HE General Index to the Journals of the Houle of Commons has two own principal Objects in View. Lave contains and index to the Journals of the Houle of Commons has two principal Objects in View. Lave contains and index principal Objects in View. Lave contains a little additional contains and contains a little additional contains a little additional contains a little additional contains and contains a little additional contains a little additional Pirst, It specifies and refers to every Case*, whether of a public or private Nature, that has been at any Time brought before the House, either in its legislative, judicial, or inquisitorial Capacity.

Secondly, It selects and brings together such distinct Parts of these original Cases, as it is imagined may be of Use in the Way of Precedent, whether they be Points of Order and Proceeding merely, or Determinations of the House upon intermediate Questions, relative to the Substance of the Cases themselves.

With a View to the first Object of this Work, all the several Cases, which arise in the Journals, are digested and classed under their proper Heads or Titles of Subject-Matter, in alphabetical Order. These general Heads are reduced to as small a Number as possible; that all such Cases as have any Relation to each other may be seen together, and, as it were, at one View. Thus, all Cases of controverted Elections are classed under the general Head, Elections Controverted privilege Cases, under Privilege; the several Proceedings relating to Members will be found under the Title, Members; and the whole Business of Supply, in all its various Branches and Stages, will be methodized and digested, under the general Head, Supply.

To this Rule of Arrangement there are necessarily some Exceptions; viz. where the general Head or Title is itself "a Proceeding." Thus, under the Heads, Addresses, and, Conferences, are collected all the several Addresses and Conferences to be found in the Journals; classed, however, and distinctly stated, under the respective Heads of Subject-Matter, to which they relate. In these and all other Arrangements, the Order of the Alphabet is for obvious Reasons adopted, where it could be observed; and Analysis is employed, only where alphabetical Arrangement was found to be impracticable, or attended with apparent Impropriety.

In the Execution of this first Part of the Work, which contains all the various original Cases recorded in the Journals, my general Rule has been, to specify and

By the Term, "Case," I understand each distinct Matter or Business, of whatever Kind, that has been before the House, together with the Proceedings thereupon, whether they have been sewer, or more numerous. And I consider the whole Matter or Substance of the Journals, as made up of, and consequently resolvable into, so many distinct and separate Cases.

state the first and last Proceedings in each particular Case, and to give References only to the feveral intermediate Proceedings. I chose to give References to these Proceedings, that the Enquirer might be enabled to trace out the Whole of every Case, from the Beginning to the End, without the Assistance of the Sessional Indexes, where they are all distinctly specified. And I chose to give References only, because I thought them abundantly sufficient for every Purpose of Information, with respect to each particular Case, considered separately, and by itself; and because, too, all the Proceedings, supposed to be worth noticing, in the Way of Precedent, are distinctly stated and classed in the other Part of the Work. In this and in every other Instance, where I have consulted Brevity, my Object has been, not furely to avoid Labour on my own Part, (for the Labour of a little additional copying is, in a Work of this Kind, of no Consideration) but to prevent, as much as possible, on the Part of the Reader, the insupportable Tedium of endless unine teresting Repetitions. In some few Cases, however, of remarkable Importance, I have thought it right to depart from this general Rule, and have specified the whole Chain of Proceedings as they arise. When, moreover, a different Mode of Proceeding has been adopted, or new Matter has arisen, in the Course of any Case, I have not failed to specify such Proceeding, and either to state such Matter; or refer to it in some other Part of the Index, to which it more particularly be-All the Reports too, which are entered in the Journals, are mentioned, as well as referred to, in the Index. I wished to give the easiest Access to these Papers, as they contain in general all the Information to be found with respect to the Substance and Merits of those Cases to which they relate. It has, by some Persons, been thought unnecessary, even to refer to the several intermediate Proceedings upon "Bills;" there being feldom Occasion to trace particular Bills through all the Stages of their Passage through the House; and the End of such References being already answered by the Sessional Indexes. I have, however, followed the same Rule here as in all other Cases: First, because I wished to preferve, as much as possible, an Uniformity of Method throughout every Part of the Work; and, Secondly, because I had in View to render the Sessional Indexes to these Volumes totally useless, and to make the present Work, as every Work ought to be, as complete as possible, within itself.

In this first View then of the Work before us, we shall have a General Index of Reference to all the various Cases recorded in the Journals, under the different Heads of Subject-Matter, to which they respectively relate.

The second, and perhaps the most important Object of the present Index is, to facilitate the Search for such Precedents as arise out of the distinct Parts of these original Cases, thus digested and arranged.

It is obvious, that Precedents of particular intermediate Determinations or Proceedings cannot be found at once, by the fullest State of each distinct original Case, of which they are a Part; not even by the most circumstantial Narrative of the Steps taken in the Course of it. For it may happen, that the Precedent we are in Search of lies in the very last Case of the Class, in which we expect to find it.

And

About VOL NH to XVII

And we can never be fure, that we have collected all the Precedents in any particular Instance, till we have examined the very last Case. Thus, in order to collect all the Examples of "Return heard separately from Election," "Evidence objected to and admitted," "Elections adjudged void on Account of Bribery, Riots, &c." and the like, we shall be obliged to go through all the several Cases of controverted Elections, to be found in the Journals, though the Precedents we want do not occur in the hundredth Part of them. In order therefore to save the Trouble of so tedious a Search, such of the intermediate Determinations and Proceedings as appear to be of any Consequence are selected and classed, under the several Heads, or general Descriptions, of which they are so many Examples. By this Distribution and Arrangement, the Enquirer will be directed at once to every Precedent that exists, upon any particular Point, without the Trouble of running over the Whole of all the Cases, in which he would expect to find them.

These Observations will apply still more strongly to Precedents of Order, or Proceeding merely. These, as they lie scattered through the Journals, in an almost infinite Variety of Cases, it will be impossible to trace out, from the fullest State of such distinct Cases, however classed and arranged. But it is surely of the greatest Consequence, in many Instances, to have easy and immediate Access to such Precedents. I have therefore endeavoured to collect and class them under the several Heads, or general Descriptions, of which they are particular Instances; distinguishing, however, and selecting such Proceedings as appear to be of Importance in this View, from such as are clearly Matter of Course, and of every Day's Practice. In which latter Instances, those Proceedings only are noticed, where there is a Departure from the general Rule.

The Index, in this Respect, not admitting an alphabetical Arrangement, is altogether analytical; and the several intermediate Determinations and Proceedings are arranged, as nearly as possible, in the Order in which they arise out of the several Cases, of which they are the constituent Parts. It is obvious to observe, that the Analysis here will be more or less systematic and complete, and will afford a more or less comprehensive View of parliamentary Proceedings, as it is drawn from a greater or less Portion of the Journals of Parliament.

To give, indeed, a perfectly full, and systematic View of the whole Body of Parliamentary Proceeding, the obvious Method would be: 1st, to lay down the general Rule: And 2dly, to mark the Exceptions to it; with the Reasons for such Exceptions, where any appear. But a Work of this Kind can hardly be brought within the Plan of an Index. From good Indexes such a System or Theory may indeed be collected. But an Index itself admits not of that scientific Form of Arrangement, or of that methodical Deduction, which are essential to systematic Compositions.

The Work before us then clearly divides itself into two distinct and separate Parts, answering to the two distinct Purposes above-mentioned, which it is intended to serve. Most of the general Heads consist entirely of distinct original Cases. Others, such as BILLS, COMMITTEES, PETITIONS, contain intermediate Determinations and Proceedings only. In others again, viz. Conferences, Privilege, Elections Controversed, &c. the original Cases are first arranged and classed, and afterwards, the special Proceedings arising out of them.

In both Parts of the Work, the greatest Care has been taken, to bring together by Reference all the several Articles which relate to the same general Subject, and which could not be actually stated, without insupportable Repetition. Thus, the Digest is rendered as complete as the Nature of an Index will admit; and the Index itself is brought into as narrow a Compass as is consistent with that strict Idea of a Digest, which I have endeavoured to preserve throughout the Work.

In all the Instances, where it was found necessary to state the Subject-Matter of any Proceeding, I have chosen rather to abridge than to copy. Not, surely, to save Trouble; but to give that Kind of Compression to the Work, which seems to be implied in the very Idea of an Index.

There is prefixed an Analysis of the principal general Heads, with short explanatory Notes. Also a Table of Years corresponding to the several Sessions of Parliament. An Index of Persons is added, and another of Places.

I am very sensible, that, after all the Attention and Labour I have given to this Work, (and both have been much greater, than can possibly appear from the Work itself) it admits of Improvements in many Respects. I am perhaps more sensible to its Desects than any other Person can be. Impersect however as it may be, and the more so it must be, as including so small a Part of the Journals, it will, I hope, be sound, as far as it goes, to be of considerable Use, and not wholly undeserving the very liberal Compensation, with which it has been honoured; and for which I here beg Leave to make my most grateful Acknowledgments.

I cannot conclude these Remarks, without once more intimating my Concern, that the Part of the Work which has fallen to my Share, abruptly takes up the Journals in the Middle of the Reign of King William. It is certainly to be wished, as there is but little Prospect at present of a complete Index to the whole Body of the Journals, that the Period from the Restoration, or at least from the Revolution, to the Accession of the present Royal Family, had been executed by the same Hand, and made to form one entire and separate Work*.

December 31, 1778.

NAT. FORSTER.

Having faid thus much, with respect to that Part of this Work, which has fallen to my Share, I think it incumbent upon me to mention, in what Manner the Allotment of the several Volumes of the Journals was originally made. I was not present when this Matter was settled. But I am authorized to say, that Mr. Moore, in Association with the late Mr. Style, chose that Part of the Journals, to which he has now given an Index, viz. from the 18th Volume inclusive, downwards, as having been for some Years engaged in compiling an Index to those Volumes: that Dr. Flexman, for the like Reason chose from the 8th to the 13th, both inclusive: and that Mr. Cunningham chose the seven first Volumes. The four remaining Volumes, viz. the 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th, fell of Course to me. Soon after I had sinished and delivered in the Index to these Volumes, Dr. Flexman destreat to relinquish the 12th and 13th. They were therefore, at the Request of the Speaker, undertaken by me, and make a Part of the following Work.

Question for Leave to bring in, passed, and no Order thereupon, 21.

The Arrangement under this Head is necessarily analytical, as confisting entirely of Proceedings. These are thrown out, as nearly as could be, in the Order in which they arise out of the several Cases of which they are so many distinct Parts. The Proceedings upon Bills which originate in the House stand first; and afterwards, those upon Bills sent from the Lords.

I had in the Course of this Compilation collected and classed the several Instructions to Members appointed to bring in Bills, and also to Committees upon Bills; and had also stated the Substance of them. I had done the same with respect to the several Clauses added to Bills. But neither of these Heads or Divisions, after all the Trouble I had taken with them, appeared to be of any Use in the Way of Precedent, or indeed in any other Way. I have therefore, upon farther Consideration, brought both of them within a very narrow Compass; taking Notice only of such Instructions, or Clauses, as from their Singularity, or some other Circumstance, appeared to be of Importance. It may be proper to observe here, that the Petitions, against, in Favour of, or relating to Bills, are added to each Bill.

To enquire, who have been concerned in Writs of Habeas Corpus or Error, for Persons committed by the House, 111.

The Head PRIVILEGE clearly divides itself into two distinct Parts, viz. " Breach of Privilege" and " Claim of Privilege." In the one Instance there is a Complaint by some Member of a Breach of Privilege, in the other there is a Complaint against some Member, for a supposed unwarrantable Claim of Privilege. These two Kinds of Cases being therefore totally distinct from each other, they are classed separately. The Proceedings relating to each Division are also distinctly subjoined. The Word "Referred," standing alone, always means, Referred to the Committee of Privileges.
