sudbury. The N of Suffolk is an open country, and a considerable part of it is barren heath which occurs so much of this quarter of the kingdom. It is chiefly in warrens and sheep-walks, but interspersed with poor arable land. The extreme angle, bordering on the Ely fens, partakes of their nature. On the whole, this county is one of the most thriving with respect to agriculture, and its farmers are opulent and skilful. The culture of turnips prevails here almost as much as in Norfolk. They have a very excellent breed of draught horses, middle sized, and remarkably short-made, capable of vast exertions. The principal rivers are the Stour, Waveny, Little Ouse, Larke, Deben, Gipping, and Orwell. Ipswich is the principal town; but the assizes are held at Bury St. Edmund's.

Suffolk, a post town, and the principal seat of justice, in Nansemond county, Virginia; lying on the S E side of Nansemond river, 29 miles S W of Norfolk, and 65 S E of Petersburg on the Appomattox. It has about 350 inhabitants.

Sugelmezza, or Sigelmezza, a province of Barbary, bounded on the S by the kingdom of Tafilet, and on the N by Mount Atlas. It is about 100 miles in length; abounds in corn, dates, and other fruits, and has mines of iron, lead, and antimony. The government is a republic. The capital, of the same name, is seated on the Zig, 150 miles N N E of Tafilet. Lon. 5 5 W, lat. 29 40 N.

Sultz, a town of France, in the department of Upper Rhine, with a medicinal spring, 12 miles S W of Colmar.

Sultzbach, a town of Germany, in the palatinate of Bavaria, with a castle, subject to the duke of Neuburg-Sultzbach. It is 10 miles N W of Amberg, and 32 N of Ratisbon. Lon. 11 56 E, lat. 49 38 N.

Sultzburg, a town of Germany in the circle of Suabia, and in the margravate of Baden-Durlach, with a fine palace. It is seated in a territory, fertile in good wine, eight miles S W of Friburg. Lon. 7 30 E, lat. 47 54 N.

Sumatra, an island of Asia, the most western of the Sunda Islands, and constituting on that side the boundary of the Eastern Archipelago. Its general direction is nearly N W and S E. The equator divides it into almost equal parts, the one extremity being in 5 33 N, and the other in 5 56 S lat. Acheen Head, at the N extremity of the island, is in lon. 95 54 E. It lies exposed on the S W side to the Indian Ocean; the N point stretches into the bay of Bengal; to the N E it is divided from the peninsula of Malacca by the straits of that name; to the E by the straits of Banca, from the island of that name; to the S E by the commencement of what are called the Chinese Seas; and on the S by the straits of Sunda, which separate it from the island of Java. It is about 900 miles in length, but from 100 to 150 only in breadth. No account had been given of this island by any European till the year 1778, when Mr. Charles Miller (son of the late botanical gardener) published an account of the manners of a particular district. These were the Battas, a people who live in the interior parts, called the Cassia Country. They differ from all the other inhabitants in language, manners, and customs. They eat the prisoners whom they take in war, and hang up their skulls as trophies in their houses. He observes, however, that human flesh is eaten by them in terrorem, and not as common food, though they prefer it to all others, and speak with peculiar raptures of the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. They expressed much surprise that the white people did not kill, much less eat their prisoners. From this country the greatest part of the cassia that is sent to Europe is procured. It abounds also with the camphire trees, which constitute the common timber in use; and in these trees the camphire is found native, in a concrete form. In 1783, Mr. Marsden, who had been secretary to the president and council of Fort Marlborough, published a history of Sumatra, with very copious particulars of the island. He represents it as surpassed by few in the beautiful indulgences of nature. A chain of high mountains runs through its whole extent; the ranges in many parts being double and treble; their altitude, though great, is not sufficient to occasion their being covered with snow during any part of the year. Between these ridges are extensive plains, considerably elevated above the surface of the maritime lands. In these the air is cool; and from this advantage they are esteemed the most eligible portion of the country, and the best inhabited, and the most cleared from woods, which elsewhere, in general throughout Sumatra, cover both hills and valleys with an eternal shade. Here too are found many large and beautiful lakes, that facilitate much the communication between the different parts. The heat of the air is far from being so intense as might be expected from a country occupying the middle of the Torrid Zone; and it is more temperate than many regions within the Tropics; the thermometer at the most sultry hour, about two in the afternoon, generally fluctuating between 82 and 85 degrees. Mr. Marsden divides the inhabitants into Malays, Acheuese, Battas, Lampoons, and Rejangs; and he takes the latter as his standard of description, with respect to the persons, manners, and customs of the inhabitants. They are rather below the middle stature; their bulk in proportion; their limbs for the most part slight; but well shaped, and particularly small at the wrists and ankles; and, upon the whole, they are grace fully formed. Their hair is strong, and of a shining black. The men are beardless, great pains being taken to render them so when boys, by rubbing their chins with a kind of quicklime. Their complexion is properly yellow, wanting the red tinge that constitutes a copper or tawny colour. They are in general lighter than the Mestees, or half-breed, of the rest of India; those of the superior class, who are not exposed to the rays of the sun, and particularly their women of rank, approaching to a degree of fairness. If beauty consisted in this one quality, some of them would surpass our brunettes in Europe. The major part of the females are ugly, many of them even to disgust; yet among them are some whose appearance is strikingly beautiful, whatever composition of person, features, and complexion, that sentiment may be the result of. Some of the inhabitants of the hilly parts are observed to have the swelled neck or goitre; but they attempt no remedy for it, as these wens are consistent with the highest health. The rites of marriage among the Sumatrans consist simply in joining the hands of the parties, and pronouncing them man and wife without much ceremony, excepting the entertainment which is given upon the occasion by the father of the girl. The customs of the Sumatrans permit their having as many wives as they can purchase, or afford to maintain; but it is extremely rare that an instance occurs of their having more than one, and that only among a few of the chiefs. This continence they owe, in some measure to their poverty. The dictates of frugality are more powerful with them than the irregular calls of appetite, and make them decline an indulgence from which their law does not restrain them. Mothers carry their children, not on the arm as our nurses do, but straddling on the hip, and usually supported by a cloth which ties in a knot on the opposite shoulder. The children are nursed but little; are not confined by any swathing or bandages; and being suffered to roll about the floor, soon learn to walk and shift for themselves. When cradles are used, they swing suspended from the ceilings of the rooms. The Sumatrans are so fond of cock-fighting, that a father on his deathbed has been known to desire his son to take the

When cradles swing suspended from the rooms. The Suma- id of cock-fighting, that is deathbed has been ve his son to take the first opportunity of matching a cock for a sum equal to his whole property, under a blind conviction of its being invulnerable. When a cock is killed or runs, the other must have sufficient spirit and vigour left to peck at him three times on his being held up to him for that purpose, or it becomes a drawn battle; and sometimes an experienced cocker will place the head of his vanquished bird in such an uncouth situation as to terrify the other, and render him unable to give this proof of victory. The wild beasts of Sumatra are tigers, elephants, rhinoceroses, bears, and monkeys. The tigers prove to the inhabitants both in their journeys and even their domestic occupations most destructive enemies. The number of people annually slain by these rapacious tyrants of the woods is almost incredible. Whole villages have been depopulated by them; yet from a superstitious prejudice, it is with difficulty they are prevailed upon, by a large reward which the India Company offers, to use methods of destroying them, till they have sustained some particular injury in their own family or kindred. The size and strength of the species which prevails on this island is prodigious. They are said to break with a stroke of their fore paw the leg of a horse or a buffalo; and the largest prey they kill is without difficulty dragged by them into the woods. This they usually perform on the second night, being supposed on the first to gratify themselves with sucking the blood only. Time is by this delay afforded to prepare for their destruction, either by shooting them, or placing a vessel of water strongly impregnated with arsenic near the carcass, which is fastened to a tree to prevent its being carried off. The tiger having satiated himself with the flesh, is prompted to assuage his thirst with the tempting liquor at hand, and perishes in the indulgence. Alligators likewise occasion the loss of many inhabitants, frequently destroying the people as they bathe in the river, according to their regular custom, and which the perpetual evidence of the risk attending it cannot deter them from. A superstitious idea of their sanctity also preserves them from molestation, although with a look of sufficient strength, they may be taken without much difficulty. The other animals of Sumatta are buffaloes, a small kind of horses, goats, hogs, deer, bulllocks, and hog-deer. This last is an animal somewhat larger than a rabbit, the head resembling that of a hog, and its shanks and feet like those of the deer. The bezoar stone found on this animal has been valued at ten times its weight in gold; it is of a dark brown colour, smooth on the outside; and the coat being taken off, it appears still darker, with strings running underneath the coat: it will swim on the top of the water. If it be infused in any liquid, it makes it extremely bitter; the virtues usually attributed to this stone are cleansing the stomach, creating an appetite, and sweetening the blood. Of birds they have a greater variety than of beasts. The coo-ow, or Sumatran pheasant, is a bird of uncommon beauty. They have storks of prodigious size, parrots, dung-hill fowls, ducks, the largest cocks in the world, woodpigeons, doves, and a great variety of small birds, different from ours, and distinguished by the beauty of their colours. Of their reptiles, they have lizards, flying lizards, and cameleons. The island's warms with insects, and their varieties are no less extraordinary than their numbers. Rice is the only grain that grows in the country; they have sugar-canes, beans, peas, radishes, yams, potatoes, pumpkins, and several kinds of pot-herbs unknown to Europe; and here are to be found most of the fruits to be met with in other parts of the East Indies, in the greatest perfection. Indigo, Brasil-wood, two species of the bread-fruit tree, pepper, benjamin, coffee, and cotton are likewise the produce of this island, as well as cassia and camphire mentioned above. Here also is the cabbage tree and silk cotton tree; and the forest contains a great variety of valuable species of wood, as ebony, pine, sandal, eagle or aloes, teak, manchineel, and iron-wood, and also the banyan tree. Gold, tin, iron, copper, and lead, are found in the country; and the former is supposed to be as plentiful here as in Peru or Mexico. The finest gold and gold dust are found in the country of Limong, immediately contiguous to the presidency of Fort Marlborough, to which the merchants repair annually for the purchase of opium, and such other articles as they may be in want of, and give for them gold of so pure a nature, as to contain little or no alloy. The native indolence of the Malay disposition prevents them from collecting more than is sufficient to supply the few and simple wants of a race of men as yet unenlightened by civilization and science, and ignorant of the full extent of the advantages of the country they inhabit. The roads leading to this golden country are almost impervious; affording only a scanty path to a single traveller, where whole nights may be passed in the open air, exposed to the malignant influence of a hostile climate, in a country infested by the most ferocious wild beasts. These are circumstances that have hitherto checked curiosity; but perseverance and studied precaution will surmount the obstacles they furnish, and such discoveries might be made as would amply compensate for the difficulties leading to them. The gold merchants who come from the neighbouring and less rich countries, give us such accounts of the facility of procuring gold, as border nearly on the marvellous, and would be altogether incredible, if great quantities of that metal produced by them did not in some degree evince the certainty of their accounts. The English and Dutch have factories on this island; the principal one of the former being Fort Marlborough, on the S W coast. The original natives of Sumatra are Pagans; but it is to be observed, that when the Sumatrans, or any of the natives of the eastern islands, learn to read the Arabic character, and submit to circumcision, they are said to become Malays; the term Malay being understood to mean Musselman. See Acheen.

Sunart, Loch, an inlet of the sea, in Argyleshire, which divides the island of Mull from the district of Morven.

Sunbury, a post town in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania; situated on the E side of Susquehanna river, two miles below Northumberland, 56 N of Harrisburg, and 164 N W of Philadelphia, containing about 700 inhabitants.

Sunbury, a post town and port of entry, in Liberty county, Georgia; lying on the S side of N. Newport river, 45 miles S by E of Savannah, in lat. 31° 43' N, and lon. 81° 18' W. The harbour is formed and defended from the weather by the interposition of Catherine Island, which lies off its entrance.

Sunk Island, an island within the mouth of the Humber, about 9 miles in circuit, separated from Yorkshire by a channel, near two miles broad.

Sunning, a village in Berkshire, situated on the Thames, two miles N E of Reading. It was once an episcopal see.

Sunning Hill, a village in Berkshire, in Windsor Forest. It is noted for its medicinal wells, which are efficacious in paralytic cases, and is six miles S S W of Windsor.

Sunda Islands, islands in the Indian Ocean, near the straits of Sunda. The chief of them are Borneo, Java, and Sumatra.

Sunderbunds, or The Woods, a tract of country, consisting of that part of the Delta of the Ganges, in Hindoostan Proper, and in the soubah of Bengal, which borders on the sea. It is composed of a labyrinth of rivers and creeks, all of which are salt, except those that immediately communicate with the principal arm of the Ganges. In extent it is equal to the principality of Wales. "It is so completely enveloped in woods and infested with tigers," says major Rennell, "that if any attempts have ever been made to clear it (as is reported,) they have hitherto miscarried." Here salt, in quantities equal to the whole consumption of Bengal and its dependencies, is made and transported with equal facility; and here also is found an inexhaustible store of timber for boat-building. The breadth of the lower part of this Delta is upwards of 180 miles, to which, if we add that of the two branches of the river that

Sunderland, a seaport in the bishopric of Durham. It is a large and thriving town, which, for the exportation of coals, is next in consequence on this side of the kingdom to Newcastle. Its port, on the mouth of the Were, though improved from its former state, will not admit the largest ships; but vessels can get out to sea from hence much more readily than from the Tyne. The coals are brought down the Were from numerous pits near its banks. There are several glass-houses at Sunderland; and it also exports grindstones and other articles. It is 13 miles N E of Superior Lake, a lake of North America, one half belonging to the United States, and one half to Great Britain, so called from its being the largest on that continent. According to the French charts it is 1560 miles in circumference. It contains many islands; two of them very large, especially Ile Royale, which is 100 miles long, and in many places, 40 broad. Upward of 30 rivers enter it, some of which are of considerable size. It abounds with trout and sturgeon. Storms affect it as much as they do the Atlantic Ocean.

It discharges its water from the S E corner, through the straits of St.
Marie, into Lake Huron. The Indians suppose the islands in it to be the residence of the Great Spirit.

Supino, an ancient town of Naples, in Sur. See Sour.

Sura, a town of Sweden, in the province of Westmanland.

Surat, a city and seaport of the Dec-can of Hindoostan. It is said to have 200,000 inhabitants, and its trade is very considerable. In this city are many different religions, for there are Mahometans of several sects, many sorts of Gentoos, and Jews and Christians of various denominations. The Mahome-tans at Surat are not by far, so strict as they are in Arabia, or in other Turkish countries, nor are the distinctions of tribes among the Hindoos who reside here, strictly observed. Towards the middle of the last century this place was only the resort of a few merchants, who, under the shelter of an old insignificant castle, laid the first foundations of a city, now almost as large and fully as populous as London within the walls, and containing many fine buildings of Indian architecture, which is partly Gentoo and partly Morisque. Those of the greatest note are so contrived, that the gateway is defensible against any sudden irruption of a few armed men.
The private apartments lie backwards for the conveniency of the women, of whom the Moors are remarkably jealous. During the intense heats of summer they have country retirements a little way out of town, where they reside, or go in parties to amuse themselves. The streets are irregularly laid out; but have one property which renders it agreeable to walk in them, viz. that a competent width being left at bottom, the upper stories of the houses project over one another in such a manner, that people may with ease converse from them; by which means the street is agreeably shaded, at the same time that a proper ventilation is not impeded, but rather promoted. The shops, notwithstanding the vast trade carried on in this great and populous city, have a very mean appearance, owing to the dealers keeping their goods in warehouses, and selling by samples. No place is better supplied with provisions, than the city of Surat, where its communication with the country remains open. Besides the unbounded importation, by which every article is brought here in great abundance, the natural productions of the soil are excellent, though less cheap than in other parts of India, as at Bengal especially; yet in that place, though the cattle and poultry are bought originally at a very low rate, they turn out very dear by the time they are fed for the table. Here, however, all kinds of eatables may be had at a reasonable price, ready for immediate use, and as good as can be found any where. The wheat of Surat is famous all over India for its singular substance, whiteness, and taste; and its sallads and roots are likewise of an excellent quality. There are also many kinds of wild-fowl, and other game to be had at an easy rate; but for wines and spirituous liquors they depend most on importation. Surat was surrounded with a wall in a short time after it had assumed the form of a town. The fortification, however, was meant only to prevent the incursions of the Mahrattas, who had twice pillaged it; so that the place was by no means capable of standing any regular siege. Even the castle appears but a poor defence, being mounted with cannon here and there, without any order, or without any thing like an attempt towards military architecture. One thing singular in Surat is, that, though there is no hospital for human beings, there is an extensive establishment of this nature for sick or maimed animals. When the Europeans turn out an old horse, or any other domestic animal to perish, as useless, the Hindoos voluntarily assume the care of it, and place it in this house, which is full of infirm decrepid cows, sheep, rabbits, hens, pigeons, &c. The charitable Hindoos keep a physician to look after these animals. The country round Surat is fertile, except toward the sea, which is sandy and barren. Before the English E. Indian Company obtained possession of Bombay, the presidency of their affairs on the coast of Malabar was at Surat; and they had a factory established there. Even after the presidency was transferred to Bombay, the factory was continued. The Great Mogul had then an officer here, who was styled his admiral, and received a revenue called the tanka, of the annual value of three lacks of rupees, arising from the rents of adjacent lands, and the taxes levied at Surat. The tyranny of this officer towards the merchants, induced the E. India Company, in 1759, to fit out an armament, which dispossessed the admiral of the castle; and soon after, the possession of this castle was confirmed to them by the court of Delhi. They obtained, moreover, the appointment to the post of admiral, and were constituted receivers of the tanka, by which their authority in this place became supreme. Surat is situate on the confines of Guzerat, 20 miles up the river Tappi, and 177 N of Bombay. Lon. 72 48 E, lat. 21 10 N.

Sure, a river of Ireland in Tipperary, which flows into St. George's Channel.

Surgooja, a town of the peninsula of Hindoostan, 180 miles S S W of Patna.

Surinam, a country of South America, in Guiana, extending 75 miles along a river of the same name. It abounds with game and singular animals of different kinds; the toad, in particular, being remarkable for its enormous size and ugly form. It produces fruits, indigo, sugar, cotton, tobacco, gums, and wood for dyeing. The woods are full of monkeys, and it is said, there are serpents 30 feet long. This country was ceded by the English to the Dutch, for the province of New York, in 1674, and was taken again by the English in August 1799. The capital is Paramaribo.

Suringia, a commercial town of Japan, in the island of Nippon, capital of a province of the same name, with a castle, where the emperors formerly resided. Lon. 139 5 E, lat. 39 30 N.

Surry, a county of England, 37 miles long, and 27 broad; bounded on the N by Middlesex, on the E by Kent, on the S by Sussex, and on the W by Hampshire and Berks. It lies in the diocese of Winchester; contains 13 hundreds, 11 market towns (including Southwark), and 140 parishes; and sends 14 members to parliament. The air is generally temperate and healthy. Across the middle of the county, E to W, runs a ridge of irregular hills, abounding in chalk, and intermixed with wide open downs and sandy heaths. The Banstead downs in this tract are noted for feeding the sweetest mutton. It produces corn, boxwood, walnuts, hops, and fillers earth. The principal rivers besides the Thames (which is the boundary of this county on the N) are the Mole, Wey, and Wandie. The lent assizes are held at Kingston, and the summer assizes at Guilford and Croydon alternately.

Suraoty, a town of Hindoostan Proper, 114 miles N W of Delhi.

Sus, a river of Morocco, which forms the S boundary of the empire of Morocco and enters the Atlantic at Messa. It fertilizes its banks by annual inundations.

Sus, one of the three grand divisions of the empire of Morocco, bounded on the W by the Atlantic, on the N by Mount Atlas, on the E by Gesula, and on the S by the river Sus. It is a flat country, abounding in corn, sugar-canes, and dates. The inhabitants, who are chiefly Archers, Berbers, or ancient natives, are distinguished by their industry; and many of them, who live in towns, become opulent and are much more polite than the natives of Fez and Morocco. In the mountainous part they are entirely free, and are governed by their own chiefs.

Susa, a seaport of Tunis. See Susaa.

Susa, a strong town of Piedmont, capital of a marquisate of the same name, with a fort. Here is a rich convent, called the abbey of St. Just, and a triumphal arch to the honour of Augustus Cesar. It is seated on the Doria, among pleasant mountains, and is called the key of Italy, being the principal passage out of France into Italy. It was taken by the French in 1704, but restored to the duke of Savoy in 1707. It is 30 miles N W of Turin. Lon. 7 24 E, lat. 45 20 N.

Susdal, an archiepiscopal town of Russia, in the government of Volodmir, capital of a dutchy of the same name. It is built of wood, and seated on the Khasma, 90 miles N E of Moscow. Lon. 40 25 E, lat. 56 26 N.

Susquehanna, a river of North America, which has its source in Lake Ontario, crosses three times the line which divides the state of New York from Pennsylvania, and empties itself into the head of the bay of Chesapeak.

Sussex, a county of England, 70 miles in length, and 28 where broadest; bounded on the N by Surry, on the N E and E by Kent, on the S by the English Channel, and on the W by Hampshire. It lies in the diocese of Chichester; contains 65 hundreds, one city, 16 market-towns and 142 parishes; and sends 18 members to parliament. The N part of Sussex, a tract continued from the Weald of Kent, and of the same nature with it, was formerly entirely covered with forests; and though many of these have been cut down, it is still well furnished with timber both of large and small growth. The middle line of the county is a rich tract of amble and meadow. To it succeed the Downs, a range of green open hills of a chalky soil, affording excellent pasturage for sheep, and in many parts fertile in corn. The birds called wheat-ears are particularly numerous and excellent on these Downs, and are caught by the shepherds in great numbers. The tract from Lewes and its neighbourhood to the sea is peculiarly famous, under the name of the South Downs, for its fine velvet-like turf, and the goodness of its wool and mutton. Towards the sea the land in general declines, and in some parts is marshy. This county was formerly famous for iron-works, in which great quantities of charcoal were used for smelting the ore, and thus the woods came to be gradually wasted. The works are now almost or entirely abandoned; this business from the late improvements in smelting iron with pit-coal, having migrated to the counties which abound in that cheaper article, as well as in iron ore. The products for which Sussex is at present distinguished are chiefly corn, hops, wool, cattle and timber. It is not distinguished for any manufacture, but that of gunpowder at Battel, and of needles at Chichester. The principal rivers are the Arun, Adur, Ouse, and Rother. Chichester is the capital.

Suster, an ancient and celebrated, but now decayed town of Persia, capital of Kusistan. It is seated on the Caron, 105 miles S W of Ispahan. Lon. 51 19 E, lat. 31 15 N.

Susteren, a town of Germany in Westphalia, in the dutchy of Juliers, two miles from the river Maese, and 12 S of Ruremonde. Lon. 5 50 E, lat. 50 56 N.

Sutherlandshire, includes the divisions of Sutherland and Strathnavershire, it is bounded on the N and part of the W by the Northern ocean; on the S W by Rosshire on the S and S E by the Firth of Dornock, and on the E by Caithnessshire. It is about 50 miles long from N to S, and 46 in its broadest part from E to W, terminating at the South to not more than 12 miles broad. It is mountainous, but the valleys are fertile; abounding with black cattle and wild fowl. It has three remarkable forests, and many woods. The hills produce marble, freestone, limestone, ironstone, slate, &c. The country is full of bays, rivers, and lakes, which abound with salmon, shell-fish, swans, geese, ducks, &c. They have plenty of deer, &c. The chief towns are Dornock, Strathy, Galspey, and Brora.

Sutri, a town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter, with a bishop's see, seated on the Puzzulo, 22 miles N W of Rome. Lon. 12 25 E, lat. 42 10 N.

Sutton, a village in Cambridgeshire, six miles S W of Ely. In 1694, here were ploughed up several old small coins, three silver plates, with a Saxon inscription, but unintelligible, three twisted rings, and a plain one. There was a Saxon inscription on the plates, but not legible.

Sutton Colfield, a town in Warwickshire, with a market on Monday. It is a small place, and is 24 miles N N W of Warwick, and 111 N W of London. Lon. 1 40 W, lat. 52 39 N.

Swally, a town of the Deccan of Hindoostan, in Cambaya. It has a harbour, where ships receive and deliver their cargoes for the merchants of Surat, being 12 miles N W of that place. Lon. 72 15 E, lat. 21 18 N.

Swancomb, a village of Kent two miles W by S of Gravesend. Here are the remains of camps and forts, supposed to be Danish.

Swansey, a post town in Bristol county, Massachusetts; lying 50 miles S of Boston, containing 1741 inhabitants at last census.

Swansey, a maritime town in Glamorganshire, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday, an old castle, and two churches. It is a corporate town, and is seated at the mouth of the Tawy, and is governed by a portreeve. The neighbouring country abounds with coal of which it sends great quantities to Ireland and the S coast of England. Many ships have been built here, and it is resorted to for sea-bathing. Here are great works for the smelting of copper and lead ore, and it carries on a considerable trade to Bristol. It is 24 miles W N W of Cowbridge, and 205 W of London. Lon. 4 0 W, lat. 51 38 N.

Swanshale, a town of Sweden, in W Gothland, 25 miles W S W of Lindkoping.

Swanwich, a village in Dorsetshire, seated on a bay of the same name, in the English Channel. It has quarries of fine stone, of which many thousand tons are shipped here annually. See Purbeck, Isle of.

Swarteberg, a town of Sweden, in W Gothland, 18 miles N W of Uddevalla.

Swartsluys, a town and fortress of the United Provinces, in Overysssel, seated on the Vecht, four miles from its mouth, and five N N W of Hasselt.

Sweden, a kingdom of Europe, bounded on the N by Danish Lapland and the Ocean, on the E by Russia, on the S by the Baltic and the gulf of Finland, and on the W by Norway, the Sound, and the Categate. It extends 800 miles from N to S, and 350 from E to W. The whole kingdom is divided into five general parts; namely, Sweden Proper, Gothland, Norland, Lapland, and Finland; and each of these is subdivided into several provinces. Sweden is in general similar to that of the neighbouring countries, only it is well watered by rivers, numerous lakes, and inland peeces of water, on the banks of which the palaces and villas are usually built. The same may be said with regard to its climate, soil, &c. Summer bursts from winter; and vegetation is more speedy than in southern climates. Stoves and warm furs mitigate the cold of winter, which is so intense, that the noses and extremities of the inhabitants are sometimes mortified. The Swedes, since the days of Charles XII have been at incredible pains to correct the native barrenness of their country, by erecting colleges of agriculture, and in some places with great success. The soil is much the same with that of Denmark and some places of Norway, generally very bad, but in some valleys surprisingly fertile. The Swedes till of late years, had not industry sufficient to remedy the one, nor improve the other.
The peasants now follow the agriculture of France and England; and some late accounts say, that they rear almost as much grain as maintains the natives.
Gothland produces wheat, rye, barley, oats, peas, and beans; and in case of deficiency, the people are supplied from Livonia and the Baltic provinces.
In summer, the fields are verdant, and covered with flowers; and produce strawberries, raspberries, currants, and other small fruits. The common people know, as yet, little of the cultivation of apricots, peaches, nectarines, pine-apples, and the like high-flavoured fruits; but melons are brought to great perfection in dry seasons. The animals are horses, cows, hogs, goats, sheep, elks, reindeer, bears, wolves, foxes, wild cats, and squirrels. In winter, the foxes, and squirrels, become grey, and the hares as white as snow.

Here are several sorts of fowls, and partridges, woodcocks, and falcons, in great plenty. Sweden produces crystals, amethysts, topazes, porphyry, lapis lazuli, agate, cornelian, marble, and other fossils. The chief wealth of the country, however, arises from her mines of silver, copper, lead, and iron.
The last mentioned metal employs no fewer than 450 forges, hammeringmills, and smelting-houses. The first gallery of one silver mine is 100 fathoms below the surface of the earth; the roof is supported by prodigious oak-en beams, and from thence the miners descend about 40 fathoms to the lowest vein. The articles of export are boards, gunpowder, leather, iron, copper, tallow, skins, pitch, resin, and crusts; and it imports salt, brandy, wine, linen cloth, stuffs, tobacco, sugar, spice, and paper. The peasants seem to be a heavy plodding race of men, strong and hardy; but without any other ambition than that of subsisting themselves and their families as well as they can: they are honest, simple, and hospitable; and the mercantile classes are much of the same cast; but great application and perseverance is discovered among them all. The principal nobility and gentry of Sweden are naturally brave, polite, and hospitable; they have high and warm notions of honour, and are jealous of their national interests. The dress of their common people is almost the same with that of Denmark; the better sort are infatuated with French modes and fashion.
The common diversions of the Swedes are, skating, running races in sledges, and sailing in yachts upon the ice.
Their houses are generally of wood, with very little art in their construction.
The roofs, in many places, are covered with turf, on which their goats often feed. There is no country in the world where the women do so much work; for they till the ground, thresh the corn, and row the boats on the sea.
The revenues of Sweden amount to something more than 1,000,000L sterling, but may, on an average, be taken at 1,050,000 a year: they have been much augmented since the revolution in 1772, as they did not then amount to more than 750,000L or at most 837,500L.
The form of the Swedish government, has frequently varied. Before the accession of Gustavus I. it was an elective monarchy. By the union of Calmar, in

1397, it was stipulated that the same monarch should rule over Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, to be chosen by the deputies from the states of those three kingdoms assembled at Calmar. By this regulation Sweden became a mere tributary kingdom to Denmark. From this state of subjection to a tyrannical foreign yoke, it was rescued by Gustavus Vasa, on whom the Swedes, in 1523, conferred the sovereignty, and made the crown hereditary in his male issue, with this reservation, that in default of such issue, the right of election should return to the states. But queen Christina, the last of Gustavus's descendants abdicating the crown, she persuaded the states to confirm the right of succession on the descendants of her cousin Charles Gustavus, count palatine of the Rhine. In 1682, the states agreed that the daughters should succeed in case the male heirs failed. The kingdom became hereditary, and soon after absolute by Charles XI. whose son Charles XII. carried his authority to the highest pitch of despotism: upon his death his sister Ulrica Eleonora renounced forever all absolute power for herself and her successors, determining to re-establish the government in the ancient form it happily enjoyed in former times. Upon her recommendation, her consort, the hereditary prince of Hesse, was elected king, and it continued in the same manner till 1772, when the states, who had obtained the whole power since the death of Charles, and made a very indifferent use of it, were entirely subjected by a dexterous manœuvre of Gustavus, the late king, so that the government is now altogether as despotic as it was during the reigns of Charles XI. and XII. He was assassinated in 1792, leaving his son Gustavus Adolphus a minor, who attained his majority in 1796. The established religion is the Lutheran, and they have one archbishop, and seven bishops. The capital is Stockholm.

Swee-laboro, a post town in Gloucester county, New-Jersey; situated on the S side of Raecoon creek, 8 miles S of Woodbury, and 16 from Philadelphia.

Sweet Springs, a village with a post office, in Boutetout county, Virginia; situated 43 miles S. W of Bath court house, and 93 in the same course from Staunton. These waters have long been famous for their medicinal virtues, and attract a numerous company of valetud'arians yearly.

Swernich, a town of Turkey in Europe, on the confines of Servia and Bosnia, seated on the Drino, 70 miles S W of Belgrade. Lon. 15 32 E, lat. 44 42 N.

Swindon, a town in Wiltshire, with a market on Monday, seated on the top of a hill, near a rich vale, 28 miles N of Salisbury, and 83 W of London. Lon. 1 45 W, lat. 51 30 N.

Swinna, a little island of Scotland, one of the Orknies, situate to the N E of that called Mainland. Here are two whirlpools, that have been known to draw in boats and small vessels, which are instantly swallowed up.

Swinton, a village in the W riding of Yorkshire, nine miles S W of Doncaster. Here is a navigable canal to the river Don, a considerable manufacture of earthen ware, and a large iron forge.

Switzerland, or Switzerland, a country of Europe, bounded on the E by Tyrol, on the W by France, on the N by Swebia, and on the S by Savoy and Italy. It is 225 miles long and 83 broad, separated from the adjacent countries by high mountains, called the Alps. Though Switzerland lies between 45 and 40 deg. of N lat. yet being situated among the Alps, the highest mountains in Europe, and whose tops are covered with snow most part of the year, the air is much sharper than in more northerly latitudes. As Switzerland is sequestered as it were from other neighbouring countries by high mountains, so almost every canton is divided from the rest by a ridge of hills, which afford good pasture in summer, and on some of them are corn fields, particularly Bern, two thirds of which canton is a plain country, abounding in corn. But the soil in general does not produce it in great quantities; besides the fruits of the earth are frequently destroyed by storms or cold rains; so that in plentiful years they lay up corn in granaries, to prevent a general famine. Switzerland is divided into 13 cantons, exclusive of their allies; namely, Lucern, Uri, Schwetz, Underwalden, Zug, Friburg, and Soleure, which are catholic. The protestant cantons are Zurich, Bern, Basle, and Schaffhausen. Glarus and Appenzel contain both religions. There are four passages over the Alps into Italy from Switzerland:

Switzerland, a country bounded on the E by Tyrol, on the N by Savoy, on the S by Savoy and Italy, and on the W by France and 83 broad, sea-adjacent countries by the Alps, called the Alps. Switzerland lies between 45° and 47° lat. yet being situated in the highest mountains whose tops are covered with snow part of the year, the climate is milder than in more northern parts. As Switzerland is separated from other neighbours by high mountains, the country is divided from the rest of hills, which afford a shelter in summer, and on the corn fields, particularly in the canton of Vaud, abounding in corn. The soil does not produce great quantities; besides the wheat, there are frequently dews or cold rains; so that the corn they lay up corn in the event of a general famine. The country is divided into 13 cantons, and their allies; namely, Lucerne, Schwytz, Unterwalden, and Soleure, which are protestant cantons are Catholic, and Schaffhausen, Appenzel contain both religions. There are four passages over the Alps from Switzerland;

the first of which is beyond the lake of Geneva over Mount Cenis, which leads to Savoy; the second begins in the country of the Grisons, and crosses Mount St. Bernard, leading to the valley of Aosta, which belongs to Piedmont; the third begins in the country of the Grisons, crosses Mount Simplex, and leads to the duchy of Milan; the fourth crosses Mount St. Gothard, and the bailiwicks of Italy, and terminates in the Milanese. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lucern, Zurich, and Neuchatel. The most considerable rivers are the Rhine, Rhone, Aar, Arve, Reuss, and Inn. The chief riches of Switzerland consist of excellent pastures in which many cattle are bred and fattened, and the goats, and chamois, feed on the mountains, and in the woods. The Swiss are a brave, honest, hospitable, hardy people; very true to their engagements, friendly, and humane. In short, there is not a people in Europe whose national character is better. In their persons they are generally tall, robust, and well made; but their complexions are none of the best, and those that live in the neighbourhood of the mountains are subject to wens. The women are said to be generally handsome and well-shaped, sensible and modest, yet frank, easy, and agreeable in conversation. Few of the peasants are miserably poor; many of them are rich, especially in the protestant cantons, and that of Berne in particular. In 1797, the French having long endeavoured to excite intestine commotion and discord in Switzerland, succeeded but too well in their mischievous designs. Being favoured by the disturbances they had excited, their troops entered Switzerland, and defeated the Swiss troops, who opposed them with great courage and resolution in several desperate engagements. The whole country was subdued and obliged to submit to the galling yoke of the French, who completely overturned the constitution of the principal cantons, and imposed upon them what they called the Helvetic republic, with a form of government, like that of France, composed of a legislative body, consisting of two councils, and a directory. On the recommencement of the war with the emperor of Germany in 1799, the archduke Charles entered Switzerland, and having defeated the French, he made himself master of Schaffhausen and Zurich; but in the close of the campaign, he met with a check which obliged him to relinquish part of his conquests. This formerly peaceful and happy country, distracted by the conflicts of contending armies, is at present in a very exhausted and impoverished situation. See Glaciers, and Schwytz.

Sya, a town of Sweden, in W Gothland, 13 miles S W of Lindkoping.

Sydenham, a village in Kent, on the declivity of a hill, eight miles S by E of London. It is noted for medicinal wells.

Sydney Bay, a bay on the S side of Norfolk island, in the Pacific Ocean, formed by Point Hunter and Point Ross, which are near two miles asunder. On this bay a settlement of convicts is formed from England. Lon. 168 12 E, lat. 29 4 S.

Sydney Cove, the town or settlement of convicts, founded at Port Jackson, in New S Wales, in February 1788. The ground about it was then covered by a thick forest; but, in 1790, some good buildings had been erected, and the greatest part of the civil and military officers comfortably lodged. The governor's house is built of stone, and has a very good appearance, being 70 feet in front. The lieutenant-governor's house is of brick, as are also those belonging to the judge, and the commissary. The rest of the houses are built of logs and plastered, and all the roofs are either covered by shingles, or thatched. Sydney Cove lies on the S side of the harbour, between five and six miles from the entrance. The neck of land that forms this cove is mostly covered with wood, yet so rocky, that it is not easy to comprehend how the trees could have found sufficient nourishment to bring them to so considerable a magnitude. Lon. 151 28 E, lat. 33 50 S.

Syracuse, a strong city of Sicily, in Val di Noto, with a bishop's see, and a fine harbour, defended by a castle. It was almost ruined by an earthquake in 1693. Near this place, in 1718, there was a seafight between the Spaniards and English, in which the former were beaten. It is seated near the sea, 72 miles S by W of Messina, and 110 S E of Palermo. Lon. 15 30 E, lat. 37 5 N.

and the deserts of Arabia, on the S by the same deserts and Judea, and on the W by the Mediterranean. Under the general name of Syria, was included the ancient Phœnicia, lying S of Syria Proper. This province abounds in oil, corn, and several sorts of fruits, as well as peas, beans, and all kinds of pulse and garden-stuff; but it would produce much more than it does, if it were well cultivated; for there are the finest plains and pastures in the world. The inhabitants have a trade in silk, camlets, and salt. Damascus is the capital.

Syrian, a town of Pegu, seated near the bay of Bengal, on a river of the same name, which is one of the extreme branches of the Ava. Lon. 96 40 E, lat. 16 50 N.

Tabarca, an island on the coast of Barbary, belonging to the Genoese, who have a garrison of 200 men to protect their coral fishing here. It is 50 miles W of Tunis. Lon. 9 16 E, lat. 36 50 N.

Tabaria, the ancient Tiberias, a town of Palestine, situate on the W side of a lake, formerly called the sea of Tiberias, 50 miles N N E of Jerusalem, and 70 S S W of Damascus. Lon. 35 45 E, lat. 32 40 N.

Tabasco, a province of New Spain, in the audience of Mexico; bounded on the N by the bay of Campeche, on the E by Yucatan, on the S by Chiapa, and on the W by Guaxaca. It is about 160 miles in length, and nearly as much in breadth, and its chief riches consist in cocoa nuts. The air is extremely moist, and there are showers every day for nine months in the year.

Tabasco, an island of New Spain, in the province of Tabasco, about 30 miles long, and ten broad, formed by the river Tabasco, and the rivers St. Peter and St. Paul.

Tabasco, a town of New Spain, capital of the province of Tabasco. Cortez obtained a victory here on his first arrival. It is situate in the island of the same name. Lon. 58 15 E, lat. 17 40 N.

Table Island, one of the New Hebrides, in the South Sea. Lon. 16 77 E, lat. 15 38 S.

Table Mountain, a promontory of Africa, near the Cape of Good Hope, being the most southern promontory in the Old World. The bay at the foot of it is called Table-Bay.

Tabar, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Bechin, on a mountain, which the Huslites, under their celebrated general Ziscn, fortified and made their principal retreat. It is 25 miles N by E of Budweis, and 45 S by E of Prague. Lon. 14 56 E, lat. 49 23 N.

Tabristan, a province of Persia, on the South shore of the Caspian Sea, bounded by Astrabad on the E, and Ghilan on the W.

the empire of Morocco; bounded on the N by Fez and Tremesen, on the E by the Beriberies, on the S by the deserts of Barbary, and on the W by Sus, Morocco, and Fez. It is divided into three provinces, Dras, Saro, and Tuet. It is a mountainous sandy country, but produces wheat and barley by the sides of the rivers. The inhabitants live upon camels' flesh and dates, and they breed horses to sell to foreigners. The Arabs live in tents, and the Beriberies, the ancient inhabitants, dwell in villages. Taflet, the capital, is a trading place, with a castle, and seated on a river, 275 miles S E of Morocco. Lon. 5 45 W, lat. 28 2 N.

Tagasta, a town of Africa, in Algiers, in the province of Constantina, former-

Dras. Lon. 6 43 W, lat. 27 10 N.

Tahorawa, one of the smallest of the Sanawich Islands, lying off the S W part of Mowee, from which it is distant three leagues. It is destitute of wood, and the soil seems to be sandy and bar-ren.

Tajo, anciently Tagus, a river which has its source on the confines of Arra-gon, in Spain, runs through New Castile, by Toledo and Talavera, whence it proceeds to Alcantara, in Estreinadura; when entering Portugal, it washes Santaren, below which it forms the harbour of Lisbon, and then falls into the Atlantic Ocean. This river was formerly famous for its golden sands, and is called Tejo by the Portuguese.

Tai-ming-fou, a city of China, in the province of Pe-Tcheli, with one city of the second class, and eighteen of the third, in its district.

Tain, a borough and seaport in Rosshire, remarkable for a large square tower, adorned with five spires, and for a collegiate church, still pretty entire, founded by the bishop of Ross in 1481. It is seated on the frith of Dornoch, 12 miles N of Cromarty.

Tainton, a village in Gloucestershire, seven miles W of Gloucester. In 1700, an ore was found here, from which was extracted a little gold, but not sufficient to defray the expense of separating.

Tai-ouang, the capital of the island of Formosa, in the China Sea. It is a large, well peopled place, and carries on a great trade. The greater part of the streets are as straight as if laid out with a line, and are all covered during seven or eight months in the year to moderate the excessive heat of the sun.
These streets are 30 or 40 feet broad, and several of them are about a league in length; they are almost all bordered with houses belonging to the merchants, or rich shops, in which are displayed silk stuffs, porcelain, lacquerware, and other kinds of merchandise, all ranged with great order and symmetry; they have the appearance of so them with much pleasure, were not the pavement bad, and the crowd of passengers so great. The houses for the most part are built of clay and bamboo reeds, and are only thatched with straw; but the awnings with which the streets are covered leave nothing to be seen but the shops. This capital has neither walls nor any kind of works; its harbour is good, and shelters vessels from every wind; but the entrance of it becomes every day more difficult. This port formerly could be entered by two passages; one of which had water sufficient to float the largest vessels; but it has now often only four or five feet of water, and seldom above seven or eight: the sand that is continually washed into it by the sea must soon choke it up entirely. Lon. 120 30 E, lat. 23 25 N.

Tai-ping-fou, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan. It is built upon the banks of the river Kiang, and its plains are watered by a number of navigable rivers, which render it very opulent. Its jurisdiction extends over only three cities. Lon. 107 15 E, lat. 32 20 N.

Tai-tehou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Tche-kiang. It has six cities in its district. Lon. 121 2 E, lat. 28 55 N.

Taitebourg, a town of France, in the department of Lower Charente, and late territory of Saintonge, seated on the Charente, 30 miles S E of Rochelle. Lon. 0 40 W, lat. 45 46 N.

Tai-tong-fou, a city of China, in the province of Chan-si. It is a place of strength, built near the great wall, rendered important by its situation, because it is the only place exposed to the incursions of the Tartars; it is, besides, strongly fortified, and the troops kept for its defence compose a numerous garrison. The jurisdiction of Tai-tong-fou is very extensive; it comprehends four cities of the second class, and seven of the third.

Tai-yuen fou, a city of China, capital of the province of Chan-si. It is an ancient city, and about eight miles in circumference; but it has lost much of that splendour which it formerly had when the princes of the blood of the last imperial family of Tai-ming-chao resided in it; nothing remains of their palaces but heaps of rubbish and a few melancholly ruins. The only monuments entire are the tombs of these princes, which are seen on a neighbouring mountain. Tai yuen-fou has under its jurisdiction five cities of the second class and twenty of the third. The principal articles of its trade are hard-ware, stuffs of different kinds, particularly carpets in imitation of those of Turkey. It is 160 miles S W of Peking.

Talamone, a seaport of Tuscany in Italy, 15 miles N of Orbitello. Lon. 11 6 E, lat. 42 30 N.

Talavera, a town of Spain, in New Castile, with a fort. It belongs to the archbishop of Toledo, and is seated on the Tajo, in a valley abounding in corn, fruits, and excellent wine, 58 miles S W of Madrid. Lon. 4 1 W, lat. 39 41 N.

Talaveruela, a town of Spain, in Estremadura, seated on the Gaudiana, 14 miles E of Badajoz. Lon. 6 34 W, lat. 38 34 N.

cians, was very powerful in the time of the Romans, and has many noble monuments of antiquity. It is surrounded by walls built by the Moors, and is defended also by regular works. It is neither so large, nor so populous as it was formerly; for though there is room for 2000 houses within the walls, there are not above 500, which are all built with large square stones. It carries on Tartary, a very large country of Asia, situated between 37° and 160° of E Lon. reckoning from the west end of the isle of Ferro, and between 37° and 55° of Lat. It is bounded on the N by Siberia, or that part of Asia which belongs to Russia; on the W by the rivers Don, Wolga, and Kama, which separate it from Russia; on the S by the Euxine and Caspian Seas, Karazm, the two Bukharias, China, and Korea; and on the E, by the Oriental or Tartarian ocean. It extends from E to W, the space of 104 degrees in longitude, or 4145 geographical miles; but its breadth is not proportionable, being not above 960 miles where broadest, and where narrowest 330. This vast region is divided into two great parts; the one called the Western, the other the Eastern Tartary. Western Tartary, which is much more extensive than the Eastern, containing 139 degrees of long-out of 161, is inhabited by a great number of nations, or tribes of people, called Moguls or Tartars. In all this vast region there are but few towns, most of the inhabitants living under tents, especially in summer, and moving from place to place with their flocks and herds. They generally encamp near some river for the convenience of water. The air of this country is temperate, wholesome, and pleasant, being equally removed from the extremes of heat and cold. As to the soil, though there are many mountains, lakes, and deserts in it, yet the banks of the rivers, and the plains, some of which are of great extent, are exceeding fertile.

The mountains, woods, and deserts, abound with venison, game, and wild fowl; and the rivers and lakes both with fish and fowl. Eastern Tartary, according to the limits usually assigned it by historians, and geographers, is bounded to the W by Western Tartar-y, or by that part possessed by the proper Moguls and Kalkas; on the N by Siberia; on the E by that part of the Oriental Ocean called the Tartarian Sea; and on the S by the same sea, the kingdom of Korea, and the Yellow Sea, which separates it from China. It is situate between the 137th and 160th degrees of Lon. being about 900 miles long from S to N, and near as many in breadth from W to E, yet but thinly peopled. This large region is at present divided into three great governments, all subject to the Chinese, viz. Shing-yang or Mugden, Kurinula, and Tsitsikar.

Tartaa, a town of France, in the department of Landes, and late province of Gascony. The Midouse runs through it; and on one side of this river it rises in the form of an amphitheatre; the other is seated on a plain. It is 12 miles N E of Dax. Lon. 0 48 W, lat. 43 50 N.

Tasso, an island of the Archipelago, near Romania, at the entrance of the gulf of Contesia. It is 35 miles in circumference and was formerly famous for mines of gold, and quarries of beautiful marble. The capital, of the same name, has a good harbour, and several castles.

Tasso, a mountain of Italy, between Bergamo and Como, from which the illustrious family of the poet Tasso took their name.

Tatta, or Sinde, a city of Hindoostan Proper, capital of the province of Sind. It is seated on a branch of the river Sinde or Indus, which admits of an uninterrupted navigation to Moulton and Lahore, for vessels of 200 tons, and a very extensive trade was carried on between these places, in the time of Aurungzebe but at present very little remains, owing to a bad government in Sind, and to a hostile disposition of the Seiks the present possessors of Moulton and Lahore. In the 17th century, it was very extensive and populous, and was a place of great trade, possessing manufactures of silk, wool, and cotton; and it was celebrated for its cabinet ware. Little of these now remain, and the limits of the city are very circumscribed. On the shores of the Indus, above the Delta, considerable quantities of salt-petre are made: and within the hilly tract, which commences within three miles on the NW of Tatta, are found mines of iron and salt. Tatta is 741 miles N W of Bombay. Lon. 67 37 E, lat. 24 50 N.

Tattah, a small town on the common frontiers of Morocco, Draï, and Zanghaga, and in the route from Morocco and Sus to Tombuctou. It is 170 miles S S E of Morocco.

Taverna, a town of Naples, in Calabria Ulteriore, seated on the Coraca, 20 miles E of Nicastro, and 70 N E of Reggio. Lon. 16 44 E, lat. 39 11 N.

Tavira, or Tavila, a considerable town of Portugal, capital of Algarva, with a castle, and one of the best harbours in the kingdom defended by a fort. It is seated in a fertile country, at the mouth of the Gilon, between Cape Vincent and the straits of Gibraltar, 100 miles W by N of Cadiz. Lon. 7 45 W, lat. 37 18 N.

Tavistock, a borough in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the river Tavy, and was once famous for a stately abbey, now divided into tenements. It sends two members to parliament, has a brook running through every street, and a stone bridge of five arches over the river. It is 32 miles W by S of Exeter, and 206 of London. Lon. 4 12 W, lat. 50 35 N.

Tawy, a river in Glamorganshire in S Wales, which flows parallel to the Neath, and enters the Bristol Channel, at Swansea Bay.

Tay, one of the largest rivers in Scotland, dividing it into S and N. It rises out of the mountains of Breadalbane, and after spreading into a lake of the same name, 15 miles long, and about two broad, runs E through Athol, then turning to the SE in a course of near 40 miles, exclusive of windings, falls into the frith of Tay.

Tay, Frith of, an arm of the sea, which divides Fifeshire from the counties of Perth and Angus. The space between the N and S sands may be near a mile, with about three fathoms water, but within the Frith, it grows deeper, and in the road of Dundee is full six fathoms.

Tay, Loch, a lake in Perthshire, through which flows the river Tay. It is 15 miles long, and in many parts above one broad. On the 12th of September, 1784, this lake was seen to ebb and flow several times in a quarter of an hour, when all at once the waters rushed from E to W in opposite currents, so as to form a ridge, leaving the channel dry to the distance of almost 100 yards from its usual boundary. When the opposing waves met, they burst with a clashing noise and much foam: the waters then flowed out at least five yards beyond their ordinary limits. The flux and reflux continued gradually decreasing for two hours. A similar motion was observed several days, but in a less degree. The banks of this lake are finely wooded: and it has a small tufted island, on which are the ruins of a priory, built by Alexander I.

Taycot, a village of Pegu, situated on the W side of the river Irrawaddy. It is a long and straggling town. Lon. 95° 35' E, lat. 18° 30' N.

Tchang-tcha-fou, a city of China, the capital of the S part of the province of Hou-quang. It is seated on a large river, which has a communication with an extensive lake, called Tong-ting-hou. It has one city of the second and 11 of the third class under its jurisdiction, and is 625 miles S by W of Peking. Lon. 112 25 E, lat. 48 11 N.

Tchang-tcheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Fo-kien. It is very considerable, on account of its trade with Emouy, Pong-hou, and Formosa. Lon. 117 35 E, lat. 24 32 N.

Tchang-te-fou, one of the most northern cities of the province of Honan, in China. It is remarkable for a fish, like a crocodile, the fat of which, when once kindled, cannot be extinguished. In its neighbourhood is a mountain so steep and inaccessible, that in time of war it affords a safe asylum to the inhabitants. Lon. 111 5 E, lat. 29 2 N.

Tche-kiang, a province of China, one of the most considerable in that empire, on account of its maritime situation, its extent, riches, and population. It is bounded on the N and W by Kiang-nan, on the S W by Kiang-si, and on the S by Fokien, and on the E by the Ocean. The air of this country is pure and healthful; the plains are watered by a number of rivers and canals, kept in good order; and the springs and lakes with which it abounds, contribute greatly to its fertility. The natives are mild and lively, and very polite to strangers; but they are said to be extremely superstitious. In this province whole plains may be seen covered with dwarf mulberry trees, purposely checked in their growth; and prodigious quantities of silk worms are bred here. Their silk stuffs, in which gold and silver are intermixed, are the most beautiful in China. The tallow tree grows here, and here are found the small gold fish, with which ponds are stocked.

Tchernigof, a government of Russia, formerly a part of the Ukraine, containing 11 districts. Its capital, of the same name, is seated on the Desne.

Tching-kiang-fou, a strong city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan, the key of the empire on the sea coast. Its situation and trade, and the beauty of its walls, give it a pre-eminence over the other cities of the province, but its jurisdiction is confined to three cities of the third class. It is 25 miles E by

N of Nan-king. Lon. 118 55 E, lat. 32 14 N.

Tching-tcheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Hou-quang, seated near the canal through which all barks must pass in going from Sou-tcheou, to Kiang. Under it are five cities of the third class, in which a kind of plain earthen ware is prepared, highly valued by the Chinese, who prefer it to the most elegant porcelain. It is 640 miles S S W of Peking. Lon. 109 40 E, lat. 28 23 N.

Tching-ting-fou, a large city of China, in the province of Pe-tcheli. Its district contains five cities of the second and 27 of the third class; and it is 110 miles S by W of Peking. Lon. 114 21 E, lat. 38 9 N.

Tching-tou-fou, a city of China, the capital of Se-tcheuen, formerly the residence of the emperors, and one of the largest and most beautiful cities in the empire; but, in 1646, it was almost entirely destroyed, during the civil wars that preceded the last invasion of the Tartars. Its district contains six cities of the second and 15 of the third class. Lon. 103 44 E, lat. 30 40 N.

Tchi-tcheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan. It is seated on the river Kiang, and has under it six cities of the third class. Lon. 117 0 E, lat. 30 45 N.

Tchong-king-fou, a city of China, and one of the most commercial in the province of Le-Schuin. It is in a great measure indebted for its trade to its situation at the confluence of two large rivers; the Hin-cha-kiang, and the Yang-tse-kiang. It is built upon a mountain, and rises in the form of an amphitheatre: the air round it is wholesome and temperate. This city is celebrated for its fish, and a particular kind of trunks made of canes, interwoven in the manner of basket-work. Under it are three cities of the second, and 11 of the third class. It is 637 miles S W of Peking. Lon. 106 20 E, lat. 29 42 N.

Tchiticar, the most northern of the three departments of Eastern Chinese Tartary, occupied by different Tartar tribes.

Tefezara, a strong town of Algiers, in the province of Tremesen, 12 miles from the city of that name. There are a great many mines of iron in its territory.

Teffis, the capital of Georgia, one of the seven Caucasian nations between the Black Sea and the Caspian. It is called by the inhabitants Thilis Cabar, warm town, from the warm baths in its neighbourhood. Though its circumference does not exceed two English miles, it contains 20,000 inhabitants, of which more than half are Armenians, the remainder are principally Georgians, with some Tartars. According to Major Rennel, it has 20 Armenian and 15 Greek churches, and 12 synagogues. There are some magnificent caravanseras, bazars and palaces in the city, but no mosques. All the houses are of stone, with flat roofs, which serve, according to the custom of the East, as walks for the women. They are neatly built; the rooms are wainscotted, and the floors spread with carpets. The streets seldom exceed seven feet in breadth; and some are so narrow as scarcely to allow room for a man on horseback; they are consequently very filthy. Teffis is a place of considerable trade, especially in furs, which are conveyed hence to Constantinople by the way of Erzerum. As for the silks of this country, they are bought up on the spot by the Armenians, and conveyed to Smyrna and other ports of the Mediterranean; but the greatest part is first sent to Erzerum to be manufactured, the Georgians being very ignorant and unskilful in that respect. From hence, likewise, great quantities of a root called boyas is sent to Erzerum and Indoostan for the use of the linen dyers. Here is likewise a foundry, in which are cast a few cannon, mortars, and balls, all of which are very inferior to those of the Turks. The gunpowder made here is very good. The Armenians have likewise established in this town all the manufactures carried on by their countrymen in Persia: the most flourishing is that of printed linens. Teflis is seated on the river Kur, at the foot of a mountain; and on the S side of it stands a large castle or fortress, built by the Turks in 1576, when they made themselves masters of the city and country, under the command of the famous Mustapha Pacha. It is 125 miles W of Turki. Lon. 65 3 E, lat. 41 59 N.

Tench's Island, an island in the Pacific Ocean, two miles in circumference, discovered by lieutenant Ball, in 1790. It is low, but entirely covered with trees, many of which are the cocconut. The natives observed in the canoes, that ventured to come somewhat near the ship, were remarkably stout men, quite naked, and of a copper colour; their hair resembling that of the New Hollanders, and some of their beards reaching as low as the navel, with an appearance of much art having been used to form them into long ringlets. Two or three of the men had something like a bead or bone suspended to a string, which was fastened round the neck. The largest of their canoes appeared to be about 28 feet long, and made out of a large tree, with a long outrigger. Lon. 151 31 E, lat. 1 39 S.
Tenda, a town of Italy, in Piedmont, capital of a county of the same name. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, on the river Boga, 52 miles S of Turin. Lon. 7 45 E, lat. 44 10 N.
Tenedos, a celebrated island in the Archipelago, on the coast of Natolia, and ten miles S W of the straits of Gallipoli. This island still retains its ancient name: and is one of the smallest islands of the Archipelago, situated near the coast of Lesser Asia, W of the ruins of Troy. It is chiefly rocky, but fertile, being remarkable for producing the best Muscadine wine in the Levant; and its position, thus near the mouth of the Hellespont, has given it importance in all ages; vessels bound towards Constantinople finding shelter in its port, or safe anchorage in the road during the Etesian or contrary winds, or in foul weather. It is 11 miles long and seven broad, inhabited almost wholly by Greeks. On the E side is a large town, seated at the foot of a mountain, with a fine harbour, commanded by a castle. On the 5th of June, 1794, after some severe shocks of an earthquake, a small volcanic island was discovered to have emerged from the sea, between this town and the Asiatic shore.

Tenen, or Knin, an episcopal town of Venice, in Dalmatia, on the borders of Bosnia. It is 48 miles S of Bihacz. Lon. 16 30 E, lat. 44 5 N.
Teneriff, one of the Canary islands, the most considerable of them for riches, trade, and population. It lies W of the Grand Canary, is 70 miles long, and 22 broad, and abounds in wine, different sorts of fruits, cattle and game. One part of this island is surrounded by inaccessible mountains, and one in particular, called the Pike of Teneriff, is two miles and a quarter above the level of the sea; and the distance of the peak from the port of Oratavia is above 11 miles. This island is subject to earthquakes; and, in 1704, one destroyed several towns, and many thousand people. The manufactures carried on here, are very few, and the product of them little more than sufficient for their own consumption. They consist of taffeties, gauze, coarse lincens, blankets, a little silk, and curious garters. The principal dependence of the inhabitants is on their wine, (their staple commodity), oil, corn, and every kind of stock for shipping. With these the island abounds: and, in their season, produces not only the tropical fruits, but the vegetable productions of the European gardens, in the greatest plenty. Teneriff enjoys an agreeable and healthful mediocrity of climate. Indeed none seems better adapted for the restoration of a valetudinarian; as, by going into the mountains, he may graduate the air, and choose that state of it which best suits his complaint. The laborious works in this island are chiefly performed by oxen and mules, horses being scarce and reserved for the use of the officers. Hawks and parrots are natives of the island, as also swallows, seagulls, partridges, canary-birds, and blackbirds. There are also lizards, locusts and dragonflies. The climate is remarkably healthful, and particularly adapted to afford relief in phthical complaints. St. Christophe de Laguna is the capital, but the governor resides at Santa Cruz.

Teneriff, a town of Terra Firma, in the government of St. Martha, seated on the Rio de la Madalena, 100 miles S by W of St. Martha. Lon. 74 15 W, lat. 9 47 N.

Tenez, a town of Algiers, in Africa, in the province of Tremsen, capital of a district of the same name, with a strong fort. It is seated on the side of a mountain, four miles from the sea. Lon. 1 0 E, lat. 39 20 N.

Teng-m-fou, a rich, populous and commercial city of China, in the province of Hou-quang, with six cities dependant on it. It is 200 miles W by S of Nan-king. Lon. 112 21 E, lat. 31 0 N.

Teng-fong-hien, a city of China, under the jurisdiction of Ho-nan-fou, in the province of Ho nan. It is famous on account of the tower, erected for an observatory by the celebrated astronomer Tchou-Long, who according to the Chinese invented the mariner's compass.

Tennessee, one of the United States of America, situate between the parallels of 35 and 36 and a-half degrees latitude; bounded on the S by Carolina and Georgia, on the W by the Mississippi, on the N by Kentucky and Virginia, and on the E by the Iron and Bald mountains, which separate it from North Carolina. It is upward of 400 miles in length, and 104 in breadth; and contains three districts, and 11 counties. Its principal rivers are the Mississippi, Tennessee, Cumberland, Holston, Clinch and Duck; and it is abundantly watered by other rivers and creeks. The Cumberland mountains, a ridge near 30 miles broad, cut this state into the eastern and western divisions. It was formerly a part of North Carolina, but it was admitted a member of the United States in 1796. In 1795, it contained 66,649 free persons, and 10,613 slaves. Knoxville is the capital.

Tennessee, a river of North America, formerly called the Cherokee River. It rises in the Iron mountains, and, having traversed the borders of the Cherokee country northward, is joined by the Holston branch, whence it is called the Tennessee: thence it runs S W and N, into the state of Kentucky: here it soon turns to the N W, and then falls into the Ohio, 60 miles above the confluence of that river, with the Mississippi. The Tennessee is 600 yards broad at its mouth, and thence navigable by vessels of great burden for 260 miles, to the Muscle Shoals, in the Great Bend. It may be navigated, by boats of 40 tons burden, at least 600 miles farther, some trifling falls excepted.

Ten-tcheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Chang-long, with a good port, and eight cities in its jurisdiction. It is seated on the N side of a peninsula of the Yellow Sea, 200 miles S E of Peking. Lon. 115 50 E, lat. 35 20 N.

Tennestadt, a town of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, near the rivers Seltenlein and Schambach, five miles from Erfurt.

Tennis, a town of Egypt, situate on an island in a lake of the same name, 28 miles S E of Damietta. Lon. 32 15 E, lat. 31 2 N.

Tenterden, a corporate town in Kent, governed by a mayor, with a market on Friday. The steeple of the church is very lofty, and at the time of the Spanish invasion, in 1588, was made use of as a beacon. It is 24 miles S W of Canterbury, and 56 E by S of London. Lon. 0 35 E, lat. 51 12 N.

Tentugal, a town of Portugal, in Beira, eight miles W N W of Coimbra. Lon. 8 20 W, lat. 40 17 N.

Tepic, a town of New Spain, in the audience of Guadalajara, 500 miles N W of the city of Mexico.

Teplitz, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leitmeritz, celebrated for its warm baths, 14 miles W N W of Leitmeritz.

Teramo, a town of Naples, in Abruzzo Ulteriore, with a bishop's see, seated at the confluence of the Viciola and Tordino, ten miles N W of Atri, and 25 N E of Aquileia. Lon. 13 39 E, lat. 42 37 N.

Terasso, a decayed town of Turkey in Europe, in Caramania, with an archbishop's see. It was formerly called Tarsus, was the capital of Cilicia, and is the birthplace of St. Paul. It is seated on the Mediterranean. Lon. 35 55 E, lat. 37 10 N.

Ternate, an island in the Indian Ocean, the principal of the Moluccas. It is mountainous, and has a great number of woods, which furnish much game; but it produces a great quantity of cloves, and other fruits proper to the climate. It lies a little to the W of Gilolo, and 100 miles E of Celebes. Lon. 129 0 E, lat. 1 0 N.

Ternavasso, a town of Piedmont, six miles N E of Carmagnola, and eight S of Chieri.

Terneuse, a strong town and fort of Dutch Flanders on the W branch of the Scheldt, called the Hondt. It is eight miles N of Sas-van-Ghent, and 25 W N W of Antwerp. It was taken by the French in 1794. Lon. 3 45 E, lat. 51 20 N.

Terni, an ancient episcopal city of Italy, in the dutchy of Spoleto. The cathedral is a magnificent structure, and the place contains about 9,000 inhabitants; but it was much more considerable formerly than it is now.

The famous cataract of the river Veli- no, which falls from a precipice 300 feet high, is a mile from this city, which is seated on an island formed by the river Neva, on which account it was anciently called Interamna. Terni is the birthplace of Tacitus the histo- rian. It is 15 miles S by W of Spo- letto, and 40 N of Rome. Lon. 12 40 E, lat. 42 34 N.

Ternova, an ancient archiepiscopal town of Turkey in Europe, in Bulgaria. It was formerly the seat of the princes of Bulgaria, and is seated on a moun- tain, near the Jenera, 88 miles N W of Adrianople, and 97 N E of Sophia. Lon. 26 2 E, lat. 43 1 N.

Terracina, anciently called Anxur, a decayed town of Italy, in Campagna di Roma, with a bishop's see. It was the capital of the warlike Volsci, and the principal church was originally a tem- ple of Jupiter. It is seated among orange and citron groves, near the sea, on the side of a mountain, 45 miles S E of Rome. Lon. 13 15 E, lat. 41 24 N.

Terra del Esperitu Santo, the most western and largest island of the New Hebrides, in the S Seas, being 40 leagues in circuit. The land is exceed- ingly high and mountainous, and in many places the cliffs rise directly from the sea. Except the hills and beaches, every part is covered with wood, or laid out in plantations. Besides the Bay of St. Philip and St. Jago, on the N side of it, the isles which lie along the S and E coast form several good bays and harbours. Lat. 16 S, lon. 165 E.

Terra del Fuego, under this name are comprehend- several islands, at the southern ext- mity of America. They take their name from a volcano on the largest of them. They are all very bar- ren and mountainous, but from what Mr. Forster says, in his voyage to the S Sea, the climate would not appear to be so rigorous and tempestuous as it is represented in Anson's voyage. Upon the lower grounds and islands, that were sheltered by the high mountains, Mr. Forster found several sorts of trees and plants, and a variety of birds. Among the trees was Winter's bark tree, and a species of arbutas, loaded with red fruit of the size of small cherries, which were very well tasted. In some places there is also plenty of celery. Among the birds was a species of duck, of the size of a goose, which ran along the sea with amazing velocity, beating the water with its wings and feet. It had a grey plumage, with a yellow bill and feet, and a few white quill feathers. At the Falkland islands it is called a logger-head duck; among the birds are also plenty of geese and falcons. The rocks of some of the islands are covered with large mussel shells, the fish of which is well flavoured. The natives of this country are short in their persons, not exceeding five feet six inches at most, their heads large, their faces broad, their cheek bones very prominent, and their noses very flat. They have little brown eyes, without life; their hair is black and lank, hanging about their heads in disorder, and besmeared with train oil. On the chin they have a few straggling short hairs instead of a beard, and from their nose there is a constant discharge of mucus to their ugly open mouth. The whole assemblage of their features forms the most loathsome picture of misery and wretchedness to which human nature can possibly be reduced. Those which Mr. Forster saw, had no other clothing than a small piece of seal-skin, which hung from their shoulders to the middle of the back, being fastened round the neck with a string. The rest of their body was perfectly naked, not the least regard being paid to what the Europeans would term indecency. Their natural colour seems to be an olive brown, with a kind of gloss, resembling that of copper; but many of them disguise themselves with streaks of red paint, and sometimes, though seldom, with white. Their whole character is the strangest compound of stupidity, indifference, and inactivity. They have no other arms than bows and arrows, and their instruments for fishing are a kind of fish gigs. They live chiefly on seals flesh, and like the fat oily part most. There is no appearance of any subordination among them, and their mode of life approaches nearer to that of brutes than that of any other nation.

Terra Firma, or Tierra Firma, a kingdom of S America, bounded on the N

by the Caribbean Sea, on the N E by the Atlantic, on the S E by Guiana and Amazonia, on the S by New Granada, and on the W by the Pacific Ocean and the Isthmus of Darien, which last separates it from N America. Its length, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, is upward of 1300 miles: its greatest breadth is 750; but, in some places, toward the Oronoko, not above 180. It is divided into the provinces of Terra Firma Proper, or Darien, Cartagena, St. Martha, Rio de la Hacha, Venezuela, Caracas, Guiana, and Paria, or New Andalusia. The whole country is now subject to the viceroy of New Granada, who resides at St. Fe de Bogota. The climate here, especially in the northern parts, is extremely hot and sultry during the whole year. From the month of May to the end of November, the season called winter by the inhabitants, is almost a continual succession of thunder, rain, and tempests; the clouds precipitating the rains with such impetuosity, that the low lands exhibit the appearance of an ocean. Great part of the country is of consequence almost continually flooded; and this, together with the excessive heat, so impregnates the air with vapours, that in many provinces, particularly about Popayan and Porto Bello, it is extremely unwholesome. This part of S America was discovered by Columbus, in his third voyage to this continent. It was subdued and settled by the Spaniards, about the year 1514, after destroying, with great inhumanity, several millions of the natives. This country was called Terra Firma, on account of its being the first part of the continent which was discovered, all the lands discovered previous to this being islands.

Terrouen, a town of France, in the department of the Straits of Caldis, seated on the Lis, six miles S of St. Omcr.

Terruel, a town of Spain, in Arragon, with a bishop's see, seated in a large fertile plain, at the confluence of the Guadalquivir and Alhambra, 75 miles S W of Saragossa, and 112 E of Madrid. Lon. 1 0 W, lat. 40 25 N.

Terrere, or Fiere, a town of the United Provinces, in Zealand, on the N E coast of the isle of Walcheren, with a good harbour, and a fine arsenal, four miles N E of Middleburg. Lon. 3 42 E, lat. 51 56 N.

Teschen, a town of Upper Silesia, capital of a dutchy of the same name, subject to the house of Austria. It was taken by the Prussians in 1757, but restored in 1763. It is surrounded on all sides by a morass, and seated near the source of the Vistula. At a little distance from it is an old castle, on an eminence, where the ancient dukes resided. The inhabitants carry on a trade in leather, woollen stuffs, and Hungary wines; and make pretty good fire arms, and excellent beer. A treaty of peace was concluded here, in 1779, between emperor Joseph II. and Frederick William III. of Prussia. It is 27 miles S E of Troppau, and 65 S W of Cracow. Lon. 18 17 E, lat. 49 52 N.

Tesegdelt, a town of Morocco Proper, seated at the mouth of the Techubit. It is surrounded by a craggy rock, which renders it impregnable. It is 200 miles W of Morocco.

Tesino, a river of Switzerland, which has its source in Mount St. Gothard, flows through the country of the Grisons, and the lake Magglore; then running through part of the Milanese, it washes Pavia, and a little after falls into the Po.

Teset, a town of Zahara, which gives name to a district. It is 170 miles S of Morocco. Lon. 6 36 W, lat. 15 24 N.

Tessia, a town of Austria, in the county of Tirol, 22 miles N E of Trent, and 24 S E of Bolzano. Lon. 11 40 E, lat. 46 29 N.

Test, or Tese, a river which rises in the N W of Hants, and passing Stockbridge and Rumsey, falls into the bay of Southampton.

Testbury, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Wednesday. It is of some importance, but its market for the staple commodities of the county, and for wool and cheese has of late years suffered a gradual decline. Its chief ornament is its newly erected church, built in a spirited imitation of Gothic models. It is 25 miles E N E of Bristol, and 99 W of London. Lon. E 8 W, lat. 51 36 N.

Teticaco, a lake of Peru, in the audience of Lima and province of Callao, above 200 miles in circumference.

Tettwang, a town of Suabia, capital of a lordship of the same name. It is eight miles N of Lindau, and 18 E N E of Constance. Lon. 9 50 E, lat. 47 46 N.

Tetuan, a city of the kingdom of Fez, with a castle. The houses have only little holes toward the streets to look out at; for the windows are on the inside, toward the courtyard, which is surrounded by galleries; and in the middle is generally a fountain. The houses are two stories high, flat at the top, and the streets very narrow. The women visit each other from the tops of their houses; they wear bracelets on their arms and legs, and large ear-rings; have very fine eyes, and some of them beautiful skins; and their vest is open before, from the bosom to the waist. The shops are very small, and without doors; the master sitting cross-legged on a counter, with the goods disposed in drawers round him, and all the customers stand in the street. It is seated on the river Cus, three miles from the Mediterranean, 21 S of Ceuta, and 108 N by W of Fez. Lon. 5 26 W, lat. 35 27 N.

Tiberone, a river of Italy, the ancient Anio, which rises in the Appennines, 50 miles above Tivoli, glides through a plain till it comes near that town, when it is confined for a short space between two hills, covered with groves. These were supposed to be the residence of the sibil Albunea, to whom a temple here was dedicated, the elegant form of which indicates its having been built when the arts were in the highest state of perfection. The river moving with augmented rapidity, as its channel is confined at last rushes viaknly over a lofty precipice, the noise of its fall resounding through the hills and groves of Tivoli; a liquid cloud arises from the foaming water, which afterward divides into numberless small cascades, waters several orchards, and having gained the plain, flows quietly on till it loses itself in the Tiber. See Solfatara.

Teviot, a river of Scotland, which rises in the mountains in the S W of Roxburghshire, and passing almost through the centre of that county, falls into the Tweed, near Kelso.

Teviotdale. See Roxburghshire.

Tewart, an ancient town of the kingdom of Fez, seated on a mountain near the river Za.

Teuschnitz, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, in the bishopric of Bamberg, 34 miles N E of Bamberg. Lon. 11 27 E, lat. 50 22 N.

Teusera, a town of Barbary, in Biledulgerid, divided into two parts by a river. It stands on the confines of Tunis, in a country abounding in dates. Lon. 10 16 E, lat. 31 28 N.

Tewkesbury, a borough in Gloucestershire; with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It was formerly noted for the excellence of its mustard, but now only distinguished (as to its trade) for a manufactory of cotton stockings. But its church, and the ruins of its monastery, are most worthy of notice; the former of which contains the relic of those who fell at the battle of Tewkesbury, and, among the rest, of prince Edward, son to Henry VI. who was butchered in cold blood after the engagement. Tewkesbury is seated at the confluence of the Severn and Avon, 10 miles N of Gloucester, and 102 W N W of London. Lon. 2 13 W, lat. 52 N.

Texel, an island of the United Provinces, in N Holland, separated from the continent by a narrow channel of the same name, defended by a strong fort on the continent, called the Helder. This channel is the best and most southern entrance from the ocean into the Zuider-Zee, and through it most of the ships pass that are bound to Amsterdam. In September 1799, the English effected a landing here, and took the fort which defends the channel, and the whole of the Dutch fleet lying therein, surrendered to them, for the service of the prince of Orange; but partly deterred by the impregnable nature of the country, and partly by the approach of winter, they abandoned the fort in November following.

Teya, a river of Germany, which has its source near Teltsh, in Moravia, flows E by Znsim, on the borders of Austria, and enters the Moraw on the confines of Hungary.

Teyn, a town of Bohemia, belonging to the archbishop of Prague, 52 miles S W of that city. Lon. 13 40 E, lat. 49 38 N.

Tezar, a town of the kingdom of Fez, capital of the province of Cuzi. Here is a mosque, larger than that of Fez, being half a mile in circumference. It is seated on a small river, 45 miles E of Fez. Lon. 4 15 W, lat. 33 40 N.

Tezcuco, a town of New Spain, and the capital of a large government. Here Cortez caused a canal to be dug, where he built 18 brigantines, to carry on the siege of Mexico. It is seated near the lake of Mexico, 30 miles E of the city of that name. Lon. 100 4 W, lat. 20 3 N.

Tezela, a town of the kingdom of Algiers, in Tremesen, with a castle, 15 miles from Oran. Lon. 0 25 E, lat. 35 25 N.

Tezote, a town of the kingdom of Fez, seated on the point of a rock, 8 miles from Melilla. Lon. 1 55 W, lat. 44 40 N.

Thaince, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Tunis, near the mouth of a river of the same name, 120 miles S of Tunis. Lon. 10 13 E, lat. 34 50 N.

Thames, the finest river in Great Britain, which takes its rise from a copious spring, called Thamea Head, two miles S W of Cirencester, in Gloucestershire. It has been erroneously said, that its name is Isis, till it arrives at Dorchester, 15 miles below Oxford, when, being joined by the Thame or Tame, it assumes the name of Thames, which, it has been observed, is formed from a combination of the words Thame and Isis. What was the origin of this vulgar error, cannot now be traced. Poetical fiction, however, has perpetuated this error, and invested it with a kind of classical sanctity. It plainly appears (says Camden), that the river was always called Thames or Tems, before it came near the Thame; and in several ancient charters granted to the abbey of Malmsbury, as well as that of Ensham, and in the old deeds relating to Cricklade, it is never considered under any other name than that of Thames. He likewise says, that it occurs no-where under the name of Isis.

All the historians who mention the incursions of Ethelwold into Wiltshire in the year 905, or of Canute in 1016, concur likewise in the same opinion, by declaring, that they passed over the Thames at Cricklade in Wiltshire. It is not probable, moreover, that Thames Head, an appellation by which the source has usually been distinguished, should give rise to a river of the name of Isis; which river, after having run half its course, should reassume the name of Thames, the appellation of its parent spring. About a mile below the source of the river is the first corn-mill, which is called Kemble-Mill. Here the river may be properly said to form a constant current; which, though not more than nine feet wide in the summer, yet in the winter becomes such a torrent as to overflow the meadows for many miles around. But, in the summer, the Thames Head is so dry, as to appear nothing but a large dell, interspersed with stones and weeds.
From Somersford the stream winds to Cricklade, where it unites with many other rivulets. Approaching Kemsford, it again enters its native country, dividing it from Berkshire at Inglesham.
It widens considerably in its way to Lechlade; and being there joined by the Lech and Coln, at the distance of 138 miles from London, it becomes navigable for vessels of 90 tons. At Ens-ham, in its course N E, to Oxford, is the first bridge of stone; a handsome one, of three arches, built by the earl of Abingdon. Passing by the ruins of Godstow nunnery, where the celebrated fair Rosamond was interred, the river reaches Oxford, in whose academic groves its poetical name of Isis has been so often invoked. Being there joined by the Charwel, it proceeds S E to Abingdon, and thence to Doreches-ter, where it receives the Tame. Continuing its course S E by Wallingford to Reading, and forming a boundary to the counties of Berks, Bucks, Surry, Middlesex, Essex, and Kent, it washes the towns of Henley, Marlow, Maidenhead, Windsor, Eton, Egham, Staines, Laleham, Chertsey, Wey-

Brentford, Kew, Mortlake, Barnes, Chiswick, Hammersmith, Putney, Ful-ham, Wandsworth, Battersea, Chelsea, and Lambeth. Then on the N bank of the river, are Westminster and London, and, on the opposite side, Southwark; forming together one continued city, extending to Limehouse and Deptford; and hence the river proceeds to Greenwich, Erith, Greenhithe, Gray's, Thurrock, Gravesend, and Leigh, into the ocean. It receives in its course from Dorchester, the rivers Kennet, Loddon, Coln, Wey, Mole, Wandel, Lea, Roding, Darent and Medway.
The jurisdiction of the lord mayor over the Thames extends from Coln Ditch, a little to the W of Staines, to Yeading or Yenleet to the E, including part of the rivers Medway and Lea; and he has a deputy, named the water-bailiff, who is to search for and punish all offenders against the laws for the preservation of the river and its fish. Eight times a-year the lord mayor and aldermen hold courts of conservance for the four counties of Surry, Middlesex, Essex and Kent. Though the Thames is said to be navigable 138 miles above the bridge, yet there are so many flats, that in summer the navigation westward would be entirely stopped, when the springs are low, were it not for a number of locks. But these are attended with considerable expence; for a barge from Lechlade to London pays for passing through them 13*l*. 15*s*. 6*d*. and from Oxford to London 12*l*. 18*s*.
This charge, however, is in summer only, when the water is low; and there is no lock from London Bridge to Bolter's Lock; that is, for 51 miles and a half above the bridge. The plan of new cuts has been adopted in some places, to shorten and facilitate the navigation. There is one near Lechlade, which runs nearly parallel to the old river, and contiguous to St. John's Bridge; and there is another a mile from Abingdon, which has rendered the old stream toward Culham Bridge useless. But a much more important undertaking has lately been accomplished; namely, the junction of this river with the Severn. A canal had been made, by virtue of an act of parliament in 1730, from the Severn to Wall Bridge, near Stroud. A new canal now ascends by Stroud, through the Vale of Chalford, to the height of 343 feet, by means of 28 locks, and thence to the entrance of a tunnel, near Sapperton, a distance of near eight miles. The canal is 42 feet in width at top and 30 at the bottom. The tunnel (which is extended under Sapperton Hill, and under that part of earl Bathurst's ground called Haley Wood, making a distance of two miles and three furlongs) is near 16 feet in width, and can navigate barges of 70 tons. The canal descending hence 1 3/4 m. by Little Rye joins the Thames at Reading, a distance of above 20 miles. At the expense of this vast undertaking the canal, from the Severn at Froomlode to Inglesham, where it joins the Thames, is a distance of more than 30 miles. The expense of it exceeded the sum of 200,000*l.* of which 3000*l.* are said to have been expended in gunpowder alone, used for the blowing up of the rock. This new canal was completed in 1789, in less than seven years from its commencement. A communication, not only with the Trent, but with the Mersey, has likewise been effected by a canal from Oxford to Coventry; and an act of parliament has passed to extend another canal from this, at Braunston, to the Thames at Brentford. This is to be called the Grand Junction Canal. On the extensive advantages resulting from these navigable communications from the metropolis by the ports of Bristol, Liverpool, Hull, &c. and the principal manufacturing towns in the inland parts of the kingdom, it is needless to expatiate. The tide flows up the Thames as high as Richmond, which, following the winding of the river, is 70 miles from the ocean; a greater distance than the tide is carried by any other river in Europe. The water is esteemed extremely wholesome, and fit for use in very long voyages, during which it will work itself perfectly fine.

Thames, a river of the United States, in Connecticut. It is composed of two principal branches, the Shetucket on the E, and the Norwich, or Little River, on the W. This last, about a mile from its junction with the Shetucket, at Norwich, has a romantic cataract, which pitches from a rock 10 or 12 feet in perpendicular height, in one entire sheet, upon a bed of rocks below. From Norwich, the Thames is navigable 13 miles to Long Island Sound, which it enters at New London.

Thetford, a borough in Norfolk, with a market on Saturday. It was once a bishoprick, and though now an inconsiderable town, still exhibits the ruins of its former greatness. It is seated on the Little Ouse, and there is a high mount, which has been walled round, and fenced with a double rampart. It has some corn trade to Lynn and is governed by a mayor, sends two members to parliament, and has three churches, a good free school, and a townhall. The tent sizes for the county are kept here. The river, which here divides Suffolk from Norfolk, is navigable from Lynn; and a good deal of wool-combing is carried on here. It is 30 miles S E of Lynn, and 80 N E of London. Lon. 0 50 E, lat. 52 28 N.

Thoux, a village three miles N W of Spa, in the bishopric of Liege, noted for a battle fought here in 1794, in which the Austrians were defeated.

Thibet, or Great Thibet, a country of Asia, lying between 81 and 102° E lon. and 25 and 40° N lat. bounded on the N W and N by the desert of Kobi, in Tartary, though we have but a faint idea of its extent to that quarter; on the E by China, on the S by Assam and Burmah, and on the W and S W by Hindoostan Proper and Bootan. This country is one of the highest in Asia; it being a part of that elevated tract which gives rise not only to the rivers of India and China, but to those also of Siberia and Tartary. Its length from E to W, cannot be less than 1600 British miles; its breadth is very unequal. It is divided into three parts, Upper, Middle, and Lower Thibet. The Upper division seems to respect the countries towards the sources of the Ganges and Burrampooter; the Middle that in which Lassa, the capital, is seated, and of which it forms the centre, and the Lower, that which borders on China. The subject is obscure, and likely to remain so. Little Thibet, which is situated between Upper Thibet and Cashgar, is rather a dependency of the latter than of Great Thibet. Notwithstanding the very rough and sterile state of Thibet, and the severity of its climate, from its wonderful elevation its inhabitants are in a high state of civilization, their houses lofty and built of stone, and the useful manufactures in some degree of improvement. The Thibetians are governed by the grand lama, who is not only submitted to, and adored by them, but is also the great object of adoration for the various tribes of pagan Tartars, who walk through the vast tract of continent which stretches from the river Volga to Corea. He is not only the sovereign pontiff, the viceregent of the deity on earth, but by the more remote Tartars is absolutely regarded as the deity himself. They believe him to be immortal, and endowed with all knowledge and virtue. He does not reside in the city of Lassa, but on a mountain in the neighbourhood, called Poutala. On this mountain there is a great number of pagods, the most sumptuous of which he inhabits. He passes great part of his life on a kind of altar, where he sits motionless in a cross legged posture, on a large and magnificent cushion, and receives, with the greatest gravity, the adoration, not only of the Thibetians, but also of a prodigious multitude of strangers and pious pilgrims, who undertake long and difficult journeys to go and worship him on their bended knees, and to receive his benediction. The grand lama salutes no one; he neither uncovers nor rises up to any person, whatever his rank may be; with the same eye, he beholds at his feet the greatest princes and the meanest of their subjects. He contents himself with laying his hand on the head of his adorer, who imagines that he obtains, by this imposition alone, the remission of all his sins. Next to the Thibetians, the Tartars are the most zealous worshippers of the grand lama; they arrive in crowds at Poutala, from the remotest corners of the country; even the weakest of the female sex are not terrified by the fatigues that inseparably attend these long journies. This profound veneration sion, which draws so many people to Lassa, to prostrate themselves at the feet of the grand lama, is founded on the idea which they entertain of his great power and sanctity. They are fully persuaded, that all the divinity of Po resides in him, that he is omniscient and omnipresent, and that he has neither need of information, nor occasion to ask questions, in order to discover the secret thoughts of men. They believe him to be immortal, and that, when he appears to die, his soul and his divinity only change their place of residence, and transmigrate into another body. All their care is then employed to discover the place where it hath pleased him to be born again; even some of the Tartar princes themselves have assisted in this important search; but they are obliged to be directed by certain lamas, who alone are acquainted with the signs by which the new born god may be discovered, or rather, they only know what child the preceding dala-lama appointed to be his successor. In 1774, the grand lama was an infant, who had been discovered some time before by the tayoshoo lama, who in authority and sanctity of character, is next to the grand lama, and, during his minority, acts as chief. The lamas, who form the most numerous as well as the most powerful body in the state, have the priesthood entirely in their hands; and they constitute many monastic orders, which are held in great veneration among them. Besides the religious influence and authority of the great lama, he is possessed of unlimited power throughout his dominions. In 1774, the English East India Company made a treaty with the lama. The religion of Thibet, though in many respects, it differs from that of the Indian Bramins, yet in others, has a great affinity to it. The Thibetians have a great veneration for the cow, and highly respect also the waters of the Ganges, the source of which they believe to be in heaven. The sunnasses, or Indian pilgrims, often visit Thibet as a holy place; and the lama always maintains a body of near 300 of them in his pay. See Palte.

Thiel, or Tiel, a strong town of Dutch Guelderland, which surrendered to the French in 1794. It is seated on the Waal, 20 miles W of Nimeguen. Lon. 5 16 E, lat. 51 56 N.

Thionville, a strong town of France, in the department of Moselle. It was taken by the prince of Conde in 1643. It was besieged by the Austrians in 1792, who were obliged to raise the siege. It is seated on the Moselle, over which is a bridge defended by a hornwork, 14 miles N of Metz, and 195 N E of Paris. Lon. 6 15 E, lat. 49 21 N.

Thirsk, or Thursk, a borough in the N riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Monday. It sends two members to parliament: and was formerly noted for its strong castle. It is 20 miles N W of York, and 230 N by W of London. Lon. 1 16 W, lat. 54 15 N.

Thive, or Thebes, a celebrated city of Livadia, with a bishop's see. It is nothing now to what it was formerly, and yet is four miles in circumference, but so full of ruins, that there are not above 4000 Turks and Christians in it. It is famous for a fine sort of white clay, of which bowls for pipes are made after the Turkish fashion; they are never burnt, but dry naturally, and become as hard as stone. Here are two mosques, and several Greek churches. It is seated between two rivers, 20 miles N W of Athens, and 280 S W of Constantinople. Lon. 23 40 E, lat. 38 17 N.

Thoisiel, a town of France, in the department of Ain, with a handsome college. It is seated in a fertile country, near the Saone and Chalerone, 10 miles N of Trevoux, and 200 S E of Paris. Lon. 4 50 E, lat. 46 13 N.

Thoma, St. an island of Africa, lying under the equator in 8° E lon. It was discovered in 1420, and is almost round, about 30 miles in diameter. The soil is fertile, and produces plenty of sugar canes. On the same vine are blossoms and green and ripe grapes, all the year round. It is a very unwholesome country, possessed by the Portuguese, and few live to a great age. It consists chiefly of hills intermixed with vallies, which are constantly filled with a thick stinking fog, but it agrees very well with the cattle, which are larger and finer here than on the gold coast of Guinea.

Tilbury, East, a village in Essex, near the mouth of the Thames, E of Til-place where the emperor Claudius crossed the Thames, in pursuit of the Britons. In this parish is a field, called Cave Field, in which is a horizontal passage to one of the spacious caverns in the neighbouring parish of Chadwell.

Tilbury, West, a village in Essex, si-number of Lincolnshire and Leicestershire sheep, for the London market.

In this parish is a celebrated spring of alterative water, discovered in 1717.
In its neighbourhood Queen Elizabeth reviewed the army she had assembled to oppose the famous Spanish armada in 1588.

ed the key of London. It was planned by Sir Martin Beckman, chief engineer to king Charles II. with bastions, the largest of any in England. It has a double moat; the innermost of which is 170 feet broad, with a good counterscarp, a covered way, ravelines and tenailles, and a platform, on which 106 cannon are placed, from 24 to 46 pounders each, besides smaller ones planted between them, and the bastions and curtains also are planted with guns; and here is a high tower, called the Block house, which is said to have been built in the reign of queen Elizabeth. On the land side are also two redoubts of brick; and there it is able to lay the whole level under water. The foundation is laid upon piles driven down in two ranges, one over the other, which reach below the channel of the river, and the lowermost being pointed with iron enters the solid chalk rock, which extends under the Thames to the chalk hills in Kent. It is 28 miles E by Cyclades, to the W of Nicaria. It is 17 miles long and eight broad, and is subject to the Venetians. This island produces 16,000 pounds of silk every year, and the stockings made of it are very good; but nothing can equal the gloves which are knit here for the ladies. The fortress stands on a rock; and here is a bishop's see of the Latin church, though the Greeks have 200 papas or priests. St. Nicolo is the principal town. Lon. 25 24 E, lat. 37 30 N.

Tinian, an island in the Pacific Ocean, one of the Ladrões, 12 miles in length and six in breadth. The soil is dry; and being somewhat sandy, is the less disposed to rank and over luxuriant vegetation. The land rises in gentle slopes from the shore to the middle of the island, intermixed with vallies of an easy descent; which are beautifully diversified with the mutual encroachments of the woods and lawns. The woods consist of tall and well spread trees, and the lawns are covered with clean and uniform turf, producing fine trefoil, and variety of flowers. Here are at least 10,000 cattle, all milk white, except their ears, which are brown or black; also a vast number of fowls, which are easily caught, and plenty of wild hogs. In the woods are prodigious quantities of cocoa-nuts, cabbage-trees, guavaes, limes, sweet and sour oranges, and bread-fruit. Here are also vegetables proper for the scurvy; such as water-melon, dandelion, creeping purslain, mint, scurvygrass, and sorrel. Here are some ruins of a particular kind, consisting of two rows of square pyramidal pillars, each pillar being about six feet from the next, and the distance between the rows is 12 feet; on the top of each there is a semiglobe, with the flat surface upward, and they are composed of sand and stone cemented together. The climate is extremely healthful, for the rains are not continual, but fall in frequent refreshing showers. There are no streams, but the water of the wells and springs is extremely good. The principal inconvenience arises from the number of muskitoes, and other kinds of flies; and there are likewise insects called ticks, which fasten upon the limbs and bodies of men, and bury their heads under their skins. The road is inconvenient, and, in some seasons, there is little security for a ship at anchor. Lon. 146 0 E, lat. 15 0 N.

Tinmouth, a seaport in Northumberland, at the mouth of the Tyne, nine miles E of Newcastle. It has a castle, seated on a high rock, inaccessible on the seaside, and well mounted with cannon. There is a bar across the mouth of the river, which is not above seven feet deep at low water. There are dangerous rocks about it, called the Black Middins; but there are lighthouses to guide the ships by night. Here ships take in their loading of coal, and of goods brought from Newcastle. Tipperary, a town of Ireland, in the county of the same name, nine miles S S W of Cashel.

Tirano, a town of the country of the Grisons, capital of the Upper Terzero. It contains several handsome buildings, but from the narrowness of the streets, and many ruinous houses, its general appearance is desolate. The river Adda divides it into two parts, which are joined by a stone bridge of a single arch. The staple commerce of this town consists in the exportation of wine and silk. Near the town on the other side of the Adda, is the magnificent church of the Madonna, or Virgin Mary, much visited by the catholic pilgrims. The massacre of the protestants of the Valteline, in 1620, began in this town. It is 17 miles S W of Bormio. Lon. 9 46 E, lat. 46 12 N.

Tiree, one of the Hebrides, or Western Islands of Scotland, lying to the S W of Col. It is a small, rich island, and noted for its marble quarry, and a handsome breed of little horses.

Tirol, or Tyrol, a county of Germany, in the circle of Austria, and part of the hereditary dominions of that house. It is 150 miles long, and 120 broad; bounded on the N by Bavaria, on the E by Carinthia and the archbishopric of Saltz-berg, on the S by the territory of Venice, and on the W by Swisserland. Though a mountainous country, it produces as much corn and wine as the inhabitants have occasion for, and has rich mines of gold, silver, and copper. It is divided into four parts; Tyrol, properly so called, the bishopric of Trent, the bishopric of Brixen, and Treer. See Tiber.

Treerton, a borough in Devonshire, with a market on Tuesday. It is seated on the Ex, over which is a stone bridge, is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. It has a noble free-school (founded by a clothier of this town) which has an endowment also for the maintenance of eight scholars at Baliol college, Oxford, and Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. It has likewise a church, built by subscription. Tiverton has suffered very severely by fire, particularly in 1598, 1612, 1731, and 1794. This town has been noted for its great woollen manufacture, and is 14 miles N N E of Exeter, and 161 W by S of London. Lon. 3 38 W, lat. 50 54 N.

Tiumen, a town of Siberia, in the province of Tobolsk, on the Tura, 125 miles W of Tobolsk.

Tivoli, a celebrated town of Italy, in Campagni di Roma, with a bishop's see. It is now wretchedly poor. It was the favourite country residence of the ancient Romans, as Prescafi is of the moderna. Near the bottom of the eminence on which Tivoli stands, are the ruins of the vast and magnificent villa built by emperor Adrian. Other illustrious Romans had also their villas here; as Julius Cesar, Caius Cassius, Augustus, Catullus, Propertius, Mæcenus, &c. The Tiverone forms here a famous cascade from a steep rock, in a cave of which is said to have been Leucothea's grotto, the Tiburtine Sibyl, whence she delivered her oracles. It was anciently the retreat of many eminent Romans, and, at present it has an elegant summer-house, and fine gardens, belonging to the duke of Modena. Horace is thought to have composed great part of his works in this favourite retreat. Near Tivoli is the remarkable lake of Solfatara. Tivoli is seated on the Teverone, 12 miles E N E of Rome, and 15 N N E of Frascati. Lon. 12 43 E, lat. 41 59 N. See Solfatara and Teverone.

Tobago, the most southward of the islands in the West Indies, and the most eastward except Barbadoes. It is 32 miles long and nine broad. The climate is not so hot as might be expected from its situation so near the equator; nor is it visited by such dreadful hurricanes as frequently desolate the other islands. It is diversified with hills and vales, and is equal in richness of produce to any islands in these seas. It has been several times taken and retaken, lastly by the English in 1793. It is 120 miles S of Barbadoes. Lon. 59 0 W, lat. 11 10 N.

Tobago, Little, an island near the N E extremity of Tobago, (in the West Indies) two miles long, and one broad. Tobolsk, a government of Russia, which comprehends the W part of Siberia. It is divided into the two provinces of Tobolak and Tomak.

Tobolsk, the capital of Siberia, and of the government of Tobolsk. It is inhabited by Tartars, who drive a great trade on the river Irtysh, and carry their goods to China. The Tartars that live round this city, for several miles, are all Mahometans, but their mufti is an Arabian. There are also a great number of Kalmucks, who serve as slaves. The Russians commonly send their state-prisoners to this city, which is seated on a hill, at the confluence of the Tobol and Irtysh, 800 miles E by N of Moscow, and 1000 E by S of Petersburg. Lon. 68 12 E, lat. 58 12 N.

Tocat, a town of Turkey in Asia, in Natolia, capital of a province of the same name. The houses are handsomely built, and the streets pretty well paved, which is an uncommon thing in these parts; but the town makes a very odd appearance, and is in the form of an amphitheatre. There are two rugged perpendicular rocks of marble, with an old castle upon each; and so many streams, that each house has a fountain. Here are 20,000 Turkish, 4000 Armenian, and 400 Greek families. There are 12 mosques, and a vast number of chrepels; the Armenians have seven churches, and the Greeks only one. Besides the silk of this country, they manufacture much of that of Persia, and make it into sewing silk. Their chief trade is in copper vessels, such as kettles, drinking-cups, lanterns, and candlesticks. They also prepare a great deal of yellow Turkey leather. Tocat may be considered as the centre of trade in Natolia: for caravans come hither from several parts. Its territory abounds in fruit and excellent wine. Toledo, a commercial city of Spain, in New Castile, of which it was for- merly the capital. It is advantageously seated on a mountain, on the river Tajo, which surrounds it on two sides; and on the land side it has an ancient wall built by a Gothic king, and flanked with 100 towers. The houses are fine and there are a great number of superb struc- tures, beside 17 public squares, where the markets are kept. It is an arch- bishop's see; and the cathedral is the richest and most considerable in Spain; the Sagrario, or principal chapel, is a real treasury, in which are 15 large cabinets let into the wall, full of pro- digious quantities of gold and silver vessels, and other works. Here are 38 religious houses, with a great num- ber of churches belonging to 27 pa- rishes, and some hospitals. Without the town are the remains of an amphi- theatre, and other antiquities. It has a royal castle, a famous university, and several manufactures of silk and wool. It is 37 miles S of Madrid. Lon. 3 20 W, lat. 39 53 N.

Tombelaine, a small island of France, with a town of the same name, on the coast of Normandy, in a small gulf between Avranches and St. Malo. This island, as well as that of St. Michael, in which there is a monastery, are every day joined, at low water, to the main land.

Tombucoo, a kingdom of Nigritia, which lies to the S E of the great desert of Zahara, and W of the empire of Cashna. It produces great plenty of corn, cattle, milk, and butter. The King has 300 horsemen, beside a great number of foot, who frequently take captives, and sell them to the merchants for slaves. The houses are built like bells, with walls of hurdles plastered with clay, and covered with reeds. The better sort of women have their faces covered, their religion being Mahometanism. Both men and women are very fond of dancing, and spend a great part of the night in that exercise.

Tombucoo, the capital of a kingdom of the same name, in Nigritia, with a stately mosque built of stone, and a royal palace. Here is a great number of weavers of cotton cloth; and hither the cloth and other merchandise are brought by caravans from Barbary. Instead of money, they make use of shells and small bits of gold. In the proceedings of the African Association, this place is mentioned as a luxurious, opulent, and flourishing city, subject to a severe police, and, as such attracting the merchants of the most distant states of Africa. It is seated near the Niger, 270 miles S W of Mourzook. Lon. 0 8 W, lat. 19 59 N.

Tongataboo, one of the Friendly Islands in the South Pacific ocean, about 20 leagues in circuit, somewhat oblong, broadest at the E end, and its greatest length from E to W. The S shore is straight, and consists of coral rocks, eight or ten feet high, terminating perpendicularly; while the whole N side is environed with shoals and islands, and the shore within them low and sandy. Here is also the best harbour or anchoring place to be found among these islands. It is nearly all of an equal height, not exceeding 60 or 80 feet above the level of the sea. Hence it is wholly laid out in plantations, with roads or lanes for travelling, disposed in so judicious a manner, as to open an easy communication from one part to another. It has also the advantage of being the seat of government for all the other islands, and the ordinary residence of all the principal chiefs. Lon. 174 46 W, lat. 21 9 S.

Tongres, a town of Germany in the bishopric of Liege. It has severely suffered by the calamities of war; the first time by Attila king of the Huns, and the last by the French, in 1673 and 1677. It is seated on the Neckar, 12 miles S W of Maestricht, and 15 W of Liege.

Tungusians, a people who inhabit the E part of Siberia, and are subject to the Russians. They are all pagans, and chiefly subsist by grazing, and hunting of saibles. They live in huts, which, when they remove their dwellings, they take down, and set up elsewhere. These huts are composed of wooden poles, covered all over with hair and rubbish, except a hole left at the top to let out the smoke. Their fire is made in the middle, and they all sit round it upon turfs. Both sexes are very strong, and broad-faced, and they all ride on horseback, not excepting the girls. Both men and women dress alike in a sort of frock, with boots of skins on their legs, and their common drink is water. The Tungusians are of a middling stature; a very tall or a very short man being equally rare among them. They are all well made, and of a good mein.
The features of their face are not so flat as those of the Kalmouks; they have a fresh complexion, small sharp eyes, a small thin nose, black lank hair, very little beard, and many of them none at all. Their voice is somewhat hoarse; their sight and hearing of an acuteness and delicacy almost incredible; but, on the contrary, their organs of touch and smell are considerably more blunt than ours. Their young children have an air altogether Kalmouk. The women while young are well made, and of an agreeable figure, very lively, but modest, the old women, on the contrary, are ugly to a frightful degree, all over wrinkles, smoke and filth of various kinds, with eyes as red as fire.

Tonquin, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the N by China, on the E by China, and the gulf of Tonquin, on the S by Cochin China, and on the W by Laos.
It is about 1200 miles in length and 500 in breadth, and is one of the finest and most considerable kingdoms of the East, as well on account of the number of inhabitants, as the riches it contains, and the trade it carries on.
The natives in general are of a middling stature, and clean-limbed, with a tawny complexion. Their faces are oval and flattish, and their noses and lips well proportioned. Their hair is black, long, lank, and coarse; and they let it hang down their shoulders. They dye their teeth black. They are dexterous, active and ingenious in mechanic arts. They weave a great quantity of fine silks, and make curious lackerworks, which are exported to other countries. There is such a number of people, that many want employment, for they seldom go to work but when foreign ships arrive. The money and goods brought hither by the English and Dutch put them in action, for they have not money of their own sufficient to employ themselves; and therefore one third at least must be advanced beforehand by the merchants.
They are so addicted to gaming, that when every thing else is lost they will stake their wives and children. The garments of the Tonquinese are made either of silk or cotton; but the poor people and soldiers wear only cotton of a dark tawny colour. Their houses are small and low, and the walls either of mud, or hurdles daubed over with

X x x

clay. They have only a ground floor, with two or three partitions, and each room has a square hole to let in the light. They have stools, benches, and chairs; and on the side of a table is a little altar, with two incense pots thereon, which no house is without. The country abounds with villages, which consist of 30 or 40 houses, surrounded by trees; and in some places are banks to keep the water from overflowing their gardens, where they have oranges, betels, pumpkins, melons, and salad herbs. In the rainy season they cannot pass from one house to another, without wading through the water, but sometimes they have boats. The people of Tonquin are ingenious, strong-limbed and well made; their disposition is free and open, although cheating among them, when done with address, is considered as a stroke of prudence and skill. They are generous; but their generosity is regulated only by their interest: and when they have nothing to hope, they cannot easily be prevailed on to give: on such occasions, they take great care to conceal their riches, for fear of being importuned; they are in general lavish in their public expences, especially in feasts, marriages and funerals; they hate the Europeans, and find great satisfaction in being able to deceive them. The Tonquinese are neither so flat-nosed nor so broad-visaged as the Chinese; their colour is olive: they blacken their teeth, suffer their nails to grow, and wear their hair as long as possible. The people are slaves one part of the year; for except the citizens of the capital, all the tradesmen, joiners, smiths, masons, carpenters, &c. are obliged to labour three months in the palace, and during two others, for the mandarins and great lords: they are free the rest of the year, and work for those who employ them. Marriages are not contracted here without the consent of the governor or judge of the place. The day after the marriage, the husband styles his wife sister, and the wife calls her husband brother. A plurality of wives is permitted at Tong-king; but only the most accomplished takes the title of spouse. The law grants a divorce to the men, but denies it to the women: the children remain with the husband. The favourite diversion of the Tonquinese are comedies, which they generally act at night, and accompany, with abundance of machinery and decoration. They excel particularly in the representation of torrents, rivers, seas, tempests and naval battles. Learning in Tonquin, as in China consists principally in the knowledge of a great number of characters, and in the study of the rules and principles of morality, which are taken from the writings of Confucius. The Tonquinese apply to letters, from ambition, because they open the way to honours, and because it is by their means alone that they can ever be promoted to offices of dignity and trust. They are in general courteous to strangers; but the great men are haughty and ambitious, the soldiers insolent, and the poor thievish. They buy all their wives, of which the great men have several, but the poor are stinted for want of money. In hard times the men will sell both their wives and children, to buy rice to maintain themselves. When a man dies he is buried in his own ground, and if he was master of a family, they make a great feast. The first new moon that happens after the middle of January, is a great festival; when they rejoice for ten days together, and spend their time in all manner of sports. They have another great feast in May or June, when their first harvest is got in. Their religion is paganism, and yet they own a supreme being. Their idols have human shapes, but in very different forms. They have likewise some resembling elephants and horses, placed in small low temples built of timber. The language is very guttural, and some of the words are pronounced through the teeth: it has a great resemblance to the Chinese. They have schools of learning, and their characters are the same, or like those of China; and like them they write with a hair pencil. The commodities are gold, musk, silk, calicoes, drugs of many sorts, woods for dying, lackered wares, earthen wares, salt, aniseed, and worm seed. The lackered ware is not inferior to that of Japan, which is accounted the best in the world. With all their merchandise, the people are in general very poor; the chief trade being carried on by the Chinese, English, and Dutch. This kingdom is an absolute monarchy. Cachao is the capital.

Tobowai, a small island in the South Sea, discovered by captain Cook, being, in any direction, not above five or six miles. Small as it appears, however, there are hills in it of a considerable elevation; at the foot of which is a narrow border of flat land, extending almost all around it, bordered with a white-sand beach. The hills are covered with herbage, except a few rocky cliffs, with patches of trees interspersed to their summits. According to the information captain Cook received from some of the natives, who spoke the language of Otaheite, this island is plentifully stocked with hogs and fowls, and produces the several kinds of fruits and roots that are to be met with at the other islands in the neighbourhood. near five miles long and two broad, but badly watered, and reckoned unhealthy.
They cultivate cotton here, which is much esteemed by the manufacturers, likewise rum and sugar; it has of late years undergone great improvements.
Its fruits, of which there are no great variety, are but indifferent; some apples excepted. The entrance into the harbour is at the E end of the island.

Tortona, a fortified town of Italy, in the dutchy of Milan, capital of the Tor-tonese, with a bishop's see, and a castle on an eminence. It is deemed a considerable frontier place; was taken by the allies in 1744, by the Spaniards in 1745, and by the French in 1796. It is seated on the Scrivia, 28 miles S E of Casal, and 27 S W of Milan. Lon.
8 58 E, lat. 45 8 N.

Tortorella, a town of Naples, in Prin-cipato Citeriore, five miles N E of Poli-castrò.

Tortosa, a city of Spain, in Catalonia, with a bishop's see, a university, and a citadel. It is divided into the Old and New Town, both surrounded by modern fortifications. The entrance is over a large bridge of boats, on the river Ebro, whose head is fortified. It has a great number of churches and religious houses; among which the cathedral, the royal college of Dominicans; and the convent of the Carmelites, are the most remarkable. It is situate in a country, fertile in corn and fruits, and abounding with quarries and mines of silver, iron, alabaster, jasper of divers colours, and stones with veins of gold.
Here is a great deal of silk and oil, and very fine potters ware, which resembles porcelain. It is seated partly on a plain, and partly on a hill, 35 miles S W of Turragona, and 180 E of Madrid. Lon. 0 35 E, lat. 40 53 N.

Tortuga, an uninhabited island, near the coast of Terra Firma, 40 miles W of the island of Margareta, and about 30 miles in circumference. The E end is full of bare rugged broken rocks, which stretch a little way out to sea.
At this end is a large salt pond, where the salt begins to kern in April; there have been 20 ships here at a time for salt. At the W end is a small harbour with fresh water; and it is full of low trees. There are a few goats on it; and the turtles or tortoises come upon the sandy banks to lay their eggs, whence this island has its name. It was formerly much frequented by the bu-caneers. Lon. 62 20 W, lat. 11 30 N.

Tortuga, an island of the W Indies, near the N coast of the island of His-paniola, where the French bucaners used to fortify themselves. It is about 80 miles in circumference, and has a safe harbour, but difficult of access.
Lon. 73 10 W, lat. 20 10 N.

Tosa, a seaport of Spain, in Catalonia, seated at the bottom of a bay, which forms a good harbour, where vessels are sheltered from all winds, except the S W. It is built partly on a plain, and partly on a steep hill, which projects into the sea. On the top of the hill, nearer the sea, is a strong citadel, with other fortifications. It is 37 miles N E of Barcelona. Lon. 2 54 E, lat. 41

Totness, a borough in Devonshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated on the river Dart, on the side of a hill, and had formerly a castle and walls. It sends two members to parliament, is governed by a mayor, and has a manufacture of serges. It is 27 miles S W of Exeter, and 196 W by S of London. Lon. 3 44 W, lat. 50 24 N.

Tottenham High Cross, a village in Middlesex, five miles N of London. It is so called from a cross, which has existed here from time immemorial. It was formerly a column of wood, raised upon a hillock. It was taken down about 200 years ago, and the present structure erected in its stead. Here are three alms houses. The rivulet called the Mosel, which rises on Muswell Hill, near Highgate, runs through the principal street.

Totteridge, a village near Middlesex, near Chipping Barnet, inhabited by the citizens of London, so long ago as the reign of James I. It is 10 miles N N W of London.

Toul, a town of France, in the department of Meurthe, and late province of Lorraine. Before the revolution it was a bishop's see, and the cathedral and late episcopal chapel, are handsome structures. It was an imperial town of Germany, till taken by the French in 1532. It is seated on the Moselle, in a plain, almost surrounded by mountains, 10 miles W of Nanci, and 167 S E of Paris. Lon. 6 2 E, lat. 48 40 N.

Toula, a river of W Chinese Tartary, which takes its course from E to W, and is a broad, deep, and rapid river, and its banks are surrounded with woods and beautiful meadows. The mountains which hang over it on the northern side are covered with forests of aged firs, and have the same effect on the eye as an immense amphitheatre. This river, after having received the waters of the Selingue, loses itself in the lake of Pai-cal, which is the largest of all Tartary.

Toulouca, or Tulmabine, a town and fortress of Hindoostan, in Lahore, seated on the Rauve, 70 miles E N E of Moultan.

Toulon, a city and seaport of France, capital of the department of Var, and late province of Provence. Before the revolution in 1789, it was an episcopal see. The inhabitants are computed at 80,000. Toulon experienced the dreadful ravages of the plague in 1418, 1461, 1476, 1587, 1621, 1630, 1647, 1664, and 1730. It is divided into the Old and New Quarter. The first which is ill-built, has nothing remarkable in it but the Rue aux Arbrcs, (a kind of mall) and the townhouse. The New Quarter contains, (besides the magnificent works constructed by Lewis XIV.) many fine houses, and a grand oblong square, lined with trees, and serving as a parade. The harbour is distinguished likewise by the names of the Old Port, or Merchants Port, and the New Port, or King's Port; but this last appellation has vanished with the abolition of royalty. The New Haven was constructed by Louis XIV. as were the fortifications of the city. In the front of this haven is an arsenal, containing all the places necessary for the construction and fitting out of vessels: the first object that appears is a rope-walk, entirely arched, extending as far as the eye can reach, and built after the designs of Vauban: here cables are made, and above is a place for the preparation of hemp. Here likewise is the armoury, for muskets, pistols, halberts, &c. In the park of artillery, are cannons placed in piles, bombs, grenades, mortars, and balls of various kinds, ranged in wonderful order. The long sail room, the foundery for cannon, the dock yards, the basins, &c. are all worthy of observation. The gallees, transferred from Marseilles, some years ago, occupy at Toulon a second basin in the New Port. Many of the galley slaves are artizans, some merchants, and which is most wonderful, of scrupulous integrity. They no longer sleep on board the gallees, but have been lately provided with accommodations on shore, in a vast building newly erected for that purpose. Both the old and New Port have an outlet into the spacious outer road or harbour, which is surrounded by hills, and formed by nature almost circular. Its circuit is of great extent; and the entrance is defended, on both sides, by a fort and batteries. In a word, the basins, docks, and arsenal at Toulon, warranted the remark of a foreigner who visited them in the late reign, that the king of France was greater there than at Versailles. Toulon is the only mart in the Mediterranean for the re-exportation of the products of the E Indies. It was twice taken by the imperial troops in the 16th century; and in August 1793, it was surrendered by the inhabitants, to the British admiral lord Hood, on condition of enabling them to effect the re-establishment of monarchy in France. It was garrisoned for some time, by the British troops; but the French having laid siege to it, they were obliged to evacuate the place in December following, after having destroyed the arsenal, &c. Toulon is seated on a bay of the Mediterranean, 37 miles S E of Marseilles, and 317 S S E of Paris. Lon. 5 56 E, lat. 43 7 N.

Toulouse, a city of France, in the department of Upper Garonne and late province of Languedoc, with an archbishop's see. It contains 56,000 inhabitants, and is the most considerable city in France, next to Paris, although its population bears no proportion to its extent. Here are many monuments of antiquity, and it was one of the most flourishing cities of the old Gauls, and a Roman colony; in process of time it became the metropolis of the Visigoths, afterwards of Aquitain, and at length one of the most considerable governments of France, and the seat of a parliament. The walls of the city, as well as the houses, are built with bricks. St. Stephen's, the metropolitan church,

The long sail room, the cannon, the dock yards, &c. are all worthy of observation. Gallies, transferred from some years ago, occupy at present a basin in the New Port. Galley slaves are artificers, and which is most of scrupulous integrity. They sleep on board the galley. There have been lately provided with barracks on shore, in a vast way erected for that purpose. The old and New Port have an extensive spacious outer road which is surrounded by hills, by nature almost circular, of great extent; and the fortifications, on both sides, by batteries. In a word, the harbor, and arsenal at Toulon, is the remark of a foreigner in them in the late reign, that France was greater there than in Versailles. Toulon is the only port in the Mediterranean for the re-shipment of the products of the East. It was twice taken by the English in the 16th century; and in 1793, it was surrendered by the British admiral to the British admiral, on condition of enabling the re-establishment of the British in France. It was garrisoned by the British troops; the French having laid siege to it, and obliged to evacuate the city in December following, after having destroyed the arsenal, &c. Toulon, a city of France, in the department of Upper Garonne and late province of Languedoc, with an archbishop. It contains 56,000 inhabitants. It is the most considerable city next to Paris, although its population bears no proportion to its situation. There are many monuments of antiquity, and it was one of the most important cities of the old Gauls, and the Roman colony; in process of time it became the metropolis of the Visigoths, the Franks of Aquitaine, and at length the most considerable government of France, and the seat of a parliament. The walls of the city, as well as the houses, are built with bricks. The cathedral, the metropolitan church, would be incomparable, if the nave were equal to the choir; and the archbishop's palace is magnificent. The townhouse, a modern structure, forms a perfect square, 324 feet long, and 66 feet high: the principal front occupies an entire side of the grand square, lately called the Place Royale. In the great hall, called the Hall of illustrious Men, is the statue of the chevalier Isaurac, and the busts of all the great men to whom Toulouse has given birth. Communicating with the Atlantic, on one side, by the river Garonne, and with the Mediterranean, on the other by the canal of Languedoc. Toulouse might have been a very commercial city: but the taste of the inhabitants has been principally for the sciences and belles-lettres. Of course there are two colleges, two public libraries, and three academies. The little commerce they have, consists in leather, drapery, blankets, mignonets, oil, iron, mercery, hardware, and books. The bridge over the Garonne is at least equal to those of Tours and Orleans: it forms the communication between the city and suburb of St. Cyprien. Toulouse is 37 miles E of Auch, 125 S E of Bourdeaux, and 330 S by W of Paris. Lon. 1 21 E, lat. 43 35 N.

Tour, a town of France, in the department of Puy de Dome, 22 miles S of Clermont. Lon. 3 10 E, lat. 43 25 N.

Tour de Rousillon, a town of France, in the department of Eastern Pyrenees and late province of Rousillon, seated on a hill near the river Tet, two miles below Perpignan.

Tour du Pin, a town of France, in the department of Isere, and late province of Dauphiny, seated on a river of the same name, 34 miles S of Vienna.

Tour la Blanche, a town of France, in the department of Dordogne, 15 miles N W of Perigueux. Lon. 0 40 E, lat. 45 18 N.

Tour la Ville, a town of France, in the department of Charente, and late province of Normandy, separated from Cherbourg by a river.

Tourrain, a late province of France, 58 miles long and 55 broad, now forming the department of Indre and Loire, bounded on the N by Maine, on the E by Orleans, on the S by Berry, and on the W by Anjou and Poitou. The river Loire runs through the middle; and it is, in general, so pleasant and fertile a country, that it was called the Garden Tournan, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Marne, and late province of the isle of France, 22 miles E by S of Paris. Lon. 2 45 E, lat. 48 43 N.

Tournay, a considerable city of Austrian Flanders, capital of the Tournaysis with a bishop's see. It is defended by a strong castle, is a large trading place with several fine manufactures, and is particularly famous for good stockings. The cathedral, and the abbey of St. Martin are very magnificent. It has been several times taken and retaken, lastly by the French in 1794. It is seated on the Scheldt, which divides it into two parts, that are united by a bridge 14 miles S E of Lisle, 30 S W of Ghent, and 135 N by E of Paris. Lon. 3 28 E, lat. 50 33 N.

Tournehem, a town of France, in the department of the Straits of Calais, nine miles N W of St. Omer.

Tourmon, a town of France, in the department of Ardeche, and late province of Languedoc, with a fine college, and a castle. It is seated on the declivity of a mountain, near the river Rhone, 40 miles W of Grenoble, and 280 S by E of Paris. Lon. 4 50 E, lat. 45 6 N.

Tourmus, a town of France, in the department of Saone and Loire, and late province of Burgundy seated on the Saone, in a country fertile in corn and wine, 15 miles S of Chalons, and 202 f by W of Paris. Lon. 5 0 E, lat. 46 34 N.

Tours, a considerable city of France, capital of the department of Indre and Loire. Before the French revolution it was an archbishop's see. It is advantageously seated on the Loire, and near the Cher. Over the former is one of the finest bridges in Europe, consisting of 15 elliptic arches, each 75 feet diameter: three of these were carried away by the breaking up of ice in 1783. It is a large and well built city, and the streets very clean by reason of several fountains in it, with a fine mall above 1000 paces long. The principal church is remarkable for the delicacy of its structure, its curious clock, its mo-Trebbin, town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, ten miles S S E of Potsdam, and 20 S S W of Berlin. Lon. 13 50 E, lat. 52 44 N.

Trebia, a river of Italy, which rises in the territory of Genoa, washes Bobio in the Milanese, and falls into the Po, above Placentia. On the banks of this river the Romans, under the consul Sempronius, were defeated by Hannibal, and numbers of them drowned in it.

Trebigni, or Trebigna, a town of Turkish Dalmatia, with a bishop's see. The inhabitants are partly Turks and partly Greeks, and there are some papists. It is seated on the gulf of Venice, on the river Trebenska, 14 miles N of Ragusa. Lon. 18 11 E, lat. 43 4 N.

Trebisiaci, a town of Italy in Naples, in Calabria Ulteriore, seated on the Tarento, five miles E of Cassano.

Trebisond, a large and strong seaport of Turkey in Asia, in Natolia, with a Greek archbishop's see, and a castle. It is seated at the foot of a very steep hill. The walls are square and high, with battlements; and are built of the ruins of ancient structures, on which are some unintelligible inscriptions. The town is not populous; for there are more woods and gardens in it than houses, and these but one story high. The castle is seated on a flat rock, with ditches cut in it. The harbour is at the E end of the town, and the mole built by the Genoese is almost destroyed. It stands on the Black Sea, 104 miles N N W of Erzerum, and 440 E of Constantinople. Lon. 40 25 E, lat. 40 45 N.

Trebitz, a town of Germany, in Moravia. It has a manufacture of cloth, and is seated on the Iglaw, 21 miles S E of Iglaw, and 52 N W of Budweis. Lon. 16 12 E, lat. 49 4 N.

Trebnitz, a town of Germany, in Silesia, with a large nursery. Near it is a hill consisting of a soft clay, or stone, which is immediately formed into vessels of all kinds; and on being exposed to the air, they become as hard as if they had been baked. It is 12 miles N of Breslaw. Lon. 17 15 E, lat. 51 15 N.

Treffurt, a town of Germany, in Upper Saxony, in the landgraviate of Hesse, with a castle. It belongs to the elector of Mentz, and is seated near the Verta, 22 miles W of Saxe-Gotha. Lon. 10 19 E, lat. 51 8 N.

Treffurt, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Rhine, ten miles W S W of Mulhausen, and 32 W of Erfurt. Lon. 10 43 E, lat. 51 8 N.

Trent, a large river of England, which, issuing from three springs between Congleton and Leek, in Staffordshire, flows southwards through the midst of the county, continually augmented by rills from the same region; and at length, having received the Tame from the S, acquires a new direction, and, with a N E course, penetrates into Derbyshire, just after its junction with the Dove. After forming towards the N part, the boundary between Nottinghamshire, and Lincolnshire, a corner of which it crosses, it falls into the Humber, below Gainsborough. Parallel with the course of this river runs a canal, forming a communication between it and the Mersey, and joining it at Wilden. It is navigable through the whole of Nottinghamshire.

Trent, a river of N Carolina, in the United States of America, which falls into the Neus, at Newbern, where it is three quarters of a mile broad.

Trent, a fortified city of Germany, capital of the Trentino, with a bishop's see, whose bishop is a prince of the empire, under the protection of the house of Austria. It was formerly a free imperial city, and is famous for a council held here, which began in 1545, and ended in 1563. It is defended by some fortifications, and the bishop's palace stands without the city. The French took this city, after the battle of Rovere, in 1796, but abandoned it soon afterward. It is seated at the foot of the Alps, in a fertile valley, on the river Adige, 67 miles N W of Venice, and 260 N W of Rome. Lon. 11 27 E, lat. 46 8 N.

Trinidad, an island on the N E coast of Terra Firma, separated from Paria on the S, by a strait about 10 miles over; and from Cumana on the W, by the gulf of Paria. It was discovered by Columbus in 1498; it is 62 miles long and 45 broad; produces sugar, cotton, Indian corn, fine tobacco, and fruit; but the air is unhealthy. It was taken in 1595, by Sir Walter Raleigh, and in 1676, by the French, who plundered and left it. The capital is Port d'Espagne, in the gulf of Paria, near the Boca. Lon. 61 30 W, lat. 10 0 N.

Trinidad, a town of New Spain, in the audience of Guatimala, seated on the Pacific Ocean. It is an open town, but very important, there being no other harbour on this coast. A mile and a half hence is a place which the Spaniards call one of the Mouths of Hell: because it is continually covered by a thick smoke, and emits flames from time to time. It is 70 miles S E of Guatimala. Lon. 89 30 W, lat. 12 50 N.

Trinidad, a town of New Granada, seated on the Rio de la Magdalena, 58 miles N W of St Fe de Bogota. Lon. 73 45 W, lat. 4 45 N.

Trino, a fortified town of Italy, in Montferrat, subject to the king of Sardinia. It was taken, in 1704, by the French, who abandoned it in 1706. It is seated near the Po, eight miles N W of Casal, and 35 N E of Turin. Lon. 8 30 E, lat. 45 26 N.

Trinomialy, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, near which the troops of Hyder Ally were defeated by the British in 1768. It is 45 miles S S W of Arcot, and 52 W N W of Pondicherry. Lon. 78 35 E, lat. 12 2 N.

Tripoli, among the ancients, was a large kingdom, now an aristocratical republic in Africa; it is bounded on the N by the Mediterranean; on the E by Egypt; on the S by Sara, or the great desert; and on the W partly by Tunis, and partly by Biledulgerid; extending 1000 miles along the Mediterranean from N W to S E, but hardly 200 broad in any place; it has several cities, some of which are large and populous, particularly on the coasts, where they carry on the piratical business to great advantage. Near its capital the soil is tolerably fruitful; but to the eastward, as far as Egypt, is the sandy desert of Barca. It had the title of a kingdom, but is now a republic, governed by a dey, elected by the soldiers.

Tripoli, a considerable town of Barbary, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle and a fort. It is pretty large, and the inhabitants are noted pirates. It was taken by emperor Charles V. who settled the knights of Rhodes here; but they were expelled by the Turks in 1551. It was formerly very flourishing, and has now some trade in stuffs, saffron, corn, oil, dates, ostrich feathers, and skins; but they gain more by the Christians taken at sea: for they either set high ransoms on them, or sell them for slaves. Tripoli is seated on the Mediterranean, surrounded by a wall, 275 miles S E of Tunis, and 570 E S E of Algiers. Lon. 13 12 E, lat. 32 34 N.

Tripoli, an ancient and considerable town of Syria, on the Mediterranean, defended by a citadel. The inhabitants are near 60,000, consisting of Turks, Christians, and Jews. There is one handsome mosque, and all the houses have fountains belonging to them. Before it is a sand bank, which increases so much, that it is expected to choke up the harbour, which is two miles W of the town, and formed by a round piece of land, united to the mainland by an isthmus. On each side is a bulwark to defend the entrance. It is the residence of a bashaw, who also governs the territory about it, where there is a great number of mulberry trees, and other fruits, which enable them to carry on a silk manufacture in the town. It is 90 miles N W of Damascus, and 120 S of Scanderoon. Lon. 35 20 E, lat. 34 50 N.

Troppau, a strong and considerable town of Germany, in Upper Silesia, capital of a dutchy of the same name, with an ancient castle. The Prussians became masters of it in 1741 and 1756, but restored it to the house of Austria by a treaty subsequent to each capture. It is seated in a pleasant plain, on the rivers Oppa and Mohra, 40 miles N by E of Olmutz, and 72 S by E of Breslaw. Lon. 17 40 E, lat. 50 1 N.

Trowbridge, a town in Wiltshire, with a market on Saturday. The inhabitants consist chiefly of clothiers, who make superfine broad-cloth and kersey-mere, in a great degree by machinery. It is seated on a hill, 23 miles S W of Marlborough, and 98 W of London. Lon. 2 6 W, lat. 51 19 N.

Troy, a thriving town in Rensselaer county, New York; situated on the E side of Hudson river, four miles S of Lansingburg, five N by E of Albany, and 45 N of Hudson. This town advances rapidly in trade, and population; the inhabitants may be estimated about 5000. Here is a bank and a post office.

Troyes, a considerable city of France, in the department of Aube, and late province of Champagne. It was formerly an episcopal town, and is surrounded by good walls, but almost all the houses are of wood, and good water is wanting. Among the objects of curiosity are St. Stephen's, the principal church; the public library of the late Cordeliers; and the castle in which the ancient counts of Champagne resided. Its commerce, once very flourishing, now consists only in some linens, dimities, fustians, wax-chandlery, candles, and wine. It is seated on the Seine, 30 miles E N E of Sens, and 90 E S E of Paris. Lon. 4 10 E, lat. 48 13 N.

Tschops, a town of Germany in Upper Saxony, in the circle of Erzgebirg. It is celebrated for its blue manufactures.

Tschoulyms, a nation of Tartars, who occupy the country lying between the upper part of the rivers Ob and Yenisei. The country which they inhabit is for the most part, fertile with large forests, and mountainous only about the banks of the two Yiousses, which take their sources among the mountains of the province of Yeniseisk, near the river of that name. The inhabitants are docile, attentive, eager after instruction, and well skilled in what they have been able to learn. Whenever they have nothing to fear, they discover great frankness of disposition, honesty, and complaisance; but when they have reason to apprehend any severe treatment or fraud, they lye, and are sullen. They shew great friendship, and pay numberless little attentions towards each other; but are lazy with regard to all kinds of labour, and their manner of living is dirty. Ever since they have had the custom of living in settled villages during the winter, the greatest number of them sow a few fields with rye, wheat, barley, oats, and hemp, but seldom cultivate enough for their own consumption though their land be ever so fruitful. Many of them sow nothing at all but had rather buy their flour and meal of the Russians, or live without bread, when it is to be had of them. Those who are not averse to the trouble of managing cattle, keep a small number of horses and cows, and a few sheep of the short-tailed kind. As the snow is deep and the winter very long in these parts, they are obliged to lay up a stock of hay for the support of their cattle during the extremity of the cold; a great hardship to people so abandoned to sloth as the Tschoulyms. Neither swine nor poultry is to be seen in their inclosures. In imitation of the Ostyaks fishing and hunting are their principal occupations. The latter furnish them with the means of paying their tribute, which is in Marten skins.

Tschutski, a country of the E extremity of Asia, opposite the N W coast of America, bounded by the Anadir on the S. The climate is cold, the soil marshy, abounding in rocks, barren, bare of woods, and extremely wild and savage. The summer lasts only a few months, but in this season the days are very long, because for several weeks together the sun does not set at all. The winter extends through the greatest part of the year; and during this melancholy season it is almost one continual night. The inhabitants are analogous to the country; being the most savage, the most barbarous, the most untractable, the least civilized, the most rugged and cruel people of all Siberia. They have neither letters nor writing, nor any kind of instruction. They are not yet entirely subdued; and consequently it is but one part of the nation that pays tribute. Their history is enveloped in darkness, as well as their national constitution and force. They will not endure the least constraint; and though they have been several times conquered by the Russians, they have always regained their liberty. By a probable computation they are estimated at 3500 males capable of bearing arms. They are formidable neighbours to the Koriacs, who often experience their depredations. Twenty Tschouktsches never hesitate a moment about attacking fifty Koriaks; and, had it not been for the Russian Ostrogs, the former would long ago have exterminated the whole Koriak nation. The care of their deer is their principal occupation; nevertheless they follow the chase and the fishery. In the number of rein deer consists all the riches of the Tschouktsches. A possessor of ten thousand is not uncommon; and some of fifty thousand are to be met with.

Tsi-nan-fou, a celebrated city of China, the capital of Chang-tong. This city is large, populous, and is much respected by the Chinese on account of its having once been the residence of a long series of kings, whose tombs, rising on the neighbouring mountains, afford a beautiful prospect. In its district are four cities of the second, and 26 of the third class. It is seated S of the river Tsi, or Tsing-ho, 160 miles S by E of Peking. Lon. 117.25 E, lat. 36.30 N.

Tsi-ning-tcheou, a city of China, in the province of Chang-tong, and district of Yeu-tcheou-fou. From its situation on the grand canal, it is little inferior to the capital of the province, either in extent, population, riches, or commerce, and on that account a great number of strangers come here to traffic.

Tsin-tcheou-fou, a commercial city of China, in Chang-tong. The principal branch of its commerce arises from fish, which are caught in great abundance. It has one city of the second and 13 of the third class, under its jurisdiction, and is 75 miles E of Tsin-nang-fou.

T S U

Tsong-ming, an island of China, on the coast of the province of Kiang-nan, to which it belongs, and from which it is separated by an arm of the sea, 13 miles broad. It is 50 miles long, and 13 broad. It was formerly a sandy desert, to which criminals were banished; those that first landed on it began to till the ground, that they might not perish with hunger; some poor Chinese families emigrated thither afterwards; and, in less than ten years, the island was peopled and cultivated. Some parts of it produce wheat, rice, barley, cotton, citrons, and several other fruits, but its principal revenue arises from salt, which is made in such abundance, that the island can supply most of the neighbouring countries. In this island is only one city of the third class; but villages are so numerous, that they seem to touch each other, and to form one continued city. The country is delightful, and intersected by many canals. Lon. of its S E end 121 55 E, lat. 30 15 N.

Tuen-tcheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Fo-kien. Its situation, trade, extent, triumphal arches, temples, even its streets all well paved, secure it a distinguished rank among the most beautiful cities of China. In the neighbourhood of this city is a bridge, remarkable for its extraordinary size and the singularity of its construction. It was built at the sole expense of one governor. Father Martini, a man of established veracity, speaks of it in the following words: "I saw it twice," says he, "and always with astonishment. It is built entirely of the same kind of blackish stone, and has no arches, but above three hundred large stone pillars, which terminate on each side in an acute angle, to break the violence of the current with greater facility. Five stones of equal size, laid transversely from one pillar to another, form the breadth of the bridge, each of which, according to the measurement I made in walking, were eighteen of my ordinary steps in length; there are one thousand of them, all of the same size and figure: a wonderful number, when one considers the great number of these heavy stones, and the manner in which they are supported between the pillars! On each side there are buttresses or props, constructed of the same kind of stone, on the tops of which are placed lions on pedestals, an island of China, on the province of Kiang-nan, and from which it is an arm of the sea, 13 miles long, and is formerly a sandy desolation where criminals were banished; and on it began to be settled that they might not starve; some poor Chinese emigrated thither after less than ten years, the soil was sown and cultivated, it produced wheat, rice, citrus, and several other articles, which is made in such quantities that the island can supply the neighbouring countries. In the only one city of the third rank, there are so numerous, that they touch each other, and form a walled city. The country is fertile and intersected by many rivers. Lon. 121 55 E.

Tsu-fou, a city of China, in the province of Fo-kien. Its situation is very singular, the streets all well paved, distinguished rank among the cities of China. In the middle of this city is a bridge, and its extraordinary size and the sole expense of one man, the late Martini, a man of great capacity, speaks of it in the following words: "I saw it twice," and I always with astonishment. It is built entirely of the same kind of stone, and has no mortar. There are three hundred large arches which terminate on each side at an angle, to break the force of the current with greater stones of equal size, laid on one pillar to another, and on each side of the bridge, each of the arches is supported by a stone, and the manner in which they are supported between each side there are buttresses, constructed of the same stone, on the tops of which are placed lions on pedestals.

and other ornaments of the like nature. It is to be observed, that in this description, I speak only of one part of the work, that which is between the small city of Lu-yang and the castle built upon the bridge: for, beyond the castle, there is another part equally stupendous as the first.

Tuam, a city of Ireland, in the county of Galway, and province of Connaught, with an archbishop's see; on which account it is called a city, though now reduced to a village. It is 20 miles NNE of Galway, and 25 W S W of Roscommon. Lon. 8 46 W, lat. 53 33 N.

Tuban, one of the strongest towns in Java, an island of the E Indies, with a harbour, and a king of its own. It is seated on the N coast of the island. Lon. 111 51 E, lat. 6 0 S.

Tubingen, a fortified town of Germany, in the circle of Suabia, and duchy of Wirtemberg, with a university, and a castle. Here is a large house called New Bau, where a certain number of students in law are lodged and boarded gratis: and in the town house is a very curious clock. It is seated on the Neckar, in a country abounding in corn and wine, 20 miles S of Stutgard, and 50 E by S of Strashurg. Lon. 9 4 E, lat. 48 30 N.

Tuckerton, a port of entry and a post town in Burlington county, New-Jersey, situated on the S side of Mullicus river, near little Egg-harbour, and 55 miles E by S of Philadelphia.

Tucuman, an extensive government of Spanish S America, lying between Chili and Paraguay, to the E of the Andes, and W of the Rio de la Plata. This province, with the country S of that river, forms an extensive plain, almost without a tree. The soil is a deep fertile mould, watered by many streams from the Andes, and clothed in perpetual verdure. In this rich pasturage, the horses and cattle imported from Europe, have multiplied to an almost incredible degree. This has enabled the inhabitants, not only to open a lucrative trade with Peru, by supplying it with cattle, horses, and mules, but to carry on a commerce, equally beneficial, by the exportation of hides to Europe; notwithstanding which, the towns of this country are no better than paltry villages, to which the Spaniards have endeavoured to add some dignity, by erecting them into bishoprics. Tucuman is under the jurisdiction of the new viceroyalty at Buenos Ayres.

Tucayo, a town of Terra Firma, in Venezuela, and in a valley of the same name. A river runs through the middle of the valley, and the soil abounds in sugar-canes, cotton, and all the necessaries of life. Lon. 69 2 W, lat. 7 31 N.

Tuddington, a town in Bedfordshire, with a market on Saturday, five miles N of Dunstable, and 38 N N W of London. Lon. 0 32 W, lat. 52 0 N.

Tudela, a considerable town of Spain, in Navarre, with a castle. It is seated in a country that produces good wine, on the river Ebro, over which is a handsome bridge, 45 miles N W of Saragossa, and 140 N E of Madrid. Lon. 1 10 W, lat. 42 9 N.

Tver, a government of Russia, once an independent principality, united to the empire by Ivan Basilowitz, in 1490, and comprised in the government of Novogorod, from which it has been separated. The population has increased to a surprising degree; a circumstance evincing the advantage arising from the new code of laws of Catharine II. It was the first province newly modelled according to that code; and it has experienced the beneficial effects of these excellent regulations. The country produces abundantly all kinds of corn and vegetables. Its forests yield vast quantities of oak and other valuable timber. The quadrupeds, and the feathered race, are the same as in all the N of Europe; and, besides the fishes common to most lakes and rivers, there is a fish, peculiar to the waters of these northern regions, called the sterlet, the accipenser ruthenus of Linne, and is a species of sturgeon, highly esteemed for the flavour of its flesh, and for its roe, of which the finest caviare is made. The government of Tver contains 13 districts.

Tver, a commercial city of Russia, capital of a government of the same name, seated at the confluence of the Tverza and Volga. It is divided into the old and new town: the former, situated on the opposite side of the Volga, consists almost entirely of wooden cottages; the latter, about fifteen years ago, was a few buildings excepted, scarcely superior; but being in 1763, fortunately destroyed by a dreadful conflagration, it has risen with lustre from its ashes. The empress was no sooner informed of this calamity, than she ordered a regular and beautiful plan of a new town to be sketched by an eminent architect, and enjoined, that all the houses should be re-constructed in conformity to this model. She raised at her own expence the governor's house, the bishop's palace, the courts of justice, the new-exchange, the prison, and several other public edifices. The streets which are broad and long, issue in a straight line from a square, or rather an octagon, in the centre: the houses of this octagon and of the principal streets are of brick stuccoed white, form a very magnificent appearance. The New Town when completed, will consist of two octagons, with several streets leading to them, and intersecting each other at right angles, and would be no inconsiderable ornament to the most opulent and civilized country. There is an ecclesiastical seminary at Tver, which is under the inspection of the bishop, and admits 600 students. In 1776 the empress instituted a school for the instruction of 200 burghers' children. In June, 1779, an academy was also opened in this town, for the education of the young nobility of the province, at the charge of the same imperial patroness. It admits 120 students; who are instructed in foreign languages, &c. It is a place of considerable commerce; and both the Volga and the Tvertza are covered with boats. It owes its principal trade to its advantageous situation, being near the conflux of those two rivers, along which are conveyed all the goods and merchandise sent by water from Siberia and the southern provinces, toward Petersburg. It is said to contain upwards of 10,000 inhabitants. Tver is 99 miles N N W of Moscow. Lon. 36 5 E, lat. 56 7 N.

the effect of the whole is romantic Tunis, a kingdom of Africa, bounded on the N by the Mediterranean, on the E by that sea and Tripoli, on the S and S W by Biledulgerid, and on the W by Algiers. It extends 300 miles from E to W, and 250 from N to S. This country was formerly a monarchy; but a difference arising between the father and son, one of whom was for the protection of the Christians, and the other for that of the Turks, in 1574, the inhabitants shook off the yoke of both. From this time it became a republic, under the protection of the Turks, and pays a certain tribute to the Bashaw, that resides at Tunis. The air in general is healthy, but the soil in the E part is but indifferent, for want of water. Toward the middle, the mountains and vallies abound in fruits; but the W part is the most fertile, being watered by rivers. The environs of Tunis are very dry, upon which account corn is generally dear.

The inroads of the Arabs oblige the inhabitants to sow their barley and rye in the suburbs, and to inclose their gardens with walls. However, there are plenty of citrons, lemons, oranges, dates, grapes, and other fruits. There are also olive trees, roses, and odoriferous plants. In the woods and mountains are lions, wild beeves, ostriches, monks, cameleons, roebucks, hares, pheasants, partridges, and other sorts of birds and beasts. The most remarkable rivers are the Gadil-carbar, Magrida, Magerada, and Caps.
The form of government is aristocratic, that is, by a council whose president is the dey. The members of the divan, or council, are chosen by the dey, and he, in his turn, is elected by the divan, which is composed of soldiers, who have more than once taken off the dey's head. The inhabitants carry on a great trade in linen and woollen cloth.

In the city of Tunis alone, are above 3000 clothiers and weavers. They have also a trade in horses, olives, oil, soap, and ostriches eggs and feathers.
The established religion is Mahometanism; and the inhabitants consist of Moors, Turks, Arabs, Jews, and Christian slaves.

Tunis, a large and celebrated city of Barbary, capital of a kingdom of the same name. It is seated on the point of the gulf of Goletta, about ten miles from the site of the famous city of Carthage. It is in the form of an oblong square, five miles in circumference, with a lofty wall, flanked with several strong towers, five gates and 35 mosques. The houses are all built of stone, though but one story high; and it has a good citadel on an eminence, on the W side of the city. Without the walls are two suburbs, which contain 1000 houses. Within the walls are 10,000 families, and above 3000 tradesmen's shops. The divan, or council of state assembles in an old palace, and the dey is the chief of the republic, who resides here. The city has no water, but what is kept in cisterns, except one well, kept for the bashaws use. The harbour has a very narrow entrance, through a small channel, which is well fortified. The Mahometans here have nine colleges for students, besides a great number of smaller schools. Tunis is a place of great trade, ten miles from the sea, 275 N W of Tripoli, and 380 E of Al-

They pass for the richest shepherds in the Turkish empire, and dwell in fields under tents, removing from one place to another, for the sake of pastures to feed their flocks, which are very numerous, consisting of councils, sheep, and goats.

Turin, a flourishing city of Italy, the capital of Piedmont, and residence of its sovereign the king of Sardinia, with an archbishop's see, and a university. It is seated on a vast plain, at the foot of the Alps, and at the confluence of the Doria and Po. Here are many large squares, among which that of St. Charles is the most spacious and beautiful; the buildings are handsome, and it has extensive areades on each side. Most of the streets are well built, uniform, straight, and terminate on some agreeable object: the Strada di Po, the finest and largest, leads to the royal palace, and is adorned with piazzas, filled with shops; as are various others of the best streets; all of which are kept clear by means of a canal from the Doria, with sluices that flow through them into the Po. The inhabitants are computed to be 1,000,000. The houses are handsome, and all built of the same height. The royal palace consists of two magnificent structures, joined together by a gallery, in which are several statues, all sorts of arms, the genealogy of the dukes of Savoy, a representation of the celestial signs, a royal library, and many other curiosities. Besides these two structures, there is the palace of the prince of Carignan, the hospital of St. John, the seminary of the Jesuits, the royal hospital, and the metropolitan church of St. John, wherein they pretend to keep the cloth in which is the print of the face of Jesus Christ. These are all superb structures. When the plague reigned at Marseilles in 1720, a great number of artificers withdrew to Turin. Turin is well fortified and extremely strong. There are very fine walks on the ramparts, which require two hours to pass round them.

There are also very fine gardens on the side of the river Po. The arsenal is a fine and capacious building, including five courts; it contains arms for 120,000 men, and there is a cannon foundry and a chymical laboratory annexed to it, and a charming public place called the Corfo, where the nobility assemble, from five to six in an evening to exhibit themselves and their equipage. Near the city, on the banks of the Po, is the beautiful royal castle of Valentin, the garden of which is applied to botanical studies, and the house commonly called La Charite, is remarkable, as there is room for 3000 poor people.

The college of the academy is very large and well built, and has a great number of ancient inscriptions. In the royal library are 19,000 manuscripts, besides 30,000 printed books. The French besieged this city in 1706; but prince Eugene attacked them before the walls, totally defeated their army, and compelled them to raise the siege. In December 1798, the French army took Turin, obliging the king and his family to remove to the island of Sardinia, but in June following, the French were driven out by the Austrians, but the king has not yet returned. Turkey in Asia is bounded on the N by the straits of Constantinople. It lies be-countries of Irac-Arabia, Diarbeck, Cur-distan, Armenia, part of Circassia, Natalia, and Syria, with Palestine, or the Holy Land. In Africa, the Turks have still a precarious sovereignty over Egypt. Of these countries (which see respectively) the climate, productions, manners, &c. must be various. The Turks are generally robust and well shaped, of a good mein, and patient of hardships, which render them fit for war. They shave their heads; but wear their beards long, except the military and those in the seraglio, who wear only whiskers. They cover their heads with a white linen turban of an enormous size, and never pull it off but when they sleep. None but Turks must presume to wear a white turban.

Their breeches or drawers are of a piece with their stockings; and they have slippers instead of shoes, which they pull off when they enter a temple or house. They wear shirts, with wide sleeves not gathered at the wrists, and over them a vest tied with a sash; their upper garment being a loose gown, something shorter than the vest.
The women's dress pretty much resembles that of the men; only they have a stiffened cap with horns, something like a mitre, on their heads instead of a turban, and wear their hair flowing down. When they go abroad, they are so wrapped up, that their faces cannot be seen. The Turks sit, eat, and sleep, according to the custom of the east, on sophas, or cushions, matresses, and carpets. Rice is their most general food, and coffee their common drink. Their most usual salutation is to bow the head a little, laying the right hand on their breasts; but to persons of rank they stoop so low as to touch the border of their vest. The women are kept under a rigorous confinement. They have generally deliand eyes, with an admirable chest.

Many of them are complete beauties.
Their cleanliness is extraordinary; for the smallest hair or the least soil to be upon their bodies. As to the qualities of their minds, they are said to want neither wit, vivacity, nor tenderness; and to be exceedingly amorous. It is no doubt for this reason that the men never suffer their wives faces to be seen, not even by the dearest friend they have in the world. There is no need of much wit to behave one's self well here; for a good mein and gravity supply the place of merit in the east, and much gaiety would spoil all. Not that the Turks want wit; but they speak little, and pride themselves in sincerity and modesty more than eloquence. The Turks use no unnecessary words, whereas the Greeks talk incessantly. Though these two nations are born under one climate, their tempers are more different than if they lived in the most distant countries.

The Turks make profession of candour and faithfulness, and are a charitable good natured people, jealousy excepted, and very sober. On the other hand, they are extremely proud, insolent, superstitious and covetous. They are also much addicted to unnatural lusts, and despise all other nations in general, especially those which are not of their religion. The common appellation, that they give the Christians is that of dogs. An intolerance runs through all the actions of the Turks, and they never change their manner of living. They seem to have no kind of genius for the improvement of the arts and sciences, though they live under the influence of the same heaven, and possess the same countries, as the ancient Grecians did. They generally loiter away their time, either among the women in the haram, or in smoking or taking opium; and though they herd together, you will observe as little conversation among them as among so many horses in a stable. They seldom travel, or use any exercise or rural sports; and discover little or no curiosity to discover the state of their own, or any other country; but Turkey, after all, is not without men of parts, probity, and honour; nor without benevolent, liberal, conversible, and ingenious people. They behave very commendably to their slaves and servants, and frequently better than the Christians do to theirs. There are no hereditary governments or titles of nobility in Turkey; and indeed the commonalty there enjoys the greatest liberty. Learning is at a very low ebb among the Turks: however, they have some schools, colleges, and academies; but they are on a very different footing from those among us. Not many years since a printing-house was set up at Constantinople, where books of all kinds were allowed to be printed, except on matters of religion. The most ingenious Mussulmen employ themselves in reading the Alcoran and the commentators upon it, to which almost all their learning is confined. Some of them amuse themselves with poetry, in which they are said to succeed very well, and other Turks delight in Music. The whole Turkish army, regulars and irregulars, amounts to above 300,000 men. Besides the true janizaries, or janisaries of the porte, and in actual pay, there are great numbers all over the empire, who procure themselves to be registered in this body, in order to be entitled to their privileges. The Turkish navy is not so considerable as might be expected in such extensive dominions, situated on several seas, and abounding in commodious harbours. By their neglecting navigation and foreign commerce, they can never find sailors to man a great fleet; and those they have are unskillful, as well as their pilots and officers. If they would apply themselves to navigation, and make the most of their situation and advantages, they could not fail to become a very formidable maritime power. Their navy generally consists of about 40 large ships, exclusive of galleys. In time of war they hire or buy merchant-ships, and others are sent them from Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli. The manufactures and commodities of Turkey are silks, carpets, goat's hair, wool, camel's hair, cotton-yarn, dimity, burdets, waxed linen shagreen skins, blue, red, and yellow Morocco leather; coffee, rhubarb, turpentine, storax, gums, opium, galls, mastic, emery, lemnian bole, pomegranate shells, sponges, dates, almonds, wine, oil, figs, raisins, mother of pearl, boxwood, saffron, &c. These are exported in large quantities by the several European trading nations, who import their own goods and purchase those of the country. The inland trade is carried on chiefly by the Jews and Armenians; and even the Turks send merchandise, both by land and water, from one part of the empire to another, but not to foreign Christian countries. No nation is more advantageously situated for traffic than the Turkish; having the navigation of the Black Sea, the Levant, and the Red Sea; and consequently greater opportunities of importing the rich merchandises of the East, and distributing them all over Europe, than any maritime power: but they never attempt distant voyages and have but few merchant-ships, both their imports and exports being chiefly made in foreign bottoms. Tyre, Sidon, and Alexandria, which once commanded the navigation and trade of the world, are in their possession, but make no figure in commerce at this day: and well it is for the Christians that the Turks are such an indolent generation; for their situation and vast extent of empire would enable them to monopolize the trade of the world, if they attended to it. In this empire there is a great traffic in the human species: not only male slaves, but beautiful young girls, being publicly bought and sold. The Turks believe in one God, and that his great prophet is Mahomet. Constantinople is the capital of all Turkey.

 It is 150 miles long and 100 broad, and watered by several rivers, of which the Arno is the chief. There are several mountains, in which are mines of iron, alum, and vitriol; also quarries of marble, alabaster, and porphyry, besides hot baths and mineral waters.
 Many parts of it are fruitful in corn and wine, and produce plenty of citrons, oranges, pomegranates, and other fruits.
 The inhabitants are distinguished by their attachment to commerce, and have established various manufactures, particularly of silks, stuffs, earthen ware, and gilt leather. They are much visited by foreigners, on account of their politeness, and because the Italian language is here spoken in its greatest purity. This dutchy is divided into three parts; namely, the Florentino, the Pisano, and the Sienese. John Gaston, the last duke of Tuscany, of the house of Medicis, died in 1737, without leaving any heirs male. By the treaty of London, 1718, the emperor of Germany, Charles VI. had promised Tuscany, as a fief of the empire, to don Carlos, infant of Spain, as being the nearest male heir: but, in 1735, when the sovereignty of Naples and Sicily was confirmed to that prince, he was obliged to renounce his right to Tuscany, in favour of Francis I. emperor of Germany, then Duke of Lorrain, to whom it was ceded as an equivalent for that dutchy, which he had given up to France. Florence is the capital.

VAL

Valencia, a city of Spain, capital of a province of the same name, with an archbishop's see, and a university. The Moors were expelled from it, in the 13th century. It was taken by the earl of Peterborough in 1705, and lost again two years after. It contains 12,000 houses within the walls besides those in the suburbs and pleasure gardens around it, which amount to the same number. The cathedral church has a steeple 150 feet high, and one side of the choir is encrusted with alabaster, and adorned with very fine paintings of Scripture history. The high altar is covered with silver, and lighted with fourteen silver lamps. The university consists of several colleges, and the jesuits have one of their own. The palace of the viceroy, that of Ciuta, the monastery of St. Jerom, the exchange, and the arsenal, are all worthy of the notice of travellers. It is not very strong, though there are bastions along the walls, and likewise a certain number of brass cannon. It is a very populous place, and has several good manufactures of cloth and silk, carried on with great success and industry; for even the very children are employed in spinning silk. It is seated on the Guadalavia (over which are five bridges) near the Mediterranean, 130 miles E S E of Madrid. Lon. 0 10 E, lat. 39 23 N.

Valenciennes, a city of France, in the department of the North. It contains about 20,000 souls, and the Scheldt divides it into two parts. It is a very important place: the citadel and fortifications were constructed by order of Lewis XIV. who took this town from the Spaniards; and it was confirmed to him by the treaty of Nimeguen, in 1678. In 1793, it was taken by the allies, after a severe siege; but it was given up to the French, in 1794. It is 20 miles W S W of Mons, 28 S E of Lisle, and 120 N N E of Paris. Valadolid, a city of Spain, in Old Castile, capital of a principality of the same name, with a bishop's see, and a university. It is surrounded with strong walls, embellished with handsome buildings large public squares, piazzas, and fountains. It is large and populous, containing 11,000 houses, with fine long and broad streets, and large high houses adorned with balconies. The market place, called El Campo, is 700 paces in circumference, surrounded by a great number of convents, and is the place where the fairs are kept. There is another square in the middle of the city surrounded with handsome brick houses, having under them piazzas, where people may walk dry in all weathers. Within these piazzas merchants and tradesmen keep their shops; all the houses are of the same height, being four stories; and there are balconies at every window of iron gilt. In the whole there are 70 monasteries and numeries, the finest of which is that of the Dominicans, remarkable for its church, which is one of the most magnificent in the city. The kings resided a long while at this place, and the royal palace, which still remains, is of very large extent, though but two stories high; within are fine paintings of various kinds, and at one of the corners a city of Spain, in the province of Castile, capital of a principality of the same name, with a bishop's see, and a university. It is surrounded with walls, and embellished with handsome public squares, and many fountains. It is large and contains 11,000 houses, long and broad streets, and houses adorned with balconies. The market place, called El Mercado, is 700 paces in circumference, and is the place where the fairs are held.

There is another square in the city surrounded with brick houses, having under the arches, where people may walk in all weathers. Within these arches merchants and tradesmen keep their shops; all the houses are of the same height, being four stories; and balconies at every window of the second story.

In the whole there are many churches and nunneries, the most remarkable of which is that of the Dominicans, the most magnificent in the city. The kings resided at this place, and the royal palace, which still remains, is of very great extent, though but two stories high. It has fine paintings of various subjects, and at one of the corners

a curious clock made in the same manner as that of Strasburgh. Besides this, there are several other places which a traveller ought to visit; not to mention those belonging to noblemen, nor the houses of rich citizens, which have all their particular beauties. There are other public squares which we have not room to describe, and therefore we shall only take notice, that another of them is surrounded with 130 churches, chapels, convents, and hospitals; and that the town-house stands on one of the sides. The house of the inquisition is an odd sort of structure, for there are no windows, but a few holes to let in the light. The environs of the city are a fine plain covered with gardens, orchards, vineyards, meadows, and fields. It is seated on the Escorial and Pisnerga, near the Douero, 52 miles S W of Burgos, 80 S E of Leon, and 95 N by W of Madrid. Lon. 4 25 W, lat. 41 50 N.

Vallais, a county of Switzerland, extending 100 miles from E to W, and divided into Upper and Lower Vallais.

The former reaches from Mount Furca to the river Murge, below Sion; and the latter from that river to St. Gingon, on the lake of Geneva. The Upper Vallais is sovereign of the Lower Vallais, and contains seven independent dixains, or commonwealths; namely, Sion, Goms, Brig, Visp, Leuk, Raren, and Siders. Of these, Sion is aristocratical, and the others democratical. They are called dixains, because the Upper Vallais being divided into seven, and the Lower into three districts, each division is a dixain, or tenth of the whole. The Vallais contains 100,000 inhabitants, who all profess the Roman Catholic religion. The Bishop of Sion was formerly absolute sovereign over the greatest part of the

Vallais; but his authority is now limited. The inhabitants of the Upper Vallais are much subject to goiters, or large excrescences from the throat, which often increase to an enormous size; idiocy also remarkably abounds among them; and the lower class are extremely indolent and dirty. From Mount Furca, its E boundary, two vast ranges of Alps inclose the Vallais. The S chain separates it from the Milanese, Piedmont, and Savoy; the N divides it from the canton of Bern. A country entirely inclosed within high Alps, and consisting of plains, elevated valleys, and lofty mountains, must necessarily exhibit a great variety of climates and prospects. The productions of the Vallais vary also according to its singular diversity of climates; in consequence of which, Mr. Coxe observes, that strawberries, cherries, plums, pears, and grapes (each the natural growth of the country) may be tasted in the same day. It has more than sufficient wine and corn for interior consumption; and a considerable quantity of both are yearly exported; the soil in the midland and lower districts being exceedingly rich and fertile; but in the more elevated parts, barley is the only grain that can be cultivated with success. There are no manufactures of any consequence in the Vallais, and, indeed, the ignorance of the people is no less remarkable than their indolence. They are hardy and enterprising, brave, severe to enemies, affable to strangers.

Venezuela, a province of Terra Firma, bounded on the N by the Caribbean Sea, on the E by Caraccus, on the S by New Granada, and on the W by St. Martha. When the Spaniards landed here in 1499, they observed some huts built upon piles, in an Indian Village, in order to raise them above the stagnated water that covered the plain: and this induced them to give it the name of Venezuela, or Little Venice. Near the seacoast are high mountains, the tops of which are barren, but the lower parts in the valley are fertile, producing plenty of corn, rich pastures, sugar, tobacco, and fruits. There are also plantations of cocoanuts, which are exceedingly good: and gold is found in the sands of rivers.

Venice, a territory and lately the republic of in Italy which comprehends 14 provinces, namely, the Dogado, the Paduano, the Vicentino, the Veronese, the Bresciano, the Bergomasco, the Cremasco, the Polesino-di-Rovigo, the Marca-Trevigiana, the Feltrino, the Bellunese, the Cadorino, Friuli, and Istria; which see in their proper places. In the fourth century, when Attila king of the Huns, called the Scourge of God, ravaged the N part of Italy, many of the inhabitants abandoned their country, and retired into the islands of the Adriatic Sea. As these islands are near each other, they found means to join them together, by driving piles on the side of the canals, on which they built houses, and thus the superb city of Venice had its beginning. The government of the republic of Venice was aristocratic, for none could have had any share in it but the nobles. These may be divided into six classes, namely, twelve of the most ancient families, four families that in 830, subscribed to the building of the abbey of St. George; those whose names were written in the golden book in 1296; the families that were ennobled by the public in 1385; those that purchased their nobility for 100,000 ducats, in 1646; and lastly all the strangers which the Venetians have received into the number of their nobility. Any man of these families above 25 years of age, had a right to be a member of the council, whether he had any capacity or not. It generally consisted of about 2500; and they were accounted great politicians, good negociators, and secret even to a scruple. They also made a magnificent appearance, suitable to the dignity of their employment. The Doge was elected by a plurality of voices, and kept his dignity for life. In his election they made use of gold and silver balls, which were put in a vessel, and served for balloting. Those who drew nine golden balls, first elected 40 counsellors, who drew twelve others. These elected 25 other counsellors, who drew 9 golden balls. These 9 elected 40 counsellors, who drew 11. Those that had the 11, chose 41 counsellors, who proceeded to the election, till 25 votes or more fell upon the same person, who was then declared Doge. After this election they placed the ducal cap on his head, upon which he took possession of the Doge's palace. He never uncovered his head to any person, because he did not wear the cap in his own name, but in that of the republic. When there were any great solemnities, a nobleman carried the sword, which was an emblem of the supreme authority; but it was not before the Doge, but before the senate, to shew that the power was lodged in them. The office of the Doge was to give audience to all ambassadors; to marry the Adriatic Sea in the name of the republic, on Holy-Thursday; to preside in all assemblies of the state; to have an eye over all the members of the magistracy; and to nominate to all the benefices annexed to the church of St. Mark. On the other hand he was to determine nothing without the consent of the council; he was not to open any letter addressed to the republic, or that came from the republic; he was not to receive any present; he was not to leave the city without permission of the states: he was not to choose an assistant; and he was never to resign his dignity. the city, and out of it he was no more than a private person. There were four councils, the first of which was composed of the Doge, and six counsellors called the Signoria. The second was the Consiglia Grande, or Great Council, in which all the nobles had a voice, and sitting. The third was the Consiglio-dei-Pregadi, which was as it were the soul of the republic, and consisted of about 250 of the nobility. The fourth was the Consiglio-Propria, whose members were called Savii Grandi, or the Great Sages, was joined to the Signori, and consisted of 28 assessors. This gave audience to the ambassadors. The fifth and last was il-Collegio-dellidieci, and was composed of 10 counsellors, who took notice of all criminal matters, and the Doge himself when accused, was obliged to appear before them. There was no appeal from this council, and it was a great misfortune to be cited before it. It was a kind of state inquisition, as severe as that for religion; and they had a great number of spies, who discovered not only what was done, but what was said. As to religion, the Venetians are Roman-Catholics, and yet they tolerate the Greeks, Turks, and Persians. The protestants are not allowed the free exercise of their religion; but they are neither hated nor persecuted, as in other Popish countries. The head of the clergy is the Patriarch of Venice, who must be a noble Venetian, and is elected by the senate. This Patriarch, in consequence of the policy of the senate, has scarce any power over the priests and monks, who are greatly corrupted. There is another Patriarch belonging to Venice, whose authority extends over Friuli, Istria, and most of the bishops on Terra Firma. The tribunal of the inquisition at Venice, was composed of the Pope's Nuncio, the Patriarch of Venice, and the Father inquisitor; but to prevent these from abusing power, three counsellors were added to the number, without whose consent they could determine nothing. The clergy in general are ignorant, and yet they are pretty good orators. When the diversions of the carnival were over, nothing was heard but sermons about repentance, and they declaimed very strongly against the violators of the sixth commandment; however, the breach of it is so common, and so much in fashion, that the confessors themselves treat it as a peccadillo. The number of people in the whole territories of the republic, is estimated at 2,500,000. Venice was once one of the most powerful commercial and maritime states in Europe. For this it was indebted, at first, to the monopoly of the commerce of India; the products of that country being conveyed, in the middle ages, up the Persian Gulf, the Euphrates, and the Tigris, as far as Bagdad; thence by land, across the desert, to Palmyra; and thence to the Mediterranean ports; and, afterwards, the supplying of the crusaders with provisions and military stores was an additional source of wonderful opulence and power. The causes of the decline of Venice were the continual wars with the states of Italy, with the Hungarians, and their own rebellious subjects, which kept them employed so that they had no leisure to oppose the Turks, whose rapid advances ought to have alarmed all Europe. After the destruction of the eastern empire, the Turks came more immediately to interfere with the republic. Whatever valour might be shown by the Venetians, or whatever successes they might boast of, it is certain that the Turks ultimately prevailed; so that for some time it seemed scarce possible to resist them. What contributed also greatly to the decline of the republic, was discovery of a passage by the Portuguese to the East Indies round the Cape of Good Hope in 1499. To this time the greatest part of the East India goods imported into Europe passed through the hands of the Venetians; but as soon as the above-mentioned discovery took place, the carriage of India goods by the way of Alexandria almost entirely ceased. All these causes co-operating have reduced Venice from a state of the highest splendour and importance in European politics, to comparative insignificance. The declension of Venice did not, like that of Rome, proceed from the increase of luxury, or the revolt of their own armies in distant provinces, or from civil wars of any kind. Venice has dwindled in power and importance from causes which could not be foreseen, or guarded against by human prudence although they had been foreseen. In their present situation, there is little probability of their attempting new conquests; happy if they are allowed to remain in the quiet possession of what they have. Whatever degree of licentiousness may prevail among the Venetians, jealousy, poison, and the stiletto have been long banished from their gallantry. The common people of Venice display some qualities very rarely to be found in that sphere of life, being remarkably sober, obliging to strangers, and gentle with their intercourse with each other. The Venetians are in general tall and well made. They are a lively ingenious people, extravagantly fond of public amusements, with an uncommon relish for humour, and yet more attached to the real enjoyments of life than to those which depend on ostentation and proceed from vanity. The women are of an easy address, and have no aversion to cultivating an acquaintance with those strangers who are presented to them by their relations, or have been properly recommended.

Venice, a city of Italy, one of the most celebrated in the world, and capital of a republic of the same name, with a patriarchate, and a university. It stands on 72 little islands in the gulf of Venice. The approach to the city is marked by rows of stakes on each side, which direct vessels of a certain burden, to avoid the shallows. These shallows are a better defence than the strongest fortifications. On the approach of an enemy's fleet, the Venetians have only to pull up the stakes, and the enemy can advance no further. Venice is situate about five miles from the mainland, in a kind of laguna, lake, or smaller inner gulf, separated from the large one, called the gulf of Venice, by some islands, at a few miles distance. These islands, in a great measure, break the force of the Adriatic storms, before they reach the laguna; yet, in very high winds, the navigation of the lake is dangerous to gondolas, and sometimes the gondoliers do not trust themselves even in the canal within the city. This is not so great an inconvenience as might be imagined; for most of the houses have a door opening upon a canal, and another communicating with the street; by means of which, and of the bridges, a person may go to almost any part of the city by land, as well as by water. The number of the inhabitants is computed to be about 160,000. The houses are built on piles. The streets, in general, are narrow; and so are the canals, except the Great Canal, which is very broad, and has a serpentine course through the middle of the city. There are above 300 bridges over these canals, the most famous of which is that called the Rialto. It is built about the middle of the great canal, which divides Venice into two parts. It is of white marble, and has but one arch, in which its principal beauty consists; and is 90 feet from one extremity to the other. On this bridge are two rows of shops, which divide it into three streets, the largest of which is in the middle. The other bridge consists only of one arch, and has no rails on each side. The view from the Rialto is equally lively and magnificent; the Grand Canal covered by boats and gondolas, and flanked on each side by magnificent palaces, churches and spires. Except the Grand Canal, and the Canale Regio, all the others are narrow and mean; some of them have no quays, and the water literally washes the houses. The only place where a person can walk with ease and safety is in the Piazza di St. Marco; a kind of irregular quadrangle, formed by a number of buildings, all singular in their kind; namely, the Ducal Palace; the churches of St. Mark and St. Geminiano; the Old and New Procuraties, a noble range of buildings, in which are the museum, the public library, and nine large apartments belonging to the procurators of St. Mark. All these buildings are of marble. At the corner of the new procuratie, a little distance from the church stands the steeple of St. Mark, a quadrangular tower, about 300 feet high. The patriarchal church of St. Mark, though one of the richest and most expensive in the world, does not strike the eye very much at first. The architecture is of a mixed kind, mostly Gothic; yet many of the pillars are of the Grecian orders. The trade of the city at present is far short of what it was formerly. Their chief manufactures are cloth: especially scarlet, silks, gold and silver stuffs, brocades, velvets, and paper, of which, and wine, oil, fruit, sweetmeats, anchovies, and several sorts of drugs used in physic and painting, the exports are still considerable. Venice has neither walls, gates, nor citadel, to defend it; its situation supplying the want of all these. In the treasury of relics is the proand so are the canals, the Grand Canal, which is very narrow and serpentine course through the middle of the city. There are several bridges over these canals, the most famous of which is that of the Rialto. It is built about the middle of the great canal, which divides the city into two parts. It is of stone and has but one arch, the principal beauty consists; and from one extremity to the other are two rows of arches which divide it into three streets, the middle of which is in the middle of the canal. The bridge consists only of one row of arches on each side. The Rialto is equally lively and beautiful; the Grand Canal is crowded with gondolas, and flanked on both sides by magnificent palaces, and the Rialto is equally lively and beautiful. Except the Grand Canal, the Canale Regio, all the other canals are very narrow and mean; some of them are quays, and the water-lifts are the houses. The only place where a person can walk with safety is in the Piazza di St. Mark, a kind of irregular quadrangle, containing a number of buildings, all of the same kind; namely, the palace, the churches of St. Mark, St. Giovanni, the Old and the New, a noble range of houses in which are the museum, library, and nine large apartments belonging to the procurators of St. Mark. All these buildings are of the same kind. At the corner of the new bridge, a little distance from the palace, stands the steeple of St. Mark, a square tower, about 300 feet high, the patriarchal church of St. Mark, which is one of the richest and most extensive in the world, does not attract the eye very much at first. The architecture is of a mixed kind, mostly of the Gothic order. Many of the pillars are of the same order. The trade of the city is far short of what it might be. Their chief manufactures are cloth; especially scarlet, and silver stuffs, brocades, and paper, of which, and wine, sweetmeats, anchovies, and other articles of drugs used in physic. The exports are still considerable. Venice has neither walls, nor a citadel, to defend it; its only security is the want of all these necessaries of war. The treasury of relics is the protector, or original manuscript, as they pretend, of St. Mark's gospel; it is rarely shown; and the writing, by the length of time, is so defaced, that the greatest connoisseurs in manuscripts cannot determine whether it was wrote in Greek or Latin. Besides what is properly called the city, there is a multitude of little islands lying round, which are covered with buildings, and make each of them a kind of separate town, the most considerable of which is that called Giudecca, or the "Jews Quarter," which is large and populous; with St. Erosio, St. Helena, St. Giorgio, Chioggia, Il Lido de Palestrina, Il Lido de Malamocco, and Murano; these islands are a sort of fence to the city, breaking the violence of the waves. To distinguish them from others, the Jews here must wear a bit of red cloth in their hats. The gardens in this city are few and inconsiderable. In the island of Murano are made those beautiful looking-glasses, and other glass-works, for which Venice is so much noted: here the family of Cornaro hath a palace, with a gallery of paintings, little short of an Italian mile in length. The salt-works in the island of Chioggia are of great benefit to the Venetians, and yield a very considerable revenue. There are several other small islands about Venice besides those we have mentioned; but they are inconsiderable. From the palace is a covered bridge of communication to a state prison, on the other side of the canal; prisoners pass to and from the courts over this bridge, which is named Ponte dei sospiri, the Bridge of sighs. The lower gallery, or piazza, under the palace, is called the Broglio. In this the noble Venetians walk and converse; it was only here, and at council, that they had opportunities of meeting together; for they seldom visited openly, or in a familiar way, at each other's houses; and secret meetings would have given umbrage to the state inquisitors. There is an opening from St. Mark's Place to the sea, on which stand two lofty pillars of granite. The grand scene of all, the shews and follies of the festivals, is the square of St. Mark, in which bulls are sometimes baited. In the doge's palace all the high colleges held their assemblies; but we are told by several travellers, which seems very strange, that the stairs are no better than a privy. In this palace is a small arsenal, furnished with arms against any sudden insurrection of the people, together with a state prison, a great many exquisite paintings, and several curiosities, among which are some claustra caritatis. One side of it is towards St. Mark's square, and the lower gallery on that side, with the hall under the new procurator's facing it, are called the Broglio, where the nobility and none else, at least while they are present, are allowed to walk. The square of St. Mark is the greatest ornament of the city, and hath the form of a parallelogram. In this square besides the church and palace of St. Mark, are two towers, on one side of which is a curious clock; and the other has stairs so constructed that one may ride up on horseback. Opposite to the doge's palace is the public library of the commonwealth; containing a large collection of books and manuscripts, with some fine paintings, statues, and curiosities. Hard by St. Mark's square is the zecca, or mint: from zecca the gold coin called Zecchino takes its name. One of the smallest pieces of money at Venice is called Gazzetta; and the first newspapers published there, on a single leaf, having been sold for that a-piece, all kinds of newspapers were from thence styled Gazzettes. The grand arsenal is two and a half Italian miles in circuit, and contains vast quantities of naval and other warlike stores; some pretend that it could furnish arms for 10,000 horse and 100,000 foot; here are the trophies of Scanderbeg and others, with the helmet of Attila, &c. In this city is a famous carnival which begins on New-year's day, and continues till AshWednesday, all which time is employed in sports and diversions. Then there is scarce any distinction between vice and virtue; for libertinism reigns through the city, and thousands of foreigners frequent it from all parts of Europe. They all appear in masks, which no one can venture to take off: in this disguise they imitate the fury of the ancient Bacchanals; and the nearer AshWednesday approaches, the more mad they are. The principal spot of the masquerade is St. Mark's Place, where there are sometimes 15,000 people; and it swarms with harlequins, jesters, mountebanks, ropedancers, and puppet-shows. Even the priests and monks enjoy the diversions of the carnival;

Verdun, a town of France, in the department of Meuse, and late province of Lorraine, with a bishop's see, and a strong citadel. Its fortifications were constructed by the chevalier de Ville and marshal de Vauban; the latter of whom was a native of this place. There are several abbeys, collegiate, and parish churches; and the most curious structures besides, are the bishop's palace, the town-house, and the Jesuits college. Verdun was taken by the Prussians in 1792, but retaken soon after. The inhabitants are noted for making fine sweetmeats. It is seated on the Meuse, which runs through the middle, 42 miles S W of Luxemburg, & 150 E of Paris. Lon. 5 22 E, lat. 49 9 N.

Vermanton, a town of France, in the department of Yonne, and late province of Burgundy, seated on a river 10 miles S E of Auxerre. Lon. 3 49 E, lat. 47 40 N.

Vermont, one of the United States of America; bounded on the N by Canada, on the E by the river Connecticut, which divides it from New Hampshire, on the S by Massachusetts, and on the W by New York. It is 155 miles long and 66 broad, and divided into 11 counties. A chain of high mountains, running N and S divides this state nearly in the centre between Connecticut river and Lake Champlain. The height of land is generally from 20 to 30 miles from the river, and about the same distance from the New York line. The natural growth upon this mountain is hemlock, pine, spruce, and other evergreens; hence it has always a green appearance, and on this account has obtained the descriptive name of Vermont, Green Mountain. On some high parts of this mountain, snow lies till May, and sometimes till June. The country is generally hilly, but not rocky. It is finely watered, and affords the best of pasturage for cattle. On the banks of the lakes, rivers and rivulets, are many fine tracts of rich interval land. The heavy growth of timber, which is common throughout the state, evince the strength and fertility of the soil. Elm, black birch, maple, ash and bass-wood, grow in the moist low ground; and the banks of the rivers are timbered principally with white pine, intermingled with vales of beech, elm and white oak. The inhabitants cultivate wheat, 25 and 30 bushels of which grow on an acre, rye, barley, oats, Indian corn, &c. The corn, however, is frequently cut off by the early frosts, especially on the mountains and hills. That which grows on the banks of the rivers is not so frequently injured. Flax is raised in considerable quantities, and the soil is good for hemp. Potatoes, pumpkins, and garden roots and vegetables, grow here in great plenty. Large quantities of sugar, of a good quality and flavour, are made from the sugar maple. The inhabitants have been estimated at 100,000. The principal town is Bennington.

Verona, a famous city of Italy, capital of the Veronese, with a bishop's see, three forts, and an academy. It is surrounded by thick walls, deep ditches, and good ramparts. The streets are neither clean nor straight; but there is a handsome place called the piazza d'Armi, in which is a marble statue, representing the republic of Venice. The most remarkable structure is the amphitheatre built by the Romans, in which there are 44 rows of benches of white marble, which will conveniently hold 25,000 persons. Verona is the birthplace of Pliny the Naturalist, and in the cathedral is a magnificent tomb of Pope Lucius. The river Adige divides it into two parts, which communicate by two handsome bridges. The French took possession of this city in July 1796; but the Austrians obliged them to surrender it in June 1799. It is 17 miles N E of Mantua, and 62 S W of Venice. Lon. 11 24 E, lat. 45 26 N.

Veronesc, a province of Italy, in the territory of Venice, bounded on the N by the Trentino, on the E by the Vincennes and Paduano, on the S by the Mantuan, and on the W by the Bresciano. Versailles, a town of France, in the department of Seine and Oise. It contains 60,000 inhabitants, and since the revolution, has been created a bishop's see. In the reign of Lewis XIII. it was only a small village, till Lewis XIV. built a magnificent palace here, which was the usual residence of the kings of France, till 1789, when Lewis XVI. and his family, were forced by the mob to remove from it to Paris. The buildings and gardens were adorned with a vast number of statues, by the greatest masters, and the water-works were magnificent. The great gallery is thought to be as curious a piece of workmanship of that kind, as any in the world; nor is the chapel less to be admired for its fine architecture and ornaments. The gardens with the park, are five miles in circumference, and surrounded by walls. Versailles is ten miles W S W of Paris. Lon. 2 12 E, lat. 48 48 N.

Versio, a village of France, in the department of Aun, near the river Versoi. It is called Choiseul's Folly; for the duke de Choiseul prime minister of France in 1768, formed a plan to ruin the city of Geneva, and, (not being at that time on good terms with France,) monopolize the whole trade of the lake. With this design he began to build Versoi. But after having nearly completed the harbour, and expending 125,000*l.* on the project, it was suddenly relinquished.

Vertus, a town of France, in the department of Marne, and late province of Champagne, seated on a plain, at the foot of a mountain, on which are vineyards, producing very good wines, 17 miles S W of Chalons and 78 N E of Paris. Lon. 4 2 E, lat. 48 53 N.

Verue, or Verrua, a town of Italy, in Piedmont, in the county of Asti. It was besieged in 1705, by the French, who did not carry it till after six months, when it was reduced to a heap of ruins, because the commander had blown up all the fortifications. It was afterwards restored to the duke of Savoy. It is seated on a hill, near the river Po, 20 miles W of Casal, and 23 N E of Turin. Lon. 8 2 E, lat. 45 13 N.

It is seated at the foot of a mountain, called Motte de Vesoul, near the river Dugeon, 22 miles N of Besancon, and 200 S E of Paris. Lon. 6 8 E, lat. 47 36 N.

Vesperin, or Weisbrain, a strong and populous town of Lower Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, with a castle, and an episcopal see, whose bishop is chancellor to the king of Hungary, and has a right to crown him. It is seated on the lake Balaton, at the mouth of the river Sarwise, 50 miles S W of Strigonia, and 83 S E of Vienna. Lon. 17 57 E, lat. 47 14 N.

Vesuvius, a celebrated volcano of Italy, six miles E of Naples. This mountain has two tops; one of which only goes by the name of Vesuvius, the other being now called Somma; but Sir William Hamilton is of opinion, that the latter is what the ancients called Vestivius. The perpendicular height of Vesuvius is only 5700 feet, though the ascent from the foot to the top is three Italian miles. One side of the mountain is well cultivated and fertile, producing great plenty of vines;

but the S and W sides are entirely covered with cinders and ashes; while a sulphureous smoke constantly issues from the top, sometimes attended with the most violent explosions of stones, the emission of great streams of lava, and all the other attendants of a most formidable volcano. The first of these eruptions recorded in history took place in the year 79; at which time the two cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum were entirely buried under the stones and ashes thrown out. Incredible mischief was also done to the neighbouring country, and numbers of people lost their lives, among whom was Pliny the elder. It is the opinion of the best judges, however, that this eruption was by no means the first that had ever happened. The very streets of those cities, which were at that time overwhelmed are said to be partly paved with lava. Since that time 30 different eruptions have been recorded, some of which have been extremely violent. In the year 1538, a mountain three miles in circumference and a quarter of a mile in perpendicular height was thrown up in the course of one night. There have been instances of ashes and sulphureous smoke being carried not only to Rome, but also beyond the Mediterranean into Africa, and even into Egypt; birds have been suffocated in the air, and have fallen down upon the ground; and fishes perished in the neighbouring waters which were made hot, and infected by it. The operations of the subterraneous fire, appear to be very capricious and uncertain. One day there will be the appearance of a violent fermentation, and the next every thing will be calmed; but whenever there has been a considerable ejection of scorix and cinders, it has been a constant observation, that the lava soon made its appearance, either by boiling over the crater, or forcing its way through the crevices. In the conical part of the mountain the top of the mountain fell in, in 1634, and the mouth of Vesuvius is now little short of two miles in circumference.

these. It is 35 miles long, and 27 broad; and so very pleasant and fertile, that it is called the garden of Venice. The wine is excellent, and the butter and cheese very good. Here are also great numbers of mulberry trees, for silkworms; and there are mines of silver, and iron, and quarries of stone, almost as fine as marble.

Vicenza, a strong town of Italy, the capital of Vicentino, with a bishop's see. It is without walls, but is a large place, adorned with several palaces, and has a fine square, with piazzas under the houses. There are also several other squares, and fine churches. Here is an academy, whose members meet in the Olympic theatre, a masterpiece of workmanship by Palladio. It is seated between the rivers Bachiaglione and Ronco, and two mountains, in a fertile plain, 13 miles N W of Padua, 31 W of Venice, and 135 N of Rome. Lon. 11 43 E, lat. 45 26 N.

Vienna, a city of Germany, capital of the circle of Austria, and of the whole German empire. The city itself is not of great extent, nor can it be enlarged, being limited by a very strong fortification; but it is populous, and contains 60,000 inhabitants. No houses without the walls are allowed to be built nearer to the glacis than 600 yards; so that there is a circular field of that breadth all round the city, which has a beautiful and salutary effect. The suburbs are said to contain 200,000 inhabitants; but they are not near so populous, in proportion to their size, as the city, for many houses have extensive gardens belonging to them. Many families who live during the winter within the fortifications, spend the summer in the suburbs. This city has six gates well defended, and 12 walled bastions, with strong ravelins. The streets in general are narrow, and the houses high. Some of the public buildings are magnificent: The chief of them are the Imperial Palace, the Library, and the Museum; the palaces of the princes Lichtenstein, Eugene, &c. Vienna was ineffectually besieged by the Turks, in 1589 and 1683. At the latter period the siege was raised by John Sobieski, king of Poland, who totally defeated the Turkish army before the walls of this place. The cathedral is built of freestone, and the steeple is 447 feet high. Joining to this church is the archbishop's palace, the front of which is very fine. The university had several thousand students, who, when this city was besieged, mounded guard, as they did also in 1741. The archducal library is much frequented by foreigners, as it contains above 100,000 printed books, and 10,000 manuscripts. There are also two remarkable columns, of which one is called the conception of the immaculate Virgin, and the other St. Trinity, which cost 300,000 florins. It is 66 feet high, in the form of a triangular pyramid, on the top of which are three figures of gilt bronze, representing the trinity. The archducal treasury, and a cabinet of curiosities of the house of Austria, are as great rarities as any in the world. Leopoldstadt is one of the suburbs, and seated on an island, formed by the Danube; here the Jews dwelt formerly, but they were banished in 1670, and the suburb turned into a church. There is a sort of harbour on the Danube, where are magazines of naval stores, and ships have been fitted out to serve on that river against the Turks. Vienna is an archbishop's see, & in the winter season is frequently visited by dreadful storms, which rush thro' the openings of the neighbouring mountains. It is seated at the place where the river Vienna, or Wien, falls into the

Vigo, a town of the kingdom of Galicia, with an old castle, a fort and a harbour. The town is surrounded with a single wall, that has four bastions, but is incapable of sustaining a long siege.

The harbour is remarkable for a sea-fight between sir George Rook, commander of the English and Dutch fleets and a squadron of French men of war, with 13 Spanish galleons under their convoy. Admiral Hopson broke through the boom laid across the mouth of the harbour, and the English took five men of war and four galleons, and the Dutch five galleons, and one large man of war. Fourteen men of war and four galleons were destroyed, with a great quantity of plate and other rich effects. Though a great deal of the silver was carried ashore, yet a vast quantity was taken.

While this was doing the duke of Ormond with a body of land forces, drove the Spaniards from the castles which defended the harbour. Vigo is seated on a bay of the Atlantic, eight miles S W of Rhedondella, and 260 W N W of Madrid. Lon. 8 28 W, lat. 42 14 N.

Vincent, St. one of the Windward Caribbee Islands, in the W Indies. It is inhabited by Caribs, a warlike race, between whom and the inhabitants of the larger islands there is a manifest distinction. Dr. Robertson conjectures that they were originally a colony from North America, their fierce manners approaching nearer to those of the original natives of that continent, than they do those of S America, and their language also having some affinity to that spoken in Florida. In their wars they preserve their ancient practice of destroying all the males, and preserving the women either for servitude or for breeding. St. Vincent was long a neutral island; but at the peace of 1763, the French agreed that the right to it should be vested in the English; who, in the sequel, at the instance of some rapacious planters engaged in an unjust war against the Caribbees, who inhabited the windward side of the island, and who were obliged to consent to a peace, by which they ceded a very large tract of valuable land to the crown. The consequence of this was, that in the next war, in 1779, they greatly contributed to the reduction of this island by the French, who, however, restored it by the peace of 1783. Since that time it natives, who inhabited the windward side of the island, and who were consequently consented to a peace, by which was ceded a very large tract of valuable land to the crown. The consequence of this was, that in the next year 1779, they greatly contributed to the reduction of this island by the British, who, however, restored it by the treaty of 1783. Since that time it has continued in the possession of Great Britain. During the present war, the Caribs revolted; and, assisted by the French, spread desolation over the whole island. By the exertions of the governor, however, and the British forces in the West Indies, the revolt was in a great measure quelled, though it will be long before things are restored to their former state. St. Vincent is in length about 24 miles, and about 18 in breadth; in circumference between 60 and 70. The climate is very warm; at least in the judgment of the Europeans. The country is in general hilly, in some places mountainous; but interspersed with a variety of pleasant valleys, and some luxuriant plains, the soil being every where fertile, and the high grounds are at least in general easy of ascent. Few islands of its extent are so well watered; for several rivers run down from the mountains, and smaller streams from almost every hill; there are likewise several very fine springs at a little distance from the sea. The inhabitants raise all kinds of ground provisions in plenty, and with little trouble. The rivers supply them with a variety of fish; and the same may be said of the sea that washes their coasts. They have abundantly of excellent fruits, and very fine timber fit for almost every use; and with which they formerly supplied their neighbours. It is 55 miles W of Barbadoes. Here is a botanical garden, in which the bread-trees, brought from Otaheite, are now in a flourishing condition. Lon. 61 0 W, lat. 13 10 N.

Virgin Gorda. See Virgin Islands.

Virgin Islands, about 50 islands and keys, in the W Indies, between St.
Juan de Puerto Rico and the Leward Caribbee Islands. They were called Las Virgines by the Spaniards, in honour of the 11,000 virgins of the legend.
They are possessed by the English and Danes. In the first division belonging to the English, is Tortola, the principal, to which belongs Jost Van Dyke's and Little Vandike's, Guana Isle, with Berland Chatch Islands. In the second division is Virgin Gorda, to which belong Anegada, or Drowned Isle, Necker, Prickly Pear, and Musquito Islands, the Commanoes, Serub and Dog Islands, the Faller City (two rocky islets, close together, at a distance resembling ruins) the Round Rock, Ginger, Cropper's Salt Island, Peter's Island, and the Dead Chest.
Of the Danish division, the principal islands are St. Thomas and St. John.

Virginia, one of the United States of America, bounded on the S by North Carolina and Tennessee, on the W by Kentucky, on the N by Pennsylvania and the River Ohio, and on the E by the Atlantic Ocean. It is 446 miles in length, and 224 in breadth. The principal rivers are James, York, Rappahannock, and Potomac, which are full of convenient harbours; and there are also many small rivers, some of which are capable of receiving the largest merchant ships. The climate is various. The land towards the mouth of the rivers is generally low, and fit for rice, hemp, and Indian corn, though at present stocked with many sorts of trees, from 30 to 70 feet high. The land higher up the rivers is generally level, and watered with springs; but there are here and there some small hills. That near the sea is generally sandy, and without stones, for which reason the horses are seldom shod. The richest lands lie near the branches of the rivers, and abound with various sorts of timber, surprisingly large. The principal produce is tobacco, wheat, and Indian corn; but the culture of tobacco has considerably declined in favour of that of wheat. The Virginians are in general sensible, polite, and hospitable, and of an independent spirit. The poor are ignorant and abject, and all are of an inquisitive turn, and in many other respects very much resemble the people in the eastern states. They differ from them, however, in their morals; the former being much addicted to gaming, drinking, swearing, horse-racing, cock-fighting, and most kinds of dissipation. There is much greater disparity between the rich and the poor in Virginia, than in any of the northern states. Virginia is divided into 82 counties, and in 1790, contained 747,610 inhabitants, including, 292,627 slaves. The capital is Richmond.

Virmenberg, a town of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia. It is 20 miles W of Coblenz. Lon. 7 5 E, lat. 51 27 N.

Virton, a town of Austrian Luxemburg, 22 miles W of Luxemburg. Lon. 5 41 E, lat. 49 36 N.

Visagapatam, a town of the peninsula of Hindoostan. Lon. 83 40 E, lat. 17 45 N.

Vischma, a town of Russia in the government of Tobolsk. Lon. 61 22 E, lat. 62 36 N.

Viset, a town of the Netherlands, in the bishopric of Liege, seated on the the Maase, seven miles N of Liege. Lon. 5 40 E, lat. 50 44 N.

Vishnei-Volotchok, a town of Russia, in the government of Tver. It is one of the imperial villages enfranchised by the empress, and endowed with considerable privileges, has already reaped many benefits from its new immunities. The inhabitants, raised from the situation of slaves to that of freemen, seem to have shaken off their former indolence, and to have caught a new spirit of emulation and industry; they have turned their attention to trade, and are awakened to a sense of the commercial advantages possessed by the place of their abode. The town is divided into regular streets, and is already provided with a large range of shops and warehouses. All the buildings are of wood, excepting the court of justice erected at the charge of the empress, and four brick houses belonging to a rich burgher. It is seated on the river Zua, 56 miles N W of Tver. Lon. 35 0 E, lat. 57 23 N.

Visiapour, or Bejapour, a considerable city of the Deccan of Hindoostan, formerly the capital of a large kingdom of the same name, now subject to the Poonah Mahrattas. It is 136 miles S E of Poonah, and 234 S E of Bombay. Lon. 75 19 E, lat. 17 26 N.

Visogorod, a town of Poland, in Masovia, with a castle, seated on the Vistula, 50 miles N W of Waraw.

Uist, North and South, two islands of the Hebrides, on the W coast of Scotland, viz.

North Uist, which lies to the southward of Harris, separated by a channel of about nine miles over, is somewhat more considerable, being about 30 miles in circumference. The E side is mountainous, covered with heath, and fitter for pasturage than cultivation; but the western part is arable, and produces grain in plenty, yielding from 10 to 30 fold in a favourable season, and when manured with sea ware. Loch Maddy is situated in this island, about five miles to the southward of Hermetra, and has its name from three rocks on its S side, on which grow plenty of large muscels, called maddies. It forms a most capacious harbour, capable of containing some hundreds of vessels of any burden, and has several islands within it, which contribute greatly to its security. North Uist is 15 miles S of the Isle of Skye. And,

South Uist is about 21 miles in length, and 3 or 4 in breadth. It very much resembles North Uist in its soil and productions, and even in the external appearance of the country; being mountainous and heathy on the E, but plain and arable on the W. It likewise abounds in fresh water lakes, which have plenty of trouts and eels, but do a considerable deal of damage to the arable ground, by overflowing it in the winter. South Uist is 20 miles W of the Isle of Skye.

their attention to trade; tended to a sense of the advantages possessed by their abode. The town has regular streets, and is surrounded with a large range of warehouses. All the buildings, excepting the court-yard, are of brick, and four brick houses are the property of a rich burgler. It is on the river Zua, 30 miles N of Benapour, a considerable town of Hindostan, formerly the capital of a large kingdom of the same name, now subject to the British. It is 136 miles S of Bombay, and 234 S E of Dombay, lat. 17 26 N.

Ustka, a town of Poland, in Masovia, seated on the Vistula, 30 miles N W of Warsaw.

Uist, a name given to the North and South, two islands of Scotland, on the W coast of Scotland.

Uist, which lies to the southward of Skye, separated by a channel of about 30 miles over, is somewhat considerable, being about 30 miles in circumference. The E side is covered with heath, and the W part is arable, and produces in plenty, yielding from 10 to 15 in a favourable season, and is well supplied with sea ware. Loch Uist is situated in this island, about 10 miles to the southward of Hermes, and is named from three rocks in the bay, on which grow plenty of sea shells, called maddies. It forms a spacious harbour, capable of containing hundreds of vessels of any size, and has several islands within the bay, which contribute greatly to its security. Uist is 15 miles S of the North Uist. And, Uist is about 21 miles in length, and 4 in breadth. It very much resembles the North Uist in its soil and climate, and even in the external appearance of the country; being mountainous and heathy on the E, but plain and fertile on the W. It likewise has several fresh water lakes, which are full of trout and eels, but do a considerable deal of damage to the ground, by overflowing it in the winter. South Uist is 20 miles W of Skye.

Vistula, a large river, which rises in Mount Crapach, on the confines of Silesia and Hungary, crosses Poland and Prussia, and falls by three mouths into the Baltic, below Dantzic.

Viterbo, an episcopal town of Italy, in the patrimony of St. Peter. It contains 10,000 inhabitants, 16 parish churches, and many palaces and fountains. Near it is a spring, so hot, that it will not only boil an egg, but even flesh. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, from the top of which, the city of Rome and the Mediterranean Sea may be seen; the latter at the distance of near 50 miles. It is 20 miles S E of Orvieto, and 35 N by W of Rome. Lon. 12 26 E, lat. 42 25 N.

Vitre, a town of France, in the department of Isle and Vilaine, and late province of Brittany, with a trade in linen cloth, and knit stockings and gloves. It is seated on the Vilaine, 20 miles N E of Rennes, and 52 S E of St. Malo. Lon. 1 13 W, lat. 48 14 N.

Vitri-le-Brule, a village of France, in the department of Maine, and late province of Champagne.

Vitri-le-Francois, a well-built and considerable town of France, in the department of Marne, and late province of Champagne. The houses are of wood; and there is a fine square, in which the church stands. It has a great trade, particularly in grain, and is seated on the Marne, 15 miles S E of Chalons, and 100 E of Paris. Lon. 4 38 E, lat. 48 44 N.

Viting, a town of Germany, in the circle of Austria, seated on a lake, called the Wortsee, four miles S W of Clagenfurt.

Vitreaux, a town of France, in the department of Cote d'Or, and late province of Burgundy, seated on the river Braine, among the mountains, where there are quarries of marble, 12 miles S E of Semur, and 27 W of Dijon. Lon. 4 27 E, lat. 57 20 N.

Vittoria, or Victoria, a considerable town of Spain, in Biscay, capital of the province of Alaba. It is surrounded by double walls, and in the principal square are the town-house, two convents, and in the middle a fine fountain. The large streets are bordered with fine trees, which are a good defence against the heat of the sun. It has a great trade in hardware, particularly in sword-blades, which are made here in great quantities. It is seated on an eminence, at the end of a plain, fertile in corn and grapes, 32 miles S E of Bilbao, and 155 N of Madrid. Lon. 2 56 W, lat. 42 55 N.

Vivarais, a late small province of France, and now included in the department of Ardeche.

Vivero, a town of Spain, in Galicia, seated at the foot of a steep mountain, near the river Landrova, whose mouth forms a large harbour on the Atlantic, 30 miles N W of Mondonedo. Lon. 7 34 W, lat. 43 50 N.

Viviers, an episcopal town of France, in the department of Ardeche, and late province of Languedoc, with a bishop's see. It is seated among rocks (on one of which the cathedral is built) on the river Rhone, 30 miles N of Orange, and 70 N E of Montpellier. Lon. 4 46 E, lat. 44 20 N.

Viza, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Romania, with a Greek archbishop's see, seated at the foot of a mountain, at the source of the river Glicenero.

Ukenskoï, a town of Russia, in the government of Tobolsk, at the junction of the Irtysh and Oby. Lon. 69 15 E, lat. 61 10 N.

Ukraine, a large country of Europe, lying on the borders of Turkey in Europe, Poland, Russia, and Little Tartary. Its name properly signifies a frontier. By a treaty between Russia and Poland in 1693, the latter remained in possession of all that part of the Ukraine lying on the W side of the river Dnieper, which is but indifferently cultivated; while the country on the E side, inhabited by the Cossacs, is in much better condition. The Russian part is comprised in the government of Kiof; and the empress of Russia having obtained the Polish palatinate of Kiof, by the treaty of partition in 1793, the whole of the Ukraine on both sides of the Dnieper, belongs now to that ambitious and formidable power. The principal town is Kiof. See Cossacs.

Ullswater, a lake of Westmoreland. 10 miles N of Ambleside, and 14 S W of Penrith. It is eight miles long, and abounds with char, and a variety of other fish.

Ulm, a free imperial city of Germany, in the circle of Suabia, and the chief of that order in the circle, where the archives thereof are deposited. It is fortified; and is seated on the Danube, where it receives the Iller, with a handsome bridge over the former. Here is a good college; and in the cathedral, which is a handsome structure, are 63 copper vessels full of water, ready for the extinguishing of fire. The inhabitants are protestants, and have a good trade in linens, fustians, hardware, and wool. The duke of Bavaria took it in 1702, by stratagem, and surrendered it after the battle of Blenheim. It was taken by the French, in 1796; but they were obliged to abandon it the same month. Upon the conclusion of an armistice between the French and Austrians in 1800, it was delivered up as an hostage to the French, who perfidiously and contrary to agreement, demolished the fortifications. It is 36 miles W of Augsburg, 47 S E of Stutgard, and 63 N of Munich. Lon. 10 12 E, lat. 48 25 N.

Ulm, a town of Germany in the archbishopric of Mentz, 30 miles N E of Treves. Lon. 7 8 E, lat. 50 7 N.

Ulotho, or Ulothow, a town of Germany, in Westphalia. It is six miles S of Minden.

Ulriehamn, a town of Sweden, in W Gothland. Its name was changed in compliment to queen Ulrica Eleonora. Lon. 14 22 E, lat. 57 10 N.

Ulster, a province of Ireland, 116 miles long and 100 broad; bounded on the E by the Irish Sea, on the N by the Northern Ocean, on the W by the Atlantic Ocean on the S by the province of Leinster, and on the S W by that of Connaught. The principal rivers are the Bann, Foyle, Swilly, Newry-water, and Laggan; and it abounds with large lakes. The soil, in general, is fruitful in corn and grass; and there are plenty of horses, sheep, and beeves. It contains one archbishopric, six bishoprics, 10 counties, and 365 parishes. The principal place is Londonderry.

Ulzen, or Felzen, a town of Germany in the circle of Lower Saxony, seated on the Ilmenau. Lon. 10 38 E, lat. 52 55 N.

Uverstone, a town in Lancashire, with a market on Monday. The country people call it Ouston, and it is seated at the foot of a swift descent of hills to the S E, near a shallow arm of the Irish Sea. It is the port of the district of Furness. It is 18 miles N W of Lancaster, and 267 N N W of London. Lon. 3 12 W, lat. 54 14 N.

Uma, or Umea, a town of Sweden, in W Bothnia, seated on the river Uma, in the gulf of Bothnia. The houses are built of wood; and it was twice burnt by the Russians. It is the residence of the governor of W Bothnia, and 280 miles N of Stockholm. Lon. 19 9 E, lat. 63 58 N.

Umago, a seaport of Venetian Istria, seated between the gulf Largena, and the mouth of the river Quieto.

Umbriatico, a town of Italy in Naples, with a bishop's see, though now reduced to a small place, having only about 50 houses. It is seated on the Lipuda, 15 miles N by W of St. Severina. Lon. 17 10 E, lat. 38 29 N.

Unadilla, a post town in Otsego county, New-York; lying on the E side of Unadilla river, a stream that runs into the east branch of Susquehannah; about 10 miles N E of Jerico, and about 105 W of Hudson.

Underssen, or Underseen, a handsome town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, near which is the famous cavern of St. Pat. It is seated on the lake Thun, 25 miles S S E of Bern, and 30 S E of Friburg. Lon. 7 32 E, lat. 45 32 N.

Underwalden, a canton of Switzerland, the sixth in rank; bounded on the N by the canton of Lucern and the Lake of the Four Cantons; on the E by high mountains, which separate it from the canton of Uri; on the S by Mount Brunich, which parts it from the canton of Bern; and on the W by that of Lucern. It takes its name from a wood, which runs nearly in the middle of the country, from N to S. It is 25 miles long, and 17 broad, and is divided into two parts, that above the wood, and that below it, called Oberwald and Underwald. For this reason there are two councils, two justices, two lands-geineind with respect to external affairs; there is a joint council, chosen equally by the two divisions. The inhabitants are Roman catholics. Stantz is the capital.

Ughwar, a town of Upper Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, in an island formed by the Ugh. It is strong from its situation among the mountains of Crapach, and is 47 miles E of Cassovia. Lon. 22 23 E, lat. 48 48 N.

Union, a post town in Tioga county, New York; situated on the W side of Chenengo river, 40 miles E by N of Athens, or Tyoga point, and about 150 W of the city of Hudson.

Union, the capital of Fayette county, Pennsylvania, 12 miles S E of Brownsville, 37 S E of Washington, 45 of Pittsburg, and about 290 W of Philadelphia. It contains about 2000 inhabitants, and has a post-office.

United Provinces of the Netherlands, a republic of Europe, consisting of seven provinces, which extend 150 miles from N to S, and 100 from E to W. They are bounded on the W and N by the German Ocean, on the S by Brabant and the bishopric of Liege, and on the E by Germany. They rank in the following order; Guelderland, Holland, Zealand, Utrecht, Friesland, Overijssel, and Groningen. Besides these provinces, are the lands of the Generality (including Dutch Brabant, Flanders, and Limburg) in which are the towns of Bois-le-Duc, Breda, Bergen-op-Zoom, Maastricht, Venlo, Sluys, and Hulst. The seven United Provinces being in great part surrounded by the sea, lying low, and abounding in marshes, have a damp and unwholesome air. Rains and fogs are frequent; and the gout, scurvy, rheumatism, and agues, very common and difficult of cure. The effects of human industry here are wonderful in the dykes and dams erected for defending the country against the inundations of the sea, and in ditches, canals, mills, and sluices, for draining the marshes. The quantity of grain produced is not sufficient for home consumption; but the pastures in the marshes are so rich, that they can spare a great deal of butter and cheese for exportation. They have also a good breed of sheep, whose wool is highly valued. Their turf, madder, tobacco, some fruit, and iron; but all the pit-coal and timber used in this country, and indeed most of the necessaries of life, are imported. All the provinces either lie upon, or communicate with the North Sea, by means of that called the Zuider, or South Sea, which was formed partly by the Rhine's right branch, then increased by the Vecht, which has now another outlet, overflowing the low swampy grounds through which it passed; and partly by the sea, in the 13th century, breaking in, and overflowing a large tract of ground contiguous to that before laid under water by the Rhine. The principal rivers are the Rhine, the Meuse, the Scheld, and the Vecht. There are many smaller rivers that join these, and a vast number of canals; yet there are few good harbours in the provinces. The best are those of Rotterdam, Helvoetsluis, and Flushing. As to the harbour of Amsterdam, it is indeed one of the largest and safest in Europe; but there is a bar at the entrance of it, over which large vessels cannot pass without being lightened or unloaded. There are no mountains in these provinces; and the only lake, properly so called, is that of Haerlem. The provinces are extremely well cultivated, and very populous; especially that of Holland, which, in this respect, perhaps has not its equal in the universe. The towns are very agreeable, being kept clean, and having canals in the middle of the streets, planted with trees. The number of inhabitants is computed at 2,000,000. The animals here are much the same as in England; but their horses and horned cattle are of a larger size. Storks build and hatch on their chimneys; but, being birds of passage, they leave the country about the middle of August, with their young, and return the February following. It is said there are some wild boars and wolves here; and that neither oysters nor herrings are to be found upon the coast: but of other fish they have the several sorts, both in their seas and rivers, that we have in Britain. The established religion here before the Revolution was the Presbyterian, or Calvinism: none but Presbyterians were admitted into any office or post in the government, excepting the army; all religions and sects, however, were tolerated, and had their respective meetings or assemblies for public worship, among which the Papists and Jews were very numerous. Since the late alliance with France, no particular religion is established; and the phlegmatic Dutch have drank deep of the cup of infidelity, mixed by their new and volatile allies. With regard to the commerce of this country, their East India company had the monopoly of the fine spices for more than 100 years, and was long the most opulent and powerful of any in the world. Though the country itself produces very few things, yet almost all the products and commodities of the globe may be found here, nearly as cheap as in the countries where they are made or produced. A vast variety of manufactures are carried on in the provinces, and with extraordinary skill and diligence; and a great number of hands are employed, and much wealth acquired, by the herring, cod, and whale fisheries. No nation has equalled them in the curing of herrings; those cured at Glasgow, in Scotland, are thought to come nearest to them. About 150 sail were annually employed in the whale fishery and about 200 in the herring. The profits of the latter, in a good year, after all deductions, were thought to amount to 200 000 Holland Guilders. The principal manufactures here are those of linen, paper, and earthen ware of all sorts. Ship-build ing also employed vast numbers of hands. The trade of this country, however, upon the whole, has long been declining; owing partly to a decline of their ancient parsimony and industry; but chiefly to the improvement of manufactures, trade, and navigation, in other countries, and at present (1800) is almost annihilated. As to the character of the Dutch, the boors or husbandmen are industrious enough, but heavy, and slow of understanding. The scamen are a plain, blunt, but rough, surly, and ill-mannered set of people. Their tradesmen are something sharper, and make use of all their skill to take advantage of those they deal with. Every class of men is extremely frugal. All appetites and passions run lower and cooler here than in other countries, avarice excepted. Quarrels are very rare, revenge is seldom heard of, and jealousy scarcely ever known. It is very uncommon for any of them to be really in love, or even pretend to it; nor do the women seem to care whether they are or not. People converse pretty much upon a level here; nor is it easy to distinguish the man from the master, or the maid from the mistress, such liberties do they allow their servants, or rather are obliged to allow them; for they may not be struck or corrected by them, but the dispute must be left to the magistrate. The Dutch are tall and strong built; but both men and women have the grossest shapes that are to be met with any where. Their garb, except among the officers of the army and some few others, is exceeding plain, and the fashions change as seldom as in Spain. The men are addicted to drinking, which some think necessary in this foggy air, both for their health and the improvement of their understandings. Among their diversions, that of skating in winter is one of the chief. It is amazing to see the crowds in a hard frost upon the ice, and their dexterity in skating; both men and women darting along with inconceivable velocity. The Dutch are remarkable for their cleanliness: nothing can exceed the neatness of their houses, towns, and villages. Many of them have distinguished themselves by their learning, and some even by their wit and ingenuity; witness Erasmus, Grotius, &c. The Dutch excel also in painting and engraving; and some of them have been no contemptible statuaries. In consequence of the Union (See Netherlands) the Seven Provinces guarantee each other's rights; they make war and peace, levy taxes, &c. in their joint capacity; but as to internal government, each province is independent. They send deputies (chosen out of the provincial states) to the general assembly, called the states general, which is invested with the supreme legislative power of the confederation. At the head of this government there has usually been a prince stadtholder, who exercises a considerable part of the executive power. Having deserted the grand alliance formed against the disturbers of the peace of Europe, and the office of the stadtholder being abolished, the Dutch republic, under the name of an ally, is now in reality little better than a province, of France. The consequence of this alliance is what might have been expected. The British government, obliged to attack its enemies wherever it might find them, commenced hostilities against the United Provinces, and in the compass of a very short period wrested from them their most valuable possessions both in the East and West Indies. United States of America, a republic of North America, consisting originally, in 1783, of thirteen states, namely, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. Only eleven of these states acceded, at first, to the new federal constitution, but they were afterward joined by North Carolina and Rhode Island; and Kentucky, Vermont, and Tennessee, having since been added to them, the present number of the states that form this great American republic is sixteen. In the treaty of peace, concluded in 1783, the limits of the United States are thus defined. "And that all disputes which might arise in future on the subject of the boundaries of the said United States may be prevented, it is hereby agreed and declared, that the following are and shall be their boundaries, viz. From the N W angle of Nova-Scotia, viz. That angle which is formed by a line drawn due N from the source of St. Croix River to the Highlands, along the said Highlands, which divide those rivers that empty themselves into the river St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the Atlantic Ocean to the northernmost term of Connecticut River; thence down along the middle of that river to the 45th degree of N latitude; from thence by a line due W on said latitude, until it strikes the river Iroquois or Cataraugy; thence along the middle of the said river into lake Ontario, through the middle of said Lake, until it strikes the communication by water, between that lake and Lake Erie; thence along the middle of said communication into Lake Erie, through the middle of said lake, until it arrives at the water communication between that lake and Lake Huron; thence through the middle of said lake to the water communication between that lake and Lake Superior; thence through Lake Superior northward of the Isles Royal and Phillippeaux to the Long Lake; thence through the middle of said Long Lake, and the water communication between it and the Lake of the Woods to the said Lake of the Woods; thence through the said lake to the most northwesternmost point thereof, and from thence, on a due W course, to the River Mississippi; thence by a line to be drawn along the middle of said River Mississippi, until it shall intersect the northernmost part of the thirty-first degree of N latitude. S, by a line to be drawn due E from the determination of the line last mentioned, in the latitude of thirty-one degrees N of the equator, to the middle of the River Apalachicola, or Catahouche; thence along the middle thereof to its junction with the Flint River; thence straight to the head of St. Mary's River; and thence down along the middle of St. Mary's River to the Atlantic Ocean; E, by a line to be drawn along the middle of the River St. Croix, from its mouth in the Bay of Fundy, to its source; and from its source directly N, to the aforesaid Highlands, which divide the rivers that fall into the Atlantic Ocean, from those which fall into the River St. Lawrence, comprehending all islands within twenty leagues of any part of the shores of the United States, and lying between lines to be drawn due E from the points where the aforesaid boundaries between Nova-Scotia on the one part, and E Florida on the other, shall respectively touch the Bay of Fundy and the Atlantic Ocean, excepting such islands as now are, or heretofore have been, within the limits of the said province of Nova-Scotia." These states long flourished as provinces of Great Britain; but parliament attempting to tax them by its sole authority, without the intervention of their assemblies; a civil war ensued. Until the fourth of July, 1776, the present Thirteen States were British colonies. On that memorable day, the Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, made a solemn declaration, in which they assigned their reasons for withdrawing their allegiance from the king of Great Britain. Appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of their intentions, they did, in the name and by the authority of the good people of the colonies, solemnly publish and declare, that these United Colonies were, and of right ought to be "Free and Independent States;" that they were absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection between them and Great Britain was, and ought to be, totally dissolved; and that as Free and

Independent States, they had full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and do all other acts and things which Independent States may of right do. For the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine providence, the delegates then in Congress, 55 in number, mutually pledged to each other their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honour. At the same time they published articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union between the States, in which they took the style of "The United States of America," and agreed that each state should retain its sovereignty, freedom and independence, and every power, jurisdiction and right not expressly delegated to Congress by the confederation. By these articles the Thirteen United States severally entered into a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defence, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare, and bound themselves to assist each other, against all force offered to, or attacks that might be made upon all, or any of them, on account of religion, sovereignty, commerce, or any other pretence whatever. But for the more convenient management of the general interests of the United States, it was determined that Delegates should be annually appointed, in such manner as the Legislature of each State should direct, to meet in Congress the first Monday in November in every year. Gen. Washington was elected the first president, re-elected in 1792, and on his retiring from public affairs, in 1796, Mr. Adams was elected his successor, who was succeeded by Mr. Jefferson, in 1800, who at present fills that office. The illustrious Washington died Dec 14, 1799. To the sixteen states before mentioned, must be added all the country to the N of the Ohio, extending from Pennsylvania on the E, the lakes on the N, and the Mississippi on the W, called the Western Territory. The United States extend 1250 miles in length from E Florida to the N W angle of Nova Scotia; being situated between 31 and 46° N lat.

Unna, a town of Germany in the circle of Westphalia; in the county of Marek, formerly a considerable banesatic town. It is seated on a brook called Kottelbeck, 10 miles N E of Dortmund, and 35 S of Munster. Lon. 7 49 E, lat. 51 28 N.

Unna, a river of Turkey in Europe, which runs through Croatia, passes by Wihitch and Dubitza, and falls into the Save.

Unst, the most remote of the Shetland Islands, extending beyond 61° N lat. eight miles long, and four broad.

Unterseen, a town of Swisserland, in the canton of Bern. Lon. 7 28 E, lat. 46 35 N.

Unza, or Unzha, a town of Russia, in the government of Kostroma. Lon. 44 15 E, lat. 57 56 N.

Voerden, a town of the United Provinces, in Holland. It was taken by the French in 1795. It is seated on the Rhine, 10 miles W of Utrecht, and 20 S of Amsterdam. Lon. 4 58 E, lat. 52 6 N.

Voghera, a fortified town of Italy, in the dutchy of Milan and territory of Pavia. It is pleasantly seated on the Stallora, 14 miles S S W of Pavia, and 30 S by W of Milan. Lon. 9 10 E, lat. 44 59 N.

Vogelbruck, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Austria, which enjoys the privilege of granting protection to slaves. Lon. 13 40 E, lat. 58 1 N.

Vogouls, a people in Asia, subject to Russia, who have established their habitations in the forests on the N side of Mount Oural, extending themselves to the W, and still farther on the plains to the E of this chain of mountains. Here they have dwelt for time immemorial, and are possessed of traditions which have a great conformity with history. Some authors pretend that they are the brethren of the ancient Ougrians, or of the present Hungarians, and found their conjecture on the situation of the Vogoul territory, and the striking resemblance there is between the languages of the two nations. This people was subjected to the dominion of Russia at the same time with Siberia. The Vogouls are hardly of a middling stature, have generally black hair, and for the most part a scanty beard. They have some traits of the Kalmouks in the style of their physiognomy. They are of a gay disposition, teachable, honest, laborious, and acute; but slovenly and fickle, inclined to be disorderly and passionate to excess. Their women are robust, civil, laborious, and generally speaking well made. They have nei-

Vold, a town of France, in the department of Meurthe, and late province of Lorraine.

Voightland, a territory of Germany, in Upper Saxony, one of the four circles of the marquisate of Misnia. It is bounded on the E by Bohemia, on the N by the dutchy of Altenburg, and on the W by Thuringia and Franconia. Plawen is the capital.

Voigtsberg, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, with a citadel.

Vokelmark, or Wolickmarck, a town of Germany, in the circle of Austria. Lon. 14 56 E, lat. 46 45 N.

Volano, a seaport of Italy in the Ferrarese, seated on the gulf of Venice, at one of the mouths of the Po, 40 miles E of Ferrara. Lon. 12 36 E, lat. 44 52 N.

Volcano, one of the Lipari Islands, in the Mediterranean, 12 miles in circumference. It is a volcano, in the form of a broken cone, but now emits smoke only.

Volcanello, a small volcanic island in the Mediterranean, between that of Lipari and Volcano.

Volga, the largest river in Europe, which has its source in two small lakes, in the government of Plekof, in Russia, about 80 miles W of Tver. It begins to be navigable a few miles above that town, and is considerably augmented here by the junction of the Tverza, which is a broader, deeper, and more rapid river. By means of the Tverza, a communication is made between the Volga and the Neva, or, in other words, between the Caspian and the Baltic. This river waters some of the finest provinces in the Russian empire, passes by Yaroslaf, Kostroma, Nishne-Novogorod, Kasan, Simbirsk, and Saratof, entering the Caspian Sea, by several mouths, below Astracan.

Volhania, a palatinate of Russian Poland, 300 miles long and 150 broad; bounded on the N by Polesia, on the E by Kiof, on the S by Podolia, and on the W by Austrian Poland. It consists chiefly of plains watered by a great number of rivers. Lucko is the capital.

Vollenhoeven, a town of the United Provinces, in Overysssel, capital of a territory of the same name, with a castle. It is seated on the Zuyder-Zee, eight miles S W of Steenwich, and 12 N W of Zwol. Lon. 5 42 E, lat. 52 44 N.

Volo, a town of Turkey in Europe, in Janina, with a strong citadel and a fort. It was taken, and almost ruined, in 1655, by the Venetians, but it is now in some measure re-established. It is seated on a gulf of the same name, where there is a good harbour 30 miles S E of Larissa. Lon. 22 55 E, lat. 39 21 N.

Volodimir, or Vladimir a government of Russia, formerly a province of Moscow, containing 14 districts.

Volodimir, or Vladimir, a town of Russia, capital of the government of that name, and once the metropolis of the Russian empire. It is seated on the Kiasma, 110 miles E by N of Moscow.

Vologda, a government of Russia, formerly the largest province of Russia, divided into the two provinces of Vologda and Veliki-Uslug, and containing 12 districts.

Vologda, an archiepiscopal town of Russia, capital of a province of the same name, seated in a marsh, on the river Vologda. Lon. 39 46 E, lat. 59 20 N.

Volta, a river of Africa, which runs from N to S, and falls into the Atlantic.

Volterra, a town of Italy, in Tuscany, in the territory of Pisa, with a bishop's see. It is surrounded by walls, contains several antiquities, is noted for its medicinal waters, and is seated on a mountain, 30 miles S W of Florence, and 32 S E of Pisa. Lon. 10 42 E, lat. 43 26 N.

Voltei, a town of Italy, in the territory of Genoa, six miles W of Genoa.

Volturno, a river of Italy, in Naples, which rises in the Appennines, passes by Isernia and Capua, and falls into the gulf of Caieta.

Volturnara, a town of Naples, in Capitanata, with a bishop's see, seated at the foot of the Appennines, 20 miles W of Lucera, and 52 N E of Naples. Lon. 15 14 E, lat. 41 26 N.

Voleic, a town of France, in the department of Puy de Dome. There are immense quantities of Lava in its vicinity which is formed into quarries, and is used instead of stone in building the adjacent towns.

Voorn, a fort of Dutch Guelderland, on an island formed by the junction of the Wahal and the Maese.

Voorn, an island of the United Provinces, in South Holland, between the mouths of the Maese. Briel is the capital.

Voornland, a territory of the United Provinces, in South Holland, consisting of the islands of Voorn, Goree, and Overslackee.

Vorarlberg, or Vorarlberg, a district of Upper Austria; comprising the four counties of Feldkirch, Bregentz, Pludentz, and Son-alberg.

Vorden, a town of Germany in the circle of Westphalia. Lon. 3 24 E, lat. 52 29 N.

Voringen, a town of Germany, in the circle of Suabia. Lon. 9 12 E, lat. 48 15 N.

Voronetz, a government of Russia, containing 15 districts.

Voronetz, a town of Russia, the capital of a government of the same name. It is seated on the Voronetz, below its junction with the Don, 217 miles S by E of Moscow. Lon. 39 14 E, lat. 51 26 N.

Vosges, a department of France, including that part of Lorraine, which was lately a province of the same name. It is so called from a chain of mountains, covered with wood, that separates this department from the departments of Upper Saone and Upper Rhine.

Votiaks, the name of a people who inhabit the land between the rivers Kama and the Viatka; they are commonly of a middling stature, and thin. The colour of their hair is various, but for the most part reddish; and they resemble the Finns in their make more than any nation that derives its origin from them. The Votiaks are honest, peaceable, hospitable, sober; but superstitious, of cold complexions, and extremely simple. The women have winking eyes, and small even ugliness; they are short of stature, timid, very modest, and consequently chaste, laborious, and complaisant. They are assiduous in rural economy, neglecting neither the culture of bees nor the chase, in which latter they use indifferently the bow or fire-arms. In their leisure hours many of them employ themselves in making all sorts of tawery, such as cups, spoons, shuttles, &c.; and others varnish all kinds of bowls and cups. The women are employed in sewing, in making linen, coarse cloths, and felts; they also make cloaths, and ornaments of embroidery. Rich folks are not common among the Votiaks; but neither are there any that can be called absolutely poor.

U P L

You-hou-hien, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan, and jurisdiction of Tay-ping-fou; the most considerable, in point of riches, in that jurisdiction. It is 52 miles S W of Tay-ping-fou.

Vouille, a village of France, where was fought the memorable battle between Clovis and Alarie, king of the Visigoths.

You-tchang-fou, a city of China, and capital of the province of Hou-quang. This city is the rendezvous of all the commercial people in China. It suffered greatly during the last wars; but it has recovered so much, that it is now inferior to none of the other cities, in extent, opulence and population. As every branch of trade is carried on here, its port, situated on the river Yang-tse-kiang, is always crowded with vessels; the river is sometimes covered with them to the distance of two leagues. The beautiful crystal found in its mountains, the plentiful crops of fine tea which it produces, and the prodigious sale of the bamboo paper made here, no less contribute to render it famous, than the continual influx of strangers. Its extent is compared to that of Paris. It comprehends in its district one city of the second class, and nine of the third, besides a fortified town and several fortresses.

You-tcheou-fou, or Fou-tcheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Kiang-si, formerly one of the most beautiful in the empire; but, since the invasion of the Tartars, it has been a heap of ruins, which, however, still convey some idea of its ancient magnificence. Its district is about 25 leagues in extent, and contains six cities of the third class. It is 250 miles S by W of Nanking. Lon. 116 25 E, lat. 25 50 N.

Upland, a province of Sweden, which is a sort of peninsula, bounded on the W by Westmania and Gestricia, on the N E by the Baltic, and on the S by the sea of Sudermania. It is 70 miles long and 45 broad, enriched with inexhaustible mines of copper, iron, and silver; and the peasants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of iron. Stockholm is the capital. Uppminster, a village in a lofty eminence near Ramford.

Uppingham, a town in Lincolnshire, with a market on an eminence, and 90 N by W of W, lat. 52 36 N.

Upsal, a town of Sweden, with a famous university, bishop's see. It is the seat of an open and pasture, is a town, containing, about 3000 inhabitants. Its ground plot is extended into two small rivulets. The square is drawn at right angles, and each kind of square are built with brick, and generally are covered with painted red, and with turf. Each court-yard, or garden, is under the royal residence, which was finished in 1700. It was consumed in the centre of the cathedral, a large brick, in which were formerly several times great, and as often repeated monuments of the city.

The university in Sweden, and the North for academy. The Royal Society of the oldest literary academy. Here is a botanical garden, the celebrated Linnaeus.

Upsal, a town of Sweden, in Upland, with a famous university, and an archbishop's see. It stands in the beginning of an open plain fertile in grain and pasture, is a small, but very neat town, containing, exclusive of the students, about 3000 inhabitants. The ground plot is extremely regular; it is divided into two almost equal parts by a small rivulet Sala; and the streets are drawn at right angles from a central kind of square: a few of the houses are built with brick and stuccoed, but the generality are constructed with trunks smoothed into the shape of planks, and painted red, and the roofs are covered with turf. Each house has its small court-yard, or garden. Upsal was formerly the metropolis of Sweden, and the royal residence. The ancient palace which was finished by Eric XIV. was a magnificent building, until great part of it was consumed by fire, in 1702. In the centre of the town stands the cathedral, a large Gothic structure of brick, in which the kings of Sweden were formerly crowned. It has been several times greatly damaged by fire, and as often repaired: it contains the monument of the famous Gustavus Vasa. The university is the most ancient in Sweden, and the first seminary in the North for academical education. The Royal Society here is likewise the oldest literary academy in the North. Here is a botanical garden, of which the celebrated Linne was superintendent. Upsal is seated in a vast open plain, fertile in corn, 35 miles N N W of Stockholm. Lon. 17 48 E, lat. 59 32 N.

Ural, a river of Russia, formerly called Yaik, but its name was changed on the suppression of the rebellion of the Cossacs, which rises in Mount Caucasus, and watering Orenburg, Uralsk, and Gurief, falls by three mouths into the Caspian Sea. See the next article.
Uralian Cossacs, a Tartar tribe that inhabit the Russian province of Orenburg, on the S side of the Ural. These Cossacs are descended from those of the Don; and are a valiant race. They profess the Greek religion; but there are dissenters from the established religion, whom the Russians called Raskolniki, or Separatists, and who style themselves Starover-ki, or Old Believers. These consider the service of the established church as profane, and have their own priests and ceremonies. The Uralian Cossacs are all enthusiasts for the ancient ritual, and prize their beards almost equal to their lives. They are rich from their considerable fisheries in sturgeons; they have also acquired a spirit of revolt and independence by being situated in a desert between the Calmucs and the Kirghese, who are continually at variance with each other, and often with the Cossacs themselves. A Russian officer having ordered a number of Cossac recruits to be publicly shaved in the town of Yaitsk, in 1771, this wanton insult excited an insurrection, which was suppressed for a time. Many of the rebels made their escape, and, retiring into the desert, chiefly resorted to the marshy grounds which lie about the lake Kamysh-Samara, where they derived a subsistence from fishing and shooting wild boars, and were supplied occasionally by their relations with bread and provisions. By these means this desperate troop supported themselves during the space of two years, until the impostor, Pugatchef, having assumed the name of Peter III. appeared among them, and, taking advantage of this circumstance, roused them once more into open rebellion; the river Yaik was called the Ural; the Yaik Cossacs were denominated Uralian Cossacs; and the town of Yaitsk was named Uralsk.

Usbec Tartary, a vast country of Western Tartary, bounded on the N by the country of the Kalmucks, on the E by Thibet, on the S by Hindoostan, and on the W by Persia and the Caspian Sea. These Tartars are divided into several tribes, governed by their respective Khans, or princes. When under one sovereign, they were the most powerful of all the Tartarian nations. The principal Khans pride themselves in being descended from Tamerlane, whose birthplace was the ancient city of Samarcand, the present capital of the country. The Usbees, in their persons, are said to have better complexions and more engaging features than the Kalmucs. Their religion is Mahometanism; and they differ, in general, very little from the people of the northern provinces of Hindoostan.

ference, without its four suburbs, which are considerable. The steeple of the cathedral is very high, and the handsomest in the United Provinces. There is a great number of churches and hospitals. The environs are full of gardens, walks, and groves, which added to the purity of the air, render Utrecht one of the most agreeable places for residence in these parts, and accordingly a great many people of distinction resort thither. Here the union of the seven United Provinces was begun in 1579; and here was concluded, in 1713, the peace which terminated the wars of queen Ann. Utrecht was taken by the French in 1795, without resistance. It is seated on the Rhine, 18 miles S E of Amsterdam, 27 N E of Rotterdam, and 35 N W of Nimueguen. Lon. 5 8 E, lat. 52 7 N.

Waldstetter See, or Lake of the Four Cantons, one of the finest lakes in Switzerland. It consists of three principal branches, called the lakes of Lucern, Schwitz, and Uri. The upper branch, or lake of Lucern, is in the form of a cross; the sides of which stretch from Kussnacht to Dullenwal, a village near Stantz. It is bounded toward the town by cultivated hills sloping gradually to the water, contrasted on the opposite side by an enormous mass of barren and craggy rocks, Mount Pilate, one of the highest mountains in Switzerland, rising boldly from the lake. Toward the E of this branch, the lake contracts into a narrow creek, scarcely a mile across. Soon after it again widens, and forms the second branch, or lake of Schwitz; on the W side the canton of Underwalden, on the E that of Schwitz. Here the mountains are more lofty, and infinitely varied; some covered to the very summits with verdure, others perpendicular and craggy; here forming amphitheatres of wood; there jutting into the water in bold promontories. Towards the end of this branch the lake forms a considerable bay in the midst of which, lies the village of Brummen, near which commences the third branch, or lake of Uri: the scenery of which is most amazingly grand and sublime. It is a deep and narrow lake about nine miles in length, bordered on both sides with rocks uncommonly wild and romantic, and, for the most part, perpendicular; with forests of beech and pine growing down their sides to the very edge of the water; indeed the rocks are so entirely steep and overhanging, that there are hardly more than four or five landing spots, here the lake is as smooth as crystal; and the silent, solemn gloom which reigns in this place, is not less awful and affecting than the tremendous roaring of the cataract in the other. Somewhat farther upon the highest point of the Seelisberg, there is a small chapel that seems inaccessible. On the opposite side, but farther on, appears the chapel of William Tell, erected in honour of that hero, and upon the very spot where (it is said) he leaped from the boat, in which he was carrying prisoner to Kussnacht. It is built upon a rock that juts out into the lake under a hanging wood: a situation amid scenes so strikingly awful, as cannot fail of strongly affecting even the most dull and torpid imagination.

Wales, a principality in the W of England, 120 miles long and 80 broad; bounded on the N by the Irish Sea, on the W by that sea and St. George's Channel, on the S by the Bristol Channel, and on the E by the counties of Chester, Salop, Hereford, and Monmouth. It is divided into 12 counties; namely, Anglesey, Carnarvonshire, Denbighshire, Flintshire, Merionethshire, and Montgomeryshire, in N Wales; Brecknockshire, Cardiganshire, Carmarthenshire, Glamorganshire, Pembrokeshire, and Radnorshire, in S Wales. It is the country to which the ancient Britons fled, when Great Britain was invaded by the Saxons. They are now called Welsh, and continue to preserve their own language. It contains 751 parishes, and 58 market-towns. The air is clear and sharp, the cattle small, and provisions, in general, good and cheap. Wales is a mountainous country, and is particularly remarkable for goats, which delight in hilly countries. It is watered by many rivers, the principal of which are noted in the different counties.

Wales, New North, a country of North America, in New Britain, lying W of Hudson's Bay, and subject to Great Britain.

Wales, New South, a country of North America, in New Britain, lying S W of Hudson's Bay, and subject to Great Britain. See Britain, New; Hudson's Bay, and Labrador.

Wales, New South, the E coast of New Holland, extending from 43 49 to 10 37 S lat. being the N and S extremities of that vast island. This coast was first explored by captain Cook, in 1770; and a design was formed, in consequence of his recommendation, to settle a colony of convicts at Botany Bay. Captain Philip being appointed governor of the intended settlement, as well as commodore on the voyage, sailed from Portsmouth, in May 1787, with a detachment of marines, and 774 convicts, of which 220 were women. He arrived at Botany Bay in January 1788; but finding this bay very ineligible for a colony, he fixed upon Port Jackson, about three leagues and a half N of Cape Barks; and here a settlement was begun, to which he gave the name of Sydney Cove. For the subsequent proceedings of the colony, we must refer to governor Philip's Voyage to Botany Bay, and to the publications of captain

Tench and captain Hunter on the same subject. A vast chain of lofty mountains run nearly in a north and south direction farther than the eye can trace, about 60 miles inland. The general face of the country is pleasing, diversified with gentle risings and small winding valleys, covered for the most part with large spreading trees affording a succession of leaves in all seasons. A variety of flowering shrubs, almost all entirely new to an European, and of exquisite fragrance, abound in those places which are free from trees; and among these, a tall shrub, bearing an elegant flower, which smells like English may, is peculiarly delightful, and perfumes the air to a great distance. There are but few trees; and, as captain Tench and others relate, of so bad a grain, that they can scarcely be used for any purpose: This, however, Mr. Stockdale ascribes to their being used in an unseasoned state, as has been already mentioned. In return for these bad qualities, however, the trees yield vast quantities of the gum already mentioned as a cure for the dysentery. The climate of this continent appears not to be disagreeable, notwithstanding the violent complaints which some have made about it. The heat has never been excessive in summer, nor is the cold intolerable in winter. Storms of thunder and lightning are frequent; but these are common to all warm countries; and it has been supposed (though upon what foundation does not well appear) that were the country cleared of wood, and inhabited, these would in a great measure cease. A shock of an earthquake has likewise been felt; but these natural calamities are incident to some of the finest countries in the world. It is not known whether there are any volcanoes or not. The quadrupeds are principally the opossum kind, of which the most remarkable is the kangaroo. There is also a species of dogs very different from those known in Europe; they are extremely fierce, and can never be brought to the same degree of familiarity as those which we are acquainted with: some of them have been brought to England, but still retain their native ferocity. These dogs, which are the only domestic animal they have, are called dingie; but all other quadrupeds, without exception, they name kangaroo. There are many beautiful birds of various kinds; among which the principal are a black swan, its wings edged with white, its bill tinged with red; and the ostrich or cassowary; which frequently reaches the height of seven feet or more. Several kinds of serpents, large spiders, and scolopendras, have also been met with; and three or four species of ants, particularly green ants, which built their nests upon trees in a very singular manner. There are likewise many curious fishes; though the finny tribe seem not to be so plentiful on the coast as to give any considerable assistance in the way of provisions for the colony: some very large sharks have been seen in Port Jackson, and two smaller species. The inhabitants of New South Wales are perhaps, the most miserable and savage race of men existing, going entirely naked. They were pleased at first with some ornaments that were given them; but soon threw them away as useless. It does not appear, however, that they are insensible of the benefits of cloathing, or of some of the conveniences of which their new neighbours are possessed. Some of them, whom the colonists partly clothed, seemed to be pleased with the comfortable warmth they derived from it; and they all express a great desire for our iron tools. Their colour is rather a deep chocolate than a full black; but the filth with which their skin is covered, prevents its true colour from appearing. Notwithstanding their disregard for European finery, they are fond of adorning their bodies with scars, so that some of them make a very hideous figure. Sometimes, the skin is raised several inches from the flesh, and appears as if filled with wind; and all these seem to be reckoned marks of honour. Some of them perforate the cartilage of the nose, and thrust a large bone through it, a frightful kind of ornament, humorously called by the sailors their sprit sail yard. Their hair is generally so much clotted with a red gum, that they resemble a mop. They paint themselves with various colours: they will also sometimes ornament themselves with beads and shells, but make no use of the beautiful feathers of their birds. Most of the men want one of the fore-teeth in the upper jaw, which also appears to be a badge of honour among them. It is common for the women to cut off two joints of the little finger; which, considering the clumsiness of their amputating instruments, must be a painful operation. The New Hollanders appear extremely deficient in the useful arts. Of the cultivation of the ground they have no notion; nor can they be prevailed upon to eat our bread or dressed meat. Hence they depend entirely for subsistence on the fruits and roots they can gather, and the fish they catch. They frequently set fire to the grass, in order to drive out the opossums, and other animals, from their retreats, and they have been observed to set decoys for quails. As all these resources must be, at best, precarious, it is no wonder that they are frequently distressed for provisions. Thus, in the summer, they would eat neither the shark nor the sting ray; but, in winter, any thing was acceptable. A young whale being driven on shore, was quickly cut in pieces, and carried off: they broiled it only long enough to scorch the outside; and in this raw state they eat all their fish. They sometimes bake their provisions, by the help of hot stones, like the inhabitants of the islands in the Southern Ocean. Among the fruits used by them is a kind of wild fig; and they eat also the kernels of a fruit resembling the pineapple. The principal part of their subsistence, however, is fish; and when these happened to be scarce, they were wont to watch the opportunity when the colonists hauled the seine, and often seized the whole, though a part had formerly been offered or given them. They sometimes strike the fish from the canoes with spears, sometimes catch them with hooks, and also make use of nets, which are generally made of the fibres of the flax plant, with very little preparation, and are strong and heavy; the lines of which they are composed being twisted like whipcord. Some of them, however, appear to be made of the fur of an animal, and others of cotton. The meshes of the nets are made of large loops artificially inserted into each other, without any knots. Their hooks are made of the inside of a shell very much resembling mother-of-pearl. Their canoes are nothing more than large pieces of bark tied up at both ends with vines; and, considering the slight texture of these vessels, the dexterity with which they are managed, and the boldness with which they venture out to sea in them, are wonderful. There is no good reason for supposing them to be cannibals, but they eat animal substances raw, or nearly so. Some of their vegetables are poisonous when raw, but not so when boiled. They could never be brought to taste spirits a second time. Their huts consist of pieces of bark laid together in the form of an oven, open at one end, very low, but long enough for a man to lie at full length, but they seem to depend more for shelter on the caverns with which the rocks abound. So far from being so injured to the cold, by going invariably naked, as to be insensible to the injuries of the weather, the colonists had repeated opportunities of seeing them shivering with cold in the winter, or huddling together in heaps in their huts, or in caverns, till a fire could be kindled to warm them. It is probable, however, notwithstanding their extreme barbarism, that some knowledge of the arts may be introduced among them, as some have been seen attentively considering the utensils and conveniences of the Europeans, with a view, seemingly, of making similar improvements. In some things also they possess a great power of imitation; they can imitate the songs and language of the Europeans almost instantaneously, much better than the latter can imitate theirs by long practice; and this talent is discernable in their sculptures, every where to be met with on the rocks; these represent men and other animals, and, though rude, are very surprising for people who have not the knowledge of constructing a comfortable habitation, or of making clothes. In person, they are active, vigorous, and stout, though generally lean. The women have sometimes been kept back with the most jealous sensibility; sometimes offered with the greatest familiarity. Such of them as have been seen have soft and pleasing voices; and seem not to be destitute of modesty. The men display great personal bravery on the appearance of any danger; but, with all their courage, they are much afraid of a musket, and almost equally so of a red coat, which they know to be the martial dress of the Europeans. The mischief which they have hitherto done has been exercised only on some few straggling convicts, most of whom probably have been the aggressors.

They certainly burn their dead; which, perhaps, has given rise to the story of their being cannibals. They seem very little given to thieving, in comparison with the inhabitants of most of the islands in the Southern Ocean; and they are very honest among themselves, leaving their spears and other implements on the beach, in perfect security of their remaining untouched. They are very expert at throwing their javelins, and will hit a mark, with great certainty, at a considerable distance. They are more numerous than was at first imagined; though still their numbers must be accounted few, in comparison to the extent of the country; and there is reason to believe that the interior parts are uninhabited. With regard to the civil jurisdiction of the governor of New S Wales, it extends from 43 49 to 10 37 S lat. From the sea-coast it extends westward as far as 135° E lon. and thence proceeding in an E direction, includes all the islands in the Pacific Ocean within the above-mentioned latitudes, by which partition it is supposed that every source of litigation will be cut off, as all these are indisputably the discovery of the British navigators. The powers of the governor are absolutely unlimited, no mention being made of a council to assist him in any thing; and as no stated time is appointed for assembling the courts similar to the assizes and gaol deliveries in England, the duration of imprisonment is altogether in his hands. He is likewise invested with a power of summoning general courts martial; but the insertion in the marine mutiny act, of a smaller number of officers than 13 being able to compose such a tribunal, has been neglected; so that a military court, should detachments be made from head-quarters, or sickness prevail, may not always be found practicable to be obtained, unless the number of officers in the settlement at present be increased. The governor is allowed to grant pardons in all cases, treason and wilful murder excepted; and even in these he has authority to stay the execution of the law until the king's pleasure shall be signified. In case of the governor's death, the lieutenant governor takes his place; and on his decease, the authority is lodged in the hands of the senior officer.

in their dead; which, in rise to the story of wars. They seem very striking, in comparison with most of the mountains of the southern Ocean; and most among them, their spears and other points, in perfect perfection, remaining untouched. Expert at throwing their javelins, with great accuracy, and at a considerable distance. Numerous than was to be expected; though still their number is accounted few, in the extent of the country. The reason to believe that the parts are uninhabited, is the civil jurisdiction of New South Wales, it extends to 10 37 S lat. From the coast it extends westward as far as the Cape, and thence proceeding to the Pacific Ocean within the 11 latitudes, by which it is supposed that every communication will be cut off, as disputably the discovery of the navigators. The governors are absolutely independent, no appeal being made of them in any thing; and one is appointed for assaults similar to the assaults in England. Imprisonment is allowed. He is likewise a power of summoning martial; but the insubordination, or mutiny act, of a number of officers than 13 being proposed, such a tribunal is constituted; so that a military detachment be made to quarters, or sickness prevailing, ways be found practicable, unless the number of the settlement at present. The governor is allowed in all cases, treason and disorder excepted; and even has authority to stay the law until the king's pleasure be signified. Wallenstadt, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Appenzel; incorporated into the baillage of Sargans, but enjoys several distinct privileges. This little town derives its existence from being the passage of the merchandise transported from Germany through the Grisons to Italy. This communication occasions the frequent resort hither of Italian merchants; and that language is spoken by many of the inhabitants. This town is seated at the E end of a lake of the same name, nine miles W of Sargans, and 15 N W of Coire. Lon. 9 14 E, lat. 47 1 N.

Wallenstadt, a lake of Switzerland, about sixteen miles in length, and two in breadth: it is entirely bounded by exceeding high mountains, except to the E and W. From this situation, a breeze generally blows from those two quarters, beginning at the break of day, and continuing for some hours; then changes from W to E till sun-set: this breeze is very convenient for the transportation of the merchandise. Sometimes however a violent north-wind rushes down from the mountains, and renders the navigation dangerous. We were assured by the watermen "says Mr. Cox," who rowed us from Wallenstadt to this place, that the breeze above mentioned was generally constant: but we cannot attest it from our own experience; as we set out this morning about eight, and the wind was directly contrary the whole way, blowing from W to E. The weather, 'tis true, was heavy, overcast, and rainy, which might cause perhaps this occasional variation. The lake is uncommonly wild and picturesque, and affords a perpetual variety of beautiful and romantic scenes. On the side of Glaris, the mountains which border upon the lake, are chiefly cultivated; enriched with wood, or fine meadows; and studded with cottages, churches, and small villages; the Alps of Glaris rising behind; their tops covered with snow. On the other side, for the most part, the rocks are exceedingly grotesque, craggy, inaccessible, and perpendicular: but here and there a few cultivated necks of land are formed at the very edge of the lake, and at the bottom of these very rocks; exhibiting a beautiful contrast to the barrenness above and around them. Numberless water-falls, occasioned by the melting of the snows, fall down the sides of these rocks from a very considerable height, and with an almost inconceivable variety; some of them seeming to glide gently in circular directions; others forming vast torrents, and rushing into the lake with noise and violence: all of them changing their form and their position as we approached or receded from them. The lake is exceedingly clear, deep, and cold, and as we were informed, never freezes. Through this lake flows the Mat, which, soon after joining the Linth, forms the river Limmat.

Wallerstein, a town of Suabia, with a castle belonging to the counts of Oettingen, six miles S W of Oettingen.

Wallingford, a borough in Berkshire, with a market on Thursday and Saturday. It was once surrounded by a wall, and had a strong castle now demolished, and four churches, two of which were demolished in the civil wars, and one of which only is now in use. It is seated on the Thames, over which is a stone bridge. 14 miles N W of Reading, and 4 W of London. Lon. 1 1 W, lat. 51 36 N.

Wallingford, a town of Connecticut, in New Haven county, where there is a post office, 13 miles N of New Haven, 27 S by W of Hartford, and 21 N E of Danbury.

Waltham North, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Tuesday, 10 miles E of Norwich, and 123 N N E of London. Lon. 1 31 E, lat. 52 40 N.

Walsingham, a town in Norfolk, with a market on Friday. It is famous for the ruins of a monastery, which had a shrine of the Virgin, much frequented by pilgrims. Among these ruins are two uncovered wells, one of which is called the Virgin Mary's, or the Holy Well; and upon a stone at the edge of it is a cross, where the people used to kneel, and to throw in a piece of gold when they wished for any thing they wanted. Walsingham is 25 miles N W of Norwich, and 116 N N E of London. Lon. 0 53 E, lat. 52 56 N.

Waltham, or Bishop's Waltham, a town in Hampshire, with a market on Friday. Waltham is eight miles S of Winchester, and 65 W by S of London. Lon. 1 20 W, lat. 50 57 N.

Waltham Abbey, or Waltham Holy Cross, a town in Essex, with a market on Tuesday. It received its second appellation from a holy cross, pretended to have been miraculously conveyed here. It is seated on the river Lea, which here forms several islands, 12 miles N by E of London. Lon. 0 3 E, lat. 51 42 N.

Waltham Cross, or West Waltham, a village in Hertfordshire, which takes its first appellation from a cross erected here by Edward I. It is seated near the river Lea, 12 miles N by E of London.

Waltham on the Wold, a town in Leicestershire, with a market on Thursday, almost disused. It is 19 miles N E of Leicester, and 113 N by W of London. Lon. 0 46 W, lat. 52 51 N.

Waltinbruch, a town of Germany, in the circle of Suabia, on the river Aich.

Wandsworth, a large village in Surry, seated on the Wandie, near its confluence with the Thames, five miles W S W of London. At the close of the last century, many French refugees settled here, and established a French church, which is now a meeting for the methodists. The dying of cloth has been practised here for more than a century: there are also manufactures for bolting cloth, the printing of calicoes and kerseymeres, and the whitening and pressing of stulls; with oil, iron, and whitelead mills, vinegar works, and distilleries. Here is a quaker's meeting-house, and two schools for children of that persuasion. The tower of the church is ancient but the church itself is a modern structure. In Garret Lane, in this parish, is a mock election after every general election of parliament, of a mayor of Garret; in which Mr. Foot's dramatic piece of that name gave no small celebrity.

Wangen, an imperial town of Germany in Suabia. The inhabitants are papists, and carry on a great trade in paper and hardware. It is seated on the Overarg, 17 miles N E of Lindau, and 30 E of Constance. Lon. 9 56 E, lat. 47 38 N.

Wareham, a borough and seaport in Dorsetshire, with a market on Saturday. It is seated between the Frome and Piddle, at their fall into Lochford Lake, the W part of Poole harbour. It was a very large place, and had several churches, now reduced to three; it also had a wall and a castle; but has suffered so much by the various turns of fortune, that it is now only the shadow of what it was, and its harbour is choked up. There is a good salmon fishery here, over the river Frome, and this town is famous for tobacco pipe clay, 10,000 tons of which are annually exported to London and other parts. Wareham is governed by a mayor, sends two members to parliament, and is 29 miles E of Dorchester, and 114 W by S of London. Lon. 2 16 W, lat. 50 43 N.

Warsaw, a large city of Poland, the capital of that country, and of the province of Masovia. Its situation is not unpleasant; it is built partly in a plain, and partly upon a gentle ascent rising from the banks of the Vistula, which is about as broad as the Thames at Westminster-bridge, but very shallow in summer. The city and its suburbs occupy a vast extent of ground and are supposed to contain between sixty and seventy thousand inhabitants, among whom are a prodigious number of foreigners. The whole town has a melancholy appearance, exhibiting that strong contrast of wealth and poverty, luxury and distress, which pervades every part of this unhappy country. The streets are spacious, but ill-paved; The churches and public buildings are large and magnificent: the palaces of the nobility are numerous and splendid; but the greatest part of the houses, particularly in the suburbs, are mean and ill-constructed wooden hovels. In the beginning of 1794, the empress of Russia put a garrison into this city, in order to compel the Poles to acquiesce in the usurpation she had in view, but this garrison was soon expelled by the citizens. The insurrection became general throughout Poland, and the King of Prussia laid siege to Warsaw in July, but was compelled to raise the siege in September. It was undertaken, however, by the Russians, who, on November 4, took by storm the suburb of Praga; a dreadful massacre ensued; the whole of the suburb was nearly reduced to ashes; and the immediate consequence was the surrender of the city to the Russians, who made their triumphant entry into it on the 19th. They delivered it up to the King of Prussia, and in January 1796, his troops, to the number of 12,000, entered and took possession. Warwickshire, a county of England, 47 miles long and 59 broad; bounded at its N extremity by a point of Derbyshire, on the N W by Staffordshire, on the N E by Leicestershire, on the W by Worcestershire, on the E by Northamptonshire, on the S W by Gloucestershire, and on the S E by Oxfordshire.

It lies partly in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and partly in that of Worcester; contains four hundreds and one liberty, one city, 12 market-towns, and 153 parishes; and sends six members to parliament. The air is very mild, pleasant, and healthy. The woodland division, though now for the most part cleared and cultivated, still retains somewhat of its wild character, being interspersed with wide heaths and moors, and sprinkled with woods. The northern part has a gravelly soil; but this changes to clay on advancing towards the middle. Much cheese of a good kind is made in this northern part of the county; and it contains coal and limestone. The southern portion, formerly called the Feldon, is a tract of great fertility, and very productive of corn. Its chief river is the Leam, which joins the Avon near Warwick.
Dunsmore-heath, between these two rivers, now mostly enclosed, is the scene of some of the fabulous stories related of the famous Guy, earl of Warwick. The principal rivers are the Avon, Tame, and Arrow. The capital is Warwick, but Birmingham is the largest town.

WASHINGTON, the seat of the general government of the United States, in the district of Columbia. It is situated on a point of land, formed by the confluence of a river, called the East Branch, with the Potowmack, in lat. 38° 53' N, and lon. 77° 15' W from London: but the citizens of the United States calculate the first meridian from the centre of Washington. In point of salubrity the situation is excellent; the soil is dry, and furnished with several permanent springs of good water. The grand avenues of the city, according to the plan proposed, are from 129 to 116 feet wide, and all the other streets from 99 to 119.

In all of them an ample space is allotted for foot-passengers, on both sides of the streets. The capitol, designed for the reception of Congress, as well as the President's palace, are on considerable eminences, about one mile apart. The latter is finished, being 170 feet wide and 85 feet deep, two stories high, and covered with slate; but of the former, there is only one wing erected. On the area of the city there are about 850 houses completed, one third of bricks, the rest being principally of wood: but they are built in separate groups, some of them more than a mile apart, and many of them untenanted. The public offices are kept in buildings erected for the purpose, near the President's House, a few of which are executed in a style of considerable elegance. This metropolis lies 42 miles S W by S of Baltimore, 133 N by E of Richmond, 144 S W of Philadelphia, 248 from New York, and 500 from Boston, in the same direction.

Washington, the capital of Washington county, Pennsylvania, 3 miles S of Watecoo, an island in the South Sea, discovered by Captain Cook. It is about six leagues in circuit, is a beautiful spot, with a surface covered with verdure, and composed of hills and plains. The soil, in some parts, is light and sandy; but farther up the country, a reddish cast was seen on the rising grounds, where the islanders build their houses, which are long and spacious. The manners of the people of this island, their general habits of life, and their method of treating strangers, greatly resemble those that prevail at Otaheite, and its neighbouring islands. There is also a great similarity between their religious opinions and ceremonies. From every circumstance, indeed, it may be considered as indubitable, that the inhabitants of Watecoo derive their descent from the same stock, which has so remarkably diffused itself over the immense extent of the Southern Ocean. Lon. 153 15 W, lat. 21 1 S.

Wesel, a town of Germany, in Westphalia, in the duchy of Cleves, with a strong citadel, near the confluence of the Rhine and Lippe. Here are two Calvinist churches, one for the Lutherans, and another for the Papists; but the regency of the town is in the hands of the Calvinists. It was formerly an imperial and hanseatic town, but now belongs to the king of Prussia. It was taken by the French in 1759, but restored in 1762. It is 25 miles S E of Cleves, and 45 N of Cologne. Lon. 6

Wesenburgh, a fortified town of Russia, in the government of Esthonia, seated on the Wiss, 55 miles S E of Revel, and 55 N W of Narva. Lon. 25 48 E, lat. 59 10 N.

Weser, a considerable river of Germany, which rises in the county of Henneburg, being then called the Werra. It passes by Smalkald, crosses a corner of Thuringia, enters the dutchy of Brunswick, and receives the Fulde, at Munden. It then assumes the name of Weser, runs along the confines of the circles of Westphalia and Lower Saxony, waters Hamelin, Minden, and Hoya; receives the Aller, below Verden; and, passing by Bremen, enters the German Ocean.

West Bridgewater, a post town in Plymouth county, Massachusetts; about 22 miles S of Boston.

Westbury, a borough in Wiltshire, with a market on Friday. It sends two members to parliament, and is 26 miles N W of Salisbury, and 101 W of London. Lon. 2 13 W, lat. 51 16 N.

West Chester, a post town, the capital of Chester county, 25 miles W of Philadelphia, containing about 300 inhabitants. It was divided from Delaware county, and erected into a separate jurisdiction, September 26, 1789.

Westerham, a town in Kent, with a market on Wednesday. This place had the honour of producing general Wolfe, who is interred in the church. It is seated on the river Darent. Lon. 0 6 E, lat. 51 18 N.

Westerly, a post town in Washington county, Rhode Island, situated on the E side of Pawcatuck river, opposite to Stonington, in Connecticut, 13 miles W of Charleston, 34 of Newport, and 20 E of New London.

Westeros, a town of Sweden, capital of Westmania, with a bishop's see, a citadel, and a famous college. It carries on a considerable commerce with Stockholm, across the lake Macler; particularly in copper and in iron from the neighbouring mines, which abound in the province of Westmanland. It is a large straggling town, composed of wooden houses, and contains the ruins of an ancient palace, formerly inhabited by the kings of Sweden, and the cathedral, which is built of brick, is celebrated for the tower, esteemed the highest in the kingdom: the lower part of this tower is square, and supports a hexagon spire tapering gradually like a pyramid, and covered with painted metal. Within the cathedral is the tomb of that unfortunate monarch Eric XIV. Westeros is seated on the lake Macler, 45 miles N W of Stockholm. Lon. 17 0 E, lat. 59 38 N.

Westerburg, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Rhine, in Weteravia, with a castle. It is the capital of a lordship of the same name, and 55 miles N of Mentz. Lon. 8 18 E, lat. 50 26 N.

Western Territory, a country in North America, comprehending all that part of the United States which lies to the N W of the river Ohio. It is bounded on the W by the Mississippi, on the N by the Lakes, on the E by Pennsylvania, and on the S E and S by the Ohio. It contains 11,000 square miles, equal to 263,040,000 acres; from which, if we deduct 43,040,000 for water, there will remain 220,000,000 acres, belonging to the federal government, to be sold for the discharge of the national debt. The country on the Ohio is every where pleasant, with large level spots of rich land; and remarkably healthy. One general remark of this nature will serve for the whole tract of the globe comprehending between the western skirts of the Alleghany mountains; thence running south-westwardly to the distance of 500 miles to the Ohio falls; then crossing them northerly to the heads of the rivers that empty themselves into the Ohio; thence E along the ridge that separates the lakes and Ohio's streams, to French creek. This country may, from a proper knowledge, be affirmed to be the most healthy, the most pleasant, the most commodious and most fertile spot of earth, known to the European people. Very little waste land is to be found in any part of this tract of country. There are no swamps; and though the hills are frequent, they are gentle and swelling, no where high, nor incapable of tillage. They are of a deep rich soil, covered with a heavy growth of timber, and well adapted to the production of wheat, rye, indigo, tobacco, &c.

Westminster, a city of Middlesex, the residence of the monarchs of Great Britain, the seat of the parliament and of the high courts of justice, and constituting with London and Southwark, the metropolis of the British empire. This city had its name from the situation of its abbey, anciently called minster, in respect of that of St. Paul. That part properly called the city of Westminster, comprehending the parishes of St. John and St. Margaret, was once an island formed by the Thames, called Thorney Island, from the thorns with which it was overrun; and the abbey that stood in it, Thorney Abbey. The liberties of Westminster contain the several parishes of St. Martin in the Fields, St.
 James's, St. Anne, St. Paul, Covent Garden, St. Mary le Strand, St. Clement, Danes, St. George, Hanover Square, and the precinct of the Savoy. The government both of the city and liberties, is under the jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Westminster, in civil as well as ecclesiastical affairs; and their authority extends to the precinct of St. Martin le Grand, by Newgate street, and in some towns of Essex, that are exempted from the jurisdiction of the bishop of London and the archbishop of Canterbury; but the management of the civil part has, ever since the Reformation, been in the hands of laymen, elected from time to time, and confirmed by the dean and chapter. See London.

Westmoreland, a county of England, enclosed between those of Cumberland, York, and Lancaster; the first bounding it on the N and N W; the second on the E; and the last on the S and S W. It has the natural boundaries of lakes, streams, and mountains, almost every where except to the S, where it sinks undistinguishably into Lancashire.
 From the sea it is excluded by the detached part of Lancashire; and only just touches upon the bottom of that wide sandy wash which separates the two parts of that county. Its shape is so irregularly angular, somewhat resembling that of a vine-leaf. Its size is less than of the other northern counties; yet, in its greatest length and breadth, it measures about forty miles.
 The name of this county is descriptive of its nature. It is the West moor-land; a region of lofty mountains, naked hills, and black barren moors, which here, as well as in Cumberland, are also called fells. The vallies in which the rivers run are tolerably fertile; and in the north-eastern quarter there is a considerable tract of cultivated plain.
 The rest of the county affords only narrow dells and glens of fertility amidst the dreary hills and extended wastes. Neither are its mineral treasures considerable. It wants coals, and the metallic ores it contains either lie so dead, or are so remotely situated, as not to be worth working. It abounds in slate of the finest quality, large quantities of which are exported.
 The principal rivers are the Eden, Lone, and Ken. It has also several fine lakes, the principal of which is Wimmermere, or Wimmermere-water. In the forest of Martindale, to the S of Ells-water, the breed of red deer still exists in a wild state. Appleby is the county-town.

Westphalia, one of the circles of Germany, bounded on the E by Lower Saxony; on the S by Hesse, Westerwald, and the Rhine; on the W by the United Provinces; and on the N by the German Ocean. The soil produces pastures and some corn, though there are a many great marshes. The horses are large, and the hogs in high esteem, especially the hams, known by the name of Westphalia hams. The principal rivers are the Weser, Embs, Lippe, and Roer. It contains the sovereign bishoprics of Osnaburg, Munster, and Paderborn; the principality of Mimmen; the counties of Ravensburg, Tecklenburg, Rithburgh, Lippe, Lemgow, Diepholt, Delmenhorst, Oldenburg, Embden or East Friesland, Bentheim, and Liögen. These are to the N of the river Lippe. To the S of it are the abbies of Essen and Verden; the town of Dortmund; the counties of Marek and Homburg; and the dutchies of Westphalia, Berg, and Cleves. Munster is the most considerable city in this circle.

Westphalia, a dutchy of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia, 40 miles long and 25 broad; bounded on the N by the bishoprics of Munster and Osnaburg, and the county of Lippe; on the W by that of Marek; on the S by the territories of Nassau; and on the E by the counties of Witgenstein, Hartzfeld, Waldeck, and the landgrate of Hesse, being about 40 miles in length, and 25 in breadth. It is a mountainous country, but moderately fertile; and is subject to the elector of Cologne. Arensburg is the capital.

Wetzlar, a free imperial town of Germany, in Wetteravia, surrounded by ditches and walls flanked by towers. The inhabitants are protestants, and have a council of 24 members. In 1693, the imperial chamber was transferred hither from Spire, on account of the wars which ravaged the palatinate. It is seated at the confluence of the Lahn, Dilac, and Dillen, five miles S of Solms, and 73 N by E of Spire. Lon. 8 32 E, lat. 50 26 N.

Wexford, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, 58 miles long and 24 broad; bounded on the N by Wicklow, on the E by St. George's Channel, on the S by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the W by Waterford and Kilkenny, and on the N W by Catherlough. It contains 109 parishes, sends 18 members to parliament, and is fruitful in corn and grass.

Weymouth, a town in Dorsetshire, in-but a distinct borough. It is seated on the W side of an inlet of the sea, but its port is injured by the sand, so that its trade, which was once considerable, is much reduced, a few ships only being sent hence to Newfoundland. This town is remarkably well situated for bathing, having an excellent sandy beach, and on that account is resorted to by persons of all ranks, and their majesties and the royal family generally honour this place with their residence a few weeks every year. This in some degree compensates for the loss of its trade. A few plain and striped cottons are made here. Weymouth is 150 miles W S W of London. See Melcomb Regis.

Wheeling, a post town, the capital of Ohio county, Virginia; lying on the E Whilab, a kingdom of Guinea, on the Slave Coast, extending about 10 miles along the Atlantic, under 6 29 N lat. It is a very populous country, and very well furnished with large villages; and there are so many small ones, that they are not above a musquet shot from each other. The houses are small, and round at the top, and encompassed with mud walls or hedges, together with a great number of all sorts of beautiful and lofty trees, which afford the most beautiful prospect in the world; in-somuch, that those who have been here, represent it as a perfect Paradise. The fields are always green, and they cultivate beans, potatoes, and fruits; nor will the negroes here let a foot of ground remain uncultivated. Besides, they sow again the very next day after they have reaped. The inhabitants are greatly civilized and very respectful to each other; especially to their superiors, and they are also so industrious, that even the women are never idle.

These brew the beer, dress the victuals, and sell all sorts of commodities at the market. Those that are rich, employ their wives and slaves in tilling the land, and they carry on a considerable trade with the product as well as in slaves; for some of them are able to deliver 1000 of the latter every month.
The chief men have generally 40 or 50 wives, the principal captains 3 or 400, and the king 4 or 5000. However, they are extremely jealous, and, on the least suspicion, will sell them to the Europeans for slaves. If any one happens to touch the king's wives accidentally, he is doomed to perpetual slavery. This being considered, it is no wonder that the women are not fond of being the king's wives; nay, some of them will prefer a speedy death to such a miserable life. The king gets little value upon his daughters, for he will dispose of them to the factors of the English company, or the masters of ships that come there. They live in a manner by guess; for they have no festivals nor distinction of days, hours, weeks, months, or years.
The custom of circumcision is used here; but they are not able to tell why they use it, nor from whence it is derived. They are such great gamesters, that they will stake all they have at play, not excepting their wives and children. Their religion is very superstitious; for they have a vast number of idols; and they deify the most contemptible animal that they see first in a morning, not excepting even stocks and stones. However, they have a principal regard for snakes, very high trees, and the sea. An English factor new come over, found a snake in the house belonging to the factory, and killed it without the least scruple; which so incensed the negroes, that they were for revenging the death of the snake, not only upon him that killed it; but upon the whole factory; but by the force of presents, and the interposition of the people of the other factories, this affair was made up, and the snake honourably interred. However, to prevent the like accidents, they give them warning not to do the like for the future. With regard to the animals, they have oxen, cows, goats, sheep, and hogs, as well as tame fowls; such as turkeys, ducks, and hens, which last are extremely plenty. There are many wild beasts within land, such as elephants, buffaloes, tigers, several kinds of deer, and a sort of hares, with several uncommon animals, which we have not room to describe. The fruits are citrons, lemons, oranges, bananas, tamarinds, and several others; and they have vast numbers of palm-trees, from which they get their wine. All the common people go naked here, as in other parts of Guinea, only they have a cloth or clout to cover their nakedness. Their trade consisted of slaves, elephants teeth, wax, and honey. The English factory is 200 miles E of Cape Coast Castle, within land. Bows, arrows, beautiful assagays, and clubs, are the principal weapons of the nation. Xavier, or Sabi, is the capital.

W H I

Whitby, a seaport in the N riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Saturday, seated near the mouth of the Esk. It is a considerable town with a great traffic in the building of ships, and the carrying business. Its harbour is the best on this coast, and is protected by a fine pier; but it has no river communication with the inland country. Several ships are sent from hence to the Greenland fishery. This place had the honour of producing the greatest navigator that the world ever saw, the much-lamented Captain Cook. In the neighbourhood of Whitby are large works, in which alum is procured from a kind of slate. In December 1787, a strong new-built quay, fell into the sea with a thundering crash, followed by large masses of the cliff. The remains of the massy church of an ancient abbey stood on this cliff, till November 1794, when the most part of it fell to the ground. Whitby is 48 miles N N E of York, and 245 N of London. Whitechurch, or Little Stanmore, a village near Edgeware, in Middlesex, eight miles N W of London. It has a church which contains the remains of the magnificent seat of Canons, which belonged to the Duke of Chandos, built in 1712, by James first duke of Chandos, who lived here in a kind of regal state, and died in 1744. It was demolished in 1747, and the materials were sold by auction. The church contains all that now remains of the magnificent seat of the duke of Chandos, called of Canons.

Whitehall, a post town in Washington county, New York; situated at the head of lake Champlain, 22 miles N of Fort Edward, and 41 W of Rutland, containing 1604 inhabitants. This place was formerly called Skeenesborough, from major Skeene, of the British army.

Whitehaven, a town of Cumberland, 10 miles S W from Cockermonth, 36 from Carlisle, and 290 from London, is so called from the white cliffs near it, that shelter the harbour from tempests. It is a populous rich town, chiefly beholden for its improvement to the Lowther family, containing at least 12,000 inhabitants, and has about 300 ships employed in trade. It has a good artificial harbour, with a long pier. In 1566, it had but six houses, and one fishing boat; in 1582, 12 small ships. The coal-mines here are the most extraordinary in the world, being sunk to the depth of 150 fathoms, and extended under the sea to places where there is over them depth of water for ships of large burden. In 1791, part of the earth of three gardens suddenly shrunk; by this accident several lives were lost, and one building was considerably damaged. Coals had been wrought under the places where the apertures appeared about 50 years preceding 1791. Four fire engines belong to a colliery here, which, when at work, discharge at the rate of 1,768,620 gallons of water in 24 hours. Here are copperas-works, which yield considerable profit. Its chief trade is furnishing Ireland and part of Scotland with salt and coal; it is the most eminent port in England, next to Newcastle, for the White Mountains, the highest part of a ridge of mountains, in the state of New Hampshire, in North America.

 They extend N E and S W to a length not yet ascertained. The height of these mountains, above an adjacent meadow, is reckoned from observations made in 1784, to be 5500 feet; and the meadow is 3500 feet above the level of the sea. The snow and ice cover them nine or ten months in the year, during which time they exhibit that bright appearance from which they are denominated the White Mountains. Although they are 70 miles within land, they are seen many leagues off at sea, and appear like an exceedingly bright cloud in the horizon. Their highest summit is in lat. 44° N.
White Plains, a post town in West Chester county, New York, 15 miles N of Kingsbridge, and 30 of the city of New York. This was the scene of considerable military operations in the American war.
White Sea, a bay of the Frozen Ocean in the N of Russia, situated between Russia, Lapland, and Sanojede, at the bottom of which stands Archangel; this was the only communication which the Russians had with the sea, before the conquest of Livonia from the Swedes in the beginning of the present century, by the czar Peter the Great.
Whitestown, a post town in Oneida county, New York, situated on the S

Whittlebury Forest, a forest in the S part of Northamptonshire, nine miles in length, and, in some parts, above three in breadth. Here the wild cat is still found. It is according to an accurate survey of it, nine miles two furlongs and twenty-six perches in length, from the river Ouse on the S E to the N W end of Wapenham wood. It is a royal forest, and the duke of Grafton is ranger.
Wiblingen, a town of Germany, in Austrian Suabia, three miles S W of Ulm.
Wiburg, a government of Russia, formerly Russian Finland, and comprised in Carelia. It was ceded by the Swedes to the Russians, partly by the peace of Nystadt in 1721, and partly by the treaty of Abo in 1743. This province retains most of its ancient privileges, with some occasional modifications, which have been necessarily introduced under the new government.
 The country produces, besides pasture, rye, oats, and barley, but not sufficient for the inhabitants. Wiburg retains its own civil and criminal courts of justice: in penal cases, not capital, the punishments prescribed by the provincial judicature are inflicted; but whenever a criminal is condemned to death, the Russian laws interpose, and, relieving him from the sentence of beheading or hanging, as enjoined by the Swedish code, consign him to the knout and transportation to Siberia. In the governor's court, business is transacted in the Swedish, German, and Russian tongues. The peasants talk only the Finnish dialect, but the inhabitants of the towns understand Swedish also, and many of them German. Lutheranism is the established religion; but the Greek worship has been introduced by the Russians.
Wiburg, a commercial seaport of Russia, capital of a government of the same name, with a bishop's see, and a strong citadel, containing about 9000 inhabitants. The houses are constructed of wood, except some few which are of brick. It was ceded to Russia, by the Swedes, in 1721, and is seated on the N E point of the gulf of Finland, 110 mark, in North Jutland, with a bishop's see. It is the seat of the chief court of justice in the province. In 1726, a terrible fire burnt the cathedral, a church, the townhouse, and the bishop's palace; but they have all been rebuilt in a more magnificent style. It is seated on a lake, in a peninsula, 95 miles N of Sleswick, and 110 N W of Copenhagen. Lon. 9 50 E, lat. 56 20 N.

Wick, a town in Caithnesshire, with a harbour, seated on an inlet of the German Ocean. Lon. 3 2 W, lat. 58 30 N.

Wich-by-Duerstede, a town of the United Provinces, in Utrecht, with a strong castle, seated at the place where the Leek branches off from the Rhine, nine miles W of Rhenen, and 15 S E of Utrecht. Lon. 5 22 E, lat. 52 0 N.

Wickford, a post town in Washington county, Rhode Island; lying on the W side of Narraganset bay, 24 miles S of Providence, and nine W of Newport.

Wicklow, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 33 miles long and 20 broad; bounded on the N by Dublin, on the E by the Irish Sea, on the S by Wexford, on the W by Caterlough and Kildare, and on the N W by Kildare. It is indifferently fruitful, contains 54 parishes, and sends 10 members to parliament.

Wicklow, the capital of a county of the same name, in Ireland, seated on the Irish Sea, with a narrow harbour, at the mouth of the river Leitrim, over which stands a rock, instead of a castle, surrounded by a strong wall, 24 miles S of Dublin. Lon. 6 7 W, lat. 52 55 N.

Wickware, a town in Gloucestershire, governed by a mayor, with a market on Monday. It is 17 miles N E of Bristol, and 111 W of London. Lon. 2 16 W, lat. 51 26 N.

Widdin, a Greek archiepiscopal town of Turkey in Europe. This town has been long a subject of contention between the Turks and Austrians, and has several times been taken and retaken. It is now well known on account of being the capital of the government of the late Pacha Paswan Oglou, who has been in arms for several years of late, and has repeatedly discomfited the Turkish armies sent against him. In Wiedenbrück, a town of Germany, in the circle of Westphalia. Lon. 7 30 E, lat. 51 48 N.

Wielun, a town of Great Poland, in the palatinate of Siradia. It was rebuilt by the Swedes in 1636, but has been since rebuilt, and has a good castle. It is seated on a river which falls into the Warta, 20 miles S of Siradia. Lon. 18 55 E, lat. 51 12 N.

Wielitka, a village of Poland, lately included in the palatinate of Cracow, but now comprised in the Austrian kingdom of Lodomeria. It is celebrated for its salt mines, which lie eight miles S E of Cracow. They appear to be inexhaustible, as will easily be conceived from the following account of its dimensions. Its known breadth is 1115 feet; its length 6691 feet; and depth 743; and the best judges on the spot suppose, with the greatest appearance of probability, this solid body of salt to branch into various directions, the extent of which cannot be known; of that part which has been perforated, the depth is only calculated as far as they have hitherto dug: and who can ascertain how much farther it may descend. Here are several small chapels excavated in the salt, in which mass is said on certain days of the year; one of these chapels is above 30 feet long and 25 broad: the altar, the crucifix, the ornaments of the church, the statues of several saints, are all carved out of the salt. Many of the excavations or chambers, from whence the salt has been dug, are of an immense size; some are supported with timber, others by vast pillars of salt, which are left standing for that purpose: several of vast dimensions are without any support in the middle. I remarked (says Mr. Coxe) one of this latter sort in particular, which was certainly 80 feet in height, and so extremely long and broad, as almost to appear amid the subterraneous gloom without limits. The roofs of these vaults are not arched, but flat. The immense size of these chambers, with the spacious pas-

The immense size of bers, with the spacious passages or galleries, together with the chapels above-mentioned, and a few sheds built for the horses which are foddered below, probably gave rise to the exaggerated accounts of some travellers, that these mines contain several villages inhabited by colonies of miners who never see the light. It is certain that there is room sufficient for such purposes; but the fact is, that the miners have no dwellings under ground, none of them remaining below more than eight hours at a time, when they are relieved by others from above. In truth, these mines are of most stupendous extent and depth, and are sufficiently wonderful without the least exaggeration. We found them as dry as a room, without the least damp or moisture; observing only in our whole progress one small spring of water, which is impregnated with salt as it runs through the mine. These mines have been worked above 600 years. Before the partition of Poland, in 1772, they furnished a considerable part of the revenue of the king, who drew from them an average profit of about 97,000*l*.

Wigan, a borough in Lancashire, with a market on Monday and Friday. It is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. Here the strongest checks are made, and other articles of linen and cotton manufacture. That most elegant species of coal, called Cannel, is found in plenty and great perfection in the neighbourhood. The small stream the Douglas is made navigable hence to the Ribbles; and it is joined by a canal from Liverpool. Wigan is 30 miles S of Lancaster, and 196 N N W of London. Lon. 2 50 W, lat. 53 34 N.

Wight, an island on the coast of Hampshire, from which it is separated by a narrow channel. It is in length about thirteen miles, in breadth twenty one. It is nearly divided into two equal parts by the river Cowes, which, rising in the S angle, discharges itself at the N into the channel, opposite the mouth of Southampton-bay. The E and W points of the island are almost cut off from the body by arms of the sea. The S coast is edged with very steep cliffs of chalk and freestone, hollowed out into caverns in various parts.

The W side is fenced with ridges of rocks, of which the most remarkable are those called, from their sharp extremities, the Needles. Between the island and the main are various sand-banks, especially off the E part, where is the safe road of St. Helen's. Across the island from E to W runs a ridge of hills, forming a tract of fine downs, with a chalky or marly soil, which feed a great number of fine-fleeced sheep. Rabbits are also very plentiful here. To the N of this ridge the land is chiefly pasture; to the S of it is a rich arable country, producing great crops of corn. The variety of prospects which this island affords, its mild air, and the neat manner in which the fields are laid out, render it a very delightful spot. It is devoted almost solely to husbandry, and has no manufactory. It is one of the principal resources of the London market for unmaltd barley. Among its products are to be reckoned a pure white pipe clay, and a fine white crystalline sand; of the latter of which great quantities are exported for the use of the glass-works in various parts. Its principal town is the borough of Newport; it likewise contains the two small boroughs of Newton and Yarmouth.

Wigton, a town in the E riding of Yorkshire, with a market on Wednesday, seated at the source of the Skelster, 16 miles S E of York, and 192 N by W of London. Lon. 0 40 W, lat. 53 52 N.

Wigton, a town in Cumberland, with a market on Tuesday, seated among the moors, 12 miles S W of Carlisle, and 304 N N W of London. Lon. 3 4 W, lat. 54 39 N.

Wigton, a borough and seaport, the county-town of Wigtonshire. Here are several vestiges of antiquity, and to the N E is a great marsh, called the Moss of Cree. It is situate on a hill, which overlooks the bay of Wigton. Lon. 4 45 W, lat. 55 0 N.

Wigtonshire, a county in Scotland, comprehending the W part of Galloway, and the Regality of Glenluce, extends about 31 miles in length from E to W, and as much from N to S, is bounded on the N by Ayrshire, and on the W by the Irish Sea. This part of it stretches into the sea in form of a peninsula, indented on both sides by two inlets called Lochrian and the bay of Glenluce. Galloway is a hilly country, well watered with lakes and running streams, and having several commodious creeks and harbours, but is destitute of wood and fuel. The people employ themselves perpetually in fishing on the coast, as well as in the lakes and rivers; in which last they catch innumerable multitudes of eels, part of which they salt for exportation.—Those who do not employ themselves in farming, or in breeding of sheep, whose wool turns out to great advantage; or in raising black cattle, of which 50,000 are annually exported to England. They have likewise a small breed of horses peculiar to the county, and called Galloways; which are very strong, gentle, and fit for labour. The land that projects into the sea between the two bays of Lochrian and Glenluce, is called the Kennes of Galloway, and counted one of the most barren and rugged parts of Scotland. On the W coast is port Patrick, from whence the packet boat sails to Donaghadee, in Ireland; the channel in this place being not more than 20 miles over. From a neighbouring hill, one may see, in a fine day, Ireland to the S W, the coast of Cumberland and the Isle of Man to the S E, and to the N, the island of Illy and the Mall of Kintyre.

Wiltsch, a frontier town of Turkey in Europe, in Bosnia, seated on a lake formed by the river Unna, 40 miles S E of Carlstadt. Lon. 16 10 E, lat. 45 34 N.

Williamsburg, a post town, the capital of James City county, and formerly the metropolis of Virginia. It is situated on the east side of a small creek that runs into James river, in lat. 36° 16' N and long. 76° 48' W, and at the distance of 12 miles W from York, 32 E by S from Richmond, and 175 E by E from Washington. This ancient city was made the seat of colonial government in 1698, having been removed from James town, on account of a fire that consumed the public records with great part of the town, and continued to enjoy this privilege till the revolution. The streets are laid out with great regularity, and the public edifices exhibit the ruins of comparative grandeur, particularly the capitol and the college. In the former was erected a marble statue in honour of the virtuous lord Bountecourt, the patron of science and the colony, which is now miserably defaced by the gothic hands of negroes and others. The college called the college of William and Mary, which was endowed by the royal government, with a clear and certain revenue of 3000*l.* per annum, still remains to reproach the ancient dominion: though built to accommodate 100 pupils, it has seldom more than forty.

Williamsport, a post town in Lycoming county, Pennsylvania; standing on the N side of the W branch of Susquehanna, 65 miles S of Tyoga, 36 N by W of Northumberland, and 160 N W of Philadelphia.

Williamsport, a post town in Washington county, Maryland; situated on the E side of Potomack river, 6 miles S W of Hagerstown, 32 N W of Fredericktown, and 79 from Baltimore.

Williamston, a post town in Orange county, Vermont; situated between Washington and Northfield, 14 miles N of Randolph, about 45 N of Windsor, and about the same distance S E of Burlington, on lake Champlain.

Williamston, a post town in Berkshire, Massachusetts; 20 miles N of Pittsfield, and 13 S of Bennington, in Vermont; situated in the N W corner of the state of Vermont.

Williamston, a post town in Marin county, California; situated on the S side of the Sacramento river, about 45 S E of San Francisco.

Williamston, a post town in Lincoln county, North Carolina; situated on the S side of the French Broad river, about 1793, but was destroyed by a fire which took it in 1794. It was rebuilt by Bergon op. Lon. 4 30 E.

Williamston, a post town in the N end of the state of Georgia. It was destroyed by a fire which covered the town with sand shags.

Williamston, a post town in the canton of high mountains, about 10 miles N W of Williamsboro'.

of the state, containing 2036 inhabitants.

Williamston, a post town, the capital of Marion county, North Carolina; lying on the S side of Roanoke river, 25 miles W of Plymouth, 53 N W of Washington on Pamlico river, and about 45 S E of Halifax, with about 300 inhabitants.

Williamstadt, a strong seaport of Holland, built by William I. prince of Orange, in 1585. The river near which it stands, is called Butterliet, or Holland Diep, and is one of the bulwarks of the Dutch on the side of Brabant. The French laid siege to this place in 1793, but were obliged to raise the siege, after a gallant defence; but they took it in 1795. It is 15 miles N E of Bergen op Zoom, and 12 S W of Dort. Lon. 4° 30' E, lat. 51° 39' N.

Willis' Island, a rocky island at the N end of the island of Southern Georgia. It was discovered in 1775, and is covered with the nests of many thousand shags. Lon. 33° 29' W, lat. 31° 0' S.

Willisau, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Lucern, seated among high mountains, on the river Wiger, 25 miles N W of Lucern.

Willsborough, a post town in Essex county, New York; situated on the W side of lake Champlain, and commanding an extensive view of that water, and 9 miles N E of Elizabeth town. It supports a regular communication across the lake, with Burlington and Vergennes in Vermont; being 15 miles N W of the latter, and about 25 S W of the former, and 214 N of the city of New York.

Wilmanstrand, a town of Russia, in the government of Wiburg, famous for a battle fought in its vicinity, between 16,000 Russians, and 3,000 Swedes; wherein the latter were defeated. Lon. 27° 54' E, lat. 61° 20' N.

Wilmington, a post town in Windham county, Vermont; 15 miles W of Brattleboro', and 21 E of Bennington, at the foot of the Green Mountain, having about 1000 inhabitants.

Wilmington, the capital of New Hanover county, North Carolina; being a post town, and port of entry, situated on the E bank of Cape Fear river, about 30 miles from the sea, 97 miles S by W of Newbern, and about the same distance S by E of Fayetteville, in the lat. of 34° 10' N, and long. of 78° 10' W. This is one of the principal seaports in North Carolina. The annual exports amount to 150,000 dollars, and the inhabitants are 1689, two thirds being slaves.

Wilmington, a post town and port of entry in Newcastle county, being the largest town in Delaware State. It is seated on the N bank of Christiana creek, near its entrance into the Delaware, 28 miles S W of Philadelphia, 74 N E of Baltimore, and 117 from Washington. The town is incorporated, and governed by two burgeses, and six assistants, who are elected annually. It is regularly built; the houses are mostly of bricks, and contains about 3,000 souls. The principal foreign trade of the State passes thro' this port; the exports in 1802 amounting to 440,500 dollars, and those chiefly to domestic produce. The principal public edifice is a poor-house, and hospital, 120 feet wide by 40 feet deep, and three stories high, built in a considerable eminence and a very healthy situation. It lies in lat. 39° 43' N, and long. 75° 32' W.

Wilmington, a town of North Carolina, situated on the E side of the E branch of Cape Fear river, 34 miles N of Cape Fear, and 85 S W of Newbern.

Wilna, a commercial city of Lithuania, in a palatinate of the same name, with a bishop's see, a university, an ancient castle, and a palace. The houses are all built of wood. It was taken by the Russians in 1794; and is seated at the confluence of the Vilia and Wilna, 15 miles E of Troki, and 215 N E of Warsaw. Lon. 25° 39' E, lat. 51° 38' N.

Wiltshire, a county of England, so called from the town of Wilton, one of its capitals. It is 53 miles long, and 36 broad; bounded on the N. E. by Berkshire, on the E. by Berkshire and Hampshire, on the W. by Somersetshire, on the S. by Dorsetshire and Hampshire, and on the N. W. and N. by Gloucester. The land in this county is of various quality, but in general dry and elevated. The N. part, formerly over-run with forests, and at present sprinkled with woods, is hilly, but fertile; and affords pasture for cattle. The height of this tract is proved by the various rivers which have their sources in it. The heads of the Thames in Gloucestershire are very near the border of this county; and several of its tributary rills rise in the N. of Wiltshire. The chalk hills occupy by their various ridges a considerable part of the middle of this county, forming wide downs in the neighbourhood of Marlborough. Below the middle begins that extensive tract of open downs and heaths, great part of which bears the name of Salisbury plain, the most remarkable spot of the kind in England. Over these wilds, stretching beyond the reach of sight, wander vast flocks of sheep with their solitary shepherds, the sole tenants of the plain, except the bustard, the wheat-ear, and a few other lovers of the desert. Ruins of Roman, Saxon and Danish monuments are scattered through these districts; among which the famous Stonehenge rises distinguished to the view. The soil of this uncultivated waste is said to be naturally good, producing wild burdock, and fine grasses excellent for sheep. Its edges are fertilized by folding the flocks upon the ploughed land, and yield abundant crops of rye, barley, and wheat. To the south of the largest tract of plain is a rich well-inhabited country, watered by various streams between the rivers Willy and Nadder lies the Chicklade ridge of hills, among which is Chilmark, noted for its quarries. Beyond the Nadder, to the borders of Dorsetshire, the open plain reappears. The chief manufactures are the different branches of the clothing trade. The principal rivers are the Upper and Lower Avon, the Nadder, Willy, Bourne, and Kennet. This county lies in the diocese of Salisbury; contains 29 hundreds, one city, 24 market-towns, and 304 parishes; and sends 34 members to parliament. Salisbury is the capital.

Wimbleton, a village in Surry, on an elevated heath. Here is a park belonging to Earl Spencer, whence may be seen 19 parish churches, exclusive of those of London and Westminster. On Wimbleton Common, is a circular encampment, including seven acres: the trench very deep and perfect. Camden supposes it to have been the site of a battle in 568, between Ceaulin king of the West Saxons, and Ethelbert king of Kent, in which the latter was defeated. At Wimbleton are copper mills, a manufacture for printing calicoes, and another of japan ware.

Winborn, or Winborn Minster, a town in Dorsetshire, with a market on Friday. It is a pretty large well-inhabited place, has a handsome church, called the Minster, and had a monastery, in which were interred some W Saxon kings. It is seated between the Stour and Allen, six miles N of Poole, and 102 S W of London. Lon. 2 1 W, lat. 50 47 N.

Wincauton, a town in Somersetshire, with a market on Wednesday, seated on the side of a hill, 24 miles S of Bath, and 108 W by S of London. Lon. 2 18 W, lat. 51 1 N.

Winchcomb, a town in Gloucestershire, with a market on Saturday. It was formerly noted for its abbey, whose mitred abbot had a seat in parliament. It is seated in a deep bottom, 16 miles N E of Gloucester, and 93 W N W of London. Lon. 2 0 W, lat. 51 55 N.

Winchelsea, a town in Sussex, one of the cinque ports. It was built in the reign of Edward I. on the destruction of a more ancient town of the same name, with 18 churches, and distant about three miles. It was swallowed up by the sea, in a terrible tempest, and the new town being sacked by the French and Spaniards, and deserted by the sea, dwindled to a mean place. It

Winchester, a city of Hampshire, with two markets, on Wednesday and Sat- urday. It is pleasantly seated in a valley between hills, on the delightful river Itchen, and is about one mile and a half in circumference round the walls, through which there are four gates: however, there is some waste ground within the walls, and at present but five parish churches besides the cathed- ral, which is a large and beautiful structure, and in which are interred several Saxon kings and queens, and its altar piece is said to be the finest in England. The other remarkable build- ings are, the bishop's palace, the hall where the assizes are kept, and the college or school, which last is with- out the walls. King Charles II. ap- pointed Sir Christopher Wren to build a royal palace here, but he never lived to see it finished: nor has it been hith- erto according to the original plan. In the late wars it was fitted up for the reception of prisoners, but is now in- habited by a great number of the French emigrant clergy. Near the S end of the city is the hospital of St. Cross, founded by a bishop of this see, for a master, nine poor brethren, and four out-pensioners. All travellers, who call at this hospital, have a right to demand some bread and beer, which is always brought to them. Near the E gate of the city is St. John's hos- pital, in the hall of which the corpora- tion give their entertainments. The city is interspersed with a great many gardens which contribute to its health- iness and beauty. Winchester was of great note in the time of the Saxons, and here Egbert was crowned the first sole monarch of England. The city is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. It is seated in a valley on the river Itchen, 21 miles N W of Chichester, and 63 W by N of London. Lon. 1 21 W, lat. 51 5 N.

Winchester, a post town and the capital of Frederick county, Virginia, 17 miles W by N of Ashby's ferry on Shenan- doah river, 18 N of Strasburg, and 82 N W of Washington. This is one of the best towns in western Virginia, being a place of considerable rendezvous at the time of Braddock's defeat. It is now in a thriving state, and carries on a large inland trade. It is incorporated and contains about 2500 inhabitants.

Windaw, a town of the duchy of Courland, with a castle, and a harbour at the mouth of the Wetaw, in the Bal- tic, 70 miles N W of Mittaw, and 100 N of Memel. Lon. 22 5 E, lat. 57 20 N.

Windermere-water, or Windermere, the most extensive lake in England, lying between Westmorland and Lan- cashire. It extends 10 miles from N to S, but in no part broader than a mile; and exhibits a greater variety of fine landscapes than any lake in England. It is famous for its fine char, and abounds also with trout, perch, pike, and eel. It has a communication on the W with Esthwaite water; and its principal feeders are the rivers Rothay and Brat- bay. This lake is frequently intersect- ed by promontories, and spotted with islands. Among these, the Holme, or Great Island, an oblong tract of 30 acres crosses the lake in an oblique line, surrounded by a number of inferior isles, finely wooded. Not one bul- rush, or swampy reed, defiles the mar- gin of this lake.

Windsor, a post town in Hartford county, Connecticut, lying on the W side of Connecticut river, seven miles N of Hartford, and 22 S by W of Springfield, Massachusetts. It has 2773 inhabitants.

Windsor, a considerable borough in Berkshire. It is pleasantly seated on the banks of the Thames, on a beautiful eminence. It is celebrated for its magnificent castle, built originally by William the Conqueror, and enlarged by Henry I. It has been enlarged and repaired by several monarchs, and Charles II. restored the castle to its pristine splendour: he enlarged the windows, and made them regular; furnished the royal apartments with paintings; enlarged the terrace walk, made by queen Elizabeth on the N side of the castle; and carried another terrace round the E and S sides. His present majesty has also made very fine improvements in it. This castle is seated on a high hill, which rises by a gentle ascent. It is a place of great strength on account of its situation, as it stands on an eminence and affords a most delightful and extensive prospect over the country to a considerable distance. The royal foundations in this castle are; the order of the garter, instituted in 1349, consisting of the sovereign, and 25 knights companions, exclusive of the princes of the blood-royal; and the royal college of St. George, consisting of a dean, 12 canons, seven minor canons, and 18 poor knights; and the ceremony of installing the knights of the Garter is performed on St. George's day, with great pomp and magnificence; and St. George's Hall, which is paved with marble, is one of the finest rooms in Europe. The royal chapel at the E end of it, is also paved with marble and adorned with carved work, exceeding curious. St. George's chapel, in which the knights of the Garter are installed, is one of the most beautiful and stately Gothic buildings in the world; in the choir are the stalls for the 26 knights, with banners over them, and a throne for the sovereign. As the knights die, their banners are taken down, and their titles and coats of arms engraved on little copper plates and nailed to the stalls, from whence they are never removed. The apartments of this palace are adorned with curious paintings, and the rooms are large and lofty, in-somuch that they are hardly to be paralleled in Europe. Opposite the S E side of the castle, is a modern-built mansion, called the Queen's Lodge. Adjoining the Queen's Lodge is the Little Park. On the S side of the town is the Great Park, which is 14 miles in circumference. It has a noble road from the town, through a double plantation of trees, to the Ranger's Lodge. On the death of the last ranger, Henry Frederic duke of Cumberland, his majesty took the management of this park into his own hands; and the improvements made by his majesty, are very considerable with respect to agricultural utility, as well as rural beauty. Windsor is 17 miles E by N of Reading, and 22 W of London. Lon. 0 36 W, lat. 51 30 N.

Windsor Forest, a forest in the E part of Berkshire, 30 miles in circumference. Though the soil is generally barren and uncultivated, it has long been famous for its rural beauties, and for the pleasures of the chase which it has afforded to a long series of our monarchs. It was the theme of the juvenile muse of Pope, who was born within its precincts. Within the forest is contained the Great Park, covered with noble trees, and stocked with numerous herds of deer. It contains several town and villages, of which Oakingham, near the centre of the forest, is the principal. See Binfeld.

Woodchester, a village in Gloucestershire, where some antiquities have lately been discovered.

Woodstock, a borough in Oxfordshire, with a market on Tuesday. It has a manufactory of ornamental goods in polished steel, which employs a few hands; and another of gloves. It was formerly famous for its royal park, in the intricate recesses, of which king Henry II. concealed his mistress, the fair Rosamund. The spot is now no less celebrated for the magnificent seat of Blenheim, a gift of the British parliament to the great duke of Marlborough, on account of his signal victory over the French at Hochstet, or Blenheim in Germany. It is one of the noblest seats in Europe. One of the passages to it is over a bridge with one arch, 190 feet in diameter, resembling the Rialto at Venice. The gardens take up 100 acres of ground; and the offices which are very grand, have room enough to accommodate 300 people. The apartments of the palace are magnificently furnished, and the staircases, statues, paintings, and tapestry, surprisingly fine. Chaucer the poet, was born, lived, and died here. facture of elegant china ware. Here Cromwell, in 1651, obtained what he called his crowing victory over the Scotch army, which had marched into England to reinstate Charles II. who, after this defeat, underwent such fatigue and romantic hazards in escaping from his enemies. Worcester is seated on a gentle ascent, on the Severn, 36 miles N N E of Bristol, and 118 W N W of London. Lon. 2 0 W, lat. 52 9 N.

Worcestershire, a county of England, 30 miles long, and 20 broad; bounded on the N by Shropshire and Staffordshire, on the E by Warwickshire, on the W by Herefordshire, on the S E and S by Gloucestershire, being in circuit 124 miles, and contains 600,000 square acres. It is divided into five hundreds, and contains one city, 10 market towns, and 70,000 inhabitants. It is in the diocese of Worcester, and sends nine members to parliament. The air of Worcestershire is very healthy, and the soil in the vales and meadows very rich, producing corn and pasture, particularly the rich vale of Evesham, which is justly styled the granary of these parts. The hills have generally an easy ascent, except Malvern hill; and feed large flocks of sheep. This county had formerly two large forests, but the iron and salt works have in a manner destroyed them; and therefore these works are now chiefly carried on with coal, with which this county abounds. A number of river and rivulets water the fine meadows, and give them a richness that is easily perceived in the butter and cheese. Here is plenty of fruits of most sorts, especially pears, which are in many places found growing in the hedges, and on that account perry is here in great repute. The chief commodities are coals, corn, hops, cheese, cider, perry, and salt. Its chief manufactures are carpeting, china and earthen ware, woollens, and stockings. The principal rivers are the Severn, Teme or Tend, and Avon.

Worcester, the capital of Worcester county, Massachusetts; 46 miles W of Boston, 34 N by W of Providence, (Rhode Island) and 50 N E of Springfield, (Massachusetts). Yang-tcheon, a populous city of China, in the province of Kiang-nan. It is 45 miles S E of Nan-king.

Yang-tse-kiang, a great river of China, which rises in the province of Yunnan, and having crossed Hou-quang and Kiang-nan, enters the Eastern Ocean, opposite the isle of Tsong-ning, which is formed by the sand accumulated at its mouth. In the months of April and May a great number of excellent fish are caught in this river which are sent to court, covered with ice in barks kept for the purpose.

Yare, a river in Norfolk.

Yarmouth, a borough in Norfolk, with a market on Wednesday and Saturday. It is seated at the mouth of the Yare, and has long been known as one of the principal sea-ports in England; and though from the fluctuation of trade several newer ones have outstripped it in business, it still retains considerable consequence in its double capacity of a port and a fishing town. By means of its rivers it enjoys all the import and export trade of Norwich, and various places on that side of Norfolk and Suffolk. To them it conveys coal, timber, and foreign products; and by its means are exported their corn and malt in vast quantities, and their manufactured goods. Its harbour will not admit ships of large burden, but is extremely convenient for business, the vessels lying in the river along a very extensive and beautiful quay. The foreign trade of this port is chiefly to the Baltic, Holland, Portugal, and the Mediterranean. It also sends ships to the Greenland fishery. The home fishing is carried on at two seasons: that for mackerel in May and June, and that for herring in October and November. The latter is the most considerable; and, besides the boats belonging to the town, many cobsles from the Yorkshire coast, hired for the purpose, are employed in it. Yarmouth is much frequented in the season as a place for sea-bathing. It is governed by a mayor, and sends two members to parliament. The market place is very spacious; but the streets in general are very narrow, and just wide enough for their little carriages to pass through. These carriages are a kind of sledge, drawn by one horse, and calculated intirely for these narrow streets. Here are two churches; that of St. Nicholas has a lofty steeple, which serves as a seamark, and which ever way it is viewed, it appears crooked. On the mouth of the harbour is a bar, which prevents the entry of ships of large burden; and the many sandbanks off the coast, at a distance, form the Yarmouth Roads, so noted for frequent shipwrecks. Yarmouth is 27 miles E of Norwich, and 112 N E of London. Lon. 1 53 E, lat. 52 45 N.

Yarmouth, a borough in Hampshire, on the W coast of the Isle of Wight, with a strong castle. It sends two members to parliament, and is seated on a creek, eight miles W of Newport, and 123 S W of London. Lon. 1 28 W, lat. 50 40 N.

Yarmouth, a post town in Barnstable county, Massachusetts; situated five miles E by N of Barnstable, and 76 S E of Boston, with 1727 inhabitants.

Yellow River, or Hoang-Ho, a large river of Asia, which, after a course of nearly 600 leagues across Tartary and China, enters the Eastern Sea, to the N of the mouth of the Yan-tse-kiang.
 It is very broad and rapid, but so shallow, that it is scarcely navigable. It is called the Yellow River, because the clay and sand which it washes down, especially in time of rain, makes its water appear of a yellow colour.

Yen-ping-fou, a city of China, in the province of Fokien. It has in its district seven cities of the third class; it rises in the form of an amphitheatre, upon the brow of a mountain which is washed by the river Min-ho; it is fortified by inaccessible mountains, which cover it on every side, and all the barks of the province must pass by the foot of its walls, to go to their different places of destination. It is 275 miles S of Nan-King.

Yen-scheou-fou, a city of China, in the province of Chang-tong. The jurisdiction of this city is very extensive, containing four cities of the second and 23 of the third class; and it is seated between two rivers, 275 miles S E of Peking.

Yen-tching, a city of China, in the province of Chang-tong, and jurisdiction of Tsi-nan-fou, where a kind of glass is made, so delicate and brittle, that it cracks when exposed to the smallest injuri s of the air.

Yeovil, or Yeol, a corporate town in Somersetshire, with a market on Friday. Here is a manufacture of cloth, but the principal one is of gloves. It is seated on the Ivel, 20 miles S of Wells, and 123 W by S of London. Lon. 2 37

Yesh, a town of Persia, in Irac Agem, on the road from Keriman to Ispahan. It has a silk manufacture; and here are made the finest carpets in the world. It is 200 miles E S E of Ispahan. Lon. 56 Yonkers, a post town in West Chester county, New York, 11 miles N of the city of New York, and 253 from Washington.

Yonne, a department of France, containing part of the late province of Burgundy. It is so called from a river that rises in the department of Nievre, and passing by Chateau Chinnon, Clameci, Auxerre, Joigny, and Sens, falls into the Seine. Auxerre is the capital.

Yoriman, a province of Guiana, about 150 miles in length, on the river Amazon.

York, a city, the capital of Yorkshire, with an archbishop's see, and a market on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.
 It is the Eboracum of the Romans, and many of their coffins, urns, coins, &c. have been found here. It has always been considered as the capital of the North, and in point of rank, as the second city in the kingdom: and, although it is now surpassed in wealth and po-pularness by many of the more modern trading towns, it still supports a considerable degree of consequence, and is the residence of many genteel families.
 The cathedral of St. Peter, generally called the minster, is reckoned the most elegant and magnificent Gothic structure in the kingdom, Lincoln perhaps excepted. From its top is seen a vast extent of country, particularly the open Wolds to the E, stretching almost to the sea. Besides this cathedral, York contains 17 churches in use. It is divided by the Ouse into two parts, which are united by a stone bridge of five arches, and the river is navigable to this city for vessels of 70 tons burden, although it is 60 miles from the sea. Its castle built by William the Conqueror, is now a county prison for debtors and felons. This city, which is a liberty independent of either of the ridings, has jurisdiction over 36 villages and hamlets W of the Ouse, called the Liberty of Ainsty. It is divided into four wards, has 28 parishes, and is walled round. There was a great trade here formerly; but it has decayed since the reformation, and the abolition of the court of the president of the north. The plenty and cheapness of provisions here brings abundance of strangers hither for the conveniency of boarding; and the remains that are still to be seen here, of the ingenuity and grandeur of the old Romans, besides the ruins of abbeys, castles, and churches, of a later date, attract and detain every traveller who is inquisitive after antiquities or curiosities. It is a dukedom belonging to the royal family of England. The Guildhall, built in 1446, is a grand structure, supported by two rows of oak pillars, each pillar a single tree. The corporation built a mansion house, in 1728, for the lord mayor; and here is also a theatre royal, and an asylum for lunatics. York is 70 miles S by E of Durham, and 198 N by W of London. Lon. 1 1 W, lat. 53 59 N.

Y O R

Yorkshire, a county of England, double in size to any of the other; bounded on the N by Dorham and Westmoreland; on the E by the German Ocean; on the W by Westmoreland and Lancashire; and on the S by the counties of Chester, Derby, Nottingham, and Lincoln. Its most remarkable natural inland boundaries are, the river Tees to the N, the ridge of hills called the English Appennines to the W, and the arm of the sea named the Humber to the S W. The length of this county is above eighty miles, and its breadth an hundred. From its great extent it has been distributed into three main divisions, called Ridings. Of these the N Riding comprehends the whole northern part from side to side, descending to the capital in the centre: the E Riding takes the south eastern part, from the river Ouse to the sea; and the W Riding comprises all the rest of the county, which is not only the western, but most of the southern part. Yorkshire, in this wide compass, contains an abstract of the whole kingdom with respect to soil, produce, and face of country. Towards the N W and W it possesses all the grandeur and romantic variety of the mountainous regions. The middle part, from N to S, is equal in fertility to most tracts of land in England. Part of the S and S E is marshy, and affords excellent pasturage for cattle. Much flax is grown in parts of this district. The sea coast except the southern part of it, is in general naked and dreary, consisting of wide extended moors and barren hills. This county is extremely well watered, and its rivers are disposed in a singularly beautiful manner. They rise, in general, in the mountainous skirts of the county, from the N E round to the S W; and, uniting as they proceed towards its centre, like the veins of a spreading leaf, at length terminate in one main trunk, which issues in the Humber. Of these the principal, and that which alone preserves its name to the Humber, is the northern Ouse. From the mouth of the Tees the Yorkshire coast commences high and rude, interspersed with many fishing villages, singularly placed like nests upon the ledges of the rocks. No coast in England abounds more in fish of various kinds than this; and it breeds an industrious and hardy race of fishermen, who pursue their prey to great distances and supply the inland country for a large extent. The district of Cleveland, inland from this part of the coast, is a fertile, though mountainous country, and breeds great numbers of cattle. The worst parts breed lean cattle; but, on the sides of the hills, in the vallies and plains, it produces good corn, and rich pastures for large cattle. Richmondshire, on the N W of this riding, was formerly a county of itself: here many lead mines are worked to great advantage. In Yorkshire likewise are the districts of Cleveland, Holderness, and Craven. In this last district are two of the highest hills in England; the one named Warrside, the other Ingleborough. The principal rivers are the Ouse, Don, Derwent, Calder, Aire, Wharfe, Nidd, Ure, and Hull, all which terminate in the Humber, which falls into the German Ocean, between Yorkshire and Lincolnshire.

York, the capital of York county, Pennsylvania, 12 miles W of Columbia on the Susquehanna, 23 from Lancaster, 86 from Philadelphia, and 50 N of Baltimore. It stands on the E side of Codorus creek. It is incorporated York, the capital of York county, Maine; situated on York river, near the ocean, ten miles N E of Ports- mouth, 16 S of Wells, and 22 of Ken- nebunk; in lat. 43 12 N, and lon. 70 39 W. The inhabitants who are estimat- ed at 2776 are principally engaged in the fisheries.

York, New, one of the United States of America, bounded on the S E by the Atlantic Ocean; On the E by Con- necticut, Massachusetts, and Ver- mont; on the N by the 45° of lat. which divides it from Canada; on the N W by the river St. Lawrence, and the lakes Ontario and Erie; and on the S W and S by Pennsylvania and New Jersey. It is 350 miles long and 300 broad, and is divided into 13 counties, containing 44,000 square miles. New York, in general, is intersected by ridges of mountains running in a N E and S W direction. Beyond the Alle- gany mountains, however, the coun- try is quite level, of a fine rich soil, covered in its natural state, with various kinds of trees. East of the Alle- gany mountains the country is broken into hills with rich intervening vallies. The hills are clothed thick with timber, and when cleared afford fine pasture. The vallies when cultivated, produce, wheat, hemp, Indian corn, &c. The hills are covered in various parts of the State, with several kinds of oak, such as white, red, yellow, black and chestnut oak. Besides these is the sumach, which bears clusters of red berries; the In- dians chew the leaves instead of tobac- co; the berries are used in dyes. Of the commodities produced from cul- ture wheat is the staple, of which im- mense are raised, and exported. In- dian corn and peas are likewise raised for exportation; and rye, oats, barley, &c. for home consumption. In some parts of the state large dairies are kept, which furnish for the market butter and cheese. The best lands in this State, which lie along the Mo- hawk's river, and W of the Allegany mountains, are yet in a state of nature, or are just beginning to be settled. This state abounds with several fine rivers and lakes.
York River, a river of the United States of North America, in Virginia, formed by the confluence of the Pa- munky and Mattapony, 30 miles above

York Town, below which place it en- ters Chesapeake Bay.
York-town, the capital of York county, Virginia; a port town and post of en- try. It lies on the S side of York river, 12 miles E of Williamsburg, 65 E by S of Richmond, and 29 N W of Norfolk, in lat. 37° 22' N, and lon 76° 32' W. The inhabitants are about 700. This town is rendered famous by the surren- der of the British army under Lord Cornwallis, Oct. 19th 1781.
Yu-tcheou-fou, a commercial city of China, in the province of Hon-quang, which may be reckoned one of the wealthiest cities in China. Its district contains one city of the second, and seven of the third class; and it is seat- ed on the Yang-tse-kiang, 275 miles S W of Nan-king.
Youghall, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cork, and province of Mun- ster. It is surrounded by walls, has a very commodious harbour, with a well defended quay, and sends two mem- bers to parliament. It has a manufac- ture of earthen ware, and is seated on the side of a hill, at the mouth of the river Blackwater, 28 miles E by N of Cork. Lon 47 5 W, lat. 51 59 N.
Youngstown, a post town in Trumbull county, Ohio; situated on a branch of Big Beaver river, eight miles N E of Canfield, and about 90 N by W of Pitts- burg. The inhabitants are about 500.
Ypres, a large city of Flanders, with a bishop's see. It has a considerable manufacture of cloth and serges; and every year in lent there is a well fre- quented fair. It was one of the barrier towns belonging to the Dutch, till 1781, when they were obliged by the emperor to withdraw their garrison. The French took this town in 1794. It is seated on the Yperlec, 12 miles W of Courtray, 15 N W of Lisle, and 139 N of Paris. Lon. 2 48 E, lat. 50 51 N.
Zandvick, a small but strong town of Dutch Flanders, in the isle of Calsand, seated on a branch of the river Scheld, called Blie, eight miles E of Sluys, and 18 N W of Ghent. Lon. 3 38 E, lat. 51 20 N.

Yumeto, one of the Bahama islands, in the W Indies, to the N of the isle of Yuma, lying under the tropic of Cancer. It is 37 miles in length.

Yun, the largest canal in China, called also The Imperial Canal. This celebrated canal which extends from Canton to Pekin, forms a communication between the N and S provinces. In the course of its navigation a great number of locks are found, which the want of water sufficient to carry large barks has rendered necessary. The obstacles which nature opposed to the execution of this magnificent work, the strong and long dikes by which it is contained, its banks decorated and often lined with cut stone, the ingenious mechanism of its locks, all render it an object of admiration to the European traveller.

Zahara, or the Desert, a vast country of Africa, bounded on the N by Barbary, on the E by Fezzan and Cashna, on the S by Tombuctoo, and on the W by the Atlantic Ocean. The air is very hot, but wholesome to the natives. It is a mere desert, as the name imports, and so parched for want of water, that the caravans from Morocco and Negroland are obliged to carry both water and provisions, the province producing hardly any thing for the support of life. The inhabitants are wild and ignorant. They have a number of petty princes; and the Mahometan religion is professed throughout the country.

Zahna, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony. Lon. 12 40 E, lat. 51 53 N.

Zanfara, a kingdom of Negroland, to the W of the kingdom of Zegzeg. The inhabitants are tall in stature, of a very black complexion, with broad faces, and savage dispositions. It is very little known to Europeans.

Zanguebar, a country on the E coast of Africa, between 3° N and 18° S lat. It includes several petty kingdoms, in which the Portuguese have settlements. The inhabitants except those converted by the Portuguese, are either Mahometans or pagans, the latter much the more numerous. The principal territories are Monbaza, Lanio, Melinda, Quiola, Mosambique, and Sofala. The Portuguese trade for slaves, ivory, gold, ostrich feathers, wax, and drugs. The productions are much the same as in other parts of Africa, between the tropics.

Zante, an island of the Mediterranean, near the coast of the Morca, 17 miles S E of the island of Cephalonia. It is 24 miles long and 12 broad, and very fertile. Its principal riches consist in currants, which are uncultivated in a large plain, under the shelter of mountains, which gives the sun greater power to bring them to maturity. Here are also the finest peaches, in the world, each of which weighs eight or ten ounces; also excellent figs and oil. In short, it would be a perfect paradise if wood were not so dear, though this island was formerly full of forests. The natives speak both Greek and Italian, though there are very few Roman catholics among them; but they have a bishop as well as the Greeks. This place has no fortifications, but there is a fortress upon an eminence planted with cannon. In one part of this island is a place which shakes when trod upon, like aquagmire; and a spring which throws out a great deal of bitumen, especially at the time of an earthquake. It serves instead of pitch to pay the bottoms of the ships, and about 100 barrels in a year are used for this purpose. This island belongs to the Venetians; who have constantly a governor residing in the fortress. There are about 50 villages, but no other large town than Zante, which is seated on the E side of the island, and has a good harbour. It contains near 20,000 inhabitants; and the houses are low, on account of the frequent earthquakes. The English and Dutch have each a factory and consulate here. Lon. 21 3 E, lat. 37 53 N.

Zanzibar, an island of Africa, on the coast of Zanguebar, between the islands of Pemba and Monsia, with the title of a kingdom tributary to Portugal. It abounds in sugar canes and citrons. The inhabitants are Mahometans. Lon. 38 25 E, lat. 6 0 S.

Zara, a strong city of Venetian Dalmatia, capital of a county of the same name, with an archbishop's see, a citadel, and a harbour. It was formerly much more considerable, the circumference of the walls being now but two miles, and the inhabitants not above 6000. Near the church, which the Greeks call St. Heliia, are two fluted columns of the Corinthian order, supposed to have been part of the temple of Juno. There are fine paintings in the churches, done by the best masters; and they pretend to have the body of St. Simeon, brought from Judea, and kept in a shpine with a crystal before it. Zara is seated on a small peninsula, in the gulf of Venice, 80 miles S W of Jaieza, and 150 S E of Venice. Lon. 16 6 E, lat. 44 30 N.

Zealand, an island of Denmark, almost of a round form, 700 miles in circumference, and the largest of the isles belonging to the king of Denmark. It lies at the entrance of the Baltic, lying the Schaggerach, S of the N, the Sound on the E, the Baltic on the S, and the Great Belt on the W. It is exceedingly fertile; producing grain of all sorts, and in great plenty, and abounding with excellent pasture. It is particularly famous for its breed of horses. A fourth part of this island consists of a forest, in which there is plenty of game; there are also a great many deer and wild boars, which are reserved for the king's own hunting. Copenhagen is not only the capital of this island, but of the whole kingdom.

Zealand, one of the seven United Provinces of the Netherlands, bounded on the N by the isles of Holland, on the E by Dutch Brabant, on the S by Dutch Flanders; and on the W and N.W. by the German Ocean. It is composed of several islands, the principal of which are Walcheren, Schowen, N and S Beveland, Tolen, Duyvuland, and Wolfeland. The inhabitants are at a great expence to defend themselves from the encroachments of the sea, and in keeping up their dikes. The river Scheeld forms the most of these islands; and the soil of them is fruitful, but the air is unhealthy, especially for strangers. The inhabitants are excellent seamen. The principal towns are Middleburg and Flushing.

, an island in the Ba cific Ocean, discovered by Tasman, in 1642. He traversed the E coast from lat. 34 to 43° S, and entered a strait: but being attacked by the natives, soon after he came to an anchor, in the place to which he gave the name of Murderers Bay, he did not go on shore. He called the country Staten Land, in honour of the States General, though it has been generally distinguished in our maps and charts by the name of New Zealand. From the time of Tasman, the whole country, except that part of the coast which was seen by him, remained altogether unknown, and was by many supposed to make part of a southern continent, till the year 1770, when it was circumnavigated by Captain Cook, who found it to consist of two large islands, separated by a strait four or five leagues broad, to which he gave his own name. On the W side of this strait, in lat. 41 S, Queen Charlotte's Sound is situated, which was made a principal place of rendezvous in his subsequent voyages. These islands lie between the lat. 34 and 48 S, and between the lon. of 166 and 180 E. The winters are milder than in England, and the summers not hotter, though more equally warm. Among the vegetable productions, the trees claim a principal place. There are forests of vast extent, full of the straightest and largest timber, fit for building of any kind. The trees are chiefly of two sorts; one as large as an oak, distinguished by a scarlet flower, the wood of which is hard and heavy; another remarkably tall and straight, of which probably very fine masts might be made. Captain Cook, in 1773, planted several spots of ground with European garden seeds; and in 1777, in several of these spots, although totally neglected and over-run with weeds, were found cabbages, onions, leeks, purslain, radishes, mustard, &c. and a few fine potatoes, greatly improved by change of soil. In other places every thing had been rooted out, to make room for temporary villages. The only quadrupeds are dogs and rats; the former are domestic, and for food; and the latter, though not numerous, seem also to be eaten. The birds, like the vegetable productions, are almost entirely peculiar to the country; and though it is difficult to follow them in the woods, on account of the under-wood, and climbing plants, yet a person, by remaining in one place, may shoot as many in a day, as will serve for six or eight others. Captain Cook introduced European poultry, and on his last visit had the satisfaction to find them increased, both in a wild and domestic state, beyond all danger of being ever exterminated. Their creeks swarm with fish, which are not only wholesome, but equally delicious with those of Europe. The rocks are furnished with great quantities of excellent muscles, one sort of which measures above a foot in length, and with great variety of other shell fish. The men are stout, well made, and fleshy; but none of them corpulent, like the lazy and luxuriant inhabitants of Otaheite and the Society isles; and they are also exceedingly vigorous and active. The women, in general, are smaller and not so tall as the men; but possessing few peculiar graces of form or person, are chiefly distinguished by the softness of their voices. Their colour in general is brown, but in few deeper than that of the Spaniard who has been exposed to the sun, and in many not so deep; and both sexes have good features. Their dress is very uncouth, and they mark their bodies in a manner similar to the inhabitants of Otaheite, and which is called tattooing. Their principal weapons are lances, darts, and a kind of battle-axes; and they have generally shown themselves very hostile to the Europeans who have visited them. The people are cannibals; and for such continual wars, and the inhuman banquet that is the consequence of victory, among a people in other respects mild and gentle, perhaps no better reason can be assigned, than what at first originated in necessity, has been perpetuated by habit, and exasperated by revenge.

Zell, a town of Germany in the circle of Suabia, 70 miles S of Ulm.

Zeigra, a town of Turkey in Europe in Janna; with a castle and an archbishop's see. It is a small place, and seated on a hill, by the gulf of the same name, near the river Eaylada, 50 miles S E of Larissa.

Zeltz, a town of Upper Saxony, in the dutchy of Naumburg, with a castle, and a well frequented college. It is seated on the Ester, 25 miles S-W of Leipsick, and 45 E of Erfurt. Lon. 12 8 E, lat. 50 59 N.

Zell, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, capital of a dutchy of the same name, which devolved to the house of Hanover by marriage. It is surrounded by ditches and ramparts, on which are planted chesnut and lime trees. It is a small town, without trade or manufactures, but the high courts of appeal for all the territories of the electoral house of Brunswick-Lunenburg are held here, and the inhabitants derive their principal means of subsistence from this circumstance. The castle, a stately building, surrounded by a moat, was formerly the residence of the dukes of Zell; and was repaired by George III. king of Great Britain, for the residence of his unfortunate sister the queen of Denmark, who died here. Zell is seated on the Aller, 31 miles N W of Brunswick, and 47 S by W of Lunenburg. Lon. 10 12 E, lat. 52 49 N.

Zerbat, a town of Germany in the circle of Upper Saxony, capital of a district of that name, in the principality of Anhalt, with a castle, where the princes commonly reside. The inhabitants are partly Lutherans and partly Calvinists, and are famous for brewing good beer. It is 27 miles N W of Wittemberg. Lon. 12 13 E, lat. 52 0 N.

Zeriga, a town of Persia, in Irac-Arabia, seated in a narrow plain, between mountains. It has produced several very famous Arabian Authors.

Zia, an island of the Archipelago, one of the Cyclades, to the S W of Negropont. It is 15 miles long and eight broad, and well cultivated. It abounds in barley, wine, and silk; also a fine sort of oak, whose fruit, called Villam, is the best trading commodity of the island, and of which they sell vast quantities in a year, it being used by dyers and tanners. The principal town is of the same name, and seated on an eminence, 30 miles from the harbour, at the farther end of a disagreeable valley. It resembles an amphitheatre, and contains about 2500 houses, all flat at the top. It belongs to the Turks, but most of the inhabitants are Greeks, and they have a bishop who resides at Zia.

Zitaw, a fortified town of Germany, in Lusatia, subject to the elector of Saxony. It is a handsome place and surrounded with a wall, and has ditches and bastions. Besides the suburbs and handsome gardens that surround it on all sides, there are a number of fine villages that depend thereon. The principal business of the inhabitants is brewing beer; but there are above 100 clothiers, and in the neighbouring villages above 1000 weavers. Its merchants trade with those of Prague and Leipsic, and extend their commerce as far as Holland. The cathedral has three organs, and two high steeples. Near it is a college, where the languages, drawing, and other arts, are taught gratis. Joining to the cloisters is a library, the finest in all Lusatia; and at a small distance from it, is the orphan house. It was pillaged by the Austrians in 1737. It is seated on the Neisle, 17 miles S. W. of Gorlitz, and 25 S. E. of Dresden. Lon. 15° 5' E, lat. 50° 59' N.

Zuaim, a strong town of Germany, in Moravia, with a castle, in which are a great many pagan antiquities. It is seated on the river Teya, 24 miles S. W. of Brinn, and 32 N. of Vienna. Lon. 16° 40' E, lat. 48° 38' N.

Zoara, a fortified town on the coast of Barbary, with a good harbour, 60 miles W. of Tripoli. Lon. 11° 55' E, lat. 32° 45' N.

Zebütz, a town of Germany in the circle of Upper Saxony; the chief subsistence of the inhabitants is working the serpent stone, which is found in the neighbourhood, into tea and coffee cups, &c. A red species of this stone is also found here, which is considered as the finest, and therefore claimed by the sovereign as his property. It is 17 miles S. of Freyburg.

Zuffingen, a town of Switzerland, in the canton of Bern, with an elegant church, and a public library, containing several curious manuscripts. It is seated near a large forest, which contains the best pine-trees, in all Switzerland, three miles from Arburg. Lon. 7° 6' E, lat. 47° 5' N.

Zolnock, a town in Upper Hungary, capital of a county of the same. It was taken by the Turks in 1554, and retaken in 1685. It is seated on the Teyesse, where the Sagelia falls into it, 62 miles N. E. of Colocz, and 62 E. of Buda. Lon. 20° 50' E, lat. 47° 10' N.

Zorndorf, a village of Germany, in the new marche of Brandenburg, famous for a battle between the king of Prussia, and the Russians.

Zout Pan, a curious salt lake in the country of the Hottentots, situated a few miles N. of Point Padron. It is a plain, much above the level of the sea, and between three and four miles in circumference. At some seasons of the year, it is formed into an entire mass of fine white salt, which has a very striking appearance. It was visited in December 1778, by lieutenant Paterson, who found that a short time before his arrival, the middle part of it had been dissolved by the heavy rains, but that round the sides was a hard crust of salt exactly resembling ice.

Zuelia, a town of Africa, in Fezzan, situated in a district of remarkable fertility, in which the remnants of ancient buildings, the number and size of the cisterns, and the construction of the vaulted caves, intended perhaps as repositories of corn, exhibit such vestiges of ancient splendour, as will probably attract and highly reward the attention of future travellers. It is 140 miles E. of Moorook. Lon. 16° 34' E, lat. 27° 59' N.

Zug, a small canton of Switzerland, bounded on the E and N by that of Zurich, on the W by that of Lucern and the free Provinces, and on the S by that of Schweitz. It is rich in pasturage, has plenty of various kinds of stone fruit, as well as walnuts and chestnuts; and its wine is of a very acid flavour. The inhabitants are Roman catholics, and the government is democratic. The inhabitants of this canton, and especially of the town of Zug, have somewhat more influence, and enjoy a greater share in the administration of affairs, than those of the capital burghs in the five other democratic cantons.

Zuza, capital of a territory of the same name. It is seated on the Zibit, 150 miles N. W. of Aden.

Ziget, a strong town of Hungary. It has been often taken and retaken by the Turks and Imperialists. Lon. 17° 42' E, lat. 46° 21' N.

Zuider-Zee, a great bay of the German Ocean, which extends from S to N in the United Provinces, between Friesland, Overijssel, Guelderland, and Holland.

Zulpha, a town of Persia, almost close to Ispahan, to which it is a sort of suburb, and separated from it by the river Sanderou. It is peopled by a colony of Armenians, who were brought into Persia by Shah Abbas. It is an archbishop's see, and contains several churches and monasteries.

Zulpich, or Zulch, a town of Germany, in the dutchy of Juliers, belonging to the archbishop of Cologne. It is seated on the Nassel, 10 miles S of Juliers, and 10 W of Bonn. Lon. 6 40 E, lat. 50 46 N.

Zurich, a canton of Switzerland, 50 miles long and 30 broad; bounded on the N by the Rhine, which separates it from the canton of Schaffhausen on the S by that of Schweitz, on the E by Thurgaw and the county of Tocken-burg, and on the W by the canton of Zug and the Free Provinces. Zurich was formerly an imperial city, and obtained from the emperor Fredrick II. very considerable privileges; which were acknowledged and augmented by several of his successors. The civil war between the magistrates and the people, in 1735, was very near reducing the city to ruins; but the former being banished, the citizens, in 1337, established a new form of government, which was confirmed by the emperor Louis of Bavaria. The exiles, after several fruitless attempts, were at length re-admitted; but it being discovered that they had engaged in a conspiracy against the citizens, they were all of them put to death. In consequence of this transaction, the nobles in the neighbourhood took up arms against the town: the latter, after having applied ineffectually for assistance to the emperor Charles IV. entered into an alliance with the four cantons, Lucern, Uri, Schweitz, and Underwalden, and was admitted a member of their confederacy. This event happened in the year 1351. The four cantons yielded the pre-eminence to Zurich: which privilege it enjoys at present; being the first canton in rank, and the most considerable in extent both of territory and power next to Berne. This canton, in 1784, contained 174,572 souls, including 10,500 in the capital. It abounds in wine and excellent pasture; but as there is not a sufficient supply of corn, for interior consumption, the deficiency is chiefly supplied from Suabia. The sovereign power resides exclusively in the burgesses of the town, consisting of about 2000, which are divided into 13 tribes. The legislative authority is vested by the burghers in the sovereign council of 206 members drawn from the 13 tribes. This council comprises the Senate, or Little council (composed of 50 members, including the two burgomasters) which has a jurisdiction in all civil and criminal causes. The burghers, moreover, enjoy the sole right of commerce; all strangers, and even subjects, being excluded from purchasing wrought manufactures in any part of the canton.

Zurich, a considerable city of Switzerland, capital of a canton of the same name. It stands at the N end of lake Zurich, and occupies both sides of the rapid and transparent Limmat, which issues from that lake, and divides the town into two unequal parts, which communicate by three bridges. It was formerly an imperial city, and is one of the best built in this country, but the streets are narrow, and the houses high. The cathedral was founded by Charlemagne, and is adorned with a statue of that emperor. Zurich was the first town in Switzerland that separated from the church of Rome, being converted by the arguments of Zuinglius. The two divisions of Zurich are called the Old Town and the Suburbs. The former is surrounded by the same battlements and towers that existed in the 13th century; the latter are strengthened by fortifications in the modern style. The arsenal is well supplied with cannon and ammunition, and contains musquets for 30,000 men. Here are several manufactures; particularly muslins, cottons, lincens, and silk handles IV. entered into an alliance with the four cantons, Lucerne, Uri, Schwyz, and Unterwalden, and elected a member of their confederation. This event happened in the year 1351. The four cantons yielded precedence to Zurich: which still enjoys at present; being the most numerous in rank, and the most considerable in extent both of territory and population. This canton, in the year 1745, contained 174,572 souls, including the capital. It abounds in excellent pasture; but as it does not produce a sufficient supply of corn for its own consumption, the deficiency is supplied from Swabia. The legislative authority is vested in the burghers in the sovereign council, which consists of 206 members drawn from the burghers. This council comprises the Great Council (composed of 100 members, including the two consuls) which has a jurisdiction over all civil and criminal causes. The consuls, moreover, enjoy the sole right of executing all strangers, and even foreigners, being excluded from purchasing manufactures in any part of the canton.

Zurich is a considerable city of Switzerland, and the capital of a canton of the same name. It stands at the N end of lake Lemano, and occupies both sides of the transparent Limmat, which flows from that lake, and divides the canton into two unequal parts, which communicate by three bridges. It was formerly an imperial city, and is one of the most beautiful in this country, but the houses are narrow, and the houses are built in a very irregular manner. The cathedral was founded by St. Gallus, and is adorned with a fine organ. Zurich was the scene of the separation of Switzerland that separated the church of Rome, being contrary to the arguments of Zuinglius. The two divisions of Zurich are called the Town and the Suburbs. The town is surrounded by the same battlements and towers that existed in the 13th century; the latter are strengthened by fortifications in the modern manner. The arsenal is well supplied with cannon and ammunition, and contains muskets for 30,000 men. Here are several manufactures; particularly of cottons, linens, and silk handkerchiefs. Zurich is 35 miles S W of Constance, 40 S E of Basle, and 53 N E of Bern. Lon. 8 30 E, lat. 47 20 N.

Zuric, a lake of Switzerland, near 10 leagues in length, and one in breadth. In the vicinity of Zuric, the edges of the lake are skirted with a continued range of vallies, which being intermixed among vineyards and pasture grounds, produce a most pleasing effect. The adjacent country is finely cultivated and well peopled; and the southern part of the lake appears, at some little distance, bounded with the high stupendous mountains of Schweiz and Glarus: the scenery all together is picturesque, lively, and diversified. The river Limmat runs through the whole length of this lake to the city of Zurich.

Zurita, a town of Spain, in Old Castile, with a castle, seated on the Tago, very near Toledo. Lon. 3 17 W, lat. 39 50 N.

Zurzach, a town of Switzerland, in the county of Baden, seated on the Rhine.

Zurphen, a strong and considerable town of Dutch Guelderland, capital of a county of the same name. It was taken in 1673, by the French, who restored it in 1674. It is seated at the confluence of the Berkel and Yssel, nine miles S by E of Derventer, and 55 E by S of Amsterdam. Lon. 6 0 E, lat. 52 10 N.

Zuyst, a village of the United Provinces, five miles from Utrecht. The Moravian brethren are employed here in various kinds of manufacture, and their workmanship far exceeds that of any other part of Holland.

Zwickau, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, formerly imperial, but now subject to the elector of Saxony. The place where the inhabitants are buried is in Voigtland; and therefore it is commonly said, that they are Misianians while alive, but Voigtlanders after they are dead. Zwickau is seated on the Muldaw, 15 miles S of Altenburg, and 20 N E of Plawen. Lon. 12 26 E, lat. 50 45 N.

Zwingenberg, a town of Germany, in the landgrate of Hesse Darmstadt, eight miles S of Darmstadt, and 12 N of Worms.

Zwoll, a town of the United Provinces, in Overijssel, and in the district of Zailant. It is defended by some fortifications; and the canal, which begins near this place, and extends to the river Yssel, is defended by several forts. Near it is the mountain of St. Agnes, where there was formerly an Augustin convent, in which Thomas Kempis lived 71 years, and died in 1471. It was formerly an imperial and hanseatic town, and is seated on an eminence, on the rivers Aa and Yssel, five miles S of Hasselt, and eight S E of Campen. Lon. 6 10 E, lat. 52 33 N.

Zygeth, a strong town of Lower Hungary, capital of a county of the same name, with a citadel. It was besieged, in 1566, by Solyman II. emperor of the Turks, and taken three days after his death; but was afterwards retaken by the Austrians. It is seated in a morass, made by the river Alma, 50 miles N W of Esseck. Lon. 18 58 E, lat. 46 17 N.

Zytomicz, a town of Poland, in Volhynia, seated on the Ciecicief, 70 miles W of Kiof, and 120 E of Lucko. Lon. 29 22 E, lat. 50 55 N.

THE END.
