PREFACE

HARDLY a more interesting and varied collection of literary miscellany exists than that preserved by an unknown recorder of deeds in THE PLYMOUTH SCRAP BOOK. In this collection have been preserved the odds and ends of the original Plymouth Colony records remaining after many years of neglect, indifference and abuse had reduced the valued archives, to a tattered and fragmentary remainder. The date of the collection itself is unknown: the dates of the documents themselves are between 1636 and 1693. They therefore embrace the formative period of the Colony, beginning some sixteen years after its foundation.

What is here presented is a verbatim transcript of the original Scrap Book, itself well known to antiquarians. As distinguished from "The Records of Plymouth Colony," published by the State of Massachusetts in 1855, there is offered here a modern transcript of the only original records now extant and pertaining to the lives and times of those commonly credited with the entire credit for the foundation of "New England." Its place in the great mass of literature concerning the early colonial life of North America, therefore, is that of a practical replica, valuable to students of history and genealogy as a ready reference and a means of abridging the tremendously difficult task of deciphering the characteristic but obscure chirography of the "Puritans." To those interested in early colonial life and customs, the Scrap Book affords a fund of useful lore. Finally, in the rough and ready attempts at formulating the more vital transactions of pioneer life may be traced, the growing need for a new dominion in civil, as well as in religious affairs. Thus in a remote way, these same documents faintly echo the commencement of the transition from "separatism" to that still more complete independence of the democracy that was to be established by a succeeding generation.

This transcript, with plated reproductions of some of the originals, is published posthumously, manuscript and photographs having been in the hands of the printer at the time of the compiler's death. The book had been planned as an instructive and more or less popular feature in connection with the proposed tercentenary celebration of the landing of the Pilgrims. The Historical Sketch and Review of Bradford's History are, therefore, explained. They are included in perpetuation of the original plan and in the belief that their strong controversial flavor adds to the value of the collection through perpetuating the argumentative atmosphere that surrounds all antiquarian lore.

THE PLYMOUTH SCRAP BOOK

INTRODUCTION

THE word Mayflower is the chief expression of the great movement of English people to build New England; her voyage across the Atlantic, the passengers who came in her crowded cabins and made new homes in a strange land, the dates of her touch of the land at Provincetown and her slow unloading in the harbor of New Plymouth, all these things deserve, as they have, a nation's tender memory and lofty praise. The tercentenary of the coming of the "first company" may well be one of the most honorable memorializings of the citizens of the Republic which has grown into world greatness from that colonial period.

In passing it should be said that honor should never be withdrawn from Jamestown and Virginia's beginnings by the enthusiasm of the Plymouth celebration. "The Old Dominion" ought to hold the highest place among our states, for it was there that English people made the first establishment of home and government, and out of that colony some of the grandest elements in our national life have proceeded. But there were some features of the Mayflower movement that stood alone in their day, that were unique in history, which have claimed singular homage from all who love humanity. And it is therefore fitting that our entire people should celebrate, in their homes if not at the spot which was hallowed by the feet of the Pilgrims, that dawning of a magnificent day for our race. And the central point of the celebration is the day when the Mayflower sailed into the harbor of New Plymouth.

What is the true date to celebrate? This point should be readjusted. Custom has fixed upon a day when, common fame has affirmed, the Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock; and this day has been determined according to a chronology which the Pilgrims did not use. A decent respect to contemporary writers ought to correct that error before any tercentenary celebration program is arranged. There is one and only one authority to settle the question: William Bradford is the single man and writer whose records should be followed; and fiction and poetry ought to have no part in the decision. In his History of Plimouth Plantation we find statements which are final in their nature.

The signing of the compact which laid the foundation of their civil government took place November 11, 1620. No man should dare to tamper with that sacred date, written into the body of the document, as it is presented on page 110 of the History. No matter what people in some other countries called that date; no matter what "New Style" adopted by Great Britain a hundred and thirty-five years later would have called it, the date William Bradford quotes, as written in the deathless compact, must stand. If any student of history has ventured to write it wrong let him or his successors repent and henceforward quote it correctly. Then we turn to page 97 of the History and read, "Being thus arrived at Cap-Cod y^e 11. of November," the company began a series of explorations which he describes fully. On page 101 he says, "The month of November being spent in these affairs, & much foule weather falling in, the 6 of Desem^r: they sente out their shallop againe with 10. of their principall men, & some sea men, upon further discovery, intending to circulate that deepe bay of Cap-Codd."

Pursuing his narrative, he tells the adventures of this exploring party till they reached an island on the last day of the week and rested there the next day and kept "y^e Sabath". "On Munday they sounded y^e harbor, and founde it fitt for shipping; and marched into y^e land, & found diverse cornefields, & little runing brooks, a place (as they supposed) fitt for situation; at least it was y^e best they could find and y^e season, & their presente necessitie, made them glad to accepte of it. So they returned to their shipp againe with this news to y^e rest of their people, which did much comforte their harts. On y^e 15. of Desem^r : they wayed anchor to goe to y^e place they had discovered, & came within 2. leagues of it, but were faine to bear up againe; but y^e 16. day y^e winde came faire, and they arrived safe in this harbor. And after wards tooke better view of y^e place and resolved wher to pitch their dwelling; and y^e 25. day begane to erecte y^e first house for comone use to receive them and their goods."

If the phrase "The Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers" is to be used to describe a historical event and to be the focus of celebrations, it should point to the actual debarkation of official and leading members of that company from the Mayflower in the harbor of their future home. Bradford does not tell how they managed it; who was honored by being carried in the first boat from ship to shore, or in what order the governor and members of the "body politic" went to the land; by all precedents John Carver would have been the most highly honored and would naturally have stepped ashore at the head of the party; certainly no woman of the company would have been expected to enter the boat from the ship or leap from boat to rock, as Mary Chilton has been fabulously pictured as doing. But there was a landing that day; an examination by those who had authority of the site that the explorers in the shallop proposed for a new home; a decision to adopt the place and make it comfortable for all. The date of that arrival and landing was December 16, 1620.

Let that day be the one for all coming generations to celebrate, not some date which harebrained romancers may choose by calculating what Holland would have called the day, or some date that fits some dreamer's dream of the events. Bradford tells us (page 110) that they "provided a place for their goods, or commone store, (which were long in unloading for want of boats, foulness of winter weather, and sickness of diverce,) and begune some small cottages for their habitation, as time would admitte,"—all of which shows that there was no ceremonious "landing" of the entire company at any time. But there had to be an official landing the day they arrived and chose the place for their colony, and that alone can be fixed and that alone can be celebrated.

By all means we should retain in our writings and celebrations the system of dating the Pilgrims used. It is an outrage upon history to alter the dates those venerable persons wrote. Let all who honor their memory join in a league to perpetuate truth and abjure fancies.

While, for the reasons mentioned, the landing of the Mayflower party December 16, 1620, is the focal point of the tercentenary celebration and future anniversary memorials, there are many other persons and matters also worthy of our honor and requiring particular mention. First of all, Reverend John Robinson and the members of the Leyden church who did not come over in the Mayflower deserve the same praise and respect as those who did. Equally with the "first company" were those who were delayed by causes beyond their control. Some came in the Ann and the Fortune; some came in the ships "Talbut and May-flower" [Brad. pp. 296-7] still later; thirty-five in May, 1629, and others in 1630 by the way of Salem. Some never reached these shores, but, like the noble pastor, wrote words of power and love and sent practical tokens of partnership to the colony. All these were the members of the church which began its corporate life at Gainsborough in Lincolnshire, continued its course in Scrooby, Nottingham, went in exile to Amsterdam and then to Leyden, Holland, whence they came to our shores, a formal church colony. But men and women and children joined with them who were natives of other counties of England and members of other churches, not all "of like faith and practise." They came for a number of years, taking the places of that half of the Mayflower company who died within six months after arriving, and adding to the population of the colony. Children born here of those pioneer parents, too, deserve recognition and honor, for they entered heartily into the spirit and work of their elders, and made the paternal ideas reach practical success.

One more topic deserves some words in this introduction, the term by which this people shall be described. All writers upon the Mayflower party and their associates designate them as Pilgrims, since they were obviously persons journeying from a religious motive, having the idea of God as their central thought and his pleasure their chief motive, a Church colony conspicuously. But there have been many writers who have stopped there and placed this people on a pedestal apart from the other settlers in New England.

The writer must protest against such canonization, for, in the first place, there were other church colonies, inspired by the same motives, who came hither: Dorchester, recruited in Devon and Dorset, led in their beginnings by a clergyman of the English church, Reverend John White, but organized with his approval into a separate church with Reverends John Maverick and John Warham, ministers, as they said farewell to England; Scituate, in fellowship of worship and persecution in London as early as 1592 and represented here in process of time by pastor Reverend John Lothrop and many of the members, although they did not come in a "church capacity"; Rowley, definitely organized in their Yorkshire home, and as definitely migrating with their pastor, Reverend Ezekiel Rogers. Beside these groups that openly organized and stood for all that the Plymouth company maintained in religious and civil matters, there were hundreds of individuals scattered through the colony of Massachusetts Bay who were just as devoted to the cause of primitive Christianity as those of Plymouth; and all the churches of the Bay Colony were organized on the Plymouth model. Let it be said that the business element entered into the life of all colonists necessarily; that faith and works went hand in hand; and that the settlers at Salem, Charlestown, Boston, et als., made their governmental and civil systems on more ordinary scale than Plymouth. But each made the laws of Moses the cornerstone of their structure; each aimed at entire loyalty to England and each regarded the other colony as an equal and ally.

In view of these facts the writer protests stoutly against the common manner of describing the one colony as "Puritan" and the other as "Pilgrim." That habit arose from stark ignorance of the facts just adduced. First of all was lack of understanding of what the word "Puritan" signified. This term was employed by English writers half a century or more before the Mayflower sailed across the Atlantic to designate persons who were reading the Bible for themselves and following the simple teachings of that book, even when such a course of conduct was antagonistic to the rules of the established church. Governor Bradford, in his History, refers to the term as one which he did not like but which was applied to such as he and his associates:

"And to cast contempe the more upon y^e sincere servants of God, they opprobriously & most injuriously gave unto, & imposed upon them that name of Puritans, which (it) is said the Novatians out of pride did assume & take unto themselves."

HISTORICAL

THE Mayflower arrived at Cape Cod harbor “y^e 11. of November,” where the men of the company signed the immortal compact,—“y^e first foundation of their governmente in this place”; a party of sixteen volunteers under the lead of Captain Standish made an exploration of the Cape for some distance the fifteenth and sixteenth of November; their little shallop made a short voyage with thirty men and went back to their anchorage. “The month of November being spent in these affairs, & much foule weather falling in, the 6 of Desember: they sente out their shallop againe with 10. of their principall men, & some sea men, upon further discovery, intending to circulate that deepe bay of Cap-Codd.” After hard days and nights, amid storms and with no capable piloting, “they gott under y^e lee of a smalle iland, and remained ther all night in saftie” . . . “God gave them a morning of comforte & refreshing (as usually He doth to his children) for y^e next day was a faire sunshining day, and they found them sellvs to be on an iland secure from y^e Indeans, wher they might drie their stufe, fixe their peeces, & rest them selves, and gave God thanks for his mercies, in their manifold deliverances. And this being the last day of the wecke, they prepared ther to keepe y^e Sabath. On Munday they sounded y^e harbor, and founde it fit for shipping; and marched into y^e land, & found diverse cornefields, & litle running brooks, a place (as they supposed) fitt for situation.” This was December 11, 1620. “On y^e 15. of Desember: they wayed anchor to goe to y^e place they had discovered, & came within 2 leagues of it, but were faine to beare up againe; but y^e 16 day y^e winde came faire, and they arrived safe in this harbor. And after wards tooke better view of y^e place, and resolved wher to pitch their dwelling; and y^e 25. day begane to erecte y^e first house for comone use to receive them and their goods.”

So wrote Governor William Bradford, historian of the Plymouth Colony, in the precious volume which is reprinted by our Commonwealth and placed within reach of all.

Tradition, elevated by some writers into the semblance of history, has fixed on a day and place for “The Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers”; but Bradford’s record shows the entire error of that tradition. We see that there were several “landings”; that at “Cape Codd harbour,”—Provincetown, the first, worthy of all the honor which has been paid to it; that at Clark’s Island in Plymouth harbor, where Saturday and Sunday were spent; that on the beach and shores of Plymouth itself by the exploring party who decided to report it to the company as a “fitt place”; that on December 16, when the “Mayflower” actually reached Plymouth harbor and some of its passengers went ashore and "tooke a better view of y^e place, and resolved wher to pitch their dwelling." Afterward there must have been many "landings" as workmen went on shore and dug and cut and framed and built their one common house. As to any general landing, the company, men, women and children, carried in all the boats and stepping ashore in order of social and civil rank, no account of it has come down nor any reason to suppose it occurred. But if any day is to be observed as "Mayflower Day," or the real date of the beginning of Plymouth town and colony, the writer would respectfully suggest that it be December 16, the day,—by the calendar then in use in England and her colonies, — commemorating the arrival of the Mayflower in Plymouth harbor with her full company. And if our fancy would venture to elevate a name as the first of that ever honorable band to set foot on the "rock" that day, let us imagine that it was the governor, John Carver.

But we are concerned at this writing with the matter of records of Plymouth people. Bradford's History and those of Winslow and Morton are of value, but the formal annals of town and colony have great importance. Nothing like colonial or town records are extant for many years. One paper tells us about land divisions made in 1621; another names those who had shares in certain cattle that had been brought over. But it is not till 1632 that orderly records were made, so far as we know. The state of Massachusetts published The Records of Plymouth Colony in 1855. Probably there were many documents in the keeping of Secretary Morton and his successors, but gradually they wore out or were captured by conscienceless persons; till, at last, some recorder of deeds gathered what remained in the county offices and pasted them into a blank book, giving it the label "The Scrap Book." This is the collection which is herewith presented to the people of America, — "lest we forget." It contains wills, deeds, depositions, writs, letters, bonds and inventories. The documents are full of tokens of the common life of the people. The reader gets the material from which histories may be written, — material not perfectly explored by some who have undertaken to write histories. The reproduced documents are peculiarly informing and quickening to students. And though these papers are not largely the work of Mayflower passengers, they show the ideas and practices of that company faithfully, being the memorials of the very families who came to found Plymouth and New England.

Readers must observe a few points in the study of these documents:

1. Note the dates; by the calendar then in use in England and her colonies, the year began March 25th; March was therefore called the first month, although twenty-four days of it were in the old year. The Latin names which we retain in common parlance, September, October, November and December, meaning the seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth months, had their proper meaning; and January and February were later in the year than July or December. In 1752 England abandoned this calendar and dropped eleven days, so adopting "New Style," which Holland and some other countries had used before the Mayflower sailed; some illogical and short-sighted persons at once set about reforming the records of their own and their sires' lives; even changing their birthdays and dates of great events. But let no honest man tamper with records made by intelligent, official personages. What Bradford wrote ought to be sacred. He tells us what he and his contemporaries did and recorded; shame on a man who would give the lie to the records made by such a man. In this tercentenary period especially let us recall and repeat the very dates our grand ancestors and forerunners wrote.

2. Note the spelling; educated as well as slightly instructed writers varied in their spelling; sometimes father and sons differed in the orthography of their surname. But common words had amusing variety, as scilke, Scilite, andIren, bibel; many were changing at home and naturally in the colonies.

3. Note the phrasology of the documents, many expressions borrowed from feudal times, very cumbrous and stilted, the boundaries pointing to trees and heaps of stones or giving a mere general region.

4. Note the proper description of the people to whose life these documents relate. They were part of the Mayflower company and also children and successors of that party. Because they came as religious persons, taking a voyage for a holy purpose, they are fitly termed Pilgrims. This word, however, applies equally well to the church colony that gathered in the counties of Dorset and Somerset and Devon, England, in 1629, and sailing from Plymouth arrived at Dorchester May 30, 1630; and to the church colony of Rowley, Yorkshire, and Rowley, Massachusetts, who came seven years later. We can go further and say that the people of Plymouth (the majority of them) were Puritans, a class of Christians in England who aimed at serving God as the Bible taught, even when that led them to differ from their neighbors or those who claimed rule over them. Part of the Puritans remained in the established church, simply lifting the standards of life through the ancient methods; part came out so strongly that they were prosecuted by the clergy and became completely separated from the Episcopal organization. Those who came to our country in the three church colonies I have named were only a small part of the "Separated churches." Multitudes of the members of those congregations came to Boston and Salem and Ipswich and other ports in New England, and from the same motives; so that the words "Puritan" and "Pilgrim" were equally applicable to many. The writer must insist that there is no propriety in taking one of these words for the Plymouth Colony and the other for that of Massachusetts Bay; historical accuracy demands that we term both Puritan Pilgrims. Whatever service they did for God and humanity was due to their Puritan consecration and Pilgrim adventure. They merit the description of Macaulay in his Essay on Milton:

"The Puritans were men whose minds had derived a peculiar character from the daily contemplation of superior beings and eternal interests. Not content with acknowledging, in general terms, an overruling Providence, they habitually ascribed every event to the will of the Great Being, for whose power nothing was too vast, for whose inspection nothing was too minute. To know him, to serve him, to enjoy him, was with them the great end of existence. They rejected with contempt the ceremonious homage which other sects substituted for the pure worship of the soul. Instead of catching occasional glimpses of the Deity through an obscuring veil, they aspired to gaze full on the intolerable brightness, and to commune with him face to face. Hence originated their contempt for terrestrial distinctions. The difference between the greatest and meanest of mankind seemed to vanish, when compared with the boundless interval which separated the whole race from him on whom their own eyes were constantly fixed. They recognized no title to superiority but his favor; and confident of that favor, they despised all the accomplishments and all the dignities of the world. . . . On the rich and the eloquent, on nobles and priests, they looked down with contempt: for they esteemed themselves rich in a more precious treasure and eloquent in a more sublime language; nobles by the right of an earlier creation and priests by the imposition of a mightier hand. . . . The Puritans brought to civil and military affairs a coolness of judgment and an immutability of purpose which some writers have thought inconsistent with their religious zeal, but which were, in fact, the necessary effects of it."

ANTHONY COLLIMORE'S ANSWER TO A SUIT

Anthony Collimore of Scituate his Suplem^t to his Defence touching a paper or pretended sumions &c—

Imp^{rs} If I Entred into a Recognizance I humbly conceive that it was (as it ought to be) In his Late Maj^{ties} name & therefore Cannot be prosecuted in any other name.

2^t — The Condition of the Recognizance was to bring a writt of habeas corpus which I did & itt was allowed: & I appeared to prosecute accordingly—

3^t — The Condition: &c^r: as to the time how many dayes I must bring my writt &c^r: before the Courte Is altogether needless & Impertinent:
 Because the number of dayes before the Court is not of the Essence of y^e obligation For where I am obliged: to bring such a writt to such a Court. I must besure to bring the s^d writt in die forme & time (according to Law) to that Court: so if I be bound in 60^h: on Condition to bring a writt of habeas Corpus: 15: dayes before such a Court: & the Law did Injoine me to bring my s^d Writt: 20 dayes: though my bringing my writt: 15: dayes will discharge me of my obligation: for whatsoever is dissmist or Removed from one Court to another (by bond or without bond) due Respect must be had to the Law & Custome more then to the pticular time Exprest in the obligation besides——

It is not Consistant but rather Repugnant & Contrary to Law: for whatsoever & whensoever the Law saith such an act or thing must be soe: soe then it must be after that manner at that time done: soe where the Law saith such a writt must be delivered before the Jury that is to try the case) Apere & one of them be sworne, It is Enough to bring it in any time that morning before the Jury appear &c^r: & too much to bring it in 15 dayes before — Therefore it is provided in the statute 43: Eliz: 5:
 that no writt of habeas corpus &c^r shall be allowed unless it be before the Jury — Apear & one of them be sworn any time before &c^r is sufficient & soe if our Custome in our Courts in England which I hope is a good Example: with the Afores^d Law for y^r Imitation

William Bradford
one of the Counsell &
Justice of peace :

A REVIEW OF BRADFORD'S HISTORY "OF PLIMOUTH PLANTATION"

IN order to understand this, one of the greatest books of all history, one must have in mind the stage of human development and outlook which had been reached when "Plimouth Plantation" came into being. After centuries of practical stagnation the Crusades had stirred Europe and sent out streams of pilgrims, with all that followed in their train. While the effects of that stir were still operating among the nations that had taken part in those movements, Columbus' discovery of America and the vast explorations and enrichments of Spain and Portugal had still further aroused the people of all Europe, and led to French, Italian and English voyages and adventures; while all the time Scandinavians had pressed their way athwart icy seas and into many a "Vineland" shore.

Naturally England felt stirred to establish colonies in the New World. Smith, Gosnold, Waymouth, Drake, Gilbert and a host of compeers, at Popham, Jamestown and elsewhere,—such was the state of affairs in a business and state respect as the sixteenth century closed and the seventeenth century began. But another and deeper change had been wrought in the mental and spiritual condition of Europeans. While Spain was gathering and bringing home treasures, England had been enriched with the rediscovered Gospel. Men had learned that the Bible was everybody's property, Jesus everybody's friend; that Christian life was not the prerogative of abbeys and convents, but the light and joy of common homes and ordinary workaday lives. The monopoly claimed by a set of officials with a central ruler at Rome was thrown off openly by a British king and as fully by thousands of people. The Bible translated into the speech of the common folk had fixed a growing language into a noble tongue, and in this clear medium great treasures of uplifting literature had been given to the community. But not without violent and ferocious persecutions would the middle age monopoly of religion resign its victims to the free enjoyment of Christ's free gift. Wave after wave of arrests, burnings, banishments followed. England, after throwing off the authority of Rome, undertook to do the same sort of monopoly and vied with the ancient foe in cruel treatment of harmless, useful, heavenly-minded followers of Jesus. To this Bradford refers in strong language in the opening page of his work, which we here quote:

It is well knowne unto y^e godly and judicious, how ever since y^e first breaking out of y^e lighte of y^e gospell in our Honourable Nation of England, (which was y^e first of nations whom y^e Lord adorned ther with, after y^t grosse darkness of popery which had covered & overspred y^e christian world,) what warrs & oppossions ever since, Satan hath raised, maintained, and continued against the Saints, from time to time in one sorte or other. Some times by bloody death and cruell torments; other whiles imprisonments, banishments, & other hard usages; as being loath his kingdom should goe downe, the trueth prevaile, and y^e churches revert to their anciente puritie, and recover their primitive order, libertie, & bewtie.

The historian says a good deal along this line; mentions Fox's Book of Martyrs; refers to the escape of eight hundred persecuted Christians from England to German and Swiss cities. He thus states the real issue:

The one side laboured to have y^e right worship of God & discipline of Christ established in y^e church, according to y^e simplicitie of y^e gospell, without the mixture of men's inventions, and to have & to be ruled by y^e laws of God's word, dispensed in those offices, & by those officers of Pastors, Teachers, & Elders, &c. according to y^e Scripturs.

He contrasts this simple claim with the multiplied forms and ceremonies and officials and revenues and courts and power of the other party, who "to cast contempte the more upon y^e sincere servants of God, opprobriously & most injuriously gave unto, & imposed upon them, that name of Puritans, which (it) is said the Novatians out of prid did assume & take unto themselves."

Let no one fail to note that Governor Bradford here distinctly testifies to the fact that all those who were teaching and living the simple Gospel were called Puritans. By some strange perversion not a few writers have denied this and tried to distinguish between Puritans and Pilgrims, contrasting the Massachusetts Bay Colony as Puritans with the Plymouth Colony as Separatists. This is absolutely incorrect. For in the first place the church colony of Dorchester was as definitely organized in its dual capacity in England and came here as fully separated from the English church as the Plymouth party; and Hingham church and the Rowley church, also, had a distinctness of the same sort, while Boston, Charlestown, Salem, Watertown and the rest of the Massachusetts churches were organized on the very lines of the Mayflower party as Bradford states them. The whole of what became Massachusetts was positively Puritan, as the word was then used, and the majority of the inhabitants were members of those churches and came here from the very motives which impelled the band which began Plymouth Colony. Let the truth on this matter be clearly and bravely spoken; Puritan-Pilgrims is the term which needs to be emblazoned on our shield.

Bradford was evidently ashamed of the term which the enemies of the Gospel put on his party; rather should the word be counted honorable, for while it is absurd for one to say "I am pure," it is dignified to say "I aim at being and doing exactly right"; and that is the gist of Puritanism, which merely responds to the appeal of the Great Teacher: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Heavenly Father is perfect."

Bradford relates that "in y^e North parts" of England many

"Became inlightened by y^e word of God," and "as y^e Lords free people, joynd them selves (by a covenant of the Lord) into a church estate, in y^e felowship of y^e gospell, to walke in all his wayes, made known or to be made known unto them, according to their best endeavours, whatsoever it should cost them, the Lord assisting them. And that it cost them something this ensewing historie will declare. These people became 2. distincte bodys or churches, & in regarde of distance of place did congregate severally; for they were of sundrie townes & vilages, some in Notinghamshire, some of Lincollinshire, and some of Yorkshire, wher they border nearest together. In one of these churches (besids others of note) was Mr. John Smith. a man of able gifts, & a good preacher, who afterwards was chosen their pastor, But these afterwards falling into some errours in y^e Low Countries, they (for y^e most part) buried them selves, & their names."

He proceeds to give the history of the church, which we know was that at Scrooby, a little village on the Idle in the north of Nottinghamshire, where William Brewster, postmaster (or master of the station where the coaches on the northern mail route changed horses and refreshed passengers) opened his house and entertained the congregation Sunday after Sunday.

But in this other church (w^{ch} must be y^e subjecte of our discourse) besids other worthy men, was M^r Richard Clifton, a grave & revered preacher, who by his paines and dilligens had done much good, and undeer God had ben a means of y^e conversion of many. And also that famous and worthy man, M^r. John Robinson, who afterwards was their pastor for many years, till y^e Lord tooke him away by death. Also M^r. William Brewster, a reverent man, who afterwards was chosen an elder of y^e church and lived with them till old age.

But troubles beset them; some were imprisoned, some were insulted, some were driven from their homes; so that after holding together at Scrooby for about a year "by a joynte consente they resolved to goe into y^e Low-Countries, wher they heard was freedome of Religion for all men; . . . which was in y^e year 1607. & 1608."

The resolution to get away from those who had been persecuting them was not easy to carry into effect. Ports and havens were shut against them, so they had to make private arrangements for the voyage.

They chartered a ship and were allowed to go on board; but the captain betrayed them and let officers from the town of Boston, in Lincolnshire, take them off into open boats, ransack their persons for money, carry them ashore where their books, goods and whatever could be found were taken from them, and they were haled before magistrates. Most of them were imprisoned a month, seven kept till the next term of court. The next spring another attempt was made by some of these and others to get over. While the women and children with the goods were put on board of a small bark to be carried out to a larger vessel which was to take the party on board, and the men went to the appointed rendezvous, the tide ran out and the bark got aground. The master of the ship was frightened when he saw a sheriff's posse coming across the shore to take the party, and sailed off with only a part of the men, leaving stranded the rest of the men and the whole company and precious cargo of the bark.

Two weeks at sea in stormy weather, and a narrow escape from wreck on the coast of Norway, to which they were driven on the way, made an awful experience for those men, who could learn nothing as to the fate of their families whom the heartless shipmaster had abandoned against their protests and entreaties. But they prayed to God in their distress, and calm weather came and they arrived at their Dutch port. On the other side, the women and their few protectors were taken to a justice here and a magistrate there and abominably delayed and bothered; although the constables and judges were convinced that to imprison so many women & innocent children for noe other cause but they must goe with their husbands, seemed to be unreasonable and all would crie out of them; and to send them home againe was as difficult, for they aledged, as y^e truth was, they had noe homes to goe to, for they had either sould, or otherwise disposed of their houses & livings.

Bradford did not despair at those griefs which they endured;

for by these so publick troubles, in so many eminent places, their cause became famous, & occasioned many to looke into y^e same; and their godly cariage & christian behaviour was such as left a deep impression in the minds of many.

In the town of Boston, where these good people had had such bad treatment, stands a grand parish church, whose lofty tower may be seen far off on land and sea. The people of that parish must have been among those to whom Bradford here refers; for our own town of Boston was settled in 1630 by a company of people gathered from a wide circle in England, and several of its most efficient members were from old Boston. In fact, Reverend John Cotton, who came to St. Botolph's parish in 1626, was so imbued with Puritanism and separation that he left that Boston and came to ours in 1633, and gave his life and strength to the Christian commonwealth here. An evidence of his having particular regard for the Scrooby church people is found in a letter to Mr. Bradford from a friend at Charlestown, August 2, 1630:

Here is a gentleman, one M^r. Cottington, (a Boston man,) who tould me, that M^r. Cottons charge at Hamton was, that they should take advise of them at Plimouth, and should doe nothing to offend them.

The same letter tells of the plan for the organization of three churches and the appointment of a day of fasting and prayer for heavenly direction and blessing, and a request that the church of Plymouth would set apart the same day for the same ends. The identity of the two colonies as Puritans and Separatists is thus absolutely established. The honeyed words of Governor John Winthrop, as his ship lay in Charlestown harbor, bidding farewell to the Church of England, must be interpreted by the fact that he was one of the founders of the Congregational, i.e., Separatist, church of Boston, and one of the persons who joined in this request to Plymouth brothers to join in fellowship with them at that day.

To return to the Scrooby party. They settled after many hindrances in Amsterdam; where they began to cope with the language and spend an amount of money which frightened them so that "they saw the grime & grisly face of povertie coming upon them." It was hard to go to a country with strange language and customs; still harder to make a living in that land, whose inhabitants were chiefly engaged in cloth making and other trades of which they were ignorant, and where prices were higher than in England. After they had lived there about a year they saw reasons for making a change of residence, one being the fact that an earlier company of English Puritans had lived there before them and had disagreeable experiences, dissensions, contentions; the Scrooby church had no wish to come into conflict with the remainder of that band or to get into any similar quarrels; so they removed to Leyden—"a fair & beautiful citie, and of a sweete situation, but made more famous by y^e universitie wherwith it is adorned."

Here the men learned trades and earned a competente & comforteable living, but with hard and continuall labor. Being thus settled (after many difficulties) they continued many years in a comfortable condition, injoying much sweete & delightfull societie & spirituall comforte together in y^e wayes of God, under y^e able ministrie, and prudent governmente of M^r. John Robinson, & M^r. William Brewster, who was an assistante unto him in y^e place of an Elder, unto which he was now called & chosen by the church. So as they grew in knowledge & other gifts & graces of y^e spirite of God, & lived together in peace, & love, and holines; and many came unto them from diverse parts of England, so as they grew a great congregation. And if at any time any differences, or offences broak out (as it cannot be, but some time ther will, even amongst y^e best of men) they were ever so mete with, and then nipt in y^e head betims, or otherwise so well composed, as still love, peace, and communion was continued; or els y^e church purged of those that were incurable & incorrigible, when, after much patience used, no other means would serve, which seldom came to pass.

Many compliments are paid to Pastor Robinson here and in other parts of the History; his love for his people; his remarkable ability in religious matters and his sagacity about business and civil matters, all made the church exceedingly fond of him and full of deep respect for his character and eminent qualities. Altogether Bradford is moved to say,

That such was y^e true pietie, y^e humble zeale, & fervent love, of this people (whilst they thus lived together) towards God and his waies, and y^e single hartednes & sinceir affection one towards another, that they came as near y^e primitive patterne of y^e first churches, as any other church of these later times have done, according to their ranke & qualitie.

Bradford tells us that the congregation became well-reputed in Leyden; that the Dutch bakers and others would "trust" them because they found them conscientious about paying their debts. The pastor's learning and skill as a teacher and debater gained him much esteem, and finally, when they were deliberating on removal to America some leading persons in Holland were desirous to have them join in some one of the Dutch colonies, considering them unusually valuable persons for such adventure.

The eleven years of their residence in Leyden were marked by a truce between the Spanish nation and Holland; so peace reigned where war had prevailed woefully before. Outwardly the Pilgrims were doing fairly well; but they were not contented. Few now came to join them, while not a few removed back to England, weary of foreign life, hoping for some relief from former persecutions. The older people felt age stealing on them and saw little prospect of bettering their condition before the time of feebleness. Their children, the best of them, were overworking and bending prematurely under the weight of labor. Worse than that, some of their beloved youth were being led astray by the examples of bad men and women, and some went to war and others tooke upon them farr viages by sea, and other some worse courses, tending to dissolutnes & the danger of their soules, to y^e great greefe of their parents and dishonour of God. So that they saw their posteritie would be in danger to degenerate & be corrupted.

But the final reason which Bradford gives for the decision to remove is this:

Lastly, (and which was not least,) a great hope & inward zeall they had of laying some good foundation, or at least to make some way therunto, for y^e propagating & advancing y^e gospell of y^e kingdom of Christ in these remote parts of y^e world; yea, though they should be but even as stepping stoncs unto others for y^e performing of so great a work. . . .

NOTE—At this point the reviewer laid aside his pen, never to resume the task. Incomplete though the sketch may be, its historic portrayal and reverential comment on the "faith of the Puritans" form a fitting background for the fragmentary record of the lives of the "Puritan-Pilgrims" in "Plimouth Plantation."
