PREFACE.

This is the Directory for which I have been canvassing, to collect names and procure advertisements, for the last six weeks. It was my intention to embrace in the book, much miscellaneous matter, which is not here. A history of Leavenworth, — a brief description of the other towns in the Territory, and of the agricultural and commercial advantages of its different parts, — many details of Leavenworth, her churches, schools, masonic lodges, public buildings and hotels, — are among the omitted materials. A number of gentlemen, supposed to be in possession of the necessary facts, have been applied to for statements, regarding matters within the scope of their knowledge. Some have furnished the information sought; others have not; and it would be unjust to towns and portions of the Territory, in regard to which accurate information has not been received, to publish the accounts received of others. All must be treated alike.

So much has been said about directories, for the last few months, and not one having yet made its appearance, that the citizens of the town seem to have little confidence in any movement toward the publication of one. This, is therefore published, now, merely as a Directory. It is at least an earnest of good faith in the premises, and will serve as a basis for a work on a larger scale.

It is proper to say that the city has only been canvassed regularly, within the boundaries of the river, the creek, Fifth street and Miami, though the names of a number of persons, doing business outside of these limits, are inserted.

South Leavenworth was to have had full justice done it, in a separate article, written by a prominent and well informed citizen of that part of the city.

This little beginning of a more matured end, is now submitted to the public, with many thanks to those who have favored it with their advertisements. To the indefatigable industry of Mr. FRANK F. BARCLAY, the publisher, it owes its earliest possible appearance, after finding one willing to risk his labor, ink and paper upon its merits. It will be found as nearly correct as could be under the circumstances. Where men have changed their business places since they were canvassed, the change has been made in the book down to the very setting of the type.

Omitted names will be found in one of the front pages.

In a few months, my original design will be consummated, by the publication, probably in conjunction with Mr. FRANK F. BARCLAY, whose assistance will add greatly to the value of the work, of a full business Directory, together with the additional matter already mentioned. Two thousand copies of this has been struck off, and will be circulated immediately. Of our next edition several thousand copies will be printed.
