PENNA. RAILROAD'S INTERESTING LETTER TO THE PUBLIC

Submits to the State Public Service Commission Its Proposals for the Amicable Settlement of the Philadelphia Suburban Fare Case

The Pennsylvania Railroad this State Public Service Commission at Harrisburg, its proposals for the did not vote, is a mystery. Twentyamicable settlement of the Philadelphia suburban fare case. The company's proposition constitutes a reply to the suggestions recently laid before the Commission by the United Business Men's Association of Philadelphia, the Board of Trade of Kennett Square, the borough of West Chester and the Transportation Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Coatesville.

While stating that it is unable to agree with the request of the commuters for the establishment of a twenty-six-trip family ticket, the railroad offers to inaugurate a new form of ticket which it believes will fully serve the purposes of a family ticket and at the same time substantially meet the wishes of the commuters rates on the existing 100-trip tickets.

which is intended to replace the present 100-trip issues, will give the privilege of fifty rides within a period of six months and will be offered for half the price that would be proposed for the 100-trip tickets.

This, the company states, will meet the objections to the large outlay involved in the purchase of several individual 100-trip tickets for different members of the family, which form the basis of the demand for a family ticket. Attention is called to another advantage of the fifty-trip ticket in that "it enables a person who may be in the suburbs for a limited portion of the year to take advantage of this specially low rate of transportation which might not be available to him if the 100-trip ticket were the only ticket on sale."

The rates per mile, under the proposed fifty-trip tickets, the railroad company sets forth, would be adjusted on a declining scale as the distances increase, reaching a minimum at 1.1 cents per mile, which rate would apply to all distances over sixteen and onehalf miles. This meets one of the chief contentions of the commuters, namely, that the rate per mile for the longer rides should be less than for the shorter distances. The commuters' organizations, in the proceedings before the Commission, have conceded the propriety of minimum

BIRTHDAY DINNER.

One of the prettiest autumn affairs so far in Narberth was a dinner given on Friday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Frederick G. Woodworth, Haverford avenue, in honor of Mrs. Woodworth's father, Mr. Piper, the occasion being seventy-eighth birthday. The house was beautifully decorated, as was also the table. The main setting was an elaborate birthday cake a representative of the State Highway surrounded by seventy-eight miniature candles, each one in a small oldfashioned candlestick.

The evening was spent in dancing. The following guests were present: Mr. and Mrs. Piper, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Churchill, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Downes.

EMERGENCY PHONE CALLS Fire 350. Police 1250.

Just as we go to press, we learn with regret that Mr. Ormond L. Hampton, the popular secretary of our local Young Men's Christian Association, has accepted a very flattering offer from the Coatesville Y. M. A. to become its Educational Director on December 1st next. Mr. Hampton has done excellent work here, bringing to his task a thorough and sympathetic knowledge of its requirements, and accomplishing all that could be done under somewhat adverse conditions. His relations with his co-workers and the membership have always been most cordial, and his departure will be generally regretted by all interested in the work of the association.

The character of the position of fered to Mr. Hampton in Coatesville is such that he could not be expected to neglect the opportunity. The field of work opened up to him in Coatesville is a very important one. Coatesville is a very large industrial centre, with a rapidly growing population. The Y. M. C. A. plant there is a fine one, that will undoubtedly expand with the growth of the town. While we are sorry to lose Mr. Hampton from the work here, we cannot for a moment criticise him for accepting a position that will enable him to still further develop his talents in his chosen profession and we wish him God-speed and success in his new field of endeavor.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Hampton have made many friends in Narberth, in church and social circles, all of whom will greatly miss them.

To the Editor of Our Town:

Most Narberth folks pride themselves on the fact that police protection for the borough is of rather doubtful necessity. The experience of a number of our citizens on Hallowe'en, however, should result in awakening the community to the fact that there is pressing need of a good sized police force on at least one night of the year. No one begrudges a red-blooded boy the opportunity of relieving himself of his surplus energy by way of a harmless prank; in fact if the youngsters didn't take advantage of the occasion to masquerade and play a few jokes on the neighbors, we would wonder what was wrong with them, but there is a broad line between innocent ment and the deliberate and wanton destruction that characterized the actions of a few ill-bred boys last Hallowe'en. Three cases came under my notice, but I know there were more than that.

In one case two handsome pottery vases were removed from a porch and smashed to pieces.

In another, an expensive rustic flower box was thrown from a ledge and destroyed absolutely.

In the third case a gang broke a lock in trying to force entrance to a house where a lady was alone, terrorizing her until she opened the door rather than have the door completely ruined. Before leaving the premises these "young gentlemen" inflicted other damage which means no trifling expense to the owner, who, by the way, doesn't think the experience at all funny, but who, under the circumstances, we will not accuse of being bereft of a sense of humor.

It is unfortunate that Narberth possesses an element that disgraces the town by these actions and before another year rolls around drastic measures should be taken to prevent a repetition of them.

GINGERBREAD

THE day began unpleasantly. It followed an unpleasnat week, during which the sky had been a grim gray canopy that threatened every moment to fall and smother the earth. Alta got breakfast sedately. One would have to know Alta a long time to be aware that such sedateness covered a very volcano of temper. And Harry knew it. He had been married to Alta eight years.

Harry ate his breakfast in a tense quietude that might have passed for even humor. Alta, having borne him three children, who were now sleeping in the bedroom and whom presently she would have to awaken and dress for school, knew Harry quite well. And she knew that at the moment he was hating her for the previous evening's quarrel-a quarrel which she began and which she did not care how long would last. It gave her a certain angry amusement to see him bite his lips until they showed white teeth marks. She knew that he wanted to say mean things bitter things, as she had said to him last night. She had taunted him about his small earning capacity. Other men in the neighborhood gave their wives more. She had regretted that she had married him. He had given icy assent to that wish. She had wished that the children did not exist.

All night they had lain side by side in a bed bought on the instalment plan, and not yet paid for, and each had known that the other was tense with dislike. This morning they had dressed and she had prepared breakfast and he was eating it in hating silence. Well, she did not care. Life was too hard and dry and grim. It would have been better for her and for Harry if the children never had been born. Then they needn't have stayed bound to each other, having to quarrel whether they would or not. Harry worked hard—she gave him credit for that-but it seemed impossible for her to manage on what he made. Meat, rent, shoes for the children, groceries-the items seemed to dance before her, tauntingly, ad, hurting her heart. She smiled grimly to herself. Nine years back she had given thanks because she might share Harry's life and home.

When breakfast was finished Harry left hurriedly. She dressed the children. They were a bit constrained. The quarrel hung over the house, oppressing it as the gray sky, outside oppressed the earth. Then they went to school, and she was left The well-dressed stranger stepped alone to clean the house, sew awhile,

She did not take much pains with the supper. The boiled potatoes were the only vegetable, though she knew that Harry disliked boiled potatoes. "Don't ask that to-night," said her mother sharply. The quarrel the evening before had begun because she lacked less than a dollar to pay the meat bill.

Ellen pouted into the second reader, but she pouted in silence. Then some one knocked at the kitchen door. Harry ran to open it. Mrs. and one of the problems of his life Colby from the flat above stood there, smiling, with a pan of gingerbread.

ful was odorous. The children sidled up and giggled in anticipation. "No can't stay," protested the donor. 'Carl and I are going to the theatre." And she ran back.

Absently, Alta cut the children a slice, though it would spoil their supper, she knew. Then, ungraciously, she sliced the remainder and put it on the table. Harry liked gingerbread better than any other cake. In her present unpleasant mood she did not care to put anything on that would please him She had half a mind-

But he was there, hanging his coat on the rack. Then he washed his hands in the bathroom. She poured out the coffee averting her eyes. Silently he sat down at the table, absently helping the children to potatoes.

"Oh! You've baked gingerbread!" he remarked, in pleased surprise. And he nibbled a piece before passing the meat.

Alta had turned, and she caught the look on his face. It was a wistful, tired, pleased look, and something in his wistful munching hurt her. It flashed over her that his life, too, was barren of pleasure; that he worked all day at monotonous work; that until the children grew he never would have much pleasure-except an occasional pan of gingerbread, which in the last year she had baked only twice!

"But you shouldn't have gone to the trouble of baking it, Alta," he said, "when you're tired—"

Alta hoped the children wouldn't tell him. For once they didn't tell all they knew. They didn't hear their father's remarks. She wondered at iherself, but she wanted Harry to think that she cared enough for him to go to a little trouble to please him. If he knew that he had foolishly taken too much for granted, the old, stiff,
