En castellano: DefiendeAlOtro

If you are personally attacked, don't defend yourself. Instead, allow other community members defend you; if they don't, shame on them. This may be surprising - but defending yourself is not your job, it is the job of the other members in the online community.

Reasons:

- it is much more credible to the reader
- it's too hard to stay emotionally balanced when you defend against personal attacks, it is much easier even not to defend at all
- the experience of being defended is incredible, it is pure joy, enjoy it
- to defend and be defended creates strong emotional bonds among members, it builds trust

And remember, most of the time personal attacks need not be defended at all, because the attacker only hurts their own reputation and credibility. However, ModelDesiredBehavior: if someone else is attacked, defend them.

While conflicts are typically seen as negative, they hold big chances to grow as a community, to build trust among the members, to grow in valuable experience. Observe and learn for the next conflicts.

Another aspect is, to help each other to protect their work against wipeouts or mutilations by spammers or vandals, but also help each other to transform (who appear to be) enemies into friends. -- FridemarPache

Inspire campaign (june 2016)

Grants:IdeaLab/Inspire/Archive/Addressing harassment

< Grants:IdeaLab | Inspire | Archive

Thank you for contributing great ideas, providing feedback, and maintaining productive discussions during the Inspire Campaign to address harassment! So far, twelve (12) projects were drafted or submitted for grants from campaign ideas! Many submitted ideas were aimed at changes in local project policies, guidelines, or other ideas that did not require funding. We are actively supporting creators of these ideas and their teams in thinking about the next steps needed to implement or assess consensus on these ideas.

There are still a lot of innovative ideas that could use additional support finding project leaders and mentors. We'd love to see those ideas move forward so please keep developing them! We are committed to funding work to address harassment year-round through our grantmaking programs.

To create new ideas, head to the main IdeaLab page!

Welcome

About Inspire Campaigns

Inspire Campaigns are month-long events to focus collaborative efforts on some of the most pressing challenges of the Wikimedia movement. Each campaign focuses on a unique theme and participation is open to everyone. Campaigns are hosted in IdeaLab, where participants can work together to solve problems, create partnerships and develop concrete solutions through project development. Grants are available to support events, research, community organizing, technical or other initiatives in need of funding. Let's turn ideas into collective action!

What is the current theme?

Many contributors to Wikimedia projects experience on-wiki harassment, and many also witness others being harassed. Harassment can include behaviors such as name calling, threats, discrimination, stalking, and impersonation, among others. Furthermore, available methods and systems of dealing with these behaviors are considered to be ineffective. Many individuals who experience or witness harassment feel discouraged, and participate less or stop contributing to Wikimedia projects entirely. What ideas do you have that can help prevent and generally address cases of harassment? If you have ideas, please share them during the current campaign!

Questions about this campaign or Inspire Campaigns generally? Please review the FAQ page.

The campaign will begin on 31 May 2016 and run for about one month. Campaign goal: 100 ideas & 300 participants by 30 June 2016. We reached our goal!

Des modules de formation en ligne

(en anglais seulement...
peu interactifs...
mais mieux que rien...)

The screenshot shows the 'Support and Safety' training modules page. At the top, there is a navigation bar with links for 'Find Programs', 'My Dashboard', 'Training', 'Documentation', and 'Report a problem'. On the right, there are links for 'en', 'Anthere', and 'Log out'. Below the navigation, the breadcrumb 'Training Library > Support And Safety' is visible. The main heading is 'Support and Safety' with a subtitle 'Support and Safety training modules'. The page lists two main categories of training modules:

- Keeping events safe: Training modules for people running in-person events. A specific module 'Keeping events safe — event organizers' is shown as 26% complete.
- Dealing with online harassment: Training modules for Wikimedia project functionaries and others who might deal with harassment. This category includes five modules: 'Fundamentals' (marked as 'COMPLETED'), 'Other forms of harassment', 'Communication best practices', 'Handling reports', and 'Closing cases'.

The interface uses a clean, modern design with green accents for the module titles and progress indicators.
