Henry, Archdeacon of Huntingdon and Hertfordshire, b. about the end of the 11th century, d. after 1154, is best known as an author by a History of England, in eight books, from the earliest accounts to A.D. 1154. This was pub. by Sir Henry Savile among the Scriptores post Bedam, Lon., 1596, fol.; Franef., 1601, fol.; also in the Collec. of Historians edited by order of the Record Commission, vol. i. 689-763; also a translation, with the Acts of Stephen, by an unknown author; by Thomas Forster, Lon., 1853, sm. 8vo. Wharton, in his Ad Alia Sacra, ii. 694, publishes an Epistle of Henry's, ad Walterum de Mundi Contemptu, sive de Episcopis et viris illustribus sui temporis. See also D'Achery, Spicilegium, Parisiis, 1723, fol., toms iii. 503-507, or, in first ed., toms viii. 173.

Henry was also a poet of considerable merit. In his of age he collected his writings into one series, divided into twelve books. There are two MSS. of this book in the Archiepiscopal Library at Lambeth. For a more particular account of this writer we refer the reader to Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 167-173.

"A large portion of the earlier part of Henry's History is compiled and translated from the Saxon chronicle; he even translates the metrical parts, and in some instances incorrectly, which shows that so early as the reign of Stephen the language of Anglo-Saxon poetry was becoming obsolete. He gives us some valuable notices of Anglo-Saxon history, which appear to be taken from old songs and from tradition. . . His dates are frequently confused. . . One of his last writings was probably the letter already alluded to, addressed to his friend, Walter, De Manu Comtemplu; in it he recounts to his friend the number of rich and powerful and learned men whom they had seen sink successively into the grave. . . Henry of Huntingdon's poetry is superior to the general standard of medieval Latin verse. It is somewhat miscellaneous, consisting of metrical treatises on herbs, gems, spices, &c. of hymns of satirical poetry, and of epigrams. Leland quotes the following elegant lines from the invocation to his poem on herbs, which is founded on the older treatise of Maer:

"Vatum magne parentis, herbarum Phoebæ repertor, Vesque, quibus resonant Tempe jocosa, deas,
Sic ubi sarta prius hedera florentæ parastis,
Ecce meos flores, sarta parate, fero."

Henry the Minstrel, or Blind Harry, a wandering Scotch poet of the 15th century, is celebrated as the author of The Actis and Deidis of the illustre and vaillieand Campioun, Schir William Wallace, Knicht of Ellerslie. This poem, which is in twelve books of ten-syllable lines, is supposed to have been written about 1475. Henry professes to find it on a Latin history of Wallace, now lost, by John Blair and Thomas Gray. The only MS. copy known of Henry's poem is in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh, dated 1488. It was first pub., Edin., 1570, 4to; 1611, 4to; 1620, 8vo; Aberdeen, 1630, 8vo; Edin., 1648, 8vo; 1661; Glasg., 1665, 8vo; Edin., 1673, 12mo; Glasg.; Edin., 1709, 12mo; Glasg., 1713, 22, 8vo; Edin., 1758, 4to. This ed. likewise contains Arnald Blair Relations; with Notes, Dissertations, Illustrations, and a portrait of Wallace, Perth, 1790, 3 vols. 12mo. Since this date (i. e. in 1820, Edin., 4to) Dr. John Jamieson pub. it with the Bruce of Barbour. A paraphrase of Harry's poem, in modern Scotch, by William Hamilton of Gilbertfield, has long been popular with the Scottish peasantry, and had no little effect in eliciting the poetic talents of Robert Bruce. As a historian, recent discoveries have somewhat elevated the reputation of Blind Harry; as a poet, he has perhaps enjoyed the full benefit of the advantage which mystery confers upon the fame of the minstrel. Mr. Ellis does not hesitate to say "That a man born blind should excel in any science is sufficiently extraordinary, though by no means without example; but that he should become an excellent poet is almost miraculous; because the soul of poetry is description. Perhaps, therefore, it may be easily assumed that Henry was not inferior in point of genius either to Barbour or Chaucer, nor indeed to any poet of any age or country."—Specimens of the Early English Poets.

The absurdity of this remark is well exposed in Chambers and Thomson's Biog. Diet. of Eminent Scotsmen, ed. 1855, iii. 16.

As regards the value of the historical statements of the poet, we have the following opinion of an eminent authority:

"I am surprised that Wallace is the work of an ignorant man, who was yet in possession of valuable and authentic materials. On what other supposition can we account for the fact that, whilst in one page we meet with errors which show a deplorable perversion of history, in the next we find circumstances unknown to other Scottish historians, yet corroborated by authentic documents, by contemporary English annalists, by national monuments, and records only published in modern times and to which the minstrel cannot be supposed to have had access? The work, therefore, cannot be treated as an entire romance."—P. F. TYTLER: Lives of Scottish Worthies.

Mr. Tytler proceeds to adduce a number of instances in which modern historical discoveries prove Henry to be correct. Major, who lived at the same time with the poet, tells us the title we know of the minstrel, and enables us to form some estimate of the value of his history:

"Integrum librum Gulielmi Vallacæ Henricus, a nativitate humilissimus captus, mee infantiæ tempore cudit; et quæ vulgo dicebantur, carmine vulgari, in quo peritus erat, conscripsit; (ego autem talibus scriptis solum in parte fidem impertior;) qui historiarum recitatione coram principibus victum et vestitum quo dignus erat nactus est."—*Hist. "Of Henry's intellectual ability we are not left to judge from the suspicious panegyrics of his contemporaries. His state papers and letters may be placed by the side of those of Wolsey or of Cromwell, and they lose nothing in the comparison. Though they are broadly different, the perception is equally clear, the expression equally powerful, and they breathe throughout an irresistible vigour of purpose."—Froude's Hist. of Eng. from the Fall of Wolsey to the Death of Elizabeth, Lon., 1856.

Henry, Caleb Sprague, D.D., formerly a Congregational minister, but since 1835 a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, is a native of Rutland, Mass., and graduated at Dartmouth College in 1825. In 1835 he was appointed Professor of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy in Bristol College; removed to New York in 1837; and in that city established The New York Review, which he conducted until 1840, when Dr. J. G. Cogswell, who had been co-editor for the previous twelvemonth, assumed the entire duties connected with its supervision. Dr. Henry was chosen Professor of Philosophy, History, and Belles-Lettres, in the University of the city of New York, and discharged the engagements connected with this responsible post until his retirement in 1852. He was also, from 1847-50, rector of St. Clement's Church, New York. He now (1856) resides in the vicinity of New York, and is a frequent contributor to the Church Review, and other periodicals. Henry, David, 1710-1792, for more than half a century connected with the Gentleman's Magazine, has already been noticed in our life of his brother-in-law, Edward Cave. In that article, (written in 1854), referring to the length of time (nearly fourscore years) for which the Nicholse had been connected with the Magazine, we remarked, "May the Nicholse 'live a thousand years,' and issue the Gentleman's Magazine 'punctually on the 1st of every month!'" But—alas for our hopes!—the number of the Magazine for the present month, (June, 1856,) which lies before us, contains the following startling announcement:

"NOTICE.—The July and following numbers of the GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE will be published by Messrs. J. H. and Jas. Parker, 37, Strand, to whom all communications and books for review are to be sent."

We can only express the hope that the Parkers will prove worthy successors of their "illustrious predecessors."

Henry, Matthew, 1662-1714, the second son of Philip Henry, was born at his father's residence, Broad Oak farm-house, in Flintshire, N. Wales. He was remarkable for the early development of his mind; and it is affirmed that at three years of age he read the Bible distinctly, and with a wonderful comprehension of its meaning. From his early years he evinced a decided inclination to the ministry. His excellent father made it a rule that his children should spend an hour together every Saturday afternoon in devotional exercises; and we are told that

"On these occasions Matthew presided, and gave intimations of his subsequent delight in God's service, too distinct and too impressive to be either overlooked or forgotten. If at such times he thought his sisters improperly curtailed their prayers, he would gently expostulate; telling them that 'it was impossible, in so short a time, to include all the cases and persons they had to recommend to God.'"

His father being a Non-conformist, he was deprived of the privilege of entrance at either of the universities, and was placed under the charge of Mr. Thomas Doolittle, of Islington. For a short time subsequently he frequented Gray's Inn, and acquired some knowledge of the law. In 1686 he commenced preaching, and in the next year accepted the pastoral charge of a church at Chester. In 1712, after twice declining, he acceded to an urgent invitation to take charge of the church of the late Dr. Bates, of Hackney. One strong inducement to this change was the necessity of a London residence to the proper oversight of the publication of his Commentary on the Scriptures, then in the press. In his new field, as in his former location, he was indefatigable in his labours, which were greatly blessed. In May, 1714, he made a visit to his old friends in Cheshire, and upon his return home was taken ill at Nantwich. Anticipating a fatal issue, he said to Mr. Illidge:

"You have been used to take notice of the sayings of dying men. This is mine: that a life spent in the service of God and communion with him is the most pleasant life that any one can live in this world."

His death occurred on June 22, 1714, in the fifty-second year of his age.

A more truly excellent man in all the relations of life we should be at a loss to find. That odd person, John Dunton, says of him,

"All his actions appear to be perfectly devoted to God, strictly observing St. Paul's rule in the 4th of the Philippians, 'Whatsoever things are honest,' &c., which Mr. Henry does with that exactness and sincerity, the very Churchmen love him, and even Malice is angry she can find no cause to be angry with him."

A list of his works, according to Middleton's Evangelical Biography:—1. A Small Discourse concerning the Nature of Schism, 1689. 2. His Father's Life, 1696. 3. A Discourse about Meekness and Quietness of Spirit, on 1 Pet. iii. 4, to which is added, A Sermon preached at Mr. Howe's Meeting-house in London, 1698. 4. A Scripture Catechism, 1702. 5. Family Hymns; gathered most out of David's Psalms, and all out of the inspired writings, 1702. 6. A Plain Catechism for Children. 7. A Sermon concerning the right Management of friendly visits: preached at Mr. Howe's meeting in London, 1704. 8. A Church in the House: preached at Mr. Shower's meeting, and published at the request of the congregation, 1704. 9. The Communicant's Companion; or, Instructions and Helps for the right receiving of the Lord's Supper, 1704.

10. Four Discourses against Vice and Immorality, viz. I. Against Drunkenness; II. Against Uncleaness; III. Against Sabbath-breaking; IV. Against Profane Speaking, 1705. 11. A Sermon preached at the ordination of Mr. Atkinson, Jan. 27, 1713. 26. A Sermon preached on occasion of the Funeral of the Rev. Mr. Daniel Burgess, Feb. 3, 1713. 27. Christ's Favour to little Children opened and improved; in a sermon preached at the public baptizing of a child in London, on Mark x. 16, March 6, 1713. 28. A Sermon concerning the Catechizing of Youth; preached to Mr. Harris's Catechumens, April 7, 1713. 29. Self-Consideration necessary to Self-Preservation; or, The Folly of despising our own Souls and our own Ways, opened in two sermons to young people, June 14, 1713. 30. Sober-mindedness pressed upon Young People; preached at the catechetical lecture at Mr. Wilcox's meeting-place, and printed at the desire of many of the Catechumens, most of them being ministers' sons, Sept. 2, 1713. 31. A Memorial of the Fire of the Lord, in a sermon preached Sept. 2, 1713, on Num. xi. 3, being the day of remembrance of the burning of London, at Mr. Reynold's meeting-house. 32. The Pleasantness of a religious life opened, proved, and recommended to the consideration of all, and particularly of young people, May 21, 1714. 33. His Expositions of the Bible; "in which he has gone through the Old Testament in four large volumes (two in a fifth); and was fully bent, if God had spared his life, to have finished the whole in another volume: but in that death has prevented him." 34. An Account of the Life and Death of Lieutenant Illidge, father to Mr. George Illidge, of Nantwich, Mr. Henry's very particular friend. 35. A Treatise on Baptism, abridged from the original MS. by Thomas Robins, 1783.

A number of sermons and papers have been recently pub. for the first time in the last collective eds. of his Miscellaneous Works.

There have been new eds. of many of Henry's works, and several collections of his Miscellaneous Writings. 1. Miscell. Works, with Life by Rev. Wm. Tong, Lon., 1726, fol. 2. 1811, 4to, pp. 876. 3. By Rev. C. Bradley, 1823, 12mo. 4. With Preface by Sir John E. Williams, and numerous serms. now first printed, and forty serms. by Philip Henry, 1830, imp. 8vo. 5. Selections, with Memoir, 2 vols. r. 8vo. 6. Miscell. Works, containing, in addit. to those hitherto pub., numerous Serms. and Papers now first printed; with Funeral Serms. of Tong, Reynolds, and Williams, and forty serms. by Philip Henry, 1855, 2 vols. r. 8vo, xxiv., 1419; with portrait. Pub. by Carter & Bros., N. York. A reprint of No. 4.

"Very popular; his style short and pointed; many antitheses; a little fanciful; he makes his heads begin with the same letter, or some chiming words, yet oftentimes natural. Great seriousness; sprightly thoughts, digested in very good order. His style is formed on Scripture, and he has many beautiful allusions to it."—Dr. Doddridge.

"The habit of sprightly and apt allusion to Scripture facts, and the use of Scripture language, which Mr. Henry diligently cultivated, has not only enriched, but unspeakably enlivened, his miscellaneous writings. . . . His diction, always expressive, is often felicitous; and, though it makes no pretension to elegance, is both nervous and forcible. . . . His allusion and imagery, in like manner, always please and always edify: the former, because they are generally scriptural; the latter, because, like the parables of our Lord, they are derived from the most common occurrences."—SIR J. B. WILLIAMS.

The London Religious Tract Society pub., in 1831-35, in 12mo form without the text, and in super-roy. 8vo with the text and marginal references, a Commentary on the Bible from Henry and Scott, with numerous Notes and observ. from other Authors. This work was received with such favour that more than 200,000 vols. were sold by the end of the year 1840. We have already noticed with commendation (p. 69) the Comprehensive Commentary (Phila., 6 vols. r. 8vo) which is based principally upon Henry's Exposition.

We now proceed to adduce some testimonies to the value of Henry's invaluable Commentary upon the Holy Scriptures. It will be remembered that the author only lived to complete his work to the end of the Acts of the Apostles. The remaining books were commented upon, with the assistance of Henry's MSS., by the following Dissenting divines:

1. Romans, John Evans. 2. 1st Corinthians, Simon Brown. 3. 2d Corinth. and 1st and 2d Thessal., Daniel Mayo. 4. Galatians, Joshua Bayes. 5. Ephesians, Samuel Roswell. 6. Philipp. and Coloss., Wm. Harris. 7. 1st and 2d Timothy, E. A. Atkinson. 8. Titus and Philemon, Jeremiah Smith. 9. Hebrews and Revelation, Wm. Tong. 10. James, Samuel Wright. 11. 1st Peter, Zechariah Marriot. 12. 2d Peter, Joseph Hill. 13. 1st, 2d, and 3d John, Thos. Reynolds. 14. Jude, John Billingsley.

"The continuators are not all equal to the original; which is easily accounted for, as they accommodated themselves to the manner of their predecessor, in which no man could excel but himself."—ORME: Bib. Bib.

"Henry is, perhaps, the only commentator so large that deserves to be entirely and attentively read through. The remarkable passages should be marked. There is much to be learned in a speculative, and more in a practical, way."—DR. DODDRIDGE.

Having read Henry's Commentary "entirely and attentively through," we can heartily endorse Dr. Doddridge's commendation.

"There is no comment on the Bible, either ancient or modern, in all respects equal to Mr. Henry's."—REV. W. ROMAINE.

"The learned leisure of the universities, or the sanctioned names of dignitaries, may have produced works which rank higher in the esteem of scholars; but Matthew Henry stands without a rival as an expositor of Scripture for the edification of the Church of God."—HISTORY OF DISSIDENTS.

"Mr. Henry's admirable Commentary on the Scriptures, which hath been blessed to the instruction and edification of hundreds of ministers, and thousands of Christians, for more than a century, still maintains its reputation above most, if not all, other commentaries."—BURNHAM'S YOUTH MEMOIRALS.

"As long as the Bible continues in England, Mr. Henry's admirable Expositions will be prized by all serious Christians."—WILLIAM TONG.

Dr. Adam Clarke, referring to the many abridgments of various commentaries, remarks respecting those from Henry:

"Every one of which, while professing to lop off his redundancies and supply his deficiencies, falls, by a semi-diameter of the immense orb of literature and religion, short of the author himself. . . . He is always orthodox, generally judicious, truly pious and practical."

"Nor is it feeble praise that the apostolic Whitefield, whose labours and virtues inspired even the pen of Cowper, was trained, as a Christian and a preacher, by Mr. Henry's Commentary; that he literally studied it on his knees, read it through four times, and, to the close of life, spoke of its author with profound veneration, ever calling him 'the great Mr. Henry.'"

Robert Hall declares:

"I discern new beauties in Henry every day."

We are told in his memoirs:

"For the last two years he read daily two chapters of Matthew Henry's Commentary. As he proceeded, he felt increasing interest and pleasure; admiring the copiousness, variety and pious ingenuity of the thoughts, the simplicity, strength, and pregnancy of the expressions. He earnestly recommended the Commentary to his daughters; and, on hearing the eldest reading for successive mornings to the second, he expressed the highest delight."

"I have often read portions of Henry's Commentary, and consulted it; but I have now begun with the first chapter of Genesis, and I mean to read the work through regularly. I have set myself, sir, two chapters every morning, and I anticipate it as a feast. This is the way to read Matthew Henry, sir. I discover new beauties in him every day, that are not obvious when reading detached parts. I would advise you to adopt the same method, sir; you will be quite delighted with it. I have found that the most pious persons of my acquaintance, in the latter period of their lives, have been great readers of Henry. There must be something next to inspiration in him, sir; for as face answers to face, so does the heart of one Christian to another. I asked his opinion of Scott's Commentary. 'Oh, it is a good work, sir, but it is not to be compared to Henry; there is not that union of spirit that there is in Henry.'"—GREEN'S REMINISCENCES OF ROBERT HALL.

"It would be almost ill-judged partiality to maintain that he equals Dr. Owen in profound and continuous thinking, or Dr. Barrow in accuracy and elaboration, or Dr. Bates in affluent phraseology, or Jeremy Taylor and John Howe in noble daring and seraphic elevation. He belongs to a totally different school,—one less cumbersome, less obscure, less refined, less eloquent. It is praise sufficient to claim for him the fancy of Quarles, the affection of Flavel, the gentleness of Herbert, the good sense of Tillotson, and the terse sententiousness and antithetical point of Bishop Hall."—WILLIAMS.

"The Commentary of Matthew Henry has for above a century been highly prized by Christians of all denominations; nor has any subsequent one rendered it less valuable, or less desirable in every Christian library. With such views of the virtue and excellence of this work, views which the writer has long entertained, and some sense of the benefit which he trusts that he has personally derived from it for many years, he has great pleasure in making these introductory remarks. . . . Very practical and edifying, lively, sound and devotional."—REV. EDWARD BICKERSTETH.

"Mr. Henry's work has long enjoyed a high and deserved reputation. The work is distinguished, not for the depth of its learning or the originality of its views, but for the sound practical piety and large measure of good sense which it discovers. The author was well acquainted with the character and ways of God, and profoundly versant in the science of human nature; so that from his own experience he very often instructs and edifies his readers. He often leaves difficulties unremoved and even unnoticed; and there is a peculiar quaintness in the turn of many of his remarks, which renders his work somewhat repulsive to persons of fastidious taste; but few books of such extent on the Bible contain so much writing to the purpose, or are so well fitted to promote the general good of men."—ORME: Bib. Bib.

"It is chiefly practical; yet, without any parade of learning, it frequently contains good explanations of difficult passages. The numerous editions through which it has passed sufficiently attest the great estimation in which it is held."—T. H. HORNE: Bib. Bib.

"This work has now been before the Christian community for more than a hundred years, and has, from its first publication, been so well received, and is so generally approved, that all recommendation of the work seems now superfluous. . . . Many other valuable commentaries, it is true, have been given to the public since this work was first edited, and have deservedly gained for themselves a high estimation and extensive circulation. But it may be safely said that Henry's Exposition of the Bible has not been superseded by any of these publications, and, in those points in which its peculiar excellence consists, remains unrivalled. For some particular purposes, and in some particular respects, other commentaries may be preferable; but, taking it as a whole, and as adapted to every class of readers, this Commentary may be said to combine more excellences than any work of the kind which was ever written in any language. It may be more necessary for the unlearned to read such works as this, than for the learned; yet I am persuaded that there is no man living, however learned, but might derive much practical instruction from Henry's Exposition of the Bible; and if ministers of the gospel would spend much time in perusing this work, it would manifest itself by the richness and spirituality of their sermons and lectures."—ARCUBALD ALEXANDER, D.D.: Preface to Henry's Commentary.

Henry, Patrick, 1736-1799, a native of Hanover county, Virginia, was a son of John Henry, of Aberdeen, Scotland, who was a cousin to David Henry, of the Gentleman's Magazine, and a nephew of the celebrated historian, Dr. Robertson. It will thus be seen that Patrick Henry was a cousin of the celebrated Lord Brougham. Henry was one of the first and most strenuous advocates of American Independence, and, having distinguished himself by great eloquence at the Bar, he was in 1765 elected a member of the House of Burgesses of Virginia, as an opponent of the Stamp Act; in 1774 he was a delegate to the first Congress of the Colonies; in 1776 he was elected Governor of Virginia; in 1786 he was a representative to the Convention held at Philadelphia for the purpose of revising the Federal Constitution; in 1794 he retired from public life, and died in 1799.

For further particulars respecting Patrick Henry and the extraordinary powers of eloquence for which he was so famous, we refer the reader to Wirt's Life of Henry, (first pub. in 1817;) Life, by Alexander H. Everett, in Sparks's Amer. Biog., Second Series, i. 207-398; Life, by G. S. Arnold, N. York, 1855, 16mo; Speeches of Henry, Ames, Pinckney, &c., Phila., 8vo; the histories of the period: art. in N. A. Review, vi. 293, by Jared Sparks; art. on American Orators and Statesmen, in Lon. Mag., vi. 376, x. 441; Reminiscences of, by Dr. Archibald Alexander, in Princeton Mag., and in Liv. Age, xxvi. 205.

The meagre report of Henry's Speeches in our possession is of the most unsatisfactory character:

"They fall, of course, far below his fame; and it is, after all, on the faith of mere tradition, attested, however, by facts too numerous and of too public a character to leave it in any way doubtful, that the present and future generations will acknowledge the justice of his claim to the proud title that has been given him of the greatest orator of the New World."—ALEXANDER H. EVERETT: Life of Henry.

"On the retrospect of so many years, I may be permitted to express my views of the extraordinary effects of Henry's eloquence. . . . The power of Henry's eloquence was due, first, to the greatness of his emotion and passion, accompanied with a versatility which enabled him to assume at once any emotion or passion which was suited to his ends. Not less indispensable, secondly, was a matchless perfection of the organs of expression, including the entire apparatus of voice, intonation, pause, gesture, attitude, and indescribable play of countenance."—DR. ARCHIBALD ALEXANDER: Reminiscences of Henry.

"Every look, every motion, every pause, every start, was completely filled and dilated by the thought which he was uttering, and seemed indeed to form a part of the thought itself."—WILLIAM WIRT: Life of Henry.

"The times in which he lived were suited to his genius; in other times we doubt if his peculiar powers would have raised him to a higher distinction than that of an eloquent speaker at the bar. . . . The secret of his eloquence unquestionably rested in his power of touching the springs of passion and feeling. He had little to do with the understanding; or judgment of his hearers."—JARED SPARKS: N. A. Rev., vi. 322; March, 1818.

Henry, Philip, 1631-1696, father of Matthew Henry the commentator, and also a Non-conformist, was a native of Whitehall, London; educated at Christ Church, Oxford; ordained by the Presbytery in 1657, and became minister of Worthenbury; ejected at the Restoration, and lived in retirement until the Dissenters were allowed to preach, when he devoted himself with great zeal to the instruction of the thousands who thronged to him in various parts of the country near his residence at Broad Oak. His holy and useful life has been admirably described by his excellent son, the commentator: see HENRY, MATTHEW. I. 18 Serms., selected from his original MS., and 2 serms. preached at his death by F. Tallents and M. Henry; now first pub., with Notes by Sir J. B. Williams, Lon., 1816, 8vo. "The excellency of these discourses consists chiefly in the pertinent introduction and close application of Scripture."—Lon. Eccl. Rev.

"The additions and illustrations sufficiently attest the merits of the editor's performance, and recommend the volume to the attention of our readers as a valuable accession to every library."—Lon. Eccl. Rev., April, 1826.

Also highly recommended by Robert Hall; see his Works, ed. 1853, Lon., v. 541. Forty-one Sermons, on What Christ is made to Believers, will be found appended to Sir J. B. Williams's ed. of Matthew Henry's Miscellaneous Works, 1830, imp. 8vo; N. York, 1855, 2 vols. r. 8vo.

"His expounding and preaching was plain and pleasant, warm and savoury, full and overflowing, and such as few could reach, and greatly blessed by God."—F. TALLENTS.

Many of his extemporaneous comments on portions of Scripture read at family worship will be found recorded in his son's Exposition. A quaint writer, whom we frequently have occasion to quote, bears the following high testimony to the pulpit ministrations of Philip Henry:

"Should Angels come from Heaven, (tis my sense,) They'd not be heard with greater reverence;

All Pulpits own his learned pieces raise
A work to trouble Fame, astonish Praise
His Comments are so full, and yet so trim,
We praise all virtues in admiring him."

JOHN DENTON.

Henry, Robert, D.D., 1718-1790, a Scotch Presbyterian divine, a native of Muirtown, St. Ninian's, Stirlingshire, was educated at the University of Edinburgh, and subsequently became master of the grammar-school of Annan. He was licensed to preach in 1746; officiated at Carlisle from 1748 to 1760, at Berwick-upon-Tweed, 1760 to 1763; minister of the Church of the New Grey-Friars, 1763-76; colleague-minister in the old church 1776-90; Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, 1774. As an author he is most favourably known by a History of Great Britain, pub. in 6 vols. 4to; vol. i., 1771; ii., 1774; iii., 1777; iv., 1781; v., 1785; vi., posth., edited by Laing, with the Life of Henry prefixed, 1793. The history embraces the period from the first invasion of the Romans under Julius Cæsar to the death of Henry VIII. A French trans. was pub. in 1789-96, by M. M. Rowland and Cantwell. A Continuation, by James Petit Andrews, from the death of Henry VIII. to the Accession of James I., was pub. in 1794, 4to; 1796, 2 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1806, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed. of Henry's Hist., 1788, 10 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1796, 10 vols. 8vo; 1800, 12 vols. 8vo; 4th and best ed., with a general index, 1805, 12 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., 1814, 12 vols. 8vo; 6th ed., 1823, 12 vols. 8vo; an indifferent ed.

We have already noticed the plan of Henry's History, the Continuation of Andrews, and the excellent History of England upon Henry's plan, somewhat modified, pub. by Charles Knight, in our life of J. Petit Andrews. Dr. Henry divides his work into periods, and treats of each in seven distinct points of view,—viz.: Chap. I. Civil and Military History. II. History of Religion. III. History of the Constitution, Government, Laws, and Courts of Justice. IV. History of Learning, of Learned Men, and of the chief Seminaries of Learning. V. History of Arts. VI. History of Commerce, Shipping, Money, &c. VII. History of Manners, Customs, &c.

To this great work Henry devoted the anxious labour of nearly thirty years; and he has certainly accumulated a vast store of useful information. But to write philosophically and entertainingly upon so many heterogeneous subjects exceeds man's might. Even when the scope is far less ambitious, the charm of style possessed by a Hume, a Robertson, a Macaulay, a Prescott, or a Bancroft, can alone interest the desultory reader in historical details. For all practical purposes, Henry's history has been superseded by the noble work pub. by Charles Knight, Lon., 11 vols. r. 8vo, (with Index vol.,) 1849-50, which we have already particularly described in our life of J. Petit Andrews. But Henry's history (with Andrew's Continuation, 14 vols. 8vo, 1805-06) is well worth the trifling sum of 35 to 40 shillings demanded by the book-sellers.

"Too much cannot be said of its arrangement, nor for the great store of valuable materials which it contains, which took the author thirty years in collecting from every book on record that related to the History of Great Britain, many of which few ever saw, and fewer would take the trouble to investigate."—Lon. Retrospective Review.

"A work of no inconsiderable reputation, notwithstanding the nefarious malignity with which Gilbert Stuart endeavoured to blast the fruit of the author's labours, ruin him in his fortune, and break his heart."—Lon. Quar. Rev.

"Considerable merit in the execution and complete originality in the plan of his history."—Lord Cockburn's Memorials of his Time.

"The work of Dr. Henry is an ornament and an honour to his country."—Dublin's Bibliomania.

"But it is of HENRY'S History that I would speak in the warmest language of approbation."—Dublin's Lib. Comp.

"The history is compiled with great erudition and fidelity, and the plan has been highly extolled; but his style is not attractive, nor has the capricious taste of the public rescued the work from neglect."—CANCELLOR KENT.

"Much of this sort of information, [respecting the early constitutional history of England,] and of every other historical information, may be found in the History of Dr. Henry; but the same facts, when collected and printed in a modern dress, properly arranged, and to be read without difficulty, as they are in the work of Dr. Henry, no longer excite the same reflection nor claim the same possession of the memory which they do when seen in some such thing like their native garb, in their proper place, and in all the simplicity, singularity, and quaintness which belong to them."—Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist.

So much as regards the collection of records and embodiment of facts; but when the cumulative labours of the clerk should be succeeded by the analytical speculations of the philosopher, we have the opinion of an eminent authority of our own day, that Dr. Henry—and especially in the department referred to by Professor Smyth—sadly fails:

"These parts of Henry's history which profess to trace the progress of government are still more jejune than the rest of his volumes."—Prof. to Hallam's View of Europe during the Middle Ages.

The base conspiracy of Gilbert Stuart "to blast the fruit of Henry's labours, ruin him in his fortune, and break his heart," referred to by the Quarterly reviewer, in a preceding quotation, has been treated of at great length by Disraeli in his Calamities of Authors; and to that work we must send the reader for this sad story of fiendish malignity and petty spite. Stuart commenced his attack on Henry by a severe critique in his Edinburgh Magazine and Review, (established by him in 1773,) on a sermon of the latter preached before the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, in 1773. As respects the History, Stuart remarks in one of his letters, dated Dec. 13, 1773:

"David Hume wants to review Henry; but that task is so precious that I will undertake it myself. Moses, were he to ask it as a favour, should not have it; yea, not even the man after God's own heart."

The profanity of this language is a fair index to the character of the man and the impartiality of the prospective reviewer. In the London Monthly Review for January, 1774, appeared a review of Henry's History, and respecting this article Stuart remarks:

"To the former (the Monthly Review) I suppose David Hume has transcribed the criticism he intended for us. It is precious, and would divert you. I keep a proof of it in my cabinet for the amusement of friends. This great philosopher begins to dote."—4th March, 1774.

To this letter Disraeli appends the following note: "The critique on Henry in the Monthly Review was written by Hume; and, because the philosopher was candid, he is here said to have doted."—Calamities of Authors.

But we agree, with Chambers and Thomson's Dict. of Eminent Scotsmen, (see vol. iii. 31, ed. 1855,) that this was not the review which Hume penned. The article referred to by Stuart and Disraeli is now before us; and Hume would not have been likely to have remarked that "It is not every one who can rise to the ingenuity, the dignity, and the elegance, of a Hume and a Robertson."

The verdict of this reviewer—whoever he may be—and that of Stuart are indeed sufficiently unlike: the former admits that

"Whatever farther defects might be pointed out in the present performance, it must be acknowledged that, upon the whole, it possesses considerable merit. The author, indeed, is not distinguished by elevation of genius, by philosophical penetration, or by a capacity of rising to the highest species of historical composition; but he possesses a great share of good sense, and his diligence and labour must have been uncommonly great. He refers always to his authorities. His style, if not elegant or remarkably nervous, is clear, and for the most part, though not universally, correct. As a collection of facts and materials, Dr. Henry's History of Great Britain cannot but be peculiarly useful. It is a work which every gentleman would wish to place in his library, that he may be able to consult it on proper occasions."—Lon. Month. Rev., i. 192-202.

But the implacable Stuart will allow Henry no merits whatever:

"He neither furnishes entertainment nor instruction. Diffuse, vulgar, and ungrammatical, he strips history of all her ornaments. As an antiquary, he wants accuracy and knowledge; and, as an historian, he is destitute of fire, taste, and sentiment. His work is a gazette, in which we find actions and events without their causes, and in which we meet with the names, without the characters, of personages. He has amassed all the refuse and lumber of the times he would record. . . . The mind of his reader is affected with no agreeable emotions; it is awakened only to disgust and fatigue."—Edin. Rev. and Mag., i. 266-270.

But in what striking contrast to this appears the candid judgment of one who had also, to some extent, gone over the same ground, and knew the difficulties of the path!

"His historical narratives are as full as those remote times seem to demand, and, at the same time, his inquiries of the antiquarian kind omit nothing which can be an object of doubt or curiosity. The one as well as the other is delineated with great perspicuity, and no less propriety, which are the true ornaments of this kind of writing; all superfluous embellishments are avoided; and the reader will hardly find in our language any performance that unites together so perfectly the two great points of entertainment and instruction."—DAVID HUME: see Chambers and Thomson's Dict. of Eminent Scotsmen, ed. 1855, iii. 31.

We have already hinted that Henry would have succeeded better had he attempted less; and in this connexion the following remarks are not out of place:

"DR. JOHNSON.—I have read Henry's History of Great Britain well spoken of. I am told it is carried on in separate divisions, as the civil, the military, the religious history. I wish much to have one branch well done, and that is the history of the manners of common life."

"DR. ROBERTSON.—Henry should have applied his attention to that alone, which is enough for any man; and he might have found a great deal scattered in various books had he read solely with that view. Henry erred in not selling his first volume at a moderate price to the booksellers, that they might have pushed him on till he had got reputation. I sold my History of Scotland at a moderate price, as a work by which the booksellers might either gain or not; and Cadell has told me that Millar and he have got six thousand pounds by it. I afterwards received a much higher price for my writings. An author should sell his first work for what the booksellers will give, till it shall appear whether he is an author of merit, or, which is the same thing as to purchase money, an author who pleases the public."—Boswell's Life of Dr. Johnson.

Henry pub. his vols. at his own risk, and no doubt would have profited more by them had he enjoyed the advantage of fair play; nevertheless, he cleared £3300 by his work, including the 1000 paid him by Cadell in 1786, and he was complimented by a pension of £100; and this was no contemptible sum in those times, even for thirty years of literary toil. In our own days, indeed, some eminent historians receive much more money for much less labour; but Robert Henry, with all his merits, (and these were neither few nor inconsiderable,) was, as we have already hinted, neither a Macaulay nor a Hallam, a Prescott nor a Bancroft.

Henry, Rev. Robert, M.A., 1792-1856, a native of Charleston, S.C., Pres. of the College of S. Carolina, 1834-35, and 1840-43, filled in succession, in that institution, the Chairs of Logic and Moral Philosophy, of Metaphysics, Moral and Political Philosophy, Metaphysics and Belles-Lettres, and of the Greek Language and Literature. The last-named professorship is now (1856) held by Dr. Henry. He has pub. several serms., Eulogies on Prof. Smith, President Maxey, and John C. Calhoun, and contributed several papers to the Southern Review.

Henry, Thomas, apothecary of Manchester, pub. a number of medical, chemical, and other works, 1773-83.

Henry, Thomas Charlton, D.D., 1790-1827, eldest son of Alexander Henry, of Philadelphia, (for many years President of the American Sunday-School Union,) graduated, in 1814, at Middlebury College, and, after a course of theological study at Princeton, was ordained to the ministry in 1816. In 1818 he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Columbia, S.C., where he laboured with great zeal and success for a period of five years. In Jan. 1824 he accepted a call to the Second Presbyterian Church of Charleston, S.C., and carried into this new field that spirit of earnest devotion which had marked his course from his first entrance into the ministry. In 1826 he was obliged by the failure of his health to seek the benefit of a foreign climate; and he accordingly spent six months in France and Great Britain, eliciting "golden opinions" on every side by his extensive scholarship, refined taste, and fervent piety. On the 1st of October, 1827, he was attacked by the yellow fever, then prevalent in Charleston, and died after an illness of four days.

Dr. Henry was the author of three valuable works, viz.:—1. An Inquiry into the Consistency of Popular Amusements with a Profession of Christianity, Charleston, 1825. 2. Moral Etchings from the Religious World, 1823, 8vo. 3. Letters to an Anxious Inquirer; designed to relieve the difficulties of a Friend under Serious Impressions, 1828, 12mo. Pub. in Lon., 1829, 12mo; with a Memoir of the Author by Rev. Thos. Lewis, and a Preface by John Pye Smith, D.D. This excellent work has passed through many eds. in England and America, and is undoubtedly one of the very best treatises that can be placed in the hands of an "anxious inquirer." We quote a brief extract from a highly eulogistic review by an eminent authority:

"In the present age there has no work appeared, perhaps, of greater interest upon the subject of experimental religion, than the Letters which we now take leave to introduce to the attention of our readers. They are the production of a master-mind, deeply read in the Scriptures, in the knowledge of the human heart, and in the phenomena of Christian experience. . . . Dr. Smith's preface must tend to secure the attention of the public to a work which must very soon speak for itself in every Christian circle throughout the land."—Lon. Evangelical Mag., April, 1829.

Another authority remarks of this work: "It will be found a treasure to the Anxious Inquirer; and we hope many of our more advanced readers who watch over the first impressions of their younger friends will avail themselves of the powerful aid of this admirable treatise."—Lon. Evangelical Register.

The Testament of Cressid, Edin., 1593, 4to. This poem is a sequel to Chaucer's Troilus and Crescide, and is printed in some eds. of that poet's works. 3. Fables, 1621; thirteen in number. Printed by Andrew Hart. There were several earlier eds. Reprinted for the Bannatyne Club in 1832. One of the best of the fables is the Vpoulans Mouse and the Burgesse Mouse. But the most beautiful of all his productions is Robene and Maknye, alleged to be the earliest specimen of pastoral poetry in the Scottish language. This poem, with the Testament of Cressid, was printed (sixty-five copies) for the Bannatyne Club, by George Chalmers, in 1824, 4to, £3 13s. 6d. Specimens of Henryson's poetry will be found in the collections of Hailes, Pinkerton, Ramsay, Sibbald, Irving, and Ellis.

"The various works of Henryson afford so excellent a specimen of the Scottish language and versification, that a complete collection, printed with due accuracy and accompanied with proper illustrations, could not fail to be highly acceptable to the lovers of our early literature."—DR. Hentz, Mrs. Caroline Lee, d. Feb. 11, 1856, at Marianna, Florida, was a native of Lancaster, Mass., a daughter of General John Whiting, and a sister of General Henry Whiting, U.S. Army. In 1825 Miss Whiting was married to Professor N. M. Hentz. Mrs. Hentz was a voluminous contributor, both of prose and poetry, to the periodicals of the day; and many of her tales have been collected into volumes, which proved so popular that 93,000 were sold in America in the course of three years. In addition to the works included in the following list, she has written De Lara, or the Moorish Bride, a Tragedy, which gained a prize of $500, (pub. in book form); Lamorah, or The Western Wild, a Tragedy, (pub. in a newspaper at Columbus, Georgia); Constance of Werdenberg, a Tragedy, (unpub.); Human and Divine Philosophy, a poem; and other poetical pieces. 1. 1. De Veritate, prot. distinguitur à Revelatione Verisimili, Possibili, et à Falso, Paris, 1624; Lon., 1633, 4to. Cui operi additi sunt duo alii tractatus: primus de causis errorum; alter de Religione Laici, Lon., 1645, 4to; 1656, 12mo. 2. De Religione Gentilium; Errorumque apud eos Causis, Amst., 1663, 4to; 1700, 8vo. In English, Lon., 1705, 8vo. In his De Veritate and De Religione Gentilium

"His lordship seems to have been one of the first that formed Deism into a system, and asserted the sufficiency, universality, and absolute perfection of natural religion, with a view to discredit all extraordinary revelation as useless and needless. He seems to assume to himself the glory of having accomplished it with great labour and a diligent inspection into all religions, and applauds himself for it as happier than any Archimedes."—Leland's Deistical Writers.

* Lord Herbert of Cherbury, in his treatise De Veritate, and still more in that De Religione Gentilium, has been justly deemed inimical to every positive religion. He admits, indeed, the possibility of immediate revelation from heaven, but denies that any tradition from others can have sufficient certainty. Five fundamental truths of natural religion he holds to be such as all mankind are bound to acknowledge, and dauns those heathens who do not receive them as summarily as any theologian.—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe.

Yet it has been observed of De Veritate, that, although written to disprove the truth of the Scriptures, it is "A book so strongly imbued with the light of revelation relative to the moral virtues and a future life, that no man ignorant of the Scriptures or of the knowledge derived from them could have written it."—Editor of 4th ed. of Lord Herbert's Life.

It is certainly not a little curious that his lordship should have sought—and, according to his own account, have received—a revelation from heaven to encourage the publication of his work in disproof of Revelation! He "asked for a sign," and was answered—he assures us—by "a loud, though yet gentle, noise from the heavens."

"There is no stronger characteristic of human nature than its being open to the grossest contradictions. One of Lord Herbert's chief arguments against revealed religion is the improbability that heaven should reveal its will to only a portion of the earth, which he terms particular religion. How could a man (supposing the accident genuine) who doubted of partial, believe individual, revelation? What vanity, to think his look of such importance to the cause of truth, that it could extort a declaration of the Divine will, when the interests of half mankind could not."—HORACE WALPOLE: R. and N. Authors.

Lord Herbert's arguments against Revelation have been answered by Gassendi, Baxter, Locke, Leland, Halyburton, Bishop Van Mildert, Kortholt, &c. The work of the last-named is entitled De tribus Impostoribus magnis Liber, Kiloni, 1680, 8vo; Hamburg, 1701, 4to.

"In this treatise the principles of the three great deistical leaders, Herbert, Hobbes, and Spinoza, are thoroughly exposed; copious quotations are given from their writings; and the authors are exhibited in their true light as wilful deceivers."—BISHOP VAN MILDERT.

3. History of the Life and Reign of Henry VIII. of England, Lon., 1649, '72, '82, fol. In Kennet's Collee., ii. p. 1, 1706. Also reprinted by Horace Walpole, 1770, 4to. An excellent work.

An eminent authority, after enumerating a number of works upon this period, remarks:

"Above all, Edward, Lord Herbert, of Cherbury, may be truly said to have written the life and reign of King Henry the Eighth; having acquitted himself with the like reputation as the Lord-Chancellor Bacon gained by that of Henry the Seventh. For, in the politic and martial part this honourable author has been admirably particular and exact, from the best records that were extant; though, as to the ecclesiastical, he seems to have looked upon it as a thing out of his province, and an undertaking more proper for men of another profession."—BISHOP NICOLSON: Eng. Hist. Lib.

"To this it may be added that he throws considerable light upon our legal history. . . . The chief error in this production is, that the noble historian is too favourably disposed towards his hero, and treats with too lenient and palliating a hand the cruelties and vices of that monarch. In other respects the Life of Henry VIII. is a highly valuable work, and contains much information which is not to be had elsewhere."—Lon. Retrospec. Rev., vii. 329, 1823.

"His reign of Henry the Eighth is allowed to be a masterpiece of historic biography."—HORACE WALPOLE: Advert. to the Life of Lord Herbert.

"Has ever been esteemed one of the best histories in the English language; but there is not in it that perfect candour which one would wish, or expect to see, in so celebrated a historian. He has given us a much juster portrait of himself than he has of Henry. He appears to have laid open every foible or defect in his own character, but has cast the monstrous vices of that merciless tyrant into shade, and has displayed to great advantage his gallantry, magnificence, and generosity."—Granger's Biog. Hist. of Eng.

"A book of good authority, relatively at least to any that preceded, and written in a manly and judicious spirit."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe.

Sotheby's, in 1825, £5 5s. Bindley, Pt. 2, 653, £6 18s.

"His lordship's scarce volume of Occasional Poems consists chiefly of metaphysical love-verses; ingenious, but unnatural; platonic in sentiment, but frequently gross in expression; and marked by an eccentricity which pervaded the life and character of Lord Herbert. Two short effusions, however, may not be unacceptable."—Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors.

The critic quotes—To A Young Pale Beauty, and To His Watch, When He Could Not Sleep.

"Like his brother, George Herbert, whose poems we noticed in a former volume, Lord Herbert is often both rugged and obscure in his verses. The sword was much better suited to his hand than the lyre; and we shall not, therefore, at present, favour the reader with any specimens of his verses."—Lon. Retrospective Rev., vii. 330, 1823.

"Others of his poems are dispersed among the works of other authors, particularly in Joshua Sylvester's Lachryme Lachrymarum; or, The Spirit of Tears distilled for the untimely Death of Prince Henry, London, 1613, 4to."—*HORACE WALPOLE: R. and N. Authors, iii. 19-22. Cole styles his lordship's autobiography

"A most romantic life. . . He seems to be the vainest of all mortals, as also the most of a Quixote,—a character one would not expect in the author of De Veritate." See Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., iii. 242.

"The most extraordinary account that was ever given by a wise man of himself. Few have figured so conspicuously, in lights so various, as the famous Lord Herbert of Chisbury. As a soldier his valour made him a hero, and won for him the esteem of the great captains of the age, Montgomery and the Prince of Orange; as a knight, his chivalry was drawn from the purest fountains of the Fairy Queen. . . As a public minister, he supported the dignity of his country, even when his Prince disgraced it. . . These busy scenes were mingled with, and terminated by, meditation and philosophic enquiries. Strip each period of its excesses and errors, and it will not be easy to trace out or dispose the life of a man of quality into a succession of employments which would better become him. Valour and military activity in youth; business of state in the middle age; contemplation and labours for the information of posterity in the calmer scenes of a closing life.—this was Lord Herbert."—HORACE WALPOLE: Preface to Lord Herbert's Life.

"He was a person well studied in the arts and languages, a good philosopher and historian, and understood men as well as books, as it evidently appears in his writings."—WOOD: Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., 1817, iii. 239.

"Lord Herbert stands in the first rank of the public ministers, historians, and philosophers of his age. It is hard to say whether his person, his understanding, or his courage, was the most extraordinary; as the fair, the learned, and the brave, held him in equal admiration. But the same man was wise and capricious; redressed wrongs and quarrelled for punctilio; hated bigotry in religion, and was himself a bigot to philosophy. He exposed himself to such dangers as other men of courage would have carefully declined; and called in question the fundamentals of religion which none had the hardness to dispute beside himself."—GRANGER: *Biog. Herbert, George, 1593-1632, a descendant of the Earls of Pembroke, and a younger brother of Lord Herbert of Chisbury, was also born at Montgomery Castle, in Wales; was educated at Westminster School, and there elected to Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was elected Fellow: University Orator, 1619; took holy orders, and was made Prebendary of Layton Ecclesia, in the diocese of Lincoln, by Archbishop Williams; and in 1630 was presented by King Charles I. to the living of Bemerton. For the details of the biography of this eminent character we must refer the reader to the charming narrative of Izaak Walton. "I am not aware that any Edition of Herbert's Poetry or Prose has hitherto appeared with Notes or Illustrations. The present attempt to supply that want may, therefore, be received with some forbearance and favour."—Wilmott's Preface. And see Willmott's Lives of the Sacred English Poets.

But Mr. Wilmott had certainly forgotten Mr. Pickering's ed., with Notes by S. T. Coleridge, 1846, 2 vols. Mr. Gilfillan's annotated ed. appeared in 1853. See Nos. 7 and 10, above. 13. Poems, illustrated by Birket Foster, Noel Humphreys, and John Clayton, 1856, cr. 8vo. The effect of the publication of The Temple, in a day of abounding literary licentiousness, was most decided and most salutary. Henry Vaughan, in his warm acknowledgments to the author, doubtless expressed the feelings of many:

"The first that, with any effectual success, attended a diversion of this foul and overflowing stream, was the blessed man, Mr. George Herbert, whose holy life and verse gained many pious converts,—of whom I am the least,—and gave the first check to a most flourishing and admired Wit of his time."—Præface to Siles Scintillans; or, Sacred Poems and Private Ejaculations, 1650.

The eulogy of the celebrated Baxter is equally honourable to our author. After enumerating the characteristics of a number of popular poets of his time, he remarks:

"But I must confess, after all, that, next the Scripture Poems, there are none so savoury to me as Mr. George Herbert's and Mr. George Sandys'. I know that Cowley and others far exceed Herbert in wit and accurate composure; but as Seneca takes with me above all his contemporaries, because he speaketh things by words, feelingly and seriously, like a man that is past jest; so Herbert speaks to God like one that really believeth a God, and whose business in the world is most with God. Heart-work and Heaven-work make up his books."—Prefatory Address to Baxter's Practical Fragments, 1651.

Baxter's reference to Cowley reminds us that Herbert is least esteemed by modern readers where he approaches the closest to that extravagance of conceit which made the author of the Davidides so great a favourite with his pedantic age.

The following criticisms would have been read with unfeigned amazement by the pupils of Cowley and their admirers:

"A writer of the same class, though infinitely inferior to both Quarles and Crashaw. His poetry is a compound of enthusiasm without sublimity, and conceit without either ingenuity or imagination. . . . When a man is once reduced to the impartial test of time,—when partiality, friendship, fashion, and party, have withdrawn their influence,—our surprise is frequently excited by past subjects of admiration that now cease to strike. He who takes up the poems of Herbert would little suspect that he had been public orator of an university, and a favourite of his sovereign; that he had received flattery and praise from Donne and from Bacon; and that the biographers of the day had enrolled his name among the first names of his country."—Headley's Select Beauties of Ancient English Poetry, I, liv., lv., 1810.

Bacon's admiration of Herbert was evinced by his dedication to him of his translation of some of the Psalms,—"it being," as he says, his "manner for dedications to choose those that I hold most fit for the argument."

It is believed that Herbert reciprocated the civility of his friend by aiding him in the translation of several of his works from English into Latin.

Henry Neele partially coincides with Headley's judgment, but is disposed to place a more favourable estimate upon Herbert's natural poetical powers:

"His beauties of thought and diction are so overloaded with far-fetched conceits and quaintnesses, low and vulgar and even indelicate imagery, and a pertinacious appropriation of Scripture language and figure, in situations where they make a most unseemly exhibition, that there is now very little probability of his ever regaining the popularity which he has lost. That there was much, however, of the real poetical temperament in the composition of his mind, the following lines, although not free from his characteristic blemishes, will abundantly prove:

"Sweet Day! so cool, so calm, so bright," &c.
Lects. on English Poetry.

The many editions of Herbert's Poems now issuing from the press prove that the critic was mistaken in supposing that the popularity of the poet had departed, never to return.

The judgment of the critics next to be quoted, undoubtedly, is that of the modern admirers of Herbert's poetry:

"For ourselves, we are greatly inclined to prefer Herbert's homelier poems to those on which he lavished so much ingenuity. Many of these latter have, indeed, fine passages; but the lofty thought too often is followed by one actually ludicrous, and the beautiful figure by another its very reverse."—Review of the Works of George Herbert: Brit. Quar. Rev.

"We think that those who have a real relish for devotional poetry will find passages in Herbert that may refresh and delight them: at the same time, no reader of taste and rational views of religion but must lament and wonder at the strange and almost Intomprehensible turn of some of the poems."—Herbert's Poems: Lon. Retrosp. Rev. iii. 215-222, 1821.

Mr. Hallam notices the same fault in Herbert's principal prose production:

"His Country Parson is, on the whole, a pleasing little book; but the precepts are sometimes so overstrained, according to our notions, as to give an air of affectation."—Introduction to the Lit. of Europe.

Addison takes our poet to task for his exhibition of a species of "false wit," which "was revived by several poets of the last age, and in particular may be met with among Mr. Herbert's Poems."

For an explanation of the subject of Addison's censure, which is not necessarily connected with the faults complained of by the critics previously quoted, we must refer the reader to The Spectator, No. 58.

As regards the quaintness and conceits which so greatly offend the taste of the present age, Mr. Willmott shows us that they are not altogether indefensible, and that we are not to condemn with hasty vehemence, without a charitable degree of patience:

"Even the fastidious taste of Mr. Keble was offended by the constant flutter of his fancy, forever hovering round and round the theme. But this was a peculiarity which the most gifted writers admired. Dryden openly avowed that nothing appeared more beautiful to him than the imagery in Cowley, which some readers condemned. It must, at least, be said, in praise of this creative playfulness, that it is a quality of the intellect singularly sprightly and buoyant; it ranges over a boundless landscape, pierces into every corner, and by the light of its own fire—to adopt a phrase of Temple—discovers a thousand little bodies or images in the world, unseen by common eyes, and only manifested by the rays of that poetic sun."—Introduction to Herbert's Works, 1854; see No. 12, ante.

It would be well, therefore, for modern objectors to what they deem Herbert's faults, before they let the dust accumulate upon his Temple and his Country Parson, to ponder the above suggestions, and not to forget the following sagacious remarks of a critic entitled to great deference:

"Having mentioned the name of Herbert, that model of a man, a gentleman and a clergyman, let me add, that the quaintness of some of his thoughts—not of his diction, than which nothing can be more pure, manly, and unaffected—has blinded modern readers to the great general merits of his poems, which are for the most part exquisite in their kind."—S. T. COLERIDGE.

As for ourselves, had Herbert no other claim to our affection, it would be sufficient to insure our gratitude that in the dark days of the gentle Cowper, when he struggled for life with the "foul fiend Melancholy" and found no rest for his distracted and horror-stricken soul, the soothing strains of Herbert's muse subdued the evil spirit, and proved an effectual comforter in the time of trouble:

"I was struck, not long after my settlement in the Temple, with such a dejection of spirits as none but they who have felt the same can have the least conception of. Day and night I was on the rack; lying down in horror, and rising up in despair. I presently lost all relish for those studies to which I had before been closely attached. The classics had no longer any charms for me: I had need of something more salutary than amusement, but I had no one to direct me where to find it. At length I met with Herbert's Poems; and, Gothic and uncouth as they were, I yet found in them a strain of piety which I could not but admire. This was the only author I had any delight in reading. I pored over him all day long: and, though I found not here what I might have found—a cure for my malady,—yet it never seemed so much alleviated as while I was reading him."

Herbert, Henry William, b. in London, April 7, 1807, son of the Hon. and Rev. William Herbert, Dean of Manchester, and the Hon. Letitia Emily Dorothea, daughter of Viscount Allen and descended in direct male line from the Earls of Pembroke and Percy, was educated at Eton, and graduated in 1828 at Caius College, Cambridge, of which he is a prizeman and scholar. Mr. Herbert emigrated to New York in 1831, and from this period until 1839 was engaged as principal Greek teacher in Mr. Huddart's classical academy. In the latter year he was married to Sarah, daughter of John Barker, of Bangor, Maine, by whom he has issue one son, William George. Since his marriage Mr. Herbert has devoted himself solely to authorship and the sports of the fields. He resides in a beautiful cottage ("The Cedars") on the banks of the Passaic, near Newark, New Jersey. Mr. Herbert has been a very voluminous author; and the following list of works exhibits sufficient evidence of great literary industry, inspired by a remarkable versatility of talent.

NOVELS AND NOVELETTES:—1. The Brothers. 2. Cromwell. 3. Marmaduke Wyvil. 4. The Roman Traitor. 5. The Miller of Martigny. 6. Guarica; or, The Carib Bride. 7. Sherwood Forest; or, Wager of Battle. 8. The Knights of England, France, and Scotland. 9. The Chevaliers of France. 10. The Cavaliers of England. 11. Dermot O'Brien. 12. Persons and Pictures in French and English History. 13. The Falls of the Wyalusing. 14. Pierre the Parisian.

HISTORY:—15. The Captains of the Greek Republics. 16. The Captains of the Roman Republic. 17. Henry VIII. and his Six Wives. 18. The Royal Maries of Medieval History, (in MS. at the time of his death.)

TRANSLATIONS:—19. Matilda. 20. The Wandering Jew. 21. John Cavalier. 22. Atar Gull. 23. The Salamander; from Eugene Sue. 24, 25. Diana of Meridor and Acte of Corinth; from Alex. Dumas. 26. Weiss's Protestant Refugees. 27. The Prometheus and Agamemnon of Æschylus. 28. Poetry from French and Italian Authors.

POETRY:—Many fugitive pieces.

SPORTING WORKS, published under the name of FRANK FORESTER:—29. The Field Sports of the United States and the British Provinces in America, 1849, 2 vols. 8vo; last ed., 1858, 2 vols. 8vo. 30. The Fish and Fish-Book of do., 1849-50, 2 vols. 8vo. Both of these works are illustrated on wood by the author. 31. The Warwick Woodlands. 32. My Shooting-Box. 33. The Deer-Stalkers. These three were pub. together in London, 1849, 3 vols. p. 8vo, under the title of Frank Forester and his Friends; or, Woodland Adventures in the Middle States of North America. 34. The Quorndon Hounds. 35. Young Sportsman's Complete Manual of Fowling, Fishing, and Field Sports in general, illustrated from drawings made from nature by the author.

EDITOR OF—The Old Forest Ranger; Dinks and May-hew On the Dog; Mr. Sponge's Sporting Tour, &c.

To the above list might be added The Horse and Horsemanship in the United States and British Provinces of North America; American Game in its Seasons; an edit. of Goldsmith's Hist. of Greece, &c. Mr. Herbert was the originator, in 1833, of the American Monthly Magazine, and was its editor until 1835. He has also been a contributor of numerous articles to The Lady's Companion; Godey's Magazine; Graham's Magazine; Sartain's Magazine; Columbian Magazine; Southern Literary Gazette; Democratic Review; Turf Register; N. York Spirit of the Times; New York Courier and Inquirer; New World, &c.

Mr. Herbert's fugitive articles, if collected, would probably fill about forty duodecimo volumes. For a notice of this popular writer, we refer the reader to the (New York) Internat. Mag., iii. 289-291.

At the conclusion of our notice of the literary labours of Mr. Herbert's distinguished father—the Hon. and Very Rev. William Herbert—the reader will find a glowing tribute to that remarkable versatility of talent for which the Dean of Manchester was so eminently distinguished. We need hardly observe, after what has been already recorded, that the same power of mastery over subjects which have little or nothing in common is not less observable in the translator of Æschylus and the chronicler of the Woodland Adventures of Frank Forester and his associates in the sports of the field. We might, indeed, trace this characteristic versatility of the family as far back as Lord Herbert of Cherbury, but this is a portrait which we have wisely allowed Horace Walpole to paint in his own vivid colours. We shall display as much prudence in borrowing the pencil of another—himself one of the most eminent of American scholars—who has graphically depicted the prominent features of the subject of our notice:

"Mr. Herbert has long been known to the American reading world as a writer of great and versatile powers; a poet of vivid imagination and vigorous style; a successful novelist; an able and accomplished critic; and, to another class, whose reading is comparatively limited—the Nimrods of the land,—as a consummate master of the mysteries of their craft, practically experienced in all the ways of shooting, fishing, and hunting, and skilled to illustrate, alike with pen and pencil, the scenes of forest, river, lake, and hill, amidst which his amusements and their serious pursuits chiefly lie. And now he comes before the world in another character,—that of translator of the most difficult of the Attic tragedians."—PROFESSOR C. C. FELTON: Review of Herbert's Translations from Æschylus; N. Amer. Rev., lxix. 407-421.

We regret to add that, since the above was written, Mr. Herbert fell by his own hand, May 17, 1858.

Trans. into French by Wiquefort, with addits., Paris, 1663, 4to. At the end of Herbert's work is a curious Discourse, intended to prove that Prince Madoc ap Owen Gwynedd discovered America about three hundred years before Columbus's first voyage. Herbert spent four years in Asia and Africa.

Herbert, William, third Earl of Pembroke. 1580–1630, a native of Wilton, Wiltshire, educated at New College, Oxford, succeeded to his father's honours and estate, 1601; Knight of the Garter, 1604; Governor of Portsmouth, 1610; Chancellor of the University of Oxford, 1626; and about the same time made Lord-Steward of the King's Household. The character of this nobleman—who is supposed to be the "W. H." of Shakspeare's Sonnets—has been admirably drawn by the Earl of Clarendon; and to his lord-ship's History of the Rebellion, Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., Wood's Annals, Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors, Collins's Peerage, and Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, we refer the reader. Poems, written by William, Earl of Pembroke, &c., many of which are answered, by way of repartee, by Sir Benjamin Rudyard, Lon., 1660, 8vo. With other Poems, written by them occasionally and apart, Lon., 1660, 8vo. Hallam supposes that there is an earlier edit. New ed., with a Preface by Sir S. E. Brydges, 1817, 100 copies printed. See Lowndes's Bibl. Man., 1426.

"The poems, in general, are of little merit; some are grossly indecent: nor would they be mentioned here except for the interest recently attached to the author's name. But they throw no light whatever on the sonnets of Shakspeare."—HALLAM: ubi supra.

Watt attributes to his lordship a work entitled, Of the Internal and External State of Man in Christ, 1654, 4to. Certainly the earl's tastes were any thing but theological; though, indeed, Ben Jonson's compliment implies an impartial eclecticism:

"I do not name thee, Pembroke, and I find
It is an epigram on all mankind."

Pembroke College was named in honour of our noble author, who, let it not be forgotten, gave to the Bodleian Library 242 Greek MSS., purchased by him in Italy, and formerly the property of Francis Barroccio.

Herbert left an annotated copy of this work, with a view to a second ed., interleaved and bound in 6 vols., r. 4to. As a portion only of the first vol. was used by Dibdin, we hope that the balance will some day be appropriated by a judicious continuator of the Antiquities. The copy referred to was in 1848 in the possession of Mr. H. G. Bohn, London, and offered by him for the small sum of £12 12s.

"A production displaying a union of acuteness and erudition with great poetical talents."—HALLAM'S Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 39, v.

"A work conceived in a grand and simple spirit, and abounding in passages finely imagined and finely expressed. Few poems which have appeared within the last twenty years evince a more thorough preparation on the part of the writer, a deeper study of the subject, or a more just and masculine taste. It is not possible to take up a single book of the poem without being frequently reminded of Milton's best points,—his sublimity and his purity."—Edin. Rev.

"Attila was the last and most ambitious production of Herbert; his most laboured but not his most successful one. The fire of his youthful enthusiasm had been gradually turning out; and this he endeavoured, but vainly, to stoke for by a strict adherence to Aristotelian rules, backed by the Gallean codicils of Boileau and Bossu."—MOIR: ubi supra. See *Genl. "It is not often that we meet with a writer whose attainments are so various, and at the same time so accurate and profound, as those of the one now before us; while it has been the lot of few to fill, at various periods, stations in society which are generally reserved for those professionally educated for them alone, and from which they seldom depart; but we have had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Herbert as an orator in the House of Commons, we have heard him as an advocate at the bar, and we have listened to him as a preacher in the pulpit. As an author, we have found him in walks of science and literature very remote from each other, not often trodden by the same person, yet always marking his progress by the light he has thrown on his subjects, and, as it appears to us, showing both diligence and accuracy in recording facts, and philosophical discretion in reasoning from them."—*Lon. 8. American Drug Proving, Leipzig, Winter, 1853, vol. i.; vol. ii. in press. 9. One of the authors of the pamphlet The Voluntary System of Medical Education instituted by the Independent Medical School of Pa., 1854, Phila.

"The most important of his toxicological researches are the proving, by a long series of experiments, that the poison of snakes has, when taken inwardly, likewise a decided influence on the human economy, contradictory to the assertions of all other authors; further, that heat, in a bearable degree, destroys its poisonous qualities, and is thus the best remedy after a bite, applied locally at a distance from the wound, much better than brandy taken inwardly, which, however, in some cases may be united with it. He found that alcohol extracts a salt from the snake-poison, which has in some cases cured bites, and in a great many diseases, as apoplexy, paralysis, typhus, quinsy, &c., a curative influence. This discovery he applied to the saliva of the mad dog, and prevented hydrophobia by application of heat near the wound, which proved more effectual and certain than the process of burning it out, because the latter forms a scurf, which, as a non-conductor of heat, may protect the poison. From the same virus he found that alcohol also extracts a chemical compound, which has thus far seemed to be effectual as a remedy in preventing and curing hydrophobia. The same method has successfully been applied to small-pox and other contagious diseases of men and animals, according to the reports of numerous physicians. He was the first to propose sulphur as a preventive of Asiatic Cholera (1848) when applied as a powder between the stockings and the soles of the feet, it being absorbed, and without disturbing the intestines, exhaled at the pores of the skin as sulphuretted hydrogen, (blackening bright silver even on the forehead.) This process protects against cholera, and may perform the same use in other miasms."

Heron, Robert, 1764-1807, a native of New Galloway, Scotland, a man of improvident habits and considerable talents, wrote and trans. a number of works, of which the best-known are:—1. Journey in the Western Counties of Scotland, 1793, 2 vols. 8vo. 2. Hist. of Scotland, 1794-99, 6 vols. 8vo. 3. Universal Geography, 1798, 4 vols. 8vo. 4. The Comforts of Life, 1807. He was editor and contributor to several periodicals. See Chambers and Thomson's Biog. Diet. of Eminent Scotsmen; Murray's Lit. Hist. of Galloway; Disraeli's Calamities of Authors; Wat's Bibl. Brit.; Miller's Fly-Leaves, 1st Series, 36.

Herrick, Heyrick, Hearick, or Hiereck, Robert, 1591-1662? a divine and a very eminent poet, descended from Eric, a Danish chief temp. Alfred the Great, was a native of Cheapside, London. He studied at Cambridge, was presented to the living of Dean Prior, Devonshire, in 1629; was deprived by Cromwell in 1648; and reinstated in his living by Charles II. in 1660. 1. Hesperides; or, The Works, both Humane and Divine, of Robert Herrick, Lon., 1618, 8vo. To this vol. was appended his "Noble Numbers; or, his Pieces wherein (among other things) he sings the Birth of Christ, and sighs for his Saviour's Sufferings on the Cross," 1617, pp. 79. Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 310, £8 8s.

"These two books of poetry made him much admired in the time when they were published, especially by the generous and boon-loyalists among whom he was numbered as a sufferer."—Athen. Oxon.

2. Select Poems from the Hesperides, with Occasional Remarks by J. Nott, D.D., Bristol, 1810, sm. 8vo, pp. 253. 3. The Works of Robert Herrick, Edin., 1823, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. 4. Lon., 1825, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. 5. Hesperides, and Selected Works, by C. Short, 1839, 12mo. 6. Hesperides, 1844, 2 vols. 24mo. 7. 1846, 2 vols. 12mo. 8. 1846, 2 vols. p. 8vo. 9. Selections for Translations into Latin Verse, 1848, 12mo. 10. Hesperides, 1850, 18mo. 11. 1852. 12. 1856, 2 vols. 12mo.

"Herrick's Hesperides is a vol. of equal rarity and merit. Several of his poems have been revived in modern collections; the best perhaps will be found in Drake's Literary Hours; those which more especially relate to himself and his family, in Nichols's Hist. of Leicestershire, where also are several of his letters."—Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., iii. 251.

Among the best-known of his pieces are Cherry Ripe, Gather the Rose-buds when ye may, To Blossoms, To Daffodils, The Kiss, To Corinna, Poems to and upon Julia, To Primroses filled with Morning Dew, To Find God, and A Thanksgiving for his House.

Herrick is a most exquisite poet, but, unfortunately, delighted in the wanderings of a libertine muse. To quote the language of Dr. Drake, in the work just referred to:

"So injudiciously are the contents of his volume disposed, and so totally divested of order and propriety, that it would almost seem the poet wished to pollute and bury his best effusions in a mass of nonsense and obscenity. Nine persons out of ten who should casually dip into the collection would, in all probability, after glancing over a few trifling epigrams, throw it down with indignation, little apprehending it contained many pieces of a truly moral and pathetic, and of an exquisitely rural and descriptive, strain. Such, however, is the case."—Literary Hours, 1820, i. 14; and see ii. 253-257.

We quote some other opinions respecting the characteristics of this favourite poet.

Phillips, rather coldly, allows him to have shown occasionally "a pretty flowery and pastoral gale of fancy," (Theatrum Poetarum;) but another contemporary critic assures us, with more vehemence than elegance, that

"..... Hecce,
He was but a sour ass,
And good for nothing but lyric;
There's but one to be found
In all English ground
Writes so well, who is hight Robert Herrick."

Naps upon Parnassus. (1658.)

But let us look a little into the verdict of modern criticism:

"He has much of the lively grace that distinguishes Anacreon and Catullus, and approaches also, with a less cloying monotony, to the Basin of Joannes Secundus. Herrick has as much variety as the poetry of kisses can well have; but his love is in a very slight degree that of sentiment, or even any intense passion; his mistresses have little to recommend them, even in his own eyes, save their beauties, and none of these are omitted in his catalogues. Yet he is abundant in the resources of verse; without the exuberant gaiety of Suckling, or, perhaps, the delicacy of Carew, he is sportive, fanciful, and generally of polished language."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe.

"More than any eminent writer of that day, Herrick's collection requires careful sifting; but there is so much fancy, so much delicacy, so much grace, that a good selection would well repay the publisher. Bits there are that are exquisite; as when, in enumerating the eates composing Oberon's Feast, in his Fairy-land, he includes, among a strange variegation of unimaginable dishes,

"'The broke heart of a nightingale
O'ercome in music.'

"Some of his pieces, too, contain curious illustrations of the customs, manners, and prejudices of our ancestors. . . . But his real delight was among flowers and bees, and nymphs and cupids; and certainly these graceful subjects were never handled more gracefully."—MARY RUSSELL MITFORD: Recollections of a Literary Life.

"Herrick's vein of poetry is very irregular; but where the ore is pure it is of high value. . . . To his Hesperides, or Works Humane and Divine, he added some pieces on religious subjects, where his volatile genius was not in her element."—Campbell's Notices of the British Poets.

"Herrick possessed a vigour of fancy, a warmth of feeling, a soundness of sense, and an ease of versification, sufficient to rank him very high in the scale of English minor poets."—Lon. Quar. Rev., iv. 167-174.

"He displays considerable facility of simple diction, and considerable variety of lyrical versification. He is successful in imitating the spiritfulness of Amoreonic zephyr and the lush neatness of the ancient anthologists."—Blackwood's Mag., xlv. 782-794, q. v.; see also xxxiv. 123.

"Forgetting the impurities of our author, and estimating the chaste effusions of his licentious genius, we do not hesitate to pronounce him the very best of English Lyric Poets. He is the most joyous and gladsome of bards; singing like the grasshopper, as if he would never grow old. He is as fresh as the spring, as blithe as summer, and as ripe as autumn. We know of no English poet who is so abandonné, as the French term it, who so wholly gives himself up to his present feelings, who is so much heart and soul in what he writes, and this not on one subject only, but on all subjects alike. . . . His poems resemble a luxuriant meadow, full of king-cups and wild-flowers, or a July firmament sparkling with a myriad of stars."—Lon. Retrosp. Rev., v. 156-180, 1822.

See also Nichols's Hist. of Leicestershire; Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 43; Genl. Mag., lxxvi., Pt. 1, 381, 461, 463; Pt. 2, 645, 736; lxxvii., Pt. 1, 102.

The Herricks of New England are descended from the ancient family which claims the poet; and A Genealogical Register of the name and family of Herrick was pub. by Jedediah Herrick, in 1846, at Bangor, Maine.

The poetry of Herrick had been wellnigh forgotten until about the commencement of the present century, when, by the exertions of Dr. Nott, Dr. Drake, Mr. Ellis, and a writer in the Genl. Mag. for 1796 (see ante), he secured a popularity which seems likely to remain permanent among the disciples of the school of English Lyric Poetry. If we are deemed unnecessarily harsh in our condemnation of those licentious strains which disfigure the beauty of so many pages of Herrick's HESPERIDES, we need do no more than record the author's own untutored verdict on these frequent transgressions against good taste and good morals:

"For these my unbaptized rhymes,
Writ in my wild unallowed times,—
For every sentence, clause, and word,
That's not inlaid with thee, O Lord!—
Forgive me, God, and blot each line
Out of my book that is not thine;
But if 'mongst all thou findest one
Worthy thy benediction,
That one of all the rest shall be
The glory of my work and me."

It is well thus to repent of an offence; but far better would it have been never to have offended!

Herschel, Caroline Lucretia, 1750-1848, sister and assistant of the distinguished astronomer, Dr. William Herschel, was also a native of Hanover, where she resided until her twenty-second year, when she joined her brother William, then a musician, at Bath, in England. On her brother's death, in 1822, she returned to Hanover, after a residence in England of more than half a century. She made a number of astronomical discoveries, (see Gent. Mag., April, 1848.) and gave to the world—1. A Catalogue of 561 stars observed by Flamsteed. 2. A General Index of Reference to every Observation of every Star inserted in the British Catalogue; with introductory and explanatory remarks to each of them, by Wm. Herschel, LL.D. These two works were pub. together in one vol. by the Royal Society, Lon., 1798, fol. Miss Herschel also completed the reduction and arrangement of a Zone-Catalogue of all the nebulae and clusters of stars observed by her brother in his sweeps,—a work which was rewarded by the Gold Medal of the Astronomical Society of London, in 1828. Miss H. also pub. An Account of a New Comet, Phil. Trans., 1787; Discovery of a New Comet, Phil. Trans., 1796.

Miss Bouvier's Familiar Astronomy—just referred to—has elicited warm commendations from distinguished authorities: and it will be found an invaluable assistant and an agreeable companion in every family, school, or private library.

Herschel, Sir John Frederick William, D.C.L., Master of the Mint since 1850, an eminent astronomer, b. 1790, at Slough, near Windsor, England, is the only son of the distinguished astronomer, Sir William Herschel. After completing his studies at St. John's College, Cambridge, and attaining great distinction as a mathematician, he naturally turned his attention to the noble science which had already made his name immortal. His success in this brilliant field of investigation is too well known to call for much comment at our hands. In 1838 he was made a baronet; in 1839 created a D.C.L. of Oxford; and in 1842 elected Lord-Rector of Marischal College, Aberdeen. In addition to many papers pub. in the Transactions of the Royal Society and of the Astronomical Society, a reconstruction (in conjunction with Peacock) of Lacroix's treatise on the Differential Calculus, editing Spence's Mathematical Essays, and contributing treatises on Sound, Light, and Physical Astronomy, to the Encyclopædia Metropolitana, and other essays to various journals, Sir John Herschel has given to the world the following valuable works: 1. A Preliminary Discourse on the Study of Natural Philosophy, Lon., 1830, 12mo, pp. 372; vol. xiv. of Lardner's Cyc. New ed., 1851, 12mo.

"Without doing more than alluding to the delight with which this work has been several times perused by the writer of these pages, he can assure the reader that he has frequently heard the most eminent scientific men speak of it as a singularly beautiful, accurate, and masterly performance. Its author will be universally admitted to be consummately qualified for such an undertaking,—as far as the union of exact and profound science with elegant and varied accomplishments and refined taste can be considered as constituting such qualification. The style is severely chaste, and not obscured by technicalities."—Warren's Law Studies, 2d ed., 1845, 196-197.

An eminent modern authority, referring to Professor Playfair's abstract—in his Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit.—of the second book of Bacon's Novum Organum, and the commentator's illustrations from modern science, remarks:

"Sir John Herschel, in his admirable Discourse on Natural Philosophy, has added a greater number from still more recent discoveries, and has also furnished such a luminous development of the difficulties of the Novum Organum as had been vainly hoped for in former times."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, vol. ii. 412; see also same vol., 411, n., 412, n.

"This discourse, as a collection of important facts interesting to every human being, is without a rival. The whole is a masterpiece, that reflects the highest honour on the author, not less as a philosopher than as a man."—Lon. Month. Rev.

See Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxxviii. 374-407; lxxxv. 3.

"Sir John Herschel is eminently qualified for this task, being a distinguished example of a person possessing a profound and complete knowledge of almost every branch of physics."—Lon. Quar. Rev.

2. A Treatise on Astronomy, 1833, 12mo; vol. xliii. of Lardner's Cyc.

"We recommend it to the attention of everybody who wishes to become acquainted with the sublime truths of astronomy, without having his mind harassed by the technical details which render almost all other works of the kind repulsive to the general reader."—Lon. Quar. Rev. See Edin. Rev., lviii. 164-168.

3. A Treatise on Physical Astronomy, 4to. 4. Results of Astronomical Observations made during the years 1834, '35, '36, '37, '38, at the Cape of Good Hope; being the completion of a Telescopic Survey of the whole Surface of the Visible Heavens, commenced in 1825, 4to, 1847.

"The work whose title we have placed at the head of this article forms the record of the completion of the greatest astronomical enterprise that was ever undertaken by the members of one family. It was begun about seventy years ago, by Sir William Herschel, the father, assisted by his sister Caroline and his brother Alexander, and continued by him, with little or no interruption, almost down to the close of a very long life. . . . In 1825 it was resumed by his son."—Edin. Rev., lxxxviii. 104-143.

5. Outlines of Astronomy, 1849, 8vo. This may be considered an enlarged ed. of No. 2. 5th ed., thoroughly revised and corrected to the existing state of astronomical science, 1858, 8vo. See *Lon. "We take our leave of this remarkable work, which we hold to be, beyond a doubt, the most remarkable of the works in which the laws of astronomy and the appearances of the heavens are described to those who are not mathematicians nor observers, and recalled to those who are. . . . It is the reward of men who can descend from the advancement of knowledge to care for its diffusion, that their works are essential to all,—that they become the manuals of the proficient as well as the text-books of the learner."—Lon. Athenæum, ubi supra.

6. A Manual of Scientific Enquiry, 1849, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1851, p. 8vo. Edited by Sir John F. W. Herschel. Pub. by Authority of the Lords-Commissioners of the Admiralty. Prepared for the use of H. M. Navy, and for travellers in general. The treatises in this vol.—which are by the editor, Sir W. J. Hooker, Sir H. De La Beche, Lt.-Col. Sabine, Drs. Whewell, Pritchard, and Bryson, and Messrs. Airy, Beechey, Hamilton, Darwin, Mallet, Birt, Owen, and Porter—were drawn up at the request of the late Lord Auckland, in accordance with a memorandum by the Lords of the Admiralty. It may well be believed that such a volume is literally invaluable.

"The reader has the pith of the matter by the shortest cut, and pretty much as a professional pupil would be taught by a practical man. He is told to do the easiest things, and how to do them; and what might not always be gotten from a practical man, indications are often given of the principles of the science, and the best elementary books are pointed out. A Manual of Scientific Enquiry will not only be found an admirable book for its express object, but may be used advantageously by all travellers, and perused with interest at home."—Lon. Spectator. See also Lon. M. Herald, 1849.

Great as are the obligations of the world to Sir John Herschel, the public are not willing to abandon the hope of further illustrations of the noble science of which he is so erudite a professor. To adopt the language of an ardent admirer of his works,

"If his day of laborious observation be over, we trust that of thought and speculation will continue."—Lon. Athen., ubi supra.

Herschel, Sir William, LL.D., 1738-1822. one of the most illustrious of astronomers, was a native of Hanover, the son of a musician, who educated his five sons to the same profession. At the age of fourteen William was placed in the band of the Hanoverian Foot Guards; but, dissatisfied with this humble position, he determined to try his fortune in England, where he arrived about the end of 1757. Whilst busily employed as a teacher of music, he yet found leisure for the prosecution of his studies in mathematics, and especially in astronomy, for which science he entertained an enthusiastic attachment. Having succeeded, after many trials, in making a number of excellent telescopes, he commenced his observations in 1776, and continued them with unwearied zeal. At length, in 1781, he discovered what he at first thought a comet, but what proved to be a new planet,—the Georgium Sidus, now called Uranus, from its being next to Saturn. For a detailed account of the results of his observations—which were continued until within a few months of his death—we must refer the reader to the list of his papers in Phil. Trans., 1780-1820; contrib. to Nich. Jour. and to Trans. Astron. Soc.; Arago's account of Herschel in the Annuaire, 1842; Annual Biography, Lon., 1823; Gent. Y. Eccl. Mus., ii. 556. See also HERSCHEL, CAROLINE LUCRETIA; HERSCHEL, SIR JOHN FREDERICK WILLIAM.

In 1786 Herschel received the degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford; in 1816 he was knighted, and in 1820 elected the first President of the Astronomical Society.

"As an astronomer he was surpassed by no one of the present age; and the depth of his scientific research and extent of his observations rendered him perhaps second only to the immortal Newton."—Lon. Gent. Mag., ubi supra.

But we must not forget to quote the eloquent tribute of the historian of modern Europe to the merits of the illustrious subject of our notice:

"Herschel, by multiplying with incredible labour and skill the powers of the telescope, was enabled to look further into space than man had ever done before, discover a world hitherto unseen in the firmament, and in the Georgian Sidus, add a 'new string to the lyre of heaven.'"—Alison's Hist. of Europe, 1815-52, chap. v.

Hervey, James, 1713-14-1758, a profound scholar and exemplary divine, a native of Hardingstone, was educated at Lincoln College, Oxford; Curate of Dummer, Hampshire, about 1736; obtained the livings of Weston-Favei and Collingtree about 1752. Mr. Hervey pub. many occasional serms., and several works, of which the following are the best-known: 1. Meditations and Contemplations: vol. i., containing Meditations among the Tombs; Reflections on a Flower Garden; and a Descant on Creation, Lon., 1746, 8vo; vol. ii., containing Contemplations on the Night and Starry Heavens, and a Winter Piece, 1747, 8vo. Many eds. Generally bound together, and referred to as one work, under the title of Hervey's Meditations. Last ed., 1855, 12mo. In Blank Verse, by Thos. Newcomb, 1757, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Hervey's Meditations, with the Pilgrim's Progress, the Duty of Man, and the Bible, are commonly seen together on a shelf in the cottages in England."

The style of the Meditations is highly poetical, and abounds in imagery not always of the most classical description; but this floridity, which displeased the critics, enchanted the multitude. Southey remarks that the work is "Not more laudable in its purport than vicious in its style, and therefore, one of the most popular that ever was written."

Another critic remarks:

"I cannot help thinking that it reflects more honour on the religious turn and good dispositions of the present age, than on the public taste, that Mr. Hervey's Meditations have had so great a currency. The pious and benevolent heart which is always displayed in them, and the lively fancy which, on some occasions, appears, justly invited applause; but the perpetual glitter of expression, the swollen imagery and strained description which abound in them, are ornaments of a false kind. I would, therefore, advise students of oratory to imitate Mr. Hervey's piety rather than his style; and, in all compositions of a serious kind, to turn their attention, as Mr. Pope says, 'from sounds to things, from fancy to the heart.'"—Blair's Lects. on Rhet. and Belles-Lettres.

"Prosaic versus, everybody knows, is what anybody may write and nobody will endure, nor, in a polite age, can it, under any circumstances, be rendered attractive. But poetical prose, though the dullest, heaviest, clumsiest kind of literature, has, in some notorious instances, found more favour. . . . Some works of this description, however, have been extensively read in our refractory language; but their day is gone by. The pious sentiments of Hervey's Meditations recommended the fantastic style in which they were disguised to multitudes, who persuaded themselves that they were pleased because they supposed that, in such a case, they ought to be, with fine words and so many of them."—Montgomery's Lects. on General Lit., Poetry, &c.

And see extract from Williams's Christian Preacher, at conclusion of this article.

"To attempt to describe all the beauties and perfections of his CONTEMPLATIONS and DIALOGUES would be as vain as to try to paint the beams of the sun in its meridian glory."—Dr. Ryland's Cotton Mather.

New eds., 2 vols. 18mo; 2 vols. 8vo; 1 vol. 8vo; 1837, 1 vol. 8vo, pp. 690; see No. 6, post. This work advocates very strenuously the doctrine of the imputed righteousness of Christ, and in consequence thereof it was attacked by a number of writers. See Robert Sandeman's Letters on Theron and Aspasio, 4th ed., 1768, 2 vols. 8vo, where will be found an account of the progress of the controversy and of the principal pieces that were written against Theron and Aspasio; list of works on the subject in Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 760-761; authorities cited below.

4. VIII. Serms., Oxf., 1759, 12mo. 5. Hervey's Letters; with an Account of his Life and Death, 1760, Lon., 2 vols. 12mo; Berwick, 1770, 8vo. 6. XI. Letters to John Wesley, in answer to his Remarks on Theron and Aspasio; from the author's MS.; pub. by his brother, W. Hervey, Lon., 1764, 8vo. These letters will be found in Tegg's ed. of Theron and Aspasio, 1837, 8vo, and perhaps in other eds.

"In his letters to Wesley you have a most glorious and divine exposition of some striking passages."—DR. RYLAND.

7. Letters to Lady Shirley, 1782, 8vo, consists of 118 Letters, 1750-58. 8. Collected Works. ("genuine edition," containing the above works, and others,) Newcastle, 1806, 6 vols. 8vo. This ed. was pub. by Messrs. Rivington, whose predecessor pub. all of Hervey's works. Works, 1769, 6 vols. 8vo; 1790, 9 vols. cr. 8vo; 1797, 7 vols. 8vo. 9. Letters, Elegant, Interesting and Evangelical, Lon., 1811, 8vo. This may be considered as a 7th vol. of his Works. Hervey wrote a Preface for Burnham's Memorials of Pious Women, 1753, 8vo, (see p. 30 of this Dictionary,) and edited, with a Preface, an ed. of Jenks's Meditations, 1757. See Life of Hervey, prefixed to his Letters and to his Works; Beauties of Hervey, with his Life, 1782, 12mo; Dr. Ryland's Character and Letters of Hervey, 1791, 8vo; (very scarce, Dr. Ryland's son having bought all the copies he could procure, and destroyed them: copies have brought two guineas for libraries;) Life and Character of Hervey, by John Brown, 1822, 8vo; Herveiana, or graphic and literary Sketches of the Life and Writings of the Rev. James Hervey, Scarbro', 1822, 12mo; Bickersteth's Christian Student, 4th ed., Lon., 1844, fol. 8vo; Jamieson's Cyc. of Mod. Relig. Biog., 1853, p. 8vo.

"In Hervey's works are displayed a firm faith in the divine testimony, and strong traits of benevolence, in a style too rich and ornamental: he, therefore, may be read to great profit, in order to strengthen our faith in the promises, to raise our affections towards heaven, and even to improve our style, when that verges to the contrary extreme of poverty, whether of expression, description, or figurative language; but a rich fancy without a critical judgment should beware of Hervey as a model."—Williams's Christian Preacher.

The reader will be pleased to have Hervey's own estimate of his abilities:

"My friend," said he to Dr. Ryland, "I have not a strong mind; I have not powers fitted for arduous researches; but I think I have a power of writing in somewhat of a striking manner, so far as to please mankind and recommend my dear Redeemer."

He tells us that the first book which gave him "a clear light and understanding of the Gospel" was J. L. Zimmerman's Excellency of the Knowledge of Jesus Christ: "it is enriched with deep religious experience, and was his bosom companion." Trans. by Moses Browne, Lon., 1772, 12mo.

Hervey, John, Lord Hervey, of Ickworth, 1696-1743, indecently attacked, by the name of "Sporus," by Pope, in the Prologue to the Satires, contributed to Middleton's Life of Cicero the translations from that author, wrote some of the best political pamphlets in defence of Sir Robert Walpole, a number of poetical pieces, and some miscellaneous compositions, for a list of which see Park's Walpole's R. & N. Authors. Also consult Brydges's Colin's Peerage; Bowles's Pope; Cox's Memoirs of Walpole; Swift's Works. The Letters between Lord Hervey and Dr. Middleton concerning the Roman Senate were pub. from the original MSS., by Thomas Knowles, D.D., in 1778, 4to. The best of his lordship's poetical effusions are in Dodsley's Collection. There appeared in 1848, 2 vols. 8vo, edited by the Rt. Hon. J. W. Croker, from the family archives at Ickworth, Lord Hervey's Memoirs of the Court of George the Second and Queen Caroline. New ed., 1854, 2 vols. 8vo.

"I know of no such near and intimate picture of the interior of a court. No other Memoirs that I have ever read bring us so immediately, so actually, into not merely the presence, but the company, of the personages of the royal circle."

"Lord Hervey is, I may venture to say, almost the Boswell of George II. and Queen Caroline."—Editor's Preface.

"These volumes are, in every sense of the word, the greatest accession to our English historical literature of a recent period made since the publication of PEYPS'S DIARY and WALPOLE'S MEMOIRS. The style, if we forgive a certain antithesis of manner, is good—the observations are from the fountain-head—the characters are remarkably well drawn—and the matter is curiously confirmatory of Walpole's Reminiscences, Letters, and Memoirs."

"The Editor's notes are just what notes should be,—short, useful, generally accurate, and always to the point."—Lon. Athenaeum.

Hervey, Lady Mary, wife of the preceding, and daughter of Brigadier-General Nicholas Leppell, is often mentioned in Pope's and Horace Walpole's Works, and always with praise. Her Letters were pub., Lon., 1821, 8vo. They contain notices and anecdotes of Lords Chesterfield, Orford, Mulgrave, Stair, &c.; also of a number of ambassadors, divines, authors, &c. of the day.

Hervey, Hon. Thomas. 1. Letter to Sir T. Hanmer, Lon., 1741, 8vo. 2. Let. to the Rev. Sir W. Bunbury, 1741, 8vo. 3. Let. to Wm. Pitt, 1746, 8vo.

Hervey, Rev. Thomas. Elementa Christiana; the XXXIX. Articles proved to be agreeable to the Word of God, Kendall, 1791, 12mo.

"An evangelical exposition of the Articles."—Bickersteth's C. S.

Hervey, Thomas Kibble, Editor of the Athenaeum for about eight years, (prior to 1854.) b. in Manchester, England, 1804, has attained a considerable reputation for poetical and critical abilities. After receiving his education at Oxford and Cambridge, he devoted some time to legal studies, but soon abandoned Coke and Blackstone for the more congenial pursuit of letters. We may be permitted to express our surprise that one who has written with such success should have written so little.

1. Australia, and other Poems, Lon., 1824, 12mo.

"Where almost every line is beautiful selection is difficult; and were we to indulge our admiration, by selecting every part of this elegant poem which claims it, our extracts might subject us to the charge of piracy."—British Critic, Aug. 1824.

2. The Poetical Sketch-Book, including a Third Edition of Australia, 1829, p. 8vo. Many of the poems in this collection were originally pub. in the Annuals of the day.

"Florante, the most exquisite poem of its length almost ever written, opens the book. It is needless to make a selection from what is already so popular."—Literary Gazette, 1829, 360.

3. Illustrations of Modern Sculpture, with 18 Engravings, 1832, fol.

"This charming work includes Baily's Eve at the Fountain, and Sleeping Nymph; Westmacott's Distressed Mother, and Happy Mother; Chantley's Sleeping Children; Canova's Dancing Girl, Venus, and Beneficence; Flaxman's Michael and Satan, and Mercury and Pandora; Thorwaldsen's Hebe, &c."

4. The English Helicon, 1841, p. 8vo. 5. The Book of Christmas.

"Every leaf of this book affords a feast worthy of the season."—Dr. Hawley's (New York) Church Record.

Mr. Hervey is also the author of a satirical poem entitled The Devil's Progress, and many popular pieces contributed to the pages of Friendship's Offering, (for some time edited by Mr. H.,) The Literary Souvenir, &c. See Blackwood's Magazine, xvii. 98–99, xix. 88–89; Men of the Time, Lon., 1856.

"The genius of T. K. Hervey (for he has genius at once pathetic and refined) is not unalloyed to that of Pringle and Watts, but with a dash of Thomas Moore. He writes uniformly with taste and elaboration, polishing the careless and rejecting the crude; and, had he addressed himself more earnestly and unreservedly to the task of composition, I have little doubt, from several specimens he has occasionally exhibited, that he might have occupied a higher and more distinguished place in our poetical literature than he can be said to have attained. His Australia, and several of his lyrics, were juvenile pledges of future excellence which maturity can scarcely be said to have fully redeemed."—Moir's Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century.

Hervey, Mrs. Thomas Kibble, married in 1843 to the preceding, previously known as Miss Eleonora Louisa Montagu, was b. in 1811, at Liverpool, and is a daughter of George Conway Montagu, Esq., of Lackham, Wilts, a member of a collateral branch of the family of the Dukes of Manchester. Miss Montagu acquired celebrity at an early age by her poetical contributions to the Annuals and other periodicals. In 1839 she pub. The Landgrave, a Dramatic Poem, and since her marriage has given to the world—Margaret Russell, an Autobiography, 1849, fp. 8vo; The Double Claim, 1849, sq., 1853; The Pathway of the Fawn, 1851, sq., 1852; (see Athenaeum, No. 1262;) Juvenile Calendar and Zodiac of Flowers; with twelve Illustrations of the Month, by Richard Doyle; new ed., 1855, 16mo.

"One of the most charming gift-books for the young which we have ever met with."—Non-conformist.

"Never has the graceful pencil of Mr. Doyle been more gracefully employed than in sketching the charming illustrations of this charming volume."—London Sun.

Heylin, or Heylyn, Peter, D.D., 1600–1662, a native of Burford, Oxfordshire, was educated at Hart Hall, and elected Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford; Rector of Hemmingford, Huntingdonshire, and Preb. of Westminster, Oct. 1631, and shortly afterwards Rector of Houghton; deprived during the Rebellion, but reinstated in all his ecclesiastical honours at the Restoration. Heylin pub. at least thirty-seven works,—theological, political, educational, historical, &c.—the most of which are now almost entirely forgotten. Among the principal are—1. Microcosmus; or, Description of the World, Oxon., 1622, 4to; 7th ed., improved, &c. by EDMUND BOHUN, 1703, fol. 2. A Help to English History, Lon., 1641, 4to. First pub. under the name of Rob. Hall, Gent. After several eds. had appeared, it was pub., brought down to 1773, by P. Wright, 1773, 8vo. 3. Hist. of the Sabbath, 1636, 4to. 4. Hist. of Episcopie, 1642, '57, 4to. First pub. under the name of Theop. Churchman. 5. Hist. of the Reformation of the Church of Scotland, 1644, '60, fol.

"A party writer, to be read with caution. He perverts and misrepresents."—Bieberstett's C. S.

6. Cyprinnus Anglicus; or, The Life and Death of Archbishop Laud, 1644, '68, '71, fol.; Dubl., 1719, fol. 7. Relation of Two Journeys, the one into France, the other into some of the adjacent Islands, Lon., 1656, 4to. 8. France painted to the Life, 1657, 8vo. Anon. Falsely attributed to Heylin; see ATHEN. OXON. 9. Examen Historicum, 1658, '59, 8vo. This is an attack upon histories by Thomas Fuller and Wm. Sanderson; see FULLER, THOMAS, p. 614.

10. Discovery and Removal of the Stumbling-Block of Disobedience and Rebellion, cunningly laid down in the Subject's Way by Calvin, 1658, 4to. 11. Certamen Epistolare, 1659, 8vo. 12. Declaration of the Judgment of the Western Churches in five Controverted Points, reproached in these late times by the name of Arminianism, 1660, 4to; 1673, 8vo. This involved the author in a controversy with some able writers. 13. Ecclesia Restaurata; or, The Hist. of the Reformation of the Church of England, 1661, '70, '74, fol. New ed., with Life of the Author by John Barnard, D.D. Edited for the Eccles. Hist. Society by James C. Robertson, Camb., 1819, 2 vols. 8vo. 14. Aeris Redivivus; or, The Hist. of the Presbyterians from 1536 to 1647, Oxf., 1670, fol.; Lon., 1672, fol.

Heylin, in his history of the Puritans and the Presbyterians, blackens them for political devils. He is the spagnolet of history, delighting himself with horrors at which the painter himself must have started. He tells of their oppositions to monarchical and episcopal government, their innovations in the church, and their embroilments of the kingdom. The sword rages in their hands; treason, sacrilege, plunder; while more of the blood of Englishmen had poured like water within the space of four years, than had been shed in the civil wars of York and Lancaster in four centuries."—Disraeli's Curiosities of Literature.

15. The Voyage of France; or, A Complete Journey through France, [in 1625,] 1673, 8vo, 1679.

"This volume, however, we assure our readers, is of a most amusing description, and indicative of great reading and acquisitions for the age at which it was written. It is full of the effervescence of young life and animal spirits. The air of France seems to have actually converted the author into a Frenchman, whose vivacity, point, and badinage, he seems to have imbibed. The very nomenclature he touched the Gallic soil he cast away his canonicals, and became the most facetious and joyous of good fellows, the most lively of tourists."—Lon. Retrospect, Rev. iii. 22–31, 1821.

16. Historical and Miscellaneous Tracts; collected by the Rev. George Vernon, with an Account of the Author's Life, 1681, fol. A New Life of Heylin, by his son-in-law, John Barnard, D.D., 1682, 12mo. See BARNARD, JOHN, p. 124; and for a particular account of the controversy between Barnard and Vernon, see DISRAELI'S Curiosities of Literature, article The Rival Biographers of Heylin. "He was a person endowed with singular gifts, of a sharp and pregnant wit, solid and clear judgment. In his younger years he was accounted an excellent poet, but very conceited and pragmatical; in his elder, a better historian, a noted preacher, and a ready or extemporean speaker."—Athen. Ozon.

Heywood, or Haywood, Mrs. Eliza, 1693?-1756, daughter of a London tradesman named Fowler, pub. a number of loose novels, which gave her a place in the Dunciad. Her late publications were of a less exceptionable character. Among the best-known of these mischievous productions are The Secret History of the present Intrigues of the Court of Caramania, 2d ed., Lon., 1727, 8vo; and The New Utopia. Her latter writings are—1. The Female Spectator, 4 vols. 2. Epistles for the Ladies, 2 vols. 3. Fortunate Foundling, 1 vol. 4. Adventures of Nature, 1 vol. 5. History of Betty Thoughtless, 4 vols. 6. Jenny and Jemmy Jessamy, 3 vols. 7. Invisible Spy, 2 vols. 8. Husband and Wife, 2 vols. 9. A Present for a Servant Maid, pamphlet. The above are all 12mo. She wrote several other works, and some plays. See Biog. Dramat.; The Tatler, with Notes; Bowles's ed. of Pope; Drake's Essays, vol. iv.

Heywood, Ellis, d. about 1572, a son of John Heywood, the dramatic poet, (post), was elected Fellow of All-Souls College in 1547, and subsequently became a Jesuit, and died at Louvain. He wrote a book in Italian, entitled Il Moro, Florence, 1556, 8vo.

"Contains a discourse, fancied to be in the house of Sir Tho. More, some-time L. Chan. of England, and in consultation with him."—Athen. Oxon., q. v.

Wood thinks that he wrote some other works.

Heywood, James. Serms., Lon., 1756, 8vo.

Heywood, Jasper, 1535?-1598, Fellow of Merton College, a son of John Heywood, the dramatic poet, (post), trans. into English three tragedies of Seneca.—Thyestes, 1560, 12mo; Troas, 1560, 16mo, 1581, 4to; Hercules Furcans, 1561, '81, 4to,—and various Poems and Devices, some of which are printed in The Paradise of Dainty Devices, 1573, 4to. See Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon.; Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet.; Chalmers's Biog. Dict.

Heywood, John, d. 1565, Court Jester, and one of the earliest dramatic writers, a native of North Mims, near St. Alban's, educated at Oxford, was a great favourite with Henry VIII., and Queen Mary, his successor, on account of "the mirth and quickness of his conceits." On the death of Mary, fearing that his principles as a Roman Catholic would invite persecution, he retired to Mechlin, in Brabant, where he resided until his death. A collection of his works was pub. in 1562, 4to; also in 1556, '66, '76, '87, '98, all 4to. His longest production is a poem entitled The Spider and the Flie, 1556, 4to. This allegorical work—containing ninety-eight chapters in the octave stanza—is intended to vindicate the Roman Catholic administration, of which the author was an admirer. Queen Mary is represented by the maid with her broom, (the civil sword,) executing the commands of her master, (Christ,) and her mistress, (the Church.) The Flies are the Roman Catholics, and the Spiders are the Protestants. The author has not made his illustrations very clear; for Harrison declares

"One hath made a booke of the SPIDER AND THE FLIE, wherein he dealeth so profoundlie, and beyond all measure of skill, that neither he himselfe that made it, neither anie one that read-th it, can reach unto the meaning thereof."—Description of Britaine; prefixed to Holinshed's Chronicle.

As a poet Heywood does not seem to have been more successful than as a theologian:

"Perhaps there never was so dull, so tedious and trifling an apologue: without fancy, meaning, or moral."—Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry.

This vol. is very rare, and has been sold at high prices. Of Heywood's poetical Dialogue, containing the number in effect of all the Proverbs in the English language, (1547, 8vo,) and his three quarto pamphlets, containing 600 epigrams, there were numerous editions before the year 1598, in which year appeared the last ed. of his Works, 4to. None of his dramatic works, which are six in number, extend beyond the limits of an interlude. Their titles are: 1. A Play between Johan the husband, Tyb the wife, and Sir Johan the priest, 1593, 4to. 2. A merry Play between the Pardoner and the Friar, the Curate and Neighbour Prat, 1593, 4to. 3. The Play called The Four P. P.; a newe and a very merry Interlude of a Palmer, a Pardoner, a Potycary, and a Peillar, N. D. D. C., 4to. 4. A Play of Gentleness and Nobility, N. D., Int., 4to. 5. A Play of Love, Int., 1533, 4to. 6. A Play of the Weather, Int., 1533, 4to.

"His comedies, most of which appeared before the year 1534, are destitute of plot, humour, or character, and give us no very high opinion of the festivity of this agreeable companion. They consist of low incident and the language of ribaldry. But perfection must not be expected before its time. He is called our first writer of comedies. But those who say this speak without determinate ideas, and confound comedies with moralities and interludes. We will allow that he is among the first of our dramatists who drove the fable from the stage and introduced representations of familiar life and popular manners. . . . His Epigrams, six hundred in number, are probably some of his jokes versified, and perhaps were often extemporaneous sallies, made and repeated in company. Wit and humour are ever found in proportion to the progress of politeness. The miserable drolleries and the contemptible quibbles with which these little pieces are pointed indicate the great want of refinement, not only in the composition, but in the conversation, of our ancestors. . . . Another of Heywood's works is a poem in long verse, entitled A Dialogue containing in effect the number of all the PROVERBS in the English tongue compact in a matter concerning two marriages. . . . All the proverbs of the English language are here interwoven into a very silly comic tale."—Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet.

"Of John Heywood, the favourite jester of Henry the Eighth and his daughter Mary, and the intimate of Sir Thomas More, whose congenial humour may have mingled with his own, more table-talk and promptness at reply have been handed down to us than any writer of the times. His quips, and quirks, and quibbles, are of his age, but his copious pleasantry still enlivens; these smoothed the brow of Henry, and relaxed the rigid muscles of the melancholy Mary."—Disraeli's Amusements of Literature.

Heywood, Nathaniel, 1633-1677, Minister at Ormskirk, Lancashire, brother of Oliver Heywood, and also a Non-conformist divine. Christ Displayed; being a series of Serms., 1679. Pub. by Oliver Heywood, his brother, who also wrote his Life. See Oliver Heywood's Works, ed. 1827, vol. i. 447.

Heywood, Oliver, 1620-1702, a Non-conformist divine, a native of Bolton, Lancashire, admitted of Trin. Coll., Camb., 1647; minister of Halifax, 1652; deprived at the Restoration. He wrote a number of serms., &c. His treatise entitled Life in God's Favour was reprinted by John Fawcett, D.D., who also wrote a Sketch of the author's Life, 1798, 8vo. His Life, by Rev. J. Hunter, was pub. in 1842, '44, 8vo; and in 1827 (5 vols. 8vo) appeared (by Vint) his Whole Works now first collected, revised and arranged; including some tracts exceedingly rare, and others from unpublished MSS.

CONTENTS:—Heart Treasure, Sure Mercies of David, Closet-Prayer, Intercession of Christ, Life in God's Favour, Israel's Lamentation, Job's Appeal, Baptismal Bonds, Family Altar, Best Entail, Heavenly Converse, New Creature, The Two Worlds, Meetness for Heaven, Youth's Monitor, Sermons, &c.

Vol. i. contains Memoirs of Heywood, by the Rev. Richard Slate, and revised by the editor of Mr. Heywood's works.

"Heywood's works are valuable in themselves, and are strongly recommended by the most excellent character of the writer."—Williams's C. P.

"He [Serjeant Heywood] has not the talent of saying what he has to say quickly; nor is he aware that brevity is in writing what charity is to all other virtues. Righteousness is worth nothing without the other: nor authorship without the other. But whoever will forgive this little defect will find, in all his productions, great learning, immaculate honesty, and the most scrupulous accuracy. Whatever detections of Mr. Rose's inaccuracies are made in this Review are to be entirely given to him; and we confess ourselves quite astonished at the number and extent of these inaccuracies."—REV. SYDNEY SMITH: Edin. Rev., xviii 325-345.

Heywood, Thomas, an actor, dramatic poet, and prose writer, temp. Elizabeth, James I. and Charles I., was a native of Lincolnshire, and a Fellow of Peter House, Cambridge. He tells us that there were no less than 220 plays in which he had "either an entire hand, or at the least a main finger," (Pref. to the English Traveller;) but of this large number only 23 have come down to us, and of these The Late Lancashire Witches was written in conjunction with R. Broome, and Fortune by Land and Sea in conjunction with Wm. Rowley. For a list of these plays and his other works, and criticisms upon a number of them, we refer the reader to Langbaine's Dramat. Poets; Winstanley's English Poets; Biog. Dramat.; Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet.; Censura Literaria, vol. i.; Brit. Bibliographer, vol. i.; Restituta, vol. i. p. 240; Ellis's Specimens of Early English Poetry; Lamb's Specimens of Eng. Dramat. Poets; Hazlitt's Lects. on the Dramatic Lit. of the Age of Elizabeth; Collier's Hist. of Eng. Poet., and his ed. of Heywood's Dramat. Works, pub. by the Shakespeare Society, 1850, &c.; Schlegel's Lects. on the Dramatic Art and Lit.; Lowndes's Bibl. Man., 924-927; Whipple's Essays and Reviews; Lon. Retrosp. Rev., 1823, xi. 124-160; Blackwood's Mag., iii. 141; iv. 171, 668; xxiv. 570; Edin. Rev., lxiv. 526; lxxiii. 220-225. Among the best-known of his productions are the following: 1. The Rape of Lucrece; a Tragedy, 1608, 4to; 4th ed., 1630, 4to; 5th ed., 1638, 4to. "One of the most wild, irregular, and unaccountable productions of his age. Amongst the most extravagant buffoonery, we find sparks of genius which would do honour to any dramatist."—Lon. Retrosp. Rev., ubi supra.

2. An Apology for Actors, 1612, 4to. This is one of the best of his prose pieces. 3. A Woman killed with Kindness; a Play, Lon., 1617, 4to.

"The language is not much raised above that of comedy; but we can hardly rank a tale of guilt, sorrow, and death, in that dramatic category. It may be read with interest and approbation at this day, being quite free from extravagance either in manner or language,—the besetting in of our earlier dramatists,—and equally so from buffoonery. The subject resembles that of Kotzebue's drama, The Stranger, but is managed with a nobler tone of morality."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe.

"The winding up of this play is rather awkwardly managed, and the moral is, according to established usage, equivocal. It required only Frankford's reconciliation to his wife, as well as his forgiveness of her for the highest breach of matrimonial duty, to have made a Woman Killed with Kindness a complete counterpart of The Stranger. Heywood, however, was in that respect but half a Kotzebue."—Hazlitt's Lects. on the Dramat. Lit. of the Age of Elizabeth.

But Schlegel points out a wide disparity between the management of the two dramas thus compared: see his Lects. on the Dramatic Art and Lit.

"Heywood is a sort of prose Shakespeare. His scenes are to the full as natural and affecting. But we miss the poet,—that which in Shakespeare always appears out and above the surface of the nature. Heywood's characters in this play, for instance, his country gentleman, &c., are exactly what we see, but of the best kind of what we see, in life. Shakespeare makes us believe, while we are among his lovely creations, that they are nothing but what we are familiar with, as in dreams new things seem old; but we awake, and sigh for the difference."—CHARLES LAMB: Specimens of Eng. Dramat. Poets.

4. Nine Bookes of various History concerning Women; inscribed by ye names of ye nine Muses, 1624, fol. This is a very amusing book, and exhibits no little learning upon the subject discussed.

"In this singular and scarce volume occurs a double version of the Enigma assigned to Cleobulus of Lindus." See Brunck's Analecta.

5. England's Elizabeth; her Life and Troubles during her Minority, from the Cradle to the Crown, 1631, 12mo; 1632, '41, 12mo. This ed. is reprinted in the Harleian Miscellany.

6. The English Traveller; a Tragi-Comedy, 1633, 4to. "This play is written in verse, and with that ease and perspicuity, seldom rising to passion or figurative poetry, which distinguishes this dramatist. . . . The underplot of this play is largely borrowed from the Mostellaria of Plautus, and is diverting, though somewhat absurd."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe.

"Heywood's preface to this play is interesting, as it shows the heroic indifference about the opinion of posterity which some of these great writers seem to have felt. There is a magnanimity in authorship as in every thing else. His ambition seems to have been confined to the pleasure of hearing the players speak his lines while he lived. It does not appear that he ever contemplated the possibility of being read by after-ages. What a slender pittance of fame was motive sufficient to the production of such plays as the English Traveller, The Challenge for Beauty, and the Woman Killed with Kindness! Posterity is bound to take care that a writer loses nothing by such a noble modesty."—CHARLES LAMB: ubi supra.

"A production which abounds with good scenes, good writing, and excellent sentiment, and is distinguished by pure, gentle, and attractive characters."—Retrosp. Rev., ubi supra.

7. The Late Lancashire Witches; a Comedy, 1631, 4to, by R. Heywood and R. Broome. 8. The Hierarchie of the Blessed Angels; their Names, Orders, and Offices: the Fall of Lucifer with his Angels, 1635, fol.

"Heywood has been called a Prose Shakespeare for his dramas, which are indeed touching pictures of plain, homely, fireside feelings, that make us more intimately acquainted with the life and practical morals of our ancestors than the more intellectual productions of his contemporaries can possibly do. I am afraid his Hierarchie of Angels will scarce entitle him to be called a Prose Milton; yet it is sufficiently curious to merit preservation."—Blackw. Mag.

The Hierarchie of the Blessed Angels was a great favourite of Sir Walter Scott, who often refers to it. 9. A Challenge for Beattie; a Tragi-Comedy, 1636, 4to.

"Full of action and interest, and possesses a great variety of well-discriminated characters. . . . There is great vivacity in this performance, and sometimes considerable smartness of repartee."—Retrosp. Rev., ubi supra.

10. Love's Maistrice; or, The Queen's Masque, 1636, 4to. 11. The Royall King and the Loyall Subject; a Tragi-Comedy, 1637, 4to. Beaumont's Loyal Subject was greatly indebted to the plot of this piece: see Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe. 12. The Generall History of Women, 1657, 8vo. A number of Heywood's pieces have been republ. in Dodsley's and other Collections; several have been edited for the Shakespeare Society by Barron Field; and Mr. Collier has edited Heywood's Dramatic Works for the same association.

"Heywood I shall mention next, as a direct contrast to Marlowe in every thing but the smoothness of his verse. As Marlowe's imagination glows like a furnace, Heywood's is a gentle lambent flame, that purifies without consuming. His manner is simplicity itself. There is nothing supernatural, nothing startling or terrific. He makes use of the commonest circumstances of every-day life, and of the easiest tempers, to show the workings, or rather the inefficacy, of the passions,—the vis inertiae of tragedy."—HAZLITT.

"Heywood seldom rises to much vigour of poetry; but his dramatic invention is ready, his style is easy, his characters do not transgress the boundaries of nature, and it is not surprising that he was popular in his age."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe.

"Heywood's best comedies are distinguished by a peculiar air, a superior manner; his gentlemen are the most refined in their nice sense of the true and beautiful, their fine moral perception, and finished in the most scrupulous attention to polite manners; most exact in the observances of decorum without appearing rigorously precise, ductile as fused gold to that which is good, and unamalleable to that which is evil: men, in short, 'of most erected spirits.'"—Retrosp. Rev., ubi supra.

"We have read this interesting volume with much pleasure. The account of the opinions formerly entertained of the origin, nature, and power of spirits is particularly valuable."—Westminster Review.

"Viewed in the light of a medical guide, it cannot fail to prove of great advantage as well to the professional student as to the general reader. We are now reluctantly compelled to leave this amusing and most instructive volume; but we cannot permit ourselves to finish our very imperfect review of it without recommending to our readers not only the book itself, but more particularly the principle upon which it is written—the attempt to trace all spectral allusions to their physical cause.”—British Critic.

Also highly commended by the New Monthly Mag.; Literary Gazette; Literary Chronicle; Scotsman; London Star. An interesting notice of it by “Christopher North” will be found in Noctes Ambrosianæ, March, 1825; and see Dr. Shelton Mackenzie’s note to his ed. of the Noctes, N. York, 1855, vol. ii. 56.

Hicchoch, Robert. See HIRROCK.

Hickeringill, Edmund, 1630–1703, educated at Cambridge, became a captain in the army, and, in 1662, Rector of All-Saints, Colchester. His belligerent spirit accompanied him into the church, to which he gave great offence by a number of “wild and scurrilous attacks” on Priestcraft, (1705, 4to.) &c. In 1707 he pub. a collection of Miscellaneous Tracts, Essays, Satyrs, &c. in Prose. Lon., 1707, 4to. In addition to his occasional serms. and pamphlets, he put forth, in 1660, 4to, Jamaica Viewed; also pub. in 1661, 1705, 4to, and included in his collection of Miscellaneous Tracts. The writer had spent some time in Jamaica. In 1716 there was pub. a 2d ed. of his Works, Oxf., 3 vols. 8vo. The editor says:

“The greatest writers of our times trembled at his pen; and, as great a genius as Sir Roger L’Estrange’s was, it submitted to his superior way of reasoning.”

But Newcourt treats him with less ceremony, and characterizes him as

Hickes, or Hicks, Gaspar. 4 Serms., Lon., 1644–45. See Athen, Oxon.

Hickes, George, D.D., 1642–1715, a native of Newsham, Yorksire, entered St. John’s College, Oxford, 1659; after the Restoration removed to Magdalen College, thence to Magdalen Hall, and in 1664 was chosen Fellow of Lincoln College; Rector of St. Ebbe’s church, Oxford, about 1675; Vicar of All-Hallows Barking, London, 1680; Dean of Worcester, 1683; deprived on refusing to take the oath to William and Mary, 1689; consecrated Bishop of Thetford by the Nonjurors, 1694. Dr. Hickes was one of the most profoundly-learned men of his time, and of inflexible integrity of character. He pub. many controversial treatises on religion and politics, and some other works, (for a list of which see authorities cited below,) the most of which are now forgotten. The following are among the principal of his productions:—1. Jovian; or, an Answer to Johnson’s Julian the Apostate, and Passive Obedience Defended, 1673, ‘83, 8vo. Anon.

“Wherein is showed that, notwithstanding this Doctrine of Non-resistance or Passive Obedience, we are secure enough of our lives, properties, and religion.”—Chap. xii.

2. The Spirit of Enthusiasm Exorcised; or, a Sermon on 1 Cor. xii. 4, Lon., 1681, ‘83, 4to; 4th ed., with addits., 1709, 8vo.

“A very learned and important discourse.”—BISHOP VAN MILDERT.

3. Institutiones Grammaticæ Anglo-Saxonicæ et Mæso-Gothicæ, a G. Hicchesio, Grammatica Islandica Runolphi Ionæ. Catalogus Librorum Septentrionalium. Accedit Edvardi Bernardi Etymologium Britannicum, Oxon., 1689, 4to. A very valuable work.

“This book discovers an accuracy in this language beyond the attainments of any that had gone before him in that study, and will be of most necessary use to such as shall apply themselves to the right understanding of the ancient history and laws of this kingdom. But, as all first draughts of any sort are usually imperfect, so there seem to be some defects in it that might have been supplied. For example: there wanted a chapter of the variety of dialects, which might have been had out of the northern interlinear versions of the gospel, mentioned by Dr. Marshall; one whereof is peremptorily affirmed to have belonged to St. Cuthbert, as the other, in all likelihood, did to Venerable Bede.”—Bishop Nicolson’s Eng. Hist. Lib. See extract continued under No. 4.

4. Linguarum Veterum Septentrionalium Thesaurum Grammatico-Criticum et Archæologicum, 1703–05, 6 Parts, fol.; generally bound in two or three vols. Pub. at £3 3s.; large paper, £5 5s. Large-paper copies of this great work were sold at £15 formerly, but can now be had at from £5 to £6. Many portions of the work are taken from original Saxon MSS. now lost.

“Dr. Hickes, the great master of the Northern languages in general and of the Anglo-Saxon in particular, accomplished the most arduous task in compiling and publishing, amidst the hardships of deprivation and poverty, his famed Thesaurus Linguarum Veterum Septentrionalium.”—DR. INGRAM.

“All these defects (vide ante) are now amply supplied by the great author in his Linguarum Vet. Septentrionalium Thesaurus Grammatico Criticus et Archæologicus; which has had so many just praises given it, at home and abroad, that few English readers can be strangers to its contents.”—BISHOP NICOLSON. ubi supra.

The bishop, referring to the Anglo-Saxon version of Bede’s History of the Anglo-Saxon Church, declares that Dr. Hickes was “of all men now living the best able to give a character of the performance.”—Ubi supra.

5. Several Letters which passed between Dr. G. Hickes and a Popish Priest, Lon., 1705, 8vo; 3d ed., 1727, 8vo. 6. A Second Collection of Letters rel. to the Ch. of Eng. and Ch. of Rome, 1710, 8vo, between Dr. Hickes and Lady Carew. The two collections were reprinted in 1715, 2 vols. 8vo.

“For a particular defence of our own Reformers against the cavils of Romish writers, see Abp. Laud’s Conference with Fisher, Leslie’s Case stated between the Ch. of England and the Ch. of Rome, and Dr. Hickes’s Letters to a Popish Priest. In these will be found a full refutation of the charges brought against our Reformers, and a complete vindication of them upon the soundest principles of church-unity and church-authority.”—BISHOP VAN MILDERT.

7. Two Treatises: one on the Christian Priesthood, the other Of the Dignity of the Episcopal Order, &c., 1707, ‘11, 8vo; 3d ed., with addits., 1711, 2 vols. 8vo; 4th ed., Oxon., 1847–48, 3 vols. 8vo. In Lib. of Anglo-Cath. Theol. 8. Serms., with a Pref. by N. Spinckes, 1713, 2 vols. 8vo. 9. Devotions in the Ancient Way of Offices Reformed, 1717, 8vo. New ed., 1846, fp. 8vo. The original of this was by John Austin, who died 1669; (see p. 83 of this Dictionary.) It was remodelled by Mrs. S. Hopton, and Dr. Hickes wrote a preface for the work thus revised. 10. Life of John Kettlewell, 1718, 8vo. 11. Serms., 1726, 8vo. Posth. See Biog. Brit., vol. vii., Supp.; Burnet’s Own Times; Birch’s Life of Tillotson; Letters by Eminent Persons, 1813, 3 vols. 8vo; Jones’s Life of Bishop Horne; T. B. Macaulay’s Hist. of Eng., vol. iii., 1856.

“A few other nonjurors ought to be particularly noticed, high among them in rank was George Hickes, Dean of Worcester. Of all the Englishmen of his time he was the most versed in the old Teutonic languages; and his knowledge of the early Christian literature was extensive. As to his capacity for political discussions, it may be sufficient to say that his favourite-argument for passive obedience was drawn from the story of the Theban legion.”—T. B. MACAULAY; ubi supra.

Hickes, or Hicks, William, 1620–1659, a captain of the Train-Bands, and a Fifth-Monarchy man, educated at Wadham College, Oxford. Revelation Revealed; being a Practical Exposition of the Revelation of St. John, Lon., 1659, ‘61, fol. See Athen, Oxon.

Hickes, or Hicks, William, a captain apparently in the recruiting-service during the Civil War temp. Charles I. 1. Oxford Jests, 1669; enlarged, 1720, 12mo. This is called the first Jest-Book in the language. 2. Coffee-House Jests; 3d ed., 1684. 3. Oxford Drollery; being new poems and songs, 1679. Lloyd, 23 10s. 4. Grammatical Drollery; consisting of Poems and Songs. This is ascribed to Hickes, but without certainty. Bibl. Anglo-Poet., £5 5s.

“This Hickes, who was a sharking and indigent fellow while he lived in Oxon., and a great pretender to the art of dancing, which he forsook would sometimes teach) was also author of Coffee-House Jests, the third edition of which came out in 1684, and of other trivial matters merely to get bread and make the pot walk.”—Athen, Oxon.

Honest old Anthony seems to have held in great contempt those whose motto is “Tenui musam meditantur avena!”—

“We cultivate literature upon a little oatmeal!”— or who employed their pen for the grovelling purpose of “making the pot walk.”

Hickman, Charles, D.D., d. 1743, a native of Northamptonshire, student of Christ Church, Oxford, 1667; minister of St. Ebbe’s Church, Oxford; Lecturer of St. James’s, Westminster, 1692; subsequently Rector of Hogsorton, Leicestershire; Bishop of Derry, 1702, 1. Serm.; pub. separately, 1680–85. 2. Serms. before the H. of Commons, 1690, 4to. 3. Fourteen Serms., 1700, 8vo; 2d ed., 1706, 8vo; 3d ed., 1718, 8vo. 4. Twelve Serms. on the Festivals and Fasts, 1713, 8vo; 2d ed., 1724, 8vo.

The student of American history will find this beautiful volume of great service in his researches. Mr. Hickox has contributed papers to various periodicals.

Hicks, Elias, d. 1830, aged 81, a native of Jericho, Long Island, was for many years a preacher in the Society of Friends or Quakers. In the latter years of his life he promulgated some theological opinions which led to a division of the sect of which he was a minister. See—1. Journal of his Life and Religious Labours, Phila.: 2. Higden, Ranulph, or Ralph, d. 1360, aged between 80 and 90, a Benedictine of St. Werberg's Monastery in Chester, was the author of a Latin chronicle entitled Polychronicon. Dr. Gale pub. that part which relates to the Britons and Saxons among his Quindeccim Scriptores, &c., (i. 177.) The Polychronicon was trans. into English by John de Trevisa in 1387, and from this Caxton made a version (adding an 8th book, or continuation from 1387 to 1460) and printed it in 1482, fol. A copy was sold at Dent's sale (Pt. 2, 143) for £103 19s. Reprinted by Wynken de Worde, with addits. and a Myrm in praise of History, 1495, fol. Again, by Peter Treveris, 1527, fol. The Polychronicon of Higden is divided into seven books. Book i. contains a description of countries in general, and especially of Britain; books ii.-vi. give us a Civil History from the Creation to temp. Edward III. The Chester Mysteries, exhibited in that city in 1328, have been ascribed to Higden; but this has been stoutly denied. See Bishop Nicolson's Eng. Hist. Lib.; Dibdin's Typ. Antiq.; Dibdin's Lib. Comp.; Bibl. Spenceriana; Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet.; Biog. Dramat.; Lowndes's Bibl. Man.; Brit. Bibliog.; Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 213, 312, n. Bp. Nicolson treats Higden with little respect, and insists upon it that he stole his Polychronicon from Roger Cestrensis's Polycratia Temporum; but it has been charitably surmised that they both stole (or borrowed) from the same quarter. Their works are rather objects of curiosity than standards of an authoritative character.

Higden, Wm., pub. a Sermon, &c., 1703, '11, a View of the Eng. Constitution, 1700, '09, '16, &c., 8vo, and a Defence of the View, 1710, 8vo. The two last were answered by Hilkiah Bedford, or, rather, by George Harbin: see p. 157 of this Dictionary.

Higgins, Godfrey, 1771-1833, of Skellow Grange, near Doncaster, a magistrate for the West Riding of Yorkshire, was the author of some political pamphlets, &c. and the following works:—1. Horæ Sabbaticæ. 2. The Celtic Druids, 1827, 4to. See Lon. Gent. Mag., xvii, ii, 151, 347. 3. Mohammed; or, the Illustrious, 1829, 8vo. This was reviewed with much severity by Edward Upham, author of The History of Buddhism. Mr. Upham says, "I know it to be full of errors." (Gent. Mag., Jan. 1830, pp. 9-14.) Mr. Higgins noticed Upham's letter in the next No. of the Magazine, and Mr. Upham continued the subject in the No. for March. 4. An Anacalypsis; an attempt to draw aside the Veil of the Saitic Isis, or An Inquiry into the Origin of Languages, Nations, and Religions, 1836, 2 vols. 4to. Posth. Privately printed. This work had been announced by Rev. Joseph Hunter, in his History of South Yorkshire, before Mr. Higgins's death.

"It occasionally happens that books written to display some peculiarity of system—or, as the wicked say, crotchet—of the author turn out to have a value of their own, from the very great number of well indexed and well-referenced facts which they contain. We remember being much struck by seeing among the books of reference in the Museum Reading-room the Anacalypsis of Godfrey Higgins. Never was there more wildness of speculation than in this attempt to lift the veil of Isis. But thousands of statements, cited from all quarters, and very well indexed, apparently brought the book into such demand as made it convenient that it should be in the reading-room itself."—Lon. Athenæum, Aug. 2, 1856, p. 953: Review of John Wilson's Lost Solar System of the Ancients Discovered.

Higginson, John, 1616-1708, son of the first-named Francis Higginson, was a native of England, and accompanied his father to America in 1629. He was pastor of the church in Salem (formerly under charge of his father) from 1660 to 1708, and at the time of his death had been seventy-two years in the ministerial office. He pub. a number of serms., theolog. treatises, &c., 1663-1708, and a most eloquent attestation to Cotton Mather's Magnalia, which is thus warmly commended by one of the most learned students of American letters:

"John Higginson was one of the great men of New England, and incomparably the best writer, native or foreign, who lived in America during the first hundred years of her colonization. He was also Master of Sherburn Hospital, and Preb. of Lincoln. Bishop Hildesley was descended from the royal family of England in the same line with Rev. Arthur Hildersham, and, like him, was noted for his piety and zeal. It was under his auspices that the translation of the Holy Scriptures into the Manks language, begun by his predecessor, Bishop Wilson, was carried to completion. He also pub. the Book of Common Prayer and other works in the same language. Hildreth, Richard, b. June 28, 1807, at Deerfield, Massachusetts, son of the preceding, graduated at Harvard College in 1826, was admitted to the Suffolk county (Boston) Bar in 1830, and commenced the practice of the law in Newburyport, in his native State. From July, 1832, to October, 1834, Mr. Hildreth was co-editor of the Boston Atlas, a daily newspaper, (of which he was also a joint founder,) and again co-editor and Washington correspondent, May, 1836, to November, 1839. From October, 1834, to March, 1836, he resided in Florida, with a view to the improvement of his health, and, with the same object, resided from September, 1846, to September, 1847, in Demarara. During his abode in the latter place he edited successively The Guiana Chronicle and The Royal Gazette, (tri-weekly papers devoted to the support of the policy of the British Government in the abolition of slavery,) and edited, with an historical introduction, a compilation of the colonial laws of British Guiana. In addition to the works about to be noticed,—no inconsiderable evidence of great literary activity,—Mr. Hildreth has given to the world a number of pamphlets and miscellaneous articles in magazines and reviews, and edited several educational manuals and daily journals. He devotes his leisure moments to a continuation of his principal work,—the History of the United States,—which he designs to bring down (in two or more vols.) to the end of the administration of President Pierce.

In the advertisement prefixed to the first vol. of his history, Mr. Hildreth gives his reader to understand that he may expect to find a plain story told in a plain way:

"Of centennial sermons and Fourth-of-July orations, whether professedly such or in the guise of history, there are more than enough. It is due to our fathers and ourselves, it is due to truth and philosophy, to present for once, on the historic stage, the founders of our American nation unbedaubed with patriotic rouge, wrapped up in no fine-spun cloaks of excuses and apology, without stilt, buskin, tinsel, or bedizenment in their own proper persons, often rude, hard, narrow, superstitious, and mistaken, but always earnest, downright, manly, and sincere. The result of their labours is eulogy enough: their best apology is to tell their story exactly as it was."

"If a plain and well-written narrative of public events, mostly in the order of their occurrence, without any attempt to generalize them, or to deduce from them broader lessons of experience, is all that constitutes a good history, then Mr. Hildreth's work deserves its name, and has fair claims to respectful notice. It is easy to see, however, that this is not all, and that history written on such a plan must needs be imperfect and unsatisfactory. . . . Nothing can be more cold and naked than his recital of any facts which are honourable to the memory of the first settlers of New England; if they do not occupy a very prominent place on the common record he forgets to mention them at all. When they are forced upon his notice he dismisses them as rapidly as possible. He has not a word of praise for their conscientiousness, their heroism, or their self-denial; though the first alone caused them to emigrate, so that it was the seminal principle of the New England colonies, while the second and third sustained their settlements through many years of danger and privation."—FRANCIS BOWEN: N. Amer. Rev., lxxiii. 411-447: review of vols. i-iv.

"The author's style is bald and meagre in the extreme; and never once does he rise into any thing like fervour or exhibit the slightest capability of the graphic and picturesque. But the story is conscientiously—and, as far as details go, thoroughly—told. . . . The spirit in which the story is told is also remarkably fair. The Puritans—often rude, hard, narrow, superstitious, and mistaken," as Mr. Hildreth thinks them, "but always earnest, downright, manly, and sincere"—are treated with evident respect and liking; and only now and then, when in duty bound as a modern and an American,—as for example, in behalf of representative freedom, religious toleration, and such matters,—does the author put in any protest of his own."—Lon. Athenæum, 1850, pp. 13-15: review of vols. i-iii.

Vols. iv. and v. are reviewed in the same periodical for Nov. 15, 1851, pp. 1191-1193; and vol. vi. in the No. for May 7, 1853. The reviewer, referring to the probability of Mr. Hildreth's continuation of his History, trusts that he will attend to the hints which he has given him, and dismisses the subject with the assurance that "It would be agreeable to have occasion to speak more favourably than we have been able conscientiously to do of the writings of a man of such industry and talent as Mr. Hildreth undoubtedly possesses."—p. 551, ubi supra.

"In this instance we encounter the muse of American history descended from her stump, and recounting her narrative in a key adapted to our own ears. For the first time, we believe, we have here the story of the founders of our New England colonies re-recorded in an ample and explicit manner, with a consistent care to exclude errors and exaggerations. . . . Animated by this spirit, Mr. Hildreth has availed himself, though hardly to the utmost, of his peculiar resources."—The Fathers of New England: Edin. Rev., Oct. 1855.

"We are confident that, when the merits of this history come to be known and appreciated, it will be extensively regarded as decidedly superior to any thing that before existed on American history, and as a valuable contribution to American authorship."—Bibliotheca Sacra.

"His work fills a want, and is therefore most welcome. Its positive merits, in addition to those we have before mentioned, are impartiality, steadiness of view, clear appreciation of character, and, in point of style, a terseness and conciseness not unlike Tacitus; with not a little, too, of Tacitean vigour of thought, stern sense of justice, sharp irony, and profound wisdom."—Methodist Quar. Rev.

"Mr. Hill, this is a bold and copious writer. His work is valuable for the immense amount of material it embodies."—De Bow's Review of the Southern States.

"In this new work we notice the same calm and equal march of reason as in the History of America. Mr. Hildreth is never startling, never brilliant. His thought is like his style: solid, level, monotonous. It neither warns by its vividness nor startles by its boldness. It is pre-eminently respectable. As to ideas, there is little in this volume that can be called new. Mr. Hildreth is a republican, with a tendency, the full strength of which he unconsciously disguises from himself, towards Socialism."—Lon. Athenæum, 1853, p. 1254.

And see HAWKS, FRANCIS LISTER, D.D., LL.D., No. 9, in this Dictionary.

"Mr. Hildreth's is a compilation, somewhat roughly executed, from the successive accounts of Japan by European and American writers. It is scarcely in any sense original, nor is it very systematic: but it may find acceptance as a manual of information on a subject of rising influence to both worlds. . . . Mr. Hildreth's historical sketch, though always readable, is disconnected and incomplete."—Lon. Athenæum, 1856, pp. 835-836.

We hope at no distant day to welcome the remaining volumes of Mr. Hildreth's History of the United States; for, whatever faults the critic may discover in the historian's style, of the value of his elaborate array of facts there can be no question. If, as alleged, the faithful chronicler lack that philosophical insight which is requisite to give their proper value to the fruits of laborious researches, yet he has undoubtedly facilitated the execution of the duties of those who succeed him—for, if "Felice qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas" be a true saying, it is as little to be denied that "Ærum ipsarum cognitio vera, e rebus ipsis est."

His Miscellaneous Works—a collection of his best pieces—were pub. in 1753, 4 vols. 8vo; and his Dramatic Works, (seventeen in all,) with his Life, appeared in 1759, 2 vols. 8vo. See Biog. Dramat.; Cibber's Lives; Johnson's and Pope's Works; Davies's Life of Garrick; Richardson's Corresp.; Ruffhead's Life of Pope; Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors.

We should not omit to state that our poet was—as the title of some of his works indicate—a dabbler in political economy and an extensive projector, and, like many other projectors of ancient times and our own days, displayed more enterprise than judgment.

The acuteness of his critical abilities may be estimated from his verdict on Pope's poetry. He gravely assures us that the popularity of the author of the Rape of the Lock "Arose from meditated little personal assiduities, and a certain bladdery swell of management."

And he then gives utterance to this sagacious vaticination:

"But rest his memory in peace! It will very rarely be disturbed that time he himself is in ashes!"—Letter to Richardson, in Richardson's Correspondence.

But posterity have ventured to differ with Mr. Hill. Pope certainly was not wont to display much of a spirit of meekness in his literary controversies; but in his misunderstanding with Hill the latter appears the least amiable. His general character, however, was exemplary, and his manners mild and conciliating; but it is dangerous to tempt the amour-propre of an author, however his suaviter in modo may prevail in the family circle and social reunion.

Pope's poetical offence was comprised in the following lines from the Dunciad, and they have been truly considered quite as complimentary as the reverse. Our author is introduced as one of the competitors for the prize of Dulness:

"Then Hill essay'd: scarce vanish'd out of sight,

He buoy's up instant, and returns to light;

He bears no token of the sable streams;

And mounts far off, among the swans of Thames."

The satire here is indeed very slight; but, slight as it was, it was sufficient to disturb the equanimity of Master Hill.

Hill, George, D.D., 1750–1819, a divine of the Kirk of Scotland, and Principal of St. Mary's College, St. Andrews, was a native of that city. He succeeded Dr. Robertson as the leader of the General Assembly, and "He was long one of the chief ornaments of the Church of Scotland, and was distinguished for his manly and impressive eloquence, both in the pulpit and the general assembly."—Annual Biography, vol. v., Lon., 1821, q. v.

And see Chambers and Thomson's Biog. Dict. of Eminent Scotsmen; Lord Cockburn's Memorials of his Time, 1856; Geo. Cook's Life of Dr. Hill. He pub. a number of occasional serms., and the following vols.:—1. Serms., Lon., 1796, 8vo. 2. Theological Institutes, Edin., 1803, 8vo. Reviewed in British Critic, vol. xxiii. 3. Lects. upon Portions of the Old Test., Lon., 1812, 8vo. 4. A View of the Constitution of the Ch. of Scot., Edin., 1817, 8vo. 5. The Pastoral Office. 6. Lects. in Divinity, 1821, 3 vols., 8vo; 5th ed., 1849, 8vo.

"Professor Hill's lectures are admirable, and have been admitted to the first place among our systematic expositions of revealed truth."—Congreg. Mag.

"These lectures embrace the evidences, doctrines, duties, and institutions of Christianity. They are drawn up with great care and ability. . . . The author's tenets were in accordance with the Westminster Confession of Faith."—Dr. E. Williams's C. P.

"Dr. Hill of St. Andrews had the faculty beyond most men of comprehensive and luminous arrangement. We shall have occasion at a posterior stage of our course to avail ourselves of the important service which he has rendered to theology. . . . I am not sure if I can recommend a more complete manual of divinity than the one I have now adverted to. . . . I know of no treatise which professes to exhibit the whole range of theological doctrine, and does it in more of a lucidus ordo than the one that we have fixed upon."—Dr. CHALMERS'S Posth. Works, vol. ix. p. xviii., 125; Lectures on Hill's Lectures.

Hill, George, an American poet, b. 1796, at Guilford, Conn., graduated at Yale College in 1816, and, after a term of public service under the United States Government, entered the navy in 1827 as a teacher of mathematics. He was subsequently Librarian of the Department of State at Washington, and United States Consul for the southern portion of Asia Minor. He is now attached to one of the Bureaus of the Department of State at Washington. Mr. Hill pub. anonymously, in 1834, The Ruins of Athens, with other Poems; and a second edit., entitled The Ruins of Athens, Titania's Banquet, a Masque, and other Poems, appeared in 1839, 8vo, with the author's name. See Everest's Poets of Connecticut; Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America.

Hill, George Canning, b. 1825, in Norwich, Conn. The New American Biographical Series for Youth; containing the Lives of Capt. John Smith, Gen. Israel Putnam, Benedict Arnold, Daniel Boone, &c., Boston, 1858, 4 vols. 16mo.

Hill, Ira, an American writer. Abstract of a New Theory of a Formation of the Earth, Balt., 1823, 12mo.

"Absurd as it is on some accounts, however, it is on others an essay of singular merit."—American Writers, No. 4: Blackwood's Mag., xvii. 57: and see vol. xvi. 420.

Hill, James. Medical treatises, 1772–76.

Hill, James, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. A Practical Treatise on the Law relating to Trustees, Lon., 1815, r. 8vo. Amer. ed., with American Notes and References by Francis J. Troubat, of the Phila. Bar, Phila., 1846, 8vo; 2d Amer. ed., with addit. notes, referring to American Cases, by Henry Wharton, of the Phila. Bar, 1854, 8vo. This excellent work furnished the basis of various parts of Mr. Spencer's unfinished work on Equity Jurisprudence.

"On examination of the sheets, it appears that the work has been enlarged by nearly one-half in bulk by the new matter of this edition; and that the table of cases shows an addition of more than three thousand decisions in England and the United States. The authorities, we believe, have been brought down to the latest moment."—Amer. Law Register, Dec. 1853.

Hill, John, Rector of St. Mabyn, Cornwall. Four occas. serms., 1610, '14, '80, '93.

Hill, John. 1. The Exact Dealer, for all Trades, Lon., 1698, 1702, 12mo. 2. Arithmetic, 1716, 8vo. By Hutton, 1733, 8vo.

Hill, John, 1711–1746, an Independent minister of London, a native of Hitchin. Serms. on several occasions, Lon., 1749, '64, '95, 1817, 8vo. Nine or more eds. have appeared. The five serms. on 2 Kings iv. 26, entitled Faith's Estimate of Afflictive Dispensations, have been pub. separately ("It is well," &c.) by the London Religious Tract Society, 1853, 32mo. Hill's discourses are highly valued.

"Some admirable sermons, especially on affliction."—Bickersteth's C. S.

Hill, Sir John, M.D., 1716–1775, originally an apothecary, the son of Rev. Theophilus Hill, of Peterborough or Spalding, resided in London, and wrote many books on medicine, botany, natural philosophy, natural history, and a number of dramas, novels, &c. A detailed account of these many publications would be of but small interest to the modern reader, who knows but little of Sir John save his name, and this principally through his quarrels with the Royal Society, and with Garrick. He was a man of remarkable versatility of talent, but his moral character cannot be commended. Among his publications are—1. Orpheus; an Opera, 1740. 2. Theophrastus's Hist. of Stones; from the Greek, with Notes, 1746, '74, 8vo. 3. A Dissert. on Royal Societies. 4. Review of the Works of the Royal Society of London, Lon., 1751, 8vo, 4to:

"In which, by the most unfair quotations, mutilations, and misrepresentations, numbers of the papers read in that illustrious assembly, and published under the title of the Philosophical Transactions, are endeavoured to be rendered ridiculous."—Life of Hill: Chalmers's Biog. Dict.

5. Essays on Natural History and Philosophy, 1752, 8vo. Considered the best of his writings. 6. A General Natural History, 1748–52, 3 vols. fol. 7. Urania; or, a Complete View of the Heavens, 1754, 8vo. 8. The Critical Minute; a Farce, 1754. 9. The Route; a Farce, 1754. 10. The Gardener's New Kalendar, 1757, '58, 8vo. 11. Eden; or, a Complete Body of Gardening, 1757, fol. 12. The Sleep of Plants, 1757, '62, 12mo. 13. Naval Hist. of Great Britain, compiled from the papers of the late Capt. Geo. Berkeley, 1757, fol. 14. British Herbal, 1758, fol. 15. Construction of Nerves, 1758, 8vo. 16. An Idea of a Botanical Garden in England, 1758, 8vo. 17. Exotic Botany, 1759, fol. 18. The Vegetable System, 1759–76, 26 vols. fol. Contains 1600 engravings. Pub. at 38 guineas, plain; 160 guineas, coloured. Pub. under the patronage of the Earl of Bute. Hill presented a copy to the King of Sweden, who invested him with the order of the Polar Star, or Vasa. Henceforth he assumed the title of Sir John. 19. Flora Britannica, 1760, 8vo. 20. Family Practice of Physic, 1769, 8vo. 21. Hist. of Mr. Lovell; a Novel. This is a pretended autobiography. 22. Adventures of a Creole. 23. The Life of Lady Frail; a Novel. He was also joint-editor (with George Lewis Scott) of a Supplement to Chambers's Dictionary, and was connected with the British Magazine, The Inspector, &c. See Short Account of the Life, Writings, and Character of the late Sir John Hill, Edin., 1779, 8vo; Biog. Dramat.; Gent. "As to his literary character, and the rank of merit in which his writings ought to stand, Hill's greatest enemies could not deny that he was master of considerable abilities and an amazing quickness of parts. . . . A large volume might be written on the life and adventures of this extraordinary man, as affording a complete history of literary quackery, every branch of which he pursued with a greater contempt for character than perhaps any man in our time."—Life of Hill, in Chalmers's Biog. Diet.

"Dr. Hill was a very curious observer; and if he would have been contented to tell the world no more than he knew, he might have been a very considerable man, and needed not to have recourse to such mean expedients to raise his reputation."—Dr. Johnson: Conversation with George Hill: see Boswell.

This work contains curious particulars relating to the Vaudois, the wars in the Cevennes, the Spanish Succession, with letters of foreigners and translations of them.

"A supplement to the Marlborough Despatches, and a needful explanation of them."—Lon. Examur.

Hill, Sir Richard, 1733–1808, M.P. for Salop, a son of Sir Rowland Hill, Bart., a brother of the celebrated preacher, Rowland Hill, and uncle of General Lord Hill, Commander-in-chief R.N., was much attached to the doctrines of the Calvinist Methodists, and sometimes preached in their chapels. He pub. several theolog. treatises, 1775–1805, of which the best-known is An Apology for Brotherly Love, and for the Doctrines of the Church of England, Lon., 1798, 8vo. This is an answer to Daubeny's Guide to the Church. In 1800 he pub. Daubeniism Confuted, &c., 8vo. See Rev. Edwin Sidney's Life of Sir Richard Hill, 1829, 8vo.

"A better man than Sir Richard Hill I do not know within the circle of human nature."—LORD KENYON.

"Sir Richard's life was a pattern of modesty, piety, and goodness."—LORD ERSKINE.

"He was of a large and great soul, comprehensive of the interests of God, the world, the church, his country, his friends, (with a peculiar concernness,) of the souls of men, ready to his utmost to serve them all; made up of compassion towards the distressed, of delight in the good, and general benignity towards all men."—Howe.

Hill, Robert, D.D. Theolog. treatises, 1592, 1617.

Hill, Robert. Six Serms., 1728–30, 2 vols. 8vo.

Hill, Robert, 1699–1777, a self-taught tailor and staymaker, a native of Hertfordshire, remarkable for his knowledge of languages. 1. Remarks on Berkeley's Essay on Spirit. 2. The Character of a Jew. 3. Criticisms on Job. The Rev. Joseph Spence took a lively interest in Hill, and promoted a subscription for his benefit by publishing a Parallel, in the manner of Plutarch, between a most celebrated Man of Florence (Sig. Magliabecchi) and one scarcely known in England, (Robert Hill), Strawberry Hill, 1758. To this vol. we must refer the reader who desires to know more of the learned tailor.

Hill, Robert. Sketches in Flanders and Holland, Lon., 1816, 4to, £5 5s. A valuable aid when reading the account of the Battle of Waterloo, as it contains engravings of the principal points of the field.

Hill, Rowland, 1744–1833, an eminent preacher attached to the doctrines of the Calvinist Methodists, a brother of Sir Richard Hill, (ante), was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and ordained deacon in the Church of England. In 1783 he built Surrey Chapel, London, and preached there during the winter seasons, acting as an itinerant preacher during the summer months until his death,—a period of fifty years. He pub. a number of serms., theological treatises, &c., of which the best-known is the work entitled Village Dialogues, of which the 34th ed. was pub. in 1839. He was a man of great benevolence, profound piety, and indefatigable zeal. See his Life, by the Rev. W. Jones, with a Pref. by Rev. James Sherman, Mr. Hill's successor in Surrey Chapel; 2d ed., 1840, 12mo; again, 1815; his Life, by Rev. Edwin Sidney, 4th ed., 1844, 8vo; Select Notes of his Preaching, by Sidney, 12mo; Memorial of him, by Rev. James Sherman, 1851, 18mo; Jamieson's Cyc. of Religious Biography; Metropolitan Pulpit; Lon. Gent. Mag., June, 1833; Phila. Museum, xlv. 410; New Haven Month. Chris. Spec., x. 516.

Sheridan used to say,

"I go to hear Rowland Hill because his ideas come red-hot from the heart."

Dr. Milner, the Dean of Carlisle, was so much affected by hearing one of his sermons, that he went to him in the vestry, and said,

"Mr. Hill, Mr. Hill. I felt to day 'tis this slap-dash preaching, say what they will, that does all the good."

Robert Southey gives an interesting account of a sermon he heard Hill deliver in 1823, two years before the preacher's death:

"His manner was animated and striking, sometimes impressive and dignified, always remarkable; and so powerful a voice I have rarely or never heard. . . . The purport of his sermon was good; nothing fanatical, nothing enthusiastic; and the Calvinism which it expressed was so qualified as to be harmless; . . . the manner that of a performer as great in his live as Kent or Kemble."—Letter to Mrs. Southey: Southey's Life and Correspondence.

Let us quote the testimony of a witness even more distinguished than Rowland Hill himself:

"No man has ever dawn, since the days of the Saviour, such sublime images from Nature: here Mr. Hill excels every other man! . . . Whatever a misjudging world may say, such men as these will 'shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars forever.' May my soul, though at a humble distance, be admitted among them!"—ROBERT HALL.

Hill, Rowland, Secretary to the London Post-Office, has become widely-known as the author of the system of Penny Postage commenced 1839–40. Post-Office Reform; its Importance and Practicability, Lon., 1837, 8vo.

"This pamphlet is important from its having paved the way for the introduction of the new system of penny postage. . . . The measure has led to the sacrifice of above 1,000,000*l.* a year of nett revenue."—McCulloch's Lit. of Brit. Econ., 339, q. v.

And see also Eccl. Rev., 4th Ser., xv. 459.

Mr. McCulloch thinks that the reduction was too great; and he is certainly correct.

Hillard, George Stillman, a grandson of General Stillman, b. Sept. 22, 1808, at Machias, Maine, entered the Boston Latin School, 1822, entered Harvard College in 1824, and graduated in 1828, admitted to the Suffolk county (Boston) Bar, 1833, and to the present time (1859) has been engaged in the practice of the law in Boston. Mr. Hillard was married in 1834 to Susan T., daughter of the late Judge Howe of Northampton. In 1845 he was elected to the Common Council, of which he was a member until July, 1847, and was for six months its president. He has been a representative to the State Legislature, and was elected to the Senate in 1850. As a legislator, Mr. Hillard soon evinced abilities which elicited the warm commendation of the late Daniel Webster, (see Webster's Works, v. 356,) whose estimate of intellectual character was seldom mistaken. The reader will find some interesting reminiscences of Mr. Hillard's early life in the Boston Book, 1850; and in Loring's Hundred Boston Orators.

Mr. Hillard has gained the reputation of being one of the most eloquent of American orators: as a writer, we have heard him classed, by no less an authority than the eminent publicist, Dr. Francis Lieber, among the very best which the country has yet produced. Mr. Hillard's publications are as follows:—1. Fourth of July Oration before the City Authorities of Boston, 1835. 2. Discourse before the Phi Beta Kappa Society, 1843. 3. Connection between Geography and History, 1846, 12mo. 4. Address before the Mercantile Library Association of Boston, 1850. 5. Address before the New York Pilgrim Society, 1851.

6. Eulogy on Daniel Webster, before the City Authorities of Boston, 1852. This truly eloquent oration will be found in A Memorial of Daniel Webster from the City of Boston, 1853, edit. by Mr. Hillard. This vol. must be owned by all who possess Little, Brown & Co.'s beautiful edit. of the Works of Webster. 7. Six Months in Italy, 1853, 2 vols. 12mo; 2d ed., 1854, 2 vols. 12mo; 5th ed., 1855, 16mo. This work has been commended in the highest terms. We give brief citations:

"The mass of information contained in these two volumes is immense; the criticism novel, and, in our humble opinion, judicious; the writer's own thoughts and feelings beautifully expressed. . . . The only wonder is how he could manage in so short a time to see so much; for Mr. Hillard is one who sees not only with the outward eye, but with that inner mental vision which carries away with it and makes its own all that taxes its observation and acts upon its sensations. . . . Mr. Hillard is evidently a scholar, a man of taste and feeling, something we should opine, of a poet, and unmistakably a gentleman."—Fraser's Magazine.

"Mr. Hillard's work is that of a scholar and a gentleman, a man of sense as well as of taste and feeling, and well prepared by his previous reading to appreciate his subject. He writes without egotism, personal or patriotic; he has no systems to support nor prejudices to defend; his views are always liberal and benevolent, and if not always, in our opinion, right, he is always candid. His style is pointed, and is full of happy expressions and striking images; occasionally it is to our taste a little too ambitious, and his illustrations, though ingenious, seem to us fanciful and far-fetched; the anxiety (perhaps derived from his profession) to enforce a point leads now and then to exaggeration,—not indeed of fact, but of expression. These blemishes, however, are but slight; and our opinion of them must be taken as a proof of the sincerity of our general praise."—Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1858.

"Taking up the book casually, it fixed our attention at once; and it is long since we have read a volume of travels with so much pleasure."—Dublin Review, July, 1858.

The New York Albion thus closes its review:

"What a pleasant business it would be, this passing judgment on books, if we had many such authors to deal with! It was with listless attention that we took up the two volumes before us, notwithstanding that these Boston publishers have the knack of courting the eye by all the tricky niceties of typography. But let no man gainsay the truth of that homely proverb which peoples ocean with as good fish as ever came out of it, or rashly assert that Italy is an exhausted theme! Mr. Hillard has fairly carried us with him from his first page to his last; and we must honestly avow that no modern traveller, within the scope of our pen, has looked and listened so profitably to himself and has recorded his impressions in a manner so acceptable to his readers."

8. A First-Class Reader; consisting of Extracts in Prose and Verse, with Biographical and Critical Notices of the Authors. For the use of Advanced Classes in Public and Private Schools, 1856, 8vo, pp. 504. This vol. contains 156 pieces, selected from the writings of 112 authors of note.

"The selections are so well made, and the brief biographical sketches so convenient, that the book deserves a circulation beyond the class for whom, ostensibly, it has been prepared. As a volume of 'elegant extracts,' we take pleasure in recommending it to the general reader; to the instructor we can safely endorse it, as a careful and judicious compilation, admirably adapted to the requirements of the higher schools."—(N. York Criticon, April 5, 1856, 361.

Mr. Hillard has also prepared a Second, Third, and Fourth Class Reader, the whole forming a complete series for the use of grammar-schools. They are being generally used in most of the States of the Union.

Translator of—9. Guizot's Essay on the Character and Influence of Washington, 1840, 12mo. Editor of—10. The Poetical Works of Edmund Spenser, 1839, 5 vols. 12mo, with a critical Introduction. This excellent edit. was pub. by Little, Brown & Co. of Boston, who have issued a new edit. of Spenser's Works in 1855, 5 vols. 18mo. Mr. Hillard's edit. was thus commended by the distinguished historian of Spanish Literature:

"There is no doubt you have published the best edition of Spenser yet known. But you have, I think, done more than this; you have, it seems to me, published a positively good, useful, and agreeable edition of him: one that will cause him to be read and enjoyed by many classes of persons who would otherwise not have ventured to open his pages."—GEORGE TICKNOR: Letter to the Publishers.

11. Selections from the Writings of Walter Savage Landor, 1856, 12mo, pp. 301.

"If, through the vestibule this little book offers, I can persuade the public to pass into the stately structure of wisdom and beauty which Landor has reared, my purpose will have been accomplished."—Preface.

"In his admirably-written preface, Mr. Hillard has given so excellent an estimate of Landor's works that he has re-stated the office of the critic; and we could say nothing on the subject that he has not said in a better manner than we could hope to do."—(N. York Criticon, January 12, 1856, 166.

Mr. Hillard was for some time editor of the American Jurist, and wrote a number of articles for its pages; and he has also been a contributor to the North American Review, the Christian Examiner, the New England Magazine, &c. To him also we are indebted for the Life of Captain John Smith, in Sparks's Library of American Biography, 1st Series, ii. 171-407. If to all these titles to honourable distinction Mr. Hillard's friends should claim for him the possession of poetical abilities of no ordinary rank, they would feel amply prepared to vindicate the justice of their pretensions. Among the most admired of his writings are the two noticed with just commendation in the following extract:

"George S. Hillard is one of the most polished writers of New England. His taste is fastidious, and he is a fine rhetorician. He excels in arrangement and condensation, and has an imaginative expression. Of his numerous articles in The North American Review, one of the most brilliant is on Prescott's Conquest of Mexico; but I think the happiest of his essays is that on the Mission of the Poet, read before the Phi Beta Kappa Society."—R. W. Griswold: The Intellectual History, Condition, and Prospects of the Country, prefixed to his Prose Writers of America.

"The exquisite and flowing sentences seem allied to music, and touch the outward sense, as well as stir the fancy and excite the reflective powers."

We have already quoted the testimonies of some eminent witnesses to the distinguished talents—in the maturity of their luxuriant foliage—of the subject of our notice. The early indications of these talents—the "promise of the spring"—were not unnoticed by one who first planted, and then stimulated to an abundant harvest, the priceless seeds of knowledge in many a youthful mind. We are adducing but one more to the many evidences of that sagacity which so pre-eminently characterized a late eminent jurist, by the citation of the following lines:

"To some among them [his law-pupils] he was bound by the warmest ties of affection; and I cannot refrain from mentioning the love and esteem he had for Charles Sumner and George S. Hillard, whom he rather looked upon as his children than as his pupils."—Wm. W. Story's Life of Judge Joseph Story, ii. 23.

Hillary, Wm., M.D. Medical treatises, Lon., 1735-61.

Hillhouse, James, 1754-1832, a native of Montville, Connecticut, graduated at Yale College, 1773; treasurer of Yale College, 1782-1832; member U. S. House of Representatives, 1791-94; of the United States Senate, 1794-1810. Mr. Hillhouse filled several important public posts in his native State. He pub. a number of Speeches, &c. See Bacon's Sketch of the Life and Character of Hon. James Hillhouse; Life and Letters of Judge Joseph Story, i. 158.

Hillhouse, James A., 1789-1841, son of the preceding, was a native of New Haven, Connecticut, entered Yale College at fifteen years of age, and graduated, with distinguished honours, in 1808. After the war of 1812 he engaged in commercial pursuits in the city of New York; visited Europe in 1819; was married in 1824 to Miss Cornelia Lawrence, of New York; and shortly afterwards removed to his country-seat of Sachem's Wood, near New Haven, where he resided, with the exception of annual visits to New York, during the remainder of his life. Upon taking his second degree at college, Mr. Hillhouse had gained great credit by his oration on the Education of a Poet; and in 1812 he produced a poem of remarkable excellence, entitled The Judgment, a Vision,—a description of the awful scenes of the Last Day. (Pub. N. York, 1812, 8vo.) This poem was rewarded, shortly after its first appearance, by the enthusiastic commendation of one of the most accomplished of English critics, who thus concludes his review:

"In short, such is the approach to excellence, both in the conception and execution of this little poem, that I confess myself more than commonly gratified in the opportunity of doing what lies in my power towards making it further known on this side the Atlantic; especially as the praise to which it is so justly entitled may, in all probability, lead its author to other and more extended efforts."—DR. DRAKE: Evenings in Autumn, 1822, ii. 100-127.

Whilst in London, he pub. Percy's Masque, a Drama in Five Acts; the subject of which is "the successful attempt of one of the Percies, the son of Shakspeare's Hotspur, to recover his ancestral home." It was reprinted in New York, "with alterations," 1820, 12mo, pp. 150, and reviewed in the North American Review (xi. 384-393) by a fellow-poet, William C. Bryant. Referring the reader to this article, we will quote a few paragraphs:

"We are glad to meet with so respectable a production in this department of literature from the pen of a native writer; indeed, we are pleased to light upon any modern tragedy in the English language so well worthy of notice. . . . There is no powerful development of character, but the characters are consistent and well sustained. . . . We think that the author of Percy's Masque is to be congratulated on having escaped so well the florid and declamatory manner, with so many celebrated and seducing examples before him. We hope, however, that should he continue to cultivate this department of the drama, he will be led to study a style still more idiomatic and easy, and particularly (for here he has sinned most) with fewer capricious departures from the natural construction."

"Percy's Masque reproduces the features of an era more impressed with knightly character than any in the annals of England. Hillhouse moves in that atmosphere quite as gracefully as among the solemn and venerable traditions of the H-brew faith. His dramatic and other pieces are the first instances in the country of artistic skill in the higher and more elaborate species of poetic writing."—H. T. Tuckerman's Sketch of American Literature.

In 1824 Mr. Hillhouse composed the sacred drama of Hadad, which was given to the world in the following year, New York, 8vo, pp. 208. This admirable piece was reviewed in the North American Review (xxii. 13-27) by F. W. P. Greenwood; by H. Ware, Jr., in the Christian Examiner, ii. 301; and by an unknown critic, in the United States Literary Gazette, ii. 96. See also article on Hillhouse's Dramas, Discourses, and other Poems, (1830, 2 vols. 16mo,) by J. G. Palfrey, in the North American Review, i. 231-262; and Literature in the Nineteenth Century—America—in the London Athenæum, 1833, p. 9. The author of the article declares that "This is one of those works which the Americans do not or cannot appreciate. As a drama, it is throughout admirable, though the excessive interest of the supernatural vein rather dims the brightness of the inferior portions of the plot. . . . We trust he writes malgré discouragement and neglect, for the time will come when he will be sought for. Le bon temps for literature in America is not far off."

In 1839 Mr. Hillhouse pub. (in 2 vols. 16mo) a collective ed. of his writings, the title of which we have given above. The vols. contain—1. Percy's Masque. 2. Hadad. 3. Demetria; a domestic Italian tragedy, written in 1813, but never before printed. 4. The Judgment; a Poem. 5. Sachem's Wood; a Poem. 6. Phi Beta Kappa Discourse, 1826, at New Haven, On Some of the Considerations which should influence an Epic or a Tragic Writer in the Choice of an Era. 7. Palfrey, noticed above; another review in the Boston Christian Examiner, xxvii. 285; articles (on the Poem of Judgment) in the Boston Christian Disciple, iii. 209; N. Haven Chris. M. Spec., iii. 466; an article in the N. Haven Chris. Quar. Spec., v. 238; New Englander, Nov. 1858, (by H. T. Tuckerman;) N. P. Willis's Poem before the Linonian Society of Yale College, 1841; Everest's Poets of Connecticut; notice of Hillhouse, from materials furnished by Bishop Kip, in Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America. The enthusiastic tribute of a fellow-poet may appropriately conclude this notice of one of the most eminent of modern dramatic authors:

"Hillhouse, whose music, like his themes,
Lifts earth to heaven.—whose poet-dreams
Are pure and holy as the hymn
Echoed from harps of seraphim
By birds that drank at Zion's fountain,
When glory, peace, and hope were hers,
And beautiful upon her mountains
The feet of angel-messengers!"

See Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit.; Autobiography prefixed to Hitchcock's Poetical Works.

Hitchcock, Edward, D.D., LL.D., an eminent geologist, b. at Deerfield, Mass., May 24, 1793, became principal of an academy in his native town in 1816, and retained this situation for three years, when he was ordained, and subsequently was pastor of the Congregational church at Conway, Mass.; Professor of Geology and Natural History in Amherst College, 1825; appointed to make a Geological Survey of Massachusetts in 1830, and again in 1837; President of Amherst College, and Professor of Natural Theology and Geology, 1844; Agricultural Commissioner for Massachusetts, to visit the Agricultural Schools of Europe, 1850. In 1854 Dr. Hitchcock was induced by increasing bodily infirmities to resign the Presidency of Amherst College; but he still retains (1858) the Chair of Natural Theology and Geology. He was succeeded in the presidency by the Rev. Dr. William A. Stearns. Among Dr. Hitchcock's early literary labours were the preparation of an almanac for four years, (1815–18,) and the composition of a Tragedy pub. in 1815, entitled The Downfall of Buonaparte. He has since then given to the world a number of works which have conferred upon him a distinguished reputation both in Europe and America. 1. Geology of the Connecticut Valley, 1823. 2. Catalogue of Plants within Twenty Miles of Amherst, 1829. 3. Dyspepsia Forestalled and Resisted, 1830. 4. An Argument for Early Temperance. Reprinted in London. 5. Hoadly, Benjamin, D.D., 1676-1761, a native of Westerham, Kent, admitted of Catherine Hall, Cambridge, 1691, of which he became Fellow and Tutor; Lecturer of St. Mildred, London, 1701; Rector of St. Peter-le-Poor, London, 1704; Rector of Streatham, Surrey, 1710; Bishop of Bangor, 1715; Bishop of Hereford, 1721; Bishop of Salisbury, 1723; Bishop of Winchester, 1734. Bishop Hoadly pub. a number of sermons and controversial tracts, political and theological, which were collected and pub. by his son, John Hoadly, Chancellor of the Diocese of Winchester, 1773, 3 vols. fol. He first attracted attention by a Letter to Mr. Fleetwood, occasioned by his late Essay on Miracles, 1702, 4to, which we have already noticed: see FLEETWOOD, WILLIAM, D.D. This was followed by The Reasonableness of Conformity to the Church of England, 1703, 8vo, which he supported by some other tracts. He had here for his opponent the excellent Mr. Calamy, who represented the Dissenters of his way of thinking. See CALAMY, EDMUND. In 1707, 8vo, Hoadly pub. A Brief Defence of Episcopal Ordination:

"I like both the design and doctrine, as I do every design of reconciling religion with reason, or, where that may not be done, of bringing them as near together as possible."—Dr. MIDDLETON.

In 1735, 8vo, he gave to the world A Plain Account of the Nature and End of the Lord's Supper; a Defence of the same, 1735, '48, 8vo. This elicited a number of answers, a list of which will be found in Dr. Horne's Cat. of the Queen's Library at Cambridge, and in Watt's Bibl. Brit. Those who have not time or disposition to read all these treatises can remember Mr. Bickersteth's hint that Warren and Law's responses

"Sufficiently show the nature of and answer Bishop Hoadly's work."—Christian Student.

But the most memorable warfare in which Hoadly was engaged was that known as the Bangorian Controversy. This was elicited by a sermon, preached before the king in 1717, on St. John xviii. 36:—"My kingdom is not of this world."

"The manner in which he explained the text was, that the clergy had no pretensions to any temporal jurisdictions; but this was answered by Dr. Snape, [Letter to the Bishops of Bangor, 1717, 8vo;] and, in the course of the debate, the argument insensibly changed from the rights of the clergy to that of princes, in the government of the church. Bishop Hoadly strenuously maintained that temporal princes had a right to govern in ecclesiastical politics. His most able opponent was the celebrated William Law, [The Bishop of Bangor's Late Sermon and his Letter to Dr. Snape in defence of it answered, 1717, 8vo,] who, in some material points, may be said to have gained a complete victory."

The inquisitive reader who desires to master this celebrated Controversy will find a guide in a vol. entitled An Account of all the considerable Pamphlets that have been published on the Present Controversy between the Bishop of Bangor and others to 1718, with a Continuation to 1719, 8vo, 1719-20. Some forty or fifty tracts were pub. upon this vexata questio. As an encouragement (!) to the reader who is impatient to spend a few winter evenings in the digestion of this knotty matter, we quote the experience of one of our most learned and acute of modern literary critics:

"A long and celebrated war of pens instantly commenced, known by the name of the Bangorian Controversy; managed, perhaps on both sides, with all the chicane of polemical writers, and disgusting both from its tediousness, and from the manifest unwillingness of the disputants to speak ingenuously what they meant."

Then follows this note:

"These qualities are so apparent, that after turning over some forty or fifty tracts, and consuming a good many hours on the Bangorian Controversy, I should find some difficulty in stating with decision the propositions in dispute."—Hallam's Constit. Hist. of England, ed. 1854; iii. 243-244. Read the whole of these remarks, which throw considerable light upon the subject.

Bishop Hoadly's Sermons (1754-55, 2 vols. 8vo; Discourses, 4th ed., 1734, 8vo; and see his collected Works) are highly valued:

"Hoadly is very exact and judicious, and both his essence and style just, close, and clear."—Dr. WATERLAND.

As regards style, Pope complains of his long sentences:

"Swift for closer style,

But Hoadly for a period of a mile."

But the reader must also peruse Akenside's Complimentary Ode to Hoadly.

Hoare, Sir Richard Colt, Bart., 1758-1838, an eminent antiquary, the eldest son of Sir Richard Hoare, the first baronet, was the author of several valuable publications, some of the most important of which we have already noticed. A list of his works, with a biography of the writer, will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., July, 1838. We instance the following:—1. The Itinerary of Archbishop Baldwin through Wales; trans. into English, and illustrated with Views, Annotations, and a Life of Giraldus, Lon., 1806, 2 vols. 4to. See BARRY, GERALD, p. 134. See also Edin. Rev., viii. 399-413. 2. A Tour through the Isle of Elba, 1814, r. 4to. 3. A Classical Tour through Italy, 1819, 2 vols. 4to; an ed. in 3 vols. 8vo. See EUSTACE, JOHN CHERWONE, p. 563-564. 4. The History of Ancient Wiltshire, 1810-21, 5 Pts. imp. fol.; often bound in 2 vols., £21; large-paper copies, £31 10s. Sir Richard now commenced, assisted by able coadjutors, The Modern History of South Wiltshire, of which Pt. 1—The Hundred of Mere—was pub. in 1822, and the last portion in 1843. Bound in 6 vols. fol., £42; large paper, £74. At the present date (1856) only about 20 perfect copies remain in the hands of the publishers,—Messrs. Nichols of London. These they offer at £30 for small paper; £60 for large-paper copies, bound either in 5 very large vols. or in 12 smaller ones. Sir Richard did not live to see this great work completed, nor was he able to include, as he had designed, the modern history of North Wiltshire. May we not yet hope for such a supplement as he would have rejoiced to see? His principal assistants in the Modern History of South Wiltshire were the Lord Arundell of Wardour, the Rev. John Offer; H. Wansey, Esq.; R. Harris, Esq.; C. Bowley, Esq.; W. H. Black, Esq.; George Matcham, Esq., LL.D., of Newhouse; R. Benson, Esq.; H. Hatcher, Esq.; and J. G. Nichols, Esq. We have already indicated our appreciation of enlightened topographical investigations of this character in our notice of George Baker's Hist. and Antiq. of Northamptonshire, p. 103. Sir Richard collected a museum of curiosities of great value: see Genl. Mag., 1846, Pt. 1, 73. See also Dibdin's Lib. Comp. for an account of his library, of which he printed two partial catalogues,—Hist. and Topog. of Italy, 1812, r. 8vo, Hist. and Topog. of England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, 1815, 8vo,—both privately printed for presents: 12 copies of the former, 25 of the latter.

Hobart, Sir Henry, Lord Chief-Justice of the Court of Common Pleas temp. James I. Reports in the reign of K. James I., with some few Cases in the reign of Q. Elizabeth, Lon., 1641, 4to; 1650, '71, '78, '83, fol. New ed., with adds., by Edward Chilton, 1724, fol. 1st Amer. from the last English ed., by Judge J. M. Williams, Bosl., 1829, 8vo. The Amer. ed. is on the whole preferable to the best English ed.—that of 1724; but Judge Williams has unfortunately left out several cases which he deemed of not much importance to the American lawyer. This omission is to be much regretted, and it involves the necessity of purchasing both eds. Professor Greenleaf contemplated editing Hobart's Reports, but relinquished the design and gave his notes to Judge Williams, who has inserted them in the early part of his ed. See Judge Story's Miscell. Writings, 1852, 274; Marvin's Leg. Bibl., 389-390, and authorities there cited. An interesting biographical notice of Judge Hobart will be found in Wallace's Reporters, 3d ed., 1855, 162-167.

Press; also Oxford, 1838, 8vo, with a Pref. containing a Hist. of the Ch. in America, by W. F. Hook, D.D., Vicar of Leeds. And see a Memoir of Bishop Hobart, by Rev. Dr. Schroeder, N. York, 12mo.

Bishop Hobart was a zealous advocate for the necessity of Episcopal ordination, and had (as we have seen) a controversy on this subject with the Rev. John M. Mason, D.D., of New York, and also (in 1811) with the Rev. J. C. Jones, an Episcopal clergyman. Dr. Mason's work, entitled Claims to Episcopacy Refuted, in a Review of the Essays of Bp. Hobart, &c., was pub., Lon., 1838, 12mo, with an Introduction and Appendix, by the Rev. John Blackburn, of Pentonville.

"His Pastoral Charges in defence of the leading doctrines, the polity and orders, of the Christian Church, are very argumentative and conclusive, and much admired. . . . The writings of Bp. Hobart have not been unappreciated in England. But his writings are only a small portion of the services he rendered to his generation; he was born to act rather than to write. His deeds are ably narrated by Dr. Berrian, a judicious friend and near connection of the deceased Bishop."—Louwdes's Brit. Lib., 656, 833.

Hobbes, Thomas, 1588-1679, a native of Malmesbury, Wiltshire, where his father was minister, was educated at the grammar-school of that place, and at Magdalen Hall, Oxford. In 1608 he became domestic tutor to Lord Cavendish, son of the Earl of Devonshire, with whom he travelled in France and Italy. On his return he became secretary to his ward, on his succeeding to his father's honours; but the death of the former, in 1628, dissolved a connexion which had been maintained for twenty years, and Hobbes was easily persuaded again to leave his country as a companion to the son of Sir Gervase Clifton. In 1631 he was solicited by the countess-dowager of Devonshire to return to England and assume the care of the young earl, then thirteen years of age, and he complied with this request. This arrangement led to a third visit to the Continent, where he resided with his new pupil from 1634 to 1637. Hobbes again returned to Paris, from political apprehensions, in 1641, and remained there until after the publication of his Leviathan. In 1647 he was appointed mathematical tutor to the Prince of Wales, (afterwards Charles II.) then resident in Paris. After the publication of his Leviathan, which appeared in 1651, he returned to England, and henceforth passed his summers at the Earl of Devonshire's seat in Derbyshire, and his winters in town. In 1674, having attained the great age of 86, he bade a last farewell to London, and retired to the residence of his patron, the Earl of Devonshire, in Derbyshire, to spend the rest of his days in seclusion. Here he remained in "ease and plenty," devoting the "morning to exercise and the afternoon to his studies," until his death in 1679, in the ninety-second year of his age, and about seventy-two years from the date of his first connexion with the illustrious family to three generations of which he had been the object of affectionate care and princely patronage. He was the intimate friend of Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Ben Jonson, and Lord Bacon, and is said to have assisted the latter in translating some of his works into Latin. An interesting account of his habits during his last years will be found in Bishop White Kennet's Memoirs of the Cavendish Family, and detailed notices of his publications and literary controversies in the authorities subjoined. Among the principal works of this celebrated philosopher are—1. Hist. of the Peloponnesian War, Lon., 1628, '34, '76, fol.; 1723, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The Translation of Thucydides, as he himself boasts, was published to show the evils of popular government."—SIR JAMES MACRINTOSH: 2d Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit.

2. De Mirabilibus Peeci; being the Wonders of the Peak in Devonshire. This is a long Latin poem. In Latin, 1636, '66, 8vo; 1675, 4to. In English and Latin, 1678, 8vo. 3. Elementa Philosophiæ, seu Politicæ de Cive, Paris, 1642, 4to: for private distribution. Pub., Amst., 1647, '50, '60, '69, 12mo. See No. 6. 4. Human Nature; or, the Fundamental Principles of Policy concerning the Faculties and Passions of the Human Soul, Lon., 1650, '51, 12mo. This has been called the ablest of his writings. See No. 6. 5. De Corpore Politico; or, the Elements of Law, Moral and Politic, 1650, 8vo. See No. 6. 6. Leviathan; or, the Matter, Forme, and Power of a Commonwealth, Ecclesiastical and Civill, 1651, 8vo, fol. In Latin, 1668, 4to; Amst., 1670, 4to. This work may be called an amplification of Nos. 3, 4, and 5; and is "so constructed as to form a complete digest of all his opinions, religious, moral, and theological."

"In 1651 the complete system of his philosophy was given to the world in the Leviathan. These three works [Nos. 3, 5, and 6] bear somewhat the same relation to one another that the Advancement of Learning does to the treatise De Armentis Scientiarum; they are in effect the same; the same order of subjects, the same arguments, and in most places either the same words, or such variations as occurred to the second thoughts of the writer; but much is more copiously illustrated and more clearly put in the latter than in the former, while much also, from whatever cause, is withdrawn or considerably modified."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1854, ii. 530.

As regards politics, the Leviathan advocates the unlimited power of princes; the Leviathan is the body politic, which must be kept in chains: in point of morals, his principles tend to "confound all distinctions between right and wrong, and indirectly to undermine the foundations of all religion, natural and revealed." Such doctrines were hailed with delight by the advocates of despotism, and libertines of all classes were glad to find an apology for their vices in the teachings of a philosopher who enjoyed the reputation of a sage. The rapid circulation of so dangerous a work elicited the watchful care of the guardians of public morals and the press. An amusing chronicle of the day furnishes us with an appropriate note upon this head:

"To my booksellers for Hobbes's Leviathan, which is now mightily called for, and what was heretofore sold for 8s., I now give 24s. at the second hand, and is sold for 30s., it being a book the Bishop will not let be printed again."—Sept. 3, 1668: Pepys's Diary.

The defenders were not backward in exposing the absurdity and mischievous tendency of such speculations:

"Cudworth was one of those whom Hobbes had roused by the atheistic and immoral theories of the Leviathan,"—(Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, iii. 304.)

and we have already had occasion to notice his masterly vindication of correct principles, (see CUDWORTH, RALPH, p. 457.) Nor should we omit to notice Cumberland's De Legibus Naturæ, or Lord Clarendon's Survey of the Leviathan. But at the close of this article, where we shall have something more to say respecting the character of Hobbes's political and moral philosophy, we shall give a list of the principal opponents of his pernicious speculations.

7. Letter about Liberty and Necessity, Lon., 1651, 12mo. This elicited a controversy with Archbishop Bramhall (see BRAMHALL, JOHN, D.D., p. 238) and Bishop Laney. Hobbes pub. an account of his controversy with Bramhall, in 1656, 4to, and of that with Laney, in 1670, 12mo. 8. Elementorum Philosophiæ: Sectio prima, de Corpore, iv. partibus, 1655, 8vo; in English, 1656, 4to: Sectio secunda, 1657, 4to; Amst., 1668, 4to. This led to a twenty years' controversy between Hobbes and Dr. Wallis, Savilian Professor of Geometry at Oxford, in which Hobbes made himself the laughing-stock of the mathematicians of the day, but would never acknowledge his defeat. He declared that he had discovered the quadrature of the circle, and all evidence to the contrary was answered by the foulest personal abuse. In defence of his untenable position, he pub. a number of treatises which gratified his spleen if they did not convince his opponents. An account of this war will be found in Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors. 9. The Voyage of Ulysses; or, Homer's Odyssees, books ix., x., xi., xii., in English, Lon., 1674, 8vo. 10. The Iliads and Odysseys of Homer, in English, with a Pref., 1675, '77, 12mo. Of this translation, condemned by Pope and Beattie, three large edits. were called for in less than ten years.

"His poetry, as well as Ozilby's, is too mean for criticism."—POPE.

Pope declares that Hobbes continually lops off circumstances, and now and then omits whole similes and sentences.

"Though called a translation of Homer, it does not even deserve the name of poem."—Battle's Essay on Poetry and Music.

Hobbes thus apologized for his translation:

"Why then did I write it?—Because I had nothing else to do. Why publish it?—Because I thought it might take off my adversaries from showing their folly upon my more serious writings."—Hobbes to the Reader.

11. Decameron Physiologicum; or, Ten Dialogues of Natural Philosophy, &c., 1678, 8vo. 12. Vita Thomæ Hobbes; a Latin Poem, 1679, 4to; in English verse, also by himself, 1680, fol.; in prose, 1681, 8vo; 1682, 4to; Carolop., 1681, 8vo; 1682, 8vo. This Life was written in his 85th year. 13. Behemoth: the Hist. of the Civil Wars of England from 1640 to 1660, Lon., 1679, 8vo.

"This history is in dialogue, and full of paradoxes, like all his other writings. More philosophical, political,—or any thing, rather than historical; yet full of shrewd observations."—BISHOP WARBURTON.

14. Historia Ecclesiastica Carmine Elegiaco concinnata, Aug. Trinob., [i.e. London,] 1688, 8vo; in English, entit. a True Eccles. Hist. from Moses to Luther; in verse, &c., Lon., 1722, 8vo.

"Auctor maxime contra Pontiff. Rom. ejusque potestatem disputat. Patres Nicænos acerbe perstruigit, monstratque se ab indifferentismo religionum haud alienum est."—WATCII.

Hobbes had pub. in Amsterdam, in 1668, 2 vols. 4to, Opera Philosophica quæ Latine scripsit omnia. This is a beautiful edit. There appeared in 1715, Lon., fol., his Moral and Political Works, with Life, &c., with a Suppl., by Dr. Blackbourne, &c. But a complete collection of his Works, now first collected and edited by Sir William Molesworth, Bart., M.P., was pub. in 1839–45, 16 vols. 8vo, £8; or The English Works, in 11 vols., £5 10s.; Latin Works, in 5 vols., £2 8s. The principal writers against Hobbes are Lords Clarendon, Shaftesbury, and Kames; Archbishops Brauhall and Tenison; Bishops Cumberland, Butler, Laney, and Lucy; Drs. Cudworth, Eachard, Parker, Henry Moore, Hutcheson, and Samuel Clarke; Sir James Mackintosh, James Harrington, Dugald Stewart, Smith, and Brown. It is almost needless to state that such an array of talent was hardly necessary for the confutation of the sophisms and absurdities which mingle so strangely with the evidences of uncommon acumen and philosophical shrewdness which so eminently distinguished the intellectual speculations of this great writer. His inconsistency was not confined to his writings; for he was in the habit of the frequent reception of the eucharist, whilst promulgating opinions subversive of Christianity; which reminds us of his declaration that "Holy Scripture is the voice of God, ruling all things by the greatest right," whilst he yet taught men to cast the Scriptures to the winds at the command of their earthly ruler.

"Thought is free," he tells us; "but when it comes to confession of faith, the private reason must submit to the public,—that is to say, to God's lieutenant."—De Cive; Leviathan.

The mischievous effects of his doctrines in his own generation are graphically described by Mr. Macaulay in his History of England, now passing through the press, (see vol. i. chap. 2;) and the philosophers of our own day have confirmed the censure which rebuked the first publication of his errors:

"Before dismissing the system of Hobbes, it may be worth while to remark that all his leading principles are traced by Cudworth to the remains of the ancient sceptics, by some of whom, as well as by Hobbes, they seem to have been adopted from a wish to flatter the uncontrolled passions of sovereigns."—DUGALD STEWART: 1st Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit.

"Hobbes having thus struck the affections out of his map of human nature, and having totally misunderstood (as will appear in a succeeding part of this Dissertation) the nature even of the appetites, it is no wonder that we should find in it not a trace of the moral sentiments. Moral good he considers merely as consisting in the signs of a power to produce pleasure; and repentance is no more than regret at having missed the way; so that, according to this system, a disinterested approbation of and reverence for virtue are no more possible than disinterested affections towards our fellow-creatures."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: 2d Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit.

"The political system of Hobbes, like his moral system, of which, in fact, it is only a portion, sears up the heart. It takes away the sense of wrong, that has consoled the wise and good in their dangers, the proud appeal of innocence under oppression, like that of Prometheus to the elements, uttered to the witnessing world, in coming ages, to the just ear of Heaven. It confounds the principles of moral approbation, the notions of good and ill desert, in a servile idolatry of the monstrous Leviathan it creates, and, after sacrificing all right at the altar of power, denies to the Omnipotent the prerogative of dictating the laws of his own worship."—Hillom's Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1854, ii. 542.

A man of such remarkable mental ability and uncommon intellectual force could not but command a respectful hearing, even from those who the most deeply regretted the mischievous character of his speculations. His most illustrious opponent approaches the lists not without undiguised hesitation:

"Mr. Hobbes is one of the oldest friends I have in the world, and for whom I have always had a great esteem, as a man who, besides his eminent learning and knowledge, has been always thought a man of probity and free from scandal; but when I reflected upon the mischievous principles scattered through his Leviathan, I felt myself obliged to make these animadversions upon it."—Clarendon's Surrey, p. 3.

An eminent prelate, and a most unscrupulous "man of war from his youth," displays no disposition to allow the philosopher all that he could justly claim:

"Here let us do justice to that great man's memory, at a time when his writings seem to be entirely neglected, who, with all his errors, we must allow to be one of the first men of his age for a bright wit, a deep penetration, and a cultivated understanding."—BISHOP WARBURTON.

Mr. Mill, who was one of the first to call the attention of modern readers to the writings of this philosopher, remarks:

"Hobbes is a great name in philosophy, on account both of the value of what he taught, and the extraordinary impulse which he communicated to the spirit of Free Inquiry in Europe."

To the same effect, Mr. Hallam observes:

"In nothing does Hobbes deserve more credit than in having set an example of close observation in the philosophy of the human mind."—Lit. Hist. of Europe.

Mr. Macaulay, also, referring to the young men of distinguished talents who were sometimes the companions of Bacon's retirement, remarks that

"Among them his quick eye soon discerned the superior abilities of Thomas Hobbes. It is not probable, however, that he fully appreciated the powers of his disciple, or foresaw the vast influence both for good and evil which that most vigorous and acute of human intellects was destined to exercise on the two succeeding generations."—Edin. Rev., July, 1837; and in the Essays, ii. 193.

Again, in the History of England, the same learned critic tells us that

"Thomas Hobbes had, in language more precise and luminous than has ever been employed by any other metaphysical writer, maintained that the will of the prince was the standard of right and wrong."—Vol. i. chap. 11.

"Thomas Hobbes, a man of much learning, more thinking, and not a little knowledge of the world, was one of the most celebrated and admired authors of his age. His style is incomparably better than that of any other writer in the reign of Charles I., and was, for its uncommon strength and purity, scarce equalled in the succeeding reign."—GRANGER: Biog. Hist. of Eng.

The popularity of this writer was undoubtedly greatly owing to this remarkable purity of style:

"A permanent foundation of his fame remains in his admirable style, which seems to be the very perfection of didactic language. Short, clear, precise, pithy, his language never has more than one meaning, which it never requires a second thought to take. By the help of his exact method it takes so firm a hold on the mind, that it will not allow attention to slacken."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: ubi supra.

"His language is so lucid and concise, that it would be almost as improper to put an algebraical process in different terms as some of his metaphysical paragraphs."—HALLAM: ubi supra.

As a political economist, also, the claims of our author are not to be forgotten:

"Hobbes seems to have been one of the first who had any thing like a distinct perception of the real source of wealth."—McCulloch's Lit. of Polit. Econ., q. v.

With such powers for extensive usefulness to his race, how melancholy is it to be obliged to record of this great philosopher, in the language of Hume, (certainly not a suspicious witness,) that

"Hobbes's politics are fitted only to promote tyranny, and his ethics to encourage licentiousness."—Hist. of England, Bayley's ed., iv. 609.

"As the reputation of Dr. Hodge as a Biblical scholar and theologian has already been fully established, we need only announce a new work from his pen to insure its ready reception. His Commentary on the Ephesians displays the ripe scholarship, the convincing exegesis, and the practical development, which imparted such value to his exposition of the Epistle to the Romans. It is a book for the study of the scholar, and yet most happily adapted for the instruction of general readers, by whom it should be promptly purchased. While we do not regard any man as infallible, we know of no one who is a safer guide to the study of the Scriptures than Professor Hodge."—Presbyterian.

Oxford, 1698; Archdeacon of Oxford, 1704. His most noted works are the following:—1. Dissertation against Aristetus's Hist. of the Seventy-two Interpreters, 1680; Oxon., 1684, 8vo.

"Written in opposition to Isaac Vossius, and completely succeeds in destroying the credit of the lying fable of the Jew respecting the Septuagint."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

Vossius attacked this work in an Appendix to his Pomponius Mehi, and Hody responded when he pub. a new ed. of his Dissertation in his De Bibliorum Textibus Originalibus. See No. 5. 2. Prolegomena to John Malela's Chronicle, printed at Oxford, 1691, 8vo. The Prolegomena was written in 1689. 3. Hist. of English Councils and Convocations, &c., Lon., 1701, 8vo. 4. The Resurrection of the same Hody asserted, 1694, 8vo. 5. De Bibliorum Textibus Originalibus, versionibus Græcis, et Latina Vulgata, Libri Quatuor, Oxon., 1705, fol.

"This is the classical work on the Septuagint. . . . Among the writers on the Septuagint version, no one has displayed either more knowledge of the subject or more critical sagacity than Hody."—BISHOP MAIST.

"It examines with great accuracy, and discusses with much learning and ability, every question relating to the age, the authors, the character and progress of that celebrated version. All subsequent writers have been greatly indebted to this work on Hody."—Orme's Bibl. Bib. See Itome's Libl. Libl.

6. De Græcis Illustribus Linguae Græcæ instauratoribus, &c., Lon., 1742, 8vo. Posth. Pub. from Hody's MSS. by Dr. S. Jebb. This erudite work contains an account of those learned Grecians who retired to Italy about the time of the taking of Constantinople by the Turks, and restored the Greek tongue and learning in those western parts.

"Hody was perhaps the first who threw much light on the early studies of Greek in Italy; and his book, De Græcis illustribus linguae Græcæ instauratoribus, will be read with pleasure and advantage by every lover of literature; though Michus, who came with more exuberant erudition to the subject, has pointed out a few errors. But more is to be found as to its native cultivators, Hody being chiefly concerned with the Greek refugees, in Bayle's Fabricius, Niceron, Michus, Zeno, Tiraboschi, Melners, Roscoe, Heeren, Shepherd, Corniani, Gingucine, and the Biographie Universelle, whom I name in chronological order."—*Hallam's Lit. Hoffman, Charles Fenno, b. in the city of New York in 1806, a son of Judge Josiah Ogden Hoffman, and a brother of the eminent lawyer, Ogden Hoffman, entered Columbia College at the age of fifteen, and was admitted to the New York Bar when twenty-one. After three years of legal practice, Mr. Hoffman determined to indulge to its full extent the strong inclination which he had always entertained for literary pursuits; and he accordingly abandoned Coke and Blackstone for the more congenial fields of Romance and Poetry. He has since given to the world—1. A Winter in the West, New York, 1835, 2 vols. 12mo; Lon., 1835, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"It has since passed through several editions, and will continue to be admired so long as graphic delineations of nature, spirited sketches of men and manners, and richness and purity of style, are appreciated."—R. W. Griswold: Prose Writers of America.

2. Wild Scenes in Forest and Prairie, Lon., (1837?) 1839, 2 vols. p. 8vo. With addits., N. York, 1843, 2 vols. 12mo. 3. Greyslaer; a Romance of the Mohawk, 1840, '49, 12mo. This is founded on the celebrated criminal trial of Beauchamp for the murder of Colonel Sharpe, of Kentucky.

"It happily blends historical facts connected with the border-annals of our State with the fictitious story of love, and displays the powers of a master-painter of human passion. We regard the author of this book as one of the best writers in the country."—Southern Literary Messenger.

Greyslaer met with remarkable success; two edits. were printed in New York, one in Phila., and a fourth in London, in the same year. Mr. William Gilmore Sims has since pub. a novel—Beauchampe—founded on the same tragical incidents.

4. The Vigil of Faith, a Legend of the Adirondack Mountains; and other Poems, N. York, 1842, 12mo. Several edits. have been pub. in America and England. 5. The Echo; or, Borrowed Notes for Home Circulation, Phila., 1844. The title of this work was suggested by some remarks in an article, on Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America, in the Foreign Quarterly Review, in which the reviewer charges Hoffman with borrowing largely from Moore.

6. Lays of the Hudson, and other Poems, N. York, 32mo. 7. Love's Calendar, and other Poems, 1848. This vol. contains a more complete collection of his lyrical compositions than will be found in the Echo. Mr. Hoffman prepared for publication another novel, entitled The Red Spur of Ramapo; but the MS. was destroyed by the carelessness of a servant. In 1833 Mr. H. established that well-known and excellent Journal, The Knickerbocker Magazine, and edited a few numbers, after which he transferred it to the Rev. Timothy Flint. Mr. Hoffman subsequently became proprietor and editor of the American Monthly Magazine, (started by Henry William Herbert, Esq.,) and was its chief editor for many years, during one of which he also discharged the editorial duties connected with the New York Mirror.

In the former he pub., in 1837, a novel entitled Vanderlyn. For about eighteen months (in 1846–47) he was the editor of the New York Literary World; see DUYCKINCK, EVERETT A., p. 535. He has also been a contributor to the New Yorker, the Corsair, and other periodicals. His contributions to the New York American (distinguished by a *) whilst its associate-editor with Charles King, about 1828–30, added greatly to the reputation of that journal. Nor must we omit to render our acknowledgments to this versatile author for his historical sketch pub. in Sparks's American Biography, 2d Series, iii. 179-238, entitled The Administration of Jacob Leisler; a Chapter in American History. It is as a lyrical poet that Mr. Hoffman is best known to the world, and in this department he unquestionably occupies a very high rank. Among the principal favourites of the songs which have carried his name so extensively through the social circles of the land are Rosalie-Clare, 'This Hard to Share her Smiles with Many, Sparkling and Bright, and The Myrtle and Steel.

An eminent American critic, referring to this department of poetical authorship,—the song,—remarks:

"Whatever may be thought of it as an order of writing, I am satisfied that Mr. Hoffman has come as near to the highest standard or idea of excellence which belongs to this species of composition, as any American poet has done in his own department, whatever that department may be."—R. W. GRISWOLD: Poets and Poetry of America, 10th ed., 1855.

See the same author's opinion of Hoffman's prose compositions in his Prose Writers of America, 4th ed., 1852, p. 31.

"For some of the best convivial, amatory, and descriptive poetry of native origin, we are indebted to Charles Fenno Hoffman. The woods and streams, the feast and the vigil, are reflected in his verse with a graphic truth and sentiment that evidence an eye for the picturesque, a sense of the adventurous, and a zest for pleasure. He has written many admirable scenic pieces that evince not only a careful but a living observation of nature; some touches of this kind in the Vigil of Faith are worthy of the most celebrated poets. Many of his songs, from their graceful flow and tender feeling, are highly popular, although some of the metres are too like those of Moore not to provoke a comparison. They are, however, less tinged with artifice; and many of them have a spontaneous and natural vitality."—H. T. TUCKERMAN: Sketch of Amer. Lit.

Hoffman, David, LL.D., J. U. D., 1784-1854, a native of Baltimore, Maryland, an eminent lawyer and legal writer, from 1817 to 1836 Professor of Law in the University of Maryland, after the termination of his connexion with this institution resided two years in Europe, and subsequently settled in Philadelphia, where he remained until 1847. In the fall of this year he again visited Europe, returning home in 1853. He died suddenly, of an attack of apoplexy, in New York, November 11, 1854.

1. A Course of Legal Study; respectfully addressed to the Students of Law in the United States, Balt., 1817, pp. 283; 2d ed., rewritten and much enlarged, 1836, 2 vols. 8vo., pp. xvii., 576. The first ed. was most favourably reviewed by Judge Story, in the North American Review for July, 1817. We give a brief extract from this admirable article, which every lawyer should peruse with close attention.

"Mr. Hoffman has published a Course of Legal Study, which he modestly addresses to students, but which is well worthy the attention of every gentleman of the bar. . . . In quitting the work we have not the slightest hesitation to declare that it contains by far the most perfect system for the study of the law which has ever been offered to the publick."—*N. Amer. Unfortunately, this is the only vol. of this excellent work which ever saw the light. It was favourably reviewed by Mr. P. Cruise, in the North American Review for January, 1830, xxx. 135-160, q. v.; and see also Story's Inaug. Discourse, 45, n.; 3 Amer. Jur., 86; 1 Ang. L. J., 264; 36 *N. Amer. This may be considered as a sequel to No. 3. 5. Legal Hints; being a condensation of the leading Ideas as relating to Professional Department, contained in a Course of Legal Study, with the addition of some Counsel to Law-Students, Phila., 1846. 6. Chronicles, selected from the Originals of Cartaphilus, the Wandering Jew: embracing a period of nearly nineteen Centuries. Now first revealed to and edited by David Hoffman, Lon., 1855, 2 vols. 8vo. These two vols. are all that was given to the world of a work which was to have been extended to 6 vols. Vol. iii. (concluding Series 1, and reaching to A. D. 573) was ready for the press at the time of the death of the author. Series 2 (vols. iv. v. vi.) were in a state of partial preparation. The design was no less than a History of the World from the Christian era to the present time. To the compilation of this vast work Mr. Hoffman had devoted much time, arduous labour, and a large pecuniary outlay. This adds another to the many instances we have recorded in the course of this volume of cherished designs frustrated, anxious hopes disappointed, and "purposes broken off in the mid-st." But if the solemn consciousness of the approach of the "inexorable hour" warned him who had toiled so faithfully for his generation, that he must cease from his labours ere he should enter upon that goody heritage of honourable fame and extensive usefulness which had long been the goal of his ambition in the preparation of the great work of his life, he could yet look back with satisfaction at the good already accomplished by those invaluable fruits of his wisdom which he was permitted to give to the world. To adopt the language of another,

"If we were called upon to designate any single work which had exercised a greater influence over the profession of the law in this country than all others, which had most stimulated the student in his studies, most facilitated his labours, and in fine, most contributed to elevate the standard of professional learning and morals, we should unhesitatingly select Hoffman's Course of Legal Study."—N. Amer. Rev., xlv. 482.

"The constant reply of lazzagne to the young men who consulted him respecting their mathematical studies was, 'Study Euler;' and in like manner we should say to every law-student, from Maine to Louisiana, 'Study Hoffman.'"—GEORGE S. HILLARD: N. Amer. Rev., xlv. 82.

In the words of another admirer of this excellent and useful writer:

"What Cujacius said of Paul de Castro has been appropriately applied to Professor Hoffman's Course of Legal Study: Qui non habet Paulum de Castro, tunicum vendat, et emat."

Holland, Mrs. Thomas Christopher, 1770-1844, wife of the preceding, formerly Miss Barbara Wreaks, a daughter of Robert Wreaks, of Sheffield, was married in 1796 to Mr. T. Bradshaw Hoole, who died in 1798. In 1805 she pub. a vol. of poems upon a subscription-list of nearly 2000 copies, the profit on which enabled her to open a small school at Harrowgate, where the duties of tuition were relieved by the pleasures of authorship. In 1808 she was married to Thomas Christopher Hofland, the eminent landscape-painter, but did not permit her new engagements to relax her literary application, for in 1812 we find that she gave to the world no less than five different works. This literary activity distinguished Mrs. Hofland for the remainder of her life. In 1833 she was deprived by death of her son by her first husband, the Rev. Mr. Hoole, curate of St. Andrew's, Holborn, and in 1843 she was again left a widow. She wrote in all about seventy works, (of which nearly 300,000 copies were sold in Great Britain, and many thousands on the continent and in America,) and pub. a large number of pieces in magazines and annuals. Among the best-known of her works—which consist almost entirely of novels and moral tales—are: 1. The Daughter-in-Law. 2. Emily. 3. The Son of a Genius. 4. Beatrice. 5. Says she to her Neighbour, What? 6. Captives in India. 7. The Unloved One. 8. The Czarina. 9. Ellen, the Teacher. 10. The Merchant's Widow. 11. Adelaide. 12. Humility. 13. Fortitude. 14. Decision. 15. Integrity. 16. The Clergyman's Widow. 17. Daniel Dennison. 18. Self-Denial. 19. Letter of an Englishwoman. 20. Tales of the Priory. 21. Tales of the Manor. A Biographical notice of Mrs. Hofland will be found in the Lon. Gent. Mag., January, 1845; but for a detailed memoir of her life, accompanied by her Literary Remains, we must refer the reader to Mr. Thomas Ramsay's vol. with this title, Lon., 1849, 12mo. The author of the biography in Gent. Mag., referring to the many editions and large sale of her works, remarks:

"When this immense circulation is considered, in connexion with the fact that all her works were successfully devoted to improve the heart by pleasing and powerful lessons, we may form some idea of the debt of gratitude and esteem that is her due."

Hogarth, Richard, a schoolmaster in London, father of William Hogarth, the celebrated artist. Dissertationes Grammaticales, Lon., 1712, 8vo.

Hogarth, William, 1697-1764, a celebrated painter and engraver, son of the preceding, was a native of London. In 1730 he ran away with the daughter of the eminent artist, Sir James Thornhill, who was soon reconciled to the match by the remarkable talents of his volunteer son-in-law. We have already had occasion to refer to his Analysis of Beauty, Lon., 1754, '72, '83, 4to, (in Italian, Leghorn, 1761), in which he was assisted by Dr. Benjamin Hoody, Dr. Morell, and the Rev. Hogg, James, "The Ettrick Shepherd," December 9, 1770-Nov. 21, 1835, first saw the light in a cottage on the banks of the Ettrick River, in Selkirkshire, Scotland. His ancestors had been shepherds for five centuries, and James commenced his apprenticeship in the same humble calling when only seven years of age. Few authors who have obtained reputation have commenced on so slender a stock of knowledge; for the whole of the shepherd's scholastic education was comprised in six months' instruction received before he was eight years of age. In 1790 he entered the service of Mr. Laidlaw as a shepherd, and remained in this post for the ensuing ten years, the leisure hours of which were profitably occupied with the perusal of books from his master's library. In 1796 he commenced the composition of songs and ballads, and in the next year an ardent desire to be the successor of Burns—of whom he then first heard—gave an impetus to his poetical genius, which, to the astonishment of the world, resulted some years later in the production of The Queen's Wake. Some of his juvenile pieces happened at this time to fall into the hands of Sir Walter Scott, by whom they were highly commended. The first of his published productions, The Patriot Lay of Donald McDonald, composed in 1800, and printed in 1801, soon became a general favourite, and was sung amidst acclamations, published and set to music, whilst even the name of the author was unknown. In 1801 he wrote a prose essay called Reflections on a View of the Nocturnal Heavens, and in the same year, whilst on a visit to Edinburgh to dispose of some of his sheep, he pub. a collection of his best poems. In 1802 he contributed to Sir Walter Scott's Border Minstrelsy; and five years later gave to the world The Shepherd's Guide, (an Essay on Sheep), and a vol. of songs, ballads, and tales, entitled The Mountain Bard. By these two works he made about £300, which was soon swallowed up in the cultivation of an unprofitable farm; and the publication of the Forest Minstrel, a collection of the poet's early songs, in 1810, failed to meet with that encouragement which the declining fortunes of the author greatly needed. In the same year he commenced the issue of a periodical, intended as a censor of literature and manners, entitled The Spy. For this self-imposed task the conductor was altogether unsuited, and the new paper lingered but a twelvemonth and then expired. One good result, however, is to be attributed to the publication of The Spy. Some of his friends were so much pleased with some of the poetry contributed by the editor to his sheet, that they urged him to attempt the composition of a regular poem. Hogg was always ready to be encouraged; and his friends were gratified, with the rest of the world, in the spring of 1813, by the publication of The Queen's Wake, a Legendary Poem, by far his best production, and one which would not have disgraced the best of the great poets who were at that time delighting the literary circles of the day. Of the seventeen ballads in this work, the general favourite is the legend of Kilmeny:—certainly an exquisite production. The reputation of the author was now established: the poet became a celebrity; and happy was that lady of quality who could secure for her fashionable parties the rustic form, and still more rustic songs and witticisms, of the far-famed Ettrick Shepherd. The Queen's Wake soon reached its 5th edit., and the Shepherd needed nothing more to make him an author for life, as the following list of works, which appeared in rapid succession, will abundantly testify. POETRY: 1. Pilgrims of the Sun, 1815, 1 vol. 2. The Hunting of Badlewe, 1 vol. 3. Madoc of the Moor, 1816, 1 vol. 4. Poetic Mirror; or, Living Bards of Britain, 1 vol. This work, consisting of imitations of distinguished living poets, was all (with the exception of Scott's pretended epistle to Southey,—the work of Thomas Pringle) written by Hogg in three weeks. 5. Dramatic Tales, 2 vols. 6. Sacred Melodies, 1 vol. 7. The Border Garland, 1 vol. 8. The Jacobite Relics of Scotland: vol. i., 1819; vol. ii., 1821. Partly original. 9. Queen Hynde, 1825, 1 vol. 10. The Royal Jubilee; a Masque, 1 vol. 11. A Selection of his Songs, 1831, 1 vol. 12. The Queer Book: 26 Miscellaneous Poems, some of which had appeared in Blackwood, 1 vol. A collection of his best poems was pub. at Edinburgh in 1822, in 4 vols. Svo. PROSE: 13. The Brownie of Bodsbeck, and other Tales, 1818, 2 vols. 14. Winter Evening Tales, 1820, 2 vols. 15. The Three Perils of Man, 1822, 3 vols. 16. The Three Perils of Woman, 1823, 3 vols. 17. The Confessions of a Justified Sinner, 1824, 1 vol. 18. The Shepherd's Calendar, 1829, 2 vols. Composed of tales originally pub. in Blackwood's Magazine. 19. Altrive Tales, 1832. Vol. i. only appeared, although twelve were contemplated, one every other month. The Tales were to be such traditional stories as were current with the Altrive peasantry, and collected from them. The failure of Cochran & Co., the publishers, prevented the prosecution of the plan. 20. Do-estic Manners of Sir Walter Scott, 1834. Considered a very impertinent production. 21. Lay Sermons, 1834, 1 vol. 22. Tales of the Wars of Montrose, 1835, 3 vols. In 1817 Hogg found himself settled on his farm of Altrive, consisting of seventy acres on the banks of the Yarrow, for which he was indebted to the kindness of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1820, in his 48th year, he was married to Miss Margaret Phillips, who seems to have made him a very good wife: she and three of their children, daughters, are now living, and Mrs. Hogg was recently pensioned by government. Shortly after his marriage he took up his residence at Mount Benger; but, being again unfortunate in his agricultural experiments, he was obliged to return to Altrive. The last years of his life were tranquilly passed in the prosecution of his literary pursuits, varied by the sports of the field, to which he was passionately attached. In the autumn of 1835 his health was prostrated by an attack of the jaundice, which resulted in a disease of the liver, and terminated fatally on the 21st of November, 1835, in the 65th year of his age. For further information respecting this uneducated genius, we refer the reader to his autobiographical reminiscences; to the Memoir, by Professor John Wilson, prefixed to Blackie & Co.'s collective edit. of Hogg's Works, 1850, 5 vols. 12mo; Life, by Dr. R. We have already stated that The Queen's Wake is considered to be by far the best of his productions; a few brief notices of this poem may therefore be here appropriately introduced:

"The Queen's Wake is a garland of fair forest-flowers, bound with a band of rushes from the moor. It is not a poem,—not it; nor was it intended to be so; you might as well call a bright bouquet of flowers a flower, which, by-the-by, we do in Scotland. Some of the ballads are very beautiful; one or two even splendid; most of them spirited; and the worst far better than the best that was ever written by any bard in danger of being a blockhead. Kilmeny alone places our (ay, our) Shepherd among the Undying Ones."—PROFESSOR WILSON: Christopher North's Recreations: An Hour's Talk about Poetry.

"The poem is unequal, and it could not well be otherwise; it consists of the songs of many minstrels in honour of Queen Mary, united together by a sort of recitative, very rambling, amusing, and characteristic. Some of the strains of the contending Bards are of the highest order, both of conception and execution; the Abbot of Eye has great ease, vigour, and harmony, and the story of the Fair Kilmeny, for true simplicity, exquisite loveliness, and graceful and original fancy, cannot be matched in the whole compass of British song."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years.

"The specimens we have already given [of Kilmeny] will enable the reader to judge of the style and manner of this singular composition; upon the strength of which alone we should feel ourselves completely justified in assuring the author that no doubt can be entertained that he is a poet, in the highest acceptance of the name."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., Nov. 1811.

"The Legend of Kilmeny is as beautiful as any thing in that department of poetry. It contains a fine moral:—that purity of heart makes an earthly creature a welcome citizen of heaven; and the tone and imagery are all fraught with a tenderness and grace that are as unethically as the subject of the legend."—Hogwit's Homes and Haunts of the Brit. Poets.

"Kilmeny has been the theme of universal admiration, and deservedly so, for it is what Warton would have denominated 'pure poetry.' It is, for the most part, the glorious emanation of a sublime fancy,—the spontaneous sprouting forth of amaranthine flowers of sentiment,—the bubbling out and welling over of inspiration's fountain."—D. M. MOIR: Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century.

An acute critic, already quoted, after noticing Hogg's defects as a prose-writer, evinces a disposition to do full justice to his real merits:

"When he chooses to be simple and unadorned, there are few to match him: his Wool-gatherer, some of his Winter Night's" 861

Tales,—which, instead of lengthening the nights, as a surly critic averred, shortened them for thousands,—his Brownie of Bodsbeck, and indeed all his fictions, exhibit much of the innocence and truth and blamelessness of pastoral life. In his finer moods, no one has equalled him in the rare power of uniting the elegance of superstitious fancy with the realities of life."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: ubi supra.

The name of the author of The Queen's Wake will recall to many the beautiful extemporaneous tribute of Wordsworth on hearing of the death of his brother poet:

"When first, descending from the moorlands,
I saw the stream of Yarrow glide
Along a bare and open valley,
The Ettrick Shepherd was my guide," &c.

Holbrook, J., Special Agent U. States Post-Office Department. Ten Years among the Mail-Bags, Phila., 1856, 12mo, pp. 432. A valuable and entertaining work.

Holbrook, John Edwards, M.D., b. at Beaufort, S. Carolina, 1795, a graduate of Brown University, Providence, R. Island, has been, since 1824, Professor of Anatomy in the Medical College of the State of S. Carolina. 1. American Herpetology; or, a Description of Reptiles inhabiting the United States, Phila., 1842, 5 vols. sm. 4to; $50. 2. Southern Ichthyology, embracing Georgia, Florida, and South Carolina. It was discontinued after two numbers were pub., the field being considered too extensive by the author, as he had to make all his drawings from life. He is now publishing a work on the Fishes of South Carolina, ten numbers of which have made their appearance. Such useful labourers in the walks of scientific research are worthy of all commendation.

Holerot, Thomas, 1744–1809, a native of London, the son of a shoemaker, after being a groom and an actor, commenced writing for the stage, and became the author of a number of plays, poems, novels, and translations from the French and German. He was a member of the Society for Constitutional Reform; and learning, in 1794, that he was indicted, he voluntarily resigned himself to the proper authorities; but, upon the acquittal of Hardy, Holcroft and the other prisoners mentioned in the indictment were discharged without a trial. His best-known plays (over thirty of which are registered in the Biog. Dramat.) are—1. Duplicity; a Com., Lon., 1781, 8vo. Very successful. 2. The School for Arrogance; a Com., 1791, 8vo. 3. The Road to Ruin; a Com., 1792, 8vo.

"This comedy ranks among the most successful of modern plays. There is merit in the writing, but much more in that dramatic science which disposes characters, scenes, and dialogue, with minute attention to theatrical ambition."—MRS. INCHBALD.

"Mr. Holcroft, in his Road to Ruin, set the example of that style of comedy in which the stang phrases of jockey noblemen and the humours of the four-in-hand club are blended with the romantic sentiments of distressed damsels and philosophic waiting-maids, and in which he was less imitated by the most successful of our living writers, unless we make a separate class for the school of Cumberland."—Hazlitt's Lects. on the Comic Writers of the Last Century.

4. The Deserted Daughter; a Com., 1795, 8vo. Very successful. Of his novels, among the most popular were—5. Alwyn; or, the Gentleman Comedian, 1780. 6. Anna St. Ives, 1792, 7 vols. 12mo. Tolerably successful. 7. Hugh Trevor, 1794, 3 vols. 12mo. 8. Bryan Perdue, 1805, 3 vols. sm. 8vo. In 1783, 4to, he pub. (9.) Human Happiness, or the Sceptic; a Poem—a work of bad tendency; and in 1806, 2 vols. 12mo, gave to the world (10.) Tales in Verse, Critical, Satirical, and Humorous: See Miss Mitford's Recolle. of a Lit. Life; Edin. Rev., x. 101–111. Of his translations we may instance—11. Caroline of Litchfield; from the French, 1786, 3 vols. 8vo. 12. Life of Frederic, Baron Trenck; from the German, 1788, 3 vols. 12mo.

"If ever one happens to take up an English version of a French or German book of that period.—Memoirs of Baron Trenck, or Caroline de Litchfield,—and if that version have in it the zest and savour of original writing, we shall be sure to find the name of Thomas Holcroft in the title-page."—MISS MITFORD: ubi supra.

13. Posthumous Works of Frederic II., King of Prussia; from the French, 1789, 3 vols. 8vo. For this translation Holcroft is said to have received about £1200. See Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist. 14. Lavater's Essays on Physiognomy; from the German, 1793, 3 vols. large 8vo. 360 engravings; £5 5s. 15. Herman and Dorothea; from the German of Goethe, 1801, 8vo. In 1804 he pub. (16.) Travels from Hamburgh, through Westphalia, Holland, and the Netherlands, to Paris, 1806, 2 vols. 4to.

"Upon the whole, we think that this book is a great deal too long and that it has attained this magnitude by the most intrepid and extensive application of the approved recipe for book-making that has yet come under our consideration."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., iv. 84–90, q. v.

In 1815, 3 vols. 12mo, appeared (17.) his Memoirs written by himself, continued [by Wm. Hazlitt, Sr.] to the time of his death, from his Diary, Notes, and other Papers. A new ed. was pub. in Longman's Travellers' Library in 1851, in 2 Pts.; also in 1 vol.; and an abridgment will be found in Miss Mitford's Recollections of a Literary Life. See also Hazlitt's First Acquaintance with Poets; Biog. Dramat.; and Lon. Gent. Mag. It is but justice to the memory of Holcroft to remark that he is said to have renounced his irreligious opinions when he found himself about visiting a world where they were not likely to prove of much benefit to him.

Holinshed, Holinshed, Holingshed, or Holynshed, Raphael, known by the valuable chronicles that go under his name, was descended from a family which lived at Bosely, in Cheshire, and died between 1578 and 1582; and this is all that has been ascertained respecting him. The Chronicles of Englande, Scotlande, and Ireland, Lon., 1577, 2 vols. fol. This is the first—or "Shakspeare" (so called because used by the great bard in the arrangement of some of his plots)—edition. It contains many wood-cuts, which were omitted and the language altered in the 2d edit., which appeared in 1586-87, 3 vols. fol.; commonly bound in two. This edit. was supervised, corrected, and enlarged by Abraham Fleming, and his brother Samuel assisted in compiling the elaborate index. Holinshed was not the sole author of these Chronicles. Vol. i. was partly composed by William Harrison, (q. v., pp. 793-794.) vol. ii. by Richard Stanhurst; John Hooker, alias Vowell; R. II. or W. II., (probably Wm. Harrison;) Francis Boteville, alias Thin; and others; vol. iii. by John Stow, Fr. Thin, Abr. Fleming, and others. Vol. i. gives us an Historical Description of Britain by Harrison, and the History of England, "from the time that it was first inhabited until the time that it was last conquered," by Holinshed. Vol. ii. contains the History of Ireland, by Holinshed, &c., to 1509, and from 1509 to 1586, by Stanhurst and Hooker; also the History of Scotland to 1571, by Holinshed; and from 1571 to 1586, by Boteville and others. Vol. iii. contains the History of England from William the Conqueror to 1577, by Holinshed; and from 1577 to 1586, by Stow, Fr. Thin, Fleming, and others.

"The Continuation from 1576 to 1586 contained several curious particulars, which gave great offence at the time of publication, and were accordingly suppressed, whereby, says Herbert, the paging from 1220 to 1275 is very irregular. According to Nicolson, they extend from 1491 to 1536. These are called the Castrations of Holinshed, and were republished by Dr. Drake, in 1728, in black-letter, in a thin folio volume. The curious however, necessarily look sharply after the original pages. A copy of this kind was in the Harleian and another in Dr. Mead's collection."—Diddin's Lib. Comp.

The credit of the plan of Holinshed's Chronicle seems to be due to Reginald Wolfe, the king's printer, who designed originally nothing less than a "universal Cosmography of the whole world." In 1807-08, 6 vols. 4to, appeared a new ed. of the Chronicles, in which the Castrations are restored. A copious Index—that rare luxury—adds to the value of this noble set of quartos. Copies are worth about £6 to £7, according to condition and binding. Copies of the 1st and 2d eds. have been sold for high prices. Of the 1st ed., Nassau's copy sold for £15 15s.; Steevens's for £22. Of the 2d ed., Steevens's sold for £23; Reed's for £23 10s.; the Roxburghe for £31 10s.; Willett's for £36 4s. 6d.; Sir Robert Smyth's for £40. We are now quoting the highest prices with which we are acquainted, with the exception of the remarkable copy (a large-paper, if there were any on large paper) in 4 vols., purchased by Richard Heber from Col. Stanley's collection for £63. The reprint of 1807-08 has diminished the value of the earlier edits. Hooker's trans. from the Latin of Giraldus's Conquest of England, in Holinshed's Chronicles, has been highly commended:

"Barry's topographical labours appear to the best advantage in Holinshed's Chronicle, translated and improv'd, with occasional notes, by John Hooker, alias Vowell, vol. II., edit. 1856."—Diddin's Lib. Comp.

The same authority remarks that Holinshed's Chronicles are

"By far the most popular and important of our historical records, in print, during the time of Queen Elizabeth; and from which, indeed, all modern historians have freely and largely borrow'd."—Ubi supra.

"The chronicle of Holinshed is more full and complete than any of its predecessors, and less loaded with trifling matters. . . . The Description of England (Harrison's) prefixed to the first volume is the most interesting and valuable document, as a picture of the country, and of the costume and mode of living of its inhabitants, which the sixteenth century has produced." See Drake's Shakspeare and his Times.

"You would smile at my love of black-letter, were I to refer you to Holinshed or Stowe; men, I assure you, by no means despicable."—DR. RICHARD FARMER: Lett. to a Friend on the Study of Eng. Hist.

A little experience in such studies will replace the smile which Dr. Farmer feared by one of contentment and satisfaction, and the delighted black-letter student will not need much persuasion to induce him often to revel in "Our old monkish chroniclers—these authentic and amusing relators of passing occurrences, who carry the reader back with them by an irresistible spell to the days in which they lived and among the scenes and persons which they describe."—Lon. Quar. Rev.

If he wish to dive deep into these picturesque records of the past, we will aid him by a list of titles of a set of Chronicles formerly (perhaps yet) offered for sale by Mr. Henry G. Bohn, of Covent Garden, London:—1. Froissart, by Col. Johnes, 4 vols. 2. MONSTRELET, by Col. Johnes, 4 vols. 3. ROBERT OF GLOUCESTER, 2 vols. 4. PETER LANGTOFT, 2 vols. 5. JOINVILLE'S MEMOIRS, 1 vol. 6. HOLINSHED, 6 vols. 7. GRAFTON, 2 vols. 8. WILLIAM OF MALMESBURY, 1 vol. 9. HALL, 1 vol. 10. HARDYNG, 1 vol. 11. FABYAN, 1 vol. 12. FULLER'S WORTHIES, 2 vols. 13. ARNOLD and RASTELL, 1 vol. In all, 28 vols. r. 4to. reprints, 1803-15. This noble set of books is richly bound in olive morocco, gilt in the old style, marbled and gilt edges, by no less a workman than CLARKE. The price—ay, there's the rub!—the price asked was £105. Another set, consisting of a portion only of these Chronicles, is described by Diddin in his Library Companion, ed. 1825, p. 197.

Holland, Henry, a bookseller in London, a son of Philemon Holland, the translator. 1. Basilologia: a Book of Kings; Effigies of all our English Kings from the Conquest, Lon., 1618, fol. 32 Portraits. The "Delabere copy" quoted by Granger, (preserved for 150 years in the Delabere family.) containing 152 portraits, was cut up and the portraits sold separately by Christie, March 29, 1811. The vol. sold in this way produced £601 12s. 6d. See Granger's Biog. Hist. of Eng.; Dibdin's Lib. Comp., and his Bibliog. Decameron; Brunet's Manual; Lowndes's Bibl. Manual. 2. Heroologia Anglia, 1620, 2 vols. fol. This contains portraits (65 and frontispiece) of eminent Englishmen, 1500-1620, with short lives. The engravings are chiefly by Pass and Janson.

"This is the favourite volume of a thorough-bred Grangerite; who, without pity or remorse, plunges his trenchant scissors into the very abdomen of the tome."—Dibdin's Bibl. Decameron, q. v.: see also his Lib. Comp.; Lowndes's Bibl. Man.

One of Edwards's copies, which had been Mariette's, (who had annexed to each portrait the name of the collection from whence it was taken.) was sold for £13; another of Edwards's, which had belonged to Buchelius, who wrote Latin verses under each portrait, was sold for £15; Willett's for £18; Williams's for £27 16s. 6d. But these are the highest prices with which we are acquainted. Mr. Joseph Lilly offers (in 1856) a fine copy, beautifully bound by Clarke and Bedford, for £12 12s.

Medical Notes and Reflections; 2d ed., 1839, 8vo. Amer. ed., Phila., 1836, 8vo; 3d ed., Lon., 1855, 8vo. The 2d ed. was reviewed in Lon. Quar. Rev., lxx. 315-340, q. v. The 3d ed. is noticed in the Westminster Review for January, 1856, where this invaluable guide is justly described as "A work which has done much to improve the general tone of thought upon medical subjects in the mind both of the profession and the public."

In the 1st and 2d eds. there were a few chapters on psychological subjects, which the author transferred to a separate volume, viz.: (1.) Chapters on Mental Physiology, 1852, p. 8vo. These have been replaced, in the 3d ed. of Medical Notes and Reflections, by four new chapters. The new ed. is also otherwise enlarged. 3d Amer. ed. of Medical Notes and Reflections, Phila., 1857, 8vo. This excellent work embodies the results of nearly forty years' active practice in London.

Holland, Philemon, M.D. d. 1636, in his 85th year, a native of Chelmsford, Essex, and Fellow of and educated at Trin. Coll., Camb.; subsequently became Head-Master of Coventry Free-School, and a physician. His versions into English of the following works gave him the title of the "Translator-General" of his age. 1. Livy, Lon., 1600, fol.

"Translated by that old worthy, Philemon, who, for the service which he rendered to his contemporaries and to his countrymen deserves to be called the best of the Hollands, without disparaging either the Lord or the Doctor of that appellation."—Southey's Doctor.

The whole of this trans. was said to have been written with one pen, which a lady had set in silver and preserved as a curiosity. 2. Pliny's Natural Hist. of the World, 1601, '34, 2 vols. fol.

Holles, Denzil, Lord, M.P., 1597-1680, second son of John, the first Earl of Clare, was one of the most eminent of the popular leaders in the reign of Charles I. and the head of the Presbyterian party in Parliament; but he subsequently displeased his old friends, was impeached for high treason, aided in the Restoration, was raised to the peerage by Charles II., and sent ambassador to France. He was the author of a number of Speeches, Letters, &c., pub. 1641-82;—see Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors,—but is best known by his Memoirs (written when he was an exile in France) from 1641 to 1648, Lon., 1699, 8vo.

"They are little more than the apology for his own conduct, and a virulent satire on his adversaries."—HORACE WALPOLE.

"They are worth reading. . . . To understand the conduct of Cromwell and the Republicans, not only must the Memoirs of Holles be read, but those of Ludlow."—PROF. SMYTH: Lects. on Mod. Hist.

Holley, Horace, D.D., 1781-1827, a native of Salisbury, Conn., grad. at Yale College in 1803; minister of Greenfield Hill, Fairfield, 1805; minister of the Hollis Street (Unitarian) Church, Boston, 1809; President of Transylvania University, Lexington, Kentucky, 1818-27. He pub. several occasional sermons and addresses, and contributed papers to the Western Review and other periodicals. See Memoir of Dr. Holley, by his widow; a Discourse on his Life and Character, by Chas. Caldwell, M.D., Bost., 1828; and a review of this Discourse, in N. Amer. Rev., xxvii. 403-415, by Edward Everett.

"One of the most eloquent speakers of the age,—or declaimers, rather: a showy, beautiful rhetorician; . . . a miserable prose-writer—in comparison with himself, as a speaker, we mean. He never appears to say what he means, or to mean what he says, with a pen."—American Writers: No. 4, in Blackw. Mag., xvii. 57.

Holley, Mrs. Mary Austin, d. 1846, married in 1805 to the preceding, visited Texas in 1831, and pub., in 1833, Texas; Observations, Historical, Geographical, and Descriptive, &c., Balt., 12mo.

"Mrs. Holley has given an agreeable account of her visit, in her own femininely graceful style, yet by no means destitute of expression and force; and her statements, as to the natural features of the country, are, in substance, correct."—JUDGE BULLARD: N. Amer. Rev., xliii. 257.

Hollis, Thomas, 1720-1774, an ardent advocate of civil and religious liberty, was the great-nephew of Thomas Hollis, (1659-1731), the munificent benefactor of Harvard College. Indeed, not only is the latter entitled to that appellation, but his brothers John and Nathaniel, his nephew the second Thomas, his great-nephew the third Thomas, (the subject of this notice), and the heir of the third Thomas,—Thomas Brand Hollis,—were all contributors to this institution. The subject of this notice pub. at considerable expense—1. A new ed. of Toland's Life of Milton, 1761, 8vo. Edited, with Notes, by T. Hollis. This is the best ed. of Toland's Milton. 2. An accurate ed. of Algernon Sydney's Discourses concerning Government; with his Letters, Trial, Apology, and Memoirs of his Life, 1763, 4to. Edited by T. Hollis. 3. The Works of Algernon Sydney; a new ed., with Additions, by T. Hollis, 1772, r. 4to. 4. Joannis Wallisii Grammatica Linguae Anglicanae, &c., 1765, 8vo. Hollis meditated an ed. of Andrew Marvell's Works, but did not carry out his design. He was an earnest promoter of the spirit of freedom in America, and aided in the republication of the political treatises of Mayhew, Otis, and John Adams.

His Memoirs, compiled by the Rev. Francis Blackburn, Archdeacon of Cleveland, were privately printed by his friend and heir, Thomas Brand Hollis, (originally Thomas Brand,) in 1780, 2 vols. 4to; splendidly illustrated by Bartolozzi, Bazire, &c., with portraits of Milton, Locke, Al-gerson Sydney, A. Marvell, Hutcheson, Hubert Languet, (author of the Vindicia contra Tyrannos, &c.;) in all, 13 portraits and plates. The collector should look for a copy with the "starred pages," containing the severe review of Dr. Johnson's Life of Milton, and the portrait of Sir Isaac Newton. These pages (often deficient) occur between 532 and 585,—viz.: 533* to 576,* 579,* 580,* 577* to 584.* Such copies would formerly bring from £6 to £8, but can now (1856) be had for about £2. These vols. contain much curious information respecting Milton, &c. not to be found elsewhere, and correspondence with prominent Americans of the time. But note that these Memoirs are not to be confounded with the Memoirs of Thomas Brand Hollis, by John Disney, D.D., 1808, 4to; privately printed. Respecting the Hollises, see Memoirs as above; *Gent. "Such a library ["a working library," such as we wish ours to be] must be well provided with books of direct, positive utility. These are of two classes—the great standard books which are never antiquated, and the valuable new books which are constantly appearing in every department of science and literature. Our library is amply supplied with many of the books belonging to the first class, thanks to the bounty of the Hollises and other noble benefactors in earlier or later days."—Hox. In addition to the work by which he is best known.—The Annals of America.—Dr. Holmes was author of a Life of President Ezra Styles, (father of his first wife;) pub., in 1798, a Memoir of the French Protestants, and a Hist. of the Town of Cambridge, in Mass. Hist. Collec.; and about thirty sermons and historical treatises. Dr. Holmes was first married in 1790 to Mary, daughter of Dr. Ezra Styles, President of Yale College. She died in 1795, leaving no children. In 1800 he married Sarah, daughter of the Hon. Oliver Wendell, of Boston, and had issue—1. Mary Jackson, married to Usher Parsons, M.D.; 2. Ann Susan, married to the Hon. Charles Wentworth Upham; 3. Sarah Lathrop, who died in childhood; 4. Oliver Wendell Holmes, M.D., one of the most popular of American poets and wits, (vide post); 5. John Holmes, of Cambridge. For further particulars respecting this excellent man and accurate historian, see Dr. Jenks's Funeral Sermon; Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit.; American Almanac, 1838, 316-317; Mass. Hist. Collec., vol. vii. Dr. Holmes's American Annals, or a Chronological History of America from its Discovery in 1492 to 1806, was pub. at Cambridge, Mass., in 1803, 2 vols. 8vo. It was reviewed with considerable severity by Robert Southey, in the London Quarterly for Nov. 1809, iv. 319-337. An ed. was pub. in London by Sherwood in 1813, 2 vols. 8vo. A new ed., with a continuation, under the title of The Annals of America, &c. to the year 1826, was put forth at Cambridge, Mass., in 1829, 2 vols. 8vo, "with such improvements as leave nothing to desire."

"The new edition of the American Annals is one of the best works of the kind ever published. Every thing of importance relating to the history of America is related in the order in which it happened, in a clear and concise manner, with copious and interesting notes, in which references are made to the most important authorities, by which the reader who wishes for more extensive information on the subject may gratify his curiosity without the trouble of turning over a great number of volumes."—Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, ii. 66, 217.

"Dr. Holmes's American Annals is a work of great industry and research, and is an invaluable treasure to the future writers of American history, but claims no merit but that of faithful compilation."—Sketches of the Lit. of the U. States, by Rev. Timothy Flint; Lon. Athenaeum, 1825, p. 803.

"This new edition of the American Annals, with such improvements as the author has introduced into it, we consider among the most valuable productions of the American press. . . . In the American Annals it is the author's exclusive object to embody facts, drawn from what he deems the best authorities, and selected according to the mature light of his judgment. In this aim he seems to us eminently successful, especially when it is considered through what a vast field he has ranged, and what difficulties he must have encountered in collecting his materials and fixing his choice. . . . It is the best repository of historical, chronological, and biographical knowledge respecting America that can be found embodied in one work."—JARED SPARKS: N. Amer. Rev., xxix. 428-441; Oct. 1829.

"A valuable work, displaying great industry and research."—Lowndes's Bibl. Man.

"The name of Holmes ought not to be mentioned without a tribute to his memory. No student of our history but owes him gratitude. The accomplished annalist feared no labour; he was indefatigable in his love of truth. He had seen much of the country; his correspondence was wide, his zeal untiring. . . . Take it all in all, the Annals of Holmes constitute a work which in its kind has never been equalled among us, and has few parallels anywhere."—N. Amer. Rev. xlv. 481; April, 1838.

Holmes's Annals has now (1856) become a liber rarissimus, and can rarely be purchased. Our copy was a present from our enterprising publisher and valued friend, Mr. George W. Childs, of Philadelphia, whose excellent collection of works on American History is well calculated to excite the cupidity of the ravished spectator.

Holmes, Oliver Wendell, M.D., a son of Abiel Holmes, D.D., b. at Cambridge, Massachusetts, Aug. 29, 1809, graduated at Harvard University in 1829, and subsequently devoted about a year to the study of law. In 1833 he visited Europe, and—having resolved to exchange Coke and Blackstone for Galen and Æsculapius—employed between two and three years in attendance on the hospitals of Paris, and other laborious researches connected with the duties of his new profession. In 1835 he returned to Boston, took his medical degree at Cambridge in 1836, was elected Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in Dartmouth College in 1838, and succeeded Dr. Warren as Professor of Anatomy in the Medical Department of Harvard University in 1847. In 1849 Dr. Holmes relinquished general practice. He resides during the winter principally in Boston, and spends the remainder of the year on an estate which once belonged to his great-grandfather, the Hon. Jacob Wendell, situated on the banks of the Housatonic, in Pittsfield, Berkshire county, Massachusetts.

Some of the earlier poetical productions of this popular poet originally appeared in The Collegian, a periodical pub. in 1830 by a number of the students of Harvard University; in Illustrations of the Athenæum Gallery of Paintings, 1831; and in The Harbinger, a May Gift, 1833. In 1836 Dr. Holmes delivered, before the Harvard Phi Beta Kappa Society, Poetry, a Metrical Essay,—which established his reputation as a poet.

"It is in the heroic measure, and in its versification is not surpassed by any poem written in this country. It relates to the nature and offices of poetry, and is itself a series of brilliant illustrations of the ideas of which it is an expression."—Criswold's Bets and Poetry of America.

This Metrical Essay—a very successful essay it proved —was pub. in the first collective ed. of his Poems issued at Boston, in 1836, 12mo, pp. 163. In 1843 he gave to the world Terpsichore, a poem, read at the annual dinner of the Phi Beta Kappa Society in that year; and in 1846 he pub. Urania, a Rhymed Lesson, pronounced before the Mercantile Library Association. A review of Urania, by Francis Bowen, will be found in the N. Amer. Rev. for January, 1847, liv. 208-216.

"His fancy teems with bright and appropriate images, and these are woven into his plan usually with exquisite finish and grace. His artistic merits are very great; his versification is never slovenly, nor his diction meagre or coarse; and many of his shorter pieces are inwrought with so much fire and imagination as to rank among our best lyrics."—Ubi supra.

In 1838 Dr. Holmes pub. Boylston Prize Dissertations for 1836-37: On Indigenous Intermittent Fever in New England: Nature and Treatment of Neuralgia; and Utility and Importance of Direct Exploration in Medical Practice, Bost., 8vo. A review of these Essays, by E. Hale, will be found in the N. Amer. Rev. for July, 1838, xlvi. 161-177.

"It affords a proof of his [Dr. Holmes's] industry, as well as of his talents, that the author should be successful in obtaining three prizes in two successive years, gaining in the latter year both that were offered."—Ubi supra.

His Lectures on Homœopathy and its Kindred Delusions appeared in 1842, and a Report of his on Medical Literature to the National Medical Association was pub. in the Trans. of Nat. Med. Society for 1848. To these professional labours are to be added a pamphlet entitled Puerperal Fever as a Private Pestilence, (noticed in Boston Living Age, xlv. 18); a number of papers in the New England Quarterly Journal of Medicine and Surgery, and in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal; and (in conjunction with Jacob Bigelow, M.D.) an ed. of Dr. Marshall Hall's Principles of the Theory and Practice of Medicine, 1839, 8vo. He has also been a contributor of miscellaneous articles to the N. Amer. Rev., the New England Mag., the Knickerbocker, &c. We have already stated that the first collective ed. of Holmes's poems was pub. at Boston, (by Otis, Broaders & Co.) 1836, 12mo, pp. 163. A second Amer. ed. was pub. by Ticknor & Fields (so the firm now runs) in 1848; and this enterprising house has pub. one or more edits. every year since. Three times in the present year (1856) has the press been put in motion to supply the public demand. The first English ed. was pub. in 1845; a new ed. by Routledge in 1852, 32mo; and a third by the same publisher in 1853, 18mo. Astræa, the Balance of Illusions, a Poem delivered before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Yale College, August, 1850, was pub. in the same year, 16mo, and again in 1855, 16mo. A notice of this production, with copious extracts, will be found in the thirty-first chapter of Miss Mitford's Literary Recollections; and see also the Knickerbocker Mag., xxxvii. 112. Miss Mitford seems to have been indebted for her copy of Astræa (and also for a copy of the author's collected poems) to her friend,—Holmes's friend, our friend, everybody's friend,—James T. Fields, Esq., the poet-publisher of Boston. (See page 595 of this Dictionary.) For other notices of Holmes's poems, see N. Amer. Rev., notice of collective edit. of 1836, by J. G. Palfrey, xlv. 275-277; ibid., notice of collective ed. of 1849, by Francis Bowen, lxviii. 201-203; articles by J. G. Whittier, in Knickerbocker, xxvi. 570; Bost. Liv. Age, (from the National Era), xx. 516; notices of the second English ed., in Lon. Athenæum, 1852, 815; and in the Irish Quar. Rev. for June, 1855. See also E. P. Whipple's Essays and Reviews, 1851, i. 66-67, and in N. Amer. Rev., January, 1844: Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America; Duyekineks' Cyc. of Amer. Lit.; (in the two last-named works will be found specimens of our author's peculiar powers;) Hillard's First Class Reader; Chambers's Hand-Book of American Literature; Tuckerman's Sketch of American Literature.

We quote a few lines from the many pages of enthusiastic laudation now before us:

"The most concise, apt, and effective poet of the school of Pope this country has produced is Oliver Wendell Holmes. . . . His best lines are a series of rhymed pictures, witticisms, or sentiments, let off with the precision and brilliancy of the scintillations that sometimes illuminate the northern horizon. The significant terms, the perfect construction, and acute choice of syllables and emphasis, render some passages of Holmes absolute models of versification, especially in the heroic measure. Besides these artistic merits, his poetry abounds with fine satire, beautiful delineations of nature, and amusing caricatures of manners. The long poems are metrical essays more pointed, musical, and judicious, as well as witty, than any that have appeared, of the same species, since the Essay on Man and the Dunciad."—HENRY T. TUCKERMAN: ubi supra.

"Dr. Holmes is a poet of wit and humour and genial sentiment, with a style remarkable for its purity, terseness, and point, and for an exquisite finish and grace. His lyrics ring and sparkle like cataracts of silver; and his serious pieces—as successful in their way as those mirthful frolics of his muse for which he is best known—arrest the attention by touches of the most genuine pathos and tenderness. All his poems illustrate a manly feeling; and have in some of them a current of good sense, the more charming because somewhat out of fashion now in works of imagination and fancy."—R. W. GUSWOLD: ubi supra.

"To write good comic verse is a different thing from writing good comic poetry. A just or a sharp saying may be easily made to rhyme; but to blend ludicrous ideas with fancy and imagination, and display in their conception and expression the same poetic qualities usually exercised in serious composition, is a rare distinction. Among American poets, we know of no one who excels Holmes in this difficult branch of the art. Many of his pleasant lyrics seem not so much the offspring of wit, as of fancy and sentiment turned in a humorous direction. His manner of satirizing the follies, follies, vanities, and affectations of conventional life is altogether peculiar and original. . . . Holmes is also a poet of sentiment and passion. . . . Those who know him only as a comic lyricist, as the libellous laureate of chirping folly and presumptuous ecstasies, would be surprised at the clear sweetness and skylark thrill of his serious and sentimental compositions."—EDWIN P. WHIPPLE: ubi supra.

"His longest productions are occasional poems which have been recited before literary societies and received with very great favour. His style is brilliant, sparkling, and terse; and many of his heroic stanzas remind us of the point and condensation of Pope. In his shorter poems, he is sometimes grave and sometimes gay. When in the former mood, he charms us by his truth and manliness of feeling, and his sweetness of sentiment; when in the latter, he delights us with the glance and play of the wildest wit and the richest humour. Every thing that he writes is carefully finished, and rests on a basis of sound sense and shrewd observation."—GEORGE S. HILLARD: ubi supra.

"If any of your readers (and at times we fear it is the case with all) need amusement, and the wholesome alternative of a hearty laugh, we commend them not to Dr. Holmes the physician, but to Dr. Holmes the scholar, the wit, and the humourist; not to his scientific medical professor's barbarous Latin, but to his practical prescriptions given in choice old Saxon. We have tried them, and are ready to give the doctor certificates of their efficacy. . . . Long may he live, to make broader the face of our care-ridden generation, and to realize for himself the truth of the wise man's declaration, that a merry heart is 'a continual feast!'"—JOHN G. WHITTIER: National Era.

"You went crazy last year over Bulwer's New Timon: Why, if I, to the day of his dying, should rhyme on, Heaping verses on verses, and tomes upon tomes, He could never reach the best point and vigour of Holmes His are just the fine hands, too, to weave you a lyric Full of fancy, fun, feeling, or spiced with satire, In so kindly a measure, that nobody knows What to do but e'en join in the laugh, friends and foes!"

J. RUSSELL LOWELL: A Feast for Critics.

"As he is everybody's favourite, there is no occasion for critics to meddle with him, either to censure or to praise. He can afford to laugh at the whole reviewing fraternity. His wit is all his own, so sly and tingling, but without a drop of ill-nature in it, and never leaving a sting behind. His humour is so grotesque and queer, that it reminds one of the frolics of Puck; and deep pathos mingles with it so naturally, that when the reader's eyes are brimming with tears, he knows not whether they have their source in sorrow or in laughter. The great merits of his English style we noticed on a former occasion. [N. Amer. Rev., liv. 208-216.] for point, idiomatic propriety, and terseness, it is absolutely without a rival."—FRANCIS BOWEN: N. Amer. Rev., lxviii. 201-203.

It is now time to inquire into the character of the reception which our author's poetry has encountered on the other side of the Atlantic, where critics may be supposed to scan with a less indulgent eye the pretensions of American authorship. Miss Mitford, in her chapter on AMERICAN POETS, already referred to, remarks,

"Of all this flight of genuine poets, I hardly know any one so original as Dr. Holmes. For him we can find no living prototype; to track his footsteps, we must travel back as far as Pope or Dryden; and to my mind it would be well if some of our lands would take the same journey,—provided always it produced the same result. Lofly, poignant, graceful, grand, high of thought and clear of word, we could fancy ourselves reading some pungent page of Alsalam and Achitophel, or of the Moral Epistles, if it were not for the pervading nationality, which, excepting Whittier, American poets have generally wanted, and for that true reflection of the manners and follies of the age, without which satire would fail alike of its purpose and its name. . . . He excels in singing his own charming songs, and speaks as well as he writes."

"In the lighter poems of Holmes, humour is generally blended with good taste. His versification is easy and fluent, and rises to dignity and chastened elegance in his serious and didactic poems; which suggest that the writer, devoting his life to literature, might have achieved greater works."—Chambers's Hand-Book of American Literature, London and Edinburgh, 1856.

"There are many things in Holmes's humorous pieces which bear strong resemblance to the similar productions of our English satirists, Swift, Pope, and Thomas Hood. He possesses Swift's quaintness and motley merriment, Pope's polished and graceful point, and the solemn pathos and allied excruciating mirth of Hood. In addition to these, he has a certain originality of his own, which would be difficult to define, but which would seem to consist in freedom and facility ingrafted on the broad, hearty nature of Brother Jonathan."—Irish Quarterly Review, v. 215-220: Review of the second English ed. (1852) of Holmes's Poems.

We find the same vol. thus noticed by a famous London periodical, the severity of whose critical judgments has long made its name a terror to authorship on both sides of the Atlantic:

"There are strains of didactic thought, humorous fancy, pathetic feeling,—there is an Augustan sonority and neatness of versification,—in the poems of Dr. Holmes, which by turns remind us of the Prize-Poets of our Colleges;—of Crabbe, who minutely wrought out the homeliest themes in heroic metre,—of William Spencer's drawing-room lyrics, light as gossamer, sentimental as music on a lake,—and of Whistlercraft. Yet there is nothing like gross or direct imitation in this worthy little volume."—Lon. Athenæum, 1852, p. 815.

Dr. Holmes was one of the principal parties in organizing the Atlantic Monthly, and contributed to its first twelve numbers a series of papers entitled the "Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table," which were exceedingly popular, and were pub. in a vol. illustrated by Hoppin, Boston, 1858, 12mo.

"The 'Autocrat' is as genial and gentle, and, withal, as philosophical, an essayist as any of modern times. Hazlitt, satiric and cynical, would yet have loved this writer. Charles Lamb would have opened his heart to one who resembles him so much in many excellent points. Leigh Hunt, we dare say, has been much delighted with him. Thomas Hood, the great humanitarian, would have relished his fine catholic spirit. Dickens, no doubt, has read him more than once, admiring his command of our common language,—the 'well of English undefiled.'—and, above all, the pervading tone of practical philosophy. The 'Autocrat,' however, is somewhat more than an essayist: he is contemplative, discursive, poetical, thoughtful, philosophical, amusing, imaginative, tender,—never didactic. This is the secret of his marked success; he interests variously-constituted minds and various moods of mind. It needed not the introduction of lyrical pieces (which we are glad to have) to show that the 'Autocrat' is essentially a poet. Of all who would have most enjoyed him we may foremost name Professor Wilson, who would have welcomed him to a seat 'above the salt' at the far-famed 'Noctes Ambrosianæ,' placing him next to William Maginn, the wayward 'O'Doherty' of Blackwood's Magazine."—DR. R. SHELTON MACKENZIE.

Holmes, Robert, D.D., 1749–1805, a native of Hamp-hire, educated at New College, Oxford, became Rector of Staunton, Canon of Salisbury, and, in 1804, Dean of Winchester. See Dr. Holmes's Annual Accounts of the Collection of the MSS. of the Septuagint Version, from 1789 to 1803, 8vo. The titles of this great work run as follows:—Vetus Testamentum Græcum, cum variis Lectionibus; edidit Robertus Holmes, D.D., Decanus Wintoniensis; tom. i., Oxonii, e Typographeo Clarendoniano, 1798, fol. Vetus Testamentum Græcum, cum variis Lectionibus. Editionem a Roberto Holmes, S.T.P., inchoatam continuavit Jacobus Parsons, S.T.B.; tom. ii.–v., Oxonii, e Typographeo Clarendoniano, 1818–27, fol. The five vols. were pub. at £16 16s. in sheets. The date of tom. i. would more properly have been 1798–1804. In the next year—1805—Dr. Holmes pub. the Book of Daniel. Holt, John. See HOLTE.

Holt, Sir John, 1642–1710, Lord Chief-Justice of the King's Bench, 1689–1710, was a native of Thane, Yorkshire, educated at Oriel Coll., Oxford, and entered at Gray's Inn, 1658. 1. Reports of Cases determined by Sir John Holt, 1681–1710, from a MS. of Thos. Farresley, &c., Lon., 1738, fol.

"Farresley was the author of 7th Modern, a book of but indifferent authority. The merits of the present work, I believe, are in a concatenation accordingly."—Wallace's Reporters, 247, ed. 1855.

6th and 7th Modern both contain Reports of Holt's Judgments:

"He complained bitterly of his reporters, saying that the skimblescamble stuff which they published would 'make posterity think ill of his understanding and that of his brethren on the bench.' He chiefly referred to a collection of Reports called Modern, embracing nearly the whole of the time when he sat on the bench,—which are composed in a very loose and perfunctory manner. More justice is done to him by Salkeld, Carthew, Levinz, Shower, and Skinner; but these do little more than state dryly the points which he decided, and we should have been left without any adequate memorial of his judicial powers, had it not been for admirable Reports of his decisions published after his death. These, beginning with Easter Term, 6 W. & M., were compiled by Lord Raymond, who was his pupil, and who became his successor. Many of them are distinguished by animation as well as precision, and they form a delightful treat to the happy few who have a genuine taste for judicial science."—LORD CAMPBELL: Lives of the Chief-Justices.

It is known to the profession that Lord Mansfield and several other judges doubt the accuracy of the beginning of Raymond's first vol.; but this is a rexata questio, which we shall let the lawyers decide, or, rather, discuss. The dictum of a layman would have but little weight in the controversy. The vol. entitled Cases and Resolutions of Cases, &c., 1742, 8vo, is sometimes cited as Cases Tempore Holt; though that title is generally used to distinguish Farresley's folio, 1738. We must not forget to mention that in 1837, 8vo, there was pub. from the original MSS., with an Introduc., Lord Holt's Judgments in the Case of Ashby v. White and others, and J. Paly and others. In 1708, Lord Holt edited a collection of Crown Cases, from the MS. of Chief-Justice Kelynge, adding three judgments of his own, all of which are upon the law of murder and manslaughter:

"His notice of them in his preface rather shows that he was an instance of a great English lawyer being utterly unacquainted with English composition."—LORD CAMPBELL: ubi supra.

A new ed. of the above folio, or rather a new title-page, was pub. in 1739. Respecting this great judge, in addition to authorities above cited, consult his Life, 1764, 8vo; Biog. Brit., vol. vii., Supp.; Burnet's Own Times; Athen. Oxon.; Nichols's Atterbury; Marvin's Leg. Bibl.; Tatler, No. 14; art. on Law-School at Cambridge, by Dr. Charles Follen, in N. Amer. Rev., xxxvi. 395–418. One of Holt's most celebrated judgments is that of Coggs v. Barnard,

"In which the law of bailments is expounded with philosophic precision and fulness. . . . And, if he had left no other judgment on record, this alone would justify the eulogy of an eminent modern judge, that 'he was as great a lawyer as ever sat in Westminster Hall.'"—JUDGE STORY: Progress of Jurisprudence: Miscell. Writings, 1852, 204.

Holt deserves great credit for his courageous guardianship of the legal rights of the people in opposition to the tyrannical measures of King James II. This was not forgotten by the succeeding government. An eminent authority of the times of Holt, referring to the manner in which the Revolution judgments were selected, remarks:

"The first of these was Sir John Holt, made Lord Chief-Justice of England, then a young man for so high a post, who maintained it all his time with a great reputation for capacity, integrity, courage, and dispatch."—BISHOP BURNET: Own Times.

"He was a man of profound knowledge of the laws of his country, and as just an observer of them in his own person."—Tuller, No. 14.

"A man of unsullied honour, of profound learning, and of the most enlightened understanding."—LORD CAMPBELL: ubi supra.

"On the intimate connection of those two codes, [those of Rome and England,] let us hear the words of Lord Holt, whose name never can be pronounced without veneration, as long as wisdom and integrity are revered among men."—*SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: On the Study of the Law of Nature and Nations; Miscell. "Its object principally is to impress accurately and distinctly upon the mind the meaning of the technical terms of the law; and as such it can hardly fail to be generally useful. There is much curious information to be found in it in regard to the peculiarities of the ancient Saxon law. Home, Sir Everard, Bart., President Royal Coll. of Surgeons, 1756–1832, a native of Greenlaw Castle, county of Berwick, Scotland, studied medicine with his brother-in-law, the celebrated John Hunter, and practised in London with great success for more than five years. Among his contributions to medical literature are Observations on the Treatment of Ulcers on the Legs, 1797; On Cancer, 1805; On Strictures of the Urethra, &c., 3 vols. 8vo; on the Prostate Gland, 2 vols. 8vo; many papers in *Phil. "The six volumes taken together are filled with researches that were begun at seventeen, and have been uninterruptedly continued to seventy,—a period of fifty-five years. It is to the late John Hunter I owe the love of the pursuit; and his example, both of application and the mode of investigation. I have never lost sight of. To him I am indebted for the rich stores which he placed before me, which it has been the height of my ambition to increase.”—Author's Preface.

Official investigations have left no doubt remaining that Sir Everard did, indeed, “owe to the late John Hunter” more than was generally supposed.

Home, Henry, Lord Kames, 1696–1782, a native of the county of Berwick, Scotland, was for some time a writer to the Signet, was called to the Bar in 1724, made a Judge of the Court of Session in 1752, when, according to custom, he took the title of Lord Kames; appointed one of the Lords of Justiciary in 1763. He cultivated the large estate of Blair-Drummond, in Perthshire, of which he became possessed in right of his wife. Lord Kames was noted for great public spirit; and his cheerfulness of temper, combined with a vast amount of information on literary, political, and agricultural topics, made him a general favourite in society. The reader will be greatly interested in A. F. Tytler's (Lord Woodhouselee) Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Hon. Henry Home, of Kames; with a Supp., Edin., 1807–10, 2 vols. 4to; Lon., 1814, 3 vols. Svo. His life was also pub. by Wm. Smellie; (see GREGORY, JOHN, p. 737.) 1. “The Historical Law Tracts of Lord Kames are conducted upon a very judicious system of investigating the natural principles of some of the most important objects of judicial science, and tracing the application of them in the Laws of Rome, of Scotland, and of England; but a comparison between the Laws of Scotland and England, conducted, I think, with great fairness, is apparently the leading object of the undertaking.”—*1 Evans's Polth. “The Elements of Criticism, considered as the first systematic attempt to investigate the metaphysical principles of the fine arts, possesses, in spite of its numerous defects both in point of taste and of philosophy, infinite merits, and will ever be regarded as a literary wonder by those who know how small a portion of his time it was possible for the author to allot to the composition of it, amidst the imperious and multifarious duties of a most active and useful life.”—DUGALD STEWART: 1st. Prelim. Dissert. Encyc. Brit.

“His great work, The Elements of Criticism, is truly an original performance, and which, discarding all arbitrary rules of literary composition derived from authority, establishes a new theory upon the principles of human nature.”—DR. REES.

Home, James, Advocate. The Scripture Hist. of the Jews and their Republic, Lon., 1737, 2 vols. Svo. An excellent work. Recommended by Bishop Tomline, in his Elements of Christian Theology.

Home, John, 1724–1808, the author of Douglas, was a native of Ancrum, Roxburghshire, Scotland, educated at the University of Edinburgh, and licensed to preach in the Church of Scotland in 1747. In December, 1756, his (1.) Tragedy of Douglas was presented at the theatre in the Canongate, Edinburgh.

“It was received with enthusiastic applause, and, in the conclusion, drew forth many tears, which were perhaps a more unequivocal testimony to its merits. The town was in an uproar of exultation that a Scotsman should write a tragedy of the first rate, and that its merits were first submitted to them.”

But the successful author was soon reminded that he was exercising his genius in a forbidden field; and he found it expedient to anticipate his expected degradation from the ministerial office by abdicating his pulpit, which he did in June, 1757. It is perhaps worthy of notice that the representation of Douglas elicited Dr. Witherspoon's Serious Inquiry into the Nature and Effects of the Stage. Mr. Home now found a powerful patron in Lord Bute, who procured him a pension of £300, and the sinecure office of Conservator of the Scotch Privileges at Campvere, in Zealand, which doubled this income. Home had some early military experience as a volunteer against the Pretender in 1745, and in 1788 he received a captain's commission, which he held until the peace, in the Duke of Buccleugh's regiment of militia,—the Fencibles. In March, 1757, against the judgment of Garrick, Douglas was produced at Covent-Garden, and soon attained that popularity which it has since enjoyed. The latter part of the author's life was passed at East Lothian and in the city of Edinburgh, where he played the hospitable landlord until his death in 1808, at the advanced age of 84. He was the author of five Tragedies, in addition to Douglas, (pub., Lon., 1757, Svo;) viz.: 2. Agis, 1758, Svo; 3. The Siege of Aquileia, 1760, Svo; 4. The Fatal Discovery, 1769, Svo; 5. Alonzo, 1773, Svo; 6. Alfred, 1778, Svo. Home's Dramatic Works were pub. in 1760, 12mo, and at Edin., 1798, 2 vols. 12mo. These plays cannot compare with Douglas.

“Home's other tragedies are all very indifferent,—most of them quite bad. Mr. Mackenzie should not have disturbed their slumbers.”—JOHN WILSON: Noctes Ambrosianæ, April, 1822.

"It may, perhaps, seem strange that the author, in his preceding tragedy of Agis and in his subsequent dramatic efforts, so far from attaining similar excellence, never even approached to the success of Douglas; yet good reasons can be assigned for his failure, with out imputing it, during his best years at least, to a decay of genius."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Life and Works of John Home, Lon. Quar. Rev., June, 1827; and in Scott's Prose Works, q. v.

This article is a review of the Works of John Home, Esq., now first collected, to which is prefixed an account of his Life and Writings, by Henry Mackenzie, Edin., 1822, 3 vols. 8vo. To this work we refer the reader for further particulars connected with the biography and literary labours of our author. See also Noctes Ambrosianae, April, 1822.

Home also pub. the History of the Rebellion in 1745, 4to, 1802, which we shall notice hereafter. The merits of Douglas, notwithstanding the assertion of Dr. Johnson "that there were not ten good lines in the whole play," have been repeatedly acknowledged by the most competent critics. That this laudation has been sometimes carried to a ridiculous excess can hardly be questioned; as, for instance, in the eulogy of David Hume, the historian, who, in his Four Dissertations addressed to Home, compliments him as the possessor of "The true tragic genius of Shakspeare and Otway; refined from the unhappy barbarism of the one and licentiousness of the other."

Here doubtless the Scotsman speaks as well as the critic, and patriotic enthusiasm must not surprise us when warmed with a theme so congenial and so flattering:

"The genius of Home was national; and so, too, was the subject of his justly famous Tragedy of Douglas. He had studied the old Ballads; their simplicities were sweet to him as wall-flowers on ruins. On the story of Gill Morice, who was an Earl's son, he founded the Tragedy which surely no Scottish eyes ever witnessed without tears."—JOHN WILSON: Recreations of Christopher North: An Hour's Talk about Poetry.

"I think nobody can bestow too much praise on Douglas. There has been no English tragedy worthy of the name since it appeared."—Ibid.: Noctes Ambrosianae, April, 1822.

Whilst this perhaps appears somewhat extravagant, yet one of the best parts of this play is commended by two eminent modern critics in terms quite as eulogistic:

"We agree with Mr. Mackenzie, that the chief scene between Lady Randolph and Old Norval, in which the preservation and existence of Douglas is discovered, has no equal in modern, and scarcely a superior in the ancient, drama. It is certainly one of the most effective which the English stage has to boast; and we learn with pleasure, but without surprise, that, though many other parts of the play were altered before its representation, we have this master-piece exactly as it was thrown off in the original sketch. 'Thus it is,' says the accomplished editor, 'that the fervid creation of genius and fancy strikes out what is so excellent as well as vivid as not to admit of amendment, and which, indeed, correction would spoil instead of improving.' This is the true inspiration of the poet, which gives to criticism, instead of borrowing from it, its model and rule and which, it is possible, in some different authors, the terrors of critics may have weakened or extinguished.

"The memory of Mr. Home, as an author, depends, in England, almost entirely upon the tragedy of Douglas, which not only retains the most indisputable possession of the stage, but produces a stronger effect on the feelings of the audience, when the parts of Douglas and Lady Randolph are well filled, than almost any tragedy since the days of Otway. . . . The language of the piece is beautiful. 'Mrs. Siddons told me,' says the editor, [Mr. Mackenzie,] 'that she never found any study' (which, in the technical language of the stage, means the getting verses by heart) 'so easy as that of Douglas, which is one of the best criterions of excellence in the dramatic style.'"—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Life and Works of John Home, ubi supra.

Home's History of the Rebellion in 1745—to which we promised to return—gave great dissatisfaction, not only as regarded its literary character, but in its deficiency in historical accuracy:

"Since Mr. Home did assume the pen on the subject of the Forty-five, no consideration whatever ought to have made him depart from the truth, or shrink from exposing the cruelties practised, as Mr. Mackenzie delicately expresses it, by some subordinate officers, or from executing the impolitic and ungenerous use of the victory of Culloden, in which the Duke of Cumberland was somewhat implicated. Mr. Home ought either never to have written his history, or to have written it without clogging himself with the dedication to the sovereign. . . . The disappointed public of Scotland, to which the history should have been most interesting, was clamorous in its disapprobation. They complained of suppressed information and servile corrections. . . . The history is, nevertheless, so far as it goes, a fair and candid one for the writer, though, by the manner in which he had fettered himself, he was deluded from speaking the whole truth, yet was incapable of speaking any thing but the truth."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: ubi supra.

"Any account of that brilliant episode in our history must needs be full of interest, and Home, being concerned so far himself, has preserved a number of picturesque enough anecdotes; but, on the whole, the book wants vigour, and it is full of quizzibles. What can be more absurd than his giving us more pages about the escape of two or three Whig students of Divinity from the Castle of Doune than he spends upon all the wild wanderings of the unfortunate Chevalier?"—JOHN WILSON: Noctes Ambrosianae, April, 1822.

Yet Home's History must by no means be neglected by the historical student:

"The work of Home was not entirely such as we might have expected from one who was not only an actor in the scene, but the author of a tragedy like Douglas, elegant enough to have pleased on the French stage, and yet affecting enough to succeed on ours. The History of the Rebellion was a work which had been meditated so long, that it was delivered to the world too late,—when the writer was no longer what he once was. But I recommend it to your perusal, because it has all the marks of authenticity,—possesses, I think, more merit than is generally supposed,—treats of a very remarkable event in our history,—and is, after all, entertaining, and not long."—Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist.

In 1661, fol., Holmes pub. Ten Exerecitations in Vindication of the Resurrection Revealed. A new ed. of these vols., compressed into one, with the repetitions and extraneous matter omitted, edited by the Rev. J. W. Brooks, was pub. in 1833, 8vo. Thomas Hall pub. a Confutation of the Millenarian Opinion, in reply to Dr. Holmes, in 1657, 12mo. Sixteen of Holmes's theolog. treatises were pub. in a fol. vol. in 1632, and the same, with a new title, in 1669. See Athen. Oxon. for an account of this author and his works. Holmes's work on the Resurrection is by no means to be neglected by the Biblical student. We have seen that he advocates the doctrine of an earthly millennium.

"This is far from being a contemptible book, though the author ranked among the visionaries of his time. . . . The learning of the author was evidently extensive, and his knowledge of the Scriptures, particularly of the prophecies, very considerable. A great deal of discussion respecting the meaning of many difficult passages occurs in the book, which will sometimes, perhaps, amuse, but may very often instruct, the reader. It is far from being so carol in his views as his leading sentiment would prepare us to expect."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

Hone, William, d. 1842, aged 63, a native of Bath, for many years a publisher and bookseller in London, and latterly an Independent minister at Weigh-house Chapel, Eastcheap, pub. some profane parodies, The Apocryphal New Testament, and a number of other works, of which the Every-Day Book, 1826, The Table-Book, 1827-28, and The Year-Book, 1829, are the best known. His Apocryphal New Testament (for an account of which, see Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures, and the Lon. Quar. Rev., vols. xxv. and xxx.) was pub. in 1820, 8vo; 2d ed., 1821, 8vo; his Ancient Mysteries, in 1823, 8vo; and his own account of his Early Life and Conversion, in 1841, 8vo. Of his political pieces, which were numerous, the satire entitled The Political House that Jack Built was the most popular, and went through no less than fifty editions. He also edited an edit. of Strutt's Sports and Pastimes. See an account of his life and literary labours in Lon. Gent. Mag., January, 1843. The Every-Day Book, The Table-Book, and The Year-Book, of which there have been several editions,—the last in 1857, 4 vols. 8vo, 730 wood-cuts,—cannot be too highly commended. Sir Walter Scott, Lamb,—who contributed some of the contents,—Southey, and John Wilson, Horace Smith and others, all unite in their praise:

"Reader, did you ever see Hone's Every-Day Book? You cannot do better than buy it directly. . . . You will meet with . . . spirit-stirring descriptions of old customs, delightful wood-cuts of old buildings, as well as many a fine secret learned among the woods and fields, and whispered by the 'seasons' difference.' . . . He has deserved well of the naturalist, the antiquarian, and the poet, by his Every-Day and also by his Table-Book."—CHRISTOPHER NORTH: Blackwood's Mag., xxvii. 259.

"By-the-by, I have bought Hone's Every-Day Book and his Table-Book, and am sorry I had not seen them before my colloquies were printed, that I might have given him a good word there. I have not seen any miscellaneous books that are so well worth having; brimful of curious matter, and with an abundance of the very best wood-cuts."—ROBERT SOUTHY: Letter to Henry Taylor: Southey's Life and Corresp.

Mr. Southey remarks, on another occasion:

"I may take the opportunity of recommending the Every-Day Book and Table-Book to those who are interested in the preservation of our national and local customs: by these very curious publications their compiler has rendered good service in an important department of literature."

"These Every-Day and Table-Books will be a treasure a hundred years hence; but they have failed to make Hone's fortune. . . ."

"I like you and your book, ingenious Hone,
In whose capacious, all-embracing leaves
The very marrow of tradition's shown,
And all that History—much that Fiction—weaves.

"By every sort of taste your work is graced;
Vast stores of modern anecdote we find,
With good old story quaintly interlaced:—
The theme as various as the reader's mind.

"Dan Phebus loves your book: trust me, friend Hone;
The title only errs, he bids me say;
For, while such art, wit, reading, there are shown,
He swears, 'tis not a work of every day."

Hood, Thomas, 1798-1845, the famous humourist, has given so graphic a portrait of himself in his Literary Reminiscences, pub. in Hood's Own, that it would be a dangerous attempt to take the pencil out of his hands. Suffice it to say that he was born in London, and a son of the well-known publisher of the firm of Vernor & Hood, was early placed "upon lofty stool at lofty desk" in a merchant's counting-house, subsequently became an apprentice at the engraving business, and finally adopted the anxious life and depended upon the uncertain gains of a London man-of-letters at large. In 1821 he became sub-editor of the London Magazine, was subsequently a contributor to Punch, editor of the New Monthly Magazine, and for one year editor of The Gem.

This graphic poem—perhaps, next to the Song of the Shirt, the most popular of Hood's productions—originally appeared in the Gen for 1829. 12. Poems; 2d ed., 1846, fp. 8vo; 1851, 12mo; 5th ed., 1852, 12mo; 1854, 12mo. 13. Poems of Wit and Humour, 1847, 12mo; 3d ed., 1851, 12mo; 1854, 12mo. The Song of the Shirt, which has elicited countless imitations, and has, we trust, somewhat ameliorated the condition of a most deserving class of operatives, was the author's latest production of any importance, and originally appeared in Punch in 1844. In addition to the many literary labours just recorded, we must not forget to notice the monthly magazine established by our author, bearing his own name,—Hood's Comic Miscellany. About a year before his death, a pension of £100 per annum was granted by Government to his wife, and a subscription was raised shortly after his demise for the benefit of his widow and his two children. A collective ed. of Hood's Choice Works,—1. Prose and Verse; 2. Up the Rhine; 3. Whims and Oddities; 4. Poems; 5. Hood's Own; 6. Whimsicalities,—in 4 vols. 12mo, (also in 6 vols. 12mo.) was pub. in 1852, in New York, by Messrs. George P. Putnam & Co. In 1855, Messrs. Phillips, Sampson & Co., of Boston, published a volume of more than 500 pages, containing "all of Hood's poems contained in Moxon's collections of the author's sentimental and humorous verses, with several additions from other sources. It was the most complete collection that had been made at the time of its appearance."

This collection was edited by Epes Sargent; and in 1856 the same gentleman edited, for the same house, the Humorous Poems of Thomas Hood; including Love and Lunacy, Ballads, Tales and Legends, Odes and Addresses to Great People, and Miscellaneous Poems, now first collected. This vol., of about the same size as the first, contains, besides other matter, many of Hood's contributions to the London Magazine and the New Monthly Magazine during his editorial connexion with these periodicals. An edit. of Hood's Poetical Works has also been pub. by Messrs. Little, Brown, and Co., of Boston, in 2 vols. 18mo, and several of his separate publications have been reprinted in America. On the same day that this article was prepared for the printer, (in Oct. 1856,) Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. pub. two more vols. of The Poetical Works of Thomas Hood, making in all 4 vols. of their edit. We append their advertisement:

"This is the largest collection of Hood's Poems yet offered to the public, either in England or America."

We have but small space for quotations of opinions in addition to those already cited respecting the merits of this popular author; but those who desire to read more about the serio-comic Hood shall not be disappointed. "His Dream of Eugene Aram places him high among the bards who deal in dark and fearful things and intimate rather than express deeds which men shudder to hear named. Some other of his poems have much tenderness, and a sense of nature, animate and inanimate."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: ubi supra.

"Hood's verse, whether serious or comic,—whether serene like a cloudless autumn evening, or sparkling with puns like a frosty January midnight with stars,—was ever pregnant with materials for thought. . . . Like every author distinguished for true comic humour, there was a deep vein of melancholy pathos running through his wirth; and even when his sun shone brightly, its light seemed often reflected as if only over the rim of a cloud. Well may we say, in the words of Tenyson, 'Would he could have stayed with us!' for never could it be more truly recorded of any one—in the words of Hamlet characterizing Yorick—that 'he was a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy.'"—D. M. MOIR: ubi supra.

Hook, Theodore Edward, 1788–1844, a native of London, was the son of James Hook, the musical composer, and a brother of Dr. James Hook, Dean of Worcester, both of whom have already come under our notice. Theodore was sent to Harrow to be educated, and had there for his school-fellows Sir Robert Peel and Lord Byron, with whom, however, he does not seem at that time to have formed any acquaintance. He had already commenced authorship; for before his admission to Harrow, and whilst at school in Cambridgeshire, (being then thirteen years of age,) he wrote a piece for the stage. The early evidence of talent was accompanied by indications of an extraordinary genius for music and great facility in the composition of ballads; and his father, whose profession enabled him to make a profitable use of his son's varied accomplishments, was early persuaded to let him remain at home as a junior partner in his business. In 1805, Theodore made his début as a dramatic author in the Comic Opera of The Soldier's Return, and his success was complete. This triumph was succeeded by one still more decided, if possible, in the next year, when Liston and Mathews both figured, to the unbounded delight of the public, in the boy-author's musical farce of Catch Him who Can. Young Theodore, now the favourite of the town and the darling of the Green Room, was in that dangerous position which had been foreseen by his brother, the worthy clergyman, who a short time previously had almost by force carried him to Oxford, had him entered as a student, and in vain looked for his arrival when the period had arrived for the commencement of his collegiate course. For a graphic account of this portion of Hook's life, and his subsequent experiences, we must refer the reader to his autobiographical novel of Gilbert Gurney; the Rev. Mr. Barham's Life and Remains of Theodore Hook, 1849, 2 vols. p. 8vo; 5th ed., 1853, fp. 8vo; to J. G. Lockhart's article—"Theodore Hook"—in Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxii. 58–108, reprinted separately in Murray's Reading for the Rail, 3d ed., 1852, fp. 8vo; and to the authorities cited below. And now we behold Theodore fairly launched upon the great sea of London life in the various capacities of author, musician, singer, man of fashion, and inexhaustible inventor of practical jokes. Of the last, it may be sufficient to glance at that of the extempore surveyors, and the famous Berners-Street Hoax in 1809. But it was as an improvisatore that Hook shone in all his glory, and without fear of a rival. Mrs. Mathews has so graphically described his marvellous powers in this line, that we cannot do better than transcribe her account of a remarkable scene which took place on the occasion of a dinner given by the Drury Lane Company to their proprietor, the brilliant but improvident Sheridan :

"In the course of it many persons sang, and Mr. Hook, being in turn solicited, displayed to the delight and surprise of all present, his wondrous talent in extemporaneous singing. The company was numerous, and generally strangers to Mr. Hook; but, without a moment's premeditation, he composed a verse upon every person in the room, full of the most pointed wit, and with the truest rhymes unhesitatingly gathering into his subject, as he rapidly proceeded, in addition to what had passed during the dinner, every trivial incident of the moment. Every action was turned to account; every circumstance—the look, the gesture, or any other incidental effects—served as occasion for more wit; and even the singer's ignorance of the names and condition of many of the party seemed to give greater facility to his brilliant hits than even acquaintance with them might have furnished. Mr. Sheridan was astonished at his extraordinary faculty, and declared that he could not have imagined such power possible, had he not witnessed it. No description, he said, could have convinced him of so peculiar an instance of genius; and he protested he should not have believed it to be an unstudied effort, had he not seen proof that no anticipation could have been formed of what might arise to furnish matter and opportunities for the exercise of this rare talent."—Life of Charles Mathews.

It is probable that it is to this occurrence that the author of the biography of Hook, in the Gentleman's Magazine, alludes, when he tells us

"We remember once to have heard Mr. Hook sing a song upon a company of sixty persons, each verse containing an epigram. Sheridan was present, and expressed his opinion that it was one of the most extraordinary exertions of human intellect that he had ever witnessed."

Such brilliant powers of entertainment were quite as well calculated to win the substantial favour of "the first gentleman of his age" as more solid recommendations would have been; and we need not therefore be surprised that, through the patronage of the Regent, the sparkling wit and irresistible punster was in 1812 appointed to the dignified office of Accountant-General and Treasurer to the Colony of the Mauritius, worth some £2000 per annum. Hook seems to have passed his time for five years very pleasantly in his new home, "drinking his wine and munching his fruit" during the day, and passing every evening at the balls, in which the gay society of the place indulged to their hearts' content. But a melancholy page in his history was now close at hand. In 1818 his accounts were examined, and a defalcation discovered of (as was first alleged) about £20,000, but which was subsequently (in 1823) reported by the Audit Board to be £12,000. The unhappy treasurer was suddenly dragged from supper-table to prison, and shortly afterwards sent home—on account of "something wrong in the chest," he told an inquiring friend, ignorant of the true state of affairs—to London, under charge of a military guard. We have no time nor space to linger over the details of this unpleasant episode in Hook's life; but we suppose it to be now generally agreed that his only culpability—a serious one, to-be-sure—in this unfortunate affair was his lack of attention to his official duties. If, as we are assured, "during the five years that he remained on the island, Hook never visited his office, for the purpose of business, five times," we can readily believe that his subordinates paid more regard to the large cash receipts of the office; and the suicide of one of them—who, it is true, had first called attention to the deficiency in the fund—is calculated to relieve the character of the Ex-Treasurer from the serious charge of peculation. Hook reached home, after a tedious and uncomfortable passage of nearly nine months, in January, 1819, and immediately commenced that diligent use of his pen which enabled him to produce more new volumes than there remained years in the balance of his life. Indeed, from 1824 to 1841, the year of his death, a period of about seventeen years,—for about two of which he was imprisoned under Government arrest,—he wrote 38 vols., besides editing the John Bull, a weekly newspaper, and (for part of the time) the New Monthly Magazine. Of the John Bull, commenced Dec. 16, 1820, he was one of the principal founders; and his share in the stock in the palmy days of the paper brought him in no less than £2000 per annum, in addition to a liberal salary. His income for a number of years was probably not less than £3000 per annum. But his improvidence led him into continual embarrassments, which made him the prey of the most harassing anxieties. As the conductor of the John Bull, he distinguished himself by bitter invectives against Queen Caroline and her supporters, and by an enthusiastic advocacy of High-Tory principles. He was also a contributor, in early life, to the Satirist Magazine, and subsequently to Bentley's Miscellany; and, in addition to the many works which he actually produced, promised many more, and prepared materials for A History of the House of Hanover, which was also left unfinished. Shortly after his return from the Mauritius, he attempted to establish a minor magazine, called the Arcadian; but it only survived for a short time. He was the author of one article in the Quarterly Review,—that on Prince Puckler-Muskau's English Tour, in vol. xvi.,—and probably contributed to other journals not here named. Hook was a mere butterfly of fashion, without high moral principle, and apparently without any appreciation of the duty devolving upon all to labour for the welfare and improvement of the race, and to cultivate the mind and discipline the heart for a higher sphere than that to be found in the frivolities of the ball-room or the enchantments of the stage. Hook was never married. He left six children, who, with their mother, were aided by a subscription of £3000 after their father's death. Of his remarkable literary industry for a period of almost forty years, the following list of his works affords the best illustration.

1. The Soldier's Return: a Comic Opera, 1805, 8vo. 2. Catch Him who Can: Musical Farce, 1806. 3. The Invisible Girl; Petite Piece, 1806. 4. Tekeli; Melo-Drama, 1806. 5. The Fortress; Melo-Drama, 1807. 6. Music-Mad; Dram. Sketch. 7. Siege of St. Quintin; Drama, 1807. 8. Killing no Murder; Farce, 1809. 9. Safe and Sound; Opera, 1809. 10. The Man of Sorrow, 1809, 3 vols. This, his first novel, was a failure. See Lon. Month. Rev., lix. 320-321. 11. Ass-assination; Serio-comic Entertainment, 1810. Not printed. 12. The Will, or The Widow; Dram. Trifle, 1810. Not printed. 13. Trial by Jury; Farce, 1811. 14. Darkness Visible; Farce, 1811. 15. Pigeons and Crows; Com., 1819. 16. Exchange no Robbery; Com., 1820. 17. Tentamen; or, an Essay towards the History of Whittington and his Cat, by Dr. Vicesimus Blenkinsop, 1820. This was a satire on Queen Caroline and Alderman Wood. 18. Peter and Paul; Drama, 1821. 19. Sayings and Doings. First Series, 1824, 3 vols. 20. Second Series, 1825, 3 vols. 21. Third Series, 1828, 3 vols. These 9 vols., originally pub. at £4 14s. 6d., have been reprinted in three vols. for 10s. 6d. See Blackw. Mag., xv. 334; xvii. 224. Hook's biographer in the Gent. Mag. says that Colburn agreed to pay £600 for the First Series, and voluntarily added 350 more, making £950 in all. But Mr. Lockhart says (in Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxii. 88) that Hook's diary represents his profits on the First Series at £2000. For the Second Series and Third Series Hook received from Colburn £1000 each. 22. Reminiscences of Michael Kelly, 1826, 2 vols. This was compiled by Hook from Kelly's "rough illiterate materials." It was reviewed by Sir Walter Scott in the Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxiv. 242-248. 23. Maxwell, 1830, 3 vols.; considered the best of Hook's novels. 24. The Life of Sir David Baird, 1832, 2 vols. This biography greatly pleased Lady Baird, who presented the author with a magnificent diamond snuff-box, presented by the Pacha of Egypt to Sir David. 25. The Parson's Daughter, 1833, 3 vols. 26. Jack Brag, 1837, 3 vols. 27. Births, Deaths, and Marriages, 1839, 3 vols. This work paid Hook about £600. 28. Love and Pride, 1833, 3 vols. 29. Gilbert Gurney, 1835. This autobiography—it almost deserves the name—was originally contributed—as was the sequel, which follows—to the New Monthly Magazine. 30. Gurney Married, 1839. This, and the preceding, (q. v.) were collected into 3 vols. 31. Pascal Bruno; a Sicilian Story, 1837, 1 vol. 32. Cousin Geoffrey, the Old Bachelor, 1840, 3 vols. 33. Fathers and Sons, 1841, 3 vols. Originally contributed to the New Monthly Mag. 34. Precept and Practice, 1840, 3 vols. Originally contributed to the New Monthly Mag. 35. Adventures of an Actor; or, The French Stage and French People, from the Journal of M. Fleury; 2d ed., 1842, 2 vols.; Edited by Hook. 36. Peregrine Bunce, 1842, 3 vols. Posthumous, and, as Mr. Lockhart insists, (Quar. Rev., lxxii. 53, 88,) not all written by Hook. Several of his novels have been repub. from time to time, and a new ed. of Maxwell—esteemed the best of all—has been issued within the last two weeks, (September, 1856.) For further information respecting Hook and his writings, we refer the reader, in addition to the authorities cited above, to *Allan Cunningham's Biog. and Crit. "It would not be easy to find another artist with ability equal to Hook's for discussing the good and evil, the passions and affections, the fits of generosity and settled systems of saving, the self-sufficiency and the deplorable weakness, the light and darkness, the virtue and the vice, of this prodigious Babel. The stories which he tells might be invented with little outlay of fancy, for the best of them are far from being consistent; but the characters which live and breathe in them would make the narratives pleasing though they were as crooked as the walls of Troy."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: ubi supra.

"Doubtless, his wit and humour were apt to degenerate into buffoonery, his paths into sentimentality, and his nature into conventionalism; but his knowledge of city life, in its manners, habits, and language, seemed intuitive, and has been surpassed only by Fielding and Dickens. Many and multifarious, however, as are his volumes, he has left behind him no great creation,—nothing that can be pointed to as a triumphant index of the extraordinary powers which he undoubtedly possessed."—D. M. MOIR: ubi supra.

"TICKLER.—Confound haste and hurry! What else can account for Theodore Hook's position? Who that has read his Sayings and Doings, and, above all, his Maxwell, can doubt that, had he given himself time for consideration and correction, we should have been hailing him ere now, nem. com., as another Smollett, if not another Le Sage? . . ."

"NORTH.—I agree with you; and I sincerely hope this novel-improvisator will pause ere it is too late, and attempt something really worthy of his imagination. But, as it is, such is the richness of the vis comica showered over these careless extravaganzas, that, unless he himself throws them into the shade by subsequent performances, I venture to say they have a better chance of being remembered a hundred years hence than any contemporary productions of their class—except only those of the two great lights of Scotland and Ireland—Jan dudum ad scripfa Camænis."—JOHN WILSON: Notæ Ambrosianæ, Sept. 1831.

"His name will be preserved. His political songs and jeux d'esprit, when the hour comes for collecting them, will form a volume of sterling and lasting attraction; and after many clever ronances of this are shall have sufficiently occupied public attention, and sunk, like hundreds of former generations, into utter oblivion, there are tales in his collection which will be read with, we venture to think, even a greater interest than they commanded in their novelty. . . . We have already expressed our opinion, however, that Theodore Hook's ability in conversation was above what he ever exemplified in his writings. We have seen him in company with very many of the most eminent men of his time; and we never, until he was near his end, carried home the impression with us that he had been surpassed."—J. G. LOCKHART: ubi supra.

Hook, Walter Farquhar, D.D., Vicar of Leeds, Preb. of Lincoln, and Chaplain-in-Ordinary to the Queen, is a son of Dr. James Hook, Dean of Worcester, and a nephew of Theodore Edward Hook, both of whom have already come under our notice. Dr. Hook is noted for his untiring energy in the cause of church extension, and is the author of many theological publications, of which the Church Dictionary, (7th ed., 1854, 8vo.) Ecclesiastical Biography, (vols. i.—viii., 1845–52, 12mo.) Hear the Church, (28th ed., 1838, 8vo.) a Call to Union, (4th ed., 1829, 8vo.) and the Serms. on the Miracles, (1847–48, 2 vols. 8vo.) on various subjects, (2d ed., 1844, 8vo.) and those delivered before the Univ. of Oxford, (3d ed., 1847, 12mo.) are among the best-known. Trans. of the Life of Fenelon, 1723, 12mo. 2. Roman Hist., from the Building of Rome to the end of the Commonwealth, 4 vols. 4to: i.

1773; ii. 1745; iii. 1764; iv. 1771. Vols. i., ii., and iii. have been frequently reprinted in 4to; 1766, 9 vols. 8vo; 1806, 11 vols. 8vo; 1818, 11 vols. 8vo; 1830, 6 vols. 8vo. This work should be read as an introduction to Gibbon's History, which carries on the narrative.

"The Roman History of this judicious and masterly writer is a most valuable accession to the stock of historical learning. The execution is equal throughout. Mr. Hooke seems to have possessed in a very eminent degree the rare talent of separating the partisan from the historian, of which few writers are capable, and of comparing contradictory authorities with impartiality and penetration. He does not appear to have been a bigot to any principles or a slave to any authority."—Lon. Month. Rev.

"This occupies the whole ground that Livy had chosen. He was a laborious and faithful compiler. The Jesuits Catron and Rouillé far exceeded him, for they compiled a Roman History in 21 vols. 4to, which is the most extensive Roman History extant."—CHANCELLOR KENT.

"It is more thorough than Ferguon's history, and far more faithful than that of Eichard. Goldsmith's Rome is only a pleasant abridgment of it, while Arnold's learned and valuable work closes with the Punic wars."—Lawrence's Lives of the British Historians, 1856.

3. Trans. of Ramsay's Travels of Cyrus, 1739, 4to. 4. An Account of the Conduct of the Dowager-Dutchess of Marlborough, from her first coming to Court to the year 1710, 1742, 8vo. For this work the duchess rewarded the author with £5000, but soon quarrelled with him, on account, as she alleged, of his efforts to convert her to the Church of Rome. Hooke also pub. some works on the Roman Senate, on which subject he had a controversy with Dr. Conyers Middleton. See Nichols's Lit. Anec.; Ruffhead's Life of Pope; Chesterfield's Memoirs; Boswell's Life of Johnson; Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors.

"Hooke was a virtuous man, as his history shows."—Dr. JOHNSON: ubi supra.

Hooke, Robert, M.D., 1635–1702, an eminent experimental philosopher, a native of Freshwater, in the Isle of Wight, and son of the rector of that place, was educated at Christ Church, Oxford; elected in January, 1665, Curator of Experiments for the Royal Society for life; and in March of the same year succeeded Dr. Daeres as Professor of Geometry in Gresham College. Hooke was unquestionably one of the most ingenious philosophers whom the world has ever seen, and perhaps no one man ever made so many discoveries,—amounting, with the contrivances for illustrating them, to some hundreds. Among those which he claimed—for with respect to some the priority of discovery is a matter of dispute—are: 1656. Barometer or Weather-Glass; 1657. A scapement for maintaining the vibration of a pendulum; and subsequently the regulating or balance-spring for watches; 1658. The Double-barrelled air-pump and the conical pendulum; 1660. The engine for cutting clock and watch-wheels; the chief phenomena of capillary attraction; the freezing of water a fixed temperature; 1663. The method of supplying air to a diving-bell; the number of vibrations made by a musical chord; 1665. In this year his Micrographia was pub., in which will be found notices of many of his discoveries on respiration, the composition of the atmosphere, and the nature of light; 1666. A quadrant by reflection; 1667. The marine barometer, and the gauge for sounding unfathomable depths; 1674. Steam-engine on Newcomen's principle; 1679. That the air was the sole source of heat in burning, &c.; 1684. The application of the principle of the Telegraph. See Encyc. Brit.; Life, by Waller; Biog. Brit.; Wood's Gresham Professors; Athen. Oxon.; Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe; Bouvier's Familiar Astronomy. In 1686, on the publication of Newton's Principia, Hooke (who had in 1671 attacked Newton's New Theory of Light and Colours) claimed the prior discovery of the principle of gravitation, or, rather, the application of that principle. But Newton's letters to Halley settle the matter in favour of the writer. Yet great credit is undoubtedly due to Hooke. To borrow the language of Professor Playfair, when commenting on "the length to which Galileo advanced in this direction, and the point at which he stopped,"

"Hooke did not stop short in the same unaccountable manner, but made a nearer approach to the truth than any one had yet done."—Third Prefac. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit.

In the words of a learned lady of our day, "The idea expressed by Kepler of the ebb and flow of the ocean being caused by the attractive influence of the moon, received in 1665 and 1674 a fresh impulse and a more extended application through the sagacity of the ingenious Robert Hooke, a noted experimental philosopher, who distinguished himself by numerous discoveries in science."—Hannah M. Bowyer's Familiar Astronomy, Philad., 1857, 346.

The following is a list of the works of this distinguished philosopher. 1. An Attempt to Explain the Phenomena of an Experiment of Robert Boyle, Lon., 1661, 8vo. 2.

Micrographia, Lon., 1665, '71, fol.; Abridgt., 1780, fol.; Micrographia Restituta, 1745, fol. 3. Animadversions on the first part of Hevelius his machina celestis, 1674, 4to. 4. Essays on Physical Subjects, 1674-82, 4to. 5. Attempt to prove the Motion of the Earth from Observations, 1674, 4to. 6. Descrip. of Helioscopes and other Instruments made by himself, 1676, 4to. 7. Lampas, 1677, 4to.

"Dr. Hooke, . . . who had a particular predilection for hypotheses, sketched in his Micrographia a very beautiful theoretical explanation of combustion, and promised to develop his doctrine more fully in a subsequent book; a promise which he never fulfilled, though in his Lampas, published about twenty [twelve] years afterwards, he has given a very beautiful explanation of the way in which a candle burns."—*Hallam's Lit. "He always expressed veneration for the Deity, as may be seen in a great many passages of his writings; and seldom received any remarkable benefit from God, without thankfully acknowledging the mercy: he never made any considerable discovery in nature, invented any useful contrivance, or found out any difficult problem, without setting down his acknowledgment to God, as many places in his diary testified. And he frequently studied the sacred writings in the originals."—Life, by Waller: ubi supra.

Hooker, Richard, 1553?-1600, was a native of Heavy-Tree, near Exeter. His good conduct and quickness in learning whilst at the grammar-school of Exeter made him a great favourite with his tutor, at whose instance young Richard's uncle presented his nephew to Bishop Jewel, and besought him, for

"Charity's sake, to look favourably upon a poor nephew of his, whom nature had fitted for a scholar, but the estate of his parents was so narrow that they were unable to give him the advantage of learning."

He therefore expressed the hope that the bishop would "become his patron, and prevent him from being a tradesman, for he was a boy of remarkable hopes."

The good bishop sent him to Oxford and placed him under charge of Dr. John Cole, President of Corpus Christi College, who appointed him a tutor and Bible-clerk of the college. He now enjoyed the advantage of the instructions of Dr. John Reynolds for four years. In 1577 he was chosen Fellow of his college. In 1579 he received the appointment of deputy-professor of Hebrew. In 1581 he was ordained; and, according to the college-statutes, he was immediately appointed to preach a sermon at St. Paul's Cross, London. He lodged at a dwelling appropriated to the preachers, which was called the Shunamite's house. Much indisposed by the fatigue of his journey to the city, he was so grateful for the kind attentions of Mrs. Churchman, who had charge of this "house of the prophets," that his complaisance got the better of his judgment. Walton tells the story so quaintly that, even at the risk of being charged with countenancing a slander against "provident" mothers, we must quote it:

"He thought himself bound in conscience to believe all that she said: so that the good man came to be persuaded by her, 'That he was a man of tender constitution,' and 'that it was best for him to have a wife that might prove a nurse to him; such an one as might both prolong his life and make it more comfortable; and such an one she could and would provide for him if he thought fit to marry.' And he, not considering that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light, but, like a true Nathaniel, fearing no guile, because he meant none, did give her such a power as Eleazer was trusted with [you may read it in the book of Genesis] when he was sent to choose a wife for Isaac; for even so he trusted her to choose for him; promising upon a fair summons to return to London and accept of her choice. And he did so, in that or about the year following. Now, the wife provided for him was her daughter Joan, who brought him neither beauty nor portion; and for her conditions, they were too like that wife's which is by Solomon compared to a dripping house."

"Which A. Wood explains, by saying, that she was a silly, clownish woman, and withal a meer Xanippus."

What a proof of the kindness of heart of good Mrs. Churchman, to intrust the happiness of her daughter to the young divine! So anxious was she to promote his comfort and prolong what promised to be a valuable life, that she was willing to submit to the sacrifice, and deprive herself of the society of her dear Joan! But will it be believed that the magnanimity of this excellent woman has been questioned, and that she has even been blamed as a "managing mother," for thus converting Miss Joan Churchman into Mrs. Richard Hooker? So uncharitable is human nature! And, from some modern instances which occasionally occur of like censure of mothers whose disinterestedness is not appreciated, it would seem that detraction was not confined to the days of Mrs. Churchman. If his wife did not prove, as his mother-in-law promised she should, a "comfort" to him, we have evidence that he bore his troubles with laudable equanimity. Two of his former pupils, Mr. Edwin Sandys and Mr. George Cramer, paid him a visit at his parsonage at Drayton-Beauchamp, in Buckinghamshire, of which he became Rector in 1584; and we are told that "They found him with a book in his hand, (it was the Odes of Horace,) he being, then, like humble and innocent Abel, tending his small allotment of sheep in a common field; which he told these gentlemen he was forced to do then, for that his servant was gone home to dine and assist his wife to do some necessary household business. But when his servant returned and released him, his two pupils attended him unto his house, where their best entertainment was his quiet company, which was presently denied them; for Richard was called to rock the cradle; and the next of their welcome was so like this, that they staid but till next morning, which was time enough to discover and pity their tutor's condition. . . . They were forced to leave him to the company of his wife Joan, and seek themselves a quieter lodging for the next night. But at their parting from him, Mr. Cramer said, 'Good Tutor, I am sorry your lot is fallen in no better ground as to your parsonage; and more sorry your wife proves not a more comfortable companion, after you have wearied your thoughts in your restless studies.' To whom the good man replied, 'My dear George, if saints have usually a double share in the miseries of this life, I, that am none, ought not to repine at what my wise Creator hath appointed for me; but labour (as indeed I do daily) to submit to his will, and possess my soul in patience and peace.'"—Walton's Life of Hooker.

Here was a model husband indeed.

To this visit of his former pupils are we indebted for that immortal production, The Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity. Edwin Sandys urged his father, then Bishop of London, to find a more comfortable post for his quondam tutor. This led to his appointment, in 1585, after the death of "Father Alyn," of Master of the Temple for life, being then in his 33d or 34th year. Hooker was the morning lecturer, and Mr. Travers held forth in the afternoon. The latter gentleman followed the views of Cartwright, the Puritan, and inclined to the Presbyterian side in discipline. This contrariety of sentiment led to an amicable controversy between the lecturers, who seem to have entertained for each other all due respect. Thus, it was observed, "the forenoon sermon spoke Canterbury, and the afternoon Geneva." Archbishop Whitgift prohibited the lectures of Mr. Travers. Travers appealed to the queen, but in vain; he then published his memorial, which was answered by Hooker. This answer may be considered the germ of his great work, Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity. He commenced his work in the Temple; but, finding less distraction requisite, he solicited the archbishop to permit him to retire to some more quiet post. Accordingly, that prelate presented him, in 1591, to the rectory of Boscombe, in Wiltshire, and to the prebend of Nether-Haven in the Cathedral of Salisbury, of which he was also made sub-dean. Four books of his work were finished at Boscombe, and printed in 1593, fol.; again, 1594, fol. In 1595 Queen Elizabeth presented him to the rectory of Bishopsbourne, in Kent, where he lived the rest of his days. Whilst sailing between London and Gravesend, he caught a cold which carried him off at the early age of forty-seven. He died the death of the righteous, and to his triumphant soul "the doors of Heaven seemed to open so wide" that he was enabled to catch a view of that ineffable glory which surrounds the throne of "the High and Lofly One who inhabiteth Eternity." Happy are they who have the good report of the members of their own household and of their intimate associates; for they have the best opportunity of knowing our faults and detecting all of our infirmities. Our excellent author does not lack this weighty attestation:

"My master, Hooker, was a good man and a good scholar."

So testifies his parish clerk.

The 5th Book of his Ecclesiastical Polity was published in 1597, fol.; 1632, fol.; the 7th in 1617, (according to Biog. Brit.), and the 6th and 8th (the conclusion) in 1618, 4to. The eight books, with a few sermons and tracts, published separately in 1612-13, and a Life of Hooker, were pub. in Dr. Gauden's edition of his works, Lon., 1662, fol.; 2d ed., 1666, fol., with Life, by Walton. It is contended, indeed, that "all the eight books, with certain tractates and sermons, together with the author's life, were published in two vols. in fol., 1617." See Bliss's *Wood's Athen. In the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity, Hooker presents an elaborate, dignified, and learned defence of the ministry, ritual, and ceremonies of the Church of England. Its polemical arguments have satisfied many; its literary merits have charmed all. Its fame having reached Rome, Cardinal Allen and Dr. Stapleton recommended it so strongly to Clement VIII., that he wished to have it translated into Latin, in which language Stapleton read to him the 1st book, declaring that "There is no learning that this man hath not searched into; nothing too hard for his understanding. This man indeed deserves the name of an author. His books will get reverence by age; for there is in them such seeds of eternity, that if he rest he like this, they shall continue till the last time shall devour all learning."

James I. remarked to Archbishop Whitgift:

"I have received more satisfaction in reading a leaf or paragraph in Mr. Hooker, though it were but about the fashion of churches, or church music, or the like, but especially of the sacraments, than I have had in reading large treatises written but of one of those subjects by others, though very learned men."

"Charles I. commended the five books then extant of the Polity to his dear children as an excellent means to satisfy private scruples, and settle the publique peace of the Church and Kingdom."

Our learned author seems to have a right by long use to the title of "The Judicious Hooker."

"The adamant and imperishable work of Hooker is his Ecclesiastical Polity. Bishop Lowth, in the preface to his English Grammar, has bestowed the highest praise upon the purity of Hooker's style. Bishop Warburton, in his book on the Alliance between the Church and State, often quotes him, and calls him 'the excellent, the admirable, the best good man of our order.'"—Dr. Parr.

"Of the illustrious Hooker—whose memory is embalmed in the beautiful biography of him by Isaac Walton—it is sufficient to say, that his Ecclesiastical Polity is, of all works of that description, one of the most masterly and convincing. Never was logic more successfully employed to combat error and establish truth; and the vein of common sense, as well as of spiritual comfort, which pervades the pages of that work, will render it, to the latest posterity, a popular as well as instructive performance."—Dr. Dimin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, '55, '56.

The following is no small eulogy:

"Should the English constitution in Church and State be unhappily ruined by some convulsion of extraordinary times, this book alone probably contains materials sufficient for repairing and rebuilding the shattered fabric."

"He was an able champion for the ecclesiastical hierarchy. His work displays immense learning, reflection, and eloquence, and is still referred to as a great authority upon the whole range of moral and political principles. . . . The Ecclesiastical Polity has furnished, for nearly 200 years, an invaluable defence of the clergy to studious men; but we want, says the Rev. E. Bickersteth, a popular work of the like sound, judicious, and evangelized character, for the establishment of the young, and laymen in general. . . . Keble's preface, like Walton's Life, should precede every subsequent edition. Hooker is universally distinguished for long-drawn melody and mellifluousness of language, and his works must find a place in every well-chosen clerical library. His eloquence has been deservedly praised; but the justice of the epithet 'Judicious,' which his admirers have attached to his name, is rather more questionable. Certainly there never was a more thorough-going advocate of things established than he has shown himself in the whole Fifth Book, forming more than a third part of the entire Ecclesiastical Polity."—Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 580, 539.

Hooker was not permitted to occupy the field of controversy alone. Hilson, Bancroft, Bridges, Cosins, and Dr. Adrian Saravia, a German beneficed in England, appeared on the same side. Bradshaw defended the cause of the Puritans against Hilson. Fenner against Bridges, Morrice against Cosins, and Beza against Saravia, although the press was shut against them by law, and their books could only be published by stealth."—Bogge.

"The Ecclesiastical Polity of Hooker, who was superior to the pedantry of the times, is worthy of the present age for its liberal and manly sentiment."—Comparisons of the Lit. of the Present Age with that of the Friends of Eliz. and Anne, by Rev. R. Puleche. See Goodhugh's Lib. Man., 165.

"His works manifest great vigour of thought, eloquence of expression, soundness of judgment, and decidedly evangelical sentiment: his Ecclesiastical Polity is one of the bulwarks of the Establishment of Church of England."—BICKERSTETH: Christian Student.

"For a defence of the Church of England against the Sectaries, it will suffice in toto omnino, to study Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity, a work bearing all the marks of immortality, as destined to excite the admiration of men while good letters remain amongst the us."—Bishop Warburton's Directions to his Student.

"The Ecclesiastical Polity is the principal work of this able and venerable man, and perhaps the best defence of the Church of England ever published. Those who dissent from his doctrine of church order may, nevertheless, read this remarkable production with great advantage, because of the dignity and force of the language in which it is written, the author's meekness in controversy, and the very just and impressive views of revealed truth which he has often introduced."—Dr. E. Williams's Christian Preacher.

"Amplly as Hooker enriched his native tongue, he frequently presents the cumbersome gait, and the rough aspect of a pioneer. Taylor surpasses him in all the charms of imagination; Hall, in the sweetness and colour of his thoughts; Barrow, in the illumination of his argument. . . . But Hooker excelled them all in muscular vigour. . . . We turn to his works, as to some mighty bulwark against infidelity, impregnable to the assaults of successive generations."—WILLIAMS.

For other comparisons of Hooker to Taylor, Barrow, &c., see BARROW, ISAAC, D.D.; TAYLOR, JEREMY, D.D. Referring to Hooker's theological sentiments, Mr. Macaulay remarks:

"The school of divinity which Hooker was the chief occupies a middle place between the school of Cranmer and the school of Laud; and Hooker has in modern times been claimed by the Arminians as an ally."—History of England, vol. i, 1849.

Dr. Drake remarks of Hooker's composition:

"Though the words, for the most part, are well chosen and pure, the arrangement of them into sentences is intricate and harsh, and formed almost exclusively on the idiom and construction of the Latin. Much strength and vigour are derived from this adoption, but perspicuity, sweetness, and ease, are too generally sacrificed. There is, notwithstanding these usual features of his composition, an occasional simplicity in his pages, both of style and sentiment, which truly charms."—Essays Illustrative of the Tattler, &c., vol. i, 10.

Mr. Beloe complains that

"Neither Walton in his Life of Hooker, nor Bishop Gauden, nor many others, that give an account of Hooker and his writings, make mention of the particular books or tracts which gave occasion to his writing the Ecclesiastical Polity."

Mr. Beloe proceeds to supply this omission in Anecdotes of Literature and Scarce Books, vol. i, p. 21.

Mr. Hallam's authority is, in all cases, one of the most weighty which can be adduced:

"The finest as well as the most philosophical writer of the Elizabethan period is Hooker. The first book of the Ecclesiastical Polity is at this day one of the master-pieces of English eloquence. His periods, indeed, are generally much too long and too intricate, but portions of them are often beautifully rhythmical; his language is rich in English idiom without vulgarity, and in words of a Latin source without pedantry; he is more uniformly solemn than the usage of later times permits, or even than writers of that time, such as Bacon, conversant with mankind as well as books, would have reckoned necessary; but the example of ancient orators and philosophers, upon themes so grave as those which he discusses, may justify the serious dignity from which he does not depart. Hooker is perhaps the first of such in England who adorned his prose with the images of poetry; but this he has done more judiciously and with more moderation than others of great name; and we must be bigots in Attic severity, before we can object to some of his grand figures of speech. We may praise him also for avoiding the superfluous luxury of quotations—a rock on which the writers of the succeeding age were so frequently wrecked."—Introduct. to Lit. of Europe; ed. 1854, vol. ii, 198.

"The Ecclesiastical Polity of Hooker is a monument of real learning, in profane as well as theological antiquity."—Ibid., vol. i, 518.

After such a cloud of witnesses to the merits of this eminent writer, we trust that it is unnecessary for us to urge our readers—young and old—to devote at least a portion of their days and nights to the pages of Hooker. And, that they may be persuaded so to do, we shall gratify them with a few more eloquent lines of glowing eulogy from the same distinguished scholar who has opened the paths of learning to so many of the past and present generation, and who still remains—now on the verge of fourscore years—to see the abundant fruits of his labours, and receive the grateful benedictions of many whom he has guided to intellectual elevation and stimulated to the acquisition of mental riches of priceless worth. Of the author of the Ecclesiastical Polity, Mr. Hallam does not scruple to declare:

"He not only opened the mine, but explored the depths, of our native eloquence. So stately and graceful is the march of his periods, so various the fall of his musical cadences upon the ear, so rich in images, so condensed in sentences, so grave and noble his diction, so little is there of vulgarity in his ray idiom, of pedantry in his learned phrase, that I know not whether any later writer has more admirably displayed the capacities of our language, or produced passages more worthy of comparison with the splendid monuments of antiquity. If we compare the first book of the Ecclesiastical Polity with what bears perhaps most resemblance to it of any thing extant, the treatise of Cicero de Legibus, it will appear somewhat perhaps inferior, through the imperfection of our language,—which, with all its force and dignity, does not equal the Latin in either of those qualities,—and certainly more tedious and diffuse in some of its reasonings; but by no means less high-toned in sentiment or less bright in fancy, and far more comprehensive and profound in the foundations of its philosophy."—Constit. Hist. of Eng., ed. 1854, i, 215.

Hooker, Richard. Weekly Miscellany, 1736–38, 2 vols. 8vo.

Hooker, Thomas, 1586–1647. "The Renowned Pastor of Hartford Church, and Pillar of Connecticut Colony," a native of Marfield, Leicestershire, educated at and Fellow of Emanuel College, Cambridge, took holy orders and preached for some time in London. In 1626 he became assistant to a clergyman at Chelmsford, and officiated with great reputation until silenced for Non-conformity by Laud, then Bishop of London. He subsequently went to Holland, where he preached for two or three years at Delft, Amsterdam, and Rotterdam, and in 1633 emigrated to Boston, New England, in company with John Colton and Samuel Stone. In October of the same year he assumed the charge of the congregation at New-Town, now Cambridge, Mass., Mr. Stone acting as his assistant. In June, 1636, in company with Mr. Stone and about one hundred other persons, he removed to "a fertile spot on the banks of the Connecticut," which they called Hartford,—the name by which it is still known,—in honour of Mr. Stone, who was a native of Hartford, in England. In his new location, Hooker was distinguished by the same unquenchable zeal, untiring energy, and fiery eloquence, which were his characteristics from early youth, and no name had more influence in the churches of New England. He was carried off by an epidemical fever, July 7, 1647, aged 61. John Higginson transcribed from his MSS. about 200 sermons, and sent them to England, and about half of them were pub. A number of his theological treatises were pub. before his death, and some were posthumous. Among the best-known of his works are—A Survey of the Sum of Church Discipline, The Soul's Implantation, The Application of Redemption, and the Poor Doubting Christian drawn to Christ.

The Application of Redemption, 1656; 2d ed., 1659.

The death of the excellent Hooker was lamented as a public loss, and his virtues were celebrated—if not in as many languages, as those which chanted the praises of Louis le Grand—in majestic Latin and pathetic Saxon. John Cotton, Elijah Corlet, Ezekiel Rogers, Peter Bulkeley, and Edward Johnson, were among those who vied in epiciedian strains over the lamented dead. The first-named honoured his departed friend both in prose and verse;—in the former telling us that Hooker "Agmen duere et vitæ dominari in Concionibus, gratia Spiritus Sancti et virtute plenius;" and that he was "Vir Solertis et Acerrimi iudicii;" and in the latter expressing himself in the following rather homely stanzas:

"Two of Geneva's heroes said with wonder,
(Those worthies three,) Farel was wont to thunder,
Vivet like rain on tender grass to show'r,
But Calvin lively oracles to pour.
All these in HOOKER'S spirit did remain,
A son of thunder and a show'r of rain;
A power-forth of lively oracles,
In saving souls, the sum of miracles."

"Tis that Hooker, of whom I may venture to say that the famous Romanist who wrote a book, De Tribus Thomis; or, Of Three Thomases.—meaning Thomas the Apostle, Thomas Becket, and Sir Thomas More,—did not a thousandth part so well sort his Thomases, as a New Englander might if he should write a book, De Duobus Thomis; or, Of Two Thomases, and with Thomas the Apostle join our celebrated Thomas Hooker: my one Thomas, even our apostolical Hooker, would in just balances weigh down two of staple-ton rebellious Archbishops or bigoted Lord-Chancellors. 'Tis he whom I may call, as Theodoret called Irenæus, "The Light of the Western Churches;"—MATHER: Magnalia, ed. 1855, i. 333; The Life of Mr. Thomas Hooker.

"Among the valuable acquisitions I made about this time (of leaving the High School) was an acquaintance with Tasso's Jerusalem, through the flat medium of Mr. Hoole's translation."—Sir Walter Scott's Autobiography.

"The reader will observe in the foregoing specimens of Hoole how a bad translator takes refuge from the real feelings of his author in vagueness and cant phrases. . . . When Mr. Hoole takes leave of his author, it is for want of strength to accompany him; when Fairfax does it, it is to lead you into some beautiful corner of his fancy."—LEIGH HUNT: Critique on Fairfax's Tasso.

"That vile version of Hoole's. . . The flat couplets of a rhymester like Hoole."—ROBERT SOUTHBY: Life and Correspondence.

Mr. Roscoe says of Ariosto, "In the Orlando we admire the poet, but in the Satires we love the man!" 6. Cleonia; a Tragedy. 7. Trans. of Tasso's Rinaldo; a Poem, 1792, 8vo. 8. Critical Essays of John Scott, of Anwell; with his Life, by J. Hoole, 1783, 8vo. Dr. Johnson—with whom our author was intimate—valued Hoole's abilities much more highly than they deserved: see FAIRFAX, EDWARD. Modern critics, as we have seen, have deducted largely from the estimate of the great lexicographer:

"Mr. Hoole, the translator of Tasso and Ariosto, and in that capacity a noble transmutter of gold into lead. . . He did exactly so many couplets day by day, neither more nor less; and habit had made it light to him, however heavy it might seem to the reader."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Diary, June 4, 1826.

"Ben Jonson was a great man, Hoole a very small man. But Hoole, coming after Pope, had learned how to manufacture decasyllable verses, and poured them forth by thousands and tens of thousands, all as well-timed, as smooth, and as like each other, as the blocks which have passed through Mr. Brunel's mill in the dock-yard at Portsmouth. Ben's heroic couplets resemble blocks rudely hewn out by an unpractised hand with a blunt hatchet. Take as a specimen his translation of a celebrated passage in the Æneid:

"This child our parent earth, stirred up with spite'. . . Compare with these jagged-misshapen distichs the neat fabric which Hoole's machine produces in unlimited abundance. We take the first lines on which we open in his version of TASSO. They are neither better nor worse than the rest."—T. B. MACAULAY: *Edin. Hooper, John, the Reformer and Martyr, 1495-1554, a native of Somersetshire, educated at Merton College, Oxford, was for some time one of the Cistercians, or White Monks, but subsequently embraced the principles of the Reformation. In 1539 he fled to Zurich, and remained abroad until the accession of Edward VI. In 1550 he was consecrated Bishop of Gloucester, and about two years later he had the bishopric of Worcester given to him, in commendam. On the accession of Mary, July, 1553, he was a prominent mark for the persecutors; and, refusing to recant, he was burnt in the city of Gloucester, near his own cathedral, on the 9th of the February ensuing. He was the author of many theological treatises, expositions, and serms., for an account of which, see Fox's Martyrs; Burnet's Hist. of the Reformation; Strype's Crammer; Fathers of the English Church, vol. v.; British Reformers, vol. iv.; Tracts of Ang. Fathers, vol. ii.; Watt's Bibl. Brit.; Wordsworth's Eccles. Biog. The reader must procure the following collections of the writings of this excellent man:

Early Writings, edited, with Biographical Notice, Index, &c., by S. Carr, Camb., (Univ. Press,) 1843, 8vo. Contents:—A Declaration of Christ and his Office: Answer to Bishop Gardiner; a Declaration of the X. Commandments; Sermons upon the Prophet Jonas; and Funeral Sermon on Rev. xiv. 13.

Later Writings, together with his Letters and other Pieces, edited, with Biographical Notice, Index, &c., by C. Nevinson, Camb., (Univ. Press,) 1852, 8vo. Contents:—A Lesson of the Incarnation of Christ; Confession of Faith; Annotations on Romans xii.; Copy of Visitation Book; Expositions of Psalms xliii., lxvii., lxxviii., and lxxvii.; Treatise respecting Jugg Hales; Epistola ad Episcopos, &c.; Appellatio ad Parlamentum; Hylterapismus de vera Doctrina et Usa Cœnæ Domini, &c.

Hooper, Lucy, 1816-1841, a native of Newburyport, Massachusetts, removed in her 15th year to Brooklyn, Long Island, where she resided until her death. In early life she contributed many poetical essays to the Long Island Star, and the New Yorker, a daily paper; and in 1840 pub. a vol. of prose sketches, entitled Scenes from Real Life. She also gave to the world at the same time An Essay on Domestic Happiness. During her last illness she was preparing for publication a work entitled The Poetry of Flowers, which appeared shortly after her decease. In 1842 Mr. John Keese edited a collection of her Literary Remains, prefaced by a Memoir; and an enlarged edit. of her Poetical Works was pub. in 1848. Specimens of the poetry of this accomplished lady are given in Griswold's Female Poets of America, where the reader will find eloquent tributes to the memory of Miss Hooper from John G. Whittier, Henry T. Tuckerman, and Dr. John W. Francis. See also Democratic Review, xi. 90.

Notice of the 4th edit.:

"The publisher has judged wisely in producing this new edition in a form more convenient and less expensive than any of its predecessors. The value of the book is increased by the addition of some notes and cases left in MS. by the author, and directed by him to be inserted in this edition. For our knowledge of diseases of the heart, we are in no small degree indebted to the zealous inquiries and pursuits of the lamented author."—Lon. Lancet.

Hope, Thomas, M.D. 1. Operation on the Eye; Phil. Trans., 1744. 2. Daviel's Method of Couching, ibid., 1751.

Hope, Thomas, d. 1831, of the same family as Sir Thomas Hope, (ante), was one of the three brothers of this name well known as wealthy merchants of Amsterdam. The subject of our notice devoted a considerable time, whilst still quite young, to extensive peregrinations in various parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa, and, after retiring from business, purchased two spacious mansions, one in Duchess Street, London, and the other ("Deepdene") in the vicinity of Dorking. Thus permanently settled in England, Mr. Hope soon rendered his residences famous as choice galleries of the finest specimens of art. The reader will find an account of Mr. Hope's town-mansion in Britton and Pugin's Public Buildings of London, and in Westmacott's Account of the British Galleries of Painting and Sculpture. For a description of "Deepdene," see Aubrey's Perambulation of the County of Surrey; Neale's Seats of Noblemen and Gentlemen; and Prosser's Views in Surrey. The owner of all this magnificence died February 3, 1831, leaving a personal property of £180,000. To give some idea of the vast wealth of members of this family, we may state that Henry Philip Hope, a brother of the subject of this notice, left at his death, in 1810, a collection of diamonds and other precious stones valued at £150,000, and an income of £30,000 to each of his three nephews. A younger member of this family has within the last few years built a church and a missionary-institution in London at a cost of about £70,000.

Mr. Hope's love of the fine arts, classical enthusiasm, and exquisite perception of the beautiful in articles of use as well as in the appliances of luxury, were developed in several publications, which have deservedly given him a high rank as an author. 1. A Letter addressed to F. Annesley, Esq., on a Series of Designs for Downing College, Cambridgeshire. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1801. 2. Household Furniture and Internal Decorations; executed from Designs by the Author, Lon., 1807, r. fol., £5 5s. Large paper, atlas fol., £10 10s. Pp. 173. This work was unmercifully handled by Lord Jeffrey in the Edin. Rev., x. 478-486.

"If the salvation of Europe depended on Mr. Hope's eloquence, he could not have exerted it with more earnestness and animation; and we are convinced that neither the restorers of learning nor the reformers of religion ever spoke of their subject in terms half so magnificent, nor of their own abilities with such studied and graceful modesty, as this ingenious person has here done in recommending to his countrymen a better form for their lamps, side-boards, and cradles."—LORD JEFFREY: ubi supra; and see Lon. Month. Rev., lviii. 175-181.

But, notwithstanding the dread reviewer's wit, this work led the way to a complete revolution in the upholstery and interior decoration of houses:

"To Mr. Hope we are indebted in an eminent degree for the classical and appropriate style which now generally characterizes our furniture and domestic utensils."—Britton's Union of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture.

3. The Costume of the Ancients. Engravings principally by H. Moses, 1809, r. 8vo; large paper, 4to; 2d ed., with about 300 plates, 1812, 2 vols. 8vo, £2 2s.; large paper, 2 vols. r. 4to, £5 5s. New ed., with about 340 plates, 1841, 2 vols. r. 8vo, £2 12s. 6d. On the publication of this expensive work, Mr. Hope sacrificed £1000 of the cost, in order to put the price at a low rate.

"The substance of many expensive works, containing all that may be necessary to give to artists, and even to dramatic performers, and to others engaged in classical representations, an idea of ancient costumes sufficiently ample to prevent their offending in their performances by gross and obvious blunders."

4. Designs of Modern Costumes, 1812, fol. Engravings by H. Moses.

"These works [Nos. 3 and 4] evinced a profound research into the works of antiquity, and a familiarity with all that is graceful and elegant."—Lon. Gent. Mag., April, 1831; q. v. for an interesting biography of Mr. Hope.

5. Anastasius, or Memoirs of a Modern Greek, written at the Close of the Eighteenth Century, 1819, 3 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1820, 3 vols. 8vo. Anon. Reprinted—Bentley's Standard Novels, 5 and 52—1839, 2 vols. 12mo; again in 1819. This novel is of the school of Beckford and Byron; displaying a vivid imagination, remarkable powers of graphic description, a cultivated classical taste, and a minute accuracy in the accounts of Eastern chimes and Oriental manners. The author is, however, justly to be blamed for the licentious tone so often obtruded on his readers. As the work appeared anonymously, the authorship was for some time a matter of doubt. A writer in Blackwood (x. 200-206, in Familiar Epistles to Christopher North, Letter 11) ridiculed the idea of Hope's producing such a work:

"Mr. Hope is a very respectable and decorous gentleman,—he can write, with some endeavour, passably about chests or drawers, paper-hangings, and cushions as soft as his own or any other brains; but that he has either the courage or the power to compile such a work as Anastasius, I utterly and entirely deny. . . . I would call your attention to a few circumstances that, I conceive you will allow, constitute strong proofs that Anastasius is the production of Byron."

This Epistle elicited a letter from Hope, in the next number of the Magazine, (x. 312), in which he claimed the sole authorship of ANASTASIUS. See also Blackwood's Mag., xv. 51. From the many reviews before us, by eminent critics, of this remarkable medley of Oriental romance and classic travel, we have space for but brief quotations:

"This is an extraordinary work in every sense of that word. . . . It seems to be the object of the writer to unite the entertainment of a novel with the information of a book of travels. . . . Anastasius and the volumes which record his memoirs form a paradox of contradiction. The Greek adventurer is acute and dull, generous and niggardly, tender-hearted and cruel; and the book, in harmony with its hero, is rational and absurd, profound and shallow, amusing and tiresome, to a degree beyond what we should have thought it possible to achieve in the same performance, if we had not seen it exemplified in the author before us."—WILLIAM GIFFORD: Lon. Quar. Rev., xxiv. 511-529.

"Mr. Hope will excuse us.—but we could not help exclaiming, in reading it, 'Is this Mr. Thomas Hope?—Is this the man of chairs and tables—the gentleman of sphinxes—the Œdipus of coal-boxes—he who meditated on muffineers and planned pokers?—Where has he hidden all this eloquence and poetry up to this hour?—How is it that he has, all of a sudden, burst out into descriptions which would not disgrace the pen of Tacitus—and displayed a depth of feeling, and a vigour of imagination, which Lord Byron could not excel?' We do not shrink from one syllable of this eulogium. The work now before us places him at once in the highest list of eloquent writers and of superior men. . . . The suit of our eulogium is that Mr. Hope, without being very successful in his story, or remarkably successful in the delineation of character, has written a novel, which all clever people of a certain age should read, because it is full of marvellously fine things."—SYDNEY SMITH: Edin. Rev., xxxv. 92-102; Works, Lon., 1854, ii. 173-185.

That profound classical scholar and accomplished belle-lettres critic, Edward Everett, of Massachusetts,—still, fortunately for our national reputation, living amongst us in the maturity of his extraordinary powers, and hardly even yet become "the old man eloquent,"—wrote, nearly forty years ago, for the columns of the North American Review, an elaborate review of Anastasius, which choice piece of criticism we beg to commend to the perusal of our readers. As regards the work reviewed, we can hardly advise so general a perusal.

In the words of Mr. Everett:

"We are afraid to recommend the book itself to indiscriminate perusal. Some parts are dull and some offensive; and the whole of it requires more geographical knowledge, to be read understandingly, than can be supposed to be in the possession of general readers. For, notwithstanding what we have said of the elevated character of the novel-writing of the present day, we presume no one reads a novel with a map. Without a very good map, Anastasius will be unintelligible. . . . The author has occasionally indulged in a licentiousness equally immoral and disgusting."—N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1820, xi. 271-206. See also Lon. Month. Rev., xci. 1, 131; Edin. Month. Rev., iv. 423.

"Hope has a pure and a quick fancy, and maintains the spirit and manner of his characters with remarkable consistency and truth. . . . The faults of the work are twofold: the chief character is a cold-hearted scoundrel, whom we loathe from our soul; and the language is neither prose nor poetry, but a

"Babylonian dialect

ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years.

We have seen that Lord Byron generally obtained the credit of the authorship of Anastasius:

"When Anastasius first made its appearance, everybody thought Lord Byron was taking to write prose; for there was no living author but Lord Byron supposed capable of having written such a book. When Byron denied the work, (and, in fact, his lordship could not have written it,) people looked about again, and wondered who the author could be. . . . The book was absolutely crammed with bold incidents and brilliant descriptions, with historical details, given in a style which Hume or Gilbert could scarcely have surpassed, and with analysis of human character and impulse, such as even Mandeville might have been proud to acknowledge."—Blackwood's Mag., xv. 51.

Such being the character of the work, we need not be surprised that Lord Byron was not offended with the imputation of its authorship:

"Byron spoke to-day in terms of high commendation of Hope's Anastasius; said that he wept bitterly over many pages of it, and for two reasons:—first, that he had not written it, and secondly, that Hope had; for that it was necessary to like a man excessively to pardon his writing such a book.—a book, as he said, excelling all recent productions as much in wit and talent as in true pathos. He added that he would have given his two most approved poems to have been the author of Anastasius."—Countess of Blessington's Conversations with Lord Byron.

At the time of his death Mr. Hope left two works in MSS., which were subsequently given to the world, viz.:

6. An Essay on the Origin and Prospects of Man, 1831, 3 vols. 8vo. This work affords a striking illustration of the absurdities into which chimerical speculations and the vagaries of an unbalanced imagination will hurry men whose education and opportunities would have promised better things. Mr. Hope, whilst discarding the authority of the Holy Scriptures, offers us instead of them the unsupported exegeses of his own not very sober brain. He professes, indeed, to believe the Bible—just so far as he finds it to consist with his own notions of truth. But the folly and incongruity of the author's speculations have been so well exposed by Robert Southey, in his letter to Henry Taylor of July 15, 1851, (see Southey's Life and Correspondence), that we may be excused from lingering on the subject. A review of the work—of about as little value as the book itself—will be found in the Lon. Month. Rev. for July, 1831, 390-405.

7. An Historical Essay on Architecture; illustrated by Drawings made by him in Italy and Germany, 1835, 2 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1840, 2 vols. r. 8vo, 99 Plates, £2: Analytical Index to, by Edward Cresy, r. 8vo, 6s. An elaborate review of this work will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag. for June, 1835. The critic styles Hope's Essay

"The most comprehensive elucidation of the architecture of the Middle Ages which has ever appeared in this country."

Watt (Bibl. Brit.) says that there was another fol. ed. in 1710; but this is disputed. If not, there was no ed. later than that of 1701, until the appearance of the Rev. Josiah Pratt's ed. of 1809, 4 vols. 8vo, £1 16s.; large paper, 4 vols. r. 8vo, £2 10s. New ed., with a Memoir of the Author, 1841, r. 8vo, 18s.; also, with a General Index of Texts and Subjects, 1841, 2 vols. r. 8vo, £1 4s. Another ed., 1843, 2 vols. r. 8vo, £1 1s. There have been recent edits. of a number of Bp. Hopkins's works, pub. separately; and in 1827 the Rev. W. Wilson, D.D., pub. a Selection from the Works of Bishop Hopkins, with a brief Sketch of his Life, Lon., 18mo.

"Hopkins's motto, aut suaviter aut vi, well answered his works; yet he trusted most to the latter, awakening men awfully; yet sometimes he bent the bow till it broke:—an error greatly to be guarded against."—DR. DODDINGE.

"He was one of the last of that race of sound divines to which the Reformation gave birth, and who, in uninterrupted succession, had maintained in the episcopal chair the genuine doctrines of the Scripture and the English church. . . . Four excellencies appear to me to be combined in him as a writer. In doctrine he is sound and discriminating; in style rich and harmonious; in illustration apt and forcible; and in application awakening and persuasive."—REV. JOSIAH PRATT.

"His Works form of themselves a sound body of divinity, with some of the faults of the day in artificial distinctions and divisions. He is clear, vehement, and persuasive."—Bielersoll's C. S.

"Whatever be the nature of the subject on which he treats his hand is instinctively seen to be that of a master: throughout we find a strength of thought, an originality of illustration, a force and felicity of style, a homely richness of expression, which command perpetual attention."—Lon. Witness.

"In Hopkins we are struck with the use of strong and forcible imagery in the illustration of his positions. His style is plain, familiar, and perspicuous, and yet withal forcible and nervous. His chief excellence is that he can be plain and energetic almost at the same time. We recommend him strongly to the younger clergy."—Lon. Chris. Observer.

"The fervent and affectionate Hopkins."—REV. JAMES HERVEY.

"Bishop Hopkins, for his excellency in that noble faculty [of preaching] was celebrated by all men. He was followed and admired in all places where he lived, and was justly esteemed one of the best preachers of our age, and his discourses always smelt of the lamp: they were very elaborate and well digested."—Prince's Worthies of Devon.

Hopkins, H. W. Serms., Lon., 1796, 8vo.

Hopkins, John, b. 1675, a son of Bishop Ezekiel Hopkins. 1. The Triumphs of Peace, or the Glories of Nassau; a Pindaric Poem, 1698. 2. The Victory of Death; a Pindaric Poem, 1698, 8vo. 3. Amasia, or The Works of the Muses; a Collection of Poems, 1700, 3 vols. This is his principal performance. See Nichols's Poems; Chalmers's Biog. Diet.

Hopkins, John, the principal successor of Thomas Sternhold in versifying the Psalms of David, was admitted A.B. at Oxford in 1544, and is supposed to have been subsequently a clergyman and schoolmaster in Suffolk. He versified fifty-eight of the Psalms, which bear his initials. The complete version was first printed (by John Day) in 1562, 4to, though portions had appeared before.

"Of his abilities as a teacher of the classics, he has left a specimen in some Latin stanzas prefixed to FOX'S MARTYROLOGY. He is rather a better English poet than Sternhold."—Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet., q. v.

The End of Controversy Controverted: a Refutation of Milner's End of Controversy; in a series of Letters addressed to the Roman Archbishop [Kenrick] of Baltimore, 1854, 2 vols. 12mo, pp. 918. This work is presumed to have been elicited by a recommendation some years since from Archbishop (then Bishop) Kenrick to all Protestant clergymen to read Milner's End of Controversy. Archbishop Kenrick has recently pub., in answer to Bishop Hopkins's work, A Vindication of the Catholic Church; in a Series of Letters addressed to the Rt. Rev. John Henry Hopkins, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Vermont, Balt., 1855, 12mo, pp. 334. 10. York, 1839. In addition to the works noticed above, this learned and excellent prelate—distinguished for his Christian activity and zeal—has given to the world about thirty occasional Sermons, Letters, Discourses, Addresses, &c.

Hopkins, Joseph. Accoucheur's Vade-Mecum, 1814, 12mo.

Hopkins, Lemuel, M.D., 1750-1801, a descendant of Governor Hopkins, of Connecticut, a native of Waterbury, Conn., practised medicine from 1776 to 1784 at Litchfield, and from 1784 to 1801 at Hartford. He wrote a number of poetical pieces, and was an associate with Trumbull, Barlow, Alsop, and others, in the composition of The Anarchiad, (pub. in the Connecticut Magazine, 1786-87), The Echo, Political Green-House, The Guillotine, and other productions. See Thacher's Med. Biog.; Kettell's Spec. of Amer. Poetry, i. 272-284; Everest's Poets of Connecticut; Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit. Among Hopkins's best-known pieces are The Hypocrite's Hope, and Elegy on the Victim of a Cancer Quack. The 88th Psalm in Barlow's collection was versified by him.

Hopkins, Louisa Payson, b. 1812, at Portland, Maine, a daughter of the Rev. Edward Payson, D.D., eminent for his piety, was married to Prof. Albert Hopkins in 1842. Mrs. Hopkins is the author of a number of works, written some before and some since her marriage, intended for the benefit of the young. 1. The Pastor's Daughter, N. York, 18mo. 2. Lessons on the Book of Proverbs, Bost. 3. The Young Christian Encouraged, N. York, 18mo. Repub., Hartford, 18mo. 4. Henry Langdon; or, What was I Made For? N. York, 1846, 18mo. Repub., Hartford, 18mo. 5. The Guiding Star; or, The Bible God's Message: a sequel to Henry Langdon, Bost., 1851, 18mo. 6. The Silent Comforter: a Companion for the Sick-Room. A compilation. 7. Payson's Thoughts. A compilation. She has also composed several Question-Books for the Mass. S. S. Union, and contributed articles to Kitto's Biblical Cyclopaedia, The New York Review, &c. Mrs. Hopkins's writings have been commended in the highest terms.

Hopkins, Mark, D.D., M.D., a Presbyterian divine, b. 1802, at Stockbridge, Mass., and educated at Williams College, subsequently studied medicine, and received the degree of M.D. in 1828; Professor of Moral Philosophy and Rhetoric in Williams College, 1830-36; President of Williams College from Sept. 15, 1836, to the present time. 1. Lects. on the Evidences of Christianity, before the Lowell Institute, delivered in Jan. 1844; pub., Bost., 1846, 8vo. 2. Miscellaneous Essays and Reviews, 1847, 8vo. Contents: I. Paper originally pub. in Amer. Jour. of Science and Arts, April, 1828; II., III. Papers in Amer. Quar. Observer, Oct. 1833, and Oct. 1834; IV. Paper in Biblical Repository, Oct. 1835. Dr. Hopkins has also pub. separately seven Sermons, Discourses, &c. He enjoys the reputation of being an efficient president and an able instructor; and Williams College has greatly prospered under his paternal jurisdiction. Hopkins, Samuel, D.D., 1721-1803, a descendant of Governor Hopkins of Connecticut, and the founder of the Hopkinsonian school of divinity, was a native of Waterbury, Conn., graduated at Yale College in 1741, studied theology under the celebrated Jonathan Edwards, was ordained in 1743, and was subsequently stationed successively at Great Barrington, Newport, R.I., Newburyport, Canterbury, Stamford, and again, in 1780, at Newport, where he remained until his death in 1803. His theological views were given to the world in his System of Doctrines contained in Divine Revelation explained and defended, Bost., 1793, 2 vols. 8vo; 1811, 2 vols. 8vo; and in collective ed. of his works, Phila., 1853, 3 vols. 8vo.

"The celebrity of the author, who, with Edwards and Bellamy, completes the American triumvirate of eminent writers in the same strain of divinity, would have rendered this work much more popular and useful, had he kept clear of a bold and grating statement,—that 'God has foreordained all the moral evil which does take place,' and which he endeavours to defend with more ingenuity than success."—Dr. E. Williams's C. P.

"Hopkins sought to add to the five points of Calvinism the rather heterogeneous ingredient that holiness consists in pure, disinterested benevolence, and that all regard for self is necessarily sinful."—Hildreth's Hist. of the U. States, ed. 1854, ii. 579.

Hopkins also pub. a number of occasional sermons and theolog. treatises, &c., 1759-83; The Life of Susan Anthony, 1796; new ed., 1830, 12mo; The Life of Mrs. Osborn, 1798; a vol. of Serms., 1803; and left Sketches of his life, and two theolog. tracts; the three last-named were pub. by Dr. West, of Stockbridge, in 1805. A collective ed. of his Works, including his System of Doctrines, with a Memoir of his Life and Character, was pub. by the Doct. Tract and Book Soc., Phila., 1853, 3 vols. 8vo. Hopkins, William, 1706-1786, an Arian writer, a clergyman of the Church of England, a native of Monmouth, was entered at All-Souls College, Oxf., 1724;

Vicar of Bolney, Sussex, 1731; Master of the Grammar School of Cuckfield, 1736; Curate of Slougham, 1766. He pub. several anonymous pamphlets against compulsory subscription to the XXXIX. Articles, &c., but is best known by the following work: Exodus: a corrected Translation, with Notes Critical and Explanatory, Lon., 1784, 4to.

"The chief value of this translation is, that it gives all the additions and variations of the Samaritan and Septuagint. The author's heterodoxy is offensively avowed, both in the preface and notes."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"The translator has, in general, executed his task with fidelity."—Horn's Bibl. Bib.

"In the notes we meet with little that can gratify the taste of critical and curious readers; and his severe reflections on the Articles and Liturgy of the Church of England might well have been spared in a work of this nature."—Lon. Month. Rev., O. S., lxxii. 412.

Hopkinson, Francis, 1737-1791, a native of Philadelphia, the son of Thomas Hopkinson, an Englishman, was educated at the college (now the University of Pennsylvania) in Philadelphia, and subsequently studied law. In 1765 we find him in England, where he resided for two years, settling, on his return, at Bordentown, New Jersey, where he married Miss Ann Borden. In 1776 he represented New Jersey in the American Congress, and was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. He held for a number of years an appointment in the Loan-Office. In 1779 he was made Judge of the Admiralty in Pennsylvania, and in 1790 was appointed, by President Washington, Judge of the District Court of the United States. He died May 9, 1791, of an attack of apoplexy. He was the author of a number of poems, political pamphlets, essays, and many admirable jeux-d'esprit on the prominent topics of the day. Among the best-known of his poems are The Treaty, The Battle of the Kegs, A Morning Hymn, An Evening Hymn, Description of a Church, Science, A Camp Ballad, and The New Roof. Of his satirical pieces we may instance The Typographical Mode of Conducting a Quarrel, Thoughts on the Diseases of the Mind, Essay on White-Washing, and Modern Learning. Few pens of the day effected more than Hopkinson's in educating the American people for political independence. The brevity, wit, and vivacity of his pieces gave them portability, currency, and popular favour. Of this class—the most important—of his writings we may specify The Pretty Story, 1774; The Prophecy, 1776; The Political Catechism, 1777. But the collector of American History (a large class these collectors have now become!) must secure for his shelves, if he can, (which is more than doubtful,) The Miscellaneous Essays and Occasional Writings of Francis Hopkinson, Phila., pub. by Dobson, 1792, 3 vols. 8vo. A number of papers by Hopkinson will be found in Aitkin's Pennsylvania Magazine, and in Trans. Amer. Soc., iii. 183, 185, 239, 331. See Allen's Amer. Biog. Dict.; Lives of the Signers; Massachusetts Mag., iii. 750-783; Amer. Mus., iii. 165; ix. 39; Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit.; Notes on the Provincial Lit. of Penna., by Thomas I. Wharton, read at a Meeting of the Council of the Hist. Soc. of Penn., Sept. 21, 1825; Delaplaine's Repository; Works of John Adams; and other works of, and connected with, the Revolutionary times.

"A poet, a wit, a patriot, a chemist, a mathematician, and a judge of the admiralty; his character was composed of a happy union of qualities and endowments commonly supposed to be discordant; and, with the humour of Swift and Babelais, he was always found on the side of virtue and social order."—THOMAS I. WHARTON: ubi supra.

Hopkinson, Joseph, LL.D., 1770-1842, a native of Philadelphia, son of Francis Hopkinson, (ante) was educated at the University of Pennsylvania, and subsequently practised law, first at Easton and then in Philadelphia. From 1815 to 1819 he was a member of the national House of Representatives, and in 1828 was appointed, by President Adams, Judge of the District Court of the United States,—an office which he retained until his death. Both his father and grandfather had preceded him on the bench. The subject of our notice was Vice-President of the American Philosophical Society, and President of the Philadelphia Academy of Fine Arts. He was the author of the patriotic song of "Hail Columbia," written under circumstances pleasantly recorded by the author in a letter which will be found in Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America. See also a biographical notice of Judge Hopkinson—written by Francis Wharton, of Philadelphia—in Hunt's Merchant's Magazine, vii. 397. Horne, George, D.D., 1730-1792, an eminent divine of the Hutchinsonian school, was a native of Otham, near Maidstone, and educated at University College, Oxford; Fellow of Magdalen College, 1749, and President, 1768; Chaplain to the King, 1771; Vice-Chancellor of the Univ. of Oxford, 1776; Dean of Canterbury, 1781; Bishop of Norwich, 1790. He pub. a number of controversial treatises in favour of Hutchinson, and against Sir Isaac Newton, Adam Smith, Law, Hume, Shuckford, Kennicott, Halded, and Priestley; a Commentary on the Book of Psalms; Sermons, &c. His Letters on Infidelity, in which Hume's arguments are discussed, were pub. in 1784, 12mo. A collective ed. of his Works, with a Life, was pub. by his friend and chaplain, Wm. Jones, of Nayland, in 1795-99, 6 vols. 8vo; 1809, 6 vols. 8vo; 1812, 6 vols. 8vo; 1818, 6 vols. 8vo; last ed., 1820, 4 vols. 8vo. Of his Discourses, a 4th ed. was pub. in 1803-04, 5 vols. 8vo; other eds., 1812, 3 vols. 8vo; 1824, 3 vols. 8vo; new ed., 1831, 2 vols. 8vo; last ed., 1845, 2 vols. 8vo. Of the Commentary on the Psalms (1st ed., 1771, 2 vols. 4to) there have been many edits. Among the last are the one pub.

by Virtue, in 3 vols. 12mo, in 1836; the one in 2 vols. 12mo, pub. by the Lon. Soc. P. C. K. in 1848; and Longman's ed. in 1848, 8vo. See also Nisbet's ed. of Horne's Arrangement of the Psalms, Notes, and Comments, Pt. 1, 1850, p. 8vo. The Essay on Horne's Commentary, by James Montgomery, Esq., (prefixed to ed. in 2 vols., forming a portion of the Sacred Classics,) and the one by the Rev. Edward Irving, (prefixed to an ed. pub. in Glasgow in 3 vols. 12mo,) are doubtless well known to many of our readers. Irving's Essay has been highly commended. The Daily Communings, Spiritual and Devotional, on Select Portions of the Psalms, from Horne's Commentary, (2d ed., 64mo,) and the Selection by Lindley Murray, (1812, 8vo,) have met with warm approbation. The last-named comprises, says Dr. T. H. Horne, "the most striking, pathetic, and instructive parts of the Commentary." A vol. of Selections from the Commentary was pub. in 1832, 12mo. It is by his Discourses and Commentary on the Psalms that Bishop Horne will always be favourably known; and it will now be proper for us to adduce some opinions upon the merits and defects of these productions.

"Some of Bishop Horne's discourses are ingenious; but they contain more Hutchinsonianism, and less of evangelical sentiment, than might have been expected."—Orne's Bibl. Bib.

"Bishop Horne's views of preaching, not always (alas! such is our common infirmity!) fully illustrated by his own sermons, are instructive. . . . His sermons are polished, and have many beautiful and excellent thoughts; but they are wanting in the full declaration of justification by faith, and therefore meet not adequately the distresses of an awakened conscience. . . . His sermons are devotional and elegant. He and others of his school have brought some important truths before men who would not have listened to those writing more in the spirit of the Reformers."—Bickersteth's C. S.

"This writer seems to have had as much devotion and regard for the grand principles of Christianity as command respect; but few evangelical preachers, notwithstanding, would like to take him for a pattern."—Dr. E. Williams's C. P.

"The sacred discourses of the amiable Horne recommend the duties of that religion of which he was so bright an ornament, in a sweet and lively style."—Historical View of Eng. Lit.: Goodough's Eng. Genl's Lib. Man.

"His style is liquid, and often terse; his reflections grow naturally out of the sentiments of the passage on which he comments, and there breathes through the whole so much sympathy with the Psalmist in his humble views of himself and his exalted conceptions of Jehovah—there is such a heavenly, sweet frame of mind exhibited, so much spirituality, and such love for the Redeemer—as to render this commentary one of peculiar fitness for family reading."

"They evince an uncommon warmth of piety, and are calculated to produce it."—British Critic.

"Sensible, practical, and animated. He addresses himself more to the heart than is commonly done, and consequently his discourses are more calculated to answer the end of preaching. They are agreeably instructive and edifying, manifesting the pious and good heart of the writer."—Lon. Month. Rev.

Opinions on the Commentary on the Psalms :

"His Commentary on the Psalms is his capital performance, and the one by which he will be known so long as piety and elegant learning are loved in England. It is altogether a beautiful work. The preface is a masterpiece of composition and good sense. The exposition implies more learning and research than it displays; and the views of Christian doctrine contained in it are generally very correct. Perhaps he carries his applications to the Messiah, and his church occasionally rather far; but this is less hurtful than the opposite extreme, which has more generally been adopted."—Orne's Bibl. Bib.

"The variety and number of the editions of this learned and pious work sufficiently attest the very high estimation in which it is held; the critics of the day, however, when it first appeared, were of opinion that Bishop Horne applied too many of the Psalms to the Messiah."—Horne's Bibl. Bib.

"Horne's Commentary on the Book of Psalms is of use chiefly for its devotional tendency."—Williams's C. P.

"His Commentary on the Psalms has long been a refreshing and delightful companion in the Christian's retirement."—Bickersteth's C. S.

"It is a truly evangelical and most valuable work, generally commended and admired for the vein of spirituality and devotion which runs through it, as well as for the elegant taste displayed in the illustration of difficult passages. The author's design is to illustrate the historical sense of the Psalms as they relate to King David and the people of Israel; and to point out their application to the Messiah, to the Church, and to individuals as members of the Church."—Lowndes's Brit. Lib.

"A delightful amplification of the music of Zion, wherein every phrase is spiritualized, every prophetic and recondite meaning pointed out."—Grant's English Church.

Bishop Horne's description of a censurable style of preaching, too common even in our own days, has been already referred to in an extract from Bickersteth's Christian Student. The bishop's remarks are well worthy of quotation :

"To preach practical sermons, as they are called,—that is, sermons upon virtues and vices, without indicating those great Scripture truths of redemption, grace, &c., which alone incite and enable us to forsake sin and to follow after righteousness,—what is it but to put together the wheels and set the hands of a watch, forgetting the spring which is to make them all go?"

For further information respecting this excellent man, see his Life, by Jones; Encyc. Brit.; Sir Wm. Forbes's Life of Dr. Beattie; Boswell's Life of Johnson; Lon. Gent. Mag., vols. lxiii., lxiiii., lxvi. He was a friend of Dr. Johnson's, and penned a tribute to his memory, (in the Olla Podrida;) and Johnson's biographer has left on record an honourable testimony to the character of the subject of our notice :

"We [Johnson and Boswell] drank tea with Dr. Horne, late President of Magdalen College and Bishop of Norwich, of whose abilities in different respects the public has had eminent proofs, and the esteem annexed to whose character was increased by knowing him personally."—Voi supra.

Horne, Richard Henry, b. in London, 1803, was educated at Sandhurst College, in expectation of a military appointment in the East India Company's service. Disappointed in this hope, he entered the Mexican navy as a midshipman, and served in the war against Spain until the restoration of peace. He then returned to England by the way of the United States, and settled down as a London man of letters. In 1852 he emigrated to the gold-fields of Australia, and, after serving some time as Chief of the Mounted Police, now holds the office of Gold Commissioner,—an arduous proximity seldom enjoyed by poets; though we fear the author of the Exposition of the "False Medium" has had but little opportunity as yet of testing the value of the true "medium." Mr. Horne was married in 1847 to Miss Foggo, the daughter of the artist, and for some time afterwards enjoyed an enviable seclusion in a cottage near Finsbury. 1. Cosmo de Medici; an Historical Tragedy, 1837, 8vo. 2. The Death of Marlowe; a Tragedy, 1838, r. 8vo. 3. The Death Feteh. 4. Adventures of a London Doll, 16mo. 5. The Good-natured Bear; a Story for Children, 16mo. 6. Exposition of the False Medium, and Barriers excluding Men of Genius from the Public, 1838, p. 8vo. 7. The Poor Artist; or, Seven Eye-Sights and One Object, 12mo. 8. Gregory the Seventh; a Tragedy, 1840, 8vo. Prefixed is an Essay on Tragic Influence, which has been highly commended. It is said that Mr. Horne considers Gregory the Seventh to be his best dramatic production. 9. Life of Napoleon, 1841, 2 vols. r. 8vo; 500 illustrations. New ed., 1847. 10. Orion; an Epic Poem, 1843. Several edits., the first of which was pub. at a farthing,—a "price placed upon it as a sarcasm upon the low estimation into which epic poetry has fallen."

Three large editions were sold at a farthing per copy: the 4th ed. was raised to a shilling per copy, and the 5th to half a crown.

"It is said that one day, when the author was sitting in Mr. Miller's the publisher's shop, a boy came in, and shouted out in a nonchalant voice, 'A penny'orth of epics,' throwing a penny down on the counter."

Now, this anecdote may be true; therefore, it does not become us to deny it. We may be allowed, however, to remark, in passing, that it fits in as well as if it had been "made on purpose." A very elaborate and most eulogistic review of Orion will be found in Poe's Literati. We hope the reader has time to peruse it; certain it is that we have no space to quote it.

11. A New Spirit of the Age, 1844, 2 vols. p. 8vo. Partly written and edited by R. H. Horne. The 2d ed. contains Introductory Comments upon Certain Criticisms that had appeared on the work.

The volumes are illustrated with engravings on steel, from new and original portraits, of Dickens, Tennyson, Carlyle, Wordsworth, Talfourd, Browning, Southwood Smith, and Miss Martineau.

"In the biographical sketches the editor has carefully excluded all disagreeable personalities and all unwarrantable anecdotes. The criticism are entirely on abstract grounds. He may be often wrong, but it is with a clear conscience."—Editor's Preface.

We trust that our poet "worker" will return from the gold-fields of Australia with substantial evidences of something better than "dreams" as the employment of his exiled hours. Mr. Horne is also the author of an Introduction to Schlegel's Lectures on Dramatic Literature and Art, was the associate of Wordsworth, Leigh Hunt, Miss Barrett, and others, in the production of Chaucer Modernized, was for some time editor of the Monthly Repository, and has been a contributor to the Church of England Quarterly Review, the New Quarterly Review, and other periodicals. Among his essays in the Church of England Quarterly, we may instance those on Poetical Contrasts, and on Albertus Magnus; and, of those in the New Quarterly, it may be sufficient to name the article on Chinese Characteristics, and that on The Dramatic Mind of Europe.

Horne, Thomas Hartwell, D.D., h. Oct. 20, 1780, received the rudiments of a classical education between the years 1789 and '95 in the royal and ancient foundation of Christ's Hospital, where, for two years, he was contemporary with Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Having attained the rank of Deputy-Greellan, (the second highest class in the upper grammar-school,) he quitted Christ's Hospital at the age of fifteen years, having no opportunity of proceeding to the university. The eldest of six orphans, small of stature, and not robust, he was unfitted for any employment requiring physical strength; and eight years of his life were spent in the humble situation of a clerk to barristers. As he had a good deal of time at his command during the first five years of his career, he diligently improved himself by solitary study, and acquired an insight into the law of England, which he was afterwards enabled to turn to account in editing various law-books. The very narrow income which he received as a barrister's clerk early led Mr. Horne to direct his attention to literature as a means of support. His first publication was A Brief View of the Necessity and Truth of the Christian Revelation, written when he was only eighteen, and published in 1800, in his nineteenth year. The publication of this little manual led him to the diligent and prayerful study of the Scriptures, and eventually induced him to undertake the work by which he is best known in this country as well as in England, and, indeed, wherever the English language is spoken or read. We mean the Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. In the preface to this work, Mr. Horne states that it

"Originated in his own wants at an early period of life, when he stood in need of a guide to the reading of the Holy Scriptures, which would not only furnish him with a general introduction to them, but would also enable him to solve apparent contradictions, and to study the Bible with that attention which its importance demands."

At that time he "Had no friend to assist his studies or remove his doubts, nor any means of procuring critical works. At length a list of the more eminent foreign Biblical critics fell into his hands, and directed him to some of those sources of information which he was seeking. He then resolved to procure such of them as his very limited means would permit, with the desire, in the first instance, of satisfying his own mind on those topics which had perplexed him, and, ultimately, of laying before the public the result of his inquiries, should no treatise appear that might supersede such a publication."—Vol. i. Pref., pp. ix., x.

The idea thus conceived fifty-eight years ago has been steadily kept in view to the present time. The foundation and much of the subsequent composition of this work were laid, for the most part, in solitary midnight study. However much and variously he was engaged in literary toil for his daily bread, (as the subjoined list of his publications will attest,) the Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures was the first and chief object of his thoughts. The 1st edition of it appeared in 1818 in 3 vols. 8vo, which in subsequent editions were enlarged into five thick octavo volumes. It immediately took its station in literature as THE CLASS-BOOK for the study of the Scriptures in all the colleges and universities in the British dominions. The author has been spared to see the publication of the 10th edition in 1856,—thirty-eight years after the publication of the 1st edition,—and to receive increasing testimonies of its utility to all classes of readers, but especially to ministers and students for the ministry. From the very numerous critical testimonies in favour of this invaluable work, we select the following:

The first edition:

"Of all the works which of late years have been presented to the notice of the Biblical student, this is one of the most correct and useful. It is an encyclopædia of theological knowledge. It is a complete abridgment of many extensive treatises of the most celebrated divines both of our own and foreign countries: and it entitles its author to the gratitude and approbation of every lover of the sacred volume."—Classical Journal, Sept. 1819.

"This elaborate work reflects great credit on the learning and industry of its author, and is, upon the whole, well calculated to answer the purposes for which it was designed."—British Critic, June, 1819.

"It is saying much,—yet, as far as our knowledge of Biblical works extends, not too much,—to assert of these volumes, that they constitute the most important theological publication of their kind which has appeared in this or any other country for some years. . . . No well-assorted theological library can be long without it; and even those students in divinity whose pecuniary resources are too limited to admit of wanton expenditure would do well, on the score of economy, to include these volumes in their library."—Christian Observer, November, 1819.

"This work contains every information which the general reader of Scripture can possibly require: but to clergymen and to those who are preparing for the sacred office, it is an invaluable manual; and (what is no mean consideration) it is also a cheap one."—Literary Panorama, September, 1818.

"It is all it pretends to be, and even more, being written with a judicious perspicuity, and executed with a degree of correctness that we do not often witness."—Evangelical Magazine, Oct. 1818.

The second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth editions:

"Upon the whole, it is a very useful publication, and does great credit to the industry and researches of the indefatigable author."—Bishop Marsh's Lectures on the Criticism and Interpretation of the Bible, pp. 52, 53, ed. of 1828.

"I would advise the younger clergy, and candidates for Holy Orders, to acquaint themselves, in an early stage of their critical researches, with Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures; a work which in itself comprises a body of critical theology, and which introduces the reader to the best sources of information."—Bishop Job's Primary Charge to the Clergy of the Diocese of Lincoln, in 1823, p. 10, (Dublin, 1823.)

"T. Hartwell Horne has not only analyzed with extraordinary diligence all the principal writers on the Evidences of Christianity, but has supplied the defects of many of them, by enforcing those moral and religious considerations arising from the intrinsic excellency of Christianity and the responsibility of man, which, in the author's judgment, are so unspeakably important."—Bishop Wilson's (of Valcutt) Lectures on the Evidences of Christianity, vol. I., Pref., p. xiv.

"Such a monument of successful industry and luminous arrangement as the present age has seldom seen; a copious instruction for every young theologian, and an ample treasure of reminiscence to the most accomplished."—Archdeacon Nares's Visitation Sermon before the Archdeacon and Clergy of the City of London, in 1823, p. 24.

"So comprehensive and complete as quite to supersede many works that would otherwise have been necessary."—Bielert's Christian Student, p. 454, (London, 1829.)

"Great advantages may be derived from the repeated perusal of Horne's Introduction to the Critical Study of the Scriptures, in 4 vols. 8vo. . . . It contains much invaluable information respecting the ancient manuscripts and versions of the sacred books, the care with which they were preserved before the invention of printing, the manner in which they have been transmitted to our own times, together with a full view of Jewish Antiquities, and a suitable introduction to prepare the reader for entering on the study of each inspired book."—Gibbs's Directions for Searching the Scriptures, p. 38, (Edinburgh, 1828.)

"Read Hartwell Horne. This is an invaluable book for a young man; and you must not lay him aside till you have fully digested his admirable compilations, to guide you in more discursive reading hereafter."—Letter to a Young Man matriculating at the University: Domestic Pastors, &c., p. 128, (London, 8vo, 1835.)

"Every Biblical student may be congratulated on the opportunity which he possesses of acquiring, in these approved volumes, the most comprehensive digest of Biblical erudition extant in English Literature."—Lon. Eclectic Review, January, 1822.

"One of the most valuable works that exists in this or any other language."—Edinburgh Christian Instructor, May, 1833.

"Ouvrage important qui réunit de nombreux renseignements géographiques, historiques, bibliographiques, et critiques, relatifs à la littérature biblique."—BRUNET: Supplément au Manuel du Libraire, tom. II., p. 200, (Paris, 1834, 8vo.)

The seventh edition:

"It occurs well for the cause of Biblical Literature in this country, that edition after edition of this important and increasingly valuable work should so rapidly issue from the press. When the laborious and learned author entered the field, it was comparatively unoccupied; and now, after the lapse of fifteen years, notwithstanding all that has been done for promoting the critical study and knowledge of the Bible among us, he may still be said to occupy it unrivalled and alone. During the whole of that period he has evidently availed himself of every new source that has been opened, from which to derive improvements; diligently canvassed the pages both of domestic and foreign literature; re-examined authorities and quotations; and left no measure unemployed by which his work might receive that degree of perfection of which, from the nature of the circumstances, it was susceptible."—Congregational Magazine, September, 1834.

"A work which is beyond all contradiction the most valuable introduction to the Sacred Writings which has been ever published. It is a storehouse of Biblical learning; and we recommend it the more cordially to our readers, as it may be put into the hands of students with the most perfect safety."—Christian Remembrancer, October, 1834.

The eighth edition:

"It is needless that we should say any thing to commend such a publication. It is one of the first books which should be secured by the young minister; and the intelligent and reading of every class, ministers and laymen, will find ample reward in the perusal of its richly-stored pages."—Lon. Eclectic Review, April, 1839.

"These admirable volumes are too well known to require either description or recommendation: their character is now established, both as a standard work and as a complete encyclopedia of Biblical knowledge. . . . The publication of this new and improved edition will afford the opportunity to a number of persons, candidates for the ministry or otherwise, to become purchasers. Young ministers and students ought to possess it. Instead of that denutry and superficial reading, which imparts much less information than it seems to do, and leaves the mind undisciplined, they ought to lay before them (in connexion with suitable works in doctrinal theology) Mr. Horne's text-book of a vast subject, and diligently and patiently pursue the subject for two or three years. But we see no necessity for confining the work to ministers and ministerial students. . . . We recommend Mr. Horne's work as a family work, to which the youthful members may have access, and with which they may become thoroughly acquainted."—Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, March, 1839.

"In every theological library this work is indispensable. It contains a singular display of good sense and persevering industry, and is by far the most complete publication of the kind that ever issued from the British press, or perhaps in any language. There is scarcely a question relating to the study of the Holy Scriptures, which is not here discussed in an able and satisfactory manner. As long as a taste for sound Biblical Literature shall be cherished, this work will secure for its author the highest esteem and grateful respect."—Second Appendix to Dr. Williams's Christian Preacher, 5th edition, p. 355, (London, 1843.)

Ninth edition:

"Mr. Horne's great work has been too long before the public to need a formal introduction to the notice of either lay or clerical readers. The appearance of a ninth edition sufficiently attests the estimation in which it is deservedly held; nor do we hazard too much when we assert that it has undoubtedly raised the character of theological and Biblical literature throughout Christendom. There is, in fact, scarcely a single question relating to the study of the Scriptures, which Mr. Horne has not ably discussed and satisfactorily settled. His Introduction is one of those works with which Biblical students and candidates for Holy Orders cannot too soon make themselves thoroughly acquainted, and the acquisition of which they will never regret."—Church and State Gazette, 1846.

The 10th edition passed through the press in the same month as that in which this article was written, (Nov. 1856.) Our own obligations to this work in the preparation of this Dictionary will be best understood by the many references to the INTRODUCTION scattered through our pages; though these extracts, valuable as they are, do not fully express the amount of our indebtedness to this admirable repository of Biblical literature. The tone of Christian charity and gentlemanly courtesy, united with a zealous defence of what he believes to be sound doctrine, which distinguishes the criticisms of Dr. Horne, cannot escape the notice of the readers of the INTRODUCTION.

Besides the ten editions printed in England, Mr. Horne's work has been repeatedly reprinted in the United States, but without any pecuniary advantage to the author, in 2 vols. imp. 8vo, and also in 4 vols. 8vo, to the amount of many thousand copies; which, added to the aggregate number of 15,000 copies of the first nine London editions, exhibits an unprecedented sale for a work of this character; especially when the bulk and price are considered. This extensive circulation may be ascribed, in part at least, to the facts that the Introduction has throughout been the joint result of prayer and indefatigable study, regardless of expense in procuring the requisite critical aids, and that it is not a sectarian work. Christians of every denomination have studied it to their great advantage; and Mr. Horne, in the course of his long life (he is now in the 78th year of his age) has been permitted to receive not a few testimonies from persons who have been preserved or rescued from infidelity by his labours. Mr. Kennedy, the biographer of our distinguished countryman, William Wirt, states that

"To Horne's Introduction, particularly, he was accustomed to express his obligations for the conviction of his own mind; and he never lost an opportunity of commending it to a friend."

In his letters to his children, among other books on the subject of religion, he "Urged them to the careful perusal of Horne's Introduction to the Critical Study of the Scriptures."—Kennedy's Memoirs of W. Wirt, vol. II., p. 388.

It has, in fact, conduced more than any other modern work to the enlarged study of sacred literature; and eventually it led to the realization of Mr. Horne's long-cherished wish of devoting himself to the ministry in the Church of England. The death of his parents having prevented him from prosecuting his studies at either of the English universities, Dr. Howley, at that time Bishop of London, disregarded his want of an English academical degree, and, considering his Introduction as an appropriate and honourable passport to Holy Orders, ordained him in 1819. In the preceding year the University of King's College, Aberdeen, conferred on Mr. Horne the degree of M.A. In 1829 Mr. Horne performed the academical exercises required by the University Statutes, and proceeded to the degree of B.D. in the University of Cambridge; and in 1841 the University of Pennsylvania conferred upon Mr. H. the degree of D.D. In 1833 Dr. Howley (then Archbishop of Canterbury) presented him to the rectory of St. Edmund-the-King with St. Nicholas Acons, in the city of London, as a small token of his esteem for Mr. Horne's personal worth, and his sense of the services which Mr. H. had rendered by his works to the theological and Biblical student. Dr. Blomfield, Bishop of London, had previously collated him to the prebend of Smeating, in the Cathedral of St. Paul, as a mark of the esteem which the bishop entertained of the value of those services which Mr. Horne had rendered to the cause of Christianity by his different publications, especially his Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures. As the population of the United Parishes (of which Mr. H. is rector) is small, he has found time to produce many valuable publications, and also to keep up an extensive correspondence with literary men, and especially with those who are engaged in controversy with the advocates of the modern Church of Rome. Several of his publications were written primarily for the edification of his parishioners and their families, by whom they were gratefully received and acknowledged. It only remains to state, in concluding this notice of Mr. Horne's literary career, that in 1809 he was elected Sub-Librarian of the Surrey Institution, which office he held until the institution was dissolved for want of the requisite funds, in 1823. In 1824 he was applied to, and eventually engaged, by the then Trustees of the British Museum, to undertake a classed catalogue of that library. For their consideration, and by their desire, he drew up the Outlines for the Classification of a Library, which were printed in 1825. After very considerable progress had been made in that classed catalogue, it was suspended for a new General Alphabetical Catalogue, which is now in progress, and on which Mr. Horne is still employed as an Assistant Librarian. If that classed catalogue had been completed, it would, on a large scale, have been what Mr. Horne's valuable classed catalogue of Queen's College Library, Cambridge, is on a smaller scale. The following is a correct list of Mr. Horne's publications:

1. A Brief View of the Necessity and Truth of the Christian Revelation, Lon., 1800; 2d ed., 1802, 8vo.

2. A View of the Commerce of Greece, by Felix Beaujour; translated from the French, 1800, 8vo.

3. An Essay on Privateers, Captures, and Recaptures, according to the Laws, Treaties, and Usages of the Maritime Powers of Europe, by M. de Martens. To which is subjoined a Discourse, in which the Rights and Duties of Neutral Powers are briefly stated; translated from the French, 1801.

4. A Compendium of the Statute Laws and Regulations of the Court of Admiralty relative to Ships of War, Privateers, Prizes, Recaptures, and Prize-Money; with an Appendix of Precedents, 1803, 12mo.

5. Wallis's Pocket Itinerary; being a New and Accurate Guide to all the Principal, Direct, and Cross-Roads throughout England, Wales, and Scotland, 1803, 18mo. Anon.

6. A Treatise on Captures in War, by Richard Lee, Esq.; 2d ed., corrected, with additional Notes by Mr. Horne, 1803, 8vo.

7. Hints on the Formation and Management of Sunday-Schools, 1807, 12mo. Anon.

8. A Reading upon the Statute of Sewers, by Robert Callis, Sergeant-at-Law; 4th ed., corrected and enlarged by Mr. Horne, 1810, r. 8vo.

9. Bibliotheca Legum; or, a Complete Catalogue of the Common and Statute Law-Books of the United Kingdom, arranged in a new manner, by John Clarke. The materials were collected by the publisher, Mr. Clarke; but the whole were arranged, corrected, and edited by Mr. Horne, 1810, 8vo. See CLARKE, JOHN.

10. A Catalogue of the Library of the Surrey Institution, methodically arranged, 1811; 2d ed., 1812, 8vo. Anon.

11. A Catalogue of the Harleian Manuscripts in the British Museum, classed according to their Subject-Matter; forming the 4th vol. of the Catalogue of the Harleian Manuscripts, 1812, 8vo.

12. An Introduction to the Study of Bibliography; to which is prefixed a Memoir on the Public Libraries of the Antients, 1814, 2 vols. 8vo.

13. A Compendious Law Dictionary, by Thomas Potts; a new ed., carefully revised, corrected, and enlarged, by Mr. Horne, 1815, 8vo and 12mo.

14. An Illustrated Record of Important Events in the Annals of Europe during the years 1812, '13, '14, and '15, fol. Anon.

15. The Lakes of Lancashire, Westmoreland, and Cumberland, delineated in 43 Engravings after the Drawings of Joseph Farington, R.A.; with Descriptions, Historical, Topographical, and Picturesque, the result of a Tour made by T. H. Horne in the year 1816, 1816, fol.

16. The History of the Mohammedan Empire in Spain; designed as an Introduction to the Arabian Antiquities of Spain, by James Cavanagh Murphy, 1816, 4to. This volume was written in conjunction with John Gillies, LL.D., and Mr. Professor John Shakspear, of the East India College. One-half of this volume was contributed by Mr. Horne; who also edited Mr. Murphy's Arabian Antiquities of Spain, 1816, fol., Mr. M. having died without leaving any materials for the descriptions of the engravings.

17. An Analysis of the Picture of the Transfiguration, by Raffaello Sanzio d'Urbino; translated from the French of S. C. Croze-Maignan, by Mr. Horne, with the Remarks and Observations of Vasari, Mengs, Reynolds, Fuseli, and other distinguished artists, 1817, fol.

18. An Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, with Maps and Fac-Similes of Biblical Manuscripts, 1818, 3 vols. 8vo; 9th ed., revised, corrected, and enlarged, by Mr. Horne, 1846, 5 large vols. 8vo; 10th ed., by Mr. Horne, with the assistance of Samuel Davidson, D.D., LL.D., and of Samuel Prideaux Tregelles, LL.D., 1856, 4 vols. in 5, 8vo, (vide ante.) In the 10th ed., the valuable bibliographical volume of Mr. Horne has been necessarily (though on his part most reluctantly) omitted in order to make room for much new critical matter. Part of Mr. Horne's first volume, on the Internal Evidences of the Inspiration of the Scriptures, was translated into Romæic, or modern Greek, by Professor Nicholas Bambas, (afterwards of the University of Athens,) and published in 1834, at Hermopolis, in the island of Syra, and was largely circulated in Greece. The translation is entitled, Εσωτερικαί ενδειξεις της εμπνευστου των γραφων Θεωρια ωφελιμου-ατη εις παντα ανθρωπον, εκ της Αγγλικου μεταφρασσει υπο Ν. Βαυδα. Εν Ερμω-πολει, αιολδ.

19. Deism Refuted; or, Plain Reasons for being a Christian, Lon., 1819, 12mo. Reprinted at Philadelphia, 1820, 12mo; 6th ed., Lon., 1826, 12mo. This little volume, with Mr. Horne's permission, contributed five tracts to the series published by the London Religious Tract Society, viz.: Nos. 316, 318, 319, 321, and 701.

20. The Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity briefly stated and defended, and the Church of England vindicated from the charge of Uncharitableness in retaining the Athanasian Creed, 1820; 2d ed., corrected, 1826, 12mo.

21. Commentaries on the Roman-Dutch Law, by Simon van Leeuwen, LL.D.; translated from the Dutch by a Cingalese Modellan, or Native Magistrate; collated throughout with Van Leeuwen's Censura Forensis, and edited, with numerous additional references to the Text Books on the Roman Civil Law, by Mr. Horne, 1820, r. 8vo. Nearly the whole edition of this work was sent to the island of Ceylon, where it is of the highest authority.

22. The Works of William Hogarth, (including the Analysis of Beauty,) elucidated by Descriptions, critical, moral, and historical; to which is prefixed Some Account of his Life, by Mr. Horne. The engravings were executed by Thomas Clerk, an engraver at Edinburgh, 1821, 2 vols. 8vo.

23. Outlines for the Classification of a Library, respectfully submitted to the consideration of the Trustees of the British Museum, by Mr. Horne, 1825, 4to.

24. A Catalogue of the Library of the College of St. Bernard and St. Margaret, commonly called Queen's College, in the University of Cambridge; methodically arranged, 1827, 2 vols. r. 8vo. This catalogue is classified according to the principles and order developed in the preceding Outlines for the Classification of a Library.

25. Romanism contradictory to the Bible; or, the Peculiar Tenets of the Church of Rome, as exhibited in her accredited Formularies, contrasted with the Holy Scriptures, Lon., 1827, 8vo. Translated into Spanish by the Rev. W. H. Rule, and printed at Gibraltar in 1840.

26. A Compendious Introduction to the Study of the Bible; being an Analysis of the Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, Lon., 1827, 12mo. Reprinted at Boston, Mass., 1827, 12mo; 9th ed., 1852, 12mo. This is an abridgment of Mr. Horne's larger Introduction.

27. A Manual of Parochial Psalmody, adapted to the services of the Church for every Sunday, &c. throughout the Year, Lon., 1829; 40th ed., 1856, 18mo; also eds. in 12mo and 32mo.

28. A Selection (by Mr. Horne) of Psalm and Hymn-Tunes, by the Best Composers, antient and modern; the whole harmonized and arranged for the Manual of Parochial Psalmody, by Thomas Henshaw, 1829. New ed., 1852, ob. 8vo.

29. The Conversion of St. Paul a Proof of the Truth of the Christian Revelation, 1831, 8vo. An anonymous Tract, written for the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

30. A Manual for the Afflicted; comprising a Practical Essay on Afflictions, and a Series of Meditations and Prayers for those who are in sorrow, trouble, need, sickness, or any other adversity, 1832; 3d ed., 1842, 18mo. Reprinted at Boston, Mass., 1833, 18mo.

31. Bibliographical Notes on the Book of Jasher, Lon., 1833, 8vo. This detection of a gross literary forgery was subsequently incorporated in the fifth or bibliographical volume of the Introduction to the Critical Study of the Scriptures.

32. A Concise History and Analysis of the Athanasian Creed, with Select Scripture Proofs, and answers to some common objections, 1834; 2d ed., 1837, 18mo.

33. A Protestant Memorial; comprising—I. A Concise Historical Sketch of the Reformation; II. The Antiquity of the Religion of Protestants Demonstrated; III. The Safety of adhering to the Protestant Church, and the Danger of continuing in the Church of Rome; IV. Romanism, or the System of Doctrine and Precepts maintained and inculcated by the Church of Rome, contradictory to the Bible, 1835; 10th ed., enlarged, 1850, 12mo.

34. Landscape Illustrations of the Bible; from Original Sketches taken on the Spot and engraved by W. and E. Finden, with Descriptions by Mr. Horne, 1836, 2 vols. 8vo, and fol. The Biblical Keepsake; a new ed. of the preceding work, with additions and corrections, 1835-37, 3 vols. 8vo.

35. A Manual of Biblical Bibliography, 1839, 8vo. This is a separate edition of the fifth or bibliographical volume of the eighth edition of Mr. Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures; it was published by request, for the accommodation of bookbuyers and booksellers.

36. The Principles of Popery Developed, in a juridical and historical investigation of the Gunpowder-Conspiracy; reprinted from the Church of England Quarterly Review, 1840, 8vo. Anon.

37. Mariolatry; or, Facts and Evidences demonstrating the Worship of the Virgin Mary by the Church of Rome, 1840, 8vo. Anon. Reprinted, with additions and corrections furnished by Mr. Horne to the American editor, the Rev. S. F. Jarvis, D.D., Hartford, Conn., 1844, 8vo.

39. Popery the Enemy and Falsifier of Scripture; or, Facts and Evidences illustrative of the conduct of the Modern Church of Rome, in prohibiting the Reading and Circulation of the Holy Scriptures in the Vulgar Tongue, and also of the Falsification of the Sacred Text in Translations executed by Romanists, 1844, 8vo. Anon. 2d ed., corrected and enlarged, 1845, 18mo.

40. Popery Delineated; or, a Brief Examination and Confutation of the Unscriptural and Anti-Scriptural Doctrines and Practices maintained and inculcated by the Modern Church of Rome, 1848, 8vo. Anon.

41. The Communicant's Companion; comprising an Historical Essay on the Lord's Supper, with Meditations and Prayers for the use of Communicants, 1855, 32mo.

Besides numerous sermons communicated to different journals, Mr. Horne has also published the following single sermons on various public occasions:

42. The Conformity of the Church of England, in her Ministry, Doctrine, and Liturgy, to the Apostolic Precept and Pattern; to which is added an Address on the Origin and Use of Confessions of Faith generally, and of the Confession of Faith of the United Church of England and Ireland in particular, 1834; 3d ed., corrected and enlarged, 1855, 8vo.

43. Jewish and Christian Privileges Compared; Christian Diligence; Patriotism a Religious Duty; Three Sermons preached before the Lord-Mayor, Judges, and Members of the Corporation of the City of London, in the year 1837, 1837, 4to.

44. The Sovereign's Prayer and the People's Duty; a Sermon on occasion of the Coronation of Queen Victoria, 1838, 8vo.

45. National Piety and National Prosperity inseparably connected; a Fast-Day Sermon, delivered April 26, 1854, 1854, 8vo.

Dr. Horne has further contributed numerous Historico-Ecclesiastical and Literary Articles to the Encyclopedia Metropolitana; and also many articles to critical journals, exposing the Principles, Doctrines, and Practices of the Modern Church of Rome.

When the character, the number, and the extensive circulation of Dr. Horne's works are duly considered, we shall hardly be accused of exaggeration when we express our conviction that a more useful uninspired writer has seldom appeared among men. The influence of his excellent Introduction to the Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures (to instance only the most important of his works) has now for a period of nearly forty years directed the instructions and moulded the lives of thousands of the clergy and hundreds of thousands of the laity of two hemispheres. He has now attained the ripe age of seventy-eight. May he live to see the publication of this Dictionary, in the progress of which kindred pursuits and an expansive benevolence of heart have led him to take a lively interest. He was one of our earliest guides in Bibliography; we very naturally wish him to behold the matured fruits of our anxious toils.

Horneck, Anthony, D.D., 1641-1696, a native of Bacharach, in the Lower Palatinate, studied at Heidelberg, and was entered at Queen's Coll., Oxf., 1663; Vicar of All-Saints, Oxf., 1663; became Prob. of Exeter, and subsequently of Westminster and Wells; Preacher in the Savoy, 1671. He was a man of great piety and profound learning. He was the author of a number of sermons, and theolog. treatises, of which the following are the best-known: 1. The Great Law of Consideration, Lon., 1677, 8vo; 11th ed., 1729, 8vo. New ed., 1840, 8vo.

"Devout and edifying."—Bickersteth's C. S.

"Devotional."—Bickersteth's C. S.
"His best pieces are those upon Consideration and the Crucified Jesus."—DR. DODDRIDGE.

6. Several Sermons on Matt. v., 1706, 2 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1717, 2 vols. 8vo. Pub. by Bishop Kidder, (of Bath and Wells,) who has prefixed a Memoir. The bishop remarks, referring to the works of Horneck which were pub. by the author:

"There is a great vein of piety and devotion which runs through them; they savour of the primitive simplicity and zeal, and are well fitted to make men better."

Dr. T. H. Horne tells us that
"The bishop's character of the writings published by himself [Horneck] is equally applicable to his Sermons on Matt. v."—Bibl. Bib.

Horneck's Works are also commended by another eminent authority as "Exceedingly pathetic and elegant; chiefly fit for devotional subjects; his words are often much greater than his thoughts."—DR. DODDRIDGE.

Horneck, Wm. Modern Fortification, Lon., 1738, 4to.

Horner, Francis, M.P., 1778-1817, a native of Edinburgh, educated at the High School, and at the University of that city, subsequently studied law, and became a member of Parliament, where he distinguished himself by his knowledge of political economy and finance. Having injured his constitution by excessive labour in the discharge of his duties as a member of the Bullion Committee, and in other capacities, he was obliged to travel on the Continent for the benefit of his health; but his unfavourable symptoms increased, and he died at Pisa, Feb. 8, 1817, in the 38th year of his age. A statue has been erected to his memory in Westminster Abbey. As the author of the first part of the Bullion Report of 1810, (the second part was penned by Mr. Huskisson and the third by Henry Thornton,) Mr. Horner is entitled to a high rank as a political economist. But he was more than this; he was a diligent student of intellectual philosophy, a man of great elevation of character, and unblemished purity in private life. His views on the Currency, which he subsequently embodied in the Report of the Bullion Committee, will be found in the first number of the Edinburgh Review, in his Review of Thornton on the Paper Credit of Great Britain. Of this periodical he was one of the originators. His Memoirs and Correspondence were pub. by his brother, Leonard Horner, in 1843, Lon., 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., with addits., 1853, 2 vols. 8vo; Boston, by Little, Brown & Co., 1853, 2 vols. 8vo. We could quote many pages of commendation from high authorities of Mr. Horner's character as a man and statesman, but must be satisfied with referring the reader to the Memoirs of Sir Samuel Romilly, 1840, 3 vols.; Sir Archibald Alison's Hist. of Europe, 1789-1815; Lord Brougham's Statesmen temp. Geo. III., Lon., 1856, ii. 155-166; Works of Sir James Mackintosh, 1854, i. 214-215, n.; Works of the Rev. Sydney Smith, 1854, iii. 473-477, (Letter to Leonard Horner;) Lord Cockburn's Memorial of his Own Time, 1856; Dugald Stewart's Prelim. Dissert. on Eny. Brit.; Chambers and Thomson's Diet. of Eminent Scotsmen, 1855, iii. 86-90; McCulloch's Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1845, 173, 297; Edin. Rev., lxxviii. 261; Lon. Quar. Rev., June, 1827, lxxii. 108; Eccl. Rev., 4th Ser., xiii. 506; Blackw. Mag., i. 3; xvii. 515; xl. 114; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1825, Pt. 1, 503; 1843, 3; N. York Eccl. Mus., iii. 536. But we feel unwilling to conclude without quoting some testimonies to the eminent merits of Francis Horner:

"I remember the death of many eminent Englishmen; but I can safely say I never remember an impression so general as that excited by the death of Francis Horner."—REV. SVINNEY SMITH: ubi supra.

"The tears of those to whom he was unknown were shed over him. . . He raised himself, at the early age of thirty-six, to a moral authority which, without these qualities, no brilliancy of talents or power of reasoning could have acquired. No eminent speaker of Parliament owed so much of his success to his moral character. His high place was therefore honourable to his audience and to his country."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: ubi supra.

"He died at the age of thirty-eight; possessed of greater public influence than any other private man, and admired, beloved, trusted, and deplored, by all except the heartless or the base. No greater homage was ever paid in Parliament to any deceased member."—LORD COCKBURN: ubi supra.

"Considering his knowledge, his talents, his excellent judgment, and the prospect of years which he had before him, I consider his death as a great public calamity."—SIR SAMUEL THOMLEY: ubi supra.

"Mr. Horner, whose premature and lamented death alone prevented him from rising to the highest eminence on the opposition side."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: ubi supra.

"Never certainly was more completely realized the ideal portrait so nobly imagined by the Roman poet: a calm devotion to reason and justice, the sanctuary of the heart undified, and a breast glowing with inborn honour.

"Compositus ius fasque animo, sanctesque recessus Mentis, et incoctum generoso pectus honesto."

DEGLIN STEWART: ubi supra.

"But this able, accomplished, and excellent person was now approaching the term assigned to his useful and honourable course by the mysterious dispensations under which the world is ruled. A complication of extraordinary maladies soon afterwards (after the Parliamentary session of 1816) precluded all further exertion, and, first confining his attention to the care of his health, before a year was over from the date of his last brilliant display, brought him, deeply and universally lamented, to an untimely grave.

"Ostendit terris hunc tantum fata, neque ultra
Esse sinent. Nium hunc vobis Romana propago
Visa poleus, Superi, propria hrec sibi dno fuisset."

Horrox, Jeremiah, 1619-1641, an eminent English astronomer, a native of Toxteth, near Liverpool, was educated at Emanuel College, and subsequently (as Mr. Rigaud has recently discovered) took holy orders and became a curate at Hoole, near Preston.

"He was the first who saw Venus in the body of the sun, (Nov. 24, 1639.) and he was the first who remarked that the lunar motions might be represented by supposing an elliptic orbit, provided that the eccentricity of the ellipse were made to vary, and an oscillatory motion given to the line of apsides. Newton afterwards showed that both suppositions were consequences of the theory of gravitation, and attributes to Halley part of what is really due to Horrox, as explained by Flamsteed."

Horrox's investigations—remarks the reviewer of Rigaud's Historical Essay on the First Publication of Sir Isaac Newton's Principia, 1838, 8vo—

"Are all stamped with the clear indications of a genius of the first order; and he doubtless would have achieved far greater discoveries had not his privations and successes, his trials and triumphs, been together cut short by his premature death in 1641."—Edin. Rev., lxxviii. 492-498: Sir Isaac Newton and his Contemporaries.

"There is reason to ascribe an invention of great importance, though not perhaps of extreme difficulty, that of the micrometer, to Horrox."—Hullam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1851, II. 195.

"Horrox has the merit of being among the first who rightly appreciated the discoveries of the astronomer just named. Kepler."—PROFESSOR PLAYFAIR: 3d Prelim. Dissert. to En cyc. Brit.

It is not a little to Horrox's credit, that, whilst the astronomical tables of the day—even his master Kepler's (founded on the observations of Tycho Brahe)—were incorrect in their calculations respecting the time of the transit of Venus, the young astronomer himself foretold the time very accurately. 1. Horsley, John, 1685-1731, an eminent antiquary, a native of Mid-Lothian, of a Northumberland family, was pastor of a dissenting congregation at Morpeth. Britannia Romana; or, the Roman Antiquities of Britain; 18 three Books, Lon., 1732, fol. An analysis of this truly valuable work will be found in Savage's Librarian. Sir P. Thompson's copy was sold for £13 3s., and Willett's for £14; Heath's, large paper, for £28 17s. 6d., and Constable's, large paper, for £35 10s. These are the highest prices with which we are acquainted. Horsley left a number of unfinished works in MS.; some letters of his, addressed to Roger Gale, dated 1729, will be found in Hutchinson's View of Northumberland. See Life of Horsley, by Rev. John Hodgson; Chambers and Thomson's Biog. Diet. of Eminent Scotsmen; Nichols's Lit. Anec.

Horsley, John. Longitude at Sea; Phil. Trans., 1764. Horsley, Samuel, LL.D., 1733-1806, a native of London, was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge; Curate to his father, who was Rector of Newington Butts, 1758; Rector of Newington Butts, 1759; Secretary of the Royal Society, 1773; Rector of Aldbury, Surrey, 1774; Preb. of St. Paul's, 1777; Archdeacon of St. Alban's, 1780; Rector of Southwold, Essex, 1782; Preb. of Gloucester, 1787; Bishop of St. David's, 1788; trans. to Rochester, with the Deanery of Westminster, 1793; trans. to St. Asaph, resigning the Deanery of Westminster, 1802. He was a man of profound learning and strong intellectual powers, dictatorial in controversy, but most benevolent in heart. He was a useful member of the Royal Society, and made considerable attainments in mathematics, the classics, natural philosophy, and astronomy. A number of his astronomical, mathematical, and other papers will be found in Phil. Trans., 1767-76. His name is best known in connexion with his controversy with Dr. Priestley respecting the faith of the Primitive Christians concerning the nature of Christ. In his (1.) History of the Corruptions of Christianity, pub. in 1782, 2 vols. 8vo, the former placed at the head of these both Trinitarianism and Arianism; contending that the Socinian doctrine of the mere humanity of Christ was the unanimous faith of the first believers. This position was combated by Horsley, in his Charge of May 22, 1783, pub. 1783, 4to. Priestley replied in his Letters to Dr. Horsley, 1783, 8vo; and thus the war was fairly commenced. For further information on this head, the reader is referred to the authorities cited below: Horsley's Tracts in Controversy with Dr. Priestley, 3d ed., with Notes and Appendix by Rev. Heneage Horsley, Dundee, 1812, 8vo; and to Priestley's Tracts in Controversy with Bishop Horsley, with Notes by the Editor, and an Appendix, containing a Review of the Controversy, Lon., 1815, 8vo.

"The tracts which he published in controversy with Dr. Priestley are written with consummate ability, and demonstrate the literary deficiencies of his bold antagonist."—Dr. E. Williams's C. P.

"In his controversy with Dr. Priestley, Bishop Horsley had a manifest advantage (as is now pretty generally acknowledged) both in learning and argument."—Edin. Rev., xvii, 467, q. v.

"The severest castigation which a rash and arrogant invader of another's province ever received."

"Horsley's productions in this controversy will be read as standard works, and admired as models of clear and powerful reasoning. They show a strong and energetic mind, rich in various learning, trained in logical precision, quick in perceiving the fallacies of his opponent and skilful in refuting them."—Lon. Quar. Rev., iii, 399-400, q. v.

"Horsley was the militant of the last generation, Herbert Marsh of the present."—Southey's Life and Correspondence.

5. Complete Edition of the Works of Sir Isaac Newton, under the title of Isaac Newtoni Opera quae extant omnia Commentariis, illustrata Samuel Horsley, LL.D., 1779-85, 5 vols. 4to.

"A work requiring the exertion of uncommon talents, and accompanied with difficulties which Dr. Horsley was by no means prepared to overcome. Indeed, we know of no literary project, even in this day of literary adventure, of which the failure has been more complete."—PROFESSOR PLAYFAIR: Edin. Rev., iv, 258-259.

6. On the Prosodies of the Greek and Latin Languages, 1796, 8vo. Anon. A work of great merit.

"A work full of erudition, and much esteemed."—Watt's Bibl. Brit.

"In classical acquirements, and in a critical knowledge of the languages in which the sacred books were originally written, he stood in the very first rank of excellence."—Edin. Rev., xvii, 466.

7. Critical Disquisitions on the 18th Chapter of Isaiah; in a Letter to Edward King, Esq., 1796, 1801, 4to. Also in Biblical Criticism, i, 229. 8. Hosea; trans. from the Hebrew, with Notes, Explan. and Crit., 1801, 4to; 1804, 4to. Also in Biblical Criticism, with the exception of the serm. on, 1 Pet. iii., which is in the ed. of 1804.

"This is one of the ablest pieces of criticism on a portion of Scripture in the English language. The preface is admirably written, and contains the soundest principles of Biblical interpretation, as well as excellent views of the particular book to which it is prefixed. The version is nervous, and often characteristic of the translator's mind, as well as of the prophet's style. The critical notes display great knowledge of Hebrew, though occasionally they discover that Horsley was partial to novelty and paradox, and in some degree influenced by his Hutchinsonian predilections. Few books are more worthy of the attention of the Biblical scholar."—Horne's Bibl. Bib.

"The preface contains a treasure of Biblical criticism."—Horne's Bibl. Bib.

"Critical and illustrative."—Bickersteth's C. S.

"This translation, with its notes, forms a most valuable accession to sound learning; and evinces at once the best qualities of the scholar and the divine, supported by sagacity and a powerful judgment."—British Critic. O. S., xix, 176.

9. Elementary Treatises on the Fundamental Principles of Practical Mathematics; for the use of Students, Oxf., 1801, 8vo. 10. Euclidis Elementorum Libri Priores XII, &c., 1802, 8vo. 11. Euclidis Datorum Liber, cum additamentis, &c., 1803, 8vo.

"He certainly possessed competent information and respectable acquirements in mathematics. . . His edition of Euclid's Elements and Data, and his treatise on the elementary parts of plain mathematics, are prepared with perspicuity and neatness."—Lon. Quar. Rev., iii, 399.

"In the mathematical and physical sciences, if he stood not in the first rank, he held at least a very respectable station."—Edin. Rev., xvii, 466.

But Nos. 10 and 11 are reviewed with considerable severity by Professor Playfair, in Edin. Rev., iv, 257-272. In fact, the ostentatious preface of the bishop aroused vigilance and sharpened criticism. 12. A Critical Essay on Virgil's Two Seasons of Honey, and his Seasons of Sowing Wheat, &c., Lon., 1805, 4to. See No. 6. 13. Sermons, Dundee, 3 vols. 8vo: i. and ii., 1810; iii., 1812; vol. ii., 3d ed., 1812; iii., 2d ed., 1813. To these is to be added a 4th vol., Lon., 1815, 8vo, containing 9 Sermons, on our Lord's Resurrection, and a Dissert. on the Prophecies of the Messiah, &c. The above vols. were repub. in 2 vols. in 1824, and again in 1829, (including the nine sermons on the Resurrection, and the Dissert. on the Prophecies of the Messiah, &c.; 3d ed., Lon., 1822, 8vo;) in all, 4 vols. in 2. This last ed., 1829, 2 vols. 8vo, is the first complete ed. of Horsley's Sermons; again, 1843, 8vo; 1847, 8vo; and in collective ed. of his Theolog. Works, 1845, (vide post.)

"His sermons are fine specimens of commanding eloquence, and contain many deep and original views of Scripture facts and prophecies."—Dr. E. Williams's C. P.

"Much original, deep, devout, and evangelical matter, with much that is bold, hazardous, speculative, and rash. . . Bishop Horsley's powers of mind were of a high order; and his sermons and his other works will render assistance to the student chiefly in the way of criticism. He had the integrity and candour to speak decidedly against the ignorance of many who opposed what they called Calvinistic views."—Bickersteth's C. S.

"Ordinary readers, moderately conversant with the Bible, and with the theory and practice of their religion, may derive more advantage from these discourses than from any volumes of sermons which have issued from the press for the last fifty years."—Edin. Rev.

"With very few exceptions, of the critical and explanatory cast, consisting of disquisitions on points of abstruse and difficult investigation. They are not suited to the taste of general readers, but adapted almost exclusively to those 'whose stomachs,' to use the author's own expression, 'are qualified for the digestion of strong meats; and whose turn of mind has habituated them to critical discussion and inquiry. We perceive, in almost every part, the mind of Horsley at work."—Lon. Quar. Rev., (on vols. i. and ii., 1810.) iii, 398-407, q. v.

"This is a posthumous work, and far inferior in merit and importance to the former. [Horse: see No. 8.] Not above half the Psalms are translated. On the greater number there are no notes, and these for the most part are short and imperfect. Most of the Psalms the bishop applies to the Messiah, in which he merely follows the doctrines of Hutchinson. As Horsley never wrote what did not deserve to be read, even his fragments and hints are calculated to be of service to the student of the Bible; though such a work as this on the Psalms would never have been published by the learned prelate himself."—*Orme's Bib. "The remarks made on the Psalms [see No. 16] are quite as applicable to all that is in these volumes. As a critic, Horsley was learned, but dogmatic. Hosmer, William Henry Cuyler, b. 1814, at Avon, Western New York, was educated at the Temple Hill Academy at Geneseo, and at Geneva College. He was engaged in the practice of the law at Avon until 1854, when he removed to the city of New York, where he holds an office in the Custom-House.

Mr. Hosmer became an author at a very early age,—his muse finding congenial themes in the legends, customs, and superstitions of the North American Indians, with which he was familiar from his childhood. The following chronological list of his productions is extracted from a work to which (as to the other vols. by the same author) the student of American Letters must have frequent reference.—Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America:

"In 1830 he composed a drama entitled The Hall of Tecumseh. His first publication, except contributions to the journals and magazines, was The Themes of Song, containing about six hundred and fifty lines; this appeared in 1834, and was followed by The Pioneers of Western New York, in 1838; The Prospects of the Age, in 1841; Yonnonqui, or The Warriors of the Genesee, in 1844; The Months, in 1847; Bird Notes; Legends of the Senecas; and Indian Traditions and Songs, in 1850; and a complete edition of his Poetical Works, in two volumes, in 1853."

Dr. Griswold commends Mr. Hosmer's poetry in very high terms. After some eulogistic comments upon "the longest, if not the most important, of his productions," the critic continues:

"To such poems, however, [those relating to the Indians,] most readers will be apt to prefer the simpler effusions in which he has echoed the Notes of the Birds, or painted the varying phenomena of the Months. In these, too, he has faithfully subjected his muse to the requirements of truth. He accomplishes his task of description by felicities in selection and combination from nature. An ADDISON or a MICHAUX would search in vain for an error in his plumage or foliage, and a COLE might give the finishing touches to the lights and shadows of his landscapes, from the poet's observation of atmospheric effects or the changing influence of the seasons." This is an authentic and a most valuable work. In the Appendix will be found The Acts and Decrees of the Synod of Diampur, &c.

Hough, John, D.D., 1651-1743, a native of Middlesex, educated at, and Fellow of, Magdalene College, Oxford, was elected President of his college in 1687, in contempt of the arbitrary mandamus of James II., who illegally attempted to force the Fellows to elect Anthony Farmer head of the college. The king hereupon sent a mandate to the Fellows to elect Dr. Samuel Parker, Bishop of Oxford, a Roman Catholic, President of the college. Upon the refusal of the Fellows, Lords-Commissioners were sent to Magdalene, who were stoutly confronted by Hough and twenty-six of the twenty-eight Fellows of the College, and the keys retained by the former, who boldly protested against the illegal proceedings. The Commissioners then forced open the door of the President's lodgings, and placed Dr. Parker in Hough's place.

"The nation, as well as the university, looked on all this proceeding with a just indignation. It was thought an open piece of robbery and burglary, when men authorized by no legal commission came forcibly and turned men out of their possession and freeholds."—BISHOP BURNET.

"Hough maintained his own rights and those of his college with equal decorum and firmness."—Sir James Macintosh's Review of the Causes of the Revolution of 1688: Works, ii. 157, Lon., 1854.

"The protest of Hough was everywhere applauded: the forcing of his door was everywhere mentioned with abhorrence."—T. B. Macaulay's Hist. of Eng., vol. ii., 1849.

This occurred in October, 1687; and in the end of September of the following year, James II.—now alarmed for the safety of his crown—took measures by which Hough and his expelled Fellows and Demies were restored. After the Revolution, Hough was, in April, 1690, made Bishop of Oxford; in 1699 he succeeded Dr. William Lloyd, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry; in 1715, on the death of Tenison, he declined the Archbishopric of Canterbury, but in 1717 he became Bishop of Worcester. For further information respecting this excellent man, the reader is referred to the histories of England; John E. Wilmot's Life and Correspondence of Bishop Hough, Lon., 1812, r. 4to; and to the life prefixed to Bishop Hough's Sermons and Charges, by Wm. Russell, Oxford, 1821, 8vo. During the bishop's life he pub. eight occasional sermons, 1701, '02, '04, '05, '09, '12, '15, all in 4to. Mr. Russell's collection contains four charges and nine sermons, but neither of the above sermons, at which we somewhat marvel. Hough left strict orders that none of his MS. sermons should be pub. after his death.

"He is furnished with a large stock of learning and piety. He has turned over the Fathers with great curiosity and pains, and paid a venerable respect to their ashes; and, as he is a Philate of remarkable piety and learning, so he is a Hero of great temper and courage. This was seen in his resolute defending the rights of Magdalene College: for this noble service he is justly rewarded with the See of Lichfield and Coventry. Those whose actions are eminently pious, and brave will like this worthy champion, be eminent in place and person."—JOHN DEXTER: Life and Errors.

He composed Annales in Latin, commencing at the year 731, where Bede left off, and continued to the third year of King John, 1202. The Annales were first pub. by Sir Henry Savile, in the Scriptores post Bedam, Lon., 1595, fol., and reprinted at Frankfurt, in two books, 1601, fol. A new ed., by T. Riley, pub. in Bohn's Antiq. Lib., vols. xx., xxiii., 1853. Vossius says that he wrote also a history of the Northumbrian kings, and a life of Thomas à Becket.

"If we consider his diligence, his knowledge of antiquity, and his religious strictness of veracity, he may be considered as having surpassed not only the rude historians of the preceding ages, but even what could have been expected of himself. If to that fidelity, which is the first quality of a historian, he had joined a little more elegance of Latin style, he might have stood the first among the authors of that class."—LELAND.

Howard, Henry, Earl of Surrey, 1518?–1547, one of the most eminent of English poets, was the third son of Thomas, Earl of Surrey, and third Duke of Norfolk, by his second duchess, Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham. In his early youth he was a companion at Windsor Castle to Henry Fitzroy,

Duke of Richmond, Henry VIII.'s natural son; and he subsequently accompanied his friend to Cardinal College, now Christ Church, Oxford. In 1535 he was married to the Lady Frances Vere, in 1512 served in the army under his father in Scotland, and in 1544 was appointed Field-Marshal of the English army on the Continent. He did good service at the sieges of Landreay and Boulogne, and, by his valour, skill, and accomplishments, secured a degree of popular favour which excited the jealousy of the king and the Earl of Hertford, the king's brother, and thus proved his ruin. In 1546 he was ordered to return from the Continent, made a prisoner on his arrival in England, convicted of high treason on the most absurd pretences, and beheaded on Tower Hill, January 19, 1547. He left two sons and three daughters to mourn his untimely and melancholy end. Much obscurity rests upon his adventures as a romantic traveller and poetical lover, and until recently but little was known of the far-famed lady to whom he indited the most celebrated of his effusions; but "It seems to be now ascertained, after sweeping away a host of foolish legends and traditional prejudices, that the Geraldine of Surrey, Lady Elizabeth Fitzgerald, was a child of thirteen, for whom his passion, if such it is to be called, began several years after his own marriage. But, in fact, there is more of the conventional tone of amorous song than of real emotion in Surrey's poetry. The are not like the deep sorrows of Petrarch or the fiery transports of the Castilians."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1854, i. 426.

The passion, if such we are to call it, for "The Fair Geraldine" commenced in 1541, or six years after his marriage to Lady Frances Vere. Geraldine, the daughter of Gerald Fitzgerald, Earl of Kildare, (most probably the Lady Elizabeth,) was born in 1528. She became the third wife of Edward Clinton, Earl of Lincoln. Those who desire to enter more deeply into this subject and the details of our noble author's life, and the characteristics of his poetry, will find ample materials for their investigations in the authorities cited in the course of this article. 1. The Songs and Sonnettes of Henry, Earle of Surrey, and others, (Sir Thomas Wyatt, &c.) were printed (1st edit.) by R. Tottel, Lon., 1557, 16mo, and sm. 4to. Other edits. 2. Songs and Sonnets, 1565, 16mo. 3. Songs and Sonnettes, 1567. Considered the most correct of the early edits. 4. 1569. 5. 1574. 6. Songs and Sonets, by Surrey and others, 1585, 16mo. 7. Poems, 1587, 16mo. 8. Poems of Surrey, Wyatt, and others, with Memoirs of his life and Writings, 1717, 8vo. Dr. Sewell, the editor and biographer, did not understand the language of his author, and has therefore been led into numerous errors. This edit. is therefore of no value save as a warning to incompetent editors.

"One of the most slovenly and defective works that has appeared."—PARR: Barlow's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1844, iii. 29.

9. Songs and Sonnettes, 1717, 8vo. Incomplete; ending with the Poems of Sir Thos. Wyatt. 10. Poems, 1807, 2 vols. 8vo. Edited by Bishop Percy and George Steevens. Nearly all destroyed by the fire at Nichols's printing-office. 11. The Works of Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, and those of Sir Thomas Wyatt the Elder, edited by Geo. Fred. Nott, D.D., with a Preface, Memoirs of the Earl of Surrey, a Dissert. on the State of Eng. Poetry before the 16th Cent.; Collation of Surrey's and Douglas's Translations of the Æneid, and Notes, with Memoirs of the Earl of Northampton, an Appendix, a General Index, and Glossary, 1815–16, 2 vols. 4to, £7 7s. A review of this valuable edit. will be found in Edin. Rev., xxvii. 390–422; and see Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1854, i. 424–429. 12. Poems of Surrey and Wyatt, with Original Memoirs by Sir N. Harris Nicolas, 1831, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. The same in 2 vols. 8vo form vols. x. and xi. of Pickering's Aldine ed. of the British Poets. 13. Surrey's Poems, with those of Minor Contemporaries, 1854, 12mo. Some of Surrey's Poems, omitted by Tottel, will be found at the end of Harrington's Nugæ Antiquæ. His Poems have been reprinted in Johnson's and Chalmers's English Poets. 14. The Fourth Book of Virgill, intreating of the Love betwene Æneas and Dido; translated into English and drawn into a strange Metre by Henry, Earle of Surrey, sine anno, 4to. With the Second Book, 1557, sm. 8vo. A copy is in the Dulwich College Library, one in the Library of Wadham College, Oxford, and another in the British Museum. Reprinted by Baron Bolland, for the Roxburghe Club, 1814, 4to. The "strange metre" is nothing else than blank verse.

"This is the first composition in blank verse extant in the English language. Nor has it merely the relative and accidental merit of being a curiosity. It is executed with great fidelity, yet not with a prosaic servility. The diction is often poetical, and the versification varied with proper pauses. . . . It seems probable that his active situations of life prevented him from competing a design of translating the whole Æneid."—Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, iii. 36.

"Surrey is the first who introduced blank verse into our English poetry. . . . The translation by Surrey of the second book of the Æneid, in blank verse, is among the chief of his productions. No one had, before his time, known how to translate or imitate with appropriate expression. But the structure of his verse is not very harmonious, and the sense is rarely carried beyond the line. If we could rely on a theory advanced and ably supported by his editor, [Dr. Nott.] Surrey deserves the still more conspicuous praise of having brought about a great revolution in our poetical numbers."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1854, i. 427, q. v.

And see our life of NICHOLAS GRUMBOLD, in this Dictionary, p. 743; and authorities cited in the course of this article. To refer to these authorities is the more necessary from the fact that our narrow limits warn us that we must not linger on so tempting a theme. But a few lines of quotation of opinions respecting the illustrious subject of our notice we are not willing to dispense with.

We should not omit to record the fact that Surrey's translations of some of the Psalms and of Ecclesiastes into English verse, and a few additional original poems, were printed by Dr. Perey, but destroyed in the fire at Nichols's office, Feb. 1808. Surrey was the author of many other English poetical compositions, never pub., several of which are now lost.

"John Clerc has mentioned, with the highest commendations, many translations done by Surrey from the Latin, Italian, French, and Spanish languages. But these, it is probable, were nothing more than juvenile exercises." See Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840.

"We now emerge from the twilight of learning to an almost classic author, that ornament of a holsterson yet not unpolished court, the Earl of Surrey, celebrated by Drayton, Dryden, Fenton, and Pope, illustrated by his own muse, and lamented for his unhappy and unmerited death; 'a man,' as Sir Walter Raleigh says, 'no less valiant than learned, and of excellent hopes.'"—HORACE WALPOLE: Park's ed., 1806, i. 255.

To the eulogists of Surrey, Park adds the names of Leland, Ascham, Tuberville, Churchyard, Sir Philip Sidney, Webbe, Puttenham, Meres, Harvey, Whitney, Drayton, Bolton, Peacham, Dryden, Lodge, Brydges, Ellis, Anderson, Warton, and Henry. The list could be enlarged if it were requisite.

"The character of Henry, Earl of Surrey, reflects splendour even upon the name of Howard. . . . He revived, in an age too rude to enjoy fully those beauties which mere nature could not but in some degree relish, the force of expression, the polished style, and the passionate sentiments, of the best poets of antiquity."—Lodge: Bug. Accounts of the Holbein Portraits.

"Surrey, for his justness of thought, correctness of style, and purity of expression, may justly be pronounced the first English classical poet. He unquestionably is the first polite writer of love-verses in our language. It must, however, be allowed that there is a striking native beauty in some of our love-verses written much earlier than Surrey's. But in the most savage age and countries rude nature has taught elegance to the lover. . . . Surrey's talents, which are commonly supposed to have been confined to sentiment and amorous lamentation, were adapted to descriptive poetry and the representations of rural luxury. . . . Surrey is said, by the ingenious author [editor] of the Muses' Library, to have been the first who broke through the fashion of stanzas and wrote in the heroic couplet. But all Surrey's poems are in the alternate rhyme; nor, had this been true, is the other position to be granted. Chaucer's Prologues and most of the Canterbury Tales are written in long verse; nor was the use of the couplet resumed till late in the reign of Elizabeth. . . . In the sonnets of Surrey we are surprised to find nothing of that metaphysical east which marks the Italian poets, his supposed masters, especially Petrarch. Surrey's sentiments are for the most part natural and unaffected; arising from his own feelings, and dictated by the present circumstances. His poetry is alike unembarrassed by learned allusions or elaborate conceits. If our author eulogizes Petrarch, it is Petrarch's better manner: when he descends from his Platonic abstractions, his refinements of passion, his exaggerated compliments, and his play upon opposite sentiments, into a track of tenderness, simplicity, and nature. Petrarch would have been a better poet had he been a worse scholar. Our author's mind was not too much overlaid by learning."—Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, iii. 29, 30, 35, 41.

Dr. Nott's comparison between Wyatt and Surrey, in the Dissertation prefixed to the 2d vol. of his ed. of Wyatt and Surrey, (vide ante.) is well worth perusal, but the work of which it forms a portion can rarely be had. The reader, however, will find an extract from this Dissertation in Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1854, i. 425-426. The last-named eminent authority remarks of Surrey:

"The taste of this accomplished man is more striking than his poetical genius. He did much for his own country and his native language. The versification of Surrey differs very considerably from that of his predecessors. He introduced, as Dr. Nott says, a sort of evolution into his style, which gives an air of dignity and remoteness from common life. It was, in fact, borrowed from the license of Italian poetry, which our own idiom has rejected. He avoids pedantic words forcibly intruded from the Latin, of which our earlier poets, both English and Scots, had been ridiculously fond. The absurd epithets of Hoccleve, Lydgate, Dunbar, and Douglas, are applied equally to the most different things, so as to show that they annexed no meaning to them. Surrey rarely lays an unnatural stress on final syllables, merely as such which they would not receive in ordinary pronunciation; another usual trick of the school of Chaucer. His words are well chosen and well arranged."—Ubi supra, i. 426-427.

The influence of Surrey and Wyatt's poetry upon the taste of his age was by no means so extensive as we might reasonably imagine it would have been:

"The graces of the Italian muse, which had been taught by Surrey and Wyatt, were confined to a few. . . . Although Lord Surrey and some others had so far deviated from the dulness of the times as to copy the Italian poets, the same taste does not seem to have uniformly influenced all the nobility of the court of King Henry the Eighth who were fond of writing verses."—Worton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, iii. 72, 83-84, q. v., with the authors referred to in the text and notes.

Howard, Henry, Earl of Northampton, 1539?-1614, second son of the preceding, was most unworthy of his illustrious parentage; in proof of which it is enough to mention his complicity with the infamous match of his great-niece, the Countess of Essex, with Carr, Viscount Rochester, and his share in the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury. He was educated at King's College and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where, says Bishop Godwin, he was esteemed "the learnedest amongst the nobility, and the most noble amongst the learned." Of his "learning" there seems to be but little doubt: his "nobility," however, cannot be so readily allowed. He left in MS., An Apology for the Government of Woman, Forms of Prayer, &c., and pub. the following very curious works:—A Defensive against the Poysen of supposed Prophecies, Lon., 1583, 4to; 1620, fol. Of this vol., dedicated to Sir Francis Walsingham, which principally relates to expositions of Judicial Astrology, Dreams, Oracles, Conferences with Familiars or Damned Spirits, &c., a copious analysis will be found in Oldys's British Librarian, 331-343. Howard, John, 1726-1790, the eminent philanthropist, whose name will in all ages be held in reverent esteem, was a native of Hackney, London, the son of a wealthy tradesman, and the inheritor of a large fortune. In 1777 he visited every prison in the United Kingdom, and pub. the results of his investigations in the same year, in a vol. entitled The State of the Prisons in England and Wales, &c., Warrington, 4to. Appendix, 1780, 4to; 2d ed. of the whole, 1780, 8vo; 3d ed., 1784, 4to; 4th ed., 1786, 4to; Lon., 1792, 4to. In 1780 he pub. a trans. of a French Account of the Bastille; and in 1789 the Duke of Tuscany's New Code of Civil Law, with an English trans. The deplorable condition of the prisons at home excited a determination to visit those of foreign countries, with the hope of benefit to the miserable inmates; and faithfully did this good man carry out his praiseworthy enterprise. A detail of his labours does not, of course, enter into the plan of a work of this character; but it is only proper that we should direct the reader to the best sources of information respecting a philanthropist whose praise was in every one's mouth, from the rough benediction of the illiterate convict to the splendid eulogy of the greatest orator of modern Europe. He died at Kherson, South Russia, January 20, 1790, of a malignant fever, caught during a visit to a young lady for whom the benefit of his counsel had been invoked. He was buried with distinguished honours by the Russian authorities, and his death excited a profound sensation throughout the civilized world. A monumental statue to his memory, by Bacon, was erected in St. Paul's Cathedral.

Howard pub. in 1789, 4to, (2d ed., 1791, 4to.) An Account of the principal Lazarettos in Europe, with various Papers relative to the Plague, &c.; and contributed a paper on the Heat of the Waters at Bath to *Phil. We need hardly remark, in conclusion, that the influence of Christianity was the great moving-power which sent John Howard from the pleasant home and lovely scenery in which he so greatly delighted to visit the cheerless cells of the miserable, the neglected, and the forsaken of earth. The barren creed of infidelity enforces no such duties, seeks no such honours, and submits to no such sacrifices. Yet this Apostle of Humanity understood too well the spirit of the Gospel of Christ to suppose that even his labours—abundant and self-sacrificing as they were—could do ought to procure remission of sin or purchase acceptance with his Maker:

"My immortal spirit," says he. "I cast on the sovereign mercy of God, through Jesus Christ, who is the Lord, my strength and my song, and, I trust, has become my salvation. My desire is to be washed and cleansed, and justified, in the blood of Christ, and to dedicate myself to that Saviour who has bought us with a price."

We have had occasion to record in this volume memoirs of many of the mighty, many of the noble, of the illustrious name of HOWARD; but this one "excelleth them all."

Howard, Sir Robert, M.P., 1626-1698, a younger son of Thomas, Earl of Berkshire, and brother of Edward Howard and James Howard, (ante), educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, was a warm adherent of Charles I., and at the Restoration was rewarded for his services by being knighted and made Auditor of the Exchequer. Howe, John, 1630-1705, an eminent Non-conformist divine, son of the minister of Loughborough, Leicestershire, was educated at Christ Coll., Cambridge, became Fellow of Magdalen Coll., Oxf., subsequently minister of Great Torrington, Devonshire, and domestic chaplain to Oliver Cromwell, and afterwards to Richard Cromwell; ejected for Non-conformity, 1662; chaplain to Lord Massarene, in Ireland, where he was permitted to preach, 1671 to 1675; chosen minister of the late Dr. Lazarus Seaman's congregation in London, 1675; visited the Continent with Lord Wharton in 1685; returned to London in 1687; and continued to labour among his old congregation until his death, which occurred April 2, 1705. He was a man of profound learning, eminent piety, and unwearied zeal. He was the author of many sermons and theological treatises, which have always been held in the highest estimation. A collective edit. of the works which he pub. in his lifetime, accompanied by a Life of the author by Dr. Edmund Calamy, appeared in 1724, 2 vols. fol.; repub. in 1848, 3 vols. 8vo, £1 7s., edited by Rev. J. P. Hewlett. Two vols. of Serms. were pub. in 1744,

2 vols. 8vo. Howe's Whole Works, ed. ed by Rev. John Hunt, of Chichester, were pub. in 1810-22, 8 vols. r. 8vo. This ed. contains—I. vols. i.-iv., the contents of the 2 fol. vols. of 1724; II. vols. v.-vi., his Posthumous Works, being 78 Serms. and a portion of Pt. 1 of the Principles of the Oracles of God; III. vols. vii.-viii., new matter never before pub. This ed. was pub. at £3 3s.; large paper, r. 8vo, £4 4s. Contents, with the Life by Calamy, repub., 1832, imp. 8vo, pp. 1278, £2 2s.; again in 1838, imp. 8vo, £1 10s. A new ed., to be comprised in 9 vols. 8vo, has been recently (in May, 1856) announced as in preparation by Messrs. Johnstone and Hunter, of Edinburgh. There have also been new edits. of separate treatises of this author, edited by Noel Gordon, &c.; a Selection from his Works and Sketch of his Life, by Rev. W. Wilson, D.D., 1827, 2 vols. 18mo; Select Treatises, with a Memoir by Thos. Taylor, 1835, 12mo; a selection entitled Christian Theology, by John Howe, selected and systematically arranged, with a Life, by Samuel Dunn, 1836, 12mo; and a Life and Character of Howe, by H. Rogers. Howe's best-known works are The Living Temple; The Blessedness of the Righteous; Of Delighting in God; The Redeemer's Tears; Enmity and Reconciliation; The Redeemer's Dominion over the Invisible World; The Office and Work of the Holy Spirit; God's Prescience; The Vanity of this Mortal Life. There are but few theological authors recorded in our Dictionary whose writings have been so enthusiastically commended as those of John Howe.

"He seems to have understood the gospel as well as any uninspired writer, and to have imbibed as much of its spirit. There is the truest sublimity to be found in his writings, and some of the strongest pathos; yet, often obscure, generally harsh, he has imitated the worst parts of Boyle's style. He has a vast number and variety of uncommon thoughts, and is, on the whole, one of the most valuable writers in our language, or, I believe, in the world."—DR. DOUGDRIDGE.

"Possessed of the learning of Cudworth, the evangelical piety of Owen, and the fervour of Baxter, with a mind of larger dimensions than what belonged to any of these distinguished individuals, every thing which fell from his pen is worthy of immortality. He delights while he instructs, and impresses while he enlightens. His Living Temple, The Blessedness of the Righteous, Of Delighting in God, The Redeemer's Tears, are among the finest productions of uninspired genius, and must be read with high gratification by every Christian. His style is occasionally rugged and inharmonious; but the sentiment will richly repay the trifling annoyance of its harsh and involved structure."—Orne's Edil. Bib.

"For depth and originality of thought, John Howe has never been surpassed by any theological writer whatever. His principles were strictly evangelical, and his spirit eminently catholic and devout. His Living Temple, especially, is a masterpiece of profound argumentation. . . . His best pieces are The Blessedness of the Righteous, Delighting in God, Enmity and Reconciliation, Redeemer's Tears, and Dominion. Some Funeral Sermons, and part of his Living Temple, are most excellent."—Dr. E. Williams's C. P.

"Mr. Howe, nervous and majestic, with all the powers of imagery at his command."—JAMES HERVEY.

"A very extraordinary, original, sublime, and splendid writer, but sometimes obscure and heavy. Few writers will more strengthen and enlarge the reader's mind; but he is deficient in evangelical statement and simplicity."—Bickersteth's C. S.

"Perhaps it may be considered as no unfair test of intellectual and spiritual excellence that a person can relish the writings of John Howe; if he does not, he may have reason to suspect that something in the head or heart is wrong. A young minister who wishes to attain eminence in his profession, if he has not the works of John Howe, and can procure them in no other way, should sell his coat and buy them; and, if that will not suffice, let him sell his bed and lie on the floor; and if he spend his days in reading them he will not complain that he lies hard at night. . . . The Blessedness of the Righteous is a first-rate performance, and contains a vast extent of thought, of learning, but especially of piety. . . . A Treatise of Delighting in God is one of the finest pieces of practical theology to be found in the English language."—Bogue and Bennett's Hist. of Dissenters.

"One of the most learned and polite writers among the dissenters. His reading in divinity was very extensive; he was a good Orientalist, and understood several of the modern languages. . . . His Blessedness of the Righteous was the most generally-esteemed of his performances. He was an admired preacher, but was sometimes too profound for ordinary capacities. There is an uncommon depth of thought in several of his works."—Granger's Biog. Hist. of Eng.

"None can peruse his writings without feeling that his mind was habitually filled with the contemplation of that peculiar but truly divine character, that comprehensiveness and all-pervading excellence, the ultimate development of which, in those who embrace Christianity, is the design of the mysteries it reveals, and of all the powerful motives by which it prompts to action."—Rogers's Life of Howe.

"Nothing in the language can equal, as a whole, Howe's Living Temple; but his Blessedness of the Righteous is one of my favourite pieces. I read it again and again with renewed interest and delight."—WILLIAM JAY.

The critical opinion of Robert Hall is always too valuable to be omitted where it can at all be crowded in; and, though want of room prevents us from citing other comments before us, the verdict of so eminent an authority must not be denied. It occurs in the memoranda of a conversation between Mr. Hall and the Rev. Robert Balmer, of Berwick-upon-Tweed:

"B. 'May I ask, sir, what writers you would most recommend to a young minister?' H. 'Why, sir, I feel very incompetent to give directions on that head: I can only say that I have learned far more from John Howe than from any other author I ever read. There is an astonishing magnificence in his conceptions. He had not the same perception of the beautiful as of the sublime; and hence his endless subdivisions.' B. 'That was the fault of his age?' H. 'In part, sir; but he has more of it than many of the writers of that period; than Barrow, for example, who was somewhat earlier. There was, I think, an innate inaptitude in Howe's mind for discerning minute graces and proprieties, and hence his sentences are often long and cumbersome. Still, he was unquestionably the greatest of the Puritan divines.'

"After advertizing to several of Howe's works, Mr. H. said, in reference to his Blessedness of the Righteous, 'Perhaps Baxter's Saint's Rest is fitted to make a deeper impression on the majority of readers. Baxter enforces a particular idea with extraordinary clearness, force, and earnestness. His appeals to the conscience are irresistible. Howe, again, is distinguished by calmness, self-possession, majesty, and comprehensiveness; and for my own part, I decidedly prefer him to Baxter. I admire, exceedingly, his Living Temple, his sermon on the Redeemer's Tears, &c.; but, in my opinion, the best thing he ever wrote is his defence of the sincerity of the Gospel offer. I refer to the treatise called the Reconcilableness of God's Presence of the Sins of Men with [the Wisdom and Sincerity of] his Counsels, Exhortations, and whatever other [whatsoever] means he uses to prevent them. This I regard as the most profound, the most philosophical, and the most valuable of all Howe's writings.'"—Hall's Works, ed. Lon., 1833; Memoir, vi. 120.

Howe, John, M.P., d. 1721, a relation of Charles Howe, (ante), and a statesman of note, was the author of A Panegyric on King William, and of several songs and little poems. He is introduced in Swift's ballad On The Game of Traffic. See Nichols's Poems; Collins's Peerage.

Howe, Josiah, d. 1701, a divine and poet, Fellow of Trin. Coll., Oxf., preached in 1644 a sermon before Charles I., of which thirty copies were printed in red letters. A copy, the only one known, is in the Bodleian Library. He was the author of a set of recommendatory English verses prefixed to the folio edit. of Beaumont and Fletcher; of another before Randolph's Poems, 1640; of another before Cartwright's Comedies and Poems, 1651.

"These pieces," says Warton, "which are in the witty epigrammatic style that then prevailed, have uncommon acuteness, and highly deserve to be revived."

Howell, Elizabeth, widow of Robert Howell, of Philadelphia, and a native and resident of that city, better known by her maiden name,—Miss Lloyd,—has gained considerable celebrity by her poem entitled Milton's Prayer of Patience. These verses, originally pub. anonymously in The Friends' Review for January, 1818, were subsequently pub. as Milton's in an English edit. of his works. They have frequently appeared in periodicals under the title of Milton on his Loss of Sight. It is hardly necessary to state that they possess an uncommon degree of merit. They will be found in T. Buchanan Read's Female Poets of America, 6th ed., Phila., 1855. Mrs. Howell also contributed several poems to The Wheat Sheaf, a collection of Prose and Poetry, Phila., 1852; 3d ed., 1857.

Howell, James, 1594-1666, educated at, and Fellow of, Jesus College, Oxford, was the son of Thomas Hall, minister of Abernethy, in Cumerthenshire. From 1619 he travelled in Holland, Flanders, Spain, France, and Italy, as steward to a glass-ware manufactory, and was subsequently employed abroad and at home on public business, and in 1640 made Clerk of the Council. In 1643 he was committed to the Fleet Prison by order of Parliament, and remained there, writing and translating books, until some time after the murder of Charles I. At the Restoration his sufferings in the cause of loyalty were rewarded by the post of Historiographer-Royal of England, which place was created for his benefit and retained by him until his death. He was a man of learning and humour, and versed in the modern languages. "Thank God," he says, "I have this fruit of my foreign travels, that I can pray unto Him every day of the week in a separate language, and upon Sunday in seven." As a writer, although he was the author of forty-one original works,—historical, political, poetical, and philological,—and the translator of four from the Italian, one from the French, and one from the Spanish, all but his Familiar Letters may be said to be unknown to ordinary readers. We notice a few of his publications:—1. Dendrologia; or, the Vocall Forest, Lon., 1640, fol.; 2d ed., 1644, 4to; Camb., 1645, 12mo; 3d ed., pub. under the title of ΔΕΝΔΡΟΛΟΓΙΑ—Dodona's Grove; or, the Vocall Forest. Pub. with two other tracts, viz.: Parables reflecting upon the Times, and England's Teares for the Present Wars, 1645; 2d Part of Dodona's Grove, 1650, 8vo. In French, 1st Part, Paris, 1641, 4to; 2d Part, Paris, 1652, 4to. In Latin, 1st Part, Lon., 1640, 8vo.

"This is a strange allegory, without any ingenuity in maintaining the analogy between the outer and the inner story, which alone can give a reader any pleasure in allegorical writing. The subject is the state of Europe, especially of England, about 1640, under the guise of animated trees in a forest. . . . The contrivance is all along so clumsy and unintelligible, the invention so poor and absurd, the story—if story there be—so dull an echo of well-known events, that it is impossible to reckon Dodona's Grove any thing but an entire failure. Howell has no wit, but he has abundance of conceits, flat and commonplace enough. With all this he was a man of some sense and observation."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1854; iii. 169.

Mr. Hallam suggests with much plausibility that Harrington's Oceana, pub. in 1656, was "partly suggested, perhaps, by the Dodona's Grove of Howell, or by Barclay's Argenis, and a few other actions of the preceding age."—Ubi supra, p. 428. See Censura Literaria.

2. Instructions for Forraine Travell, 1642, 12mo; with addits., 1650, 18mo.

"Something is to be had from Howell still. It is agreeable, if not useful, to know what a traveller was in the days of James and Charles."—Lon. Retrosp. Rev., xiii. 18–20, 1826. This review contains copious quotations.

3. Epistolæ Ho-Elizianæ; or, Familiar Letters, Domestic and Foreign; divided into sundry Sections, partly Historical, partly Political, partly Philosophical, upon emergent Occasions, 1645, 4to. Another vol. in 1647; both these, with the addit. of a third, in 1650, 3 vols. 8vo; 4th vol., 1655, 8vo; 11th ed., 1754, 8vo. Since several times reprinted. These Letters, addressed to James I. to several Lords and Bishops, Sir Kenelm Digby, Sir Rob. Napier, Ben Jonson, and others, contain many curious particulars relating to the reigns of James I. and Charles I.

"Many of the said letters were never written before the author of them was in the Fleet, as he pretended they were, only feigned, (no time being kept with their dates,) and purposely published to gain time to relieve his necessities, yet give a tolerable history of those times."—Athen. Ozon., Bliss's ed., iii. 746–747.

Dr. Bliss gives a table of the edits. of Howell's Letters, and announces his intention of publishing a new and corrected edit, with notes and an appendix, for which he had long been making the necessary collections. It is to be greatly regretted that it was never given to the world. The table of edits. is as follows:—1. 1647; 2. 1647; 3. 1650; 4. 1655; 5. 1673; 6. 1688; 7. 1708; 9. 1726; 10. 1737; 11. 1754. The ed. of 1737 has the reputation of being the best.

"I believe the second published correspondence of this kind, and in our own language at least, of any importance after Hall, [see HALL, JOSEPH, D.D.] will be found to be Epistolæ Ho-Elizianæ, or the Letters of James Howell, a great traveller, an intimate friend of Jonson, and the first who bore the office of the royal historiographer, which discover a variety of literature, and abound with much entertaining and useful information."—Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed. 1840, iii. 440–441.

"Howell is a wit who, in writing his own history, has written that of his own times; he is one of the few whose genius, striking in the heat of the moment only current coin, produce finished metal for the cabinet. His letters are still polished."—Disraeli's Literary Miscellanies, ed. 1840, p. 45.

"These letters were written in England, but are not the coinage of British soil. They are amusing and instructive, and have deservedly gone through half a score of editions. The account in them of the assassination of Henry IV. of France is minutely curious."—Dublin's Lib. Comp.

"His letters are entertaining."—HALLAM: ubi supra.

"If there be any exception to the general rule that letters prepared for the press are the most sickening and these me of all compositions, it will certainly be found in the familiar letters of James Howell, commonly called Epistolæ Ho-Elizianæ, which con-pose one of the most curious volumes in English literature."—Lon. Retrosp. Rev., iv. 183–230, 1821, q. v.

4. A Perfect Description of the People and Country of Scotland, 1649, 4to. Reprinted; also in The North Briton, No. 13.

"At its reappearance there was some talk of presenting the publisher for a libel; but it is surprising that such extravagant peepsterous stuff should excite any emotion but contempt."—Watts's Bibl. Brit.

5. Londinopolis: an historical Discourse or Perustration of the City of London, and of Westminster, 1657, fol. Principally borrowed from Stow's Survey, and his continuators. 6. Poems upon divers Emergent Occasions, 1664, 8vo, pp. 136. Edited by Payne Fisher. Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 384, £3 6s., q. v.; and see Athen. Oxon.

The reader who desires to know more of Howell and his publications must refer, in addition to authorities already cited, to Biog. Brit., Lloyd's Memoirs, and Lowndes's Bibl. Man., 974–975. We marvel that some of the enterprising British publishers—the Nicholsons, Bohns, or Parkers, who have done so much for the revival of ancient English lore—have not presented us with a new edit. of Epistolæ Ho-Elizianæ; for, in the words of an eminent authority,

"It is refreshing to turn from the cobweb compositions of the present day, in which there is no strength of material, to the sterling sense and lively wit of these familiar letters."—Lon. Retrosp. Rev., vol. iv. p. 290, 1821.

The new editor of the Letters, if such an individual should make his appearance, must endeavour to procure the late Henry Fauntleroy's illustrated copy, bound in three imperial folios.

Howitt, Mary, a daughter of Mr. Botham, of Uttoxeter, a member of the Society of Friends, was married to William Howitt, a congenial spirit, in 1821. The lives of both have been so well told in a publication just issued, and accessible to all, (Men of the Time, Lon., 1856,) that it will be unnecessary to repeat what we should be unable to improve. Moreover, the plan of our work is better answered by a list of their publications, with some critical notices of their characteristics as writers,—which citations of opinions we are obliged to restrict within very narrow limits.

In 1825 Mr. and Mrs. Howitt gave to the world their first publication,—The Forest Minstrel, which was succeeded in 1827 by The Desolation of Eyam, and other Poems. To these joint productions may be added, The Book of the Seasons, first pub. in 1831, and The Literature and Romance of Northern Europe, issued in 1852, and Stories of English Life, in Bohn's Illustrated Library, 1853. The following alphabetical catalogue—compiled with considerable labour, and, we trust, nearly if not quite complete—of Mary Howitt's separate publications evinces no ordinary amount of literary industry. 1. Alice Franklin, 1843, 18mo. 2. Ballads and other Poems, 1847, p. 8vo. 3. Birds and Flowers, and other Country Things, 1848, 12mo. 4. Do., Second Series, 1855, sq. 5. Children's Year, 1847, 16mo. 6. Dial of Love, 1852, 12mo. 7. Heir of Wast Wyland, 1851, 12mo. 8. Hope on! Hope ever! 3d ed., 1844, 18mo. 9. Hymns and Fireside Verses, 1829, 1p. 8vo. Sargent, sq.; 2d ed., 1844; 3d ed., 1845. The popularity of this work, from Poland to France, with the younger members of the household, is well known. A celebrated German review remarks of it:

"Of this production, which makes itself an epoch in the world of children, it is superfluous to speak. The Fable-Book is throughout all Germany in the hands of parents and children, and will always be new, because every year fresh children are born."

49. Citizen of Prague; 2d ed., 1816, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 50. The Peasant and his Landlord, by Baroness Knorring, 1848, 2 vols. 8vo.

The above register affords a tolerable proof that Mary Howitt has not "eaten the bread of idleness;" but, if to these volumes—many of them exhibiting evidences of no little toil—we add her contributions for the last thirty years to the periodicals of the day,—to The Amulet, The Literary Souvenir, The Drawing Room Scrap-Book, (of which she was for three years the editor.) The People's Journal, &c.,—we shall have an aggregate of printed matter which few authors of the day can equal. But unfortunately the mere fact of voluminousness does not always imply either merit on the part of the author or advantage on that of the public. The great question is not as to quantity, but as to quality. By many writers we should have been benefited more had they written less; and of many it is to be regretted that they ever wrote at all. But if of any we can justly say,—This pen has ever been employed in the advocacy of the true, the beautiful, and the good; the alleviation of human suffering, and the cure of social disorders: the education of the mind, and the improvement of the heart; the cultivation of home-duties and home-affections, and the development of fraternal unity in the great brotherhood of man;—surely of such it shall be said, Here is one worthy of honour, of love, and of praise;—and such is Mary Howitt! When we return from the pleasing contemplation of the moralist, to consider the literary merits of an instrumentality which has been so widely productive of beneficial results, we are conscious that the theme has been anticipated—not to say exhausted. Mrs. Howitt's position, whether we consider her as a poetess, a novelist, an essayist, or as an instructor of the youthful mind, is too well determined, too generally acknowledged, to require any championship at our hands. Yet we are not willing to conclude this article without the adduction of at least a few tributes to the merits of one whose happiness it is to number as many friends as she has readers, and to have as few enemies as she has written worthless books.

"There can be no surer proof of the genuineness of the poetical power possessed by Mary Howitt, than the fact that her finer pieces ever recur again and again to the memories of all imaginative readers. This can be only owing to their feminine tenderness, their earnest tone, their gentle music, and their simple but genuine nature."—Mrs.'s Sketches of the Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century.

"Mary Howitt has shown herself mistress of every string of the minstrel lyre, save that which sounds of broil and bloodshed. There is more of the old ballad simplicity in her compositions than can be found in the strains of any living poet besides; her language is vigorous, but not swelling; and always subordinate to the sentiments, whether of tenderness or of love."—Allan Cunningham's Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years.

"Her poems are always graceful and beautiful, and often vigorous, but they are essentially feminine: they afford evidences of a kindly and generous nature, as well as of a fertile imagination and a safely-cultivated mind."—Mrs. HALL.

"Her language is chaste and simple, her feelings tender and pure, and her observation of nature accurate and intense."—CHRISTOPHER NORTH: Noctes Ambrosianae; Blackw. Mag. xxiv. 675.

"Sweet Mary Howitt! her name brings a magic with it. let us see it when and where we will! It is one crowded with pleasant associations; telling of wisdom learned by the wayside and under the hedges; breathing perfumes—not the perfumes of balls and routs, but—of violets and wild flowers: lending the mind to pure and pleasant thoughtfulness."—New Monthly Magazine.

"Mary Howitt, the poetess alike of the Fireside and of the Field, and perhaps the most popular of all our female writers, takes a rank second to none among the fair poets of our country. . . . Not content with showing that she possesses noble powers, Mrs. Howitt exhibits the rare ambition of using her gifts nobly; and with an earnest eloquence, which often reaches sublimity, she proclaims herself the poet of the Young, and the Humble, and the Poor. Her sympathies with all classes are strong; but with these classes they are overpowering. . . . In summing up my imperfect estimate of Mary Howitt, I would say that no Female Poet in our literature surpasses her, and that but few equal her. As a versifier, as a moralist, and as a philosopher, she may safely challenge comparison with any writer of her own sex, and with most of the writers of the other sex: whilst as regards grace, pathos, womanly sentiment, and Christian sympathy, she has scarcely a rival near her throne." I believe that her writings have done more to elevate our ideas of woman's intellectual character than all the treatises on that subject in our language."—Routon's Female Poets of Great Britain.

"All tears

Which human sorrow sheds are dear to her?"

Howitt, Richard, brother of William and Mary Howitt, settled for four years as a physician at Melbourne, Australia, has given us the results of his observations in his work entitled (1.) Impressions of Australia Felix, during Four Years' Residence in that Colony: Australian Poems, &c. Lon., 1845, 12mo; 1847, 12mo.

Howitt, William, b. 1795, at Heanor, in Derbyshire, the husband and literary associate of Mary Howitt, has been already briefly noticed in our article devoted to the latter, in which the reader is referred for further information to the life of Mr. Howitt in Men of the Time, Lon., 1856. The following alphabetical list of the works of this popular author includes all of which we can find any account: 1. A Word to Dissenters, 1839. 2. Aristocracy of England; a History for the People, by John Hampden, Jr., 1816, 12mo; 2d ed., 1816, 12mo; also, 3d ed. 3. Book of the Seasons; or, A Calendar of Nature, 1831, 12mo; 7th ed., 1846, 12mo; 8th ed., 1848, 12mo: in conjunction with Mary Howitt.

"SHEPHERD: 'But what is this Byeuck of the Seasons?' NORTH: 'In it the Howitts have wished to present us with all their poetic and picturesque features,—a Calendar of Nature, comprehensive and complete in itself,—which, on being taken up by the lover of nature at the opening of each month, should lay before him in prospect all the objects and appearances which the month would present, in the garden, in the field, and the waters; yet confining itself solely to those objects. Such, in their own words, is said to be their aim.' SHEPHERD: 'And nae insignificant aim either, sir. Hae they hit it?' NORTH: 'They have.'—Noctes Ambrosianae: Blackie's Mag., xxix. 700.

The author is at the present moment (Nov. 1856) preparing a new and still more complete edit. of this work, which will be enriched with much new matter.

"Every reader turns with pleasure to those passages of Horace, Pope, and Boileau, which describe how they lived and where they dwelt."—SAMUEL ROGERS.

Mr. Howitt's motto on the title-page of this work is very happily selected:

"An indissoluble sign of their existence has stamped itself on the abodes of all distinguished men, a sign which places all kindred spirits in communion with them."—The Citizen of Progne.

This work was commended by The Examiner, The Atlas, &c., and received very faint commendation from the Literary Gazette; but the Athenæum was much less lenient,—styling the work

"Two gossiping volumes, not very subtle or sound in their criticisms, nor very novel in design and treatment. They are extremely inaccurate in parts: with very little in them derived from books, and that little of the commonest kind. There is a fair sprinkling of conceit throughout, and there are some good passages derived from personal observation," &c.—1847, 38-41; 65-66.

At this critique Mr. Howitt felt himself greatly aggrieved, and so expressed himself, whereupon the reviewer returned to the attack with renewed ardour, (see Athenæum, 1847, 147-149.) Other notices of the work will be found on pp. 96, (a melancholy instance of bad temper and injustice by a correspondent of the journal,) 125, 151, 173, 200, 201, 1175.

"Mr. Howitt has indeed done something to mark localities and houses; but for the full knowledge and intelligent criticism that would surround these landmarks with clusters of associations, making bare walls eloquent and giving speech to all the neighbouring objects, we look in vain. The Homes and Haunts. Instead of being original essays, are, in fact, nothing more than a collection of brief and prosaic biographies, made up in general from well-known sources, and tediously full of anecdotes."—The Botanist.

His strength lies in a fresh and hearty appreciation of nature, of costume, and of character. What he sees clearly he can present clearly to the eye. His book consists of a series of excellent sun-pictures. In which we see the very form and pressure of Australian life."—Lon. Athenæum, 1855, 668-670.

16. Life and Adventures of Jack of the Mill, 1841, 2 vols. fp. 8vo; 1845, 2 vols. fp. 8vo; 1849, 2 vols. fp. 8vo.

"Mr. Howitt possesses the happy knack of accommodating himself to the youthful mind; and there can be no question that his Jack of the Mill will become a favourite."—Lon. Observer.

17. Literature and Romance of Northern Europe, 1852, 2 vols. p. 8vo: in conjunction with Mary Howitt. This erudite work, the only complete one of the kind in the English language, will be more and more prized in proportion as the taste for Scandinavian literature becomes generally diffused among scholars in Great Britain and the United States. It is an excellent guide to the literature of Sweden, Denmark, Norway, and Iceland, with copious specimens of the histories, romances, legends, dramas, ballads, &c. of those countries. See *Lon. With above 50 illustrations. This vol. is commended, on the whole, by the Athenæum; but it is objected that "Mr. Howitt is too fond of stating impressions as general truths. Neither can we recommend the reader to place much reliance on his judgment in art, or his sweeping sketches of literature and opinion."—1842, 1053-1053, 1070-1072.

"A volume which will add to William Howitt's literary reputation, and be read with delight by thousands of his countrymen, as being the first faithful and comprehensive account of a people to whom they are allied by a kindred language and kindred dispositions. The engraved illustrations are perfect gems of art."—Lon. Atlas.

"We think this work the most interesting of any thing William Howitt has done. It possesses all his well-known excellencies, and derives from its subject the attraction of both novelty and knowledge."—Lon. Spectator.

Some brief extracts from German opinions of this work will not be out of place:

"This author, who has become so celebrated and appreciated from many of his works, has given us, in the above volume, an extremely interesting and characteristic description of life in Germany, as well as an accurate account of the manners and customs of this country."—Tiegel's Universel Magazine.

"Howitt, a man of mature years, with all the youthful fire of poetry and humanity,—every inch an Englishman,—gives us here a most original work on Germany. He treats us and our affairs with such an earnestness of conviction, such a love of impartiality, such an amiable candour, that we cannot censure him, but must respect what he says."—Allgemeine Zeitung, Feb. 5, 1843.

"We return our hearty thanks to Howitt, whose work we have so often quoted, for the extraordinary accuracy, freedom, and mobility of spirit with which he has set himself to describe the life, character, and circumstances of our country."—Künische Zeitung, March, 1843.

TRANSLATIONS FROM THE GERMAN. 25. Peter Schlemihl; from Adelbert Von Chamisso; German and English, 1843, 16mo. 26. The Student-Life of Germany; from the unpublished MSS. of Dr. Cornelius, 1841, med. 8vo. This work was written for and at the solicitation of Mr. Howitt. It contains nearly forty of the most famous songs of the German students, in German and English, with the original music, adapted to the piano-forte by Herr Winkelmeyer. This work was sharply criticized in England; but in Germany it has been highly commended. Some of the habits of some of the German students are not the most refined in the world; but that is not Mr. Howitt's fault. "Except The Bible in Spain, we have not had so interesting a wonder-book for years."—Lon. Chris. Reformer.

28. Universal Hist. of Magic; from the German of Dr. Joseph Ennemoser. To which is added an appendix of apparitions, dreams, second-sight, somnambulism, &c., selected by Mary Howitt. Bohn's Scientific Library, vols. xiii., xiv., p. 8vo, 1854. In this translation, made whilst on his voyage to Australia, Mr. Howitt was assisted by his eldest son. The character of Ennemoser's work is well known to the German scholar. Mr. Howitt has long contemplated the publication of a history of the Life and Times of George Fox; but whether it will ever see the light is perhaps doubtful. In addition to the works above noticed, he is the author of the article "Quakers" in the 7th ed. of the Encyclopedia Britannica, many pieces in The Literary Souvenir, The Amulet, &c., and, in conjunction with Mary Howitt, edited, for the three years of its continuance, (1847-49, 3 vols. r. 8vo,) Howitt's Journal, a periodical which started with a circulation of 30,000 copies. It was purchased by the owner of the People's Journal, (of which Mr. Howitt had been a co-proprietor and manager,) in consequence of some pecuniary difficulties. Both journals are now extinct, to the great loss of the intelligent portion of the middle classes of Great Britain.

We have quoted many opinions respecting Mr. Howitt's merits and demerits as a writer, but are obliged to withhold many more from want of space. Whilst we are far from deeming him infallible, and consider that in his earnestness to enlighten (as he supposes) the public mind he has at times treated some most important themes with censurable levity and culpable irreverence, yet we cannot coincide with the reproof that the Reformer should not expose evils without at the same time providing for their extirpation. I might as well blame a neighbour for apprising me that my house was on fire, because he failed to inform me immediately of a certain mode of extinguishing the flames; or forbid my physician to announce the presence of disease, unless he undertook at the same moment to arrest its course. With the exception, therefore, hinted at above, many of our countrymen and countrywomen will unite with the commendation of our highest literary authority:

"We rejoice to see the works of the Howitts, whatever they may be, republished amongst us. Their names have a pleasant sound; their writings are sure to be animated by a kindly, humane spirit; and no one can leave them without feeling that he has been in delightful company."—N. Amer. Rev.

In the last quarter of a century (few authors have been able so long to command the undiminished interest of a novelty-loving public) many kind things have been said of William and Mary Howitt; but we doubt if any tribute is more highly prized than that of Christopher North, recorded in the 56th Number of Noctes Ambrosianæ, April, 1831: see Blackwood's Magazine, xxix. 699-700. Hubbard, William, 1621-1704, minister of Ipswich, Mass., graduated at Harvard College in the first class, 1642. 1. Election Sermon, Bost., 1676; an excellent production. 2. A Narrative of the Troubles with the Indians from 1607-77, with a Discourse, 1677, 4to. With a map of New England: now often wanting in copies. (See Rich's Cat. of Books, 1500-1600, p. 102.) Lon., 1677, sm. 8vo; Worcester, Mass., 1801, 8vo. 3. Fast Sermon, 1682. 4. Funl. Discourse on Gen. Denison, 1684. 5. A Testimony to the order of the Gospel in the Churches of N. England, 1701; with Mr. Higginson. Hubbard left in Ms. A General Hist. of N. England from the Discovery to 1680, which was pub. by the Mass. Hist. Soc., Camb., 1815, 8vo, pp. 676. For the preparation of this history the State paid him £50. For much of the most important portion of the earlier annals he was indebted to Winthrop's MS. Journal; and Hubbard's MS., in turn, was of great service to Mather, Prince, Hutchinson, Holmes, &c.:

"To style, indeed, Hubbard has in this work afforded little attention, or rather has employed several modes of composition in his different chapters, here dilating in a careful examination of events and discussion of principles, there confining himself to the most meagre manner of the humblest diary. But his skill may be ascertained from his election sermon, [1676], which no work of the two next generations surpassed. . . . Hubbard's claims as the historian of the great war of 1756 are universally acknowledged, for three editions have made his Indian Wars well known."—JAMES SAVAGE, Pres't of the Mass. Hist. Soc.; N. Amer. Rev., ii, 221-230.

"In a word, he is learned without ostentation and vanity, and gives all his productions such a delicate turn and grace, (as is seen in his printed Sermons and History of the Indian Wars) that the features and lineaments of the Child make a clear discovery and distinction of the Father; yet is he a man of singular modesty, of strict morals, and has done as much for the conversion of the Indians as most men in England."—John Danton's Life and Errors, ed. 1818, l. 133-134, q. r. for a favourable account of the worthy divine's love of hospitality and good looks.

The Works of William Shakspeare: The Text carefully restored according to the First Editions; with Introductions, Notes, Original and Selected, and a Life of the Poet, Munroe & Co., Bost., 1851-56, 11 vols. 16mo. As regards size and print, this edition is modelled upon the favourite one in England known as the Chiswick Edition. It contains all the Plays, Poems, and Sonnets of Shakspeare. We have several commendations before us of Mr. Hudson's editorial labours, but have space for the following only:

"There is every probability that as soon as Mr. Hudson's Shakspeare becomes known, as it well deserves to be, in this country, it will meet with no inconsiderable amount of patronage here."—New (London) Quarterly Review.

"Mr. Verplanck has brought the treasures of a various and recondite learning with no common share of critical sagacity, to the illustration of Shakspeare. Following in the same direction, but striking out a new path, Mr. Hudson has enriched the literature of our language with the fruits of his studies, mastering the difficulties of the poet with wonderful ingenuity, seizing the spirit of his characterization with kindred subtlety, and, in a singularly nervous and racy style, presenting some of the finest speimens of critical analysis of which any modern writer can boast."

Mr. Hudson has been a contributor to the Church Review, the American Whig Review, and the Democratic Review, and in 1850 pub. a Sermon, entitled Old Wine in Old Bottles. In 1857 he originated and edited the American Church Monthly, pub. in N. York.

(The above four works are announced as in press by H. W. Derby & Co. of Cincinnati, May, 1856.)

Hughes, John, 1677-1720, a native of Marlborough, a contributor to The Tatler, Spectator, and Guardian, and the author of the whole or the principal part of the Essays, Discourses, &c. of the Lay Monk, (2d ed., 1714, 12mo.) a sequel to the Spectator, has lost the poetical reputation which he enjoyed. He was educated at a Dissenters' Academy in London, and subsequently held a place in the Office of Ordnance, and was Secretary to the Commissioners for the purchasing of lands for the royal dockyards. Later in life he was Secretary to the Commissioners of the Peace. 1. Poem on the Peace of Ryswick, 1697. 2. The Court of Neptune, 1699. 3. Ode on the Death of K. William, 1702. 4. Ode in Praise of Music, 1703, 4to. 5. Spenser's Works, with Life, &c., 1715, 6 vols. 12mo. 6. The Siege of Damascus; a Tragedy, 1720, 8vo. The author died on the same night that this piece was first performed with great applause. 7. Poems and Prose Essays, 1735, 2 vols. 12mo; Posth. He trans. Fontenelle's Dialogues of the Dead, and Discourse concerning the Ancients and Moderns, the Abbé Vertot's Hist. of the Revolutions in Portugal, Letters of Abelard and Heloise, and wrote the preface to the Complete Hist. of England, 1706, 3 vols. fol. His Correspondence was pub. by the Rev. J. Duncombe, with Notes, 1772, 3 vols. 12mo; 2d ed., 1773, 3 vols. p. 8vo. As a translator, Hughes is entitled to considerable credit; of his original efforts The Siege of Damascus is the only piece by which he is now known to the reading public. Addison thought so highly of Hughes's dramatic abilities that he begged him to write the fifth Act of Cato:

"Hughes was very capable of writing this fifth Act. The Siege of Damascus is a better tragedy than Cato, though Pope affected to speak slightly of its author."—Dr. Joseph Warton: Note to Pope's Prologue to Cato.

"He [Hughes] is too grave a poet for me, and, I think, among the Mediocrists in prose as well as verse."—See ft. to Pope.

"What he wanted in genius, he made up as an honest man; but he was of the class you think him."—Pope to Swift.

Dr. Johnson, who in his life of Hughes quotes the above, (and more of the same correspondence,) avoids giving any opinion respecting the literary merits of his author; but it is easy to perceive that he agrees with the estimate he cites. An eminent critic, in his comments upon the merits of our author, remarks:

"The only piece, however, which can with any propriety claim for Hughes the appellation of a poet, is The Siege of Damascus. Of this Drama, which is still occasionally acted, the sentiments and morality are pure and correct, the imagery frequently beautiful, and the diction and versification for the most part clear and melodious. It is defective, notwithstanding, in the most essential quality of dramatic composition, the power of affecting the passions; and is, therefore, more likely to afford pleasure in the closet than on the stage. . . . Hughes has more merit as a translator of poetry than as an original poet. . . . On the prose of Hughes I am inclined to bestow more praise than on his poetry. . . . All the periodical essays of Hughes are written in a style which is, in general, easy, correct, and elegant; they occasionally exhibit wit and humour; and they uniformly tend to inculcate the best precepts, moral, prudential, and religious."—Drake's Essays illustrative of the Tatler, Spectator, and Guardian, (vol. iii. 26-30.) q. r. for an account of Hughes's share in these periodicals, and see the Prefaces to the various edits. of these works.

Hughes, John, the "Buller of Brazennose," (though really of Oriel,) celebrated in Wilson's Christopher in the Tent, was the author of an Itinerary of Provence and the Rhone during 1819, (1822, 8vo, 1829, 8vo.) and poetical and other compositions. The literary merits of Hughes are depicted in glowing terms by Miss Mitford in her Recollections; and a still greater authority has lavished his encomiums upon the Itinerary:

"A poet, a draughtsman, and a scholar, who gives such an animated description of Chateau Grignan, the dwelling of Madame de Sévigné's beloved daughter, that no one who has ever read the book would be within forty miles of the same without gazing a pilgrimage to the spot."—Dr. Walter Scott.

This work contains thirteen good etchings by the author; and a set of Views in Provence and on the Rhone, r. 4to, illustrative of the Itinerary, was engraved by W. H. Cooke.

"Was not his Province and the Rhone almost the only book ever praised in the Waverley Novels? [in Quentin Durward.] Does not he contrive in his journals to make his pen do double duty as sketcher and writer?"—Miss MITFORD: ubi supra.

The censures of the Athenæum—a portion of which only we have above quoted—elicited some comments from Dr. Hume, for which see same periodical, 1847, p. 796. The Lon. Medical Gazette and the Lon. Spectator commend the work in high terms.

Hume, Alexander, 1560?–1609, minister of Logie, grandson of Patrick Hume, fifth Baron of Polworth, pub. in 1599, Edin., 4to, a book entitled Hymnes, or Sacred Songs, portions of which have been several times reprinted, and the whole was repub. lately by the Bannatyne Club. Of these pieces, the Day Estival is considered the most beautiful, and was highly commended by Dr. Leyden and others. An account of this author and three other Alexanders Hume will be found in Chambers and Thomson's Biog. Dict. of Eminent Scotsmen, 1855, 92–96. Watt ascribes to this writer two theolog. treatises, but we presume them to have been written by the next-named Alexander Hume.

Hume, Alexander, Master of the High School, Edin., 1596, and Rector of the Grammar Schools of Salt-Preston and of Dunbar. Elementa Grammatica, Edin., 1612, sm. 8vo. He also wrote some theolog. tracts: see above article and authorities there cited, and Lowndes's Bibl. Man., 982.

Hume, David, of Godscroft, the author of The History of the House and Race of Douglas and Angus, Edin., 1644, fol., (1743, 2 vols. 12mo; 4th ed., 1748, 2 vols. 12mo.) is supposed to have been born about 1560. He also wrote Apologia Basilica, Paris, 1626, 4to, several theolog. treatises, and a number of Latin poems, some of which, first pub. separately, were afterwards reprinted in Johnston's Deliciae Poetarum Scotorum. In 1632, Paris, sm. 8vo, appeared Humii (Davidis) Wedderburnensis, Poemata Omnia, accessere ad Finem Unio Britannica, et Prælium ad Lipsiam solutâ Oratione. Contains poems addressed to Q. Elizabeth, James the Sixth of Scotland, Sir Francis Walsingham, &c. Constable's copy sold for £3. An account of this author will be found in *Chambers and Thomson's Biog. Hume, David, April 26, 1711–August 25, 1776, a native of Edinburgh, was the second son of Joseph Hume, or rather Home, of Ninewells, near Dunse, Scotland, a descendant of the Earl of Home. The subject of our notice, after an unsatisfactory attempt to master the study of the law, and a like unsuccessful essay (in 1734) as a merchant's clerk in Bristol, went to France, with the design of pursuing there, in an economical manner, those literary pursuits in which alone he took any interest. In 1737 he came to London, and in the year following gave to the world his Treatise of Human Nature. This, his first publication, was not successful; but it is difficult to discourage a young author who has once seen his compositions in print, and in 1741 appeared his Essays, Moral and Political. This work met with more favour, and he was induced to follow it up in 1748 with Philosophical Essays concerning Human Understanding, (in fact, a new edit. of the first part of his Treatise of Human Nature;) in 1751 with An Enquiry concerning the Principles of Morals; in 1752 with Political Discourses; and in 1755 with The Natural Hist. of Religion, &c. It was between the dates of the two last-named publications that Hume put forth the first vol. of the work by which his name will be transmitted to the latest posterity. The publication of the History of England—1st ed. in 6 vols. 4to, Lon.—was as follows:—Vol. I. The Reigns of James I. and Charles I., 1754. II. The Commonwealth, and the Reigns of Charles II. and James II., 1756. III., IV. The Reigns of Henry VII., Henry VIII., Edward VI., Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, 1759. V., VI. From the Invasion of Julius Cæsar to the Revolution in 1688, 1761–62. For the dates and particulars of various edits. of the History of England, (the Abridgments, Continuations, &c.,) and of the other publications of the author, the reader is referred to Watt's Bibl. Brit.; Lowndes's Bibl. Man.; the London catalogues of British publications. The principal editors

In addition to these edits., all pub. in Great Britain, many have been issued in the United States of America, &c. Of Hume's Philosophical Works, the only complete edit., until very recently, was that pub. in Edin. in 1826, 4 vols. 8vo. "Including all the Essays, and exhibiting the more important Alterations and Corrections in the successive Editions published by the Author."

New edit., pub. by Little, Brown & Co., Bost., 1854, 4 vols. 8vo, pp. cxv. 337, 552, 564, 580.

In vol. i. will be found Hume's Autobiography, his Will, a notice of his last illness, by Adam Smith, and a documentary account of the controversy—if so it may be called—between Hume and Rousseau.

It is now time to return to the personal history of the author, preparatory to a brief examination of his characteristics as a man of letters. Although the first vol. of the History was at first severely censured, and then almost entirely neglected by the public, yet the appearance of his Dissertation on the Natural History of Religion before the publication of the second stimulated the languishing curiosity of the reading world, and Hume found himself at last in possession of that literary distinction for which he had long pined in secret. The demand for the succeeding vols. was so great, that fortune was added to fame; and the former was subsequently augmented by several diplomatic and other political appointments; among which was the Secretaryship of the French Embassy, 1763–65, and the post of Under-Secretary of State under General Conway, 1767–68. In 1769 he bade adieu to public life and the literary circles of London, and returned to the city of his birth, doubtless with much of that yearning for old scenes and old friends so beautifully described by the author of The Deserted Village. He returned home, he tells us, "very opulent," for he "possessed a revenue of £1000 a year; healthy, and, though somewhat stricken in years, with the prospect of enjoying long his ease." But, notwithstanding the natural desire of the philosopher

"To husband out life's taper at the close,
And keep the flame from wasting, by repose," his days had now approached their termination. In the spring of 1775 he was attacked with a disorder of the bowels, which gradually sapped his strength, and resulted fatally on the 25th of August, 1776. After his death appeared, in 1779, 8vo, his Dialogues concerning Natural Religion; and in 1783, 12mo, were pub. his disgraceful Essays upon Suicide. The mischievous effects of these unphilosophical speculations, therefore, were thus extended, to the injury of others, after the author had gone to his account. The excellence of Hume's character as a man has been so well described by Mr. Mackenzie, in the story of La Roche, (see The Mirror, Nos. 42, 43, 44,) and so unequivocally attested by Adam Smith and other contemporaries, that it is quite unnecessary to enlarge upon this head. In the autobiography from which we have quoted above, the reader will be often reminded—notwithstanding the more ambitious style of the Historian of Rome—of the charming narration of Gibbon of the incidents of his own life.

We have now to consider the subject of our notice, first, in the character of a Mental and Moral Philosopher; secondly, in that of a Political Philosopher and Political Economist; and, thirdly, in that of a Historian. It is hardly necessary to remind the reader that all that can justly be expected of us, in the limits to which we are necessarily circumscribed, is an indication of the best sources of knowledge respecting the authors of whom we treat, and brief citations of the recorded opinions of eminent authorities in the same departments of learning which the former have cultivated.

HUME AS A MENTAL AND MORAL PHILOSOPHER.

Of Hume's Essays, Moral and Metaphysical, Lord Brougham remarks:

"To retuse these well-known Essays the praise of great subtilty, much clever argument, some successful sarcasum, and very considerable originality, is impossible; but a love of singularity, an aversion to agree with other men, and particularly with the bulk of the people, prevails very manifestly throughout the work; and we may recollect that it is the author's earliest production, the Treatise on Human Nature, which formed the basis of the whole, having been written before his six-and-twentieth year, at an age when the distinction of differing with the world, the boldness of attacking opinions held sacred by mankind at large, is apt to have most charms for vain and ambitious minds.

"Accordingly, he finds all wrong in the opinions which men generally entertain, whether upon moral, metaphysical, or theological subjects, and he pushes his theories to an extreme point in almost every instance. . . . As for his inquiry concerning the Principles of Morals, of which he had himself formed so high an estimate, this is indeed a very excellent work, and appears well to deserve the opinion pronounced upon it by the author, although his Political Discourses may be superior in the originality and importance of their views. . . . There is in this treatise a copiousness and felicity of illustration rarely anywhere else to be found; and it is full of learned allusions and references, showing the various and extensive reading in which he had indulged. Nor is it the least remarkable feature of the work, that, though preferred by him before all the other productions of his genius, it contains nothing at all even bordering upon sceptical opinions."—Life of Hume, in Lives of Men of Letters of the Time of George III., Lon. and Glas., 1855.

"It was in his twenty-seventh year that Mr. Hume published at London the Treatise on Human Nature, the first systematic attack on all the principles of knowledge and belief, and the most formidable, if universal scepticism could ever be more than a mere exercise of ingenuity. . . . The great speculator did not in this work amuse himself, like Bayle, with dialectical exercises, which only inspire a disposition towards doubt, by showing in detail the uncertainty of most opinions. He aimed at proving, not that nothing was known; but that nothing could be known from the structure of the Understanding, to demonstrate that we are doomed forever to dwell in absolute and universal ignorance. . . . The Inquiry [Concerning the Principles of Morals] affords perhaps the best specimen of his style. . . . In substance, its chief merit is the proof from an abundant enumeration of particulars, that all the qualities and actions of the mind which are generally approved by mankind agree in the circumstance of being useful to society. . . . On purity of manners, it must be owned that Mr. Hume, though he controverts no rule, yet treats vice with too much indulgence."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Dissert. on Ethical Philos., prefixed to Encyc. Brit.; also in his Miscell. Works, Lon., 1854, vol. 1.

"From what has been already said, it may be seen that we are not to look in Mr. Hume's Treatise [of Human Nature] for any regular or connected system. It is neither a scheme of Materialism nor a scheme of Spiritualism; for his reasonings strike equally at the root of both these theories. His aim is to establish a universal scepticism, and to produce in the reader a complete distrust in his own faculties. . . . With the single exception of Bayle, he has carried this sceptical mode of reasoning farther than any other modern philosopher."—DUGALD STEWART: Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., and in his Works.

"The centre of Hume's philosophizing is his criticism of the conception of cause. Locke had already expressed the thought that we attain the conception of substance only by the habit of always seeing certain nodes together. Hume takes up this thought with earnestness. Whence do we know, he asks, that two things stand to each other in the relation of cause and effect? . . . There needs no further proof than simply to utter these chief thoughts of Hume, to show that his scepticism is only a logical carrying out of Locke's empiricism. Every determination of universality and necessity must fall away, if we derive our knowledge only from perceptions through the senses; these determinations cannot be comprised in sensation."—Dr. Albert Schweigler's Hist. of Philos.; trans. by J. H. Seelye, New York, 1856.

"Hume, the most subtle, if not the most philosophical, of the deists: who, by perplexing the relations of cause and effect, boldly aimed to introduce a universal scepticism, and to pour a more than Egyptian darkness into the whole region of morals."—ROBERT HALL: Modern Infidelity Considered: Works, Lon., 1863, vol. 1.

"Dr. Reid rendered good service to the cause of truth, in opposition to the sceptical philosophy of Hume, who dexterously availed himself of the authority of Locke in the support of his own unscientific dogmas."—Dr. E. Williams's Christian Preacher, Lon., 1843.

"That scepticism is the real result of the theory we have now described [Locke's Ideal System] is seen from the use that has been actually made of it. Berkeley drew from it his arguments against the existence of the material world, and Hume based upon the same the principles by which he sought to involve the whole superstructure of human knowledge, from its very foundations, in one scene of doubt and confusion. . . . Reid, in his early life, had been a complete believer in this representative theory; and had leaned strongly to Berkeleyanism, as the natural result; but when Mr. Hume's Treatise on Human Nature came forth to the world, and he saw the consequences to which the whole theory must ultimately tend, he began to inquire within himself whether that theory were really a true one. This inquiry, according to his own account, he carried on perpetually for above forty years, and never could gain any affirmative evidence on the question except the mere dictum of philosophers. . . . The philosophy of Hume, as a whole, originated and fell with himself. A more partial and less daring scepticism might probably have gained many followers; but it is the inevitable result of every system professing universal unbelief, to destroy itself. The man who by any process of reasoning involves every portion of human knowledge in doubt, instead of persuading any one to follow his conclusions, does little more than controvert his own principles by a reductio ad absurdum."—Morrell's Hist. of Mod. Philos., Lon., 1847.

In our life of Jeremy Bentham, in this Dictionary, we have briefly noticed the famous doctrine of Utility, of which Hume was one of the first and most distinguished teachers.

Before leaving this branch of our subject, it may be expected that we should make some comments on that unfortunate production of our author's,—the Essay on Miracles; but a natural reluctance to dwell on the follies in which even great minds are but too prone would indispose us to linger upon the recollection of this melancholy example of intellectual sophistry and literary dishonesty, had we not already treated the subject at sufficient length in the previous pages of this work. The reader is referred to the article on ADAMS, WM., D.D., (the friend of Johnson;) CAMPBELL, GEORGE, D.D.; DOUGLAS, JOHN; Leland's Deistical Writers; Works of Wm. Ellery Channing; Works of Mr. Paley; Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 933, 982-984, 991-1001; Remarks upon the Nat. Hist. of Religion, by Mr. Hume, &c., by S. T. Lon., 1758, 8vo; and many of the authorities cited above and below. This matter may be very well dismissed with the sensible reflections of Sir Walter Scott, in his account of the Life and Writings of the historian's friend, John Hume:

"The celebrated David Hume, the philosopher and historian, was certainly the most distinguished person in the cycle, the literary society of Scotland." That he was most unhappy in permitting the acuteness of his talents, and the pride arising from the consciousness of possessing them, to involve him in a maze of sceptical illusions, is most undeniable, as well as that he was highly culpable in giving to the world the miserable results of his leisure."

HUME AS A POLITICAL PHILOSOPHER AND POLITICAL ECONOMIST.

Here our citations must necessarily be very brief; but they will be found to be of the most unequivocal character.

"Of the Political Discourses it would be difficult to speak in terms of too great commendation. They combine almost every excellence which can belong to such a performance. . . . The great merit, however, of these discourses, is their originality, and the new system of politics and political economy which they unfold. Mr. Hume is, beyond all doubt, the author of the modern doctrines which now rule the world of science, which are to a great extent the guide to practical statesmen, and are only prevented from being applied in their fullest extent to the affairs of nations, by the clashing interests and the ignorant prejudices of certain powerful classes; for no one deserving the name of legislator pretends to doubt the soundness of the theory, although many hold that the errors of our predecessors require a slow recourse to right principle in conducting the practical business of the world. It is certain that Dr. Smith's celebrated work, with all its great merits, is less of a regular system than the detached essays of Mr. Hume. The originality of the latter's opinions is wholly undeniable: they were published full fourteen years before the Wealth of Nations."—LORD BROUGHAM: ubi supra.

One of the most eminent of modern Political Economists remarks that Hume's

"Essays on Commerce, Interest, Balance of Trade, Money, Jealousy of Trade, and Public Credit, display the same felicity of style and illustration that distinguish the other works of their celebrated author. His views of the commercial intercourse that should subsist among nations are alike enlightened and liberal; and he has admirably exposed the groundlessness of the prejudices that have entertained against a free intercourse with France, and the fear of being deprived, were commercial restraints abolished, of a sufficient supply of bullion. The masterly essay on the Population of Ancient Nations will be noticed in another part of this work. . . . Hume and Smith saw and pointed out the injurious operation of the Methuen treaty, and exposed the absurdity of our sacrificing the trade with France to that of so beggarly a country as Portugal."—McCulloch's Let. of Polit. Econ., Lon., 1845.

"The political discourses of Hume are the best models we have of the reasoning that belongs to subjects of this nature. They best admonish us of the slow step with which we should advance, and the wary distrust with which we should look around before we think that we have reached a maxim in politics.—that is, a general principle on the steady efficiency of which, in real practice, we may always depend. . . . And here I would recommend to my readers one of the essays of Mr. Hume,—that on the Populousness of Ancient Nations. . . . The laws of Henry the Seventh merit the consideration of the student. It was the intention of these laws to advance the husbandry, manufactures, and general commerce of the country. The observations of Lord Bacon, and the subsequent criticisms of Hume, will afford the student a lesson in that most difficult and important of all practical sciences, the science of political economy. . . . A great part of Smith's reasonings [in the 3d Book of the Wealth of Nations] had appeared in the History of Hume. These two eminent philosophers—for on the subjects of political economy and morals they deserve the name—had, no doubt, in their mutual intercourse enlightened and confirmed the inquiries and conclusions of each other."—Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist.

"Hume was gifted with admirable sagacity in political economy; and it is the good sense and depth of his views on that important subject, then for the first time [in his History of England] brought to bear on the annals of man, that has chiefly gained for him, and with justice, the character of a philosophic historian."—Sir Archibald Alison: Essays, Polit., Histor., and Miscell., Edin. and Lon., 1850, iii. 78.

HUME AS A HISTORIAN.

We have already noticed the severe censure elicited by the publication of the first vol. of the History of England, and the still more provoking neglect by which this censure was succeeded. The expressed opinions of the few who ventured to read the book were certainly ill calculated to encourage the ambition of the aspiring author. But no one can tell the story so well as the historian himself:

"In 1752 the Faculty of Advocates chose me their librarian, an office for which I received little or no emolument, but which gave me the command of a large library. I then formed the plan of writing the History of England; but, being frightened with the notion of continuing a narrative through a period of seventeen hundred years, I commenced with the accession of the House of Stuart, an epoch when I thought the misrepresentations of faction began chiefly to take place. I was, I own, sanguine in my expectations of the success of this work. I thought that I was the only historian that had at once neglected present power, interest, and authority, and the cry of popular prejudices; and, as the subject was suited to every capacity, I expected proportional applause. But miserable was my disappointment: I was assailed by one cry of reproach, disapprobation, and even detestation; English, Scotch, and Irish, whig and tory, churchman and sectary, freethinker and religionist, patriot and courtier, united in their rage against a man who had presumed to shed a generous tear for the fate of Charles I. and the Earl of Strafford; and after the first ebullitions of their fury were over, what was still more mortifying, the book seemed to sink into oblivion. Mr. Millar told me, that in a twelvemonth he sold only forty-five copies of it. I scarcely, indeed, heard of one man in the three kingdoms, considerable for rank or letters, that could endure the book. I must only except the primæ of England, Dr. Herring, and the primæ of Ireland, Dr. Stone, which seem two odd exceptions. These dignified prelates separately sent me messages not to be discouraged."—Hume's Autobiography, pub. in 1777, by Mr. Strahan, and since prefixed to the list of Eng., his Philosophical Works, &c.

Mr. Ritchie (in his Life of Hume) tells us that, after a diligent search into the literary history of the period, he has been unable to discover any trace of that universal outcry which Hume complains of. But doubtless the author heard more than any one else did; much that was said was never recorded; and of the last a large portion may be presumed to have perished or to be buried in forgotten archives. With the reception of the second vol. of his History the author had greater reason to be satisfied:

"This performance," he tells us, "happened to give less displeasure to the Whigs, and was better received. It not only rose itself, but helped to buoy up its unfortunate brother." As his reputation as a literary man was now well established, the remaining vols. were received with avidity, and those already pub. brought prominently into notice: the sale was sufficiently large, he informs us, to render him not only "independent, but opulent." "Notwithstanding the variety of winds and seasons to which my writings have been exposed, they have still been making such advances, that the copy-money given me by the booksellers much exceeded any thing formerly known in England."

It is now time to examine into the merits and demerits of a work which has so long held, and which promises ever to hold, a prominent place in the front rank of English literature. If we were obliged to compress into the limits of a single sentence the characteristics of Hume's History of England, we suppose that the following would be considered an impartial statement:—Benny of style, carelessness of facts, and intolerance of spirit. Hume was too fastidious to be inelegant, too indolent to be accurate, too bigoted to be impartial. His chagrin when obliged to stop the press to make important corrections on the appearance of Murdin's State Papers, and his mortification at being obliged to write to Robertson respecting the same affair, "we are all in the wrong," were necessary consequences of that haste which would not examine, and that ignorance which would not learn. It is declared that certain manuscripts had been spread out for his inspection at the State-Paper Office for a whole fortnight, but he never mustered sufficient courage to undertake the dreaded investigations.

"Satisfied with the common accounts, and the most obvious sources of history, when Librarian at the Advocates' Library, where yet may be examined the books he used, marked by his hand, he spread the volumes about the sofa, from which he rarely rose to pursue otherwise inquiries or delay by fresh difficulties the page which every day was growing under his charming pen. A striking proof of his careless happiness I discovered in his never referring to the perfect edition of White Locke's Memorials of 1762, but to the old truncated and faithless one of 1682."—True Sources of Secret History; in Disraeli's Curiosities of Literature, ed. Lon., 1851, p. 514.

"Hume often puts the names of the monkish writers in his margin; but I fear all he knew of them was through the media of other writers. He has some mistakes which could not have occurred had he really consulted the originals. . . . Hume is certainly an admirable writer; his style bold, and his reflections shrewd and uncommon; but his religious and political notions have too often warped his judgment."—Dr. Richard Formey's Letter to a Friend on the Study of English History, in Goodnight's Lib. Man., 45.

"Hume was far too careless a writer, even if the taste of the public in his time had required it, to trouble himself with the minute labour necessary for this kind of investigation. Accordingly, the reader finds little in his pages to bring him acquainted with the antiquarian details of history."—Edin. Rev., lxxiv. 432.

"Hume was not, indeed, learned and well-grounded enough for those writers and investigators of history who judged his works from the usual point of view, because he was not only negligent in the use of the sources of history, but also superficial."—Schlosser's Hist. of the 18th Cent., Davison's trans., Lon., 1844, ii. 78.

"In his treatment of the elder periods of the English history, he is quite unsatisfactory and meagre: he had no love for his antiquities, and could not transport himself back into the spirit of remote ages."—Schlegel's Lects. on the Hist. of Lit.; English trans., Phila., 1854, 231.

"The author, indeed, wanted that resolute spirit of industry and research which alone can lead an historian to become thoroughly acquainted with the valuable writers of the Middle Ages."—Diddim's Lib. Comp., Lon., 1825, 244.

"He was far too indolent to acquire the vast store of facts indispensable for correct generalisation on the varied theatre of human affairs, and often drew hasty and incorrect conclusions from the events which particularly came under his observation."—Sir Archibald Alison: Essays, Polit., Histor., and Miscell., 1850, iii. 78.

Sir Archibald proceeds to adduce an example of the errors to which he refers, which example we shall presently quote from the History of Europe, 1789–1815.

The remarks which we have just quoted are preceded by some observations which we feel unwilling to omit. Sir Archibald gives his predecessor full credit for his sagacity as a political economist, (quoted above,) his ability as a political commentator and as a delineator of manners, his eloquence as an orator, (in his glowing pages,) and his skill as a debater, but continues:

"But, notwithstanding all this, Hume is far from being gifted with the philosophy of history. He has collected or prepared many of the facts necessary for the science, but he has made little progress in it himself. He was essentially a sceptic. He aimed rather at spreading doubts than shedding light. Like Voltaire and Gibbon, he was scandalously prejudiced and unjust on the subject of religion; and to write modern history without correct views on that subject is like playing Hamlet without the character of the Prince of Denmark."

These comments were originally published in Blackwood's Magazine, (in an article on Guizot,) in Dec. 1844, and the reader will perhaps be surprised to find the following reflections from the same critic, published in The Foreign and Colonial Review, (in an article on Michelet's France,) in April of the same year:

"Considered as calm and philosophic narratives, the histories of Hume and Robertson will remain as standard models for every future age. The just and profound reflections of the former, the indubitable clearness and impartiality with which he has summed up the arguments on both sides, on the most momentous questions which have agitated England, as well as the general simplicity, uniform clearness, and occasional pathos, of his story, must forever command the admiration of mankind. In vain we are told that he is often inaccurate, sometimes partial; in vain are successive attacks published on detached parts of his narrative, by party zeal or antiquarian research; his reputation is undiminished; successive editions issuing from the press attest the continued sale of his works; and it continues its majestic course through the sea of time, like a mighty three-decker, which never even condescends to notice the javelins darted at its sides from the hostile canoes which from time to time seek to impede its progress."—Reprinted in Essays, Edin. and Lon., 1850, iii. 419–420.

We could not in fairness omit the above eulogy, as we profess to give both sides of a question, even when both are ably represented by the same impartial champion.

"I have already adverted to Gardiner's resolute assertion of the law against the prince's single will, as a proof that, in spite of Hume's preposterous insinuations to the contrary, the English monarchy was known and acknowledged to be limited. . . . The misrepresentations of Hume as to the English constitution under Elizabeth, and the general administration of her reign, have been exposed, since the present chapter was written, by Mr. Brodie, in his History of the British Empire from the Accession of Charles I. to the Restoration, vol. i. c. 3. In some respects, Mr. B. seems to have gone too far in an opposite system, and to represent the practical course of government as less arbitrary than I can admit it to have been."—Hallam's Const. Hist. of Eng., ed. Lon. 1844, vol. i. chap. v. p. 279, n.; 284, p.

"Since I drew up this lecture, a work has been published by Mr. Brodie of Edinburgh. It is not well written in point of style, and the author must be considered as a writer on the popular side, but he is a man of research and independence of mind. It is a work of weight and learning, and it appears to me forever to have damaged, and most materially damaged, the character of Mr. Hume as an accurate historian."—Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist.; Lect. V.

See an elaborate review of Brodie's History (Edin., 1822, 4 vols. 8vo) in the Edin. Rev., xl. 92-146.

"Hume is convicted [by Mr. Brodie] of so many inaccuracies and partial statements, that we really think his credit among historians for correctness of assertion will soon be nearly as low as it has long been with theologians for orthodoxy of belief."—Edin. Rev., ubi supra.

It is alleged that Hume, merging the character of the historian into that of the apologist, was resolved at all events to make out a fair case for the Stuarts:

"It is a piece of whining cant, and nothing better, for Hume to represent all parties of his day as being 'fired to madness against him for presuming to shed a generous tear for the fate of Charles I. and the Earl of Strafford.' No one ever found fault with the historian for shedding 'a decent tear' to the memory of the brilliant though unprincipled courtier, and his infatuated master. But he must have known well that the causes of indignation found in his volume were the false pretences put forth on behalf of these men. It was Hume's object to romanize them, and he did not scruple either to mutilate or to pervert the truth, when necessary for his purpose. Mr. Brodie has very ably and laboriously exposed the mean artifices to which this would-be-ingenious historian has had recourse, in order to give the wished-for tone and colouring to documents which he dares not quote entire."—Cannibghan's Biog. Hist. of Eng., Lon., 1852, vi. 106.

In Prof. Smyth's 5th Lect. on Mod. Hist., also, will be found instances cited of Hume's "inaccurate representation of the very authorities he quotes." Gilbert Stuart refers to this subject with no little warmth:

"From its beginning to its conclusion it [Hume's History] is chiefly to be regarded as a plausible defence of prerogative. As an elegant and spirited composition, it merits every commendation. But no friend to humanity, and to the freedom of this kingdom, will consider his constitutional inquiries, with their effect on his narrative, and compare them with the ancient and venerable monuments of our story, without feeling a lively surprise and a patriot indignation."

"Hume and Hume are our two great historians. But it is Hume who is read by every one. Hume is the historian whose views and opinions insensibly become our own. He is respected and admired by the most enlightened reader; he is the guide and philosopher of the ordinary reader, to whose mind on all the topics connected with our history, he entirely gives the tone and the law. On every account, therefore, I shall dedicate the remainder of this lecture chiefly to the consideration of his work, that your confidence may not be given too implicitly, and that while you feel, as you ought to do, the charm of his composition, the claim of what Gibbon called so justly his careless and inimitable beauties, you may be aware also of the objections that certainly exist to the general tendency and practical effect of his representations. . . . It is understood, indeed, by every reader—it has been proclaimed by many writers—that Hume always inclines to the side of prerogative; that, in his account of the Stuarts, his History is little better than an apology; his pages are therefore read, in this part of his work at least, with something of distrust, and his representations are not considered as decisive."—Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist.; Lect. V.

"Had he written without any such views, [prejudices for the Stuarts and the Tories] he might have attained to an eminence far beyond that which he has reached, and descended to posterity not as the first of all party writers of history, but as the author of a truly great natural work, the spirit and excellence of which should have been equally admired and appreciated by all the English."—FREDERICK SCHLEGEL: Lects. on History of Lit.

"No one can be surprised if in so short a time allotted to the whole work far more attention was given to the composition of the narrative than to the preparation of the materials. It was altogether impossible that in so short a period the duty of the historian should be diligently performed. The execution of the work answers to the mode of its performance."

"But, if the History be not diligently prepared, is it faithfully written? There are numberless proofs of the contrary; but we have the most express evidence in the author's own statement to prove this position."—Lord Brougham's Life of Hume, in the Lives of Men of Letters of the Time of George III., Lon. and Glasg., 1855, 182-183.

One of the most eminent of our modern historians considers that he has caught Hume tripping in the reflection quoted below:

"It is observed by Mr. Hume, that actions at sea are seldom if ever so decisive as those on land; a remark suggested by the repeated indecisive actions between the English and Dutch in the reign of Charles II., but which affords a striking proof of the danger of generalising from too limited a collection of facts. Had he extended his retrospect farther, he would have observed that the most decisive and important of all actions recorded in history have been fought at sea."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 1789-1815, N. York, 1856, iii. 340-341.

See ante, p. 916, and see Alison's Essays, Edin. and Lon., 1850, iii. 78.

The same distinguished authority joins in the general commendation of the charms of Hume's style:

"The immortal narrative of Hume. . . . Hume, whose simple but profound history will be coeval with the long and eventful thread of English story."—Hist. of Europe, 1789-1851, i. 131; 1815-52, iii. 361.

We entirely coincide with this assertion: Hume will always be read, in spite of his carelessness, in spite of his errors, and even in spite of his perversions. Nine readers seek amusement where one seeks instruction, and even the tenth man will not neglect Hume; nor can he safely be neglected.

"The accuracy of Hume," remarks an eminent legal authority of America, "in respect of the two first princes of the house of Stuart, has been severely attacked by G. Stuart, Whitaker, Brodie, and others; but his charming style, his profound sagacity, and his philosophical reflections, clothe his great work with irresistible attractions."—CHANCELLOR KENT.

"It is, I submit," says Dr. Dibdin, "in the reign of ELIZABETH that the true genius of Hume may be said to shine forth. Here we have pathos and argument, vigorous delineation of character and statesmanlike views of policy; but the reign of Elizabeth was worthy of the exercise of such talents."—Lit. Comp., ed. 1825, 244-245.

Dr. Johnson, certainly no admirer of Hume in any of his characters save that of a Tory, evinced his usual contempt of popular opinions by declaring against the much-lauded style of the historian:

"The conversation now turned upon Mr. David Hume's style, JOHNSON. 'Why, sir, his style is not English; the structure of his sentences is French. Now, the French structure and the English structure may in the nature of things be equally good. But if you allow that the English language is established, he is wrong. My name might originally have been Nicholson as well as Johnson; but were you to call me Nicholson now, you would call me very absurdly.'"—Boswell's Life of Johnson, ed. Lon., 1847, 150.

This quotation may remind the reader of the criticism of a celebrated reviewer of our own day. Commenting on the literature of "the reigns of the first two Georges, and the greater part of that which ensued," Lord Jeffrey remarks:

"The name of Hume is by far the most considerable which occurs in the period to which we have alluded. Not, though his thinking was English, his style is entirely French; and, being naturally of a cold fancy, there is nothing of that eloquence or richness about him which characterizes the writings of Taylor, and Hooker, and Bacon, and continues, with less weight of matter, to please in those of Cowley and Clarendon."—Review of the Works of Swift, in Edin. Rev., Sept. 1816, and in Contrib. to Edin. Rev., Lon., 1853, 77.

Prof. Smyth's reflections in his 22d Lecture upon the Reign of William III. will be cordially endorsed by the vast majority of historical students:

"And now, when we enter upon the reign of William, we have no longer the assistance of the philosophic Hume. We have no longer within our reach those penetrating observations, those careless and inimitable beauties, which were so justly the delight of Gibbon, and, with whatever prejudices they may be accompanied, and, however suspicious may be those representations which they sometimes enforce and adorn, still render the loss of his pages a subject of the greatest regret, and leave a void which it is impossible adequately to supply."—Lects. on Mod. Hist.

"The triumvirate of British historians, Hume, Robertson, and Gibbon, who exemplified in their very dissimilar styles the triple contrast and harmony of simplicity, elegance, and splendour."—JAMES MONTGOMERY: Lects. on Mod. Eng. Lit.

We extract the following lines from Gibbon's Autobiography, as furnishing, in connexion with the preceding quotation, a curious instance of coincidence:

"The candour of Dr. Robertson embraced his disciple. A letter from Mr. Hume overpaid the labour of ten years; but I have never presumed to accept a place in the triumvirate of British historians."

Gibbon's epigrammatic description of the style of the two historians with whom his name is so often associated has been already referred to more than once, and may here be properly quoted:

"The perfect composition, the nervous language, the well-turned periods of Dr. Robertson, inflamed me to the ambitious hope that I might one day tread in his footsteps; the calm philosophy, the careless inimitable beauties of his friend and rival, often forced me to close the volume with a mixed sensation of delight and despair."—Ubi supra.

Comparisons, well worthy of perusal, between the histories of Gibbon, Robertson, and Hume, will be found in Schlosser's History of the 18th Century, in Frederick Schlegel's Lects. on the History of Literature, and (by Wm. Gifford) in the London Quarterly Review, vol. xii. 369-375. These critiques we had intended to quote in this article, but we have already transcended our limits. We may remark, in brief, that Schlegel and Gifford, without the least hesitation, assign the priority in merit to Hume; and Schlosser seems inclined to award a similar judgment. In our life of THOMAS CARTE, (p. 347.) we have indicated the source to which Hume was perhaps principally indebted for what the lawyers would call the "learning of his history."

Whilst it is deeply to be regretted that Hume's literary vanity and unphilosophical thirst after notoriety so often betrayed him into speculations whose practical effect is to eradicate the first principles and the last hopes of morality and religion, we are pleased to be able to quote, for the encouragement of our studious readers, a reflection which has doubtless stimulated many to days and nights of mental labour and intellectual toil:

"Such a superiority do the pursuits of literature possess above every other occupation, that even he who attains but a mediocrity in them merits the pre-eminence above those that excel the most in the common and vulgar professions."—History of England: Reign of James I.

A biographical account of Mr. Hunt will be found in the Lon. Gent. Mag., Jan. 1855.

Hunt, Freeman, 1804–1853, widely known as proprietor and editor of The Merchants' Magazine, was a native of Quincy, Mass. Whilst a resident of Boston, he established The Ladies' Magazine, The Weekly Traveller, and The Juvenile Miscellany, and also gave to the world Anecdotes and Sketches Illustrative of Female Character; and (in 1830, 2 vols. 12mo) American Anecdotes, Original and Selected.

"The best-known collection of American anecdotes."—N. P. Willis; N. York Mirror.

In 1831 Mr. Hunt removed to the city of New York, where he continued to reside until his death. His first enterprise in this city was a periodical entitled The Traveller, to the columns of which he contributed a series of entertaining sketches of travel, which were afterwards collected and pub. under the title of Letters about the Hudson and its Vicinity. This vol. was reviewed with great favour, and passed through three edit.

In 1839 Mr. Hunt determined to supply a great want in the literary and commercial world; and in July of that year he issued the first number of his famous Merchants' Magazine, which now presents in its thirty-eight well-filled vols. a most valuable library of commercial literature. For the energy, perseverance, and talent successfully developed in this important enterprise, Mr. Hunt deserves more praise than we have time or space to afford him. We shall, however, quote some more valuable opinions than our own at the conclusion of this article.

In 1845 Mr. Hunt pub. the first vol. of The Library of Commerce, and in 1856 appeared the first vol., and in 1857 the second vol., of Lives of American Merchants, and Wealth and Worth, a Collection of Morals, Maxims, and Miscellanies for Merchants. It has been well remarked that "The titles as well as topics of these works show the concentration of purpose with which Mr. Hunt gives himself to his chosen field of literary labour."

The subject of our notice was elected a member of numerous statistical and literary societies, and received the degree of A.M. from Harvard University. Other notices of Mr. Hunt and his useful publications will be found in Poe's Literati, N. York, 1850, 50–52; Bengay's Off-Hand Takings, or Crayon Sketches of the Noticeable Men of our Age, 1854, 368–371; N. Amer. Rev., July, 1856, 232–233. The wise merchants (members of a profession to which authentic information is of peculiar value) w'ill need no solicitation of ours to induce them to peruse and re-peruse Mr. Hunt's invaluable vols.; but, as regards the Merchants' Magazine, we shall (to use a mercantile phrase) offer satisfactory endorsements of our own cordial commendation.

"It collects and arranges in good order a large amount of valuable statistical and other information, highly useful, not only to the merchant, but to the statesman, to the cultivator of the earth, to the manufacturer, to the mariner, in short to all classes of the business and reading community."—HENRY CLAY: Ashland, 29th July, 1849.

"I regard it as being, beyond all doubt, among the most valuable periodicals of the times."—DANIEL WEBSTER: Washington, March 18, 1851.

"I have found it most useful to me in my senatorial labours, and has been in the habit for many years of carefully consulting it."—THOMAS H. BENTON: Washington City, April 20, 1849.

"It is a grand repository of useful facts and information, which can be found nowhere so well digested and so accessible as in these numbers."—MILLAR FILLMORE.

"Mr. Hunt ought especially to be the man whom the merchants of America delight to honour. It seems strange that we have no similar publication in this country, and yet we have all the raw materials for it in great abundance. We want only a Freeman Hunt."—JAMES WILLIAM GILBERT, General Manager of the London and Westminster Bank, and the author of a Practical Treatise on Banking, &c.

Hunt, James Henry Leigh, b. October 19, 1784, at Southgate, Middlesex, was the son of the Rev. Isaac Hunt (ante) and Miss Mary Shewell, the daughter of Stephen Shewell, a merchant of Philadelphia. An aunt of this lady's was the wife of Benjamin West, the eminent American painter. Young Hunt commenced authorship at an early period, and, when the poet was only about sixteen years of age, his verses were collected by his father and pub., with a large list of subscribers, under the title of Juvenilia; or, Poems written between the ages of Twelve and Sixteen, Lon., 1801, 12mo.

"I was as proud perhaps of the book at that time, as I am ashamed of it now. . . . My book was a heap of imitations, all but absolutely worthless."—Leigh Hunt's Autobiography.

These effusions were given to the world shortly after their author's departure from Christ Hospital, where, like Coleridge, Lamb, and many others who afterwards attained distinction, he received his early education. After some experience as an attorney's clerk, and in the duties connected with a post in the War Office, Hunt united in 1808 with his brother John in the establishment of a weekly paper entitled The Examiner, which periodical, owing to Leigh's able editorship, soon acquired great popularity.

Doubtless the practice which he had cultivated in very early life as theatrical critic for the "News" now proved of great advantage to the young editor. Having thus beheld him fairly launched upon that life of literary activity for which he has been so distinguished for the last half-century, we must refer to his piquant Autobiography for further particulars of his career, whilst we devote the limited space to which we are restricted to a catalogue of his works, and the citation of some opinions upon their merits.

From the many opinions before us respecting the characteristics of this voluminous and popular author, we can find room for a few brief extracts only.

LEIGH HUNT AS A POET.

"With acute powers of conception, a sparkling and lively fancy, and a quaintly-curious felicity of diction, the grand characteristic of Leigh Hunt's poetry is word-painting; and in this he is probably without a rival, save in the last and best productions of Keats, who contended, not vainly, with his master on that ground. In this respect, nothing can be more remarkable than some passages in Rimini, and in his collection entitled Foliage, much of which he has since capriciously cancelled; and he also exercised this peculiar faculty most felicitously in translations from the French and Italian, although in some instances he carried it to the amount of grotesqueness or affectation. His heroic couplet has much of the life, strength, and flexibility of Dryden—of whom he often reminds us; and in it he follows glorious John, even to his love for triplets and Alexandrines."—Moir's Sketches of the Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century.

"The days are happily past when the paltry epithet of 'Cockney Poets' could be bestowed on Keats and Leigh Hunt: the world has outlived them. People would as soon think of applying such a word to Dr. Johnson. Happily, too, one of the delightful writers who were the objects of these unworthy attacks has outlived them also; has lived to attain a popularity of the most genial kind, and to diffuse through a thousand pleasant channels many of the finest parts of our finest writers. He has done good service to literature in another way, by enriching our language with some of the very best translations since Cowley. Who ever thought to see Tasso's famous passage in Amyntas so rendered? [Ode to the Golden Age here quoted.] Who, again, ever hoped to see such an English version of one of Petrarch's most characteristic poems, conceits and all? [Petrarch's Contemplations of Death in the Bower of Laura here quoted.]

"In justice to Mr. Leigh Hunt, I add to these fine translations, of which every lover of Italian literature will perceive the merit, some extracts from his original poems, which need no previous preparation in the reader. Except Chaucer himself, no painter of professions has excelled the entrance of Paulo to Ravenna, in the story of Rimini."—Miss Mitford's Recollections of a Literary Life.

"At the outset of his career, his ambition was to excel as a bard. His principal success, however, seems chiefly to lay in a certain vein of essay-writing, in which fancy and familiarity are delightfully combined. Still he has woven many rhymes that are not only sweet and cheerful, but possess a peculiar grace and merit of their own, besides illustrating some capital ideas relative to poetical diction and influence. They are, to-be-sure, deformed by some offences against the dignity of the muse, in the shape of affectations and far-fetched conceits."—Tuckerman's Thoughts on the Poets.

Mr. Tuckerman here quotes some most objectionable epithets used by the poet, in which citation he reminds us—though his selection is entirely different—of Lord Jeffrey's excerpts from Rimini.

"What can be said," exclaims the terrible Scotch reviewer, "for such lines as "She had stout notions on the marrying score," or, "He kept no reckoning with his sweets or sour," or, "And better still—in my idea at least," or, "The two divinest things this world has got!"

"We see no sort of beauty in such absurd and unusual phrases as 'a clipsome waist,'—a 'scattery light,' or 'flings of sunshine,'—nor any charm in such comparatives as 'martialler,' or 'taste-fuller,' or 'franklier,' or in such words as 'whisks,' and 'swaling,' and 'freaks and snatches,' and an hundred others in the same taste."—Edin. Rev., xxvi. 491. Mr. Gilford cites many other instances very much of the same character. See No. 35 ante.

"In spite of his faults, there is something quite bewitching in his character and poe-sus. We hardly judge him by the same laws we apply to other poets: we are willing to take him as he is. The same errors and foibles which would be insufferable in another alter their aspect, if not their nature, as observed in the easy impudence of his chirping egotism. . . . There is every reason to suppose that his poems will long survive the life of their author and the reputation of the majority of his assailants."—Whipple's Essays and Reviews.

"Leigh Hunt, most vivid of poets and most cordial of critics."—JOHN WILSON: Recreations of Christopher North.

LEIGH HUNT AS A PROSE-WRITER.

"To my taste, the Author of Rimini and Editor of the Examiner is among the best and least-corrupted of our poetical prose-writers. In his light but well-supported columns we find the raciness, the sharpness, and the sparkling effect of poetry, with little that is extravagant or far-fetched, and no turgidity or pompous pretension. Perhaps there is too much the appearance of relaxation and trifling, (as if he had escaped the shackles of rhyme,) a caprice, a levity, and a disposition to innovate in words and ideas. Still the genuine master-spirit of the prose-writer is there: the tone of lively, sensible conversation; and this may in part arise from the author's being himself an animated talker. Mr. Hunt wants something of the heat and earnestness of the political partisan; but his familiar and miscellaneous papers have all the ease, grace, and point of the best style of Essay-writing. Many of his effusions in the INDICATOR show, that if he had devoted himself exclusively to that mode of writing, he inherits more of the spirit of Steele than any man since his time."—Hazlitt's Table-Talk: on the Prose Style of Poets.

"He is, in truth, one of the pleasantest writers of his time.—easy, colloquial, genial, humane, full of fine fancies and verbal niceties, possessing a loving if not a 'learned spirit,' with hardly a spice of littleness in his composition. . . . His Imagination and Fancy is a delightful book. The Indicator and Seer are filled with essays of peculiar excellence."—Whipple's Essays and Reviews.

"His prose is gossiping, graceful, and searching, and charms many readers."—Allan Cunningham's Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years.

In a review of Hunt's edit. of The Dramatic Works of Wycherley, Congreve, and Farquhar, (1840, 8vo.) an eminent authority thus speaks of the editor in the capacity of a critic:

"In some respects Mr. Leigh Hunt is excellently qualified for the task which he has undertaken. His style, in spite of its mannerism, may, partly by reason of its mannerism, be well suited for light, garrulous, desultory ana, half-critical, half-biographical. We do not always agree with his literary judgments; but we find in him what is very rare in our time, the power of justly appreciating and heartily enjoying good things of very different kinds. He can adore Shakspeare and Spenser without denying poetical genius to the author of Alexander's Feast, or fine observation, rich fancy, and exquisite humour to him who imagined Will Honeycomb and Sir Roger de Coverley. He has paid particular attention to the history of the English drama from the Age of Elizabeth down to our time, and has every right to be heard with respect on that subject."—*T. B. Hunter, John, 1728-1793, the distinguished anatomist and surgeon, was a native of Long Calderwood, near Glasgow, the son of a farmer, and the youngest of ten children. His early education was very defective, as he preferred amusement to the studies of the grammar-school which he occasionally attended. After working as a cabinet-maker's apprentice in Glasgow for about three years, he was induced in his twenty-first year, by the medical reputation of his brother William, in London, to offer himself as his assistant. He arrived in London in 1748, studied anatomy with his brother, and surgery under Cheselden, and, by the distinction which he rapidly acquired and continued to augment, gave evidence that he had found his proper sphere of action. 1. *Nat. Huntington, William, S.S., 1744-1813, for many years a popular Calvinist Methodist preacher in London, originally a labourer, pub. many serms. and theolog. treatises, some controversial, others experimental.

His works were pub. in 1820, 20 vols. 8vo, £12. Select Works, edited by his son, Ebenezer Huntington, 1838, 6 vols. 8vo. New ed. of his Works, 1856, 6 vols. demy 8vo, £2 2s. The last edit. is pub. by W. H. Collingridge, Lon., who sells many of the different works separately. This edit. contains about fifty works "carefully printed from Mr. Bensley's edition, without the least abridgment, at about one-sixth of the original price." Bensley's edit. is the one above noticed in 20 vols., pub. at £12. Two vols. of Huntington's Letters were pub. in 1851. The title S.S. has doubtless puzzled many. We give the bearer's own explanation:

"As I cannot get a D.D. for the want of cash, neither can I get at M.A. for want of learning; therefore I am compelled to fly for refuge to S.S., by which I mean Sinner Saved."

Hurd, Richard, D.D., 1720–1808, a native of Congreve, Staffordshire, admitted of Emanuel Coll., Camb., 1733; one of the Whitehall Preachers, 1750; Rector of Thurston, 1757; Rector of Yolkton, Yorkshire, 1762; Preacher of Lincoln's Inn, 1765; Archdeacon of Gloucester, 1767; Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, 1775; trans. to Worcester, 1781; declined the Archbishopric of Canterbury, 1783. His principal works are the following:—1. Commentary on Horace's Arts Poetica, 1749; 4th ed., 1763, 3 vols. 8vo. New ed., 1776. George Colman overthrew Hurd's Hypothesis, and Hurd admitted that Colman was right. See COLMAN, GEORGE, the elder. See Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1854, iii. 94, 509; Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 41, 218. The eulogy lavished by Hurd, in this Commentary, on Warburton, gained him the friendship of that prelate. 2. Comment. on Horace's Epistola ad Augustum; with a Discourse on Poetical Imitation, 1751. Warburton considered this Commentary "one of the most masterly pieces of criticism ever written."

"Hurd extracts an order and coherence which I am unable to recognize in the original."—Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., pp. 40, 120.

3. Dialogues on Sincerity, Retirement, the Golden Age of Elizabeth, and the Constitution of the English Government, 1759, 8vo. Anon. Repub. along with his Letters on Chivalry and Romance, (pub. 1762, 8vo.) and Dialogues on Foreign Travel, (pub. 1764, 8vo.) under the title of Dialogues, Moral and Political, 1765, 3 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1771, 3 vols. sm. 8vo. Again, 1788, 3 vols. 8vo. The first ed. (1759) contains some passages which were omitted in the subsequent edit.; but see Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., p. 71.

"Dr. Hurd, it is well known, published, at one time of his life, Moral and Political Dialogues, with a woeful Whiggish cast."—Boswell's Life of Johnson.

"There is a dialogue by Dr. Hurd on the times and personal qualities of Elizabeth, which is not long, and well worth reading, where her character is very severely criticized."—Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist.

"I have now seen the whole of the Letters on Chivalry, and am wonderfully taken with them. They cannot but please all persons of taste greatly. They are the pet-piece to that noble work, the Dialogues, in which there is all the correctness of Addison's style, and a strength of reasoning under the direction of judgment far superior. The author is one of the best scholars in the kingdom, and of parts and genius equal to his learning, and a moral character that adorns both."—BISHOP WARBURTON.

"After all, there is something offensive to correct feeling and just taste in thus imputing fictitious conversations to real personages; and, though Mr. Hurd has executed his task with delicacy and address, I cannot help thinking that he has set a mischievous example."—Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., p. 69.

Repub. in collective edits. of his Works; also new ed., with Prefatory Remarks by Rev. E. Bickersteth, 1839, 8vo.

"He contends for the double sense of many of the prophecies. On this subject and on various other principles essential to the right interpretation of the prophetic Scriptures, his work well deserves to be consulted."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"This elegantly-written and learned volume has long been known and duly appreciated by the public. The subject is here opened in the most masterly and instructive manner by Bishop Hurd."—Horne's Bibl. Bib.

"A judicious outline on the plan of Mede."—Bickersteth's C. S. See also Brit. Critic, O. S., xxvii. 652–653.

"His style, abating a few affected impurities from quaint idioms and colloquial cant, is really a fine one; and his account of Mede, in the 10th Discourse, is in every respect—in sublimity of conception, and in felicity, force, and grandeur of expression—worthy of Burke."—Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., pp. 163–164.

See ADDISON, JOSEPH; GREENE, GEORGE WASHINGTON.

A collective ed. of Bishop Hurd's Works, with Life by himself, appeared in 1811, 8 vols. 8vo. This edit. comprises (1.) Serms. and Charges; 2. Introduct. to the Study of the Prophecies; 3. Moral and Political Dialogues; 4. Letters on Chivalry and Romance; 5. Critical Works and Dissertations, including his Horace. In 1808, 4to, 1809, 8vo, were pub. Warburton's Letters to Hurd, of which a lively review by Lord Jeffrey will be found in Elin. Rev., Jan. 1809; and in his contrib. to *Elin. "The most sensible and judicious of modern critics."—THOMAS WARTON.

"Warburton, and his imitator Hurd, and other living critics of that school, are loaded with familiar idioms, which at present would debase even the style of conversation."—Disraeli's Miscell. of Lit. Style.

"Hurd has perhaps the merit of being the first who in this country aimed at philosophical criticism: he had great innocency, a good deal of reading, and a facility in applying it; but he did not force very deeply, was somewhat of a coxcomb, and having always before his eyes a model neither good in itself nor made for him to emulate, he assumes a dogmatic arrogance, which, as it always offends the reader, so for the most part stands in the way of the author's own search for truth."—*Hallam's Lit. Hurdis, James, D.D., 1763–1801, a native of Sussex, educated at St. Mary's Hall and Magdalene Coll., Oxf.; Rector of Bishopstone, 1791; Prof. of Poetry at Oxford, 1793. He pub. a number of Poems, Lectures on Poetry, Sermons, and theolog. works. A collective ed. of his Poetical Works was pub. at Oxford in 1808, 3 vols. 8vo. Reviewed in Lon. Retrosp. Rev., vol. i. (1820) 58–70. The critic remarks that Hurdis had imbibed so much of the manner and spirit of the author of The Task

"As to entitle him, without much inaccuracy, to the title of a disciple of Cowper."

Hurdis's best-known poetical compositions are The Village Curate, 1788, tragedy, of Sir Thomas More, 1792, and The Favourite Village, 1800. His theological works are—1. A Short Critical Disquisition on the true meaning of the word צדקה [which he contends signifies the Crocodile] found in Genesis i. 21, Lon., 1790, 8vo. 2. Select Critical Remarks upon the Eng. Version of the First Ten Chaps. of Genesis, 1793, 8vo. 3. 12 Dissert. on Psalm and Prophecy, 1800, 8vo.

Hutcheson, Francis, 1694–1747, a native of the North of Ireland, where his father was a Presbyterian minister, entered the University of Glasgow in 1710, studied divinity, and was licensed to preach. When about to assume the pastoral charge of a small Presbyterian congregation in the North of England, he was persuaded to open an academy in Dublin, which was liberally encouraged. In 1729 he became Professor of Moral Philosophy in the Univ. of Dublin. In 1725 he pub. An Inquiry into the Original of our Ideas of Beauty and Virtue, and in 1728 an Essay on the Passions and Affections. He also pub. some manuals for his class, &c. His great work—A System of Moral Philosophy, with the Life, Writings, and Character of the Author, by Dr. Wm. Leechman—was pub. by his son, Francis Hutcheson, M.D., in 1755, Glasgow, 2 vols. 4to. His Letters on Virtue appeared in 1772, 8vo. Hutcheson is a warm advocate of the doctrine of an implanted moral sense, intended as a governing principle in the conduct of human actions. He undoubtedly did much to increase—he may almost be said to have established—the school of Shaftesbury and Butler in Scotland. At this we need not marvel, when we read the glowing tribute paid to his philosophical orations by an eminent authority of our own day:

"His Lectures, by their copious illustrations, their amiable tone of feeling, their enlightened views of liberty and human improvement, and their persuasive eloquence, made a deeper impression than the more severe and dry compositions of Butler could ever create, and laid the foundation in Scotland of the modern ethical school."—LORD BROUGHAM: Lives of Philosophers of the Time of Geo. III., art. Adam Smith, ed. 1855, 166.

"Butler and Hutcheson coincided in the two important positions, that disinterested affections, and a distinct moral faculty, are essential parts of human nature. Hutcheson is a chaste and simple writer, who imbued the opinions without the literary faults of his master, Shaftesbury. He has a clearness of expression and fulness of illustration which are wanting in Butler. But he is inferior to both these writers in the appearance at least of originality, and to Butler especially in that philosophical courage which, when it discovers the fountains of truth and falsehood, leaves others to follow the streams. . . . Hutcheson was the father of the modern school of philosophy in Scotland."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Prelim. Dissert. Encyc. Brit., and in his Works, 1854, i. 127, 129.

But the honour assigned to Hutcheson in the last paragraph cannot pass unchallenged. This distinction is awarded, by the great philosopher who has just closed his eyes upon the world, to Hutcheson's predecessor at Glasgow:

"Carmichael may be regarded, on good grounds, as the real founder of the Scottish school of philosophy."—SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON: Reid's Collected Writings, p. 30.

BATE, JULIUS, and Works there cited, in Watt's Bibl. Brit. and in this Dictionary.

"The works of Hutchinson are entitled to notice, as their author was the founder of a school of philosophy and theology to which some of the most celebrated men of the last century belonged. However absurd many of its speculations seem to be, there must be a plausibility in the leading principles of a system which engaged the attention and support of such men as President Forbes and Bishop Horne, Mr. Parkhurst and Bishop Horsley. The leading idea of Hutchinson is that the Hebrew Scriptures contain the elements of all rational philosophy as well as of genuine religion. That philosophy he opposes to the Newtonian; and hence he wrote his Moses Principia, or a commentary on the Mosaic account of the creation and the deluge. His Moses sine Principio contains an account of the fall, and of other subjects connected with it. His work on the confusion of tongues is very ingenious; in which he attempts to prove that it was not a diversity of language, but of religion, which took place at Babel. His Trinity of the Gentiles gives a view of ancient mythology and idolatry considered chiefly as a corruption of the true religion. In the Covenant of the Cherubim he gives a view of the perfection of the Hebrew Scriptures, and of the Covenant of the Divine Three for the redemption of man. Hutchinson is an obscure, and, at the same time, a most dogmatical and abusive, writer. It is often exceedingly difficult to ascertain his meaning, and still more difficult to acquiesce in it when ascertained. That he and his scholars have contributed considerably to the interpretation of the Bible, it would be wrong to deny. They have done a good deal, at the same time, to injure and clog the science of criticism."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"I have been in the habit of considering Hutchinsonianism as a tissue of fancies unsupported by reason or Scripture; and all that has occurred to me to read on that system has confirmed that impression."—ROBERT HALL: Works, ed. 1853, v. 534.

He was superseded by General Gage, May 13, 1774, and on the first of the following month sailed for England, where he was in the receipt of a pension until his death at Brompton, June 3, 1780. He was very unpopular in Massachusetts on account of his opposition to the principles of American liberty; and his disgrace was completed by the publication of some of his private letters, of the same tendency, to an ex-member of the British Parliament. These, with some others, were discovered in England by Benjamin Franklin, and by him sent back to Massachusetts to Dr. Cooper, with an injunction that they should not be copied nor published. 1. The Hist. of the Province of Massachusetts Bay from 1628 to 1749, vol. i., Bost., 1764, 8vo; Lon., 1765, 8vo. Trans. will be found in Watt's Bibl. Brit., and a Memoir of his Life was pub. in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1823, Pt. 1, 228-232, 296. In this Memoir occurs an interesting letter from Lord-Chancellor Eldon to Lieut.-Gen. Hutton, Royal Army, son of the mathematician, acknowledging the benefits which he had derived from Dr. Hutton's instructions when his pupil.

"He [Dr. Hutton] will long be remembered by a country so essentially benefited by his life and works."—LORD ELDON: ubi supra.

Hutton, James, M.D., 1726-1797, called the author of the Plutonion Theory of Geology, a native of Edinburgh, took his medical degree at Leyden in 1749. On his return home he became a zealous student of agriculture and geology, and gave the first-fruits of his researches to the world in 1777, under the title of Considerations on the Nature, Quality, and Distinctions of Coal and Culm, Edin., 8vo. In 1792 he pub. Dissertations on different subjects in Natural Philosophy, 4to; in 1794, Dissertation upon the Philosophy of Light, Heat, and Fire, 8vo; in the same year, An Investigation of the Principles of Knowledge, and of the Progress of Reason from Sense to Science and Philosophy, 3 vols. 4to; and in 1795, Theory of the Earth, with Proofs and Illustrations, 2 vols. 8vo. This is a collection, with additions, of his papers on this subject in the Edin. Phil. Trans. His theory, as communicated in the above papers, had been warmly attacked by Dr. Kirwan, in the Memoirs of the Irish Academy. The day that Hutton read Kirwan's attack he commenced the preparation of the MS. of the above two vols. for the press. Professor John Playfair zealously espoused Hutton's cause, and pub. in 1802, 8vo, Illustrations of the Huttonian Theory of the Earth. This work was reviewed in the same year by Dr. John Murray, in A Comparative View of the Huttonian and Neptunian Systems of Geo- logy, in Answer to the Illustrations, &c. In the hands of Professor Playfair we may safely leave the scientific reputation of Dr. Hutton. Playfair's biographical account of his "guide, philosopher and friend" will be found in Trans. Soc. Edin., 1803, vol. v. p. 39. Or, as this work is not easily accessible, see a memoir of Dr. Hutton, based upon the above, in Chambers and Thomson's *Biog. Hutton, William, 1723-1815, a bookseller of Birmingham, rose by perseverance and industry from poverty to affluence. In his last year—A Trip to Contham—written in his eighty-sixth year, he tells us—

"I took up my pen, and that with fear and trembling at the advanced age of fifty-six, a period when most would lay it down. I drove the quill thirty years, during which time I wrote and published thirty books."

His works were originally pub. from 1782 to 1810. A collective ed. of his Works was pub. in 1817, in 8 vols. 8vo, consisting of—Vol. 1. His Life, written by himself; Journey to London; 2d edition. II. History of Birmingham. III. Courts of Requests, and Dissertation on Juries and Hundred Court. IV. Battle of Bosworth Field; 2d edit., with Additions by Nichols. V. History of Derby; Description of Blackpool. VI. History of the Roman Wall. VII. Remarks on North Wales; Tour to Scarborough, with A Survey of York. VIII. Trip to Contham.

He also pub. The Barbers; a Poem, 1793, 8vo; Edgar and Elfrida; a Poem, 1794, 8vo. There has been a new ed. of his Poems, chiefly Tales, 8vo; and, since the collective ed. of his Works was pub., there have been new eds. of the Court of Requests, 1810, 8vo; his Life, by himself, 1841, sq.; Trip to Redear and Contham, 1841, 8vo. His topographical works are valued for the vast amount of minute details which they contain. See his autobiography, a curious and amusing work; Lon. Month. Rev., lxxxii. 202; *Blackw. He was a man of vast erudition, especially in the Eastern tongues, and pub. a number of learned works, and projected many more. Among the best-known of his publications are (1.) Catalogus Impressorum Librorum in Bibliotheca Bodleiana, Oxon., 1674, fol. New ed., chiefly prepared by Thos. Hearne, 1738, 2 vols. fol. New ed., 1843, 3 vols. fol.; vol. iv., 1850. 2. Quatuor Evangelica et Acta Apostolorum, Lingua Malaisia, Characteribus Europæis, Oxf., 1677, 4to. 3. De Ludis Orientalium, Heb. et Lat., libri ii., 1689-94, 8vo. 4. Veterum Persarum et Medorum Religionis eorumque Magorum Historia, 1700, 4to: 2d ed., 1706, 4to. Best ed., 1760, 4to.

"The variety and novelty of its contents gave this book a credit which in some degree it preserves: but Hyde was ignorant of the ancient language of Persia, and is said to have been often misled by Mohammedan authorities. The vast increase of Oriental information in modern times renders it difficult for any work of the seventeenth century to keep its ground."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europ.

Inchbald, Mrs. Elizabeth, 1756-1821, a celebrated actress, dramatist, and novelist, a native of Stanningfield, Suffolk, where her father, Mr. Simpson, was a farmer, came to London at the age of sixteen to seek an engagement on the stage, and married Mr. Inchbald, an actor of some reputation. The beautiful Mrs. Inchbald seems to have trod the boards with unbounded applause from her first appearance on the stage until her retirement in 1789. From this period she supported herself by her literary labours, which had commenced as early as 1781, although her Comedy then written—I'll Tell You What—was not performed until 1785. The first piece of her composition which was played was the Farce of A Mogul Tale; or, The Descent of the Balloon, which came out in 1784 at the Haymarket Theatre. The following is a list of her dramas: 1. A Mogul Tale; Farce, 1784. Not printed. 2. Appearance is against them; Farce, 1785, 8vo. 3. I'll Tell You What; Com., 1786, 8vo. 4. Widow's Vow; Farce, 1786, 8vo. 5. All on a Summer's Day; Com., 1787. Not printed. 12. Next-Door Neighbours; Com., 1791, 8vo. 13. Young Men and Old Women; Farce. Not printed. 14. Every one has his faults; Com., 1793, 8vo. 15. The Wedding Day; Com., 1794, 8vo. 16. Wives as they were, and Maids as they are; Com., 1797, 8vo. 17. Lovers' Vows; Play, 1798, 8vo. 18. Wise Man of the East; Play, 1799, 8vo. 19. To Marry or not to Marry; Com., 1805, 8vo. Mrs. Inchbald also edited a Collection of Plays, (The British Theatre), with Biographical and Critical Remarks, 25 vols., 1806-09; a Collection of Farces and other After-pieces, in 7 vols. 12mo, 1809; and the Modern Theatre, 10 vols. 12mo, 1809. But it is by her novels—A Simple Story, 1791, 4 vols. 12mo, and Nature and Art, 1796, 2 vols. 12mo—that this excellent woman is best known to the reading-world at large. A notice of each of these works from eminent critics is all for which we can find space:

"I have just been reading for the third. I believe for the fourth, time, 'The Simple Story'. Its effect upon my feelings was as powerful as at the first reading: I never read any novel—I except none,—I never read any novel that affected me so strongly, or that so completely possessed me with the belief in the real existence of all the persons it represents. I never once recollected the author whilst I was reading it; never said or thought, 'that's a fine sentiment'.—or, 'that is well expressed'.—or, 'that is well invented'; I believed all to be real, and was affected as I should be by the real scenes, if they had passed before my eyes: it is truly and deeply pathetic."—MARRIA EDGEWORTH.

"If Mrs. Radcliffe touched the trembling chords of the imagination, making wild music there, Mrs. Inchbald has no less power over the spring of the heart. She not only moves the affections, but melts us into 'all the luxury of woe.' Her Nature and Art is one of the most interesting and pathetic stories in the world. It is indeed too much so; the distress is too naked, and the situations hardly to be borne with patience."—HAZLITT: On the English Novelists.

Mrs. Inchbald had prepared four vols. of autobiography phical reminiscences, for which she was offered £1000 by Sir Richard Phillips, the publisher; but, acting by the advice of her spiritual guide, Dr. Poynter, she destroyed the MS. In 1833, however, Mr. Boden pub. Memoirs of Mrs. Inchbald, compiled from an autograph journal which she had kept for above half a century. Of these Memoirs a review, accompanied by copious extracts, will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1833, Pt. 2, 240-243, 232-336. A biographical notice of Mrs. Inchbald, pub. at the time of her death, will be found in the same periodical, 1821, Pt. 2, 184-185, 648. Ingersoll, C. M. English Grammar, Phila.

Ingersoll, Charles Jared, a member of the Philadelphia Bar, b. Oct. 3, 1782, at Philadelphia, is a son of Jared Ingersoll, of Philadelphia, and a grandson of Jared Ingersoll, of Connecticut, Stamp Commissioner. The subject of our notice was elected a member of the National House of Representatives in 1812, and has, until within the last seven or eight years, been actively engaged in public life in various capacities. His principal literary productions are the following:

About 1800, a poem, called Chiomara, published in the Port-Folio, edited by Joseph Dennie. 1801. A tragedy, in five acts, called Edwy and Elgiva, performed at the theatre, Chestnut Street. 1808. A pamphlet on the international disputes, called the Rights and Wrongs, Power and Policy, of the United States of America. 1810. A volume entitled Inebriquin the Jesuit's Letters on American literature and politics. Reviewed in the Lon. Quar. Rev., x. 491-539. See also Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, ii. 50. The review in the London Quarterly was answered by James K. Paulding, in his United States and England, pub. in 1814. 1811-15. Numerous contributions, anonymous, to the Democratic Press, Phila., and National Intelligencer, Washington, on the controversies with England which produced the war declared in 1812. 1813-15. Several Speeches, published in pamphlets, as member of Congress, concerning that war. 1823. Discourse before the American Philosophical Society on the influence of America on the mind. Republished in England and France. 1827. The Address of the Assembly of friends of domestic manufactures at Harrisburg; and (1829) most of the address of the National Assembly on that subject at New York. Translation of a French Work on the freedom of navigation and commerce of neutral nations in time of war, vindicating the law of nations that free ships make free goods; published in the American Law Journal. 1830. Review of Bourricenne's Memoirs, in American Quarterly Review. 1831. A dramatic tragic poem, in five acts, called Julian. 1838. Article on the Supreme Court of the United States, its judges and jurisdiction, in the United States Magazine and Democratic Review. 1835. A pamphlet entitled View of River-Rights. 1837. In the Convention to reform the Constitution of Pennsylvania, Reports on Currency, Speeches, published in pamphlets, on the Judiciary and Legislative power over bank-charters. 1841-42, '44-48. Reports and Speeches in Congress, published in pamphlets, on Tariff, Bank, Mexico, Texas, and Oregon. Many Discourses and Orations, published in pamphlets, on various subjects, literary and political. 1845-52. History of the War of 1812-15, between Great Britain and the United States: in four vol-lumes. Vols. i. and ii. were reviewed in the Lon. Athenæum, 1853, 103-104.

"The quotations that we have made suggest a concluding remark as to Mr. Ingersoll's style. It is a rough, energetic style, not deficient in happy and vivid expressions; but we have rarely met with American writing more contemptuous not only of English rules, but of the reader's respiratory conveniences. . . . The book is hard to read because of the uncouthness of its forms."—Ubi supra.

Whatever may be the peculiarities of Mr. Ingersoll's style, the public are certainly indebted to him for much valuable information, collected from original sources, and first made known to the world through the medium of these volumes.

Ingersoll, Jared, 1722-1781, a native of Milford, Conn., graduated at Yale College in 1742, and was appointed Stamp Commissioner in 1765. He was subsequently made Admiralty Judge for the Middle District, and resided some time in Philadelphia, but returned to New Haven, where he died in August, 1781. He was present at the debate on the Stamp-Act, and on his return home pub. a pamphlet on the subject, (New Haven, 1766, 4to), which is now very rare, and has even escaped the researches of Mr. Rich. Extracts from this pamphlet will be found in a review of Lord Mahon's Hist. of England, (by J. G. Palfrey,) N. Amer. Rev., lxxv. 141-143.

Ingersoll, Joseph Reed, a member of the Philadelphia Bar, grandson of the preceding, and brother of Charles Jared Ingersoll, (ante), was for many years an influential member of the National House of Representatives. For the last few years he has retired from public life. In addition to a number of printed speeches and addresses, political, literary, and philanthropic, Mr. Ingersoll is favourably known as an author by his translation into English of Roceus's tracts De Navibus et Naulo, and De Asseruatione, Phila., 1809, 8vo.

Ingulphus, a monastic historian, b. in London, about 1030, d. 1169, has long enjoyed the reputation of the authorship of a work on the life and miracles of St. Guthlac, and a History of the Monastery of Croylund, 626-1089. The latter, which embodies many particulars relating to English history, was pub. by Sir Henry Savile, in the Recur Angliarum Scriptorum post Bedam præcipui, Lon., 1596, fol.; Franc., 1601, fol.; and entire, with Peter of Blois's continuation, (1090-1117), in the Recur Angliarum Scriptorum veterum, Oxon., 1684, fol., tom. i. A new ed., edited by Mr. H. T. Riley, has been recently pub., 1854, p. 8vo, in Bohn's Antiq. Lib., vol. xxix. But, unfortunately for the fame of Ingulphus, it has been proved (by Sir Francis Palgrave first, in the Lon. Quar. Rev., and by Thomas Wright, in Biog. Brit. Lit.) that this history is a forgery. See these authorities, and Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. Lon., 1854, i. 16, and 27, n. In the history it is stated that its reputed author, Ingulphus, also wrote a life of St. Guthlac; but no such book is known to exist, nor is it mentioned by any other authority.

Innes, Louis, a R. Catholic priest, b. about 1650, Principal of the Scotch College at Paris, and Parisian secretary to James II., is said to have written the Memoirs of James II., an abstract from which was used by JAMES STANIER CLARKE (q. v.) in the work pub. by him, entitled The Life of James II., &c. The original memoir, in 4 vols. fol., MS., was destroyed, but a compendium was previously prepared, and it is to this we have reference in the above remark. But see next article.

Innes, Thomas, 1662-1744, a Roman Catholic priest, brother of the preceding, and his successor in the office of Principal of the Scotch College at Paris, was the author of A Critical Essay on the Ancient Inhabitants of the Northern Parts of Britain, in which he attacks with much success the assertions of Fordun's Chronicle, and other histories, respecting the antiquities of Scotland. He is also supposed by some to have been the author of the Memoir of James II. noticed in preceding article. A biographical account of Innes will be found in Chambers and Thoinson's Biog. Dict. of Eminent Scotsmen, 1853, iii. 183-187. Innes's Critical Essay was answered by Andrew Waddell, Edin., 1733, 4to, and by Alex. Taitt, 1741, 12mo. Both of these answers will be found in vol. i. of Scotia Rediviva, 1826, 8vo. Innes's Critical Essay is a work of great value to the student of Scotch history:

Ireland, William Henry, d. 1834, a son of Samuel Ireland, (ante), perpetrated in 1795-96 the remarkable Shakespeare Forgeries, which gave his name such infamous notoriety. The plays of Vortigern and Henry the Second, two of the Shakespeare Forgeries, were printed in 1799, 8vo, and Ireland repub. Vortigern, with an original preface and a facsimile of the forgery, in 1832, 8vo. The fol. vol. pub. by S. Ireland, 1796, containing the Miscellaneous Papers, &c., is very rare, as but 138 copies were preserved. See Wilson's Shaksperiana, p. 22. We happen to possess Ireland's own MS. of one of his forgeries.—Henry the Second: the rascal seemed to feel but little penitence for his fraud; for at the conclusion he indulges in the self-gratulatory exclamation, "Huzza! Huzza! Huzza!" In addition to the Shakespeare forgeries, Ireland wrote a number of novels, plays, poems, &c., 1799-1814, a list of which will be found in Watt's Bibl. Brit.

Samuel was really his first name.

Irving, Edward, 1792-1834, a native of Annan, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, was educated at the University of Edinburgh; Assistant minister to Dr. Chalmers, of St. John's Church, Glasgow, 1819-22; minister of the Scotch Church, Cross Street, Hatton Garden, London, 1822; removed to the large church built for his congregation in Regent's Square, 1829; accused of heresy by the Presbytery of London, 1830; ejected from his church, May 3, 1832. After his ejection, his friends purchased for him the picture-gallery of Benjamin West, in Newman Street, and there Mr. Irving attracted large crowds by his remarkable exhibitions of the "gift of unknown tongues," produced directly, as he believed, by divine inspiration. He died of consumption at Glasgow, December 6, 1834, in the 42d year of his age. He was undoubtedly a sincere and excellent man; but his judgment and prudence were not equal to his piety and devotion, even before the unmistakable evidences of insanity which eventually clouded his fine intellect. He pub.—For the Oracles of God, Four Orations; For Judgment to Come, an Argument in Nine Parts, 3d ed., Lon., 1824, 8vo; Babylon and Infidelity foredoomed of God, 1826, 2 vols. 12mo, reprinted in 1 vol. 8vo; Serms., Lects., and Occasional Discourses, Lon., 1828, 3 vols. 8vo; Homilies on the Sacraments, vol. i., 1828, sm. 8vo; The Last Days, 1828, 8vo, 2d ed., with Life by H. Bonar, 1850, p. 8vo; Expositions of the Book of Revelation, 1831, 4 vols. 12mo; and a number of single serms., theolog. treatises, &c. One of his best productions is his Introduction to Bishop Horne's Comment. on the Psalms, already noticed by us in the life of that excellent prelate. Mr. Irving's disciples are by no means extinct, in proof of which a project is now (1856) on foot to build Irvingite chapels in all the large towns of the United Kingdom; and it is reported that one gentleman in London has recently subscribed no less than £100,000 towards this scheme. Mr. Irving was editor and proprietor of The Morning Chronicle, a Democratic paper, started in New York, Oct. 1, 1802, and co-projector with his brother Washington of the humorous sketches which the latter expanded into the celebrated History of New York, by Diedrich Knickerbocker. In December, 1854, he took holy orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church. In addition to many fugitive essays contributed to the periodicals of the day, Mr. Irving is the author of two valuable works, viz.: 1. The Conquest of Florida, by Hernando de Soto, Phila., 1835, 2 vols. 12mo; Lon., 1855, 2 vols. p. 8vo. Revised ed., uniform with the collective ed. of Washington Irving's Works, N. York, 12mo. Irving, Thomas. Con. to Med. Com., 1790.

Irving, Washington, one of the most distinguished of modern authors, was born April 3, 1783, in the city of New York, in a house in William Street, between John and Fulton Streets, and not far from that venerable pile the Old Dutch Church. This mansion—so long an object of interest to citizen and sojourner—had until within the last few years resisted the progress of "improvement," which was gradually changing the face of the neighborhood; but it too at last yielded to its fate, and in 1846 its site was occupied by one of the stately "Washington Strees." The father of Washington Irving was a native of Scotland, his mother an Englishwoman, and perhaps it is not entirely a matter of imagination to fancy that the national characteristics of both parents are to be discovered in several of the productions of the author of The Sketch-Book and Bracebridge Hall.

The earliest of Mr. Irving's contributions to the Republic of Letters—a number of letters on the drama, the social customs of New York, &c.—were pub., in 1802, (under the nom de plume of Jonathan Oldstyle,) in The Morning Chronicle, a Democratic journal, edited by the author's brother, Dr. Peter Irving. These epistles appeared in pamphlet form, without the author's consent, in the year 1824. After some attention to the study of Coke and Blackstone, the state of Mr. Irving's health caused him in 1804 to seek for that physical benefit which a change of scene and climate might naturally be expected to afford. After an absence of two years in Italy, Switzerland, France, and England, &c., he returned home in 1806, resumed his legal studies, and was admitted to the bar. In January, 1807, appeared, to the great delight of the wits of the good city of Gotham,—always willing to enjoy a laugh.—No. 1 of a semi-monthly magazine, the joint production of Washington Irving, James K. Paulding, and William Irving; the latter contributing the poetry, and hints and sketches for some of the essays. This was the since-famous Salmagundi, or The Whim-Whams and Opinions of Luncheon Langstaff and Others. The amusing character of this periodical rendered it exceedingly agreeable to the town, and its popularity promised a long and profitable life; but for some reason or other it was discontinued after the issue of the twentieth number. In 1809 was pub. the famous History of New York, by Diedrich Knickerbocker. The first part of this work was sketched in company with Dr. Peter Irving, who, on his departure for Europe, confided the whole to Washington, by whose humorous genius it was expanded to its present shape. Though this was one of the first-fruits of his inventive talent, it is risky but little to affirm that in its peculiar qualities it has not been surpassed by any later efforts—successful as they have been—of its accomplished author. In 1810, Washington Irving—who had never found sufficient attraction in his legal studies to induce him to practise the profession—was admitted as a partner, with two of his brothers, in the extensive commercial establishment which they conducted at New York and Liverpool. The failure of this house in 1817, consequent upon the pecuniary difficulties which followed the treaty of peace between England and the United States, occurred when Washington was in Europe, and this reverse of fortune induced the already popular author to determine to follow literature as a profession. He had of late employed his pen but seldom: a series of naval biographies contributed to Moses Thomas's (of Philadelphia) Analectic Magazine, (of which Irving was in 1813-14 the editor,) and a biographical sketch of Thomas Campbell, prefixed to a Philadelphia edit. of the works of the latter, are all of Irving's productions with which the world seems to have been favoured, from the date of the publication of The Knickerbocker, in 1809 to the time of the appearance of The Sketch-Book, in 1819. The numbers of the last-named work (composed in London) were transmitted to New York for publication, were read with avidity on both sides of the water, and several of the series were soon copied by Jerdan in the London Literary Gazette, and by the editors of other periodicals.

"We are greatly at a loss [remarks the formidable Blackwood in the number for February, 1820] to comprehend for what reason Mr. Irving has thought fit to publish his Sketch-Book in America earlier than in Britain; but at all events he is doing himself great injustice by not having an edition printed here of every number, after it has appeared in New York. Nothing has been written for a long time, for which it would be more safe to promise great and eager acceptance."—Vol. vi. 557. (by J. G. Lockhart.)

This is the article referred to by Sir Walter Scott in the letter quoted by Irving in the Preface to his revised edit. of The Sketch-Book.

This was encouragement indeed,—encouragement such as many a British aspirant for literary fame would have given the copy-right of his best work to have secured. In the same month in which the above eulogy appeared, Irving pub. in London, under the nom de plume of Geoffrey Crayon, Gent<sup>l</sup>, the first vol. of The Sketch-Book. It was printed by John Miller, but at the author's expense; Murray, the Great Mogul of the book-trade, having declined the enterprise. The failure of Miller within a few weeks after the publication threw Irving again on the town for a publisher, and, through the friendly offices of Sir Walter Scott, Murray was induced to act in the premises. He gave the author £200, which he soon felt justified by the sale of the work in increasing to £400. The Sketch-Book was originally pub. in February, 1820, in 1 vol., but in July of the same year it appeared in 2 vols.,—a 2d edit. of the 1st, together with a new vol. The author had now attained an extended literary reputation, both at home and abroad; and so far was he from having any difficulty in procuring a publisher, that when Bracebridge Hall, or the Humourists, was ready for the press in 1822, Mr. Murray was ready to offer 1000 guineas for the copy-right without having seen the MS. He obtained the coveted prize at his offer, and subsequently gave the same author nearly twice as much (£2000) for the Chronicle of the Conquest of Granada, and quite three times as much (3000 guineas) for the History of the Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus. But we anticipate. The dates of the publications of Irving's succeeding works, given to the world between the appearance of The Sketch-Book in London, in 1820, and his return to the United States in May, 1832, were as follows:

The Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus, 1828, 4 vols. 8vo; N. York, 1828, 3 vols. 8vo.

Chronicle of the Conquest of Granada, Lon., 1829, 2 vols. p. 8vo; Phila., 1829, 2 vols. 12mo.

Voyages of the Companions of Columbus, 1 vol., Lon., Paris, and Phila., 1831.

The Alhambra, Lon., 1832, 2 vols. 8vo; Phila., 1832, 2 vols. 12mo.

In May, 1832, as above stated, Mr. Irving returned home, after an absence of seventeen years. During this long period he had been an extensive traveller. We left him at London, superintending the publication of The Sketch-Book, in 1820. A portion of this year and of the following was spent in the city of Paris: the winter of 1822 was passed at Dresden, and that of 1825 in the South of France. In the winter of 1825-26, at the earnest request of Mr. Alexander H. Everett, American minister to Spain,—to whom the idea was first suggested by O. Rich, Esq., American Consul at Madrid,—Mr. Irving visited Madrid for the purpose of translating into English the valuable compilation of Navarrete, Coleccion de los

Vingos y Descubrimientos, &c. pub. at Madrid in 1825, (after Mr. Irving's arrival,) in 2 vols. 4to. Mr. Rich, indeed, had from the first set his heart—not upon a mere translation of this collection, but—upon a Life of Columbus from the pen of Washington Irving. This darling desire he was so happy as to see realized, and to him, therefore, is the world indebted for the publication of this work. Mr. Irving was the guest of this eminent bibliographer, whose name has long been honoured by students in both hemispheres; and, says he,

"In his extensive and curious library I found one of the best collections extant of Spanish colonial history, containing many documents for which I might elsewhere search in vain. This he put at my absolute command, with a frankness and unreserve seldom to be met with among the possessors of such rare and valuable works; and his library has been my main resource throughout the whole of my labours."

We shall have more to quote to Mr. Rich's credit when we reach his patronymic in the future pages of our Dictionary. In this year (1826) and the following, as also in the spring of 1829, Mr. Irving made profitable journeys in the South of Spain, the results of which were given to the world in 1829, in The Chronicle of the Conquest of Granada; in 1832, in the picturesque pages of The Alhambra; in 1835, in The Legends of the Conquest of Spain; and in 1849-50, in Mahomet and his Successors.

Mr. Irving left Spain in July, 1829, and returned to London to discharge the duties connected with the Secretaryship of Legation to the American Embassy, which had been conferred upon him during his absence. In 1830 Mr. Henry Hallam and himself were honoured by the gift of the two fifty-guinea gold medals ordered by George IV. to be presented to the two authors who should be adjudged to have attained the greatest excellence in historical composition. This high compliment to Mr. Irving was a well-deserved tribute to the merits of his History of the Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus. In the next year the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon Mr. Irving by the University of Oxford,—a testimonial which that august body is not in the habit of bestowing upon slight foundations. After an absence protracted through seventeen years, Mr. Irving at length sailed for home, and arrived in New York on the 21st day of May, 1832. To one who had conferred such imperishable renown upon the American name—even had there been nothing in the way to elicit that enthusiastic affection with which Washington Irving is regarded by his countrymen—no common honours were accorded. A public dinner was immediately tendered to him in New York, and the friends of early days, together with those who had grown into civic eminence and social consideration during his absence, united in paying homage to him who had conferred honour upon all. The citizens of other States also claimed their right to entertain their illustrious countryman, and nothing but that modesty which has always been a distinguishing trait of his character prevented a series of ovations and a triumphal march through the American Republic from Boston to St. Louis and Philadelphia to New Orleans.

"We cannot refuse ourselves the pleasure," remarks one of the most eminent of his countrymen, "of bearing our humble part in the cordial welcome with which the unanimous voice of the country is now greeting the distinguished pilgrim on his return from abroad. . . . The open and hearty welcome which his fellow-citizens have given him shows that he is best appreciated where he is best known. His reception at New York was the finest triumph that has yet been accorded to literary desert in the New World."—EDWARD EVERETT: Review of The Alhambra, in N. Amer. Rev. xxxv. 265-282.

Shortly after his return to the United States, Mr. Irving visited some of the most interesting portions of the Great West, and gratified the world with the fruits of his researches among the Indians, in The Tour on the Prairies, pub. in the Crayon Miscellany in 1835. Those more fond of studying the phenomena of life under another phase, found in the Recollections of Abbotsford and Newstead Abbey, and The Legends of the Conquest of Spain,—comprising the second and third vols. of the Crayon Miscellany,—sufficient to charm the imagination and delight the taste. To this collection succeeded Astoria; or, Anecdotes of an Enterprise beyond the Rocky Mountains, pub. in 1836, (in which the author was assisted by his nephew, Pierre M. Irving;) and the Adventures of Captain Bonneville, U.S.A., in the Rocky Mountains and the Far West, (based upon the MSS. of Capt. B. and other materials,) which was given to the world in 1837. In the years 1839 and '40, Mr. Irving contributed a number of papers to The Knickerbocker Magazine, a portion of which, with other fugitive articles, were collected in 1855, and pub. in a vol. under the title of Wolfert's Roost. From 1842 to '46 Mr. Irving resided at Madrid as United States Minister to Spain, and, returning home in the latter year, sought a quiet retreat for his remaining years in Wolfert's Roost,—an earthly paradise which we shall not attempt to describe after the portraiture which the owner himself has given to the world. The "Stronghold of old Baltus Van Tassel on the Banks of the Hudson," so graphically sketched in the Legend of Sleepy Hollow, has now acquired a double share of renown and undying honours by the occupancy of its eloquent topographer. A well-drawn picture of Wolfert's Roost and its present lord (by Henry T. Tuckerman) will be found in The Homes of American Authors. N. York, 1853. Here, in his bachelor-home,—for Geoffrey Crayon has been content to eulogize the blessings of matrimony whilst denying himself their indulgence,—in the company of his surviving brother and affectionate nieces, who are to him as daughters, the author of the Sketch-Book passes his tranquil days in calm anticipation of that change which, we trust, for the sake of his many friends, is yet at a long distance.

His publications since his retirement have been the Biography and Poetical Remains of the late Margaret Miller Davidson, 1841; Oliver Goldsmith, a Biography, 1849, (enlarged from a sketch prefixed to the Works of the latter pub. in Paris, Galigiani, 1825, 4 vols., Baudry, 1837, 4 vols. 8vo;) Mahomet and his Successors, 2 vols., 1849-50; The Life of George Washington, vol. i., 1855, ii. and iii., 1856. This work will probably comprise two or three more volumes. Mr. Irving has also within the last few years superintended the publication of a revised edit. of his works,—urged thereto by the persuasions of the eminent publisher, Mr. George P. Putnam, of New York. The new edit. was issued by Mr. Putnam in 15 vols., 1848-50, and the sale so far (i. e. to Jan. 1857) has been 250,000 vols., which, added to about as many disposed of the old edit., gives an aggregate sale in America alone of half a million vols. of the works of this popular author. This enumeration does not include the 98,000 vols. already printed of the unfinished life of Washington, nor the number of copies sold of Wolfert's Roost, which must be very large.

The Works of Washington Irving, in the new revised and uniform edit. just referred to, are thus arranged: Vol. I. Knickerbocker's History of New York. II. The Sketch-Book. III., IV., V. Columbus and his Companions. VI. Bracebridge Hall. VII. Tales of a Traveller. VIII. Astoria. IX. The Crayon Miscellany. X. Capt. Bonneville's Adventures. XI. Oliver Goldsmith; a Biography. XII., XIII. Mahomet and his Successors. XIV. The Conquest of Granada. XV. The Alhambra. To these must be added Wolfert's Roost and The Life of Washington, (also pub. by Geo. P. Putnam & Co. of New York.) which, with The Legends of the Conquest of Spain, will be included in a Second Series of uniform edit. of Irving's Works. A collective London edit. is pub. by Henry G. Bohn, uniform with his Standard Library. It is comprised in 10 thick 8vo vols., (1851,)—viz.: Vol. I. Salmagundi and Knickerbocker, with Portrait of Irving. II. Sketch-Book, and Life of Goldsmith. III. Bracebridge Hall, Abbotsford, and Newstead. IV. Tales of a Traveller, and The Alhambra. V. Conquest of Granada, and Conquest of Spain. VI., VII., Life of Columbus, and Companions of Columbus, with a New Index and a fine Portrait. VIII. Astoria, and a Tour on the Prairies. IX. Mahomet and his Successors, with Portrait. X. Conquest of Florida, (by Theodore Irving,) and Adventures of Capt. Bonneville. Irving's Works are also pub. in London, from time to time, by Murray, Bentley, Routledge, W. Smith, Tegg, &c.

Some have been issued with illustrations, on both sides of the Atlantic; and Messrs. Childs & Peterson, of Philadelphia, publish Irving's Select Works, illustrated by F. O. C. Darley and others, in 6 vols. 8vo; viz.: I. The Sketch-Book. II. Knickerbocker's History of New York. III. Tales of a Traveller. IV. Oliver Goldsmith; a Biography. V. The Alhambra. VI. Bracebridge Hall; or, The Humorists.

This volume (VI.) is illustrated by fourteen steel plates, engraved by Greatbach and others, from original designs by Schmolze.

What more acceptable testimonial of regard could be presented to a friend than this valuable set of works?

The same publishers issue a companion-volume to this set, or the complete works of Irving, entitled The Illustrated Beauties of Irving, "containing thirty spirited Illustrations of the Works of Washington Irving, finely engraved on steel, accompanied by an elaborate and carefully-prepared Biographical and Critical Sketch of Mr. Irving, from Allibone's Dictionary of Authors; also, a notice of Sunny Side, &c., by H. T. Tuckerman, Esq.; together with choice passages selected from each of Mr. Irving's works."

The "notice" by Mr. Tuckerman, above referred to, is an extract from the admirable sketch entitled Sunny Side and its Proprietor, to which we have just called the attention of the reader who desires to see a graphic portraiture of Geoffrey Crayon reposing amidst the rural shades of Sleepy Hollow. We can bear witness to the faithfulness of the picture. There are enough points of resemblance in literary taste, culture, and style between the limner and his subject to make "Tuckerman upon Irving" sound as natural and fitting as "Coke upon Littleton."

Nor must we omit to notice the Illustrated Edition of Irving's Life of Washington, now (1858) in course of publication (by Putnam) in semi-monthly Parts, (14 to each vol.,) imp. 8vo, 100 copies large paper 40.

And now, in accordance with our promise in the preface to this work,—a promise which the preceding pages will prove we have neither forgotten nor delayed to fulfil,—we shall proceed to adduce, as we have done in other instances, the verdicts which eminent critics have passed upon the literary characteristics of the subject of our notice. In many preceding cases we have been obliged to omit much more than we had space to quote of interesting and truly valuable criticism; but, when we commence the pleasing task of citing opinions respecting the productions of Washington Irving, we are literally oppressed by the embarras de richesses. As we glance around our library-shelves, and behold the mass of materials which we have been for years collecting on this theme, (as we have on the same scale, though not to the same extent, collected for the illustration of many thousands of other writers,) we feel it to be no exaggeration to say that we could readily fill a goodly octavo volume with the matter which our space will oblige us to reject. Be it our care, therefore, to make that judicious selection from the materials which invite our research, which shall truly represent the impression which this distinguished writer has made upon the present generation and the one which first sat in judgment on the early fruits of his literary toil.

I. SALMAGUNDI; OR, THE WHIM-WHAMS AND OPINIONS OF LAUNCELOT LANGSTAFF, ESQ., AND OTHERS, JANUARY, 1807, to January, 1808:

"We all remember the success of Salmagundi, to which he was a large and distinguished contributor; with what rapidity and to what extent it circulated through America; how familiar it made us with the local pleasantries and the personal humours of New York, and what an abiding influence it has had in that city, by forming a sort of school of wit of a character somewhat marked and peculiar, and superior to every thing our country has witnessed, except, perhaps, that of the wits of The Anarchist in Connecticut."—EDWARD EVERETT; N. Amer. Rev., xv. 206, July, 1822.

"We have no hesitation in saying at the outset, that we consider the good papers of Salmagundi, and the greater part of Knickerbocker, superior to the Sketch-Book. . . . It (Salmagundi) was exceedingly pleasant morning or after-dinner reading, never taking up too much of a gentleman's time from his business and pleasures, nor so exalted and spiritualized as to seem mystical to his far-reaching vision. . . . Though its wit is sometimes forced, and its serious style sometimes false, upon looking it over we have found it full of entertainment, with an infinite variety of characters and circumstances, and with that amiable, good-natured wit and pathos which shows that the heart has not grown hard while making merriness of the world."—RICHARD M. DANA, SR.; N. Amer. Rev., ix. 323, 324, 344-345, Sept. 1819.

"The better pieces are written in Mr. Irving's best manner. Take it altogether, it was certainly a production of extraordinary merit, and was instantaneously and universally recognised as such by the public. It wants of course the greater merits of the modern British Collections of Essays; but for spirit, effect, and actual literary value, we doubt whether any publication of the class since The Spectator, upon which it is directly modelled, can fairly be put in competition with it."—ALEXANDER H. EVERETT; N. Amer. Rev., xxviii. 116, Jan. 1823.

"It was in form and method of publication imitated from The Spectator, but, in details, spirit, and aim, so expressly adapted to the latitude of New York, that its appearance was hailed with a delight hitherto unknown; it was, in fact, a complete triumph of local genius."—HENRY T. TUCKERMAN; Sketch of Amer. Lit.

"In this work we are introduced to the watering-places, fairs, elections, reviews, and coteries of the daughter-country, and particularly of New York, the centre of its fashion, in a style of unsparing and broad humour, infinitely outdoing any liberties which Mathews thought fit to take with his hospitable entertainers, and reflecting some credit on the good-temper which was shown by its recipients. . . . That Salmagundi owes its principal pretensions to Mr. Irving's exertions we are more inclined to conclude from the evidence of a work in which, not very long afterwards, he tried his strength single-handed, under the title of Knickerbocker's Humorous History of New York.—Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxi. 474, 475, March, 1825.

"The production of Paulding, Irving, Verplanck, and perhaps of others, in partnership [an error, see p. 935]: the papers of Paulding are more sarcastic, ill-natured, acrimonious,—bitter,—than those of Irving; but quite as able: those by Verplanck we do not know; we have only heard of him as one of the writers: it is a work in two volumes duodecimo; essays, after the manner of Goldsmith,—a downright, secret, labour'd, continual imitation of him,—abounding, too, in plagiarisms: the title is from our English FIVE-FLAMBS: oriental papers, the little man in black, &c. &c. from the Citizen of the World: parts are capital: as a whole, the work is quite superior to any thing of the kind which this age has produced."—JOHN NEAL: Blackw. Mag., xvii. 61, Jan. 1825.

2. KNICKERBOCKER'S HISTORY OF NEW YORK, 1809. It was to this work that Irving owed his fortunate introduction to Sir Walter Scott. Campbell was aware of the delight with which it was read by the Great Unknown, and therefore gave the author a letter to Abbotsford. The young American arrived at Selkirk on the 29th of August, 1817.

"I had come down from Edinburgh," he tells us, "partly to visit Melrose Abbey and its vicinity, but chiefly to get a sight of the 'mighty minister of the North.' I had a letter of introduction to him from Thomas Campbell, the poet, and had reason to think, from the interest he had taken in some of my earlier scribbles, that a visit from me would not be deemed an intrusion. On the following morning, after an early breakfast, I set off in a postchaise for the Abbey. On the way thither I stopped at the gate of Abbotsford, and sent the postillion to the house with the letter of introduction and my card on which I had written that I was on my way to the ruins of Melrose Abbey, and wished to know whether it would be agreeable to Mr. Scott (he had not yet been made a laconet) to receive a visit from me in the course of the morning."—Irving's Abbotsford.

Mr. Lockhart shall tell us in what spirit this "modest approach" was received:

"Scott's family well remember the delight with which he received this announcement: he was at breakfast, and sallied forth instantly, dogs and children after him as usual, to greet the guest and conduct him in person from the highway to the door."—Lockhart's Life of Scott.

Mr. Irving must be permitted to take up the thread: "Before Scott had reached the gate he called out to me in a hearty tone, welcoming me to Abbotsford, and asking news of Campbell. Arrived at the door of the chaise, he grasped me warmly by the hand: 'Come, drive down, drive down to the house,' said he: 'ye're juist in time for breakfast, and afterwards ye shall see all the wonders of the Abbey.'

"I would have excused myself on the plea of having already made my breakfast. 'Hout, man!' cried he: 'a ride in the morning in the keen air of the Scotch hills is warrant enough for a second breakfast!'"—Ibid supra.

Thus graphically is sketched, by the gratified stranger, his first interview with the tried and loving friend of many years; and this lifelike description is familiar, or should be so, to all. But it has been the happy lot of the writer of these pages to hear from Irving's own lips—while the generous tear of affection quivered in his eye—the pathetic account of his last interview with his friend, a few months before the lamentations of nations over his grave testified to the strong hold which he had gained upon the hearts of his readers in every land. But we are anticipating here: should we ever record the deeply-interesting narration to which we refer, it will be more appropriately introduced in our life of the author of Waverley. It is worth mentioning, in this connexion, that in a letter from Scott to John Richardson, dated 22d Sept. 1817, he remarks:

"When you see Tom Campbell, tell him with my best love that I have to thank him for making me known to Mr. Washington Irving, who is one of the best and pleasantest acquaintances I have made this many a day."

Every American who has been abroad, and mingled at all in the polite circles of Europe, can testify that Sir Walter Scott here speaks that only which thousands will gladly endorse. We quote one instance which we find recorded in Mr. N. P. Willis's agreeable Pencilings by the Way. He is describing an evening party at the Countess of Blessington's:

"Nearest me sat Smith, the author of Rejected Addresses.—a hale, handsome man, apparently fifty, with white hair, and a very nobly-formed head and physiognomy. . . . Among other things, he talked a great deal of America, and asked me if I knew our distinguished countryman, Washington Irving. I had never been so fortunate as to meet him. 'You have lost a great deal,' he said, 'for never was so delightful a fellow. I was once taken down with him into the country by a merchant to dinner. Our friend stopped his carriage at the gate of his park, and asked us if we would walk through his grounds to the house. Irving refused, and held me down by the coat, so that we drove on to the house together, leaving our host to follow on foot. "I make it a principle," said Irving, "never to walk with a man through his own grounds. I have no idea of praising a thing whether I like it or not. You and I will do them to-morrow morning by ourselves." The rest of the company had turned their attention to Smith as he began his story, and there was a universal inquiry after Mr. Irving. Indeed, the first questions on the lips of every one to whom I am introduced as an American are of him and Cooper."

Tom Moore's warm affection for the author of The Sketch-Book is no secret to those who have read the entertaining Diary of the former, recently published by Lord John Russell. We quote from one of the poet's entries a bon mot of Irving's, which has amused us not a little:

"April 10, 1830.—Forgot to mention in its place Irving's description of the evening at Horace Twiss's, (the evening of the day he wanted me to meet the Duke of Wellington.) But few people had come; and 'there was Twiss,' said Irving, 'with his two great men, the Duke and the Chancellor, just like a spider that has got two big flies and does not know what to do with them.'"

But, the reader will query, how had Scott become acquainted with the literary merits of the young American?—for such acquaintance he seems to have had. Lockhart shall again be our spokesman:

"Scott had received The History of New York by Knickerbocker, shortly after its appearance in 1812, from an accomplished American traveller, Mr. Brevort; and the admirable humour of this early work had led him to anticipate the brilliant career which its author has since run. Mr. Thomas Campbell, being no stranger to Scott's high estimate of Irving's genius, gave him a letter of introduction." &c.

It so happens—though it is hardly an accident, either—that we have before us a fac-simile of Scott's letter to Mr. Henry Brevort, acknowledging the receipt of Knickerbocker's History of New York; and it is strictly to our present purpose—the citation of opinions upon Irving's works—to quote this epistle for the gratification of the reader:

"My Dear Sir:—I beg you to accept my best thanks for the uncommon degree of entertainment which I have received from the most excellently-jocose history of New York. I am sensible that as a stranger to American parties and politics I must lose much of the concealed satire of the piece; but I must own that, looking at the simple and obvious meaning only, I have never read any thing so closely resembling the style of Dean Swift as the annals of Diedrich Knickerbocker. I have been employed these few evenings in reading them aloud to Mrs. S. and two ladies who are our guests, and our sides have been absolutely sore with laughing. I think, too, there are passages which indicate that the author possesses power of a different kind, and (he has some touches which remind me much of Sterne. I beg you will have the kindness to let me know when Mr. Irvine takes pen in hand again, for assuredly I shall expect a very great treat, which I may chance never to hear of but through your kindness. Believe me, dear sir, Your obliged and humble servant,

"WALTER SCOTT.

"Abbotsford, 23d April, 1813."

We have already seen that it was to the friendly offices of Scott that Irving was indebted for the happy circumstance which made John Murray his publisher, and the handsome tribute to both these gentlemen which appears in the Preface to the revised edition of The Sketch-Book (New York, 1848) must not be omitted in this place:

"From that time [the publication of The Sketch-Book in 1820] Murray became my publisher, conducting himself in all his dealings with that fair, open, and liberal spirit which had obtained for him the well-merited appellation of the Prince of Booksellers. Thus, under the kind and cordial auspices of Sir Walter Scott, I began my literary career in Europe; and I feel that I am but discharging, in a trifling degree, my debt of gratitude to the memory of that golden-hearted man in acknowledging my obligations to him. But who of his literary contemporaries ever applied to him for aid or counsel that did not experience the most prompt, generous, and effectual assistance?"

We continue the quotation of opinions:

"Equally or more admired [than Salmagundi] was Knickerbocker's History of New York, a work to be compared with any thing of the kind in our language; a book of unwearying pleasantry, which, instead of flashing out, as English and American humour is wont, from time to time, with long and dull intervals, is kept up with a true French vivacity from beginning to end; a book which, if it have a fault, has only that of being too pleasant, too sustained a tissue of merriment and ridicule."—EDWARD EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., xv. 206, July, 1822.

"It has the same faults and same good qualities in its style, its wit and humour, and its characters are evidently by the same hand, as the leading ones in Salmagundi, though not copies from them. They are perfectly fresh and original, and suited to their situations. Too much of the first part of the first volume is laborious and up-hill; and there are places, here and there, in the last part, to which there is the same objection. Our feelings seldom flag in the second."—RICHARD H. DANA, SR.: N. Amer. Rev., ix. 345, Sept. 1819.

"This we consider as equal to the best, and in some respects perhaps superior to any other of our author's productions. [viz.: Old-style Salmagundi, Naval Biographies, The Sketch-Book, Braebridge Hall, Tales of a Traveller, and Columbus.] It is the one which exhibits most distinctly the stamp of real inventive power, the true test, as we have hinted, of genius. The plan, though simple enough, and when hit upon sufficiently obvious, is a truly original."—ALEX. H. EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., xxviii. 171-178, Jan. 1829.

"The most elaborate piece of humor in our literature,—Irving's facetious history of his native town."—HENRY T. TUCKERMAN: Sketch of Amer. Lit.

"Of the point of many of the allusions contained in this political satire, partaking somewhat of the style of Swift's Tale of a Tub, and in which more than one President of the United States figures, we very much lament that we are not fully competent to judge. To us it is a tantalizing book, of which all that we understand is so good, and affords us so much pleasure, even through an imperfect acquaintance with it, that we cannot but conclude that a thorough knowledge of the whole point in every part would be a treat indeed."—Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxi. 475, March, 1825.

Another authority does not consider that Irving was so invariably allegorical as the critic just quoted seems to suppose:

"By nine readers out of ten, perhaps, Knickerbocker is read as a piece of generous drollery,—nothing more. Be it so. It will wear the better. The design of Irving himself is not always clear, nor was he always undeviating in his course. Truth or fable, fact or falsehood,—it was all the same to him, if a bit of material came in his way. In a word, we look upon this volume of Knickerbocker,—though it is tiresome, though there are some wretched failures in it, a little overdoing of the humorous, and a little confusion of purpose throughout,—as a work honourable to English literature, manly, bold, and so altogether original, without being extravagant, as to stand alone among the labours of men."—JOHN NEAL: Blackw. Mag., xvii. 62, Jan. 1825.

"To speak the plain truth, Diederich Knickerbocker is, after all, our favourite. There is more richness of humour, and there is more strength of language too, in these earlier efforts."—Blackw. Mag., xiv. 564, Nov. 1823.

"The whole book is a jeu d'esprit, and perhaps its only fault is, that no jeu d'esprit ought to be quite so long as to fill two closely-printed volumes."—Ibid., vii. 361, July, 1820, (by J. G. Lockhart.)

The eloquent historian of The Conquest of Mexico, in a dissertation upon the Right of Title by Discovery, after referring the reader to some of the great legal luminaries of different countries,—to Vattel, Kent, and Whenton,—concludes with the following allusion to the erudite essay of our ancient friend, the chronicler of the early fortunes of Nieuw-Nederlands:

"If it were not treating a grave discussion too lightly, I should crave leave to refer the reader to the renowned Diederich Knickerbocker's History of New York. (Book 1, chap. 5.) for a luminous disquisition on this knotty question. At all events, he will find there the popular arguments subjected to the test of ridicule,—a test showing, more than any reasoning can, how much, or rather how little, they are really worth."—Prescott's Hist. of the Conquest of Mexico, 23d ed., Post., 1855 ii. 33, n.

For further notices of Knickerbocker's History of New York, see Lon. Month. Rev., xciv. 67; Lon. Athen., 1832, 458; Knickerbocker Mag., iii. 1; GRAHAM, JAMES, p. 717, in this Dictionary.

3. THE SKETCH-BOOK, 1819–20.

"I have glanced over The Sketch-Book. It is positively beautiful and increases my desire to crimp you, if it be possible."—Sir Walter Scott to Washington Irving, offering him the editorship (with a salary of £500 per annum) of a projected Edinburgh weekly literary periodical. This offer was gratefully declined by Irving.

"But, though it is primarily for its style and composition that we are induced to notice this book, it would be quite unjust to the author not to add, that he deserves very high commendation for its more substantial qualities; and that we have seldom seen a character that gave us a more pleasing impression of the writer's character, or a more favourable one of his judgment and taste. . . . It seemed fair and courteous, and what we have quoted, we are persuaded will justify all that we have said in his favour. . . . We have found the book in the hands of most of those to whom we have thought of mentioning it."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., xxxiv. 161, 168, 176, Aug. 1820.

"Few recent publications have been so well received in England as The Sketch-Book. Several of the Waverley novels have passed through fewer editions than this agreeable work, and the journals of most consequence have paid the highest compliments to its merit. We are nevertheless free to confess that we think The Sketch-Book as a whole inferior to the author's earlier writings."—EDWARD EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., xv. 208, July, 1822.

"We will be open with him, and tell him that we do not think the change is for the better. He appears to have lost a little of that natural run of style for which his lighter writings were so remarkable. He has given up something of his direct, simple manner, and plain phraseology, for a more studied, periphrastical mode of expression. He seems to have exchanged words and phrases which were strong, distinct, and definite, for a gentler sort of language, cool, less definite, and general. It is as if his mother-English had been sent abroad to be improved, and in attempting to become accomplished, had lost too many of her home qualities. . . . The Sketch-Book is extremely popular, and it is worthy of being so. Yet it is with surprise that we have heard its style indiscriminately praised. . . . Had we thought less highly of his powers, we should have said less about his errors. Did we not take delight in reading him, we should have been less earnest about his mistakes. . . . He is a man of genius, and able to bear his faults."—RICHARD H. DANA, SR.: N. Amer. Rev., ix. 348, 350, 356, Sept. 1819.

"The characteristics of The Sketch-Book are essentially the same with those of the preceding work; but, with somewhat more polish and elegance, it has somewhat less vivacity, freshness, and power. This difference constitutes the distinction between Mr. Irving's first and second manner, the latter of which is preserved in all his subsequent publications, excepting the one immediately before us, [Life of Columbus.] Of these two manners, the one or the other may perhaps be preferred by different readers, according to their different tastes. We incline ourselves to the former, conceiving that spirit and vigour are the highest qualities of style, and that the loss of any merit of this description is but poorly compensated by the little additional finish."—ALEX. H. EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., xxxlii. 119, Jan. 1829.

"His stories of Rip Van Winkle and Sleepy Hollow are perhaps the finest pieces of original fictitious writing that this country has produced, next to the works of Scott."—Chambers's Cyc. Eng. Lit., Edin., 1844, ii. 594.

Dr. Dibdin, a Nestor among critics, cannot find words sufficiently strong in which to express his admiration of The Sketch-Book. Referring to Mr. Roseoe, he remarks:

"This is probably the last time that his name will adorn these pages; and in taking leave of it how can I better express my feelings than in the beautiful language of the author of The Sketch-Book?"—Library Companion, ed. 1825, 542.

Again:

"I know of few passages—indeed, I know of none—which so completely and so deliciously (if I may so speak) describe the comforts of a well stored library as the following, from the author of The Sketch-Book: 'When all that is worldly turns to dust around us, these only retain their steady value.' &c."

The doctor quotes to the end of the next paragraph, and then demands,

"Can sentiment (I ask) be purer, or language more harmonious, than this?"—Ubi supra, p. 644. See also p. 346.

"The Sketch-Book is a timid, beautiful work; with some childish paths in it; some rich, pure, bold poetry; a little squeamish, puling, lady-like sentimentality; some courageous writing, some wit, and a world of humour, so happy, so natural, so altogether unlike that of any other man, dead or alive, that we would rather have been the writer of it, fifty times over, than of every thing else that he has ever written. The touches of poetry are everywhere; but never where we would look for them. Irving has no passion; he fails utterly in true pathos,—cannot speak as if he were carried away by any thing. He is always thoughtful; and, save when he tries to be true or sentimental, always natural. The 'dusty splendour' of Westminster Abbey, the 'slip slapping' over the precipices of the ocean, the shark 'darting, like a spectre, through the blue waters,'—all these things are poetry, such poetry as never was, never will be, surpassed. We could mention fifty more passages,—epithets of power, which no more potent writer would have dared, under any circumstances, to use."—JOHN NEAL: Blackw. Mag., xvii. 65, Jan. 1825.

"We trust some arrangement has been entered into, by virtue of which the succeeding numbers of this exquisite miscellany may be early given to the English public; who, we are sure, are, at least, as much inclined to receive them well as the American. Mr. Washington Irving is one of our first favourites among the English writers of this age, and he is not a fit less so for having been born in America."—Blackw. Mag., vii. 361, July, 1820, (by J. G. Lockhart.)

We have already quoted Lockhart's opinion of The Sketch-Book on a preceding page, q. v. See also Christopher North's Noctes Ambrosianae, July, 1822, and May, 1823.

"Of the merit of his Knickerbocker and New York Stories we cannot pretend to judge. But in his Sketch-Book and Bracebridge Hall he gives us very good American copies of our British essays and Novelists, which may be very well on the other side of the water, or as proofs of the capabilities of the national genius, but which might be dispensed with here, where we have to least of the originals. . . . Not only Mr. Irving's language is with great taste and felicity modelled on that of Addison, Goldsmith, Sterne, or Macleaze, but the thoughts and sentiments are taken at the rebound, and as they are brought forward at the present period, want both freshness and probability. Mr. Irving's writings are literary anachronisms. He comes to England for the first [the second] time; and, being on the spot, fancies himself in the midst of these characters and manners which he had read of in The Spectator and other approved authors, and which were the only idea he had hitherto formed of the parent-country. Instead of looking round to see what we are, he sets to work to describe us as we were, at second-hand."—Nash's Spirit of the Age.

As this charge—of literary anachronism—has often been urged against some of the graphic scenes depicted in The Sketch-Book and Bracebridge Hall, it is only just to allow the author to be heard in his own defence:

"At the time of the first publication of this paper, [The Christmas Dinner, in The Sketch-Book,] the picture of an old-fashioned Christmas in the country was pronounced by some as out of date. The author had afterwards an opportunity of witnessing almost all the customs above described, existing in unexpected vigour in the skirts of Derbyshire and Yorkshire, where he passed the Christmas holidays. The reader will find some account of them in the author's account of his sojourn in Newstead Abbey."—Note to revised edit. of The Sketch-Book, New York, 1848, p. 298.

We lack space to quote Mr. Irving's description of the primitive customs which he found in full and honoured observance in different parts of England,—customs which, as he remarks,

"Have only been pronounced obsolete by those who draw their experience merely from city life. . . . It has been deemed that some of the anecdotes of holiday customs given in my preceding writings related to usages which have entirely passed away. Critics who reside in cities have little idea of the primitive manners and observances which still prevail in remote and rural neighbourhoods."—Crayon Miscellany: Newstead Abbey, N. York, 1848, 298, 299.

Mr. Irving's comments are fully endorsed by an eminent English authority:

"The accuracy of his pictures of old English customs and sports, which he represents as flourishing under the influence of the benevolent squire, has been questioned, we know, by suburban readers: in our opinion, and according to our experience, there is nothing too highly coloured in them. [The writer then proceeds to prove his position.] We think, therefore, that, far from exceeding the limits of probability in this respect, Mr. Irving has hardly made the full use of northern customs which was really open to him. Nor can we see any thing overdrawn in the characters themselves."—Lon. Quar. Rev., xxii. 476, 477, March, 1825.

The Dublin University Mag. remarks, in the same strain: "Bracebridge Hall is the only account we have which gives any thing like a true picture of the life of an English country gentleman of our own day."—May, 1835, 554.

Other reviews of The Sketch-Book appeared in the Lon. Quar. Rev., xxv. 50; Lon. Month. Rev., xciii. 198; Edin. Month. Rev., iv. 303. In our life of Lord Byron, p. 322 of this Dictionary, will be found an interesting account of the enthusiastic admiration expressed by his lordship of The Sketch-Book and its author.

Before we leave our subject, we must not forget to copy an entry in Moore's Diary, in which the success of The Sketch-Book at its first appearance is referred to:

"Dined with McKay at the table d'hôte, at Meurice's, for the purpose of being made known to Mr. Washington Irving, the author of the work which has lately had success. The Sketch-Book; a good-looking and intelligent-mannered man."—Paris, Dec. 21, 1820.

4. BRACEBRIDGE HALL; OR, THE HUMOURISTS, 1822:

"The great charm and peculiarity of his work consists now, as on former occasions, in the singular sweetness of the composition, and the mildness of the sentiments,—sickled over perhaps a little, now and then, with that cloying heaviness into which unvaried sweetness is so apt to subside. The rhythm and melody of the sentences is certainly excessive: as it not only gives an air of mannerism, but raises too strong an impression of the labour that must have been bestowed, and the importance which must have been attached to that which is, after all, but a secondary attribute to good writing. It is very ill-adapted in us, however, to object to what has given us so much pleasure; for we happen to be very intense and sensitive admirers of those soft harmonies of studied speech in which this author is apt to indulge himself; and have caught ourselves, oftener than we shall confess, neglecting his excellent matter, to lap ourselves in the liquid music of his periods, and letting ourselves float passively down the mellow falls and windings of his soft-flowing sentences, with a delight not inferior to that which we derive from fine versification."—LORD JEFFREY; Edin. Rev., xxvii. 338-339, Nov. 1822.

"We have no hesitation in pronouncing Bracebridge Hall quite equal to any thing which the present age of English literature has produced in this department. In saying this, we class it in the branch of essay-writing. . . Besides the episcopal tales, he has given us admirable sketches of life and manners, highly curious in themselves, and rendered almost important by the good-natured mock gravity, the ironical reverence, and lively wit, with which they are described. We can scarce express the delight with which we turn to the definite images such a work excites, from the vagueness and generality of ordinary story-writing, where personages without prototypes in any society on earth speak a language learned out of books, without a trait of nature, life, or truth."—EDWARD EVERETT; N. Amer. Rev., xv. 209, 223-224, July, 1822.

"Bracebridge Hall certainly does not possess the spirit of The Sketch-Book."—Blackw. Mag., xi. 688, June, 1822.

"STOUT GENTLEMAN—very good, and a pretty fair account of a real occurrence. [see Note at bottom of the page.] STUDENT OF SALAMANCA—beneath contempt: Irving has no idea of genuine romance, or love, or any thing else, we believe, that ever seriously troubles the blood of men: ROOKERY—struck off in a few hours; contrary to what has been said, Irving does not labour as people suppose—he is too indolent—given too much, we know, to revery: DOLPH HEVLIGER; THE HAUNTED HOUSE; STORM SHIP—all in the fashion of his early time: perhaps—we are greatly inclined to believe—perhaps the remains of what was meant for Salmagundi or Knickerbocker: the rest of the two volumes quite unworthy of Irving's reputation."—JOHN NEAL; Blackw. Mag., xvii. 66, January, 1825.

"In spite, however, of the pleasure which Bracebridge Hall has afforded us, we can see nothing in it which might not have been compressed into the space of one volume. The make-weights (for we can give them no other name) which are thrown in to round off the work more properly belong to Mr. Irving's recent publication, the Tales of a Traveller; in fact they are, for the most part, told by the same imaginary narrators, and we shall, therefore, consider them under the same head."—Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxi. 481-482, March, 1825.

See also Moore's Diary, March 19, 1821.

5. TALES OF A TRAVELLER, 1824.

"I have been miserably disappointed in the Tales of a Traveller." In this strain commences Timothy Tickler's review of the Tales, and he proceeds to abuse them terribly: the more so, he intimates, from the fact that "Few people have admired Mr. Irving more than myself, few have praised him more, and certainly few wish him and his career better than I do at this moment."—Blackw. Mag., xvi. 294, 297, Sept. 1824.

In the same periodical (xvii. 66-67, American Writers, No. 4, by John Neal) the Tales are quite as severely handled, but the critic dismisses the author with many civil words and a hearty benediction:

"You—Geoffrey Crayon—have great power,—original power. We rejoice in your failure now, because we believe that it will drive you into a style of original composition, far more worthy of yourself. Go to work. Lose no time. Your foundations will be the stronger for this uproar. You cannot write a novel, a poem, a true tale, or a tragedy. You can write another SKETCH-BOOK worth all that you have ever written, if you will draw out from yourself. You have some qualities that no other living writer has—a bold, quiet humour, a rich, beautiful mode of painting without caricature, a delightful, free, happy spirit; make use of them. We look to see you all the better for this trouncing. God bless you! Farewell."

The reviewer in the London Quarterly (vol. xxxi. 481-487, March, 1825) finds hardly any thing to commend in the Tales of a Traveller, save the autobiography of Buckthorne:

"It is with great pleasure that we turn from productions which Mr. Irving honestly confesses to be the sweepings of his Scrap-Book, to the tale of Buckthorne, whose adventures, together with those of his friends, occupy the second division of the tales. In this instance, finding the contents of the said Scrap-Book run short, he has been driven to tax his own invention in good earnest, and the result is excellent. From the evidence of this tale, which abounds in point and incident, it seems probable to us that he might as a novelist prove no contemptible rival to Goldsmith, whose turn of mind he very much inherits, and of whose style he particularly reminds us in the life of Drizzle. Like him, too, Mr. Irving possesses the art of setting ludicrous perplexities in the most irresistible point of view, and we think equals him in the variety, if not in the force, of his humour. . . . After the evidence of Mr. Irving's powers afforded by the last-quoted passage, he must in future be true to his own reputation throughout, and correct the habits of indolence which so considerable a part of the Tales of a Traveller evince. The indulgence which he so fairly deserved at his outset, as an ingenious stranger intuitively proficient in the style and ideas of the mother-country, must now cease, and he must be considered in future as not only admitted to the full freedom and privileges of the English guild of authorship, but amenable also at the same time, as an experienced craftsman, to its most vigorous statutes. We may congratulate him on the rank which he has already gained, of which the momentary caprice of the public cannot long deprive him; and with hearty good will, playfully, but we hope not profanely, we exclaim, as we part with him, 'Very pleasant last thou been to me, my brother Jonathan.'"—Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxi. 483-484, 486-487.

But perhaps the most severe of all the reviews of the Tales of a Traveller appeared in the Westminster Review, (ii. 334,) then in the first blossom of its youth. Geoffrey Crayon's courteous notices of the English nobility, and his equally creditable disgust at the sanguinary horrors of the French Revolution, excited the ire of the democratic critic to an uncontrollable pitch. Even the author's admiring friend, Tom Moore, seems to have had but little hope for the success of the Tales:

"Irving and I set out for the cottage between ten and eleven. Took Irving after dinner to show him to the Starkeys, but he was sleepy, and did not open his mouth: the same at Elwyn's dinner. Not strong as a lion, but delightful as a domestic animal. Walked him over this morning to call on Lord Lansdowne, (come down in consequence of Lord King's illness,) who walked part of the way back with us. Read me some parts of his new work, Tales of a Traveller. Rather tremble for my fate. Murray has given him 1500*l.* for it; might have had, I think, 2000*l.*"—June 17, 1824.

6. THE LIFE AND VOYAGES OF CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS, 1828:

"Venient annis
Sæculæ seris, quibus, Oceanus
Vincula rerum laxet, et ingens
Pateat tellus, Typhique novos
Delegat Orbis, nec sit terris
Ultime Thule."—SENECA; Medea.

"The author, having resided for some years past in Madrid, and enjoyed access to the archives of the Spanish Government, as well as to many private Libraries, has been enabled to weave into this Work many curious facts, hitherto unknown, concerning the History of Columbus."

The existence of a new world beyond the Atlantic was firmly believed by many of the ancients, as is abundantly proved by numerous passages in the classics:

"None of the intimations [remarks Mr. Prescott] are so precise as that contained in the well-known lines of Seneca's Medea:

"Venient annis sæculæ, &c.

Although, when regarded as a mere poetical vagary, it has not the weight which belongs to more serious suggestions of similar import, in the writings of Aristotle and Strabo. The various allusions in the ancient classic writers to an undiscovered world form the subject of an elaborate essay in the Memorias da Acad. Real das Sciencas de Lisboa, (tom. v. pp. 101-112,) and are embodied, in much greater detail, in the first section of Humboldt's Histoire de la Géographie du Nouveau Continent: a work in which the author, with his usual acuteness, has successfully applied the vast stores of his erudition and experience to the illustration of many interesting points connected with the discovery of the New World and the personal history of Columbus."—Hist. of the Reign of Ferd. and Isabella, 11th ed., Bost., 1856, ii. 116-117, n.

Mr. Prescott remarks in the text:

"A proof of this popular belief occurs in a curious passage of the Morgante Maggiore of the Florentine poet Pulci, a man of letters, but not distinguished for scientific attainments beyond his day. The passage is remarkable, independently of the cosmographical knowledge it implies, for its allusion to phenomena in physical science not established till more than a century later.

The devil, alluding to the vulgar supposition respecting the Pillars of Hercules, thus addresses his companion Itinaldo:

"Know that this theory is false: his bark
The darling mariner shall urge far o'er
The western wave, a smooth and level plain,
Albeit the earth is fashioned like a wheel.
Man was in ancient days of grosser mould,
And Hercules might blush to learn how far Beyond the limits he had vainly set
The dullest sea-boat soon shall wing her way.
Men shall desery another hemisphere,
Since to one common centre all things tend;
So earth, by curious mystery divine,
Well balanced, hangs amid the starry spheres.
At our Antipodes are cities, states,
And thronged empires, ne'er divined of yore,
But see, the Sun speeds on his western path
To glad the nations with expected light."

PULCI: Morgante Maggioro, canto 25. st. 229, 230.

"I have used blank verse (proceeds Mr. Prescott, in a note) as affording facility for a more literal version than the corresponding ottava rima of the original. This passage of Pulci, which has not fallen under the notice of Humboldt, or any other writer on the same subject whom I have consulted, affords probably the most circumstantial prediction that is to be found of the existence of a western world. Dante two centuries before, had intimated more vaguely his belief in an undiscovered quarter of the globe:

'Dei vo-tri sensi eh' è del rimanente,
Non vogliate negar l'esperanza,
Diretto al sol, del mondo senza gente.'

Inf. rno. cant. 26, v. 115.—Uit supra, 117-118, 118, n.

We happen to have lying on our table a notice of a work which should not be neglected by the collector of American History, (a large class among our friends in Boston and New York,) and which we observe has not escaped the researches of Mr. Irving (Hist. of Columbus) or of Mr. Prescott, (Hist. of Ferdinand and Isabella.) It is entitled Raccolta del Documento Originale e inedito spettante a Cristoforo Colombo alla Scoperta ed al Governo dell' America, Genoa, 1823, 4to. An invaluable collection of authentic remains, letters, memorials, &c. of the great navigator, with a learned introduction by Prof. Spotorio.

An English trans. of this work was issued in the same year (1 vol. 8vo, pp. 159 and 255) in London. A notice of this collection will be found in Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, ii, 152, 155; N. Amer. Rev., xviii, 415-417, April, 1824, (by Jared Sparks; ) Ibid., xxi, 398-429, Oct. 1825. The Coleccion de los Viajes y Descubrimientos de Don Martin Fernandez de Navarrete, Madrid, 1825, 2 vols. 4to., (3d vol., 1829, 4to.) to which we have already referred, will of course be found in the American department of the collector's Library. Those who are still ignorant of the value of this treasury, and the eminent services of its erudite compiler to the important cause of historical research, must consult Prescott's Mexico, 23d ed., 1855, Pref., vi-vii; his Ferd. and Isabella, 11th ed., 1856, Pref., v., and vol. ii., 133-134, 507, n.; his Peru, ed. 1855, Pref., vi-vii., vol. ii., 76; Irving's Columbus and his Companions, ed. 1848, i., Pref., 13-18, iii., Introduc., xv. See also a review of Navarrete's Coleccion,—written by Caleb Cushing, of Massachusetts, a ripe scholar,—in the N. Amer. Rev., xxiv, 265-294, April, 1827.

"His great work, Coleccion de los Viajes y Descubrimientos," remarks Mr. Prescott, "although far from being completed after the original plan of its author, is of inestimable service to the historian."—Irru. Tr. f., vii.

Perhaps we have already lingered sufficiently long on the threshold of our subject,—the citation of opinions respecting Irving's History of Columbus; but we must not pass on without commending to our reader a notice in the N. Amer. Rev., xliii, 43-52, July, 1826, (by J. L. Kingsley,) of the Italian Jesuit Ulertino Carrara's Latin epic on the Discovery of America, entitled Columbus, first pub. 1715, at Rome. The poet thus announces his subject:

"Primus ab Europæ. Solis qui viseret ornam,
Perque prophanatum velis mare, maxima regna
Regibus Hispanis, orbemque adjecerit orbi,
Sit mihi materies operis."—Lit., i. 1.

We recently cut the following notice from some paper of the day:

"Chart of Columbus.—An old picture-dealer has lately sold to the Spanish Government, for 4000 fr., the chart which the pilot of Columbus, Juan de la Cosa, used in his voyage to the New World. It was formerly in one of the public libraries of Spain; and, when the galleries and churches of that country were ravaged by Marshal Soult, it fell into his hands, with The Conception, by Murillo, and various other spoils."

In the introduction of opinions respecting the manner in which Mr. Irving has acquitted himself in the responsible office of the biographer of the Great Admiral, with whom can we so properly begin as with that eminent scholar to whose researches Mr. Irving and the world at large are so much indebted for all that we know of the illustrious Genoese? And here we are greatly pleased in being able to quote in evidence the most unqualified commendation of Mr. Irving's labours, which eulogy we are the more rejoiced to find from the certainty that if the opinion made as much against, as it fortunately does for, the historian's reputation, it would not be withheld from our readers. Our duty is neither to bury Cæsars nor to praise them, but rather to faithfully chronicle the recorded decisions of the great judges of literary jurisprudence. M. Navarrete may well be supposed to have entertained a natural anxiety that the copious collections for the illustration of the Life of Columbus which he had brought together, at the price of so many days and nights of persevering industry and careful research, should be faithfully made known to those who could only enjoy them in an English dress. Indeed, as we have seen in a preceding page, nothing more was originally contemplated by Mr. Everett than a translation by Irving of Navarrete's Coleccion. But, fortunately for the cause of letters, Mr. Irving determined upon a more comprehensive undertaking:

"On considering the matter more maturely, (he remarks) I perceived that, although there were many books in various languages, relative to Columbus, they all contained limited and incomplete accounts of his life and voyages, while numerous valuable treatises on the subject existed only in manuscript or in the form of letters, journals, and public monuments. It appeared to me that a history faithfully digested from these various materials was a desideratum in literature, and would be a more satisfactory acquisition to myself and a more acceptable work to my country, than the translation I had contemplated."—Madrid, 1827: Tr. f. to Ist ed. Life of Columbus.

The work was completed, and this decisive seal to its excellence was impressed by the learned Navarrete himself:

"Yo me complazo en que los documentos y noticias que publicé en mi coleccion sobre los primeros acontecimientos de la historia de America hayan recaido en manos tan hábiles para apreciar su autenticidad, para examinarlas con critica, y propagarlas por todas partes, erlando los fundamentos de la verdad que hasta ahora há sido tan adulterada por los escritores parciales ó sistematizos."—From a letter dated Madrid, April 1, 1831.

The same distinguished authority, in the Introduction to the 3d vol. of his Collection of Spanish Voyages, after adducing a number of testimonials to the usefulness of the two first vols., (1825, 4to.) remarks:

"Insigne prueba de esto mismo acaba de darnos el Señor Washington Irving en la Historia de la Vida y de los Viajes de Cristóbal Colon que ha publicado con una aceptación tan general como bien merecida. Dignimos en nuestra introduccion (1, 255, pag. lxxxii.) que no nos proponiamos escribir la historia de aquel almirante, sino publicar noticias y materiales para que se escribiesen con veracidad, y es una fortuna que el primero que se haya aprovechado de ellas sea un literato juicioso y erudito, conocido ya en su patria y en Europa por otras obras apreciables. Colocad en Madrid la exentada las rivalidades que han dominado entre algunas naciones Europeas sobre Colon y sus descubrimientos; con la proporcion de examinar excelentes libros y preciosos manuscritos, de tratar á personas instruidas en estas materias, y teniendo siempre á la mano los autenticos documentos que acalamos de publicar, ha logrado dar á su historia aquella extension, imparcialidad, y exactitud que la hacen muy superior á las de los escritores que le precedieron. Agrégase á esto, su método, arreglo, y conveniente distribución; su estilo animado, puro, y elegante; la noticia de varias personas que intervinieron de los sucesos de Colon, y el examen de varias cuestiones en que luce siempre la mas sana crítica, la erudición y buen gusto."—Prólogo al tomo iii., Madrid, 1829, 4to.

It is proper that we should next quote the verdict of Mr. Alexander H. Everett,—so intimately connected with the inception of this great enterprise,—one of the ripest scholars that America has yet produced, and a critic of too much candour to permit his own interest in the work or his friendship for the author to either influence his judgment or qualify its expression:

"This is one of those works which are at the same time the delight of readers and the despair of critics. It is as nearly perfect as any work well can be; and there is therefore little or nothing left for the reviewer but to write at the bottom of every page, as Voltaire said he should be obliged to do if he published a commentary on Racine, Pulchre! bene! optime! . . . He has at length filled up the void that before existed in this respect, in the literature of the world and produced a work which will fully satisfy the public and supersede the necessity of any future labours in the same field. While we venture to predict that the adventures of Columbus will hereafter be read only in the work of Mr. Irving, we cannot but think it a beautiful coincidence that the task of duly celebrating the achievements of the discoverer of our continent should have been reserved for one of its inhabitants; and that the earliest professed author of first-rate talent who appeared among us should have devoted one of his most important and finished works to this pious purpose."

Such honors flit to her hero's path.

And peaceful slept the mighty Hector's shade.

For the particular kind of historical writing in which Mr. Irving is fitted to labor and excel, the Life of Columbus is undoubtedly one of the very best—perhaps we might say, without the fear of mistake, the very best—subject afforded by the annals of the world. . . . In treating this happy and splendid subject, Mr. Irving has brought out the full force of his genius, as far as a just regard for the principles of historical writing would admit."—N. Amer. Rev., xxviii, 103, 128, 129, Jan. 1829.

The verdict of the brilliant historian of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella—who has so greatly distinguished himself by his researches in the same field of historical investigation as that in which Mr. Irving gleaned so abundant a harvest—must have been awaited by the latter with no little anxiety. In a notice of the publication of the Coleccion de Señor Navarrete, to which we have frequently referred, Mr. Prescott remarks :

"Fortunately, Mr. Irving's visit to Spain at this period enabled the world to derive the full benefit of Señor Navarrete's researches, by presenting their results in connexion with whatever had been before known of Columbus, in the lucid and attractive form which engages the interest of every reader. It would seem highly proper that the fortunes of the discoverer of America should engage the pen of an inhabitant of her most favoured and enlightened region; and it is unnecessary to add that the task has been executed in a manner which must secure to the historian a share in the imperishable renown of his subject."—Ferd. and Isabella, 11th ed., 1856, li. 133.

"It is not necessary to pursue the track of the illustrious voyager whose career, forming the most brilliant episode to the history of the present reign, has been so recently traced by a hand which few will fail to care to follow."—Ibid., li. 465-466. See also 482-483, n.

"The noblest monument to the memory of Columbus."—Ibid., li. 509.

"I will only remark, in conclusion of this too prolix discussion about myself, that, while making my tortoise-like progress, I saw what I had fondly looked upon as my own ground (having indeed lain unobscured by any other invader for so many ages) suddenly entered, and in part occupied, by one of my countrymen. I allude to Mr. Irving's History of Columbus and Chronicle of Granada; the subjects of which, although covering but a small part of my whole plan, form certainly two of its most brilliant portions. Now, alas! if not devoid of interest, they are at least stripped of the charm of novelty. For what eye has not been attracted to the spot on which the light of that writer's genius has fallen?"—Ibid., i., Pref., xi.-xii.

In his Preface to the History of the Conquest of Mexico, Mr. Prescott, referring to the passage just quoted, notices it as a "singular chance," that, after collecting the materials for his last-named work, he found himself "unconsciously taking up ground which Mr. Irving was preparing to occupy." But we have already noticed this fact in our Life of CHARLES JAMES FOX, p. 624 of this Dictionary, to which the reader is referred. We had intended to quote other comments of Mr. Prescott's upon Irving's History of Columbus, but, as our article already lengthens beyond our intended limits, we must be content to refer the reader to the Preface to Mexico, ix., x.; Ibid., iii. 252, n.; Prescott's review of Irving's Chronicle of the Conquest of Granada, in N. Amer. Rev., xxix. 293-314, Oct. 1829. See also W. H. Gardner's review of Prescott's Ferd. and Isabella, in N. Amer. Rev., xlvii. 203-291, Jan. 1838,—Prescott and Irving Compared, &c.

We proceed with our quotations; but they must be brief:

"This is on the whole an excellent book; and we venture to anticipate that it will be an enduring one. Neither do we hazard this prediction lightly, or without a full consciousness of all its implications. . . . For we mean, not merely that the book will be familiarly known and referred to some twenty or thirty years hence, and will pass in solid binding into every considerable collection; but that it will supersede all former works on the same subject, and never be itself superseded."—LORD JEFFREY: Edm. Rev., xliiii. 1-32, Sept. 1828.

"When he writes the history of Columbus, you see him weighing doubtful facts in the scales of a golden criticism. You behold him laden with the manuscript treasures of well-searched archives, and disposing the heterogeneous materials into a well digested and instructive narration."—EDWARD EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., xli. 5, July, 1835.

"This work is written with the attractions of style and taste, and glowing description, which belong to the inspiration of the theme, and to the genius of the distinguished author."—CHANCELLOR KENT.

"A life of Columbus authentic, clear, and animated in narration, graphic in its descriptive episodes, and sustained and finished in style. It is a permanent contribution to English as well as American literature: one which was greatly needed and most appropriately supplied."—HENRY T. TUCKERMAN: Spectator of Amer. Lit.

"Since I have been here, I have contrived (by reading a half-hour in the night and a half-hour in the morning) to peruse the whole of Irving's Life of Columbus, in three volumes. It is quite an interesting work, though I think too much spread out by repetition of the same thoughts and descriptions. It is in all respects, however, reputable to the literature of our country."—JUDGE STORY: Letter to Wm. W. Story, Washington, Feb. 21, 1836.

Judge Story's comment reminds us of a similar one recorded by Tom Moore, and Cooper's ready retort:

"When Rogers, in talking of Washington Irving's Columbus, said, in his dry, significant way, 'It's rather long,' Cooper turned round on him, and said, sharply, 'That's a short criticism.'"—Moore's Diary, May 27, 1828.

"Davisson mentioned the enormous price given by Murray for Irving's two last works; 3000 guineas for Columbus, and 2000*l.* for the Chronicles of Granada; the latter never likely, he said, to sell at all."—Ibid., July 16, 1829.

"It is true that for Murray (according to his own account) they have not been so fortunate: his loss on the two publications being (as he says) near 3000*l.*, which may not be far from the truth, as the Chronicles have not sold at all."—Ibid., Nov. 12, 1829.

"By the accession of his volumes, we have now the biography of Columbus; as by Robertson's [History of America] we before had, and still have, the history. Mr. Irving's has been to me a very interesting production, sometimes marked with passages of great force and beauty; and it contains every thing respecting Columbus that can be wanted. He has had valuable sources of information, which he describes, and which were not within the reach of Robertson. Still, his volumes only show, as usual, the merits of Robertson. Upon looking over the historian's account once more, I see no mistakes, and no material omissions: in a concise and calm manner every particular of importance is intimated to the reader; and Mr. Irving has only told in the detail (but in a very interesting and agreeable manner, and I recommend his volumes to you) what our excellent historian had told before."—Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist.

There is another comparison between Robertson and Irving which it occurs to us to quote. It is one drawn by Lord Brougham in his Life of Dr. Robertson, and elicited by the account of the latter, in his History of America, of the first discovery of land by Columbus:

"If the word dramatic," remarks his lordship, "has been applied to this narrative, it has been advisedly chosen; because no one can doubt that with the most scrupulous regard to the truth and even to the minute accuracy of his history, this composition has all the beauties of a striking poem. To judge of its merits in this respect, I will not compare or rather contrast it with the Histories of Oviedo or Herrera, or Ferdinand Columbus, or even with the far better composition of Dr. Campbell, or whoever wrote the history of the discovery in Harris's Bibliotheca Hibernica, nor yet with the ambitious but worse-written narrative of Mr. Washington Irving in his Life and Voyages of Columbus," &c.

The noble critic then proceeds (in a note) to quote examples from both writers:

"It is no part of my intention to underrate the merits of this very popular author: but I speak of the manner in which he has treated the subject; and, coming after so great a master, it was not judicious in him to try for effect, instead of studying the chaste simplicity of his predecessor. There are a few of his expressions: 'The ships were ploughing the waves;' Columbus was 'wrapped in the shades of night;' he 'maintained an intense watch;' he 'ranged his eye along the dusky horizon;' he beheld 'suddenly a glimmering light.' Robertson had never thought of saying 'suddenly,' as knowing that light must of necessity be sudden. Then the light has 'passing gleams;' his feelings 'must have been tumultuous and intense,' contrary to the fact, and to the character of the man; 'the great mystery of the ocean was revealed;' 'what a bewildering crowd of conjectures thronged on his mind!' All this speculation of the writer to insure the effect, Dr. Robertson rejects as fatal to effect, and gives only what actually happened. Finally, he was possibly to find 'the morning dawn upon spicy groves, and glittering fanes, and gilded cities.' Surely no one can hesitate which of the two pictures to prefer. If the one is not as absolutely tawdry, the other is assuredly more chaste. To compare the two pieces of workmanship is a good lesson, and may tend to cure a vitiated taste, (Book iii. Chap. 3.) To take only one instance: 'About two hours before midnight, Columbus, standing on the fore-castle, observed a light at a distance, and privately pointed it out to Pedro,' &c. Thus Robertson, Irving says, 'Wrapped from observation in the shades of night, he maintained an intense and unremitting watch, ranging his eye along the dusky horizon. Suddenly, about ten o'clock, he thought he beheld a light glimmering at a distance.' Can any one doubt which of the two passages is the most striking—the chaste and severe, or the ornamented and gaudy and meretricious? The account of Robertson makes the ships lie to all night. Irving either makes them lie to and afterwards go on sailing rapidly; or the lying to was the night before, and they sailed quicker the nearer they came to land and in the dusk. The one makes them only see the shore after dawn; the other makes 'them see it two leagues off, in a dark night, at two in the morning, within the tropics.'"—Lives of Men of Letters of the Time of George III. Lou. and Glasg., 1855, 265, 265-266, n. 7. CHRONICLE OF THE CONQUEST OF GRANADA, FROM THE MSS. OF FRAY ANTONIO AGAPIDA, 1829.

Perhaps we need hardly inform our readers that the worthy chronicler Fray is an imaginary personage.

"Mr. Irving's late publication, the Chronicle of the Conquest of Granada, has superseded all further necessity for poetry, and, unfortunately for me, for history. He has fully availed himself of all the picturesque and animating movements of this romantic era; and the reader who will take the trouble to compare his Chronicle with the present more prosaic and literal narrative [War of Granada, in Ferd. and Isabella] will see how little he has been seduced from historic accuracy by the poetical aspect of his subject. The fictitious and romantic dress of his work has enabled him to make it the medium for reflecting more vividly the floating opinions and chimerical fancies of the age, while he has illuminated the picture with the dramatic brilliancy of colouring denied to sober history."—Prescott's Ferd. and Isabella, 11th ed., 1856, ii. 109, n.

And see Mr. Prescott's review of the Chronicle, in N. Amer. Rev., xxix. 293-314; also in his Miscellanies, 1855, 88-122.

"A few works recently published in the United States have shed far more light [than Robertson's Charles V. and Watson's Philip II.] on the interior organization and intellectual culture of the Spanish nation. Such, for example, are the writings of Irving, whose gorgeous colouring reflects so clearly the chivalrous splendours of the fifteenth century."—Ibid., Miscell., 125-126, q. v.; (from N. Amer. Rev., July, 1837.)

Since Mr. Prescott's commendation was penned, the Chronicle has been brought more strictly within historical bounds, and in other respects also greatly improved.

"His Chronicle, at times, wears almost the air of romance; yet the story is authenticated by frequent reference to existing documents, proving that he has substantial foundation for his most extraordinary incidents."—Lon. Quar. Rev., xliii. 55-58.

This article, explanatory of the work, and carefully avoiding commendation, was written for the Quarterly by Mr. Irving, at the request of Mr. John Murray. See also Lon. Month. Rev., exix. 430; Amer. Month. Rev., v. 190; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1829, 329.

9. THE ALHAMBRA, 1832.

"On the whole, we consider the work before us as equal in literary value to any of the others of the same class, with the exception of The Sketch Book; and we should not be surprised if it were read as extensively as even that very popular production. We hope to have it in our power, at no remote period, to announce a continuation of the series, which we are satisfied will bear, in the booksellers' phrase, several more volumes."—EDWARD EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev. xxxv. 265-282, Oct. 1832.

A very suggestive remark occurs in the course of this review, which we quote with the hope that it will bring forth fruit in its season:

"The period of the Moorish ascendancy is, perhaps, the most interesting in the annals of Spain, and would furnish a fit subject for a more methodical, extensive, and elaborate historical description than has yet been given of it in any language."

Since the above was written, Mr. Prescott, indeed, has given us his truly great work on the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, in which we have a graphic account of the decadence—or, more properly speaking, the extirpation—of the Moorish power in Spain; and he has not neglected eloquently to dilate upon the ancient glories of Cordova, Seville, and Granada in their best estate; but it did not enter into his plan to discuss this comprehensive theme in the extent which can alone do it justice. With the vast collections which he has already made, the profound knowledge of the subject which the digestion of those materials has conferred, and the eloquence and force of his historic pen, what better subject can Mr. Prescott have than the one we have ventured to suggest? But, before we entirely forget Mr. Irving in this episode, we must remember to notice that, whilst Mr. Everett ranks The Alhambra below The Sketch-Book, Mr. Prescott very happily refers to the volume as the "beautiful Spanish Sketch-book, The Alhambra." See Ferd. and Isabella, 11th ed., 1836, ii. 100, n. See other reviews of The Alhambra, in the Westminster Rev., xvii. 132; Lon. Athen., 1832, 283; Amer. Month. Rev., ii. 117. We must commend to the attention of those fond of the remains of Moorish antiquity, the splendid publication of Owen Jones, 1842-45, 2 vols. fol. columbia, £24, or in grand eagle fol., £36, entitled Illustrations of the Palace of the Alhambra.

Doubtless the reader of Mr. Irving's thrilling account of his midnight explorations of the Alhambra has often asked himself, "How much of this is sober matter of fact, and how much poetical license?" We are fortunately enabled to answer this question from a letter of Mr. Irving to the author of this Dictionary:

"The account of my midnight rambles about the old palace is literally true, yet gives but a feeble idea of my feelings and impressions and of the singular haunts I was exploring. Every thing in the work relating to myself and to the actual inhabitants of the Alhambra is unexaggerated fact: it was only in the legends that I indulged in romancing; and these were founded on materials picked up about the place.

"To S. AUSTIN ALLIBONE, Sunnyside, Nov. 2. 1837."

10. A TOUR ON THE PRAIRIES, 1835.

"To what class of compositions the present work belongs we are hardly able to say. It can scarcely be called a book of travels, for there is too much painting of manners and scenery, and too little statistics; it is not a novel, for there is no story; and it is not a romance, for it is all true. It is a sort of sentimental journey, a romantic excursion, in which nearly all the elements of several different kinds of writing are beautifully and gaily blended into a production almost sui generis. . . . We are not sure that the passage in the book which we have read with greatest satisfaction is not that in which we are promised its continuation."—EDWARD EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., xli. 1-28, July, 1835.

"The whole work bears the impress of Mr. Irving's taste. A great variety of somewhat discordant materials is brought into a consistent whole, of which the parts have a due reference to each other; and some sketches of life and traits of humour come fresh from the pen of Geoffrey Crayon."—EDWARD EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., xlii. 200-257, Jan. 1837.

"I have read Astoria with great pleasure: It is a book to put in your library, as an entertaining, well-written—very well written—account of savage life, on a most extensive scale. Ellice, who has just come from America, says Mr. Astor is worth £5,000,000 sterling; but I hardly do not believe it, or is his judge perhaps."—Rev. Sydney Smith to Sir George Phillips, Combe Foley, Dec. 22, 1826; Smith's Letters and Correspondence, 1855, vol. ii.

"The narrative, though told with the grace of the writer, is necessarily dry."—Blackw. Mag., xli. 109, Feb. 1837, q. r.

We must not omit to quote the following well-merited tribute to a gentleman who, by his extensive circulation of sound literature for many years both in Europe and America, has honestly earned the title of a benefactor to the public mind. We refer to Mr. Irving's friend and publisher, Mr. George P. Putnam, of New York:

"We notice Astoria and The Tour on the Prairies now, only on account of their connection with our subject, and to commend the taste and enterprise of the publisher who has given to the reading world what has long been wanted,—a neat and uniform edition of all the writings of Mr. Irving, at a price which ought to obtain for them a wide circulation. These two works, which have all the pleasing characteristics of the author's style, appear very seasonably in a new edition."—Philo. FRANCIS BOWEN: Adventures on the Prairies, in N. Amer. Rev., lxxv. 175-196, July, 1849.

We have not the slightest interest in the gains or losses of Mr. Putnam's copy-rights, but we have much in the moral and intellectual cultivation of the mind and heart of our countrymen and countrywomen, and therefore, as Lord Chesterfield said of the witty scintillations of the Dean of St. Patrick's, "He that hath any books in the three kingdoms hath those of Swift," so say we, He that hath any books in this great republic should have those of Irving. As for those who have no books,—if any such there be,—in that household you may look for ennui, mental and physical languor, gossiping, dissipation, and "every evil work." As Sancho Panza conferred his hearty benediction upon the philanthropic inventor of sleep, so do we cordially revere the character of the literary Howard who founded the first family library. Of Sancho's favourite recreation he could only say, in the height of his somniferous pean, that it "covered a man like a mantle;" but of good books we can testify that they nurture the soul with the food of angels.

But "to proceed with our subject," as the divines say, which has "naturally divided itself" into a hydra-headed discourse: other reviews of Astoria will be found in the Westminster Rev., xxvi. 318; Amer. Quar. Rev., xxi. 60; South. Lit. Mess., iii. 59. See also Franchère's Narrative of a Voyage to the Northwest Coast of America, in 1811-14, trans. into English by J. V. Huntington, N. 13. OLIVER GOLDSMITH: A BIOGRAPHY, N. York, 1849, 12mo. This work we have already noticed in our Lives of JOHN FORSTER and OLIVER GOLDSMITH, in this Dictionary. See also Lon. Athen., 1849, 1151-1152.

15. WOLFERT'S ROOST, 1855, 12mo. This vol. forms No. 4 of Constable's Miscellany of Foreign Literature, pub. at Edinburgh. The publication of this vol. elicited so many complimentary notices, that the New York publishers, Messrs. Geo. P. Putnam & Co., issued a collection of them in pamphlet form of 24 pages. This little brochure should accompany every set of Irving's works. We give an extract from a notice which has escaped the vigilance of the publisher:

"We envy those who will now read these tales and sketches of character for the first time. Washington Irving is here, as he always is, equal to himself. He has the finish of our best writers; he has the equality and gentle humour of Addison and Goldsmith."—Westminster Rev., April, 1855.

Another complimentary notice, also not in the pamphlet just referred to, appeared in the Lon. New Monthly Magazine, and was copied into the Boston Living Age for Aug. 11, 1855. From a review of Wolfert's Roost, in the Lon. Athenaeum, 1855, 192-193, we have already given an extract in our article on Ralph Waldo Emerson, to which the reader is referred.

16. THE LIFE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON, N. York, vol. i., 1856; vols. ii., iii., 1856; iv., 1857. See ante.

We have before us a number of eulogistic reviews of the early vols. of this as yet unfinished history; but it is obvious that a production of this character must be regarded as a whole, and that no intelligent, impartial criticism can be expected until those among us learned in historic lore shall have had opportunity to sit in judgment upon a completed work, and compare accredited "State-Paper" documents with the biographer's charming story. That such verdict will be a favourable one, Mr. Irving's well-known conscientiousness as a historian forbids us to doubt. In the mean time, there can be no impropriety in our remarking that the biographer has well merited the gratitude of his countrymen for transporting the illustrious commander from the learned austerity of the Senate-Chamber, and the chilling dignity of Congressional Libraries, to the domestic familiarity of the parlour and the winter-evening fireside of the cottage. Reviews of the early vols. of the Life of Washington will be found,—of vol. i., in Westminster Rev., Oct. 1855; vol. iii., Ibid., Oct. 1856; vols. i., ii., iii., Lon. Athenæum, Aug. 16, 1856; i., ii., iii., N. Amer. Rev., July, 1856.

As every thing concerning Washington Irving may be presumed to be interesting to the reader, we quote the following genealogical scrap from Dennistoun's Memoirs of Sir Robert Strange:

"John of Irwyn had landed possessions in the parish of Holm, in Orkney, in 1438, when the county was still an appanage of the crown of Denmark and Norway. The Irvines of Selay are very frequently mentioned in the times of Robert and Patrick Stewart, Earls of Orkney, and suffered very severely from the outrages of these rapacious nobles. They became extinct in the direct male line tempore Charles I.; but one collateral branch had immediately before settled in the island of Sanday, and another, the Irvines of Gairstay, in the island of Shapinsay. They lost the estate of Gairstay several generations back, and sank down into the condition of mere peasants, tenants of Quhome, where some of them reside at this day. I was there lately with Mr. Balfour, the proprietor of Shapinsay, who pointed out the old and modest house at Quhome where was born William Irvine, father of Washington Irving. Is it not somewhat singular that Sir Robert Strange and the author of Bracebridge Hall can be almost demonstrated of the same blood? I guess if Irving knew his pedigree could be traced step by step up to John Erwyn of 1438, he would readily claim and vindicate his Orcadian descent."

We have already referred to Lord Byron's enthusiastic attachment to the writings and character of Irving, (Life of Lord Byron in this Dictionary.) In a letter to Tom Moore, (Ravenna, July 5, 1821,) he remarks:

"I have had a friend of your Mr. Irving's, . . . and talked with him much of Irving, whose writings are my delight."

Again, under date of Sept. 24, 1821, he proposes to Murray, as one of the articles of their future correspondence, that he should not send him "any modern, or (as they are called) new, publications, in English, whatsoever, save and excepting any of Walter Scott, Crabbe, . . . Irving, (the American.)" &c.

"The names of Cooper, Channing, and Washington Irving," remarks the historian of Modern Europe, "amply demonstrate that the American soil is not wanting in genius of the most elevated and fascinating character."—SIR ARCHEBOLD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 179-185. chap. lxxvi.

Mr. Stewart, of the American Navy, a friend of the present Emperor of France, tells us that, when in New York, Louis Napoleon declined to "appear in society," but adds:

"There are, however," remarked the prince, "individuals resident in New York whose acquaintance I should be happy to make. Mr. Washington Irving is one. I have read his works, and admire him both as a writer and a man, and would take great pleasure in meeting him. Chancellor Kent is another. I have studied his Commentaries, think highly of them, and regard him as the first of your jurists. I would be happy to know him personally."

"He did make the acquaintance both of Mr. Irving and the Chancellor," continues Mr. Stewart, "and enjoyed the hospitality of the one at N. Yussiede, and of the other at his residence in town."—Letter of Gen. C. S. Stewart, N. York, April 4, 1856, to the National Intelligencer.

How many can echo this remark of Napoleon!—"I admire him both as a writer and as a man." It is indeed true, to borrow the words of an eminent American poet,

"Amiability is so strongly marked in all Mr. Irving's writings as never to let you forget the man; and the pleasure is doubled in the same manner as it is in lively conversation with one for whom you have a deep attachment and esteem. There is in it also the gaiety and airiness of a light, pure spirit,—a fanciful playing with common things, and here and there beautiful touches, till the ludicrous becomes half picturesque."—RICHARD H. DANA, Sr.: N. Amer. Rev., ix. 336, Sept. 1819.

If Mr. Dana were called upon to reaffirm the above, after forty years, and over the large pile of volumes which Mr. Irving has since given to the world, we are satisfied that he would do it without a moment's hesitation.

Many years ago Edward Everett advised the young aspirant after literary distinction,

"If he wishes to study a style which possesses the characteristic beauties of Addison's, its ease, simplicity, and elegance, with greater accuracy, point, and spirit, let him give his days and nights to the volumes of Irving."—N. Amer. Rev., xli. 4, July, 1835.

Young men have followed this advice most sedulously; and, indeed, a number of years before this counsel was penned, Mr. Irving's example had produced wonders:

"The great effect which it has produced is sufficiently evident already, in the number of good writers in various forms of elegant literature, who have sprung up among us within the few years which have elapsed since the appearance of Mr. Irving, and who justify our preceding remark, that he may fairly be considered as the founder of a school."—ALEXANDER H. EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., xxviii. 111, Jan. 1829.

"Heretofore the essays of Washington Irving have offered a solitary specimen of the lighter literature of America, but we can now only regard Geoffrey Crayon as the founder of a class of writers, who follow closely in his footsteps."—Court Journal: Notice of Stories of American Life, edited by Mary Russell Milford.

These remarks apply to both sides of the water. If an English reviewer desire to pay an especially handsome compliment to an author,—presuming that the case admits of a likeness being instituted at all,—he is very likely to be strongly reminded of the style of the author of The Sketch-Book. Let us cite some instances. The author of the article on George Colman and Bunell Thornton's Connoisseur, in Chambers's Cyclopaedia of English Literature, quotes a passage from an essay on Country Churches, "which," says the critic, "seems like a leaf from the notebook of Washington Irving." The reviewer in the London New Times remarks, of the author of Tales of a Voyager, that his "humour is of the spirit and quality of Washington Irving." The London Gentleman's Magazine says that in the perusal of The Journal of an Exile "we have frequently been reminded of the style and manner of The Sketch-Book,—the same pathos, the same originality of thought, the same felicity of expression." The London Monthly Review is so delighted with The Luccubrations of Major Humphrey Ravelin, that it declares that "many of the practised writers must fall into the rear, in competition with Major Ravelin, who most stoutly muster with Geoffrey Crayon." The London Spectator, in a notice of the Autobiography of Hugh Miller, remarks that "his style has a purity and elegance which reminds one of Irving and Goldsmith." One of the most distinguished of American authors is not disposed to think that any of Irving's imitators have equalled their master; at least, this was his opinion at the time he penned the article from which we are about to quote:

"The candour with which the English have recognised Mr. Irving's literary merits is equally honorable to both parties, while his genius has experienced a still more unequivocal homage. In the countless imitations to which he has given rise; imitations whose uniform failure, notwithstanding all the appliances of accomplishment and talent, prove their mode to be unimitable."—WILLIAM H. PRESCOTT: N. Amer. Rev., xxxv. 191-192, July, 1832.

It is only proper to remark that Mr. Prescott has no reference, so far as we are aware, to either of the comparisons cited above. They were collected by ourselves, in the course of desultory reading. Washington Irving, indeed, can never be confounded with the host of his imitators, abroad or at home. His literary reputation rests upon sure foundations,—broad, deep, well settled, and immutable. As regards his own country,

"Other writers may no doubt arise in the course of time, who will exhibit in verse or prose a more commanding talent, and soar a still loftier flight in the empyrean sky of glory. Some western Homer, Shakespeare, Milton, Corneille, or Calderon, may irradiate our literary world with a flood of splendour that shall throw all other greatness into the shade. This, or something like it, may or may not happen; but, even if it should, it can never be disputed that the mild and beautiful genius of Mr. Irving was the Morning Star that led up the march of our heavenly host; and that he has a fair right, much fairer certainly than the great Mantuan, to assume the proud device, Primus ego in patriam."—ALEXANDER H. EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., xxviii. 110, Jan. 1829.

As respects Mr. Irving's fame abroad, it is certainly true, as Mr. Prescott remarks, that his merits have been—from the first, we will add—warmly acknowledged by British critics and cordially appreciated by British readers.

The circulation of his delightful volumes is by no means confined to the literary circles of the critics :

"To my poor cottage, rich only in printed paper," remarks an accomplished lady, "people all come to borrow books for themselves or for their children. Sometimes they make their own selections; sometimes, and against my will, they leave the choice to me; and in either case I know no books that are of greater lent than those that bear the pseudonym of Geoffrey Crayon. Few, very few, can show a long succession of volumes so pure, so graceful, and so varied as Mr. Irving."—Mary Russell Mitford's Recollections of a Literary Life.

Such a tribute as this must be peculiarly grateful to Mr. Irving. "It is excellent," says Isabella to the haughty duke, "to have a giant's strength;" but there is a rarer and more precious gift. To have the power, by the magic of the inspiration of genius, to elevate the mind and to improve the heart,—to cause the rich to forget their covetousness and the poor their poverty,—to while away the tedious hours of declining age, of bodily pain, or mental disquietude,—this is indeed a gift more excellent than the giant's strength, the victor's laurel, or the conqueror's crown; and this honour has WASHINGTON IRVING,—the author of THE SKETCH-BOOK and THE ALHAMBRA, the biographer of COLUMBUS and of WASHINGTON.

Irving, William, 1766–1821, a native of the city of New York, a brother of Washington Irving, was engaged in mercantile business in the place of his birth for a number of years, and from 1813 to '19 was a member of the National Congress. In 1793 he was married to a sister of James K. Paulding, and assisted him and Washington Irving in the composition of Salmagundi.—noticed at length in the preceding article. To this popular periodical William contributed the poetry, and hints and sketches for some of the essays. Of the other three brothers of Washington Irving, Ebenezer, born in 1776, is still living, (in 1857,) and resides with Washington Irving at Sunnyside; Peter, born in 1771, died in 1838; and John Treat, born in 1778, died in 1838. Jackson, James, M.D., LL.D., Prof. Emeritus of the Theory and Practice of Physic in the Univ. of Cambridge, Mass.; late Physician in the Mass. General Hospital. Letters to a Young Physician just entering upon Practice, Bost., 1855, 12mo; 4th ed., 1856, 12mo. Dedicated to John C. Warren, M.D. The distinguished author of this vol. has enjoyed the advantages of half a century's medical practice. This should be a sufficient endorsement of the sagacity of his counsels. The work has been well received on both sides of the Atlantic. The London Critic of April 1st, 1856, compares this work most favourably with publications lately issued by two medical professors at Edinburgh, and dismisses the subject with the remark:

"The conclusion we have come to after a perusal of it is, that Dr. Jackson has been through a long professional career, a judicious, safe, prudent, and sufficiently energetic practitioner, reflecting credit on American Practice of Physic."

Dr. Jackson was a pupil of Dr. Edward Augustus Holyoke, the centenarian, and gives us a sketch of his character in the introductory letter to the above-named work, which, we may say in conclusion, is of interest to the laic as well as the physician.

Jacob, Giles, 1686-1744, a native of Romsey, Hampshire, received a legal education, and subsequently became steward and secretary to the Hon. Wm. Blathwayt. Jacob was the author of more than thirty works, of which twenty-five were law-books. Of all these publications, the only ones now in request are: 1. Complete Court-Keeper, or Land-Steward's Assistant, Lon., 1715, 8vo; 8th ed., 1819, 8vo. 2. Poetical Register; or, Lives and Characters of the English Dramatic Poets, 1723, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Notwithstanding some few errors in it, it is by much the best book of the kind hitherto extant."—Biog. Dramat., 1764.

"Nearly of the same mean and despicable nature as Winstanley's English Poets."—Sir S. E. Brydges's Phillips's Poet. Anglic., pp. l., lxxvii. q. v.

Jacob's own dramas—Love in a Wood, a Farce, 1714, 12mo, and The Soldier's Last Stake, a Comedy—gained their author no distinction; and the latter was ridiculed by Dr. Sewel.

3. New Law Dictionary, 1729, fol.; 11th ed., 1797, 2 vols. 4to. Last and best ed. by Sir T. E. Tomline, edited (4th ed. of Tomline's) by T. C. Granger, 1825, 2 vols. 4to; Phila., 1836, 3 vols. 8vo.

"For practical purposes Bouvier's Law Dictionary is in every respect much to be preferred to the English work."—Martin's Leg. Bibl., 693.

"Jacob, the scourge of Grammar, mark with awe, Nor less revere the blunderbuss of law."

Duncuad, b. iii. l. 149.

Jacob, Henry, d. in Virginia soon after 1624, founder of the first Independent Congregational Church in England, was a native of Kent, educated at St. Mary's Hall, Oxford, and obtained the benefice of Cheriton, in Kent. He pub. a Treatise on the Sufferings and Victories of Christ, Lon., 1598, 8vo, a Defence of the same, 1600, 4to, and several theolog. works, for an account of which see Genl. Dict.; Athen. Oxon.; Strype's Life of Whitgift. Jacob's treatise, noticed above, was the first answer to Bp. Bilson's Sermons on Redemption, preached in 1597, pub. 1598, 8vo. See BILSON, THOMAS.

Jacob, Henry, 1606 or '07-1652, son of the preceding, was the author of Oratio Inauguralis, Græca et Latina Poemata, English Poetry, &c., (all pub. by Henry Birkhead, 1652, 4to,) and left some learned treatises in MS. See Athen. Oxon.; Biog. Brit., art. Dickinson.

Jacob, Henry. Hebrew Grammar, 1810, 8vo.

Rev.*, xviii. 123-152,) and several treatises on subjects of Political Economy, among which are—1. Two Reports on the Trade in Corn, and the Agricult. of the North of Europe, 1826-27, fol.; printed by H. of C.

"These Reports contain a great deal of valuable information respecting the agriculture and statistics of the North of Europe."—McCulloch's Lib. of Polit. Econ., 79.

2. An Inquiry into the Production and Consumption of the Precious Metals, 1831, 2 vols. 8vo. Undertaken at the suggestion of Mr. Huskisson, who assisted the author.

"Though perhaps the best on the subject, this work is very defective. It was reviewed, and some of its deficiencies pointed out, in the 55th volume of the Edinburgh Review."—McCulloch: ubi supra, 356.

Yet the work is highly commended by the Edin. Rev., the Lon. Quar. Rev., the Times, and the Spectator. See HUSKISSON, WILLIAM, M.P. A Biography of Mr. Jacob will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., May, 1852. See also index to Blackw. Mag., vols. i.-1.

Jago, Richard, 1715-1781, son of the Rev. Richard Jago, (Rector of Beadesert, Warwickshire), was educated at University College, Oxford, and presented successively to the livings of Harbury, Chesterton, Snitterfield, and Kincoate. He was the author of two sermons, 1755, 8vo, 1763, 8vo; Edgehill, a Poem, 1767, 4to; Labour and Genius; or, The Mill-Stream and the Cascade, a Fable, 1768, 4to; an Elegy on Blackbirds, pub. in the Advertiser as Gilbert West's; and other poetical pieces. A collective edit. of his Poems, with an account of the author's life, was pub. in 1784, 8vo, by John Scott Hylton. Jago was a poet of some merit, and, what is still more to his credit, an excellent parish priest. See his life, by Hylton; Johnson and Chalmers's Brit. Poets; Nichols's Lit. Anec.

James I., King of Scotland, 1395-1437, the second son of King Robert III., was captured by an English cruiser when on his way to France in 1405, and kept a prisoner in England until 1423, when he ascended the Scottish throne. He was assassinated by some rebellious subjects at Perth in 1437. He employed his imprisonment to such good purpose as to become famous for his erudition and manifold accomplishments. As an author he is best known by The King's Quhair, (Book,) consisting of 197 seven-lined stanzas, and elicited by the charms of the Lady Jane Beaufort, of the blood-royal of England, whom he beheld in the garden from his window in Windsor Castle. Need we add that the restoration to freedom left the royal wooer still a captive, and that the Lady Jane became Queen of Scotland? The other poems ascribed to him are Christis Kirk of the Grene; (also attributed to James V.;) Pebbis to the Play, (doubtful); Falkland on the Grene, a Song on Absence, and some minor pieces. The Poetical Remains of James I., edited by Wm. Tytler, were pub., Edin., 1783, 8vo. The Works of James I., containing the three poems noticed above, with two others generally ascribed to King James V.,—The Gaberlunzie Man, and the Jollie Beggar,—were pub. at Perth, 1786, 12mo. Tytler's edit. is accused, by Ritson and others, of many errors. The poems of James will also be found in Sibbald's Chronicles of Scottish Poetry. It is alleged that portions of The King's Quhair are superior to any poetry produced in England, with the exception of Chaucer's, before the age of Elizabeth. Indeed, Ellis says, "It is full of simplicity and feeling, and is not inferior in poetical merit to any singular production of Chaucer."—Spec. of the Early Eng. Poets, ed. 1843, i. 244.

Hallam remarks that

"The King's Quhair is a long allegory, polished and imaginative, but with some of the tediousness usual in such productions."—Lit. Hist. of Europe, ed. 1854, i. 126.

But perhaps no one has better described the author and his poem than Washington Irving, in the article entitled A Royal Poet, in the Sketch-Book. This admirable sketch—which was declared by Lockhart (Blackwood's Mag., vi. 559, Feb. 1820) to be "infinitely more graceful than any piece of American writing that ever came from any other hand, and well entitled to be classed with the best English writings of our day"—is, or ought to be, familiar to all of our readers.

"I have been particularly interested," remarks Irving, after a visit to the prince's former prison in Windsor Castle, "by those parts of the poem which breathe his immediate thoughts concerning his situation, or which are connected with the apartment in the Tower. They have thus a personal and local charm, and are given with such circumstantial truth as to make the reader present with the captive in his prison, and the companion of his meditations. . . . As an amatory poem it is edifying, in these days of coarser thinking, to notice the nature, refinement, and exquisite delicacy which pervade it, banishing every gross thought or immodest expression, and presenting female loveliness clothed in all its chivalrous attributes of almost supernatural purity and grace."—Sketch-Book, ed. N. York, 1855, 109-110, 117.

It is declared that James was as ready with his sword as with his pen, and equally so, we may add, with his feet, voice, and fingers, for he could sing, dance, and play on eight different instruments of music. The Scotch historians can never say enough in his praise:

"Ita orator erat, ut ejus dictione nihil fuerit artificiosius: ita Poeta, ut carmina non tam arte strinxisse, quam natura sponte fuisse videretur. Cui rem fidem faciunt carmina diversi generis, quæ in rhythmum Scotice illigavit, eo artificio," &c.—Insup LESLEY: De Jekus Gest. Scot., ed. 1675, 4to. lib. vii. 257, 266, 267.

James IV., King of Scotland, grandson of the preceding, was killed at the battle of Flodden Field, 1513, aged 40. He is said by Bishop Tanner (Bibliotheca) to have written upon the Apocalypse; but this is doubtful. See Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors.

James V., King of Scotland, son of the preceding, d. 1542, in the 33d year of his age. To him are ascribed Christis Kirk of the Grene, and the Gaberlunzie Man, (see James I., ante.) These two were pub. by John Collander, Edin., 1782, 8vo. See Park's R. and N. Authors; Pinkerton's Select Scottish Ballads; Watt's Bibl. Brit.; Lowndes's Bibl. Man. Christis Kirk of the Grene is a great favourite with the Scotch:

"One likes no language but the Faery Queen:

Or Scot will light for Christ's Kirk o' the Green."

Pope: Imit. of Hor., lib. ii. ep. 1.

James VI. of Scotland and I. of England, 1566-1625, grandson of the preceding, and only child of Mary, Queen of Scots, by her cousin, Henry Stuart, Lord Barnley, when only 18 years of age pub. a vol. entitled Essays of a Prentice in the Divine Art of Poesie, with the Rewies and Canteles to be pursued and avoided, Edin., 1584, 4to. In this vol. we have a mixture of poetry and prose, neither of much value. The latter gives the reader instructions in the proper mode of making verse. This was reprinted in Edin., 1814, sm. 4to, with a Prefatory Memoir by R. P. Gillies. A copy of the original ed. was sold at Bindley's sale for £26 5s. In 1691 appeared His Majesty's Poetical Exercises at Vacant Hours, 4to, and other works followed this collection. In 1616 (fol.) was given to the world a collective ed. of his prose compositions:

James I. his works, pub. by the Ep. of Winchester. Fine portrait by Passe, and frontispiece by Elstrack, folio. Containing Paraphrase on Revelation, Meditations, Basilicon Doron, Dæmonology, Counterblast to Tobacco, Law of Free Monarchies, Powder Treason, Defence of the Rights of Kings, Præmonition to Christian Monarchs, Speeches, &c.

CONTENTS: Osborne's Traditional Memoirs, Sir A. Weldon's Court and Character of James I., Aulicus Coquinarie, Sir E. Peyton's Divine Catastrophe of the House of Stuart.

As an author his majesty certainly has not enjoyed the same reputation since his death that he did in the midst of his brilliant court. Horace Walpole—not generally unwilling to find merit in noble pens—dismisses his majesty's literary claims with more wit than flattery:

"One remark I cannot avoid making: the king's speech is always supposed by parliament to be the speech of the minister; how cruel would it have been on King James's ministers, if that interpretation had prevailed in his reign! . . . Bishop Montague translated all his majesty's works into Latin: a man of so much patience was well worthy of favour."—R. and N. Authors, Park's ed., i. 115-116, 120.

As regards his theological abilities, an eminent authority remarks:

"His character as a man unfortunately adds no weight to his sentiments as an expositor; and his works would long ago have been forgotten, had they not been the production of a royal author. I ought not to omit his Majesty's poetical translation of the Psalms of David: a poor production from a scholar of Buchanan."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

James, George Payne Rainsford, b. in London about 1800, commenced his literary career at an early age by anonymous contributions to the journals and reviews which entered to the literary taste of "a discerning public." Some of these juvenile effusions fell under the notice of Washington Irving, and this gentleman, with his usual kindness of heart, encouraged the young author to venture upon something of a more important character than the fugitive essays which had hitherto employed his pen. Thus strengthened in his literary proclivity, the young aspirant nibbed his "gray-goose quill," commenced author in earnest, and gave to the world in 1822 his first work,—a Life of Edward the Black Prince. Mr. James now turned his attention to a field which had recently been cultivated with eminent success,—historical romance,—and completed in 1825 his novel of Richelieu, which, having received the favourable verdict of Sir Walter Scott, made its appearance in 1829. This was followed in the next year by Darnley and De L'Orme.

Richelieu was so fortunate as to secure the favour of the formidable Christopher North of Blackwood: but this invaluable commendation was withheld from Darnley:

"Mr. Colburn has lately given us two books of a very different character, Richelieu and Darnley. Richelieu is one of the most spirited, amusing, and interesting romances I ever read; characters well drawn—incidents well managed—story perpetually progressive—catastrophe at once natural and unexpected—moral good, but not gaudy—and the whole felt, in every chapter, to be the work of a Gentleman."—Noctes Ambrosianæ, April, 1830; Blackw. Mag., xxvii. 688, q. v.

From this time to the present (1858) Mr. James has been no idler in the Republic of Letters, as the following alphabetical list of his writings amply proves:

1. Adra, or The Peruvians; a Poem, 1 vol. 2. Agincourt, 1844, 3 vols. 3. Agnes Sorrel, 1853, 3 vols. 4. Arabella Stuart, 1853, 3 vols. 5. Arrah Neil, 1845, 3 vols. 6. Attila, 1837, 3 vols. 7. Beauchamp, 1848, 3 vols. 8. Blanche of Navarre; a Play, 1829, 1 vol. 9. Book of the Passions, 1838, 1 vol. 10. Cameralzaman; a Fairy Drama, 1848, 1 vol. 11. Castelneau; or, The Ancient Régime, 1841, 3 vols. 12. Castle of Ehrenstein, 1847, 3 vols. 13. Charles Tyrrell, 1839, 2 vols. 14. City of the Silent; a Poem, 1 vol. 15. Commissioner; or, De Lunatico Inquirendo, 1842, 1 vol. 16. Convict, 1847, 3 vols. 17. Corse de Leon, the Brigand, 1841, 3 vols. 18. Dark Scenes of History, 1849, 3 vols. 19. Darnley, 1830, 3 vols. 20. Delaware, 3 vols.; subsequently pub. under the title of Thirty Years Since, 1848, 1 vol. 21. De L'Orme, 1830, 3 vols. 22. Desultory Man, 3 vols. 23. Educational Institutions of Germany, 1 vol. 24. Eva St. Clara, and other Tales, 1843, 2 vols. 25. False Hair, 1843, 3 vols. 26. Fate, 1851, 3 vols. 27. Fight of the Fiddlers, 1848, 1 vol. 28. Forest Days, 1843, 3 vols. 29. Forgery; or, Best Intentions, 1848, 3 vols. 30. Gentleman of the Old School, 1839, 3 vols. 31. Gipsy, 1835, 3 vols. 32. Gowrie; or, The King's Plot, 1 vol. 33. Heidelberg, 1846, 3 vols. 34. Henry Masterton, 1832, 3 vols. 35. Henry Smeaton, 1850, 3 vols. 36. Henry of Guise, 1839, 3 vols. 37. History of Charlemagne, 1832, 1 vol. 38. History of Chivalry, 1 vol. 39. Hist. of Louis XIV., 1838, 4 vols. 40. Hist. of Richard Cœur de Lion, 1841–42, 4 vols. 41. Huguenot, 1838, 3 vols. 42. Jacquerie, 1841, 3 vols. 43. John Jones's Tales from English History, for Little John Joneses, 1849, 2 vols. 44. John Marston Hall, 1834, 3 vols.; subsequently pub. under the title of Little Ball o' Fire, 1847, 1 vol. 45. King's Highway, 1840, 3 vols. 46. Last of the Fairies, 1847, 1 vol. 47. Life of Edward the Black Prince, 1822, 2 vols. 48. Life of Henry IV. of France, 1847, 3 vols. 49. Life of Vicissitudes, 1 vol. 50. Man-at-Arms, 1840, 3 vols. 51. Margaret Graham, 1817, 2 vols. 52. Mary of Burgundy, 1833, 3 vols. 53. Memoirs of Great Commanders, 1832, 3 vols. 54. Morley Ernstein, 1842, 3 vols. 55. My Aunt Pontypool, 3 vols. 56. Old Dominion; or, The Southampton Massacre, 1856, 3 vols. 57. Old Oak Chest, 3 vols. 58. One in a Thousand, 1835, 3 vols. 59. Pequinillo, 1852, 3 vols. 60. Philip Augustus, 1831, 3 vols. 61. Prince Life, 1855, 1 vol. 62. Revenge, 1851, 3 vols.; so styled by the bookseller, without the author's consent. It was originally pub. in papers under a different name. 63. Richelieu, 1829, 3 vols. 64. Robber, 1838, 3 vols. 65. Rose D'Albret, 1840, 3 vols. 66. Russell, 1847, 3 vols. 67. Sir Theodore Broughton, 1847, 3 vols. 68. Smuggler, 1845, 3 vols. 69. Stepmother, 1846, 3 vols. 70. Story without a Name, 1852, 1 vol. 71. String of Pearls, 1849, 2 vols. 72. Ticonderoga; or, The Black Eagle, 1854, 3 vols. 73. Whim and its Consequences, 1847, 3 vols. 74. Woodman, 1847, 3 vols. 75. Lord Montagu's Page, Phila., 1855, 12mo.

It will be seen that the above list presents a total of 189 vols.—viz.: 51 works in 3 vols. each, 2 in 4 vols. each, 6 in 2 vols. each, and 16 in 1 vol. each. Almost all of these vols. are of the post-octavo size. Mr. James is also the editor of the Vernon Letters, illustrative of the times of William III., 1841, 3 vols. 8vo; and of Wm. Henry Ireland's historical romance of David Rizzio, 1849, 3 vols. p. 8vo; and was associated with Dr. E. B. Crowe in the Lives of the Most Eminent Foreign Statesmen, 1832–38, 5 vols. p. 8vo. (4 vols. were Mr. James's, and 1 vol. Dr. Crowe's,) and with Mr. Maunsell B. Field, in the composition of Adrian, or The Clouds of the Mind, 1852, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

To this list may be added Norfolk and Hereford, (in a collection entitled Seven Tales by Seven Authors), and enough articles in various periodicals to fill eight or ten volumes. Perhaps we should not omit to notice Ort a work entitled A Brief History of the United States Boundary Question, drawn up from official papers, pub. 5. London, 1839, 8vo, and ascribed to Mr. James, is not his production; nor had he any share (further than writing a preface, or something of that kind) in another work often credited to him,—Memoirs of Celebrated Women, 1837, 2 vols. p. 8vo. During the reign of William IV. the author received the appointment of historiographer of Great Britain; but this post was resigned by him many years since.

There have been new edits. of many of Mr. James's novels, and some or all of them have appeared in Bentley's Series of Standard Novels. There has been also a Parlourlibrary Edition. A collective edit. was pub. by Smith, Elder & Co., commencing in June, 1844, and continued by Parry, and by Simpkin, Marshall & Co. In America they have been popular, and pub. in large quantities.

About 1830, Mr. James, with his family, removed permanently to the United States. He was British Consul at Richmond, Virginia, from 1852 to Sept. 1858, when he was appointed Consul at Venice, where he now (1858) resides. The space which we have occupied by a recital of the titles only of Mr. James's volumes necessarily restricts the quotation of criticisms upon the merits or demerits of their contents. It has fallen to the lot of few authors to be so much read, and at the same time so much abused, as the owner of the fertile pen which claims the long list of novels commencing with Richelieu in 1829 and exte to Lord Montagu's Page in 1858. That there should be a family likeness in this numerous race—where so many, too, are nearly of an age—can be no matter of surprise. The mind, like any other artisan, can only construct from materials which lie within its range; and when no time is allowed for the accumulation and renewal of these, it is vain to hope that variety of architecture will conceal the identity of substance. Yet, after all, the champion of this popular author will probably argue that this objection against the writings of Mr. James is greatly overstated and extravagantly overestimated. The novelist can draw only from the experience of human life in its different phases, and these admit not of such variety as the inordinate appetite of the modern Athenians unreasonably demands. A new series of catastrophes and perplexities, of mortifications and triumphs, of joys and sorrows, cannot be evoked for the benefit of the reader of each new novel. Again, Mr. James's admirer insists that this charge of sameness so often urged against our novelist's writings is perhaps overstated. Where one author, as is frequently the case, gains the reputation of versatility of talent by writing one or two volumes, it is not to be believed that Mr. James exhibits less in one or two hundred. He who composes a library is not to be judged by the same standard as he who writes but one book. And even if the charge of "sameness" be admitted to its full extent, yet many will cordially concur with the grateful and graceful acknowledgment of one of the most eminent of modern critics:

"I hail every fresh publication of James, though I half know what he is going to do with his lady, his gentleman, and his landscape, and his mystery, and his orthodoxy, and his criminal trial. . . . But I am charmed with the new amusement which he brings out of old materials. I look on him as I look on a musician famous for "variations." I am grateful for his vein of cheerfulness, for his singularly varied and vivid landscapes, for his power of painting women at once ladylike and loving, (a rare talent,) for making lovers to match, at once beautiful and well-bred, and for the solace which all this has afforded me, sometimes over and over again, in illness and in convalescence, when I required interest without violence, and entertainment at once animated and mild."—LEIGH HUNT.

Two of the severest criticisms to which Mr. James's novels have been subjected are, the one in the London Athenæum for April 11, 1846, and the one in the North American Review (by E. P. Whipple) for April, 1844. From each of these we quote a few lines:

"The first and most obvious convenience for the attainment of quantity is, of course, Dilution; but this recourse has practically its limit, and Mr. James had reached it long ago. Commonplace in its best day, any thing more feeble, vapid,—sloppy, in fact, (for we know not how to characterize this writer's style but by some of its own elegancies,)—than Mr. James's manner has become, it were difficult to imagine. Every literary grace has been swamped in the spreading marmosus of his style."—Athenæum: ubi supra.

"He is a most scientific expounder of the fact that a man may be a maker of books without being a maker of thoughts; that he may be the reputed author of a hundred volumes and flood the market with his literary wares, and yet have very few ideas and principles for his stock in trade. For the last ten years he has been repeating his own repetitions and echoing his own echoes. His first novel was a shot that went through the hole, and he has ever since been assiduously firing through the hole. . . . When a man has little or nothing to say, he should say it in the smallest space. He should not, at any rate, take up more room than suffices for a creative mind. He should not provoke hostility and petulance by the offrontry of his demands upon time and patience. He should let us off with a few volumes, and gain our gratitude for his benevolence, if not our praise for his talents."—E. P. WHIPPLE: ubi supra, and in his Essays and Reviews, ii, 116-137.

We have spoken of Mr. James's champions and admirers; and such are by no means fabulous personages, notwithstanding the severe censures of which we have just exhibited specimens. A brief quotation from one of these eulogies will be another evidence added to the many in this volume of a wide dissimilarity in critical opinions:

"His pen is prolific enough to keep the imagination constantly nourished; and of him, more than of any modern writer, it may be said, that he has improved his style by the mere dint of constant and abundant practice. For, although so agreeable a novelist, it must not be forgotten that he stands infinitely higher as an historian. . . . The most fantastic and beautiful conceptions which the skies can exhibit to the eyes of mankind dart as if in play from the huge volumes that roll out from the crater of the volcano. . . . The recreation of an enlarged intellect is ever more valuable than the highest efforts of a confined one. Hence we find in the works before us, [Corse de Leon, The Ancient Régime, and The Jacquerie,] lightly as they have been thrown off, the traces of study,—the footsteps of a powerful and vigorous understanding."—Dublin University Magazine, March, 1842.

The Edinburgh Review concludes some comments upon our author with the remark,

"Our readers will perceive from these general observations that we estimate Mr. James's abilities, as a romance-writer, highly; his works are lively and interesting, and animated by a spirit of sound and healthy morality in feeling, and of natural delineation in chaacter, which, we think, will secure for them a calm popularity which will last beyond the present day."

We have before us more than thirty (to be exact, just thirty-two) commendatory notices of our author, but brief extracts from two of these is all for which we can find space.

"He belongs to the historical school of fiction, and, like the masters of the art, takes up a real person or a real event, and pursuing the course of history, makes out the intentions of nature by adding circumstances and heightening character, till, like a statue in the hands of the sculptor, the whole is in fair proportion, truth of sentiment, and character. For this he has high qualities,—an excellent taste, extensive knowledge of history, a right feeling of the chivalrous, and a heroic and a ready eye for the picturesque; his proprieties are admirable: his sympathy with whatever is high-souled and noble is deep and impressive. His best works are Richard and Mary of Burgundy."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years, 1833.

The critic next to be quoted, whilst coinciding in the objections prominently urged against Mr. James as an author,—repetition, tediousness, and deficiency of terseness,—yet urges on his behalf that "There is a constant appeal in his brilliant pages not only to the pure and generous, but to the elevated and noble sentiment; he is imbued with the very soul of chivalry; and all his stories turn on the final triumph of those who are influenced by such feelings over such as are swayed by selfish or base desires. He possesses a great pictorial powers, and a remarkable facility of turning his graphic pen at will to the delineation of the most distant and opposite scenes, manners, and social customs. . . . Not a word or a thought which can give pain to the purest heart ever escapes from his pen; and the mind wearied with the cares and grieved at the selfishness of the world reverts with pleasure to his varied compositions, which carry it back, as it were, to former days, and portray, perhaps in too brilliant colours, the ideas and manners of the olden time."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 1815-52, chap. v., 1853. James, L. Letters relating to the College of Physicians, Lon., 1688, 4to.

James, Maria, b. in Wales about 1795, emigrated to America in her seventh year, and since the age of ten has lived at service with a number of families, whose regard she has secured by the excellence of her deportment and her intellectual abilities. In 1833 some of her compositions fell into the hands of Professor Alonzo Potter, D.D., of Union College, now the esteemed Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the State of Pennsylvania, and in 1839 he introduced a collection of them to the public under the title of Wales, and other Poems, by Maria James. Some specimens of Miss James's poetry will be found in Griswold's Female Poets of America.

James, Richard, 1592-1638, a native of Newport, Isle of Wight, educated at Exeter and Corpus Christi Colleges, Oxford, pub. a number of sermons, &c., 1625-33, and left many MS. pieces. This learned critic and antiquary was a nephew of Thomas James, D.D., Sub-dean of Wells. See Athen. Oxon.; Biog. Brit., Supp.; Bp. Nicolson's Hist. Lib.; Lon. Gent. Mag., xxxvii. 336.

James, Robert, M.D., 1703-1776, the inventor of the celebrated Fever Powder, was a native of Staffordshire, and educated at St. John's College, Oxford. His best-known work is A Medicinal Dictionary, Lon., 1743-45, 3 vols. fol. His Vindication of the Fever Powder was not pub. until after his death. See Chalmers's Biog. Dict.; Boswell's Life of Johnson. Dr. Johnson, who always had a propensity for dabbling in physie, furnished some of the articles for the Medicinal Dictionary, and observed of Dr. James, "No man brings more mind to his profession."

Johnson also wrote the Dedication (and nothing of his is more truly "Johnsonese.") to Dr. Mead.

James, Thomas, D.D., 1571?-1629, a native of Newport, Isle of Wight, educated at and Fellow of (1593) New College, Oxford; appointed Keeper (the first one) of the Bodleian Library, 1602; resigned this post in 1620; Sub-dean of Wells, 1614, and subsequently Rector of Mongeham, Kent. His best-known work is A Treatise of the Corruption of Scriptures, Councils, and Fathers, by the Prelates, Pastors, and Pillars of the Church of Rome, for Maintenance of Popery and Irreligion, Lon., 1612, 4to; 1688, Svo; edited by Rev. J. E. Cox, 1843, Svo. A new ed. of his Bellum Papale (first ed., 1600, 4to, again, 1678, Svo) was pub. in 1841, 12mo. We have already noticed his Catalogue of the Bodleian Library in the Life of Sir Thomas Bodley. Dr. James was one of the most learned critics of his day. See Athen. Oxon.; Biog. Brit., Supp.; Genl. Dict.; Usher's Life and Letters; Oldys's Librarian; Horne's Introd. to the Scrip.

James, Capt. Thomas. Dangerous Voyage for discovering the northwest passage to the South Sea, Lon.,

1633, 4to, 1740, Svo. Also in Churchill's Voyages, ii. p. 479, 1703; in Coxe's Voyages, i. 1741; and in Harris's Collection, vol. ii. It is a valuable work to the collector of Arctic Voyages, and has brought as much as £6.

"His narrative contains some remarkable physical observations on the cold and ice; but no hint of any discovery of importance."—Stevenson's Voyages and Travels.

James, Lt.-Col. Thomas, R. Artillery. The Hist. of the Herculean Straits, now called the Straits of Gibraltar, Lon., 1771, 2 vols. r. 4to. The 2d vol. contains detailed accounts of several sieges and successful defences of Gibraltar previous to the last great siege which it sustained.

"Remarkable for the clearness and conciseness with which each tale is narrated."—Lon. Examiner.

This new trans. is intended to take the place of the defective ones of Croxall, Baldwin, L'Estrange, &c. The illustrations add greatly to the value of the work.

"Nothing has been seen like them since Bewick."

2. Æsop for the Million; 38th thousand, 1858, p. Svo. 3. The Book of Common Prayer, &c., edited with Notes and Illustrations.

"It is impossible to speak too highly of the exceeding beauty of this work."—Cambridge Chronicle.

James, Thomas C., M.D., 1766-1835, an eminent physician, a native of Philadelphia, Penn., graduated as a student of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania in 1788, and in 1811 was appointed Professor of Midwifery in the same institution. He practised his profession in his native city with great success until his death. Dr. James was an accomplished scholar, and contributed to the Philadelphia Port-Folio, under the signature of P. D., translations in verse of the Idyls of Gessner, which were highly commended. See Williams's Amer. Med. Biog.; Phila. Casket, March, 1830; Amer. Med. Jour., (art. by Hugh L. Svo, and 2 4to atlases of Tables, 1822; 2d ed., with addits., 1826, 6 vols. Svo; 3d ed., with addit. notes and continuation by Capt. Chamier, 1847, 6 vols. Svo.

"This book is one of which it is not too high praise to assert, that it approaches as nearly to perfection, in its own line, as any historical work perhaps ever did; and we must acknowledge that we cannot contemplate without admiration the impartial and unwearied zeal for historical truth which alone could have supported the author through his tedious and thankless labours."—Edin. Rev. Highly commended by other authorities.

"Mr. TICKLER.—A Naval History is a very good thing, if written by a competent person, which James is not, although the man has some merit as a chronicler. But the very idea of criticising in detail every action, just as you would criticise a volume of poems, is not a little absurd. Southey's Life of Nelson is good."

"NORTH.—Excellent. Look at James's History after reading that admirable Manual, and you will get sick."—Notes Ambros., Blackw. Mag., April, 1824, 382.

Jameson, Mrs. Anna, a daughter of Mr. Murphy, late painter-in-ordinary to the Princess Charlotte, was married about 1824 to Mr. Jameson, who has for many years held an official appointment in Canada. This union "proved less fortunate in its issues than in its promises, and has long been practically, though not legally, dissolved." The works of this lady have long enjoyed an extensive popularity, and few writers of the age have done so much to refine the public taste and diffuse a knowledge of the great masters of art. 1. Svo, and a number of Mrs. Jameson's Tales and Miscellanies contributed to various annuals, now first collected. 1 vol. p. Svo. 3d ed. of The Diary of an Ennuyée, 1838, p. Svo.

"Nor could we give a better instance of real description and opinions interwoven with a romance—though in no way needing this fictitious interest—than another established favourite.—Mrs. Jameson's Diary of an Ennuyée."—Miss Ryan: Lady Travellers; Lon. Quar. Rev., June, 1845.

Parts 1–4 comprise a new ed. of the Dictionary; Parts 5–8 a new ed. of the Supp. Only 350 copies were pub., at 48 8s. Abridged, 1846, 8vo, £1 1s.; 1850, 8vo, 12s. This is one of the most valuable lexicographical works ever issued. The erudition, patience, and industry of the author are beyond praise: his accuracy, however, is not always beyond question. But who is to decide where there must be so much of mere conjecture? We may be allowed to suggest that the philologist should secure, as a companion for Jamieson's Dictionary, Dictionaryum Scoto-Celticum, pub. by The Highland Society, 1825, 2 vols. 4to, £7 7s.; large paper, £10 10s.; condensed edit., with additional words, £1 1s. "This book is perhaps the most interesting, the most beautiful, and the cheapest series ever offered to the public."—Lon. Athenaeum.

The Illustrations, apart from the descriptive matter, were issued in 1846, &c. in Parts at 5s. each. In the preparation of this valuable series, Sir Wm. Jardine was assisted by Swainson, Waterhouse, Macgillivray, Bushnan, Selby, Seaburgh, Col. Hamilton Smith, Dr. Hamilton, and the Rev. James Duncan. Each vol. (sold separately) contains a memoir of a celebrated naturalist. Sir Thomas Dick Lauder and Capt. Thomas Brown commenced in November, 1833, the issue of The Miscellany of Natural History, the design of which, the London Athenaeum declares, was taken from the work just noticed. See Athen., 1833, 802-801. 4. Technology of Annulata, 3 Pts. fol., 1832, each £1 1s. 5. Contributions to Ornithology, 4 series, 1818-51, £3 9s. for all. 6. With Prédiaux John Selby, Illustrations of Ornithology, Edin., 1829-45, 3 vols. 4to, £10 10s.; large paper, £15 15s., 150 col'd plates, and 150 duplicates, plain.

"This is a very excellent and valuable work, as indeed the talent employed on it sufficiently ensures. The plates are beautifully coloured, and the letter-press accurately and well written. We strongly recommend it to our scientific readers."—N. VILLE Wood.

The editor's assistants in this work were J. E. Bichenoe, J. G. Children, John Gould, Major-General Hardwicke, Dr. Horsfield, R. Jameson, Sir T. Stamford Raffles, and N. A. Vigors. To Sir Wm. Jarvis, Abraham, D.D., 1739–1813, a native of Norwalk, Conn., grad. at Yale College, 1761; Bishop of the Prot. Epis. Church in the State of New York, 1797. He pub. a Sermon on the death of Bishop Seabury, (whom he succeeded,) and one on the Witness of the Spirit.

Jarvis or Jervas, Charles, d. about 1740, a printer, pub. a trans. of Don Quixote, 1742, 2 vols. 4to. Several edits. Motteux's is a better trans. than Jarvis's. Respecting edits., &c. of Don Quixote, see Ticknor's Hist. of Spanish Lit., vols. ii. and iii.; Watt's Bibl. Brit.; Lowndes's Bibl. Man.; Sales's edit. of Don Quixote, in Spanish, Bost., 1836, 2 vols. 12mo; a review of this edit. by Wm. H. Prescott, the historian, in N. Amer. Rev., July, 1837, and in Prescott's Miscellanies, 1853, 123–175, John Bowle's edit. of Don Quixote, 1781, 6 vols. 4to; (see BOWLE, JOHN;) Edmund Gayton's Festivous Notes upon Don Quixote, 1654, fol.; 1768, 12mo; (see GAYTON, EDMUND.) Information concerning Jarvis will be found in Bowles's ed. of Pope; Ruffhead's Life of Pope, p. 147, 4th ed.; Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting.

"I never read a thing with more pleasure than an additional sheet to Jervas's preface to Don Quixote: before I got over two paragraphs I cried out, 'Aut Erasmus, aut Diabolus.'"—POPE.

The most beautiful edit. of Don Quixote in English is that pub. by Tilt in London, 1838, 3 vols. 8vo, £2 10s.; again, 1843, 2 vols. r. 8vo; again, by Willoughby, 1852, 2 vols. r. 8vo, £2 1s.; 2 vols. in 1, 8vo, 10s. 6d. This is Jarvis's trans. revised and corrected, with 800 wood-engravings, after the designs of Tony Johannot, and 16 addit. plates by Cosmo Armstrong. A revised trans. for general reading, with illustrations by Warren, was pub. by Burns in London, in 1848, fp. 8vo, 6s. This is the proper edit. for the ladies' parlour. Another revised trans., formed on those of Motteux, Jarvis, and Smollett, with 18 cuts by Armstrong, and 32 after Johannot, was pub. in London in 1842, £1 8s.; the same, with only the usual 18 cuts by Armstrong, 18s.

"Well adapted, by its accuracy, comprehensiveness, and the popular language in which it is expressed, to be a proper and valuable book for the purpose which it was designed to fill."—JOHN C. WARREN, M.D., of Boston.

Commended by other high authorities. Dr. Jarvis has pub. a number of pamphlets on various branches of medical science, and contributed to the leading American medical journals.

Jarvis, Samuel Farmer, D.D., LL.D., 1787–1851, a son of Bishop Jarvis, (ante), and a native of Middletown, Conn., was educated at Yale College, ordained deacon in 1810, and priest in 1811; Rector of St. Michael's Church, Bloomingdale, New York, 1811; of St. James's, New York, (held in conjunction with the former,) 1813; Prof. of Biblical Criticism in the (Episcopal) General Theological Seminary, New York, 1819–20; first Rector of St. Paul's Church, Boston, 1820–26; travelled in Europe, 1826–35; Prof. of Oriental Literature in Washington (now Trinity) College, Hartford, 1835–37; Rector of Christ Church, Middletown, 1837–42; appointed Historiographer of the Church by the General Convention (Prot. Epis. Church) of 1838. From 1842 until his death Dr. Jarvis devoted his time chiefly to the preparation of an ecclesiastical history, (commended to his care by the General Convention of 1838,) portions of which were pub. in 1844 and 1850. See Nos. 5, 8. 1. A Discourse on the Religion of the Indian Tribes of North America, N. York, 1820, 8vo. Favorably reviewed by John Pickering in the N. Amer. Rev., July, 1820. 2. "Dr. Jarvis has exhibited accuracy and fidelity as an historian, the ripest judgment and the clearest reasoning as a commentator upon the intricate authorities on which he had to build his foundation for inquiry, and has shown himself an accomplished scholar, fully equal to the task committed to his charge. The work is a foundation on which the Christian historian and theologian may build; for the materials are solid, and the work admirably executed."—Lon. Polytechnic Review.

"A learned work on New Testament Chronology, by an American divine (Dr. Jarvis, of Connecticut) of standing and reputation. It is quite pleasant to find the daughter-church rearing chronologists and scholars; and we commend Dr. J.'s undertaking to the candid estimate and patronage of the learned."—Lon. Chron. Review.

"A thorough and comprehensive analysis of all the evidence extant, whether sacred or profane, upon the most difficult and important points in ecclesiastical chronology,—viz.: the precise years of the birth and death of our Saviour. . . . A work of extraordinary research."—BISHOP DOANE, of New Jersey.

Shortly after this vol. was issued from the press, the author was attacked by the disease which terminated his earthly existence, March 26, 1851, in the 65th year of his age. In addition to the literary labours already noticed, Dr. Jarvis contributed several articles to the N. York Church Review, ed. in 1844 an American edit. of Thomas Hartwell Horne's Mariolatry, (see No. 37, under his name,) and made some progress in the preparation of a work on Egypt.

Judge Jay, like his late eminent father, was noted for his lively interest in the welfare of his fellow-men.

Jay, William, 1769-1854, an eminent Dissenting divine, a native of Tisbury, Wiltshire, commenced preaching when between 15 and 16 years of age, and before he was 21 had delivered nearly 1000 sermons. On the 31st of Jan. 1791, he became the minister of Argyle Chapel, Bath, and remained in this situation until June, 1853, or for sixty-two years. In Jan. 1841, on the completion of the 50th year of his ministry, the jubilee was celebrated by religious services in the chapel, and by a feast in the Assembly Rooms, where 820 persons sat down together to breakfast. A salver and £650 were presented to the object of this gratifying token of respect. To the volume pub. on this occasion,—Jubilee Memorial, 1841, 12mo,—to Jay's Autobiography, edited by Rev. Geo. Redford and Rev. J. Angell James, 1854, 8vo, (3d ed., 1855, p. 8vo.) to the Memoir of Jay, by Rev. S. S. Wilson, 1854, 4p. 8vo, to Wallace's Portraiture of Jay, with Notes of his Conversations, &c., and to Pen-Pictures of Popular English Preachers, 1852, 12mo, we refer the reader for information respecting this excellent divine. The best-known of Jay's works are Morning and Evening Exercises, (vols. i.-iv., 1842, of the collective ed. of his Works;) The Christian Contemplated, (vol. vi., 1843, of his Works;) Short Discourses, (vols. x. and xii., 1844, of his Works;) and Mornings with Jesus, 1854, 4p. 8vo. The collective ed. to which we refer is in 12 vols. 8vo, Bath, 1842-44. (N. York, 3 vols. 8vo.) and was corrected and revised by the author himself. To these 12 vols. must be added Lectures on Female Scripture Characters, 1854, cr. 8vo; Mornings with Jesus, 1854, 4p. 8vo; Evenings with Jesus; and Final Discourses at Argyle Chapel, Bath, 1854, 4p. 8vo. As a preacher, as well as an author, Mr. Jay has acquired great celebrity. John Foster calls him the Prince of Preachers; Sheridan styled him the most natural orator whom he had ever heard; Dr. James Hamilton speaks of hearing him "with wonder and delight;" and Beckford describes his mind as "a clear, transparent stream, flowing so freely as to impress us with the idea of its being inexhaustible."

His sermons, too,—not always the case with the effusions of popular preachers,—will bear the dispassionate judgment of the closet without lessening the reputation of their author.

"Mr. Jay's sermons, although a little too warmly coloured, have, upon the whole, great merit as honest and impassioned expressions of the several texts which are handled."—Dodd's Lib. Comp.

"Eloquent and pious."—Dr. E. Williams's C. P.

"Happily connects privilege and practice."—Bickersteth's C. S.

"His sermons, like his other publications, are universally admired, and permanently fixed the writer's reputation. . . . One great charm of this divine's works is the catholic spirit which pervades them. The dissenter seldom intrudes, the sectarian never appears; and Christians of all denominations may read his productions without finding any violence done to their party predilections."—Downes's Brit. Lib., 57, 905.

"His works are very practical and devotional."—Bickersteth's C. S.

"Mr. Jay's Works have held a high place in the estimation of the religious world for more than the average duration of human life."—Lon. Athenæum.

All the works ascribed by him to the latter, with the exception of the last two articles, should have been credited to John Jebb, M.D.

"The language is rich, vigorous, and unaffected; the style simple and commanding; and the notes will be read with much satisfaction by the scholar and the divine."—British Critic

"Perhaps he approaches more closely the standard of the amiable and pious FENELON, whose deeply-spiritual sentiments we could sometimes fancy him to have enunciated with the superior energy of a MASSILLON or a BOURDUALE."—Lon. Christian Observer

3. Sacred Literature; comprising a Review of the Principles of Composition laid down by Bp. Lowth in his Preflections and Isaiah, &c., 1820, 28, 8vo, 1831, 8vo.

"Archdeacon Jebb's Sacred Literature has the highest claims to the attention of every biblical student, for its numerous beautiful criticisms and elucidations of the New Testament."—T. H. HURSE; see Introduct. to the scrip.; Bpvs. THOMAS, in this Dictionary.

"In this learned and elegant work the author controverts some of Lowth's views of Hebrew poetry, and applies others of them to the interpretation of many passages in the New Testament. . . . No book of criticism has lately appeared more worthy of attention from the biblical scholar, or more calculated to recommend the study of the Scriptures."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"As a relative and a friend, Bishop Jebb here shines as brightly as he does as a scholar; and what is yet more valuable, they who had not the privilege of seeing Bishop Jebb after his illness will learn from Mr. Forster an accurate and most interesting account how a Christian could suffer, and turn his sufferings into a blessing to himself and others. The whole of the biography is written in a spirit of good feeling and good taste, which do the highest honour to Mr. Forster."—British Magazine.

"The Life of this exemplary Prelate, this amiable, accomplished, and pious man, not only teems with the most weighty lessons, of a practical kind, for the imitation of every Churchman in England, and still more especially in Ireland at the present time, but it exhibits one of the most engaging and soundly-constituted characters that have ever been delineated for the lasting benefit of mankind."—Lon. Monthly Review.

Jefferson, Thomas, April 2, 1743–July 4, 1826, a native of Shadwell, Albemarle county, Virginia, entered William and Mary College in 1760, and subsequently studied law under George Wythe. In 1769 he was elected a member of the Colonial Assembly, and in 1775 succeeded Peyton Randolph in the National Congress at Philadelphia, and on the 28th of June, in the next year, as chairman of the committee appointed for that purpose, reported the celebrated Declaration of Independence, which, with some alterations, was adopted on the 4th of July ensuing. How far Mr. Jefferson is entitled to the credit of the entire originality of this famous document, the reader will be able to form an opinion after consulting the works of John Adams, of Thomas Jefferson, and the biographies of these distinguished statesmen and patriots. See also an interesting article upon this topic in George Ticknor Curtis's History of the Constitution of the United States, vol. i., 1854, pp. 81–88. It is neither our business nor our pleasure to adjudicate on questions of state-paper history or political partisanship in a volume of this character, but we may be allowed to say that Jefferson's claim to the authorship of the Declaration of Independence seems as fully substantiated as the nature of the case will possibly allow. From 1779 to '81 Mr. Jefferson was Governor of his native State; in 1783 was again elected a member of Congress; from 1784 to '89 resided at Paris, succeeding Franklin in 1785 as minister from the United States; in 1789 he was appointed by General Washington Secretary of State, which office he held until 1793; was Vice-President of the United States 1797–1801, and President of the Republic 1801–09. Mr. Jefferson had now reached an age when the duties of public life were no longer inviting, and he passed his remaining years at Monticello, dividing his time between his plantation, his library, and the entertainment of the many visitors attracted to his mansion by his widely-extended reputation at home and abroad. He died on the same day as that which closed the earthly existence of John Adams,—the 4th of July, 1826.

As an author, Mr. Jefferson is best known by his Notes on the State of Virginia, (originally drawn up for M. De Marbois,) of which 200 copies were privately printed at Paris in 1784, (but dated 1782,) 8vo. A French translation, by the Abbé Morellet, with some alterations by the author, appeared at Paris in 1786, 8vo, and an edit. of the original in English was pub. by Stockdale in London in 1787, 8vo.

But on this subject we can give nothing more satisfactory to the reader than the following table, (drawn up by a well-known American historian and bibliographer,) which we find in The Historical Magazine, Boston, Feb. 1857, vol. i., No. 2, p. 52.

"JEFFERSON'S NOTES ON VIRGINIA.—The following is a list of the several editions of this work, as far as ascertained. Those with a * prefixed have been collated. They are all 8vo except when otherwise marked:

* * * 1ditio princeps, Paris, 1782; pp. 391; plate of Mammoth Cave.

* * * French edition, Paris, 1786; pp. viii., 290, iv., map.

* * * 1st American do., Pritchard and Hall, Philadelphia, 1788; pp. ii., 244.

* * * 2d American do., Philadelphia, 1788; pp. ii., 336.

* * * Another do., Philadelphia, 1792; ii., 336.

* * * Appendix to Notes, Smith, Philadelphia, 1800; pp. 51; woodcut.

* * * Notes; American edition, Baltimore, 1800.

* * * 1st hot-pressed do., Rawle, Philadelphia, 1801; pp. ii., 436, 56; portrait; map; two plans, and view of Natural Bridge.

* * * 5th American do., Sprague, Boston, 1802; 12mo, pp. 368; map.

* * * Another do., Trenton, N.J., 1803; 12mo, extra fine paper.

* * * Another do., New York, 1804; best ed.; pp. 392.

* * * Another do., Hogan and Thompson, Philadelphia, 1825; 12mo.

* * * Another do., Boston, 1832.

* * * Last edition, Randolph, Richmond, 1853; 3 ff. pp. 275; map; four lithographs; one folding sheet of letter-press.

"It will be noticed that very little order seems to have obtained in numbering the editions. That called the 3d American appears to have been the 6th in succession; the 1st hot-pressed, the 7th; and so forth. Perhaps some of your readers may be able to contribute to the above list. Were there not any editions during Mr. Jefferson's second term as President?

E. B. O'C."

The last ed., above noticed, was printed from Mr. Jefferson's own copy, with his MS. annotations, intended apparently for a new issue. We may say that Mr. Randolph has now, (Jan. 1857,) or had a few weeks since, on sale, this copy of Mr. Jefferson's, which is priced at $100. Nor must we omit to notice Mr. Randolph's enterprise in republishing the History of the University of Virginia, as detailed in the Correspondence of Mr. Jefferson and Joseph C. Cabell, Richmond, 1856, 8vo. Of these letters of Jefferson's, all, with the exception of eight, are now given to the world for the first time. Ample information respecting the character of the Notes on Virginia will be found in the authorities referred to in the course of this article. As Stevenson's Catalogue of Voyages and Travels, however, is now rarely to be met with, it may be worth while to quote his opinion of the work:

"Notes on Virginia, by Thos. Jefferson, 1788, 8vo. Politics, commerce, manufactures, and navigation, are here treated of in a satisfactory and instructive manner, but with rather too much the air of philosophy."—P. 623.

In 1829 was pub. by Jefferson's grandson, Memoirs, Correspondence, and Private Papers of Thomas Jefferson, edited by Thomas Jefferson Randolph, 4 vols. 8vo, Charlottesville, Va.; reprinted in London and in Boston in the same year, and in New York in 1830; all in 4 vols. 8vo. But recently there has appeared a more important publication,—viz.: The Writings of Thomas Jefferson; being his Autobiography, Correspondence, Reports, Messages, Addresses, and other Writings, official and private; from the original manuscripts deposited in the Department of State. With Explanatory Notes, tables of contents, and a copious Index to each volume, as well as an Index to the whole, N. York, 1854, 9 vols. 8vo. By the Editor, H. A. Washington. This edit. is from the MSS. bequeathed to Thomas Jefferson Randolph, the author's grandson, and purchased by Congress in 1818. The reader is also referred—in addition to the histories of the Revolutionary period—to the following biographies of Jefferson: by Professor George Tucker, Phila. and Lon., 1837, 2 vols. 8vo; by Wm. Linn, Ithaca, N. Y., 1834, 12mo; by B. L. Rayner, Bost., 1834, 12mo; by H. A. Garland; by Theodore Dwight, 1839, 12mo. See also Observations on the Writings of Thomas Jefferson, by H. Lee, of Virginia, N. York, 1832, 8vo, 1839, 8vo, 1845, 8vo, with addit. notes by C. C. Lee, of Powhatan, in answer to George Tucker's Remarks in his Life of Jefferson: The Youth of Jefferson, a Chronicle of College Scrapes at Williamsburg, in Virginia, 1855, 12mo. It is worthy of observation that Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary Practice (trans. into French by L. A. Pichon, Paris, 1814, 8vo) is still in use, and deferred to as an authority at Washington and elsewhere, and an edit. has been pub. within the last three or four years. It is incorporated in Sutherland's excellent Congressional Manual, of which the 2d edit. appeared in 1846, Phila., 18mo. It may be expected that we should not conclude a notice, however hasty and imperfect, of the writings of Thomas Jefferson, without cautioning the reader against the pernicious influence of those portions of his lucubrations which assail the divine authority of the Scriptures. But, indeed, it is hardly conceivable that any intelligent and candid mind could be perverted by the crudities and self-contradictory sophisms which distinguish the theological speculations of the "Sage of Monticello." The effect produced on our own mind—when as yet very young and inexperienced in the inconsistencies of mental physiology—by the perusal of a portion of Jefferson's famous letters to William Short was that of astonishment that a mind apparently so inert and obtuse in metaphysics could evince vigour and acuteness in political philosophy. That remarkable exhibition of theologia dogmatica, Jefferson's Plutarchian contrast between his own creed and that of the Founder of Christianity, would amuse as by its egotism, did it not shock us by its irreverence. But, with whatever mortification a spectacle so humiliating may be regarded by the infidel, Christianity has nothing to fear even from much more formidable opposition.

A graphic sketch of Mr. Jefferson's appearance, manners, and conversation, will be found in a letter of Judge Joseph Story to Mr. Fay, dated Washington, May 30, 1847, (see Story's Life and Correspond., i. 151-152;) and an account of equal interest will be published in a few days in the Private Correspondence of Daniel Webster, vol. i. 364-373. Mr. Webster was so thoughtful as to preserve an extended memoranda of Mr. Jefferson's remarks; and they will well repay perusal. Perhaps we cannot make a better use of a portion of the small space to which we are confined in this article than by devoting it to Mr. Webster's summing up of the evidence in favour of Jefferson's claim to the authorship of the Declaration of Independence:

"The merit of this paper is Mr. Jefferson's. Some changes were made in it at the suggestion of other members of the committee, and others by Congress while it was under discussion. But none of them altered the tone, the frame, the arrangement, or the general character, of the instrument. As a composition, it is Jefferson's. It is the production of his mind, and the high honour of it belongs to him clearly and absolutely. To say that he performed his great work well would be doing him injustice. To say that he did excellently well would be doing him injustice, and halting praise. Let us rather say that he so discharged the duty assigned him, that all Americans may well devote upon him"—A Discourse in Commemoration of the Lives and Services of John Adams and Thomas Jefferson; delivered in Faneuil Hall, Boston, Aug. 2, 1826; Webster's Works, 1854, i. 126, 127.

To the same effect another distinguished orator, and on a like occasion, remarks:

"On the seventh of June, the resolution of independence was moved by Richard Henry Lee. On the eleventh a committee of five was chosen to announce this resolution to the world; and Thomas Jefferson and John Adams stood at the head of this committee. From their designation by ballot to this most honorable duty, their prominent standing in the Congress might alone be inferred. In their amicable competition and all-important document, we witness their patriotic disinterestedness and their mutual respect. This trust devolved on Jefferson, and it rests on him the imperishable renown of having penned the Declaration of Independence. To have been the instrument of expressing, in one brief, decisive act, the concentrated will and resolution of a whole family of States; of unfolding, in one all-important manifesto, the causes, the motives, and the justification of this great movement in human affairs; to have been permitted to give the impress and peculiarity of his own mind to a charter of public right, destined—or, rather, let me say, already elevated—to an importance, in the estimation of men, equal to anything human ever borne on parchment, or expressed in the visible signs of thought,—this is the glory of Thomas Jefferson."—EDWARD EVERETT: Edinburgh Address and Jefferson, 1st of Aug. 1826. Everett's Orations and Speeches, 1853, i. 131-149.

From an historical sketch of the public life of Jefferson, by an eminent orator, still (1857) in the vigorous exercise of his remarkable faculties at the ripe age of almost fourscore, we extract a few lines which will be accepted in whole, or with more or less reservation, as the political judgment of our readers may incline.

"After Washington and Franklin, there is no person who fills so eminent a place among the great men of America as Jefferson. Whether we regard his important services in the Revolutionary contest, or his subsequent assertion of the principles upon which the separation was undertaken,—both while he filled a subordinate station in Washington's presidency, thwarted by his enemies, as well as at variance with his chief and while he administered himself the government of that free and prosperous country—no reasonable doubt can be entertained, that to his enlightened views and to the firmness of his character it is indebted for much of that freedom and prosperity."—LORD BROUGHAM: *Review of George Tucker's Life of Jefferson, Edin. Jeffrey, Francis, Lord, 1773-1850, a native of Edinburgh, the eldest son of George Jeffrey, Under-Clerk in the Court of Sessions, was sec. to the University of Glasgow in 1787, and removed in 1791 to Queen's College, Oxford, where he remained but one session. In 1794 he was admitted an advocate at the Scotch Bar, where his services were so seldom called into requisition that he declared, so late as 1803, he had never yet made £100 in any one year by his profession. At the Speculative Society, in Edinburgh, he became acquainted with a number of young men of decided abilities, and, like himself, anxious aspirants after fame and fortune; and with two of these—Sydney Smith and Henry Brougham—he formed a literary intimacy which resulted in the establishment of the Edinburgh Review, originated by Smith, but confided to the editorial care of Jeffrey after the publication of the first three numbers. This responsible post was held by Jeffrey from July, 1803, to June, 1829, when he withdrew from the chair of the critic to occupy the post of Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, an office of distinction at the Scottish Bar. In 1830, Mr. Jeffrey was appointed Lord-Advocate; in February, 1831, he took his seat in Parliament, where he continued for more than three years, and in 1834 succeeded Lord Craigie in the Court of Session,—which position gave him the honorary title of Lord Jeffrey. He so demeaned himself in his high office as to secure the favour of all classes with whom he was brought into contact, and many a poor author who had writhed under the galling pen of the critic considered himself compensated by the courteous accents and bland manners of the judge.

"His great courtesy to the bar, and his singular patience, might be taken as models of judicial demeanour. But who shall tell the almost magic charm that he imparted to the dull routine of a Court of Justice? That he touched nothing which he did not adorn was the least of his praise. How many sat daily there, listening to the wonderful words of that now remarkable sage, replete with wisdom, eloquence, and legal lore,—catching those bright jewels which he scattered as profusely over the musty pages of a trumpery Record as if he were engaged on some immortal work! Let our young barristers who crowded that court-room tell how the dull shafts of legal argument came back from his quiver tipped with silver,—how strangely and wonderfully the bright flashes of his mind lighted up the darkest and dingiest recesses of the most technical walks of jurisprudence,—how known truths were decked, and dim, misty paths of logic were illumined, by his genius,—and how he seemed to have summoned the aid of all the Muses to assist at the solemnities of Themis. We may see great lawyers and great judges in our day, but we shall never look upon his like again."—North British Review, xiii. 283.

We should not omit to state that in 1820 Jeffrey was elected Lord-Rector of the University of Glasgow, a grateful tribute from his Alma Mater.

Of the personal appearance of Lord Jeffrey we have the following portrait:

"In person the subject of our memoir was of low stature; but his figure, which he tried to set off to the best advantage, was elegant and well proportioned. His features were continually varying in expression, and were said to have baffled our best artists. The face was rather elongated the chin deficient, the mouth well formed, with a mingled expression of determination, sentiment, and mockery. The eye was the most peculiar feature of the countenance: it was large and sparkling, but with a want of transparency."—Sketches of the Scottish Bar.

It was in 1815 that Jeffrey "set up his rustic household-gods" at Craigerook, near Edinburgh, where he continued to pass his summers until the year of his death. There he entertained his numerous guests in a manner of which Lord Cockburn has given us a graphic picture:

"No unofficious house in Scotland," says his Lordship, "has had a greater influence on literary or political opinion. Beautiful though the spot, as he has kept it, is, its deepest interest arises from its being the residence of such a man. Nothing can efface the days they have passed there from the recollection of his friends. Their rural festivities are dignified by his virtues and talents, by all our Edinburgh eminence, and by almost every interesting stranger. The Craigerook Saturdays during the summer session!"—Lord Cockburn's Memorials of his Time, 1856.

Lord Jeffrey was married twice,—first, in 1804, to Catherine, daughter of the Rev. Dr. Wilson, of St. Andrew's; and secondly, in 1813, to Charlotte, daughter of Charles Wilkes, of New York, and grand-niece of the celebrated John Wilkes, of London.

The history of the Edinburgh Review is one of the most interesting pages in the annals of English Literature; and ample details respecting this periodical, and its influence upon letters, will be found in the authorities quoted from or referred to in this article, and in other works familiar to many of our readers. It was successful from the commencement; and in the space of six years the circulation had increased from 750 to about 9000. In 1813 the number of each copy printed was 12,000 to 13,000. The radical changes both in opinion and statutes introduced by its influence, at an early or later day, were remarkable indeed:

"To appreciate the value of the Edinburgh Review, the state of England at the period when that journal began should be had in remembrance. The Catholics were not emancipated—the Corporation and Test Act were un repealed—the Game-Laws were horribly oppressive, Steel-Traps and Spring-Guns were set all over the country—Prisoners tried for their lives could have no Counsel—Lord Eldon and the Court of Chancery pressed heavily upon mankind—Libel was punished by the most cruel and vindictive imprisonments—the principles of Political Economy were little understood—the Law of Debt and of Conspiracy were upon the worst possible footing—the enormous wickedness of the Slave-Trade was tolerated—a thousand evils were in existence, which the talents of good and able men have since lessened or removed; and these effects have been not a little assisted by the honest boldness of the Edinburgh Review."—REV. SIDNEY SMITH, June, 1830: Preface to his Works.

"Previous to 1802, the literary periodicals of Great Britain were repositories of miscellanies relating to art, poetry, letters, and gossip,—partly original and partly selected,—huddled together without system, and making up a medley as varied and respectable as a first-class weekly newspaper of the present day. The criticisms of books were jejune in the extreme, consisting chiefly of a few smart witticisms and meagre connecting remarks, stringing together ample quotations from the work under review. They rarely ventured into deep water on philosophical subjects, and as seldom pushed out upon the tempestuous sea of political discussion. Perhaps one or two journals might plead a feeble exception to the general rule, but the mass were 'weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable.' The Edinburgh Review appeared. It bounded into the arena without the countenance of birth or station, without the imprimatur of the universities or literary clubs. Its avowed mission was to erect a higher standard of merit and secure a bolder and a purer taste in literature, and to apply philosophical principles and the maxims of truth and humanity to politics, aiming to be the manual of the scholar, the monitor of the statesman. As in its advent it had asked permission of no one to be so, as to its future course, it asked no advice as to what it should do. Soliciting no quarter, promising no favours, its independent bearing and defiant tone broke the spell which held the mind of a nation in fetters. Its first number revived the discussion of great political principles. The splendid diction and searching philosophy of an essay on the causes and consequences of the French Revolution [written by Jeffrey] at once arrested the public eye, and stamped the character of the journal. Pedants in the pulpit, and scribblers of Los-Muñila verses in printed albums, saw, from other articles in the manifesto, that exterminating war was declared on their inanities and sentimentalities. The new journal was pursued with avidity, and produced a sensation in all classes of readers, exciting admiration and envy, love and hatred, defiance and fear. It rapidly attained a large circulation, steadily rose to the highest position ever attained by any similar publication, reigned supreme in an empire of its own creation for a third of a century, accomplishing vast good mingled with no inconsiderable evil."—Stanton's Reforms and Reformers of Great Britain and Ireland.

"The commencement of the Edinburgh Review was the discovery of a new world in criticism, to which all authors were liable to be transported as criminals, and there dealt with according to laws made on the spot, and executed by those who made them. The speculation answered well, the adventurers grew rich and renowned, and their ambition increased with their wealth and celebrity."—JAMES MONTGOMERY: Lects. on General Lit., Poetry, &c.

But let us hear something on the other side:

"All were the better of a journal to which every one with an object of due importance had access, which it was in vain either to bully or to despise, and of the fame of which even its reasonable haters were inwardly proud. . . . Certainly it was not for want of warning that what were said to be its errors were persevered in. Its enemies, for several years, found great comfort in its abuse, which they vented in streams of pamphlets that make curious reading now. Instead of practising the moderation and candour the absence of which from the review is their great complaint, they almost uniformly exceed, by a hundredfold, most of the offences which they ascribe to it. But they are generally kind enough to admonish the wicked editor of the disgrace into which he is falling in the sight of all good men, and of the speedy extinction of his abominable work."—LORD COCKBURN: Life of Lord Jeffrey, vol. i. 182.

"It was not the principles of the Edinburgh Review, but the spirit, that was looked at with jealousy and alarm. The principles were by no means decidedly hostile to existing institutions, but the spirit was that of fair and free discussion: a field was open to argument and wit; every question was tried upon its own ostensible merits, and there was no foul play. The tone was that of a studied impartiality, (which may be called trimming) or of a sceptical indifference. This tone of impartiality and indifference, however, did not at all suit those who profited or existed by abuses, who breathed the very air of corruption. They knew well enough that 'those who are not for them are against them.'"—Hastie's Spirit of the Age: Mr. Jeffrey.

"I hope you read the Edinburgh Review; it is far the best of our periodical publications. It is charged with severity; but the accusation is most handsomely made by bad writers and their stupid admirers. For my part I am not displeas'd to see the laws of the republic of letters enforced with some rigour against delinquents who have too long enjoyed a scandalous impunity."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Letter to M. Gutz, Feb. 5, 1804; in Mackintosh's Life, by his Son.

In connexion with Lord Cockburn's remarks, doubtless many amusing instances of indignant reviewed authorship will recur to the memory of our readers. Lord Byron's case we have already considered at large, and we now notice, in passing, the philosophical wrath of Wordsworth, who classed Robespierre, Buonaparte, and Jeffrey together as the three most formidable enemies of the human race who had appeared in his remembrance, and the school-boy petulance of Southey, who says that Jeffrey's review of Madoc (Edin. Rev., Oct. 1805) "is very unfair and very unneivil."—Letter to Mrs. Southey, Oct. 16, 1805.

"To Jeffrey as an individual I shall ever be ready to show every kind of individual courtesy; but of Judge Jeffrey, of the Edinburgh Review, I must ever think and speak as a bad politician, a worse moralist, and a critic, in matters of taste, equally incompetent and unjust."—Letter to Walter Scott, Dec. 8, 1807; Southey's Life and Correspondence.

Is there any thing in the world more ridiculous than the wailings of an author over the wounds which the arrows of criticism have inflicted upon his literary offspring? From the days of the "enemy" of the patient Job, was there ever yet a man who "wrote a book," and saw that book in the hands of the executioner, who was not laughed at by the "sympathizing public" for his lamentations or his revilings? We shall do well to remember these amiable comments of ours when our own levithan of a volume is passing "under the saws and harrows" of the Philistines.

Southey, indeed, had, long before the date of either of the remarks just quoted, expressed an unfavourable opinion of the Edinburgh periodical:

"Their philosophy appears in their belief in Hindoo chronology; and when they abuse Parr's style, it is rather a knock at the dead lion, old Johnson. A first number has great advantages; the reviewers say their say upon all subjects, and lay down the law; that contains the institutes; by-and-by they can only comment."—Letter to C. W. F. Wynn, Dec. 22, 1802.

"The Edinburgh Review will not keep its ground. It consists of pamphlets instead of critical accounts."—Letter to S. T. Coleridge, March 14, 1803; Southey's Life and Correspondence.

But the "Edinburgh Review" has "kept its ground;" and many of its brilliant papers are, and always will be, read twenty times where Madox, or any other work of Southey's, is or will be read once.

Lord Jeffrey's contributions to the Edinburgh Review extend over a period of almost half a century,—the first, (the first article in the first No., to which he contributed five papers,) Mounier sur la Révolution de France,—bearing date October, 1802, and the last—Watt or Cavendish?—given to the world January, 1848. The 98th No., pub. June, 1829, was the last he edited; and the review of the Memoirs of Lady Fanshawe, which appeared in October, 1829, was the last article he furnished as a regular contributor. His only papers after this date were Naval Tactics, April, 1830; Memoirs of Sir J. Mackintosh, October, 1835; Wilberforce's Correspondence, October, 1840; Watt or Cavendish? January, 1848. A list of his articles—200 in all—will be found in the Appendix to Lord Cockburn's Life of the Author. His biographer, and other friends, had often urged him, but in vain, to designate his articles; but at last, in December, 1840, Lord Cockburn found him in a yielding mood, and number after number of the Review was brought under examination, until the whole had been subjected to a rigid scrutiny. The results we have already stated. In 1843, he consented, at the request of the publishers of the Review, to make a selection from his contributions for the purpose of republication, and in this year appeared Contributions to the Edinburgh Review, by Francis Jeffrey, 4 vols. 8vo, £2 8s.; 2d edit., 1846, 3 vols. 8vo, £2 2s.; 3d ed., 1853, 1 vol. 8vo, pp. 1005, £1 1s., with a general Index.

The contents of these edits. are the same. Of the 199 articles which had been contributed to the Review, (the 200th was pub. in Jan. 1848,) we have in this collection only 79, which are thus classified:—I. General Literature and Literary Biography, 10 articles; II. History and Historical Memoirs, 10 articles; III. Poetry, 22 articles; IV. Philosophy of the Mind, Metaphysics, and Jurisprudence, 6 articles; V. Novels, Tales, and Prose Works of Fiction, 8 articles; VI. General Politics, 6 articles; VII. Miscellanies, 17 articles. At the close of the collection are added Notice of the Honourable Henry Erskine, from The Edinburgh Courant, Oct. 16, 1817; Notice and Character of Professor Playfair, from an Edinburgh paper of Aug. 1819; Notice and Character of James Watt, from the Scotsman, Sept. 4, 1819. It is proper to state that the article entitled BEAUTY, contributed by Jeffrey to the Supplement to the Encyclopædia Britannica in 1821, (but prepared, Lord Cockburn says, in 1816,) is an enlargement of his review of Alison's Nature and Principles of Taste, pub. in the Edinburgh Review, May, 1811. In Jeffrey's collected Contributions to the Edinburgh Review, the article Beauty appears in its complete form as pub. in the Encyclopædia Britannica. We quote two rather antagonistic opinions upon this essay:

"Of all the treatises that have been published on the theory of taste, it is the most complete in its philosophy and the most delightful in its writing; and it is as sound as the subject admits of."—LORD COCKBURN: Life of Lord Jeffrey, vol. i.

"Few works of the kind are more questionable in the principle, or more loose in the arrangement and argument."—LYALL'S AGONISTES; or, on Philosophical Structures, &c., Lou., 1856, 18-44.

There are still 121 of Jeffrey's contributions to the Edinburgh Review uncollected. This should be so no longer. Those subjects of his criticism who would have been aggrieved by the republication of the strictures of the reviewer have almost all passed away, and, if their reputation is so frail as to be affected by a little good-humoured ridicule, it is not worth preservation.

Our curious friends will be gratified to know that the authors of many of the articles in the Edinburgh Review will be found in the London Gentleman's Magazine for 1845, Pt. 1, 497-500, (articles in vols. i.-xv.) ibid., Pt. 2, 585-589, (articles in vols. xvi.-xxxvii.)

A list of the authors of many of the contributions to the Quarterly Review will be found in the Gent. Mag. for 1844, Pt. 1, 137-141, (articles in vols. i.-xix.) ibid., Pt. 1, 577-580, (articles in vols. xxi.-xxxix.) 1845, Pt. 1, 599-602, (articles in vols. xli.-lix.) 1847, Pt. 2, 34-37, (articles in vols. lxi.-lxxxviii.)

An interesting history of the Review and its contributors will be found in Lord Cockburn's Life of Lord Jeffrey. See also a paper on the originators of the Quarterly, in Gent. Mag., 1844, Pt. 1, p. 246; and see our life of WILLIAM GIFFORD, in this Dictionary.

We have already intimated that the formidable critic was a most agreeable companion,—that the lion of the Review was the lamb of the dinner-table and evening circle. Sometimes, however, even Jeffrey's politeness was not proof against boredom. There was "a time with him when patience ceased to be a virtue." Of one of these instances of human frailty we have an amusing account by Lady Holland:

"The reigning bore at this time in Edinburgh was —; his favourite subject, the North Pole. It mattered not how far south you began, you found yourself transported to the North Pole before you could take breath. No one escaped him. My father declared he should invent a slip button. Jeffrey fled from him as from the plague, when possible; but one-day his arch-tormentor met him in a narrow lane, and began instantly on the North Pole. Jeffrey, in despair, and out of all patience, darted past him, exclaiming, 'Hang the North Pole!' My father met him shortly after, boiling with indignation at Jeffrey's contempt of the North Pole. 'Oh, my dear fellow,' said my father, 'never mind; no one minds what Jeffrey says, you know: he is a privileged person; he respects nothing,—absolutely nothing. Why, you will scarcely believe it, but it is not more than a week ago that I heard him speak disrespectfully of the equator!'—Memoir of the Rev. Sydney Smith.

We may be permitted, in passing, to observe that, of Lord Jeffrey's 200 papers in the Edinburgh Review, almost if not quite every one is either quoted from or referred to in this Dictionary. This article is already sufficiently long, but we feel unwilling to close it without at least a few quotations,—without a few reviews of the great reviewer:

"He was not so much distinguished by the pre-eminence of any one great quality as by the union of several of the finest. Rapidity of intellect, instead of misleading, as it often does, was combined in him with great soundness; and a high condition of the reasoning powers with an active and delightful fancy. Though not what is termed learned, his knowledge was various; and on literature, politics, and the philosophy of life, it was deep. A taste exquisitely delicate and largely exercised was one of the great sources of his enjoyment, and of his unmatched critical skill."—LORD COCKBURN: Life of Lord Jeffrey.

"He is thoroughly acquainted with the progress and pretensions of modern literature and philosophy; and to this he adds the natural acuteness and discrimination of the logician with the habitual caution and coolness of his profession. . . . The characteristics of Mr. Jeffrey's general style as a writer correspond, we think, with what we have stated as the characteristics of his mind. He is a master of the foils; he makes an exulting display of the dazzling fence of wit and argument. His strength consists in a great range of knowledge, an equal familiarity with the principles and the details of a subject, and in a glancing brilliancy and rapidity of style. Indeed, we doubt whether the brilliancy of his manner does not resolve itself into the rapidity, the variety and aptness of his illustrations. His pen is never at a loss, never stands still; and would dazzle for this reason alone, like an eye that is ever in motion. Mr. Jeffrey is far from a flowery or affected writer: he has few tropes or figures, still less any odd startling thoughts or quaint innovations in expression; but he has a constant supply of ingenious solutions and pertinent examples; he never prosés, never grows dull, never wears an argument to tatters; and, by the number, the liveliness, and facility of his transitions, keeps that appearance of vivacity, of novel and sparkling effect, for which others are too often indebted to singularity of combination or tinsel ornaments. —Hazlitt's Spirit of the Age.

No one denies all this: but less partial critics can see defects as well as beauties; and less partial critics therefore must be allowed to give an opinion in the premises:

“What then is wanting to enable him to fill the judgment-seat of criticism with honour to himself and with profit to others? He wants imagination. He not only has little imagination of his own, but he does not perceive that no work of genius can exist without it; that it is the preserving soul which makes works immortal. Wherever he has met with it, he looks upon it with the eye of contempt, and casts it from him, as the Arabs did the Oriental pearls in the wilderness. This is the chief secret of the scorn which he has heaped on the chief poets of the day: his reviews of Scott, Wordsworth, Southey, Coleridge, and Montgomery, all exhibit the original deficiency of the critic: they are not judged by their pens; he cannot judge them: they have risen beyond his reach, into the atmosphere of imagination. To his upturned and wondering eyes, such flights are folly, and he thinks that genius, like Anteus, must die when it forsakes the ground. Had Jeffrey possessed imagination, he would never have penned the insulting reviews to which I allude. His criticisms did great injury to the cause of literature; his sarcastic strictures famed down the elastic and bounding spirit of man; poets wrote with the fear of the critic upon them, and dreaded the universal laugh of the world. Birds seldom sing well when the kite is in the air, and birds dreaded the Judge Jeffrey of our day as much as political offenders dreaded the Judge Jeffrey of James the Second. By criticisms such as this, true genius is defrauded of its fame for a time, and elegant and polished mediocrity prospers and flourishes. Where are many of the writers he has praised? gone to oblivion, with all their point and their glitter. Where are some of the writers he has traduced and abused? sitting on the highest pinnacles of fame.” —Allan Cunningham's Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the L. L. of the Last Fifty Years, 1833.

“Such being the nature of true Poets and true poetry, and such the light in which they are regarded by the race whom they elevate,—what, pray, it may be asked, did Mr. Jeffrey mean to doer day, by saying that all the Poets of this Age are forgotten? [See Edin. Rev., No. 95.] There are few people whom we love and admire more than Mr. Jeffrey,—though we believe he does not know it; but why will you, in his elegant and graceful way, speak such nonsense? Scott, Byron, Southey, Coleridge, Wordsworth, Moore, are, he assures us, already all forgotten or nearly so,—fading away,—mere specks on the distant horizon of my's defamed memories! Why, our dear sir, you might just as well affirm that the stars are forgotten, because thousands of constellations of people coming and going to and from evening parties, are not at the time aware that the heavens are full of them, that shepherds are watching by them on the hills, and sailors sailing by them on the seas, and astronomers counting them in observatories and occasionally discovering one that had been invisible to the mole-eyes of men since the creation. Yet in all the nonsense Mr. Jeffrey ever spoke, or may speak, you always may find some grains of sense: for who doubts his sagacity and his genius? Not one of our great or good living Poets is forgotten at this hour by Mr. Jeffrey himself, nor any of those critiques of his own, either, in which he did noble justice to some of them and ignoble injustice to others, according to the transient or permanent moods by which his taste, feeling, and judgment were swayed. Nor are his critiques themselves likely to be forgotten,—soon or ever; for many of them belong, we verily believe, to our philosophical literature. But they hold the tenure of their existence by the existence of the poetry which they sought to illustrate or obscure: from the golden urns of those Poets' did he ‘draw light,’—the light in which he is himself conspicuous; and, were it extinguished, his literary life would be a blank.” —PROFESSOR WILSON: Blackw. Mag., Feb. 1830; and in his Essays Critical and Imaginative, Edin. and Lon., 1856, i. 353, 356. See also Blackw. Mag., June, 1828, or Essays, i. 245.

“Our very ideas of what is poetry,” says Sir Walter Scott of Jeffrey, “differ so widely, that we rarely talk upon these subjects. There is something in his mode of reasoning that leads me greatly to doubt whether, notwithstanding the vivacity of his imagination, he really has any feeling of poetical genius, or whether he has worn it all off by perpetually sharpening his wit on the grindstone of criticism. . . . I should be glad for his own sake that he took some opportunity to retrace the paths of his criticism; but, after pledging himself so deeply as he has done, I doubt much his giving way, even unto conviction.” —Sir Walter Scott to Joanna Baillie, Jan. 17 and April 4, 1812; Lockhart's Life of Scott.

“But, with my friend Jeffrey's pardon, I think he loves to see imagination best when it is bitten and managed, and ridden upon the grand pas. He does not make allowance for starts and sallies and bounds, when Pegasus is beautiful to behold, though sometimes perilous to his rider.” —Scott's Diary, Jan. 1, 1827; ubi supra.

“The celebrated editor of this work, [Edinburgh Review] with little imagination, little genuine wit, and no clear view of any great and central principles of criticism, has contrived to luzzle, to astonish, and occasionally to delight, multitudes of readers, and, at one period, to hold the temporary fate of authors at his will. His qualifications are all singularly adapted to his office. Without deep feeling, which few can understand, he has a quick sensibility, with which all sympathize; without a command of images, he has a glittering radiance of words which the most superficial may admire; neither too hard-hearted always to refuse his admiration, nor too kindly to suppress a sneer, he has been enabled to appear most witty, most wise, and most eloquent, to those who have chosen him for their oracle.” —SIR N. TALFOURD: Crit. and Miscell. Writings.

“Jeffrey, who took the lead in this great revolution in literature, was a very remarkable man, but more so from the light, airy turn of his mind, and the felicity of illustration which he possessed, than from either originality of thought or nervous force of expression. His information was far from extensive; he shared in the deficiency of his country at that period in classical knowledge; he was ignorant of Italian and German; and his acquaintance with French literature was chiefly confined to the gossiping memoirs of the day, and, with that of his own country, to the writings of the Scotch metaphysicians or the old English dramatists. . . . But these subjects he knew thoroughly; within these limits he was thoroughly master. He was fitted by nature to be a great critic. A passionate admirer of poetry, alive to all the beauties and influences of nature, with a feeling mind and a sensitive heart, he possessed at the same time the calm judgment which enabled him to form an impartial opinion on the works submitted to his examination, and the correct taste which, in general, discovered genius and detected imperfections in them.” —SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 1815-52, chap. v. See also his Essays, Polit., Hist., and Miscell., Edin. and Lon., 1850, vol. iii.

Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia. We have already noticed this excellent work in our article on RICHARD ANSATZ, p. 69. Several years have elapsed since we penned that commendation, but the Comprehensive Commentary still stands without a rival for the purpose for which it is intended. Since writing the above, we were pleased to find the following weighty endorsement of our enquiry:

"This compilation exhibits a combination of all that is valuable in the deservedly-esteemed commentaries of Henry and Scott on the entire Bible, and of Doddridge on the New Testament. The notes are compiled from the various critics enumerated on the title-page; and, in general, the selection is made with judgment."—Horne's Bibl. Bib.

We must object, however, to the phrase "all that is valuable," &c. What is there in Henry, Scott, or Doddridge, entirely without value? Among Dr. J.'s other publications is, 2. Explan. Bible Atlas and Scripture Gazetteer, 1849, 4to.

Jenyns, Soame, M.P., 1703-04-1787, the son of Sir Roger Jenyns, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, was noted as a politician, an essayist, an infidel, and subsequently as a champion of Christianity. He was for nearly forty years Member of Parliament, for twenty-five years a Commissioner of the Board of Trade, and for a longer term than either of these a noted wit and conversationalist. The following is a list of his works: 1. Art of Dancing, a Poem, 1730. Anon. 2. Epistle to Lord Lovelace, 1735. 3. Poems, 1752; and with the Origin of Evil, 1761, 2 vols. 12mo. See No. 4. These poems originally appeared in Dodsley's Collection. They were added to the 2d and 3d eds. of Dr. Johnson's English Poets. 4. Free Inquiry into the Nature and Origin of Evil, 1757. With his Poems, 1761, 2 vols. 12mo. Ridiculed by Dr. Johnson in the Literary Gazette:

"Johnson's most exquisite critical essay in the Literary Magazine, and indeed anywhere, is his review of Soame Jenyns's Inquiry into the Origin of Evil."—Boswell's Life of Johnson, q. v.

And see The Idler, No. 89, Dec. 29, 1759. The Review was so much liked that Johnson republished it in a pamphlet. It has been styled on high authority the best of his writings: but who shall decide questions of this nature? A review of the Origin of Evil, and other works of its author, will be found in Green's Diary of a Lover of Literature. Of the first-named, Green remarks:

"Extremely ingenious and wretchedly unsatisfactory. . . . With all its paradoxical ingenuity, there appear to me only two truly original thoughts in this work."—Ipswich, 1810, p. 32.

5. Thoughts, &c. on the Present High Price of Provisions, 1767.

"A very flimsy publication."—McCulloch's Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1845, 193, q. v.

6. Miscellanies, 1770, 8vo. 7. View of the Internal Evidence of the Christian Religion, 1776, 12mo; 10th ed., 1798, 8vo, and since. The last ed. is included in the vol. entitled Christian Evidences, pub. by H. G. Bohn, and edited by Rev. J. S. Memes, LL.D., 1819, r. 8vo. (This valuable book should be in every library.) The examination of the Holy Scriptures dissipated Jenyns's infidelity, and his anxiety to save others from skepticism produced this and other theological essays. Jenyns's View excited much controversy, and was attacked by several of the clergy, who disapproved of some of its sentiments. Even the sincerity of the author was called in question, and he was charged with intending to injure Christianity, which he pretended to defend. But we have good evidence of Jenyns's honesty, and also of his piety. We quote some commendations of his View:

"A work of very considerable shrewdness and ingenuity, in which many striking views of Christianity are adduced in support of its heavenly origin."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"I confess myself to have been powerfully impressed by Mr. Jenyns's leading arguments in defence of Christianity."—Green's Diary, ubi supra.

"The work, brief and unpresuming enough, nevertheless did religion more good service than many of much higher pretensions. The argument was of a popular kind: it derived force, too, as coming from one who was a layman and a wit."—Lon. Quar. Rev.

"The force of the argument addressed to the feelings of ingenious thinkers, and adapted to the reach of every understanding, is greater than mere scholars are willing to allow, and was never represented to so much advantage as in the beautiful little Treatise entitled A View of the Internal Evidence of Christianity."—MR. MALNWARING, of Cambridge: Dissertation.

We next quote some opinions more qualified in their tone:

"The book is very ingenious: perhaps he brings rather too much ingenuity into his religion. I know, however, an instance in which this little work has converted a philosophical infidel, who had previously read all that had been written on the subject without effect."—HANNAH MORE.

What deplorable carelessness of expression is here! So far from this "philosophical" gentleman's having read "all that had been written on the subject," we will venture to say that he had never either read or heard of the one-tenth part that had been written on the subject. Nothing is more common than the observation, "This is the only book on the subject," or, "This is the best book on the subject." The first assertion may be said to be never true; and if the last is ever correct, say one in ten thousand instances, how is it to be proved? Let us avoid such childish extravagance of assertion. A man of true learning is rarely guilty of so great a fault.

"Dr. Mayo having asked Johnson's opinion of Soame Jenyns's View of the Internal Evidence of the Christian Religion, JOHNSON: 'I think it a pretty book; not very theological, indeed; and there seems to be an affectation of ease and carelessness, as if it were not suitable to his character to be very serious about the matter.'"—Boswell's Life of Johnson.

"As a whole, it is admitted to be the best treatise, in its particular range, yet given to the world, but in some respects, differing according to the source whence the censure comes, the disapproval of its individual doctrines and reasonings is almost as universal."—DR. MEMES: Christian Evidences.

A list of the principal pamphlets elicited by Jenyns's View will be found in Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xviii. 320, n. 8. Disquisitions on Several Subjects, 1782, 8vo. See a review of this vol. in Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., Ipswich, 1810, 226-227, and another in the London Retrospective Rev., Lon., 1820, ii. 291-304.

"We venture to assert that there are few books in the language of the same size [pp. 182] as the little volume before us containing more acute and ingenious reasoning, abounding in more lively illustration or more elegant and polished composition."—Retrosp. Rev., ubi supra.

9. The Works of Soame Jenyns, 1790, 4 vols. 8vo; 1793, 4 vols. 8vo. Includes Pieces never before published, and biography of the author by Charles Nelson Cole. See Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., Ipswich, 1810, 222-226; Orme's Bibl. Bib. 10. Tracts on the Holy Trinity, the Creeds, &c. &c., 1814, 8vo. Jenyns also wrote some political essays. He perpetrated a satirical epitaph upon Dr. Johnson—shortly after the death of the latter—in which Boswell was remembered:

"Boswell and Thrals, retailers of his wit.

Will tell you how he wrote, and talk'd, and cough'd, and spit."

For this offence Boswell took terrible vengeance in an Epitaph on Jenyns. See Croker's Boswell's Johnson, Lon., 1848, p. 106. See also pp. 68, 392, 509, 590, 593; Life by Cole, prefixed to Jenyns's Works.

"His Poetry does not rise above mediocrity: indeed, it scarcely deserves the name: but the style of his prose is smooth and lucid, his turns of thought are neat and unexpected; and when he sports in irony, in which he apparently delights to indulge, he is uncommonly playful and airy. . . . Jenyns has evidently a predilection for paradoxical opinions: and why, he might reasonably urge in his defence, should a man address the Public, who has nothing new to offer to it?"—Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., Ipswich, 1810, 225.

As a political writer, Jenyns was the champion of principles which are now very generally disowned by Englishmen. He defended both the right and the expediency of taxing the American Colonies, (see his tract on American Taxation), and in his reflections on Parliamentary Reform he ridicules the idea of an independent Parliament. Professor Smyth, in speaking of the unavoidable influence of party predilections and the necessity of party co-operation, remarks:

"Read the works of Soame Jenyns and of Locke. Would not both of these men, for instance, while they retained their integrity, have been seen always on the opposite sides of any question that could affect the constitution and government of a free country?"—Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lect. 24.

Cumberland, in his Memoirs, gives us a graphic picture of Soame Jenyns, which is declared by Lord Jeffrey to be excellent, and a portion of which we had intended to quote; but, as our article has now grown to a length which forbids this, we must refer the reader to the Memoirs, or to Lord Jeffrey's review of that work in Edin. Rev. for April, 1806, and in his Contrib. to the Edin. Rev., Lon., 1853, 911-917.

He also pub. a collection of poems called Roman Portraits, 1797, 4to. The illustrative notes in this vol. are from the pen of Mr. Malone. See *Malone's Life of W. Gerard Hamilton; Biog. Jerdan, William, b. 1782, for thirty-four years (1817-50) editor of the London Literary Gazette, is a native of Kelso, Roxburghshire, Scotland. Mr. Jerdan wrote the Biographical Memoirs for Fisher's National Portrait-Gallery of Illustrious and eminent Persons, has pub. some translations from the French, &c., and been connected with several journals. An account of his literary labours will be found in his Autobiography, Lon., 1852-53, 4 vols. p. 8vo. See also Men of the Time, Lon., 1856; Noctes Ambrosianæ, May, 1828; Fraser's Mag., i. 605, with a portrait. This portrait was the first of the Gallery of Illustrious Literary Characters, all drawn by Daniel Maclise, now R.A.; see Maginn's Fraserian Papers, by Dr. R. S. Mackenzie, New York, 1857, lxi. The letter-press which accompanied each plate was nearly all written by Maginn.

Jeremie, James Ameriaux, D.D., Sub-dean and Canon of Lincoln, Regius Prof. of Divinity at Cambridge, and Rector of Somersham, Huntingdonshire. 1. Serms., Ps. cxxii. 6, 9. 2. Hist. of the Christian Church in the 2d and 3d Centuries, 1852, sm. 8vo. Originally pub. in the Encyc. Metrop. 3. Christianity in the Middle Ages, 1857, cr. 8vo. 4. Serms., Doctrinal and Practical, of Rev. William Archer Butler, late Prof. of Moral Philos., Univ. of Dublin. Second Series, Camb., 1855, 8vo.

"They are marked by the same originality and vigour of expression, the same richness of imagery and illustration, the same large views and catholic spirit, and the same depth and fervour of devotional feeling, which so remarkably distinguished the preceding Series, and which rendered it a most valuable accession to our theological literature."—From Dr. Jeremie's Preface.

"We would recommend them to our readers, not only for their force and subtlety of thought, brilliancy of fancy, and exuberant eloquence of words, but for that spirit of love—that profound and glowing devotion—by which they are animated, and with which no one can come into sympathizing contact without feeling himself elevated and refined."—North British Review.

Jerringham, Sir Wm. Papers rel. to the Baronies of Stafford, 1807, 4to. Privately printed.

Jerrold, Douglas, 1803-1857, a native of Sheerness, in Kent, after being a midshipman in the Royal Navy, and subsequently a printer, had his fate decided for authorship by the success of the drama of Black-Eyed Susan, written before he was of age. This piece was followed by The Rent-Day, Nell Gwynne, The Bubbles of the Day, Time Works Wonders, The Catspaw, Retired from Business, Cupid, The Prisoner of War, The Heart of Gold, &c. As a contributor to Punch, and as editor of The Heads of the People, the Illuminated Magazine, the Shilling Magazine, and Lloyd's Weekly, Mr. Jerrold has won new laurels in another department of authorship. We append an alphabetical list of his productions, as pub. in vol. form. 1. Bubbles of the Day, a Comedy; 2d ed., 1845, 8vo. 2. Cakes and Ale, 1842, 2 vols. 1p. 8vo; 1852, being vol. iv. of his Collected Works. 3. Chronicles of Clovernook, 1846, 1p. 8vo; 1853, in vol. vi. of Collected Works. 4. Comedies and Dramas, 1854, 12mo. 5. Heart of Gold; a Drama, 1854, 12mo. 6. Man made of Money, 1849, p. 8vo; 1853, in vol. vi. of Collected Works. A collective ed. of the works of this popular author was pub. in 8 vols. 12mo, 1851-54; reviewed in the Lon. Athenæum, 1854, 1293-1295. See also Men of the Time, Lon., 1856; N. York Eccl. Mag., xi. 443, with portrait. The Athenæum commends Mr. Jerrold's works in high terms:

"A reperusal of them serves to confirm our original opinion that their object is to advance the good of mankind; that to this object there has been a devotion of rare skill, undoubted originality, imperturbable good temper, conceded, perhaps, occasionally under apparent fierceness of phrase and a force and flash of wit at once dazzling and delightful. A body of works more original, either in the artistic construction or in the informing spirit, has not been added to the national literature of our time."—Lon. Athen., 1854, 1293; The Writings of Douglas Jerrold.

The Wit and Opinions of Douglas Jerrold, edited by William Blanchard Jerrold, and originally pub. in the London National Magazine, appeared in book-form in 1858; and the Life and Letters of Douglas Jerrold, edited by W. B. Jerrold, were announced same year. See also Douglas Jerrold's Portfolio of Well-Known Portraits, drawn by Kenny Meadows, with a Biographical and Critical Essay by E. L. Blanchard, 1857, p. 8vo; the obituary notice of Jerrold in Lon. Gent. Mag., July, 1857, 91-94; and the London Athenæum, 1858.

"Jerrold was truly a man of a large heart, as well as of a great original genius. He never lost an opportunity of labouring in any act of benevolence that his sense of duty set before him; and his last words were those of affection towards all with whom he had been associated in friendship,—to him a sacred relation."—Lon. Gent. Mag., ubi supra.

Jewel, Edward. The Stomach, &c., Lon., 1678, 4to.

Jewel, or Jewell, John, D.D., 1522-1571, a native of Devonshire, admitted of Merton College, Oxford, 1535, was in 1539 chosen scholar of Corpus Christi College, and subsequently became Reader of Humanity and Rhetoric in his college. In 1546 he professed himself a convert to the doctrines of the Reformation, and his zeal in disseminating his opinions led to his expulsion from his college. On the accession of Queen Mary in 1554, he fled to the Continent, and remained abroad until the year after Elizabeth ascended the throne; in 1560 he was consecrated Bishop of Salisbury, and in 1562 gave to the world, in elegant Latin, the most famous of his writings,—Apologia Ecclesie Anglicane. His unwearied labours in the discharge of the duties of his episcopate, and his unremitting devotion to study, brought on a state of physical exhaustion, which resulted fatally on the 22d of Sept. 1571, in the fiftieth year of his age. He was noted for his wonderful powers of memory, profound learning, and exemplary piety. A collective edition of his works, which consist principally of treatises in defence of the Church of England against Romanism, was pub. in 1609, fol.; 1611, fol.; 1631, fol.; 1711, fol. See edits. of separate publications in Watt's Bibl. Brit. There are two recent edits. of his collected works,—viz.: edited for the Parker Society by the Rev. John Ayre, Camb., 1815-50, 4 vols. sm. fol., 21 10s.; edited by R. W. Jeff, D.D., Ox., 1847-18, 8 vols. Svo, £3 12s. Of his Apology, and other pieces pub. separately, there have been many editions. His Challenge Sermon, preached at St. Paul's Cross, March 30, 1560, is considered one of the best specimens of his eloquence. See Life prefixed to the octavo edit. of the Apology, 1635; reprinted in Wordsworth's Eccles. Biog.; Burnet's Hist. of the Reformation; Holingshed's Chronicle; Biog. Brit.; Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon.; Fuller's Abel Redivivus; his Church History; Strype's Life of Cranmer; of Parker; Prince's Worthies of Devon; Chalmers's Biog. Diet.; Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 271, 598, 1037, 1038, 1039, 1269; C. W. Le Bas's Life of Jewel, 1835, 12mo. (Reviewed in British Critic, xviii. 38.) Jewel's Apology came out, Strype says, "to the abundant establishment of this reformed church upon antiquity."

"Jewel's Apology is an account of the grounds of our separation from the Church of Rome, as maintained after the separation had finally taken place. It was publicly received and allowed, and has also a claim to the attention of the reader, both for its clearness of argument and elegance of language."—Bishop RANDOLPH: Enchiridion Theologicum.

"One of our best books."—BISHOP BURNET.

"Will especially reward perusal."—BUCKETTETTER.

"This short book is written with spirit; the style is terse, the arguments pointed, the authorities much to the purpose; so that its effects are not surprising. This treatise is written in Latin; his Defence of the Apology, a much more diffuse work, in English. Upon the merits of the controversy of Jewel with the Jesuit Harding, which the defence embraces, I am not competent to give any opinion: in length and learning it far surpasses our earlier polemical literature."—Muller's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., Lon., 1854, i. 561.

To the controversy with Harding we have already referred: see HANNING, THOMAS, and authorities there cited.

"The Church of England may be best studied in the writings of Jewel, as regards its separation from the Romanist."—BISHOP WARBURTON.

"For the answer to any question respecting the genuine sense of the documents of the Church of England, I consult no other authority."—CARL JACKSON, D.D., Dean of Christ Church.

"Jewel is eminent for his extensive learning, his sound views, and his Christian eloquence. All his works are valuable. . . . The finest Christian eloquence, deep learning, sound wisdom, and evangelical piety, mark the writings of this Reformer."—Webster's Dict.

"The contemporary of Archbishop Parker, Bishop Jewell, Bishop of Salisbury, with equal learning, united a more glowing style and richer eloquence. Jewell was indeed the most accomplished scholar who had yet appeared in the reformed Church of England."—Cat. termul's Literature of the Church of England.

"One of the greatest lights that the reformed Church of England hath produced."—WOOD: Athen. Oxon.

"Jewel's character cannot be too highly revered, or too respectfully spoken of."—DR. BLESS: ubi supra.

"The Jewel of Bishops, the worthiest Divine that Christendom hath had for some hundred of years."—RICHARD HOOKER, author of the Ecclesiastical Polity.

"It may be said of his surname, nomen amen; Jewel his name and precious his virtues; so that, if the like ambition led us Englishmen, which both foreigners, specially to read our surnames in Greek or Latin, he may be termed Johannes Gemma, on better account than Gemma Frisius entitled himself therewith."—Fuller's Worthies of Devonshire.

Cicero beautifully calls the library "the Soul of the House." Professor Jewett, with a noble ambition, has zealously striven to provide such a soul for this great Republic, by his intelligent labours in connexion with the Smithsonian Institution, at Washington. We trust that he will yet see that magnificent temple adorned—not only with "goodly stones," (which sometimes preach any thing but profitable "sermons.") but—with the recorded learning of all ages, and the teachings of wisdom of every clime. A great National Library would be, indeed, a National Honour, a National Blessing, and a priceless boon, alike to the present generation, and to the countless millions who are to take our places, enter into our labours, and control the destinies of our country when we are no more!

Mr. Jewett was among the first to introduce the Common-School System into Ohio and Alabama.

Jewsbury, Miss Geraldine E., a native of Manchester, England, and a younger sister of the late Mrs. Fletcher, formerly Maria Jane Jewsbury, has given to the world a number of novels: 1. Zoe: the History of two Lives, London, 1845, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"We should imagine Miss Jewsbury better qualified to succeed in essays and speculative papers, than in descriptions of character as it is, or society as it has been."—Lon. Athen., 1845, 114.

"This novel made a sensation in its day, but its reputation was rather of an equivocal kind."—Lon. Times, 1853, where will be found a brief notice of Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 6.

2. The Half-Sisters, 1848, 2 vols. p. 8vo; 1854, 12mo. "Displays, like its precursor, very considerable intellectual powers, a shrewd observance of character, and a general talent, or more strength than refinement, and, indeed, wanting only some polish to its roughness to raise it much higher in the intellectual scale."—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1848, 194-196. See No. 1.

3. Marian Withers, 1851, 3 vols. p. 8vo. See No. 1. 4. The History of an Adopted Child, 1852, fp. 8vo; 1853. Intended for the Young. 5. Angelo; or, the Pine-Forest in the Alps, 1855, 16mo. 6. Constance Herbert, 1853, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"We have seen few books so perfectly unsatisfactory as Constance Herbert."—Blackwood's Mag., May, 1855; Modern Novelists, Great and Small.

7. The Sorrows of Gentility, 1856, 2 vols. p. 8vo. "A remarkably good novel; well written, amusing, sensible, and firm to its purpose."—Lon. Exam.

Jewsbury, Maria Jane, 1800?-1823, a native of Warwickshire, but a resident of Manchester the principal part of her life, was married in 1833 to the Rev. William Fletcher, whom she accompanied, shortly after her marriage, on a religious mission to India. She fell a victim to cholera soon after her arrival at Bombay. Miss Jewsbury contributed many articles to the Lon. Athenæum and other periodicals, which have never been collected. She pub. the following vols.: 1. Phantasmagoria; or, Sketches of Life and Literature. 2. Letters to the Young; 5th ed., 1843, fp. 8vo. 3. Lays of Leisure Hours. 4. Three Histories; new ed., 1844, fp. 8vo. The last-named work is a great favourite.

"Her enthusiasm was ardent, her piety steadfast, and her great talents would have enabled her to be eminently useful in the path to which she had been called. . . . In one quality—quickness in the motions of her mind—she was, in the author's estimation, unrivalled."—WORDSWORTH, the poet, an intimate friend of Miss Jewsbury.

"Miss Jewsbury the elder was one of our coadjutors in the longest days of our struggle. . . . Quicker impulses, sounder conclusions, an imagination more fanciful, purposes more noble, or a more eager thirst after wisdom and goodness for their own sakes, have rarely distinguished any of the honourable and honoured line of authoresses. . . . There is no forgetting Miss Jewsbury whenever the gifted women of England are brought under notice."—Lon. Athenæum, 1845, 114.

See Christopher North's commendation of Miss Jews-bury in Noctes Ambrosianæ, Dec. 1829, (Blackw. Mag., xxvi. 872;) and see pp. 953, 975, for some of this lady's poetry.

John of Beverley, the founder of the Abbey of Beverley, d. 721, is said by Bede to have written some Homilies and Epistles; but there is no work extant bearing his name. See Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Saxon Period, and authorities there cited.

John of Beverley, a Carmelite professor of divinity at Oxford about 1390, was the author of some questions on the Master of the Sentences, and some controversial pieces.

John of Brompton, Abbot of Jervaux, in Yorkshire, in 1193, is the reputed author of a Chronicle of English History, 588-1198; but it is very doubtful whether it is properly ascribed to him. See Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, and authorities there cited.

John of Cornwall, flourished 1170, was the author of three theological treatises, the principal one of which—relating to the humanity of Christ—is known by the title of Eulogium, and was given to the world about 1169 or '70. See Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, and authorities there cited.

John de Hauteville, flourished 1184, was the author of a poem entitled Arehitrenius, and is supposed, without probability, to have written some other poetical pieces. See Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, and authorities there cited.

John of Gaddesden. See GADDESSEN, JOHN OF.

John of Salisbury, 1120?-1180, a native of Salisbury, studied at Oxford and Paris, opened a school in the latter place, subsequently lived in England as secretary to Theobald, Archbishop of Canterbury, and to his successor, Thomas à Becket, and, in 1176, was made Bishop of Chartres by the recommendation of Louis of France. His prinprincipal works are his Polyeraticus de nugis curialium et vestigiis philosophorum; a metrical treatise entitled Entheticus de dogmate philosophorum; the Metalogicus; his epistles, and a life of Thomas à Becket.

"As a writer, John of Salisbury is estimable for his great erudition, and for the general correctness of his style."—Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, q. v. for a notice of this writer and editions of his works.

Since the publication of Mr. Wright's invaluable work, a new edition—and the best—has appeared,—viz.: Opera Omnia, nunc primum in unum collegit, et cum codicibus manuscriptorum contulit J. A. Giles, Oxon., 1848, 5 vols. 8vo.

"John of Salisbury was the intimate friend of Thomas à Becket. He appears to have been an unsparing and just censor both of friends and foes. His Filius Uicis is a work on the follies of courtiers and philosophers."—Clarke's Sacred Literature.

Johnes, Col. Thomas, 1748-1816, a native of Shropshire, the owner of the splendid mansion and library at Hafod in Cardiganshire, issued from his private printing-press the following valuable works, trans. by himself into English: 1. Sir John Froissart's Chronicles, 1802-05, 4 vols. 4to, 25 copies, large paper, in fol.; 2d ed., 1805, 12 vols. 8vo, plates in 4to; 3d ed., 1808, 12 vols. 8vo, plates in 4to; 1839, 2 vols. r. 8vo; 1848, 2 vols. r. 8vo; 1849, r. 8vo. Condensed, 1847, 2 vols. 12mo. Reviewed by Sir Walter Scott in Edin. Rev., v. 347-362.

2. The Travels of Bertrand de la Brocquière, 1807, r. 8vo, 12 copies, large paper, in sm. 4to. Reviewed by the Rev. Sydney Smith in Edin. Rev., x. 329-332. 3. Memoirs of John, Lord de Joinville, 1807, 2 vols. 4to, 230 copies printed: 10 copies, large paper, in imp. 4to. 4. Chronicles of Eug. de Monstrelet, 1809, 5 vols. 4to, 25 copies, large paper, in fol.; 2d ed., 1810, 12 vols. 8vo, plates in 4to; 1840, 2 vols. imp. 8vo. Col. Johnes also pub. a trans. of St. Palaye's Memoirs of the Life of Froissart, 1803, 8vo, and A Cardiganshire Landlord's Advice to his Tenants. We have already devoted so much space to Froissart, (and some to Monstrelet,) that no comments should be expected here. See BERNERS, JOHN BOURCNIER, LORD. For particulars respecting Col. Johnes, his mansion, and his splendid library, see A Tour to Hafod, by Sir James Edward Smith, 1810, sup. r. fol., price 12 guineas; Dibdin's Bibliographical Decameron, and his Library Companion; Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit.; Cens. Lit. In 1807, the splendid mansion of Col. Johnes, with much of its valuable contents, was destroyed by fire: the loss amounted to £70,000. The energetic Bibliomaniac, however, was not to be discouraged, and built and adorned a new edifice. Evelyn would have been delighted with the colonel, for he planted above three millions of trees on his Cardiganshire estates.

Johnson, Samuel, 1649–1703, a native of Warwickshire, educated at Trinity Coll., Cambridge, Rector of Corringham, Essex, 1670, and subsequently chaplain to Lord William Russell, distinguished himself by his courageous opposition to the despotism of James II. and this monarch's efforts to extend Popery in Great Britain. He pub. several controversial treatises and sermons, of which a collective ed., with his life, was pub. in 1710, fol.; in 1713, fol.; and again in 1737, fol. In 1682, he pub. Julian the Apostate, intended to disprove the doctrine of passive obedience to the government. This work was (as we have already seen, p. 841 of this Dictionary) answered by Dr. George Hieke, in his Jovian, 1673, Svo. But it was more effectually answered by the powers that be, for the zealous partisan was sentenced to pay a fine of 500 marks, and was thrown into prison until he should discharge it. Nothing daunted by this, Johnson again took up his pen, and in 1686, at the instigation of Hugh Speke, a fellow-prisoner, drew up an Address to the Protestants in the King's Army, (then encamped on Hounslow Heath,) urging them not to obey illegally-commissioned officers.

"For both these publications, his spirit was, doubtless, deserving of the highest applause."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Review of the Causes of the Revolution of 1688.

The government thought otherwise: "Julian Johnson" (for so he was now called) was sentenced to stand thrice on the pillory, and to be whipped from Newgate to Tyburn. This barbarous sentence was carried into execution, and three hundred and seventeen stripes failed to make the patriot wince. After the Revolution, he was compensated by King William for his sufferings. At least he received a present of £1000, a pension of £300 a year for two lives, and his son was taken into the public service.

"His morals were pure, his religious feelings ardent, his learning and abilities not contemptible, his judgment weak, his temper acrimonious, turbulent, and unconquerably stubborn."—T. B. MACCLAY: Hist. of England, vol. i.

John Dryden, whose impure muse and time-serving spirit could neither understand nor respect a man of Johnson's purity and dauntless courage, disgraced himself by endeavouring to ridicule "Ben Jochanan," as he called the author of Julian, but we have ample testimonies of the excellence of the latter:

"I never knew a man of better sense, of a more innocent life, or of greater virtue, than Mr. Samuel Johnson."—John Hampden to the Duchess of Mazarine.

The works of Johnson are by no means to be despised, even in our day.

"A very remarkable writer. I do not know where I could put my hand upon a book containing so much sense and sound constitutional doctrine as this thin folio of Johnson's."—S. T. COLERIDGE.

He pub. several controversial tracts in favour of Episcopacy, 1733, &c.: a System of Morality, 1746; a Compendium of Logic, 1732; a Sermon, an English Grammar, and a Catechism, 1765; and a Hebrew Grammar, 1767; and some theolog. treatises. See his Life, by Rev. Dr. Thos. B. Chandler, 1805; again, Lon., 1824, Svo.

Johnson, Samuel, LL.D., Sept. 18, 1709–Dec. 13, 1784, one of the most distinguished writers of any age or country, was a native of Lichfield, where his father carried on the business of a bookseller with more respectability than profit. After a course of preparatory instruction in Mr. Hunter's academy in his native town, and at Mr. Westworth's school at Stourbridge, he was in his nineteenth year (1728) entered of Pembroke College, Oxford, where he remained for three years, returning home without a degree in 1731. In 1732, he became usher to a school in Market-Bosworth, but found this appointment so distasteful that in a few months he threw it up, and removed to Birmingham, where he found partial employment as contributor to a newspaper published by a Mr. Warren, a bookseller of that place. It was for this gentleman that he composed his first published work—an abridged translation into English from the French of Father Lobo's Voyage into Abyssinia. His reward for this performance was the considerable sum of five guineas. In 1736, he was married to Mrs. Porter, the widow of a Lichfield trader,—a lady of vulgar manners, loud voice, florid complexion, and nearly double his age, and with eight hundred pounds sterling in the funds. The newly-married pair thought that this small fortune could not be better employed than in the fitting up of an academy at Edial, near Lichfield; and accordingly the public was soon advised of the opening of an institution which, fortunately for the cause of letters, was destined soon to be closed. Three pupils only—David Garrick and his brother being two—"thronged the doors" of this respectable seminary. Disgusted with the indifference or incredulity of his townsmen, the domestic determined to try a better market for his talents and learning, and in 1737, accompanied by one of his pupils,—he who in after-years so long trod the stage without a peer,—he took the highroad for London, and from that day became an author by profession. Three years before this period—that is, in 1734—he had unsuccessfully sought an engagement as contributor to The Gentleman's Magazine: but he was now more fortunate in his efforts, and from March, 1738, to 1754, was a regular contributor to honest Edward Cave, in whose life in this Dictionary we have already referred to this profitable connexion. At times, indeed, the poor scholar was reduced so low in his finances as to be obliged to live upon fourpence halfpenny per day, and then roam the streets at night with Savage, or some other brother in misfortune, for want of a lodging.

In 1738, Johnson was employed upon a translation of Father Paul Sarpi's History of the Council of Trent, which was discontinued by Dodsley and Cave in consequence of a rival translation by another Samuel Johnson. It was in May of this year, 1738, that our author gave to the world London, a Poem, in imitation of the Third Satire of Juvenal; a production which was so immediately successful, that, to quote the quaint language of a critic in the Gentleman's Magazine, it became "remarkable for having got to the second edition in the space of a week." It so happened that London appeared in the same day with Pope's Satire of 1738, and the youthful author had no reason to regret the coincidence, for people said, "Here is an unknown poet greater even than Pope."

Pope set young Richardson to work to find out who this formidable rival was. Richardson reported that he had discovered only that "his name was Johnson, and that he was some obscure man." "He will soon be diterré," replied Pope. This was not the only instance in which he displayed a commendable generosity to the rising star, for from the perusal of London alone he recommended him to Earl Gower when Johnson (in the next year) sought a degree "to qualify him for the mastership of a charity-school."

Of this and of some later portions of Johnson's life we find some notices contributed by ourselves some years since to Putnam's Magazine, (New York, April, 1854,) and from these memoranda we shall not hesitate to quote when it suits our purpose.

The similarity between London and Pope's satirical vein is very observable. The Vanity of Human Wishes essays a more dignified strain. Garrick accounts for this in his own facetious manner:

"When Johnson lived much with the Herveys, and saw a good deal of what was passing in life, he wrote his London, which is lively and easy; when he became more retired, he gave us his Vanity of Human Wishes, which is as hard as Greek: had he gone on to imitate another satire, it would have been as hard as Hebrew."

And yet, flippant little David, thy old schoolmaster wrote a hundred lines a day of this poem, if it is all Greek to thee. Hard as it was to thee, it softened a greater man to tears, for Walter Scott tells us,

"The deep and pathetic morality of The Vanity of Human Wishes has often extracted tears from those whose eyes wander dry over pages professedly sentimental."

Ay, it drew tears from the eyes of the author himself! George Lewis Scott describes a very interesting little family-gathering at Thrale's, when Dr. Johnson read aloud his satire: whilst recounting the difficulties of the poor, struggling scholar, he "burst into a passion of tears." Poor fellow! he remembered those days when he subscribed himself impransus. No longer subject to the pangs of hunger, he now had all that heart could wish.—plenty, "honour, love, obedience, troops of friends;" but his mind reverted to those bitter days of penury when he wandered in the streets for want of a lodging, and, in the garb of poverty, devoured his dinner, furnished by the hand of charity, behind the curtain at good Mr. Cave's! How had his condition changed! We need not marvel at those outpourings of a grateful heart which gush forth in his quiet hours of meditation and solemn seasons of prayer. The great Being on whose guidance and protection he had confidently relied in the day of destitution and hour of trial had not disappointed his hopes. He had "brought him to great honour, and comforted him on every side." This he deeply felt, and, however at times arrogant and harsh to his fellow-men, he ever, as Bishop Horne well says, "walked humbly before the Lord his God."

Johnson had no little difficulty in finding a publisher for London, but at last Dodsley ventured to purchase it for the magnificent sum of ten guineas! The author speaks of this as no inconsiderable price for it:

"I might, perhaps," he says, "have accepted of less, but that Paul Whitehead had a little before got ten guineas for a poem, and I would not take less than Paul Whitehead."

In 1744, the reputation of the young author was greatly increased by the publication of the Life of Richard Savage, and this admirable biography was followed in 1746 by a Plan of the Dictionary of the English Language; in 1749, by the representation of the tragedy of Irene, and the publication of The Vanity of Human Wishes; and in 1750-52, by the issue of the Rambler. The Dictionary was given to the world in 1755; the Idler dates from April 5, 1758, to April 5, 1760; Rasselas was pub. in 1759; the edition of Shakspeare, with Notes, in 1765; The False Alarm in 1770; Thoughts on the late Transactions respecting Falkland Islands, 1771; A Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland, and The Patriot, in 1774; Taxation no Tyranny, in 1775; and the Lives of the English Poets, his last production of any importance, (and which he had commenced in 1777,) in 1779-81. The Poets in this collection commence with Cowley, and, with the exception of Blackmore, Watts, Pomfret, and Yalden, were chosen by the booksellers, whose original design went no further than the preparation of Biographical Prefaces to the selection of British poetry which they were about giving to the world. This meagre project was happily enlarged by the skill and taste of the editor. The Lives of Savage, Cowley, Milton, Gray, Dryden, and Pope, are considered the best in point of literary workmanship. The ed. of The Poets to which they were originally prefixed, 1779-81, was in 60 vols. sm. 8vo, price, £7 10s. A 2d ed. was pub. in 1790, in 75 vols. 12mo.

A chronological and detailed list of Johnson's writings—which we think it unnecessary to quote in this place—will be found in the Appendix to Boswell's Life of Johnson,—a work which has made the life of the great lexicographer so familiar to general readers, that some brevity on our part may well be excused. In 1762, a pension of £300, conferred by George III., placed the author of the Rambler in circumstances of comparative affluence, and enabled him to pass his remaining days without being subjected to that harassing literary drudgery for which few men were so ill qualified, and still fewer would have so bravely endured. We must not forget to mention, before leaving this division of our subject, that in 1755 Johnson received the degree of M.A. from the University of Oxford; the title of Doctor of Laws from Trinity College, Dublin, in 1762; and the same compliment from Oxford in 1775.

The only complete edition of Johnson's Works is that pub. at Oxford, by Talboys and Wm. Pickering, in 1825, in 11 vols. 8vo.—The Oxford Classic Edition. The contents are as follows: Vol. I. Life; Poems; Rasselas; Letters; II., III. Rambler; IV. Adventurer; Idler; V. Miscellaneous Pieces; VI. Reviews; Political Tracts; Lives of Eminent Persons; VII. Lives of the Poets: Cowley, Denham, Milton, Butler, Rochester, Roscommon, Otway, Waller, Pomfret, Dorset, Stepney, J. Philips, Walsh, Dryden, Smith, Duke, King, Sprat, Hallifax, Parnell, Garth, Rowe, Addison, Hughes, and Sheffield; VIII. Lives of the Poets: Prior, Congreve, Blackmore, Fenton, Gay, Granville, Yalden, Tiekell, Hammond, Somerville, Savage, Swift, Broome, Pope, Pitt, Thomson, Watts, A. Philips, West, Collins, Dyer, Shenstone, Young, Mallet, Akenside, Gray, and Lyttelton; IX. Journey to the Hebrides; Vision of Theodoric; The Fountains, a Fairy Tale; Prayers and Meditations; Sermons; Index to vols. i.-ix.; X., XI. Parliamentary Debates, 1740-43.

We are now to consider the distinguished subject of our notice: 1, as a Poet; 2, as an Essayist; 3, as a Lexicographer; 4, as a Critic. We shall also briefly review—5, the peculiarities of his style; 6, his appearance, manners, and conversation; 7, his moral and religious character.

I. DR. JOHNSON AS A POET.

"Read Johnson's Vanity of Human Wishes—all the examples and mode of giving them sublime, as well as the latter part, with the exception of an occasional couplet. I do not much admire the opening. I remember an observation of Sharpe's, (the Conversationalist, as he was called in London, and a very clever man,) that the first line of his poem was superfluous, and that Pope (the very best of poets, I think) would have begun at once, only changing the punctuation,—

"Survey mankind from China to Peru."

"The former line, 'Let observation,' &c. is certainly heavy and useless. But 'tis a grand poem—and so true! true as the truth of Juvenal himself. The lapse of ages changes all things,—time—language—the earth—the bounds of the sea—the stars of the sky, and every thing 'about, around, and underneath' man, except man himself, who has always been, and always will be, an unlucky rascal. The infinite variety of lives conducts but to death, and the infinity of wishes leads but to disappointment."—LORD BYRON: Racine's Diary, Jan. 9, 1821.

James Ballantyne remarks of Sir Walter Scott,—a comment of whose upon the pathos of The Vanity of Human Wishes we have already quoted:

"He had often said to me, that neither his own nor any modern popular style of composition was that from which he derived most pleasure. I asked him what it was. He answered, Johnson's; and that he had more pleasure in reading London, and the Vanity of Human Wishes, than any other poetical composition he could mention; and I think I never saw his countenance more indicative of high admiration, than while reciting aloud from these productions."—Lockhart's Scott.

Lockhart tells us that the last line of MS. that Scott sent to the press was a quotation from The Vanity of Human Wishes.

"Yet," continues Lockhart, "it is the cant of our day—above all, of its poetasters—that Johnson was no poet. To be sure, they say the same of Pope,—and hint it occasionally even of Dryden."

"Juvenal has been translated by Dryden: but the mere English reader will derive the best conception of the manner of this noble satirist from the admirable imitations of Dr. Johnson, which are beyond all praise. Mr. Murphy and Mr. Lewis have likewise lately published imitations of this poet, which possess much merit, though certainly far inferior to the spirited productions of Johnson."—DR. DRAKE.

"Perused Johnson's London and Vanity of Human Wishes. His numbers are strong in sense, and smooth in flow, but want that varied grace and inextinguishable spirit which constitute the essential charm of Pope's."—Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., Ipswich, 1810, 65.

"Dr. Johnson's London, a Satire, is a noble poem. But his great moral genius was constrained in composition by the perpetual parody on his powerful prototype, Juvenal. To have shown so much genius and so much ingenuity at one and the same time, to have been so original even in imitation, places him in the highest order of minds. But his range was here circumscribed; for he had to move parallel with the Roman,—finding out in every passage corresponding and kindred sins,—and in order to preserve—which he did wondrously—the similitude—

"To bridle in his struggling muse with pain,
Which long'd to launch into a nobler strain."

PROFESSOR WILSON: Blackie Mag., June, 1828; and his Essays Critical and Imaginative, Edin. and Lon., 1856, i. 230.

"That his tragedy [Irene] was a great failure on the stage has been already related; that it is of extreme dullness, of a monotony altogether insufferable, and therefore tires out the reader's patience quite as much as it did the auditor's; is true; that most of his lesser pieces are only things of easy and of fairly-successful execution is likewise certain, with perhaps the exception of his verses on Robert Levett's death, which have a sweetness and tenderness seldom found in any of his compositions. But, had he never written any thing after the Imitations of Juvenal, his name would have gone down to posterity as a poet of great excellence,—one who only did not reach equal celebrity with Pope, because he came after him, and did not assiduously court the muse.

"In truth, these two pieces are admirable, both for their matter, their diction, and their versification. . . . Of Johnson's Latin verses it remains to speak, and they assuredly do not rise to the level of his English, nor indeed above mediocrity. The translation of Pope's Messiah, however, a work of his boyhood, gave a promise not fulfilled in his riper years."—LORD BROUGHAM: Lives of Men of Letters of the Time of George III.

2. DR. JOHNSON AS AN ESSAYIST.

Under the head of essays, we may, without much violence to strict classification, add Johnson's political pamphlets, his Parliamentary Debates, and his tale of Rasselas, to the periodical papers of the Rambler, the Idler, &c. The first number of the Rambler was pub. on Tuesday, March 20, 1749–50, and the last on Saturday the 17th (14th, in fact) March, 1752, 208 numbers in all, issued every Tuesday and Saturday, without the loss of a single publication-day. Would that all authors who seek to advance the interests of religion and morality were as conscientious as the author of The Rambler, in imploring the aid of divine grace, "without which nothing is strong, nothing is holy." "Grant, I beseech thee," supplicates the pious writer, "that in this undertaking thy Holy Spirit may not be withheld from me, but that I may promote thy glory, and the salvation of myself and others." The Rambler excited but little attention at first. Croker seems to question Payne's assertion to Chalmers, that Richardson's essay, No. 97, was the "only paper which had a prosperous sale and was popular." But the ladies will side with Payne, when they discover by inspection what "No. 97" is about. We shall not inform them, and indeed we strictly forbid any of our female readers to turn to this mysterious paper. If in this Blue-Beard prohibition we meet with the same measure of obedience which was accorded to the gentleman just named, we ought not to be surprised. The good Doctor was sorely put to it to find a name for his child. He told Sir Joshua Reynolds,

"What must be done, sir, will be done. When I began publishing that paper I was at a loss how to name it. I sat down at night upon my bedside, and resolved that I would not go to sleep till I had fixed its title. The Rambler seemed the best that occurred, and I took it."

The Doctor wrote the whole of the 208 papers, with the exception of four billets in No. 10, by Miss Mulso, (afterwards Mrs. Chaponne); No. 30, by Mrs. Catherine Talbot; No. 97, by Richardson; and Nos. 44 and 100, by Elizabeth Carter. Of Johnson's 204, thirty only were "worked up" from previously-prepared materials. After a time, the Rambler gained the public ear; and, this secured, the public voice soon followed. Cave, the publisher of the paper, received a number of commendatory letters, newspaper-verses appeared in its praise, and James Elphinston (see p. 355 of this Dictionary) superintended an Edinburgh edition, which followed the London issue. Richardson wrote to Cave that Johnson was the only man who could write them; which Cave admitted, but complained that, good as they were, they were very slow sale. Even corpulent Mrs. Rambler, who had never been suspected of very exquisite literary sensibilities, was moved by these effusions of the "gude man's," and rewarded his labours with the very handsome speech,—"I thought very well of you before, but I did not imagine you could have written any thing equal to this."

Notwithstanding the tardy sale at first, the author had the satisfaction of surviving ten editions in London alone. We must not conceal the fact that some unreasonable beings complained of the erudite dignity of the style, and declared that the author (a true "Yankee trick" it would now be called) used the hard words in the Rambler in order to render his Dictionary—of which the Prospectus had been issued a short time before—indispensably necessary.

Edmund Burke, who, like most truly great men, excelled in wit and humour, said that Johnson's ladies—his Misellas, Lorimas, Properantias, and Rhodoelias—were all "Johnson's in petticoats." This is much of a piece with Goldsmith's telling Johnson that if he were to compose a work in which little fishes had to converse, he would make them all talk like great whales!

In his contributions to the Adventurer, the Doctor uses the stilts less; he walks more,—perhaps occasionally runs.

Yet majestic diction was as natural to a man who thought in rounded periods as was a disjointed chaos of the parts of speech to many of his critics. So far from the elaborate verbal architecture, anxiously built up and painfully cemented, which the reader supposed, the Ramblers were written just as they were wanted for the press; indeed, at times the first half was in type before the remainder was on paper.

Boswell relates an amusing anecdote relative to the Italian edition of the Rambler:

"A foreign minister, of no very high talents, who had been in the company for a considerable time, quite overlooked, happened luckily to mention that he had read some of his Rambler in Italian, and admired it much. This pleased him [Johnson] greatly. He observed that the title had been translated Il Genio Errante, though I have been told it was rendered, more ludicrously, Il Vagabando; and, finding that this minister gave such a proof of his taste, he was all attention to him, and on the first remark which he made, however simple, exclaimed, 'The ambassador says well; his Excellency observes;' and then he expanded and enriched the little that had been said in so strong a manner that it appeared something of consequence. This was exceedingly entertaining to the company who were present, and many a time afterwards it furnished a pleasant topic of merriment. 'The ambassador says well' became a laughable term of applause when no weighty matter had been expressed."

It deserves to be noticed that the 110th number of the Rambler (on Repentance) was the means of deciding the Rev. James Compton, of the English Benedictine Monks at Paris, to leave that body and embrace the Protestant faith. How many devotees of the Greek Church it would have converted we have, unfortunately, no means of knowing. Yet the author thought at one time that it was about having the opportunity presented to it. Somehow or other he heard that the Empress of Russia had ordered a translation of the Rambler into the Russian language:

"So," says the author, with a complacent smile, "I shall be read on the banks of the Wolga. Horace boasts that his fame would extend as far as the banks of the Rhone; now, the Wolga is farther from me than the Rhone from Horace."

Whether this was the work of some wicked wag, or not, we cannot tell; but we believe that the Russian edition of the Rambler is even rarer than any "liber rarissimus" which tantalizes the "hellno librorum" in the "choice catalogues of Thomas Thorpe."

We have seen how greatly the Rambler was admired in the select circles which gave law to the Republic of Letters of that day. The Doctor fully endorsed all that was said in praise of his essays, and observed, not without truth, of his Rambler, that he "had laboured to refine our language to grammatical purity, and to clear it from colloquial barbarisms, licentious idioms, and irregular combinations, and that he has added to the elegance of its construction and the harmony of its cadence."

But it is not to be supposed that the voice of admiration was the only one to be heard:

"The Rambler," remarks a celebrated literary and fashionable lady of the day, "is certainly a strange misnomer: he always plods in the beaten road of his predecessors. Following the Spectator (with the same pace as a packhorse would do a hunter) in the style that is proper to lengthen a paper. These writers may, perhaps, be of service to the public, which is saying a great deal in their favour. There are numbers of both sexes who never read any thing but such productions, and cannot spare time from doing nothing to go through a sixpenny pamphlet. Such gentle readers may be improved by a moral hint which, though repeated over and over from generation to generation, they never heard in their lives. I should be glad to know the name of this laborious author."—LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU: Works, Lon., 1803, 5 vols. 8vo; vol. iv. p. 259.

"As an essayist, he merits more consideration, [than as a poet and dramatist.] His Ramblers are in everybody's hands. About them opinions vary, and I rather believe the style of these essays is not now considered as a good model. This he corrected in his more advanced age, as may be seen in his Lives of the Poets, where his diction, though occasionally elaborate and highly metaphorical, is not nearly so inflated and ponderous as in the Ramblers."—Memoirs of Rich and Cumberland: Samuel Johnson.

"His Ramblers are in every body's hands," says Cumberland; but his Memoirs were pub. in 1806, and now, in 1856,—half a century later,—this can no longer be said;—nor, indeed, could it have been truly said, for many years past.

"Where is the man who, having turned his thirtieth year, peruses Rasselas or the Rambler?"—Diddin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 617–618.

"Nobody now reads the Rambler or the Idler, and the colossal reputation of Johnson rests almost entirely upon his profound and caustic sayings recorded in Boswell."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Lectures, Polit. Hist., and Miscel., Edin. and Lon., 1850, ii. 421.

But Sir Archibald certainly speaks in haste: the Rambler and Idler are still read, and will always be read, and that to the great profit of the readers. We should not omit to notice, in passing, that Sir Archibald pays a high compliment to the essays of Johnson. See Hist. of Europe, 1850-52, chap. v.

In the whole course of our "Johnsonian readings" we have met with nothing upon this subject which pleased us better, as a lucid exposition of the truth upon this subject, than the following remarks of a learned American divine,—one of the most profound thinkers, and certainly one of the best writers, of the age:

"It has been asked, with emphasis, 'Who now reads the Rambler?' And it is indubitable that this book, which once exerted so mighty an influence on the English language and people, has given place, at least in general reading, to works of far inferior merit and interest. The reason seems to be, that its object is well-nigh accomplished. It commenced with a standard of morals and language elevated far above the prevailing style of morals and of writing. It has elevated both, and has brought the English language and notions of morality to its own level. Nor is it wonderful that men should regard with less interest a work which now is seen to have no very extraordinary elevation. It is a component part of English literature, having fixed itself in the language, the style, and the morals of the English people, and taken its place as an integral, almost undistinguished, part of the national principles of writing and morality. The result is that, while the benefits of the Rambler may be diffusing themselves, unperceived, to almost all the endearments of the fireside and virtues of the community, the book itself may be very imperfectly known and unfrequently perused. Johnson may be almost forgotten, except in praise; but his mighty power is yet sending forth a mild influence over lands and seas, like the gentle movements of the dew and the sunbeam."—REV. ALBERT BARNES: Christian Spectator, 1832; and in his Miscell. Essays and Reviews. N. York, 1855, i. 126.

To the same effect writes Sir James Mackintosh:

"Some heaviness and weariness must be felt by most readers at the perusal of essays on life and manners, written like the Rambler: but, it ought never to be forgotten that the two most popular writers of the eighteenth century, Addison and Johnson, were such efficacious teachers of virtue that their writings may be numbered among the causes which in an important degree have contributed to preserve and to improve the morality of the British nation."—Mackintosh's Life, Lon., 1835, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The publication of the Rambler, though not very successful during its progress, stamped the character of the author as one of the first moral writers of the age, and as eminently qualified to write, and even to improve, the English language."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Life of Samuel Johnson, Miscell. Prose Works, Abbotford ed., Edin. and Lon., 1850, iii. 296.

"It would not be easy to name a book more tiresome—indeed, more difficult—to read, or one which gives moral lessons in a more frigid tone, with less that is lively or novel in the matter, in a language more heavy and monotonous. The measured pace, the constant balance of the style, becomes quite intolerable, for there is no interesting truth to be inculcated remote from common observation, nor is there any attack carried on against difficult positions, nor any satirical warfare maintained either with opinions or with persons."—LORD BROUGHAM: Lives of Men of Letters of the Time of George III. Lon. and Glasg., 1855, 347.

Mr. Hazlitt is, if possible, still more severe in his strictures on the Rambler. We can quote but a few lines of his critique:

"After closing the volumes of the Rambler, there is nothing that we remember as a new truth gained to the mind,—nothing indelibly stamped upon the memory; nor is there any passage that we wish to turn to, as embodying any known principle or observation with such force and beauty that justice can only be done to the idea in the author's own words."—On the Periodical Essayists.

We cannot resist the temptation of quoting, by way of contrast to the above, a line or two from the enthusiastic commendation of the author of Clarissa:

"I am inexpressibly pleased with them. . . I hope the world tastes them; for its own sake I hope the world tastes them. . . I would not, for any consideration, that they should be laid down through discouragement."—Samuel Richardson to Cave, Aug. 9, 1750.

Perhaps Rasselas, which is quite as much of an essay, or, rather, series of essays, as it is a novel, is even still more neglected than the Rambler. The fervid eulogy of Johnson's greatest biographer is well known, but we must find room for it in our pages:

"This tale, with all the charms of Oriental imagery, and all the force and beauty of which the English language is capable, leads us through the most important scenes of human life, and shows us that this stage of our being is full of 'vanity and vexation of spirit.' The fund of thinking which this work contains is such, that almost every sentence of it may furnish a subject of long meditation. I am not satisfied if a year passes without my having read it through; and at every perusal my admiration of the mind which produced it is so highly raised that I can scarcely believe I had the honour of enjoying the intimacy of such a man."—BOSWELL.

We give some other opinions upon this once-celebrated production. Hazlitt is less enthusiastic:

"Rasselas is the most melancholy and debilitating moral speculation that ever was put forth."—On the Periodical Essayists.

Dr. Young, on the contrary, calls Rasselas "a mass of sense."

"The work can scarce be termed a narrative, being in a great measure void of incident: it is rather a set of moral dialogues on the various vicissitudes of human life, its follies, its fears, its hopes, its wishes, and the disappointment in which all terminate. The style is in Johnson's best manner, enriched and rendered sonorous by the triads and quaternions which he so much loved, and balanced with an art which, perhaps, he derived from the learned Sir Thomas Browne."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Life of Johnson.

"In his Rasselas we have much to admire, and enough to make us wish for more. It is the work of an illuminated mind, and offers many wise and deep reflections, clothed in beautiful and harmonious diction. We are not, indeed, familiar with such personages as Johnson has imagined for the characters of his fable; but, if we are not exceedingly interested in their story, we are infinitely gratified with their conversation and remarks."—Cumberland's Memoirs: Samuel Johnson.

"No prig shall ever persuade me that Rasselas is not a noble performance in design and in execution. Never were the expenses of a mother's funeral more gloriously defrayed by a son than the funeral of Samuel Johnson's mother by the price of Rasselas, written for the pious purpose of laying her head decently and honourably in the dust."—CHRISTOPHER NORTH: Notes Ambrosiana, April, 1829.

The admirer of Johnson will be grateful to us for extending our quotations from Professor Wilson. Always eloquent, the enthusiastic Christopher strikes even a higher chord than is his wont when the author of the Rambler becomes his glowing theme:

"He had noble faculties and noble feelings; a hate, high as heaven, of wickedness; a scorn, as high, of all that was base or mean; wide knowledge of the world, of London, of life; severe judgment; imagination not very various perhaps, but very vivid, and, when conjoined with such an intellect, even wonder-working, in realms that seemed scarcely of right to belong to the solemn sage. Witness the Happy Valley of Rasselas, and, indeed, all that as yet unsurpassed story, where, on the wings of fancy and feeling, you are wafted along over the earth, yet never lose sight of its flesh-and-blood inhabitants, working and weeping, yet not unhappy, still, in their toils and their tears, and dying but to live again, in no cold, glittering, poetic heaven, but in the abodes of bliss, seen by the eyes of nature through religion, builded in the skies."—The Man of Tom, a Satire; in Blackw. Mag., June, 1828; and in Wilson's Essays. Critical and Imaginative. Edin. and Lon., 1856, i. 221.

"The reader who first attempts the Abyssinian Candide feels that he has imposed on himself a task rather than found a pleasure, or even a relaxation. The manner is heavy and little suited to the occasion; the matter is of a very ordinary fabric, if it is safe and wholesome; there is nothing that shines except the author's facility of writing in a very artificial style, as soon as we are informed, by external evidence, of the whole having been written in a few nights. He, perhaps, had some kind of misgiving that it was not a successful effort, for he had never looked at it till two-and-twenty years after it was written, when, a friend happening to have it, who was travelling with him, Johnson read it with some eagerness."—LORD BROUGHAM: Lives of Men of Letters, &c.

The noble critic just quoted considers Johnson's political pamphlets and his occasional tracts as far superior to his moral essays; and he especially commends Taxation no Tyranny, and the review of Soame Jenyns's Treatise on the Origin of Evil. The last-named production has already come under our notice in our life of Soame Jenyns. The eloquence of the Parliamentary Debates was of so high an order that Dr. Francis declared that of Demosthenes to be inferior; and Voltaire did not scruple to affirm that the Greek and Roman orators had revived in the British Senate.

3. DR. JOHNSON AS A LEXICOGRAPHER.

Before the appearance of Johnson's great work (in 1755) the English were sadly in want of a good lexicon of their language. The one in use—not without considerable merit—was that of Nathan Bailey, which we have already noticed in our life of that industrious philologist. English scholars, therefore, had to endure in silence the sarcasm of the Abbé le Blanc, who declared that such was the passion for the English tongue that the French had made it one of the learned languages, and that even their women studied it, and yet that there was not so much as a good dictionary, or, rather, a tolerable grammar. We shall not be expected, in the limited space to which we are confined, to enter into any consideration of the philological dispute of the day respecting the comparative merits of the dictionaries of Johnson, Webster, Richardson, and others. Like the valet de chambre in the Vicar of Wakefield who read so many magazines, though they quarrel among each other we dearly love them all, and keep the most important of them by our elbow. As regards orthography, we certainly do not—as every page of this volume testifies—follow the example of our countryman, whilst we should undoubtedly feel entitled to ridicule without mercy the stolidity of the tyro who should undertake to compare the meagre philological attainments of Dr. Johnson with the amazing erudition, in this department, of Dr. Noah Webster.

We had intended to quote some criticisms of Drs. Webster and Richardson on the execution of Johnson's Dictionary; but, as such quotations would involve the necessity of an impartial presentation of both sides of the question,—for which presentation we lack both space and time,—we shall content ourselves, and, we trust, our readers, with the citation of a few opinions, which (with, perhaps, the exception of Lord Brougham's) are not to be considered as instituting any comparison between Johnson's Dictionary and the two which have only recently, in their perfected shape, been submitted to the public eye.

The Doctor, with his usual foresight, had adopted an excellent mode of discouraging all adverse criticism, by admitting in his admirable preface that "a few wild blunders and risible absurdities might for a time furnish folly with laughter and harden ignorance into contempt." Now, as no reviewer is particularly desirous of being considered either a fool or an ignoramus, we may well suppose that the Jeffreys of the day were contented to praise where they could and to be silent where they disapproved. We may remark, in this connexion, that it seems hardly worth while for us to repeat the old and well-known story of Johnson's impertinent and unjust letter to the Earl of Chesterfield. It is not to be forgotten, however, that the Earl's suggestions upon the prospectus were all adopted by the author.

The Monthly Review for April, 1755, was enlarged "four pages extraordinary," and even then the usual catalogue of new books omitted, to make room for a copious notice of the Dictionary, in which some imperfections are rather hinted at than enumerated. Thomas Warton, in a letter to his brother, after admitting that "the preface was noble, and the history of the language pretty full," complains that "strokes of laxity and indolence were plainly to be perceived." "Laxity and indolence" there will always be in the works of man; but vigour and industry there were also, else the Dictionary had never seen the light. In our life of WM. ADAMS, D.D., p. 37 of this Dictionary, we have quoted some remarks of Johnson upon this theme, to which the reader is referred. The book sold well, for a second edition was pub. within a year. This was a great triumph for the author, who declared that, of all his acquaintances, there were only two who, upon the publication of the work, did not endeavour to depress him with threats of censure from the public, or with objections learned from those who learned them from his own preface.

The Doctor displayed no little ingenuity in the preliminary arrangement of his matériel. Bishop Percy tells us: "Boswell's account of the manner in which Johnson compiled his Dictionary is confused and erroneous. He began his task (as he himself expressly described to me) by devoting his first care to a diligent perusal of all such English writers as were most correct in their language, and under every sentence which he meant to quote, he drew a line, and added in the margin the first letter of the word under which it was to occur. He then delivered these books to his clerks, who transcribed each sentence on a separate slip of paper, and arranged the same under the word referred to. By these means he collected the several words and their different significations; and when the whole arrangement was alphabetically formed he gave the definitions of their meanings, and collected their etymologies from Skinner, Junius, and other writers on the subject."

Andrew Millar's exclamation of delight at the reception of the last sheet was less reverent than Johnson's pious rejoinder. We do not wonder at Millar's impatience. The "three years" stipulated for the undertaking proved to be more than seven, and the copyright-money (£1375) had long been in the hands of the lexicographer: we say the hands,—for little went into his pocket, after satisfying the demands of his six amanuenses and discharging other expenses incurred in the prosecution of the work.

But we promised a few quotations respecting the Dictionary, and it is quite time they were before the reader. In the same year (1755) of the appearance of the review of Johnson's Dictionary in the Monthly Review, another, by Dr. Adam Smith, the political economist, was pub. in the (old) Edinburgh Review. Sir James Mackintosh tells us that "This review of Johnson's Dictionary is chiefly valuable as a proof that neither of these eminent persons was well qualified to write an English dictionary. The plan of Johnson and the specimens of Smith are alike faulty. At that period, indeed, neither the cultivation of our old literature, nor the study of the languages from which the English springs or to which it is related, nor the habit of observing the general structure of language, was so far advanced as to render it possible for this great work to approach perfection."—Preface to a Reprint in 1816 of the Edinburgh Review of 1755.

"His Dictionary, though distinguished neither by the philosophy nor by the erudition which illustrate the origin and history of words, is a noble monument of his powers and his literary knowledge, and even of his industry, though it betrays frequent symptoms of that constitutional indolence which must so often have overpowered him in so immense a labour."—Mackintosh's Life, Lon., 1855, 2 vols. 8vo.

"That laborious and gigantic task, a dictionary of the language, now it is executed is well known, and sufficiently surprising, considering that the learned author was a stranger to the Northern languages, on which English is radically grounded, and that the discoveries in grammar since made by Horne Tooke were then unknown."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Life of Johnson.

"Dr. Johnson, with great labour, has collected the various meanings of every word, and quoted the authorities; but it would have been an improvement if he had given an accurate definition of the precise meaning of every word, pointed out the way in which it ought to be employed with the greatest propriety, showed the various deviations from the original meaning, which custom had so far established as to render allowable, and fixed the precise limits beyond which it could not be employed without becoming vicious expression. With this view it would have been necessary to exhibit the nice distinctions which take place between words nearly synonymous, and without which many words seem only to be defined in such a manner that they must be considered as exactly synonymous. We omit making quotations from Johnson in order to point out these defects; and shall content ourselves with giving a few examples, to show in what manner, according to our idea, a dictionary of the English language ought to be compiled."—Encyc. Brit., edit. 7th. art. "Dictionary."

"Had Johnson left nothing but his Dictionary, one might have traced there a great intellect, a genuine man. To King to its clearness of definition, its general sobriety, honesty, insight, and successful method, it may be called the best of all Dictionaries. There is in it a kind of architectural nobleness; it stands there like a great solid square-built edifice, finished, symmetrically complete; you judge that a true Builder did it."—High's Memo. Worthp.

"Of the Prefaces to his own or other men's works, it is not necessary to speak in detail. The most ambitious is that to the Dictionary, which is powerfully written, but promises more than it performs, when it professes to give a history of the English language; for it does very little more than give a series of passages from the writings in the Anglo-Saxon and English tongues of different ages. The Dictionary itself with all its faults, still keeps its ground, and has had no successor that could supplant it. This is owing to the admirable plan of giving passages from the writers cited as authorities for each word, and this part of the design is very well executed. Hence the book becomes almost as entertaining to read as useful to consult. The more a difficult task of definition has been less happily performed; but far better than the etymological part, which neither shows profound knowledge, nor makes a successful application of it. The compiler appears to have satisfied himself with one or two authorities, and neither to have chosen them well nor consulted them with discrimination. Of any attempts at a deeper and more philosophical study, either as regards the structure or the grammar of our language, he cannot be said ever to have had the credit; but if he at any time was so far fortunate, Horne Tooke has very mercilessly stripped him of it."—LORD BROGHAM: Men of Letters, &c.

There have been many edits. of Johnson's Dictionary, but we do not think it worth while to notice any save the best, that of the Rev. H. J. Todd, Lon., 1818, in 11 Pts., 1827, 3 vols. 4to; new edit., now (1856) in press, edited by Todd and Latham. Mr. H. G. Bohn has recently—in 1840, '50, and '54, all in imp. 8vo.—pub. verbatim reprints of Johnson's own last folio edit.

4. DR. JOHNSON AS A CRITIC.

A comprehensive view of Dr. Johnson's critical writings of course include many of his numerous contributions to the Gentleman's Magazine, the Universal Visitor, The Literary Magazine or Universal Review, The Poetical Calendar, The London Chronicle, The Critical Review, &c.; but these articles are almost all of them unknown to the general reader, and of many the evidence of authorship is by no means unquestionable. When reference is made to the critical writings of Johnson, it is understood that the Preface and Notes to Shakspeare, and the Lives of the British Poets, are in the mind of the speaker. To each of these works, therefore, we must devote a few lines. We say "a few lines;" and, indeed, did our space permit, we have little disposition to dwell upon Dr. Johnson as a commentator upon Shakspeare. We will fight manfully for the Preface, but after that the point of our lance a knowledge of the influence of the attraction of gravitation, and bends earthward. Francis Douce, one of the most erudite of literary antiquaries, thus despatches the critical doctor in a few words, much to the purpose:

"The indefatigable exertions of Messrs. Stevens, Malone, Tyrwhitt, and Mason, will ever be duly appreciated by the true and zealous admirer of Shakspeare's pages. If the name of a celebrated critic and moralist be not included on this occasion, it is because he was certainly unskilled in the knowledge of obsolete customs and expressions. His explanatory notes, therefore, are, generally speaking, the most controvertible of any; but no future editor will discharge his duty to the public, who shall omit a single sentence of this writer's masterly preface, or of his sound and tasteful characters of the text of Shakspeare."

Again:

"No disparagement is meant to the memory or talents of one of the greatest of men, when a protest is entered against the text of Dr. Johnson."

We well remember our astonishment at Johnson's criticism upon Proteus's speech in the Two Gentlemen of Verona, where he charges Shakspeare with a blunder in making the enamoured young gallant say,

"Tis but her picture I have yet to hold."

"And that hath dazzled my reason's light."

"Why," says the Doctor, "he had an interview with Silvia, and yet talks of having only seen her picture!" The literal commentator did not make sufficient allowance for the rhetoric of lovers. That there should be much valuable matter, and many sensible observations, contained in such a body of notes by such a writer, is a matter of course. The errors and misconceptions which prove the critic's unfitness for his task afford another proof of what even wise men often forget,—that no amount of genius, no extent of general knowledge, will qualify an author for a particular field without particular preparation. The Monthly Review (vol. xxxiii., 1765) devotes no less than thirty pages to a notice (if no means complimentary) of Johnson's Shakspeare, and to this article, from which we had intended to quote, we must refer the reader. Johnson's edit. of Shakspeare appeared in 1765, 8 vols. 8vo. His principal predecessors as commentators on the great poet were: 1. Rymer, 1678; 2. Dennis, 1693; 3. Gildon, 1694; 4. Pope, 1725; 5. Theobald, 1726; 6. Peck, 1740; 7. Sir Thomas Hanmer, 1745; 8. Grey, 1746; 9. Warburton, 1747; 10. Upton, 1748; 11. Whalley, 1748; 12. Edwards, 1748; 13. Holt, 1749; 14. Charlotte Lennox, 1753-54; 15. Cooper, 1755; 16. Howard, 1756; 17. Capell, 1759; 18. Heath, 1765.

Before we leave this period—the date of the publication of Johnson's Shakspeare—we must refer the reader to the fierce attack of Kenrick (Goldsmith's malignant foe) upon the new editor, pub. in the Monthly Review for December, 1765. Warburton's savage assault upon Johnson, in revenge for his temerity in modestly questioning some of that commentator's critical canons or annotations, is exactly what might have been expected from that amiable and courteous (!) prelate. See Letters from a late eminent Prelate to one of his Friends, (Bishop Hurd,) 1808, pp. 272-273.

But it is quite time that we had turned our attention to the opinions of critics of a more modern period:

"The Preface to his Shakspeare, certainly, is far superior to his other introductory discourses, both fuller of matter and more elaborate. His remarks on the great dramatist are, generally speaking, sound and judicious; many of them may even, on a subject sufficiently hackneyed, be deemed original. The boldness with which his many critical objections were offered deserves not the less praise that Shakspeare's numberless and gross faults are easy to discern; because, in presence of the multitude, we might say even of the English nation at large, their obvious nature and considerable magnitude has never made them very safe to dwell upon. . . . The Preface is more to be commended than the work itself. As a commentator, he is certainly far from successful."—LORD BROUGHAM: Lives of Men of Letters, &c.

"Johnson compares him who should endeavour to recommend this poet by passages unconnectedly torn from his works, to the pedant in Hierocles who exhibited a brick as a sample of his house. And yet how little, and how very unsatisfactorily, does he himself speak of the pieces considered as a whole! Let any man, for instance, bring together the short characters which he gives at the close of each play, and see if the aggregate will amount to that sum of admiration which he himself, at his outset, has stated as the correct standard for the appreciation of the poet."—A. H. Schlegel's Lect. on Dramat. Art. and Lit., Black's Trans., Lon., 1846, 360. See also pp. 365, 369.

"Johnson's Preface is doubtless a great and masterly performance, evincing a mind of large general powers, and is executed throughout with uncommon dignity and effect. There are those who elevate it to the skies; but there is also a considerable number of well-read Shakspearians who are far from bowing with unqualified submission to the critical canons which it contains. . . . Johnson's critical summary of the preponderating merits and demerits of each play should be always a concomitant of every edition of Shakspeare."—Dobbin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 805.

"Johnson explained much well, but there is something magisterial in the manner wherein he dismisses each play like a boy's exercise, that irritates the reader. His criticism is frequently judicious, but betrays no ardent admiration for Shakspeare."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 34.

No portion of Johnson's writings has been so warmly praised, and so severely censured, as the Lives of the English Poets. Sir Egerton Brydges, in the Preface to his edit. of Phillips's Theatrum Poetarum Anglicanorum, complains lamentably of the false taste of the age which considered the poetical school of Pope the highest in the Republic of Letters:

"Dr. Johnson," he continues, "whose Lives of the Poets are extremely valuable, from the knowledge of life they display, from their morality, and from that acuteness of investigation and vigor of expression which his astonishing powers of intellect threw on every subject in which he engaged, has yet contributed to authorize this degraded taste. For candor ought to confess that a feeling for the higher kinds of poetry was not among his excellencies. Is it possible for those to doubt it who recollect the opinion he has expressed of Milton's Lycidas, and of the Odes of Gray? Who remember that he has scarce mentioned the Fables of Dryden, and that he has hardly conferred even a cold extorted praise on the Ode to the Passions, by Collins? Who must admit, that, among the modern poets who have pretensions to excellence in that art, there are but two, except his favorite Pope, to whose merits he has done any tolerable justice? These are Thomson and Young; of whom he has spoken, of one with noble and discriminative praise; and the poetical character of the other he has celebrated with a warm and happy splendor of eloquence, which is perhaps the finest passage in all the efforts of his pen."—xli., et infra, and lvii.

Read another article on Johnson, by Sir S. E. Brydges, in his Imaginative Biography, vol. ii. 251.

"Wherever understanding alone is sufficient for poetical criticism, the decisions of Johnson are generally right. But the beauties of poetry must be felt before their causes are investigated. There is a poetical sensibility, which in the progress of the mind becomes as distinct a power as a musical ear or a picturesque eye. Without a considerable degree of this sensibility, it is as vain for a man of the greatest understanding to speak of the higher beauties of poetry, as it is for a blind man to speak of colours. To adopt the warmest sentiments of poetry, to realize its boldest imagery, to yield to every impulse of enthusiasm, to submit to the illusions of fancy, to retire with the poet into his ideal worlds, were dispositions wholly foreign from the worldly sagacity and stern shrewdness of Johnson. As in his judgment of life and character, so in his criticism on poetry, he was a sort of Free-thinker. He suspected the refined of affectation, he rejected the enthusiastic as absurd, and he took it for granted that the mysterious was unintelligible. He came into the world when the school of Dryden and Pope gave the law to English poetry. In that school he had himself learned to be a lofty and vigorous declaimer in harmonious verse; beyond that school his unforced admiration perhaps scarcely soared; and his highest effort of criticism was accordingly the noble panegyric on Dryden. His criticism owed its popularity as much to its defects as to its excellencies. It was on a level with the majority of readers,—persons of good sense and information, but of no exquisite sensibility,—and to their minds it derived a false appearance of solidity from the very narrowness which excluded those grander efforts of imagination to which Aristotle and Bacon confined the name of poetry."—SIR JAMES MACINTOSH: Memoirs of his Life and Writings, Lon., 1825, 2 vols. 8vo.

See also his Review of Rogers's Poems, in his Works, 1854, vol. ii. 505-506.

"Johnson seems to have conceived, like Milton, a theory that good writing, at least in verse, is never either to follow the change of fashion, or to sink into familiar phrase, and that any deviation from this rigour should be branded as low and colloquial."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 486.

"Johnson strips many a leaf from every laurel; still, Johnson's is the finest critical work extant, and can never be read without instruction and delight. . . . The opinions of that truly great man, whom it is also the present fashion to decry, will ever be received by me with that deference which time will restore to him from all."—LORD BYRON.

"One of his most pleasing as well as most popular works, The Lives of the British Poets, which he executed with a degree of critical force and talent which has seldom been concentrated."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Life of Samuel Johnson.

Sir Archibald Alison remarks that few now read

"The Lives of the Poets, interesting as they are, and admirable as are the criticisms on our greatest authors which they contain."—Essays, 1850, iii. 392.

"The merit of this work is very great, whether we regard the matter or the style; for the composition is far more easy and natural, far less pompous and stately, and the diction both more picturesque and more simple, than in any other of his writings. The measured period, the balance of sentences, and the diffusiveness arising from this desire of symmetry, is still in a good degree retained; but it is far less constant, and therefore falls less on the appetite, than in any of his former works."—LORD BROUGHAM: Lives of Men of Letters, &c.

"Johnson decided literary questions like a lawyer, not like a legislator. He never examined foundations where a point was already ruled. His whole code of criticism rested on pure assumption, for which he sometimes quoted a precedent or an authority, but rarely troubled himself to give a reason drawn from the nature of things. He took it for granted that the kind of poetry which flourished in his own time, which he had been accustomed to hear praised from his childhood, and which he had himself written with success, was the best kind of poetry. . . . The judgments which Johnson passed on books were in his own time regarded with superstitious veneration, and in our time are generally treated with indiscriminate contempt."—T. B. MACAULAY: Crit. and Hist. Essays, Lon., 1854, i. 390, 392; from the Edin. Rev., Sept. 1831.

The incorrectness of this assertion must be obvious to the reader who has perused the opinions just quoted; and it is easy for us to add to the evidence already presented of Mr. Macaulay's very grave error. As regards ourselves, we profess to fairly present each, but to embrace neither, side of these literary controversies.

The opinion of Christopher North will doubtless have great weight with many readers:

"NORTH: 'Johnson's mind was a furnace; it reduced every thing to its elements. We have no truly great critical intellect since his time!'

"BULLER: 'What would he have thought of our modern reviewers?'

"NORTH: 'Why, not one of the tribe would have dared to cry new, had he been alive. The terror of him would have kept them as mum as mice when there's a cat in the room. If he had detected such a thing as Jeffrey astir, he would have cracked every bone in his body with one worry!'

"BULLER: 'I can believe it all. Even Gifford would have been annihilated!'

"NORTH: 'Like an ill-natured pug-dog flung into a lion's cage.'"

—Notes Ambrosianæ, April, 1822.

"He had his prejudices, and his partialities, and his bigotries, and his blindnesses, but on the same fruit-tree you see shrivelled pears or apples on the same branch with jargonelles or golden pippins worthy of Paradise. . . . Show me the critique that beats his on Pope and on Dryden,—nay, even on Milton; and hang me if you may not read his Essay on Shakspeare even after having read Charles Lamb or heard Coleridge, with increased admiration of the powers of all three, and of their insight through different avenues, and, as it might seem, almost with different bodily and mental organs, into Shakspeare's 'old exhausted' and his 'new imagined worlds? He was a critic and a moralist who would have been wholly wise had he not been partly constitutionally insane."—CHRISTOPHER NORTH: Noctes Ambrosianae, April, 1829.

"There is an amiable desire shown to give merit its reward; nor do the author's prejudices interfere with this just course, except in a very few instances of political feelings warping his judgment, or indignation at impiety blinding him to literary excellence, or of admiration for religious purity giving slender merits an exaggerated value in his eyes. The justness of his taste may be in all other cases admitted; great critical acuteness is everywhere exercised; extensive reading of ancient and modern poetry is shown; and occasionally philosophical subjects are handled with considerable happiness both of thought and of illustration."—LORD BROUGHTON: Lives of Men of Letters, &c.

"Johnson has himself done great good by exposing great faults in great authors. His criticism on Milton's highest work is the most valuable of all his writings. He seldom is erroneous in his censures, but he never is sufficiently excited to admiration of what is purest and highest in poetry."—W. SAVAGE LINDOR.

In another part of his writings, Lauder concurs in a censure frequently urged against Johnson of injustice to Milton on account of party prejudices. This subject must be glanced at before we leave our theme.

"Dr. Johnson's Lives of the Poets are necessarily a prominent ornament of every library, as they have been the common theme of admiration of all countries. The style and the reflections are the chief charm of this popular work. Many of the facts must be cautiously admitted. Not that Johnson designedly falsified; but he always wanted time, diligence, and patience in the collection of his materials; and he rejoiced to find the fact as he wished to find it, without sufficiently weighing it in the balance of impartiality. He hugged every thing which he thought might throw a shade on a republican, a whig, or a dissenter, and spared no pains in executing such a picture in his most powerful and overwhelming colours."—Dublin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 521, n.

We shall now introduce some brief extracts from the graceful pen of the distinguished author of the History of Ferdinand and Isabella:

"Johnson's work, as every one knows, is conducted on the most capricious and irregular plan. . . . Besides these defects of plan, the critic was certainly deficient in sensibility to the more delicate, the minor beauties of poetic sentiment. He analyzes verse in the cold-blooded spirit of a chemist, until all the aroma which constituted its principal charm escapes in the decomposition. By this kind of process, some of the finest fancies of the Muse, the lofty dithyrambs of Gray, the ethereal effusions of Collins, and of Milton too, are rendered sufficiently vapid."

This accomplished critic proceeds to point out what he esteems to be defects in the Doctor's taste in composition, and the graver objections to his work arising from the effects of religious and political prejudices, and then continues:

"With all this, there is no one of the works of this great and good man in which he has displayed more of the strength of his mighty intellect, shown a more pure and masculine morality, more sound principles of criticism in the abstract, and more acute delineation of character, and more gorgeous splendour of diction."

Johnson's Life of Milton, however, does not escape Mr. Prescott's severe animadversions:

"A production more discreditable to the author is not to be found in the whole of his voluminous works; equally discreditable, whether regarded in an historical light or as a sample of literary criticism. . . . His life of Milton is a humiliating testimony of the power of political and religious prejudices to warp a great and good mind from the standard of truth, in the estimation not merely of contemporary excellence, but of the great of other years, over whose frailties Time might be supposed to have drawn his friendly mantle."—Prescott's Miscellanies, ed. 1855, 247, 248, 277, 278, and in North Amer. Review for October, 1839.

John Foster warms with equal indignation at the same theme:

"There are parts of the Lives of the Poets which every lover of literary or moral justice would be glad to see stamped with an indelible brand of reprobation, with a disgrace so signal and perspicuous as to be a perpetual warning against the perversion of criticism and private history by political and religious bigotry and personal spleen."—Criticism on the English Poets: Foster's Essays, Lon., 1856, i. 145, and in Elec. Rev., March, 1808.

Foster then proceeds to specify the instunes of Milton and Gray: he is eloquent, and we would fain quote more of his flowing rhetoric; but this must not be.

Even Dr. Drake, one of Johnson's warmest admirers, does not venture to enter a plea of "Not Guilty" on Johnson's behalf:

"No man can entertain a higher idea of Johnson's intellectual powers, as a lexicographer, a teacher, and a moralist, than myself; but poetical criticism was not his province; and though in point of style his Lives be superior, perhaps, to any of his preceding compositions, they are infinitely more disgraced by the inexorable partialities of the man."—Drake's Literary Hours, vol. i. 22.

Cumberland, Johnson's old friend, writing long after the Doctor's death, is disposed to treat the indignant outcry elicited by these strictures of the latter with very little respect:

"He was an acute and able critic: the enthusiastic admirers of Milton and the friends of Gray will have something to complain of, but criticism is a task which no man executes to all men's satisfaction. . . . A work of merit, which abounds in beauties far more prominent than its defects, and much more pleasing to contemplate."

—Cumberland's Memoirs: Samuel Johnson.

Dr. Channing is more lenient to Johnson than many of Milton's upholders are disposed to be:

"We could find no pleasure in sacrificing one great man to the manes of another. . . . He did not and he could not appreciate Milton. We doubt whether two other minds, having so little in common as those of which we are speaking, can be found in the higher walks of literature. Johnson was great in his own sphere, but that sphere was comparatively of the earth; while Milton's was only inferior to that of angels. It was customary, in the day of Johnson's glory, to call him a giant, to class him with a mighty but still an earth-born race. Milton we should rank among seraphs."

Channing proceeds in this truly-eloquent strain for some lines, and then applies the contrast to the reader's own judgment, by demanding,

"How could Johnson be just to Milton?"—Remarks on the Character and Writings of John Milton.

Johnson here escapes far more easily than he generally does when arraigned for this oft-urged offence, and this mitigation of punishment will be demurred at by many of the champions of the immortal Milton. But we have a higher defence to plead, (or rather to adduce, for we plead nothing on either side);—nothing less than an entire acquittal of the alleged culprit:

"That he had strong prepossessions against Milton's political opinions cannot be doubted; but it is extremely incorrect to affirm, as has been too generally affirmed, that this feeling made him unfair to that great poet's merits. No one can read his criticism on Paradise Lost, without perceiving that he places it next to the Iliad, and in some respects on an equal, if not a higher, level. The praise of it in The Rambler is equally ample. His objections are not at all groundless; and, although to the lesser poets he may not be equally just, it is certain that, except to the Lycidas, he shows no very marked unfairness, while, in observing the faults of the others, he largely commemorates their beauties."—LORD BROUGHTON: Lives of Men of Letters, &c.

As regards the literary merits of Johnson's review of PARADISE LOST, perhaps many scholars, of all classes of opinions, will acknowledge a participation, to some extent, in the enthusiasm which animates the glowing eulogy of Dublin:

"Who that reads Johnson's criticisms on certain portions of the Paradise Lost is not convinced that he is reading one of the most masterly performances of the human intellect? exhibiting an extent and power of conception—a vigour and felicity of diction—such as one knows not where to find equalled in any modern production."—Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 521.

Before leaving this part of our subject we must not omit to notice an edit. recently issued (Lon., 1851, 3 vols. 8vo) of Johnson's Lives of the British Poets, with Notes, corrective and explanatory, by Peter Cunningham. This the collector of a "Johnsonian Library" must immediately procure. A new impression of Hazlitt's ed. of the Lives of the Poets was also pub., Lon., 1851, 4 vols. 8vo. We may add that he will find a valuable guide to Johnsoniana in the list furnished by Lowndes (containing about sixty books) in the Bibliographer's Manual, 1032-1033. See also Index to Blackw. Mag., vols. i.-1.

5. DR. JOHNSON'S STYLE OF COMPOSITION.

In this department of our subject also we shall have something to produce on both sides of the question:

"To Johnson may be attributed the establishment of our present refinement, and it is with truth he observes of his Rambler, 'That he had laboured to refine our language to grammatical purity, and to clear it from colloquial barbarisms, licentious idioms and irregular combinations, and that he has added to the elegance of its construction and to the harmony of its cadences.'"—Dixwell's Miscell. of Lit.: Style, ed. Lon., 1840, 7.

"Junius and Johnson were the first who again familiarized us with more glowing and sonorous diction, and made us feel the tameness and poorness of the serious style of Addison and Swift."—LORD JEFFREY: Contrib. to the Edin. Rev., Lon., 1803, 77, and in Edin. Rev., Sept. 1816.

We know not where we can better quote Lord Jeffrey's description of Johnson as "that great master of reason," (Edin. Rev., xv. 175.) and Sir Archibald Alison's assertion (Hist. of Europe, 1789-1815, chap. lx.) that Dr. Johnson was "the strongest intellect and the most profound observer of the eighteenth century."

"The distinguishing excellence of Johnson's manner, both in speaking and writing, consists in the apt and lively illustrations by example, with which, in his vigorous sallies, he enforces his just and acute remarks on human life and manners, in all their modes and representations; the character and charm of his style, in a happy choice of dignified and appropriate expressions, and that masterly involution of phrase by which he contrives to bolt the prominent idea strongly on the mind."—Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., Ipswich, 1810, 9-10.

"At length rose the Colossus of English Philology, SAMUEL JOHNSON, having secretly and unerringly formed his style on the basis of that of Sir Thomas Browne,—a name in every respect to be held in grateful remembrance. But Johnson, as a philologist, is almost an original; and doubtless among the very foremost in the ranks of the literature of his country. And yet, I knew not how it is, but as years creep on we do not read his pages with that devoted enthusiasm which we did in our college days; for where is the man who, having turned his thirtieth year, perceives either Rabelais or the Rambler?"—Dublin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 417-418

"His writings will live forever, still more and more studied and admired while Britons shall continue to be characterized by a love of elegance and sublimity, of good sense and virtue."—BISHOP HANMER.

"Johnson's first style was naturally energetic; his middle style was turgid to a fault; his latter style was softened down and harmonized into periods more tuneful and more intelligible."—Cambertland's Memoirs.

"A love of hard and learned words prevailed throughout; and a fondness for balanced periods was its special characteristic. But there was often great felicity in the expression, occasionally a pleasing cadence in the rhythm, generally an epigrammatic turn in the language, as well as in the idea. Even where the workmanship seemed most to surpass the material, and the word-craft to be exercised needlessly and the diction to run to waste, there was never any feebleness to complain of, and always something of skill and effect to admire. The charm of nature was ever wanting, but the presence of great art was undeniable. Nothing was seen of the careless aspect which the highest of artists ever give their masterpieces,—the produce of elaborate but concealed pains; yet the strong hand of an able workman was always marked; and it was observed, too, that he had disdained to hide from us the far less labour which he had much more easily bestowed. There is no denying that some of Johnson's works, from the meagreness of the material and the regularity of the monotonous style, are exceedingly little adapted to reading. They are flimsy, and they are dull; they are pompous, and though full of undeniable—indeed, self-evident—truths, they are somewhat empty; they are, moreover, wrapped up in a style so disproportioned in its importance, that the perusal becomes very tiresome, and is soon given up. This character belongs more especially to the Rambler, the object of such unmeasured praises among his followers, and from which he derived the title of the Great Moralist."—LORD BROUGHAM: Lives of Men of Letters, &c.

The reader will find a continuation of his lordship's remarks in our notice of the Rambler in a preceding page. The noble critic places the Life of Cowley at "the head of all" the author's writings, and (as we have already intimated) considers the review of Soame Jenyns's Inquiry into the Origin of Evil "one of his happiest performances."

"The third period [in the progress of English style] may be called the Rhetorical, and is distinguished by the prevalence of a school of writers of which Johnson was the founder. The fundamental character of this style is that it employs undisguised art where classical writers appear only to obey the impulse of a cultivated and adorned nature. . . .

"As the mind of Johnson was robust, but neither nimble nor graceful, so his style, though sometimes significant, nervous, and even majestic, was void of all grace and ease; and, being the most unlike of all styles to the natural effusion of a cultivated mind, had the least pretensions to the praise of eloquence. During the period, now near a close, in which he was a favourite model, a stiff symmetry and tedious monotony succeeded to that various music with which the taste of Addison diversified his periods, and to that natural imagery which his beautiful genius seemed, with graceful negligence, to scatter over his composition."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Memoirs of his Life, 1835, 2 vols. 8vo.

"What most distinguishes Dr. Johnson from other writers is the pomp and uniformity of his style. All his periods are cast in the same mould, are of the same size and shape, and, consequently, have little fitness to the variety of things he professes to treat of. His subjects are familiar, but the author is always upon stilts. He has neither ease nor simplicity, and his efforts at playfulness in part remind one of the lines in Milton:

"The elephant

Hazlitt on the Periodical Essayist.

"All his books are written in a learned language; in a language which nobody hears from his mother or his nurse; in a language in which nobody ever quarrels, or drives bargains, or makes love; in a language in which nobody ever thinks. . . . Mannerism is pardonable, and is sometimes even agreeable, when the manner, though vicious, is natural. Few readers, for example, would be willing to part with the mannerism of Milton or Burke. But a mannerism which does not sit easy on the mannerist—which has been adopted on principle, and which can be sustained only by constant effort—is always offensive. And such is the mannerism of Johnson."—T. B. MACAULAY: Civil and Hist. Essays, Lon., 1854, i. 398-399; and in Edin. Rev., Sept. 1831.

"The Doctor's taste in composition," remarks Mr. Prescott, in his notice of Johnson's Lives of the Poets just quoted from, "to judge from his own style, was not of the highest order. It was a style, indeed, of extraordinary power, suited to the expression of his original thinking, bold, vigorous, and glowing with all the lustre of polished antithesis. But the brilliancy is cold, and the ornaments are much too florid and overcharged for a graceful effect."—Essays, 1855, 248.

"No man," remarks one of the greatest masters of the English tongue, "contemplates with greater tenderness than we do the frailties of Dr. Johnson; none respects more the sound parts of his moral system, or admires more the vigor of the elephantine step with which he sometimes tramples down insolent error and presumptuous sophistry. But let no young man who wishes to learn to write well study his style."—EDWARD EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., xli. 3-4.

It was formerly greatly the fashion to copy, or to endeavour to copy, the "Johnsonian style." Mr. Macaulay declared (review of Croker's Boswell, Edin. Rev., Sept. 1831) that Johnson's "peculiarities have been imitated by his admirers, and parodied by his assailants, till the public has become sick of the subject."

A critic in the same periodical (for Oct. 1850) remarks that "It is not easy for those who have not inspected contemporaneous literature,—especially its second-rate productions,—to conceive to what an extent Johnson's style was imitated by his admirers."—Vol. xcii. 333.

Sir James Mackintosh observes, as late as 1831, that "From the corruptions introduced by Dr. Johnson, English style was only then recovering."

Disraeli says:

"Such was the influence of the elaborate novelty of Johnson, that every writer in every class servilely copied the Latinized style, ludicrously mimicking the contortions and reechoing the sonorous nothings, of our great lexicographer. The novelist of domestic life, or the agriculturist in a treatise on turnips, alike aimed at the polysyllabic force and the cadenced period. Such was the condition of English style for more than twenty years."—Miscell. of Lit.: Style, ed. Lon., 1840, 8.

"At present," says Hazlitt, in his Sixth Lecture on the English Poets, delivered at the Surrey Institution in 1818, "we cannot see a lottery-puff or a quack advertisement pasted against a wall, that is not perfectly Johnsonian in style."

"His brilliant style," says Mr. Prescott, "has been the imitation of every schoolboy, and of some children of larger growth, since the days of the Rambler. But the nearer they come to it the worse. The beautiful is turned into the fantastic, and the sublime into the ridiculous."—Miscellanies, 1855, 271-272, and in N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1839.

Dr. Southey regarded these imitators with as little complacency. "Look," he exclaims, in a letter to Henry Taylor, Dec. 31, 1825, "at the imitations of Gibbon and Johnson!"

The too frequent use of words derived from the Latin and Greek is often alleged against Johnson's compositions, and, we think, with reason. But the objector often carries his charge too far. The use of such derivatives in moderation and with propriety is to be encouraged rather than censured. Those who display their ignorance of the language by accusing Johnson of word-making will have to revive their knowledge of early English vocabularies. Let those who are so fond of Anglo-Saxon "undefiled" amuse themselves occasionally with a page or two of Aldhelm, Ceolfrid of Wearmouth, or Felix of Croylond. Let them read to their families, for weekday entertainment, King Alfred's Orosius, and wind up the devotions of the Sabbath with the royal translator's Psalms of David, or the good Alfric's Paschal Homily.

6. DR. JOHNSON'S APPEARANCE, MANNERS, AND CONVERSATION.

To James Boswell, the famous biographer of Johnson, our acknowledgments have already been made in the article devoted to the consideration of his literary character. The reader will there find many tributes to the merits of a work which can never lose its popularity, and will always keep fresh in the minds of men the characters of the author and his illustrious subject. Boswell's account of his first interview with the formidable lexicographer is too amusing to be omitted. It occurred in the back-parlour of Tom Davies, the actor and bookseller, (celebrated for his learning and his handsome wife,) whom we have already registered on the 482d page of this Dictionary.

Mr. Davies recollected several of Johnson's remarkable sayings, and was one of the best of the many imitators of his voice and manner while relating them. He increased my impatience more and more to see the extraordinary man whose works I highly valued, and whose conversation was reported to be so peculiarly excellent. "At last, on Monday, the 16th of May, [1773,] when I was sitting in Mr. Davies's back-parlour, after having drunk tea with him and Mrs. Davies, Johnson unexpectedly came into the shop; and Mr. Davies having perceived him through the glass door in the room in which we were sitting advancing towards us, he announced his awful approach to me, somewhat in the manner of an actor in the part of Horatio, when he addresses Hamlet on the appearance of his father's ghost: 'Look, my lord, it comes!' I found that I had a very perfect idea of Johnson's figure, from the portrait painted of him by Sir Joshua Reynolds after he had published his Dictionary, in the attitude of sitting in his easy-chair in deep meditation; which was the first picture his friend did for him, which Sir Joshua very kindly presented to me, and from which an engraving has been made for this work. Mr. Davies mentioned my name, and respectfully introduced me to him. I was much agitated, and, recollecting his prejudice against the Scotch, of which I had heard much, I said to Davies, 'Don't tell where I came from.' 'From Scotland,' cried Davies, roughly. 'Mr. Johnson,' said I, 'I do indeed come from Scotland, but I cannot help it.' I am willing to flatter myself that I meant this as light pleasantry to soothe and conciliate him, and not as a humiliating abasement at the expense of my country. But, however that might be, this speech was somewhat unlucky; for, with that quickness of wit for which he was so remarkable, he seized the expression 'come from Scotland,' which I used in the sense of being of that country, and, as if I had said that I had come away from it or left it, retorted, 'That, sir, I find is what a very great many of your countrymen cannot help.' This stroke stunned me a good deal; and, when we had sat down, I felt myself not a little embarrassed, and apprehensive of what might come next. He then addressed himself to Davies: 'What do you think of Garrick? He has refused me an order for the play for Miss Williams, because he knows the house will be full, and that an order will be worth three shillings.' Eager to take any opening to get into conversation with him, I ventured to say, 'O sir, I cannot think Mr. Garrick would grudge such a trifle to you.' 'Sir,' said he, with a stern look, 'I have known David Garrick longer than you have done; and I know no right you have to talk to me on the subject.' Perhaps I deserved this check; for it was rather presumptuous in me, an entire stranger, to express any doubt of the justice of his animadversion upon his old acquaintance and pupil. I now felt myself much mortified, and began to think that the hope I had long indulged of obtaining his acquaintance was blasted. And, in truth, had not my ardour been uncommonly strong and my resolution uncommonly persevering, so rough a reception might have deterred me forever from making any further attempts. Fortunately, however, I remained upon the field, not wholly discomfited, and was soon rewarded by hearing some of his conversation, of which I preserved the following short minute, without marking the questions and observations by which it was produced."—Boswell's Life of Johnson, Croker's ed., Lon., 1848, r. 8vo, 133-134. See the note to p. 133 for a vindication of Garrick, or rather, for evidence of his liberality.

The acquaintance thus commenced was sedulously cultivated by Boswell; and until his great friend's demise, more than twenty years after this first interview.

"The worship of Johnson was his grand, ideal, voluntary business. Does not the frothy hearted yet enthusiastic man, donning his advocate's wig, regularly take post, and hurry up to London, for the sake of his sage chiefly, as to a Feast of Tabernacles, the Sabbath of his whole year?"—Carlyle's Review of Boswell's Johnson.

How faithfully he did service in embalming the droppings of wisdom which fell from those revered lips, we have many evidences, and none more amusing than that related by Miss Burney:

"When in that presence," says the fair narrator, "he was unobtrusive, if not contemptuous, of every one else. In truth, when he met with Dr. Johnson, he commonly forbore even answering any thing that was said, or attending to any thing that went forward, lest he should miss the smallest sound from that voice to which he paid such exclusive though merited homage. But the moment that voice burst forth, the effect which it excited on Mr. Boswell amounted almost to pain. His eyes goggled with eagerness, he bent his ear almost on the shoulder of the doctor, and his mouth dropped open to catch every syllable that might be uttered; nay, he seemed not only to dread losing a word, but to be anxious not to miss a breathing; as if hoping from it latently, or mystically, some information?"

The great man was not so much conciliated by this extraordinary deference as to always endure Boswell's erisidity tamely. On one occasion, when Boswell had been for some time persisting in questioning him with, "What did you do, sir?" "What did you say, sir?" &c., Johnson at last lost all patience, and exclaimed, "I will not be put to the question, sir! Do you not consider, sir, that these are not the manners of a gentleman? I will not be baited with what and why. What is this? What is that? Why is a cow's tail long? Why is a fox's tail bushy?" "Why, sir," pleaded Boswell, "you are so good that I venture to trouble you." "Sir," rejoined Johnson, "my being so good is no reason why you should be so ill."

Mr. Macaulay's portrait of Boswell is not the most flattering in the world:

"He was, if we are to give any credit to his own account or to the united testimony of all who knew him, a man of the meanest and feeblest intellect. Johnson described him as a fellow who had missed his only chance of immortality by not having been alive when the Dunciad was written. Benevolent used his name as a proverbial expression for a bore. He was the laughing-stock of the whole of that brilliant society which has owed to him the greater part of its fame. . . . Every thing which another would have hidden, every thing the publication of which would have made another man hang himself, was matter of gay and clamorous exultation to his weak and diseased mind. What silly things he said, what bitter retorts he provoked, how at one place he was troubled with evil presentiments which came to nothing, how at another place, on waking from a drunken doze, he read the Prayer-Book and took a hair of the dog that had bitten him, how he went to see men hanged and came away maudlin, how he added five hundred pounds to the fortune of one of his babies because he was not scared at Johnson's ugly face. . . . how his father, and the very wife of his bosom, laughed and fretted at his fooleries,—all these things he proclaimed to all the world, as if they had been subjects for pride and ostentatious rejoicing. All the caprices of his temper, all the illusions of his vanity, all his hypochondriac whimsies, all his castles in the air, he displayed with a cool self-complacency, a perfect unconsciousness that he was making a fool of himself to which it is impossible to find a parallel in the whole history of mankind. He has used many people ill; but assuredly he has used nobody so ill as himself. . . . Of all the talents which ordinarily raise men to eminence as writers, Boswell had absolutely none. There is not in all his books a single remark of his own on literature, politics, religion, or society, which is not either commonplace or absurd. His dissertations on hereditary gentility, on the slave-trade, and on the entailing of landed estates, may serve as examples. To say that these passages are sophistical would be to pay them an extravagant compliment. They have no pretence to argument or even to meaning. He has reported innumerable observations made by himself in the course of conversation. Of these observations we do not remember one which is above the intellectual capacity of a boy of fifteen. He has printed many of his own letters, and in these letters he is always ranting or twaddling."—Essays, 1854, i. 370, 371, 372, 373.

This is an admirably-drawn portrait, and, unfortunately for the subject, those who have been inclined to think it too highly coloured will perhaps be less disposed to question the faithfulness of the artist after reading some of Boswell's Letters to the Rev. W. J. Temple, just brought to light in a most remarkable manner, (if we are to believe the story), and pub. in 1857. See reviews of these Letters in Edin. Rev., April, 1857; Lon. Gent. Mag., Feb., 1857; Lon. Athenæum, Dec. 27, 1856; the Spectator, Times, &c. But really we think Mr. Macaulay is here guilty of something which borders on caricature; Boswell was certainly not quite such a born and perennial fool as his critic makes him appear. Schlosser is disposed to ridicule the avidity with which the English devour

"Those oracular sayings which Boswell has collected as if they were pearls and diamonds. Boswell has by far outstripped the collectors of all the trifles, personal anecdotes, and miserable nothings which refer to Güthe, and the English have, as thankfully and with as much curiosity, swallowed every trivium about this much-admired and worshipped critic and artist in taste and literature, as the Germans ever trifling anecdote about their greatest poet and prose-writer."—Schlosser's Hist. of the Eighteenth Cent., de, Davison's Trans., Lon., 1844, vol. ii. 68.

But who can marvel that all who love the English tongue and English Republic of Letters are in love with this inimitable biography, when it must be admitted that—to quote the language of one of the greatest of modern writers—

"Considering the eminent persons to whom Boswell's Life of Johnson relates, the quantity of miscellaneous information and entertaining gossip which it brings together, it may be termed, without exception, the best parlour-table book that ever was written."—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

But we are forgetting to give some description of the APPEARANCE of the great man, as promised in our last heading. Miss Burney's pencil shall be again called to our aid:

"He is, indeed, very ill-favoured! Yet he has naturally a noble figure—all stout, grand, and authoritative; but bestrope horribly; his back is quite round; his mouth is continually opening and shutting, as if he were chewing something; he has a singular method of twirling his fingers and wisting his hands; his vast body is in constant agitation, see-sawing one way and forwards; his feet are never a moment quiet, and his whole great person looked often as if it were going to roll itself quite voluntarily, from his chair to the floor."

Perhaps no one has better described the dress of this strange-looking giant than the famous satirical poet of the day:

"Methinks I view his full, plain snit of brown,
The large grey bushy wig, that grazed his crown;
Black worsted stockings, little silver buckles,
And shirt, that had no ruffles for his knuckles,
I mark the brown greatcoat of cloth he wore,
That two huge Patagonian pockets bore,
Which Patagonians (wondrous to unfold)
Would fairly both his Dictionaries hold."—PETER PINDAR.

We shall have more to quote respecting Johnson's appearance before we have finished this article. Let us now turn to his CONVERSATION, in the descriptions of which his MANNERS will, of course, come more or less under notice! In our introductory quotation, indeed, (from Miss Burney,) Johnson's manners, or want of manners, occupy a prominent place.

Boswell's Life of Johnson has given a wrong impression of him in some respects. When we see four large volumes written upon a man's conversation, through a period of forty years, and his remarks alone set down, of all those made at the time, we naturally take the idea that Johnson was the central point of society for all that period. The truth is, he never was in good society,—at least in those circles where men of letters mix with the fashionable world. His brutal, intolerant manners excluded him from it, of course. He met good society, to be sure, at the Literary Club, and at Sir Joshua Reynolds's. Gibbon was asked why he did not talk more in the presence of Dr. Johnson. 'Sir,' replied the historian, taking a pinch of snuff, 'I have no pretensions to the ability of contending with Dr. Johnson in brutality and insolence.'"—Sir James Mackintosh's Conversations with Alexander H. Everett: N. Amer. Rev., XXXV, 445-446, n.

Yet, notwithstanding the apparent severity of these strictures, no one had a higher opinion of Johnson's conversational abilities and moral worth than Sir James entertained, as we shall show on a future page.

Johnson himself had a satisfactory way of accounting for the absence of invitations to the tables of the great. "Lords and ladies," he remarked, "don't like to have their mouths stopped." But the truth is, as Lord Brougham very correctly remarks,

"That in those days no one was, generally speaking, admitted into patrician society merely for the intrinsic merits of his writings or his talk, without leaving some access to it through his rank or his political or professional eminence. . . . It is equally erroneous to suppose that Johnson's rough exterior, or his uncouth and even unpleasant habits, could have prevented his fame and his conversation from being sought after to adorn aristocratic parties in later times. All these petty obstacles would have been easily got over by the vanity of having such a person to show, and, indeed, by the real interest which the display of his colloquial powers would have possessed among a more refined and better-educated generation."—Lives of Men of Letters, &c.

Horace Walpole was one of the principal leaders of fashion during the whole of Johnson's literary reign; and it is certain that he would never have subjected his aristocratic domains to the Gothic invasion of the lexicographer. The portrait which he has left us of Johnson is as little complimentary as that drawn by Sir James Mackintosh:

"With a lumber of learning and some strong parts," says Horace, "Johnson was an odious and mean character. By principle a Jacobite, arrogant, self-sufficient, and overbearing by nature, ungrateful through pride, and of feminine bigotry, he had prostituted his pen to party, even in a dictionary, and had afterwards, for a pension, contradicted his own definitions. His manners were sordid, supercilious, and brutal; his style ridiculously bombastic and vicious; and, in one word, with all the pedantry, he had all the gigantic littleness of a country schoolmaster."—Memoirs of the Reign of George III., vol. ii. 323.

But much of the effect of the dark colours of his picture is lost upon the reader when he remembers Johnson's pertinacious opposition to Sir Robert Walpole's administration; and especially his admission to Sir George Staunton, — which Horace had probably heard, — that, when he made parliamentary speeches for the Gentleman's Magazine, he "always took care to put Sir Robert Walpole in the wrong, and to say every thing he could against the electorate of Hanover." Johnson admitted very frankly that he did not forget his politics when composing these celebrated parliamentary speeches. When commended, long afterwards, for having "dealt out reason and eloquence with an equal hand to both parties," "That is not quite true," said Johnson: "I saved appearances tolerably well; but I took care that the Whig dogs should not have the best of it." With reference to Walpole's sketch of Johnson, just quoted, we may add that the celebrated Heroic Epistle in which Johnson is satirized was ascribed to Walpole, and also to Mason, or to both combined. Lord Chesterfield's description of Johnson, in a letter to his lordship's son, will at once recur to many of our readers. Boswell, and other contemporaneous chroniclers, certainly record many instances of colloquial brusquerie — to use the mildest term — on the part of the lexicographer, which could not have been altogether grateful to the feelings of even the humblest of the great man's admirers. Of these we had intended to quote some specimens, but our limited space forbids. One amusing incident, however, must not be omitted. In our life of Oliver Goldsmith we quoted George Colman's glowing tribute to the kindness of heart and manner which so pre-eminently distinguished that wayward son of genius. The same excellent story-teller — certainly one of the best of modern days — has left us the following far less flattering picture of Goldsmith's "guide, philosopher, and friend:"

"My boyish mind had anticipated an awful impression when I was first brought unwittingly into the presence of the stupendous Johnson. I knew not then that he had 'a love for little children,' calling them 'pretty dears and giving them sweetmeats,' as Boswell hath since, in the simplicity of his heart, narrated. It was my hapless lot, however, to be excluded from the objects of this propension. Perhaps, at my age, of about fourteen, I might have been too old, or too ugly; but the idea of Johnson's carrying bombons to give to children of any age is much like supposing that a Greenland bear has a pocket stuffed with tartlets for travellers.

"On the day of my introduction he was asked to dinner at my father's house, in Soho-square, and the crude savage came a full hour before his time. I happened to be with my father, who was beginning his toilette, when it was announced to him that the Doctor had arrived. My sire, being one of the tributary princes who did homage to this monarch, was somewhat hurried, and, having dressed himself hastily, took me with him into the drawing-room.

"On our entrance we found Johnson sitting in a fauteuil of rose-coloured satin, the arms and legs of which (of the chair, remember, not of the Doctor) were of burnished gold, and the contrast of the man with the seat was very striking; an unwashed coal-heaver in a ris-à-vis could not be much more misplaced than Johnson thus deposited. He was dressed in a rusty suit of brown cloth dittos, with black worsted stockings; his old yellow wig was of formidable dimensions; and the learned head which sustained it rolled about in a seemingly paralytic motion, but, in the performance of its orbit, it inclined chiefly to one shoulder, whether to the right or left I cannot now remember, — a fault never to be forgiven by certain of the Tweedlers, who think these matters of the utmost importance. He designed not to rise on our entrance, and we stood before him while he and my father talked. There was soon a pause in the colloquy; and my father, making his advantage of it, took me by the hand, and said, 'Doctor Johnson, this is a little Colman.' The Doctor bestowed a slight, ungracious glance upon me, and, continuing the rotary motion of his head, renewed the previous conversation. Again there was a pause; — again the anxious father, who had failed in his first effort, seized the opportunity for pushing his progeny, with, 'This is my son, Doctor Johnson.' The great man's contempt for me was now roused to great wrath; and, knitting his brows, he exclaimed, in a voice of thunder, 'I see him, sir!' He then fell back in his rose-coloured satin fauteuil, as if giving himself up to meditation, implying that he would not be further plagued either with an old fool or a young one.

"The gigantic Johnson could not be easily thrown out at window, particularly by my undersized sire; but he deserved to be 'quoited down stairs, like a shave-groat shilling;' not exactly, perhaps, for his brutality to the boy, but for such an unprovoked insult to the father of whose hospitalities he was partaking. This, however, is only one among the numerous traits of grossness already promulgated, in which the Bolt Court philosopher completely falsified the principles of the Roman poet:

"in genas didicisse fideliter artes, Emollit mores, nec sinit esse feros."

"After this rude rebuff from the Doctor, I had the additional felicity to be placed next to him at dinner. He was silent over his meal; but I observed that he was, as Shylock says of Lancelot Gobbo, 'a huge feeder;' and, during the display of his voracity, (which was worthy of Bolt Court.) the perspiration fell in copious drops from his visage upon the table-cloth. The clumsiness of the bulky animal, his strange costume, his uncouth gestures, yet the dominion which he usurped withal, rendered his presence a phenomenon among gentlemen: it was the incursion of a new species of barbarian, — a learned Attila, King of the Huns, come to subjugate polish'd society. Oliver Goldsmith, several years before my luckless presentation to Johnson, proved how 'doctors differ.'

Read the conclusion of this anecdote on page 693 of this Dictionary; commencing with,

"I was only five years old when Goldsmith took me on his knee," &c.

No one has made a better excuse for Johnson's occasional roughness, and even boorishness, than Sir Walter Scott; and to his pages (in his Life of Johnson) we must refer the reader:

"He was, in a word, despotic," remarks Sir Walter; "and despotism will occasionally lead the best dispositions into an unbecoming abuse of power. It is not likely that any one will again enjoy, or have an opportunity of abusing, the singular degree of submission which was rendered to Johnson by all around him."

The colloquial monarch, ruling in his "pride of place," has been well described by Lord Brougham:

"He loved to fill a chair, surrounded with a circle well known to him, and ex cathedra to deliver his judgments. It cannot be said that this was any thing like a high style of conversation. It had nothing in it like full or free discussion; it had even little like free interchange of sentiments or opinions. It was occasionally enlivened by wit, oftener broken by a growl or a sneer from him, and from him alone. But his part of it was always arrogant and dictatorial; nor, after men's curiosity had once been gratified by assisting at one of these talks, did any but the small number of his familiar and admiring friends often desire to repeat the experience. His talk was most commonly for victory, rather than directed to the clearing up of rational doubt or the ascertaining of important truth; nor, unless upon the serious subject of religion, and upon some of the points involved in the Whig and Tory controversy, did he ever seem to care much on which side he argued, dogmatized, laughed boisterously, or sneered rudely." — Lives of Men of Letters, &c.

His wonderful conversational abilities have been the theme of unceasing eulogy from this day to our own, and cannot fail to excite the admiration of our latest successors.

"When animated by the cheering attention of friends whom he liked, he would give full scope to those talents for narration, in which I verily think he was unrivalled both in the brilliancy of his wit, the flow of his humour, and the energy of his language." — Cumberland's Memoirs.

"I do not care on what subject Johnson talks, but I love better to hear him talk than anybody: he either gives you new thoughts or a new colouring." — ORME, the historian of India.

"The most triumphant record of the talents and character of Johnson is to be found in Boswell's Life of him. The man was superior to the author. When he laid aside his pen, which he regarded as an encumbrance, he became not only learned and thoughtful, but acute, witty, humorous, natural, honest, hearty, and determined: 'the king of good fellows and wale of old men.' There are as many smart repartees, profound remarks, and keen invectives to be found in Boswell's inventory of all he said, as are recorded of any celebrated man. The life and dramatic play of his conversation forms a contrast to his written works. His natural powers and unguised opinions were called out in convivial intercourse. In public he practised with the foils; in private he unsheathed the sword of controversy, and it was the Ebro's temper." — Hazlitt on the Periodical Essays.

"There was a pith about old Samuel which nothing could stand up against. His influence was not so much that of an author as a thinker. He was the most powerful intellect in the world of books. He was the Jackson of the literary ring — the judge — the emperor — a giant — acknowledged to be a Saul amongst the people. Even David Hume would have been like a woman in his grasp; but, odd enough, the two never met." — CHRISTOPHER NORTH: Noctes Ambrosianæ, April 2, 1822.

"Boswell's Life of Johnson is so replete with the sayings and thoughts of the intellectual giant, whom it was so much his object to elevate, even above his natural Patagonian stature, that it may be regarded as a sort of autobiography, dictated by the sage, in his moments of abandon, to his devout worshipper. It is not going too far to say that it is among the most popular books in the English language. Johnson's reputation now mainly rests on that biography." — SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Essays, 1850, iii. 392; and in Blackie, Mag., Sept. 1849.

"Johnson, as Mr. Burke most justly observed, appears far greater in Boswell's books than in his own. His conversation appears to have been quite equal to his writings in matter, and far superior to them in manner. When he talked, he clothed his wit and his sense in forcible and natural expressions. As soon as he took his pen in hand to write for the public, his style became systematically vicious. . . . The reputation of those writings which he probably expected to be immortal is every day fading; while those peculiarities of manner, and that careless table-talk, the memory of which, he probably thought, would die with him, are likely to be remembered as long as the English language is spoken in any quarter of the globe."—T. B. MACAULAY: Essays, 1854, iii. 398, 401; and in Edin. Rev., Sept. 1831.

"How much is Johnson raised in our estimation, not only as to intellect but personal character, by the industrious caves-droppings of Boswell, setting down, day by day, in his note-book, the fragments of his most loose and unweighed conversations?"—LORD JEFFREY: Essays, 1850, 960; and in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1835.

"His conversation, which was one of the most powerful instruments of his extensive influence, was artificial, dogmatic, sententious, and poignant; adapted, with the most admirable versatility, to every subject as it arose, and distinguished by an almost unparalleled power of serious repartee. He seems to have considered himself as a sort of colloquial magistrate, who inflicted severe punishment from just policy. His course of life led him to treat those sensibilities, which such severity wounds as fantastic and effeminate; and he entered society too late to acquire those habits of politeness which are a substitute for natural delicacy."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Memoirs of his Life, 1835, 2 vols. 8vo.

We have already recorded Sir James's opinion of Johnson's manners, and shall have occasion hereafter to adduce his testimony to the general excellence of his character. Sir Walter Scott remarks, with great truth:

"Of all the men distinguished in this or any other age, Dr Johnson has left upon posterity the strongest and most vivid impression, so far as person, manners, disposition, and conversation are concerned. We do but name him, or open a book which he has written, and the sound and action recall to the imagination, at once, his form, his merits, his peculiarities,—nay, the very uncontentiousness of his gestures, and the deep impressive tone of his voice. . . . He is in our mind's eye a personification as lively as that of Siddons in Lady Macbeth, or Kemble in Cardinal Wolsey."—Life of Johnson.

Perhaps no one has drawn so admirable a miniature from Boswell's full-length portrait of Johnson as Mr. Macaulay has presented to us:

"Johnson grown old, Johnson in the fulness of his fame and in the enjoyment of a competent fortune, is better known to us than any other man in history. Every thing about him,—his coat, his wig, his figure, his face, his serofula, his St. Vitus's dance, his rolling walk, his blinking eye, the outward signs which too clearly marked his approbation of his dinner, his insatiable appetite for fish sauce and veal-pie with plums, his inextinguishable thirst for tea, his trick of touching the posts as he walked, his mysterious practice of treasuring up scraps of orange-peel, his morning slumbers, his midnight disputations, his contortions, his mutterings, his gruntings, his puffings, his vigorous, acute, and ready eloquence, his sarcastic wit, his vehemence, his insolence, his fits of tempestuous rage, his queer inmates, old Mr. Levett and blind Mrs. Williams, the cat Hodge and the negro Frank,—all are as familiar to us as the objects by which we have been surrounded from childhood. . . . As we close it [Boswell's] Johnson the club-room is before us, and the table on which stands the candle for Nugent and the lemons for Johnson. There are assembled those heads which live forever on the canvas of Reynolds. . . . There are the spectacles of Burke and the tall thin form of Langton, the courtly sneer of Beauclerk and the beaming smile of Garrick, Gibbon tapping his snuff-box and Sir Joshua with his trumpet in his ear. In the foreground is that strange figure which is as familiar to us as the figures of those among whom we have been brought up, the gigantic body, the huge manly face seamed with the scars of disease, the brown coat, the black worsted stockings, the grey wig with the scorched foretop, the dirty hands, the nails bitten and pared to the quick. We see the eyes and mouth moving with convulsive twitches; we see the heavy form rolling; we hear it puffing; and then comes the 'Why, sir!' and the 'What then, sir?' and the 'No, sir!' and the 'You don't see your way through the question, sir!'—Essays, 1854, i. 375-376, 490-401; and in Edin. Rev., Sept. 1831.

Johnson's "inextinguishable thirst for tea" forms so prominent an item of his personal character, that we must permit our reader to behold the sage at one tea-party at least; and this shall be at "Cumberland's" table, where the great man spent many a happy hour of social chat:

"At the tea-table he made considerable demands upon his favourite beverage, and I remember when Sir Joshua Reynolds at my house reminded him that he had drank eleven cups, he replied, 'Sir, I did not count your glasses of wine; why should you number up my cups of tea?' And then, laughing in perfect good-humour, he added; 'Sir, I should have released the lady from any further trouble, if it had not been for your remark; but you have reminded me that I want one of the dozen, and I must request Mrs. Cumberland to round up my number.' When he saw the readiness and complacency with which my wife obeyed his call, he turned a kind and cheerful look upon her, and said, 'Madam, I must tell you, for your comfort, you have escaped much better than a certain lady did a while ago upon whose patience I intruded greatly more than I have done on yours; but the lady asked me for no other purpose than to make a Zany of me, and set me gabbling to a parcel of people I knew nothing of; so, madam, I had my revenge of her; for I swallowed five-and-twenty cups of her tea, and did not treat her with as many words.' I can only say my wife would have made tea for him as long as the New River could have supplied her with water."—Cumberland's Memoirs.

Poor Jonas Hanway found his cost that Johnson was as ready to take up the endgels on behalf of his favourite beverage as he was to drink it. As Mr. Macaulay also refers to that famous tabby, the cat "Hodge," this respectable quadruped must not be forgotten in our sketch of the lexicographer. And, indeed, we know not a passage we could better select as an instance of the manner in which Boswell jots down the most trifling remarks which fell from the lips of his illustrious friend, than the one in which "Hodge forms the principal subject of discourse:

"Nor would it be just under this head," says Boswell, "to omit the fondness which he showed for animals which he had taken under his protection. I never shall forget the indulgence with which he treated Hodge, his cat, for whom he himself used to go out and buy oysters, lest the servants, having that trouble, should take a dislike to the poor creature. I am, unluckily, one of those who have an antipathy to a cat, so that I am uneasy when in the room with one; and I own I frequently suffered a good deal from the presence of this same Hodge. I recollect him one day scrambling up Dr. Johnson's breast, apparently with much satisfaction, while my friend, smiling and half-whistling, rubbed down his back, and pulled him by the tail; and when I observed he was a true cat, [rather hypocritical, we fear, Jemmy Boswell,] saying, 'Why, yes, sir; but I have had cats whom I liked better than this;' and then, as if perceiving Hodge to be out of countenance, adding, 'But he is a very fine cat,—a very fine cat indeed!'"

We give another amusing extract from Boswell's invaluable record, which is also quoted (not quite accurately) by Lord Brougham, with a very appropriate introduction:

"They, however, who only saw this distinguished person once or twice in society, were apt to form a very erroneous estimate of his temper, which was not at all morose or sullen, but rather kindly and sociable. He loved relaxation; he enjoyed merriment; he even liked to indulge in sportive and playful pleasantry, when his animal spirits were gay.—pleasantry, indeed, somewhat lumbering, but agreeable from its perfect heartiness. Nothing can be more droll than the scene of this kind of which Mr. Boswell has preserved the account, and into the humour of which he seems to have been incapable of entering. When some one was mentioned as having come to Mr. (afterward Sir Wm.) Chambers, to draw his will, giving his estate to his sisters, Johnson objected, as it had not been gained by trade. 'If it had,' said he, 'he might have left it to the dog Towser, and let him keep his own name.' He then went on laughing immoderately at the beholder, as he kept calling him. 'I dare say,' said he, 'he thinks he has done a mighty thing; he won't wait till he gets home to his seat; he'll call up the landlord of the first inn on the road, and after a suitable preface on mortality and the uncertainty of life, will tell him that he should not delay making his will; and here, sir, will he say, is my will, which I have just made, with the assistance of one of the ablest lawyers in the kingdom, and he will read it to him.' (Johnson laughing all the time.) 'He believes he has made this will; but he did not make it; you, Chambers, made it for him. I trust you have had more conscience than to make him say being of sound understanding,—'ha! ha! ha! I hope he has left me a legacy. I'd have my will turned into verse, like a ballad!'—'Mr. Chambers,' says Boswell, 'didn't by any means relish this jocularity, upon a matter of which pura magna fuit, and seemed impatient till he got rid of us. Johnson couldn't stop his merriment, but continued it all the way, till he got without the Temple Gate; he then burst into such a fit of laughter, that he appeared to be almost in a convulsion, and in order to support himself, laid hold of one of the posts on the side of the foot-pavement, and sent forth peals so loud that, in the silence of the night, his voice seemed to resound from Temple Bar to Fleet Ditch.'"—Lives of Men of Letters, &c.

It is easy to see, as Lord Brougham remarks, that "Boswell was incapable of entering into the humour of this scene," and the moral reflections with which he closes the graphic sketch just recorded are as amusing as any of its details:

"This most ludicrous exhibition of the awful, melancholy, and venerable Johnson happened well to counteract the feelings of sadness which I used to experience when parting with him for a considerable time. I accompanied him to his door, where he gave me his blessing."

7. DR. JOHNSON'S MORAL AND RELIGIOUS CHARACTER.

The attention of this great man was at an early age turned to the consideration of those important truths which only the foolish and the thoughtless dare to slight, and which demand a large share of the mind and heart of every accountable and immortal being.

"When at Oxford," remarks Johnson, "I took up Law's Serious Call to a Holy Life, expecting to find it a dull book; (as such books generally are,) and perhaps to laugh at it. But I found Law quite an overmatch for me; and this was the first occasion of my thinking in earnest of religion after I became capable of rational enquiry."

"From this time forward," continues his biographer, "religion was the predominant object of his thoughts; though, with the just sentiments of a conscientious Christian, he lamented that his practice of his duties fell far short of what it ought to be."

With his religious peculiarities of doctrine or observance we have here, of course, no concern; and, did their consideration legitimately enter into our province, we trust that we should feel no temptation to indulge in those unbecoming sneers at alleged superstitions and rigid ceremonials which have disgraced critics who imagined they were ridiculing the subject of their shallow wit.

"Few men," says Lord Brougham, "have perhaps ever lived, in whose thoughts religion had a larger or more practical share. . . . He was friendly, and actively so, in the greatest degree; he was charitable even beyond what prudential considerations might justify; as firmly as he believed the gospel, so constantly did he practise its divine maxim, 'that it is more blessed to give than to receive.' . . . His habitual piety, his sense of his own imperfections, his generally blameless conduct in the various relations of life, have been already sufficiently described, and have been illustrated in the preceding narrative. He was a good man, as he was a great man; and he had so firm a regard for virtue that he wisely set much greater store by his worth than by his fame."—Lives of Men of Letters, &c.

"He loved the poor as I never yet saw any one else love them, with an earnest desire to make them happy. In pursuance of these principles, he nursed whole nests of people in his house, where the lame, the blind, the sick, and the sorrowful found a sure retreat."—MRS. THRALE.

"Though consciousness of superiority might sometimes induce him to carry it high with man, (and even this was much abated in the latter part of life,) his devotions have shown to the whole world how humbly he walked at all times with his God."—BISHOP HORSER.

"If then, it be asked, who first, in England, at this period, breasted the waves and stemmed the tide of infidelity,—who, enlisting wit and eloquence, together with argument and learning, on the side of revealed religion, first turned the literary current in its favour, and mainly prepared the reaction which succeeded,—that praise seems most justly to belong to Dr. Samuel Johnson. Religion was with him no mere lip-service nor cold formality: he was mindful of it in his social hours as much as in his graver lucubrations; and he brought to it, not merely erudition such as few indeed possessed, but the weight of the highest character, and the respect which even his enemies could not deny him. It may be said of him that, though not in orders, he did the Church of England better service than most of those who at that listless era ate her bread."—LORD MAHON: Hist. of England, vol. vi.

"His moral principles (if the language may be allowed) partook of the vigour of his understanding. He was conscientious, sincere, determined; and his pride was no more than a steady consciousness of superiority in the most valuable qualities of human nature. His friendships were not only firm, but generous and tender beneath a rugged exterior."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Memoirs of his Life, 1835.

Sir Walter Scott remarks (in his Life of Johnson) that, when Johnson died, "virtue was deprived of a steady supporter," and that all the deductions which can be made for his prejudices of opinion and "violence and solecisms in manners" still leave "his talents, morals, and benevolence alike irreproachable."

Hazlitt, in his Lecture on the Periodical Essayists, after summing up Johnson's many good qualities, and referring to his prejudices, concludes with:

"His were not time-serving, heartless, hypocritical prejudices; but deep, inveterate, not to be rooted out but with life and hope; which he found from old habit necessary to his own peace of mind, and thought so to the peace of mankind. I do not hate, but love, him for them. They were between himself and his conscience, and should be left to that higher tribunal.

"Where they in trembling hope repose,—

The bosom of his Father and his God!"

"In a word, he has left behind him few wiser or better men."

"That, with all his coarseness and irritability, he was a man of sterling benevolence, has long been acknowledged. But how gentle and endearing his deportment could be, was not known till the Recollections of Madame D'Arblay were published."—T. B. MACAULAY: Essays, 1854, iii, 309.

"The comparison which we have instituted [between Milton and Johnson] has compelled us to notice Johnson's defects; but we trust we are not blind to his merits. His stately march, his pomp and power of language, his strength of thought, his reverence for virtue and religion, his vigorous logic, his practical wisdom, his insight into the springs of human action, and the solemn pathos which occasionally pervades his descriptions of life and his references to his own history, command our willing admiration."—WM. ELLERY CHANNING: Remarks on the Character and Writings of John Milton.

The accounts which have been handed down to us of the last days of Johnson's life form one of the most interesting portions of English literary annals. It was on the 13th of December, 1784, that he was called to the rest which remaineth for those who cast themselves in humble confidence and undoubting trust upon the promises of that Redeemer who is the saint's dependence and the sinner's hope. We may not doubt that to him the exchange was a happy one. Error there had been in his life; for who is there among the children of men who hath not transgressed? But there had been hearty repentance, deep contrition, and fervent faith. He had proved his faith, too, by works of charity and deeds of love. He had been literally "eyes to the blind and feet to the lame." He had "strengthened him that was ready to perish, and he had upholden the fallen." His bread had been "dealt to the hungry, and the poor and cast-out he had brought to his home." The promise was fulfilled to him, as it hath ever been to those who rely upon its merciful assurance: "In the time of trouble," God remembered him, and freed him from that "bondage" which had so long held him in "fear of death;" he resigned his soul into the hands of his Creator with filial confidence and triumphant hope.

Dec. 28, 1804, at Kirkhill, in the county of Midlothian, Scotland. 1. The National Atlas of General and Physical Geography, Edin., imp. fol., 1843, £8 8s.; Index, 1848, 7s. 6d.; 2d ed., 1849, half-bound, £4 4s.; 3d ed., 1855, £4 14s. 6d.; plates and notes, half-Russia, £8 8s.

"As accurate in their geographical details as they are beautiful in their execution."—SIR DAVID BREWSTER.

Also highly commended in Alison's Hist. of Europe, by Professors Traill and Jameson, by Dr. Whewell, Wm. Galbraith, and other eminent authorities.

2. The Physical Atlas of Natural Phenomena, 1847-49, imp. fol., 30 maps, £10 10s.; reduced ed., 1849, imp. 4to, 25 maps, £2 12s. 6d.; new ed., 1854-56, 12 Pts. fol., at 21s. each; £12 12s. complete.

"The execution of the plates corresponds, in the elegance and perspicuity of the engraving, with the scientific solidity of the materials."—BARON ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT: d. Sans Souci, 12th Aug., 1848.

"Your Atlas will do more benefit to the knowledge of our planet, in all its relations, than all the monstrous Encyclopedie, Cyclopedie, and Libraries of Useful Knowledge could effect."—BARON LEOPOLD VON BUCH: Berlin, 3d July, 1848.

"I appreciate it highly, but not more than the admirable execution of so difficult and arduous a work merits."—MARY SOMERVILLE, Chester Square, 4th May, 1848.

We have many more testimonies before us to the excellence of this work, but either of the three preceding is amply sufficient to give a character to The Physical Atlas.

The new edition includes many new maps, and is enriched by the contributions of the greatest living scientific men, by whose researches the domain of Physical Geography has been extended, including Sir R. Murchison, Prof. E. Forbes, Col. Sabine, Sir David Brewster, &c. A new and complete Geographical Map of the United States and British North America, compiled from the latest data, by Prof. Rogers, (of Boston,) with descriptive Illustrated Notes, is for the first time given, with much other matter relating to this Continent.

3. Atlas to Alison's Hist. of Europe, 1848, 4to, 73s. 6d.; sm. 4to, 52s. 6d.; epitome, 4to, 7s. 4. Dictionary of Geography, 1850, 8vo, pp. 1440, 36s.; 2d ed., 1855, 8vo, 36s.; half-bound, 41s. All of the articles were written by Mr. J., and from original materials. Much new and valuable information will be found regarding Italy, Spain, Denmark, Russia, the Netherlands, East and West Indies, Brazil, &c.

Johnston, Andrew. Notitia Anglicana; shewing 1. The Achievements of all the English Nobility, &c., complete, Lon., 1724, 2 vols. 8vo. See Moule's Bibl. Herald., 318.

Johnston, Arthur, M.D., 1587-1641, a native of Casskieben, near Aberdeen, took his medical degree at Padua in 1610, resided abroad about twenty-four years, of which twenty were spent in France, returned home about 1632, and died at Oxford. He was one of the best Latin scholars of his age, and pub. several works in that language. An edit. of his works was pub. Middleb., in 1641. Of these the best-known is his Latin version of the Psalms of David, —Psalmorum Davidis Paraphrasis Poetica, et Cantiorum Evangelicorum, Aberd., 1637, 12mo. Often reprinted. There formerly existed an animated dispute (already referred to by us in our life of George Buchanan) relative to the respective merits of Johnston's and Buchanan's versions of the Psalms. We give the opinions of several eminent critics:

"A sort of critical controversy was carried on in the last century, as to the versions of the Psalms by Buchanan and Johnston. Though the national honour may seem equally secure by the superiority of either, it has, I believe, been usual in Scotland to maintain the older post against all the world. I am nevertheless inclined to think that Johnston's Psalms, all of which are in heroic metre, do not fall far short of those of Buchanan either in elegance of style or in correctness of latinity. In the 137th, with which Buchanan has taken much pains, he may be allowed the preference, but not at a great interval, and he has attained his superiority by too much diffusiveness."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., Lon., 1854, iii. 53.

"Arthur Johnston is not so verbose, and has, of course, more vigour; but his choice of a couplet, which keeps the reader always in mind of the puerile epistles of Ovid, was singularly injudicious."—DR. BEATTIE: Dissertation Moral and Critical.

We may remark, with reference to Beattie's mention of Ovid, that Buchanan was formerly called the Scottish Virgil, and Johnston the Scottish Ovid.

"[He] [Johnston] has many beautiful and even powerful lines, such as can scarce be matched by his more popular competitor: the style of Johnston possessing somewhat of Ovidian ease, accompanied with strength and simplicity, while the tragic pomp and worldly parade of Seneca and Prudentius are more affected by Buchanan."—PROF. WM. TENNANT: Edin. Lit. Jour., iii. 289.

Auditor Benson pub. an ed. of Johnston's Version in 1740, 4to, 8vo, and 12mo; a Prefatory Discourse to it, 1740, 8vo; a Conclusion to the Discourse in 1741, and a Supplement to it in the same year. In the last he instituted a Comparison between Johnston and Buchanan, and gives the preference to the former; but this opinion was controverted by George Riddiman in A Vindication of Buchanan's Paraphrase, pub. in 1745, 8vo. See BENSON, WILLIAM. Lord Woodhouselee prefers Buchanan's version taken as a whole, but considers that Johnston has surpassed the former in some of the Psalms, for instance, 24th, 30th, 74th, 81st, 82d, 102d, and, above all, the 137th. See Mr. Hallam's remark just quoted respecting the 137th Psalm, Johnston's version.

Morhof commends Johnston's version in high terms: "Arturus Johnstonus, in Psalmorum Versione, quamadmodum et in operibus ceteris, utique parus et tersus est, ut ego quidem nihil in illo desiderare possim."

Dr. Harwood gives us little information when he informs us that Johnston was "one of the most eloquent Latin poets." Johnston pub. in 1637, Amst., 2 vols. 12mo, a work which has reflected great honour upon the Scottish nation, viz.: Deliciae Poetarum Scoticorum hujus ævi illustrium, to which he was a large contributor:

We find about an equal produce of each century, the whole number being thirty-seven. Those of Johnston himself, and some legacies by Scot of Scotsarvet, are among the best. The Scots certainly wrote Latin with a good ear and considerable elegance of phrase."—HALLAM: ubi supra.

"Would have done honour to any country."—DR. SAMUEL JOHNSON: Jour. to the West. Islands.

Johnston also pub. Elegia in Obitum R. Jacobi, Lon., 1625, 4to; Epigrammata, Aberd., 1632, 8vo; Parerga, 1632, 8vo; trans. of Solomon's Song into Latin Elegiæ Verse, Lon., 1633, 8vo; Musæ Aulicæ, 1635, 8vo. His translations into Latin of the Te Deum, Creed, Decalogue, &c. were subjoined to his Psalms. "One of the most meritorious efforts of our fiction-writers."—Lon. Examiner.

Mrs. J. edited for a number of years a monthly magazine established at Edinburgh about 1830, to which she was a contributor, and she edited and contributed to the Edinburgh Tales, a weekly issue of stories and novelettes. These papers were bound up and sold together (1815-46) in 3 vols. r. 8vo, and a new ed., 3 vols. r. 8vo, bound in 1 vol., was pub. in 1850. The contributors to this agreeable collection were Mrs. Johnstone, Mrs. Marsh, M. Fraser Tytler, Mrs. Gore, Mrs. Crowe, John Mills, Miss Mitford, Mary Howitt, William Howitt, Thomas Carlyle, Sir T. Dick Lauder, &c. Mrs. Johnstone's Tales are, The Experiences of Richard Taylor; Young Mrs. Roberts's Three Christmas Dinners; Mary Anne's Hair; Governor Fox; Little Fanny Bethel; Frankland the Barrister; Mrs. Mark Luke, or West-Country Exclusives; Violet Hamilton, or The Talented Family; Mothering Sunday, or Old Usages; Andrew Howie, the Hand-loom Weaver; The Ventilator of the Old House of Commons; Blanche Delamere; The Weird of the Winrams, a Tale of the Persecuting Times; Nighean Ceard, or the Tinker's Daughter.

Mrs. Johnstone's stories have acquired great popularity.

"Her characters are strictly drawn from life; and every act in which they are involved is at once simply and naturally tending to impress a useful lesson of worldly wisdom and judicious conduct."—Lon. Lit. Gaz.

"Mrs. Johnstone's Tales are a happy mixture of the genial and the prudential."—LEIGH HUNT.

2. On Animal Chemistry, in its Relation to Stomach and Renal Diseases, 1850, 8vo.

"The work of Dr. Beuce Jones is one of the most philosophical and practical which has issued from the press for many years past."—Lon. Lancet.

"Dr. Beuce Jones is already favourably known as the author of works and papers on animal chemistry; and this contribution to his favourite science is calculated to extend his reputation as an able chemist and sound physician."—Lon. Monthl. Med. Jour.

3. Dr. Du Bois Reymond's Animal Electricity, edited by H. B. Jones, M.D., pp. 8vo; 50 engravings on wood.

"This small volume is a valuable addition to our scientific literature. Those who read with attention may learn many most important facts from this work, but it demands such attention."—Lon. Atheneum.

"The name of M. Du Bois Reymond is probably known to most of our readers as that of a zealous investigator into Animal Electricity. We have now had the opportunity of witnessing some of the most interesting of these experiments. We beg to tender our thanks to Dr. Beuce Jones for this very reasonable publication, and for the very efficient mode in which he has performed the task."—Lon. Medico-Chirurgical Review.

He left MS. notes upon Palladio's Architecture, some of which were inserted by Leoni in an ed. of Palladio pub. in 1714, fol. A copy of his verses is pub. in the Odeombian Banquet, prefixed to Tom Coryate's Crudities, 1611, 4to. Jones was an excellent mathematician, and understood the Greek and Latin languages. He was for some time an intimate friend of Ben Jonson, but the latter became his enemy, and ridiculed him in the character of Lantern Leatherhead, a hobby-horse seller, in his comedy of Bartholomew Fair, and wrote three satires against him.—An Expostulation with Inigo Jones; an Epigram to a Friend; and another inscribed to Inigo, Marquis Would-Be. Mr. Gifford charges Jones with having thrown the first stone. The consideration of Jones's architectural taste and his works in this department does not come within the plan of our Dictionary. Diet.*; Walpole's Anecdotes; Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors, and, above all, Peter Cunningham's Life of Inigo Jones, with Remarks on his Sketches for Dramas by Planché, and 5 Masques by Ben Jonson, &c., edited by Collier, with portrait after Vandyke, and fifteen fac-simile sketches, 1848, 8vo.

"This biography of the illustrious architect is more complete than any former one, and abounds in curious information respecting the customs of the period. Among the dramas is the celebrated Masque of Queens, written in rivalry of Shakspeare's Macbeth."

"He successfully proved that our present Greek copies of that Gospel are in the same order in which they were originally written by that evangelist."—Horne's Bibl. Bib.

This work is included in the following: 2. A New and Full Method of settling the Canonical Authority of the New Testament, Lon., 1726, 2 vols. 8vo; vol. iii., 1727, 8vo; Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1798, 3 vols. 8vo; 1827, 3 vols. 8vo.

"Both these works, particularly the last, are very valuable. Jones examines all the eminent testimonies respecting the canon of the New Testament. He collects all the apocryphal books which have been thought canonical, and gives an English translation of them, and refutes their pretensions in a very able manner. It is acknowledged by all parties to be a book of authority."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"Mr. Jones has brought together, with uncommon diligence, the external evidence of the authenticity and genuineness of the canonical books, and has, with equal ability and fairness, stated his reasons for deciding against the authority of the apocryphal."—Maltby's Illustrations of the Truth of the Christian Religion.

"Mr. Jones has given us a complete enumeration of all the apocryphal books of the New Testament, and made a critical inquiry into each of these books, with an English version of those of them which are now extant, and a particular proof that none of them were ever admitted into the Canon; and he hath distinctly produced and considered every testimony relating to them that is to be found in any Christian writer or writers of the first four centuries after Christ."—Leland's View of Dissident Writers.

7. A Greek and English Lexicon, 1823, 8vo.

"This is a very valuable addition to the means of acquiring a knowledge of Greek, not only of the classic writers, but of the Scripture. It contains all the words of the New Testament and of the Septuagint. . . . It is, perhaps, not altogether free from the bias of the author's theological creed."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"I have examined it again and again; and I have no hesitation in pronouncing it the work of a man of sense and a man of learning. The usefulness of it is indisputable; and my hope is that it will be extensively known and justly valued."—DR. PARR.

Also highly commended by the Eclectic Rev. for June, 1825, and the Congreg. Mag. for the same month. An unfavourable notice of this work will be found in the 2d No. of the Westminster Review. Jones, William, 1680-1749, a very eminent mathematician, the friend of Sir Isaac Newton, Halley, and Mead, the tutor of Lords Hardwicke and Mansfield, and—still greater distinction—the father of Sir William Jones, was a native of the island of Anglesey, North Wales, and a mathematical teacher in London. 1. A New Compendium of the Whole Art of Navigation, Lon., 1702, svo. 2. Synopsis Palmariorum Matheseos; or, A New Introduction to the Mathematics, 1746, Svo. This is a valuable summary of mathematical science.

"This work is well worthy of attentive perusal."—Dr. F. YOTCO.

Mr. Jones also contributed several mathematical papers to Phil. Trans., pub. a number of Sir Isaac Newton's papers (that might otherwise have been lost) under the title of Analysis per Quantitatum Series Fluxiones, ac Differentias; cum Enumeratione Linearum Tertii Ordinis, 1711, 4to; and, at the time of his death, had ready for the press an Introduction to the Mathematics,—more comprehensive than his Synopsis,—which was confided to Lord Macclesfield for publication, and was neglected or lost. To this gentleman Mr. Jones devised his mathematical library, which was said to be the best in England. The work unfortunately lost or destroyed was intended to serve as an introduction to the mathematical and philosophical works of Sir Isaac Newton. Jones, William, of Nayland, 1726-1800, a native of Northamptonshire, was educated at the Charter House and at University College, Oxford; Vicar of Bethesda, Kent, 1764; subsequently Rector of Pluckley, which he exchanged for Paston; Perpetual Curate of Nayland, and, in 1798, Rector of Hollingbourn. "Jones of Nayland," or "Trinity Jones," as he is sometimes called, was eminent for learning, piety, and zeal, and his knowledge of music, of which he was an excellent composer. As a theologian, he belonged to the Hutchinsonian school, and was the means of converting his friend Bishop Horne to the same creed. He has the credit of having originated the British Critic. A collective ed. of his Theological, Philosophical, and Miscellaneous Works, with his Life, by Wm. Stevens, was pub. in 1801, 12 vols. 8vo; Theological and Miscellaneous Works, republ., with Life, by Wm. Stevens, 1810, 6 vols. Svo; a vol. of his Serms., Practical, Doctrinal, and Explanatory, was pub. in 1820, Svo; two posthumous vols. (8vo) of Serms. on various subjects and occasions, now first pub. from the original MSS., edited by the Rev. Henry Walker, appeared in 1830. There have been recent eds. of several of his works. A Life of Jones of Nayland was pub. in 1849, 1p. Svo. Among the best-known of his publications are: 1. Answer to Bishop Clayton's Essay on Spirit, 1753; see CLAYTON, ROBERT. 2. The Catholic Doctrine of the Trinity Proved, &c., 1756. He subsequently published several other treatises in defence of the doctrine of the Trinity.

"One of the most satisfactory defenses of that fundamental doctrine, on the simple testimony of the Holy scriptures."—Bickersteth's C. P.

"His tracts on the Trinity are invaluable."—Williams's C. P.

"His rules are either antizinous or indefinite; and according to his principles, a lively imagination may make any thing out of the plainest parts of Scripture. More satisfaction will be found in a single section of Glassius than in the whole of Mr. Jones's volume."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"His Figurative Language of Scripture, Book of Nature, and other practical works, are (notwithstanding the excess of figurative interpretation) interesting and useful."—Bickersteth's C. P.

"His Lectures on the Figurative Language of Scripture are full of instruction. . . . His Sermons are grievously deficient in Evangelical sentiment."—Williams's C. P.

"Valuable and pious Lectures on the Figurative Language of Scripture."—Horne's Bi. B.

"These Lectures constitute, in our opinion, one of the most ingenious and valuable Works of their Author: they are at once calculated to illustrate and enforce scriptural truths; to throw new light upon some doubtful passages; to enlarge the understanding; to affect the heart and conscience, and stimulate to upright and holy conduct."—Ecler. Rev., Aug. 1809.

"One of the most interesting works that can be presented to the young Christian."—Grant's English Church.

6. The Scholar armed against the Errors of the Time, 1792, 2 vols. Svo. These vols. are composed of a number of dissertations, extracts, &c. collected by Mr. Jones and pub. in this shape.

"These two volumes may be considered as a library in themselves to any young student of the Church of England, and no such person who takes a fancy to what he there finds can ever fall into Socinianism, Fanaticism, Popery, or any of those other mischievous errors which infest this Church and nation."—Jones's Life of Bishop Horne.

7. The Life of Bishop Horne, 1795, Svo; see HORNE, GEORGE, D.D. 8. Zoologia Ethica, 1771, Svo.

We have spoken of Mr. Jones as a proficient in music: he pub. several treatises on this subject, and his own anthems, in score, &c., were greatly admired. See his Life by Wm. Stevens, first printed in the Anti-Jacobin Review, and subsequently prefixed to his works. (supra.)

"His works contain many things learned, ingenious, and fanciful."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"A clear able, and pious writer, though prejudiced against Calvinism."—Bickersteth's C. P.

"This eminent Hutchinsonian was the personal friend of Parkhurst and of Bishop Horne; and in talents and learning was at least equal to either of them. . . . He was a good man, an honest patriot, an unbending Churchman, and a valuable writer; but he sometimes suffered his imagination and love of allegory to overtake his better judgment."—Williams's C. P.

"One of the soundest philosophers and most devout Christians that the history of our church can boast of."—SWAINSON: Discourse on Natural History.

"Of this faithful servant of God I can speak both from personal knowledge and from his writings. He was a man of quick penetration, of extensive learning, and the soundest piety; and he had, beyond any other man I ever knew, the talent of writing upon the deepest subjects to the plainest understandings."—BISHOP HONSELEY: Charges.

Jones, Sir William, Sept. 28, 1746—April 24, 1794, one of the most illustrious characters on the page of history, was a native of London, and a son of the eminent mathematician of the same name whose remarkable attainments in his favourite science we have already commemorated. The learning of the family was not confined to either of these persons, for the mother of Sir William was also noted for her erudition, as well as for the virtues and accomplishments more usual to her sex. That the successful pursuit of knowledge detracted nothing from the latter more valuable recommendations, we have the unequivocal testimony of her husband:

"She was virtuous without blemish; generous without extravagance; frugal but not niggard; cheerful but not giddy; close but not sullen; ingenious but not conceited; of spirit but not passionate; of her company cautious; in her friendship trusty; to her parents dutiful; and to her husband ever faithful, loving, and obedient."

Thus did this excellent woman—as evinced in the lines just quoted, and in her future happy experience—secure the reward promised by inspiration and recorded by the wisest of men: "Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her." It was to the sole charge of such a mother that William Jones was left, by the decease of his father, when he had scarcely reached his third year. He early manifested an ardent thirst for knowledge, which his maternal instructor well knew how to turn into profitable channels:

"The mother of Sir William Jones, having formed a plan for the education of her son, withdrew from great connexions, that she might live only for that son. Her great principle of education was to excite curiosity; the result could not fail to be knowledge. 'Read and you will know,' she constantly replied to her filial pupil. And we have his own acknowledgment that to this maxim, which produced the habit of study, he was indebted for his future attainments."—Disraeli on the Literary Character, ed. Lon., 1840, 441.

When he had completed his seventh year, he was placed at Harrow School, under the tuition of Dr. Thackeray; and this rigid preceptor, so economical of his commendations in the presence of his best pupils, did not hesitate to declare in private that William Jones

"Was a boy of so active a mind, that, if he were left naked and friendless on Salisbury Plain, he would nevertheless find the road to fame and riches."

This eulogium was endorsed by Dr. Sumner, Thackeray's successor in 1761, so that when Jones was entered of University College, Oxford, in the spring of 1764, great expectations were reasonably entertained of his future distinction. His fond mother would not consent to a separation, which would have been equally distressing to the object of her devoted attachment, and, to the great joy of William, now in his eighteenth year, she accompanied him to Oxford. During his short residence at this famous seat of learning—to which he brought far more learning than the majority of graduates carry from it—he applied himself so assiduously to his studies, that his health would probably have been undermined for life, had he not taken care to vary the seclusion of the closet with the athletic exercises in which he was a distinguished proficient. In these amusements, whilst yet at Harrow,—which Jones also pressed into the service of classic learning by giving them a dramatic character—his principal associates were William Bennet, afterward Bishop of Cloyne, and Samuel Parr, the equally famous "Birmingham Docteur." The fame of young Jones's erudition having reached the ears of Earl Spencer, he sent him an invitation to become an inmate of his family in the capacity of tutor to Lord Althorpe, then seven years of age. This proposal was accepted, and in the summer of 1765 he removed to Wimbleton Park, where he found himself most pleasantly situated in the midst of kind friends, and with ample opportunities of pursuing his favourite researches into Oriental literature. A Fellowship at Oxford conferred upon him in the course of the following summer was an agreeable addition to the substantial comforts which now rewarded the studious zeal for which he had been distinguished from his earliest years. In 1767, and again in 1770, he visited the Continent with the Spencer family, and whilst there eagerly availed himself of the literary opportunities which the absence of engrossing occupations now permitted him freely to enjoy. On his return to England, he determined to embrace the profession of the law; and we find him on the 19th of September, 1770, duly recorded as a student of the Temple, where he soon evinced the same thirst for the acquisition of legal knowledge which previously stimulated his philological and other less abstruse investigations. He was admitted to the Bar in 1774, and appointed a Commissioner of Bankrupts in 1776. As early as 1768 he had gained great reputation by a translation, made at the request of the King of Denmark, of the Life of Nadir Shah, from an Eastern MS. into the French language. This, together with Pieces relative to the French translation, &c., was pub. in 1770, London, 2 vols. 4to. Dissertation sur la Littérature Orientale was pub. in 1771, 8vo, and in the same year appeared his Grammar of the Persian Language, 4to. The 7th ed. was pub. 1809, 4to, and in this ed. (and in that pub. in 1804, also edited by Dr. Charles Wilkins) the orthography is adapted to the mode of spelling adopted by Dr. Wilkins in his improved ed. of Richardson's Persian Dictionary. The Grammar will be found in vol. v. of the 8vo ed. of Jones's Works, (13 vols.); but the last and best eds. are those by Professor Samuel Lee, of Cambridge, 1823, 4to, and 1828, 4to. In 1772, 8vo, (2d ed. 1777, 8vo.) he gave to the world Poems, consisting chiefly of Translations from the Asiatic Language; in 1774, 8vo, Poesies Asiaticæ, &c., or, Commentaries (in Latin) on the Asiatic Poetry; and in 1778, 4to, a trans., with Notes, of the Speeches of Isæus from the Greek.

"It is almost impossible to overlook the excellence of this finished performance."—DR. ADAM CLARKE.

The last work was followed by a Latin Ode to Liberty, to which succeeded—the proximity is somewhat amusing—a matter-of-fact Inquiry into the Legal mode of suppressing Riots. In the next year—1781, 8vo—appeared his learned Essay on the Law of Bailments, which is now more valued as a literary than as a legal production, and which—perhaps even an American and a layman may be permitted to remark—is far inferior to Judge Story's great work on the same subject. Jones's Essay, however, is not to be denied considerable merit; and Judge Story wrote under a better comprehension of the subject as a branch of the Common Law than was attainable in the days of his predecessor. The 2d ed. of Jones's Essay, edited by John Balmanno, was pub. in 1798; the 3d, by J. Nicholl, in 1823; the 4th, by W. Theobald, in 1834. The Amer. eds. are, the reprint of the 2d English ed., Brattleborough, 1813, 12mo; of the 3d English ed., with addit. Notes and References, by W. Halsead, N. York, 1828, 8vo; and an ed. pub. in Phila., 1836, 8vo. See 25 Lon. Monthly Rev., 236; lxvi. 298; 2 Amer. Jur., 78; vii. 137; 6 N. Amer. Rev., 46, (by Judge Joseph Story); xxxvi. 408, (by Dr. Chas. Folken;) Bridg. Leg. Bibl., 176; 7 Leg. Obs., 117; Marvin's Leg. Bibl., 429; Story's Miscell. Writings, 68, 75, 204, 239. We know of nothing that we can quote in this connexion so much to our purpose, so strictly pertinent, as the glowing tribute of Mr. Justice Story to the merits of his illustrious brother of the law:

"The doctrine of bailments (which lies at the foundation of the law of shipments) was almost struck out at a single heat by Lord Holt. [Note: The case of Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. R. 909.] who had the good sense to incorporate into the English code that system which the text and the commentaries of the civil law had already built up on the continent of Europe. What remained to give perfect symmetry and connection to all the parts of that system, and to refer it to its principles, has been accomplished in our times by the incomparable Essay of Sir William Jones, a man of whom it is difficult to say which is most worthy of admiration, the splendour of his genius, the rareness and extent of his acquirements, or the unspotted purity of his life. Had he never written any thing but his Essay on Bailments, he would have left a name unrivalled in the common law for philosophical accuracy, elegant learning, and finished analysis. Even cold and cautious as is the habit, if not the structure, of a professional mind, it is impossible to suppress enthusiasm when we contemplate such a man."—North American Review, vi. 46—47, Nov. 1817; and in Story's Miscell. Writings, 1852, 67—68.

In March, 1783, Mr. Jones was appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William, and received the honour of knighthood, and about the same time—a happiness which perhaps he valued more than either of the instances of good fortune just named—he was married to Anna Maria Shipley, eldest daughter of the Bishop of St. Asaph. His friends were rejoiced to see his eminent merit not unsuitably rewarded, and Lord Ashburton congratulated him on having at once secured "two of the first objects of human pursuit,—those of ambition and love."

In April, 1783, Sir William Jones and his lady embarked for India, and arrived at Calcutta in the month of September. That ardour in the pursuit of knowledge which was one of his most distinguishing characteristics was not allowed to slumber in his adopted home. He called around him those who were likely to sympathize with his interest in the cause of learning, and in nine months after his arrival had the satisfaction of establishing a society, the "Transactions" of which have added greatly to our knowledge of Asiatic literature and science. Before his departure he had exhibited his knowledge of an abstruse department of Oriental literature by his translations into English of an Arabian poem on the Mohammedan Law of Succession to the Property of Intestates, (1782, 4to,) and of The Moallakat, or Seven Ancient Arabian Poems, (1783, 4to;) and he now determined to qualify himself, by acquiring a knowledge of the Sanskrit, for the preparation of a digest of Hindu and Mohammedan Laws, similar to that which Justinian gave to his Greek and Roman subjects. The year 1789 was made memorable in Anglo-India literary annals by the publication of the first volume of the Asiatic Researches, and the completion of Sir William Jones's translation of Sacontala, or The Fatal Ring, [Sakoontala; or, The Lost Ring?] an ancient Indian drama by Kálidása. This was not pub., however, until the appearance of the collective ed. of Sir William's Works, in 1799, 6 vols. 4to. In 1794, 8vo, (2d ed., 1797, 8vo,) he pub., as an institute prefatory to his larger work, a trans. of the Ordinances of Menu, "who is esteemed by the Hindus the first of created beings, and not only the oldest, but the holiest, of legislators." Sir William had intended in the following year (1795) to follow Lady Jones, who had been compelled by ill-health to return to England in 1793; but it was not so written. On the evening of the 20th of April, or about that date, exposure to the night-air during a protracted ramble brought on an inflammation of the liver, which resulted fatally within a week. Thus died, far away from home, and separated from her whose presence could best have soothed the pangs of a dying hour, this illustrious Englishman, ere he had numbered forty-eight years, during one-fourth of which he had enjoyed a reputation for scholarship unequalled by any one living. But he was not alone: his excellent friend Lord Teignmouth closed his eyes in death, and the God whom he had long served in fervency of faith and humility of spirit did not forget him in the time of weakness and the hour of trial:

"His bodily suffering," says his lordship, "from the complacency of his features and the ease of his attitude, could not have been severe; and his mind must have derived consolation from those sources where he had been in the habit of seeking it, and where alone, in our last moments, it can ever be found."

His remains were interred in the burial-ground at Calcutta; but a stately monument to his memory arrests the thoughtful attention of the visitor to St. Paul's Cathedral.

The testimony of Sir William Jones to the authenticity and inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, and the weight and value of the sanctions and the consolations by which they appeal to the mind and heart of man, is of peculiar value. Profoundly versed in the languages in which they were originally written, and skilled to a surprising extent in the peculiarities of Oriental literature,—starting moreover, when a young man, with a skeptical bias against the claims of revelation,—the conclusion to which his mind was brought by his researches is thus told in his own words:

"I have regularly and attentively read the Holy Scriptures, and am of opinion that this volume, independent of its divine origin, contains more sublimity and beauty, more pure morality, more important history, and finer strains of poetry and eloquence, than can be collected from all other books, in whatever language or age they may have been composed."

This will remind the reader very forcibly of the remark of the illustrious friend of Sir William Jones's father, Sir Isaac Newton:

"I find more sure marks of the authenticity of the Bible than in any profane history whatever."

With us, we confess, such evidence is irresistible; and certain it is that if the testimony of these great men, or of either of them, had leaned to the other side of the question, we should never have heard the last of it from unbelievers.

A collective ed. of the works of this eminent scholar was pub. by his friend Lord Teignmouth, in 1799, in 6 vols. 4to; to these were added two supplementary volumes, in 1801, and a Life by Lord Teignmouth in 1804; in all, 9 vols. 4to. The whole were reprinted in 1807, in 13 vols. 8vo, with the exception of the supplementary volumes, the contents of which were not written by Sir William, but consist of a reprint of such parts of the vols. of the Asiatic Researches pub. under his presidency as had not been inserted among his works. The contents of the 13 vols. of which Sir William Jones's works consist are as follows: I., II. Memoirs of the Author, by Lord Teignmouth. III. Lord Teignmouth's Discourse at a Meeting of the Asiatic Society, [on the decease of Sir William Jones;] Anniversary Discourses (XI.) before the Asiatic Society, 1784-94. On the Hindus, the Arabs, the Tartars, the Persians, the Chinese, the Borderers, &c. of Asia; the origin and families of nations, Asiatic history, and the philosophy of the Asiatics. The Mohammedan Law of Inheritance. An Essay on the Law of Bailments. An Inquiry into the Legal Mode of Suppressing Riots. Speech on the Reformation of Parliament. The Principles of Government. Character of Lord Ashburton. IX. The Speeches of Isæus, &c., [translated,] with Notes and Commentary. Sacontala, or The Fatal Ring; an Indian drama, by Calidas, trans. from the original Sanscrit. X. The Moallakat; or, Seven Arabian Poems, which were suspended on the Temple at Mecca. Poems, consisting chiefly of translations from the Asiatic languages; to which are added two essays: 1. On the Poetry of the Eastern Nations; 2. On the Arts commonly called Imitative. Lettre à M. du P[erron], dans laquelle est compris l'Examen de sa Traduction des Livres attribués à Zoroastre. XI. L'histoire de Nadir Chah. XII. L'histoire Chah, continued. Traité sur la Poésie Orientale. Introdue. to the Hist. of Nadir Shah: 1. A description of Asia; 2. A short history of Persia. XIII. Hitopadesa of Vishnuarman. The Enchanted Fruit; or, The Hindu Wife, an antediluvian Tale, [in verse.] Hymns; to Camdeu, to Pracratí, &c., [in verse.] The first Nemean ode of Pindar. Extracts from the last book of the Ramayan. Extracts from the Vedas. Fragments. Catalogue of Oriental MSS. presented to the Royal Society.

The above list of writings, especially when considered in connexion with the multiplied personal engagements of the author, certainly exhibits evidence of no ordinary literary industry. The admiration of the reader will be increased by an inspection of a table of the languages with which this eminent linguist was more or less familiar. 1. Greek. 2. Latin. 3. Italian. 4. French. 5. Spanish. 6. Portuguese. 7. Hebrew. 8. Arabic. 9. Persian. 10. Turkish. 11. German. 12. English. 13. Sanskrit. 14. Hindostanee. 15. Bengalee. 16. Tibetan. 17. Pali. 18. Phalavi. 19. Deri. 20. Chinese. 21. Russian. 22. Runic. 23. Syriac. 24. Ethiopic. 25. Coptic. 26. Dutch. 27. Swedish. 28. Welsh.

But Sir William's circle of attainments was by no means limited to a knowledge of languages, or to the various subjects upon which he employed his fertile pen, as indicated in the preceding catalogue of his productions: in chemistry, mathematics, botany, and music, he was also deeply versed.

"He seems," says Lord Teignmouth, "to have acted on this maxim;—that whatever had been attained was attainable by him; and he was never observed to overlook or to neglect any opportunity of adding to his accomplishments or to his knowledge. When in India, his studies began with the dawn, and, in seasons of intermission from professional duty, continued throughout the day; meditation retraced and confirmed what reading had collected or investigation discovered. By a regular application of time to particular occupations, he pursued various objects without confusion; and, in undertakings which depended on his individual perseverance, he was never deterred by difficulties from proceeding to a successful termination."—Life of Sir William Jones.

The great success with which he pursued his investigations into the literature of the East has elicited the admiration of all who have carried the spirit of inquiry into the same department:

"There are few authors to whom Oriental literature is under more deep obligations than to Sir William Jones; few who, like him, have not merely pointed out original and important sources of knowledge, but contributed in no inconsiderable degree to render them accessible. He was equally remarkable for his ardour and industry in philological pursuits, from a very early period of his life, until its premature and lamented close."—WELSFOLD: Origin of the English Language.

"William Jones has as yet had no rivals in the department which he selected; no one appears to have comprehended as he did the antiquities of Asia, and, above all, of India, with the acuteness of a philosopher, or to have seen the mode of reconciling every thing with the doctrine and history of the Scriptures."—FREDERICK VON SCHLEGEL: Lects. on the Hist. of Literature, Ancient and Modern; Lect. XIV.

And see Lect. V., where several of Sir William's translations are briefly noticed.

It is to be remembered that Schlegel penned the passages just quoted almost half a century since,—in 1812. Since that date Oriental literature has been cultivated with great success by Horace Hayman Wilson, Duncan Forbes, Monier Williams, J. Cockburn Thomson, Eastwick, Cowell, Cassal, Griffith, Barker, Keene, Johnson, Prinsep, and others. Among the modern specimens of translations from the Sanskrit, we may briefly notice that of the Bhagavad-Gitá, by J. C. Thomson, and the version of Sakontalá, or The Lost Ring, by M. Williams. The prose translations of these works—that of the former by Sir Charles Wilkins, of the latter by Sir William Jones—had made them known to Oriental scholars, but in the new versions recently published (1855) they are likely to have a much wider circulation. Sakontala, or The Lost Ring, has elicited ardent eulogies from those who have taken the pains to acquaint themselves with its many beauties:

"The only specimen of their plays (natakas) hitherto known to us is the delightful Sakontala, which, notwithstanding the foreign colouring of the native climate, bears in its general structure such a striking resemblance to our own romantic drama, that we might be inclined to suspect we owe this resemblance to the predilection for Shakspeare entertained by the English translator. (Sir William Jones), if his fidelity were not attested by other learned Orientalists."—AUGUSTUS WILLIAM VON SCHLEGEL: Lects. on Dramat. Art and Lit., 1808; Lect. II.

"Of all Indian poems, so far as we are as yet acquainted with them, that of Sakuntala (which has been translated with the most scrupulous exactness by Jones) is the work which gives the best idea of Indian poetry: it is a speaking example of that sort of beauty which is peculiar to the spirit of their fictions."—FREDERICK VON SCHLEGEL: Lects. on the Hist. of Lit., 1812; Lect. V.

"Káldása, the celebrated author of Sakontala, is a masterly describer of the influence which nature exercises upon the minds of lovers. This great poet flourished at the Court of Vikramaditya, and was therefore contemporary with Virgil and Horace. Tenderness in the expression of feeling, and richness of creative fancy, have assigned to him his lofty place among the poets of all nations."—ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

But the glowing eulogy of Goethe must not be omitted: "Wouldst thou the young year's blossoms and the fruits of its decline,

And all by which the soul is charm'd, enraptur'd, feasted, fed?
Wouldst thou the earth and heaven itself in one sole name combine?
I name thee, O Sakontala! and all at once is said."

Mr. Williams's translation is a free one, and in prose and verse, and a great improvement (according to Professor H. H. Wilson) upon the original translation by Sir William Jones. Whilst noticing modern translations of this school, we must not omit to make honourable mention of the following:

Khírud-Afroz, Anvar-i Suhaili, Gulistán, Bâgh o Bahár, and Prem Ságar, by Prof. E. B. Eastwick; a selection from the Odes of Háfiz, and Vikramorvâsí, by Prof. E. B. Cowell; the Anekártha of Hemachandra, by Charles Cassal; Baitál Pachísí, by Prof. W. B. Barker; Akhlák-i Muhsíní, by Prof. H. G. Keene; and Hitopadésa, by Prof. Johnson.

We observe that a prize of £300 has been recently offered, (March, 1857,) by a gentleman lately a member of the Bengal Civil Service, for the best treatise on the Vedánta. The treatise is to be written in German or French. The essays are to be lodged with the Royal Asiatic Society before April 1, 1860, and Professor Lassen, of Bonn, Dr. Windischmann, of Munich, and Professor Max Müller, of Oxford, are to be the examiners and adjudicators. The object is to elicit treatises which will be of assistance to Christian missionaries in the East. Some years ago, the same gentleman who offers this prize placed two sums of £500 at the disposal of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, for essays on Christianity and Hinduism.

But we have wandered from our theme, and the length of our article warns us to return. It may be readily supposed that the melancholy news of the early demise of the profound scholar, the upright judge, the conscientious Christian, and the affectionate friend, elicited many tears not only in the land where he had been known from boyhood, but also in his adopted home, among a simple and confiding people, who had suffered too much from the cruelty and extortion of many of his countrymen not to know how to value a man of such true nobility of character as Sir William Jones:

"The pundits who were in the habit of attending him," remarks his friend and biographer, "when I saw them at a public durbar a few days after that melancholy event, could neither restrain their tears for his loss, nor find terms to express their admiration at the wonderful progress which he had made in the sciences which they professed."—LORD TEIGNMOUTH: Life of Sir William Jones.

The commendations of his countrymen have been lavished upon his character and attainments with all the profusion of eloquence animated by the warmth of affection, and yet have not exceeded the rigid estimate of impartial criticism.

"Know him, sir!" exclaimed the friend of his boyhood, Samuel Parr,—who, with all his pompous affectation, had a warm heart under his Roman mail,—“Know him, sir! who did not know him? Who did not bend in devout respect at the variety and depth of his learning, the integrity of his principles, and the benevolence of his heart?”—Barker's Parriana, 322.

"Need I dwell a moment," says Dr. Dibdin, "on the recommendation of the works of Sir William Jones? A scholar, a critic, philosopher, lawyer, and poet,—where shall we find, in the works of the same man, greater demonstrations of pure and correct feeling, and cultivated and classical taste, than in the volumes here noticed and recommended? The piety of Sir William Jones was not inferior to his learning. A thoroughly good and great-minded man, his caution, humility, and diffidence were equal to his learning and multifarious attainments; and there is a vigour and raciness in his translations of Persian poetry which give them the enchanting air of original productions."—Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 425.

"His writings everywhere breathe pure taste in morals as well as in literature; and it may be said with truth, that not a single sentiment has escaped him which does not indicate the real elegance and dignity which pervaded the most secret recesses of his mind. No author is better calculated to inspire those generous sentiments of liberty without which the most just principles are useless and lifeless."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH.

"The name of Sir William Jones is associated not only with the splendour of a great reputation, but with almost all the amiable and exemplary virtues; and the tender affections, which were a little chilled by the aspect of his vast literary attainments, are won sweetly back, and rest with delight upon the view which is here exhibited [in Lord Teignmouth's Life of Sir William Jones] of the purity, the integrity, and the mildness of his private manners. . . .

The most remarkable features of his character, indeed, seem to have resulted from the union of this gentleness and modesty of disposition with a very lofty conception of his own capability and destination."—LORD JEFFREY: Review of Lord Teignmouth's Life of Sir Wm. Jones, Edin. Rev., v. 329-330, Jan. 1805.

"In the course of a short life, Sir William Jones acquired a degree of knowledge which the ordinary faculties of men, if they were blessed with antediluvian longevity, could scarcely hope to surpass. His learning threw light on the laws of Greece and India, on the general literature of Asia, and on the history of the family of nations. He carried philosophy, eloquence, and philanthropy into the character of a lawyer and a judge. Amidst the driest toils of erudition, he retained a sensibility to the beauties of poetry, and a talent for transfusing them into his own language, which has seldom been united with the same degree of industry. When he went abroad, it was not to enrich himself with the spoils of avarice or ambition, but to search, amidst the ruins of Oriental literature, for treasures which he would not have exchanged "For all Bocara's vaunted gold,

Or all the gems of Samarcand."

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

But Lord Jeffrey takes a view of this subject less discouraging to the young student, and tells us that,

"Great as Sir William Jones's attainments unquestionably were, they may be contemplated without despair by any one who is not frightened by his industry." Nor is his lordship disposed to concede to Sir William Jones's mind the attributes of original genius, philosophical acumen, or great strength of understanding. A similar opinion to this was expressed in very decided terms by one who, as we have just seen, entertained the highest admiration for Sir William's character,—Sir James Mackintosh. But the time for quotation is passed, and the curious reader can pursue this matter further by referring to the Edinburgh Review for January, 1805,—Lord Jeffrey's Review of Lord Teignmouth's Life of Sir William Jones; and to the North American Review for October, 1832.—Alexander H. Everett's Conversations with Sir James Mackintosh; Sir James Mackintosh's Life.

Jones, William Alfred, b. June 26, 1817, in the city of New York, is the son of the late Hon. David S. Jones, and a member of a family which has long been eminent in the annals of jurisprudence. The subject of our notice graduated at Columbia College, New York, and has been for some years officiating in the capacity of librarian to that institution. 1. The Analyst: a Collection of Miscellaneous Papers, New York, 1840, 18mo.

"This is a volume well worthy to be read. It gives proof of reflection, observation, and literary culture; and its style is always clear, sometimes forcible and terse, though not often elegant. It abounds with shrewd remarks, happy criticisms, and well-drawn traits of character. But it is not executed with equal felicity throughout. The author imitates largely in some parts of his book; he writes not from his own mind and after his own fashion, but draws from others both matter and form."—*N. Amer. Mr. Jones has been long known as a critic, and his uncollected essays, contributed to the New York Church Record, Areturus, Whig Review, Democratic Review, &c., would fill two vols. of the size of those which he has given to the world. Jonson, Ben, or, more correctly, Benjamin Johnson, 1573-1637, one of the most eminent of English dramatists, was a native of Westminster, and came into the world a month after the decease of his father,—who, after suffering imprisonment and confiscation of estates for his Protestant principles, became a preacher of those doctrines for which he had been in bonds. It has been generally asserted by the poet's biographers, from the time of Wood to Gifford, that his mother, after the decease of Jonson's father, married again, and that the object of her choice was a bricklayer, named Thomas Fowler. But the later researches of Mr. Peter Cunningham, endorsed by the learned imprimatur of Mr. J. Payne Collier, have brought us to the conclusion, to borrow the language of the last-named gentleman, that, "if Ben Jonson's mother married a second time, we have yet to ascertain who was her second husband." That the future poet, however, did in his early youth give some reluctant attention to the useful art and mystery of brickmaking, we have his own avowal, conveyed in most disgusting terms. Previously to this unpromising entrance upon the responsibilities of active life, Jonson had pursued his studies at the school attached to St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, at Westminster School, (under the illustrious Camden,) and for a week or month, when in his sixteenth year, at St. John's College, Cambridge. After throwing aside his trowel, the mechanic turned soldier, and gained great distinction by his bravery while serving in a campaign in the Low Countries. There is a tradition that on his return to England at the age of nineteen he returned to pursue his studies at Cambridge; but this conjecture appears to have no better foundation than the difficulty of otherwise accounting for that proficiency which he undoubtedly acquired in some of the Latin authors. It appears much more likely that he immediately became connected with the stage,—where he had but little success as an actor,—and not long after applied his literary talent to good purpose by assisting the dramatists of the day in the composition of their pieces. An unfortunate quarrel with a brother-actor, named Gabriel Spencer, led to a duel which resulted in the death of the latter and the imprisonment, for about a twelvemonth, of the unhappy victor. Whilst in prison, he was visited by a Roman Catholic priest, who presented his doctrines in so favourable a light to the repentant duellist that he became a convert, and for twelve years retained the ecclesiastical connexion thus commenced. The young actor was no sooner discharged from custody than he sought to resign his freedom, and, perhaps without a due appreciation of the serious step he was taking, was not satisfied until able to write himself a married man. The hardships of poverty pressed sorely upon the young couple, whose sole fortune consisted in their abundant stock of mutual affection, (we speak of the honeymoon,) and the actor determined to become an author in the enlarged sense of that term, by trying his luck with a drama, calculated, he fondly hoped, to produce a harvest of profit and reputation. The precise time at which he composed the Comedie of Every Man in his Itinerary cannot now be ascertained, but it was originally acted by the Lord-Chamberlain's servants, in the form in which we have it, in the year 1598, although it is asserted that it was acted eleven times between Nov. 25, 1596, and Nov. 10, 1597. He seems to have previously written for the stage conjointly with others, as we have intimated above, and without assistance; but we are obliged to commence the list of his ascertained productions with the play just named. This at once gained him fame and enemies; and now seem to have commenced those literary quarrels the details of which form so large a portion of Jonson's personal history. Rejecting the stories of his misunderstandings with Shakspeare, who, it is asserted,—but the assertion is not believed by Gifford,—was the means of introducing his first comedy on the stage, we still leave our poet's hands full of his assailants,—Decker, Marston, Gill, and other active combatants. This successful piece was followed by Every Man out of his Humour, a Comical Satyre, first acted in 1599; Cynthias Revels, or The Fountainne of Selfe-Love, first acted in 1599; The Poetaster, or His Arraignement, a Comical Satyre, first acted in 1601; Seianus his Fall, a Tragedie, first acted in 1603; Volpone, or The Foxe, a Comedie, first acted in 1605; Epicone, or The Silent Woman, Comedie, first acted in 1609; The Alchemist, a Comedie, first acted in 1610; Catiline his Conspiracy, a Tragedie, first acted in 1611. So far we have quoted the titles of our author's principal productions (not passing to notice his minor pieces) from his own collective edit. of his Workes, pub. in 1616, now lying before us. To these succeed, in this ancient folio, Epigrammes, 1. Booke; The Forrest, (Songs, Odes, &c.) Part of the King's Entertainment in passing to his Coronation; A Panegyre on The Happie Entrance of James our Sovereigne to His first high Session of Parliament in this his Kingdom the 19 of March, 1603; Masques at Court.

It will be seen that in this folio, pub. in 1616, the author did not include the Comedies of Bartholomew Fair, produced in 1614, and The Devil's an Ass, produced in 1616. It is probable, also, that a number of minor pieces written before this time (many are without any date) were reserved by the author for a future volume of his collected Workes:

"He seems," says Gifford, "to have meditated a complete edition of all his works; but he apparently grew weary towards the conclusion of the volume, and never (unless peculiarly called upon) had recourse to the press afterwards. The second folio is a wretched continuation of the first, printed from the MSS. surreptitiously obtained during his life, or ignorantly hurried through the press after his death. It bears a variety of dates, from 1631 to 1641 inclusive. It is probable that he looked forward to a period of retirement and ease; but the loss of his MSS. by fire, and the fatal illness which almost immediately afterwards seized him, rendered all such views abortive. It is remarkable that he calls his Epigrams 'Book the First;' he had, therefore, others in his hand; but they have perished."—Memoir of Ben Jonson.

It was three years after Jonson's death before any of his later productions were published. Two small edits. of his minor pieces were issued in 1640, and in the next year appeared a reprint of his own folio of 1616, and a second vol. of the same size, containing his dramatic pieces from 1612, several masques, and all that could be discovered of his occasional poetry. Another collective ed. of his Works was pub. in 1692, fol.; another (a reprint of the last) in 1715, 6 vols. 8vo; and a more complete one, edited by the Rev. Peter Whalley, in 1756, 7 vols. 8vo. A second issue of Whalley's edit. was commenced in 1792, but the publication extended no further than two numbers. In 1811, 4 vols. r. 8vo, appeared—what has been denominated "an execrable edition"—The Dramatic Works of Ben Jonson and Beaumont and Fletcher. Whalley's edit. was most carelessly compiled, the text that of the impression of 1715, rarely collated with early edits., and often erroneous, and the notes of little if of any value. In 1816 Mr. William Gifford pub. the first good edit. of Jonson's Works. This was accompanied with Notes, Critical and Explanatory, and a Biographical Memoir. It was pub. in 9 vols. 8vo, £6 6s.; r. 8vo, £9. We shall have something more to say of this edit. presently. In 1838, Mr. Moxon, of London, pub. an edit. of Jonson's Works in r. 8vo, edited by Barry Cornwall, another edit. in 1841, r. 8vo, and again in 1853, r. 8vo. Mr. Moxon put forth a collective edit., prefaced in both cases with Gifford's Memoir of the Author. To this Memoir, and especially to the biography of Jonson in Austin and Ralph's Lives of the Poets Laureate, Lon., 1853, 8vo, we refer the reader for further information respecting "Rare Ben Jonson." The other accounts of the poet, referred to below, may be examined for the gratification of curiosity, and for the amusing gossip of the times to which they relate; but, according to Mr. Gifford, few men have suffered more from literary injustice than the author of Catiline and Sejanus. Mr. Gifford himself, however, is perhaps too warm a partisan to be considered an infallible authority. In Moxon's reprints of Jonson's Works, above referred to, (1841, r. 8vo; 1853, r. 8vo,) the arrangement is as follows: after the eleven dramatic pieces already noticed by us, come The Staple of News, a Play; The New Inn, or The Light Heart, a comedy; The Magnetic Lady, or Humours Reconciled, a play; A Tale of a Tub, a play; (this is the last work of the author that was submitted to the stage); The Sad Shepherd, or A Tale of Robin Hood, a play; The Case is Altered, a play; Entertainments; Masques; Epigrams; The Forest; Underwoods; Leges Convivales; Translations from the Latin Poets; Timber, or Discoveries made upon Men and Matter; The English Grammar; Jonsonus Viribus, or The Memory of Ben Jonson; Glossary; Index. Between Gifford's Memoir of the Author and the first of his pieces are inserted Ancient Commendatory Verses on Ben Jonson. We have already referred (see CHAPMAN, GEORGE) to Jonson's share in the composition of Eastward-Ho, and he was a partner in other literary enterprises,—according to the custom of the poets of the age.

It was in 1616 that Jonson received an acceptable mark of the royal favour, in the shape of an annual pension from King James of one hundred marks a year for life, (from henceforth we designate him by the title of Poet-Laureate,) which was increased by King Charles, in 1630, to one hundred pounds sterling, and "a terse of Canary Wine." This augmentation of his income (for which, indeed, he had petitioned the king in a rhyming epistle) did not come any too soon, for the extravagance of the poet between 1616 and 1625, his multiplied libations at the Mermaid, and profuse hospitality at his own table, had reduced him to great straits. It is melancholy to be obliged to add that he died in poverty: it is more pleasing to our feelings to be able to record the fact that he departed in penitence and faith,—regretting the occasional irreverence of his pen, and, we trust, deploring the frequent abuse of powers which were given for nobler ends. He was called to the "dread account" before the "Judge of all the earth" on the 6th day of August, 1637. Did our space permit, we might, ere we proceeded to a brief consideration of Jonson's characteristics as a writer, linger a short time over some of the prominent incidents of the poet's life especially upon his memorable visit to Drummond of Hawthornden in 1619, his wit (or wet) combats with Shakspeare, and his less amiable contests with the second-rate wits of this belligerent age. But we have already referred the reader to abundant sources of information, and with them we shall leave him, after he has borne us company for a few moments longer, whilst we quote some opinions from a few eminent authorities respecting the characteristics of this once-favourite author.

"Ben Jonson, a younger contemporary and rival of Shakspeare, who laboured in the sweat of his brow, but with no great success, to expel the romantic drama from the English stage and to form it on the model of the ancients, gave it as his opinion that Shakspeare did not blot enough, and that, as he did not possess much school-learning, he owed more to nature than to art. . . . Jonson was a critical poet in the good and bad sense of the word. He endeavoured to form an exact estimate of what he had on every occasion to perform; hence he succeeded best in that species of the drama which makes the principal demand on the understanding and with little call on the imagination and feeling,—the comedy of character. He introduced nothing into his works which critical dissection should not be able to extract again, as his confidence in it was such, that he conceived it exhausted every thing which pleases and charms us in poetry. He was not aware that in the chemical retort of the critic what is most valuable, the volatile living spirit of a poem, evaporates. His pieces are in general deficient in soul, in that nameless something which never ceases to attract and enchant us even because it is indefinable. In the lyrical pieces, his Masques, we feel the want of a certain mental music of imagery and intonation, which the most accurate observation of difficult measures cannot give. He is everywhere deficient in those excellencies which, unsought, flow from the poet's pen, and which no artist who purposely hunts for them can ever hope to find. We must not quarrel with him, however, for entertaining a high opinion of his own works, since whatever merits they have he owed, like acquired moral properties, altogether to himself. The production of them was attended with labour, and unfortunately it is also a labour to read them. They resemble solid and regular edifices, before which, however, the clumsy scaffolding still remains, to interrupt and prevent us from viewing the architecture with ease and receiving from it a harmonious impression. We have of Jonson two tragical attempts, and a number of comedies and masques.

"He could have risen to the dignity of the tragic tone, but for the pathetic he had not the smallest turn. As he incessantly preaches up the imitation of the ancients, (and he had, we cannot deny, a learned acquaintance with their works,) it is astonishing to observe how much his two tragedies differ, both in substance and form, from the Greek tragedy. . . . After these attempts, Jonson took leave of the Tragic Muse, and in reality his talents were far better suited to Comedy, and that, too, merely the Comedy of Character. His characterization, however, is more marked with serious satire than playful ridicule: the latter Roman satirists, rather than the comic authors, were his models. In so far as plot is concerned, the greatest praise is merited by Volpone, The Alchemist, and Epicoene, or the Silent Woman. . . . Of all Jonson's pieces there is hardly one which, as it stands, would please on the stage in the present day, even as most of them failed to please in his own time: extracts from them, however, could hardly fail to be successful. In general, much might be borrowed from him, and much might be learned both from his merits and defects. His characters are, for the most part, solidly and judiciously drawn; what he most fails in, is the art of setting them off by the contrast of situations. The peculiarity of Jonson's Masques most deserving of remark seems to me to be the anti-masques, as they are called, which the poet himself sometimes attaches to his own invention, and generally allows to precede the serious act. As the ideal flatteries, for whose sake the gods have been brought down from Olympus, are but too apt to fall into mawkishness, this antidote on such occasions is certainly deserving of commendation."—AUGUSTUS WILLIAM VON SCHLEGEL, Lects. on Dramat. Art and Lit.; Black's Trans., Lon., 1846, 347, 461-462, 463, 465, 466.

Dr. Johnson is thought to have very happily hit off the character of his dramatic namesake in the following graphic lines in his celebrated prologue:

"Then Jonson came, instructed from the school,
To please by method, and invent by rule.
His studious patience and laborious art
With regular approach assayed the heart:
Cold approbation gave the ling'ring bays,
For they who durst not censure scarce could praise.
A mortal horn, he met the general doom,
But left, like Egypt's kings, a lasting tomb."

Mr. Campbell will be found to dissent widely from the authorities just quoted, and from several others whose opinions we shall have occasion to cite:

"The art of Jonson was not confined to the cold observations of the unities of place and time, but appears in the whole adaptation of his incidents and characters to the support of each other. Beneath his learning and art he moves with an activity which may be compared to the strength of a man who can leap and bound under the heaviest armour."—Specimens of English Poetry.

"There are people who cannot take olives; and I cannot much relish Ben Jonson, though I have taken some pains to do it, and went to the task with every sort of good will. I do not deny his power or his merit; far from it; but it is to me a repulsive and unamiable kind. He was a great man in himself, but one cannot readily sympathize with him. His works, as the characteristic productions of an individual mind, or as records of the manners of a particular age, cannot be valued too highly; but they have little charm for the more general reader."—Hazlitt's Lects. on the English Comic Writers; Lect. II.

"Ben Jonson's serious productions are, in my opinion, superior to his comic ones. What he does, is the result of strong sense and painful industry; but sense and industry agree better with the grave and severe than with the light and gay productions of the muse."—Hazlitt's Lects. on the Dramat. Lit. of the Age of Elizabeth; Lect. IV.

"If asked to give our opinion of Ben Jonson's powers in general, we should say that he was a poet of a high order, as far as learning, fancy, and an absolute rage of ambition could conspire to make him one; but that he never touched at the highest, except by violent efforts and during the greatest felicity of his sense of success. The material so predominated in him over the spiritual,—the sensual over the sentimental,—that he was more social than loving, and far more willful and fanciful than imaginative."—Leigh Hunt's Men and Women and Books: Sackling and Ben Jonson.

"I do not think that his poetical merits are yet properly appreciated. I cannot consent that the palm of humour alone shall be given to him, while in wit, feeling, pathos, and poetical diction he is to be snuk fathoms below Fletcher and Massinger. In the last particular I think that he excels them both, and, indeed, all his contemporaries, excepting Shakspeare."—Henry Veale's Lects. on English Poetry; Lect. III.

Mr. Disraeli also comes to the rescue of the abused poet: "Some modern critics, whose delicacy of taste in its natural feebleness could not strain itself to the vigour of Jonson, have strangely failed to penetrate into the depths of that mighty mind; and some modern poets have delivered their sad evidence that for them the Coryphæus of our elder dramatists has become unintelligible."—Amenities of Literature: The Humours of Jonson.

"With such extraordinary requisites for the stage, joined to a strain of poetry always manly, frequently lofty, and sometimes almost sublime, it may at first appear strange that his dramas are not more in vogue; but a little attention to his peculiar modes and habits of thinking will, perhaps, enable us in some measure to account for it. The grace and urbanity which mark his lighter pieces he laid aside whenever he approached the stage, and put on the censor with the sock. This system (whether wise or unwise) naturally led to circumstances which affect his popularity as a writer: he was obliged, as one of his critics justly observes, to hunt down his own characters; and, to continue the metaphor, he was frequently carried too far in the chase."—Gifford's Memoir of Ben Jonson.

The whole of this criticism should be consulted by the reader.

"The fault in Jonson's two tragedies is that there is not enough to interest flesh and blood in them and to stir up the sympathies, the hopes and fears, of humanity. There is a cold historic sublimity, which, however it may command the homage of the intellect, awakes no responsive echo in the heart. The characters are true to history,—true, therefore, to human nature; and they move on in the plot with stern and terrible decision. But the harsh outline lacks those lighter pencillings, those softer colourings, in which poetry surpasses history, and without which the picture, though bold and masterly, will not chain the living gaze of the spectator to the painter's canvas. . . . His best comedies are so generally known that a lengthy critique on them would be tedious. Those that are less read are scarcely deserving of any notice, beyond the interest that must attach itself to any production from the pen of such a man. Every Man in his Humour, The Alchemist, Volpone, or the Fox, and The Silent Woman, are the best of the numerous comedies he has left us. . . . Jonson's masques are beautiful. Though with occasional extravagant fancies and strained conceits, they are full of learning and taste. They were many of them written for great festive occasions. . . . Some beautiful songs are introduced into them. . . . As a translator he must not be forgotten. He has left a version of Horace's Ars Poetica, and a few of the odes. The former is marvellously literal, and not so tame as might therefore be supposed. In the latter there is little to praise; but he has excelled these regular translations in passages of the masques and elsewhere, which he has borrowed from ancient authors and literally rendered. . . . Jonson is no exception to the rule that clear and strong utterance is one of the chief characteristics of genius, and that great poets have been good prose-writers. The fragment entitled Timber, or Discoveries, sufficiently shows, without appealing to his letters, dedications, and prefaces, that English literature lost much by the destruction of his prose manuscripts. The small remnant that is left is full of erudite criticism, profound reflection, and great severity of judgment. There are notes on books and on life, arranged in a strange and arbitrary manner, written in a concise and pregnant style, and, though they do not contain so much sententious wisdom, remind us forcibly of the Essays of Bacon. . . . We have spoken of Jonson as the author of tragedy, of comedy, of masque, as a translator and prose-writer. But it is as a lyric poet also that we claim for him a homage and admiration which has hitherto been sparingly given if yielded at all."—Austin and Dalph's Lives of the Poets-Laureate, Lon., 1853, 90, 91-92, 95, 96, 98-99, 101.

An accomplished female writer, whose graceful criticisms we have frequently had occasion to quote in the course of this volume, speaks with enthusiasm of the lyrics just referred to:

"We of this age, a little too careless perhaps of learned labour, would give a whole wilderness of Catlines and Poetasters, and even of Alchemists and Volpones, for another score of the exquisite lyrics which are scattered carelessly through the plays and masques which—strange contrast with the rugged verse in which they are imbedded—seem to have burst into being at a stroke, just as the evening primrose flings open her fair petals at the close of the day. Lovelier songs were never written than these wild and irregular ditties."—Mary Russell Milford's Recollec. of a Literary Life.

We shall hardly feel that we can willingly pass on to the next article in our Dictionary without quoting some opinions respecting our author from some of the great men of his own day and the age which followed. The best-known of such passages is that which bears the imprimatur of Jonson's host of April, 1619,—Drummond of Hawthornden. None of the abundant censures lavished upon his hero more excites the indignation of Gifford than these jottings of the unfortunate Boswell of the age of James I. But, it Drummond was not the victim of the furor biographicus, surely Gifford was, and therefore (to borrow from Dr. Johnson's letter to James Macpherson) regard is to be paid less to what he says than what he is able to prove. The easy and confident arrogance with which Gifford contradicts the assertions of Jonson's contemporaries, of those who lived in the succeeding few years, and of later authorities, who perhaps had as good information, and certainly far better manners, than the editor of the Quarterly, is not a little amusing. We are not insensible to the value of his critical labours, and have no disposition to endorse Mr. Leigh Hunt's assertion that

"Sympathy with Jonson's coarseness and his love of the caustic, a poor verbal tact, and a worship of authority, were the only qualifications for a critical sense of him possessed by the petulant and presumptuous Gifford."—Men, Women, and Books: Sackling and Ben Jonson.

But surely Gifford might have displayed all that he had to offer in its best light, without so ruthlessly assailing his predecessors. In the words of a late critic,

"The author's one plan for reinstating Jonson in the good opinion of his countrymen is to fall foul of every critic, old or recent, that had ever said a word against him."—North British Review, Feb. 1856.

We may remark, in passing, that a notice of Barry Cornwall's edit. of Jonson's Works, already referred to by us, will be found in Leigh Hunt's Men, Women, and Books. Whilst Jonson was Drummond's guest, it was the custom of the latter to register the sayings of the distinguished sojourner, and at the conclusion of these piquant entries he takes the opportunity to record his own opinion of the characteristics of his visitor, who, he tells us, was "A great lover and praiser of himself; a contentment and scorner of others; given rather to lose a friend than a jest; jealous of every word and action of those about him, especially after drink, which is one of the elements in which he lived; a dissemler of ill parts which reign in him; a bragger of some good that he wanted; thinketh nothing well done but what either he himself or some of his friends hath said or done. He is passionately kind and angry, careless either to gain or keep; vindictive, but, if he be well answered at himself interprets best sayings and deeds often to the worst. He was for any religion, as being versed in both; oppressed with fancy, which hath ever mastered his reason,—a general disease in many poets; his inventions are smooth and easy, but above all he excelleth in a translation."—Drummond's Works, 1711, fol., 224-226.

It is only proper to remark that Drummond's notes are not correctly printed in this folio ed. of 1711. A correct text, with illustrative notes, was for the first time printed, in 1842, by the Shakspeare Society, under the editorial supervision of Mr. David Laing, by whom the MS. was discovered. We have already noticed (see DRUMMOND, Wm.) Mr. Peter Cunningham's ed. of Drummond's Works, 1833, 12mo. A new ed. by the same editor was pub. in 1852, Edin., 8vo.

The first charge which Drummond prefers in the above indictment is unfortunately too fully endorsed by contemporary evidence to admit of any debate. To say nothing of Owen Feltham's admirable parody upon Jonson's "Come, leave the loathed stage,"—a burst of indignation at the failure of his play of The New Inn,—we have a letter from Howell upon this theme, a few lines of which we shall quote:

"SIR,—I was invited yesternight to a solemn supper by B. J. [Ben Jonson], where you were deeply remembered: there was good company, excellent cheer, choice wines, and jovial welcome: one thing intervened, which almost spoiled the relish of the rest,—that it began to engross all the discourse, to vapour extremely by himself, and, by vilifying others, to magnify his own muse. T. C. [Tom Carew] buzzed me in the ear, that though Ben had barr'd up a great deal of knowledge, yet it seems he had not read the ethics, which, among other precepts of morality, forbid self-commendation, declaring it to be an ill-favoured solism in good manners. . . . But, for my part, I am content to dispense with the Roman infirmity of Ben, now that time hath snowed upon his pericranium. You know Ovid and (your) Horace were subject to this humour,—the first bursting out into—

"Jamaque opus exegi, quod nec Jovis ira nec ignis," &c.

"The other into—

"Exegi monumentum ære perennius," &c.

"As also Cicero, while he forced himself into this hexameter:

"O fortunatum natam me consule Romam."

"There is another reason that excuseth B.—which is, that if one be allowed to love the natural issue of his body, why not that of his brain, which is of a spiritual and more noble extraction?"—To Sir Thomas Hauek, Kt., Westminster, 5th April, 1636.

See our Life of JAMES HOWELL, No. 3, in this Dictionary. It was well that Howell bore this indictment so well, for Gerard Langbaine tells us that "Ben Jonson's greatest weakness was that he could not bear censure," and again,

"He was a Man of a very free Temper, and withal blunt, and somewhat haughty to those who were either Rivals in Fame, or Enemies to his Writings, (witness his Postler, wherein he falls upon Decker, and his answer to Dr. Gill, who writ against his Magnetic Lady;) otherwise of a good Sociable Humour, when amongst his Sons and Friends in the Apollon: from whose Laws the reader may possibly better Judge of his Temper; a copy of which I have transcribed for the Lear'd Readers perusal."—Account of the Eng. Dramat. Poets, Oxf., 1691.

They were a merry set of fellows that met at The Apollo and at The Mermaid,—too merry by half, or rather too free with the stimulants that provoked their merriment. When Frank Beaumont was paying a visit in the country, he felt the loss of these highly-seasoned festivities, and thus pours out his troubles into the bosom of his correspondent, Rare Ben:

"Methinks the little wit I had is lost
Since I saw you; for wit is like a rest
Held up at Tennis, which men do best
With the best gamesters. What things have we seen Done at the Mermaid! heard words that have been
So nimble, and so full of subtle flame,
As if that every one, from whom they came,
Had meant to put his whole wit in a jest,
And had resolved to live a fool the rest
Of his dull life."

It had been better for the whole company had they loved their own firesides more and the Mermaids and Apollos less. Of this gay circle Master Shakspeare was a prominent member, and good old Thomas Fuller tells us

"Many were the wit-combats [vet-combats," the last edition of Fuller, from which we quote, prints it] betwixt him and Ben Jonson; which two I behold like a Spanish galleon and an English man-of-war: Master Jonson (like the former) was built far higher in learning; solid, but slow in his performances. Shakspeare, with the English man-of-war, lesser in bulk but lighter in sailing, could turn with all tides, tack about, and take advantage of all winds, by the quickness of his wit and invention."—Worthies of England, Lon., 1840, iii. 284-285.

As Fuller was only eight years of age when Shakspeare died, he of course does not intend us to understand the word "behold" in its literal sense. Jonson was not always disposed to engage in these wit-combats, for, as Fuller himself tells us in another place,

"He would sit silent in a learned company, and suck in (besides wine) their several humours into his observation. What was ore in others, he was able to refine to himself.

"He was paramount in the dramatic part of poetry, and taught the stage an exact conformity to the laws of comedians. His comedies were above the volge, (which are only tickled with obscenity) and took not so well at the first stroke as at the rebound, when beheld the second time: yea, they will endure reading and that due commendation so long as either ingenuity or learning are fashionable in our nation. If his later be not so spritful and vigorous as his first pieces, all that are old will, and all that desire to be old should, excuse him therein."—Ibid., ii. 425.

"The most learned, judicious, and correct, generally so accounted, of our English Comedians, and the more admired for being so, for that neither the height of natural parts, for he was no Shakspeare, nor the cost of extraordinary education, for he is reported but a bricklayer's son, but his own proper industry and addiction to books advanced him to this perfection."—Phillips's Theat. Poet. Angliæ, & Brydges's ed., 1800, 241-250, q.

The comparison between Shakspeare and Jonson—whom before Gifford's Memoir it was the fashion to represent as the enemy and vilifier of his illustrious brother—is a favourite topic with many critics. It is not omitted in Dryden's admirable summary of the literary characteristics of Ben Jonson:

"As for Jonson, to whose character I am now arrived, if we look upon him while he was himself, (for his last plays were but his dotages,) I think him the most learned and judicious writer which any theatre ever had. He was a most severe judge of himself as well as others. One cannot say he wanted wit, but rather that he was frugal of it. In his works you find little to retrench or alter. Wit and language, and humour also in some measure, we had before him, but something of art was wanting to the drama before he came. He managed his strength to more advantage than any which preceded him. You seldom find him making love in any of his scenes, or endeavouring to move the passions: his genius was too sullen and saturnine to do it gracefully, especially when he knew he came after those who had performed both to such a height. Humour was his proper sphere, and in that he delighted most to present mechanical people. He was deeply conversant in the ancients, both Greek and Latin, and he borrowed boldly from them. There is scarce a poet or historian among the Roman authors of those times whom he has not translated in 'Scjanus' or 'Catinus.' But he has done his robberies so openly that one may see he fears not to be taxed by any law. He invades authors like a monarch, and what would be theft in other poets is only victory in him. With the spoils of these writers, he so represents Old Rome to us, in its rites, ceremonies, and customs, that if one of their poets had written either of his tragedies, we had seen less of it than in him. If there was any fault in his language, it was that he waxed it too closely and laboriously, in his comedies especially; perhaps, too, he did a little too much Romanize our language, leaving the words he translated almost as much Latin as he found them, wherein, though he learnedly followed their language, he did not enough comply with the idioms of ours. If I would compare him with Shakspeare, I must acknowledge him the most correct poet, but Shakspeare the greater wit. Shakspeare was the Homer or father of dramatic poets. Jonson was the Virgil, the pattern of elaborate writing. I admire him, but I love Shakspeare."

Sir Walter Scott thus contrasts Jonson and Shakspeare:

"The one is like an ancient statue, the beauty of which, springing from the exactness of the proportion, does not always strike at first sight, but rises upon us as we bestow time in considering it; the other is the representation of a monster, which is at first only surprising, and ludicrous and disgusting ever after."—Life of Dryden.

The following lines from an old play, entitled Retrvno from Parnassus, pub. in 1606, (ten years before Shakspeare's death,) are too pertinent to our subject to be omitted:

"Who lozes Adonis loze, or Lucrece's rape,
His sweeter verse contaynes hart robbing life,
Could but a grauer subiect him content.

Without loze's foolish luy languishment."—Act I. Scene II.
"Few of the university pen plays will; they smell too much of that writer Uoid, and that writer Metamorphosis, and talke too much of Proserpina & Iuppiter. Why heres our fellow Shakspeare puts them all downe, I and Ben Jonson too. O that Ben Jonson is a pestilent fellow, he brought up Horace giuing the Poets a pill, but our fellow Shakspeare hath giuen him a purge that made him beray his credit."—Act IV. Scene III.

We would fain quote from Hazlitt's lively comparison between these two great poets, but this our space forbids. The reader must himself turn to Lecture II. of the series on the English Comic Writers. The commendations of the Great Earl of Clarendon and Lord Falkland (both personal friends of Jonson) are too weighty, and the poetical portrait of Churchill too admirably drawn, to be omitted in a biographical article of Rare Ben Jonson.

"His name," says Lord Clarendon, "can never be forgotten, having by his very good learning, and the severity of his nature and manners, very much reformed the stage; and indeed the English poetry itself. His natural advantages were, judgment to order and govern fancy, rather than excess of fancy; his productions being slow and upon deliberation, yet then abounding with great wit and fancy, and will live accordingly; and surely as he did exceedingly exalt the English language in eloquence, propriety, and masculine expressions, so he was the best judge, of and fitted to prescribe rules to poetry and poets, of any man who had lived with, or before him, or since: if Mr. Cowley had not made a flight beyond all men, with that modesty yet as to ascribe much of this to the example of learning of Ben Jonson. His conversation was very good, and with the men of most note."

The assertion last quoted is supported by the testimony of the other nobleman whom we have mentioned as one of the poet's admiring friends:

"To him how daily flock'd, what reverence gave,
All that had wit, or would be thought to have;
How the wise too did with mere wits agree,
As Pembroke, Portland, and grave D'Aubigny;
Nor thought the rigid'st senator a shame
To add his praise to so deserv'd a fame!"

Churchill's lifelike portrait must conclude an article which has grown on our hands considerably beyond our intended limits:

"Next Jonson sat, in ancient learning train'd;
His rigid judgment Fancy's flight restrain'd;
Correctly prun'd each wild luxuriant thought,
Mark'd out her course, nor spar'd a glorious fault.
The book of man he read with nicest art,
And ransack'd all the secrets of the heart;
Excited Penetration's utmost force,
And trac'd each passion to its proper source;
Then, strongly mark'd, in liveliest colours drew,
And brought each foible forth to public view.
The cockcomb felt a lash in every word,
And foos, hung out, their brother foos deterr'd;
His comic humour kept the world in awe,
And laughter frighten'd folly more than law."

Jordan, Thomas, an actor, and afterwards Poet-Laureate for the City of London, supposed to have died about 1685, was author of four plays and a number of poems, masques, &c., for an account of which see *Langbaine's Dramat. Jorden, Edward, 1569-1632, a London physician, a native of Kent, pub. four medical treatises, 1603-31.

Jortin, John, D.D., 1698-1770, a native of St. Giles's, Middlesex, admitted of Jesus College, Cambridge, (of which he became Fellow,) 1715; Rector of St. Dunstan-in-the-East, London, 1751; Vicar of Kensington, and Preb. of St. Paul's, 1762; Archdeacon of London, 1764. He was a man of great learning, fine taste, and much vivacity of imagination, an accomplished critic, and a warm friend to the diffusion of sound knowledge. His principal works are the following. 1. Lusus Poetici, Lon., 1722; 1748, 4to. These are a few Latin poems. There is said to be a 3d ed. 2. Four Serms. on the Truth of the Christian Religion, 1730, Svo. 3. Miscellaneous Remarks on Authors Ancient and Modern, 1731-32, 2 vols. Svo. Dr. J. wrote the most of these remarks; but they also contain contributions by Masson, Taylor, Wasse, Theobald, Robinson, Upton, Thirby, and others. The work was trans. into Latin, and pub. at Amsterdam. 4. Discourses on the Truth of the Christian Religion, 1746, '52, Svo. New ed. See No. 5.

"They abound with sound sense and solid argument."—DR. VICESIMUS KNOX.

5. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, 1751-73, 5 vols. Svo. New ed., together with a new ed. of No. 4, and a Life of the Author, by Dr. Heathcote, 1805, 3 vols. Svo. New ed. of Remarks on Ecclesiastical History, edited by the Rev. W. Trollope, 1846, 2 vols. Svo. It has been remarked that this work might properly be entitled Curiosities of Ecclesiastical History. The Remarks

"do not embrace a regular series of facts, but point out the prominent parts and circumstances of the general subject, with interesting remarks."—Dr. E. Williams's C. P. ed. 1843, 325, q. v.

"Once, and rarely more than once, he rose to eloquence; and that was in the preface to his Remarks, &c., which the late Dr. Gosset told me he regularly read through, every year, with undiminished delight. . . . The Remarks are excellent.—pithy, learned, candid, and acute; presenting us with the marrow of his predecessors."—Dibdin's Lib. Comp.

"Dr. Jortin has, in a little compass, taken notice of so many facts, and animadverted on them with so much judgment, that this work will ever be held in deserved repute."—BISHOP WATSON.

"Critical, but wanting in more important things."—Bickersteth's C. S.

"He is judicious, temperate, candid, and benevolent."—HALES.

"The character of his work is too well established to require recommendation."—BOGUE.

"His remarks are highly interesting and impartial. . . . They are full of manly sense, ingenious strictures, and profound erudition. It is a work highly beneficial to mankind, as it represents in its proper light that superstition which disgraced human nature, and gives a right sense of the advantages derived from religious reformation."—DR. V. KNOX.

"The Remarks of Jortin are a vulgar caricature, distinguished not more for their heartlessness and the absence of every noble feeling, than for the author's shameful ignorance of the subject which he presumed to handle."—DR. DOWLING.

In Rose's Lecture on the Study of Church History will be found some severe strictures on Jortin's Remarks.

6. Six Dissertations upon different subjects, 1755, Svo; 1809, Svo.

"Dr. Jortin, in one of his Six Dissertations, (half a dozen too many,) thus paints the portrait of Achilles," &c.—PROFESSOR JOHN WILSON: Essays Critical and Imaginative, Edin. and Lon., 1857, iv. 166, q. v.

"Equally remarkable for taste, learning, originality, and ingenuity."—DR. V. KNOX.

Bishop Warburton thought otherwise, as the Sixth Dissertation proved so conclusively the great antiquity of the doctrine of a future state as to overthrow the prelate's leading and most absurd position in The Divine Legation of Moses. Hurd, therefore, ever ready for such services, took up the cudgels for his friend, and Warburton, in his letters to Hurd, attacks Jortin with his usual arrogance, petulance, and indecency. See Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors, in Miscell. of Lit., ed. Lon., 1840, 166; Lord Jeffrey's Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1853, 889-890; Blackwood's Mag., xxix. 901; and authorities cited below.

7. The Life of Erasmus, with Remarks on his Works, 1758-60, 2 vols. 4to; 1806, 3 vols. Svo. Vol. iii. is composed entirely of Original Documents, and extracts from the writings of Erasmus and other writers. An abridgment of Jortin's Life of Erasmus was pub. by A. Laycey, Lon., 1805, Svo.

"Having been long an object of universal admiration, it is a matter of surprise that his life has never been written with accuracy and judgment. This task was reserved for Dr. Jortin; and the avidity with which it is read by the learned is a proof of the merit of the execution."—DR. Y. KNOX.

"The ease, simplicity, and vigour of this engaging writer. (I speak of the biographer,) who negligently scatters learning and vivacity on every subject which he treats, are here exercised on a most congenial topic."—Green's Diary of a Lover of L.L., Ipswich, 1810, (4to.) p. 13.

"In his Life of Erasmus, Jortin shewed himself to be little more than a translator of Le Clerc. A subject of the greatest interest, by him one of comparatively small interest. The work is little better than a dry journal of facts, stitched together. . . . It is usefully and carefully compiled, but wholly unanimated by a stroke of genius. The life of one of the greatest wits of his age has produced only sombre biographies. . . . These volumes. . . are doubtless unworthy of their author."—Dibdin's Lib. Comp.

"Dr. Johnson thought Jortin's Life of Erasmus a dull book."—Johnsoniana.

"Every scholar will read in the writings of Erasmus and his contemporaries must have discovered that Jortin has neither collected sufficient nor the best materials for his work; and perhaps for that very cause he grew weary of his task before he had made a full use of the scanty materials which he had collected."—S. T. COLERIDGE.

8. Serms. on Different Subjects, edited by the author's son, Rogers Jortin, of Lincoln's Inn, 1771, 4 vols. Svo; reprinted, with the addition of three vols., 1772, 7 vols. Svo; 1774, 7 vols. Svo; 1787, 7 vols. Svo. New eds., 1809, 4 vols. Svo; 1836, 4 vols. Svo. Abridged by the Rev. G. Whitaker, 1825, 3 vols. Svo; 1826, 3 vols. Svo; 1828, 3 vols. Svo.

"In these Sermons good sense and sound morality appear,—not, indeed, dressed out in the meretricious ornaments of a florid style, but in all the manly force and simple graces of natural eloquence. They will always be read with pleasure and edification."—Dr. F. Knox's Essays.

"He was a ready, off-hand, and dexterous scholar; yet his style, even in his sermons, wants what the French call 'onction.'"—Dibdin's Lib. Comp.

"Jortin's Sermons are very elegant."—DR. JOHNSON: Boswell's Life. &c.

"Classical but cold."—Lon. Quar. Rev.

9. Tracts, Philological, Critical, and Miscellaneous, 1790, 2 vols. Svo. Pub. by the author's son.

"The various treatises in these volumes are highly commended by Bishop Newton, T. Warton, and Dr. Knox."

It is to be regretted that, in these days of republication of standard authors, a collective ed. of the works of Dr. Jortin should still be a desideratum. Mr. Strong, of Exeter, some years since, offered a set of all of this divine's works, together with Disney's Life of Jortin,—in all 22 vols. Svo,—for £8 8s. For further information respecting this excellent writer, see Dr. John Disney's Life of Jortin, 1792, Svo; Nichols's Lit. Anec.; Chalmers's Biog. Diet.; Blackwood's Mag., xxix. 901-902; xxx. 851; xxxiii. 873.

"The works of Bishop Warburton and Dr. Jortin will speak for them better than any private commendation: they were two very extraordinary men; they were both men of great parts and abilities, both men of uncommon learning and erudition, both able critics, both copious writers. . . . Every thing that proceeds from Jortin is of value, whether in poetry, criticism, or divinity."—BISHOP NEWTON.

"A poet, a divine, a philosopher, and a man. Dr. Jortin served the cause of religion, learning, and morality."—DR. V. KNOX.

"Dr. Jortin was an accomplished classical scholar: his style often bears a resemblance to that of Xenophon, in ease, &c."—WILLIAMS.

"As to Jortin, whether I look back to his verse, to his prose, to his critical or to his theological works, there are few authors to whose I am so much indebted for rational entertainment or for solid instruction."—DR. PARR: Parr's Tracts by a Whilbertonian, &c.

Joscelin de Brakelonde, almoner of the Abbey of St. Edmund's, 1211, wrote a history of the affairs of his abbey, 1173-1201, and a book on the pretended miracles of St. Robert. An edit. of Joscelin's Chronicle, from the Latin original, was pub. by the Camden Society, edited by J. Gage Rokewood, 1840, 4to, and a trans. of this ed., with Notes, Introduction, &c., by T. E. Tomlins, 1843, 8vo. See these works and Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 1846.

"The author [Jocelin] appears to have been well acquainted with the common Latin authors, but his latinity is singularly unclassical and inelegant."—WRIGHT, ubi supra.

Joseph of Exeter, or Josephus Iscanus, an Anglo-Latin poet temp. Richard I., a native of Devonshire, wrote two epic poems in Latin heroics: the first, in six books, is on the Trojan war; the other is entitled Antiocheis, the War of Antioch. Of the last, the only fragment which remains (22 lines) will be found in Warton's Hist. of English Poetry, and in Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period. Leland also attributes to Joseph epigrams and love-verses, (Nugæ Amatoriaræ,) and it is asserted that he wrote in Latin verse De Institutione Cyri; but no such productions are known to be extant. For an account of the edits. of the poem De Bello Trojano, see Wright, ubi supra. See also Leland; Bale; Pits; Prince's Worthies of Devon; Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet.; The Sketch-Book, (art. on The Mutability of Literature,) by Washington Irving.

"A miracle of this age in classical composition was Joseph of Exeter, commonly called Josephus Iscanus. . . . He appears to have possessed no common command of poetical phraseology, and wanted nothing but a knowledge of the Virgilian chastity. His style is a mixture of Ovid, Statius, and Claudian, who seem then to have been the popular patterns."—Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed. Lon., 1840, vol. i. cxviii., cxviii.

Warton remarks that Italy had at that time produced no poet comparable to Josephus Iscanus. It has been stated that this poet died about 1224, but of the true date nothing is certainly known.

"The relation is curious and faithful: when the author makes his own remarks, they are in the oddest uncomth expressions imaginable."—JOHN LOCKE: The Philosopher.

"Contains a variety of curious facts regarding medicine and surgery: the author, however, appears a little credulous."—Watt's Bibl. Brit.

A little credulous certainly, for he tells us, "Some frogs, when they sit upon their breech, are a foot high;" "barley frequently degenerates into oats." See Sullivan's Maine; lutehinson, i. 267, 268; Douglass, ii. 71; Allen's Amer. Biog. Dict. Judson, Adoniram, D.D., b. Aug. 9, 1788, at Malden, Mass., d. 1850, at sea, on his voyage to Rangoon, a Baptist divine, the founder of the Burnah Mission in 1815, wrote a work on Christian Baptism, (recently repub.,) &c., and trans. the Bible, a Dictionary, and a number of tracts, into the Burmese tongue. His 1st ed. of the Bible in Burmese was pub. in 1835, 3 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., revised and much improved, 1840, thick 4to. His Burmese and English Dictionary was compiled from his papers by E. A. Stevens, and printed at Moulmein in 1852. It is the only one ever compiled of the Burmese language. See his life, by J. Judson, Mrs. Anne Haseltine, 1789–1826, a native of Bradford, Mass., was married to the preceding in 1812, and proved a faithful ally in his efforts for the conversion of the heathen, and a skillful diplomatist in affairs of state. She wrote some tracts for her Burmese pupils, and an excellent Account of the American Baptist Mission to the Burman Empire, Lon., 1825. 8vo. See Memoir of Anne H. Judson, by Rev. Jas. D. Judson, Mrs. Emily, formerly Miss Chubbuck, 1817–1854, better known by her nom de plume of Fanny Forester, a native of Eaton, New York, became, in June, 1846, the third wife of the Rev. Dr. Adoniram Judson, the founder of the Burmah Mission, and immediately afterwards accompanied her husband to India. After Dr. Judson's decease in 1850, Mrs. Judson returned to the United States, in impaired health, and, after a lingering illness, died at the residence of her brother, at Hamilton, New York. Among her first contributions to literature were several small vols. of a religious character, issued by the Baptist Publication Society, and poetical essays in the Knickerbocker Magazine. In 1844, she sent a paper to The New York Weekly Mirror, under the signature of Fanny Forester, which was so fortunate as to elicit the enthusiastic commendation of Mr. N. P. Willis, editor of that periodical. Encouraged by this, she contributed to his columns a number of essays, sketches, and poems, of which a collection appeared in 2 vols. in 1846, under the title of Alderbrook. These met with such favour, that the sale in America from the date of publication to the year 1853 amounted to 33,000 vols. Mrs. Judson subsequently gave to the world A Memoir of Mrs. Sarah B. Judson, N. York, 1849, 18mo; The Olive, or Domestic Poems, 1852, 12mo; The Kathayan Slave, and other Papers connected with Missionary Life, Bost., 1853, 16mo; My Two Sisters, a Sketch from Memory, [prose,] 1854, 18mo, &c. The following vols. were pub. before Mrs. Judson's marriage. 1. Charles Linn; or, How to Observe, 18mo. 2. The Great Secret; or, How to be Happy, 18mo. 3. Allen Lucas; or, The Self-Made Man, 18mo. The three are also all pub. in 1 vol., under the title of How to be Great, Good, and Happy. 4. Trippings in Author-Land, 12mo.

"She has a mind of the purest quality,—simple, truthful, imaginative, fertile, and genial. We have never expressed one-half of the admiration we have felt for that rare, most rare, quality of her mind.—its unerring, unbroken weaving of truth and nature through all its fancies. Eminently fruitful as it is, a sunbeam is not more direct, pure, and honest, than that same feminine and delicate fancy. Her books are delightful to read for this reason. The heart seconds the attention given to them with constant recognition."—N. P. WILLIS.

The Memoir of Mrs. Sarah B. Judson was repub. in London in 1848; 2d ed., 1849, 12mo; 3d ed., 1856, 12mo. In an Introductory Notice by Edward Bean Underhill, it is commended as a beautiful biographical production, from which eulogy the critic of the London Athenæum thus expresses his dissent:

"We cannot share Mr. Underhill's admiration for Miss Emily C. Chubbuck's style as an authoress. The tomb of the second Mrs. Judson is by her hung with artificial flowers of the most tawdry and commonplace quality. Without simplicity there is neither charm nor profit in narratives of this kind; and Fanny Forester seems to have avoided simplicity with unusual fervour, and entirely to have succeeded in her escape from it."—Nov. 11, 1848, p. 1123.

See Lives of the Three Mrs. Judson, by Mrs. A. M. Willson, N. York, 1851, '55, 12mo; Griswold's Female

Judson, Mrs. Sarah B., 1803–1845, a native of Alstead, New Hampshire, was married in 1825 to the Rev. George Boardman, who died in 1831, and in 1835 she became the second wife of the Rev. Adoniram Judson. The parting poem, addressed to the latter when she was about sailing for America, has been much admired. See the three preceding articles.

Junius. In our article upon SIR PHILIP FRANCIS, in this volume, we remarked that we should best discharge our duty with respect to the vexed question of the authorship of THE LETTERS OF JUNIUS by indicating the sources of information upon this famous controversy. The catalogue raisonné subjoined, of works upon this warmly-agitated theme, we have prepared with much care from a number of authorities not accessible to all inquirers.

We must premise—for we write not for the learned only—that the compositions distinctively styled THE LETTERS OF JUNIUS were originally pub. in The Public Advertiser of London, by Henry Sampson Woodfall, the first letter bearing date January 21, 1769, and the last January 21, 1772. These celebrated epistles are addressed to The Printer of The Public Advertiser, Sir William Draper, The Duke of Grafton, The Duke of Bedford, Lord North, Lord Mansfield, The King of England, Rev. Mr. Horne, and others. Junius was a Grenville or Bokeingham Whig, and attacked with great severity the ministerial measures of the Duke of Grafton and his colleagues.

"The classic purity of their language, the exquisite force and perspicuity of their argument, the keen severity of their reproach, the extensive information they evince, their fearless and decisive tone, and, above all, their stern and steady attachment to the purest principles of the Constitution, acquired for them, with an almost electric speed, a popularity which no series of letters have since possessed, nor, perhaps, ever will; and, what is of far greater consequence, diffused among the body a clearer knowledge of their constitutional rights than they had ever before attained, and animated them with a more determined spirit to maintain them inviolate. Enveloped in the cloud of a fictitious name, the writer of these philippics, unseen himself, beheld with secret satisfaction the vast influence of his labours, and enjoyed, though, as we shall afterwards observe, not always without apprehension, the universal bent that was made to detect him in his disguise. He beheld the people extolling him, the court execrating him, and ministers, and more than ministers, trembling beneath the lash of his invisible hand."—JOHN MASON GOOD, M.D.: Essay on Junius and his Writings.

Several unauthorized collections of the letters of Junius were put forth by various publishers before 1772, in which year Mr. Henry Sampson Woodfall, the original printer of the epistles, issued an edition in 2 vols. sm. 8vo, with the sanction of Junius, and an eloquent Dedication, Preface, and Notes, by the same mysterious individual. In 1812, 3 vols. 8vo, Mr. George Woodfall pub. a new edition of these celebrated letters. In this edit. we have not only the Letters of Junius referred to above, but also his private letters to H. S. Woodfall, his correspondence with John Wilkes, and other communications to Woodfall's Public Advertiser, under various signatures, ascribed to him with more or less probability of truth. The period during which the Letters of Junius and those thus ascribed to him were written extends from the letter of Poplicola, 28th April, 1767, to the letter of Nemesis, May 12, 1772. Woodfall's edition contains—

I. The Letters of Junius distinctively so called, and acknowledged by him, dated January 21, 1769, to January 21, 1772.

Of the 69 Letters in this series, 59 were written by Junius; of which 44 bear the signature of Junius, and 15 the signature of Philo-Junius. Of the 44 letters signed Junius, the titles are as follows:

To the Printer of the Public Advertiser.....	10
“ Sir Wm. Draper.....	5
“ the Duke of Grafton.....	11
“ Edward Weston.....	1
“ Dr. Wm. Blackstone.....	1
On Walpole's Case.....	1
To the Duke of Bedford.....	1
On the Rescue of General Gansel.....	1
On Modestus.....	1
Address to the King.....	1
Retrospect of Parliamentary Session.....	1
To Lord North.....	1
“ Chief-Justice Mansfield.....	3
On the Falkland Islands.....	1
On Privileges of Parliament.....	1
On Parliamentary Resolutions.....	1
To the Rev. Mr. Horne.....	1
“ “ Livery of London.....	1
	44

Of the 15 Letters signed Philo-Junius (really written by Junius) the titles are as follows:

On Walpole's Case.....	1
“ the Spanish Convention.....	10
To the Printer of the Public Advertiser.....	10
“ Modestus.....	1
“ Zeno.....	1
“ an Advocate in the Cause of the People...	1
	15

Of the other 10 Letters the titles are:

Sir Wm. Draper to the Printer of the Public Advertiser.....	1
Sir Wm. Draper to Junius.....	4
The Rev. Mr. Horne to Junius.....	3
A Friend of Junius.....	1
On behalf of Junius: anonymous.....	1
	10

II. Junius's Private Letters to Mr. H. S. Woodfall, dated April 20, 1769, to January 19, 1773. In this series there are 64 Letters and Notes, 62 of which are addressed by Junius to Woodfall, 1 to David Garrick, and the other (the conclusion of the series) is a letter of Woodfall's to Junius, dated March 7, 1773.

III. Junius's Confidential Correspondence with John Wilkes, containing 18 Letters, 10 of which are written by Junius, and 8 by Wilkes. These letters are dated 21st August, 1771, to January 15, 1772.

IV. The Miscellaneous Letters ascribed to Junius, under various signatures, consisting of 113 letters and papers, 28th April, 1769, to May 12, 1772, which occupy part of the second and the whole of the third volumes. The authenticity of many of these productions is very questionable. Prefixed to this edition, which is illustrated by notes, is an admirable Preliminary Essay on Junius and his Writings, by the editor, John Mason Good, M.D.

A new edition of the issue of 1812 was published in 1850, 2 vols. 12mo, which contains much additional matter of great value. This forms part of Bohn's Standard Library, and is edited by John Wade, who favours us with New Evidence as to the Authorship, and a portion of an Analysis, by the late Sir N. Harris Nicolas. Mr. Wade makes out a strong case for the claim of Sir Philip Francis. There are, however, some grave objections to this hypothesis, which we hardly expect to see surmounted. See, in addition to authorities to be cited hereafter, London Athenæum, 1850, 123, 154, 863, 939, 969, 993, 1021, 1071.

The curious reader will be glad to see a list of the most prominent names of those to whom the Letters of Junius have been in one time or another ascribed:

1. Adair, Mr. Serjeant.	23. Jones, Sir Wm.
2. Barré, Col. Isaac.	24. Kent, John.
3. Boyd, Hugh Macaulay.	25. Lee, General Charles.
4. Burke, Edmund.	26. Lloyd, Charles.
5. Butler, Bishop.	27. Lyttelton, Lord Thos.
6. Cauden, Lord.	28. Maclary, Laughlin.
7. Chatham, Lord.	29. Portland, Duke of.
8. Chesterfield, Lord.	30. Pownall, Gov. Thomas.
9. De Lolme, M.	31. Rich, Sir Robert.
10. Dunning, Lord Ashburton.	32. Roberts, John.
11. Dyer, Samuel.	33. Rosenhagen, Rev. Philip.
12. Flood, Henry.	34. Sackville, Lord George, afterwards Lord Germain.
13. Francis, Philip, D.D.	35. Shelburne, Earl.
14. Francis, Sir Philip.	36. Temple, Earl.
15. Gibbon, Edward.	37. Tooke, Jno. Horne.
16. Glover, Richard.	38. Walpole, Horace.
17. Grattan, Henry.	39. Wilkes, John.
18. Greatrakes, Wm.	40. Wedderburn, Alex. (Lord Loughborough.)
19. Grenville, Geo.	41. Wilmot, James, D.D.
20. Grenville, James.	42. Wray, Daniel.
21. Hamilton, Wm. Gerard.
22. Hollis, James.

Of the 42 names above enumerated, the claims of 13—viz.: Boyd, Burke, Bishop Butler, Dunning, Dyer, Flood, General Lee, Lloyd, Roberts, Rosenhagen, and Lord George Sackville—are carefully examined by Dr. Good in his celebrated preliminary essay, and all are decidedly rejected. As the question now stands, the sifting of zealous and learned controversy has spared but three names out of all those for whom the authorship has from time to time been claimed,—viz.:

I. SIR PHILIP FRANCIS.

II. LORD GEORGE SACKVILLE, afterwards LORD GERMAIN.

III. COLONEL ISAAC BARRÉ.

The claims of the last two candidates in the field, Sir Robert Rich and Gov. Thos. Pownall, have been recently brought prominently forward,—those of the former by Mr. Ayer, in 1853, and of the latter by Mr. Frederick Griffin, of Montreal, in 1854. Mr. Dowe, indeed, has within the last few months announced new discoveries in favour of the claims of the Earl of Chatham, but in the present stage of the question—for Mr. Dowe's book is hardly yet fairly before the world—we do not feel justified in adding his lordship's name to the three who still exhibit indications of vitality after enduring the targets of a keen literary battle of fourscore years' duration.

We shall presently give a list of publications connected with the Junius controversy, but it may be proper here briefly to refer to some prominent pleas for the respective claims of the three above named.

I. SIR PHILIP FRANCIS. 1. The Identity of Junius with a distinguished Living Character, by Mr. John Taylor, Lon., 1816, 8vo. 2. A Supplement to Junius Identified, consisting of Fac-Similes of Handwriting, and other Illustrations, 1817, 8vo. 3. Review of the two preceding, by Lord Brougham, Edin. Rev., November, 1817, xxix. 94. His lordship thus sums up the evidence presented by Mr. Taylor:

“That it proves Sir Philip to be Junius, we will not affirm; but this we can safely assert, that it accumulates such a mass of circumstantial evidence as renders it extremely difficult to believe he is not; and that, if so many coincidences shall be found to have misled us in this case, our faith in all conclusions drawn from proofs of a similar kind may henceforth be shaken.”

4. Letter of Sir James Mackintosh to John Murray, Sr., Nov. 28, 1824. See No. 10. 5. Argument by Thomas De Quincey, in his Literary Reminiscences, vol. ii., being vol. vii. (chap. xxii.) of Ticknor, Reed & Field's edit. of De Quincey's works. 6. Argument by T. B. Macaulay, in his review of Gleig's Life of Warren Hastings, Edin. Rev., Oct. 1841, lxxiv. 160. 7. Letter of Lady Francis (widow of Sir Philip) to Lord Campbell, inserted in his lordship's Lives of the Lord-Chancellors, vol. vi. p. 344. 8. The History and Discovery of Junius, by John Wade, in his edit. of the Letters of Junius, 1850, 2 vols. 8vo, before referred to. 9. Some New Facts and a suggested New Theory as to the Authorship of the Letters of Junius, by Sir Fortunatus Dwaris, Knt., Lon., 1850. Privately printed. See London Athenæum, 1850, 939, 969, 993. 10. Argument by Lord Mahon, in his History of England from the Peace of Utrecht, vol. v. 320-340, 1851. Nos. 4 and 11 are printed in this work. 11. Letter of T. B. Macaulay to John

Murray, Jr., dated at the Albany, Jan. 3, 1852. See No. 10. This refers to the famous article in the London Quar. Rev. for Dec. 1851, xc. 91, advocating the claims of Lord Thomas Lyttleton to the authorship of Junius, and rejecting altogether the pleas urged in favour of Sir Philip Francis. But Lord Lyttleton's claims have been since set aside, (see London Athenæum,) and the question remains status quo ante bellum. In the letter above referred to, Mr. Macaulay remarks:

"But, in truth, the strongest arguments against the Reviewers' theory are the arguments which, in my opinion, prove that Francis was the author of the letters."

Mr. Macaulay despatches the claims of five celebrated names—claims which have been urged with much pertinacity and some of them at great length—in as many lines:

"Lord Lyttleton's claims to the authorship of Junius are better than those of Burke or Barré, and quite as good as those of Lord George Sackville or Single-Speech Hamilton. But the case against Francis, or, if you please, in favour of Francis, rests on grounds of a very different kind, and on coincidences such as would be sufficient to convict a murderer."

II. LORD GEORGE SACKVILLE, afterwards LORD GEMAIN. We need here only refer to George Coventry's Critical Inquiry regarding the real author of the Letters of Junius, proving them to have been written by Lord Viscount Sackville, 1825, 8vo. This theory was sustained in a work pub. in Boston, U. States, in 1828, entitled Junius Unmasked, or Lord George Sackville proved to be Junius, and in a review of this vol. in the N. American Rev., xxix. 315, by G. B. Cheever. Charles Butler (see his Reminiscences) supposes Lord Sackville to have been the author of Junius, and Sir Philip Francis his amanuensis and occasional assistant. Mr. Jaques, in his History of Junius and his Works, and a Review of the Controversy, 1843, 8vo, adopts this theory, and adds D'Oyly—Francis's fellow-clerk in the War-Office—as a connecting-link between Lord Sackville and Francis.

III. COLONEL ISAAC BARRÉ. Mr. John Britton, in his Authorship of the Letters of Junius Elucidated, 1848, r. 8vo, earnestly contends that Colonel Barré was Junius, and that he was assisted by Lord Shelburne and Mr. Dunning. In an article pub. in the London Morning Herald in 1813, the opinion was expressed that the Earl of Shelburne was Junius, and that he was assisted by Barré and Dunning. This work is noticed by the author of the article in the London Quar. Rev., xc. 91, before referred to, as "a curious instance of the delusion to which ingenious men may resign themselves when they have a favourite opinion to uphold."

An elaborate review of Mr. Britton's work will be found in the London Athenæum, July 22 and 29, 1848. And see other articles referred to in the course of the present notice.

We shall now proceed to give a list of publications connected with this perplexing subject, which to the minds of many of the most intelligent readers of the day is as much a mystery as it was to their grandfathers. Whether this cloud will ever be lifted from the name is now doubtful. Indeed, it is difficult to imagine in what way the authorship of the Letters of Junius can ever be satisfactorily proved, presuming that the claims of the real author have been, or shall hereafter be, presented to the public for acceptance. If the arguments in favour of the authorship of Sir Philip Francis, or Lord Sackville, or both combined, be insufficient to gain credence, what amount of evidence can identify the real author? Certain it is that against even Junius himself, whoever he may be, many probabilities will apparently exist. It can be only by the preponderance of favourable testimony that any such claim can be established. Not a year elapses in which some man is not hanged on less evidence than has been adduced in favour of more than one of the claimants of the authorship of the Letters of Junius. But we must proceed with our list of publications.

1769. 1. An Impartial Answer to the Doctrine delivered in a Letter which appeared in the Public Advertiser under the signature of Junius. By Charles Fearnle, 8vo. 2. Interesting Letters selected from the Correspondence of Messrs. Wilkes, Horne, Beckford, and Junius, 8vo. 3. A Collect. of the Letters of Atticus, Lucius, Junius, and others; with Observ. and Notes, 8vo. 4. The Political Contest; being a Cont. of Junius's Letters from the 6th of July to the present time, 8vo. 5. The Political Contest; containing a Series of Letters between Junius and Sir Will. Draper; also the whole of Junius's Letters to his Grace the D*** of G*****, 8vo.

1770. 6. An Address to Junius upon the subject of his Letter in the Public Advertiser, Dec. 19, 1769, 8vo. In this address the Letters are attributed to Wilkes.

1771. 7. Letters addressed to the King, the Duke of Grafton, the Earls of Chesterfield and Sandwich, Lord Barrington, Junius, and the Rev. Mr. Horne, under the signature of P. P. S., 8vo. 8. An Answer to Junius, 8vo. 9. The Trial of John Almon, Bookseller, for selling Junius's Letters to the K—g, 8vo. 10. The Genuine Letters of Junius, and Anecdotes of the Author. The compiler attributes the letters to Edmund Burke.

1772. 11. Woodfall's—the first authorized—edit. of the Letters of Junius, 2 vols. sm. 8vo.

1774. 12. Epistle to Junius, by Benj. Hughes, 4to.

1778. 13. Serious Letter to the Public, by Junius, 8vo. Fictitious.

1788. 14. Anecdotes of Junius: to which is prefixed the King's Reply, 8vo.

1789. 15. Junius Discovered, by P. T., 8vo. Junius is supposed to be John Horne Tooke.

1794. 16. Letters of Junius, 2 vols. 8vo.

1797. 17. Letters of Junius, 2 vols. 8vo, Bensley's beautiful ed., illustrated by portraits. A copy on vellum was sold at auction in London in 1801 for £25 4s.

1799. 18. Letter of Charles Butler, dated July, 1799, giving an account of the inquiries of John Wilkes and himself relative to the authorship of Junius. Repub., with adds., in Butler's Reminiscences, 1822.

1800. 19. Geo. Chalmers's Append. to his Supp. Apology; being the documents for the opinion that Hugh McAuley Boyd wrote Junius's Letters, 8vo. See 1817, No. 41.

1801. 20. Junius's Letters, with portraits, 2 vols. 8vo. Printed by Bensley.

1803. 21. St. James's Chronicle, Apl. 16. T. Rodney's account (extracted from the Wilmington, Del., Mirror) of Genl. Lee's assertion that he was Junius.

1808. 22. Reasons for rejecting the presumptive Evidence of Mr. Almon that Boyd was Junius, with Passages selected to prove the real author of the Letters of Junius. This is Dr. Girdlestone's pamphlet, and endeavours to show that Gen. Charles Lee was Junius.

1809. 23. Another guess at Junius, and a Dialogue, 8vo. An attempt to prove that Lord Clatham was Junius.

1810. 24. Junius's Letters, with Portraits, r. 8vo.

1812. 25. The Letters of Junius, including Letters by the same Writer, under other signatures, (now first collected.) To which are added confidential Correspondence with Mr. Wilkes, and his private Letters to H. S. Woodfall, with a Preliminary Essay, [by John Mason Good, M.D.,] Notes, Fac-similes, &c., 3 vols. 8vo. Repub. in Phila., 1813, 2 vols. 8vo.

1813. 26. An Attempt to ascertain the author of Junius's Letters, 8vo. By the Rev. John B. Blakeaway. Mr. B. advocates the claims of John Horne Tooke. See 1815, No. 36. 27. An Inquiry concerning the Author of the Letters of Junius, in which it is proved, by internal as well as direct and satisfactory Evidence, that they were written by the Hon. Edmund Burke, 8vo. By John Roche.

28. Facts tending to prove that Genl. Lee was the Author of Junius. By T. Girdlestone, M.D. See 1808, No. 22. 29. The Life of the Author of Junius's Letters, the Rev. James Wilmot, D.D. With portrait, fac-similes, etc., 8vo. By Olivia Wilmot Serres.

30. A Discovery of the Author of the Letters of Junius, 8vo. This is John Taylor's first publication on the subject, and attributes the authorship to Philip Francis, D.D., father of Sir Philip Francis. See 1816, No. 37. 31. The Letters of Junius, illustrated by Howard Bocquet, from original paintings. A beautiful ed., with 12 portraits. 32. Memoirs, by a celebrated Literary and Political Character, [Richard Glover,] 1742–57, 8vo. By Richard Duppa.

1814. 33. An Inquiry concerning the Author of the Letters of Junius, with Reference to the Memoirs, [see 1813, No. 32.] &c., 8vo. An attempt to prove that Richard Glover was the author. 34. An Inquiry into the Author of the Letters of Junius. 35. Second ed. of H. S. Woodfall's ed. of 1812, 3 vols. 8vo.

1815. 36. Sequel of An Attempt to discover Junius, by the Rev. J. B. Blakeaway. See 1813, No. 26.

1816. 37. The Identity of Junius with a distinguished Living Character [Sir Philip Francis] established. By John Taylor. See 1813, No. 30. This is the first attempt to fix the authorship upon Sir Philip Francis. See the preceding references to this branch of the controversy, under the title of I. SIR PHILIP FRANCIS, and to London Athenæum, Oct. 8, 1850; consult also Index to Notes and Queries, and to the Athenæum for 1850. Especially see Mr. Taylor's letters to Notes and Queries, Sept. 7, 1850. 38. Arguments and Facts proving that the Letters of Junius were written by John Lewis De Lolme. By Tho. Busby, Mus. D., 8vo.

39. Letters to a Nobleman, proving a late Prime Minister [the Duke of Portland] to have been Junius, and developing the secret motives which induced him to write under that and other signatures, with an Appendix, 8vo.

1817. 40. A Supp. to Junius Identified. By John Taylor. Consisting of Fac-similes of Handwriting and other Illustrations, 8vo. A 2d ed. of this and of No. 37 was pub. in 1818. See 1816, No. 37. 41. The Author of Junius ascertained from a concatenation of circumstances, amounting to moral demonstration, 8vo. By George Chalmers. This is a republication, with new facts, &c., of the arguments in favour of H. M. Boyd. See 1800, No. 19. Reprinted in 1819, with a new title-page and a postscript. 42. An Attempt to ascertain the Author of Junius, 8vo. 43. Junius: Sir Philip Francis Denied: a Letter addressed to the British Nation, by Olivia Wilmot Serres, 8vo.

1819. 44. Junius Unmasked: a well-known and most eminent Literary Character of the last Century, 1819. This is an argument in favour of Gibbon the historian. 45. A Refutation of the Claims preferred for Sir Philip Francis and Mr. Gibbon to the Letters of Junius, 1819. 46. Junius, with his Visor Up! 1819. A burlesque in favour of Suett, the Comedian. 47. Another Guess at Junius, (1819?)

1822. 49. The Letters of Junius, with Preliminary Dissertations and Copious Notes. By Atticus Secundus, 8vo. This author coincides with John Taylor.

1823. 50. The Claims of Sir Philip Francis, with a Supp. to Junius Discovered, 8vo.

1825. 51. A Critical Enquiry regarding the real author of the Letters of Junius, proving them to have been written by Lord Viscount Sackville. By George Coventry, 8vo. It is asserted that Coventry changed his views, and pub. a pamphlet in support of the claims of Sir Philip Francis. But this appears to be doubtful.

1826. 52. Junius proved to have been Burke; with an Outline of his Biography, 8vo. We may here mention also (53.) Junius's Political Axioms, 8vo, and (54.) A Great Personage proved to have been Junius, 8vo.

1828. 55. Junius Unmasked; or, Lord George Sackville proved to be Junius. This anonymous work, pub. at Boston, Mass., is based upon Coventry's argument in favour of Lord George Sackville. See ante, 1825, No. 51. 56. Letters on the Author of Junius. By E. H. Barker, 12mo. This work opposes the claims of Sir Philip Francis, and advocates those of Charles Lloyd. 57. Memoirs of John Horne Tooke, and also containing proofs identifying him as the author of the celebrated Letters of Junius. By Dr. Graham; pub. in N. York.

1829. 58. Junius's Posthumous Works; with an Inquiry respecting the Author, and a sketch of the Life of John Horne Tooke, 8vo. Pub. in N. York. Advocates the claims of Tooke.

1830. 59. The Secret Revealed of the Authorship of Junius's Letters. By James Falconar, Jun., Esq. Advocates the claims of Daniel Wray.

1831. 60. An Essay on Junius and his Letters. By Benj. Waterhouse, M.D. This work, pub. at Boston, Mass., advocates the claims of the Earl of Chatham. 61. Letters on Junius, addressed to John Pickering, Esq., shewing that the author of that celebrated work was Lord Temple. By Isaac Newhall. Pub. at Boston.

1833. 62. Junius, Lord Chatham, &c. By John Swinden.

1837. 63. Who was Junius? Anon. In favour of Lord Chatham's claims.

1841. 64. Letter to an Hon. Brig.-Genl., [Lord Townshend;] repub. by N. W. Simons, 1843, 12mo. This Letter, ascribed to Junius by Mr. Simons, was originally pub. in 1760. Mr. Simons argues against the claims of Sir Philip Francis.

1843. 65. The History of Junius and his Works; and a Review of the Controversy respecting the Identity of Junius. By John Jaques, 8vo. See the preceding remarks under II. LORD GEORGE SACKVILLE.

1848. 66. The Authorship of the Letters of Junius Elucidated. By John Britton, 1848, r. 8vo. See the preceding remarks under III. COLONEL ISAAC BARRÉ.

1850. 67. H. G. Bohn's ed. of Junius, edited by John Wade, 2 vols. 8vo. See the preceding remarks under I. SIR PHILIP FRANCIS. 68. Some New Facts and a Suggested New Theory as to the authorship of the Letters of Junius. By Sir Fortunatus Dwaris, Knt. Privately printed. Refer according to last article. 69. Junius and his Works compared with the Earl of Chesterfield, by W. Cramp, 8vo.

1851. 70. Postscript to No. 69, with Fac-simile letters of Junius, Lord Chesterfield, and Mrs. C. Dayrolles, &c.

1853. 71. The Ghost of Junius, &c. By Mr. Ayerst. In favour of the claims of Lieut.-Genl. Sir Robert Rich, Bart.

1854. 72. Junius Discovered. By F. Griffin, at Boston, Mass., 1857, 12mo. Mr. Griffin advocates the claims of Gov. Thos. Pownall. 73. Junius—Lord Chatham, &c., by William Dowe, N. York, 1857, 12mo. A review of the works of Mr. Griffin and Mr. Dowe will be found in the Lon. Athen., July 17, 1858. The tone of the critique is indicated in the opening paragraph:

"Two more volumes of mere speculation, both from the other side of the Atlantic."

74. The Beauties and Maxims of Junius, by Lye, and 75, the Selection of Aphorisms, by Fisher, being merely compilations, need be barely referred to. The notes to Heron's edit. of Junius are worthy of attention. The reader will find much ingenious criticism, and many plausible suppositions, in several of the following articles enumerated in Poole's Index to Periodical Literature.

I. AUTHORSHIP OF JUNIUS: 1. Edin. Rev., xxix. 94, (by Lord Brougham.) A writer in the Lon. Gent. Mag. (Dec. 1845, p. 587) ascribes this article to Sir Jas. Mackintosh; but he is in error: Lord Brougham has recently repub. it in his Contributions to the Edin. Rev., Lon. and Glasgow, 1856, iii. 338-361. 2. N. Amer. Rev., xxix. 315, (by G. B. Cheever.) 3. N. Amer. Rev., xxiv. 316, (by D. L. Child.) 4. N. Brit. Rev., x. 52; same art. in N. York Eclec. Mag., xvi. 160. 5. Amer. Month. Rev., i. 33. 6. *N. Eng. VII. 22. Arguments in favour of the claims of Lachlan McLane to the authorship of Junius, in Waldie's (Philadelphia) Library, (by John Jay Smith, editor.)

In addition to these, the reader will find many excellent articles upon the general question, or specialties connected with it, in the London Athenæum, Blackwood's Mag., (see Index to vols. i.-1.) and other periodicals. We would particularly instance a paper entitled, SIR PHILIP FRANCIS not JUNIUS, in the Lon. Gent. Mag., Feb. 1842, 166-168; and one by John Foster, entitled Who was Junius? (a review of Woodfall's ed. of Junius, 1813, 8vo.) in the Lon. Eclec. Mag., Feb. and April, 1813; repub. in Foster's Critical Essays, Lon., 1856, vol. ii. 72-105. We presume, however, that the reader will be satisfied with the bill of fare thus presented to him; and, as a stimulus to his investigations, we can assure him that those who have most thoroughly explored the field are generally those who avow themselves to be most in the dark upon the subject. After espousing and warmly advocating half a dozen theories on the subject, they usually end with no theory at all. Poor Sir N. Harris Nicolas, after diligently posting for many years, in mercantile-ledger style, the pros and cons in the Junius Papers, arrived at this very satisfactory result:

"So far from having any theory of our own on Junius's identity, we are as entirely free from bias on the subject, and confess ourselves as profoundly ignorant of the authorship of those celebrated Letters, as if, instead of having for many years constantly had the question in our mind, and having read, we believe, nearly every thing that has been written on the point, we had never bestowed a thought on the matter. We have indeed a strong impression that Junius was not any one of the numerous persons heretofore so confidently brought forward."

Not satisfied with this home-thrust at the "confident" Junius-discoverers, the worthy knight, wrought up to a high pitch of indignation by his ill-success, which forced him to speak his mind without restraint, proceeds in the following complimentary strain:

"However startling the idea may be to the many pseudo-discoverers of Junius on both sides of the Atlantic, we found much of the claim of our observations to attention in the very fact of our having no Junius of our own, and on our disbelief in each of theirs."

When we remember the eminence of Sir N. H. Nicolas as an antiquary, and the fact that the above was written as lately as 1843, we may estimate the probability of success in Junius-hunting. But Mr. Wade is quite confident that he has bagged the game; and perhaps he has.

Dr. John Mason Good concluded his investigations in 1812, in utter despair, and fifteen years later, only a few weeks before his death, writes to Mr. Barker, respecting this perplexing question,

"Many years ago, as you perhaps may be aware, I entered at full speed into this research, and beat the bush in every direction. At that time, however, the claims of Sir Philip Francis had not been advanced, at least not before the public. But had they been brought forward, the arguments by which it is obvious they may be met, and many of which you have yourself ably handled, would, I think, have succeeded in putting him as completely out of the list as all the other competitors appear to be put whose friends have undertaken to bring them forward. The question is nevertheless one of great interest as well on the score of national history as of literary curiosity. Yet, like many other desiderata, I am afraid it is likely to lie beyond the fathoming of any line and plummet that will be applied to it in our days."—Oct. 13, 1826.

Charles Butler, one of the most acute of lawyers, and peculiarly well skilled in legal and literary controversy, and who had moreover examined this subject with the personal assistance of John Wilkes, the correspondent of Junius himself, writes to Barker, in 1828,

"I am sorry I cannot communicate to you any information of importance on the subject in which you take so great an interest. I have only to add, that it appears to me involved in as great obscurity as ever."

And now—to descend to smaller things—we are encouraged by the candour of these eminent individuals to emulate their frankness; and we will be magnanimous enough to own that our researches have placed us exactly in the position of Messrs. Good, Nicolas, Butler, and some thousands of others in "pursuit of knowledge under difficulties."—we are altogether ignorant of the authorship of the LETTERS OF JUNIUS. We have no claim to question the veracity of this mysterious personage, who declared, "I am the sole depository of my secret, and it shall die with me." We have already quoted a portion of the eloquent comments of Dr. Good upon Junius as a writer, but we are not willing to conclude this article without citing some further authorities on this point:

"I quote JUNIUS in English, as I would Tacitus or Livy in Latin. I consider him as a legitimate English Classic."—Malthus's Pursuits of Literature.

"Junius burst into notice with a blaze of impudence which has rarely glared upon the world before, and drew the rabble after him as a monster makes a show. When he had once provided for his safety by impenetrable secrecy, he had nothing to combat but truth and justice, enemies whom he knows to be feeble in the dark. Being then at liberty to indulge himself in all the immunities of invisibility, out of the reach of danger, he has been bold; out of the reach of shame, he has been confident. As a rhetorician, he has the art of persuading when he seconded desire; as a reasoner, he has convinced those who had no doubt before; as a moralist, he has taught that virtue may disgrace; and as a patriot, he has gratified the mean by insults on the high. . . . It is not by his liveliness of imagery, his pungency of periods, or his fertility of allusion, that he detains the city of London and the bores of Middlesex. Of style and sentiment they take no cognizance."—DR. SAMUEL JOHNSON: On the Seizure of the Falkland Islands, 1771.

The citation of this passage may remind the reader that an eminent modern critic has brought the names of Johnson and Junius into juxtaposition in his remarks upon the chronological history of English style:

"Adam Smith was nearly the first who made deeper reasonings and more exact knowledge popular among us, and Johnson and Junius the first who again familiarized us with more glowing and sonorous diction, and made us feel the tameness and poorness of the serious style of Addison and Swift."—LORD JEFFREY: Contrib. to Edin. Review, Lon., 1853, 77.

"How comes this Junius to have broke through the cobwebs of the law, and to range uncontrolled, unpunished, through the laud? The myrmidons of the Court have been long and are still, pursuing him in vain. They will not spend their time upon me, or you, or you. No; they disdain such vermin when their toils, is before them. But what has broken through all their toils, is before them. But what will all their efforts avail? No sooner has he wounded one than he lays another dead at his feet. For my part, when I saw his attack upon the king, I own my blood ran cold. . . . In short, after carrying away our Royal Eagle in his pounces and dashing him against a rock, he has laid you prostrate. Kings, Lords, and Commons are but the sport of his fury. Were he a member of this House, what might not be expected from his knowledge, his firmness and integrity! He would be easily known by his contempt of all danger, by his penetration, by his vigour. Nothing would escape his vigilance and activity. Bad ministers could conceal nothing from his sagacity; nor could promises nor threats induce him to conceal any thing from the public."—EDMUND BURKE: Speech in the House of Commons.

Kræmer, Francis, Surgeon, London. Paper in Ann. of Med., 1801.

Kane, Elisha Kent, M.D., a famous Arctic navigator, a great-grandson of Colonel John Kane, of the British Army, who emigrated from Ireland to New York about 1756, and a son of John K. Kane, Judge of the United States Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, was b. in Philadelphia, Feb. 3, 1820; educated at the University of Virginia, and in the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania; and, after passing examination as a surgeon in the United States Navy, was appointed physician to the Chinese Embassy, and sailed in the frigate "Brandywine," May, 1843. He availed himself of his two years' absence from home to make the circuit of the globe, sailing around the coast of South America, across the Pacific Ocean to Southern and Eastern Asia, and returning by the overland route through Europe across the Atlantic to the United States. Returning to Philadelphia, he practised medicine until May, 1846, when he was ordered to the coast of Africa in the frigate "United States," under Commodore Reed. A violent attack of fever sent him home for medical care, from which he was glad to escape for the opportunity of service in Mexico,—obtaining credentials at Washington as bearer of despatches to General Scott, then in the capital of that country. Near Nopalua, the Mexican spy-company with whom the Doctor travelled had an encounter with a band of guerillas escorting General Gaona (whose life was saved by the bravery of Kane) and other Mexican officers. After the conclusion of the war, in January, 1849, Dr. Kane was attached to the store-ship Supply, bound for Lisbon, the Mediterranean, and Rio Janeiro, and shortly afterwards was assigned to the Coast Survey, from which he was summoned to a field of duty with which his name will ever be gloriously connected. The Government of the United States had determined to share in the search for Sir John Franklin; and Dr. Kane, who had repeatedly volunteered his services, was made Senior Medical Officer and Naturalist of the expedition, which sailed in two vessels, "The Advance" and "The Rescue," furnished by the liberality of Henry Grinnell, Esq., of New York, under Commander De Haven. Of this sixteen months' cruise (rewarded by the discovery of Franklin's first winter-quarters and the graves of three of his men) an account was published under the following title: The United States Grinnell Expedition in Search of Sir John Franklin: a Personal Narrative, by Elisha Kent Kane, M.D., U.S.N., New York, Harpers, 1853, 8vo.

Of this work a new edition, illustrated with many Plates and Wood-cuts, with a Biography of Sir John Franklin by S. Austin Allibone, (see p. 632, supra) was published by Messrs. Childs & Peterson, Philadelphia, 1857, 8vo, pp. 552. The difficulties under which Kane's Second Polar Expedition was set afloat cannot be properly noticed here: they have been graphically portrayed in Dr. Elder's Biography of Elisha Kent Kane, 1858, 8vo, to which, as for other particulars, we refer the reader. On the day of the return of the Expedition, Oct. 11, 1855, more than fourteen years ago, we recorded (p. 633, supra) some of the results achieved. In September, 1856, Dr. Kane gave to the world: Arctic Explorations: The Second Grinnell Expedition in Search of Sir John Franklin during the Years 1853, '54, '55, Phila., Childs & Peterson, 1856, 2 vols. 8vo, (Lon., Nelson, 1860, cr. 8vo; Far North: Explorations in the Arctic Regions by Dr. Kane, Simpkin, 1863, 12mo.) The work was handsomely printed and beautifully illustrated, under the intelligent superintendence of one of its publishers, Mr. George W. Childs, who liberally allowed the author double the usual rate of copyright interest, and had the pleasure of paying on this account, in the first year, sixty-five thousand dollars,—the proceeds of the sale of as many copies of the work. Of such success there are very few instances in literary history. But there was something more and better than this: the enthusiastic commendations, the hearty respect, the affectionate friendship, of many of the most eminent persons in Europe and America, were the well-deserved reward of this heart-stirring record of philanthropic toil, suffering, and peril.

"I read it," remarks Kane's illustrious predecessor in the fields of ice, Sir John Richardson, "with the deepest interest, combined with admiration of the skill and perseverance with which you accomplished your explorations, and the most heart-felt sympathy with you in your trials and privations. . . . With a less energetic leader the whole party would have perished."

"It is one of the most remarkable records I have ever met with," says Prescott the historian, "of difficulties and sufferings, and of the power of a brave spirit to overcome them."

"His constant self-possession during his long trials," observes Bancroft the historian, "his quickness of judgment, his unshrinking courage in danger, his fertility in resources in the hours of greatest difficulty, give him a very high place in the very first rank of Polar Navigators, as a leader, and commander, and man; and no one of them all has told the story of their adventures so charmingly as he has done."

We have before us similar tributes from Washington Irving, Edward Everett, Louis Agassiz, Alfred Tennyson, and many others, but must content ourselves, in this limited space, by referring the reader to London Athenæum, Nov. 1, 1856; London Saturday Review, Nov. 22, 1856; U. States Magazine, Dec. 1856; N. American Review, Jan. 1857; Westminster Review, Jan. 1857; N. British Review, Feb. 1857; Blackwood's Magazine, March, 1857; British Quarterly Review, April, 1857. The labour of the preparation of his volumes told severely upon a constitution weakened by privations and hardships; and on the 10th of October, 1856, Kane sailed from New York for Liverpool, in hopes of regaining strength; but his malady gained upon him, and on the 20th of December he took passage for Havana, which he reached on the 25th. Here he lingered until the 16th of February, 1857, when he breathed his last. As his body was carried from State to State to the city of his birth, honours were decreed such as grateful nations accord to kings and conquerors.

We have already directed the reader to Dr. Elder's Life of Kane, (see, also, SHIELDS, CHARLES WOODRUFF, D.D., No. 1); and we also refer him to the Biographical Sketch, by Dr. Shields, prefixed to a new edition of Kane's Arctic Explorations, Hartford, 1868, 8vo; Famous Boys, and How they became Great Men, Bost., 1860, 18mo; A Tribute to Kane, and other Poems, by George W. Physical Geography of Greenland, from researches undertaken during three different scientific journeys to the Arctic regions, the last of which was in 1867. He has obtained the assistance of Dr. Hooker, Professors Oliver and Dickie, Mr. Lawson, Dr. L. Lindsay, Mr. Croal, Dr. Lutken, and Herr Otto Morch of Copenhagen. In 1868 a North-German expedition in the Germania, Captain C. Koldewey, visited Greenland; on Sept. 26, 1869, Captain C. F. Hall (supra) arrived at New Bedford after five years' residence in the Arctic regions; and in the same year (1869) five expeditions visited those inhospitable climes, viz.: I. American, under Dr. Hayes, accompanied by Bradford the artist, for the purpose of taking photographs, in "The Panther;" II. German, Dr. Bessel, in "The Albert;" III. English, Captain Iverson, in "The Diana;" IV. Norwegian, Captain Carlsen, in a small sloop; V. Russian, Captain Kieck, in "The George." From some of these adventurous spirits we may expect contributions to Arctic Bibliography.

4. The Large and Small Farm Question Considered in Regard to the Present Circumstances of Ireland, 1848, 8vo. Sir Robert recommends the formation of small farms. This question must soon be considered with reference to England; and the sooner it is settled in the manner required by the necessities of a superabundant population, the better for the prosperity of that great country. In 1775 there were about 200,000 land-owners; in 1855 there were less than 35,000. How long will it be safe to crowd the cities and villages thus? Should English manufactures be driven from foreign markets by competition, what follows at home?

Keach, Benjamin, 1640–1704, a native of Stokehaman, Buckinghamshire, a member of the Particular or Calvinistic Baptists, commenced preaching in his eighteenth year, and in 1668 became pastor of a congregation in Southwark, London, was cruelly persecuted for his bold advocacy of his opinions, and consoled himself by writing a great number of controversial and other tracts and religious poems, and several theological works of greater pretensions. It is said that he gave to the world no less than forty-seven publications,—three in folio, six in quarto, and the balance in octavo and smaller sizes. Of all these works, the following are the only ones now in much demand. 1. Travels of True Godliness, Lon., 1683. New ed., with Notes and Memoirs of the Author, by the Rev. Howard Maleom, of Boston, N. England, N. York, 1831, 18mo; last English eds., Lon., 1846, '49, 18mo.

"In point of theological accuracy, devout temper, and useful tendency, the Travels of True Godliness may bear comparison with Pilgrim's Progress. The admirers of Bunyan cannot fail to be pleased with Keach."—HOWARD MALCOM.

"Keach was but a poor imitator of John Bunyan."—ROBERT SOUTHEY: Lon. Quar. Rev., x. 124.

2. The Travels of Ungodliness; last ed., 1849, 18mo. 3. Tropologia: A Key to open Scripture Metaphors and Types, 1681, fol.; 1779, fol.; last eds., 1853, '56, r. 8vo. Keach received assistance in the preparation of his works from men of more learning than himself, and the first book of Tropologia was written by Thomas Delaune. The best of the old eds. (1779, fol.) had become so scarce before the new one of 1853, that a copy could seldom be purchased under £3.

"After an acquaintance with this excellent work for more than thirty years, I will take the freedom to recommend it to serious young Christians, to Masters of Families, to Students of Divinity, and younger Ministers of the Gospel. . . . A book full of the best riches, in the easiest language."—JOHN RYLAND.

"A most valuable treasure of human composition; a book without which no Christian Minister's Library can be complete, and which may be very useful to every attentive reader and lover of the word of God."—C. DE COSTIGLON.

"I know not of any work that has treated the subject to such an ample extent."—THOMAS GIBBONS.

Also highly commended by W. Hervey, Jas. Hervey, John Conder, Benj. Francis, H. Peckwell, Saml. Medley, T. R. Valpy, and others.

"It is a work which a judicious preacher may consult with profit, but which a commonplace declaimer will never fail to abuse."—Dr. E. Williams's C. P.

"Many of his interpretations are very fanciful. The Introduction was translated from Glessius's Treatise de Typis et Metaphoris, in his Philologia Sacra.—Horne's Bibl. Bib. And see next article.

4. Gospel Mysteries Unveiled; or, An Exposition of all the Parables and many Express Similitudes contained in the Four Evangelists, &c.; with a Supp., 1701, 2 vols. fol. New ed., 1815, 4 vols. 8vo. This ed. omits the Preface, all the marginal summaries and notes, (with the exception of the references to texts,) and the indices. But a new edit., issued within about a year, (1856, r. 8vo,) lies before us, and this has the Preface, an Index, and, we presume, (but of this we are not certain,) the original notes.

"Many of the Parables are spiritualized almost to absurdity. The work, however, contains good materials, which persons of sober judgment may employ to advantage."—Horne's Bibl. Bib.

An eminent critic remarks of the two works last noticed: "That Mr. Keach possessed a very familiar acquaintance with the Bible is obvious. The above works, however, are far from judicious. He frequently fails in distinguishing things that differ, and often confounds together the things which ought to be distinguished. He carries his illustrations too far,—the common fault of metaphor-hunters and parable-preachers. His works may be useful, but they are liable to be very much abused. If the reader is partial to this kind of interpretation, he would do well to consult the Rhetoric Sacra of Glessius, in the improved edition by Dache."—Horne's Bibl. Bib.

"Bickersteth remarks that these works of Keach contain many useful suggestions."—Christian Student.

Walter Wilson says that Keach's works will be found "of great utility to the theological student, as containing many original observations upon various passages of Scripture that are obscure and intricate."—Hist. of Dissenting Churches, q. v.

5. A Golden Mine Opened, &c., containing the substance of near Forty Sermons, 1694, 4to. With Keach's portrait.

"As to his preaching, his style was strong and masculine; and his sermons, though they had not the embellishments of language, were full of solid divinity."—WALTER WILSON: ubi supra.

Crosby tells us that Keach was "a person of great integrity of soul; a Nathanael indeed." See Crosby's Hist. of the Baptists.

The last is a new and correct translation as far as the Christian era, with the original Irish on opposite pages, by Wm. Haliday. The earlier translation is not to be relied on:

"The innumerable errors in O'Connor's translation of Keating, and the blunders he makes in the name of this book, prove he was unable to make any thing of its contents."—O'REILLY.

This work, however, must not be overlooked by the student of Irish history.

"A delightful work, and the only account of that transaction on which we can rely."—ROBERT SOUTHBY.

"Bernal Diaz's account bears all the marks of authenticity, and is accompanied with such pleasant naïveté, with such interesting details, with such amusing variety,—and yet so pardonable in an old soldier who had been, as he boasts, in one hundred and nineteen battles,—as renders his book one of the most singular that is to be found in any language."—Dr. Robertson's Hist. of America.

"Bernal Diaz, the untutored child of nature, is a most true and literal copyist of nature. . . . He introduces us into the heart of the camp. . . . All the picturesque scenes and romantic incidents of the campaign are reflected in his pages, as in a mirror. The lapse of fifty years had no power over the spirit of the veteran. The fire of youth glows in every line of his rude history."—PASCOTT: ubi supra.

Keatinge, Thomas. Treat. on Family Settlements and Devises, &c., Lon., 1810, 8vo.

Keats, John, 1796–1821, a native of Moorfields, London,—where his father and grandfather kept a stable,—after receiving some classical instruction at a school at Enfield, was in his fifteenth year apprenticed to a surgeon at Edmonton, but soon abandoned Gaius and Esculapius for the charms of poetical composition. Having made the acquaintance of Mr. Leigh Hunt, then editor of the Examiner, he was encouraged to publish some of his effusions in the columns of that periodical, and in 1817 he put to press a volume of poems dedicated to his literary patron. In the next year he gave to the world Endymion, a Poetic Romance,—a poem containing many beauties, and perhaps as many faults, and certainly indicative of most remarkable poetical powers. The book had hardly got fairly before the world when it was pounced upon with great severity by Mr. Gifford, whose critical dissecting-knife made such sad havoc with the author's verses in the brief compass of three pages of the Quarterly, that poor Keats was crushed to the earth under the severity of the operation, and it was long believed by many that he actually died from its effects.

In 1820, he gave to the world a second volume, containing Lamia, Isabella, The Eve of St. Agnes, Hyperion, and some minor poems, which fully redeemed the promise of extraordinary poetical powers so clearly perceptible in his previous publications. In October of this year, he visited Italy for the benefit of his health, but received no advantage from the change, and died at Rome, on the 21st of February ensuing. As Mr. Gifford's celebrated critique on Endymion is always a prominent topic when the merits of the author form the subject of discussion, we quote a few lines as a specimen of the whole:

"With the fullest stretch of our perseverance, we are forced to confess that we have not been able to struggle beyond the first of the four books of which this Poetic Romance consists. We should extremely lament this want of energy, or whatever it may be, on our part, were it not for one consideration,—namely, that we are no better acquainted with the meaning of the book through which we have so painfully toiled than we are with that of the three which we have not looked into.

"It is not that Mr. Keats, if that is his real name,—for we almost doubt whether any man in his senses would put his real name to such a rhapsody,—it is not, we say, that the author has not powers of language, rays of fancy, and gleams of genius; he has all these; but he is unhappily addicted of the new school of what has been somewhere called Cockney poetry, which may be defined to consist of the most incongruous ideas in the most uncouth language. . . . This author is a copyist of Mr. Hunt; but he is more unintelligible, almost as rugged twice as diffuse, and ten times more drowsy and absurd than his prototype."—Lon. Quar. Rev., xix. 204–208, April, 1818.

Such language poor Keats did not consider complimentary, and he was certainly right; but to charge Gifford with his murder is absurd. We quite agree with Mr. De Quincy:

"The friends who honour Keats's memory should not lend themselves to a story so degrading. He died, I believe, of pulmonary consumption, and would have died of it, probably, under any circumstances of prosperity as a poet."—Essays on the Dists. de: John Keats, Bost., 1837, 8vo, 87.

Nothing has given so much currency to this story (excepting perhaps Shelley's pathetic lines, both prose and verse) as Byron's stanza in the 11th Canto of Don Juan:

"John Keats, who was kill'd off by one critique,

Just as he really promised something great,

If not unintelligible,—without track,—

Contrived to talk about the gods of late,

Much as they might have been supposed to speak.

Poor fellow! his was an untoward fate.

'Tis strange the mind, that very fiery particle,

Should beat itself so buff'd out by an Article."

But this stanza should always be accompanied by the following comment by one of Keats's earliest, oldest, and warmest friends:

"When I was in Italy, Lord Byron showed me in manuscript the well-known passage in Don Juan, in which Keats's death is attributed to the Quarterly Review—the couplet about the fiery particle that was snuff'd out by an article. I told him the real state of the case, pointing to him that the supposition was a mistake, and therefore, if printed, would be a misrepresentation. But a stroke of wit was not to be given up."—Leigh Hunt's Autobiography chap. xvi. q. v.

Lord Byron, indeed, may have preferred Shelley's version of the matter to Hunt's; and he certainly seems to be sincere in the opinion expressed in this stanza. See (in Moore's Life of Byron) the MS. note, Nov. 12, 1821, to his Pamphlet in answer to Blackwood's Magazine, and his letters to John Murray, of April 26 and July 30, 1821.

Mr. Prescott, referring to Marsollier's comment on Charles V.'s ungrateful letter to Simenes, "Cette terrible lettre qui fuit la cause de sa mort," remarks:

"Byron, alluding to the fate of a modern poet, ridicules the idea of "The mind, that fiery particle, Being extinguish'd by an Article."

"The frown of a critic, however, might as well prove fatal as that of a king. In both cases, I imagine, it would be hard to prove any closer connection between the two events than that of time."—Ferdinand and Isabella, 11th ed., Bost., 1856, iii. 415, n.

But, whatever may have been the extent of the injury inflicted by Gifford's "Article," he has received sufficient abuse for it himself to make the account even, long before this time. To say nothing of the poetic invectives of "Adonais," Jeffrey, Hazlitt, Talfourd, and a host of other generous champions, have taken up the cudgel in Keats's behalf, and handled them with such hearty good-will and thorough execution that we feel almost inclined to take part with poor Gifford and rescue him from his enraged assailants.

"Mr. Keats," says Hazlitt, "was hooted out of the world, and his fine talents and wounded sensibilities consigned to an early grave."—The Spirit of the Age; Mr. Gifford.

"Mr. Keats," says Talfourd, "who now happily has attained the vantage-ground whence he may defy criticism—was cruelly and wantonly held up to ridicule in the Quarterly Review,—to his transitory pain, we fear, but to the lasting disgrace of his traducer."—New Monthly Mag.; and in his Crit. and Miscell. Writings.

"The Editor of the Quarterly Review happened to be looking out for a victim," says Cunningham, "when the works of Keats appeared. . . . To such a review there was no other mode of reply but a horsewhip or a brace of pistols."—Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years.

But why a poet should murder a reviewer, or a reviewer murder a poet, (for your duellist is in act or intention one of the worst of murderers,) because one does not like the other's poetry and the other does not fancy the former's critique, is more than we can understand. Two very spicy responses to Mr. Keats's self-deputed champions will be found, the one in the London Quarterly Review for March, 1840, (art. Journalism in France,) the other by Dr. Maginn, (Remarks on Shelley's Adonais,) in Blackwood's Magazine for December, 1841. The last will be found in Dr. R. S. Mackenzie's collection of The Odoherly Papers, N. York, 1855, ii. 190-200. But it is quite time that we had quoted some opinions upon the characteristics of a writer who now, at least, has acquired an unquestionable right to rank high on the illustrious roll of Britain's greatest poets. The present popularity of Keats is best proved by that unerring standard, the publishers' account-books. Among the late editions we must not omit specially notice the one illustrated by G. Scharff, Jun., pub. by Moxon, Lon., 1854, sq. cr. 8vo, and The Eve of St. Agnes, (only,) illustrated by Wehnert, pub. by Low, Lon., 1856, cr. 8vo.

Mr. Gifford's bitter review of Endymion was pub., as we have seen, in the London Quarterly for April, 1818: it was not until more than two years later—in the Edinburgh Review for August, 1820—that the great critic of the "opposite faction," Francis Jeffrey, introduced the productions of Keats to his portion of the reading public. Of this "tardy justice" Christopher North complains to the Shepherd in Noctes Ambrosianæ for December, 1828:

"My brother [reviewer] praised Keats, it is true, but somewhat tardily, and with no discrimination: and, to this hour, he has taken no notice of his Lamia and Isabella, in which Keats's genius is seen to the best advantage; while, from the utter silence observed towards him in general, it is plain enough that he cares nothing for him, and that it is not unjust or unfair to suspect the insertion of the article on Endymion was brought about by a Cockney job of Hunt or Hazlitt's."

Jeffrey may have praised without discrimination, perhaps,—this is a matter of taste between critics,—but he certainly praised heartily.

"It [Endymion] is, in truth, at least as full of genius as of absurdity; and he who does not find a great deal in it to admire and to give delight cannot in heart see much beauty in the two exquisite dramas to which we have already alluded. [The Faithful Shepherdess of Fletcher, and The Sad Shepherd of Ben Jonson.] or find any great pleasure in some of the finest creations of Milton and Shakspeare. . . . We are very much inclined, indeed, to add, that we do not know any book which we would sooner employ as a test to ascertain whether any one had in him a native relish for poetry and a genuine sensibility to its intrinsic charm."

Of the second volume—Lamia, Isabella, The Eve of St. Agnes, and other Poems—the critic speaks in at least as high terms, with the exception of some comments on Hyperion, which exception it was, we presume, that irritated the amiable Christopher,—himself a terrible scourger when a poor songster did not suit his critical and somewhat fastidious ear. And yet we can see nothing at all smacking of severity in Jeffrey's few lines on Hyperion:

"There is a fragment of a projected Epic, entitled Hyperion, on the expulsion of Saturn and the Titanian deities by Jupiter and his younger adherents, of which we cannot advise the completion; for, though there are passages of some force and grandeur, it is sufficiently obvious from the specimen before us, that the subject is too far removed from all the sources of human interest, to be successfully treated by any modern author. Mr. Keats has unquestionably a very beautiful imagination, a perfect ear for harmony, and a great familiarity with the finest diction of English poetry; but he must learn not to misuse or misapply these advantages, and neither to waste the good gifts of Nature and study on intractable themes, nor to luxuriate too recklessly on such as are more suitable."

The review from which we have just quoted is one of those which Lord Jeffrey selected for republication in his Contributions to the Edinburgh Review. To the article thus reprinted twenty-three years after its first publication his lordship appends the following note:

"I still think that a poet of great power and promise was lost to us by the premature death of Keats in the twenty-fifth year of his age, and regret that I did not go more largely into the exposition of his merits in the slight notice of them which I now venture to reprint. But though I cannot, with propriety, or without departing from the principle which must govern this republication, now supply this omission, I hope to be forgiven for having added a page or two to the citations by which my opinion of these merits was then illustrated and is again left to the judgment of the reader."—Ed. Lon., 1853, 526-534.

Lord Byron seems to have agreed with Jeffrey's disapprobation of Keats's choice of mythological dramatis personæ, but to have entertained a higher opinion of the merits of Hyperion:

"I think he took the wrong line as a poet, and was spoiled by Cockneyfink and suburban, and versifying Tooke's Pantheon and Leupner's Dictionary. . . . His fragment of Hyperion seems actually inspired by the Titans, and is as sublime as Eschylus. He is a loss to our literature; and the more so, as he himself, before his death, is said to have been persuaded that he had not taken the right line, and was reforming his style upon the more classical models of the language. . . . His Hyperion is a fine monument, and will keep his name."—Moore's Life of Byron.

Mr. Moir remarks of Endymion and two of its successors:

"It would be difficult to point out anywhere a work more remarkable for its amount of beauties and blemishes inextricably intertwined. Its mythology is Greek, and its imagery the sylvan-pastoral,—reminding us now of the pine-flavoured Idyllia of Theocritus, and now of the 'bosky bonnies and bushy dells' of Milton's Comus. . . . His two latest were also his two most perfect compositions, yet completely opposite in their character,—The Eve of St. Agnes, of the most florid Gothic, remarkable for its sensuous beauty, and Hyperion, a fragment equally remarkable for its Greek severity and antique solemnity of outline."—Sketches of the Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century.

We may add that, of Keats's minor poems, perhaps the most admired are Lines written on Chapman's Homer, The Ode to a Nightingale, The Ode to a Grecian Urn, and the Ode to Autumn. Mr. Landor, comparing Chaucer, Burns, and Keats, does not hesitate to declare, after a brief review of the characteristics of the two former,

"Keats, in his Endymion, is richer in imagery than either; and there are passages in which no poet has arrived at the same excellence on the same ground. Time alone was wanting to complete a poet who already far surpassed all his contemporaries in this country in the poet's most noble attributes."

Mr. De Quincy censures the poem so highly lauded by Landor as warmly as he praises its successor:

"The Endymion displays absolutely the most shocking revolt against good sense and just feeling that all literature does now or ever can furnish. The Hyperion, as Mr. Gillfillan truly says, 'is the greatest of poetical torsons.' The first belongs essentially to the vilest collections of wax-work flagree or gilt gingerbread. The other presents the majesty, the austere beauty, and the simplicity, of Grecian temples enriched with Grecian sculpture."—Essays on the Poets, &c.; John Keats.

Mr. Howitt—but, alas! we find, on casting our eyes over what we have already written, that we must conclude our article just as we are fairly launched upon a pleasant ocean of criticism. He, therefore, who wishes to dive more deeply into the theme, must trust to his own pilotage, which will be materially aided by following the subjoined chart, which we offer to his acceptance. Mr. Keble was joint editor, with Dr. Pusey and others, of the Bibliotheca Patrum Ecclesiæ Catholicæ, the publication of which began in 1838, a contributor, as we have seen, to the famous (Oxford) Tracts for the Times, and to the Lyra Apostolica, and the author of a much-lauded article in the 32d vol. of the London Quarterly Review, (211-232,) on Sacred Poetry. The periodical just named accorded a hearty welcome to Mr. Keble's Christian Year, one of the most popular vols. of religious poetry which has appeared in the English language.

"In this volume," says the enthusiastic reviewer, "old Herbert would have recognised a kindred spirit, and Walton would have gone on a pilgrimage to make acquaintance with the author."—Vol. xxxviii. 48, July, 1828.

The critic, however, does not fail to notice as a fault that,

"While it pursues the spirit, it is, to our taste, too disdainful of the forms of poetry: it is contented to lead us through a succession of soft and agreeable images, obscurely, if at all, connected, while we are sometimes at a loss for the general scope and object of the poem."—Ibid., q. r.

The first American edit. of The Christian Year contains a Preface by the author's friend, Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, and a number of sacred poems selected by the bishop from the productions of the late Rev. William Crosswell, of Boston, Massachusetts. Of the many enthusiastic eulogies which have been so freely lavished upon The Christian Year, we doubt if there have been any more gratifying to the author than the eloquent commendation of Professor Wilson, from which we can give only a brief extract:

"These and many other thoughts and feelings concerning the Vision and the Faculty divine; when employed on divine subjects, have arisen in our hearts, on reading—which we have often done with delight—The Christian Year, so full of Christian poetry of the purest character. Mr. Keble is a poet whom Cowper himself would have loved: for in him piety inspires genius, and fancy and feeling are celestialized by religion. We peruse his book in a tone and temper of spirit similar to that which is breathed on us by some calm day in spring, when

and all that imagery is serene and still—cheerful in the main, yet with a touch and tinge of melancholy which makes all the blended bliss and beauty at once more endearing and profound. We should no more think of criticizing such poetry than of criticizing the clear blue skies, the soft green earth, the liquid lapse of an unimpeded stream, that

Doth make sweet music with the enamell'd stones,

Giving a gentle kiss to every flower

It overtaketh on its pilgrimage."

"Beauty is there.—purity and peace; as we look and listen we partake of the universal calm, and feel in nature the presence of Him from whom it emanated."—Reverentions of Christopher North, Sacred Poetry; and in Blackwood's Magazine, xxviii. 557, June, 1859.

The Preface to his Fairy Mythology, and that to his Life of Milton, recently published, are certainly among the most curious chapters of literary history with which our researches have made us acquainted.

Keith, George, d. about 1715, a native of Aberdeen, entered the Society of Friends, and defended their tenets against Increase and Cotton Mather, but subsequently established a sect of his own, styled Christian Quakers. Still dissatisfied, he became an Episcopal missionary at New York and Boston, and, returning to England in 1706, was appointed Rector of Edmonton, Sussex, where he died. Whilst at East Jersey, in 1682, he was made Surveyor-General, but seven years later (in 1689) we find him acting as a school-teacher in Philadelphia. He wrote a great many theological tracts, principally directed against the Quakers, (see Watt's Bibl. Brit. :) a number of sermons; An Account of his Travels to Bristol and other Places, Lon., 1699, 4to; Journal of his Travels from New Hampshire to Carataek, 1705, 4to; New Theory of the Longitude, 1709, 4to. Kemble, Charles, 1775-1854, youngest son of Roger Kemble, brother of John Philip Kemble, and father of Mrs. Frances Anne Kemble, Adelaide Kemble, and John Mitchell Kemble, was distinguished as an actor, admired as a gentleman and a scholar, and has some claims to the honours of authorship. 1. The Point of Honour; a Play, Lon., 1800, Svo. An adaptation of Mercier's Deserteur. 2. The Wanderer, or The Rights of Hospitality; an Historical Drama, 1808, Svo. An adaptation of Kotzebue's Edouard in Schottland. 3. Plot and Counterplot; a Farce, 1808, Svo. An adaptation of Dieulafoy's Le Portrait de Michel Cervantes. These three pieces were successful. 4. Kamschatka, or The Slave's Tribute; a Drama, 1811. From the German of Kotzebue. Not successful. 5. The Child of Chance; a Farce, 1812. Original. Not successful. 6. The Brazen Bust; a Melo-Drama, 1813. From the French. Not successful. An interesting biographical notice of Mr. Kemble will be found in the Lon. Gent. Mag., Jan. 1855. See also Biog. Dramat. and the following articles.

Kemble, Frances Anne, celebrated both as an actress and as a poetess, is the eldest of the two daughters of the preceding, and was born in London, about 1811. In a preceding article (GREGORY, DAVID, p. 736) we have designated the family of Gregory as the most illustrious in the annals of British science: the Kembles may claim the same pre-eminence in the history of dramatic art, as the following list of members of the family who have trod the boards in the walk of Tragedy or Comedy, or both, amply testifies.

"Sir," said Charles Macklin, when nearly one hundred years old, addressing John Philip Kemble, "I have known your family from generation to generation. I have seen you act, young man; and I have seen your father, sir; and I have seen your grandfather, sir. Sir, he was a great actor."

Commencing then with this "great actor," we have—1. Fanny Kemble's great-grandfather. 2. Her grandfather, Roger Kemble, 1721-1802. 3. Her grandmother, Sarah Kemble, 1735-1806. 4. Her father, Charles Kemble, 1775-1854. 5. Her mother, Marie Therese Kemble, 1774-1838. 6. Her uncle, John Philip Kemble, 1757-1823. 7. Her uncle, George Stephen Kemble, 1758-1822. 8. Her uncle's wife, Mrs. George Stephen Kemble. 9. Her aunt, Sarah Kemble, afterwards Mrs. Siddons, 1755-1831. 10. Her aunt, Frances Kemble, afterwards Mrs. Twiss, 1759-1812. 11. Her aunt, Elizabeth Kemble, afterwards Mrs. Whitlock, 1761-1836. 12. Her cousin, Henry Siddons, a son of Mrs. Sarah Siddons. 13. Her cousin's wife, Mrs. Henry Siddons. Nor is it in the dramatic art alone that the family have acquired eminence. Fanny Kemble's youngest sister, Miss Adelaide Kemble, now Mrs. Sartoris, in early life gained great celebrity as an operatic singer; and the only brother of these ladies, John Mitchell Kemble, late of Trinity College, Cambridge, stands in the front rank of the learned men who have called the attention of the world to the treasures of Anglo-Saxon literature.

Fanny Kemble made her first appearance on the stage, in the character of Juliet, on the 5th of October, 1829. In 1834, during a visit to America, she was married to Mr. Pierce Butler, of Philadelphia, from whom she was divorced in 1849. For a number of years past, she has from time to time delighted large audiences in England and America by her Shakespeare Readings, by which means the most striking beauties of the immortal bard have been familiarized to the public mind,—thus happily instructed without that liability to injurious influences which seems inseparable from the actual drama of the present day. It does not, of course, enter within the scope of our work to consider this lady in that artistic capacity which first conferred upon her name a dramatic celebrity unequalled since the palmy days of her aunt, Mrs. Sarah Siddons,—the delight of the two preceding generations of wits and statesmen,—whom the great Johnson complimented in her youth, and the courtly author of Waverley lauded in her old age. We pass on, then, as becomes our vocation, to the contemplation of Fanny Kemble the author, whilst those who desire to first learn the opinion of critics respecting Fanny Kemble the actress can refer to Mrs. Jameson's Female Characters of Shakespeare's Plays, in her Characteristics of Women; Sir Walter Scott's Diary, June 17, 1830, in Lockhart's Life of Scott; Sir T. Noon Talford's Miscellaneous Writings, (originally pub. in the New Monthly Magazine); Sir Archibald Alison's Essays, Polit., Histor. and Miscell., Edin. and Lon., 1850, iii. 576-579, (originally pub. in the Dublin Univ. Mag., Dec. 1846); Noctes Ambrosianæ,—Christopher North and others,—Aug. 1830 and Nov. 1832, in Blackwood's Mag., xxviii. 401, xxxii. 860. See also Blackwood's Mag., xxvii. 47, 112, xxxi. 677; Judge Story's Life and Letters, Bost., 1851, ii. 114, 117; the Court Journal, and other periodicals, for 1829, &c. We proceed to notice briefly Mrs. Kemble's publications.

1. FRANCIS THE FIRST; AN HISTORICAL DRAMA, Lon., 1832 8vo. This was written when the authoress was not more than seventeen.

"The most extraordinary work which has ever been produced by a female at her age. . . . It is unquestionably a remarkable phenomenon that a youthful poetess, however nurtured in Shakespeare, should begin her dramatic career in placing her main strength in the vigorous delineation of historic character. In this respect there is certainly no dramatic author of the present day who might not be proud to own the Francis the First of Miss Kemble."—Lon. Quar. Rev., March, 1832, xlvii. 245-246, 261, q. v.

"It will be allowed by all that there is great grasp of intellect—extraordinary, indeed, in so young a person—shown in the handling of a historical subject of such magnitude and variety, and in moulding somewhat complicated materials, necessarily of a difficult management, into cohesive and consistent form."—Blackwood's Mag., April, 1832, xxxi. 691.

Read this sprightly article, (though written by an old man,) which contains some interesting reminiscences of the Kemble family.

"That it will be successful—permanently successful—is impossible: it wants concentration: there are effective situations and clever scenes, but they have no connecting interest."—Lon. Athenæum, 1832, 170.

Francis the First met with great favour from the reading public, and at least ten edits. have been issued.

2. JOURNAL OF FRANCES ANNE BUTLER, Phila., 1835, 2 vols. 12mo; Lon., 1835, 2 vols. p. 8vo. In this Journal we have an account of Miss Kemble's travels in the United States. It was reviewed with great severity both at home and abroad. The London Quarterly Review commences its critique by remarking,

"This is a work of very considerable talent, but, both in its conception and execution, of exceeding bad taste."—Vol. liv. 33.

And the Athenæum says that
"The authoress of this lumentable Journal possessed a name which she had no right to abuse. We question whether the triple-headed Chancellor would not have granted an injunction to restrain the utterance of such a work as the present by a Kemble."—1832, 404.

In America the Journal was reviewed by Alexander H. Everett, in the North American Review, July, 1835, vol. xli. 109-144, with more indulgence than it received at home. Another review appeared in the Southern Literary Messenger, vol. i. 524. As we have quoted some adverse opinions on the Journal, it is only proper to give a line or two on the other side:

"Read Mrs. Butler's (Fanny Kemble's) Diary: it is much better than the reviews and papers will allow it to be: what is called vulgarity is useful and natural contempt for the exclusive and superfluous."—Rev. Sydney Smith to Sir Wilmot Horton, Bart., 1835; Memoir of the Rev. Sydney Smith.

In her last volume—A Year of Consolation—Mrs. Kemble has seen fit to criticize some portions of her Journal, and to these apologetic comments we must refer the reader.

3. THE STAR OF SEVILLE; A DRAMA, 1837, 8vo.
"The Star of Seville is a dramatic poem, full of poetical beauties, strongly marked with originality, not of character, but of thought, tinted with imitations of the style of the old writers,—yet, on the whole, distinguishing the writer as one capable of accomplishing a dramatic work not unworthy the regard of those who know the value of Massinger and Ford."—Lon. Athen., 1837, 258.

"Though Francis the First is better adapted to the stage, it is not stamped with the same originality, nor does it contain so many striking passages, as The Star of Seville."—Bethune's British Female Poets, Phila.

See also Fraser's Mag., xvi. 186.
4. POEMS, Phila., 1844, 12mo; Lon., 1844, 12mo; 1844, r. 18mo; 1844, 24mo; 1849, 24mo.

"More than once we have had occasion to express admiration of Mrs. Butler's various and vigorous ability; but we own that the present volume, though including no piece of considerable length or in any ambitious form, has raised our estimate of her as a poetess. She has never written so simply or so strongly. Never before has she dealt so boldly with the realities of life, and yet never before, in our judgment, did she display an equal richness of imaginative power."—J. G. Lockhart: Lon. Quar. Rev., March, 1845, lxxv. 325.

Read the whole of this enthusiastic eulogy, which is not chilled by a word of censure or even qualification.

But the eminent critic next to be quoted is, if possible, more ardent in his admiration of Mrs. Kemble's poetry:

"If we would appreciate Mrs. Kemble's genius in its full dimensions,—if we would see what she was from the fountains of Nature, and conceive what she might have become in her profession by the aid of steady effort and persevering energy,—we must study her lyric poetry. In that department there is some room for unqualified admiration. Some of her sonnets will bear a comparison with the finest lyrical poetry in the English language,—with Moore's Irish Melodies, Gray's Ode to Spring or Demans's Graves of a Houshold . . . It is in painting the human heart—in unfolding by a word or an epithet its inmost feelings, most secret thoughts,—that the greatest powers of poetry are shown. Miss Kemble may justly claim a very high place in this elevated style: the intensity of her thoughts, the vehemence of her affections, could find vent only in "Thoughts that breathe and words that burn". . . .

"After these extracts, it need not be said that Miss Kemble's poetical genius is of the very highest class, and that if she persevered in that brilliant career, and superadded learning and contemplation to her creative and imaginative powers, she will become one of the greatest lyric poets of England."—Mrs. Archibald Alison: Essays, Lon. and Glasg., 1830, iii. 579, 581, 582.

Mr. Rowton expresses the same opinion:

"I believe that in the course of a few years, when time shall have sobered down the perhaps too vividly painted lines of her mental character and shall have corrected her hasty estimates of the world and of humanity, Mrs. Butler will rank with the foremost poets of our land."—The Female Poets of Great Britain, Lon., 1848, 477-478.

"Her versification is very bold and vigorous, and her rhythm is often melodious beyond any other writer of equal strength. Her sonnets, especially when she forgets herself, are among the finest in our language; and it is easy to see that, if a more apprehensive future uplifted her thoughts, those of a personal character would be closely allied to some of Milton's. As it is, she is nobly disdainful of allawkishness or artificial conceit. She dashes at her main idea with an honest earnestness which one can scarcely help believing is a principal trait of her character."—Bethune's British Female Poets.

"It is evident to us that Mrs. Butler is indebted to Dante, as well as to Shakespeare and Milton, for the tone and temper of her poetic development. The volume before us strangely and strongly reminds us of the stern, severe, and complete style which marks the lyrical and occasional verse of the great Italian bard. . . . There is a masculine strength and vigour in her verses, not a little remarkable when men are proud to write effeminately, so delicately do they go, so softly do they tread, like the Hebrew ladies of old, when they affect the poetic character. . . . The poems before us are lyrical, descriptive, and didactic, with some few sonnets, but are all alike distinguished by an earnestness of purpose and energy of style."—Lon. Athen., 1844, 687, 712.

See also N. York Eccl. Mag., v. 101; Democrat. Rev., xv. 507. Mr. Alexander H. Everett, one of the most accomplished critics of his age, evidently accepted the beautiful poem entitled Autumn, which first appeared in Mrs. Butler's Journal, as a pledge of future poetical excellence of no ordinary rank, (see North American Review, July, 1835,) nine years before the appearance of the volume to which the preceding extracts refer. Some comments upon her poetry will be found in the London Quarterly Review, September, 1847, in a review of

5. A YEAR OF CONSOLATION, 1847, 2 vols. p. 8vo. This work is descriptive of Mrs. Kemble's tour through France to Rome, and of a residence in the latter city whilst on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Adolphe Sartoris.

"We know no other tourist who has so lovingly and picturesquely done justice to the natural beauty round about Rome, and therefore have expatiated perhaps disproportionately on what may be called the peculiar and principal grace and beauty of the book."—Lon. Athen., 1847, 493; see also p. 400.

"Her eye, schooled in scenic and dramatic effect, sizes differences at once, whether in creed or character, colour or costume. Fresh from the model republic, she has little reserve, and less respect for settled facts, forms, and persons: to her all the world's a stage, and she speaks out plainly, like the callantess-shaw in St. Peter's and the Pope himself first fiddler."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Sept. 1847, lxxxv. 449.

This article—the most elaborate review of The Year of Consolation which has appeared, and which includes also a notice of Edmund Lear's Illustrated Excursions in Italy, 1847, 2 vols. fol.—should be read by all who have entered, and by all who expect to enter, the gates of the Eternal City. All of the critics unite in applauding Mrs. Kemble's descriptive powers:—

"A Year of Consolation, though rather forced, and very scenic, is animated and effective. The descriptions of external nature are often pictures of a very striking kind, tracing the characteristics of the things visibly before the reader."—Lon. Spectator.

To the same effect speaks one of the last travellers to Rome, who has favoured the world with the results of his observations:

"The great merit of the work consists in the admirable descriptions of scenery and nature which it contains. The sense of beauty—of the beauty of color especially—is very keen; and in conveying impressions to her reader she uses language with uncommon skill. A single expression or even word, dashed with an apparently careless hand upon the canvas, produces a fine effect. She speaks of 'a gully-looking mountain' of 'the unhesitating white' of Italian daisies; and, again, of 'wide-eyed daisies' of 'a rusty donkey'—a very happy though very obvious epithet,—and of 'snow-white drifts of hawthorn.' Her illustrations have sometimes the quaintness of Cowley; as when she compares the arches of an aqueduct to the vertebrae of some great serpent, whose marrow was the living water of which Rome drank for centuries; or the sky, seen through a window of the ruined Villa Mondragone, to a sparkling blue eye through the sockets of a skeleton.—Six Months in Italy, by George Stillman Hillard, 1st ed., 1853, Bost., 2 vols. 12mo.

Another notice of A Year of Consolation will be found in the Westminster Review, xlvii, 399. Other notices respecting Mrs. Kemble, whose genius, exemplary character, and various accomplishments have gained her "troops of friends" on both sides of the Atlantic, will be found in Fraser's Mag., xii, 327; Bost. Living Age, xx, 350.

Those of our readers who shall profit by the advice we have given them, and refer to some of the many notices of Mrs. Kemble's works indicated in the course of this article, will occasionally find statements and speculations relative to this accomplished lady's personal history for the last twenty years, and may consider the absence of all such allusions here an omission which requires some explanation. We must confess that we are not careful to answer in this matter. When we determined to treat of the works of the living in the present volume, we resolved at the same time to know them only as authors,—not as husbands and wives, nor as members of society, not even as men and women: we recognise our dramatis persone as intellectual abstractions only, and allow them the same liberty of classification in other relations as Hamlet, whilst yet in awe-struck ignorance, accorded to the spectral representative of the "majesty of buried Denmark." As we can hardly expect that each debatable question connected with religion, politics or literature, public policy or domestic grievance, will have a separate Biographical Dictionary to espouse its cause, we have felt it a duty to fairly represent all, and to be neither the champion nor the detractor of any. Permitted temporarily to occupy a position in the great Court of Literary Jurisprudence, we strive continually to bear in mind that that position is neither the office of the advocate who pleads, the judge who determines, nor the jury who decides, but rather that of the reporter who records the law or the clerk who registers the verdict. To express acquiescence, however, in that which is quoted on the authority of others, especially where no vexed points of controversy are involved, may be permitted to the humblest annotator; and, to return to our subject after rather prolix digression, we have much pleasure in expressing our hearty concurrence in the following eloquent eulogium of Mrs. Kemble by one of the most eminent critics of the age. Referring to that tone of sadness so observable in much of her poetry, Sir Archibald Alison remarks,

"Let her not rest in the mournful belief that she is alone in the world,—that no one sympathizes with, no one reveres her. It is often the melancholy fate of genius to be solitary so far as companionship goes. The highest mountains stand alone in their vastness. But she can never be alone, if the sympathy of minds is considered. She has struck a chord which will forever vibrate in the human heart; she will be united in thought, in every age, with the generous, the brave, the high-minded; and thousands who, like the author, know her only by the exquisite conceptions she has given to the world, will ever feel towards her the admiration of genius and almost the affection of friendship."—Essays, 1850, iii, 582.

"SONNET."

"ON MRS. KEMBLE'S READINGS FROM SHAKESPEARE.
"O precious evenings! all too swiftly sped!
Leaving us heirs to amplest heritages
Of all the best thoughts of the greatest sages,
And giving tongues unto the silent dead!
How our thoughts glow'd and trembled as she read.
Interpreting by tones the wondrous pages
Of the great poet who foreruns the ages,
Anticipating all that shall be said!
O happy Reader! having for thy text
The magic book whose sibiline leaves have caught
The rarest essence of all human thought!
O happy Poet! by no critic vex'd!
How must thy listening spirit now rejoice
To be interpreted by such a voice!"

II. W. LONGFELLOW: Poems, Bost., 1857, vol. i, 339.

Kemble, George Stephen, 1758–1822, uncle of the preceding, and an actor of some repute, produced a dramatic piece (an alteration from a play of Heywood's) entitled The Northern Inn, a Farce, 1791. Not printed. See Biog. Dramat. In 1783, Mr. Kemble married the celebrated actress, Miss Satchell, afterwards generally known by the title of Mrs. Stephen Kemble.

Kemble, John Mitchell, b. 1807, only brother of Frances Anne Kemble, and one of the most eminent of Anglo-Saxon scholars, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. For his devotion to Anglo-Saxon literature he was greatly indebted to the master under whom he pursued his studies in Germany, the celebrated Professor Jacob Grimm. As an author, he is best known to the world by his excellent work entitled The Saxons in England: A History of the English Commonwealth until the Period of the Norman Conquest, Lon., 1848, 2 vols. 8vo; but antiquaries are not unacquainted with his learned publications of a more recondite character, the most important of which are editions of the Anglo-Saxon Poems of Beowulf, &c., 1833–37, 2 vols.; Codex Diplomaticus Ævi Saxonici, 1839–48, 6 vols. 8vo; The Anglo-Saxon Charters; The Vercelli Codex: Poetry of the Codex Vercellensis, Anglo-Saxon and Latin, with an English Trans., 1843; Dialogue of Salomon and Saturnius, with an English Trans., 1848; Twysden's Considerations upon the Government of England, 1849. For a number of years Mr. Kemble acted in the capacity of editor to the British and Foreign Quarterly Review; he now holds the office of Examiner of Plays under the Lord-Chancellor. A new work of his has appeared within the last few days, the title of which promises a rich repast to our historical "Oldbucks":—"State Papers and Correspondence, illustrative of the Political and Social State of Europe from the Revolution to the Accession of the House of Hanover. Edited, with Historical Introduction, Memoirs, and Notes, from originals hitherto unpublished, 1857, 8vo. See Lon. Gent. Mag., April, 1857, 439; London Athenæum, March 7, 1857. We have before us warm commendations of The Saxons in England, by the Westminster Review, Spectator, Inquirer, Critic, John Bull, Morning Chronicle, and Jerrold's News. From these we must content ourselves with one extract:

"In these volumes Mr. Kemble has given an admirable series of Essays illustrative of a most important period of our history. . . . The work will be found a comprehensive repository of valuable information relating to the Saxons and the period during which they were possessors of the English soil; and what will be found to add to its value is the circumstance of the author having made himself especially familiar with Anglo-Saxon charters, and other documents of recent discovery throwing light upon that portion of English history, to which few previous writers appear to have had access."—Westminster Review.

Mr. De Vericour styles The Saxons in England

"The best work, we believe, on the Anglo-Saxon period."—Historical Analysis of Christian Civilization, Lon., 1850, 490.

When are we to be favoured with the continuation of the work which Mr. Kemble promises? The judicial proceedings, social condition, the arts, literature, and science, of these early days, will form a most valuable chapter of English history.

Since the above was written, this eminent scholar has ceased from his labours; he died March 26, 1857, of inflammation of the chest. He left unfinished the continuation of his Saxons in England, and a work on the Archæology of the Northern Nations, under the title of Horæ Ferales, which was to have been illustrated by numerous drawings from sketches by the author. Shortly before his death, he was commissioned by the Manchester Committee to form a Collection of Celtic and Anglo-Saxon Antiquities, as part of their forthcoming Exhibition of Art. Among his other unfinished projects was a new edition of the Anglo-Saxon Charters, which we hope will be undertaken by some competent scholar. See Lon. Gent. Mag., May, 1857; Lon. Athenæum, March 28, 1857.

Kemble, John Philip, 1757–1823, uncle of Frances Anne, Adelaide, and John Mitchell Kemble, and the most celebrated actor of his time, wrote Belsharius, a Tragedy, 1778, not printed; The Female Officer, a Farce, 1779, not printed; Lodoiska, an Opera, 1794, 8vo; altered 31 plays (principally Shakspeare's) for the stage; pub. an Essay on Macbeth and Richard III., 2d ed., 1817, 8vo; and a vol. of Fugitive Pieces, (Poems,) 1780, 8vo. The last vol. he endeavoured to suppress on the next day after publication. It has therefore become very rare, and copies have sold for £2 11s. and £3 5s. For further particulars respecting Mr. Kemble we must refer to a vol. already noticed by us,—his Life by James Bowden; see p. 211 of this Dictionary. See also Biog. Dramat.; Verses on Various Occasions, by John Taylor, 1795, 8vo; Boswell's Life of Johnson, and other biographies of the period; review of Boaden's Life of Kemble, by Sir Walter Scott, Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxiv, 197; Sir Archibald Alison's Essays, Edin. and Lon., 1850, iii, 565–567; and his History of Europe, 1815–52, chap. v.; Westminster Review, iii, 487.

"He was learned a great antiquarian, and studied the dress, armour, and costume of the olden time with the most assiduous care."—Sir Archibald Alison; Hist. of Europe, 1815–52, chap. v.

"We must cut short our history of Kemble as an actor, by brief mention of those Roman characters—Cato, Brutus, and Coriolanus—by means of which he transported us to the Capitol, so completely had he made the habits, manners, and mode of thinking of the ancients identically his own. They were, indeed, peculiarly suited to his noble and classical form, his dignified and stately gesture, his regulated yet commanding eloquence.

"Pride in each port, defiance in each eye,
You saw the birds of human kind pass by."

SIR WALTER SCOTT: Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxiv, 222.

Kemble, Mrs. Marie Therese, 1774-1838, the wife of Charles Kemble, and mother of Frances Anne, Adelaide, and John Mitchell Kemble, was a native of Vienna, and a daughter of George Louis De Camp, or, properly, De Fleury, a descendant of the ancient French house of that name. In 1806, this favourite actress became the wife of Charles Kemble. Mrs. Kemble was the author of First Faults, a Comedy, 1799, not printed; The Day after the Wedding, an Interlude, 1808, 8vo. There are also ascribed to her—Match-Making, a Comedy, 1808, not printed; Smiles and Tears, or The Widow's Stratagem, a Comedy, 1816. See Biog. Dramat.; Watt's Bibl. Brit.; Blackwood's Mag., xxxi, 677. It will be noticed that six of the Kemble family have been recorded in this volume as authors,—viz.: 1. Charles Kemble. 2. His daughter, Frances Anne Kemble. 3. His uncle, George Stephen Kemble. 4. His son, John Mitchell Kemble. 5. His uncle, John Philip Kemble. 6. His wife, Marie Thérèse Kemble.

Ken, Thomas, D.D., 1637-1710-11, a native of Berkhamstead, Hertfordshire, educated at Winchester School and New College, Oxford; Fellow of Winchester College, 1666; Rector of Brixton, Isle of Wight, and subsequently, in 1669, Prob. of Westminster; Chaplain to Lord Dartmouth, and afterwards to Charles II.; Bishop of Bath and Wells, 1684. He was one of the seven bishops committed to the Tower for disobedience by James II., but proved his loyalty by refusing to take the oaths to William and Mary, and was therefore deprived of his bishopric. He was a man of devoted piety, expansive benevolence, and great tenderness of spirit:

"His intellect was indeed darkened by many superstitions and prejudices; but his moral character, when impartially viewed, sustains a comparison with any in ecclesiastical history, and seems to approach as near as human infirmity permits to the ideal perfection of Christian virtue."—E. B. MORTON, Hist. of England, vol. i, 1848. See also vols. iii, and iv, 1850.

It is natural to remark, in reference to the above citation, that a wide difference will always exist in the minds of men as to what may be properly denominated "superstitions and prejudices" in matters of religion. See references at end of this article. As an author, this excellent man is known by a number of sermons, theological treatises, manuals of devotion, and poetical compositions, among which are some greatly admired hymns, still to be found in collections suited to public and private worship:

"Bishop Ken's morning and evening hymns are admirably well adapted for use in most collections of devotional poetry."—Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 431.

"The simple and touching devoutness of many of Bishop Ken's lyrical effusions has been unimagined because of their poetical contrivances and heavy movement of his narrative."—See JOHN KEMPE, Sacred Poetry, in Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxi, 247.

The bishop's poetical works were pub., Lon., 1721, 4 vols. 8vo, accompanied by two of his sermons, and a Life of the author by W. Hawkins, Esq., his great-nephew and executor. Hawkins's Life of Bishop Ken had been previously pub. in 1718, 8vo. A collective ed. of his Prose Works, with some of his letters, (never before pub.) edited by J. T. Round, with Life by W. Hawkins, appeared in 1855, 8vo; 1855, 8vo. Of separate works, there have been recent eds. of—1. Poems, Devotional and Didactic, 18mo. 2. Manual of Prayers, 1828, 12mo; 1840, 18mo.

Kendall, George, D.D., a Calvinistic divine, Preb. of Exeter, and Rector of Blissland, Cornwall, ejected at the Restoration for Non-conformity, wrote a Vindication of the Doctrine of Predestination, Lon., 1653, fol.; a Defence of the Doctrine of the Perseverance of the Saints, against John Goodwin, 1654, fol.; and three other works, 1656. '57, '64.

Kendall, George Wilkins, a native of Vermont, removed to New York on attaining his majority, and remained in that city until 1835, when he became a resident of New Orleans, where, as editor of the Picayune, he made himself extensively known in all parts of the country. In 1841, he volunteered to accompany the Texan Santa Fé Expedition, the travels of which he has so graphically described in his Narrative, pub. in New York, 1844, 2 vols. p. 8vo, pp. 836; Lon., 1845, 2 vols. 8vo; 1846, 12mo. New Amer. ed., enlarged, N. York, 1856, 2 vols. 12mo. The sale of this book in America alone had reached 40,000 vols. by the year 1853. We need hardly say that it has been highly commended: especially see the London Athenæum, which contains three notices, with copious extracts, —vol. for 1844, 351, 400, 425. See also N. York International Magazine, iii. 145; Method. Quar. Review; Chambers's Edin. Jour.; Britannia; Atlas. Some of the materials of this work were used in Capt. Marryatt's Travels of Monsieur Violet. In 1851, Mr. Kendall pub. a large folio vol., entitled The War between the United States and Mexico, embracing 12 coloured plates of the principal Conflicts, by Carl Nebel, N. York, $10 00. There is a descriptive account of each battle, by Mr. Kendall, who was a member of General Taylor's staff through the whole of his campaigns. For further information respecting Mr. Kendall, see N. York International Magazine, iii. 145-146; Buggay's Off-land Takings, 218-219. Mr. Kendall now (1857) resides near New Braunfels, Texas, where he has an extensive cattle-ranch.

Amer. ed. of the English trans. of Prof. Hermann Olshausen, D.D.'s Commentaries on the New Testament, vols. i. and ii., 1856; to be completed in 6 vols. r. 8vo. We have already noticed the English trans. of Olshausen's Commentaries (pub. in Clark's Edinburgh Foreign Theol. Lib.) in our article on THOMAS BROWN, p. 260 of this Dictionary. That translation is the basis of the present edition, but it has been thoroughly revised and greatly improved by the critical labours of Professor Kendrick. He has also translated the Greek words and phrases which occur in the text, and added a few brief notes when the expositions of the author seemed to demand animadversion. The treatise of Olshausen on the genuineness of the writings of the New Testament translated by Mr. Fosdick is prefixed to this edition. It will form a most valuable addition to the American Theological Library. See JUDSON, MRS. EMILY C.

The Dedication to the King in No. 1 was written by Dr. Saul Johnson. No. 2 consists of Letters addressed to Jas. Ferguson, who opposed Kennedy's theory of Scripture Chronology. It was also opposed by Rev. Thomas Bowen, of Bristol, in a series of letters pub. in The Christian Magazine.

Kennedy, John. Serm., Ephes. iii. 8, s. a.

Kennedy, John Pendleton, equally distinguished in the controversies of politics and the amenities of letters, was born in Baltimore, Oct. 25, 1795, and graduated at the college of his native city in 1812. Admitted to the practice of the law in 1816, he soon gave evidence of that aptitude for public business and power of influencing other minds which in America is an almost certain guarantee of political distinction. In 1820, 1821, and 1822, he was elected to the House of Delegates of Maryland; in 1838, 1841, and 1843, was sent to the House of Representatives at Washington; and in 1846 again entered the Maryland House of Delegates, and officiated as Speaker. In Congress he exercised great influence over his party, and his political papers and reports carried this influence beyond the sound of his voice. The best-known of these productions is A Defence of the Whigs, &c., pub. in 1844. Mr. Kennedy's public services were honourably closed (at least for a season) in 1852, under the Fillmore administration, by his appointment to the post of Secretary of the Navy of the United States. In this chair he had been preceded by two distinguished literary brethren,—James K. Paulding and George Bancroft. We should not omit to notice that in 1849 Mr. Kennedy was chosen Provost of the University of Maryland. He is also Vice-President of the Historical Society of Maryland.

We have now to consider the watchful public guardian of the material interests of the people in his capacity of eater for their intellectual gratification. Mr. Kennedy commenced authorship in 1818, by the publication, in conjunction with Peter Hoffman Cruse, of (1) The Red Book, a series of miscellaneous papers in prose and verse, issued in Baltimore about every fortnight. These (continued through 1818 and '19) were subsequently collected into two vols. Kennedy's other publications were as follows: 2. Swallow Barn; or, A Sojourn in the Old Dominion, 1832. This work, consisting of a number of sketches of Virginia life and manners, was very favourably reviewed by Edward Everett in the North American Review for April, 1833, vol. xxvii. 519-544. See also South. Quar. Rev., xxi. 71. 3. Horse-Shoe Robinson; or, a Tale of the Tary Ascendency, 1835. The preceding work was very favourably received by the public, but Horse-Shoe Robinson seems to have met with even more success. It is an historical novel, dealing largely with the personal experiences of a soldier of the Revolution, whose title the book carries on its front. See South. Quar. Rev., xxii. 203. 4. Rob of the Bowl; a Legend of St. Inigoes, 1838. Here we have much historical matter connected with the religious troubles between the Roman Catholics and Protestants in Maryland in the days of Cecilius Calvert, Lord Baltimore. The three preceding works were republished in 3 vols., (uniform,) with revisions and illustrations, in 1852, by G. P. Putnam, of New York. 5. Annals of Quodlibet, 1840. This is a political satire upon some of the scenes in the Presidential canvass which resulted in the election of General Harrison. 6. Memoirs of the Life of William Wirt, Attorney-General of the United States, Phila., 1849, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., revised, 1850, 2 vols. 12mo. In the preparation of this work, the author had the advantage of the whole of Mr. Wirt's papers, correspondence, diaries, &c. It throws light upon much of the political history of the times, and should be consulted by the historical student.

"In itself, the Memoir is not what the reading world calls interesting. There is no action and little incident. The letters are the best portion. . . . Mr. Kennedy has done what he had to do with zeal and ability. But the book is not likely to take much hold of English readers, from the absence of all stirring incident in the narrative."—Lon. Athenæum, 1850, 867-868.

Mr. Kennedy had, as early as 1834, delivered a Discourse on the Life and Character of his friend Mr. Wirt, Balt., 8vo. Among other of his minor publications are An Address delivered before the Baltimore Horticultural Society, in 1833, and A Discourse at the Dedication of Green Mount Cemetery, in 1839. He has contributed quite a number of articles to periodicals,—we suppose enough to fill several octavo volumes; and would that they were gathered into volumes! Will not the author see to this? For further information respecting this popular writer and his works, in addition to authorities above cited, see HAMES of American Authors, N. York, 1853, 241-246; Amer. Whig Review, (with portrait,) xiii. 13; N. York Rev., x. 144; Amer. Month. Rev., ii. 255; South. Lit. Mess., i. 522; Internat. Mag., iv. 151. From the complimentary notices before us of Mr. Kennedy's works, we do not think we can make a better quotation than the following lines, which commence a review of Swallow Barn by one of the most eloquent orators and distinguished scholars of the age:

"This is a work of great merit and promise. It is attributed to a gentleman of Baltimore, already advantageously known to the public by several productions of less compass and in various styles, but all excellent in their respective ways. The present attempt proves that he combines, with the talent and spirit which he had previously exhibited, the resource, perseverance, and industry that are necessary to the accomplishment of extensive works. We do not know that we can better evince our friendly feeling for him than by expressing the wish that the success which this production has met with may induce him to withdraw his attention from other objects, and devote himself entirely to the elegant pursuits of polite literature, for which his taste and talent are so well adapted, and in which the demand for labour—to borrow an expression from a science to which he is no stranger—is still more pressing than in law, political economy, or politics."—EDWARD EVERETT, N. Amer. Rev., xxxvi. 519-544, April, 1833.

This is one of the many instances in which Mr. Everett has evinced the foresight to discern, and the generosity to encourage, the early indications of that literary excellence of which he himself is so illustrious an example. We had not intended to add any thing to these lines; but it may be well to cite some opinions of a later date, to show that in the estimation of competent critics Mr. Kennedy has not "fulfilled the promise of his spring."

"Mr. Kennedy is altogether one of our most genial, lively, and agreeable writers. His style is airy, easy, and graceful, but various, and always in keeping with his subject. He excels both as a describer and as a raconteur. His delineations of nature are picturesque and truthful, and his sketches of character are marked by unusual freedom and delicacy. He studies the periods which he attempts to illustrate with the greatest care, becomes thoroughly imbued with their spirit, and writes of them with the enthusiasm and the apparent sincerity and earnestness of a contemporary and an actor. He pays an exemplary regard to the details of costume, manners, and opinion, and is scarce ever detected in any kind of anachronism. There are some inequalities in his works, arising perhaps from the interruptions to which a man in active public life is liable; there is occasional diffuseness and redundancy of incident as well as of expression; but his faults are upon the surface, and could be easily removed."—Griswold's Prose Writers of America, 4th ed., Phila., 1862, 383.

"Swallow Barn is an admirable delineation of Virginia life in the olden time. Another work by the same author, Horse Shoe Robinson, is of quite as much merit. Mr. Kennedy deserves a place in the front rank of American literature."—PRESIDENT KING, of Columbia College.

Kennett, White, D.D., 1660-1728, a native of Dover, England, entered of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, 1678; Vicar of Amersden, Oxfordshire, 1684; Rector of Shottesbrook, Berkshire, 1693; minister of St. Botolph, Aldgate, London, 1699; Dean of Peterborough, 1707; Bishop of Peterborough, 1718. Bishop Kennett was a man of great learning, and a zealous antiquary. He was considered a high-churchman before the Revolution and a low-churchman after its occurrence. He pub. fifty-seven works,—principally single serms., tracts, letters, &c. His most important publications are: 1. Life of Mr. Somner, Oxf., 1693, 8vo. See Dibdin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1824, 162. 2. Parochial Antiquities of Oxon. and Bucks, 1695, 4to. A few specimens on large paper. Greatly enlarged from the author's MSS. Notes, 1818, 2 vols. 4to, £3 3s. Edited by the Rev. B. Bandinel, D.D.

"Will be duly valued as long as ecclesiastical history bears any repute amongst us."—Bp. Nicolson's Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, p. 8.

3. Ecclesiastical Synods and Parliamentary Convocations of the Church of England historically and justly vindicated from the misrepresentations of Mr. [afterwards Bishop] Atterbury, Lon., 1701, 8vo. In answer to Atterbury's Rights, Powers, and Privileges of an English Convocation, 1700, '01, 8vo. See Nicolson, ubi supra, p. 135. Both writers pub. more upon this subject subsequently. 4. A Complete Hist. of England, with the Lives of all the Kings and Queens thereof, from the earliest accounts of Time to the death of William III., 1706, 3 vols. fol.; 2d ed., enlarged and corrected, 1719, 3 vols. fol. The notes signed J. S. are said to be by John Strype. Vols. i. and ii. are a compilation from various authors of fourteen royal lives,—with Milton's Hist. of England, up to the Conquest, prefixed. These vols. are said to have been compiled by a Mr. Hughes, who also has the credit of having written the general Preface. Vol. iii. contains the lives of Charles I., Charles II., James II., and William III., "all writ by a new and impartial hand," supposed to be Kennett. This work—the 2d ed.—should be in every large historical library. The lives in vols. i. and ii. were written by Daniel Habington, Sir Thomas More, Hall, Hollinshed, Buck, Lord Bacon, Lord Herbert, Hayward, Hughes, Camden, and Arthur Wilson. The Complete History was severely handled by Roger North (q. v.) in his Examen, 1740, 4to. 5. Serm. at the Funeral of the Duke of Devonshire, 1707, 8vo; with Memoirs of the Family of Cavendish, 1708, 8vo. New ed., 1797, 8vo. Nearly all the copies were destroyed by fire. This sermon gave great offence, was severely criticized by John Dunton in his Hazard of a Death-Bed Repentance, and satirized by Pope in his Imitations of Horace. 6. Bibliotheca Americana Primordia; an Attempt towards laying the Foundation of an American Library, &c., 1713, 4to. Dr. Dibdin states (infra) that there was a reprint of this catalogue in 1791, but the Bibliotheca Americana to which he refers is another and a very inferior work. The collector of American books should secure Kennett's Bibliotheca when he can.

"This, as far as it goes, is the best catalogue of books relating to America extant, the titles being copied at full length with the greatest exactness, together with the name of the printer, and the number of pages in each volume. It unfortunately contains only the books given to the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts, by White Kennett, Bishop of Peterborough, and a few others, many of them not relating to America. It is, however, rich in English tracts relating to New England. The catalogue was drawn up by Bishop Kennett, but the very complete index, which occupies nearly half the volume, was formed by the Rev. Robert Watts."—Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, i. 21-22.

It is hardly necessary to say that Mr. Rich's invaluable Bibliotheca must accompany Kennett's. To sharpen the appetite of the collector, we extract a few lines from the Preface to the last-named work:

"In this short catalogue will be found about twenty original tracts relating to Newfoundland; above fifty concerning Virginia; one hundred, or more, of New England; and so on in proportion to the other colonies."

Some of these tracts are supposed to be entirely lost. The collection itself has disappeared. Some years since a gentleman from New York essayed to find it, but a few scattered vestiges in one of the rooms of the Society at Lambeth were all that rewarded his bibliographical zeal. Dibdin remarks of the Bibliotheca,

"Both original and reprint [see above] are at this moment [1825] sticking on stalls at some two shillings each. The book is invaluable to a collector; and the spirit that is now abroad in America should lead some Bostonian, or New Yorker, or Philadelphian, to bring the catalogue of publications down to the present time."—Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 47.

We have already briefly referred, and shall hereafter more fully refer, (see KEN, OBAMA.) to the services of Mr. Rich in the cause of American Bibliography; and we are induced by Dr. Dibdin's comments to hint at the fact that a gentleman of Philadelphia has been long engaged upon an enlarged catalogue raisonné of books relating to America. We ourselves, in the present volume, have, we hope, contributed something in this direction. See LUDWIG, HERMANN E. 7. The Wisdom of Looking Backwards, &c., 1715, Svo. This is a record of the speeches, writings, &c. of the preceding four years, and "fills up a gap in our literary history." But the design was more fully carried out in the work next noticed. 8. Register and Chronicle, Ecclesiastical and Civil, towards discovering and correcting the true History of England, from the Restoration of King Charles II., vol. i., 1728, fol.; 1741, fol. This work—which should be used as a sequel to Whitelock's Memorials and studied with Rushworth's Collections—is a diary of matters of fact "delivered in the words of the most authentic books, papers, and records."

"One of those astonishing labours which could only have been produced by the pleasure of study urged by the strong love of posterity."—Disraeli's Calamities of Authors, ed. 1840, 86.

The author calls it a "tedious, heavy book," and remarks, "The volume, too large, brings me no profit." So he gave it to his publisher, who, we presume, made as little on it as the author did. But it is from such contemporaneous records that all true history must be compiled. As regards the "astounding labours" to which Disraeli refers, Kennett delighted in such toil. If any one doubt this, let him visit the Lands-downe department of the British Museum Library of MSS., from No. 935 to No. 1042, which were the good bishop's; and there is contained in these cemerities of knowledge much matter which he never communicated to the public. For further information respecting this learned antiquary, industrious annalist, and excellent prelate, see the Rev. Wm. Newton's Life of Bp. Kennett, 1730, Svo; Athen. Oxon.; Genl. Dict.; Biog. Brit.; Nichols's Arterbury; Nichols's Lit. Anec.; Genl. Mag., vol. lxxvi., &c.; Dibdin's Quarrels of Authors, ed. 1840, 256. We must not omit to notice that in 1850 (12mo) Mr. S. F. Wood and Mr. Ed. Baddeley pub., (for the first time,) from the author's MSS., a work of Bp. Kennett's on Lay Improvements.

Kennicott, Benjamin, D.D., 1718-1783, a native of Totness, Devonshire, entered of Wadham College, Oxford, 1744; became Fellow of Exeter College, and subsequently Vicar of Culham, Oxfordshire; Radcliffe Librarian, 1767; Canon of Christ Church, 1770. He pub. two or three single sermons, some theolog. treatises, an ed. of the Hebrew Bible, and Accounts, &c. connected with the last. We notice the following publications: 1. On the Tree of Life in Paradise; a Crit. Dissert. on Gen. ii. 8-24, 1747, Svo. 2. On the Oblation of Cain and Abel; a Crit. Dissert. on Gen. iv. 1-5, 1747, Svo; 2d ed. of both printed together, Oxf., 1747, Svo.

"The object of the first is to show that the tree of life was not an individual tree, but a species of tree which grew in Paradise, which he seems to make out satisfactorily. His design in the second is to prove that Cain's oblation was only a bread or thank offering; while Abel's was both that and a sacrifice or peace-offering."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

3. The State of the Printed Text of the Old Testament

Considered; a Dissert. in two Parts, 1753-59, 2 vols. Svo. In Latin by W. A. Teller, Lips., 1756-63, 2 vols. Svo. 4. Answer to T. Rutherforth's Letter, &c., (relative to No. 3.) Lon., 1762, Svo. In these Disserts the author proved the necessity of a revision of the Hebrew Text. See Bp. Marsh's Divinity Lectures, No. XI.; Orme's Bibl. Bib.; Horne's Bibl. Bib.; and authorities cited at conclusion of this article. A subscription of between nine and ten thousand pounds sterling was made to defray the expenses of the collation of MSS., printed eds. of the Old Testament, Jewish and early Christian writers, &c. The collation was vigorously carried on from 1760 to '69, and an annual Account was pub. by Dr. K. of the results. These ten Annual Accounts were pub. collectively, in one Svo vol., in 1770, and should accompany the work to which they refer, which at last appeared, (5,) Vetus Testamentum Hebraicum, cum variis Lectionibus, Oxf., 1770, 2 vols. fol. This is the most splendid ed. of the Hebrew Scriptures ever published.

"The greatest and most important work that has been undertaken and accomplished since the revival of letters."—BISHOP TOWN.

"Kennicott did not confine his collation to MSS. and editions. He had recourse to the most distinguished among rabbinical writings, but particularly the Talmud, the text of which is as ancient as the third century."—BISHOP MUSEN.

For a particular account of this great work—for such, notwithstanding some errors and imperfections, it certainly is—we must refer the reader to authorities cited at conclusion of this article; also to Marsh's Divinity Lects., No. XI.; Horne's Bibl. Bib.; Orme's Bibl. Bib.; Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 13-14; Dibdin's Lib. Comp.; Lon. Month. Rev., O.S., iv. 92-100, lxiv. 173-182, 321-328, lxx. 121-131. Those who have Kennicott's Vetus Testamentum Hebraicum must add to it M. de Rossi's supplement, pub. at Parma,—Variae Lectiones Veteris Testamenti, 1781-87, 4 vols. 4to, and Appendix, 1798. This work and Kennicott's ed. form one complete set of collations. An ed. of the Hebrew Bible, containing many of the most important of the readings in Kennicott's and De Rossi's vols., was pub. by Doederlein and Meissner, Leip., 1793; and a far better one by Jahn, Vienna, 1805, 4 vols. Svo. See BOOTHROYD, BENJAMIN, D.D., p. 219 of this Dictionary. Of Kennicott's ed. the learned Henry Owen declares,—

"It is a work which contains, with all its imputed defects, a vast treasure of Hebrew learning; which, judiciously applied, will contribute more to rectify and restore the Hebrew text than all the methods hitherto practised."

Kennicott's Dissertatio Generalis—or Prolegomena in fact—annexed to vol. ii. of his ed. of the Hebrew Bible, should be carefully studied by the divinity student.

"Though inquiries of this description unavoidably contain matters of doubtful disputation, though the opinions of Kennicott have been frequently questioned, and sometimes justly questioned, his Dissertatio generalis is a work of great interest to every biblical scholar. . . . The Dissertatio generalis, therefore, is the work which is always to be examined in the first instance by those who are desirous of obtaining information on any Hebrew manuscript which had been collated before 1770, when Kennicott's collation was closed."—Dr. MUSEN: ubi supra.

"Kennicott was a learned and most diligent scholar; but his fame must rest chiefly on his labours as a collector of Hebrew MSS. He does not now rank in the first line of Hebrew or Oriental scholars; and many of his criticisms in the above works (1, 2, 3, 5, supra, et 6, infra) have been disputed by writers of distinction."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

We should add that the Dissertatio Generalis was printed separately at Oxford, 1780, fol., and at Brunswick by Prof. Bruns, (an associate in the collations,) 1782, Svo.

"Kennicott's own Dissertation upon the state of the Hebrew text, [see No. 3.] with his annual accounts, are a fund of theological learning."—Dibdin's Lib. Comp.

6. Remarks on Select Passages in the Old Testament. To which are added eight sermons, Lon., 1787, Svo.

"Contain many useful hints."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

See Lon. Month. Rev., O.S., lxxviii. 477-489. The author of so many criticisms could not hope to escape criticism himself: his publications in opposition to his expressed views on different points were put forth from time to time. Mr. Dyer, of Exeter, (or some person from whom he purchased,) took the pains to make a collection of these pieces, together with all of Kennicott's works; and a catalogue of the whole will be found in Dyer & Co.'s Catalogue of English Divinity for 1829. This collection should be in the Bodleian Library,—perhaps by this time, (1857.) Further information respecting this learned critic and excellent man will be found in Nichols's Lit. Anec.; Jones's Life of Bishop Horne; Polwhele's Hist. of Devonshire; Lon. Gent. Mag., lix. 289; N. Amer. Rev., x. 8. The testimony of Dr. Kennicott, after his many years of labour in his abstruse studies, and the examination by himself and his associates of above six hundred Hebrew MSS. and sixteen MSS. of the Samaritan Pentateuch, to the unequivocal character of these documents, is too valuable to be omitted. When he appeared himself before the king to present his great work, his majesty asked him, what, upon the whole, had been the result of his learned and laborious investigations? To this question Kennicott replied that he had found some grammatical errors, and many variations, in the different texts, but not one which in the smallest degree affected any article of faith or practice. To the same effect is the testimony of James Smith, of Jordan Hill:

"It may be satisfactory to those who look with suspicion upon the numerous various readings appended to critical editions, to know that, in that very considerable portion of the Gospels which I have copied, I have not been able to detect a shade of difference in the meaning, either doctrinal or historical. But the differences between the earlier and the later MSS., although unimportant as to the matter, are of great importance in an inquiry like the present, (Origin and Connection of the Gospels) where so much depends upon verbal expression."

The new edit. will contain, among other additions, a Catalogue of the Fathers and Ecclesiastical Writers, with an accurate description of their genuine works as distinguished from others that have passed under their names. This edit., which will be in 3 vols. Svo., will appear under the especial sanction of the Cardinal Archbishop of Malines, who has expressed a very favourable opinion of the work.

Kenrick, John. Serms., 1814.

Kenrick, John, a son of the late Rev. Timothy Kenrick, (post.) was classical tutor in the College of York until 1840, since which he has been Professor of History in the New College of Manchester. 1. Ancient Egypt under the Pharaohs, Lon., 1850, 2 vols.

Svo. A review of this work, from the London Times, will be found in the New York International Magazine, ii. 322-326. Mr. Kenrick has given us reason to think that he will publish a work on Syria and Phœnicia. We beg to remind him that it is quite time it had appeared.

Since the above was prepared for the press, the vol. respecting which we were jogging Mr. Kenrick's memory has made its appearance, viz.: Phœnicia, by John Kenrick, M.A.; forming the new volume of his History of the Civilized Nations of Antiquity, in continuation of "Ancient Egypt under the Pharaohs," 1857, Svo.

"Another very valuable contribution to the exact knowledge of ancient history, already enriched by his two volumes on Egypt under the Pharaohs, and by his admirable and philosophical Essay on Primeval History?"—Lon. National Review.
