The Courier of yesterday, suggests the propriety of holding a public meeting at the exchange this evening, to adopt measures for carrying into effect a plan to discharge the claims of the venerable Ex-President Monroe, upon the government and people of the United States. We have already expressed our sentiments on this subject, and now add our hearty concurseems to exist but one opinion among them; and that it is expressed in terms of unqualified approbation. Congressional Debate on the Mission to Russia. House of Representatives, Feb. 3, 1831. The motion to strike out the appropriation for the salary of a Minister to Russia being under consideration, Mr. BURGES, of Rhode-Island, addressed the House as follows: Mr. SPEAKER: Permit me to justify myself. under all which has been said, both against me, and against whatever has been advanced by me i support of the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio. With the indulgence of the House, it may be well to look back to the question made by this motion; for, gentlemen in their zeal to eulogize the Minister, or to abuse those who doubt the correctness of his appointmen, have departed almost entirely from the matter in issue

The objection to the appropriation, and the motion to strike it from this bill, have been made, because it is proposed for payment of a salary to a foreign Minister, who, by his commission of him, is authorized to leave the Court to which he is sent, to go to any other country, whenever; in his own opinion, his health may require it, and not to return to that Court so long as, according to the same opinion, it may be injurious to his health to do so. We deny such mission to be a legal, one; we deny that the salary provided by law for foreign Ministers, is, or ever can be due to any man sent abroad under such credentials; with such privileges reserved, and such tion has, therefore, not been made because the gentleman was, when sent abroad, and had long en, a valetudinarian, or because, if then in health, that health, exhausted by the toils of diplomacy, might require refreshment by relaxation and relief from public service: No. Sirnor because that refreshment might not be found unless under a milder sky, and by removing to a more genial climate than that of Russia.
