.. Foreword ..

Among the blessings for which we may be duly thankful are the peace and contentment that come from the cultivation and enjoyment of a garden, offering a pleasant haven from the disquietude of these uncertain times and problems. It is an inspiring diversion that may be enjoyed by all, whether it be on a vast estate or in a tiny garden plot.

In writing the foreword I wish to tell my readers of the pleasure I have experienced in my enthusiastic quest for the rare and unusual Irises, Hemerocallis and Poppies which are described in this catalogue. Not only are there rare species from foreign countries as well as our own, but also the best that have come from hybridizers' hands throughout the world.

Undoubtedly there is no genus of plants so valuable to the design of a garden as the iris for they bloom from earliest spring until late midsummer and their infinite variety enables us to use them in almost every garden picture.

There are many new and lovely bearded irises with much longer season of bloom, wider range of color and more majesty of form. Whether planted in vast drifts or interspersed with other flowers, they have always a dominant personality.

The dwarfs, the crested and the delicate slender species are a joy to the exacting taste of the rock garden enthusiast, while the Siberians and Spurias with their graceful stems are as butterflies poised for flight.

There are irises for every place and purpose but those that especially appeal to me are the rare and fascinating SOUTHERN IRISES and the beautiful and unusual hybrids recently produced by MR. WASHINGTON. Many are tall and stately with large colorful flowers, others have exquisite blossoms which nestle among the sword like leaves and all seem happy in our gardens. Following the wealth of bloom of the bearded irises and preceding the gorgeous profusion of the Japanese, their rich cool beauty lends a note of quiet and peace that is enchanting.

Extremely effective and important are the many new ORIENTAL POPPIES, flowering at the height of the iris season their contrasting colors and form of growth add tone to any garden planting. They bloom in nearly every shade of color and are no longer a trial in garden harmony for their distinctive beauty charms the eyes of all. The use of these modern varieties will add great zest to what otherwise might be a drab and uninteresting garden spot.

This year finds me with even greater enthusiasm for the dazzling array of new hybrid HEMEROCALLIS. Like an invading army their color dominates my garden; they blossom throughout the summer months giving us a thrilling procession of contrasting bloom that heretofore has been unknown. Those of wax like yellow, salmony pink and softest rose when planted with blue and lavender irises give the effect of living sunshine, while those of etruscan gold, bronzy rose and coppery red placed with the deep toned velvety irises are as gleaming tapers in a darkened room. They make splendid color accents which are so vital to the character of a garden. Many are fragrant and several bloom at night giving an added charm of evening magic.

PEONIES hold a very prominent place in our gardens, for aside from their beautiful colors and searching fragrance, their strong luxuriant green foliage is attractive throughout the summer and often gives a charming background to other blooming plants of less sturdy form and habit.

Recent years have given us many new and rare Japanese and single peonies with great diversity of color. They are graceful semi-single flowers on long slender stems and are especially good for arrangement. They are not difficult to grow, for if planted in full sun they give us wealth of garden bloom but if planted in partial shade they still maintain their beauty.

Some time ago I began the formation of my collection and it has been my personal endeavor to choose from the myriad varieties those that will harmonize with other garden flowers whether it be for broad display or in more intimate detail and it is with great pleasure that I present to you this list of gorgeous peonies.

I venture to prophesy that the next few years will find discerning gardeners taking up these groups of plants with increasing eagerness and appreciation of their extreme beauty and merit.

You are cordially invited to the garden to view my favorite flowers in all their wealth of bloom and variety of color for it is from such flowers that the lovely tapestry of the garden may be woven and it is to these new jewels we may turn for cheer when times demand our courage.
