The Convention at Chicago

NO one who has attended National Exhibitor Conventions for the past decade can fail to be impressed with the growth of the organization spirit as that spirit has been manifested in the gathering which beginning Monday, May 21, has been in session in Chicago. In San Francisco eight years ago, there were in attendance perhaps three or four delegates who hailed from the territory east of the Sierras. We definitely recall three. This year eight men went from California to Chicago, the number being equally divided between the two sections of the state.

George Eastman traveled from Rochester to Chicago, carrying with him as guest Dr. Rush Rhee, president of the University of Rochester, and the two distinguished men addressed the delegates.

Massachusetts sent a full quota of delegates and alternates, twenty-two in all.

New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan and Minnesota all sent large delegations.

In the convention hall during the sessions, although but approximately 330 were entitled to vote, there were upward of 500 persons at a conservative estimate. To those who remember conventions that frequently mustered fifty or perhaps a hundred delegates the shift in sentiment is striking.

Theatre Owner organization is a settled fact. If one form of operation is not practical another and a better one will be found.

That the present one is not the right one probably no one will concede more quickly and frankly than President Cohen, who has seen a steady reduction in quota paid in the past two years. And while the financial support has been lessened the work has been increased and the cost greater in proportion.

There is a report that the outlook which was so gloomy for harmonious action on Wednesday afternoon will be changed materially for the better Thursday noon when the delegates get together after a night to take counsel and discuss differences.

There can be no question of the regard of a considerable proportion of the delegates for Mr. Cohen, of the respect of practically all of them. That the regard and respect are reciprocated on the part of Mr. Cohen was only too plainly manifested during the stormy scenes of Wednesday.

The strongest impression of this writer as he left the convention hall on Wednesday was the plainly evident regard for each other of the men who had been so bitterly contending.

The past three years have brought a large number of new faces into exhibitor leadership. Strange faces they are to one who has been absent from two national conventions. Among these are many men of marked strength and real ability.

One man we are sure is going to be heard from in the coming years is E. W. Collins, of Jonesboro, Arkansas, an exhibitor in a town of fourteen thousand, and who was nominated for fourth vice-president. Another is R. F. Woodhull, of Dover, N. J., a candidate for president, and who as toastmaster at the banquet on Wednesday night, presided with charm and distinction.

There's a host of others who bring to the organization force and ability, men of substance and marked intelligence. Regardless of the outcome of the election on Thursday, and bearing in mind that it is possible anything might happen, we refuse to believe anything more serious to exhibitor organization can happen than possible delay, a delay that will be temporary, in the building of a great organization, one that will function perfectly and that will take its place among the other powerful bodies devoted to the interests of men who cater to the amusement and other needs of the public.

SIX months from this time Universal will release "Jewel." It is a Jewel by brand and what is of real importance it is a jewel of a picture. Through the courtesy of R. H. Cochran we were permitted just before starting for Chicago to see a studio print of this remarkable subject as it came from the hand of Lois Weber, who produced it, even as she was responsible for the direction of the same story by the same company eight years ago.

To those who saw the original it may sound like a large statement when we say the present production will surpass the first. It surpasses it in refinements of picture-making and in the improvement in treatment to be expected from one filled with her subject in the first instance and who probably has had it in mind since 1915.

The child Jewel is played initially by Ella Hall, who with rare skill created the illusion of childhood. The Jewel of today or the one of the coming late autumn is Jane Mercer, a child of eleven years old—but seemingly a woman in her understanding and interpretation of the role. And in singling out the child we are not by any means unmindful of the splendid characterizations of the other players in the east, all of which will be duly reported when the picture is formally shown for review.

To those who are "light on the trigger" the picture abounds in "gulps," as Daniel Frohman once phrased it—there are tears in it. Also there are hearty laughs, really delightful comedy.

Just another word—the big word, perhaps, for some: The running time of "Jewel" is one hour.

ELMER PEARSON shed a ray of light Thursday night on a matter that often is discussed by film men. We were sitting in the smoker up near the bow of the train as the engineer ripped his way and our way across New York state in a driving rain-storm and made up time lost below Albany. The writer had mentioned seeing a picture that would not be released for six months and had referred to the overhead involved, a tying-up of investment that in the aggregate must represent a substantial loss.

"Let's not be too sure that it is a loss," responded the active head of Pathe, who was on his way to the coast, which he expected to reach May 24.

"I can cite you an instance of two pictures, one released as it was completed and the other held back four months. The second subject, it is fair to estimate, would have booked $200,000 more than the first—on its general average appeal. Actually, by reason of the wide discussion of it and the general interest excited it ran $400,000 over its predecessor.

"So it is in the case of the picture you mention. You for one, as an example, will talk of it to exhibitors, they will talk with others, the exchanges feel the reaction, and they will have the film to show those who are interested. The result is that when the subject is released the exhibitor is all set and the picture goes over.

"When by reason of delayed issue opportunity is given for pre-release discussion and exploitation the sum lost in interest is nil compared to the benefit in increased bookings. I am assuming, of course, that in the case of any holding back the production has unusual quality."

Mr. Pearson, who is accompanied by Mrs. Pearson, will stop over in Nebraska on the way west, visiting his home and also that of Mrs. Pearson.

COMING into Chicago we noticed a huge billboard sign, "The Covered Wagon." Closely adjoining it was another announcement of equal prominence, "Two Fellows and a Girl." We saw the same thing on South Dearborn street. It may be all right, but to us it looks like a case of bad management on the part of somebody in that wagon.

LOOKED in on the headquarters of the M. P. T. O. of Illinois Friday. There we met up with William J. ("Bill") Sweeney, office manager, and Louis H. Frank. Bill if anything looks more husky than ever, and that's saying much. He is one of the Illinois organization war horses, and has been from the beginning.

Mr. Sweeney said the Illinois Theatre Owners were fairly well organized, but that difficulty was experienced in some of the small towns, where the exhibitors were likely to be less responsive to organization arguments.

The office manager reported that a bill had been introduced in the Illinois legislature for the repeal of daylight saving. Senator Wright of De Kalb, the sponsor of the measure, has notified the Theatre Owners that if any success is to be attained it will be necessary to move with promptness, as but twenty days remained before adjournment.

* * *

HIRAM ABRAMS, the president of United Artists, also was a passenger on the same train. To a question as to whether he was headed for the convention he smiled.

"No," he said.

"Every man to his own interests, and of course my chief concern is selling pictures."

* * *

ED S. PORTER, the big boss of Simplex projection, was at the Coliseum Saturday morning supervising the installation of his company's machines. Asked as to how many he would have he said probably a half dozen in various parts of the hall.

A part of the Simplex exhibit—which by the way is inscribed 1897-1923—will be the first Simplex machine made, manufactured in 1897, and which was a part of the equipment of the Eden Musee. Mr. Porter has loaned to the management a print of "The Great Train Robbery," which will be shown during the week. Also there will be exhibited with this genuine old-timer the same program of early subjects which was displayed at the recent Telview showing in New York.

GEORGE BLAIR, representative of George Eastman, is in Chicago. When we informed him that there was stopping at the same hotel at which he is registered a very good double of himself the Rochester man displayed concern.

"I hope he is a person of good habits and that he has no murderously inclined enemies," he remarked.

RICHARD BRADY, also of the Eastman forces, is at the Eastman display at the exposition. The exhibit of the Rochester company is, as might be expected, largely photographic, although there are on a table several bottles with liquids "therein contained" which look most infamously non-beverage.

AND speaking of Richard we are reminded of another Brady we met sauntering around the exposition hall on the opening night—the president of the former National Association and the representative of President Wilson in the industry during war days. Mr. Brady has addressed exhibitor conventions in years past, at times urging the Theatre Owners to get together with the other branches of the industry and on one well remembered occasion—and that was in Chicago, too—urging them to get together among themselves.

When asked what he was doing so far from Broadway Mr. Brady said he was opening "Chains" on Monday night. In reply to a question he said it was not his present intention to look in on the proceedings of the Theatre Owners, as he would be pretty busy.

RAYMOND HITCHCOCK was a passenger in a descending Sherman elevator Saturday evening.

Harry Davis of Pittsburgh greeted the comedian. "Are you going to play in our village?" inquired the Pennsylvanian.

"Yes," responded Hitchy-Koo, "I am opening in the village tonight. And I hope to remain in the village all summer. You know it's a nice village, there's a nice lake, and—"

"A nice lot of people," suggested a fellow-passenger.

"Yes, and a nice lot of people," corrected the comedian.

Mr. Hitchcock was present at the San Francisco convention in 1915 and addressed the delegates. He followed Frank Keenan, who had remarked that the day on the screen of the little girl with the brown eyes and the yellow eurl was passed.

"I heard what Mr. Keenan said," commented the comedian in that quaint, inimitable way of his. "I will tell you 'tain't so. When I go to see a picture it's me for the little girl with the brown eyes and the yellow eurl."

Frank Keenan, by the way, also is playing in Chicago.

FOURTH NATIONAL M.P.T.O.A. CONVENTION CHICAGO MAY 19-26

Sydney S. Cohen Re-Elected

Ritter Refuses to Accept Office Unless Given Full Control

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

(Special to Exhibitors Trade Review)

The Coliseum, Chicago
Thursday, May 24.

AT the adjournment of Wednesday's session of the fourth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, held in the Coliseum Annex, Chicago, the indications of a divided organization were painfully apparent.

For the two preceding days not a ripple on the surface had betrayed the deep undercurrent of feeling over the approaching presidential election.

The friends of James C. Ritter, of Michigan, and of W. A. Steffes, of Minnesota, had been working hard to elect these men, but all the time they were fearful of the result if Sydney S. Cohen, for three years president of the organization, was induced to permit his name to go before the convention for re-election.

Many conferences were held, especially on Tuesday night, at which time it was found there was no chance to effect a compromise. At the conclusion of Wednesday's meeting the best information available was to the effect that the delegates from Michigan and Wisconsin would return to their homes and await developments, but that for the present they would not function as national units.

No Temper Between the Candidates

While the scenes at the session on Wednesday were stormy underneath them all there was a great deal of forbearance. It was a fight between men who for three years as a rule have grown to have a regard for each other. The temper or absence of it displayed by Mr. Ritter and Mr. Cohen was admirable. Mr. Steffes was cold and perhaps brusque, but unheated so far as outward appearances went.

Chicago, May 24.

Sydney S. Cohen was re-elected president of the M. P. T. O. A. at 2:30 this afternoon.

Mr. Cohen announced that Mr. Ritter had declined to entertain the compromise proposals made to him which were based on the withdrawal of Cohen's candidacy. Mr. Ritter demanded complete executive control, including full control of the Board of Directors.

At 3:30 this morning a prominent member of the Michigan delegation announced that he believed the situation was clearing up and that when the delegates convened at 11 o'clock this forenoon there would be a decided change in the atmosphere which prevailed at adjournment Wednesday.

Much important business remains to be taken up. The date of the adjournment is uncertain, although some of the delegates hope to get away tonight.

The weather has been all that could be desired, unless it was too cool.

The banquet at the Hotel Sherman last night was a marked success.

At the exposition Wednesday night ten thousand paid admissions were reported, the best day of the five to date.

At the Wednesday session the following were placed in nomination for the offices named:

For President, R. F. Woodhull, New Jersey; Sydney S. Cohen, New York; F. J. McWilliams, of Wisconsin.

For First Vice-President, Joseph Mogler, of Missouri;

Second Vice-President, Martin G. Smith, Ohio; Third Vice-President, W. W. Whitson, California (Southern); Fourth Vice-President, E. W. Collins, Arkansas.

Secretary, George P. Aarons, Pennsylvania.

Treasurer, William F. Bender, Jr., of South Bend, Ind.

Board of Directors, fifteen to be elected. W. D. Burford, Illinois; Charles W. Whitehurst, Maryland; C. C. Griffin, California; Charles T. Sears, Missouri; Fred Seegert, Wisconsin; Harry Davis and M. E. Comerford, Pennsylvania; G. G. Schmidt, Indiana; A. Julian Brylawski, District of Columbia; C. A. Lick, Arkansas; W. A. True, Connecticut; John A. Schwatt, Ohio; A. R.

Pramer, Nebraska; L. J. Dittmar, Kentucky; Glenn Harper, California; H. B. Varner, South Carolina. Mr. Varner was nominated during his absence from the hall. He stated later he would not be a candidate.

The stated hour of opening had been 11 o'clock, but it was high noon before the members assembled in force. At that hour there were many conferences being held at the side of the hall near the windows. At 1.22 Michigan changed its standard over alongside that of Minnesota, indicating the delegation of the two states had decided to join hands in fighting the nomination of Sydney S. Cohen.

The delegates were in an uproar, with knots of exhibitors all over the hall, some sky-larking and some singing. It was the reaction from the tension which had prevailed for three days of the convention's sessions and which had been increased through reports of unsuccessful harmony conferences the night before.

At 12.20 Messrs. Cohen, Ritter and Steffes, the three principal candidates, the first two openly and third known to be the choice of many delegates, were reported to be in conference in the effort to resolve the seeming impasse. At 12:25 the gathering had quieted down and awaiting results.

Cohen Suggests Compromises

Later it was reported that Mr. Cohen had suggested as compromise candidates R. W. Woodhull, W. A. True, W. D. Burford, Harry Davis and M. E. Comerford, but that these names were not acceptable. Mr. Davis, who has many friends among the delegates, is reported to have declined being considered.

At 1 o'clock President Cohen ascended the platform. At that hour there were more than 500 in the hall. Led by the Michigan delegation many on the floor were singing, in apparent high good humor, among other bits being "Mr. Cohen, How Do You Do?"

It was the gayety before the sterner business of the afternoon.

At 1:15 the President called the gathering to order. There were calls for three cheers for Cohen, and they were heartily given.

Mr. Cohen announced that following reports from the Rules and Credentials committee nominations would be in order. The rules adopted were the same as had prevailed in Washington last year.

G. G. Schmidt of Indiana, was called to the chair, Mr. Cohen taking a seat in the New York delegation. In opening the chairman said it was customary in conventions to leave the hall in harmony and expressed the hope there would be no repetition of "the Washington fiasco, where the delegates from the greatest state in the country packed their grips and walked home because they were unsuccessful in defeating Cohen."

"Mr. O'Reilly replied to a telegram of mine urging that he was a big enough man to come in spite of last year to the effect that he felt the factional dealing in New York would prevent him. If we don't drop factional feeling we will get nowhere."

The Credentials Committee reported 330 delegates qualified to participate in the proceedings.

The Constitution was amended to permit of the increasing of the Board of Directors from twelve to fifteen.

When Michigan was reached in the call of states for the nomination for President, Claude Cady requested that the state be passed as the chairman made especial inquiry as to the delegation's attitude.

Theodore L. Hayes, of Minnesota, nominated Mr. Steffes, Fred Weinburg of Missouri, nominated Mr. Mogler, Sydney Samuels of New Jersey nominated Mr. Woodhull, Vincent Brennan of Pennsylvania nominated Mr. Cohen and Joe Rhode of Wisconsin nominated Mr. McWilliams. At this point there was a commotion when Mr. Hayes asked the privilege of the floor. "In justice to the candidate whose name I presented to you, to explain the action that will follow my remarks. Apparently we are wrong," he continued, "in assuming that this is a democratic organization and that our leader is to be chosen from the floor of this convention. Gentlemen, your leader was chosen this morning in a room at the Sherman Hotel."

The commotion increasing, President Cohen said: "May I ask that every courtesy be shown the speaker and that he be permitted to conclude his remarks?"

"You gentlemen who are objecting are going to be very much pleased when I finish my remarks," continued Mr. Hayes. "In behalf of Minnesota and Michigan, who have spent six weeks in presenting their candidates upon the pledge of Sydney Cohen that he would not be a candidate, I desire to state that if he had said to us that he would be a candidate Minnesota would not have had a candidate. Is that fair?"

A voice: "It is dishonest."

"If we don't get down to a consideration of the facts and truth," continued Mr. Hayes, "I want to tell you that what Mr. Cohen will take with him will be an empty honor. No man has higher regard for Sydney Cohen than I have, but I think he has been unmanly and unfair."

"The action of Mr. Cohen means a divided field of candidates that makes it possible for the selected candidate of the few to win the honor of this convention. Minnesota is ready to withdraw and will withdraw."

"I am not here to attack the record of Mr. Cohen. I am not here to traduce Mr. Cohen. He will be your leader for another year and I wish him success. In my own mind I feel that success and the achievement we all desire could better have been accomplished with Ritter of Michigan and Steffes of Minnesota. I thank you for your consideration and withdraw the name of Mr. Steffes."

Chairman Schmidt took exception to a remark of Mr. Hayes about "stacked cards," which he characterized as a cowardly sling at the chairman and also the good, honest delegates who are here to fight and let the best man win. Is there any desire from the state of Michigan to be heard?"

After repeated calls from the floor Claude Cady, of Michigan, declared: "Michigan put a candidate in the field as a result of certain promises that had been repeatedly made to us that Sydney Cohen would not be a candidate for re-election. Since learning of the action taken this morning we have decided not to put our candidate in the field, to our regret. As has been said by the gentleman who preceded me much time, energy and effort have been spent, wasted, if you please, to turn down the man who has put Michigan on the map as the greatest organization state in the Union."

"We have no candidate to offer. Our best work was to offer you a man we thought would give you a good administration. It is evident you don't want such a man, therefore, Michigan will not place Mr. Ritter in nomination."

"At the Washington convention Mr. Cohen was not a candidate for president. And Mr. Steffes and Mr. Cady and the rest of them know that," declared M. J. O'Toole, of New York. "But Mr. Cohen's administration for two years, given under conditions and circumstances of the most trying character, and which challenged the admiration of every interested man in this business, was challenged by a certain group hostile to the exhibitors."

"Therefore Mr. Cohen was forced into the position of being a candidate and he was triumphantly elected. Mr. Cohen at Washington said emphatically that he was not a candidate. Today Sydney Cohen is not a candidate except at the desire of the men on this floor."

"I know Mr. Cohen as well as any individual. I have lived with him in the organization for two years, and I know his sincere desire has been to retire from the presidency, but there are men in this convention who desire him to be president. (Cheers.)"

"This convention is a democratic gathering. We have no desire to influence the opinions of any set of delegates. If Minnesota and Michigan have candidates who can beat our candidate let them stay in the field. I yield to no man in my sincere admiration for the two men." Mr. McLaren of Michigan followed in a temperate speech, in which he said "We love Sydney Cohen, we have supported him for the past three years," he added, "however, if Mr. Cohen was a candidate the others had no chance."

"Support Mr. Cohen if you want to," he concluded, "but if you are going to elect him for God's sake give him something to work with. We will go back to Michigan, and at the next convention we will have more money to work with than you will have if you go along as you are."

Mr. Mogler withdrew his name from consideration as a candidate.

The other candidates were then nominated.

Those who took part in the discussions that followed were Arthur James, of Wilkes-Barre, Tom Foster, of Stanley, Wis. Mr. Cohen, who said he would have a statement to make Thursday morning, paid a tribute to Michigan for the help it had given him at all times and sincerely hoped Mr. Ritter would permit his name to remain before the convention.

Mr. Ritter stated he positively would not permit his name to stand. Mr. Steffes spoke for five minutes. He said that Mr. Cohen had told him a month ago in New York that he would not be a candidate. Referring to a remark of a previous speaker he said: "Let Pennsylvania ask Sydney Cohen whether there was any double-crossing or whether I stuck through thick and thin. If this is the reward, I want none of it. I think I know too much about the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to be 'sapped' into permitting my name to go down to defeat."

"Michigan is not bolting," said Mr. Ritter. "I want to say to you there is not a more loyal state in the union than Michigan. It has paid taxes to your national organization this year, every year. Gentlemen, until you are willing to support your organization and pay your money and quit talking you will never have one. We have a plan that will put the organization on the map. You can't win the battle until you have the dough." Mr. Ritter mentioned the sums that had been contributed to the national organization by the different units, as follows: Three years ago, $56,000; two years ago $30,000; this year $13,000.

"Michigan this year," Mr. Ritter continued, "has had $40,000 to run its own state organization. Gentlemen, you have got to sell your organization to the exhibitor. Until you do you will get nowhere. Under the present plan of organization I shall positively refuse to be a candidate."

"We are trying to get away from this meeting, and we go with clean hands," said Mr. Cady. "Anybody that gave up the way Michigan has given up the last three years must be pretty good sports. (Applause.)

"Now if you will kindly leave us alone we would like to go home in peace."

"Mr. Chairman, that goes for Minnesota, too," said Mr. Steffes.

CALLED TO ORDER BY GLENN HARPER

THE fourth annual session of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was called to order by Vice President Glenn Harper of Los Angeles at 2 o'clock Monday in the convention hall of the Coliseum.

The morning session, set for 11 o'clock, had been abandoned by the officers due to failure to realize the difference between daylight and standard time and the consequent large number of delegates who would be unable to attend.

Cohen Escorted to the Chair

A motion to appoint a committee of six to escort National President Sydney S. Cohen to the chair was carried. There was a stir when Vice President Harper selected for the committee the men whose names have been mentioned most frequently in connection with the succession to the presidency.

The committee was composed of Martin G. Smith of Ohio, W. A. Steffes of Minnesota, Joe Mogler of Missouri, James C. Ritter of Michigan, M. E. Comerford of Pennsylvania, and T. J. McWilliams of Wisconsin.

Mr. Cohen was greeted with hearty applause, and three cheers, called for by Morris Needles of New York, were given with spirit.

Mr. Cohen proceeded to the reading of his annual report, which consumed considerably over an hour in the delivery.

At the conclusion of the reading the national president spoke extemporaneously for twenty minutes on general conditions. He talked rapidly and with earnestness, and was followed with the closest attention by the half thousand persons present.

The talk was the feature of the day's proceedings. There was a standing and prolonged demonstration at its conclusion, as Mr. Cohen declared:

"In ending my stewardship I want to express heartiest thanks to the leaders and members of this organization for their help and co-operation. I want you all to know how happy I am to have been of service in bringing the independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America into its fourth annual convention, and I urge you to give your effort and attention to the program that has been arranged for it.

"We must continue to seek an interchange of thought on the problems confronting us and try to work these out to the further improvement of our organization.

"Let Us Be Big and Go Forward"

"Let us work these things out, allowing for the other fellow's opinion, as harmoniously as we can, but let us be big. Let us show the whole industry that we have advanced, that we have progressed. Let us work out a really constructive solution of

Just Between Ourselves

JOHN COLLINS, treasurer of the national organization, came into town Saturday afternoon, accompanied by John Manus. Mr. Collins, who hails from Rutherford, N. J., took in the exposition Saturday night and was held up at the door. He had his money out to pay his way in when a newspaper friend fixed him up with a surplus pass.

* * *

P. A. POWERS, head of the Film Booking Offices, stopped over in Chicago on his way to New York from the coast. He was the same old P. A., debonair, younger than ever if anything, the man without a worry —so far as anybody could notice it.

When the suggestion was made that his general front elevation and bronzed countenance indicated that Los Angeles agreed with him P. A. agreed it did.

"You know, of course, that in Los Angeles we merely enjoy ourselves and experience no worries whatever," said the F. B. O. man.

"Not even about money?"

"Oh, no—far from it. It's the man in New York who worries about money. All we have to do in Los Angeles is to spend it."

Mr. Powers said he intended to remain in Chicago for a day or so, and when told there was a banquet coming on Wednesday night, looked interested.

TWO busy men were J. D. Williams and Watterson Rothacker. Mr. Williams said it was his intention to remain in Chicago during the convention. He was accompanied by Harry Scott, his manager of distribution.

LEWIS J. SELZNICK dropped into the lobby headquarters Sunday and was given the glad hand all around. He appeared to have conferences on. He said he would be in town all the week.

our problems. Let there be no yesterdays. Let us carry on, let us carry forward.

"In closing I want to thank you all for your courtesy in listening to me over the greater part of the afternoon.

"I thank you from the bottom of my heart for every courtesy that has been shown to me."

On motion of Fred Seegert of Wisconsin the report of the president was accepted and referred to a committee, which in turn should report to the convention. Mr. McWilliams was named as chairman of that body.

Fred W. Perkins of the United States Department of Agriculture spoke on co-operation between the motion picture industry and the government. Miss Louella Parsons of New York gave an interesting talk on summertime programs, a subject in which she is greatly interested and her helpful ideas on which she very interestingly set forth to the meeting.

"We hope that during your stay in the city you will feel that warm welcome and that kindly disposition which I am sure exists in this state toward motion picture theatre owners," said Mr. Cooper on behalf of the Mayor.

Links Theatre and Fords

"I think that perhaps the two greatest things that have done more to change the face of social life and social conditions in the United States in the past dozen years have been the moving picture theatre and the Ford automobile. They are the greatest levelers of democracy. They bring people more closely together and in touch with each other than any other elements that have entered into our civic life.

Continuing his remarks Cohen said:

"I want to say a word about the condition of the organization. During the past year I have visited about thirty state organizations. I have found in the trips I have taken that the spirit of organization is stronger among Theatre Owners than ever before, that the organization morale is stronger, and that despite the most serious business depression Theatre Owners have had.

"Grown Too Big Too Fast"

"Our greatest trouble is in the fact that we have grown too fast in too short a time and that while we were growing we were confronted with every form of serious questions that needed adjustment. Our real trouble has been in the fact that your national leaders, in which I am included in the rank and file, have not provided for the conduct of your organization the proper fiscal policy that is highly essential.

"Your national headquarters have been undermanned, have lacked the human units to do the work required. The human units have been inadequately compensated for the work they have done. I know, when you Theatre Owners know of that situation, learn of the great work that has been done despite opposition, that you will all rally to the cause.

"I know that you realize organization is the insurance of your business. I think you will carry business insurance along with your other insurance.

"My great interest in organization has been that because I am a theatre owner, with my own money invested, I desired to be protected.

"We have got a big delegation from New York City and from every part of the state of New York. There are a whole lot of sound thinking, substantial theatre owners in that state of mine—not trade paper exhibitors—who desire no publicity, but only desire an opportunity to run their theatres, and they feel that they are entitled to get responsible information.

"With all the talk and misinformation about New York being dissatisfied and the Theatre Owners not being connected with the organization I want to tell you that we have at this time more Theatre Owners signed up and affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America than ever in its history, and I say that after having been president of that organization for three years. (great applause.)

Super-Pictures Super-Prices

"Now that theatres have been built with larger capacities we find that the public demands more. We find that pictures have been changed to super-pictures, but we have found that the only difference is in the super-prices we have been paying. (Applause.)

"It has been my contention that a man who conducts the hazardous business of running a theatre is entitled for his 365 days of effort a chance to make a living. I want to say to you from my observation in touring the country there are a very large number of Theatre Owners who are not making a decent living.

"If something is not done other than to indulge in expressions of opinions I am convinced that thousands of our men will be put out of business and millions of people will be debarred from seeing wholesome pictures.

"The so-called small man is often a very big man.

"In spite of all that has been said this is not an infant industry. But there are too many infants in the industry, particularly in the producing and distributing ends of it. (Applause.)

"It is not, however, my purpose to say anything unkind because I have long grown away from that.

"At the start of our organization it was necessary for your leaders to establish a place for the organization, to say things and resort to methods no longer necessary. That is because your position in this industry has been set, your place in the sun has been found.

"The Theatre Owner should be the determining force in this industry because he is the point of contact with the public.

"Please bear in mind that all values of production, distribution and exhibition are predicated upon the good-will of your public. The Theatre Owner should be the dominating force, and we desire to be the dominating force, not for any selfish reason, because it has been my thought from the start of the organization that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, representing independent theatre owners, could not progress and develop unless we developed the other branches with us.

Improvement Seen In Films

"Our pictures are sane, clean and wholesome, and we want that kind of entertainment. There has been a great improvement along these lines. And while there are outstanding differences between other branches and the Theatre Owners at this time I urge very strongly that the better sense and judgment of our organization and all branches may prevail so that we can work out our problems along constructive lines. Despite all differences it is my opinion a better understanding has been reached.

"We are in the process of development. You know three years is a mighty short time. We were an unorganized force of theatre owners here barely three years ago. I am mighty proud to have been associated with you in helping to bring this unorganized mass of Theatre Owners from the wilderness out into the open road.

"You are now on the open road, and if you carry on from this convention, as I know you will, you will get the dividends this fall from the work that your leaders have put in the interest of this organization. "We have had 'weeks' from all the distributing organizations. The time has come at last for the exhibitor's week, and why not try to make it an exhibitor's year, so that the exhibitor can be of more service to the whole industry?

"The wild orgy of expenditure of which we read at the West Coast with the price of pictures make the Theatre Owners wonder what is to become of their investment. They can't pay the freight.

Tax Society Has Washington Lobby

"So much of the space in the press has been devoted to destructive purposes that the time has come for all branches in this industry to throw in their man power, their brain power, their screen power, and coordinate their efforts to bring more people into our theatres. The people who do not attend can and should be made to attend.

"If we could accomplish that there would be less timidity about the high cost of film. If the people came in the Theatre Owner is very happy to pay commensurately. I hope this convention will work out plans to accomplish these ends.

"Your next administration has a gigantic task in combating the reformers who will come into Washington with millions of signatures. In the president to be elected you must have a representative who can take care of your interests at the national capital.

"You will learn things of a surprising nature in the Music tax report. The American Society of Authors and Composers has a paid representative at Washington and he represents it well. You can't get anything unless you work along the lines submitted by your officers.

"You must have sufficient human units to do your work, and when you have them you will get results."

Mr. Cohen concluded as previously quoted.

EASTMAN SPEAKER ON SECOND DAY

In spite of the delay in getting down to work the second day's session of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners was marked by real progress in clearing up the calendar. The morning hour had been set at 11 o'clock, but as it was 12 before President Cohen noted a quorum he decided to make the session continuous.

George Eastman of Rochester, was one of the principal speakers of the day, who declared he had been an exhibitor only a short time. He was followed by Dr. Rush Rhees, President of the University of Rochester, who talked on the alliance between the motion picture and music and of the mutual development of the two at the University of which he is head, and at the Eastman Theatre.

Uniform Contract and Insurance

Three leading subjects considered by the delegates were the report of the committee on the uniform contract, submitted by W. D. Burford of Illinois; a discussion of insurance problems, engaged in by Messrs. Doolin of Kansas City, who talked on the reciprocal plan; Loos of Michigan, who spoke for the mutual plan, and Charles Rappaport of Philadelphia, who told what had been accomplished in Eastern Pennsylvania by exhibitors combining forces.

The Music tax was dissected by George P. Aarons, secretary of the Eastern Pennsylvania Theatre Owners, who related the legislative history of the present statute; Attorney S. A. Handy of Kansas City, who in vigorous manner declared the Supreme Court of the United States never had passed on the Music tax as it affects motion picture theatres, and President Foster of the Cincinnati Musicians' Union who urged the exhibitors to affiliate with a company composed of 2200 orchestra leaders and other musicians who were nearly ready to open business with their own compositions.

Mrs. Drew and Rudie Appear

There were addresses by Congressman Homer P. Snyder of Utica, N. Y., chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, on "protecting the public against fraudulent stock promotions," with particular bearing upon motion picture production promotion; Martin J. Quigley on "telling the picture story"; and by Robert E. Welsh on "picture exploitation and salesmanship."

At the close of the day there were addresses also by Mrs. Sydney Drew, who declared she was "only a Missouri farmer's daughter," and liked work, and Rodolph Valentino. Mrs. Drew aroused interest when she said: "I feel that there is a little niche in the moving picture industry that I can fill and I am going to try to. I am not at liberty to make an announcement, and I suppose I'll be killed to-night for doing so.

"I am going to try to inveigle Raymond Hitchcock to go into comedy with me so that we can do something along the old lines that Mr. Drew and I used to do."

The delegates declined to refer to the appropriate committee the resolution submitted by W. W. Whitson of California approving the action of the organization's officers in the uniform contract controversy with the Hays Organization and on motion of John Mannheimer of New York passed the resolution by acclamation.

EASTMAN SHOWS PROFIT OF $37,969 FOR 7 MONTHS

Faces Summer With Small Reserve But Quality of Pictures Is Maintained

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The four-million-dollar Eastman Theatre faces the summer show problem—the same kind of a problem most other theatres face this time of the year.

Although more than one million people have visited the Eastman Theatre since it was opened last September, figures just given out show that the quality of entertainment has been maintained on such a high scale that only a small reserve has been accumulated with which to face the summer months. The figures given out cover operations down to April 7th and include the entire concert season.

Up to and including the week beginning April 7th the attendance for all attractions has been 1,077,881. Of this number 56,547 attended the nineteen concerts, 26,568 the eight performances of grand opera and 994,766 the regular motion picture programs.

The series of concerts showed a loss of $9,875.26 and this despite the fact that many of them were sold out. The moderate scale of prices, however, and the expense incident to presenting these concerts in the proper atmosphere and settings, combined to wipe out any possible profit. Analyzing the receipts from the concerts and the number of people attending, it is found that, averaging the entire series, it cost the institution 17½ cents more for every person who attended than was collected. In other words, figuring only from the financial angle, and not taking into consideration lowness of original prices, each individual attending the concerts paid 17½ cents less than it actually cost to present them.

During the period from the opening of the theatre last September to the week beginning April 7th the net profit on the presentation of motion pictures was $37,969.35, which the experience of other theatres shows is a small reserve with which to face the summer months. The week of grand opera showed a profit of $4,044.47.

These figures are given solely that the Rochester public, to whom the institution is dedicated, may know just how it is faring financially. And they prove most strikingly that quality of entertainment comes before thought of profit. The small size of the surplus accumulated to date—a surplus that would be wiped out were any reserve fund set aside for depreciation on the building, shows how completely the revenue received has been turned back into the institution for the benefit of the public.

The terms of the gift of the theatre to the University of Rochester provide that any surplus from its operations shall be devoted to developing the musical interests of the city.

The figures contain other interesting information. They show, for instance, that it costs an average of $4,437 weekly to maintain the symphony orchestra which plays every afternoon and evening. Incidentally the entire revenue from the balcony seats defrays only 75 per cent. of the cost of the orchestra alone, and the balcony is heavily patronized.

In addition to the orchestra salaries, which will total $230,724 for the full year, the theatre will pay to other employees $140,866 or a total of $371,590 to people living in and making Rochester their home. Adding supplies to the salary budget, more than half a million dollars will be paid out during the first year of operation.

It is estimated that over 75 per cent. of the money taken in at the theatre remains in this city. One hundred and sixty-nine people are employed there. Many of the ushers are young women students, who are attending the Eastman School of Music and who find this a means of assisting themselves in obtaining a musical education.

"The figures tell the story pretty completely," said George Eastman, speaking for the Board of Trustees who operate the theatre for the University of Rochester.

"If we can get through the first year without an operating loss—and the figures suggest that possibility—we shall be satisfied. We have tried to present good programs—programs that would appeal to the public and the fact that more than a million people have visited the theatre since its opening would seem to indicate that our efforts have been appreciated.

"We are steadily improving our programs. We know that we can make them better both in context and in manner of presentation. We have completed arrangements which will give Rochester the choicest of the new screen productions close to their release dates so that we will be presenting them simultaneously with the leading New York theatres. With this arrangement in effect the Rochester public will be able to view the new pictures in advance of their presentation in most other cities.

"Naturally, we feel a little pride in the upbuilding of the theatre orchestra. Organized for this theatre it has grown and developed with it. Almost of symphonic proportions of itself it constitutes a splendid foundation for the new Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, whose inaugural concert was so cordially received a few weeks ago."

In building the Bedford Mrs. Youns did not neglect to put in stores and office room—extra income you know

MERE MAN MIGHT DRAW A LESSON FROM THIS LADY

Mrs. Youns Went Into a Run-Down House, Looked, Waited and Then Success

By BILLY LEYSER
Cleveland, O.—Mrs. L.

B. Youns' story is an interesting one—because she took what always looked like a flivver and made money with it. And a thing like that is always interesting. The fact that she is a woman makes it more interesting although Mrs. Youns doesn't want any gentleman to feel jealous of her.

About seven years ago Mrs. Youns became a member of the fast growing exhibitor family. Her business eye caught the Comique Theatre at Bedford, which lies midway between Akron and this city. It had a store front when she first saw it. You had a harder time getting onto the place than you would have finding your way into a vegetable store that has a habit of displaying its green goods in the entrance.

To her womanly ear the noise from a tin panny piano seemed like strains from Satan's fiery parlor. There was a 4 by 5 projection booth somewhere, so small you couldn't see it. Benches instead of chairs were provided. Patrons in those days were not so particular, not so accustomed to the good things the motion picture industry provides today.

At any rate, poor benches or fine seats, the Comique was the "photoplay palace" and everybody in the town—it had a population of 1000, went now and then. Patrons sometimes confessed that it was quite a test on human endurance to sit on a bench two hours. They confessed it to Mrs. Yourens and then she acted.

The receipts when she took it over were about $660 a year, about $55 a month. There wasn't much inspiration about the Comique, but Mrs. Yourens with an indomitable will and an ear close to the ground where she could hear the bad things patrons said began to fix it up and to take the utmost care in her bookings.

"I learned," she said, "that if you must suffer for a while with a poor theatre there's only one way out—to make up for the deficiency with good pictures and to get them I had to take great care with bookings. I found good pictures and I spent some money exploiting them right. The yearly earnings jumped to about $1800."

At the end of six years the Comique became profitable. Not a little success came to Mrs. Yourens through her listening to what real film salesmen told her about successful ideas they heard about elsewhere.

The six-year period, however, saw the finish of the Comique. Today, The Bedford, 600 seats, two projectors, a generator, small stage decorated with velour drapes, upholstered seats, shadow-box around screen and a stage which may be used for vaudeville. Instead of three nights a week the Bedford operates seven nights, and, stranger than all, clear nights are now as good as rainy nights.

The Comique represented an investment of about $1000. The Bedford cost $65,000. High pressure competition surrounds the Bedford—Cleveland theatres and nearby race tracks—but still it gets along nicely.

Like most other exhibitors Mrs. Yourens remembers the picture that made the most money for her. She says the claims made for that pet picture in the trade publications was true to the last word and she hooked it.

(The claims made by the producer of the pet picture referred to above were that the picture in question broke all records at a New York theatre and the advertiser wisely quoted the figures.—EDITOR.)

THIS HOUSE TO MAKE PLAY FOR FISHERMEN

Ketchikan, Alaska.—This city is to have a new theatre second to none on the coast. It will be owned by W. D. Gross, who recently spent a month in Seattle planning with his architect and equipment specialists. The new house will face on the bay where all the fishing fleet anchors, and brings a large additional population every summer. In order to let the fishermen know what attractions he is showing, Mr. Gross has ordered three electric signs; one being so arranged that it will shine out over the water.

Using Your Trade Paper—I. ADVERTISING INSERTS FOR YOUR ADVANCE BILLING

Beautiful Examples of Art Effectively Employed to Create Advance Interest

Dan Buss, who runs a small but paying theatre in North Tonawanda, N. Y., once told the writer that he got more than his money's worth out of a trade paper.

"I have had to economize to build up my house," Buss said, "and every short cut or money saver that I could possibly think of is used. Of course trade papers have their news and their editorials and I read them. But in their advertising pages and review and box office departments I guess I get more of real value than most other theatre owners.

"I think that good advance billing is one of the best means of building business, although some showmen will say that billing too far in advance will hold people back who are anxious to wait until a big picture comes along. But if every picture is given advance billing how can anyone be held back, I'd like to know.

"When my trade paper comes along every week I look through the advertising pages, get hold of a good looking insert on a picture I have booked—and they are some beautiful inserts—and use it either in the lobby or put it in a good store window. Now this is about as big an economy as one can imagine.

"My trade paper costs me $2 a year. Each advance display I have costs me almost nothing. What could be simpler or better and more to the point. It accomplishes just what I want and in addition its neat and usually the best kind of art work."

Like all good ideas Buss's plan can be expanded into one of the most economical forms of advertising. Take for instance the illustration on this page. Here an artist has drawn a layout for the uniform lobby frame. He has handlettered a card which is headed "The Advance Guide." Then he has inserted two other headings, "The Story and The Players" and "What Other Cities Think of This Picture."

Under the heading a page insert in black and white) the producing company who uses this type insert is always identified by its finely gotten up insert) is pasted into a border. It is pasted lightly so that each week the insert can be taken out and another inserted. Under "The Story and The Players" an illustrated review from Exhibitors Trade Review is inserted and under "What Other Cities Think Of It" ex-

Poor Men's Wives

Produced by Preferred Pictures, distributed by M. Laskans Corporation. By Frank Buss and Agnes E. Johnson. Directed by Cassius. Title by Eve Knott. Photographed by Harry Perry. Footage, 6000.

Love, loyalty, and honor are the themes of this picture. It is a story of a woman who is loved by two men, one of whom is a poor man. The woman is a beautiful girl who is loved by a rich man and a poor man. The rich man is a playboy who is in love with her, but she is in love with the poor man. The poor man is a hardworking man who is in love with her. The woman is a beautiful girl who is loved by two men, one of whom is a poor man. cerpts from Voice of the Box Office are inserted.

Here is a complete arrangement, all that the public wants to know. Each week a new line of data can be used and the only cost attached to this idea is the initial charge an artist makes for lettering the card.

The showman can use his own judgment in placing the layout thus made. Many theatres prefer to have their advance billing placed in a theatre so that it is seen by only those leaving the theatre. Sometimes they are just inside the main doorway; frequently in the back aisle or further. A prominent store window is, of course, ideal.

While inserts are best to use in the manner described there is no good reason why black and white or colored page ads cannot be used. Color, indeed, is a great help in any form of advertising. It is suggested, however that only advertising that contains the photographs of stars or scenes from the film be used.

Remember this is the age of pictures.

Sam Berman Witness at Hearing

SAYS OPERATORS ARE OVER-SOLD

Other New York Exhibitors Appear Before Trade Commission in Famous Hearing

New York.—At the resumed hearing before the Federal Trade Commission on the complaint against Famous Players, Benjamin Knobel, part owner of a chain of Bronx, N. Y. City theatres, occupied the witness stand on Monday, after a verbal tilt between counsel on both sides over the calling of S. R. Kent, Famous sales manager, from Los Angeles to New York to testify.

Knobel testified that his chain of seven theatres in the Bronx has used all Paramount's output as they had been compelled to do so in order to get any Paramount pictures. The witness testified that he had frequently endeavored to have some pictures cut from the list that he didn't think were good, but hadn't succeeded.

He had been contracted for "Enemies of Women" and "Little Old New York," he said, but the contracts were cancelled, because Goldwyn took over the Cosmopolitan output. Chas. Goldreyer, partner of Knobel, who took the stand said that "those are two pictures that we are going to get if they are released. This will be one time they won't get away with it."

Knobel admitted he had been guilty of "bicycling" or "switching" when a picture for one of his theatres didn't arrive and he ran a picture that he had already run at one of his other houses.

Knobel asserted that the exchange manager from whom he bought his Paramount pictures had "clocked" his theatre attendance, giving him the numbers of people who had attended several of his theatres on certain days when Knobel complained of high rentals, saying that his business was not good enough to justify the price asked.

At Tuesday's session Samuel I. Berman, secretary of the New York State M. P. T. O., was the star witness. He began as follows: "This is the only industry in the world where seconds sell for as much as firsts. The exhibitor buys the picture before it is produced. He is over sold. The producer listens to his publicity man until he actually believes that the picture is as wonderful as the publicity man says it is, and this over-enthusiasm is carried on down the line to the exchanges and the salesman, until when the picture is sold to the exhibitor he thinks it is so big that it will shove the walls out of his theatre with the big crowds."

Berman praised the provision in the equitable contract which would make it possible for the exhibitor to cancel his booking, pointing out that heretofore the exhibitor has been compelled to accept contracted pictures.

Berman stated that he had run Paramount pictures in his theatres since they were first made, but that he only runs a comparatively small portion of the Famous output at present. He said Famous treated him splendidly back in the days when he practically controlled the theatre situation in his neighborhood, but when a newer and bigger competition house went up nearby he wasn't given so much consideration.

Wm. A. Landau, who operates the Heights Theatre, and is financially interested in a chain of six which originally pooled their buying to obtain reduced rentals, testified that he had handled Paramount pictures until last year. He said that prohibitive rentals caused him to sever relations with Famous. He said when he attempted to buy from Metro, First National and other companies, they all seemed to know that he had been dickering with Famous and that he hadn't reached an agreement. Landau admitted that he would prefer to get Famous pictures, "not because they are the best pictures on the market, but because they have the most consistent program."

He saw S. R. Kent, he said, relative to his being oversold and an adjustment was made. He also complained to Kent that he hadn't been able to get any Paramount pictures, and admitted that Kent issued orders that the next group should be split so that Landau would not be slighted, as he had complained. It developed through questioning that the Majestic, one of the houses in the combine, had offered as much for the first 1922 group before joining the pool as was offered for all the houses in the pool after it was formed. Samuel J. Bock, associated with Landau who did the buying for the combine, offered $11,000 for the group and finally $15,000 after Buxbaum, had come down from $30,000 to $18,000. They couldn't get together, Landau testified, and the deal was off.

Bock testified that the pool was originally formed "to prevent being sandbagged by the exchanges. We finally decided to quit allowing ourselves to be hit on the heads all the time by the exchangemen, so we got together."

Among other witnesses were Hyman Gainsboro, owner of theatres at Flushing and Port Washington, L. I., Al H. Harston, who now operates the Regan and Dyckman, J. A. Bradbury, owner of the Olympia and Leo Brecher, operator of the Apollo, Douglass, Harlem, Odeon, Plaza and Roosevelt.

Gainsboro testified that he had lost money by being oversold, and that a number of specials which he had contracted for with Famous had been withdrawn without notice.

Harston said that his troubles with Famous had usually been untangled in some way. In former years, he stated, he had used 100% Paramount, but that he finally was unable to get first runs because "Loew got them" and he had to follow the latter.

Bradbury testified that the opening of Loew's 83rd St. house made a second run house of the Olympia, which he owns. He said that he has to split with another group of theatres in his neighborhood. Famous Players pictures are a bigger drawing power than the product of other companies, the witness said.

Leo Brecher stated that he had formerly shown the Famous product, but was doing without it this year. "Oh, yes, I am still negotiating with Famous," he replied in answer to a question.

Leo A. Ochs, director of the Associated Booking Corp., testified he had a conversation with Adolph Zukor just prior to the latter's departure for Europe in which he urged Zukor to do something to enable A. B. C. to get Paramount first runs. Zukor told Ochs that he left distribution entirely to S. R. Kent, but that upon his return he would look into the matter and would see Ochs about it. Ochs said he had not yet heard from Zukor, but expressed the opinion that the latter probably hadn't yet had time to do so.

Other witnesses were J. Arthur Hirsch, operator of two houses on upper Broadway, Harman Yaffa and Morris Bleendes.

METRO PURCHASES THREE STORIES

Viola Dana to Star in Two With An All Star Cast For Third

Los Angeles.—Metro Pictures Corporation purchased three new stories, "Held to Answer" by Peter Clarke McFarlane; "To Whom It May Concern" by Rita Weiman, and "The Spirit of the Road" by Kate Jordan. They will be placed in immediate production at their studios.

"Held to Answer" is a modern drama and will be the second of the Metro all-star specials of the coming season. The first special, "The Eagle's Feather," is now in the course of production.

"To Whom It May Concern" will be Viola Dana's second starring picture for the coming season. It is a mystery drama. The continuity is now being prepared by Rex Taylor.

"The Spirit of the Road" will also be for Miss Dana and is to follow directly she completes "To Whom It May Concern." Winifred Dunn will prepare the continuity.

In the course of production are two Louis B. Mayer presentations for Metro release, a Reginald Barker production, "The Master of Woman," and a Fred Niblo production, "Captain Applejack."

MABEL NORMAND HAS WELL BALANCED CAST

Los Angeles.—A supporting cast has been selected by Mack Sennett for his forthcoming comedy drama, "The Extra Girl," featuring Mabel Normand and now in production for distribution through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

Miss Normand is supported by a good group of players. The artists include Ralph Graves, who is cast in the male lead opposite Miss Normand; George Nichols, who plays the role of her father, and Anna Hernandez in the role of her mother. Vernon Dent and Charlotte Mineau are also prominently placed among the featured characters.

George Fitzmaurice Sails

To Confer with Author

New York.—Director George Fitzmaurice, who will produce Sir Hall Caine's "The Eternal City" in Italy for Samuel Goldwyn, sailed on May 26 on the Aquitania for London, where he will confer with the author before starting production. Accompanying him is Ouida Bergere, in private life Mrs. Fitzmaurice, who will write the screen version of this story. The conference of the author, director and scenarist, will, it is expected, result in securing a perfect screen version of the famous story.

TEN MILLIONS IN NEW THEATRES

Stanley Company's New Houses Show Faith in Motion Picture's Future

Philadelphia.—Announcement has been made by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, that through a deal consummated a mammoth theatre will be erected costing close to one million dollars at the Northeast corner of 6th and Market Streets, Camden, by that organization.

The new theatre, which will be ultra modern in every respect and seating 2500, will be known as the "Stanley Theatre of Camden." Plans are now being drawn for the new theatre which will occupy the entire space of the lot which has a frontage of 110 feet on Market Street and 160 feet on 6th Street.

With the acquisition of this plot and the announcement to build thereon at once, the Stanley Company will have four theatres in various sections of Camden. The Grand and Colonial are devoted to photoplays, while the Towers presents vaudeville in conjunction with photoplays. In the Fall the Towers will be operated with B. F. Keith vaudeville.

By the addition of this theatre another building is added to the program of building inaugurated by the Stanley Company this year and which is one of the most ambitious ever attempted by any organization and more vast than ever before attempted in the field of amusement.

In Philadelphia, work is being pushed on the new Elrac Theatre which is to occupy the site of the famous old Bingham House at 11th and Market Streets. It will cost more than $5,000,000.

In the Logan section of Philadelphia, there is another big theatre in course of construction at a cost of $2,000,000, while in West Philadelphia work on the Penn Theatre in the southwest section is being pushed, the cost to be $1,000,000. And in Atlantic City, another mammoth theatre will be erected at a cost of $2,000,000. BROADWAY SHOWING FOR IF WINTER COMES

New York.—With the completion of the William Fox screen version of "If Winter Comes," A. S. M. Hutchinson's literary success, negotiations virtually have been completed for a large Broadway theatre in which this photoplay will make its first appearance. The strength of this story, backed by the character drawing and descriptive ability of the British author, has resulted in the production by Harry Millarde, the director, of what is expected to be one of the most remarkable motion pictures in recent years.

The screen version of this story is said to have adhered to the original story.

SUMMER RELEASES BEING ARRANGED

Associated Exhibitors Has More Than the Customary Run of Features

New York.—An extensive program of summer releases is now being arranged by Associated Exhibitors. The issue during the hot months of more than the customary number of features has been made possible by the acquisition of several pictures.

Thus "Stormy Seas," a Continental production directed by J. P. McGowan, and starring McGowan and Helen Holmes, whose release has been set for July 1, is a five-reeler in which sea scenes have an important place, and through which the vacation atmosphere prevails. Especially adapted to summer showings also are "The Man Between," set for release July 15, and "Harbor Lights," to make its appearance July 29.

Associated Exhibitors recommends these pictures to first run exhibitors. "The Man Between" is a Finis Fox production, while "Harbor Lights" is a Tom Terriss production in which Tom Moore is the star.

Associated gives an inkling that the summer program as now announced may prove incomplete, as there is a possibility that other attractions, likewise appropriate to the summer weather, also may be set for release before the opening of the autumn season. The company is preparing a list of fall attractions.

The authenticity of these jewels is attested by consular letters from the late Emperor Nicholas' representatives in London and Paris.

W. R. Hearst Speaks on Big Merger

ATLANTIC CITY SALES CONVENTION

"Jimmy" Grainger, William R. Hearst and Edward Bowes Speak

Atlantic City, N. J.—What promises to be the most important economic development for the distribution of motion pictures marked the opening of the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Sales Convention, in an address by William Randolph Hearst at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, Atlantic City, on Tuesday.

Mr. Hearst cemented the recent relationship of two of the biggest photoplay producing organizations of the world, whereby the feature films of the Goldwyn studios and Cosmopolitan productions are merged in a unit exhibiting organization to be known as Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan.

The combined production of Goldwyn, with whom is associated the Distinctive Pictures and Cosmopolitan, means that the new releasing company will have a sufficient volume of important photoplays to allow for a change of program each week.

Mr. Hearst, in his address, emphasized that the public has been "played down to" long enough.

"I have heard a good deal in the publishing business," he said, "about the necessity of writing down to the public taste and I have never found that necessity to exist. The difficulty is to write up to it and to make anything that is good enough to satisfy the public standards.

"I have even heard in the moving picture business the difference drawn between a good picture and a good box office picture. I don't think there is any such difference; the best picture is the best box office picture.

"I believe in this business, as in the publishing business, that the best produced pictures are all we should devote our attention to. I have not been in the business so many years but I have seen the quality of production increase continuously and it is always the best picture which succeeds the most. We have seen the smaller pictures, the cheaper pictures, drop by the wayside and only the big pictures, the strong pictures, remain.

"Therefore during the coming year and until the public's ways change, and personally I do not think they ever will change in this respect, we are going to make almost entirely, and I really think quite entirely, pictures of the class of 'When Knighthood Was in Flower.'

"Into 'Little Old New York' we even put a little more effort than 'Knighthood' and I think it is a better picture."

Arthur Brisbane, who with Joseph A. Moore, accompanied Mr. Hearst to Atlantic City, made a short talk on motion pictures. The speakers were introduced by James R. Grainger, Vice President and General Manager in charge of sales of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan.

The Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan sales convention was called to order by "Jimmy" Grainger at the Ritz Carlton Hotel, Monday morning at 9:30. Every Goldwyn Resident and District Manager was present.

Mr. Grainger opened the convention with an address regarding Goldwyn's strides during the past year and acquainted the convention with the fact that the last quarter year has been the most profitable in the history of the company. Business reports by the various exchange executives revealed the fact that conditions are improving, business booming and that the outlook for picture theatre attendance during the summer is much better than was evidenced in the last two seasons at the same time of year.

Edward Bowes delivered an address to the convention and discussed the studio activities of the Goldwyn Company, the Cosmopolitan organization and Distinctive Pictures. Mr. Bowes said that not only had Goldwyn gathered together the greatest assets in stories, players and directors, but also that the presence of June Mathis as Editorial Director fortified the company immeasurably. As an exhibitor, Mr. Bowes said that he had found that giving substantial prices for big pictures had paid him. "The Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan product," he said, "will be such as to warrant unusual exploitation and presentation in the finest theatres of the country."

UNIQUE SALE MADE BY DENVER SALES FORCE

Denver.—The distinction of selling salesmen, instead of selling buyers, goes to the local branch of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation regarding a recent contract made with the United Commercial Travelers for showing, the early part of June, of "Down to the Sea in Ships" at the Broadway Theatre. It is seldom that a sales organization can over step the bounds and sell their product direct to a salesmen organization.

According to word received from this branch the Travelers Organization have taken the picture and the theatre on a straight rental basis. They are planning extensive exploitation and advertising and are handling the matter entirely themselves.

The Broadway is a legitimate house playing the best road shows in this section of the country. The appearance of this feature at this house under the auspices of the United Commercial Travelers will be first run in this territory.

H. O. Bartels, local manager and his able crew of salesmen have been responsible for this contract.

FOX PRODUCTION ON WEST COAST

Many Screen Players Engaged For New Season's Program

Los Angeles.—Production has increased in leaps and bounds achieving a record for pictures in the making. This increase has placed a bigger demand on popular players and it is discovered there aren't enough well known artists to go around. This situation, however, has not affected the production activities of William Fox.

Such players as Barbara La Marr, Doris May, Billie Dove, Mabel Julienne Scott, Irene Rich, June Elvidge, Eva Novak, Peggy Shaw, Alan Hale, Richard Tucker, Bessie Love, Ruth Clifford, Martha Mansfield, Alma Tell, Ernest Truex and others soon will be seen in pictures released under the Fox banner.

Ernest Truex, who for the past two years has been starring in William Anthony McGuire's play, "Six Cylinder Love" on Broadway and on the road, is one of the most recent of the newcomers.

Mabel Julienne Scott is leading lady for William Russell. Irene Rich makes her initial Fox debut in "Snowdrift," starring Charles Jones. June Elvidge has a prominent role in "The Eleventh Hour," in which Shirley Mason and Charles Jones are co-starred.

Eva Novak is in a William Russell picture, "Boston Blackie." Alan Hale and Richard Tucker are among the "heavies." Bessie Love plays a prominent role in "St. Elmo," while Ruth Clifford supports Charles Young in "Hell's Hole," and Peggy Shaw is taking care of the heroine part in Dustin Farnum's "The Grail."

New York State M. P. T. O. Work with Buffalo Board

Buffalo.—While Howard J. Smith, president of the local unit of the national association, has refused to co-operate with the Film Board of Trade in his arbitration work, the exhibitors affiliated with O'Reilly state organization will assist the exchange men in every way and J. H. Michael, chairman of the executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, Inc., has written the following letter to Sydney Samson, president of the Film Board:

"I have received your communication to co-operate with an Arbitration Board to be formed according to the rules and uniform contract adopted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, Inc.

"In reply, wish to state that inasmuch as the uniform contract and the rules governing the Arbitration Board have been adopted by the above mentioned State organization, I shall be very glad to act on such Arbitration Board. The present membership of our committee to start this work will consist of J. A. Schuchert of the Colonial and Columbia Theatres and Mr. George Hanny of the Capitol and Maxine Theatres. Alternates will be announced at the next regular meeting."

Mr. Samson has appointed the following exchange men to sit on the arbitration committee: Allan S. Moritz of Famous-Players-Lasky; Harry Bernstein of Universal and Mr. Samson. Alternates are Bob Murphy of Renown, Tom Brady of Goldwyn and Henry Kahn of Metro.

FLORIDA CENSOR BILL HITS SNAG

Better Films Movement Demonstrates Its Value in New Fight

Jacksonville, Fla.—Following quickly the introduction of a censorship bill in the Florida legislature by Dr. Taylor, a Methodist minister and a member of the House of Representatives, the exhibitors of Florida were granted a special hearing before the judiciary committee of the House last week.

As a result of the hearing, the bill was reported upon unfavorably by the committee and placed at the foot of the calendar.

Turner Jones, Public Relations representative of Southern Enterprises, C. E. Daffin of Tallahassee, Mayor John Alsop of Jacksonville; W. L. Whitehead of the Republic Theatre, Jacksonville, and two Tallahassee ministers—Dr. Stephens, Baptist, and Dr. Holloway, Episcopal—appeared against the proposed measure and Dr. Taylor stood alone in its defense.

It is a significant fact that a similar hearing two years ago found fifteen women and seven ministers bitterly fighting for a censorship bill in Florida and that the only two ministers present last Saturday were staunchly in favor of the industry. Furthermore, a large number of prominent women signified a willingness to appear in the fight to oppose this legislation.

Two Important Theatre Deals Closed

GODSOL BUYS BIG CHICAGO THEATRE

Loew and West Coast Companies In a Sharing Deal For California

Chicago.—The site on which the Roosevelt theatre stands has been purchased by Frank J. Godsol of the Goldwyn Company. The price reported is $1,800,000. The deal is a personal one on the part of Godsol. His company owns a 50% interest in Ascher Brothers theatre.

The Roosevelt is one of the most costly houses here, put up when costs were at peak. It will continue to be operated by Balaban and Katz, who leased it from Ascher Bros. some time ago. Godsol, as the owner of the property, will receive about $260,000 a year for the lease of it and will also share in the profits. The building is subject to a mortgage of $1,388,000.

Los Angeles.—One of the most important theatre deals concluded here has been closed between West Coast Theatres, Inc., and Marcus Loew whereby the former organization will take over Loew's State here and Loew's Warfield in San Francisco under a 25-year lease.

The lease involves $7,500,000. The agreement provides that West Coast Theatres, Inc., are to have charge of actual operation of the theatres under direct supervision of the Loew office. The houses will play First National and Metro pictures in the future.

The West Coast chain now totals 116 houses. This new, important transaction was closed by Joseph M. Schenck, who is interested in the Lesser-Gore-Ramish activities. Marcus Loew is expected here shortly.

The Loew New York office states that a separate company had been formed to cover the transaction; that the Loew organization had not sold the theatres or the property and that the new arrangement gave West Coast Theatres, Inc., a 50 per cent. operating interest.

TEN SOPHISTICATES ACCLAIM FOX FEATURE

New York.—Ten of Broadway's educators, writers and critics were assembled recently in the private projection room of William Fox and presented with a preview of the screen version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's "If Winter Comes."

The result of this showing disclosed a unanimous acclaim for the adaptation, the direction and general handling of the story and brought a wholesome and unbiased praise to the producer.

The eight men and two women were in accord in their encomium for the excellent portrayal of "Mark Sabre," the hero of the novel, by Percy Marmont, the deft character delineation of "Nona" by Ann Forrest and the impetuously sneering "Mabel" by Margaret Fielding.

In the words of one of the spokesmen of the little assemblage: "If Winter Comes" as we have seen it will probably prove itself in the minds of the public to be the greatest picture ever thrown on the screen—at least, one of the finest of the decade.

"I have never seen a better adaptation of a novel. The director and scenario writer have preserved every bit of fine dramatic workmanship offered by the novelist, and the transfer of the picture in the writer's mind to the celluloid has been accomplished, in my opinion, without losing any of its charm and meaning. In fact, it has been enhanced by the addition of the assistance of these clever craftsmen."

ALL-STAR CAST FOR "THE STREET SINGER"

Los Angeles.—While Mary Pickford has not announced any "all-star cast" for her forthcoming photoplay feature, "The Street Singer," now well in the making for United Artists release early in the autumn, casual inspection of the list of players puts this production in the genuine all-star cast group.

Miss Pickford heads the list as Rosita, a little street singer of Toledo, Spain. Then comes Holbrook Blinn, playing opposite star and producer, in the role of the King. Irene Rich as the Queen has her first costume portrayal in this picture. The fourth important character is George Walsh as Don Diego, Count of Alcala, and ranks as Rosita's rescuer.

A second feminine role of consequence is that of Rosita's mother, assigned to Mme. Mathilde Comont, a veteran of the speaking stage. The part of Rosita's father is taken by George Perioliat, who in twelve years of screen work has given to the screen some of its best character portrayals. Snitz Edwards and Bert Sprotte appear as jailers, while Charles Belcher is cast as the Prime Minister. Mme. De Bodamere has an important character role.

Three children do excellent bits in this film. They are Phillippe De Lacey and Donald McAlpin, and Doreen Turner, who appear as Rosita's brothers and sisters.

"Enemies of Women" in Sixth Week on Broadway

New York.—"Enemies of Women," Cosmopolitan's spectacular production of the Blasco Ibanez novel of the same name, is playing its sixth week on Broadway this week at the Rialto Theatre.

The picture, which features a cast including Alma Rubens, Lionel Barrymore, Pedro de Cordoba, Gareth Hughes, Gladys Hulette, William H. Thompson, William Collier, Jr., began its Broadway career at the Central Theatre, where it played four weeks and was then moved to the Rivoli. After a successful run at the Rivoli last week it was taken into the Rialto as the attraction for the week beginning May 20.

POPULARITY CONTEST WON BY RAMON NAVARRO

Minneapolis.—Leading by a majority of more than two thousand votes Ramon Navarro won over Rodolph Valentino as the favorite lover of the screen in a popularity contest conducted by the Garrick Theatre recently. At the Garrick Theatre the contest was concurrent with the showing of Rex Ingram's Metro production "Where the Pavement Ends."

THREE UNIVERSAL FEATURES IN JUNE

Jack Hoxie, Herbert Rawlinson and Gladys Walton Stars of Summertime Attractions

New York.—Universal announces three feature productions for the month of June to inaugurate a program of strong summertime attractions. The June releases will be "Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande," starring Jack Hoxie; "Railroaded," starring Herbert Rawlinson; and "Sawdust," starring Gladys Walton. All are five reels.

"Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande," announced for June 4, will introduce Jack Hoxie as a Universal star. He is a favorite in westerns, in which he appeared for other companies. Hoxie's first Universal is an adaptation of a magazine story of the same name by Stephens Chalmers. It was directed by George E. Marshall and has a cast comprised of Emmett King, Elinor Field, Fred C. Jones, William A. Steele and Bob McKenzie. The play concerns an idealistic cow-boy who follows Don Quixote's lead and tries to right the wrongs of others.

June 11th will bring Herbert Rawlinson in "Railroaded," adapted from "Richard," a magazine story by Margaret Bryant. Edmund Mortimer directed it and in the cast are David Torrence, Alfred Fisher, Esther Ralston, Lionel Belmore and Mike Donlin. The story is laid in the homes of English aristocracy and centers about a man who makes a "come-back" after a prison term.

"Sawdust," Gladys Walton's newest vehicle, will be released June 25th. It is a circus story written by Courtney Ryley Cooper. Ever since her triumph in "Pink Tights" there have been demands for another Walton-Circus story and this is Universal's response to the flood of requests.

Short Subjects Rulings

Kansas City, Mo.—The following rulings have been outlined by the Film Board of Trade: "The exhibitor who buys regularly released short subjects, sold on a weekly basis, is expected to play in accordance with contract terms, and if set out, must be paid for. The contracts for serials are not subject to cancellation, nor are contracts for specific features, unless they contain a cancellation clause. All misunderstandings will be referred to a joint board of arbitration, consisting of three members of the Film Board of Trade and three exhibitors.

"Haunted Valley" Has Thrilling Start

New Patheserial Starring Ruth Roland Tale of Big Business Staged Among Rugged Desert Backgrounds

Pathé's "Haunted Valley," a serial in fifteen episodes, is a regular picture. There are no two ways about that, if one may judge from the first three chapters. As Edgar O. Brooks, serial sales manager, stated in a short and impromptu talk after the trade showing, the company has aimed to make a production that would have interest for adults as well as children. Certainly it has succeeded. The seven reels shown—three in the first episode—carry an interest, a bite, paralleling that of a first-class melodrama.

The subject is finely photographed and effectively staged among rugged backgrounds—in other words, there is an absence of the exaggerated, or as ordinarily impossible of execution. The latter, we may except the automobile wreck, but the look is present even though we are sure it is a dummy that rolls down the hill with the overturned machine.

It is a good picture. It releases the best of the chosen man v villain. Sun the m

"Haunted Valley"

Thrilling Action, Interesting Story and Capable Performance in Pathe Serial Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Everything that makes for the successful thriller is included in Pathe's new serial, "Haunted Valley." The first three episodes show not only an abundance of exciting action but the progress of an unusually interesting story.

Ruth Roland, as the head and brains of a construction company in the West, has a course of intelligent action which she follows most capably. Her performance is always attractive because of this alert mental and physical quality. Jack Daugherty is likable and forceful in the leading masculine role and Larry Steers is good as the gentleman villain.

The conflict is more one of brains than muscle. There is no lack of physical action but it is more the result of carefully laid plans than impulsive demonstrations just for the sake of thrills. The laying of the plot is in itself highly entertaining. It involves the possession of a valley with hidden wealth, which appears to be haunted because of ingenious electrical devices with which the heroine's enemies try to terrify her. There is considerable novelty in the material which is worked out in detail. Panoramic shots at the beginning reveal beautiful exteriors as the seat of action.

"Bound to the Enemy," the first episode, gives the serial a splendid start. It ends with an effective bit of suspense which Roland facing a revolver with Ruth killed one of her aids. The second, "The Adventure in the Valley," solves the mystery of the valley, revealing a stream of water underneath which, as farm land. In the final scene, heroine and Craig, an engineer who has befriended her, fall into the rushing waters underground. Third, "Imperilled at Sea," shows the girl being deceived into boarding a foreign-bound vessel in the hopes of visiting a power house belonging to her firm. She is saved by grabbing hold of the rope-ladder on the hydroplane in which Craig has followed.

"Haunted Valley"—Ruth Roland Serials, Inc.—Pathe
Type of production.....15 episode serial
There are thrills aplenty in Ruth Roland's latest serial, "Haunted Valley," and the story while not plausible at all times has been built with the idea of keeping the audience keenly interested always, and giving them a thrill every little while. Of the three episodes that were reviewed, each one built up to a very exciting climax, and ended with a thrill; the first episode ending with a mystery-murder, the second with the hero and heroine falling into an underground whirlpool; and the third with the girl climbing from a speeding motor boat to an airplane overhead by means of a rope ladder.

The locale of the story is in the West, and the girl is the president of a company of construction engineers. There is the usual intrigue and counter-plot incident to all serials, but the interest in this one is really sustained and serial lovers will be well pleased with the results.

There is a large supporting cast which includes many names well-known to serial fans, among them being Jack Daugherty, as the hero, Larry Steers, Eulalie Jenson, William Ryno, Francis Ford and Edouard Trebeal. George Marshall has directed from the story and scenario by Frank Leon Smith.

"Haunted Valley"
(Fifteen Episode Serial—Pathe)
RUTH ROLAND, whose serial escapades in the past have thrilled wherever they have been shown, seems to outdo herself in the effort of daring if the first three reels in the matter are an indication of what might be expected to follow. Truly Ruth Roland is a marvel for daring and never has more swift action been crowded into one of her past series of exploits.

"Haunted Valley" simply teems with excitement. It is a gigantic western and along with the swift action, abounds in the usual amount of romance seen in a Western. Just how the star manages to really escape with a whole skin from some of the daring stunts she accomplishes is hard to imagine.

Mystery, intrigue and suspense, as usual are the predominant characteristics of this serial. It is a story of business—of a gigantic engineering project with Ruth Roland as its dominating spirit. The project is about to smash because of the villainy of a presumed friend. From him Ruth Ranger (Ruth Roland) borrows one million dollars, for which she gives as security Haunted Valley, which to her seems entirely inadequate. Along with this security goes her promise to wed unless she meets her obligation at the time specified. Every obstacle, of course, is placed in her way to prevent payment of the loan.

It's a massive melodrama of the New West, where Big Business is reclaiming the desert; where frontier days rub shoulders with the present. Each episode has its thrills and its climaxes. It's a fifteen week goldmine.

AUTHORS SOLICIT VIEWS OF FILM MEN

"Practical Ideas" Sought by Committee for International Congress of Picture Arts

New York.—Invitations soliciting their viewpoints on the motion picture and offer suggestions for its improvement as an art have been sent to all the leading producers, editors of trade magazines and critics of leading papers by the committee on arrangements for the International Congress on Motion Picture Arts, to be held on June 7 and 8. The purpose of this, according to Rex Beach, chairman of the committee of the Authors' League, which is in charge of the arrangements, is to prevent the discussions from getting too far away from the practical into the academic.

In addition to Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who are actively co-operating in arranging for the Congress, acceptances have been received from the following who are associated with the industry: Joseph Urban of International Film Service Co., Inc., Rufus Steele, vice president of the Kenma Corporation; Pearl Keating, editor, scenario department, Warner Brothers; Marcus Loew of the Metro Pictures Corporation; N. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer Associated First National Pictures, Inc.; J. R. Bray, president Bray Productions, Inc.; Eugene Chrystal, Eastman Kodak Company; Thomas Dixon, Big Pictures, Inc.

Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Columbia and other Universities of similar standing have been invited to contribute their best thought to the plans for the artistic development of motion pictures. Librarians of public and private institutions, editors of leading American newspapers, editors of literary reviews, artists, dramatists and foremost citizens in our public life are also being invited to this congress which will open with a general discussion of the topic, "The place of the motion picture in American life and culture."

One of the immediate results of the sending out of invitations to the conference is the evidence of wide-spread interest in the project. Expressions have been received by Mr. Beach from Israel Zangwill, English novelist and dramatist, who states that "the screen has not yet found its artist"; Walter Prichard Eaton, critic and author; Edna Ferber, author of novels, plays and short stories; George B. Mallon, editor; Parker Butler, president of the Authors' League of America, is to preside at the first day's session and Irvin S. Cobb is to be toastmaster at the luncheon which is to follow. Otto H. Kahn is to be toastmaster at a dinner on the closing night.

Shipman Gets Fights

New York City.—Ernest Shipman announces that he has acquired for exclusive distribution in Canada the pictures of the fights staged at the Yankee Stadium on May 12th, for the benefit of the Free Milk

CHICAGO THEATRE A HEAVY TAX PAYER

Chicago.—According to recent figures the Chicago, Balaban & Katz, pays about $5000 a week war tax, or at least paid the amount during March, to the Government. It is said that this figure shows the gross weekly at the big house to be about $47,000. On the same basis of calculating it is said, the Chicago last year netted a profit around $658,000.

ROBIN HOOD HAS SHOWING AT MIKADO'S THEATRE

Tokio.—For the first time in the history of the Japanese empire a motion picture has been shown at the Imperial theatre, which is owned by the royal family and recognized as the most famous playhouse in the Orient.

The picture was "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," a United Artists release, and represented the introduction of this sensational Douglas Fairbanks feature to the populace in the Land of the Rising Sun.

In order to present this it was necessary to cancel the engagement of a famous Japanese drama which had been booked for the time given over to the Fairbanks film. This arrangement was effected through the good graces of Baron Okura. The musical score for the picture was rendered by the Imperial orchestra, the largest in all the Orient.

Fund, in which Willard conquered Johnson and Firpo knocked out McAuliffe. The pictures will be released in the Dominion through Shipman's own exchanges, which he established last year for the handling of his personally-produced Canadian subjects. In the past, fight films have had a difficult row to hoe at the hands of Canadian censor-boards, particularly in Ontario—permission to show any exhibition of such a nature having been almost repeatedly refused. In this instance, however, it is confidently expected that the censor-boards will let down the bars and sanction the general public showing of the film.

STORY BOUGHT FOR LUNT AND PALMERI

New York.—Distinctive Pictures Corporation has purchased the screen rights to "Second Youth," a novel by Allan Updegraff, and will put it into immediate production. Alfred Lunt and Mimi Palmeri, will play the leading roles. Albert Parker has been engaged to direct.

This is the first novel of the author, and deals with the sentimental and philosophical adventures of a business man who discovers that romance is alive in the world. The story is a farce and will give Alfred Lunt an opportunity to display the rare talent as a comedian which made him famous on the legitimate stage.

This feature will be released through the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Corporation. It will follow immediately after the release of "The Green Goddess."

Associated Exhibitors Sets Stormy Seas Release Date

New York.—Associated Exhibitors has set for release July 1 the first of the five J. P. McGowan features which Continental Productions, Inc., of Miami, Fla., recently contracted with that organization to distribute. This is "Stormy Seas," a drama by Anthony W. Donaldson.

This feature which is in five reels, was directed by Mr. McGowan.

New Independent

Los Angeles.—E. H. Martin Productions is the latest Independent Producing and Distributing organization to be formed here. The president of the new company is E. H. Martin, formerly of Webster City, Iowa; and who at one time controlled all the independent telephone companies in the northern part of that state. The new company will produce and distribute a series of eight five-reel dramas to be known as the "Thrill-Speed-Dramas."

LITERARY WORKS BOUGHT BY LASKY

To Consult Public Opinion Before Production of New Novel

New York.—Just before leaving for California Jesse L. Lasky made an announcement of recent purchases of literary material for production in Paramount pictures. The list submitted gives some indication of the high type of photoplay productions which will be available to exhibitors next winter.

"We have just acquired for production 'West of the Water Tower,' one of the most vital books of the past several years. The anonymous author, whose name of course I cannot reveal, has promised to co-operate with me in telling his story on the screen. Having in mind, however, the differences of opinion as to what is proper and improper to show on the screen, we're going to devote two or three months to the most careful study of public opinion as to how this novel should be handled. Without giving offense to any considerable section of the public, and without coming to blows with the censors, we want to depict what is undeniably a strong story, because it points a valuable moral.

"To that end I have asked Mr. Will Hays to confer with editors and men and women of public affairs, through his committee on public relations, in an effort to sound out the public mind toward picturizing a story of this kind.

"What we consider will be the prize picture of next year will be 'Big Brother,' by Rex Beach, which Allan Dwan will direct at the Long Island studio. It seems to me that in 'Big Brother,' Mr. Beach has written the most powerful novel of his career and it is especially suitable to the screen.

"It is my pleasure to announce that after months devoted to the study of photoplay writing, Vicente Blaseo Ibanez has written 'Argentine Love,' his first original story for the screen. He has told a most dramatic story against a background of Argentina where many of the scenes of 'The Four Horsemen' were laid.

"In America also we have won to the screen a distinguished man of letters, Mr. Julian Street, who will work with us in adapting his novel, 'Rita Coventry,' to the needs of William de Mille, who will direct it, following his forthcoming production, 'Mortal Love.'

"Cecil B. DeMille is planning to follow his current production of 'The Ten Commandments' with 'Triumph' by May Edgington, which only recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post."

"Boston Blackie" Completed

Los Angeles.—"Boston Blackie," the William Fox picture starring William Russell, has been completed under the direction of Scott Dunlap.

TWO THOUSAND PETITION FOR THEATRE

Minneapolis.—George Crisch has a lot of friends in this town. He has wanted to build a motion picture house in the suburbs but the City Council couldn't see it that way. But he has friends.

Two thousand persons signed a petition asking the City Council to grant him a license. The church element is opposing his project on the ground it is too close to the church edifice.

Vitagraph to Release Twenty-Four

NEW PRODUCTIONS FOR FALL SEASON

Albert E. Smith Announces Twenty-four Specials for Fall

New York City.—Vitagraph announces twenty-four special productions by J. Stuart Blackton, Whitman Bennett, David Smith, Jess Robbins and other directors and eight comedies based on the Sam Hellman stories in the Saturday Evening Post, in addition to its regular productions.

President Albert E. Smith, who has been at the Hollywood studios for the past two months supervising special productions, has returned to the general offices in this city. Commodore Blackton, who recently returned as Vice-President and as a producer, has several large special pictures under consideration, and it was especially to confer with him that Mr. Smith is now in the East. Mr. Smith said that as soon as arrangements were completed, which would be in the immediate future, Commodore Blackton would begin his first new production, although it has not yet been decided whether the actual filming would be done in the East or Hollywood studios.

Mr. Smith returned here sincerely and enthusiastically optimistic over the motion picture outlook.

"I am sure that we are in for a very prosperous season," said Mr. Smith. "I mean the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor. I believe that the prosperity, such as we had in 1918, when everybody had money and went to the motion picture theatres three or four times a week, is returning. It is in anticipation of this condition that we are greatly increasing our offerings, not only of our own manufacture, but those of other producers for which we will distribute."

In explaining Vitagraph's increased activities which will first bear fruit with the new season in the Fall, Mr. Smith said that it definitely had been decided to produce at least twenty-four special productions. These will include six pictures made under the personal supervision of Commodore Blackton, six special productions from the Whitman Bennett studios at Yonkers, six productions by David Smith at the Hollywood studios and six other special productions with specially engaged directors. Of the last named President Smith personally will direct one from beginning to end, his first activity in this line for nearly four years, although during that period he has collaborated with various directors on special occasions.

In addition to these special productions Vitagraph has just signed contracts with the Chester International Pictures Company to furnish the series of eight two-reel comedies by Sam Hellman. This contract provides for the distribution of the Sam Hellman comedies in Canada and England also. Work already has been begun on these pictures at Los Angeles, the first being based on a golf story called "A Twosome at Tuara." Vitagraph also will distribute its Larry Semon comedies, the one-reel Urban Popular Classics as well as other units.

Of its immediate productions Mr. Smith said that "The Alibi," with Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis, Percy Marmont and Joseph Kilgour in the leading roles, was completed at the Hollywood studios just before he left for the East and that the prints are being rushed to the Brooklyn laboratories.

The first Bennett production will be called "Loyal Lives" and revolves around the life of a postman and his son.

Before Mr. Smith left the Pacific coast work already had been started on a story of the West under the tentative title of "Pioneer Days." The time of the story is in the late 60's, just before the completion of the first transcontinental railroad and is based on a famous stage play by Edwin Arden and Arden R. Smith.

Immediately following the completion of "Pioneer Days" active work will begin on "The Man from Brodny's," based on George Barr McCutcheon's well known novel.

"SOUL OF THE BEAST" PRAISED BY CRITICS

New York.—"Soul of the Beast," a Metro picture presented by Thomas H. Ince, was presented at the Rivoli Theatre, during the week of May 20 in elaborate style, and was highly praised by New York newspaper critics.

For the first time in its history the Rialto orchestra played a "guest engagement" at this theatre during the week this feature was shown. The Rivoli orchestra, in turn, filled a similar engagement at the Rialto.

The prologue at the Rivoli consisted of "Du Barry," a Ben Ali Haggin Tableaux, presented by Ned Wayburn. There was a special musical accompaniment for the picture. The picture proved a decided novelty for Broadway, which laughed at, was thrilled by and applauded Oscar the trained elephant, the star of the production.

New York newspaper critics generally praised it and one of them, E. V. Durling, of the Globe, said, "the Rivoli has housed no more entertaining and generally appealing picture during the present season."

Manager Puts on Clever Show

New York.—Through the courtesy of the Clifton Production "Down to the Sea in W. W. Hodkinson Corporation the Elmer Ships," was shown at the regular monthly meeting of the Holy Name Society of the Queen of All Saints Parish. The program was staged by George M. Dillon, Manager of the local Exchange.

John Russell, author, war correspondent and explorer has joined the Fox scenario department on the West Coast.

Arthur H. Jacobs has promoted Bunny Dull and Lou Borzage who become production manager and assistant director respectively of Frank Borzage' First National productions.

Alfred Hustwick, title writer since 1919 with the Paramount West Coast studio, has just been signed to a long-term contract to continue in that capacity.

PRODUCER MAKES WORTHY PROPOSAL

Joseph M. Schenck Recommends Permanent Archives for Records

Los Angeles.—In recommendations to the Motion Picture Producers' Association, Joseph M. Schenck, producer of Norma and Constance Talmadge features for First National, suggests the establishment of permanent archives in which would be kept records of the results of research made by motion picture producers during the preparation for the filming of historical pictures.

"I am willing to turn over to this proposed museum all the data collected by my staff concerning the period of Charles IX of France," says Mr. Schenck. "And that includes architectural, costume, and historical 'properties' and a wealth of other accessories including a specially chosen library of 1100 volumes of the period which were consulted for the filming of 'Ashes of Vengeance,' Norma Talmadge's latest photoplay."

"It would be a splendid and altruistic thing if all the data concerning other period plays such as 'Robin Hood,' 'Intolerance,' and many other plays which I could mention, were turned over to this museum."

Daylight Licked

Jamestown, N. Y.—Daylight saving lost at the election here by the overwhelming vote of 2105 to 535. The heavy adverse vote is attributed to several causes, including the unanimity of women against daylight saving, the opposition of the school authorities, who were all against it and the public statement of A. N. Broadhead, president of the Jamestown Street Railway company that if daylight time was voted he would not put on early cars to get the factory help to work. It is understood that Mr. Broadhead's opposition was based not so much on a belief that the cars would not pay as on the belief that it would be a hardship to mothers to get the children off to school on daylight saving time.

Thomas Meighan on Location

New York.—Thomas Meighan and a company of players have gone to New London, Conn., where exterior scenes will be made for "Homeward Bound," a Paramount picture adapted by Jack Cunningham from Peter B. Kyne's sea story. "The Light to Leeward," under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Schulberg Buys "Maytime"

New York.—B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, has purchased from the Messrs. Shubert the screen rights to Rida Johnson Young's play, "Maytime," which will be released next season through the Al Lichtman Corporation.

Pearce Film's Deal

New Orleans.—The whole interest of Pearce Films, Inc., formerly owned by J. Eugene Pearce, has been purchased by Mr. J. M. Louis, and is now known as Louis Films, Inc.

Tom Mix Production Ready

Los Angeles.—Tom Mix, has completed a William Fox production "Stepping Fast," in which he is starred.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG HAS COLORFUL ROLE

Los Angeles.—Clara Kimball Young is at work on a picture that is said to offer her the most colorful role she has yet portrayed for the screen. The production is called "In Old Spain" and was adapted from the novel "La Rubia" by H. W. Roberts. Briefly the locale of the story is in Spain, of the period when bull-fighting, intrigue and romance were at their height and Spain was, because of its isolation, the most romance-inspiring nation in the world.

Miss Young has surrounded herself with an able cast, which includes Lewis Dayton, Louise Bates Mortimer, Albert Roscoe, Lillian Adrian, Wedgewood Nowell, Arthur Hull, and Robert Caunterio. The whole is under the direction of Thomas Heffron. The adaptation was completed by Frank Beresford. It is a Harry Garson production distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation.

MAE MURRAY IN NEW YORK FOR CONFERENCE

New York.—Mae Murray and Robert Z. Leonard, her husband and director, came to town prepared to spend a crowded month after a winter of picture-making in California. They brought with them the completed print of Miss Murray's newest picture, "The French Doll."

The Metro-Tiffany star has an intensive schedule to be followed during her stay. First in importance are conferences with executives of Metro Pictures Corporation, distributors of her photoplays, and with Tiffany Productions, under whose auspices they are produced; then the star and director will busy themselves with fall producing plans, which call for the launching of two new photoplays for Metro.

"Unseeing Eyes" Company Returns from Location

New York.—Director E. H. Griffith, Lionel Barrymore, Seena Owen and the other members of the Cosmopolitan company producing "Unseeing Eyes," the title under which the screen adaptation of Arthur Stringer's story "Snowblind" will be offered, returned from location around Banff and Lake Louise, Canada, last week, claiming a record in scaling the Canadian Rockies in mid-winter; said to be the first time this feat has been achieved.

Scenes were filmed more than 10,000 feet above sea level from a plane piloted by Charles Sherman Jones, chief test pilot of the Curtiss Company and Captain William G. Sharpe, who served with the British Army air forces during the war. Ten days were spent in making these flying scenes.

VIRGINIA PEARSON RETURNS TO SCREEN

Hollywood.—Virginia Pearson is returning to the screen after an absence of two years in which she starred in vaudeville.

She has signed a contract with Arthur H. Jacobs, to play the leading feminine role in the next Frank Borzage production for Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Mrs. Meehan Completes Trip

Los Angeles.—Coming direct from Palestine Mrs. Florence Meehan completed her long journey. Mrs. Meehan was sent to Egypt, Palestine, Syria and the Orient to get jewels, silks, tapestries and authentic properties for the film version of "The Ten Commandments," which will be Cecil B. deMille's next Paramount picture.

FEATURE TITLE USED FOR CHURCH SERMON

Pittsburgh, Pa.—What is considered by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation as undeniable proof of the educational and entertaining value of the Elmer Clifton production "Down to the Sea in Ships," is shown in a recent letter received by Rowland and Clark, owners of the State Theatre, which recently played this feature. This letter was sent by the Rev. Edwin J. Van Etten of the Calvary church, Shady avenue, and reads as follows:

"I see with great interest that you are having that fine picture 'Down to the Sea in Ships' this week. By a curious chance I am preaching on those words as a text, Psalm 107:23 next Sunday night in Calvary church. The service is to be broadcasted by KDKA wireless to sailors and seamen. We are going to sing hymns requested by sailors on the great Lakes and on vessels in the Coastwise trade. Letters have come from keepers of lighthouses and from various islands including Bermuda.

"It is surely interesting that Pittsburgh, an inland city, will be the first to send a special service for those at sea. I thought you might be interested in this in connection with your wonderful picture this week."

NAME SIX NEW WARNER FEATURES

*Lenore Ulric, Hope Hampton, Wes Barry and Johnny
Hines to Star*

Los Angeles.—The first six productions of the eighteen to be produced by the Warner Brothers for the coming season were announced last week by Harry M. Warner. All will be ready for release early this Fall; three are now being produced while preparations are under way for the filming of the others.

The six include "The Gold Diggers," a David Belasco production; "Cornered," the play by Zelda Sears and Dodson Mitchell; "Lucretia Lombard," the Kathleen Norris novel being produced by Harry Rapf; "The Printer's Devil," featuring Wesley Barry; "Little Johnny Jones," featuring Johnny Hines by arrangement with C. C. Burr; and "Tiger Rose," the Belasco play starring Lenore Ulric.

"Little Johnny Jones" is rapidly nearing completion at the Warner Coast studios under the direction of Arthur Rosson. It is an adaptation by Raymond Schroek of George M. Cohan's stage success.

"The Printer's Devil" is being directed by William Beaudine, from the story and scenario written by Julien Josephson.

"The Gold Diggers," in which Hope Hampton will be featured, is an adaptation by Grant Carpenter of the Belasco stage play written by Avery Hopwood. The full cast has not yet been selected. Harry Beaumont, director of the current Warner release, "Main Street," has been assigned the direction of the Belasco production.

TRI-STONE COMEDIES GAINING POPULARITY

New York.—In an announcement in which he ascribes much of their success to the careful work in re-editing the productions and supplying an up-to-date line of posters and accessories, Oscar A. Price, President of Tri-Stone Pictures, Inc., reports that the New Edition Keystone Comedies being issued by that concern, have won a place among the most popular short subjects at first run houses.

Asher's Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee is quoted as a typical example of the first runs which have booked the comedies. After the run of "Dough and Dynamite," a Chaplin revival, Manager Ralph Wettstein, of Asher's Merrill, booked "Caught in a Cabaret," the second Chaplin in the series. In reporting to Tri-Stone on "Dough and Dynamite" Mr. Wettstein wrote: "I wish to state we had many compliments on the one we played and the audience seemed to enjoy it very much."

"ADHERE TO ORIGINAL TEXT" IS FISHER SLOGAN

Los Angeles.—Victor B. Fisher, supervising director of "Youth Triumphant," the initial offering of a series of Fisher productions, announces a policy of close adaptation of popular novels.

"We believe a close adherence to well known novels will meet with the hearty approval of both exhibitors and public," said Mr. Fisher.

"We also believe that advertising to this effect in connection with 'Youth Triumphant' and other Fisher Productions will bring additional money to the box-office for it is our opinion that the public has become considerably annoyed at picturizations of stories they cannot recognize when they see them on the screen."

EIGHT BURR FEATURES FOR COMING SEASON

New York.—C. C. Burr announces that he will make eight features for release the coming season.

In an interview this week Mr. Burr reviewed the progress made by Mastodon Films Inc., of which he is the head and made public the above announcement.

"Looking backward for the moment," said Mr. Burr, "it must be perfectly obvious to those who have given the matter any thought, that during the several months just passed the independent producer and the independent exchanges have come into their own. Never before have the independents registered such unqualified hits.

"It is a matter of record," said Mr. Burr, "that independent productions have been life savers in a great many instances lately. Go over the list of box office winners of the past few months," continued Mr. Burr, "and you will be surprised to learn the great number of successful independent productions. It is a record to be proud of and one that I am confident will be much greater when the returns are in for the season to come."

BELASCO LEAVES JUNE 4 FOR WARNER STUDIO

New York.—David Belasco will leave on June 4 for the Warner Brothers' Coast studios to personally supervise the making of a number of features which will be known as David Belasco productions. Mr. Belasco will be accompanied by Lenore Ulric, who will be starred by the Warners in the film version of her famous stage success, "Tiger Rose."

This will mark the first time in the notable career of the theatrical producer that he becomes definitely identified with the industry.

COHN FINDS "SPIRIT OF READINESS" IN CHICAGO

"Never before have I seen the exhibitors' spirit of readiness to co-operate with the independents so marked as it is now," said Jack Cohn, of C. B. C., in a message from Chicago. "Many of them said they registered their biggest receipts from various independent pictures and everywhere there is a tendency to admit they are going to keep their eyes on the independents this year and leave a goodly amount of open dates for them, even among the owners of the biggest theatres in the biggest cities. Some of them—a few—don't believe, yet, that we're to be relied on. They are ready to be swayed either way—but they ARE interested. We've got to keep up the good work," concludes Mr. Cohn in his exhortation to his fellow independents to realize their opportunity and make the most of it.

POSTPONE FILMING "BARBARA WORTH"

*Principal to Hold Wright Novel Till Fall—Start Work on
"When a Man's a Man"*

Los Angeles.—Filming of "The Winning of Barbara Worth" by Principal Pictures Corporation has been postponed until the Fall. Sol Lesser, president of this organization, announces that the research work and the extensive preparations and plans necessary to properly film this Harold Bell Wright novel, have made this expedient.

"When a Man's a Man" has been chosen to take the place of "Barbara Worth" at this time. This is another of the Wright novels. Florence Vidor and John Bowers will play the leading roles in the screen version of the latter story. Edward Cline will direct.

Work on the adaptation is being rushed at the Principal Pictures studio on the Coast, and the cast is being assembled. The company will leave shortly for Arizona, the locale in which most of the Wright stories is laid.

The author has telegraphed Mr. Lesser that he is prepared to co-operate in the production. Mr. Wright will temporarily desert his Tucson ranch and take up headquarters at Prescott, Arizona.

WEST COMPLETES CAST FOR "UNKNOWN PURPLE"

Los Angeles.—M. H. Hoffman, head of the Truart organization, states that the cast for the screen version of "The Unknown Purple" is practically complete. Roland West who wrote the original stage play will also direct the picture.

The players who will be seen in "The Unknown Purple" are Henry B. Walthall, Alice Lake, Ethel Gray Terry, Helen Ferguson, Brinsley Shaw, Stuart Holmes, Richard Wayne, Frank Currier and Johnny Arthur. It is expected that work on "The Unknown Purple" will be started soon.

Charles Murray-Polly Moran Re-Issue for June First

New York.—H. E. Aitken, vice president and general manager Tri-Stone Pictures, Inc., announces that the fourth of the series of New Edition Keystone Comedies will be issued June 1st. "Those College Girls" is the title and Charles Murray and Polly Moran are the featured players. In some parts of the country it has been shown under the title of "His Bitter Half."

New Burr Feature Previewed

New York.—"Three O'clock in the Morning," the latest C. C. Burr production, was previewed by the producer last Tuesday evening at the Gotham Theatre, New York. "Three O'clock in the Morning" is an original story especially written for the screen.

Hatton to Star for Sanford

Los Angeles.—Sanford Productions announce the closing of negotiations for the production and release of eight five-reel westerns featuring Richard (Dick) Hatton, to be sold on the State Rights market.

Short Subjects and Serials

SHORT SUBJECTS FOR FIRST RUNS

New Stories, Better Directors and Broader Plans Is Schedule

New York.—“In preparation for a new short reel policy of ‘better, not bigger’ short products, a complete re-arrangement of the one and two-reel production schedule has transpired at the Universal studios, new stars have been engaged, new stories acquired, better directors signed up and broader plans laid down,” says a report from Universal this week. The new policy was inaugurated immediately following the edict of Carl Laemmle that “Universal Short Subjects must be of such high quality that every one of them will be suitable for showing in any first run house.”

The serial schedule contemplates eight “super-serials” starring William Dunnean, Edith Johnson, Jack Mower, Eileen Sedgwick, Fred Thomson and Ann Little.

The new Universal two-reel Westerns will be made by Jack Dougherty and Pete Morrison, with William Craft, Frank Grandon and Jay Marehant directing; while two reel comedies will star Buddy Messinger, Jack Earle, Billy Engle, Jack Cooper and the Gorham Follies Beauties. Neely Edwards and Bert Roach each will have his own comedy company.

The “Third Leather Pushers” series starring Reginald Denny and made by Harry Pollard from the H. C. Witwer stories, “The Gumps,” being adapted from the Sidney Smith newspaper cartoon with Joe Murphy and Fay Tincher as “Andy and Min;” “The Information Kid” series of comedy dramas of the turf, adapted from the Gerald Beaumont short stories, complete the schedule as now arranged.

Turpin Star of First Pathe-Sennett

New York.—Ben Turpin in “Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening” will inaugurate Pathe’s series of Mack Sennett 2-reel comedies. The Pathe-Sennett contract calls for 13 2-reelers and not less than six nor more than eight others featuring Turpin.

Tells Tale Without Titles

New York.—A comedy drama without subtitles, “Mixed Trails,” is the unique offering on the Educational program for June release.

“Mixed Trails” is one of the Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales. It was photographed in the desert country near the old basin of the Des Schutes River in Oregon and tells the tale of two refugees who combine to outwit the sheriff and his deputy.

“Our Gang” Series Extended

New York.—Pathe has announced the renewal of its contract with Hal Roach which assures an uninterrupted supply of the “Our Gang” two-reel comedies for this and next season, releases, one every four weeks.

Maud Toombs Changes Desks

Mrs. Maud Robinson Toombs has resigned from her position as director of publicity for Century Comedies. David Bader, West Coast representative for the Stern Brothers, will take her place. Mrs. Toombs, who has handled Baby Peggy’s publicity from her start to the present time, when she has been made a Universal-Jewel star, will continue in her position as assistant to Paul Gulick, director of publicity for Universal, and will also do special articles.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

Back Stage, Pathe

This is one of Our Gang two-reel Hal Roach Comedies that is nothing short of riotous when it comes to getting the laughs. The bunch of clever kids construct a sight seeing bus that is manipulated by mule and child power through the streets. The manager of a traveling show finds himself short handed and engages the services of the gang to help him out back stage. During the strong man’s big scene the tiniest member of the crew, Little Farina, walks off the stage with the thousand pound weight and comes back for the piano. When the magician appears the gang also give away some of the tricks of trade and a bottle of “hot stuff” almost causes a panic. We think this comedy will make a sure hit wherever shown.

The Oregon Trail, Universal

Chapter number fifteen called “Santa Fe” finds the hero going in search of the two girls. His horse falls through the ice and both are nearly lost when they are rescued. Jean then finds the girls in a cabin with Lewis and Coulier. He binds these men together and takes the girls away with him, borrowing Coulier’s horse. Coulier realizes that some important papers are concealed in the saddle-bag and starts out to recover them. Jean has found the papers hidden there and is showing them to McLoughlin when they are surprised by the two woodsmen and Coulier forces Jean to hand over the documents. In a flash Jean snatches them back and is off again, with the two men after him. Art Acord is playing the hero in this picture and Louise Lorraine takes the part of the young girl.

Plum Crazy, Educational

“Plum Crazy” offers Bobby Vernon in the role of a young Swede recently arrived in the U. S. A. and trying hard to live up to a reputation he has gained through mistaken identity. Jarl knows nothing about plumbing, but just the same he makes a try and the jets of water and flame which result when he hooks up a water pipe to a gas line and the gas to the water provide some highly amusing fare. The picture hits a good pace and there is no let down in the speed of the action once Jarl makes the acquaintance of Olie Margerine, the biggest of “big Swedes.” The plot shows Bobby as Jarl striving mightily to keep up the deception created when he is mistaken for Olie by Lars Hanson, plumber, and the father of a bit of blond loveliness named Olga. Everything seems favorable for Jarl and Olga until Olie Margerine gets away from the immigration officials and then it is a chase all over the town with Jarl and Olga saying “yes” at intervals here and there as they and the minister flee before the infuriated Olie. Vernon is supported by Thomas O’Brien as Olie Margerine; Ward Caulfield as Lars Hanson; Duane Thompson as Olga Hanson.

Haunted Valley, Pathe

The fifth episode of the Ruth Roland Serial, showing the conspiracy against the heroine getting thicker and thicker. After a desperate struggle the hero is left to drown in a reservoir and the heroine makes a spectacular plunge to save him. Thrills and excitement run high through this number and should leave the audience eager for the following chapter.

Crystal Jewels, Fox

This Fox Educational shows how New York City gets its water supply. There are many interesting shots that show how it is brought down from the mountains and through huge tunnels to the reservoir. It shows a view of the little town of Gilboa that had to be sacrificed in order to bring the work to completion. Also some laboratory scenes showing an analysis and the purification of the water before it reaches the public.

Pathe Review No. 22

“Ceilings of the World” is the first number on this reel. It shows magnificent views of mountain peaks and cloud effects. The next section is devoted to the comparison of pie-making at home and in the large bakeries. There are also some splendid shots of wild life and the Pathecolor shows views in Yosemite Park.

Under Two Jags, Pathe

A Hal Roach Comedy featuring Stan Laurel that is a burlesque on “Under Two Flags.” The picture will be mostly appreciated by those who have seen the original picture or read the story. However, there is still enough fun derived from the film on its own merits to get the laughs, during the one reel.

The Mummy, Fox

A two-reel Sunshine Comedy that uses a bit of the present day Egyptian influence to a rather amusing degree. There are some original situations and a lot of slapstick, some of which are funny and others that might be funny to an audience that is not overly exacting in regards to their demands for new material.

Spooks, Pathe

An Aesop Film Fable showing Henry Cat and Farmer Al Falfa delving into the mysteries of the spirit world. The film has some good humor and will not offend even the followers of this belief.

Their Love Grew Cold, Educational

This is an amusing adventure of Bobby Bumps, the Earl Hurd cartoon character whose pranks should be familiar to a wide circle of screen fans. The reel, as usual, combines real action with animated drawings and shows a juvenile attempt at picture producing. Bobby Bumps is invited in to play the role of cupid, a situation from which some fairly diverting moments are derived.

The Fight for a Mine, Universal

This two-reeler of the Tales of the Old West series carries plenty of action and should go well in houses where melodrama appeals. Roy Stewart is starred in this production and his name should help to pull in the crowds.

World—There appears to be nothing theatrical about the makeup of the views, yet to us they seem to be more stirring than anything shown in any other theatre in town. American—The photography is excellent, the scenery beautiful, the procedure is picturesque and the animals screen enthusiastically. Times—This film is a remarkable piece of work, and the pictures of giraffes, zebras and other animals taken with six-inch and twelve-inch lenses, fill the screen like a close-up. This remarkable film, taken at the risk of the lives of the man and woman who carried their cameras through many miles of a country little known, is one we do not hesitate to say “go and see.” Journal—The pictures are about the most informative of their nature ever shown. Eve. World—Take it all in all, it's very good entertainment. Sun—Have the thrill of the genuine, the big punch in this case being that several times you know the hero and the heroine are in real danger. Globe—Is little more than a good travel picture, and not in the same class as some of the other Martin Johnson offerings.

World—It seems to us the First National has a picture play here which is well up among the best. We had no idea such an entertaining picture story could be made of it. Herald—There is plenty of good, old fashioned punch in “The Girl of the Golden West.” Times—This picture also suffers from too much direction and too little characterization. Mail—Many of the play's thrilling moments are preserved in the picture. Eve. World—We look upon “The Girl of the Golden West” as a picture we would hate to have missed, and we're glad we saw it. Sun—This rattling old melodrama of the West has been “movieized” quite capably from Belasco's play and stirs the pulses as much as ever.

Spawn of the Desert

Arrow Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, W. C. Tuttle. Director, Lewis King. Running Time, Fifty-Five Minutes

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Duke Steele William Fairbanks
"Luck" Sled Florence Gilbert
Silver Sled Dempsey Tablor
Sam Le Saint Al Hart

While passing over a desert trail Duke Steele, soldier of fortune, makes the acquaintance of Sam Le Saint. The latter is a species of hermit to whom an atmosphere of mystery attaches, but he becomes fast friends with Duke and the latter learns the story of his life. This is to the effect that many years ago a certain man wrecked his home life, since when the hermit has given all his time seeking his enemy, with the intention of wreaking vengeance. Later Duke reaches a town which is practically ruled over by a gambler named Silver Sled. This man has a daughter known as "Luck" Sled, with whom Duke falls in love. Duke is disconcerted to learn that Sled is the villain for whom his hermit friend is looking, but when Sam Le Saint finally kills Sled, it transpires that Le Saint is "Luck's" real father and all ends well for the lovers.

This is an average Western picture which furnishes fair entertainment. It is the kind of feature which always interests that by no means small number of screen patrons him in every detail and he succeeds thoroughly in emphasizing its thrilling and emotional phases. Florence Gilbert figures as an attractive, winsome heroine, Dempsey Tablor makes Silver Sled appear as an artistically repulsive scoundrel and Al Hart is a convincing hermit of the sandy wastes. The picture is rich in remarkably well photographed exteriors and superior lighting effects. Its exploitation values lie chiefly in the boosting of William Fairbanks as a favorite exponent of border roles and the film's appeal as a fast-moving melodrama of the West.

The Girl of the Golden West

First National Photoplay in Six Parts. Adapted by Adelaide Heilbron from David Belasco's Stage Play. Director, Edwin Carewe. Running Time, Seventy-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Ramerrez J. Warren Kerrigan
The Girl Sylvia Breamer
Jack Rance Russell Simpson
Nina Micheltorena Rosemary Theby
The Squaw Minnie Prevost
Nick Jed Prouty
Antonio Cecil Holland
Ashby Wilfred Lucas

In the Gold Days of '49 Ramerrez, bandit chief, plans to rob the Polka Saloon at Cloudy Mountain Camp. He visits the place to find it is kept by a girl whom he had helped across a stream some time before. They are mutually attracted, Ramerrez averts the holdup but incurs the enmity of Sheriff Jack Rance, square gambler, who is in love with The Girl. Ramerrez visits The Girl in her cabin home, a snow storm comes which forces him to remain all night. Nina Micheltorena, dancing girl, in a jealous rage goes to the sheriff and exposes Ramerrez's identity. Rance and his posse visit the cabin. The Girl conceals her guest but Rance informs her that he is a road agent. The posse leaves. The Girl denounces Ramerrez, who goes out into the night. Rance in ambush fires a shot and Ramerrez staggers back into the cabin wounded. The Girl hides him in a loft. Rance demands his prey, is convinced by The Girl that he is mistaken in concluding that anyone entered her cabin and is about to leave, when a drop of blood from above falls upon his hand. Rance then forces the wounded man to descend. The Girl offers to gamble with the cards for the man she loves. If she loses, Rance wins her and takes the prisoner. If she wins, Ramerrez goes free. The Girl proves victor in the poker contest. Rance goes away. Nina stirs up the Vigilantes and Ramerrez, after a desperate ride is captured. To The Girl in the Polka Nina brings the news that her lover has been lynched. But Rance and his men arrive and she learns that the sheriff having told the crowd of the upshot of his poker game with The Girl, Ramerrez was set free and awaits her at her cabin. The Girl and her lover leave for the East.

Some fourteen years have elapsed since Blanche Bates electrified Broadway by her triumphal impersonation of The Girl in the Belasco masterpiece of the gold-rush period. It now reappears in screen guise with Sylvia Breamer in the leading role, skillfully directed by Edwin Carewe, making its old-time emotional appeal, thrilling the on-lookers with its sweeping melodramatic power, its artistic charms enhanced a thousand-fold by a wealth of scenic grandeur.

For "The Girl of The Golden West" is essentially one of those plays destined to expose stage limitations as contrasted with the silver sheet when it comes to a question of providing adequate atmosphere. Not even the magical hand of Belasco could supply in "the legitimate" those colorful backgrounds of mountain, forest and glen as does the camera when setting forth this heart-stirring tale of The Girl who gambles for her bandit lover's life with the latter's grim but loyal rival. All the wonders of California's glorious skies, frowning crag, lovely valleys and glittering streams fit before the eye, while in this Paradise of nature a story of elemental passions, love, self-sacrifice and revenge nobly resigned, speeds on to a magnificent climax.

There is no pause in the action, one exciting situation swirls rapidly into the next, thrills come like machine-gun bullets, but undoubtedly the most intensive episode is that in which the blood dripping from the loft in which the wounded Ramerrez lies concealed betrays his presence to Jack Rance and leads to the game in which The Girl stakes herself for the outlaw's freedom. It is in this scene that Miss Breamer touches the apex of her dramatic career and proves herself worthy of the Blanche Bates tradition, although all through the picture she acts with splendid fire, force and natural charm. What might be termed an almost nerve-racking "twist" is given the plot in the finale, when Nina brings the false news of Ramerrez's lynching, for as the spectator has just seen the gallant bandit under a tree with the noose around his throat and Rance apparently rejoicing in the proceedings, it seems as though Fate has actually decided against the lovers.

demanding a steady supply of films dealing with life free and unrestrained out in "the wide open spaces," plenty of shooting, hard riding and love romance of a stereotyped faithful brand, in a word—the regulation "Westerner." That the plot possesses no particular amount of original thought matters not a whit, for the action moves at a merry clip, the melodramatic urge holds sway throughout and small theatre audiences will undoubtedly follow the adventurous wanderings of Duke Steel with undiluted satisfaction.

A strong point in the story's favor is that its continuity has been admirably well maintained, the situations merge smoothly, there is no attempt at padding and director Lewis King is responsible for putting an amazing amount of dash and go into the main incidents, such as the wooing of "Luck" Sled by the hero, the affray in the gambling house and the slaying of Silver Sled by his relentless pursuer. Here and there a flash of timely comedy brightens up the course of events and a bully climax is attained.

William Fairbanks puts all his usual vim and athletic energy into the part of Duke Steele. It is the sort of role which suits

J. Warren Kerrigan plays the part of Ramerrez with just the right suggestion of devil-may-care courage, mingled with regret for his past and new-born tenderness, needed to paint that reckless gentleman in the most alluring colors. Russell Simpson is a strong, masterful Jack Rance, a fine type of the "square" gambler of the period whose word was as good as a bond, and Rosemary Theby, in the role of Nina, a creature of panther-like grace, dangerous beauty and unrestrained malice, smiling and defiant even in the hour of bitter defeat—a truly realistic bit of character work. The support is excellent, the costumes of the period faithfully reproduced and the production as a whole a sterling box office attraction and lasting credit to director Carewe and his talented cast of players.

For exploitation purposes refer to the fact that the great popularity of the play led David Belasco to write a book from the script which went through many editions, also that the Italian composer, Puccini, later turned it into an opera in which Caruso, John McCormick and other famous singers appeared with tremendous success.

Temporary Marriage

Principal Pictures Corporation Photoplay in Seven Parts. Author, Gilbert Pattern. Director, Lambert Hillyer. Running Time, Eighty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Robert Belmar Kenneth Harlan
Hazel Manners Mildred Davis
Mrs. Hugh Manners Myrtle Steadman
Hugh Manners Tully Marshall
Olga Kazanoff Maude George
Preston Duwayne Stuart Holmes
Mrs. Hugh Manners, middle-aged society woman, is discontented with her life and determines to get a divorce from her husband, a successful lawyer. Preston Duwayne, adventurer, conspires with his mistress, Olga Kazanoff, to swindle the pleasure-loving Mrs. Manners, whom he has fascinated. Hazel Manners, her daughter, with whom Robert Belmar is in love, arrives unexpectedly from boarding school while a wild party given by her mother to celebrate the coming divorce is in progress. Her mother is annoyed by the daughter's presence. In the course of time Hazel and Robert quarrel over Duwayne's attentions to the young girl. Various complications ensue, Duwayne is shot in his apartments and Robert assumes the guilt to shield his fiancée, who was present. It finally develops that Olga Kazanoff is the slayer. The Manners are reunited and Robert wins Hazel.

A well directed and cleverly acted picture—"Temporary Marriage"—slips into high speed right from the start and retains its suspensive human appeal up to a realistic climax. It is mighty good domestic drama of a kind calculated to catch and hold the fancy of a large percentage of movie goers, dealing as it does with marital relations badly shaken by the folly of a wife old enough to know better, but handicapped by a desire for a life of pleasure and the promptings of a spirit of unrest, as a result of which she and her daughter become involved in dire scandal. The story is convincing, because it will appear to most on-lookers that it is the sort of thing which might have happened to people they know, perhaps to themselves; for the woman of forty frantically endeavoring to live her youth over again is a pretty common type in all classes of society, to say nothing of the many masculine examples of similar tendency.

However, the husband in this case is guiltless of trying to hit up a fast pace, but the wife assuredly makes up for his lack of jazzy ambition and comes very close to paying a severe penalty in the end. The daughter's love story is neatly interwoven with that of the mother's mad career and a fine culminating touch is supplied when the tragedy of Duwayne's death by his mistress' hand is brought about in the presence of Mrs. and Hazel Manners. It is worthy of note that the identity of the assassin is very skilfully concealed until the last; also that the usual dreary court scene so familiar to screen devotees is in this instance handled with such rare intelligence that it stands out as one of the most enthralling episodes of the tale.

Myrtle Steadman has never appeared to better advantage than in the role of Mrs.

Manners, interpreting as she does the wilful moods and futile fancies of that extremely impressionable lady with keen artistry. Tully Marshall is immensely effective as the abused but loyal husband, Mildred Davis is a fascinating Hazel, Maude George fills the adventuress part of Olga capably and the work of Kenneth Harlan as Robert Belmar, as well as that of Stuart Holmes in the villain role, is excellent. Interiors and exteriors are beautifully photographed and the lighting throughout of the best quality. The feature's best exploitation angles will be found in the title and drawing powers of its talented cast.

Youthful Cheaters

A Film Guild production distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Story by Townsend Martin. Directed by Frank Tuttle.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Edmund MacDonald William Calhoun
Ted MacDonald Glenn Hunter
Lois Brooke Martha Mansfield
Mrs. H. Clifton Brooke Marie Burke
Marie Choisuil Nona Marden
Dexter French Dwight Wiman
Lois Brooke, a blase society bud, visits a sailing vessel lying in Long Island Harbor and there meets Ted MacDonald, a good-looking youth who interests her. The boy's father is owner and commander of the "Hope", on which he and Ted travel to South Sea islands and do works of mercy among the fever-stricken natives. While Lois is aboard, a quarantine is declared and by the time of its expiration she and Ted are engaged. Tad leaves the ship with Lois, the father proceeding to the South Seas. A visitor in Lois' home, Tad soon becomes a devotee of Jazz, cocktails and the idle life. He loves Lois passionately and follows her over the high road of pleasure and frivolity. But when things reach a pass where a break between them seems imminent, Tad's father returns, refuses to take his son's word that he will not return to his work aboard the "Hope" and so saves the boy and Lois from complete disaster. Lois learns that the life she has been leading as a society bud in a set of youthful wasters and pleasure-seekers is a certain road to unhappiness and also that she has come near to killing every fine, noble instinct possessed of her sweetheart.

The story tells of "super flappers" and a hardy, sea-faring youth who comes near to destruction through his life on Long Island, amidst the jazz, cocktails and gambols of a set of "moderns." Glenn Hunter, last seen on the screen in "Second Fiddle" is cast as young Tad MacDonald, who has been leading the unselfish life as a worker among the cholera victims of the South Sea islands and deserts such a noble and useful career to follow his love, Lois Brooke, a society bud.

The play sets out to show the destructive forces of jazz and the craving of the poor little rich children for pleasure, speed, sensationalism, alcohol and so many of the other very smart vices. Into all this glamor comes a young man of fine impulses and tastes, but his love for Lois is sufficient to make him accept and devote himself to the kind of life she fancies. There is a villain, who deceives a girl and then sets out to capture Lois, who has a lot of money. However, his plotting is not very "puny" and the story falls back on "character" for its interest.

There are some good performances, three of them to be exact. Mr. Hunter is satisfactory as Tad, and Martha Mansfield does well as Lois, the Flapper Queen. William Calhoun's performance as Edmund MacDonald, Tad's father, is perhaps the most distinguished in the picture, for all that it is not a large part.

"Youthful Cheaters" offers many gay scenes—society affairs, jazz and cocktail parties and all that sort of thing. There are several striking settings and averagely good photography.

Mary decides to go to Hollywood to make a name for herself in the movies. Upon arrival she mistakes Bryant Washburn for a cab driver and has him take her to the hotel. Here he introduces her to some of the picture folks. Mary later meets another girl who has not yet reached fame and Creighton Hale, Mary is striving to send money back home to her brother who needs an operation. She applies in vain at all of the studios and is finally given a place as "atmosphere." She writes home, giving them the impression that she is making a great success but in reality she is seen one day by one of the town's young men waiting on a table in a cafe. He goes back and spreads the news. Mary's big chance comes when a leading lady is taken ill and the producers call upon Mary to fill in her place as a double. While on location near her home town she goes over to see her people and proves that she is really a movie actress and is able to buy anything she wants for her mother and brother.

This picture should easily get the crowds if properly exploited. In it there are intimate glimpses of numerous movie stars, their homes and their haunts. In short, it is in itself just like an honest-to-goodness trip to Hollywood. We guess the patrons will be thoroughly satisfied with this picture for the above reasons, if no other, and therefore the plot of the story is really inconsequential. There has been interwoven a bit of comedy and also a romantic element is supplied by bringing Creighton Hale and the girl together on the screen.

Anita Stewart bows graciously from her town car, Douglas McLean obligingly gets Mary into the studio and here, during her wanderings, Mary gets to see some of the other actors. In the little cafe Mary sees Zasu Pitts, Rosemary Theby, Louise Fazenda and Wanda Hawley. Later she meets Barbara La Marr and Johnnie Walker, David Butler, Herb Rawlinson and numerous others. Such is life in Hollywood. Your patrons will like this film.

The Lonely Road

First National Photoplay in Six Parts.
 Author, Charles Logue. Scenario by Lois Zellner. Director, Victor Schert-zinger. Cameraman, Joseph Brotherton.
 Running Time, Seventy Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Betty AustinKatherine MacDonald
 Warren Wade Orville Caldwell
 Lelia Meade Kathleen Kirkham
 Martha True Eugenie Besserer
 Dr. Devereaux William Conklin
 Uncle Billy Austin James Neill
 Stewart Bartley Frank Leigh
 Hiram Wade Charles French
 Betty Austin marries Warren Wade and settles down in a small town, while her friend, Lelia Mead becomes a successful business woman in a big city.
 Trouble develops between Betty and her husband because he clings to the old notion that a wife should depend altogether upon her spouse. She joins Lelia, meets Dr. Devereaux, Warren arrives and creates a scene, but Betty finally returns home. Six years elapse, Warren has never granted Betty's wish for financial independence. They have a son, who is crippled by an accident, Betty takes some of Warren's money and runs away with the child to Dr. Devereaux.
 An operation saves the child but Warren comes, mis-understands and attacks Devereaux. When matters are explained Warren begs Betty's forgiveness, realizing his folly. They recommence married life on a new basis.

The plot of "The Lonely Road" pivots upon the problem of whether a wife should be financially independent of her husband.
 As the said problem has worn threadbare in the service of fiction, stage and screen it is evident that no small directorial skill is required in the re-shaping of it into a picture providing entertaining stuff for the average wise movie fan, and considerable credit is due Victor Schertzinger for what he has achieved in this line. Not that the film ranks as a first grade attraction—the familiar plot is too heavy a handicap to admit of such a distinction—but because, even with its lack of originality, the director has turned the story into pretty fair entertainment after all.

Miss MacDonald has appeared in many better features but in none has her acknowledged beauty been displayed to finer advantage, nor do we remember any in which the emotional talent of the star has exercised such sympathetic sway over an audience as in the scene where Dr. Devereaux saves the life of Betty's little boy. This is, in fact, the big situation of "The Lonely Road" and, coming as it does toward the close, winds up matters very satisfactorily.
 The fight between the physician and the utterly mistaken husband and the latter's remorse when he discovers that he has been making an exceedingly perfect ass of himself—these incidents are alive with dramatic force and natural appeal.

Undoubtedly the ladies as a rule will find that this picture points a sagacious moral and it should surely win feminine audiences.
 The star is well supported, the photography excellent, with many handsome interiors, and the lighting distinct. Miss MacDonald's beautiful gowns, of which she wears an alluring variety in the character of Betty, can be played up in exploiting the film, the title of which also holds a certain advertising value. The picture should score best in neighborhoods where the star's name is a strong drawing factor. G. T. P.

Boston Blackie

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Boston Blackie William Russell
 Mary Carter Eva Novak
 Warden Benton Frank Brownlee
 Danny Carter Otto Matieson
 Shorty McNutt Spike Robinson
 John Gilmore Frederick Esmelton
 Boston Blackie, upon being released from Wallace prison, determines to devote his life to prison reform work. He knows from experience the cruelties that exist, especially the "water cross," in Wallace prison.
 He seeks the aid of Gilmore, the attorney general and together they plan to get more information. Blackie agrees to be sent back to prison but to add realism he plans an attack on Gilmore. That night when he enters Gilmore's house he finds him dead. He is caught in the room and accused of the crime. Blackie, unable to explain his presence, is sent back to prison.
 Warden Benton has been waiting for Blackie's return and at once sets about to give him the "water cross."
 One of Blackie's former pals secures a stick of dynamite and together they make their escape. He is hounded and finally captured again and brought back to the prison. A confession has come through and Blackie is cleared of the guilt in the murder of the attorney general.

This is one of the best pictures that William Russell has to his credit. It is a thrilling story, one that has plenty of action and real suspense and like most of the other "Boston Blackie Stories" can be counted on to give good satisfaction. This particular one has been adapted from "The Water Cross" and gives intimate glimpses of prison life and the need of prison reform. Around the story there has been built a pleasing little romance and good interest is developed from start to finish.

William Russell gives a thoroughly convincing performance and we consider this one of his best roles. Eva Novak is attractive as the heroine in the story. The supporting members of the cast all lend good assistance and good atmosphere prevails throughout the picture. J. M. D.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Ben Slowbell Hoot Gibson
 The Slavey Helen Ferguson
 Stella Betty Francisco
 Keene Eddie Gribbon
 Mrs. Slowbell Gertrude Claire
 Jobson Otto Hoffman
 Sheriff Frank Hayes
 Jobson's Assistant Jack Dillon
 Ben Slowbell loses his little drug store and his horse and buggy, his only possessions in the world.
 He returns home and finally has to tell his grandmother of his failure. To the town comes Keene, a self styled business advisor and manager. The town's richest and stingiest man seeks Keene's assistance in unloading a tract of worthless land on Ben, who upon being advised of its great value by Keene borrows the necessary amount of cash from his grandmother and completes the purchase. Keene then disappears with Ben's girl and the lad again realizes that he has been cheated. While he is out stirring up trouble some strangers come to town and insist on giving Ben a large profit for his land. Ben also finds that another girl has been waiting for him too.

Hoot Gibson once again plays the small town fool in a stereotyped sort of picture.
 However, it is the kind of material that makes a good appeal to the audience and it should not fail to satisfy his admirers.
 There are a few melodramatic touches, put on with rather a heavy hand in spots, but according to the formula used it is pretty certain that the young hero will finally win out with plenty of money and the true blue girl who sits by and sees him wasting his affections on a frivolous blonde.

Hoot Gibson gives his usual clean-cut, appealing performance and is ably assisted by Helen Ferguson and Betty Francisco playing the two female leads. Gertrude Claire is a lovable character as Grandma Slow-bell. Eddie Gribbon gives a good portrayal of the big town sport and manager of the lad's affairs.

The picture has a great deal of human interest and although the familiarity of the plot detracts from the suspense that might be registered, it is nevertheless a pleasing bit of entertainment and should make a good box office attraction. J. M. D.

Romance of the Republic

Produced by Instructive Film Society of America.

The premiere showing of "The Romance of the Republic," produced by the Instructive Film Society of America, was recently given at the Hotel Plaza under the joint auspices of the producers and the International Commonwealth Club. The preview culminated with an international ball, a brilliant function in which more than 1,000 persons prominent in the social and official life of New York and Washington participated.

The film is an intimate portrayal of the activities of the ten great federal departments at Washington and is of a highly educational nature. To those who have only a superficial idea of the functions of governments, it will prove to be highly instructive and interesting. J. M. D.

"THE WHITE ROSE"

Will Be Reviewed in the Next Issue

STEFFEY'S "ROSE WEEK" BACKED BY OFFICIALS

One of the most constructive exploitation campaigns originating on the West Coast was arranged by Manager Frank Steffey of the Coliseum theatre, Seattle, with the cooperation of the Chamber of Commerce for the presentation of "Mighty Lak' a Rose."

Mr. Steffey, with the aid of the Flower Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, introduced a "Plant a Rose Week," April 7 to 15.

The Chamber of Commerce appointed a committee under the chairmanship of Mrs. A. E. Guy to supervise the activities of such a week. Letters of indorsement from Mayor Edwin J. Brown and prominent citizens followed. The Seattle Rose Society became interested actively. A Rose Girl, chosen by the Chamber of Commerce from a large number of society "buds" was crowned by the president of the association at an "official" rose planting at Volunteer Park, attended by newspaper cameramen and reporters.

Mr. Steffey was able to place a rose cut-out herald in every business letter sent out by the Chamber of Commerce and at every plate in the Commercial Club dining hall. Also he tied up with 2,000 posters sent out to merchants by the Commerce body and with rose displays of stores and florists and music display windows.

The song "Mighty Lak' a Rose" was played by all leading Seattle orchestras for two weeks in advance of the film showing and featured by a soloist in advance and during the presentation at the Coliseum.

Mr. Steffey completed the tie-up by dressing his usherettes in a rose costume of red and green, the hats resembling rose blossoms and the dress representing leaves. Movies of the various civic demonstrations during "Plant a Rose Week" were an added attraction during the presentation.

"DWIG" CARTOON FOR NEW ARROW FEATURE

Arrow is issuing an unusually attractive lobby card in connection with "The Little Red Schoolhouse." It is of the regular lobby card size, 22 x 28, but the unique character of the sketch, reproduced in colors from a drawing by the celebrated cartoonist, Clare Victor Dwiggins, or "Dwig," should give it an especial appeal as a window card display.

The drawing shows a scene of action outside the Little Red Schoolhouse and contains no direct reference to the photoplay. The scene is a lively, colorful and humorous one and in the bird's-eye view fashion of "Dwig" cartoons presents a multitude of characterizations and events of interest and appeal. The "Dwig" cartoon is an added feature of the Arrow exploitation material on "The Little Red Schoolhouse," as the regular set of two 22 x 28's is also available.

STUNT SHOWS SCOPE OF RADIO PUBLICITY

First National recently put a man to work to deliver Radio talks on pictures over WLAG, the Minneapolis Radio Station. W. H. Laurance was the man who made the talk, having prepared a story telling the history of the motion picture industry and referring incidentally, but none the less pointedly, to current First National pictures.

The talk was called: "The Motion Picture—Yesterday and Today." How widespread its exploitation and publicity possibilities are for exhibitors was evidenced by the fact that WLAG received letters during the ensuing week showed the postmarks of: Shelby, Mich., Peoria, Ill., Delaware, O., Haddon Heights, N. J.; Niagara Falls, Ont. and Greenfield, Ind.

SCORE-BOARD BLANKS DISPLAY "SOULS FOR SALE"

Detroit, Mich.—Goldwynner Eddie Carrier, co-operating with the management of the Broadway Strand Theatre, staged an extensive campaign on "Souls for Sale."

The punch stunt of the campaign was the placing of a score board (slate effect) alongside of every newspaper stand in Detroit, of which there are fifty-two in the downtown section. A tie-up with the Detroit Times made these locations possible. The makeup of the score boards was as follows: The box score in the middle and the ad on "Souls for Sale" at the top in two colors.

Fake Phonograph Makes Good Lobby Attractor

The Temple Theatre surprised the people of Hamilton, Ont., when a phonograph, made of beaver board and measuring seven feet in height was placed in the lobby where a real phonograph, hidden in the leaves of the trellis, played "Mighty Lak' a Rose." Attracted by the music, people wandered up to the beaver board instrument to hear the strains, only to turn away disgusted at their own simplicity when the dodge was discovered.

Later the "dummy" was taken out on an automobile for a street ballyhoo. A cornet soloist inside the beaver board machine played the title song and again amazed people.

Getting Co-operation From the Library

Whether or not an exhibitor gets a display on the bulletin boards of the public library is largely a matter determined by the disposition of the librarian, so when a picture based on a well known novel comes along there is nothing like trying. Walter Nealand, Goldwynner exploiting "The Christian" at the Madison Theatre, Peoria, Ill., interviewed Professor Edward Wiley, librarian of the public library, and found him to be an admirer of Sir Hall Caine, so there was a display for the theatre in the library. The theatre used a slide stating that the book could be obtained at the library.

English Introduce Novel "Tol'able David" Herald

English exhibitors in the London zone capitalized the fact that the hero of "Tol'able David" was fired by an ambition to drive a stage coach, by distributing "First National Mail." The mail consisted of a small bag, about three inches wide and four deep, with its purpose stamped on the front. Its contents made up an effective advertising herald.

TEN DAY CAMPAIGN FOR "ADAM'S RIB"

Green Bay, Wis.—Ten days of intensive promotion work which included Roto Art sections in the Chicago and Milwaukee Sunday papers resulted in packed houses all during the weeks' engagement of "Adam's Rib" at Saxe's Strand, Green Bay, Wis. The business was phenomenal in view of the fact that a late April blizzard swept Green Bay during two days of the presentation.

Newspaper ads addressed as open letters to the Mayor of Green Bay and one of the Women of the city were included in the newspaper campaign, signed by Frank Cook as manager of the Strand.

A novel card was also worked out by Mr. Cook which contained a cent pasted on its upper left hand corner and bore the following phraseology: Here's A Cent For You! Towards the Purchase of a Ticket to see CECIL B. deMILLE'S production "ADAM'S RIB."

This card was placed in a white envelope bearing the caption: "NOBODY'S MONEY, IT'S YOURS!"

Probably the most effective part of the entire campaign was the fact that on every one of the ten days of the promotion campaign the local paper carried at least one cut or story on the picture.

Curtain for "Haze" Effects Installed by Eddie Hyman

New York.—Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand, has added another new curtain to his collection. It is of silver scrim, covering the proscenium arch, and draws from the center on a noiseless traveler. When closed this curtain cuts off the auditorium from the orchestra and both stages. It matches the silver cyclorama which Hyman used for the first time three weeks ago.

The deep red plush curtain over the proscenium opening will be used the same as formerly, at the close of each performance. The new curtain offers much in the way of lighting. Lighted from the front, it gives the effect of a beautiful haze, an effect appropriate to certain stage and musical numbers.

Gets Good "Hula-Hula" Lobby with "Lost and Found" Posters

Providence, R. I.—Mat Reilly, manager of the Victory Theatre, got good results from a "Hula-Hula" lobby for the showing of Goldwyn's South Sea picture, "Lost and Found." He used mounted cut-outs from the paper including a native boy playing a ukelele and used grass very freely in the decorations.

For a ballyhoo the 24-sheet poster for "Lost and Found" was mounted on each side of an automobile truck which was kept on the streets of Providence for four or five days.

EXPLOITS "VANITY FAIR" THROUGH PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Worcester, Mass.—Goldwynner Buddy Stuart of the Boston Exchange, induced the public schools of Worcester to aid in publicizing Hugo Ballin's production of "Vanity Fair," when it was shown at the Plaza Theatre.

A special showing was given for teachers and superintendents, whose opinions were used in advertising the film in the newspapers and in a special herald.

Ballyhoo with and without the aid of navies, railroads, hospitals, etc. Above and at the left is a "fighting float" which appeared in the streets of Minneapolis and whooped things up for the U. S. Navy and the Vitagraph romance of the navy "Masters of Men." The recruiting officers supplied gobs to do a boxing act on the float and a band. At the right is a "Ninety and Nine" locomotive built over a Ford and used in Seattle, Wash.

Mildred, the matronly porker of "Daddy" makes a personal appearance at George Ritzler's Sigma Theatre, Lima, O. Besides the trick pig there was an appeal to the kids in this exploitation for the First National attraction in the form of a special matinee.

Here's how "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" was advertised in Havana, Cuba. To make any impression there a float must be a rather "elaborate" affair and so "elaborate" was the word when the ballyhoo for the United Artists release was put into commission.

The "invalid car" was ballyhoo for Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last" in Wenatchee, Wash., where the Pathe Comedy was played by the Liberty Theatre.

An atmospheric prologue staged at the Brooklyn Mark Strand by Eddie Hyman for "The Bright Shawl," First National's new offering starring Richard Barthelmess. It was programmed as "A Cuban Episode" and was performed by four dancers and two singers.

The U. S. Navy was the target for the broadside of exploitation and publicity for the showing of "The Isle of Lost Ships" at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles. The photos above show a stunt which made good ballyhoo for the Maurice Tourneur sea picture. On the roof of the building at the left you may observe a sailor sending wig-wag messages to a man on the marquee of the Kinema, at the right. One of the flags was printed with the line "The Isle" and the other "Of Lost Ships." Newspaper ads. were carried seven days in advance, opening with teaser copy, following which the regular press book displays were used for this First National Attraction. An "Isle of Lost Ships" event was held at the Cinderella dancing pavilion. The usherettes at the Kinema wore white duck sailor uniforms.

"The Isle of Lost Ships" was dedicated to the U. S. Navy. A special presentation of the film was given aboard the flagship of Admiral Eberle, Commander U. S. Pacific Fleet.

Outside displays like that shown for the F. B. O. production "The Son of the Wolf," are a paying venture at the Magnet Theatre, Milwaukee, according to Manager Nicholas De Lorenzo. This is a small downtown house and makes its greatest play for the patronage through these displays, therefore De Lorenzo uses them consistently and with the greatest economy, compo board being used over and over again in the erection of the various effects. The setting above for First National's "Mother O' Mine" shows how variety in appearance as well as display of the outstanding features of the attraction are produced at the Magnet Theatre.

"The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" were not whispered about Boston, as a matter of fact, the showing of this Hodkinson offering at the Park Theatre was shouted with ballyhoo, poster stands, and newspaper advertising and publicity. At the left above is the picturesque ballyhoo which was kept busy during the entire engagement. In the centre is the lobby display at the Park and on the right the usherettes in their English peasant costumes.

A special escort for the prints of "Tol'able David" sent by the First National organization in London to David Lloyd George, for a private viewing. Thus, there is also exploitation in English film circles and it makes use of all the available stunts.

It is said that Knoxville's verdict on the lobby display shown above was "it was 'Mighty Lak' a Rose." At any rate the display which Manager W. E. Drumbar arranged at the Riviera Theatre for the First National attraction had the virtues of simplicity and harmony with the title and theme of the picture.

South Sea suggestion in the lobby of the Majestic, Memphis, Tenn. The display for Paramount's "The White Flower" was made by A. B. Morrison, and like the other lobbies reproduced on this page it has a suggestion or so for use this summer. White flowers were fastened on natural smilax trailing vine. The pennants were green, yellow and red.

The cave man period of Paramount's "Adam's Rib" was featured in this lobby at the Criterion Theatre, Evansville, Ind. The display was arranged by Manager Harry Kornbloom.

An outside display of the side-show order, having a circus appeal and the cool suggestion of a rocky cave. This arrangement was used for Paramount's "Adam's Rib" at the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., by Manager F. J. Miller.

A "long shot" at the lobby of the Criterion, Evansville, Ind., shown above. The palm leaves provided a simple means of developing the cool idea played for in this decoration for "Adam's Rib."

A "White Flower" display arranged by Manager W. R. Bedell of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, Ga. A special "White Flower" matinee was one of the features of the campaign. As an added attraction the Rialto offered an Hawaiian act on the program with the Paramount picture starring Betty Compson.

The front and the rear of the Pavilion Theatre, London, England, with its display for the presentation of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood." This United Artists offering was given a big campaign in London, its performance at the big theatre in Piccadilly Circus being billed and ballyboomed in the city and the suburbs.

Billboards are rather big in England, as the photo above would indicate. This board of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" was 100 feet long. It was but one of many used by Charles B. Cochran, who gave the United Artists' attraction its premiere in London at the Pavilion.

The Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, during the presentation of the Hodkinson offering "Down to the Sea in Ships." The house display featured reproductions of the scenes in strips bordering the marquee and over the entrance doors. The line-up shows that this Elmer Clifton picture had its appeal for Toledo film fans.

The affidavit stunt used in newspaper advertising by an English exhibitor for the showing of First National's "Tolable David." George Black, managing director of the Queen's Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, however, did not go so far in his swearing as many of the American showmen have in connection with this stunt.

Lobby displays and all the other devices of exploitation have been introduced to Mexico by Leon J. Bamberger, chief of Paramount exploitation in the territory on the other side of the border. The displays pictured above were used for the presentation of "Don't Tell Everything" and "The Woman Who Walked Alone," at the Olimpia Theatre, Mexico City.

Window displays they have also met in Mexico City, as the photo above goes to prove. This was another important item in the exploitation of Paramount's "The Woman Who Walked Alone"

The photo guessing contest was used to good advantage in Mexico City, whither Mr. Bamberger took the stunt for use in his campaigns for Paramount pictures. This window display tied up directly with the showing of "Don't Tell Everything."

Ballyhoo appears to be a cinch in Mexico City. From the photos above we dare say there is not much trouble in getting a crowd to parade for the theatre. At the left is a street stunt with a burro suitably bannered and led through the streets to attract attention to the showing at the Olimpia Theatre of "The Woman Who Walked Alone." The centre photo does nothing to change the opinion expressed early in the course of this caption. At the right is the weighing-in stunt introduced along with other American methods of exploitation by Mr. Bamberger of Paramount. The girl whose poundage equalled that of Dorothy Dalton could see the show free of charge.

The MODERN THEATRE

Building — Equipping — Operating

LIGHT is similar to sound (music) in more ways than most of us realize. One is received by the eye, and the other by the ear and then conveyed by nerves to our brain where we get the impression. Both light and sound are produced by vibrations. A deep tone is produced by a slowly moving wave or vibration, a high pitch by a much quicker movement. We have a so-called octave of sound, c, d, e, f, g, a, b, c, and what might be termed an octave of light, red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo and violet—the red vibrating much less rapidly than the violet. Due to this similarity, some experimenters have made the mistake, the writer believes, of attempting to assign tonal values to the colors of the spectrum, just as though they were to play a scale in colors, or write a score for color as they would for sound.

A Color Score

As a somewhat exaggerated illustration of the point we are trying to bring out, an experimenter might try to write a color score for "America" (My Country, 'Tis of Thee). His music would read c, e, d, b, e, d, e, e, etc., his light score might read, yellow, yellow, green, orange, yellow, green, blue, blue, etc.

It is obvious that attempting to follow any such practice as this would lead us nowhere and that we would have a meaningless, unintelligible result. We must have our tie-in between the two senses—hearing and sight—based on the association element. We must study how both light and sound affect our feelings. Realizing this, it is evident that rather than an individual note having a corresponding light to accompany it, a group of notes, that is a mood or theme of the composition, or even a whole section, will have a much more definitely associated color. For example, one would naturally associate green with the pastoral bit, red with martial music, vivid yellow with the bright, sprightly dance, blue with moonlight, blue-green with the barcarolle and so on.

The next point to be kept in mind is the method of applying color. The first extensive attempt made in America along this line was at Carnegie Hall, four or five years ago. The Russian composer Scriabine had prepared the score of a number, with color accompaniment (Poem of Fire, Prometheus). One instrument of his orchestra was what he termed "tastiera per luce" (light keyboard). This was a box about five feet square with a white background on which colored light could be thrown and varied in intensity and tone (color). He wrote a score for this device and introduced it at will, as he would a part for the woodwinds or brass. Sometimes, one color would be visible for quite a period, then there would be a rapid variation of tint. The box which he used was so small that the effect was lost at the rear of the hall. The effect of the color was lost in competition with the huge orchestra.

We see by reflected light and to get the maximum impression of color there must be a relatively large light colored area on which tinted light can be thrown. One way of accomplishing the desired end would be to flood the entire auditorium with tinted light, so that one "feels" the atmosphere. This can be accomplished by the use of concealed lamps in inverted reflectors placed in a cornice for indirect lighting. Again, the curtain and draperies at the front of the house might be of a light neutral tint and colored light from concealed sources thrown on this, or the orchestra itself could be clothed in white suits and beams of colored light projected on this area. Suitable connections of circuits of the three primary colors, red, green and blue, with dimming devices will permit the use of any combination or mixture desired.

Having the means at hand to get color effects on a large scale, it will be up to the musician to co-operate with the man who has observed the effect of color on our emotions (the psychologist or artist) and with the man who knows how to produce the lighting effects (the electrician or engineer). The musician will outline to the psychologist the impression which the music is supposed to create. The latter will determine what color is most likely to be associated with this emotion and the engineer will see that the right color is available at the proper time.

One can visualize the time when sufficient information has been obtained from experiments to lay down certain definite fundamental rules and then still further to the time when these effects will be appreciated by the general public. This will not be a difficult matter, for most of us are affected by music.

We are stirred at the sound of the military band, the soft soothing strains of the Humoresque or Kamennoi-Ostrow rest us and quiet the nerves, while the modern jazz tune has still another effect. Some of us experience the whole gamut of human emotions, listening to the wonderfully descriptive music of Massenet, Puccini or Wagner. Particular phrases promote sorrow or joy, depress or exuberate us. Light has a similar effect, the colorings of nature as expressed in sunrise or sunset give one a thrill, the cool, restful green of the wood has its effect, while the changing blues and white caps of the sea also produce an impression. Certainly these can be combined.

In many of the larger Motion Picture houses, it is a regular practice to vary the lighting while the orchestra plays the prelude or special numbers. Observations indicate that while some of the effects obtained are excellent, at times there is apparently little connection between the music and the lighting. Even though the lighting is most artistic, it should most certainly be in harmony with the music. Careful forethought along the lines suggested should produce the desired result.

It is going somewhat out of the province of this bulletin to lay down detailed programs for various selections. There are certain descriptive numbers which are particularly susceptible to color treatment, for example, Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries," "Siegfried's Funeral March," "Good Friday Spell," Tschaiakowsky's "Marche Slay," "Overture 1812," Rimsky-Korsakow's "Scheherazade," "Sadko," "Ballet Music from M'lade," Rachmaninoff's "Island of the Dead," Rossini's Overture "William Tell," Von Suppe's Overtures, and so on.

The numerous themes offer great possibilities for changing colors. Flashes of one color can be superimposed on another. A shrill piercing note can be accentuated by a brilliant, momentarily exposed light. At times, the change from one color to another will take place gradually, at other parts abruptly.

We can all look hopefully to the future for great advances in combining the arts of music and light. THE END

This business is part of her life and she enjoys it."

"From my knowledge of mailing lists I recommend that every exhibitor have one and use it on his patrons and prospective patrons as we use it on him. There's no use standing around hoping for business in this busy world. You've got to go after it and isn't that for the exhibitor as well as us?"

"Keeping eternally after sales and often after delinquent accounts is the secret of success. The exhibitor is lucky—he doesn't have to keep after delinquent accounts."

CARBON SALES HEAD

SEES NORMALCY HERE

Jacksonville, Fla.—James R. Crawford, general sales manager of the National Carbon Co., New York, gave out the following interview to the newspapers here during the joint convention of the Southern Hardware Jobbers and the American Hardware Manufacturers Association. Mr. Crawford had just made an intensive survey of business conditions, especially in the northern and western states and the message he brings is one that rings with optimism and hope.

"It is little short of marvelous," says Mr. Crawford, "the way in which the United States has recovered its stride after the disrupting march of the war. All of the dire predictions of the pessimists in regard to the difficulties we would experience in re-absorbing into our industrial life the great mass of discharged soldiers, have proved false. All the wild and disquieting talk about the dangers of bolshevism and the spread of radical doctrines has likewise been shown to have had no foundation in fact.

"Particularly remarkable and gratifying is the brave 'comeback' from industrial depression that the South has made. I doubt if at any previous period the agricultural prospects of the Southern States were so promising; aided by vast acreage reclaimed by draining and by intensive and scientific study of the soils the southern farmer and fruit grower is filling an ever larger space in the markets of the world. And in industry, also, especially in cotton weaving and kindred arts the Southern States have entered into keen and healthy competition with the New England States. And I am glad to note that Southern industries as well as those in other parts of the nation have apparently learned and taken to heart the lesson as to the value of advertising in the daily press. Very fine barometers of business are the advertising columns of the daily paper which after all, is the best advertising medium in the world, when backed up by the proper advertising to the jobber, wholesaler and retailer in the Trade Press."

By co-operating with the jobber and manufacturer, the utilization of the most modern merchandising methods, the use of newspaper advertising, window displays and other advertising material, and by teaching his clerks salesmanship, he has speeded the wheels of commerce and aided in the task of re-establishing prosperity.

"Only a country as resilient, quick to sense new value and grasp new opportunities; a country with a spirit large enough to march alongside the splendid opportunities America offers could have got back into a steady business step as quickly as our country has done. There has been no gulf created between capital and labor; instead there is a growing realization that the interests of capital and labor, so far from being opposed, are identical. Fearing a great influx of cheap labor from the distraught countries of Europe our Congress passed a selective immigration law designed to keep our own American workmen from being swamped by cheap competition.

"MRS. LEO F." HAS THE FOLLOW-UP IDEA ON BUSINESS

There's a Lesson to Be Drawn From What She Has Done to Build Up Theatre Supply Sales

Cleveland, O.—"There's no use talking, woman has a good sense of follow up and its importance to steady business."

That's what Leo F. Dwyer, well-known theatre equipment dealer of this city and Cincinnati, and president of the A.M.P.E. D.O.A. says. Don't know what the initials stand for? That's easy, the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America.

But that's getting away from the subject—woman. In Dwyer's case he was speaking for Mrs. Leo F. Dwyer, whose pleasant countenance, known to every theatre man in Ohio, is the first thing that greets the visitor in the Dwyer store here.

The theatre equipment business involves considerable work. First there's the theatre which always needs some kind of equipment but which invariably puts off purchasing it until the last minute. They must be constantly reminded that there is a place to get it and now is the best time to get it. Mrs. Dwyer knows how to follow them up and her letters are the most cheerful bits of salesmanship imaginable.

Then there's the new theatre to be built. From the time the project is first announced until the opening day the builder must be reminded of the equipment he will need and here again Mrs. Dwyer follows up the prospect to the Nth degree.

She could tell exhibitors a whole lot about the efficacy of the mailing list and mailing systems as a means of keeping business at a steady flow.

Mr. and Mrs. Dwyer

Mrs. Dwyer was asked about it and she said:

"Woman, you know, is a great person to remind man of things forgotten. Where is there a wife who doesn't tell her husband not to forget his check book, his hat or his handkerchief and last but not least, to pay the gas bill? Now in handling the mail end of our business I find that instinct to remind fits in very well. We follow up every prospect from the first day we hear of him until he's sold or someone else sells him. It's nice work. Of course my husband really sells the equipment."

To which Dwyer replied:

"Don't believe I do the selling. Mrs. Dwyer not only sells but she keeps our organization going when we're on the road.

A STORY OF LOVE — MYSTERY — THRILLS

Delegates Quickly Raise $30,000

After Election M. P. T. O. A. Gets Down to Business

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

THE fourth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America adjourned on Friday, May 25. It had been in session five days. As announced last week Sydney S. Cohen was re-elected president at the session of Thursday, held like all the others in the Chicago Coliseum annex.

Following the election the larger part of the business of the organization was transacted. Most important perhaps was the raising of $30,000, which was contributed in the course of half an hour, after many of the delegates had left the hall. Later information was conveyed to the president that the sum named would be materially augmented.

The contributions were in many cases personal and not from the state units. Mr. Cohen announced that action would be taken by the board of directors which would insure no repetition of that method of raising money, that plans would be put into operation which would insure an abundant working capital for the organization.

One of the important parts of the annual report, which was a finely printed document of twenty-four pages, in heavy covers, was the urging by the chief executive upon the exhibitors of the necessity for concerted effort by all branches of the industry to bring into the theatres the millions of persons who at present are not patrons.

The exposition conducted in connection with the convention was largely attended in the latter half of the week, the crowds on Friday night as well as on Wednesday night taxing the capacity of the great auditorium.

The controversy over the presidential election is set forth in the following pages. While for a time on Wednesday appearances indicated a possible breach in the ranks of the organization the latest reports are that the fears were unfounded.

In a statement issued to the delegates late Thursday night James C. Ritter, one of the strong figures in the convention, declared that "the impression should not be gained that because the Michigan delegation left after the election of the first vice-president that Michigan bolted the convention. Many of the delegates were anxious to catch afternoon trains." Mr. Ritter added that when any big, constructive movement came along that needed any help that Michigan could give, so it will in the future as it has in the past assist in "its small way."

The conventions of the week were marked by courtesy toward each other on the part of all the contenders for the presidency. No tangible charge of steam-roller tactics could be brought against those who presided.

New York State had a large representation, and assurances were given by the president that following the national convention there would be a gathering in New York, statewide in extent, which would result in the cementing of all factions and the emergence of a single militant body. The New Yorkers made a strong impression at the convention, with no signs of any factional feeling or antagonism.

When seen at national headquarters President Cohen declared the organization was ready to do things worth while. He reiterated what he had said on the floor of the convention and at the banquet, which was a successful affair, that there are "no yesterdays" and that the organization was prepared to sit down to the table with any branch of the industry.

Thursday's session of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the fourth day of that gathering, held in the Coliseum Annex in Chicago, brought the climax to the lively fourth annual convention.

As was printed in last week's issue of this journal, Sydney S. Cohen was re-elected. There was no opposing candidate standing against him. Four others had been nominated. Two of these, W. A. Steffes and Joseph Mogler, withdrew on Wednesday. Thursday morning Messrs. Woodhull and McWilliams also withdrew.

Cohen Agrees To Be Candidate

The meeting had been called for 11 o'clock, but owing to the preparation of a statement by the president it was 1:45 when Mr. Cohen began the reading of what proved to be the story of his candidacy, which included the "round robin" signed by prominent exhibitors and presented to him Tuesday night, a review of his position with regard to the candidacy of James C. Ritter, of Michigan, and the letter sent by Mr. Ritter that morning to the leaders of the organization with whom he had been conferring over the suggestion of Mr. Cohen that the latter would retire in favor of the Michigan man and setting forth the condition under which Mr. Ritter was willing to assume the presidency.

Mr. Cohen stated that the leaders who originally had asked him to be a candidate had reiterated the request following the receipt of the letter and that he had agreed to stand. The president said in part:

As a result of my earnest desire to bring about complete harmony and procure the absolute co-operation of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in every state of this country for any one who might be elected President, I suggested to the members of our Board of Directors and other leaders of our organization and the Michigan organization that I would retire as a candidate for President and aid in the election of Mr. Ritter, and offered myself, if the assurance could be given to our leaders and they were satisfied that this arrangement would operate to the advantage of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The leaders of our organization who made this offer to Mr. Ritter were not satisfied with the answer of the Michigan leaders in this relation, and I want to read you a letter which was submitted to them by Mr. Ritter this morning, the contents of which were in turn transmitted to me.

Calls for the Raising of $130,000
Gentlemen:

In order that there be an understanding as to the plan under which I am willing to assume the responsibilities of national president, in case I should be the selection of this convention, I am outlining below a complete and definite statement of facts that I feel is necessary in order that any president can carry out a business administration and under which the national organization can be a success.

That not less than $100,000 be pledged and raised before this convention closes, the expenditure of which shall be in the discretion of the president and board of directors with the exception of the following items that are to be decided today by the delegates here assembled:

That in addition to the amount mentioned above, the present deficit of $30,000 be raised in addition, in order that the administration this year be placed on a sound business basis devoid of any financial handicap.

That an organizer be secured by the president and board of directors at a salary not to exceed $15,000, this man to devote his entire time to the work of organizing and solidifying states not now efficiently organized. That the national organization devote its work and time next year largely to the task of organization, except in extraordinary circumstances which will demand the attention of the board, this in the discrimination of the board.

That an executive secretary be secured at a salary of not more than $10,000 a year.

That the President be paid a salary, not more than $10,000 a year.

That the headquarters of the national organization be located elsewhere than in New York City. This because of the conviction that the work of the organization can be carried out more efficiently from a more central location. Arrangements can be made, if necessary, for office space in New York to take care of conferences, etc., which may have to be held there.

That the president shall, as always in the past, continue as chairman of the board of directors.

That Sydney S. Cohen, W. A. Steffes, and one man from Michigan be elected as members of the new board of directors. I am entirely satisfied with the personnel of the balance of the board as nominated by this convention. However, the selection of the board to be left to the delegates assembled.

The above recommendations are not made with any view of dictating what the delegates of this convention do, in convention assembled, but made with the conviction that unless such a business plan is adopted it would be impossible for any president to carry out the comprehensive organization program that I have in mind.

JAMES C. RITTER.

It is very manifest that the proposition submitted by Mr. Ritter was entirely impracticable at this time. The theatre owners who signed the original demand that I stand as a candidate for President, and many others from different parts of the country, reiterated their demand that I should remain as a candidate and only in compliance with their representations made under circumstances which would not possibly permit of a declination, in view of the many obligations due the theatre owners of the country, did I agree to stand as a candidate and subject my candidacy to the disposition of the delegates of this convention.

Cohen Requests

Dissenters Be Favored

Following the reading Mr. Cohen asked the chairman if there were any more nominations for president. The chairman, Gus Schmidt, of Indianapolis, as on the day before, said that the nominations were closed the day before, but that if it was the wish of that candidate he would open the list.

There was no other candidate suggested. When a motion was made to cast a single vote for Mr. Cohen there were yells of disension. Mr. Cohen from the floor asked that the roll be called. That action was on the point of being taken when Mr. Schuman, of Cleveland, called attention to the constitution, which prohibited a roll call where there was but one candidate and further insisted that the constitution be followed.

The chairman said that under the circumstances he would not follow the constitution, but would permit a roll call. Several of the states did not cast their full vote, a part of their delegations being recorded as "passing." The chairman announced that Mr. Cohen had received 234 votes and was elected.

"I desire to extend my thanks for your unflinching courtesy," said the president to the chairman in response to demands for a speech. "I appreciate it very much. Delegates to this convention, there is very little else that I can say at this time. I am overjoyed and happy over this great honor that you have again bestowed upon me."

Following the announcement many of the delegates retired from the hall, among these being a goodly number from Michigan and Minnesota, as well as other states. Many of those who left, however, had voted for Cohen, and plainly had no further interest in the proceedings or were in a hurry to get a train for home.

Praises Men of Michigan Delegation

"I saw some of the directors of the Michigan delegation here today," said Mr. Cohen a little later. "They are good organization men, and I want to say that the Michigan men who have just left are as fine a body of men as one would want to meet.

Most of them said good-bye. (The writer had seen Mr. Ritter just before the latter's departure seek out Mr. Cohen after the declaration of the election and shake hands with him.) They are personal friends and I regret it was impossible to bring about an agreement.

"Michigan will remain in the National organization. They will continue to function with us, because their problems are our problems. I appreciate the attitude of Wisconsin, too. And of Dick Liggett and others along the same lines."

Indiana Promises

A Big Organization

The president said the night before two Indiana men had told him they were going to start out in their ears and tour the state and that at the next convention Indiana would have the best state unit in that body.

"Also very soon after this convention," continued the president, "a state-wide convention of the Theatre Owners of New York will be held, and the few men in the State of New York who are not affiliated now will become affiliated, and New York will give its undivided co-operation to the Theatre Owners of America." (Applause.) The president added that he had been in conference with Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the old organization.

"We have come into this convention with the largest, most representative, most substantial gathering of theatre owners ever assembled in the United States.

"I believe you have now arrived at the point where dividends are to come to you in the way of organization. All that is required is that when we go out from this convention is that we do not magnify or exaggerate these little differences we have had here. You know at a recent meeting of the women's clubs it was necessary to eal in the police."

Mr. Cohen introduced Eli W. Collins, of Jonesboro, Ark., the newly elected fourth vice president, who reviewed briefly the great necessities for money in order that the organization might properly function and called for contributions—not as units, but personal.

Collins Stirs Up Real Enthusiasm

It was the first real opportunity the members had had to get a line on the calibre of the man they had honored, and by the way the money began to pour in perhaps may be judged their estimate of him. Mr. Collins, with the sincerity and the enthusiasm of an evangelist, opened up his talk with, "We have handed Mr. Cohen the presidency and have handed him an empty honor unless we can provide him with the funds. Money talks, and money is the only thing that is heard in this world above the other noises.

"There can be no division in your mind as to the absolute necessity for the continuance of this great organization that has been built up during the past year. Those of you who have been engaged in this industry long enough have watched other organizations rise and fall. You have watched this one rise. I hope you are not going to let it fall.

"We are going into the coming year with a deficit of $30,000 because some states have failed to pay their quota. We are going to need a lot more money, or rather the administration is. I am not of the administration. I am only a country exhibitor in a town of 15,000 persons. The largest city in Arkansas has but 75,000 persons. There are but 145 exhibitors in the state and 103 of them belong to the Theatre Owners of Arkansas. (Cheers.)

"In the two years we have lost only one man who is no longer in the business of exhibiting pictures, because we know organization is the only protection we have against the wolves that are continually barking at the doors. Together we can lick these fellows; if we but put all of our heads together we can lick the devil itself.

Supreme Test of an Organization

"This is the supreme test of our organization: Are you willing to put your hands in your pocket? I am going to call on every man in this room to offer every cent he feels he can afford. Do it now. Let us start the Sunshine Trail right now. Put the money down in the hands of the president so that we can go out and frighten our enemies, let them know that we are going to back our words with cash."

Joe Mogler

Stands on Chair

Joe Mogler of Missouri came to the front of the hall, talking as he came, and mounted a chair, an insubstantial foundation. "I think Mr. Collins has struck the keynote," he said. "I am proud to see we have a fighting man in our chair. I am going to start the ball rolling, and I want you exhibitors to join me. I am going to start the ball rolling with one thousand dollars." (Cheers.)

Mr. Burford was right behind the St. Louis man with another thousand.

Harry Davis, who up to the moment had not opened his mouth on the floor, although he had been very active in conference, stepped out in front. "I will give a thousand dollars—no, not for Western Pennsylvania, for myself. I want to say there are a great many men who cannot afford to give a thousand dollars. Let them give a hundred or two hundred or whatever they can afford.

Woman Says She Was Taught to "Stick"

Laura Paralta, a delegate from Culver City, raised her hand. As she announced her check for a hundred dollars there were calls for a speech. "All I know is that I have been taught to stick, and I always stick," she said, and the delegates cheered.

While Mr. Davis had been talking he had been interrupted with subscriptions. Indiana had given a thousand, Louisville another similar sum, M. E. Comerford a thousand, the exhibitors of Philadelphia a thousand, New York State pledged a preliminary sum of five thousand, a few small exhibitors of Pittsburgh gave $1,500, Connecticut $1,800, Ohio $1,000, Mr. Pramer $500, Southern California $2,500, and so it went on until there was at the end of a half hour an even $30,000.

There was considerable discussion on the alleged boycott against the Chicago exposition on the part of the members composing the Hays association and Sydney Samuelson of Newton discussed the suits which he has instituted against the F. I. L. M. clubs, the Hoy system and the Hays organization.

The new treasurer, William Bender, of South Bend, Ind., created a great deal of amusement as in his deliberate and quaint way he declared that when he was elected he didn't think he would have anything to do, but he found the table covered with money and checks. "Business is looking up," he remarked.

Mr. Momand of Oklahoma promised that the state would be back under the national standard and said it was going to adopt the slide system for the payment of dues.

Other speakers were Frank Cox, Rochester; Dave Weinstock of New York, Fred Herrington of Western Pennsylvania, Howard Smith of Western New York, Mr. Codd of Michigan, Secretary Arons, Vice President E. W. Collins, and Sidney Allan of Medina.

Charles V. Ragstraw of Salem, Ohio, outlined his disastrous experience with competition in high school pictures, as a result of which an investment of $135,000 was seriously jeopardized. Mr. Bullock of Ohio offered a resolution bearing on the situation, which he said was symptomatic of the situation in other places. He said a bill to aid non-theatrical showing of theatrical subjects had been beaten in Ohio and ultimately would be introduced in all other states, the Steingut measure already having been introduced in New York. The resolution was referred to a committee, to be reported on Friday.

Friday the Real Business Day

The final session of the Theatre Owners was held on Friday, the proceedings being opened at 12 o'clock. There was a small attendance, as many of the delegates had left the city for home. Considerable business of importance, however, was transacted, of which the following is a digest:

The stated committee reported favorably on twelve resolutions, all of which were approved by the body.

The adoption of a code of ethics. R. G. Liggett of Kansas denied that Kansas had walked out of the convention at any time during the preceding days.

J. W. Walsh of Connecticut was elected fourth vice president, vice W. W. Whitson, declined.

A number of cities asked for the consideration of the board of directors in the selection of a site for the next convention, among them being Kansas City, Rochester, Atlantic City and Los Angeles.

The delegates heard an address delivered by Mrs. Elmer G. Derr of Cleveland, president of the Cleveland Cinema club.

All matters connected with the question of co-operative banking were referred to a committee with power.

President Cohen discussed Movie Chats, of the progress that had been made in their distribution and of the necessity for the still further expansion of the single reel subject.

Fred Seegert explained the status of Wisconsin in the national organization.

The thanks of the convention were extended to President Cohen, Chairman G. G. Schmidt and to R. F. Woodhull, toastmaster at the banquet Wednesday night.

List of Approved Resolutions

The following resolutions were submitted by the committee of which J. A. Aekerman was chairman and all were adopted:

In the matter of the music tax the board of directors were requested to take up the question with L. R. Foster, 409 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati.

Calling for the repeal of all laws relating to the collection of war taxes on admissions of 50 cents or less.

That the president notify Colonel Alvin Owsley of the American Legion that the Theatre Owners will co-operate with the former organization in every practical way for the relief of wounded and disabled soldiers.

In opposition to a change in standard time.

In opposition to the present ruling of the Revenue Department under which tickets must be consecutively numbered, enabling any one by purchasing the initial ticket and the last to determine the amount of business done.

In regard to the contemplation in Congress of the enactment of a law for Federal censorship.

For shorter feature pictures.

In regard to road shows.

For the complete abolition of the deposit system.

Indorsing the Urban Movie Chats.

Extending the thanks of the convention to A. J. Moeller and Jules Rubens, managers of the Motion Picture Palace of Progress, for the untiring zeal they displayed to make the exposition a success.

Pledging moral and financial support to demonstrate the legal rights of the tax-paying exhibitor in any case where through non-theatrical competition it may by the officers be deemed proper to institute court action.

The president announced that a committee of the board of directors had that morning met the attorney of the Society of Authors and Composers and that the attitude of the lawyer was one of arbitration and get together. The president said, however, that while there would later be another meeting the officers were determined to continue legal efforts, legislative and otherwise.

The board is not, he said, decided on any policy. He said his idea was to name attorneys in one, two, three or four points and institute legal action. Furthermore, the organization must continue its effort to have the copyright law amended.

The Massachusetts delegates, the president informed the convention, had pledged a subscription of $3,000 on their return to their home state, and a large number of others not present at the Thursday session had made substantial contributions.

Banquet of the Motion Picture Treatre Owners of America held at the Hotel Sherman, May 23, R. F. Woodhull of New Jersey toastmaster.

CROWDS ATTEND THE EXPOSITION

The Motion Picture Palace of Progress, which is the official title given to the exposition conducted in connection with the fourth annual session of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was formally opened at 7 o'clock on the evening of May 19.

Practically every available space was occupied by exhibits, not all of them directly connected with the industry. There were displays by government departments, for instance, and by civic organizations, such as the Red Cross, Rotary clubs, etc.

Before 8 o'clock there was a good crowd on the spacious floor, and patrons continued to arrive until after 9 o'clock. The only untoward incident was the breaking of a large glass tank which had been erected on a stage at the north end of the hall, in which it was announced performers would appear before a camera.

There was an entertainment provided by the management during the course of the evening. There was aplenty doing to keep the throng amused.

General manager A. J. ("Bert") Moeller, who has had charge of the arrangement, was congratulated on the outcome of his work.

Among the exhibits more or less connected with the industry were the following:

pany, Movie Supply Company, Simplex Projectors, Fyre-Gard For Films, National Screen Service, Automatic Ticket Register Company, National Carbon Company, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Al Lichtman Corporation-Preferred Pictures, W. W. Kimball Company, Seating Company Service, M. P. T. O. A. state organizations, Sosman & Landis, World Amusement Service Association, Balaban & Katz Theatres, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Lyon & Healy, Western Vaudeville Managers Association, Orpheum Circuit, Renown Pictures, Truart Film Corporation, Atlas Educational Laboratories, Motiograph De Luxe, Smith Unit Organ, Smith Perfume Company, Kineto Company of America, Eastman Company, Joe Morris Music Company, United States Department of Agriculture.

During the course of the evening, Corporation Counsel Bush, personal representative of Mayor Dever, formally opened the exposition and welcomed the visiting Theatre Owners.

One of the exhibits which attracted a great deal of attention was that of the Simplex company. Two machines were on display. One could be put in a box measuring a foot in each direction. That was the first Simplex to be manufactured. It was designed by Edwin S. Porter, and beginning in 1897 for seven years projected the pictures shown in the Eden Musee in New York. It is today in the "pink of condition."

In striking contrast to the early machine was the new Simplex low-intensity reflector lamp arrayed in French gold and napierre green.

ANNUAL BANQUET MARKED SUCESS

Chicago, May 24.

The dinner given by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America last night at the Hotel Sherman in connection with the Fourth Annual Convention of that association was a marked success.

The banquet was held in the Tiger Room. It began at 8 o'clock and it was five minutes before midnight when the last speaker finished. During the serving of the meal an excellent entertainment was provided by dancers, singers, monologue artists, instrumentalists and a real jazz band with a woman leader, who also entertained on her own account.

R. F. Woodhull, of Dover, N. J., president of the New Jersey Exhibitors, was the toastmaster. He presided with tact and displayed abundance of humor.

One of the high lights of the evening was the address of the Rev. Dr. H. H. Pittman, of the First Congregational Church of Shenandoah, Iowa.

Other speakers were Dave Hartford, Robert Leonard, Mae Murray, Peter F. Brady, Chairman of the Committee on Education of the American Federation of Labor and also President of the newly opened Federation Bank of New York: Marcus Loew, who talked on problems of the exhibitor and the producer as well; the Very Rev. Harry J. Walker, of Duluth, another young man who roused his hearers to a tribute of prolonged applause at his conclusion; Al Lichtman, who is developing into a wit; and President Sydney S. Cohen, who asked why, if the labor forces of the City of New York could start a bank, motion picture exhibitors also could not do the same thing in a smaller way and assist producers in financing their pictures at saner rates of interest.

The Contact Men Between Exhibitor and Producer—Who Are They?

Old Sandbaggers Going, Says Anderson

By RICHARD V. ANDERSON,

Manager Sales Promotion, Universal Pictures Corporation

WHERE does the film salesman of today fit? The question is put to me by Exhibitors Trade Review, and is answered by citing instances where salesmanship, traveling with its companion, Service, has paid golden returns for film salesmen and exhibitors.

Once, down in North Carolina, I had called on an old time exhibitor who had been using a 24-reel program and who seemingly could not have been pried loose with a crowbar. That evening the regular relief operator failed to show up, and they were somewhat up against it.

With tongue fastened in the middle and loose on both ends, I had spoken to the exhibitor about my service, but he wasn't interested. Same old answer: "I'm satisfied. Don't want to change."

"Well," I said, "you seem to be in hot water over your relief operator. What kind of a machine have you?" He told me, and I then suggested that the operator go out for supper while I ran the show, and believe me, doing my bit in that hot, stuffy little booth was some job. I furnished service, but I didn't succeed in selling my program. However, that's a part of the story coming. In that booth that night after supper I got acquainted with the regular operator. He was one of those all-around fellows who had almost as much say about the show as the owner. He kicked about the film that he was getting, said the condition was rotten, lots of sameness in story, etc. He was finally sold the idea that my service would solve all these problems. The operator said "Leave it to me," and sure enough, a few days later the exhibitor called me on the phone, asked me again about prices, and said "Can you let me have it to start now?"

Did he get it? You bet, and he became one of my very best customers. Sounds like fairy-tale stuff, but it's a fact. A little service—a kind turn, if you want to put it that way—clinched the sale which I had already about given up.

It may be remarked that few salesmen of today can run a projector, but that is not the point. It's the idea of service, of giving more even than the contract calls for, and the salesman of today in many ways can lend a helping hand. Sometimes he can arrange the ads, fix up the lobby, place displays in local store windows, call on the local newspaper editors and there establish a new and more friendly contact for the local theatre.

That business of calling on the local editor. I have often wondered how many salesmen have thought of the amount of good that they can do in that direction. Take towns of 25,000

THE MAN WHO'S SPEAKING—

Some attention, it seems to us, should be given to that army of portfolio carriers who actually, day in (and often night) and day out are calling on the 17,000 theatres. Are they all "high pressure birds," as we've heard them described? Have methods of film selling changed? Richard V. Anderson—"Diamond Dick" Anderson, if you please—has something to say on the subject.

Richard V. Anderson, manager of the Sales Promotion Department of the Universal Pictures Corporation, has been in the film business since 1912. He started with the Atlanta Branch of the General Film Company, as an assistant in the shipping department. Before entering the film game he was at various times clerk, shipping clerk and salesman for various merchandising concerns, and even took a fling at being a detective. He is a "Georgia Cracker," having been born in the town of Covington.

He rose to be Chief Booker with General Film, then installed booking systems for them in various branches. His last position with General was as Manager of the Atlanta Branch. Next he handled "The Diamond From the Sky," a 30-episode serial, in the southern territory.

He then joined the Universal forces, taking charge of the Charlotte Branch, and in March 1916, opened the Pathe Charlotte Exchange. A year later he took the Atlanta Branch of Pathe, where he stayed a year and then came to New York as Editor of the Pathe "Sun."

Later he joined the International News Reel Corporation as sales manager under E. B. Hatrick, General Manager of the Corporation. He occupied this position for four years, until his recent change to the Universal sales force.

Anderson was married early in 1921, his bride being Miss Ruth Alexander of New York, who then occupied a high position in the S. A. Lynch Enterprises.

Anderson is at present engaged in installing in the Universal Exchanges a system of sales control designed to assist the exhibitor in making more out of his theatre and of the use of Universal product. This system originated with Carl Laemmle. Details have been worked out by Art Schmidt, General Sales Manager for Universal, and Anderson, acting on Mr. Laemmle's suggestions. It is expected the system will be in full operation in all Universal Exchanges by September 1st. More about the sales control idea later.

or less. A salesman can and should make it as much a point to call on the editor as on the exhibitor. It doesn't interfere with his regular routine, and in fact should be considered a part thereof. These editors are glad to see an out-of-town man. It's their business to make new acquaintances, and as a general thing they like the smoke of a good cigar. They always turn a receptive ear for things new about pictures and the industry in general, and coming from an out-of-town man these things have more weight than if the local exhibitor gave it to them.

Often a salesman will find in the smaller cities that he has a real opportunity to do his exhibitor-customer a good turn by explaining to the local editor the tough time the exhibitor has been having, and how a little bit of newspaper cooperation will help the two of them. Show the review of a picture that has been sold to an exhibitor, and have extended to him an invitation to see it and write his own personal impressions of it. Leave it squarely up to him. Show him that you value his opinions, and that you know his opinions have proportionate value with the townsfolk. Such things as this change the editor's attitude towards the exhibitor and the industry in general.

In the past I have arranged with local newspapers to run regularly a synopsis of a News Reel, and in return the theatre man ran a slide, stating that all local events appearing in the News were gathered in collaboration with the newspaper.

It is not as easy now to arrange newspaper tie-ups as formerly, because in many cases editors have had their good nature imposed upon by the unscrupulous. "Moderation, Fair Play" are the watch words.

So, when I am asked to state where the modern salesman fits in, I can answer it with one word—EVERYWHERE. And he fits in with the use of one other single word—Service. He has got to give service to the exhibitor. He has to give loyalty and service to his concern. He can give service to his fellow-employees in the Branch. Above all, he must be sincere. And here let me repeat what Universal broadcasts constantly to its sales force: DON'T TRY TO PUT ANYTHING OVER ON THE EXHIBITOR OR ON THE EDITOR, and they will always welcome you.

The old type of salesman, the fellow who shouted, who pushed the exhibitor against a stone wall, and then socked it to him, is disappearing, gradually but none the less surely. The salesman of today must really represent his company. He must know something. He must know his product and all about general trade conditions, for the showman of today is a much wiser man than he was. The salesman who shows the exhibitor that he knows what he is talking about will always gain appreciative audience, and in keeping with modern salesmanship ideas, let us never forget that the customer (in this case the exhibitor) is always right.

The basic idea in good salesmanship is fairness always. Some men will ask "Does the exhibitor appreciate fairness?" And I can no better answer them than by citing the wonderful success of Carl Laemmle, who has always based his every action on the policy of fair play. Fairness has never failed in any kind of business. We all remember the General Film of the old days, the hectic days. Sandbagging was the only method employed, but did it last? The druggist coats his bitter pills with sugar, but they remain pills just the same. I remember one case in Spartansburg, S. C., where the General pressed an exhibitor too hard, too unfairly, and what did it make of him? He became an ardent hater of General and its methods. He gathered about him others, and soon they were fighting side by side, with the inevitable result.

In the end the balance sheet shows for the salesman, his company, and the exhibitor (his customer) what fair dealing means—good returns. Play fair and expect to receive fair play in return.

As to the question of prices, when we make a million dollar picture, we must go out and get the money, and having done that, provide the exhibitor with something that will help him make money. That "something" is "service." Naturally we cannot continue the big costly productions unless we get our "fair shake."

This sounds like sermonizing. None of this is new, but old truths, tho oft repeated, are the best, and they always materialize.

PLACING FAN PUBLICITY TO GET MOST OUT OF IT

By R. W. BAREMORE
Publicity Director, Mastodon Films

PUBLICITY that goes into the waste basket is valueless. It gets nowhere and certainly does not make a favorable impression upon the movie editors of the newspapers and magazines. If a publicity man sends out the right kind of stuff the movie editor learns to lay aside for use the envelope that bears the name of the company whose publicity man is recognized as the writer of real newspaper or magazine stuff.

As for the publicity man's value, there is no question about it. For instance, does he not, by getting matter published, photographs used, etc., enhance the value of a star or picture? Is he not, in a great measure, responsible for the army of motion picture fans? Did he not create, through his press work, this army and does he not arouse the curiosity to see a certain star and picture? Publicity, good publicity, must contain an element of news value. The fake story is of no value, except in very rare cases, and has done more harm than good in practically every instance where it has been put over. The faker has only made it harder for the legitimate publicity man for he has soured the editors, made them suspicious and leery of a genuine story of news value about a star.

Results on our newspaper stuff are very good, especially so in the larger cities where it is generally the toughest to get stuff printed. This, I believe, is due to the fact that we are sending out a small amount of stuff but making it quality material. We'd rather get one story published than to send out reams of matter, sore up editors and make them yell for larger scrap baskets.

Our material for the dailies of the country is sent out in galley proof form. We have it set on linotype here, press proofs pulled and then distributed. It is thus in a form that a newspaper man can easily handle, a form that he understands perfectly and enables him to pick out fillers, etc., that will just fill a bit of space that he wants to close up in a hurry. In this way we get a great many short items published.

I am a firm believer in sending out stuff that has a seasonal value. For instance a story about "Where Do Elephants Go When They Die?" was released when the circus season opened and it went over. The elephant story contains a humorous angle, news interest and also a bit of educational value, making it something that the newspapers are glad to get. This has been proved through the large number of clippings of this tale that are coming in.

As to gauging the likes and dislikes of movie editors I use—a return postcard idea which tells me what kind of stuff each movie editor likes. This cuts down waste. The postal card comes back from the newspapers and provides me with specific information as to just the exact sort of material that the various papers want, making it almost sure-fire that they will publish what is sent in response to these requests, thus eliminating waste and providing the motion picture editors with stuff that goes into print and not into the waste basket.

This is an age of comedy strip cartoons with newspapers and our artist got up the cartoon shown in the illustration. The cartoon we supply in mat form or as a window card, to exhibitors, or for use in any way they choose. Supplied as a window card it has title of picture, etc., across the top with space for play dates, theatre name, etc., at the bottom.

EXHIBITOR JUSTIFIES

ADMISSION PRICES

Philadelphia.—Before the Forum in the Academy of Music recently Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, directing manager of the Broad, Garrick, and Forrest Theatres, said that Philadelphia is still provincial in its attitude toward the theatre. He justified the high prices charged for admission by the fact that the cost of everything that goes to make up the production has become so high and the risk so hazardous that the prices must be high in order to make the venture, even if a success, a profitable one.

In summing up his speech Mr. Nirdlinger said, "In spite of blue laws, in spite of censors, and of short sighted producers, the theatre must live. The war proved it was a necessity instead of a luxury and it is as necessary to sustain the morale of our play today as it was at that time." Mr. Nirdlinger also predicted open Sunday. "When people can go out on Sunday and enjoy themselves instead of being closeted at home we won't have to spend so much of our time in fighting bootlegging and dope," he said.

Radio Still Continues to Attract Theatre Man's Attention

Houses in Many Cities Are Now Broadcasting

SOME time ago L. C. Walker of the Warwick Theatre, Kansas City, stepped into the broadcasting room of a local radio company in that city and delivered an unusual message over the air. It was a message intended to build good will for the whole industry. Hundreds of thousands heard it. Here is what he said:

"The Motion Picture Industry has made tremendous strides during the last ten years. It has developed from the mere novelty of 1910 to one of the greatest educational factors in the world. Prominent statesmen and educators from every corner of the globe, realizing the possibilities of the screen, have lent its co-operation to elevate its moral and artistic standard and the result has been an overwhelming production of better pictures. At the present time the President of one of the largest producing and distributing companies is in Europe for the purpose of interesting prominent literary peoples in this great movement.

"But how have the local communities assisted in stimulating the production of better pictures? Here, indeed, is food for thought.

"Kansas City, Missouri, has developed a system that has accomplished a great deal of good through constructive co-operation between the Parent-Teachers' Association and the theatre owners.

"The Parent-Teachers' Association, of which Mrs. Cope is Chairman of Film Board, has lent its assistance to the theatre people and a plan has been worked out whereby a committee from the Association previews the films released by the various distributing companies for Kansas City and its contingent territory. The committee endorse a great many of these films and the theatres are notified of the approved list through the medium of a bulletin issued monthly by the Association. The motion picture exhibitors then arrange play dates for the pictures that have been endorsed, and they are usually set for showing on Friday and Saturday, which are the two days of the week approved by the Association. This eliminates the possibility of students neglecting their studies to attend the theatre. The Parent-Teachers' Association further co-operates to the extent of posting bulletins in the main halls of all schools announcing the approved list of pictures and the dates of showing in each locality.

"For example, when 'Back Home and Broke' was released, it was previewed by the committee, approved, booked and dated by the exhibitor, and its showing announced in every school in Kansas City—and so it is that every picture endorsed receives this valued co-operation, thus stimulating attendance on the better pictures and gradually eliminating the poorer ones.

"The activity of the Parent-Teachers' Association and the theatre owners has drawn two elements which are vital importance to every community. The association realizes that the screen is an able ally in their endeavors to instill the spirit of sturdy Americanism in the school children—and the screen has proved more than equal to the opportunity.

"As an evidence of the Association's sincerity of purpose, Mrs. Cope recently served as one of the committee, which proved to the law makers that censorship was impractical, undesirable and would hinder the progress of a mighty form of expression. The legislators were shown that constructive co-operation between the theatres and educators would accomplish far greater good than any form of political censorship. It was demonstrated that where the Kansas City plan had been a tremendous success, the Censor Board in most cases has been a dismal failure.

"The present arrangement between the Parent-Teachers' Association and the Kansas City theatres has been functioning for some time and has drawn favorable comments from many sources.

It is obvious that Walker did not broadcast the music in his theatre, as most of the theatres using radio do—and there are at least ten of them employing radio—but he did what even a small theatre operator fortunate enough to be located near a broadcasting station can do. He sends out a message of good to the entire industry.

Radio as it affects the theatre is yet too undeveloped for use by the small operator but it is probable that before many years the small owner may, if he desired, follow the footsteps of the big operators.

The Strand Theatre, N. Y. City is the latest New York house to follow the lead of the Capitol. Strand musical numbers are now being broadcast regularly.

Dave Love, conductor of the Palace orchestra at the Palace Theatre, has brought down a large amount of publicity in the Memphis papers by his very novel and decidedly attractive prologues, his prologues and the community concerts held over Sunday afternoon and to which the public is invited. But now he has gained the lime-light on a new count. He staged a Radio Week at the Palace and introduced a novelty—broadcasting and receiving at the same time. The Palace orchestra played very softly but the sound was caught by the microphones and carried to WMC, the Memphis broadcasting from which it was relayed to the Palace theatre and amplifiers placed at intervals through the theatre, caught the sound. The sound from the amplifier was much stronger than the orchestra was playing and the effect was novel. The innovation met with public favor and Radio Week was a huge success.

What is considered said to be proof that exhibitors are fast losing their opposition to radio is shown in the statement made by J. G. Rohlf, short subject Sales Manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Mr. Rohlf has recently returned from a trip to Washington, D. C., Boston, Mass., and Providence, R. I., where unusual tie ups have been made in conjunction with the one reeler "The Mystery Box."

In Washington, D. C., Mr. Rohlf came upon an unusual situation. He states that according to scientists an air pocket exists between Washington and Baltimore which prevents the transmission of messages between the two places. The matter was brought to the attention of the Radio Corporation of America and as a result an extra large broadcasting station has been built. During the running of "The Mystery Box" at Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington, D. C., arrangements have been made for special broadcasting to be made with an amplifier on the stage of the theatre which will operate during the running of the picture. At the same time The Washington Post will run a scenario contest. According to Mr. Rohlf, this tie up is unusual inasmuch as the Radio Corporation of America, the Washington Post, and Woodward and Lothrop Department store have provided an unusual tie up on a one reel film.

At Boston, where "The Mystery Box" opened at the Park Theatre, a similar tie up was made. The Radio Corporation of America this instance installed a receiving set on the stage of the theatre and sent a man to operate it. A Radio concert was given during the run. At the same time John J. Fanning, Director of Broadcasting, who has the distinction of being one of the best announcers of radio programs in the country today, broadcast to over 300,000 listeners all about the film appearing at the Park Theatre.

A similar tie up was also secured in Providence, R. I., with Shepard's Broadcasting station and the Majestic Theatre. This station will not only broadcast into the theatre at night but will do so for every performance beginning at noon until the Theatre closes.

ture-negative is taken. Actually the sound is photographed. Both the sound and the picture are registered on the same film and after being developed, they are printed on the same film. Thus the synchronization is perfect.

If the film breaks and a patch has to be made, the synchronization is still perfect. The film looks and is just like any other positive print, except that one-sixteenth of an inch in width is reserved for the sound record. Thus the picture on the film is 15/16ths of an inch wide instead of being a full inch.

This positive print is projected in the ordinary way in the standard projection machine. A small appliance is attached to the projector and a telephone wire runs from the projector to a point behind the screen.

The sound is produced simultaneously with the picture; is amplified by Audions in the same proportion as the picture is magnified; is carried over the telephone wire to the front of the theatre and when it comes out through the loud speaker horn it fills the theatre.

This is a simple, non-technical explanation of how it is done.

To envision its results on theatre patronage is not so easy; the possibilities stagger the imagination.

Think for yourself, the chance to have the finest music, the finest vaudeville; all the glories that go to make up the programs right on the film; all ready to show in the of the greatest theatres; to have them all same way the photoplay is shown, at the same time and with no extra effort.

Naturally, one of the first questions asked is "What will it cost?" Of course, this will depend on the subject; on the singers or the musicians and the talent that goes into the production, but it may be safely stated that the cost to the theatres will not be high. Such wide distribution is expected that the cost cannot be high.

And a second important point to remember is that the Phonofilm is distinctly non-competitive. There is nothing in the film world today with which it competes; on the contrary it supplements and aids every producer as well as every theatre.

Take for instance Paramount; take the next Cecil B. DeMille production for example. In the first run Paramount theatres such as the Rivoli they have their splendid orchestras, able staffs and equipment. They can stage their prologues, originate their music without outside aid or extra expense. They are geared to do it. But suppose Paramount wants its thousands of customers to present this DeMille picture in the same way as the Rivoli presents it.

They make up special prints with the entire Rivoli accompaniment. These prints they furnish to the theatres which are not in a position to beautify their programs with music and novelty-effects like the Rivoli can do.

The result is that all over the country the presentations are alike; the Rivoli and theatres in its class have original accompaniments; the other theatres have Phonofilm accompaniments, but in every instance the effect is exactly alike.

Now, this procedure is not confined to features. Mr. Hammons can do the same thing with his comedies; he can use the Phonofilm to put in the actual chatter and get away from the titles altogether.

And as with the features and the comedies, so with the scenics and with the news reels, too.

THE PHONOFILM AND HOW IT WORKS IN THEATRES

The idea that an article on the Phonofilm would be interesting to our readers occurred one night not long ago when in the midst of a theatre performance an orchestra walked out because one of its member's union card was not in regular order. The show was stopped. Later, in the Rivoli, an old time musician asked us: "What effect would a thing like this Phonofilm have on musicians who constantly strike?" This article may answer to musician's question.

By FRED E. BAER

THEATRE-OWNERS and managers are asking what the Phonofilm will do for them.

Will it increase their patronage? Will it increase or lessen their costs? Will it replace anything on their present program? Will it be a novelty or a permanent addition to their entertainment program?

Exhibitors Trade Review has asked me to tell its readers about the DeForest invention and attempt to answer some of the questions which are pouring in, in a bewildering number.

First, let us get clear just who the inventor is and what the invention is. Lee DeForest, inventor of the Phonofilm, is a pioneer in the wireless and radio field; he is the inventor of the Audion on which the art of modern radio is founded; he is the Father of Broadcasting.

Because he wanted to find an even wider use for his Audion than Radio offered, he began his Phonofilm experiments.

The Phonofilm is a standard motion picture film, the kind every theatre uses. Only, in addition to the photoplay, it also has an accompaniment; either song, speech or music.

Thus when the exhibitor projects the Phonofilm, he gets not only the picture, but also a musical accompaniment; or, if the action calls for it, he gets a song or a speech or a dialogue.

What does this mean?

It means that the smallest theatre in the land will be able to give a show which is the exact replica of what the Capitol or Rivoli or Strand gives. It means that the smallest theatre in the land will be able to give a vaudeville entertainment which duplicates exactly the finest combination picture and vaudeville programs. And at a very minor cost. This is the way it works.

In the Phonofilm Studios a subject is doubly photographed. Take a familiar subject for example. Suppose Gallagher and Shean want to put their act in pictures. They act it out before the camera, doing their songs and chatter just as they do on the stage. The songs and the chatter are photographed at the same time as the pic-

A Winning Line Up

HERE is something to paste in your hat and consider next year when the time comes to fight daylight saving. It may be too late now to do anything this year, but every lane has a turning.

In Jamestown, N. Y., daylight saving was passed up to the voters and it was beaten 2105 to 535. Sounds almost as good as the Massachusetts censorship result. It was beaten by concerted action in which the following elements were found fighting side by side in full co-operation:

Theatres, Schools,
Women,
Street car companies.

The women were unanimously against it and voted so almost to a woman. The schools felt it would work a hardship on mothers in getting their children off to school. The traction companies announced they would not put on early cars if daylight was voted. The theatres used their screens; the women their voices; the street car companies their influence and the schools their prestige.

It was the women too who helped win the fight in Baltimore.

So next year remember who are your friends in this daylight saving muddle and hook up with them. Take a tip from Jamestown and Baltimore.

Automobile Parking

EVERY once in a while something crops up to show how favored is the neighborhood theatre owner. He may not get the big prices for his show that the center-of-the-city-man gets, but he has other things to be thankful for.

For one thing he is free from the automobile parking problem, which is a problem, as the city man is beginning to comprehend. That it is a big problem is shown by the attention large theatre operators are giving to providing parking space for their patrons.

In the big cities parking space—that is, free space —grows scarcer every day and the traffic laws grow more drastic until autoists prefer to stay home or drive around their neighborhood instead of driving down into the center of town.

Gus Schmidt, of Indianapolis, says the neighborhood house is the successful house of the future and instead of building another house in the centre of Indianapolis—he already has one there—he is going to build five or six miles away from the hub. The reason is the lack of automobile parking space in the congested downtown districts.

The problem of providing parking space is already being taken care of, as far as it is possible to do so, by big theatres in Boston, Detroit, Milwaukee and elsewhere. We have always thought it a subject worthy of serious consideration, for when a theatre patron has to pay twenty-five, fifty cents or a dollar for parking during the theatre hours the addition of the theatre admission charge makes him think twice before he runs downtown to see a show.

Times Do Change

Harry Crandall, who operates the Crandall theatres in Washington, is turning over his theatres on specified days to the school children of the National Capitol where they pursue their course in visual education—

The Capitol Theatre, New York City, had as guests one hundred school children who are studying Vanity Fair and who saw the picture as an aid in their studies.

Two hundred boys from Probation School No. 120 were guests of the Capitol to see a picture which would have an uplifting effect upon their morale.

AND so the news items run. In the words of the poet: "Who'd a thunk it?" Actually, motion picture theatres are working in conjunction with the schools of the country, actually throwing open their doors to provide visual education for school children.

Long considered as opposition to the motion picture theatre the school has become a friend of the theatre. There are two ways of handling the school problem—fighting the schools or working with them. When you fight the schools you are combating one of the greatest forces, one nearest the hearts of the people. When you work with the schools you are working for yourself, for your country, for your community.

Those Curls

OUR Pictorial Section has contained several interesting stills from Mary Pickford's latest, The Street Singer. Have you noticed anything in them that makes you happy? We have. Her curls are back, given full and fair play, in this picture.

It makes us happy because we like the curls and we've had the thought now and again during the two years past that Mary had forsaken the curls. And to us they make her seem like the real Mary—"the screen's sweetheart"—as the saying goes.

And Doug takes to the mustache. Well, well, well, that Fairbanks couple is always up to something.

ONE of the hits of the banquet of the Theatre Owners at Chicago on May 23 of the First Congregational Church, Shenandoah, Iowa. He introduced his talk with jocular references and he closed it with a mixture of seriousness and fun, but in between there was much that reached into the hearts of his hearers. And none of these gave quite so close heed as did the dancing girls who had just doffed their tights or covered them with street garb and who clustered in the stage doorway, their faces showing every evidence of deepest interest as the minister talked of pictures and the church and life as a whole.

"I wish to emphasize the sense of suspicion which exists between the motion picture and the church," said the doctor in the course of his talk. "There is no reason why we should distrust ourselves. You and your wives, many of whom I see here with you, believe in clean, fine things.

"I want you to feel tonight, as I stand before you, that I know your needs and know your hopes, because we all come from the common family. I wonder if you in the industry realize the force you are in the world?

"When I think of you and estimate that some fifteen millions of our people are being molded in your hands every day in your theatres, I believe I am safe in saying you have taken a place in the forefront of civilization.

"You are, after all, public servants, and you are doing for the people many things they cannot do for themselves. When I think what many towns would be without your contribution to the many people I know working for small wages who come home, eat their supper and wash up, take their families into the places you have provided and there find their spirit lifted from the heavy toil of the day I cannot describe my gratitude for what you are doing for the people.

"I said in the beginning 'fellow-preachers.' We are. You are preaching to the eye, I to the ear. You are sometimes very good, sometimes fair, and sometimes bad. So are my sermons. Not all of my sermons are printed in the newspapers.

"When I visited the Grauman Theatre in Los Angeles I looked about that lovely room and somehow a peace entered my soul. I said to my companion 'Oh, that we preachers could only have the privilege of speaking to men in such surroundings!'

"You may be living in a little town, and owning a little theatre, but you can do your best to make that place attractive, so that whoever comes in may feel that you are doing the best you can.

"The great question is better pictures. I am not dealing with religion now. Religion is life to me. I am not speaking of the so-called religious pictures. We have got to have our fun. Bring on your Chaplins, your Harold Lloyds, your Buster Keatons and all the others.

"Let us have your wonderful historical films, your sweet love stories, but all the time keep the thought in mind that you are working toward an ideal, growing higher and better in these things as the year passes."

Dr. Pittman paid a tribute to "The Man Who Played God," which symbolizes what he believes to be a very great type of work.

"Every man regardless of creed or race believes in a Supreme Being, and God is dependent upon human beings. That picture tells us to carry out whatever help he brings to us. And John Arden stands there in place of God.

"Here you have a picture that warms the heart of your preacher and it warms the heart of your audience. And it brings in the receipts. Of course, you don't care about that. (Laughter.)

"I am only afraid of one thing: If you keep on making pictures like that I am going to lose my job. If you are going to produce that kind of pictures I think I might as well put my training behind me and get on the band wagon with you." (Applause.)

MARCUS LOEW was another speaker at the banquet, having been introduced by Toastmaster Woodhull as a former producer and now an exhibitor.

"Picturemaking is a problem," said Mr. Loew in the course of his talk, "and the real problem is beginning now. In the last four months the cost of making pictures has almost doubled. I don't mean by that they are making so much greater pictures, but they are paying so much more money for the people entering into them.

"It is almost beyond belief. I say that to sound a warning. I can tell you we have reached a stone wall and we are right up against it. Next season we have got to make up our minds whether to continue or stop. Prices have gone up.

"The thing that worries me most is that of increasing your admission. If we increase our prices and the public doesn't agree then we may be worse off than we were before. I will say I have tried it out in a very few places because you could not take chances of trying it out everywhere.

"Of course, we paid particular attention to what we were putting on because of the advance in prices. We increased our show and gave bigger pictures. In one place where the admission is 40 and 50 cents we increased our receipts $3,500.

"But things are not as bad as many persons think they are, and everybody is going to sit around the table and straighten matters out."

PHOTOPLAYGOERS and exhibitors who in the past ten years have developed a keen regard for William S. Hart will second the hope expressed in Los Angeles by Jesse L. Lasky that the stalwart player will decide to return to the screen.

Mr. Hart has been one of the foremost exponents of the days of the early West, a period in which every boy of the land is interested, an interest which clings through life and which is as strong in the gray-beard as in the beardless. There are and have been, of course, all kinds of western pictures, but the productions of Mr. Hart have been among the best.

By all means, "Bill," come back and renew your periodical screen visits with your friends. We are sure you will find a hearty welcome.

ONE of the convention dailies resurrected that ancient libel which charged Lee Ochs six years ago when president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors in referring to those who had bolted as "them babies." AN announcement reaches us from the E. H. Martin productions of Los Angeles stating that Norman Talmage is to be featured in a series of eight subjects. It will be noted there is no "d" in Talmage. So it is unlikely the player is any connection of Richard Talmadge.

The announcement further states the "productions are under the personal direction and supervision of Horace B. Carpenter, who is said to be responsible for discovering William Fairbanks."

THREE TESTIFY AT TRADE HEARING

To Federal Board O'Reilly Says He'll Force Delivery of Two Cosmopolitans.

But two sessions of the Federal Trade Commission have been held during the past week in the matter of its charges against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The first was on Wednesday, May 23, and the second on the following Friday. The latter session was adjourned until Monday, at which time further hearings were postponed until June 11.

Three witnesses only were heard, Charles L. O'Reilly, A. J. Wolf and Nikitas Dipson. At the Wednesday hearing there were placed in the record agreements between the Texas-Oklahoma branch of Southern Enterprises and Barney Resnick under the terms of one of which the latter leased his property at McAlester, Oklahoma, the site of the Fotosho Theatre, to Southern Enterprises under the stipulation that it should not be used for amusement purposes. A second agreement reassigned the property back to Resnick with the same proviso.

It was the foregoing set of agreements that Joseph C. Boss had charged made it impossible for the Fotosho to operate and thereby left a clear field to the Palace, a Paramount house across the street.

At the session of the commission on Wednesday, May 23, the witnesses were Charles L. O'Reilly, owner of the Sixty-eighth Street Playhouse and the Rex, on upper Broadway, and also president of the Chamber of Commerce and the M. P. T. O. of New York, and A. J. Wolf, owner of the Adelphi and Symphony theatres in Broadway, New York.

Mr. O'Reilly declared his belief that under the uniform contract distributors may be held responsible for failure to deliver to exhibitors pictures which they have agreed to transmit. The question came up on two Cosmopolitan pictures for which Mr. O'Reilly had contracted with Famous Players, "Enemies of Women," and "Little Old New York."

The Chamber of Commerce president said he did not care what agency delivered the pictures in question, but he was determined to have them. Incidentally the witness scored the block booking system, saying that under it exhibitors were forced to accept productions which they knew in advance of showing would be unsuitable.

Mr. Wolf said that through the building of Loew's Eighty-third Street Theatre his houses had been forced from the position of first to second run houses. The witness said he was getting Paramount subjects more cheaply this year than last, that when he opened his books and showed the Adelphi was losing money the concession was made. He said that Famous Players had given him adjustments upward as well as downward.

Nikitas Dipson took the stand on Friday, May 25th, and testified that Famous Players representatives "clocked" his house in Batavia, N. Y. and that following his purchase of the Strand and Hayden Theatres in Olean, a former owner of the Strand built the Gem Theatre and with a Paramount program which gave the Gem exclusively that product was accorded privileges in the way of "adjustments" which Dipson was unable to obtain from other companies. This condition obtained for a year, Dipson stated, and during the inter-theatre war releasing concerns were able to get whatever price they demanded for films.

Following the "clocking" of his theatre in Batavia, Dipson said, higher rentals were demanded of him by Goldwyn and First

PHONOFILMS TO MAKE THE ZIEGFELD FOLLIES

New York.—One of the first big productions to be made by the DeForest Phonofilms will be the Ziegfeld Follies. It has long been understood that Florenz Ziegfeld was anxious to make a pictorial record of his famous production.

Now with the perfection of the Phonofilm by Lee DeForest, he has the opportunity to make a film record, not only of the pictorial beauty of the Follies, but a film record that will reproduce the music, songs and speech as well as the beauty of the girls, gowns and ensembles.

National branches in Buffalo. The witness claimed that when he called this matter to the attention of Harry Buxbaum, manager of the Paramount New York exchange, Buxbaum admitted that he had ordered the check on the house but said he knew nothing of the information being passed on to other companies.

The situation in Olean, Mr. Dipson explained, was finally adjusted when it was realized by competing factions that their course would result in disaster for all and corporation was formed to take over all four of the theatres, the Strand, Hayden, Gem and Palace. Dipson was made general manager of the corporation and the Gem and Palace were closed. The Paramount product was not used in the two remaining houses, the Hayden and Strand, and soon, the witness said, there was a propaganda addressed to the citizens of Olean and calling their attention to the fact that the theatres of the town were not showing his best pictures. The letters which flooded the town, Dipson stated, requested the recipients to ask the managers of the theatres why they did not show Paramount pictures.

BETTER BUSINESS IN SOUTHERN DISTRICTS

New York.—On his return from two weeks of personal observation of business conditions in the South as far west as New Orleans, John E. Storey, Pathe General Representative, declares that the last year shows industrial expansion and increase of general prosperity of the most striking character. The rule of large attendance at the motion picture theatres reflecting such a return of good times is apparent everywhere.

Mr. Storey visited many of the smaller cities served by the Pathe branches at Charlotte, N. C., Atlanta, and New Orleans. He was especially struck by fresh signs of manufacturing activity in the south-eastern district, which showed North Carolina rapidly approaching its goal as a great world's centre in the textile industry. In the Charlotte region he noted fifteen enormous textile plants in full-time operation.

Navy and Marines Help Exploit Masters of Men

New York.—"Masters of Men," pictured by Vitagraph from Morgan Robertson's sea story is receiving the widest kind of exploitation on its first runs. The United States Navy Department which lent every assistance and cooperation during the making of this picture is so delighted with the portrayal of life on board a U. S. man-of-war, that it has suggested to Navy and Marine stations throughout the country that they join the exhibitor in attracting attention to this picture.

In Denver, the Iris Theatre obtained an attractive lobby display from Navy and Marine Headquarters.

New York.—How Pathe's reciprocal get-together booking policy, emphasized in the case of "Safety Last," has worked out to date is indicated in the statement that twenty-seven theatres in sixteen states have closed capacity runs extended from the original contracts to fourteen days and over.

The longest extended run of the Lloyd seven-reel comedy thus far covered a total of 35 days, at the Strand Theatre, San Francisco. Next comes the Adams Theatre, Detroit, with 28 days, and a forced close of the run owing to other contracts that could not be longer deferred. Twenty-eight days was also the record of the Rialto and Goodwin Theatres, Newark, N. J.

The Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, and the Nixon Theatre, West Philadelphia, extended their runs to 24 days. At Salt Lake City the Kinema Theatre kept the crowds coming for 21 days, with the same record shown by the Park Theatre, Worcester, Mass., and the Miles Theatre, Cleveland, O., and the Majestic Theatre, Portland, Ore.

The runs extended to 14 days were at the following theatres: Old Mill, Dallas Texas; Strand, Minneapolis; Astor, St. Paul; Strand, New York; Olympia, Boston; Broadway, Lawrence, Mass.; Capitol, St. Louis; Walnut, Cincinnati; Colonial, Columbus; Alamo, Louisville; Liberty, Youngstown, O.; Metropolitan, Washington; Liberty, Kansas City; Apollo, Indianapolis; Liberty, Spokane; Capitol, Bridgeport, Conn.; Strand, Hartford, Conn.

Many New Houses Are Under Way

3 1/2 MILLIONS IN BUILDING PLANS

West Coast Theatres Are Going Ahead on Gigantic Program in California

Los Angeles.—In their announcement of the huge theatre construction program for the first eight months of the 1923 season, officials of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., see prosperity ahead for every community which will benefit materially by an estimated total expense of $3,500,000 for the construction of new theatres.

It is contemplated that every one of these homes will be ready by September 1st, 1923. Seven new theatres are now being built in various parts of Southern California.

They include an 1800 seat house in San Pedro, which will be ready for opening within five weeks. This theatre will represent an investment in excess of $500,000. The building is a solid block, with stores, offices and basement and stage.

In Pomona, California, a 1500 seat house is being built for the Gore Bros., Ramish and Sol Lesser interest by the Milwaukee Building Company, in the heart of the city. This house will be ready for opening about August 1st and represents an investment of $200,000.

At Hermosa Beach, California, a Mr. Mattison is constructing a huge block into which are incorporated a bank building, a theatre, stores and offices. The Hermosa Chamber of Commerce is solidly backing this investment. The front of the building will be faced in tile and the theatre will have one thousand seats. When West Coast Theatres, Inc., will announce the opening of this theatre the entire bay city district will hold a special celebration in honor of the event. $200,000 is the appropriation represented for this construction work.

At Santa Monica, at 3rd and Arizona Streets, a high-class theatre and office building is being constructed by West Coast Theatres, Inc., on a syndicate property, which is 150x200 ft. on a corner. The investment is in excess of $400,000. The Theatre will seat 1700.

In Hollywood the Hollywood Theatre, near Highland, will be entirely remodeled at an expense of $75,000. The theatre is to be beautiful and redecorated with many new chairs added to make it a 100 seat capacity house. During the remodeling the back wall of the theatre will be torn out and 75 feet added to the rear end in order to provide the increased capacity.

On Western Ave., at 54th St., on the Southwest corner a class A theatre seating 1500, fully equipped, with stores and offices is being built by R. F. D. List for West Coast Theatres, Inc. The property is 175x175 ft. and the investment approximates $250,000.

On the corner of Washington, Vermont and New Hampshire, a Los Angeles key corner fronting on two main boulevards accessible from all parts of the city, will arise a magnificent 2500 seat theatre of class A construction. Plans for this theatre are now being prepared. The property on Washington from the Northwest corner of Vermont is 182 ft., while the depth is 161 ft. The total investment of the building alone, not including real estate, will be in excess of $750,000. It will be the largest neighborhood theatre in the West.

On York Boulevard, between 51st and 52nd Sts., J. A. Badeley is erecting a theatre which will be of an Egyptian architectural design. Construction and real estate estimated at $165,000.

For all of these houses Messrs. Gore Bros., Ramish and Sol Besser, are awarding contracts for organs, masonry, carpentry, decorating, and other manual labor, the sum total of these contracts being estimated to keep thousands of workmen busy for an entire year. The total cost of class A organs, which will be installed in these various theatres, is in excess of $250,000, and not included in the construction appropriation.

Three more deals are now pending for theatres, contemplated and in stage of negotiations ready for announcement at a very early date. All of them will be situated in Los Angeles at a total investment of $750,000.

West Coast Theatres, Inc., also announce that their associate, Claude Langley, has closed negotiations in conjunction with them for a new theatre which will be announced soon. The investment in this instance will be $400,000.

HIGH SCHOOL CLOSED BY TRADE PUBLICATION

New York.—In the issue of May 26, of Exhibitors Trade Review, there appeared a small news item relative to the closing of four schools in this city, so that the pupils could attend the showing of “Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood.”

An exhibitor of Stroudsburg, Pa., who is a regular reader of this publication, had difficulty, several times, to interest the principal of the Stroudsburg High School in the educational value of motion pictures. Mr. Lerner, the exhibitor, saw the value of the above mentioned clipping. He lost no time getting to the principal's office, with his copy of Trade Review, laid the matter before him and in less than ten minutes the principal granted his request to close the school Wednesday afternoon.

The same feature was on the program at this house and not a scholar missed the opportunity to see it.

Moral: Read Exhibitors Trade Review for money-making news.

SEMON SIGNS BIG TRUART CONTRACT

To Appear in Feature Comedies With as Much Footage As Story Requires

New York.—During the national convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners in Chicago, M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Truart Film Corporation, signed Larry Semon, famous comedian, to a contract which calls for the payment of in excess of $3,000,000 to the star within a period of three years.

This action on the part of Mr. Hoffman represents another step forward in the fulfillment of the promise of Truart Film Corporation to offer upon the independent market an output of a calibre that will give assurance of the greatest money-making attractions the independent franchise-holders have ever handled.

It is conceded in the industry that Larry Semon not only ranks with the best as an artist but also that he is second to none as a director of comedy. His stories have always been produced in perfect continuity so that there is no overlapping of scenes and the matching of his close-up action with full shots is always perfect. Semon also has that ability which is inborn in a director, the knack of making people act.

In the series of super-production which are to be produced by the star for Truart Films Larry Semon will go into a different phase of production from that in which he has hitherto appeared. All the comedies will be in feature length; in fact, they will be in what is termed natural length or as much footage as the story requires whether it is 4000 feet or 8000 feet.

SNOW'S FEATURE BREAKS RECORD

*Many Turned Away During Hottest Spring Weather
England Has Known*

New York.—Word has been received by Universal Pictures Corporation from the London Pavilion, where the English premiere of Snow's "Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera" was held beginning the week of April 30th that the audiences there broke all records during its three weeks' run and that the film has become the talk of the English capital. This during the hottest Spring weather that England has known.

Regardless of the London theatre slump and that for weeks the Pavilion, which stands in the hub of the West End had failed to present a program which would fill the house, the entry of the Snow film caused long lines to form. People were turned away at each performance, and this continued throughout the entire run, so that this film broke all previous picture records for the Pavilion.

At both the opening sessions there were in attendance representatives of the Colonial office, every big game hunter in London, the Japanese Ambassador, the Italian Ambassador and other famous travelers.

After three weeks of constantly growing business, the third week being greater in volume of business and financial returns than the first two, the feature was transferred to the Bostock Animal Show at the Lyceum Theatre, Ipswich, where its run promises to be as popular as at the Pavilion.

TROUBLE STARTS OVER CHILD STUNT NIGHT

Cleveland, O.—Local exhibitors, especially those in the neighborhoods awoke last week to find a gigantic monster in their midst. About twelve or fifteen neighborhood theatres have, for several months, featured a "Kiddie Stunt Night" once a week. These "stunt nights" were given over to the performance of local talent, children whose ages run from about four to twelve.

The contests were given over to the singing, dancing, and instrumental offerings with a cash award to the winners and a box of candy to all other contestants. The children, it is claimed by one of the newspapers were not paid, the exhibitor paid the promoter and the promoter pocketed the entire amount. The newspaper came out with a four column scarehead and a flowery editorial. And the result proved somewhat of a boomerang. Thirty-five exhibitors withdrew their advertising from said newspaper.

While the entire matter is in violation of the General Code of Ohio, it is of necessity bound to work a hardship upon the exhibitor, for whether he was among the few who used "Stunt Night" or not he will be

NORMA TALMADGE NAME FOR THEATRE

Lon Chaney's popularity with the public has taken first rank and the announcement of his forthcoming appearance in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the super Jewel to be released next fall, has created additional interest in this sterling character actor.

The story deals with the activities of a man who discovered a secret chemical formula which when applied to his body makes it invisible. The Truart Exploitation staff is now engaged in compiling a long list exploitation hook ups and stunts to fit the needs of all exhibitors.

Ford Sterling is a funny man off the screen as well as on it, but he met his match recently when, during filming of "The Spoilers," he passed some jesting remarks with a freckled faced boy, Johnny Nickowitz, of Calabasas, California. Whatever Ford said to the boy, he didn't like it, for when Director Lambert Hillyer called the actor, Johnny cried out.

"Say, who is that wise cracker from the biscuit factory? What is his name?"

BIG SENSATION PLANNED BY DOUG

Production of the Thief of Bagdad is Well Under Way

Los Angeles.—Douglas Fairbanks again has set for himself the task of producing the photoplay sensation of the year, and according to reports from the studio, is well on the way to succeeding with "The Thief of Bagdad," plans for the production of which are well under way.

"Where 'Robin Hood' left off, 'The Thief of Bagdad' will begin." That is the slogan being pasted in the hats of those who are to be associated closely with this feature.

On the Piekford-Fairbanks studio property large sets are under way. The usual processes for the erection of picture structures of this kind has been reversed in preparing for the construction work in connection with this new film. As a rule drawings are made from which models are built, after which the sets are put up. In this instance, however, models were first made, then the drawings and finally the sets, thus making possible greater freedom and latitude in all construction work.

William Cameron Mexses and Irvin J. Martin specially engaged by Mr. Fairbanks to create something wholly new and different in the way of setting, have produced what it is believed will bring forth an innovation in motion picture edifices.

VALLEY OF CONTENT BARKER PRODUCTION

Los Angeles.—Blanche Upright's "The Valley of Content," the screen rights for which were purchased by Mr. Mayer some time ago, will be a Reginald Barker production for Louis B. Mayer for Metro release but it will be distributed under a different name not yet decided upon.

No starting date for production on this has been announced as Mr. Barker has left for the Canadian Northwest to film further exterior scenes for his forthcoming picture, "The Master of Woman" which is fast nearing completion.

MIDNIGHT ALARM BEING ASSEMBLED

Will Soon Be Ready for Exhibitors; Lloyd Lives in the Making.

New York.—Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announces that "The Midnight Alarm" has been finished and is now being assembled at the studios in Hollywood. This melodrama is another super-feature produced under Mr. Smith's policy of bigger and better pictures.

One of the biggest and most costly sets ever constructed by Vitagraph was erected for this feature. It included many buildings, one of them a ten-story structure, and reproduced two city business blocks. The destruction of the buildings at night by fire provides a thrill.

Many persons gathered at the Vitagraph lot to watch the shooting of the fire. An entire battalion of the Los Angeles Fire Department was on hand, not only to play its part in the rescue scenes, but to safeguard the studios of Vitagraph. The department provided a steam fire engine, a hook and ladder, an automatic ladder and a complete outfit of safety nets and oxygen tanks, a chemical wagon, water tower and other aids to fire fighters.

In addition to Miss Calhoun and Mr. Mar-mont in the cast there are Cullen Landis, Joseph Kilgour, Maxine Elliott Hicks, George Pierce, Kitty Bradbury and J. Gun-nis Davis.

The Whitman Bennett production, "Loyal Lives," a romance of the United States Post Office service, will have 339,000 living, breathing boosters who will herald this picture into every home, shop, store, factory, office and business house in America. They are the postmen of America.

Harry S. New, Postmaster General, has indorsed this story and through Paul Henderson, Assistant Postmaster General, has provided Mr. Bennett with every facility for making the picture. Walter S. Rydell, General Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, is giving his personal attention to the direction of the train scenes.

The story records the risks and hazards in defending the United States Mail. Few persons realize that the little two-cent stamp is a seal of safety and that behind it are not only the United States Post Office Department but the United States Army and Navy as well.

A. M. P. A. Meeting

New York.—Last week's meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers was turned into a "field day" for Harry Reichenbach. After a very interesting program, which was all built on kindly humor, John Flinn, president of the organization, introduced Reichenbach, who responded with what all declared to be the most interesting address of the numerous talks he has made to members of the organization. Harry sketched his associations with many of the film companies.

A WIFE'S ROMANCE IS NEW TITLE OF PICTURE

EXHIBITORS JOIN COMMERCE BODY

Kansas City Division M. P. T. O. Become Members of Local Chamber of Commerce

Kansas City, Mo.—With the formation of the Kansas City Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America this week, a new move in exhibitor organization has been launched. A. M. Eisner, former secretary of the M. P. T. O. Missouri, was elected president of the new league, which was organized at a meeting of exhibitors and Chamber of Commerce officials. Other officers are: J. Means, Murray theatre, Kansas City, vice-president; A. F. Gibbons, Prospect theatre, Kansas City, secretary, and Archie Josephson, Victory theatre, Kansas City, treasurer.

The formation of the new association, in that it includes a tie-up with the Kansas City Chamber of Commerce, is regarded as one of the most important moves towards advancing the industry that ever has been made in Kansas City. The new organization, it is believed, will do away with the consolidation of the Western Missouri and Kansas units, which has been pending for some time.

In the future the motion picture industry officially will be recognized by the Chamber of Commerce, exhibitors will constitute a motion picture committee, to work with the Chamber of Commerce, and this committee will co-operate with the Kansas City Parent-Teacher Association, an organization which has done much for the screen in Kansas City.

It is estimated, that under the plan of finance adopted, that the Kansas City division will be able to raise $7,000 annually from membership dues, which will be graduated from $3.50 to $25 a month, each theatre paying as its dues the amount of money obtained from running slides. No contract with any slide company has been entered into. The new organization will consist of about forty-five theatre owners of Kansas City, Mo.

"The problems of Kansas City exhibitors, which are much different from exhibitors in the territory, makes the formation of the Kansas City division absolutely necessary," Mr. Eisner said. "The membership dues will include a membership in the national and state associations, as well as in the Kansas City organization."

FISHER EXPANDING PRODUCTION PLANS

Los Angeles.—Victor B. Fisher, producer of "Youth Triumphant" at the Hollywood Studios, is in San Francisco conferring with associates on a deal involving increased producing activities. The results obtained in filming "Youth Triumphant" are said to have prompted the producers and those interested in Fisher Productions, to enter the Los Angeles producing industry on a much larger scale. While in San Francisco, Mr. Fisher will also close arrangements for two new stories.

"Youth Triumphant," is receiving its final editing and titling under the supervision of Lillian Ducey, the director.

Stage Successes Lined Up for the Screen

NEW STORIES FOR FIRST NATIONAL

Also Old Ones and Masterpieces to Be Brought to Be Adapted

New York.—In the opinion of First National players, directors and story form the trinity which count largely in the production of a successful and entertaining motion picture. The attention given by First National to the last named of these three, the story, has been just as great as that bestowed on the choice of the cast, and director, and as a result this distribution corporation is now able to announce some of the biggest and most successful novels and plays, some of them of recent publication and some old favorites which have stood the test of time for a long period of years.

The policy of acquiring literature for screen material, is illustrated by the purchase of the screen rights of "Black Oxen," Gertrude Atherton's novel.

The current releases show that that company's policy of big stories worthy of big pictures has been in effect for some time past. Instances of this are "The Bright Shawl," starring Richard Barthelmess, a screen adaptation of the novel of the same name by Joseph Hergesheimer; "Within the Law," starring Norma Talmadge, by Bayard Vellier; "Wandering Daughters," directed by James Young from the magazine story by Dana Burnett; "The Girl of the Golden West" considered by many the premiere American drama; Booth Tarkington's "Penrod and Sam," directed by William Beaudine and produced by J. K. MacDonald; and "Children of Dust," Borzage's screen version of "Terwilliger," by Tristram Tupper, presented through Arthur S. Jacobs.

For the coming season many well known stage successes, and popular novels have been lined up to be transcribed to the screen.

The announcement of Richard Walton Tully that he would bring "The Bird of Paradise" assures First National of a dramatic masterpiece in photoplay form. Mr. Tully wrote this play twelve years ago.

Under a recently signed contract Samuel Goldwyn will produce "Potash and Perlmutter" for First National release.

"The Bad Man" a play by Porter Emerson Browne, is awaiting First National production. "The Bad Man" had a long run on Broadway and has already played two years on the road.

Thomas H. Ince will present "Anna Christie," the Eugene O'Neill play which was awarded the Pulitzer prize as the play which has done the most during the year to advance the interests of American dramatics.

"Secrets" is another drama which Joseph M. Schenck purchased the screen rights of. Norma Talmadge will be seen in the title role.

Another play to be pictured is Avery Hopwood's "Why Men Leave Home," Louis B. Mayer has purchased the screen rights and John M. Stahl will direct.

A European stage sensation, "Madame Pompadour" will be imported by Joseph M. Schenck for Constance Talmadge.

"Her Temporary Husband," Edward Paulton's farce comedy will be brought to the screen with Sydney Chaplin in the leading male role.

"The Spite Corner," a comedy drama in which Madge Kennedy starred during a long run on Broadway.

The list of forthcoming pictures which will be adapted for the screen from published novels or magazine stories is equally imposing. First National has more than two dozen books and magazine serials which are either in production or in the hands of the screen adapters.

Among the stories are:

"Circus Days" from the old circus story "Toby Tyler" by James Otis in which Jackie Coogan is starred.

"The Huntress" a comedy drama of the great American outdoors, from the pen of Hulbert Footner. It will be Colleen Moore's first starring picture.

"The Fighting Blade," a period drama from the pen of Beulah Marie Dix, which will be produced by Inspiration Pictures with Richard Barthelmess in the stellar role.

"The Wanters," by Lelia Burton Wells, a comedy drama with New York society life as a background. John M. Stahl will direct this picture for Louis B. Mayer with Marie Prevost and Robert Ellis in the starring roles. Richard Headrick has been signed to play an important role.

"Her Reputation," adapted from the novel "The Devil's Own" by Talbot Mundy and Bradley King. Thomas H. Ince will present this story through First National.

"Purple Pride," by H. B. Somerville, an English authoress. Norma Talmadge will star. The novel was published as "Ashes of Vengeance" in England, and is to be issued in this country shortly.

"Flaming Youth" a Metropolitan Magazine story by Warner Fabian.

"The Lord of Thundergate," a Sunset Magazine serial and novel from the pen of Sidney Herschell Small.

"Dust in the Doorway," Dixie Wilson's McClures Magazine story, which Frank Borzage will bring to the screen.

"Country Lanes and City Pavements," a novel by John Fleming Wilson, which will be personally directed by Thomas H. Ince.

"Ponjola," from the Cosmopolitan magazine serial and novel by Cynthia Stockley. James Young will direct.

"The Eternal City" Hall Caine's novel, which will be produced by George Fitzmaurice for Samuel Goldwyn.

"The Swamp Angel," from the Collier's Magazine story by Richard Connell.

"Rope" a novel by Holsworthy Hall.

"The Dangerous Maid" from the novel "Barbara Winslow Rebel" by Elizabeth Ellis which has been purchased by Joseph M. Schenck and which will have Constance Talmadge in the stellar role.

"The Sea Hawk" by Rafael Sabatini, author of "Scaramouche" and "Captain Blood."

"Moving Fingers" by Elizabeth Irons Folson, which was published in Everybody's Magazine in serial form.

"Pearls before Cecily," a Saturday Evening Post story by Charles Brockett.

Stormy Seas Released July 1

New York.—Romance, suspense and thrills are said to be mingled in Associated Exhibitors feature, "Stormy Seas," starring J. P. McGowan and Helen Holmes, which is set for release July 1. The story is by Arthur W. Donaldson.

W. W. HODKINSON TOURS THEATRES

Makes Personal Trip of Houses Showing Down to the Sea in Ships

New York City.—In order to secure first hand information regarding the simultaneous showing of "Down to the Sea in Ships" in thirty theatres in this city, W. W. Hodkinson made a personal tour of most of the theatre during the week.

Starting in the early evening he covered, Manhattan, Harlem, Bronx and Brooklyn. He talked with exhibitors in each section visited, and was very much gratified at the enthusiasm and satisfaction expressed.

He reports that practically every exhibitor reported that the picture was breaking all house records, against the stiffest kind of opposition. Mr. Hodkinson says: "The night which I chose for making my tour of inspection was Thursday, which is usually considered an 'off' night. The weather was warm as well, with beach and amusement parks such as Coney Island offering their attractions, which is not ordinarily conducive to theatre going. In nearly every theatre visited, however, I found them playing to standing room, and many had a line at the box office extending down the block.

Feature Enjoys Big Business

Washington, D. C.—"Soul of the Beast," a Metro picture produced by Thomas H. Ince, played a successful week at Loew's Columbia Theatre. Managing Director Lawrence Beatis of Loew's Washington theatres and Manager Gates of the Columbia, carried out an elaborate advance campaign on the picture and reaped excellent results. Motion picture critics of the Washington dailies were enthusiastic in their praise of this feature.

VINDICATION OF WILLIAM S. HART

*Jesse L. Lasky Comments on Clearance of Film
Star's Name*

Hollywood.—Following the vindication of William S. Hart of the charges brought against him some months ago by a Boston woman, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, gave out the following statement at his office:

"Following William S. Hart's retirement, which the whole photoplay-loving world hoped was only temporary, we had arrived at a point where we hoped to be able to announce his return to the screen. When this trouble, based on the charge which now has been absolutely repudiated, arose, I was firmly convinced of Mr. Hart's integrity and the public's ability to reach just conclusions. Knowing him innocent I repeatedly urged him to appear once again, as a star in Paramount pictures.

"Mr. Hart came to see me several times. I knew no one believed the charges against him and I strove to convince him this was so. But Mr. Hart, splendid man that he is and supersensitive, refused to return to the screen until there remained no shadow of doubt as to his innocence in the mind of a single person in the whole world. He possessed strong convictions upon the necessity of keeping faith with the public. He resolutely refused to return unless he could share his old time sense of comradeship with those he worked to entertain. Mr. Hart said to me, 'I will never accept a dollar of the public's money until I have convinced them I am worthy to receive it. I want to be able to look out from the screen and meet every man, woman and child eye to eye. Until then I will remain outside the profession I love and to which I might have returned if it had not been for this terrible accusation.'

"As he faced me across my desk it came upon me then what a great tragedy it was that he should suffer penalties of guilt when I knew him to be innocent. Those who know him well always have believed him guiltless. My personal happiness that they have been proved groundless will be shared by hundreds of thousands. I am awaiting the moment which I hope will be within a very few days, when William S. Hart, one of America's greatest and most popular film stars, will come to me in my office and say, 'Mr. Lasky, I am ready to go to work.'"

Car Strike Hurts

Albany, N. Y.—Motion picture theatres of Schenectady, N. Y., hard hit during winter, one of which went into the hands of a receiver recently, are suffering a loss of hundreds of dollars a day, through a street car strike tying up city and interurban service. The houses in Schenectady operate Sundays, and draw heavily from sections through which the interurban cars pass. During some nights the larger houses of the city appeared practically empty, while neighborhood houses also complained.

Introduce Novelty in Feature

Hollywood.—An "Empire" fete is one of the features made for "The Silent Partner," Charles Maigne's production for Paramount in which Leatrice Joy, Owen Moore and Robert Edson are featured. They appear in these scenes respectively as Louise of Prussia, Murat and Napoleon.

NO MORE TITLES CAN BE HANDLED

Answers to Preferred Pictures' Announcement Swamp Home Office

New York.—Replies received by B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, in answer to the announcement that he was in the market for box-office titles suitable for a number of stories he contemplates has reached such proportions that he is now asking that exhibitors cease stressing this announcement to the public. No more titles can be considered.

The publicity given this search all over the country has resulted in the receipt of so many letters listing suggestions that the staff engaged to handle the communications is completely swamped.

Hearing on Portables

Albany, N. Y.—There was a spirited hearing before Governor Alfred E. Smith at the executive chamber last week over the Steingut measures, which have passed the New York state legislature, and which pertain to miniature motion picture machines. The whole question centers around inflammable and non-inflammable film. Both kinds were submitted to the Governor for his inspection and one of the speakers defied the Governor to tell which was which. According to Assistant Fire Chief Hayes, the two bills, if they became laws, would simply let down the bars and increase fire hazards.

Ince Filming on Thames

INDEFINITE RUNS

FOR "MAIN STREET"

Warner Versions of Lewis Novel In Sixth Big Week at Mission Los Angeles.

Los Angeles—Warner Brothers screen version of Sinclair Lewis' "Main Street" continues on its sixth successful week of an indefinite run at the Mission Theatre.

An unusual arrangement whereby a second run house charges a higher admission than a first run is cited in the cases of White's Theatre and the Kinema in Fresno. "Main Street" is to play at White's at a $1 top and the Kinema, which is a first run, will play it at regular prices. This situation also applies to "Brass."

It is planned to show "Main Street" simultaneously at three theatres in Boston, the Modern and Beacon Theatres, which play it a week, and the Park, where "Main Street" is to have an indefinite run, will all open with the feature at the same time early in June.

BROADWAY PREMIERE FOR "THE MEANEST MAN"

Los Angeles.—"The Meanest Man in the World" produced by Principal Pictures Corporation in Los Angeles, will have its world premiere on Broadway, New York, at the George M. Cohan theatre.

Adapted from the George M. Cohan play of the same name "The Meanest Man in the World" was filmed under the direction of Edward F. Cline. The cast appearing in the film includes Bert Lytell, Blanche Sweet, Bryant Washburn, Maryon Aye, Helen Lynch, Lincoln Stedman, Frances Raymond, Victor Potel, William Conklin, Carl Stockdale, and Forrest Robinson.

LEE ANNOUNCES SUMMER FRANCHISE

New York.—The general rule heretofore in vogue among independent exchanges to discontinue releasing films during the summer is not to be observed by the Lee-Bradford Corporation, according to a report from that concern announcing a "summer franchise" devised by President Arthur A. Lee.

According to this announcement this franchise on six of the Lee-Bradford productions will enable the exchangeman to release a new picture every two weeks during the summer months without any investment on his part. According to the terms of the franchise exchanges do not have to pay for pictures until they have earned money.

TRI-STONE ENLARGES PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT

President Oscar A. Price and Vice-President and General Manager H. E. Aitken Tri-Stone Pictures, Inc., have re-organized and enlarged the advertising and publicity department of that organization preparatory to the release of a series of re-edited Triangle features.

Douglas Fairbanks in "The Americano" will be the first of the new edition Triangle features to be released, probably about June 15. John Emerson and Anita Loos, who wrote the original continuity, have entirely re-edited and re-titled the feature for Tri-Stone. Alma Rubins has the leading feminine role.

Eugene Clifford, Jr., formerly with the Trimble-Murfin Productions, has been placed in charge of the advertising and publicity departments.

C. B. C. SELECTS SHOPGIRL BEAUTY

"Greatest Menace" Opens At Garrick, Philadelphia

J. G. Mayer's production "The Greatest Menace," depicting the effects of the drug evil, opened an indefinite run in Philadelphia at the Garrick Theatre, Monday, May 28, at a $1.30 scale.

The picture, which offers an all star cast including Ann Little, Wilfred Lucas, Robert Gordon and Harry Northrup, is recording a popular success in towns throughout the country according to reports from the offices of the Resolute Film Corporation, which quotes a telegram from Carr-Shad, Reading, Pa., to the effect that the picture "broke all box office records when it played there." Equal enthusiasm on the part of the public was exhibited in Los Angeles and in Montreal, Canada.

Short Subjects and Serials

TURPIN'S FIRST PATHE COMEDY

*Where's My Wandering Boy
This Evening? Title of
Two Reeler*

New York.—Pathe reports receipt of evidence that exhibitors are fully alive to what may be expected of Ben Turpin's first two-reel comedy produced and shortly to be released under the Pathe-Mack Sennett contract. The comedian and his supporting cast have started work under the new regime on "Where's My Wandering Boy This Evening?"

This comedy is described as the frankest Turpinesque burlesque of the idea contained in the popular song, the title of which is so amusingly travestied. "The Boy" in the case is a shining rural example well calculated to become the easy victim of a city girl of vampish attractions and intentions. He falls under a series of thuds accentuated by the girl's cruel departure accompanied by "his savings of a lifetime." Details of the process bear out the title, and are said to furnish scenes more laughable than any others in Turpin's celebrated career.

Madeline Hurlock, is the vampish city girl, and Priscilla Bonner, the rural sweetheart who forgives and forgets. Dot Farley is the doting mother. Jim Finlayson plays the part of a jealous hired man. This comedy is on Pathe's schedule for release early in the Summer.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

Hyde and Zeke, Pathe

Leo Maloney stars in another "Range Rider" 2-reeler. The familiar "chase" of slapstick comedies is here used to diverting effect as farce. Zeke and his sweetheart have a hard road in their love affair—an unreasonable father objects to Zeke and favors a wealthy scamp. Circumstances bring all characters into a ranch house and by queer coincidence each is puzzled by the sounds of the others but cannot locate them, there being walking in and out of rooms by all the people who by the fraction of a second miss meeting each other until the final scene, when there is some "action." Altogether it is an amusing and thoroughly diverting farce melodrama and will make a bright spot on any program.

The Brink of Eternity, Pathe

The sixth chapter in the Patheserial "Haunted Valley" starring Ruth Roland. The two reels are given over to showing melodramatics created by the amazing contraptions mechanical and electrical which the villain uses to protect the treasures of Haunted Valley.

There is a machine — a box with wheels and pulleys and having a Brownie 2-A camera mounted on it—which enables the villain to project the image of men in phantom form before intruders in the valley. The story does not advance much. Ruth must have a million dollars in order to hold her right to Haunted Valley and accompanied by the hero she is in search of this when the weird inventions are encountered.

The Stork's Mistake, Pathe

An Aesop Film Fable telling a heart-interest story. Mr. Stork leaves a puppy in the home of Mr. Cat, who is so moved by the pup's touching appeal that he gives it a home, much to the delight of the little cats. The pup shows his appreciation when circumstance leads him into a wealthy home and he makes off with a feast of turkey for his benefactors the Cats. This is well up to the finest standards of the Aesop tales and in it Paul Terry reveals once more that in producing comic effects of gesture and motion he is eminent above all present-day motion cartoonists. This should get a big hand from all audiences.

The Kid Reporter, Universal

This is a Century Comedy, featuring Baby Peggy as a newspaper reporter. Here are two-reels that will strike the audiences just right. Baby Peggy is employed as a stenographer in a newspaper office, and when she learns that the first reporter to get a certain story will be made editor she gets into disguise and tries out her luck. Needless to say the youngster brings home the bacon, which in this case is not bacon at all but a valuable necklace, and she is therefore made editor.

The Fate of a Nation, Universal

The sixteenth episode of the Oregon Trail series finds the hero captured by Coulier and another desperate attempt is made to gain possession of the papers. McLoughlin enters into the story again, and Coulier, thinking he might have the papers, also makes a prisoner of him until they discover the real hiding place. Coulier then prepares his men to take aim and fire when Jean enters. The chapter ends just as Jean is about to open the door to the room with the men prepared to shoot.

Pathe Review No. 23

As its most interesting feature this number offers some simple home experiments in human magnetism, accepted by the French Academy as scientific proofs. There is an article showing how the ladies are unbobbing their locks by adding switches and the humorous number is a "Silliette" telling the adventures of an absent-minded poet. Queer facts about dolls are pictured in the American Indian Series and the Pathecolor feature is titled "Laughing Cascades of the Pyrenees."

Golf, Educational

Golf, as played by Gene Sarazen, will be a subject of great interest to a number of people knowing or learning the game. In it are set forth the methods of the champion and several good pointers for the golfer to bear in mind. It shows the stands and strokes used with the various clubs, and as this game has a large number of devotees the film should prove popular because of its authenticity.

The Watch Dog, Pathe

A Hal Roach Dippy Doo Dad, one-reel comedy enacted by animals. A monkey, dog and goat star. The reel provides some of the most amazing animal stunts the screen or stage has offered. The remarkable clowning of the monkey and the histrionic abilities of the dog and goat seem certain to register a big hit with screen patrons. This is a most interesting and entertaining reel.

DIVULGES THRILLS OF NEW SERIAL

Roach Sends Information Concerning "Her Dangerous Path" Thriller in Ten Episodes

Through the Pathe home office information is received from the Hal Roach Studios concerning "Her Dangerous Path," 10 episode Pathe-serial now in production with Edna Murphy as the star.

In each of the ten episodes of "Her Dangerous Path" the heroine appears in a different character and among the outstanding thrills of the first seven chapters are the following:

No. 1. Heroine is hospital nurse and a big thrill comes when she endeavors to save a doctor and a delirious patient struggling on the top of a tall chimney. No. 2. Heroine is the wife of a poor chauffeur. There is an automobile wreck in which a car plunges over a cliff. No. 3. The side of a hill is blown up, rocks and earth tumbling down and burying the auto containing the heroine, here seen as the wife of a society man. She is saved and later is seen climbing the side of a burning building to save her child. No. 4. As the secretary to a politician the heroine supplies the big thrill when she saves the leading man, who is engaged in a fight with the villain high up on the girder of a skyscraper. In episode 6 the heroine is the wife of a western ranchman, number 7 a newspaper reporter.

Better Than Gold, Universal

Here is one of the "Tales of the Old West" series that is planned along fairly familiar lines but sufficiently good as a two-reeler. It is a story of a young engineer who is discharged because of taking sides with an Indian and who later gets his reward by a favor from the same Indian. There are some thrills and good action throughout the picture.

Shooting the Earth, Educational

Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge affords some pleasing entertainment. Under the sub-title of "some sense and some nonsense" comes a variety of subjects covering numerous countries and customs. The shots are out of the ordinary and mixed as they are with a bit of fun should appeal to a large majority who seek novelties on the screen.

The Land of Tut-ankh-Amen, Fox

This is one of the Fox Educational and shows views taken in Egypt. There are pictures of the ruins in Thebes and Karnak, the Nile and glimpses of the newly discovered tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen. The picture is interesting, and at this particular time should be well received.

BY GEORGE T. PARDY

The coming of a new Griffith production is an event which always stirs up the critics considerably and leads to careful dissection of its virtues and faults, comparisons with that director's past achievements, essays upon art as applied in the movies and so on. And at the present time of writing "The White Rose" is undergoing its baptism of reviewing fire, the opinions being generally favorable, although some of the molders of public fancy have seen fit to complain peevishly that the picture represents a decadence in the Griffith aesthetic standards, inasmuch as it presents an oft told story, melodramatic in tone, an appeal to the elemental emotions and therefore likely to move the unsophisticated masses to tears, but quite unworthy the commendation of the Higher Culture disciples.

The plain fact of the matter is that Mr. Griffith has given the screen an extremely good picture. Not a great picture, as judged by strictly artistic standards, but "good" in the sense that it is able to move thousands of spectators to alternate tears and laughter and send them home feeling that they have been well entertained and received the full worth of their money, with something over. In trade circles a "good" picture is one that proves a winning box office attraction, makes a successful bid for popularity and enables theatre owners to hang out the S. R. O. sign. As the indications are that "The White Rose" meets all these requirements, what more can the exhibitor want?

To those superior souls who snicker contemptuously over the obtrusion of what is vulgarly known as "hokum" in film plots, we would respectfully point out that while "hokum" may not be art as they see it, a great deal of artistic knowledge and skilled craftsmanship is necessary to the shaping of the said "hokum" into entertainment to suit the public taste. And this Mr. Griffith has certainly accomplished. He has taken a story of marked simplicity and with the aid of his subtle technique, wonderful photographic effects and the exquisitely fine acting of Mae Marsh, supported by a talented cast of players—produced a film which fairly plays havoc with the spectators' emotions and keeps them in throes of expectations up to the finale, when the heroine's troubles are ended and she basks in the warm glow of requited love. "If this be hokum—make the most of it!"

The picture's outstanding feature is the delicately natural and marvelously appealing work of Mae Marsh in the role of Teazie. Her evolution from an unsophisticated little orphan girl into a coquettish flapper of the most pronounced type is as versatile a bit of acting as the screen has ever known and in scene after scene, surcharged with pathos but never overdone, she and her baby literally steal into the very hearts of the onlookers. It is a masterly performance, a splendid come-back feat for Miss Marsh after her long absence from the silver sheet, a triumph alike for director and leading woman. For exploitation purposes the fact that "The White Rose" is the latest Griffith contribution to filmdom should be stressed and attention called to the return of Mae Marsh to the screen in a role in which she surpasses all her previous work as a star.

In estimating a picture according to the best of such light as may have been accorded you it is perhaps unwise to attempt it within a quarter of an hour after the picture finishes. It may be laid down as a fair rule to follow that at least one should give his eyes a chance to dry.

"The White Rose" contains one situation which for strength the writer believes will match the scene of Jean Valjean as played by Henry Kraus and the child and the doll, the Pathe "Les Miserables," as he recalls that scene as he saw it ten years ago. It will match it and may overmatch it. That is the sequence of the dying woman and the father of her child, the minister, contrite but lacking the force of character theretofore to go out and hunt for the woman he loved and the one which events proved he had wronged. In other words, the minister was a human being and followed the course that human beings are as a very general rule bound to follow.

For the picture as a whole it is dramatic at times, entertaining always. When you make the latter remark about a subject that is 2 hours and 2 minutes in the running you are saying a lot. There is a thrill in the first 150 feet in the scene between the boy and the girl.

You may say it is a woman's picture because it always holds the spotlight upon the one phase of life that is woman's chief dominion. But it is a man's picture just as much. In fact, it is fair to assume that consideration must have been given to the title of "The Fallen Man." It is one of the obvious conclusions.

No one who has been in the South or who has dreamed of going there can fail to be charmed with the beauty of the settings, with the Spanish moss so typical of the lower Mississippi. No one who loves his "Evangeline" as in suspense he sees Teazie with her baby pass the window of the room where sits the father of that little one can fail to recall the tragic passing of the heroine made famous by Longfellow and her lover on opposite sides of an island.

If the picture fails to dig in deeply in the first half, if it, in that division of the story, is more pure entertainment, the latter portion more than compensates, if anyone is seeking a picture that deeply stirs, seeking one that is good to see.

BY TOM KENNEDY

"The White Rose" has extraordinary emotional appeal. Indeed, a work which so sways the emotions of the spectator regardless of the spectator's volitions is rare among the plays of the stage and screen. In this work D. W. Griffith is preacher, philosopher and poet to an extent which gives the notion that never before has he produced a screen drama so closely approaching his individual ideas of what a photoplay should be. But it really doesn't matter that in "The White Rose" Mr. Griffith is more intensely himself than ever before, because he never once forgot that he was also a picture producer, and personal conviction as to the importance of the theme and story may explain the intense dramatic force of an old, old story; the vitality of characters possessing no fundamental greatness and the suspense of situations as familiar as any joke about any two Irishmen.

For present considerations the important fact is that "The White Rose" attacks the spectator's emotions with the violence of a tornado. And next comes the fact that Mae Marsh's portrait—it cannot honestly be called a "performance"—of "Teazie" is one of the most moving spectacles ever developed on the screen. Therefore the exhibitor has to offer his patrons an emotion-stirring play and a characterization which they will long remember. On these two points it seems hardly possible that "The White Rose" could be "over-sold."

"The White Rose" is a love story, spectacular and thrilling only in the way that the humane can be spectacular and thrilling. It is melodrama without crowds and devoid of the glamor of such melodramatic devices as express trains, shipwrecks or horse races. There is not the sensational appeal of many outstanding photoplays of the past.

Mr. Griffith's photographic effects are in his best manner—which is to say that they are of surpassing beauty. The mood transitions are superbly handled, the tempo treated with expert precision. In fact, once you grant the premises "The White Rose" is a triumph of photoplay art.

For atmosphere—which is to say for illusion—for sheer beauty of scene, and for immense humanity and reality and touching appeal of the character lived, not acted, by Mae Marsh "The White Rose" is truly exceptional. It is an engrossing love story with pathos predominating, but with many smiles, some boisterousness—offered by Porter Strong's black-face comedy—and shot through with symbolic significance. It is always vital, frequently brilliant and sometimes really great drama.

By JAMES M. DAVIS

"The White Rose" is a love story of tremendous appeal. It is beautifully told and will not fail to reach the heart. Mr. Griffith has chosen some of the most picturesque spots of the Bayou Teche country for his exteriors and has reproduced on the screen a series of these shots that for scenic beauty have seldom, if ever, been equaled. The picture will be a joy to those who know the real South. For once, a single stately white mansion with huge columns does not have to bear the whole burden of so-called southern atmosphere. Mr. Griffith has used every means to photograph as much of this section in detail as was necessary to give the picture realism. We do however, think the negro comedy is a bit tiresome and the weakest part of the production, but as it serves its purpose and will no doubt please some it is excusable.

Mae Marsh does a magnificent piece of work and proves herself to be an actress of rare ability. Ivor Novello, in his first American made picture does creditable work. Carol Dempster is attractive as Marie Carington and Neil Hamilton shows promise of shortly setting the feminine hearts aflutter. This production will stand as another work of art to Mr. Griffith's credit.

By HOWARD McLELLAN

It is a box office attraction. It is more of a box office attraction than an artistic triumph. It has a pretty, happy ending, one of the requisites to box office success. It has the suspense and the pathos, the tugs at heart strings and the power to relieve those tugs with flushes of joy. It has the necessary elements of problem drama, the wholesome, sweet kisses of the virtuous woman, ardent love making, intense loves which, when about to go unrequited and are suddenly reciprocated, an innocent well meaning young woman's fall from grace and her regeneration along with that of her lover. And these, after all, pull mere mortals into the theatre.

Besides all these—and we are still looking at it, or trying to, through the ever hungry ticket window—"The White Rose" brings Mae Marsh back to the screen triumphantly in a sort of comeback. No where either in her former pictures or her more recent ones of English make, has Miss Marsh ever done as fine a piece of acting. Her transformation from a sad eyed, clumsy orphan girl leaving the asylum to buck life's stream; her ardent whole hearted love making scenes; her wistfulness; her naturalness; her eager desire to die and her equally sudden desire to live when the love is rekindled are splendid pieces of acting. The many millions who knew Mae Marsh in the other days will relish her work in this picture.

Now as to how best this picture can be sold to the public. First it has the name of D. W. Griffith back of it and the reappearance of a favorite actor and the first appearance in this country of Ivor Novello. These are exploitable possibilities, big ones and in the absence of a more lurid or attention arresting title must be used if a theatreman is to get out of the picture its full measure of value. Then it is pure drama filled with moments of sweet youthful passion—and do not mistake this to mean vulgar licentiousness—that is not Griffith's way of making pictures.

Katherine Kimberly	Mary Culver
Tom Kimberly	Bruce Boteler

Colonel Wright and his foreman Curly have raised Bonnie Bell from babyhood, and when a tremendous offer comes to them for the ranch they decide to sell and send the girl off to college. After her education is completed they all come to the city to live. Bonnie Bell is grieved to find that they are not accepted in society. Their neighbors, the Wisners, are leaders, and when Colonel Wright tries to make friends he is spurned by them. Bonnie Bell mistakes their young son for the gardener and asks his advice regarding some planting. From that time on they become great friends, but Jimmy Wisner never tells her who he really is. Finally they elope and Jimmy confesses that he did not want a girl to marry him for his money, so he did not disclose his name, until he knew that Bonnie Bell loved him. They return to the Wisner mansion and Colonel Wright and Curly are welcomed.

thinking that he has come to sell whiskey to the men. When she learns that he himself is fighting off drunkenness she begins to feel more kindly toward him. They are lost in a blinding snowstorm and take refuge in a little hut. Claw, manager of a dance hall, also sees the girl and later comes back to make her a captive. Ace learns of her disappearance and sets out after them to rescue her. He reaches the little town and finds that she is being held prisoner in a room upstairs. In a struggle that takes place between Claw and Ace the place is set on fire. Ace saves the girl and the old Indian confesses that Snowdrift is a white child that has been left in her care.

This story will serve to satisfy the patrons who enjoy a melodramatic plot and especially the followers of Charles Jones. It cannot boast of presenting anything new as far as material is concerned, but it will afford plenty of thrills and excitement for those who still get a kick out of this type of picture. There are some good long shots of the snow country, and the burning of the dance hall is a spectacular moment in the film.

Charles Jones gives a clean-cut performance and handles his role convincingly. Dorothy Manners is attractive as Snowdrift and Irene Rich, as Kitty, is also good. G. Raymond Nye makes a satisfactory villain. J. M. D.

Gaston Leroux, inn-keeper and fur trader of La Paix, Northern Canada, has a daughter named Annette who is in love with Sheriff Andre Porel. In a fight with Indian Charlie, seller of stolen pelts, Porel is wounded and nursed back to health by Annette. Paul Gerard, wealthy rake, is witness to the killing of Indian Charlie by Gaston and agrees to keep the secret if rewarded by Annette's hand. For her father's sake she consents. Annette in desperation determines to commit suicide but hesitates and leaves a glass of poison in her bedroom. Gerard drinks the poison in mistake for wine and dies. Annette is arrested and convicted of murdering him. On the day of execution an avalanche sweeps away the scaffold and kills Gaston. The villagers take it as a sign from God that Annette is innocent. She is released and marries Porel.

As regards its photographic effects this picture registers 100 per cent. The snow scenes and beautiful forest backgrounds provide charming atmosphere, long shots and closeups are alike perfect and excellent lighting marks the whole production. But not much can be said for the plot, which runs along in a well-worn rut and does not begin to gather interest until toward the last when the sentencing of the heroine to death tightens up the suspense and leads up to a thrilling and realistic climax.

The film starts off slowly, the action con-

This picture is pleasingly done and should prove to be a good attraction in any house. Emerson Hough, the author of "The Covered Wagon," has given a story here that will appeal to all classes. In it there is combined laughter and pathos, pleasantly diverting throughout, and a well balanced cast completes the requirements of good entertainment.

The picture has been elaborately produced, and some of the interiors give the impression of great magnitude. The exterior shots are also good and afford some attractive outdoor glimpses.

Alice Calhoun's performance appears to be sincere and her work shows up well. James Morrison is an agreeable hero. David Torrence as Colonel Wright is good, and also a pleasing bit is contributed by Frank Sheridan. J. M. D.

Carter Brent, better known as Ace-in-the-hole, loses his wealth gambling up in the Klondike region and sets out to find new gold. While in camp he meets Snowdrift, the daughter of an old Indian who lives there. He falls in love with her, but she distrusts him and will have nothing to do with him, tinuing languid until about the third reel, when events begin to move at a swifter gait. But as a whole the feature does not register above the average and is decidedly below the mark of other productions in which Alice Brady has been starred. This is by no means the fault of the leading lady, who works with her usual dash and energy, yet all her efforts do not suffice to make the role a convincing one. Probably the best thing in the story is the finale, not so much because of the descent of the avalanche and sweeping away of the scaffold, but because the human interest touch is well developed by the intervention of what is seemingly an act of Providence to save an innocent person from an unjust fate.

Miss Brady is well supported. Maurice Flynn is a good-looking, athletic sheriff and fills the part in capable fashion. Nick Thompson as Indian Charlie and Jack Baston as the villainous Gerard are excellent character types, while Mario Majeroni wins favor as the heroine's somewhat sinister find "Slander the Woman" mighty good entertainment and the chances are that they won't stop to argue over its probabilities, when once swept into its swift current of decisive action.

Another point in the film's favor is that never a Royal Northwest Mounted cop appears in heroic guise, something refreshingly unusual where a picture is staged in the domain of Our Lady of the Snows. Also we are shown a courtroom scene which is extremely well done and not too prolonged, another good mark to director Allen Holubar's credit.

There is a big dramatic moment when the shooting takes place at the ice carnival, another when Yvonne is saved from a springing mountain lion and well sustained suspense following the killing of Scarborough and the tangling of Judge Duroacher in a net of circumstantial evidence, from which he finally emerges safely, the avowed lover of Yvonne.

The snow photography is exquisite, including a variety of skillful long shots and popular with audiences who have not become tired of the Canadian Northwest as a locale and those who still cling to the half-breed villain.

Roy Stewart looks and acts the part of a Mountie and appears to be especially well suited to these roles. Laura La Plante is pretty to look upon, but has comparatively little to do in this picture. Harold Goodwin is good as Ross Darby and Harry Carter and Noble Johnson supply the thrills as first and second villains. J. M. D.

Yvonne Desmarest becomes involved in a shooting case, following the killing of M. Redoux by his wife. Judge Duroacher brands Yvonne as "the other woman." Yvonne denounces the judge and goes with her servant Nanette to an old hunting lodge in the Hudson Bay District, where they make friends with a trapper known as Emile. Returning from a trip Emile brings with him an Indian girl and white man named Scarborough, whom he had found nearly frozen. Duroacher learns that he has done Yvonne an injustice and comes to the lodge. His arrival scares Emile, as under his real name of Dr. Molleur he is wanted for a murder committed years before, a fact which is known to Scarborough. The latter is found stabbed to death with Duroacher bending over him. Toward the end of the winter the Indian girl confesses that she slew Scarborough. Duroacher tells Yvonne he loves her and is shot by Emile in a fit of jealous fury. Duroacher recovers and Emile learns from him that he need no longer dread the old murder charge, as the real criminal has admitted his guilt. Yvonne realizes that her former hate for Duroacher has turned to love.

This is a fast moving melodrama of the Canadian Northwest, scoring as many physical thrills as a wild-running serial but presenting a compact plot and wealth of really superb photography. There are moments when the story isn't exactly convincing, for instance, the sudden evolution of the heroine from an accepted town belle into a species of dare devil Amazon who is ready to scrap or shoot on the slightest provocation, doesn't ring true.

But just the same, Dorothy Phillips puts so much fire and dash into her conception of the role and looks so alluring that one is ready to accept her Yvonne as offered and believe in the lady. It's the kind of tale that the spectator must make due melodramatic license for, without subjecting the course of events to close analysis, if he or she really wishes to enjoy it. The many lovers of adventure, romance and thrills will close-ups which seem actually to exhale the icy breath of winter, a grateful vision to contemplate on a torrid June day.

Dorothy Phillips plays the part of Yvonne with immense energy, is at all times graceful, good to gaze upon and gives an excellent performance. She is well supported, Lewis Dayton scoring a hit in the role of Duroacher, Robert Anderson providing a telling character sketch of Emile Molleur. Rosemary Theby is a fascinating Mme. Redoux, Ynez Seabury wins favor as the Indian Girl and the work of the large cast as a whole deserves sincere praise.

Dorothy Phillips possesses a strong following among "movie" fans, and her name can be utilized to advantage in exploiting the film. A lobby display of trappers' outfits, snowshoes, etc., would also be in order.

Pop Tuttle's Russian Rumors, F. B. O.

This latest of the "Pop Tuttle" pictures has a good lot of laughs and where these comedies have proven popular before this will be equally well received. "Pop," as the proprietor of a country hotel starts a rumor that a Russian count has died and left a large amount of money hidden in his room. As soon as the news is successfully broadcasted the townspeople begin to flock in for reservations. Pop begins to make money for a change and is enjoying his prosperity when Tillie, who has fallen in love with a traveling salesman, starts wrecking the place in her attempt to commit suicide after learning the ways of the traveling man. In the upheaval money is discovered hidden in the count's mattress. Pop claims ownership and begins to count his millions that turn out to be only rubles.

papa. The picture is hardly suited to the demands of the better class of theatres but may pass as an attraction for the smaller houses.

Displays of furs and green foliage in the lobby and a street ballyhoo, with men dressed in the attire of the Canadian backwoods should help largely in exploiting the film. G. T. P.

David Darby, one of the North Mounted Police, takes his brother Ross under his care into the service. Ross proves to be a weakling and David always has to do his work for him. Ross also loses heavily at gambling, and when Slip Martin tries to make him pay up his debts he murders him. Ross escapes and the duty falls upon David to bring back his brother dead or alive. He goes after him and makes him face trial. When he learns the punishment will be death David tries to take the blame for the murder on himself, but evidence produced shows Ross guilty. He is sentenced to die and David endeavors to keep this report from his parents who have always favored the younger son. They are not told until some time later when David is married and a grandchild is born to brighten their lives.

Roy Stewart's first Universal starring vehicle is a story of the Northwest. The material affords some good action and plays upon the sympathies of the spectator by allowing the hero to assume a "greater love hath no man" attitude and sacrificing himself throughout the film. It should prove

5. Soprano and Tenor Duet
6. Dorothy Dalton in Fog Bound (Paramount)
7. Pepita Grandados, danseuse
8. Lloyd Hamilton in No Luck (Educational)

Press Comments

Tribune—Seems a pretty good production. American—It was pure and unadulterated movie stuff all the way through. Eve. World—Dorothy Dalton, as far as we could see, has her ideal part in 'Fog Bound.' Journal—It has some exciting moments and a fair amount of suspense. Telegram—The type of photoplay in which Miss Dalton is at her best. Sun—It is enlivened by numerous thrilling expeditions during the chase. Globe—Appears to be one of the annual crop of 'weak sisters.'

STRAND

- 1. Memorial Prelude—Selected from Compositions of Scassola and Victor Herbert
2. Odds and Ends—A Compilation in Interesting Short Subjects
3. Moonlight Reverie
4. Mark Strand Topical Review
5. Luigi Guiffrida, Tenor—Dreaming Alone in the Twilight (Moore)
6. Slander the Woman (First National)
7. Lupino Lane in My Hero (Fox)
8. Organ Solo

Press Comments

Times—It seems to exude coolness. Tribune—One of the tawdriest, most obvious films we ever have seen presented at one of the big theatres. Eve. World—Thanks, Mr. Holubar, for giving us a real film story. Telegram—Continuously diverting action. Sun—With the material for a rattling, rousing, melodrama it paces along into a rather silly, tiresome affair.

CAMEO

- 1. Overture—Gems of Yesterday
2. Pathe News
3. Daybreak
4. Midnight Cabaret
5. Vocal Selection—Grannina Mia (Friml)
6. Little Old New York (An Urban Classic)
7. The Man Next Door (Vitagraph)
8. Organ Solo

Press Comments

American—It is an entertaining story, with an interesting presentation and effective acting. Eve. World—It is a corking good story of the East and West and goes right on to prove that Kipling was right.

Telegram—It is a Vitagraph production and one of the best this season.

CAPITOL

- 1. Solo and Tableau—America (Sara T. Wetmore)
2. Where Poppies Bloom—Motion Picture Memorial and Tableaux
3. Yohzeit (Rhea Silberta)
4. Capitol Magazine
5. Saxophone Solo
6. Dance of the Jockeys
7. Garrison's Finish (Allied)
8. Julia Glass, Pianist—Hungarian Fantasy (Liszt)
9. Springtime (Aesop Film Fables)

Press Comments

Times—One of those old-time racing melodramas filled with tears and suspense. Herald—Mr. Harris has built his story smoothly and has adorned it with legitimate humor. Eve. World—Is about as full of thrills and chills as one could ask of any film. Journal—has a good deal of interest, and in spots is photographically excellent. Telegram—A colorful and thrilling screen transcript. Sun—It is difficult to remember just how many horse racing movies we have seen, but 'Garrison's Finish' at the Capitol this week seems like all of them rolled into one. Globe—A more obvious and mechanical plot could hardly have been conceived. Mail—A delightful bit of entertainment.

LYRIC

D. W. Griffith offers The White Rose (United Artists)

Press Comments

World—A powerful, human drama of life has been pictured. Herald—The scenes are marvelously beautiful, the elements of tragedy are deep and moving, the tempo is correct, the story is muddy, the subtitles are flowery and the comedy relief is terrible. Times—The artist in Griffith as the master of photoplay photography smites the eye constantly. American—There is much to commend—but it is Mae Marsh, piquantly appealing, who dominates the entire picture. Globe—The picture is not only too long, but it seems long, so much, in fact, that at times it appeared to be of the endless variety. Eve. World—Comes about as near being a REAL picture as any we have beheld in years. Journal—This reviewer believes that it is the best picture Mr. Griffith has done since 'The Birth of a Nation.' Sun—Ranks with the most important pictures made in America.

FRANKLIN'S TWO NOVEL STUNTS FOR "MAD LOVE"

Springfield, Mo.—Kenton Franklin, exploitation director for the Barbour Enterprises, gave Goldwyn's Pola Negri picture, "Mad Love," an unusually heavy campaign for a city of that size when it was shown at Landers Orpheum Theatre.

A "Kissing Contest" was put across with the Matthews-McConnell Drug Co. In the window of the store a card stating that Pola Negri claimed the distinction of giving the most perfect kisses, and showing the impression of her lips was displayed. The "contest" idea was that local girls should imprint impressions of their lips on similar cards; the girls whose lips were nearest like that of Pola Negri were given tickets to the picture. The theatre newspaper advertising featured the contest.

A peep show, "for men only," was made by borrowing from a druggist the cardboard set used by West Hair Nets. It was framed to represent the star in her bath room. A peep window was made. The copy on top of the set read: "See the rest of Pola Negri in 'Mad Love' at the Landers Orpheum."

Hustler Makes Capital of Organized Protest

Sacramento, Calif.—When the Church Federation here issued a protest against "The Pilgrim" announced for the T. & D. Theatre, Manager M. B. Hustler lived up to his name by taking the protest to the Sacramento Bee. Free publicity seldom gets on the front page; but the newspaper personally undertook to exploit "The Pilgrim" by calling a committee of Women's Council, the Better Film Board, the Church Federation and the press, to pre-view the film.

The showing completely vindicated the picture and the publicity assured it of a capacity run. Manager Hustler writes on this point: "there wouldn't have been anything to it had I not taken the letter to the press." The moral is: if you know your field make all the noise you want to.

A CUP OF COFFEE FOR 'GRUMPY'

Duluth, Minn.—"Grumpy" was put over in great style for the Lyceum Theatre in Duluth by Manager J. B. Clinton and Jack Hellman, Paramount exploiteer.

A wholesale coffee company tied up with the theatre and furnished coffee enough to fill 5000 bags which were furnished by the theatre with the words "This is the decent cup of coffee that Theodore Roberts couldn't get in "Grumpy."

A "PAID" FOR EVERY PASS

Birmingham, Ala.—Exploiting "Daddy" at the Trianon Theatre, the Birmingham News and the Trianon co-operated in the publishing of a free coupon ticket for children readers of the News, to be used by any child under fourteen years of age who was accompanied by a grown-up paid admission.

SORIERO PROLOGUES OPERA

Baltimore.—A new feature which has been inaugurated at the Century Theatre, one of the houses of which Thomas D. Soriero is general manager, is the presentation of famous operas in condensed form. So far the public has shown much interest in the productions and much favorable newspaper comment has been won.

The first opera presented was "Chimes of Normandy." The audiences during the first week plainly demonstrated that they enjoyed the new departure. The program carried a synopsis of the opera.

HOME TALENT WRITE SUCCESS FORMULAE

Tacoma, Wash.—An Essay Contest with a good local twist was staged by Manager McManus of the Colonial Theatre, with the aid and assistance of Harry C. Eagles, Paramount Exploiteer, for the exploitation of "Back Home and Broke."

The theatre tied up with the News-Tribune, and a story was run telling briefly the plot of the play and urging the business men of the town to relate their experiences in a not-more-than-200-word letter, the best letter to be awarded a 90-day complimentary ticket to the theatre, and the next best story a 30-day ticket.

DISCOVERS KINGDOM

Santa Barbara, Calif.—Manager Churchill of the California Theatre, took the angle that every city or community had its own "Kingdom Within" and using this as a basis he interested the trades people in a double truck advertising the Hodkinson offering of that title in the Santa Barbara Daily News. It turned out to be a regular "buy at home week" or "patronize home industries."

At the top center of the page appeared a story on the development of the town under the heading "Busy City of Santa Barbara has its own 'Kingdom Within' making the district prosperous." Department stores, opticians, creameries, candy stores, haberdashers, bakeries, and restaurants all joined in taking big space with each carrying the line "The Kingdom Within."

GILL INVENTED THIS

Ottawa, Kas.—This is not a bad one—worked by Homer Gill in exploiting "Souls for Sale" for the Pastime theatre of Ottawa, Kas.: "List any ten movie stars you know. Hand the list in at the box office with your name and address. If at least one of the stars listed does not appear in the picture you will receive a free admission ticket to the picture appearing at the Pastime."

The above was published in a miniature newspaper, titled "Hollywood Lights," to sell the picture to the public. And is sold.

MORE FREE "GLIMPSES"

Springfield, Mass.—When "Doe" Wrighter, Manager of Poli's Palace Theatre, Springfield, played Paramount's "Glimpses of the Moon" he had everybody in the city making celestial observations.

Unable to beg, borrow or steal a telescope, he made one of pasteboard tubing and painted it black with gold ends to represent the real thing. Then he got a man to dress up as a rural professor who gave astronomical lectures.

"FARMER MATINEES" GIVE WASECA SUMMER PICTURES

Waseca, Minn.—The Paramount Community Show idea has "took" in this small town of about 2500 population.

John Manthey of the Palace Theatre practically conceded that his Sunday matinees would have to be discontinued during the summer, and even considered the possibility of closing his theatre for the dog days.

Jack Hellman, Paramount exploiteer, guaranteed him a $30 matinee, if he would shift the date to Friday. This was agreed and Hellman tied up sixteen merchants, each contributing two dollars. The merchants were each given twenty-five tickets to distribute.

Kiddie Cartoon Contest

Successful in Keith Houses

New York.—A Jackie Coogan "Kiddie Cartoon Contest" was used successfully by Keith-Moss and Proctor houses in New York City in conjunction with the showings of "Daddy" last week. The cartoons were all drawn by youngsters under the age of 12. To the best cartoon each theatre awarded a prize of $10.00 in gold, and the next nine received autographed portraits of the child millionaire film star.

A rule of the contest is that the drawing must be of a scene from "Daddy," but that did not deter some youthful enthusiasts from standing in front of the theatres and sketching from the posters. One young miss showed her drawing to the manager of the theatre, and although he regarded it as rather good she was not satisfied but insisted that she was going home to do it all over again.

HISTORICAL PUZZLER

Lincoln, Ill.—Manager Steve Bennis used a new kind of exploitation with First National's "Lorna Doone" at the Lincoln Theatre. The poses of Madge Bellamy in various historical characters served as the basis for an educational tie-up with schools and book stores, the public being asked to guess which historical character each pose reproduced. The Lincoln Evening Courier took over the stunt.

A PUNCHY PROLOGUE

Beloit, Kas.—A boxing bout between a couple of high school boys, serving as a prologue to "The Abysmal Brute," proved a real money maker for W. L. Gabel, manager of the Grand theatre here. The showing of the picture followed some bouts that had been staged by the high school boys and interest was at a high pitch.

NEWSBOYS MATINEE HELPS

Aided by a vigorous general campaign "Down to the Sea in Ships" played an extended engagement at the Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, O. The exploitation was managed by A. C. Hoganson, general manager of the house, C. L. Peavey, Hodkinson Branch Manager and Jack Edwards, representing the home office.

Eighty 24-sheet boards and twenty-five cutout displays were given good locations and twenty thousand heralds distributed. As a special stunt to create good boosters for the show a special matinee was held at which 400 newsboys were the guests of the house. The Alhambra opened its newspaper campaign with full page displays.

Pola Negri, was the whole show in the display for Paramount's "Bella Donna," at the Legion Theatre, Walla Walla, Manager M. C. Priddy, featured the line, "Her first American made picture," in his advertising.

The Sheik stuff was played up in the "Bella Donna," lobby at the Palace Theatre, Washington, Pa. Good use of the box-office was made in turning it into a frame for stills and lobby cards on the Paramount offering.

Rich draperies, rugs and electrolieres, were used to produce a luxurious environment for the cut-out of Pola Negri from the Paramount paper in this display at the Loew's Theatre, Ottawa. Manager Goodale obtained the trappings from local merchants at the cost of a small, neat credit card fastened to the rug. The setting is one of the best that has thus far appeared on "Bella Donna."

An all-gold lobby, with a brass wedding ring as the central decoration, used for Warner Brothers' "Brass," at the Alcazar Theatre, Birmingham, Ala. The amusement inspection committee attended a private performance and their 100 per cent endorsement of the film was exploited. A teaser campaign carrying the question "is your wedding ring brass?" was used a week in advance.

Big billboard displays were used a week in advance of First National's "Within the Law," in Des Moines. The Des Moines Theatre used copy like that shown on the above reproduction of one of the boards. This was later followed with the line "Violators beware! Someone pays the penalty every day."

The cut-out letters of "Brass," on the marquee of Loew's State, Buffalo, for the engagement of the Warner Brothers' feature, were of compo board covered with metallic paint. The wedding ring around the letter "A" is an old automobile tire, also covered with the brass paint.

Life-like surroundings for the cut-out from Paramount's poster on "Bella Donna," are very popular as theatre displays. The arrangement shown above, a particularly fine display by the way, was designed by Ray Beall and Mr. Tipton, and used at the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C.

Harold Lloyd climbed all over the front of Loew's Theatre, Ottawa, Canada, to attract attention to the showing there of Pathe's new comedy "Safety Last." Figures of Lloyd in the climbing posture cut from the 3-sheets were fastened on several vantage points on the front of the house and featured was a 24-sheet cut-out clinging to a clock. The big cut-out was illuminated at night by a baby spot on the marquee. At the right is the display for "Safety Last" at B. F. Keith's Fordham Theatre, New York City.

A display for Paramount's "Adam's Rib," at the Luna-Lite Theatre, Marion, Ind., in the series of programs advertised as "guaranteed" and to be run during an Anniversary Month. The drive and the lobby display were the work of Manager Billy Connors of the house.

This display was designed, painted and constructed by Floyd D. Morrow, publicity manager of the Palace Theatre, Washington, Pa. In this display for Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships," motion was provided in the scene over the ticket booth. The ships rocked back and forth constantly, a fan motor being used in the arrangement.

The photo at the left above tells its own story—the story of exploitation that not only produces good immediate results at the box office, but has a wholesome effect on the picture theatre business in general. The cooperation between the Immanuel Baptist Church of Salt Lake City and the Paramount Empire theatre in connection with "Prodigal Daughters," was engineered by George Carpenter, Carl Porter, his assistant, Kenneth O. Renaud, Paramount Exploiteer, and Frank J. Murphey, head booker of the Paramount Exchange. At the right is a ballyhoo put out by the theatre.

In Cincinnati, the key to the city and a loving cup was presented H. A. Snow, producer of "Hunting Big Game in Africa," by Acting Mayor Morris, as shown in the group reproduced above. The acting Mayor of Cincinnati is shown with the silver loving cup in his hand; Mr. Snow has the key, and others in the group are, Safety Director Tudor, H. Bolles, and C. Lowenberg, Universal press representative, who engineered the stunt.

It meant a lot of hard work and some peril to those who made this poster for Paramount's "Adam's Rib," on the side of a culm-bank in Shamokin, Pa. The stunt was performed by Boyd Chamberlain, of the Victoria Theatre, and Vernon Gray, exploiteer.

"Seagull," was the first sailboat to put up in St. Louis Waters since 1861, so th is stunt for Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships," was of the superfine order. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, seen in the group at the left, was in town and as he is a former whaleman, he was invited to write a review of the picture for the newspapers. The stunts were put on by B. J. Derby of Hodkinson, for the premiere of the picture at the Fox-Liberty theatre.

Ready Made Display Art

Since newspaper space is expensive and at the same time essential to successful theatre operation the economical thing to do is to make the most of the space—something which is within the reach of every theatre. While it is not an invariable rule, for the most part the mats issued by distributors for ad displays offer material which may be worked up into good, attractive and selling ads. We think that the layouts reproduced on this page illustrate the point that an exhibitor can make up his own ads and compete with the other advertisers in his newspaper with displays built around the "ready mades." The examples here shown are rather above the average, it is true, but that is only because a little more than average care and attention was expended in getting them up.

The MODERN THEATRE

MILLIONS of dollars are spent annually for curtains and draperies in theatres. The musical production usually expends from $15,000 to $30,000 on curtains and drops and they are lavish. Motion picture theatres of the lavish type spend as much and the small theatre man is also beginning to appreciate their value.

The theatre owners are more and more insistent upon elaborate draperies and curtains for their theatres, while heretofore, only ordinary velour has been in vogue. To day we find managers insisting upon brocaded velours, fine repps, silks and other gorgeous materials to add finery and distinction and atmosphere in their amusement places. Formerly the smaller theatres have paid little heed to the consideration of beautifying their theatres, but today with so many new theatres springing up all over the country and being equipped in supreme fashion, it has resulted in their going into this matter themselves seriously as never before and spending money for this very purpose.

While in many respects there has been a departure from some of the old materials used in the past, it still is common for most theatres to have amongst their other equipment a front velour curtain and velour draperies.

It is no doubt true that a significant proportion of the velour sold by upholsterers and drapery concerns throughout the country are consumed in the making up of curtains for theatres.

I think the value of theatre decorations can best be illustrated by the case of the Premier Theatre in Brooklyn, a 3500 seat house which recently opened.

To those who watched the progress of this enterprise, it was gratifying to realize that the ceaseless effort expended in making this theatre one of the most beautiful in the country, was not in vain. The appreciation of the audience on the opening night was spontaneous and generous. It was readily seen they were thoroughly pleased with the appointments of the theatre in all its features.

When one considers that the lighting of a theatre is a problem of paramount importance, in addition to making presentations from the stage an outstanding feature, the Premier management installed every device that may be desired in this respect. The three-color lighting system is carried through every part of the house. The lighting coves above the boxes are arranged to illuminate the large paintings overhead. The harmony of lighting effects on the mezzanine, with its coves running around the four sides, immeasurably enhance the tone and color of the theatre. The main ceiling dome is eighty feet in diameter and contains seventy-two coffers, arranged in three concentric circles. When one contemplates the magnitude of this dome, the imagination

A Fancy Interior and Draped Box

The top photo shows a light fancy stage interior consisting of center arch; 5 feet 9 inch wings; 2 feet 6 inch jogs; French window and a background exterior, with special tormentors shaped grand drape and teaser. Below is a box drape of silk finished velour worked out in French festoon drapery embellished with galloon and silk fringe. The back wall is lined with summery silken material. need not be stretched to conceive the wonderful effects maintained in the theatre throughout the performance.

Draperies of the boxes and alcoves carried out in a French festoon effect in velours and plushes. The scenery represents a departure from the cut and dried palace, olio and wood sets, and in themselves are unique and original. The artists and craftsmen have undoubtedly taxed their ingenuity to the limit, in producing ideas and effects that are pleasing to the eye, rich in color and design. When it is considered that the stage is the central point of every theatre, on which all eyes are focused, it is indeed fortunate that the management exercised good judgment in the selection of their scenery.

To those exhibitors who have been troubled with attracting patrons to their theatres, the atmosphere created with the proper lighting effects, wall decorations and stage scenery, must not be overlooked. In the Premier, these features have been given due consideration with the result that the patrons have something to talk about.

On the opening night, when President Riegelman, of the Borough of Brooklyn, was called upon to address a few remarks to the audience, he expressed admiration for the scenery, lighting effects, and decorations of this theatre. He also said that Brooklyn, and in fact the whole country, might well be proud of the Premier.

This institution has only been possible by the undaunted courage of Samuel Lesselbaum, its general manager, and the unstinted support of the directors associated with him in relying upon his vision and ingenuity and permitting him to decorate the house properly.

When the writer remarked to him in expressing admiration on his wonderful accomplishment, he just casually remarked, "This is just one of the theatres they had under way."

Reduces Old Deficits

Toronto, Can.—The financial statement of Loew's Theatres, Ltd., which operates the Yonge St. and Uptown Theatres, shows that bank loans were reduced nearly $130,000 after $23,183.00 for 1922 and 1923 had been provided for, and $18,118.00 on taxes for 1920 and '21 had been also provided for. This very closely wipes out the operating deficit of 1921. After paying operating expenses, the total revenue amounted to about $228,664 for 1922, being in excess of 1921, which totalled $187,226.

The Uptown house earnings were $53,694.00. The operating deficit for 1922 has been reduced to $6,193, as against $13,278 in 1921. Balance sheets show a reduction in bank loans from $200,337, to $73,785. Total assets are fixed at $2,308,164.

LIGHTING YOUR THEATRE SO AS TO CUT WASTE

What Can Be Done to Give House Proper Illumination and Also Reduce Current Cost

The fundamental unit in theatre as in all other illumination is candlepower, which is a measure of strength of a source to produce illumination in a given direction. The power, in a horizontal direction, of a candle made according to certain specifications and burning under certain conditions has been arbitrarily chosen as the unit for measuring this strength. It is well to keep in mind the distinction between light and illumination. Light is a cause and illumination the effect or result. The candlepower is used to measure the cause, while a different unit is used to measure the effect. Thus, to measure the illumination on a wall or a desk the "foot-candle" is used. A foot-candle represents a degree of illumination equal to that produced at a point on a surface which is one foot away from a source of light of one candle-power and which is at right angles to the light rays at that point. As a typical example, if a safety match is held six inches from a wall there will be produced on the wall an illumination of approximately one foot-candle.

In installing or testing a heating installation, one of the primary considerations would naturally be the determination of the degree of the heat or in other words, the temperature. In like manner, in dealing with a lighting installation the first step should be the determination of the degree of the light or of the foot-candles.

In the accompanying table reprinted from a lighting bulletin issued by the Illuminating Engineering Bureau of the Westinghouse Companies, are indicated the values of foot-candles that have been found by actual experience to be desirable for quick and easy vision. The places to be lighted are arranged as a guide to the theatre man who can thus easily find his service conditions or similar ones. In a table of this nature there can be no hard and fast rules as to any one definite value of illumination because of the fact that local conditions such as the color of the walls, ceilings, merchandise, etc., have a big influence on the resultant effect. Thus light and clean surroundings enable the use of the lower values given in the table, while where the surroundings are dark, dusty or smoky, higher foot-candle values must be adopted. The upper values, moreover, while in general entirely satisfactory, should not be considered as absolute limits, as they are sometimes exceeded, particularly in places where both natural and artificial illumination are combined.

EXCHANGEMAN SUGGESTS PLAN TO REDUCE FILM LOSS

Destruction In One City Alone Amounts To More Than $100,000 Annually

By BEN AMSTERDAM

Last year our exchange was obliged to make an additional expenditure of $6000 to replace film that was destroyed outside of ordinary wear and tear by careless operators and defective machines.

It is not economy to neglect the correction of a fault in a machine because it not only destroys the film but it also depreciates a machine ten times sooner than it would if it were kept in good working order, and neglecting to replace a worn part which could be done at one time for 45 cents might in the course of a few months result in an expense of $5.00.

My plan is to have the Film Board of Trade employ an inspector who would visit the various motion picture houses and inspect the projectors, making recommendations to the exhibitor himself. I do not believe that it would be necessary on the part of the exchanges to take the attitude that they would not supply a man with film unless he repaired his machine, so that films would no longer be destroyed, because I cannot conceive that there is any man doing business as an exhibitor who would not be square shooting enough to spend five or six dollars in repairing a machine which, if he neglected to do, would result in a loss of $150 to an exchange and prevent another exhibitor from getting a picture on the following day. If such a course were necessary I would heartily endorse a stringent rule that would compel such an unfair business man to pay not only the exchange for the destruction of its film but pay the loss that would be entailed by another exhibitor on the following day because of his failure to secure the picture.

It is poor economy to attempt to postpone repairs on machines or the adjustment of any irregularity because it means film waste and will, in time, disorganize the delicate mechanism of the projector itself and result in perhaps an expenditure of 100 times the original amount.

Announcing the New CINEPHOR CONDENSING SYSTEM

EVERY theatre owner should be interested in the new Bausch & Lomb Cinephor Condensing System, which makes possible an increase in illumination up to 25% without additional current expense, or the same illumination with reduced current expense. Furthermore, the light over the entire screen is even and of maximum intensity without any dark spot in the center of the field.

Greater latitude in fluctuation of the arc without showing discoloration on the margins of the picture is possible, as the condenser operates with a slightly larger spot on the aperture plate.

The Bausch & Lomb Cinephor Condensing System consists of a parabolic condenser, as the front element, and a plano convex condenser, the rear element. Although these two elements can be purchased separately, they should be used together to insure the best results.

The development of this corrected condensing system enables us to offer a complete "Cinephor" optical system of the highest quality—Cinephor Projection Lenses and Cinephor Condensing Systems.

NO matter how hot the weather, "Knighthood" will pack them in. Show it this summer—and you'll do Holiday week business.

FROM A SMALL TOWN EXHIBITOR

A theatre that runs specials and passes up this one is missing something it shouldn't miss. This picture has more "stuff" than any of the other specials of the season. Forget the costume fear.

It packs enough story to make all the rest of this season's specials look like program pictures. It isn't a program picture that happens to draw well, as most of them are, but a picture into which has been put real money, energy, brains and work.

It is not a "highbrow" picture alone, because of its intense action and absorbing story. It is not "lowbrow" alone because it is the most elaborate picture Famous Players-Lasky ever put into a can. It's everything! It's a special that draws the second day and the third—and that's very rare these days. We saw tags on cars parked in front of our theatre from eight different towns.

We've had a good many pictures that kept the cashier busy, but this one drew more American dollars than any other picture we have run since "Way Down East." —FRED HINDS, CRESCO THEATRE, CRESCO, IOWA.

Overcoming the Darkest Days in One Showman's Career

A High Spot Story of Exhibitor Public Service

ACCORDING to Harry M. Crandall, head of the Washington, D. C., a chain of theatres that bear his name, the service given by an exhibitor does not end with the exhibition of the photoplay and the rendering of the usual musical features, for while good pictures and good music are prime essentials to the success of the theatre, there is the element of good will that must be taken into consideration.

Good will is not something that can be measured in dollars and cents, nor its returns estimated in the manner that one knows how much comes into the treasury through the box office, yet without it a business cannot hope to live. To secure a maximum of good will from the people of Washington is an undertaking in which the personnel of the Crandall organization is engaged.

Washington is without a convention hall. Aside from hotel ball-rooms there is no place in which organizations can gather. This is a serious proposition to groups like the various citizens' associations, formed for the welfare of the communities within which the members reside. Such organizations are usually without funds. This situation gave to Mr. Crandall his first opportunity to do a big public service.

The Crandall Amusement Company operates a theatre in each of the four thickly populated sections of Washington. Permission was granted to the civic organizations in those neighborhoods to use these houses at any time when not in use for the exhibition of photoplays, which meant any week day, except Saturday, up to six o'clock in the evening. Advantage was taken of this for many meetings and charitable performances. Then again, for several months Crandall theatres were used each Sunday morning for the holding of church services by congregations whose own edifices were being reconstructed.

These activities, although modest in their scope, brought forth a good response—the seed of good will had been planted, and it has since brought its reward in a number of ways. Further, they gave Mr. Crandall the thought that he could do bigger and better things for the different communities, piling up this good will, improving conditions, making the names of his theatres household words, and at the same time get a lot of pleasure out of the thought of doing public service.

He established a Community Hour at the theatres. On a certain day of each week, at an appointed hour, meetings were held by the citizens of the several neighborhoods for the consideration of topics of local and citywide interest. These meetings have

WHAT WOULD YOU HAVE DONE?

Imagine yourself confronted with the dark situation Crandall faced when news came that the roof of one of his theatres had collapsed killing and maiming scores of patrons. A more heart-rending situation is difficult to imagine.

Since the disaster, of course, building experts and government officials have exonerated him from every scintilla of blame, yet the sad occurrence had left a certain memory in the minds of the public.

How has Crandall maintained the good will of his theatres? How has he managed to get the public to continue to believe in him in spite of this unfortunate occurrence? He had gone about the task with the spirit of public service and good will foremost in his mind.

The story deserves your careful reading.

only just been suspended on account of the coming of warm weather and will be resumed in the fall.

Then Mr. Crandall, who has three charming daughters of his own, decided that something ought to be done by the Crandall Amusement Company that would benefit the youngsters of Washington. He organized the Crandall baseball league with four teams representing the Apollo, Avenue Grand, Savoy and York theatres, fifteen youngsters on each team, membership being limited to boys under sixteen years of age. He bought uniforms and every article of baseball equipment that would be desirable for big league playing, and hired two semi-professional umpires. Each house manager is a team manager, and they have entered into the competition with a great deal of enthusiasm.

The boys are all "pepped" up. They are proud of their uniforms; they like the game, and they are the envy of all the other boys in the neighborhood because of being the possessors of passes that give them free admission to the theatres represented by each team, good throughout the entire baseball season. The scores are flashed on the screens after the games.

The girls are going to be taken care of this fall, for plans are being made for the formation of a girls' basketball league. Full equipment will be provided by Mr. Crandall—the youngsters are not put to a single cent of expense.

In the Crandall organization there is also the Public Service and Educational Department, presided over by Mrs. Harriet M. Locher. She is the liaison official, standing between the organization and the general public. She is a member of various civic organizations, particularly those of business and professional women, and is doing a good work. She is given a great deal of latitude in the operation of her department, and on many occasions is hostess to these organizations at meetings held in the Metropolitan Theatre.

Mrs. Locher does not confine her activities to grown-ups—like the other branches of the Crandall organization the Public Service and Educational Department reaches out to the children. For one thing she has formed the Capital Athletic Club with membership open to high school girls skilled in athletics. Six girls constituted the full membership on the formation of this club. Now there are forty-five enthusiastic girls attending semi-monthly meetings in the Metropolitan projection room. They have seen the diving pictures, lawn tennis, golf and other sports, in slow motion and ordinary tempo.

Weeks ago an arrangement was entered into with the school authorities of Washington for the use of the neighborhood theatres of the Crandall Amusement Company for the exhibition of films of an educational nature from such agencies as the Department of Agriculture with subjects that the children are studying.

Not only are the theatres placed at the disposal of the schools, but Mr. Crandall furnishes house managers, ushers, operators and assistant operators and organists who perform their various duties.

The school authorities have to look to Congress for all funds required for the maintenance of school activities. No appropriation bill ever provides money for other than actual educational work, and so there are many matters that cannot be considered by them, which, however, has a school interest. For instance, there was the little matter of filming, for the class histories, the high school drama recently given here and the annual drills of the white and of the colored high school cadets.

Nat Glasser, superintendent of equipment for the Crandall circuit, an expert cameraman, filmed these several events and after the pictures are shown in the Crandall theatres, the prints were presented to the various schools participating. He also made the films used in Washington in the Safety First Week campaign, for the Police Department is also without funds.

These are only a few of the big things Harry M. Crandall is doing for the betterment of his home city. There might be mentioned the very frequent visits of the children from the different orphanages and homes in and around Washington; of the treats to newsboys. It all comes under the head of good will and good fellowship.

Here is really the whole answer. Harry Crandall once upon a time was a poor boy. He has never forgotten that fact. He never lost his sense of humor—he is human and humane; he is never too busy to see a visitor at his offices in the Metropolitan Theatre Building; he's never upstage.

"When I began this civic work," said Mr. Crandall, "I was surprised at the lack of knowledge of the people as to motion pictures. It is the experience of every exhibitor when there is a local ordinance or state or national legislation pending that generally he has to fight his own battles and the road is a very uphill one. The patrons of the theatres are not sufficiently interested to make a personal matter of the exhibitors' fight, while the reformers—largely non-patrons—are always active on the opposite side of the fence.

"We are fast acquiring real friends and there may come a time when legislation is pending that they will 'go to the bat' for us. We are less at a disadvantage in Washington today because the people are becoming better acquainted with the motion picture industry.

"I am sure that there will be lots of exhibitors reading this story who will tell you that the next thing I am about to relate to you is 'bad business.' We have an advisory committee of forty women—one representative from each organization in the District of Columbia interested in civic welfare. They view some of our pictures before they are shown commercially—and when I say 'view' I mean just that and not 'censor.'

"There used to be a big cry here for children's pictures. Men and women who themselves were not patrons of the motion picture theatres took up the refrain and there was talk of our pictures here in Washington being, we will say, 'too old for children.' We have met that demand with Saturday afternoon special matinees and now, strange as it may seem, we have given our committee private showings of some of the pictures that had generally been recommended to us to run in our theatres, and the members of the committee have said of them: 'This is a very good picture, Mr. Crandall, but we know it would not be a good commercial venture,' and they would suggest it be used at the matinees for the children.

"The motion picture is a subject that everyone is always glad to talk about. We have found that the people are literally hungry for knowledge, and in our co-operative meetings we have been able to educate them, and with this education there has come tolerance. They have come to a realization that there are certain limitations in the business, and that the exhibitors are as much entitled to an existence as any other real business man. With this knowledge comes a lessened demand for unfair legislation. We have come to know the people who formerly were generally arrayed against us now as our friends; there is a mutual understanding that will do more than anything else to help our industry."

Elaine Calvert visits her uncle, the American Consul, in Tangier. By accidentally interfering in a religious rite she incurs the Sultan's anger. Chid-dar Ben Ek, bandit chief, hated by the Sultan, defends Elaine. She is kidnapped by Albert, a tribesman, with whom Chid-dar fights for possession of the girl, Chid-dar winning. He asserts that while he cannot return her to her uncle, he can prevent her falling into the Sultan's hands. Elaine's uncle gets the help of U. S. Marines under command of Millgrate. The Sultan recognizes Millgrate as the man who years before stole a desert princess from him. The potentate gives permission for Millgrate and his marines to enter the desert, knowing that Chid-dar is Millgrate's son. The bandit stronghold is attacked and Chid-dar's mother, Oulaid, taken prisoner. Millgrate recognizes Oulaid as his lost wife. Millgrate frees Chid-dar and rescues from the service. Chid-dar refuses his father's offer of friendship and the latter becomes captain of a merchant vessel. Millgrate and Oulaid go aboard and are trapped by the Sultan. Millgrate is about to be slain when Chid-dar's men arrive. The Sultan is killed, Chid-dar rescues and forgives his father. Chid-dar returns to his tents, happy in the promise given by Elaine to be his wife.

finds himself placing reliance in a trade paper for the information. Since the information is always there a suggestion of how to use it is in order. In fact many theatres are holding it ready for immediate use.

A convenient system—it is not original as many theatres have one like it—is to arrange on the usual small filing cards, 5 by 3 inches, the information which is fundamental. The title of the picture, is of course, of first importance, the producer, the length of the feature, the cast and synopsis of the story are next in importance. These are conveniently arranged in the Illustrated Reviews in Exhibitors Trade Review and are more complete than is usually found. Their size and arrangement fits them specially for use on small cards.

INDEPENDENTS IN NEW COAST MOVE

Plan Said to Be Under Way to Make L. A. New Dis- tributing Hub.

Hollywood.—Independent producers and exhibitors all over the United States, and several in Canada have in mind a scheme to make Los Angeles the film distributing center as well as the producing capital of the motion picture industry.

Preparations are now underway by a group of film capitalists to wipe New York off the map as an important distributing factor, and make this city the clearing house for the majority of independent productions.

Sol Lesser is to head the new combination, and eight large exhibitors and several of smaller calibre are in the new proposed distributing machine, which is to be incorporated within the next week or two when a name will be selected. The affiliated interests to date include:

Albert Rosenberg, who controls twenty theatres in Seattle and other northern cities. The Fabian interests, of New Jersey, controlling twelve theatres.

The Balaban and Katz theatrical holdings consisting of twenty theatres in and about Chicago.

The Stanley Amusement Company, of Philadelphia, controlling forty-six theatres.

The R. D. Craver Enterprises with 112 theatres scattered throughout the southern states.

The Nathan Gordon holdings, of Boston; ten theatres.

Finkelstein and Reuben with twenty-five theatres in Minnesota.

Lesser & Gore West Coast Company holdings controlling 110 theatres in California.

Several smaller chains controlling in all fifty theatres.

Sol Lesser is authority for the statement that the organization is actually in embryo, and will burst into actual bloom in a short time. For months, according to Lesser, there has been talk throughout the country of film men and theatrical interests forming a combination in an independent manner to seek new and greater film product. During his recent visit to New York, Lesser says, this talk took form and there was finally consummated a deal whereby men controlling the exhibition of pictures in the largest cities in the United States and Canada will become active partners with independent producers.

Lesser points out that the new organization will not conflict with the present activities of the different independent organizations that have merged with the new combine. It will be governed apart in every manner. Full details of the new idea will soon be forthcoming, said Lesser.

A SIMPLIFIED METHOD FOR FILING FILM REVIEWS

Data That An Exhibitor Must Always Have At Hand Can Be Made
Most Accessible

Reviews of pictures are usually published in a trade paper long before the pictures are played and they form one of the most valuable services to the reader. They contain everything that an exhibitor will use, the title, who made the picture, its running length or time, a synopsis of the story, cast of characters and high lights in the picture.

The opinion of a reviewer may not be of value, or may, but the other bits of information are of undoubted service. An enterprising showman wants to know about a picture well in advance so that he can tell his patrons about it, whet their appetites for it and prepare programs, heralds, slides, dodgers, posters and supply his local newspaper with authentic material.

He is not always able to get this far enough in advance from the producer so he Exhibitor Should Ask, "What's In It?" Not "Who's In It?" Says Friend

Arthur Friend has a habit of speaking straight from the shoulder. He sent the following message to the convention at Chicago and while we did not print it in our convention issues we considered it worthy of space in this issue for after-convention consideration.

DEEPLY conscious of the privilege extended to me and the honor done me in being invited to address the meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre owners of America, I am more than sorry not to be able to be present and to deliver my message to you in person. An annoying, though I believe, slight throat affliction keeps me at home. Nothing short of illness would have prevented my coming to you.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are one of the greatest powers in the world, for theirs is the power of the motion picture. No matter what we as producers admit, we have accomplished nothing until through you our effort has gone to the public on your screens. I for one have always believed that great as that power is, it is vested where it belongs, and I am now, as I have always been, ardent in the support of your cause, and I shall be so long as you remain conscious of the importance and the sanctity of the trust that is reposed in you.

In the course of the last year there has been a great flow of words out of the mouths of many people in the industry, but I am free to confess that a few of them have meant anything. It is interesting to observe how important a line of words can be set up in some of our trade papers if they are said to emanate from the tongue of a film executive who is currently buying advertising space. It is also interesting to observe how little room the same papers have for news concerning thoughts and action and progress of those who are not shooting colored inserts at them.

Traducers Within Industry

It is also interesting to observe how readily our own trade papers, print under scarehead titles expressions of fault finding that come too often from those who are in the industry and who would, many of them, be wholly unknown to fame, had not the motion picture been invented. It is indeed a crying shame that the men in the industry have been its greatest traducers. There are enough others equally overmouthed and under brained who can be trusted to carry on the work of damning us without any aid from within our ranks, and after all perhaps the world might accuse us on the plea of youth and inexperience in view of the fact that no one of the other arts has progressed to the point of perfection although the youngest of them is hundreds of years old. Doesn't the alleged lowly effort that we have given, that has succeeded in attracting and holding the interested attention of ten million Americans day in and day out—doesn't the alleged lowly effort that has succeeded in bringing entertainment to the millions who before the motion picture came to be, knew nothing but the drab and the hum-drum and the common places of life—doesn't that effort mean something that makes you proud? Perhaps it is not wholly to be regretted that the motion picture has not set itself to the task of making over the short haired women and long haired men and whose clamorings make for smart sayings and whose lives make for the enactment of Eighteenth Amendments. With your tremendous power you could do more, I believe to help on the producing side that you have been doing in the past. Generally, co-operation between Exhibitor and Producer, the coming to a better understanding and support of confidence and trust, are all necessary, but I dare say that talking about that sort of thing doesn't get very far. It is all too general.

What is in It?

Almost invariably the exhibitor's first question about a picture is "Who's in it?" It occurs to me that it might be well for the exhibitor to ask instead "What is in it?" During the current season the trade papers show that 113 women and 110 men have been starred in motion pictures. As a matter of fact, everybody knows that it is perfectly absurd to assert as a fact any such thing as that there are 223 motion picture stars. So far as I know there are not 23 motion picture stars. Although I have been very actively and intensively engaged in the motion picture business for about ten years, the only honest-to-God stars that I know of in the business are: George Arliss, Richard Barthelmess, Charles Chaplin, Jackie Coogan, Douglas Fairbanks, Elsie Ferguson, William S. Hart, Harold Lloyd, Thomas Meighan, Tom Mix, Mary Pickford, Constance and Norma Talmadge. I have placed them in alphabetical order. But I can't make the total any more than thirteen.

A little while ago I was talking very earnestly to an important distributor who told me of the great success his company enjoyed with a picture in which there were eleven stars. Innocently I said I didn't know there were so many stars in the world and so I was interested in finding out who the eleven were. I asked him, he said: "Well, there's X"—naming a famous contortionist—"and-and-and." I am very fond of the gentleman with whom I was talking and I tried to be very considerate, but to my gentle questioning he finally could make only this answer, "Well, there was X and ten others." After my talk with him I returned to the office and said to our publicity director, "I want you to remember this: Every brainy exhibitor in the country knows that the expression so common in motion picture advertising 'With An All Star Cast' means with a no star cast, so don't use it in any of our advertising."

Since that admonition, I have been insistently told that the exhibitor's one question about a picture that is offered to him is, "Who is in it?" and that if we don't use picture names, the pictures will not be bought. Personally, I don't believe that. Assuredly I do not want to believe it because my own observance in the world and in the picture theatres has made me firmly believe that the American public wants good product. However important everything else may be, surely we can't forget the importance of having our parts well played. I realize how much easier it is for you as exhibitors to sell the public something that they know about. That is why the star system so-called is sure to remain in the picture business. If you say to your public Mary Pickford in a new picture, they will respond, but if it isn't a good picture, with a worth while story, well produced and with a good supporting cast, they won't respond on the second day. And if you don't have a real star to offer, then what? The answer is obvious. It is going to be more difficult for you to attract the public's attention. But after all, isn't that worth while? Or are you going to say that you will go only along the line of least resistance—that the things that are difficult are not worth while? I shall answer for you because I know that you know that all things that are worth while are difficult. I am sure that once you see a picture which is worthy of your screens, you will be able to make and find the way to make, the noise.

Help the Producer

This feeling that the star or the known player is everything was in a fair way of wrecking the American theatre about ten years ago. I am sure you will not let it wreck the motion picture theatre now. As a practical matter, your insistent cry for names in casts is one of the things that is making for the high cost of production because the comparatively few well known players properly enough take advantage of the situation, and we find today that the motion picture players are getting the highest salaries ever paid in the history of the industry. But that is a long story. Irrespective of it, you must do your share toward helping the producer in his effort to give you a good product, well cast and well produced. In the long run the play's the thing, but a good play badly cast is a bad play.

The integrity of your investments in your theatres can be protected and the industry of which you are a so important part can progress only when you who exhibit, and we who produce, understand this first fundamental and bend every effort to its attainment, for without good product the public interest will soon lag. And so, once more, I should like to say what I have said so often: "Look before you book." And, being told who is in it content yourself only when you see and know what's in it.

WHY MICHIGAN M. P. T. O. IS CLOSE TO MEMBERS

Because It Does Something for Exhibitors
Its Treasury Grosses
$40,000 Annually

By HENDERSON M. RICHEY
Manager, M. P. T. O. of Michigan

MICHIGAN's success in organization is no accident. The same seemingly insurmountable problems faced this Organization at its inception as face any organization and its ultimate success was due to an unshaken conviction upon the part of those who started the Organization that it could be done by getting into the fold every Theatre Owner, big or small, whom they could sell the possibilities of organization, and by the realization that unless such an organization was financed by the Theatre Owners who made up the organization, it could not be a success.

When organization work started in Michigan there were two organizations, a city organization, and a state organization, and it was not until several exhibitors prevailed on James C. Ritter, of Detroit, to take the first presidency of the present organization, and promised him 100% co-operation. Once they did become interested, once the majority of the city exhibitors combined their unified effort with the state thru one organization, things began to take form.

With the beginning of Mr. Ritter's regime came the adoption of his plan, the employment of a paid secretary or manager who was to be the point of contact between the exhibitor-members, the Board of Directors and the Organization. Using the words of Mr. Ritter "He was the man who was to carry out the work mapped out for him by the Board of Directors."

Meager indeed was the beginning, with a little headquarters, but following the wise counsel of a Board of Directors of twelve men, and realizing that it was up to him to finance the Organization, the various managers, Mr. Gebhardt, A. J. Moeller and the present management, have been successful in financing the Organization to the extent that this year the Organization's gross will reach $40,000 and still a membership to this Organization is an asset and not a liability.

At first it was necessary to resort to reels and slides to keep up finances in addition to cash dues. Then it was necessary to carry along a number of exhibitors who, not sufficiently sold on the possibilities of organization, were not paying any dues. Since that time, however, the Organization has come to the point where in justice to the Theatre Owner who is supporting the Organization, the protection of the Organization is given only to members who pay cash dues.

What are some of the things the Organization has done to make a membership of value to the Exhibitor? Before enumerating them, I am going to make a prediction that if the Michigan Organization continues its successes of the past, the time will come when a membership to the Organization will be worth in cash a considerable amount, for we have Theatre Owners in Michigan who have told me they would not sell their membership, if they couldn't get another, for $1,000.

With regard to legislation, there is not at the present time a single line of adverse legislation on the books at the state house. This explains briefly what the success of the unified efforts of the Exhibitors of Michigan, directed thru their Organization, has accomplished. Many bills have come up from time to time, but none have been passed. Michigan has no Censorship, although a bill is introduced every year. Michigan has no additional tax bills, although several have been introduced.

Michigan's insurance plan has been investigated and reported favorably upon by scores of states. Through the plan in operation here, Exhibitors save 45% on their fire insurance because they are members of an Organization. In the instance of Claude Cady, of Lansing, he was saved over $1,000. Other exhibitors could be named who have saved large amounts until the actual savings to exhibitors in Michigan this year will reach nearly $100,000. Is it any wonder then that Michigan has nearly $20,000 paid in cash dues into the Organization, with other tie-ups bringing in additional amounts?

A similar insurance arrangement is now being worked out for compensation and public liability, and burglary insurance, which will save the exhibitor about 40%. This means that much turned back into his pockets because he is a member of the Organization.

The Michigan exhibitor organization, pointed to with pride everywhere, is strong with its members because it Saved members about $100,000 in insurance.

Has effected a newspaper tie up which brings $22,000 yearly into the treasury.

Has wiped off adverse legislation from state legislative calendars.

Straightens out all producer-exhibitor difficulties across the round-table and it proves most economical method.

The Michigan Organization has never lost in any controversy with any producing company. It has had very few, for we have found that the other side of the controversy realize that little can be gained thru ill feeling, and the large majority of situations have been straightened out thru round table discussion, until Michigan is now proud to point to the exchange managers in Detroit, who are as a whole fair-minded business men. Two controversies settled in favor of the Michigan Organization this year were non-theatrical bookings and four months' protection.

Differences of opinion are bound to arise in any business that is conducted on the barter system, as it seems necessary in this business, and the Joint Board of Arbitration rules now in force in Michigan have been copied by many states. They are fair, equitable and workable. Under this plan, only members of the Organization can have cases heard by the Joint Board.

Exhibitors of Michigan are fully cognizant of the fact that the presence of a functioning organization in Michigan prevents many things which otherwise might be attempted. Organization is like police protection, the less you have to call on it, the smoother things are running, and the better you are off.

Through a careful watching for things that might be deemed objectionable, and through co-operation with Women's Clubs, the Detroit Council of Churches, and through activities in drives that take place in every community, the Organization has been able to remove a large majority of the opposition that has heretofore existed against the Theatre Owner, by coming in closer contact with the public and its various agencies, so that when censorship came up this year, not a single person was present to directly fight for censorship, other than the introducer of the bill.

Because of the strength of the Organization, many adjustments are handled through the Headquarters, located one block from the Film Building, offices that are a credit to the Organization. A competent staff have information at hand so that exhibitors desiring it can get it quickly.

Through a tie-up with a Detroit newspaper, exhibitors are saved $6.00 a week through advertising, and still the Organization gets $6.00 a week, because the Exhibitor runs a slide saying "You Can See the Daily Program of this Theatre in the Times." This contract alone will save the exhibitors considerable, and will bring into the Organization over $22,000 a year.

Protection, money saving plans, service, these three things have been primarily responsible for what success this state has had. If a fourth be mentioned, it would be the fact that its Board of Directors meets every two weeks to transact the business of the Organization, and that these meetings are open to any exhibitor who cares to attend. The absence of petty politics has built confidence in the efforts of the Board, accomplishment has sold organization to the Exhibitors of Michigan, and the exhibitors in turn have made it possible financially and through their unity of action, to accomplish the great many things that have been accomplished.

Realizing, however, that no one state can stand alone, and that its efforts are severely handicapped without every state functioning efficiently, Michigan has expended considerable money this year in an attempt to acquaint the exhibitors of the country with its plan of finance and organization, with the result that a similar plan is looked on favorably by the National Board of Directors and will probably be submitted to the incoming Board of Directors at Chicago. This move was prompted by a purely selfish desire on the part of Michigan for assistance from an efficient National Organization to solve such national problems as the Music Tax, Admission Tax, etc., which can not be successfully combatted by state organizations.

Business men are not interested in inefficient organization. It is imperative too that every Theatre Owner be identified with the Organization and that extreme care be exercised in seeing that the right men are in charge of the affairs of the Organization and that they be the choice of the exhibitors of the state, in whom they have confidence and whose leadership they will follow, for without that little will be accomplished. The work of organization is a business and must be conducted along business lines.

“Mr. Operator:

“Let’s you and me be friends. We have been having trouble long enough. You cuss me and I cuss you, but that don’t help nothing. As far as I can see, your boss and my boss hold the sack and the customers get disgusted and it’s all our fault.

“Looks to me as though by working together we can help each other an awful lot. I come from the best film stock made. I wouldn’t want to say you were not a darn good operator, and in order to prove you are we must stick and work together. I’m flying the white flag, my friend. What are your colors?”

“Put away the boxing gloves, and handle me with kid gloves, until I get on my feet, and then we’ll show the whole world that we can get good results if we want to.

“From your Pal,

GETTING IT FROM THE OPERATOR

GENTLER treatment of film by the average operator is anticipated by Pathe as a result of an ingenious idea worked out by Fred Solomon, Assistant Manager of the Pathe Branch Exchange at Pittsburgh, Pa. Familiar with the deplorable condition of much of the film returned to his branch, Mr. Solomon imagined himself roughly handled with similar results and composed the circular letter signed “Pathe Film,” which was sent to the operators of projection machines in the different theatres in that territory:

Among the replies thus far transmitted to the Pathe Home Office is a sympathetic, but rather profane, one in rhymes from the Victor Theatre, Derry, Pa., signed “Operator.” Another, from H. McKnight, Operator Grand Theatre, Latrobe, Pa., reads as follows:

“Allow me to congratulate you on your circular letter to Mr. Operator and signed Pathe Film. It is a very clever stunt and should go a long ways in bettering conditions in this and every other territory.”

“THANK GOD FOR THE MOVIES”

MANAGER A. L. MIDDLETON, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Ark., has forwarded to Pathe a copy of his effective appeal to his patrons for recognition of his theatre as a “public service institution.” Mr. Middleton thinks that every whole-hearted exhibitor of motion pictures should endeavor to attract the same sort of co-operation.

“Thank God for the Movies,” is his slogan, quoted from a widely published statement made by the Rev. Hay Watson Smith, of Little Rock, Ark. All of the material of Manager Middleton’s printed propaganda is displayed on the two sides of a small card headed with the slogan quoted here, together with credit for its estimable source. The matter on the reverse side of the card follows:

“Governor McRae said: ‘The moving pic-

The REV. HAY WATSON SMITH, of Little Rock, said:

“Are you one of those who have a misunderstanding of the motion picture? Motion pictures will win your approval if you will see them—regularly—get an understanding of them. They are the greatest educational factor in the world today. The Grand Theatre management is desirous of maintaining his Theatre as an institution of REAL USE TO HUMANITY, and urgently solicits the suggestions, aid and co-operation of every good citizen of De Queen and Sevier County. Motion pictures enliven ambition, inspire the soul and give a deeper conception of life.”

HERE THEY ARE

My! Isn’t she the sweet young thing. Miss Honeybunch — all set to be a June bride. Her friends are already planning at least a half dozen showers — you know, linen showers and kitchen showers and silk — — — — — showers and all the rest. And then there’s the wedding itself and a few days before and after to get over it! Miss Honeybunch and her friends have already cancelled all other plans as they say they won’t have time even to think about anything else until after the big event.

And on your right we have Mr. Alexander Smart — “Smart Aleck” they call him for short. He’s the class orator — you see his graduation from college this June. This little picture shows how he has been spending his evenings, practicing his speech (and gestures). And in addition he is burning the old midnight oil cramming away to ferret out the last bit of knowledge that may save him during his long term at college. Aleck’s brother is also graduating — from high school — and his little sisters are either graduating from grammar school or have friends that are — so they’re SORRY but they simply MUST be counted out of EVERYTHING until their diplomas are duly received, framed and forgotten.

And JUNE for fishing — or motoring —

or gardening — or dancing!

Anything and everything to take the fans away from the movie theatres!

THE SALESMEN HAS THE SPIRIT

WHEN you run across a Universal film salesman this Summer you will know that he is not talking Summer slump but whooping it up for Summer business. He has been advised by his home office what the exhibitor is up against in the way of Summer competition in the Universal weekly letter to its sales force.

For instance in the reproduction of the letter it will be noted that every angle that a salesman trying to help an exhibitor over the rough roads is mentioned. The June bride who takes her husband and deserts the movies for a honeymoon. The college graduate who’s too interested in school to think of pictures, the fisherman, the motorist, the gardener and the dancers. All with thoughts on hobbies and not theatres.

“Here they are” Universal says to its salesmen. “Now that you know what these enemies of the theatre business are do your best to get your accounts (the theatres) the right kind of pictures so they’ll make some money.”

And the salesman, like a doctor, does his best to cure and that’s good will.

PATRIOTISM AND THE FIREMEN

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM MALONE who run a small house, the Colonial, Charleston, Wash., believe that the fire department is an American institution protecting the lives and property of Americans just as the Constitution does. So when “The Third Alarm” came along they showed it and decorated their theatre with flags and a big shield. The firemen responded. “Good will toward us,” they said.

The Fire Department got out the hose wagon and planted it in front of the house just to show the picture had the approval of the veterans. Noticing this evidence of good will on the part of the firemen the citizens responded to “the alarm.”

But there is more evidence of good will between the couple. Mrs. Malone is the cashier, janitress, lobby expert, and general counsellor at the Colonial but at home—ah! she can bake a pie.

INCOME FROM SCREEN ADS NETTED $9,890

That's What Howard-Wells Amusement Company Received During One of Worst Years

By D. M. BAIN

Publicity Representative, Howard-Wells Amusement Co., Wilmington, N. C.

ON the annual balance sheet of March 1st, 1923, covering the past year's operations of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, operators of the Grand, Bijou and Royal picture theatres and the Victoria legitimate road show house, Wilmington, North Carolina, there was one extra item on the credit side not usually found on such statements, said item saving the final entry on the transcript covering the worst year's business in the history of this company from being entered in red ink! Said entry reads as follows:

"Screen advertising (net income of Service Advertising Company)$9,890.25"

Screen advertising cannot be handled in every theatre; but in the majority of smaller towns, by removing the usual objectionable features, it can be made easily to pay the theatre rent or other principal items of expense, and do this without the slightest annoyance to the patrons of the theatre. Wilmington movie patrons now accept the screen advertising just as they accept the advertising in their morning newspapers; in fact it has been made so attractive that many remain in their seats after the performance is ended to see the slides.

The Howard-Wells people have an entirely separate department which handles all screen, program and curtain advertising. In charge of this department exclusively they have Carl B. Rehder, an advertising man with years of experience. Rehder's department is handled as an entirely separate company under the title of "The Service Advertising Company," has own separate offices, stationery and banking connections. Rehder has handled screen advertising for nearly ten years and has developed a service to advertisers that has caused screen advertising to become the most sought medium in Wilmington, the amount of business done in his department being only limited by the number of slides we care to run on our screens.

Rehder has found that the chief objection to advertising slides is their sameness, and by injecting novelty and originality in his slides, together with regular daily changes keeps something new on the screen that actually interests patrons. He keeps a file of hundreds of photographs and novel and interesting illustrations clipped from magazines, etc. If an advertiser wants to exploit the latest mode in a fur neckpiece, for instance, Rehder will design and have made an attractive hand colored slide showing Norma Talmadge or some other popular screen star wearing a similar fur. If it's a men's clothing ad he wants, Harold Lloyd or Herbert Rawlinson will be requisitioned from his files in a suitable garment. A still that has done duty for lobby display, showing some corpulent stranger partaking of scene of a picture thereon will do excellent duty as a furniture advertisement. An audience that would take no interest in seeing some corpulent stranger partaking of a repast on a cafe ad would find genuine delight should you show them Bebe Daniels in the same act.

Another distinct novelty, is furnished by the adaptation of comedy characters—Chaplin for instance—or characters from the popular cartoons—which always interests patrons, and with subject matter tied up nicely will frequently get a good laugh. For a bathing suit ad a bathing scene at Wilmington's own Wrightsville Beach, with some recognizable landmark in the background creates attention. An auto advertiser will have his car photographed standing on one of Wilmington's pretty boulevards or get a newspaper or magazine cut of some well known screen or stage star stepping out. The advertiser of course pays for the slides, which average one dollar each.

In all cases individuality, originality and novelty are striven for in all slides shown on the screens. On yearly contract, the manner in which the larger percentage of slides are handled the charge is $15.00 per month. Short-time contracts covering only a few days or weeks, and which are usually ordered so hurriedly and on short notice that it is impossible to get attractive slides made up, are discouraged, but where such service is furnished a charge of one dollar per day is made. Many of Wilmington's retail stores which have regular annual contracts for the three picture theatres pay $45 monthly.

With the screen advertising systematized and running smoothly with the aid of a young lady assistant Rehder has found time to develop program advertising and curtain advertising and has recently taken on several outside propositions including the mammoth enclosing wall around the new Wilmington fair grounds, the returns from which all come to the coffers of the Service Advertising Company and in turn to the Howard-Wells Amusement Company. For the Fall and Winter road show season at the Victoria theatre he develops a standing program of twelve pages containing advertising spaces which not only pays for its complete printing but returns several hundred dollars clear profit each season. The ads are sold for the entire season and afterward requires no attention. Various drop curtains such as street scenes, on which advertising can be appropriately displayed are also made another source of revenue. At the present time Mr. Rehder is fitting up a sample room with every kind of advertising novelty for imprinting and give-away use on display and plans to add another lady assistant to handle this new line, selling to his screen advertisers all such goods that they will use from time to time. He plans to make this one of the most profitable "side lines" of the Service Advertising Company, and in being able to furnish these items to his advertisers and making worthwhile suggestions for the use of various advertising novelties he is furnishing his advertisers a service which they appreciate as a personal favor.

Above all, Rehder takes personal pride in his work and in maintaining its high excellence, service and artistic qualities.

WANTS THEATRE NAMED

Exhibitors Trade Review:

Will you help me to select a suitable name for my new theatre seating 450?

Gem Theatre,
Chatfield, Minn.

As you are in a small town I would suggest the following names:

COMMUNITY THEATRE — which gives your house the appearance of being part of the community.

RIALTO THEATRE—a name used by the most successful theatre men in the country.

CHATFIELD THEATRE—which will appeal to local pride, or a theatre named after the owner in the event that the owner has been in business in Chatfield for a long time and has the reputation of good shows.

THE LEGION THEATRE—Which will stir up interest among the ex-soldiers in your community.

We also suggest that you read a little pamphlet sent you by mail showing that certain letters have greater legibility than others. It will be well to read it.

Small Town Troubles

ASK the average small town exhibitor, "What is your biggest trouble today?" and you may get a reply that will surprise you. Then again, if you do get a response, it may not.

Let us take the question of high film rentals. The number complaining of the high cost of film is just matched by the number of those who say their greatest trouble is "getting 'em in." The groups combined represent about 35 per cent of the total, or, say, one in six under each heading.

One theatre owner with a 500-seat house sets forth his chief trouble is "to get the specials at the right price for a small town, while they are new; too much money is spent by the producers in advertising in the magazines and papers—only nineteen copies of the leading national weekly are taken here.

Another exhibitor with a 200-seat house declares his most prominent handicap has been "buying pictures at fair rentals, and I am beginning to succeed."

And here is an exhibitor whose theatre contains 500 seats who says his trouble today is to "make my town the theatre town it once was."

Here is a man with a 300-seat house who is fighting high school competition; one who is puzzled about his lobby exploitation, one over distinctive advertising, one worried over picking the best in the five and six reel subjects, and a 400-seat theatre owner who is disturbed over getting pictures at prices he can afford to pay in his town.

A small percentage complain of excessive footage. As is to be expected the bulk of the criticism on this score naturally will come from the larger houses, where the necessity of adhering to the two-hour program is more urgent.

The difficulty of getting enough worthwhile pictures is the outstanding worry of one theatre owner. "To get from exchanges what I pay for" is the chief complaint of another. "The way I have to do business with the exchanges" is the form in which another theatre owner phrases his larger trouble. And another says his worry is over-taxation—ticket, seat and music.

One of the more significant of the statements is the one first quoted—"to get the specials at the right price for a small town and while they are new."

The theatre owner referred to, while declaring "too much money is spent by the producers in advertising in magazines and papers," does not employ the argument used by one distributor a year ago—that in other than a large community the national advertising of pictures results only in informing the public that the local exhibitor is showing old stuff.

In the present instance it will be noted the theatre owner states only nineteen copies of the most famous of the weekly magazines, the one carrying the bulk of the national motion picture advertising, enter his town.

Every exhibitor has his chief trouble, one difficulty that overtops others. It may be the same as another's, but the chances are that due to different environment it will be a thing apart.

An Echo

SUMMER is not peculiar to America; nor are Summer slumps. Great Britain has them too and it is interesting to note that Kinematograph Weekly, the British trade paper, takes a view similar to that expressed in this publication. Kine, as the publication is called by its friends, says:

Last year, before winter came, there were signs of a slump in the attendance at cinemas. The cold snap has stopped the slump for the moment, but is there any reason to leave it to the weather? True, people favor indoor entertainment less when the open is calling. But there are ways of making the call of the cinema more insistent than it usually is when the days are long and warm. That, more than any other, is the time when the exhibitor needs to bend his energies towards making reasons why the public should go to the cinema. There is a tendency to accept a summer slump; to be careless about the program, to economise in publicity, to slow down getting them in because it is summer. Forget it. Remember instead that if you pay more attention to what you show, if you keep out the poor features, if you run plenty of snappy, attractive, short features, if you run the pick of the big pictures that the public wants to see, and if you get behind your theatre with effective, carefully planned publicity, you will find that the slump does not exist. There are good pictures to be had. There are plenty of things to tell the public about them and about your theatre. Refuse to believe in the inevitability of a slump. Insist that there is something worth going to your theatre to see, and to hear. And in the phrase of the Navy: Make it so.

Exposing Stock Sale Frauds

SOMETHING new in the way of short subjects or long ones either, for that matter, is announced by the Hodkinson Corporation. It is a series of two-part pictures designed to uncover the wiles of the fraudulent stock salesmen—of any kind of stock. The producers aim to educate the public so that it will be on its guard.

If those who are responsible for the pictures succeed in the end in preventing the loss of the public's money to ese extent of but 10 per cent. of the present total it will be effort well expended.

The campaign is in line with that conducted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, although the efforts of this organization have been confined to preventing the distribution of spurious motion picture stock.

HAVE just heard an interesting talk by Ernest Torrence, of whose portrayal of the role of Bill Jackson in "The Covered Wagon" much has been written and of which much more is to be written as the production spreads out over the map of the United States, not to mention the other countries of the world.

Mr. Torrence was addressing a group of diners gathered in College Hall in the Hotel Astor on Monday, June 4, at the invitation of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, gathered for the sole purpose of doing honor to Mr. Torrence. It is an unusual event in the life of a character actor to be singled out for such distinction.

The guest of honor had not been speaking many minutes before his hearers very distinctly understood why Mr. Torrence had been so set apart from the hundreds of other interpreters of character roles. The interpreter of Bill Jackson is more than an actor. He is a man of keen intelligence, of marked modesty and possessed of the ability to convey his thoughts to others in a most interesting manner.

Mr. Torrence physically is an up-standing man, easily towering over the heads of the fifty or more present at the luncheon. The player, introduced by Robert T. Kane as America's leading character actor, told of his difficulty in securing attention from casting directors. Although he had had wide stage experience he learned that the role he had played in "Tol'able David" had marked him in the estimation of the casting departments as a "dirty dog heavy," and he was given the cheerful information that he would be so categorized for the rest of his life.

It was Jesse Lasky, following an interview with Mr. Torrence and after the player had undergone months of discouragement, who gave him his chance. Mr. Lasky accepted the word of Mr. Torrence that the latter was an actor and not a type. He said that Mr. Lasky had differed with him, the producer declaring he believed the player to be a perfect type of "homeliness," and from the first had never ceased to joke with him along that line.

Mr. Torrence paid a tribute to Director James Cruze, referring to him as a man of marvelous magnetism, of vivid personality, one of most tender heart and of great modesty.

The new Paramount player already is slated for three pictures, "Ruggles of Red Gap," "North of 36," by Emerson Hough, and "The Mountebank," by W. J. Locke.

Among those present at the luncheon were Eugene Zukor, Emil E. Shauer, Jack Cunningham, who wrote the continuity for "The Covered Wagon," and R. W. Saunders, controller of the company.

FORREST HALSEY at the weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers on May 31 paid his respects somewhat emphatically to the preference given in production offices to the story of the play or novel over original writing aimed directly at the screen.

Mr. Halsey quoted the head of one scenario department as saying he would rather have for adaptation a popular story with a 30 per cent picture value than an original screen story with 100 per cent picture value.

We may as well remark right here that Mr. Halsey has written the continuities for the present series of George Arliss productions, has been associated with the speaking stage, served for over a year with the David Belasco forces, and is himself a writer of plays.

Mr. Halsey quoted Marcus Loew as saying that direction, photography and acting all had advanced but that the scenario had stood still. "I wonder if that is so," remarked the speaker, "whether the condition is due to the scenario writer or the system?"

Mr. Halsey spoke of waste due to faulty preparation of stories for the screen, how in one instance director and cast after beginning work waited in idleness for two or three weeks while a story was being rewritten or remade, or the not uncommon practice of going on location, shooting thousands of dollars worth of stuff and then cutting it all out in the editing; of taking a company on a two days' journey, photographing 20,000 feet of film and then using but 500 feet.

"The cause of this waste, if you will investigate," said Mr. Halsey, "is in the script. If an architect wants to erect a house does he build from a photograph or a blueprint?"

"I will tell you another thing that is going to come—the elimination of another piece of waste: paying these enormous prices for books or plays simply because they are books or plays. It would be much better to go out and buy an original story written by a man who has a flare for the screen.

"The authors now are writing all their stories with an eye on the screen. Two of the companies have taken into their studios many of the best contemporaneous writers. Out of this number there has been developed one writer for the screen, perhaps two.

"The motion picture is a new medium. The author has been writing for years for a medium that is foreign to the motion picture. The author writes for expression and the screen demands writing for pantomime. You have got to develop raw material, the new writer, a youngster with observations of life, with a flare for the screen."

The speaker referred to Rupert Hughes as an author who was willing to learn and who has made a big hit. Of Edmund Goulding he said the screen writer entered the business when originals could be sold and "his name is made."

"Producers won't use their own judgment on raw material," Mr. Halsey continued. "It is much easier to send to an agency for a synopsis of a book or play than to wade through a mass of tripe in a search for a new writer, to find a boy who has the spark in him and put him into the studio."

RIGHT in line with the foregoing there comes in the morning mail a note from Roy L. McCardell, with whom we have at various times casually discussed the subject of screen stories. Mr. McCardell calls attention to an article written for the Telegraph by Mrs. McCardell, at present visiting in Los Angeles, in which Jesse Lasky is said to be looking forward to the day when writers of originality and ability will write direct for the screen, as Rupert Hughes has been doing for Goldwyn.

"Jesse Lasky has always been convinced and has always been emphatic in saying that the art of the screen could never advance," writes Mrs. McCardell, "unless it became of itself creative and no longer was a machine to rehash stage plays, books and stories, art expressions totally different—as different, indeed, as a book is from a play and a cinematographic story is from them both."

ALL indications point to the growing importance in the minds of producers of the screen story's source. It is wasting words to say the producer cares not what he spends on the initial material for his productions. He cares a lot. If you doubt it ask any one who ever has tried to sell one—not his own necessarily but some other person's. It may be added by way of explanation this writer has no axe to grind—he never has had the hardihood to attempt the writing of a screen story or any other fiction for that matter if exception be allowed for such as may creep into a news story.

In the questionnaire now being circulated by Famous Players at the Rialto and Rivoli and Criterion theatres is this query, No. 2:

"Can better results be achieved by adapting literary masterpieces to the screen or by using stories written directly for the screen?"

The questions, of which there are twelve, are designed to aid the International Congress on Motion Picture Arts, to be held in New York, June 7 and 8, in its effort to formulate a set of principles for the artistic development of motion pictures. As has been set forth, the congress is held under the auspices of the Authors' League of America and Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky.

It is said this week by one affiliated with the coming congress that great interest has been aroused in it, that where in the beginning it was thought the attendance might reach 200 applications from persons entitled to take part have greatly swelled the original estimates.

PASSENGERS on the outgoing Majestic saw "Main Street" before New Yorkers had a glimpse of the new Warner subject. It was shown to the voyagers by Al Feinman, who was taking the film with him to Europe, where he will exploit it.

On the night before sailing Al was given a dinner at the home of Nat Levine.

YES, publicity men do have their troubles. One young man has just laid on our desk his weekly contribution. His apologetic mood attracted attention.

"If you see anything wrong with the stuff please bear in mind a costumer has just opened premises directly behind that fine rear office of mine," said the visitor. "I think I'll get a set of blinders."

"What kind of a costumer?"

"Chorus girl stuff—and they fit 'em right there."

"Why don't you complain to your boss?"

"Complain, eh—and lose my office? No, blinders for mine."

Don't ask us the young man's name. He was a busy guy even before the coming of his new neighbors.

MINNESOTA AND MICHIGAN QUIT

Both State Units Surrender Charters Following the Chicago Convention

Minneapolis, June 5.

The following telegram has been sent to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. A. and signed by Clyde H. Hitchcock, secretary of the Minnesota division of the M. P. T. O. A.:

"At a regularly called meeting of the board of directors of the Minnesota M. P. T. O. A. held today it was unanimously voted to surrender our charter and sever affiliation with the national organization. Please accept this as official notice of our action, charter being returned by registered mail."

When President Cohen was asked if he cared to comment on the Minnesota situation he said the withdrawal was no surprise to him. "In reality," he said, "it occurred some time ago, as we have had little or no co-operation from Minnesota during the past year."

Mr. Cohen charged the Minnesota organization has been dominated largely by First National interests, that Theodore L. Hayes, general manager of Ruben & Finkeltstein, regional directors of First National, has been the commanding figure in the Minnesota organization.

"The independent Theatre Owners of Minnesota," says Mr. Cohen, "may rest assured that in every way possible their interests will be cared for by the national organization and that everything will be done to protect their interests in any way that they may determine best."

Detroit, June 6.

Conviction on the part of the Michigan organization of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America that the present national organization is not working along lines conducive to the successful solution of the problems of the Theatre Owners and feeling that Michigan could not, therefore, give its whole-hearted moral and financial support to the national body, it has decided to withdraw therefrom.

Michigan has for the past three years been allied with the national organization, but we are convinced by the utter failure of the national organization to function in a businesslike manner, that constructive work is not possible under the present plan of operation.

In accordance with a resolution passed unanimously at the regular meeting today the following wire was forwarded to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America:

"At a regular monthly meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, held at the Hotel Wolverine, Detroit.

PARAMOUNT ABANDONS NAME "ACCESSORIES"

New York—Believing that the word "accessories" gives exhibitors the attitude toward advertising material, Paramount has changed the name of its department handling this matter to "Ad Sales Department."

Hereafter all posters, heralds, insert cards, stills, mats, and cuts will be designated as "advertising" and the department in the exchange vending them will be known as the "Advertising Department."

Wednesday, June 6, it was unanimously decided to withdraw from the national organization and charter is being returned by registered mail."

Realizing the vital necessity for national organization, Michigan looks forward to the time when politics will cease to dominate to the exclusion of constructive work and when an exhibitors' organization will get down to the work next to the heart of the exhibitor, at which time Michigan will support such an organization with the same zeal as in the past.

W. S. McLAREN,
President, Motion Picture Theatre
Owners of Michigan.

COHEN IS A GUEST AT CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

National President Sydney S. Cohen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America brought a message on exhibitor organization to the members of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at the regular meeting of that organization at the Hotel Astor June 5. It was his first appearance at a Chamber of Commerce session in fifteen months.

There was a large attendance and Mr. Cohen was enthusiastically received when he was presented to the members by Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Chamber.

The National President expressed the hope that whatever differences of opinion may have existed in the past that all of these would be resolved in the light of the necessity for compact organization in order that all opposing influences within and outside the industry might be met and the interests of the theatre owners cared for in every possible manner.

United States Senator Royal S. Copeland also was present at the luncheon.

NEW YORK STATE TO GATHER AT SYRACUSE

Announcement is made at the state headquarters of the M. P. T. O. of New York that the annual convention will be held at the Onondaga Hotel in Syracuse on June 19, 20 and 21. The presidents of all state units in the country have been invited to attend.

Invitations also have been issued to Governor Smith, Senator Walker, Lieutenant Governor Lund, Senators Copeland and Wadsworth and Will H. Hays.

ILLINOIS THEATRES FOR FILM BOARDS

Chicago, Ill.—Working in conjunction with the Joint Board of Arbitration, the Chicago Film Board of Trade is a factor in fostering a more amicable relationship between exchanges and theatre-owners. Since its inception, it has been arbitrating differences between exchanges and theatres and has satisfactorily adjusted hundreds of cases. Concrete evidence of the service that is being rendered by the Film Board is seen in the mass of testimonial letters from exhibitors that is reaching the Board's headquarters every day.

Charles Carpenter, Strand Theatre, East Moline, one of the many exhibitors to have his claims adjusted, expressed his appreciation of the Board's services in the following manner: "I just want to write a few words of thanks for the manner in which your organization assisted me. In going back to East Moline, I take with me great confidence and respect for your organization and feel that the exhibitors through the country will benefit extensively through your co-operation and square deal methods."

PATHE CAMPAIGN TO TEST LENGTHS

Seeking Exhibitors Reaction to Best Length For Serials

Within the next few months Pathe expects to have gathered from exhibitors throughout the United States a highly valuable, if not conclusive, answer to the question of the most practical length for serial productions. A campaign in which that object is automatically involved is started in connection with advance bookings of "Her Dangerous Path," the tenth-episode "serial" featuring Edna Murphy now in production at the Hal Roach Studios.

This innovation in the way of Pathe serials will enjoy a thorough test, as the release will immediately follow the public showing of the final episode of the current Ruth Roland fifteen-chapter picture, "Haunted Valley," and in its turn will be succeeded by another Roland production of the standard Pathe serial length.

The Roach tenth-episode test will come at a time when Roach's own production for Miss Roland, the fifteen-episode Pathe-serial, "The Timber Queen," is still fresh in the minds of exhibitors and patrons—not to mention Pearl White's "Plunder."

In asking exhibitors playing "Her Dangerous Path" to express their preferences regarding serial length, Pathe states that a large and important class of theatre-owners has recently declared the fifteen episode to be admirably suited to all of their booking and exploitation requirements. Such testimony gathered previously between two and three years ago, seemed to warrant the continuance of fifteen episodes as the standardized Pathe serial length. Since that time, Pathe explains, the enormously-increased circulation of this type of product has included the bookings of a class of exhibitors—operating mainly in the larger cities—who have favored a somewhat shorter length, in some instances suggesting ten episodes as better meeting their program and advance booking requirements.

ASSOCIATED AUTHORS PREPARING HARBOR BAR

Los Angeles.—Thompson Buchanan of the Associated Authors trio is adapting Peter B. Kyne's "Harbor Bar," for the screen. The film version of Kyne's story will go into production as soon as work on "Richard, the Lion-Hearted," the initial release of the Authors trio is completed for distribution by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

In connection with this feature Mr. Buchanan is now making a tour of all the harbors on the Pacific coast seeking a location for filming the story. He has completed the script for the picture and plans to begin the actual taking of scenes just as soon as suitable location can be found.

Among other possibilities being considered is Humboldt Bay, Eureka, Calif., where Kyne laid the original story. The main requirement for location is a treacherous bar where the ship wreck which carries the big punch of the tale properly can be screened.

Woodward S. Van Dyke has been engaged to direct. Mr. Buchanan will supervise the production and be assisted in this by his associates, Messrs. Woods and Elmer Harris.

Joins Art Department

Los Angeles.—Francis McComas, acclaimed in Paris and London as "America's Greatest Artist," has become a member of the Art Department of Cecil B. DeMille productions.

Metro Sales Convention Gets Big News

HEAR ABOUT NEW KEATON 5 REELERS

Loew and Atkinson Tell Sales Forces of New Product and Future Plans

New York City.—The annual convention of the sales organization of Metro Pictures Corporation, was opened at the Hotel Astor, Wednesday, June 6th, by William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation and was addressed by Marcus Loew.

The first day's session was taken up in the main with a resume of the business of the past year. General Manager Atkinson gave a comparative analysis of the growth of the Metro organization since its inception and the constant rounds of applause with which his speech was received attested to a very successful passing Metro season.

The entertainment program was one of the most elaborate that has ever been planned in connection with a motion pictures sales convention. On Wednesday evening, following a strenuous day's business, the visiting managers and Home Office executives were the guests of Louis B. Mayer on an outing at Coney Island. Thursday evening there was a stag dinner at the Astor, given by the Metro Home Office, and on Friday evening the convention delegates and their wives were the guests of Tiffany Productions at a theatre-party.

The convention will close Saturday night and the officials and salesmen will leave immediately for their offices. The early closing is necessitated by the fact that the Metro sales organization is right now in the midst of a vigorous campaign and the presence of every salesman and branch manager as well as other executives is imperative in their territories. In addition there are several Metro productions recently completed in the Metro west coast studios which are scheduled for summer distribution and sales plans for these go into immediate effect.

The next season's Metro program is to be announced to the convention Thursday night at the stag banquet at the Astor Hotel. In a prepared summary upon which he will elaborate in detail, Mr. Atkinson has outlined a series of productions for the Fall season which will eclipse in number and calibre the productions of any program hitherto completed by Metro.

Jaekie Coogan is now at work on his first Metro production, "Long Live the King" and Rex Ingram is at work on "Scaramouche" which Mr. Atkinson declared is to be bigger even than "The Four Horsemen." Among the Metro stars now at work in the Metro studios are Viola Dana and Buster Keaton. Mae Murray has just completed "The French Doll" and has already completed arrangements with Metro officials for two further pictures.

One of the most important announcements in regard to production connection which Mr. Atkinson will make to the convention Friday is the consummation of the contract with Joseph Schenck whereby Metro Pictures Corporation will begin distributing in September the new series of Buster Keaton super-special comedies. The first will be called "The Three Ages" which Mr. Atkinson characterized as burlesque on modern civilization. The Keaton comedies will be five reels. "The Three Ages" was shown to the Metro organization at the convention and it was enthusiastically received. It was acknowledged the best comedy Keaton has made in his successful career. It was the unanimous opinion of those gathered that if "The Three Ages" was a sample of the Metro Fall product it would be a most successful season for Metro exchanges and exhibitors alike.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

HOUSES CLOSE DOORS

Albany.—A number of motion picture theatres in central New York are planning to close for a portion of this summer in order to modernize and improve the houses. Other places are running but a few days each week. In Watervliet, John Christie closed the Third Avenue house to three days a week. Lew Fischer, who owns theatres in Ticonderoga, Fort Edward and Port Henry, plans to close the first two or three days a week, from the last of June, on The Star in Greenwich, operated by D. S. Regan, will close down June 15. Elmer Griffin, in Kinderhook, is operating one night a week.

In sharp contrast, some of the larger houses in the cities in this territory are not only planning to operate on the same schedule which prevailed during the winter, but also to furnish the highest class pictures obtainable rather than mere program pictures.

GEORGE H. COBB SUFFERS NERVOUS SHOCK

Albany.—Although George H. Cobb, chairman of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, is out of all danger so far as the effect of his recent accident, when he was struck by an automobile in his home city, he is suffering from a nervous shock. It will probably be two or three weeks yet before Mr. Cobb will be able to return to his New York city office. His entire body was a mass of bruises, following the accident, while one side of his face was almost totally black, so severely was it bruised as he was hurled to the pavement.

Since the accident occurred, Chairman Cobb has received many telegrams and letters from those connected with the motion picture business. David W. Griffith sent Mr. Cobb a handsome bouquet of American Beauty roses, while Hettie Gray Baker, connected with the Fox Film corporation, wired Mr. Cobb, as follows: "Eliminate episode of automobile running into Senator Cobb. Shorten two flash stay in hospital, write subtitle to show there will be no serious consequences. Insert telegram from editor of Fox Film Corporation extending earnest sympathy and best wishes for speedy recovery."

ERNEST TORRENCE VISITS NEW YORK

Famous Bill Jackson of the Covered Wagon Spends Busy Week End

New York.—Ernest Torrence, Paramount's character actor, who jumped to fame in his portrayal of Bill Jackson, the scout, in James Cruze's production, "The Covered Wagon," spent a busy week-end in the East whither he came primarily for the purpose of witnessing a performance of the stage play, "The Mountebank," by William J. Loeke, in Paramount's forthcoming screen version of which he is to have the leading role.

Monday noon Mr. Torrence was the guest of honor at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor which was attended by representatives of trade press, New York newspapers and fan magazines.

Convention of Managers

Los Angeles.—A convention of the managers of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., will be held in this city in two weeks, according to Michael Gore, president of the organization. The meeting will be the first of the managers of the southern and northern theatres, and will hereafter be an annual affair. Use of the screen as a medium of propaganda is one of the important subjects to come up at the convention.

New Company Organized

Culver City.—The Pacific Studios, Venice Boulevard and Durango, have been taken over by the Interstate Pictures Corporation, a newly organized $1,000,000 corporation. The lease was signed this week between Fred L. Hunt, owner, and J. B. Calvert, head of the new producing firm. A series of five to ten reel pictures are to be filmed.

FISHER RETURNS WITH BIG PLANS

David Chapman Appointed As Assistant Supervising Director

Los Angeles.—Victor B. Fisher, Supervising Director of Fisher Productions, returned here last Tuesday after a week's visit to San Francisco where the home office of the company is located, with plans for producing in this city on a large scale.

Immediately upon his return contracts were signed by Mr. Fisher for larger space at the Hollywood Studios on Santa Monica Boulevard which will house the enlarged producing activities of the organization following the completion of "Youth Triumphant," the initial Fisher offering.

To handle the new producing schedule Mr. Fisher has appointed David Chapman, prominent San Francisco oil man, to the post of Assistant Supervising Director. Mr. Chapman will be Mr. Fisher's right hand man in future productions and returned to Los Angeles with the producer.

As soon as "Youth Triumphant" is finally cut and titled, Mr. Fisher will leave for New York to arrange for its distribution and to obtain motion picture rights on a number of Broadway plays and several popular novels, negotiations for which are already under way. Mr. Fisher plans to leave Los Angeles for the East in ten days.

SCREEN VERSION OF BOOMERANG SCHEDULED

New York.—Preferred Pictures' screen version of "The Boomerang," David Belasco's stage production, is scheduled to be started in the near future. B. P. Schulberg will include this stage play in his output to be released next season by the Al Lichtman Corporation.

Eve Unsell is preparing the script from the manuscript by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes, and camera work will start as soon as Victor Schertzinger, who will direct it, completes "Long Live the King," Jackie Coogan's first vehicle for Metro, to whom Schertzinger was temporarily loaned.

A WIFE'S ROMANCE NEARING COMPLETION

Los Angeles.—Clara Kimball Young's latest Metro picture now nearing completion, is titled "A Wife's Romance." The story is taken from the novel "La Rubia" by H. W. Roberts and produced by Harry Garson. Thomas Heffron is directing.

In the cast with Miss Young are Lewis Dayton, Louis Bates Mortimer, Albert Roscoe, Lillian Adrian, Wedgewood Howell, Arthur Hull and Robert Caution. The story was adapted to the screen by Frank Beresford.

Enemies of Women at Cameo

New York.—"Enemies of Women," Cosmopolitan's picturization of Vincente Blasco Ibanez's novel, featuring Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens, after six weeks on Broadway, is continuing its run indefinitely at the Cameo Theatre where it was transferred on Sunday, June 3.

Bruce Johnson Sails

New York.—Bruce Johnson, manager of the First National foreign department, sailed on June 5 on the Berangia for Europe in the interests of First National Pictures abroad. He will remain in London until July 1, and from there will journey to Paris, Berlin and Stockholm.

PICTURE FIRST THEN THE STAGE

Hollywood.—Somewhat of a precedent in motion pictures is planned by Jane Murfin, who with Jane Cowl wrote "The Sign" which she is now filming with May Allison in the leading role. This summer Miss Murfin intends to produce "The Sign" on the stage with the same cast now appearing in the picture. The play will have its first production here, and will later be taken to New York. Appearing in the production with Miss Allison are Harry Mestayer, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Thomas O'Brien, Edward Everett Horton, Edith Chapman, J. C. Fowler and Eddie Phillips.

ARRANGE MANY STOP-

New York.—The series of personal appearance triumphs for Leah Baird, which set in when she was traveling through the southern states en route to New York from Los Angeles is to be continued on her western trip. Associated Exhibitors is arranging for Miss Baird to stop off at nearly all its branches between the oceans and make personal appearances at many key points in connection with the run of "Is Divorce a Failure?"

During the present week Miss Baird has been appearing at the Broadway Theatre, Richmond, Va. From Richmond she will return to New York and will tour New England.

Julanne Johnston Chosen

Los Angeles.—To Julanne Johnston goes the honor of being the first player selected by Douglas Fairbanks for the cast of his new picture, "The Thief of Bagdad," which he is preparing to put into production at an early date.

Miss Johnston's knowledge of classic dancing had much to do with her selection for one of the important roles in the cast. Her work as a classical dancer and her ability to act before the camera formed a combination which was thought fitted her specially for the character of an Oriental.

An Epic of Vagabondia

London.—The many readers of that unforgettable epic of vagabondia, written by William J. Locke—"The Beloved Vagabond"—will be pleased to know that before long they will see this story and its characters visualized on the screen. Carlyle Blackwell, the American film star, has just completed arrangements with the English novelist for the film dramatization of the story.

Back Into Harness

Albany.—The two men who are responsible for motion picture history in Northern New York, James and Alec Papayanakos, former owners of the Olympic, Palace and Antique theatres, who retired two or three years ago, have re-entered the business. They now have theatres in Gouverneur and Canton, and this week were revealed as being behind a movement to erect a $50,000 theatre in Pulaski, N. Y.

Club," announced at the last meeting that the initiation fee would be reduced to $250 until September 1, after which it would be restored to $1,000. The Joint Arbitration Board continues to hold meetings on Wednesday and Friday.

SCHULBERG STARTS ON THE VIRGINIAN

Screen Adaptation Being Made and Cast of Players Selected.

New York.—B. P. Schulberg will begin production on Owen Wister's novel, "The Virginian" which is prominent among the well known stories and plays that will be made during the coming months by Preferred Pictures for release through the Al Lichtman Corporation.

The screen adaptation is now being prepared by Waldemar Young, who recently completed his contract with Paramount, and has now signed with the Schulberg organization. The story will be directed by Tom Forman.

Schulberg is taking special care in the selection of a cast to be composed entirely of players who have large followings. The name part has been given to Kenneth Harlan who has played the role on the speaking stage with four different companies. Florence Vidor has been chosen for the feminine lead with Russell Simpson as the sheriff, Pat O'Malley as "Steve" and Raymond Hatton as "Shorty." Edward Brady, who has recently completed a role with Forman in "The Broken Wing" will play "Spanish Ed" in "The Virginian."

THE STREET SINGER NEARING COMPLETION

Los Angeles.—The end is in sight on the making of Mary Pickford's United Artists attraction, "The Street Singer."

Ernest Lubitsch, the director, now believes that the last scene will be shot in a few days. Many players have appeared before the camera during the process of production, and forty-six sets have been built.

Following this feature Miss Pickford plans to go into the making of another picture, probably "Dorothy Vernon of Hadron Hall," the scenario for which is now ready for the camera.

THUNDERGATE FILMING TO START IN A WEEK

Los Angeles.—A new First National unit will be busy within a week's time at the United Studios, when "Thundergate" will be put into production. The cast has practically been completed by Joseph de Grasse, who will direct the picture for First National.

Owen Moore has been cast in the leading male role. Virginia Brown Faire and Sylvia Breamer will fill important roles. Tully Marshall will play the part of an old Chinese overlord, a serio-comic role. Edwin Booth Tilton and Robert McKimm complete the cast.

Many Players Are Used For Biblical Prologue

Los Angeles.—A second "Exodus" like unto that of the Children of Israel was staged from this city recently when a large number of players left the Southern Pacific station, to join at Guadalupe, California, others who are already encamped in a tent city for the Biblical prologue scenes to be done by Cecil B. DeMille as part of his forthcoming Paramount picture, "The Ten Commandments."

Two special trains left this city at seven and nine carrying the crowd to the large location setting. The present "Exodus" is particularly interesting because the crowd concerned will take part in scenes showing the real "Exodus" headed by Moses.

Motion Picture Art Conference Opens

BRIEF MESSAGES TO EXHIBITORS

Heads of Producing Companies Speak of Their Products

New York.—The announcement made last week by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan of its distributing program for the season of 1923-1924, including a total of 44 productions, has aroused interest in the industry. This is due to the nature of the productions and their variety to the able directors responsible for their making and to the fact that the product of three such companies as Goldwyn, Cosmopolitan and Distinctive is now being given to the trade through one giant distributing organization.

To the announcement of individual pictures previously made, F. J. Godsol, President of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; William Randolph Hearst, president of Cosmopolitan Productions, and Arthur S. Friend, President of Distinctive Pictures Corporation, now issue the following statements to the exhibitors of the country concerning the product which their individual companies will produce next year.

Just before sailing for Europe, Mr. Godsol wrote the following statement:

"During the entire past year my executive associates, Mr. Edward Bowes, Mr. Abraham Lehr, and I have employed the large financial resources and organization of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in securing the most gifted directors, each with a record for big successes—the most important plays,—and stories and plays known by title to all motion picture patrons.

"An exhibitor must have pictures of outstanding merit, and in order to attract patrons to the box-office, each picture must have strong selling features in director, artists and story. Theatre profits depend upon these things. Also, exhibitors must be assured of a continuous volume of pictures with these magnetic, profit-making promotion angles.

"The merger of our distributing organization with Cosmopolitan Productions and the association of Distinctive Pictures, together with certain other extraordinarily high class individual productions, makes the exhibitor who presents our product dominant in this field.

"A glance at our announcement of 44 productions for next season enables you to comprehend the magnitude of our production plans. We are fortified immeasurably in the activity of the Goldwyn Studios with the presence of June Mathios as editorial director. While we are counting on having completed the many productions announced,—and more in addition, the list is however, subject to possible changes because of exigencies which we cannot foresee at this time."

Mr. Hearst's statement regarding Cosmopolitan pictures is as follows:

"The picture ranks with the press not only as a means of public entertainment but of public enlightenment.

"Realizing this, the purpose of the Cosmopolitan Corporation has been to provide entertainment, of course not only in its pictures but also to furnish information and education and to appeal to those whose possession of knowledge and taste enables them fully to appreciate the artistic, dramatic and historic value of the most meritorious moving picture production.

"The unexampled success of such instructive Cosmopolitan productions as 'When Knighthood Was in Flower,' has amply proved, that not only is the greatest spiritual satisfaction to the producer to be found in creating pictures of the highest artistic and educational quality, but that therein also lies the greatest material recompense.

"The ideals of the American people are of the highest and the publisher or moving picture producer who strives to meet and satisfy those ideals will secure his reward not only in public esteem but in public patronage.

"The plan of production of the Cosmopolitan Corporation, therefore, for the coming year involves a preponderance of pictures of the educational excellence and artistic and dramatic merit of 'Knighthood.'

"No phase of tense interest, no possibility of dramatic action or emotion will be neglected; but, to interest will be added instruction in the hope of making the picture not only the enlivening but the uplifting force that it should be in the community."

Mr. Friend made the following statement concerning the Distinctive output:

"Distinctive Pictures Corporation has a schedule of magnificent features for 1923-1924—big in story, big in immediate box-office value and tremendous in Good-Will power. Every Distinctive executive works on the principle of personal responsibility for his share in production. We believe this doctrine is the one certain way of giving you the type of pictures to which you are entitled in these days of discriminating audiences. You, as an exhibitor, are responsible to your patrons, and we, as producer, are out to help you.

"Naturally, having mapped out a super-size production programme we are happy in the thought that our pictures are to be released to you through the medium of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan. To be associated with people who are doing big things is an inspiration. This inspiration and cooperation will be at the back of every bit of product made by Distinctive."

James R. Grainger, General Manager of Sales for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, made a statement regarding Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan service which will be of interest to the exhibitor. He said:

"A distributing organization's strength depends on two things. One, the quality of the productions that it distributes. Two, the service it renders to exhibitors. Our production plans have been unfolded. We are confident that no distribution agency ever handled so worthwhile, so important, so impressive a product.

"With regard to service. During the past year, we have increased our number of branch offices from twenty-two to thirty-one, with the opening of additional exchanges in Indianapolis, Indiana; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Portland, Oregon; New Haven, Conn.; Albany, New York; Des Moines, Iowa; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Charlotte, North Carolina; and Butte, Montana. This must naturally result in a speedier film and accessory service to exhibitors in all territories which have up to this time been distant from the formal geographical layout of distributing sources.

"Our branch executives and sales force, as a personnel, are alive to the many needs of theatre managers. The aim of each man is to give satisfaction to the exhibitors he serves. We confidently assert that our advertising and exploitation departments are the very best in the industry, equipped to render showman-like cooperation and with ambitious advertising plans that must result in more money for the many theatres which we serve. We dedicate our organization to exhibitor cooperation."

Another German Tie-Up?

Berlin, Germany.—A revival in the German-American relations, is said to be under way and that Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Co., during his recent stay in Germany, planned to establish a new German-American enterprise, whose producer would be Buchowetzki. It has been announced that Rosenfeld, director of the National Film A. G., will start for the United States. It is said his trip is associated with Zukor's plans.

Company on Location

Los Angeles.—Mabel Normand, the star, and Ralph Graves, George Nichols, Anna Hernandez, Vernon Dent and Charlotte Mineau, principals in the cast of Mack Sennett's "The Extra Girl," now in the making for Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release, F. Richard Jones, director of the production, set forth for location work.

CLERGY TO SEE FIRST SHOWING

Hollywood—Charles Ray is to set a precedent by giving his first public showing of "The Courtship of Miles Standish" to the clergy. The first audience will be the delegates to the National Council of Congregational Churches at Springfield, Mass., in October, when 1000 clergymen and laymen will be present. Ray is now editing the film which will be ten reels or more.

AUTHORS DISPLAY GREAT INTEREST

Two Days Sessions at Waldorf Attended By Leaders in Literary World.

With five hundred of the leading writers, dramatists, educators, editors, motion picture producers, directors and leaders of thought of America and representatives of the British and French Societies of Authors in attendance, the first International Congress on Motion Picture Arts opened Thursday morning at the Waldorf-Astoria. It continued through today.

The general program was divided into six parts, with morning, luncheon and afternoon sessions Thursday and morning and luncheon sessions Friday. That afternoon there was scheduled an informal inspection by the delegates of the Paramount studio at Long Island City. The gathering was to be brought to a close Friday with a banquet.

The congress is being held under the auspices of the Authors' League of America with the co-operation of Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

One of the most important features of the congress, it was stated Thursday morning by Ellis Parker Butler, president of the Authors' League, who opened the first session, was the appointment of a committee on resolutions which will consider the variety of suggestions presented by men and women from all parts of the world and out of them try to formulate a series of recommendations that will aid in defining good motion pictures, help their artistic advancement, bring about greater co-operation between authors and picture producers, advance the study of motion picture problems in universities and develop a new school of writers who will produce their works directly for the screen.

The committee is to report at the closing banquet.

The congress was called to order Thursday morning by Ellis Parker Butler, president of the league, at 10:30 o'clock. Adolph Zukor welcomed the delegates in a short address. The general topics for discussion were "The Place of the Motion Picture in American Life and Culture" and "The International Scope of Motion Pictures." The speakers were Henry W. Taft, honorary chairman; Julien Jacques Champenois, representing the National Universities of France, and W. B. Maxwell, vice-president and delegate of the British Society of Authors.

At the luncheon session which followed the presiding officer was George Barr Baker and the speakers were Father John B. Kelly, Arthur Brisbane and Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews.

Dear Sir:

Replying to your letter of recent date concerning Pearl White Serial "Plunder", beg to advise that my patrons are loud in their praise that it is the best serial ever shown in my theatre. The box office receipts have doubled since the advent of this serial, and I sincerely trust you will be able to produce another serial of this type, that will please the patrons as well as "Plunder", and you may rest assured that the agreement attached to the box office receipts will be eliminated.

Gentlemen: -

I was advised not to contract for PLUNDER by competing salesmen, who very obligingly told me that PEARL WHITE was through as a drawing card and that PLUNDER was falling down as a box office attraction.

However, you know that after screening three episodes for me, you not only convinced me that I should book PLUNDER, but sold same to me at an increased price.

To date, I have used four episodes and each one has shown an increase over the previous one. In fact, PLUNDER has doubled my receipts for me, on Serial Night.

Exhibitors who want a real Serial, one that will bring the people to their theatres and satisfy them, should immediately arrange for PLUNDER as this Serial with PEARL WHITE, is a big drawing card.

Thanking you for convincing wishes, I remain

Dear Sir:-

In view of the fact that this theatre does not ordinarily run serials and I took what I thought was a chance when I booked "Plunder" because I enter to a high class patronage whom I thought would show any episodic affair. I feel constrained to utter a word of praise about Pearl White. Besides increasing my business on the two days I run it, "Plunder" seems to be satisfying everyone. I hope she continues the good work.

It is, indeed, a pleasure for me to recommend your serial "PLUNDER" to any exhibitor who is looking for a real Box Office attraction for fifteen weeks.

Am more pleased with "PLUNDER" than any serial we have ever shown at the Plaza and we have been showing at least one serial a week for the past seven years.

Pearl White and the producers of "PLUNDER" are to be congratulated on this excellent production. They deserve the encouragement of all thinking exhibitors.

You have not asked me for this letter, but I feel that I should let you, and all the world know exactly what I think of "PLUNDER".

I never judge a picture by what I think the jump, from cashier to cashier, and also watch to see how busy certain pictures keep the box office.

"PLUNDER" has done more than just keep the jump, from cashier to cashier, and also watch to see how busy certain pictures keep the box office. It has kept us all of next performance. I'm afraid we have got a hard task ahead of us to beat the record that "Plunder" has hung up for us. I am certain that the final chapter my patrons are making when we will have Pearl White again. I have run any serial but take it from me "PLUNDER" makes all previous box office records look like plunder.

Give us another one soon.

Dear Mr. Heller:-

Having played practically every serial ever released by Pathe and now being of the sixth chapter of "Plunder" I feel it my duty to compliment you upon this serial.

Pathe has always led the world in serial production and now they have gone themselves one better in producing one with such a popular star, yet giving to the screen a wonderful production with a real background, so different from that usually found in serial production. The serial is both and shoulders above anything Pathe has yet produced and I trust is an indication that in the future all chapters of "Plunder" are going to be produced with the same degree of excellence, which will enable the exhibitor to get a better class patronage to attend his serials.

I sincerely feel that "Plunder" has been a great boost to my trial day and I thank you and Pathe.

Gentlemen:-

It gives me a real pleasure to tell you of the extraordinary success being registered in my theatre by PEARL WHITE in "PLUNDER".

The situation is quite complex in my district. Ordinarily I can use only a first run serial or one that is day and date with my most remote competitor. In the instance of "PLUNDER" this serial was placed first and second run with my competition. At first it was impossible to convince me that the serial could be run by me at all, especially in view of the fact that these two runs mentioned above were my closest competitors. Finally PATE prevailed upon me to place this serial in the Star as a third run basis. The story thereafter is simple.

I am running one other serial attraction on a first run basis and PEARL WHITE in "PLUNDER" third run after two direct competitors is outdoing at the box office by first run serial. How could one prove more conclusively the extraordinary box office power of PEARL WHITE!

18 MILLIONS FOR BIGGER STUDIOS

Fox Heads West Coast Group in One of Largest Expansion Moves in History.

Hollywood.—The West Coast film world has started a gigantic expansion. Practically every producing company here of any import has announced plans for new studios or new buildings. This is the beginning of a movement, it is said, to edge the present studios out of the center of Hollywood whereby the companies can realize a handsome profit on their real estate in the residential section and purchase larger tracts in the outlying districts at a nominal cost.

The present plans involve an expenditure of more than $18,000,000. It is the greatest expansion program in the history of the industry, and follows hard upon the era of prosperity that has struck all of the producing units here.

The estimated expenditures of the various companies to be made in expansion follows:

William Fox	$ 3,500,000
Hollywood studios	1,000,000
Mack Sennett	2,000,000
Famous - Players - Lasky	3,250,000
Sol Lesser	5,000,000
Fairbanks	1,150,000
United Studios	800,000
Universal	500,000
Robertson - Cole	250,000
Hal Roach studio	400,000
Goldwyn studio	300,000
Independents	5,000
Total	18,155,000

Fox started the ball rolling by announcing the purchase of a 450 acre site in the Westwood-Beverly district on which a complete new studio will be erected at a cost of $3,500,000. Plans call for the erection of the most complete studio in the world. The present studio site of 15 acres at Sunset Boulevard and Western avenue, purchased only a few years ago for $180,000, has been appraised at $1,200,000, and will be turned into building lots. The new studio will consist of a score of reinforced concrete buildings. It is expected to be completed in a year.

Mack Sennett next stepped to the front with the announcement that it is his plan to sell the present Glendale Boulevard studio site as soon as possible, and construct an entire new production center at an estimated cost of $2,000,000 on his 350 acre tract in the foothills between Vermont and Western avenues.

The Christie Realty Corporation, headed by the Christie Brothers, producer of comedies, has become owner of a tract of 70 acres on National Boulevard at Military Road adjoining the Westwood properties. They will dispose of their present site in the center of Hollywood adjoining Famous Players-Lasky, but announce the transfer of the studio is not to be made immediately. Recently the Christies have become the purchasers of land in various active centers of Hollywood.

There is a report current that Famous Players-Lasky, with its studio in the center of Hollywood is looking for a tract of several hundred acres along the foothills on which a new plant will be erected at a cost of $3,000,000 or more. Famous now owns the most valuable site in the heart of Hollywood, and is almost entirely surrounded by business houses and residences.

Hollywood studios on Santa Monica Boulevard announces that property will soon be offered for sale in order that a larger tract can be purchased upon which to erect a new $1,000,000 plant. At a cost of approximately $150,000 the Douglas Fairbanks studio has purchased a ten-acre tract back of the present plant on Santa Monica Boulevard, and it is estimated

GISH SISTERS SELECTED FOR ROMOLA

Hollywood—Lillian and Dorothy Gish are to come back to the screen in a picture together. The story has been selected for them by Inspiration Pictures, and will be a picturized version of George Elliot's "Romola." Lillian Gish is to have the title role, while Dorothy will play the ill-fated little Italian girl beloved of Tito, the hero.

Present plans call for the production of the picture in Florence, Italy, where the action of the story is laid.

$1,000,000 will be spent in improving the property. The United Studios on Melrose avenue has additions and improvements totaling $800,000 underway, and Sol Lesser announces the expenditure of about $500,000 in improving his Santa Monica Boulevard property.

At Universal City it was stated that the improvement and extension program will involve an expenditure of $500,000, and will include the building of the world's largest stage, wardrobe warehouse, and an electrically equipped cafe. The work is underway, and will be completed within six months.

Hal Roach bought a site on Arenz Boulevard near Culver City sometime ago and will spend $400,000 on improvements there, besides making improvements at the present plant. The largest portion of the $300,000 to be expended by Goldwyn will go for a gigantic stage, and there are other improvements contemplated which they are not ready to announce. Robertson & Cole are to spend $250,000 in building a new warehouse, and inquiries at various independent units bring the total figures estimated in improvements by them up to $5,000,000.

BANQUET TENDERED TO ELMER PEARSON

Culver City.—At a banquet tendered to Elmer Pearson, of New York, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, in the Hal Roach studio, Mr. Roach announced the signing of Pete Carroll, for the last ten years branch manager for Pathe in Los Angeles, to be liaison advisor between the producer and the distributor. This step is said to have significance in that it is the first step in this direction made by a producer. Mr. Carroll will pass on all film productions and judge them from the viewpoint of the distributor and exhibitor.

It was also announced that all Pathe sales managers would be brought to Los Angeles next year for a convention.

Held to Answer is Title of Second All-Star Special

Los Angeles.—Harold Shaw will direct "Held to Answer," Peter Clarke McFarlane's mystery story, which will be one of the Metro all-star specials for the coming season.

Mr. Shaw was signed by Milton E. Hoffman, Metro production manager, following the completion of "Rouged Lips," which Mr. Shaw directed.

The actual filming of "Held to Answer," which has been adapted for the screen by Winifred Dunn, has been started.

Mr. Shaw arrived in Hollywood about three months ago from England with his wife, Edna Flugrath Shaw, who is the sister of Viola Dana and Shirley Mason. They had made a hurried trip from London following the news of the serious illness of Mrs. Shaw's mother, which proved fatal. Mr. Shaw had been in England for ten years producing his own pictures.

Duncan's Smashing Barriers

Reduced to Feature Length

New York.—William Duncan's "Smashing Barriers," a super-feature edited from the thirty reel serial made by the Vitagraph star will be released as a six reel version.

Edith Johnson plays the lead in the story, and opposite Duncan is the bad man of the West, Joe Ryan. Walter Roger, another bad man, is Ryan's companion in crime, and Howard Vincenti and a dozen other hard riding evil doers contest in an effort to down Duncan in his role of a young Eastener who makes good in the wilds of the red-wood forests.

To Film Methods of Fake Stock Promoters

GET-RICH-QUICK SCHEMES EXPOSED

New Hodkinson Release Shows How Fake Promoters Operate

New York.—The production of a series of photoplays, unique in the screen world, has been started under the auspices of the Investors' Vigilance Committee, through the medium of which the unwary will be shown the wiles and methods of "get-rich-quick" schemes, confidence workers and crooked stock and security salesmen, in a manner which cannot help but drive home the lesson of caution and care in the making of investments and in any transaction in which securities are involved.

These pictures will be two reel features, issued at the rate of one a month, and will be distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

The first of the series, entitled "Wild Cats" has just been released. It tells the story of how oil promoters fake the literature they send out, how an unscrupulous scoundrel takes a group of honest young fellows, fills them full of lies and then sends them out to dupe the public, making them participants in a crime. It also shows how the promoter corrupts men in insurance companies and obtains from them the names and particulars of people, especially widows, who have received insurance benefits. Then it reveals the heartless methods, by a profession of friendship and sympathy through which these insurance benefits are taken from people who often have nothing else in the world. Mary MacLaren, Sydney Dean and Baby Elsie Ferguson, a niece of Elsie Ferguson, are prominently featured in the production.

The second of the series, now in preparation, will be titled "The Reloaders," and will expose, in conjunction with an entertaining story, the methods of spurious stock salesmen.

Back of this series of photoplays is a plan of the Investors' Vigilance Committee to educate the public in its nationwide fight against fraudulent securities. With branches established in more than 200 cities, including Honolulu, Cuba and Canada this organization is waging an active campaign against "fake" promoters and all wild-cat schemes, and has turned to the screen in its endeavor to reach the greatest mass of persons possible.

LAVA-SPOUTING CRATER IN PATHE NEWS

New York.—In filming the lava-spouting crater of Mount Etna, Pathe News is credited with securing one of the most awe-inspiring pictures ever screened. The wealth of close-ups, photographed at the very crumbling brink of that fiery chasm, are declared to represent the record daring achievement in motion picture news reporting.

These scenes—the first to be filmed of the fresh eruption of the Mount Etna volcano—are exclusive in Pathe News No. 45, released on Saturday, June 2. This eruption is the first in ten years, and is of such violence, sending broad streams of lava down the mountain slopes, that many vineyard owners and villagers were frightened away from their homes.

The new photoplays are being produced for Investors' Vigilance Committee by the Buckley-Ferguson Productions, Inc.

AUTO CONGESTION FAVORS SUB HOUSE

*Indianapolis Theatre Operator Says Parking Problem
Hurts City Theatres*

Indianapolis.—"The neighborhood motion picture theatre is going to be the money-maker in the near future in the photoplay field," said Gus G. Schmidt, owner of the Crystal theatre in the downtown district. "I am so thoroughly convinced of this that I have bought property at College and Fairfield avenues (five miles from the center of the city) and I am preparing to build a community theatre on the site in the near future. I am now building a business block there and as soon as it is completed I will begin construction of the theatre," Mr. Schmidt continued.

"I have made a rather close study of the conditions downtown and I am forced to the conclusion that the automobile is rapidly changing affairs. Indianapolis is no different from other cities. The problem downtown is traffic and parking space. The auto owner doesn't want to get on a street car to come downtown to the theatre and the time is fast approaching when it is going to be next to impossible to find space in which to park his car while he attends the movie. I know of many who have driven blocks and blocks in the congested district searching in vain for parking space, only to return home without having visited a theatre.

"But if I have it figured right, it is not going to affect the motion picture business adversely. The exhibitor who builds wisely in the outlying districts of a city will win. His initial outlay will not be as great and his overhead will be less."

In support of Mr. Schmidt's contention he pointed to three or more theatres under construction in Indianapolis in the outlying districts. Another corporation is now building a theatre across the street from the site selected by Mr. Schmidt at College and Fairfield avenues.

Grainger, general manager of Sales for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, is making another one of his periodic swings about the country visiting the branch exchanges, the first run exhibitors in the key cities and the studios. He left this city on June 3, accompanied by Eddie Bonns, manager of exploitation for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, who will make a study of exploitation problems.

Mr. Grainger will visit the following cities enroute to Los Angeles—Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, and El Paso. On the return trip he will make stops in San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Winnipeg, Minneapolis, Detroit and Cleveland.

C. L. YEARSLEY'S MERRY SEND-OFF

First National Publicity Director on Three Months' Vacation

New York.—C. L. (otherwise Bill) Yearsley was given a merry send-off on his three months' vacation from his desk as First National publicity director by his First National associates at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, on Friday, June 1. Mr. Yearsley is bound for various mountain lakes and streams, there to recuperate and prepare for big doings in the fall. He left the following day, June 2.

Some twenty-eight of his associates gathered around the festive board and listened to general manager Dick Rowland preside as toastmaster. Floyd Brockell started the barrage of best wishes, and Bruce Johnson, foreign manager, voiced his approval of the vacation as long as Mr. Yearsley was kept out of foreign territory. H. O. Schwalbe characterized the Publicity Chief as a publicist who had by constructive, conservative, tireless work, done more to advance his company than any other man of the same capacity in the industry. No other proof was needed, he said, in addition to the fact that Mr. Yearsley had been with First National for five years and they wanted him to stay another five. Other speakers were Sam Spring of the legal department; Chas. Pinkerton, financial controller; Worthy Butts, and Hawley Turner.

Mr. Yearsley responded by praising the First National management and the co-operation and freedom it had always allowed the publicity department. With a rosy vision of three months in the mountains, he concluded by saying that he was sorry for everyone else in the world.

Bob Dexter will be in charge of the advertising and publicity department until Mr. Yearsley's return, with Lynde Denig supervising trade, newspaper and general publicity.

Looking Ahead To Hollywood

By Will C. Murphey

June 8

H. A. Snow, the man responsible for making "Hunting Big Game in Africa," is to make another trip with his son Sydney to Africa for another animal picture. Snow was in town this week, and is now preparing supplies for his expedition.

Plans at the Fox studio call for the production of a big girl picture with 200 film beauties in the cast. Tests are now being made, and Phylis Haver will play the lead. It will be a water picture on the "Undine" order.

Universal's big production, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" will be finished in less than a month. With a $7,000 a day overhead Universal officials are not kicking that the sequence of dramatic action is so near the end. The hurry along production night scenes have been shot during the last week, and a fine lot of sets burned down.

Hal Roach, comedy producer, will leave soon for Europe in an effort to unearth new comedy talent. Roach believes that among the foreign pantomimists he can obtain another comedian to travel along with Harold Lloyd and "Snub" Pollard.

Fred Kley, Fox studio manager, has gone to New York for a conference there on plans for the new Fox studio here.

Edgar Stein has started "Havoc" at the Garson studio with an all-star cast. It is to be a Universal-Jewel production, but the Universal lot is so crowded Stein had to obtain outside room. In the production are Anna Q. Nilsson, J. Warren Kerrigan, Tom Santschi, Winter Hall and Winifred Bryson.

Twelve more of "The Fighting Blood" stories of H. C. Witwer are to be made with George O'Hara in the title role.

Rowland V. Lee is casting for his first special production for Fox. It is based on Gouverneur Morris's novel, "You Can't Get Away With It." John Russell made the screen adaptation.

Henry MacRee has gone to Siam to make a ten reel special. He promises another picture on the order of "Nanook of the North," and will complete his work this summer.

Principal pictures will produce Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man," and Marguerite De La Motte, who has been signed to a long term contract, will play the lead. Edward F. Cline, who will direct, left with the company this week for Prescott, Ariz. John Bowers has the male lead.

Fred Niblo's next picture for Louis B. Mayer and Metro is to be "Man, Woman and the Devil." The scenes are laid in Spain at the time of Ferdinand and Isabella. Casting has started, but no one has been engaged for the lead.

"The Acquittal," a stage play by Rita Weiman is to be done by Universal. Clarence L. Brown's directorial shingle has been put up, and the Weiman special will be his first picture under his new contract.

Oscar Apfel will direct Viola Dana's next picture which will be "To Whom It May Concern." It is a Rita Weiman story adapted for the screen by Rex Taylor. Production will start next week.

The busiest spot in Hollywood is Universal City. Nineteen companies are working on the lot. Carle Laemmle is due here again, and there is to be a big cut-down in overhead.

Norma Shearer, newest star at the Mayer studios, will make her West Coast debut in "The Wanderers," directed by John M. Stahl for First National. Three comedy favorites of old, Louis Fazenda, Hank Mann, and Lydia Yeamens Titus will add mirth to the picture.

Emile Chautard has "Alimony" under way at the Powers studio. It is a drama of social life by A. T. Locke. Ruby Millér and Warner Baxter head the all-star cast.

Francis Marion is adapting "Beau Brummel" in which John Barrymore will be starred by the Warner Bros. This is a screen version of the famous Clyde Fitch play.

"Held to Answer," a story of today by Peter Clarke MacFarlane, will be the second of the new series of Metro's all-star specials.

Warner Bros. are to make Kathleen Norris's novel, "Lucretia Lombard." It will be made by Harry Rapf, the scenario having been completed by Sada Cowan.

"Thicker than Water," the screen version of Margaret Bryant's "Richard" in which Herbert Rawlinson is starred, has been completed at Universal.

Ben Turpin has just completed the second of his comedy specials for Mack Sennett. The picture bears the title of "Pitfalls of a Great City."

Five or Six Reels the Maximum Future Production Says Warner Producer

Los Angeles.—That all future productions bearing his name will be somewhere within the five and six reel footage, and will never exceed this number, is the statement made by Harry Rapf, in charge of a production unit for Warner Brothers.

"I intend to reduce the footage, and thus fall in line with the demands of the exhibitors," Mr. Rapf says. "From querying them, I have come to the conclusion that they demand pictures within these limits.

"It is quite difficult to tell a story in such a short number of reels, but done it must be in the exhibitor's interest, and I shall work to this end."

Mr. Rapf is earnest in assuring the exhibitors of his intention to provide them the same high-class product they have had in the past. While improving on each picture, he means to keep in mind the footage which he considers an important factor in entertainment.

Short Subjects and Serials

CARL LAEMMLE BOOSTS SERIALS

Says They Are "Good Medicine" For Summertime Use in Any House

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation which recently reorganized its serial department and projected a year supply of "super-serials," has just come out with a forceful statement on behalf of serial entertainment,

"I want to take a crack at the wise-birds who are forever knocking screen serials" he said. "I mean those in the industry, not out of it. I mean the producers who wouldn't think of making one, if they could, and distributors who go out of their way to run down chapter pictures, and exhibitors who think they are too high toned to use them. I want to make them eat their words—and like it.

I know of no better way to make them change their minds about serials—yes, even to the point of singing their praises, than to call attention to past performances of chaptered screen entertainment. I could spend days quoting incidents where houses have been saved from the sheriff by the installation of a jam-up Serial Night. I could write reams about the house managers who wouldn't be without a serial or two on their week's program.

Many Newspapers Apply for Story of "Haunted Valley"

The most active and widest spread demand from newspaper editors for a Pathé-serial fictionization is declared to parallel the popular screen success of Ruth Roland's "Haunted Valley." According to custom in connection with its serial releases, Pathé had the current Roland chapter-play dealing with big industrial operations novelized for concurrent issue as a newspaper serial story, and sent out to editors on its list the usual quota of proof sheets accompanied by a mat service.

With the fifth episode of "Haunted Valley" just released, Pathé reports a second issue of fictionization proofs and mats have been found necessary to enable response to requests from a large number of newspapers.

Vitagraph Adds More Comedies

Work is progressing rapidly on the Sam Hellman comedies which are being produced by the Chester International Pictures Company for release by Vitagraph. There will be eight of these comedies, the first release being "A Twosome at Tuara," the laughable story of the golf fiend who was wrecked at sea and washed ashore on one of the South Sea Islands, where he teaches the savage king to play golf. The Sam Hellman stories are being published in the Saturday Evening Post and are said to be of a new and distinct type for the screen.

David J. Chatkin, for the last year a special field representative for Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has been appointed acting domestic sales manager for this short subjects organization.

It was just exactly a year from the time of Mr. Chatkin's appointment as Special Field Representative to the announcement that he would assume charge of the domestic sales department.

"I have known Mr. Chatkin for the past eight years, during which time he has sold short subjects exclusively," said President E. W. Hammons in making this appointment known. "He has accumulated a vast amount of knowledge and experience in this particular branch of the industry."

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

A Grim Fairy Tale, F. B. O.

In this two-reeler, the ninth round of the "Fighting Blood Series," Gale Galen, the prizefighting hero, takes part in an amateur theatrical show, a fire breaks out and his hands are badly blistered. Despite this handicap he enters the ring and, after a short but furious contest, in which he is several times on the verge of defeat, is spurred on to desperate effort by the presence of his girl at the ringside and knocks out his opponent. The film is well up to the high standard of its predecessors in the series, full of action, provides much merry comedy and a world of thrills. The work of George O'Hara and Clara Horton in the leading roles is excellent and the photography all that could be desired.

Rice and Old Shoes, F. B. O.

Another bright and breezy Carter De Haven comedy, depicting the troubles of a newly-wed couple starting off on their honeymoon, starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven. They are in search of quiet, but fate works against them, in the shape of a train bandit, a wreck and various other misfortunes. A bootlegger's convention fills every room in the hotel they intend to stop at and they are finally driven to purchase a house perched on an auto in which they journey into desert surroundings and peace. It is all very funny, packed with whimsical absurdities, the work of the principals is full of ginger, the photography excellent and a valuable addition to any program.

Fare Enough, Universal

The promoter reaches the small town and starts up a partnership with one of the young natives to operate a trolley line. Their competitor is a young girl who operates a bus. The girl meets with much better success than the two inexperienced men until one day she gets her conveyance overloaded by taking on an extra well proportioned individual who wrecks the bus. At the same time the trolley runs into an explosive warehouse and brings disaster to the men. The picture is funny in spots, but for the most part affords nothing new.

Sea of Dreams, Educational

This fantasy in one reel will appeal to the more artistic class of patronage. The idea is good, but it has been weakly enacted. However, the splendor of the sets that are spectacular and elaborate in detail will be compensation enough to warrant anyone seeing it. It is a dream picture showing two lovers separated by an allegorical figure representing Doubt. When Doubt is finally slain by the magic sword of Love the two live happily ever afterwards.

Back to the Woods, Educational

For those who enjoy a comedy with real backgrounds this two-reel Christie Comedy will prove a good bit of entertainment. Neal Burns plays the hero and saves the girl's father from financial ruin and wins a bride for himself. Some of the subtitles are witty. The shots of the timber country are interesting and as a whole it is a more novel than humorous picture.

Pathe Review No. 24

A study of sea fog effects affords some beautiful marine views. "Pavement Pounders" is devoted to the process of the manufacturing of shoes. There are also included some shots of the Kingfisher family that prove interesting and in another section is shown a nurse's routine in a hospital. The Pathecolor is a series of rustic scenes in New Jersey.

The Oregon Trail, Universal

"For High Stakes," the seventeenth chapter of the Oregon Trail series, finds the hero once again the master of the situation for a short while. During his wanderings in the woods, though, he falls into a bear trap that has been set by Coulier and Lewis. The men are shown leveling their guns at the opening of the trap as the scene fades out.

Pick and Shovel, Pathe

This is another of the Hal Roach one-reel comedies featuring Stan Laurel. The hero gets a job in a coal mine and falls in love with the foreman's daughter. There are some high spots in the picture that are funny, but for the most part the usual sort of slapstick has been resorted to in making the production.

Should William Tell, Universal

Nervy Ned and his valet start up an auto parking business and while the cars are left in their charge they proceed to rent them out to other customers. This causes them to step fast and brings about a situation from which they find it difficult to extricate themselves. There are some new ideas in this and it should get a good supply of laughs.

Haunted Valley, Pathe

In the seventh episode of Haunted Valley the Rangers come to the rescue of Ruth and her lover. She enlists their aid in searching the valley, but she herself falls into the hands of the villains. There is an unusual amount of fast action in this chapter and in the climax Ruth is shown struggling to free herself from her captors.

Springtime, Pathe

This is the latest of the Paul Terry cartoons of Aesop's Film Fables. Farmer Al Falfa and Henry Cat go bathing on the beach and endeavor to make a hit with the female bathers. The picture carries out the moral, "There is no fool like an old fool."

The Drifter, Universal

This is a two-reel western featuring Harry Carey. Good action follows through, but the plot is of the fairly usual sort. It should satisfy in houses where the star is known and where this type of amusement is enjoyed.

The SHOWMAN'S GUIDE

Selecting — Booking — Playing — the Picture

Fog Bound

Paramount Photoplay in Five Parts.
 Author, Jack Bechdolt. Scenario by Paul Dickey. Director, Irvin Willat. Cameraman, Henry Cronjager. Running Time, Fifty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Gale Brenon	Dorothy Dalton
Roger Wainright	David Powell
Mildred Van Buren	Martha Mansfield
Deputy Brown	Maurice Costello
Sheriff Holmes	Jack Richards
Mammy	Mrs. Ella Miller
Deputy Kane	Willard Cooley
Gordon Phillips	William David
Revenue Officer Brenon	Warren Cook

Roger Wainright, wealthy young New Yorker, buys a Florida estate in the Everglades and falls in love with Gale, daughter of United States Revenue officer Brenon, whose home is near by. Wainright is entertaining a sporty party among whom is Mildred Van Buren, better known as "Flash," who has a decided liking for Roger. The latter and his crowd go to the Casino, a gambling resort on the border of the lake. Brenon plans a liquor raid on the place. A heavy fog descends as Brenon gets assistance from the sheriff. A deputy named Brown phones the Casino as the men leave. The guests scatter, but Roger who has fallen asleep in a room after winning heavily at the tables, remains behind, as does "Flash." Brenon detects Brown in the act of accepting a bribe who skips out and is captured, later freed by his girl, who isn't aware that her father is dead, and afterward has a disagreeable time blundering through acres of swamp, with bloodhounds on his trail.

There are some thrills in evidence, but taken on the whole "Fog Bound" is pretty crude melodrama, which drags badly at times. There is an absolute want of logic in the hero running away after the shooting takes place. Had he been a friendless bum, who would naturally come under suspicion and perhaps be "railroaded" to jail and the scaffold, one might excuse his panic. But Roger Wainright is introduced as a man of wealth and good social standing. When attacked by a would-be robber he defends himself, as anybody is justified in doing, and there was no cause for his subsequent misfortunes had he simply remained where he was.

The revenue men were after the liquor sellers, he had no reason to fear them. Later, when told he has shot and killed somebody, instead of facing his accusers as any sensible person would under such conditions, he "beats it" again, with the girl's help.

All of the foregoing is unconvincing stuff, and it is much to the credit of Dorothy Dalton that, despite the handicap of illogical incidents, she manages to keep the audience's interest alive in her forceful impersonation of Gale Brenon.

As much can be said for David Powell's interpretation of the Roger Wainright role. That hero is such a remarkably weak sister that not even Mr. Powell's recognized dramatic talent can gain sympathy for him. When he wins handsome Gale in the end, the impression remains that he has fared a whole lot better than he deserved. The support is adequate.

The Florida views are skillfully filmed, the fog effects being creepily fascinating, the interiors are handsome, especially the shots showing the Casino cabaret and gambling den, and the lighting is excellent.

In exploiting the picture it might be well to explain that its title does not refer to adventures on the vasty deep, else some patrons might be disappointed. In localities where Miss Dalton is a pronounced favorite her name can be utilized in the advertising.

A Man of Action

First National Photoplay in Five Parts.
 Author, Bradley King. Director, James W. Horne. Cameraman, Max Du Pont. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Bruce MacAllister	Douglas MacLean
Helen Sumner	Marguerite De La Motte
Harry Hopwood	Raymond Hatton
Spike McNab	Wade Boeteler
Dr. Sumner	Arthur Millet
Andy	Kingsley Benedict
Eugene Preston	Arthur Stewart Hull
The "Deacon"	William Courtright
Frisk-O-Rose	Katherine Lewis

Bruce MacAllister has a fortune in diamond mines. His fiancee, Helen Sumner tells him he is becoming too inactive and he determines to show her he can be a man of action. His estate administrator, Preston, plans to steal a half million dollar shipment of diamonds and suggests that Bruce should go east for a special meeting. Bruce pretends to agree and visits the San Francisco underworld incognito, mixing with crooks Preston has hired. They mistake him for the "Chicago Kid." He is blackjacked and recovering his senses, finds himself in his own home.

He convinces Preston he is really "Chicago Kid," and gets possession of the diamonds, which disappear and reappear several times mysteriously, while Preston keeps the gang in the MacAllister place twenty-four hours. Helen Sumner brings the police, fails to recognize Bruce, and he is going to jail, when Dr. Sumner comes and straightens out the tangle. The diamond thief turns out to be the real "Chicago Kid." Helen acknowledges that her lover is of more consequence than she imagined.

A lively comedy, mixed up generously with underworld stuff, mystery and melodrama, "A Man of Action" fulfills the purpose for which it was evidently made—to amuse by means of rapid-fire situations ingeniously welded together. It isn't a convincing picture, if you want to measure it by asking, "Could this or that happen?" but accepted as a straight bit of good fun it hits the mark and furnishes agreeable entertainment.

There is plenty of AI photography, a variety of fine interiors and skillful outside shots, those of the old Barbary Coast being particularly realistic, and the dive where the gang congregates is a sure-enough tough den of a bygone era.

The "rough boy" members of the said gang are sufficiently sinister in appearance to warrant any self-respecting cop in pinching them on mere suspicion of their looks and not the least impressive of these plug-and a quarrel ensues. The "bouncer" tries to rob Roger, who awakens, sees a gun in his assailant's hand and struggles with him. A shot is fired and goes through the door. Brenon is found dead in the lobby. Roger makes a getaway and is pursued. Brown trails him close to the Brenon home, a shot grazes Roger's head and he falls. Gale has him carried indoors and later assists him to escape. She then learns that Roger is supposed to have slain her father and joins the hunt for him. Meeting him in the swamp, her love proves too much for her and she brings him to the Wainright home, where he determines to surrender himself. The officers, among whom is Brown, arrive. "Flash" appears and accuses Brown of having killed Brenon. The latter's gun is found on Brown, who is arrested in place of Roger. The latter and Gale are married.

The title of this film, suggesting as it does a sea story, is rather misleading. For there is no nautical atmosphere, the only watery expanse being a Florida lake and the nearest things to ships—a couple of motor boats, one utilized for pleasure purposes, the other an aid to Uncle Sam's revenue officers when engaged in chasing violators of the liquor law.

The plot pivots upon a raid made by Federal authorities at an inn where drinking goes ahead "regardless," with the result that Brenon, chief of the posse, is shot and killed, suspicion falling on the hero, uglies is the hero himself, when he adventures forth into unknown grounds disguised as the "Chicago Kid."

This hero role is creditably filled by Douglas MacLean, who works throughout the entire story with his usual energy and versatile powers of characterization. A clever, bright impersonation of Frisk-o-Rose is furnished by Katherine Lewis, Marguerite de la Motte is an attractive heroine, and the performance of Wade Boeteler, as Spike McNab, and William Courtright, as the Deacon, deserve praiseworthy mention. Capable support is provided by others in the company.

The feature was well received when given its initial metropolitan showing at the Strand Theatre, New York, and exhibitors in general should find it a likely box office asset. Not much can be made out of the title for exploitation purposes, but the robbery of half a million diamonds which forms the plot basis suggests some sort of an arrangement with jewelry stores for advertising possibilities, while the name of Douglas MacLean and his big cast can be played up prominently.

The Exciters

Paramount Photoplay In Five Parts. Adapted from Martin Brown's stage Play of Same Title. Scenario by John Colton and Sonya Levin. Director, Maurice Campbell. Cameraman, George Webber. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Ronnie Rand Bebe Daniels
 Pierre Martel Antonio Moreno

 Ermintrude Diana Allen
 Roger Patton Cyril Ring
 Hilary Rand Bigelow Cooper
 Mrs. Rand Ida Darling
 Della Vaughn Jane Thomas
 Gentleman Eddie Henry Sedley
 Flash Tom Blake
 Strangler Louis Irvil Alderson

Ronnie Rand and her wealthy parents are staying in Florida. Ronnie is constantly in search of "thrills" and imbued with a love of excitement. By a rich aunt's will she must marry before she is twenty-one, or forfeit a big inheritance. She goes on an aeroplane trip, the machine is wrecked on its return journey near her home. Pierre Martel, with a housemaid as confederate is robbing the safe when the plane falls. Ronnie's parents are absent. Pierre carries her into the house. She fancies she is dying and in order that her father may benefit by her inheritance, she induces Pierre to wed her then and there. Pierre goes back to Gentleman Eddie's gang and informs them that he has an offer from the Rands of $50,000 to free Ronnie via the divorce route, but expects to get more out of them. Meanwhile Ronnie, still in search of excitement, comes to the thieves' headquarters. There she and Pierre are made prisoners and the police rescue them. It transpires that Pierre is really a United States Secret Service man who joined the gang to get evidence against them. Ronnie, at first disappointed because Pierre isn't a real, adventurous crook, is finally contented with her husband.

This comedy drama starts off in joyously jestful, jazzy style, featuring the reckless impish escapades of its cheerfully reckless heroine, the prevailing note being that of irresponsible humor. Then comes the aeroplane wreck, a thrill with decisive "punch" to it and a somewhat pathetic interlude when the irrespressible Ronnie appears to be dying. She doesn't pass out, of course, but the situation has a strong emotional appeal while it lasts.

Later, the scene in which Ronnie and her newly acquired hubby are trapped in the headquarters of Gentleman Eddie, and his by no means gentle crowd, develops and for a few moments the suspense tightens tremendously. Luck switches first to one side and then to the other, accompanied by some ingeniously manipulated gunplay, and it is an actual relief when the police burst into the room and wind up affairs. This is the best episode in the story, uncommonly well directed and cleverly acted by all concerned in its staging.

There is fast action from start to finish and Bebe Daniels never looked prettier or played a part with such a happy mingling of zippy comedy and occasional emotional appeal. Her character sketch of Ronnie Rand is a wonderfully alluring bit of work, as natural as life and magnetic in its appeal. Antonio Moreno fills a role which suits his strong personality in every particular—that of the supposed crook—Pierre Martel. Cyril King gets a lot of fun out of his interpretation of Ronnie's unsuccessful suitor, the foppish Roger Patton and the gangsters are a particularly hard-boiled set of gents, one of their number—Strangler Louis—enacted brilliantly by Irvil Alderson, being a gink with a murderous-looking pair of mitts which offer horribly suggestive hints of choking potentialities.

"The Exciters" can safely be registered as a picture of big entertaining qualities and sure to win public favor in all classes of theatres. In exploiting it, play up Bebe Daniels and her excellent cast, dwelling on the "thrill" element and bright comedy which pervades the plot.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dr. David Hale Robert Ellis
 Ann Page Madelyn Clare
 Donald Duncan Warner Richmond
 John Hunter Gustave Von Seyffertitz
 John Hunter Gustave Von Seyffertitz

Dr. David Hale, a young scientist, is in love with Ann. They become engaged and one day while calling on her they hear a shot fired in the house next door. The doctor goes out to the street and picks up a wounded man and brings him into the apartment. While he goes for aid Ann is strangely attracted by the newcomer. He revives sufficiently to get up and takes a hurried leave but promises to return. Time passes and Ann confesses to the doctor that she has become interested in this other man and now intends to marry him. The doctor pleads with her but to no avail. Immediately after the wedding Dr. Hale follows them up to a little mountain hotel where they go for the honeymoon. Ann discovers her husband is a thief and more of a beast than a man. After a savage beating he forces her to submit to him. During the night the old woman in whose house they have taken lodgings tries to rob him and in a struggle stabs him to death. Ann and Dr. Hale are then free again to marry.

"The Mark of the Beast" is a film that has, and noticeably shows, concentrated action into an agreeable number of feet with the result that the picture moves swiftly along and rapidly rises to a brilliant climax.

Thomas Dixon has written and directed the picture that deals with an analysis of the sub-conscious mind, the power within. He has not sought to play up any particular stars or favorites, but has accomplished a remarkably good all round production. The majority of these melodramatic features are obviously padded to prolong the suspense, but not so in this case. Mr. Dixon has lost none of the suspense and indeed the film seems to gain by this procedure rather than resorting to a lot of deferred action and anti-climaxes. The locale is New York City and the Catskill Mountains. The views are authentic and afford some splendid glimpses of these sections.

Madelyn Clare gives an effective performance. Robert Ellis is a dignified actor and his work is pleasing. Warner Richmond gives a fine portrayal of the villain. Helen Ware and Gustave Von Seyffertitz complete the cast and contribute their own share of the good work done in the film.

The Call of the Hills

Lee-Bradford Photoplay in Five Parts. Director, Fred Hornby. Running Time, Fifty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Ben Kruger Robert Broderick
 Mary Kruger Sally Edwards
 Violet Maud Malcolm
 Willy Hoyt Louise O'Connor
 Mrs. Hoyt Alice Allen

Ben Kruger, a brutal drunkard, makes life miserable for his wife Mary and daughter Violet. The latter is sent one day to Jed Keith, keeper of a still, for some whiskey. Keith attempts to embrace the girl, who strikes him and flees. In her anger she throws away and breaks the jug containing the aquor. Kruger, aflame with rage, makes an attack upon Violet, who runs out of the cabin. Judge and Mrs. Hoyt, accompanied by their young friend Allen Grey, are motoring through the country, witness the pursuit of Violet and intervene to save her. The Hoyts adopt Violet and send her to a girl's school on the Hudson, where she meets Allen, who is a pupil at West Point, and the two pledge their vows. Mary Kruger dies. An attempt by Kruger to seize Violet fails. She is also hounded by Jed Keith, who obtains a confession from Kruger to the effect that the girl is not his daughter, but had been stolen from a wealthy mother by gypsies. Kruger is shot and slain by Keith, who then disappears. Allen and Violet are united.

Those patrons who enjoy melodrama mingled with a due amount of sentimental appeal, without caring whether the probabilities are stretched too far or not, will doubtless find much to interest them in "The Call of the Hills." There is always a certain amount of sympathy extent for an ill-treated heroine and what between the brutality of her supposed father, a gent with an unlimited thirst, and the amorous advances of a bootlegger who would fain make her his unwilling bride, the lady in the case undergoes enough tribulations to entitle her to the pity of the spectators.

The only complication in the plot, which otherwise proceeds along even lines, is the unknown parentage of Violet, which is finally revealed when Ben Kruger confesses the truth to his accomplice. The love romance is rather prettily worked out and the usual happy ending achieved. Maud Malcolm is a very engaging heroine, fully equal to the emotional demands of the role, Robert Broderick furnishes a sufficiently realistic study of an alcoholic victim, Sally Edwards plays the wretched wife of the drunkard with considerable feeling and the work of the cast as a whole is commendable.

The photography includes some pleasing shots of woodland scenery and water, the drill of the West Point cadets adds much to the picture's artistic interest and good lighting prevails. The film's title naturally suggests abundant scenic effects and a display of stills and paintings, such as the Lee-Bradford Corporation are ready to supply, will aid in its exploitation. While hardly a sufficiently strong attraction to warrant booking by the big theatres, "The Call of the Hills" should easily "get by" in the neighborhood houses.

Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande

Universal Photoplay In Five Parts. Author, Stephen Chalmers. Scenario by George Hively. Director, George E. Marshall. Cameraman, Charles Kaufman. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

"Pep" Pepper Jack Hoxie
 Jim Hellier Emmett King
 Tulip Hellier Elinor Field
 Vivian Fred C. Jones
 Bill Barton Wm. A. Steele
 Sheriff Littlejohn Bob McKenzie

"Pep" Pepper, cowpuncher, is a great admirer of ancient romance and constantly imagines himself the hero of such adventures as befell Cervante's "Don Quixote." His faculty for dreaming finally costs him his job and he hits the trail. In a small town he intervenes in a saloon quarrel, a knife is thrown, killing the proprietor and Pepper is blamed for the deed. He jumps through to a window, mounts his horse and escapes. In his wanderings he meets and falls in love with Tulip Hellier, daughter of a wealthy cattleman. After many exciting adventures, during which he rescues Tulip from a bandit gang, Pepper's innocence of the murder is proved and he wins the girl.

Melodrama and comedy are indiscriminately jumbled up in this "thriller" of the plains, and the result is a picture bubbling over with action, which is bound to catch the fancy of the juvenile fans and give adults many a hearty laugh. The latter will smile indulgently at the romance stuff, but find considerable amusement in it as well, the story approaches the mock-heroic line pretty closely, but there is no denying its power to put over various exciting situations, so full of "pep" that the on-looker gets a real deluge of sensational urge out of them.

There are unlimited wild riding stunts in evidence, horses and men dashing at break-neck speed over hills, through gullies and streams, all of which are capably filmed and exceedingly realistic. Jack Hoxie is, of course, the central figure in these glorified man-hunts and fairly outdoes his many previous hair-raising stunts in the way of acrobatics and managing a fiery steed. Two of his best feats are the detaching of the horses from a wagon in which he is fleeing with the girl and mounting the animals without slacking speed, the other his boarding of a fast moving train from his saddle.

There is no check to the action, which buzzes along at a lightning clip, and comedy again touches the laughing button toward the close, when the indefatigable hero, concealed behind a rock, lays out the entire outfit of Black Mike's gang by banging each member dexterously over the head. As is to be expected, he gets the girl and everything is lovely at the end. Elinor Field is an engaging heroine, the support is good and the photography pleasing. There are many fine long shots, with impressive mountainous backgrounds, and adequate lighting. "Don Quickshot" is an excellent film of its kind and ought to prove a lucrative attraction in the second class and neighborhood houses.

For exploitation—a street ballyhoo, with a man in cowboy costume wearing a placard giving the name of the theatre and picture title, is in order. A tie-up with local bookstores on the book from which the scenario is taken might also be arranged.

The Heart Raider

Released by Paramount. Story by H. R. Durant and Julie Herne. Directed by Wesley Ruggles. Length, 5,075 feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Muriel Gray Agnes Ayres
 John Dennis Mahlon Hamilton
 Gaspard MacMacon Charles Ruggles
 Reginald Gray Frazer Coulter
 Mrs. Dennis Marie Burke
 Jeremiah Wiggins Charles Riegall

Muriel Gray, the willful daughter of a wealthy southerner, is in love with John Dennis, who also loves her but refuses to marry her because of her capriciousness and numerous indiscretions. She determines to win him, though, and when he leaves suddenly for Palm Beach to avoid her she follows him. They are thrown together at various social fetes and once again Dennis steams off in his yacht to rid himself of the girl's advances. She, however, is undaunted by this and swims out to the boat and is picked up by the crew. Dennis is surprised to find her aboard and determines to drop her off at the first port. Muriel becomes highly indignant at this and leaves in a huff. After he has gone away again she repents and goes after him to apologize. The little launch in which she sets out suddenly stops and she is left drifting far out on the water. Dennis spies the boat and goes to the rescue. This time he is unable to resist her any longer and he begins to see the many desirable qualities of the girl and asks her to marry him.

This is an entertaining society picture, adapted from the story "Arms and the Girl," and it will appeal to the majority of patrons, especially so the admirers of Agnes Ayres and Mahlon Hamilton. The material often stretched to a fullness that sometimes looks a bit exaggerated but with all of that it appears to be the sort of "hokum" the public likes in large doses.

There are extensive views of Palm Beach, and the Florida coast. A yacht and numerous society sets all contribute to make an agreeable background for the romance.

Agnes Ayres is attractive in her role as Muriel Gray. Mahlon Hamilton is pleasing as usual, but has only a limited amount of work to do to fill the requirements of this role. Charles Ruggles does the funny stuff with good success. The picture will give entire satisfaction where society dramas are popular and is one that can be easily exploited with good results.

The Ragged Edge

Goldwyn Photoplay In Six Parts. Author, Harold MacGrath. Scenario by Forrest Halsey. Director, Harmon Weight. Running Time, Seventy Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Howard Spurlock Alfred Lunt
 Ruth Endicott Mimi Palmeri
 Ah Cum Charles Fang
 The Doctor Wallace Erskine
 McClintock George MacQuarrie
 O'Higgins Charles Slattery
 The Wastrel Christian Frank
 Spurlock's Aunt Marie Day

On her missionary father's death Ruth Endicott leaves the island where all her life has been spent. En route to the United States she stops off in Canton. There she encounters Howard Spurlock, a literary aspirant in constant dread of arrest for something he has done in America, and given to drinking spells. Falling ill, Spurlock is nursed back to health by the girl. McClintock, a friendly trader, hires Spurlock to work for him on an island he owns. Spurlock marries Ruth and goes to the island. There, with her aid, he produces a masterpiece. But Spurlock believes himself unworthy of Ruth, who is only wife in name to him. A former suitor, drug-erased, comes to the island and attacks Ruth. Spurlock arrives in time to rescue her and they declare their mutual love. At this juncture detective O'Higgins and Spurlock's aunt reach the island. She has been hunting vainly for him to assure him that the money which he took, a sum technically his stepfather's, but morally Spurlock's property, need not trouble him as his stepfather is dead. Ruth and her husband face a happy future together.

This picture differs pleasantly from most films with a South Seas environment in that its plot is permeated with a strong seasoning of unexpected originality. The atmosphere is exceedingly good, better photography could not be desired, but there's a good deal more than views of palm trees, silvery lagoons, beautiful coast lines and dazzling light and shadow effects to the make-up of "The Ragged Edge," although it possesses all the previously mentioned artistic coloring effects in generous measure.

For after all "the play's the thing," and here we have a story rich in human sympathy, outlining the redemption through love and loyalty of a man who proves worth the saving, with just enough suspense thrown in to keep the on-looker in delightful anxiety as to the hero's chance of attaining happiness in the long run and a heroine whose unsophisticated nature and steadfastness of purpose with universal admiration, while her physical charms are undeniable.

Mimi Palmeri plays the latter role and her performance is remarkable for its uniform excellence, free from overacting and potent in emotional appeal. Alfred Lunt is equally successful in his portrayal of Howard Spurlock. The gradual transformation from a chap driven by fear into a state of almost cowardly weakness into one who learns to "play the game" and do the right thing has a real human touch to it and a big percentage of dramatic realism.

The shots of the streets and byways of Canton are alive with the spirit of the Orient, extremely interesting, and many fine marine and island scenes are in evidence. The feature is well directed and the principals are accorded splendid support by the other members of a large and talented cast.

"The Ragged Edge" should win widespread popularity and prove a stellar box office attraction. Its title can aid but little in exploiting the film, but reference to the Oriental and South Sea atmosphere, the story's strength and admirable cast can be profitably made for advertising "catches."

"NANOOK" BENEFIT SHOW IN ST. LOUIS

St. Louis.—A concentrated campaign, planned by Pathe Branch Manager Frank Harris, and having the whole-hearted co-operation of the St. Louis Motion Picture Council, the Post-Dispatch, the Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish churches and executives, and private schools, etc., launched "Nanook of the North" on its indefinite run at the Pershing Theatre.

"Nanook of the North" was screened before representatives of twelve women's clubs and betterment organizations. As a result of this showing the St. Louis Motion Picture Council, composed of one representative from practically every women's society of consequence in St. Louis, arranged for "Nanook of the North" to be used as the central point around which the Post-Dispatch would raise its "Free Ice for Babies' Milk Fund."

The Council obtained influential letters of approval of the "Nanook" enterprise. An address was made at the general conference of the Parent-Teachers' Association, which became a leading factor in the selling of tickets, and announcement of the benefit was made from the pulpits of all Catholic Churches and in special articles in the publication of the Protestant Churches, "The Church Bulletin."

LOCAL FILM MAKES

A HIT IN BOSTON

Boston.—Newspapers and film fans responded heartily to a local film stunt staged by L. R. Brager, exploitation representative of Hodkinson, in connection with the presentation at the Park Theatre of "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton. The local feature was called "The Affairs of Lady Boston," a two-reel production in which fifty Boston ladies appeared. Brager got the co-operation of the Boston American, which gave the stunt a big splash. Coupons were printed in the American and these properly filled out were presented in person by applicants for a "role" in the film to Brager at the box office of the Park. The exploitation man selected his cast and made a picture, which was shown on the program with "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton."

TRAVELER ENDORSES

"SOULS FOR SALE" VIEWS

Allentown, Pa.—A letter from a local business man commenting on the reality of scenes depicting Hollywood in "Souls for Sale" was given space in the Chronicle and News and helped considerably in the campaign for the showing of the picture at the Strand Theatre here. E. H. Scholl, who wrote the letter to Goldwynner Robson, had recently returned from a trip to Hollywood and he commented rather enthusiastically upon the fact that he could recognize many of the buildings seen in many of the pictures. The local angle, of course, is what "made" the story and the ease is added evidence of the value of getting people to express their opinions in letters to the theatre.

INDIAN PRINCE WORKS

WELL FOR "RIP TIDE"

Boston.—The Arrow offering of A. B. Mascher's "The Rip Tide" opened its engagement of a week at the Park Theatre in this city to big audiences on Monday, May 21st. The engagement had been widely heralded in a general campaign, the leading feature of which was a publicity stunt employing the old stand-by of an Oriental prince who appeared in the town wearing his native garb of embroidered silks and turban. The newspaper reporters got his story which was the plot of "The Rip Tide" and it was published in detail along with photographs of the prince. The stunt was engineered by J. Charles Davis, 2nd, of Arrow, who handled the campaign in connection with the Park management and Independent Films, Inc., of Boston, which is distributing "The Rip Tide" in the New England territory.

Profitable

PREVIEW AND DEBATE

A HOWLING SUCCESS

Philadelphia.—Exploitation of the controversial theme of "The Famous Mrs. Fair" was far more successful in Philadelphia than New York. As a matter of fact the representative of Louis B. Mayer Productions who undertook the stunt in connection with the showing of "The Famous Mrs. Fair" at the Stanley Theatre, in his most optimistic anticipations looked for no such "kick" as developed when executive members of all the women's clubs gathered at the City Club Tuesday morning, May 22, to view the film and then discuss the question "Can a woman successfully develop a career outside her home without endangering the future of society?" The discussion grew hotter and hotter, with finally everybody trying to talk at once and a regular riot ensuing. This, of course, made real copy and the dailies gave it its proper prominence.

About sixty women attended the special showing in response to invitations sent out by the Civic Club, a woman's organization of a thousand or more members. The meeting was peaceful up to a certain point, that being where militants launched a ringing charge of "man-made propaganda." From then on "hats and handbags waved, the argument became babel and pandemonium let loose on the feminist issue," as the headlines in the Philadelphia newspapers put it.

POLA'S BROTHER LOST

WHERE HER FILM PLAYS

Rockford, Ill.—Bill Danziger, Paramount exploiter, wired Manager Charles Lamb of the Palm Theatre, that Pola Negri was looking for her brother, Ian Chalopez, who left Poland in 1909.

The last she heard of him he was working as a translator in a Chicago export house, and it is understood that he later came to Rockford in a similar capacity.

It was said that Chalopez was 34 years old and greatly resembled his beautiful sister. The telegram went on to say that Pola would appear in "Bella Donna" at the Palm Theatre next week.

Mr. Lamb took this telegram to the newspaper and had no trouble getting on the front page.

CARRIER FINDS A WAY

Indianapolis.—The refusal of the management of the baseball park to co-operate with him did not prevent Eddie Carrier, Goldwynner of the Cleveland exchange, from making a display for the showing of "The Christian" at the Apollo Theatre, before a crowd of thousands of baseball fans. Carrier, refused permission to put on a stunt inside the grounds, had a banner forty feet long and mounted on poles carried by four men, who walked slowly around the outside of the fence with the flash for the Apollo showing just above the outfield enclosure.

BARGAIN ARRANGEMENT FOR SUMMER SLUMP

Bethlehem, Pa.—The Grand Opera House has hit off at a new clip with a special summer arrangement. It gives a coupon in the newspaper advertisements each day, for the ladies, who can enter for nothing, except Saturdays, provided some one with them buys a ticket. Which arrangement works two ways. First, it sends the readers of the papers to the Grand and it puts the entertainment proposition of the ladies up to the men. Bethlehem is a great outdoor town in summer, with many fine parks, boating and swimming as counter attractions to the theatres, hence the value of this plan.

BIG CAMPAIGN STUFF

FOR SHORT SUBJECT

Jamestown, N. Y.—When it comes to exploiting short subjects, you've got to hand it to Howard Waugh, publicity director of the Mozart, Winter Garden and Palace theatres. In boosting Fox's Tut-Ankh-Amen film, Mr. Waugh tied-up with some 30 local merchants on King Tut merchandise and then capped the climax by putting on a King Tut ball with the merchants offering prizes for the best dressed couple. Advertising solicitors followed Mr. Waugh around to the stores which he personally visited to explain his ideas, and they got a lot of ads on King Tut goods.

TRAILERS ON PATHE

TWO-REEL COMEDIES

New York.—Pathe is virtually establishing a precedent in supplying trailers for its outstanding 2-reel comedies. The innovation will include trailers on all of the Ben Turpin and Mack Sennett comedies made for Pathe release.

A trailer flashing the comic high spots of Ben Turpin's first completed Pathé-comedy, "Where's My Wandering Boy This Evening?" is now in hand; also of the following "Our Gang" comedies: "A Pleasant Journey," "Giants vs. Yanks," "Back Stage," "The Champeen," "Boys to Board," and "The Big Show."

CULTIVATES GOOD WILL OF HIGH SCHOOL BOYS

Bluffton, Ind.—Manager Jack Belger of the Gaiety Theatre has established a strong bond with the high school boys here by taking a keen interest in their activities and as a result whenever they want to push some special show they come to his theatre. Recently they staged their annual drive for the athletic teams at the Gaiety with First National's "The Hottentot" as the attraction.

Of course, the boys pull down a percentage from the Gaiety on these shows, but Belger is satisfied that it is a profitable arrangement for him, since he has their good will and gets a good margin of extra attendance through their active and consistent co-operation.

SCHADE'S PROPAGANDA

Sandusky, O.—Preparing the way for "The Bright Shawl," George Schade of the Schade Theatre, has started a Paisley shawl craze here. The stores and newspapers have taken it up and there was talk about a "shawl show," but that is an event which Schade hopes to reserve to himself with his lobby as the scene of the display during the run of the First National attraction sometime in the near future.

LOCAL NEWS REEL PAYS

Scranton, Pa.—Publication of local news reels, showing the people just what has happened in their own home town and often bringing out clearly the faces and figures of the members of the audiences, has proven a good stunt at the Strand here. Each week the big news events of the day are shot.

Composition board made a realistic elephant as decorated for the ballyhoo on Metro's "The Soul of the Beast," in New York City. Mounted on a truck this attractor did some good work for the presentation at the Rivoli of the Ince production. The figure was twenty feet high and there was ample room for the two girls who rode in the canopied and curtained houdah.

Wild animals, rendered tame enough for exploitation purposes by the stuffing process made an excellent ballyhoo for the Universal "Hunting Big Game in Africa," film at the Regent Theatre, Toronto, Canada. The Ford truck was worked to the limit of its capacity in traveling the streets of Toronto with this flash.

"The interesting thing about this," chirps Walt Eberhardt of First National's home offices, "is that if we advised somebody to get an elephant to exploit a picture in our press books, we'd never hear the end of the kidding." And the ayes have it as far as we are concerned. An elephant is a good attractor for any show and on those grounds it must be said that the Princess Theatre, Sioux City, Ia., had a good ballyhoo for its double feature bill with "The Pilgrim" and "Bellboy 13."

Another one of Nat Royster's displays at the Alcazar Theatre, Birmingham, Ala. This arrangement for Associated Exhibitor's "Is Divorce a Failure?" featured the personal appearance of Leah Baird and the central display frame gave the time of performances of the film and Miss Baird's appearances.

These filming stunts are a hit wherever they are tried with Goldwyn's "Souls for Sale." The ballyhoo stunt shown above was done in Seattle, Wash., by Manager Frank Steffy of the Coliseum Theatre. Mack trucks were at his service for the publicity they got out of the stunt, that feature being taken care of by a banner up front.

This window display for First National's "The Isle of Lost Ships," provided some realism and considerable amusement to the people of Ann Arbor, Mich., where it was shown in a window near the Arcade Theatre. The lighthouse flashed its beam and the ship tossed and rocked in the great troughs, simulated with compo-board sections. Manager James S. Helsdon arranged the setting.

Wedding rings and gifts featured, in a window given over to a tie-up with the Grand and Regent Theatres, Pittsburg. The "Brass" displays, designed by the Warner Brothers' exploitation department, were used here as they have been in numerous window attractions hooked up with the screen version of the Charles Norris novel.

If there is any difficulty in getting a double for a photoplay character to act as a ballyhoo, don't bother. Do as Manager Jack Gross of the Eldorado Theatre, Eldorado, Kansas, did for Paramount's "Grumpy." The sign on the man's back makes the point clear.

This plunging Ford created a big stir in Pueblo, Colo., as well it might in any town. The ballyhoo for Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships," was used by Charles H. Ernst, Manager of the Palm Theatre. It was constructed by the Ford Company in Pueblo, especially for this tie-up with the Palm Theatre. Special front wheels, set well off-centre, made the machine plunge and buck like a whale never could.

Warner Brothers screen version of "Main Street," made its impression on Los Angeles. The small-town atmosphere of the picture was not confined to the screen of the Mission Theatre, where it played to some very enthusiastic and very big audiences. The ballyhoo conveyance shown on the left was at the service of all who wished to be driven to the theatre. At the right is a trick banner used in a teaser campaign.

This lobby for First National's "Within the Law," at the Rex Theatre, Eugene, Ore., is of the sort that has made Managing Director A. H. McDonald and Russell F. Brown, exploitation and advertising manager, famous in their section of the country.

The Capitol, in New York, displayed many heads and skins of wild animals in the lobby during the engagement there of the Metro's offering of the Martin Johnson film "Trailing African Wild Animals," and as shown in the above photo there was an outside display—rather unusual for the Capitol—of the heads of Rhinos, which flanked the entrance under the marquee.

In Japan, they gave a big publicity drive to the United Artists offering "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood." It is not quite clear what the management of the Imperial Theatre, Tokio, added to the billing on the posters in front of the house.

Robert Slote, manager of Crandall's Strand, Cumberland, Md., features cutouts on top of the marquee as a regular thing. The paper serves his purposes generally and for the mere putting of a poster on combo-board he has a consistent and good display, with the aid of a baby spotlight, of course.

The Navy has been doing yeoman's service in exploiting the Vitagraph production "Masters of Men." It has been a profitable stunt for recruiting and for the theatres. Above is the lobby of the Delmonte Theatre, St. Louis, which enjoyed the aid and assistance of the Service.

Complete transformation of the lobby and foyer of the Columbia Theatre, Seattle, was made by Manager R. W. Case for the presentation of "Hunting Big Game in Africa," as shown in the photo above.

The Pershing Theatre, St. Louis decorated for "Nanook of the North." The Pathe offering was presented at the Pershing under the auspices of the St. Louis Motion Picture Council and with the co-operation of the Post Dispatch.

A window card featuring the costliness of Cosmopolitan's "When Knighthood was in Flower," and using the strip of film of recent vogue as a mailing card novelty. The card was designed by Russell Moon, Paramount Exploiter and was used for the campaign in New Haven, Conn., by the Palace Theatre.

Some Japanese poster art applied to Paramount pictures. At the left is a one-sheet for a double bill with "Brewster's Millions," and "Behold My Wife." The second is for "The Gilded Lily," and "The Law and the Woman." The one on the extreme right advertises "The Green Temptation" and "Moran of the Lady Letty."

Not a bad stunt by any means for summer decorations. The circus angle was played up in many ways for the showing of Universal's "Hunting Big Game in Africa," at the Majestic Theatre, La Crosse, Wis., but it was at its best in this marquee display.

There was a rakish tilt to the funnels of the ship which featured the lobby display at the Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, for First National's "The Isle of Lost Ships." The ship was illuminated at night, a flexible wire for this purpose was used to add to the illusion by serving as an anchor line. Milton Sills, Anna Q. Nilsson, Walter Long and Frank Campeau were featured in head cutouts posted on either side of the lobby.

The house artist at Newman's Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., did a good job in his posters for "The Isle of Lost Ships." Displayed in the lobby frames as shown in the photo above these designs appear to striking advantage, and rather sell themselves as good models for newspaper display ads.

A real, honest-to-goodness recruiting office with a recruiting officer all ready with the blanks with the dotted lines was set up in the lobby of the Isis Theatre, Denver, Colo., in the tie-up between that theatre and the U. S. Navy for a drive on the Vitagraph production "Masters of Men."

Display for First National's "Within the Law," at the Capitol, Cincinnati. Manager Tom Davis did the designing. The colors were blue, red and yellow.

The Globe Theatre, New Haven, Conn., decorated for the Goldwyn presentation of "Souls for Sale." The auctioneer's official banners were used on the marquee and the entire front painted orange and red.

The MODERN THEATRE

Building — Equipping — Operating

Early last year, in these columns we published a photograph of a flickerless projector which was being perfected in Germany. In this issue we publish, through courtesy of Scientific American, a later photograph and diagram of the working of this device.

Germany is not alone, however, in her effort to do away with the intermittent. Our own C. Francis Jenkins, of Washington, D. C., is well along in his investigations and each year reports to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers on what he has done.

Writing to the Scientific American from Berlin Dr. Alfred Gradenwitz says:

"The principal drawback of the cinema projector is the flicker, so far considered unavoidable. The film being carried intermittently past the projection window 16 times per second, a total of one-sixteenth second was available for each individual picture. The feeding of the film required one-fourth of this interval, while three-sixty-fourths of a second was left for the actual projection of each section of the stopped film. Now, the human eye will, with 16 intense light stimulations interrupted by as many intervals of complete darkness, feel a painful flicker.

Attempts to replace this intermittent motion of the film by a continuous displacement have been made for some time past. If a film be allowed to pass slowly through the projection window in a downward direction, the picture thrown on the screen will move slowly in an upward direction. If, now, a mirror swinging round a horizontal axis be inserted between the objective and the screen, the rate of rotation of the mirror may be chosen as to compensate the displacement of the film projection. If, next, a special mirror be provided for each individual film picture passing through the projection window, it will be possible to arrest each picture and hold it momentarily in the field.

This problem has been solved in a most satisfactory manner by E. Mechau, of Wetzlar, Germany. The beams from an arc lamp turned away from the projector, after being concentrated by a concave mirror, are thrown through a diaphragm and lens on the rotary compensation device, consisting of eight brackets and eight mirrors carried by these. Apart from the rotation of the system, each mirror in its joint performs a convenient swinging motion. This double motion draws the impinging beams of light along with the running film, and in addition compensates the displacement of the picture, which appears upon the screen, quite at rest and immovable.

The diagram will serve to illustrate this. The light coming from the arc lamp 2 is, by means of the concave mirror 1, so concentrated as to produce in the diaphragm 4 an optical image of the source of light. After being made parallel by the lens 5, the light beams are cast on one of the eight mirrors constituting the rotary system, thence on a reflecting prism and, through the projection window 8, the film 9 and the lens system 10, on the rotating compensation mirror 11, and eventually, through the objective 12, on the projection mirror 13, whence they are reflected on the projection screen.

The general view shows another distinctive feature, viz., that the reels are arranged with vertical axis, thus placing the film on edge. The reels are thus prevented from weighing on the two terminal portions of the film, and, as in the case of the usual projector, giving rise to considerable wear and tear.

Model Projector Repair Shop

Perhaps the largest repair shop and projector service station in the country is that operated in Chicago by Joseph Spratler, who handles the machine shop work for the Argus Enterprises and Exhibitors Supply Co. chain of supply houses throughout the West and Middle West. Not only does Spratler repair machines but he is re-manufacturing projectors, fitting them out for non-theatrical and export uses.

Spratler is one of the originators of the projector service depot, and his shop is shown in the photograph.

Financing A Half Million Dollar Theatre Project Successfully

It is quite a departure from the usual when a trade publication tells its reader how theatre financing is accomplished but Exhibitors Trade Review believes it to be one of the problems closest to its readers. Therefore it has asked Charles H. Moses, of the firm of Johnson & Moses Theatrical Company, operating a string of theatres on Staten Island, a suburb of New York City, how he accomplished the financing of his theatres.

By CHARLES H. MOSES

THE editors of Exhibitors Trade Review ask me to give some helpful hints for exhibitors who have financing problems in building theatres. He wants these hints drawn out of my own experience.

Perhaps if I sketch briefly my experience in the motion picture industry, it will be of some help, although I am frank to say the experience has not been at all unusual or very different, if at all different, from the experience of any other average business man.

Financing a theatre, just as with any other business enterprise, must rest on two basic structures:

1. The men behind the new enterprise must have a good personal reputation.

2. The proposition, of course, must be a good one.

I count number one as the most important.

I came into the motion picture business as a salaried employee. In those days, while it is not so long ago in years yet it was almost at the beginning of motion picture exhibition, as we know it today—one man could do nearly all the work around the theatre. The manager was the buyer, he handled the advertising and exploitation, he took the tickets and did just about everything there was to be done. Doing all these things, I met my partner, Irving D. Johnson. He was already a reasonably successful business man and like many another successful business man, wanted to go into the motion picture business. So we pooled our resources and bought the Richmond Theatre. We still own it and it has always been a successful property.

Now that was a simple piece of financing, so to speak. All the money that was necessary to carry it out we had between us. We did not need to go to the banks or to any friends.

In the same way in later years we bought the Park Theatre and the New Dorp Theatre.

Each of these was a relatively simple problem.

Soon we reached the point where we wanted to have a real big, fine theatre. We planned the Liberty Theatre.

Now here was a proposition that would run into about $200,000. That was more than we could subscribe to personally. So we took in another partner and have him to this day, although he has always been a sort of a silent partner as far as the public was concerned and has taken no active management in the theatre except in matters of counsel.

Getting the Bank Interested

The proposition, however, was still bigger than the three of us could swing alone and we had to go to the banks.

Now, as I have said in the beginning of this article, credit is largely a matter of personal integrity and reputation in the community. Now, I am convinced that if a man or a group of men, who over a period of years have demonstrated that they are honest and reliable, will have no trouble in obtaining credit from the banks in reasonable amounts, provided their proposition has the earmarks of being one which will work out successfully. The money we needed we obtained from our local banks.

Within the last few months we were faced with our biggest problem of financing to date. We had determined to build a new theatre in Port Richmond which is another section in Staten Island where we have never been represented. This proposition involved an expenditure of about a half million dollars.

Now that is a considerable amount of money and we wanted to build our theatre and not pay too much for the capital. So many theatre enterprises face hard times because they do pay too much for their capital. We knew we were going to build a theatre and we bought the land and went ahead with the building plans before we had determined upon the correct methods of financing.

Got Trust Company Backing

The method finally chosen was the simplest and the easiest. We placed our plans before one of the big trust companies in New York City which make a business of issuing mortgage bonds. These people were entirely unknown to us, or rather I should say, we were entirely unknown to them, so there was no question of bringing influence to bear to get the loan. It was entirely a question of our ability to carry through the plan successfully, based of course, on our past performances and the merit of the plan itself.

I may say that the investigation of such a trust company as we went to is most thorough. They act extremely quick and with decision. The day after we had our first interview with them, they sent over auditors to go over our books. They estimated that the auditors would be busy three days. As a matter of fact, they finished up their work in a single day. Of course, that made a good impression; I mean the fact that the books were in such good shape that the men could make their report the same day they made their investigation.

The trust company also made a thorough investigation into the personal habits and reputations of my associates and myself. I cannot emphasize too strongly how much these things count when it comes to borrowing money. Bankers may be hard-fisted and all that but it has been my experience that they measure their risk more by the men they are loaning money to than they do by the proposition.

Well, to make a long story short, the loan was granted us and we broke ground for the new theatre on the day that the editors of Exhibitors Trade Review asked me to write this article.

Naturally, every man makes suggestions out of his own experience. Now, we have never offered a single share of stock to the public in any of our enterprises. I have no doubt that had we placed a single advertisement in the local papers which are read by our patrons, we could have raised the money we needed for the new theatre over night. But there has always been so much suspicion attached to stock-selling, especially in theatrical enterprises, that neither my partners nor I favored doing this. If there is a risk, we preferred taking it ourselves, and if there are profits, we feel we are entitled to them.

element which attends the motion picture performance at other seasons of the year, who will not attend during the hot weather. With this idea in view Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Whitehurst interests, has launched a plan which he believes will make up for this loss of patronage.

Mr. Soriero says that the opening of the amusement parks and the open-air dancing pavilions at these parks and other places is bound to attract a certain percentage of the younger element. But he believes this loss can be made up and the Century has launched a campaign to secure more patronage from the older people who do not care to attend dances and similar affairs.

The latest feature which will be used as a summer attraction is the presentation of condensed operas. These were started last week with "The Chimes of Normandy." Then followed "The Gondoliers," and "The Mikado." They will be changed each week.

The operas are put on under the supervision of Mr. Soriero who has J. Hubird Duffy, the famous singer to stage the productions and take the leading parts. Local talent also is being used. Each Wednesday Messrs. Soriero and Duffey try out local singers and engage those who pass the test. They are placed in the chorus. Most of them are studying music and are glad of the opportunity offered to take part in the production. All the sets are built right at the theatre.

The Baltimore public is thronging to the theatre and so far the performances have won unstinted praise. Of course, the house, is carrying out its entire regular summer program, having an ideal ventilating system, summer draperies, chair covers and all the other details. No Baltimore motion picture theatre is permitting its program to sag because of the approaching warm weather season. On the other hand most of them are bolstering up their performances even more, doing all they can to make their houses attractive.

Although this city has had little hot weather so far Manager E. A. Lake, of Loew's Hippodrome, is using the slogan, "The Coolest Spot in Town" in all his advertising and all literature put out by the house. The usherettes are attired in their white dresses. The summer draperies have been hung and the ventilating system put in the best of condition. Mr. Lake is using green shaded lights, which he believes much better in hot weather. He is considering the elimination of the overture and using an organ solo in its place as he believes the patrons do not care for a long, heavy overture during the hot weather.

Plans are being made by Mr. Lake to put on even bigger pictures during the summer.

Keep the audience laughing, is one of the big aids in holding up summer business in the opinion of William Stump, of the Garden Theatre. He believes the patrons do not want heavy dramas during the hot weather but prefer light, airy performances. As soon as the real hot weather comes he will have all the draperies changed. Draperies of a light shade which are kept absolutely spotless at all times are a great help in keeping the audience comfortable during the hot weather, he believes.

That the motion picture theatre should not use a heavy plush curtain during the summer, is the opinion of Eugene M. Daly, of the New Theatre. He plans to use a curtain showing a scene in Venice. He also is arranging to have all the heavy draperies replaced by the summer decorations.

Practically all of the houses in Baltimore are giving the summer question a great deal of thought and will do everything possible to keep the attendance up to the mark during the hot weather. But no exhibitor can be found who has any intention of cutting down at the expense of his performances. They all realize that to overcome any handicap they must build up their programs.

PICKING WINNING PICTURES WITH ACCURACY

A Method of Tabulating In Handy Form Voice of Box Office Reports
For Ready Reference

THE motion picture business is not the race track game but both are concerned with winners—and losers. At the race track, if you've ever put your good simoleons on a horse you will know that the steady followers of that game use a "dope book" which concisely gives you the record of every horse that has run.

Now, motion pictures are out to run and to win if possible. Picking winners is, then, a game where much depends upon the history of the picture. An exhibitor can't always see the pictures he wants, or doesn't want, so Voice of the Box Office is built to give him a line on past performances and current performances.

More than that press comments in dailies in the various cities where the pictures are shown records the opinion of the newspaper reviewer for whatever it is worth. The admission prices at which the picture played is also included so that an exhibitor can determine whether it is judicious to raise the admission, or lower it, of the picture he hasn't seen.

This information summed up serves as the "dope book" for an exhibitor. For instance a certain picture of undoubted drawing power may go big in very large cities but fail to go over as big in an industrial center. The exhibitor in an industrial center finds this invaluable. On the other hand Voice of the Box Office will show that another picture does a tremendous business at advanced prices in a city which has suffered from a heavy rain storm while the picture was running. This is also of the utmost importance.

The source of this information has been pointed out. The important part is to suggest a way to keep it handy where it is serviceable at a minute's call. Two methods are in use, both illustrated with this article.

An envelope of ordinary size, or larger, is most often used. Into this are put clippings from the Voice of the Box Office. The outside of the envelope may contain such information that will expedite the use of the material.

Another method is to use a long card about 2½ inches wide and 7 inches long. The clips may be pasted on this card and filed away most accessibly. This information is not of value after it has served its purpose of giving you an advance line on the picture unless an exhibitor desires to save them and check up his report as against the report of another theatre on the same picture. He can soon gauge the reliability of box office reports from whatever source he may choose to take them.

READY FOR HEAT SAYS BALTIMORE

Showmen in One of Hottest Cities Lined Up to Fight Summer.

Baltimore.—If the attendance at the motion picture theatres in Baltimore declines during the hot weather it will not be the fault of the exhibitors, on all sides they are making elaborate plans to combat the belief which is entertained by so many persons that it is too hot to attend the performances during the summer months.

Already a number of the houses have taken on their summer dress. Heavy curtains and draperies of other kinds have given way to the light fabrics. At many theatres the ushers also are in regulation white.

Some exhibitors are of the opinion that no matter what is done there is a certain Irwin Wheeler, Suburban Exhibitor, Tells of Making Winners Out of "Failures"

Mr. Wheeler, who controls a chain of theatres in Rye, Mamaroneck, and White Plains, N. Y., and New Canaan, Conn., was the only theatre man honored with an invitation to address the recent International Congress on Motion Picture Arts. Mr. Wheeler spoke at the luncheon session at the Waldorf-Astoria, Friday, June 8th

Mr. Chairman, I feel more like exhibit A because I seem to be the only exhibitor here, and I am not at all sure why I was let loose, and as long as we have left that other room, I am sure I do not have to talk on the topic that was proposed. It is a good thing, because I had no idea of doing it.

All I want to say is that as an exhibitor coming from the suburbs of New York we have theatres at Rye, Mamaroneck, White Plains and New Canaan that I, as an exhibitor, and I think many of the exhibitors with me are only too anxious to co-operate with you people in bringing more of the art to the screens, and you give me the order and I will drum up business. I think the idea of the producers that you must work down to the public is literally bunk. (Applause.)

I have broken records with pictures that were supposed to be box office failures. I see that Mr. Sherwood (photoplay critic) is supposed to talk after me. Well, I have lots of fun with Mr. Sherwood's criticisms; I quite revel in them. I just let Mr. Sherwood tell me that a picture is a very exquisite, beautiful picture, and a sure box office failure, and I will pretty nearly break my box office records with it, and I do it by going out and telling the public exactly what Mr. Sherwood said. (Laughter.)

And I go out and ask them whether they want to see a picture which the producers and which some of the critics say is too good for them. I did it with "Nanook of the North." I had the honor of running "Nanook of the North" the following week after it ran at the Capitol Theatre.

I did not pay much attention to Pathe's press sheet; as a matter of fact, the press sheets that come to my house I am rather glad to stick under a table where nobody will see them, because I am a little bit ashamed of them.

I think that the average press sheet is a crime against intelligence, and I think that the producers could co-operate more if they would try to get away from all those ballyhoo stunts that they urge upon us. I just got out a four page herald on "Nanook of the North" and told them it was distinctly an educational picture and appealed to the intelligence—and I broke two records with that picture. I broke the box office record and the record for praise for having shown a good picture.

They came and thanked me for showing it to them; they thanked me for telling them about it.

Then another picture came to my attention, that has not yet been released and I believe is not going to be. Mr. Mandelstamm happened to show me a picture called "Tillers of the Soil." I don't know how many of you have seen it, an intensely dramatic, tragic French picture, with beautiful scenes of French peasant life, but a delineation of the soul, just a simple, homely story. I was told that it was not appropriate for any of the audiences.

Well, I have shown it at various times at Mamaroneck especially. I very often show pictures to quite a foreign element, what the producers are pleased to call "the mass."

Of course, there were some who did not like the picture, but the majority of the Italians and foreign elements did like the picture. I went to Rye with the same picture and got out a herald similar to that of "Nanook of the North" and told them the picture was considered over their heads, that it was too good for them—yes, sure, it had fine acting; it had good sense; it had a good story.

Of course, those were not very important in the making of a good picture. Well, I asked them whether they would like to see it, whether they would like to decide for themselves whether it was too good for them. There was a picture that was sure to be a box office failure—I packed the house! Some did not like it, but I had the satisfaction of seeing those people—they were a little ashamed that they couldn't quite get the idea of it and they did not come out and roast me for having put it on. They really apologized for not liking it.

Now, I believe that you can take a public in almost any community, perhaps not down on Third Avenue, but do we make our play pictures entirely for Third Avenue audiences? I believe you can build up in any community a love for the better pictures; and I can tell you this: That when we have to run, as we do, half a dozen trashy pictures for one good one, that we hurt our audiences by keeping them away because they get so sick and tired of those trashy pictures that it is hard to get them out for a good one, and you have got to be awfully careful to get the confidence of your audiences and not tell them that a poor picture is good.

I put out a program the other day covering two weeks and I could not find on it a picture I liked; I could not find any criticisms in the papers that praised it; and I put out the program without anything, with-

The Barcelona office is a model of what an exchange should be; it embraces fire-proof film vaults and iron shutters separating the film department from the office section. out saying a word. I just gave a list of pictures, and right away people wanted to know why I didn't put out criticisms about the pictures. I said "They are not any of them good enough, and if you come out it is your own hard luck." (Laughter.) Well, they came out and they felt sort of sorry for me that I had to play those pictures.

I do want to say again if you give us the better picture, the picture that the people when they go out will say, "That is worth while"—that is their pet phrase, when they say, "That was worth while, that was not a wasted evening," then you have pleased your audience and have filled up your box office receipts.

Now, just a word about the controversy that seems to be on here. I went to a dinner party the other night, and Mrs. Wheeler said, "Now for goodness sake, don't talk movies." I said, "All right, I won't talk movies." Some of the party were quite high-brow and I thought I would stay away from it, but they wouldn't let me stay away from it. They wanted to talk nothing but movies. The first thing they said was, "For goodness sakes, why do they take a good story and then mangle it so it isn't anything like the book?"

I know that many people stay away from the picture dramatizing a popular novel because they have taken a liking to the novel, and are so afraid when they go that the picture will not be anything like it, that they don't want to spoil their impression of the picture. Well, they kept pressing, and wanted to know why the story had to be so changed.

I tried to crawl around and tell them that the story had to be adapted to the screen, and tried to make all the excuses I could, because I really didn't know why you had to change it so much myself. Finally one of the guests said, "Why take a story that you cannot adapt to the screen, I believe the producers are over-emphasizing the necessity of getting the novel which has made a big hit."

If it is adapted to the screen and is well done then of course it is a big box office winner, but there are so many of them that have been spoiled that they don't seem to have the pulling value that the producers generally think they have.

"Tillers of the Soil" was a simple story, I don't know who wrote it, but it was a good story and the people liked it, and that was all that was necessary.

Well, there is one thing about Rye, all I have to do is to put the word "love" in a film and most of my people stay away. If you can give them out of doors, virile, clean stories—they can be dramatic, they can be practically melodramatic, and you would be surprised how Rye loves a melodrama; but all you have got to do is to talk to Rye about a society drama and they just walk away.

The film salesman come up to me and say

"you have got a theatre here in a swell society place, and we have got a swell society drama." You cannot tell them that that does not go. You just have to change the subject. (Laughter.)

That is not the kind of thing they want. They don't want the sentimental. They don't want the sex stuff. They want a clean, entertaining, wholesome picture that has some appeal to the intelligence and that pulls them up rather than makes them get down and work their minds down to the level of some of the trash that we get.

Just one other thing about the way we are trying to win the public with us. We are operating and building up what we call community theatres. It is an old gag to sell stock to the people in a town. Well, we do that, but at the same time we choose from the town the very best men that we can get to support us for a Board of Directors, and the manager is only one in that board and the Board of Directors can overrule him if they want to. A great many people say you are just working out a censorship board in your own Board of Directors. It does not work out that way. They take an interest in the business end of the proposition. They watch the books. They see that everything is done absolutely according to Hoyle, but they do not interfere much with your selection of pictures, providing you do not give them pictures that they think are salacious or are hurting the community. When you do start to do that you will hear from them.

It does seem to me that is a very healthy arrangement, and I think that the theater has come to play such an important part in the community that the people are entitled to have something to say about what pictures are put into their town, and on the basis of that it really is surprising the support that we get and how good a business proposition it is.

I think my minute is up. (Applause.)

CITY AMUSEMENT INSPECTOR HELPS THIS THEATRE

Writes Letters to Prospective Patrons Inviting Them to Show

Birmingham, Ala.—The Trianon Theatre of Birmingham has adopted the exploitation plan of mailing personal letters signed by the city motion picture inspection to all of the club women of the city. This plan guarantees to the public the acceptability of the picture and enhances it in the eyes of the average high class audience.

The plan has proved most successful in drawing the better class of audiences to see the Trianon pictures.

A sample of one of these drawing missives appears belows:

OFFICE OF CITY AMUSEMENT INSPECTOR
Birmingham, May 24, 1923.

Dear Madam:

The Trianon will present, week commencing May 28th, the exceptional photoplay, "The Famous Mrs. Fair." This is the photoplay version of James Forbes' great American play and is a picture that you cannot afford to miss. For a solid year the stage play interested New York's theatre-goers; and for two years after that it provided entertainment for thousands in three hundred cities of the country.

Its story is concerned with what happened to Mrs. Fair when she neglected her husband and her family in favor of a career on the lecture platform. She forgot that her own selfish vanity would have an effect on those who depended on her to keep the family group together; and when the realization was borne home to her, it was too late to repair some of the damage she had already caused.

The theme of the story is the widely discussed question—can a woman have both a successful career and a successful home life?

The photoplay is a Fred Niblo production, presented by Louis B. Mayer, and the featured players are Marguerite de LaMotte, Myrtle Steadman, John Bowers, Ward Crane, Helen Ferguson, Carmel Meyers.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs of New York are taking a keen interest in this production.

Hoping you will find the opportunity to attend the Trianon during the showing of this production, I am

Sincerely yours,

MYRTELLE WHITNEY SNELL.

MOVIE FAN LETTERS — A NEW USE FOR THEM

Thousands Reach Producers and Stars and Harry Warner Gauges Public Taste By Them

By HARRY M. WARNER, of Warner Bros.

DURING my last trip to the Coast studios I made a startling discovery. I say it is startling because heretofore little if any attention has been paid to anything save the actual production of a feature. Producers in the main, concentrate on story material and the selection of an adequate cast, and then foist the completed picture in a hit or miss fashion upon the public.

Now it is a well known fact that screen players of any prominence receive scores of letters from admirers. Most of these letters, and in fact the majority of them, are the slushy adoring sort of stuff which serves to stimulate a player's vanity and makes them think how really important they are in the screen world. But today the motion picture fan is beginning to lose that worshipful attitude and is replacing it with a slightly critical although no less an appreciative one.

And it is this critical attitude that startled me. Upon sober reflections I began to realize that the public is paying greater attention to the story material, greater attention to the mannerisms of the players, greater attention to details which should not pass unnoticed by directors. Please consider.

While on the coast I talked to Monte Blue whom we have placed under contract. Mr. Blue pointed out to me that within the last few months he had received countless letters from admirers telling him not how handsome or wonderful he was in "Brass," but rather the little habits he has before the camera. They characterized these as extremely bad. Another went a step further and stated that his acting in spots was not so good and that this opinion was shared by many of her friends. The letter was constructive on the whole, and the person who wrote it was certainly a keen student of motion pictures.

Other letters brought out the fact that if the story had been altered in certain spots it would have been more entertaining. Still another criticized the mannerisms and the general improvement that could have been made, were the actor placed in a different light on the screen.

In this respect Marie Prevost was brought to task. The "fan mail" disclosed that she certainly had an unsympathetic part, and while it was unsympathetic—I'm referring to "Brass"—they showed how the change for the better could have been effected. These little things merely taken on the surface do not really amount to much.

Study them a moment, reflect deeply and sincerely, and this is what is happening among the vast multitude of the theatre-going public.

The public is becoming terribly discriminating in the choice of players for a given production. The public is becoming very critical in its demand for entertainment. They are digging up all sorts of flaws, all sorts of details that pass by directors and producers. And why? Is it because we are too close to our product to realize its deficiencies? Is it because we have lost our sense of values, our perspective, and take it for granted that what we produce will be eagerly sought after by the public?

These points bring out the fact that those who view motion pictures nowadays refuse to have their intelligence insulted by childish dramatics, childish stories, childish direction. It is a jolt not only to the vanity of the players, but also to the producers. Certainly the "Fans" would not write to the players in this tone if they didn't like them. They would have taken no pains to point out their deficiencies if they didn't admire the players and in the main enjoy the pictures.

I began to understand the spirit of the public. What's more I also understood that producers had better beware of the picture with the indelible stamp of "hokum." After all, the public pays the toll at the box-office, and it is the public that must be satisfied with our screen offerings.

All of this convinces me more than ever that the public wants good pictures built upon the foundation of solidity, plausibility, sincerity and fidelity to every detail from the moment the story is placed in the continuity writer's hands to the time the director brings forth the finished product. And it is this eye-opener from the fans that will dominate our every move in the production of our forthcoming series of eighteen classics of the screen.

I hope the fans keep up their critical work, because if they demand good pictures the few bad ones that are made will be relegated to the scrap heap and this in turn will mean the greater development of the motion picture art.

Survey Shows Late Spring and Increased Prosperity Helping Summer Business

Many Exhibitors Willing to See it Through

With another summer at hand and another summer's problems to be solved by exhibitor and distributor, Associated First National is able this week to report an interesting survey of conditions throughout and a forecast of summer conditions.

A careful analysis of the reports leads to several important conclusions: First: the entire East may expect a more prosperous summer—fewer theatres closed and more theatres operating on their regular full time percent. than last year. A late Spring and more prosperous local conditions are given as the causes. Certain sections of the Middle West set no improvement over 1922, but the bright outlook for the fall crops brings hopes of an early return of capacity business.

Second: There is no particular kind of "summer" pictures. The type of production most in demand for hot weather bookings varies considerably. Some exhibitors report a leaning towards the northwest and outdoor drama, others that comedy dramas are most popular and still others that straight dramatic entertainment is preferred. In short the criterion is entertainment and not the predominance of a certain scenic background or specified theme. Local prejudices for a peculiar type of screen entertainment do not change with the arrival of the summer months.

Thirdly: Many exhibitors have resorted to a policy of "seeing it through," content with breaking even during the summer months. It is noticeable, however, that a spirit of passive resignation rather than active opposition to a summer slump, characterize many showmen. While exchangemen report many bookings for the big First National releases, such as "Daddy," "The Bright Shawl" and "The Girl of the Golden West" a tendency to book reissues and third rate pictures for summer showings is noted. However, some territories report small town exhibitors combating a summer slump with big time productions, and aggressive exploitation.

Buffalo is one exchange which reports a big summer ahead. The campaign for play dates for First National pictures and for new business is already double that of last summer and that of the year before, and it is estimated that fully eighty percent more theatres will be open during the coming months than during July and August, 1922.

Michigan, having experienced the phenomenon of six inches of snow on May 9th, is looking hopefully forward to a cooler summer and proportionate better business. New theatres in the northern section of the state, opening to care for the vacationists, will help to compensate for closings in the bigger cities.

From Pittsburgh comes a report of a steady increase in play dates for the summer, indicating that more exhibitors are planning to stay open throughout the summer. Chicago states succinctly that there will be more theatres remaining open this summer than last year. Albany estimates conditions as twenty percent better than last year and expects fifteen more theatres to remain open.

This same optimistic note is sounded throughout the entire East and in some portions of the South. Charlotte, N. C. reports: "We are not affected very much through the closing of theatres during the summer months except in the very small towns in the extreme southern portion of South Carolina. In the mountains of North Carolina there will be at least fifteen more theatres opened during the summer.

Eastern Pennsylvania, free from the coal strike which persisted throughout the summer of last year, is expecting 105 theatres, which closed their doors last year, to remain open during the coming hot weather, each on an average of three days a week. This means 315 more play dates in their territory alone.

Seattle sees no greater number of theatres open during the summer, but limits the closings to those houses in the very small towns of less than 500 population. In all other cities and towns exhibitors are optimistic. The crops in the Eastern part of Washington are better than in 1922. In

Another View

New York City.—"Motion picture exhibitors throughout the Central Western states and the South are confidently predicting that a new era of prosperity will set in in our industry in the coming fall," said Alan D. Marr, assistant general manager of Associated Exhibitors, returning from a business trip that had taken him as far west as St. Louis and south to Atlanta.

Mr. Marr visited nine cities—Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Memphis, Atlanta, Charlotte, Washington and Philadelphia, each the seat of a branch sales office of Associated Exhibitors.

"When I reached Pittsburgh, my first stop," said Mr. Marr, "I was so impressed by the spirit of confidence expressed by men in closest touch with the commercial and industrial situation that I was tempted to think a veritable business boom was in progress there.

"In Cincinnati I learned that almost normal conditions are prevailing throughout the whole of Ohio. The rubber plants in Akron are operating with full staffs of workers and the automobile factories in various cities are rushed. Notably in the South, and particularly in Memphis and Charlotte, a vast amount of building is being done.

"Naturally, these highly satisfactory conditions are reflected in the picture industry. With everybody employed, and with salaries and wages generally higher than for some time past, the people have money to spend upon entertainment and recreation. One fact, in particular, impressed me strongly. Although the hot weather has set in and outdoor amusement parks in every large city are open, in none of the nine cities that I visited have the picture theatres suffered any appreciable summer decline. Even in St. Louis, where there are any number of parks and gardens, and where many airdromes cater to thousands of fans who want to be in the open when viewing pictures, the picture theatres continue to attract large audiences. Throughout the Middle West and the South, the so-called summer slump is still a thing of the future."

San Francisco, another West Coast exchange to report, a slight falling off in theatre attendance may be expected at the beginning of the vacation season. This is in San Francisco and Oakland where the change in temperature is negligible. An added factor against increased attendance, which is growing more serious every year is the habit of after-dinner automobile riding. However, approximately 100 play dates will be added in the summer by the opening of airdromes and resort theatres in this territory. Summer will find conditions in Oregon practically the same as last year.

Certain sections of the Middle West are more sanguine than the East in their forecast of the strength of summer patronage. A great many sections of the country have enjoyed a late spring, and this proved a boon for exhibitors, many of whom have reported an unusually prosperous month of May, but months of July and August are looked forward to with apprehension. Plentiful rainfall and favorable market conditions foretell good crops but it is not until the fall that the money will be in circulation.

In explaining why Omaha will experience poorer business this summer, the report reads: "The majority of our territory is a farming country and the crop failure of last year drained the resources of the majority of farmers, with the result that they will be hard pressed for money until their next crop return, which will come in this fall." This, and the habit of working in the fields until nine o'clock at night, causing fewer trips to town, will be the cause of fewer summer theatres in Nebraska. The Oklahoma report is substantially the same.

Kansas City reports: "At the present time conditions for this summer are very good. The farmers have been blessed with considerable rainfall which is the criterion of prosperity. We believe this summer will not be anywhere as bad as last in respect to a slump in business."

St. Louis: "Roughly, 150 more play dates per week in our territory compared with last year."

Denver: "From the exhibitors' standpoint, the summer period looks black but the majority are optimistic with respect to the fall season." The harvesting of the season's crop will bring back prosperity, states the report.

Cincinnati: "If we do not have an extremely bad summer as far as weather is concerned, we believe, on account of industrial conditions having improved in a great many sections in the territory, we will have much better summer business than we had last year."

Salt Lake City: "There has been nothing to indicate better summer business. However, all exhibitors seem to be optimistic for the fall after there is a new crop movement."

Minneapolis: "Indications are that there will not be any more theatres open this summer than last."

Chicago: "After a thorough investigation we believe there will be more theatres remaining open this summer than last year."

The conditions in Canada will be approximately the same, and there, like the Middle West, the prospects for a big fall crop, is making the exhibitor optimistic for the fall season.

All Shorts Summer Programs

Interesting Demonstration of Power of Well Balanced Short Real Stuff to Hold Audience Attention During Hot Season

By TOM KENNEDY

Having lived down the stigma under which it winced as a "filler" the short subject is now knocking at the door of the theatres for an occasional turn on the "feature" place of the picture program.

A program of screen entertainment made up entirely of short subjects is not without precedent. During the winter the Keith houses in New York offered a "Komedie Karnival" consisting of a bill of pictures featuring the leading funny men of the screen in one of their popular two-reel productions. And there have been other all short subject bills of the concentrated sort or offering a variety of entertainment.

But now when discussion on the part of exhibitors appears to betray a certain reaction to the features which go over and beyond the six reel footage, the opportunity to step forward and make a more determined challenge to the feature's supremacy is being made on the part of short subject producers and distributors. "If they won't give you features of suitable length, there's no reason for you to ruin your business," they say to the exhibitor. "Make up a bill of short subjects and relieve your audiences of the boredom of overlong features." This situation plus the oncoming of the hot weather, when the dear public is supposed to favor lighter things in its reading and theatrical fare—"Summer Reading" as it is used to be called—are grasped as the short subjects psychological moment.

Admittedly there is something to the claim that a short subject program offers an exhibitor the opportunity to supply a little variety to his following. The event has its exploitation possibilities and with a wide selection of pictures in this class to draw from there should be little difficulty in making up an excellent program of entertainment.

To show just what kind of program can be made up of these short subjects, one distributing concern, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., recently gave a demonstration showing to an invited audience in New York. The pictures were "hand picked" and in their particular class represent the best that is being done by short subject producers at the present time.

The program was made up of the following: Kinograms; "From the Windows of My House," a Robert C. Bruce "Wilderness Tale"; "Speed Demons," a Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge; "Roll Along," a two-reel Christie Comedy featuring Jimmie Adams; "Golf as Played by Gene Sarazen," in which the American Open Golf Champion shows his method of playing various shots; and "Backfire," a Mermaid Comedy produced by Jack White and featuring Lige Conley.

The individual units of this program are familiar through reviews and advance showings—with the exception of "Backfire," which it may be remarked is up to the best standard of Jack White's former comedies, high praise that.

The program as a whole lacked nothing in merit. It was good entertainment, Will an All Short Subject Program Provide Sufficient Entertainment?

Educational Film Corporation ran off the other day a typical all short subject program built for summer time showing. Exhibitors Trade Review sent two of its staff—a man and a woman—to the showing to answer the question propounded in the headline.

though perhaps lacking in that essential of a program which is supplied in the thrills of the melodrama, or the suspense and emotional appeal of the dramatic film. But the Educational special show did hold up the case by E. W. Hammons, president of the company, that it is possible to entertain the average motion picture audience for an hour and a half with short pictures alone.

On the conclusions drawn by the majority who attended the special showing by Educational, there seems good reason to urge that a "short subject program" is worth considering, especially for an occasional—it does not seem capable of standing up under constant or very frequent use feature for the theatres during the summer. But it would be advisable to slip in a farce-melodrama, or straight short-drama, with the comedies, the cartoons, the scenic and the news reels. For the sentimental moment, the thrill, the human interest—those "serious" bits which occur in pictures—do really belong on the program, and they not only go well with comedy but they make comedy go faster and better, a claim which we affirm by pointing to "Grandma's Boy" and "Safety Last" to mention only two notable examples.

No matter whether the thermometer is at twenty or ninety, to successfully entertain a woman, a picture must play upon her emotions. Of course she wants to be made to laugh but if she isn't made to feel a lump in her throat too, and a thrill of sympathy, she doesn't think she has gotten her money's worth. That is why the feminine part of an audience will go away from Educational's Summer program of short subjects, a bit dissatisfied.

The program opens with Kinograms showing New York's Silver Jubilee parade, prominent people sailing for Europe, and the intercollegiate athletic meet. This is followed by "From the Windows of My House," an especially beautiful scenic with lyric titles. This appeals to woman's aesthetic taste and a tired housewife or business woman will find the scenes of gently flowing brooks, snow-capped mountains and broad, open spaces restful to wracked nerves.

"Speed Demons," Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge, also contains some scenic, but this rather overdoes it and spoils the effect of the previous picture. Besides the scenic, Hodge-Podge has a cartoon of an auto race, a whirl around the globe and pictures of famous men. Such interest as it holds is mostly through trick photography. It is a trifle too garish to appeal much to a woman. If she is alone she will watch it, but if a friend is with her, they are more likely to chat.

"Roll Along," a Christie comedy in black-face, with Jimmie Adams, is marked by a steamboat race and some jazz steps and cake walks which, if accompanied by snappy music ought to be enjoyed by the flapper. The picture brings home the old adage that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach and shows that high stepping will not hold a man; it behooves the jazz baby to learn how to cook.

Any woman who plays golf or expects to, will enjoy "Golf, As Played by Gene Sarazen." This picture shows the champion's method of using the various clubs and making the different shots. At present, there are more masculine devotees to the game than feminine, so perhaps this is more of a man's picture; although women will like it fairly well even if they don't understand the game, because they are always interested in champions.

"Backfire" a Mermaid Comedy with Lige Conley as the hero who drives his trusty, camouflaged "Lizzie" over hill and dale and under water to win an auto race and a bride, and incidentally save her home, will put the women of your audience in high good humor and make them almost forget that there was no real romance on the bill.

For woman's penchant is romance; besides a great number of women prefer to have something to think about when they leave the theatre, even if it's only until they get home. It might pay an exhibitor to occasionally put on a program consisting of only light short subjects, merely for the sake of variety, but where the majority are women, it would not be wise to do so often.

The International Congress

THE action of Adolph Zukor on Friday evening, June 8, in offering an annual prize of $10,000 to the accredited author of the best regularly exhibited screen story of the year was a fitting close to the first International Congress on Motion Picture Arts.

A perusal of the most complete record of the proceedings will convince even those who may have been skeptical that real progress was made by the delegates.

It is a story that will make excellent reading in the library, which is the highest and hardest test even for a play. In all the eleven or twelve hours in which the congress actually was in session there was hardly a dull moment.

It is noteworthy that out of the thirty-five slated speakers all but three responded. Some brought carefully prepared speeches and some spoke without notes. There is little in the record to distinguish one brand from the other—which is saying more than a little for the quality of the addresses.

Just to mention a few of the participants who chose to discard the formal paper there were, the delegate from the British Society of Authors, its vice-president, a man of remarkable distinction and charm, who won the heart of every one present—and a man who seriously may be commended to his countrymen as real ambassadorial timber; Clayton Hamilton, who most interestingly described the situation behind the scenes; Elmer Rice, a young playwright, who opened unimpressively and closed triumphantly.

And there were Philip Troup, editor of the New Haven Union, a motion picture "addict" in the terse phraseology of Jimmy Quirk, and Irwin Wheeler, a hundred per cent exhibitor from suburban New York City.

And there were the Rev. Christian F. Reisner, who declared if he came as a clergyman he also came as a friend of the motion picture and of the men and women who make it and not as a critic; former Ambassador James W. Gerard, inclined to chide the authors for antagonizing an instrument that had so tremendously extended the bounds of authorship; Fannie Hurst, caustic in her attitude toward the screen; Alice Duer Miller, sunny and not overconcerned as to what was done to her story after she had sold it for a motion picture, and the Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, apostle of the outdoors, who asked if the moving writing on the wall of Belshazzar's dining room might not have suggested the first idea of the motion picture.

Besides the foregoing there were the many who brought their carefully prepared papers to the congress and the many others who in the heat of discussion jumped into the debate. The congress demonstrated that authors are speakers as well as writers.

Mr. Zukor and Mr. Lasky deserve the hearty congratulations of the industry on the successful outcome of the proceedings. There is every reason, too, to believe the well-ordered program that has been mapped out will bring real results in the coming year.

And just a word as to the record of the congress. It is to be assumed it is to be edited and printed. The delegates may not have agreed that in its present status the motion picture is an art, which, after all, to most of us may not be a matter of major consequence. What counts for this moment is that if you are interested in the motion picture don't fail to secure and study a copy of the record of the First International Congress on Motion Picture Arts. You will find it absorbingly entertaining and instructive as well.

The Motion Picture Is All Right

IT is deeply to be regretted that Allan Dwan, addressing the International Congress on Motion Picture Arts, should have been moved in an otherwise helpful effort to utter statements that not only constitute a reflection upon his fellow-directors, upon his company, and upon the industry, but also upon the photoplaygoers of this country and the world at large.

We quote in another column some of the things Mr. Dwan said. We quote them not because we do not repudiate those of them which are false, but that our readers may know what he did say and make their preparations to combat the efforts of those who would maintain them to be the contemptuous attitude of the industry as a whole.

The motion picture has a mission, and that mission is to perform a more distinct service than to appeal to elemental minds, to babies and children, and the childish minds of grown-up persons.

If the screen had no greater future than to appeal to the least or all of these enumerated elements the great structures that have been erected to house the best productions of the studios would be tenantless in less than a year—and deservedly so.

The motion picture is all right. It is not 100 per cent perfect, and like every other creation of human hands probably never will be. But it is making steady progression in the right way, and while tactless and witless comments of those who should be its partisans may deter it in its upward journey the delay will be but momentary.

We are getting on.

WE often enough hear there is nothing new under the sun. It is heard so often we come to accept it as being pretty near the exact truth. The persons who now use the expression, however, had not, it is hardly likely, prior to this month ever known of a large gathering of authors convened for the purpose of telling producers of motion pictures just about where they got off or words to that effect—and the producers not only attending the conferences but footing the very substantial bills flowing from the organization and carrying out of the congress.

It really was something new under the sun. Further, there will be few of the hundred who closely attended all of the six sessions who will not agree that the result will be worth the sums enormous in the aggregate contributed in time alone by the authors and the money furnished by the Famous Players.

And for the majority who attended it was rare entertainment, with a goodly mixture of drama and comedy intermingled.

MILWAUKEE or at least a section of it instituted an old home week recently in honor of Carl Laemmle on the occasion of the producer's visit to the new Universal exchange in that city. Milwaukee and Oshkosh hold in Mr. Laemmle's affections that spot reserved for the town or towns in which one is brought up. It seems that in the present instance the regard is reciprocated.

As the Universal president left the train he was confronted by a brass band, cameramen, reporters and other citizens, included in the latter group being exhibitors, among them George Fischer, O. L. Meister and Tom Saxe, and exchangemen.

There was an auto parade with the band doing its utmost. Mr. Laemmle was the luncheon guest at the Press Club of his old friend Judge John C. Karel. Later in the day he was the guest of the Milwaukee News and edited the motion picture column for the day. Just how the Universal's publicity department—which undoubtedly scrutinized very closely the chief's work and with an eye single to its own stuff—regarded the effort is not disclosed. You are entitled to one guess.

Later in a visit to Oshkosh, where at one time Mr. Laemmle managed a clothing store, he received many greetings and attentions.

BROADWAY heard something Monday night about a hayride right down its own road. "Heard" is right, and for a few moments it heard not much else. Broadway looked up in its bored sort of fashion, then it smiled and then it laughed.

"Main Street" was in town, and the Warner gang was on the job. It wasn't much of a hayrack that Broadway saw, although the straw was present in chunks, fortunately. Hayracks, it seems, are a little bit out of New York's immediate latitude as well as longitude. Had there been stakes in the improvised express wagon there would have been less danger of the passengers falling overboard.

The trade press was invited to a function and it went. It assembled in unusual force and fury at the Warner headquarters, got abroad two wagons, looked over the town a bit, saw "Main Street" at the Strand, and then repaired to a restaurant in Central Park, where there was food, dancing and a lot of fun. Borah Minevich, harmonica champion, gave several fine examples of the playing that brought him a Strand engagement for the week.

Lon Young, Watt Parker and Lou Maren-gella and a crew of Warner attaches had in charge the guests to the number of nearly twoscore.

AT the Al Lichtman offices this week we found Jack Bachmann in an unusual mood. He was enthusiastic about a subject destined sooner or later to be on his own releasing schedule, a Preferred Picture made by Gasnier at the Schulberg studios. The Lichtman treasurer as a rule is conservative in discussing the product of his own output.

The same afternoon we saw "Mothers-in-Law" in the projection room. It is an original story by Frank Dazey and Agnes Johnston and edited by Eve Unsell. It's a simple tale, with a few large sets, and these as pointed out in the morning are logically introduced. The theme of the story is that a mother-in-law not only does not cease to be a mother, she simply adds another child to her family.

The title is one that touches practically every family, more pleasantly, too, than the jokesters would have us believe, and the subject strikes a real human note. We believe when it comes along in the new series of fifteen it is not only going to be liked but that it will have some unusually strong partisans, the "take 'em and make 'em see it" kind, in a multitude of homes.

* * *

IN the publicity offices of the Lichtman company we were standing with Morrie Ryskind looking down on a nearby roof where some exceedingly husky and bare legged and armed men were playing handball.

"Morrie, doesn't that stuff right under your window give you that forget work feeling or somethin'?" we asked.

"Not at all," said Morrie quickly. "Keeps me in fine trim. Make it a point to watch 'em at least ten minutes every day."

FRANK TILLEY, editor of the Kinematograph Weekly of London, was the guest of honor at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor on Wednesday, June 13. Threescore representative film men were present.

Harry Reichenbach was toastmaster. The speakers were Joe Dannenberg, J. Stuart Blackton, S. L. Rothafel, Courtlandt Smith, Abe Berman, John C. Flinn and Nathan Burkan. Mr. Tilley also briefly addressed his friends.

There was much discussion regarding American films and English films, and of the ways of American producers and English producers. Much of it, as befitted the occasion, was of a jocular nature, but also there was a serious note running through the speeches. The outstanding factor was the regard of those who had been in London for the editor guest and for the journal he so ably conducts.

There were several good-natured differences of opinion developed among the various speakers. As an illustration, Mr. Rothafel expressed the view that the psychology of the British and American nations is not very different. Mr. Tilley was as firmly convinced that the psychology and the reactions of the two peoples were not the same. While not appearing to drive home his point he casually remarked that in England it was not customary to find a whiskey bottle in every business man's desk and furthermore that it was unusual in England to drink whiskey out of a liqueur glass.

Mr. Rothafel expressed his appreciation for the courtesies that had been extended to him by the British film men. He said he hoped the day would come when he would have an opportunity to go to England and there try out some of the American ideas of exhibiting. Mr. Rothafel further said he believed the time would come when the British producers would give the Americans a strong race for supremacy. It was his view that pictures in Great Britain have not been taken as seriously as they have in this country, and he believed this statement applied to the making of the pictures, their financing, etc., and also in the exploiting and exhibiting. "In fact, the surface of Great Britain has not been scratched," he said.

Mr. Smith on behalf of Will H. Hays extended to Mr. Tilley the courtesies of the Hays office. "We haven't got much to show you over there," said Mr. Smith—"only the sorrows and tribulations of the industry and none of the joys. Anything we can do, nevertheless, to make your stay pleasant we shall be glad to do."

Mr. Berman for himself and for the United Artists said English productions would be welcomed, and on behalf of the organization named assured English producers of a distributing company that stood ready to offer facilities.

Mr. Flinn spoke of the great influence of English writers on American thought, of the vogue today of Dickens and Thackeray among the younger American readers. "The time will come," said Mr. Flinn, "when some great English director will get the great idea of making English stories in England, and he will find an American market ready and waiting for him."

"In England," said Mr. Reichenbach, "they have great reverence for their eminent stage women, like Ellen Terry. They do not worship youth as they do in this country. They keep putting into pictures those great actresses who have reached that stage in life where they do not appeal to the youth of this country. I believe that is the keynote of the situation in regard to British films in the United States."

"But the great thing today is give Tilley a grand time," said Mr. Burkan after telling of his gratitude to Mr. Tilley for his courtesies in England and discussing generally the relations of pictures and nationalities, "so that he may leave here feeling that American hearts and the American spirit are worth while."

"The great test or tests of a motion picture are simplicity and sincerity," said Mr. Tilley. "In England we have got to have wider vision both in regard to making and to selling pictures. We have got to find out what most of the people want most of the time."

Adolph Zukor Gives Annual Prize of $10,000 for Best Story on the Screen

Announcement Made to Authors' League at Close of Congress on Motion Picture Arts

AT the conclusion of the sessions of the First International Congress on Motion Picture Arts, held at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, Thursday and Friday, June 7 and 8, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, offered through the Authors' League of America a prize of $10,000 to be awarded annually in cash to the author of the best story produced upon the screen and exhibited publicly in a theatre during each year beginning September 1 next.

The congress had been held under the auspices of the Authors' League, in co-operation with Mr. Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky, and had been attended by many prominent members of the league. The number present at the three sessions averaged four hundred or more, and the readings of papers and ensuing discussions were followed with the closest attention.

The proceedings actually were divided into six sections, the two meetings on Thursday, forenoon and afternoon, and the one gathering Friday forenoon, and the two luncheons and Friday night banquet. The meetings were devoted to addresses and discussions—and some of these at times were animated—and in the dining room there were addresses by famous men and women, at the luncheons as well as at the banquet which closed the proceedings.

While many of the papers and much of the discussion contained matter of a controversial nature and frequently was expressed in unusually frank manner the sessions were marked by exceeding good humor on the part of all those who took part.

No Restrictions on League's Award

The aims of the congress, as set forth by Mr. Zukor in his address on Thursday morning, were to focus the attention of the leaders of thought as well as the general public on the artistic possibilities of motion pictures and to get constructive suggestions that will be so practical they may be reconciled to the limitations of the motion picture and their adoption by all producers, and to show the authors that the artistic future of motion pictures depends to a large extent on their active co-operation with the producers.

In the awarding of the annual prize, Mr. Zukor explained, the "term author shall be considered as applying to the person or persons so designated in the main title of the positive print of the production." The donor placed no restriction on how the award shall be made by the league, but subject to the latter's full approval suggested the league appoint a jury which will include in its membership the president of the league, a newspaper editor, a novelist, a dramatist and a producer actively engaged.

The announcement of the award was heartily applauded by the members of the league.

The honorary chairman was Henry W. Taft, one of the leading lawyers of the country, chairman of the New York Bar association, and brother of the former president. The permanent chairman was George Barr Baker, and he presided with tact and unflinching good humor. Ellis Parker Butler, president of the league, called the congress to order.

By George Blaisdell

Among the prominent slated speakers of the two days were Mr. Taft, Mr. Zukor, who expressed the regrets of Mr. Lasky and of himself at the inability of the former to be present due to pressure of production in Los Angeles; Julien Jacques Champenois, representing French universities; W. B. Maxwell, vice-president of and delegate from the British Society of Authors; Mary Shipman Andrews, Clayton Hamilton, Dr. Rowland Rogers, professor of photoplay production at Columbia University; Allan Dwan, Will H. Hays, Herbert Adams Gibbons, Jack Cunningham, writer of the continuity for "The Covered Wagon"; Elmer Rice, director of the Screen Writers' Guild.

new Federation Bank; Matthew Woll, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor; Alice Duer Miller, author of "Man-slaughter"; Ellis Parker Butler, W. B. Maxwell and Dr. Henry Van Dyke, of Princeton University.

Many Participate in Open Discussions

Some of those who took part in the discussion were Basil King, who in relating his experiences in co-operating in the making of "The Dust Flower" at a west coast studio precipitated one of the more tense discussions of the congress; Clara Beranger, Mrs. Sydney Drew, Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman" and known to screen followers as "The Birth of a Nation," which he stated had grossed five million dollars; Annie Nathan Meyer, Lloyd Sheldon, George Middleton, Katherine Newlin Burt, Joe Mitchell Chapple, William Shepherd, Helen Marshall Pratt, Rose Tapley and Alfred H. Brown.

At the banquet Friday evening resolutions were adopted on behalf of the congress thanking the Authors' League for its contribution to the progress of motion pictures and thanking Messrs. Zukor and Lasky for their generous expenditure of time, effort and money to make the congress a success.

The congress by resolution gave its approval to the tendency on the part of producers to curtail production in the interest of quality.

For the carrying out and making effective the worthy suggestions offered at the congress the resolutions committee recommended the appointment of an Authors' Supervisory Board as the nucleus of an organization the purpose of which shall be among other things keeping the public informed as to progress in the artistic development of pictures.

Thursday—Morning Session

Mr. Taft read letters of regret from Mayor Hylan and President Harding.

"The moving picture has an influence, for good or evil, far greater than that of the legitimate drama or current literature," said the chairman in his opening address. "Potentially, its power exceeds that of the press, and even of the pulpit. The possibility of its being directed into the wrong channel may well disturb us all. This congress is admirably conceived to inaugurate a movement which may be of great importance to our cultural and moral development."

Mr. Champenois made a plea for accuracy in the portrayal of foreign historical events. As for minor details he said he had no concern. It was the spirit of the interpretation, which in many instances he said was faulty, that he declared to be working harm, great harm. He quoted the comment of the Professor of the History of the French Revolution in the Sorbonne as to the recent portrayal of the French revolution by an American producer.

"For all the producer's apparent sym-

Union; Frances Taylor Patterson, instructor in photoplay composition at Columbia; Irwin Wheeler, motion picture exhibitor in the suburbs of New York City; the Rev. Christian F. Reisner, pastor of the Chelsea Methodist Church; James W. Gerard, former ambassador to Germany; Fannie Hurst, author of "Humoresque"; Valentinn Mandelstamm, French delegate, and the Rev. John B. Kelly, representing Archbishop Hayes of New York.

The speakers at the banquet, at which Otto H. Kahn, banker and art connoisseur, presided, were Peter J. Brady of the State Federation of Labor and president of the pathy for us this picture is causing and will cause great harm to our country, for the reason, that it does not keep true to the spirit of our revolution. It is the more deplorable because such distorted and false notions are being spread abroad by the most popular and the most efficacious means."

"Historical novels should be barred wherever the action lies without the borders of the producer's nation," declared the speaker. "None but the citizens of the community possess that inborn gift of intuition which will determine their attitude toward the landmarks of their national evolution."

Afternoon Session

Basil King, figuratively speaking, threw a monkeywrench in the works following the addresses of Clayton Hamilton and Dr. Rowland Rogers. As Mr. Dwan had not appeared Chairman Baker opened the meeting to general discussion. It was proceeding quietly when Mr. King after explaining he had had three years' experience in motion pictures on the West Coast inquired:

"Is it worth while for the author in the present condition of the motion pictures to have anything to do with them at all?"

The speaker said he had heard during the day nothing that had not been known for a long time to any author. He added the question he was asking was designed to clear the air, and he followed it with a recital of his personal experiences. He described how he had been three years with a coast company with five other authors, "and all but one of us came out feeling that whatever there was in motion pictures it was not for any of us."

Mr. King then said he had spent three months of three years respectively at the coast and that he had never made a copper, that he spent a great deal more than he charged to expenses and that he was out of pocket. He declared that while in the west for the nine months he had never had such courtesy shown him anywhere, but he didn't get the money.

Later, after Clayton Hamilton, asked if he could give any light on the situation complained of by Mr. King, said that while he had been connected with the studio at the time in question he had not been a party to the misfortune complained of by Mr. King, who had stated the facts, the author explained that it was in his contract that he should receive a minimum of $6,000 a year and that he always had received it. What he had meant was that in a general way he did not make any money out of the business.

The complaint of Mr. King was that in one instance after extended work over a scenario with a committee and others the script was passed, but when produced it was something entirely different.

Clayton Hamilton Makes Some Comparisons

"We cannot go on forever merely adapting plays and novels and short stories to the screen," said Mr. Hamilton. "Obviously what we need to do is to develop a new habit of authorship, and in order to do this we must hold out inducements to creative authors to do their work directly for the screen. I do not think thus far these have been practically held out."

Mr. Hamilton suggested that if he wrote a successful play one of the big producers would offer him $50,000 for it. If the elements of fiction entering into the play were cast in the form of a novel, a best seller, then the offer might be $25,000. If the tale should take the shape of a Saturday Evening Post story that attracted attention he would possibly be offered $10,000 for it. But, the speaker pointed out, if the same tale were not submitted to any of the publishers but should be offered directly to a producer Mr. Hamilton suggested he might be lucky if he was offered more than $1,000.

"What, then, is the practical inducement for the gifted author to write directly for the screen?" Mr. Hamilton inquired. He suggested that if the story could be written directly for the screen with behind the tale a knowledge of screen technique and he could be paid three or four times for that script what he would have received had it first been published then there would be a practical inducement.

Clara Beranger in the course of the discussion said she disagreed with Mr. Hamilton that it is easier to write a picture than a play. She expressed the view that it was a question of natural capacity, that where some persons had the gift of words others had the gift of visualization.

Allan Dwan Starts Several Things

When Allan Dwan took the platform to address the delegates he stood between a typewriter and a motion picture camera. In opening he said he was talking from an intermediate position, being neither a manager nor an author. "This is my medium of expression, this camera; this is yours, a typewriter," continued Mr. Dwan. "It does not make any difference what you do with that, unless you know just what I can do with this.

"Give us the thing this can do. We cannot photograph everything, and many of your best things we cannot sell because of censorship. We appeal to an elemental mind. We appeal to babies and children and the childish minds of grown-up people. Don't try to elevate us. Give us an entertainment, give us those basic qualities that make every individual in your story sit out in front in the audience and watch themselves, and make them clean while we have to.

"Don't give us sex. We can't do it. We would love to do it if it would bring us the coin. We want money. This is a money-making business as well as an art. If it were not a moneymaking business it would not be an art, because no art starves.

Let's Work Together, Says Director

"I would like to have you personally to talk to, over there with me. I would like to explain why I can do this and why I can do that. I do not want you to inform me, I do not want to inform you. I want to co-operate with you. Let us see if we cannot put the keys of this typewriter right on this camera and let us see if while we do this we cannot give to the world a beautiful visualization of what you have got in your minds, but let us do it together." (Applause.)

"Of the 875 five-reel pictures produced last year and the 952 the previous year 50 per cent were taken from books, 25 per cent from plays and 25 per cent from original stories," said Mr. Kane in answer to a question. "The original story has its place in this business and receives every possible recognition, the same treatment that a story published in a magazine or book receives."

Thomas Dixon, declaring he was honestly ashamed to admit how much money he had received from the screen as an author, asked Mr. Kane whether the tendency today is to concentrate the business in the hands of the great producer, admitting that as an author he viewed with alarm the concentration of Goldwyn and other pictures into one organization and the concentration of Famous Players and Lasky in another.

Tells How Zukor Returned 'The Clansman'

"I would like to know," continued Mr. Dixon, "whether the tendency today is to give us wider possible production or whether it is going to be still further concentrated." In the course of his talk the author told how two years before "The Clansman" was produced by Mr. Griffith the story had been contracted for by Mr. Zukor and Daniel Frohman, but that because the purchasers were afraid of the material Mr. Dixon permitted them to withdraw from the agreement.

"I will tell you 'The Birth of a Nation' grossed five million dollars, and yet Mr. Zukor turned it down," continued Mr. Dixon. "He is the brainiest man in an organization that is the best organization today in this country, because they called this meeting. They are the ones who had sense enough to call it, but you cannot depend on each editor having the same mind."

"Last year Famous Players-Lasky made 104 pictures," said Mr. Kane in answering Mr. Dixon. "The year before it made 156 pictures. This year I have made out a schedule of 52 pictures. I am only telling you what the larger organizations are doing because I am an independent.

Kane Still Strong for Independent Side

"I am a firm believer that any advancement in motion pictures is going to come from the independent and not from the organization, although I work for one. Before going in the army I had my own organization; I lost it at that time, however. There are numerous boys in this room, just like myself, who have had the experience and are only waiting for the capital to start. There have been three or four companies started this year, and the motion picture will go on.

"There will be new brains, new blood and new demand for stories constantly, and it will not be confined to Famous Players-Lasky or William Randolph Hearst. No two or three big men ever will control this art, because if I can make a better picture than they can I can go out and sell it, and if you can write a better book you can sell it." (Applause.)

'Ten Commandments' to Cost $1,250,000

"Mr. Dwan, who was just on the stand, was told in his last picture he could spend $175,000, and he spent $260,000. That is pretty near as close as they come to it as a rule." Mr. Kane explained that at the time "The Birth of a Nation" was made the Famous Players was spending $15,000 on each production.

"To show you what we are doing today," the speaker continued, "'The Covered Wagon' cost almost a million dollars. 'Ten Commandments' will cost $1,250,000."

George Middleton told how as a writer for the screen he had been accorded utmost courtesy by producers. He said that after an absence in Europe for two years, during which time he saw few pictures, he found on his return there had been a great advance in the art.

"I just want to say that I have been in the business since 1905 and I think I know something about it," said Rose Tapley. "I think the crux of the problem today is the director. That is really where your trouble has been. We have got to get closer to the director, we have got to educate him along the lines of literature, we have got to get to him and make him understand that fact. Nothing in the world will do any good until you get to the director and educate him—and many of them need it." (Applause.)

Death of Real Picture Directors

"Mrs. Tapley has touched on a very serious subject," said Mr. Kane. "We have a shortage of good directors, and that is the reason we are shortening our product, because we cannot find the type of directors to make pictures that we want to make. But we hope to. We are educating young men.

"There have been only three or four real men come up in the motion picture business in the last five years. There is a dearth. I want you to know we are striving to find them and we are giving opportunities to those we feel we can. And I want to say to date it has cost us a great deal of money."

Friday—Morning Session

Will H. Hays was the first speaker of the day. With unusual earnestness the head of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors delivered a prepared speech of more than four thousand words in length and was followed with the closest attention. In opening Mr. Hays expressed the hope there would be frank and full discussion of all the questions that were in the minds of the authors and that out of it would come construction.

"At the end of a period of incredibly compressed physical, mechanical, financial and artistic development the pioneers have caught their second breath," said Mr. Hays. "Sober business men, and they are that if nothing else, with vision clarified, old rivals now seeing their common interests and sensing definitely their public duty, know better than any one else that the future of their business as well as the future of society demands better and still better pictures.

"No author is, or should take himself to be, so great that he will dominate entirely the making of his story into a picture; no director is or can be so great that he can tell the author, the creator of the thing, that the author shall have no say as to how his story is picturized." (Applause.)

In the discussion that followed Mr. Hays took a prominent part, sharing the floor with Mr. Baker, Mr. Taft, Mr. Kane and the members of the league.

"I believe the knowledge of motion pictures is of far greater importance to the world than the knowledge of international politics," said Professor Herbert Adams Gibbons, introduced as one "who knows everything that one can know about international affairs."

Motion Picture Master Not Yet Developed

"Let us all admit this one thing," said Mr. Cunningham. "No one knows how to write a motion picture, as for instance Balzac knew how to write a novel. We have developed some technique, and tradition, which still is sadly lacking in this new art, is beginning to take form. We have learned, sometimes by experiment and sometimes by fortunate accident, what a few of our limitations are; also what some of the possibilities are. But as for being expert in the manner that what we reverently call the masters were expert I doubt if there will be any such creators of truly ideal motion picture stories for several years—maybe not in this generation.

"But they will come, as sure as masters of their craft have come in other lines of creative or interpretative art. The bright-eyed, alert and studious young property man, who learns about motion pictures from the very bottom; or the eager cameraman's assistant with an itch to write stories may be the man. I don't know."

Elmer Rice, playwright and a director of the Screen Writers' Guild, although denying he was a screen writer, talked rapidly and interestingly, and denied that the motion picture in its present state of development is comparable with any of the major arts and further suggested that the motion picture has not yet produced a masterpiece which in the slightest degree can be compared with the great masterpieces in any of the other arts.

In illustration the speaker cited a possible instance of Bernard Shaw sending for production a stage play, in which all the directions were clearly indicated and the text of which would have to be followed with fidelity, and a short story sold by the same author for purposes of stage production but in which he had no further interest. In the latter instance the work would pass through a half dozen hands and at the end would bear slight resemblance to the work of the author. "That is the position of the motion pictures today," he said.

"Until the motion picture is the work of one man it is utterly ridiculous to speak of it as a serious art which can be compared with the other arts."

Director Hughes Alters Author Hughes' Story

"The best answer to the author who insists on a literal adaptation is by an author himself, Rupert Hughes," said Mr. Quirk. "Author Rupert Hughes is a very promising young director. He screened his own story, 'Souls for Sale,' and the plot of his novel could not be detected in his picture with a high-powered microscope. Yet it is a picture that is entertaining millions. It has in it everything that the literary technicians say it should not have. Yet it is good entertainment. It is worth anybody's fifty cents."

"I would not hazard laying down affirmatively any particular tests before this audience of experts in regard to motion picture production," said Editor Troup. "I suppose the test, so far as the producer is concerned, and it is the acid test, is the box office receipts. He is not to blame for that except to a certain extent, and I want here to interpolate this: I believe that the motion picture industry today has become affluent enough, wealthy enough, to endow itself. I mean by that it is big enough, rich and strong enough to put aside a sinking fund for the production of great pictures, regardless of their commercial value." (Applause.)

Luncheon Session

"I feel peculiarly honored as a clergyman being invited here," said the Rev. Christian F. Reiser, "and I hope we may go out to catch the note that we do have one common job. If we can teach a truth that will send the people out to think and to help then we have done something that is as good as preaching.

"I want to say I feel honored in having motion picture friends. I have had as speakers in my pulpit Lillian Gish, Richard Barthelmess and D. W. Griffith, and every one spoke 100 per cent. And I hope very soon to have in my pulpit that man who has honored your industry and who has done yeomanlike service, and I am sorry to say often has been criticised by the church, that man whom I am glad to count as a friend, Will H. Hays. (Applause.)

"If I come to you as a clergyman I come as a friend and not as a critic. I am sorry you do not do some things better than you do, but I am very glad that you do many things as magnificently as you do. So I come to you as a friend and not as a clergyman to say that the church and religion is not a depriver; it is a helper."

Quarreling with Goose That Lays Golden Eggs

"I have been trying to sense exactly this curious conflict which seems to be going on between the makers of the movies and the writers of books," said former Ambassador Gerard. "It seems as if the writers of books were a little in the way of quarreling with the goose that lays the golden eggs because this has added such an immeasurable field to authorship and to the rewards of authorship."

Mr. Gerard told of the adaptation of "My Four Years in Germany" into a modern picture and seemed not only to have no complaint against the producers of that subject but to be very much pleased with it.

He told how where as a book it may have had a circulation of perhaps three or four hundred thousand and in serial articles in the newspapers may have reached five or six million persons it reached when out upon the screen at least thirty or forty millions and was used by the government as an instrument of propaganda throughout the world.

Fannie Hurst throughout her address, which was extemporaneous, spoke in a critical, even caustic, vein. From a newspaper clipping she read an extract from the opening address of Mr. Taft of the day before and then from the remarks of Mr. Dwan, which are reproduced in part in another column.

"It seems to me," said Miss Hurst, "that the voice from the studio is as logical in taking this point of view as the tender mother is when she feeds her baby bananas. The baby eats bananas, the baby likes bananas, and the baby cries for more bananas. The public is similar in its present position to the banana-fed infant, a stolid, gorged, pimply-faced individual who has not had the chance to have his tastes educated away from bananas because of the tendency of the motion picture industry to 'give 'em what they want.'

Questions Supremacy of Director's Judgment

"I ask, by what equipment, by what preparation, is the director's judgment, if it becomes a matter of taste, to be taken in preference to the author's judgment, whose whole creative machinery has been behind the job?"

Banquet Session

George Barr Baker introduced Otto H. Kahn as toastmaster to the large throng assembled for the final session of the congress.

Mr. Kahn in his opening address praised the men who had blazed the producing trail, declaring they would indeed have had to be more than human if they had shown a record of 100 per cent free from errors. "But as against such shortcomings," he said, "let us contemplate the picture of the stupendous things which the American movie industry has accomplished under the guidance and impulse of these men."

Mr. Woll appealed for screen justice for the men who labor, for the honest portrayal of industrial conflicts, not to delineate the indiscretions of one individual as the attitude and expression and activity of a great mass movement.

Every Man His Own Censor, Says Van Dyke

"Pleasure should be a clean pleasure and a healthy pleasure," said Dr. Henry Van Dyke. "I do not think we need a government censor to teach us how to get it. (Applause.) I do not think we need censorship of that kind at all. What I do believe in, and this is the only kind of censorship I do believe in, is: Every man and every woman his or her own censor. (Applause.) Then if you take dope you know what is going to happen to you."

Mrs. Alice Duer Miller, in whimsical vein for the larger part of her address, refused to get excited when producers altered a story over which she had no further control and said she did not feel particularly in sympathy with her fellow-authors who believed they had a grievance against the pictures. "Nor do I think, with Miss Hurst, that our reputations are concerned," she said.

"I think the motion picture producer or director has the most awful job on his hands that anybody in the world has, and I am awfully sorry for him."

Mrs. Miller did deplore, however, the masculine psychology of the woman on the screen. "My belief is that you will not get interesting pictures until you get real women on the screen, and you won't get real women on the screen until you put women in positions of authority." (Applause.)

Erlanger-Shubert Houses to Play Pictures

LEGITS TO SHOW BIG SPECTACLES

Assured Now of Supply of Big Pictures Working Plan Is Reached

New York City.—The completion of plans for the conversion of a large number of theatres through the country controlled by A. L. Erlanger and Lee and J. J. Shubert into houses showing first-run motion pictures of the spectacle type, was announced June 8 in a statement by Mr. Erlanger. According to the plans, at least one theatre in each city and town of importance throughout the United States hitherto devoted to the presentation of the spoken drama will be occupied with motion picture productions instead.

In theatrical circles generally the announcement provoked comment along two lines. For one thing, the opinion was expressed that this conversion of legitimate theatres into motion picture houses was the inevitable result of the steady decline in business done on tour by New York productions. Secondly, it was maintained that this new combination of the Shubert-Erlanger forces was merely the prelude to a later announcement of the completion of the plans leading to a complete merger of the Shubert-Erlanger theatre realty holdings and interests throughout the country, a proposition that is known to be seriously contemplated by both sides.

Mr. Erlanger's statement follows, in part: "After a careful survey of the field we have come to the conclusion that the time is ripe for the organization of a new chain of theatres throughout the country, to be devoted exclusively to the artistic presentation of those great motion picture stories that are developed occasionally to a point which warrants this special attention.

"Since the success of such super-productions as 'The Birth of a Nation,' and 'Way Down East,' both the Messrs. Shubert and myself have been approached from time to time with the plan to give over a certain number of theatres in the two booking exchanges under our separate managements and to weld these into a chain wherein could be laid out continuous routes for these motion picture spectacles and special productions. Heretofore the thing which prevented the scheme from reaching a working stage was the lack of assurance that there were forthcoming enough pictures to keep such a chain of theatres occupied for an entire theatrical season.

"After an exhaustive study of the situation we are convinced that the required supply of big picture specials is now in the making and that at least one theatre in each big city and town of importance in the United States and Canada can be kept occupied the year round with motion picture productions worthy of the highly artistic rating which will be required before time can be set aside for such presentations. Wherever it is necessary an additional theatre will be built or leased.

"Our study of the situation convinces us, too, that there has been developing a new class of patrons who are willing to pay first-class theatre prices to see these big picture specials when they are given the elaborate presentation that it is proposed to give them under our plan.

"We purpose to create an entirely new booking branch for the handling of these pictures and nothing else, and we know from investigation that there are now in the making enough great picture productions, costing at least $1,000,000 each, to keep the theatres of the circuit planned occupied for the next two years. Experts in this line of special exploitation have co-operated with us in these investigations and will continue such co-operation.

"The first offering to be made is 'The Covered Wagon,' which, as I announced recently, is to be booked, in fact is now being booked exclusively through the Erlanger and Shubert exchanges for the entire season of 1923-1924 and which gives indication of lasting for at least two seasons. In the making now are such other great spectacular successes of the stage and fiction as 'Ben-Hur,' Universal's 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame,' and Cecil B. DeMille's most important undertaking to date, the great Biblical spectacle of 'The Ten Commandments.' I am also informed that D. W. Griffith, the pioneer in the presentation of great picture successes in the legitimate theatres, is making plans for the most ambitious picture he has ever given to the public. These productions alone can keep a full chain of theatres in every city and town of any importance in the country fully occupied for at least two seasons."

ANNUAL CONVENTION SET FOR NEW JERSEY

New Jersey.—The Motion Picture Owners of New Jersey have set the dates of June 26, 27, 28 and 29 as the time and the Alamac Hotel, Lake Hopateong, in their state as the place for the annual gathering of the organization. Those who attended the previous convention at the same place can certify to the size of the "party" and incidentally to the amount of business done.

Henry P. Nelson again is chairman of the convention committee, and he is now registering reservations. On the business side there will be reports of the proceedings at the national convention and also an election of a complete list of officers.

Mr. Nelson states that already a number of screen and stage stars have promised to attend. As to the speechmaking Mr. Nelson says it will be limited, but that those who will be asked to indulge in it are among the more prominent in the country.

The chairman of the convention committee may be addressed at the Capitol Theatre, Elizabeth, N. J., of which he is manager, or at his New York headquarters, care of Herman F. Jans, 729 Seventh avenue.

FAMOUS AND VITAGRAPH SHAKE HANDS

New York.—The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the Vitagraph Company of America, Inc., have agreed to forget their past misunderstandings and Mr. Adolph Zukor and Mr. Albert E. Smith, the presidents of the respective companies, have joined hands with the other producers who are members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in an effort toward constructive work for the benefit of the entire industry. It is understood the agreement to forget old scores was brought about through the intervention and good offices of Will H. Hays.

MICHIGAN ASKED FOR CONFERENCE

Tells Cohen Request Will Be Considered—Minnesota Replies to Attack

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, promptly acknowledged the telegraphed notification of the Michigan organization that it was withdrawing from the national body by sending on June 7, the same day, a conciliatory telegram in which he asked for a conference with the state's board of directors.

The message was sent to each of the members. The following day six of the officers of the Michigan organization, including James C. Ritter, the president, replied stating that the communication would be presented to the first full meeting of the board, which would be held two weeks later.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Southern California have adopted a resolution following the report of the delegates to the recent Chicago convention approving and endorsing the election of Mr. Cohen and "pledging our whole-hearted support throughout the coming year's administration."

Minnesota Replies to Cohen

The board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Minnesota have issued a long statement in reply to that sent out by Mr. Cohen following receipt of the notification of withdrawal from the national body of Minnesota.

"The statement says: 'We cannot permit to go unchallenged the cowardly and venomous insult he has directed at the Minnesota association.' It continues:

"The statement, which seeks to explain Minnesota's retirement from the M. P. T. O. A., as a move prompted by the First National interests, which Mr. Cohen declares largely dominate the Minnesota association, is a malicious slur on an organization of independent theatre owners which preferred to withdraw from the national organization than sacrifice its independence by longer submitting to the tyranny of Sydney S. Cohen.

"The silly charges contained in the latest literary outburst of Mr. Cohen would hardly merit even passing consideration, but for the fact that they strike a deep and dastardly blow at the most capable, fearless and loyal organization man this industry has ever known, namely W. A. Steffes. "Mr. Hays, whom Mr. Cohen chooses to term the dominating figure of the Minnesota organization, is an able and fearless exhibitor, a capable and commanding executive.

"So far as Sydney Cohen threatening to invade Minnesota to establish another paper unit to affiliate itself with his monarchy is concerned, we in Minnesota accept this challenge gladly and will welcome Sydney Cohen or any of his henchmen to come into our territory at any time, either for the purpose of trying to disrupt one of the strongest exhibitor organizations ever formed in the United States, or for the purpose as above stated, for creating another paper unit, as we have confidence in our members and they likewise have confidence in our officers."

FEDERAL BOARD

SUMMONS COHEN

President of Theatre Owners Submits Correspondence and Minutes

At the hearing on Wednesday before the Federal Trade Board Sydney S. Cohen, president of the National Theatre Owners, appeared in response to a duces tecum subpoena and submitted correspondence which has passed between his office and that of Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players. The documents were marked for identification and for formal submission to the government on the following day, at which time Mr. Cohen was also to present a report of the contents of the Theatre Owners at Cleveland, Minneapolis and Washington.

S. R. Kent, recalled as a witness, outlined the workings of a chart submitted earlier in the week. The chart explained the block system and showed the booking of pictures for first runs.

The hearing of the Federal Trade Commission into its charges against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were resumed June 11 after an interim of two weeks.

The witnesses of the first two days were Rudolph Sanders, a Brooklyn exhibitor, who on several occasions in the course of his examination contributed to the entertainment of the court—"Ruddy" smiled, and all in the room smiled with him; David Weinstock, an exhibitor, and Herman Rachmil, also a theatre owner; Richard W. Saunders, controller of Famous Players.

On the second day the witnesses were among others S. R. Kent, distribution chief of Famous Players; John Manheimer, a Brooklyn exhibitor, and Jerome Beatty.

It was understood the New York hearings would be concluded the present week, and that the commission would adjourn to Philadelphia.

Mr. Sanders was the first witness on Monday. He testified that with few exceptions he had not used Famous Players product since 1917-18, being dissatisfied at the amounts charged for product. When Paramount salesman advised him to increase his admission charge, he said, he suggested that it could not be done on account of vaudeville competition in his neighborhood.

Mr. Sanders said when patrons showed him postcards from Famous Players reading "Ask Sanders why he doesn't show Paramount Pictures" he ran a slide on his screen to the effect that "To satisfy patrons who received postcards from Paramount asking why we don't show Paramount Pictures: We don't show them because we can't show them at a price that will admit you at the present admission."

The witness said he had signed a contract for Realart subjects believing the new company was independent. He said he was informed at the Realart exchange that statements to the contrary were unfounded.

At the present time, Mr. Sanders testified, he was getting along very well without Paramount pictures.

David Weinstock, operating the City Hall and Freeman Theatres, said he had been using Paramount 100 per cent for five out of the preceding six years, taking all or nothing. He said the chain situation was becoming more onerous every year, cutting down the profits of the independent exhibitor. He said he had signed a contract with Realart believing it was an independent company.

Herman Rachmil, owning five Brooklyn houses, said he had used Paramount subjects until 1919, but that he had changed his supply owing to the liking of his patrons for melodramatic pictures. He said that if he could get first run Paramounts now instead of having to use second runs to Loew houses he would be using Paramounts at present.

Richard W. Saunders, controller of Famous Players, explained the methods of checking up on subsidiary companies of Famous, saying that the accounts were maintained in the home of the individual company.

At the Tuesday hearing Mr. Kent presented a chart covering first run bookings of first-class houses for several years. The government had asked only for the year 1922-3, but after considerable argument Commissioner Alvord decided to take the subject under advisement overnight.

The witness stated that the clause in the contract requiring the distributor to furnish a subject contracted for even though the release date was later than originally intended is a new provision in the uniform contract. He said the clause allowing Famous Players to withdraw pictures designated as super-specials is exercised upon the discretion of officials after a preview of the production.

Mr. Kent stated that sales of accessories net Famous Players an average of $1,000,000 annually. After explaining the status of several of the chain organizations in different parts of the country in regard to the number of pictures they had contracted to show the witness was asked if he knew "The Covered Wagon" was going to be shown in the houses of the proposed Erlanger-Shubert circuit.

Mr. Kent said he knew nothing about the reported combine, but imagined the production would be shown in practically all of the Erlanger and Shubert houses.

John Manheimer, of the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, said that when Loew built the Alpine Theatre in his neighborhood he was compelled to change from first to second run Paramounts, with disastrous results. He said he now was showing first runs of other companies, but would rather have Paramounts.

Jerome Beatty, formerly in charge of Paramount advertising, testified regarding matter sent out from the home office to the exchanges.

Hollywood.—Little Theatre Films Inc., an organization that is to the screen what The Little Theatre, of New York, is to the stage, showed "Mortal Clay," directed by Victor Seastrom, at the Writers' Club here this week. This is the first of twenty-five pictures it will offer to the public.

Instead of "bigger and better" pictures the organization aim is "fewer and different pictures," and it will try to reach that part of the public who care for photoplays produced from an artistic angle rather than the box office. This is the first movement of its kind, and is a very high brow organization backed by a group of directors, writers and others who will appeal to a limited and discriminating audience.

AROUSE INTEREST IN LOYAL LIVES

Postmaster at Chicago Writes Letter to Office Organization

New York.—The interest aroused among the personnel of the United States Post Office Department by "Loyal Lives," the Whitman Bennett feature which will be released by Vitagraph, is shown by a letter written by Arthur G. Lueder, Postmaster at Chicago, to the personnel of his organization and which was made public in the newspapers of that city. The letter reads:

"A real human interest story of the postal service, with an all star cast including Brandon Tynan and Mary Carr, Faire Binney, 'Buster' Collier, Blanche Craig and Charles MacDonald, portraying the intimate phases of the work of the postoffice department and the home life of those engaged in it is now being filmed and will be presented in leading motion picture houses of the country.

"The public knows little about the inner workings of the machine that provides them with the highest developed system of communication in the history of the world and the producers have devised a picture that is designed to present this information forcefully, dramatically and convincingly.

Mae Murray Begins "Conquest" in New York During Visit

New York.—Although her present visit to this city was undertaken with the obvious intent of securing relaxation, Mae Murray and her director-husband, Robert Z. Leonard, have nevertheless reverted to type. During the past several weeks Miss Murray and Mr. Leonard have taken advantage of their presence in New York and have shot many exterior scenes of metropolitan atmosphere which figure in her next picture "Conquest."

Miss Murray and Mr. Leonard will leave here at the end of next week for Hollywood where they will continue the production at the Metro studios.

THE SPOILERS BOOKED BY BALABAN AND KATZ

Chicago.—Balaban & Katz have booked Jesse D. Hampton's film version of Rex Beach's "The Spoilers" for an indefinite run at the Roosevelt Theatre, beginning Monday, July 2. The deal was closed with James R. Grainger, Manager of Sales for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, while he was in this city on his swing about the Goldwyn exchanges.

Barthelme Broadcasting

Hartford, Conn.—Richard Barthelme, who is reputed to have worked at one time in his early career for $8 a week filing addresses for a Hartford insurance company, will appear in Hartford to participate in the broadcasting program to be given by the "Courant". His picture, "The Bright Shawl" is appearing all this week at the Princess Theatre.

New Exchange Manager

Production Closes

Los Angeles.—Production has closed on "Where is this West?" The play was adapted from an original story by George C. Hull of the Universal scenario department and directed by George E. Marshall.

INDIAN SQUAW, 103 YEARS OLD, PLAYS IN FILM

New York.—Claiming to be the oldest actress that ever donned movie make-up, Mrs. Susan Dibo, a 103 year old Indian Squaw, is now appearing in "Unseeing Eyes," a screen version of Arthur Stringer's story, "Snow Blind," which E. H. Griffith is directing for the Cosmopolitan Corporation. The engagement of the venerable squaw resulted from the fact that the film relates a story of life in the Canadian Northwoods. In the picture, Indians play a predominant part and for the filming of interior scenes more than a score of first Americans were brought to New York from the Onondaga Reservation near Syracuse.

"Universal Sixty" for 1923-4 Season

CARL LAEMMLE ANNOUNCES LIST

Product Includes Twenty Jewels and Five Groups By Popular Stars

New York.—Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, announces for the 1923-1924 season the largest program of picture production ever attempted by that company. A total of sixty pictures will be made and released during the twelve months beginning next September. This aggregation will be known as the "Universal Sixty."

It will consist of several groups of pictures, differentiated in the main by the stars who make them. A strong feature will be a list of Universal-Jewel productions of which there are twenty.

The increase in productions is due to the addition of two new stars, Reginald Denny and Mary Philbin. Denny has graduated into his own company and Miss Philbin has come to fame by reason of her work in "Merry Go Round," which will be shown in this city at an early date. Denny and Miss Philbin will be starred in four Jewels each during the coming year.

In addition to the eight foregoing Jewels by Denny and Miss Philbin, there will be twelve others made by Jewel stars, or by special casts. These will be headed by "Merry Go Round."

Priscilla Dean will contribute two to the list. They will be "Drifting," an adaptation of John Colton's stage play, and "White Tiger," a melodrama written by Tod Browning around the adventures of a group of London crooks and their intrigues in American society. Browning directed both features. The first will be released in January and the other in June.

Virginia Valli will contribute two. They will be "A Lady of Quality" and "Up the Ladder," the first being an adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel and play, and the latter a screen version of the Owen Davis stage play. "A Lady of Quality" is being directed for October release by Hobart Henley. "Up the Ladder" will be directed by Harry Pollard, it is expected, and will be released early next year.

Included in the specials to be made with individual stars, there will be "Whose Baby Are You?" with Baby Peggy. King Baggot is directing this picture. "Damned" the anonymous novel will be made with Barbara La Marr in the featured role. "The Signal Tower" and "The Turmoil" will be made for next summer release, the latter by Hobart Henley, and will be used as starring vehicles, but no definite selection of players has been made.

Others scheduled for the coming year are "Thundering Dawn," a Harry Garson production featuring J. Warren Kerrigan and Anna O. Nilsson, now in production, and "The Acquittal," which Clarence L. Brown is adapting from Rita Welman's stage play. Claire Windsor, Norman Kerry and Jerome Travers will be featured in this production which probably will be ready for release late this year. There also will be "A Chapter in Her Life," a Lois Weber-all-star production of Clara Louise Burnham's story, "Jewel."

In addition to the twenty Jewels scheduled as the outstanding group, there also will be five groups of eight pictures each. Prominent in these will be a series of eight

Hoot Gibson Productions, made under the direction of Edward Sedgwick, and starring the popular western hero.

There also will be a group of eight Gladys Walton Productions. In this group will be "The Untamable" by Gelett Burgess, directed by Herbert Blache, "The Near Lady," by Frank Adams, "The Aforementioned Infant," by Elizabeth Saxony Holding and "The Thrill Girl" by Crosby George. Others now are being selected.

There will be a group of eight Jack Hoxie Productions, including "Men in the Raw," "The Knight of the Range," "Wyoming," "The Texas Ranger" and others. Herbert Rawlinson also will contribute a group of eight pictures. Among the Herbert Rawlinson Productions will be "Crooked Alley," "Upside Down," "Small Town Stuff" and others.

The remaining group of features will be eight melodramas, probably with special casts and novelty treatment.

CONGRESSMAN WILL ATTEND CONVENTION

Buffalo.—J. H. Michael, chairman of the executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, Inc., announces that Congressman Clarence MacGregor of the 41st district of New York, has accepted an invitation to attend the convention of the state exhibitor body in Syracuse, June 19, 20 and 21 and to address the convention on his bill to eliminate the tax on theatre admissions up to 25 cents.

"This bill is one of the most important things for the exhibitors of the country to get behind with both feet," said Mr. Michael. "When Mr. MacGregor introduced the measure at the last session of Congress there was little or no support given it, in spite of the fact that its passage would mean thousands of dollars in the pockets of exhibitors. In the Buffalo delegation which will attend the Syracuse convention will be George Hanny, Charlie Hayman of Niagara Falls, Louis Eisenbreg, Arthur L. Skinner, Henry Carr, Al Beckerich, Fred M. Shafer, M. Slotkin, Jim Wallingford, Mr. Michael and others.

Hopkins Elected President

Albany.—Frank S. Hopkins has been elected president of the Albany F. I. L. M. Club, succeeding C. R. Halligan, resigned. Lloyd Willis of Buffalo, who is connected with the Hays organization, addressed the members of the club.

NOTHING THAT SLOWS DOWN PICTURE USED

Los Angeles.—A forerunner of "picture entertainment only" is seen in the announcement of West Coast Theatres of their new policy for the Kinema, their Grand avenue house here. Hereafter neither prologues, musical specialties or anything which will slow down the picture program will be shown. The new arrangement went into effect this week. Associated First National Pictures are to be shown, and the slogan will be "the picture is the thing."

Inasmuch as a lower admission price is to be charged it is hardly likely the new policy will extend to West Coast Theatres larger houses, but it is possible and probable that "pictures only" will go into effect in all the smaller theatres.

DEAL CLOSED ON COSMOART STUDIO

Charles Ray Gets Possession of Large Tract of Land in California

Hollywood.—Charles Ray is to go into producing on a much larger scale. Not only is he to make bigger pictures in which he will star, but one of the features of his intended expansion will consist of the signing of two of the best known stars of the screen world with whom he is now negotiating.

With a greater production objective in view, Ray this week closed a deal whereby he comes into possession of the Cosmoart Studio on Beverly Boulevard, perhaps the finest natural scenic lot in Southern California. It covers more than twenty acres and contains a natural lake, towering trees, and a great amount of foliage which make it unnecessary for a producing company to leave the place for outdoor scenic effects. Ray intends to make it one of the show places of this section.

After he moves from his present Fleming street studio the producer intends to spend a small fortune in improvements on his new location. Room will be made for a dozen companies, and space will be let to independent producers. Ray proposes to make two pictures a year in which he will appear. As changes cannot be made in time, it is quite possible his next picture will be made in his present studio.

ENLARGED SCOPE OF M. C. LEVEE

United Studios Head Returns to Coast With Plans For Expansion

Los Angeles.—M. C. Levee, President of the United Studios and producer of Maurice Tourneur Pictures, returned here from New York where he closed arrangements for increased producing activities involving the picturization of a number of productions and the signing of players and directors.

Details of the enlarged scope of Mr. Levee's producing activities will be announced within the next week after he has conferred with his associates in this city. It is said the new producing plan will involve further additions to the United Studios which are now being completely rebuilt.

While in New York, Mr. Levee conferred with executives of Associated First National Pictures on the distribution and exploitation of Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle," just finished. Arrangements for a special national premiere of this film at the Balaban & Katz Theatre in Chicago, were made by Mr. Levee. The film will receive its initial public presentation there on July 17. Mr. Tourneur and various members of the cast plan to make the trip East to attend the premiere. Immediately after the Chicago showing the picture will be shown in this city.

This feature, when released by First National, will be in six reels.

KANSAS CITY SHOWMEN FIGHT TAX TO LIMIT

Kansas City, Mo.—Coincidental with the formation of the Kansas City division of the M. P. T. O. A. comes a radical amusement tax, announced by the county court of Jackson County, which will effect every motion picture theatre in Kansas City, as well as rural houses in the county.

It will be a test of the new exhibitors' organization, which will fight the tax to the last ditch, according to A. M. Eisner, president. An order has been made directing L. R. Tolliver, county license inspector, to start collection of the tax which is fixed according to a schedule in the court. Based upon the statute the order calls for a collection of $25 a month from all shows where an admittance fee of $1 and less than $1.50 is charged. All motion picture theatres must pay an annual license tax of $100, providing they come within a district outlined by the court, while those outside the district, which will be neighborhood houses of less than 800 seating capacity will pay $25 a year. All theatres outside Kansas City must pay $25 a year. Shows charging more than $1 and less than $1.50 must pay a monthly tax of $62.50.

The $1 scale and above will not hit any of the downtown motion picture houses of Kansas City, the top price being 75 cents,

BEN TURPIN FILLS CAPITOL WITH LAUGHS

Ben Turpin's forty-five degree eyes and his comedy, "The Shriek of Araby," Mack Sennett's latest five reel burlesque feature, kept the Capitol theatre audiences in an uproar when this Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release had its first showing on Broadway, June 10.

AND ON THE SEVENTH DAY HE RESTED

New York.—"The Man Between" the six-part feature which Associated Exhibitors has set for release July 15, is a Finis Fox production, but when this fact is stated the record of his connection with the picture is still far from complete. Mr. Fox wrote the story, adapted it for screen use, prepared the scenario, selected and assembled the cast, directed the production, penned the titles, cut the film, personally took his print East, offered it to Associated Exhibitors, conducted the ensuing negotiations, and signed the contract for the feature's distribution by that organization. Otherwise, Mr. Fox is declared to have had absolutely no connection with "The Man Between."

but the taxation as outlined by the court has aroused the ire of the exhibitors.

"The county does not provide fire or police protection," said Mr. Eisner. "The proposed tax will be merely a 'tribute.' We are and always have been willing to pay city and state taxes levied against us, but no such taxation as Jackson County proposes. Two years ago exhibitors of Kansas City went to court to contest the payment of an amusement tax similar to the one introduced this week and the county authorities abandoned the effort to collect the tax."

VICTOR B. FISHER TO ARRANGE DISTRIBUTION

Los Angeles.—Distributing arrangements for "Youth Triumphant," the initial production made by Victor B. Fisher at the Hollywood Studios, will be announced within the next two weeks.

Mr. Fisher will leave here shortly with the master print, to close negotiations for the world distributing rights. Arrangements will be made for New York premiere and according to present plans, Virginia Lee Corbin and several other members of the cast will appear in person at the opening run of the picture.

While in the East, Mr. Fisher will also close for a number of new stories to take care of the increased producing schedule which will be started within the next few weeks. Negotiations for several prominent players to be placed under long term contracts, are also under way.

COMPLETE PRODUCTION

Los Angeles.—Mary Pickford's new costume production which has been made under the direction of Ernest Lubitsch, under the working title of "The Street Singer," has been completed. At least the final shots have been made. Miss Pickford will supervise the editing and cutting.

CENSORSHIP BOARD

vs. M. P. T. O. KANSAS

Topeka, Kan.—A real controversy is on between the M. P. T. O. Kansas and the Kansas Board of Motion Picture Censorship—the exhibitors vigorously opposing the board's approval of a picture.

After having been barred for more than five years, "The Birth of a Nation" is to be permitted to come into Kansas. The film will be shown before the Kansas censorship board in a few days and the information available is that approval will be given.

Ex-Governor Sapper issued orders not to admit the picture after he had seen it in a private showing. So did ex-Governor Allen.

The Kansas organization has protested to Governor Davis against the state censor board giving permission for the presentation of the picture on the ground that permission at this late day on the part of the censor board will have the appearance of the injection of politics into the motion picture industry, especially since two governors and many citizens have objected to the production being shown. C. W. Stater of Oklahoma City has exclusive rights of the picture in Kansas and Oklahoma.

HODKINSON FORMS CANADIAN COMPANY

New York.—The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will do its own selling in Canada in the near future, according to plans that have just been completed. This step means the formation of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of Canada (Ltd.) with the principal office located at 21 Dundas Street, E., Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Mr. J. L. Plowright is Assistant Treasurer and Assistant Secretary of the Corporation and will act as Resident Manager and representative in Canada. Through this arrangement, the new Corporation will have its own sales force, but the physical distribution will be handled by Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., in Eastern Canada and the First National Exhibitors Exchange Ltd., in Western Canada.

Branch offices have been established in the following cities: St. Johns, Nova Scotia, Montreal, Province of Quebec, Winnipeg, Province of Manitoba and Calgary, Province of Alberta. Plans are now under way to establish a branch office at Vancouver British Columbia.

PASSION TO RETURN TO NEW YORK CAPITOL

New York.—For the first time in its history the Capitol theatre, has booked a feature picture for a return engagement. "Passion" the First National picture in which Pola Negri made her American debut, will be seen on the screen of the world's largest playhouse for a second time during the week of June 24.

It was on December 12, 1920, that the foreign-made production had its American premiere. The opening Sunday topped the record at the Capitol which at that time was held by "The Mark of Zorro." Before the week was over every house record had tumbled and it was decided to hold the picture for a second week. It was the first picture to play the Capitol for more than one week.

The first week brought $63,000 into the box office. The grand total for the two weeks was in excess to $110,000.

THE EAGLE'S FEATHER BOASTS NOTABLE CAST

Los Angeles.—"The Eagle's Feather" is in continuous production under the direction of Edward Sloman. It is the first Metro special for the coming season.

The feature was adapted by Winifred Dunn from the story by Katherine Newlin Burt.

First National A World-Wide Distributor

WILL HANDLE ALL OF ITS OWN FILMS

Change in Foreign Policy to Be Placed in Operation July First

New York.—One of the year's most important announcements concerning foreign distribution, was made by Bruce Johnson, manager of the foreign department of Associated First National Pictures. By arrangement with D. P. Howells, Inc., a change in the foreign policy of this company is to take place on July 1. On that date Associated First National will take over the distribution of its pictures in all those countries in which First National exchanges are not at present operating, from David P. Howells, Inc. formerly representative of First National.

Under the new policy the Howells organization will still handle all pictures released prior of January 1, 1922, but product released since that date and all product scheduled for future release will be handled by First National throughout the entire world, either through its own exchanges or leased outright to local exchanges.

At the present time First National exchanges are operating in the United Kingdom, the Irish Free State, in Norway, Sweden and Denmark, Australia and New Zealand and in Mexico.

"This change in our foreign policy," stated Mr. Johnson, who left last week for an extended tour of Europe, "is of the utmost importance to the independent producer. It means world-wide distribution by the same company which is releasing his product in this country. It gives a central focal point from which foreign business can be controlled. At the present time we have six complete exchange systems operating smoothly in several countries. Our British distributing unit, organized comparatively recently, has made enormous strides and has taken its place among the leaders of the industry in Great Britain.

"Further announcement of development of our foreign department may be expected upon my return from abroad. We expect to be able to offer the independent producer the quickest and most comprehensive world-wide distribution in the industry."

During Mr. Johnson's absence, Louis Brock, assistant foreign manager, will be in charge of the department.

FINEART PURCHASED BY TRUART PICTURES

Hollywood.—The historic old Fineart Studio on Sunset Boulevard where D. W. Griffith made his earlier pictures, and where Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Charles Chaplin got their start, has been purchased by Truart Pictures, headed by M. H. Hoffman. A number of moves on the film checkerboard will be made when Hoffman returns from New York with George Perry, general manager, and Rowland Edwards in charge of production.

Attorney Herman Roth, of Long Angeles, stated tentative arrangements have been made for four units of Hollywood Productions, the producing company of Truart, to go to the Fineart Studio. Larry Semon will also produce there, as will companies headed by Mae Murray, and Elaine Hammerstein. Two all-star casts are also to be moved from the Goldwyn lot at Culver City to the new location.

Colonel Selig is to get back in the producing game under a contract with Truart by which he will make four pictures a year for three years.

NO MAKE-UP USED IN PENROD AND SAM

"Penrod and Sam," the J. K. McDonald production directed by William Beaudine, which is a current First National release, may set a new vogue in picture making. Not one particle of make-up was used on any of the players during the making of the picture.

According to Mr. McDonald, this is the first feature picture in which grease paint was entirely discarded. "Not only," states the producer, "do we expect 'Penrod and Sam' to be of special interest to the industry because of this peculiarity, but we feel that the motion picture public will be anxious to see a production which takes this revolutionary reparture from the conventional paths of picture making. If for no other reason than to see if the actors look as well without their much-advertised make-up. Needless to say they will not be disappointed in this respect, since the photography is as clear and the detail as sharp as any picture ever made."

INVENTOR RETURNING HERE FROM LONDON

New York.—Lee DeForest, sailed Saturday, June 9 from London en route to this city. Upon his return he will take up active supervision of production of phonofilms at the DeForest studios.

SHRINERS' PARADE SHOWN IN WASHINGTON

Washington.—At the local theatres on the evening of the great parade of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine many Shriner and witnesses of the big National Masonic event were heard to express surprise and pleasure at the enterprise of Pathe News in rushing its pictures to local screens that same evening.

Exclusive credit is given to Pathe News for this feat of foresight and efficient organization. Without neglecting any of the outstanding features of the parade, which lasted well along into the afternoon, the staff on the job was able to develop negatives and make prints for delivery to local theatres within a few hours after the disbanding of the paraders.

DISTINCTIVE'S FALL RELEASES

The Green Goddess, Steadfast Heart, Second Youth and New Arliss Picture

New York.—After six months of steady production work, "The Green Goddess" is rapidly assuming shape at the Studios of Distinctive Pictures Corporation. Distinctive will furnish eight special features for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan distribution next season. "The Green Goddess" is third on the list, the first two already having been delivered: "Backbone" and "The Ragged Edge." "The Steadfast Heart" will be the fourth.

"The Green Goddess" is the production which will bring Alice Joyce back to the screen in support of George Arliss. With them will be David Powell, Harry T. Morey, Ivan Simpson and Jetta Goudal.

Distinctive also announces its decision to put Alfred Lunt in a farce comedy, and to this end has purchased "Second Youth," a novel by Allan Updegraff. Albert Parker has been engaged to direct this picture, in which Mimi Palmeri will appear for the second time.

A cast of comedy actors has been engaged to support Lunt and Miss Palmeri. Jobyna Howland will take the part of a boarding-house keeper (shades of The Gold Diggers); Walter Catlett will be one of the masculine funmakers and Herbert Corthell will be another.

It is probable that George Arliss will begin work in "The Adopted Father" for Distinctive immediately after he has finished "The Green Goddess." This is the Edgar Franklin story purchased especially for Mr. Arliss and adapted by Forrest Halsey.

"The Ragged Edge" is the current Distinctive release through Goldwyn.

"Salomy Jane," the George Melford production for Paramount, was finished last week at the Lasky studio. Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett, and Maurice Flynn are featured.

Reginald Barker has completed the making of "Master of Women," an all-star special for Louis B. Mayer. It is based on G. B. Lancaster's novel, "The Law Bringers."

The latest candidate for the title role in Goldwyn's "Ben Hur" is James Kirkwood. There is also some talk on the Goldwyn lot of Rodolph Valentino although supporters fail to explain how the star can get around his Famous Player difficulties.

Sol Lesser has signed up Ilona Marlowe for a three year period. The Young woman is a new-comer to the screen, and will appear in "Divorce," which stars Jane Novak. Miss Marlowe attracted attention by her work in "Fighting Blood."

"The Love Brand," has been started by Stuart Patton at Universal City. Roy Stewart is to be featured, and a large cast will be used.

Victor Seastrom, the Swedish director, this week got the big Goldwyn production "Master Of Man," adapted from Hall Caine's novel, underway.

Warner Bros. have decided to call their Chester M. Franklin production "Beasts Of The North" instead of "Wolf Fang." It is finished.

Work was started this week on "The Gold Diggers" with Hope Hampton at the Warner Bros. studio.

Rupert Hughes returned from an eastern trip this week, and while it is not officially announced, there is an impression at the Goldwyn studio that he will soon commence work on "Laws Against Law," a study of divorce.

George K. Arthur, well known British actor, has been engaged to play the leading role in "Life, Liberty, and—," which is to be made at the Powers studio. The story is by Wyndham Martyn, and production commences next week.

Bryant Washburn and Mabel (Mrs. Bryant Washburn) are preparing to appear together in "The Love Trap."

Constance Talmadge having finished "Duley" is preparing to appear in "A Dangerous Maid," a romantic comedy.

William De Mille has returned from New York, and is ready to start work on "Spring Magic," an adaptation of "The Faun," a play by Edward Knoblock.

Sidney Franklin is to have the pleasure of directing John Barrymore in "Debarau," which the Warner Bros. will produce following Mr. Franklins completion of "Tiger Rose" with Lenore Ulrich.

When Constance Talmadge starts "Barbara Winslow, Rebel," she will have in her company Marianno Samaniegos, brother of Ramon Navarro, who is said to be as talented and as handsome as the Metro player. Samaniegos is the family name.

Joseph M. Schenck has finally decided to call his new Norma Talmadge production "The Heart of Yoeland." It began as "Ashes of Vengeance" and was later changed to "Purple Pride." As Miss Talmadge selected the present title, it will probably stick.

Jerome Storm has completed "Children of Jazz" at the Lasky Studio. This is an adaptation by Beulah Marie Dix of a play by Harold Brighouse. It is said to be a novelty.

Associated Authors Begin Work on Peter B. Kyne Story

Los Angeles—Associated Authors, Inc., consisting of Frank E. Woods, Elmer Harris, Thompson Buchanan and Clark W. Thomas, have begun production work on their second feature, a screen version of Peter B. Kyne's story "Harbor Bar" which will be filmed under the title "Loving Lies."

The picture, which is being made for distribution by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, is being directed by W. S. Van Dyke, with Monte Blue and Evelyn Brent in the leading roles.

The initial release of Associated Authors, "Richard, the Lion-hearted," an adaptation of Scott's novel "The Talisman," featuring Wallace Beery in the role of King Richard, has been completed for early fall showing.

WESTERN LABORATORY HAS EXPANSION PLAN

Hollywood.—Standard Film Laboratories are spending approximately $40,000 on expansion that includes a new administration building with an number of private offices; a small preview theatre for the use of local producers; and two fire-proof, reinforced concrete film vaults for storage of negatives from which the laboratories have made release prints. The film vaults are nearly completed now. Work has already started on the new office building and it will be ready for occupancy next month. It is situated just south of the main laboratories building, Seward and Romaine streets.

The laboratories organization will use part of these new offices. The others will be available for independent producers whose work goes through Standard Film Laboratories and who wish to make permanent executive headquarters there. Two wings extending straight back on either side of the building probably will be added in the near future. One of these will provide additional office space. The preview theatre, with a seating capacity of approximately 100, will be housed in the left wing.

The increasing number of prominent producers now having release prints made on the West Coast and shipping these prints direct to various exchanges has made the new storage vaults necessary, according to John N. Nickolaus and S. N. Tompkins, heads of the Standard organization.

"The Barber of New Orleans" deals with a period in American history when the Louisiana Purchase was made, and the scene is laid in the Crescent City. All of the picturesque atmosphere of chivalry and loyalty to high ideals is brought out in the story. The hero, Victor Jallot, is an Admirable Crichton—barber, fencing master, duelist, surgeon, man of letters, musician, beloved alike by women and men.

HODKINSON WILL RELEASE FEATURE

Thomas Dixon's Mark of the Beast is Scheduled For June 17

New York.—W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will distribute "The Mark of the Beast," which is a picturization of the novel "The Beast" by Thomas Dixon. This picture was produced personally by Thomas Dixon. He was also responsible for the direction and the continuity.

In a statement made by the author as soon as the distribution rights had been made, he said that his effort to produce and direct his own story was decided upon in order to give absolute freedom to the author in the filmization of the story.

In a brief address made to a specially invited audience at the Town Hall recently, preceding the showing of this feature, Mr. Dixon admitted that this production would not have any unusual sets, big spectacles, such as snow storms, forest fires and other sensationalisms, to get the production across.

"The Mark of the Beast" is a story of the sub-conscious mind and that mystic power within which impels human beings to strange actions over which they have no control.

The interiors were filmed at the Tilford Cinema studios. The cast includes Madelyn Clare as the girl, Robert Ellis enacts the part of Dr. David Hale and Warner P. Richmond plays the role of Donald Duncan, "The Beast." Helen Ware and Gustav Von Seyffertitz also present characterizations.

It is scheduled for release June 17.

PRODUCING "UNKNOWN" NOT "DEEP" PURPLE

New York.—Because of some slight confusion relative to the production being made by Carlos Productions, Inc., for Truairt distribution, M. H. Hoffman, Vice-President and General Manager of Truairt Film Corporation states that the picture being made is adapted from the stage play "The Unknown Purple" written and produced by Roland West and Carlyle Moore and played for two seasons in New York.

The confusion arose from the fact that it was variously announced that the picture being made was adapted from "The Deep Purple, Paul Armstrong's and Wilson Mizner's stage play, which was produced in New York by Liebler and Company. The Carlos Production is not being made from the "Deep Purple" which was previously screened by World Film Corporation with Clara Kimball Young in the leading role.

Short Subjects and Serials

PATHE SUGGESTS KISER ART FILMS

Specially Exploited Will Make Ideal Attraction For Hot Weather

Pathe responds to a fresh spurt of exhibitor interest in the Oregon Trail Series of Kiser Studio short subjects with special exploitation of these ideal hot weather attractions.

Five of these one and two-reel eye-coolers, with their adventurous action in almost inaccessible places in forests and mountains of the great Northwest are now heavily booked by far-sighted exhibitors, and available at all Pathe branch exchanges.

Pathe's exploitation material for these subjects is now supplemented with devices in connection with which the Kiser Studio lends its hearty cooperation.

In connection with showings of "The Royal Chinook," which pictures the life history of the Oregon River salmon, upon application through Pathe the Kiser people will ship to any exhibitor three big 20-pound salmon, carefully packed, for the nominal charge of ten dollars, C. O. D. The idea is to display these at the theatre frozen in a cake of ice bearing the house announcement. Local fish markets, too, will furnish this appropriate lobby ballyhoo, which will last for about eight hours.

"The Price of Progress," an adventure in the great lumber industry, obviously calls for lumber yard tie-up ballyhoos, and a lobby lumberjack, with, perhaps, a wood-chopping contest before the picture goes on. This is a 2-reel subject with stirring scenes of men and powerful machinery.

"Fleeced For Gold," an intimate view of sheep-raising and wool-producing, offers a fine opportunity for a "Mary's Little Lamb" in the lobby.

All sorts of lobby ice and snow suggestions are indicated for "The Crystal Ascent," which is an actual ascent to the summit of Mount Hood and is declared to be a picture which banishes all sensation of summer temperature.

"Weeping Waters," enables effective lobby displays of all sorts of Indian trinkets.

Pathe makes a special request to exhibitors for photographs showing practical use made of such exploitation methods in connection with their showing of these Kiser Art Films.

Century Comedies Popular With British Audiences

A cable dispatch from Julius Stern advises the New York office of his organization that more British theatres are running Century Comedies today than ever before, and that Baby Peggy and Buddy Messinger are especially enjoyed by discriminating English audiences. Many of the theatres have given special attention to exploiting such comedies as "Just Dogs," "Peg O' the Movies" and many others of the Baby Peggy series, and Jack Cooper comedies. Cooper is a former English music hall performer.

Mr. Stern's next destination will be Paris, and then Berlin.

Aubrey's First Released Soon

Jimmy Aubrey's first vehicle under his own management and his first independent production to be distributed by Chadwick Pictures Corporation of New York City will be titled—"The Buttinsky." The subject depicts the farcical adventures of a soap salesman in Darkest Russia and in addition to being a farce along the broadest lines it will also be a thriller throughout as the engagement of the famous Metzetti family of tumblers for this comedy warrants. The Metzettis are a famous troupe of acrobats, one well known on the screen has adopted the name of Richard Talmadge.

Included in the cast are John de Silva, and Ruth Hill. Production is going on at Universal City and with good luck the first of the new Aubrey comedies will be ready in July.

Hal Roach Making Burlesque

Pathe announces the early release of a Hal Roach one-reel comedy called "The Uncovered Wagon" featuring Paul Parrott.

As the title indicates, this is a frank burlesque of an outstanding current feature. Condensed into one-reel, it is reported to "hit the high spots" of the long and elaborate feature in a breathless rush of travesty sequences ending with such "comedy horrors of Indian perfidy" as never before were seen on any screen.

Cohen of Pathe Gives Talk

At the request of Station W. O. R., Newark, N. J., Emmanuel Cohen, Editor of the Pathe News, talked for the radio service on "The Romance of the News Reel." Editor Cohen's talk was preceded by a broadcast introduction telling about Pathe News "beats" and exclusive motion picture camera reports of outstanding world events.

In a concise way, Editor Cohen told the radio the highlights of all that is involved in picturing the world's great events; the foresight necessary to have cameramen on the spot when things happen, the contempt these men have from personal risk, their devices for transmitting their precious film to headquarters by the speediest carriers, including airplanes, and the processes of development, titling, printing and rushing the completed result to the waiting screens.

New Series of Cameo Comedies

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces that Educational has just completed arrangements to distribute another series of twenty-four single reel Cameo Comedies during the season of 1923-24.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

The Oregon Trail, Universal

"Victory" is the eighteenth and final chapter of the Oregon Trail. In it Jean is rescued by his faithful Indian friend and thus upsets the plans of Coulier and Lewis. Coulier seeks revenge and inflames the Indians so that they attack the white settlers, killing many and burning the buildings. Jean sees the attack and sends for the aid of troops who come rushing to the rescue. Jean and Rosita are then married. There is plenty of action in this episode and should bring the story to a satisfactory ending for all who have followed it.

Lonesome Luck, Universal

"Lonesome Luck" is a typical western two-reeler featuring Jack Daugherty and is supplied with all of the characteristic action usually found in this type of picture. The plot is good and holds the interest and it moves swiftly along to a good climax.

Taking Orders, Universal

This two-reel comedy features Baby Peggy in a combined cafe and dental establishment. Peggy works with her father, who is a dentist and sees that most of her customers in the cafe go to him for repairs. There is a lot of fun, and the admirers of this little star will find much to their liking in this picture.

The Courtship of Miles Sandwich, Pathe

A two-reel burlesque made of this well-known tale affords some amusing situations. Snub Pollard is featured and he is ably assisted by Marie Mosquini. A father is questioned by his young sons, "Why is Thanksgiving?" and this leads to the details shown in the picture. It will get the laughs.

Tom, Dick and Harry, Pathe

This is one of the two-reel Range Rider pictures with Leo Maloney. The hero, in love with Peckham's daughter, finds it difficult to pursue the maiden of his choice owing to opposition expressed by her mother. Later when he recovers a sum of money that has been stolen from the future mother-in-law he finds the path more easily tread. The picture is active and should generally satisfy.

Fresh Eggs, Pathe

A one-reel Hal Roach comedy with Paul Parrott is made up mostly of the customary slapstick but will suffice to amuse. Strange as it might seem the eggs used in this picture refuse to break and thus is eliminated one of the favorite "stunts" of slapstick artists. The picture has its funny spots.

Haunted Valley, Pathe

The eighth episode of the Ruth Roland serial contains plenty of action. The heroine is released by her captors who force her to believe that the hero is responsible for her numerous perils. While in the valley she falls into a trap that slowly fills up with dry sand burying her beneath.

The Burglar Alarm, Pathe

The Aesops Film Fable shows Farmer Al Falfa swindled into purchasing a burglar alarm for his house by a traveling trickster. His peaceful home is invaded until it becomes necessary for him to install this appliance which the salesman has heretofore been unable to make him buy.

Pathe Review No. 25

In this reel there is a section called "The Lens Liar" that proves effectively that cameras do sometimes lie. Familiar views are taken and by means of double printing many odd effects are made. There are also some glimpses of the desert people and their camels. The Pathecolor is "Carthage."

Mixed Trails, Educational

This is one of the Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales. As set forth in the note it is "A tale of the West, told without the aid of a pair of hair pants or a subtitle. And only a wee bit of shooting." There are some excellent shots of the rugged western country and an interesting story is enacted.

Selecting—Booking—Playing—the Picture

The Last Moment

Goldwyn Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Jack Boyle. Scenario by J. C. Miller. Director, J. Parker Reade. Cameraman, J. O. Taylor. Running Time, Seventy Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Hercules Napoleon Cameron Henry Hull
Alice Winthrop Doris Kenyon
"The Finn" Louis Wolheim
Harry Gaines Louis Calhoun
"Big Mike" William Nally
Danny Mickey Bennett
Pat Rooney Harry Allen
Mr. Winthrop Donald Hall
Bartender Danny Hayes
"The Thing" Jerry Peterson
Butler Robert Hazelton

Hercules Napoleon Cameron, better known to his acquaintances as "Nap," is a book worm, whose courage does not correspond to his heroic names. In company with his sweetheart, Alice Winthrop, he goes to a waterfront dive to bring home the drunken father of a crippled lad he has befriended. Alice, Nap and a friend named Harry Gaines are shanghaied aboard a schooner. The captain, a brutal Finn, puts the men to work and gives Alice to understand that she is his especial property. He further terrorizes his captives by showing them a cage containing a monstrous ape. During a storm the ape breaks out, attacks and destroys the captain and crew. Nap, brought face to face with death threatening the girl he loves, develops a heroic streak. They sight land and take to the water. The ape follows and Nap struggles with him. After a fight, a huge abalone seizes the ape and finishes him. Nap and Alice reach shore safely and she realizes that he is worthy of her affection.

"I want to make yer flesh creep!" said the Fat Boy in the Pickwick Papers, a motto which director J. Parker Reade evidently adopted for his own when he set about the making of "The Last Moment." And we'll say that he succeeded brilliantly. This sea yarn of the monster "Thing," a sort of sublimated ape, which joyously mutilates and thoroughly eliminates the captain bold and crew of the schooner upon which Hercules Napoleon Cameron and the girl of his heart are shanghaied, is a "creeper" for fair, which piles thrills up with reckless abandon, keeps its suspense as finely tightened as a violin string and winds up with a peach of a climax, when the erstwhile timid hero, suddenly turned fighting man, battles successfully for the lives of self and sweetheart with a blood-lustful beast in the ocean's swirling waves.

Naturally this kind of thing is bound to be a bit grisly in spots, but it is probable that even the most nervous patrons will find a fearful delight in following the adventures of hero and heroine aboard the outlaw ship. For the picture is admirably directed, faultless in technique and mightily convincing with its stark, melodramatic realism. Nor are there wanting a few touches of comedy here and there to lighten matters, the plot also possesses the all too rare quality of originality, and to sum up—"The Last Moment" may be set down as bully good entertainment, fit to serve as a stellar attraction of unlimited box office possibilities in any theatre.

Henry Hull scores a pronounced hit in the role of "Nap" Cameron. His interpretation of the meek student who conquers his natural cowardice in the presence of impending death and proves himself very much man, is remarkable for its versatility and artistic polish. He is ably seconded by Doris Kenyon, who figures as an extremely alluring heroine.

Louis Wolheim plays the part of the brutal captain with immense energy and forceful appeal; and smooth, consistent support is rendered by the other members of a capital cast.

The scene where Alice confesses her love to Nap, and the former weakling is transformed into a gladiator of grim resolve, stands out as one of the best situations in the picture, although, of course, the most momentous thrill is achieved during the combat between hero and ape, when the monster is finally dragged below the sea's surface by an abalone. Incidentally, the work of Jerry Peterson, who essays the difficult role of the ape, deserves praiseworthy mention.

The deep sea photography is fascinating and unique, there are many fine marine shots and the camera achievements throughout add to the film's artistic lure. For exploitation devices, a ballyhoo including a man dressed up as a huge ape naturally suggests itself and stress should be laid on the constant succession of thrills as well as the excellence of the cast.

Railroaded

Universal Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Margaret Bryant. Scenario by Charles Kenyon. Director, Edmund Mortimer. Cameraman, Allen Davey. Running Time, Fifty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Richard Ragland Herbert Rawlinson
Joan Dunster Esther Ralston
Hugh Dunster Alfred Fisher
Judge Garbin David Torrence
Foster Lionel Belmore
Corton Mike Donlon
Bishop Selby Herbert Fortier

Judge Garbin's son Richard, is driven into crooked ways through the severe methods utilized by his father, one of England's most prominent jurists, in rearing him. Richard undergoes a jail sentence. One of his pals, who has been betrayed by a man named Corton, dies in prison and Richard vows to the dead man's wife that he will avenge her husband. Richard escapes and under the name of Ragland enters society. At Bishop Selby's house he encounters his father, who recognizes him. Later at his father's house he promises to reform. The judge proposes that his son must undergo a penance by serving out the rest of his sentence under prison rules in the home of a friend, Hugh Dunster. Richard complies, meets and falls in love with Joan Dunster. She discovers him undergoing punishment for breaking a rule and learns the whole story. Later, Richard finds Corton. His Pal's wife insists that Richard must kill the stool pigeon, but relents when Joan pleads with her and releases him from his oath. Richard and Joan face a happy future together.

This picture gets off to a good start in that it appears to give promise of some intensely dramatic stuff to come and slumps horribly after it gets fairly under way. The hero is first seen taking an oath of vengeance on a dastardly stool pigeon beside the coffin containing the remains of his deceased chum, who it appears was "railroaded" to death in consequence of the betrayer's sinister activities. Hereafter, the said betrayer, one Corton, bobs up now and then wearing a look of haggard dismay, but hero Richard doesn't corner him until the final reel, when killing Corton means that the slayer must lose his sweetheart and be branded as a murderer. The widow of the dead man releases her husband's pal from his vow and all ends happily, with the lovers taking ship to commence life in another country.

It is all very unreal and unconvincing. Most of the plot is taken up with Richard Ragland's reconciliation with his father, the stern judge, and his submission to the old gent's edict that he must serve out the sentence which he cut short by escaping from jail, in a friend's house, working under exact prison rules and being punished whenever he fails to make good. The scene in which the hero's keeper tortures him by tying him in a cramped position to a bed, to be discovered by his sweetheart in a fainting condition, is so wildly absurd that the effect is purely farcical. "Railroaded" is full of unconscious comedy—the sort which develops when situations intended by author and director to be taken seriously appeal only to the spectators' sense of humor. The continuity is ragged and interest strictly limited.

Herbert Rawlinson walks through the film, a peculiarly automatic kind of hero who moves swiftly, poses with painful frequency and utterly fails to arouse sympathy. It looks as though the star felt that the role was too heavy a handicap to struggle with and merely resigned himself to the worst. Esther Ralston has little to do as Joan Dunster, but appears pretty, Mike Donlin sneaks around furtively and without enthusiasm as the wretched Corton, and the support is mediocre.

The photography is good and includes some pleasing exteriors. Considered as a box office asset "Railroaded" must be listed as of exceedingly doubtful value. In exploiting it the best plan is to play up the name of the star in localities where Rawlinson has a following, but the less said about the plot the better.

Divorce

F. B. O. Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Andrew Bennison. Director, Chester Bennett. Cameraman, Jack MacKenzie. Running Time, Sixty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Jane Parker Jane Novak
 Jim Parker John Bowers
 George Read James Corrigan
 Mrs. George Read Edythe Chapman
 Gloria Gayne Margaret Livingston
 Townsend Perry Freeman Wood
 Tom Tucker George McGuire
 Winthrop Avery George Fisher
 Dick Parker Phillippe De Lacy

Jane Parker, her husband and their little son live happily in their cottage home. Wealth has not brought happiness to her parents and her mother obtains a divorce, something which the younger pair are sure can never befall them. Jim Parker is employed by the firm of which father-in-law is head. He is promoted, makes money, they move to a palatial home, but Jim gradually yields to the attractions of a gayer life, becomes entangled with an adventuress and Jane sees her husband drifting away from her, until he finally demands that they separate. She seeks the assistance of her father. The older man discharges Jim, who finds the world suddenly turned cold, is unable to get another situation, sees his folly, comes back to Jane and is forgiven.

Here we again meet the ambitious young husband who cannot stand success and neglects his wife and home in consequence of the attraction a swifter pace has for him. The plot is a rather familiar but at the same time popular one, these stories of domestic disturbances, straying spouses, lure of bright lights and fascinating females, with a reconciliation at the last and peace restored, making a strong appeal to the average person, perhaps because almost everybody has known or heard of similar cases in actual life, to a greater or lesser degree.

There is every reason to believe that "Divorce" will please a majority of patrons, whose sympathy will, however, be directed solely to the young wife and child. Jane Novak is very sweet and winsome in the role of Jane Parker, quietly dignified, never indulging in unnecessary hysterical outbursts, but so effective are her suggestions of repressed emotion that one cannot help feeling the heart breaking that underlies it all.

John Bowers has a disagreeable part to play as the husband, which he makes as convincing as possible, but the best actor in the world could not make anything more than a selfish simpleton out of the character of Jim Parker. Margaret Livingston is an attractive "vamp" type as Gloria Gayne. James Corrigan gives a clean-cut performance as old man Read and the support as a whole is excellent. Among the best scenes in the picture are these which offer the mother and child as central figures, the former's devotion to the little one and her scapegrace husband is the sort of human touch which can always be depended upon to sway an audience, although an impression remains that Mr. Jim Parker has altogether too much the best of matters in the long run.

The photography includes a number of handsome interiors, and good lighting governs the entire production. The film's title can be employed to advantage in exploitation work and the same of the star should also prove of value in advertising it.

The Sheriff of Sun Dog

Arrow Film Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, W. C. Tuttle. Scenario by Daniel Whitcomb. Director, Ben Wilson. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

"Silent" Davidson William Fairbanks
 "Harp" Harris Robert McKenzie
 Scott Martin Jim Welch
 Jean Martin Florence Gilbert
 Jeff Sedley William White
 Pete Kane Ashton Dearholt

In a small western town the old-time feud between the sheep raisers and cattlemen is vindictively pursued. Old Scott Martin is a sheep rancher and his enemies threaten his life. The Sheriff, known as "Silent" Davidson, has shown himself friendly to Martin and makes no secret of the fact that he intends to protect him. A plot is woven against Martin and the sheriff. The old man is found desperately wounded by Davidson and the latter, accused of attacking him, is put in jail. The old man recovers his senses sufficiently to inform his daughter, Jean, who the assailant was, but she is also seized and imprisoned. After many complications and adventures, Davidson obtains freedom for himself and the girl, proves their innocence, overcomes his foes and wins her.

The lure of Western melodrama never seems to lose its hold upon that large class of movie patrons who finds pleasure in watching the hero of a border tale ride, shoot and make love with equal dexterity and success, and in "The Sheriff of Sun Dog" there is practically no limit to the valor and resource of the canny "Silent" Davidson, who fills the principal role of the story. It is the sort of part with which William Fairbanks has become thoroughly identified in the minds of his many admirers, and these latter will not be disappointed by their favorite's work.

There is bound to be a certain sameness in the construction of plots dealing with deeds of adventure in the far West, but while this picture makes no claim to any great originality of design it is so well directed and alive with action that it holds its interest from start to finish. The riding "stunts" are good, one in particular, when the agile star springs from a bridge, lands accurately upon the back of a horse as the animal speeds swiftly by—and gallops to safety—is as neat a thing as Fairbanks has ever done during his spectacular screen career. The manner in which he extricates himself and the heroine from their bonds and the scrap he puts up afterward in her defense are incidents quite up to the best mark of Western "moel" tradition and the suspense is well maintained until a happy climax is attained.

Fairbanks is supported by a capable cast, Florence Gilbert figuring as an attractive heroine, Ashton Dearholt playing the villain with plenty of dash and energy, while consistent performances are given by other members of the company. The photography is rich in colorful exteriors and the lighting is adequate. The name of the star can be set forth to good advantage in exploiting the picture where he possesses a strong following, aided by the usual lobby display of stills, weapons, Western cowboy outfits, etc. The picture is well suited to the needs of second class and neighborhood houses.

The Shock

Universal Photoplay in Seven Parts. Author, William D. Pelley. Scenario by Charles Kenyon. Director, Lambert Hillier. Cameraman, Dwight Warren. Running Time, Eighty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Wilse Dilling Lon Chaney
 Gertrude Hadley Virginia Valli
 Jack Cooper Jack Mower
 The Captain Walter Long
 Bill John Beck
 Olaf Wismer Harry Devere
 Anne Vincent Christine Mayo
 John Cooper, Sr. Henry Barrows
 Mischa Hadley William Welsh

Wilse Dilling, cripple, is a member of a gang of crooks of which a woman known as Queen Anne is the leader. A man named Hadley, banker in a small town, has been victimized by Anne to such an extent that he resorts to embezzling money in order to satisfy her. Anne sends Dilling to spy upon Hadley. He meets and falls in love with Hadley's daughter Gertrude. Dilling resolves to free Gertrude's father from his entanglement and blows open a safe which contains the records which would incriminate him. Gertrude is crippled by the explosion and Dilling pays for an operation which cures her. From San Francisco Anne sends a message offering the alternative of a sum of money or the possession of Gertrude. The girl is abducted and placed in a Chinese resort and Dilling follows to rescue her. Under Gertrude's influence he renounces all connection with the underworld. They are both in Queen Anne's power when the great earthquake occurs through which they escape the consequences of defying her. A skillful surgeon restores Dilling to normal shape and he weds Gertrude.

An uncommonly realistic, well directed story of the underworld, "The Shock" registers as a melodrama of compelling interest. Its sentimental moments are touching without being mawkish, there are thrills galore, and if at times a bit gruesome, the sympathetic appeal is sufficiently strong to balance an occasional lapse into the realm of the morbid. The photography throughout is excellent, the views of old Chinatown as it used to be are prolific in colorful scenes and the earthquake climax is filmed with tremendously spectacular success.

Lon Chaney's work in the role of the crippled crook, Wilse Dilling, stands out as a really astonishing performance. Mr. Chaney has earned a reputation second to none on the screen as an apt delineator of parts requiring artistic skill of the highest order, and that he lives up to it in the present instance is an assertion which will not be denied by the most exacting of critics. His ability to counterfeit deformity is extraordinary and so intensely vivid and lifelike are Dilling's hampered, halting movements that the impressionable spectator actually suffers in sympathy with the unfortunate cripple and feels positive relief when the victim is cured in the earthquake finale.

Virginia Valli is a charming heroine. Physically beautiful, she is also an artist to her finger tips and her impersonation of Gertrude is remarkable for its wistful appeal and emotional strength. Adequate support is given the principals by the remainder of the company.

Well produced underworld pictures are always popular with the masses and "The Shock" need not fear comparison with the best films of this type. It is a good attraction for all classes of theatres, big and small and should make money for the exhibitor. In exploiting the feature, stress should be laid on the spectacular earthquake scenes, the many thrills and the hit scored by Lon Chaney in the leading role.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

 Georgie Bassett Newton Hall
 Marjorie Jones Gertrude Messinger
 Mr. Schofield Rockliffe Fellows
 Mrs. Schofield Gladys Brockwell
 Margaret Schofield Mary Philbin
 Robert Williams Gareth Hughes
 Deacon Bitts William V. Mong

Penrod and Sam organize a neighborhood secret society and include all of the children except Georgie Bassett and Rodney Bitts. The parents get together and compel the youngsters to take in Georgie Bassett who is regarded as the sissy of the bunch. After being put through a strenuous initiation Georgie is a much sorer boy. Penrod's best friend is Duke, his little dog, and when Duke is run over and killed in the street the children give him an elaborate funeral and bury him in the play ground. Penrod's father sells the ground to Rodney Bitt's father and young Rodney refuses to allow Penrod to come over to play there any longer. Penrod is heavily burdened with his sorrow and his father finally purchases back the land and gives it to the boy for his own.

This is unmistakably a comedy drama of high merit. It is delightfully refreshing throughout and for the majority of patrons who are clamoring for something different it should prove to be a decided hit. The story itself follows no particular plot, but instead is a series of events in a boy's life. These have been naturally enacted and afford some rich comedy situations and every so often takes a little tug at the heart-strings. The subtitles are mostly choice quotations of the author's and a great deal of humor is injected into the film through this means. Little Ben Alexander makes an appealing figure as Penrod. The sincerity in which this young lad goes through his performance is a real treat for the audience. In fact all of the children in the play do remarkably well and the success of the picture should rightfully be credited to them. Rockliffe Fellows as Mr. Schofield and Gladys Brockwell as Mrs. Schofield are both pleasing in their roles. The remainder of the cast give excellent support. This picture is one that will appeal to men and women and boys and girls of every station in life. It is human and exceedingly satisfying in every respect.

Children of Dust

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Old Archer Bert Woodruff
 Terwilliger Johnnie Walker
 Helen Raymond Frankie Lee
 Harvey Livermore Pauline Garon
 Terwilliger's step-father Josephine Adair
 Lloyd Hughes
 Newton Hall
 George Nichols

Old Archer, caretaker of Gramercy Park, New York City learns to love children after he is arrested for having beaten young Terwilliger, an urchin who had stolen a flower for his dead mother. Terwilliger later adopts him as a father. As a child young Terwilliger falls in love with Helen Raymond who comes to the park to play. Her wealthy parents have already planned a future marriage for her to Harvey Livermore. Old Archer tells the boy that it is useless to try and win her. As time passes the three children become staunch friends. Some years later war is declared and Harvey enlists. Terwilliger is forced to stay behind to take care of his old father. He is drafted though and on the other side he saves Harvey's life. Harvey returns and reports that Ter-williger has been killed. But, Helen and Archer know that he will return and he does to claim Helen for his bride.

Frank Borzage, who directed "Humoresque" has scored once again with "Children of the Dust." This picture carries an appeal that will be far reaching as it is one that readily wins its way deep into the heart. The child actors during the first half of the picture present a bit of entertainment that to lovers of children will be a rare treat. Bert Woodruff's interpretation of Old Archer is an excellent piece of acting and he rises to great heights in some of his scenes, especially so at the time he applies for enlistment in the service. Johnnie Walker and Lloyd Hughes play the roles of the two boys after they have grown up. Pauline Garon is attractive as Helen Livermore. Little Frankie Lee gives an earnest performance as young Terwilliger and Josephine Adair is the little girl. Newton Hall does Harvey, as the child, with credit. The production is a heart drama through and through and there should be no difficulty in drawing in the same crowds who succumbed to the spell of "Humoresque."

Gopher Prairie, small Wisconsin town, is a disappointment to Carol Kennicott, bride of Dr. Will Kennicott, a lover of his home town and well thought of there. To Carol, filled with nebulous ideas and a feverish aestheticism, Gopher Prairie is a dull, drab place whose inhabitants go smugly about believing their town and themselves the very ultimate to which "modern, progressive" thought and action have attained. Her husband's friends bore her and in her search for something of the more lofty she strikes up a companionship with a chap named Eric Valborg, a lover of the arts. In due time Carol is talked about and when young Valborg leaves town his father believes Carol responsible for this "waywardness" on the boy's part. The unreasonable Valborg senior is responsible for a wave of indignation against Carol and in the midst of this storm, in which a mob invades her home, her husband comes to the rescue and the ending shows Carol more content with her lot as the wife of the conscientious Kennicott.

Screening "Main Street" and getting away with it is an achievement of which any producer may be proud. Therefore let us pay our humble tribute to Warner Brothers, producers; Harry Beaumont, director; Julien Josephson, scenarist; and Florence Vidor, Monte Blue and the other members of the brilliant cast.

For all its tremendous sales value, its "savage attack" upon our Kultur, etc., and so-forth, "Main Street" had little in the way of a story for the scenarists to get his hands upon. Under the circumstances the producers have adhered to the novel in a remarkable way and in the opinion of this reviewer the digressions which do occur are the very bone and sinew of the picture.

However, when all is said and done, it is Florence Vidor's charming personality and capable acting which gives Carol Kennicott life and vitality. Carol is the show. Monte Blue, of course, does heroic work as Dr. Will Kennicott and helps things along mightily, but "Main Street" is the story of Carol Kennicott. In addition to these two excellent players there are many others whose work in the picture merits ringing praise, but they are so numerous and all the performances are so fine that a blanket certification of "excellent cast" is admissible.

"Main Street" has big exploitation possibilities and a "made in advance" draw if any picture ever had. The fact that it was a best seller as a book, should have a lot to do with its sales value as a film and on its own account the photoplay has the ability to satisfy picture goers whether they have read the book or not. It is perfectly safe to offer it as a picturization of the novel and as a screen play providing romance, dramatic force and amusement. The cast may be featured strongly with insistence upon the fact that the characters are real and human. The settings, photography and atmosphere of the picture are of an exceptional order.

Press Comments

American—About Ben Turpin—may his tribe increase—surely has the time of his gay young life in "The Shriek of Araby." Times—Sufficiently ludicrous to tickle the risibles of most people. Journal—The theme of the picture offers unlimited possibilities for having the grandest time both on the screen and in front of it. Sun and Globe—If you like Ben Turpin as almost everybody does, then "The Shriek of Araby" will be a scream. Eve. World—

If you enjoy laughing, take a trip to the Capitol and watch Ben's eyes and watch him ride a camel. It's worth the price, no matter what they charge. Telegram—Ben has never been so funny as in this Mack Sennett Burlesque of the desert film picture.

American—The scenery is cool, the photography excellent. Sun and Globe—Entirely composed of sure-fire movie ingredients and lacks any pretense of artistic worth. Therefore the production will be successful. Eve. World—Gives this talented young actress a real chance to play the sort of a part she seems most suited to. Telegram—A strong dramatic production and has a notable cast.

2. Mark Strand Topical Review
3. Main Street Frolic
4. Main Street (Warner Bros.)

Press Comments

American—Proved palatable and entertaining. World—All the physical ingredients were there; the mental kick and savage protest were absolutely lacking. Tribune—Made for residents of Gopher Prairie all over the world, and they are going to love it. Journal—Up to the last five or six minutes of its length, is one of the most significant character studies that the screen has had in months. Sun and Globe—An admirable picture. The types are perfect. It is beautifully acted, and it follows the book to a greater extent than Sinclair Lewis had any reason to hope for. Eve. World—Frankly, we like "Main Street" as a photoplay. Mail—Second rate entertainment at best. Telegram.—One of the most interesting cinema's of the season. It is not only true to life but it also has a rich vein of humor and through the story runs a very pretty romance.

CRANDALL LETS LLOYD COMEDY SELL ITSELF

Washington, D. C.—It is not very often that the exhibitor gets a picture which he believes will sell itself better than he himself can sell it by exploitation methods. But its a grand and glorious opportunity when it comes. Harry Crandall and his staff assistants decided that "Safety Last" was one of those rare birds which would do its own selling after a pre-view of the picture. Therefore all exploitation was passed up and only about average newspaper advertising space used to herald the presentation at the Metropolitan Theatre.

Newspaper displays featured a personal message signed by Harold Lloyd declaring that no trick photography was used, and the opening gun was not fired until the Friday preceding the Sunday opening of the run. This was a two-column ad in which the Metropolitan announced the presentation of a picture that was "Bigger and Better than 'Grandma's Boy' and 'Dr. Jack' combined." The decision to let "Safety Last" ride on its own momentum was proved a judicious one when the Sunday attendance over-taxed the capacity of the Metropolitan, which seats 2,000.

FEATURES TRIAL MARRIAGE INCIDENT

Allentown, Pa.—Manager Jim Newkirk of the Colonial and Eli M. Orowitz, Paramount Exploiteer, used a herald modeled after a "trial marriage contract" to exploit the situation in "The Glimpses of the Moon" dealing with the agreement between Susan Branch and Nick Lansing to marry for one year with an extension clause should both parties agree. This situation has good interest value but is rather difficult to get over. The solution seems to have been found by Newkirk and Orowitz in this inexpensive herald.

TRAVELING TRAILER SHOW

New York.—Something entirely effective in exploitation was created in conjunction with the showing of "Down to the Sea in Ships" at the Griswold, Troy, N. Y., Albany Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., and the Opera House, Kingston, N. Y. This comprised a small portable projection machine mounted on a truck with a small screen and everything necessary for a miniature moving picture show consisting of a four hundred foot trailer. J. E. Firnkoes, Hodkinson representative in this section, reported that large crowds were drawn by the show. In one place in particular a carnival was in town. Mr. Firnkoes took advantage of this fact and planted the truck near the grounds and drew large audiences.

REPEATS "MAD LOVE" STUNT

Pittsburgh.—Seven hundred window displays and as many store tie-ups were secured as co-operation for the showing of "Mad Love" when that show played Rowland and Clarke's Blackstone Theatre in Pittsburgh. The arrangement was effected by Goldwynner Bill Robson and was similar to a campaign for this show which he recently staged in Baltimore.

The Hermes Dairy Company sent out letters urging their dealers to feature Mad Love Sundaes and special window strips looking in with the theatre.

As a result every soda fountain in Pittsburgh featured the Mad Love Sundae. Despite the hot weather the Blackstone did a satisfactory business.

APPEAL TO BASEBALL FANS

New York.—Nearly 75,000 baseball schedules of the three New York teams, the Yanks, Giants, and Dodgers, were given out in Keith, Moss, and Proctor theatres in New York City as exploitation for the baseball picture "Trifling with Honor."

Many of the houses invited the neighborhood baseball teams, from public and high schools, to see the picture. Others used baseball scoreboards in the lobbies on which the daily scores of the New York teams were posted.

LAUNCH DRIVE FOR MERRY-GO-ROUND

New York.—Universal exploitation men have started the whirl for "The Merry-Go-Round," considered by Universal the most ambitious production attempted to date by that concern. The initial twist was given when Marc Lachman, Universal Home Office Exploiteer, who is in charge of the campaign on the picture, introduced a tie-up with the New York taxi companies by means of a rate card with the following trick wording:

"You will save time if you go-round in our cabs. You will enjoy life more if you see 'Merry-Go-Round,' the picture that will make the World go round." Lachman has also arranged distribution for luncheon menus with display headings reading "Try a Norman Kerry and Mary Philbin 'Merry Go Round' sandwich."

OUT OF TOWN MAIL GOES WELL IN TOLEDO

Toledo, O.—A publicity stunt which proved valuable in the campaign for "Souls for Sale" at the Valentine Theatre in this city, was the mailing of 1500 postal card views of Cleveland with the message written by hand by business college students—"Am having a fine time in Cleveland. Have just seen 'Souls for Sale.' Be sure and see it when it comes to Toledo." The cards were mailed from Cleveland four days in advance of the opening at the Valentine.

TURN LOOSE THE ESSAY FLOOD

San Francisco.—Despite the wide circulation of the American Magazine, Bruce Barton, Dr. Frank Crane and sundry other editorial boosters of the "it can be done and here's how" school of applied philosophy, there appears to be some question as to just exactly what makes a "Go-Getter." "What are they and why" asked Manager Partington of the Granada Theatre and Paramount exploiteer Wayland H. Taylor while campaigning for "The Go-Getters." They asked the burning question through the columns of a newspaper, which entered the stunt spiritedly and in "go-getter" fashion, offering prizes to the writer of the essay giving the best description of a "Go-Getter." The replies came in in bushel baskets.

SHOE MEN FALL FOR "SOULS"

Hamilton, O.—Fred Myer, manager of the Palace Theatre in Hamilton, Ohio, and Goldwynner H. T. Snowden of the Cincinnati exchange, interested the shoe merchants in that city in the showing of "Souls for Sale." The ten dealers took a page of advertising in the local newspaper. The heading across the top of the page read: "The following merchants have soles for sale. The Palace Theatre has 'Souls for Sale.'

CHICAGO JUDGE SHOWS BRASS IN COURT

Chicago.—Clever exploitation of "Brass" reaped a brilliant crop of publicity during the showing of this Warner Brothers feature at the Chicago and State Street Theatres during the week of May 28.

Three days before the picture's Western release, Mr. G. H. Dummond, the Warner Brothers representative, threw out his opening barrage, by using "Brass" as a means of uniting couples aground on matrimonial reefs. Judge William L. Morgan consented to show the film to several cases. As a result, four couples were reunited and saved from divorce.

The newspapers gave generously of space, considering it important in that it was the first time a judge had ever used a photograph for such propoganda purposes.

This exploitation stunt is similar to the one successfully realized in New York, March 6th last, when Judge Weil transformed his court into a showhouse before an audience of divorce applicants and non-support cases.

FINDS NEW ALLY FOR CHILDREN'S MATINEE

Davenport, Ia.—Ralph Blank, manager of the Garden Theatre, found a new ally to assist him in putting on special children's shows when he placed a morning matinee of "Daddy" in the hands of J. H. C. Peterson Sons Co., department store, instead of a newspaper. Tickets for the show could be obtained only through the boys' department of the store. Advertising of the event was done by slide and trailers in the theatre. The store did some good exploitation and carried the event in its newspaper ads.

REGISTER FOR MOVIE CAREER

Huntington, W. Va.—A "Do you want to get into the movies?" stunt arranged for by Goldwynner H. T. Snowden and C. E. Tipton, manager of the State theatre, with the Huntington Herald-Dispatch, differed somewhat from others which have been used with "Souls for Sale."

Girls and young women desirous of a screen career were asked to write their names, during a period of ten days, in a book kept in the lobby of the State theatre. This book, it was stated, would be sent to Miss Boardman and she would send a personal message of advice to each young woman registering in the book.

TEACHERS LIKE "ROBIN HOOD"

Hazleton, Pa.—"Robin Hood" went across for a week's run at the Feeley Theatre with fine attendance, due to the enterprise of Manager M. H. Goodman in making the educational value of the film appear supreme. He ran special matinees for the 7800 school children of the town at ten cents admission and announced that where teachers appeared with their classes, they got in free. The matinees helped swell the totals for the week's business to a gratifying extent.

TIE-UP FOR LICHTMAN FILM

New York.—The Al Lichtman Corporation has arranged a publisher's tie-up with Brentano for the Preferred Picture, "Daughters of the Rich," a Gasnier production adapted from the well known novel by Edgar Saltus, who is advertised as President Harding's favorite author. Jackets illustrated with stills from the film version are now being prepared.

THE DOPE WORKED

Bethlehem, Pa.—The Grand Opera House made a profitable venture out of the showing of "Life in Chinatown" through displays of opium smoking outfits in its lobby and by featuring lectures on the life of the addicts of the drug by well known speakers.

When it comes to lobby displays and stunts the Southern showmen seem to lead the field by a noticeable margin. And in support of the theory the above photo of the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., and others on this page, are submitted. All the thrills of Harold Lloyd's "Safety Last," are pretty well suggested in the novel marquee display which Manager Albert Hill made for the Pathe comedy.

A lobby display for the Principal Pictures offering "The World's a Stage," used by an enterprising exhibitor in Mexico City. The set was decorated in the best exhibitor manner with palms, flowering vines and illuminated windows.

Cutouts and an abundance of small flags featured the display for Hodgkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships," at the Court Theatre, Wheeling, W. Va., where the Elmer Clifton picture made such a hit that it was commented upon in an editorial in the Wheeling Intelligencer. A good drive for the picture was staged in Wheeling, the campaign being handled by John Wingerer, house manager, and Jack Edwards, Hodgkinson representative.

Another corking display by Albert Hill, manager of the Imperial, Jacksonville, Fla., for Paramount's "Prodigal Daughters." This has a great summertime appeal to recommend it in addition to its novelty.

Howard Kingsmore, manager of the Howard, Atlanta, used circus methods in exploiting Warner Brothers screen version of "Main Street," as the banners and boards in the above photo make plain.

The Metro campaign for the New York Capitol's showing of "Trailing African Wild Animals," was marked by window displays in great number and variety. Above are three typical examples which show considerable ingenuity in adapting the subject to the merchant's display. At the left is the layout in the window of A. Jaeckel and Company on Fifth Avenue, with fur garments especially designed and made for Mrs. Martin Johnson, co-producer with her husband of the films of wild life in Africa. The centre photograph shows a display of Holeproof Hosiery in which enlargements from the films are tied up with the advertising slogans of this brand. On the right is a drug store window featuring face lotions and cold cream. In addition to these there were displays in radio stores and the window of the Corona Typewriter company.

A drug store window displaying the presentation of First National's "Skin Deep," at the Temple Theatre, Hamilton, Ont. The Henry Cleave drawing for the paper on this production was featured as a cutout in this arrangement.

"Kid Kandy," is a novelty introduced in New York City as the display above shows, a window in Gimbel Brothers' department store. It features Jackie Coogan and will be employed as a special item for campaign purposes with the forthcoming Metro offering "Long Live the King."

The Girl's own bar-room was the setting for the prologue staged in connection with the presentation of First National's "The Girl of the Golden West," at the Chicago Theatre, Chicago. About thirty people appeared in the sketch, which was a combination of dance, melody and melodramatic action. The music theme as "The Girl of the Golden West," song and as shown in the photo at the left above, there was plenty of "atmosphere." At the right is the prologue for Maurice Tourneur's "The Isle of Lost Ships," at Newman's Kansas City Theatre. The back drop corresponded more or less in detail to the press sheet cuts and stills from the picture. An orchestra clad in pirate costume played jazz.

Thomas D. Soriero, managing director of the Century, Baltimore, goes in rather extensively for prologues and has produced operatic impressions with all the settings and arias with considerable success. The photo above shows his presentation for Metro's "Hearts Aflame."

Ed Hyman put on two stage numbers in connection with his offering of First National's "The Isle of Lost Ships," at the Brooklyn Mark Strand. One was "atmosphere" and the other had timely value and celebrated Memorial Day. At the left is Hyman's stage settings for a soloist. As an impression of the scenes of the island of wreckage revealed in the feature film, the setting is markedly good. At the right is a patriotic offering in which sailors and soldiers appeared with Civil War veterans before a huge flag.

Edward K. Hoffman, house manager of the New Piedmont Theatre, Oakland, Calif., got some whole-hearted cooperation from the kiddies and the firemen when he presented the F. B. O. production "The Third Alarm." The fire department furnished an antique hose cart and big siren, which was mounted on the roof of the theatre.

A bus-load of youngsters from the St. Vincent's Asylum, Washington, D. C., on their way to Loew's Columbia, to see Metro's "Soul of the Beast."

First National's "Within the Law," was worked into an anti-speeding drive by city authorities when it played the Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco.

Wesley Barry and Boy Scouts at the Wesley Barry Near East Relief benefit performance of Warner Brothers "Rags to Riches," at the Raymond Theatre, Pasadena, Calif. Admission to the show was at the rate of a can of condensed milk.

Where other cities advertised for the "homeliest girl," Hamilton, Ont., actually produced her and used her for ballyhoo on First National's "Minnie."

The entire student body turned out to see Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships," when it was shown at a special performance for Public School 43 in New York at Bim's West End Theatre. Mr. Bimberg entertained big crowds at this special show and created a big stir generally in the neighborhood.

The St. Paul Firemen's Drum Corps made its first appearance when the whole outfit attended a benefit performance of Goldwyn's "Gimme," at the Tower Theatre.

The MODERN THEATRE

Building — Equipping — Operating

THE day of the pitch-dark picture house has passed. Audiences like the houses where they do not have to grope their way. Proper lighting eliminates the gloomy atmosphere, allows the patrons to seat themselves without annoyance, and makes the theatre more attractive. But in order to present brilliant pictures in a semi-lighted house every precaution must be taken to avoid losses of light in the projection machine and to utilize the radiation from the light source in the most advantageous way.

Our Scientific Bureau has, as a result of special studies of the problem, developed the new Cinephor condensing system which works with much higher efficiency than the type usually used. This new condensing system consists of two elements, the front one having a spherical concave curve combined with a parabolic convex curve while the rear element is a plano convex lens of superior quality; this element being changed to suit the conditions, such as the use of a regular or high intensity arc, and the focus of the projecting lens.

Exhaustive tests that have been made show:

1. An increase in illumination up to 25 percent depending on the kind of arc and operating conditions.
2. Even illumination over the entire field, that is, the brightness at the margin of the picture closely approximates that at the center.
3. Maximum illumination without "ghost" or dark spot in center of the field.
4. Greater latitude in fluctuation of arc without showing discoloration on the margins of the picture, caused by the fact that the condenser operates with a slightly larger spot on the aperture plate.

would result, if there were available a source of light that approximated the theoretical point source, if a condensing system were available which eliminated all spherical aberration, and if the mechanical construction and operating conditions could always be considered as fixed. In such an ideal case, the rays of light passing through all zone of the condensing lens would focus in one plane—the center of the projecting lens and the object, or film aperture, would be illuminated by a spot of light, just large enough to cover the diagonal of its opening, that would be of equal intensity over its entire area.

Since the usual type of condensing lens zones focus at different planes along the axis, as shown in Figure 2, where we still assume a theoretical point source of light.

As all known light sources possess considerable area, the condition found with the usual type of condensing system under actual operating conditions is more nearly represented by the drawing shown in Figure 3.

Such a condition means considerable loss of light and difficulty in producing a field upon the screen which is evenly illuminated and free from color or "ghosts."

By substituting the new Cinephor parabolic condenser for the usual from plano convex condenser, a condition is attained very closely approximating that shown by the drawing in Figure 4, being modified only because of mechanical construction of machine, focus of projecting lens, etc. What actually happens is that the focus of the condenser through the central zones is shortened, and lengthened through the marginal zones until the rays of light all focus within very small limits of one plane.

The series of photographs within illustrate what actually happens. In making these, a plate with two small holes spaced symmetrically to the center of the lens was placed over the face of the front condenser, so that the conjugate focal point of the rays of light from different zones could be readily located.

The increased efficiency of this Bausch & Lomb Cinephor condensing system is due primarily to the introduction of the parabolic curve of the front element, but in order to secure maximum results, it is necessary that the rear element be one with true plano and convex surfaces. Therefore, while this front element may be used with regular commercial plano convex condensers, we can guarantee its highest efficiency only with the complete system as we supply it. Both elements are made of a new heat resisting optical glass which has been especially developed for this purpose. Actual tests show that with ordinary precaution, the breakage factor will become a negligible one when using condensers made of this new glass.

Because of the many machines now in use, this condensing system has been made of a diameter (4 15/32") to conform to the standard with which these machines have been fitted. Practically no difficulty will be encountered in fitting them to all of the later types of machines, particularly, all of the machines having the removable condenser rings.

Every theatre owner should be interested in this new development and is fully justified in the additional expenditure, because by the use of the Cinephor condensing system, it is possible to have either an increase in illumination without additional current expense, or the same illumination with reduced current expense. Moreover, by using the Cinephor plano convex condenser as the rear element, the breakage factor and the attendant cost may be materially reduced. In addition, the screen illumination is more even, resulting in a uniformly better presentation of the picture.

The development of this corrected condensing system now makes it possible for us to offer a complete "Cinephor" optical system of the highest possible quality, namely, Cinephor projecting lenses and Cinephor condensing systems.

Users of Mazda lamp equipment will also be interested to know that a condensing system composed of two parabolic condensers has been developed for use with the 30 volt, 30 ampere Mazda lamp, by which an increase in illumination of approximately 50% is secured. As these require special mountings depending upon the type of machine to which they are to be fitted, the mountings should be secured through the distributor for that particular type of machine.

Figures 5 to 10, are uncorrected and show the result with two plano convex condensers. Figures 5a to 10a, are corrected and show the results when the Cinephor Condensing System replaces the ordinary system.

The line marked F shows the position the film would occupy for this particular set-up and the drawing of the projecting lens represents a Series II 5 3/4" focus Cinephor Projecting Lens.

In comparing these photographs, they should be compared in pairs and particular attention is called to the wide variation between the crossing point of the two beams in Figures 6 and 6a above, and Figures 9 and 9a below and to the fact that the entire beam passes through the objective in Figure 10a, while much of it is lost in Figure 10 and it will also be of unequal intensity.

In the corrected condenser, the distance between the images formed by the rays through these two zones is approximately 200 mm., while with the corrected condenser, this separation has been reduced to 50 mm. Figures 9 and 9a.

In the corrected system, all of the light passes through the objective and is uniform. Figure 10.

The Parabolic Condenser is always to be used as the front element with the strong convex parabolic curve facing the aperture plate.

The NEW SEASON PICTURES

The list of pictures herewith published are for release during the coming season 1923-24 and represent those companies which, up to the time of going to press, furnished their announcements for publication. Some companies are not therefore represented as their announcements were not ready.

Famous Players—50

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will present fifty productions in 1923-24, and these pictures, in the opinion of company executives, will absolutely top anything heretofore offered by Paramount.

Group 1, contains thirteen pictures, of its 1923-24 production-distribution schedule of fifty features. The thirteen pictures will be released weekly during August, September and October. They follow:

"The Purple Highway," with Madge Kennedy. Directed by Henry Kolker.

"The Love Piker," with Anita Stewart heading a special cast. E. Mason Hopper directed it.

"Hollywood," the James Cruze productions featuring more than fifty stars and other screen players.

"To the Last Man," a Zane Grey production supervised by the author himself. Richard Dix and Lois Wilson are featured.

"Lawful Larceny," with Hope Hampton, Nita Naldi, Conrad Nagel and Lew Cody in the cast. Allan Dwan directed it.

"The Silent Partner," with Owen Moore and Robert Edeson. Charles Maigne directed.

"The Cheat," a George Fitzmaurice production starring Pola Negri.

"All Must Marry," a Thomas Meighan vehicle directed by Alfred E. Green.

F. B. O.—30

Following an announcement of a program of thirty pictures for the coming season of 1923-1924, the Film Booking Offices this week announce that fourteen of that number will be released the first six months of the season starting in the Fall.

In addition to the two specials "Day-time Wives" and "Blow Your Own Horn," there will be released "Lights Out," a photo-drama adapted from the stage play written by Mann Page and Paul Dickey. The adaptation was made by Rex Taylor, and carries a cast headed by Ruth Stonehouse. Others in the cast are Walter McGrail, Marie Astaire, Theodore Von Eltz, Hank Mann, Fred Kelsey, Ben Hewlett, Mabel Van Buren, Harry Fenwick and Ben Deeley.

"Alimony," adapted from an original story by A. T. Locke, will follow "Lights Out." The picture is being directed by Chautard. The cast will consist of Grace Darmond, Ruby Miller, Warner Baxter, Jackie Saunders and Ralph Lewis.

"A Knight for a Day" will be the next picture released. The story is a western comedy-drama from the pen of William Wallace Cook, with Eddie Hearn as the featured player.

A Chester Bennett production, entitled "Rock of Ages," and featuring Jack Novak will follow.

"Born of a Cyclone" is a story written by Marion Burton, Charles Behan and Charles Stilson. The plot is laid in the Louisiana bayou country with Derclys Perdue selected for the featured role.

The eighth picture on the list is "Druscilla With a Million." The story is an adaptation from Elizabeth Cooper's book of the same title.

"Not For Publication," an original society drama, follows the "Druscilla" production.

"Flaming Souls" is a society drama by Marene Thompson. The story deals with a girl who loves a penniless youth who in turn loves another.

"Life, Liberty and—" is a prize fight western written by Wyndham Martin with George O'Hara listed for the featured role. This story originally appeared in Everybody's Magazine.

"Passionate Youth" is an adaptation from the Munsey magazine story, "Judith of Bohemia," and written by Coralie Stanton and Heath Hasken.

"Flaming Waters" is an original story written by Lloyd Sheldon and based on the oil fields of the West.

"The Legacy Lady" is a society drama story that appeared in the People's Home Journal and was written by Mabel Brown.

First National—65 to 70

First National's 1923-24 season will start July 2 and will include sixty-five to seventy pictures.

Twenty-nine of the titles—these to be published up to the end of January—have been selected and tentative dates have been set.

With one or two exceptions there is a picture provided for each week of the first seven months, the schedule calling for four pictures each in July, August, September and November, five each in October and December and three in January.

The announcement of Richard Walton Tully that he would bring "The Bird of Paradise" assures First National of a dramatic masterpiece in photoplay form. Mr. Tully wrote this play twelve years ago.

Under a recently signed contract Samuel Goldwyn will produce "Potash and Perlmutter" for First National release.

"The Bad Man" a play by Porter Emerson Browne, is awaiting First National production. "The Bad Man" had a long run on Broadway and has already played two years on the road.

Thomas H. Ince will present "Anna Christie," the Eugene O'Neill play which was awarded the Pulitzer prize as the play which has done the most during the year to advance the interests of American dramatics.

"Secrets" is another drama which Joseph M. Schenck purchased the screen rights of. Norma Talmadge will be seen in the title role.

Another play to be picturized is Avery Hopwood's "Why Men Leave Home."

Louis B. Mayer has purchased the screen rights and John M. Stahl will direct.

A European stage sensation, "Madame Pompadour" will be imported by Joseph M. Schenck for Constance Talmadge.

"Her Temporary Husband" Edward Paulton's farce comedy will be brought to the screen with Sydney Chaplin in the leading male role.

"The Spite Corner," a comedy drama in which Madge Kennedy starred during a long run on Broadway.

The list of forthcoming pictures which will be adapted for the screen from published novels or magazine stories is equally imposing. First National has more than two dozen books and magazine serials which are either in production or in the hands of the screen adapters.

Among the stories are:

"Circus Days" from the old circus story "Toby Tyler" by James Otis in which Jackie Coogan is starred.

"The Huntress" a comedy drama of the great American outdoors, from the pen of Hulbert Footner. It will be Colleen Moore's first starring picture.

"The Fighting Blade," a period drama from the pen of Beulah Marie Dix, which will be produced by Inspiration Pictures with Richard Barthelmess in the stellar role.

"The Wanters," by Lelia Burton Wells, a comedy drama with New York society life as a background. John M. Stahl will direct this picture for Louis B. Mayer with Marie Prevost and Robert Ellis in the starring roles. Richard Headrick has been signed to play an important role.

"Her Reputation," adapted from the novel "The Devil's Own" by Talbot Muddy and Bradley King. Thomas H. Ince will present this story through First National.

"Purple Pride," by H. B. Somerville, an English authoress. Norma Talmadge will star. The novel was published as "Ashes of Vengeance" in England, and is to be issued in this country shortly.

"Flaming Youth" a Metropolitan Magazine story by Warner Fabian.

"The Lord of Thundergate," a Sunset Magazine serial and novel from the pen of Sidney Herschell Small.

"Dust in the Doorway," Dixie Wilson's McClure's Magazine story, which Frank Borzage will bring to the screen.

"The Swamp Angel," from the Collier's Magazine story by Richard Connell.

"Rope," a novel by Holsworthy Hall.

"The Dangerous Maid," from the novel "Barbara Winslow Rebel," by Elizabeth Ellis, which has been purchased by Joseph M. Schenck and which will have Constance Talmadge in the stellar role.

"The Sea Hawk," by Rafael Sabatini, author of "Scaramouche" and "Captain Blood."

"Moving Fingers" by Elizabeth Irons Folsom, which was published in Everybody's Magazine in serial form.

"Pearls before Cecily," a Saturday Evening Post story by Charles Brackett.

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan will deliver 44 productions next season. Each production will be a big picture produced by a director whose name has been associated with an important achievement.

Of the 44 pictures that they will release 12 are Cosmopolitan Productions, 8 are Distinctive Pictures, 22 are Goldwyn pictures and Jesse D. Hampton and Achievement Films will provide one each.

Metro—33

Thirty-three major productions will mark the 1923-1924 program of Metro Pictures Corporation, according to the schedule announced by Metro officials at this company's national sales convention held in New York last week. In addition to the list of pictures already set there is the possibility that several other important productions will be added in the next several months when negotiations are completed.

The opening gun will be fired in September, with Mae Murray's latest picture, "The French Doll," taken from the Paris and New York stage success of the same name. It is based on A. E. Thomas' English adaptation of the French play, "La Jeune Fille a Marie," by Paul Armont and Marcel Gerbidon, Parisian authors. Included in the cast with Miss Murray are Orville Caldwell, Rod La Rocque, Rose Dion, Paul Casaneuve, Willard Louis, Bernard Randall and Lucien Littlefield. The adaptation and continuity for "The French Doll" was prepared by Frances Marion. It is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro and is sponsored by Tiffany Productions, of which Mr. Leonard is director-general and M. H. Hoffman general manager.

Following "The French Doll" will be Fred Niblo's production through Louis B. Mayer of another New York stage success of last season, "Captain Applejack," by the English author, Walter Hackett. Its title, however, will be changed to "Strangers of the Night." The scenario for this picture was prepared for Mr. Niblo by Bess Meredyth, and it was photographed by Alvin Wyckoff. In the cast are Enid Bennett and Matt Moore, Barbara La Marr, Adele Farrington, Emily Fitzroy, Otto Hoffman and Robert McKim. "Strangers of the Night" is a Metro super-special.

There will be a new Viola Dana picture called "Rouged Lips," from the story, "Upstage," by Rita Weiman. The adaptation was made by Thomas J. Hopkins. Harold Shaw, who directed Miss Dana, is an English director who came to this country to direct Miss Dana and was signed by Metro to direct several other productions. Included in the cast of "Rouged Lips" with Miss Dana are Tom Moore, Nela Luxford, Sidney de Grey, Arline Pretty, Francis Powers, Georgie Woodthorpe and Burwell Manrick. "Rouged Lips" was photographed by John Arnold.

The last production to be released in September will be Buster Keaton's first five-reel comedy drama feature, "The Three Ages." It was recently completed by Keaton on the West Coast under the direction of Eddie Cline.

The month of October will see five new productions released, headed by the Metro screen classic, "The Eagle's Feather," now in the making in the Metro West Coast studios, under the direction of Edward Slocum. This is from a story by Katherine Newlin Burt and was prepared for the screen by Winifred Dunn. The cast includes James Kirkwood, Mary Alden, Lester Cuneo, Elinor Fair, George Seigman, Adolph Menjou, John Elliott, Charles McHugh, William Orlamond and Jim Wang. J. J. Hughes is art director and George Rizard is photographing "The Eagle's Feather."

Second is the Reginald Barker production, "The Master of Woman," adapted for Mr. Barker by Monte M. Katterjohn, from the novel, "The Law-Bringers," by G. B. Lancaster. This title may be changed later. The cast consists of Renee Adoree, Earle Williams, Barbara La Marr, Pat O'Malley, Wallace Beery, Josef Swickard, Pat Harmon, George Kuwa, Edward J. Brady, and Robert Anderson. It is being photographed by Percy Hilburn. "The Master of Woman" will be a Reginald Barker production for the Metro-Louis B. Mayer forces.

October will produce the first Jackie Coogan feature under Metro auspices. Jackie is now at work in the Metro studios under the direction of Victor Sehertzing on Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, "Long Live the King." It is a colorful picturization of the adventures of the young crown prince of the mythical kingdom of Lavonia. The novel was adapted to the screen by C. Gardner Sullivan and scenarioized by Eve Unsell. The whole is under the personal supervision of Jack Coogan, Sr. Among the players supporting Jackie are Rosemary Theby, Ruth Renick, Vera Lewis, Alan Hale, Alan Forrest, Walt Whitman, Robert Brower and Don Franklin.

There will also be a second Metro screen classic in "Held to Answer," a Peter Clarke McFarlane story recently purchased by Metro. This will be the second of the Metro specials following "The Eagle's Feather." The producing organization for this picture has not yet been completed.

In this month also there will be released a second Viola Dana picture called "The Social Code." This is taken from Rita Weiman's story, "To Whom It May Concern." It will be Viola Dana's second starring picture for the fall season and is said to be a mystery drama. Rex Taylor is already at work on the continuity.

Four productions will be released by Metro in the month of November. The first is an Alan Holubar production called "Hearts of Happiness." The second will be a new Fred Niblo production called "Man, Woman and Temptation," produced under the auspices of the Metro-Louis B. Mayer organizations. A third will be "Mad Pleasure," scheduled as a Reginald Barker production, also under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices, from the novel, "The Valley of Content," by Blanche Upright. There will be a second Buster Keaton five-reeler, but the story has not yet been selected.

December will show four more Metro releases. Of these "Desire," the third screen classic of the fall program, will be the first. It is a Louis Burston presentation through Metro directed by Rowland V. Lee from an original story and continuity by John B. Clymer and Henry R. Symonds. Among the cast are Marguerite De La Motte, John Bowers, Estelle Taylor, David Butler, Walter Long, Lucille Hutton, Edward Connelly, Noah Beery, Ralph Lewis, Russell Simpson and several others.

A second is "Fashion Row," a Mae Murray picture formerly announced as "Conquest," by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins. Miss Murray has already started production on this picture. The third December release is called "The Uninvited Guest," a Williamson-Technicolor novelty. The fourth will be "In Search of a Thrill," a third Dana Metro picture taken from the story by Kate Jordan called "The Spirit of the Road."

There will be four January releases in 1924. Rex Ingram's production, "Searamouche," will be the first. "Searamouche" is a romance of the French Revolution by Rafael Sabatini, and it is being produced by special arrangement with Charles L. Wagner. The scenario was prepared for Ingram by Willis Goldbeck and John F. Seitz is in charge of the camera. The cast for "Searamouche" is headed by Alice Terry, Ramon Novarro and Lewis Stone. Others are Edith Allen, Lloyd Ingram, Otto Matieson, Julia Swayne Gordon and James Marcus.

In January also there will be another Metro-Jackie Coogan production, the story of which has not yet been selected. Still another will be "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," a Lubin-Sawyer production, based on the poem by Robert W. Service. The last January release will be called by the temporary title of "Other Men's Clothes." It is taken from the story, "The Tale of Triona," by William J. Locke.

February brings three Metro releases. The most important of these is a second Alan Holubar production called "Life's Highway," from a story by E. Lloyd Sheldon called "East of Suez." One other will be a fourth Viola Dana picture and still another will be the fifth of the season's Metro screen classics, the subject of which is also among the undetermined.

March holds four important productions and will form a banner month for Metro. No titles have been announced at this date, but they will be respectively a Fred Niblo production, a Reginald Barker production, an Ingram production and one Buster Keaton five-reeler feature comedy.

April will have the following releases: "Mademoiselle Midnight," by Edmund Goulding for Mae Murray through Metro-Tiffany Productions; "The Dog of Flanders," for Jackie Coogan's third Metro picture, by Louisa de la Rame; a fifth Viola Dana picture; the sixth Metro screen classic.

May, the last month of the season's program, will have the third Alan Holubar production, called "The Robes of Redemption."

Principal—13

"Principal Pictures Corporation is not dealing in futures," said Irving M. Lesser, Vice President and General Manager of Distribution of that concern, when interviewed at his office in the Loew State Building recently.

"By this I mean that it is not, and never will be, our policy to screen one production for a territorial buyer, and on the strength of this, sell him a series of five or six productions. We have all of our pictures completed and insist on the prospective buyer previewing the entire group before signing on the dotted line.

"Our production policy is exemplified in our Super Five Series which we are now offering to the independent exchanges.

"In 'The Spider and the Rose,' written by Gerald C. Duffy and directed by John McDermott, the leading players are Alice Lake and Gaston Glass, and they are ably supported by Joseph Dowling, Robert McKim, Alec Francis, Frank Campeau, Noah Beery, Louise Fazenda, Edwin Stevens, Otis Harlan and little Richard Headrick.

"Bright Lights of Broadway" was also written by Gerald C. Duffy, and the scenario was supervised by Edmund Golding who wrote 'Tol'ble David' and nearly all of the Mae Murray successes. Webster Campbell wielded the megaphone on this production. The featured players are Doris Kenyon, Harrison Ford and Lowell Sherman, each one a star of the first magnitude. And in this production, too, the supporting cast includes such names as Edmund Breese, Tyrone Power, Charles Murray and Effie Shannon.

"Next on the list is 'Temporary Marriage,' from the pen of Gilbert Patten. This was directed by Lambert Hillyer who wrote and directed all of the later William S. Hart successes, and who for many years was on the staff of Thos. H. Ince. Featured in this are Kenneth Harlan and Mildred Davis. The balance of the cast includes Myrtle Steadman, Tully Marshall, Maud George and Stuart Holmes.

"Then we have 'East Side, West Side,' which was adapted to the screen by Hope Loring and Louis Duryea Lighton from the Broadway stage success of the same name by Henry Hull and Leighton Osmun. Featured in this are Kenneth Harlan and Eileen Percy, and the cast includes Lucille Hutton, Charles Mailes, Betty May and Wally Van. Irving Cummings directed.

"Following this comes 'The Man From Ten Strike,' an adaptation of one of the best of James Oliver Curwood's works. Guy Bates Post is the star of this production, and he is supported by Grace Darmond, Cleo Madison and Mitchell Lewis. The direction is by Robert T. Thornby.

"Eight more productions of the same high quality will be distributed on the state right basis; six of these will be made at the western studios and two in the east.

Truart—12

While Truart Film Corporation has a number of pictures which are being played successfully about the country, including Edward Dillon's production "Women Men Marry" and "The Empty Cradle," the first production of the new franchise units will be "Broadway Gold," the Elaine Hammerstein starring vehicle, directed by Edward Dillon from the story by W. Carey Wonderly in Young's Magazine.

Following this production will be "The Unknown Purple" produced by Carlos Productions, Inc., and directed by Roland West, from Mr. West's successful New York stage play of the same name. This play ran for two seasons in the big city.

Following these will be four additional productions from the Elaine Hammerstein studios, to be directed by Edward Dillon, and at least two more pictures by the Carlos Production-Roland West unit. In addition contracts are ready to be signed with at least two other units for special feature productions.

In short subjects Mr. Hoffman has just consummated an arrangement for the production of six two-reel subjects to be produced by Arthur Mande, and to be based upon famous paintings.

Universal—60

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, announces for the 1923-1924 season the largest program of picture production ever attempted by that company. A total of sixty pictures will be made and released during the twelve months beginning next September. This aggregation will be known as the Universal Sixty."

It will consist of several groups of pictures, differentiated in the main by the stars who make them. A strong feature will be a list of Universal-Jewel productions of which there are twenty.

The increase in productions is due to the addition of two new stars, Reginald Denny and Mary Philbin. Denny has graduated into his own company and Miss Philbin has come to fame by reason of her work in "Merry Go Round," which will be shown in this city at an early date. Denny and Miss Philbin will be starred in four Jewels each during the coming year.

In addition to the eight foregoing Jewels by Denny and Miss Philbin, there will be twelve others made by Jewel stars, or by special casts. These will be headed by "Merry Go Round."

Priscilla Dean will contribute two to the list. They will be "Drifting," an adaptation of John Colton's stage play, and "White Tiger," a melodrama written by Tod Browning around the adventures of a group of London crooks and their intrigues in American society. Browning directed both features. The first will be released in January and the other in June.

Virginia Valli will contribute two. They will be "A Lady of Quality" and "Up the Ladder," the first being an adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel and play, and the latter a screen version of the Owen Davis stage play. "A Lady of Quality" is being directed for October release by Robert Henley. "Up the Ladder" will be directed by Harry Pollard, it is expected, and will be released early next year.

Included in the specials to be made with individual stars, there will be "Whose Baby Are You?" with Baby Peggy. King Baggot is directing this picture. "Damned," the anonymous novel will be made with Barbara La Marr in the featured role. "The Signal Tower" and "The Turmoil" will be made for next summer release, the latter by Hobart Henley, and will be used as starring vehicles, but no definite selection of players has been made.

Others scheduled for the coming year are "Thundering Dawn," a Harry Garson production featuring J. Warren Kerrigan and Anna Q. Nilsson, now in production, and "The Acquittal," which Clarence L. Brown is adapting from Rita Welman's stage play. Claire Windsor, Norman Kerry and Jerome Travers will be featured in this production which probably will be ready for release late this year. There also will be "A Chapter in Her Life," a Lois Weber-all-star production of Clara Louise Burnham's story, "Jewel."

In addition to the twenty Jewels scheduled as the outstanding group, there also will be five groups of eight pictures each. Prominent in these will be a series of eight Hoot Gibson Productions, made under the direction of Edward Sedgwick, and starring the popular western hero.

There also will be a group of eight Gladys Walton Productions. In this group will be "The Untamable" by Gelett Burgess, directed by Herbert Blache, "The Near Lady," by Frank Adams, "The Aforementioned Infant," by Elizabeth Saxony Holding and "The Thrill Girl" by Crosby George. Others now are being selected.

There will be a group of eight Jack Hoxie Productions, including "Men in the Raw," "The Knight of the Range," "Wyoming," "The Texas Ranger" and others. Herbert Rawlinson also will contribute a group of eight pictures. Among the Herbert Rawlinson Productions will be "Crooked Alley," "Upside Down," "Small Town Stuff" and others.

The remaining group of features will be eight melodramas, probably with special casts and novelty treatment.

Vitagraph—24

Vitagraph announces twenty-four special productions by J. Stuart Blackton, Whitman Bennett, David Smith, Jess Robbins and other directors and eight comedies based on the Sam Hellman stories in the Saturday Evening Post, in addition to its regular productions.

In explaining Vitagraph's increased activities which will first bear fruit with the new season in the Fall, Mr. Smith said that it definitely had been decided to produce at least twenty-four special productions. These will include six pictures made under the personal supervision of Commodore Blackton, six special productions from the Whitman Bennett studios at Yonkers, six productions by David Smith at the Hollywood studios and six other special productions with specially engaged directors. Of the last named President Smith personally will direct one from beginning to end, his first activity in this line for nearly four years, although during that period he has collaborated with various directors on special occasions.

In addition to these special productions Vitagraph has just signed contracts with the Chester International Pictures Company to furnish the series of eight two-reel comedies by Sam Hellman. This contract provides for the distribution of the Sam Hellman comedies in Canada and England also. Work already has been begun on these pictures at Los Angeles, the first being based on a golf story called "A Twosome at Tuara." Vitagraph also will distribute its Larry Semon comedies, the one-reel Urban Popular Classics as well as other units.

Of its immediate productions Mr. Smith said that "The Alibi" with Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis, Percy Marmont and Joseph Kilgour in the leading roles, was completed at the Hollywood studios just before he left for the East and that the prints are being rushed to the Brooklyn laboratories.

The first Bennett production will be called "Loyal Lives" and revolves around the life of a postman and his son.

Before Mr. Smith left the Pacific coast work already had been started on a story of the West under the tentative title of "Pioneer Days." The time of the story is in the late 60's, just before the completion of the first transcontinental railroad and is based on a famous stage play by Edwin Arden and Arden R. Smith.

Immediately following the completion of "Pioneer Days" active work will begin on "The Man from Brodney's," based on George Barr McCutcheon's well known novel.

Warner Brothers—18

The first six productions of the eighteen to be produced by the Warner Brothers for the coming season are announced by Harry M. Warner. All will be ready for release early this Fall; three are now being produced while preparations are under way for the filming of the others.

The six include "The Gold Diggers," a David Belasco production; "Cornered," the play by Zelta Sears and Dodson Mitchell; "Lucretia Lombard," the Kathleen Norris novel being produced by Harry Rapf; "The Printer's Devil," featuring Wesley Barry; "Little Johnny Jones," featuring Johnny Hines by arrangement with C. C. Burr; and "Tiger Rose," the Belasco play starring Lenore Ulric.

"Little Johnny Jones" is rapidly nearing completion at the Warner Coast studios under the direction of Arthur Rosson. It is an adaptation by Raymond Schrock of George M. Cohan's stage success.

"The Printer's Devil," is being directed by William Beaudine, from the story and scenario written by Julien Josephson.

"The Gold Diggers," in which Hope Hampton will be featured, is an adaptation by Grant Carpenter of the Belasco stage play written by Avery Hopwood. The full cast has not yet been selected. Harry Beaumont, director of the current Warner release, "Main Street," has been assigned the direction of the Belasco production.

Fox — 50

First on the list of specials is "If Winter Comes," which will be released on Broadway this fall. The same author's "This Freedom" also is being pictures. "Monna Vanna," adapted from Maeterlinck's drama, with 10,000 persons, will be another spectacle.

Gallagher and Shean will appear in "Around the Town With Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean," and J. Gordon Edwards will make "The Shepherd King," a historical drama.

Ernest Truex is engaged in filming "Six Cylinder Love," "The Governor's Lady," originally staged by David Belasco, also will be seen, directed by Harry Millarde. "St. Elmo," the Augusta-Evans novel and play, will be revived, with John Gilbert in the title role, supported by Bessie Love and Barbara La Marr.

Booth Tarkington's novel "Gentle Julia" and Gouverneur Morris's "You Can't Get Away With It" also will be filmed. "The Silent Command," by Anthony Paul Kelly, will be made by J. Gordon Edwards. Two Lincoln J. Carter thrillers, "The Arizona Express" and "The Eleventh Hour," are Forty-three Fox comedies will be submitted in the new season.

United Artists

Mary Pickford has very nearly completed production work on the greatest and most ambitious feature picture of her career. Under the working title "The Street Singer,"

Charlie Chaplin, is busy producing a big feature picture from a story of his own, and which he personally is directing under the working title "Public Opinion."

Douglas Fairbanks again has set for himself the task of producing the photoplay sensation of the year, and already has begun work on a feature called "The Thief of Bagdad," an Arabian Nights' type of entertainment which he promises will outdo "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood."

D. W. Griffith recently completed and put on view in New York what quickly was heralded by critics and a large share of the New York public as a sensational success from the box-office and entertainment points of view. This is Mr. Griffith's "The White Rose."

In addition to the foregoing there also is the important initial release of Associated Authors, Inc. Their first picture, "Richard, the Lion-hearted," a screen version of Sir Walter Scott's famous novel, "The Talisman," is nearly complete. This picture features Wallace Berry.

Grand—Asher—10

This new company announces 10 features and 24 comedies. The features include two made by Ben Wilson productions, "Mine to Keep," and "The Love Trap," starring Bryant Washburn and supported by big casts including Mabel Forrest, Wheeler Oakman, Sydney Franklin and others. Selznick

David R. Blyth, Director of Sales for Selznick Distributing Corporation, has scheduled "The Queen of Sin" for release on June 23.

Consistent with the new policy of Selznick, that of encouraging independent producers to make nothing but the type of pictures demanded by the public and the exhibitor, Mr. Blyth also announces that in conjunction with "Rupert of Hentzau," "The Common Law" and "Modern Matrimony," all of which are for early Fall release, several other big pictures will be released.

company will be limited to six reels. Everywhere there is an indication that longer pictures, unless it contains spectacle, are not meeting with public approval, and the spectacle, too, seems to have lagged in public favor judging from box office reports of the last season.

Probably at no time in the history of film making has a greater variety of locales been selected by producers than those which form settings for pictures soon to be released. In fact, judging from pictures now in the making, it would seem that good old-fashioned American locale is a rarity. Audiences, the Film Kings say, grew tired of one background, and there has been a tendency to get stories that are different and to put these stories in different places. Consequently there will predominate in motion picture theatres during the next six or eight months foreign stories with foreign backgrounds. A survey shows that nearly forty percent. of the stories now being produced, or to be started soon, are laid in France; thirty percent. in England and fifteen percent. in Spain. This of course, refers to the bigger specials, and also, of course, they are considerably more than six-reels in length.

Among the bigger pictures to come with foreign locales are "Ben Hur," Palestine; "The Street Singer," Spain; "The Thief of Bagdad," Arabia; "In the Palace of the King," Spain; "The Magic Skin," France; "The Spoilers," Alaska; "The Master of Man," England; "Six Days," England; "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," France; "Searamouche," France; "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," France; "The Ten Commandments," Palestine; "The Rendezvous," Russia, and "Tess of the D'Urber-villes," England.

Getting back to prosperity, William de Mille, who has returned recently from a trip through the east, speaks in glowing terms of the wave of prosperity that is sweeping the country. During his observations of conditions that covered a wide area, he says, he found that photoplay houses most everywhere are reporting a return to pre-war activities. De Mille is another who believes that future production will be unlimited, and fails to see any reason for rumors of curtailment.

It is true that several of the larger companies are cutting down their star picture programs. But pay no attention to that. Just watch the all-star specials that will be announced to take the place of the one-star productions. Wise policy has come to believe in the story rather than the star, and this is the trend, although star pictures will always be with us. Along this line it is amazing to peek into the payrolls and observe how salaries have jumped. There is not an actor of note here unemployed. Many of them are working on two productions at the same time, and in some instances three.

Just a few instances will show how salaries have gone skyward. Six months ago Lon Chaney received $750 a week and now faces the cashier for $2,200; James Kirkwood has advanced from $1,250 to $2,000 weekly; Wallace Beery, who drew down seventy-eight weeks work last year, is getting $2,000 weekly where he formerly drew $1,000; Marguerite de la Marr has advanced from $750 to $1,250; Milton Sills jumped from $750 to $2,000 etc., etc.

These players are not under contract to any single firm, and most prominent artists unattached have advanced their salary during the last year from 100 to 200 per cent.; in some cases higher.

With the producers ready to spend more than $18,000,000 on new studios and improvements, there will never be a shortage of pictures while audiences go to see them, and Hollywood remains with the facilities to make them.

And Hollywood is going to remain, and remain busier than it ever has been in its history.

NO CURTAILMENT IN WEST COAST STUDIOS

By WILL C. MURPHEY

Hollywood, June 22.—Production schedules of the various companies give the lie to the persistent rumor that there will be curtailment of picture making here within the next few months. Film officials say that not since prewar days has there been so many units at work, or ready to shoot. Rather an increase than a slump is about due, they say, and this condition will extend into the winter months.

Practically every studio here is filled to capacity or will be very soon when the peak of this season's production will be reached. A survey of the various lots this week found 108 companies at work and half as many more preparing to get going.

Weather conditions and money are favorable just now, and everyone seems convinced that prosperity is sure to remain for at least two years. Debts are being liquidated, and the spirit of panic is broken. The independent producers are increasing their output as well as the big fellows. In fact this seems to be the opportunity of the independents with money plentiful and conditions right. There is no place for the pessimist around the studios; optimism is the keynote wherever motion pictures are made or discussed.

While attempts have been made to cut down the two-reel comedies, a canvas of the comedy studios show that these entertaining pictures are not being neglected. The western picture, according to the plans of film executives, is also due for a comeback when the present craze for stories with foreign locales simmers down. "The Covered Wagon," and "The Days of Buffalo Bill," are the two biggest successes released recently. The box office tells the story, and the producers are taking the tip. Conventional melodrama is holding its own. Flashy sets, and good clothes with a society background must, naturally, always remain the basic material of the theatre, and good old melodrama is still the bread and butter getter of producer and exhibitor.

Owing to censorship, directors are putting the soft-pedal on gun-play in the westerns, allowing just enough to jack up a thrill and sustain the action. Discarded as being too crude and inartistic to please the present day public. The producers got an idea that the western drama was in disrepute, with with a few whispers from the box office there has been a change of opinion, and with a completion of present schedules there will be a rush of frontier stuff, with many imitations of "The Covered Wagon" in the offering.

It will be good news to exhibitors to learn that there will be an effort to keep features down to practical show length—six or seven reels, and screen versions of famous novels will follow the story more closely than they have in the past. Kicks registered by exhibitors who have had complaints from their patrons is responsible for this. Audiences are tired of seeing garbled versions of stories they have read, and exhibitors are against pictures of a length that interferes with their running schedule. Victor B. Fisher is one producer who has come out flat with the announcement that hereafter he will film novels and plays just as they are written, and productions of his

Editor Exhibitors Trade Review:

We like the spirit of your letters—one of mutual help and co-operation and getting at the other fellow's point of view.

We shall keep open during Summer and push straight through with full program. With plenty electric fans we have made our theatre the coolest, most pleasant place in town. We make them comfortable—then give them the best show possible.

Long features to seven reels are all right, providing there is plenty of action, pretty girls, dresses, dances, romance, fun, good story plot, etc., but no house will keep awake on long drawn out, draggy, all-man affairs. They want action, action, action, comedy relief, suspense, mystery shows that keep them on tiptoe and if such, the longer show on feature is all right.

Super specials are all right and this is the day of big pictures. The poor picture, program picture (in a reel) is dead. The public is expecting big things and shopping for the unusual. We predict failure for any producer who fails to recognize the new public taste and demands, or the exhibitor either.

There is something unfair with the deposit system of contract booking—it gives the exchange the tail hold and downhill pull on us. All exhibitors should patronize those firms who meet us on the business table like men and have abolished the deposit system.

The day of booking by the method of "take all or none" is over. The handwriting is on the wall. We enjoy The Exhibitors Trade Review and find it a great help to us in every way. Success to you.

Yours truly,

W. E Burgess & Sons.

Where Daylight Hurts

Exhibitors Trade Review:

Added to the usual length of daylight during the summer nights in eastern Canada, the exhibitors have an extra hour of daylight to contend with, under the daylight saving system. During the months of May and June, daylight extends until ten o'clock through the daylight system. There is no dominion law or no provincial law affecting the extension of daylight by advancing the clock one hour, but various cities have adopted special by-laws governing the case.

With the daylight continuing until ten o'clock during May and June, and until nine o'clock during July and part of August, the exhibitors suffer. The baseball games, outdoor sports, motoring, motorboating, etc, have the right of way. Despite the effect wrought on the business at the motion picture theatres in Eastern Canada by the daylight saving system, there has been no concerted effort on the part of the exhibitors to prevent the adoption of the system by various city councils. Nearly all of the larger centres in the maritime provinces of Canada use the daylight saving time, whereas the smaller centres have refused consistently to advance the time the necessary hour.

Consequently the chief sufferers have been the exhibitors in the larger centres. The result is that the exhibitors are turning their attention to musical tab revues, stock organizations, etc., to sandwich in between picture bills.

Each of the cities start and cease the daylight saving time at different dates. Some started the time early in May, others late in May, and still others early in June. The clocks are to be turned back the hour gained at the advancing date, in some cities early in September, in other cities about the middle of September and in still other cities the latter part of September or first of October. There was no organized opposition to the daylight saving system in most of the cities and consequently the exhibitors are facing a period of depression in those cities where the daylight saving time is in vogue.

Six or Seven Reels

Exhibitors Trade Review:

I usually close down one or two weeks during the Summer but this Summer it will be three weeks. Hot weather, daylight saving, motoring, twilight baseball and Summer vacations put the hummer on business each year.

Regarding the length of features and super specials I think six or seven reels should be the maximum for all features. The program should be diversified. I want to run one, two or three reels of short stuff and I can't do this if features are in ten or twelve reels. Majority of features have padding that could easily be eliminated thus making a better picture.

Henry W. Gauding,
Lincoln Theatre,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Six Reels Satisfy

Exhibitors Trade Review:

I will not try to take up much time and bother you with a long article on which so written, but there is just this much about it, if the producers would stop padding pictures in order to make them eight reels and make a good six reel picture, I think the exhibitors would be better satisfied. I think the ideal length for a feature is six thousand feet and in this length you can get plenty of action, and make a story worth while.

The New Review

JUNE 4, 1923.

Exhibitors Trade Review:

Mr. Griffith wants to join me in thanking the Editorial Staff of your magazine for the original, thorough and kindly way in which it approached the review of our little picture "The White Rose."

I know not whose idea it is, but I think your system of having several people review a picture is the most brilliant editorial idea I have seen in a trade magazine in years. It is informing, useful, thorough and honest, an absolute departure from the accepted theory of reviews, and I think of most important benefit to both producer and exhibitor.

I want to congratulate the Editorial Staff upon this really constructive and vital improvement, and also to thank you again for your very generous courtesies to us.

Sincerely yours,

Independent Contract

Exhibitors Trade Review.

Now that the distributor-exhibitor contract is a reality cannot someone evolve a uniform contract between the independent producer and the independent distributor; cannot someone dig up a Messiah to lead the independent producer out of the wilderness where so many of his class are hopelessly lost?

I mean a contract along strictly equitable lines, such as the uniform contract just concluded appears to be.

Your publication, conducted as it is along lines sympathetic to the independents, might help materially in bringing about a better understanding between the independent producer and the independent distributor.

I am producing a series of all-star pictures, the cost of each to be $100,000, yet I must take a chance on selecting my distributor and the contract he hands me.

There must be some way to INSURE me against my pictures being a commercial failure, due to wrong marketing. We producers must be protected against ourselves or the independent will be spurlos versengt.

We Print a Few

Exhibitors Trade Review.

I am sending you under separate cover some of the advertisements we have run recently in the local newspapers. I notice that you reprint a number of ads each week and in almost every instance these are reproductions of fancy drawn ads. Do you realize that to 80% of your circulation the reprinting of these drawn ads accomplishes nothing, as the smaller exhibitors cannot afford to run that kind of advertising. In my opinion, you should print more ads which are made up entirely from press book material and mats and cuts available from the Exchange. For instance, my ad on "Grandma's Boy" is made from two mats furnished by the Exchange and can be reproduced by any exhibitor in a town where the newspaper has a stereotype service. This is also true of our fall announcement ad.

If you reproduce ads like this with a few words explaining that exhibitors can secure the material to reproduce the ad from his Exchange you will be doing a constructive piece of work. The ads which you reproduce are beautiful, but certainly not practical for the large majority of exhibitors.

Wishing you continued success, I am

Yours very truly,
RALPH TALBOT,
Pres. Theatre Owners & Managers
Association of Oklahoma.

Give It Momentum

CARL LAEMMLE says "Summer is what you make it."

It's the truth, a cold truth for a hot season.

It applies as well to producer and distributor as to his customer, the exhibitor.

A theatre won't do well on junk pictures, in Summer.

It's useless to cry "play the big pictures in Summer," if they can't be booked.

There is, of course, a difference in the meaning of "big" applied to pictures, according to the size and location of the theatre using the word.

We admit that the word "big" applied to pictures by a house like the Capitol, New York, or the Chicago, in Chicago, means big, new pictures.

Out in Waverly, Illinois, a "big" picture is not necessarily a new one. One that has not shown there but has run the gamut of the big first runs with success is "big."

If the momentum, which the movement to take the curse off poor summer business has gotten this year is to succeed, the producer must do his part in the scheme to make Summer less of a bugbear.

In this connection Frank Newman of Kansas City, operator of a big house, voices the sentiments of the man who is willing to go straight through the Summer with full programs, but who has had some of his enthusiasm dampened by the lack of big new pictures. He writes:

"One thing particularly that keeps me worried is the fact, that nearly all of the producing companies take out their best productions and leave nothing but mediocre pictures to be run during the hot months of June, July and August, and I want to say to you right now that it is causing me a great deal of grief.

"Take in the case of our theatre. We have a cooling plant in our theatre which cost us over $50,000. We keep an even temperature in here and a great many patrons come in the afternoon just to be comfortable. It seems a crime I have to show mediocre pictures during the warm months which is at the time when I need the very best to hold the patrons in doors.

"I believe this is some food for thought and I would think it would be a very good subject to start a discussion in your paper. If the producers will not assist the exhibitors in giving them some productions worth while in the summer, then they should close all the motion pictures in the summer and open them up in the fall as the legitimate houses do. As it is now they seem to hold all the poor pictures and release them during the hot months.

"It is not only doing the industry a harm, but it will also be a means of putting a great many exhibitors to the wall. I have talked to any number of exhibitors and they have expressed themselves that they would rather pay a big price for a good picture and just break even, or make very little money than to run poor pictures and show a terrific loss."

It is gratifying to see that the importance of overcoming this Summer time depression, to which this publication devoted considerable space recently, is now attracting the attention of other trade publications.

Certainly it is a subject closest to the pocketbook of our readers and we confess a deep interest in anything that bears upon the size of that pocketbook.

That Golf Habit

OMAHA and Minneapolis exhibitors and ex-changemen are organizing golf tournaments. Fine.

Buzzing, bristling Celluloid Row in New York City knows how successful a golf tournament can be and how men who are fighting each other for business get together on the green and meet each other on a man-to-man basis.

This outside-of-business contact removes that suspicious attitude which so many on both ends of the business—buying and selling—assume. It clears away a lot of smoke which blurs the business perspective.

The industry owes a lot to Joe Dannenberg for starting this golf habit. We're glad too that he did it, because he's a member of the publishing fraternity.

Now if the Omaha and Minneapolis boys want to make a howling success of their tournaments, we'd advise them to get in touch with Danny, Harry Reichenbach and George Gallup, Jr. Danny to start things, Harry to keep 'em laughing and George to keep 'em playing.

Fore!

Odd, Isn't It?

MAE MARSH had pretty nearly passed out of the picture going public's mind when lo' she's brought back in big style, a hit.

A comedian who has been making people laugh all over the country for years is suddenly and quietly put to work in a picture. No one ever thought of asking him to make a picture before, yet he is one of the country's most potential box office draws. Referring, we are, to Al Jolson.

Of course you know who does these things. He works quietly, but oh, my, he works.

And in connection with all this in a canvas of patrons at the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, New York City, D. W. Griffith was picked as their favorite director.

Just Between Ourselves

SAW a rattling good program last week at the Rivoli. For a headliner there was "Only 38," a delightful tale from the viewpoint of this writer. It was an honest to goodness picture story and it reflected credit on its screen architect, Clara Beranger. William de Mille, who directed it, should contemplate the finished result with satisfaction—that is, if it be possible for a director to look on a completed picture without being impressed with how much better it would have been after all if he had only done so and so with that certain situation. Then again, behind the whole structure was the work of Walter Priehard Eaton, a "literary author," in the terminology of William B. Maxwell, for the recognition of which by the producers the Englishman made a special plea at the recent congress.

While that genuinely charming Miss May McAvoy is listed at the head of the cast it seems to us the story really is Lois Wilson's all the way—and surely she does carry it in a superb manner. Co-operating with the two named are Elliott Dexter and George Fawcett, the latter one of the few grand old men of the screen.

The short comedy was Pathe's "Dogs of War," with the whole battery of infant terribles including Fatima. Do you know this dusky three-year-old belle—if she is as old as that—is getting good? In the beginning her proximity to the camera marked the opening of a spell of hard crying. Nothing like that any more. She now is as hardy as a seasoned player, and enjoys her work far more than a lot of her older contemporaries.

This is as good a place as any, frankly to admit a reversal of judgment on the "Our Gang" series. The first couple of these subjects we were not enthusiastic about, due partly perhaps to the vandalistic propensities of these youngsters, as they were made to perform, but that objection quickly was removed. The aforesaid reversal seems to make the verdict unanimous, for we have yet to hear the first person say he does not find a lot of fun in the "gang," not only collectively but individually—from the fair-haired ferocious Jackie to the freckled genial Mickie.

The remainder of the Rivoli's program, which was longer than usual, included, besides the overture, a special arrangement of "Love's Old Sweet Song," with two singers; the pictorial, a lecture illustrated by slides on "New York, Yesterday and Today"; a self-accompanied soprano, singing "I know where a garden grows," and "Mighty Lak' a Rose," and a daneer.

SAW last night a striking example of the difference between two men's views of a given situation, the one a photodramatist and the other a person certainly as well qualified as any one in the world to offer a guess as to the outcome, assuming that outcome to be true to the life.

The members of the Newspaper Club were viewing Universal's "Trifling with Honor," written by William Slavens McNutt, a member of the club. One of those following the unfolding of the story—a tale with a pronounced baseball angle and containing a home-run hitting hero—was the club's guest of the evening, "Babe" Ruth.

The Los Angeles team goes into its last half of the ninth inning with the score 2 to 0 against it. Bat Shugrue, finely portrayed by Rockliffe Fellows, under threat of exposure for an incident of five years before, has refrained from playing.

Two men are out and two are on bases.

The crowd is yelling for Bat Shugrue, and the player, recovering his mental balance, puts his past in front of him and asks to go in. Quickly the umpire calls two strikes and two balls on the man who is credited with fifty-nine home runs during the season. The everyday photoplaygoer is just sure the great Bat is going to knock out a homer and save the game and the story.

But the "Babe" is not concerned with the dramatic aspect of the case. He is watching a baseball game and figuring out just what the pitcher of the Vernons is going to do to win the game—and circumvent the heavy-hitting Bat.

The suspense of the moment cracks wide open as the great player remarks in a voice betraying his own interest:

"Hell, they'll walk him!"

Wherein George Herman displayed a greater knowledge of baseball than he did of the exigencies of photodrama, for Bat lifted the next ball over the centerfield fence in orthodox Ruth fashion.

WE have received, with the compliments of the author, W. Stephen Bush, a copy of "Roman Hill Towns: Sketches and Tales of Ariccia, Galloro, Genzano and Nemi," a small book published in Rome by Mr. Bush. The volume is designed for the information of English-speaking visitors and describes interestingly "the writer's observations and experiences gathered in and about Genzano for the better part of a year together with stories and descriptions which as far as we know have never been printed in any but the Italian tongue."

IN his testimony before the federal Trade Commission June 15 Sydney S. Cohen told how Marcus Loew before the Cleveland Convention in 1920 had stated he bought Metro in order to protect his theatres and in Minneapolis the following year had expressed a willingness to turn the producing organization over to the Theatre Owners.

It was about a year ago that Mr. Loew in a speech—we just don't now recall the place—stated that for him the turn of the road on Metro came with the hit made by "The Four Horsemen"; that whereas prior to its release and its wide acceptance by the great public he had been perhaps more than willing to surrender his responsibilities in connection with the making of pictures now his viewpoint was changed.

There is little doubt the intervening year has strengthened the theatre man's determination to hold on to his producing company. For the organization has expanded to a remarkable degree.

Mr. Loew is always one of the most interesting speakers at film gatherings, and one of the reasons for the attention with which he is followed is his frankness in discussing with exhibitors his larger affairs. One of the recent occasions was the convention in Chicago, where at the banquet he told how he had increased the income of a few of his houses by raising the admissions—and incidentally and simultaneously spending considerably more money for the shows he put on in these particular theatres.

TWO famous stage productions of another generation are nearing completion for the screen. They are Richard Walton Tully's adaptation of "Trilby," some scenes for which were taken in Paris; and Famous Players' "Zaza," which Allan Dwan is directing. Goldwyn, too, has purchased "The Merry Widow." Erie Von Stroheim will produce the famous work of Franz Lehar.

Du Maurier's story was the "rage" thirty years ago, and those whose memory goes back that distance will certify the statement it was a sure-enough craze. In the stage version in London, Beerbohm Tree played Svengali. In the American companies Virginia Harned played the title role in one and Blanche Walsh in another. Wilton Lackaye was Svengali and Leo Ditrichstein was Zouzou.

"Zaza" was first produced as a play in Paris in 1898. The late Charles Frohman saw Rejane in the title part and on his return to London told David Belasco: "I could not understand a word the woman said, but it is the greatest play I ever saw. Go over and see what you think of it." Belasco did so and was enthusiastic. Frohman bought the rights, and in January, 1899, it was produced by Belasco with Mrs. Leslie Carter in the title role.

THE first print of Mary Pickford's "Rosita" or "The Street Singer" is expected to arrive in New York within the fortnight. The subject, which is set for early fall release, is notable for several reasons. Aside from the star and story, the sets are said to rival in magnitude those which were erected for "Robin Hood." Then again the production will mark the first American effort of Ernst Lubitch, aided by all the facilities that Los Angeles affords. Which is said to be in marked contrast with the handicaps experienced by the director in his work abroad. It is stated twelve assistant directors were employed in some of the larger scenes and that twelve cameras were used in photographing them.

THERE'S a goodly number of players who are not members of the Famous Players company who will be seen in "Hollywood," which James Cruze has finished and which the officers of the company describe as "the biggest picture Paramount ever made." It will have its world premiere probably in New York some time in August.

Among those who are not regulars at the Paramount studio are Viola Dana, Lloyd Hamilton, Gale Henry, Owen Moore, Bull Montana, Baby Peggy, Jack Pickford, Will Rogers, Ford Sterling, Anita Stewart, Estelle Taylor and Ben Turpin.

The subject is described as romantic in theme and a masterpiece of technique in photography and lighting. All of the scores of notables are said to be logically introduced and to possess a direct bearing on the story. There are "twenty recognized stars and fifty other film celebrities." That ought to set a record for a cast.

Brandt Heads N. Y. State Organization

EXHIBITORS HELD SNAPPY MEETING

President Chosen With a Full Staff of Complimentary Officers

William Brandt, founder and first president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York, is the new president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State.

Mr. Brandt was chosen, together with a full staff of complimentary officers at one of the snappiest and most business-like conventions in the history of state organization.

Opening on Tuesday night in the Onondaga Hotel in Syracuse, the convention adjourned to Wednesday noon. At a little after 4 o'clock the gathering adjourned without delay. Except for the banquet to be held in the evening, at which Senator James J. Walker was to be the toastmaster and Will H. Hays the leading speaker, its work was completed.

One of the leading accomplishments of the body was the action taken toward a nation-wide fight on the admission tax. The impetus to this was given Tuesday evening when the session was addressed by Congressman Clarence McGregor, of Buffalo, the introducer of the elimination measure which failed, and who promised to submit another the coming year.

In the absence of President Charles L. O'Reilly, detained at home through the serious illness of Mrs. O'Reilly, the meetings were presided over by First Vice-President William Dillon, of Ithaca. Mr. Dillon, by the way, was re-elected to his office.

The committee appointed to conduct the nation-wide campaign to eliminate the admission tax, appointed by Vice-President Dillon, with the advice of the executive committee, are Bernard Edelhertz, chairman; Jules Michaels, Buffalo; William Dillon, Ithaca; Walter Hays, Syracuse; Lou Blumenthal, New York; William Brandt, Brooklyn, ex officio.

The manner in which the members responded to the appeal of Mr. Brandt for the payment of dues was one of the most encouraging features of the sessions for those who desire a strong organization.

The opening session of the convention was held Tuesday evening, Vice-president William A. Dillon of Ithaca, in the chair.

After an opening prayer by the Rev. Dr. W. F. Betts, Mr. Dillon introduced Mayor John Walrath of Syracuse, who welcomed the delegates on behalf of the city. "You have all the freedom which I as mayor of the city can give you," he said.

The presiding officer noted Senator James J. Walker in the body of the house and invited him to the platform amid applause.

Congressman McGregor of Buffalo, who introduced in congress a measure to repeal the theatre admission tax, appealed to his hearers to get together and remember that it takes numbers to do things in Washington. He said the tax was particularly felt by the theatre owners in small towns and that they should impress on their congressmen the urgent necessity of repeal.

He advised the building up of a National Organization and if possible the creation of a national bureau in Washington, with branches in various centres. He referred to the timeliness of the action in view of the reported surplus for the year of two hundred million dollars.

"I want to assure the congressman something will be done along the lines he suggests before this convention is over," said William Brandt of Brooklyn. "Also I want to assure him that when he introduces this measure at the next session of congress there will be a national organization behind him."

Discussing the tax Mr. Lee of Croton said that while he had paid $750 to the government in taxes he had made for himself $350. Later he raised a laugh in amplifying his statement by adding: "When these Federal officers got there and found out I didn't have 'Wonderland' across my ticket I got fined $250."

Lou Blumenthal referred to the convention of Theatre Owners in New Jersey, the coming week and promised to bring the message of Congressman McGregor to the attention of the delegates.

On motion of Mr. Hayman, Niagara Falls, it was unanimously voted that the chairman appoint a committee instructed to invite nationwide co-operation in an effort to have removed the admission tax on theatres.

The presiding officer referred to the Washington convention, in 1922, saying he desired an expression of opinion as to the correctness of the attitude of New York in withdrawing.

"Is there any man who can stand here and say New York was wrong?" he asked after calling for a vote on the opposite side of the question, which had brought incidentally a fairly vigorous affirmation. There was no response to the second question.

R. M. Ritchie, secretary of the Michigan organization, briefly addressed the meeting. "Frankly, Michigan was not 'sold' when New York withdrew at Washington," said Mr. Ritchie, "but we stuck another year, when we were convinced that under the lines of action being carried out or not being carried out we could not be a party to a situation of that kind.

"There was only one thing that Michigan could do and only one thing that any state can do. Get out and not hamper those who are conducting the organization.

"But while Michigan is not in a national organization, it does not mean that Michigan is not aware of the necessity for National organization. I am sure Michigan will stand its share of expense to make effective the campaign against the admission tax."

Wednesday's session of the New York State Theatre Owners was a crowded one, the body being called to order by Vice-President Dillon at 12 o'clock. It was after 4 when it adjourned.

The election of officers came in the latter half of the session. The delegates ratified unanimously the selections of the executive committee of the evening before and William Brandt was declared the president for the ensuing year.

Among the other more important happenings of the day were the addresses by Lou Blumenthal on "Film Rentals" and Mr. Brandt on "Organization." Bernard Edelhertz, chairman of the uniform contract committee, submitted his report of the activities of the committee and it was referred to the incoming officers.

Senator James J. Walker made a long address marked at times by the display of his well-known fire with also at times a trace of brimstone. Ben Davis, an exhibitor of Norwich, N. Y., spoke forcefully on the disinclination of many exhibitors to keep books on their business. Frederick H. Elliott talked to the exhibitors about the approaching exposition in Los Angeles and E. C. Mills, representing the Society of Authors and Composers, discussed the causes of friction, between his principles and the exhibitors.

Quite a number of exhibitors responded to the appeals of the new president and came forward with checks to cover their dues.

Among the causes of high rentals Mr. Blumenthal listed the entrance of producers into exhibiting, the issuance of franchises, the exchanging of information regarding film prices between distributors' representatives, the buying up of stars, directors and the rights to plays, and the showing of pictures on a percentage basis.

"One of the crying outrages is the First National sub-franchise agreement," said Mr. Blumenthal, "without doubt the worst. If the meeting does not appoint a committee to find ways to relieve the situation then it is derelict in its duty. It is a terrific waste in distribution."

Mr. Edelhertz said at the outset of his report on the uniform contract it would not be possible to enter into a thorough and comprehensive discussion of all the different phases and angles involved. It should be borne in mind, he said, that almost a year had been spent by the uniform contract committee in negotiations with the Hays organization.

Federal Commission Ends N. Y. Hearing

COHEN TELLS OF KICKS RECEIVED

Government Examiner At Last Session Announces His Resignation

New York.—The Federal Trade Commission concluded hearings on charges against the Famous Players-Lasky Company in New York on Tuesday morning. Sydney S. Cohen, President of the M. P. T. O. A. was the last witness to appear before adjournment until June 25th, when the hearings will continue in Philadelphia.

Eagerly awaited as perhaps the most important witness in the New York session Mr. Cohen brought to the hearings 42 complaints against Famous Players-Lasky made to him during the three years of his Presidency of the M. P. T. O. A. The complaints were in the form of letters and telegrams from exhibitors and charged "Shock" advertising; refusal of service; and the operation of houses to compete with exhibitors who refused to pay high rentals they said were demanded of them.

The witness scored the methods used by Famous Players-Lasky in their operations in the small towns, but on analysis of the complaints submitted and treated individually by Mr. Swaine it developed that in most cases a satisfactory agreement had always resulted from conferences at which Mr. Cohen presented the claims of exhibitors to Mr. Zukor or Mr. Kent of Famous Players-Lasky.

At the conclusion of the direct testimony of Mr. Cohen, Marvin Farrington, who handled the New York end of the investigation retired from the case and from the service of the Government. He will resume the practice of law in Washington.

But two witnesses were examined at the hearing on the morning of Monday, June 18, Dr. W. R. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Company, and Mr. Cohen.

Dr. Shallenberger was questioned regarding a document entitled "Memorandum on the Motion Picture Industry" prepared by Arthur Young & Co and addressed to George B. French, W. E. Shallenberger and Alfred S. Black.

After the witness had gone into some detail explaining that the paper was the result of conferences in 1919 between the parties named regarding the advisability of organizing a company for the operation of a chain of theatres in small towns, Mr. Swaine for the Famous Players raised the point that the document had no relevancy in the charges of conspiracy against the other respondents, that at the time it was drawn Famous Players had no relation to Black, but Mr. Swaine would concede that at the time Famous Players did sell pictures to Black the same as to any one else. Mr. Swaine submitted the prospectus should be reserved and if in the future a foundation is laid for its admission that that action might then be taken.

Examiner Alvord so decided.

"You never organized this corporation?"

Mr. Swaine inquired.

"No Sir," replied Dr. Shallenberger.

Gave Letters Under Direction of Subpoena

After Mr. Cohen had been examined on a number of letters and telegrams Mr. Farrington placed in front of him a pile of filing envelopes.

"Mr. Cohen," said the examiner, "you have submitted to us certain folios pertaining to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners and complaints made to you by various exhibitors throughout the United States respecting the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation with the understanding that we may use these for the purpose of getting in touch with the persons making the complaints and returning the folios to you?"

"I submitted them under the direction of a subpoena with that understanding," replied the witness.

Submits Lists of Complaints

The contents of the folios referred to by Mr. Farrington were outlined by towns and names by Mr. Cohen as he went through the files, to be letters from:

Richford, Vt., S. Carl Carpenter; Glenwood, Iowa, Seymore; Centerville, Md., Cahill; Columbia, Tenn., Jackson; Huntsville, Ala., C. L. Hackworth; Bartow, Fla., Marquis Amusement Company; Fort Smith, Ark., C. A. Lick; Pawtucket, R. I., Senator Hartford; Caribou, Me., Flora; Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Depaul; Madison, Neb., Boettner; Lawrence, Mass., Andrew J. Cobe correspondence with Alfred S. Black; New Orleans, Amelie Poujol.

Newman, Cal., Johnson; New Bedford, Mass., George Walden, Jr.; Oxford, Miss., R. X. Williams; Oakland, Cal., C. C. Griffin; Fort Hope, Canada, J. S. Smart; Tomahawk, Wis., A. L. Robarge; Norwich, Conn., H. Schwartz, known as the Willimantic case; Willimantic, Conn., H. Schwartz; Allentown, Penna., Dr. Stuckert; Beloit, Wis., Frank Reichstein; Bristol, Tenn., Wesley White; Bath, N. Y., Thomas; Buffalo, C. A. Hayman.

Bangor, C. Stern; Houma, La., A. J. Bettincourt; Kansas City, Mo., C. H. Burkey; Ada, Ohio, Faulkner; Kansas City, Mo., Monroe City, Angus & Breedshaw; Joliet, Ill., J. J. Rubens; Mattoon, Ill., Uran; Harrisburg, McGarragh; Mansfield, La., Mrs. Brownsfield; Lexington, Neb., Falkenburgh; Hastings, Neb., Preston; Chicago, Koffman; Charlotte, N. C., H. B. Varner; also a folio for S. A. Lynch, which included communications from W. C. Patterson; a series of letters from Alfred S. Black to Mrs. Lottie M. Pierce, Manchester, Vt., and letters from Mr. Cohen to Mr. Zukor.

Mr. Farrington asked Mr. Cohen if he had received any salary for his service as president. The witness stated that he had not, although there had been mentioned the sum of $25,000 for the first of the three years and $30,000 for each of the following two years.

Mr. Cohen quoted Mr. Zukor as saying at the Hotel Claridge meeting with the M. P. T. O. committee that he wanted to do everything to bring about the advancement of the industry and that he didn't want to destroy theatre owners; that he would do everything to bring about a better understanding.

When Mr. Farrington inquired what had actually been done as a result of that meeting Mr. Cohen outlined the action in a number of cases. The witness said the great number of complaints that had been coming in of intimidation, coercion and flashing of blueprints had stopped to a great extent. "We did not after this meeting have so many complaints as before," he said.

Resuming the stand for the afternoon session Monday, Mr. Cohen said that the 42 complaints made over a period of three years represented a "numerically" small matter considering that Famous Players-Lasky had at least 8,000 accounts on their books, but that it was not a small matter when the complaints are against a policy which was destructive of the most vital force in the industry, the small town theatre.

N. Y. Houses the "Show Windows"

"The first-class, first-run houses on Broadway are the show windows for the larger distributing concerns," said Mr. Mr. Cohen. "There is room for more of the houses of the Capitol, Rivoli, Strand, Criterion, and Rialto type but in order to build them leases on Broadway property would have to be gotten from Famous Players-Lasky," continued Mr. Cohen.

Taking the complaints individually Mr. Swaine asked the M. P. T. O. A. president if it were not true that had Famous Players-Lasky allowed the threatened combine of the Gordon, Black and Gray interests in New England there would have been small chance of getting Paramount product into that territory. "It is my opinion that Famous Players would have been better off had they worked with the independent theatres in that territory" the witness replied. "But that is a matter of opinion, is it not?" Mr. Cohen agreed that it was and that had the combine of those factions materialized with a First National franchise as its main supply Famous Players-Lasky films probably would be excluded from the houses affected in the deal.

With regard to the New England situation Mr. Cohen said he did not know that Mr. Black controlled the board operating the Black Theatres in New England; a question which Mr. Swaine put.

The renting of dramatic or feature pictures to schools, universities or institutions not paying taxes to the government as commercial theatrical enterprises was "unfair competition" said Mr. Cohen. "Educational or pedagogic films are another matter."

The organization of which he is president had "500 members at the time of the Cleveland convention; six or seven thousand at Minneapolis and 10,000 members when the Washington convention was called," the witness said. According to his present figures about two-thirds of the theatres of the country, which he estimates at 16,000, are members of the M. P. T. O. A.

Mr. Swaine asked if it were not a fact that the Famous Players-Lasky had lived up more faithfully to the advance deposits agreement than any other company. "We never had any trouble with Famous Players-Lasky over deposits," Mr. Cohen replied.

"The building of theatres in large cities by distributing concerns has not severely handicapped exhibitors" said Mr. Cohen. "But it is a ruinous policy which destroys the independent when a distributing concern operates its own houses in small towns."

On Tuesday morning, Counsel for Famous Players-Lasky continued with an analysis of the complaints submitted by Mr. Cohen. Testimony from this source was mostly to the effect that a majority of the protests lodged with the M. P. T. O. A. against Famous Players-Lasky had been adjusted after Mr. Cohen took them up with Mr. Zukor or Mr. Kent.

The complaints fell under about three classifications: "Shock" advertising; refusal of the service by F. P. L.; and the rumors of building, or the actual building or leasing of theatres by interests allied with Famous Players-Lasky.

SIX MONTHS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS OF FEATURES

On the succeeding pages will be found a tabulation by pictures and cities of all the reports on first-run showings printed in Exhibitors Trade Review from January to June, 1923. We print each week authoritative reports gathered by our own correspondents in a score of the important first-run centers of the country. Exhibitors, by turning to voice of the Box-Office, can see at a glance the form in which these reports appear each week. The name of the city and the name of the theatre are specifically given in each picture report, as will be noted. Tabulation of reports for six months has been reduced to as simple form as possible. First, appears the name of the picture. Then follow the names of the cities and the picture ratings, which are as follows: 1—Excellent Business; 2—Good Business; 3—Average Business; 4—Poor Business. The name of the distributor is placed in parentheses after each picture. The following abbreviations are used: Al Lichtman, AL; Arrow Film Co., Arrow; American Releasing, AR; Associated Exhibitors, AE; Associated Photo-plays, AP; Associated First Nat'l, FN; C. C. Burr, CCB; Famous Players-Lasky, PAR; Educational, Ed; Equity Pictures, E; Film Booking Offices, FBO; Fox, F; Goldwyn, G; Griffith, D. The Voice of the Box Office will not grow weaker this summer in America's Finest Theatre because Manufactured Weather is making "Every day a good day"

Mr. Sid Grauman has marked a new era in Motion Picture Showmanship by building his Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, the first scientifically conditioned theatre in the world!*

Mr. Grauman will be set down in Motion Picture History as pioneering the greatest advance in the art of exhibiting since the building of the first Nickelodeon.

No Exhibitor with a seating capacity of 2,000 or more can afford to neglect this opportunity to secure the inside, detailed story of Mr. Grauman's great achievement,—a theatre so comfortable and inviting that it knows no "off-season" either summer or winter.

The current number of our private magazine, The Weather Vein, tells the story. We will send you a copy upon request, without obligating you in any way.

Write right now.

* Conditioned means uniformly heated, humidified and ventilated without drafts in winter; uniformly cooled, de-humidified and ventilated without drafts in summer;—under automatic control. Conditioning must not be confused with any conception of "ventilation" or "cooling" which you may now have, because Grauman's Metropolitan is the only conditioned theatre in the world today.

Times—One can retreat to the foyer feeling that one had enjoyed the entertainment. Herald—This is a cut and dried drama of hypocrisy in the well known fast set. American—Distinctly out of the common run of film. World—True to the generally employed cinema formula. Sun and Globe—Begins very well, holding the interest through the early part vigorously, but presently is overcome by an attack of pernicious anemia. Telegram—An absorbing story, lavishly mounted and entertainingly told. Evening World—Great attention has been paid to detail and photography and the results along the latter lines are very soothing to the eye. CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Maud Barhyte Miriam Cooper
Gerard Welden Gaston Glass
Mlle Giselle Ethel Shannon
Sally Malakoff Ruth Clifford
Count Malakoff Stuart Holmes
Maud's Father Josef Swickard
Sally's Mother Trudy Shattuck

Maud Barhyte becomes engaged to Gaston Glass and visits Paris with her father and lover. They are entertained by the Duchess Malakoff, formerly Sally Kandy, American, and old sweetheart of Gaston's in their childhood days. Sally's marriage to the Duke Malakoff is the work of her socially ambitious mother. Sally despises him and the Duke is most interested in his mistress, Mlle Giselle. Sally still loves Gaston. While he and the Barhytes are her guests she contrives to bring Mlle Giselle to join the company. Sally installs Giselle in the room first occupied by Maud Barhyte, moving the latter to another apartment. Gaston, unaware of the change, in his fiancée's quarters, surprises the Duke visiting Mlle Giselle and supposes that Maud is the object of the nobleman's quest. Later he and the Duke quarrel and engage in a duel in which both are wounded. Meanwhile, Maud leaves Paris on receiving a message from her father who has gone to P. cardy. She entrusts Sally with a letter to Gaston explaining her absence. Sally keeps the latter. She induces the Duke to give her a duel between the Duke and the aggrieved Glass is thrown in for good melodramatic measure, the net result being a feature somewhat artificial in spots and not particularly convincing at best, but possessing so much racy action, lurid emotional phases and colorful society atmosphere that it bids fair to rank as a good box office attraction.

Miriam Cooper carries off the chief dramatic honors by her earnest and extremely pathetic impersonation of Maud Barhyte. Ruth Clifford plays the difficult role of the unhappy little Duchess commendably, Ethel Shannon is a daringly coquettish figure as the adventuress, Mlle. Giselle, and Stuart Holmes gets a lot of fun out of the utterly despicable character of the rakish Duke Malakoff.

In exploiting the picture the brilliant society angle should be played up strongly, with stress laid upon the significance of its title and attention directed to the worth of the talented cast.

The Mysterious Witness

Released by F. B. O. Story by Eugene Manlove Rhodes. Directed by Seymore Zeff. Length, 4800 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Johnny Brant Robert Gordon
Mrs. Brant Nannie Wright
Ed Carney Jack Connolly
Ruth Garland Elinor Fair
Jim Garland J. Wharton James

Johnny Brandt leaves his aged widowed mother to go out into the world to make some money. He arrives on a ranch where he is given a job. Johnny stints himself and sends all his money back to his mother but he writes her that he is making progress. Johnny is accused by the foreman of the murder of an old man and is put in prison. His mother failing to hear from him comes to the little town. She is met at the station by the foreman who takes all the money she has, under the pretense of aiding her to secure her son's release. During the trial Johnny asks to present his horse as a witness, proving that because of the animal being gun shy it would have been impossible for him to have committed the murder as described by the "eye witness." The verdict is not guilty and the foreman and his accomplices are held. Johnny is reunited with his mother and wins the owner's daughter for his bride.

"The Mysterious Witness" is a picture that will satisfy the demands of an uncritical audience. It goes heavily into the mother love theme and plays on the sympathies of the spectator by introducing numerous complications between mother and son. The story is told only fairly well and may be amusing to some who see it.

Then of course there are others to whom this type of picture appeals more readily and who will be satisfied with the presentation as it is. Robert Gordon gives a pleasing performance, and as the self-sacrificing young lad will win the sympathy of his audience. Nannie Wright, who plays the mother role, will also find a way to the heart. The other members of the cast give good support and there are one or two comedy spots in the picture to offset the other heavy parts.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Robert Fisher Clarke Harry T. Morey

While passing through the little town of St. Mary's, Clarke is attracted by the tremendous power of the rapids going to waste. He immediately settles there divorce. Gaston, believing Maud false, weds Sally. The discovery of Maud's letter to him in his wife's possession reveals the truth and he denounces her. Sally shoots herself and Gaston is arrested on suspicion of having slain her. Sally's maid goes to America and gives Maud a letter written by her mistress just before her suicide which exonerates Gaston. Maud hastens to Gaston with the document, he is freed and they are united.

No expense has been spared in the production of this picture, which abounds in luxurious settings and beautiful photography. There are many gorgeous interiors shown, the grouping is effective and a regular fashion parade of elaborate costumes greets the eye, the gown display being especially in evidence during the scenes where the ill-mated Duke and Duchess of Malakoff hold high revel with their numerous guests.

Artistically, the film rates 100 per cent and is pretty sure to appeal successfully to feminine patrons. The story deals with the sale of a French nobleman's dual title in the matrimonial market, the disillusion of his young American wife after marriage, her infatuation for a former sweetheart, Gaston Glass, and the tricky means she adopts to separate him from his fiancée.

Glass weds the ex-duchess, discovers her perfidy, reproaches her, she commits suicide and he regains the girl he really loved. A and interests the townpeople in harnessing the water. One day he rescues a little baby girl from the river and adopts her. Clarke also becomes interested in Elsie Worden but Elsie is in love with Jim Belding. Clarke gives the young man every opportunity for advancement and makes good. When Elsie again refuses Clarke's proposal of marriage he decides to leave St. Mary's and takes with him his little adopted daughter.

Here is a story that has an air about it of being different. That is to say it is told differently at least. Although the romantic element is much the same as many of the movie plots there are many new and interesting twists and quite some other features of worth in the production. Particularly so is the filming of the process of making steel.

The shots of the rapids are good, as are all of the scenes taken on the real location. Harry T. Morey gives a strong performance as the engineer who startles the town with his ability. Mary Astor is attractive as the girl and Walter Miller is good as the young hero.

On numerous occasions the plot comes near to drifting into the same old rut and traveling the old familiar path. However, the direction has been well handled and good interest is developed and the triteness has been successfully overcome. It should prove to be a satisfactory box office attraction in any locality.

The Law of the Lawless

Paramount Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Konrad Bercovici. Scenario by E. Lloyd Sheldon and Edfrid Bingham. Director, Victor Fleming. Running Time, 70 Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Sahande Dorothy Dalton
 Yucan Theodore Kosloff
 Costa Charles de Roche
 Ali Mechmet Tully Marshall
 Osman Fred Huntley
 Fanutza Margaret Loomis
 Osman, once wealthy member of a tribe of Tartars, owes money to the village usurer, Ali. The latter offers to take Osman's daughter, Sahande, as payment of the debt but is refused. According to Tartar law, Osman is offered publicly as a slave to the man who will pay his debt. Sahande takes her father's place on the auction block and is purchased by Costa, a gypsy chief. Sahande joins his tribe. Yucan lover of Sahande, vows to recover her. Costa in response to Sahande's plea, agrees to remain aloof from her for ten days, during which period she expects Yucan to rescue her. But Yucan, afraid to face Costa single-handed, organizes a raid on the gypsy camp at a time when he knows all the men, excepting the chief have left for a neighboring fair. The Tartars capture Costa, while Sahande, disgusted with Yucan's cowardice rides to rally Costa men to their chief's aid. She brings them to the village, enters alone unobserved and gives the signal for attack. Costa is confined to the minaret of the mosque, and there Sahande finds him. Yucan attacks the bound captive and Sahande fights desperately in her husband's defense. The minaret is set on fire. Costa throws Yucan into the flames and rescues his wife. The Tartars are overcome and Sahande and her father ride away with the gypsies, the chief happy in the love of his wife.

This tale of a Tartar maid who is won by a gypsy chief has been turned into a very entertaining picture by director Victor

Fleming, who has utilized to the full his advantages of an extremely original plot and unique setting, the atmosphere of life among these strange folks in their village by the Black Sea being entirely new to the screen, so far as the writer's knowledge goes.

The love romance is ingeniously spun out and the suspense skillfully developed and maintained; at the beginning one is led to believe that Sahande's first lover, the sweet serenade serenader and maker of songs, Yucan, is destined to perform wonderful deeds of valor by going upon the trail of the gypsy chief who has carried her away and carving him into mincemeat. So when Yucan shows the white feather and overcomes his rival by force of numbers the "surprise element" is complete and sympathy immediately swings to the gallant leader of the nomad band.

The action is lively from the start, never loses speed and pivots sharply into a bully climax, where the recreant Yucan is hurled by the gypsy king into devouring flames, the latter rescuing his bride from the burning minaret by a jumping feat that puts the "thrill" stuff across with great effect. The quaint costumes of the Tartars, their tribal customs and generally rich Oriental coloring are artistic adjuncts of considerable value in forcing the picture's spectacular appeal and the photography from beginning to end abounds in beautiful long shots and closeups, with fine contrasts of light and shading. Dorothy Dalton, as the dashing Sahande, is a singularly lovely heroine, whose work throughout is characterized by unleashed energy and emotional charm, Charles de Roche is the beau ideal of a gallant gypsy cavalier in the role of Costa, Theodore Kosloff gives a striking performance as Yucan, Tully Marshall furnishes one of his customary fine character sketches as Sahande's old father and the support is excellent. The film gives every indication of proving a good box office asset and care should be taken in exploiting it to dwell upon the novelty of the locale, its fast action and drawing power of star and supporting cast. Salty Saunders

William Steiner Productions, Inc. Photoplay In Five Parts. Running Time, Fifty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Salty Saunders Neal Hart
 Sam Baxter, chief of the Texas Rangers, learns that Scarface Wheeler has been released from prison and is employed as foreman on the Flying X Ranch. Jud Howell, who gave evidence against Scarface tells Baxter, the ex-convict, has vowed revenge on him. Baxter details Salty Saunders to shadow Scarface. Saunders is also looking for the man who killed his father several years before. He gets a job from Scarface at the Flying X. During a roundup Betty Hampton is saved from death while roping a steer, by Salty. Scarface discharges Salty, who camps just outside the premises. Betty sees him and sends her old colored servant Betty with a message thanking him. Salty enters the house, is seen and assaulted by Scarface and thrashes him. Later Salty overhears Hampton, Betty's supposed uncle, conspiring with Scarface and two confederates to raid Jud Howells cattle. Salty informs Baxter and deputies start after the raiders, Salty is captured by Scarface and tied to a wild steer, but is rescued by Baxter's men. The cattle thieves are caught. Salty finds Hampton attacking Betty and knocks him down. Baxter and his posse arrive with Scarface and the other prisoners. Scarface turns State's evidence and reveals the fact that Betty's supposed uncle is the murderer of her father and Salty's parent and that his real name is Black Tinnin. Salty and Betty are united.

While there is nothing new about the plot of this picture, which follows faithfully along the usual lines of Western melodrama, it is prolific in sensational situations of the kind which delight all admirers of wild border tales. There is plenty of gunfighting, hard riding, hand-to-hand scraps etc., and good out-of-doors atmosphere, as well as a love romance which progresses swiftly and ends happily, the whole constituting a film which should appeal favorably to the kind of audience for which it was designed.

The camera work throughout is good, such scenes as the big roundup, for instance being skilfully filmed and alive with whirling action. Indeed one of "Salty Saunder's" best qualities is its speedy movement, there are no dragging situations or unnecessary padding in evidence, but "something doing" all the time, the "bad men" plot and execute their various villainous Texas Rangers, with the indefatigable hero ever in the forefront of the battle, performs prodigies of valor.

Neal Hart is an extremely busy person in the role of Salty Saunders. He looks and acts like a genuine fiction frontier type, the sort of hero one naturally expects to see dominating the action in Western yarns, is a real dare-devil on horseback, makes love and corpses with equal facility and gives a smooth, well-balanced performance. His support is adequate. While not adapted to the needs of the bigger theatres, the feature ought to meet the demands of the smaller and neighborhood houses. It should be exploited as "a fast-fire," thrilling Westerner, with Neal Hart played up in the localities where he has a strong following. G. T. P.

Only 38

Paramount Photoplay in Five Parts. Adapted from the Stage Play by A. E. Thomas. Scenario by Clara Beranger. Director, William DeMille. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Mrs. Stanley Lois Wilson
 Lucy Stanley May McAvoy
 Professor Giddings Elliott Dexter
 Hiram Sanborn George Fawcett
 Bob Stanley Robert Agnew
 Mrs. Newcomb Jane Keckley
 Mrs. Peters Lillian Leighton
 Sydney Johnson Taylor Graves
 Mary Hedley Ann Cornwall
 On the death of her clergyman husband Mrs. Stanley resolves to live her future life in her own way. She has spent twenty years under the Puritanical rule of her elderly spouse and brought up two children, Lucy and Bob, now in their teens.

With money given her by her father, she sends the son and daughter to college, where she also obtains a position as librarian. She is only thirty-eight and having discarded her old-fashioned style of dressing her good looks win her the admiration of Professor Giddings. Bob and Lucy, although young, are straightlaced and do not approve of their mother's new freedom. They are aghast at the attentions paid to Mrs. Stanley by Giddings and their anger is brought to a climax when she dances with him at a college hop. Lucy, through no fault of her own, becomes involved in a scrape with a fellow student who is in love with her and, blames her mother for her narrow escape. Mrs. Stanley decides to give up Giddings and revert to her old way of living just to please her children. Giddings has a heart-to-heart talk with Lucy in which he shows her how the selfish attitude of herself and brother threatens to ruin his and her mother's lives. The girl's common sense comes to the front, she converts Bob to her way of thinking and brings about a reconciliation between Mrs. Stanley and her faithful professor lover.

A charming picture, skilfully directed and cleverly acted, "Only 38," registers as an attraction which any exhibitor can safely present to his patrons secure in the belief that he has exploited a film which will "warm the cockles of their hearts" and bring pleasing box office results. Here we have one of those all too rare instances where a feature's strength of appeal lies altogether in the power of a straight, simple story to sway the emotions. Combine this quality with sincere, unaffected acting by a competent cast and you get the sort of screen entertainment which wins widespread popularity, while dozens of far more elaborate and spectacular offerings fall by the wayside.

There are some remarkably pretty exteriors in "Only 38," the night shots of the lake, for instance, where Lucy and her lover set forth on the canoeing trip which so nearly ends in disaster and other views, including that of the campus and flower-embowered home of Mrs. Stanley. The interior showing the college hop is also faithfully filmed and the grouping well done. But there is no attempt made to enthrall one's imagination by the introduction of sumptuous gowns; simplicity and unadulterated heart interest, with a certain joyous flavor of clean, delightful comedy seasoning the whole—such is the literary material which Director William DeMille and his talented players have so judiciously utilized. Lois Wilson is wonderfully natural and wistfully alluring in the role of the middle-aged mother whose Indian summer romance comes perilously near being wrecked through the inability of her Puritanical little daughter and son to understand that "love may influence 38 as well as eighteen"—as a pertinent subtitle puts it. Her work is notable for its sympathetic glow and a quaint sense of humor which flickers through the serious situations which fall to her share. May McAvoy gives a delightful performance as the prettily priggish but lovable Lucy, Elliott Dexter is excellent as the professor and Robert Agnew convincing in the part of the youthful Bob Stanley. The support is all that could be desired.

In exploiting the feature it should be made clear that the title refers to age and bears upon the possibility of a love affair developing late in life. Reference to the splendid work of principles and supporting cast may be made, with the names of May McAvoy, Lois Wilson and Elliott Dexter prominently advertised.

The Prairie Mystery

Truart Film Corporation Photoplay In Five Parts. Author and Director, George Edwards Hall. Cameraman, John Pastor. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS
 Jim Holmes Bud Osborne
 The Orphan Pearl Norton
 Captain Jinks Monte Collins, Sr.
 Jerusha Hopkins Rose Curley
 Paula Wilson Pauline Curley
 Tom Hendon Ben Hall
 Andy Spence Harry Gerard
 Natalie Somers Hazel Evans.
 Sophie Higgins Norma Wills

While en route through the prairies an attack is made upon a wagon train by an band of bandits. Rescue comes, but too late, for all but two of the wagon party, a boy and girl, have been slain. These are adopted by Jim Holmes, who led the rescuers. Years pass, the girl has grown to womanhood, and Jim falls in love with her. When he asks her to become his wife she consents, although her heart is already given to the other survivor of the massacre. Rustlers wearing masks invade the settlement and suspicion is directed to Jim as their captain. Later it develops that the leader of the rustlers is a woman. Jim is cleared of suspicion but he realizes that the girl he loves has bestowed her affections on the young companion of her childhood and he goes away, leaving them to each other.

This is a good average Westerner, with a plot which has some spice of originality, although its principal appeal lies in the combat thrills, daring horsemanship and generally melodramatic action which are the leading characteristics of this type of picture. The mystery exploited in the title centers around the activities of a bunch of rustlers who affect masks as a disguise, and the identity of their captain, who later turns out to be of the feminine persuasion, after her feats of raiding have caused dark clouds of suspicion to descend upon the perfectly innocent hero. Rustlers operating in masks are an entirely new departure in cattle land stories and do not quite carry conviction, but at anyrate their introduction gives a novel flavor to the progress of events.

Bud Osborne makes his debut as a feature star in this film and does so with commendable effect, playing the hero role of Jim Holmes with praiseworthy dash and vivacity. He wins a good deal of sympathy and it may be observed that the fact of the hero surrendering the girl he loves to a rival who has won her heart is another unusual note in Western romance. Pearl Norton is the girl in the case, a very charming heroine and well balanced support is rendered the principals by other members of the company.

The photoplay includes a variety of well filmed outdoor views, with many fine long shots, the locations are skilfully selected and some remarkably pleasing lighting effects are achieved. As an attraction for the smaller class of theatres "The Prairie Mystery" ought to give satisfaction. It should be exploited as straight Western melodrama, with stress laid upon its exciting situations and fast action. G. T. P.

Daniel Boone, the pioneer, sets out prior to the Revolution of 76 to found a colony on the Indian frontier. His foster son, Jack Gordon whom he rescued from the Indians when a small boy accompanies him and risks his life on numerous occasions to aid the cause of freedom. Overcoming the intrigue of unscrupulous plotters against the welfare of the new nations, these sturdy patriots help lay the foundation of what our country is today.

This is the latest serial that Universal is offering to the public. It is made in fifteen episodes, and judging from the first three chapters, upon which this review is based, we find much of merit in the film. Whether or not it can be considered a valuable historic addition to the screen does not particularly enter into the box office value.

It does, however, afford good entertainment and shows promise of including in its chapters some interesting situations. The characters of early American history are represented and will no doubt appeal to the younger generation. Takes as just a bit of entertainment the film should satisfy the patrons who become interested in serials and with a plot dealing with one of the famous characters of history it should carry an added appeal. After Six Days Screen portrayal of the Old Testament. Presented by Weiss Brothers. Produced by Armando Vay. Director, Ptero Antonio Gariavzo.

Spectacular mass effects and the scenic grandeur of the views visualizing on the screen portions of the Old Testament are the most impressive and outstanding features of "After Six Days," the work of an Italian producer being presented in this country by Weiss Brothers.

Egypt, Palestine, the authentic settings of the Biblical texts were used as the locations for the staging of these magnificent screen pictures. With nothing inimical to the illusion in the vistas which spread before the camera set-ups, the director employed the long shot of telling advantage and in many instances used great crowd effects notably well.

"After Six Days" is the American edition of a production which came to this country in 78 reels or so. In its present form as "After Six Days" the offering runs between eight and nine thousand feet and in thus taking the cream of the numerous scenes and assembling them so as to present pictures of the most generally familiar Bible texts, there is offered an attraction which appears to have possibilities as a theatrical attraction. If the picture is incapable of adding notably to the store of Biblical knowledge possessed of the average person, it should not detract therefrom, for notions based on an acquaintance with the Scriptures

The eight reels introduce scenes in the Garden of Eden; Cain and Abel; the Ark of the Covenant; the destruction of Sodom; and rather fulsomely treats the story of Joseph and of Moses. Considerable effort toward the production of elaborate scenic effects is evident in the episodes in Egypt and the Exodus. Solomon is shown in the final scenes of "After Six Days." The Tower of Babel is another of the many instances of the producer's pains-taking effort and elaborate method in seeking impressive visual appeal.

The most effective avenue of approaching the public with this attraction of course seems through enlisting the interest of churches and Sunday school classes. The outstanding feature is the "bigness" of the scenes and "After Six Days" should be billed as a production showing great panoramic views of these parts of the world with which the Bible is concerned.

CAMPAIGN K. O.'s

HOT WEATHER JINX

Indianapolis.—At a total expense of less than four hundred dollars above the usual advertising appropriation the Circle Theatre conducted a broadside campaign of heralds, tie-ups and newspaper advertising on First National's "The Girl of the Golden West" that routed hot weather and brought crowds to the theatre. The campaign was planned and executed by Manager Ralph Lieber, with the able assistance of his advertising manager, Ace Berry.

A candy company distributed a confection called "A Kiss from the Girl of the Golden West." The theatre supplied the printed wrappers. A tie-up with the Speedway race the same week was had for the printing of cards publicizing the two greatest attractions of the week: "The race and the Circle Theatre's showing of 'The Girl of the Golden West.'" In addition there were window displays and fourteen stores of the Hook Drug Company featured a drink named after the photoplay; a double truck of co-operative advertising; and as a stock company was presenting the stage play there was advertising advocating people to see the play and compare it with the picture.

One of the most interesting stunts in the campaign was a tie-up with six trust companies that gave a window display featuring an old whiskey keg and describing the way banking was done in the days of "The Girl of the Golden West" when the keg was the safe deposit vault. The obvious comparison with modern methods was made.

KEEPS POWDER DRY

New York.—As the feature of an Anniversary Week bill at the Capitol Theatre this week, the Lichtman offering "Daughters of the Rich" received some special exploitation which rested mainly on a tie-up arrangement with the Djer Kiss Company.

The week previous to the opening the Capitol distributed 5,000 samples of Djer Kiss Powder Box with a puff. Attached to the box was a tag which read "For more beauty secrets, see 'Daughters of the Rich.'" The company also arranged window displays at drug stores in the vicinity of the theatre. "Daughters of the Rich" was also exploited by a special drive for the Brentano edition of the novel from which it was adapted. 20,000 heralds were distributed through this medium.

PUBLISH SCENARIO

Newark, N. J.—The scenario which Rupert Hughes made from his own novel, "Souls for Sale," was published serially by the Ledger while the picture was being shown at the Rialto Theatre. At the head of each installment was a paragraph telling the readers that the text which followed was the actual script from which Rupert Hughes directed the picture and suggested that the story be cut out and saved in order to enable those who had ambitions to become scenario writers to learn the form and construction of a scenario.

MORE MISSING LETTERS

Wilmington, N. C.—Reports from the Victoria Theatre, managed by the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, credit much of the big attendance during its "Dr. Jack" engagement to interest excited by full page newspaper advertisement tie-ups with local merchants which contained a "missing letter contest." It was announced that these letters rightly put together would spell the words in Dr. Jack's favorite prescription.

A total of fifty Victoria Theatre admission tickets formed prizes. Mrs. Elizabeth Vance was nearest right with "Laughter procures health," the error of "procures" in place of "makes," not affecting the meaning.

TELL WHY THEY LIKE

DAD IN THIS STUNT

Rochester, N. Y.—The Eastman Theatre in advertising and exploiting First National's "Daddy" wanted to find out from the youngsters of the city what kind of a man made the ideal Daddy. A contest was opened for all tots of 11 and under to submit their ideas through the Rochester Times-Union. Five hundred responses were received.

"Why Do You Think Your Daddy is the Best in the World?" was the manner in which the Times-Union put the question. If the answers of Rochester childhood is any criterion, daddies the world over have a lot to learn about bringing up offsprings.

The response furnished two columns of advertising-news interest for the Times-Union daily. The specifications were for a letter of about 100 words with specific answers to those queries:

"What are the things that make a Daddy such a nice thing to have around the house? What does your Daddy do that you like particularly? What would you like to have him do that he doesn't do now? What does he do that you do not like? What is your idea of the nicest Daddy you could imagine?"

THREE-SHEETS LOCAL OPINIONS

Saginaw, Mich.—Criticisms of the Goldwyn production of "The Christian" solicited from prominent club people invited to a special showing at the Wolverine Theatre, were used on a three-sheet banner displayed on a street corner. The stand attracted considerable notice.

HAS THE LAW WITH HIM

Portland, Ore.—Getting the city police for a special showing of "Within the Law" was an easy matter for Paul Noble, Manager of the Liberty Theatre. The genius behind the campaign, however, made itself evident in having the showing staged in the court room of Judge Eckwall.

It gave a chance for an unusual summons and invitations were issued to the cops in the form of a printed order from L. V. Jenkins, chief of police, that were practically a subpoena to appear in court. The idea was good for a newspaper story in addition to the opportunity of personal endorsements that was provided for on the back of the invitation

LOCAL BEAUTIES FEATURED

Richmond.—Advertising for the special film showing the screen efforts of local girls which was made by the Bijou Theatre in connection with the presentation of "Souls For Sale" featured the line "Richmond girls are in the movies. See them at the Bijou Theatre."

Fifteen merchants cooperated with the theatre, advertising in a double-page display in the newspaper. Each merchant had the privilege of nominating one of the girls to appear in the film.

SPECIAL LIGHTING

COLORS PRESENTATION

The projectionists at Allen's Palace Theatre in Calgary, Alberta, Messrs. Aaron and Foster, arranged a realistic light plot for the fire scene in "Souls for Sale." This lighting effect, according to T. R. Tubman, manager of the theatre, "made a distinct hit with the audience, many of whom thought the red glow was cast from the film itself."

Mr. Tubman describes this special lighting of the fire scene as follows:

"The equipment used was the switch-board, equipped with dimmers on the house lighting and stage circuits. The red circuit in the footlights and in the six decorative baskets on the sides of the Auditorium were brought into effect, while two 1,000 watt lamps with red medium, were hung above and behind the screen and masked by velour curtains.

"After the lightning strikes power plant for the circus set, lights in the house were gradually dimmed, the red circuits were brought up in the baskets, the red circuits in the footlights were brought up partially, and the dimmer control on the overhead 1,000 watt borders were working all through the fire scene, bringing dimmer up full on long shots and close-ups of burning circus equipment for about one second, and down to about one-fourth on interior of tent scenes.

"On the last scene before the end, the baskets, borders and footlights were gradually dimmed out and side lights up in the house."

"SLOW MOTION" SIGN PAINTING

Jacksonville—A guessing stunt based on "slow motion" billboard lettering registered with a bang as exploitation for "The Rustle of Silk" at the Rialto Theatre here. Manager Hill rented an illuminated 24-sheet stand and started the painting of the title and play date of the attraction in mix-up fashion, skipping letters and half completing the others. At the same time he broke out in the newspapers with ads calling attention to the queer happenings in the neighborhood of the billboard.

Prizes were offered for the best written answers explaining the full content of the half-painted lines. A catch line was added—"If it's a Paramount picture, it's the best show in town." The rules of the contest required an explanation as to why the thought expressed by the catch line was correct. This catch line phase of the stunt can be as well—perhaps better—applied to a theatre slogan.

THINGS FILM AND FILMY

Madison, Wis.—It may be a revelation to know that they have to be tied up, but that's not this story—Goldwynner Walter D. Nealand sought out the local dealer in Vanity Fair Underwear when aiding the Parkway Theatre here in exploiting the Hugo Ballin production of "Vanity Fair." And after a little conversation there was a tie-up between this well advertised brand of feminine finery and the Parkway attraction. Window displays and newspaper advertising featured the event and in return for the assistance of the merchant the theatre used a slide announcing that the Simpson Garment Co. was the exclusive agent in Madison for that brand of underwear.

"BRIGHT SHAWL" PROLOGUE

New Haven, Conn.—Everyone in New Haven knows Manager Will D. Harriss of Gordon's Olympic Theatre, and has heard of his pretty daughter, Eleanor, who has artistic ambitions. Wearing a shawl that was an exact replica of the one worn by Dorothy Gish in "The Bright Shawl," the 17-year-old dancer gave a Spanish interpretation as the prologue to the picture. The act went over well.

This window display in a Philadelphia store arranged by the Stanley Company for the showing of "The Hottentot," at the Stanley Theatre, is a lesson in simplicity. The Lion Brand collar named "The Hottentot," was featured with advertising on the First National offering, is the article to be displayed, that and the title—and that's all there is, there isn't any more, save a couple of spot lights to make the arrangement more emphatic.

The large cutouts might have been much more effective if there were not so many other things to take the eye. However, as cooperative advertising goes this is a good splash for the Lichtman offering "Thorns and Orange Blossoms." It featured the novel along with the showing of the film at the Royal Theatre in Kansas City, Mo.

The book department of R. H. Macy in New York made a special drive for the photoplay edition of "The Covered Wagon," hooking up with the showing of the Paramount screen epic at the Criterion.

A store adjoining the Rivoli Theatre in Portland, Ore., provided the space for this attractive display of scenes from First National's "The Bright Shawl." Transparent pictures were mounted in a frame and illuminated from the rear, while the windows were used for neat arrangements of lobby cards and stills.

A treasure chest was displayed in the lobby of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., for exploitation on the Patheserial "Plunder." Manager A. L. Snell scattered several keys to the treasure box and the kiddies brought them in and tried them on the padlock.

Frank Andrews, of the Auditorium Theatre, Modesta, Calif., used the ballyhoo shown above for Universal's "In the Days of Buffalo Bill." The engine stuck on front of the light truck was light itself, being made of compo board, but the attention value was heavy.

A brand of boys clothes to be widely advertised as "Penrod and Sam," suits has been prepared for special campaigns with the First National feature depicting the famous Booth Tarkington characters. The group above shows the leaders in the Big League entertainment offered in the photoplay version and all are wearing the "Penrod and Sam," suits. The boys, Ben Alexander, Joe Butterworth, Newton Hall, Herman, and Buddy Messenger have posed for several special photographs to be used in the clothing store-theatre campaigns for this picture.

Aspirants for screen careers had an opportunity to pose for the movies when a "Souls for Sale" stunt was staged by the Bijou Theatre, Richmond, Va. The casting director's questionnaire was used in a double page cooperative ad and films were taken. In addition there was a tie-up with an automobile agent who supplied a fleet of cars for ballyhoo.

The Newark Theatre, Newark, N. J., had the cooperation of the U. S. Navy when it presented the Vitagraph picture "Masters of Men." Machine guns and other equipment was displayed.

HELD FOR ONE MORE WEEK!

It's always the way! When we announce the last week, we get swamped with demands to hold the picture over.

We ran Harold Lloyd's "Dr. Jack" for 6 weeks. "Safety Last" is now beginning its fifth, but although it has proven more popular so far than "Dr. Jack," an ironclad booking of "Robin Hood" to start on May 3, makes it impossible for us to hold it beyond this week.

See it today if you can--but whatever you do, don't miss it! This astonishing combination of laughter and thrill is an experience you get only once in a lifetime.

HAVE YOU SEEN IT?

Hundreds of people have seen it two and three times already, and still no one seems able to figure out how it's done. We can't, either, but we know Lloyd isn't in any real danger through the whole astonishing seven weeks. Maybe you can find the answer.

WHY FIVE WEEKS?

Running the same picture for five weeks in Portland is a positive proof that the picture is a knockout--because if it wasn't the people wouldn't come. And if it's a knockout you certainly want to see it. Here's your last chance--let's go!

The concluding line "Running the same picture for five weeks in Portland is a positive proof that the picture is a knockout--and if it's a knockout you certainly want to see it," is a reasonable and telling way of concluding up this copy.

Millions Being Saved Theatres By Insurance Reductions

An Already Overtaxed Industry Making Headway in Movement to Reduce Burden of Excessive Insurance Rates.

The announcement that a new theatre insurance rate in New York City is now in effect which reduces premium costs 25 per cent is news that should interest every member of our reader family. That reduction if carried out throughout the country would save millions of dollars for theatre owners.

Groaning under special state and federal taxes from which the theatre has been unable to relieve itself the shrewder exhibitors and their organizations, as shown by news from several states, are delving into insurance conditions with a determination to reduce that item of overhead even if nothing can be done immediately to remove the taxes.

One of the most important committees of the theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City is its insurance committee. It has made a close study of the insurance problem extending over two years with the result that the 25% reduction is now in effect and further reductions are believed to be under way.

The strongest argument used by this committee and which was backed up by facts developed in its own investigation was, that although Greater New York theatres—and this includes all kinds, large and small, individual and chain houses,—had paid $270,000 in premiums last year the fire loss was only $3000. The argument was incontrovertible. The insurance interests responded with the cut already announced.

How Michigan Does It.

In previous issues of Exhibitors Trade Review the manner in which the Michigan M. P. T. O. reduced insurance for its members was touched upon in a general way. A request was made of Henderson M. Richey general manager of that active organization to furnish the inside story of how insurance reductions were made. His story follows:

By H. M. RICHEY

Secretary, Michigan M. P. T. O.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, which is regarded everywhere as the most active and efficient organization of its kind in the United States, has worked out the safest and cheapest insurance plan in the country, and have the figures to prove the contention is well founded.

The plan was put into effect last November and in the seven months which elapsed the members of the organization who have taken advantage of the new scheme have saved $50,000 in hard cash. The saving next year will be even larger because there are a large number of old policies still in force.

This is the Time to Look Into Your Overhead Charges

Two successful exhibitor organizations, the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York City and the Michigan Motion Picture Theatre Owners have succeeded in materially lowering the cost of insurance to its member theatres. The New York organization has just announced a reduction of 25%.

We believe that no subject is closer to the interests of our readers than insurance, especially at this time of the year when the pruning shears are being applied to every item of theatre expense in order that the decrease in theatre attendance may be met. More than a year ago this publication conducted a campaign on the insurance problem which met with hearty favor. This article tells what has been done in some parts of the country toward insurance reductions.

A list of the savings effected will prove interesting reading to those theatre owners who have always felt that insurance costs too much. For instance, Claude Cady, of Lansing, will pay out this year in premiums $1,100 less than last year on the same amount of insurance carried. James C. Ritter, of Detroit, will save this year $376.68 and when certain policies still in force have expired his saving will approximate $600.

W. S. McLaren, of Jackson, carries this year insurance of $90,000, which costs him exactly what policies aggregating $55,000 cost him under the old conference rates.

This saving is not confined to the larger cities of the state, because E. S. Brewer, of Owosso, a town of 12,000 inhabitants, will save during 1923 a total of $513.

The list could be multiplied ten fold because theatre owners all over Michigan are saving in like proportion.

The saving effected already will pay from two to five times the amount of annual dues, leaving all the other benefits derived from the activities of the organization free and clear. Members of the organization throughout the state, even in villages with theatres seating less than one hundred persons, have taken advantage of the plan and it is predicted that next year every member of the organization will enroll in the new insurance department.

This is how our insurance department worked out the plan. We studied the insurance question for two years, at first following the lead of the national organization. But finding they were not gaining results we branched out on new lines. This led to conferences with the Mill-Mutuals, of Lansing, and it was not long before plans were worked out for insurance at greatly reduced rates, without in any way impairing the safety of the insured.

A study of insurance statistics revealed the fact that theatre losses in Michigan were much lower than in many other states. This condition was due, it is claimed to the state's rigid code under which fires in theatres were exceedingly rare. For instance, in Michigan no picture theatres are permitted on the second floor of any building. All projection booths must be fire proof and are rigidly inspected by state officials.

The Mill-Mutuals company is an amalgamation of twenty companies. It has been in existence for upwards of fifty years and now has a surplus sufficiently large to carry them through any emergency. The company for years confined its business to mills of various kinds, and it has paid dividends averaging twenty per cent. We induced the company to take up theatre insurance and we were not long in convincing the executives that conference rates were too high, as Michigan theatres had always been included in the hazardous list.

After negotiations had been carried on for several weeks the company agreed to issue policies under a plan that gave the theatre owner a twenty per cent initial saving. They write a five-year policy for four annual premiums, but the payments are made on the basis of one-fifth of the total four premiums, payable each year. For instance, if the premium is $25 a year, or $125 for five years, the policy is written for $100 and paid at the rate of $20 annually. In addition to this saving the company has paid every year for more than 40 years not less than twenty-five per cent in dividends, which is also deducted from the premium payments, making a total savings to the exhibitor of about forty-five per cent.

We had little trouble in selling the plan to members of the organization, who endorsed it enthusiastically, and just as fast as old policies are expiring new policies are being written.

Our study of fire insurance rates led to a study of workmen's compensation and public liability and we decided that theatre owners were being assessed too high on these items. We got busy on this phase of insurance, too, and worked out a plan which has resulted in a saving of forty per cent.

Under the compensation law in Michigan the rate for those engaged in the care and custody of theatres is 74 cents; for stage hands it is 37 cents, and for those in other occupations not having to do with custody or maintenance, the rate has been 26 cents. Under the new arrangements Michigan members will hereafter pay a flat rate of 22 cents regardless of the nature of the work.

Conference rates on public liability, with insurance limited to $10,000, has been 12 cents a seat. Hereafter the association members will be 7½ cents.

So successful has been our handling of the insurance problems that plans are already under way to organize a company within the association, which, it is expected, will result in a further saving in fire insurance premiums. Plans are not yet completed, but they have gone so far that the organization of the proposed department is assured within a year.

Texas Takes It Up

The Texas Exhibitors Association at a recent meeting decided to go into the insurance question in a thorough way. They were advised on many phases of insurance by C. P. Collins whose articles follow:

By C. P. COLLINS

The fire insurance business is a business where the overhead expense is quite excessive. If you pay a premium of $1.00, it takes about 45c of that for the expense of conducting the business. That 45c is expended in various ways, for local agents' commissions and costs which have to be taken care of and also the sub-agents. Like the moving picture industry, they are taxed about nine different ways and that costs about 5 per cent of the premium. So those various expenses make about 45 per cent of all the premiums you have to pay and therefore, they have probably 55 per cent of your premium to pay losses with. You were recently made to pay an increase of approximately 35 per cent in your rate by your State Fire Insurance Commission. There are several ways by which this insurance cost can be reduced.

First, I am not going to advocate taking insurance in any way that will be illegal. That is, I would not advocate to motion picture owners to go to New York and buy insurance from a broker who represents insurance companies not permitted to do business in Texas. There are some there that will write insurance at cut rates and a great deal is written in Texas on that basis. The premiums are based upon that and not represented in the State Commission's rates. I will be frank to say that some motion picture shows and other industries are buying insurance in New York from brokers at greatly reduced rates compared to the rates in Texas. I think the same results can be accomplished in a more satisfactory manner in this industry or any other industry of its magnitude, which would place the producing of a commodity that amounted to as much as the fire insurance in the hands of a single individual or single agency would be. The results that could be gotten from that form of collective purchasing—in the first place, collective purchasing of fire insurance in Texas could be eliminated, about 30 per cent of the expense of doing business would be done away with.

The rates for fire insurance charged by various stock insurance companies are made by the insurance department of the State Government and that Commission, while it attempts in every way to function fairly, still they can't properly handle the business from a scientific basis. If they do, the organization is handicapped by not having sufficient appropriations and things of that sort. They are doing the best they can and all the companies have to charge the rates fixed by this Fire Insurance Commission, except in this particular, which I want to call to your attention: Any company doing business in Texas can, if it so desires, file reduced rates, provided they make it general

An Expert Explains Insurance

By C. C. PERRIN

All insurance underwriting may be divided generally into four classes, viz., stock, mutual, Lloyds and reciprocal.

The stock plan is used by capitalized corporations, organized under special corporation laws, having a capital stock and writing insurance contracts or policies for diversified industries at a profit to themselves. They are in the business for profit only, and charge a cash consideration, called a premium, for the insurance which they furnish.

Lloyds

Lloyds groups are unincorporated stock companies composed of individuals who contribute a fixed amount to a common fund. Through a manager they issue insurance contracts to the public, charge a cash premium, and the profits are proportionately divided among those who contribute to common fund.

Mutual

Mutual companies are incorporated associations insuring only their own members. Some charge a cash premium, others collect a certain portion of a premium taking notes from the policyholders for the remainder, and still others operate on an assessment basis. In all cases the funds collected become the property of the company and are jointly handled. The expense usually is not limited, losses are paid from a common fund and there is usually a contingent liability of the policyholders to pay additional premium in event of unusual loss. These companies are managed by officers elected in accordance with their by-laws.

Reciprocal

Reciprocal or inter-insurance, the names having the same meaning, is the reciprocal exchange of indemnity contracts between corporations, firms or individuals by which they are able to protect themselves from loss by fire or other casualty at actual cost. These corporations, firms and individuals, who constitute the real parties in interest, are commonly called "subscribers." They select a common attorney-in-fact or manager, who establishes an office to effect this exchange of contracts. This manager, under the direction of an "advisory board" made up of subscribers, keeps the books and records, passes upon and classifies risks, makes frequent inspections, adjusts and pays losses and does everything necessary to the exchange of indemnity provided for.

The office operated by the subscribers through their manager, at and through which the subscribers exchange these contracts for their own protection, is commonly designated as the "Exchange," with some descriptive name added to show the class of business in which contracts are so exchanged.

and not applied to one individual. If they made one individual a rate, it would be charged as discriminatory. If they make it general therefore, for the moving picture industry in Texas and if they handle their insurance on a business basis and coordinate all their interests through some central agency, they could, no doubt, secure a substantial reduction in the fire insurance rates in Texas.

I don't have any hesitancy in saying to you frankly that your insurance costs can be reduced from 20 per cent to 25 per cent and you can get the same de-

The subscribers make an annual deposit with their manager, the amount of this deposit being determined usually by the rate which is paid for stock company insurance on the same class of risks, or else by an elaborate system of inspection which is possible to an exchange insuring one class of risks, whereby they are in position to establish their own rates. This deposit remains to the credit of each subscriber, his pro rata share of losses being charged off on his accounts as they occur. A fixed percentage of the subscriber's deposit is set aside to cover expense of management, including manager's compensation.

Handling of Subscribers' Funds

All subscribers' funds are handled severally and not jointly. At all times these funds remain the property of the subscribers respectively. At the end of the policy period, all sums that remain after the payment of losses and fixed expenses revert to the subscriber and are returned to him as savings, except that in the discretion of the advisory board and manager and within limits provided in the written appointment of the manager, certain portions thereof may be retained as a surplus to provide against the contingency of unusual losses. Upon the retirement of a subscriber and the consequent cancellation of his policy, all funds remaining in his account, whether accumulated for surplus or otherwise, are returned to him, less his proportion of any losses which have been incurred to the date of his retirement. In this particular, reciprocal insurance differs from the usual form of mutual insurance in that the accumulated surplus of a mutual company belongs to the company and upon the retirement of a member or policyholder his proportionate part of such surplus is lost to him. The subscribers at an exchange constitute no company or association and there is no profit contemplated or made, protection at absolute cost being the end sought to be attained.

The theatre owner or lessor, insuring in a reciprocal or inter-insurance exchange specializing in the class in which he is interested, has the satisfaction of knowing, 1st, that his insurance is placed with an organization that is not insuring risks in a class or classes with any greater hazard than his own; 2d, that the expense of management is fixed so that there will always remain to his credit a certain amount for the payment of losses; 3d, that he will receive an inspection service and assistance that will assist him in making his theatre a better risk, thereby securing lower rates; 4th, that he will get back, from the cash deposited by him the amount that remains after the losses and fixed expenses have been paid and if the loss ratio in this industry in which he is interested continues to be low, as it has been in the past, his saving in insurance cost each year will continue to be a large per cent.

gree of protection you now have. There is at least $300,000.00 a year paid for fire insurance by the moving picture theatre owners of Texas, which does not include the premiums on the buildings, in which the shows are operated, a minimum of $300,000.00 paid for fire insurance. This organization which you are talking about here today and which is so badly needed could be started out of the saving you can effect on your insurance. If you save 20 per cent on $300,000.00 you would have a fund of $60,000.00 with which to operate this association.

Free Sunday Shows Under Church Auspices Upsetting Theatre Business

The Inside of a Bad Situation

By J. E. HIPPLE

The Bijou Theatre which Hipple says is getting the worst of the Free Sunday Church Show

ON October last the pastor of the First Congregational church of our city made a deal with the manager of the Opera House, who runs pictures every night, except when road shows are booked, (which is very frequent) to show regular program pictures on Sunday nights and call the same a "screen service." They have short scripture reading, some music and the pastor generally talks about ten minutes, after which a big feature is run. These are always selected from a list of big shows and in many instances have been pictures that were sold to my house at $50 to $100 and were run at 40 and 50 cent admission.

These programs are free and as a consequence the week day business has been growing decidedly less, so that it is a losing game every night except Sunday and sometimes Saturday. I am confident that the regular picture house running regular big programs free of charge is hurting the business so that most of the big producers will not be able to show in this city in the future unless they cut their rent below their absolute minimum.

If the church were running pictures in the church, they would not get half the crowd they do, but running them in a regular licensed operating show house gives the public an impression that pictures don't cost much anyway and can be run for less than ten cents, as their contributions do not average ten cents. We will admit they have cut in on our week day business, but our Sunday shows stand up as well as ever.

My theatre, the Bijou, is the oldest operated show in this state, and incidentally has the same manager and the same operator now who opened the house in 1907. I have experienced all the changes in moving picture progress and believe I appreciate the conditions as well as any one in this state, at least. We now publish the only daily and weekly newspaper printed in this city and advertise our programs, which are largely of very recent releases.

When I tell you that the business last spring was the worst in sixteen years, you must recognize the point which I claim spells ruination of the film business from a commercial viewpoint, if free Sunday shows are to be run in a community regularly with the choicest programs presented to the public free of charge, and especially when the same pictures were shown before at 40 or 50 cents admissions. This plan has resulted in spreading a psychological influence by which the people, perhaps unappreciated by themselves, feel that they should not pay good prices for any picture show. I am positive that wherever the plan now in vogue in this city is carried out, the general run of film rental will drop from one-half to two-thirds.

That is what has happened here and I have made contracts in the past thirty days, in one instance after a district manager visited the city and inspected my books, whereby I will pay just 50% of what I have been paying, and in some instances just one-third of what I have been paying because the people will not go to see picture programs that cost them good admission prices. The church show claims that it is not a picture show, but the actual attendance at their house has grown from probably an average of 150 to 400 and it is claimed on one occasion 600, on Sunday nights.

At the same time our business on Sunday nights continues to average just the same as it did before the free shows of big features were started in the Grand Theatre. Our attendance on Sunday nights for the month when the free shows were started at the Grand was 750. For April, our attendance was 848 for Sunday nights, so this much-heralded plan has not hurt the Bijou attendance on Sunday nights, but I now want to give specific samples of what happens during the week.

In April we ran during the week, with many nights less than 30 people in this town of more than 3,000, and some of the shows, which are of reasonably recent release, drew audiences as follows:

Poor Men's Wives, 49.
Sherlock Holmes, 2 nights, 122.
The Woman of Bronze, 48.
The Little Church Around the Corner, 2 nights, 70.
Our Mutual Friend, 35.
Yellow Men and Gold, 2 nights, 82.
Toll of the Sea, 2 nights, 78.
Trouble, with Fighting Blood additional, 2 nights, 175.

The film industry may just as well make up its mind that as soon as there is any reasonable proportion of churches permitted to operate regular theatres with high class regular releases for free shows, the exhibitors will have to be supplied with regular service on the six other nights of the week with a cut of at least 50 to 75 per cent. in rentals. Will people, after paying 40 or 50 cents to see a big attraction, and afterwards see the same attractions every week free, support the theatres during the week?

I have personally conducted all the campaigns before our legislative sessions in the interest of the moving picture industry, and the film exchanges of Minneapolis all know it. I wish to go on record as saying that of all the agitation, propaganda and fights of every kind, nothing has done so much in sixteen years in this community to ruin the picture business generally as this supplying a church with the pick of the programs regularly for free shows, once a week.

The result is here that Metro, Goldwyn, First National, F. B. O. and Warner Brothers' attractions which I am running regularly will have their revenues reduced at least 50 per cent. in this city. Exhibitors cannot pay rental if people will not pay to see the pictures. The people who are opposed to motion pictures absolutely and who favor censorship attend these so-called "screen services" and get decidedly wrathful and hot if their show is called a picture show. The theatres do not draw any more of them during the week on that account, but people who have been in the habit of paying for good attractions now say, "We will wait and see it for nothing at the Grand."

I repeat, and am willing to submit my books along with the other house's books to any committee of film exchanges, to show that this serving of a theatre with the best of programs for free shows means the ruination of the commercial aspect of the picture industry.

At Redfield in this state and at other places this same church denomination runs pictures in their churches, but it has not interfered so noticeably with the week business of the exhibitors; but now after six months' trial in Pierre it is a positive evidence that no censorship, no Sunday closing law or no other kind of law can do so much to knock out the average attendance at picture shows as the film exchanges themselves are doing in permitting exhibitors to use their theatres with the choice of selected programs for free shows on Sunday nights, claiming that they are not picture shows but "screen services" of a church.

I leave it to anyone conversant with the picture business if the showing which I have made, wherein our Sunday attendance is as good as ever, with an average of 212 for Sunday nights in competition with the church free show, and with only 35 to 50 people during the week on the class of programs I have given, is not good evidence that the churches can put the picture shows out of business quicker through the local method than by all legislation or agitation that can be conceived of by the most radical reformer.

"If I Were An Exhibitor and Wanted to Build High School Patronage"

The Editors invited a number of high powered exploiters to suggest ideas and methods for going after more business from high school students, who, according to a recent survey, are not steady patrons of motion pictures. Mark Lachmann, Universal Exploiteer, was the first to respond and his ideas are here presented.

BY MARK LACHMANN

1—The average high school student, ranging from the age of twelve to nineteen is of an embryo frame of mind. Each and every boy or girl attending high school in your locality can be made advertising mouthpieces and staunch patrons of your theatre if you place some incentive before them to make them come and go away talking. Like adults, and they are part of your fickle public, their hunger for entertainment must be served in a manner that will satisfy. But first of all they must be coaxed into that frame of mind that will compel them to attend your theatre for a taste of the brand of entertainment that you will serve to them.

One Special Night For Students

2—Combining that spirit of entertainment with the spirit of social activities you can make one night out of the week "High School Night" on which night the various schools will attend in a body and with the introduction of various novelties on the program this one night could soon become a fad in the locality. Friday night of every week would be the logical night inasmuch as students could take advantage of a fairly late hour with the Saturday holiday following the next day. If you do not like the one night affair you can spread out over the week if the attendance warrants it and give one night to each school in the locality.

Inaugurating This Innovation

3—To inaugurate this innovation you will need the co-operation of the school board and teachers. Obtain from them a complete list of pupils, home addresses, etc. Send them an engraved invitation to attend the inaugural of these special nights as your guest. Here is the performance in which you can install your ace card. Why not a dance after the show in your lobby or on the stage if you have the room? Think of the effect this will create—and the mouth-to-mouth publicity it will create. We all know that the dance hall is the exhibitor's deadliest opposition and the high school students represent ninety per cent of the dance hall patronage. Beat the opposition at their own game with their own weapon and plant the good effect of the student attendance for your own gratification. Another stunt that may be wise for this first special night will be the taking of a special reel to run about 1,000 feet showing the various classes grouped on the screen. These kids will scramble to get in if they think they can see their face on the screen or that of their fellow students. Take exteriors of the various school houses, teachers and Boards of Education and show on same reel. This will help you to gain the co-operation of the school board because they will realize the importance of publicity on your screen and propaganda or recognition for the work they are doing. In this manner the stunt can be turned into a civic proposition. Advertise the stunt in your daily ads. Also the dance and special reel. This reel can be shown for an entire week and gamble your last shirt parents or students, relatives and friends will turn out to see this reel alone. Your local cameraman can make this reel for you at a cost of from $50 to $100 but it will be worth it when you consider the results that you can obtain, the money it will bring to the box office and the publicity it will create. It may be wise also to take a few feet of the dance you stake for publicity purposes to show at the following special High School night thus bringing the students back for the second big night and if possible make the High School night dance a permanent affair to be staged on the same night of every week. This will start them coming and the special night will be a social habit.

How About This?

Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, calls our attention to one of the oddest bits of professional censoring that has ever been done in broadminded, blase New York. We present the photographic evidence in the case believing that it points out forcefully the old truth that censors cannot and will not be reasonable.

The twenty-four sheet shown herewith was disapproved by the New York censors because the scene with Miss Palmeri in a one-piece bathing suit "is indecent and would tend to corrupt morals." On the very day this wired utterance came from the censors the daily newspapers of New York city were filled with photographs and drawings of one-piece bathing suits on well formed women.

Nobody censored the newspapers. No arrests for indecency were reported and no noticeable depreciation in New York morale occurred.

Next the board eliminated a 22 by 28 lobby photograph of Alfred Luht gripped by the throat by Christian Frank and saying, "Take me but spare his life," because "it was considered inhuman and would tend to incite crime."

The lithographer who made the twenty-four sheet advises that he has made hundreds of posters of all sizes of pretty girls in one-piece bathing suits and that they were posted all over New York and did not get as much as a rumble from the clergy.

And so the folly of censorship goes on.

Special Billing in Class Rooms

4—With this in mind you can have special cards printed of one-sheet size and installed in every class room on every blackboard. If you sell your idea to the school board properly there are many ways and means for high school exploitation.

Special Trophy

5—This innovation once started and you can offer prizes in the form of loving cups, etc., to the school showing greatest attendance at your theatre, etc. Issue special attendance cards to be punched at every visit with credit to school made into memo.

6—Invite as your guests students whose report cards hit certain average. This will please teachers and students, making the prize an object for better returns on the various studies and classes.

7—If you like to start them coming you can offer as a stimulant, free admission to the parent of every student who comes to these special nights with paid ticket for student. This will also create talk.

8—If you can show educational pictures on these special nights you will make a hit with social board and parents. But remember you must offer novelty.

Note

The suggestions mentioned herewith will prove exceptional if worked at this time of the year inasmuch as schools will soon close for the summer and graduation and commencement events will be in session. You can adopt the special motion picture reel in this instance; take group footage of classes to graduate and run for a whole week to inaugurate this plan. Call it "Summer Social Nights for High School Students," spread the propaganda to the effect that students can "keep in touch with fellow students by attending these special nights." This publicity will prove a civic asset in the community and your business from this source for the summer will be assured.

Also Remember

Nine out of every ten high schools in the country run a high school publication. It will be wise for you to buy advertising space in these papers to put your plan properly before the students and to gain the co-operation of the students. Sell the editor of these newspapers to assign one crack student every week to cover in detail the "Social High School Night" to be held at your theatre and to write a 300 word story or so on the affair. Have student assigned to cover story, review your program for a cash consideration to be paid by you. This may be the means for the paper to continue throughout the summer months. Suggest that you get out a special paper to allow the students to keep in touch with affairs if the newspaper decides to discontinue using the stock title for the summer months. You can take a full page ad. for yourself and get the cream in this manner aside from the good will of the students and their business.

MAKING FILM BOARD WORK EASIER AND FASTER

TO create a better understanding between exhibitor and exchange members of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade the following clear instructions have been sent out to every theatre and exchange in that territory:

Whenever an exhibitor has a grievance that he can't get adjusted with an exchange, file it with the Board, together with all facts in the case, correspondence, contracts, etc. If he doesn't want to send his claim to the Board, forward it to some brother exhibitor in the city to present for him.

But — Don't ever hold film on account of a grievance you feel you have against an exchange. By doing so, you jeopardize your standing with every other exchange. They will be afraid to ship film to such an exhibitor for fear he may take a notion to hold it for some real or fancied grievance, thus disrupting all booking arrangements, forcing them to make substitutions on other exhibitors and perhaps, leaving someone with a dark house.

Remember, no exchange will knowingly send you a poor print of film, nor attach a C. O. D. to your shipment when the check has been received. But, no exchange can guarantee that you will never get a print in poor condition—despite the manager's best efforts, proper inspection may not be made, or it is necessary to make a quick transfer at the station, without any inspection—rather than disappoint you. And cashiers are not infallible—they will sometimes attach C. O. D's when your check is in. But you will find the exchanges usually willing to make any reasonable adjustment. In case they are not, take the matter up with the Joint Board of Arbitration. Don't Hold them.

The majority of claims heard at this week's meeting of the Board of Arbitration were for breach of contract on the part of the exhibitor and for this reason we suggest that you read carefully the following suggestions in regard to making contracts.

DON'T sign ANY contract with any distributor or any distributor's salesman until you have read the contract carefully and thoroughly understand its terms, particularly on the following points:

(1) The number of days the pictures are to be played at the rental price specified.

(2) The rental prices.

(3) The number of pictures covered.

(4) The starting date or play dates.

(5) The number to be played each week, or month.

(6) Whether first run or what subsequent run in locality.

(7) What protection, if any, over later runs in locality.

(8) Whether or not contract has a cancellation clause and if it has, then the exact terms under which it may be cancelled.

Don't accept from any salesman or any branch manager a verbal agreement as same is not valid or binding on the company unless in writing. Insist that all special agreements be written in.

Don't contract for more pictures than you can play in the period of time called for in the contract. Contracts for more than you can play will get you in trouble and are worthless to the exchange. You alone know how many pictures you have under contract, so don't blame any salesman for selling you more than you can use, and don't offer this as an alibi for not playing all the pictures contracted for.

Don't, when buying a new line of pictures to replace another line, fail to first make certain that the contract, for the pictures to be replaced, contains a cancellation notice in accordance with the contract, and set the starting date on the new contract in accordance with the expiration date on the cancelled contract. But—be sure to see that your replaced contract does contain a cancellation clause.

Don't, when you find it necessary to cut down the number of days a week your theatre is open, expect the exchanges serving you the days you close to cut out service entirely. Apportion your play dates among all the exchanges with whom you have contracts, giving each exchange its due proportion of play dates.

Don't fail to have "Superseding Contract" written across the face of any contract which is taken to supersede another contract.

Don't forget that a salesman cannot definitely promise you certain pictures on certain dates. The dates given you by salesmen are only tentative and are subject to change by the booking department.

STARLIGHT PROMENADE AS A SUMMERTIME PULLER

One of Boston's Biggest Showmen Hits Upon a Winning Hot Night Stunt

By RICHARD G. SPENCER

Boston.—Here in Boston is summer business pulling with a vengeance. Is there a vacant space adjacent to any of your exits? Is there an available space near enough so that you can issue door checks to your patrons? Have you a parking space? Turn them into outdoor promenades during a 10 or 15 minute intermission in the middle of your program, furnish root beer or pop, and cigarettes, and watch them come. Too expensive? Not at all! It's being done.

This stunt transpired at Gordon's Capitol, suburban Boston's largest house, as well as newest. There is a large parking space connected with the theatre, and Manager Louis Gordon had a nice white picket fence built around a portion of it about 50 feet wide and 100 feet long. The ground was covered with a layer of white sand that makes excellent walking.

The next step was the erection of three booths with circular counters, and a tie-up with the Dr. Swett root beer people, with the result that one of the well known barrels appeared in the center of each booth. These were topped off with gaudily striped beach umbrellas, furnished with a pretty girl to serve root beer, and stacks of paper cups.

The final touch was added when more than a thousand vari-colored light bulbs were festooned over the whole arrangement. It was a success from the beginning, and even on cool nights more than 600 persons took advantage of the opportunity offered for a stroll in the moonlight, a drink, and a smoke. Ushers stood at the doors with baskets of Fatima cigarettes from which the audience could help themselves as they passed out. To make everything complete a concert of orchestra and Ampico combination was offered during the intermission for those who did not care to go out, and for those who did go a warning bell three minutes before the intermission ended, gave them ample time to regain their seats.

Manager Gordon runs his house on the reserved seat plan that seems to be rapidly gaining in favor with those places of the neighborhood type. This fact helped considerably in running the promenade. He held two rows of seats from the aisle to the emergency exits, thus facilitating the entrance and exit of the promenaders.

The stunt is played up the house advertisements every week, on the programs, and is announced on the screen at the close of the first feature by a strip of running film. The house seats about 1400, and in a house of this size both cigarettes and drinks should be available on a tie-up that would well pay the expenditure. In a smaller place, a slight charge could be made for one or the other, or the smokes could be easily eliminated, as those who smoke will be almost certain to have them along. The stunt has started a great deal of talk in the New England territory in spots where it is known of, and several theatres are already considering the installation of some such venture.

"NATURAL STORIES — LESS HOKUM" SAY FANS

New York City.—Questionnaires filled out by the patrons of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion in connection with the International Congress on Motion Picture Arts recently held at the Waldorf-Astoria, reveals some interesting items about what theatre-goers think.

Questions regarding their favorite authors, directors, actors, actresses and pictures revealed the following:

That D. W. Griffith is the favorite director with Rex Ingram second and Cecil B. DeMille third;

That Ibanez is the most popular author, Conrad coming next and Edith Wharton, Booth Tarkington and James Oliver Curwood being active competitors for third prize;

That Thomas Meighan is the favorite actor, having received twice as many votes as Douglas Fairbanks who comes second and three times as many votes as Richard Barthelmess and Milton Sills who take third place;

That Norma Talmadge is the favorite actress with Mary Pickford taking second place and Gloria Swanson third;

That "The Birth of a Nation" is still the fans' favorite picture, with "The Covered Wagon," "The Four Horsemen" and "Robin Hood" running it a close race.

Among the suggestions offered toward making better pictures were: "More natural stories—less hokum," "elimination of star system," "too many cooks are spoiling the broth," "omit the false impressions of life," "less concentration on wealthy class and their artistically spectacular life, simpler stories of actual people with intelligent direction."

Speaking About Summer

ANY exhibitor whose business has withstood the onslaughts of old man temperature during the past fortnight should be able to look with measurable equanimity upon the prospects for the remainder of the season. If the theatre owner has not been too hard hit during the torrid spell it seems safe to assume there is nothing left in the Weather Man's bag of tricks that can work to his serious disadvantage, at least so far as torridity is concerned.

Loew's Suggestion

THAT was a practical suggestion made by Marcus Loew at the banquet closing the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners New York State and which will be found on the opposite page. Congressman McGregor of Buffalo, who had introduced a measure afterward defeated designed to eliminate the tax on admissions to theatres, had promised to stand sponsor for a similar bill in the coming session and had pleaded for support from theatre owners, pointing out that without organized effort such a measure would have no chance of passing.

Mr. Loew suggested that the project be laid before the F. I. L. M. clubs throughout the country, all of them, and that the exchangemen represented in all these bodies be requested to solicit the active co-operation of exhibitors, which means of course all the theatre owners in the country.

With all of the exhibitors writing to their congressmen asking support for the measure and sending copies of the letters to the local club, Congressman McGregor would have in a most substantial form the backing which he declared was so urgent. New York State Theatre Owners have appointed a committee acting under instructions to seek nationwide co-operation in fortifying the work of tax repeal in Washington.

The Theatre Owners of America also is working toward the same ends. That organization last week issued a statement saying it is bringing the facts of the situation to the attention of Congress members.

Naturally, the first thing to be done is to make sure there is no duplication of effort, or what is worse, of conflicting effort, that there is no working at cross purposes. If the industry can get together on one measure and one chief spokesman much may be accomplished.

A Two-Day Convention

THE convention of the New York State Theatre Owners last week in Syracuse established a worthwhile precedent, and if it didn't establish it, it certainly fortified it. The sessions opened on Tuesday evening and were concluded with the banquet on Wednesday evening. In other words, exhibitors living 300 miles from the convention city were able to "take in the show" and the whole show involving an absence from home of but two days and nights.

Of course the proceedings were conducted with precision, with a dispatch reminiscent of the national gathering at Cleveland in 1920. The executive committee, a large and representative body, was in session preceding the opening of the convention and again in the small hours following it. In these two meetings were discussed the more important matters to be brought to the attention of the delegates.

The result was a maximum of harmony throughout the two business sessions. There was speed, too, in spite of the intense heat.

In the election of William Brandt as president, the organization has chosen a man with a hard-earned reputation for efficiency, who has initiative and go-gettiveness combined to an unusual degree.

Help If You Can

IF you have a film or any part of it, or know anyone who has, of the late Theodore Roosevelt in action advise the Roosevelt Memorial Association, 1 Madison Avenue, New York City.

The association has enlisted the aid of Will Hays in this connection.

It is a great chance to do your bit toward preserving for posterity the history of a man who believed in the motion picture from start to finish, because as he once put it, "it is one great blessing that came to mankind in the twentieth century."

Better Music

IN The Modern Theatre Department of this issue important consideration is given to Theatre Music. If you supervise your theatre music it will pay you to look it over; if your musician handles that end of the theatre call his attention to it.

We don't need to tell you how important music is. A theatre owner never appreciates its value until his opposition begins to spread himself on music and the crowds throw their patronage his way.

AT the banquet of the New York State Theatre Owners in Syracuse Toast master "Jimmie" Walker introduced a word into the film vocabulary, transferring it from the realm of politics. "Syracuse is the home of some very important conventions," said the Senator, "one of which was held not so long since, to which I look back with a great deal of gratification. Not so long since I 'keynoted' in this town."

WHICH brings us to the point of the particular tale. The title of "Key-noter" would seem to fit Marcus Loew, aside from the fact that the person sounding the keynote of a convention usually starts proceedings, while Mr. Loew's addresses as a rule are delivered either at the banquet at the end or on the floor near the close of the proceedings.

Mr. Walker opened the introduction by saying no convention is too far removed to keep Marcus Loew away. "Marcus would be probably the most wonderful man in the world if he were not a producer," said the toastmaster with a grim smile. "Every exhibitor does not appreciate Marcus as an exhibitor," he continued. "Every exhibitor does not appreciate Marcus as a producer, but every man, woman and child in the world appreciates Marcus Loew as a genuine friend and a genuine gentleman. So as I have gone down through these dinners there would absolutely be a cavity in any of them at which Marcus did not appear.

"Marcus was there in Cleveland, in Minneapolis, Marcus was in Washington (laughter), but Marcus came back and is in Syracuse. Now we are back on the new order of progress."

HEARTY applause greeted Mr. Loew as he arose. "This is a tough position to be in, as we say in vaudeville," he remarked. "First, following all the big acts (laughter), and second, being introduced in the way I was. I had mapped out a great speech, but Jimmie knocked it all out of me when he mentioned Washington. (Laughter).

"For the first time in my business life I have attended a convention which was conducted on the most constructive lines. There were a number of things brought up and always will be brought up. There was the better understanding which General Hays spoke to you about. That really has come into existence. There was the proposition that Congressman McGregor talked to you about last night.

"I have given that matter a great deal of thought, this elimination of the admission tax, because it would be foolish to lose the opportunity that we would have if we started right. It is going to be very hard for us to do this alone. I think I have an idea, and with the General's assistance it can be done successfully.

"A few months ago there were organized, I believe, F. I. L. M. clubs in twenty-nine or thirty exchange centres. If we cooperate with or work through these clubs, which cover every single exhibitor in the United States, we can reach every exhibitor, and we can surely accomplish a great deal of good.

"The producers can make trailers and put them on all pictures that go out. Don't let us wait. It is very important and very serious. If we don't have the admission tax removed we are facing a very disastrous season.

"We have got to advance our admission

prices. Ours is the only industry on earth that has to pay more and more not only for our merchandise but also for our help as well and never pass it on to the public. If a clothing man pays more for woollens you have got to pay him more for your clothes, and so it goes in every industry but ours.

"I am sure that with what we are up against now, unless the admission tax is removed we will be compelled to raise our prices in the fall. You know that I have always been opposed to charging higher prices, but with conditions as they are and with the class of pictures that are being made it is impossible to continue under the present circumstances.

"I can remember when we used to make, when I first got into Metro, about forty or fifty pictures a year. The first year I was in we spent less than $3,000,000 to make those pictures and thought we were quite extravagant at that.

"The coming year we are making thirty-three pictures costing almost twelve millions. Just stop and think what has happened in three years. What has happened is true not only in the case of Metro but in the case of every one of the producing companies.

"That means that the pictures are made better and are getting bigger in every way, but that it is utterly impossible, which common sense will tell you, to sell them now at the admission prices at which you sold them formerly. How you are going to reconcile the situation this year is something I cannot fathom.

"I think I have covered pretty much everything I wanted to talk about. Jimmie has just reminded me the train is soon leaving. I have really, honestly and truly enjoyed this convention. I have been going to these conventions now for twelve years, going because I wanted to see what was going to happen. That covers a long period before I was a producer, and as Jimmie said I was a much better man before than I am now. (Laughter.)

"I have enjoyed the convention immensely. It has been conducted in a most constructive way. You have elected a president who is a glutton for work, and if he doesn't pester you to death then I am greatly mistaken.

"A lot of you made a lot of promises today. Don't think they were idle because he won't let you. Don't you let them (turning to Mr. Brandt). You are on the road to a successful organization. You need that organization. You need it as badly as you do the pictures that are being made, and I say to you go out and get everybody to join because you have got the right kind of organization, the organization that will protect the man who puts his money in the game.

"I want to disagree with those who think we don't need organization. I want to tell them we do. I am protecting my organization as well as your own by advising you to go out and build up the biggest organization that has ever been known."

PRESIDENT BRANDT spoke briefly at the end of the after-dinner proceedings. He made reference to public service, which during the convention and the banquet had been so strongly stressed by several speakers. He referred to the public service being given by the educational force of the motion picture and cited as an example the downtown district represented in the Senate by the toastmaster.

Mr. Brandt had started to enumerate some of the many nationalities living there, when Mr. Walker interjected "a league of nations."

"How he makes himself understood I don't know," said the speaker.

"I don't know," said the toastmaster.

"Many of his people cannot read and write," said the president.

"That's why I get by," said "Jimmie."

AS Mr. Brandt as the president of New York state becomes a figure of national importance in exhibitor organization it may interest theatre owners in other states to listen to a bit of the talk delivered by Mr. Brandt in his few moments conversation at the close of the dinner.

"Please remember I am only your agent," he said, "only your representative. I can only do things with your assistance. And I demand that assistance. I have a right to demand it, and if it is not forthcoming you are going to hear from me. I took this job with the sole understanding I am going to get co-operation. I am going to get it, I know I am."

BEFORE us is No. 1 of Volume 1 of The Rivoli Times, a four-page leaflet in regular publication form devoted to the interests of the Rivoli Theatre. Louis Gardy, publicity director for the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, is ye editor of the miniature newspaper, as he also is of its two contemporaries, the contents of which is similar except in those parts devoted to the program. The Times will take the place of the programs formerly used. In the pages are short articles telling of Paramount plays and players, with several photographs included. The publication is one that will be taken to the home for more careful perusal. It carries no outside advertising.

AND while speaking of the Rivoli, put a pin in "Peter the Great," you who admire the work of Emil Jannings. The production is on this week at the Rivoli, and last night, in spite of the extreme heat, the house was filled. When you see the great player in the role of the greatest Russian you may agree with us it is his best work since he played Henry VIII. We won't quarrel with you if you say it is even better.

There are comedy touches, too, in the course of the picturesque historical tale, and Jannings is a part of the fun. Aiding him is Dagny Servaes, a player possessing real ability, who makes the most of the dramatic role of Catherine. Bernhard Goetzke as Menchikov is as implacable, as unemotional as a Javert. Buchowetzki is a "sure enough" director.

GOOD TALKS AT STATE BANQUET

New Yorkers Hear Among Others Will H. Hays and Marcus Loew

Syracuse, N. Y.—Senator James J. Walker was the toastmaster at a well attended banquet of the New York State Theatre Owners on the evening of June 20 at the Hotel Onondaga. The chief speaker was Will H. Hays, who had journeyed from New York to attend the dinner. Others who addressed the diners were Mayor Walrath, Chancellor Flint of Syracuse University, Marcus Loew, Peter J. Brady of the American Federation of Labor, Congressman Clarence McGregor of Buffalo and the new state president William Brandt. It was a strong and well-balanced program.

Mr. Walker was in his happiest mood and also in his wittiest. The only reference to other conventions was an allusion to the heat being about the usual thing, but staffing that at Syracuse it was a healthy heat. He suggested that some time there should be a convention held in the winter so that the exhibitors might at least see the fur overcoats of the producers and distributors.

Dean Flint of Syracuse University, an institution carrying on its roster six thousand young men and women, began in a facetious mood, but soon shifted to a serious discussion of service to the public. In opening he said he had heard much from both sides of the censorship question and he welcomed the opportunity of meeting and getting acquainted with the men responsible for the "new type of education."

"Those who profit by ministering to the tastes of the people have an inescapable responsibility of educating that taste to a higher level," said the dean in conclusion. "It is a moral and a patriotic duty."

In opening Mr. Hays, following the lead of Senator Walker in calling attention to a number of signs in the booths circling the room, said there was one just around the corner.

"Our Gang," said a voice.

"Our gang," I am glad to say, Senator," continued Mr. Hays. "Our gang," not "Your gang," but "Our gang." There has been a good deal said about service. Service is the supreme commitment of life. Public service is no light matter. It is a great responsibility, with at times little reward and much grief.

"The great problem of non-theatricals is much on our minds and it will be worked out.

"I am going to give all I have got. I pledge that. I am going through with that. There has been a good deal done in the last year. We had our annual meeting the other day to sort of check up, and not without some feelings that the thing had commenced to start, that it is on the way.

"It is your job, it is your undertaking, the success of what we are trying to do. It is your success as much as any of ours. Don't forget it is all for one and one for all; that together with confidence and co-operation between the producer and distributor and between them and the exhibitors, and then, with the coalesced industry, if we go out and bring to us the confidence and co-operation of the public nothing can stop the progress of this industry to its maximum usefulness to the world."

Letters of regret at the inability of their writers to be present were read from J. A. Sillar and twenty-one other theatre owners of Illinois; Thomas Meighan, R. F. ("Pete") Woodhull, President of the New Jersey Theatre Owners; Adolph Zukor, Lieutenant-Governor George R. Lunn and H. O. Schwalbe.

NEW DEVICE TO PRESERVE PICTURE FILM

Culver City.—The Goldwyn studio has invented a new device which guards the big store of film always in the vaults there. Windows which allow circulation of cool air, but which automatically shut out danger in case of fire, have been installed in the vaults where 11,000,000 feet of negative is kept.

Goldwyn experts have perfected the delicate anti-fire mechanism which is so sensitive to warm air that if a fire should start in the vicinity of the vaults, the increase in the temperature causes a wire to separate and steel windows to drop into place.

Ventilation in the vaults preserves the film in better condition, and enables workers to file film without the danger of suffocation. It is said the device can be used wherever film is stored.

TWO-REEL COMEDIES WILL BE REISSUED

New York.—Paramount will re-issue, on regular schedule, twenty-five of the Paramount-Mack Sennett two-reel comedies during the coming season. The first will be released August 5 and thereafter one will be released every two weeks throughout the season of 1923-24.

Featured in these comedies are Ben Turpin, Charlie Murray, Marie Prevost, Louise Fazenda, Charles Lynn, Chester Conklin, Ford Sterling, Kalla Pasha, Jim Finlayson, Vera Steadman, Myrtle Lind, Harriet Hammond, Alice Maison, John Henry, Jr., Mary Thurman, "Teddy," the Great Dane; "Pepper," the cat; Phyllis Haver, Tom Kennedy, Bert Roach, Harry Gribbon, Al McKinnon, Bill Armstrong, Eddie Gribbon, Baldy Belmont and others.

The complete list of pictures chosen follows: "Roping Her Romeo," "Two Tough Tenderfeet," "Are Waitresses Safe?" "Room 23," "East Lynne With Variations," "Friend Husband," "His Hidden Purpose," "His Smothered Love," "Movie Fans," "No Mother to Guide Him," "Salome vs. Shenandoah," "Uncle Tom Without a Cabin," "The Village Smith," "It Pays to Exercise," "She Loved Him Plenty," "The Battle Royal," "When Love is Blind," "Village Sleuths," "Hide and Seek, Detectives," "Riley's Wash Day," "The International Sneak," "Those Athletic Girls," "Watch Your Neighbor," "Summer Girls," "Rip & Stitch, Tailors."

Harold Lloyd Finishes His Latest "Why Worry"

Culver City.—Harold Lloyd finished his latest picture which has been seven months in the making. He has decided to call it "Why Worry." It is not a thrill picture as was "Safety Last"; in fact Lloyd says he will make no more thrill productions. The comedian and his wife, who was Mildred Harris, his former leading woman, are on their way to New York for a brief visit.

Speaking of leading women, Lloyd is said to have made a find in Jobyna Ralston, who is expected to prove a sensation.

The star has decided to get busy on another production upon his return from New York; something on the order of "Grandma's Boy."

Endorse Picture

Yonkers, N. Y.—"Loyal Lives," the romance of the U. S. Mail Service, was endorsed by the National Letter Carriers Association of Washington and postmasters throughout the country will aid in exploiting the picture.

FAMOUS THEATRES JOIN STATE BODY

Managers Sit in Convention of North Carolina Exhibitors

Wrightsville Beach, N. C.—An invitation extended through Secretary Henry B. Warner, secretary of the North Carolina M. P. T. O. to attend the Wrightsville Beach convention of that organization June 28 and 29 has been accepted by Harold B. Franklin, director of theatres for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Mr. Franklin will make an address.

It is also announced that, for the first time in the history of the southern theatrical chain now owned by Famous Players, these theatres through their managers will at the Wrightsville Beach convention become affiliated with the M. P. T. O. Heretofore all theatres under the supervision of the Paramount group have remained outside exhibitor organizations in this territory, and Secretary Varner, as well as President Percy W. Wells and other officials of the North Carolina M. P. T. O., are pleased at the decision.

Frank J. Rembusch has accepted an invitation to attend and make an address and also Chas. C. Pettijohn, New York; Harry M. Crandall, Washington; Jake Wells, Richmond; Willard C. Patterson, Atlanta, and J. H. Borosky, Chattanooga. Stacy W. Wade, state insurance commissioner, will speak on the matter of fire insurance of theatres, the rate in North Carolina being the highest on this class risk of any state in the United States.

President Wells and Secretary Varner have announced they will refuse to be considered for election to their offices for another term.

McCUTCHEON TO DIRECT

New York.—Schuyler Grey, President of Motion Picture Arts, Inc., announced that his company had begun work on its latest screen production, entitled "Opportunity," at the A. L. Fischer Studios in New Rochelle.

John L. McCutcheon, who directed "Man and Woman" and "The Message of Emile Coue," and who has handled the megaphone on numerous big film features, is directing the picture, and J. S. Brown, Jr., is doing the camera work.

Leslie King, George Duryea, Paul Walters and Eleanor King are the principals in the cast. The exteriors will be made in Connecticut.

No announcement has been made as to the releasing arrangements, but it is understood that the feature will be distributed independently.

Fight Union Move

Kansas City.—A committee of four exhibitors was appointed by Adolph Zukor, president of the Kansas City Division of the M. P. T. O. A., at a meeting of the board of directors Tuesday, to meet with the Allied Amusement Union in Kansas City in an effort to reach an agreement pertaining to the union's campaign to "unionize all Kansas City motion picture theatres." The Allied Amusement Union consists of musicians, operators, stage hands and bill posters.

The exhibitors, according to Mr. Eisner, refuse to be dictated to in the employment of persons connected with the theatres. Unless exhibitors are allowed to employ as many or few union men, regardless of the presence of non-union men, there will be a deadlock and the exhibitors will employ all non-union men.

Committee Reports "Conditions Improving"

MOVING TOWARD BETTER RELATIONS

Survey of Public Service of Industry Shows Interesting Growth

New York City.—An interesting survey of accomplishments for the general betterment of the industry has been given out by the Committee on Public Relations which, through Jason Joy, is cooperating with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America Inc.

The survey, briefly, covers the following:

Pedagogic Survey Initiated

At a recent conference participated in by representatives of the National Educational Association and of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, the following four-point program was adopted:

(a) The motion picture companies are to survey the material now in their vaults to determine what subjects are capable of being adapted for class-room use.

(b) National Education Association and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America are to cooperate in the production of an experimental pedagogic picture.

(c) The National Education Association is to make a survey of existing school facilities, to suggest ways and means of distributing educational films.

(d) The National Education Association is to study and make recommendations concerning the use of pictures as a visual aid to instruction.

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America have also contributed a sum of money to be used in paying expenses incurred by the National Education Association in making these various studies, and have offered, in addition, facilities of the industry.

Celluloid Histories

President Harding, at the suggestion of Mr. Hays, will provide a vault in the White House for copies of historical films. The inauguration of President McKinley in 1897, the earliest example of the industry, with subsequent inauguration scenes, the landing of American troops in France, the burial of the Unknown Soldier and scenes at the Arms Conference will be included in the films.

David Belasco Enters Pictures

David Belasco will personally direct the production of motion pictures beginning July first. His comment relative to the industry is:

"The stories, I think, will change; even now they are changing. Audiences today are more analytical. Therefore, they seek logic back of the emotions. The trend of the new plays, photoplays, will be to represent normal human beings as they are.

Book Reading Stimulated

Motion pictures are stimulating interest in reading the books which have been filmed.

Libraries are establishing book shelves labelled "These books have appeared in Motion Pictures."

Indiana Indorsers

The Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays held its ninth annual meeting in Indianapolis last month. It cooperates with the exhibitors of that city in attaining the finest possible pictures and advises its members when these pictures are to be shown. This is perhaps the oldest organization engaged in making "Better Pictures Pay." It derives its support from the Community Chest.

Laemmle Screen Scholarship

The Universal Picture Corporation has established a scholarship for undergraduates in American colleges and universities. $1,000 will be given to the student who writes the best scenario, in the judgment of a Committee to be appointed by the president of the Universal Picture Corporation, Mr. Carl Laemmle—and $1,000 will be given to the college or university in which the winner is a student.

Children's Matinees

Saturday Morning Matinees for children, have been carried out with unusual success by The Better Films Committees located in the Southeastern States. Programs are put on under the joint auspices of exhibitor and the Committee on Better Films. It is reported that every Saturday morning the theatres are well filled. The Better Films Committees have a part in the selection of the pictures. An admission charge of Ten Cents is usually made, and one-half of the proceeds are returned to the Committees.

Arbitration Effective

One of the important points in the "Uniform Contract" which is now being put into effect by Producers, distributors and exhibitors, is the Arbitration Clause. Dr. Samuel McCune Lindsay, President of the Academy of Political Science and Acting President of the Arbitration Society of America, recently said:

"It is both interesting and encouraging to learn that one of the newest of America's industries and at the same time one of the most important of our industries is settling its business difficulties by means of arbitration boards, rather than by recourse to the courts."

Special articles dealing with the subject of motion pictures have appeared recently in periodicals published by organizations affiliated with the Committee. Many of these articles have mentioned specific pictures which merit commendation and support.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, JR. GETS ROUSING WELCOME

Los Angeles, Cal.—"Oh Boy, it's great!" exclaimed Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., to the rousing welcome he received upon his arrival at the Sante Fe depot. Besides his relatives and Jaqueline Logan, who extended the greetings of the Lasky studio where young Doug will work, there was a delegation of boy scouts to welcome him. It was half an hour before reporters and photographers allowed him to rejoin his relatives.

Joseph Henabery has been chosen to direct the young Paramount star.

LUBITSCH SIGNED BY WARNER BROS

Will Direct Debarau and Then Handle Megaphone on Three Others

Hollywood.—The big news of the week here is the signing of Ernst Lubitsch, German director, by Warner Bros. to make "Debaran" and three other stories for them. The announcement came right on top of an interview with the director in which he condemned American made pictures in general, and the Lasky lot in particular.

Jesse L. Lasky thought it timely to say a few words after he read the director's remarks.

"Mr. Lubitsch never has had a contract with Famous Players," said Lasky. "Only a contract with the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation, to make pictures in Germany only. He came to America because the Hamilton Corporation loaned him to Mary Pickford. As the Hamilton Corporation has stopped making pictures in Europe, the contract with Mr. Lubitsch was terminated in a friendly manner."

The Warner Bros. pulled a neat stroke in signing him in the face of several other producers.

ADMISSIONS DOWN 100% IN COAST THEATRE

Los Angeles.—The Kinema Theatre has made a radical departure in its policy of operation. The prices for Saturdays, Sundays and holidays are scaled at twenty-five cents all over, ten cents for children and fifty cents for the big loge chairs. During the rest of the week general admission to all parts will be twenty-five cents excepting loges. The tax is added.

The first two weeks of this new policy did a tremendous business. West Coast Theatres, Inc. have a slogan "the picture is the thing" for the Kinema and eliminate all stage embellishments. Greatest care is devoted to music and short subjects.

FISHER TO ENLARGE

PRODUCING ACTIVITIES

Los Angeles, Cal. — Victor B. Fisher, producer, and Mrs. Lillian Ducey, director of "Youth Triumphant" are in San Francisco arranging for the enlarged producing activities of Fisher Productions.

Starting July 1, the producing schedule will double the output originally planned. Another director will be engaged to work simultaneously with Mrs. Ducey. Her next story will be an original drama.

ZEIDMAN ON VACATION

New York City.—B. F. Zeidman has gone to California for a four weeks' vacation as the guest of Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, following the editing of "Bright Lights of Broadway," one of Principal Pictures Super Five.

As an independent producer, Mr. Zeidman has his own method. He carries no studio overhead but engages his staff separately for each production and secures the best talent available.

LLOYD AND ROACH DEAL TERMINATED

*Long Business Association of Star and Producer Ends
by Mutual Consent*

Los Angeles, Cal.—The long business association of Harold Lloyd and Hal Roach has been terminated. The arrangement was made for the mutual advantage of star and producer and will not affect the releasing contract which Pathe Exchange, Inc., holds with Lloyd. Mr. Roach's activities have grown with great rapidity and he could not devote the time to Lloyd's efforts which he felt was due the comedian. Lloyd, on the other hand, was crowded for space. There is no "split" between the two. The separation was effected only to give both a chance to expand. Their relations are so friendly that arrangements have been made for an interchange of players and Roach hopes to make a trip around the world with Lloyd sometime in the future.

Mr. Lloyd's entire staff has been released by Mr. Roach and will go over to the comedian. Sam Taylor and Fred Newmeyer will direct, Jobyna Ralston, who has taken Mildred Davis' place as Lloyd's leading lady, will continue with the comedian, as will Gaylord Lloyd, Roy Brooks, Charles Stevenson and Wallie Howe. Wm. A. Fraser, Lloyd's uncle and business manager, will take charge of the Lloyd company and Joe Reddy will handle the publicity. Mr. Lloyd is unable to announce where he will produce on his own account but he is certain that the type of comedy he will produce will be the same as in the past. Plans for the Lloyd organization will be under the direction of Mr. Fraser while Lloyd is in New York, where he is going for a belated honeymoon with Mildred Davis, his bride of a few months.

UNIVERSAL SALES MEET IN CHICAGO

Chicago.—The middle west sales conference of the exchange managers and division managers of the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., was held last week-end in the Congress Hotel. Complete instructions covering Universal's new production and distributing plan were outlined to the assembled sales executives, who in turn acquainted home office executives of the firm with the conditions in the field.

Art Schmidt, general sales manager of Universal, was chairman of the convention. He was assisted by Joe Friedman, assistant general sales manager in charge of feature productions, and N. L. Manheim, assistant general sales manager in charge of short subjects and serials. Another home office representative present in Chicago was R. V. Anderson, director of Sales promotion. Mr. Schmidt, in outlining the prospects of

YOUNGEST DIRECTOR IN MOTION PICTURES

New York.—George William Hill is the youngest feature picture director. Ten years ago he was the youngest cameraman in the picture industry. This was at the age of 17 years, when he was turning the crank on Kalem pictures. Today he is directing an all-star cast, including Forrest Stanley, Colleen Moore, Tom Santschi, Eddie Phillips, George Cooper, Margaret Seddon, Carmelita Geraghty, Wade Boteler and Kate Lester in the Cosmopolitan Production, "Daughter of Mother McGinn."

MERRY GO ROUND OPENS JULY 1st IN RIVOLI

New York.—"Merry Go Round," the Universal Super Jewel directed by Rupert Julian with Mary Philbin and Norman Kerry in the featured roles, will have its public premiere July 1 in the Rivoli Theatre, here. This booking marks an innovation in Broadway history. Universal Jewel productions have been played repeatedly in every other Broadway house, but never before has the Rivoli opened its screen to long features of the Universal Pictures Corporation.

The presentation, under the direction usual elaborateness, and it is under-ood of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, will be of understood, will be featured by special music especially adapted for the picture. The showing is being accompanied by a general campaign engineered by the Universal home office exploitation staff, which has its maximum application in the metropolitan district. It includes tie-ups with taxicabs, restaurants, and an unusual amount of sniping and window card displays.

the 1923-24 season stressed the point that Universal is through with program pictures and that the Universal Sixty, the company's entire output of feature pictures for the coming year, includes nothing but Jewels and high class five and six reel productions.

HUNCHBACK FINISHED

Hollywood.—When a siren sounded on the Universal lot the other day everyone who heard it dropped what they were doing and cheered. It meant the finish of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

For six months 1500 persons off and on have been engaged in the production for this big feature and a cast of fifty well known players has been held together. For the first time "loud speakers" were introduced with success on the set and an 80,000,000 candle power lighting project was used.

Cutting went on while the picture was being made, as far as possible, and the first rough cut is in 24 reels out of the more than 100,000 feet of film shot. Editing is being rushed so that the picture may be hurried to New York for a pre-release showing.

CIRCUS DAYS TO BE RELEASED IN JULY

New York City.—"Circus Days," the First National attraction starring Jackie Coogan, which is scheduled for release next month, is an adaptation of Jas. Oti's story "Tobby Tyler," or "Ten Weeks with a Circus."

Sol Lesser endeavored to produce the most elaborated and accurate picturization of circus life ever made. A complete circus, with its freaks, animals, band wagons and lithographs, supply the proper atmosphere.

The story concerns a youngster, who to save his mother from dependence upon a penurious brother-in-law, runs away to join the circus where he finds a job as a "lemonade kid," and wins stardom by successfully taking the place of a little bareback rider.

Management Praises Picture

San Francisco, Cal.—The management of the New Century Theatre here proclaimed Vitagraph's "The Man Next Door" a relief from costume dramas. It is a strictly modern picture and its advance Paris fashions should appeal to the women.

C. C. BURR SIGNS CONSTANCE BINNEY

Will Star in Four Features Which Associated Exhibitors Will Distribute

New York City.—Constance Binney has signed a starring contract with C. C. Burr and will make a series of four feature films for the coming season, which will be distributed by Associated Exhibitors.

Miss Binney's first picture under her new contract will be "Clipped Wings" from the story by Mann Page. The supporting cast will include Richard Thorpe, Edmond Breese, Russell Griffin and Mary Carr. Production has started at the Burr studio at Glendale, Long Island.

Miss Binney who returned recently from England where she made "A Bill of Divorcement," expressed her delight in having Associated Exhibitors handle her pictures. She said it was Arthur S. Kane's exploitation of her first star picture "Erstwhile Susan" that gave her her real start. "Clipped Wings" will give Miss Binney an opportunity of doing some of her dancing which she greatly enjoys.

VIRGINIAN PRODUCTION UNIT ON LOCATION

Lone Pine, Cal.—Stars, directors, writers, cowpunchers and tons of equipment passed through this little mountain hamlet on their way to the deepest recesses of the mountains to establish a motion picture camp for the filming of Owen Wister's story "The Virginian," a Preferred Picture. The film will be directed by Tom Forman.

In the cast are Kenneth Harlan, Florence Vidor, Russell Simpson, Raymont Hatton, Pat O'Malley and Edward Brady. Miss Vidor and Mrs. Louis D. Lighton, who with her husband is preparing the screen version of the story, are the only two women of the party and are among the few women who have ever attempted to make a long stay as far up in the Sierras as this camp will be established. All carried rifles as they hope to participate in hunting trips.

Hepworth Company Enters U. S. Field

WILL DISTRIBUTE ENGLISH PICTURES

Hepworth Corp. Will Handle Complete Product in This Country

New York City.—An important announcement is made by Captain Paul Kimberley, director and general manager of Hepworth Picture Plays Ltd., of London, of a deal with the Hepworth Picture Corporation, New York and Los Angeles, whereby the latter handles complete distribution of Hepworth product in the United States. Heading the American company are R. T. Cranfield, president and general manager, and Joseph Di Lorenzo, general sales manager. Exchanges in the larger key cities will be established.

Hepworth Picture Plays Ltd., of London, is one of the powerful and oldest English producing companies. Cecil M. Hepworth, twenty-four years head of the English company, is one of the foremost pioneers of the industry.

Distribution rights for the first four pictures with two to follow, have been closed with Eastern Feature Film Co., Boston, for New England, Royal Pictures of Philadelphia for Eastern Penn. and Super Film Attractions, Washington, D. C. These exchanges will handle "Tansey," "Bargains," "Sunken Rocks," and "Lunatic at Large." The Renown Exchanges in New York, Buffalo and Chicago have purchased the rights for "Tansey," "Bargains" and "Sunken Rocks." The second batch of specials which will probably be released on the franchise plan are "Tit for Tat," "Pipes of Pan," "Lily of the Alley," "Mist in the Valley," "Strangled Threads," "Daughters in Revolt," and "Coming thru the Rye." Of this second series all but the last two "Daughters in Revolt" and "Coming thru the Rye" have been completed.

Capt. Kimberley says that the realism predominant in Hepworth Productions is obtained through use of natural locations instead of the conventionalized studio sets. "In England," said Capt. Kimberley, "80 per cent of the scenes are taken outdoors so that the natural beauty of English garden spots are transferred directly to the screen."

PASSION'S COME BACK

New York.—"Passion," the First National picture which introduced Pola Negri to the American public, is still able to fill the largest theatre in the world, although two and a half years have elapsed since its first presentation upon an American screen. This production is completing this week a return engagement at the Capitol theatre, marking the first time in the history of that house that a feature picture has been brought back. The official United States premiere of this feature was in December, 1920, at the Capitol.

Although the city was in the midst of one of the hottest spells it has experienced in many years, this picture drew large and representative crowds to the box office, and the opening day, despite the terrific heat, was reminiscent of Sunday, December 12, 1920, when thirty-five thousand people crowded about the theatre in the course of the day in an effort to see the famous Continental star.

With the cooling weather that came in the latter half of the week, the Capitol reported a tremendous business and a keen appreciation on the part of the audience for the picture that is generally called "one of the few great film classics of all time."

FOX DENIES RUMOR

New York City.—In a statement issued by Fox Film Corporation complete denial is made of the rumor which points to the closing down of the New York Studios of the producer at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street as soon as the recently announced buildings near Los Angeles are finished.

At the present time three feature pictures are in the course of production in this city, namely, "Six Cylinder Love," "No Mother to Guide Her" and "The Governor's Lady." The future picture program decided upon by the Fox organization will require all the space which the new western and the present eastern studios can furnish. Plans formulated for the new studio will be acted upon and ground broken for the construction work within the next two months, it was announced at the New York offices of the company.

The new site is 450 acres and forms a part of the old Wolfskill Ranch on the outskirts of Los Angeles.

All of these men are well known to the exhibitors in their respective territories, having been selected in most instances from the former field forces of Selznick or American Releasing.

Goldwyn has transferred Anthony Philbin, formerly office manager and salesman in its Chicago exchange, to the home office in New York for special sales work as assistant to J. E. Flynn of the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan executive offices. Stephen MacGrath has also joined the Goldwyn force as assistant to E. C. Grainger who is in charge of the contracting department.

C., is running with W. J. Clarke as resident manager. J. H. Hill, formerly of the Kansas City office, is in charge of the new exchange in Oklahoma City, Okla. The fourth new branch at Butte, Mont., will be opened before the end of June when James R. Grainger, general manager of sales, reaches that city en route East.

RAY'S NEXT AN OCTOBER RELEASE

Courtship of Myles Standish to Be Handled By Associated Exhibitors

New York City.—After three months of competition, Associated Exhibitors won the distribution of "The Courtship of Myles Standish," which is now being edited.

The execution of the contract will begin in October, when the Ray picturization of Longfellow's poem will be released and it will mark the retirement of this star from the United Artists group. The picture will be the first of a number of super-productions to be made by Charles Ray for Associated Exhibitors.

According to Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, the picture is the greatest of Mr. Ray's career and is bound to have an audience of millions because the poem is taught in practically every school. Besides, there are some 300,000 persons claiming descent from the Mayflower Pilgrims, whose deeds it glorifies. The film will have the same interest in Holland and England. Mr. Kane stated that the picture is one of immense dramatic sweep, spiritual power and technical beauty.

One of the most extensive exploitation campaigns ever launched for a production is to be a feature of the Fall release. In all probability "The Courtship of Myles Standish" will be "road-showed" by Mr. Ray in legitimate theatres of the largest cities prior to its release to the picture houses. Because of its educational nature it will be shown in thousands of schools and colleges.

OHIO PERMITS SHOWING OF FOOLISH WIVES

Toledo, Ohio.—Ohio has finally been permitted to view Universal's much advertised "Foolish Wives" after it had been rejected a number of times by the state censor board. Ohio was the only state in which the picture was held out this long. The Temple Theatre was barely filled the opening day either because the fans had grown tired of waiting for it or were aware of the fact that the film was greatly cut by the censors.

The press reflected the public's disappointment. "The Times," "The Blade" and the "News-Bee" all scored the censorship.

Fairbankses Back

Hollywood.—Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks have returned to work after a brief vacation camping at the beach between Los Angeles and San Diego.

Mr. Fairbanks will probably start work on "The Thief of Bagdad" next week when the first set will be completed. Miss Pickford is contemplating doing "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

HART RETURNS AS PARAMOUNT STAR

First Picture Will Probably Be Released During the Winter

New York City.—Adolph Zukor has announced the immediate return of Wm. S. Hart as a Paramount star. His new contract calls for a series of pictures of the kind that made him famous. Present plans call for four pictures a year. Production on the first will start immediately and it will probably be released the coming winter.

Mr. Zukor stated that it was only after Mr. Hart's detractor had made a complete confession of the falsity of the charges brought against him that he consented to appear once more in pictures. His popularity among young boys has been tremendous and Mr. Hart said he would not make another picture until he could look these boys in the eye from the screen.

During his trouble he received thousands of letters from boys all over America expressing their faith in him and asking him to return to the screen.

RABBI VISITS DeMILLE

New York City.—Rabbi Silverman of this city, minister of the largest Jewish synagogue in America, recently concluded a visit with Cecil B. DeMille at Guadalupe, California, where he watched the filming of scenes for the Biblical prologue of "Ten Commandments."

Dr. Silverman stated that for many years, he has been a strong believer in the motion picture as a factor in educational and ethical advancement. He entirely approved of the manner in which Mr. DeMille is handling the technical and historical details of the Biblical scenes and congratulated Theodore Roberts upon his portrayal of Moses.

FOOTAGE REDUCED

Los Angeles, Cal.—"Going Up," Douglas MacLean's first independent starring vehicle which will be released through Associated Exhibitors, underwent successfully five previews in suburban theatres here. The film was first shown in 7,800 feet but every scene that dragged in the slightest degree was cut out and it is now an even 6,000 feet.

JAPANESE CHARACTER NOT IN THE CHEAT

New York City.—The first print of George Fitzmaurice's production of "The Cheat," starring Pola Negri, has arrived at the Paramount home office.

In Mr. Lasky's estimation there has never been a more appealing or more perfectly produced picture made under the Paramount banner. The most important alteration being the elimination of the Japanese character originally played by Hayakawa. The villain in the new version is a white man who, for the purpose of dealing in Indian treasures, assumes the clothing, make-up and personality of an East Indian nobleman in order that he may trick the public. This is the part played by Charles de Roche, the French actor, who made his American debut in "The Law of the Lawless."

Producers Join Nationwide Contest Stunt

MOTION PICTURE MEMORY CONTEST

Plan Involves the Distribution of $100,000 in Prizes to Theatre Patrons

New York City.—The Cinema Contest Syndicate of Hollywood announces a new idea, the Motion Picture Memory Contest, a nationwide plan involving the distribution of $100,000 in prizes to theatre patrons. In conjunction with the theatres showing the memory contest films, one newspaper in each city will tie up with the contest. The plan has been endorsed by exhibitors, distributors and producers.

The contest will consist of scenes from forty to fifty feet in length, the punch scenes of the subjects, selected from thirty-nine successful motion picture productions, each with a different star. The main title of each production will be used as the title for each scene installment with the exception that the name of the photoplay will be blocked out and "Installment No—" inserted instead. Following this will appear the scene showing the star.

These thirty-nine installments will be shown simultaneously at theatres at the average of three per week, so scheduled that each will be shown continuously for six or seven days (according to whether there is Sunday closing) at each theatre. This requires thirteen weeks for the contest which is followed by a contest review week, when all of the thirty-nine scene installments, totaling about two thousand feet, will be shown at every performance. Contestants who missed seeing any given installment may see it or review entire contest.

While the theatre is showing the scene installments, a newspaper contest of the same name will be in progress in every city.

The rules and regulations of the contest, which have been approved by the Post Office department, request the theatre patrons to answer four questions each of the thirty-nine motion picture productions, namely:

1—State name of producer. 2—State name of production. 3—State name of star. 4—In twenty-five words outline the moral taught by the story of the photoplay.

The awards to be given by the Cinema Contest Syndicate, consisting of $100,000, will be divided as follows:

First	$10,000.00
Second	7,500.00
Third	5,000.00
Fourth	4,000.00
Fifth	3,500.00
Sixth	3,000.00
Seventh	2,500.00
Eighth	2,000.00
Ninth	1,500.00
Tenth	1,000.00
Next 100 winners	each 200.00
Next 400 winners	each 100.00

The Citizens Trust and Savings Bank of Los Angeles will act as trustee of the award funds, and distribute the $100,000 following discussions by a judging committee composed of five nationally known people.

The Cinema Contest Syndicate will sell to exhibitors a complete set of positive prints of the thirty-nine installments together with an introductory installment to be shown prior to the opening date of the contest, which will explain in word titles and pictures how the contest will be conducted.

The active head of the Cinema Contest Syndicate is J. C. Jessen, who is now in Hollywood. The distribution of the Motion Picture Memory Contest installments has been placed in the hands of three well known distributor executives: John S. Woody, formerly general manager of Select Pictures; Fred Quimby, former general manager of Pathe Exchange and Ralph Proctor, until recently the Mountain and West Coast States sales representative for Cosmopolitan Pictures Corporation. Offices are in the Fisk Building at 250 West 57th Street, New York City. At an early date additional sales offices will be opened. Distribution of the film installments will be made direct to the theatres from the film laboratories in Hollywood.

WILLIAMS' PLANS

Hollywood.—J. D. Williams, founder of the Ritz Carlton Pictures, and formerly general manager of Associated First National, is here preparing to go to Europe after making a trans-continental tour in the interest of his company.

According to his present arrangements he will have no pictures ready before the first of the year, although it was reported that releases of the Ritz pictures would start Sept. 1. It is possible that he will make one picture in Europe and co-operate with foreign producers in the making of others.

AMONG ARTISTS

Carlyle Blackwell, who is producing "The Beloved Vagabond," has arrived in Vannes, France, with a company of French and English actors.

Harry Myers has been engaged to play a prominent part in "The Bad Man," which Edwin Carewe is to produce and direct for First National, with Holbrook Blinn in the title role.

Estelle Taylor, who has the feminine lead in Richard Thomas' production "Phantom Justice" will have one of the stellar roles in Mr. Thomas' next special.

Miss Kathryn McGuire, "baby star of 1923," who won the beauty contest of a national magazine, has the leading ingenue role in "The Silent Accuser" and "Phantom Justice," Richard Thomas specials. Distinctive Pictures Corporation has cast Faire Binney for the role of Helen Remick, the flapper, in "Second Youth," featuring Alfred Lunt and Mimi Palmeri.

Kenneth Harlan has signed a new contract with Preferred Pictures. His characterizations in "The Girl Who Came Back," "April Showers" and "The Broken Wing," have won him the title role in the forthcoming production of Owen Wister's novel "The Virginian."

One of the interesting features of "Daughters of the Rich," Preferred Pictures' next release, is the initial appearance of Ethel Shannon. Miss Shannon is one of the thirteen embryo stars introduced to the picture colony at the annual Wampas Club Frolic.

Following the signing by Allene Ray of a contract to appear in a number of Pathe serials, negotiated by Bert Lubin through the offices of Edward Small, it is announced that Lubin has released Miss Ray from the contract with him.

An arrangement was effected by wire between D. W. Griffith and General Manager Emil Offeman of the Powers studios of the Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., whereby Tom Wilson, premier blackface artist of the screen, is loaned to the famous producer for a production in which Al Jolson is to be starred.

One of the important contracts signed recently in Hollywood is that in which Maryon Aye signed up with Truett for five years.

Carmelita Geraghty, daughter of the well known newspaperman and writer, Tom Geraghty, will be seen in the Cosmopolitan Production "The Daughter of Mother McGinn."

RICHARD THOMAS IS IN NEW YORK

With William LaPlante Will Arrange Distribution of Two Specials

New York City.—Richard Thomas, producer-director, accompanied by William LaPlante, his personal representative, arrived here and is stopping at the Algonquin Hotel.

Messrs. Thomas and LaPlante came east to award the distribution rights of the former's two "specials," "The Silent Accuser" and "Phantom Justice."

Both productions, which are filmed at Hollywood, have a definite audience appeal, states Mr. LaPlante. "The Silent Accuser" will lead itself to various exploitation angles, as it has several highly effective minor themes which can be used to good advantage by first run theatres. One of these angles is the finger print system, which is explained in detail as the picture approaches the climax. In the cast are Carmel Myers, Melbourne McDowell, Spottiswoode Aitken, Clyde Fillmore, Kathryn McGuire, Carol Holloway, Edward Borman, Rex Ballard, and Charles Force.

"Phantom Justice," besides being an entertaining picture, has a decidedly pointed moral, says Mr. LaPlante, which is skillfully developed through the introduction of ideas and novel climaxes never used in a picture before. "Phantom Justice" tells the story of a young criminal lawyer who, as he says, "practices law, not justice." He becomes enmeshed in the machinations of a gang of crooks, only to find that instead of serving them to outwit justice, he has become their tool.

KELLERMAN PICTURE

Hollywood.—The first tip that Annette Kellerman is to bring her pulchritude back to the screen came when James Sullivan, the swimming star's husband and manager, got into town from New Zealand with a print of "Shona of the South Seas," which has been made quietly down in the South Pacific with Miss Kellerman as the star.

Shirley Mason's New Company

Hollywood.—With the completion of Shirley Mason's contract with Fox, and as soon as Miss Mason is able to be about, she will complete the details of a new organization to make pictures in which she will be starred.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY DIVIDENDS

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in its consolidated statement (which includes the earnings of subsidiary companies owned 90% or more) reports for three months ended March 31, 1923, net operating profits of $1,018,100.29 after deducting all charges and reserves for Federal income and other taxes.

After allowing for payment of dividends on the preferred stock, the above earnings are at the annual rate of $14.66 on the common stock outstanding.

NETTA WESTCOTT ON HER WAY HERE

The Most Perfect Profile in England Will Portray Featured Roles

New York City.—Netta Westcott, possessor of "the most perfect profile in England," will arrive here on the Adriatic on her way to Hollywood to play featured roles in Preferred Pictures. Miss Westcott was discovered by Al Lichtman during his visit to London this Spring. He was so impressed by her beauty that he determined to introduce her in some of the fifteen popular stories and stage plays recently acquired by Preferred for release during the coming year.

Miss Westcott has never appeared in pictures but she is familiar to the dramatic world. Her stage career abroad was sponsored by Alfred Sutro, noted playwright, who saw her in a semi-professional performance at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art and immediately engaged her for the lead in his play "The Perplexed Husband." She was then chosen for the revival of Ibsen's "The Pretenders." Dion Boucicault famous playwright-actor with whom she played two seasons, believes her to be the most gifted young actress on the English stage.

CHILDREN FEATURED

Los Angeles, Cal.—At least one of the Mack Sennett studio units will specialize in comedies featuring children and animals. For some time past, the Sennett Studio has been adding to its collection of animals and some promising children have been added to its bevy of clever juveniles. A new "Beauty Brigade" is also included in the Sennett plans.

Director to Form Company

Hollywood.—Harry B. Harris, director, has organized his own company. Harris, for many years on the Universal staff where he guided Gladys Walton and other stars, has formed the Harry B. Harris Productions, and will produce for release through Film Booking Office. His first will be "Rose of the Ghetto."

Tie-Up With Navy

Brooklyn, N. Y.—The U. S. Navy will furnish every exhibitor booking Vitagraph's "Masters of Men," his choice of half a dozen short navy films and send a man from the Navy to the exhibitor's town to exploit the picture.

FELD SHOWS BANDIT HOW ROBBERY WOULD FAIL

Kansas City.—A bandit whom Milton H. Feld, managing director of the Newman Theatres, Kansas City, recognized as the same man who successfully held up the Newman theatre, March 4, and escaped with $10,000, made another daring attempt to rob the theatre Monday. This time he got nothing.

The bandit's failure to obtain the box office receipts of the Newman, Royal and Twelfth Street theatres failed when Mr. Feld warned the bandit that an attempt to open the safe would bring the police. An automatic alarm system connected with the safe was shown the bandit by Mr. Feld. Convinced that another hold-up would be unsuccessful, an agreement was made between Feld and the bandit to allow five minutes before the police were called.

PRODUCTION NOTES

E. Mason Hopper, started work on the second of his series of five Cosmopolitan productions. This second picture, "Cain and Mabel," went into production at the Tilford Studios on West Forty-fourth street.

Realism is the keynote of "The Master of Women," Reginald Barker's latest production for Louis B. Mayer presentation through Metro, which is rapidly nearing completion, following the company's return from the second location trip into Canada.

The cast of "Desire," the forthcoming Louis Burston special for Metro includes John Bowers, David Butler, Estelle Taylor, Marguerite De La Motte, Ralph Lewis, Edward Connelly, Frank Currier, Nick Cogley, Walter Long, Noah Beery, Hank Mann, Chester Conklin, Russell Simpson, Lucille Hatton and a number of others.

FRANK A. TILLEY DISCUSSES TRADE

Says Sweden Leads the World From An Artistic Standpoint

Chicago, Ill.—Frank A. Tilley, editor of "Kinematograph Weekly," British film trade paper, while visiting Watterson R. Rothacker here, discussed the American foreign market situation with A. L. Parker, Rothacker publicity man.

In Mr. Tilley's opinion, unless American pictures improve, the United States will not long produce 85% of the world's photoplay supply. America's monopoly is due to economical reasons alone, he stated. An American producer, spending $500,000 for a picture, can make a profit from only home consumption. $20,000 production expense is the British director's limit, and the American producer can sell his $500,000 picture in Europe for a lower price than a British, French, Swedish or German producer can sell a $20,000 picture.

From an artistic standpoint, Sweden leads the world. Censorship abets America's youth madness in producing silly stuff which is too shallow to make a lasting impression abroad. Mr. Tilley believes that unless American photoplays contain more red meat, another country will get the business, as soon as it is economically possible.

Corinne Griffith is planning features of her own. With that end in view she has cancelled a trip to Europe this summer, and will try and get the first production under way.

PATHE TO FILM AMERICAN SPOTS

Old World Pictures Give Way to America's Wonders in Pathe Color

The announcement is made that Pathe Review has secured the valuable cooperation of leading Chambers of Commerce in the United States in Pathe color photography of America's world-famous natural wonders and beauty spots.

Recent issues of Pathe Review in which American subjects screened in Pathecolor have taken the place of Old World scenes, are said to have enjoyed an enthusiastic reception by exhibitors and their patrons. Encouraged by this result, Editor Emmanuel Cohen successfully solicited the active interest of various Chambers of Commerce in simplifying the labor involved in a systematic covering of this rich field of motion picture enterprise.

A staff cameraman of experience in Pathecolor requirements was then equipped and assigned to make a continuous trans-continental tour of localities noted for their natural wonders, and, with the advice and facilities commanded by their Chambers of Commerce, to film them from the most effective points of vantage and in all the charm of their natural tints.

Among the Chambers of Commerce whose cooperation is now assured are those of Buffalo, N. Y.; Detroit, Michigan; Chicago, Ill.; Cleveland, O.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Los Angeles and San Francisco, Cal.

This will be the first systematic campaign applying color-photography to the wealth of this country's scenic marvels, over which distinguished European travelers have uniformly expressed themselves with frank enthusiasm. Writers in newspapers and magazines have frequently expressed regret that the millions of motion picture patrons have been so long deprived of this color-photography medium of making them familiar with the beauties of their own country.

The statement is made that all the resources of ordinary and color motion picture photography, together with innovations worked out by the Pathe Review technical staff, will be utilized in doing the fullest justice to the impressive subjects to be represented in American Pathecolor.

For the next voyage of the Van Buren, the Board booked the Our Gang Comedy, "Dogs of War," and the South Sea Islands feature, "Black Shadows." The President Harding shows the Harold Lloyd seven reel comedy, "Safety Last," and the Hal Roach one-reel comedy "Collars and Cuffs," with Stan Laurel, and passengers on The Western World will be shown Harold Lloyd's "Dr. Jack."

It is further announced that Pathe has sold to the Swedish-American Line picture programs for several of its ships.

Educational Gets Song Series

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has completed arrangements whereby it will distribute a series of one-reel subjects to be known as the "Sing Them Again" series, and which will be produced by Norman Jefferies, who has been associated with theatrical enterprises for the past thirty years.

The series is designed as a revival of old favorite songs. While the house musicians play the verse the scenes and characters of the old songs are depicted in life motion. The familiar words are thrown on the screen for everybody to join in the chorus while accompanied by the musicians.

First Chester Comedy Ready

The first of the Chester Comedies produced from the Saturday Evening Post stories by Sam Hellman which will be released by Vitagraph, "A Twosome at Tuara," has been finished and is now being titled. This tells the first adventure of Jem Hargis, the English golfing marvel, on his visit to Tuara, where he teaches King Wullambo, otherwise known as Willieboy, the ancient and royal game.

Burlingham Adventures Praised

Truart Film Corporation, which is handling the distribution of Burlingham's Around the World Adventures, continues to receive unsolicited assurances that these short subjects wherever shown are meeting with popularity. These pictures are not scenies. They are adventure subjects filled with human interest, action and punch, taken in the far off corners of the globe.

Wilderness Tales Held Over

Charles Couche, manager of the People's Theatre, Portland, Ore., is holding over "From the Windows of My House," one of the Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales on the Educational program, for a second week's showing, in response to the number of requests received from patrons who wished to witness it a second time.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

Don't Get Fresh, Universal

Buddy Messenger is portrayed as a stunt performer in this two-part Century comedy. It all comes through the action of a boy rival when Buddy, playing "it" in a game of blind man's bluff, is by his boy rival led to a coping high above the street. There is measurable suspense in spite of the fact you know there can be no danger as the boy gropes his way along the narrow ledge, finally throwing off the bandage.

Of the comedy as a whole there is not so much to be said, the subject depending largely on the bit of melodrama to put it over.

Naked Fists, Universal

Ncal Hart and Eileen Sedgwick have the leads in a western two-part subject. The title is derived logically enough from the scrap at the close of the story when the bad boy, detected in his murderous villainy, is compelled to fight with Morris, portrayed by Hart, upon whom he has tried to place the blame for the robbery committed by himself.

There's a whole lot of action in the tale.

Dogs of War, Pathe

The "Our Gang" comedy of two reels this time is shown waging war in Kelly's tomato patch. From here they go into the studio and cause a general disturbance throughout, leaving destruction in their wake. Mickey Daniels gets hold of a camera and takes pictures of the gang. It happens to be on a feature that is in the making and when the director holds a showing of the picture he also gets a surprise. There is lots of action in this, and those who have seen these comedies before will be well pleased with the new one.

Kinky, Educational

This one is good for the people who like slapstick and it also contains some other funny spots. Kinky, the little negro boy, will get the laughs. It is a one-reel picture and will possibly satisfy the majority who see it or at least serve to give a few laughs.

Collars and Cuffs, Pathe

A one reel Hal Roach comedy with Stan Laurel as the featured player. The scenes are laid in a laundry and the usual burning of clothes with hot irons and floods of water take place. There are some new situations and the picture will please those who do not object to seeing old material in a new guise.

The Beauty Parlor, Pathe

The latest Aesop's Film Fable finds Mary Mouse going to the beauty parlor to get a permanent wave for her tail. Farmer Al Falfa uses her to attract the other mice in his home and traps them all, dumping them into the river. Later they come back through the faucet in the kitchen.

Three Strikes, Educational

A Jack White Production featuring Lige Conley in this two reel comedy of college days. The subtitles add a lot of fun to the picture. It will satisfy the patrons who enjoy the antics of this comedian.

Alice Adams

Associated Authors production of the Pulitzer 1921 Prize Novel by Booth Tarkington. Directed by Rowland V. Lee. Camera work by George Barnes.

CAST

Alice Adams Florence Vidor
 Virgil Adams Claude Gillingwater
 Walter Adams Harold Goodwin
 Mrs. Adams Margaret McWade
 J. A. Lamb Thomas Ricketts
 Henrietta Lamb Margaret Landis
 Mildred Palmer Gertrude Astor
 Arthur Russell Vernon Steele

Pictures of contemporary American life which have as their back ground the small town with its lovable, human characters, its near and real tragedies, its humorous ironies, hypocrisies and gossip, always set well with audiences which their cinema entertainment reflecting the realities of human endeavor.

Of such stuff is "Alice Adams," the Booth Tarkington Pulitzer prize novel, produced by Metro and directed by Rowland V. Lee, which had its world premiere at the Los Angeles Kinema Theatre recently.

Every small town in America has its Alice Adams and her family who wants to see their daughter marry well, although trying to hide the fact that they are breaking a leg to make a good catch. The attempts to be a factor in the social world, the irregularities of the household, small time cheating and cold decking of the cards in the marriage game are all patently recognizable as the great American game of "bluff." And Alice Adams in person stands out as the lovable little girl of the picayune community who goes so far with hypocrisy and not further; preferring in the end to have done with sham and accept whatever is to be her lot on her real worth.

To this background and types, Mr. Lee has added the touch of an intelligent director squeezing the last drop of sympathy for the Tarkington heroine. But if he had deliberately tried to advance the sale of the author's novel he could have taken no better means than by the way he ends the picture. Instead of the usual scene with the hero and heroine gummed together, he fades out with the real romance of Alice just begun, and leaves the audience wondering if she will receive her deserved reward.

To find out consult the final chapters of Mr. Tarkington's novel. It is a surprise finish, and while Mr. Lee is to be congratulated for getting away with everyday film mechanics the reaction of the audience is "not quite satisfied."

Florence Vidor lives every moment of Alice Adams on the screen. Beautiful and capable, she gives a cameo performance shading with a nicety the lights and shadows of her many difficult moments, and drawing a dainty pastel of the girl's changeable moods. Claude Gillingwater is seen in one of his characteristic old men roles in which he is always welcome.

Vernon Steele is a good looking lead and splendid opposite to Miss Vidor. Harold Goodwin as the small town brother is excellent, and Margaret McWade, as the nagging wife, plays the part without over-acting. In fact the entire cast could hardly be improved upon so well have the members grasped the characters.

Alice Adams has no thrill punch, but it has heart punch and so well does the action move that there is not an uninteresting moment.

This picture is an unalloyed delight and after viewing it, all other productions built on similar lines seem bogus and imitation. It is an epic of Main Street, and all audiences everywhere will like it. It should not be missed. W. C. M.

Michael O'Halloran

Hodkinson Photoplay In Seven Parts. Author, Gene Stratton Porter. Director James Leo Meehan. Cameraman, Floyd Jackson. Running Time, Eighty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Peaches Ethelyn Irving
 Nelly Minturn Irene Rich
 James Minturn Charles Clary
 Nancy Harding Claire McDowell
 Peter Harding Charles Mailes
 Leslie Winton Josie Sedgwick
 Douglas Bruce William Boyd
 Michael O'Halloran True Boardman

Michael O'Halloran, an orphan newsboy living in the slums, takes charge of Peaches, a little crippled girl, when her grandmother's death leaves her alone. Douglas Bruce, a young lawyer, makes friends with Michael and hires him as office boy. Bruce is engaged to Leslie Winton. The latter's chum, Nelly Minturn, wealthy and wed to a rich man, has borne two sons and has a baby daughter, Elizabeth. Nelly devoted all her time to social pleasures and neglects her children. The baby dies as the result of a nurse's negligence. Leslie pleads with Nelly and the young mother realizing her faults, resolves to dedicate her life to children and husband. But Minturn leaves her, taking his two boys with him. On his vacation Michael makes the acquaintance of some good farm folks, who take an interest in Peaches, who is suddenly cured, the fact being that fresh air and wholesome food were all she needed to give her strength to walk. A bright future dawns for Michael and Peaches under the patronage of Bruce and his friends. Nelly Minturn meets her children and husband in the woods and is reconciled by them.

Two stories are interwoven in this plot, the marital troubles of the wealthy Minturns and the adventures of Mickey O'Halloran and his little crippled girl pal being utilized as contrasting examples of life amid riches and poverty. Its sentimental appeal is undeniable and no one can doubt the picture's ability to keep an audience in a state of emotional tension, move the tender-hearted to tears and cheer them at the finish with an outburst of sunshine. The fact that some of the situations are a trifle forced and not particularly probable doesn't matter much on the whole, for people who enjoy this kind of entertainment, and their number is legion, are not disposed to be supercritical as regards these points. And its box office value ought to rank pretty high, for the juvenile patrons will like the film, as well as a large percentage of adults.

The feature's only grave fault is its excessive length. In his anxiety to get every possibly ounce of sentiment out of the story Director Meehan crowded in a good deal of unnecessary detail which could have been dispensed with. The action slows up in consequence here and there although in the main it moves at a fair pace. At least an entire reel might have been eliminated by careful cutting and the narrative greatly improved thereby. The photography is excellent, there are many charming rustic views, with alluring shots of woodland and water and the lighting is faultless.

True Boardman registers as a juvenile of remarkable talent in his clever impersonation of the renowned Mickey O'Halloran. The part is one dangerously easy to spoil by overacting, but the young star never errs in that direction, he figures as thoroughly normal, unaffected boy and holds his audience's sympathy from first to last. Little Ethelyn Irving is a sweet and attractive Peaches, Irene Rich fills the role of Nelly Minturn satisfactorily, Josie Sedgwick is a prettily fascinating, Leslie Winton and adequate support is furnished by other members of the cast. In exploiting the film, advertising material may be found in the names of the featured players, the emotional strength of its plot and the lesson that true happiness does not depend upon the possession of wealth. The Woman with Four Faces Released by Paramount. Story by Bayard Veiller. Directed by Herbert Brennon. Running Time Approximately One Hour and a Half.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Elizabeth West Betty Compton
 Richard Templar Richard Dix
 Judge Westcott George Fawcett
 Jim Hartigan Theodore Von Eltz
 Judson Osgood Joseph Kilgour

Elizabeth West, a professional crook, is caught after a hotel robbery. However, in a battle with wits, she is released. Richard Templar, the district attorney, resigns after his failure to convict her and also because the judge refuses to give him aid in securing a document that will round up a gang of drug peddlers. Templar then goes to Betty and enlists her aid in securing the paper. At first she is sceptical but he finally convinces her of the great thing she will be doing for humanity if she accepts. After making preparations they finally enter Judson Osgood's home where the paper is concealed. They succeed in getting it, but before they can make their escape they are caught in a tussel. Elizabeth gets possession of a gun and forces them all to bend at her will. Osgood is taken to prison and an end is put to the drug traffic. Templer has fallen in love with Betty and asks her to marry him.

This is a picture that is rich in thrills and suspense. One is never quite sure of the final outcome and fresh interests are always kept on hand to spring at crucial moments in the story. It is a thoroughly entertaining picture from beginning to end, and as a whole is one of the best crook plays that has recently come to the screen.

There is no doubt in our mind but that "The Woman with Four Faces" will give complete satisfaction to all who see it. A splendid cast has been assembled and all do creditable work. Betty Compson, as Elizabeth West, plays the part convincingly. She displays her talents as an able actress in all of the four make-ups that she uses in this picture.

Richard Dix presents a strong figure as the young district attorney. Each of the other members of the cast contribute their share of good work and the director has also done well with the production. Every detail in the picture is good, every set is interesting and although it is slightly longer than the majority of these features we are ready to say every foot proved enjoyable. J. M. D.

Counterfeit Love

Playgoers Pictures Photoplay In Six Parts. Authors, Adeline Leitzbach and Thomas Fallon. Directors, L. R. Sheldon and Ralph Ince. Cameraman, William Black. Running Time, Seventy Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Richard Wayne Joe King

 George Shelly Alexander Giglio

Mary Shelly, a Southern girl, is the sole support of her invalid sister and brother George, who has suffered shell-shock during the World War. She is in hard circumstances when a stranger comes to town who makes love to and wants to marry her. Mary, who does not love her suitor, is temporarily relieved by the arrival of her brother with a sum of money in his possession. It afterwards develops that the money was wrongfully obtained. Mary proceeds to pay off the mortgage interest on their home, but the money turns out to be counterfeit and her brother runs away. Secret Service men take up the trail of the counterfeiters. Mary's last hope lies in the chance of Queen Bess winning a race but the horse loses out in the home stretch. As a final resource Mary consents to wed the stranger, who is the principal in the schemes of the counterfeiting gang. But at the crucial moment, Richard Wayne, a secret service detective, who has won her heart appears upon the scene, spoils his rival's plot, stops the wedding, wreaks up the gang and wins Mary.

Stirring melodrama and brisk, bright comedy are freely mingled with excellent results from an entertainment standpoint in this production. It is well directed, cleverly acted, handsomely photographed and gives every indication of proving the most lucrative box office attraction turned out by the Playgoers studios up to date.

The big situation is undoubtedly the horse race scene, which is filmed with extraordinary accuracy of detail, a real thoroughbred classic if ever there was one screened, brimful of excitement, dash and color, and novel in conception, for contrary to the time-honored formula of a heroine being saved from financial and moral ruin by the horse on which her hopes are pinned winning first money, the unlucky steed in this case falls in the homestretch, poor Mary Shelly sees disaster and an unwelcome marriage staring her in the face and is only rescued in the nick of time by the man she loves, just as the leader of the counterfeiting gang is about to make her an unwilling bride.

But the racing episode is but one of many well staged thrills, the shadow of murder stalks in the background, the Secret Service agents have their work cut out for them in foiling the counterfeiters, the fire scene is "put over" with great success, well balanced, humorous relief leavens the melodramatic appeal, and a happy ending is attained.

Joe King fills the role of the dashing hero, Richard Wayne, satisfactorily; Marian Swayne is an attractive and winsome heroine and adequate support is given the principals by the remainder of the company. The camera work throughout is of fine quality, besides the race track scene already mentioned there are many beautiful exteriors and charming lighting effects in evidence. "Counterfeit Love" can be safely exploited, not only as a picture likely to arouse all lovers of the turf to a high pitch of enthusiasm but a film remarkable for its melodramatic force, sterling thrills and pleasing love romance. G. T. P.

The Lamp in The Desert

C. B. C. Photoplay In Five Parts. Author, Ethel M. Dell. Scenario Writer and Director not credited. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Stella Denvers Gladys Jennings

Stella Denvers, an English girl, living at a military post on the northwest Indian frontier, is persuaded to marry Captain Ralph Darce, although she does not love him. Captain Monck, a sincere admirer of the girl hears that Darce has a wife in England and brings pressure to bear which results in the sudden disappearance of Darce, who is supposed to have been killed. Believing herself free, Stella weds Monck. The latter receives a letter from England which advises him that Darce's wife died just before her husband married Stella. Monck, in his Secret Service capacity, sets out to trail some native assassins. A child is born to Stella, who is later horrified when circumstances indicate that Monck killed Darce to get him out of his way. The natives make a raid on the bungalow and Monck meets Darce, who has come to claim Stella. Darce is fatally wounded as the attacking party opens fire. Monck and Stella are reunited.

Produced abroad, this picture possesses a certain charm by virtue of its strong Oriental coloring, which adds materially to its artistic value. The story differs from the usual desert theme in that it deals with the mysterious disappearance of the man whom the heroine marries in good faith, being unaware that he has a wife in England, and the unraveling of the net into which she has been thrust by her second lover and husband, a British Secret Service officer. There are any amount of complications in the plot, which strains melodramatic license almost to the breaking point at times, but maintains a fair average of interest and winds up with the slaying of the chap responsible for all the trouble by the natives and everybody happy.

The fight between the British soldiers and tribesmen is well staged, and Monck's adventures in disguise among the hostile Waziris culminate in a sharp surprise angle, when Stella's brother tears off the Secret Service agent's disguise and the supposed native turns out to be the man she loves. Incidentally, the gallant captain has a hard time persuading the heroine that he hasn't murdered hubby number one, but his innocence is made clear in due course when the designing Darce shows up just in time to be shot to pieces by the dark-skinned raiders from the hills.

Gladys Jennings is an attractive personality in the role of Stella Denvers and fully equal to the demands made upon her emotional ability by the situations which fall to her share. She is supported by a competent cast, the members of which are unknown to American audiences. The photography throughout is excellent, including some remarkably fine long shots of the desert borders, and good lighting prevails. The film can be successfully exploited as a mystery melodrama with unusual foreign scenic effects and should prove a good attraction for the smaller houses. G. T. P.

Riders of the Range

Truart Film Corporation Photoplay In Five Parts. Author, Courtney R. Cooper. Scenario by Elizabeth Gaskins. Direction by Otis B. Thayer. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

 Bob Randall Roy Langdon

 Dolly Dolly Dale
 Inez Helen Hayes

Ranchman Martin Lethbridge is president of the cattleman's association. Numbers of cattle are being mysteriously killed daily and the cattlemen suspect the sheep raisers of destroying the stock. On the other hand, Gregg Randall, leader of the sheep raisers, complains that sheep are continually being killed or stolen and believes Lethbridge and the latter's associates are responsible. Lethbridge and Gregg's daughter Dolly meet and fall in love. The annual rodeo brings a large gathering of sheep and cattlemen to town. Blunt Vanier, who aspires to the presidency held by Lethbridge, accuses the latter of selling out his friends because he is infatuated with Dolly Randall. The association gives Lethbridge thirty days to lay bare the secret of the cattle killing. Vanier organizes the White Riders, a band of unscrupulous adventurers who intend to burn down every sheep outfit and kill the live stock. Vanier and his gang do considerable damage, but are finally unmasked and jailed. Lethbridge wins Dolly for his wife.

The old-time struggle for supremacy between cattle kings and sheepmen is the basis of the plot set forth in "Riders of the Range," a very familiar trail for admirers of Western film and fiction to follow. But the love story is entirely satisfactory, and whatever the main theme may lack in originality, the picture is so full of ginger and alive with colorful atmosphere that it holds its interest to the end and may be listed as well up to the high water mark of sensational border tales.

In this type of feature swift and sustained action is what counts, and from the first to the final reel there is here no slackening of pace as the hero and his outlaw enemies plot, counterplot and whirl through a maze of exciting adventure. There is shooting galore, rough-riding stunts in plenty, numerous well developed thrills and excellent backgrounds, which include many fine long shots of the cattle ranges, the locations in every instance being skillfully selected and thoroughly in keeping with the trend of the narrative.

Edmund Cobb plays the part of Martin Lethbridge with praiseworthy energy, shaping as a very capable horseback hero. Dolly Vale, in the role of his sweetheart, is a cute, pretty lass who gives a natural and appealing performance, Frank Gallagher registers well as the villain, Blunt Vanier, and competent support is furnished by other members of the large cast. The film ought to please patrons of the smaller and neighborhood houses and can be exploited as a typical Westerner of more than usual "thrill" power and speedy action.

Peter The Great

Paramount Photoplay In Six Parts. Story and Scenario by Sada Cowan. Director, Dimitri Buchowetzki. Running Time, Sixty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Peter The Great Emil Jannings
 Catherine Dagny Servaes
 Menchikov Bernhard Goetzke
 Alexis Walter Janssen
 Czarina Eudoxia Cordy Milovitch
 Aprosina Alexandra Sorina
 Peter the Great, Czar of Russia, has extended his country's power and seen it prosper under his autocratic but sagacious rule. He determines upon war with Sweden, which is opposed by the priesthood and his Czarina, who has long been alienated from him. His son Alexis is a weakling and shares his mother's opinions. Peter thrusts all obstacles aside and the campaign begins. His son, appointed to high command, proves a coward on the battlefield. In camp Peter meets and falls in love with Catherine, an army follower. She soon wields great influence over the Czar, who divorces his first wife and weds Catherine. Alexis joins in a conspiracy against his father, who has already forgiven him for his timidity before the enemy. An assassin steals into Peter's bedroom and attempts to stab him. The Czar struggles with and overpowers his assailant. Alexis is arrested and put to the rack, but is unable to name the chiefs of the plot. A false report to the effect that Peter has died is circulated. The plotters bring out Alexis to be crowned. As he accepts the crown and denounces his father, the latter suddenly appears and shoots him. The plotters are gathered in by the guard. Peter is overcome with remorse and taken ill. His trusted henchman, Menchikov, infatuated with Catherine, makes her a prisoner, but she gets word to Peter, who rises from his sick bed, goes to her aid, Peter dies, leaving Catherine ruler of Russia and predicting a bright future for her.

Like most German-made films with historical backgrounds, "Peter the Great" has a strong spectacular appeal, luxuriates in gorgeous pageants and sumptuous settings, the photography is of uniform excellence, everything is done on a generous scale, big and impressive, the crowd grouping within and without is skillfully handled, pomp and grandeur reign supreme over these realistic, somewhat barbaric, scenes depicting Russian life in court and camp during the seventeenth century. Emil Jannings by his artistic impersonation of royal Peter lives up to the high reputation he has already gained with American audiences.

Jannings is "every inch a king," a rude and ruffianly monarch in certain moods, it is true—but then the real Peter was anything but a gentle soul, if history is to be believed, and Mr. Jannings enters thoroughly into the spirit of the role at all stages of the play. He is at times rough, boisterous, wrathful, or tender, making love, or superintending the torture of his weakling son and heir, with equal zest, a very versatile performance and one which never allows you to forget that the dominating figure is a born ruler of men.

The story thus embroidered upon a historical basis is not a pleasant conception. It reeks of cruelty, blood-lust, all conquering ambition, and ends on a deep note of tragedy. But its melodramatic sweep is all powerful and the star receives faultless support from his talented associates. Dagny Servaes shines as an alluring coquettish Catherine, Bernhard Goetzke is a stern, forbidding figure in the role of Menchikov, Walter Janssen's interpretation of the unfortunate Alexis is a perfect portrait of a hapless weakling, and the Russian types as a whole carry conviction.

The picture, however, is not likely to win universal approbation. It may find favor with sophisticated audiences in the large theatres of big cities. But experience has proved that films with tragic motifs, unhappy endings, founded upon historical happenings, seldom swell box office receipts to any extent in the smaller houses. In exploiting the feature stress should be laid upon the splendid performance of Emil Jannings, Dagny Servaes and the powerful supporting cast and attention called to the fact that the picture does not exceed six reels in length.

Sawdust

Universal Photoplay In Five Parts. Author, Courtney Riley Cooper. Scenario by Harvey Gates. Director, Jack Conway. Cameraman, Allan Davey. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Nita Moore Gladys Walton
 Phillip Lessoway Niles Welch
 Mrs. Nancy Wentworth Edith Yorke
 Ethelbert Wentworth Herbert Standing
 Runner Bayne Matthew Betz
 Pop Gifford Frank Brownlee
 Soeck Dawson William Robert Daly
 Tressie Mattie Peters
 Sawdust Mike

Nita Moore, a little circus performer, is badly treated by the proprietor of the show, who claims her as his foster daughter. Through the efforts of a faithful friend, Runner Bayne, a gambler, she is placed in the home of Colonel and Mrs. Wentworth, an aged Virginia couple. By clever makeup in providing an identifying scar they are persuaded that Nita is their long lost child. But their lawyer, Phillip Lessoway, although in love with Nita, detects the imposture and reveals the truth. Nita attempts to commit suicide by drowning, is rescued by Phillip, forgiven by the old Colonel and all ends happily.

There is plenty of good circus atmosphere in the opening scenes of this picture, which provides Gladys Walton with a leading role in which that popular star's undeniable physical attractions are lavishly displayed, as well as manifold opportunities to sway an audience's sympathies, of which she takes full advantage. Heroines in the clutches of brutal ring-masters are familiar enough figures on the screen, and long-lost daughters restored to mourning parents in later years have rendered faithful film service for, lo, these many moons.

But an original note is cleverly introduced into "Sawdust" by the somewhat unexpected discovery that Nita is really an imposter. Despite the manufacture of a scar, with the idea of passing off the little circus girl as the child of Colonel and Mrs. Wentworth, the spectator is rather impressed with the notion that she will turn out to be the actual daughter after all. But she doesn't and a consequent surprise twist is given the plot which lifts it out of the beaten path.

The predicament of the hero, forced to choose between his honor as legal advisor to the aged couple and natural disinclination to denounce the girl he loves, adds fresh zest to the story. Nita cuts the Gordian knot by jumping into a stream with suicidal intent, a patently melodramatic proceeding, but excusable in that it gives her lover a chance to save her and winds everything up happily.

The photographic shots of the circus are true to life and admirably executed. One feels that this is the real thing "under the big top" and later some alluring rustic views add to the film's artistic value. Gladys Walton plays the part of Nita with her usual vivacity and keen sense of its emotionally dramatic possibilities, Niles Welch is a pleasing lover and the circus types are excellent. "Sawdust" registers as a very good program attraction and can be profitably exploited as to its circus atmosphere, with stress laid upon the appealing work of the star and talented supporting cast.

Haunted Valley, Pathe

In the ninth episode of the Ruth Roland serial the heroine is rescued from the pit into which she has fallen. Mallison also makes things look difficult for Craig. He engaged a woman to pretend to be in love with Craig and sends Ruth out, knowing that she will discover them together. Ruth jumps into a sluiceway to escape from a burning building and Craig dives after her to save her before reaching the water wheel. There is good action in this chapter and more complications to be solved in the following numbers.

First Runs on Broadway

STRAND

- 1. Novelty Overture
a) March of the Siamese (P. Linke)
b) Barney Google (on his vacation) Rose & Conrad
2. Odds and Ends—A compilation of interesting short subjects
3. Broadcasting Gems of the Strand
a) Serenata (by request) (Toselli)
b) A Birthday (Woodman)
4. Mark Strand Topical Review
5. Prologue to Penrod and Sam
6. Penrod and Sam (First National)
7. Circus Pals (Fox)
8. Organ Solo

Press Comments

Times.—Seldom has a picture been produced with the sterling humor and pathos combined in “Penrod and Sam.” Herald—The first real reproduction of Booth Tarkington’s stories that has ever been made on the screen. Consequently, it is a marvellously satisfactory picture. American—The sort of thing to which one can—and ought to—bring the whole neighborhood. It is a moving example of what is meant by that elusive phrase—wholesome entertainment. Tribune—As perfect a picture of childish fiendishness as one could find. Eve. World.—It’s real summery entertainment and we came away from the Strand yesterday feeling decidedly better for having seen it. Journal—There is more pure, unadulterated joy to be had out of watching this Booth Tarkington story than there would be derived from hearing one’s landlord say that beginning to-morrow the rent would be reduced fifty per cent. Telegram—The major portion of the picture is one succession of laughs, chuckles and smiles. Mail—All the joy, pathos, mischief and delights of boyhood in a small town have been pictured most successfully in “Penrod and Sam.” Sun and Globe—As entertaining a photoplay as one could find throughout the length and breadth of Broadway.

RIALTO

- 1. Overture
a. Selection from The Blue Paradise (Sigmund Romberg)
b) Solo—Auf Wiedensehen—Agnes Neudorff, soprano

- 2. Riesenfeld’s Classical Jazz—Yes, We Have No Bananas (Irving Cohn)
3. Rialto Magazine
4. Frederick Baer, baritone—Homing (Del Riego)
5. Jane Novak in Divorce (F. B. O.)
6. C. Sharpe-Minor at the Wurlitzer
7. Lloyd Hamilton in The Educator (Educational)

Press Comments

American—The whole film is exceedingly indoors and diffident. Eve. World—There is nothing especially new in either the theme or the working out of the story. Miss Novak does some nice work as the wife, as does John Bowers as the husband. Sun and Globe—The cast is good and succeeds in entertaining.

RIVOLI

- 1. Overture—Marche Slav (Tschaikowsky)
2. Revue Russe
a) The Song of Ljuba, soprano (Rimsky-Korsakoff)
b) Hey Uchnem (Volga Boat Song) tenor
c) Peasant Dance, danseuse
3. Russian Flashlights (Kineto Review)
4. Mediaeval Russia. Rivoli Ensemble
5. Hamilton Theatrical Corp., presents Emil Jannings in Peter the Great
6. Bil Cahili, mandolinist—Zigeunerweisen (Pablo de Sarasate)
7. Buster Keaton in Day Dreams

Press Comments

Times—An historical photodrama that rivals all others of its kind, and one in which the director has ably counted upon his story and the acting to stir spectators without resorting in a single instance to anything in the form of hokum. American—The story is historically dramatic; the settings, effective; and the action is swift and compelling. Tribune—It is one of the best across-the-water productions we have seen. Eve. World—The photography in spots is gorgeous and the work of Jannings at all times, as Peter the Great, is masterful and well worth the trip to the Rivoli. Journal—Although it toys somewhat with the facts of history, it is none the less one of the most smoothly flowing, compact and convincing pictures of its kind. Telegram—Takes its place beside “Deception,” . . . “The Loves of Pharaoh” . . . and “Passion.” Mail—Another great film to come out of Germany. Sun and Globe—This picture lacks the gripping drama which characterized every minute of the actual life of the interesting Czar.

WILL THEY CO-OPERATE?

F. P. L. Division of Exploitation
Asks a Question and Answers
It With Certain Emphasis

Between the writing of the headline and this, nothing has transpired to alter present calculations. So the question stands. But before going further, who are they? Who but Governors, Mayors, Rear-Admirals, clergymen, officials of social, commercial or civic organizations, merchants, hotel managers—in a word anybody whose letterhead, whose signature, name, store window, newspaper advertising or hotel lobby affords a greater degree of power or latitude to the picture showman's exploitation.

The answer to the question "will they co-operate?" is supplied in a bulletin composed of letters received by Paramount exploitation men. The communications are signed by personages coming under the classes listed above. The collection of letters constitute a formidable argument for the further expansion of a widely practiced enterprise—co-operative advertising—both from the standpoint of profit to the showman and the commercial and social benefits derived therefrom.

This bulletin was prepared for the Paramount Exploiters in particular, but may be obtained by showmen upon request to this department of Exhibitors Trade Review, or direct to Mr. John Rosenfield, Jr., Division of Exploitation, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, 485 Fifth Avenue, New York City. The letters were thus compiled into a booklet because, as Mr. Rosenfield puts it, "to show someone that someone else is doing what you want him to do is the most convincing kind of argument." Which sums it up as tersely as the matter can be summed.

The copies of letters received from mayors are all the proof the showman needs in order to go before the personage of that office in his town to effect some special arrangement whereby the city and the theatre both will benefit. Other mayors have entered into association with picture theatres on special drives and report the success and satisfaction resulting from their efforts. Consequently this pamphlet should prove useful in high degree to the showman.

The letters are not without their encouragement to the showman, for there are times when perfectly good ideas come to mind not alone but often in the company of doubts as to the practicability of the scheme, or uncertainty as to the reception of proposals at the hands of men whose assistance or rather co-operation is necessary to its success. So the pamphlet is not without its tonic effects, its stimulation to bolder ventures and more energetic efforts.

Here is a letter from a hotel manager "kindly requesting" a batch of stars' portraits for his lobby picture-frame, and there a proclamation by the Chief Executive of a State urging state-wide participation in a "better films" drive, here a merchant's praise for the success and profit he realized from an advertising tie-up with a theatre, and there—but there are fifty letters and each is worth while. So much so, in fact, that we think the showman will be well paid for his trouble if he can add a copy to his "box of tricks."

SLOGAN BASIS OF MERCHANT TIE-UP

Madison, Wis.—A merchant tie-up on a "Look Your Best" Week was put across by Dr. Wm. E. Beercoft, manager of the Parkway Theatre, and Goldwynner W. D. Nealand, in connection with the screening of "Look Your Best." Art Kniseley, advertising manager of the Burdick & Murray Department Store, went in heavily with the theatre management on this "Look Your Best" Week.

He gave the picture a splendid window display, using the slogan "Look Your Best" as a sales aid for their clothing, millinery, hosiery and toilet articles. In addition to the window display, Mr. Kniseley ran a sixty-eight inch advertisement in both the State Journal and the Capitol Times, tying up with "Look Your Best."

APOLOGIZES FOR NOISE AT LLOYD SHOW

Waterbury, Conn.—Novelty heralds and a humorous slant to the newspaper copy contributed importantly to the sprightliness of the campaign used by the Strand Theatre management in advance of the "Safety Last" showing.

One of the heralds was folded after the fashion of a court order and had on the outside in large type "Summons." Inside, between sections of small type were displayed the lines "Auto Drivers Take Notice!"—"Arrested"—"Big Fine"—"Leaving Your Car." The display lines read into the theatre's announcement of "arrested attention, "Big fine" picture," etc. This was followed by a small sealed envelope bearing the words "When embarrassed use the enclosed"—the "Safety Last" herald with a safety pin attached. In newspaper copy the Strand apologized to its neighbors for the "row that's going on around the place this week. But we can't help it. Harold Lloyd's causing the uproar."

TO FILM POSTMASTERS

New York.—While dedication of films to public officials is a comparatively old stunt, the idea has never been carried to the extent projected by Vitagraph for exploitation of "Loyal Lives," the Whitman Bennett production soon to be released. Mr. Bennett has sent out letters to five hundred postmasters requesting their photographs and these are to be filmed and exhibitors in each city to be supplied with film for insertion in the leader of the feature, which deals with the lives and adventures of letter carriers and men in the Post Office service.

Postmaster General Harry S. New has favored the producers with a personal endorsement of "Loyal Lives" to be featured in conjunction with these campaigns. The Bureau of Information of the Post Office Department is said to have issued bulletins to the 52,000 postmasters throughout the country concerning "Loyal Lives."

BACK TO ILLUSTRATED SONGS

Chicago.—The illustrated slide for popular songs is coming back—by way of its quaintness or novelty—as seen by the success of a stunt at the Chicago Theatre and other houses in the midwest territory. The stunt referred to was used in connection with presentations of "The Girl of the Golden West," the song of that title being accompanied by slides using stills from the film. The typed verses of the song are inserted on the stills in large letters to permit audience singing. These slides have been prepared for use by theatres desiring this means of tie-up and presentation.

MEETING AND BEATING TENT SHOW OPPOSITION

The customary bugaboo of transient summer competition on the part of carnivals, traveling stock companies and concessions was met and fought to a standstill by Manager Harry Belger of the Gaiety Theatre, Bluffton, Ind., a First National exhibitor. Mr. Belger's campaign can be turned into excellent ammunition by other small town exhibitors.

Mr. Belger based his campaign on observations made during previous seasons. He figured that, inasmuch as he was a permanent fixture in the town, contributing to its business, prosperity and the circulation of money and payment of steady taxes, he was entitled to consideration by the city fathers.

The customary tactics of the summer-show transient had been to make an advertising splurge in the papers, paint his advertising on the sidewalks, put posters on any vacant fence, do a thousand other things the legitimate all-year theatre manager does not dare do, and then walk off with the receipts.

When the first request came before the city council by a tent show to paint the sidewalks, Manager Belger appeared before the council to oppose the motion. He cited his standing in the city and gave his side. The city saw his point of view and passed an ordinance against the practice.

Then he got after the merchants, working through the Chamber of Commerce. He had several hand painted window displays made in which he could insert stills from his First National attractions. These were so attractive that they completely routed the opposition make-shift window cards handed the merchants by the tent show.

Then Mr. Belger started some institutional advertising to counteract the cool, out-door location of the tent show. He used the papers heavily to get over the fact that "The Gaiety Theatre is the Coolest Spot in the City" and that sufficient electric fans had been installed to guarantee the claim under any temperature.

The results were best evidenced by the fact that up to date there has been a surprising scarcity of tent shows in Bluffton this year and that the manager of the first tent show complained to the city treasurer that his license fee was much, much too high for the returns they took in.

RAYNOR SCOOPS CONVENTION

Cleveland.—One of the best "legitimate" exploitation stunts ever pulled in this city was registered last week when Manager "Bill" Raynor of Reade's Hippodrome "scooped" the National Grotto Convention.

Raynor had booked "What Fools Men Are" for the following week and had bought ten thousand "fool's caps" with the title of the picture printed on them. These he passed to all the ladies attending the convention and during the parade. Everywhere you looked, these caps were seen.

In all the newspaper photographs of the parade and in the several news weeklies which were featured on the screen even after the convention, the caps were in great prominence.

PUTS LOCAL COLOR IN FLAGS

Lowell, Mass.—Buddy Stuart, Goldwyn exploiter, got Lowellites very much interested in the showing of "Souls for Sale" at the Strand Theatre by attaching the name of a local auctioneer to the "Souls for Sale" auction flags which were used to decorate the front of the theatre.

The reproductions on this page indicate the methods used in campaigns for "Souls for Sale" in which a special film was made and a "studio questionnaire" employed for added interest to the newspaper tie-up with theatres. In connection with the questionnaire a promise is made that all blanks properly filled out will be sent to the studio for the information of casting directors, so no embarrassing kick-backs are courted and it does serve as a good tie-in for co-operative advertising, as illustrated by the reproductions here. In most places where the filming of crowds has been used the trucks have been supplied by auto dealers.

Two pages from the Wisconsin State Journal showing the newspaper display obtained for the presentation of Goldwyn's "Souls For Sale," at the Parkway Theatre. The filming stunt in which the State Journal cooperated with the theatre and took movies of crowds on the streets and in stores produced an enthusiasm which was reflected in the willingness of merchants to enter the affair and increase their newspaper spaces.

The truck which took pictures of crowds and individuals for the reel to be presented at the Parkway Theatre, Madison, Wisc., with "Souls for Sale." In addition to the filming stunt, the tie-up with the Wisconsin State Journal included a star identification contest and a "get into the movies," stunt.

A special trolley has been used in some of the campaigns for the Goldwyn Hollywood picture in connection with the picture taking idea, as shown in the above photo. Some added color was obtained by the Globe Theatre, New Haven, Conn., by having the cameraman made up as a devil.

The Albermarle Theatre, Brooklyn, has a lobby spacious enough for the staging of most anything in the way of displays—an advantage utilized to the fullest in this advance setting for Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships."

The full 24-sheet decorated the top of the marquee and a cutout of Dorothy Gish and Richard Barthelmess was used to mask the box office of the Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, when Tom Boland played the First National feature "The Bright Shawl."

In paging the streets of Newcastle, Australia, the management of the Strand Theatre did not stop short of the engine of "The Fast Mail" itself. The Fox thriller was vigorously ballyhooed there as it was in the cities of this country.

Omar the Janitor was the ballyhoo for First National's "Omar the Tentmaker," in Watsonville, California. Manager Laws of T. & D. says: "The best thing is the cost . . . total, rent of costume, $1.25, mule, 2 passes."

George Ritzler of the Sigma Theatre, Lima, O., had motor trucks dolled up with banners and cutouts to ballyhoo First National's "Within the Law." He had them until the cops stopped his street show and then when they got through he had some banners and cutouts, which he used for a lobby display—not without good effect either.

Dorothy Gish's $25,000 shawl retains its brightness though it travels a lot. Here it is in the window of a finery shop in Washington, D. C., whither it landed through the efforts of Nelson Bell, of the advertising department of Crandall's Theatres. "The Bright Shawl" played Crandall's Metropolitan.

Display for Universal-Jewel "The Flirt," at the Strand Theater, St. Paul, Minn. The arrangement is the work of Manager Sondberg, who conducted a big campaign in association with J. L. Morrissey of the Universal Minneapolis Exchange.

The front of the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre, New York, goes from atmosphere of the Canadian Northwest to that of interior Africa in jig time. The all-African aspect shown above was for the presentation of Pathe's "Black Shadows of the South Seas," and featured hula-hula skirts, ear-sticks, tom-toms and a variety of other articles typical of African culture.

Wooden horses are destined to become as scarce as wooden Indians, but while still extant they make a good lobby fixture for Tom Mix features. The display pictured above was designed by Manager Fred Normand for the Circle Theatre, Portland, Ore., for his three day showing of the Fox feature.

CLASS A

INDUSTRIAL PARADE
JUNE 16, 1923
MAYORS COMMITTEE

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY
OF

Greater New York's Silver Jubilee Parade gave the Universal exploitation men opportunity to do their stuff. They made a fair job of a float advertising "Merry Go Round," as evidenced by the prize ribbon shown at the right. The Universal ballyhoo was an extraordinarily elaborate affair and it ran away with the prize in its division in the parade, even if the horses were of wood and went around in circles. The architecture and decorations were by Raymond Cavanagh, manager of Universal exploitation, and his assistant, Marc Lachman.

Ed. J Haas, manager of the Midland Theatre, Hutchinson, Kansas, contributes the above photo to our gallery. When Paramount's "Covered Wagon," made its trip across the states Mr. Haas prevailed upon the powers that were to linger in Hutchinson and disport a bit with an added line or two featuring his theatre.

Another effective ballyhoo for the Midland arranged by Mr. Haas. This was a tie-up with the Hudson Motor Company of Hutchinson. A racing car that was all its name implied spluttered and made an eye-taking device as it traveled about the town with banners featuring Paramount's "Racing Hearts."

The "Souls for Sale" ballyhoo lobby designed by Manager F. K. O'Kelley of the Strand Theatre at Altoona, Pa. O'Kelley featured "stars" and for each of the thirty-five celebrities of the screen in this picture he had a little five-pointed cutout on the hand-painted banner over the entrance. As a circus was in town theatre advertising was stenciled on the pavements along the line of march and toy balloons were distributed to the crowds which gathered for the parade.

The recruiting officers of the U. S. Navy seem to be everywhere that Vitagraph's "Masters of Men" goes. If given serial numbers these tie-ups with the Service for exploitation might run into "four figures." The lobby above is in B. F. Keith's Theatre, Cleveland, which advertises "Super Summer Shows at Reduced Prices" in the lobby frames.

Street billing for the Palace used cutouts from the First National three-sheets, which were fixed to display frames showing hand-lettered cards decorated with a scene still.

A new popular song sensation "A Million Years" by the "Dixie Composer" offered another tie-up which Mr. Horne featured by having the composer, Marjorie Lamkin, play the piece at the Palace. The co-operation of music stores was thus at the command of the house presenting "Within the Law."

More street billing. Arrows pointing in the direction of the Palace carried the line "Turn here you are 'Within the Law,'" the final touch in the campaign for the new Norma Talmadge film in Memphis.

The MODERN THEATRE

Building — Equipping — Operating

NATURALLY the exhibitor, who has so far scrambled along with a lone pianist, or other substitute for real interpretive music, wants to know WHY he should go to the added expense of providing good music when he has been able to eliminate such extra expense up to date.

Now if the business of exhibiting pictures were not advancing rapidly there would be no need of providing music that really puts the show over. But the days of the catch-as-catch-can, nickel business is gone, never to return, and now that picture fans have become educated to the picture accompanied by atmospheric music, it is not good business to try and buck public opinion.

We will suppose for the sake of argument that Jones has always managed to keep his house open by showing poor pictures, accompanied by music at one hundred dollars a week. This is a low figure for music, and at such a price good music cannot be had. However we want to get a basis to work from, so we will let the music price stand.

We have personally known of several cases lately quite similar to the hypothetical Jones case, where the owner reasoned that he was getting nowhere, and after trying the drawing power of music, had discovered to his amazement that he had found a very satisfactory answer to his problem.

So we say that Jones is getting 10-20 in the afternoon and 10-25 after five in the evenings. We know of one case at this price, so we quote from it. Five pieces was the size of the augmented orchestra, and this cost the owner two hundred and seventy-five dollars (Union Musicians), which by the way is the only sort of music that is of any use, in the part of the country we live in. But aside from that, Jones now raises his prices a little. He raises the afternoon price to 25 top, and the evening to 35 top. He has eight hundred seats in the house, so that with two shows, packed (the last two shows) at night he has added $16.00 extra for the evening shows. The afternoon performances, three in number bring him in $12, making a total of $28.00 a day, or $840.00 per month. Under the old regime, Jones used to pay out one hundred dollars per week, or $400 per month, for practically nothing. Now he has added to his revenue $840.00 per month, and pays out for REAL music that is an attraction, and not a business-killer, $1,100.00. We deduct the extra money for seats from the cost of the REAL music and we have $360.00 left, which is not as much as Jones was paying for music in the first instance.

NOW he has real music for less than he had music that never brought him a nickel. In fact many people never went into Jones' place for the very good reason that he had such an apology for an orchestra. Jones now runs his place from 10.45 A. M. until 4.00 P. M. next morning, and we have seen half a house at two in the morning many a time.

On relief days Jones employs an organ, and that the orchestra is a real attraction, is proved beyond the shadow of contradiction, due to the circumstance that on Mondays, the orchestra's day off, the house NEVER does the business that it enjoys when the orchestra works.

There is a house in our city that employs fifteen pieces in the orchestra, and two organists. Many of these excellent musicians

How Music Pays the Exhibitor

By JOSEPH FOX

Number Two

receive considerably over the union scale, and on Sundays a De Luxe concert packs them in by the hundred. This theatre need only employ eight pieces according to the agreement made with the A. F. of M. but the management have found it to their advantage to augment this number to the size quoted.

Another house that we have knowledge of has gained such a reputation for good music that they ask 75c top price on all pictures, and if you want a seat you STAND in line for it, any night in the week. This orchestra consists of but seven pieces, but they are all artists, and the leader UNDERSTANDS the art of fitting pictures. It is quite a common saying about town, when this house is the subject of conversation to hear someone declare that music at the C——a, is more than half the show.

All of which but goes to prove that MUSIC is absolutely essential to the success of a picture house.

If your music is GOOD, and your pictures mediocre, the music will in most cases get the show over with at least moderate success. BUT—if your pictures are good, and the music is mediocre, or worse, for we honestly believe music either FITS a picture, or else it is just, well, music, you are playing a losing proposition. People DEMAND that their pictorial amusement be served with music, and as a showman, it is up to the exhibitor to supply the demand, or make way for the man who will.

It is not our intention to start an altercation in these columns concerning the advantages of the orchestra, over the organ, or vice versa. Each manager will have to dope this phase of the business out for himself. There are innumerable ways of looking at this angle of the game, and rash indeed is the person who comes out with a flat-footed statement, either one way or the other. Personally we believe that in certain houses, an orchestra is the thing, and in other places an organ will fill the bill quite nicely.

We know of more than one organist who is getting more money per week than some seven piece orchestras, and then again we know of certain orchestras that no organ could compete against, and that's the way it goes. So we say that this kind of music, so far as organ and orchestras are concerned, is largely a matter of choice. The main fact remains—WE MUST HAVE REAL MUSIC, and this music may be employed at less expense than no music, or poor music, which is worse than the former. At least if there is no music one is not tormented mentally by sounds that keep the sufferer on edge, while he vainly tries to concentrate on the screen offering.

It is not so far in the dim and distant past when no picture house manager used to mention his music. It was all picture, and no trimmin's. Now we find the best houses in the country not only mentioning this welcome addition to the program, but FEATURING it. Surely the discerning theatre manager or owner needs no further proof that the big boys make money out of the orchestra. If they didn't, they wouldn't have them. Big picture house syndicates would never employ hundreds of high salaried musicians IF they didn't get a return for their investment. Not so you could notice it. These men KNOW that music is an absolute necessity to the modern pictured drama, and they supply it. The public PAYS for it, and are glad to do so.

NEW FOTOPLAYER MODEL ON THE MARKET

A new pit pipe organ designed specially for motion picture theatres is announced. It is a complete orchestral two manual and pedal unit organ including traps and percussions and may be played either manually from a standard organ type console or by the double roll player device using the ordinary 88 note roll.

A particular advantage of this instrument is the convenient manner of installation. This is accomplished either in the pit or the organ may be divided, the swell boxes placed either behind the screen or in chambers already constructed. The economic feature of this easy installation may be appreciated when you consider the cost, delay and inconvenience of the usual reconstruction changes necessary for the reception of the standard organ.

The instrument is unified in the very most up-to-date and modern way, allowing the operator to play any stop or combination from any position on the manuals and pedals.

We take particular pride in the performance of the action. By this we mean the mechanical action that admits wind to the pipes, as this action is of very greatly advanced construction and is capable of great speed. It would be impossible for any human being to play an instrument that would even nearly approach this action in speed.

Another advance in the construction of this model 49 is the manner in which the swell chambers are constructed. Every joint is made with the infinite care that an artist would use in constructing an instrument of the very highest grade, as for instance a piano or a violin. These joints are made perfectly, being not only sound proof but practically air tight as well. This has the advantage of entirely closing in the tone so that unlimited expression can be obtained.

The Venetian shutter action is constructed in the same careful manner as the case, and in addition is equipped with a very powerful and improved vacuum pneumatic power mechanism that allows the operator, by a slight touch of the foot through electrical connections, to bring into action one of the most wonderful mechanisms ever devised. While this mechanism must operate the shutters at lightning speed, it must be done without the slightest sound. When the shutters are open the full force of the tone is allowed to flow from the sound chambers in unrestricted volume. With every stop in the organ turned on these shutters control the sound from a murmur to a thunderous volume.

The construction above referred to has allowed an entirely new departure in the method of building and voicing the different instruments. These instruments can be voiced and constructed and made to speak the true instrument because it is not necessary to take into consideration the volume of tone as this is controlled entirely by the newly devised and greatly improved sound chambers and expression mechanism which is in reality a distinct departure from the accepted construction of the present day.

They Are Bringing Good Music to the Masses

SIGMUND KRUMGOLD

Sigmund Krumgold was born in Hartford, Conn., July 1st, 1896. He studied the organ with Gaston M. Dethier; the piano with Gaston M. Dethier and Lawrence Goodman and Counterpoint with Percy Goetschius.

Musique Religieuse of Malines.

He left Antwerp during the bombardment of that town in October, 1914, and went to England, giving organ recitals there under the auspices of the Belgian Government for war charities, playing over 260 recitals all over England in less than one year.

He came to America in 1916, was engaged at the Rialto Theatre that same year, and from 1917 until 1921 was at the Rivoli Theatre. At present with the Stanley Company, at the Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. Swinnen composed three books of songs in the Flemish language, and also recently published five books of Original Compositions for the Theatre Organist. He also made twelve transcriptions of orchestral compositions for the organ.

CARL FISCHER TO PUBLISH BIG AID

Solochestra Organ Parts Published in Cooperation With Organists' Society.

The Society of Theatre Organists, from its inception, has worked for better orchestral organ parts. An article by President Berentsen, published in Exhibitors Trade Review sometime ago, sets forth fully the ideas of those theatre organists who have given the subject careful attention.

It may be stated that the movement fostered by this society is by no means one of hostility to the harmonium parts heretofore furnished by publishers. These parts are only intended for "filling in" and usually were well planned for that purpose. It has been felt, however, that changing conditions in the duties of the organist demand an improved organ part.

The firm of Carl Fischer will issue, shortly, under the name of "Solochestra Organ Parts" a special edition of the Favorite Concert Album for organ, constituting a collection of twenty-five compositions in diverse style, suitable for theatre or recital playing. The arrangements for this volume have been made by Geogre W. Needham, an experienced organist and musical director. They embody the principles set forth in Mr. Berentsen's article, and have received the indorsement of prominent organists. The publishers' claim, that these "Solochestra Organ Parts will be equally effective as an orchestral or a solo part," is confirmed by examination.

Salient points are: 1, an improved accompaniment or orchestral organ part in large notes; 2, the skillful cueing in of melody, bass or other necessary voices in small notes, making a complete solo part; 3, a minimum of orchestral or register annotations, making for clarity.

Due announcement will be made of the publication of this volume, which is in press.

Merited Praise Greets No. 5 Which Big Publishers Arrange for Theatres

A happening of interest to all motion picture orchestra men is the recent publication of Schirmer's Photoplay Series, Vol. 5, by Domenico Savino.

Disregarding the obvious fact that it is published to supplant or replace the well-known material which has been played almost to death, it actually sounds a new note in its particular field.

Not only is the preparation and editorial work superior to anything Schirmer has given to the orchestra public heretofore, but a number of practical features, not to mention innovations, are included. One for example, is the omission of much slow music. The Schirmer firm made wide inquiries before taking this action. A marked death of agitated, "hurries" and lively music was noted but andantes and "theme numbers" were abundant.

Another strong feature is the exceptional itself, Mr. Savino shows himself a skilful and original master of practical orchestration.

Of course, Schirmer's own editorial staff played a part in perfecting the arrangements and in working out the combinations, hence these latter are particularly clever and timely. Any combination of instruments may be used provided the piano is included.

In response to the advance advertising, a great many copies of the volume has been sold, and the publishers report a most gratifying inflow of testimonials and miscellaneous commendation. The contents of Photoplay Series, Vol. 5 are as follows: 1, Allegro Precipitoso; 2, Conspiracy; 3, Tragic Andante; 4, Rustic Allegro; 5, Dramatic Allegro; 6, Carnival Grotesque; 7, Storm music; 8, Allegro Agitato; 9, Misterioso alla Valse; 10, Processional.

THE SYNCHRONIZER READY FOR MUSICIANS

The Synchronizer, consisting of six synchronizing suite for motion picture settings has made its appearance from the press of Carl Fischer. It is a musical work long needed by the theatre. Briefly it is a complete library of incidental music in six volumes and each suite provides all the necessary material for any given picture. Individual movements of any suite may be used independently for any motion picture situation.

The plan under which each of the six suites operates is as follows:

Major Love Motif—To announce the entrance of the Heroine of Hero; also to predominate in normal (or joyous) scenes wherein these characters appear. Minor Love Motif to announce the entrance of the Heroine or Hero to predominate in pathetic scenes wherein these characters appear. Sinister Motif to announce the entrance of the "Heavy" (Villain). Agitato (based on Sinister Motif) to predominate in scenes wherein the "Heavy" appears. Hurry or Furioso (based on Love and Sinister Motifs) to predominate in scenes wherein the "Heavy" and the Heroine or Hero appear.

Making the Theatre Site Pay

THE time when theatre men erect a building exclusively for theatre uses is about past. Sometime ago the writer drew attention to the tendency in theatre building to put up a substantial building that would accommodate stores, offices, banquet and ball rooms and thus increase the revenue. It has been done successfully in and around Pittsburgh, by the Rowland and Clark interests and in many other cities until nowadays hardly a theatre goes up that does not provide for additional revenue from space for business purposes.

Now comes plans for the new Cosmopolitan Theatre in Washington. Here is what the owner will build upon the site.

A modern ten story building of granite and terra cotta.

A restaurant seating 300 persons in the basement.

A dancing garden for 1000 persons in the basement.

A roof garden seating 1,500 for summer pictures.

Two hundred offices in the building.

There is no definite method of determining at this time what revenue will be derived from the leases but it will be large, especially in Washington, where the demand for office space is always large. It is safe to assume that whether the theatre enjoys good or bad business the income from the by-products, office and restaurant space, will provide an insurance against loss.

Work on the new theatre is under way on the site at the corner of Thirteenth and E streets northwest for A. Julian Brylawski, well known throughout the eastern section of the country. For the last twelve years Mr. Brylawski has conducted the Cosmos Theatre, a combination motion picture and vaudeville house, on Pennsylvania Avenue, between Ninth and Tenth streets.

According to a description of the new theatre, it will be second to no other such house in the United States, and will, of course, incorporate every modern feature, with the addition of many new items that the architects, the firm of C. Howard Crane, of Detroit, have originated.

The lobby and foyer of this new house will be probably the most beautiful and imposing that any motion picture house can boast, being thirty-five feet high and seventy feet long, with a grand staircase at the end. The walls will be draped with handsome material in Continental pattern, and paneled and painted in keeping with the general color scheme. There will be seats for 2,500 persons.

The stage, which will be 40 by 70 feet, will be so arranged that it may be readily transformed to accommodate any event, from pictures to grand opera. Music, aside from the orchestra numbers, will be furnished by a huge pipe organ that is the final word in such musical instruments.

The auditorium will be egg-shaped, tipped off at the stage, and one of the best features in its construction is the fact that there will be no columns to obstruct a clear view from any part of the house. The decorations on the inside will be copied after the late Empire period.

A unique feature will be the basement of the building, where a large dancing garden, capable of accommodating 1,000 persons, will be located. This room will be banked around with a terraced garden. It will provide an ideal place to drop in before or after the performance. A restaurant that can serve the wants of 300 persons at a time also will be located in the basement.

Where the elevator machinery on most buildings forms an unsightly tower, the plans of this theatre have utilized this space for the installation of a projecting apparatus, daylight screen, rear projection, from which pictures may be shown to patrons of the roof garden in the summer season.

The roof garden, which will be high up and afford a wonderful night panorama of Washington, has a seating capacity of 1,500.

The building will be ten stories high.

EXHIBITOR BUILT OWN COOLING PLANT

Atchison, Kan.—For the smaller downtown theatre, or the larger suburban houses, Lee Gunnison of the Royal theatre, here, has contrived his own cooling system. The small cost and the effectiveness of the system are its paramount features.

Gunnison's system does not differ vastly from many others. The system may be installed in several different manners. A round hole may be cut in the rear wall of the house, about midway. Any platform obstruction between the rear wall and the auditorium must be done away with, an elevation of the platform being one logical method. An ordinary tin windmill type of fan then is placed in the round hole of the rear wall and run by a 5 or 6 horsepower electric motor, the breeze sweeping up through the auditorium with force enough to blow the hat from one's head. In the winter the hole in the rear wall easily can be refilled.

Another method that can be used with the same system, especially where the house is larger, is to construct two holes in the rear wall in line with each of the side isles, giving twice the amount of ventilation. An ordinary leather belt, 5 or 6 horse power electric motor, the size to depend upon the dimensions of the auditorium, and a windmill fan constitutes the full equipment needed to install Gunnison's system.

No noise results from the method of operating the fan, or fans, providing a sufficient amount of oil is used. The total cost of installing such a system depends entirely upon the nature of the theatre. If the house is built of concrete or stucco, rather than brick or other material that would be more adaptable for making an opening in the rear wall for the fan, the cost would be slightly more. The cost of the fans is comparatively small as they can be made in any tin shop.

While the system has much merit, it is not so desirable for the downtown houses, due to the difficulty in obtaining proper arrangements for installing the system. In neighborhood houses it seems successful.

Denmark's Theatres

Washington, D. C.—About 70 per cent of the motion pictures in the Danish market are of American origin, says Consul General M. L. Fletcher in a report to the Department of Commerce. Most American pictures are sold for all three Scandinavian countries, the purchasers later re-disposing of them in the individual countries.

In Denmark there are two producing companies and 21 domestic and foreign distributing and exchange companies. Copenhagen is the center for distribution in Denmark and many Danish motion picture dealers buy also for Sweden and Norway.

Denmark has 299 motion picture theatres, 4 with a seating capacity of over 1,000, 2 seating from 600 to 1,000, 40 accommodating from 300 to 600, and 253 seating 300 persons or less. Programs in these theatres usually change once a week.

COMPARISON OF COMPANIES INCORPORATED

Albany.—A comparison of companies of all sorts incorporating in New York state this year, with a year ago reveals that 15 motion picture companies, having a capitalization of $274,000, were incorporated during April, 1922, as compared to 32 with a capitalization of $851,000 in the same month this year. In May a year ago, there were 28 motion picture companies incorporated, these showing a capitalization of $1,490,000, as compared to 22 last month, having a combined capitalization of $1,212,000.

WEST COAST NOW HAS 110 HOUSES

Los Angeles.—One hundred and ten theatres in actual operation, and a building program for fifteen more ready during the fall, is now the actual count of West Coast Theatres, Inc., houses throughout the Southern and Northern districts of California.

In addition to the tremendous activity in the Home Office, West Coast Theatres, Inc., in partnership with C. L. Langley are negotiating for three new houses, while in partnership with the Messrs. Young, Grant and Swope of Hollywood Theatres, Inc., an expansion program for that district is being arranged.

SUPPLY DEALERS' BIG CONVENTION PLANS

Cleveland, O.—National President Dwyer of Cleveland has sent notice calling for the Second Annual Convention of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America, to be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill., on July 12, 13 and 14.

There will be an election of officers and directors and consideration of the amendment of the by-laws to provide for the expansion of nearly 200% during the first year.

The Eastern Zone will send a full delegation. The Boston and Philadelphia Delegation will join the New York Delegation and there is talk of a private car to carry the Eastern Zone Contingent.

One of the most important discussions to be carried on at the meeting will be the appointment of a Business Executive to carry on the business of the National Organization.

SUMMER BETTER FOR MISSOURI EXHIBITORS

Kansas City.—The summer of 1923 will be much different than that of 1922 for Kansas City exhibitors. Summer closing will be a rarity among the larger suburban houses, as twelve neighborhood theatres either have installed cooling systems since last summer or are installing them now. At the Circle, Apollo, American, Summit, Admiral, Gem, Warwick, Linwood, Benton, Broadmour, Alamo and Victory theatres the same cool temperature will be offered patrons as that available in the larger downtown theatres.

Functioning with the Kansas City Chamber of Commerce, the Kansas City division of the M. P. T. O. A. is launching an extensive campaign against carnivals and similar competition.

"Kansas City, due to the fact that one of the largest carnivals and circus concession companies is located in its outskirts, is a mecca for carnival companies, which prove a great detriment to legitimate business of motion picture theatres," said A. M. Eisner, president of the Kansas City organization. "It is not the 'clean' carnival we oppose so much as it is the type that includes gambling devices and tends to corrupt legitimate theatre business."

Large N. Y. Merger

New York City.—A merger of about 15 theatres on the East Side where competition is very keen is said to be under way. There are two big factors in the proposed deal. Mayer & Schneider and the Blair-Blindermann-Rosenzweig combination.

HOLDING OVER "MAIN STREET"; B'WAY'S SURPRISE LAST WEEK

Nothing Else Held Up in Regular Houses—Strand Did $29,700 Against Capitol's $33,400, With "Shriek of Araby"

The Broadway pre-release picture palaces in the Times square district last week failed to show any decided recovery from the slump at the box offices the previous week. With a break in the weather that was somewhat cooler than the preceding seven days, the box offices showed practically the same on the returns in the final count up.

The surprising feature was that "Main Street," at the Strand, pulled unusually business, and was consequently held over a second week, usual business for the Strand at this time of the year.

The estimated figures for last week's business are:

Camco—"Enemies of Woman" (Cosmopolitan - Goldwyn). (Seats 639; scale, 55-85; 2d week.) Pulling rather strong for part of week, but slackened off little toward end; $5,250.
Capitol—"The Shriek of Araby" (Sennett-Allied Producers and Distributors). (Seats 5,300; scale, 55-85, $1.10.) Gross somewhere in neighborhood of $33,400 on week.
Criterion—"The Covered Wagon" (Paramount). (Seats 608; scale, mats. $1 top; eyes $1.50.) Recovered slightly from week before, getting $10,495.
Lyric—"The White Rose" (D. W. Griffith-United Artists). (Seats 1,400; scale, Mats. $1 top; eyes, $1.50.) Played out four weeks announced, closing Sunday. Around $6,600 on final week.
Rialto—"The Snow Bride" (Paramount). (Seats 1,960; scale, 55, 85, 99.) Finished week somewhat under previous one, gross being $11,420.
Rivoli—"Only - 38" (Paramount). (Seats 2,200; scale, 55, 85, 99.) Good picture, but holding title rather weak. Showed no pulling power at box office, but entertained audiences. Weekly receipts, $13,870.
Strand—"Main Street" (Warner Bros.). (Seats 2,900; scale, 35, 50, 85.) This house did outstanding business of street despite several papers panned picture. Finished with gross of $29,700, and picture held over for additional week.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

A Lawyer-Exhibitor's Analysis Of the Uniform Contract

There are but few Exhibitors who are also lawyers. Bernard Edelhertz, former U. S. Assistant Attorney General, is also an exhibitor interested in the Coleman and Melrose Theatres, N. Y. City. His analysis of the Uniform contract herewith printed is his report to the M. P. T. O. of N. Y.

By BERNARD EDELHERTZ

It would not be possible within the time at hand to enter into a thorough and comprehensive discussion of all the different phases and angles involved in the various clauses of the Uniform Contract. It should be born in mind that almost a year has been spent by the Uniform Contract committee in negotiations with the Hays Organization for the purpose of bringing about this instrument.

I shall make an effort, however, within the time permitted to point out the high lights, that is the outstanding features which establish certain new principles in the commercial relations between the distributor and producer on the one hand and the exhibitor on the other.

May I also mention at the outset, that the committee representing the exhibitors consisted of only five men: Your State President, Mr. Charles L. O'Reilly; the founder of the Chamber of Commerce of the City of New York—Mr. Wm. Brandt; Mr. Leo Brecher, Mr. Louis F. Blumenthal and myself, of the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce, assisted by our able counsel, Senator James J. Walker.

On the other hand, the producers and distributors were represented by a great number of their ablest executives, assisted by a thoroughly organized legal staff among whom were some of the most eminent counsel in the United States, including the firm of Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft.

Every clause contained in the Uniform Contract was analyzed and discussed at great length. In fact, every word in every clause was closely scrutinized and time and again amendments and changes were made, and every change and amendment were thoroughly discussed. Many a time questions came up on which opinion was radically divided, and in such instances the conferences resolved themselves into a sort of form of compromise and arbitration, of give and take so to say, until a satisfactory conclusion was reached.

Edelhertz says:

The Uniform Contract is the first bill of rights of American exhibitors.

Adoption of the Uniform Contract will be one of the most progressive steps in the history of commercial relations between exhibitor and distributor.

We can justly be proud of the fact that your industry, one of the youngest, is among the first to adopt the principle of arbitration as a means of settling commercial disputes.

As I have stated on several occasions, in the Trade Press, no one connected with the labors which brought about this Uniform Contract makes any claim that it is a perfect instrument, and that the millennium for the exhibitor has been attained because of its adoption. But I do claim that it is the first Bill of Rights of the exhibitors of the United States in which certain fundamental rights are granted to exhibitors in their commercial relations with producers and distributors.

Like the Bill of Rights and the Magna Charta which laid down certain fundamental principles guaranteeing certain rights of citizenship, this Uniform Contract also lays down certain fundamental principles and grants certain rights to the exhibitor which the exhibitor never enjoyed before. But the Bill of Rights and the Magna Charta and even the Constitution of the United States have not covered all the fundamental rights of citizenship. Therefore, it is only reasonable to assume that the Uniform Contract has not cured all the ills from which the exhibitor has been suffering.

History teaches us that with the progress and advance of civilization the great documents laying down the fundamental rights of citizenship were changed and amended from time to time in order to meet changing conditions. Our own Constitution is not the same document it was at the time of its adoption. For better or for worse, it has been amended from time to time in order to meet changing conditions. For the Uniform Contract we claim the same privilege. We believe that the Uniform Contract is the first progressive step defining the relations and the mutual rights and obligations between exhibitors on the one hand and distributors and producers on the other. And as time goes on this instrument will be amended to meet changing conditions.

Now then, let us for a moment examine the criticism that has been directed against the Uniform Contract.

Of course, it is not the purpose here to enter into a lengthy discussion of this criticism, but I can safely say that, in so far as I have been able to study it, I have found that such criticism has not been made in a spirit of fairness nor with a knowledge of the facts regarding the various provisions contained in the Uniform Contract.

As an instance, let us take the criticism directed against Paragraph 12 of the Uniform Contract, which reads as follows:

"The Exhibitor agrees to run photoplays as delivered without alteration, except with the written or telegraphic approval of the Distributor, subject to requirements of competent public authorities necessitating any change."

It has been asserted that this paragraph would give the producers absolute control of the screens of the country and that this control would be sold for fabulous sums for political and other propaganda. Such criticism I maintain, is not made in good faith, for it is not based on common sense or reason. It is not necessary to be a legal authority to understand that the common sense interpretation of this paragraph, as reflecting the intention of the parties to the contract, can only be construed as meaning that the exhibitor cannot re-edit pictures by any alteration or addition, but that is all that the scope of this paragraph covers.

To say that the wording of this paragraph gives the producer or distributor the right to insert political propaganda or commercial advertising in a picture is to violate the ordinary meaning of English words.

Those making this criticism know very well that any exhibitor would be justified in refusing to exhibit any picture containing political propaganda or commercial advertising, and it is therefore, clear that this kind of criticism is neither fair nor logical. Such criticism as this, I call destructive tactics, intended not to enlighten the exhibitor but to confuse him, and upon careful examination, you will find that most of it that has come out from certain quarters has not been directed either in a spirit of fairness or with a view of giving some constructive help to these important problems.

I repeat therefore, what I have stated on several other occasions, let's be fair to the Uniform Contract. We admit that it doesn't accomplish all that we have sought to accomplish for the exhibitor but I maintain that it is a great step ahead in the right direction.

How much has been gained by the Uniform Contract can be readily ascertained by anyone who wishes to take the trouble of comparing the clauses contained in the old forms of contract which the exhibitor used to sign heretofore, and the clauses contained in the new contract.

I am not going to waste your time or mine by entering into an analysis of what the clauses of the old form of contract contained. It would be a futile discussion. I challenge any exhibitor or any producer or distributor to point out to me, in the old form of contract, not only a single clause but even a single statement which makes the producer or distributor liable for any violation of the terms of the contract, and I challenge any one to point out to me a single clause of a single statement, in the old form of contract, wherein the exhibitor acquires any rights whatever under the provisions of that contract.

The fact is, and I can state this fact without fear of contradiction, that under the old form of contract the exhibitor assumed all the obligations, and the producer and distributor reserved to himself all of the rights without assuming any correspondent obligations. And in addition, as if that in itself were not sufficient, the producer or distributor forced the exhibitor to sign a contract, which contained a vicious clause giving the producer and distributor an extraordinarily remedy by conferring upon him the arbitrary power to wipe the exhibitor practically out of business at any time that he though the exhibitor violated any of the provisions of the old form of contract.

I have reference to the clause providing for $250.00 additional deposit, by virtue of which clause an exhibitor could be put on a cash deposit basis. You all know what that meant.

Now, all this has been done away with and put out of existence. The exhibitor need fear no more this $250.00 additional deposit clause. The Uniform Contract contains an Arbitration Clause which provides a fair and equitable basis for arbitration of any dispute that may arise between exhibitor and distributor. It is the Board of Arbitration consisting of an equal representation of exhibitors and distributors, and not the distributor or producer that has the power to decide if an exhibitor has violated any terms of the contract and what remedy shall be given to the distributor

A Theatre Press Agent on Fooling Editors

By ED S. OLMSTEAD

Director Advertising and Publicity Missouri Theatre, St. Louis

I don't mind telling EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW my theory is to keep faith with the press, and not abuse its confidence.

There is the temptation to follow tactics of the unscrupulous, fly-by-night press agent, and fool the Editors into news breaks, but to maintain consistent, week after week newspaper assistance, requires an open and above the board policy.

I contend that a careful study of the local situation and a complete understanding of the peculiarities of the various papers are essential in securing proper notices and co-operation. I am proud to say that, without a single exception, every story concerning the Missouri Theatre and the pictures or acts we have played, that I have "planted," has been strictly legitimate. There is a slogan in Paramount Pep, which says, "But above all things, Truth beareth away the Victory," and that is the whole proposition in nine words.

My long experience as poster artist is a most valuable asset, not only because the requirements demand a knowledge of the fundamental of art, such as color, composition anatomy and perspective, but any measure of success depends upon a strict attention to detail and a lot of patience. Arrangement and layout of advertisements, together with the ideas of psychology of various styles of lettering, can only be appreciated and used effectively after actual experience and application. I believe variety in advertising just as necessary as variety in program. Each picture presents its oddities which should attractively dominate the display. Continued sameness encourages indifference.

Lobby displays are my hobby. Harold B. Franklin, Director of the theatre department for Famous Players, says: "Show me a theatre lobby and I'll tell you how good the manager is"; every lobby should serve two purposes; to sell the show and to sell the house. The patron's first and last impression of the theatre depends upon the lobby display. Punch, dignity and legibility should govern every announcement, large or small.

Now let me point out to you a few of the radical changes accomplished by the Uniform Contract.

In the very first clause of the contract there is a paragraph which reads as follows:

"If any of said photoplays shall be released by the Distributor after the period above specified, the Distributor shall be obliged to deliver such photoplays to the Exhibitor hereunder as though released within said period; and the Exhibitor agrees to accept pay for and exhibit them at such later period pursuant to the terms hereof."

In the first place you will note that pursuant to this clause each picture is to be described and identified in a schedule attached to the contract. This is a very important provision, because once a picture is described and identified in the contract, the producer or distributor cannot by any subterfuge or change of name take the picture out of the contract by calling it a special production and refuse to deliver it to the exhibitor at the price agreed upon. The exhibitors know from actual experience that this used to be a favorite pastime with some producers and distributors, and under the provisions of the old contract, the exhibitor practically had no remedy, and if he wanted to play the picture which was taken out from the contract, through some subterfuge, he would have to pay a much higher price for it.

Under the provisions of the first paragraph of the Uniform Contract, the distributor must deliver every picture mentioned and described in the schedule even if it is released after the time specified in the contract. Note for the first time, the expression in a contract for the purchase of pictures, "The Distributor shall be obliged to deliver such photoplays to the exhibitor" and see if you can find such a form of expression in any of the old forms of contract.

In the second clause of the Uniform Contract which deals with the return of prints will find this provision:

"It is understood that the delivery of a positive print properly directed and packed in the container furnished by the Distributor therefore, to a carrier designated or used by the Distributor, and proper receipt there for obtained by the Exhibitor, shall constitute the return of such positive print by the Exhibitor."

In the first place, according to the terms of this clause, the exhibitor is not obliged to pay transportation charges, if he is directed by the distributor to ship positive prints elsewhere than to the distributor's exchange, and in the second place the exhibitor is absolved from any responsibility by delivering the positive print properly directed and packed to a carrier, designated or used by the distributor.

The third clause deals with loss and damage to prints. It is a well-known fact that, according to the old forms of contract, the exhibitor was held liable for a lost, stolen or destroyed print, anywhere from 6 to 15c per lineal foot, but according to the provisions of the Uniform Contract the maximum that an exhibitor can be held liable for, anywhere in the United States, is for a sum not exceeding six cents per lineal foot, and in the State of New York we have a gentleman's understanding with General Hays organization that no more than four cents per lineal foot will be exacted from an exhibitor for a lost, stolen or destroyed print. Furthermore, there is a provision in this clause which will absolve the exhibitor from any liability, if on the day of the receipt of the print he wires the distributors's exchange that the print was received by him in a damaged or partially destroyed condition.

The fourth clause deals with the time and place of exhibition and prohibits the bicycling of films.

The fifth clause of the Uniform Contract specifies the instances in which the distributor is relieved from liability for failure to deliver the pictures contracted for. These instances are specially enumerated, but there is a significant statement at the end of this clause which says:

"It is understood, however, that the neglect or default of the Distributor's employees hereunder shall not be deemed a cause beyond the Distributor's control."

The sixth clause specifically prohibits the distributor from violating any protection or run clause contained in the contract.

"If I Were An Exhibitor and Wanted to Build High School Patronage"

The Editors invited a number of high powered exploiters to suggest ideas and methods for going after more business from high school students, who, according to a recent survey, are not steady patrons of motion pictures. Additional Exploiters make their suggestions this week.

By LOU MARANGELLA

Director Exploitation, Warner Bros.

Without question the most popular place in any community is the motion picture theatre. It is usually the largest, finest, best furnished, best-ventilated building. Despite this fact, there comes a time in the annual life of the theatre when its distinctiveness and drawing power is minimized. And this time unfortunately happens to be in the summer.

The summer slump seems to be the bane of the industry. At this period of the year it becomes doubly difficult to lure the high school boys and girls into the theatre. They would rather do all the pranks boys and girls are accustomed to doing out in the lots and parks than witnessing a breathtaking film drama in the cinema palace. The question, therefore, is how to attract the youngster who, as a rule, bring along the old folks.

A sure-fire method would be for the theatre owner to take a reel of one of the best baseball games between local schools, and advertise the date of its showing at a time when business is in the dumps. The taking of this film will not entail a great expenditure, and its advertising possibilities will far outweigh the small outlay of cash.

Certainly, no youngster, or group of youngsters, will miss the opportunity of seeing themselves on the screen, the way they appear in action and how their team mates and rivals size up. With a reel of this kind, and with the youngsters arousing the enthusiasm of their parents about it, in addition to the local newspaper publicity that can be secured, not to mention the prestige it will give the theatre, the showmen can do a good business—far better than if he just sat back and waited for them to come in.

There is just one thing to be guarded against in following this idea. If you advertise the fact that the game is to be shown in full, show it in full; for if you hoodwink them by only screening just a few feet of the film you will suffer forevermore both financially and in lost prestige. Once you lose the confidence of a youngster, you've lost a valuable theatre asset. And

Marangella Says:

Run pictures of high school contests and contestants.

Don't say you will run an entire picture and then give them only a hundred feet or so. They'll get sore.

Inject High School sports stuff in your reel.

this means money lost at the box office for a long time.

Baseball between local high school students are only one feature of their athletic activities in summer. Track meets, soccer football, tennis, hockey among the girls, and a number of other games can be turned into capital by the enterprising theatre owner. And in grasping these opportunities you can bring home the summer bacon, and incidentally plant the seed of good will in the hearts of the local boys and girls.

Ryskind Says:

Sell your theatre to high school authorities as an institution.

Try the essay contest. High school students fall hard for them.

Try drawing contests.

By MORRIE RYSKIND

Director of Publicity, Al Lichtman Corporation.

If I were an exhibitor, I would be very much interested in reading the report of the survey recently completed by the National Committee for Better Films, and I want to compliment the Exhibitors Trade Review on having the initiative to print the important data—important to the producer as well as to the exhibitor—gathered by Mr. Perry and his organization.

If I were an exhibitor, I would agree with the editorial conclusion of the Trade Review that I was paying perhaps just a little too much attention to the young children and the adults, and that I was neglecting the in-between group of high school children.

If I were an exhibitor, I would set about immediately remedying this condition, and I don't think it would be a difficult task.

I would take the old contest idea, and play it for all it was worth. School children are too young to participate in essay contests, and most adults are too indifferent. But the high school student is the type who likes nothing else but.

I would try to sell my theatre to the high school authorities as an institution.

I would go to the high school principal, and tell him that I wanted to offer a set of prizes for essay contests on various pictures that I would run in the course of a year, all pictures being subject to his approval.

Most high school children are forced to write essays on themes they do not like, and themes they do not understand. The composition teacher is interested only in getting them to write better. The exhibitor can appeal to her that compositions based on the films he shows will be of direct interest to every youngster in the school.

I would, if I hoped to get a majority of the students interested, pick the type of picture that the statistics show them to be interested in. Mainly, then, I should consider straight dramas, comedy dramas, and even a bit of melodrama, provided the last class was far, far away from the serial.

On a picture like "The Hero," it would be easy not only to enlist the support of the school authorities, but even to have the principal and the teachers endorse it. This picture, based on Gilbert Emery's great play that won the admiration of all the critics, is in a class by itself. Here I would arrange for a private showing for the teachers and then use their sentiment of approval for a mail campaign to the parents. In addition to the contest, this would seem to me to be the logical exploitation method.

I would not make all of the contests essays. Some might be drawing contests, in which the prize went to the student who best copied a still from one of the lobby displays, or to the student who drew the best original cartoon conception of the theme of the story. In that way I would interest the entire faculty, and incidentally have them come to regard my theatre as an institution that was working with them.

My prizes would not need to be monetary. A pass good over a given period would prove enough of a lure. At the end of the term I might give a medal to the student who had won most of the contests, this medal to be awarded as part of the graduation exercises. And, by all means, I would see that the teacher whose class made the best record in my contests received an award really worth while.

I think that for a comparatively small outlay, I would be repaid a hundred-fold. With such a campaign, I would have not only the students and the faculty sold on my theatre, but the parents, and the community in general.

What The Public Wants

Results of Questionnaire Canvass by Hays Organization and Contest by Large Newspaper Syndicate Reveal Likes and Dislikes of Newspaper Critics and Theatre Patrons

TWO sources of information on the public's attitude toward pictures of today have been tapped by two different agencies—the Hays organization and the Newspaper Enterprise Association, one of the largest newspaper feature services in the world.

The Hays organization sent out questionnaires to motion picture critics of newspapers in important cities. The Newspaper Enterprise Association carried on a prize essay contest in newspapers throughout the country, through which newspaper readers were asked to answer in fewest words this question: "What ought to be done for the improvement of motion pictures?"

The Hays organization canvass disclosed the attitude of the press toward present day motion pictures. The result is important not only as reflecting the attitude of the individual critic toward pictures, but his idea of what the public he serves desires.

The Newspaper Enterprise Association directly reflects the attitude of the rank and file of movie patrons and is perhaps the most complete survey ever made. The Newspaper Enterprise Association serves more than 800 newspapers throughout the country.

The Hays organization returns, epitomized by Film Daily, are as follows:

Albany, N. Y.—I believe the average of production is improving and trying to be even better than it is.

Atlanta—General moral tone of films seen here is excellent. Why not shorter features and more snappy short subjects?

Boston—My criticism of the average program picture of today is not that it is immoral or offensive, but that it is so stupid and inane. The movie producers insult us when they seek to school us in morals. The films should not disclose a point of view.

Chicago—Every picture cannot be a masterpiece, but neither is every stage play or every novel. I think the proportion of worth while photoplays is high.

Cincinnati—Recent picture productions have been no better and no worse than ordinarily. It is artistic improvement that is necessary—the greatest weakness still being in poor structure and feeble characterizations.

Waste Footage

Cleveland—However, there is a great tendency at this time to make each feature of eight reels in length. Too much waste footage, too much padding in general.

Columbus, O.—I note by the Ohio censors' reports some unforgivable breaches in taste from all companies and especially from the topic weeklies.

Dallas—Public demanding more and more that capable and intelligent direction go hand in hand with the best advertised star.

Des Moines—I believe pictures are getting better, as the public is learning to appreciate finer things.

Detroit—General run of pictures indicates producers are striving for length rather than quality. I suggest some concerted method of holding directors within the bounds of solid, meaty pictures with a minimum of padding.

Evansville, Ind.—If producers could only be convinced that short comedies are not in popularity much could be done to clean up the industry.

Ft. Wayne, Ind.—The average run of motion pictures is as good as it can be expected to be when nine out of ten pictures are founded on stories which were popular and are supposed to have drawing power on that account.

Rentals Too High

Ft. Worth, Tex.—City gives poor support to motion pictures for its size. Photoplays on marriage and divorce have lamentably large following. Believe rentals on good pictures too high, encouraging fostering of low taste.

Indianapolis—I find that the feature picture on the whole is getting better both as to the story and direction. The feature picture is being better cast. It seems that studio favorites are no longer being given leading roles.

Memphis, Tenn.—Less elaborate society dramas depicting life of jazz of the rich with elaborate settings and more wholesome human interest films.

Minneapolis—The pictures I have witnessed recently have been notably free from offensive treatment of any class, creed or race. Their chief failure has been lack of a convincing story to tell.

Unless you are dealing with matter that is frankly pornographic, give real artists an opportunity in direction and acting—and the moralities will eventually take care of themselves.

Too Long

New York—Present day pictures are too long. Need somebody with judgment to know what stories really deserve lengthy treatment.

THE CRITICS SAY

There is too much waste footage and padding.

Pictures are not so offensive as formerly.

High rentals encourages showing poor pictures.

Individual achievements are only notable advances.

We have held the position of reviewer for the past three months and in that time have seen very little of the outwardly offensive. There is a long step forward in this respect.

Pittsburgh—In the first place I do not think that the motion picture makers want to make any better pictures than the general average at present, and if they did I do not believe any hodge-podge prescription for better pictures evolved from the results of a composite opinion of all the picture reviewers in the world would help them any.

Too little consistency and everyday life in the picture offerings. Departure from facts and radical liberties upon the part of directors would seem to be an outstanding defect.

Richmond, Va.—My observation leads me to believe that the great weakness in the pictures from a production standpoint lies in the editorial departments—in the selection of stories and in lack of coordination of the various factors concerned in their production—the author, continuity writer, director and editor.

Rochester, N. Y.—Thoughts, character unfolding, real problems of real life—rather than pageantry, exotic stories and bizarre dress (or undress) would, I think, improve the movies greatly.

I feel that the tendency to exaggeration in all classes of life and people depicted is a serious fault in the movies. Poverty, riches, class distinction are all over-emphasized in the average film. This constitutes a real danger, I feel, in sowing seeds of discontent and misunderstanding.

Careless Titles

Springfield, Mass.—Directors pay too much attention to star system. Emotional placards displayed with annoying frequency. Careless, inexpert and ambiguous titles often spoil an otherwise good picture.

I believe that too much consideration is shown for the undeveloped intellects in the audiences.

St. Louis—As to the general run of productions: I find that there has been little reason to waste my time seeing them.

Tacoma—It is my opinion that feature films, many of which now take from 70 to 80 minutes, might be cut down to run, say 40 to 45 or 50 minutes, with a consequent saving to makers. I would suggest that the short fun, or educational, become more abundant on picture house programs.

Washington—In my humble opinion, the only outstanding progress in the films recently has been entirely a matter of isolated individual achievement.

Contest Winners

The fifteen prize winning essays answering the question, "What Ought to Be Done for the Improvement of Motion Pictures?" are as follows:

Adaption—seek advice and opinion of original author—not collaboration. Eliminate unconventional villains—boresome faked stunts. Have cause for LOVE element. Eliminate patched-on happy endings. More novelty—less super-heroes—less illogical sermons. More real comedy—less slapstick. Society as it really exists—less snobbery. Conventional heroes, heroines, villains. Laverne Caron, 317 Harper Avenue, Detroit, Mich.

More Consistency

More consistency and plausibility in plots. Stricter regard to dramatic rules.

More good mystery and adventure stories, comedies and sympathetic stories about common people, fewer on domestic relations. Simpler settings. Emphasis on character delineation. More education and culture in studios. Greater originality in production. Actors who can act. Mary Henke, Monticello, Indiana.

"The Play's the thing—" Stop exploitation of stars as characters instead of character-portrayers. Truth in plot development, endings neither sad nor happy to order, but logical. Sincerity in presentation, preventing change in play's guiding motive in false bid for "sympathy." Elimination of censorship. It is puerile in conception and dispensation. Miss Aileen P. Stroud, 1826 West 11th Street, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Play, Not Star

Make the play the thing, not the star. Present characters, not caricatures. Make the characters act naturally and according to the laws of nature and man. Eliminate buffoonery and introduce humor. Do not gloss over crimes big or little and present everyday life, not Utopiae nor Jazzmaniae. J. R. Malloch, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Bureau of Biological Survey, Washington, N. C.

Let motion pictures learn from literature the power and charm of subtlety. Let them cease its sacrifice to garish obviousness. Let them stop the robbery of essential details to unnecessary action, a practice equally responsible with "the happy-ending-mania" for the complete change of theme which the author's story suffers under scenic butchery. E. N. Wilson, 3589 Linwood Rd., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Let "Better Cooperation" be our slogan and we can insure the future success of the "silversheat." Earnestly encourage writers, producers, artists and educators to frequently get together—1st, To offer helpful criticism; 2nd, To eliminate titles, statements, and actions which tend to destroy high standards; 3rd, To correct "film flaws." Mary E. Burgess, 89 Allen Street, Albany, N. Y.

Less Lingerie

Less lingerie, legs, loose ladies and lover's leaps; less perspiration, more inspiration. Fewer erotic, neurotic, exotic, tommyrotic situations. More sincerity, more head, more purpose. A sober realization that the universe is its stage, history its back-ground, life its theme and the world its audience. Ellis Meredith, 306 The Cavanaugh, Washington, D. C.

For the improvement of motion pictures we need: Fewer adaptations. More and better original stories, of everyday American life, with simple themes, and new situations. Love stories are good, if not overdone. No slapstick. Truer characterization, even at the sacrifice of the "Happy ending." Put "sense" in censorship. Walter H. Martin, 1559 Thomas Avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

Give Us Life

Movies do not give us life, as we, the great majority, know it. We like to see ourselves on the screen. We want to see the heart of humanity beat. There is real humor in the world. Find it and screen it. Fade-out on the spectacular. Close-up on life. Mrs. W. R. Potter, Warren, Arizona.

Birth, love, hate, ambition, death and the other situations that make up life, do not come to us attired in magnificent costumes set off by gorgeous backgrounds, nor do they always end with a silly kiss. When motion pictures eliminate their artificiality, the American public will hold them in higher esteem. Harry Rollband, 409 Whitesboro Street, Utica, N. Y.

AN employes' house organ, exclusively for their consumption and published by them, is one of the welfare features of the Stanley Company of America organization in Philadelphia. It is edited by Charles Thompson of the Cross Keys Theatre, a Stanley house in Philadelphia, and the contributors are employes of both sexes of all the houses and the company's home office. It is called the Stanley Lens.

Kodak Worker's Share

Rochester.—The Eastman Kodak Company has begun distributing $1,760,000 to its 15,000 employees here and all over the world as wage dividends. Dividends to stockholders of $4,500,000 were also paid. In addition stock dividends of $200,000 were paid employees on 10,000 shares of stock which George Eastman set aside four years ago for employees who had been with the company two years or more. The men receiving it benefit according to their length of service. The stock paid for itself by being held by the company in the employee's name. The dividends were paid the company and have now paid for the stock. Stock dividends distributed to-day are the regular dividend of $1.25 on the common stock, together with an extra distribution of 75 cents a share, a total of $2, and a disbursement of 1 1/2 per cent. on the preferred stock.

MESSRS. I. and J. Gore, brothers of Michael and A. L., have opened one of the most unusual theatres in Southern California, "The Red Mill," at 5218 Whittier Boulevard. The name of the theatre has been copyrighted because of the particular structure and environment of the house. A huge 75 foot high electric sign, in structure an exact duplicate of a mill, is placed on top of the theatre, and can be seen for miles when lighted at night. The wings of the mill revolve and lend a most attractive uniqueness to the house.

HOW to overcome the hot weather handicap that hits exhibitors each summer and causes deficits where balances should be found, is a problem that C. Elmer Dietrich, of Tunkhannock, Pa., owner of the Colonial Theatre at Meshoppen, Pa., has solved and without any loss to himself.

He has followed Ralph Waldo Emerson's advice about hitching his wagon to a star, the luminary in this case being the Meshoppen Park Association, a society dear to the hearts of the people of Meshoppen. When the hot weather lull struck the Colonial, Dietrich got into touch with the officials of the association and made them the proposition that he would turn over 25% of the net proceeds of the playhouse from June 1 to October 1 to the improvement fund of the park.

Dietrich by this move secured the backing of the people of Meshoppen for the Colonial programs and even made the members of the association volunteer advertising and business agents, since all were anxious to boost attendance at the Colonial in order that good sized audiences would spell a profit to the association. If the houses were small and expenses were not cleared, then the association got nothing. If it proved that interest in pictures was good, then attendance was above the red line and there was a dividend for the association.

The plan has been tried out for a month now and has worked well. Dietrich weathered the torrid spell of June with flying colors and his shows draw well at a time of the year that usually found the house only partially filled. In addition to getting the good will of the people, Dietrich also has broken in for plenty of space in newspapers, since they support public enterprises and the dividend for the park transforms the theatre into this classification. Of course some might urge that Dietrich is building up opposition if he supports the out doors enterprise, but on the other hand, the park had the drawing power anyway in hot weather and any business gained is that much clear gain.

Opening Up of First Runs

THE reported determination of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to throw open its Broadway houses to an increasing number of productions not originating in its own studios will make unusually good reading for many producers, and among these not necessarily those ordinarily classified as independent. For there will be a number of producers now distributing nationally who will welcome an increased opportunity for giving their pictures an initial Broadway showing. And of course what is true of New York also is true throughout the country, as it is intimated that Paramount houses in other cities will expand their outside bookings even further than they have heretofore.

The value to a new production of an opening on Broadway is a much-discussed question. Many there are who declare they have no faith in the material benefit accruing to a picture through such showing, but who nevertheless without hesitation grab a chance to put one on. As one distributor said not so long ago:

"We have spent so much money trying to impress upon the exhibitor the fact that there is added value to a subject that has been well received on Broadway that now when we want to get the idea out of his head we find it too firmly implanted. In other words, in days when we can't get the theatre in which to put on our production, we find we have been spending money to our own disadvantage."

The working out of the new order of things will be followed by the man in the street with keen interest.

THE fight against the admission tax seems to be on. The national organization of theatre owners is employing all its forces to prepare the ground for the coming winter campaign. New York State also took a strong position on this handicap to exhibitor freedom, this millstone about the neck of the box office—and it has a neck. Then North Carolina and New Jersey and Connecticut last week all got in line for the same battle. So it would seem Congressman McGregor is going to get some of the help for which he pleaded at the Syracuse Convention. And there is no doubt he will get a lot of which he has not yet heard.

Exhibitor Organization as We See It

BROTHER LOWENSTEIN of the Oklahoma Exhibitors Association hats off to you!

At a recent convention of Texas exhibitors you addressed the members along these lines:

There is too often an idea among the exhibitors that to be an exhibitor means he is fighting the film exchange. We in Oklahoma have learned that this is wrong. We never fight the film exchanges. The film exchanges depend upon the exhibitor and the exhibitor depends upon the film exchanges, consequently, they are able to work together in a mutual organization. We have film men invited into our sessions, and when I say film men were the backbone, to a great extent, of that Convention, I am not trespassing, because we got ideas from them that were invaluable to us. We also eradicated a thought that, perhaps, had been in the minds of the film men a long time. They figured that where the exhibitors or a bunch of exhibitors held an executive session that the film exchanges were bound to suffer and they usually did, because we had as good a resolution committee as ever passed a resolution on the Convention floor. However, we found that that was about as far as the resolution ever got. So, this year we had the film exchange men come right into our meetings and I am glad you are doing so. Your Chairman announced that it would be an open meeting for the time. We have open meetings at all times.

Brother Lowenstein, you said a mouthful in a few words. You made it plain that there are other things than oil wells in Oklahoma. There are some constructive exhibitor minds there.

You hit the nail on the head when you showed your brother exhibitors that cooperation gets more than eternal quibbling and wrangling. You emphasized something that has held this industry back ten years,—when you pointed out how far the buyer and seller of film can grow apart when they suspect each other.

Your ideal,—and we think the day not distant when it will be realized—should be the inspiration of every exhibitor organization. We don't care whether you invite the exchangemen into your conventions or not so long as you build for better understanding.

We are for your kind of an exhibitor organization.

We are also for the kind of an exhibitor organization that says to the world that which the Michigan M. T. O. says with a great deal of pride which is, in substance, this:

Our Association insurance plan has saved E. S. Brewer, who operates a theatre in a town of 12,000, $513 in one year.

Claude Cady, also an exhibitor, will save $1100 a year on his insurance through the Association.

And this record of constructive economy covers not only the big operator but the small theatre man, the fellow who often thinks he's forgotten.

We point to these concrete evidences of constructive organization work as proof of what can be done and, in our humble opinion, what will be done.

Just Between Ourselves

ARTHUR S. KANE the other afternoon in the course of a chat in his office made reference to an article in a recent issue of a trade journal in which Alexander S. Aronson pointed out what seemed to be the economic advantages of centralized exchanges. The sales manager of Truart estimated that under "union exchanges" the industry might save $15,000,000 a year in its distribution bill.

"As long ago as 1914 the thought was forced on me that it would be better for the business as a whole if pictures before being booked over the country should be made to sort of make their way in certain specified towns," said Mr. Kane. "I mean there should be towns agreed upon in which pictures should be tried out, to prove their quality, their merit, in other words their right to live and to go before the theatres and the picturegoers of the country. If a picture stood up on its own feet then it should be entitled to go out and seek time.

"It is my firm conviction too many pictures are being made and distributed today. It may be taken for granted I am not talking about too many good subjects but about too many bad ones. These weak sisters simply take up the time and absorb the money that should go to those worth while.

"We are told by those who have made it a point to get at the facts that something over 700 pictures are being made yearly and distributed. That is too high a figure, 700 are too many. They are not needed for first runs or any other runs. Speaking about first runs, let's look into that situation a bit, just in three or four cities.

"New York opens perhaps three first runs a week, Chicago three and Minneapolis three. In Los Angeles let us call it six. There may be more, but some of them show the same subject for more than a week, so the figures are not dependable.

"While there may be no logic in changing programs every day still there are houses that do it, which makes the minimum number of pictures necessary to supply the market just seven. If there are fifteen now being made weekly there are eight of them above the demands of the situation.

"I used to be in the drug business, and I know how it is if you are doing a nice business and someone comes along and opens a drug store near you. You say that presently he will starve to death, but he will cut off from your receipts ten or twenty or thirty dollars a day. It will do him no good, but it will do you a lot of harm.

"That is what happens with undesirable pictures. The bad ones damage the receipts of the good ones. It's just the same with the production of crude oil. The market all over the country is suffering from overproduction. In storage tanks are millions of barrels that cannot be sold.

"I would like to see worked out a scheme whereby a certain number of subjects could be allocated to each company. It may be said that this is a matter which will be adequately taken care of through the operation of the laws of supply and demand, but it won't be, not even with centralized distribution, because some company will add a picture so cleverly advertised it will look like a good production.

"We had an example when the Famous Players cut down its output to fifty-two subjects and another company immediately increased the number of its products to take up what would have been the market's gain. I doubt if playing on percentage will supply a remedy for the present condition, because there will be enough exhibitors who book poor pictures that way to keep the flock of poor ones on the market.

"And as the old-line companies decrease their product so will the independents increase theirs. Have you noticed the independent market is so robust it is getting self-contained? It has increased in strength during the last year as never before. And on the part of exhibitors the encouragement to independents has been in proportion. Another point, really the biggest things are being done by the independents. A greater proportion of big pictures are being made by the independents than ever before."

* * *

BACK from the coast again comes J. D. Williams filled to the brim with accounts of two productions, one of which he saw on the screen and the other in the making. The first is Charles Chaplin's "Immortal Women," as it is called in the working title, and the second is Douglas Fairbanks' "The Thief of Bagdad," as to the sets for which Mr. Williams waxes enthusiastic. The distributor was quoted as having said he saw the latter subject, which he said was in error. However, he did read the story, and based on what he saw and read he is convinced it will be one of the greatest ever produced and a bigger moneymaker than "Robin Hood." "The most magnificent I ever saw," said Mr. Williams in speaking of the staging for the new Fairbanks production.

"I don't think I have seen a picture in many a day like Chaplin's new one, starring Edna Purviance and in which the director personally does not appear," he continued. "By the way, as to this latter point, I understand mention will be made of the fact in the twenty-four-sheet posters, so there will be no misunderstanding on the part of exhibitors or the general public.

"Chaplin introduces new angles in the production, showing on the screen life as it really exists, without any of the hokum melodramatic falsification. The picture hardly needs any titles, it unfolds itself so smoothly. I predict that in two years' time Chaplin will be in a class by himself as a directing genius. He knows how a motion picture should be directed.

"While I know the subject is a rare bit of artistry and as such will appeal to the discriminating I am convinced also it will bring the great American public to its door—in other words, will be a box office success. Another reason for the few titles necessary is the clarity of the action, the conveying of the theme and the action to the spectator by means of pure pantomime. But you've got to see it to appreciate its all-around merit."

* * *

THAT'S a likeable place, that Tarheel State. It looks like a good community to live in, to be a part of. In other years we have visited a couple of film men's homes, and possibly these visits have been partly responsible for the regard we have felt for the old state.

We have a hunch that an exhibitor in one of those lively North Carolina towns should find life full of interest, with something besides bricks and mortar to look upon in his moments or hours of relaxation. Then, again, in case he discovered there still was room for more excitement he might become a publisher, like H. B. Varner, the new president of the North Carolina Theatre Owners.

Of course, Mr. Varner was a publisher before he was a theatre owner, getting into the latter branch of endeavor "by accident," as he explained to the convention in the course of an intimate talk following the election. "But I have got four houses now and am acquiring two more," he went on. "I don't know why I am in the business, but I like it. I just can't help staying in it, I guess."

We can picture a man in a North Carolina town owning a theatre and a local newspaper. We can see from here that when the aforesaid local newspaper roasts a little too roughly the particular brand of picture on display at the photoplay house the previous evening and incidentally says things in not too kindly a fashion about the exhibitor responsible for the show it does not require a Philadelphia lawyer to visualize the fun that will flow and the fur that will fly should the exhibitor in retaliation put upon his screen a statement castigating the local publication and its alleged editor.

There are times when a man is justified in assuming a dual or double role, even if we don't happen to like it on the screen. Who will say the townsfolk will not buy the local paper to see what Editor Jones says about Exhibitor Jones or spend their money at the box office to learn the latest quip by Exhibitor Jones at the expense of Editor Jones?

We have seen exploitation methods of which we thought less.

Counting Up

Good morning. Have you had your weekly adjustment yet?

A pleasant breeze from Bert Ennis on the Coast:

"The writer has a sincere and appreciative desire to supply you with that much talked of but little seen commodity in the motion picture field—News. This desire is born from an understanding of a newspaper's requirements and also with a knowledge of the material labeled "news" concerning the movie industry which comes to your desk every day. The attached stories are as close to news and the truth as it is possible (for a press agent) to get. Thank you."

And Bert's items are printed.

Carl Laemmle said a mouthful the other day when he asked exhibitors if they were letting their newspaper advertising get stale. If you are in the habit of just slapping an ad in your local newspaper you are letting your copy get stale—as we understand Mr. Laemmle's remark. Read on a preceding page what an experienced, successful publicity director says about theatre advertising. Newspaper ads wouldn't ever get stale if his advice was followed.

There's a 400 seat theatre in Canaan, Conn., just over the New York border and in the heart of the famous Berkshire Hills where an alliance between Blanchard and Mosely, the owners, and a popular grocery clerk, has solved the problem of reaching the hundreds of summer cottagers who spend three or four months around Canaan.

The grocery clerk makes a twice-a-week round of the cottagers who live ten, fifteen and twenty miles from Canaan. He takes their orders for groceries but he has become such an adept at picking good pictures for the vacationists that they follow his tips like a race horse player follows the handicapper.

His "dope" has been so good that his customers ask him what the Casino is playing—that's the name of the house—and he tells them. But if the picture is exceptionally good he tells them that too. He brings hundreds of the cottagers into the theatre.

The local newspaper in Canaan does not reach these temporary residents and Blanchard had to find some way of getting the good news to them. He certainly picked a good one.

Sam Rothafel tried an all short subject program at the Capitol the week of July 1 and from the New York dailies his program received the same attention it usually gets with a big feature attraction. This is Roxy's second all shorts program and the crowd ate it up. Our scout reports that two new short subjects, "The Chase," a scenic thriller of the Swiss Alps, and "Ivan the Great, an Alaskan adventure novelty are worth unusual attention. They will be reviewed in our Short Subject Department later.

And this Short Subject Department of ours. Look it over this week, and especially the new column by Hoey Lawlor, who knows a good short when he sees it. He ought to. He's made plenty of them.

Then take a crack at the high spot review given to "Merry-Go-Round," in the review section. Something like the attention we gave "The White Rose" and "The Covered Wagon." When an exceptional picture comes along that looks like an extraordinary money getter we're going to tell you all about it, even if it takes two full pages to do so. Why not, if it's something that means a clean up for you?

These high spot reviews are given to a big picture no matter who makes it.

We imagine that there will be many high spot reviews from now on. The coming season's product, judging by the peeks we get of some of the specials, and the program stuff, is, we believe, the greatest array of big money pictures the industry has seen.

To many of our readers the expression "big money" may mean nothing more than heavy rentals. The subject of rentals is on the lips of most exhibitors we come in contact with. Naturally price is always foremost in the mind of buyer and seller in every line of business. There are, however, two ways of taking care of the rental problem. The buyer either becomes a near anarchist and hollers from the hilltops about it, or he proceeds to sit down with the seller and adjust his differences across the table.

The former is the long, round-about way of getting what you need, the other is the short, straight-from-the-shoulder method of getting quick action.

The policy of adjusting differences is now an accepted method of doing business in this industry. We are told that thousands of adjustments were made last season where the theatre man took his troubles to the distributor and they both met each other half way.

In one case a rental of $1750 was brought down to $500 because the theatre operator sat down with the distributor and talked turkey about his situation which the distributor knew nothing about.

Ira A. Hall,
Exhibitors Trade Review,
Dear Sir:

I guess you will be surprised to get this here letter from me, but there's been so many of these here now authors, shootin' off at the mouth about not gettin' any even break from the movie producers, I thought I would like to tell them some of my troubles.

I aint very well known in the east, much. I've written scenarios for Griffith, Ince, Goldwyn, Lasky and all the biggest foremost producers. I haven't sold any of them yet, but I writ them for them and thats why this letter is being writ.

About four years ago I sent a scenario to Carl Lammle of the Universal company and it was called "The Fire Fighting Zuave" and was all about the war in Europe. It was one of the best war scenarios ever written out of the brain of a man, what happened. Back came the story with a card saying it was to morbid.

Now what do they mean by that?

The story had some nice atrocities in it, but everyone who was killed in the picture, was killed in the nicest way one could get killed in a war. Then right on top of it the Universal produced a picture called "Outside The Law" which had my idea in it, where a woman shoots a man and repents.

Of course I aint sayin they took my idea. I dont want to get into no liable suit, but it was funny that two years after I sent my story in they used one of my situations which as I said, was about a women who shoots a guy and repents.

This here now Basil King who is shootin off his mouth, should go through the tortures I went through after seeing my story stole. He was lucky, for at least he got a trip to Los Angeles out of it while all I got was my story back.

After Universal did this I sent the story to Tom Ince out to Los Angeles and after about six month, with me waiting every day for a check. I gets the story back and what do they say.

"Its too light, not enough action, thanks for letting us see it."

How the hell is a guy going to write great stories for the scream if every one has a different idea.

I could fill up your hole paper with stories just as heart rendering as the above, about Universal and that situation in "The Fire Fighting Zuave" if I wanted to but I aint no sucker. I aint going to git in wrong with no producers and I wish if you print this in your valuable paper of which I have been a constant reader for several weeks now, that you would tell Mr. Lammle I haven't any feeling against him for I dont want no boycott on me.

If you would like to hear some more of my experiences why let me know, I could tear your heart out if I told you all of them.

Yours Al Ways Hopin.
Late Shroud III.

Varner Chosen North Carolina's President

SLIDE CONTRACT TO BE RENEWED

State Organization Decides to Employ Paid Business Representative

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

The annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North Carolina, held at Wrightsville Beach, June 28 and 29, was declared by Percy W. Wells, retiring president after nine years of service, to be perhaps the most constructive in the history of the organization.

Henry B. Varner of Lexington, after nine years in the office of secretary-treasurer, was unanimously elected president, and A. F. Moses of Winston-Salem, a banker as well as theatre owner, was elected first vice president. James A. Estridge of Gastonia, a man with a reputation for doing things and doing them well, succeeds Mr. Varner as secretary-treasurer.

The convention ratified the action of the executive committee in withdrawing from the national association.

Definite steps were taken toward the employment of a business representative as well as for financing the organization, and the contract for slide service will be renewed.

Progress was made on the proposal that the body get behind the Stonewall Jackson training school for criminal boys, the suggestion being made that each theatre owner in the state give one day's receipts toward the creation of a fund for building an auditorium and swimming pool. R. D. Craver was named chairman of a committee to take up the whole question with the executive committee.

Representatives of Southern Enterprises expressed the intention of that company to enroll its North Carolina theatres in the organization as a result of the constructive work of the preceding year. Turner Jones and Ford S. Anderson of the company made helpful addresses to the delegates. Mr. Jones' talk was in the direction of good-will building for the future rather than concentration on "killing the bill."

There were interesting talks, too, by Lloyd Willis, representing the Producers and Distributors, and by F. A. Abbott and E. F. Dardine on projection and the better care of films in projection and for shipment.

Wilmington's Mayor Former Theatrical Man

The first session was held Thursday forenoon, being called to order by President Wells shortly after 10 o'clock, the stated hour of opening.

After Secretary-Treasurer Varner had submitted his report Mayor James H. Cowan of Wilmington was introduced. The mayor is a former theatrical man, having in his earlier years had an all-around stage experience. Furthermore, Wilmington's chief executive is an unusually forceful and eloquent speaker.

"It is a personal pleasure for me to welcome you," said the mayor, "because I feel that once more I am back in the family circle, breathing the atmosphere I have always loved and which I have always found so invigorating. There was a time when I belonged to your profession or a kindred profession." Here the mayor, in stage parlance, told of some of the things in which he had had experience, to the great enjoyment of the delegates.

"I give you the tarheel's welcome to his fellow-tarheels," said the mayor, "to this rendezvous of good-fellowship."

"I believe if we should treat our screens as the newspaper editor treats his columns it would be better for the industry," said T. J. Leitch of Gainsborough. "We try to put on our screens nothing that would not be printed in the columns of our local paper."

Percy Wells Declines Re-election

"This is the tenth annual meeting of the North Carolina Theatre Owners," said President Wells. "I have served you nine years as president.

"North Carolina at a Chicago national convention walked out on Lee Ochs, but North Carolina was responsible for the national body which afterward was formed in Ohio and which has progressed and has done a lot of good.

"North Carolina had introduced in Congress a measure that would have eliminated the tax on admissions up to 25 cents, and if we had had co-operation at that time that bill would have gone through. You are responsible for the defeat of censorship in this state through the aid you gave your officers.

"I desire to thank the Theatre Owners of the state for honoring me with the presidency for nine years. I am not going to be a candidate for the office for the next term."

Wrong Condensers Cause Most Projection Troubles

"I find in going through the territory of North Carolina that most of the projection troubles seem to come from using wrong condensers," said F. A. Abbott of Charlotte. "I don't think any one can lay down rules that will apply under all conditions. It is no use blaming the projection machine for things for which it is not responsible. Among important factors are proper carbons, condensers and light. No book printed will give you the results you want to get. You have got to keep on trying until you get what you are aiming for. I really think if all exhibitors would travel around and confer with other theatre owners they would learn a great deal. There is no way in which you can tell a man how to get better projection. He has got to find it out himself."

"I believe there should be some kind of arrangements made whereby an expert could travel over the state visiting exhibitors and try to do something to improve their projection as well as exploitation," said Mr. Varner.

exchange in Charlotte, discussed prompt and careful shipment of films and care of machines. He told of a five-reel film that came back after two showings in such shape it had to be scrapped.

Damaged Film Causing Loss of Thousands

"It is a condition that is positively wrong," said Mr. Dardine. "There isn't an exchange in Charlotte that isn't losing thousands of dollars by reason of damaged film. There are too many operators who don't care whether they have light on their screen or not. They are interested only in their salary Saturday night.

"Film is valuable merchandise and it must receive proper care, and if the present condition is not remedied you have got to pay for the film. An operator must relieve the tension on a new film. Every exhibitor should impress on his operator the importance of exercising care. It is not alone the cost of the damaged film that is involved but the disappointment of other exhibitors resulting from failure to deliver.

"Now as to the shipment of film. I had a week ago an illustration of what an exhibitor can do. A man came into my office and said he had driven in 160 miles in order to avoid having a dark house. I discovered on investigation the theatre manager who should have forwarded him the film had instead sent it on to a man who didn't even deal with our exchange. That is serious. This offender had disappointed a man who had contracted and paid for the film and given it to one who had no claim on it.

Would Co-operate To Correct Faults

"We have faults, but we want to co-operate and to correct the things that are wrong. The other day a man who showed a film on Tuesday didn't return it. I wired him on Wednesday and on Thursday and on Friday. Then I learned the exhibitor had been out of town and his operator had not followed instructions. Always put yourself in the other fellow's shoes.

"Ship your film on the minute. Get it into the carrier's hands that night if possible. Exchanges allow sufficient time for films to go from town to town. There may be some cases where they don't, but if exhibitors will get the films into the hands of the carrier as soon as possible their skirts are clear. When a man opens a can expecting to find a five reel subject and instead discovers two reels of comedy and only three of the feature it makes endless trouble. Everybody suffers just because of a careless operator.

"Any exchange in Charlotte will show you gentlemen things that will surprise you. New film ruined. It is awful. Really, no one can give too much care to the projection room and the handling of film. Exchange managers are willing at all times to help the exhibitor and give him the benefit of the doubt."

President Wells named on the resolutions committee E. C. Pierce, G. C. Gammon and P. L. McCabe; on the nominating committee R. D. Craver, H. R. Mason, A. F. Moses, A. B. Huff and M. H. French; on the finance committee James A. Estridge, T. P. Leitch and Ed C. Priece.

Willis Describes Work of Hays Organization

Friday's session was marked by a number of interesting talks as well as by the election of officers and the acceptance of the report of the committee appointed to consider means of financing the organization.

Telegrams of regret were read from Jake Wells, C. C. Pettijohn, William Brandt and

W. A. Steffes, presidents of New York and Minnesota Theatre Owners respectively; Eugene H. Reilly of the American Seating Company and C. E. Kessnich, of Atlanta, district manager for Metro, and letters from Harry Bernstein, secretary of the Virginia exhibitors, and C. L. Welch of Salisbury.

Lloyd Willis, representing the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, referred to the work of that body. He said Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel, who had intended to be at the convention, had been detained by illness, and the speaker reviewed some of the recent activities of Mr. Pettijohn, which included the conduct in the field of the Massachusetts fight against censorship and also legislative battles in many states.

Thirty-five states held sessions last winter, said Mr. Willis, and in these 131 measures antagonistic to the motion picture industry were introduced. Of this number but one got through, and that was in South Carolina. In Boston, following the defeat of the censorship, thirty-one antagonistic bills were introduced in the legislature, Mr. Willis said, and all failed to become laws.

Build Public Sentiment, Says Turner Jones

"We wish to put our theatres into your organization," said Turner Jones of Southern Enterprises, "because of the constructive work of your body in North Carolina last year. I would like to take issue with the men who when a hostile measure is introduced lay emphasis on 'Killing the bill.' That policy involves a lot of worry and trouble today without a thought for the morrow. It is possible to spend money so as to create public sentiment.

"There is a well-defined belief in well-informed quarters that the reason the censorship repeal bill in New York was lost last winter was because gumshoe methods were employed instead of the way in which the Massachusetts situation was handled. If the Hays organization was in charge of the situation in the South we could discharge some of the staff we now are compelled to maintain.

"In one state in the South $1400 was spent in organizing public sentiment. We selected the most prominent editor in the state and induced him to organize the other editors in the state. Following the consideration of the issues involved there was scarcely a paper in the state that did not come across.

"Then we interested the women's clubs' chairmen, the American Legion, League of Voters, and prominent clergymen, and so down the list of the factors which influence public opinion. Then we had trailers made and put them on the most important screens of the state, in series of three. We attracted attention and kept in the newspapers. Then each editor wrote to the legislator representing his district and inclosed copies of the former's editorials.

Introducer of Bill Appeals for Mercy

"Telegrams and letters poured in in thousands opposing the particular measure we were fighting. The last night of the campaign the man who introduced the bill came to us to ask us to call off the dogs. We told him we were doing nothing, but he said 'Yes, you are, and call off the dogs at home.' The next morning the committee reported the bill unfavorably and the measure never was discussed again. We did nothing in the capital of that state, but did send representatives through the state and formed an organization in every town of any importance.

"In regard to North Carolina it was the cleanest record there has been in the South in some time.

"When the executive council of the Southern Women's Clubs was meeting last winter in Pinehurst we induced a minister of Bridgeport to come down here and tour the state. Primarily he talked to the ministerial associations on the proper relations of the church to the theatre. We give more credit to that man than to any other agency in creating public opinion favorable to the theatre."

"Mr. Jones described the machinery now being built and which he said he believed was necessary in every state, and already seventy exhibitors had placed their screens at the disposal of his association. Among the plans employed were the interesting of the newspapers, chambers of commerce and labor organizations, etc., as well as in every part of the state to get in touch with a lawyer who likes pictures and asking him to associate himself with the movement.

"We are creating a network of political power throughout that state," said Mr. Jones. "I believe a similar organization in every state will be just as effective as the one in the state to which I am referring."

Gumshoe Methods Won't Build Good-Will

Mr. Jones reiterated the importance of building good-will for the future as well as for the present. "Gumshoe methods to kill a bill today does not build good-will in the future," he said. "Therefore it does not protect us in the future, but merely postpones the evil day. We are not going to be successful in forestalling legislation.

"If we continue to tell the world we are the fourth largest industry we are going to be taxed on it. We have got to get down to the bedrock of truth and tell the public the truth.

"I would like this convention seriously to consider the formation of a very small body of men interested in more than their own theatres who will start in on a sure-enough campaign for good-will in North Carolina. I would like to see that committee start its campaign immediately. You can't have too many people know the truth about your industry. I would like to have the legislature the next time it meets in Raleigh know that the industry in this state has something behind it."

Ford S. Anderson of Southern Enterprises was called upon for a talk. "I think the word 'exploitation' has gone to the head of every exhibitor in the country," he said, "and I think if we don't get it out of our heads it will be one of the ruinations of the business.

Circus Advertising

Not for the Theatre

"In earlier days Barnum & Bailey were given credit for doing much advertising and employing many big words, superlatives. Many of us today are doing the same thing. The circus came into town once a year, and once a year the people would read the exaggerated advertising and then they would forget it for a year. I believe we all would benefit if we would tell the truth in our exploitation.

"If we don't tell the truth providing the picture is not the best let us say the least about it. Lay it before the public and say nothing, but when we have something let us say not what we think, but let us do a lot of more interesting advertising and do a lot more studying of our pictures.

"Until we exploit our theatre rather than the particular show, we are going to have a lot of eccentric lines in our box office charts. We have in some way got to get down to the solid basis of selling the policy of our theatre, in the general policy of the theatre and in the conduct of exploitation."

Mr. Anderson said a vaudeville house might show a variation in its charts of admission of 5 to 10 per cent., but that in a motion picture house there might be receipts of $3,000 in one week and $800 the next. There should be an effort made, he declared, to equalize the range of the chart so that it would be more like that of vaudeville.

Mr. Varner gave a report on the music tax situation in the state. He said last August the society invaded North Carolina, and as a result he had sent out letters requesting the abandonment of music that was taxed, which some exhibitors observed and some didn't. In November the society sent a woman through the state visiting theatres. As a result fifty suits were instituted.

Can Beat Tax on Music, says Varner

Attorneys were employed in the western and the eastern districts, the best lawyers in the state. The cases now are on the docket and will be tried sometime this summer or fall. Mr. Varner intimated there would be some surprises.

"You ought to familiarize yourselves with this situation," continued the speaker, "you ought to help make this fight because it is for you just as much as it is for those of us who are in the courts. We have got to fight from every angle, in the Federal courts and in Congress, to have this law amended. When the Department of Justice gets through with its examination into this situation the society will be dissolved, that is my belief. With every one co-operating we can win. The thing to do is to use non-copy-righted music. I am using non-taxable music. You can get all you want."

Answering a question by Mr. Mason the speaker said the society was charging from 19 cents a seat in Oregon to 5 cents a seat in North Carolina in some cases.

On motion of Mr. Craver the president appointed a committee of ten, to include two exchangemen and one trade paper representative, to draft a code of ethics. They were Turner Jones, R. D. Craver, Ford Anderson, A. F. Moses, E. E. Heller, George Blaisdell, D. M. Bain, C. A. Turnage, M. H. French and T. G. Leitch.

Here the nominating committee made its report and it was adopted unanimously. The list of officers will be found in another part of this story.

Organization to Employ Business Representative

The finance committee recommended a renewal of the present contract for slide service with the Paramount Publicity Company and that any theatre using such service shall be a bona fide member of the state body; that in case it is against the policy of any theatre to run such slide the house shall have the option of paying $50 for membership; that the president and executive committee employ a business representative to canvass the entire state for membership.

"Don't mention the word censorship, but talk better films," said Mr. Varner. "Co-operate with every agency that aims at the common good of the state. There is no reason why the exhibitor should not be one of the most powerful influences in his community. Co-operate with the church and school. If you win the respect of legislative bodies you won't have so much of this unjust legislation. You can't buy legislation with money. You have got to buy it with moral influence. You have got to follow the map that was laid down by Mr. Jones this morning."

In regard to the proposal that the organization get behind the Stonewall Jackson training school for criminal boys at Concord, in the way of building an auditorium and swimming pool, the suggestion was made that by contributing one day's receipts probably $75,000 would be realized. Mr. Craver was appointed chairman of the committee on the project with instructions to take up the question with the executive committee.

The resolutions committee reported and the body adopted recommendations in favor of better films, for the elimination of war taxes, seating and admission; for fighting the music tax and urging the better care of films in projection and in shipment.

The organization ratified the action of the executive committee in withdrawing from the national body.

Following a vote to hold the mid-winter gathering in Winston-Salem the convention adjourned.

First Gun Fired In Admission Tax Campaign

BRANDT CALLS FOR BIG TAX CAMPAIGN

New Head of N. Y. Exhibitors Calls Members to Arms in Real Fight

New York City.—William Brandt new head of the New York State M. P. T. O. has issued the following statement:

In assuming the presidency of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of New York, I find that many vital issues confront the theatre owners not alone of the State of New York but of the entire country, the principal one of which, in my estimation, is the elimination of the admission tax which is, without a shadow of doubt, confiscatory, and if permitted to remain will drive a great number of theatres out of business.

While it was the intent of Congress in imposing this tax to have it paid by the public, we find that the conditions of the business are such that the great majority of the theatre owners themselves have been compelled to absorb the tax. Furthermore, while this tax was originally intended to be a 10% tax, we find that in reality the average is considerably more than 10% and in many instances exceeds 13%.

Several instances of the confiscatory nature of this tax has come to my attention. In one case I know of a theatre that suffered a loss in excess of $50,000.00 of which $30,000.00 was represented by the payment of the admission tax. Another case is that of a theatre in a small community, which made a profit of $600.00 and which gave the Government $350.00 of this for admission tax. There are innumerable other instances.

This admission tax is particularly burdensome to the theatres in small communities. These theatres with small seating capacities and limited earnings, finding it necessary to absorb the tax, are placed in a very precarious position. Eighty-five percent of the theatres of this country have a seating capacity of less than 800, and it takes very little extra expense to change the income from a profit to a loss.

The cost of operation of theatres has steadily advanced in the past few years, and unless the admission tax is repealed at this time it will be necessary for the theatre owners all over the U. S. to increase their admission charges. This should not be made necessary, in view of the recent statement by President Harding that the indebtedness of the Government has been reduced three billion dollars. Other nuisance taxes have been repealed since the enactment of this law, and the only method by which they were reduced is through organizations which worked consistently and in one direction.

At the recent convention in Syracuse the theatre owners of the State of New York went on record unanimously to get behind Congressman Clarence MacGregor who has proved himself to be a staunch friend of the industry in his fight to have the admission tax repealed. With that end in view they have appointed a committee of which Bernard Edelhertz, former U. S. Assistant Attorney General, a man well-versed in legislative matter, is chairman. In addition to Mr. Edelhertz the following men were named as members of the Committee: William A. Dillon, A. C. Hayman, Jules H. Michael and Louis Blumenthal.

An order will be shortly issued by this committee calling to arms the entire industry to present a solid front in this most important attempt to save the tremendous sums invested therein.

The admission tax repeal is an imperatively urgent matter and allows for no procrastination. As far as we are concerned there will be only speedy action.

Other matters that are of sufficient importance to warrant an intensive campaign are the reduction of film rentals, the elimination of the music tax, the reduction of fire insurance rates, improvement in the terms of the present uniform contract, and constructive legislation favorable to the industry.

It is the desire of the theatre owners of the State of New York to co-operate with theatre owners all over the U. S. in these and any other matters that may be suggested, and theatre owners are requested to communicate with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, Times Building, New York City, expressing their opinions and giving their advice.

Dedic Velde Making

Two-Reel Comedies

New York.—Dedic Velde, whose picture is shown in the illustrated section, is to appear in a series of two-reel comedies. The first of these is now in production at the eastern studios of the Lightning Film Corporation.

Velde came to the United States in 1906 for a successful season with the Ringling Brothers circus. After thirty-seven weeks in the ring he toured the Orpheum Circuit, doing pantomime bits and breakneck falls. Following a tour of the Southern states with a road show Velde, billed as Dedic Velde & Co., played over the Keith Circuit in "Comie Capers in the Park."

As Velde had had experience before the camera in France he took up the direction of comedies. Although he later returned to the stage he has been anxious to get back to the screen. As he had in his earlier days toured Europe with his father, a well-known clown, Velde has a wide clientele awaiting his appearance on the screen.

The collections from the capacity tax totaled $36,872.84, an increase of $8,981.73 over May, 1922.

PREMIERE SET FOR HENTZAU FEATURE

World Showing of Much Talked of Picture to Take Place July 8

New York City.—Myron Selznick's master picture, "Rupert of Hentzau" will be given its world premiere at the New York Strand, the week of July 8th, Selznick announces. The feature which is adapted from the romance by Sir Anthony Hope, contains twelve principals never before assembled in one production. In the cast are: Elaine Hammerstein, Bert Lytel, Lew Cody, Bryant Washburn, Hobart Bosworth, Claire Windsor, Irving Cummings, Elmo Lincoln, Marjorie Daw, Mitchell Lewis, Adolphe Menjou, Nigel de Brullier, Josephine Orwell and Gertrude Astor. A huge amount of money was spent on the settings which are of royal splendor. The picture contains some thrilling duelling and love scenes.

There was much speculation as to what Broadway theatre would succeed in booking this super-special for its premiere. It will be put on general release early in the fall.

Advertising and publicity from the Selznick end is being handled by L. F. Guimond, head of the department, assisted by Will Kraft.

"Rupert of Hentzau" will be put on general release early in the fall, as Selznick is strongly committed to the policy of booking its pictures, no matter how large its scope, through regular motion picture theatre channels, as against the usual policy of placing premiere runs in legitimate houses at augmented admission prices.

LYNDE DENIG ON TOUR

Mr. Denig will visit Boston, Albany, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, Chicago, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Columbus, Louisville, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta, Charlotte, Washington, Baltimore, and Philadelphia.

FIRST NATIONAL HAS TWENTY-NINE

Schedule*

New York.—First National's list of twenty-nine productions, which constitute the first part of its program for 1923-24, will include every variety of screen entertainment suitable for big time presentation.

Three costume plays are included in the twenty-nine. They are Norma Talmadge's "Ashes of Vengeance," and "The Fighting Blade," a Richard Barthelmess picture. Both of these are romantic dramas, while the third period picture, "The Dangerous Maid," in which Constance Talmadge will star, is a romantic comedy.

In the field of drama First National will offer "Black Oxen," Gertrude Atherton's novel; "Ponjola," Cynthia Stoeckley's story of South Africa; "Anna Christie," Eugene O'Neill's play which Thomas H. Ince will produce; "Thundergate," a story of China and America; "The Eternal City," a George Fitzmaurice production to be presented by Samuel Goldwyn; and the Thomas H. Ince productions "Her Reputation," "Country Lanes and City Pavements" and "The Just and the Unjust."

The company's entertainment will be increased by "Flaming Youth" a society drama in which Colleen Moore will star; "Trilby," a romantic idea produced by Richard Walton Tully from the world renowned DuMaurier novel; "Secrets," a forthcoming Norma Talmadge picture, "Against the Grain," a Frank Borzage production and "The Swamp Angel," a Richard Connell story.

Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle" will stand alone in the field of comedy novelties although it is known that the second Tourneur production, as yet untitled, will be another unique story.

First National's feature comedy entertainment ranges from Jackie Coogan's "Circus Days" to Samuel Goldwyn's "Potash and Perlmutter," a story of New York's "Woman's Wear" industry. A third comedy drama will be "The Bad Man," a Carewe production.

"Why Men Leave Home," a John M. Stahl production is a satirical comedy with a New York background; "Duley," starring Constance Talmadge, is a humorous character study of a girl who is just a "delightful dumbbell"; and "The Huntress" with Colleen Moore, is a comedy drama.

"The Wanters," a John M. Stahl production, is dramatic entertainment with a strong society flavor.

Two Katherine MacDonald offerings, "Chastity" and "The Scarlet Lily" will supply the demand for straight domestic dramas.

The three untitled productions are the Tourneur pictures, the new Richard Barthelmess picture and a Frank Lloyd special.

FAIRBANKS WINS SWISS LAWSUIT

*Manufacturer Was Using Star's
Name and Portrait
Without Consent*

New York.—The right of one person to prevent other persons or commercial organizations from using his name without consent—a right long recognized in the United States—has just been established abroad through a legal action brought by Douglas Fairbanks in the courts of Switzerland. It is believed by Mr. Fairbanks' counsel, Dennis F. O'Brien, who announces the result of the litigation in Switzerland, that this case will set a precedent which courts in other countries of Europe will follow.

Max Worod, a cigarette maker of Zurich, used Mr. Fairbanks' name and portrait without the motion picture star's consent on cigarette boxes as well as on the cigarettes themselves, and then offered his goods to the trade. This led to the lawsuit which was carried to the High Court of Justice, and brought the following ruling:

"The unauthorized use of the name and portrait of another person with a view to advertising constitutes a degradation to that person, especially when that person is an artist. There is no difference in the use of the name whether it is applied to blacking, matches or cigarettes. The fact that the plaintiff is an artist of the cinema and thus known in public life cannot be retained. A renowned name is not a privilege for transgression of the law."

The court ordered that the cigarette manufacturer cease use of the Fairbanks name and portrait and that he withdraw from the trade all cigarettes and containers so labelled. The costs of the case were awarded to Mr. Fairbanks as damages.

Lloyd Selects New Studio

Hollywood.—Harold Lloyd selected the Hollywood Studios as his new producing base. BACK FROM TOUR OF TRADE ZONES

*James R. Grainger Predicts
Most Prosperous Year in Film History*

New York.—Back home after a thirty days tour of the trade zones of the United States, James R. Grainger, Vice-president and General Manager of Sales of the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Distributing organization, declared that 1923-1924 will be the most prosperous year in all the history of motion pictures. Mr. Grainger bases his statement on the fact that every important exhibitor in the country has not only expressed optimism in personal conversation but also on the number of big contracts that have already been signed on date for early fall showing.

"North, East, South and West are out to pick the best and back the best," said "Jimmy." "Made keen by the knowledge that the producers in general are going out to do bigger things than ever in the way of production, exhibitors in turn are determined to present these pictures on a scale that is not only beautiful and impressive but also showmanly. Next season will see exploitation as it really should be.

"I look forward to a really prosperous year all round. The big theatres are going after the big productions and through long years they have become experienced judges. In this day of screening first, it's the picture with the goods that counts.

Evelyn Brent Will Play Opposite House Peters

New York City.—Evelyn Brent now appearing in "Harbor Bar" will play opposite House Peters in Metro's "Held to Answer." Miss Brent has appeared on the screen since she was fourteen and for the past few years has played on the stage as well as in fifteen film productions in England. She was selected as one of the thirteen "stars of tomorrow" by the Wampas, the movie publicity men's association here. In private life, Miss Brent is the wife of B. P. Fineman, producer.

Feature Too Short

New York.—When a newspaper reviewer complains that a feature picture is "too short," most exhibitors in these days of wide criticism of the tendency of producers to be over-generous in the matter of footage probably will be eager to know more about a full length production that leaves the audience wanting still more of it. The picture in question is Pathe's "Black Shadows" epic of savage life in the South Sea Islands, which had a week's run at the Broadway Theatre, this city.

Preview of Screen Version

New York City.—After seeing a preview of the screen version of their play, "The Broken Wing," Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard congratulated Al Lichtman and Tom Forman for the screen adaptation.

Gloria Swanson is suffering from inflamed eyes, due to her excessive crying in "Zaza" and to the strong studio lights.

Boston Approves Novel Entertainment Stunt

LOEW'S OPEN AIR IDEA A BIG HIT

Eight Thousand Attend Opening Show in Large Baseball Park in Boston

Boston, Mass.—Movies, movie men and women, movie makers, and the material for a general good time were all present at the Brave's Baseball Field, June 26, the event being Loew's Opening Night, the name that has characterized an entertainment stunt novel to Boston.

Sponsored by Marcus Loew, Christy Mathewson and Emil Fuchs, the idea seems to have taken with Bostonians, more than 8,000 having been present. There was plenty doing all the time, what with dancing, presentation of stars of stage and screen, two simultaneous motion pictures being presented, more dancing, and then fireworks, to top off the evening.

A little off center in the diamond a stage was erected for the time being, upon which the same stars that appeared that night, will again be on hand. Again, and back of this stage, are the two screens, each one facing a side of the grandstand. The same film is shown simultaneously from two projectors mounted in the players dugouts.

The screens are mounted on wide wagon trucks, and at the close of the picture are drawn away by a baby tractor that everyone thought was an aeroplane from its noise coming through the dark, and necks craned forward to catch a glimpse of the machine. The removal of the screen gives free play to the fireworks, the set-pieces stretching across the field from bleacher to bleacher.

Marcus Loew appeared twice, and was applauded as heartily the second time as the first, even though the latter appearance was a blazing set-piece portrait.

Mr. Loew booked "The Spider and the Rose" and "East Side, West Side" in his airdrome.

ROD LA ROCQUE SIGNS LONG-TERM CONTRACT

Hollywood.—Rod La Rocque, who plays one of the leading roles in "The Ten Commandments," has signed a long-term contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear in Cecil B. DeMille productions.

Mr. La Rocque has had an extensive stage career in stock, the legitimate and vaudeville before going into pictures with Essanay. He has been leading man for Goldwyn, Mutual, Paramount, American, Vitagraph and other companies. Both Jesse Lasky and Mr. DeMille entertain high hopes for the future of La Rocque who is now given an opportunity such as that which led Thomas Meighan and the late Wallace Reid to stardom.

Lenore Ulrich's Plans Making Kiki With Original Cast

Hollywood.—Lenore Ulrich, who is here to make "Tiger Rose" for Warner Bros., stated that next year she will spend her summer vacation in making "Kiki," in which she is appearing on the stage during the winter season. Her plan, she says, is to bring the "Kiki" company here next summer for a Los Angeles en-

Incidentally she let it be known that David Belasco's trip to the coast has been postponed on account of his illness, and he probably will not arrive in time for "Tiger Rose." He surely is coming as soon as his health permits, she said, and hopes to get here in time to supervise "Deburau."

FAMOUS OPENS HOUSES TO OUTSIDE FILMS

New York—The theatres of Famous Players-Lasky will, beginning with the new season be thrown open to a certain number of outside productions. The exact number of weeks to be thus devoted to subjects not originating in Famous Players studios has not as yet been determined, but it is not denied at the Famous Players offices that they may run into figures that will be interesting, perhaps to half or nearly half of the time.

Regarding houses in other cities it is stated it always has been the policy of the company to book pictures made by other companies, and it is natural to assume with the studio output now reduced to approximately fifty-two productions a year the time open for other pictures will be increased.

ENORMOUS TASK EASILY HANDLED

Filming of Biblical Prologue One of Industry's Large Undertakings

Hollywood.—The organization and maintenance of Camp Cecil B. DeMille, at Guadalupe, Cal., and the erection there of the set used by Mr. DeMille for scenes for the Biblical prologue of his production, "The Ten Commandments," represents one of the biggest single location feats in motion picture production.

Guadalupe is approximately 200 miles from Los Angeles and the task was that of transporting to the location 2,500 people and more than 3,000 animals, including 900 horses, thirty camels, 200 burros and hundreds of sheep, goats, cows, oxen, chickens, ducks, guinea hens and dogs, and there maintaining them for a period of two weeks. The area utilized covered 24 square miles of rolling sand dunes.

Three hundred and fifty mechanics started construction of the camp and the set, which represented the ancient city of Rameses, on April 27. The entire job was finished and the filming of the picture was started on the 27th of May. The scenes were completed June 10.

Two special trains were required for the transportation of the people. Among the camp workers who had preceded the actors were included every type of technical labor that goes to make up the population of a large city.

The camp comprised 550 sleeping tents, two mess tents, each with a capacity of 1,000 diners; a recreation tent for dancing and other amusements, four tents forming a camp hospital with a capacity of thirty patients, in charge of a U. S. Army medical officer with two soldier assistants, and a civilian doctor with four assistants; twelve tents for wardrobe and property use and a separate unit of twenty tents for the guards of the animal corrals.

Complete telephone and electric light systems had been provided. Five miles of wooden sidewalks were laid. Water was brought one mile by the camp pumping system. Thirty shower baths had been provided for the men and twenty-four for the women. There were 2,500 cots and as many mattresses and pillows, requiring more than 30,000 blankets, sheets and pillow slips.

Transportation over the heavy sand, where motors and horse drawn wagons were out of the question, was accomplished by means of twenty big sand sleds. Three autos provided fast film transportation to and from the studio at Los Angeles.

The big set was 750 feet wide and 109 feet high and was approached by an avenue of twenty-four Sphinxes. To make the huge set required 55,000 feet of lumber (enough to build fifty ordinary five-room bungalows), 300 tons of plaster, 25,000 pounds of nails and 75 miles of cable and wire for bracing.

Four enormous statues of Pharaoh decorated the entrance to the walled city. Each of these was thirty-five feet high.

ROBERT F. RODEN WITH UNIVERSAL

Former Times Literary Editor Heads Scenario Department

New York.—Universal Pictures Corporation announces the appointment of Robert F. Roden as director of that Company's eastern scenario department, to succeed Leon d'Usseau, who recently resigned.

Roden is a screen writer of considerable note and has been in Universal's New York scenario department for several years. He is a native of New York City, and before entering moving pictures was best known as an authority on rare books.

He began his career as a newspaper man, working on several New York papers. He was literary editor of the New York Times for ten years, and literary correspondent for the London Times and the Boston Evening Transcript for some time.

In this later occupation as a bibliographer he was associated for several years with the late George D. Smith, an internationally famous rare book dealer who bought most of the precious books for such collections as the J. P. Morgan and the Huntington private libraries. Roden is the author of "The Cambridge Press," an historical and bibliographical account of the first printing done in Colonial America.

Since his advent into the screen world, Roden has written original stories for numerous stars, including Marie Doro, Mollie King, June Caprice and Violet Mesereau, and has done considerable writing for various independent companies. His most recent script work was the authorship of "The Diamond Queen," one of Universal's serials.

May Film Anna Christie Abroad With Pauline Lord

New York.—"Anna Christie," Eugene O'Neill's American stage play which is now playing in London, may be filmed in London with the original company.

Thomas H. Ince has cabled to London to have screen tests made of Pauline Lord, the American actress whose characterization in the title role of the play has won her fame. If the tests of Miss Lord are satisfactory, Ince plans to send John Griffith Wray, his director, to London with a staff of capable assistants and to film this First National picture with the stage company which has created such a sensation on both sides of the water.

New Production Company Organized on West Coast

Hollywood.—A new educational unit has been organized here. Short subjects will be the principal output, but they will go in for society dramas about the first of next year.

G. W. Garrison is financial manager, R. W. McGree, director; J. H. Rush, assistant director, and C. E. Tosh, chief cameraman; Edith Rush, formerly of the speaking stage will be featured.

PRODUCTION NOTES

"Broadway Brake" is nearing completion at Atlantic City where Geo. V. Hobart, Geo. M. Arthur and J. Searle Dawley are doing the final titling.

The new Murray W. Garsson production which will be directed by "Tommy Atkins" is being lined up and the company, headed by Geo. M. Arthur will leave for Kentucky about the tenth of July.

The cast of Paramount's "His Children's Children," made from Arthur Train's novel, will include Mary Eaton, Hale Hamilton, James Rennie, George Faucett, Dorothy Mackaill, Mahlon Hamilton, Warner Oland, John Davidson, Templar Powell and Joe Burke. The leading feminine part has not yet been assigned.

Among the historical characters in Paramount's "The Spanish Dancer," starring Pola Negri are: Cardinal Richelieu, Olivares and Don Carlos, played by Charles A. Stevenson, Henry Vogel and Dawn O'Day, respectively.

George Melford is now editing Paramount's "Salomy Jane" and preparing for his next picture "The Light That Failed" adapted from Kipling's story.

Four films are scheduled for early production at the Continental Prod. studio, Miami, Fla.

"Ashes of Vengeance," the First National picture starring Norma Talmadge, has been completed.

Conrad Nagel will play the leading role in Goldwyn's "The Master of Man." Joseph Schildkraut, originally engaged for the role, has retired from the cast.

Filming of Goldwyn's "The Green Goddess," has ended and cutting will begin at once. George Arliss who is featured in this production has started work on another, "The Adopted Father." Both pictures will be distributed by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan.

John M. Stahl completed his "shooting" of "The Wanters," his next all-star special for Louis B. Mayer presentation through First National.

Production was started on "The Dangerous Maid," in which Constance Talmadge will star, and which will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck through First National.

Sheridan Hall has finished the first rough cutting of "The Steadfast Heart," which he directed for Distinctive Pictures Corporation.

JACK PICKFORD PLANS HIS NEXT PRODUCTION

Los Angeles.—The genius of Mary Pickford and her brother Jack, combined with the capabilities of Marion Jackson, will be embodied in Jack Pickford's next film production which is scheduled to go into actual work within ten days.

The story is of a mountain youth, a typical boy of the hills, with the settings of a decade or so back. George Hill has been engaged to direct.

HOME FROM ABROAD

New York City.—Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres this city, returned from a two months' vacation abroad. He states that Europeans are in a morbid frame of mind as an aftermath of the war and therefore they think our pictures "too flimsy and uniform." They want only pictures of intense dramatic value. Exhibition is sadly neglected because there is not much of a picture public in Europe. The orchestras are good but the conducting mediocre.

There is hardly any theatre building in Europe, because of the difficulty for raising money for production and the lack of a good market. Central Europe fears American competition.

Big Booking Contract

Los Angeles.—The biggest individual film sale of the year is said to have been made recently when Selznick Pictures Corporation closed with the West Coast Theatres Inc., for the showing of "The Common Law" and "Rupert of Hentzau" over the entire West Coast chain in the north and south. Contracts were signed here by Claude Ezell, representative of Selznick, and Dave Der-shon, booking manager for the circuit.

DAVIES FEATURE FOR BIG OPENING

Little Old New York Will Be Shown at New Cosmopolitan House, August 1

New York.—Marion Davies in "Little Old New York" will be the opening attraction at the new Cosmopolitan Theatre, formerly the Park, on Columbus Circle, August 1.

The opening night will be a social event. This picture revives the New York of a century ago and is therefore of especial interest to all old residents of what is now the greatest city in the world.

Robert Fulton's steamboat on its maiden voyage; the first Delmonico's; the old family tallyhos; the dignified drawing rooms and the costumes of that period all contribute their charm to this film.

Victor Herbert has been engaged as conductor. He has composed a ten minute overture to the picture which he will personally conduct at matinee and evening performances every day. The music score has been written by William Frederick Peters who will conduct at least the opening performance personally.

The orchestra will be composed of forty-two men, selected by Mr. Herbert, and will be called the Victor Herbert Orchestra.

FATTY ARBUCKLE AT PALAIS ROYAL CAFE

Atlantic City.—Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle will appear as a talking, singing, and dancing comedian at the Palais Royal cafe, one of the largest boardwalk resorts here. Five weeks ago, a lull in his activities as a motion picture director for Joseph Schenck, made him accept a two weeks contract to entertain at the Marigold Gardens in Chicago. This venture was so successful that he played for five weeks and would have remained longer but Mr. Schenck called upon him to finish his directing activities. B. D. Berg arranged with Mr. Schenck for a temporary suspension of Arbuckle's contract and he will open at Atlantic City, Monday night.

No one connected with the motion picture field has had any part in Arbuckle's comeback except Ben H. Atwell, who will handle the comedian's publicity. He and Perry Kelly are now searching for a comedy vehicle for Arbuckle for the speaking stage, at the conclusion of his contract as director, next winter.

A number of New York and Philadelphia professional and fraternal organizations, of which Arbuckle is a member, are arranging to boost him back to normalcy.

Premier Presentations for "The Hunchback"

EXPLOITATION TO COVER FULL YEAR

Universal Plans Worldwide Effort to Advertise Masterpiece

New York.—An innovation in presentations that promises to revolutionize the exhibition end of the film business has been projected for the public offering of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the costly spectacle drama which has been made at Universal City from Victor Hugo's famous romance of the Middle Ages.

As the most ambitious picture ever made by Universal, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is to have a presentation befitting its magnitude. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who envisioned "The Hunchback" as a screen masterpiece, and who has put every ounce of Universal effort behind it, has evolved a plan for its appearance on the screens of the world.

In a nutshell, as explained by a Universal official, this plan is based upon a worldwide presentation and by which the picture will exploit itself. It will be its own advance agent, it will be its own ballyhoo and it will sing its own praises. Also, it will create its own demand so that when exhibitors present it their audiences will be ready-made.

All this will be done by a long campaign of "premiere presentations." Not only in the key cities, but in every important city of the country, and elsewhere throughout the civilized world, there will be a "premiere presentation." This campaign will not be a flash in the pan, but will extend over many months, probably more than a year.

Mr. Laemmle does not regard the picture of the present only. It is his firm belief, and of those who have seen the picture in production and as it has been edited to date, that it will be just as much a box office attraction ten or twenty years from now as it is today.

Therefore, the Universal chief is determined that the production shall become the best known motion picture in the world, even before it is generally released. There can be no haste in putting over such a campaign, and Universal now is laying the foundations of a premiere presentation organization which probably will be the forerunner of a new method of presentation for all extraordinary screen offerings.

The contemplated presentations will have all the dignity and exclusiveness of legitimate attractions. The admission price will be high—too high to attract the bulk of the average motion picture house. This means that the "exploitation presentations" will be in an entirely different class from the later showings by the regular photoplay theatres.

This means that the exhibitor will not have to go to great extremes to exploit the picture so as to make sure he takes a profit out of the booking. On the contrary, he will be booking a picture for which there already will be a big popular demand, according to the Universal view.

These presentations will not be held in regular motion picture theatres. In most cases they will be held in legitimate theatres, in opera houses or in similar places.

The picture is scheduled to have its world's premiere showing in the Astor Theatre, this city, beginning September 2nd.

Six Reels the Average

Winnipeg.—A questionnaire sent to all the exhibitors of Manitoba by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, showed that six reels was the average length of feature that the ordinary exhibitor could successfully handle. Of the fifty sent out, thirty replies were received, twenty-three of which expressed the preference for six-reelers.

Nathalie Talmadge Returns

Hollywood.—When Buster Keaton gets his new five reel feature comedy underway at the United Studios he will have as his leading woman Nathalie Talmadge Keaton his wife. The sister of Norma and Constance formerly was on the screen, but retired when she married "frozen face." With the birth of her baby, plans for her return were delayed and then Buster put his foot down on any more screen appearances. But when Schenck decided to do a feature production with Keaton Mrs. Keaton persuaded Lou Anger, production manager, that she would fit. Buster was finally won over, and she will have the feminine lead.

Conlon On Way to Coast

New York.—Sunday last Ben Conlon of the firm of Howe and Conlon left for Los Angeles where he will visit the West Coast clients of that firm and also appoint a permanent representative on the Coast.

Author Passes Away

Hollywood, Cal.—Charles Felton Pidgin, author of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" from which novel the Metro picture was adapted, died in Melrose, Mass.

ORIGINAL MUSIC SCORE ARRANGED

Composed By Victor Schertzinger Who Also Directs the Picture

New York.—Victor Schertzinger, who is directing Jackie Coogan in "Long Live the King," for Metro, has contributed a truly epoch making innovation to the screen art. Mr. Schertzinger, who is also a composer of note, has written original music for this picture which is being used as accompaniment to the acting, and this same music will serve as the score for the picture when it is presented in the theatres of the world this fall.

This new method, in fact, is notable for several reasons. It is the first time that original music has ever been written to provide a stimulate for acting. And by writing his own music, the director was enabled to communicate his feeling and conception of the play far better than in any other manner. By writing musical themes for each character, and by blending these themes symphonically, Mr. Schertzinger has woven the action of the play into a unified and symphonic whole.

And this effect will be conveyed to those who see the picture. Audiences will respond emotionally to the same music which stimulated the actors in the portrayal of their roles, and thus will be established a greater bond between actors and audience than has ever before been effected in any branch of the dramatic art.

C. C. BURR BUYS

THE SHAME DANCE

New York.—C. C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films, Inc., has purchased "The Shame Dance," by Wilbur Daniel Steele, as the first of the Big Six specials he will produce for the Independent market the coming season.

Wilbur Daniel Steele's "Ching Chong Chinaman" is widely known. "The Shame Dance" was selected by O'Brien in his Best Stories for 1921. And in the same year. Mr. Steele received the O. Henry Memorial Prize.

Mr. Burr will produce six very big productions for the coming season, the first of which will probably be "The Shame Dance." The names of the others will be announced from time to time, as the production plans become more complete. Producer Burr plans to make this forthcoming Independent series the most pretentious effort of his entire career as a maker of such sure-fire box-office successes as "Luck," "Sure-Fire Flint," "I am the Law," and "You are Guilty."

Will Handle Feature

New York City.—Charles R. Rogers, President of the Resolute Film Sales, Inc., has closed with Irving Cummings to handle distribution of the Cummings special "Broken Hearts of Broadway."

Receives Loving Cup

Fort Lee, N. J.—Director Clarence Badger filming First National's "Potash and Perlmutter" was presented with a silver loving cup given by the producer, cast and technical staff.

TWO COMPANIES COMBINE INTO ONE

New York.—In order to strengthen the trade mark, "Preferred Pictures," and to clear up any confusion that might result from the use of two names for one product, the Al Lichtman Corporation and Preferred Pictures, Inc., have been combined, into one organization to be known as Preferred Pictures Corporation. Al Lichtman will be president and J. G. Bachman treasurer. The reorganization will not affect in any way the duties and responsibilities of B. P. Schulberg, Mr. Lichtman and Mr. Bachman. Mr. Schulberg will continue to produce all Preferred Pictures, which will be distributed under the same arrangements as were consummated by Mr. Lichtman in organizing the Al Lichtman Corporation.

Mr. Schulberg will be in complete charge of the production department, at the studio at 3800 Mission Road, Los Angeles. The department of distribution, directed by Mr. Lichtman, has offices at 1650 Broadway, New York City.

Scribes Visit Studio

Hollywood, Cal.—Newspaper and syndicate correspondents were guests of Principal Pictures Corporation's company making Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man," in Prescott, Arizona. The scribes were entertained with a banquet and bronco-busting contests.

Looking Ahead In Hollywood

By Will C. Murphey

HOLLYWOOD, June 28

Production goes apace as the peak of the season approaches. One hundred and nineteen companies are at work this week, an increase of seven over the previous week. The three leaders are Universal with 19, Fox with 11 and Goldwyn with 9. Current schedules show fifteen stories in preparation for early shooting.

Interesting gossip this week is that Ernst Lubitsch is to make an original story of the French stage as his first picture under his new Warner Bros. contract. Anyway he and Paul Bern were very busy working on a script at the Warner Bros. studio, and while he refused to discuss his forthcoming plans, he intimated that an original story might go into production very soon.

On top of this Rupert Hughes let it be known that he has decided on "Law Against Law," as his next picture for Goldwyn. The story is by Hughes and will be directed by him. An all-star cast will be engaged, and the screen version is now under way with prospects of it being finished for early production.

Eleanor Glynn is here, Mrs. Leslie Carter has arrived, and word comes that Dorothy Dalton is on her way from Europe. Mrs. Glynn will add her touch to "Six Days," nearing completion at Goldwyn with Charles Brabin directing, and to "Three Weeks," soon to get under way. Mrs. Carter bought a home here, and is said to be flirting with the screen. Miss Dalton will be the star in another big production to start on her arrival.

First National's big production of "Ponjola," with Donald Crisp directing, has been started. Crisp has assembled an all-star cast headed by Anna Q. Nilsson, James Kirkwood and Tully Marshall. It is a Sam Rork production of Cynthia Stockley's South African story.

William Fox has never seen his new studio here. As he is about to spend $3,500,000 for a new location, he thinks it is about time he paid a visit to Hollywood. Consequently he will arrive on September 1. Until the arrival of the producer, plans for the new studio are being held up.

Gladys Walton, Universal star, and Henry Merrit Herbel, eastern sales manager of the same organization, were married here this week. As Herbel has been in the east since he became acquainted with Miss Walton, the courtship has been conducted almost exclusively by long distance telephone. It is understood the star will give up her screen work on the completion of her present contract which has one year to run.

It is understood that Eric von Stroheim and his high powered production of "Greed," for Goldwyn, is nearing completion. Von Stroheim has been using up a lot of sets in San Francisco where the more important scenes have been made, and is now to finish in Death Valley where location is free.

Wallace Beery's next picture will be "Power of Darkness." It will be made at the Golden Gate Studio opposite Universal City, and Jacques Jaccard will direct the story with J. J. Paztor at the camera.

Fox is making a new animal comedy series featuring Max, Moritz and Pep, three unusually intelligent chimpanzees that have been touring the Keith Circuit. Lew Siler is directing. The first picture was shown at a try-out at a Los Angeles theatre and proved a scream. "Monkeyshines," will soon be released.

B. P. Schulberg is ready to start "Maytime," the successful musical comedy, on July 1, with Louis J. Gasnier directing, and Gaston Glass playing the lead. Other players are being assembled and it is likely that Ethel Johnson will have the leading feminine role. William Norris, of the stage company will play his original part of Matthew. Schulberg says he paid $75,000 for the screen rights and will make an elaborate production.

Everyone seems to have a particular interest in the filming of "Black Oxen," the Gertrude Atherton novel that has created quite a furor, especially among the women folk. The story is about a woman who comes back via the fountain of youth. Fannie Ward, who is now in France, is said to have been offered the lead, and Raymond McKee will play an important part.

Charles Chaplin took a few extra shots on "Public Opinion," this week and called the picture finished. This is Edna Purviance's first starring picture, and there is considerable interest in its release. Chaplin will get ready for another comedy for himself.

Lew Brice, vaudeville comedian, and brother of Fanny Brice, has gone with Fox to make comedies. Earl Kenton is directing. It is said Fox is making comedies now on individual picture contracts. Anyway Brice finished "The Marathon Dance," and the producer liked it so well, he signed the comedian to make "Nobody Home."

The first scenes on "Ruggles of Red Gap," were shot this week by James Cruze, who directed "The Covered Wagon." Edward Horton, leading man of stage and screen, has the lead, and Ernest Torrence and Louis Wilson have important roles. Other featured players are Fritz Ridgeway, Charles Ogle and Louise Dresser.

It is possible that Pauline Lord, who played the lead in the stage version of "Anna Christie," will have the screen role when Thomas Ince films the O'Neill play. Thomas Ince is waiting for a screen test made of the actress in New York.

It was a sure thing that Mary Philbin would be starred by someone after her work in "The Merry-Go-Round," Universal's big Julian Johnstone picture to be released in the fall. Carl Laemmle has signed her, and she will appear in special Universal-Jewel productions. Her first picture will be "My Mamie Rose," Owen Kildare's novel of regeneration.

Norma Talmadge's next picture for First National will be "Dust of Desire," a story of the African jungle. Willard Mack and Francis Marion are making the adaptation.

"Under Orders," is the new Clyde Cook comedy for Lou Anger Productions now under way. Alfred Austin is directing and Blanche Payson has the lead. It will be of feature length.

Universal has started "The Trail of the Wolf," directed by Robert Norty Bradbury from George Peyer's story, and "Sentenced to Soft Labor," from Raymond L. Scrock's and Harvey Gate's story, directed by Robert Hill and starring William Desmond.

Changes in titles noted this week were "The Skyline of Spruce," at Universal to "Shadows of the North;" "The Valley of Content," Reginald Barker's production of Blanche Upright's novel for Louis B. Mayer, to "Pleasure Mad;" "The Man From Ten Strike," James Oliver Curwood's story starring Guy Bates Post, to "Gold Madness" and "In Old Madrid," Clara Kimball Young's starring vehicle to "A Wife's Romance."

Sol Lesser to Build An Accessory Plant

Los Angeles.—A company to establish a plant in this city for the manufacture of motion picture accessories is being organized by Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg, of Principal Pictures Corporation. New York, Chicago and Cleveland at present have a corner on the many odds and ends used in the making of pictures and Lesser is out to bring some of the business to Los Angeles.

"Few people," he said in discussing the new Company, "have any idea of the innumerable small accessories required in turning out screen productions. Our intention is to make novelties in the way of exploitation, press books, advertising cuts and all the 'tools' used in the trade and now turned out by the millions in the east for sale to the film exchanges and the theatres."

Agents are looking for a sight for the proposed plant, and when it is obtained, Lesser expects to start business as soon as he can put up a building.

KENNETH HARLAN CAST FOR LEAD

Selection Made at a Conference Between Schulberg and Fairbanks

New York City.—Exhibitors from all parts of the country are congratulating Preferred Pictures on the casting of Kenneth Harlan for the title role in "The Virginian," states All Lichtman.

The selection of Mr. Harlan was made at a conference between Ben Schulberg and Douglas Fairbanks from whom the screen rights were purchased. Fairbanks had intended making the picture next year and had all his data laid out but his production plans on two previous pictures were so tied up that it would have been impossible for him to make the picture before 1925. When Mr. Schulberg suggested Kenneth Harlan for the title role, Mr. Fairbanks declared that it fitted him perfectly.

According to Mr. Lichtman, Harlan's reputation has been growing with the critics and the public, and exhibitors have found his name a decided box-office attraction.

TUNSTALL SIGNS WARNER FEATURES

Big Deals Closed on Eighteen Features—Creole Reports Heavy Demand

New York—A number of big territorial deals involving the Warner Brothers' forthcoming eighteen features are in the process of consummation, the most recent of which has been made with E. G. Tunstall, of the Tunstall Film Exchange, Milwaukee, for the state of Wisconsin, according to Harry M. Warner. Practically the entire country has been disposed of by the Warners, save for several deals which are now pending in the middle west and northwest territories.

Throughout the southern territory the Creole Enterprises, New Orleans, report an unusual booking demand for "Main Street," a picturization of Sinclair Lewis' novel featuring Florence Vidor and Monte Blue. Despite the demand for the film the Warners have decided not to release it in the East until the Fall.

By this time the Warners expect to have six Classics ready for release. These will include "The Gold Diggers," "Little Johnny Jones," "The Printer's Devil," "Broadway After Dark," "How to Educate a Wife," and "Cornered."

An announcement to this effect from Truart is declared to be "made" because of numerous unauthorized announcements emanating from Los Angeles and the reported action on the part of a Mr. Herman Roth and the Hollywood Productions, Inc., representing themselves as associated with and subsidiary to the Truart Film Corporation.

Truart definitely states that no one is authorized to act for it with the exception of the officers of the Corporation in New York and Los Angeles.

Cohan's stage play, "Little Johnny Jones," first went to work for this concern under an agreement with C. C. Burr, to whom the star was under contract, but subsequent negotiations between the two producers give his services to the Warners.

Independent Pictures Corporation will put into production soon a seven part super-special tentatively titled "Vanity." The story is by Lois Zellner. It will be filmed in Los Angeles and will be on the Independent Pictures schedule for the 1923-24 season. It is planned to have the picture ready for release in October.

The set includes stage, proscenium, boxes and orchestra pit and Director Harry Beaumont will use 700 extras in the scenes in which it will appear. The setting occupies half of the Warner's new stage, which is one of the largest in the world.

Orders Review of Censorship Board's Decision

PATHE EXCHANGE GETS COURT WRIT

"Final Determinations" to Be Decided By Appellate Division

New York.—By virtue of an order signed by the five Justices of the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court, the recent, widely published, "final determination" of the New York Censorship Board that a Pathe comedian's torn trousers "incite to crime" is not so "final" as the censors thought it was.

The order was issued on the petition of Lewis Inzerarity, Secretary of Pathe Exchange, Inc. It is a writ of Certiorari directing the Motion Picture Commission of the State of New York to return to the court all of the evidence and memoranda upon which was based their determination to eliminate certain features and scenes from the one-reel comedy entitled "Good Riddance."

It is in this film that the chief comedian's, Paul Parrott's, affectionate dog companion tears part of one trouser off his master's leg in his effort to attract his attention away from the pretty girl he is dancing with. This and other "eliminations" were ordered by the Commission, to wit:

"Eliminate subtitle: 'Take him up seven miles and throw him out—after that he's his own boss.'

"Eliminate scene of throwing dog out of airplane.

"Eliminate all view of man's leg exposed where trouser is pulled off by dog at dance.

"Eliminate episode of lighting fuse attached to dog's tail.

"The reasons for the above eliminations are that they are 'inhuman' and would 'tend to incite to crime.'"

In obedience to the order of the Supreme Court, Appellate Division, above quoted, the Commission now returns to that Court all its "determinations" in the case—the "finality" in the matter being in the hands of the court.

Many of the subjects of Dr. Burlingham's "Around the World" adventures, which are being distributed on the independent market by Truart Film Corporation, offer real Summer-weather attractions.

Among them are those which deal with Dr. Burlingham's trips to the high peaks of the world, the lands of perpetual snow and ice—the ascension to the summit of the Zinal-Rothorn, one of the most treacherous peaks of all, to the top of Mount Blanc, the Jungfrau, the Matterhorn.

SHORT SHOTS

"Nip and Tick" and "Skylarking," are the first Mack Sennett two reel comedies of the thirteen to be released by Pathe during the year.

Pathe promises an entertaining novelty in the Kiser Art film, "The Festive Haul" which deals with the run of smelt excitement in the Northwest. "Kill or Cure," a comedy with Stan Laurel and the 11th episode of "Haunted Valley," are the leading features of Pathe's July 15 release.

"Her Dangerous Path," featuring Edna Murphy in ten "semi-complete" episodes will be immediately followed with a 15-episode Ruth Roland Patheserial, "Ruth Of The Range."

Pathe quotes attested statements from the California Theatre, Los Angeles, giving details of the biggest attendance and box office receipts for "Safety Last" in the house's records for five years.

FOOTBALL STORY NEXT MESSINGER VEHICLE

Los Angeles.—"Forward Pass," a story of football and puppy love, by Wilcox Hodge Dalton, has been chosen as Buddy Messinger's next vehicle for Century Comedies. Mr. Dalton, a former university football player, wrote the story at the request of Abe Stern.

The comedy will be made by director Al Herman, who has assumed full charge of the Messinger unit, under vice-president Stern's supervision. The story tells of a boy who would rather play football than work in his father's department store. Every moment Buddy can spare, and many his father doesn't want spared, is spent on the lot where he and the "gang" play football. The puppy love interest is maintained throughout by Sadie Campbell, Buddy's eleven year old leading lady.

Those in the cast besides Buddy and Sadie are Bessie and Marjorie Welsh, "Fatty" Hicks, Donald Hughes and Kenneth Green.

Composer's Son Joins Century

Rudolph Friml, Jr., 13, son of the music composer, is now a member of the Buddy Messinger unit producing Century Comedies. Young Friml's first Century appearance will be in "Bringing Up Buddy."

"THIS now the season of our discontent," but made possible to please and earn some money by hustling in other directions.

We can be thankful for some good features on the market, but more so far a splendid supply of "shorts" to help through the features which are not so sparkling. Less serious minds are hard to please, so we must smile about it and try to get laughs while making more music than money. We must look and also keep cool, with polished fronts and slicked-up entrances.

* * *

If Short Subjects are "the life of the program," let's play them up big in the Summer or never at all. Outdoor stuff is the thing! We must show them, and if possible, advertise them at least as strong as the features. Good posters, hand-bills and show cards should tell as much about your one and two reels as anything else you have to show.

There is a scarcity of Sport pictures, but get what you can of these during this wonderful season of athletic tournaments. Also Outing pictures with plenty of water scenes.

* * *

Animated cartoon subjects should go much better in the summer months than at any other time. People like them and always seem satisfied with the comic antics of these little artificial people and animals.

* * *

Of the short comedies, chuck in as many bathing and beach-scene burlesques as you can. Ask your exchange service about these and make sure they are both lively and wet. Even the tired business woman can laugh at the slap-stick if there's enough water around it on a warm evening.

* * *

We have the following brief comment to make upon definite subjects, but advise that you use a great deal of your own judgment in the selections.

"Our Gang" comedies (2 r. Pathe) are sure getters and deserve advance advertising. They are well known by this time.

"Buster Keaton Comedies" (First National). And all of them are unsurpassed for the most exciting comedy.

"Bruce Scenics Beautiful" (1 r. Educational) never fail to receive comment for their careful handling and educational value.

"Baby Peggy" (Century Comedies—Universal) are away above in class. Everybody likes them.

"Broadway Comedies," "Mirthquake Comedies" and "Speed Comedies" (each 2-reelers, Arrow) are lively entertainers.

"Keystone—featuring Sid Chaplin—Revivals" (Tri-Stone Pictures, Inc.) are proven money makers. They are real funny and will please as of old.

"Felix the Cat," Pat Sullivan's animated cartoon (M. J. Winkler, State Rights) has a punch that doesn't miss. It's a sure winner and not costly.

"Earl Hurd Cartoon Comedies" (1 r. Educational) are few but consistently good.

"Screen Snapshots" (Pathe distributors) is best with the bathing beauties. Interesting for all.

"Sporting Kings" (2 r. Geo. Swartz, State Rights) contains such stars in action as Jack Dempsey, Babe Ruth, Wm. Tilden, Gene Sarazen and Wm. Spencer. A winner for the men and boys.

"The Enchanted City" (by Warren A. Newcombe, 1 r. Educational), of which there should be a dozen at least.

"Chester Snooky Comedies" (2 r. Federated) if they liked the other "Snookies" you showed them.

"Flips and Flops," "Shimmying by the Sea," "Tennis" and "Water Sports by Water Spirites" (each 1 r. National Exchanges) read very good in titles for warm weather.

Many more like these will be suggested from time to time in these columns, and all questions concerning them will be carefully and promptly answered.

* * *

Be careful to have your advertising copy printed in Green and other cool color effects. Also change your Red and Amber lights to bright Greens and Blues and if necessary, use tree and flower ornaments both in and outside your house.

One of the best short subject bets that we have come across is the sporting series that is being produced by George D. Swartz. The series will consist of twelve two reelers, and in each subject will be four or five stars that are famous in the sporting world.

The first of the series, Sporting Kings, should be immensely popular. In this subject are Jack Dempsey, Eugene Sarazen, William Spencer, Babe Ruth and William Tilden. Each of these champions have a tremendous following, and the five of them in one picture should prove a splendid box-office attraction.

Mr. Swartz intends to release the series through the independent market, although several national distributing organizations are dickering for the product. This series should be a winner.

Hal Roach Serial Received by Pathe

With the arrival from the Hal Roach Studios and the screening of "Her Dangerous Path," Pathe announces expectation of a recrudescence of magazine and newspaper discussion of "Women Problems."

The opening of the Patheserial with its ten-reel form and novel carry-over suspense device invented by Hal Roach, author of the story, is said to go straight to the heart of a dilemma with which thousands of girls are compelled to deal every day in the year. In each of the ten chapters of the serial this is the specialty which engages the talents of Edna Murphy.

In each episode the question for the girl to answer is a different one, but all are familiar in the chronicles of ordinary human life in these times. The first one answered is created by the sudden death of the girl's father and the complete collapse of the family fortunes. In the panic which seizes her she inclines toward a marriage which is bound to condemn her to social conditions which are antagonistic to all her experiences and training.

By means of the screen device referred to the girl is able to see with the audience the unfolding of the startling drama of which that decision would make the unhappy heroine.

The early episodes of "Her Dangerous Path," are said to be as dramatically intense as any serial patron could desire, and not lacking in "thrills" of grave perils encountered.

Film Library Releasing

Cincinnati, O.—The Krippendorf-Holley film libraries here announce that as a starter they are releasing the following pictures: "The Voice of the Land," in 50 reels, on a program or series basis only; "Citizens in the Making," 13 reels, leased for a period of years or on rental basis and "The Screen Companion," a magazine in film arranged in 12 programs and booked only as a series. Other productions will be released later.

Reviews of Short Subjects will be found on page 293

All-Women Picture Company Enters Production Field

Hollywood.—An all-women picture company entered the field this week. The company is headed by Lule Warrenton, old time character actress, and has started work on the Sawyer-Lubin lot at San Diego. Mrs. Warrenton, on the stage since childhood, and in pictures since their first days, is president and general director. Her aides are Mrs. A. B. E. Shute, Mrs. Katherine Chesnaye and Miss Kendall, all of whom come to the screen with no practical experience.

Mrs. Shute is a novelist, Mrs. Chesnaye is a short writer and world traveler, and Miss Kendall is also a writer. Preparations are underway for a regular program of production including features, educational and short subjects. These pictures will be written by and directed by women, and women will have the say in every detail.

Pathe Comedies on Broadway

On Broadway, New York, all last week Pathe comedies came near monopolizing the laughter ingredient of the screen entertainment offered. Four separate familiar brands were shown at an equal number of houses.

At the Capitol Theatre the Our Gang two-reeler, "Back Stage," the Strand patrons viewed "The Watch Dog," a one-reel Hal Roach "Dippy Doo Dad"; the Rialto showed the Our Gang comedy, "Dogs of War," and at the Broadway, Harold Lloyd's "Haunted Spooks" was revived. The last named was also on the bill at the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn.

Chambers Books Haunted Valley

Ruth Roland's latest Patheserial, "Haunted Valley," has won the special distinction of being booked for a Summer run by Stanley Chambers at his Wichita Theatre, Wichita, Kansas. This house is known as one of the biggest and best appointed motion picture theatres in the United States, while no reputation in picture showmanship stands higher than Mr. Chambers. The attractiveness of its exploitation and presentation through the fifteen weeks covered by the run is guaranteed by the established practice of and facilities commanded by this theatre.

Pope's Pictures Available

Cleveland, O.—The six reel production "His Holiness Pope Pius XI," showing the Head of the Catholic Church in the Vatican, is now being offered on a state's right basis. Plans are being made by W. F. Plagenz, National City Bldg. here, to play the picture on a percentage basis and a large exploitation campaign has been arranged. The picture has been showing under auspices of Catholic societies in several parts of the country and is said to be a big box office draw in Catholic communities.

Century Directors Get Houses

Plans have been practically closed by Abe Stern, for the building of what will be known as Directors Row at the Century studios.

Full details have not been received from the coast as to what the new Row will consist of, although a recent night letter advised that bungalows will be built and maintained by Julius and Abe Stern for the directors.

West Coast Sees Roach Comedy

"The Uncovered Wagon," which Pathe will soon release, is said to be the funniest travesty of the season. This is reported as the verdict of West Coast audiences at pre-release showings. There is only one reel of this Hal Roach "side-splitter," which features Paul Parrott and is said to reveal in that comedian qualities hitherto unsuspected.

 Countess Gisella Dorothy Wallace

Count Franz Hohenegg, Austrian nobleman, attached to the court of Emperor Josef, is engaged to Countess Gisella. The proposed marriage is merely one of custom and convenience, so far as he is concerned. At an open air amusement resort he becomes infatuated with Agnes Urban, a pretty girl of peasant origin, who turns the hand organ in connection with the merry-go-round. Agnes and her father are employed by the brutal owner of a concession on the grounds—Shani Huber, Bartholomew, a hunchback, is Agnes' faithful friend. Huber attempts to attack Agnes. Her father rescues her, but is arrested for drawing a knife on the big proprietor. Agnes again meets Franz, who she believes to be, like herself, of plebeian origin. He makes love to but spares her when she is frightened by his vehemence. Through Franz's influence Agnes' father is released. She confesses to Franz that she loves him. The latter is forced by imperial command to fulfill his promise and wed Countess Gisella. The Urbans and Bartholomew find employment in an adjoining concession. Bartholomew's pet, a huge orang-outang, finds his cage door open, sneaks out and kills the brutal Huber. The discovery of her lover's identity with Count Hohenegg and his marriage is a terrible blow to Agnes. War breaks out and he goes to the front. Later the defeated Austrian troops return, Agnes' father dies and the death of Franz's wife leaves him free to seek out Agnes. He does so. She has consented to wed Bartholomew out of gratitude, but he generously releases her from her promise. Franz and Agnes are united.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

By virtue of an intensely interesting and delightfully human love story, superb acting, charming photography and excellent direction—"Merry-Go-Round" proudly takes its place in the van of the season's best pictures. It is a colorful screen masterpiece, stressing to the full the pomp, arrogance and grandeur of the court of the late Emperor Franz Josef, under whose regime the social life of Old Vienna ran in merry current to a never ceasing orchestral accompaniment of "wine, women and song."

Contrasting sharply with the daily pageant of the aristocratic plane is the vision of the humble player-folk in a popular outdoor amusement resort, whence the heroine is evolved in the character of a pretty lass who grinds the organ to which a merry-go-round travels gaily. The said resort bears an astonishing resemblance to America's far-famed Coney Island, and whatever the wide difference between the denizens of a foreign court and the average inhabitants of the U. S. A. may be—it may be said, in passing, that there is an extraordinary similarity to be observed in the manner in which the Coney Island patron and his Austrian prototype take their outing and pleasure.

This is not intended as a hint that the foreign atmosphere fails to register accurately, but rather as an admission that men and women folks of the civilized zones are much the same all the world over. The love romance of the Count and erstwhile peasant girl, if divested of its Austrian trappings, is one that might just as easily be imagined as occurring in this country, were the aristocracy of birth which distinguishes the chief male character replaced by that of wealth and social prestige.

But the note of court luxury and stately surroundings undoubtedly lend additional fascination to the tale, which "gets across" with tremendous effect, is surcharged with fine, wholesome pathos, spectacular force and long-drawn suspense, the whole deftly wound into a thoroughly satisfactory climax.

Although the plot pivots upon the result of the World War, nothing of the actual conflict is filmed. Director Rupert Julian, fully aware how sick the American public is of monotonous scenes of battle and carnage, wisely limits the strictly military episodes to the disordered return of the broken troops when the fighting is finished. Another instance of good directorial judgment is the manner in which the killing of the brutal Huber by a gigantic ape is handled.

The whole thing is merely suggested by the ascent of the animal to the victim's bedroom, his entrance by the window and reaching forth of a menacing hairy paw to the recumbent figure in the bed. This fades out—the ape is seen descending, then comes a quick flash of the body lying prone in death. There are no bloody horrors, no grisly struggles with a choking finish in evidence—nothing save well-merited retribution—but the thrill is there, and how artistically administered!

Besides providing entertainment of the 100 per cent brand, "Merry-Go-Round" also serves as a vehicle wherein Mary Philbin, who plays the role of Agnes Urban, is transported to a place among filmdom's best and brightest stars. The range and flexibility of this young actress's pantomime are marvelously appealing in conjunction with the charm of her slender beauty and expressive features. Her performance is unmarred by a single false note and stands out significantly even amid the work of an unusually talented cast.

Norman Kerry, as the lover, is a stately figure, showing to uncommonly good advantage in uniform, and plays the part with impressive dignity and emotional power. Another telling bit of character work is that of Cesare Gravina in the role of Agnes' old father, George Siegmann registers as a human brute par excellence by his clever interpretation of Shani Huber, and George Hackathorne is pathetically effective as the self-sacrificing hunchback, Bartholomew. The support is all that could be desired. The camera offers many exquisite woodland and garden scenes. Lavishly luxurious interiors, and perfect lighting distinguishes the entire production.

The picture can be safely exploited as a super-film, magnificently produced, and visualizing a story sure to hold the attention and awaken the sympathies of all beholders.

By TOM KENNEDY

"Merry-Go-Round," a "big" picture, is a fascinating and effective blend of elaborate settings, rich photographic work, appealing characters, and excellent acting. Of all the elements going into the making of the picture the production scores most heavily. From the opening scenes at the "Prater" of the Vienna that was before the war, to the flashes behind the battle lines with thousands of mud-smeared Austrians beating a retreat, "Merry-Go-Round" impresses the spectator as something done as handsomely as money and technical craft could make it.

Mary Philbin, with a glamor set up about her through clever and interesting advance publicity, gives a very noticeable and notable performance as the little organ grinder who falls in love with a prince. Norman Kerry is a spectacular and dashing figure as Count Hohenegg. Mr. Kerry's appearance is certainly with him in the enactment of the role. George Hackathorne, George Siegmann and Cesare Gravina are others who score personal triumphs.

"Merry-Go-Round" should be an immensely popular photoplay. It has a way of filling the eye with its massive settings and luxurious properties, and stirring the emotions with its play of pathos and the struggle of a love romance between a man of the very highest social standing and a peasant girl, and that is and always has been the way to popularity. Its exploitation will be along lines to convey the impression of an especially rich, costly and beautiful production and on these points there is everything to warrant an emphatic avowal. It is a magnificent production and provides bright and absorbing entertainment.

By DENA REED

When a picture contains a love story that is not merely "play-acting" but a living portrait of human emotions, when it depicts with skillful artistry the tragedy behind the gaiety of life, it is a picture that a woman will think about for some time, talk about, and urge her friends to see. For nothing impresses her so much as pathos and there is plenty of it in "Merry-Go-Round." It is the love story of an Austrian Count and a little organ grinder of a carrousel in the Prater, the amusement park of Vienna—the old Cinderella theme that is dear to feminine hearts. But mingled with the romance is a sympathetic picture of showman life, with its outstanding figures, good and evil. The atmosphere of the amusement park is very real and all the characters are portrayed with sincerity.

Mary Philbin is not merely pretty and winsome in her role as Agnes, the little organ grinder, but is an actress of real ability. Norman Kerry is a splendid male lead. A worthy performance is given by Cesare Gravina, as the father of Agnes, and George Hackathorne as Bartholomew Gruber, the hunchback barker, makes the sorrow of his deformity very vivid. The picture has all the features of a successful box office attraction and surely will get much word-of-mouth publicity from your feminine patrons.

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

Writing on the afternoon following the evening on which we saw "Merry-Go-Round" there is one factor in that production standing out above its contemporaries; there were portrayed the pomp and circumstance of courts, "the divinity that doth hedge a king"; the glitter and tinsel of the Viennese Coney Island, with its merry-go-round and its Punch and Judy show; the classes and the masses; the powerful and haughty and the humble and submissive; the extremes—and the contrasts—of wealth and poverty, of tragedy and gaiety.

But over all is the figure of Agnes Urban, grinder of the merry-go-round organ, daughter of Sylvester, the manipulator of Punch and Judy. Mary Philbin, expansive of forehead and expressive of face, comes into her own. Her work is marked by the display of keen intelligence, of genuineness, whether her role for the moment be that of the demure and smiling maid untouched by a larger love holding casual converse with the prince she suggests looks like a lieutenant or whether it be as the disappointed and serious faced woman whose great romance is only a memory and whose future is a blank. And behind it all there comes the inescapable feeling that the career of this slip of a girl has only begun, that not yet has she touched the heights or sounded the depths.

"Merry-Go-Round" is an unusual picture. And by the same token it is a mighty good one. It is a portrayal of life, at its best in many respects, at its worst in a few. Upon George Siegmann falls the burden of delineating the major part of the selfish and the sordid and the brutal in the tale, and most faithfully and self-effacingly does he fulfill his duty as an interpreter.

Norman Kerry, the count in love with Agnes but forced by the emperor to marry a woman of the court, is ideal in type and sincere in performance. Rakish in a measure the count may be, must be if he is to conform to the tradition of the Austrian soldier-courtier, but never is he offensively so and never is he without the full sympathy of his house.

There are several other players whose characterizations compel recognition, and among these are Cesare Gravina, as Sylvester; George Hackathorne, the crippled admirer of Agnes; Dale Fuller as the wife of the brutal concessionaire, and Anton Vaverka as the portrayer of Franz Josef.

In the course of the unfolding of the story there will be a few chuckles and a few tears, just a few of the latter for the more susceptible. Mainly it is an absorbing drama, colorful and sparkling, of life and love in what was the world's gayest capital; of struggle and opposition, of renunciation—the greatest of all human attributes—and retribution stark and tragic. And you go out smiling.

The box office? If you could have seen the throngs lined up behind the Rivoli's rail at 9:30 o'clock the night before the Fourth and the third day of the engagement you never would have guessed there were a million of New York's population out of the city for the holiday.

 Alan MacFarland, prominent oriental lawyer, contracts the morphine habit through taking the drug during the times when his nerves break as a result of overwork. The peddlers of the narcotic weave a net about this man and his course follows the down-path until his wife, learning his condition, helps him in a fight to be rid of the evil. It is not until she pretends to be a user of the drug herself that MacFarland awakens to necessity of superhuman efforts in the struggle and wins out.

Seeking amusement and pleasurable diversion in the contemplation of "dope" and its effects upon the unfortunates addicted to it, seems a journey far afield and a shot very wide of the mark. Therefore this discussion of "Human Wreckage," the motion picture featuring Mrs. Wallace Reid and offered as a dramatic portrayal of an evil which we are informed "constitutes the greatest menace of the day," will have nothing to do with "entertainment" in the accepted and orthodox sense of the word. Exhibitors and the public alike know that "Human Wreckage" deals with dope, and they know what "dope" is through items in the newspapers, magazine articles based on "expert investigation," lectures by medical men, etc. After which "definition of the subject," let us proceed.

First, if "Human Wreckage" is not an entertaining picture, certainly it is the greatest of the so-called "propaganda" films ever produced. It is the greatest because in treatment it observes the best traditions of photoplay construction. The treatment lifts "Human Wreckage" high above its estate as a merely "propaganda" picture and makes it particularly interesting.

C. Gardner Sullivan has written a scenario in which he again displays his gifts and skill in photoplay writing. His story has a simple plot; action; clearly defined characters; a wealth of authentic incident; dramatically effective situations; and it carries the interest unflaggingly throughout. The story gets under way without irksome "atmosphere" building and states its proposition early enough in the proceedings to give the spectator that sense of direction which makes his journey through the highly dramatic situations a matter which goes as smoothly on its course as inevitability itself. Mr. Sullivan has made a wonderful job of his work.

The characters have been drawn with a fine regard for reality and as a consequence every performance is a delight to the critical and each character an impressively convincing person to the casual spectator. James Kirkwood has a "player's role" as the brilliant criminal lawyer who contracts the morphine habit, and Mr. Kirkwood's gratitude is expressed in a characterization which is not only one of the best things he has ever done but one of the finest of all screen portrayals. Bessie Love scores a mighty hit as the young mother, who in her helpless and hopeless addiction to drugs is wonderously pathetic. Mrs. Wallace Reid, an accomplished and experienced actress, projects a charming personality in the character of Mrs. MacFarland, wife of the lawyer. George Hackathorne and Harry Northrup give excellent performances.

The direction of the piece is a credit to Mr. Wray, whose good taste in avoiding the too obvious contributes greatly to the quality of the picture and whose handling of the mechanical details enhances a notably fine production.

Every exhibitor knows whether circumstances are against his presenting a picture of this type, so there is nothing to be said as to the "ethical" status of "Human Wreckage." The picture is honest, its title alone will inform the public as to its subject and the advertising on it necessarily must state the facts concerning it if the best returns are to be realized. Therefore, patrons attracted to "Human Wreckage" will know what to expect, and they will find no cause for disappointment. It will hold them from start to finish. As a matter of fact, the picture will hold the attention of anybody no matter what his or her particular prejudices regarding the subject matter of entertainment may be. There may be many to say they found "Human Wreckage" depressing and too dolorous for entertainment, but all will agree that while the picture was before them they were intensely interested and tremendously stirred by its appeal.

Properly exploited this film should have a very big pull at the box office. It is a rare instance in which the sensational features connected with it are matched—or should we say over-shadowed—by the high merits of the production. T. C. K.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dan Stevens William Duncan

 Hedges Joe Ryan
 Slicker Williams Walter Rodgers
 John Stevens George Stanley
 Benjamin Cole Frederick Darnton
 Long Tom Brown Slim Cole

Dan Stevens is disinherited after being expelled from college. He goes west and gets a job in a logging camp owned by Cole, who is being secretly held a prisoner by his foreman and a gang of claim jumpers. Helen Cole, alarmed by her father's prolonged absence goes west to find him. She is rescued from this gang by Dan and she tells him of her fears. Dan sets out to rescue the father and also keeps watch over the girl and is always on hand to protect her. The father is finally found in a deserted cabin. Dan meanwhile has held an option on some oil property that produces a gusher. He and Helen then declare their love for each other.

"Smashing Barriers" has been cut from thirty reels, that were shown in serial form, to make a feature picture of six reels. On the face of this it can readily be seen that the action must be fast and furious. The picture will appeal mostly to the patrons who indulge in amusement carrying serial qualities. To them it will afford pleasing entertainment and supply sufficient thrills to satisfy. J. M. D.

 Hugh Waring Clyde Fillmore
 Marcia Carnan Carol Holloway

 Cafe Manager Charles Force
 District Attorney John Toughy

Steve Carnan is known and respected in San Francisco as a philanthropist of independent means. Yet he is actually the proprietor of a notorious dive—the Black Bird—on the Barbary Coast and participates in the gains of criminals who haunt that section of the city. He is the lover of Ruby Le Mar, renowned among the habitués of the underworld for her beauty and graceful dancing. But there comes to the Black Bird, a young violinist—Ruth Revere—Carnan is fascinated by this innocent girl and renounces Ruby. The latter avenges the slight by furnishing evidence to the District Attorney which proves conclusively that Steve Carnan is the owner of the Black Bird. Later, Carnan is mysteriously murdered. Four people are implicated and arrested on suspicion of having committed the crime. After many complications, the real assassin drops dead, the truth revealed and the innocent victims given their freedom.

This underworld melodrama, with its darkly sinister crook atmosphere, well developed mystery angle and tightly drawn thread of suspense, offers good entertainment. It belongs to a class of plot which has a pretty universal appeal, despite the obvious shelving of probabilities in favor of luridly exciting situations; the mesh of political intrigue, sordid bargaining by men behind the scenes in municipal affairs, wild love turning to relentless hate, murder, conspiracy—are all set forth in colorful fashion and merged in a startling climax.

There is no letup in the action excepting in the second reel, when events slow up a bit, due apparently to the introduction of some unnecessary detail, but taken on the whole the story maintains its interest to the close and reflects credit on director and players. The work of the detectives in following the murderer's crooked trail and unwinding the tangled skein of clues is ably done, the love romance deftly handled and a good effect obtained by the comparison of the two principal feminine types—the reckless dance-hall girl and her timid rival.

Carmel Meyers appears as Ruby Le Mar the dashing, impetuous queen of the Barbary Coast resort, and gives a performance remarkable for its unleashed energy, abandon and alluring grace. The role of Ruth Revere is filled by Kathryn McGuire, a charming actress of undeniable emotional ability, Melbourne MacDowell is thoroughly effective as Steve Carnan, Clyde Fillmore furnishes a clean-cut, convincing character sketch of Hugh Waring, the assistant district attorney and the support is all that could be desired. The film should be exploited as a thrilling crook drama based on a mysterious murder, alive with sensational incident and presented by an admirable cast.

Wandering Daughters

First National Photoplay In Six Parts. Author, Dana Burnet. Director, James Young. Cameraman, Georges Benoit. Running Time, Seventy-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Bessie Bowden Marguerite de LaMotte
 Will Bowden William V. Mong
 Annie Bowden Mabel Van Buren
 Geraldine Horton Marjorie Daw
 Charles Horton Noah Beery
 John Hargraves Pat O'Malley
 Austin Trull Allen Forrest
 Maid Alice Howell

Bessie Bowden is strictly reared and closely watched by her father, who believes in closely supervising her social activities. Her fiance, John Hargraves, is aghast when Bessie insists on mixing up with the fast set and is fascinated by a jazz adventurer known as Austin Trull. Geraldine Horton, daughter of a friend of Mr. Bowden's, also finds Trull attractive. Bowden, anxious to keep Bessie contented in her home, spends money freely and aided by Hargraves joins the rapid social whirl. The two girls finally confront each other in Trull's studio, his double-dealing is exposed and Bessie wisely returns to her true love, Hargraves, all ending well, although her father has exploded his bank account in the attempt to appear wealthy.

The best that can be said about this feature is that it is mildly entertaining. The action moves swiftly enough, the photography is excellent and the acting fair, but the plot, dealing with the possible dangers threatening maids of the flapper variety, imbued with too much "jazz" spirit, is lamentably thin in texture, tattered in continuity and lacking in suspense. The impression left on the spectator's mind is that of a too frequently re-hashed theme, which in the present instance fails to convince and doesn't present much of an argument either for or against the social activities of the flapperites of 1923.

There are some remarkably well filmed and attractive scenes with the country club for a background, some comedy relief which is funny, but rather superfluous, and a bit of a dramatic thrill when the two girls confront one another in the lounge lizard's studio, but the atmosphere on the whole seems strained and artificial.

Marguerite de LaMotte registers prettily as the wilful heroine, Bessie Bowden, William V. Mong wins approval as the trusting father, Pat O'Malley carries off the dramatic honors by his clean-cut, sincere impersonation of Hargraves and the support is adequate. The picture's box office value is a doubtful quantity and it cannot be listed as an attraction likely to please critical audiences. Its exploitation possibilities lie principally in the lure of the title, stressing upon the "jazz" element in the whirl of society, and present-day drift of the younger generation.

ing results from an entertainment standpoint in this picture, which differs from the usual stereotyped "Western" in that the hero isn't played up as a chap who sweeps away all obstacles in his career by dint of dauntless courage and a formidable fighting personality. Not that the melodramatic element fails to register, for cowboy Larry Crawford proves quite capable or taking care of himself physically, when occasion demands rough action on his part, and several good scraps are staged with telling effect. But much of the film's interest lies in the humorous scrapes Larry gets into through his excessive good nature and fatal willingness to help fellow creatures out of their troubles. The consequence of this well-intended meddling in other folk's affairs is that he finds himself listed as a scoundrel capable of any foul deed ranging from child-stealing to wholesale thievery and manslaughter, with the added misfortune of having his character apparently blackened "for keeps" in his indignant sweetheart's eyes.

There are many fine scenic effects in evidence, including a variety of artistic long shots, with nicely blended lights and shadows, views of the long, rolling plains of the West, with rugged backgrounds of hills and appropriate closeups. The action moves rapidly, there are no continuity gaps and enough daring riding stunts are featured to satisfy those who crave for the spectacular.

James B. Warner's clever delineation of Larry Crawford gives abundant proof of his versatile talent as a comedian and in straight dramatic lines, a highly pleasing and convincing performance—Edythe Sterling shares honors with the star by her appealing work as heroine and adequate support is rendered by the remainder of the company. The feature can be profitably exploited as a "Western" with many unique touches to distinguish it from the average picture dealing with life "in the open," James B. Warner's name should be accorded special mention and the comedy quality of the film referred to.

Circumstances over which he has no control force Larry Crawford to accept a job from Grace Miller, on whom he has previously cast eyes of affection. Grace is the young and beautiful owner of a ranch, Larry a cowpuncher by trade, and the latter is considerably puzzled by the situation into which Fate has thrust him. But eventually he wanders away into the desert and there discovers a lonesome baby which he takes in charge, and after numerous complications ensue, succeeds in procuring a mother and home for the child. He gets mixed up in a scrap over a gold mine and becomes the possessor of an important map. The result of his laudable exertions is that Larry finds himself in the unpleasant position of a perfectly innocent chap whom everyone looks on as a dastardly abductor and all-around scoundrel. But fickle fortune finally changes, his innocence is proved and he wins Grace's esteem and love.

Bright, wholesome comedy and adventurous incidents are freely mingled with pleas-the war they are reunited when he risks his life to save the Red Cross train on which she is one of the nurses. For the first time in his life he finds true love and he and the girl declare their love for each other.

This picture has the appearance of being too big a theme for the director to handle properly. At times the shots are made too long and at other times the story jumps into a new direction. It is lengthy, wordy and sometimes wearisome. However, all of the material is good, it has a big kick and wins a sympathetic appeal, in spite of these hindrances. Provided the film is cut and put into better shape there is every reason to believe that it will make a big hit with the audiences wherever it is shown. The stuff is in it but has not been brought out to the best advantage. Cullen Landis gives a convincing and sympathetic performance. His work is first rate all the way through. Mildred Harris is also good and a number of excellent close-ups have been made of her. A capable cast lends splendid support. Included in this are some names that are well known and drawing cards in themselves. The photography is good and some spectacular effects are shown in the latter part of the picture. The story runs fairly true to the original novel but the war ending has been worked in rather too much detail to be convincing. J. M. D.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

The Homeward Trail, Universal

Pete Morrison is featured and does well all the usual heroics indigenous to melodrama with a blind widow and a mortgaged home. Land sharpers hold the mortgage and when they learn that the Widow Davis' son is returning from his fortune hunting with sufficient money to pay the debt they make an assault upon him. The wounded man entrusts his money to the hero, who is then accused of the shooting. But the hero reaches the Davis home in time to prevent the plot to put the widow out. A love affair enters the scheme and in the end everything is lovely. There is action, lots of it, and the vigor of the fistcuffs and horsemanship make the picture acceptable entertainment of its sort. Two reels.

Bum Slickers, Universal

Neely Edwards and Bert Roach are here presented in a routine comedy devoid of plot and rather slight as to the content of gags or comic devices. The play opens in a park in which this team appear in their familiar tramp makeup, and ends with them quite dressed up and in the home of a millionaire playing confederates to a fake stock salesman. From this they collect a goodly roll of bills, but the sudden loss of the money in a good cause convinces them that slicking is its own and only reward.

Pathe News Shows Etna Eruption

With theatres in all parts of the country now showing Pathe News exclusive motion pictures of the latest eruption of Mount Etna, newspaper cables are telling of the resulting catastrophe involving human life and property on Etna's thickly populated lower slopes.

These pictures, released in No. 45 of Pathe News, with their views of the whole region and the close-ups of the lava-spouting crater are now seen to have forecasted the disaster which filled the newspapers two weeks later.

Helpful Hogan, Hodkinson

Charles Murray gets into a lot of trouble as the Good Samaritan in this C. C. Burr two-reeler, but in the end, he succeeds in not only settling his son's matrimonial problems but in finding a wife for himself. Raymond McKee as the son and Kathryn Martin, as his fiancée help to make the picture rollicking. It contains some novel comedy situations, one of which is the marriage of the two pair of elopers by a whole convention of ministers.

A Lyin' Hunt, Educational

This is one of the Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge numbers and makes an attractive reel of "some sense and some nonsense." The first is a clever bit of comedy called "A Flivver Elopement." Next is shown some "Gems of American Scenery." In another part of the reel are "Notables Past and Present" and it concludes with another comic version of lion hunting in Africa.

Hunchback of Notre Dame, Artclass

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the first Artclass one-reeler of 18 "Tense Moments From Famous Plays and Great Authors," savors slightly of melodrama. The extravagant gestures of the heroine, occasionally call forth a smile where they are meant to thrill, but nevertheless the film will give the spectator an idea of the story and perhaps cause him to read it if he has not already done so.

Educational on Broadway

"The Educator," an Educational-Hamilton Comedy starring Lloyd Hamilton, appears on the program of the Rivoli Theatre during the week of June 24. "Mrs. Hippo," one of the Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge Series also released through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., was accorded a Broadway showing during the week of June 17, appearing as the novelty reel on the bill at the Capitol.

Wild and Wicked, Hodkinson

This two-reel western comedy has plenty of action and will keep 'em smiling. Charles Murray has the role of a crook who is mistaken for the deputy sheriff and is sent to quell an Indian uprising. By accident, the real deputy (Raymond McKee), captures a whole horde of the redmen. He is acclaimed by the ranchmen and wins the postmistress (Kathryn Martin) as a bride.

The Uncovered Wagon, Pathe

Here is a real travesty on "The Covered Wagon." In this one-reel Hal Roach comedy Paul Parrott is the featured player and he will manage to get the laughs one way or another in it. Some of the situations in the reel are particularly funny, while others are not any too original. However, it will suffice to amuse the majority who see it.

The Pace That Kills, Pathe

Henry Cat and Milton Mouse are shown in the role of firemen surrounded by the paraphernalia of the men whose business it is to extinguish conflagrations. The two undergo wild experiences in exemplifying the truth of the saying "Don't start anything you can't finish." The picture will contribute to the amusement or the show of any house.

The Covered Push-Cart, Pathe

The Aesop's Film Fable that hints at a certain big picture proves to be only a burlesque on the name. Farmer Al Falfa takes in a strange cat whose sleek female figure attracts one of the prowling Toms. Their love affair is interrupted by the farmer and the Tom enlists the aid of his gang and go so far as to even drive the man from his home.

Tail Light, Educational

This one-reel Cameo featuring Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance is a speedy race horse comedy that combines a lot of fun and action into a little space. The plot affords plenty of humorous situations and the acting of Cliff Bowes fills every requirement.

Kill or Cure, Pathe

Stan Laurel makes his debut as a salesman of a combination liquid which will do more than make 'em sit up; it will knock 'em down—if they drink it. He advertises his brand to prospective customers as one that will do a lot of things. The subject is broad farce; the kind that will afford larger pleasure to the unsophisticated.

The Immortal Voice, Hodkinson

This Bray picture is a one-reel history of the phonograph record from the time it is made by the artist and orchestra to the time it is played on the machine. Explanatory diagrams simplify the recording process. The film contains some scenes of Caruso as Pagliachi. This picture ought to be of universal interest.

Urban Popular Classic, Vitagraph

The Urban Popular Classic of current release by Vitagraph is another of the comical "Roving Thomas" series. In this short feature, the traveling cat hikes through the Garden of the Gods in Colorado. The picture shows intimate scenes of the life of Indians and Thomas's comments provide many laughs.

The Gray Rider, Educational

This one-reeler of the Robert Bruce Wilderness Tales series offers some beautiful scenic effects in conjunction with a rather interestingly told story. The double exposures used in the film present some artistic shots and makes this short subject a novelty that is worthy of a great deal of praise.

Town of Babel, Artclass

"The Tower of Babel," fifth in the Artclass series "The Story of the Bible" has historical as well as biblical value for it shows the methods of building in ancient times. This film should be good for exhibitors' shows for children, as well as school and Sunday school programs.

Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening? Pathe

This is the first of a series of two-reelers that Ben Turpin is making for Pathe. In it the cross-eyed hero falls victim to a city vamp and besides losing his heart he loses his wealth as well. This comedy will go good with the followers of Turpin.

Pathe Review No. 26

This reel consists of winter and summer-time views, scenes in a theatre in China, a Silhouette and a few shots showing plant growth of one day under a microscope. The color section gives views of the oasis of Nefta in Tunis.

Haunted Valley, Pathe

In the tenth episode of this serial Ruth is convinced that Craig has been double crossing her. For a time it appears that she will lose control of her holdings and her promise to marry Malison will be fulfilled.

Steel Shod, Pathe

This is a two-reeler of the Range Rider Series featuring Leo Maloney. There is plenty of action and the plot consists of the old melodramatic favorite outlines. Good for those who enjoy outdoor pictures.

Snooky's Treasure Is'and, Educational

Snooky, the Humazec, is featured in a two-reel comedy that will afford plenty of fun for old and young. The cleverness of this monk is sure to get the laughs.

PRESS COMMENTS

Times—There is nothing inspiring about his players, but the players have done as well as they could in their respective roles. American—There is a lot of action—only it is all labeled. World—It is another of those celluloid satires on the younger generation, with a midnight bathing scene at the country club—even worse than usual. Evening World—It's a corking good picture, devoid of the usual mawkish film sentimentality. Telegram—pleasing, entertaining and not too critical story dealing with runaway girls. Mail—it is an ordinary motion picture made as a box office attraction.

RIVOLI

1. Impressions Viennoise
2. Merry-Go-Round (Universal)
3. Dance Divertissement
4. The Battle—Max Fleischer Inkwell comedy

PRESS COMMENTS

Herald—"Merry-Go-Round," which wormed its way into the Rivoli yesterday, is one of the best pictures that has ever adorned the screen at that imposing playhouse. Times—a scintillating, fascinating picture. American—an exceptionally fine production. World—It is big. It is enormous. And it is quite impressively constructed. Evening World—"Merry-Go-Round" is a Universal-Jewel, and really sparkles up to its gemmy reputation at times. Telegram—The story is a good one, well told and well photographed. It will pay you to make a visit to the Rivoli before "Merry-Go-Round" moves away. Sun and Globe—It is a picture vastly worth while. Sun—its story is simple. Its appeal universal. Its treatment is most artistic and refreshing devoid of trite, overdone screen tricks. The acting is superb.

LYRIC

Human Wreckage (F. B. O.)

PRESS COMMENTS

Tribune—It is intensely interesting, because one feels instinctively that it is all true. Times—A valiant attempt has been made to make this production effective. World—One of the most cruelly ghastly things ever put into motion picture form.

10. Capitol Grand Organ

PRESS COMMENTS

Sun and Globe—The picture is thrilling and entrancing considered as a marvellous sporting proposition. Excellent diversified program. American—An unusual program. Telegram—Once The Chase is started there are thrills aplenty. Evening World—If you gasped at Harold Lloyd's scaling the walls of the twelve-story building in Safety Last you'll take leave of your breath entirely at some of the thrills during this icy game of hare and hounds. Tribune—Even without a feature photoplay the program is intensely interesting.

MAKES THEM READTHE NEWSPAPER ADS

Drumwright, Okla.—The Idle Hour Theatre gave a new twist to its popularity contest that engrossed the whole town.

A loving cup advertised as a donation from Gloria Swanson was to be the first prize to be awarded during the run of "Prodigal Daughters." This was completely sold through a tie-up with the Drumwright Derrick, the local daily.

No sooner was the idea launched than a second cup for the second most popular girl was announced as the gift of Tommy Meighan to be awarded during the run of "The Ne'er Do Well." Both cups were on display in a local jeweler's to prove that they were there.

George Gambrill, Paramount exploiter who handled the stunt, had a novel method of collecting ballots. Anybody wishing to nominate his favorite girl simply wrote the name across the Idle Hour ad in the paper and mail the clippings to the newspaper.

CLOCK FACE SUPPORTSTHIS TEASER COPY

Pittsburgh—A clock was the motif for the advertising matter on "The Last Moment" in the campaign staged by the State Theatre, Pittsburg. Newspaper ads used the clock face in small teaser displays, lines such as "Hold your breath. The Last Moment is coming," being lettered across the clock design. Each day the teaser lines were changed but always the clock face was featured.

The idea also served for some co-operative advertising with a drug store, which displayed clocks in a window hook up with the presentation of the Goldwyn production at the State. To put across the thrill feature of "The Last Moment" it was advertised in the lobby that owing to the "weird work done by the 'Thing' children under 12 should not see the picture."

PATHE NOVELTY A HIT

Reports from Pathe of numerous requests for the Ben Turpin cross-eyed false face novelties, forming part of the exploitation material prepared for "Where's My Wandering Boy This Evening," which is the first of the Mack Sennett comedies to be offered by Pathe, indicate that this device has "caught on" with many exhibitors for special appeal to the children. In addition to the false face the Pathe Exploitation department has prepared a trailer; a slide; one, six and three-sheets; a set of eight 11x14 sepias and five black and white lobby cards; and one and two column newspaper cuts, for this release.

BOY BALLYHOO GOES BIG

Milton, Me.—A boy imitator of Charlie Chaplin aroused untold interest for First National's "Pay Day" at the Acme Theatre. The youngster would perambulate the streets with very officious pay envelopes. At prominent intersections he would stop and start to open one, the acting being necessarily natural to attract attention. At the opportune moment when a crowd had gathered he would suddenly clutch the envelope, and stuff it in his pocket, trailing off down the block.

In his wake floated a vivid banner that read "You are hereby invited to come to the Acme Theatre tonight and tomorrow afternoon and night to see what Charles Chaplin gets in his pay envelope."

LLOYD GOGGLES GO FAST

An effective idea was sprung by the Kingston, N. Y., Leader, with the co-operation of Mr. Gildersleeve of the Keeney Theatre and the Opera House.

The Leader carried a story, to the boys and girls of the town, requesting them to call at its office and receive free of charge,

ProfitableEXPLOITATION

a pair of Harold Lloyd goggles. The kiddies needed but one call and stormed the office of the Leader. In less than a week, 1000 goggles had been distributed. A similar tie-up was made by the Leader and Mr. Gildersleeve sometime before in conjunction with Harold Lloyd's "A Sailor Made Man."

HOME MOVIE TALENTSCORES ANOTHER HIT

The theory that exhibitors as a rule are averse to exploiting is not born out by facts. The general experience proves that they will be only too ready to assimilate an exploitable idea. An example of this was shown recently in the Home Talent Movie idea sponsored by the Strand Theatre, and the Times of Van Wert., O.

The paper had accepted for publication the series of Madge Bellamy syndicated articles, including one "Are You Fit for the Movies?" They played up features of film life generally and emphasized things like make up, the art of acting, story, directors, etc.

Taking advantage of the interest created in pictures by this series the Times, in conjunction with the Strand Theatre, sprang its home talent front page idea. There were at least a dozen competitors for each part and the entries looked like a crowd on the seashore on an August day. All because the idea had been furnished to do little exploiting.

OPPORTUNITY AND SOME CARDS

Jacksonville, Fla.—C. D. Haug, Metro exploitation man, answered the summons when opportunity knocked, and got some good publicity for the showing of "Trailing African Wild Animals" at the Republic Theatre here. The merchants had announced the decision to close all shops for a half day each week starting in July. The plan was so desirable to the merchants, however, that they just couldn't wait for July and on short notice initiated the closed shop idea in June. Haug was ready for the short notice and had hangers printed "Gone to see Martin Johnson's wild animal picture at the Republic Theatre." Many people not advised of the closing who visited the stores were therefore given an impressive reminder about the Republic and the attraction there.

MILTON SCALES THE HEIGHTS

Milton Crandall, Hodkinson representative, scaled the heights of exploitation when he made a whale climb up the precipitous slopes of Pikes Peak and perch atop the hill that has gained fame through its elevation of fourteen—count 'em—thousand feet above the surface of the sea. The whale was made of the best compo board obtainable in the State of Colorado and it sported snappy lines about "Down to the Sea in Ships" on its bulky sides. The event was marked by suitable celebration and attended by crowds, among which were newspaper representatives.

SAY IT WITH CORN FLAKES

Harrisburg, Pa.—Eli Orowitz, Paramount Exploiter, and P. Majaro, manager of the New Regent Theatre, tied up with the Kellogg Breakfast Food Co. to exploit "Bella Donna" and Pola Negri. Fifteen thousand samples with theatre billing printed on them were passed out in conjunction with this picture.

PLUNKETT PUTS RURALSTUFF ON BROADWAY

New York.—Managing Director Joseph Plunkett bent every effort to make the showing of "Main Street" at the Strand a success, and made good use of several stunts that are worth repetition by other exhibitors.

Following along the lines suggested by the title of the novel, Plunkett staged a hayride for the entire staff of Snyder Hat Company, New York. The personnel of the Snyder Hat Company is composed of mostly girls, and Plunkett had them all arrayed in gingham frocks and sunbonnets.

Mr. Plunkett's prologue for "Main Street," was a typical scene of a small town grocery store front. Into the scene came a rube character playing a harmonica. Suddenly another rube joins him doing a clog dance. Four other rubes follow in a few moments, and they all join in a little harmony of old time songs. Several girls in gingham contributed the dancing and the quartette wind up the act by singing as they walk off—the lights gradually fading into night—while on the door step lazily sits a rube.

STIRS INTEREST WITHAMATEUR PROLOGUE

Buffalo, N. Y.—When "Souls for Sale" was shown at B. F. Keith's Prospect Theatre the picture was advertised in advance by having local residents impersonate the various stars appearing in that photoplay. The stage was made to represent the home of Rupert Hughes in Hollywood at which a number of film players were attending a party. The person adjudged to have given the best impersonation at each performance was awarded a prize.

WIN WITH A HAIR COMB

Hagerstown, Md.—Something new in contests has been sprung by Leslie F. Whelan, Washington Paramount Exploiter, for "Bella Donna" when the picture played at the Palace Theatre, Hagerstown.

"For the girl who could beat Pola Negri's hair-comb, a prize!" And the papers carried it for days preceding the run of "Bella Donna" at the Palace. Of course the local paper, the Daily Mail, co-operated with the theatre in this, and three prizes were offered.

Girls with or without sweethearts, but with an abundance of hair presented themselves to the box-office, and showed off "woman's crowning glory" to the amazed but happy judges.

TIES WAGON TO MARBLES STARS

St. Louis, Mo.—Ed Olmstead was on his toes. He discovered that the sporting pages of the papers were full of the marble championship meet being held in the city. Since Paramount's "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" is the story of a two-family feud having its inception in a game of marbles, the enterprising publicity director for the Missouri Theatre hooked up a lot of free space by donating passes to the finalists in the tournament.

WOMEN ENDORSE "MRS. FAIR"

Baltimore.—The Century Theatre staged an advance showing of "The Famous Mrs. Fair" for the Federation of Women's Club in this city and from its president, Mrs. H. Matthew Gault, received the following endorsement:

"We feel this is a very worthy picture in every respect, and extremely well acted. The subject is timely and will always create great interest, because of the differences of opinion in the final analysis—not only between men and women, but among women."

Rusticity is remote enough from Broadway to make hay-wagons and carry-alls sufficiently startling to qualify as ballyhoo. Hence the contraptions shown at the right above. They carry the message of "Main Street" at the Strand. Also they conveyed jolly parties of fan magazine, trade paper and sundry scribes from the Warner Brothers offices to the theatre for a viewing of the picture and thence to Central Park's most famous inn, where there was more jollity. At the right is the faithful ambuling book which did duty in front of the theatre.

Disregarding even the municipal mandate a pair of lions parked themselves on the streets of Hutchinson, Kansas, in front of the theatre presenting Metro's wild animal picture "Trailing African Wild Animals." This is the sort of ballyhoo every press writer once advocated as the very essence of exploitation. It's good, no doubt. Try it some time at your theatre.

Covered wagons are in vogue now. This prairie schooner carried extra sail made up of a Pathe 24-sheet on the Ruth Roland serial picture, which was thus exploited in Oklahoma City by the Folly Theatre. If serials have appeal and are worth showing they certainly should be grateful as exploitation subjects. Building up interest in the first should mean a return that comes in for the fifteen or eighteen shows which follow.

Jackie Coogan again aids the cause of charity. A big campaign for the First National offering "Daddy" was staged in Los Angeles. An important item was the charity arrangement whereby the Salvation Army received wagon-loads of clothing. The presentation of the picture at Loew's State Theatre started off with a special performance at which a bundle of old clothes was the price of admission—the receipts going to the Army. The affair was backed by the socially prominent and commanded a hearty response.

More echoes of New York's Silver Jubilee. The gilded coach in which Arline Booth drove in the parade. It did not overlook the fact that people would be looking on and therefore carried a card announcing Marion Davies in "Little Old New York." Miss Booth plays a role in the Cosmopolitan production of the stage play.

Display for First National's "Mighty Lak' a Rose" at the Strand Theatre, Cincinnati. The checkered border design for title and poster panels fits into the scheme of the house as well or perhaps better than a floral motif.

When Mrs. Martin Johnson posed with a native African lady in a scene tellingly contrasting the hose worn by the two different types, she blessed the exploitation men. Here is a "Holeproof Hosiery" tie-up in the window of a Hutchinson, Kansas, store which featured the showing of Metro's "Trailing African Wild Animals."

The co-operative newspaper spread obtained by the Hippodrome Theatre, Gloversville, N. Y., for the presentation of the Warner Brothers screen version of "Brass."

Manager Charles F. McManus of the Colonial Theatre, Tacoma, gave a public demonstration of motion picture projection in a store window as a special exploitation stunt for Goldwyn's "The Christian." A small screen was banked with palms and flowers and a machine projected scenes from the films. Various operations in the performance were illuminated by the showing of explanatory cards. It looks as though the McManus stunt had an appeal.

This three column display was a blend of two of the Goldwyn ads for "Souls for Sale," an arrangement which at first blush makes it seem a double bill announcement.

The photoplay edition of "Main Street" featured in a Chicago book store in conjunction with the showing of Warner Brothers screen edition at the Roosevelt Theatre. Advertising aids put out by the Warner exploitoin department were used in the display.

"The Ninety and Nine," gets one of its best lobby displays to date at the Plaza Theatre, Wheeling, West Virginia. The Vitagraph 24's were used as a "cyc" for the box office locomotive. Broken timbers represented in compo board helped to bring the background and the engine into closer relation.

Two phases of the same feature. At the State Theatre, Pittsburgh, Goldwyn's "The Last Moment," was featured with some striking cutouts and framed posters as a sensation of "Love, Chills, Thrills, Mystery, Danger," etc. Ascher's Merrill in Milwaukee filled its regular display space over the entrance with a seascape produced in cutout and labeled it a "thrilling story of adventure on L and and Sea."

A drawing contest that drew. This is Manager Elmer E. Benescer's gang photographed outside the Bell Theatre, Chicago. The stunt was an offer of passes to the makers of the best sketches of Jackie Coogan. The drawings were filmed and shown on the screen. There was a parade of all the entrants as an additional ballyhoo for First National's "Daddy" at the Bell Theatre.

A niche in the wall over the canopy of the Crown Theatre, New Haven, Conn., comes in handy now and then for the display of posters, a use to which it was put when Paramount's "Adam's Rib," was played by manager Walter Murphy. The poster was illuminated by footlights.

The MODERN THEATRE

Building—Equipping—Operating

ONE often wonders how plays were given by light from flickering candles which had to be snuffed frequently and which did not permit any variation whatever in the intensity or color of illumination, yet, some of the masterpieces of drama originated in those days. For lighting effects, gas was but little better, although by careful adjustment of the stopcocks, variations in intensity could be had.

Needless to say that when the incandescent lamp became available, its advantages for stage lighting were at once recognized and almost instantaneously it came into universal use. Its introduction marked the birth of a new art of staging, due to the ease of control, the ability to get much more light from a given space, the remarkable safety and adaptability to color modification.

The various periods of the day, flashing lightning, moving clouds, fire, sand-storms, rain, snow, fog, running water, and dashing waves are among the hundreds of effects now successfully accomplished with the aid of electric lighting.

Light is probably the most valuable single medium available to the stage manager for creating the desired psychological effects and holding the attention of his audience. The stage director of today realizes that color and directional effects are his very best means of securing artistic results, but the use of color in the stage is not entirely modern. Valerius Maximus writing in 78 B. C. says that yellow, red and blue awnings were often stretched over the large theatres and fluttering, dyed the assemblage with the colors of the transmitted light.

Stage lighting in general exemplifies many of the principles of correct illumination, for instance, we never see a brilliant glaring light source on the stage. Footlights, border lights, floods, etc., are invisible to the audience. The stage manager knows that unshielded lamps distract the eye. When he finds it necessary to have a chandelier, portable lamp or bracket fixture as part of the setting, he is clever enough to provide merely enough light in this to render it luminous and does not depend on it for any actual A single glaring light will destroy the effect of the most pleasing set. In order that the picture may appear natural the mechanism of the lighting is entirely concealed from view. One does not even see the reflector or lamp housings. They are "masked" by some part of the scenery. In spite of this, full advantage of the possibilities of light are not yet universally realized.

Decidedly more subtle effects are coming into use as new equipment is developed and as the fundamentals become better understood. Until quite recently, if an outdoor scene was to be reproduced, there was generally a back drop with a landscape and painted blue sky, a few trees as wings with cut-out foliage and even some painted clouds as borders. Now, in some instances, the stage artist constructs a cupola in the shape of a quarter sphere over the entire stage. He makes this of white material and

"paints" it with blue light for the sky, then projects moving clouds and a rainbow if desired on the blue background and a landscape panorama on the lower portion. Similarly, interior sets are reproduced by using plain white drops and throwing the picture of the room on these by an adaptation of the old fashioned "magic lantern."

In order to supply lighting on the stage, it is necessary to know what mechanisms are available of standard for stage lighting, how they operate, what they can do, why they are useful and how they can be applied. With a knowledge of these features one then can adapt standard equipment to the requirements of a particular problem.

At best, stage lighting is a "cut and try" proposition, and its solution cannot be had by following any set rules. Experience in the handling of light and lighting apparatus is an essential as in no other field. One must have the light just where it is wanted, just when it is wanted. For an artistic production, the distribution must be accurately controlled, and skillful manipulation of dimming devices, following every line of the play or movement, is necessary.

Standard equipment probably will not always fill the bill, and in many instances it is necessary to construct special apparatus. To prevent light reaching certain parts of the stage "louvers" or "spill shields" are essential. Obviously these have to meet particular conditions and must be made "on the job." Where reflecting devices are in use, it may be desirable to secure a modification in distribution.

In planning stage lighting, one should keep in mind the general principles of the action of colored light on colored objects, as discussed in a later section. By the application of these principles one set can be used for two or more scenes by manipulation of lights, avoiding the necessity for changing scenery. For many types of productions very little painted scenery is necessary. Colored lights can be used to obtain all the effects desired. It will be found that much more artistic and subtle gradations of tint are possible than when the attempt is made to produce these by the brush. Ingenuity, appreciation of the fundamental principles and experimentation are necessary.

As pointed out later, colored lighting can be obtained by a number of methods. At present, where relatively small lamps are employed, the dipped bulb is the most generally applicable, although there are prospects that glass color caps for this purpose may soon be available. For equipments using the large lamps, the gelatin or glass color screen is necessary.

The desirable equipment for a stage will depend on the type of production likely to be given. In the smaller assembly room, economic considerations prevent the installation of elaborate equipment. Fig. 2 and 3 indicate suggested arrangements for some typical conditions. In this connection, it must be remembered that the effects possible are directly dependent on the amount of equipment available for use. If one hopes to duplicate the production given in the large theatres in the auditorium, he must have at his command a sufficient number of circuits, flexible control and a means of supporting auxiliary apparatus. He will be seriously handicapped if inadequate wiring or crowded conditions prevent the installation of such special devices as may be necessary.

For certain types of productions, one should reproduce as nearly as possible lighting conditions as they exist in nature and at the same time enable the audience to see clearly the actors and setting. On the other hand, many of the stagings of the present day are what might be termed an imaginary type and it is even possible to improve on natural lighting by skilfully applied artificial illumination. No doubt some of the most pleasing results are secured when bizarre effects are attempted and combinations of colors used which do not exist in nature. In doing this, one is not violating any of the fundamental principles, but merely taking advantage of the available media for expression and producing something interesting, striking and pleasing to the eye.

To accomplish these things, it is necessary to have available light of various colors from many different directions and facilities for changing the direction of light, as well as for the quantity or intensity.

Stage lighting devices may be divided in two main groups, those for providing general illumination and those for providing localized lighting. In the first group fall the foot, strip, proscenium and border lights; in the second, the bunch and spot lights and effect machines or sciopticons.

Footlights

The footlights direct a rather strong light from below which intensifies the facial expression and assists to a great degree in holding the attention of the audience. However, such lighting tends to reverse natural shadows and while still an important factor, is much more subdued than in the early days of the art. Some of the most artistic productions of recent years have been well lighted without the use of footlights. It is doubtful whether this practice should be universally applied and it is always well to provide suitable footlights for use when necessary. The actor must take into consideration whether or not strong footlighting is in use and adjust the make-up to compensate for the reversal of shadow effects.

The footlights in common use a few years ago consisted of a sheet trough painted white and fitted with porcelain receptacles close together. In many cases the design of this was given but little consideration and the distribution of light secured was not of the most desirable character, in other instances the lamps were visible to persons sitting in the balcony. Such equipment is open to severe criticism. An inverted form of footlight with the lamps burning base up and concealed by an overhanging ledge was sometimes used to overcome these difficulties. But with either type, colored lamps were mingled promiscuously and purity of color was out of the question for much of the light was modified in passing through adjacent bulbs, either directly or after being reflected.

Atmosphere

The stirring strains of "Aida" were chosen by Victor Schertzinger as the musical accompaniment for one of the screen's greatest epics of recent years. The martial swing of that overture quickened the pulse of many thousands who awaited the great cinematic spectacle about to unfold before them. If the orchestra had played some recent, popular air, it would have spoiled the whole "atmosphere". Jazz music couldn't be associated with the dignity and magnitude of such a picture.

But music and appropriate lighting are not the only things having a subconscious effect on an audience. The character of the photography as expressed in release prints has more to do with the public's enjoyment of a picture than many realize. The choice of colors in tinting various scenes is a delicate problem. But it is only one of the problems confronting director and cinematographer in seeing that their work is properly presented photographically.

Some of the West's foremost producers have learned through experience that the tempo of the story is best carried through to the screen when the same laboratory develops the negative and makes the release prints, when all this is done under the direct supervision of the men who made the picture. That's why the work of these producers goes through STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES from camera to screen. They have found that STANDARD PRINTS are the best medium of screen expression.

Who's Sol Lesser?

The Story of a Big, Successful Show Man—A Dynamic Young Man of the West Looming Up Large in the Industry—
What He Means to the Industry and What He Has Accomplished

By WILL C. MURPHEY

MEET Sol Lesser—the boy who came out of the west. Observe him closely, for what he has done, what he is doing and what he intends to do will form a mighty colorful picture when the history of the motion picture industry is finally written.

Just at present he is engaged in making productions of the novels of Howard Bell Wright, whose books have had a sale of more than 2,000,000 copies. He announced this week he would start filming the plays of George M. Cohan, the first to be "The Meanest Man in the World."

What Lesser's distribution policy or policies will be concerning these pictures he refused to make known, but it is believed he has a big deal pending which will mark another step forward in independent production and release.

While Lesser is affiliated in an official capacity with Associated First National Pictures Inc., this does not interfere with his own policy of releasing and distributing his product.

This is the day of the independent. The smaller producer of the moment—smaller in comparison with the greater companies—will be the king of tomorrow. And when they start passing around the royal crowns, bet the family jewels here is one man who will be there or thereabouts, mentally and physically alert, his basket on his arm, all set to catch the biggest and brightest diadem in all the glittering galaxy of gorgeous grandeur, as an old time showman would say.

He has done much for independently made pictures, and he is going to do more. He is a firm advocate of the independent producer, and right now he is working on plans that will mean much to the independent field. He feels that the small picture maker is coming into his own. Today, according to Lesser, a majority of the biggest productions are made independently, and it was these men who conceived the first great pictures.

A Dynamic Personality

Time was, he says, when the independent film producer was looked upon with no great amount of credit—his products were classed, more or less, as second rate. That time has vanished, and the independent by his own initiative has forced himself to be recognized absolutely upon the merits of his product.

Lesser came out of the west in a business sense only. Physically he is still in it, of it and with it. So much so that the very dynamic center of all his activities is a little low, rambling house backed up against a drab motion picture lot in the center of that Hollywood phantasmagoria called Filmland. Here, if the weather is not "unusual," which it sometimes is, even if California, he can glimpse from his office window the great Pickford-Fairbanks studios, just a cigarette puff away; and outside in front stretches the gleaming motor trail called Santa Monica, leading to other great studios.

But from this modest building, in a plain office with walls devoid of all starry eyed hours of the hour, pictorial punches, or dainty dewdads, reach the tentacles of a many sided business controlled by as keen a brain as there is in the entire business.

There is a tenacious set, a solidity of purpose, reflected in this small building. It has the atmosphere, the feel of, and is, a workshop. Back of it rambles fifteen acres of ground on which the film magnate expects to raise soon other stages, administration buildings and equipment in an extension plan running into several hundred thousand dollars. Its guiding genius, especially if it is the morning hour, is just as like as not, in riding breeches, for Lesser delights to feed his muscles on the jounce of a thoroughbred.

But once off his horse and inside the door, things begin to happen. Not with the jarring and commotion so common when most picture plants slip into gear. On the contrary so smoothly and quietly that there is scarcely a tremor in the machinery. From that moment Lesser is the busiest man in Hollywood, although he may not look it.

Was Ice Cream Butcher

Who, then, is this boy who came out of the west?

Flash back to Lesser when he was a lad of fourteen selling ice cream cones in the Mission Theatre, San Francisco, owned by his father, Simeon Lesser. It was his first business venture, and it is recorded that he sold them so successfully that today at thirty-two years of age, he is president of Principal Pictures Corporation, a $5,000,000 organization; vice-president of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the first producer ever to be elected an official of that organization; vice-president of West Coast Theatres Inc., controlling 168 theatres in California; President of All-Star Feature Productions; president of All-Star Distributing Corporation and president of Golden Gate Film Exchange, the largest distributing organization west of Chicago.

Quite an armful of titles for one man to carry and get away with it successfully. But titles may mean much or little depending entirely on who is wearing them. In the case of Lesser they mean that most of the organizations in which he holds an official position were either founded by him or owe their growth and successful position today to his energy, foresight and willingness to back his judgment by quick decisions which some persons would call "hunches."

Very well, Sol Lesser acts on hunches. He admits it.

It was one of these hunches that gave Jackie Coogan to the screen. Lesser had seen only a half reel of "The Kid" when he made up his mind that the boy was a find. The next morning he had him signed. Result—the biggest money maker known in motion picture history. Every producer knew Chaplin had a wonderful kid in the new picture he was making. The tip was general that someone ought to get him. But they waited. Lesser didn't, and "Oliver Twist," the last Coogan picture released, was on a $1,500,000 exhibition value. "Circus Days," his next, will be on a $2,000,000 valuation. Norma Talmadge's "Smiling Through" is the only other production ever released by First National at that figure.

By the way, during the Coogan production, Lesser made no distribution deal for the series but dealt individually with each picture through First National. For it was clearly understood when he accepted the vice-presidency of that organization, that his connection and official position did not bind him up to release with the organization. However all of the Coogan pictures to date have been First National releases.

Remember Cabiria?

If you should happen to meet this young man coming down the steps of one of his favorite banks some morning, and he is in a communicative mood, he may tell you that a hunch laid the foundation of his financial success long before the Coogan triumph. "Cabiria" did the trick. It was the second big picture sent over here. He saw a few of the opening scenes, and purchased the rights to fourteen states. At that time persons along film row in San Francisco thought he had gone mad. But the financial reports from the giant purchase proved his judgment was correct, and he had started out with a hunch that ran to form.

It was the same with "Hearts of the World." Griffith had the picture finished, but not sold, and he needed money to go ahead with others he planned. He was dickering with a big distributor, who saw the picture through, shook his head and cautiously said he "did not know," he would have to see it again.

After the second showing he had arrived at no conclusion, and Griffith was sweating, for getting it over with this man meant much. Finally he asked to have his wife see it, and then David W. did a little thinking. He knew Lesser had put over "Cabiria," and cleaned up. So he had a little hunch of his own, and asked Lesser to look at it. It is not on record that the distributor's wife ever even had a chance to view the film, for Lesser just looked at one reel, and bought the rights to thirty states. Later, at one time, he controlled the entire country.

Much of the same procedure occurred with "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." In this he joined hands with Mack Sennett, put out the Mack Sennett bathing girls, later roadshowed it with thirty-six companies, and wrote $2,000,000 profit.

Pretty good hunches and they never have failed. Everything he has touched has turned out a success. The signing of Annette Kellerman was a quick decision, and the same for George Beban. Lesser works that way. Perhaps he will be passing a telegraph office, and the idea occurs to him that he wants a certain star or a story. Into the office, away with a telegram, and it is done insofar as his end of it is concerned.

Only recently companies were dickering for the services of June Marlowe, whose star is in the ascendancy. They refused to meet her terms and were holding off. Lesser saw her, had a hunch that she was a "comer," and not only met the figure she asked, but raised it and obtained her signature then and there. Miss Marlowe is now a member of Principal Pictures. Big things are predicted for the young woman.

All of his success is due to the fact that what he was he is and what he is he always will be. Persons who know him past and present, will volunteer that he was a distributor who still distributes, an exhibitor who remains a showman, and finally a producer who at present is planning big things with both the artistic and box office in mind. Of course, this has been promised many times before, but there is a general impression that Lesser will do it.

Genius For Finance

He is still more than the above. Possessing a genius for finance, and a business head relied on to settle many disputes that occur in the industry outside of his own interests, he is regarded as one of the keenest exhibitors in the show business who is constantly being consulted upon big problems. Further he has an aptitude for thinking in dramatic terms; a pictorial mind able to see a story from the author's view and maintain the show value.

Harold Bell Wright considers him one man, outside of the writing profession, able to translate thought into action in a manner to give the picture the right dramatic touch with the idea of the author carried into movement—a fairly fine compliment from a writer of this author's standing.

The few acorns that Lesser had when he was fourteen years old in the way of ideas, he proceeded to plant, and his fine crop of oaks today is the result. Following his venture in ice cream cones, he began buying old film, patching it up and selling it abroad. "Junk" it was called, but the important thing is that the boy, then sixteen, did it so well that the "junk" was bought.

His first venture as a distributor was the organization of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, now All-Star Features Distributing Corporation, handling more films each year than any one organization west of the Windy City. From this beginning he became one of the largest buyers of state rights in the country, and was soon recognized as such an astute judge of picture values that producers were flocking to him with their output. He never purchased less than twenty states at a time, and very often the entire country.

Having put away a fairly presentable nest egg, Lesser began looking around for its mate. He came to Los Angeles in 1918, where he bought the Kinema Theatre from T. W. Tally, his first theatre. Then came his venture with "Hearts of the World" and "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." The golden egg now had a couple of mates who needed an airing, and their owner began looking around for something really worth while, as he puts it. So he induced A. L. and M. Gore to join with him in the purchase of several other theatres which resulted in a circuit now known as West Coast Theatres Inc., which, with the Turner and Dahruken chain in San Francisco, has grown in five years to a circuit of 168 houses.

Then Into Production

Followed next his entrance into the production end. His first venture was Annette Kellerman in "What Women Love," and the organization of Principal Pictures Corporation. The picture went over so big that he signed George Beban and starred him in "One Man in a Million." His production activities at that time occasioned a little uneasiness among the other franchise holders of First National. Lesser was one of the original twenty-six members of the big distributing organization, and there was a feeling that no franchise holder should make his own pictures.

But Lesser again took the reins in his hands and was the first in the circle to enter the production field, followed closely by Joe Schenck. This brought about considerable unfavorable criticism, but the wisdom of the step has since been recognized by First National, which is now in the production business as an organization.

It was in his capacity as First National's representative in the west that he was permitted to attend a pre-view of "The Kid," and the signing of Coogan followed. Coogan is not now with Lesser owing to business differences, but he likes to feel that he made the most appealing pictures, that the boy will ever appear in. Bigger pictures? Yes. But the real appeal, of Jackie with his torn trousers, buttonless shirts, funny caps and contagious grin. Lesser thinks, belong to the days when the industry's best bet was under his direction.

Lesser plans to go a long way with Principal Pictures. Just how far only he knows, and he is not given to handing out information concerning his plans until he is ready for action. He has a vision that grasps the completed enterprise and leaves the details to adjust themselves as he proceeds. But one thing he will do—make big novels and plays into worth while pictures, and make them as they are written into practical show length. His first step in this line are Wright's "When a Man's a Man," now nearing completion to be followed by "The Winning of Barbara Worth." Seven other Wright novels are on the program.

Wright's novels are regarded as difficult to screen. Writers have decided that there is a deal of thought and character analysis in them hard to picturize. Here is where the picture mind of Lesser comes in. His formula for getting what he wants is to go into session with Wright, the continuity writer, and, maybe one or two others whose opinion he values. First the story is taken up as a whole, its general treatment discussed, and an outline made. Then comes the detail. Lesser is there from beginning to end. Everything goes swimmingly for awhile, and then comes a difficult scene. The subtleties of plot become involved. The author's idea must be put across with finesse of action in order to bring out its value. Probabaly everyone has a suggestion, but they do not seem just right.

"Here, we'll do it this way," Lesser breaks in.

"That's all right, Mr. Lesser," he is reminded, "but it really can't be done."

Immediately he shows how it can be done, why it should be done and it is done, unless someone can come forward with a better idea.

It isn't because he has the final say, for he is wide open to suggestion and willing to listen to anybody. But he knows what he wants, and knowing what he wants has counted largely in his success. The result is when the scene is shot, everyone concerned is satisfied that Lesser was right. Mr. Wright's remark concerning the producer's ability to translate thought into action is proof that he satisfies thought into—a difficult accomplishment.

Handling his business, Lesser is more concerned in the success of a deal that he is in the money it brings him. He is more interested in making pictures worth while than he is in the dollars that will come over the counter. Just the same he is keeping an eagle eye on production to see that it carries audience value, for having been an exhibitor and distributor, he knows this is essential.

Outside of business Lesser is a man of family, a good citizen and loves his west. He dabbles in California real estate and is interested in the development of the Wil-shirt section in Hollywood, where he has a fine home looking out on the boulevard, occupied by Mrs. Lesser, and a fine boy of seven and girl of six. Being a good citizen he has taken notice of Los Angeles traffic congestion, probably the worst in the world, and is preparing to present a traffic system to the city for its relief—something on the order of that introduced by Dr. Harris in New York.

When most men of means are doing nothing outside of the nothing they usually do, they seize a golf stick, a motor wheel, or a trout rod to obtain a kick. Lesser is interested in the Los Angeles riding academy, owns the finest stable of horses in Southern California, and is regarded as one of the best riders in the district. Up on a bang-tail he gets what he needs to make him what he is.

This, then, is Sol Lesser the boy who came out of the west; keen business man, able citizen, good sport and gentleman.

Watch his smoke.

A Lawyer-Exhibitor's Analysis Of the Uniform Contract

In this, the second installment of his report Bernard Edelhertz analyzes Clauses from 7 on.

By BERNARD EDELHERTZ

The seventh clause of the Uniform Contract is a very significant clause and should be carefully studied. It provides as follows:

"In the event of default of the Exhibitor in exhibiting or paying for any photoplays in accordance with the provisions hereof or if the Exhibitor shall exhibit or permit the exhibition of any of said photoplays at any time or place other than those above specified, the Distributor may at its option terminate this contract or suspend the delivery of additional photoplays hereunder until such defaults shall cease and be remedied, but the election of either of said remedies shall be without prejudice to any of the rights of remedies of the Distributor in the premises by reason of such breach. In the event of the intentional violation by the Distributor of any protection or "Run" clause contained in this contract, or in the event of the intentional default of the Distributor in delivering any photoplay to the Exhibitor hereunder and while such last-mentioned default continues, the Exhibitor may at his option terminate this contract by giving immediate notice in writing to the Distributor, but the election of such remedy shall be without prejudice to any other rights or remedies of the Exhibitor in the premises by reason of such breach. No waiver by either party of any breach or default by the other party shall be construed as a waiver of any subsequent breach or default by such other party.

Note carefully the mutual remedies provided for both parties in the event of a breach of the contract or the violation of any terms of the contract. According to the old forms of contract it was always the distributor who was entitled to certain remedies if the exhibitor violated any provisions of the contract. In this clause of the Uniform Contract both parties have mutual remedies in the event of a violation or breach of the terms of the contract.

The eighth clause of the Uniform Contract deals with the selection or designation of play dates. On the first reading this clause appears somewhat cumbersome and confusing in its phraseology, but the subject dealt with in this clause presented a very difficult problem. A great deal of time has been spent on this particular clause until something tangible has been agreed upon. The main purpose of this clause, of course, is to prevent as far as possible the holding up of pictures because of prior runs. It has been found in the past that many pictures could not be played by subsequent runs because the prior runs failed to give dates for unreasonable lengths of times. As a result of this practice, by the time the picture was available for subsequent runs it was absolutely stale and exhibitors in many instances were subjected to great losses. By the provision of this clause, after a picture has been once released, the prior runs must give dates within a specified length of time, so that the subsequent runs can avail themselves of the earliest possible dates so as to play the picture while the public interest in it is still maintained. In connection with this clause it is significant to note that while under the old form of contract an exhibitor could be held up for an indefinite length of time, under the provision of this clause as soon as the picture is released the subsequent runs are entitled to have play dates within a specified time.

In the ninth clause there is a provision that all reissues from old negatives, or old negatives that have been renamed must be specifically described as such.

I would like to invite your particular attention to the tenth and eleventh clauses of the Uniform Contract.

The tenth clause reads as follows:

"If prevented by censorship, fire, or similar damage by the elements, riots, insurrections, acts of God or the public enemy, public calamity, or the order of any Court of competent jurisdiction which shall prevent the performance of this contract by the Exhibitor, the latter shall not be liable for damages of any kind, nature or description, but the Exhibitor shall give prompt notice to the Distributor of his inability to perform said contract and the reason therefor." This clause specifically enumerates certain instances on the happening of which, the exhibitor is excused from the performance of the contract, and is not subject to liability for damages of any kind, nature or description.

It is needless for me to state here, that in no form of contract heretofore in existence was there ever any clause or even any statement to the effect that the exhibitor was exempt from liability for failure to perform the contract under any circumstances or conditions. It is true that in many instances the producer or distributor would act leniently with an exhibitor who was unable to perform the contract through no fault on his part. But the exercise of this leniency was merely a matter resting entirely with the distributor or producer and conferred no legal right of any kind on the exhibitor.

Under ordinary legal interpretation of all forms of contracts heretofore in existence, the exhibitor was bound to perform his part under any and all circumstances and conditions.

The tenth clause of the contract, however, gives the exhibitor certain rights which are not dependent on the good-will or disposition of the distributor or producer.

The eleventh clause reads as follows:

"This contract shall not be assigned by either party without the written acceptance of the assignee and the written consent of the other party; provided, that if the Exhibitor sells or disposes of his interest in the theatre above specified, he may assign this contract to the purchaser of such interest without the written consent of the Distributor and such assignment shall become effective upon the written acceptance thereof by the assignee, such assignment, however, not to relieve the Exhibitor of his liability hereunder. This privilege of assignment without the consent of the Distributor shall not apply to contracts not to be performed within one year."

There can be no question that the adoption of the eleventh clause in the Uniform Contract is of incalculable value to the exhibitors of the country. I venture to say, that the adoption of this clause means the preservation of hundreds of motion picture theatres that could not have operated successfully or profitably without the operation of a clause containing a provision, which makes it possible for a purchaser of a theatre to refuse to accept all film contracts which the prior owner signed for the theatre in question.

The practice in vogue before the adoption of this clause was to the effect that once a film contract was signed by a theatre owner it became a mortgage on the theatre, and no matter in whose hands the theatre was found the exchange could always enforce the performance of the contract, in every instance proceeding against the theatre and not against the owner of the theatre. This practice resulted in the gravest kind of injustice, sometimes making the theatre absolutely valueless because some owner has burdened the theatre with a number of worthless contracts. This injustice resulted in many instances, because the exchanges would permit a theatre owner to sign up any number of contracts which the theatre owner could not perform for a long time. Furthermore, the exchanges would be lax in enforcing the performance of the contract and permit the same to run along until the pictures contracted for would become stale and useless, but as soon as the theatre was transferred to some new owner the exchanges would immediately descend upon the new owner with demands that all of the contracts signed for by the prior owner should be performed.

The eleventh clause of the Uniform Contract abolishes this practice and gives the purchaser of a theatre the right to elect, whether or not he desires to assume the liability for all contracts signed for by the prior owner. Unless the purchaser of a theatre consents in writing to do so he cannot be held liable on any contracts signed for by the previous owner.

I have already referred to the twelfth clause.

The thirteenth clause deals with Government taxes.

The fourteenth clause with percentage bookings.

The fifteenth clause with admission fees. The sixteenth clause with advertising matter, and the seventeenth clause with advance payments.

As regards these clauses, it should be born in mind that the Uniform Contract was drawn not only for the State of New York, but for the entire United States, and some of these clauses, for instance, like the advance payment clause or the percentage clause have no particular significance so far as the State of New York is concerned, yet they are of great importance to the distributor and producer in various other parts of the country where conditions are altogether different from these that prevail in the State of New York.

The Uniform Contract committee was obliged to take these facts into consideration when discussing all these provisions. We could not say to the representatives of the distributors and producers that the contract should be drawn with such provisions as would be applicable only to the State of New York. We had to bear in mind that in certain parts of the country one or the other of these clauses, which may be superfluous here in the state of New York, would be of great importance to the distributor in some other parts of the country.

We now come to the eighteenth clause of the Uniform Contract which reads as follows:

"No promises or representations have been made by either party to the other except as set forth herein. This agreement shall be deemed an application for a contract only and shall not become binding until accepted in writing by an officer of the Distributor and notice of acceptance sent to the Exhibitor as hereinafter provided. The deposit by the Distributor of the check or other consideration given by the Exhibitor at the time of application as payment on account of any sums payable hereunder shall not be deemed an acceptance hereof by the Distributor.

Unless notice of acceptance of this application by the Distributor is sent to the Exhibitor by mail or telegraph within the following periods after the date of application, to-wit, seven (7) days if the Exhibitor's theatre is located in the City of New York, Essex, Hudson or Bergen Counties, New Jersey or Westchester County, New York, ten (10) days if said theatre is located elsewhere East of the Mississippi and twenty-five (25) days if located West of the Mississippi, said application shall be deemed withdrawn and the Distributor shall forthwith return any sums paid on account thereof by the Exhibitor.

A copy of this application, signed by the Exhibitor, shall be left with the Exhibitor at the time of signing, and in the event of acceptance thereof as above provided a duplicate copy, signed by the Distributor, shall be forwarded to the Exhibitor."

This clause practically revolutionizes the manner of acceptance of a contract between exhibitor and distributor in the Motion Picture industry. Prior to the adoption of the Uniform Contract it has been the universal custom to consider the exhibitor bound to perform all the conditions of the contract signed by him as soon as he attached his signature to the contract. The Distributor was given the privilege of accepting or rejecting the contract within 14 days from the date of the signing of the contract. This method of acceptance of a contract gave rise to numerous abuses on the part of distributors, by permitting them to peddle around the product sold to one exhibitor, trying to get a higher price, from his competitors.

The concluding article will be published next week.

How Healey combined his jazz artist, Gertrude Beck and "Jazzmania," during the hot season and gave Pittsfield a Summertime treat.

Nothing is more appealing in hot weather than Western costumes so these Rialto usherettes of Omaha helped put over "The Girl of the Golden West."

Some Summer Time Tonics

*The Pick of Ideas and Stunts Which Showmen
In Various Parts of the Country Are Using*

IF you are fortunate enough to have a theatre whose anniversary takes place during the Summer months you are invited to take all or any part of the Anniversary Week idea put over by Julius K. Johnson of the Rialto, Omaha, Nebraska.

It's all right to say "go ahead, try an anniversary week" but hot weather is no time to give advice and as this is written it's 99 degrees in the shade so the writer is full of hot weather atmosphere. But here is the Johnson anniversary week handed to you with all the details.

The Rialto, for every year during the five that it has been the mecca for Omaha's movie-goers, has stressed its anniversary weeks.

Julius K. Johnson, whose rare abilities as a manager have been responsible for the Rialto's continued success during the last three years, has continued to emphasize and to profit by the Anniversary Week idea. The 1923 anniversary, celebrated last week, was a money-making record breaker.

Fifty bill-board twenty-sheet stands were used for the specially prepared sheets. Little anniversary flags or banners, supplied by the Rialto were used to form a canopy over the sidewalk in front of the theatre, which occupies a prominent corner space downtown. These, together with large banners announcing the Anniversary Week, and the specially painted signs displayed in the arches over the doorways, attracted attention. Unfortunately, the banners had been taken down when the picture of the Rialto front, accompanying this article was taken.

A hand drawn, pen and ink, western scene by Gordon Bennett, Rialto staff artist, was used in special newspaper ads. Two of the city's three big dailies featured the picture, "The Girl of the Golden West," in full page displays of advertisements by firms that had traveling and vacation articles to sell.

The program at the Rialto was such as to make the pictures stand out in their attractiveness to the public, also. Manager Johnson secured Colonel House and his Colorado Cowboy Jazz Orchestra from Denver, Colo., to play during the week. The playing of jazz and operatic numbers by this orchestra, and lighting effects on the stage, decorated with a life-size copy of the old-fashioned transcontinental wagon, settings of sage-brush hedges and a background scene of the desert and mountains, comprised the prologue to the picture.

Manager Johnson tried out another idea which in this case was an unqualified success—that of an usherette review. The girls were in costumes appropriate to the picture, each in a different costume. When the audience was seated, and just before the picture, they marched slowly down the aisle at one side of the house, mounted the steps to the stage, keeping pace with the organ music, and there sang the song, "Mellow Moon." Mr. Johnson played the organ. By using their flashlights held by the girls, and by manipulating the lighting effects in the theatre, some very effective touches were given to the impressiveness of the prologue. The little number by the usherettes was worked up by Manager Johnson, who directed the young ladies in its presentation.

The Rialto prices for admission were increased for these pictures, but that in no way lessened the crowd, despite the fact that the June weather was delightful, the outdoor parks were just opening their summer season, and motoring, backyard gardens, flower beds and other outdoor attractions were at their height.

WHO WANTS TO WAIT IN LINE IN THE HEAT?

It's very nice—from the patron's standpoint—to pick out for a Summer afternoon or night's entertainment where a seat is assured. Summer time is not noted for the long lines at box offices, but most showmen are just pleased if their house is comfortably filled, although they wouldn't kick if a line did appear.

A reserved seat policy to provide seats has been devised by L. H. Raymond, an old time manager, formerly of Fall River, Mass., and he says it works well in the summer time. He describes it as follows:

The shows start at 10:30, 1:30, 4:30, 7:30. The regular roll tickets are sold up to 4:30, when the reserved seats go on sale for the 4:30 and 7:30 o'clock shows. One regular set of reserved seat tickets are used daily. Seats may be on sale as early in advance as the manager desires. Patrons entering for the 4:30 show bring to the usher the regular reserved seat stub. If anyone remains from the previous show in the seat that the stub calls for, then the reserved seat buyer is given a seat as near as possible to the one he purchased.

At 7:30 there are certain to be persons leaving the house, thereby vacating seats taken up by holders of the regular reserved seat ticket for the last night's show. Immediately at the close of the 4:30 show the ushers go through the house and on a small slip of paper mark in spaces designated the row and seat number of all vacated seats. They bring each slip to the head usher, who makes out another slip in much the same manner, then taking all of them to the box office. From 7:30 on these slips are sold with a regular roll ticket. The patron gives the slip bearing the seat location to the usher, who seats him accordingly.

The count or estimate of the day's receipts is made by taking figures from the number on the roll tickets sold for the 10:30 and 1:30 shows; from the check of the regular reserved seat tickets and from the numbers from the roll tickets sold at 7:30 o'clock.

CRAVE JAZZ IN SUMMER—GAVE IT TO THEM

W. J. Healey, one of the country's best known showmen, was traveling recently through Canada when he ran across a young woman in a small time vaudeville act who was creating a big hit as a jazz artist. Healey had a sudden call to take over the management of the Capitol Theatre, Pittsfield, and inject some life into its program.

He recalled the young woman, Gertrude Beck, wired her to come to Pittsfield and put over two weeks of jazz which she did and the house was packed. He played her in conjunction with Mae Murray's Jazzmania and for this reason, in his words:

"Pittsfield is an unusual town. It is an inland city of about 42,000 and in the summer people go to the lakes around the town and patronize the dances heavily. It likes its summertime jazz and we gave it to them strong with beneficial results.

"Now it seems to me that a small town man who has his eye on some performer laying off in the summer time could well afford to jazz up a summer program in this way although I don't advise using vaudeville with pictures as a regular thing."

Mayhew had just fixed up his theatre, and opened it in the summer—which is not often done—and he wanted to build a new interest in the house. So he put the old mimeograph to work and shot out this friendly, inviting letter to the residents of Cisco and neighboring towns:

A SPECIAL IDEA TO ATTRACT ARTIST PATRONS

The average theatre does not cater to a clientele of artists—illustrators, painters and sculptors—because there is only one real artists' colony in the United States, Greenwich Village, New York City. But the Sheridan Square theatre, situated in the heart of the Village, must cater to artists and Managing Director Edwin Emery makes an intensified campaign to reach them.

His weekly combination house organ and program makes a special appeal on its front cover to artists, as is shown in the accom-

WHAT FILM COMEDIANS MUST DO TO GET THE LAUGHS

It's a Lot Harder Than Making Them
Cry Say Some of the Successful Film Fun Makers

By F. H. COBB

MIRTH is more or less spontaneous when an effort to create it is apparently lacking. But once an individual, or a group of individuals, sets out deliberately to make people laugh the process is likely to become a difficult one. The most unctuous comedian is the most successful, as a rule. The time has gone by when mere clowning, unless accompanied by a great artist, can affect the risibilities to any great extent. Witness the gradual loss of effect by the circus clown. His antics are usually as unfunny according to present standards, as the lamentations of a chief mourner at a funeral. The public viewpoint has altered. It has become more subtle. Even the screen comedians have discovered this. Mere custard pie throwing no longer evokes roars of merriment. The idea has been anticipated and discounted by the spectators. But surprise still gets them and a "gag" so-called, which is worked up to with some degree of subtlety and then sprung unexpectedly catches the people off their guard and they laugh spontaneously and in concert.

That is why the comedy stars of today and their directors and scenario writers, rack their assorted brains to think up such gags; it is why screen comedy has become difficult—not so much because people don't want to laugh, or come to a theatre with the attitude of mind which says 'make me laugh, darn you'—as for the reason that audiences are getting more and more clever and harder to fool.

Monty Banks, one of the leading laugh-provokers, who just now is making two-reelers for Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation at the Grand Studio in Hollywood, says that he is constantly asking opinions of everyone with whom he comes in contact.

Even "Props"

"The prop boy, the stenographer, the wardrobe woman or the cameraman may tell you the story is not as funny as you fondly hoped it would be. I am always asking questions. Sometimes I go to a small picture house and watch some comedy. Afterward I listen to comments, as well as during its progress. Frequently I speak to some kindly old lady or some chap who looks like a laboring man; ask them how they liked the comedy. Their replies are frequently illuminating. And believe me, I profit by such information. After all, what makes me laugh may fall flat with the people in front—and they are the arbiters of our fate.

"Back home in Milan, Italy, where I come from, I was always a buffoon. It comes natural to me to do ridiculous things, such as to apparently stumble and fall down over a toothpick on the floor. What was just a boyish prank becomes a serious study in time and while other members of my family were perfecting themselves in the art of music, I was developing a comedy instinct which seemed innate. Later I turned it to practical advantage; I learned how to fall naturally but with apparent force. I became a skater and dancer and applied comedy principals there to. In my comedies nowadays, I am usually the unfortunate, not too brilliant chap, who gets into all kinds of difficulties because he is too confiding, too prone to believe others, and too willing to help others. Oddly the public will laugh at a man in misfortune if it is obviously comedy; they would cry if they thought it was real."

Aerobic skill is almost a requisite to the average comedian's success on the screen. Joe Rock, another of the Grand Studio comedy stars, tells how he fought his way into pictures. "I was an athletic instructor by profession when I decided to try pictures. That was several years ago and I took a letter of introduction from an influential editor to a certain studio. I got a job at $1.50 a day. This lasted three days. Then I gradually got more. One of the first pictures I worked in was a 'drama.' In it was a fight scene in a tough joint, probably supposed to be situated on the Bowery in the good old days. They lined up a dozen men on each side of the room and at a given signal we were to start milling—each picking out an opponent opposite. 'Watch me get that little guy over there' meaning me! He was big enough to eat me. But I had a good punch and when we started instead of going directly at my opponent I made a rush for the big fellow and hit him on the point of the jaw with all my force and down he went. He stayed down, too, for the rest of the scene. That was a memorable scrap. They couldn't stop it after it was begun. I imagine there were several private grudges to be fought out. They wrecked the set and one another. The director finally got tired shooting and let them scrap it out.

Athletics Helped

"I found my athletic ability of great service to me in my comedy work. Always I was called upon to fall off houses, be knocked down, stepped on and maltreated generally. And I was often bruised and sore, but my training stood me in good stead and I was soon hard as nails. Today I don't do quite as much of this kind of thing, because times have changed. But I still have my share of rough work. But slapstick comedy is gradually giving place to a more subtle form. There must be a point—and a building up to that point. Every routine must bear on the main issue and the climax must come as a direct result of this building up. No one man can say just what will create a laugh. Many minds go into the making of a comedy and anyone may hit on the idea which will work up into a great laugh situation. But of course the trained comedy mind knows what to avoid and what is sure fire, so called."

Situation is the thing to work for in comedy,—as in drama, Sid Smith, third of the Grand Studio triumvirate of fun-film stars, has this aphorism:

"The minute a comedian thinks he is funny himself, then is the time for him to start looking for a different kind of work."

He declares that the situation is supreme. "Get a funny situation and anybody can walk through it and get a laugh. But to get more laughs, the greater artist is essential, and by subtle methods he will enhance the value of the situation. But the cleverest comedian will not get any worth while results if the situation in itself lacks humor."

Sid Smith emerged from the boxing game into films but he is a student and takes his work seriously—but not himself—at least not too seriously—which as Elbert Hubbard and others have told us is fatal. He is an expert at making "falls" but does them as naturally as possible. In fact that is his aim—to do things naturally, however absurd they may be. "We think of a gag or a situation," he says, "and we talk it over for a couple of days. Then we go out and shoot it. Then we look at it and cut it and insert the titles. It seems funny to us or the reverse; but already our viewpoint is blunted. We have lived with the thing for several days and our perspective is gone. The public sees only the finished result. If they find it amusing—well and good. If not—curtains for us. That's why it's a difficult problem. Making is no sinecure for anybody concerned."

WHY CLOCKS ARE NOT USED IN NEWLY BUILT HOUSE

The familiar observatory clock seen in most moving picture theatres is conspicuous by its absence in the beautiful auditorium of the new Broadway theatre in Council Bluffs, Ia. Manager Davis has been studying the psychology of the clock in its relation to theatre audiences, and he has come to the conclusion that clocks have a discordant effect on the theatre patron that far outweighs any useful purpose they might serve.

You can get all the fine points of the case of the Movies vs. Clocks by starting a discussion with Manager Davis, but the substance of his argument against the clock is that anything that tends to distract the attention of the patron from the program or interfere in any way with his complete enjoyment of the same should be eliminated if possible.

"In the days of 5 cent movies," said Mr. Davis, "when patrons dropped in for a few minutes of the lunch time or perhaps while waiting for an appointment, the clock served a useful purpose. Now, however, practically one hundred per cent of the theatre patrons come to hear and see the program through. Anything that tends to distract attention or remind of time and tasks undone, of business cares or unwashed dishes at home, of mealtime or bedtime, detracts from the patron's enjoyment of the program. The more comfort of body and mind you can give the patron the more he will enjoy the play. Ventilation, lighting, harmony of colors and freedom from worries are essentials to these comforts. Watching a clock instead of the picture, it seems to me, is not conducive to comfort of mind."

Manager Davis has a keen sense of service to the patron of which his study of the place of the clock in the theatre is an example. Fresh air, proper placing of lights, harmony of color and everything possible for the restfulness of his guests, as he prefers to call the Broadway audiences, are hobbies with him. Incidentally, the Broadway has a nice timepiece, an artistic clock placed just over the entrance to the foyer, where it unobtrusively points the hour to the departing theatre patron.

Today the clock in the auditorium is just as antique as the old electric piano.

Production Costs and Rentals

ON another page is a brief discussion by several distributors of the problems involved in the general subject of the rising cost of productions. The men who talk about these varying phases of the one subject all have recently returned from Los Angeles, where they had full opportunity for first-hand observation.

It seems to be agreed by those who touch upon the rising costs of production that the responsibility for the situation rests in the mounting salaries of players and in the demand for lavish sets and pretentious productions generally.

Joe Brandt flatly lays at the door of the box office the burden of the situation, declaring it is the insistence of exhibitors on names of famous stars in the pictures they book that is compelling the producers to pay exorbitant salaries to players, in many instances quadrupling the amounts formerly paid.

Arthur Kane quotes the producers as estimating the number of names possessing box office pull as eighty-six and adds that every studio is trying to make use of those names. He points out that this is the situation in spite of the fact that frequently some of the productions could be better cast if more suitable but less known players could be employed. He comments further that "exhibitors and the public are name crazy."

One of the interesting sidelights of Mr. Kane's statement is his reference to the real estate investments of the players and their profiting by the experience of 1921. It is a matter of knowledge that in the slump of that period many players were caught with a bank account sadly depleted through too frequent and rapid turnovers. The change in practice will be of undoubted benefit to the community and will add to the stability of the industry.

To exchange reports showing exhibitor demands for lavish settings Mr. Brandt ascribes the action of directors in expending "fortunes" to comply. He adds that if the exhibitors hope to reduce rental cost they must co-operate with producers and accept productions which do not call for expensive staging but do furnish desired entertainment.

The suggestion of increased admissions in order to make possible the assimilation of higher rentals Mr. Brandt quickly rejects. "It can't be done," he insists. The only remedy, he adds, is to "back up," declaring the patrons of motion picture theatres are suffering from "entertainment indigestion."

That the problem of high cost of production with its accompanying and consequent high rental will be a vital one in the days to come there is practical agreement. To say the exhibitor wants high-class pictures is to restate the perfectly obvious. And when we say "exhibitor" we are referring not to the man with the large house in the well-to-do community but to the ten thousand who possess houses of all sizes and in communities where 22 or 25 cents is pretty near the peak admission.

The producer is not anxious to hand to the distributor a production on which he cannot get back his investment and a margin of profit.

There is no way in which the question of expensive production and high rental can be ironed out except by experience. In other words, there are no means by which producers on the one hand and exhibitors on the other can, through their representatives, gather about a board and establish a sum which in their combined opinion shall be the average maximum to be expended on a picture—not on all, but on the great majority. There may be such a body or number of bodies some day to which questions of this sort can be submitted, but they do not exist today.

So the only way apparently is to fight it out with the exchangeman. If for the more costly subjects there prove to be a dearth of inquiry, a slump in the bookings, the producer very quickly will correct the situation so far as he is concerned. He will deliver to the exchanges pictures made at a price that will enable him to get back his money.

The motion picture business will not "stay put." Production practices will change, year in and year out, and are bound to. Old Man Experience will be the final arbiter in each recurring question, and his decision will be pretty nearly correct.

Spurious Projector Parts

AT this season of the year it is customary to tear down the projector and send it away for an overhauling—just as the auto owner does with his car. But the owner of the car is very particular about the parts that are put into his machine.

He knows the machine will run right only with its own guaranteed parts. He knows life is safer for occupants and driver. He knows he will get better and longer usage from them.

Did it ever occur to you, Mr. Theatre Owner, that the use of spurious projector parts presents the same risks and opens up the same channels of waste that the spurious auto part does?

You owe it to your public, your operator and yourself, morally, and as a business proposition, to follow the advice of the Nicholas Power Company and buy only genuine parts.

R. E. AITKEN, president of the Wisconsin Film Company, with headquarters in Milwaukee, is in New York. Mr. Aitken with his brother, H. E., has been interested in motion pictures since 1909. For a good part of that time he was abroad, representing Mutual and Triangle productions.

Mr. Aitken reports that there is in his territory a ready market for Tristone subjects, salesmen reporting strong demand on the part of exhibitors because of the reputation of Keystone Comedies.

"Do you know," said the Wisconsin man, "there are a great many persons who have not forgotten that at one time Keystone stood for comedy the world over? The material is being booked far beyond our expectations."

The exchangeman said his company had secured a strong line of Arrow pictures, among them the Jack Hoxie and William Fairbanks series.

Asked as to John Freuler, the one time president of Mutual, Mr. Aitken said he was living in Milwaukee, was in good health, and that he had not lost his interest in the motion picture business. Mr. Freuler, it will be remembered, was at the head of the Mutual organization when it engaged Charles Chaplin—and amazed the world—at a salary of $10,000 a week for a year, with a bonus of $150,000.

There were many skeptics who at the time refused to believe the figures to be authentic, but gradually they became accustomed to them. Incidentally Mr. Freuler and his associates silenced those who insisted there was occasion for the appointment of a commission in lunacy by selling the foreign rights on the Chaplin product for more than enough to cover the price of the contract, leaving the old U. S. A. as velvet.

ONE of the real constructive forces in the motion picture industry is Turner Jones, in charge of the Public Relations Department of Famous Players-Lasky in the South. The work this young man has done in the organizing of Better Films Committees and in the creation of public good will for the pictures has been of such a high quality that it is deserving of being better known among the men and the women of the trade at large.

Mr. Jones' policy is not to confine his activities to the emergency of today, of "killing the bill" as he expresses it, but so to establish good will against the morrow in the first place so as to minimize the probability of antagonistic legislation being introduced and secondly to fortify that sentiment by militant statewide organization.

It may be only a question of time before Mr. Jones' success in his own section will result in his being called into a wider field, for it is certain his employers will receive requests from other states for his services.

NOTING that William H. Crane is one of the featured players in Goldwyn's "Three Wise Fools" recalls his first appearance before a motion picture camera. Also it brings to mind the initial facing of the lens by another who in later years became one of the screen's greater players, Douglas Fairbanks.

It all happened perhaps nine or ten years ago when Mr. Crane and Mr. Fairbanks were visiting the studio of Famous Players in Twenty-sixth street. As the guest of Daniel Frohman, the actors, who at that time were appearing in a stage performance in New York, had been looking on the taking of a scene by Director J. Searle Dawley.

After the screen performers had retired Mr. Frohman suggested that the two men participate in an impromptu skit before the camera. In a moment the three, with Mr. Dawley participating, had sketched a bit of action in which one of the players was to be charged with having surreptitiously and feloniously extracted something of value from a pocket of the other.

It was planned that Mr. Frohman and the supposed loser should carefully examine the clothing of the defendant in the effort to recover the article of value. With Mr. Dawley directing the bit was staged, and to the lone spectator was very amusing. The scene "ran" for something like 200 feet.

A little later we asked Mr. Frohman if he had any objection to mention being made in print of the incident. It should be borne in mind that Mr. Crane was one of America's famous actors and Mr. Fairbanks was one of the best known of the younger stage players.

"I think you had better not," replied the genial producer. "You see, if the two men were under contract with my brother Charles it would be all right, but as they are associated with another firm the little fun of today might be misconstrued."

If that strip of film is in existence today, containing as it does the camera debut of one of the stage's famous men and of another who became one of the screen's leaders, it has value, sentimental and otherwise.

PATHE was host on Friday, July 6, at a reception and luncheon to writers on the motion picture trade press and writers on motion pictures in other publications. The guests of honor were Harold Lloyd and Mrs. Lloyd, who are celebrating in New York a belated honeymoon.

The luncheon was a novelty in that in the first place there were no speeches, and secondly the diners were seated not at a table but wherever in the Ritz Carlton's Crystal Room suited their fancy. They selected their own companions, and Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd visited the different groups during the serving of the luncheon.

Mr. Lloyd stated it was not his intention to make another thriller for perhaps a year to come, it being the policy of himself and his associates to strive for variety in production and to cater to the tastes of different classes of photoplaygoers.

The comedian said his next production would be modeled somewhat on the lines of "Grandma's Boy," in that it would be his aim to incorporate a goodly measure of comedy, a bit of drama and a little pathos.

Among the thirty persons present were

E. A. Eeschmann, general sales manager of Pathe, and John Raglund, representative of Mr. Lloyd.

AFTER a four weeks' trip to the coast Sam Grand is back at the offices of Grand-Asher. That is, he was on Wednesday afternoon, but he left for Boston at 5 o'clock. He was in conference with Harry Asher when we looked in on him. Mr. Asher is the distribution chief, while Mr. Grand looks after the production side of the concern.

Mr. Grand said he noted in Los Angeles a little letting down in production activities, due to the entrance on the part of some of the companies on their summer schedule. Among these were Universal and F. B. O., he said.

For his own company Mr. Grand declared it was full steam ahead. Mr. Asher remarked that exhibitors could bank on the company's program being carried out as announced 100 per cent. The comedies of Joe Roek, Monte Banks and Sid Smith would be issued three a month, beginning August 10 and the national release date for the feature had been definitely set for Labor Day. There will be ten of the latter, at the rate of one a month.

Two of the features already are completed and two more will be by September. Mr. Asher said he had seen "Mine to Keep," which is set as the second release. "It's good enough for the best theatres in the world," he declared. "It has a wonderful story elaborately staged and exceptionally well done and will appeal to the masses. Exhibitors may look forward to running some of the finest pictures that will be released this year."

HERE'S something new and refreshingly frank in the way of a news note or publicity item if you will. We quote in full:

"Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that Robert E. Lee has joined the forces of the Hodkinson Corporation and henceforth will be connected with the Atlanta office.

"However, it is stated on good authority that Mr. Lee has no claim to the distinction of being a blood relation of the General who helped make Southern history, other than the fact that he is a southerner, born and raised in Alabama, a gentleman and an all-around good fellow."

UNIVERSAL'S SUPER-JEWEL "Merry Go Round" is not to say good-bye to Broadway after two weeks at the Rivoli. It is announced that it is slated for a third week at the Rialto. Those who know the rule on these two houses do not have to be told that three weeks is an unusually long time for a production to be retained. That it has made the record in the summer speaks all the louder for the appeal of the subject.

It is stated arrangements are being made by Universal for showing in other cities, one of the first of these being Los Angeles.

Universal expresses the view that the high temperature alone stopped the picture from pulling down the Rivoli's house record. Without having the figures at hand we are inclined to believe there is much basis for the assertion. The company looks for the subject to break records established by "The Storm" and other of its high markers, and we are inclined to believe that, too. It "sure is" a mighty good picture.

PEEKSKILL CASE WON ON APPEAL

Appellate Court Justice Raps Methods Used By Defendants

New York City.—The Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court has reversed the decision of the lower court, and has granted an injunction to the Peekskill Theatre, Inc., against the Advance Theatrical Co. of New York, Dave Bernstein, Loew's Inc., Fred Mitchell, Nicholas M. Schenck and First National. The plaintiff asked for an injunction against the defendants from interfering with the Peekskill theatre in its effort to get pictures.

Strong language is used in the opinion of the Appellate Division, written by Justice Smith, which follows:

"An injunction should be issued restraining all parties from inducing the violation of any contracts made between the plaintiff and any film producers. The injunction should further provide that the individual defendants and Loew's Inc., should be restrained from inducing in any manner, directly or indirectly, film producers not to supply their films to the plaintiff corporation, except as and when they may need them for their own exhibition, and an injunction should be granted restraining the other corporation defendants from refusing to sell to the plaintiff corporations any films for the purpose of boycotting the plaintiff and preventing the plaintiff from doing any business or for the purpose of assisting actors in accomplishing said purposes, and from conspiring with the co-defendants or actors to deprive plaintiff of the films necessary to plaintiff's business.

"From the papers the conclusion is inevitable that it was the determined effort of these men defendants to prevent the plaintiff from securing pictures and to ruin its business. The individual defendants were, vice-president, general manager and booking agent of Loew's Inc., and were interested in the Colonial theatre, a rival theatre in said city, and plaintiff has been heavily damaged by its failure to procure films for exhibition through the interference of these several defendants.

"The motive of the defendants is clearly shown, both by their acts, and by their statements that they would ruin the plaintiff's business and not allow the plaintiff to procure films for exhibition. The action of the individuals, in their deliberate conspiracy to prevent the plaintiff from obtaining these films for the purpose of ruining the plaintiff, not only renders these defendants liable to criminal prosecution, but makes them liable personally for all damages which the plaintiff has suffered; and the plaintiff is not confined to its action at law for damages; but the strong arm of equity can stop this unlawful interference by injunction; and to this equitable power plaintiff has appealed."

The opinion states further that Loew's is properly included in the injunction, because its principal officers "have used the corporation for the purpose of accomplishing their unlawful purposes, and these officers have made the corporation a party to the conspiracy."

Concluding the opinion, Justice Smith says:

"It is claimed that there is no malice here shown, but only a desire to protect the defendants' interest by all their acts of which complaint is made; but the law condemns all acts trespassing upon the legal rights of others as malicious, as a matter of law and will grant reparation in

WHAT THEY ARE ASKING FOR SCREEN RIGHTS

Los Angeles, Cal.—$200,000 each is being asked for the screen rights to "Seventh Heaven" and "Sally," the latter to be reserved for two years after the money passes. An offer of $200,000 for picture rights to "Lightnin'" has been refused. The nearest approach to these figures was $100,000 paid by B. P. Schulberg for screen rights to "The First Year."

damages, or an injunction where those damages are not capable of specific measurement. This interference must be stopped, and the courts will have no difficulty either by injunction, or if necessary, by the administration of the criminal law to prevent these unlawful acts. The courts have little patience with those who trifle with clear legal rights of another."

In an effort to right many wrong impressions that may have been formed in the court litigation involving a theatre in Peekskill, New York; Marcus Loew, president of Loew's Incorporated denied emphatically that he or Loew's Incorporated had anything to do with the case as has been reported in the papers and made the following statement:

"Upon my return from Syracuse, I noticed some clippings referring to the Peekskill case, stating it had been taken up on appeal.

"I was not particularly interested on that account but shocked to see that the name of Loew's Incorporated was again mentioned in the case, despite the fact that affidavits were drawn by our attorney and signed by me, stating that neither Loew's Incorporated nor I ever had any interest in that theatre.

"In view of the fact that the plaintiffs' attorney told a mutual friend that he knew I had nothing whatever to do with the case, I feel it my duty to enter a denial at this time."

TO BUILD LARGE HOUSES ON COAST

West Coast Theatres, Inc. Will Erect at Least Five in One Year

Los Angeles.—An idea of the tremendous development and ever increasing business activities in suburban and neighborhood districts of this city may be derived from reports of the building committee of West Coast Theatres, Inc. in their approval of the construction during the coming season large capacity houses in the neighborhood and suburban districts.

The policy of theatre construction to be pursued during the coming year by the Gore Bros., Ramish and Sol Lesser chain contrast vividly their program of last year. Instead of erecting theatres seating not more than 1,000 in the rapidly growing residential and neighborhood sections the forthcoming year will witness the construction, of at least five theatres with a seating capacity in excess of 2,000.

In most instances the sites have already been selected and others are now under consideration. On the corner of Washington and Vermont Avenues, the first of these new houses will soon go up. This theatre is to be one of the most magnificent in California, a seating capacity of 2,500 having been decided upon. The total cost of the investment, including building, stores, theatre, etc. will be in excess of $1,000,000.

ORGANIZATION OF FOUR COMPANIES

New Motion Picture Concerns Will Produce on the West Coast

Hollywood. — Four new motion picture companies announced their organization here this week. They are:

The Gilbert Parker Production to film novels of the famous author. Forty-seven stories have been purchased by Leslie Stewart, representative in America for Parker, Elinor Glynn and Somerset Vaughn. Barry O'Neil, a young English actor will be featured. James Hogan, formerly director for Fox, who also made "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" is in charge of production and interested financially, backed by the same people for whom he made the latter picture. Hogan says the first four stories produced will be "The Gateway of Dreams," "The Whisperer," "As Deep as the Sea" and "Tomorrow," all stories in Parker's volume of "Northern Lights." No date is set for starting production.

The Jean Riley Productions with Jean Riley, actress, as executive head and star. E. G. Walker, production manager, says the company plans to produce six pictures of feature length each year. Work on the first will start in three weeks. Robert Gordon will support Miss Riley, and Camille Deslys, sister of the late Gabby Deslys, will appear in the cast, her first role in America. Rod Rynerson is business manager, and temporary quarters have been located here.

The Inter-state Pictures to release J. B. Calvert productions. The Pacific studio in Culver City, formerly used by Willat Pictures, has been leased and after alterations will house the new company. Ashton Dearholt announces his new Western production company which will make twelve five-reel westerns for Arrow release at the Berwill studio. Helene Rosson, who was star with the old American and Mutual companies, will co-star with Edmund Cobb in the series. Dick Hatton will direct, assisted by Wilbur McLaugh. J. C. Hutchinson is cameraman and E. R. Hickson, art director. Dearholt is also to continue as production manager for Ben Eilson.

Lavish Productions Due to Exhibitor Demand

SO JOE BRANDT SEES SITUATION

Arthur Kane Finds Exhibitors and Public Are Crazy for Big Names

Two distribution chiefs returning from Los Angeles during the past ten days have freely discussed problems connected with the making of pictures as those subjects were impressed on them while they were at the coast.

What most forcibly struck Arthur S. Kane was the fact that all producers are trying to make use of a limited number of names of players because "exhibitors and the public are name crazy."

Upon the exhibitor Joe Brandt places the blame for the high cost of production, saying it is brought about by the insistence upon the part of the theatre owner for well-known and popular names and expensive sets.

Abe Warner of Warner Brothers, just home from the coast, is inclined to agree with the two named, saying that in his observation elaborate sets and large mobs often are used partly in order to satisfy the owners of the more prominent houses that the producers are giving them adequate pictures, subjects that in pretentiousness will match their beautiful theatres.

James R. Grainger of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan said regarding salaries of players it always was a debatable question. In his view where an actor is sufficiently well known to be badly needed in a picture that actor is quite well aware of what he can obtain in the way of salary, and the producer has got to pay it if he really has to have the services of the actor.

Eighty-six Players Chiefly in Demand

"Never before was there so much producing going on as at present," said Mr. Kane. "All the studios are chock-a-block with work. Actors most in demand are busy on anywhere from one to three pictures at one time, and are unwilling to 'call it a day' until their labors have continued well into the night.

"Producers have figured that in Los Angeles at present are eighty-six players whose names are well known and in demand from the picture-going public. Everybody is trying to make use of those names. Frequently, roles in some of the productions could be better cast, but that would be at the sacrifice of names. This condition is brought about by the fact that exhibitors and the public are name crazy. Their insistent demand is for well known actors' names and nationally famous titles.

"The actors, you may be sure, are taking full advantage of this situation. They realize that this is their golden harvest season, and they are working hard and furiously to make the most of it, having learned their lesson from the depression that set in in 1921. They are placing their money where they are hopeful that it will double, triple or quadruple itself, usually in Los Angeles real estate.

Condition Unprecedented, Declares Joe Brandt

"Never in the history of Hollywood has there been such a condition presented to the producer as in this year," said Mr. Brandt. "It seems that the exhibitors all over the country are responsible for the present chaotic condition in Hollywood insofar as salaries of stars are concerned."

Mr. Brandt said he stopped at almost every big city to interview exhibitors and exchangemen and found the first question the exhibitor asked the exchangemen was "Who's in the picture?" If the name of a big star was not mentioned, the exhibitor immediately took an antagonistic attitude, claiming that there was no box office value unless the picture had a "star."

This attitude has brought about a situation which is in Mr. Brandt's opinion the greatest menace to the industry. There are only a few whose names really mean something to the box office, and as a result, fictitious valuations are being placed on performers who have been exploited by the exhibitors to such an extent that they demand a great deal more than they are entitled to.

"If the exhibitors will only judge pictures from the standpoint of their entertainment value we will bring back into the theatres the thousands of fans that have strayed from the fold because of the banal stories that have been used in order to create particular parts for so-called popular players," continued Mr. Brandt.

Lavish Sets Restrict Number of Stories

"I am surprised at the psychological viewpoints that exhibitors are taking with regard to the kind of pictures they want. It seems that the great majority of the prominent exhibitors in this country believe that because they have a beautiful theatre and they dress their performance up in a lavish manner that it is necessary for them to have pictures with lavish settings.

"This restricts the number of stories that the producers can select and it leaves behind a great many virile stories. The result is that we have an over-production of the so-called society dramas.

"That the public is anxious to see pictures where red-blooded men and real women are the main characters is proven by 'The Spoilers' and one or two other productions that have as their basis real melodrama. Not a few exhibitors have told me their patrons did not want to see melodrama and yet a great many of the successes of the season have been melodramas.

"Much has been said with regard to the inflated cost of production due to the high salaries being demanded by performers, but another important factor in the present high cost of production is the demand on the part of the exhibitors for pictures with lavish settings. Directors taking their cue from the reports from exchanges have gone out of their way to put up sets that have cost fortunes simply to cater to this whim, and as far as the value of the picture is concerned these sets have no material bearing on the drama or the conclusion of the story. In fact, many good stories have been ruined because big, lavish sets have been forced into productions where they did not belong.

Exhibitors Must Co-operate With the Producers

"If the exhibitors hope to get down the high cost of rentals they must co-operate with the producers and accept productions which do not call for these big, expensive sets but do furnish the kind of entertainment that the fans desire."

Mr. Brandt was asked his view as to increasing admission prices to cover the rising cost of production, as had been suggested.

"It can't be done," he declared. "You have got to back up. The admissions in the cities where the people can afford to pay are high enough as it is. Already in many places we are down to a three-night basis, Saturday, Sunday (where these are permitted) and one other night. Raising admissions will not strike at the root of the evil. The trouble today is that pictures are being made at a fictitious valuation.

"The patrons of theatres are suffering from entertainment indigestion. They have been surfeited with lobster a la Newburg and caviare, and will be greatly benefited by a season of plain and substantial food."

"I think it will be agreed that in examining a picture an exhibitor wants to 'see the money,' said Mr. Warner. "And I think also it will be conceded by producers that they feel compelled to make pictures upon which exhibitors owning large houses will look with a kindly eye as regards elaborate sets. Then again every exhibitor wants names. The actors know this, and when you go to hire them they demand the money. The result is that where formerly players were satisfied with $250 they now want a thousand dollars a week."

UNIVERSAL LAY-OFF

Hollywood.—A lot of vacations have been announced at Universal City. They came unexpected when persons in almost every department stepped up to the cashier's window last pay-day. Julius Bernheim, general manager, said the lay-off was due to the closing of a large number of picture theatres for the summer months, making a difference of a half million dollars monthly to the Universal income. It is understood the recent big overhead also has considerable to do with it.

Universal, at that, is the busiest spot on the motion picture map. Twenty companies are working there this week, and several new players were signed. Gladys Hulette, Owen Gorine, Harry Mestayer and William Davidson were among those engaged. Owen Gorine is the young French actor who Carl Laemmle met abroad, and signed. He will make his first American appearance in Priscilla Dean's picture, "The Storm Daughter."

Hammons Leaves for Los Angeles

New York.—E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is on his way to Los Angeles.

Mr. Hammons was accompanied by Al Christie, and Harry Edwards. S. B. Brennecke, who will act as Mr. Hammons' personal representative on the coast during the coming season, was also in the party.

Mr. Hammons will return to New York in about three weeks.

Alexander to Adapt Red Lock

New York.—J. Grubb Alexander, has been engaged by the Universal scenario department to write the screen adaptation of "Red Lock." The screen play will be used as a starring vehicle for William Desmond.

Bill Will Help Theatre Owners

Austin, Texas.—The Carnival and Tent Show bill has been passed by the house. If this measure is put through, it will mean a saving of thousands of dollars for theatre owners.

SEVER'S BUSINESS DEAL WITH RAY

Arthur S. Kane Heads Company Which Will Distribute Star's Pictures

Los Angeles.—After a business association of three and a half years, Charles Ray and Arthur S. Kane have severed their connection.

On Mr. Kane's recent visit to this city, when Mr. Ray decided to release his future productions through Associated Exhibitors, Mr. Kane called attention to the fact that for him to continue as Mr. Ray's eastern manager while being at the head of the distributing organization that is marketing his pictures, would place him, Mr. Kane, in a somewhat anomalous position. Mr. Ray saw the force of the argument, and, as he had decided to cast his lot with Associated, the previously existing business relationship was terminated. Albert A. Kidder, Jr., general manager of Charles Ray Productions, Inc., is now in New York City.

Since December 15, 1919, when Mr. Ray and Mr. Kane aligned themselves together, Mr. Kane has presented the star in fifteen pictures, thirteen of which were distributed through First National Exhibitors Circuit and Associated First National Pictures, and two, "A Tailor-Made Man" and "The Girl I Loved," through United Artists Corporation. "The Courtship of Myles Standish" will be the first picture in which Mr. Ray will appear through Associated Exhibitors distribution and the first since he became an independent producer in which he will not have been presented by Mr. Kane.

While the severance of the relationship is a source of keen regret to both men they feel that Mr. Ray is starting on bigger things by having the distribution of his productions through a company in which Mr. Kane is personally interested.

MILLER'S NEW THEATRE

Los Angeles.—The Millers—Fred and Roy—are preparing to open their new theatre in Glendale sometime early in July. The new house is known as The Gateway and is aptly named as it is located at the gateway to Glendale on San Fernando Boulevard in what is the fastest growing section of that city.

The Millers, who operate the Miller and California Theatres here, built the new house. B. E. Loper, long identified with theatres and film houses, will be the resident manager.

PATHE NEWS' LATEST SPEED RECORD

New York.—Pathe has hung the latest record up for speed in filmdom by showing its resourcefulness and efficiency in carrying out the most carefully laid plans in filming important scenes from the Dempsey-Gibbons fight and presenting them on Broadway, at the New York Theatre Roof, fifty-two hours after the finish of the big event July 4, in Shelby, Montana.

In forty-eight hours, the Pathe planes bearing the fight film covered 2,600 miles. And out of the seven planes that left Shelby, the Pathe plane was the only one to reach its destination in the time prescribed by the plan. This enterprise enabled people in Chicago and points nearby to witness the film on Friday morning, July 6, while another burst of speed brought it to the motion picture theatres of New York City that night.

BOOKINGS REPORTED

Business booked to date indicates that every college and preparatory school in the United States will have played "Success," Murray W. Garsson's picture.

Bookings for "Counterfeit Love," Playgoer's special, are being demanded by first run houses throughout the country. Southern Enterprises has booked the feature for their entire circuit and the film is now making the Loew circuit in New York City.

"The Spoilers," (Goldwyn) shown on the world's largest liner, the Leviathan, on its first trip across the Atlantic which sailed for London on July 4.

The first four of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan's fall releases are booked for first runs in the leading Ruben and Finkelstein theatres in seven Minnesota towns. "Enemies of Women" and "The Spoilers," are two of them.

Balaban and Katz have booked Goldwyn's "Three Wise Fools," for a week's run at their Chicago Theatre beginning July 23.

Goldwyn's "The Spoilers," will open a pre-release showing of a minimum of two weeks at a Jensen and von Heberg Seattle theatre—either the Strand or the Liberty—on July 14.

The first group of eleven productions to be released theatre, Galveston, Tex., one of the important first run houses in Texas.

PRINCIPAL PICTURES TO ENLARGE STUDIOS

Hollywood.—Principal Pictures Corporation's studios are to be greatly enlarged immediately. This information comes from Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg of that organization.

The land consists of some fifteen acres directly adjoining that of the Douglas Fairbanks-Mary Pickford studios. When it was purchased by Lesser and associates, it was known as the King Vidor studio.

Among the chief additions that will take form at once, is another huge enclosed stage. It is the plan to equip this new stage with every modern device for picture making. One of the world's largest generators has been installed and a complete re-organization of the electrical department is now under way.

Under the supervision of Norman Manning, the studios are undergoing a complete and new building schedule. It is estimated that a half million dollars will be expended on the plant.

La Plante to Remain With Richard Thomas

New York.—William La Plante's contract as personal representative for Richard Thomas, the producer-director, a temporary arrangement, has been changed to more permanent document. The producer-director himself and Mr. La Plante are at present in this city arranging for the distribution of Mr. Thomas' current productions and the remainder of the year's work.

HART'S FIRST AN ORIGINAL STORY

Will Be of the Western Type and Production Begins August First

Hollywood.—William S. Hart will return to the screen in an original story by himself. It is one of several which the Western star wrote during his two years of retirement.

According to an announcement made here by Hart, he has signed J. G. Hawks, scenario writer, for the task of putting this story into continuity form. When the story is ready Hart will begin production work at the Lasky studio.

The stellar author refused to divulge the title of his "comeback" vehicle nor is he ready to announce his selection of a director. Actual production work is scheduled to start not later than August 1, and Hart expects to have a picture ready to release with other Paramount Pictures in November.

The story is of the Western variety and will be followed with other out-of-door stories with a wide variety of themes and backgrounds. The star's Pinto pony is being groomed for his return with his master to the screen.

ROGER SALABERT HERE FOR AMERICAN TREATY

New York City.—Roger Salabert of the French music firm, Francois Salabert, is here to negotiate a treaty with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, whereby the French organization will reciprocally handle American compositions. Mr. Salabert states that his firm collects music royalties of over $1,330,000 a year.

It has often been said that the French firm is a music trust but by its affiliation with the American Society, all French copyrights will be placed under the American organization's control for the purpose of licensing for their general performance.

Beats Film Censorship

Vinton, Iowa.—This town has followed the suggestion of Mrs. George D. McElroy, state film chairman for Iowa women's clubs, and runs special children's pictures once a week at five cents admission. When enough money is accumulated, the best film available is purchased and this is shown free to the children of the town. Mrs. McElroy believes this is more practical than film censorship.

Big Men Get Together at Lieber Dinner

FORGET RIVALRY AT BIG FAREWELL

Zukor, Loew, Rowland, Lieber, Goldwyn Talk Cooperation at Farewell Party

New York City.—Interesting and significant statements were made July 5 in the course of speeches by heads of three of the largest motion picture corporations, at a dinner at the Ritz-Carlton in honor of Robert Lieber, President of the First National Corporation, who is sailing to-morrow for Europe. The speakers voiced a spirit of co-operation apparently with other concerns in mind which were not represented at the gathering, the largest of which is possibly the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Distinctive alliance. From the note sounded it was taken for granted that the concerns present were at least not bitter enemies and that in future there might be consultations among them.

Among the speakers were Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Marcus Loew, head of the Metro Corporation and also of the string of Loew theatres; Mr. Lieber and Samuel Goldwyn, who since he quit as head of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is making pictures on his own account, which are to be released through First National.

At Mr. Lieber's right sat Mr. Zukor and on his left Mr. Goldwyn. Next to Richard A. Rowland, General Manager of First National, was Mr. Loew.

In his speech Mr. Lieber referred to the twenty-six men who were the first in the motion picture industry, and added that the time had come when the business was no longer to be conducted on street corners, but in the lobbies of hotels. He said it was particularly gratifying to him that Mr. Goldwyn was his host.

Mr. Goldwyn, also speaking enthusiastically regarding co-operation, referred to his tenure of office with the Goldwyn Picture Corporation, and said he had been the same sort of victim as Frankenstein.

The metaphorical hand-shaking was obviously gratifying in a way to William Brandt, head of the New York Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, who admonished the heads of the producing companies that they must come down in rental prices.

A letter was read from Will Hays regretting his inability to be present.

Among those interested in the motion picture industry it was predicted that the future policy of those present was to be one of give and take.

PRESIDENT PRESENTS COVERED WAGON PRINT

New York.—Oregon celebrated the second greatest day in her history on Tuesday, July 3, when, exactly eighty years after the arrival of the first covered wagon train in the Willamette Valley, President Harding, standing at the foot of Blue Mountain, near Meacham, a tiny village of fifty-one inhabitants, recounted the thrilling story of Marcus Whitman and the saving of the greatest Northwestern territory and formally presented to the assembled members of the Old Oregon Trail Association a print of James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," for preservation in the association's archives.

The occasion for the celebration was the dedication of the old Oregon Trail and the unveiling of a monument dedicated to the first wagon train. The President's formal address was published in full throughout the United States.

Following the presentation of the film Governor Pierce, on behalf of the association and the State of Oregon, presented to Mrs. Harding a bronze plaque on which was pictured a covered wagon pulled by two oxen, with a mother and baby in arms on the seat and the father scanning the horizon. Governor Pierce said that he wanted Mrs. Harding to take it home and hang it in the White House and that he, representing the Northwest, was going to Washington some day to see that she had done so. Mrs. Harding, visibly affected, said that she certainly would do so.

Michael O'Halloran Considered Clean and Wholesome By Many

New York. — According to inquiries that have been coming into the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, from civic bodies, and other organizations supporting the cleaner and better films movement, "Michael O'Halloran" has received unanimous praise. This is the first of the Gene Stratton-Porter stories to be produced by the author under the direction of James Leo Meehan for distribution through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

It is a production that radiates sunshine and the spirit of youthful happiness. There are few photoplays according to the many who have witnessed a private showing of this feature, that contains such an element of clean and wholesome entertainment as does this feature which portrays the life of "Mickey" O'Halloran, the newsboy waif who, through sheer power of youthful manliness completely changes the lives of a mismatched couple, and whose motto "be square" completely dominates the life and happiness of those involved.

Not only has the Hodkinson Corporation been complimented upon the acquisition of this production, but the many inquiries received for further information regarding the presentation of this feature at some local theatre, proves that the wholesomeness of the story is fast meeting with universal appeal.

WILL PUBLICIZE OWN PRODUCTIONS

Richard Thomas Plans Method Between Organization and Distributors

New York.—In line with his policy of co-operation Richard Thomas, producer-director, who is in this city disposing of the distribution rights of his current productions, "The Silent Accuser" and "Phantom Justice," plans an entirely new method of publicity between the Thomas press organization and his distributors.

Thomas claims that it has come to his attention that publicity directors of the independent producers are not fully cognizant of the fact that their duty does not end after the distribution has begun; on the contrary, he thinks, the press man of the producer has just about commenced his work.

"I have noted," states Mr. Thomas, "that coast publicity men drop the picture released last like a hot coal immediately the releasing contract has been signed, leaving the distributing organization with the entire burden of publicizing the product. The current production is everything to the west coast publicity departments, the picture on the market means little to them. My idea is that my press department should co-operate with the distribution firm, never losing sight of the fact that my picture must be earning money on the market in order that I may continue."

Acting on the chief's orders the Thomas publicity department is busily engaged in writing press book material for his current productions, which will be released during the early fall.

Several meetings have been held at national headquarters during the past few weeks attended by representatives of the Canadian Theatre Owners.

It is planned to have a business manager selected to handle the affairs of the Canadian Division, with headquarters in Toronto.

FOUR WEEKS' RUN COSTS EXHIBITOR $10

Kansas City, Mo.—The four weeks' run of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," the United Artists release, at the Royal Theatre, this city, cost Frank L. Newman, theatre owner, etc., $10, the said $10 being payment of a bet. Mr. Newman's letter to F. B. McCracken, Kansas City branch manager for United Artists, tells the story, as follows:

"Enclosed find $10 check in payment of the bet I made with you that 'Robin Hood' would not run at the Royal theatre for four weeks, breaking all records for indefinite run.

This is one bet that it is a pleasure for me to pay. Mac, it is my honest opinion that 'Robin Hood' is the greatest box-office attraction up to date. It is the first picture which hundreds of people came back to see the second time, and it is a picture that seemed to please everyone from seven to seventy."

ALAN D. MARR FINDS CONDITIONS IMPROVED

New York.—Alan D. Marr, assistant general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, returning to this city this week from a business tour that took him to Albany, Buffalo, Detroit and Cleveland, brought reports of extraordinary enthusiasm on the part of picture house exhibitors in these cities. Mr. Marr's observations confirmed the impressions he had gained on his trip of a few weeks ago, when he went as far west as St. Louis and south to Atlanta, that the entire eastern half of the country is rapidly returning to normal conditions.

"Exhibitors are well pleased with the present situation and bubbling over with confidence," said Mr. Marr. "They are eager for the start of the autumn season, expecting that it will bring wonderful new productions. They are certain there will be no difficulty in disposing of any good picture that is offered at a fair price. They are all on their toes, champing at the bit and shouting 'Let's go,' for with present business holding up better than at any other time for two or three years previously, they confidently predict a complete return to pre-war conditions in the very near future.

"Big, representative exhibitors with whom I conferred, there and elsewhere, expressed a lively interest in the plans of Associated Exhibitors. They wanted to know exactly what our coming product is to be and showed unbounded enthusiasm when I enumerated some of the attractions we are preparing to offer. The optimism which exhibitors manifested was shared in full measure by exchange men."

Restricts Number of Shows

New York City.—The passage of the new carnival license fees will do much to restrict the number of shows here, according to John J. Caldwell of the License Commission office. Would Tie In with National Exploitation

COMPANY'S NAME SHOULD BE USED

Exhibitors Ought to Capitalize Money Expended on Ads, Says Grainger

New York.—James R. Grainger, vice president and general manager of sales for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, is back again at his desk after a four week trip among some of the key centers, as was stated in our issue of last week. Mr. Grainger was accompanied by Eddie Bonns, chief of exploitation. Among the cities visited were Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, El Paso, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, and Minneapolis.

Seen on Tuesday for a few minutes Mr. Grainger was emphatic as to the outlook for the coming year. "Conditions throughout the country look good," he declared. "Exhibitors are expecting a great year and producers in California are striving to make the biggest productions possible in order to meet those expectations. Exhibitors are crying for big pictures and we are going to make them.

"We have made a fine start with 'The Spoilers.' Its first showing was in the Roosevelt in Chicago, where the production had a tremendous record-breaking week. In Salt Lake City the subject did the biggest business of the house in which it was played. At the Colorado in Denver it hung up the record in the first two days."

Mr. Grainger's trip primarily was for the purpose of interviewing some of the country's prominent exhibitors and talking fall business with them. The tour was successful in the highest degree, he said. In every center with the exception of one—and that city is now in process of being closed—he placed in some instances the first three of the coming Goldwyn-Cosmopolitans and in others as many as the first eleven of the season's product.

The Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan distribution chief is strong for hooking up with exhibitor advertising the name of the company making the production. "I believe such a step materially strengthens exhibitors' product in the eyes of their public," said Mr. Grainger.

"Take for an illustration the case of Wrigley's spearmint gum. Would the Liggett drug stores put in a product like that without capitalizing the money that has been spent by the manufacturer to popularize his article? Many exhibitors seem to be afraid they will jack up rentals if they permit themselves to capitalize the money that has been spent on advertising the productions, yet see what it means in the case of Cosmopolitan, as an example.

"Here hundreds of thousands of dollars have been and are being spent to acquaint the general public with the company's pictures. In the whole field literally millions of dollars have been expended to tell the public about the pictures, but yet as a rule exhibitors are disinclined to couple the name of the picture they are advertising with the name of its maker. The exhibitor is frank to admit that he appreciates any effort at co-operation with him on the part of the distributor in putting over a picture, but some of them are loth to reciprocate. Why should it not be fifty-fifty?"

Asked as to the reception being given by the exhibitors to the company's yellow exploitation booklet Mr. Bonns said in the case especially of those houses not possessing an exploitation man it was unusual. The demand for the books on "Souls for Sale," the first subject to be so exploited, was steady and continuing, he stated, and added that the best evience of the popularity was the fact that the plan is being followed in the case of succeeding pictures.

ROBERT LIEBER AND FAMILY GO TO EUROPE

New York.—Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National Pictures sailed with his family on July 7 aboard the S. S. Drottningholm for Sweden, on a European trip which will combine important business missions with a brief vacation.

One of the objects of Mr. Lieber's trip will be to attend the second annual First National Convention which will be held in London early in August. This convention will be made especially auspicious by the attendance not only of Mr. Lieber, but of Bruce Johnson, First National foreign manager, and George Fitzmaurice, Samuel Goldwyn director, who is producing "The Eternal City" for First National. Mr. Johnson is now in the midst of his annual continental tour and Mr. Fitzmaurice is well along on production of the Hall Caine story in Rome.

Mr. Lieber will first inspect the First National centers in Norway, Sweden and Denmark. In Stockholm, First National has its own exchange under the direction of Mr. Sofus Berg, which supplies Sweden with seventy percent of its American releases, this product going to one hundred theatres throughout the Swedish Biograph and to an additional four hundred of their customers theatres. In Norway the First National exchange is under the auspices of Mr. Swen Aaf, who, is the proprietor of the three largest first run theatres in Christiania.

MYRON SELZNICK USES THE RADIO

Broadcasts Personal Message Into the Homes of Many Movie Fans

New York.—A novel and interesting form of publicity was employed recently by Myron Selznick, Vice-president of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, when he was invited to broadcast from WJY, one of the radio stations in the Metropolitan area.

Mr. Selznick was asked to give his views on various questions pertaining to the picture industry in which the public are vitally interested. The outstanding feature of Mr. Selznick's talk was the placing of big productions in legitimate theatres instead of the regular picture houses on Broadway, and charging legitimate show prices; a practice that has become prevalent during the past few years.

Another matter of general public interest as well as exhibitor interest dwelt upon in the broadcasting were the difficulties encountered by the producers in selecting the type of stories most liked by the fans, and Mr. Selznick requested all who were "listening in" on the radio to write to him direct giving him their personal opinion of what they liked best in the form of motion picture entertainment.

CAPITOL BOOKS THREE WISE FOOLS

New York.—"Three Wise Fools," the picture of Austin Strong's comedy which John Golden produced on Broadway, has been booked for the Capitol theatre, for the week beginning Sunday, July 22. This is King Vidor's first production for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

CAST ANNOUNCED

New York.—Announcement is made of the cast of players made by Director Bernard J. Durning for "The Eleventh Hour," the Lincoln J. Carter melodrama which has been converted into film form and which will be one of the specials on the Fox program for the coming year.

Charles Jones and Shirley Mason are the featured players. Others in the cast include June Elvidge, Alan Hale, Edward Martindale and Frederick Kelsey.

Hodkinson Will Release

Radio-Mania This Month

New York.—The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces "Radio-Mania" as a July release. This production is presented by Herman Holland and stars Grant Mitchell. R. William Neil directed the production.

The story, according to the Hodkinson officials, is both novel and interesting. It deals with a subject that is uppermost in the minds of the public today, which is radio. The story has to do with a young radioist who aspires to reach the Planet of Mars. He erects a monstrous outfit in his room and spends all his time there much to the dissatisfaction of his fiancée. However his invention of the tickless alarm clock and his experience with Mars results in an exciting climax.

Looking Ahead In Hollywood

By Will C. Murphey

After more than a year of preparation Douglas Fairbanks shot the first scenes this week on "The Thief Of Bagdad" which will be the successor to "Robin Hood." No date has been set for the completion of the picture, but it will not be likely to be released this year. Fairbanks intends to make this the picture of his career. It will disclose all the latest advances in photography, and many innovations in the way of entertainment. Raoult Walsh is directing, and Julian Johnstone, very new to the screen will support the star. The cast will be entirely made up of new faces with the exception of three or four roles.

Warner Brothers celebrated the Fourth of July by announcing that when they make "Irene," the leading role will be played by Hope Hampton. However the famous musical comedy will not go into production until after the first of the year, and when Miss Hampton finishes "The Gold Diggers," she will go to Paris for a vacation. "Irene" will be made into a big all-star production with a possibility of some of the original New York cast being engaged.

Now that Ernst Lubitsch has signed with Warner Brothers he announces that he is to make his second American production a modern continental comedy-drama with a small all-star cast. The picture will be something on the order of "Montmartre."

Nita Naldi brought her vampish eyes and white shoulders to Hollywood this week, and evidently intends to stay as she has taken a house. Miss Naldi immediately reported to the Lasky studio and got busy on a seductive role in Cecil de Mille's "The Ten Commandments."

Rights to stories were purchased this week as follows: "The Signal Tower," by Wadsworth Camp; "Up The Ladder," play by Owen Davis; "The Turmoil," novel by Booth Tarkington; "By Right of Conquest," novel by G. A. Henty, all by Universal; "Half a Dollar Bill," by Metro to be directed by Max Graf; "The Barber Of New Orleans," by Thomas Ince from the novel by Edward Childs Carpenter done on the stage by William Faversham; "Dangerous Innocence," story by Willard Mack in which Allene Ray will star for Bert Lubin.

Production has been started on "Wild and Woolly," second of the series of western features being made by Rocky Mountain Productions with Peggy O'Day in the lead. "The Battlin' Buckaroo," recently finished is now being edited.

In the Keaton Family are Buster, Natalie, Joe and Buster II. All of them will appear in the frozen face comedian's first production of feature length now underway. The only foreigners in the cast are Kittie Bradbury, old time character actress, and Ralph Bushman, son of the famous Francis X. Ralph Burton is directing the story.

Thomas Meighan is to be a commuter between coasts during his next three pictures for Famous Players. When he completed "Homeward Bound" in the east, he will come here and make "All Must Marry," picknig up George Ade at Chicago who will work in close contact with Alfred Green, the director. When that picture is finished, Meighan will hop back to Long Island and do a Booth Tarkington story.

Mary Miles Minter admits the offer of a vaudeville contract, but says she has not accepted it. In fact Miss Minter does not seem to know just what she is going to do. As far as could be learned she has received no offers to return to the screen.

Fox has elevated three assistant directors to full directorship. David Solomon who assisted Harry Millarde in all his pictures from "Over The Hill" to "If Winter Comes," is directing Dustin Farnum in "A Man;" William Wellman, who formerly assisted Bernard Durning, is handling Charles Jones; and James Flood, formerly with Rupert Hughes, is making "The Best Man Wins" with William Russell.

Fred Jackman who made such a success of Jack London's "Call of the Wild" for Hal Roach is to make another animal picture. It will be called "Rex" and is the story of a wild horse. It will three months in the making and the government lent two stallions for the production.

Thomas Ince is still on the hunt for a woman to play "Anna Christie." The latest to have a test made is Helen McKellar, who came down from Frisco. John Griffith has been selected to direct the picture.

Harry C. Archer, general manager, and David Bershon, booking manager, of West Coast Theatres, are in New York for three weeks. They went east for a conference with producing organizations on next year's output and booking contracts.

King Baggott is mentioned to direct "Ivanhoe" on a large scale for Universal. The historical romance is to be made as soon as Universal can get a breathing spell, and as Baggott has cancelled a trip to Australia, it is likely he will be behind the megaphone.

John Ruel, manager of the Melbourne and Britannia Theatres in Melbourne, is here with a seven-reel travalogue of remote places showing aboriginal life and interesting phases of animal life. Mr. Ruel is head of a company controlling 109 theatres, and leaves for New York soon.

CARL LAEMMLE OFF TO EUROPE

Example of European Picture "Made in America" Goes Along

New York.—Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, sailed for Europe aboard the Aquitania. With him went a print of "Merry Go Round," the Super Jewel production which he will present to Europe as a picture essentially European, although "made in America."

This is a strange reversal of the usual procedure. During the last several years the American screen has seen many European pictures "made in Europe." Film prognosticators hailed them as masterpieces of the cinema art and loudly decried the possibility of America ever doing anything as great or so well. "Merry-Go-Round" is Laemmle's answer.

"Merry-Go-Round" will be seen in the capitals of Europe. It will be shown in Vienna, and even in the Prater, Vienna's Coney Island, around whose merry-go-round the plot revolves. In other words, it will be put to the supreme test.

In Berlin, "Merry-Go-Round" will match its screen art with the super pictures of the German studios, and in London, where Mr. Laemmle first will take it, it will take its place on the screen as the highest type of American picture, technically perfect and entertainingly superior.

The first picture has already been finished. It was written, directed, titled and edited by Victor Hugo Halperin, who will perform the same services with the three yet to come.

Little Old New York Gets Unusual Praise

NOVEL PREMIERE OF BIG FEATURE

Little Old New York Shown to Distinguished Audience on Leviathan

New York.—A novel premiere was experienced by "Little Old New York," Cosmopolitan's new photoplay, starring Marion Davies, which was shown for the first time on board the Leviathan as the newly crowned queen of the American merchant marine was cutting its way across the Atlantic on its maiden ocean voyage under the Stars and Stripes. A distinguished audience thronged the beautiful little theatre of the moving palace and accorded the film a reception which equalled in enthusiasm that extended the Leviathan as it left on its long journey for Cherbourg.

In the audience, which saw the performance were many leaders of society, politics, the business world and the stage. Following are some opinions voiced by those who witnessed the premiere:

Captain Herbert Hartley, The Leviathan:—"Little Old New York" most interesting and delightful photoplay, with Marion Davies simply irresistible. Both American and European film fans will later envy the Leviathan passengers' rare treat. They enjoyed seeing it first."

Albert Lasker:—"Truly a tremendous achievement. I congratulate Cosmopolitan in setting new standard entertainment value with "Little Old New York." Marion Davies deserves all praise for brilliant performance. American motion picture industry should be proud of this photoplay as the nation is of the Leviathan."

Vincent Astor:—"No photoplay has ever thrilled or delighted me like "Little Old New York." Marion Davies rises to new heights as its star."

Congressman Nicholas Longworth:—"Here is a motion picture I am certain every lover of real entertainment will find wholly worth while as Mrs. Longworth and I did."

Marcus Heiman, President of the Orpheum Theatre Circuit:—"Little Old New York" is a triumph. Marion Davies surpasses even her brilliant acting in "Knighthood." Will undoubtedly prove most popular photoplay of the year."

Howard Chandler Christy:—"Little Old New York" surpasses anything ever screened for its sheer artistry. Congratulations to Marion Davies and Cosmopolitan staff."

Secretary of Labor James Davis:—"Little Old New York" a gorgeous entertainment. No one will want to miss this marvelous photoplay."

Anna Fitzu, opera star:—"Screen version of popular play superb, and Marion Davies ideal in stellar role. Like it much better than "Knighthood."

Fortune Gallo, of the San Carlo Opera Company:—"Little Old New York" marks notable advance in screen achievement. Beauty, brains and talent perfectly blended to create masterpiece. Marion Davies could not be improved upon."

Albert Keller, general manager of Ritz Carlton Hotels:—"After witnessing Marion Davies in "Little Old New York," easy to understand why America ranks miles ahead in motion pictures."

Louis Wiley, business manager of the N. Y. Times:—"It is a great picture. Marion Davies does the best work of her entire career."

Film Salesmen Complain About Unjust Competition

Toledo, O.—Film salesmen in this territory have for some time experienced many complaints on the part of theatre owners who are feeling the effects of what they term unjust competition made by the apparent willingness of distributors to sell their product to churches, schools and organizations. Some of the exhibitors in the smaller towns have stated that with the installation of projection apparatus in the schools they are being compelled to quit their business. Some towns already are dependent for screen entertainment upon what the schools offer.

"The Man Without a Country" opened an engagement at the Toledo Theatre under the auspices of the Toledo Federation of Women's Clubs. A religious film has also been recently booked in at that theatre. While some are doubtful of the success of these engagements, it is assured that with the backing that will be given the pictures by the organizations sponsoring them, business at the other playhouses running pictures at all times, cannot be benefitted, and at this time, with business at a low ebb, generally, any competition is certain to be injurious.

CHARACTER STORIES MADE INTO COMEDIES

Birmingham, Ala.—Octavus Roy Cohen's famous negro character stories which have appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines, will be made in two-reel comedies by Roy Rice of St. Louis and his associate H. Whitman of New York.

In filming the stories, no studio sets will be made but the scenes will be shot in Rosedale, Magnolia Point, and other sections of Birmingham from which Mr. Cohen obtained his characters. There will also be some shots of Mr. Cohen writing the stories.

Mr. Rice stated that few actors know the negro as seen in the South but he has endeavored to obtain actors who have had experience in negro characterization and have studied the negro dialect, ways, and mode of living. Neal Abel who is known for his negro parts with Al G. Field's Minstrels will be one of the leading members of the cast.

The scenarios for the stories are being prepared by Erwin Connelly. Mr. Cohen has written eighty or more tales.

Potash and Perlmutter Will Be Ready in Three Weeks

Los Angeles.—"Potash and Perlmutter" is finished and under the direction of Montague Glass, author of the play, Clarence Badger, the director Goldwyn, responsible for the production, the picture is being cut and titled and will be completed within the next three weeks. The two best known character actors on the stage, Barney Bernard and Alexander Carr, will make their screen bow in "Potash and Perlmutter" with Vera Gordon as co-star.

In making this production Mr. Goldwyn left nothing undone to create not only a human interest document, but to insert in the story sufficient novelty and picturesqueness to more than offset the homeliness of the dramatic situations.

BOX OFFICE RECORDS

Vitagraph's "Masters of Men" broke all house records, both gross receipts and attendance, at Clune's Broadway, Los Angeles, where it played for two weeks.

Selznick's "She Loves and Lies" enjoyed unusually good business at Graumans' Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, where it plays during the week of June 25.

"The Girl Who Came Back," Preferred Picture, played to $10,000 for the last week in June at the Lafayette Square Theatre in Buffalo, N. Y. This house seats 3400 and its price is between 35 and 55 cents.

CHANGE COMING IN MOVIE HOUSES

Present Indefinite System of Entertainment Bound to Go Says Director

Los Angeles.—A complete change in the management and presentations of motion picture theatres throughout the country, is predicted by Maurice Tourneur. The change will establish every theatre in the public's mind by the type of entertainment offered as evidenced in "legitimate" theatres.

"The time is not far distant when motion picture theatres will be classified as are the 'legitimate' theaters today," said Mr. Tourneur. "Just as theatres are established as burlesque, vaudeville, stock, dramatic or musical comedy houses today, so will motion picture theatres be divided in a definite and distinctive manner, each offering the type of entertainment in which it specializes.

"There is every indication that sooner or later, motion picture theatre owners will adopt distinct policies in the form of particular types of entertainment. In certain districts there will be theatres devoted solely to the presentation of melodrama. On another street there will be a theatre devoted exclusively to the 'high-brow' type of picture which the critics have been clamoring for but which to date have been found poor commercial investments. There are bound to come theatres in which subjects for children will be the policy.

"With the new order of things, pictures will be made for definite classes rather than attempting to make them productions that will hit the bullseye for every race, creed, color and age."

To Start Production of Elinor Glyn's Three Weeks

Hollywood.—They are getting ready to spread the tiger skin at Goldwyn's and start filming "Three Weeks" very soon. All the languorous ladies in the film colony are casting longing eyes toward the lead and every arsenic Romeo wants to play Paul. Elinor Glyn is said to prefer Theda Bara for her velvety heroine, and Miss Bara is not unwilling. There is also plenty of talk to the effect that Esta Eckman, the handsome young Swedish actor, may be selected for Paul's role. He is on his way here now to make one picture for Goldwyn, which may be the Glyn story.

If Mrs. Glyn is turned loose on the production, as threatened, she will undoubtedly insist upon its being shot per the book. If adolescent memory serves right, a few scenes should result that are liable to turn the rug up smokey at the edges and burn holes in the ceiling big enough to throw shoes through. In that event—what of the censor gentlemen?

Two Novelty Films on Broadway

Two novelties on Broadway are now being shown at the Capitol Theatre. "The Chase," a Jacob Fabian presentation which is being presented for the first time in America, is a "Tale of Alpine thrills." "Ivan the Great" Harold McCracken's Alaskan picture, gives intimate glimpses of the moose and Koliak grizzly. The film contains some interesting Arctic scenes, among which is a weird Esquimo dance.

ENTERTAIN DELEGATES EN ROUTE TO COAST

Los Angeles.—That motion pictures can be successfully shown as a regular entertainment feature on limited trains was demonstrated recently when showings of the Sam Wood production, "My American Wife," and Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Adam's Rib," both Paramount pictures, were given to the diplomatic representatives of sixteen Latin-American nations en route to Los Angeles to attend the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Industrial Exposition in celebration of the centennial of the Monroe Doctrine.

The showing of "My American Wife" took place in the observation car of the Broadway Limited, on its way from New York to Chicago over the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad. This was the first time that a picture was ever shown on a Pennsylvania limited train.
