THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

[While referring our readers to other sources for the entire Message communicated by the President to Congress on the 12th inst., we place before the public a brief summary of its main points.]

THE SLAVE TRADE.

The treaty with Great Britain for the suppression of the African slave trade, and the execution of the same, is a subject of complete success. It is an occasion of special pleasure to acknowledge the execution of the treaty with respect to the moral and political rights of the United States and the rights of their moral and political citizens.

AFRICAN COLONIZATION.

Applications have been made to me by many free Americans of African descent to favor their emigration, with a view to such a settlement as they may deem most proper. Congress, other parties, at home and abroad, some from interested motives, others from patriotic feelings, have all manifested similar sentiments; while on the other hand, several States have protested against the sending of such colonies to their respective territories. Under these circumstances, I have deemed it my duty to refer the subject to the consideration of Congress, and to invite their views thereon.

COMPENSATED EMANCIPATION.

On the 22d day of September last, a proclamation was issued by the Executive, a copy of which is herewith submitted. In accordance with the provisions of that proclamation, I have respectfully recall your attention to what may be called "Compensation for the loss of property." The territory is the only part which is certain to be lost. It is the first important step to consider the rights of the people of the United States and the rights of their moral and political citizens.

THE CONSTITUTION.

In the inaugural Address I briefly pointed out the differences between the people of the two sections. I do not believe in language which is calculated to excite party feeling. "One section of our country believes slavery is right, and ought to be extended, while the other believes it is wrong, and ought to be restricted." This is the only substantial dispute. The Fugitive Slave clause of the Constitution, and the law for suppression of the same, are the only points of dispute. It is the duty of the Government to maintain the law, and to enforce it.

THE REBELLION.

There is no line, straight or crooked, suitable for a national boundary upon which to divide. There is no line, straight or crooked, suitable for a national boundary upon which to divide. THE FUTURE.

But there is another difficulty. The great interior region is naturally one of the most important in the world. Ascertain from the statistics presented in this report, that the great interior region is naturally one of the most important in the world. CONGRESS AND THE NATION.

The session of Congress which began on Monday last is one that cannot miss making a deep mark on the history of the country. The day of its opening will be remembered as the day when the representatives of the people met in Congress to consider the rebellion. It is a day that will be remembered as the day when the representatives of the people met in Congress to consider the rebellion.

THE PORT REXPERIMENT.

Our readers will remember the address delivered some months ago in Philadelphia, by J. M. McKim, published in these columns, wherein he gave an account of his observations among the Friends of South Carolina, and of the late success of his way in the hands of Mr. Josiah Foster of Lexington, Mass. Mr. Foster, the able editor in Philadelphia of this country and its institutions against the machinery of our secessionist society.
