"The Untamable," directed by Herbert Blache from Gelet Burgess' "The White Cat," has been completed at Universal.

Jane Murfin has finished "The Sign," with her co-director, Justin H. McClosky. It has an all-star cast for First National written by Miss Murfin and Jane Cowl.

The production of "When a Man's a Man," Sol Lesser's first of the Harold Bell Wright novels, is nearing completion. The company got back from Prescott, Ariz., this week, and will finish at the Lesser studio. The destruction of several large sets by a sand storm while on location was reported.

Mack Sennett will not permit Mabel Normand to rest. She will finish "The Extra Girl," in about two weeks, and almost immediately will start on "Mary Ann." Sennett regards "The Extra Girl," as the best picture he has ever made, and Miss Normand is said to have done her best work in it.

PROPOSE DEVELOPMENT OF COSMOART STUDIO

Los Angeles, Cal.—Approximately $3,000,000 are involved in the proposed development of the Cosmoart studio property, purchased by Charles Ray. The property consists of twenty acres on which a picture plant with a capacity of about a dozen producing units will be built.

The most important structure of the studios proper will be a new administration building that is designated to excel anything of the kind in Southern California. There will be a spacious sunken garden with its natural lake, bridges, paved drives and parkways.

Besides the studios proper, the new Charles Ray Enterprises will erect apartment houses and business structures on the site.

ORGANIZE NEW CLUB

Hollywood.—Led by Rosemary Theby, an active committee, representing the leading film actresses here, is formulating plans for organizing The Nunnery, a club which will provide a haven of rest and retirement for an hour, an evening, or a month from the bustle of the studios and crowding social engagements which fill the leisure hours of screen actresses. The Nunnery will be erected in a quiet spot out in the foothills.

Miss Theby is giving every spare moment to the details of the new organization. A screen actress must have had at least a year's experience in leading roles to be eligible for the club. The name has no religious significance.

Change Announced for Physical Distribution

New York.—Since the announcement of the formation of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of Canada (Ltd.), formed for the purpose of handling the sales of Hodkinson Pictures in the Dominion of Canada, a change in the physical distribution of the product has been announced.

According to the new plan the distribution will be handled exclusively for the entire Dominion by the Canadian Educational Films, Ltd. This organization maintains offices in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg and Vancouver and in each office there will be at least one, and maybe more, Hodkinson representatives.

This new source of distribution, it is stated, offers not only better facilities and an assurance of more efficient service, but it will give the exhibitor a neutral channel through which they can secure the Hodkinson product.

Marshall Neilan Not to Leave Goldwyn

EASTERN MONEY IN NEW STUDIO DEAL

Hollywood Plant Goes to New Owners in Quietly Con- cluded Negotiations

Hollywood.—The Hollywood Studios, one of the largest production centers here, have been sold to a syndicate of eastern capitalists represented by R. V. Morrison and including the Standard Film Laboratories, of Hollywood, and William Siström, of New York, formerly manager of Universal City who represents unnamed interests. It is understood $1,500,000 was paid for the property including ten acres of valuable Hollywood land, studio buildings and up-to-the-minute equipment. More than $1,000,000 is to be spent on improvements.

The Hollywood Studios were conceived five years ago by John Jasper, who has been long in the industry. He formerly was with David Horsley and later general manager for Charles Chaplin. The joint owners are Jasper, S. E. Toberman, Hollywood contractor and C. W. Bradford. Together they made the plant one of the most modern in the vicinity where independent producers of moderate means could make pictures with facilities equal to those of the larger organizations.

Five companies are working there at present, and Harold Lloyd is just getting settled there for his future production.

Well Known Names Listed in Cast of Second Youth

New York.—The cast for "Second Youth" has been completed, according to announcement from the offices of Distinctive Pictures Corporation, and it is said to include many funmakers. In addition to the comedians there are four or five dramatic parts in the cast.

In this picture, Alfred Lunt goes in seriously for fun-making, while Jobyna Howland, Walter Catlett and Herbert Cortell are chiefs of the fun-making staff with Lynn Fontanne adding a bit of Greenwich Village character work.

Mimi Palmeri has the feminine lead. Others in straight dramatic parts are Margaret Dale, Winifred Allen, Faire Binney, Lumsden Hare, Charles Lane, Hugh Huntley and Robert McWade.

"Second Youth" will be distributed by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan.

American Pictures Growing Popular, Says Christie

Hollywood.—"American producers are in complete charge of the comedy markets abroad," said Al Christie, who returned from six weeks in Europe this week. "Not only that but American pictures as a whole are growing more popular with foreign audiences, who know the names of the stars as well as do our own people," he added.

Christie reports that European film producers are making a large number of spectacular photoplays, and are especially proficient in making big historical pageants, but the average star picture or feature production is entirely in the hands of American directors so far as the majority of productions shown abroad are concerned.

The comedy producer visited several countries accompanied by Harty D. Edwards, his production manager. While he has loaned Dorothy Devore to Fox for one picture, he says, she will be back on the Christie lot for new productions as soon as she is finished.

NEILAN RETURNING TO GOLDWYN STUDIOS

New York.—Marshall Neilan, who has been in this city for a few weeks, is preparing to return within a short time to the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Calif., to begin work on a new production. Neilan came East after finishing photography on "The Rendezvous" for a brief vacation and on personal business.

He is now ready to begin work on his fourth picture for Goldwyn, a new screen version of Thomas Hardy's novel, "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," in which his wife, Blanche Sweet, will play the leading role. While in New York, Neilan completed most of his editorial work on "The Rendezvous" and consulted with the Goldwyn home office on the release of his previous Goldwyn production, "The Eternal Three," made from his own scenario.

VAUDEVILLE CIRCUIT FOR ARMY THEATRES

New York City.—Thomas H. Martell, director of bookings of the War Department theatres, has planned a vaudeville circuit for army theatres which may reach 25 playing weeks. The War Department operates 110 theatres in this country and Panama showing only pictures. In some camps vaudeville has been added.

Mr. Martell will play four acts in his theatres and is employing Keith and Amalgamated service. The army picture theatres charge 15 cents admission. The vaudeville scale will range up to 50 cents.

Mr. Martell is an ex-showman, having been manager of the Lyceum Theatre, Rochester, before the war.

Vignola Begins Actual "Shooting" on Yolanda

New York.—After considerable advance preparation, actual "shooting" on "Yolanda" has been begun by Robert G. Vignola at the Cosmopolitan Studio. Marion Davies is the star and the production is being made for Cosmopolitan. This is Mr. Vignola's first production since his return from a six months' tour of the world.

The story by Charles Major offers big possibilities for scenic splendor and effects besides being a romantic drama. Phil Carle, who has been Mr. Vignola's assistant during the making of other productions, will function in the same capacity during the making of this feature.

Albert A. Kidder, Jr., in New York For Conference

New York.—Albert A. Kidder, Jr., general manager of Charles Ray Production, Inc., is on a business visit to this city and expects to remain two or three weeks. It is understood that his trip from the west coast is partly in connection with "The Courtship of Myles Standish," the production of the latter organization.

Other matters to which Mr. Kidder is giving attention have to do with the studio project recently set afoot in Los Angeles by the Charles Ray Enterprises Corporation, of which he is president.

FIRST BOOKING OF LOYAL LIVES

Vitagraph's Special Will Be Shown at the Marion Theatre, July 15-21

New York.—The first booking and exploitation tieup of "Loyal Lives," Vitagraph's romance of the life of a mail carrier, is announced in the placing of this picture at the Marion theatre, Marion, Ohio, for the week of July 15-21. The Ohio Convention of Postmasters and Rural Mail Carriers will be held at Marion on July 16 and 17. The management of the theatre is arranging special performances for the employes of the postal service while visiting in Marion.

Harry S. New, Postmaster General, who played a part in the picture, will attend the convention. It will be Postmaster General New's first opportunity to see the finished product. He has already given his heartiest endorsement to the picture and in a letter to Whitman Bennett, the producer, said:

"In my opinion it will be substantially beneficial in conveying to the public a better understanding of the unfailing, untiring and loyal service rendered by the employes of this great department of the Government, and in increasing the pride of the men in the great work they perform."

Further endorsement of "Loyal Lives" comes from Ferdinand L. Douglas, president of the New York Letter Carriers' Association, Empire Branch, No. 36 of New York, Mr. Douglas said:

"This picture arouses every human emotion, has its heart throbs and also provides amusement which will please the fancy of any audience in the United States. It also will impress upon the public the magnitude of our great postal service in all its multiplied operation."

Nip and Tuck Released Aug. 12

New York.—August 12 has been selected by Pathe as the release date for "Nip and Tuck," Mack Sennett all-star two-reel comedy in the first series of six offerings. This was directed by Roy Del Ruth under the supervision of F. Richard Jones. The all-star cast is composed of the pick of the Sennett comedians, featuring such well-known players as Billy Bevan, Harry Gribbon, Kewpie Morgan, Alberta Vaughn, Mildred June and Canico, the comedy duo.

Seastrom Completes Cast

Los Angeles.—Victor Seastrom, now making "The Master of Man" for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has completed the cast for that picture. Hobart Bosworth is the last player to be selected. He will have the role of Douglas Stowell, Deemster of the Isle of Man, and father of Victor Stowell, the leading character in the picture, who later becomes Deemster.

Lincoln J. Carter With Fox

New York.—Lincoln J. Carter, whose two plays "The Eleventh Hour" and "The Fast Mail" have both been translated to the screen by William Fox, has been appointed a member of the production department of the West Coast Studios of Fox Film Corporation.

The Barometer

Hollywood.—This week saw the largest number of features completed in any one week since the beginning of the present high pressure production. Every studio is snapping up work in order to finish the output in time for early fall release and to lay out new production schedules. Shooting was finished this week on:

"In the Days of Daniel Boone," serial directed by William Craft, Frank Messenger and Joy Marchant featuring Jack Mower and Eileen Sedgewick for Universal release.

"Havoc," directed by Harry Garson, all-star cast for Universal release.

"Loving Lies," directed by W. S. Van Dyke for Allied release.

"The Meanest Man in the World," directed by Eddie Cline, starring Bert Lytell for First National.

"The Printer's Devil," directed by William Beaudine, starring Wesley Barry for Warner Bros.

"Daughters of the Rich," directed by Louis J. Gasnier for Al Lichtman.

"Men in the Raw," directed by George K. Marshall, starring Jack Hoxie for Universal.

"Yesterday's Wife," starring Eileen Percy for independent release.

"To the Last Man," directed by Victor Fleming for Paramount.

"After the Ball," directed by Dallas Fitzgerald for Independent release.

"Bartered Flesh," directed by Lule Warrenton, first picture of the all-women company made at San Diego, for independent release.

"Why Do We Live," directed by Norbert Nyles for independent release.

"Lights Out," directed by Al Santell for independent release.

"The Love Brand," directed by Stuart Patron, starring Roy Stewart for Universal.

"The Tango Cavalier," directed by Charles Seeling, starring George Larkin for Aywon release.

"Whose Baby Are You?" directed by King Baggott, starring Baby Peggy for Universal.

Chosen for Role of Diana

New York.—Bebe Daniels, who returned to this city recently from a personal appearance tour of Eastern and Middle West cities, has been chosen by Sam Wood to play the role of Diana Kayne in his production of Arthur Train's novel, "His Children's Children," which is now being filmed at the Paramount Long Island studio.

Clara Beranger Going to Coast

New York.—Clara Beranger, scenario writer for William de Mille's productions for Paramount, will leave here about July 23 for her regular semi-annual visit to Los Angeles and Paramount's West Coast studio. She will confer with Mr. de Mille on the cutting and editing of "Spring Magic."

John Rosenfield, Jr., Married

New York.—John Rosenfield, Jr., for a long time associated with the Division of Exploitation of Famous Players-Lasky, was married to Claire Burger of Brooklyn on July 5. The marriage took place in Borough Hall, Brooklyn.

The Wanters Completed

New York.—The arrival in this city of the first completed print on the John M. Stahl Production, entitled "The Wanters" is expected daily. The release through Associated First National is scheduled for early in September.

TRISTONE TO DISPOSE OF MANY SCENARIOS

New York.—H. E. Aitken of the Tristone Pictures is organizing a department to place on the market the rights of that company in Triangle and Keystone stories.

Mr. Aitken is authority for the statement that no broker or individual has been given the right to sell or negotiate for the scenario rights.

Brockell Promoted and Eschman New Manager of Distribution

New York.—Floyd M. Brockell, who for the past several years has been in charge of distribution of Associated First National Pictures, is to relinquish that position to engage in special work for the same company. Mr. Brockell's promotion takes effect on July 16.

E. A. Eschmann, a veteran in the field of motion picture distribution, and at present sales manager for Pathe, will become the new First National manager of distribution.

To Feature Jack Barrie

New York.—Formerly well-known as a juvenile, Jack Barrie is to be featured in six productions to be screened by the Basil Enterprise Corporation at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn. Camera work is scheduled to start July 16. The first picture will be "The Reincarnation," by S. Ernest Deva-Lal, an East Indian writer of mystery and Oriental stories.

Jack Barrie recently appeared with Edith Roberts and Alfred Lunt in "Backbone," with Richard Barthelmess in "Fighting Blade," and also with George Arliss in "The Green Goddess."

Mary Pickford Changes

Title of Her New Picture

Hollywood.—Mary Pickford has changed the name of her new picture from "The Street Singer" to "Rosita," and it will be released under that title. It has been titled and is almost ready for a New York showing. Having completed the pictures sooner than she expected, Miss Pickford has decided to hasten the production of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." It is now in preparation, and all that remains is the selection of a director and the cast, now being considered.

Red Gap Appears On Map

Los Angeles.—Red Gap, the mythical town in the state of Washington where Harry Leon Wilson placed much of the action of his novel, "Ruggles of Red Gap," has sprung into actual existence overnight near Eureka, California, for the filming of this story by Paramount.

The French Doll Premiere

Hollywood.—Reports from Metro indicate that the New York fall premiere of Mae Murray's newest picture, "The French Doll" recently completed, is to be a notable occasion. No theatre has been announced but an unusual presentation will in all probability mark the event.

RUPERT OF HENTZAU HELD OVER

New York.—"Rupert of Hentzau" the Myron Selznick Master Picture, will be held over at the Mark Strand Theatre for another week.

BANKS OF WABASH IS BLACKTON'S FIRST

New York.—The first of the J. Stuart Blackton Productions to be released by Vitagraph is "On the Banks of the Wabash," a story inspired by the famous American Song Classic written by Paul Dresser. Commodore Blackton obtained the exclusive world rights to the song through arrangements with Edgar Seldon. Elaine Sterne was engaged to write the scenario.

A typical all star Blackton cast will be seen in the picture. Distinguished stage and screen stars are being engaged for this picture.

As the title indicates the locale of the story is on the banks of the Wabash; it is laid in a small town which Progress has passed by. The love interest centers around a boy and a girl of the village. The picture is filled with these delightful human touches for which Blackton Productions have been famous.

Virginia Valli Returning to Screen After Illness

Los Angeles.—Elaborate plans are being laid by Universal for future starring vehicles for Virginia Valli, now starring in "A Lady of Quality" which Hobart Henley is making. This elaborate costume drama marks Miss Valli's resumption of screen activity after an eight months' lapse, due to an attack of pneumonia.

Several stage productions are being considered for adaptation as future vehicles for Miss Valli, and it is probable she will later be seen in a picture version of a Broadway success. "The Storm," her last production before her illness, was, it will be remembered, also a stage hit.

Heller Heads Laboratory of Reelab Corporation

New York.—Having been remodelled and equipped with the latest machinery, the Eclair Film Laboratory at Fort Lee, N. J., formerly occupied by the Fox Film Corporation has been acquired by the Reelab Corporation, lately formed. The plant is admirably situated, is spacious and light and is described as containing every known safe-guarding device.

This film laboratory, although a brand new institution, is officered by capable film and business men and is under the supervision of A. Heller, who has about twenty years' successful association with laboratories and was until recently in charge of the Kineto Company at Irvington, N. Y. Mr. Heller is president and general manager.

M. A. Horowitz, a successful manufacturer, is treasurer. The secretary is S. H. Horowitz, son and business associate of the president. J. A. Kent is vice-president and sales manager and is in charge of the sales department.

Selznick Will Distribute

The Cricket on the Hearth

New York.—The Selznick Distributing Corporation, announces through Myron Selznick, vice-president, the acquisition and early release of the Paul Gerson production, "The Cricket on the Hearth," an adaptation of Charles Dickens' story of the same name.

This is a picture depicting the English rural life with which Dickens was so thoroughly familiar.

Two Fox Films On Broadway

New York.—September 1st will see two William Fox productions running on Broadway. One of these is "If Winter Comes," which will be shown at the Times Square Theatre. The other is "Monna Vanna," which will have its premiere at the Central Theatre.

Happenings in the Independent Field

BILLIE RHODES

FEATURE STAR

Grand-Asher Production Units Making Rapid Strides on Comedies and Features

Los Angeles.—Sameul V. Grand, of the Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation announces that Billie Rhodes will be starred in feature-length comedies to be made at the Berwillia Studios by Ben Wilson. At present Miss Rhodes is leading woman for Joe Rock in Grand-Asher comedies, but after one or two more of the short pictures will relinquish that place to embark on the more expansive sea of feature photoplays.

The first picture will be started perhaps within six weeks. It will be a comedy-drama. Several stories are now being considered.

Production on the schedule mapped out by Grand-Asher is going at full swing at the Los Angeles studios. "The Love Trap," a Ben Wilson production which will be a Grand-Asher feature, has been completed at the Berwillia studio. It was directed by John Ince and will star Bryant Washburn and Mabel Forrest. The third of this series will be "Other Men's Daughters" which was put into work on July 10th under the direction of Mr. Wilson.

The series of twelve two-reel comedies for each of three stars are also traveling along. Thus far six Monty Banks subjects have been completed; Sid Smith has finished seven of his; and Joe Rock with Billie Rhodes are now working on their fifth.

ALPINE SPORTS

THRILL NEW YORK

New York.—Patrons of the Capitol Theatre once again had a demonstration of the screen's ability to convey the thrills and amusement produced by nature as those concocted in studios when "The Chase" took up the burden usually placed on the "feature photoplay" in the program offered by S. L. Rothafel the week of July 3rd. "The Chase" was imported from Europe by Jacob Fabian and its revelation of the stunts and antics of Alpine ski experts were found "thrilling" by the reviewers of the New York dailies. Neither the reviewers or public found any cause for complaint because there was no feature photoplay on this diversified bill presented at the Capitol.

"Once 'The Chase' is started there are thrills aplenty," said the Evening Telegram reviewer, while Don Allen of the Evening World compared it to one of the biggest thrillers of the screen. He said "If you gasped at Harold Lloyd's scaling the walls of the twelve-story building in 'Safety Last' you'll take leave of your breath entirely at some of the thrills during this icy game of hare and hounds."

TRUART FILM CLOSES

LOS ANGELES RUN

Los Angeles.—"Broadway Gold," the Truart production starring Elaine Hammerstein closed a successful run at the California Theatre. The picture won praise from the press, the Los Angeles Examiner reviewer finding it "A highly entertaining, fastmoving feature."

This picture is scheduled for general release on the independent market in September but some pre-releases have already been played and others booked. The Granada Theatre in San Francisco is booked to play "Broadway Gold" in the near future and is planning an elaborate exploitation campaign. Another first-run which has been scheduled for showing immediately prior to the Fall season is the Randolph Theatre, Chicago. The Randolph has booked the feature for an extended engagement.

STANDARD SALES

FORCE CONVENES

New York.—Irving M. Lesser, Vice-president and general manager of distribution of Principal Pictures Corporation, returned to New York from Cleveland where he attended the one day convention of branch managers and selling force of Standard Film Service.

"Principal insists that its product be sold to the exhibitor on the same basis that the territorial buyers acquire their rights, that all productions must be screened and approved by the prospective purchaser before any contracts are accepted," Mr. Lesser told the assembled field men called together by Harry Charnas, president and general manager of Standard Film Service, to hear first hand some of the Principal sales policies.

The conference lasted from ten in the morning until nine o'clock at night. Mr. Charnas presided at the meeting and among the branch managers present were Mr. Fisher, of the Pittsburgh exchange; Mr. Lefkowitz of Cincinnati; Mr. Lebensberger of Cleveland; and Mr. Fishman of Detroit.

WARNER CONVENTION

AT CHICAGO JULY 15

New York.—The first annual convention of the exchangemen handling Warner Brothers product will be held at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, July 15-16. Practically every exchange that has contracted for the Warner series will be represented at the meeting which, according to Abe Warner, will mark the beginning of a series of annual conventions to formulate plans for the exploitation and exhibition of their pictures.

According to the announced plans Warners will launch a publicity and exploitation campaign calling for the expenditure of five million dollars.

Total 1,300,000 Feet

New York.—David J. Mountan, manager of the Foreign Department of Arrow Film Corporation, announcing new sales of comedies, novelties and features for France, Belgium, the United Kingdom, Spain, Portugal and Switzerland, points out that in the first six months of 1923 Arrow has shipped 1,300,000 feet of positive film to foreign markets. Mr. Mountan reports "an ever-increasing volume of foreign sales being made by his concern," and states that the remaining six months of the year should prove even greater from a business standpoint than those just closed.

Hirsh On Return Trip

LOS ANGELES TO GET

WARNER PREMIERES

Hollywood.—A change of policy in regard to first showings of their output is to be made by Warner Bros. Hereafter all of their premieres are to take place in Los Angeles with a second showing in San Francisco and after that New York will see them. Harry Rapf is the man responsible for this change. He contends that since the pictures are made in Hollywood under Hollywood conditions it is only fair to give the people of the vicinity the first chance to see them. It is understood Rapf had to put up quite an argument to gain his point, but now Warner Bros. exploitation department is being enlarged to meet the change.

The first picture under the new arrangement to have its premiere here will be "Where the North Begins" which has finally been selected as the permanent title of "The White Silence" made under the working title of "Wolf Fang" and directed by Chet Franklin. The preview of "Little Johnny Jones," however, was staged at the California Theatre at Anaheim, where the star, Johnny Hines, made a personal appearance and both picture and star received big applause.

PRINCIPAL TO MAKE

SCIENTIFIC FILMS

Los Angeles.—Principal Pictures Corporation, through its president, Sol Lesser, has contracted with the Louis H. Tolhurst laboratory for the use of its equipment and microscopical processes in the making of non-theatrical as well as theatrical pictures.

Years of experimentation by the Tolhurst laboratory have resulted in the development of equipment which solves the difficult problems of lighting and photography of microscopic objects. The Bee is the subject of the first picture, already completed. It will be made in two versions, one for regular theatre presentation and the other scientific in treatment. It will be released soon.

Enterprise Buys Burr Films

New York.—Distribution rights in the Southern States and Middle Western territory for the C. C. Burr features "Secrets of Paris," "The Last Hour," and "You are Guilty," have been acquired by the Enterprise Distributing Corporation in a deal recently closed between C. C. Burr and William J. Jenkins, general manager of Enterprise, which maintains seven branch offices throughout the South and Middle West in addition to the main offices of the concern in Atlanta.

Richard Talmadge With Truart

Hollywood.—Richard Talmadge has been added to the list of stars whose productions are being franchised on the independent market by Truart Film Corporation.

The star was signed by Carlos Productions, Inc., for a series of features for distribution by Truart. The first Richard Talmadge production will be ready for release in September.

Elected Pyramid President

New York.—Arthur Smallwood has been elected president of the re-organized Pyramid Pictures, Inc., which will produce at least eight pictures the coming season. This list includes "Wife in Name Only," "The Deerslayer," "Dixie," "The Broadway Butterfly," "Annie Laurie" and "Tiati-ana."

Short Subjects and Serials

ROUSSEAU TELLS OF TRIP ABROAD

Pathe's Foreign Manager Says Comedies and Shorts Are in Demand

Arthur E. Rousseau, Pathe's foreign manager, who just returned from Europe, declares that foreign exhibitors are waking up to the fact that their programs must be improved and that the short subject is one solution to their trouble. During his three months on the other side, Mr. Rousseau traveled through France, England, Italy, Austria and other important points in Central Europe.

"Conditions are about the same as they are here," Mr. Rousseau states. "Big pictures go over big, and small pictures do not. There are long runs also given to the better productions, as in this country. Foreign showmen are just beginning to see that there is something wrong with their programs and are looking toward the short subject for the first time as a program builder.

"There seems to be a big demand for comedy and comedy drama. Europe still feels the effect of the war and they want to be amused and made to laugh. Photographs with funny situations and a happy ending get the biggest box-office returns. The 'Our Gang' comedies have established themselves as big favorites over there, as well as the new two-reel Roach comedies starring Snub Pollard. Harold Lloyd is going big abroad and 'Safety Last' is a big sensation.

"An interesting insight concerning serials," Rousseau continued, "is the fact that the American chapter play of the better type is making a big come-back and winning supremacy over the French serial, which was always a great favorite abroad.

"Concerning foreign production," Mr. Rousseau concluded, "it is interesting to note the majority of the producers in Europe are making big pictures on a gigantic scale for the American market. They are, for the most part, abandoning the idea of producing small features, as they realize that they can secure all the program pictures they need for their own theatres from the American producer."

Mr. Alex Hague, Pathe's representative from Bombay, India, returned with Mr. Rousseau. It is Mr. Hague's intention to purchase rights to some big American specials which he will exploit for long runs in conjunction with Pathe short subjects and serials.

New Century Series Work Starts

"Pools First," the third of the Century Follies Girls series of two-reel comedies, is in the first stages of production.

Although the third of the series, this officially becomes the first of a series of twelve planned by Julius and Abe Stern. The other two, "High Kicker" and "Round Figures," have already been set for release.

Noel Smith is directing it, and it is said he may assume charge of the Follies unit after he completes this comedy.

Film Committee Endorses Picture

Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, President of the Better Films Committee for Atlanta, has sent Pathe an unqualified endorsement to the "Spirit of Lincoln."

This film, made in conjunction with the Lincoln Memorial University of Tennessee, depicts the struggle of the young men of the Tennessee hills for education.

Beside the endorsement of the Better Films Committee of Atlanta, this picture has also been endorsed by the Daughters of the American Revolution all of whose local chapters are co-operating in local exploitation.

Educationals Booked for Summer

B. F. Keith's Castle Theatre, Long Beach, Long Island has contracted for the entire current season's product of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. The house will remain open during the summer months only.

Pathe Burlesque Gets Bookings

Among the theatres that have already arranged to show Hal Roach's burlesque, "The Uncovered Wagon," are the Eastman Theatre in Rochester, New York, the Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia, and the Grand Theatre in Pittsburgh.

Work Starts On New Patheserial

The announcement comes from Pathe that work is rapidly getting under way for the new Patheserial, "The Way of a Man," from the pen of Emerson Hough. George B. Seitz is directing. Allene Ray has been engaged for the leading feminine role and Harold Miller is to be in the leading masculine role.

Stern Brothers to Celebrate

On July 25 Julius and Abe Stern, officials of Century Film Corporation, will celebrate their twelfth year of motion picture producing. In commemoration they will meet in New York on that date.

Authentic releasing plans, conferences with Universal officials and a birthday party will be part of the celebration.

Engle-Earle Story Now Ready

The first story for the new series of Century Comedies with Jack Earle, the giant, and Billy Engle is in readiness. Both comedians, who are on their vacations, have received their calls by wire from Abe Stern, studio official. The temporary title is "Swifter Than Glue."

New Comedy Ready for Buddy

Al Herman has finished "Forward Pass," the football comedy with Buddy Messinger, and has commenced work on "The Inventor" with the same young comedian.

This present comedy for the Century company will make Herman's fourth two-reel production with Buddy. Several of those who appeared in the former picture, will again be seen in this story.

It seems a splendid rule to commence every show with either the news reel or something lively or novel. Audiences should always be greeted cheerfully and made to feel from the beginning that you only offer entertainment. Hence the presentation title, which every theatre will eventually afford.

Concerning the News, which even the old writers term "The manna of the day," people will always demand these brief accounts of daily-world events. It is vital to all of us.

Those who carry the full program have learned that it is best to begin with the news reel, followed by the novelty, then the feature and, finally, the comedy.

"Send 'em out laughing, or at least happy" is the motto of every enterprising exhibitor.

* * * *

Just where to place the announcement of coming attractions is often a problem with exhibitors. These interruptions should be found on the end of the show, but care should be observed that they do not appear when least receptive. These can be shifted sometimes to follow the feature, and especially if the longer picture receives the least response. Patrons should be permitted to continue their comedy laughs before reading either film or slide proclamations.

* * * *

There is too much use of cheap puns and burlesquing of titles in many of the better short comedies, sometimes without heed how they react upon patrons. For a few examples, a comedian asks "why is Thanksgiving," and thereby offers resentment in the burlesquing of an old American classic. "Hodge Podge," which really means disorder and irregularity, is a misleading title attached to the exceptional scenes and other film product produced by Lyman H. Howe. Also, a dozen or more better titles could have been given to "Dogs of War," which is probably the best of the "Our Gang" comedies that Robert McGowan has directed.

Why producers are not more careful with regard to titles is difficult to understand, and especially at a time when greater effort is made to play up the smaller pictures.

* * * *

Jazz, and plenty of it, belongs with the showing of cartoons and other lively pictures. Patrons demand this kind of music. Besides, it serves to put over any fast-moving picture.

* * * *

About the new market of Shorts, we say "Yes, we have no bananas," which verily means the supply is good.

"Three Strikes" (2-r Educational) is a scream both in titles and the funny doings of a college class which hits the Rocky Mountain trail in a Henry.

"Dogs of War" (2-r Pathe) has much to do with Kelly's tomato patch and should be the talk of your neighborhood. It is the latest and perhaps the best of the Our Gang comedies.

"Kinky" (1-r Educational) will go big with the lovers of slapstick. The reel is very funny and also short enough.

"Collars and Cuffs" (1-r Pathe) is all about water, soap and laundries. It is full of falls and uproarious comedy.

"Where is My Wandering Boy This Evening?" (2-r Pathe) is a Ben Turpin delirium, with vampires, nighties and daisy fields assisting. It is splendid nonsense.

"Day Dreams," featuring Buster Keaton, is a more sober comedy. It is not up to the best Keaton pictures.

"Bum Slickers" (1-r Universal) is an amusing tramp comedy with several splendid gags. The leads of Bert Roach and Neely Edwards should be repeated in several such comedies.

What has become of the old-fashioned Nighty Night title that used to see us on our way with thoughts, "Like a sable curtain starred with gold, Drawn o'er our labours past, shall close the scene?"

On the dock at Unalaska Glennister meets Helen, bound for the Yukon on a secret mission. At Nome Helen seeks the unscrupulous lawyer, Struve, for whom she carries papers of importance. A street brawl breaks out in the heart of the lawless city and Roy protects the girl from flying bullets with his own body. It develops that crooked politicians are creating a scheme to rob pioneers of their claims. Roy is disheartened because the machinery of the law is controlled by crooks. The arrival of an old sweetheart Cherry Malotte, beautiful adventuress, fails to cheer him. Roy and his partner stage a thrilling night robbery of their own mine. In this they are aided by Helen. Cherry Malotte, hurt, plots against the man she loves, but in the showdown in the gaming hall she saves him from the Broncho Kid's roulette wheel. Helen now seeks the truth about her uncle's activities and consents to go to a roadhouse with the lawyer, Struve, to get the facts. Struve has laid a trap for her, and Cherry sacrifices everything to save the girl. Meanwhile Roy and his partner have dynamited their mine to keep it from alien hands. Roy learns that Helen is in danger and he hastens to Struve's office where, face to face with the villainous McNamara he decides to settle all accounts. Here is staged the most famous fight of Yukon history, and Roy triumphant in battle is equally successful in love. Helen accepts him.

By HOWARD MCLELLAN

It's a meaty picture—"The Spoilers." One understands after viewing it why Jimmy Grainger has corralled a lot of important bookings for it.

The accuracy with which Jesse Hampton has reproduced the Alaskan gold coast, made memorable by the Rex Beach novel, is, to our notion, an answer to the popular demand for faithful representation rather than gaudy, overdone settings. This is not the big thing in the picture by any means but we stress it here because of a desire to note changes for the better in production wherever and whenever made.

Apparent everywhere in the picture is the desire of the maker to handle this version in a bigger and better way; to show his public that men and methods in film production have changed. The fight in the first Spoilers which was, in those days, an epic and which became a model for other picture fights, is not to be compared with the battle which occurs in the new picture. Book cases, chairs, tables and clothes closets in this fight are not pulled over by the hidden hand of a member of the director's staff. It is a real fight, as though Milton Sills or Noah Beery had actually said some rough things about the other's family and they let Marquis of Queensberry rules go to pot while they settled it on a man to man basis. You may wonder if Milton Sills, whose good looks have heretofore given him public favor, can fight. Well, he can.

Of course no picture seeking public fancy on the basis of a single fight in it is going

Again Hunting Out The Box Office Winners

On the alert to pick out and analyze the pictures that mean much to our readers three members of the Staff were detailed to preview "The Spoilers" and report on its box office values.

One member of the staff saw the original screen version of "The Spoilers" and compares this newest version to the old. Miss Reed another staff writer reviews it from a woman's standpoint.

to get the big money. We have seen fight pictures of recent vintage plunge box offices into deepest mourning. "The Spoilers" by no means hinges on this fight episode. There is a scene of the blowing up of mines that should call forth criticism from the Society to Prevent Risk of Life—if such a society exists. Timbers, whole floors, roofs, boulders and what-not fall upon the players with all the earnestness of a real explosion. Couldn't have been otherwise.

We have pointed out the thrills. Now to the theme that holds the thrills together and makes the story big, wholesome and pleasant. The love of Cherry Malotte, the most famous book character in the fiction history of the Yukon, is seasoned as it should be, a big love but one that must not in the rules of the game reach its goal. And this seasoning—a little pepper and a little salt—a dash of sex appeal then a pinch of hero worship—fits Cherry Malotte's type and helps paint the true adventuress audiences like to see. Anna Nilsson is a fine Cherry Malotte—the blonde vamp of Nome's early days.

It's a box office picture—pure, unadulterated entertainment—nothing fancy, nothing strange—just meat. Lemon pie sniffers and whipped cream inhalers will lay off this picture. Red blooded people and folks who would like to redden their blood will eat it up.

By DENA REED

As a rule, women don't like pictures of Alaska, because they are sure to be plentifying, rougher fights, and not one Paris fully sprinkled with shootings, rough ridgown. But one can get fed up on society dramas and an occasional rought-and-ready "man" picture is good as a change, to restore the appetite for the tamer stuff.

Although "The Spoilers" is of the blood and thunder variety, it succeeds pretty well in holding feminine interest. The picture is a little long. The situations of a damsel in distress, an unscrupulous politician, judge and shyster using the law to further their own interests in working a gold mine; the regeneration of a man through his love for a woman and the dance-hall girl's relinquishment of the man she loves, are old ones, but they are blended cleverly enough to keep even the woman who hates "rough pictures" a bit excited in spite of herself. Barbara Bedford, a pleasing, dark-eyed girl, is a satisfactory heroine. Anna Q. Nilsson interprets the role of Cherry, the dance-hall girl, with sympathy and understanding. Women will enjoy her performance.

Noah Beery has one of his famous screen fights with Milton Sills, who plays the hero. This contest is realistic, to say the least. The majority of women will enjoy it.

The fact that Rex Beach wrote the story and that most women have a secret admiration for the virile, "diamond-in-the-rough" type of man ought to insure the photoplay's favorable acceptance by feminine picture-goers.

By GEORGE T. PARDY

About eight years ago Bill Farnum and Tom Santschi put up such a gorgeous, rib-wrecking, face-smashing scrap in "The Spoilers," that all filmdom and movie fans in general were enthusiastically voicing their praise. Also, it was the universal verdict that the picture was a winner at all stages. Now comes Goldwyn with another version of the mining camp classic, a daring venture for any producer, with this precedent to live up to.

But the Goldwyn venture stands today as an apt illustration of the old adage "nothing succeeds like success!" Had the second edition of "The Spoilers" flivvered, its failure wouldn't have created much surprise, for nine out of ten people believed confidently that the Farnum film couldn't be surpassed, especially as regards the great fight scene. Yet the unexpected has happened. It was the writer's fortune to review the old picture and good as it was he can frankly assert that the new feature is the better of the two. This Goldwyn attraction reigns as a marvel of fine technique, exquisite photography, thrills galore, situations handled with such skill that there is never a hitch in the flashing action or an instant when the suspense slackens. And as for the fight between Milton Sills and Noah Beery—it simply beggars description. A veritable whirlwind of flying fists, mangling clinches, rough-house will make timid spectators cower in their seats and the seekers after sensation yell joyously! The oddest thing about the whole business is the transformation of Milton Sills from a portrayer of comparatively mild, inoffensive parlor roles into a scrapping type of such shattering explosive power. Not as big a chap physically as Farnum, what he lacks in weight is amply made up for by his dynamic energy, and the fact that Noah Beery, who looks the part of a human battering-ram, exceeds him in bulk, only serves to swing sympathy to the hero who conquers despite the size handicap.

No exhibitor can be mistaken in booking "The Spoilers." It can be exploited to the limit on the strength of its crashing melodrama, its scenic beauty, its large and talented cast and hair-raising Sills-Beery combat, without fear of a single patron advancing a claim that it does not make good on the advertising barrage.

Rupert of Hentzau

Selznick Distributing Corporation Photoplay in Ten Parts. Adapted From Anthony Hope's Novel of Similar Title. Director, Victor Heerman. Scenario by Edward Montague. Cameramen, Glen MacWilliams and Harry Thorpe. Running Time, Ninety Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Princess Flavia weds King Rudolf of Ruritania for reasons of state, although her heart is with Rudolf Rassendyll of England, who once was able, owing to his wonderful likeness to the monarch, to impersonate and rescue him from conspirators who have vowed his death. Among the conspirators was Count Rupert of Hentzau. The latter, exiled because of his complicity, returns secretly to Ruritania. Flavia, whose husband is dissipated and peevish, writes a letter to Rudolf, which she entrusts to her loyal friend Count Fritz von Tarlenheim. The latter is ambushed by Rupert and the letter taken from him. Rudolf, old Colonel Sapt, Tarlenheim and Lieutenant match their wits against Rupert and the latter's cousin, Rischenheim, to prevent the letter reaching the king. Rudolf lures Rupert to the hunting lodge where the king is staying, intending to meet his enemy. But the plan miscarries, Rupert kills the king and goes to Streslau, where Rudolf is already, with Queen Flavia, who has sought refuge in Tarlenheim's house. Rudolf learns that the king is dead. Rupert sends a message, threatening to reveal to the public the contents of the stolen letter, unless his terms are consented to. Rudolf then visits the room where Rupert is waiting. They engage in a sword duel, Rupert is slain, Rudolf burns the letter. Sapt begs Rudolf to remain as king of Ruritania, but the Englishman's sense of honor prevents compliance. Finally, Rudolf leaves for the frontier, to be joined later by Flavia, who announces her intention of proclaiming a republic and abdicating, so that she will be free to wed her lover.

Well directed, handsomely photographed, cleverly acted and speeding through its ten reels without any slackening of action or a perceptible hitch in the continuity "Rupert of Hentzau" registers far above the average film in point of entertainment values. Those who have seen "The Prisoner of Zenda" will welcome the reappearance of Rudolph Rassendyll, the fair Flavia, gruff old Sapt, the gay, corrupt Rupert and other characters made famous by author Sir Anthony Hope, and those who have not will find little difficulty in picking up the threads of the earlier story, which is clearly set forth in a couple of opening sub titles, and entering into the spirit of its sequel.

The second set of adventures of Rudolf Rassendyll in the mythical kingdom of Ruritania is, like the first, surcharged with thrills, suspense and romance of a most enthralling kind. It is impossible not to be swayed by intense sympathy for the lovely Flavia and her chivalrous lover, or fail to watch with bated breath as hero and villain plot and counterplot, the one to save, the other to tarnish the honor of the helpless queen. It is all extremely melodramatic of course, but there is no denying the emotional strength of the picture, its spectacular appeal and artistic beauty. The sets are magnificent, one interior, that of the marriage of the King and Queen, deserving especial notice for its fine grouping and colorful effects. The great duel scene between Rudolf and Rupert furnishes a tremendously exciting bit of swordplay, with a great finish, which is probably the best of the many stirring situations.

The film version adheres pretty closely to the original narrative, save in the finale, when Queen Flavia declares her intention of abdicating and allowing a republic to be proclaimed, thus leaving her free to spend her future life with Rudolf. Readers of the Hope novel will remember that Rudolf is slain from ambush by one of Rupert's henchmen, just after he has disposed of the master-villain and incriminating letter. Director Victor Heerman saw fit to shape a happier ending, and, judged from a strictly commercial standpoint, he did wisely, even if the literary highbrows condemn his action. Eliminating the hero in the very moment of triumph and leaving the sorely-trying heroine to mourn his loss, would "sour" the romance altogether in the opinion of a huge majority of American movie fans.

As it stands, the picture should prove a valuable box office asset in most localities. It can be exploited as a big spectacular production, offering a story rich in sympathetic lure, strong melodramatic situations and presented by an exceptionally large and clever cast. Elaine Hammerstein registers as a stately and charming Flavia, Bert Lytell's versatility and forceful personality are powerfully expressed in the dual role of the King and Rassendyll, Lew Cody is a debonair, devilish, and withal alluring Rupert, Hobart Bosworth shines as the stern, grimly determined old Colonel Sapt, Bryant Washburn gives an excellent performance as Fritz von Tarlenheim, and other members of the company contribute heavily to the film's success. Desert Driven

F. B. O. Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Wynndham Martyn. Scenario by W. Gittens. Director, Val Paul. Cameraman, William Thornley. Running Time, Seventy Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Bob Harry Carey
Mary Marguerite Clayton
Craydon George Wagner
Ge-Ge Camille Johnson
Yorke Alfred Allen
Leary Charles Le Moyne
Wife Catherine Kay
Sheriff Tom Lingham

Accused of a murder but innocent, Bob is arrested and put in jail. With the fear of an unjust death haunting him, he strains every effort to make his escape and does so in the darkness of night. An officer named Leary goes in pursuit of the fugitive, who finally manages to board a West-bound train. By taking to the desert he throws his pursuers off his track and at length is sheltered in Yorke's home. The latter trusts Bob, despite appearances, and the escaped prisoner proves worthy of the confidence bestowed upon him by carrying out successfully and honestly an undertaking to which his host assigns him. Leary at last strikes his quarry's trail, seizes and handcuffs him. Bob turns on his captor, forces him to mount a horse in his company and they gallop across the desert, where Leary is hurled from the saddle. The arrival of Yorke's daughter, Mary, with whom Bob is in love, changes the aspect of matters, as the girl produces a confession which clears her lover's name. Bob and Mary are united.

This picture, offering a compact plot punctuated with numerous thrills and possessing a fair share of human interest, ranks well above the average melodrama and provides Harry Carey with a suitable role to which he does full justice. No time is wasted in unnecessary preliminaries, the opening reel gets right into its stride at a jump, so to speak, with the wrongfully accused hero making a successful bid for freedom as he breaks jail and vanishes under cover of a night storm which is ripping the heavens apart. This episode is thoroughly convincing, skillfully filmed and subsequent adventures of the fugitive are sufficiently exciting to hold the audience's attention up to the well-turned climax.

Bob's flight across the desert while disabled is alive with realistic action, the love romance is prettily handled and the introduction of Ge-Ge, the little chap who has lost his mother, but finds a protector in the soft-hearted hero, makes a strong

PICKING THE REAL BIG ONES

In our last issue four members of our reviewing staff reported on Merry-Go-Round, all agreeing that it was a big box office picture.

Well, after it's second week at the Rivoli it has been booked for the Rialto, N. Y. City.

How's that for following the big ones?

sympathetic hit. The photography includes a number of very impressive exteriors, the long shots are excellent and clear, distinct lighting distinguishes the entire production.

Harry Carey plays the hero role with his customary dash and energy, nor does he overdo matter at any stage of the picture, his impersonation of Bob showing that resourceful young gent as "a regular fellow," whose bluff honesty and natural ease wins the spectators' favor at once. Marguerite Clayton is captivating in the role of Mary, Camille Johnson gives a daintily artistic performance as the diminutive Ge-Ge and the support as a whole is commendable. The name of the star should be played up prominently in exploiting the feature, especially in the many localities where Harry Carey has a following; and the strength of the story in fast action, thrills and well sustained suspense freely advertised. Three Wise Fools

Goldwyn Photoplay Adapted From the Austin Strong Play of the Same Title. Directed by King Vidor. Length, 6946 feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Findley	Claude Gillingwater
Sydney Fairchild	Eleanor Boardman
Hon. James Trumbull	William H. Crane
Dr. Gaunt	Alec Francis
John Crawshaw	John Sainpolis
Benny	Brinsley Shaw
Gray	Fred Esmelton
Gordon	William Haines
Douglas	Lucien Littlefield
Mickey	Zasu Pitts
Saunders	Martha Mattox
Young Findley	Craig Biddle, Jr.
Young Trumbull	Creighton Hale
Young Gaunt	Raymond Hatton

Findley, Fairchild and Trumbull, three old bachelors, live together in a luxuriously appointed home in Washington Square, New York. They were all in love with the same girl in their youth, but the girl married outside the triumvirate, and with this memory of a great love to hold them stronger in their regard for each other they form a confirmed bachelor circle. A nephew of Findley's comes to live with them, and then the old sweetheart dies and leaves a request to her faithful friends to care for her daughter, Sydney. The girl is a beauty in her late 'teens and the old fellows bask and luxuriate in the charm of her presence. The nephew falls in love with her. But the happiness of the household ends when it is proved that Sydney has aided the escape of a criminal who broke into the home to "get" Judge Trumbull. The old boys drink a bitter cup and believe they have been betrayed. But the nephew loves the girl and believes in her and he brings her back. Then it is proved that Sydney was shielding her father, an escaped jail-bird falsely convicted of forgery. The fathers innocence is established through the confession of the criminal who broke into the bachelor home, the three old friends are again happy and all ends serenely.

With a record as a stage success as its precedent "The Three Wise Fools" is offered in a beautifully produced and finely acted screen version by Goldwyn. The picture is nice entertainment, wholesome and appealing. The spectator's reaction is one of "detached attachment" for the old fellows who harbor a "disappointment" and are making the best of it. The material is rather slight for the treatment accorded it, but the slow portions come in the early and middle sections of the play and therefore an increase of pace toward the end tends to give the spectator a final impression that the picture is completely interesting.

There is much fine acting. William H. Crane, Claude Gillingwater and Alec Francis play the old fellows to the life. Eleanor Boardman improves upon her work in "Souls for Sale" and registers a decided hit as Sydney Fairchild, a role in which she follows up her personal attractions with a skillful performance. Her scene with the three old men following her suspicious actions when the house was broken into is a superb bit of acting and proves the most moving incident in the play. Mr. Vidor's direction seems flawless and the settings and photography are of the highest order.

There is a great human appeal—heart interest—in "The Three Wise Fools" and with a vein of good melodrama to spice the action with scenes of a thrilling escape from prison by a number of convicts, and that events connection with the girl who resides in the highly respectable and expensive home of the three bachelors. It can be billed strongly as a "heart interest drama" with thrills and much humor. The billing should not neglect Eleanor Boardman and reference to her work in "Souls for Sale," nor the fact that there are such fine and celebrated character actors as Crane, Gillingwater and Francis.

Shootin' for Love

Released by Universal. Story by Raymond L. Schrock and Edward Sedgwick. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Length, 5160 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Duke Travis	Hoot Gibson
Mary Randolph	Laura La Plante
Jim Travis	Alfred Allen
Dan Hobson	William Welsh
Sheriff Bludsoe	Arthur Mackley
Sandy	W. T. McCulley
Tex Carson	Kansas Moehring

Duke Travis returned from over seas with a fine war record but also a severe case of shell shock. When he reached home he learned that his father and his sweetheart's father were now the bitterest of enemies. Duke was forbidden to call upon Mary Randolph and because he refused to carry a gun his father accused him of being a coward. When Mary comes to him and tells him that she has been attacked by one of the men on the ranch Duke goes out to get him. A fierce fight takes place and Duke is well on the way to giving the man a good beating until his opponent fires a gun and then Duke goes to pieces and is badly beaten up. Mary and Duke's father comes to the rescue and the villain is driven out of town. After this, matters are amicably settled between the two old men and Duke and Mary are free to wed.

Here is a little romance that will please the devotees of Hoot Gibson although the picture is unreal to a certain degree. For the most part though the film is entertaining and contains enough suspense to carry it over even assuming that the spectator will not feel convinced that the action is true to life. We refer to the situations wherein the father disowns his son because of his cowardice. But the story had to derive a kick from somewhere and the plot was therefore dependent on a different twist to keep it going. The portrayals of the characters in the story are good and Gibson gives his usual good performance. Laura La Plante is also pleasing as the girl. The support is good and the picture should easily satisfy an audience who is not too analytical. J. M. D.

Danger

Clifford S. Elfelt Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Frank H. Clark. Director, Clifford S. Elfelt. Cameraman, J. B. Walker. Running Time, Seventy Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dave Collins	J. B. Warner
Nan Higgins	Lillian Hackett
Tom Blake	B. Brady
Dolores	June LaVere
Judy	Edith Sterling
Mrs. Mechan	Billie Ralt
Phyllis Baxter	Mary Wynn
Jose	W. M. McCormack
Mark Baxter	C. F. Blinn
Dry Wash Jake	Charles Newton

Dave Collins, a Western man, falls in love with a girl whose face and figure he has only seen "in silhouette." Despite this vague and shadowy lure his heart is set on finding the original and he searches far and wide for his charmer. Nan Higgins is left an orphan and fate appoints Dave her guardian. He accepts the trust but confides her to the care of a neighbor who treats her badly. A gang of crooks are on Dave's trail and have vowed to eliminate him from the land of the living. Many complications ensue and Dave finally finds himself in a position where his enemies have him almost cornered. At this juncture Nan intervenes successfully and saves him. Dave suddenly realizes that Nan, instead of the silhouette girl, is the one he really loves and all ends happily.

There is enough snappy action, lurid thrills, lively scraps and love interest in this picture to satisfy the most ardent admirer of films of "the great outdoors" variety. Its plot is altogether out of the ordinary run, the surprise element being strongly in evidence and the mystery surrounding the "silhouette girl" proving a unique factor in arousing the spectators' curiosity.

Too frequently it happens that films dealing with the sort of people and locations set forth in "Danger" offer stories which rely chiefly upon purely melodramatic phases crowded speedily one on top of the other, but painfully obvious in their trend. This fault is agreeably lacking in the present instance, hero Dave Collins' trail is a mighty hard one to anticipate, you never can guess just what is coming next, and the result is a well developed and maintained quality of suspense which culminates in an uncommonly good climax.

Clifford S. Efelt has directed the feature with accuracy and fine judgment. There are many excellent exterior views, including artistic long shots of wide rolling country, with impressive backgrounds, and the lighting throughout is faultless.

J. B. Warner's impersonation of Dave Collins is marked by that clever actor's usual energy and dramatic appeal, Lillian Hackett wins all hearts by her alluring portrayal of pretty Nan Higgins, June LaVere is darkly attractive as the gypsy Dolores and smooth, well-balanced support is accorded the principals by the rest of the company. The picture can be exploited as a fast-moving melodrama with an unusual plot and excellent cast, with especial attention directed to the work of the star. It gives every indication of gaining widespread popularity in the state right field.

Children of Jazz

Paramount Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Harold Brighouse. Scenario by Beulah M. Dix. Director, Jerome Storm. Cameraman, Dev Jennings. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Richard Forestall	Theodore Kosloff
Ted Carter	Ricardo Cortez
Clyde Dunbar	Robert Cain
Babs Weston	Eileen Percy
Lisa Dunbar	Irene Dalton
John Weston	Alec B. Francis
Adam Forestall	Frank Carrier
Blivens	Snitz Edwards
Deborah	Lillian Drew

John Weston and Richard Forestall arrive from a year's trip abroad. They reach the Weston home to find John's daughter, Babs, to whom Forestall is engaged holding a wild jazz party. Incidentally she has managed to become entangled in love affairs with Ted Carter, aviator, and Clyde Dunbar, a married man. Forestall announces that he is through with Babs and goes to an island where his eccentric father resides, living in the style of the year 1850. Dunbar and his wife, Ted Carter and Babs, are in a hydroplane which is wrecked on the Forestall island. Richard appears gives them old-fashioned clothing and rules the quartette with an iron hand. The crew of a schooner belonging to Richard abduct Babs and Mrs. Dunbar. Richard is knocked senseless but Ted and Dunbar go in pursuit via hydroplane, board the ship and, with Richard's aid the crew is subdued. The Dunbars are reunited and Richard wins Babs.

There is a monotonous familiar family likeness stamped on all these plots dealing with jazz, booze, love-as-you-please and the escapades of the younger generation. Invariably the heroine is shown breaking conventions joyously and having the time of her life for a few reels, only to sober down decorously at the finish and wed some chap whose habitual mood is that of the proverbial grave-digger. The principal girl runs true to this formula in "Children of Jazz," which is not without its entertaining moments of comedy and melodrama crashes, and registers, on the whole, as a mildly amusing production which serves to while away an idle hour.

The introduction of an island colony where the inhabitants wear the costumes and stick to the customs of the year 1850 gives an unique twist to an otherwise stereotyped story and furnishes a sharp contrast between times past and present. The hydroplane chase is well handled and puts over quite a trenchant thrill, there is an abundance of beautiful photography, which includes a number of striking marine shots.

Theodore Kosloff is not a convincing figure in the role of Richard Forestall, a part which does not suit his personality or methods, Eileen Percy is engagingly pretty and alluring as the volatile Babs, Ricardo Cortez gives an excellent performance as Ted Carter and the support is well balanced. The picture can be exploited as a combination of jazz stunts and melodrama, an attraction best adapted to the hot weather period.

McGuire of the Mounted

Universal Production in Five Parts. Story by Raymond L. Schrock and Geo. Hively. Scenario by George Hively. Directed by Richard Stanton. Cameraman, Ben F. Kline.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Bob McGuire	William Desmond
Julie Montreau	Louise Lorraine
Katie Peck	Vera James
Andre Montreau	P. J. Lockney
Major Cordwell	William A. Lowery
Mrs. Cordwell	Peggy Browne
Henri	Frank Johnson
Sergeant Murphy	Jack Walters

Bob McGuire, of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, is in love with Julie Montreau, beautiful French-Canadian girl who returns his affection. They plan to wed, but Bob in the performance of his duties has gotten close to the band of opium smugglers and they plan otherwise. The plot is to win Bob over to the side of the smugglers by "framing" a marriage with Katie Peck, whom the smugglers have in their power. Their scheme is successful and to carry things further the smugglers fabricate a situation which brings Bob into a fatal clash with Major Cordwell commanding officer of the police. The major is killed and Bob accused of the murder—but Katie, who has fallen in love with the handsome sergeant, tells her story and her knowledge of the killing frees the hero and paves the way for his marriage to Julie.

A Universal program offering with action laid in the Canadian Northwest, "McGuire of the Mounted" presents William Desmond in a congenial role and provides fair entertainment of a highly conventional sort. The far-famed mounted police of Canadian open spaces are still picturesque, despite the wide exploitation and consequent familiarity to picture goes through photoplays that have gone before "McGuire." The play has action and several of the well-trying melodramatic situations which have come to be a staple on the market of screen entertainment.

The star seems the logical focal-point for the advertising on "McGuire of the Mounted." His role is in line with most of the things he has done in the past and his performance as dashing as the role will permit. There is a display of some good acting in the supporting company. Louise Lorraine as Julie is colorful and Vera James sufficiently drab to fit the part intrusted to her as Katy Peck.

The settings and locations are good and well photographed. "McGuire of the Mounted" will stand up under a campaign emphasizing the out-of-door note and the fact that the star is seen as one of the much-sung heroes of the famous "mounted." The picture pretends to nothing more than outdoor melodrama based on a love romance, and billed as such it should succeed. T. C. K.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

Yellow Gold and Men, Pathe

In this two-reeler of the Range Rider Series, Leo Maloney, dying of thirst, comes to the ranch with his canteen filled with gold nuggets. To protect himself from being sent to prison on a false charge, the ranchman's son steals the canteen, but it is recovered by his sister, who has fallen in love with the newcomer. There is the usual "western stuff" in this picture and will be enjoyed by all who like that sort.

The End of a Perfect Fray, F. B. O.

In the tenth round of the "Fighting Blood" series with George O'Hara and Clara Horton, Judy asks Gale to give up the ring and he promises to do so for her. He is called a quitter and when the girl learns of this she allows him to withdraw his promise. Gale also rescues his rival from the hands of an angry mob and again gets into the good graces of the townspeople. The picture is in two reels and affords some exciting moments.

Jack Frost, Pathe

Snub Pollard, the hired man on a farm at Zero Centre "where it's so cold that the roosters can't crow," saves the farmer from being swindled by a wicked man from the wicked city and wins the farmer's daughter (Marie Mosquini) as a reward. The winter atmosphere of this film makes it good for hot weather. It contains some novel comedy situations.

Pathe Review, No. 28

This reel contains some views of terns and pelicans; shows how marionettes are made and manipulated by "marionette mothers" and brings Fifth Avenue to the South Sea Islands by trick photography. A coast down the Hodzu rapids, in Japan, and some beautiful colored views of the Catskills make up the scenic part of the film.

For Guests Only, Pathe

This is another "hotel" comedy with the usual racing in and out of rooms and up and down in elevators. Paul Parrott is the clerk and Marie Mosquini the telephone operator. Although there are few new situations the old ones can probably be depended upon to draw the laughs.

Haunted Valley, Pathe

In this, the eleventh episode, Ruth is kidnapped on her wedding day by Malison's secretary who loves him. Craig comes to her rescue and she begins to think that she likes him after all. She determines to find out the truth about Malison.

Mysteries of the Sea, Pathe

This is a "fish" story which Henry Cat tells to father Alfafa and depicts the antics of the various species, including dogfish, catfish and porpoise.

Press Comments

American.— . . . cast is capable, the settings are interesting, the atmosphere is carried out well, and the play—but then as they tell us themselves, "Success" is a relative thing. World.—Mary Astor's eyes, nose and chin were the relieving features. Evening Mail.—An effective and thoroughly entertaining moving picture. Evening Journal.—A really fine picture of heart interest. Telegram.—Its authors have managed to capture the spirit and atmosphere

STRAND

- 1. Prelude—Orchestra
2. Mark Strand Topical Review
3. Prologue to Rupert of Hentzau
4. Kupert of Hentzau (Selznick)
5. Organ Solo

Press Comments

American.—There are enough stars to illumine a dozen pictures and the gleam in a single constellation. Herald.—The picture is pretty consistently exciting. Times.—Entertaining in spite of the director, the actors, and the title writers. Tribune.—It is a mighty fine picture. World.—This is another big film of foreign intrigue—one with its moments of beauty and also its moments of inadequacy and over-acting. Evening Mail.—Despite its length "Rupert of Hentzau" has that element of authority which makes one believe that what one sees actually occurred. Sun and Globe.—"Rupert of Hentzau" is a mighty good film. Telegram.—Is better in the film form at the Strand Theatre this week than it

RIALTO

Press Comments

American.—"Children of Jazz" at the Rialto Theatre, is exactly that sort of a film. Times.—The novelty of this production makes it quite pleasing as an entertainment. Tribune.—Is quite as bad as you think it is going to be. Sun and Globe.—A screen production which is enjoyable, to us at any rate. Telegram.—Embracing in its story many situations of dramatic power and thrill. Evening World.—Just one of those pictures.

EXPLOIT MUSIC IN

HOT WEATHER DRIVES

Portland, Ore.—Exploitation of special music features is proving a successful stimulant to picture theatres here during the summer. Two houses which have applied the scheme are the Liberty and the Columbia. Both houses have recorded big business on their special musical programs, which have been exploited with the photo-plays.

Manager Raleigh of the Liberty features a "Better Music" concert every Sunday and regularly plays to capacity houses on these days.

Manager Newman of the Columbia has struck a rich field of exploitation in his "discovery concerts" which he features each week. It is his intention to give the public the best that can be found locally, and his success has more than filled his expectations. The attendance has become so great that Mr. Newman finds it imperative to place reserved seats on sale for this event, during the week. It is almost impossible to secure a seat on Sundays.

PROFIT THE MORAL OF THIS TALE OF A SHIRT

Minneapolis.—When the Blue Mouse was renamed the Lyric Manager Gus Carlson was presented with two things—the one the necessity of some special advertising to feature the change and the other an idea. The idea, in a nut shell, is that persons changing clothes are apt to be on the way to some recreation—a psychological moment which Gus wanted to avail himself of. The solution was a tie-up with several laundries and the means was a shirt card—the heavy paper board used to hold the freshly laundered article in shape.

The cards were printed with lines sufficiently convincing to bring determination out of chaos possibly attacking the suitor or husband wrestling with the problem "now that I'm all dressed up, where shall I go?" The cards read: "Lyric, formerly the Blue Mouse, Minneapolis' own family theatre. Always as cool and comfortable as a clean shirt from Riverside Laundry."

Mr. Carlson made up 20,000 of these cards for one laundry, 10,000 for another, 5,000 for another, 50,000 for another, and 5,000 each for two other laundry concerns in Minneapolis. The stunt, therefore, gives the Lyric a wide circulation for its advertising and brings the message directly into the home in a novel manner. It is one of the best stunts done recently and is worthy of widespread imitation.

BALLYHOOS THE NATIONAL DANCE

Portland, Ore.—In advance of "Black Shadows" the Columbia Theatre management paved the way for the opening with an especially appropriate newspaper campaign. A concise lead story, followed by publicity photos and a two-column ad, and then by two quarter page ads made up the theatre's advertising, in which it emphasized on the native dancing girl angle. A cutout for the Pathe 24-sheet was displayed on the marquee.

The billboard campaign used 100 one-sheets and a number of twenty-four sheets. Black and white photographs, and also a liberal supply of 22x28's decorated the shop windows in the down town business section.

TO EXPLOIT BABY PEGGY

New York.—A Baby Peggy doll and a new song "That's My Baby," featuring a picture of the youthful star on the cover, are two of the recent achievements of the Century company's exploitation department. The doll is being made by Louis Amberg & Son of New York and will soon appear on the market. The manufacturer plans an extensive advertising campaign on the novelty. The song tie-up which also will be used to exploit Baby Peggy is being published by Maurice Abrahams song company of New York. It is dedicated to the star and soon is to be ready for national distribution.

FINDS TIE-UP FOR GOOD WILL ELECTIONS

Bill Robson, Goldwynner, evolved and successfully worked a stunt which enables picture theatres to hook-up with the "Good-Will Election" scheme now carried on on a national basis by the American Committee for Devasted France. The "Good-Will Election" works in the following manner: Big companies are induced by the American Committee to nominate one of their women employes as a candidate and then sell votes for her. The winner is sent to France on a tour of the country including a trip to the battlefields. Robson's stunt, which he worked in Pittsburgh in connection with the showing of "Backbone" at Rowland and Clark's State Theatre, and the Globe Theatre, McKeesport, Pa., is to have tickets sold in the factories or offices of concerns using the "Good Will Election," each ticket taken in at the box office being redeemable at the admission price minus ten cents, the cost of a vote in the election.

The idea worked successfully for the State, which tied-up with the Mackintosh Hemphill Co., of Pittsburgh, and the Globe in McKeesport, which used the scheme in connection with the National Tube Company for the presentation at the Globe of "Lost and Found."

PUTS AD IN SKY AND THERE IT REMAINS

Indianapolis.—If any contrast were needed between the present and last century one has only to compare the stage coach of First National's "The Girl of the Golden West" with the airplane that exploited the picture at the Circle Theatre.

They didn't go after flying records but Ben Caldwell, house artist for the Circle, painted "The Girl of the Golden West" in letters six feet deep, blue on yellow on an exhibition plane.

The Circle Theatre promised to paint the letters out the day after the airplane flew over the fair grounds and entertained an audience of 60,000. It happened that the plane never came to earth conveniently. The chances are it is still carrying the sign; and as it is flying over the entire state of Indiana it now furnishes good exploitation for other exhibitors showing this picture.

DUMB STUNT MAN COLLECTS CROWDS

Mahoney City, Pa.—William Fenelli, advertising manager of the Family Theatre, has a good idea for most shows pigeon-holed in his brain and he used one to splendid advantage with "Safety Last." He took a dummy, dressed it up as Harold Lloyd appears in the feature, invaded the apartments above the Family Theatre and from a third story window he hung the figure, which dangled from the ledge 40 feet above the ground by its fingers, tacked to the window sill. The stunt gave a life-like representation of a man in danger of falling and caused big crowds to stop and wonder.

DISPLAY PROFITABLE SAYS STORE MANAGER

Pittsburgh.—A window display featuring alarm clocks in a tie-up stunt with the State Theatre on "The Last Moment" proved a profitable venture and sold many clocks, Manager Redman of the Liggett Drug Store told Goldwynner Bill Robson and C. B. Frost of the Rowland and Clark publicity department.

In this stunt a different clock was placed each day in a circular opening of a one-sheet card and the offer of a ticket to the theatre to each of the ten closest guesses as to what would be "The Last Moment." The window displayed specially priced alarm clocks. This is the first time Mr. Redman has used his window for a motion picture tie-up. He said he would always be glad to know of similar novel tie-up stunts.

GO-GETTING

New Haven, Conn.—Russell B. Moon, Paramount Exploiteer, had cards printed up with B. A. Go-Getter in the name place. On the top of the card was printed, "Go-Getters will make money in 1923."

He had tack card made and put them all over the city with the same wording on it as on the top of the business-card. The Chamber of Commerce sanctioned it and cooperated, and a general campaign was waged.

Manager A. L. Snell, of the Imperial, Gadsden, Ala., used this idea for a teaser campaign. Snell posted the town with cards reading "Are you a G-G or a S-S"? "Be a G-G." "Join right now." These were supplanted the day previous to the opening with the lines "Are you a Go-Getter or a Stand-Stiller?"

GOLD STAR MOTHERS MATINEES

Boston.—Manager Brennan of Loew's State theatre and Goldwynner Buddy Stuart induced the editor of the Boston Telegram to sponsor "Gold Star Mothers' Matinees" in connection with "Enemies of Women," which opened here at the State. On opening day the newspaper printed coupons which when filled out by a Gold Star Mother (women who had lost sons in the war) admitted them free to matinees except on Saturdays and Sundays. The stunt produced a quantity of newspaper publicity and attracted great attention.

CHARTS "DANGEROUS AGE"

Easton, Pa.—"The Dangerous Age" according to the manager of the Opera House, is when a husband wants his wife to: Look 20; act 15; talk 10, and that is the way in which he ballyhooed the First National attraction through his newspaper advertising and handbills. Of course there were objections from the women, but the contention started sufficient argument to give the picture word of mouth advertising and help boost the attendance.

PLAYS "THE PONIES"

New York.—As exploitation for "Garrison's Finish" B. F. Keith's Eighty-First Street Theatre used a street ballyhoo of three race horses, blanketed and hooded. On the blankets were signs "Meet me in the great racing photodrama, 'Garrison's Finish,' at B. F. Keith's Eighty-First Street Theatre this week."

LONG LIFE FORMULA

New Bedford, Mass.—Manager John W. Hawkins of the Capitol Theatre, and Buddy Stuart, Goldwyn exploitation man in Boston, appealed to the human desire for a long life in exploiting "A Blind Bargain." Three thousand envelopes with the following matter printed on them—"Do you want to live to be a hundred and fifty years old?" were mailed. Inside the envelope was a card reading—"See Dr. Lamb at the Capitol Theatre," etc.

The dancing girl who registers such a hit in Pathe's South Seas film "Black Shadows," is twenty-four sheeted in such excellent fashion that she may well be given a place as prominent as was accorded her at the Columbia Theatre, Portland, Ore., shown in the photo above.

Jackie Coogan's costume, "the original suit worn by the star in making the picture," is still good for window displays—it's really better than many things used for displays. The window shown above was a tie-up arrangement used for First National's "Oliver Twist," at the Marlow Theatre, Ironton, O.

More Jackie Coogan propaganda. The turnout of youngsters was even greater than anticipated when the Empress Theatre, in Owensboro, Ky., gave a free show for the poor children of the town. The performance for the children was given under the auspices of Mrs. Robert Wayne, wife of the manager of the Empress.

The Paramount Theatre, Logansport, Ind., has a lot of street frontage, and Manager William Lindsay makes use of every bit of it when he puts on displays for the big attractions, as shown by the arrangement above for First National's "Within the Law." With very little change in the arrangement of the compo board mask Mr. Lindsay had a colorful and appropriate setting for "The Bright Shawl," a bit of resourcefulness by which he proves that the small town house can afford to make displays.

Motion picture window tie-ups are not unfamiliar to Fifth Avenue. The publishers make a display of their wares in connection with the presentation of the story in film form. The window above was part of the exploitation done by Brentano's, in connection with the Preferred offering "Daughters of the Rich," when it showed at the Capitol, New York.

"Daughters of the Rich," peeped out from the windows all along Broadway during the showing of the Preferred picture at the Capitol. Through the work of the company publicity staff and the Capitol publicists the theatre extended its display almost a mile. The display shown above was in a confectionery shop not far from the Capitol.

Jewels for "Daughters of the Rich," were the feature of a store in the New York campaign for the Preferred, feature at the Capitol. The shops taken in for this tie-up of nearly all the windows in the vicinity of the theatre showed considerable ingenuity on the part of the exploiters who invented lines to associate merchant displays with the picture.

Warner Brothers "Main Street" hits Chicago. The tie-up with the book was of course the leading item of exploitation when the Roosevelt Theatre turned its attention to merchant co-operation.

Window displays can be thoroughly decorative as well as highly efficient sales features. There were columns and arches of pearl necklaces when a jewelry shop in Tacoma, Wash., tied up with the Colonial Theatre for the presentation of First National's "Omar the Tentmaker."

A ballyhoo for the Metro game picture "Trailing African Wild Animals," used in Hutchinson, Kansas, for the showing at the Academy. Stuffed animals were the feature of the ballyhoo stunts in the campaign which extended a four-day run into a full week of the Martin Johnson films at the Academy.

A line-up of ticket buyers at the factory of the Mackintosh-Hemphill Co., Pittsburgh. This was a tie-up with the Rowland and Clark State Theatre, for the showing of Goldwyn's "Backbone." The stunt was to have the company sell tickets and with each sale record a vote for its candidate in the "Good Will Election," used by the American Committee for Devastated France.

The exchangemen turn the display guns the exhibitor directs at the public on the theatre men. The Pathe Buffalo Exchange used the comedy broadside display as an illustrated lecture on the possibilities and sales value of the Pathe accessories.

The interior of the new Vitagraph branch at New Haven, Conn. Though just "open for business," there was no lack of ballyhoo for current Vitagraph offerings in the office maintained for the reception of exhibitors in search of food for the screen and work for the ticket seller.

"Dad's Day" Feature Of Coogan Campaign

Thos. H. Ince presents

THE HOTTENTOT

Mr. Douglas MacLean

STAR of the Thos. H. Ince production "The Hottentot" especially posed in—

HOTTENTOT

LION CUSTOM COLLAR

Peter Miller's Sons
Lancaster's Oldest Clothing Firm

"The Hottentot," advertised by a Lancaster, Pa., merchant in newspapers and window displays. The Lyric Theatre in that city had a nice campaign, the greater part of which was paid for by the merchant who featured the "Hottentot" Collar. This tie-up with the collar manufacturers by First National has produced some excellent results for individual theatres. The ad above is a press layout, and though nearly everything in it is for the picture, the expense was borne by the merchant.

Jackie Coogan in "Daddy" featured by Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., with a lobby display and in the advertising. The house runs vaudeville acts as well as pictures and the prominence given Jackie in the billing is another feather for the cap of the great boy star. The theatre used an impersonation stunt to help along with the exploitation. The entrants in this stunt were requested to leave their photographs at the box office when they bought their tickets, which made the benefits from the contest as direct as possible. In addition a "Dad's Day" celebration was inaugurated. Boys who wanted to see the picture were urged to bring their dad along.

Manager W. R. Drumbar's "two story" cell salon at the Riviera Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn. The lobby of the Riviera was done up in impressionistic style featuring the prison stuff for the showing of Norma Talmadge's new picture "Within the Law." Not even the box office escaped the bars and the star represented in cutout form was assigned to an "upper." The arrangement attracted attention through its novelty, a desideratum to which even beauty may be sacrificed.

The Merit-Arrow Exchanges in New York sponsored the float pictured above as exploitation for the new offering "The Little Red Schoolhouse." This truck made its appearance in the city recently and some direct advertising for Loew's 86th Street Theatre, which presented the picture, was tacked on.

The real estate company's bill-board had served its purpose so far as the "Realtors," as Mr. Babbitt would say, were concerned. But the site offered special attractions for the billing of First National's "Daddy," by the Stadium Theatre, Brooklyn.

The MODERN THEATRE

Building — Equipping — Operating

At best, the old style footlights were inefficient. Some of the newer types are pictured in Figs. 1, 4 and 5. The modern type of footlight employs Mazda C lamps with individual reflectors and gelatin color screens, and avoids the difficulties experienced with the open type.

The choice of reflecting material for theatrical apparatus will depend on the effect desired. White paint is efficient, but must be renewed frequently to maintain its good qualities. It has the property of giving splendid diffusion and thus reducing sharp shadows. It cannot be used where accurate control of distribution is desired. Aluminum reflectors are also efficient and permit of a certain amount of light control. Mirrored glass or polished metal must be used where a very accurate control is necessary or where concentration is important.

To soften the light from glare which an actor experiences to such a degree that he cannot see the baton of the director, when working downstage, an indirect type of footlight is in use abroad. Lamps are entirely concealed and their light directed on a white curved reflecting surface.

At least four and preferably five circuits should be provided for the footlights, so that red, green, blue and unmodified (white light) may be available, with the fifth circuit for amber or "steel blue." The common practice is to provide red, blue, amber and white circuits, but as pointed out later, red, green and blue are the primary colors and a mixture of red and green will give us the yellow or amber light. Some of the most artistic results are secured in those theatres where the electrician or scenic artist understands the fundamental principles and uses green lights in their proper place.

The footlights should be divided into at least two sections and preferably three, rather than having one circuit run the entire width of the stage. With one half may be darkened and the other half light—one half may be of one color and the other of some other tint. With the three-section arrangement, it is evident that still greater flexibility can be secured.

The disappearing type of footlights is particularly well suited to assembly rooms and auditoriums. Here is a general practice for dancing to follow a performance, the orchestra being located on the stage. The reduction in lamp breakage will soon pay for the additional cost of the more complicated construction.

Border Lights

The border lights furnish general illumination from a natural direction, that is, overhead. They are therefore a necessary part of the stage equipment. Border lights formerly in use were virtually inverted footlights, suspended from the gridiron structure in such a manner that they could be raised and lowered. The number of sets in use will depend on the depth of stage. Some of the theatres, for example, the Metropolitan and Manhattan Opera houses, employ seven or eight rows.

The size of lamp used for the border will depend entirely on the character of the production. In practice, we find from 25-watt round bulb MAZDA B lamps in miniature mirrored glass reflectors for lighting and interior to 100-watt MAZDA C lamps in the average theatre and 1000-watt MAZDA C lamps in such show houses as the New York Hippodrome.

The old style border light is open to the objection stated above in connection with the footlights in improper distribution of light, low efficiency and mixing of color. The newer forms of border lights employ individual reflectors with Mazda C lamps as pictured in Figs. 1, 5 and 6. They control the lights to a certain degree and enable one to employ the higher efficiency Mazda C lamps. These make it possible to get greater illumination (generally the desire of the producer) for the same wattage.

Gelatin screens are ordinarily employed with this equipment to obtain color modification, and special precaution should be taken to have a suitable holding device for this to prevent its being knocked out of place or punctured as a drop is being raised. Unquestionably, the future will see the application of specially designed removable glass color caps to this equipment.

For certain productions it is desired to control the light from the borders to a still greater such as is obtained through the use of lens equipment. Borders are in lamps with concentrated filament lamps and use what are virtually rows of small spots, remotely controlled color filters.

The remarks given under footlights as to the desirable number of circuits and division into sections apply with equal force to the border lights.

Proscenium and strip lights are virtually border lights hung in vertical positions, and assist in reducing the sharp contrasts which might prevail in the vertical plane. Individual reflectors and lens lamps are now being successfully applied to this service.

Bunch or Flood Lamps

A most useful device for lighting a given area to a greater intensity than the rest of the stage is the bunch light, often known as the "open box" or "olivette," shown in Fig. 7. Hand-fed arc lamps were formerly used for this service, but with the introduction of the high wattage Mazda C lamps, arc equipment has been replaced by the 1000-watt unit. Its advantages are remote control (direct from the switchboard), ability to be dimmed and simplicity of operation, which facts materially reduce the number of operators for a given production. Spun aluminum or white painted reflectors are commonly used in the bunch lights although some reflectors are built up of sections of mirrored glass to obtain more accurate light control. Color modification is obtained by the use of gelatin screens. The units are portable and adjustable as to height and direction, and can be plugged in at will from any stage pocket. Open box lights also prove very useful suspended from the gridiron to illuminate cycloramas.

Spot Lamps

When it is desired to draw the attention of the audience to an individual performer, a group, or a special part of the scene, it is common practice to illuminate this area to a very high intensity of light relative to the surroundings. This is accomplished by means of the spot lamp which directs a strong, concentrated beam of light. The spot lamp is fitted with a single condenser lens which enables the operator to adjust the size of the spot at will. For the very highest intensity the direct-current hand-fed open arc is still used. For most purposes, concentrated filament (flood-lighting and stereopticon) Mazda C lamps are suitable. Standard forms of spot lamps are pictured in Fig. 7. These use Mazda C lamps with a spherical mirror behind the filament to obtain a higher utilization of light. The direction of the beam can be changed at will and a performer moving about the stage "followed with the spot." The handle at the base of the housing permits one to move the lamp toward or away from the lens enlarging or decreasing the size of the spot. Color modification is obtained by the so-called color wheel or by individual gelatin screen fitting in grooves directly in front of the lens.

One of the most useful recent developments in stage lighting equipment is the suspension type spot lamp pictured in Fig. 8. This particular device carries a 500 or 1000-watt concentrated filament Mazda C lamp and, as its name implies, is hung from the gridiron or other support. A color screen holder will be noted at the base of the unit.

One can readily picture the effects which are produced with the general lighting of a moderate intensity in color and spots of different colors of higher intensity superimposed on the general lighting. Ornamental vases, urns and decorative features of this character can be made very effective by the application of suspension type spot lamps. It is often desirable to bring out an individual performer with a spot from overhead, instead of by one in the balcony or "front of the house." Shadows are more natural and the harsh, defined spot does not show up on the drop.

Other useful devices are the so-called "baby spots" (illustrated in Fig. 9) which can be plugged in at the footlights or suspended from the borders. These employ 250 or 400-watt concentrated filament Mazda C lamps. Spherical mirrors should be used to redirect as much of the light as possible in the beam.

"Effect" Apparatus

There are times when a very sharply defined spot or picture effect is desired and an apparatus known as a sciopticon, similar to a regular stereopticon, is used to produce this (Fig. 10). This has objective lenses in addition to double condensers. By using an opaque slide with an opening of the shape desired, a spot of some particular contour can be obtained.

As an example of a simple effective use of such a device, suppose a solo dancer is representing the "Spirit of St. Valentine's Day." Instead of painting the drop or cyclorama in color, this might well be of a white or some light, neutral tint, the entire stage flooded with pink light and a clear spot in the shape of a heart used to follow the dancer. The clear light should be of a sufficiently higher intensity to overcome, as one might say, the colored light and the dancer would constantly appear in a white spot. As soon as the spot moved, the position would again appear pink. This is obviously more attractive than if the drop were painted pink and a spot lamp merely gave a greater brilliancy in the area of the spot. By working with uncolored drapes, applying the color in light rather than in pigment, effects far in advance of past practices can be readily obtained.

Effect apparatus can be fitted with a special head containing a revolving disk which is painted in a certain manner and driven by an adjustable speed motor or clock-work mechanism. This is used to produce the effect of running water, falling rain or snow, moving clouds, flames, fireworks, sand storms and innumerable special illusions.

A number of effect machines placed in various positions and operated at different speeds are used for some of the realistic cloud effects often seen with the spectacular productions. Abroad, a rather intricate and somewhat cumbersome piece of apparatus is used for cloud effects. Two groups of lens systems projecting pictures of clouds are centered around a powerful light source. The entire mechanism is rotated and by means of motor-driven mirrors, one group of images is made to pass over other groups at various speeds, giving depth and realism to the picture.

A section of a motion picture film showing breaking waves has been used in a powerful motion picture projector for simulating the dashing surf in spectacles.

The uses of electricity for stage effects are varied indeed and space is not available for discussing all of these. In the early days lightning was produced by blowing a stream of powdered magnesium through a flame. Now, flashing electric arcs give an infinitely more realistic effect. By the aid of electricity, the glowing coal in the fire place is imitated. Until comparatively recently, red light thrown on rising steam was used to produce a conflagration. Now, a number of ingenious substitutes are used for flame effects. A patented device utilizes strips of thin silk put in motion by an air current from a blower or fan. With projecting apparatus and properly colored slides the low portion appears yellow, the central red, and the top smoke color, thus simulating actual flame much more effectively. This principle has been utilized in connection with urns and torches, a miniature motor fed from a dry cell being employed in the portable torch to produce an air stream or rotary motion.

Kansas M. P. T. O. Has Place for Summer Aid

Tackles the Hot Weather Problem from Practical Showman Angle

By FRANK C. TRUE

Kansas City, Mo.—What is termed a conservative, concrete plan for combatting the annual slump in summer business will be put into effect by the M. P. T. O. Kansas this week.

The plan, as announced by C. E. Cook, business manager of the organization, is entirely devoid of the theoretical element and will be based purely upon sound business principles. It consists merely of a personal supervision in aiding the exhibitors of the state to operate their houses so that the greatest ends may be obtained from the least means, which, after all, always has been the key to successful showmanship, Mr. Cook firmly believes. Mr. Cook's tour over the state will last several weeks.

"It is surprising how comparatively small factors in operating a house can be magnified at the box office," Mr. Cook said. "In a certain town in Kansas I know of an exhibitor who literally is keeping patronage away from his theatres by the absence of about $3 worth of paint on the front of his house. Another theatre owner, right here in Kansas City, virtually is doing the same thing by failing to have the white linen slips on the backs of his chairs laundered, while still another allows dirt to accumulate in his house. All these things are noticed more closely in the summer than in the winter, when competition is not so great and when it is necessary for people to be indoors.

"A black and white front, the paint to cost about $3, would do wonders for a certain suburban house I have in mind. It is just such apparently small things that stand between many exhibitors and success. To combat these smaller evils, if they can be termed that, will be my mission in a trip over the state next week. The M. P. T. O. Kansas owes it to every one of its members to protect them against summer slumps, while exhibitors owe it to their state association to co-operate in every manner in making effective this campaign against closed houses for the summer.

"In my recent trip over the state I met an exhibitor who actually didn't know what his overhead expenses were. His income was what he had left, as he termed it. That exhibitor now is a member of the state organization and he is going to have a much different system, as well as a different appearing theatre before we get through with him. Another exhibitor recently had suffered a slight loss by fire in his theatre. The front was blackened by smoke. The house is being operated today, but the front never has been painted. What an inviting appearance for the public to see the front of a house blackened by smoke, which would strike fear of fire into the heart of any ordinary person."

Collective insurance, booking of film and parcel post of film are three means by which the M. P. T. O. Kansas hopes to add materially to its treasure this summer.

Big German Film Firm In Finance Trouble

Berlin.—A sensation has been caused by the crash of the Trans-Continental Company, which suddenly stopped production and payments, after having recently announced an increase of capital. The sensation is intensified by the fact that two of Germany's film celebrities, Carl Bratz, founder of the U. F. A., and Davidson, late general manager of U. F. A. and E. F. A., are said to be involved in the matter. Moreover, two leading stars, Emil Jannings and Werner Krauss, who have acquired international fame, are sorely affected. The Trans-Continental founded special companies for these stars. The unfortunate artists are now held responsible by the creditors and the other artists engaged by them. The whole capital was supplied by a foreign capitalist, and it is said that the whole stoppage is not due to reluctance on his part to carry out his contract, but to interference on the part of his Government, which tries to prevent the exodus of large sums. The company was preparing to film "Don Quixote," the capital being Spanish.

France May Raise Tax on Foreign Films

Paris.—It appears to be not at all unlikely that the 20 per cent ad valorem tax upon the importation of foreign films into France will, within a few months, be increased.

If the ad valorem tax is increased, the government will be able to recover that which, theoretically, it loses under the concessions, made in the matter of a lower admission tax. This, however, is simply financial juggling; for, in the end, it will not be either the American or other agent whose pocket will really be touched; but that of the exhibitor—who, in his turn, has gone about as far as he can in his charges to the public.

The Fortunes of Exhibitor X

A True Story of The Trials and Tribulations of An Exhibitor Whose House, Facing Bankruptcy, Had to Be Put Over

The First Week

WITH a deficit of $45,000 staring me in the face I have taken over the X Theatre to make it pay or close it up.

I have been an exhibitor twenty years and I believe I can turn it into a paying proposition even with creditors on my trail every time I step out of my office.

The X Theatre is a beautiful house, too beautiful, I think, for this town of 45,000. It has 1400 of the finest, softest seats in the country. The house cost $500,000 before a door opened. It is located on the main drag, in the heart of the business district. It has an orchestra and wonderful organ, a stage, a splendid lobby, everything that the theatre man's heart could desire, yet it is a dead loss, almost in the graveyard.

The reason why I accepted this hard job and added unnecessary burdens to my already overloaded back is that it was at my suggestion this theatre was built. The owner is a rich man, interested in theatres who wanted to give his city something fine in the theatre line. He did all of that, and, as I have said, gave the town something more than it deserved.

This city is like hundreds of others. It has its rich people who are greatly in the minority. Ninety-five per cent. of the population are workers in the big plants around the town. The only peculiarity is that the city believes it is a social center. It puts on dog, as the society editors say. The X Theatre put on dog too, which is one of the big mistakes it made. It's all right to put on dog if it doesn't cost much. But the X Theatre could not operate profitably without fashionable prices and the people who wanted to seem fashionable wouldn't stand fashion's prices.

I took over the house last Saturday, July 14. My first week at rebuilding begun then and this article is written at the end of that week.

Everything about me seems to hum a tune something like "Well, what are you going to do about that $45,000?" It's a tough situation, when a man is trying to find out what kind of people he has to reach, what kind of pictures they want and what music policy to adopt and where to apply the pruning shears to expense.

Mr. X Is Real

"The Fortunes of Exhibitor X" is a true-to-life serial narrating the experiences of a showman called upon to pull out of the hole a half million dollar picture theatre.

Mr. X has taken over the theatre—it's a real, honest-to-goodness theatre. It is on the verge of bankruptcy. Outstanding obligations aggregating $45,000 face Mr. X. The creditors clamor for their money.

The series will continue from week to week until Mr. X either puts over the house or gives it up as a bad job.

Each week Mr. X records what has happened the week previous.

It's an inside story of showmanship. Follow it. It may reflect your own situation.

On Saturday, the first day, I came down to the theatre at 10 o'clock. Across the front entrance was one of those folding iron gates, locked. The house has a large lobby, about 15 feet wide and 25 feet deep. It had high grade, hand painted one sheets done by a local show card writer. The gate kept anyone from entering the lobby to look at the display. From the first day the house opened the gates were locked every night and kept locked every morning. Imagine locking the best space in the theatre—its show window!

I ordered the janitor to throw open the gates and never lock them again as long as I am in charge of the theatre.

I looked over the one sheet lobby displays and found that while they were fine works of art the reading matter stood about nine feet above the floor and one had to stretch his neck upwards about a foot to read what they had to say.

I ordered the janitor to tear out the art work and put in some stock one sheets furnished by the exchange. I found only three or four 11 by 14 lobby photographs being used in the center display and I ordered the janitor to use every 11 by 14 lobby photo he could get and give the public plenty of advance information on what we were playing.

Throwing out the art work one sheets saved me $20 a week. Looking over the bills I find that the local show card artist has been getting $26 a week for his work ever since the theatre opened a year ago. It was fine work but I figured that one sheets costing about 15 cents a piece at the exchange would serve the same purpose. But $20 a week lopped off helps some. Now the artist only does my date strips and by the way I found that my predecessor had been using date strips with this wording: "Coming 'June 6'" instead of "Coming Tuesday, June 6."

The public glancing at a date strip doesn't carry around a calendar to solve date strip puzzles. Future arrangements for theatre going usually are made by fans on the basis of "well I guess I'll come Saturday and see that show."

I haven't had a chance to study the picture policy yet, but a cursory glance shows me that they are getting the best pictures and pay the best prices. The policy is one feature changed twice a week, a comedy, news reel, novelty. It's an average program.

I know only one thing from my brief study of the policy. This house is loaded up with product it can never get the money out of.

I'm going to study the method of booking the first thing. Something is wrong there. I wonder what it is?

There are enough creditors in my office every day to drive me crazy. Right now—and this is Saturday afternoon, the end of the first week, the taxi man tells me that he refuses to bring my films to and from the railroad station unless I settle his bill outstanding for more than a year.

Monday see me really getting into things.

Next Week With Mr. X

He travels a rough road, discovering some new leak at every turn. Will he put the X theatre over?

A Theatre For Every 7,000 Persons

Survey Shows Only One Newspaper to Every 40,000 Inhabitants

By THOMAS H. DICKINSON

"Whoever controls the motion-picture industry controls the most powerful medium of influence over the people.—Thomas A. Edison.

IS Mr. Edison right? Has an invention profoundly affected the life of a nation in so brief a period? What power lies with this vast organization? And how is that power being used?

The answers are difficult to find. Yet it cannot be contradicted that the motion pictures reach a vast audience daily; and that a huge and intricate mechanism has been constructed to hold and to extend the grip on that audience.

It has generally been assumed that the presence in the social body of this machinery of continual interchange, of ever renewed appeal to the emotions and the intellect, would have some influence on the mental habits, outlooks, customs of the people, might indeed be employed as a force for influencing, guiding and instructing public opinion. That this assumption is a proper one is undoubtedly true. And yet up to the present the data upon which conclusions of this order can be based are of the vaguest type. Research has hardly yet discovered this great and potent field of social psychology, much less plumbed it. It is only by broad generalizations that we can give any estimate of the powers thus released into the hands of men who are as surprised to find themselves wielding this power as the public is to find it existing.

Yet there is available a group of basic facts from which to generalize. Mr. Edison's assertion embodies a direct challenge to the influence exerted by the press. How do the facts, so far as available, support this challenge?

There are in round numbers in the United States about 18,000 theatres given over to motion pictures. As a mass agency of popular appeal this number is to be compared to about 2,500 daily papers and 4,000 public libraries. The number of newspapers of all types, daily, tri-weekly, semi-weekly and weekly, is still something more than a thousand less than the number of motion picture theatres. Total publications of all types run to only 3,000 more than the number of motion picture theatres.

Circulation Versus Attendance

When it comes to circulation; that is to daily contact with large numbers of people, the daily newspaper has the advantage, leading with more than 40,000,000 circulation for the country as a whole. The daily attendance at motion picture theatres is largely a matter of conjecture.

Theatres for the country as a whole fall into four classes in order of seating capacity, the first running from 1 to 249 seats; the second from 250 to 499; the third from 500 to 799; the fourth, 800 and up. Of all the motion picture theatres in the country about 35 per cent., or something less than

NEWSPAPER OR SCREEN—WHICH IS THE MOST POWERFUL PUBLIC AGENCY?

One encounters speculative talk on every hand about the Federalization, or government control, of motion pictures; about the tendency toward mechanical production; the alleged plans of Henry Ford to use the screen to further whatever political ambitions may lurk in his mind; the power of the newspaper vs. the power of the screen.

These are just straws in the wind but to an outsider, a well known journalist, who considers the relation of each item of speculation to the whole something of importance to the industry is brewing.

The article reproduced herewith is taken from a recent issue of the N. Y. Times.

7,000, fall into the second class seating between 250 and 499. About 30 per cent. are made up of theatres seating less than 250. It follows then that the majority of theatres seat less than 500. The remainder, about 5,600, are theatres seating from 500 up to several thousand.

Averaging up the seating of these four classes and multiplying by the number of theatres, it would appear that there are from eight to ten million seats.

Daily attendance at the motion picture theatre, of course, is not limited to the seating capacity. Most theatres give more than one performance a day and some give as many as five or more. The average figure usually accepted for the daily performances in the motion picture theatres is three, giving available seatings of about 25,000,000 a day. Naturally by no means all of these seats are occupied at every performance. Estimates of attendance the country over run from a minimum of 50,000,000 a week to a maximum of 15,000,000 a day. The first figure is probably too low; the second probably too high.

Favor Quick Turnover

While it is impossible to say just what is the average frequency of attendance per person per week even here, we have some straws which show which way the wind blows. Motion picture theatre directors have found it desirable to do all possible to promote a quick turnover. Even in large cities it has been found more profitable to provide a frequent change of bill than to depend upon the extended drawing power of a top-notch feature. Fashions differ between those theatres which serve a congested neighborhood, and the large theatres which serve a city or wide suburban or rural areas. In the former daily changes are the rule; in the latter the rule is two changes a week.

Averaging the country, as a whole, it is estimated, by the Babson Statistical Organization and other authorities, that 70 per cent. of the theatres of the country change their programs three times a week or oftener. From surveys made by civic associations among children in cities and towns it seems that 40 per cent. go about once a week; another 40 per cent. go twice a week or oftener. Only 3 per cent. do not go to the movies at all. The motion picture theatre draws from a wide field, and its audience tends to repeat more or less regularly.

With respect to the distribution of motion picture theatres among the geographical divisions of the United States compared with that of other social opinion agencies, we have some interesting data. Comparing the distribution of motion picture theatres in centres of population and in rural districts, it is found that the picture theatre is quite as much an agency of the sparsely settled areas as of the urban centres. This is demonstrated in two ways, by the comparison of the numbers of motion picture theatres in large cities with the country outside these centres, and by a tabulation, State by State, of the number of thousands of people reached by each theatre. This inquiry shows that so far from the city being the favorite haunt of the picture, there are relatively more theatres per unit of population outside the centres than in them.

One hundred and ninety cities contain a population of about 35,000,000, or about one-third of the population of the country. These cities have less than one-quarter of the motion picture theatres, but the smaller average of theatres in the urban districts is compensated by the higher seating capacities of the city theatres. Whereas the average seating capacity of theatres for the country as a whole is about 500, the average seating capacity of city theatres is about 750.

The Theatre Groups

The distribution of theatres per unit of population is even better brought out by a map showing the number of thousands of people served by the average theatre in the several States.

The first group represents an area in which there is a theatre for each 2,500-5,000 of the population.

The second group a theatre for each 5,000-8,000 of the population.

The third group a theatre for each 8,000-15,000 of the population. On the basis of these groupings we find the first group with a theatre for every three or four thousand of the population covering the entirety of the agricultural and mining country west of the Mississippi with the exception of Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas and New Mexico, which fall into the second group. It includes as well the sparsely settled New England States of Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine.

In the second group, in addition to the States mentioned above west of the Mississippi, are the States of the central highly populated area and the urbanized East Central States and Florida. In the third group, which is poorly provided with theatres, are the Southeastern States, Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia.

Comparing motion picture distribution with that of the other social opinion agencies we find that there is a motion picture theatre for every 7,000 of the population, to a daily newspaper for every 40,000 and a public library for every 26,000. There is a library for every 700 square miles, a motion picture theatre for every 160 square miles.

"Of all inventions, the alphabet and the printing press alone excepted, those that have shortened distance have done the most for humanity," wrote Macaulay. When he wrote he referred particularly to the application of steam to land and sea travel. He did not refer to, by the nature of the case he could not foresee, that system of the shortening of distances which operates not by transferring the individual to far places and peoples, but by bringing those places and peoples to the individual. This the motion picture theatre has done, and the system of distribution is such that hundreds of thousands of people are literally witnessing the same scenes, participating in the same dramatic action at the same time.

In estimating the mental influence of the moving picture theatre, it is well to remember that when one goes to the movies today he does not sit down only with his neighbors. He mingles with peoples from all parts of the earth.

The farmer boy and his sweetheart go to the motion picture theatre dressed in a fashion not much different from their city cousins. From the screen they derive at first hand, a seeing knowledge of the country as a whole. The Great White Way is their thoroughfare of nightly amusement. The Place de la Concord is the square that lies just at the head of Main Street.

Changing People's Habits

The motion-picture theatre has co-operated with rural free delivery and the Ford car in destroying the rural fastnesses of the country. With the exception of the Southeastern States there remains no American hinterland. The motion-picture theatre has become the club, the place of social resort of the small town and the rural districts; it is bringing the back districts into the world. Even in the thinly settled States of Montana and Nevada there is a motion-picture theatre for every 4,000 inhabitants. Human assembly hitherto was a matter of urban districts. The motion-picture theatre has entered into the smallest units of the State. More than that, it has brought the wide world into the narrow community.

The motion picture theatre is changing the habits of the employment of leisure of the people. Whence comes the two hours a week that the average citizen spends in the movie theatre? Some of it comes from time formerly given to labor. Much of it comes from time formerly given to reading. Most of it comes from sport. The sport of the country has become vicarious, has become sport en masse. Where we formerly enjoyed ourselves in small groupings, we now go to large, silent, twilight assemblies, handing our imaginations over to others to stimulate and direct. The term "recreation" is now no longer apposite. We now amuse ourselves.

DISTRIBUTION OF THEATRES

The map above shows where the intense theatre building has gone on in the past five years and locates also the potential markets

Of the materials offered by the motion picture theatre perhaps 20 per cent. is directly educational in the sense in which the newspaper and the general magazine is educational. An established feature of the motion picture program today is the news reel and the screen magazine. Only less common is the short scenic and scientific film. But it would be a narrow interpretation that would limit the educational forces of the screen to the educational features, so-called.

"I used to hold by the instructed brain—the heart leads surelier," wrote Browning.

These screen features appeal to a very few elementary emotions. They glorify the same things, the simple virtues, the great outdoors, strong, successful men, beautiful, pure women, expert tailoring; they despise the same things, "superior" people, welchers, pikers, foreigners. Sin always gets its retribution; paths always end in lovers' meetings.

What have we here but the influences over our business ideals, and therefore the governing principles of our voting? It would not be difficult to catalogue the American popular philosophy out of the critical standards of the movies. As we live we vote. It is not for nothing that in the first run theatres of the country a million people may be gazing at the same scenes at the same time. What they see is partly a reflection of what they are. What they are is no less influenced by what they see.

The vogue of the motion picture implies widespread social and psychological changes. In direct appeal, in the economizing of the symbols of expression, in multiplying records, the motion picture offers manifest advantages over other instruments of general communication. As the toilsome processes of thought become sub-conscious it may become unnecessary always to spell out each concept with verbal symbols. When this occurs it will be the opportunity of the motion picture. There is no reason to believe that there may not soon be assembly places given over entirely to news and educational features. Most schools and institutes and forums will have their projection rooms. Before the motion picture can come to its full stature differentiation will have to be introduced into the business. It is unreasonable that all theatres in the country should be cut to the same vulgar pattern, that this rich and flexible medium should be used alone for stories and thrills, that the producer who would make historical and scientific records of great importance should find his product despised in favor of stories dealing with the frayed rags of passion.

The rule today in the motion picture theatre seems to be that nothing shall get the light at all unless it appeals to the million. Pictures which would charm and instruct the hundred thousand must die in darkness unseen. Such a policy fails to employ some of the richest potentialities of the screen.

III.

Speaking in Parliament in 1807, the politician Windham confessed that "he never saw a man of low condition with a newspaper in his hand, and who read any of it, without comparing him to a man who was swallowing poison under the hope of improving his health." If Windham feared the poison of the press, what would he have thought of the many flavored juices of the film? With all its power the press is still under the suasion of a local responsibility. The essence of news is the proximate. But the film has no local responsibility. As intimate and personal in its appeal as the newspaper, it is produced by an organization more centralized, more inaccessible to ordinary social controls, than anything the world of art or opinion has ever seen before.

Agencies That Feed the Will

Recent months have shown evidences of disquiet both within and outside the circles of the motion picture theatre. On the one hand there has been the demand of censorship. There is nothing new in the fear with which the vast growth of the motion picture industry is being viewed in many quarters today. Other social agencies have sprung up in a night, almost unheralded; these, too, have fallen first into the hands of men of vigorous imagination and ruthless temper, and by the magnitude and suddenness of their developments have aroused frenzies of fear and crusades of repression. The theatre in the time of Shakespeare, the novel in the eighteenth century, the newspaper a century later, were also extravagantly hailed and extravagantly anathematized.

More significant than the demand for censorship are the rumblings of discontent which arise from important groups in the theatre itself. When the cooks in the kitchen begin to quarrel, let the diner watch for his meal. The disturbances now going on in the motion picture industry are partly technical and commercial. But they are symptomatic of wider dissatisfaction. The motion picture house is not in order. There has been created a great new agency which is not yet adapted to its functions in the State. The State itself is coming to lean more on the agencies so suddenly, so surprisingly, provided in an unexpected quarter. The motion picture theatre which is already one of the factors of popular government must respond to the people's will. In the words of Peel, "Public opinion is growing too large for the channels it has been accustomed to run through."

Letters That Reach First Base

How Some Theatre Men Prepare and Fire Their Ammunition Via A Well Kept, Live Mailing List

IS your mailing list rusty and entirely out of use? Do you know how to use it? Can you write an attention-attracting letter that will reach first base—the kind of a letter whose first sentence arouses interest and compels the reader to continue on?

Letter writing as an art is too much of a study for the average man worrying about box office affairs to give it the long study necessary. So we have selected from our mail bag some sample letters actually used by theatre men which they vouch for as good business pullers.

Keep the name of your theatre before the public at all times, no matter what else is going on to attract the attention of the people. This is the advice of Eugene M. Daly, manager of the New Theatre, Baltimore.

One method this house uses during the hot weather has brought about some good results. Mr. Daly prepares letters which he sends out a few days before the opening performance of the week. In these there is something about the picture and also reference is made to the fact that it always is cool at the New Theatre. Free tickets on the first night are enclosed.

In selecting the list to receive the first invitation Mr. Daly usually covers one class, a total of 500 letters being mailed. One week recently he sent the letters to the women of the Eastern Star and also to a large number of the girls employed in the department stores.

Following are two typical letters sent out by Manager Daly:

Letter No. 1

"Dear Madame:—

"Hearts are not the delicate organs they are commonly supposed to be. They can withstand a lot of hard knocks and much persistent battering before they finally cave in. However, that's what the Love Doctor says: we are sure that you'll agree with the Love Doctor. Arrange to see and verify the above. 'The Heart Raider' is coming to town with Agnes Ayres in the leading role. Among a brilliant cast is Mahlon Hamilton, the popular Baltimore-born screen actor.

"You are cordially invited to attend the first Baltimore showing of Agnes Ayres in 'The Heart Raider' on Monday, June 25th. The enclosed ticket is good for two persons by presenting it at the door of the New Theatre.

"Joyful, this picture of absorbing interest in which a love-lorn girl chases a love-shy man, captures him for her own and brings him home in triumph. What could be sweeter? A battle of hearts guaranteed to tickle your funny bone, chill your spine and play on your heart strings.

"Both agree, Husband goes to baseball and Wife likes autoing this warm weather. But when Husband says let's go to the New Theatre, they both agree. There's a reason. It's always cool and comfortable and a splendid diversified entertainment to be had at the New Theatre.

Very truly yours,
THE NEW THEATRE CO."

Letter No. 2

"Dear Friend:—

"Would you rather enjoy luxuries in a big city, or find happiness with your heart's desire in a little grey home in the West? Do you like Romance? Here is the story. A heart-tugging comedy drama of a girl's transformation from a rollicking tom-boy, reared among stern cow-punchers, into a woman of refinement, seeking happiness and love. Picturized from the human novel, 'The Man Next Door,' by Emerson Hough, author of 'The Covered Wagon.'

"The New Theatre Company wants you to be its guest to witness the above question brought about to a confusion. We are confident, that you will enjoy 'The Man Next Door,' featuring the well known players, Alice Calhoun, and James Morrison, as they have in other cities. The ticket enclosed will admit yourself and one person for Monday, July 2nd.

"Cool Breezes" where can they be found? etc. is a most popular as well as most talked of topic these warm days. That's why the New Theatre has gained public favor, and is on most every one's lips, when cool breezes are mentioned. Why? Because It's Always Cool and Comfortable There.

"Yours Sincerely,
"THE NEW THEATRE CO."

An Annual Letter

Walter J. Blum of the Star Theatre, Dansville, N. Y., sells his theatre in an annual letter to every name on his mailing list. In his last letter he explained why he had to add 3 cents to adult's admissions and 2 cents on a child's ticket. His most logical sales talk on the admission increase was the list of pictures and stars which he included in his letter. The Star's annual letter follows:

STAR THEATRE

Dansville, N. Y.

To Our Patrons:—

In promoting and maintaining the Theatrical interests of Dansville and vicinity, the Star Theatre wishes to place before the public a status of policy and amusement forecast for the coming season. The Star Theatre is now in its second year, and has outlived its experimental stage. The management is satisfied that only the best entertainment and films available can satisfy the public taste, and along this line of endeavor has booked for the Fall and Winter season a list of films second to none.

The Star, as your Theatre, is ready at all times to entertain or recommend any project or suggestion that will provide cleaner, better or worthier entertainment. Every precaution is taken by the management to provide every comfort and courtesy to its patrons. It is their ambition to make this Theatre a Home Theatre, and to create among other attributes a home atmosphere. Any suggestion to further this condition will be appreciated.

In providing for your entertainment for the coming season the Star is in the process of booking some of the highest priced and best films on the market. The increased cost of these productions provides the management some concern. By inquiry we find that theatres in the surrounding territory, playing certainly no higher grade of entertainment, are charging considerable more. The Star does not contemplate asking similar admission prices, but due to the higher grade of productions contemplated, asks an increase of 3c on an adult ticket and 2c on a child's ticket, making the prices 28c and 17c, starting September 1st, 1922.

There will be no advance for super-productions, as in the case of most theatres, and this level adjustment of prices gives our patrons, (in consideration of aggregate totals), the benefit of an actual reduction in prices. It is the endeavor of the Star to provide entertainment at the small nominal advance that will not be a burden to your regular attendance, and we feel that this level adjustment of prices gives you that decided benefit. Friday will remain "bargain day" as heretofore, with tickets at 20c and 10c.

In order to provide ample power and exacting detail, new additions and greater volume will be installed in the organ, giving our patrons the benefit of the best music available.

In conclusion the Star Theatre asks the co-operation of the amusement-loving people, and encouragement in the maintenance of this policy. In return we submit some of the new bookings for the coming season:

Richard Barthelmess in "Tol-able David," "Sonny," "The Seventh Day," "Smilin' Through," "Rose of the Sea," "Camille," "Hail the Woman," "The Lotus Eater," "Peacock Alley," "The Child Thou Gavest Me," "Don't Tell Everything," "Moran of the Lady Letty," "The Bride's Play," "The Green Temptation," "The Bonded Woman," "Just Around the Corner," "Experience," "The Great Moment," "One Clear Call," "Beyond the Rocks," "The Three Musketeers," "Robin Hood," "Thru the Back Door," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Manslaughter," "Blood and Sand," "Grandma's Boy," "Disraeli," "Dream Street," "Connecticut Yankee," "Her Gilded Cage," "Foolish Wives," "Queen of the Turf," "Virgin of Paradise," "Footfalls," "Shame," "Heart of Maryland," "Son of Wallingford," "Flower of the North," "The Dictator," "Across the Continent," "Young Diana," "If You Believe It, It's So," "The Old Homestead," "Nice People," "The Young Rajah," "My Old Kentucky Home," "Sisters."

Yours for Better Entertainment, EMPIRE STAR CORPORATION.

"If I Were An Exhibitor and Wanted to Build High School Patronage"

The Editors invited a number of high powered exploiters to suggest ideas and methods for going after more business from high school students, who, according to a recent survey, are not steady patrons of motion pictures. Additional Exploiters make their suggestions this week.

By CLAUDE SAUNDERS

Director of Exploitation, Paramount

One of the first stunts practiced by this department to get out the high school children was the split herald stunt first tried on "Don't Tell Everything." The exhibitor printed up a rather large card containing the heads of the stars taken from the press sheet mats. The herald was then divided into three parts. On the back of each section was a complete announcement of the run of the picture, but on the front face the head of the stars were divided. The entire out-put was distributed on the highschool grounds with the information that those assembling a complete set would receive a free ticket to the theatre. About 3,000 cards were distributed, but the management took great care that there were only about 50 complete sets in the whole lot. The effect of this was to have the boys and girls running around the grounds to one another trying to trade an Elliot Dexter for a Wally Reid head, or something of this sort.

This, however, is solely a teaser stunt and while it gets the title before the highschool kids, there is no guarantee that it will appeal to them and pull them in.

On a picture like "Adam's Rib," our exploitation men have in a number of cases worked the direct appeal. Usually the Exploiter went to the highschool with a set of Curtis stills showing the prehistoric scenes and either obtained a room for their display or arranged to place them on a bulletin board in one of the halls. The principal was put up to send a boy or girl around to each class to make an announcement that the stills were on exhibition.

This proved very effective, but it also has a weakness and that is that if you sell the highschool students too strongly on the point that it is an educational picture, you will perhaps keep them away from the box office.

In several cases, the exploitation man made a speech himself and managed to insert enough sure-fire remarks to stimulate the interest of the children. It has been our experience that you cannot stress the educational angle too strongly as it has never been proved that highschool kids were in any way interested in education.

Saunders Says:

Don't stress education angle too strong. It has never been proved that high school students were interested in education.

Try out pre-views on the teachers—get them talking.

Another time-honored stunt worked recently on "Adam's Rib" was the drawing contest. The highschool children were furnished stills of the dinosaur and offered free tickets for the best drawing. This stunt will enlist the intensive interest of only the drawing classes, but might be a wedge to keep the whole title in front of the school children.

One of the best and surest ways is to take a good picture like "To Have and to Hold", "Knighthood" and later "The Covered Wagon" and if possible give a private showing or a pre-view to all the school teachers in town. There is not the faintest chance that the teachers will not like this type of picture. There is enough historical data in them to make them interesting and seem worth while and you yourself know the entertainment value of these subjects.

In most cases, the teachers have come away enthused. The exhibitor and the exploitation men usually make the superintendent of schools or the principal of the highschool get right up on the stage at the conclusion of the showing and thank the management for its courtesy and fine entertainment and instruct all the teachers to spread the message to the school children.

This seems to be the most thorough of all highschool stunts and also the most legitimate. There is no misrepresentation in it because these pictures contain a fair amount of historical fact presented in an amusing and entertaining manner, a form of instruction which makes education palatable.

There is another stunt that was worked to great advantage on "The Loves of Pharaoh" but it only occurred to us after the picture had failed to hold up in a number of towns. Where this stunt was tried, the picture was invariably a box office winner.

The picture was usually shown to the superintendent of schools and principals of highschools solely for the purpose of stressing the fine Egyptian spectacle. Then enough letters were obtained to make a fine set of newspaper type ads. The school children standing in fear of discipline read these ads and attendance of this group was noticeably stimulated. In addition, it had the effect of getting out the general population because we all know, the Puritan tradition in the American small towns rather mitigates the attendance of the theatres unless the population has been sold on the idea that they are being uplifted.

But the biggest fact of this stunt is that it sells an angle of the picture that will stand up to criticism. In a number of cases, they sold the "Loves of Pharaoh" as an absorbing love story and where they did this, the population was a little disappointed because they can hardly be interested in the love tremblings of a middle-aged and homely king, but by telling the public that the thing they will see is a fine cross section of Egyptian life with all the mysteries of Egypt fully revealed, displayed in a convincing and authentic manner, they cannot possibly be disappointed because as you know. "The Loves of Pharaoh" is a fine picture.

Another stunt that has been worked recently on "Prodigal Daughters" enlisting the aid of the school authorities has proven very successful. The exploitation men have taken the lines on the posters which report to be the creed of the Society of Prodigal Daughters, which are:

"We want no chaperons.

"New lips to kiss.

"Freedom to smoke cigarettes."

Usually you can get some publicity seeking girls to stand sponsor to such an organization and begin to enlist members at not a cent cost for membership. Have the newspapers tipped off and you can be assured of a storm of protest which will excite the entire campus. Then the boys and girls will flock to the box office to see the thing their elders condemned. There is no come-back on this stunt as the picture is entirely moral and shows that this sort of life eventually becomes unattractive.

Most of these stunts have been described before in the Exhibitors Trade Review and the last mentioned was sent out in the last batch of stories but has not been published yet.

High schools are fertile fields for exploitation in our opinion, because they give you a large body of people whom you can address with one sort of appeal, and if the appeal is successful, you can expect almost an 80% or 90% attendance at the box office.

The chief thing to guard against, as we see it, in this sort of exploitation, is not to make the appeal too educational as that has a repelling effect rather than a magnetising effect.

A Lawyer-Exhibitor's Analysis Of the Uniform Contract

In this, the third and last installment of his report Bernard Edelhertz analyzes Clauses from 18 on.

By BERNARD EDELHERTZ

Under clause eighteen of the Uniform Contract the exhibitor has the privilege to withdraw his application at any time before it is accepted. This right of withdrawal or cancellation of contract on the part of the exhibitor compels the distributor to act promptly if he wants to avail himself of the exhibitor's application. Furthermore, there is attached to the contract a clause under the title of "Direction to Salesmen" which reads as follows:

"While a salesman has every right to trade among prospective customers to obtain the best offer possible for his product, after he has selected a particular exhibitor whose offer he believes to be the best obtainable and takes a written application from such exhibitor, he should forward the application to the office of his company and make no further effort to sell the same service to any other exhibitor until the application so forwarded has been duly rejected, accepted or withdrawn in accordance with its terms!

This clause while not actually a part of the Uniform Contract is a part of the Code of Ethics, and a violation of any of the provisions of the Code of Ethics is a matter that can be properly brought before the attention of the Board of Arbitration.

Clause Nineteen of the Uniform Contract is the last clause and deals with the subject of arbitration. To enter into a thorough and comprehensive discussion of this clause would in itself require a considerable length of time. In fact, it would be necessary to devote a separate paper in order to properly discuss the various provisions of the arbitration clause alone.

A great deal of time has been devoted by the Uniform Contract committee to the drafting and re-drafting of this one clause. Numerous conferences were held where the subject of discussion was nothing else but this arbitration clause. It was in connection with this clause that the firm of Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft was called in for the purpose of making the clause legally effective. It should be remembered that prior to the adoption of the Uniform Contract it was not generally known, at least it was not known by a great many exhibitors, that the method employed by the various film clubs in enforcing a claim against an exhibitor or a violation of contract by an exhibitor, through the instrumentality of the $250.00 additional deposit clause, was absolutely illegal, and in some instances I venture to say even bordering on the verge of a criminal offense. The method employed savored very much of a sort of subtle conspiracy and was clearly in restraint of trade.

The arbitration clause in the Uniform Contract wiped out of existence all this illegality and brought into being a method of procedure which not only has legal sanction but is considered by a great many other industries as a model method of settling disputes in commercial controversies. I want to direct your particular attention to that part of the arbitration clause which speaks of the different methods of enforcing arbitration both as against exhibitor and distributor. This method provides both enforcement of the failure or refusal to submit to arbitration or for a failure or refusal to abide by a decision rendered by the Board of Arbitration. On this particular phase a great deal of time and deliberation have been spent.

You will note carefully that a distributor has no more the arbitrary power to demand any additional payments from the exhibitor for a violation of a contract, and that it is only the Board of Arbitration, after rendering a decision against the exhibitor, and in the event that the exhibitor fails to comply with such decision, that an additional payment can be demanded.

As originally drawn, this clause did not have a corresponding provision for the punishment of a distributor who failed to submit to arbitration or who refused to abide by the decision of the Board.

It was after devoting to this particular problem a great deal of thought, that I suggested a certain method of punishment for the distributor, and that thought was incorporated in the 4th paragraph of the arbitration clause, which reads as follows:

"In the event that the Distributor shall fail or refuse to consent to the submission to arbitration of any claim or controversy arising under any film service contract which the Distributor may have with the Exhibitor, or to abide by and forthwith comply with any decision and award of such Board of Arbitration upon any such claim or controversy so submitted, or if the Distributor shall be found by such Board of Arbitration in any such arbitration proceeding to have been guilty of such a breach of contract as shall in the opinion of such Board of Arbitration justify the Exhibitor in refusing to deal with the Distributor, the Exhibitor may at his option terminate this and any other existing contract between the Exhibitor and the Distributor by mailing notice by registered mail within two (2) weeks after such failure, refusal or finding, and in addition the Distributor shall not be entitled to redress from such Board of Arbitration upon any claim or claims against any exhibitor until the Distributor shall have complied with such decision, and in the meanwhile the provisions of the first paragraph of this section Nineteenth shall not apply to any such claim or claims."

So you see that this mode of punishment of an offending distributor automatically suspends him from any and all benefits of arbitration not only as against the particular exhibitor whose claim may be the subject of consideration but as against any and all exhibitors with whom he may have commercial dealings, and such suspension continues in force until the distributor shall have complied with the decision of the Board.

Note also the paragraph in this clause which states:

"The provisions of this contract relating to arbitration shall be construed according to the laws of the State of New York."

There is a vital difference between arbitration which can be set aside or disregarded by the will of either of the parties, an arbitration which has legal statutory sanction.

New York was the first state that enacted legislation which gives real effect to arbitration. New Jersey has followed the state of New York by enacting an arbitration law, at the last session of its legislature similar to that of the State of New York.

So that in the State of New York we have today arbitration which is as conclusive as a final Court of Appeal. The Joint Arbitration Board provided for in this clause is both the first and the last court of resort.

The ethical and economic value of arbitration such as is provided in this Uniform Contract is incalculable.

Twenty-two years at the Bar, five of which have been devoted to the trial of cases as attorney for the United States Government, have afforded me an opportunity to realize that the time and money wasted in litigation is beyond anything you can visualize or even imagine.

The Arbitration Society of America has recently held an "Arbitration Educational Week." The purpose of "Arbitration Educational Week" was defined by the Arbitration Society of America in the following language:

Follow Exhibitor X from Week to Week

Study is more strain on the professor than the student; at least the fine points of a part as outlined by a director seem easy for Wes Barry. Mr. Barry and Director William Beaudine are shown above going over some of the details of the forthcoming Warner Brothers feature "The Country Kid."

Herbert Brenon is the idol of the youngest member of the cast he is directing in "The Spanish Dancer," in which Pola Negri will star for Paramount.

Myron Selznick, Vice President of Selznick Distributing Corporation, broadcasts some inside information on the production of pictures to the radio fans from station W. J. Y.

Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean enter the portals of the film industry. The famous Follies comedy team are shown above taking their first step toward fame as photoplay artists by entering the New York studio of the Fox Film Corporation, which will offer them in a feature cut to their measure.

Atmosphere for the Summer audiences. This is a scene from a new Pathe comedy "Jack Frost," produced by Hal Roach and starring Snub Pollard.

A "Pam" of what is said to be the most gigantic set ever built in the East for photoplay making. The setting will play an important part as atmosphere for the romance and action of "Under the Red Robe," which Cosmopolitan has pictured from Stanley Weyman's famous romance. The scene depicts the palace of King Louis XIII and reproduces the Louvre as it was in the early seventeenth century.

Viola Dana tries a step or two in rehearsal for a dance she will do in her new Metro feature "Roughed Lips." The music is by Harold Shaw, her director.

Syd Chaplin does a few setting-up exercises in a valiant endeavor to read the meaning of the Russian for Marshall Neilan's Siberian village for the Goldwyn production "The Rendezvous."

Fay Tincher with a "Min" coiffeur, an important part of her make-up for the role of the leading lady of "The Gumps," which is being made into a series of short subjects for Universal.

The title was not consulted when this scene was posed, thus a woman comes between the men of "The Man Between," an Associated Exhibitors offering with Canadian Northwest settings.

The men behind Century Comedies step forward. At the left is Julius Stern, President, and on the right his brother Abe Stern, vice president of the company which produces some of the leading short comedies for Universal release.

Alice Lake and Robert McKim in a scene from the B. F. Zeidman production "The Spider and the Rose," a Principal Pictures Corporation offering to the State Righters.

THE BRASS BOTTLE

The Maurice Tourneur production released through First National about which there has been much talk.

J. D. Williams, President and General Manager of Ritz Pictures, and Rudolph Valentino, whom Mr. Williams announces as the star of pictures planned by his company. In announcing Valentino as a Ritz star, Mr. Williams crisply states that "other announcements will follow."

Clara Bow, who has been called one of the most promising of the younger screen actresses by more than one reviewer, has signed a contract to appear in Preferred Pictures.

The Water Gazers. A special pose by Robert Agnew and Mary Astor, who are featured members of the cast of William de Mille's Paramount production "Spring Magic."

Elvira Oriz and Sara Chacon, dark skinned beauties who have recently arrived in Hollywood to lend their talents to the screen, pose with Marshall Neilan, Sydney Chanlin and Conrad Nagel, in Mr. Neilan's set on the Goldwyn lot.

Monty Banks in his make-up for "Paging Love," one of the series of two-reel comedies in which he will star for Grand-Asher. "Paging Love" shows Monty as a book agent and the "approach" or something was wrong because there's no evidence that the chapter closes with a "sold."

Ace Berry, a seasoned and veteran showman well known in all branches of the industry, is now the General Manager of the Circle Theatre Indianapolis.

RUPERT OF HENTZAU

A Selznick masterpiece with Elaine Hammerstein, Mitchell Lewis, Marjorie Daw, Irving Cummings, Nigel De Brullier, Hobart Bosworth, Claire Windsor, Lew Cody, Adolphe Menjou Elmo Lincoln, Bryant Washburn and Josephine Crowell.

No. 9

Purely Personal

THE friends of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW will be interested in the announcements on the opposite page.

With the additions to the old staff retained, of men who have been notably successful in the conduct of business journals, EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW finds itself in a position to produce a publication and render a service to challenge comparison with any in the field of trade periodicals.

In the future as in the past whenever we are asked for any suggestions or advice regarding trade matters we shall be glad to respond to the best of our ability.

And make our office your headquarters while in the city. Walk right in and tell Miss "Peggy" Wood at the board who you are and where you are from. She will put you in touch with a member of the staff, who will do everything humanly possible to be helpful. Stenographic and telephone service, stationery, etc., are here for you to use. They belong to you!

Indeed It Is

In our Directory Number, June 30, we quoted Carl Laemmle's summer time observation, "Summer is what you make it." Along with that remark we added our own observation that producers should take Mr. Laemmle's little speech to heart.

The unexpected occurred. Mr. Laemmle, practicing what he preached, with Adolph Zukor's connivance, opened "Merry Go Round" in the Rivoli Theatre. It played there during a hot week, which included July 4, and it grossed $23,000. It ran a second week, also hot, at the same theatre, and held up.

Thus is the moral drawn for those who accept morals at their full value.

If it has the stuff in it a picture will draw in the Summer.

It may not draw as much business in Summer as it would in Winter, but it will draw sufficiently to pay the overhead and often leave a margin of profit. But even if a house breaks even on a Summer's business that's a lot to be thankful for.

Thanks, Mr. Laemmle, for showing the wise ones.

Sounds Warning Note

THAT is a striking remark uttered by Elmer Pearson on his return from Los Angeles this week—that from close observation he is led to believe the total production costs this year will exceed the total film rentals of any previous twelve-month.

If there be substantial basis for the statement—and the Pathe official is a keen student, a man who has been distributing pictures for many years—then the "stop, look and listen" sign should be posted immediately.

A very few figures on the tablecloth will reveal the significance of the remark. To the production costs must be added the expense of distribution, one-third, let us say, and also the manufacturer's profit. If the latter element be placed at the low figure of one-sixth of the producers' expense it means, assuming Mr. Pearson's estimate is correct, that the aggregate rentals for the coming year must be at least 50 per cent greater than they have been for any preceding equivalent period—that is, if to the money invested there is to be given adequate return.

One point very properly may be made by those who will defend the soundness of the extra expenditure, and that is that owing to the large number of unusual productions millions of dollars will be brought to the box office from pockets of those not counted among the regular patrons of the motion picture theatre. Undoubtedly this force is substantial, but it will not represent a half of the millions paid in rentals.

In our issue last week reference was made to comments by distributors returned from the west coast regarding the increased cost of production. Mr. Pearson brings the whole subject again to the front, and in such form that it may not be ignored.

The question of rentals is one that is uppermost in the minds of producers and distributors, too. Marcus Loew says the solution of the rising production costs due for one reason to high salaries is increased admission prices, and he tells of several instances in which he has with due caution tried the experiment in a few of his own houses. Through giving his patrons better shows he has found results most satisfactory.

Exhibitors in convention and on the street have been heard to say they doubt the wisdom of increasing their prices.

The issue is on the lap of the gods. But the problem will be solved. Harder ones have been, and in the motion picture industry, too.

Two Announcements

CHANGE OF OWNERSHIP

With this issue EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW passes out of my hands.

An institution is the lengthened shadow of one man—the man at the helm.

More perhaps than with any other product or business, a magazine needs the intimate, personal guidance and co-operation of its owner, so much so that no one, I feel, should stand sponsor for a publication unless he gives it his own undivided attention.

Pressure of other interests has made this impossible for me for some time, and since it appears that this condition will exist indefinitely I have chosen to withdraw entirely.

I have reached this decision with great reluctance, for I have come to love the motion picture industry, and my faith in it, in its possibilities for making people the world over happier and better, for advancing civilization itself, is surpassed by that of no one.

In turning over the reins to Mr. Geo. C. Williams, the new publisher, I do so with the happy consciousness that his long and wide publishing experience, added to his reputation for integrity, promises a bright future for EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, for a magazine of genuine and increasing helpfulness to the motion picture industry.

I bespeak for Mr. Williams the support of every factor of the industry, a support which I am confident he will merit in over-abundant measure.

For the loyal support which I have received I want once more to express my sincere appreciation.

A. B. SWETLAND,
Retiring President of Exhibitors
Trade Review.

GREETINGS TO THE MOTION PICTURE FRATERNITY

Permit me to introduce myself.

I have been in the publishing business for over twenty years; in fact myself, associates and staff represent well over a century of publishing experience.

We have bought out EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW lock, stock and barrel.

Every dollar is our own money; not one cent of investment by anyone connected with producing, distributing or exhibiting motion pictures, or anyone making or interested in the making of any theatre equipment.

So we are free, untrammelled, unfettered and unshackled, without obligation of any kind, except the obligation to the industry to produce a magazine that not only will record the news and happenings, but that will also point the way to progress.

The motion picture field is rich in its trade papers. They have set a standard that any industry might envy, and there is plenty of room for all of them.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, under our guidance, will strive to see whether it cannot lead the others, but in a spirit of friendly competition to see which of us can best serve in the good cause, motion picturedom itself will profit most.

We expect to merit your support, and this only do we ask: give us your support in ratio to our merits.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.
GEO. C. WILLIAMS,
President.

SAUL SELIGMAN, American representative of the Stoll Film Company, broke into the first page of The Sun and Globe on the afternoon of July 16 in a novel manner. Mr. Seligman had been in the United States for the purpose of introducing his company's elaborate production of "The Prodigal Son." It just happened that on the return trip he selected the Franconia as the vehicle, and it just happened, too, that the skipper of that boat had rather rigid rules as to the requirements of the prohibition law. As a result the unprovided thirsty souls on board remained thirsty.

Mr. Seligman pleaded with the captain that he had been in misery for eighty days, so the tale ran, but the best medical attention he could get was two drinks a day—and small drinks at that. "Growing desperate, he wirelessed for champagne to be sent aboard at Queenstown in a cutter, and so spent his last night at sea in a rapid convalescence."

Just to stop anyone from saying that it takes an Englishman to show 'em how to get the stuff, when it comes to an emergency we desire to set it down here that although Mr. Seligman has lived many years in England and will pass in any company as a full-blooded son of John Bull nevertheless he is a New Yorker born and bred.

It is stated that Mr. Seligman is to return to the United States in September with additional Stoll productions.

PREFERRED Pictures as a result of negotiations with Sam Zierler, president of Commonwealth Film Service, has established its own exchange at 729 Seventh avenue, New York. It will distribute Preferred product for the season of 1923. The first release will be "The Broken Wing," the initial number of the preferred Fifteen.

Commonwealth will continue to distribute the first eight Preferred Pictures, its schedule ending with "Daughters of the Rich."

THE new first vice-president of the North Carolina Theatre Owners, A. F. Moses, is a banker as well as an owner of theatres. We were chatting with Mr. Moses on the evening that fitted in between the two day sessions of the convention. The "gang" had wandered over to one of the beach resorts, there really was "no place else to go," and was split into small groups watching the dancers.

"Business is very good," said Mr. Moses. "Perhaps in the South it is better than it is in the North. What is true of the picture business is true of other kinds of industry. Everybody who wants to work can do so. It is here for them. Last year at this time we were losing a sum of money, a material sum I may say, every week. Now we are breaking even, and if we continue to do that between now and the middle of August we are very well satisfied. And I think we will."

OUT in Glendale, Long Island, where Charlie Burr makes pictures there was an unusual and also an interesting celebration of the Fourth of July. In the first place and as a matter of fact it happened on the 5th, but that was with the acquiescence of the natives—as well as with a large number of automobile parties from the surrounding country.

Charlie was staging some night cabaret scenes for "Clipped Wings," word of which had spread among the neighbors. The result was that the latter passed up their formal celebration and waited for the show.

Just Between Ourselves

By the time Director Kenneth Webb was read yto "shoot" four policemen were necessary to keep in line behind the cameras theh throngs that were on the ground with their camp ehairs.

MACK SENNETT in his initial Pathe comedy release has sounded the bell, somewhat loudly. We picked up "Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening?" at the Brooklyn Strand last evening, and we'll admit we eheated Brother Hyman a bit by sitting through the comedy twice. And we laughed on the second trip just as heartily as we did on the first. There was an abundance of company on both occasions, for the house rose to Ben Turpin and the sterling bunch of troupers surrounding him.

This subject with the elongated name strikes a new comedy note. Of slapstick there is it is true a trace, and a trace only. We recall one incident that comes within the scope of this term—and that is the upsetting of a beehive—but the outstanding note of the action is restraint, of an absence of the farcical; in other words, as a rule the roles are interpreted as if the subject were straight drama.

Of course, Adeline, attired ultra-decollette, does meet misfortune in the way of a plaster of bean soup in the back. It is just of the consistency that permits it to adhere for a moment and then most tragically slip—out of sight. Then again Ben in his delirium does stand up in bed and proceed to pick flowers for Adeline; he does fall through the bed. Ben does ride with an English saddle with his derby hat flopping all over the lot. Ben does many things that are unquiet, but the dominating note nevertheless is restraint.

Mr. Sennett's opener for his Pathe contract is a corking good comedy. It will stand up in any company. If it is a sample or an average of the subjects to follow then picturegoers are in for a new or a renewed source of fun.

LIONEL BARRYMORE and Irene Fenwick were married in Rome, July 14. The ceremony was performed by Captain Ciamarra, municipal councillor. Among the guests were Richard Bennett, Adrienne Morrison, George Fitzmaurice, Montagu Love, Bert Lytell, Barbara La Marr, and H. H. Bruenner.

WILL ROGERS, the gum-chewing wizard of the rope and all-around wit and good fellow, who is now at the Hal Roach studios preparing comedies for the multitude, also is contributing ten or twelve hundred words a week to the Sunday edition of the New York Times under the caption of "Slipping the Lariat Over."

Much of Will's letter of July 15 is devoted to a talk on scopolamin, "a thing that when injected into you will make you tell the truth, at least for a while, anyway." The comedian refers to the presence in California of the inventor of the serum.

"Now I don't know that the stuff is any good," Will goes on, "but he certainly come to the right state to get material to try it on. If he can make us fellows in California tell the truth his experiment will be a total success. He don't have to look for subjects—just jab his needle into the first guy and await results."

Will tells how the inventor tried it on a movie star, who promptly told his right salary and his press agent quit him. When a "movie staaress" was subjected to the test she told not only her first husband's name but remembered her real maiden name. When a "movie magnet" discovered he had under its influence revealed what his pictures really cost he committed suicide.

If the humorist continues in his idol smashing course he is pretty sure to arouse the dislike of the transplanted mid-westerners in that city out there by the sunset. Nevertheless he is adding to the gayety not only of the nation at large but to the motion picture industry in particular.

DROPPED in on Monday on Dr. Shallenberger, in order to get a line on what is uppermost in that independent mind of his. It just happens the doctor has not been away from New York in two weeks, which is a long time for the wanderlust to stay throttled in his case. In the present instance, however, there has been illness in the family, and of which the "Doc" got his share, but all of which now is on the mend.

On the last journey of the Arrow president he stopped off at Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago and Milwaukee.

"You ask me to tell you what I saw in visiting around that most impressed me," said the doctor. "I'll tell you: It is that wherever independent exchangemen buckle down to business and go out and really show exhibitors what there is in the market in the way of independent product they are doing a strong business. The independent exchangeman has got the best chance for a regular business he ever has had."

"Exhibitors are in a more receptive mood today toward independent productions than ever before. I will qualify that by saying in some sections, in those territories where the independents have made it a point to go out and demonstrate to theatre owners just what they have got. In those instances the independents are getting the bookings."

"Take some of the men with whom I am more or less in close contact, men like Arthur Bromberg or Frank Zambreno, or Emmick or Jossey or McConville or Chadwick or Luchese—they are all winning. Then there are others like Sam Zierler and Bobby North and Ben Amsterdam and Harry Charnas and Joe Friedman, to name a few of those who are doing a smashing business. All of these men go after the bookings and run their offices on a businesslike basis—and they get results."

"In one city in which I was recently I counted six important theatres showing independent pictures at one time—and four of those houses were under one control. I mention this just as a straw."

"It is a fact that many exchangemen with independent product can materially increase their business if they will more keenly realize their possibilities of 'showing the exhibitor.'"

Williams to Distribute Valentino Productions

AWAITS END OF ZUKOR CONTRACT

Staff Now Being Organized to Surround Star on Return From European Trip

Rudolph Valentino has signed a long term contract with the Ritz Pictures, Inc., by which he will appear exclusively under Ritz management and direction. The arrangement becomes effective on the termination of the Famous Players-Lasky contract. The announcement was made simultaneously by J. D. Williams, President of Ritz Pictures, and by Mr. Valentino, on the eve of the latter's departure for Europe at a dinner given July 18 at the Ritz-Carlton.

The party, which was attended by about thirty representatives of the industry, was a most enjoyable one. Following the dinner Arthur James, who acted as toastmaster, introduced as speakers Mr. Williams, Mr. Valentino, Samuel Rothafel, Frederick Mordant Hall of the New York Times, William Brandt, Joseph Dannenberg, Robert E. Welsh, O. O. McIntyre, Frank Tilley, editor of the Kinematograph Weekly of London; George Blaisdell, William A. Johnston, Louella Parsons, Larry Urbach and Martin Quigley. Mr. Williams also responded to a request for additional remarks, declaring the evening had been very enlightening to him and saying that as a showman he stood right in the middle, between the exhibitor and the artist.

The question of the star's future on the screen has been a matter of widespread comment and speculation for some months, and offers which called for great sums of money have been made to him and refused. Mr. Valentino's decision, it is definitely announced, was made with picture achievement as the first consideration.

The contract and the plans call for productions commensurate with the star's great popularity. A special staff is being organized under Mr. Valentino's personal direction that will co-operate in the production of pictures of magnitude, dramatic value and popular appeal.

Two important pictures have been definitely arranged for and it is proposed that these shall be the sort of productions that the public requires, in story, technique, atmosphere, action and character portrayal.

Beginning of Active Program

"It is my distinguished privilege to be toastmaster of this Ritz party," said Arthur James, toastmaster. "With a Ritz background and with a Ritz cast, we are here to announce the first Ritz star. I may say that this is the beginning of a program of activity that promises great things in motion pictures. Motion pictures have gone forward in a series of waves or, if you care to call them so, a series of epochs. In the parlance of the trade they could be called a series of new deals. They seem to be an essential part of the business.

"This occasion is significant for several reasons. Personally I regard it as the really important constructive step toward the proper allocation of art and business in picturemaking.

"We propose to give the star the complete and absolute support of an organization that is in sympathy with the creation of the best. A great movement requires great leadership, and the Ritz Company is blessed with the best in leadership in that greatest of all the creative showmen in the history of motion pictures. I take pleasure in presenting to you Mr. J. D. Williams."

"Aside from the educational value, I look on the motion picture as a great influence for making people happy," said Mr. Williams. "I need not do more than to present this as my idea of the greatest and best purpose of the motion picture, as it seems to me it could have no finer mission on earth. To make pictures that will successfully accomplish this purpose it is necessary to bring together in happy co-operation the necessary elements and then with enthusiasm proceed to carry out the plan.

Must Supply the Big House

"In every company that I have helped promote or organize, I have tried to bring together those elements at a time when they were needed and in response to the demands of the situation. During my association with Mr. W. W. Hodgkinson (whom I regard as one of the bravest men in the business), and at the time of the promotion of the Paramount Picture Corporation, those forces were brought together that made that company a great success.

"In organizing First National, several years later, I brought together those factors in the industry at that time necessary to insure success. The picture business is a business of rapidly changing conditions, and experience has shown us that every four or five years we need a new deal, new policies, and new organizations must be brought into being.

"As an illustration of the exchange, take an exhibitor customer that has been the best customer in a given city for five or six years. Then somebody builds a house twice as big as his and offers the exchange twice the money for rentals. You are compelled to do business with the new theatre, and yet there is no other business in the world that could throw down its old customers for the new and survive.

"At the time I started First National who would have dreamed of the present popularity of Rudolph Valentino, Harold Lloyd, Thomas Meighan, and other stars and directors that I might name? In order to be successful you must now handle the product of the biggest artists and you must place their product in the finest theatres.

"In selecting Rudolph Valentino as the first Ritz star, I am sure no one can deny he is the most popular personality the screen has ever known in his particular field and especially is his popularity very great with the ladies. His worth as an artist in the portrayal of roles that are exceedingly difficult has been fully demonstrated in his work in 'The Four Horsemen,' in 'Blood and Sand,' and other productions. He has gone up through the hard school of experience and by real work has perfected his natural talents. His qualities of personal magnetism on the screen and his definite screen personality represent values which are justly entitled to recognition.

"In each one of the companies which I brought into being we have always had a definite goal and I have carried on until that goal was reached.

"In striving toward a new goal I intend to have associated through one distribution channel the greatest artists, be they stars or directors, who are responsible for their own pictures.

"The making of pictures is definitely and solely a matter of art, and art must predominate in a competent organization to create the sort of pictures the public will delight in. To this point picture making is an art.

"When the production reaches the tin can it becomes a commercial proposition. Many difficulties and many handicaps greet the producer of motion pictures and we shall, I believe, be able to eliminate many of them by the Ritz plan which also proposes to eliminate many of the evils of distribution. For instance, no exhibitor can afford to take cheaper, poorer pictures on the strength of the good ones. Under the Ritz plan the good ones—and only the good ones—will be marketed to the exhibitor at a price enabling him to make money.

"The great stars and great directors who own and control their own pictures have no desire to charge more than their value. They know and appreciate the fact that the drawing power is after all the real price fixer. In support of this I have known several stars who have given exhibitors money out of their own pockets rather than see them lose money on their productions.

"There is no proper place in our business for the middleman who wants it all. There is a need, all through our business, for a square deal with charges in keeping with the number of tickets sold at the exhibitors box office. One star sells a thousand tickets, another sells 500 tickets—and it certainly is fair that these be given the right proportion of rentals and receipts.

"By this I do not mean percentage booking, because I do not believe exhibitor and star have enough confidence in one another to make this workable at the present time, but of course this is bound to come later in some form or other.

Cannot Eliminate Human Element

"We are sometimes likely to forget we cannot eliminate the human element which is part and parcel of a contract with a star. The star is called upon to live in a manner befitting his popularity and to uphold the dignity of his position. These conditions actually demand big increases in salary and they must be met. The very essence of the show business is 'give and take.' Show me a company that hasn't abrogated a contract if the contract was against it. All that I know have.

"Greater care also must be taken in the selection of the picture material and in the production methods in order not to destroy the popularity and prestige which has been built up. Contrary to some opinions, I maintain that the star who has developed a special type of work and becomes popular in it knows best how to farther develop his or her talents. They should be unhampered to make their own type of product. The star is selected for particular ability, personality and magnetism, and only one in 100,000 can ever be selected.

"Ladies and Gentlemen, it is my privilege and pleasure to present to you the first Ritz star, Mr. Rudolph Valentino."

"There are several reasons why I preferred to connect with the Ritz Company," said Mr. Valentino. "First of all, the very name itself suggests and the company stands for the class of productions that I hope to make. More than this—I was chiefly influenced by my confidence in Mr. Williams personally. His past accomplishments, ideals and ambitions to produce only great, artistic pictures of wide popular appeal coincide so clearly with my own hopes for my future that I am confident our associations will prove a happy one. Then, too, I have found that Mr. Williams enjoys the confidence of the exhibitors of motion pictures and, after all, it is through the exhibitor-owner that our work must reach the public."

THE VICTOR READY FOR DISTRIBUTION

Universal Feature Starring Herbert Rawlinson to Be Released July 30

Universal City.—"The Victor," starring Herbert Rawlinson, is now ready for distribution and will be released July 30. This is the second feature directed by Edward Laemmle. His first was "Top O' the Morning" starring Gladys Walton, after which he returned to directing serials—notably "The Oregon Trail."

It is a tale of the British aristocracy versus the prize ring. The finances of Lord Waring have reached such a low ebb that he sends his son, the Hon. Cecil Fitzhugh to America to contract a wealthy marriage. Cecil, not liking the idea, gets a job instead as a waiter and in an argument knocks out a prominent prize fighter. His career is taken right out of his hands and he is placed in the ring where he wins the middle weight crown and saves the family estate in a very snappy finale.

The cast includes Dorothy Manners, Frank Currier, Otis Harlan, Esther Ralston, Eddie Gribbon and Tom McGuire.

INJUNCTION AGAINST SALE OF FILM STOCK

New York.—Supreme Court Justice Ford, on application of Deputy State Attorney General Rosenthal, issued a temporary injunction against further sale of stock of the Motion Picture Producing Company of America and the National Exchange, Inc., both of 398 Fifth Avenue.

The injunction was obtained under the Martin law and halts the activities of Walter L. Johnson, President of the two firms and of the Johnson & Hopkins Company, Inc., which was formed, according to Mr. Rosenthal, to sell the stock.

Both corporations are organized under Delaware laws, the first with an authorized capital stock of $500,000 and the second with $5,000,000.

Mr. Rosenthal says officials of the Motion Picture Producing Company admit it has never made a successful picture, but 100,000 shares were sold at $2 each.

Argument on application to make injunction permanent was set forth for July 20.

INCE RUSHING WORK ON SPECIAL FEATURE

Culver City.—Thomas H. Ince intends to release four big specials in the fall and is rushing work at his studio to have them completed for early autumn showing. They will all be released by First National.

Camera work is completed on "Her Reputation," directed by John Griffith Wray under Mr. Ince's supervision. It was adapted from "The Devil's Own," by Bradley King and Talbot Mundy. May McAvoy is starred and Lloyd Hughes has the leading male role.

"Anna Christie" will be started as soon as Mr. Ince secures a leading woman to play the difficult role. Bradley King is preparing the adaptation, and it will be interpreted by an all-star cast.

"Country Lanes and City Pavements," a story by John Fleming Wilson, who wrote "The Man Who Came Back." The continuity is by Bradley King and will go into production following "Anna Christie."

"The Just and the Unjust," from Vaughan's novel, is fourth on the schedule, and the adaptation will also be done by

TOURNEUR'S BRASS BOTTLE AT STRAND

New York.—Maurice Tourneur's comedy "The Brass Bottle," presented by M. C. Levee through Associated First National Pictures, will have its Metropolitan premiere at the Broadway Strand during the week of July 22, and has been booked for early showings in all the First National first run houses throughout the country.

In the cast of the pictures are Ernest Torrence, Harry Myers, Barbara La Marr, Tully Marshall, Charlotte Merriam and Otis Harlan.

Bradley King. This story is said to be a novelty drama big in action and gripping in heart interest.

Lloyd Hamilton Has Started New Series of Six Comedies

New York.—Lloyd Hamilton has started making the first of a new series of six Hamilton Comedies for release through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., at the Pine Arts Studio, Los Angeles.

Ruth Hiatt, who supported Hamilton in three of his last series, has been engaged for the leading role. Playing opposite Miss Hiatt is Del Lorie. Andrew Arbuckle and Percy Hildebrand are also in the cast.

Lloyd Bacon, son of the late Frank Bacon, is heading the scenario staff, while Hank Mann has transformed himself for the present into a writer of comedy plots and "gags" and will appear in his familiar role in the first of the new series. Gill Pratt is directing.

FEDERAL BOARD RESUMES HEARING

Atlanta.—The hearings of the Federal Trade Commission of its charges against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were resumed here July 16, the last previous sessions having been held in Philadelphia.

Among the witnesses on Monday and Tuesday were Dan Michalove, director of theatres under the Lynch administration of Southern Enterprises and general division manager under the new regime; T. O. Tuttle, branch manager for Southern Enterprises in Dallas in 1919-20, and C. L. Hackworth.

Mr. Fuller, chief counsel for the government, questioned Mr. Michalove for two hours regarding the activities of Southern Enterprises. Willard Patterson is slated as an early witness. It is believed the hearings will last two weeks.

Wedding of Lionel Barrymore and Irene Fenwick in Rome

New York.—Before a brilliant gathering, Lionel Barrymore and Irene Fenwick were married on July 14, in Rome, Italy, the ceremony taking place in the suite of George Fitzmaurice at the Grand Hotel. Mr. Barrymore is playing one of the leading roles in Samuel Goldwyn's "The Eternal City," which Mr. Fitzmaurice is directing for First National release.

Mr. Fitzmaurice acted as best man and Ouida Bergere (Mrs. Fitzmaurice) was the matron of honor. The remaining principals of the picture, Bert Lytell, Montagu Love, Barbara LaMarr and Richard Bennett attended as guests, and among the other distinguished personages present were Mussolini, Premier of Italy, and Richard Washburn Child, American ambassador at the Quirinal. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Barrymore journeyed to Venice for a brief honeymoon, returning in time to permit Mr. Barrymore to complete the remaining exterior of the feature.

E. A. ESCHMANN GUEST OF HONOR

Pathe Gives Informal Testimonial Luncheon to General Sales Manager

New York.—Pathe gave an informal testimonial luncheon Friday, July 13, at the Hotel Webster in honor of E. A. Eschmann, General Sales Manager of Pathe, who is leaving to take up new duties. The spirit of good-will prevailed throughout the festivities, with all present wishing Mr. Eschmann much success in his future endeavors. A handsome gift was presented to the guest of honor as a token from his former associates.

Jack Kyle acted as Toastmaster and appropriate speeches were made by Elmer Pearson and others.

Among those present at the luncheon were: Elmer Pearson, J. E. Storey, Lewis Innerarity, John Humm, Arthur E. Rousseau, E. O. Brooks, Miles F. Gibbons, P. A. Parsons, Victor M. Shapiro, Harry Lewis, George A. Gray, Herbert Crooker, L. E. Franconi, Jack Kyle, Charles Fischer, F. R. Clarke, J. T. Richards, G. Chanier, W. C. Smith, L. S. Diamond, H. Foster, Charles Brady, Raymond Coyle, Emanuel Cohen, J. L. Greene, W. B. Frank, A. Nacht, A. S. Kanc, W. E. Raynor, J. J. Dacey, Charles Bardet, Frank Shellabarger, A. D. Marr, Milton Kronacher, A. L. Sawtell, H. P. Lynton, B. Sanford, R. W. Horn and John Carroll.

Rita Coventry Next

Los Angeles.—"Rita Coventry," an adaptation of Julian Street's novel, will be Wm. deMille's next production for Paramount following "Spring Magic," on which he is now engaged. Clara Beranger, Mr. deMille's scenario writer, is here and in conference with him and Mr. Street about the scenario.

A. M. P. A. Nominations

New York City.—Victor M. Shapiro has been nominated for the presidency of the A. M. P. A., A. M. Botsford, vice-president; Arthur M. Brilant, treasurer, Charles W. Barrell, secretary and Thos. G. Wiley, representative to the U. S. Chamber. Election will be held September 6.

Jones Starts Production

New York.—Charles Jones started production at the William Fox West Coast Studios on a picture called "Second Hand Love." The story was written by Shannon Phye and was made into a scenario by Charles Kenyon. William Wellman is the director. Ruth Dwyer plays opposite to the star.

Lichtman on Coast

Los Angeles.—Al Lichtman is here conferring with B. P. Schulberg on production and sales plans for the Preferred Fifteen to be released in the fall. J. G. Bachmann, treasurer of Preferred Pictures, will not join his associates for the present, but will visit the Coast studios in September.

Will Sell Every Exhibitor

Minneapolis, Minn.—Walter F. Baumgart executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin will start on an 8,000 mile auto tour to "sell" his organization to every exhibitor in the state.

Rothacker Off to Europe

New York City.—Watterson R. Rothacker sailed for Europe July 14. He will consider the advisability of a London laboratory.

Michigan Has Not Changed Its Mind

EXHIBITORS HOLD TO THEIR DECISION

Inform President Cohen They Will Remain Outside National Body

Detroit.—At the regular meeting of the Motion Picture theatre owners of Michigan, held July 11, at the Hotel Wolverine, the request of President Sydney Cohen for an invitation to come to Michigan to be heard on the matter of the withdrawal of the Michigan unit from the National body was brought before the directors and after a thorough discussion the following conclusions were arrived at and forwarded to Mr. Cohen:

"That there has been no change in the situation, that we can see, since Michigan decided to withdraw from the National Body which would warrant a reconsideration. It was the consensus of opinion that the Michigan unit could not be an integral part of any organization that would sanction the political methods employed at the National Convention, particularly the Ford matter as it was used by Mr. Cohen and other leaders of the national body.

"This action on the part of Michigan does not mean that Michigan is not willing at any time to co-operate with or give its support to any constructive move made by the National body or any state, which will accrue to the benefit of the theatre owners of the country, and to this end will be glad to discuss exhibitor problems with any leaders who may pay us a visit, to whom will be extended every courtesy.

"It may be of interest to you to know that at the meeting today definite plans were laid to wage an extensive campaign with the National Legislators of Michigan to secure the repeal of the admission tax, and it is our sincere hope that such a program will be carried out in every state."

Rochester Exhibitors Name Congressional Committee

Rochester, N. Y.—Arrangements were made July 17 at a meeting of the Rochester Motion Picture theatre owners at Irondequoit Bay, Rochester, to name a congressional committee which will have definite representation in each congressional district in the Northern part of New York.

Similar plans are being made with respect to all states, and these when selected by the regional organization will be certified to the National office.

Exhibitor leaders of the other regional units in New York State affiliated with the National organization were present. These included A. A. Elliott of Hudson, F. F. Peters of Hornell, Dewey Michaels and Howard Smith of the Buffalo unit, Sidney Allen of Medina and S. Rhonheimer, Maurice Needles and P. Rosenson of the Greater New York division of the Motion Picture theatre owners of America.

National President Sydney S. Cohen was the principal speaker and brought the message of national organization and its activities.

Arrangements were made for a state meeting of all regional units in the Fall.

A service station was established at Buffalo at the Palace Theatre Building, with a business manager in charge. This office will serve the theatre owners from Albany to Buffalo. Another station was established at National Headquarters in New York City for all theatre owners from Albany to New York City.

A definite fiscal policy was decided upon the proposal of the Canadian theatre owners to have the Canadian division formed.

Meeting of M. P. T. O., N. J.

New York.—At a meeting of the board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey at national headquarters, July 13, there were present President R. F. Woodhull, Secretary Henry Nelson, Vice President Peter Adams, Harry Manus, Joe Seider, Ben Schindler and Harry Hecht.

It was decided to hold the next meeting at the Hotel Ambassador, Atlantic City, August 7. Mr. Seider was elected chairman of the board.

The dues determined upon for the present year were $12.00 under 1000 seating capacity and $25.00 for theatres over that number.

Definite plans were determined upon which include a drive for membership.

A service station has been established, with headquarters at 132 West Forty-Third street, New York.

A definite mode of procedure was established at the meeting with regard to the elimination of the admission and seat tax.

All available data and statistics bearing on the insurance situation is being obtained and a complete report with regard to insurance and the saving possibilities on premiums will be made to the Board of Directors at the Atlantic City meeting.

Joseph Varblow of Camden was appointed counsel for the coming year.

STARTS MODERN STORY

Hollywood.—Ceil B. DeMille, having finished the Biblical prologue of the Paramount picture "The Ten Commandments," has started work on the modern story. In contrast to the spectacular prologue, the modern story is a simple drama of heart appeal, involving only five principal characters. Leatrice Joy, Richard Dix, Nita Naldi, Rod La Rocque, Robert Edeson and Edythe Chapman are the featured players.

The players of the Biblical prologue who have now completed their work include Theodore Roberts, Charles De Roche, Estelle Taylor, James Neill, Gino Corrado, Lawson Butt, Clarence Burton and Noble Johnson.

PRE-RELEASE OF TWO FEATURES ON AUGUST 6

Los Angeles.—New York will have the world's premiere of Norma Talmadge's "Ashes of Vengeance," at the Apollo theatre on August 6, and Constance Talmadge's "Duley" will be presented in Chicago on the same date. "Duley" is to have its pre-lease presentation at the Balaban and Katz Chicago theatre.

"Ashes of Vengeance," is to have an indefinite run at the Apollo at two dollar prices.

Director Sidney Franklin completed the filming of "Duley" only a few days ago and the print will probably be rushed direct from the cutting room to the Chicago theatre for its pre-season run. The production is scheduled for September release by Associated First National.

MAYER DENIES COMBINE TALE

West Coast Producer as Well as Others Named Say the Story Is False

A theatrical paper last week printed a circumstantial story to the effect that there is a possibility of an amalgamation for production and release between the "Lichtman-Schulberg interests, the Warner Brothers and Louis B. Mayer."

It was so circumstantial in fact that Mr. Mayer was moved to send a telegram from Los Angeles making emphatic denial of the yarn. J. G. Bachmann, treasurer of Preferred Pictures, last week had said that not only was there no truth in the story but for the life of him he could not understand where the thing got a start.

When inquiry was made at the Warner offices it was stated that there was nothing in the story.

"Please print emphatic denial over my signature of story linking my name with supposed amalgamation of other forces in industry and reporting me as being dissatisfied with my present releasing relations with Metro and First National," said Mr. Mayer. "As far as I am concerned the report of the amalgamation is absolutely unfounded. I have never discussed or entered into any such deal.

"The eight-hundred-thousand-dollar exhibition value voluntarily placed on my last John M. Stahl production 'The Dangerous Age' by First National should discount entirely the statement made regarding my relations with them.

"Aside from my great personal admiration and friendship for Marcus Loew, I believe that in Metro he has one of the strongest organizations ever built up in this business and I consider it an honor to be connected with him as an independent producer."

Exchangemen vs. Exhibitors

Minneapolis, Minn.—The exchangemen defeated the exhibitors here in a game of kittenball. There was much wrangling over the wager of a chicken dinner for the winners. The indignation between the rivals is so great that it is reported police protection will be provided for the next game.

Trouble Is Brewing

New York City.—Trouble is reported between the F. I. L. M. Club and the T. O. C. C. regarding the work of the arbitration board, because several F. I. L. M. Club members of the board are working together and some exhibitors cannot get a "square deal."

Famous Buys Theatre Site

London.—Famous Players has purchased a site on Jermyn Street and Piccadilly Circus for a theatre, but there will be a delay in construction because a prohibitive figure is asked for the adjoining ground that is required.

Film Veteran Building Hotel

New York.—A. J. Bimberg, a producer since the early days of motion picture making, has laid aside his megaphone and cameras and is building a fifteen story, fire-proof apartment hotel adjacent to the famous Lamb's Club on 44th street, this city.

GRANT MITCHELL IN RADIO-MANIA

Well Known Comedian Has Lead and Is Supported by Margaret Irving

New York.—In the cast of "Radio-Mania," a Herman Holland Production distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and scheduled as a July release, will be seen Grant Mitchell, one of the best known comedians on the American stage, who plays the role of the "radio-bug." Mr. Mitchell is no new comer to the American public. He first came into prominence as leading player in "The Tailor Made Man." Later he appeared in the comedy entitled "The Champeen" and had the leading role in "Kempy."

As the "bug" in "Radio-Mania" he has every opportunity in the display of his laughter-creating abilities. His personality is something that will make him many new friends among the motion picture fans.

Margaret Irving, who plays the role of the girl opposite Grant Mitchell, appeared for some time as a member of the "Follies" cast and last year was a member of the "Music Box Revue."

It is their first appearance together as co-workers in motion pictures.

X-RAY SPECIALISTS GUESTS AT "U" CITY

Universal City.—A delegation of America's prominent physicians and surgeons, who travelled across the continent to attend the convention of the Radiological Society of America, recently held in San Francisco, were interested visitors here, where they were greeted by picture stars, shown the process of making screen plays, and conducted to the "Hunchback of Notre Dame" sets. The scientists arrived in a special car, chartered for the trip from San Francisco to Chicago, by way of this city. From Chicago they were scheduled to take different trains to their various home cities.

Among the physicians in the party, together with their wives and families, were Dr. Geo. E. Steele of Oshkosh, Wis., Dr. C. D. Schafer, of Pittsburgh, Dr. A. B. Reynolds, of Gulfport, Dr. J. J. Herrick, of Ottumwa, Dr. Richard O'Hara, of Springfield, Dr. O. M. Walter of Chicago, Dr. J. Russell Cramen, president of the Radiological Institute, Dr. M. J. Sanborn, Dr. Roland Stevens, of Detroit, Dr. B. C. Cushman, the celebrated Chicago radiologist, Dr. Charles Sima of Chicago, Dr. Edw. C. Ernst of St. Louis, Dr. R. J. May of Cleveland, and Dr. R. V. S. Patterson.

West Coast Critics Praise New Harold Lloyd Comedy

Los Angeles.—Critical leaders in the film production sphere have paid signal honor to Harold Lloyd's newest screen offering "Why Worry." Shortly before it was shipped to New York, the comedy was exhibited in Frances Marion's home before a number of prominent personages in the motion picture world.

Miss Marion, who is one of the screen's best known authors and directors, in a letter to Mr. Lloyd, speaking for her audiences, said in part:

"You have made another ten strike. You have a picture in 'Why Worry' which makes a very suitable follow-up for 'Safety Last,' and which will unquestionably make many new friends for you. I want you to know that we all thoroughly enjoyed the picture."

This picture will have its world's premiere at the First Anniversary Celebration of the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, beginning Labor Day Week.

The Pathe sales department also plans to pre-release the comedy in key cities throughout the country, the week following. Each of these showings will be handled individually in a big way, with advance exploitation re-enforced by day and date publicity.

NEW TALMADGE PICTURE

Hollywood.—Joseph M. Schenck is stepping hard on his production throttle at the United Studios, and things are moving fast. With Constance Talmadge well under way in "A Dangerous Maid," and Buster Keaton going good in his first comedy feature "Heading South," Norma Talmadge suddenly got busy this week with preparations for "Rose of All the World," her next picture, which will go into production next week. Francis Marion and Chester Franklin are finishing the continuity and Franklin will direct it with Miss Marion assisting.

Exhibitors in Three Cities To Fight Daylight Saving

Albany, N. Y.—Next year will undoubtedly find everyone of the exhibitors in the three cities of Albany, Troy and Schenectady, solidly arrayed against daylight saving. After witnessing the effects of daylight saving, the exhibitors in the three cities find that they are losing hundreds of dollars this summer, probably through their own negligence two or three months ago.

Every one of the houses, when canvassed recently, as to the effects of daylight saving, admitted freely that the seven o'clock shows attracted little more than mere handfuls, with a big spurt coming at nine o'clock.

Wife In Name Only to Be Released by Selznick

New York.—Myron Selznick, Vice President of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, announces the acquisition and early release of "Wife in Name Only," a Pyramid Production, directed by George Terwilliger, featuring Edmund Lowe, Mary Thurman, Florence Dixon and Tyrone Power.

This picture was adapted from Bertha M. Clay's novel of the same name, which has enjoyed an enormous circulation for the last fifteen years.

Writers Visit Eternal City

New York.—Among those who recently visited George Fitzmaurice's "The Eternal City" company, on location in Rome, Italy, for First National, were Florence Lawrence, Los Angeles journalist, and John A. MacMahon, dramatic editor of the New York American and the Evening Journal.

Photography Completed

New York.—Albert Parker has finished shooting "Second Youth," for Distinctive Pictures Corporation, the last bit to be taken being the comedy finish in a lake on Long Island. It will be ready for release by fall through Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan.

Will Road Show Features

New York City.—The Douglas Fairbanks picture "The Pirate of Bagdad" and "Public Opinion" which Charles Chaplin directed will be road show attractions next season, as well as a D. W. Griffith super feature.

Preferred Stock for Sale

New York City.—The Long Island Cinema Corporation. Ernest Shipman, president, is offering 5000 shares of 8% cumulative preferred stock to the public.

Apfel Writing a Book

Los Angeles.—Oscar Apfel is writing a book comparing American and European production methods.

AMONG ARTISTS

Robert Edson has been added to the cast of Cecil B. DeMille's production, "The Ten Commandments," for Paramount.

The latest to join the ranks of film players is Mrs. Richard Bret Harte, who will make her first appearance as a film player in "The Ten Commandments."

Jay Marchant, formerly an assistant director at Universal City is directing short western pictures. Claire Adams has the feminine lead in Herbert Rawlinson's "Upside Down" at Universal City.

B. P. Schulberg has signed Clara Bow to a contract under which she will appear exclusively in Preferred Pictures.

Lorimer Johnston has been selected by Rex Ingram for the part of King Louis XVI in Metro's "Scaramouche."

Netta Westcott, English actress, is on her way to the Preferred studios at Los Angeles where she will make her film debut in "Matinee."

Lucille Rickson has been signed by Jack Pickford to play the leading feminine role in his next picture which is now in the making under the working title of "The Valley of the Wolf."

Lawrence D'Orsay has been cast to play the part of Pepperhill in Paramount's "His Children's Children."

All trace of the bruises which Pola Negri received while filming Paramount's "The Spanish Dancer" have disappeared and she has resumed work.

Monte Blue is also at work after being laid up for repairs for several days. He was hurt while making a scene for "Loving Lies" at Laguna beach.

STAR LEASES HOUSE

Hollywood, Cal.—Nita Naldi, Paramount star, who is one of filmdom's trans-continental commuters, is back in this city after starting her third trip between here and New York within the last eighteen months.

This time she may stay for a long period. Miss Naldi has leased a house for a period of months.

The present visit is for the purpose of taking a featured role in the modern portion of Cecil B. DeMille's production, "The Ten Commandments," which is to start immediately.

The Wanters Release Title Retained by Louis B. Mayer

Los Angeles.—Louis B. Mayer has decided to retain "The Wanters" as the release title of the John M. Stahl production which has recently been completed for First National release. "The Wanters" is Leila Burton Well's comedy drama of society life. Production is now complete and the picture will be delivered to First National shortly for distribution in September.

More than two hundred suggested titles were considered by Mr. Mayer and his staff as possible substitutes for "The Wanters," but it was unanimously agreed upon that none had the piquancy, the fascination, or were as stimulating to the imagination as the original title.

Bill Stops Ticket Scalping

Chicago, Ill.—Governor Small has signed a bill calling for $500 fine or imprisonment for one year for any ticket scalper caught selling theatre tickets for more than the price printed on the ticket.

Paine Goes Abroad

New York.—Chas. E. Paine, Chairman of the Board of Directors, of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, sailed on the Majestic July 13, for an extended trip abroad, combining business and pleasure.

Will Reduce Footage

Los Angeles.—Harry Rapf states that he will reduce footage to meet the demands of exhibitors.

Elmer Pearson Brings Good News

PATHE OFFICIAL BACK FROM COAST

Emphasizes Industry's Need of the "Stop, Look and Listen" Sign

New York.—Besides bringing with him a message that predicts "good business" based on keen observation, Elmer Pearson, Vice President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., also sounds a warning, upon his return from the production center of activities on the Coast.

"Never before in the history of the industry has there been such boom and fever pitch of picture-making as the industry has just gone through and is now seeing in and around Los Angeles.

"This is true not only of the Hal Roach, Mack Sennett and George B. Seitz units, making Pathe pictures, but those producing for other companies as well."

While on the Coast, Mr. Pearson was instrumental in effecting the amicable distribution relationship now existing between Harold Lloyd, Hal Roach and Pathe.

"Harold Lloyd's next vehicle," he said, "will be a comedy more on the lines of 'Grandma's Boy,' This will follow 'Why Worry,' scheduled for release early in September.

"The Hal Roach unit will have its organization so augmented that by early September, the Roach Studios will be able to send four 2-reel comedies to Pathe each and every month, making fifty-two 2-reel comedies for the year.

"While I was on the Coast, the rushes on Will Rogers' first 2-reel comedy were shown. I believe that patrons will receive a genuine surprise when they view Will Rogers' comedies under Hal Roach's direction.

"Hal Roach is also concentrating new directorial ability on the one reel comedies, and novelties can be expected from this standard line of product.

"Exhibitors will be interested in knowing that the idea back of the new Hal Roach series serial, 'Her Dangerous Path,' is much more fully realized as each episode unfolds.

"The Way of a Man,' Emerson Hough's novel, is being directed and supervised by George B. Seitz.

"At the Mack Sennett Studio, besides the Ben Turpin unit, there are three companies working at present on the Sennett two-reel production.

"Production costs," Mr. Pearson said, "are running high compared with the past. Male and female stars have been engaged at salaries that read a bit too fabulous, even to those accustomed to large figures.

"It is my impression from close observation that the total production costs estimated for this year, will exceed the total film rentals received during any previous year. That looks like a danger crossing that needs a 'stop, look and listen' sign on it.

THE SPOILERS AT THE CAPITOL THEATRE

New York.—Jesse D. Hampton's production of Rex Beach's novel, "The Spoilers," which is a Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan release, will receive its first Metropolitan showing at the Capitol Theatre the week beginning Sunday, July 29.

"Producers often make mistakes by bidding against each other for the most popular leading men and leading women. At present many stars work in more than one picture at the same time, and several are drawing salaries from two or three producing companies, and this practice is likely to kill those players' popularity."

ENEMIES OF WOMEN

BIG DRAWING CARD

New York.—Cosmopolitan's production, "Enemies of Women," proved to be the biggest drawing card in the history of the Palace theatre in San Antonio, Tex., said L. Santikos, manager of the theatre.

"Cosmopolitan is to be congratulated on 'Enemies of Women.' It was acclaimed an artistic success locally and proved the biggest drawing card our Palace Theatre has played in the seventeen weeks it has been open, breaking all records in spite of the hottest week of the summer."

This feature has duplicated in Toronto, Canada, the big hit which it has been making wherever screened. It was booked at the Hippodrome there. It is now in its fourteenth week on Broadway where it is still showing at B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre.

ON WAY TO NEW YORK

Los Angeles.—Herbert Lubin, partner of Arthur H. Sawyer, of Associated Pictures Corporation, has left for New York for the purpose of conferring with Richard Rowland, First National executive and Samuel Goldwyn concerning the future plans of Associated. While in New York Lubin will also complete arrangements with William S. Atkinson, Vice President of Metro Pictures Corporation, for the S-L production "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

Court of Appeals Affirms

Judgment Against Chadwick

Albany.—By unanimous decision the Court of Appeals sitting here disposed of the long drawn out litigation between Guy Crosswell Smith and Isaac E. Chadwick, president of the F-I-L-M Club, July 13, by affirming the judgment granted against Chadwick in favor of Smith about sixteen months ago.

The decision of the highest court was rendered for the plaintiff without opinion but allowing costs.

This is the end of the suit instituted by Smith in 1920 to recover the sum of $6,000 paid to Chadwick for the motion picture of "The Unchastened Woman."

New Paramount Service

New Mexico.—The republic of Guatemala has been included in the territory served by the Paramount offices in this city. William C. Winship, manager of the local office, has completed arrangements for this new Paramount service.

Police Looking for Firebugs

Omaha, Neb.—The police here are searching for two men who, it is believed, set fire to the Magic theatre building, June 29. Quick action of the firemen prevented the blaze in a candy room from spreading.

Editing Loving Lies

Los Angeles.—Associated Authors are now editing and cutting "Loving Lies," Thompson Buchanan's screen version of Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Harbor Bar."

DAY BY DAY CASE FOUGHT IN COURT

Injunction is Asked to Prevent Showing of Emile Coue Short Subject

Hollywood.—They are fighting over Emile Coue and his picture in the courts here. Involved in one of the actions is the question concerning how far the exclusive rights to a film may go, and what exclusive rights consist of. The particular picture at issue is the short subject titled "Day by Day."

The Educational Film Corporation of America, and the Educational Films Exchange, Inc., are asking an injunction to prevent Coast Film Exchange, S. M. Herzig and others from showing the picture on the grounds that they obtained the exclusive rights in this territory direct from Dr. Coue. The defendants contend Coue's general method has been in use for years and he had no legal authority to grant a legal right to exploit his methods.

At the same time Lyle W. Rucker, a Los Angeles attorney, filed action against Educational Films Exchanges, Inc., E. W. Hammons, its president, and the Film Daily for $200,000 damages. Rucker contends that he and S. M. Herzig evolved the idea and produced in February last a film based on auto-suggestion which they completed at a time that no other film of that kind was on the market.

In February, and again in March, the plaintiff says, the Educational Films Exchange, Inc., published a notice in Film Daily, signed by Mr. Hammons, which declared his concern was in possession of the only authentic and authorized auto-suggestion film called "The Message of Dr. Coue." This announcement, he says, warned exhibitors to beware of imitators and impostors, and said the industry contained "unscrupulous men devoid of original ideas who lie in wait to appropriate the results of other's ideas and efforts."

Rucker says these statements refer to him and are false.

Ince Publicist Loaned to General Gourard of France

New York.—Capt. James Loughborough, Eastern publicity representative of the Thomas H. Ince Studios, of Culver City, has been loaned by Mr. Ince to General Gourard, of France, and will officiate as press agent on the General's tour of the United States. Loughborough performed a similar service during the last tour of General Foch and received, in recognition of his efforts, the medal of the Legion of Honor.

Starting from Washington, D. C., July 8, the Gourard party will cross the continent and return to this city.

Tea With a Kick Pre-release

Run Goes Big on the Coast

New York City.—"Tea With a Kick," a Halperin Production released through Associated Exhibitors, scored a triumph at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, where the film had a pre-release run.

Edwin Schaller in the Los Angeles Times, declared, "It's one of the few true light comedies that we've had on the screen in many a day" and the Los Angeles Evening Herald commented on the transformation of Louise Fazenda "from the caterpillar to the butterfly."

FOX TO RELEASE IF WINTER COMES

Feature Will Have Premieres in New York, San Francisco and Chicago

New York.—"If Winter Comes," the screen adaptation of A. S. M. Hutchinson's famous best-seller, will be released on August 19, according to announcement made by the Fox Film Corporation.

This production will be seen at the Times Square Theatre, this city, for an indefinite engagement beginning September 1.

In San Francisco, it will be shown for four weeks from July 21 to August 19 at the Columbia Theatre which was leased especially for this run.

The Harris Theatre, Chicago, will house the premiere in that city for a similar beginning September 2.

Elaborate preparations for these showings are in progress in the three cities.

BALABAN AND KATZ JOIN STOCK EXCHANGE

Chicago.—Balaban & Katz, theatre operators, have joined the list on the stock exchange. There were 15 original partners in the enterprise. It now contains Lewis Stern, the Greenebaum banks, Rosenwald, John Hertz and others. The firm started with the Central Park theatre and then took control of the Riviera. Later they built the Tivoli, which cost $2,500,000, and then the Chicago theatre.

When the stock is listed it is expected Lewis Stern will be president. The 15 stockholders will be directors. The plan is to float 250,000 shares of common stock of which 50,000 will be offered to the public at $50 a share. The remaining 200,000 shares will be exchanged for stock of the present four corporations. The four theatres are understood to show earnings at the rate of $1,250,000 on the present common stock and $1,750,000 of 7% preferred stock.

With the theatres, the Balaban and Katz interests include the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Illinois, Educational Film Exchange of Illinois and Second National Film Company of Illinois.

PRE-RELEASE BOOKINGS

New York City.—"The Man Between," a Finis Fox production to be released through Associated Exhibitors, has had pre-release bookings at the State, Schenectady, N. Y., and the Colonial, Hagerstown, Md., among other big houses, and was cordially received everywhere. Other early showings are to be at the Clinton Square, Albany, N. Y., the Strand, Fargo, S. D., and the Vogue Kenosha, Wis.

The story centers about two men whose resemblance is so striking that even their relatives cannot distinguish one from the other. Alan Forrest, Vola Vale and Edna Murphy play the leading roles.

The Spoilers Is Turning Them Away Wherever Shown

Salt Lake City.—The 3,000 seat theatre, American, in this city, proved unable to hold the picture patrons who wished to see Jesse D. Hampton's production of "The Spoilers" on the two opening days of its showing. The picture opened on Saturday, July 7, and not only were patrons turned away at both of the Saturday night performances but also at all the Sunday performances. This despite the fact that 200 extra chairs were placed in the balcony of the theatre.

It is now in its second week at the Roosevelt Theatre in Chicago where it continues

GRAUMAN THEATRES FOR FAMOUS PLAYERS

Los Angeles.—Sid Grauman threw a little shock into local theatre managers this week when he announced Famous Players had put up $50,000 for a six months option on his three houses here, the new Metropolitan, Rialto and Million Dollar. If Famous exercises its option, it will pay Grauman $1,045,000 for his interest which is not the value of the houses by any means but will give the picture company control of three of the finest theatres on the coast. Grauman's Egyptian Theater in Hollywood is not mentioned in the deal.

From what could be learned it is certain Famous will take over the physical operation of the three theatres before January 1, 1924, and concentrate their first run productions here in these three houses. Grauman's action came as a surprise to local theatre circles. The deal was closed on the manager's recent visit to New York when he received a check for the option and signed all the necessary papers.

to the attendance that broke the house records the first and will be held over for the third week.

The picture, originally booked for two weeks, is being held in Philadelphia, at the Stanton Theatre, for a third week. It continues to play to big receipts.

In Seattle it opened Sunday, July 15, at the Liberty Theatre, setting a new Sunday's record of receipts for the house.

It played to record breaking receipts for the week of its showing at the Colorado Theatre, Denver.

WILL RELEASE THREE FEATURES IN AUGUST

New York.—Associated Exhibitors will release three features in August.

"Harbor Lights," a Tom Terriss production starring Tom Moore and Isobel Elsom, is a picturization of the play by the same name. In the original stage production William Terriss played the leading role, later passing it on to his son, Tom, whose familiarity with the piece has admirably fitted him for the screen production.

"The Destroying Angel," adapted from Louis Joseph Vance's novel, is a Leah Baird 1923 special. Supporting Miss Baird are Mitchell Lewis, Ford Sterling, John Bowers and Noah Beery.

"Tea With a Kick," the first of the Halperin "idea" productions to be distributed by Associated Exhibitors, is a super-satire novelty featuring a cast of twenty-seven stars.

PREMIERE ON COAST

New York City.—"If Winter Comes," the Fox picture made from the Hutchinson novel, will be given its world premiere at the Columbia Theatre, San Francisco, one of the large legitimate theatres on the coast, and will remain there for four weeks. The film is also scheduled for a four weeks' run at the Harris Theatre in Chicago.

The Barometer

Hollywood.—There was a slight drop in production this week owing to so many pictures being finished in the last ten days, and those in preparation not yet ready to shoot. The cut was small with 115 companies working on the lots against 120 the week previous.

Completed pictures this week include: "What Women Want," directed by A. P. Younger, starring William Fairbanks for state rights release.

"The Phantom Pack," starring Strongheart, directed by Laurence Trimble for First National release.

"Scarred Hands," directed by Cliff Smith featuring himself and Eileen Sedgewick for state rights release.

"The Trail of the Wolf," directed by Robert North Bradbury, for Universal.

"The Dramatic Side of Abraham Lincoln," directed by Phil E. Rosen, for independent release.

"A Man's Man," a Peter B. Kyne story, starring J. Warren Kerrigan, for F. B. O.

"Grandpap," directed by Lloyd Hughes for Universal with Eugenia Feiner, a new comer, in the leading role.

Starting this week were:

"The Light That Failed," directed by George Melford from Rudyard Kipling's novel, adapted by F. McGrew Willis at Lasky studio.

"The Virginian," directed by Tom Forman from a novel by Owen Wister, picturized by Waldemar Young, at United Studios.

"The Midnight Limited," directed by Robert L. Horner from his own story at Horsley Studio.

"The Voice from the Air," directed by Robert J. Horner from Theodore Wharton's story, featuring George Cheesboro, at Horsley studio.

"Pleasure Mad," from Blanche Upright's novel, "The Valley of Content," starring Mary Alden and Huntley Gordon, directed by Reginald Barker at Louis B. Mayer studio for Metro release.

"Second Hand Love," starring Charles Jones, directed by William Wellman at Fox studio.

"Mysterious Goods," directed by Charles Seeling and starring George Larkin at Horsley studio for Aywon release.

"Nobody's Dog," all star production, directed by Lloyd Ingram at Ince studio.

The Ten Commandments Will Be Ready About Next April

Hollywood, Cal.—The Paramount special "The Ten Commandments" will not be ready until about next April. Sid Grauman has already booked the picture for his Hollywood house to succeed "The Covered Wagon," as he believes the latter will continue to draw until the DeMille production is ready.

Gallagher and Shean Rehearsing

New York.—Gallagher and Shean have commenced rehearsals of the screen comedy that William Fox has selected for their first vehicle on the shadow stage. Its title is "Around the Town with Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean," and it was written by Louis Sherwin. Lucy Fox will play the leading feminine role. Bernard J. Durning is the director.

Two Dollars Top

New York City.—A top admission of $2.00 the highest on Broadway will be charged in the proposed B. S. Moss picture palace at Broadway and 53rd Street. The new theatre will seat 2,000.

Bomb Shell Hurlled Into Film Magnates

TOURNEUR SPEAKS FOR INDEPENDENTS

Says They Are Doing More for the Industry Than Any Other Set of Men

Hollywood.—Maurice Tourneur is a firm believer that it is to the independent producer that the motion picture owes its progress, and not to the big companies. He hurled a bomb-shell into the big film magnates this week in an interview, and bucked up the independents by stating they have and are doing more for the motion picture industry than any other set of men.

It is the idea of Tourneur that big organizations with many specialists and technical directors are blocking the path of motion picture progress rather than helping it. Individuals, not organizations, he says, make the great pictures. The producer who relieves his director of responsibility also robs him of power, and hurts his output.

"The director is to the motion picture what the artist is to the painting," says Tourneur. "You cannot tell him what size his canvas shall be, what colors he shall use or what subject he shall choose and expect a masterpiece.

"Yet some of the big producers are buying stories, adapting them to the screen, choosing their actors and building their scenes before a director is engaged. A combination of a great writer, a great designer, a great scene painter, a great actor and a great costumer does not make a great picture. Not even when a great director is thrown in for good measure.

"Unless the director has absolute authority over all things that go to make the picture—over the costumes, the designs and coloring of the scenery, the working out of the story, and the selection of the cast—he cannot express himself."

To compel the director to subordinate his ideas to those of a half dozen experts, Tourneur concludes, is to strike at the very foundation of the motion picture art, and he believes if the practice continues, the screen play will rapidly lose the favor of the public.

BRANHAM ENTERTAINED AT LASKY STUDIO

Hollywood.—Charles J. Branham, one of the leading figures in theatrical circles in Canada, and who for over fifteen years has been in the business of selling motion pictures to the public, made his first visit to a motion picture studio recently.

Mr. Branham was the guest of Cecil B. DeMille at the Lasky studio and watched the director making scenes for "The Ten Commandments." He stated that the theatrical business in Canada is enjoying the same increasing prosperity that has been conspicuous in this country during the past few months.

Popular Players Will Support Colleen Moore

Los Angeles.—First National has rounded up several popular players to appear in "Flaming Youth," in which Colleen Moore will be featured under the direction of John Francis Dillon.

In addition to Miss Moore, the cast to date consists of, Milton Sills, Elliott Dexter, Sylvia Breamer and Myrtle Stedman.

Sills will play Cary Scott, the leading male role opposite Miss Moore in Warner Fabian's story of present day society life.

Elliott Dexter will portray Dr. Bobs, the one man who is the confidante of the mother and the three girls around whose multitudinous love affairs the plot of the story is evolved.

Sylvia Breamer will play the second of the three daughters. Miss Stedman will portray the role of the mother.

DEFOREST WILL SPEAK FROM STATION W O R

New York.—Lee DeForest, father of broadcasting and inventor of the Phonofilm, which promises to have as profound an influence on motion pictures as his Audion Amplifier has had on radio, has accepted an invitation to help celebrate the first anniversary of the WOR broadcasting plant in Newark, N. J., on the evening of July 23.

The Mayor of Newark and many other officials will be present.

Dr. DeForest will personally deliver a message to the thousands of radio fans throughout the country.

Dr. DeForest, while he has been chosen to represent radio alone, has lately entered the motion picture industry through his development of the Phonofilm which not only photographs pictures such as audiences are used to seeing, but also photographs sound.

STEBBINS QUILTS LOEW

Los Angeles.—S. J. Stebbins, who recently became managing director of Loew's State Theatre, has resigned. Engaged in production of comedies, cartoons and short reels, he intends to center his activities on his producing organization. Mr. Stebbins formerly staged productions at the New York Hippodrome, and was at one time manager of the Academy of Music, New York City, and the H. C. Miner theatres in the east.

George Marion on Coast

Culver City.—George Marion, actor and stage director, who created the role of Chris Christopherson in the stage version of "Anna Christie," arrived at the Thomas H. Ince studios where he will recreate the same role in the film version of the Eugene O'Neill play, which Ince will produce for First National distribution.

Cruz Replaces Hackathorne

New York.—Charles Cruz will play the role of Charles Hemingway, Jr., in "You Can't Get Away With It," the Fox special for 1923-24, in place of George Hackathorne who had been previously announced for the part.

Willis Leaves Hays

New York City.—Lloyd D. Willis leaves the Hays organization the end of the month.

SCARECROW CHANGED TO PURITAN PASSIONS

New York.—Announcement has been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that Percy MacKaye's "Scarecrow," the third of the Film Guild Productions for release through Hodkinson and starring Glen Hunter, has been titled "Puritan Passions." This was felt expedient in order to give exhibitors an opportunity for exploitation and advertising purposes.

FRENCH SAVANTS TO SEE HUNCHBACK

Private View in the East as a Fitting Courtesy to Five Noted Professors

New York.—A finally edited print of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," is expected to arrive in this city within a few days from Universal City.

Carl Lacmmle, before sailing for Europe, left instructions that the first private view in the East be given, as a fitting courtesy, to the five distinguished professors visiting America for the summer sessions at Columbia, at this time, when there is a world-wide interest in the movement of the Sorbonne to establish a Victor Hugo professorship.

The scholar heading the delegation of visitors is Joseph Bedier, member of the French Academy, and more than any other living authority, qualified to speak on the achievement of re-creating the long-gone period—before the discovery of America—for he is best known for his research in the history and literature of the Middle-Ages, the period in which Hugo's classic is set.

The other members of the visiting delegation who will be invited to see the interpretation of the great French master are Emile Bourgeois, known for his works on the diplomatic history of the Nineteenth Century; Eduard Le Roy, friend and collaborator of Bergson; Raoul Blanchard, geographer and Paul Hazard.

Albany F. I. L. M. Club is Ready for Business

Albany, N. Y.—With a secretary in attendance and occupying quarters in one of the downtown business blocks, the Albany F. I. L. M. club started to function July 9, and will seek to iron out differences between the exhibitors of this territory and the exchanges.

The exhibitors will be represented at each Monday's meeting by Louis Buettner, of Cohoes, William Benton, of Saratoga Springs, and Rae Candee, of Utica. The interests of the exchanges will be looked after by G. A. Woodard of the Fox exchange; Alec Herman, manager of the First National exchange, and Jack Krause, of the Bond Photoplay exchange.

Miss Grace L. Ticknor has been engaged as secretary. Miss Ticknor comes from the New York State Public Service Commission.

Jolson Returns in August

London.—Al Jolson, who will sail shortly for New York, states he will resume work on the Griffith film in August. He had to leave New York to avoid a nervous breakdown and claims he should not have been rushed into picture work with only a day's vacation.

Ray Addresses Convention

Los Angeles, Cal.—Charles Ray invited to address a convention of the National Educational Association, acknowledged the honor by giving the teachers a pre-view of historical episodes from "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

Fox Takes Two Theatres

New York City.—The Fox organization has taken the Columbia Theatre, San Francisco and the Harris, Chicago, for "If Winter Comes." Each engagement is for four weeks.

Looking Ahead In Hollywood

By Will C. Murphey

Hollywood, July 13—H. H. Glasier wandered into town this week with a two-reel comedy he made in Oakland that he produced for just $300. It took him fourteen days to film it, and he was the author, camera man and director. His cast consisting of seven principals and twenty-two extras never had faced a director before. Producers here are anxious to have a look at the result.

The films have got Charles Ruggles, noted stage comedian, at last. Ruggles stepped off an eastern train this week with his manager, Larry Weingarten, and announced he is to make pictures in his own company. Weingarten stated the organization would be functioning within a few weeks, but it would not start shooting until fall. In the meantime the comedian will play a role or two in a couple of productions. Wesley Ruggles will be director of the new organization.

Mack Sennett is at it again. He has picked out three new bathing beauties in the persons of Margaret Cloud, Cecile Evans and Elsie Tarron, and will soon offer them to the public in one of his old time beauty pictures. It has been a long while since Mack made a bathing picture, but from the looks of the new trio, he is going to have a sensation when he does shoot.

Frank Lloyd, director of many film successes, has announced his plans to become a director-producer with headquarters at the United Studios. On August 1 he will start his first of four emotional dramas which will probably be released through First National. Harry Weil, formerly Lloyd's assistant, will be business manager of the new company, and stated they intend to film several recent plays and novels that have met with success.

Cecil B. DeMille is on the last lap of "The Ten Commandments," at the Lasky Studio. The prologue is finished, and he is now making the modern part of the story. While the prologue has 2500 persons in the cast, there are only six principal characters in the sequences now being filmed. The feature players of this section are Leatrice Joy, Richard Dix, Nita Naldi, Rod La Rocque, Robert Edeson and Edythe Chapman. The scene is laid in San Francisco.

Despite her recent legal troubles with Goldwyn, Helene Chadwick has been selected by Rupert Hughes to play the leading feminine role in "Law Against Law," his new production now in preparation. Miss Chadwick is the only one of the cast engaged so far.

Although Mae Murray has started "Fashion Row" at the Long Island studio, she will complete it here, in fact, the biggest scenes of the Robert Leonard production are to be made in Hollywood, and Miss Murray will remain here for future pictures, probably not returning to the east for a long time.

Jack Dempsey dropped into town this week, and was immediately besieged with offers for a picture production. However old "Doc" Kearns has a few other irons in the fire for his champion, and will not consider the screen until Dempsey finishes a few more ring engagements. Sometime along in the winter, it understood, the champion may face the camera again.

In spite of all reports to the contrary John Barrymore is coming west to do "Beau Brummel" for Warner Bros. It is said the star had an idea he would like to go abroad before starting his next stage production, but he has a contract with the Warners, and will be held to it. Preliminary details are now underway, and Barrymore will arrive here in a few weeks.

New York is to see "Ashes of Vengeance" first. Joseph M. Schenck said it will go into the Apollo Theatre on August 6. This is the first time Schenck has ever started a picture on a Broadway run. Eighty thousand feet of film was shot, and it is now in the last stages of cutting. Miss Talmadge may go to New York for the opening.

Here's some fine news for the industry. Charles Chaplin is going to star in a series of comedies of feature length. Heretofore the comedian has only planned one feature at a time. Now he will lay out a series before he starts shooting. Just what they will be, he is not making known at present.

It was quite certain the comedians would have fun with the avalanche of costume plays to be released. Buster Keaton's "Headin' South" is a take-off on the period picture, and Lloyd Hamilton is making a burlesque of Charles Ray's "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" will have its first showing at the Astor Theatre in New York on September 2, just about a year after work was started on it at Universal City. A half dozen men are working on the titling and cutting.

Al and Ray Rockett, who have just completed "The Life of Abraham Lincoln" are to do more stories, but they will be neither novels, plays or original dramas. These young men intend to draw their inspiration from history, and will make productions founded on the lives of great men, well known incidents in history or real happenings in life.

Following "Pleasure Mad," now underway, it is understood Reginald Barker will make Robert Service's poem "The Trail of Ninety Eight." The rights were purchased by Louis B. Mayer sometime ago, and he is anxious to see it produced.

Having finished and released "The Fighting Skipper," the South Seas have called Francis J. Ford. He went down there several days ago to obtain jungle cannibal, wild animal and underwater pictures for educational and adventure films. Ford will be back in time to release several two-reel subjects in the fall.

"Sidetracked" is the title selected for Ben Turpin's new comedy instead of "Ten Dollars or Ten Days."

Estelle Taylor is to be starred by Richard Thomas. Her sister Helen Carter, makes her first screen appearance with Cecil B. DeMille in "The Ten Commandments."

Ann McKittrick has been signed by Fox for five years and is here to make several pictures. She is said to be a find.

Lucy Fox will arrive here in the fall to make a series of pictures for Max Graff.

William H. Jenner, who has been manager of the Los Angeles Exchange of the American Releasing Corporation, has been appointed manager of Pathe's Los Angeles Exchange.

Hank Hamilton, one of the leading screen comedians, has joined Lloyd Hamilton comedies. He has developed into a high nowered gag man.

Charles Chaplin has changed the title of "Public Opinion" in which he is starring Edna Provost, to "Immortal Women."

Judge Henry Neil has taken a studio here and will produce a series of "Foxy Grandma" pictures taken from the newspaper comic of a few years ago.

Goldwyn's big special, "In the Palace of the King" directed by Emmett J. Flynn, will be completed in about two weeks.

Robert I. Horner Productions is becoming an active producing body. "A Voice from the Air" with George Cheesboro; "In Soite of All" with Marjorie Daw; "Flame of the Sahara" and "The Midnight Limited" are announced by Horner.

Joseph M. Lizer, of the West Coast Publicity department has been appointed assistant manager of the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles.

Billie Rhodes is to make several feature dramas at the Berwillia studio under the direction of Ben Wilson. This is the comedienne's first adventure into the dramatic field.

Frederick and Fannie Hatton have started writing the script for "Gentle Julia" Booth Tarkington's novel, which Fox will produce.

A. W. Carrick with Selznick

New York.—David R. Blyth, Director of Sales for Selznick Distributing Corporation, makes the announcement that A. W. Carrick has been appointed Branch Manager of the Omaha Selznick Exchange, succeeding Frank De Lorenzo who has been transferred to the new Selznick office just recently opened in Milwaukee.

Harper & Bros. Novels for the Screen

SPECIAL SERIES FOR VITAGRAPH

Will Distribute Harry Sherman Productions Early This Fall

New York.—Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph, has announced that arrangements have been completed under which his company will distribute a series of six special productions to be made by Harry Sherman. The camera work on the first will begin immediately and the initial production completed in ample time for distribution early this fall. The entire series will be released during the coming season.

The acquisition of the Sherman pictures to the Vitagraph output for the coming season insures the addition of productions based on excellent motion picture subjects as Mr. Sherman has a contract with Harper & Bros., that gives to him the motion picture rights to many of their books. It already has been decided that the first production under the contract with Vitagraph will be an adaptation of Basil King's novel, "Let No Man Put Asunder," and that the second will be "Borrowed Husbands," from the novel by Mildred K. Barbour.

The list of stories submitted to Mr. Smith by Mr. Sherman includes fourteen novels published by Harper & Bros., and from this list the subjects will be chosen. In addition to two mentioned above the list includes "The Fruit of Desire," by Will N. Harben; "A Successful Life," by Marie Van Vorst; "The Rising Tide," by Margaret Deland; "The Road That Led Home," by Will E. Ingersoll; "Between Two Worlds," by Philip Curtis; "The Cat and the Canary," by Margaret Cameron; "Steps of Honor," by Basil King; "Wanted A Fool," by Philip Curtis; "The House of Happiness," by Kate Langley Bosher; "Crater's Gold," by Philip Curtis; "The Supreme Surrender," by A. Maurie Low, and "The Garden of Charity," by Basil King.

The Harry Sherman productions will be six of the twenty-six specials which will be released during the coming season.

OUT OF LUCK IS AN AUGUST RELEASE

Los Angeles.—Hoot Gibson has come to bat with a picture that records the romantic and rib-tickling story of a broncho-buster who signs up in the U. S. Navy. It is entitled "Out of Luck," and is a Hoot Gibson Special for Universal.

In the making of this picture Gibson had the co-operation of the U. S. Navy, including many of the officers and men ashore and afloat in Southern California waters. Much of the action takes place aboard the super dreadnought California, which is the flagship of the Pacific Fleet.

In the supporting cast are Howard Truesdell, Elinor Hancock, DeWitt Jennings, Freeman Wood, Jay Morley, Kansas Moehring and John Judd. Universal will release this feature early in August.

Paramount's New Projection Rooms Used for First Time

Hollywood.—Projection rooms in the new laboratory at the Lasky studio were used recently for the first time by the William de Mille company engaged in the production of "Spring Magic," for Paramount.

While the building has not been completed, the projection rooms are now ready for use. Four such rooms, almost like tiny theatres with seating capacity of thirty people, are built into the new laboratory. Each has regular theatre seats, with divans along the rear wall. A silversheet screen framed in gold is a feature of each room. Each projection booth is equipped with two machines.

Those who made use of the projection rooms for the first time included Mr. de Mille, Clara Beranger, scenarist; Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Charles de Roche, Robert Agnew and Mary Astor, all featured in "Spring Magic," and a few remaining members of the cast and technical department.

FAIRBANKS PICTURE IS WELL UNDER WAY

Los Angeles.—"The Thief of Bagdad," Douglas Fairbanks' newest picture, is well under way but no definite time has been scheduled for its completion because the magical photography involved may cause unforeseen delays. It is expected, however, that the film will be finished before the end of the year. The picture will disclose the latest innovations in the art of photography and revive the mood of fantasy on the screen.

Supporting Douglas Fairbanks will be Julianne Johnston, Sadakiehi Hartmann, Brandno Hurst, Charles Belcher and Snitz Edwards.

Helene Chadwick Has Lead

New York City.—Helene Chadwick has been selected for the leading feminine role in Rupert Hughes' new Goldwyn production, "Law Against Law." Rush Hughes, son of the author-director, will play an important part.

ORGANIZATION OF LITTLE THEATRE

Advisory Board Completed with Addition of Several Names

Hollywood.—Little Theatre Films completed its organization this week with the addition of several names to the advisory board. This organization hopes to raise the plane of screen productions the same as the Little Theatre organization of the stage, and to produce and distribute films that would not otherwise reach the public.

Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford are the latest to link their names with the organization in an advisory capacity. Twenty-six pictures have been acquired to present for the approval of persons who find fault with the output now offered, and it is said that units with their own theatres are being organized all over the country to acquire houses in which Little Theatre films will be shown. The full advisory board just completed includes:

Hugo Ballin, Paul Bern, Ralph Block, Charles Chaplin, William de Mille, Walter Pritchard Eaton, Douglas Fairbanks, D. W. Griffith, Clayton Hamilton, Rupert Hughes, Rex Ingram, Ernst Lubitsch, Mary Pickford, George Marion, June Mathis, Frank Reicher, Victor Seastrom, Robert E. Sherwood, Oswald Garrison Villard and Rob Wagner.

Officers elected are: Curtis Melnitz, president; Albert Lewin, vice president; Joseph Jackson, secretary, and Mildred Dorris Lewin, treasurer.

"Mortal Clay," the first picture of the organization, is to have an early release.

New York.—Glenn Hunter's first Paramount picture will be "West of the Water Tower." Production on this picture, in which Hunter will play the role of the small-town youth, will begin probably August 1.

In the cast supporting Hunter will be Ernest Torrence and George Fawcett. Torrence will play the part of the boy's father and Fawcett will be seen in the role of the heroine's father. No announcement is made who will play the part of the girl.

Rollin Sturgeon will direct and the picture will be produced in Paramount's Long Island studio so that Hunter can continue his work in "Merton of the Movies" at the Cort theatre.

Speejacks for Paramount

New York.—Next season Paramount will release "Around the World with the Speejacks," a feature length picture detailing the adventures of the crew of the Speejacks, the 98-foot motor yacht which recently completed a 35,000-mile cruise around the globe. Contracts were signed with Albert Y. Gowen of Cleveland, owner of the Speejacks, who, with Mrs. Gowen and several guests, made the cruise.

Does It Pay Near Release

New York.—"Does It Pay?" the William Fox picture in which Hope Hampton is featured, is soon to be released. It is a Charles Horan production. Robert T. Haines, Mary Thurman, Peggy Shaw and Florence Short are important members of the cast.

Happenings in the Independent Field

PRINCIPAL GROUP NEARS SELL OUT

Lessers Close All But One Territory—Blank, Skouras and Crandall Sign

New York.—Following the conclusion of several recent territorial deals by Sol Lesser and Irving Lesser, but one territory remains open on the Principal productions in the group known as the "Super Five Series." These five productions are "Temporary Marriage," "Bright Lights of Broadway," "Gold Madness," "The Spider and the Rose," and "East Side West Side."

A. H. Blank acquired the Kansas and Western Missouri rights for the group of five and also "Mind Over Motor" and "Environment" in a deal recently negotiated by Sol Lesser.

Spyros and Charles Skouras, and Tom Meyers, of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Associated First National Pictures, City Amusement Company, and St. Louis Film Exchange, signed with Irving Lesser for the "Super Five Series" and "Mind Over Motor" for Missouri and Southern Illinois. These six Principal productions will be distributed in Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and District of Columbia by Harry Crandall, according to a contract signed last week by Mr. Crandall.

Oscar S. Oldknow, president and general manager of the Southern States Film Company with main offices in Atlanta, arrived in New York recently to confer with Irving Lesser with regard to the distribution of the Principal group in the eleven Southern states in Mr. Oldknow's territory. The concern, which has contracted for these Principal pictures, maintains exchanges in Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Charlotte and Oklahoma City.

Announces New Name For W-B Film Exchange

New York.—Charles S. Goetz, General Manager of the W-B Film Exchange, announced last week that the present name of the concern will be changed within the very near future to Dependable Exchange, Inc., the offices of which will be at their present headquarters, 1600 Broadway.

Dependable Exchange is at present handling exclusively all of the current Warner Brothers product. For the coming season the concern will also distribute the forthcoming series of Warner Brothers eighteen classics of the screen for Northern New Jersey, Greater New York and New York State.

C. B. C. OFFICIALS VIEW YESTERDAY'S WIFE

New York.—"Yesterday's Wife," the first Columbia production for independent distribution by C. B. C. has had its first presentation before an invited audience and the reports from its sponsors is to the effect that the critics found it up to the high standards set for the new season.

"Yesterday's Wife" is an adaptation of a successful novel from the pen of Evelyn Campbell, who consulted with the producers and Edward J. LeSaint during the filming of the work, and the photoplay is reported to adhere to the novel in so far as the expression of the author's viewpoint is concerned.

The drama deals with marital difficulties. The cast includes Irene Rich, Eileen Percy, Lewis Dayton, Philo McCullough, William Scott, Josephine Crowell and Lottie Williams.

Sanford Plans Eight Productions

Hollywood.—Sanford Productions announce eight productions for distribution in the state right market for the 1923-24 season. September 1st is the date set for the release of the first of the eight pictures scheduled. This will be "Shell Shocked Sammy," recently completed with an all-star cast including Matty Mattison, Mary Anderson, Vivian Rich, Leonard Clapham and Theodore Lorch. Mr. Frank S. Mattison, sales manager, has left Hollywood on a trip to the exchange centres to show "Shell Shocked Sammy."

Will Screen McGrath Novel

Los Angeles.—Elaine Hammerstein's second production for Truair Films will be a picturization of Harold McGrath's novel "The Drums of Jeopardy." The picture will be directed by Edward Dillon who has been in the East for some time in search of proper material for the star.

WARNERS TO STAR MAE MARSH IN DADDIES

New York.—Mae Marsh, one of the best known feminine leads in the films, has signed a contract to star in the Warner Brothers picturization of David Belasco's play, "Daddies." Miss Marsh will play the part of Ruth Atkins.

The direction of "Daddies" has been entrusted to Harry Beaumont, at present directing another Belasco play, "The Gold Diggers." Production will be started shortly after the completion of "The Gold Diggers," which is expected to be finished within the next few weeks. The screen adaptation of "Daddies" is being written by Julien Josephson.

Miss Marsh's last engagement was with D. W. Griffith for "The White Rose," in which she portrayed the role of an orphan girl. This return engagement with Griffith was made after an absence of six years, during which time she has appeared in a number of other pictures.

C. B. C. Planning Exploitation

New York.—Joe Brandt, president of C. B. C. Film Corporation, is devoting himself to the supervision of exploitation material in preparation for the Columbia production "Yesterday's Wife," which C. B. C. will distribute. It is announced that especial care will be expended in mapping out sales campaigns for the benefit of exhibitors.

Start Rhodes Feature Soon

Los Angeles.—Billie Rhodes will start her first feature for Grand-Asher in about a month. The vehicle is "Leave It to Gerry," a comedy-drama written by Adam Hull Shirk, scenario editor for the concern, and the direction will be by Ben Wilson.

Rin-Tin-Tin Premiere July 28

New York.—A complete print of Warner Brothers "Where the North Begins," which features Rin-Tin-Tin, canine star, was received at the Warner Home Offices. The feature, which will be the initial release of the new series of Warner offerings for the coming season, will be distributed in August. Its premiere will be held at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, the week of July 28.

GRAND LEAVES FOR NEW YORK CONFERENCE

Los Angeles.—Samuel V. Grand, on the eve of his departure for New York for conferences with Harry Asher and other members of the executive staff of the Grand-Asher Distributing Corp., declared that he was more than pleased with the prospects for the output of his new producing organization for the coming season. Aside from the 36 two-reel comedies starring Monty Banks, Sid Smith and Joe Rock, will be the ten feature pictures made by Ben Wilson, three of which are either completed or under way. "Mine to Keep" and "The Love Trap" are finished; "Other Men's Daughters" goes into production immediately. In all three Bryant Washburn and Mabel Forrest have the leading roles and are featured. The first and third are directed by Ben Wilson while "The Love Trap" was directed by John Ince.

HOPE HAMPTON FEATURE COMPLETED

Los Angeles.—Camera work has been completed at the Warner Brothers studios on "The Gold Diggers," a screen version of the Belasco play in which Hope Hampton will star.

Miss Hampton prepared to leave for New York, where she will remain a short time before going to Europe, immediately her work in the picture was finished. According to present plans the star will return to Los Angeles following her trip abroad to star in the Warner production of "Irene."

"The Gold Diggers" was filmed under the direction of Harry Beaumont and will be among the Warner Brothers fall releases.

Announce Two New Features

New York.—L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North announce two new features for distribution in the state rights market in the Fall. The first will be "Marriage Morals" a Will Nigh production, and the second "Don't Marry for Money," presented by B. P. Fineman in association with Adolph Ramish.

"Marriage Morals" has a cast which includes Tom Moore, Ann Forest, Harry Morey, Tom Lewis, Edmund Breese, Florence Billings, Shannon Day and others. "Don't Marry for Money" was directed by Clarence L. Brown with House Peters, Rubye DeRemer, Cyril Chadwick, Wedgewood Nowell, George Nicols and Hank Mann in the principal roles.

Renown Lists Fall Releases

New York.—Renown Pictures, Inc., operating the Renown Exchanges in New York, Chicago and Buffalo, has a special advertising force now at work on its releases for the Fall. A booklet dealing with the product which Renown will offer in the Fall has been mailed to every exhibitor in Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin and New York. The features listed are "Broadway Gold," and four additional productions starring Elaine Hammerstein; "The Unknown Purple;" "East Side-West Side;" "The Spider and the Rose;" "Just a Song at Twilight;" "Bright Lights of Broadway;" "Temporary Marriage;" "Gold Madness;" and three feature length Larry Semon comedies.

HEPWORTH COMPLETES THREE BIG FEATURES

New York.—The officers of the Hepworth Distributing Corporation are enthusiastic at this time due first to the demand for their product as is evidenced by the sales contracted for by Joe Di Lorenzo, general manager in charge of distribution who has just returned from a trip across the continent and the further announcement from Hepworth Picture Plays of England that production on their three big specials has been completed and prints forwarded to this country.

The first of these, "Pipes of Pan" is based upon an original story by Geo. Dewhurst. "Lily of the Alley" is number two on the program and is also a six reeler. This picture has not a single title or subtitle.

"Mist in the Valley," featuring Alma Taylor will also be released shortly. The locale is widely spread, ranging from London on the Thames Embankment to the shores of Devonshire. These pictures will shortly be shown here.

Increase Capacity Of Tayson Laboratories

New York City.—The work of enlarging the plant of the Tayson Laboratories, 37 West 20th Street, has been complete and the officials of the firm, R. C. Hodgkinson, I. Truman and H. L. Robinson, announce they are now equipped to render 24 hour service.

The Tayson Laboratories, which have been operating for two years, will continue to specialize on 8x14 stills, copies and enlargements.

To Distribute English Film

New York.—Arrangements are nearing completion for the organization of a new film-producing company in London. Carlyle Blackwell is to be artistic head and the "star" player in this company. The first picture is already under way—a film version of Mr. William J. Locke's story, "The Beloved Vagabond." Distribution arrangements for the Blackwell Productions will be handled by the Producers Security Corporation.

To Reside in Hollywood

New York.—Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, has found Hollywood to be an ideal community for family life, so much so that he has secured a permanent residence there with his family after living for more than twenty years within close proximity of New York City.

HOFFMAN RETURNS FROM MIDDLE WEST

New York.—M. H. Hoffman, vice president and general manager of Truart Film Corporation, returned to New York this week from a two weeks trip through the middle west. He stopped at Philadelphia for a short conference with the exchanges who are handling Truart product, and Chicago where negotiations were completed for the extended run of Elaine Hammerstein's production "Broadway Gold" in the Randolph Theatre. This run will commence the second week in August. At Detroit Mr. Hoffman successfully arranged for a pre-release showing of "Broadway Gold" at the Capitol Theatre.

Mr. Hoffman says he found conditions improving at every point and was especially gratified at the increase of business in the Chicago Renown Office where the announcement of Truart big plans for the Fall has stimulated business to a capacity extent.

Writing Script for Lubitsch

Los Angeles.—A modern love romance the title of which has not yet been decided upon, will be the first story to be produced by Ernest Lubitsch, for the Warner Brothers. Paul Bern is said to be engaged in the writing of the story.

Larry Semon in New York

New York.—Larry Semon arrived in New York for a final conference with M. H. Hoffman, vice president and general manager of Truart Film Corporation, with whom the comedian recently signed his famous $3,000,000 contract.

Magic Skin a Fall Release

New York.—Producers Security Corporation announces for release this coming season "The Magic Skin," a feature adapted from a Balzac novel.

Return For "After Six Days"

New York.—"After Six Days," the Weiss Brothers Artelass feature depicting the Old Testament, has been booked for a return engagement at the Woods Theatre in Atlantic City, where it played a week's run recently.

WHITE AND HAMILTON TO PRODUCE COMEDIES

Hollywood—A big expansion program in which $900,000 will be expended has been announced by Jaek White and Lloyd Hamilton, comedy producer and comedian, who have been operating separate companies under the same banner. The announcement was made upon the arrival from New York of E. H. Allen, manager, who said the productions will be released through Educational Film Exchanges, of New York.

Under the supervision of Jack White twelve Mermaid comedies, three specials of feature length directed by the producer; twenty-four one reel Cameo comedies to be directed by Fred Hibbard; and six two-reel novelties directed by John Noble, will be made during the coming season. Lloyd Hamilton will produce a series of six feature comedies during the year, but has not selected his director.

Bray Shorts Appear on Broadway

"The Sky Splitter" is the second of the series of Bray Romances distributed through Hodkinson, and deals with an analysis of speed and light, has made its bow to Broadway at the Rialto Theatre. During the last week in June "Colonel Heeza Liar in the African Jungle," the comic animated cartoon comedy made by Bray, played the Strand Theatre, New York.

In "The Sky Splitter" Mr. Bray has brought out some entertaining points regarding the speed of light which he has presented in an instructive as well as entertaining manner.

"Colonel Heeza Liar in the African Jungle" shows the Colonel paying a visit to the jungles of Africa. The many escapes that he has with real wild animals afford this reel with unusual comedy situations.

Herman Starts "Present Arms"

Having completed "Buddy at the Bat" with Buddy Messinger in the star role, Al Herman has started a new Century Comedy with Buddy, the action of which is centered in and around a military school.

The story, as written by Mr. Herman and his gagman, Edward Luddy, tells of a mischievous boy who is thrown out of every school until he reaches a very strict military academy. Here, the boy, leads his schoolmates in sports of all kinds, and the finish comes when Buddy, barred from appearing in any of the academy's games, wins the football game in the face of expulsion. Abe Stern is supervising the direction of this subject.

Two Century Comedy Bookings

Two Century Comedy bookings recently made were the wholesale booking over the Loew circuit of New York for "So Long Buddy," which will play all of the vaudeville and motion picture theatres controlled throughout New York by Loew and Baby Peggy's "Nobody's Darling" by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld for the Rivoli at Broadway and 49th street. This picture played the entire week that started Sunday, July 15.

Many Return to Century Studio

Many familiar faces are again seen on the Century Comedy "lot," with the advent of Stern Brothers' twelfth anniversary of picture making.

Among the better known are Joe Bonner, Frank Earl, Jack Cooper, Jack Earle, Billy Engle, Ford West, Jaek Henderson, Joe Moore, Fred Spence, Tad Ross, Maurice Canon, Hyman Bernard, Sadie Campbell, Marjorie Marcel, Edith Lee Grant, Jewel and Neva Lynn, Lucille DuBois and Marjorie Welch.

New York to See "Carmen Jr."

New York—"Carmen Jr.," the last of the first series of six Century Comedies starring Baby Peggy, has been booked over the entire Loew circuit in New York. In this picture, Baby Peggy mimics the renowned Carmen and Rodolph Valentino.

In Hollywood, where it ran the gauntlet of nine pre-views, those who saw it said it was the best vehicle Baby Peggy has appeared in to date. The picture is not released until August, although the Loew run commences about June 28.

Theatre Manager Praises Comedy

Enthusiastic praise for Hal Roach's Our Gang Comedy, marks the letter of approval written by C. C. Cronkite of the Lyric Theatre, Fairview, Okla., to Pathe Exchange.

"Received your first Our Gang Comedy which was a knockout, and the kiddies simply went wild over it. I don't understand what was wrong with me that I was asleep and didn't run these long ago."

Bray Romance Released in July

"The Immortal Voice," scheduled for release sometime in July, is announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation as the next Bray Romance to be released. This is the fifth of the series to be produced by Bray Productions, Inc., for distribution through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

The film shows the making of a phonograph record from the time that the singer sings through the megaphone to the time that the record is finished.

Lodge Night, Pathe

Hal Roach's two reel Our Gang Comedy this time deals with the "Cluck Cluck Klams," a secret organization made up of the kiddies. The picture is filled with the usual activities of the juvenile actors and affords some really humorous situations along the lines of the former productions.

Gas and Air, Pathe

This one reel comedy features Stan Laurel in an automobile story. As a service man in a gas filling station the hero succeeds in wrecking a number of cars and finally himself. It will most likely get the laughs.

Pathe Review No. 30

In this reel shots are made of some Florida lake country and schools of fish are photographed beneath the surface of the water. Some views of pottery making, an East African festival, and the Pathecolor shows scenes in Brittany at apple time.

Sennett Signs Jackie Lucas

The announcement comes from the West Coast that Mack Sennett has signed up Jackie Lucas, who will be seen henceforth in prominent roles in Mack Sennett's comedies produced for Pathe. The youngster's first appearance under Sennett is in the two-reel comedy "Skylarking," in which many of the Sennett favorites are also seen.

Buddy Starts Another Comedy

With the completion of "The Inventor," Al Herman's latest Century Comedy with Buddy Messinger, director Herman has commenced work on "A Lead Pipe Cinch," with the same young star.

WORK PROGRESSING ON SERIAL FOR DUNCAN

"The Steel Trail," William Duncan's first Universal chapter picture, a romance of adventure in railroad construction, is well under way at Universal City; two chapters having been completed and received in New York. Duncan is supported by Edith Johnson, as in his former pictures. And is his own director.

This is the first of a series of Super Serials Duncan is to make for Universal, three of which are to be released during the coming twelve months. Paul M. Bryan and George Plympton are credited with the story.

The serial will be in fifteen chapters, and follows "In the Days of Daniel Boone" on the Universal serial schedule.

California House Exploits

One Reel Dippy Doo Dads

Los Angeles—Newspaper reviewers credit big laughs to the example of Hal Roach's new one-reel animal-acted novelty series called "Dippy Doo Dads" which followed the feature at the California Theatre the week of May 13. Special exploitation of a one-reeler is an unusual occurrence, but the California management thought so favorably of this little novelty that it made lavish use of throw-away reading:

"Don't wait until the last moment to see 'Dippy Doo Dads' at the California Theatre Starting Sunday, May 13."

Fantasy Elaborately Presented

That short subjects can be made as important a part of the program as the feature and draw forth as much comment and applause as the lengthier subjects was demonstrated during the week of June 10 at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, during the run of the Educational Pictures Special, "Sea of Dreams."

The subject was billed as a musical fantasy and occupied a prominent place in the newspaper advertising. It was surrounded with a presentation said to be the most magnificent and successful ever staged in Los Angeles.

Titles Completed for Baby Peggy

Joe Farnham, film editor and title writer, has completed titles for "Little Miss Hollywood," Baby Peggy's most recent Century Comedy.

This is the second comedy with Baby Peggy. Mr. Farnham has taken over, the other having been "Carmen Jr."

Aubrey Completes "Buttinsky"

Los Angeles.—Jimmy Aubrey has completed "The Buttinsky," first of his series of two-reel comedies for release by Chadwick Pictures Corporation, at Universal City. The story depicts the adventures of a soap salesman in "Darkest Russia."

Brabin to Make One-Reel Gem

With his own money Charles Brabin is to make a one-reel gem of "Pygmalion and Galatea" upon the completion of Eleanor Glyn's "Six Days" at the Goldwyn Studio. It is to be a simple story with no fancy sets, and only three actors in the cast. Upon its completion he will turn it over to a New York musician-exhibitor to use as an experiment.

Selecting—Booking—Playing—the Picture

A Self Made Wife

Universal Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Elizabeth Alexander. Scenario by Albert Kenyon. Director, Jack Dillon. Cameraman, William Folden. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Corrie Godwin	Ethel Grey Terry
Tim Godwin	Craufurd Kent
Dodo Sears	Virginia Ainsworth
J. Sears	Phillips Smalley
Allerdyce	Frank Butler
Bob	Matthew Betz
Mrs. Satter	Laura LaVarnie
Hotchkiss	Tom McGuire
Baby	Honora Beatrice
Jimmy Godwin	Turner Savage
Tim Godwin Junior	Maurice Murphy
Elena Vincent	Dorothy Cummings

Tim Godwin speculates in the oil fields. When luck favors him to the extent of becoming owner of a gusher and consequent millionaire he moves his family to New York. He is quite at home in the new surroundings to which wealth introduces him, but such is not the case with Corrie, his wife, who cannot adapt herself to the demands of society. Tim decides that Corrie needs the aid of someone who can mould her into the ways of fashion. He engages Elena Vincent, with whom he was acquainted at college, as secretary. Corrie objects to the arrangement, grows jealous and domestic troubles brew. Tim is fascinated by Elena and swept into the current of the fast set. Corrie is present at a gay festival one night and realizes the uselessness and danger of the life into which Tim has plunged.

Many complications follow but in the end Tim's better sense prevails, Corrie wins her point and husband and wife are reconciled.

A pleasing picture, remarkable for the sympathetic and forceful work of principals and supporting cast "A Self Made Wife," although presenting the familiar plot of the neglected wife whose sudden transportation from a lower to a higher social level brings her temporary unhappiness, is nevertheless prolific in entertainment values and of especial interest to feminine patrons. The spectacle of a woman handicapped by lack of early training, yet striving to keep pace with her husband in his successful entry into the swing of society, is calculated to arouse feelings of pity in the breast of the average spectator and Corrie Godwin naturally comes in for a fair share of sympathy.

Ethel Grey Terry's portrayal of the sorely tried wife stands forth as an excellent bit of acting, pathos and comedy are craftily mingled in the appeal of Corrie's crude mannerisms, in her lack of ease when clothed in garments to which she has heretofore been unaccustomed, and in her despairing sense of the fact that the man she loves is slipping beyond her reach.

But the sentimental element is not allowed to become too poignant at any stage of the feature. Director Dillon has handled his subject with good taste, and the introduction of a few humorous angles here and there serves to keep matters nicely balanced. Craufurd Kent registers as an energetic and rather likeable chap in the role of Tim Godwin, even if he does fall temporarily under the sway of the fascinating Elena Vincent. The latter part is capably filled by Dorothy Cummings, plenty of fun is provided by the juvenile characters and the work of other members of the cast is well up to standard.

The photography includes several interesting shots of the oil fields, many attractive exteriors and handsome interiors, with effective lighting. For exploitation purposes reference can be made to the story's human appeal, as well as its lighter side, and the social difficulties confronting a family unexpectedly elevated to the responsibilities of wealth and position. The Love Piker

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Frank R. Adams. Scenario by Frances Marion. Director, E. Mason Hopper. Cameraman, George Barnes. Running time, seventy-five minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Hope Warner	Anita Stewart
Peter Van Huisen	William Norris
Martin Van Huisen	Robert Frazer
Archie Pembroke	Carl Gerrard
Professor Click	Arthur Hoyt
Edith Cloney	Betty Francisco
Willy Warner	Mayme Kelso
Mrs. Warner	Winston Miller
Mr. Warner	Frederick Truesdall

Arrested for speeding in her roadster, Hope Warner, a wealthy young woman, meets and is aided by Martin Van Huisen, a young civil engineer who has made his way in the world by sheer force of character, despite the handicap of early poverty. Later Martin is instrumental in saving Hope's life and the friendship between the two ripens into love. They become engaged but the girl's loyalty to her lover is put to a severe test when he takes her to visit his father, old Peter Van Huisen, who lives in the tenements, where he has spent all his life and will not leave. When Hope sends out invitations for her wedding, her snobbish training asserts itself and she tears up the one intended for the elder Van Huisen. On the wedding morning she is troubled with remorse for her action and by the time she is attired in bridal costume experiences a revulsion of feeling. She jumps into an auto and hurries to old Peter, confesses her fault, brings him back with her and is married.

Anita Stewart's enlistment under the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan banner promises well for all parties concerned in the deal, judging by the excellence of "The Love Piker"—the first of her new pictures. In the past this ever popular star has frequently been handicapped by the burden of roles utterly unsuited to her personality and talents. On this fortunate occasion she is starred in a part which affords her golden opportunities to demonstrate her sterling dramatic ability, a fact of which she takes full and complete advantage.

The plot is simple enough, the tale of a young, willful girl spoiled by excess wealth, self-indulgence and the flattery of the vapid social set to which she belongs. Yet, while a snob in seeming, there is good stuff concealed by her mantle of frivolity, and when a real man falls in love with her the true woman comes to the surface and all ends happily.

This sketchy outline of the story is far from revealing its sympathetic lure and "straight-to-the-heart" appeal. For above all things it possesses the genuine homely, human touch which sways the tenderer emotion as no carefully cooked false sentimental atmosphere or melodramatic hokum can do. And this essential quality, coupled with the star's really delightful acting, loyal support of her clever player associates and director E. Mason Hopper's unerring generalship gives us a film with the power to draw tears from the on-lookers or arouse their mirth at will, for there are many subtly developed comedy interludes lighting the course of events.

Anita Stewart has never seemed so charming as she appears when impersonating heroine Hope Warner, and the secret of her success lies in her utter lack of affectation and her ability to depict that spoiled darling of fortune exactly as the author conceived her.

There is nothing artificial about Hope; you accept that impetuous, erstwhile snobbish damsel as the sort of girl nine out of ten of her sex would become under such conditions, thanks to the influence of Miss Stewart's fragile beauty and expressive pantomime. Robert W. Frazer qualifies as a fine type of a "regular fellow," a manly lover who does not allow passion to obscure his sense of his sweetheart's faults, yet has confidence in the future facing them, a strong and clean-cut performance.

William Norris does some wonderfully pathetic work in his portrayal of Robert's father, who lives with his fourfooted and feathered pets in tender memories of the past; Winston Miller, an exceedingly clever juvenile actor, gets a lot of fun out of the role of little brother Willie, Mayme Kelso scores as the mortified mother whose social aspirations in her daughter's behalf are doomed to failure and every other member of the large cast contributes in no small degree to the picture's success.

The film opens and closes with an auto-speeding episode and this can be featured in exploiting it. Stress the effective work of the star, her splendid support, the super-fine photography, which includes many handsome interiors and some pleasing rustic shots. "The Love Piker," to sum up, offers flawless entertainment and that of a kind suited to the needs of all classes of theatres, large and small. G. T. P.

A Gentleman of Leisure

Paramount Photoplay in Five Parts. Adapted from the stage play by John Stapleton and P. G. Wodehouse. Scenario by Jack Cunningham. Director, Joseph Henabery. Cameraman, Faxon M. Dean. Running time, sixty minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Robert Pitt	Jack Holt
Sir Spencer Deever	Casson Ferguson
Molly Creedon	Sigrid Holmquist
Sir John Blount	Alec Francis
Lady Blount	Adele Farrington
Spike Mullen	Frank Nelson
Big Phil Creedon	Alfred Paul
Maid	Nadeen Paul
Chorus Girl	Alice Queensberry

Sir John and Lady Blount face bankruptcy and to save the family fortunes decide their nephew, Sir Spencer Deever, must wed Molly Creedon, American heiress. They come to the United States. Robert Pitt, young, wealthy American, sees Molly and makes a bet with his companions that he will obtain one of her photos, autographed fondly by her, within a certain space of time. Molly's father is police chief. Spike Mullen, burglar, breaks into Pitt's house and is detected by the latter. Robert persuades Spike that he himself is one of the crook fraternity and brings him to the Creedon residence in search of the photo. Confronted by Creedon, they manage to escape. Later, Spike, learning that Robert, for whom he has conceived great admiration, is at a house party, thinks he is after the famous Deever necklace and starts off to warn him that other parties are in quest of the treasure. Then varied complications ensue, due to the presence of the other crooks who are on the necklace trail. After much double-crossing and the coming to light of two necklaces, it transpires that the pearls in both are false. Sir John having pawned his wife's original in London. Spike and the other crooks escape, Molly and Robert are united.

Melodrama and farce are freely mixed up in the plot of "A Gentleman of Leisure." It's the kind of picture which nobody is likely to take seriously at any stage, the yarn as a whole being extremely unconvincing, but, considered merely as light entertainment, it registers as fairly amusing and will pass muster with audiences of a not too critical calibre.

Some of the best situations develop when the hero and his admiring burglar friend attend a house party and match wits with enterprising crooks who are endeavoring to get possession of Lady Blount's valuable necklace. The complications which ensue as a result of the game of cross purposes everybody appears to be playing are sufficiently comic to keep the spectators in a laughingly receptive mood and a "surprise finish" is attained when the discovery is made that her ladyship's much-sought-after treasure consists of paste pearls.

Jack Holt is a debonnaire figure as the polished young American, Robert Pitt. Things come easy for Robert, almost too easy for the maintenance of the suspense one naturally looks for when a hero is mingling with underworld thugs, but Holt's performance is nevertheless interesting and quite in keeping with the star's reputation as a good character delineator.

Sigrid Holmquist is a graceful, vivacious heroine and Frank Nelson scores heavily in the comic role of burglar Spike Mullen. Adequate support is provided by the remainder of the company. Exteriors and interiors are skillfully filmed and good lighting prevails.

Jack Holt's name should be exploited in localities where he has a following and the picture advertised as a crook comedy-drama with society trimmings. G. T. P.

Mignon

Children's Matinee Association photoplay in eight parts. Made from the opera.

SYNOPSIS

The Marchese discovers that he has married his half-sister and disgraced by their father's dishonor, they set fire to their castle and die. Their child, Mignon, is left in the care of the brother of the Marchese, who is a priest. Mignon is stolen by the gypsies and grows up to be a dancer with the troupe. She is ill-treated by Cypriani, who murdered his brother and is now leader of the band. Wilhelm Meister befriends Mignon, who falls in love with him, but he is attracted by an actress who is stopping at the same Inn. There, they meet the Duke who invites the party to his mansion. On their way, the coach is attacked by Cypriani who is plotting with a band of outlaws. His own hand discovers his treachery and comes to the aid of the Duke's party. Cypriani fires at Meister but Mignon throws herself in front of him and is shot. Meister overcomes Cypriani after an encounter. Mignon's uncle, who has been searching for her since she was kidnapped, now finds her and nurses her back to health. Meister realizes it is Mignon he loves and they are united.

"Mignon" is an imported picture made from the opera of Ambrose Thomas and Goethe's masterpiece. Although it is offered by the Children's Matinee Association as a children's picture, it certainly is not a film for juveniles.

The story is laid in Germany and Italy and has for its main theme the escape of Mignon from the gypsy, Cypriani, the finding of Mignon by her uncle and the love story of Wilhelm Meister and Mignon, but there is a prologue showing how Mignon came to be stolen by the gypsies. If this prologue and some of the titles, of which there are too many, were taken out, the film would probably be brought down to somewhere near a suitable length. As they stand, the eight reels seem too long. The titles are taken from the masterpiece and this is no doubt why so many are brought in, but some at least, could well be omitted.

The cast consists of international artists and all the acting is satisfactory. Special mention may be made of the portrayal of Cypriani. The scenes, which were photographed on the Swiss Alps and the Riviera, are very beautiful.

The music of the opera is played in conjunction with the picture. The idea to popularize good music and good literature simultaneously is a worthy one. "Mignon" is education, but education for adults.

If the picture is cut, it will be a good one for general exhibition, for many who cannot afford to go to the opera will be glad to have this opportunity of becoming familiar with it. D. R.

Circus Days

Presented by Sol Lesser. Distributed by First National. Adapted from the James Otis book "Toby Tyler." Scenario by Eddie Cline and Harry Weil. Directed by Eddie Cline. Length, 5163.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Toby Tyler	Jackie Coogan
Ann Tyler, his Mother	Barbara Tennant
Eben Holt	Russell Simpson
His Wife, Martha	Claire McDowell
Luigi, the Clown	Cesare Gravini
Jeannette, his Niece	Peaches Jackson
Mr. Lord, the Lemonade Man	Sam de Grasse
Mr. Daly, the Circus Owner	DeWitt Jennings
World's Fattest Woman	Nellie Lane
World's Skinniest Man	William Barlow

Eben Holt's home is hardly a home for Toby Tyler and his mother, the sister of Mrs. Holt. Toby finds that out after his uncle's repeated tirades against Mrs. Tyler and the boy himself is the object of much scowling and many lickings. So Toby leaves hurriedly, Eben precipitating the departure by following Toby on the run with a switch in his hand. Along the long journey somewhere, anywhere, Toby falls in with a lemonade, ice cream and peanut concessionaire of a circus and gets a job at a dollar a week. There is a little girl with the tent show whose performance as a bare back rider is a featured act. Jeannette, the girl rider, is supported in her act by her uncle, Luigi, a clown. These two fall upon evil days when the girl is injured and cannot appear. The owner of the show threatens to discharge both unless Jeannette makes her regular appearance in the act. In this emergency, Toby comes to the rescue. Suspended on a wire he performs amazing feats and when the manager discovers it is Toby, who was made up in Jeannette's costume, and not the girl, he offers the boy a job at a big salary, which Toby takes. The boy then returns to the Holt farm and with a display of largesse and affluence that astounds his mother and uncle and aunt, takes his mother away with him in a manner befitting the social position and financial standing of the mother of Toby Tyler, star circus performer.

"Circus Days" presents Jackie Coogan in a play possessing high qualifications as entertainment. It is a good show; strong and wide in its appeal and therefore suitable for presentation in any theatre before any audience. This episodic sketching of the life and colorful adventures of a little boy whom necessity teaches the ambition to "make money" and instinet the urge to be kind and generous, varies its attack upon the spectator's heart with well aimed thrusts at the risibles. Here is mirth which sometimes become uproarious set off before a background of moving sentiment.

There is no driving force to any particular situation, no thunderous moment which stands out as something memorable above all else in the play. "Circus Days" is more quiet than that. Its appeal is as simple, genuine entertainment, to be remembered as something enjoyable, not as something "memorable" or "impressive." It is just "Circus Days," simple, wholesome, pleasurable entertainment.

Master Coogan has his opportunities. He has moments of real pathos to accent as his remarkable abilities permit, and then the comedy moments are based on fundamental ly funny situations. His business with the horseshoe, found and picked up to be spit upon and tossed over the left shoulder, is a merry bit which reaches its climax when the shoe goes through uncle Eben's window. A recurrence of this incident with the uncle coaxed by Toby to try the stunt for good luck, similar in every way, even to the crashing through the window of the "lucky" piece, is good for a final bit of laughter, which will send them all away with the best laugh of "Circus Days." Then the business in the circus ring with Jackie suspended on a wire is provocative of boisterous laughter.

With Sam de Grasse as the lemonade man, Russell Simpson as the hard-hearted uncle, Cesare Gravini as the old circus clown, DeWitt Jennings as the circus manager, and Claire McDowell as the aunt, there is plenty of good, competent acting to support the star's efforts.

The production is first rate in every respect. The circus scenes are as glamorous as real big tops and side shows can make them, and the photography is equal to revealing the settings to the greatest advantage. It is a nicely produced, well acted and delightfully moving play, and should please thoroughly. T. C. K.

Under the name of Edgar Craig there enters a Home For Failures, founded by his dead father, one Edgar Prentice. He is an unsuccessful playwright. There he meets April Blair, maid-of-all-work at the home. With Joe Renard, a musician, he is inspired by April to try his luck in the world again. The trio go to New York, Edgar to write, Joe to compose and April to await a chance to sing on the stage. Three years pass. A play by Craig and Renard turns out a big success. April is starred in this production by Edgar Prentice, whose identity with Craig she does not suspect. Dudley Quail, a millionaire, falls in love with April and for a time Prentice believes that she does not love him. But in the long run all comes right, the former inhabitants of the "Home For Failures" are all provided with jobs and April and Edgar are united.

With the advent of "The Purple Highway," a temporarily missing star again twinkles brightly on the movie horizon. For pretty Madge Kennedy returns to the silent drama in this picture as April Blair, a role eminently suited to her dainty, magnetic personality, and proves conclusively that she still possesses the piquant charm, engaging mannerisms, keen sense of comedy values and emotional power which distinguished her work as a leading screen favorite in the past. As a stage attraction, then entitled "Dear Me," this comedy-drama scored a decided hit. The film version has been produced with little regard for expense, there is any amount of fine interior decorations and artistic settings in evidence, and the original plot is pretty closely adhered to.

This romance of the ambitious servant girl who emerged from the drab surroundings of a charity institution to become one of Broadway's theatrical lights, and the playwright who first "went under" and then climbed up again, is not without sympathetic as well as humorous appeal and holds its interest well, especially after the situation develops which shows the hero as a successful dramatist, without the girl in the case being aware of his identity.

If the picture has a fault it lies in the unnecessary elaboration of detail in the opening reels, dealing with numerous incidents transpiring at the home, many of which seem superfluous, outside of the straight comedy bits, also, the struggles of author, musician and embryo actress after their New York debut is prolonged to a somewhat wearisome extent.

But the film gathers strength as it goes along, the action speeds up merrily, a really fine climax is attained and, taken on the whole, "The Purple Highway" may be said to provide very good entertainment. Madge Kennedy's work as April Blair is refreshingly natural and alluring, Monte Blue furnishes an admirable characterization of the hero-playwright and competent support is rendered the principals by other members of the cast. The photography includes a number of handsome interiors and pleasing exterior shots and the lighting is clear and distinct.

For exploitation purposes Madge Kennedy's successful return as a notable star is suggested, as well as reference to the story's funny angles and human interest side.

Her Dangerous Path

Patheserial Produced by Hal Roach. Author, Hal Roach. Director, Roy Clements.

THE CAST

Corinne Grant Edna Murphy
 Donald Bartlett, a wealthy young man Hayford Hobbs
 Glen Harper, a chauffeur Charles Parrott
 Wong, a mystic Oriental Fong Hong Joe Henderson Earl Mohan
 Tillie, his wife Laura Roessing
 Mrs. Bartlett May Wallace
 Miss Bartlett Ethel Ritchie

Pathe showed last week the first three chapters of its novel serial, "Her Dangerous Path." In the first place the production represents a change in the usual form of this company's chapterplay in that there are but ten episodes against the usual fifteen. Secondly, it is aimed to make each episode more or less independent of any other by employing a different cast of characters for each chapter, aside from the woman star and the Oriental who forecasts what fate has in store for the former if she takes a certain indicated step.

Edna Murphy is the young woman who portrays the chief character, that of Corinne Grant, whose father by a shift in fortune has been reduced from wealth to poverty, from health to illness.

In the first episode Corinne is told by the family chauffeur following the dismissal of the household staff that he is in love with her, that he is ambitious, believes he has a future and asks the impoverished girl to share his fortunes. Corinne consults the Grant's Chinese chef, who stirs the sands with his stick and we see on the screen what will happen if the girl marries the former servant. The ending is disaster.

In the second chapter "Fetters of Gold," Corinne is asked to wed a wealthy young man. On the screen we see the result when the bride is brought into the household dominated by mother-in-law, abetted by sister-in-law-unhappiness and tragedy when the husband is killed in a mine disaster in the west.

The third chapter, "At the Brink," shows Corinne installed in a hospital as nurse through the influence of the family doctor.

The latter proves to be a follower of a gay life. When in a drunken condition "he gives instructions" to prepare a patient for an operation the nurse disobeys him and has the case transferred to a young surgeon with whom she is in love. The latter proves to be a coward in an emergency and the nurse is discharged. So the third attempt at happiness on the part of Corinne comes to naught.

If a mere male may be permitted to express an opinion as to the amount of appeal contained in this new fangled serial he will remark that undoubtedly it will be very much more thought of among the women, especially the younger ones. For it is a girl's story, dealing with a subject that we may easily believe is uppermost in her mind—the great interrogation regarding marriage.

Here apparently in the guise of illustrating the prophecies of the seer we are to follow Corinne through nine unsuccessful and unhappy marriages. At the close of each number we get a flash of the problem with its surrounding circumstances, that is, the proposer and his situation, with the accompanying question, "What would you do?" So there is a fine opportunity for speculation on the part of those romantically inclined.

We decline to make a guess as to the verdict. Hal Roach is taking a chance on his ability to gauge the psychology of woman-kind. He may be right. G. B.

Paddy-The-Next-Best-Thing

Allied Producers and Distributors Photoplay in Six Parts. Adapted from Gertrude Page's story and stage play of the same title. Director, J. Graham Cutts. Running time, seventy minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Paddy Adair Mae Marsh
 Lawrence Blake Darby Foster
 Eileen Adair Lillian Douglas
 Mrs. Blake Nina Boucicault
 Miss Jane O'Hara Haidee Wright
 Miss Mary O'Hara Marie Wright
 Jack O'Hara George K. Arthur
 General Adair Sir Simeon Stuart
 Mickey Doolan Tom Coventry
 Doreen Blake Mildred Evelyn
 Dr. Adair Bernard Vaughan
 Mrs. Adair Marie Ault

Paddy is the tom-boy daughter of old General Adair, who vainly wished for a son, but accepts Paddy as "the next best thing." Jack O'Hara is in love with Paddy's sister, Eileen, but the latter is attracted by Lawrence Blake, student of Irish folk-lore. Eileen refuses Jack, Lawrence declares his affection for Paddy, but is repulsed, as Paddy thinks he has trifled with Eileen. O'Hara goes abroad. General Adair dies, leaving his business affairs in a bad tangle. Paddy puts Eileen in the care of two maiden aunts and goes to London to earn a living. Blake follows Paddy but is again spurned, although she is beginning to realize that she cares for him. Jack O'Hara returns to the old home place. Paddy goes to meet him, brings about a tryst between Jack and Eileen and these two become engaged. Paddy, while nusing over her fortunes on a mountain top, is caught in a fog, loses her way and blunders into a bog. She is rescued by Blake and finally admits that she loves him.

This picture was produced abroad and must be listed as a sterling example of rarely beautiful photography. The Irish scenic views are simply exquisite, the fog effects in the final, when Paddy is lost on the mountain side, marvelously impressive, nor should the fantastic brilliancy of the ballet shots at the English house party be forgotten when summing up the film's artistic excellence. The story is clean, wholesome, combining delicious bits of comedy with a dual love romance, a generous amount of real human interest and winding up in a climax which imparts a genuine and convincing thrill to the on-lookers.

That "Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing" will be accepted by Mae Marsh's numerous admirers as one of the best vehicles ever selected for the display of their favorite's talent goes without saying. Her portrayal of the little Irish girl is not only wonderfully true to type but fairly vibrates with electric energy, humorous appeal and timely pathos. It is a thoroughly Celtic performance from first to last. Miss Marsh lives in the character, so to speak, and is a regular impish delight in the role of this resourceful maiden who is equally at home whether riding, swimming, climbing, straightening out the tangled heart affairs of others, or conducting a love seance on her own account.

The star is supported by a cast of capable British players, Lillian Douglas, a very attractive young actress, appearing to good advantage as Paddy's sister, Eileen, and Darby Foster giving a clean-cut performance in the part of Lawrence Blake, while other members of the company figure in character sketches uncommonly true to life and pleasantly convincing.

In exploiting the feature much should be made of the fact that the star has but recently returned to the scene of her former triumphs in filmdom and registers splendidly in a role which suits her winsome, vivacious personality in every detail. The comedy strength of the plot, as well as its tender interludes and forceful climax, can also be dwelt upon and attention called to the beauty of the genuine Irish scenery outlined by the camera. Itching Palms

Six part photoplay released by F. B. O.
Story and scenario by Wynndham Gittens and Helmer Bergman. Directed by James W. Horne. Cameraman, William Marshall.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Jerry Tom Gallery
Jerry's Father Hershal Mayall
Virgie Virginia Fox
Mac Tom Wilson
Obadiah Simpkins Joseph Harrington
The Village Dumbell Victor Potel
Grandma Gano Gertrude Claire
Doctor Peak Robert Walker
Judge Barrett Tom Lingham
Constable Coman Richard Cummings

Facts concerning the robbery of a large sum in currency from the post office are known to Grandma Gano and Doctor Peak, both old residents of the little village in which the story plays. Grandma's son died suddenly, really from a bullet wound but he managed to breathe out the words "the money is hidden near the haunted house." Grandma's search for the money is closely watched by Dr. Peak, who clearly shows his intentions. Aligned on the side of the old woman is her grandson, his sweetheart, and a pal of the grandson. The feverish search goes on until Peak knocks the grandson unconscious and leaves him in the haunted house, which is fired as a result of the scuffle, a lantern setting the old building in flames. The girl attempts to save her sweetheart and is injured. An operation is immediately necessary, but Dr. Peak cannot be trusted. The old pal of the boy, formerly a great surgeon though long out of practice, performs the operation successfully. The money is located and returned to its rightful owners and all ends happily.

"Itching Palms" offers a conflagration scene as its spectacular morsel. It's a good fire, the old "haunted house" going up in flames to the full contentment of the camera. Were it certain that "Itching Palms" was conceived and executed as a burlesque of movie melodrama it would earn a rating of fair amusement.

There is some good farce, offered by "ad lib" work on the part of Victor Potel and Tom Wilson. The farce genuinely played is amusing in spots, but the melodrama which may or may not be intentionally funny is absurd to a degree of humor even surpassing the farce.

There is great economy of action. For example, the sick room with its occupant, the heroine, lying dangerously ill in bed serves those conditions for scuffles, arguments and much of the melodrama which brings the play to a close.

It was not an expensive picture to produce by any means and therefore may be desirable because of the reasonable price at which it can be shown. But unless audiences are of the most elemental sort "Itching Palms" must be offered as a burlesque, under which conditions it might get by in places where they are easily pleased.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

Wrecks, Educational

Here is something new in flivver comedies. In the first place the second-hand machine is equipped with an elevating mechanism. The youthful driver wishes to take in his sweetheart when the outer door has been locked against her. He pulls a lever and up goes the body of the machine to the level of the second story window. The lady enters, the car is lowered and away they go.

Later father interests policemen passing in their car and a pursuit is started. The police machine jams the flivver into a wall, knocking the wheels askew. Unperturbed the lover throws another lever and away goes the "Michigan orphan" sideways.

There's quite a lot in this single reel apart from the two outstanding incidents, stuff that will put it over as a good comedy. It bears the brand of Cameo, was directed by Fred Hibbard, and features Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance.

Red Russia Revealed, Fox

This two-reeler, which is said to be the first authentic pictorial record of actual conditions in Russia, shows the country under the rule of Lenin the Dictator, Trotzky the military genius, and Kalenin, the peasant President. There are some scenes of military training, the bread-line, the propaganda train and the desecration of the tomb of the Patriarch Tickhon. One of the features of the film is a "camera interview" with Lenin—a five minute close-up of the dictator as he is talking. Krupskaya, wife of Lenin, is shown as a commander and exhorter. There are also glimpses of the heads of the various governmental departments.

This film would be admirable for school showings to history classes as well as for general exhibition were it not for the fact that it flickers badly. This offense to the eyes causes impatience and naturally detracts from the interest of the picture.

Close Harmony, Educational

Norman Jefferies has compiled a single reel of songs illustrated by motion pictures. As an example, a quartet of happy adult males are shown lustily singing "Sweet Adeline," or at least they so warble until such time as a woman emerges from a nearby house and takes one of the group by the ear and breaks up the party. On the screen the words of the song are shown and the house is invited to join in the singing. There are other songs also shown. The popularity of the innovation is a matter that largely will depend on the inclination to participate in community singing. Where this indoor sport is enjoyed the picture should be a hit.

Roaring Lions on a Steamboat, Fox

In this Sunshine two-reeler, a girl, an artist, and his colored servant escape from cannibals only to get on a ship with wild animals which are being imported from the jungle. By accident the lion cage is opened and the usual chase ensues. Between the wild animals and the ferocious captain the stowaways have a hard time of it. They finally sight land and jump overboard. When they reach shore they discover they have run into the cannibals again. The situations, although not new, are sufficiently amusing.

Where There's a Will, Fox

Avaricious relatives are waiting for a rich uncle to die, in this Sunshine two-reel comedy. Poor Uncle is maltreated generally in an effort to speed his death, but he fools the schemers by totally recovering. In fact, he gets so well and young into the bargain that he can break a kicking broncho, rescue a kidnapped heroine and "knock out" his heavy nephew. The mistreatment of Uncle, a decrepit old man on crutches, fails to amuse. Most of the humor is in the second reel, when Uncle gets the better of his relations.

The Cat and the Fiddle, Educational

Lyman H. Howe has produced a short subject opening with a series of cartoons illustrative of Mother Goose rhymes. Other topics following are fine views of the Dells, Wisconsin; Bridal Veil Falls, the abode of the Blackfoot Indians in the Rockies, surf riding on the Waikiki Beach and, also in cartoons, and a day at the circus.

True Gold, Universal

Frank Grandon is the director of a two-part western subject featuring Jack Dougherty and Laura La Plante. The production is interesting, holding up well from start to finish. Harvey Gates and George Pypor are the authors of the tale, which tells of the hunt for a murderer and for gold ore thieves. The action is fast.

The Host, Universal

Neely Edwards essays the role of a summer hotel host, having through an accident been pitchforked into the job. After a series of mishaps he goes out of it even more suddenly than he entered. The picture, which is in one reel, contains no striking or novel situation, but will furnish moderate amusement.

A Thoroughbred, Pathe

The Aesop's Film Fable shows how a good dog was rewarded for his kindness to the other animals. The cartoons are cleverly done and the reel is entertaining.

Press Comments

Times—One of those productions—of which there are many—with a giddy beginning and bromidic ending. American—A simple, human thing, woven out of emotions that might stir in any one's heart. Sun and Globe—The story has elements of simple charm, and enables the personable Miss Stewart to look grandly forbidding in a society environment, and then humbly contrite—two of her best specialties. Telegram—Miss Anita Stewart returns to the screen at the Capitol Theatre this week, winning new laurels at the head of an all-star cast. Evening Journal—Is filled with interest and with exciting episodes. Evening Mail—Has been picturized most effectively and as a whole is delightful entertainment. Evening World—With summer here, the mercury high, the breezes low, we'd advise you, if you wish to go to the movies, to see "The Love Piker;" it won't raise your temperature a single degree.

RIALTO

1. Overture—Zampa (Louis Ferdinand Herold)
2. Symphonized Home Tunes—When You and I Were Young, Maggie—Miriam Lax, soprano, Adrian De Sylva, Tenor.
3. The Sky Splitter (Bray Comedy)
4. Rivoli Pictorial
5. Danse Divertissement
6. Jack Holt in A Gentleman of Leisure (Paramount)
7. Recital Intime—Elizabeth Bartenieva, dramatic soprano, Sylvester Belmont at the piano
8. Baby Peggy in Nobody's Darling (Universal)

Press Comments

Times—Possesses elements that make it one of those pleasing entertainments that evaporate from one's mind soon after leaving the theatre. American—It's probably meant to be what is called Summer entertainment. And Summer entertainment, as such, is its own definition. World—"A Gentleman of Leisure" This picture is pretty poor stuff. ("Nobody's Darling") Baby Peggy, a little over six, has never been so sweet in a picture play before. Tribune—"A Gentleman of Leisure" is a leisurely picture and at times the thread of the story is stretched so tautly that you think surely it must snap. Baby Peggy in "Nobody's Darling" is the best part of the picture program. Sun and Globe—Holt himself is never so happy as when he is playing such roles . . . And those who see him at the Rivoli this week will be equally happy. Telegram—A delightful melodramatic comedy, with the star, Jack Holt, unusually well cast as Robert Pitt. Evening Mail—The picture has preserved all the comedy which has made the play successful. There is a good laugh in every other scene. Evening World.—For those who like Jack Holt and his screen methods, "The Man of Leisure" will prove an enjoyable and appealing picture bit.

PLANES BOMB CHICAGO WITH SPOILERS BILLS

Chicago.—"The Spoilers" which had its world premiere at the Roosevelt Theatre on Monday, July 2nd, received some of the most extensive exploitation staged for a photoplay in this city.

The most unusual stunt was pulled July 4th, two days after the opening. While a big parade was in progress, four army airplanes, piloted by government aviators, flew over Chicago and "bombed" the city with a hundred thousand heralds, which invited the young men of Chicago to go to Camp Custer near that town for a month's army training at the government's expense. By paying for the printing of these government ads, the Roosevelt Theatre was able to get the advertisement for the showing of "The Spoilers" on the back of these heralds.

The police did not interfere with the airplane distribution of the circulars because the aviators were under the jurisdiction of the United States Government.

REAL CO-OPERATION RESULT OF GOOD-WILL

Brookfield, Mo.—F. A. Wasgein of the De Graw Theatre, doesn't fight the newspapers. On the contrary he has sold his theatre as a civic institution that needs all the attention the town can give it.

He has harped on this point so long that there is nothing in the way of co-operation that the paper wouldn't give him. The best boost came recently for "Bella Donna," when the managing editor of the newspaper returned from a visit to a couple of metropolises. He wrote a column-top-head front-page story in which he told the home-folks that they had a picture show to be proud of. That there was nothing in St. Louis or Chicago that had anything on the De Graw.

NATIONAL STUNT FOR THE SPOILERS

Another national exploitation tie-up has been arranged by Eddie Bonns, Manager of Exploitation for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, and W. R. Ferguson, his assistant.

The subject of the tie-up is "The Spoilers" The Tobacco Products Company of New York will institute a campaign on Strollers cigarettes. The Tobacco Products Company has arranged to insert a series of 120 movie stars' photographs in the packages of Strollers cigarettes, one to a package.

An edition of 100,000 window cards was printed at the tobacco firm's expense. There are three of these window cards, of the same size and arrangement but with different pictures and copy on them.

"SWAT THE FLY" CAMPAIGN

Allentown, Pa.—John D. O'Rear, manager of the Rialto at Allentown, Pa., broke on the front page of the Allentown dailies with his "Swat the Fly" week stunt and got some spot news for his house that was of the type that money could not buy. O'Rear gave a free ticket to any boy or girl who brought 100 dead flies to the theatre the week that Metro picture "Quincy Adams Sawyer" was run. The medical department of the Allentown city administration issued bulletins on how to handle the dead pests and these were all hooked on to the Rialto feature, with plenty of publicity and public approval as the result.

BALLYHOO DENIES CHARGE

Logansport, Ind.—The Colonial Theatre exploiting "The Christian," had a street ballyhoo consisting of a sandwich man carrying cards reading: "John Storm denies that he prophesied the end of the world at midnight, Sunday." He carried this teaser message for three days and then two days before the opening, the following phrase was added to the sign—"In 'The Christian' at the Colonial."

Profitable EXPLOITATION

WILL EXPLOIT WOMAN ANGLE OF NEW SERIAL

'Appeal to the feminine heart will be the keynote of the exploitation on the Patheserial "Her Dangerous Path." The story, which is in ten episodes, is spun around the love life of an average American girl.

The angle of a girl being able to look into the future, is the one around which the campaign will be built. Women writers all over the country, particularly those who handle the "advice to the lovelorn" columns, will be lined up in a co-operative arrangement by the Pathe exploitation staff so that "Her Dangerous Path" will engender novel and possibly sensational interest from the "sob sisters." A special exploitation novelty for exhibitor distribution is now being created whereby the showman can make a direct tie-up with his newspaper, theatre and play dates.

Pittsburgh.—C. B. Frost, of the exploitation staff of the Rowland & Clark Theatres, and Goldwynner Bill Robson arranged an exploitation tie-up with Donahoe's Food store when "Lost and Found" was shown at the Blackstone Theatre. Donahoe conducts a chain of meat and food stores. By the terms of this tie-up the Donahoe stores wrapped in each package sent out one of the "Lost and Found" picture puzzles originated by Eddie Bonns, manager of exploitation for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, and his assistant, W. R. Ferguson. The first thousand persons who brought to the box-office of the Blackstone a marked copy of the puzzle picture with the picture of Capt. Blackbird's daughter correctly outlined were admitted free. Twenty-five thousand of the puzzles were distributed.

ANOTHER ONE OF THOSE THINGS

Allentown, Pa.—Manager John D. O'Rear, of the Rialto Theatre took up a new angle when he put across "One Week of Love" Selznick vehicle starring Elaine Hammerstein. Allentown had its Health Week, Cleanup Week, Physical Culture Week, Paint Up Week, etc., but O'Rear gave the town Love-Week. He played up as spot news in the papers the feature which consisted of having all persons whose wedding anniversaries occurred that week attend the show as his guests. The newspapers caught on to the human interest side of the stunt and played right along with O'Rear, giving his guests some space as spot news that money could not have bought.

GOOD TIE-UP FOR "ENEMIES"

Kansas City, Mo.—For the showing of Cosmopolitan's "Enemies of Women" at the Royal Theatre, 57,000 heralds were distributed through five of the most prominent laundries of the city and 150,000 special inserts were distributed by the Campbell Baking Company. The 150,000 inserts were on the angle that hot ovens are enemies of women. Thirty thousand of these inserts a day were put in with each loaf of bread sent out by the Campbell Baking Co. The tie-up ran over a period of five days.

ROSENFELD NOW A PARAMOUNT EXPLOITEER

John Rosenfield, Jr., after two and a half years of valiant work as publicity representative of the Division of Exploitation of Famous Players-Lasky, is walking out of the tony atmosphere of the home office to take up the battle of the exhibitor in his drive to lure the public past the box office when Paramount attractions are on the bill. John who was Max is now a Paramount Exploiteer and with a long period of observation of all that went on in Exploitation, the gifts of a lively imagination and a genial personality to back him up, he should be a good one.

Mr. Rosenfield is one of four new exploiteers whom Claud Saunders, manager of exploitation for Famous Players-Lasky, recently added to his department. Mr. Saunders' staff therefore on the fourth anniversary of his department now numbers thirty-eight and on August 1st there will be an exploiteer in each Paramount exchange. This year's Paramount Week, therefore, will be bigger than ever.

DUMMY STUNTER THRILLS CROWDS

Wildwood, N. J.—Norman Johnson, Publicity Director for Hunt's Theatres, Inc. demonstrated a novel, trick ballyhoo upon the roof of the Hunt's New Casino Theatre, during the theatre's run of Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last."

A life sized dummy was placed upon a chair, the back legs of which were hinged to a corner of the New Casino roof. At night a searchlight played from the roof of a building opposite, the rays sweeping through the crowd on the boardwalk and traveling upward to the figure of Lloyd on the roof. When the light reached the dummy, a rope attached to the chair was pulled, causing chair and figure to tilt and apparently fall at the proper moment. Another rope was pulled, raising the chair to an upright position, giving the impression of Lloyd being saved by a miracle.

MERS TURNS PARODIST

Ottawa, Ill.—Under the inspiration of the heat wave or something, Diehl Mers of the Orpheum Theatre wrote a parody of the Gallagher and Shean song with "Grumpy" as the subject of the lay. Whether Mers did it because it was good exploitation idea or just to do his stuff as a rhymist is not known, but anyway here's the jingle and form your own conclusions:

Oh, Mr. Gallagher; oh, Mr. Gallagher,
Have you heard about the Orpheum show
this week?

Sure, I saw as I came past
Theodore Roberts is in the cast,
Oh, Mr. Shean; oh, Mr. Shean,
I've been waiting for that show, until I'm green,

But I think it is a shame
You don't know the picture's name,
Sure, it's Paramount, Mr. Gallagher,
No, it's "Grumpy," Mr. Shean.

STARTS AN ARGUMENT

Sacramento, Calif.—Because Manager M. B. Hustler believes that the hand that rocks the cradle swings the box-office receipts he directed his exploitation primarily at the women, when he played First National's "The Dangerous Age."

The Sacramento Union wanted to find out what the dangerous age was and to draw the interest of the feminine sex, specified that its women readers only, were asked to reply. This drew a legion of letters, and after they had been published, the men were asked to reply to them and give their side of the argument. The scope of the tie-up was widened by having officers of the Sacramento Chamber of Commerce act as judges.

It seems like we are back to Normalcy when a display filled with icicles, snow-fringed trees, ice bergs and Northern lights, comes along after an early season crowded with wrecked ships and seascapes. The display above is tonic atmosphere for the sweltering mass and worked out to good advantage for the premiere of the Goldwyn's "The Spoilers" at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago.

The noble old polar bear who's done his bit for spring waters and refrigerators, served well once more as the star of an ad by the Sun Theatre, Omaha, for Pathe's "Nanook of the North."

Big cutouts for big effects is not a bad rule. The lobby display above for Goldwyn's feature "Backbone" was made at the State Theatre, Pittsburgh. The figure of Alfred Lunt as the hero of the Distinctive production was hand painted in bright colors and there was enough contrast to produce startling effects. The State gave the cool touch with snow capped letters for the title.

Laughter as it was featured in the Pathe 24 for "Dr. Jack" was used as the lead in the cutout display for Harold Lloyd's thrill special "Safety Last" when it played at Orchestra Hall, Chicago, Ill. The stethoscope tubes were good "continuity" from the picture of Lloyd across the front to the smile-wreathed world. The thrill was not neglected, however. The display frames with scene stills took care of that.

Palms and dried grass and cutouts of dancing girls put plenty of the South Sea atmosphere into the lobby decoration at the Lyric Theatre, Minneapolis, when Goldwyn's "Lost and Found" was presented.

The management of the Kinema Theatre, Salt Lake City, took a lot of pains with the display for Vitagraph's "Masters of Men." The model fighting ship was executed in minute detail.

Lots of work for the painter in the making of the display for First National's "The Isle of Lost Ships" at the Everette Theatre, Everett, Wash., but entirely worth the trouble when the outcome is as effective as that shown above.

The Liberty Theatre, Yakima, Wash., is always easy to spot no matter what the feature displayed in photographs which find their way to the papers through the devious avenues of publicity.

A lighthouse on the marquee of the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, guided the steps of the wayfarers to the presentation of First National's "The Isle of Lost Ships." A 500 candle power lamp mounted on a wheel and operated by a fan motor revolved the light in the tower. The arrangement is the work of W. H. Laurance, publicity director, and P. F. Schwie, resident manager of the Garrick.

PASTIME THEATRE, OTTAWA, KANSAS

Manager C. W. Goodell adopted the Goldwyn 24-sheet to his marquee for a display on "Souls for Sale," an attractive arrangement. The one sheet frames at either side of the lobby are the shadow boxes which Goldwyn prepared for the picture. Goodell set a new house record with his "Souls for Sale" presentation.

Lloyd Hamilton, star of Mermaid Comedies, gets a feature place in the electrics in front of the Skouras Brothers New Grand Central Theatre, St. Louis, when Educational's "Cold Chills" was played. "The Hottentot" was featured with cutouts from the 24 on either side of the canopy.

More electricity burned with the name of Lloyd Hamilton when the Educational comedy, "Uneasy Feet," was presented at Loew's State, Los Angeles. The State offers elaborate programs and its many features are always well displayed on the big electric board.

Another window in New York for the Paramount presentation of "The Covered Wagon" at the Criterion. The one shown above offers an arrangement suitable for small windows or a part of a large one. It was made at the department store of Bloomingdale's and featured the book.

"The Eternal Flame" as it was prologued in England, where the disposition to work up exploitation and picture presentation is beginning to take hold. The setting shown above was used as a "curtain raiser" for the First National feature at the Coronet Theatre, Birmingham. Two nuns in black knelt before a cross at the right of the stage while a White Sister addressed the Burning Flame midway up the black drape at the left. The Rosary was sung by a quartette back stage. The number was called "The Burning Flame of Love."

A ticket goes with every purchase of the photoplay edition of "The Christian." This window for the Goldwyn photoplay was in a Lafayette, Ind., store tied up with the Luna Theatre.

The manufacturers of the new "Baby Peggy Doll," which are being used for exploitation of the little Universal Star, make a display in their New York store on the novelty recently introduced.

The MODERN THEATRE

Building — Equipping — Operating

Rain insurance for the motion picture theatre is a development that has come with the increasing large investments in the motion picture industry. It is designed to protect the theatre against the worst opposition and that which cannot be avoided — rain.

The plan of rain insurance has been outlined to theatre men before but not in detail. Many have probably heard of it through their fellow merchants who have for some time used rain insurance to protect them against losses during big sales.

There are two distinct classes of Rain Insurance policies: (1) Measure of rainfall and (2) abandonment. Measure of Rainfall policies insure against a definite amount of rainfall (or its equivalent in snowfall) and the company assumes no liability unless the amount of rain specified in the policy is equalled or exceeded within the period covered. Policies are issued against either one-tenth or two-tenths of an inch or more of rain. One-tenth inch policies are more commonly carried, and as a rule, are more satisfactory to the insured. Under certain conditions, however, protection against two-tenths of an inch or more of rain provides necessary protection. The latter has the added advantage of considerably lower cost.

Hours Covered

The period of time during which the policy should be operative is governed largely by the nature of the event. Certain consecutive hours are covered, and these are optional with the insured. The proper period of time to be covered should embrace those hours within which rainfall would most seriously affect the insured's income. Ordinarily, six or eight-hour cover furnishes adequate protection to the insured. However, an event continuing throughout an entire day frequently requires longer coverage. On the other hand, certain events, as, for example, dances, may be adequately protected by a policy effective only four hours. In general, a Rain policy should take effect several hours in advance of the commencement of the event. Similarly, the effective period should end as soon as the income of the event is safe. To illustrate, a policy covering a Fair should not extend until late in the afternoon, as by 2:00 in most cases, the income from admissions has practically all been received. A common period of cover for Fairs is from 8:00 a. m. to 2:00 p. m.

All "measure of rainfall" policies require, as an express condition of validity, that an accurate measure of rainfall be taken with a rain gauge during the hours covered by the policy. The importance of this requirement cannot be overemphasized. It means that a rain gauge must be used. Measurement in any other receptacle is not permissible. Moreover, it means that the record shall begin with the inception of the policy and shall cease with the close of the effective period. A statement of the total rainfall on the day the policy is effective, or of the rainfall within any arbitrary period which does not coincide with the hours named in the policy, is not acceptable. The policy provides that "the insured shall make necessary arrangements for obtaining a rainfall reading at a fixed location." In other words, the responsibility for ascertaining measure of rainfall is placed upon the insured.

Rain Insurance; How It Works

By W. S. VANDERBILT,
Superintendent Rain Insurance Dept.,
Hartford Fire Insurance Co.

Part One

Measurement of Rainfall

The measure of rainfall shall be ascertained by the United States Weather Bureau for a competent and disinterested person, with only one rain gauge, at a fixed location. The location of the rain gauge and the name of the party selected for ascertaining the measure of rainfall shall be designated in the policy, and no record other than that provided for therein will be accepted.

The location of a rain gauge is an important matter, both to the insured and the company. Where there is a local weather observer, it is usually desirable that the measure of rainfall be taken at the point where the official rain gauge is located. When, however, this is at too great a distance from the event, other arrangements may be made, provided the Company is notified and agrees to such arrangements. Under special circumstances such as the above arrangements may be made with the local weather observer to keep the record at an agreed location, or, if no local weather observer is available, a competent, disinterested party may be appointed for this purpose.

What Is One-tenth Inch Rainfall?

In the solicitation of Rain Insurance, we are frequently asked: "How much is one-tenth of an inch of rain?" Technically, one-tenth inch rainfall is a quantity sufficient to cover any flat surface to the depth of one-tenth inch. But this does not fully answer the question. A reasonably heavy shower will well exceed one-tenth of an inch. A sharp thunderstorm is often accompanied by rainfall which will exceed this amount in a few moments. In such storms rain not uncommonly falls at a rate which would exceed one inch per hour. On the other hand, it sometimes requires several hours for one-tenth of an inch of precipitation to accumulate.

An inch of snow is roughly equivalent to one-tenth of an inch of rain. For the purpose of Rain Insurance, snow is measured by its equivalent in rainfall. A "heavy" snowfall when melted will approximate from 10/100 to 25/100 of an inch of rain per hour.

"Abandonment" policies are designed for the protection of events which are subject to abandonment or postponement by reason of rainfall. Their use is confined to such events as baseball games, races and other outdoor events which frequently have to be given up in case of bad weather. Fairs, expositions, dances and football games, for example, are not insurable under "Abandonment" policies, for the reason that rainfall rarely necessitates their abandonment or postponement.

In general, "Abandonment" contracts insure only against the abandonment or postponement of an event by reason of rainfall. In other words, the company assumes no liability unless the subject of insurance is legitimately abandoned or postponed in accordance with the terms of the policy. As a rule, no official measure of rainfall is required. However, in case claim is made under an Abandonment policy, the company insists upon satisfactory proof that rainfall occurred within the period covered. Consequently, an official rainfall record is desirable, if possible to obtain, and is often of considerable service in securing prompt settlement of claims.

Rain Insurance Rates

Rates for Rain Insurance are based upon the statistics of government weather stations. Wide variations in seasonal and annual rainfall have necessitated careful territorial subdivisions for rating purposes. Thus, there may be several groups of counties in a single state, each group having a distinct schedule of rates. Similarly, the well-known monthly and seasonal variations in rainfall result in rate differentiation by monthly periods.

How to Order a Rain Policy

Rain business is written only upon application to the company or departmental office having jurisdiction. The application blank should be employed in all cases, and should be signed by the insured. Care should be exercised to give full information required by the application. Applications should be mailed in ample time to reach the company five days in advance of the first effective date of the policy. For example: an application covering a risk of

The Hytensity Condenser

M. Major who has just placed the "Hytensity Condenser on the market describes it as follows:

"It is a one piece condenser which eliminates spherical and achromatical aberration, thus giving a uniform field of light, also increases the light approximately 50%, and gives sharper definition to the picture, making the objects in the picture stand out much more clearly.

This condenser will stand a greater amount of heat than any made, and is non-breakable, thus eliminating the replacing of condensers continually due to breakage. They can be used in any style lamp or machine, whether high intensity, mazda, or ordinary carbon lamp.

The pitting of a condenser is due to the sputtering of the carbon, and this is kept away from the back of the condenser by a non-pitting device which is one of the patented features of this condenser, thus eliminating the replacing of condensers due to this cause.

Canadian Taxes

Toronto, Can.—A proposed tax increase is as follows:

On tickets up to 25 cents, 2 cents; up to 50 cents (from 26 cents and over), 4 cents; from 51 cents to 75 cents, 7 cents; from one dollar, 10 per cent.

It is argued that this tax is very large coming as it does after a season when business is just picking up after a long depression. The severe winter has worked much hardship to all theatres, the cold and storms keeping many people at home.

NEW GRAVURE PROCESS USED FOR LOBBY CARDS

Universal is introducing a novelty in the form of gold and sepia lobby cards for the Super Jewel attraction "Merry-Go-Around." These are of the regular size, but their reproduction in a new process recently originated in this country and known as "Gold Rotogravure" has already caused considerable comment.

The gold process lends exceptional attraction value. The pictures have the appearance of bronze etchings and due to peculiar light reflecting qualities the contrast between light and shade alters with angle of reflection. These cards are notable for richness of general appearance and the luminous quality of the high lights.

Theatre Construction News

This Department is devoted to theatre building news and publishes the earliest news obtainable concerning projected theatres, schools, etc., where motion picture equipment will be used.

Building Notes

The Civic Corporation will put up a $200,000 theatre at Bethlehem, Pa., and will be called the Rainbow.

The Kurtz $250,000 theatre, at Bethlehem, Pa., will remain open this summer.

Approximately $175,000 is the investment, while West Coast Theatres, Inc. and C. L. Langley Inc. have leased the theatre for fifteen years, will equip it with every modern facility. Orders will be placed for 500 loge chairs and 500 leather cushion chairs, and a $25,000 pipe organ will be installed as well as modern ventilating and heating equipment.

A. E. Fair, director of theatres for the Southern Enterprises, Inc., headquarters Dallas, Texas, attended the opening of the Criterion Theatre at Oklahoma City, Okla., under its new management.

On or about September 1st, F. G. Roberts, Wewoka, Oklahoma, will open his second theatre on Main street, approximate cost of which is in the neighborhood of $18,500.

LOEW INTERESTS MAY GET STATE THEATRE

Albany.—There is a persistent rumor to the effect that the Loew interests will shortly acquire the beautiful State theatre, in Schenectady, N. Y., which passed into the hands of a receiver two weeks ago. The house cost over $500,000, and is the largest in this section of the state. It is now being operated by the receivers.

The Bareli, also in Schenectady, owned and operated by John J. Walker, may change hands within the next few days. It is said that the prospective new owner is a resident of New York City.

Fox Returns Theatre

Lynbrook, L. I.—Wm. Fox returned the Lynbrook theatre to its owners, the management having failed to agree with the stockholders. The owner of the Hempstead theatre will operate the Lynbrook on sharing terms with the stockholders.

Richard Rowland and William Brandt Discuss Production Absorption

Mr. Rowland Thinks We Are Likely to Lose Our Perspective on Negative Cost

By RICHARD A. ROWLAND

MR. PEARSON'S estimate of the sum being spent this year on negative costs. I am inclined to think, may be approximately correct. Conceding that it is, it means that the company the product of which does not measure up to average standard is out of luck. If there should prove to be a high average all down the line and if in spite of this quality it finally develops the theatres can't pay these sums then there is bound to be a reaction on negative cost.

If pictures are produced at prices higher than the market can stand then they are going to come back on the producer. It's a simple question, whether the market can pay the negative cost plus expense of prints and distribution and of returning a profit.

The production of motion pictures means the making of an article where you don't know in advance the cost or how good it is going to be or how much it is going to sell for. The element of gamble is present, how tremendous a gamble no one can tell until he learns that the picture through quality and box office test justifies the price paid.

Losing Perspective on Negative Cost

It seems to me that we are liable to lose our perspective on the negative cost situation. To spend an exorbitant amount of money on just a good story is a fallacy in the beginning. I think a story should have spent on it what is necessary to give it a hundred per cent entertainment value.

If a story will stand having a half million dollars spent on it go ahead and put out the money, but don't expend that amount on a $150,000 article. It is impossible for the market to absorb it. That is why it is necessary for a producer to be careful what he spends so that he may get an adequate return.

If the price is exorbitant it results in cancellation regardless of what price has been set. When you start to sell pictures on a year's schedule you have got to get down to a level where the exhibitor can make a profit.

The Continuity Is the Basis

Yes, I believe the efforts to make good pictures this year are greater than ever before, but whether the results will be sufficient to warrant that additional expenditure is a question.

The weakness in production, it seems to Richard A. Rowland, general manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has served a long apprenticeship in the fields of exhibition, production and distribution. There are few men whose combined experience in the three departments will match his. Mr. Rowland was asked to give his views on the significance of the remark of Elmer Pearson, vice president and general manager of Pathe, uttered last week on his return from Los Angeles, that the sum expended this year on production would equal the amount returned in rentals in any preceding twelvemonth.

me, is in the continuity department. It is upon the treatment given there plus the interpretation of the director that depends the success of the picture.

When you want to spend a large amount of money on a picture it is essential that there be a logical reason for it. We go on the theory that you are selling the public entertainment, and if a hundred or a hundred-thousand-dollar pictures that didn't go over as well.

You have got to have entertainment value and you must spend just as much as it is necessary obviously to obtain that. To try to force a pretentious production out of an ordinary production is wrong.

To spend a lot of money on the spectacular and less on the story is another fallacy. The story is the thing, and you have got to stick to the story and not get away from it.

Increased Admissions Is the Big Question

The big question is as to the theatre's chance to get more money from its patrons. One of the big circuits is going to raise admission prices. The theatre has got to stand some of the burden, otherwise the producer will go broke.

It is true there is a tendency throughout the industry to spend money. We have got to be careful that the story warrants the big expenditure, because if you get back the proportionate entertainment value the amount expended means nothing. We would sooner make half-million-dollar pictures if we could get the stories. The whole question is story, treatment and direction.

The public is more and more critical and analytical today and is going to demand better pictures. We have got to develop more craftsmen in the way of continuity writers and directors—especially of continuity writers who can get out of a story every bit of entertainment value there is in it.

All Is Not Waste That Looks Like It

Let us take the subject of waste which you mentioned. There are so many elements entering into the production of pictures that it is hard to draw the line of demarkation as to just where waste starts. An average layman goes into a studio and may see a director not do a stroke of work for hours, with the company loafing around, and thinks it is waste and will go out and tell the world of the sums being thrown away. It is not waste necessarily.

That director may be working out a new idea that has occurred to him in the course of the making of the picture, and he knows that if he can get it framed the way he wants it he has got something that will be worth a week's overhead.

Why, if the director had nothing to do but grind that camera he could make a feature in a week. It involves a great deal of time for a director to think out how best he may shoot a certain scene. I condred and fifty thousand dollar picture is the entertainment the public wants then it is satisfied.

The idea that you have got to spend a lot of money to hold public attention is wrong, unless the entertainment value is there when you start. Take "Penrod and Sam"—that has gone over big, yet it was not an expensive picture. I could cite three-hunbest he may shoot a certain scene. I confess there is more or less waste in a picture. There has always got to be. The man who can point out where it stops or starts does not exist. But preparedness of continuity is one of the things that will eliminate genuine waste.

Would Split Production Between East and West

I believe the time will come when directors will make only two pictures a year. The matter of estimating the amount that should go into cost of production is not so great a problem if the story is right—and surrounding and controlling circumstances are normal. Of course, there are weather conditions and other handicaps that are apt to come up from time to time that may prove expensive. But waste is more in starting unprepared on the continuity.

One of the great items of expense is the matter of salaries because of the scarcity of artists, directors and artisans. If more of the pictures were made in New York it would relieve the situation that exists in California. In other words, if half of the pictures were made in New York we would not have to pay the high prices that prevail in the west. Then again if this were done there would be two fields in which to develop talent instead of but one.

There's another thing on my mind. I'd like to see the larger theatres close down six weeks in the summer time. As it stands now the weaker pictures are being issued and the bigger ones are being held for the fall. The public naturally gets sore. I am speaking generally, not specifically. Whereas, if the larger houses were closed down the public would come back at the end of the period with a rush, with a freshened viewpoint and enthusiasm.

Mr. Brandt Says It Is Physically Impossible to Raise Admission Prices

By WILLIAM BRANDT

IF it be a fact that the producers are expending this year on the making of pictures a sum equaling the largest amount ever taken in in any one year on rentals then I would simply say it is an economic question that must adjust itself. As the situation strikes me it is simply a case of the survival of the fittest among the producers just the same as it has been among the exhibitors.

So far as the theatre owners are concerned I am sure the almost unanimous opinion is that it is a physical impossibility to raise rentals because it is impossible to raise admission prices.

It must be kept in mind that 80 per cent of the theatres seat less than 800 persons and that these houses are mostly in neighborhood and local sections. Of course, on special productions in some cases admission prices can be raised, but the opportunities are not general.

There are many exhibitors who cannot increase their prices in the case of a large production because their patrons will not come around while the figures are up. When you give your people a picture that does not measure up to the standard you don't decrease the price. Consequently when you give them one that is above the average it is manifestly unfair to increase it.

In local sections where the patrons are well acquainted with the proprietor they are not at all slow in telling him what they think of these matters. I had one of my good customers bawl me out for charging extra money on "Robin Hood." He agreed it was a great picture, but he remarked as he passed through the door:

"I notice you charged the regular rates, though, on that piece of cheese I walked out on in the second reel last Tuesday night."

Of course, the way some exhibitors do when they have an expensive picture they happen to know is "the goods"—absorbing

William Brandt, president of the New York State Motion Picture Theatre Owners, in view of the admitted heavy production expenditure, was asked on Monday if in his opinion it would be possible to increase admission prices to enable the producers to obtain a larger return so that they might register a profit. Mr. Brandt is the owner of several houses in Brooklyn and is in close touch with exhibitor sentiment.

the difference in price and averaging it on the year—stops this sort of adverse criticism and is really fair to the customer. It's tough on the week's profits, but I guess it comes out in the wash.

I'd just like to take this opportunity to remark that the exhibitor did big things before the producer did. He built big theatres before the producer made his productions—I mean as a general rule. The largest and most imposing structure in the small town is more likely to be the motion picture theatre than it is the city hall.

Coming back to these heavy expenditures for pictures, due of course to the anxiety of the producers to make genuine box office attractions. We want them, just as badly as our patrons do, but isn't there some way in which we can get the same general results without the high average cost?

The expensive picture is not always a box office magnet and the inexpensive picture sometimes is—although in the latter case I think my exchange friends will agree with me when I say we have to come across "right" in order to book them. But the fact that these are turned out shows it can be done. And I concede that every company is entitled to blow itself on a big one occasionally.

The great trouble from our viewpoint is that the exhibitor is paying higher and higher sums for everything that goes to make his program and to put it on, but unlike other business men he is debarred from passing on that increased cost to his customer. Film rentals have been going up every year, until now the peak has been reached for most exhibitors and in many places they are paying rentals that are too high to permit them obtaining a proper profit. In some cases the margin of profit has been wiped out.

If we don't bring about the repeal of the admission taxes we will under these rising costs for salaries and supplies—the unions now are clamoring for more money—be forced to try the experiment of passing it on to our customers, knowing the result will be disastrous to attendance. I will say, however, if the expenditure for salaries and supplies and everything else had been increased in proportion to that of rentals it would be impossible to do business.

I am coming right back to where I started—if we can't raise admission prices how can the distributor increase rentals?

William Brandt

Elmer Pearson Talks on Problems to Advertising Men

Elmer Pearson, vice president and general manager of Pathe, addressed the members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their weekly luncheon July 19. He reiterated and in greater detail what he had said earlier in the week on his return from the coast regarding the production situation there, emphasizing his belief that the amount being spent on pictures for the coming year will equal the income from rentals of any preceding twelve-month. Other speakers were Le Roy Ellsworth Grooms and Arthur Levy.

Mr. Levy, secretary of the New York Motion Picture Commission, spoke very briefly, declaring that he feared no man. "While I am not going to slash pictures I am not a rubber stamp," he concluded with emphasis.

"During my recent visit at the coast I looked around to see what was being done at the various studios," said Mr. Pearson. One night I took a pencil and did a little figuring. Amazed at the result, I re-canvassed the situation so that I might better determine how it compared with preceding years. I found that pretty nearly everywhere the money being spent on production was from 35 to 100 per cent higher than ever before."

Mr. Pearson after making the statement referred to in the first paragraph remarked that there are a great many wonderful pictures in course of preparation. "On the Fairbanks lot I found evidences of coming pictures more spectacular even than 'Robin Hood.' Producers are very sincerely trying

The Second Week

The taxi man is not going to leave me high and dry. He's been getting $3 for every round trip with our film. I cut him down to $1 and agreed to take out the balance in screen advertising. I show a slide for him at every performance. The back balance due will be met monthly. That's that and how these taximen can pester you.

For the second week we are sticking to the old picture policy. During my first week, I may state for the benefit of those who know red ink when they see it, we lost $1,500, which is about the average loss this house has been recording for months. The cutting down of the art work cost is a mere drop in the bucket, but I am proceeding on the theory that every little bit helps.

Before I can do anything toward changing the picture policy I am analyzing the population. This, I find, is the most essential thing I can do toward building up. It was not done by the founders of this theatre and was never attempted by the former manager, nor by any of the other two picture houses which are running along on the safe side of the ledger.

Around about this city are many fashionable summer homes and big estates which is responsible for the society front the city puts on but does not live up to. Out of the 45,000 population, ninety per cent as I have pointed out are salaried men or wage earners. Instead of appealing to that ninety per cent the X Theatre has been trying to reach the ten per cent. And the strange part of this policy is that if all the ten per cent were to patronize the theatre it would lose its shirt. The whole picture policy has been built on this basis at this theatre. The orchestra, costing more than $200 weekly, plus the organ expense of about $100 weekly, was designed to reach the ten per cent.

The soft seats were aimed to catch this small minority. Even locking the front entrance gate was a show of exclusiveness, or aristocracy, when the town was aristocratic only in its outward appearance to the rest of the world.

The ushers wore uniforms; so did the doorman. Art greeted every patron of the theatre when they were not looking for art but entertainment.

A Thousand Unoccupied Seats

The pictures were the best and the highest priced on the market, while the town did not know one star from another. Hard working people are not worshipping stars but looking for entertainment not above their heads.

Here is the daily attendance for a period of fifteen days before I arrived:

752, 289, 899, 597, 185, 426, 427, 283, 374, 453, 291, 403, 834, 294, 382.

The average attendance was about 452 in a house with comfortable seats for 1400 and 45,000 people to draw from. My analysis of these figures in conjunction with the type of programs presented made it plain to me as it would to anyone that the theatre was playing to a small minority in the town.

After that analysis I decided that all film contracts for product that could not make money were off. The theatre corporation couldn't pay a cent on any one of the contracts because it was head over heels in debt and eaten up by judgments so the cancellation of contracts was an act of mercy as well for the producer as the theatre itself. What use was there, I figured, in playing pictures for which the producer could get no money. It was unfair to him and unfair to the house.

The rentals were exorbitant and growing higher every week, much too high for this house. But was that the fault of the producer? Studying the booking operation of the house I found that most booking was done over the telephone. The long distance calls to the exchange center alone amounted to three figures a month. The buying was at fault. No attempts to select suitable pictures and talks over price and explain conditions to the exchange manager were made and for that lack of a rational method the exchanges cannot be held responsible. They are out to get all they can.

Cuts Out Telephone Booking

To immediately remedy this situation I cut out all long distance film booking and decided instead to look over the available product and fit it to my needs.

This rearrangement of picture policy needs study of the closest kind and we are still riding along under the old policy with the exception of telephone booking. That is positively out.

There is one thing more about the picture policy I neglected to mention. I find that in this town pictures have lost their attraction and this is true of other cities of this size I have operated in. They draw the same people over and over again—no new customers. I believe it is because there is not enough novelty, or great enough novelty to attract new people into the theatres.

With this analysis of population conditions and a superficial study of the picture policy of the house partially completed I turned to making more cuts in operating expenses. That is the only way I can hope to make both ends meet immediately.

Cut, cut, cut, and add no new expense, was the slogan I adopted.

At the end of this, the second week, we are running along about the same with the loss around $1,350 and the attendance the same.

I stood in the foyer Saturday night and admired the immaculate uniforms and white gloves of the ushers. They certainly make the house look tip top.

"Where am I going to make the next cut?" I asked myself. "It's got to be a big one."

ROMANCE THE REAL MAGNET, SAYS DIRECTOR LLOYD

By FRANK LLOYD

... Directing First National Pictures

IT doesn't make a bit of difference to me whether it's a story with three characters or three hundred, whether it requires elaborate, expensive settings or is laid in the primitive backwoods. Those things are incidental. But my stories must have romance. They must fairly tingle with the pulsations of human emotions. They must be vital, beautiful, vivid. They must live.

During the past several years I have had numerous opportunities to produce all of which I ignored that I might remain in the directorial chair until the psychological moment arrived to take the next step forward.

Now I have decided to take that step and it is gratifying to know that I have become part of an organization which stands in the fore as an ideal distributing agency. With such an organization working with me I cannot help but put every ounce of effort into my own production that they may be of the finest type and worthy of a high standard already set.

For five years I have been looking forward to the day when I would begin my own productions, and for five years I have been seeking the story that would be my ideal. So far it has eluded me, but now a vehicle is forthcoming.

You see, my idea is simply that romance is the essential factor of successful pictures. There is little enough romance in real life. We might build a marvelously beautiful picture and the artist would acclaim it with delight. We might build a tensely dramatic picture and the psychologists would be swept away.

But if the picture lacked romance, it could not be ideal. It has been said that romance is dead in this modern day. I do not believe that is true. I feel in my heart that romance lives in the breasts of modern humanity, just as truly as it lived in the colorful days of chivalry. If we could peer into the hearts of the average married people who have reached middle age, we would find the spark of romance just as truly as it flames in the hearts of young folk. And the middle-age spark burns always, waiting only to be fanned into responsive flame by a picture that deals with romance.

And so I hope to be able, through the combination of romance with the other essentials of life and of pictures, to build really big pictures—not big, especially, in the sense of expensive, elaborate; but big in their general charm and appeal. I humbly believe I will be able to touch the keynote of response in the hearts of the theatregoers. At least I will try.

"If I Were An Exhibitor and Wanted to Build High School Patronage"

The Editors invited a number of high powered exploiters to suggest ideas and methods for going after more business from high school students, who, according to a recent survey, are not steady patrons of motion pictures.

VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

Exploitation Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

In a recent editorial you ask, "How can high school students be attracted to motion picture theatres?"

Applied showmanship and distinctive exploitation will do it.

Take the average high school student. Analyze him or her. Age 13 to 19.

SCHOOL INTEREST:—(1) Athletics. (2) Sex. (3) Dress. (4) Progress in school. (5) Decision of a career.

OUTSIDE INTEREST:—(1) "Having fun." (2) The play impulse. (3) Freedom. (4) Novelty. (5) Adventure, romance and thrills.

Sugar-coating the appeal in the language of these interests has proved practical and successful in drawing high school students.

For instance: When the Strand Theatre, Emporia, Kansas, played "Nanook of the North," they first tied up the High School Faculty, the Grade Teachers' Club and the High School Athletic Association. Practically every teacher served as an advance ticket seller for the "Nanook" engagement. All the school bulletin boards were posted with placards as follows:

"The High School Faculty Club and the Grade Teachers' Club are needing money to finance various projects for you. We have a very favorable contract with the Strand, provided we will get back of the canvass for the sale of tickets, and go after it. If we work, Mr. McClure will guarantee us a minimum of $100. for our share. He thinks it ought to be more. Our share to be divided between the two clubs in proportion to the amount of money turned in for the sale of tickets."

Following this announcement the school teachers placed their official endorsement on "Nanook" in ballyhoo language.

"Unlike anything you ever saw, taken in a country where no motion picture camera ever went before, a land where zero is warm most of the year, far to the North where the screech of locomotive is never heard but where it is just one thrill after another. A human gripping picture, replete with dramatic situations and surprises, a masterly presentation of life, love, and the unending struggle in the icy wastes of the actual arctic."

The keynote of the appeal was novelty, adventure, romance. The newspapers picked up the publicity slant for the Athletic Association.

RESULT—Overflowing audiences. Good will of high school students toward theatre, and money for the Faculty Clubs and Athletic Associations.

The practical suggestion in exploiting any picture to high school students is to have the teachers first see, then indorse the attraction, painting their approval not in language that means instruction, rather in language that visualizes entertainment. Follow up by ads, mailing pieces and novelties can tie up the campaign.

Pathe News and Pathe Review offers another example where exhibitors have made profitable tie-ups. Postal cards mailed to all the high school teachers acquainting them with the items in the reels, have succeeded in having these teachers read the items to their classes in "Current Events," and science.

Subjects of national historical value, of local interest appeal, as the Cyclone of 1913 in Kansas, are particularly well adapted for high school exploitation.

Short comedies can be exploited by simply exploiting laughter. Feature comedies afford the opportunity to use the prize winning poem contest such as the Astor Theatre of Minneapolis put across in exploiting "Safety Last."

In fact showmanship can be applied with the same distinctive touches, ingenuity and resourcefulness to the high schools as is applied in attracting the general public. The appeal may be more direct and specific, the tie-up more deft, but results of a permanent nature will accrue, by hammering along the lines of the qualities that interest in school and out.

By WALTER F. EBERHARDT

Publicity Dept. Associated First National

YOUR question is a general one and I assume that you want a general answer, rather than one directed at individual locations or pictures that have a peculiar school exploitation value.

The first thing for the exhibitor to do who wants to curry high school patronage is to dig down in the ground and find out just what high school students prefer. Let him forget that the Sage Foundation has conducted a nationwide investigation on this subject and find out for himself just what high school boys and girls want in the territory he serves. Find out the particular type of picture and the stars that they prefer. Let him make a special week running attractions that represent the plurality vote on each question and direct his advertising and exploitation for this week at the schools especially. Let him continue the high school patronage and make his theatre the recognized amusement center for school students by repeating the event at intervals of every four or six months.

If he wants high school patronage to become a part of his theatre reciprocity demands that he make his theatre an integral part of high school life.

In our experiences at First National we have had an illuminating insight into the benefits that can be reaped from such a policy in the case of Manager Belger at Bluffton, Ind. This manager keeps an up-to-date record of the high school calendar. When a big athletic event takes place the theatre is appropriately decorated and the high school boys rightly regard it as their evening.

A watchful eye is kept for any pictures that can harmonize with the school curriculum. Such titles as "Lorna Doone," "Oliver Twist" and "Vanity Fair" have a ready tie-up value with English classes, and are duly exploited in the schools.

So strongly has Manager Belger established himself with the high school students that whenever they want to stage a benefit they go to his theatre to hold it. This was done recently in the raising of funds for the athletic teams. The school got its quota but it drew enough extra attendance to more than make up the difference to the theatre.

Such things—working right in with the student body—build up school attendance for a theatre and make it the recognized center for them when they want film entertainment.

The students may be the target but it should be equally important to remember that teachers and parents play an important part in influencing student life. A little attention invested in these factors may draw big dividends; and this can be secured best by making teachers and parents guests at a special showing when some appropriate attraction offers.

We have still to hear of a theatre that sends letters of congratulations to a freshman just entering high school and calling attention to the theatre's desire to lighten life by entertainment and perhaps coordinate them by educational offerings. We have still to hear of a theatre that writes graduating students a letter trusting that in the after walks of business life they continue to find pleasure and pastime at that theatre. As a parting thought this would seem a suggestion that is both profitable and adaptable.

Essay Contests.—Essay or composition based on the picture or some incident. Suitable prizes awarded. The essay should be on a topic that will create interest among the students, one that will cause some little research work, and for which their efforts will be rewarded. This contest should be worked through a daily newspaper which will play it up strong. Three or more valuable prizes and ten, a dozen or more (as the contest warrants) pairs of tickets as additional prizes.

Personal Contact with students. Interest the superintendent of schools in certain features (educational, travel, etc.). Through him interest the various principals and have them give a brief talk to the various classes. Or, an exploitation man, or the theatre manager, might arrange with the superintendent of schools whereby he (the manager or exploitation man) could personally call the attention of the students to the outstanding features of any certain production.

THE FRENCH DOLL

A new photoplay done in the typical and popular mood of the star, Mae Murray, whom Robert Z. Leonard presents. It will be one of the early releases on the new Metro Pictures program for the Fall.

James R. Grainger, General Manager of Sales, and Erich Von Stroheim famed director, talk it over on the Goldwyn lot during Mr. Grainger's recent visit to the Coast.

Elmer Pearson, Pathe chief executive, is another who recently looked things over at the Studios in California. He posed as above shown at the Hal Roach studios with John Ragland, Harold Lloyd's Eastern representative, and W. R. Fraser, general manager for Lloyd.

Guy Bates Post, star of "Gold Madness," who will travel extensively in connection with the presentation of the Principal Pictures offering.

The South American Diplomatic representatives who attended the Motion Picture Exposition were entertained in a big cabaret set at the Christie studios, and everything was realistic.

The first Independent Exchange Men's convention was staged in Chicago on July 15. Distributors of Warner Brothers product turned out in force and made the event an historic one.

Netta Westcott, English stage star, arrives at the California centre of picture activities to assume a role in a Preferred picture. She was greeted by Director Gasnier; Olga Printzlau, Al Lichtman and Eve Unsell.

E. A. Eschmann who has assumed his duties as General Manager of Distribution of Associated First National Pictures.

Production and Absorption

WE present to our readers today the views on a subject of paramount importance of two men representative of and in their branches of the industry. Richard A. Rowland speaks of the problems of the producer and distributor and William Brandt talks of some of the conditions confronting the exhibitor.

Of both of these men may it be said that not only do they think clearly but that they speak frankly. Each speaks in terms of the whole and without any particular thought of his private enterprise.

Mr. Rowland inclines to the view that Mr. Pearson's estimate of the amount to be expended on production this year is approximately correct. His general conclusion is practically the same as that of Mr. Brandt, that it is quality that will have the call on the part of the exhibitor during the coming year.

Mr. Rowland says the theatre will have to bear some of the burden of the rising costs and Mr. Brandt says admissions cannot be raised. Mr. Rowland points out one way in which the cost of production might be reduced, by dividing the picture making between New York and Los Angeles, thereby lessening the demand on facilities in the latter city.

We have a very tangible idea that the situation is not as serious as at first glance it may seem. Mr. Pearson estimates that the exhibitor receipts on "Robin Hood" will approximate between eight and ten million dollars and that the bookings will yield a profit on the picture to the producer. The announcement is made this week that "The Four Horsemen" is to be withdrawn from the exchanges after September 1, following three years of activity.

In the works are successors of both these box office subjects. The life of a great production does not end within a year. That negative is an investment which returns interest over a series of years. So while it may be true that producers are expending unprecedented sums on the making of pictures it seems to us there is better than a fighting chance that in a rapidly growing country and an expanding amusement field a profit will be returned on their ordinarily judicious outlay of money.

It's an Even Twenty Now

THE Motion Picture Producers and Distributors admitted its twentieth member during the past week. Preferred Pictures, more familiarly known until recently as the Al Lichtman Corporation, is the firm which has added its influence to that of the nineteen other companies already behind Will H. Hays. The association of which Mr. Hays is president and the newest recruit have each been in business about the same time, something over a year, and it may be said that both are lusty infants.

In the public service that it has contributed to the nation as well as to the industry the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors has amply justified its organization. Its continued growth demonstrates the recognition within the industry of its possibilities for usefulness and of the determination to extend its influence.

Frank Tilley's Impressions

WE haven't quite recovered from our surprise at the outburst of Frank Tilley at the dinner given last week at the Ritz-Carlton by J. D. Williams in honor of Valentino. Some of the things said by the editor of the Kinematograph Weekly are reported a couple of pages further on in this number. One of our esteemed confreres remarked since the dinner, as he may very likely this week say in print, that he thought it unfair to print sentences separated from the surrounding text. Of course it is, but it is the way of the world and of newspaper writers particularly. It is the obvious thing that interest-compelling remarks will receive attention—and that not much else will.

Mr. Tilley said in opening something to the effect that it seemed to be the established custom for an Englishman on his first visit to indulge in criticism. He proceeded to swing a rather heavy bludgeon.

We like Frank Tilley—a lot—and we respect him. A man at the head of a journal such as that over which he presides is entitled to respect. But we disagree with his major conclusions, absolutely. What we see with our own eyes satisfies us that pictures are getting better, in the choice of stories and in their treatment and interpretation. As regards waste it will be always with us in some degree, and so, too, will other evils. We decline, however, to take these things overseriously, being sure that there are forces within the industry actively at work tending toward their gradual strangulation.

Charles Dickens, likewise an Englishman and a writer, visited the United States in 1842 and on his return home wrote some rather caustic things. In 1868, at the conclusion of his second visit, before the New York Press Club he uttered and caused to be included in his American Notes remarks that by many were construed as a disavowal of his first impressions. We hope Mr. Tilley will not delay his second visit until 1949, because we want to be sure to be present when again he addresses a group of Americans on their home ground.

Editor and Editorial Policies

MR. GEORGE BLAISDELL has been promoted to the position of Editor of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW. He needs no introduction to the motion picture industry. He has been in it and of it since 1911; first with the Motion Picture News, later with the Moving Picture World, and with this publication since the early part of 1922. Mr. Blaisdell has written a history of the motion picture industry on the Pacific Coast, is a journalist of high repute, a writer and reviewer of rare excellence, a speaker of parts, and, which is more, as Kipling puts it, he's a man.

* * * * *

I HOLD it to be true that, first above all, a motion picture business paper should be without obligation to anyone, particularly to anyone in the field it covers. This is an indispensable prerequisite to the making of an independent, honest, and really helpful business journal. We are in that happy position.

Then the motion picture business paper should be a militant partisan of all that is good in its industry;

It should offer criticism not in a spirit of malice or faultfinding, but, rather, constructively and in a spirit of genuine helpfulness;

It should try always to point the way of progress;

It should take leadership in advancing a just and an essential cause;

It should strive to win and hold the confidence of every branch of the industry, knowing that where interests appear to conflict there must somewhere be a right solution, and that in truth and in fact interests within an industry are mutual rather than in conflict—for example, how shall it profit the producer and distributor, or either, to demand of the exhibitor that which makes exhibiting no longer profitable; or what shall it profit the exhibitor to offer so little that presently there will be neither profit in producing nor distributing;

It should remember to build steadily and wisely and as rapidly as may be consistent with permanence;

It should realize that the United States is a great country and see to it that the range of its vision is not confined to the journal's place of publication;

In short, it should make the best publication for the industry it serves that it can possibly create, and to that end invite and secure co-operation of every factor in the industry.

* * * * *

MR. BLAISDELL is heartily in accord with the policies outlined above, and I am convinced of his ability to carry them out. It is with my fullest confidence, therefore, that the editorial department of the EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW is placed in his charge.

GEORGE C. WILLIAMS.

SO Louis Mayer is going to take a company from Los Angeles to New England to make a New England story. The gods be praised that once again the unexpected will happen, that we will not be forced to imagine pepper trees are really old elms. Famous Players transported a company to Salem for the making of exteriors for "Java Head," which must have brought joy to the souls of transplanted New Englanders all over the world. Of course it is not the unusual thing to carry a company or part of it to Los Angeles for the making of a tale with a Northern Atlantic locale; it is consequently all the more refreshing and encouraging when we see the course of motion picture empire moving in the right direction of the compass.

Mr. Mayer, it may be said, is a Yankee, and once a Yankee—you know the rest. He is a bean eater, in other words hailing from that town admitted by the intellectuals, the immortals, of an earlier period to be the Hub of the Universe. He is a Bostonian, to be specific, and when it came to preparing screen material for the play of "Cape Cod Folks" he just naturally felt the neighborhood of Cape Cod was the place to make it.

According to an announcement sent out by the Mayer company a nucleus of the organization has arrived in New York and shortly will proceed to Gloucester, Mass., to prepare for making the picture. The title, it is said, of the completed production will be "Women Who Wait." Bernard McConville is preparing the script, which Reginald Barker will interpret.

If Mr. McConville by any chance has not completed or closed his story by the time he arrives in Gloucester he will find ready to his hand a wealth of material, human and dramatic, which he will find valuable. Rudyard Kipling in "Captains Courageous," written after a deep sea trip on a fishing schooner, scratched the surface. It is Mr. Mayer's intention to portray among other things a storm at sea. He'll get it, and probably will not have to wait a long time for an example that will satisfy the most exacting producer.

IT'S a picturesque place, that town of Gloucester. We know, for we lived there a year and worked on a newspaper, a daily. It was, to be truthful, not exactly a metropolitan proposition. Five girls set the text matter, and yours truly, just arrived at the mature age of seventeen years, put into type such heaven-sent ads as may have appeared, as well as the display and other heads; sawed several yards each day of most illuminating "boiler plate" and made up the four pages; and when the youthful "pressman" was dismissed or quit added to his duties those of building a fire under a boiler of which in the beginning he knew a little less than nothing and also the printing of the edition on the archaic single-cylinder press. Outside of that he found time to "try and get" his "salary."

But it's a great town, rich in drama and tragedy, and in comedy, too. For in a community that every year sends away to the fishing grounds over a hundred of its best sons that never return there is bound to be gayety ashore when these fatalistic seamen cut loose and spend the hard-earned winnings of a successful trip—or at any rate that is the way it went in the old days.

We are sure Mr. Barker will bring back a picture that will add to his fame and to that of Mr. Mayer. We wish them the best of luck, even if we may be permitted to envy them just a bit in the making of this picture.

IN his Sunday photoplay department of the New York Times, Frederick Mordaunt Hall prints a dispatch from Rupert Julian in which the director in response to a request of the paper tells of his connection with the making of "Merry Go Round." There has been discussion in the trade as to how praise for the successful production should be apportioned, it having been known that Mr. Von Stroheim began the work and that Mr. Julian completed it. So far as this writer has observed Mr. Von Stroheim has made no statement regarding the mild controversy.

Mr. Julian says that "I do not wish you to think I am forcing my way into a controversy," stating that he is writing because the information was asked for. He says that Mr. Von Stroheim started the production August 25, 1922, and that he was placed in charge October 7, without any opportunity for preparation. He adds that he retained the staff and most of the cast, consequently "facing various degrees of antagonism."

"The original script of Von Stroheim's totaled over 1,500 scenes," writes Mr. Julian. "When I was placed in charge Von Stroheim had shot 271 scenes, using 83,000 feet of film at a cost of $220,000." He explains that in addition to the matter of excessive footage the censorship question would have been a serious one of the original script were followed, so he discarded the latter. After several weeks' work, he says, he called in Harvey Gates to collaborate with him on the story he had in mind, and that the love tale as presented in the completed production "is absolutely original."

Mr. Julian says the picture as it stands, with the exception of approximately 600 feet, was directed by him and that the subject was completed January 8 of the present year at an additional cost of $170,000.

LOU MARENGELLA, one of the industry's bright and ambitious younger publicity writers, leaves us for the west coast early in August. Mr. Marengella joined the Warners' publicity department two years ago and has been a part as well as a witness of that organization's remarkable expansion in that period. He is being transferred to the Warners' west coast studios as director of publicity at that point, and it may be set down as guaranteed he will send home the stuff that is wanted. Not only does he know how to dig it up but how to present it—in the fashion that delights the heart of a copy reader, if that maligned individual may be said to possess such an organ.

It is employing no idle phrase to say we are sorry Lou is going away, but we wish him the best of success in the pursuit of the wider opportunities he will find and make in the west coast department of his aggressive employers.

THAT altogether fine publication "The Kinematograph Weekly" ought to provide some interesting even if startling reading for American motion picture men during the coming weeks. It surely will if it reflects even in a minor way the views Frank Tilley, its forceful editor, expressed at the dinner given last week at the Ritz-Carlton by J. D. Williams in honor of Rodolph Valentino.

Mr. Tilley in opening said it was a very difficult position in which he found himself, that he was a foreigner. He said he had just returned from a most intensive month in Hollywood and declared he was disappointed. He said he had thought the time was coming when we were going to get better pictures, but he believed we were going to get worse pictures.

"Money is being wasted," he went on to the amazement of his now keenly attentive hearers. "Most of the money is being wasted on ordinary politics and corruption. People are not playing in pictures because they are capable."

There are times when even case-hardened recorders have been known to lay aside their pencils and listen in, when the proceedings are too absorbing in their character to bother about routine matters. This was one of those occasions, but we do find at this point on a line by itself the one word "graft."

"I have seen anything up to one hundred thousand dollars," continued the speaker, "spent on writing, rewriting and re-rewriting again something which any ten-cent writer could write before breakfast. Why should the public pay for it?"

"The public has got a right to complain about the cost of pictures. The money is going into the pockets of people who are not producing."

Mr. Tilley said the one refreshing thing he had encountered on his visit was what he had heard during the course of the discussions around the table that evening.

The speaker referred to the man who pays 25 cents for his entertainment and asked why a producer should think such a man has less intelligence than the man who makes the picture. "If you can make what a man who pays 25 cents can feel you are making a production worth while," he declared.

Mr. Tilley said the thing that is the matter with the English producers is the matter with the American producers, that they are giving the public what they believe it wants. "If the industry continues to go on making what it believes the public wants then the whole industry is going to pieces in the next five years," he added.

Coming to the question of exhibition, Mr. Tilley declared Samuel Rothafel is the greatest showman in the world, not only in America. He told of the continental countries he had visited and the theatres he had in these places attended, saying: "There is nothing unless it be in Scandinavia that measures up to the Capitol."

The editor's parting shot was: "The whole business is going to collapse in the next five years if things go on as they are."

Mr. Tilley sailed for home July 21.

Loew Houses Require High Standard and New Metro Product Will Meet It

As an exhibitor as well as producer, I am confident that Metro will lead the field during the season of 1923-4 with productions that will build prestige and make money for myself and my fellow exhibitors.

Metro has got to make good pictures. They have got to measure up to the standards that I have set for my own first run houses. If they are built to make money for my own theatres, exhibitors can be assured that these pictures will make money for their theatres.

We are all in the business together. That means that we have to work together to realize to its fullest the possibilities of the business. We have been building on the sound foundation of Metro productions. They have made money for me and for other exhibitors. They are going to make more money for all of us in the coming season.

We all know what Metro accomplished last year. With hardly an exception, every picture lived up to our claims and many productions exceeded our most enthusiastic expectations.

Metro has given exhibitors what they want and our current plans provide for productions that will exceed even those of previous seasons.

I expect that the Rex Ingram production of "Scaramouche" will be the most important picture of the year. We are spending a fortune in an effort to excel "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," and I believe that in this epic of the French Revolution we will succeed.

Jackie Coogan will start the season with Mary Roberts Rinehart's "Long Live the King!" and we count on it being the youngster's biggest box office triumph. Excellent vehicles have been obtained for all of the stars whose pictures will be released by Metro, and exhibitors can be certain that the series obtained for Mae Murray, for Viola Dana and for Buster Keaton will be of top notch calibre.

In addition there will be special productions with casts made of screen favorites with strong drawing power directed by men of such sterling worth as Fred Niblo, Reginald Barker and Allen Holubar; and six Metro Premier Features that will all be money makers.

As an exhibitor, I realize that there can be no limit on the time, effort and money invested to turn out artistic productions. The Metro producing units, composed of the best people obtainable, have a free rein. We rely upon them to surpass their best efforts this year. The better the picture, the better the box office results.

It is the box office we are aiming at in the long run and I predict Metro will make new records this season in financial returns for itself and for the exhibitors showing Metro pictures.

Marcus Loew, President Metro Pictures

A masterstroke was consummated by Metro when it procured the service of Jackie Coogan. Probably one of the greatest contracts ever handed out in the industry was given by Metro to this starlet. Jackie is now at work on his first Metro picture, "Long Live the King!" under the direction of Victor Schertzinger. One more picture, title as yet unnamed, is set for Jackie, before he goes on to picturize "The Dog of Flanders" by Ouida.

Another brilliant achievement was the addition of Buster Keaton to the roster of Metro stars in the face of spirited competition.

Buster Keaton is making a series of five reel comedy drama features to be presented by Joseph M. Schenck and distributed by Metro. His first, "Three Ages," has already achieved a brilliant triumph in London and is being released simultaneously to many theatres in England. In America "Three Ages" is scheduled for release in September.

Viola Dana is already at work on her second release, "The Social Code." Miss Dana undoubtedly is one of the most successful as well as one of the most beloved of the younger screen comediennees in America.

Three famous names appear in Fred Niblo's production of "Strangers of the Night," Enid Bennett, Matt Moore and Barbara La Marr.

Other groups of noted players appear—James Kirkwood, fresh from his sensational New York stage appearance in "The Fool," Mary Alden and Rosemary Theby appear in "The Eagle's Feather," the Metro special which is now being filmed, under the direction of Edward Sloman, in the Metro Hollywood studios.

Metro Signs Loretta Taylor

New York.—Metro Pictures Corporation announces that after several months of negotiation it has succeeded in signing Loretta Taylor, one of America's most talented actresses, to star in picturizations of two of her famous stage vehicles, "Happiness" and "One Night in Rome," both written by J. Hartley Manners. Plans for production are already under way.

Seven Metros for Ships

New York.—Seven Metro attractions have been selected thus far by the United States Shipping Board for showing on American ships on the high seas, and a number of others will be added to the list within the near future.

Long List of Noted Metro Stars Being Augmented by New Comers

Many of the most noted stars in the industry are now making pictures under the Metro banner, and the list is gradually being augmented to include a wide variety of renowned talent. Besides those who are under immediate contract with Metro, many distinguished names are found in the casts of the various independent productions slated for Metro release.

Rex Ingram, a star director, who reached his greatest development under Metro, has developed several distinguished players who appear in Ingram-Metro pictures. Of these the most famous are Ramon Novarro, Alice Terry and Lewis Stone. This trio of players has appeared either singly or together in Ingram's greatest successes and each has already attained an established fan following. The three are now playing in "Scaramouche," a mammoth picturization of Rafael Sabatini's famous novel of the French revolution, adapted for the screen by Willis Goldbeck, presented by arrangement with Charles L. Wagner.

Mae Murray has started on "Fashion Row." Preceding "The French Doll," now finished, came four marked successes, "Peacock Alley," "Fascination," "Broadway Rose," and "Jazzmania." Several future productions to follow "Fashion Row" have already been projected for Mae Murray. Metro officials have put the entire organization behind the Mae Murray pictures, assuring them highest exploitation.

Advance in Quality Has Been Consistently Steady, Says W. E. Atkinson

EACH Metro year has overshadowed the preceding one by a superior output embracing a greater number of superior pictures," declares W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation. "Each Metro year has seen a larger group of greater and more diversified talents engaged in producing Metro Pictures. We do not point to this as a growth peculiar only to Metro, but such development has been consistent throughout Metro's entire career, and cannot fail but have an effect upon the industry as a whole.

"The season of 1923-4 will undoubtedly be the greatest in Metro history. After all is said and done the picture is the final test. Since, however, all future programs are but promises the present test lies in the stories, directors, stars supporting casts and other personnel and organizations, which have been gathered together to bring contemplated pictures into existence. An examination of the factors proves conclusively that 1923-4 will be the greatest in Metro history and that Metro productions will be a marked unit in the entire industry.

"All other things being equal, good stories, good casts, appropriate settings, etc., probably the single most important unit in motion picture production is the director. A director can either make or break a picture depending upon whether he is competent and suited to his particular task or not.

"'Scaramouche', only half complete at this time, has already aroused the interest of the country because it is being directed by Rex Ingram. Metro has confidently entrusted to him unlimited means to perfect 'Scaramouche' into the greatest of all pictures, greater than Mr. Ingram's monumental and enduring production of 'The Horsemen' and 'The Prisoner of Zenda', among other highly successful pictures.

"Fred Niblo, now engaged on 'Strangers of the Night', is another who needs no introduction to exhibitors and the public. 'Strangers of the Night' is particularly suited to Mr. Niblo's talents, an airy, delightful romance adapted from 'Captain Applejack', one of the recent outstanding success of the Broadway stage, as famous on the English stage as in this country.

"Reginald Barker will make several productions for Metro distribution. He is now finishing up 'The Man Thou Gavest Me', a picture which combines elements at which Mr. Barker is the most practical hand in the entire field of motion picture directors.

"Allen Holubar's name stands among the top-list of all directors. He will make several productions for Metro, and we have no hesitation in saying that they will rank among the great pictures of the coming season.

"Other and equally notable men who are directing or will direct Metro pictures for the coming season are Robert Z. Leonard, who is responsible for all the magnificent Mae Murray pictures; Victor Schertzinger, now directing Jackie Coogan in his first Metro picture, 'Long Live the King!' Harold Shaw, who recently completed 'Rouged

"I anticipate the coming season will be the biggest year that Metro has ever enjoyed. If it is a big year for Metro it naturally follows that it will be a big year for every exhibitor who has the good luck to play Metro pictures."

William E. Atkinson, Metro's General Manager

Lips' with Viola Dana and is directing 'Held to Answer'; Oscar Apfel, now making 'The Social Code' with Miss Dana; Ralph Ince, director of the Williamson Technicolor Special, 'The Uninvited Guest'; and Edward Sroman, film 'The Eagle's Feather.'

"Among the stars appearing in Metro pictures are such well known box office attractions as Mae Murray, Jackie Coogan, Buster Keaton, Viola Dana, Alice Terry, Ramon Novarro, Lewis Stone and others of equal note.

"Now comes another important factor in motion picture production—one that Metro never overlooks. We are living in an era which demands the biggest and best known players in the supporting casts of the stars. In meeting this condition Metro is able to announce a list of supporting players that include many notable names, among them:

"Barbara La Marr, James Kirkwood, Bull Montana, Rod La Rocque, James Morrison, Ward Crane, Earle Williams, Wallace Beery, Eleanor Fair, Adolph Menjou, Renee Adoree,

Metro Salesmen in Midst of Big Drive Hitting Record Pace

With the enthusiasm instilled in them at the recent national sales convention held at the Hotel Astor in New York still at a high pitch, Metro salesmen throughout the country are reported to be chalking up big records with advance sales and bookings on the new 1923-4 product.

The Metro sales forces are in charge of E. M. Saunders, general sales manager in New York, and T. J. Connors, assistant general sales manager.

"The Metro announcement of its forthcoming release schedule," said Mr. Saunders, "has brought forth a demand that is without precedent in my memory. It is only a short time now until September and for the last month the Metro sales force has been combing the field. All of our salesmen were in New York last month for the convention at the Astor where a fever of enthusiasm was generated.

"We are still in the midst of a hot campaign, and there is going to be no letup throughout the season. Mr. Connors and myself are going to visit all of the Metro branch offices throughout the present campaign and see to it that nothing is overlooked because of the almost too easy success that has attended the beginning of our drive.

"Every Metro branch has reported record business, but we have received particularly glowing reports from C. E. Kessnich in Atlanta, E. A. Golden in Boston, W. C. Bachmeyer in Cincinnati, Harry Lustig in Los Angeles and S. A. Shirley in Chicago."

Mae Murray Series Forms Big Unit in Metro Fall Line-Up

The entire series of Mae Murray pictures form a distinct and highly important unit in the Metro Fall program.

At the recent New York convention of the Metro sales organization, plans were outlined for putting the nationwide resources of Metro 100 per cent behind the Murray series, providing extensive exploitation culminating in the widest distribution possible.

Miss Murray, having but recently finished her newest Metro picture, "The French Doll," has already begun the preliminary work on her next production, "Fashion Row," a story especially written for Miss Murray by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins. During the recent visit of Miss Murray and her director-husband, Robert Z. Leonard, to New York several scenes of metropolitan atmosphere were "shot."

"The French Doll" is a notable picturization of a notable Broadway stage success, of the same name, acted here with great verve last season by Irene Bordoni. "The French Doll," written by two young French authors, Paul Armont and Marcel Gerbidon, was a sensational success in Paris where it was seen by Miss Bordoni and brought to this country. It was a play exactly suited for Miss Murray and no time was lost in securing it for her. Frances Marion made the screen adaptation from the English stage adaptation by A. E. Thomas.

"The French Doll," will be released in September. It is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro and is sponsored by Tiffany Productions, of which Mr. Leonard is director-general and M. H. Hoffman, general manager.

Then "Fashion Row" will go into production and this will later be followed by "Mlle. Midnight."

Metro Preparing to Issue Six Premiers In Coming Season

Metro announces six special Premier Feature productions for 1923-24, to be presented with all-star casts.

The first will be "The Eagle's Feather," an adaptation of Katherine Newlin Burt's thrilling story of a woman ranch owner that created a sensation when it appeared in "The Cosmopolitan." A stampede of 4,000 cattle is among the big scenes in this exciting picture of the outdoors, in which a vital drama is disclosed with an originality that puts the picture in a class by itself, James Kirkwood will be seen as the gentleman adventurer.

"Held to Answer," by Peter Clark MacMarlane, features House Peters, and includes Grace Carlyle, John Sainpolis, Evelyn Brent, James Morrison, Lydia Knott, Bull Montana, Gale Henry, Thomas Guyse, Robert Daly, Charles West and J. J. Hughes. It will be directed by Harold Shaw.

The Louis Burston production of "Desire," an original story by John B. Clymer and Henry S. Symonds, directed by Rowland V. Lee will follow. The cast includes Marguerite De La Motte, John Bowers, Estelle Taylor, David Butler, Walter Long, Lucille Hutton, Edward Connelly, Noah Beery, Ralph Lewis, Russell Simpson, Hank Mann, Chester Conklin, Vera Lewis, Nick Cogley, Sylvia Ashton and Frank Currier.

"The Living Past," adapted from William J. Locke's novel, "The Tale of Triona," will be the fourth. The cast and director have yet to be selected. The story itself was one of the literary successes of the year.

"The Book of Fate," and "Borrowed Plumage" will complete the Premier Feature list. Details of these productions will be announced later.

Many Famous Names In Metro Authors' List for Next Year

Some of the most distinguished writers of the day are represented in Metro's announcement of its new pictures for the season of 1923-4.

The biggest picture of them all will be the Rex Ingram production of "Scaramouche," the historical romance of the French Revolution by Rafael Sabatini. Sabatini was born in Central Italy in 1875 of an Italian father and an English mother. He was educated in Switzerland and Portugal, and learned his English from his mother.

Mary Roberts Rinehart is the author of "Long Live the King!" the first Jackie Coogan picture made for Metro. The novel was one of the best sellers of the year and as a picture it makes by far the most powerful vehicle that Jackie Coogan has ever had.

William J. Locke's novel, "The Tale of Triona," will be made into a picture under the title of "The Living Past." Locke has probably had the largest sales in the United States of any living English writer, and the success of "The Tale of Triona," was his greatest since "The Beloved Vagabond."

J. E. D. Meador, Director Advertising, Exploitation and Publicity

Katherine Newlin Burt, whose work is known and loved by all magazine readers, has her strongest story, "The Eagle's Feather," represented in the Metro output. Miss Burt was born in New York. She knows the East and West and both sections meet in her stories with strong realism and intense dramatic force.

Rita Weiman, author of "Footlights" and other stories of the stage, and of "The Acquittal," the dramatic success of several seasons ago, is twice represented in the Metro schedule.

Among the other noted writers on the Metro schedule is Walter Hackett.

Saunders Off on Tour

New York.—E. M. Saunders, general sales manager for Metro Pictures Corporation, left New York several days ago for an extended tour of Metro exchanges. His trip will also embrace several of the key cities in the leading territories for a survey of conditions.

T. J. Connors, assistant to Mr. Saunders, has also left for a tour of exchanges through the South to communicate to Metro's sales personnel the plans formulated in New York for the exploitation of the fall program.

"Barry" Goes to Metro

New York.—R. W. ("Barry") Baremore has resigned his position as director of publicity for C. C. Burr to accept an offer to become assistant to J. E. D. Meador, director of advertising and publicity for Metro.

Metro Proud of Its Great Directing Force

Metro Pictures Corporation believes it has the strongest force of directors ever assembled in the history of the screen.

Rex Ingram alone is enough of a directorial genius to put his company up with the lead, but when in addition to his services a corporation draws for its producing and releasing schedule upon the work of such men as Fred Niblo, Reginald Barker, Victor Schertzinger, Robert Z. Leonard, Edward Sloman, Allen Holubar, Harold Shaw, Ralph Ince, Oscar Apfel, Eddie Cline, Paul Powell, Thomas Heffron and others, it has an array which augurs well for the quality of productions and the profits of exhibitors.

Thirty-three major productions are on the Metro schedule. A picture in the making which is commanding universal attention is the Rex Ingram mammoth production of "Scaramouche," Rafael Sabatini's colorful romance of the French Revolution. "Scaramouche" promises to show advance in the art of the screen. Ingram won national fame with "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse;" with "Scaramouche" it is expected he will go higher. Mr. Ingram has had enormous sets constructed at Hollywood to reproduce the streets of Paris and Rennes during the Reign of Terror, and a village of sixty acres has been reproduced. The picture will be released in January.

Fred Niblo, who started his series of Louis B. Mayer presentations for Metro with "The Famous Mrs. Fair," has "Strangers of the Night" as the second of the series. Mr. Niblo had constructed a fleet of seventeenth century pirate brigs and the filming was done at sea, along a rocky section of the Pacific coast, and at the Mayer studios. After this Mr. Niblo will start on

"Man, Woman and Temptation" and "Thy Name is Woman."

Robert Z. Leonard's picture for Mae Murray will include "The French Doll," "Fashion Row" and "Mademoiselle Midnight." These will be Robert Z. Leonard's presentations through Metro.

Victor Schertzinger is directing Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture "Long Live the King!" a screen version of the novel by Mary Roberts Rinchart.

Reginald Barker is producing "The Man Thou Gavest Me," adapted from G. B. Lancaster's novel, "The Lawbringers." Other Barker productions for the season will be "Pleasure Mad" and "Women Who Wait."

Edward Sloman, producer of "The Ten Dollar Raise," "Pilgrims of the Night," "Shattered Idols," "Backbone" and other successes, has left his own production company to take charge of "The Eagle's Feather" for Metro.

Harold Shaw, one of the pioneers of the screen industry, has come from England to direct Viola Dana in "Rouged Lips" and "In Search of a Thrill." Mr. Shaw is a native of Tennessee, who, after a success on the American stage and on the screen, went to England and became director general for the London Film Company.

Another Viola Dana picture, "The Social Code," is being directed by Oscar Apfel, who has just returned from Europe and written a book on the comparative methods of European and American production.

Allen Holubar has come to Metro to direct "The Human Mill," "Life's Highway" and "Robes of Redemption."

Ralph Ince and a number of other directors are making special productions to be distributed through the Metro organization.

Mae Murray

"The Four Horsemen" to be Withdrawn September 1

New York.—Metro Pictures Corporation announces that the Rex Ingram production of "The Four Horsemen," presented in the winter of 1920 at the Astor Theatre, New York, and subsequently exhibited in almost every theatre in this country and Europe, is to be withdrawn September 1, from the list of current Metro pictures.

"The Four Horsemen," based upon the famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, was a film sensation. It established Rex Ingram, won him a degree from Yale University, and scored an unprecedented success wherever shown.

Confident "Scaramouche" Is Ingram's Best

METRO is confident that the forthcoming Rex Ingram production of "Scaramouche" will be universally acclaimed as the world's greatest photoplay. A fortune is being spent in an effort to excel "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the picture with which Mr. Ingram made screen history, astounding the motion picture world by setting a new standard for lavishness and effectiveness of production.

That standard still remains at the top, but "Scaramouche" is expected to put even the memory of "The Four Horsemen" into eclipse.

"Scaramouche" is founded upon Rafael Sabatini's novel of the French Revolution. When Mr. Ingram first read it he saw flashing before him picture after picture, scene after scene, that fairly cried out for reproduction on the silver sheet. The whole colorful epic of the Reign of Terror was there as a background for a story that told itself in action.

"There are undoubtedly greater stories from a literary point of view," said Mr. Ingram, "but 'Scaramouche,' from the point of view of the screen, is by far the greatest story of them all."

Every producer recognized the wonderful screen possibilities of the story and there was a scramble among them for the picture rights. In obtaining these rights, Metro obtained its greatest opportunity for a supreme motion picture achievement. In the hands of Mr. Ingram, whose genius has been steadily developing since the days of "The Four Horsemen," that opportunity will undoubtedly be realized.

The picture, now in course of production, will have taken nearly a year of unrelenting effort to complete. The preliminary work has included an exhaustive study of historical sources to make the picture absolutely accurate in its historical background. Forty-five persons worked steadily for four months in making the costumes. An army of workmen built a whole French village, the village of Gavrillac in Brittany, on sixty acres of ground at Hollywood. Enormous sets were constructed to reproduce the streets of Paris and Rennes.

More than 10,000 persons will be employed in picturing the Paris mob scenes, which include the attack on the Bastille and the Tuilleries. There are thirty principals.

Alice Terry, who has played the leading feminine roles in the majority of the Ingram productions, will be seen as Aline, the dainty, high spirited aristocrat who falls in love with Scaramouche, which is a stock name for one of the characters in a company of strolling players.

Ramon Novarro, who made such a stirring success as Rupert of Hentzau in "The Prisoner of Zenda," and in "Trifling Women" and "Where the Pavement Ends," will have the title role, one of the richest parts that ever fell to a screen player, Scaramouche, "born with the gift of laughter and a conviction that the world was mad."

Lewis Stone, the Rudolf Rassendyl of "The Prisoner of Zenda," is cast as the suave Marquis de la Tour d'Azyr, the distinguished and fascinating representative of the old regime.

Others in the cast include Edith Allen, Lloyd Ingraham, Otto Matiesen, Julia Swayne Gordon, James Marcus, Lydia Yeamans, William Humphrey, J. Edwin Brown, Carrie Clark Ward, Bowditch Turner, George Siegmann, John George, Joe Murphy and Snitz Edwards.

"Scaramouche" will be first shown in the principal cities of the country in legitimate playhouses at advance prices. It will go to the exhibitor with a record of long runs and valuable advertising. The New York release is fixed for next January.

Some idea may be obtained from the unusual amount of material used in the construction of the sets.

scenarioized by Thomas J. Hopkins and directed by Harold Shaw.

The last in September release will be Buster Keaton's first five reel comedy feature, "Three Ages." This picture has already enjoyed a brilliant London reception and within the next few days will be released simultaneously in many English theatres. It was directed by Buster Keaton and Eddie Cline from the story of Jean Havez, Joe Mitchell and Clyde Bruckman. Art direction was in charge of Fred Gabouri. This entire series, presented by Joseph M. Schenk and distributed by Metro, will receive extensive exploitation.

The month of October will see five new productions headed by the Metro Screen Classic "The Eagle's Feather" now in the making in the Metro west coast studios under the direction of Edward Stoman. Second will be Reginald Barker's production, "The Man Thou Gavest Me." It was adapted to the screen by J. G. Hawks and Monte M. Katterjohn.

The first Jackie Coogan features under Metro auspices is Mary Roberts Rinehart's story "Long Live the King." The novel was adapted to the screen by C. Gardner Sullivan and scenarioized by Eve Unsell.

There will also be a second Metro Screen Classic in "Held to Answer," as well as a second Viola Dana picture, "The Social Code," from Rita Weiman's popular story, "To Whom It May Concern."

Four productions will be released during November, three of which will be an Allen Holubar production, a Fred Niblo production and "Pleasure Mad," to be directed by Reginald Barker. There will then be issued a second Buster Keaton five-reeler.

December will show four more Metro releases, "Desire," "Fashion Row," "The Uninvited Guest," and "In Search of a Thrill."

The four January releases will be "Scaramouche," another Metro-Jackie Coogan production, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," and "The Living Past."

February brings three releases, "Life's Highway," "Stormy Hearts," and "The Book of Fate."

March holds four important productions, "Thy Name is Woman," "Women Who Wait," another Rex Ingram production and a Buster Keaton five reel comedy.

April will have "Mademoiselle Midnight," "The Dog of Flanders," "Borrowed Plumage" and "Love and Lies."

May will have the third Allen Holubar production, "Robes of Redemption." It is a special feature planned to bring the releasing season to a close with a sure-fire favorite.

Metro Card of Thirty-Three Pictures Its Greatest Yet

At least a third of the thirty-three major productions scheduled by Metro Pictures Corporation for the 1923-24 season are either already completed or fast nearing completion. Several of the big independent productions set for early Metro release have also been finished and are now being cut and edited for preview form.

In this biggest of all Metro years are included a number of Rex Ingram productions, notably the spectacular drama, "Scaramouche"; Fred Niblo and Reginald Barker picturizations of famous plays and novels with distinguished all-star casts; several Jackie Coogan pictures; three Robert Z. Leonard presentations of Mae Murray in Metro-Tiffany pictures; three of Joseph M. Schenk presentations of Buster Keaton in five-reel feature comedies; six Metro Screen Classics; five Viola Dana pictures; three Allen Holubar productions, one Williamson-Technicolor picture and one Sawyer-Lubin production.

There is also the possibility that other pictures will be added in the next several months when pending negotiations will be completed.

The opening gun will be fired in September with Mae Murray's "The French Doll"; taken from the famous Paris and New York stage success of the same name.

Following this Louis B. Mayer will present through Metro the Fred Niblo production of "Strangers of the Night," based upon the London and New York stage success, "Captain Applejack," written by Walter Hackett. Bess Meredyth prepared the play for the screen.

Next in order to be released will be "Rouged Lips," a Viola Dana picture based upon Rita Weiman's story, "Upstage,"

CHAPLIN'S OWN NEARS COMPLETION

Called a Woman of Paris and Scheduled for Early Release

New York City.—Revealing what the public really wants in the movies, with a little more genuine realism, a little more truth, picturing life a little more as it actually is rather than as the violent sentiment or equally violent sentimentalists depict it, and crammed with big-pulling heart interest appeal, Charlie Chaplin's first dramatic production for the screen is nearing completion and scheduled for early autumn release under the title, "A Woman of Paris," through United Artists Corporation.

In this forthcoming feature the famous comedian of the cinema comes into a new and exceptionally broad phase in the making of motion pictures. "A Woman of Paris" not only is his first serious screen production, but through it Chaplin enters into sweeping competition with all the noted directors, producers and authors, since the story is his own, personally prepared for the screen, he has personally directed the picture and it is his own independent production.

As was to be expected from this genius of the films, Chaplin has not lost a particle of the opportunities afforded him in making "A Woman of Paris" under the conditions noted above, and those experts who have seen portions of the film declare emphatically that he has brought to the screen a new treatment, a new psychology of the photoplay. Mr. Chaplin, these experts contend, knows life as it actually is, for he has lived through so many circumstances of it himself—from the poorest and most bitter up through the various stages of wealth and place to the very top of his chosen work. He knows, they argue, that both heroes and heroines are very human and have their weak points, and that even villains have their white spots.

In "A Woman of Paris" there is no cut and dried romance and plot served out to the public in stereotyped style. Charlie Chaplin rather has gone to the very last word in convincingly showing life as the great majority of human beings here, there and everywhere know it and live it. There is no preaching or outstanding moral in the story or the effects produced, just interesting comment on everyday life presented in a way that hits home hard in the mind and the heart and the everyday experiences of the everyday man or woman. Chaplin treats his characters with a half-sympathetic, half-cynical, but wholly psychological, understanding. He knows what the ordinary character would do in the ordinary circumstances, and sees that his characters do things just that way.

Naturally the story follows certain well-known precedents, but Chaplin nevertheless deals with his characters in a new and quite novel way, creating a thousand little subtleties, little mannerisms and humanisms, which together with the strong element of suspense keeps the spectators guessing right to the end—keeps them wondering what "A Woman of Paris" really is going to be.

LLOYD HAMILTON TO REPLACE AL JOLSON

Lloyd Hamilton, the motion picture comedian, has left Los Angeles for New York, where he will immediately begin production at the D. W. Griffith studios in Mamaroneck, of his first five-reel comedy. The story in which he will appear is to be called "Black and White" and is the same production in which Al Jolson was rehearsing just prior to his sailing for Europe.

EARL HUDSON MAKES FLYING TRIP

New York.—After conferring with Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National, on the details of the 1923-24 production program, Earl J. Hudson, general production manager of First National's own producing units, left New York for Los Angeles July 21. Mr. Hudson's visit was shortened by the high pressure of production activities on the West Coast, which demanded his presence at the United Studios.

Jack Noble will direct Hamilton, and the latter is bringing with him a personal staff including Lloyd Bacon and Hugh Fay, who have been associated with the comedian in several of his recent productions.

Production work is expected to begin immediately. All the sets have been erected and all preliminary plans concluded.

TEN ROAD COMPANIES FOR COVERED WAGON

Ten road companies organized by J. J. McCarthy for the presentation of James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," will be started on tour of the leading cities of the country about August 15. Full orchestras of from twenty to twenty-five pieces are now being selected and assembled, one to accompany each print on tour and the road itineraries for the companies have been laid out for practically the entire season of 1923-24.

Meanwhile, the indefinite runs of the picture in New York, Hollywood, Chicago and Boston show not the slightest sign of ending, and every indication points to the smashing of all long-run engagements in those cities. At the Criterion in New York the picture is now in its nineteenth week of capacity business. Not once have the weekly receipts fallen below $10,000, a record which, according to the Paramount office, has never been equaled in a 650-seat house anywhere in the history of the screen or legitimate stage.

INJUNCTION AGAINST SMALLWOOD COMPANIES

New York.—In response to a petition filed with the Supreme Court by Deputy Attorney General Abraham Rosenthal charging Pyramid Pictures, Inc., and Smallwood & Co., with defrauding the public by the sale of worthless stock and that $2,000,000 in worthless bonds were about to be issued, Justice Nathan Bijur issued an injunction closing both those concerns and ordering Arthur N. Smallwood, president of the two companies, to appear in court July 27 to show cause why the injunction should not be made permanent.

According to Mr. Rosenthal's statement about $600,000 of "syndicate units" were sold to the general public. A separate syndicate, according to the statement, was issued on each production made by Pyramid Pictures and sold by Smallwood & Company. While the holders of a unit were supposed to share in the profits of the particular picture produced by his syndicate, Mr. Rosenthal stated, not one of the six units paid a full share to the public or anything approximating a full share.

Pyramid Pictures, in which, it is charged, $600,000 of stock units and $25,000 of capital stock was sold to the public, had as assets, Mr. Rosenthal said, $25,000 worth of equipment, $38,000 due from pictures produced and a claim for $200,000 from the American Releasing Corporation. He also asserted that plans were afoot to offer a $2,000,000 issue of 8 per cent. gold bonds.

PREFERRED MAKE DEAL WITH LESSER

West Coast Distribution Will Go Through All-Star Exchanges

Hollywood.—Probably the largest exchange deal ever consummated on the Pacific coast was closed this week between All-Star Features Distributor Inc., with offices in Los Angeles and San Francisco, Al Lichtman, president of Preferred Pictures Inc., and Ben Schulberg their producer. By the new arrangement All-Star will receive the entire output of Preferred for the coming year. Fifteen feature productions will be distributed by All-Star to various exhibitors throughout California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands. Before signing the contract, the distributing organization had the assurance of West Coast Theatres Inc. that its houses would play the attractions.

The deal involves $3,000,000 for actual production and $150,000 for distribution cost. Contracts were signed by the Lichtman-Schulberg offices and Louis Hyman and Henry Meyer of All-Star.

THE YANKEE CONSUL IS COMING TO SCREEN

New York.—Douglas MacLean's picturization of "Going Up," the musical comedy from James Montgomery's "The Aviator," which enjoyed a year's run in New York during the war, has led him to select another musical comedy, "The Yankee Consul" for his next screen production for Associated Exhibitors.

This was Raymond Hitchcock's first great musical success in New York. It was written by the late Henry Blossom.

Dr. Alfred G. Robyn, who was associated with S. L. Rothafel both at the Rialto and at the Capitol as feature organist and director of music, has been engaged to adapt the score with its many well remembered tuneful hits to the picture when it is finished.

PHIL MEYER PROMOTED

New York.—W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, announced this week the appointment of Phil Meyer as New York branch sales manager.

Mr. Meyer has had a highly successful career in the sales end of the picture industry. Starting about eight years ago as New York branch manager for the B. S. Moss Film Exchange, he became successively branch manager for Triangle, for Hallmark, and later assistant general manager of the latter organization. Mr. Meyer joined the staff of Associated Exhibitors two years ago and at once took a high place among salesmen in Manhattan territory.

Poor Men's Wives, Gross

New York City.—Although "Rich Men's Wives," the first Preferred Picture, has already established a gross booking record perhaps unequaled for a debutant company, the figures would seem to indicate that "Poor Men's Wives" will pass it, according to an announcement made by Richard Hildreth, auditor for Preferred. Recent bookings on the latter film include, the Grand, Wilmington, N. C.; Rialto, Glens Falls, N. Y.; Leland, Albany, N. Y.; Capitol, Oswego, N. Y.; Strand, Norwich, Conn.; Riviera, Anderson, Ind.; Indiana, Bloomington, Ind.; Commodore, Chicago, Ill.; Lincoln, Kenosha, Wis.; Strand, East Liverpool, Ohio; Colonial, Cambridge, Ohio; Victoria, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Strand, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Craven, Mobile, Ala.; Playhouse, Dover, N. J.; Opera House, New Brunswick, N. J.; Rialto, Wenatchee, Washington; Palace, Baltimore, Md.

Hollywood's Premiere Set for July 29

GOES IN RIVOLI TO BREAK RECORD

*Said to Be Bigger Sensation
Than The Covered Wagon*

New York City.—Paramount's big production, "Hollywood," directed by James Cruze, who produced "The Covered Wagon" and "The Old Homestead" and presenting seventy of the foremost celebrities of the screen world, will have its premier at the Rivoli Theatre Sunday, July 29.

This is the picture that Paramount executives and others who have seen it have pronounced the greatest piece of sheer entertainment ever offered to screen patrons. "Hollywood" boasts the greatest list of film celebrities ever assembled for a single picture. Cecil B. DeMille, Pola Negri, Thos. Meighan, William S. Hart, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Walter Hiers, Leatrice Joy, Jacqueline Logan, Nita Naldi, Betty Compson, Lila Lee, May McAvoy, Theodore Kosloff, Lois Wilson, Mary Astor, Owen Moore, William De Mille, Baby Peggy, Anita Stewart, Bryant Washburn, Jack Pickford, Viola Dana, Anna Q. Nilsson, Hope Hampton, Will Rogers, Ben Turpin, Bull Montana—these are only a few. The others include about everybody in the film Who's Who. Moreover, they are not merely paraded before the camera but each and every one appears logically.

WOULD ELIMINATE UNFAIR PRACTICE

Three Film Boards to Meet in Seattle to Solve Problems.

In an effort to secure the maximum of cooperation between Seattle, Spokane and Portland, territories the Northwest Film Board of Trade set aside Saturday, July 28, for a general meeting which will be held in Seattle. Branch managers will attend the noonday luncheon, while the dinner in the evening will be attended also by assistant managers, salesmen and bookers.

It will be the purpose of this general meeting to acquaint all in attendance with the functioning of the board, and to make new arrangements providing for arbitration committees to handle grievances under the plans of the uniform contract.

Whatever unfair competitive methods may have been employed between rival salesmen it will be endeavored to eliminate, and the salesmen will be imbued with the idea that they are to respect rival contracts and to sell exhibitors the idea of completing both the rival contract and the contract they have to submit.

Speakers have not yet been announced. The committee in charge consists of G. F. Navarre, Fox, chairman; P. A. Lynch, Pathe; L. B. Metzger, F. B. O.; Paul Aust, Select; H. A. Black, Vitagraph; G. P. Endert, Famous Players; Carl Stearn, Metro.

PATHE BOOKING POLICY REMAINS SAME

New York City.—Pathe authorizes the definite statement that its established booking policy will not be affected in any way by its acquirement of new lines of distinctive product. As formerly, all Pathe releases will continue to be separately available to any exhibitor. This means that every subject on the Pathe list, new and old, will continue to be booked independently of any other subject. There are "no strings tied" to any of them, whether one, or several, or the entire list, figures in a given contract.

This statement is made to remove any possible impression on the part of exhibitors that the new comedy output and novelties now in production on the Pacific Coast for Pathe release, which were referred to in a widely published interview with General Manager Elmer Pearson, are exempt from or in any way affect the established Pathe booking policy.

FIGHT NEGATIVE HELD BY COURT

Justice Department Head at Los Angeles Refuses to Give Up Film.

Los Angeles.—Department of Justice agents here state that any exhibitor showing the Dempsey-Gibbons motion pictures, should copies elude the authorities and get into other states, will be held liable to the government as being a party to a Federal violation and subject to heavy fines and a possible jail sentence.

Investigation of the transportation into this city of fight pictures will lead eventually to the grand jury, where indictments charging conspiracy to violate a Federal law will be requested, it was announced by United States Attorney Burke and Leon Bone, head of the local department of Justice.

The motion picture fight negative was seized by Department of Justice agents in the studio of David Horsely at Hollywood, and are still in the department's safe despite the efforts of International News to gain possession of them.

The pictures were taken by an operator of that organization at Shelby, but the identity of the persons guilty of bringing them across the California State line has not been made known. As a conspiracy is supposed to include all those who had a hand in the affair, it is expected numerous indictments will be returned.

C. H. Hubbell, manager here of the International News Reel, went into Superior Court and requested an attachment against the films, alleging he was to have received $5,000 for filming the picture, but had not been paid. A writ of attachment was served on Bone, but he refused to surrender them, asserting that he intended to go into court and request that he be permitted to retain the negative as evidence.

Shortly after the Jefferies-Johnson fight in Reno, Nev., a Federal law was passed making it a misdemeanor to transport fight films interstate.

LEAH BAIRD DRAWING CARD AT THEATRES

Buffalo.—Leah Baird has proved a great drawing card at M. Slotkin's Lafayette Theatre, Buffalo, where she has been making personal appearances in connection with the run of the Associated Exhibitors feature, "Is Divorce a Failure?" Reports say that she has been crowding this big house at every showing, and not only has the picture been well received but its featured player has been accorded a series of hearty receptions.

Miss Baird will continue her personal appearance tour next week, making talks at each showing from the stage of Phil Gleichman's Broadway Strand Theatre. In Chicago, whence she proceeded to Buffalo, she received one of the warmest welcomes of her entire tour. She remained a fortnight in that city, appearing during the first week at the Jones, Linick & Schaeffer Rialto Theatre, and her schedule for the second week called for daily talks in suburban houses.

Miss Baird was guest of honor at a number of social functions in Chicago.

ELMER PEARSON TALKS TO ADVERTISING MEN

to make the best pictures possible. The competition is very keen."

To a question of John Flinn as to the ability of the market to absorb a large percentage of the product of the year Mr. Pearson said he believed it would be done. Answering another inquiry the speaker said he believed on the average there would be increased box office receipts.

"I imagine if we have enough big pictures and admission prices can be raised it will help receipts a great deal," said Mr. Pearson. "Whether it will be enough to take care of the increased cost is problematical. This question is up to the sales and advertising departments as a whole. We will have to look a lot more to the exhibitor's problems and will have to help them. Something has to be done. On the whole pictures are turning out very satisfactory this year."

Answering a question Mr. Pearson expressed his regret that there were so many long term contracts. "I think they are a menace to the industry," he said. "I think all contracts should leave an opening for cancellation. If the producer can make his product good enough he will hold his customers."

"Robin Hood" will make money, "plenty of it," said Mr. Pearson in answer to a question. He added he thought the box office receipts on the production would reach between eight and ten millions, "which ought to yield a profit to both producer and exhibitor, enough for Mr. Fairbanks surely to justify him in making more productions like it."

Speaking generally Mr. Pearson expressed the view that where an exhibitor has done everything in his power after buying at the distributor's price and then in rare instances has lost money then the distributor should make the loss good or at least to such extent as he thinks is fair.

In the course of a discussion as to whether overhead on distribution would be materially reduced if exchange forces were combined Mr. Pearson said he doubted if the saving would be as large as many persons believed. He alluded to the inspection department as an example, saying that combination would not help there, and the same thing would be true in the case of the booking and shipping departments. Referring to rent he said it was only a small portion of the cost, anyway.

ENTERPRISE TAKES GOLDWYN PRODUCT

Southern Combination Signs Up for All New Pictures Next Season.

New York City.—Another big booking contract has just been closed by Goldwyn Cosmopolitan, this time with Southern Enterprises, Inc.

By the terms of the contract the first ten productions released by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan in the fall will be shown in all towns where Southern Enterprises has theatres in the territories supplied by the distributing corporation's exchanges in Atlanta and in Charlotte. This is one of the year's most important bookings in the South as it gives Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan and Distinctive output for the fall complete representation in the Southeastern States. Twenty-eight towns are involved.

The deal was closed for Southern Enterprises, Inc., by Harold Franklin and Oscar Morgan, and for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan by Arthur Lucas, District Manager over the territory concerned, and by Edmund C. Grainger, Manager of the Contract Department.

The contract is unusual in its provision and of great interest to exhibitors generally as it is an indication that the officials of this great southern circuit realize that the quality of the Goldwyn Cosmopolitan product for the coming year is such that film patrons will demand that they have an opportunity to see them.

The productions which are covered by the agreement are "Three Wise Fools," "The Spoilers," "Enemies of Women," "Six Days," "Red Lights," "The Steadfast Heart," "The Magic Skin," "The Day of Faith," and "In the Palace of the King."

The towns in which the ten productions will be shown in Southern Enterprises theatres are:

Anderson, S. C., Anniston, Ala., Asheville, N. C., Atlanta, Ga., Augusta, Ga., Birmingham, Ala., Charlotte, N. C., Chattanooga, Tenn., Columbia, S. C., Columbus, Ga., Savannah, Ga., So. Pittsburg, Tenn., Spartanburg, S. C., Sumter, S. C., Tampa, Fla., Macon, Ga., Memphis, Tenn., Miami, Fla., Montgomery, Ala., St. Petersburg, Fla., Gadsden, Ala., Greenville, S. C., Greenwood, S. C., Jackson, Tenn., Jacksonville, Fla., Johnson City, Tenn., Knoxville, Tenn., Maryville, Tenn.

METRO ISSUES FINE BOOKING CALENDAR

New York.—"Dedicated to the exhibitors of America, with the compliments of Metro Pictures Corporation," is a very attractive book to be issued by Metro. It was prepared under the supervision of John E. D. Meador, director of advertising, publicity and exploitation.

The book contains 110 pages 5¼ by 8 inches finely printed on superior stock and is handsomely bound in red imitation leather. Pages 50 to 102 are devoted to an exhibitor's booking calendar, beginning with the week ending September 1 and running for a year. For each day there are spaces for "feature," "comedy" and "fillers," with blanks for posters—ones, threes, sixes and twenty-fours—and columns with totals spaces for reels, cost of film, cost of advertising and footage.

Following these are eight pages devoted to an index of Metro productions since September 1, 1921, classified by themes with titles, by stars or featured players, and by directors.

The first half of the book, which is printed

HART GOES IN FOR HISTORIC ROLES

Hollywood.—William S. Hart is going in for historic roles in the future, and his return to the screen under his new Lasky, contract will find him doing such parts as "Wild Bill" Hickok, Patrick Henry and others along the same line, all from his pen. It seems that Hart has been busy on stories ever since he left the screen in anticipation of returning. Three scripts written by him are being made into continuity by Albert Shelby LeVino.

His first picture will be "Wild Bill Hickcock," whose fame is sung throughout all the west and such noted persons as Calamity Jane and others of her kind will be introduced.

This will be followed by "The Life of Patrick Henry," Hart having appeared in the character of the famous statesman on the stage. The story is also to be published as a novel. Hart has spent considerable time looking up the traditions and incidents in the life of the liberty spokesman.

in two colors and adorned by many fine half-tones, contains messages from Mr. Loew, Joseph W. Engle and General Manager Atkinson. Then there is a series of spreads descriptive of Metro's productions for 1923-24 and also of Mr. Meador's department.

The publication is a most creditable one and should be a handy article about any well regulated theatre.

LLOYD TO DIRECT BLACK OXEN FEATURE

New York.—Frank Lloyd, who was announced three months ago as a First National director for a series of pictures, has selected the first production which will be made for First National release. It is none other than "Black Oxen," the most sensational novel of the year; the biggest artistic and commercial success of the publishing world, which still stands at the head of the list of best sellers, although eight months have elapsed since its publication.

First National purchased the screen rights of Mrs. Atherton's novel some four months ago, announcing it as a 1923-24 release. Since that time the eyes of the industry have been centered upon First National, awaiting for further news on the production. In placing this valuable story in the hands of Frank Lloyd, First National is marking him as one of the few outstanding directors of the industry. His record as the director of past Norma Talmadge pictures and especially as the sponsor of "Ashes of Vengeance," her latest big special, have established him as a master of the artistic and box office photodrama. His work includes "Oliver Twist," "The Eternal Flame," "The Voice from the Minaret," and "Within the Law."

Green Goddess Premiere

New York City.—"The Green Goddess," famous starring vehicle of George Arliss, will have its world premier in photoplay form at the Sam H. Harris Theatre, New York City, beginning Sunday night, August 12. Mr. Arliss, of course, will play the role of the Rajah in the screen production, which will also serve to bring Alice Joyce back, after an absence of two years. A lease of the theatre for a run has been signed by Arthur S. Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures Corporation, the producers. "The Green Goddess" played to huge success on Broadway for two years, and then toured the country for a third year.

BABY PEGGY NOW A JEWEL STAR

Diminutive Screen Player to Make Feature Debut in Schrock Story

Hollywood.—Universal Pictures announces that Baby Peggy's first Jewel production for them, which has been in the making since May 7th under the direction of King Baggott, is now completed and will soon be released on the list of unusual productions.

The second Universal—Jewel of the little five year old star will soon be started. It will be "Editha's Burglar," the famous story by Frances Hodges Burnett which was made into a widely popular play by Augustus Thomas. While several clever juveniles took the star ring part when it was a dramatic success, never before has a star so young attempted it.

From now on Baby Peggy remains in the rank of big time productions and her two reel comedy days are forever behind her. The little girl, the only child to rank alongside of Jackie Coogan, is not only the youngest star in the world, but she has talent of such an unusual order that none of her pictures have ever "hung fire" and she is regarded as such a sure money maker that a brilliant future is predicted for her.

No money has been spared to make her first big production a success. The story of "Whose Baby Are You?" was written especially by Raymond Schrock, the Universal head of the scenario department for the little girl.

STORY SELECTED FOR YOUNG FAIRBANKS

New York.—After most careful consideration of several subjects proposed for the initial Paramount starring vehicle for Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Jesse L. Lasky announced Friday at Hollywood that he had decided upon Richard Harding Davis' story, "The Grand Cross of the Crescent." Edfrid Bingham is now at work on the scenario.

The picture, work on which will be started July 30 under the direction of Joseph Henaberry, will be released under the title, "Stephen Steps Out." Theodore Roberts will be featured with the thirteen-year-old star and Noah Beery also will have a prominent supporting role.

Mr. Lasky expressed himself as delighted with the story chosen, because of its humor and pathos and its drama centering around the character of a typical American boy.

Miller in Suburbs

Glendale, Calif.—An event of more than passing interest this week was the entrance of Fred Miller, who has been identified with motion pictures in Los Angeles for many years, into the suburban theatre field. On Friday evening Miller and his associates opened the new Gateway Theatre in Glendale, one of the most beautiful houses in this section. It is Egyptian in architecture. A fine Robert Morton organ has been installed, there are big, room loges, comfortable opera chairs, the latest in lighting effects, a crystal glass mirror screen electrically controlled and every device of modern equipment.

Rembusch Rejoins Indiana Theatre Owners

LONG STANDING GRIEVANCE ENDS

Frank Heller Is New President— Body Withdraws From Film Board

Indianapolis.—The Motion Picture Owners of Indiana in annual session here July 18 patched up a grievance of long standing, withdrew from the Film Board of Trade, started a movement that soon will lead to opening headquarters in Indianapolis, had a series of lovefeast speeches and elected officers. The meeting was one of the largest attended in the history of the organization, members being present from cities in every part of the state.

The dove of peace entered in the person of Frank Rembusch, owner of theaters in Indianapolis and in several cities in the state, who has been considered against Sydney Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America, for three years. Rembusch has at times had a large following and he has steadily refused to affiliate with the Indiana organization.

Mutual friends of the body and Rembusch have been interceding to bring about a truce, and on invitation of G. G. Schmidt, retiring president of the state organization, Rembusch attended the meeting. He was met with open arms and responded to appeals for a speech in which he pledged support to the organization. The executive committee was enlarged by one member and Rembusch was elected to this position.

A motion to form an advisory committee to the state president, representing the thirteen congressional districts of the state, was adopted.

Officers were elected as follows: Frank Heller, Kokomo, president; W. C. Katzenbaum, Terre Haute, first vice-president; William Connors, Marion, secretary; O. I. Demaree, Franklin, second vice-president; Chas. Olson, Indianapolis, treasurer.

The board of directors includes Gus G. Schmidt, Indianapolis, chairman; W. H. Brenner, Winchester; G. G. Shauer, Valparaiso; J. R. Steinc, Clinton; Charles Sweeten, Evansville; L. I. Bernstein, Michigan City; A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis.

Ed Bingham of Indianapolis was re-elected national executive committeeman.

REVIVAL WEEK BIG SUCCESS IN TOLEDO

Toledo.—Loew's Valentine, in conjunction with the Toledo News Bee, had a News-Bee Revival Week, showing seven of the most popular pictures of the past. Manager Gerstle reports that the experiment was a big success, from both a box office angle and the fact that it pleased many patrons. The box office receipts held up steadily all week, in the face of hot weather. The pictures shown were "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours Leave," "The Old Homestead," "The Roaring Road," "Back Home and Broke," "The Sheik," "Manslaughter," "Saturday Night."

Moritz With Preferred

New York City.—Allen S. Moritz, for several years manager of the Buffalo Branch of Paramount and one of the most popular men along Film Row, has been appointed Supervisor of New York State, for Preferred Pictures, with headquarters at Buffalo. Mr. Moritz came to Buffalo from Washington three years ago to assume the management of the Paramount branch. He has been president of the Film Board of Trade, and recently celebrated his 31st birthday, with a notable party at Brown's Hotel, Tonawanda. Jim Fater remains as manager of the Buffalo Branch of Preferred Pictures Corporation.

LICHTMAN LOOKS OVER HOLLYWOOD

Hollywood.—Al Lichtman, of Preferred Pictures, is here, and when his visit ends will go to Europe for the purpose of establishing exchanges abroad and looking up several foreign stars. Lichtman says there is a busy year ahead at the Schulberg Studios. New films will include "The Boomerang," directed by Victor Schertzinger with an all-star cast; "The White Man" with Kenneth Harlan directed by Tom Forman; "Maytime" with Gaston Glass and Netta Wescott, the English beauty, directed by Louis Gasnier; "Poison Paradise," Robert W. Service's story of Monte Carlo, also with Miss Wescott, and Frank Craven's "The First Year" directed by Victor Schertzinger.

Lichtman is strong for Hollywood as a production center. He says production here is a year and a half ahead of New York in artistic detail and economic basis.

COAST FILMLAND HELPS EXPOSITION

Novel Electrical Display Gives Big Sendoff to Industry's Pageant.

Los Angeles.—Filmland turned out en masse last Monday night and gave this city one of the most novel electrical pageants that ever has been staged anywhere. Every big company was represented in a night parade that drew seventy thousand persons to the streets, who watched the stars, illuminated floats, scenes from the big productions with the actors in person, daredevil stunts and the great sun-arcs that swept the marchers from the advance to the vanguard for over an hour.

It was the industry's boost for the Exposition being held here which has been lagging in attendance, and it was a million dollar advertisement that will probably not be duplicated in a long while.

Jackie Coogan turned out his guard from "In the Palace of the King"; Mary Pickford was represented by a "Rosita" float; Universal sent a galaxy of bejeweled ladies and gentlemen from "A Lady of Quality"; Tom Mix headed his rough riding outfit; Jack Hoxie brought along his cowpunchers; Metro sent along Bull Montana and other features; Ruth Law was there with her aeroplane and there were scores of other features from the companies and local theaters.

For one night the streets were turned into a studio, and something of the magnitude of California's largest manufacturing industry was suggested in the long line of equipment, bits of scenery and electrical apparatus that stopped traffic all the evening in the downtown district.

It was King Film "struttin' his stuff," and he certainly showed visitors from all over the United States what he can do.

SEEKS A STORM AND GETS GALE

Meighan Company Rewarded for Patience When Wind Comes

A sea picture is the most difficult type to produce, according to Thomas Meighan, Paramount star, who has completed "Homeward Bound," adapted by Jack Cunningham and Paul Sloane from Peter B. Kync's story, "The Light to Leeward." The principal reason is because most of the dramatic moments in the story are tied up with storms and the sea is as uncertain as women.

Mr. Meighan and a company of Paramount players spent five weeks in New London, Conn., filming scenes on the Thames river and on the ocean but in all that time there was not sufficient rough weather to utilize for the storm scenes. It was necessary for the company to spend a week off Seagate, N. Y., before the proper weather conditions prevailed for the storm scenes. These scenes show the crashing of a spar on the deck of a schooner, tossed and wave-washed on a belligerent sea, the rescuing of a disabled yacht, and the heroic struggle of Jim Bedford (Thomas Meighan) in bringing the two ships successfully through the storm.

The company was rewarded for the time and patience it took to make these scenes getting on the film some scenes which are said to be among the most realistic ever photographed. When the sea did oblige the cameraman she did it in magnificent style.

"Whenever a picture requires the use of the elements for intensifying the drama it is a long tedious struggle," explained Mr. Meighan, "for you just have to wait until the weather is right. In the studio we can control the light and the atmosphere, but when we work outside we are at the mercy of Nature. I believe, by waiting for the propitious moment, that we secured some of the most thrilling storm scenes possible. I know it was all we could do to stay on deck and the cameras had to be fastened to the rigging to prevent them being washed away."

WHALING PICTURE STILL SMASHING RECORDS

New York.—In opposition to a free open air meeting of one of the largest organizations of the South, and also a Chautauqua, Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships" opened at Moore's Opera House, Clarksburg, W. Va., on July 2, smashing all known box office records, according to a telegram received at the Pittsburgh branch of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation from Claude Robinson, lessee of the popular playhouse.

It was estimated that ten thousand people attended the open air meeting. A great number also were in constant attendance at the Chautauqua, but for all of that Mr. Robinson claims that Moore's Opera House played to the greatest crowds and received the largest receipts since his connection with the house.

Mr. Robinson's telegram, which is self-explanatory, reads as follows:

"Congratulations. Excepting a holiday your 'Down to the Sea in Ships' opened Moore Opera House tonight to the largest receipts I have ever experienced since I have been in Clarksburg. I might add that Norwood Park had ten thousand people there last night. Some opposition. There is also a Chautauqua holding forth here. It speaks mighty well for 'Down to the Sea in Ships.'"

"CLAUDE ROBINSON."

VITAGRAPH TELLS OF 8 SPECIALS

*Among Them Is Emerson
Hough's The Man
Next Door*

New York City.—Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announces eight more of the twenty-six specials which will be released by this company during the season, 1923-24. These follow "Masters of Men" and "Ninety and Nine," which already have proved the exceptional box office attraction of these bigger and better pictures. The eight which are announced now will be released at the beginning of the season. They are:

"The Man Next Door," a picturization of Emerson Hough's famous novel. It is a Victor Schertzinger production with an all star cast headed by Alice Calhoun, James Morrison, David Torrence and Frank Sheridan.

"The Midnight Alarm," a David Smith Production, of which J. Wm. Harkins, Jr., is the author, is one of the more thrilling and sensational fire pictures ever screened. There is an all star cast headed by Percy Marmont, Alice Calhoun and Cullen Landis.

"Pioneer Trails," also a David Smith production, is a tremendous thrilling drama of the great West in the days when the transcontinental railroads were in course of construction.

"On the Banks of the Wabash," a human heart interest story and the first of the J. Stuart Blackton Productions to be released by Vitagraph, is inspired by the famous song written by Paul Dresser.

"Let No Man Put Asunder," a Harry Sherman Production, will be made from the famous novel by Basil King.

"The Man from Brodney's" by George Barr McCutcheon will be another David Smith Production.

"The Leavenworth Case," by Anna Catherine Green, one of the most famous detective stories ever written, will be a Whitman Bennett Production released by Vitagraph.

"Borrowed Husbands" by Mildred K. Barbour will be the second of the Harry Sherman Productions.

There will be all told six specials contributed by J. Stuart Blackton, six by David Smith, six by Harry Sherman and six by Whitman Bennett. Two special productions to be decided upon will complete the twenty-six announced by Mr. Smith.

LADY OF QUALITY IS NEARING COMPLETION

New York City.—One of the most elaborate pictures of the year, the Hobart Henley production of "A Lady of Quality," which will be presented as a Universal Jewel, is nearing completion. Virginia Valli, the star, takes the part made famous on the dramatic stage by Julia Arthur.

The play which was made from the famous novel by Frances Hodgson Burnett ran for several seasons as a great success. Miss Arthur as Clorinda Wildairs scored one of the hits of her career in the part.

Universal has built very unusual sets for this production, duplicating the rooms in old English castles. A massive Jacobean room with paneled walls and rich carvings forms one of the large sets and this together with the throne room of Queen Anne holds several hundred people. Hunting scenes have been reproduced with great fidelity and the old English atmosphere of the period has been carefully worked out through research extending for many weeks before the picture was started. Hobart Henley, the director, has a reputation for accuracy in detail.

INCE ROLE FOR BLANCHE SWEET

*Will Play Anna Christie in First
Eugene O'Neill Play
Filmed*

New York City.—The title role of "Anna Christie," which will be a Thomas H. Ince production for First National release, will be portrayed by Blanche Sweet. This announcement made this week, sets at rest the many rumors which have been current regarding the featured player of this tremendously popular play. The choice of Miss Sweet for the leading role comes after an exhaustive search of the ranks of screen players by Mr. Ince, during which time the names of more than six prominent actresses were mentioned as possibilities.

Miss Sweet is one of the best known stars of the industry. She is established as a box office player and in her recent return to the screen in "Quincy Adams Sawyer" after a retirement of two years, proved her widespread popularity. In "Anna Christie" she will have the most dramatic role of her career, and one of the strongest characterizations ever to be brought to the silversheet. The role of the water-front waif was portrayed on the New York stage by Pauline Lord, who is also appearing in London at the present time in the same play. "Anna Christie" enjoyed the most unqualified success of any American play in London for years.

Unusual interest is centered in the screen production inasmuch as it is the first of the plays of Eugene O'Neill, generally conceded to be the foremost American playwright, to be filmed. Its presentation in New York won it the Pulitzer Prize for the most noteworthy dramatic work of the year, and more firmly established the genius of O'Neill. His other works include such dramatic masterpieces as "Beyond the Horizon," "The Hairy Ape," and "Emperor Jones."

Production will start immediately at the Ince studios. John Griffith Wray will direct and George Marion has been brought from the London cast to enact the role of Chris Christopherson on the screen. The continuity had been prepared and sets erected preparatory to the selection of a star.

THE MIDNIGHT ALARM BOOKED FOR RIALTO

New York.—"The Midnight Alarm," Vitagraph's feature produced by David Smith, has been booked at the Rialto Theatre in New York for the week of July 29. The picture is scheduled for general first run release sometime in the fall.

While the picture has a most thrilling fire scene, it does not depend upon this for its audience appeal. The story is of the mystery of a child brought up in the slums of a city.

Alice Calhoun plays a dual role, that of the young widow and later the widow's daughter.

An extensive exploitation campaign has been arranged by Vitagraph. Already Vitagraph has shown the picture to members of the Brooklyn fire department.

First National Releases

New York City.—Four of the First National stars will be represented in the releasing schedule of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for the month of August. They are Richard Barthelmess, Constance Talmadge, dainty Colleen Moore, who is making her debut as a First National star, and Katherine MacDonald. Their pictures are, respectively "The Fighting Blade," "Duley," "The Huntress" and "The Scarlet Lily."

Corinne Griffith to Be First National Star

CONTRACT COVERS PERIOD OF YEARS

First Appearance Will Be in Gertrude Atherton's "Black Oxen"

Under the terms of a starring contract Corinne Griffith has become a First National star. Negotiations were concluded this week for the distribution of a series of Corinne Griffith productions over a period of years through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The new unit has been organized by E. M. Asher, New York representative of Mack Sennett comedies; Charles R. Rogers, formerly manager of distribution of two of the largest producing companies and Edward Small has guided the destinies of many famous stars and directors.

Simultaneously with the announcement of the starring contract it was stated that Miss Griffith has been selected to play the leading part in Gertrude Atherton's "Black Oxen," the sensation "best seller" of the past year, the screen rights of which were purchased by First National several months ago. "Black Oxen" is regarded as a most valuable modern novel for screen purposes and speculation has been rife as to who would play the role of Madame Zattiany, Mrs. Atherton's heroine.

Miss Griffith has been starred in several series of pictures and more recently has been playing featured roles in important productions as an independent player. She is at present in New York, but will shortly leave for the West Coast, where "Black Oxen" has been put into continuity form and is awaiting the appearance of the new star. Productions will be at the United Studios.

The new producing unit will be known as Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc., and has adopted a policy of filming only proved successes of fiction and stage. It is possible that "Lilies of the Field," a stage success recently purchased by Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc., will be utilized for Miss Griffith's second production.

The contract was signed after a conference between Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National, Earl Hudson, production chief of First National units at the West Coast studios, who made a hurried trip East for the purpose, John McCormick, western representative of First National, and officials of Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc.

KANSAS M. P. T. O. TO WORK IN SIX ZONES

Kansas City.—The M. P. T. O. Kansas zoning plan has resulted in a division of the state into six equal parts. Early next month the task of calling six consecutive zone conventions will fall upon the shoulders of C. E. Cook, business manager of the Kansas organization, who will tour the state.

At the conventions officers of each zone will be elected, plans of finance ironed out and six permanent divisions perfected. The operation of the zone units will in no way conflict with the state association. Delegates from each of the zones will be represented at state conventions, while it is believed that matters of finance pertaining exclusively to the zones easily can be taken care of by the divisional organizations themselves, in addition to the regular state dues.

"It greatly would increase the efficiency of our association if a business manager could be appointed," said Mr. Cook. "When the fall convention of the M. P. T. O. Kansas is called we hope to have one of the strongest state organizations in the country and I do not believe that will include one bit of exaggeration."

PRICE CUTS BACK OF KANSAS CITY WAR

Kansas City.—There is a film war on Twelfth street, the "Broadway" of Kansas City, affecting the "fire menace" closing order against the Regent theatre, one of the larger down town houses of which Edward Dubinsky is manager. Seven motion picture houses are grouped closely together in two blocks.

"A month ago I reduced my price from 20 to 10 cents," said Mr. Dubinsky. "At least one theatre in my block still charges 20 cents. The refreshment stands near the entrance of the theatre have been there for more than a year, but no protest was made until last week. Matt Schinnick, building inspector, has told me my building is of sound fire proof construction. There are five exits on three different sides. It is not fire that menaces my theatre. Emmett A. Scanlon, fire warden, who judges 'menaces,' is a brother-in-law of William Flynn, an upper house alderman in the city council, who manages a theatre a few doors away. My price will remain at 10 cents."

Due to a buying agreement between three rival managers, Mr. Dubinsky said that he almost was unable to buy suitable films last year, despite the fact the Regent is by far the most elaborate exclusive motion picture house on Twelfth street.

"I don't deny there are other theatres almost as much of a fire menace as the stands near the entrance of the Regent," said Mr. Scanlon, when requested for a reason of the city's action against the theatre, "but I have worked on this as a test case for some time. When I see how it results I will clean up the rest."

BLACKTON STARTS ON HIS FIRST VITAGRAPH

New York.—J. Stuart Blackton began shooting "On the Banks of the Wabash" an episode rural drama inspired by Paul Dresser's song classic, at the Vitagraph Studios in Brooklyn last week. This is the first of six Blackton Productions.

An all star cast has been engaged. Among these are Mary Carr, the famous screen mother; Burr McIntosh, James Morrison, Lumsden Hare, Mary McLaren, Little Madge Evans, cast as the ingenue lead; George Neville, Marcia Harris, Ed Roseman and Harry and Dick Lee.

"On the Banks of the Wabash" there are no intricate twistings and turnings of plot. It is a revelation of a small town and its people, the comedies and tragedies of their daily life, their heartbreaks and their joys.

Coast Likes Tea—With a Kick

New York.—Additional reports to Associated Exhibitors from Los Angeles, where the Victor Hugo Halperin production, "Tea—With a Kick!" has just had a prerelease run in Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, bring the information that the week's engagement proved inadequate to meet the demand which was made for seats.

LLOYD'S NEXT A HIT, SAYS COAST

Pre-Views on "Why Worry?" Excite Speculation Among Western Experts

Hollywood.—Pacific Coast Pre-view impressions of Harold Lloyd's next Pathe release, "Why Worry," tend to set at rest any anxiety about the comedian's ability to provide a worthy successor to "Safety Last." There is said to be no attempt to challenge the success of the current Lloyd comedy sensation by proceeding along similar lines. Lloyd, himself, has described "Why Worry," as "pure farce on celluloid."

The correctness of this classification is indicated in a statement made to Lloyd by Adela Rogers St. Johns, one of America's higher critical authorities on the photoplay, after seeing "Why Worry" at the special showing at the Hal Roach studios.

"It would have been a physical impossibility to produce another 'Safety Last,' she said. "But you have made a very able successor to it, and one which I am certain will appeal to very class of audience—to many even more than 'Safety Last' does. I think you are following the sanest course of any picture star in varying the type of your pictures instead of sticking to one stereotyped line of material.

"From thrill comedy to pure farce is a long step, but you have taken it very successfully. I really believe there are more laughs in 'Why Worry' than in 'Safety Last.' There are not, of course, the hysterical laughs which signalized the thrill picture. But the laughter which 'Why Worry' will win will be more spontaneous and better laughs, I believe, because they will be freely given, and not extracted by awesome situations."

The Leavenworth Case in Making for Vitagraph Issue

New York.—Whitman Bennett, who will produce six specials to be released by Vitagraph, announces an all star cast for his next picture "The Leavenworth Case" the world famous detective story by Anna Katharine Green.

Seena Owen will have the leading role of Eleanor Leavenworth and Martha Mansfield will play Mary Leavenworth. Others in the cast are Wilfred Lytell, Bradley Barker, Paul Doucet, William Walcott, Francis Miller Grant and Fred Miller. Charles Giblyn will direct.

First National Foreign Sales

New York City.—The First National foreign department has closed a contract with the Companhia Cinematografica Hispano-Portuguesa, of Madrid, for twelve Mack Sennett comedies for Spain, Spanish Morocco, Canary Islands, Portugal and Portuguese East and West African Colonies. The Belgium rights for "Tol'able David," "Hurricane's Gal" and "The Turning Point" have been sold to M. De Lange, of Brussels.

Primax Film Co., of Vienna are the lessees of "Dinty" for Poland, Roumania, Bulgaria, European-Turkey and Greece, and of "Lessons in Love," for Czecho Slovakia, Austria, Hungary and Poland.

Looking Ahead In Hollywood

By Will C. Murphey

Hollywood—July 25. Two premieres are to be held here within the next ten days. Hal Roach will show Jack London's "The Call of The Wild," his first serious production of feature length, next Sunday at the California Theatre. On the following Sunday Warner Bros. will give a prelease showing of "Where the North Begins," at Loew's State.

Thomas H. Ince is preparing for two fall productions out of the ordinary. His first will be "Scout Wong" from a Saturday Evening Post story to be followed by "The Woman Between." Adaptations are being made by Julian La Mothe, a new addition to the Ince scenario department.

Agnes De Mille, daughter of the Famous William, is about to make her screen debut. Her initial appearance will be in a dancing role in "Spring Magic."

The famous house of Wurlitzer, who furnish motion picture theatres organs, is to erect a $2,000,000 home in Los Angeles. Construction will begin in September on what will be the largest retail music house in the west.

Earl J. Hudson, general production manager of First National, has gone to New York for a conference with Richard Rowland. Mr. Judson said on his return he will be able to announce who will play the lead in "Black Oxen."

"Two Little Vagrants," a play that is to the French stage what "Way Down East" is to America, has been purchased by Maurice Tournour who will start work on it at United Studio next week. It will be in six reels, and Tournour may take the important scenes in France.

George Ade is here to confer with Lasky on the filming of "All Must Marry," his story for Thomas Meighan. Actual filming of the story will start upon the arrival of Meighan from the East. He is expected in a few days.

Sophie Tucker, queen of Jazz, has had several screen tests which she passed satisfactorily and will sign with a company soon, according to report here. Miss Tucker says she will have an important announcement of her plans ready very soon.

Antonio Moreno and his wife are going to Europe for a vacation. He will visit his old home in Spain, and travel through France, Italy and England, returning here for a new picture about September 1.

Associated Authors is to make "No More Men," by Elmer Harris and Fife Shannon will have one of the principal roles. Matt Moore will play the lead and Madge Bellamy will be in the cast.

The Garrison Production Company explorers have arrived here from South America with travelogue material for release in the fall; William F. Adler also got in town this week with short reel subjects of the Dutch New Guinea cannibals.

Fred Niblo finished cutting "Shadows of the Night," film version of "Captain Applejack" this week, and will ship it to New York after a private showing here.

Success of the "Merry-Go-Round" has led to spirited bidding by Los Angeles Theatre managers for the first showing in the down town district. West Coast will probably get it for one of their houses.

Charles J. Branham, director of fifteen theatres in Canada, is here looking over production and says Canada is enjoying the same good business as this country.

Ralph Graves has left for New York to play a consequential role in a forthcoming Cosmopolitan production.

Gaston Glass's troubles here will not result in losing his contract to play the lead in "Maytime." B. P. Schulberg says the organization is with and behind Mr. Glass no matter what the eventualities.

Monte Bell, scenarist and publicity man for Charles Chaplin, will direct Edna Purviance's next picture for Regent Film company.

Hope Hampton has finished her role in "The Gold Diggers," and left for New York last Sunday. After a visit to Paris, the star will return here and play the lead in "Irene."

Mae Murray and Robert Leonard, her director-husband, have arrived and settled down in their new Beverly Hills home. "Fashion Row" will be completed here, and several new pictures made.

Work on "The Huntress" has been completed in just six weeks from the time it was started for First National. Colleen Moore is starred and it was directed from Hulbert Footner's story. It is said to be a western without a cowboy, pinto pony or mounted policeman.

Gilbert E. Gable, president of Achievement Pictures, is on a visit from New York to look over "The Magic Skin" under way by his company at Goldwyn's. There are several more weeks work on the production.

"Leave It To Gerry", an original story by Adam Hull Shirk, will be the first feature starring picture for Billie Rhodes. Ben Wilson will start work in about one month.

Word from Barbara La Marr, now in Italy playing the lead in Goldwyn's production of "The Eternal City", states she is nearly through her role, and after a brief rest will return here to play the lead in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew".

Buster Collins announced he is done with the stage for good. He has taken a Beverly Hills home, sent for his mother and will devote all his future time to pictures.

Max Graf will start in about two weeks the filming of "Half A Dollar Bill", a semi-sea story by Curtis Benton, author of "Mighty Lak' A Rose." Hobart Bosworth will play the sea captain; there are only five persons in the cast.

Clara Bow, the little ingenue who made a hit in "Down To The Sea In Ships", is to have an important role in "Maytime" which Al Lichtman is getting ready to produce. Several new faces will be seen in the production.

West Coast Theatres announces that in addition to its present building plans it has in view the construction of five new theatres next year, all of 2,000 seating capacity. They will be in neighborhood and suburban districts.

Hollywood has a million dollar extra girl. She is Mary Louise Hartje, granddaughter of John L. Scott, one time president of the Pennsylvania railroad, and daughter of the late Augustus Hartje, millionaire Pittsburg paper manufacturer. She is known professionally as Mary Louise Woods, and is playing in the "Fighting Blood" series.

Under the title "Harem Love", J. Stewart Woodhouse, well known scenarist, and Gerjes Bey, nephew of the Turkish minister of war, a production is being prepared showing intimately Turkish life and customs.

John Bowers will be away from the screen for sometime. The popular leading man broke his leg this week while bull-dogging a steer from the back of a bronco at the studio of Principal Pictures.

There is a persistent rumor here that if Corinne Griffith can get the production bee out of her bonnet, she has an excellent chance to star in worth while pictures for First National. Negotiations have been underway for several weeks, and Miss Griffith is now in New York seeing what can be done about it. She is said to have been offered the leads in "Black Oxen" and "Lillies Of The Field".

Arrivals in town this week included Jack Cunningham, scenarist of "The Covered Wagon" to do another Lasky script; Edgar Keller, big league artist, who makes posters for the industry; James J. Walker, New York state Senator, to talk business with Lew Cody; Bennie Zeidman on a visit to Mary and Doug; Raymond McKee and his bride, Marguerite Courtot, on a belated honeymoon; Luther Reed with a Marion Davis script; James Diamond to handle the camera for Elaine Hammerstein's next picture.

Pauline Starke, leading woman in many big productions, and Jack White, producer of Mermaid Comedies, announced their engagement this week. Both are so busy they have no time for a honeymoon so the date for the wedding has not been set.

Normand Feature Done

Hollywood.—The clicking of cameras has ceased on "The Extra Girl," Mack Sennett's pretentious production in which Mabel Normand is starred. The picture directed by Dick Jones, has been shot in record time and Sennett considers it the best cinema he has ever made and quite the best in which Miss Normand has appeared. It will have its world premier here at the Mission theatre around the first of September.

Cutting will be rushed so that it can be shown in New York about the same time as its Los Angeles premiere. Ralph Graves supports Miss Normand, and others in the cast include George Nichols, Anna Hernandez, Vernon Dent, Ramsey Wallace and Charlotte Mineau.

ENGLAND LAUGHS AT OUR TITLES

Ridiculous Situations Created By Some of the Wording on American Films

New York City.—An interesting angle on American sub-titles is contained in the following letter to the London Cinema from David L. Blumenfeld, of the publicity department of the Walturdaw Co., Ltd., which distributes Preferred Pictures throughout England and the continent.

Sir:—For some time past there have been complaints that American films shown in this country are too American in their worded titles. I hold no brief for flagrant Americanisms, but at the same time I should like to state that in my opinion this is, if anything, rather a snobbish attitude to take up. For some years the British public have been getting used to Americanisms in titles flashed on the screen. Every British exhibitor, if he only knew it, releases more American slang on his sheet than English idioms.

Plays about America should surely carry the convincing talk of their American characters—talk which, whatever we may say, is "snappy"—there's an Americanism—full of "punch," short and convincing. To show a Scottish film with thorough "Londonisms" in its subtitles is just the same as showing a New York picture with the subtitles rewritten for English audiences.

The other day I saw an American film in which one of the characters was made to say, in a rough house scene, "'Ere you—' op it!"—which is tantamount to making an Englishman in similar circumstances say "G'wan, you big stiff—beat it." Of course there is a very justifiable comeback to all this; that we do not want the British language inoculated with Americanisms, and to a large extent this is true. A film of "Rob Roy," or some historical pageant of British history made and produced by Americans, warrants every time a very thorough Anglicism of the sub-titles. In cases like this, American sub-titles are, naturally, all wrong, and go more to ruin the film than uplift it. But where you have a purely American drama written around typical American people in everyday American surroundings, it is foolish and stupid to Anglicize the titling.

I think everyone will agree that there are no finer sub-title writers in the world than the Americans when it comes to American plays of American people.

Let us see purely American films, then, with their original titles—clever, to the point, short and snappy. Of course, in very flagrant cases they can be rewritten but let that be done, please, by a man who knows how to write both languages.

Reports for the opening day at the Central show a packed house from the time of the opening until the last showing, and according to Mr. Cobe the picture promises to be a big success.

Broadway Can't Let It Go

New York City.—"Merry Go Round" the Universal-Super Jewel has broken the usual procedure by breaking records at Broadway motion picture theatre houses, having played at the Rivoli Theatre for two weeks, followed by one week at the Rialto Theatre, where for the third week, it held up to unusual business.

Andrew J. Cobe, well-known showman, proves his confidence in "Merry Go Round" by booking it for the Central Theatre for an indefinite run, following the showing at the Rivoli and Rialto Theatre engagements.

Happenings in the Independent Field

WARNER EXCHANGE MEN OUT IN FORCE

First Independent Exchange Convention Is Attended By Thirty Representatives

More than thirty exchange men, distributors of Warner pictures throughout the country, assembled for the first annual Warner Brothers convention on July 15, at the Drake Hotel, Chicago. The sessions were held on July 16 and 17.

One of the most important features of the convention was the appropriation by the exchange men of $100,000 toward the publicity campaign and immediately Mr. Warner announced that the Warner Brothers would add $100,000 to the plan. The total expenditure now for the advertising of the eighteen pictures is in excess of $500,000.

The convention was called to order by Mr. Warner, who read a telegram from his brother, Harry M. Warner, who regretted his inability to attend. The speakers were Sam Morris, General Manager of the Warner home offices, Mr. Lesser, Mr. Ullman, of the Hearst Syndicate, New York; Mr. Woodward, of the Gravure Service Corp., New York; W. H. Ingersoll, the man who made the dollar watch famous, New York; and Lon Young, Director of Advertising and Publicity for Warner Brothers.

At the morning session on July 16 it was announced by Abe Warner that the David Belasco play, "Deburan," in which Lionel Atwill starred on Broadway last season, would be produced by Ernst Lubitsch, after the completion of the eighteen pictures. The exchange men next took up the question of selling. Great enthusiasm was manifested when Meyer Lesser, spoke on the publicity and exploitation campaign. Mr. Lesser went into detail, stating that close to half a million dollars had been appropriated for the campaign, and exhibited a series of advertisements soon to be published by a number of magazines. Mr. Ullman, of the Hearst Syndicate, declared that the cooperation of the entire chain of Hearst papers was at the call of the exchange men.

Mr. Woodward, of the Gravure Corp., stated that his organization published more than 90% of the newspaper rotogravure sections and that the weekly circulation totaled 6,700,000. Mr. Ingersoll dwelt on the commercial tie-ups he would extend to the Warners, and Lon Young enlightened the men on the many advertising aids being devised to help the exhibitors derive greater box-office profits. The meeting adjourned to witness "Where the North Begins," featuring the Belgian police dog, Rin-Tin-Tin, and Johnny Hines in "Little Johnny Jones."

On the following day a sales discussion took place, and Mr. Warner announced that the entire country had been closed for the distribution of the series of eighteen. Among those present at the meeting were:

Sam Warner, Abe Warner, Sam Morris, Meyer Lesser, Lon Young, of the Warner organization; George H. Dumond, Chicago; Mr. Davis, Little Rock, Ark.; Oscar Oldknow, Atlanta, George Underwood, Dallas; W. D. Shapiro, Boston; Lou Berman, Phila.; C. J. Sonin, Detroit; Eddie Silverman, Chicago; I. J. Wallenstein, Boston; Eddie Stearn, Cleveland; Harry Charnas, Cleveland; Mr. Finkel, Pittsburgh; Al Kahn, Kansas City; Mr. Woodward, New York; Mr. Hines, St. Louis; J. Broehn, Cincinnati;

J. Ullman, New York; Fred Cubberley, Minn.; J. Hennegan, Cincinnati; L. K. Brin, Seattle; E. G. Tunstall and E. Linder, Milwaukee.

JOE BRANDT BACK PREDICTS BIG SEASON

Fresh from a long trip on the road where he covered territory that was considered both good and bad from the distributor's and exhibitor's standpoint, Joe Brandt of C. B. C. returns to New York decidedly optimistic.

It is Mr. Brandt's opinion that business is going to be unusually good this fall and winter. While extreme heat has knocked the bottom out of picture returns in many sections, the line-up for big features for the new season is noticeably active, he says.

Cummings Plans Tour in Connection With His Feature

A tour of the large cities to become personally acquainted with exhibitors and exchangers is Irving Cummings' chief exploitation plan for his newest picture "Broken Hearts of Broadway."

"I am not going to let my audiences sit through ten and eleven reels of padded material," stated Mr. Cummings. "Neither am I going to feature Broadway stars who are known only in the large cities. 'Broken Hearts of Broadway' contains screen stars known to everyone. I have made a picture that will get results from the box offices of small towns as well as large cities."

Mr. Cummings has sought the opinion of exhibitors throughout the country to learn the kind of pictures they want and his policy is to make only "box-office" attractions.

Rosenzweig With Reelab

Reelab Corporation, which has opened laboratories in Fort Lee, N. J., has arranged with Maurice Rosenzweig of Knickerbocker Titles to supervise the title department. Mr. Rosenzweig has photographed titles for some of the biggest productions, notably those for "When Knighthood Was in Flower." His association with the new laboratories, says Mr. Heller, president of Reelab, is in line with that company's policy of having each department under the supervision of a recognized expert.

De Luxe C. B. C. Contract

Tony Luchese and Oscar Neufeld, executive heads of the De Luxe Film Co. Inc., closed an exclusive contract with C. B. C. for the entire output of Columbia Pictures for the season of 1923-4 for distribution through Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey. The following pictures, will be turned over to the De Luxe organization under the agreement: "Yesterday's Wife," "Marriage Market," "Discontented Husbands" and "Traffic in Hearts."

Charlie Burr Gives a Party

New York.—Constance Binney was the guest of honor at a party given at the Burr Glendale studios a few days ago to celebrate the progress being made on the production of "Clipped Wings," her first starring feature for Associated Exhibitors. C. C. Burr, her producer, was the host.

Singer With Export & Import

Julius Singer has joined the Export & Import Film Company as a special sales representative and has left New York for a tour of the principal independent exchange centers.

LESSER WILL MAKE HIAWATHA FILM

Hollywood.—Sol Lesser announced this week that Principal Pictures would make at least one Longfellow poem into a screen classic. At an early date his organization will begin the filming of "Hiawatha," research work and the scenario having been whipped into shape by the scenario department who have quietly been preparing for the production for several weeks.

"It is our plan," said Lesser, "to emphasize the poetical elements of the work rather than to visualize them completely. This we hope to accomplish by the importance we shall give to the earlier episodes of the poem wherein the infancy and boyhood of Hiawatha are treated."

He has not announced who will play the leading role, nor have any members of the cast been selected.

Start Work on "Tiger Rose"

For the filming of the Warner Brothers picturization of the David Belasco play, "Tiger Rose," in which Lenore Ulric will be starred, Director Sidney Franklin has taken the entire company and a large corps of assistants to Tuolumne Meadows, Cal., north of Yosemite Valley.

Burr Engages Kenneth Webb

C. C. Burr has engaged Kenneth Webb to direct Constance Binney in "The Stolen Kiss," an original story by Mann Page and Gerald Duffy, which will be released by Associated Exhibitors. Richard Thorpe will have the leading male role and others in the cast are Mary Carr, Edmund Breese, William N. Bailey, Edna May Oliver and Russell Griffin.

Beier Sales Manager of W-B

Nat Beier has been appointed sales manager of the W-B Film Exchange, New York, which controls the distribution of the Warner Brothers current productions for the Greater New York territory. Mr. Beier was formerly with United Artists. He has also held executive positions with the Select and Fox organizations.

Starts Third for Grand-Asher

Los Angeles.—Ben Wilson has started production on his third feature for Grand-Asher release. The story is an adaptation by Frank Sullivan of the novel "Other Men's Daughters" by Evelyn Campbell. Bryant Washburn and Mabel Forrest head a cast in which Kathleen Kirkham, Wheeler Oakman, Sidney de Grey and Martha Franklin have the principal roles.

Weber and North Buy Play

"Its a Boy," which played at the Sam Harris Theatre, New York, is to be made into pictures for early Fall release. L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North now have in preparation this comedy drama by William Anthony McGuire.

Title Lowell Film

John Lowell's next feature, nearing completion at the Blazed Trail Studios in Gloversville, N. Y., is now definitely titled "Floodgates." The story and scenario are by L. Case Russell and the direction by George Irving.

Stars who will shine under the Warner Brothers' banner: Lenore Ulric, Hope Hampton, John Barrymore, Harry Meyers, Marie Prevost, Johnny Hines, Wesley Barry, Baby Bruce Guerin, Monte Blue, "Spec" O'Donnell and Irene Rich.

"Keep Dates Open For Big Ones" H. M. Warner Advises Exhibitors

KEEP open play dates for the big ones that are coming, and don't clutter up your schedule with a lot of junk pictures.

That is the advice of Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, to exhibitors. It is Mr. Warner's contention that the production schedule of the independent market is the biggest in its history.

"Many pictures have been announced for release next season," said Mr. Warner. "Scores of others are on the way. Some of the biggest are coming from the independent producers. We are making eighteen pictures that are without question attractions of the highest order ever produced by a single organization.

"Exhibitors want to be in a position to cash in on the big productions. Now is the time to be careful of false moves. Book wisely. There are plenty of good pictures in the independent field, and the Warner Brothers are helping to fill the demand for big pictures by bringing forth eighteen great plays and novels."

Over five and a half million dollars will be spent by the Warner Brothers in the production, exploitation and publicizing of the forthcoming series of eighteen classics of the screen being made from famous plays and popular novels.

Among the Belasco plays secured by the Warners is "Tiger Rose," the play in which Belasco presented Miss Ulric on the legitimate stage and in which she will be starred under the direction of Sidney Franklin.

A distinct unit in the production plans is Harry Rapf, the producer of such current Warner films as "School Days," "Rags to Riches," "Heroes of the Street," and "Brass." Mr. Rapf plans to bring forth "Broadway After Dark," from the play by Owen Davis, with picturization by Edmund Goulding, and "Lucretia Lombard," the Kathleen Norris novel.

Among the list of directors thus far engaged for the new series are Sidney Franklin, Ernst Lubitsch, Harry Beaumont, William Beaudine, Arthur Rosson and William A. Seiter.

The Warner group of screen stars include Monte Blue, Marie Prevost, Hope Hampton, Irene Rich, Wesley Barry, John Barrymore, Johnny Hines, Harry Myers, Mae Marsh, "Spec" O'Donnell and Baby Bruce Guerin.

In the adaptation of the works the Warners have engaged Julien Josephson, Grant Carpenter, Edmund Goulding, Sada Cowan, Frances Marion, Dorothy Farnum and Paul Bern, all of whom are specialists in writing directly for the screen.

Announcement of the eighteen Warner features is as follows:

"The Gold Diggers," a David Belasco production, directed by Harry Beaumont, with an all star cast including Hope Hampton, Wyndham Standing and Louise Fazenda.

"Little Johnny Jones," featuring Johnny Hines in the play by George M. Cohan, directed by Arthur Rosson.

"The Printer's Devil," starring Wesley Barry, in the story written by Julien Josephson, directed by William Beaudine, Harry Myers also plays a prominent role in the production.

"Broadway After Dark," a Harry Rapf production made from the play by Owen Davis, with adaptation by Edmund Goulding, starring Marie Prevost, Monte Blue and Irene Rich.

"How to Educate a Wife," an Elinor Glyn story, adapted by Grant Carpenter.

"Cornered" the famous Broadway stage success written by Zelda Sears and Dodson Mitchell.

"Tiger Rose," a Sidney Franklin production starring Lenore Ulric in the popular Belasco play; direction by Mr. Franklin.

"The Country Kid," the second Wesley Barry picture, by Julien Josephson and directed by William Beaudine, Harry Myers will also be in the cast.

"Lucretia Lombard," a Harry Rapf production, which will be an adaptation of Kathleen Norris' popular novel by Sada Cowan.

"Being Respectable," from the novel by Grace Flandru, adapted by William Black.

"The Tenth Woman," from the novel by Harriet Comstock.

"Daddies," a David Belasco production, adapted from the play by John L. Hobbie; scenario by Julien Josephson, direction of Harry Beaumont and starring Mae Marsh.

"Beau Brummel," by special arrangement with Mrs. Richard Mansfield, starring John Barrymore in the Clyde Fitch play of the same name.

"Babbitt," from the novel by Sinclair Lewis.

"The Age of Innocence," from the novel by Edith Wharton, voted one of America's ten greatest women.

"Lover's Lane," from the play by Clyde Fitch.

"An Unloved Wife," from the story by Pearl Keating.

Wesley Barry will appear in another production, the third of which will be written by Julien Josephson with direction by William Beaudine.

FOREIGN DEPARTMENT CLOSES MANY DEALS

While only a few of the Warner Brothers forthcoming series of eighteen have been completed to date, Gus S. Schlesinger, General Manager of the Warners Foreign Department, successfully consummated recently a number of big foreign deals for the entire group.

The deals were completed without the viewing by the foreign buyers of any of the completed films. This unusual procedure, according to Mr. Schlesinger, was due to the big results now being obtained by the foreign distributors with the current series of Warner productions.

Mr. Schlesinger plans to leave for Europe in the interests of the new series the latter part of August. He will visit London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Barcelona, Rome and The Hague, Holland.

The deals thus far completed by Mr. Schlesinger for the new pictures were made with the Aktiebolaget Svensk Filmindustri, Sweden for Scandanavia; Australasian Films Ltd., New York, for Australia, New Zealand, Dutch East Indies and Straits Settlements; Sociedad General Cinematografica, New York, for Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador; Taisho Film Company, New York, for Japan; and the German Camus Y Cia., New York, for Mexico.

TOM MOORE SIGNS NEW WARNER SERIES

The Warner Brothers series of eighteen, a number of which have already been completed, are being booked in bulk by scores of first run theatres throughout the country. Announcement of this fact was made last week by Harry M. Warner, following the closing of a deal for the eighteen pictures with Tom Moore, President of Moore's Theatres Corporation, Washington.

Mr. Moore's transaction was consummated with Lou Berman, of the Independent Film Corp., Philadelphia, who controls the Warner rights for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and District of Columbia. The Warner product will be shown first at Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C., and later at the many other theatres controlled by the Moore's Corporation.

Seiter to Direct Three More

William A. Seiter, who directed the current Warner classic, "Little Church Around the Corner," has been signed by the Warner Brothers to direct three of the new group of eighteen features. "George Washington, Jr.," "Cornered," and "How to Educate a Wife."

SANFORD SPECIAL SEPTEMBER FIRST

"Souls in Bondage" Announced As Initial State Rights Offer- ing on New Program

The 1923-4 program of independent offerings from Sanford Productions will be opened September first with the release of "Souls in Bondage," a dramatic portrayal of a character said to be well known in the vicinity of Los Angeles.

The picture, offered as a Sanford Special, features an all star cast made up of Pat O'Malley, Cleo Madison, Otto Lederer, Frank Hayes, Gene Crosby, Peter Howard, Eugenia Gilbert and Leon Artigue. The story and direction are by William H. Clifford, the author of several screen successes.

The sponsors of "Souls in Bondage" have completed all details preliminary to the launching of the production. The press book is ready for shipment and all accessories for the theatre, which include posters, newspaper cuts, lobby cards, are illustrated in this exploitation guide.

The story Mr. Clifford has written for this screen play revolves about a character to whom powers of Faith Healing are attributed by many people who know him personally. The play deals with the efforts of a band of crooks to utilize the powers of this extraordinary man in a nefarious scheme, this situation forming the basis of a number of highly dramatic episodes.

Novel Feature Production To Be Offered By Hepworth

"Lily of the Alley," one of the forthcoming releases of the Hepworth Distributing Corporation, was screened for a select audience at the coast recently for the primary purpose of ascertaining whether the American public would generally accept the English product as it came from the studio. The picture, directed by Cecil M. Hepworth, presents many novel features, not the least of which is the fact that there are no subtitles in the entire film.

Goldburg Touring Middle West

Jesse J. Goldburg, President of Independent Pictures Corp., has started on a tour of the middle west. The object of Mr.

Goldburg's trip is to dispose of the remaining territories on the twelve feature productions lately completed by his organization, and to confer with the state right exchange men now holding franchises of the Independent Pictures Corporation. While in Detroit Mr. Goldburg will hold a directors meeting of his corporation, several of the directors being residents of that city.

INCREASE EQUIPMENT AT THE GRAND STUDIO

Development of the production equipment of the Grand studios in Hollywood is now under way. In the matter of lighting equipment it is planned to have the installation at this studio, where Sid Smith, Monte Banks and Joe Rock are making comedies for Grand-Asher release, as complete as that of the larger plants in Hollywood. New baby spots, 120 amp. spots and bank lights were moved in last week. In the meantime production activities are going on at the high rate of speed instituted when the three comedians started work on their series for G-A distribution.

The publicity department is hard at work trying to keep up with production. Cooperating with Ben Verscheleiser, general manager at the Grand Studios, Adam Hull Shirk, publicity director, is devoting considerable attention to the making of adequate stills to be supplied on each of the two reel comedies.

Engage Edward Burns for Role

Warner Brothers have engaged Edward Burns to play a leading role in the Wesley Barry picture, "The Country Kid," which is being directed by William Beaudine. Two other juvenile stars are appearing in the picture. "Spec" O'Donnell and Baby Bruce Guerin.

Will Start New Productions

Sam Sax, National Sales Manager for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, will leave for the Coast soon to arrange for four new productions to be released on the Weber and North schedule following "Marriage Morals" and "Don't Marry for Money," which have been completed.

Announce Big Foreign Sale

Louis Auerback of the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., has closed a deal for his company which disposes of his company's entire program for Continental Europe. The deal includes thirty features, seventy-five comedies and three serials.

MEANEST MAN TO BE SEPTEMBER RELEASE

September will be the banner month for releases from Principal Pictures Corporation, according to Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg of that organization.

"The Meanest Man in the World," now finished, will have an early September release and there is a strong possibility that an advance world premiere will take place in New York a few weeks prior to the general release date.

Distribution arrangements for the George M. Cohan play-film have not as yet been within a few weeks time.

"The Meanest Man in the World" was directed by Edward F. Cline. Chief among the players are Blanche Sweet, Bert Lytell, Bryant Washburn, Maryon Aye, Helen Lynch, Forrest Robinson, Lincoln Stedman, Warde Crane, Frances Raymond, Carl Stockdale, Robert Dunbar, Victor Potel, William Conklin and a host of other favorite cinema folk.

The picture is said to have been filmed in strict accordance with the successful stage play and the many laughable situations as presented by Mr. Cohan before the footlights are brought out in the subtitles. Walter Anthony and John Grey are responsible for the titling of this feature.

It is the intention of Sol Lesser to present "The Meanest Man" in world premiere fashion on an elaborate scale with Bert Lytell, portraying the title role, appearing in person at the initial showing in New York.

Arranges Distribution

Max O. Miller, president of the Max O. Miller productions announces that he has concluded releasing arrangements whereby four productions to be made by his company will be distributed throughout the entire world by Chadwick Pictures Corporation of New York City. Domestic release will be via the state right market. The first production—"Damaged Souls" has been completed and the print shipped East.

Control of New Post Series

Chadwick Pictures Corporation which had earlier in the year affected distributing arrangements with the Post Pictures Corporation to distribute their new series of forty travel pictures, have purchased all rights in this series. Immediately upon the completion of the deal rights for New York State and Northern New Jersey were disposed of to Commonwealth Film Corporation.

The Directorial genius behind the forthcoming eighteen Warner Brothers' features—Harry Beaumont, William A. Seiter, David Belasco, Arthur Rosson, Sidney Franklin, William Beaudine.

Short Subjects and Serials

EDUCATIONAL TO HOLD CONVENTION

Company Plans to Issue 30 Per Cent More Product in Coming Year.

Educational Film Exchange managers and sales executives will meet for three days in their second national sales convention, July 30, at the Hotel Pennsylvania. This is the first national sales convention to be held by Educational in New York, the first one being held in Chicago in 1921.

Sales executives of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., have made a careful study of national conditions, and each manager has made a thorough analysis of the situation in his territory up to the time of the convention.

This convention is purposely held late in the summer season in order that the exchange manager will derive the greatest benefit from it. During the convention announcement will be made of the 1923-24 product.

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., will release 30 per cent more product during the 1923-24 season than during the year just drawing to a close. This increase is a direct result of the national survey.

It is a significant fact, developed by the survey, that the feature pictures for the coming year will be shorter than those of the 1922-23 season. This is claimed to be the natural result of the reaction against the longer features which crowded the short subjects from the program of many theatres and the resultant complaint from patrons.

Now We'll "Sing Them Again"

New York.—"Close Harmony," the first of Educational's "Sing Them Again" series, will be released August 12. It will introduce "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" and "Sweet Adeline."

The series is designed to take advantage of the present demand for community singing. Complete orchestrations accurately timed to the picture are available to exhibitors. It is thought that the reels will be valuable in establishing cordial feeling in the audience and putting it in the proper frame of mind to enjoy the feature.

Tuxedo Comedies Coming

New York.—The Tuxedo Comedies, a series of eight two-reelers, will be released by Educational during the season 1923-4. "Easter Bonnets," the first of this series, will feature Ned Sparks and Harry Tige. "Poodles" Hanneford, the Hippodrome clown, will appear in a number of later releases.

Cooper's Tales for Pathe

New York.—The famous "Leatherstocking Tales" of J. Fenimore Cooper are to be made into a Patheserial. Care will be taken to present Cooper's picturesque hero with the fidelity which has fascinated three generations of novel readers. The tales deal with the frontier of New York State and the Six Nations who were incited to harass the whites by the French in Canada plotting secretly with the British.

Commends Pathe Review

New York.—The June list of "Pictures for Selected Programs" issued by the National Committee for Better Films, contains resumes of five complete issues of Pathe Review. The issues listed are Nos. 23, 24, 25, 26 and 27.

The recent announcement that Chambers of Commerce in important scenic sections of the United States are co-operating with Pathe Review in filming a distinctive series in American Pathecolor is said to have been well received by many exhibitors.

Pathe Review No. 35, shortly to be released, contains striking Pathecolor close-ups of Niagara Falls.

Four More Semon Comedies

New York.—The first of the four Larry Semon two-reel comedies which will be released by Vitagraph during the season of 1923-4 will go to the branches of this company in August. It is "The Gown Shop," one of the best productions this ingenious comedian has ever made. Three others are to follow during the season.

"Smashing Barriers," Vitagraph's famous William Duncan serial abridged to six-reels, has won great favor with exhibitors and fans who enjoy Duncan at his best. Critics generally praised this feature in its new form for its wealth of thrills and sensations and the swift moving action.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

In The Hands of The Enemy, Universal

In the seventh chapter of the serial "In The Hands of Daniel Boone," starring Jack Mower and Eileen Sedgwick, Susan, daughter of Daniel Boone, learns that a meeting of the Regulators, Tory spies, is to be held at the tavern. She disguises herself, is admitted and discovers that Claire is the leader of the band and that her father, Jack and Judge Henderson, Claire's guardians are proclaimed enemies and in danger of being killed. Susan is discovered and put in a cell. Her father and Jack go to her rescue. While Daniel Boone holds the crowd off, Jack is forced to fight with his sword against Redmond. One of the crowd trips Jack and Redmond is given the advantage. There is plenty of action in this picture. People who do not see the whole serial can still enjoy the chapter because of its historical background.

The Green Cat, Pathe

Snub Pollard, as the proprietor of a roadhouse. "The Green Cat," places a blind pig outside in a final effort to get customers. The customers come and so do the prohibition agents who wreck the place. The chef and the waitresses indignantly leave, and then arrives a whole trainload of people eager to be fed. The proprietor's wife (Marie Mosquini) says she will cook if hubby can make a fire in the broken stove. Hubby sets the place afire, and while the flames are spreading takes out a policy from an insurance agent who happened in. Just as they are proclaiming it a lucky blaze the flames catch the policy.

There is action and humor in this picture. It is the kind of comedy that arouses sympathy as well as laughter.

Nobody's Darling, Universal

The title fits Baby Peggy in this two-reel Century comedy. Peggy plays some practical jokes with a "Keep Off the Grass" sign, gets in to a negro orphan asylum by mistake, holds up the traffic with a dummy policeman and to evade the real one ducks into a toy store and makes up as a doll. She is bought by a rich little girl "because she looks so real" and is put into a dark closet. To get out she frightens the household so badly that they call the police. Worn out from her escapades Peggy tells the policeman to take her home. The comedy is of a high order with novel situations. Peggy's mischievousness can be depended upon to draw a smile in practically every scene and a loud chuckle in many.

In Wrong Right, Pathe

This is a departure from the usual western two-reeler, for instead of melodrama it is good comedy. The humor arises from a misunderstanding between the owner of the ranch and one of his men, as to whom the man shall elope with. The man thinks he has obtained permission to elope with the ranchowner's daughter, but father believes it is his cook who is being courted. Daughter is rescued by the man of her heart (Leo Maloney) and father marries the cook in order to keep her. But she informs him that they'll "get a Chinese cook now." The picture is good entertainment.

The Festive Haul, Pathe

There is much human interest in this tale of the smelt run in the Northwest. Rich and poor alike travel to the river when the gulls and the newspapers tell that the smelt are running. Even the minister lays aside his dignity and wades out to capture his share. The "personal touches" and beautiful views make the reel an interesting part of any program.

In Desperate Flight, Pathe

Malison is captured by government agents in this, the fourteenth episode of "Haunted Valley." Malison's agents blow up the shack and he escapes on an engine. Ruth follows him in a government airplane which falls directly on the tracks. With Ruth and the driver unconscious, Malison's engine is coming at full speed toward the wrecked plane.

Spring Fever, Universal

This two-reel Century comedy, starring Fred Spencer, records the vain efforts of Kewpie's rival to outwit him and gain favor in the eyes of the village belles. "Spring Fever" is another farm comedy. The few new stunts combined with the old ones will probably satisfy the average picturegoer.

Pathe Review No. 30

An interesting exposition of the manufacture of music rolls, a prophesy about the flapper of 1960 and views of "bonehead fakers" modeled from clay are included in this reel. There are also scenes of the King of Siam's bodyguard of elephants. The Pathecolor section depicts the merry Mongoup River of New York.

Pathe Review No. 31

"Egypt—Old or New" contrasts the antique and the modern in the ancient city. Scenes of the marble quarries of Vermont, "lens lies" of Niagara Falls and some beautiful Pathecolor views of Strasbourg, the capital of Alsace, complete the reel.

The Marathon Dancer, Pathe

This Aesop Film Fable which has for its moral "Don't Sleep With Your Clothes On" is a dream of Farmer Alfafa's about the marathon dance craze.

Trilby, artist model of Paris, noted for the symmetry of her feet, falls in love with "Little Billee," aristocratic and sensitive English art student. The latter makes his home in Paris with two fellow-countrymen, Taffy and The Laird. Svengali, repulsive, poverty stricken musical genius, discovers Trilby has a remarkable singing voice but that she is tone-deaf. Under Svengali's mesmeric power its quality is brought out. When Billee enters a large art class and finds Trilby posing in the nude he goes to the country. Trilby returns to the laundry from which she had been taken. Pursued by Svengali she goes to the home of Taffy and the Laird, where she is found by Billee. She agrees to marry him. The appearance of Billee's mother and uncle at the engagement feast results in Trilby agreeing to leave her lover. She is kidnapped by Svengali. Billee, unsuccessful in the search, returns to England. Coming back to Paris months later he attends a theatre with his two friends to learn the significance of the billed "Mme. Svengali." It is Trilby who appears as the great artist. In her first number she is under the influence of Svengali and triumphs. The three men enter the dressing room, and in a scene with the mesmerist the latter falls in a faint. The manager brings on the singer, but minus the guidance of Svengali, she fails and the audience is dismissed. Trilby is attacked by a severe illness, from which she does not recover.

We are all indebted to Mr. Tully and Mr. Young for a really fine interpretation of Du Maurier's great story. They have brought to the screen not only the form and substance of the tale but the spirit of it—and that is what counts above all.

Andree Lafayette is the living, breathing woman of the studio, an unspoiled child grown up. The great test—and how she does meet it—is where Trilby is sitting nude before a large art class and Billee enters the room. With childlike simplicity she smiles and we see her lips form "Halloo, Billee!" She is perfectly oblivious of her entire absence of immediate surroundings and forgetful of the fact that Billee has not before seen her in that situation. The distress that quickly follows the sudden departure of the crazed young lover is communicated to the beholder.

And so Andree Lafayette is throughout the course of the story—superb. She is one of the most natural players of all the multitude that have graced the screen. Where her photographs possibly had led us to expect a woman of immobile countenance, of cold demeanor, we find her to be all that is different—and markedly attractive. She has more than the ordinary share of form and face, a profile that to a layman seems as nearly perfect as any he has seen—but she has more than all these. She possesses the soul of the genuine artist. The portrayal of the death of Trilby, alone for the moment, is of itself sufficient to establish the dramatic standing of Miss Lafayette.

Fully sharing the triumph of the young Frenchwoman is Arthur Edmund Carewe in his interpretation of Svengali. The characterization of Mr. Carewe is a combination of skillful delineation and masterly makeup. Repulsive as Svengali properly is at all times, yet under the touch of the player the mesmerist fascinates and grips the spectator.

The work of the large supporting cast is up to the notch. Notable among these are Creighton Hale, Philo McCullough, Francis McDonald, Wilfred Lucas, Maurice Cannon, Evelyn Sherman and Rose Dione.

From the dramatic side there are several situations that loom large. One particularly is of the entrance of the mother and uncle of Billee upon the engagement feast and of the tragic scenes that follow. Another is the debut of the hypnotized Trilby in the thronged and spacious Circus.

"Trilby" possesses the essential elements of a real showman's picture.

It has in the first place a strong title; but better than that it has a strong story and it brings the authentic and genuine atmosphere of the highways and byways—and don't forget these—of the real Paris; and it is interpreted by a cast containing Frenchmen as well as Americans. It is elaborately staged. Wilfred Buckland is the sponsor for the art direction, and that is a name that speaks for itself.

Lest any one may be misled by the foregoing there are many delightful comedy bits in "Trilby." Mainly, however, it is a great story of life, and produced by a man with the courage of his convictions—with the "guts," as Mr. Kipling might express it—to render unto the author the things that are the author's—a logical if tragic ending.

Accompanying us at the showing was Tom Kennedy, who among other things knows his Paris. On the way back to the office we interrupted his raving to ask if he would set down for you some of his impressions of "Trilby". We have a hunch they will be worth reading. G. B.

It's easy to become enthusiastic over "Trilby" as the famed and favorite work of Du Maurier is rendered in this Richard Walton Tully photoplay; so easy as a matter of fact that there is the usual reviewer's fear of over-statement. However, it is conservative to claim that this picture will appeal to everybody whose emotions react to dramatic expression.

While 'Trilby' is an extraordinarily fine vivid quality of the characters themselves and the astounding abilities of the players make Andree Lafayette as the heroine and Arthur Edmund Carewe as her evil genius, the hateful and repulsive Svengali, the outstanding features of the picture.

Press agented as a beauty and the possessor of perfect feet, American patrons nevertheless will find Andree Lafayette one whose attainments go beyond the limits of physical loveliness. For she has a personality that projects from the screen and exceptional acting talent and skill. Her lighter moments in the care-free days as a laundress are as buoyant and sparkling as the death scene is superb in its dramatic force and conviction. Hers is the ability to know just how far to go with a gesture and a scene. In short, she appreciates and practices the histrionic virtue of restraint.

The Svengali of Mr. Carewe is easily one of the most impressive and convincing characterizations we have seen in pictures. The Carewe Svengali is not a creature of tricks and devices of stage make-up. He inspires terror with his own features and leaves them as free as possible to accomplish the marvels of expression of which they show themselves capable. It is a wonderful performance.

The rest of the cast deserves praise as a unit. Mr. Youngs direction is excellent and shows its superiority in those difficult scenes in which Svengali practices his black magic of hypnotism. It is a credit to the director that these pieces do not recall the antics of those parlor tricksters or that performer whom everyone has the misfortune to see at some time in the course of a lifetime. There are many actual pictures of Paris. These long shots of the city put a scope and breadth into the production which is so often lacking when plays of foreign locale are done entirely in this country—a practice which necessitates an excess of foreground set-up and interiors. Trilby's downfall at her premiere in Paris is as vivid and enthralling piece of drama as that of the book itself. The like could not possibly be accomplished on the stage.

If "Trilby" is a forecast of the "new season productions" of which we read so much, then surely the screen making strides and the public may be prepared for "bigger and better" pictures than it ever has had. The picture can be made a big box office attraction, for it does extraordinarily well those things which make a photoplay a popular success. T. C. K.

The Flying Dutchman

R-C picture distributed by F. B. O. Directed and adapted by Lloyd Carleton from the opera by Richard Wagner. Photography by Andre Barlatier. Length, 5,600 feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Philip Vanderdecken Lawson Butt
 Melissa Lola Luxford
 Zoe Ella Hall
 Robert Edward Coxen
 Peter Van Dorn Walter Law
 Philip Vanderdecken falls asleep while reading "The Flying Dutchman" and dreams of the old legend. One night Peter Van Dorn, burgomaster, is telling the story of the Flying Dutchman. Peter Vanderdecken, who centuries ago was condemned by God to roam the seas in a phantom ship for blaspheming during a storm at sea. Vanderdecken's only hope of salvation is the opportunity given him every seven years to take back his physical form and search for a woman who would be faithful to him until death. If he finds such a woman his penance will be lifted. While the burgomaster is relating the legend, a stranger comes to the Inn. He falls in love with Melissa, but is blind to the sweetness of Zoe, her younger sister, who loves him and is sure that he is the Flying Dutchman. Melissa sends her fisherman-lover to sea and accepts the stranger's proposal of marriage. On her wedding eve Melissa's lover returns. He tries to kill Philip, but is powerless to harm a phantom. Philip realizes that Melissa loves only his wealth and is in despair when he thinks of spending another seven years on the phantom ship. In order to teach Melissa a lesson he takes her to the phantom ship and lets her choose some jewels as a wedding present. These disappear as she touches him and Philip tells her that he is the Flying Dutchman. He is about to strike her when he is stopped by the prayers of Zoe, who is watching the phantom ship from the pier. He sends Melissa back to her lover. Zoe swears eternal faithfulness to the Flying Dutchman and jumps off the dock. She and the phantom ship are swallowed up by the waters.

Faithfully and artistically executed is this adaptation of Wagner's opera. The Dutch village is portrayed in all its quaintness. There are the little houses and windmills, the Inn and the fishing boats. It is rather difficult to tell a story within a story, but the interest never drags. The few scenes of modern times serve merely to introduce and close the picture.

The burgomaster's tale runs smoothly into the main theme of the film. The photography is good. The moving picture is a good medium for a tale of this kind, one that requires the "phantomizing" of the Flying Dutchman and his ship. All the characters are well portrayed. Walter Law as Peter Van Dorn, the burgomaster, and Ella Hall as the wistful little cripple deserve special commendation.

Aside from its being an adaptation of the opera—which fact in itself has drawing power, the film has an appeal of its own. A fantasy is welcome as a change from modern tales, especially if it is a fantasy with sustaining interest, and "The Flying Dutchman" will bring forth no complaints from the box-office.

Stormy Seas

Associated Exhibitors Photoplay in five parts. Author, Arthur W. Donaldson. Director, J. P. McGowan. Running time, fifty-five minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Captain Morgan J. P. McGowan
 Mary Weems Helen Holmes
 George Trent Leslie J. Casev
 Angus McBride Harry Dalroy
 Storm Weems Francis Seymour
 Slorty Gordon Knapp
 Captain John Morgan, commanding the new liner of the Weems Company, is engaged to Mary Weems. A steamer named after Mary is commanded by George Trent, a pal of Morgan's, who also loves Mary. Morgan breaks a promise to Mary, drinks, loses his reckoning and wrecks his vessel. Later

Trent finds Morgan an outcast, and determines to restore his manhood for Mary's sake. He takes him aboard and works him in the stoke hole. In a fight with a fireman who ill-treats a boy, Morgan finds himself again. The Yacht Duchess, with Mary and her father aboard, is afire and sends a call for assistance. Trent and Morgan on the bridge combine to send their vessel at racing speed to the rescue. A breakdown occurs, George Trent goes to the burning yacht in a motor launch and saves Mary and old Weems. Morgan realizes that George Trent is the man Mary loves and gives her up to him.

There is abundantly good marine stuff in this well filmed thriller of the high seas, which can safely be listed as appropriate hot weather entertainment, when the cooling glamor of the many excellent water views are taken into consideration. Like most melodramas of its type, "Stormy Seas" does not carry conviction, if one is unkindly critical and inclined to analyze the "whys and wherefores" of the plot. But those who rejoice in ocean romance with lurid trimmings, without caring a continental whether logic holds sway or not, will probably pronounce this film "a winner" in entertainment values.

J. P. McGowan and his leading woman, Helen Holmes, are usually seen in roles demanding extreme physical action and accomplishment of various agile "stunts," but cast respectively as Captain Morgan and Mary Weems they both appear under an entirely new light. McGowan wins sympathy by his portrayal of the derelict seaman and Miss Holmes is a satisfactory heroine. The support is adequate.

Among the many fine photographic effects must be mentioned the burning of the yacht, as well as the driving of the steamer Mary Weems to the rescue. The long shots are wonderfully artistic and the light and shadow touches unique in conception and execution. In exploiting the feature play up the sea romance and thrills stuff, the title is a good one to emphasize, and both J. P. McGowan and Miss Holmes are worthy of extensive advertising in certain localities.

 Chiquita Jones Esther Rawlston
 Porky Schaup Eddie Gribbon
 Jacky Williams Tom McGuire
 The finances of Lord Waring were at a low ebb and he suggested that his son, The Hon. Cecil Fitzhugh Waring, go to America and establish a matrimonial alliance with the daughter of a rich American. Cecil didn't like the idea, but came to America with the idea of seeking a job. But he found jobs scarce. One hungry morning he met Teddy Walters, of a late theatrical job, now broke, but with a couple of doughnuts left which she gladly shared with Cecil. They became very chummy. Cecil reached a point where he accepted a job as waiter. Here, in an impromptu argument, he knocked out a prominent prize-fighter. His fistic ability was noticed by an ex-fight promoter and Cecil became his protege. The Britisher finally won the lightweight crown and saved the family estate just about the time that the old man had it fixed for the son to marry the daughter of a chewing gum magnate, but son preferred another title.

This is a fast moving story and should appeal to any audience in general and especially so to the admirers of Herbert Rawlinson. It is a romantic little comedy, with serious moments and an interesting plot well developed. It contains a touch of the "ring" and the fight scenes are good.

Rawlinson is satisfactory in his role as the gentleman pugilist. Dorothy Manners makes an attractive heroine and the remainder of the cast lends good support.

Broadway Gold

Truart production for State right distribution. Author, W. Carey Wonderly. Directed by Edward Dillion and J. Gordon Cooper. Length, 6800 feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Sunny Duane Elaine Hammerstein
 Jean Valjean Kathryn Williams
 Eugene Durant Elliot Dexter
 Elmor Calhoun Elois Goodale
 Cornelius Fellowes Richard Wayne
 Jerome Rogers Henry Barrows
 The Driver Marshall Neilan

Sunny Duane, a newcomer to Broadway, attends a very gay party along with Jean Valjean, another chorus girl. Returning from the affair with her escort, the wealthy Cornelius Fellowes, Sunny becomes involved in a mysterious shooting in which Fellowes is killed. That same evening Fellowes' friend, Eugene Durant, is seriously injured in an automobile accident, and for some strange reason of his own requests that Sunny marry him before he dies. She is persuaded to do this. The investigation of the murder leads finally to Sunny, who takes up her residence at the Long Island home of Fellowes, who is now on the road to recovery at the hospital. The detectives are on their way to question Sunny, when Page Poole, a nephew of Fellowes and a youth who was in love with Sunny, appears. The arrival of the detectives sends him away in feverish haste, for he is wanted for forgery. He drives his auto at breakneck speed and crashes with a locomotive. In a dying condition Page confesses he shot Fellowes. The ending shows Sunny and her husband, now recovered fully from his injuries, happily married and in their sumptuous home.

There is pictorial glitter, melodramatic glamor and a display of some fine acting to be derived from a viewing of "Broadway Gold," Truart offering through state rights channels. The story is melodrama with the mystery element emphasized and involving a pretty chorus girl whose knowledge of Broadway is rather limited until she attends the gaudy and expensive party at the "Black Swan."

The role of Sunny Duane is one in which Elaine Hammerstein puts forth her best efforts, and with so capable and resourceful an actress as Kathleen Williams to share the center of the screen with her there is possibly much more interest to the play than the story on its own could achieve.

The directors, Edward Dillion and J. Gordon Cooper, evidently were given a free hand to go ahead and make the setting for the action as dressy as the occasion demanded. In consequence there are many backgrounds of the garish order of "Broadway melodrama."

"Broadway Gold" is very "plotty."

The situation is the motive for many of the actions of the characters. The people have a way of wanting to telephone or drive their motors more out of consideration for the dramatic possibilities ahead than anything else.

These are all turned to full account by the players and the directors, with the result that much may be expected of "Broadway Gold" when brought before that public which votes strongly for melodrama.

The Brass Bottle

First National Photoplay in six parts. Author, F. Anstey. Scenario, by Fred Myton. Director, Maurice Tourneur. Cameraman, Arthur Todd. Running time, sixty-five minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Horace Ventimore	Harry Myers
Fakresh, the Genie	Ernest Torrence
Professor Hamilton	Tully Marshall
Mrs. Hamilton	Clarissa Selwyn
Rapkin	Ford Sterling
Mrs. Rapkin	Aggie Herring
Marjorie Hamilton	Charlotte Merriam
Samuel Wackerbath	Ed. Jobson
The Queen	Barbara La Marr
Captain of The Guard	Otis Harlan

In the reign of King Solomon, Fakresh, a Genie, plots against his royal master, is discovered, sealed up in a brass bottle and thrown into the sea. Six thousand years later, Horace Ventimore, young London architect, becomes possessor of the bottle at an auction. It is opened and Fakresh, grateful for release, promises to reward Ventimore. Through the Genie's exertions Horace finds miracles occurring all around him, his humble rooms are turned into an Arabian palace, clients come to him, but his sweetheart, Marjorie Hamilton, and her father, a professor, are shocked by the Oriental magnificence of the young man's home and a wealthy customer resents the erection of an Asiatic palace on his land, instead of the English homestead he ordered. A quarrel between the Genie and Marjorie's father results in Fakresh turning the professor into a mule. The professor finally regains his human form. Fakresh, whose magic caused so much trouble for Horace, disappears forever and the lovers are united.

A curious, fantastic film, a mixture of magic, romance and comedy, "The Brass Bottle" will furnish joyous amusement for entertainment-seekers who are tired of being in earnest and willing to give their fancies free play. Certain seriously in-Fakresh emerging from the bottle in cloudy grandeur ranks as a rare bit of film trickery.

Harry Myers plays the part of the hero Ventimore with a gravity which goes far toward making the whole genie complication seem quite convincing; Tully Marshall, as the old professor who is turned into a mule and back again, furnishes a character sketch brimful of humorous appeal; Ernest Torrence is a truly sinister and horrifying impressive figure as Fakresh; Barbara La Marr and Charlotte Merriam are charming in their respective roles and well-balanced support is supplied by the remainder of the company.

For exploitation purposes, the use of Eastern costumes for usurers in theatres where this is feasible, may be suggested. Exhibitors limited in their advertising possibilities will do well to stress the general excellence of the cast, the picture's photographic charm and attract patrons by a generous display of stills in lobbies. Andrew Dorsey	Conrad Nagel
Vivian Hepburn	Nita Naldi
Guy Tarlow	Lew Cody
Sonny Dorsey	Russell Griffin
Billy Van de Vere	Yvonne Hughes
Nora	Dolores Costello
Dancer	Gilda Gray

During his wife's absence Andrew Dorsey is snared by Guy Tarlow and his mistress, Vivian Hepburn, who runs a gambling house, and dupe Dorsey for $25,000. Marion Dorsey determines to retrieve her husband's misfortune. She becomes a visitor to the gambling resort, succeeds in making Tarlow fall in love with her and finally persuades him to rob Vivian's safe and elope. Her object is to get the note signed by her husband for the $25,000. Tarlow and Marion proceed to carry out this plan. He opens the safe and she sends him upstairs to obtain Vivian's jewels. When he returns Marion has gone with the contents of the safe. Tarlow and Vivian go to the Dorsey home. Marion returns everything except the money and note lost by her husband. The crooks leave and Marion and her spouse face a happy future together.

As a stage attraction "Lawful Larceny" scored a decided hit and there is reason to believe that the film version will win widespread popularity. There is always a demand for crook plays, especially those dealing with the polished type of thieves operating in society circles and this feature was received with a warm degree of enthusiasm when given its initial metropolitan showing at the Rivoli Theatre, New York. Director Allan Dwan made a few minor al-

The picture affords good entertainment, Hope Hampton does excellent work in the role of the wife who, when she finds out that her husband has been making a fool of himself, wastes no time in recrimination but starts off at once to meet plot with counter-plot, trick the crooks in their turn and retrieve hubby's financial losses. Nita Naldi fills the adventuress role to perfection; Conrad Nagel, as the weakling Dorsey, and Lew Cody as Guy Tarlow, give satisfactory performances and the support is capable.

Among the extremely handsome interior scenes that of the supper party at The Rendezvous, wherein Gilda Gray and two other dancers sway gracefully through the mazes of a South Sea dance, deserves particular mention. The exteriors are well filmed and the lighting is clear and distinct. The action moves rapidly, there is plenty of suspense and a bully climax, warranted to please everyone. The film can be exploited as an exciting crook drama, with some telling comedy touches, presented by a strong cast and alive with human interest.

clined folk may frown upon the picture's merry absurdities, but it is a pretty safe bet that most movie fans will laugh to the limit over the hero's dealings with the genie who insists upon showering supposed benefits upon him, all of which bring temporary disaster in their trail.

Director Maurice Tourneur has done wonders in the way of diffusing the mystic spirit of the mysterious East through the picture and contrasting the land of shadows and demons with the practical, prosaic life of modern London. So well has he handled the situations that it is quite easy to let one's imagination drift away on the tide of hero Ventimore's extraordinary adventures and accept the unbottled genie as an interesting possibility. And nobody can find fault with the plot on the score of originality, which is something to be thankful for in these days of rehashed film themes.

The prologue depicts Fakresh's vain rebellion against King Solomon and is a thing of really exquisite beauty, such as Tourneur excels in executing. The dancing shots at the London banquet are also pleasing, the settings throughout magnificent and ever and anon aglow with the bizarre color of the Orient. The photography is of uniformly fine quality, the London night scenes are sterling examples of camera technique and the illusion of terations in the original plot to meet the exigencies of the screen, but for the most part the story runs as conceived by the author, the snappy stage dialogue is preserved intact and "get across" with admirable effect in the subtitles.

The domestic troubles of Jules Lamont and his wife come to a head when he deserts her, having yielded to the fascinations of Jo Cateau's spouse, a former chorus girl. Cateau vows revenge and a struggle takes place between him and Jules, resulting in Cateau's death. As a consequence this deed Jules is arrested and lodged in jail. While there he makes the acquaintance of a man who resembles him so strongly that the two can hardly be distinguished one from the other. His double's name is Lebec. The latter goes to Jules's home and successfully passes himself off as Lamont, but complications ensue when Cateau's wife, the original cause of all the trouble, learns that her erstwhile lover has returned. Lebec is deeply entangled but the genuine Lamont is finally slain, Lebec tells the truth to Mrs. Lamont, whose affections he has gained, and wins her consent to their marriage.

"The Man Between" registers as a rather mediocre picture which may serve as a program attraction in the cheaper class of theatres, but does not measure up to the entertainment standard demanded by critical audiences. It is not lacking in melodramatic thrills, but the story on the whole is unconvincing and its continuity woefully "jumpy" in spots.

Finis Fox's usually unerring directorial hand seems to have lost much of its cunning in handling the material: there is an unnecessary elaboration of detail which slows up the action at times and gives rise to a suspicion of "padding" in order to lengthen the feature. As a matter of fact the film would be all the better for careful pruning and should have been confined to a five reel compass.

The plot hinges upon an extraordinary resemblance between the hero and the husband of Mrs. Lamont, the latter a gentleman of philandering tendencies which land him in serious trouble and finally lead to his imprisonment and death. Allan Forrest plays the dual role well; Edna Murphy, as Zephne, and Kitty Bradbury, as Mrs. Lamont, give excellent performances, and the support is adequate. The photography throughout is of first-grade quality, the cabaret scenes are handsomely filmed, there are some pretty exteriors, and good lighting prevails.

The picture can be best exploited as a melodrama with a bit of a mystery angle, featuring Allan Forrest in localities where he has a following and presented by a good supporting cast. G. T. P.

Tom Steele, a cowboy, loses his job when his violent temper runs away with him and he too thoroughly trounces one of his fellows. Riding along the railroad track he picks up a handkerchief dropped by The Girl from the observation platform of a train, returns it to her, and has it handed back. In the East, John Steele, Tom's uncle, also the possessor of a violent temper, commissions his lawyer to travel west and investigate the condition of Tom's disposition. The result is favorable to the former cowboy and the latter returns with the lawyer. The uncle decides to subject his nephew to a test to determine if the young man has yet mastered the family frailty. He tells the lawyer to announce the death of John Steele and to install Tom in full possession of the estate subject to his keeping out of a fight for thirty days, otherwise the property is to be turned over to the representative of the Blue Law League. The latter learns of the provision and does everything in his power to trip Tom. In the meantime the young man has found The Girl and the two become firm friends. In accordance with the will Tom assumes the position of manager of the Road House, and begins operations by stopping all liquor drinking. One of the attractions of the house is a masked dancer. Tom discovers one of the employes annoying the dancer road sees the Girl drop her handkerchief. Tom puts spurs to Tony, the beautiful animal under him, makes a deep and graceful swoop, recovers the bit of linen and goes in pursuit.

A hundred feet ahead a high fence bars the way. Again the spurs are used and Tony responds. From a point somewhere in front we see the graceful animal sail birdlike into the air and clear the fence, landing lightly, and with increased speed bring up alongside the platform. It is all beautifully done.

The fight back at the ranch when the big chap pokes fun at the handkerchief so tenderly stowed away by the cowboy is a real rough and tumble. There is another of the same sort when Tom, installed as a clerk in a shoestore, is located by the big fellow seeking revenge. The latter lands out on the sidewalk, but the store surely is in a condition of disrepair.

The foregoing merely touches on the introduction, but it soundly establishes interest in the hero. The characterization of the various parts has been carefully handled by Mr. Blystone. Particularly is this true in showing the tempers of the nephew and his uncle. One of the eccentricities of the latter is the breaking of canes. To such an extent does this obtain that the Colored Butler, finely played by Tom Wilson, keeps a closetful of sticks for replacement purposes.

We are not going to attempt to describe the wealth of incident in this delightful comedy-drama. Distinctly it is not a western subject, although in the initial phases it is true there is a sure-enough breeze from the desert country. Tony, the horse, is not the only animal either who enters into the story, there being a big dog who takes his role in acceptable fashion.

There is a minimum of pathos, too, as Tom meets with the children of the sick woman whose urgent necessities are ministered to by The Girl, whose chief aid Tom quickly becomes. There is melodrama, in chunks, when Tom goes after the cabaret employe to even up scores. The sterner moments are lightened and leavened by the antics of the Butler with his razor and much used strop as he tries to get into the muss. The final fight is one of the high spots of a finely played and directed production to which an exhibitor may go with a vim and with the feeling he is doing his patrons a favor by letting them in on it.

The picture is a special attraction and will be released August 26. G. B.

Radio-Mania

A Herman Holland production distributed by R. William Neil. Adapted for the screen by Lewis Allen Browne. Length, 5400 feet. CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Arthur Wyman Grant Mitchell
Mary Langdon Margaret Irving
Mrs. Langdon Gertrude Hillman
Mr. Sterling W. H. Burton

Arthur Wyman, radioist, essayist and inventor, is ejected from his rooming house for failing to pay his rent. Mary Langdon, a neighbor, finds that her mother is planning to take a lodger and offers Arthur the room. He is able to take it because he receives a two-thousand-dollar check as a prize for an essay on the Einstein theory. Arthur uses most of his money to install a huge radio outfit with which he hopes to talk to Mars. One evening, during an attempt to reach that planet, a bolt of lightning strikes the instrument and stuns Arthur. While recuperating from the shock, Mary prevails upon him to invent a tickless alarm clock—her employer, a jeweler, having agreed that there would be a fortune in it. Arthur succeeds in making a silent time-piece but does not think much of the invention—his heart is in his radio outfit. The next time he tries to communicate with Mars he falls asleep. He dreams that he gets in touch with Mars and obtains formulae for converting clay into gold and coal into diamonds and for making lighter-than-air steel. These make him a millionaire. His bitterness upon finding that it is all a dream makes him destroy his outfit and throw away his books. Mary rescues him from despair by introducing Mr. Sterling, her employer. He offers to place Arthur's tickless alarm clock on the market and buy a half interest in it. Arthur accepts and Mary consents to marry him immediately.

"Radio-Mania" was originally shown under the title "Mars" at the Selwyn Theatre as a demonstration of the Televue. The film has been retitled, cut and reissued. It is another "dream" picture, with the dream the liveliest part of it. In real life things happen too conveniently to the hero for the film to be convincing. While he is sitting on the lawn surrounded by his worldly possessions which the landlady has forced him to remove, the postman brings him a letter containing $2000 and Mr. Sterling, the jeweler, obligingly waits until he is in the depths of despair to offer to put his alarm clock on the market.

The dream, however, is very entertaining by reason of its fantasy. The people of Mars are shown as grotesque individuals with huge skulls to contain their large brains. The scenes of Arthur as a millionaire in his factory where he makes diamonds and gold and refutes the laws of gravity are amusing. Some of the titles are a bit sugary. Grant Mitchell could perhaps be funnier as the "single-viewed" genius, but on the whole he is satisfactory.

Mary Langdon is a suitable feminine support. The fantastic portion of the picture—Mars and the manufacture of gold and diamonds—are probably the best parts to exploit. The title will also aid greatly in "drawing them." D. R.

Broken Hearts of Broadway

An Irving Cummings production to be state righted. Suggested by James Kyrle MacCurdy's play of the same name. Adapted by Hope Loring and Louis Duryea Lighton. Director, Irving Cummings. Length, 6600 feet. CAST AND SYNOPSIS

To a down-and-out would-be playwright a cabman tells a story of how a girl wins success as an actress and a man as a song writer. The tale fades in on Mary Ellis, who comes to the city to make her fortune and is taken to a theatrical boarding and then he discovers it is The Girl. He avoids a fight, determined to await the end of the thirty days. He does not know that the employe is in conspiracy with the Blue Law leader. At the expiration of the time limit Tom starts in to avenge the insults that have been put upon The Girl. There is a fight, in which Tom eventually wins, and as the couple start on their honeymoon aboard the family yacht the uncle appears in the life.

"Soft Boiled" is a corking good comedy from the jump. Jump is right, for in the first couple of hundred feet there is a thrill big enough to satisfy any ordinary person. The cowboy riding easily alongside the rail-house. She meets Bubbles Revere, whose philosophy is take what you can get from any man and give him nothing in return. Mary refuses to accept this viewpoint, and as a result of her strict ideas is unsuccessful in obtaining employment. She meets George Colton and helps him in his song writing. Tony, an artist, is infatuated with Bubbles. At a party at which the four celebrate a minor success they meet Barry and Frank, two wealthy young men, and the latter make appointments with the girls. Through Frank Mary makes a place in a chorus, but is dismissed when she refuses to accept a bracelet from her admirer. George obtains a place for Mary in a Chinese cabaret with him, but the two are discharged when George resents the attempt of Frank to embrace Mary. When Peale is found murdered in his car Mary is accused of the murder. Bubbles, who through the death has lost her luxurious home, appeals to Tony to admit his crime. George overhears the conversation, induces Tony to confess, and Mary is free. While waiting her final liberation George begins the composition of a song. From the song he writes a play, which is a success, Mary playing the star role. The outcast playwright gets a new grip on life.

Here is a picture that every exhibitor should see for himself, in order that he may estimate its value for his house. It is our view that the subject will have a definite appeal for the less sophisticated, for those whose ideas of Broadway are gathered from what they read rather than what they see. In other words, we believe the picture will strike the fancy of the showman in the smaller communities and will be less likely to interest the man who caters to a patronage well acquainted with the ways of the world in large centres.

The subject is well played. A glance at the cast will certify to that. Alice Lake as the philosophical golddigger, who believes any girl in New York is justified in taking from a man anything she can get her hands on, plays her role for all it is worth. It is a striking, a dashing, characterization, and stands out.

Colleen Moore gives a good performance. Tully Marshall is seen for but a bit, but it counts in the whole. Kate Price, as the landlady, is as breezy as always and as human and likable. Johnny Walker gets out of his part what there is in it.

The subject is one that will lend itself to exploitation, although care should be exercised that the job be not overdone. As the heroine hails from a small community and is thrown into the whirl of a city, with its well-to-do young men and gold-digging young women, there is readymade a theme that will interest those removed from such temptations. But see it for yourself.

The Scarlet Lily

First National Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Fred Sittenham. Scenario by Lois Zellner and Florence Hein. Director, Victor Schertzinger. Cameraman, Joseph Brotherton. Running time, sixty-five minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dora Mason Katherine MacDonald
Molly Mason Jane Miskinin
Lawson Dean Orville Caldwell
Jessup Barnes Stuart Holmes
Mrs. Barnes Edith Lyle
Trixie Montressa Adele Farrington
Laurence Peyton Gordon Russell
Beatrice Milo Grace Morse
John Rankin Lincoln Stedman

Out of work and with her little sister Molly in ill health to support, Dora Mason accepts the loan of Jessup Barnes' apartment for two months, during his absence. Barnes' wife, seeking a divorce, has Barnes trailed. The latter is discovered visiting Dora and scandal results. Dora goes to a friend's hunting lodge in the mountains. Molly dies. Lawson Dean, a lawyer, falls in love with Dora. They are wed. Lawson runs for district attorney against Barnes. Lawson's opponents threaten to publish the story of Dora's occupations of Barnes' apartment unless he withdraws from the election. Dora explains to her husband but he refuses to believe her. She takes steps to vindicate herself, with the result that Barnes resigns his nomination, leaving the way clear for Lawson, who becomes reconciled to Dora.

The many admirers of Katherine MacDonald will be highly pleased with their favorite's work in this picture as Dora Mason, a heroine who is badly buffeted by the winds of ill luck for a certain space of time, but finds happiness at the finish.

The role is an exacting one, demanding considerable emotional ability, and Miss MacDonald plays it in simple, sincere fashion, thereby demonstrating her keen sense of dramatic values, for the slightest trace of overacting or affectation would have entirely spoiled the characterization of this girl victim of unjust rumor. There is really nothing very original about the plot, but Director Victor Schertzinger has made excellent use of its sentimental urge, knowing through long experience that movie fans are ever inclined to favor a maiden wrongfully accused and fighting for her good name.

Feminine patrons will respond to the lure of a variety of beautiful gowns worn by the star, which set off her physical charms to the best advantage, and despite the scandal in which the heroine becomes involved and on which the action principally hinges there are no suggestive situations in evidence. The continuity is smooth and matters speed along at a rapid rate until the climax is reached, when Dora triumphs and her husband admits that he has been more or less of a short-sighted idiot.

Besides Katherine MacDonald's clever impersonation of Dora Mason, the bright, snappy performance given by Adele Farrington in the role of Trixie Montressa deserves especial mention. Stuart Holmes fits into the villain niche with his customary sneery efficiency, and the support as a whole is capable. There are numerous pretty outdoor views recorded by the camera, with artistic long shots, perfect lighting effects and handsome interiors. The film's title is a catchy one and can be utilized freely in exploiting it, while the star's name and the strength of her supporting cast are of value as advertising assets.

The Barefoot Boy

Produced by Mission Films Inc. Directed by David Kirkland. Story by Wallace C. Clifton. Camera work by David Abel. Length, 5800 feet. Running time, one hour and ten minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Mary Truesdale as a child Gertie Messinger

Dick Alden is the barefoot hoy of Oakdale and the scapegoat of the town; the victim of whom the villagers place the blame for every untoward happening. Cuffed about and beaten, he finally leaves home vowing to come back and get even with everyone in the village. In the years that follow he lives with on subject in view-revenge. With prosperity comes opportunity to carry his plan into execution. He buys Oakdale's one factory and announces he will close it down, depriving the villagers of their means of livelihood. An old rival decides to blow up the mill and obtain vengeance on Alden. The latter is caught in the explosion with his sweetheart of years past. Several things happen quickly and he learns revenge was not meant for him. Love opens his eyes and when his childhood sweetheart promises to wed him, he becomes a leading citizen of the town that once despised him.

The locale of "The Barefoot Boy," first production of Mission Films, Inc., is laid in a small backwoods town when horseless carriages were new and Bryan was first running for President. Consequently the director had splendid opportunity for color and characterization and took full advantage of it. In fact much of the charm of this picture is in its quaint types. These being presented by a cast that knows its business, provided droll comedy that relieved the rather extreme melodrama developed by the director.

Taking for his theme the futility of harboring revenge when there is a higher law looking after such matters, Mr. Clifton wrote a story based on the poem of John Greenleaf Whittier, which moves in perfectly human and smooth channels to a logical and convincing conclusion. Along the way are interspersed two or three thrills that would have seemed dragged in had not motivation required something of the kind. It appears the director could have taken more advantage of the opportunity presented by a school fire and fall of a carriage over a cliff. As presented the kick sought just seems to lack a keen edge, due, in the carriage scene particularly, to faulty photographic angles that could be remedied by judicious cutting.

But there is so much to "The Barefoot Boy" that the few minor defects do not harm it noticeably. It has charm and entertainment value. Shown to three different public audiences, it registered exceedingly well, and will go in the list of the season's box office pictures.

The tempo in the first two reels is retarded by the introduction of numerous comedy characters, but it never drags sufficiently to lose interest. Mr. Kirkland has shown judgment in shading his comedy and drama to the right balance. The whole should go over big with audiences who like clean drama intermixed with humor, thrill punch and a modicum of pathos not too thickly spread.

The new company displayed intelligence in obtaining high class players for the cast. Every role is well done and there are many of them. John Bowers is a manly lead burning with the fires of revenge; Marjorie Daw is a charming heroine who succeeds in quenching these fires; Frankie Lee is excellent as the barefoot boy in his early youth and Raymond Hatton as the town's most distinguished citizen, in his own mind, provides no end of drollery. Tully Marshall as the town ne'er-do-well, who afterward becomes a leading citizen, gives his usual top-notch performance.

Sylvia Breamer, Virginia True Boardman, Otis Harlan and Gertie Messinger, in minor but cameo parts, give creditable performances.

Fans who go to view this production can do so with the assurance they will see a picture honestly and capably made for entertainment only. There are great possibilities for exploitation in the title, the name of Whittier, the names in the cast and theme.

Double Suspicion, Universal

Neal Hart is the star of this western two-reeler, a reissued picture. Dad Ward, partner of John Carter, the sheriff, assumes the guilt of a robbery of which he thinks John guilty. John tries to save him, but Mike Martin, the real thief, is finally caught and the partners are cleared. Some of the situations appear to have been deliberately concocted but the film will appeal to all who like western melodrama.

5. In Our Broadcasting Studio
6. Three Wise Fools (Goldwyn)
7. Organ Solo

Press Comments

World.—It develops excellent entertainment. Times.—One can say without fear of contradiction that seldom have a stage play been adapted for the screen with better results than those obtained in this film. Tribune.—“Three Wise Fools” we consider superior in every way to the stage production. American.—The impression is left that this is one of the most engrossing pictures of its kind seen in several months. Telegram.—Seldom, if ever, has any photoplay, or spoken drama, for that matter, had such a rich blending of mellow old actors. Sun.

RIVOLI

1. Overture—Martha

ENEMIES SUPPLEMENT

THE BEST OF SERIES

The yellow sheet exploitation supplement which Eddie Bonns, manager of exploitation for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, and W. R. Ferguson, his assistant, have prepared on Cosmopolitan's production of "Enemies of Women" is the most complete and helpful of the "personal Service" bulletins originated by Mr. Bonns. It is more comprehensive, illustrating more different angles of exploitation than any of the previous yellow sheet supplements.

A preliminary note calls attention to the enormous value of the publicity which "Enemies of Women" has received in the past and still continues to receive in the Hearst publications.

Among the exploitation ideas which have already been tried out with this production the supplement outlines the following:

Gold Star Mothers' matinee sponsored by the Boston Telegram at Loew's State Theatre in Boston. Laundries and bakeries tied up on the idea that wash tubs and hot ovens are enemies of women used in Kansas City. Local market co-operation staged by the Rivoli Theatre in Portland, Oregon.

ACTION FOR MACLEAN

FILM WITH PEP LINES

Macon, Ga.—Teaser cartoon ads were used by manager J. A. Flournoy of the Criterion Theatre, to work up interest for "A Man of Action." Little box ads, one and a half inches deep with ink sketches furnished the media. The copy read:

"When all else fails—show her you're a man of action. Full directions at the Criterion. The world is full of tombstones. Be a man of action. Dead spark plugs never ran a car or won a girl. Be a man of action. If she yawns when you get mushy, show her you're a man of action. If Mary has a little lamb and wants a roaring lion show her you're a man of action."

Each catch line was followed by the slogan "Full directions at the Criterion."

The unusual feature of the campaign was that the teaser cartoons were used coincidentally with the display advertising. Manager Flournoy claims that in this way he brought out the connection better and made plain to every one what it was all about.

GETS ENDORSEMENT

OF PHOTOPLAY COUNCIL

St. Louis, Mr. — "Lorna Doone" while playing the Capitol, West Lyric and Lyric Skydome, day and date was enthusiastically recommended to everybody in St. Louis by the St. Louis Motion Picture Council, an organization composed of various women's clubs and one representative from the Board of Education.

The book is used as a textbook in the St. Louis public schools, and for that reason the First National office here had little trouble with tying-up the Picture Council and School Teachers.

"Lorna Doone" went on the list of the St. Louis Motion Picture Council as a subject classified, "good for the entire family."

USES PART OF PLOT

IN TEASER CAMPAIGN

Harvey, Ill.—The possibility of praying anyone to death formed the foundation for a unique and interesting campaign put over by Bill Danziger, Paramount Exploiteer to exploit "The White Flower" when it played at the Garden Theatre, recently.

Local physicians were interviewed by Danziger and their opinion in the matter furnished matter newsy enough to make the grade and create comment on all sides. This also is the first time a publicity story of this sort has ever been seen in the newspaper.

Profitable

Florists tied up the picture with Mother's Day and gave 10 free tickets to the first ten shoppers on Sunday. The ukulele proved the worth of the music stores in giving a window to the cause, and a Victrola was loaned to the theatre for a prologue.

O. L. MEISTER RECALLS THE GOOD OLD DAYS

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Vaudette motion picture theatre, within six months of being the oldest house of its kind in Milwaukee, is being torn down. This house, located on Third street between Grand Avenue and Wells Street, in the center of the downtown section, was opened as a movie house by O. L. Meister, dean of Milwaukee movie showmen, now manager of the White House, with a production of the Honey Bunch Minstrels.

Later the theater was rebuilt with a seating capacity of 500.

"I'll never forget the sensation which The Glass Coffin made when I put up a lobby display of a wax figure encased in a glass coffin—which I built out of tarleton," said Mr. Meister. "The theatre men were scandalized and the public lifted its eyebrows. People would pass and repass the old Vaudette look at that figure in the coffin, and then they would say, 'Gracious, I hope nobody sees me going in here,' and pay their nickel and keep on coming."

According to Mr. Meister as many as 2,800 people a day saw performances in the old Vaudette. The films ran about fifteen minutes.

"The old Vaudette was the first motion picture theatre to bring a film star to Milwaukee in person. It happened that Lillian Knight, the star of Heart Throbs, one of the old Bronco productions was a Milwaukee girl. She came here to rest and I found out she was in town. I booked the film and had her appear at each performance. Her lecture was a great hit."

DUCERN REPEATS TIE UP ON SAFETY PATROL

The annual awarding of prizes to members of Newark's public Schools Safety Patrol afforded manager R. J. Ducern of the Fox Terminal Theatre an exceptional opportunity for an exploitation tie-up last year, and when the occasion for the awards repeated itself in June of this year, he availed himself again of the Publicity vehicle.

In 1922 Manager Ducern arranged to have Tom Mix, the Fox star, made an honorary member of the Newark Patrol and accordingly the star offers an annual prize watch to the member of the organization who is selected as having performed the most meritorious act.

The school children of Newark interested in the patrol work number in the thousands, and Ducern arranged to have the awards granted from the stage of his theatre. Thus the whole body of students marched from various sections of the city bearing banners denoting his destination.

The event was thoroughly covered by newspapers both in advance and following the ceremony.

CHILL COPY FOR

MASTER OF WOMAN

The Dallas Dispatch printed a page of the Metro branch for the "Master of Woman" which should make good copy for exhibitors on that feature or any play with a northern locale.

The story stated in part:

"'Master of Woman' will apply a grateful ice-pack to the fevered brow of summer screen audiences.

"Filmed under the lash of blizzard and the frost-bite of Canadian winter, this lavishly done melodrama of the trading posts is dignified by majestic setting in the sub-Arctic solitudes.

"No danger of chilblains, however, for Renee Adoree's piquant personality and fervid acting bring intermittent thaws. She brings to the leading feminine role the vitality, versatility and characterization which not only lift the production out of the rut of northland plays but seem to put stardom within her reach."

FAMILY RATES BOOST

SERIAL CAMPAIGN

Duncan, Okla.—As a special attraction for the opening of the Patheserial "Plunder" the Folly Theatre, L. E. Brewer, manager of the Folly, issued throwaways, advising the people of a special reduction in admission prices to forty cents for a whole family. A space was left at the bottom for patrons to sign their names, and were presented by the families on entering the theatre. One of the families applying for admission consisted of seventeen members and were admitted for forty cents.

In order to encourage thrift in the young people, Mr. Brewer arranged an additional attraction for the second episode of "Plunder." Through the medium of advance heralds, he announced that he would give away free of charge, 200 "Plunder" bank novelties, containing money, to the first 200 boys and girls attending.

NEWSPAPER EXPLOITS

PHOTOPLAY STORY

Cleveland.—A newspaper tie-up exploiting "The Ragged Edge," Distinctive's picturization of the Harold MacGrath story, when it showed at the Mall and Park theatres was obtained by Eddie Carrier, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exploitation man for that territory, with the Cleveland News-Leader.

Through the Sunday editor of that publication, Carrier was able to arrange for the publication complete of the story, "The Ragged Edge," in the Sunday edition of the News-Leader on the day when the picture opened its local showing. The rights for newspaper publication in Cleveland were purchased by the News-Leader.

The tie-up extended further than this. Five thousand posters, containing a reproduction of a "Ragged Edge" still, were printed by the newspaper to advertise the publication of the story in its Sunday issue.

Bass, The Next Best Thing

Wildwood, N. J.—Norman C. Johnston, exploitation manager for Hunt's Casino Theatre, put over a good one recently during the showing of "Down to the Sea in Ships."

Unable to procure a whale for advertising purposes Mr. Johnston managed to get possession of a large black sea bass caught by a local angler. This he hung in the front of the theatre. There was a neatly lettered card which read "See what a 90-ton whale does to a 30-foot boat in 'Down to the Sea in Ships.' P. S. This is the nearest to a whale that we could find on the island."

Showmanship In Lobby, Street And Press

Lobby display for the Broadway Theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma, featuring the presentation of United Artists "Tess of the Storm Country." The reproduction of the fishing village which forms the background for Mary Pickford's play proved an attraction that made talk and drew patronage.

Long Beach, Calif., had a campaign urging motor drivers to "safety first" practices. The enterprise of the exploitation men therefore served the community. The tie-up was for First National's "Within the Law," showing at the Liberty Theatre.

DIRECTION JENSEN & VON HERBERG

Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Portland, Ore., featured a Goldwyn week, a Goldwyn feature showing at each of the four houses advertising above in the cooperative page. Usually these theatres carry separate ads but for the special week this is the sort of copy used to drive home the particular feature of the campaign.

An army balloon carrying a banner sixty feet in length with "Foolish Wives," played up in letters about five feet tall, was anchored to the top of the Columbia Theatre some time before starting out on a flight. The stunt was arranged by Manager Charles Gross of the Columbia and created quite a stir in Dayton.

The front of the Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, all dressed up in boy fashion for the presentation of First National's "Penrod and Sam." The regular 24-sheet was hung over the marquee and a special cut-out worked up from the same piece was hung over the doorway. The Empress looked like Penrod's own theatre for this presentation.

A stunt man made of straw and some rags. The thrills of "Safety Last" was indicated to the people of Wildwood, N. J. The figure in the chair was controlled by wires and at certain intervals was pulled back until it toppled over. The rear legs of the chair were hinged to the roof.

First National has been making border decorations and supplying them in mat form on recent productions. Above is the border design as it was used for a two page layout on "The Girl of the Golden West." The cuts were all of the stock variety so no art work was necessary when this display was worked up. The ad was run by the Criterion Theatre, Macon, Ga.

The same border for "The Girl of the Golden West" used for cooperative advertising by the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis. Much of the merchant copy in the spread featured the title and the theatre. One of the most prominent ads in the layout was for the presentation of the play by the Stuart Walker Company, which advocated theatre patrons to see both the film and the stage version.

"That's My Baby" is the title of a new song which is being featured by vaudeville artists. The cover design features Baby Peggy, the infant Universal star and will be employed in campaigns for her photoplays.

Madison, Wis., gets lots of good exploitation stunts. It has had big campaigns crowd one another out of the limelight for some time now. The window display pictured above was made in a department store, which instituted a "Look Your Best" week in conjunction with the showing of the Goldwyn feature of that title. The tie-up was arranged by Goldwynner Walter D. Nealand.

A fan magazine for the theatres is the newest offering from the Paramount advertising department. The magazine is in rotogravure and each number will feature photos of Paramount stars and scenes from productions. Notes on forthcoming pictures and the regular run of fan food will be included. The cut above shows the cover of the first issue of the Screen Scrapbook. Space will be provided for the imprint of the theatre signature on each issue of the magazine and Paramount announces that the cost to the theatre will be "nominal." The book will be issued in connection with each of the special productions.

The Renown Exchange has been doing some street stunting around Broadway for "Temporary Marriage," with the conveyance shown above. The bride and groom were occupants of the carriage throughout the days and evenings of its tour of the city.

A Kansas City drug store had a window demonstration that was attracting crowds, so the Metro exploitation man who was in the city to work with the theatre presenting "Quincy Adams Sawyer" decided to move some of his equipment into the show. A large oil painting drew some of the attention to the picture house.

Another circus front for the presentation of the Universal wild animal film "Hunting Big Game in Africa." This type of lobby has been used before with the feature and it appears to deserve its popularity. The arrangement above was displayed at the Capitol Theatre, Superior, Wisc., which featured the Snow films as "greater than a circus." The electric sign equipment of letters seems to have given out of "A's" but the idea went over just the same when an "E" substituted in the word "than."

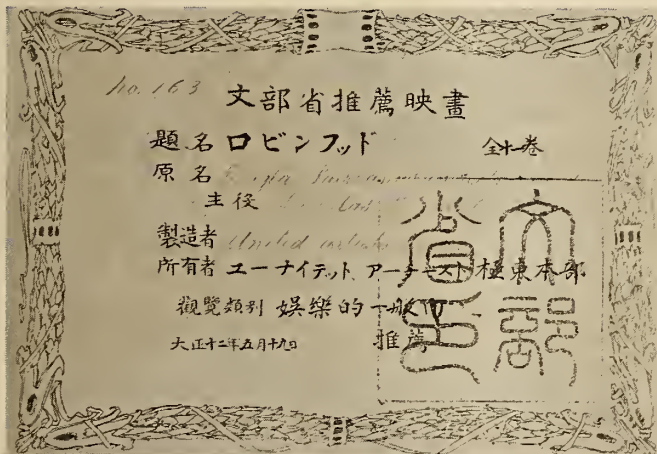

A display for First National's "The Isle of Lost Ships," at the Rex Theatre, Eugene, Ore. The frame over the entrance provided an atmosphere scene built up with cutouts from the regular paper. A light netting was stretched across the frame behind the cutout figures and the ships which were back of this netting were rocked by an arrangement of pulley wires. Orange lighting was used for the sky and a baby spot threw a red glare on the figures.

First National's "Mighty Lak' a Rose" was exploited in connection with the famous song at the Temple Theatre, Hamilton, Ont. Manager H. H. Morgan constructed the "largest phonograph in the world" and used it in the lobby and on the truck shown above.

Contrast and a guess for the citizens was the basis of the street stunt which helped the showing of Universal's "The Abysmal Brute" at the Roosevelt Theatre, New York. A poster and a large boxing glove decorated the marquee of the house.

The honor certificate issued by the Japanese government for "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" is shown above. The translators at United Artists say it expresses the highest recommendation for the picture. Certificates of this order are issued only in rare instances by the Mikado's government.

Not a new idea, but a good one when one-sheets are worth featuring as an advance display. The frame for the Universal paper on "The Storm," used in the lobby of the Merrick Theatre, is a shadow box, illuminated by an electric lamp connected by a flexible wire with the lobby fixture. A simple arrangement and a device which can be used over and over again.

Window tie-up for the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan production "Enemies of Women," in Toronto. Electrical household appliances were featured as destroyers of the old fashioned "enemies of women," in the form of washing and cleaning methods. The store is a public utility, owned by the Provincial Government and this is the first time a motion picture tie-up has been used.

The first junior military parade staged in Los Angeles. A demonstration for the presentation of First National's "Daddy" at Loew's State Theatre. Every military school in Los Angeles sent representatives to appear in the parade in honor of Jackie Coogan. 3,000 boys took part and helped the theatre greatly by carrying banners advertising the show.

The MODERN THEATRE

Building — Equipping — Operating

"IF music is such an important phase of the picture business, why don't the producers do something about it?" asked a prominent exhibitor of the writer lately.

It so happens that the producers have done a great deal to promote the use of better music with their productions, only the exhibitor in question happened to be one of those unfortunates who was getting his pictures from one of the three companies that fail to provide proper cue sheets with their attractions.

The producers have at last awakened to the vital fact that music is in a great measure directly responsible for the success or failure of every picture. To this end they have universally adopted what is commonly conceded to be the only REAL cue sheet so far devised. This wonderful aid to interpretative music is called the Thematic music cue sheet and differs from any other such aid on the market.

The Thematic cue sheet provides in addition to the usual captions, action cues, and timing of same, a few bars of the actual music suggested so that the leader who really desires to fit the picture with music that means something, may substitute, should he not possess the number called for by the cue sheet.

The men who compile these sheets, are men who are recognized the country over as experts in this line, and their work has called forth the highest praise from the best picture and musical critics in the business.

We have many letters from various large film corporations telling us that they consider music plays a major part in successful picture presentation. One film head goes so far as to declare that he considers music to be at least fifty per cent of the entertainment. Surely when the heads of the business assure us that the musical part of the program means so much to the ultimate success of their huge interests, it is high time that the exhibitors step in and find out the Why and Wherefore of matters musical.

We personally know of leaders who have won an enviable reputation as wonderful compilers of musical scores, who follow the cue sheets named almost verbatim. And now this will be made easier for every leader in the future due to the circumstance that a plan is well under way to place one authorized dealer in every city of importance to handle the music called for by these cue sheets. This will do away with the trouble experienced by a musician when he wanted a certain number in a hurry. Nine times out of ten he could not purchase it, and as a consequence he had to make the best substitution possible under the circumstance. This at times is an almost impossible situation, and often one number that doesn't fit will ruin that part of the picture.

When producers spend their money on music, it is proof positive that they are convinced that Music is necessary. These companies are not in the habit of jumping into anything blindfolded, and they only invested after long months of careful investigation.

In a few instances the producers have even gone so far as to send out complete orchestrations with exceptional pictures. But due to the enormous expense, coupled with the fact that many theatres are not able to properly handle big scores, this practice has not found universal approval. Maybe in the dim and distant future some scheme may be devised to get around these difficulties, but this is a problematical matter. One producer wrote to us in effect that music plays an important part in every picture released by his company, from the time the first set is worked on. And one noted critic declares that music is sometimes the "Only Enjoyable Part of the Entire Program." So that's what the producers think, and do, about music and its relationship with motion pictures.

Now Mr. Showman, it is strictly up to you. The producers have placed in your hands aids to interpretative music, and they have spent oodles of money so that you may put your goods over in the best possible way. Why try to just scramble along, guessing, and wondering How you are going to come out on the week's box office receipts, when the means is at hand to make this vital part of the business a Sure Thing?

The big successful picture houses all over this United States of ours, are picture palaces that spend thousands upon thousands of dollars monthly to provide music that provides atmosphere for the pictures they screen, and the day is at hand when NO exhibitor will be able to get away with a mediocre musical program. Pictures Need music and they must be so accompanied. There is no other substitute, for the two senses, i. e., sight and hearing, are so closely related that in this case they are inseparable.

So compelling is the power of music that many of the greatest screen stars "do their stuff" accompanied by music. Many of them cannot produce real emotion until the memories of other days have been brought back vividly by the strain of some melody that recalls heart-rending recollections of bygone days. But when the old familiar strains grip their hearts they are able to perform in a manner that could not be induced by any other method. This is but another proof of the all embracing emotional power of music. With such evidence before us it is only the A B C of logic to go one step further, and see why music affects the audience, and so places them in a most receptive frame of mind.

It seems rather strange to a close student of psychology that music, one of the oldest arts, should not have been brought to bear with greater force on matters pictorial long ago, but it seems that we often have to grope longest for the things that are most obvious.

At any rate Music is here to stay with the pictured drama, and now that the producers are offering the helping hand, it is entirely up to you Mr. Exhibitor. You have the power to help them get past the experimental stage; or you have the power to hinder advancement in this science of fitting pictures with proper music. You cry for better pictures. Now that you are getting them, critics to the contrary notwithstanding, Give The Public Better Musical Interpretation, and Cash In.

Harms Gets Fox Trot

The fox trot song, "Chansonette," has been purchased by Harms, Inc., 62 West 45th Street, from G. Schirmer, Inc. Rudolph Frim wrote the music and Dailey Paskman, the lyric.

Numbers Going Big

"The World is Waiting for the Sunrise" is interpolated in the "George White Scandals" at the Globe Theatre, New York City and "The Dancing Girl" playing at the Colonial Theatre, Chicago. Judson House featured it at the New York Strand. "Roses of Picardy" created a sensation when played by Vincent Lopez at the Palace Theatre. Both are Chappell-Harms numbers.

Mary Eaton, late of "Ziegfeld's Follies," had her camera baptism at the Paramount Long Island studio when she made her first scene in Sam Wood's production of "His Children's Children."

Madge Bellamy has been signed by Associated Authors to play the leading feminine role in Elmer Harris' screen version of "The Love Hater."

Frank Leigh, Ralph Yearsley and "Mammy" Peters have been added to the cast of "Valley of the Wolf," Jack Pickford's next production.

Alfred Lunt is making personal appearances at Tom Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C., where Distinctive Picture's production "Backbone" is being shown.

Distinctive Pictures Corporation has engaged Joseph Donohue for its forthcoming production "The Adopted Father."

Helene Chadwick, Goldwyn screen player, was welcomed back to the Goldwyn lot, after an absence of several months, by the "Leading Ladies" of the Goldwyn studios recently.

Mlle. Jeanne Balzac, descendant of Henri, brother of Honore Balzac, will make her screen debut in "The Magic Skin" for Goldwyn.

Ford Sterling will portray the part of a crook, "Montreal Sammy," in "The Day of Faith," which is being made for Goldwyn.

MARY PICKFORD VOTED MOST POPULAR STAR

New York.—That Mary Pickford is rapidly becoming the "World's Sweetheart" in fact as well as in name is indicated in the results of popularity contests staged in various countries in the last few months.

A questionnaire filled out recently by 37,000 high school students in seventy-six cities in all sections of the United States proved that Miss Pickford is the favorite actress of both high school boys and girls. This circular was issued by the Russell Sage Foundation in co-operation with the National Committee for Better Films of this city.

The Talmadge sisters also stood high in the voting. Douglas Fairbanks won the boys' vote, while the girls selected Rodolph Valentino.

Nor is Miss Pickford's popularity confined to the United States alone. In Cuba, Paris, Liege, Belgium and Brazil, Miss Pickford won by an overwhelming majority.

Process is Further Development For Broadcasting of Stills

Washington, D. C.—Before officials of various governmental departments, C. F. Jenkins demonstrated his invention for showing motion pictures by radio. The witnesses of the demonstration saw upon a cardboard screen in one room, the movements of Mr. Jenkin's hand as he manipulated it in front of the radio device in another room. Mr. Jenkins is now improving his invention to make the reproduction clearer. He stated that the distance to which motion pictures can be sent is limited only by the transmission power of the radio station and this makes possible transoceanic and transcontinental projection.

The process is merely a further development of Mr. Jenkins' device for broadcasting still pictures. Sixteen pictures per second are thrown on the screen. This is the speed of a regular projector and is accomplished by means of a new optical shape glass, the "lens-faced prismatic ring."

The pulsations are picked up on the customary amplifying set, the varying radio currents being made to light a special super-sensitive electric lamp instead of sounding in a telephone receiver. The fluctuating light from the lamp is projected through a second prismatic ring exactly like the one at the sending end and the image is again built up. The invention involves no photographic equipment or film.

Close Detroit Territory

New York—Oscar A. Price, president, and H. E. Aitken, vice-president and general manager of Tri-Stone Pictures, Inc., have signed the agreement granting to the Ray J. Branch Feature Productions, Detroit, Michigan, the exclusive right for the distribution of the New Edition Keystone Comedies, for the entire state of Michigan, exclusive of the upper peninsula.

The re-edited comedies will be released in series of twelve. Six of the first series are now ready. An entirely new line of accessories will be prepared on each of the comedies.

Madoc Offices Opened

New York.—The Madoc Sales Company, newly formed states right distributing concern, has opened offices at 220 West 42nd St., New York City. As its initial offering the Madoc company announces a series of six features which will be known as the Cliff Smith Productions. The films are being produced in Los Angeles by the H. & B. Film Company. J. Joseph Sameth is in charge of the distribution.

New Truart Sales

New York.—M. H. Hoffman, Vice-president and General Manager of Truart Film Corporation, announced the sale of three feature productions, "The Prairie Mystery," "Riders of the Range" and "The Western Musketeer," to Columbia Film Service of Pittsburgh, for the territory of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Melvin Hirsh of Aywon Film Corporation announces the sale of the western Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory for the new Big Boy Williams Series to Columbia Film Service of Pittsburgh. With this sale 72 per cent. of the territories have been closed on this series.

CLEAN BILL OF HEALTH FOR FILM COLONY

Los Angeles—A clean bill of health has been given to the Hollywood film colony by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, noted author and spiritualist, now lecturing here, who declares that studio morals are "as clean as any in the world."

"It was my pleasure last week," said Sir Arthur, to go through practically all of your wonderful studios in Hollywood, and I also have met many of the well known members of the film colony, as well as the rank and file of the movies. I am absolutely convinced that they have been done an injustice. Taking them as a whole, I consider them of a high moral standard."

FIRE INSPECTOR SEES THE MIDNIGHT ALARM

Brooklyn, N. Y.—The first test of the realism of the fire scenes in "The Midnight Alarm" produced by David Smith at the Vitaphone studios in Hollywood, occurred at the Brooklyn plant.

William Wainwright, former member of the fire department and now a fire inspector, while visiting the studio recently, was invited to witness the reels containing the fire sequence. Mr. Baker stated that usually movie fires were just play acting but in this picture he could almost smell the smoke and feel the heat of the flames and that "the fellow who plays the captain carries himself just like 'Smoky Joe' Martin the noted fire chief in New York."

Elaborate settings are the order of the day at the Grand-Ascher studios for the comedies in which Sid Smith, Monty Banks and Joe Rock will star. Production Manager Earl Olin's newest and to date the most pretentious for these comedies, is an old antique-shop for the Sid Smith vehicle now being filmed under the direction of Hugh Fay. Particular care has been expended to reproduce celebrated curios and obtain original objects for the furnishing of this setting.

John Ellis, known as one of the leading pictorialists, has been engaged by Warner Brothers to make stills for the forthcoming series of eighteen features to be produced at the Warner Studios.

Max Roth, Manager of the Foreign Department of Principal Pictures Corporation, has closed transactions for the rights to "The Spider and the Rose" to Pathe Freres Cinema, Ltd., of London for the entire United Kingdom; and Reginald Ford for France, Belgium, Switzerland, Spain and Portugal.

Paul H. Cromelin of the Intercean Film Corporation, and Jesse J. Goldberg, President of the Independent Pictures Corporation, have concluded a deal whereby the Intercean concern obtains the foreign distribution of the twelve five-part features being released by Independent in the United States and Canada. Ten of these were produced by Premium Picture Productions and the remaining two of the group by Iroquois Productions. This deal does not include the South American Rights, which are being handled by Independent.

First Graphic Exchanges, Inc., of Buffalo and New York has purchased New York territorial rights to eight Lester Cuneo productions from Irving M. Lesser of Principal Pictures Corporation.

McCormick All Set

Hollywood.—With John McCormick, western representative of First National, moving into United Studios this week, his organization is now all set in its production home. McCormick made the move from Los Angeles in order to be in closer contact with Joseph M. Schenck, Frank Lloyd, Edwin Carewe, Sam E. Rorke and Arthur H. Jacobs who have First National Pictures under way. First National is now all centered on the United lot with the exception of Thomas H. Ince, and the John M. Stahl-Louis B. Mayer productions.

What the Distributors Are Doing to Help Exhibitors Reach the Public

How Exploitation Methods Have Expanded
So as to Get the Merits of the Product
Before the Eye of the Man in the Street and Instill in Him Desire to See Picture

By A. Warner

EVERY season brings a new problem in the annals of the industry. This fact, and everyone who has an interest in the future welfare of our marvelous industry knows this to be true, is striking evidence that we are progressing as few enterprises have progressed during the last twenty odd years.

Only a few years ago little if any attention was paid to the actual commercial angle of the picture business. By this I mean that we were more or less satisfied to present our pictures to the theatre-going public in an ordinary way.

We took no pains to drive home the big features of a production. We took no pains continually to bombard the public with the informative literature that is being given them today. Further, our exploitation methods—and by our I mean the entire industry—were of the cheap, circusy kind.

They didn't do justice to the picture, nor did the stunts—help to elevate or tend to impress forcibly the fact that the making of motion pictures was an "art" worthy of the efforts of the best brains in America.

We've Proved to Skeptical We're Here to Stay

There isn't a human being on the face of the globe who hasn't at some time or other seen or heard of motion pictures. They either gleaned their information from second hand sources, or they actually witnessed the unwinding of a strip of interesting film.

In other words we have established ourselves as a growing industry, and demonstrated to the skeptical and cynical in a thousand different ways that we are here to stay.

The motion picture is humanity's greatest force for good. It is the wheel that makes life more complete; it is the wheel

Albert Warner is one of four brothers comprising the progressive firm of Warner Brothers. Slowly but steadily, this organization has been building, until today it ranks as one of the foremost producing-distributing concerns in the industry. This year the brothers have tackled a big job, and it is no exaggeration to say they are handling it in a big way.

Mr. Warner first became identified with the industry along about 1904. With his brothers he was an exhibitor in New

Albert Warner

Castle, Pa. From the exhibiting ranks the Warner boys branched out into distribution, and finally into the producing end of the business. They have done many big things, and among them is the devising of the present system of national distribution, the producing of ex-Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," and more recently bringing in as part and parcel of the industry the great theatrical producer.—David Belasco.

that brings before the eyes of millions of people the happenings all over the world; it is the wheel that will ever keep winding the marvelous possibilities of the human mind; it is the wheel that reveals the naked beauty of nature.

All of which is by way of saying that we should safeguard its very name, and cherish forevermore the birth of this great gift. In order to do this properly it means that we all have to work toward a common end. We've got to work toward harmony, greater industry, and the fabricating of new, fresh ideas to keep always before the public eye our great institution.

The Great Problem Is Serving the Exhibitors

The producers and distributors at the present time are earnestly striving to produce the finest and most wholesome and entertaining pictures that have ever been made in the history of the picture business. The question of expense is secondary. The plan is to make them big and good and worth the attention and approval of the most hardened critic of motion pictures. And there is no question but that they will succeed.

Now the problem facing the distributors is how best to serve the exhibitors booking their features. After all is said and done the big thing is to get the product before the eyes of the public. If this angle is neglected then the entire structure of planning and creating motion picture entertainment is undermined.

It is all very well to produce a picture, but the big thing is to bring it before the public via the best and most ingenious method.

Therefore, what can the distributors do for the exhibitors during the coming season? They can do a great many things if they are at all interested beyond the sale of the picture. They can do a great many things which not only will aid the exhibitor in deriving greater box-office receipts, but also stimulate a renewed and finer appreciation of the motion picture.

Producers Have Own Ideas About Approaching Public

To tell you just how this is to be done is no easy task. It is a monumental problem. All producers and distributors work along different lines. They have their own ideas about the various methods of approaching the public, and numberless methods on how to sell their pictures to exhibitors.

But to tell what the exhibitors can expect and get from the Warner Brothers during the coming season is very simple indeed.

We are producing for the new season eighteen of the biggest pictures in the history of our career. The names of these pictures have all been announced to the trade, and it is no exaggeration to say that they will more than help to maintain the standard of bigger and better productions.

To fully convey just what the Warner Brothers will do for the exhibitors, it is necessary to mention briefly a few of the salient features of our production schedule.

Belasco Affiliation a Milestone in Business

We consider as our biggest achievement the signature and willingness of David Belasco personally to take an interest in the production of his famous stage successes. This, as is known, is the first time in the varied and notable career of the great theatrical producer that he has become identified with motion pictures.

It is a milestone in the history of the business, for heretofore he has shunned every attempt made to induce him to take a hand in the filming of box-office attractions. When Belasco was signed we also secured the services of his star, Lenore Ulric, who is at present being starred in a screen version of her stage success. "Tiger Rose," under the direction of Sidney Franklin.

A number of other prominent persons are included in our production forces, and among these is Ernst Lubitsch, the famous German director. Mr. Lubitsch, I sincerely believe, will lay the groundwork for a new kind of motion picture. Just how best to explain this is rather difficult.

I can only say that at present he is working on a production which will contain many novel touches that are part and parcel of the originality Lubitsch possesses. On second thought the best answer is the sensation he created with his first foreign made picture, "Passion."

Plan $500,000 Campaign to Benefit Exhibitors

Our other stars and directors are too well known to need any comment here. Suffice it to say that they are all striving to outdo their past achievements. With this production schedule, we have formulated a nationwide campaign which is of direct interest and benefit to the exhibitors.

And it is this campaign plus the known co-operation of our organization that will be given whole-heartedly to theatre owners.

The statement that we will spend over $500,000 to publicize and exploit our eighteen classics is no dream. It is an actual fact. And we are spending this huge sum of money because we are very anxious to create a satisfied showman and a highly pleased picture public.

The scope of our campaign covers every known national medium of publicity. The tremendous circulation of over twoscore magazines will contain announcements of our classics. Newspapers throughout the country will also carry ads of our pictures. The billboards all over the country have been contracted for, so that no avenue of publicity can escape the eyes of the public.

The business journals, of course, will receive their due share of our appropriation. I consider these mediums of wonderful value toward the selling and putting over of a motion picture production. They are indispensable when it comes to furnishing the latest news of the industry, and they are indispensable when it comes to making known film productions.

Without them the industry would be like a ship without a rudder. The copy for all this advertising is created with one end in view, namely, to instill a desire on the part of the reader to visit at the earliest moment a theatre which will exhibit the attractions so advertised.

Mercantile Tie-ups with National Advertisers

Another angle of advertising which is being widely developed at the present time is the mercantile tie-up or connection with some big national advertiser. Our organization has brought this to such a stage of efficiency that scores of thousands of window displays await each exhibitor upon the play date of a picture.

In addition to this direct local connection these big advertisers bring the names and stars of each production out in their other advertising media.

Among such connections we can mention the W. H. Ingersoll "Redipoint" Company, United States Rubber Company, Yale Electric Company, Westinghouse Company, and others of the same calibre.

The exhibitor himself is not in a position to do such advertising as I have mentioned in this article, even if he were willing and capable. It is a national proposition and requires a national perspective on it.

With these great units of publicity and advertising, we will put over one of the biggest direct-to-the-public campaigns in the history of the industry. And this campaign will be consistently and persistently carried on, always bearing in mind that our main purpose is to aid the exhibitors to derive greater box-office profits with each and every one of our eighteen classics.

Exhibitors should get the whole-hearted co-operation of the distributors. This co-operation should not be merely a promise, but an actual fulfillment. The co-operation should be carried out beyond the sale of the picture. And in doing everything possible for the theatre owners, in helping them to become better showmen by giving them better pictures, the producers and distributors will be blazing a bigger trail toward the greater development of our wonderful industry.

Studio of the Warner Brothers in Hollywood

Says New Production Costs Will Not Equal Former Rental Records

Schulberg Sees Great Advantage to Exhibitor in the Quantity Production of Quality Films—More Really Great Pictures Than Ever Before Increases Chances For Success and Failure

By Ben P. Schulberg

STATEMENTS that picture productions costs this year will equal the highest sum paid in rentals during any previous year in the history of the screen obviously are incorrect. If this were true the entire industry would be bankrupt today and the sooner we recognize the fact the better.

The problem is a simple one. The actual cost of producing a picture is only fifty per cent of its total cost after it has been exploited, advertised and distributed. Which means that if this year's actual production cost is greater than last year's rentals, the cost to the exhibitor would have to be twice the price he paid last year before the producer could get back his investment, to say nothing of a return on his money. We all know that no such upward movement of prices is going to occur.

The outstanding feature of this situation is that, with hundreds of pictures being made this year, the exhibitor will have a far greater field to select from than ever before. More really great pictures are being made for this year's release than for any similar period in the past. And, by the same token, more failures will be recorded this year than ever before.

Exhibitors' Year Coming

The coming twelve months should be put down as an exhibitor's year. For the brainy exhibitor, the exhibitor with sound judgment and a keen insight into the wants of his audiences, will have a far greater opportunity to exercise this judgment than ever before. The exhibitor who follows the line of least resistance—who simply takes the pictures that the man in another city runs—will have a greater opportunity than ever before to go broke.

This year's list of productions includes many big pictures that promise also to be really great. There are now in the making such pictures as "The Ten Commandments," "Greed," "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," "The Virginian," "Maytime," "In the Palace of the King," "Long Live the King," "Scaramouche," "The Boomerang," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Rosita," and "The Thief of Bagdad."

Encourage Careful Production

Production costs, like rentals, are great or small in proportion to what one gets for his money. Any producer would prefer to spend a million dollars for some of the pictures listed above than one-tenth of that sum for some other pictures that will be released this year.

Ben P. Schulberg is the producer of Preferred Pictures, a New Yorker who now makes his home in Los Angeles. He has had many years' experience in picture-making—in publicity and advertising, in scenario writing and in editing, in business management on the distributing side and in production. He was the first employe of Adolph Zukor when he founded Famous Players, and was general manager when he resigned from that organization. His first venture in independent production was with the Katherine McDonald Pictures, later joining with J. G. Bachmann, who had been associated with him in the latter enterprise, and Al Lichtman in forming Preferred Pictures.

Likewise, any exhibitor would prefer to pay a substantial rental for pictures that keep his house filled to capacity than a more moderate sum for pictures that do not pull the people in. Therefore, I make out one plea to the exhibitor:

Get behind the producer who is sincerely attempting to make really great pictures without waste. Encourage his efforts and further your own interests by selecting the productions that show intelligent rather than wasteful expenditures.

Much is said about the high salaries of players. But, in truth, the salaries of stars and featured players are the least of the worries of the producer. How could a salary of from $1,000 to $2,000 a week, for a period of from three to four weeks, affect the total cost of production as much as a set which, costing $50,000 or $60,000, later is cut out of the picture entirely?—an extravagance which only too often is the case.

The big difficulty seems to be in the expenditures that are made to serve the purposes of a selfish or conceited director or producer. If a producer builds a high wall of solid concrete instead of using the equally convincing materials at hand for such settings, he is putting thousands of dollars into a picture that never will register on the screen. Unless he uses an X-ray device in filming his picture nothing but the front of the wall shows.

Therefore, the remaining thousands, for which the exhibitor must pay in the end, were put there solely to serve the purpose of a producer who feels that he can get more for a picture that he can show cost him $500,000 than one that cost him $100,000. He puts the extra concrete there for the same reason that the contractor working on a cost-plus basis during the war hired men he didn't need and purchased materials he couldn't use.

The cost problem simmers down to the use of sound judgment by the producer. If every dollar expended on his picture adds to its artistic merit and entertainment value, he is giving the exhibitor his money's worth. If money is wasted on sets that the camera does not reproduce, the exhibitor—who must pay for this waste—is being grossly overcharged.

Selective Policy Needed

Consequently, in a year when over production is the rule rather than the exception, the exhibitor is in greater need of a sound policy in the selection of his pictures. There was a time when the running of a picture for a long period in a theatre on Broadway influenced many exhibitors to book that picture without further investigation.

"If it's good enough to run two months on Broadway it's good enough for me," he would argue.

But he wouldn't find out until too late that the New York run was carried on at a great loss, with papered houses and with the aid of all the stimulants usually used for the purpose of keeping a theatrical corpse breathing. This device was used over and over again. It succeeded more than once, but each time to a lesser degree.

Today the exhibitor who succeeds is not influenced by such artifices. He looks at the pictures offered and chooses on their merits.

By so doing he gives his audiences better entertainment, encourages the producers of the best pictures and serves, in the long run, to eliminate wasteful production.

This, in the last analysis, is the solution of the excessive rental problem.

The Fortunes of Exhibitor X

The Third Week

I FIRED the six nice looking young men in uniforms and hired three girls in plain black dresses to take their places. In dollars and cents this cut amounted to this:

Last Week

Six ushers at $6 a week.....	$36.00
Cleaning uniforms weekly	4.00
Cleaning gloves weekly	1.50
Total	$41.50

This Week

Three usherettes at $5	$15.00
No uniforms to clean	—
No gloves to clean	—
Total	$15.00

Here was a saving of $26.50 weekly and by this cut I am getting closer to the class of people I want to reach. The average working man in this or any other town does not go to a theatre to meet liveried attendants and kid gloved lackeys. Such a display of finery is just what they want to avoid.

But equally as important as this saving was the discovery of a little graft going on in the theatre. I found an item of expense on the books recorded as follows:

Cleaning gloves$1.50 a week

This was paid to the doorman and investigation showed that he washed a few pairs of gloves every week. Sometimes he never washed them at all. If the ushers did not turn him over a couple of pairs of gloves every week he made it hot for them.

The $1.50 charge for glove cleaning disappeared and I gave every one around the house to understand that if I saw a glove around there again there would be a general clean-up.

Some persons will say this is petty stuff, cutting down on the small fry. Yet in three weeks on the ushers and the sign painter I have saved $46.50 weekly. And when you are fighting for life everything counts.

In the Long Run It Pays to Shoot Straight

Taking another crack at the picture policy, it was plain the more I studied it that my predecessor has been paying too much attention to booking via the telephone than to selling his picture to the public. In three weeks several tempting things came my way. First, membership in a growing booking alliance with fifty other theatres was offered to me, but I declined for the time being. These booking combines are in their infancy yet, but they are something to think about and not snap up too quickly.

The other temptation was an underground offer from a film exchange booker to tip me off on the live pictures and to arrange ad-

This is the third installment of the story of Exhibitor X, who took over the X theatre, situated in a city of 45,000 inhabitants, and with a deficit of $45,000 and creditors clamoring for their money. The first and second articles describe the method adapted by the new owner to cut expenses and to bring to his house the 90 per cent wage earners as well as the 10 per cent of well-to-do which the house formerly had catered.

vantageous bookings at a right price if I would pay a commission on the bookings. This, too, I declined for obvious reasons. To be sure, when rentals are high and your theatre is at the bottom of the bank roll such offers are tempting. In the long run it pays to shoot straight. Maybe I'm wrong, but time will tell.

To show how out of touch this fine theatre has been with its city, a priest called to ask me what we would charge for the theatre on Sunday, there being no Sunday shows in this state. He told me he had never been inside the theatre, but had used other theatres for lecture purposes.

I told him there would be no charge for the theatre on Sunday, and furthermore I would run a slide announcing the lecture.

HAROLD FRANKLIN TALKS ON PERSONAL APPEARANCES

Well Known Showman Says They Are a Boomerang and a Bad Habit
Instead of Help

By CHARLES B. TAYLOR

WHEN "personal appearances" have become quite common in the larger cities, when the lists of vaudeville agents are becoming filled with names of picture stars seeking engagements and with some exhibitors going in for this "added attraction" stuff; it is interesting to know that one of the biggest exhibitors in the country has come out flat against the proposition.

Harold B. Franklin, former managing director of the Shea picture interests in Buffalo, and now head of Famous Players theatres, declares that the "personal appearance" is an evil which does not help either the theatre, the star or the producer. He declares that if he were a producer he would prohibit a star from making any appearance whatsoever outside the studio. His own experience in Buffalo, Mr. Franklin declares, was that after several stars had appeared, the proposition became common and did not warrant the expense incurred. In answering the question "Does the 'personal appearance' help the motion picture theatre," Mr. Franklin said:

"It is my opinion that the appearance in person of screen stars in motion picture

"Why, that's fine," the reverend gentleman announced. "I never thought of coming to you before because we did not think a fine house like this would care to lend itself to lecture purposes, and for our lecture purposes we are appealing to the working-man."

I told the father we were only too glad to help him, and that if he wanted to reciprocate he could mention the fact to his parishioners, whenever he felt like it, that we were trying to give the city the best pictures.

Later a local Catholic Club attended the theatre in a body and paid admissions. I gave the clergyman a handful of passes and told him to hand them out to worthy members of his flock. This brought in some new faces, who were introduced for the first time to X Theatre.

This week the attendance has hit a better average than 450 by about 100, but that's a long way from the mark.

There are several things on my mind that need investigation. One is newspaper advertising, the other the orchestra. One of them must be cut, perhaps both. Which shall it be?

Also it's about time to take a little flyer and see how strong this town will go after a good picture even if it costs money.

The $45,000 still stands. I haven't begun to think of how that will be made up.

theatres is a boomerang which cannot help the theatre, the star or the producer. I say evil advisedly, having had various personal appearances of famous stars at our Buffalo houses. Some of the stars were very delightful personalities.

"I remember as a kid that when I went to the theatre the mystery of it all had a great appeal for me. There was an indescribable something about it all that I could not understand. I will never forget, however, when I saw behind the scenes for the first time and discovered that the palaces I had beheld were nothing more than painted canvases—that the mysterious lighting was nothing more than projected electric lamps. This in a way describes my thought on the personal appearance proposition.

"To most persons the motion picture star is something rare indeed. It is seldom that the fan can actually behold in the flesh his or her favorite star who has been put on a pedestal. When, however, the "idol" walks out on the stage of a picture theatre and the fan discovers that he or she is nothing more than an ordinary person, the illusion is lost.

As the Still Camera Man Sees Them

This is the palace guard in Jackie Coogan's "Long Live the King." Every one of the fifty six-footers who constitute this guard are veterans of actual military service. Captain V. Murdock, of the American Expeditionary Forces, trained these men for ten days before they were called before the camera. Their heights range from six feet to six feet four inches. Metro plans to release this production in the fall.

Little Russell Griffin, Ann Forrest and Harry T. Morey in a scene from Will Nigh's "Marriage Morals," produced and distributed by L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North.

Lucile Rickson as "Vera" the little princess who is raised as a peasant in Marshall Neilan's drama, "The Rendezvous," and which is being produced for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan.

John M. Stahl and Marie Prevost snapped during the making of "The Wanters," a coming Mayer-First National attraction. Stahl claims that Marie is the dramatic "find" of the year.

"Yes, we have no bananas! But we have some nice fish and lobsters." Barney Bernard as Abe Potash in "Potash and Perlmutter," a Sam Goldwyn picture released by First National.

Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, chatting with Mary Eaton and Sam Wood, who is making "His Children's Children" in which Miss Eaton appears.

The three luminaries of "The Extra Girl:" Arthur S. Kane, President of Associated Exhibitors who will distribute the picture; Mabel Normand, star, and Mack Sennett, producer.

"I cannot sing the old songs" warbles Bryant Washburn. "No," says Mabel Forrest and Wheeler Oakman, "nor the new ones either!" All are playing roles in Ben Wilson's Grand-Asher production "Other Men's Daughters."

Elmer Harris of Associated Authors discussing the script of his original screen story "No More Women" with Director Lloyd Ingraham and principals Madge Bellamy, Matt Moore, Leo White and Stanhope Wheatcroft. "No More Women" will be released through Allied Producers and Distributors, a subsidiary of United Artists Corp.

WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS

Scenes from Warner Brothers classic of the screen in which Rin-Tin-Tin is featured. This production was directed by Chester M. Franklin under the personal supervision of Harry Raff.

Jack London, author of "The Call of the Wild," a Hal Roach production which will be released by Pathe this Fall.

"Where does a mere comedian come in with two golf heroes around?" says Buster. Margaret Leahy is receiving the admiration of Gene Sarazen and Jock Hutchinson. Miss Leahy assisted Keaton in "Three Ages," which will be distributed by Metro.

John E. Storey, General Sales Manager of Pathe, and W. B. Frank, Feature Sales Manager.

Ben Alexander, selected by Maurice Tourneur to appear in "Two Little Vagrants," an M. C. Levee-First National picture.

Lloyd Hughes, First National's newest leading man, appears opposite Colleen Moore in "The Huntress."

Carl Laemmle and his son walking on the Place de la Concorde, Paris, with A. B. Blofson, Paris manager of Universal; Maurice Chase, Universal European manager, and an employee of the Paris office.

LOYAL LIVES

This is the romance of the life of a mail carrier and in which Postmaster General Harry S. New played a part. It is a Whitman Bennett Production released by Vitagraph and will open at the Central Theatre, Broadway and 47th Street, New York, August 5.

Marcus Loew Sails

THE national convention, the New York state convention, the New Jersey and the Michigan and several other state gatherings of exhibitors for 1923 now being history Marcus Loew, accompanied by Mrs. Loew, has sailed for Europe. Mr. Loew has not abandoned the habits or the attachments of his pre-production days—he still enjoys fraternizing with the men whose work is along lines similar to those in which he has been engaged now these many years and in which by the way his major interests, in spite of his large production program, are vested.

By reason of his vaudeville and picture-making activities and his willingness to do his bit to contribute to exhibitor festivities the head of Metro is a much besought individual when theatre owners in the general neighborhood of New York—that is, within a thousand miles or so—decide to foregather. He has been known on several occasions to charter a car and descend upon a convention with a couple of score of players. The New Jersey exhibitors the last few years have been entertained and highly so by the chief of Loew Enterprises.

During his stay abroad Mr. Loew will arrange for the foreign distribution of new Metro output.

Cohen in Europe

EMANUEL COHEN, the alert editor of Pathe News, is a fellow-passenger of Mr. Loew on the Leviathan. Mr. Cohen intends to remain abroad for a month or more for the purpose of expanding the service of Pathe News. The steady growth of the weekly and its success in quickly getting to exhibitors the film record of larger events have encouraged Mr. Cohen personally to investigate facilities existing in foreign countries whereby it may be made even more comprehensive.

Naon Goes to Argentina

SAILING on the same day, the 28th, but to the south, to Buenos Aires, was S. M. Naon, general representative of the Argentine-American Film Corporation. During Mr. Naon's absence J. I. Garcia will be in charge of the company's New York office.

Flinn Off to London

JOHN C. FLINN is another New Yorker who has taken boat for the other side of the water. The president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers is going to London to supervise the showing at the Pavilion in that city of Famous Players-Lasky's "The Covered Wagon," which is slated to begin early in September.

Since last January Mr. Flinn has managed the openings of the picture in New York, Chicago and Boston and has been associated with J. J. McCarthy in arranging road tours for the production.

It is stated Mr. Flinn will be gone about eight weeks. During that period his job at the weekly luncheons of the A. M. P. A. will be covered by vice-president Victor M. Shapiro, who according to the rule of yearly rotation has been nominated as the successor of Mr. Flinn.

Shooting and Visiting

IRVING LESSER, general manager of distribution of Principal Pictures, left New York July 31 for a two week's vacation. Just why we don't know, nor probably will any one else who has visited Irving when in his office. For it is a sure-enough weather resort, high up above Broadway in the Loew State Building and right on the corner of Forty-fifth street where he can look down with equanimity on the sweltering groundlings.

In a note received from the Principal's office announcing the departure its writer stated—although admitting he was not quite sure just what was meant—that when asked when and how he expected to while away his time Mr. Lesser replied he intended to devote his vacation to shooting and visiting his relatives and friends. The remark is a bit ambiguous.

Corinne Griffith to Star

CORINNE GRIFFITH is now a full-fledged First National star. She has been formally dined by her new distribution chiefs and introduced by Harry Reichenback to the inescapable representatives of the trade press and other motion picture writers of the city.

A charming incident of a very pleasant occasion was the brief talk of Miss Griffith. What was said was modestly said and without affectation and without any indication that she takes herself overseriously—a combination which points to the possession of gray matter stowed away in that head of hers; and being unafraid of a blue pencil we may dip into the bag of the publicity departments and say that pretty head of hers; for Miss Griffith has good looks as well as wholesome demeanor.

The contract of First National with Corinne Griffith Productions covers a number of years. The latter company was organized by Charles R. Rogers, E. M. Asher, eastern representative of Mack Sennett, and Edward Small.

Before beginning work in her new company Miss Griffith will be seen as the featured player in "Black Oxen," a Frank Lloyd Production, also for First National release.

Following the luncheon, which was held in the Crystal Room of the Ritz-Carlton, there were talks by Mr. Reichenback, the toastmaster; James Quirk, of Photoplay Magazine; Moe Mark, Harry O. Schwalbe, Richard A. Rowland, Mr. Rogers, and the editor of Exhibitors Trade Review. All of the speakers expressed full confidence in the success of Miss Griffith in her new alliance.

Hague Returns Home

WE had the pleasure recently at an open luncheon of the A. M. P. A. of sitting alongside a man from the other side of the world, Alexander Hague, of Bombay. Mr. Hague, who has since sailed for home, is the owner of the distributing house known as Pathe-India, supplying product throughout India, Burmah and Ceylon.

Mr. Hague is a native of Burmah, not yet thirty years old, was educated in England and received his business training as an employe of Pathe Freres in France. In 1920 he secured from Pathe the distributing rights for its product in the three countries named and erected a large building in Bombay for the conduct of his business. The structure is equipped with all the doodads that go with an honest to goodness exchange house, including a first-class projection room.

The picture business in India, Mr. Hague reports, has been in rather a bad way recently, due to several causes, among them political disturbances and obstacles in the way of a steady supply of suitable picture entertainment. Ninety per cent of the material in that category comes from America, he says.

In a population of 320,000,000 persons Mr. Hague estimates there are a million regular picture theatre patrons. Supplying these are required nine copies of Pathe News, three of serials and one of the features. Mr. Hague expects to double this number soon. It is interesting to note that the visitor stated "Nanook of the North" fascinates the entire country.

"Nanook" Holds Up

LET'S get away from these outgoing travelers for a minute and come back to "Nanook." It was over a year ago that P. A. Parsons, long time Pathe advertising chief, declared in conversation with this writer the company was going to do something out of the ordinary. As he explained, it was the intention to follow the production with a long advertising campaign, not limited to the usual period, which by the way is short in duration, but through six months or perhaps a year. We agreed that not only was it out of the ordinary but as revolutionary as it was logical and businesslike.

The company has made good and so has "Nanook." It is reported the booking activity shows no signs of falling off at the end of the year, that attendance records of all types of houses show an average increase.

There may be a moral in the foregoing for wise distributors: When you get a live one don't let it die of innutrition. Feed it regularly with advertising and give it a chance to maintain its middle-aged weight, postponing its decline, its temporary decline, to the normal day. For of course, a good production does not die. It may be put in a vault for a period of years, that is true; it may even accumulate dust, but if reasonably protected it will not return to ashes.

Thus endeth that sermon.

High Cost of Production

OUT on the Pacific Coast, in Los Angeles to be specific—and we are quoting from the dispatches of those keen-scented news hounds who never sleep when motion pictures are mentioned—there has been haled before the grand jury a well-known player because in the possession of some alleged bootlegging gentleman were found two checks, for the sum of $60 and $115.

The aforesaid news hounds assert these were tendered in payment for a half case of gin and a case of Scotch respectively.

If these prices are authentic we desire to say that regardless of the merits of the particular case involved we can understand without any supplementary or contributing explanation why those boys just have to have high salaries in order to live. Better make these pictures on the Atlantic seaboard and watch the high cost of production fade into thin air.

International Convention

THERE'S probably no valid reason why in talking "o' gin an' beer" and more or less related subjects we should think of conventions, but we have noted in the current Bioscope of London that at a special meeting of the Syndicate Francais des Directeurs de Cinematographes (the French exhibitor association) it was definitely decided to call an international meeting of exhibitors, to be held in France in October.

Leon Brezillon, president of the syndicate, is quoted in an interview as saying that "the great points which call so loudly for firm and united action by exhibitors—indeed by all members of the cinematographic family throughout the world—are, first, the burning question of taxes and second establishing the prestige of the industry, which is, alas, sadly in need of rehabilitation. I must confess I feel rather strongly upon this latter question, which is, indeed, largely responsible for the preposterous burden of taxes with which the industry is charged.

"It is for us to emphasize the fact that the cinematographic industry is, in point of view of capital invested, the second in the world, and that our toes are as tender as those of any steel magnate."

English Tax Stands

WE'RE all brothers under the skin, after all, and the world around. This tax question is a live one and a burning one, as M. Brezillon aptly terms it, in England also as well as it is here at home. The Liverpool correspondent of the Film Renter tells of an exhibitor's meeting at which was made a report setting forth the failure of the campaign for film tax amelioration through action by parliament.

The speaker at the meeting pointed out that instead of the 433 votes promised in favor of the proceeding actually but 183 were recorded when the test came. But he significantly remarked that in the preceding year there were but 73 votes for a similar measure and the year before that but 8. The present year's vote was secured in spite of the weight of the whole cabinet thrown against the exhibitors.

It was developed that one exhibitor had paid in taxes the sum of £12,575 and that his enterprises had lost in the same period £355.

The Englishmen are starting on a new and more vigorous drive.

Pushing Home Product

THERE'S another kind of a drive on in England, too—the Great British Film Week. The country has been divided into districts, where during October and November for the period set apart it will be the aim to have "British films predominate in a striking manner."

The Englishmen seem to be taking a leaf out of the book of the American distributing companies—with the exception that in this country instead of supporting the custom as the exhibitor association in England is doing the theatre owners sometimes resolve against it.

Storey Pathe Sales Head

THE appointment is announced by General Manager Elmer Pearson of John E. Storey as general sales manager and W. B. Frank as feature sales manager of Pathe. Mr. Storey succeeds E. A. Eschmann, who has taken an executive position with First National.

The new general sales manager formerly was Pathe general representative. He is a Ford for "Maytime"

HARRISON FORD has been signed by B. P. Schulberg to play the leading masculine role in "Maytime," the famous play by Rida Johnson Young. Mr. Ford already has left for the west coast. Opposite him in the production will be featured three new screen beauties—Ethel Shannon, who won her spurs in "Daughters of the Rich;" Clara Bow, the girl who made a hit in "Down to the Sea in Ships," and Netta Westcott, the English stage star who is making her screen debut with Preferred.

About George Pardy

GEORGE PARDY on Page 459 is reviewing "Little Old New York" from the box office. He is looking at it with an especial view to its exploitation possibilities. This sort of thing is an old story for George, but on the present occasion he is making a feature of that angle.

Sizing up a picture from the viewpoint of the public also is the long suit of this veteran reviewer. He estimates its values with as sure an eye as he does the form of a prize fighter about to engage in combat. In case you didn't know it this is a good place to put on the record the fact that George is an authority on sports of all kinds.

It is to the field of motion pictures, however, that the veteran reviewer brings the mind of a poet as well as that of the man of the world. With this combination of fancy and of fact he carries in his breast a fund of sentiment, in his head a wealth of understanding.

From the first issue of Exhibitors Trade Review to the present one George Pardy's work has appeared on its pages. He is our ol' timer, and we want you to know him better. When you see "G. T. P." you'll know he's talking and you'll find the stuff worth sitting in on 179th street, New York City, July 14, 1925. A Donald H. Walk Production."

Our congratulations are extended to the assistant advertising manager of Universal and to his family.

Levey Buying Pictures

THESE Pathe boys are quite numerous in the news this week. Now enters Arthur Levey of Pathe Freres Cinema, Limited as they say in England, who has arrived in the United States to confer with Max Roth, manager of the foreign department of Principal Pictures. Mr. Levey, who is making his headquarters at 276 Fifth avenue, is buying for the United Kingdom as well as for several Continental countries.

Cummings an Independent

IRVING CUMMINGS, known as player and director and now an independent producer, has been spending several weeks in New York engaged in disposing of his latest picture, "Broken Hearts of Broadway." He has decided to become an independent in fact as well as in name, having determined to deal directly with the territorial buyers.

The other day in the course of a very pleasant chat, and it may be added a somewhat reminiscient one, Mr. Cummings was asked if he believed he would be able to concentrate on production while at the same time he carried the burdening details of distribution. He replied he had avoided that disturbing combination by engaging Ira Simmons to supervise the latter department.

No Native Son of the Golden West is more confirmed in his affection for California than is Mr. Cummings. He has no "time" any more for hearing of the wonders of the east. He says they don't exist, by comparison anyway. He remarks that one of the handicaps of buying a house in Los Angeles or its environs is the ensuing temptation to sell when an insistent if would-be buyer flashes in the face of the new owner a substantial increase on his investment. At this point we did sprinkle just a grain of salt on the table cloth. The action was seen but studiously ignored.

We recall—we don't think we'll ever forget that evening a number of years ago—sitting without lighted lamps in the spacious living room of the Cummings bungalow looking out across the great sloping and mountain-rimmed Santa Barbara shelf into the rays of the moon reflected in the Pacific. At times we would find at our elbow a white-garbed and soft-shod and most efficient Japanese chef.

He was a good-natured chef, too. So much so that he permitted us to intrude in his kitchen and weave an internal garment the recipe for which had been confided to us by the inventor of the Fireman's Shirt. This same inventor, by the way, is now arrayed in apparel non-white in color in one of the famous Broadway photoplay houses and will tell you whether your ticket is good or not.

It may be a bad point at which to cut this story. In the early morning hours we were driven back to the hotel by Mr. Cummings in his racing car. The only thing we heard on that trip was the roar of the exhaust and a policeman's whistle, but the car was going too fast to stop.

Three hours later Old Jay Cairns was out in front with two saddled horses all set for a mountain ride—and we had never sat in a saddle. It just happens we haven't since. It was a great ride, though.

An Exploitation Suggestion

OUR English contemporary The Bioscope offers an exploitation suggestion that seems worthy of serious consideration. It is that of harnessing the radio, which many film men have looked upon with concern, and employing it as a vehicle for the dissemination of publicity regarding current releases.

It seems the general subject of interesting the public in the newer pictures has been under discussion by the Cinematograph Trades Council, and our contemporary notes that the possibilities of the medium it mentions were not by the council taken into account. It points out that the Broadcasting Company already is transmitting talks by a critic upon the week's doings in the realm of music, and adds that the same thing could be done for the motion picture.

While and perhaps unfortunately we do not talk the jargon of the radio addict the proposition sounds good. It is an extension of the successful experiments of Dr. Rothafel of the Capitol. It is in line with the elaborate plan of Marcus Loew to broadcast entertainment from the new station, WHN, from the Loew State Theatre Building.

Here is a chance for the exhibitor organization of the particular vicinity or the F. I. L. M. club to induce a photoplay critic on, say, a Wednesday evening to tell the world what good pictures are showing in the big town. It may be worth a tryout.

Why Not?

MICHIGAN has outlined and is prepared to put into execution a most methodical plan of campaign for the elimination of the admission tax. Her sister state of New York also is actively at work. While the officers of the association representing the theatre owners of the latter commonwealth are not as yet so much in the open nevertheless there is reason to believe from the promises made at Syracuse and the reputation for thoroughness of the men into whose hands the task has been placed that the resolution adopted at the state convention is being carried out. North Carolina and other states are bending every energy.

The national organization also is doing everything possible to bring about amelioration of the burden. And it is a burden that weighs most heavily on those least able financially to bear it.

Time heals wounds. The conventions of Washington and Chicago are now sufficiently remote to permit reflection undisturbed by the rancors engendered in the heat of political strife.

Mr. Cohen in Chicago this year made the statement on the floor of the convention and also, unless we are very much mistaken, at the banquet as well, that it was his desire to see problems discussed and resolved around one table.

In the conventions of practically every state unaffiliated with the national organization the theatre owners have declared their intention to co-operate with all similar bodies in the furtherance of any good cause. There have been no strings on these statements. No exceptions have been intimated. The declarations have been straightforward.

If there is any one cause better than another on the exhibitor calendar at the moment it is that of tax elimination. The evil effect of the impost is not confined to those who make out reports to the government. It is felt throughout the industry.

The national legislature will convene in four months. Much work remains to be done. There is but one way to do it properly, and that is through one central agency, representing all exhibitors.

There are enough tables scattered over these United States to accommodate a sufficient number of theatre owners possessing the influence and the authority to achieve this fine result.

And if they can agree on one thing, a subject as large as the one under immediate discussion, they can agree on others.

Chaplin in a New Role

MOTION picture men without regard to or thinking of their own personal interests very probably will agree that the approaching release of a subject produced by Charlie Chaplin in which he does not appear is an event.

We recall several years ago hearing an unusually well equipped editor of a great newspaper remark that he had but one claim to distinction, and that was he had never seen Charlie Chaplin on the screen. We suggested he was missing a lot of fun, but he was adamant. His mind was firm, he was "sot in his judgments."

The statement was symptomatic of the impression prevailing in certain circles at that time. To that limited number of men and women Chaplin typified what was known to them only as the "movies." They ridiculed the suggestion that this man who had reached so deeply into the hearts of the great multitude, to alter a phrase of Dr. Howells', could be a genius.

It was not until Chaplin went abroad and was hailed by the intellectuals as being exactly what his "high-brow" critics on this side had declared him not to be that the reaction set in. He is accepted now and without question.

In an interesting interview, which is printed on another page, the man whom we know chiefly as a comedian sets forth his views on the taste of the public. We are sure you will enjoy reading them.

Michigan Waging Tax Elimination Campaign

KANSAS BREAKS WITH NATIONAL

New York State to Send Out Its Experts to Aid Exhibitors

The opening gun of Michigan's campaign to secure relief from the admission tax has been fired. Letters have been sent to every theater owner in the state containing questionnaires relative to the situation and calling seventeen sectional meetings in the state, at which time the matter will be discussed.

Sectional meetings will be held in the following cities, on the following dates, with a local chairman in charge of each meeting:

July 30, Lansing, Claude E. Cady, chairman; July 31, Kalamazoo, P. C. Schram, chairman; August 2, Niles, Robert Codd, chairman; August 3, Grand Rapids, G. L. Willer, chairman; August 6, Muskegon, Paul Schlossman, chairman; August 8, Big Rapids, chairman not selected; August 13, Boyne City, P. Tyrrel, chairman.

Beginning again in September, meetings will be held on Sept. 4, Port Huron, H. L. Weil, chairman; Sept. 6, Flint, chairman not selected; Sept. 7, Bad Axe, C. H. Schuekert, chairman; Sept. 10, Saginaw, Chas. Q. Carlisle, chairman; Sept. 12, West Branch, B. Sargent, chairman; Sept. 14, Alpena, chairman not selected, and Sept. 18, Marquette, H. S. Gallup, chairman.

In attendance at all of these meetings, in addition to H. M. Richey, general manager of the Michigan organization, will be several members of the board of directors. In this manner definite facts and figures to support Michigan's contention that relief is needed will be gathered and presented to Congressmen and Senators from Michigan.

Actively assisting in the campaign in Michigan will be Judge Alfred J. Murphy, legal counsel, who is assisting in preparation of data and information relative to the tax situation. The fact that many theater owners in Michigan have had to resort to the buying of cheaper pictures because they were not making enough money to keep their houses open is a situation that reacts very disadvantageously for the public, and is a matter that must be corrected, the Michigan leaders think.

The final meeting will be the big state convention at Jackson, the second week in October, at which time the whole situation can be laid down for the theater owners. An excellent response is being received from the questionnaires that are being sent out.

Arrangements are being made to have direct representation in Washington, where all of this information can be supplied, and carried not only to Michigan legislators, but to anyone to whom it will prove valuable information.

LIGGETT DECLINES A COHEN NOMINATION

The M. P. T. O. of Kansas has broken away from the Cohen regime. The action, announced Thursday night in the form of a letter from R. G. Liggett, president of the Kansas association, to Sydney S. Cohen, followed a meeting of the board of directors of the Kansas organization July 11 and 12, Kansas City, when the contemplated action was thoroughly discussed.

In Mr. Liggett's letter to Mr. Cohen, in which the former refused to accept the appointment as member of the executive committee at large, Mr. Cohen is informed that the Kansas body in the future will pay no money to the national organization and that it will refrain from accepting any national office at this time.

While Kansas has taken a direct break with the Cohen regime, it has not severed its connection with the M. P. T. O. A., as a body. Although no official announcement has been made, it is generally understood that the situation is a personal one.

Mr. Liggett's appointment as a member of the executive committee at large was made July 5, but, owing to action taken by Kansas delegates at the Chicago convention which resulted in the withdrawal of Mr. Liggett's name as a candidate for a member of the national board of directors, the Kansas president refrained from accepting the appointment without first having the confirmation of the Kansas directors.

As many members as possible of the M. P. T. O. Kansas executive board will accompany C. E. Cook, business manager in a trip over the state the last two weeks of August and the first two weeks in September, when conventions in each of the newly outlined zones in Kansas will be held in consecutive order. It is the goal of the Kansas organization to build six strong, self-supporting zone divisions within the state organization.

Mr. Cook and R. G. Liggett, president, will go to Topeka, with Samuel Handy, attorney for the association, for the purpose of completing incorporation papers being taken out by the Kansas body, which changed its name from the Kansas State Exhibitors Association to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas.

Berman to Make Tour

President William Brandt is sending Sam Berman, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, on a tour during the second week in September on organization matters. Mr. Berman will visit every exhibitor upstate for the purpose of keeping in close touch in smaller towns and cities.

The state organization has retained a projection engineer to accompany Mr. Berman on his trip. This engineer will look over the equipment of each theatre visited, for the purpose of making suggestions and aiding the exhibitor in bringing this equipment up to date or place it in the best of condition.

Also accompanying Mr. Berman will be an insurance expert who is compiling data for the insurance committee recently appointed by President Brandt. The insurance expert will offer suggestions for eliminating unnecessary risks, and to lower the high cost of individual theatre rating. Both of these services will be gratis to the members of the organization.

Incidentally Mr. Berman is carrying a message to every exhibitor to keep urging his Congressman and Senator to help repeal the present admission tax and assist in passing a bill for that purpose, which will be introduced by Congressman Clarence MacGregor shortly after the forthcoming season of Congress.

Kirkwood Will Play Lead

James Kirkwood will play the leading male role in Goldwyn's "Wild Oranges" from Joseph Hergesheimer's story. Ford Sterling has been engaged for an important character role.

BROADWAY RUNS FOR WARNER FILMS

Rivoli, Rialto and Strand Book Independent Features — Paramount Signed.

New York.—Warner Brothers forthcoming productions for the 1923-24 season will be given first run presentations at the Rialto, Rivoli and Strand Theatres, New York. According to the announcement the three theatres have booked an equal number of the Warner pictures.

The deal with Famous Players and the Mark Strand organization was negotiated by Morris Kohn and Charles S. Goetz, of the Dependable Exchange, Inc., who control the exclusive rights to the Warner productions in the Greater New York territory.

Another deal with Famous Players for the Warner Pictures was made by Oscar Oldknow, of the Southern States Film Company, Atlanta, by the terms of which Paramount houses throughout the South will show the eighteen Warner productions.

In commenting on the Paramount and Strand deals, Mr. Kohn said: "The Warner Brothers classics being shown in the Paramount and Strand Theatres in New York will pave the way for the future booking of independent productions that are big enough for a first run showing"

Laurette Taylor to Leave

Stage and Return to Screen

Laurette Taylor is to leave the stage for a season and return to the screen. Joseph W. Engel, senior vice president of Metro in charge of production in Hollywood, stated that Miss Taylor will arrive there in a few weeks to make two pictures for release during the coming season. She was signed in the east, and will cancel all other engagements to start work as soon as possible.

According to present plans Miss Taylor will star in two of the plays of Hartley Manners, her husband, in which she has appeared on the stage. The first will be "Happiness" and the second "A Night in Rome."

LICHTMAN BACK FROM WEST COAST

Enthusiastic About Forthcoming Fifteen Preferred Pictures

Al Lichtman, President of Preferred Pictures Corporation, is back in his New York office after a visit of more than a month to the Preferred Studios and Exchanges.

Mr. Lichtman is enthusiastic about the forthcoming Fifteen Preferred Pictures. "When I reached the coast," he said, "'The Virginian' was under way. I honestly believe that in making this, B. P. Schulberg has made the outstanding production of the year.

"The work of Kenneth Harlan as 'The Virginian' will come as a revelation. In this picture, Harlan fulfills his own glowing promise and the predictions of the critics. The rest of the cast shine with almost equal brilliancy. Florence Vidor, Pat O'Malley, Raymond Hatton, Russell Simpson and the others have all helped Tom Forman bring to life the famous characters of Owen Wister's great novel.

"Preparation has also begun on 'Maytime.' Harrison Ford, who will play the leading male role, is certainly ideal for the part. Playing opposite him will be Ethel Shannon. Others in the cast will include William Norris, Netta Westcott and Clara Bow.

"I showed the three pictures already completed, 'The Broken Wing,' 'Mothers-in-Law' and 'April Showers' to leading exhibitors, including Frank Newman in Kansas City, the Skouras Brothers, and was rewarded by having them sign for the pictures immediately after the showing. The Skouras Brothers contracted for the entire Fifteen Preferred Pictures on the basis of these three.

"The All Star Feature Distributors, owners of the Preferred Franchise in San Francisco, were so pleased with the first eight, and so enthusiastic about the coming Fifteen, that the negotiations for the coming season were a mere formality. That also proved to be the case with Harry Nolan in Denver and Al Rosenberg in Seattle.

"In Kansas City and Omaha, we will from now on operate under our own exchanges. Already this has proved a very successful policy, with Ed Grossman in charge."

SAFETY LAST BREAKS TWO HOUSE RECORDS

Wires to Pathe from the managements of Orchestra Hall, Chicago, and Miller's Theatre, Los Angeles, state that "Safety Last" has broken all house records for simultaneous length of run on any kind of feature.

The statements are identical in that on Sunday, July 29, both theatres started in their tenth week of the Lloyd comedy, with attendance showing no signs of falling off for some time to come.

PICTURE HOUSES ENJOY PROSPERITY

California Amusements Share in Exceptionally Good Summer Business

All amusements in California are enjoying a run of prosperity and the motion picture houses especially. Despite the fact that the beach season is in full swing, the influx of tourists has made up for the crowds that are pouring to the seaside. Of course the cinema houses have felt the beach attraction's influence somewhat, and many in the suburbs have closed down their matinees with the exception of Saturdays and Sundays. But on the whole business is exceptionally good for the summer months.

The tremendous number of amusement seekers in this city is indicated by the report of the Federal Tax Collector, who says that this district in the first six months of 1923 furnished one-twentieth of the amusement tax paid by the United States. While the amusement tax of the country decreased $4,000,000 during the fiscal year, this district increased in the first half of the year $241,000 and the total amounted to $1,603,646. At that rate the ratio for the year will be $3,207,292 and represents an attendance of 210,000,000 persons during the year.

The collector states the tax collected here will equal the combined revenue collections of all kinds for the fiscal year of 1922 of Arizona, Nevada and Alaska; equals Montana's receipts; is $250,000 more than Wyoming's and is $700,000 more than South Dakota's.

LARRY SEMON'S PLANS

Before Larry Semon starts his new contract with Truett he is going to know just exactly what he is going to do in the way of stories. He will not write, for the present at least, any more of his own production scripts. Instead he will be seen in big stories with big advertising back of them, and they will be made on a lavish scale.

The first three will be the old Frank Daniels play "King Dodo"; "The Girl in the Limousine," stage play produced by Al Woods, and "The Wizard of Oz," Frank Baum's old fairy tale which proved a wonderful success on the stage and made Montgomery and Stone.

The "Wizard of Oz" will give Semon a chance to build up some clever trick double exposure stuff in addition to excellent opportunity for good comedy.

Books Entire List

Fred Desberg, General Manager of Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., has booked the entire Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan list of releases for 1923-4 for first run showings at the Stillman, State and Allen theatres, Cleveland, and will open the fall season with "Three Wise Fools" and "The Spoilers."

BLACKTON STARTS FIRST FEATURE

On the Banks of the Wabash Will Have An All Star Cast

J. Stuart Blackton began shooting "On the Banks of the Wabash" at the Vitagraph Studios in Brooklyn, last week. This is the first of six Blackton Productions which the Commodore will release through his old organization.

A typical Blackton all star cast has been engaged for this feature. Mary Carr, the famous screen mother, will have one of the leading roles. Burr McIntosh will portray the part of an old river captain. James Morrison, juvenile star, will play the part of David, the son of the steamboat captain.

Lumsden Hare, has been cast for the small town artist and plays opposite Mary Carr. Mary McLaren, has the role of Ivonne. Little Madge Evans has been cast as the ingenue lead, the daughter of Mary Carr.

George Neville will be seen as Sash Brown. Marcia Harris as Tilda Spiffen. Ed. Roseman as Westley Spiffen. Harry and Dick Lee will provide the comedy.

BUYS RADIO STATION

Just before sailing for Europe, Marcus Loew announced that he had made arrangements with George Shubel, owner of the WHN Radio Station, at Ridgewood, L. I., to transfer his station to the Loew State Theatre Building.

It is estimated over 300,000 people listen in every day. Mr. Loew's plans include unusual and entirely different entertainment from any given heretofore. He will utilize many of his headliners and his State Theatre orchestra. In addition to this he will bring to the radio fans an imposing array of celebrities of the stage, screen and every walk of life, to discuss topics which will be of interest to every "Listener In" on WHN.

It is expected the station will open its new home Thursday night, August 9.

Charles Horan Finishes Work On No Mother to Guide Her

"No Mother to Guide Her" is the latest special production to be completed at the New York Studios of Fox. Cutting and editing of the prints are now in progress under the supervision of Julius Steger, production manager in the East, and Charles Horan, the director.

In addition to Dolores Rousse the cast includes John Webb Dillion, Lolita Robertson, Katherine Downer, Frank Wunderlee, Maude Hill, Ruth Sullivan, J. D. Walsh, Jack Richardson, George Dewey, Jack McLean, Lillian Lee, Marion Stevenson, William Quinn and Irving Hartley.

Changes in Personnel

Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that Jack Flannery has been appointed Branch Sales Manager of the Omaha, Neb., Branch of the Hodkinson Corporation replacing L. A. Getzler resigned. Mr. Flannery's appointment to his new position was effective July 23.

E. L. Smith Resigns

E. L. Smith, Production Manager for Inspiration Pictures, Inc., and the original organizer for the producing activities of the company, has announced his resignation. He has not announced his future plans.

Mid-Summer Sees No Slackening in Goldwyn

BIG PRODUCTION PROGRAM GOES ON

Pictures Range From Costume Periods to Simple Stories of Every Day Life

With a remarkable assemblage of stars and directors, an ambitious production program is now actively under way at the Goldwyn studios. With pictures ranging from costume features to simple stories of every day life, the program runs the gamut of screen entertainment.

The variety of Goldwyn's production policy is well illustrated by the contrast in two of the pictures now nearing completion. "In the Palace of the King," which Emmett Flynn is directing, and Erich von Stroheim's production of "Greed." The former, adapted from F. Marion Crawford's novel, is a period play of old Spain. The all-star cast includes Blanche Sweet, Edmund Lowe, Hobart Bosworth, Lucien Littlefield, Pauline Starke and Aileen Pringle. "Greed" adapted from Frank Norris' novel "McTague," is a story of lowly folk amid the drabness of poverty. The cast includes Gibson Gowland, Zasu Pitts, Cesare Gravina, Jean Hersholt and Dale Fuller.

Marshall Neilan has completed two productions. The first, "The Eternal Three," a love story with Hobart Bosworth, Claire Windsor, Raymond Griffith, Bessie Love, William Orlamond and others. Neilan's other production is "The Rendezvous," a story of revolutionary Russia with Conrad Nagel, Lucille Rickson, Lucien Littlefield, Kate Lester, Kathleen Key and Richard Travers.

Tod Browning is directing a story of American life, "The Day of Faith," by Arthur Somers Roche. Players in the cast include Tyrone Power, Raymond Griffith, Eleanor Boardman and Ford Sterling.

Victor Seastrom, is making a film version of Sir Hall Caine's "The Master of Man," with Conrad Nagel, Mae Busch, Patsy Ruth Miller, Hobart Bosworth, Creighton Hale and Aileen Pringle in leading roles.

Further indication of the wide variety of Goldwyn productions is seen in "The Magic Skin," which George D. Baker is directing. This is a film version of the Balzac story and stars appearing in the picture are George Walsh, Bessie Love and Carmel Myers.

That there is to be no slackening in Goldwyn's program is testified to by the new productions soon to be started. Rupert Hughes is preparing for a picture tentatively titled "Law Against Law," which will deal with the divorce question, with Helene Chadwick in the leading role.

TRIES NOVEL IDEA

L. J. Hacking, Manager of Hodkinson's Boston exchange, tried out a novel idea to get his product before exhibitors in his territory. He classed the exhibitors according to the product used and then sent lettered cards in black, gold and red, telling of the Hodkinson product that would interest each one. If an exhibitor used only feature attractions, Mr. Hacking sent him a card about All Star Comedies, Fun From the Press and other short subjects. The plan secured many additional bookings.

Elinor Glyn will assist in a film adaptation of her novel "Three Weeks." Players for the production have not yet been chosen.

King Vidor has prepared the continuity for Joseph Hergesheimer's "Wild Oranges" and as soon as the players have been chosen, will take his company to the swamp lands of Georgia to film it.

Marshall Neilan is expected to return to the studios in a short time to begin work on his film version of Thomas Hardy's novel "Tess of the D'Urbervilles." Blanche Sweet will act the role of Tess, Conrad Nagel that of her lover, Angel Clare.

DENIES RUMOR OF LLOYD SWITCH

Ragland Refutes Talk That Comedian Contemplates Change of Releasing Arrangement

The rumor current in New York this week that Harold Lloyd is contemplating a switch of his distributing affiliation from Pathe to United Artists, after the completion of his present Pathe contract, has been definitely spiked as untrue.

John C. Ragland, Eastern Representative of Mr. Lloyd, declared that any such report is absolutely contrary to the facts and emphatically denied the verity of an article which appeared in a New York publication to that effect. Mr. Ragland stated that Lloyd's present contract calls for the delivery to Pathe of three more feature productions following "Why Worry," which is scheduled for early Fall release, and that no contract covering future distribution would be signed until the completion of the present contract.

In support of his declaration Mr. Ragland quoted from a telegram from William R. Fraser, General Manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation. Mr. Fraser said, "There is absolutely no truth in the report that Harold Lloyd is now negotiating to join United Artists."

Fox Features Completed

Dustin Farnum is completing his new feature "The Plugger." Margaret Fielding is leading lady.

Two other Fox features which have been completed are "The Lone Star Ranger," the Zane Grey story featuring Tom Mix, and "Hell's Hole" scheduled for early release.

Pioneer Trails on Way East

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has received word from the Hollywood studios that David Smith's production "Pioneer Trails" has been shipped east. This is a story of the West when trails were broken for the great trans-continental railroads.

The cast is headed by Cullen Landis and Alice Calhoun.

Earle Williams Signed

Earle Williams, for twelve years a Vitagraph star, has been signed for the First National production "Two Little Vagrants" to be directed by Maurice Tourneur.

Dora Mills Adams Gets Part

Dora Mills Adams has been cast to play the part of Mrs. Rufus Kayne in the Paramount production of "His Children's Children."

FOX ANNOUNCES AUGUST RELEASES

Two Specials Head Schedule and Imperial Comedies Make Appearance

Two new features of the August release program for Fox Film Corporation announced this week are, first, the listing for distribution of the first two of the 25 specials planned for 1923-24 and secondly, the introduction of the first of the series of Imperial Comedies, a new brand of fun-reels.

In addition there are starring vehicles for William Russell and Dustin Farnum, an Al St. John and a Clyde Cook special comedy, a Sunshine Comedy and a Fox Educational Entertainment.

"If Winter Comes" and "Soft Boiled," comprise the two specials for August release. The first will be ready August 19 and the latter August 26.

"If Winter Comes" will be seen on Broadway at the Times Square Theatre for an indefinite run commencing September 1st.

"The Rainstorm," first of the new Imperial Comedies, "Alias the Night Wind," William Russell picture, "A Goldfish Story," Educational Entertainment, and "The Cyclist," Clyde Cook Comedy will be released August 19.

August 26 "The Man Who Won," Dustin Farnum, "The Tailor," an Al St. John comedy, and "Jungle Pals," Sunshine comedy, will be ready for distribution.

Frank De Lorenzo is Dined

A testimonial dinner was given to Frank De Lorenzo by the Omaha Board of Trade and the prominent exhibitors of that territory. Mr. De Lorenzo is being transferred from the Omaha, Selznick Distributing Corporation office to the Milwaukee exchange of the same company, Milwaukee being his home and old love, he having managed the Select office in that city.

HAL ROACH OPENS DIRECTOR SCHOOL

Designed Primarily for the Assistant Directors of His Comedy Units

Pathe confirms the reports printed in leading Pacific Coast newspapers that Hal Roach has inaugurated a "School for Directors." This latest innovation connected with the production end of the motion picture industry now figures among the many separate activities at the big Roach Studios, Culver City, Calif., where Will Rogers is now working as star in a series of 2-reel comedies while, on the same "lot," "Our Gang," Stan Laurel, Snub Pollard and Paul Parrott maintain their record as foremost among screen merrymakers.

"The crying need of the comedy producers today is directors," said Mr. Roach in announcing his plans for the novel "school." "Good directors are as scarce as big stars. While some directors may be 'born' that way, we've reached a point in the growing pressing public demand for first class comedy where we can't afford to rely on such accidents of birth; we've got to get to work and 'make' directors."

Mr. Roach himself started as an "extra" and assistant director. He wants to give every man in his organization an opportunity to advance. The new school was designed primarily for the assistant directors of the various Roach comedy units, and for the present progresses along that line. Later, anyone in the organization may enter, with opportunities to demonstrate his fitness for directorial work.

Classes are now meeting every Monday night, with the Roach staff of directors acting as "professors."

NOVELS AND PLAYS SOUGHT BY PRODUCERS

Hollywood.—Producers are alert in the market looking to snap up novels and plays that show indication of popularity. Several deals were announced completed or pending this week.

Anne Nichols, it is said, has been offered $150,000 for "Abie's Irish Rose" that received a panning from the critics and a welcome from the public. Miss Nichols will not sell the play while its run continues.

Producers of "Barnum Was Right" are asking $140,000 for the screen rights. It is said Douglas Fairbanks among others would like to get it.

MAY McAVOY TO PLAY OPPOSITE HUNTER

May McAvoy has been signed to play opposite Glenn Hunter in "West of the Water Tower," his first Paramount picture.

Röllin Sturgeon, who will direct the picture, and Lucien Hubbard, who adapted the novel for the screen, are on their way from the coast and will be ready to start production of the picture at the Paramount Long Island studio in about two weeks.

Max Graf is negotiating with Hugh Wiley for his Chinese and "Wildcat" stories, and Film Booking Office are trying to obtain "Sandpile," story by Mary Synon.

Richard Walton Tully has bought "Going Together" and Allen Holubar, who bought "The Bishop of Cottontown" for his first Metro production, will film it as "The Human Mill."

TWO NEW FIRMS TO HANDLE WARNER FILMS

Two new organizations, one in Seattle and the other in Omaha, and both to be known as Film Classics, Inc., have been formed to distribute Warner Brothers new product in those territories. Both firms have formerly operated as small independent exchanges. L. K. Brin, head of the organization formerly known as Kwaloty Pictures Corp., Seattle, is first in charge of Film Classics Inc., which will distribute in Seattle, Denver and Portland; and the Omaha concern is headed by Al Kahn, whose organization was formerly known as Crescent Film Exchange.

Warner Brothers state that they have no connection with the two new exchanges other than those ordinarily existing between independent exchanges and producers.

Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto, and the Southern States Film Company, Atlanta, have contracted for the new Warner product. The territory taken over by Regal Films includes the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland; and Southern States Film Company purchased the rights to Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina and Tennessee.

MAE MARSH A TOMBOY

Mae Marsh, former Griffith star has a tomboy role in "Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing," the Allied Producers and Distributors release. The picture is a humorous one in which Miss Marsh is said to bring a more mature artistry to the screen. When the film was shown recently at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles, local papers praised it highly.

Adler a Selznick Manager

The Selznick Distributing Corporation announces through David Blyth, director of sales, the appointment of Lester Adler, to the position of manager of the New York and New Jersey Exchange, which was left vacant by the recent resignation of Henry Siegel. Mr. Adler's entrance into the industry dates back twelve or fourteen years.

Cast for Leavenworth Case

The all star cast which has been announced for Vitagraph's "The Leavenworth Case" includes Seena Owen, Martha Mansfield, Wilfred Lytell, Bradley Barker, Paul Doucet, William Walcott, Francis Miller Grant and Fred Miller.

PREFERRED JOINS THE M. P. P. D. A.

Al Lichtman Issues Statement Relative to Affiliation at This Time

As was announced editorially last week Preferred Pictures Corporation, distributors of Preferred Pictures, has joined the Will H. Hays organization. Mr. Lichtman, president of the corporation, B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred Pictures and J. G. Bachman, treasurer, are entering the organization because of a full appreciation of the splendid efforts of Mr. Hays and his associates in activities for the common good of all members of the motion picture industry.

"At the Naked Truth Dinner," said Mr. Lichtman, "being asked directly why I had not joined the Hays organization, I stated that the reason was that I believed Mr. Hays had not yet tackled what I feel the biggest problem in the industry—the building of more good will between exchangers and exhibitors.

"I am convinced now, however, that the Hays organization is the only one to work out a plan for building such good will and that the best way for us to help to bring it about is to give Mr. Hays our complete support.

"I believe that it is the duty of every man in the motion picture business, regardless of his connections, to help Mr. Hays in his efforts, for he is working to help all of us.

"Mr. Hays is sincere and constructive and successful in his work and we are going to get in with him and do everything we can to help him. I believe we will get more action for good in this industry by cooperation and we are going to do our part."

JANE NOVAK FOR NEW TOURNEUR PRODUCTION

Jane Novak will play the feminine lead in Maurice Tourneur's "Jealous Fools" to be produced by M. C. Levee at the United Studios.

Contracts were signed by Mr. Levee and Chester Bennett, who has Miss Novak under a long term starring contract for his own productions.

The portrayal in "Jealous Fools" by Miss Novak, will mark her return to the First National fold. One of her early First National characterizations, her part in Marshall Neilan's "The River's End," won Miss Novak a large following. After that she starred in various productions until she signed a long term contract with Mr. Bennett in whose pictures she has been starring recently. Her last picture for Mr. Bennett was "The Lullaby."

Trilby Welcomed to Screen by Metropolitan Critics

"Trilby," Du Maurier's world-famed heroine of the Latin quarter of Paris, whose name is a household word throughout the country, lived again on the screen of the Strand theatre in New York during the week of July 29. Metropolitan critics were unanimous in welcoming a return of "Trilby" to the silversheet.

The New York papers settled the question of Andree Lafayette's screen appeal very decidedly. The young French actress, imported from Paris by Richard Walton Tully to play the title role in this First National picture, was welcomed as a happy addition to the ranks of American screen players and further successes were prophesied for her.

Normand Pictures for Associated Exhibitors

THE EXTRA GIRL WILL BE FIRST

Distribution Contract Signed By Mack Sennett and Arthur S. Kane

Mack Sennett and Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, have signed a contract calling for the distribution by Associated of a series of features starring the popular comedienne, Mabel Normand.

Two, but never to exceed three, productions a year, are to be made, the contract calling for pictures of a super-type, exclusively. It is understood that under the terms of the contract, the production cost of each is to be between $350,000 and $500,000.

Mr. Kane and Mr. Sennett discussed arrangements for Associated's distribution of the Mabel Normand features during Mr. Kane's recent business visit to the Pacific coast, at which time Mr. Sennett's contract with United Artists Corporation was nearing its expiration. In the final negotiations E. M. Asher, Mr. Sennett's personal representative in New York, acted for the producer.

Announcement was made that the first of the Normand features to be distributed by Associated Exhibitors will be "The Extra Girl," which Mack Sennett is now engaged in cutting. The work of production occupied six months. The release date is yet to be set.

"The Extra Girl," the story which is by Mr. Sennett himself, is a comedy drama, centering about life in a motion picture studio. While the comedy element is emphasized, the story strikes a chord of deeper feeling and stronger human appeal than any other which has come from the pen of the well known author-producer. A broad, wholesome theme is embodied. It partakes of the nature of the "Mickey" and "Molly O" type and was written especially for Miss Normand.

WORLD'S PREMIERE OF ASHES OF VENGEANCE

A brilliant audience will witness the world's premiere of "Ashes of Vengeance," Norma Talmadge's new First National picture, on Monday evening, August 7, at the Apollo theatre. The picture is scheduled for an indefinite pre-release run at this theatre and is presented by Jos. M. Schenck.

Invitations already accepted assure the presence of practically all the celebrities of the screen and stage in New York, prominent film executives and representatives of the New York newspapers, business, fan and literary magazines.

"Ashes of Vengeance" is Miss Talmadge's first full-length feature in ten reels. It will supply the entire evening's entertainment, with no comedy film or news reel to fill out the program. It is a costume picture, the action being laid in France in the sixteenth century.

SHIPMAN TO PRODUCE SUNRISE TRAIL FILMS

Ernest Shipman, president of the Long Island Cinema Corporation, which is to produce three Sunrise Trail Pictures on Long Island this summer, has purchased "The River Road" for his first production. The subject is a popular new novel by Hamilton Thompson that is having a widespread circulation. Kenneth O'Hara, chief of Mr. Shipman's scenario department, will prepare the story for the screen. "The Coast Guard Patrol" has been adopted as a temporary title.

Mr. Shipman is making an extensive tour of Long Island, searching for the beauty spots that will be used for the background of his initial Sunrise Trail Picture.

AUCTION SALE SIGN DRAWS LARGE CROWD

An auction sale sign on the front of the Wm. K. Vanderbilt home at Fifty-second street and Fifth avenue, New York, drew such a large crowd that eight policemen were needed to keep the people back. The sign was put up for a scene in Paramount's "His Children's Children," the former home of Mr. Vanderbilt being used as the home of Rufus Kayne. If Sam Wood had reckoned on a New York crowd he would not have had to engage extras, as the people would have flocked into the house were it not for the police.

CAPACITY AUDIENCES

Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships" played to capacity audiences at the Lyric Theatre in Oil City, Pa., after intensive advertising. The Plaza Theatre, Brownsville, Pa., and The Princess Theatre, Fairmont, W. Va., also advertised intensively with the result of obtaining unusual business.

Favorable reports on other Hodkinson products are also being received. In Providence, R. I., eight Hodkinson pictures will be given first runs. They are "Married People" at the Majestic, "Affinities" at the Rialto, "Dollar Devils," "Heart's Haven" and "The Veiled Woman" at the Modern and "Second Fiddle," "Gray Dawn" and "Youthful Cheaters" at the Strand.

Tipped Off to Be Released By Playgoers in August

"Tipped Off" the Playgoers picture adapted from Frederick Reel, Jr.'s, tale "Scarlet Shadows," will be released August 5. Heading the cast are Noah Beery, Tom Santschi, Stuart Holmes and Arline Pretty.

The feature which is said to be an engrossing tale of intrigue, is marked by its colorful sets of a Buddhist temple, tortuous underworld alleyways and a gang's den. Tom Santschi and Noah Beery have one of their famous screen battles in a thrilling scene.

Ben Alexander in Feature

Ben Alexander twelve-year old stage and screen star will play the part of Bud in "Two Little Vagrants" M. C. Levee's forthcoming First National production.

HAL ROACH JOINS M. P. P. D. A.

Hal Roach has been admitted to membership in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. The entrance of Mr. Roach brings the organization's roster to twenty-one.

HOLLYWOOD GOES OVER AT RIVOLI

Crowds Storm Theatre Where Feature Creates Sensation and Breaks Record

James Cruze's Paramount Picture "Hollywood," featuring twenty-two stars and fifty-six screen celebrities, created a sensation at its premiere performance at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, Sunday, July 29. From the fact that hundreds were turned away, it was apparent that this picture will prove to be one of the box office sensations of the new season.

Receipts at the opening totalled $6,075. This was in spite of the fact that Sunday was an unpleasant day and the picture was exhibited in the summer, when attendance is supposed to be light.

That "Hollywood" was expected by the public to prove something unusual was evidenced, according to Paramount, by the line of people which gathered early outside of the theatre before the opening performance. The crowd was so great at both afternoon and evening performances, that it was necessary to turn several hundred away.

Equally enthusiastic over this feature were the reviewers on the metropolitan newspapers, who were unanimous in praising this latest James Cruze production.

New Harold Lloyd Feature Comedy Shipped to Pathe

Pathe has received notice of the shipment of the new Lloyd feature comedy, "Why Worry," which is scheduled for release sometime in September.

"Why Worry" was written by Hal Roach and Sam Taylor, assisted by Ted Wilde and Tim Whelan. Fred Newmeyer and Sam Taylor directing. The picture introduces Jobyna Ralston as Lloyd's leading woman. A figure in the cast that is new to the screen is John Aasen, declared to be the biggest man in the world. He is eight feet and 1/4 inches tall and weighs 460 pounds.

ACCLAIM POTASH AND PERLMUTTER

Samuel Goldwyn's Production Is Said to Be One Hundred Per Cent.

"Potash and Perlmutter," Samuel Goldwyn's first independent production for distribution through First National, has proved itself, after three previews before widely different types of audiences, a one hundred per cent picture. The production was screened last week as a part of the regular performance of a Bayside, L. I., theatre before First National executives. On the two following evenings Mr. Goldwyn brought his picture to other Long Island houses, watching with First National executives, the reaction of the audience. The poll of opinions of all film men who saw the picture have won it the title of "one hundred per cent production."

Of questioned quality for screen production, "Potash and Perlmutter," was selected by Mr. Goldwyn for his first independent effort, largely because of the eight years popularity which it enjoyed on the stage.

"Potash and Perlmutter" went into work nine weeks ago under the directorial supervision of Clarence Badger with Barney Bernard, Alexander Carr and Vera Gordon in the star roles.

On July 24, Mr. Goldwyn, accompanied by A. H. Woods, who produced the stage play; Montague Glass, the author; Richard Rowland, Harry Schwalbe, E. A. Easchmann, Floyd Brockell, Archie Selwyn, Mae Frances, Robert Dexter, Harry Reichenbach, Martin Hermin, Julius Tanner and others, saw the preview.

Five hundred people, all the house would seat, gave the picture an ovation and at the finish A. H. Woods, the original producer, announced that he would set back his opening dates at the Eltinge Theatre, New York, and the Woods Theatre, Chicago.

Thursday night, accompanied by Joseph Plunkett of the Strand and Walter Hays and other prominent First National executives the picture was taken to another point on Long Island and again demonstrated that it is one of the great appealing pictures which the screen seems to get every great once in a while. Friday night it more than proved itself before another audience of a still different type and it was after these three tests of the picture's worth that First National felt assured of its success.

THREE WISE FOOLS REMAINS FOR SECOND WEEK

Goldwyn's "Three Wise Fools" has been held over for the second week at the Capitol theatre, New York. This puts the feature in the honor class of half a dozen pictures which have done a big enough business at the Capitol to be held over for a second week.

"The Spoilers," also a Goldwyn picture, which was scheduled for the week beginning July 29, has been postponed to Sunday, August 5.

LEVEE POSTPONES LITTLE VAGRANTS

Jealous Fools to be Next Maurice Tourneur Production for First National

M. C. Levee has set aside producing plans for "Two Little Vagrants" and will next produce for First National, "Jealous Fools" an original story by Maurice Tourneur and which will be directed by him.

Earle Williams and Ben Alexander, now under contract with Mr. Levee will appear in two of the leading roles of "Jealous Fools" as will various other players with whom negotiations are now under way. From the standpoint of both production and cast this feature will eclipse any previous Levee-Tourneur picture, it is announced.

Actual "shooting" on the production will be started in the near future. The story is now being placed in scenario form by Mr. Tourneur and Fred Myton, scenario editor.

MARY PICKFORD'S NEXT

After completing "Rosita," which soon will be shown as a road show attraction, Mary Pickford considered several stories for her next picture and has decided on "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." Sets will probably be under construction very soon and the actual camera work will begin in about a month.

The Call of the Wild to Be Released Early in the Fall

Hal Roach's feature production of Jack London's dog classic, "The Call of the Wild," is announced by Pathe for early Fall release. The picture was filmed last winter in the sub-Arctic regions.

The star dog part is played by "Buck," a giant St. Bernard raised by Mr. Roach from early puppyhood.

Among the principals in the cast are Walter Long, Jack Mulhall, Laura Roessing, Frank Butler and Sidney D'Albrook. The feature is titled by Harley M. Walker, who was a personal friend of the author at the time when London was writing the story.

Warners Sign Louise Fazenda

Los Angeles—Louise Fazenda, recognized as one of the leading screen comedienne, has signed a long term contract with Warner Brothers. Miss Fazenda has played prominent roles in recent pictures produced by the Warners including "The Beautiful and Damned," "Main Street" and "The Gold Diggers," in which she appeared in the role of Mabel.

October Release

The Fox feature "The Governor's Lady" probably will be released in October. The cast includes Robert T. Haines, Ann Luther, Jane Gray, Frazer Coulter and Leslie Austen.

SPECIAL SHOWING OF HUNCHBACK

Los Angeles Scribes, Exhibitors and Clergy Make Up Audience

A prereview of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" was given this week at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles. It was attended by newspaper writers, correspondents of the business press and quite a sprinkling of exhibitors and the clergy. Universal put it on in great shape and entertained all with a luncheon before the showing.

The picture as shown is in twelve reels, the running time was two hours and eleven minutes but with cuts will run less than two hours.

It was not presented for review but in a general way all of the newspapers of Los Angeles spoke of it in glowing terms as a production, and the exhibitors present were unanimous in declaring it one of the best box office pictures ever filmed.

It is not only a lavish production, but the cast gives a great performance in which Lon Chaney appears in the best roles he ever has interpreted. Ernest Torrence, Norman Kerry and Patsy Ruth Miller stand out in their parts.

James Bryson left for New York with the film directly after the showing and it will have its New York Premier at the Astor Theatre on September 3.

Paramount Buys Universal Product for the South

Contracts have been closed for a year's product of moving pictures between the Paramount Pictures Corporation for its southern houses and the Universal Pictures Corporation. The houses covered are those of Southern Enterprises (Inc.), the theatre end of the Famous Players Lasky Company below the Mason and Dixon Line. Harold B. Franklin is the director of theatres.

The fine details of the contract were arranged between his assistant Oscar Morgan and Ned Depinet, assistant sales manager of Universal, who came up from Dallas, Texas, to close the deal, the most comprehensive picture bookings ever agreed upon for the South. The working out of the details, the distribution of the product among the 124 Paramount houses, the protection of first runs, dating and so forth occupied four full days.

Southern Enterprise houses are located in 43 cities and Universal Jewels, Universal Attractions, Serials, Comedies, International News Reels and Short features, like Leather Pushers, are booked into every one of these 43 cities which include all of its best theatres.

Veteran Returns to Screen

Joe Burke, veteran of the screen for twelve years will return to Paramount pictures in "His Children's Children." Mr. Burke has played with all the present motion picture stars except Mary Pickford.

Helen Rowlands and Edwin Mills, both aged five, have also been engaged for the film.

Wedding Bells

Lila Lee, Paramount leading woman who has been appearing opposite Thomas Meighan, was married last Wednesday to James Kirkwood, star and director.

Vanity Fair Pleases Censor

Edward Horrigan, Boston censor, declared that Goldwyn's picturization of Thackeray's novel "Vanity Fair" is one of the most enjoyable pictures that he has seen.

Does Public Want Truth in Motion Pictures?

ANSWER WILL BE COMEDIAN'S GUIDE

Charlie Chaplin, In Interview, Asks Many Pointed Questions

"My future production activities will be largely guided by the manner in which the public receives my latest picture 'A Woman of Paris,' featuring Edna Purviance," declared Charlie Chaplin in an interview recently in which the comedian discussed that intangible though relentless force, the public.

"Does the public want truth in motion pictures? Does the public want the stereotyped happy ending? Does the public feel willing to accept an unhappy ending? Would the public like to see a problem presented to them entertainingly and let them solve it themselves?"

"Those questions I would like to have answered. I would even like to have those who patronize motion pictures write and give me their views on the subject for I am sure that those of us who are producing pictures do not know. We make guesses and every once in a while we hit upon something that strikes the public fancy and then, because they do approve, we satiate them with so much of the same thing that their approval drifts to some other form of entertainment.

"Right now and during the past year, owing to the enormous success of pictures like 'Robin Hood' and 'When Knighthood Was in Flower,' there seems to be a trend toward costume pictures and the big producers almost without exception are rushing forth this type of production. Will it hold up?"

"I am rather skeptical so much so that my latest picture, 'A Woman of Paris' featuring Edna Purviance, is at the other extreme of entertainment. It is intimate, simple and human, putting forth a problem that is as old as the ages, handling it with as much truth as I can put into it and giving it a treatment as near realism as I have been able to devise. There is no preaching, nor am I expounding some sort of personal philosophy unless it be an appeal for sympathy and understanding.

"Personally I believe that this sort of entertainment will please the general public because of its heart interest and universal appeal. But on the other hand the public may have different views from my own particularly about the finish which I won't tell here. To me the finish is real and completely in character with those in the story. I would like to know just how

UNIFORM CONTRACT UP IN COMMERCE BOARD

At a meeting of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, August 2, it was decided to appoint Messrs. Mannheim, Edelhertz and Jame as a committee to call on Will H. Hays in an effort to obtain for clause 8 of the uniform contract such an interpretation that under it no exhibitor will be obliged to accept any picture until he has had opportunity personally to examine it. In the controversy regarding Cosmopolitan contracts it was stated President O'Reilly and a committee would call upon the counsel of that company in the effort to effect an adjustment.

nearly I am right on this or whether the public is, as it has often been accused, in favor of stereotyped endings. And somehow I have the faith that the public is not stereotyped, but is, and always has been ready for truth and realism."

MAIN STREET STARTS GENERAL RUN SOON

New York.—Warner Brothers have announced August as the general release date for "Main Street," the picturization of the Sinclair Lewis novel. The picture will open the Adams Theatre, Detroit, the week of August 12. This house has been closed for the summer. The Rivoli, Los Angeles, which played "Main Street" some time ago on the pre-release swing of the picture, has re-booked the film.

"Main Street" has been shown at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, which played it for eight weeks; the Strand theatres in New York and Brooklyn played it two weeks each; and the Park Theatre, Boston, held it for an extended run.

HASTE MEANS FAILURE

"Haste, in my opinion, is one of the greatest causes of failure in the production of motion pictures," stated Alfred E. Green, director of Paramount pictures in connection with the announcement that only 52 Paramount pictures would be produced this season, instead of the usual 80 or more.

"This change in policy will mean that stars, directors, scenarists and others will have more time to devote to each picture" said Mr. Green. "Perfection in art and technique will be the principal aim."

According to Mr. Green, his next picture "Woman-Proof," a George Ade story starring Thomas Meighan, best illustrates the working out of the new policy.

Added to Casts

Eugenie Ford, recently added to the cast of the Wm. Fox special "Cameo Kirby" is Tom Mix's mother-in-law.

Grace Morse has been added to the cast of "You Can't Get Away With It," being made at the Fox West Coast Studios.

Lucy Fox, the well-known feminine lead, Alan Hale, famous film "heavy," Arthur Hausman and Harry Short will join the cast of the Fox special "Around the Town With Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean."

Feature Cut and Assembled

The film version of F. Marion Crawford's famous story "The White Sister" which Lillian Gish spent seven months in Italy making, is being prepared for its New York premier at the 44th Street Theatre. The date for the showing has not been definitely decided. This will be Miss Gish's first appearance as a star under the management of Inspiration Pictures.

Forbidden City Held Over

"The Forbidden City," a Selznick Distributing Corporation revival, with a cast headed by Norma Talmadge and Thomas Meighan, was held over for a second week at the Symphony Theatre in Los Angeles, doing a splendid business throughout the entire fourteen days, according to David R. Blyth, Selznick director of sales.

Selects Writers and Stars

Harry Sherman is considering continuity writers and stars for "Let No Man Put Asunder" on which he will soon begin work. His second Vitagraph special will be "Borrowed Husbands."

BIG BUSINESS IN RESERVED SEATS

Sid Grauman's Experiment Proves Successful on Coast

It will be interesting to exhibitors to learn the results of the experiment with reserved seats at Sid Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Hollywood. Grauman opened his house on a reserved seat basis with "Robin Hood," which ran for six months.

During the first week the receipts totaled $23,000; for the next four weeks the weekly gross was $22,000. It dropped to $20,000 in the sixth week, $18,000 during the seventh and eighth week, $16,000 in the ninth week and from the tenth to the thirteenth averaged $14,000 a week. From then down to the twenty-fifth week the gross receipts decreased gradually from $14,000 to $9,000 weekly, but jumped in the twenty-sixth and final week to $12,000.

"The Covered Wagon" is the present bill at the theatre and is in its sixteenth week. The box office receipts so far have averaged $22,000 since the first week and promises to remain close to $20,000 for some time to come. A more successful engagement is anticipated than with the Fairbanks picture.

Priees for both of these engagements worth 55c. to $1.00 at matinees and 75c. to $1.50 at night.

Schleiff a Myron Selznick Aid

Myron Selznick, vice-president of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, has announced the appointment of Joseph Schleiff as his assistant to handle matters having to do with production. While the Selznick company is essentially a distributing organization it still exercises a certain supervision over the productions created by outside producers under contract to release through its exchanges.

The producers now under contract with Selznick, some of whom have already started productions, include Burton King, J. Searle Dawley, Charles Giblyn, Major Campbell and others.

Looking Ahead In Hollywood

By Will C. Murphey

There is a slight lull in production. It is the usual summer slowing up while the producers look over their schedules and get a fresh grip to start anew. Several big pictures have been finished, and the middle of August or first of September will see the studios jammed again. Universal expects to be going strong at that time, and so do several other companies. According to predictions the fall will be the banner time for film activities extending all through the winter months. The summer let down has not been as marked as usual. There are 108 companies working this week. Sixty-seven are making feature length pictures, thirty-five comedies and short subjects and six are working on serials.

Gaston Glass has retired from the screen pending his outcome with the law here as the result of his arrest on a charge of immoral conduct. Glass wrote a letter to Benjamin Schulberg recently giving up his role in the forthcoming production of "Maytime" and stating he would not appear in pictures again until he was cleared. At a recent trial the jury disagreed. Schulberg says Glass' contract is still in force, but he will relieve him of it until after his coming trial.

Dustin Farnum and William Russell have completed their contracts with Fox. Russell has been engaged by Thomas Ince for "Anna Christie," and Farnum's plans are uncertain. There is a rumor he may appear with his brother, William Farnum, in productions for independent release. The latter is in New York now furthering his future plans.

Mac Marsh arrived this week for her role in "Daddies" which Warner Bros. will make. Thomas Meighan is also here and will start work in a few days on "Woman Proof" written for him by George Ade, who is here to watch the picture produced.

"Merry-Go-Round," Rupert Julian's Universal production will have its western premiere here next Monday night at the Mission Theatre. It is to be an auspicious opening with all of the cast appearing in person. Los Angeles will have its first opportunity of becoming acquainted with Mary Philbin in person as this will be her first personal appearance.

Ernest Torrence will leave for New York the first of the week to play the leading character role in "West of the Water Tower." Glenn Hunter who will play the lead also leaves about the same time. Torrence, by the way, has added another feather to his cap in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" which had a preview here this week.

Mary Pickford donned a "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" costume this week and had her first camera tests made for that character. This is the first tangible evidence that she intends to go through with the production in the near future. It will be a pretentious offering, and actual work will be started in one month or six weeks. The script is finished, but there still remains the details of casting.

It was bound to happen. "Down To the Sea in Ships" could not escape the comedy men. Mack Sennett had a comedy all finished called "The Water Walkers." Then along came the Hodkinson sea picture with its big success. Now Sennett will call his comedy "Down to the Sea in Shoes."

Charles P. Stallings, formerly production manager for more than two years at Universal City, has been appointed in a similar capacity at the Louis B. Mayer studios, where he will be in charge of all stage preparations for the John M. Stahl, and Reginald Barker productions. While at Universal, Stallings handled the making of more than fifty productions.

Gloria Swanson's salary was attached at the Lasky office this week by lawyers who assert a $10,000 fee, for defending her in a recent divorce suit, had not been paid. Attorney Milton Cohen, now representing the star, said he would take steps to have the attachment vacated as the fee is exorbitant.

The famous Biddle family, of Philadelphia, are determined to break in the pictures. Craig Biddle, Jr., has been here for several months working as an extra now and then. This week he was joined by Drexel Biddle, his brother, and both are mounting the casting directors. Mrs. Craig Biddle, Sr., is here and denies that her husband objects to their sons seeking a screen career.

Fred Niblo met with an inconvenient loss this week when someone stole a reel of the working print of "Captain Applejack." It happened on the day there was to be a preview of the production. It will take some time to get another print ready, and in the meantime Niblo has offered a reward for the return of the reel, and no questions asked.

There has been another clean-up in the Fox scenario staff. Mare Edmund Jones, Howard Irving Young and Pete Milne's three months' contracts expired this week, and Fox did not exercise his option on their further services. John Russell who came out at the same time will remain, his contract having three months to go.

Lucien Hubbard, supervisor of production at the Lasky studio, left this week for New York to supervise the production of "West of the Water Tower" to be made at the Long Island studio. Tom Geraghty is also due to return east again for an indefinite stay.

"Thy Name Is Woman," which served Mary Nash as a starring vehicle on the speaking stage for two seasons, is to be Fred Niblo's next picture. The play has an unhappy ending and in order that fans may be pleased, the production will be made with a happy and unhappy ending, the permanent form to be decided after several prereviews have been given.

"Beasts of Paradise," a new chapter play, was started by Universal this week. William Desmond and Eileen Sedgwick have the principal roles. William Craft is directing under the supervision of Fred J. McConnell. It is a sea story.

EXECUTIVES HOLD SALES CONVENTION

Educational Film Expect This Year to Be Biggest in History of Short Subjects

The second National sales convention of the exchange managers and executives of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. was held at the Pennsylvania Hotel July 30 and 31 and August 1. Thirty managers of branch offices made the trip to New York and were present when Mr. Hammons, president of Educational, called the meeting to order on Monday morning.

A resume of national conditions by A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager was followed by reports on the various territories by the individual exchange managers. D. J. Chatkin, sales manager, outlined the method to be followed in handling the 1923-24 product. During the discussions of various problems, many interesting conditions were brought to light, and the selling campaign for the new year formulated with these conditions in mind.

The convention was adjourned Wednesday afternoon following a closing address by Mr. Hammons. The managers will return to their exchanges and put into immediate effect the policies adopted at the meeting.

Educational is looking forward to the biggest year in the history of Short Subjects. Their releasing schedule for the coming year calls for thirty per cent more product than in the year just drawing to a close.

New Urban Classic

The current release of Vitagraph's Urban Popular Classics is a biography of Daniel Webster as portrayed by James A. Fitz-Patrik. The incident which prompted young Daniel to go to Congress and his subsequent career form a one-reel picture which, it is said, school children will find one of the most interesting of the serial.

Barnes Invents Water Shoes

New York City.—In the forthcoming Mack Sennett two-reeler "Down to the Sea in Shoes" Billy Bevan and three pretty girls in water costumes play a full set of tennis on the surface of Balboa Bay. The feat was made possible by Technical Director Sanford D. Barnes' invention of shoes adapted for walking on water. The shoes are said to afford good comedy effects.

Praises a Pleasant Journey

New York.—In his list of the ten best pictures screened during the first half of the current year James W. Dean, reviewer, placed near the top the Hal Roach Our Gang two-reeler "A Pleasant Journey." Mr. Dean said "A Pleasant Journey" is only two reels long. I place it on my list because it is the most entertaining comedy I ever saw."

The Harold Lloyd feature comedy "Safety Last" was also included on the list.

Charles H. Christie Sails

Charles H. Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Corporation left Los Angeles for his second business trip to London and Paris. His tour will last for about eight weeks during which time he will consult with John H. Taylor managing director of Christie Film Sales, Ltd., of London and Messrs. Bromhead owners of Gaumont Films, Ltd. distributors of Christie Comedies in the British Isles.

Our Gang Comedies for Loew

New York.—The Loew Theatres have contracted with Pathe for the Hal Roach two reel "Our Gang" Comedies, starting with the first series. Each release will be played a total of eighty-five days. No previous Loew booking contract has covered such a long list of one brand of short subjects for so large a total of play dates.

Century Officials Off Again

Julius and Abe Stern, officials of Century Comedies, remained in New York just long enough to say "hello" to each other.

Julius returned to Los Angeles to take over studio activities four days after arriving from Europe, and Abe left for Europe on the "Leviathan" the following day.

Loew Books Nobody's Darling

Following a successful week's run at the Rivoli theatre, "Nobody's Darling" the most recent Century Comedy with Baby Peggy, will soon play the entire circuit of Marcus Loew vaudeville and motion pictures theatres.

Century Follies Comedy Under Way

"Sea Girls," the working title of Al Herman's first Century Comedy with the Follies Girls, is under way, after some time was devoted to preparing a suitable story for the first of the new series of girlie comedies.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

Nip and Tuck, Pathe

"Nip and Tuck" is the first Pathe release of Sennett two-reel comedies. A crooked poker game causes most of the action. The educated dog, Cameo, is especially good in this episode. He assists his master in cheating and then gets the police to come to his protection. The cast includes Harry Gribbon, Kewpie Morgan, Alberta Vaughn, Mildred June and Billy Bevan. There is hardly any plot but the incidents will probably be sufficiently amusing and Cameo's admirers will have another chance at marveling at him.

The Pearl Divers, Pathe

"You can't keep a good man down" is the moral of this rollicking Aesop film fable. Henry Cat forces Friend Mouse to dive to the bottom of the sea to the oyster beds. Henry is so busy making love that he forgets all about pumping air into the pipe of the diving suit worn by Friend Mouse. Henry sheds tears of bitter remorse when he supposes his friend has drowned but Mouse succeeds in bringing up a whole row of beds and obtaining a fortune. The reel is one of the funniest and most clever in the series.

West Is West, Educational

A lot of action is contained in this one-reel Cameo comedy with Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance. A bag of money is stolen from the postmistress and the sheriff is unable to recover it. It is finally retrieved by the sheriff's rival aided by one of the town dogs. Those who enjoy animal pictures will welcome this one. The stunts are both clever and humorous.

Pathe Review No. 32

Views of High Falls and the Pocono Mountains, interesting facts about Balsa wood and commerce scenes on the Douro River in Portugal are contained in this reel. "Monkey Island" Louisiana shows the only wild monkeys in America. The Pathe-color section depicts life in the Sacred City of Shalamda in the heart of the Soudan, Africa.

Dipping in the Deep, Educational

This interesting Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge opens with miniature movies; then follow some animated cartoons of stag and rabbit hunting, scenes of water sports and views of Iceberg Lake and Glacier Falls. We are taken for a ramble in the Rockies and finally on a hurry-up excursion to Washington, D. C.

Oranges and Lemons, Pathe

Stan Laurel is featured in this Hal Roach one-reel comedy. The usual comic situations are put in a new atmosphere, the orange and lemon industry. Stan's straight-faced unconcern will no doubt satisfy the average picture-goer.

Plus and Minus, Educational

Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are starred in this one-reel Cameo Comedy which centers about a boarding house and a soda fountain. The film will be enjoyed by those who like a dash of slapstick in their comedy.

Nine of Spades, Pathe

This is a one-reel exposition by Joek R. Bowker on the right and wrong way to play that card in bridge. The film is comprehensible only to those who are acquainted with the game. They will find it very interesting and instructive.

Disputed Treasure, Pathe

In the final episode of "Haunted Valley," Ruth learns that there is a platinum treasure in the valley. The government claims it but through the efforts of Craig, Ruth proves that she is the rightful owner. Malison is captured and Ruth marries Craig.

TO FILM "PECK'S BAD BOY" SERIES

Zeidman Will Produce Famous Stories for Principal Pictures Distribution

Los Angeles.—An arrangement has been made between Sol Lesser of Principal Pictures Corporation and Bennie Zeidman whereby the latter will produce a series of "Peek's Bad Boy" productions. The first will be given the screen under the title of "Peek's Bad Boy and His Pa." Work on the picture was started this week at the Principal studios.

When Lesser obtained the services of Jaekie Coogan after his appearance with Chaplin in "The Kid," he purchased the entire series of Peek volumes. Jaekie appeared in "Peek's Bad Boy." There are seven remaining stories which are now controlled by Principal Pictures Corporation.

Edward F. Cline will direct "Peek's Bad Boy and His Pa." Cline is permanently engaged on Principal Pictures staff and directed Jaekie Coogan in his forthcoming First National release, "Circus Days," as well as "The Meanest Man in the World" and the first Harold Bell Wright story, "When a Man's a Man."

The scenario for "Peek's Bad Boy and His Pa," is now being written by Harry Carr, Walter Anthony and John Grey.

This production will follow close on the heels of "The Spider and the Rose" and "Bright Lights of Broadway," two pictures made by Zeidman and released through Principal Pictures Corporation.

FIRST WRIGHT STORY READY FOR RELEASE

Los Angeles.—Principal Pictures Corporation, which holds the screen rights to all of the Harold Bell Wright novels, completed the first offering in the series of this author's works.

"When a Man's a Man," the first story of the group has been viewed by Principal officials in Los Angeles in its finished form. The picture, directed by Edward F. Cline, presents a cast made up of John Bowers, Marguerite de la Motte, Robert Frazer, June Marlowe, George Haekathorn, Charles Mails, Fred Stanton, Forrest Robinson, John Fox, Jr., Edward Hearn, Elizabeth Rhoads and Arthur Hoyt.

According to Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, distribution arrangements have not as yet been made for the Wright series but will be concluded in the near future.

"Winning of Barbara Worth," second Wright novel Principal is to film, will be started in the near future.

"When a Man's a Man" is in six reels. The production was filmed on the exact locations pictured by the author and many of the characters of the novel take part in the film version as well.

Premiere of G-A Feature at Graumans Next Week

Los Angeles.—"Temptation," the Ben Wilson production for Grand-Asher distribution, will have its premiere at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre next week.

Bryant Washburn, who is featured in "Temptation," has completed his second picture for Grand-Asher "Other Men's Daughters" and will take a brief vacation before starting another under Mr. Wilson's direction. Mabel Forrest, who plays opposite Mr. Washburn in "Other Men's Daughters" has still a few scenes to make.

Grand-Asher Comedians Up With Producing Schedule

Los Angeles.—The trio of comedians working at the Grand studios on pictures for Grand-Asher release through independent channels are forging ahead and at the present rate will have their plays ready well in advance of scheduled release.

Monte Banks is working on the ninth picture in his series of twelve, while Joe Roek starts his ninth next week and Sid Smith has already completed "The Midnight Watch," Smith's tenth comedy since starting under the Grand-Asher banner.

Buy Old Masters Studio

New York.—Howard Turrill, in association with Maurice Workstel, and George B. Williams, has formed a new corporation which has purchased the Old Masters Studio in the Wurlitzer building at 120 West 42nd St. The Old Masters Studio will be operated under its present name, but instead of being devoted entirely to advertising and fashion photography, will specialize in art titles. The departments devoted to advertising and fashion photography will be retained however.

Star to Handle Keystones

Through a contract negotiated this week by Osear A. Preece, president and H. E. Aitken, vice-president and general manager, of Tri-Stone Pictures, Inc., with H. G. Mapes, manager of the Star Film Exchange of Portland Oregon, the latter concern was granted the exclusive right of distribution of the New Edition Keystone comedies in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

Burr Buys "Youth to Sell"

New York.—C. C. Burr has purchased "Youth to Sell" which he will produce as one of the four specials he will make during the current season for the independent market. The purchase of "Restless Wives" and "The Average Woman" for this series has been previously stated. Izola Forrester is the author of "Youth to Sell" which is based upon her own story "The Gray Path" published in the September 1922 issue of Ainslee's Magazine.

HAYAKAWA WILL STAR IN TRUART FEATURES

New York.—A deal was consummated during the past week with Sessue Hayakawa well-known screen player, and Marty Schwartz, son of a prominent exhibitor, in association with M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of the Truart Film Corporation, whereby Hayakawa will appear in a series of twelve productions over a period of three years. It is expected that the productions will be released through the Truart Film Corporation.

Hayakawa is at present in France where he is appearing in a spectacle being produced by one of the big French companies. He plans to return to New York in October when work will be immediately started upon his new contract.

Contract for Goodman Film

New York.—Equity Pictures Corporation announces the first territorial sales closed on "The Daring Years," the latest production written and produced by Daniel Carson Goodman.

Sam Grand, of the Federated Film Exchange, Boston, has taken the rights for all of the New England States. Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, will distribute the feature in southern New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania. "The Daring Years" will be exploited and booked immediately in these territories.

Cummings Closes Deals

New York.—Irving Cummings, producer of "Broken Hearts of Broadway," announces that E. Mandelbaum, distributor of First National pictures in Ohio, has purchased the rights for his territory. The Greater New York and Northern New Jersey rights to "Broken Hearts of Broadway" have been taken by the Capitol Film Exchange, while Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey territories have been contracted for by the Royal Pictures, Inc., of Philadelphia.

New Edition of "The Bargain"

New York.—A new edition of "The Bargain," one of the William S. Hart's most popular Triangle successes, is to be offered by Tri-Stone Pictures, Inc., in August. The picture was produced by Thomas H. Ince from an original story by William H. Clifford.

E. M. James With Grand-Asher

New York.—Edward M. James has been engaged as legal counsel for the Grand-Asher organization with whom he will maintain his office. This will not, however, interfere with his regular legal work.

Selling New Features

New York.—L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North announce the sale for the Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, and Buffalo and Albany territories on their new features "Marriage Morals" and "Don't Marry for Money." Ben Amsterdam has contracted for the two features for the Philadelphia district, and the Bond Photoplay signed them for their Buffalo and Albany Exchanges.

Zierler Buys Rubicon Feature

Rubicon Pictures this week sold the Greater New York and Northern Jersey rights to their special production, "For You My Boy" to Samuel Zierler, of the Commonwealth Pictures, New York City.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK

A Rare Picture

George T. Pardy*

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK. A Big Picture of Today! Sounds like a contradiction, doesn't it? But, boys, it's true. Back we go one hundred years into the times of our great-granddaddies, when Gotham was a mere village, comparatively speaking, and yet somehow we feel at home as we watch strutting across the screen the great men whose names are familiar to every school pupil.

It will reach into the heart of every man and woman in the U. S. A., whether they live in hamlet or in metropolis. It will show them how a great city looked in the old days.

It will interest those who live in London, Paris or any European center as its appeal is universal, just as a similar story any other capital would interest us on this side of the water.

That's the historical angle and a valuable one, when you come to consider the box office slant.

Because, Mr. Exhibitor, there's always a lowering bunch of highbrows in the background demanding to know what, in the name of what General Sherman called war, the screen is doing for the public from a strictly educational standpoint.

WELL, here's the answer: "Little Old New York" replies by outlining the big town as it appeared in the days when Astor was building up his fortune, Vanderbilt running a ferry and trying to borrow money, Halleck and Washington Irving patronizing Delmonico's eating house and kicking because the bill comes to twenty cents.

And, greatest of all historical "punches," Robert Fulton's steamboat making its initial cruise up the Hudson.

That's one side of the picture. Now let's get down to the entertainment values outside of the "teacher" view.

Say, Mr. Exhibitor, here's a film that gives you everything that the most exacting patron could desire. The story, like all great stories with a universal appeal, hits the high spots of pathos and humor.

Comedy! Well, the man or woman, child or adult who would fail to respond to its delicious humor belongs in the hopelessly dead, petrified mummy class. And that's no gossip.

But, say you, "my patrons want plenty of heart stuff." All right, old dear, "Little old New York" throws that sob material out in huge gobs. And, mind you, it isn't strained melo.

We defy the most hardened cynic to refrain from shedding a tear during the scenes where Marion Davies cries in wild abandon over her dead father or shrieks out a confession of her sex when lashed to the whipping post. Pathos? Why, say—the film fairly palpitates with bosom ache, even in its most comical moods.

AND right here seems the time to pay a respectful tribute to the star. The writer has watched Marion Davies' work from her first appearance in the silent drama. In the beginning she flashed across the screen horizon as a pretty creature whose physical charms were undeniable. A person of huge possibilities!

With each succeeding picture Miss Davies' dramatic talent developed. She established herself as a really great actress in "When Knighthood Was in Flower," but in "Little Old New York" she reaches the zenith of her screen career.

There's no use trying to describe in detail the work of Marion Davies and her associate players. Space doesn't permit, and anyway, you've got to see the picture yourself in order to appreciate its wonderful appeal to all classes of movie fans.

This film "has everything." It runs for over two hours, but the small exhibitor needn't get scared over its length. Because it fills his program with all the most exacting patron could desire.

A cracking good love story, clean, wholesome sentiment, an Irish touch which will catch every Celt in the U. S., fun unlimited—Director Sid Olcott only too well took care of that; the prize fight scene alone is worth the price of admission. Exploit it as a de luxe picture, a genuine screen classic.

It's a pleasure to write about such a picture. The "bigger and better" films slogan comes pretty close to realization in the debut of "Little Old New York."

The SHOWMAN'S GUIDE

Selecting—Booking—Playing—the Picture

Hell's Hole

Fox Photoplay from the Story by George Scarborough. Scenario by Bernard McConville. Emmett J. Flynn, Director. Footage, 5488.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Tod Musgrave Charles Jones
Dorothy Owen Ruth Clifford
Dell Hawkins Maurice Flynn
Mabel Grant Kathleen Key
Warden Grant Harry Kirkland
Pablo Eugene Pallette

Tod Musgrave and Dell Hawkins are forced to hop an out-moving train in order to escape from the dance-hall crowd who are pursuing them because Dell flirted with another man's girl. Both Dell and Tod are broke and are therefore thrown off the train. They settle themselves for the night on a bench in a half-way station. Tod dreams that Dell robs the train and plants some of the money on him. Dell escapes and Tod is sentenced to twenty years. With the money, Dell has a fling in the city and then buys a ranch next to the one owned by Dorothy Owen, with whom he falls in love. Dorothy goes to visit her friend Mabel Grant whose father is warden of the penitentiary.

While the girls are going through the prison, a riot breaks out and Tod who has been made a trusty in charge of the library protects them and prevents the prisoners from escaping. Tod discovers that there is a hole in the library wall behind the that the subsequent events are not real. The action moves so swiftly that one doesn't stop to think of the impossibility of Dell's holding up the same train he was thrown off of. One can't become reconciled to the fact that the good natured fellow with the frank smile is a villain and a traitor, it is a relief to find that he is still the swaggering vagabond we thought him.

There are two good fights in the film—one in the dance hall where Tod does some quick thinking and prevents Dell from being knifed, and the other in the prison where Tod keeps the men from escaping. The prison scenes and the shots of the avalanche are good. Suspense is at a high level throughout the avalanche episode. Charles Jones makes a clean-cut, virile hero; Maurice Flynn gives a good characterization of Dell, the charming vagabond and villain, and Ruth Clifford is a pleasing heroine.

The picture will appeal to all who like western melodrama with plenty of action and a dash of comedy. D. R.

Out of Luck

Universal Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Edward Sedgwick. Scenario By George C. Hull. Director, Edward Sedgwick. Cameraman, Virgil Miller. Running Time, Sixty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Sam Portune Hoot Gibson
Mae Day Laura La Plante
Ezra Day Howard Truesdell
Aunt Edith Bristol Eleanor Hancock
Captain Bristol DeWitt Jennings
Cyril La Mount Freeman Wood
Boggs Jay Morley
Kid Hogan Kansas Moehring
Pig Hurley John Judd

Cowboy Sam Portune quarrels with his sweetheart's father, a fight ensues and the older man is knocked senseless. Sam thinks he has killed him, runs away, gets into a U. S. recruiting station and is signed up for the navy. A message reaches him to the effect that Ezra Day, his supposed victim, wasn't hurt much and acknowledges that Sam was in the right. But Sam is obliged to stick to the battleship. On the voyage he is instrumental in saving the life of Captain Bristol from Boggs, a half-crazed bluejacket of anarchistic tendencies. Later the ship touches at Frisco. Mae Day, Sam's girl, is there visiting her aunt Edith, who is related to Captain Bristol. Boggs escapes and follows up the captain, determined to revenge himself, Sam again intervenes, arriving at the Bristol house just in time to checkmate Boggs's design. Boggs is arrested by marines. Sam meets Mae again and is thanked by his captain and all present. The naval officers decide that Sam must go to the Naval Academy as a reward for his exertions.

The many admirers of Hoot Gibson will find pleasing entertainment in "Out of Luck," which differs in various respects from the type of story he has been identified with up-to-date. For this time, Hoot drops his cowboy garb in a hurry, before the second reel has spun its entire length, and shortly appears in U. S. A. bluejacket uniform on the deck of a battleship. The naval setting is responsible for a lot of hilarious comedy, as hero Sam Portune has a tough time accustoming himself to discipline and the vagaries of a hammock, when he attempts to snatch his first night's repose aboard.

The routine of life on a warship is faithfully reproduced and will prove of interest not only to the general public but to service men, past and present. There is an abundance of good photography, including some fine marine shots and effective interiors, with excellent lighting throughout. For the most part the picture consists of humorous episodes, well knit together, its continuity is smooth and there is no hitch in the action, but melodramatic seasoning is not wanting.

The first thrill occurs when Sam, in self-defense, lays out his sweetheart's father with a poker and flees, supposing that he has killed him, the second, when he intervenes between the murderous maniac and the captain aboard ship, and the culminating "punch" when hero and would-be assassin struggle just as the marines rush in to the rescue.

Hoot Gibson gives a refreshingly natural performance as Sam Portune, whose trail is marked by odd twists of fortune, that rows of books but he does not use it until he reads that Dell and Dorothy are engaged. The very day he escapes he is to be pardoned. He goes to Dorothy's ranch, forces her to come to the cabin in Hell's Hole and makes her write a note to Dell telling him to bring $20,000, the amount he stole. Dell comes with Pablo, his Mexican accomplice. Tod sends Pablo to the village for the money, and while the three are waiting a storm starts an avalanche. The cabin is completely buried. Pablo has managed to get to the sheriff's, and a posse is sent out. They excavate the cabin and revive Dorothy, Dell and Tod. The sheriff has brought the money and Tod now captures it and Dell and forces him to go to the prison and confess. Tod awakes to find that Dell is still his jolly companion and that Dorothy is the new schoolmistress.

"Hell's Hole" improves as it goes along. The beginning is a bit unconvincing. It doesn't seem likely that even a "wild Westerner" would chase a man out of town for merely flirting with Wild-Westerner's feminine companion. There would probably be a fight, but when the flirt took to his heels Wild-Westerner most likely would devote himself to chastising the lady. The dance-hall crowd would hardly run the flirt out of town.

But the fact that the mob forces Tod and Dell to escape on the train from which they are subsequently thrown off serves as an introduction to the dream. The elision from reality to the dream is done well enough to keep one ignorant of the fact unsophisticated hero arousing mirth and sympathy in equal proportions, Laura La Plante is a prettily fascinating Mae Day and the support all that could be desired.

"Out of Luck" is a program attraction of considerable merit. It can be exploited with reference to the star's good work in the leading role and marked emphatically as a "laughing hit." The battleship incidents should prove of value in obtaining the co-operation of service organizations, etc.

pictures. Angela meets Horace Pringle, a scenario writer, who is trying to place a story called "The Avenge Hand." He picks her for the star of the film, and drives a movie magnate almost to distraction by showering on him cards bearing the sinister title of his play. Lem, grandmother and aunt Margaret hear of Joel's debut and come to Hollywood bent on rescuing him from evil influences. But all three drift into the movies ultimately—"The Avenge Hand" is duly produced and makes a tremendous hit. Angela meets scores of screen artists and finally weds Lem, who has become a famous leading man. Angela, her picture ambitions eliminated, is content with the role of Lem's wife.

A big laughing success, with a parade of screen stars to which movie fans of all degree in every section of the country, metropolitan and rustic, will swarm like flies around a honey pot. James Cruze has handled the film with that acute judgment and keen sense of what the public wants, which ranks him as a great directorial genius. The beauty of "Hollywood" is that it puts over a shrewd bit of propaganda in favor of the silent drama without once becoming tiresome or ceasing to provide excellent entertainment.

Director Cruze never allowed the serious mood to predominate, his aim, besides giving patrons a slant on the inside of movie life, was to keep them interested and amused and in this, with the aid of the most brilliant galaxy of artists ever filmed, he thoroughly succeeded.

There isn't much to the story proper—Angela comes to California determined to break into the movies, but finds that something more than good looks is necessary. She fails dramatically but scores matrimonially, inasmuch as her country sweetheart leaps into screen fame at a bound and weds her, while the elder members of her family all obtain work as character types.

But there is plenty of good comedy in evidence and a hundred or more notables of movieland pass in camera review. When the picture was given its initial New York showing at the Rivoli Theatre, you could hear a constant buzz of voices as the members of the closely packed crowd identified the familiar faces of leading actors and actresses. It is this spirit of curiosity and anxiety to pick out one's favorite on the screen which promises to make "Hollywood" one of the champion box office assets of the season.

A quick shot shows "Fatty" Arbuckle applying for a job at the casting office and being turned down. This episode was greeted with loud cheers.

Lem's nightmare aboard the train, when he sees the terrible Hollywood of his fancy, with girls hurled into locked rooms, drinking parties galore, harem scenes and risque swimming parties, etc., is a clever satirical hit, which includes some wonderful colorful stuff and elusive trick photography. Exhibitors will not lack material for exploiting this picture. The publication of the list of stars alone should bring men, women and children in never ending procession to see their favorites and the world-famed spot where "big pictures" are made. G. T. P.

The Eleventh Hour

Fox Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Lincoln J. Carter. Scenario By Louis Sherwin. Director, Bernard J. Durning. Cameraman, Don Short. Running Time, Seventy-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Barbara Hackett	Shirley Mason
Brick McDonald	Charles Jones
Prince Stefan de Bernie	Alan Hale
Herbert Glenville	Richard Tucker
Dick Manley	Walter McGrail
Estelle Hackett	June Elvidge
Submarine Commander	Fred Kelsey
Mordecia Newman	Nigel de Brullier

Prince Stefan, enormously wealthy, conspires to obtain the secret of a new explosive developed in the munitions plant of which Barbara Hackett is proprietor. He wins the aid of Barbara's uncle and the latter's friend, Glenville, who wants to marry Barbara. Employed by the Prince is Brick McDonald, who is really working to help Barbara and foil Stefan. There are many complications, plot-ting and counterplotting by Brick and his enemies, wild adventures, a motor boat chase, aeroplane pursuit, the capture of Barbara and Brick by a submarine, their escape, Brick's successful fight with lions in a den where the prince has caused him to be hurled, his rescue of Barbara from a threatened elation that Brick is Chief of U. S. Secret descent into a pit of molten steel and finally the reverse. He wins Barbara.

Adapted from a genuine old Lincoln J. Carter melodramatic standby, the sort of thing that kept the gallery gods a'roaring in tumult of applause, "The Eleventh Hour" as a screen attraction completely outdoes the stage attraction in point of lurid appeal and stormy incident. It is bully entertainment of its kind, the exhibitor who books this picture is sure to pack 'em in, provided that his patrons are the kind of folks who want to be amused, thrilled and kept in the seventh heaven of near-hysterical delight by a succession of nerve shocks administered through six reels of wild adventure. And at that, it is a pretty safe bet that even the members of the ultra critical brigade would view "The Eleventh Hour" with considerable glee, if they could be induced to confess the truth.

The picture is splendidly directed, handsomely photographed and cleverly acted; despite the sudden turns and twists the plot takes and the whirlwind action, with one exciting situation crashing right upon the heels of another, the continuity holds together remarkably well, there is all the furious speed of a dynamic serial in evidence, with the additional interest of a compact story.

It is something of a fact that director Durning and his talented associates have accomplished—this the translation of a Carter melodrama to even greater heights of magnificent daring than the author ever fancied in his most ambitious mood, for the limitations of the stage could never permit of such eye-dazzling incidents as the leap from a precipice, the aeroplane destruction, the submarine stuff, the escape of hero and heroine through the torpedo tubes, the destroyer chase, the blowing-up of the laboratory and numerous other devices calculated to stir the onlookers into spasms of enthusiasm.

Charley Jones plays the role of hero, Brick McDonald with laudable dash and spirit, Shirley Mason, as his sweetheart, has never been more attractive and alluring. Alan Hale is a finely sinister figure as the plotting prince and the other members of the company render smooth, well balanced support. The photography is admirable, the water scenes, the explosion, the submarine and aeroplane incidents are all filmed with unerring skill and faultless technique, and exquisite lighting adds to the picture's artistic lure.

For exploitation purposes, dwell on the tremendous melodramatic strength of the production, its unexampled thrills, quality of suspense, play up the fact that it is a visualization of a Lincoln J. Carter play and call attention to the work of the cast.

Homeward Bound

Paramount Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Peter B. Kyne. Scenario By Jack Cunningham and Paul Sloane. Director, Ralph Ince. Cameraman, Ernest Haller. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Jim Bedford	Thomas Meighan
Mary Brent	Lila Lee
Rufus Brent	Charles Abbe
Rodney	William T. Carleton
Murphy	Hugh Cameron
Captain Svenson	Gus Weinberg
Mrs. Brannigan	Maud Gordon
Rufus Brent, Junior	Cyril Ring
Clarissa Wynwood	Katherine Spencer

Svenson, captain of the Newport, turns coward when his ship is in danger. First mate Jim Bedford, aided by his pal, Brian Murphy, takes charge and brings the Newport safe to port. In Greenport Svenson is hailed as a hero for sticking to his ship and Rufus Brent, owner of the Newport, appoints him captain of a yacht he has presented to his daughter Mary. Jim has known Mary since childhood. He threatens to expose Svenson, who quits and Jim assumes command of the yacht. Brent is furious, learns that Mary is in love with Jim and when the latter suspects that his sweetheart's father is trying to doublecross him, he weds her secretly. Jim sails on the unseaworthy schooner Nancy B, in which he has bought an interest. Mary persuades Murphy to smuggle her aboard, unknown to her husband. A storm breaks, Mary is injured by a falling spar and Jim discovers her presence. A yacht is seen, flying distress signals. Jim comes to her assistance and gets Mary aboard, where she can have medical attention. He tows the yacht safely to port. Brent is still obdurate, but Jim turns the tables on him by collecting salvage money for saving the yacht, thus getting the stake he needs for married life.

A cracking good tale of adventure on the briny deep, with love romance afloat and ashore, the whole ballasted by timely comedy—"Homeward Bound" registers as another pronounced hit for Thomas Meighan, who plays the leading role, and a feather in the cap of Director Ralph Ince. There are a couple of storm scenes, the first in the opening, and second in the closing reel, which for sheer stary realism and genuine thrills could scarcely be surpassed. It is Old Ocean at his worst, a furious medley of roaring waters, ponderous waves, angry skies and reeling ships, with sailors wrestling desperately with tattered canvas and shattered spars, the atmosphere fairly reeking with danger, especially in the last hurricane, wherein the Nancy B wallows her crazy hulk, but wins to port in the end.

Thomas Meighan, with his infectious smile and generally magnetic personality, is the beau ideal of a gallant young seaman in the part of Jim Bedford. He is ably supported, and particular mention is due the work of Hugh Cameron as Murphy, the Irishman who is Jim's right bower. This Murphy person shows up as a regular Celt, a big, good-humored chap with a lurking devil in his wide grin, whose mascot goat adds greatly to the gaiety of events. It is a fine bit of comedy portrayal. Lila Lee is an acceptable heroine, Charles Abbe scores as the gruff old Rufus Brent and the support is adequate.

The photography throughout is of first grade quality and good lighting prevails. Play up the star's name in exploiting the feature, mention the talented supporting cast and dwell upon the big storm scenes and story's dramatic strength. G. T. P.

Man and Wife

Arrow Photoplay in Six Parts. Director, John L. McCutcheon. Author Not Credited. Running Time, Sixty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dolly Perkins Gladys Leslie
 Dora Perkins Norma Shearer
 Judge Perkins Maurice Costello
 Mrs. Perkins Edna May Spooner
 Dr. Howard Fleming Robert Elliot
 Walter Powell Ernest Hilliard

Dora Perkins leaves her country home, goes to the city and is wed to a celebrated surgeon. While the latter is away from home he receives the tidings of his wife's death in a fire. The surgeon—Dr. Howard Fleming—while recuperating in the country meets Dora's sister Dolly. He is unaware of her relationship to his deceased wife and marries her. After numerous complications it transpires that Dora is alive, but has lost her mind. Dr. Fleming operates upon and cures her. Dolly is kept in ignorance of what has happened. Dora is told that her husband is guilty of bigamy and again becomes insane. She is operated upon once more, but does not survive. Dr. Fleming and Dolly find happiness together.

sincerely in love. These things don't ring true, nor are the subsequent events, Dora's insanity, the operation which restores her mentality and that which finally kills her, either edifying or likely to occur in actual life.

The players all work hard, but although Gladys Leslie looks as pretty as of yore and impersonates Dolly Perkins gracefully, the role isn't very impressive, nor does Robert Elliott find it easy to make folks believe in the impossible character of Dr. Fleming. Much the same may be said for Norma Shearer's performance as Dora and other members of the cast are similarly handicapped. The photography includes some pleasing exteriors and interiors, with artistic long shots. G. T. P.

The Steel Trail

Serial Directed by William Duncan. Story and Scenario by Paul M. Bryan and George Plympton. George Robinson, Cameraman.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Bruce Boyd William Duncan
 Judith Armstrong Edith Johnson
 Frank Norton Ralph McCullough
 Mark Zabel Harry Carter
 Morris Blake Harry Woods
 Col. John Armstrong John Cossar
 Calvin Bitner Frank Whitson
 Arna Mabel Randall
 Olga Cathleen Calhoun

Col. John Armstrong, who heads a group of ranchers, has purchased a right of way to construct a railway through the San Marcos Valley. Mark Zabel, the unscrupulous president of a rival railroad company, takes every desperate chance to make the building of Armstrong's railway impossible. Armstrong engages Bruce Boyd, a famous construction engineer, to take over and complete the building of the railway. Boyd's fight to complete the road, made against obstacles reared by Zabel's men, is heightened by his love for Judith Armstrong, the Colonel's daughter. She shares his problems and dangers.

The first chapter gets into action swiftly, Judith and Bruce, on the way to Colonel Armstrong's railroad, are duped by Zabel's agents. Judith is trapped in Boyd's limousine which goes over a high cliff into the lake below.

In the second chapter, Bruce rescues Judith from the lake. In an attempt to stop a dynamite car which is running wild, she climbs on to the car's roof. She is unable to stop the car and is in great danger. From his horse, Bruce throws a rope to Judith and after a desperate effort she succeeds in getting down. Through strategy Bruce prevents the runaway car from wrecking a passenger train.

The third chapter finds Zabel endeavoring to get an injunction against Armstrong to prevent him from going ahead with the railroad.

This chapter story will be a delight to serial lovers. Suspense is at a high pitch throughout and there are enough thrills to satisfy the most pronounced fan. D. R.

Marriage Morals

Will Nigh production for state rights distribution by Weber and North. Story and direction by Will Nigh. Length, 6400 feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Young Harry Ryan Tom Moore
 Mary Gardner Ann Forrest

Mary Gardner receives the proposals of marriage from Harry Ryan with apprehension; for Harry has a reputation of being very "fast" and very fond of liquor. But he is rich and therefore Mary's friends and her family urge her to accept. She reads a book "Marriage Morals" and then sees herself as the wife of Ryan. Though he has promised to refrain from drinking, wild parties continue and one broken promise treads upon the heels of another. A boy is born and he later manifests a great talent for music. The boy is Mary's only consolation. Finally some friend of her husband's suggests that Mary also indulge in the drinking bouts Harry so enjoys. She does and the husband roughly reproves her. Mary then leaves the big home. Later she returns to find that Harry is dangerously hurt, the result of a fall. She is told that he will never walk again and there her nerves break. She tries to shoot the man who suggested to her that she take up drinking and fires several shots. But here the spectator finds it was all a dream. In reality she has visualized the book "Marriage Morals."

This is indoor domestic melodrama dealing with a man who simply cannot stop drinking. Harry Ryan is rich and therefore a good catch for Mary, who is poor. As his wife she has beautiful clothes and a luxurious home. But she has a husband who plays host at many very wild parties. The fact that all the unhappiness turns out to be a dream—a nightmare, does not lend any of the heroic color the spectator looks for in some one of the characters in a melodrama. As a story it follows an aimless course, in which the interest spectators

Making all due allowance for melodramatic licence, it must be confessed that the plot of "Man and Wife" is a bit too far-fetched and improbable to pass muster with any intelligent audience. The author of the story has sacrificed logic to his thirst for sensation. "Pile on the heart agony and stoke up the realism fires" would seem to have been the motto adopted for the filming of this production, which runs riot in a sea of emotion but utterly lacks conviction.

It is altogether too much to ask the average citizen to believe that hero Dr. Fleming did a marital tie-up, first with one sister, then with another, with never a suspicion of their relationship to trouble him. And one can hardly fancy that he would accept the tale of his first wife's death by fire, without making any inquiries into the vanishing of a woman with whom he was may find consists solely of some settings representing the interior of a rich man's home and some very bizarre cabarets.

If there is an audience to relish "Marriage Morals" it must be recruited from the ranks of the lovers of melodrama mulling around a much abused wife and colored with a lot of gaudy people intent upon amusing themselves with the pastime of drinking habitually.

To exploit "Marriage Morals" the old favorite of an essay contest in conjunction with a newspaper suggests itself as a lead.

The subject of the essays, of course, to be "Can a woman reform a man." Or "Does a man keep his promises to reform." The heroine is first seen as an employee in a beauty shop—an incident which may be used for window tie ups with drug stores or dispensers of cosmetics. T. C. K.

First Runs on Broadway

STRAND

- 1. Overture
2. Here and There
3. Musical Miniatures
4. Mark Strand Topical Review
5. Prologue to Trilby
6. Trilby (First National)
7. New Aesop Fable "The Pearl Divers" (Pathe)
8. Organ Solo

Press Comments

American.—An unusual presentation. Times.—This photoplay is wonderfully good. Tribune.—It was a version of "Trilby" with all of the thrills left out.. World.—Enough remains of the hardy original to make the picture entertaining. Mail.—Those interested in better films will not fail to place this one on their list. Telegram.—The leading honors of "Trilby" at the Mark Strand Theatre this week must go to Lafayette. Sun and Globe.—Miss Lafayette makes an acceptable Trilby and the production throughout has been well cast. Journal.

RIVOLI

- 1. Overture
2. Rivoli Pictorial
3. Dreams
4. Hollywood (Paramount)
5. Serenade (R. Drigo)
6. Felix Calms His Conscience (Cartoon Comedy)

Press Comments

American.—A highly enjoyable picture, Times.—As a smart satire with sparkling with "Hollywood," James Cruze's latest production, overwhelms all other screen efforts in this line. Tribune.—It really is a most entertaining picture and nothing in the least like it ever has been done before. Herald.—Amazing originality, daring subtlety, revolutionary satire Wand 100 per cent entertainment value. World.—Is one of the most interesting films we have ever seen. Mail—Tells a delightful story and is amusing entertainment. Telegram.—The photoplay enthusiast gets all the chance in the world at the Rivoli. Sun and Globe.—Keenly and deftly satirical is its humor. Evening World.—We doubt if there'll be a single soul at all interested in movies who will not revel in the display of real talent that flits across the screen at the Rivoli.

RIALTO

- 1. Overture—Pique Dame (Von Suppe)
2. Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz—March of the Wooden Soldiers
3. Rialto Magazine
4. Oh Come With Me—Soprano Solo
5. Thomas Meighan in Homeward Bound (Paramount)
6. Cielo e Mar from "La Gioconda"—Tenor Solo
7. Wrecks (Educational)

Press Comments

American.—Tom Meighan made a good-looking sailor, too, and Lila Lee was quite too sweet for anything. Evening World.—A mighty enjoyable picture.

CAMEO

- 1. Overture—Along Broadway
2. Pathe News
3. Fables—The Thoroughbred (Pathe)
4. Post Nature Pictures (Merit Film Corp.)
5. Comedy
6. Elaine Hammerstein in Broadway Gold (Truart)
7. Topics of the Day

Press Comments

American.—Makes an interesting picture, because it tells a rattling, melodramatic story, with a mystery in it that is surprisingly solved in the final reel. World.—We can easily imagine it knocking them over when it is shown outside the tight coat belt. Telegram.—It is a mystery story that holds you until almost the final curtain.

BARGAIN MOVIES PAYING VENTURE

B. H. Mooney Exploits House and Boosts Summer Receipts With Morning Shows

Birmingham, Ala., July 25.—For the summer months when the moving picture business is not at its best, B. H. Mooney manager of the Trianon and Rialto theaters in Birmingham has found that the "Bargain Movie" is a most effective method of advertising when used on Monday morning.

Mr. Mooney has been following the plan for several weeks past and as a result has had very good houses all the week, the word of month publicity put out by the "bargain" spectators having the effect to draw additional patronage. Said Mr. Mooney:

"If you want people to come and see a thing just set several thousand people to discussing it and the feat is accomplished. That is why I believe so strongly in Monday morning bargain movies."

Co-operation with some man in another line of business is imperative to the success of the "bargain movie." Preferably, the other man should be a merchant operating a department store and doing extensive advertising. The more popular the store doing the advertising happens to be the better for the business of the moving picture theater. The arrangements by which the plans are carried out vary with the various stores.

The "bargain movies" which have been put on by the Trianon have been in co-operative with the Caheen Department store of this city. In the Sunday advertisement run in the Sunday papers coupons bearing an advertisement of the Trianon picture were inserted. These coupons, when presented at the door of the theatre with ten cents were good for one admittance to any morning performance of the show.

So far all bargain performances have been crowded, the sidewalk being jammed with waiting crowds before the show opens. These people go away talking about the picture and draw others who would not make the effort if their curiosity had not been aroused.

BLOCK OF TICKETS

BUYS BIG AD

Portland, Ore.—One of the effective methods of exploiting Cosmopolitan's "Enemies of Women" when it was shown at the Rivoli Theatre in Portland, Ore., was a tie-up with the merchants of that city which resulted in a page of co-operative advertising in the Oregon Daily Journal.

The tie-up was made with the Yamhill Market Merchants' Association. They arranged with the management of the Rivoli to give away, in return for a co-operative page of advertising and their own advertising of the showing, a thousand free tickets to "Enemies of Women." These tickets were to be given away for two days, on Thursday and Friday, preceding the first showing of the photoplay. The merchants of the Yamhill Market Merchants' Association advertised the fact that they were giving away free $500 worth of Rivoli Theatre tickets.

TRIES MUSIC AS

CHARMER OF PUBLIC

Knowing your audience and getting a flying start are two factors that have kept up attendance at the Royal Theatre, Victoria, B. C., regardless of weather.

To effect this result the manager started off the run of First National's "Refuge"

Profitable

EXPLOITATION

with a Music Lover's Night on Monday, with the idea of making this a permanent feature of the Monday openings if it draws; and the result to date have justified the special event. Inasmuch as Victoria is strongly British in population and sentiment English airs constitute the main part of the musical program. The blending of these two factors in audience appeal have contributed in large measure to the way in which summer business is holding up at the Victoria.

MILLER'S BALLOON ADS

CARRY TO THE STICKS

Roy Miller of Miller's Theatre, Los Angeles, put over a "live wire" campaign for Safety Last that proved unusually successful.

One hundred gas filled balloons with Harold Lloyd's face and glasses on them were sent out from the theatre. Attached to each balloon was a pass to a showing of Safety Last. In less than a week's time over twenty-five passes were presented at the box office; several coming from neighboring towns of a distance of thirty-five miles. This stunt created a great deal of excitement among the residents of an outlying district who rarely patronized a down town theatre.

An interesting story was told to the box office girl by an elderly couple living in the foothill district. The couple told of having been seated in their home, just after dark, when all of a sudden the old lady noticed a strange object as it floated past the window. Frightened she called her husband. The old gentleman went out and to his amazement found caught in the vine surrounding his porch the big Harold Lloyd balloon. This couple said they hadn't been to a show in the "city" for years.

PUZZLES THE MERCHANTS

AGAIN

Bill Robson appears to have a stranglehold on dealers in groceries and all sorts of food products in the exploiting of Goldwyn's South Sea picture, "Lost and Found."

He started this sort of thing when the picture was shown at the State Theatre in Pittsburgh by tying up one of the biggest food dealers in the city. For the showing at the Pegent in Washington, Pa., he tied up with local grocers in a similar campaign. This was based on the "Lost and Found" picture puzzle. Half a dozen of the biggest merchants in Washington wrapped these picture puzzles in every package sent out, offering free tickets to see the picture to the first ten customers who returned the puzzle correctly marked.

SALVATION ARMY LASSIE USED

It is a rather unique idea which the manager of B. S. Moss' Flatbush Theatre, Brooklyn, put across in exploiting the showing of Goldwyn's "Souls for Sale" at that theatre. He arranged for a Salvation Army lassie in the guise of a "four minute man" in the Army's drive for funds, to go up on the stage of the Flatbush Theatre and devote part of her time to the work of her organization in a plea for funds and the other half to a description of the Salvation Army's work in rescuing "Souls for Sale." The girl's appearances on the stage were made, of course, the week preceding the showing of the picture.

PUBLICITY STUNT FOR YESTERDAY'S WIFE

If present plans carry through according to schedule New York is to be the cradle of a publicity stunt which may follow "Yesterday's Wife," a C. B. C. feature, all over the country. The stunt as lined up runs as follows:

Next week in Aeolian Hall, Mrs. Caroline Sohmers, for years a staunch advocate of a national divorce law that will be more amenable and popular than those in existence in the different states of the union, will organize what she aptly terms, "The Yesterday Wife's Protective Association."

Mrs. Sohmers will not only address the meeting but will copiously illustrate the whys and wherefores of the proposed association by the presentation of a new picture, "Yesterday's Wife."

Furthering the interests of the sympathetic body of divorcees, Mrs. Sohmers plans an edition de luxe of Evelyn Campbell's popular novelette from which the picture was adapted, and which deals with the divorce problem in a gripping and realistic way which she will mail to every woman considering a divorce.

Mrs. Sohmers has an extensive trip of the big cities planned and in the formation of branch associations of divorcees, will take along "Yesterday's Wife" in the animated form to carry the big reason why all divorcees should join an organization such as she outlines.

ANOTHER ANGLE FOR CO-OPERATIVE PAGES

J. Raymond Thurston, manager of the Temple Theatre, Lockport, N. Y., worked an effective tie-up with the Lockport Union Sun and Journal during the showing at his house of the Rex Ingram production of "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Co-operating with the advertising manager of the newspaper, Mr. Thurston got fifteen merchants to contribute to an advertising layout of a page, each merchant being assigned a letter from the title of the picture, and the newspaper contributing space for the explaining of the contest. The reader was asked to use the letter as the starting letter for some article sold by the merchant. Tickets to the theatre were the awards for the best answers.

MORGAN'S TIP-OFF

W. H. Morgan, Manager of the Lincoln Theatre, Warwood, W. Va., has invented for exploitation purposes a special, new classification for his regular weekly Aesop Fable attraction. Manager Morgan issued a herald in which his Fable for that week is described as "1-Reel Chicken." Mr. Morgan explains that his patrons know that this classification is awarded only to the "short best bet" on a given program—and they rally to the ticket window on that "tip."

HARDY'S REVIVAL A SUCCESS

That a revival week can be made as successful in hot weather as in winter was demonstrated by Samuel Harding of the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, last week. "Way Down East," "Through the Back Door" and "The Three Musketeers," used in two-day showings for the week, played to a good attendance during one of the hottest weeks of the summer.

STORE CIRCULATES ROTOS

Marion, Ohio.—By tying up with the largest store in town, S. G. Sladdin, Cleveland Exploiteer, was able to dispense of 500 rotos on "Bella Donna" for the Marion Theatre, when the picture played there. At first the theatre was reluctant to take over as many as 500 of these, but changed its mind when Sladdin "scoped" and lined up a store to aid in putting the picture over.

Alfred Lunt, star of "Backbone" made some personal appearances in connection with the presentation of the Distinctive production offered by Goldwyn. While in Washington to appear at Tom Moore's Rialto Theatre, Lunt visited various officials of the Government. He is shown above with Assistant Secretary of Labor Hon. E. H. Henning. Goldwynner Bill Robson had a finger in this publicity pic—Bill may be seen at the left of the group, Lunt seated, and Assistant Secretary Henning at the right.

Harry Reed, of the Opera House, Versailles, O., does his own ballyhoo work and has a flivver to help him. The photo above reveals Harry in the act of exploiting Pathe's "Dr. Jack" with a banner featuring Harold Lloyd's most prominent feature, the goggles.

Manager W. D. Fulton of the DeLuxe Theatre, Hutchinson, Kansas, played Goldwyn's "Souls for Sale" all over town—exploiting in newspapers, mail campaigns and street stunts. Above is one of Mr. Fulton's ballyhoo ideas. The boy enjoyed the job and consequently did it well.

"Dr. Jack" had an office at the Joy Theatre, Cloverdale, Ind., when the Pathe comedy starring Harold Lloyd played there. The Joy used one of the black bags designed as a novelty for the feature and plenty of lobby stands out on the street line.

The Western Union-"Backbone" tie-up started in New York has traveled extensively. The stunt was used in Washington, D. C., when the Goldwyn offering was presented at the Rialto Theatre. Window cards featuring a photo of Edith Roberts and a message stating that the "Western Union night letter is the 'Backbone' of business" were displayed in all W-U offices.

The 24-sheet Pathe has made up for the Hal Roach serial featuring Edna Murphy. The title registers and there is a suggestion of the thrills in which the serial specializes.

A fashion window in which the tie-up with the presentation of Goldwyn's "The Christian" at the Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., was based on the display of dress materials used by Mac Bush in her gowns.

A stunt not new or startling, but one which proved the value of appealing to youngsters and letting the show ride along on their enthusiasm. The parade was organized by the Dawn Theatre management for the opening episode of the Universal serial "Buffalo Bill."

A "Daddy Movement" offers possibilities. The group shown above is a Jersey City family interested in the "Daddy Club," organized and carried along as a part of a national club to further the interests of children with regard to betterment of housing, schools and playgrounds. The stunt was launched by First National in connection with the Jackie Coogan feature "Daddy."

The Jackie Coogan impersonation stunt. Still good for pictures starring child stars or comedians. The array of Jackies we show here was the result of a drive for First National's "Trouble" at the Rex Theatre, Greeley, Co. The star impersonator won a new suit and several complimentary were included as inducements for a turnout.

You can make an impression on the whole city with a crowd, and the way to get a crowd is to hold some special show for children. That was the way the New Fillmore Theatre, San Francisco, produced this jam out front when a drive for Pathe's "Nanook of the North" was instituted.

The old circus paste car made a good ballyhoo for Universal's "In the Days of Buffalo Bill" in Des Moines, Ia. Novelties in the form of feathered caps were distributed to the kids, and how they did gather 'round the old wagon and whoop things up!

An after school performance for children only was worked up through cooperation with school authorities when First National's "Trouble" played the Queen's Square Theatre, St. John's, N. B. The cooperation is easy to get and the results in a majority of cases makes it worth going after.

A "Go to Movie Week" was one of the special exploitation drives used by the Stanley Company of Philadelphia to stimulate interest in the picture theatres during the hot weather. At the Victoria, Vitagraph's "Masters of Men" was the attraction and plenty of color was used in the decorations on the front of the house. The tie-up with a naval recruiting drive brought a supply of signal flags.

The "jazz" front especially designed by Milton H. Russell, manager and exploitation man, for the Olympic Theatre, Altoona, Pa. The Paramount feature "Children of Jazz" was made the main item of a "jazz week program." There was an added attraction in the form of a 10 piece jazz band. In reporting the stunt Mr. Russell says "for hot weather the results were highly satisfactory."

The electric sign over the entrance to Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, was slightly elaborated for the presentation of Associated Exhibitor's "Tea-With a Kick!" Not letters alone were used in a trick sign in which the Kick was illustrated. It does not look as if everybody stays away from the picture theatres during the summer.

Usherettes wore duck uniforms and a model ship was displayed in a glass case in the lobby when the Victoria showed "Masters of Men" during "Go to Movies Week" in Philadelphia. The Navy, which worked with the theatre in a tie-up stunt furnished some armament in addition to the show case in the lobby.

The MODERN THEATRE

Building — Equipping — Operating

SOME interesting effects can be obtained by the use of phosphorescent paint on scenery, properties and gowns. Objects painted with Balmain's paint (calcium sulphide) glow for awhile with a bluish light after being exposed to the bare carbon arc or quartz mercury arc. Paints with certain salts of zinc, strontium, cadmium and barium as part of their composition, give other phosphorescent tints, such as yellow, red and green. Combinations of these colors can be used to good effect when the stage is darkened.

Switchboard and Wiring

The switchboard for controlling all the stage lights, as well as the house circuits, should be located in such a position that the electrician can view the entire scene as in Fig. 11. It should be of the dead front type, with all live parts out of reach. Each circuit should be clearly indicated by a suitable legend on the face of the board and colored handles on the dimmers are of assistance in rapid manipulation. Dimmers should be provided to control each of the house circuits and each of the color circuits on the stage. The interlocking and selective types of dimmers offer special advantages in convenience and smoothness of control.

A very important feature of the equipment of the modern stage is the installation of one or more high current services or cutouts known as "company switches." Most of the recent productions employ their own lighting equipment entirely (as shown in Fig. 12) placing no dependence on the regular house apparatus. These lights are controlled by portable switchboards and dimmers, often very intricate and complete, as evidenced by Fig. 13. These portable switchboards are connected at the company switch and the regular board used only for control of the auditorium lights.

Amateur Productions

Amateur dramatic societies with limited sums available for lighting equipment can obtain satisfactory results with comparatively crude apparatus.

Deep bowl steel reflectors such as used in industrial plants equipped with the high wattage Mazda C lamps often serve as excellent substitutes for bunch or olivette lamps. It is a simple matter to rivet strips of sheet tin cut in the proper shape to serve as guides for color filters.

Color screens can be easily made by mounting sheets of gelatin film between two pieces of wire mesh in a wooden frame.

The standard floodlighting projectors with concentrated filament Mazda lamps are especially serviceable where it is desired to flood a scene from considerable distance. Color modification can be obtained with screens such as just mentioned.

If standard dimming devices are not available, slide wire resistances of suitable capacity will serve. For "out of doors" productions, a water barrel such as is used for a "load" in electric machine testing has frequently been utilized for dimming.

The Stage and Its Lighting

Part Three

Hints On Lamp Operation—Heat

The total heat emitted from Mazda C (gas filled) and Mazda B (vacuum) lamps is virtually the same for a given wattage. In the Mazda C lamp, however, more heat is localized at the bulb giving this a relatively high temperature. Hence, greater precaution should be taken to prevent Mazda C lamps resting against fabrics, painted surfaces and the like.

Bulb Shape

The regular Mazda C lamps for general lighting are so well standardized that it is not necessary to describe these. The following list enumerates the various concentrated filament Mazda C lamps which are usually employed in theatrical work. In most cases these are not the standard projection lamps which are made in the tubular (T) bulb. This bulb, while allowing the lamp to be closer to the lens as is desirable in regular stereopticon service, limits the burning position to within fifteen degrees of tip up—a disadvantage in theatrical work. The round (G) bulb construction is, therefore, generally more suitable.

250	G-30	3 3/4	5 5/8	medium
400	G-30	3 3/4	5 5/8	Medium
500	G-40	5	7 5/8	Mogul
1000	G-40	5	8 5/16	Mogul
2000	G-48	6	9 1/16	Mogul

These lamps are designed to have an approximate average life of 100 hours. Complete information on the Mazda lamps for motion picture projection will be found in Bulletin Index 2.

Burning Position

Mazda B lamps can be operated in any position. Mazda C lamps from 50 to 200 watts have a so-called "ring" filament and can be burned in any position. Regular Mazda C lamps from 300 to 1000 watts have "loop" filaments with one set of anchors and are designed for operation in the tip down position. If such a lamp is burned tip up or horizontally, it is obvious that when hot, the filament will soften, sag, interlock, short circuit and the lamp will have a short life.

When these lamps are to be used in a tip up position, they should be ordered for tip up burning, and will be supplied with the anchors at the lower ends of the loops instead of at the upper, at no additional cost. Wherever such lamps are likely to be burned in any position, they should be ordered for universal burning, and two sets of anchors are then used.

The concentrated filament Mazda C lamps for projection purposes (floodlighting and stereopticon) cannot be burned with the base up for the hot filament is so close to the supporting button that this is soon softened by the heated gas and the lamp fails. They can be burned in any position except within forty-five degrees of vertically tip down.

One cause for unsatisfactory performance of concentrated filament lamps may be explained as follows: A given lamp is operated for a considerable time in a horizontal position and the filament acquires a permanent sag or loop. This lamp is then burned tip up and another shape of sag may occur causing interlocking of the loops and short circuiting.

Handling

The advantage of a concentrated filament is that the light source can be placed at the focus of the optical system. If care is not exercised in adjusting the lamp, then this advantage is lost. The filament should be at the correct height and neither to the right nor left of the center of the lens system. Where spherical mirrors are used, they should be placed in such a manner as to reflect the image back on the filament itself. By this means, efficient utilization of light and an even field will be secured. More detailed instructions on focusing will be found in Bulletin Index 21, Fundamentals of Projection.

While the Mazda lamp will stand reasonable handling, it is obvious that the rather fine filament may be broken with severe shocks, particularly after having been burned for a while and become crystallized.

Typical Effect Apparatus

ticular part or parts we desire to lose. A piece of real glass or gelatin, for example, absorbs orange, yellow, green, blue and violet light, transmitting red light. A green screen may absorb red, orange, blue violet rays, giving a yellowish-green light. It is impossible to add anything to the light emitted by the lamp filament and all that can be done is to get rid of some portion that is not desired. Hence, all color changes of this character involve a loss of light, the exact amount depending on the color obtained. This means that to obtain the same illumination with colored light, two, three or fifty times the wattage must be used in comparison with that used for unmodified often called white light. The following table gives some approximate figures on the absorption or loss of light necessary to obtain various colors of light from the Mazda lamp. These values are subject to considerable variation, depending on the purity of color secured and other factors.

Ordinary Designation	Absorption Per Cent	(White) Light Per Cent	Wattage to Produce Same Illumination as with Unmodified
Red	85-75	15-25	400 to 600
Orange	70-50	30-50	200 to 300
Yellow	40-20	60-80	125 to 150
Green	80-90	10-20	500 to 1000
Blue	95-90	5-10	1000 to 2000
Purple	98-95	2-5	2000 to 5000

Fortunately, as will be pointed out later, we rarely require a high level of colored lighting.

The next point concerns the mechanical means of obtaining colored light. There are several methods which possess certain advantages and disadvantages which will be analyzed.

A — Superficially colored lamps are inexpensive and effective. If the bulb becomes broken, the lamp is useless, but the general color effect is not marred. Dipped lamps have what is called a transparent coating, and purity of color can be secured in this manner. It is a rather unpleasant task to apply the dip, and breakage of lamps during the process is likely to be rather high. Very few of the lamp dips are permanent, fading from the heat of the lamp and requiring new coatings at

A Well Designed Dead Front Switchboard and Interlocking, Selective, Dimmer Bank so Located that a Clear View of the Stage can be Had Had at All Times.

Men handling lighting apparatus should be cautioned to use care.

The Production of Colored Light

The light emitted by the Mazda lamp has a continuous spectrum, in other words, all the colors of the rainbow are present. Hence since all colors are available in the "raw or unmodified" light we have a fortunate condition for obtaining any effect.

Suppose red light is wanted, it is necessary to "subtract" or screen out the orange, yellow, green, blue and violet rays or in other words, the complementary color (blue-green). If blue green light is wanted, then red, orange and yellow rays are absorbed. If the effect of orange is to be obtained, the green, blue and violet portion is screened out. To remove any of these rays is a comparatively simple matter. It is only necessary to pass the light through some medium which will absorb the parrequent intervals. Where lamps are located in inaccessible places, this is an expensive proposition. Small relatively inefficient lamps must be used, for none of the transparent colors or standard dyes will stand up under the higher temperature of the gas-filled of Mazda C lamp.

Mazda C lamps are available with sprayed coatings of a permanent nature. So-called opaque colors are the foundation of the coating. As a result, the emitted light acquires a tint through successive selective reflections from one particle to another of the opaque coating. It is obvious that such a process is relatively inefficient, compared with the selective transmission absorption of the transparent dye and further, that purity of color cannot be secured. Sprayed lamps, however, have a definite field of application and find considerable use where "tinted" illumination is required.

New Theatres

GENESEE, N. Y. — Directors of the Genesee Theatrical Enterprises, Inc. have elected the following officers: President, Nikitas D. Dipson; vice-president, Judge E. A. Washburn; secretary and treasurer, John R. Osborne. The new theatre will be opened about October 1st as an expenditure of about $100,000 in addition to the present building, same being rebuilt. The Pope-Jones pipe organ company of Tonawanda will build the special organ to be installed in the new theatre costing $16,000.

ALBANY, N. Y. — The Hudson, Albany, N. Y., owned by W. W. Berinstein of N. Y. was almost totally destroyed by a $150,000 fire, recently.

BUFFALO, N. Y. — Mr. Jas. Cardina has purchased a large Marr & Colton Concert Organ for the new Cardina Theatre now under construction on Bailey Ave., Buffalo; also one of their Grand Pianos.

MARSHFIELD, ORE. — Marsden & Noble, well known exhibitors, are installing a large Marr & Colton Concert Organ in their theatre in Marshfield, which, when completed, will be one of the finest theatre organs in the Northwest.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y. — T. E. Loomis, Manager of the Cozy is installing a radio costing approximately $800.

ELMIRA, N. Y. — The Mozart Theatre is closed during the summer months, during which time it is undergoing remodeling and will be reopened on or about September 1st.

BUFFALO, N. Y. — The Premier Theatre, Main Street and Leroy Avenue, has been closed for the summer months and will be opened early in September.

LOCKPORT, N. Y. — Robert Thurston of the Hi-Art Theatre has closed that theatre so that same may be remodeled.

BROOKLYN, N. Y. — Wyckoff Theatre, 247 Wyckoff Street is now under the personal management of Sidney Rotschild.

LAMBERTVILLE, N. J. — G. B. TenEyck, head of the United Theatres, Inc., has announced the completion of their plans for the new 1500 capacity theatre to be erected on Bridge Street, work to be started immediately.

GERMANY STRONG IN WORLD MARKET

*We Are Largest Customer, With Italy Second and Sweden
Third*

Berlin, Germany.—Official statistics of the Board of Trade just published show a considerable falling-off in film imports, accompanied by a remarkable rise in export figures. The difference between imports and exports is especially striking as regards raw film. Not less than 11,280,000 metres (1 metre about 3 ft.) were exported in March, 1923, as against 1,050,000 in the corresponding month of 1922. This means an increase of about 1,000 per cent. The exports for January last were 4,455,000, in February 5,565,000 m. More than 20 million metres raw film have been thus sold abroad in the first quarter of 1923. Most of this quantity went to U. S. A., Italy being second. Third place was taken by Sweden, which imported 9,500 kilo raw stock, then follow Denmark, Japan and Argentina. The growing figures of these two last-named countries point to gradual development of home production.

Austria has, on the other hand, lost her former position as best customer of raw stock. Production in this country is crippled by high expenses and lack of enterprise. Most of the Austrian stars and directors emigrate to Munich and Berlin. Raw stock imports are quite infinitesimal.

Exports and Imports Figures

The quantity of exposed films exported in March, 1923, is given as follows:—11,000 kilos, measuring 1,650,000 metres, as against 6,800 kilos, or 1,020,000 metres, in March, 1922. The total export figures for exposed films for the first quarter of 1923 show a doubling as against the first quarter of last year—namely, 7,050,000 metres, against 3,165,000 m. The principal buyer of exposed films is still Austria, which took about one-fifth of the exports during the first quarter of 1923. Second place is taken by Poland and Baltic States. Exports to Spain show, on the other hand, a decrease against the last quarter of 1922—viz., 2,500 kilos in January-March, against 7,400 in October-December.

The imports of exposed films amounted in March, 1923, to 180,000 metres, the corresponding figure for March, 1922, being 425,000 m. The figures for the first quarter of this year are 3,900 kilos, measuring 585,000 metres, as against 6,000 kilos, or 900,000 m., respectively, in the same period of 1922. This decrease is chiefly due to the depreciation of the mark.

How · he · said · it

The solemn hush that followed Lincoln's Gettysburg address was not alone a tribute to the beauty and simplicity of his message. The multitude, in silent meditation, paid homage to the President as one of the most eloquent speakers of all time. What he said will never be forgotten, but the way he said it, his power of presentation, gave his words added weight. It matters little to an audience what a public speaker says, if they can not hear him or if he does not speak distinctly. Even a poor speech, well delivered, is more effective than a powerful message that is hard to understand.

In motion pictures a classic of the screen loses much of its value if it is not properly presented photographically. The artistic and dramatic merit may be there, but the audience fails to appreciate it if the laboratory making negative and prints has not retained all the producers have put into the picture. The West's foremost makers of motion pictures have learned that STANDARD SERVICE and STANDARD PRINTS give their productions greater screen value. The camera-to-screen service of STANDARD LABORATORIES guarantees them better photography and assures exhibitors that the audience sees to best advantage all the producers have put into their pictures.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

CALVIN COOLIDGE

UPON the shoulders of Calvin Coolidge has been placed a great responsibility. That he will meet that responsibility in a manner befitting a President of the United States is the conviction of those who have followed his career.

That he will prove to be as great a friend of the motion picture industry as was his predecessor is the hope of those whose present and future is bound up in it.

Mr. Coolidge's character, his simplicity, his true democracy, his insistence even when in high position in remaining close to the soil and in maintaining his comradeship with those who toil with their hands—all these constitute the best evidence that this son of the Old Bay State will encourage in every proper way the fostering of an amusement that contributes so greatly to the happiness and the welfare of the larger number of America's millions.

And each of these millions will join with Mr. Coolidge in saying, "I have faith that God will direct the destinies of our nation."

WARREN G. HARDING

IT may be too early to appraise the position of Warren G. Harding in the history of his country, but it is not too early to realize his position in the hearts of his countrymen.

There his memory is secure. Although harassed by some of the greatest problems that ever have fallen to a President he maintained his poise, his serenity, his kindness, his humanness.

The tributes of the silent millions who for four days in all weathers and at all hours lined the rails over which were being borne all that was earthly of the late President, were not without deep significance.

In the motion picture industry Mr. Harding was respected greatly as he was loved deeply. The expressions of some of the leaders in that great business field vividly reveal the affection in which he was held by them and their associates in common with all Americans.

Motion picture men and women mourn the passing of a great man and a good friend.

(Copyright Underwood & Underwood)

By Will H. Hays

I AM inexpressibly shocked and grieved. The President gave his life to his country. The sacrifice of this great man should not have been. He is another victim of the cruel system surrounding and controlling the office of the Chief Executive, the system which condemns to early death or invalidism those men most honored by the nation.

By Adolph Zukor

The death of our beloved President is a loss that will be felt keenly by the American people. Kindly, understanding, human, he had the love of all true Americans, not only because of his great character and ability but also because of that great heart which stopped the other day.

Especially will the motion picture business feel the loss of his passing. While always desirous of seeing motion pictures advance in art and popularity, at the same time he had a sympathetic understanding of our problems and was always ready to help.

A great man has passed, and the American people are poorer at a time when he could ill be spared.

By Arthur S. Friend

We bow our heads in grief! The passing of Warren G. Harding is a world sorrow. America will cherish his memory: calm, human, wise, tolerant, he stood for the finest type of citizenship. His attitude of encouragement toward the motion picture industry bespoke his earnest interest in the clean and proper entertainment and advancement of the great masses of the common people from whom he sprang, and as one of whom, despite power, prestige and authority, he lived.

By W. E. Shallenberger

Warren Harding was, above all things, a man's man—kindly, generous and just. He was a sincere and true friend of the motion picture and in his death the industry suffers a real loss.

It is but fitting that we should unite in paying a tribute to one whose every action and every thought was given to the fulfilling of the many duties of his high office, and who held always to the highest ideals of American tradition.

In the passing of President Harding, not only the motion picture industry, but the world at large, loses a man it could ill afford to spare.

By Harry Asher

It would be impossible, in this small space, fully to express our grief and sorrow in the passing of Warren G. Harding. He will long be remembered as a man who was sincere in his striving for a higher ideal of integrity and honor than had ever before been conceived.

In his releasing of Will H. Hays from his cabinet that the motion picture industry might profit thereby, could be seen his self-sacrificing devotion to the problems of progress. His whole career was marked with this same unflinching farsightedness which will make his memory a cherished possession of the American people.

Expressions from Producers

By R. H. Cochran

I never realized how deep a respect and how full an affection I had for President Harding until he passed on. I did not vote for him, but I have regretted it ever since I had the honor and good fortune to meet him personally. His personal charm and his general bearing then made me proud to know that he was the nation's chief executive. My heart, like millions of others, goes out to Mrs. Harding in keenest sympathy.

By B. A. Warner

The death of President Harding was a great shock to me, as I am sure it was to everyone else in the motion picture industry and the entire amusement world. I always considered him a he-man president and an all-around American, investing his powers to the interests of the people in the best manner in which he saw fit. Of our late presidents, he seemed to lean particularly toward all popular forms of entertainment, especially the motion picture; and he seemed to keep the industry at his fingertips, watching for the forthcoming productions of importance and expressing his desire to see them as soon as the opportunity availed itself. Mr. Harding was a "regular fellow" and this country should place him on a pedestal as a man who was more than a President.

By Elmer Pearson

For the wise exercise of the great power he held; for the honesty and sincerity which endeared him to the whole people of the United States and won for him the esteem of foreign nations; and for his avowed belief in and an encouragement of motion picture entertainment as foremost among the world's enlightening agencies, our lamented President, Warren G. Harding, will live forever in grateful memory.

By Al Lichtman

Because he was keenly interested in all humanity, Warren G. Harding appreciated the great part the motion picture is playing in the lives of every human being, and we in the motion picture industry have suffered the loss of a sympathetic, lovable friend and all of us mourn his passing.

By Arthur S. Kane

I found President Harding to be a most genial, kindly, friendly man. The world knows he was a substantial, solid, firm and wise statesman. The situation and outlook of the United States is proof of that. Our industry has lost a true and good friend. He was natural, without pretense, and frankly delighted in the relaxation and recreation of motion pictures.

Let us forever help to keep his memory green.

By W. E. Atkinson

The loss of Warren G. Harding is the nation's loss, but one feels a personal loss as well. Even to those who never met him, the dominant impression was of a man who was always a friend as well as an executive. President Harding was never an abstraction, but an individual intensely real,—lovable, full of charm, able, and appreciative. To serve such a man always lent charm and zest to the idea of service.

Never austere or forbidding, he set a worthy example to the people of the country by his keen enjoyment of simple pleasures, by his tolerant spirit and efforts to promote good understandings everywhere.

We in the motion picture industry feel particularly this loss, for President Harding was one of the best friends the industry had. Himself an ardent picture fan, never hesitating to express his delight with the better photoplays, he was aware of the industry's problems and encouraged their satisfactory solution. Metro Pictures Corporation will always feel a sense of service, for its production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" was viewed by Mr. Harding three times, at his own request, and "The Famous Mrs. Fair" and other Metro pictures, projected aboard the Mayflower and at the White House, were reported officially as having pleased the President thoroughly. There could be no better aim for a producing corporation than to please such a man as the late Warren G. Harding—to do this is to feel that one has been of service.

Thus we add our own sense of bereavement to that of the nation's.

By J. D. Williams

As a great American and the Leader of the Nation, President Harding was a frank and avowed friend of the Motion Picture. He was friendly to the industry and he was an ardent enthusiast over the pictures for his own as well as the public entertainment. In his death we as picture men have suffered an especial loss. Regardless of political affiliation, he held a firm hold on our affection because of his manliness, his broad, human sympathies and his high character.

By Richard A. Rowland

No industry in the entire world will miss President Harding any more than the motion picture industry. He has been a consistent friend and has recognized the picture industry as a great force for good from the day he took office. He was an ardent picture fan. This, combined with his qualifications as an American and a gentleman and his admirable qualities in taking this nation safely over the shoals and obstacles that followed the war brings a definite loss home not only to the country at large, but to each and every individual.

Lovable Harding

ADIEU!

Expressions from Exhibitors

Sidney S. Cohen

PRESIDENT HARDING was a practical executive devoted to duty and capable of appreciating and understanding the various elements entering into the official life of the nation and for the benefit of the people he took advantage of such new phases of publicity and demonstration as were afforded by the motion picture theatre screens. It was in this relation our officers and directors came in close contact with the President and his clear vision of the great service the screen could render to the government made the co-operation of the theatre owners. In conjunction with theatre owners I deeply deplore his death, realizing that in his passing the nation loses a statesman of the highest order and a patriot of the purest type.

Atlantic City, N. J.

R. T. Woodhull

Life's rougher edges were always rendered softer and situations made more agreeable through contact with President Harding. He was a real American of the high type which so wonderfully dignify the history of this great nation. He died in harness, serving his country in the highest position within the gift of man to bestow. He made duty his guide and a loftiness of purpose his life's rule. He is gone but he kept the faith and left a rich heritage of real American accomplishments to advantage and cheer his fellow countrymen.

Dover, N. J.

H. M. Richey

In the passing of Warren G. Harding the motion picture industry in common with every other industry in the United States lost an executive whose judgment was tempered with that sincerity of purpose that made his every effort one of a conscientious desire to give the American people the very best he had in him. That he was a friend of the motion picture industry he evidenced many times; that he appreciated the power it was to our government was shown in his frequent uses of the screens of the country. In his passing what more can be said than has been said, "We have lost a true friend who through his sincerity has endeared himself to us."

Detroit, Mich.

Samuel I. Berman

The motion picture industry has lost a friend in President Harding. At all times he has proved to be a staunch supporter of the silent drama. The impression when I first had the honor of meeting him, was "A Real Man," and a great character that will go down in history.

Ralph Talbot

The entire nation is mourning the loss of its chosen leader and those citizens interested in the motion picture industry feel the additional loss of a true friend. All of us who were privileged to meet Mr. Harding when he so graciously received our executive committee remember his words of appreciation and encouragement. Our sympathy goes out to Mrs. Harding.

Tulsa, Okla.

Joseph Quittner

The motion picture industry has indeed lost a genuine friend in the passing away of our late lamented President. He died a martyr to his country and a soldier on the field of battle, as a man loved and revered by all, a true American in every sense of the word, as our chief executive one who has safely and sanely steered the rudder of our government.

Middletown, New York

William Brandt

President Harding was one of the best friends the industry ever had. He was always ready to praise the movies whenever the occasion arose. His general lovable character and radiant personality, engaged in the tasks of his office as depicted on the screens of the country, gave assurance to the American people that their leader was steering the ship of state right. Now that he is gone all will miss him. May his soul rest in peace.

M. E. Comerford

President Harding's plain, simple, unaffected but simple processes of reasoning and acting always appealed to us as having executive attributes of the highest order. This was the real measure of his official and personal merit accepted by the people as was evident whenever the picture of the President appeared on our theatre screens. Such a man is always safe. The solid, substantial and honest way is the best and this was Harding's way.

C. J. Musselman

The picture industry mourns loss of one of its most loyal friends truly representative of the American people always doing service in behalf of human brotherhood. President Harding did not believe in impractical extremes. He was above all else an American to whom the name was not a party badge.

Paris, Texas

M. J. O'Toole

The special line of association I sought to establish in my connection with the Motion Picture business was to link the screen and the newspaper, the former as the Screen Press of America. That the screen was a most powerful medium of expression and a great publicity element was readily seen and appreciated by President Harding in our conferences with him and through his official acts the Motion Picture theatre screens have been of invaluable service to many government departments. This is a distant accomplishment of our late President and will continue to gain force and effect in Governmental affairs.

Scranton, Penna.

H. A. Schuermann

A sincere friend of the motion picture industry has departed with the death of President Harding. Every question pertaining to it coming before him was handled with sympathy and understanding. His kindness, his practical viewpoint on all matters, his cheerfulness, his lovable qualities have made his memory imperishable in every patriotic American heart. The exhibitors of this nation keenly feel his passing, want to express their condolence to his courageous wife and wish for his successor the greatest success.

East Stroudsburg, Pa.

L. J. Dittmar

In the middle west we liked President Harding. His long experience as a newspaper editor may have given him the superb bearing and balance which enabled him to comprehend the needs of all the people. Harding was always welcome everywhere. There was nothing about him which suggested opposition and everything that spoke eloquently for helpful co-operation. As an executive he was clean cut, honorable and dignified.

Theatre Owners Ask for Right of Preview

Playdate Problem Goes to Will Hays

Chamber of Commerce Members Hold Lively Session and Discuss Two Large Problems

NATIONWIDE in interest was the weekly meeting August 2, of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, held as usual at the Hotel Astor. When the gathering was called to order by President Charles L. O'Reilly, at the close of the luncheon, there were seventy-five members present.

The topics uppermost in the minds of the Theatre Owners were those on block bookings in so far as these prevented exhibitors from seeing a production before engaging to buy it and the effort of the distributor to impose on the exhibitor an arbitrary playdate at the time of the signing of a contract.

Other matters discussed were the controversy with Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan regarding "Enemies of Women" and "Little Old New York," to exhibit which some members held contracts with Famous Players executed at the time that company was releasing Cosmopolitan productions, and the new scale presented by operators' union No. 306.

Up to Thursday, Aug. 9, the meeting between a committee of the Chamber and the office of Nathan Burkan, attorney for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, had not taken place. This conference had been suggested by Lee Ochs.

As to the right to examine a picture before contracting to buy it the meeting decided to send the committee on business relations to confer with Will H. Hays in an effort to secure a change in the custom.

In regard to the playdate situation it was voted to refer the whole question to a committee with authority to negotiate a change in the ruling if the present agreement is defective.

Among the speakers at what proved to be a gathering of unusual interest and importance were Mr. O'Reilly, William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners of the state; Fred G. Wilson, Arthur Hirsch, Sam Berman and Bernard Edelhertz.

Marked attention was given to the remarks of Mr. Edelhertz for two principal reasons. In the first place he was the chairman of the exhibitor committee that negotiated the uniform contract, to which document he has given continuing study, and secondly he is a lawyer by profession.

The first business brought before the meeting were two resolutions, which later were combined.

Demand Right of Selection

One set forth the responsibility of the exhibitor to his public and declared that the members of the chamber should go on record as being opposed to the present system of purchasing pictures before they are produced or while production is only contemplated; to the purchase of pictures in group form or any form without the right of selection or before an opportunity is given to review the finished product.

The second resolution asserted attendance at picture theatres had declined during the past two years and attributed the condition to the system of buying before examination and asked that the matter be presented to Mr. Hays.

"There is a tendency, by propaganda and otherwise," said Mr. O'Reilly, "to intimate that more money is needed for rentals next year. In this zone there are 200 theatres closed, forced to close because of insufficient business. There has been a steady drop in receipts in the past two years, according to statistics of the Department of Commerce.

Charles L. O'Reilly

President Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce

"In my judgment if this organization, after discussion and deliberation, goes on record as favoring this resolution or amendment of any kind because of our belief that it will promote the welfare of the public, that Will H. Hays is big enough to take that into consideration and give as sane and consistent an inquiry and investigation as he did in the case of the uniform contract."

Mr. Brandt, declaring the distributors were going back to the old system of block booking, named several companies that are offering pictures in groups.

Buying Unseen and Unseen

The speaker declared the talk of high rentals was only a repetition of what usually is heard at this season of the year. Also he said that in no other industry do you buy unseen and unseen.

Mr. Edelhertz likened the exhibitor to a sleeping giant and said he had slept on his rights so long that he had forgotten he had any.

"Our great tragedy," said the speaker, "is the fact that this business has not been regulated by any business principle, but purely by the establishment of custom. It seems that custom has managed every angle and every line of the exhibitor's business. Custom was established for the exhibitor by the other side, and he adopted that custom, and for some reason took it for granted he must abide by it.

"Just consider the unjust things from which the exhibitor has been suffering. Year after year we have seen nothing else but the exhibitor singing his name on the line, never knowing he possessed rights.

"The exhibitor conferred and transferred all his rights when he signed a contract for a picture—never until this little body here, recognizing the inequity, dared to go out into the open and demand what we consider the first bill of rights of the exhibitor. At least when he now signs a contract for pictures he gets some rights by that instrument.

"We are waking up little by little as to our rights. What we are demanding today is nothing new in all other industries. Are we demanding anything unreasonable by that resolution? Just as we demanded our rights when we sign a contract it should have been established long ago. I am heartily in favor of this resolution."

"There is a way in which we can buy pictures in blocks and still protect ourselves," said Mr. Wilson. "There is no reason why you can't buy a lot of pictures at one time if you write into your contract that you may reject anything that does not fit in your house. There is your solution."

One of the members suggested that in the event an exhibitor insisted on the insertion of any such clause a salesman would go to the opposition house and offer the block at less money, taking the chance that if accepted by the first exhibitor on his own terms some of the pictures would be rejected. The speaker asked Mr. Edelhertz what would happen if the resolution went through.

Split Market Wide Open

"We are not going out with a club," said Mr. Edelhertz. "On the contrary, we would do as we did with the uniform contract, sit down at a table and along practically legal lines negotiate and discuss the question with the other side, which we believe will bring a better understanding."

"This resolution," said Mr. Brandt, "is a real declaration of principles. How can you ask us a definite amount of money for a product that you yourself know nothing about?

"If the resolution is effective it is going to split the market wide open. Every independent producer is going to have a chance to come in. If everybody releases pictures sight and seen and the exhibitor buys wisely everybody will get the biggest benefit, because then only can he book the biggest pictures of the market."

The Way to Help Hays

"I don't think this organization can hold up a man who does not know his business," said Mr. O'Reilly later on. "This organization is a tool to make the rules of the road fair and equitable so that those who know how to run their business can survive."

"The way to help Mr. Hays get the best standards of production is to tell him what we want," said the president at another time.

"The trade papers know that outside of their editorials the most interesting thing is their reviews. That is what we want, to review before buying.

"I don't think there is any theatre owner in this room who won't pay money for a picture that will make money.

"We want the opportunity to be able to judge and buy for our own business.

year by Famous Players," said Mr. Brandt. "Those of you who bought the thirty-nine will remember that at the time you signed the contract and were asked to name the playdates some of the pictures were not in the works.

"As a rule the exhibitor gave playdates on the whole thirty-nine, the period extending for nearly nine months. Paramount could not deliver according to the dates they took. They had to move back several of the pictures, thereby causing great inconvenience to the exhibitors who had scheduled them.

"Lo and behold, this year every other company wants immediate playdates on the signing of a contract. Whether pictures are delivered or not makes no difference. If they are successful in carrying through this idea it will be absolutely the most detrimental thing that ever happened to the exhibitor.

"It will close the market tighter than a clam. The independent producer won't have a chance to make pictures and find playdates. A few companies will control the entire field.

"It often happens that a company can't deliver pictures on the appointed date because of accidents. I believe this question should be taken up right now.

"You have got certain rights conferred upon you which make it absolutely impossible for any producer to force you to give dates unless you consent."

Enter Old Man Availability

The speaker quoted the language of the clause, declaring the meaning was that there must be mutual consent between the parties.

"But the contract says that where dates are not fixed they have got to give you a certain notice of availability," continued Mr. Brandt. "How can they give you that unless they have it?

"Unless the exhibitor wants to give dates you can't force him. The contract protects him."

"What they are now trying to do is to force the dates into the contract," said Mr. O'Reilly.

"You can give dates if there is mutual consent," said Mr. Edelhertz. "If the picture is not available until three or four months from date they can't force you to give dates until the date of availability arrives."

"Suppose the exhibitor is being forced to give dates how does Clause 8 protect him?" asked Mr. O'Reilly, looking toward Mr. Edelhertz.

"I would advise any exhibitor to refuse to give dates," promptly responded Mr. Edelhertz.

Sam Berman, executive secretary of the state organization, was given the floor. He had been in a restive mood for some time. Mr. Berman is a combination of the leather-lunged Magnus Johnson and the gentle Mark Sabre, of "If Winter Comes," one of whose claims to fame was his ability to see things as the other fellow views them.

"I have always said that 95 per cent of our troubles we make ourselves," said Mr. Berman. "Let's be just, with everybody.

We know what we have got to contend with on the arbitration board.

Three Pictures to a Day.

"I say they are absolutely right from their standpoint when they try to force men to sign contracts. Exhibitors use so little ability in conducting their business that they buy three pictures for every day in the year, for one reason to keep their competitors from getting them.

"When they get pictures for every day how can they keep dates? They are going into arbitration boards with enough pictures for four days instead of one. I do say all men don't do that."

It was decided by the meeting to appoint a committee of three to obtain more information about Clause 8. Those named were Messrs. Mannheim, Edelhertz and Jame, with instructions to report at the next meeting whether exhibitors can be forced to give playdates and to negotiate for a change in the phraseology if necessary.

Suggest Goldwyn Conference

President O'Reilly made a report on the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan situation precipitated by the change in the releasing arrangements on the part of the latter company after some contracts had been executed to release "Little Old New York" and "Ene-

Samuel I. Berman

"If this resolution meets with your approval I believe Mr. Hays will take it just as seriously as he did the uniform contract."

"Fox made a fortune on a picture costing less than $50,000 and lost a fortune on one that cost more than $400,000," said Mr. O'Reilly in discussing another phase of the question.

The resolutions were carried, and the committee on business relations was instructed to take up the matter with Mr. Hays.

mies of Women" through Famous Players, the company which formerly had distributed Cosmopolitan productions.

Lee Ochs suggested a conference with the office of Nathan Burkan, the attorney for Goldwyn, in an effort to straighten out the tangle, and it was decided to instruct the committee handling the subject, with Mr. Ochs added, to make the visit.

Mr. O'Reilly said he was prepared to take up the entire matter with W. R. Hearst and expressed the view there would be a settlement of the controversy. In the meantime the president said that no expense would be spared by the body to protect those holding contracts from infringement, even by Chamber members. He added he would welcome a test case in court.

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER

Samuel Goldwyn's initial independent production for distribution through First National. Barney Bernard plays the part of Abe Potash. Alexander Carr and Vera Gordon have the other important roles.

Milton Sills, left, and his director William Parks, right, take a moment away from the cameras making Universal's "Legally Dead," to have George C. Frolick, centre, explain the wonders of Adrenalin, science's new life-giving fluid.

Herman Raymaker, director, Jerry, the canine star, and Ena Gregory, leading lady, an assistant director and one goose (check, that accounts for everybody) gather for an off-stage conference at the Grand Studios where the Monty Banks comedies for Grand-Asher are being filmed.

Netta Westcott, former English stage star, who is to make her film debut in Preferred Pictures production of "Maytime."

J. S. Woody who recently assumed the duties of General Sales Manager of Associated Exhibitors.

Estelle Taylor, whose next feature will be "Forgive and Forget," in which she will be starred by C. B. C.

"Harbor Lights" is the title of the new Associated Exhibitors offering starring Tom Moore. So much for titles; or, perhaps, the lights grew dim in the harbor and thus this scene.

And more light—but this time it means the parting of the ways, temporarily of course, for McTeague and Trina. Gibson Gowland and AzSu Pitts, in a scene from "McTeague," which Von Stroheim is directing for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan.

Evidently two can occupy a horse's back more comfortably than one. Anyway that's how it looks from the attitude of the "rival" (cuss 'im) who looks on at this love interlude in "Warned in Advance," a two-reel Pathe offering with Leo Maloney as the hero.

A Wilderness Tale as it is pictorially told by Robert C. Bruce in "Dark Timbers," an Educational release.

Atmosphere and two stars. At the left is a dramatic episode in "The Huntress," a First National feature produced by Thomas H. Ince. The center panel shows George Marion who will play the role he created on the stage in the Ince production of "Anna Christie." On the right we have Colleen Moore on the porch of her Indian bungalow, a scene from "The Huntress."

Finis Fox, who plays the triple role of author, director and producer of "The Man Between," an Associated Exhibitors feature.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

Starting an Argument

A LOS ANGELES director, one incidentally possessing an unusual share of keenness and a broad education, has issued instructions that so far as his particular company is concerned there shall be given out no advance publicity that will in any degree destroy the illusion of those who will later witness the showing of the completed production.

We can see from this distance that immediately William De Mille is in all probability starting an argument with whoever may be assigned to secure from him everything possible in the way of early information regarding any picture that is in process of photographing or finishing.

The distributor always is seeking material that will acquaint the exhibitor with pictures that are "on the fire." Advance news that will in any way increase interest in or inquiries from theatre owners means in the final analysis increased bookings when the print comes into the exchange. And that means money.

Whether uncovering "secrets of the trade" militates against the interest of the public is a disputed question. Mr. De Mille may be right, but if he cares to submit the question to the determination of twelve men selected by lot it will be well for him to keep the names of his company's exploitation department employes out of the wheel. For it's a pretty safe bet they will be "ag'in him."

Quickly Spiked

NEW YORK newspapers of August 7 and presumably those of the rest of the country printed a story under an Atlantic City date-line setting forth that beginning in September a substantial advance in admission prices for motion pictures might be expected.

The articles set forth that a flat rate of $2 would be charged in the Broadway motion picture houses—twelve of them, it was stated—and that the same prices would be charged at out-of-town houses controlled by the interests responsible for the increase.

To those with any knowledge of the situation the story carried its own refutation. Famous Players, through Harold B. Franklin, said the dispatches seemed to confuse special film presentations in so-called legitimate houses with regular presentations. There would be no advance in prices in the company's Broadway picture theatres, he said.

The officers and board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in session at the Ambassador Hotel in Atlantic City, issued a distinct and emphatic denial that admissions were to be increased.

Advance in admission prices is a question of grave importance to theatre men and to the industry. Those exhibitors who have gone on record as to their position in the matter seem to have been of one mind—with a single notable exception—that it cannot be done without affecting attendance.

The motion picture theatre owner is dependent upon volume business, the patronage of the mass. His clientele is a thing apart from that of the stage showhouse.

The picture man must have the crowd, and to make the crowd he must have not only father and mother on occasions of domestic celebrations but he must have father and mother at least once a week and with them must come the children. We are speaking of the everyday house, not the first run.

It may be possible for a theatre owner to increase his admission prices if he accompanies that action with a more elaborate program, one containing larger entertainment value.

This involves a question of greater overhead, a subject on which the average owner of a theatre has decided opinions and on which he will talk as a rule if permitted to indulge in profanity.

For the average house, however, it would seem to be out of the question unless it happen to be one of those theatres that has not been developed to its reasonable possibilities, where the showman up to that time has not made it a point to "go get 'em."

But the sure-enough showman is trying just as hard to sell his clients at 22 cents as he would at 33 cents. And if he can't sell them at the first it is unlikely he will on the second.

One Leech Put Away

OVER in England the authorities have convicted and sent to prison a man who has devoted a large part of his misdirected energy to taking money from motion picture men as well as from the outside public without giving anything in the way of service in return. He was just a thief.

Out of the West, Robert C. Bruce, the well-known producer of scenic subjects, has been put to a great deal of annoyance by reason of the activities of some one using a name similar to his and it is reliably asserted trading on the name and reputation of Mr. Bruce.

The foregoing is just one instance of the many that have taken place, and in which as a rule exhibitors are the chief sufferers.

Coming back from the North Carolina convention the writer fell in with a most companionable chap whose business is building stout jails. Incidentally he remarked that business in his line is good.

So there is hope that some of the leeches who have preyed upon the film industry may in time to come find a haven where their activities will be most effectively narrowed.

PHIL GLEICHMAN, president of the Broadway Strand Theatre Company of Detroit, says that business in his city has been better by far this summer than it was last. While there has been some hot weather the duration of the "spells" were short. Mr. Gleichman says he believes his town from the motion picture viewpoint is in better shape than any other in the country with the possible exception of Los Angeles.

"All the factories are working full tilt," said the Detroitier the other day when seen in the Warner offices; "the men are getting good wages and are spending some of their money on amusements.

"From what I have seen of the wonderful line-up of the different producers I think we are going to have a whale of a season. The producers have done themselves proud.

"Although I have not seen all the pictures that have so far been shown I believe already I have looked at more big pictures than were put out all last season."

Mr. Gleichman named nine good ones that seemed to substantiate his contention. But he certainly was enthusiastic.

HARRY CHARNAS, who when speaking to producers and distributors is accustomed to being accorded the respect usually given to four men, was equally as optimistic as Mr. Gleichman. Mr. Charnas, of course, talks for territories centering in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit.

"I never saw things look so good in my life," declared Harry. "I think the independent producers will come into their own this year. It is surely one fine outlook."

COMING down in the elevator at "1600" we bumped into Bobby North. In reply to an inquiry as to how everything was moving Bobby took us to one side in a way indicating the uncovering of a secret.

"I'll give you the low-down," said Bobby. "If you've a bad one you can't break down their doors to get in to talk about it. And if you have a real one you can't put stiff enough doors on your vaults to stop them from getting in and just taking it away."

LESTER SCOTT, who travels the U. S. A. from end to end and back again showing independent exchangers what Charlie Burr has made for the amusement of photoplay patrons, has canceled his visiting list for a fortnight. He has gone away on vacation. Our understanding is he has not gone to Canada. But of course you never can tell.

COLONEL VARNER, president of North Carolina Theatre Owners, has been obliged to defer a planned trip to New York. Word from Lexington is to the effect that North Carolina is getting along nicely and that the state organization is growing as never before.

Just Between Ourselves

JOSEPH C. REICHENBACH—yes, it is a brother—has opened general brokerage film offices in 723 Seventh avenue, just adjoining the film curb. He has been established nine weeks. "We've got to step a bit, you know, to keep up the family reputation. Get me?" said Joe as he introduced another brother, Howard. We did, the first time.

IN the office of Arrow the other day we again met Jane Thomas, charming and wholesome and altogether a fine type of the new screen player. Miss Thomas is making preparations for her departure for the coast on the 20th, where she will take up work for Elfeltd Productions. Exhibitors soon will have an opportunity to see a recent example of the work of this young woman—that is "Lost in a Big City," which will give a measure of her calibre. The player seems to possess what we'll take a chance in describing as an unbeatable quartet: Ability, charm, a cool head and good looks. Her friends expect her to go far.

CARL E. MILLIKEN, known always to his friends as "Governor" because of his service through several terms as chief executive of the Pine Tree State, was in the city last week on business.

Asked as to his production intentions the Governor said he was resting during the summer, having taken his family to the northern Maine woods, but that Pine Tree Pictures would begin active operations in the fall. The company has produced five pictures, three of which are on the velvet side and the two others are in smooth water.

"We have made some mistakes," said the governor, "but we don't intend to make those particular ones again."

AL LICHTMAN is off for a visit to four mid-west cities. Just before his departure he declared in a chat in his office there would be more big pictures on the market this fall than ever before.

"Here is the situation as I view it," said Mr. Lichtman. "In his desire to obtain the best product the exhibitor will buy any good picture, no matter who makes it, but the marketing methods on the part of the distributors are such that everybody is trying to sell a complete output before they or the exhibitors have had a chance to see the pictures.

"When a majority of the distributors go out and offer the exhibitor a bulk proposition under these circumstances the theatre owner will make a deal if he thinks he can strike a good average price and take a chance on the ability of the producer to deliver the goods.

"Such action precludes the possibility of dealing on absolute merit. The whole industry would be better off if exhibitors contracted only for pictures they were able to see and not beyond that period.

"The present method results in the exhibitor really buying more pictures than he needs when he buys in bulk, which will lead later to difficulty in obtaining playdates. In my opinion everybody would be better off if they waited until a picture's merit is established."

SCHMIDT RESIGNS FROM UNIVERSAL

E. J. Smith, of European M. P. Co., of London, Appointed in His Place

Art Schmidt, for the past two years General Sales Manager of the Universal Pictures Corporation, has resigned. Carl Lammle, Universal head, has appointed Edwin J. Smith, a former Universal executive, as the new general sales manager. For the past year and a half, Smith has been general manager of the European Motion Picture Company, Ltd., of London, distributors of the Universal product in the British Isles.

Schmidt has severed his connection with Universal in order to take over the active direction of a motion picture enterprise of his own. He is at present out of town for a few days, but it is understood he will make an announcement of his future plans shortly after his return.

Although in the film game less than six years, Smith has jumped from salesman to exchange manager, from exchange manager to division manager from division manager to sales manager of the London Corporation and now into the highest sales position in the Universal Corporation.

Smith is one of the youngest general sales managers ever to take the sales reins at the Universal home office, being yet in his thirties.

HODKINSON TO OFFER PURITAN PASSIONS

W. W. Hodkinson announces for release early in the fall a picturization of Percy MacKaye's "The Scarecrow" under the title of "Puritan Passions." The picture was produced by the Film Guild under the direction of Frank Tuttle. Glenn Hunter will be starred as Lord Ravensbane and in the support Mary Astor, Osgood Perkins, Maude Hill, Frank Tweek, Dwight Wiman and Thomas Chalmers will appear.

Percy MacKaye, the author, has just completed a lecture tour during which he lectured on the drama at universities in which "The Scarecrow" is one of the subjects of study in the dramatic courses. This play is one of the most successful MacKaye has written.

Two Preferred Pictures Well Received in England

"April Showers," a Preferred Picture featuring Colleen Moore and Kenneth Harlan, had its first trade showing in London, and was enthusiastically received by exhibitors. The greatest feature of the film is said to be the fighting bouts which incidentally bring into the limelight the intrigue associated with certain prize fights. The picture will be released October 21.

"The Hero" another Preferred Picture was also well received in England where it has been released under the title, "His Brother's Wife." The change of title was made because the famous American play from which the picture was adapted is not known in England.

MORENO ENDS SUIT

Antonio Moreno has dropped his suit for $129,000 against the Vitagraph Corporation and accepted a cash settlement of $22,500. Declaring the $129,000 money due to him for an unfilled contract, the star filed suit in January, 1922, after being discharged from the company.

It was stated at the time that the dispute between the star and Vitagraph arose over the fact that he was asked to play heavy roles, when he wanted to play leads. Moreno reported at the studio every day for several months and was paid although he was not permitted to perform.

ELMER HARRIS STARTS HIS NEXT PRODUCTION

Actual production work has started on "No More Women," an Associated Authors' feature for Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release. The picture has been titled definitely "No More Women," and is an original screen story by Elmer Harris, one of the trio of Associated Authors who will supervise the direction by Lloyd Ingraham. Matt Moore, Madge Bellamy, Cathleen Clifford, George Cooper, Stanhope Wheatcroft, H. Reeve-Smith are some of the prominent players in an all-star cast.

"No More Women" will be the third Associated Authors' feature for Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, the first being the Frank Woods "Richard, the Lion-Hearted," a screen version of Scott's "The Talisman," and the second the Thompson Buchanan production of "Loving Lies," a film story of Peter B. Kyne's famous sea story, "The Harbor Bar," which was just recently completed.

PREVIEW OF GOING UP

"Going Up," Associated Exhibitors' feature starring Douglas MacLean, was given a preview at the Writers' Club in Hollywood, recently, and was acclaimed to be the very best picture shown there. A few of those who saw the film are: Mrs. Leslie Carter, Wm. De Mille, Josephine Quirk, Theda Bara and her husband, Helen Rowland, Tom McNamara, May Allison, Chas. Brabin, Madge Bellamy, John B. Ritchie, Hope Loring, Louis D. Leighton, Clara Beranger and Zoe Beckley.

Covered Wagon at Pavillion

E. E. Shauer, director of the Foreign department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation stated that arrangements had been completed for the opening of "The Covered Wagon" at the Pavillion Theatre in London early in September. John C. Flinn of the New York Paramount office, who has supervised the picture's openings in New York, Chicago and Boston sailed for London to supervise the exhibition.

Open Cincinnati Branch

Under the management of William Bein, a new United Artists Corporation branch office has been opened at No. 503 Broadway, Film Building, Cincinnati, Ohio. The branch will be under direct supervision of Maurice Safer, head of the Cleveland office.

Mr. Bein is one of the youngest branch managers in the industry and has worked his way up in the Ohio territory from a job as shipping clerk.

To Choose Beautiful Girls

Waldemar Young, screen writer on the staff of Preferred Pictures has been appointed to head a committee to discover Hollywood's twelve most beautiful girls among those playing extra parts or minor roles. Mr. Young is President of the Screen Writers' Guild. He will be assisted in his work by Joseph Jackson, President of the Wampas and Phil Rosen, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Director's Association.

The Huntress Completed

Production was completed this week on "The Huntress," a First National Picture, featuring Colleen Moore in a film version of Hulbert Footner's story of the same title. It was directed by Lynn Reynolds.

SCARAMOUCHE ON STAGE AND SCREEN

Ingram Film and Spoken Version to Run Simultaneously In New York

At the same time that the Rex Ingram film version of "Scaramouche" will have its premiere at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre New York, there will also be a stage presentation of the Rafael Sabatini romance. It is expected the two premieres will react favorably upon each other.

Ramon Novarro has the title role in the Ingram production. Sydney Blackmer will enact it in the stage version, which will be presented by Charles L. Wagner, from whom Metro secured the film rights.

As "Scaramouche" progresses through the cutting and titling stages, the belief is more and more expressed by Metro officials that this Rex Ingram production will be a sensation of the year. This opinion is based upon the fact that the Sabatini romance of the French Revolution has more inherent drama and "punch" packed in it than any store material previously used by Rex Ingram.

Star and President of Ritz Heavily Insured

Insurance in the name of the Ritz-Carlton Pictures, Inc., has been taken out on the lives of Rudolph Valentino, first Ritz star, and Mr. J. D. Williams, President of Ritz Pictures, in the sum of one million dollars for Mr. Valentino and $500,000 for Mr. Williams.

Mr. Williams is a great believer in insurance. He stated: "When I say I am a believer of insurance I mean in several kinds. We insure a good picture production by assembling the right sort of organization units, we insure the exhibitor by providing great pictures and we insure our own business future by the square deal policy which is part and parcel of the Ritz organization."

PATHE'S RECORD BREAKING NEWS REEL "SCOOP"

By an unexampled feat combining foresight and coordination of all departments, Pathe News enabled all theatres in eastern cities to screen Harding's death and funeral train scenes filmed as far east as Omaha, at their Tuesday shows.

Negatives rushed from Omaha by special airplane service were developed and printed at the Pathe New Jersey City factory late Monday night and prints delivered to New York theatres at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning. Other prints reached Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Boston by noon of the same day.

Pathe News claims for this feat credit for the biggest news reel service "scoop" in the history of camera news reporting. It was accomplished by means of swift airplanes which out-distanced the fast air-mail service.

Not only theatres in the eastern cities, but throughout the middle west as far as Chicago, gained at least 24 hours in their presentation of the all-absorbing news event of the week.

THEATRE OWNERS GATHER BY SEA

National Board and Regional Association Meets in Atlantic City

Two exhibitor bodies, one regional and the other national, convened in Atlantic City, N. J., Monday. The meeting of the Executive Board of the M. P. T. O. of America, with President Sydney S. Cohen presiding, was held at the Ambassador Hotel.

The M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware took place at the St. Charles with H. J. Schad, of Reading, president of the organization, in the chair.

Both organizations prepared the way for a drive to eliminate the 10 per cent. amusement tax. A report in New York and Philadelphia dailies on Tuesday to the effect that efforts were made by the theatre men to increase admissions in all picture houses, drew emphatic denials from both conventions the following day. Also both passed resolutions deploring the loss sustained by the country in the death of the president.

National Board Meets.

The executive board of the national exhibitor body brought together thirty-five theatre owners from various parts of the country.

Wednesday's session brought an emphatic denial that theatre admissions were to be increased as stated in newspapers Tuesday.

Monday, November 19, was unanimously designated as national motion picture day for the purpose of further advancing and dignifying the motion picture business generally.

The theatre owners of Canada sent a personal representative to the meeting and applied for a charter which was authorized and arrangements made for the officers to attend a convention to be held in Canada in September to present the charter.

A nation wide campaign was inaugurated for the purpose of eliminating the admission taxes now being paid by the American public.

Action was also taken on the death of President Harding, and resolutions passed deploring the loss to the Nation and the people generally. A committee of twenty-five Ohio theatre owners was named to attend the funeral of the late president at Marion, Ohio, Friday.

Theatre insurance was taken up next and a line of activity projected by which the regular insurance rates in certain sections of the country were reduced.

A committee with power to act was appointed for the purpose of making it effective throughout the country.

A committee was appointed to confer with Goldwyn Cosmopolitan Corporation to secure all theatre owners the pictures "Little Old New York" and "Enemies of Women" contracted through Famous Players-Lasky.

As a tribute of respect to the late President, the following resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED, by the officers and board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in session assembled at the Ambassador Hotel in Atlantic City, August 7, 1923. That we deeply deplore the death of our beloved President, Warren Gamaliel Harding, realizing that in his death the American Nation lost a true, upright and conscientious chief executive, the people generally a noble, honorable and self effacing fellow-citizen whose highest purpose and great desire was to be of the greatest possible service to his fellow countrymen and women, no matter how great the personal sacrifice and in the pursuit of these purposes he did give up his life.

RESOLVED, That we join all other divisions of the theatrical business and our fellow citizens generally in the nation in the general mourning occasioned by his death and in memory of his accomplishments in this relation utilizing the theatre in the advancement of government enterprise, we rededicate ourselves and the use of our theatre screen to the service of this great nation to which he gave the most valued years of his life and recommend that as tribute of special respect to the memory of our late president that all motion picture theatres in the United States be closed during the afternoon of Friday, August 10, 1923, the date of the funeral in the late president's home city of Marion, Ohio, or in conformity with such local memorial services as may be arranged.

RESOLVED, That we further recommend that the theatre owners tender the use of their theatres to the Mayor or other executive officers of their cities or town or to a committee of clergymen or other citizens for the purpose of holding public memorial services during the afternoon of the funeral.

The Resolution was signed by the entire board of directors.

Theatre Observes Mourning Services

A hearty response on the part of theatre owners in the city and State of New York, greeted the notices urging special observances of the period of mourning Friday, issued by President William Brandt of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, of New York State and Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, the New York City organization.

Legion Joins Movement

Taking advantage of the offer made by President William Brandt of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, Major Albert F. Callam, Commander of the American Legion in New York State instructed approximately one thousand legion posts to hold public memorial services on Friday, in the motion picture theatres which were closed by their owners, out of respect to the late President Harding. In every village, town and small city throughout New York state the motion picture theatre under the auspices of the American Legion in conducting these services showed its grief and affection for the late President.

It was planned to have the local American Legion post parade and then in co-operation with the local exhibitor give first an organ recital then the hymn "Nearer My God to Thee," sung by the school children and a eulogy by the mayor, local congressman or some other prominent person.

Memorial Service at Rialto

Special memorial services under the auspices of the Motion Picture Industry in memory of the late President, were held at the Rialto Theatre, Broadway and 42nd Street, at 1 P. M., Friday.

An elaborate musical program appropriate to the occasion was given under the supervision of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld.

Sophie Braslau, the operatic star, sang Gounod's "Ave Maria." The principal address was made by Senator James J. Walker.

Changes in Sales Force

The Sales Department of the Selznick New York Exchange announces that Irving Gamber will succeed Anthony Ricci, resigned, in the Jersey territory. Seymour Schussel has been made assistant to Mr. Adler and J. D. Jameson will have the South Brooklyn territory formerly handled by Mr. Schussel.

CARR & SCHAD GET TWO MORE HOUSES

Reading Motion Picture Concern Acquire the Capitol and Colonial

Carr & Schad, Inc., one of the successful motion picture enterprises in the country, and which has previously devoted its efforts exclusively to Reading, Pa., closed an important deal with the Penn Steitz Amusement Co., of Lebanon, Pa., whereby Carr & Schad, Inc., will take over the Capitol and Colonial theatres of that city. The Lebanon theatres will pass under the personal management and direction of Carr & Schad, Inc., about Sept. 1.

The Capitol, located on Cumberland street, has a capacity of 800. The Colonial, at the corner of Ninth and Cumberland streets, now being completed, has a seating capacity of 1,800.

The announcement of the transaction was authorized by H. J. Schad, president of Carr & Schad, Inc., at his office at the Colonial Theatre.

The Carr & Schad, Inc., chain of theatres embraces the Colonial, Arcadia, Lyric, Princess, Strand, San Toy and Schuylkill Avenue theatres in Reading, and the Capitol and Colonial in Lebanon.

THREE FEATURES IN WORK AT WARNERS

The Warner Brothers' Studio is now abuzz with activity, according to reports from Jack Warner, Production Manager, as elaborate preparations are being made for the immediate production of "Lucretia Lombard," "How to Educate a Wife" and "Daddies."

The Harry Rapf production of "Lucretia Lombard" will probably be the first to get under way. Sets are already completed for this story by Kathleen Norris. Monte Blue and Irene Rich will star, and Marc McDermott will appear prominently.

"How to Educate a Wife" by Elinor Glyn, is also nearly ready for the cameras.

It is planned to make this an elaborate production, with plenty of lavish and glamorous sets and beautiful clothes. William A. Seiter will direct.

Mae Marsh will make her bow as a star under the Warner banner under Harry Blaumonts direction in "Daddies," a Belasco production from the play of the same name by John Hobbles. Claude Gillingwater has been signed up for an important role in this play.

Stallings Joins Mayer Staff

Charles P. Stallings, formerly production manager for over two years at Universal City, has been appointed in a similar capacity at the Louis B. Mayer Studios where he will be in charge of all stage preparations for the John M. Stahl and Reginald Barker Productions. While at Universal, Mr. Stallings handled the making of over fifty productions, finishing with "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Wide Advertising for Preferred

The national advertising campaign prepared by Preferred Pictures on the Preferred Fifteen scheduled for release next season will reach fifteen million people, it is estimated, through the mediums of the Saturday Evening Post, Photoplay Magazine, Motion Picture Classic and Picture-play. Each advertisement will list all the Preferred Pictures. There will be one advertisement a month in each of the five publications.

Gossip

Conway Tearle and Corinne Griffith will have the principal parts in "Black Oxen," Frank Lloyd's initial production for First National.

"Zaza," has been completed at the Paramount Long Island Studio. In the character of Zaza, Gloria Swanson is said to rise to the heights of dramatic acting.

The title for William de Mille's latest Paramount production has been definitely changed from "Spring Magic" to "The Marriage Maker." Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt are featured.

Thomas Meighan's supporting cast for Paramount's "Woman-Proof" includes the following: Lila Lee, John Sainpolis, Louise Dresser, Robert Agnew, Mary Astor, Edgar Norton, Charles A. Sellon, George O'Brien, Vera Reynolds, Hardee Kirkland, Martha Maddox and "Bill" Gonder.

In "Stephen Steps Out," Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.'s first starring picture, Theodore Roberts is featured with the young player. The supporting cast includes Noah Beery, Harry Myers, Frank Currier and Bertram Johns.

Cecil B. De Mille and a number of featured players in Paramount's "The Ten Commandments" have returned from San Francisco where important scenes in the modern story were filmed on the structural work of a church now being built.

Paramount's "Ruggles of Red Gap" has been completed. Edward Horton, Ernest Torrence, Lois Wilson, Fritzi Ridgeway, Charles Ogle and Louis Dresser are featured.

After more than a year's absence from the screen, Regina Quinn will return in Paramount's "His Children's Children."

Zazu Pitts and Anne Schaefer have been added to the cast of Glenn Hunter's first Paramount picture, "West of the Water Tower."

Richard Thorpe will play opposite Constance Binney in her first starring feature for C. C. Burr, to be released by Associated Exhibitors.

The August 12 offering of Associated Exhibitors is "Harbor Lights," a melodrama taken from the stage success of the same name by George R. Sims and Henry Pettitt.

Doris May has been engaged to play opposite Johnny Hines in his second Warner picture, tentatively titled "Conductor 1492." Dan Mason, creator of the role of the Skipper of "Toonerville Trolley" fame, will have an important part in this picture.

"George Washington, Jr.," the George M. Cohan stage success in which Wesley Barry will star for Warner Brothers, will present a lot of well known screen personalities in support of the star. Gertrude Olmstead, Leon Barry, Charles Conklin, Otis Harlan, Edward Phillips and William Courtwright, are the players so far selected. Mal St. Clair will direct the picture.

Marc McDermott, one of the screen's veteran actors, left New York for Los Angeles, where he will play an important role in "Lucretia Lombard," which Harry Rapf is making for Warner Brothers distribution.

Winifred Dunn, Metro's scenarist, is preparing scripts for "The Eagle's Feather" and "Held to Answer." The cast of the former includes James Kirkwood, Mary Alden, Rosemary Theby, Lester Cuneo, Elinor Fair, George Seigman, Crawford Kent, John Elliott, Charles McHugh, Wm. Orlamond and Jim Wang. House Peters is featured in "Held to Answer." In his supporting cast are Grace Carlyle, John Sainpolis, Evelyn Brent, James Morrison, Lydia Knott, Bull Montana, Gale Henry, Thomas Guyse, Robert Daly, Charles West and Charles Mailes.

A big set in Mae Murray's forthcoming

Metro photoplay, "Fashion Row," shows Broadway at night. While in New York recently, Miss Murray was filmed in some Broadway exteriors. A reproduction of the night scene was built in a Hollywood studio.

Viola Dana will enact the role of a little Apache in her third Metro vehicle "In Search of a Thrill."

After an absence of several months, Arthur Bernstein has rejoined Jackie Coogan Productions as production manager.

Malcolm McGregor, in addition to being an intercollegiate swimming champion, a first class boxer and a capable leading man has undertaken to show his skill as a dancing master by teaching a number of extras some steps for Viola Dana's Metro picture, "The Social Code."

The continuity of "Pleasure Mad" a Reginal Barker production for Metro release, is being prepared by A. P. (Billy) Younger. The cast will include Huntly Gordon, Mary Alden, Norma Shearer, Winifred Bryson, Wm. Collier, Jr., and Joan Standing.

July 25 Paramount started production on "Woman-Proof." This is adapted from an original story by George Ade, the American humorist. Thomas Meighan is starred.

Robert T. Kane, general manager of production for Famous Players-Lasky, sailed for Europe on Saturday, August 4. He will visit London, Paris and Southern France and will be gone about six weeks.

CALLS HALT ON PUBLICITY MATTER

William De Mille Stops Stories Which Tend to Reveal Secrets

Declaring that realism is one of the greatest factors in motion pictures as entertainment, William De Mille has issued an order to his publicity representative requesting an immediate and perpetual halt on all stories and photographs tending to destroy illusion in photodramas.

At the same time this producer of Paramount pictures appealed to the publicity departments of the entire industry to cease broadcasting art or stories which call attention to methods employed in the production of motion pictures.

Mr. De Mille's action came as a result of two letters from admirers of his pictures. Both stated that much of the pleasure to be found in photoplays was taken away because they had read stories giving away the "behind-scenes" means employed to get certain effects.

The De Mille order prohibiting such photographs and stories takes effect on his current production, "Spring Magic," Clara Beranger's adaptation of "The Faun," Edward Knoblock's stage success, and on all future William De Mille productions.

UNHAPPY ENDING FOR NEW TOURNEUR PLAY

Ever a foe of the unreal, Maurice Tourneur will close "Jealous Fools" with an unhappy ending.

"I shall see now whether the declaration that the public demands the conventional, bromidic climax for a fade-out is true," said Mr. Tourneur.

The picture which is now in the making at the United Studios for First National release, runs true to life's realities, for it has a little sadness, a little gladness, much misunderstanding and a touch or two of gaiety for the lives of its characters.

It ends with the reunion of husband, wife and son, who have been separated by a misunderstanding, and closes with the death of the son's chum, victim of his love for the family.

U. B. O. BOOKS UNIVERSAL JEWELS

Entire Half-Year's Product Contracted for New York Territory

Universal's outlook in the metropolitan territory for the coming season is almost double what it was last year. The United Booking Offices have booked the entire Universal Jewel output for the coming seven months—eleven Jewels, including "Merry Go Round."

The booking of the U. B. O. on "Merry Go Round" alone is for 81 days' showing. It will appear in the Keith, Moss and Proctor houses shortly after the completion of its run at the Central Theatre.

The eleven features contracted for include, besides "Merry Go Round," "A Chapter in Her Life," "A Lady of Quality," "The Spice of Life," "Drifting," "Morality," "Thundering Dawn," "The Man About Town," "The Acquittal," "Beauty at Bay," and "White Tiger."

REWARDED FOR THEIR TIME AND PATIENCE

A sea picture is the most difficult type to produce, according to Thomas Meighan, Paramount star, who has just completed "Homeward Bound." The principal reason is because most of the dramatic moments in the story are tied up with storms and the sea is as uncertain as women.

Mr. Meighan and a company of players spent five weeks in New London, Conn., filming scenes on the Thames river and on the ocean, but in all that time there was not sufficient rough weather for the storm scenes. It was necessary for the company to spend a week off Seagate, N. Y., before the proper weather conditions prevailed.

The company was rewarded for the time and patience it took to make these scenes. When the sea did oblige the cameraman she did it in magnificent style, sending huge waves over the bow of the schooner.

H. B. Crooker With Warners

Warner Brothers announce an addition to their publicity staff in Herbert Crooker, formerly with Pathe, where he served in the publicity department for four years.

Before joining Pathe, Mr. Crooker was associated with numerous motion picture concerns. He was on the New York Globe editorial staff, worked with the Triangle Film Corporation and after his discharge from the United States Navy did theatrical publicity for Charles B. Dillingham. He is a contributor to many periodicals and has composed songs to publicize feature pictures.

Crosland to Direct Glyn Play

Alan Crosland director of "Enemies of Women," has been selected to direct Goldwyn's "Three Weeks" from the novel by Elinor Glyn.

Mr. Crosland is a former newspaper man, and has been stage manager of Shakespeare productions and acted in juvenile roles. He began his career as a director at the age of twenty-one.

Early Release Scheduled

Selznick's melodrama "Wife In Name Only" is scheduled for early fall release. The cast includes Edmund Lowe, Florence Dixon, Mary Thurman, Arthur Housman, Tyrone Power, Edna May Spooner, Ora May Jones and William H. Tooker.

TASK OF FINDING FUTURE LOCATIONS

Open Spaces Once So Common on Coast Becoming Alarm- ingly Few

Where will the "location" for big feature productions of the future to be found?

With the tendency of film production running toward the elaborate, location hunters for Los Angeles producers have found that the big open spaces once so common in and about the city are becoming alarmingly few.

The location question has been raised through the difficulties that arose during the filming of B. P. Schulberg's picturization of "The Virginian," which required a reproduction of the town of Casper, Wyoming, just as it looked when Owen Wister first visited it to write his epic of the West. A conscientious effort to actually reproduce the proper atmosphere called for rolling country that was absolutely free from dwellings or even shrubbery.

Los Angeles real estate boosters, however, had made this practically impossible. Open spaces that are not already being converted into subdivisions are so nearly ready for such improvements that no real estate man would permit it to revert to days of "The Virginian" for even a short time.

Six weeks search throughout Southern California finally revealed just the variety of site needed on the outskirts of the town of Alhambra. A part of a tract of two hundred and forty acres of clear, rolling land was acquired for a period of one year.

The longest street built on it is one thousand feet from end to end. It includes two side open saloons, rooming houses and livery stables.

Director Tom Forman has begun shooting his exterior scenes on the street with a complete population of cowboys, bar tenders, gamblers and other essentials of a Western town.

"This has solved the 'location' problem for us temporarily, but there is no denying that it is getting to be a serious one," said Mr. Schulberg.

WOODY APPOINTED GENERAL MANAGER

Arthur S. Kane, last week confirmed the appointment of John S. Woody to the post of General Manager of Associated Exhibitors. This renews a business alliance dating back to the O. T. Crawford Organization in 1908 when Mr. Kane was general manager and Mr. Woody was in the sales rank.

"Jack" Woody passed through the grades of salesman, branch manager and district manager. He was General Sales Manager of Select Pictures Corporation, 1918-19 and Manager of Selznick Pictures Corporation, 1922-23.

In connection with the appointment, Mr. Woody said, "I am mighty enthusiastic over the outlook of Associated Exhibitors. I am gratified to be again in close association with Arthur S. Kane and I look upon this new affiliation as my big opportunity."

Mr. Kane stated that Mr. Woody is "a man of judgment and vision both as a sales executive and business administrator."

Grey Story Filmed in the Great Open Spaces

Filmed in the least civilized spot in the United States and telling the story of a grim war among cattlemen which had remained secret for nearly forty years, "To the Last Man" Paramount picture made from Zane Grey's story is said to be one of the most dramatic western stories ever screened. Director Victor Fleming took his company to a location 200 miles from a railway station. Some of the scenes were filmed at the edge of the "Rim," a rocky promontory rising 1500 feet above the valley. The whole face of the "Rim" was blown away with 35 pounds of dynamite.

The featured players are Richard Dix, Lois Wilson, Noah Beery, Frank Campeau and Hobart Edeson.

MANY NOTABLES ATTEND OPENING

The New Cosmopolitan Theatre Scene of Wonderful Reception

"Little Old New York," starring Marion Davies, which opened the new Cosmopolitan Theatre on Columbus Circle last week, received one of the greatest receptions ever accorded a photoplay on Broadway by the smartest audience ever assembled for a premiere, and, following its opening, was unanimously hailed by critics of the metropolitan dailies as one of the foremost pictures of history. In praising the picture itself, unstinted praise was heaped on the star and the rare excellence of her work and also on the beautiful new theatre in which the picture is framed.

Universal Buys Underworld

Story for Herbert Rawlinson

"Clay of Ca'lina," a recent popular Saturday Evening Post serial by Calvin Johnston, has been purchased by Universal for Herbert Rawlinson. It is an underworld story, in which an unsophisticated Southern boy gets mixed up with a trio of New York crooks.

This feature will be put into production as soon as the Universal City scenarists can put it into screen form. The strength of the story and the probability of its success as a picture have induced Universal executives to schedule it for release late in the fall, so it will be available to exhibitors during the holiday slow-up.

Production Started

Production has been started on "The Leavenworth Case," Vitagraph's dramatization of Anna Katherine Green's mystery story. The cast will be headed by Seena Owen, Martha Mansfield, Wilfred Lytell, Bradley Barker and Paul Doucet.

Dickens Story Coming

"The Cricket on the Hearth," Paul Gerson's screen adaptation of Charles Dickens' immortal story, will shortly be released by Selznick. The story which depicts English rural life, has been strictly adhered to. Josef Swickard, Fritz Ridgeway and Virginia Brown Faire play the principal roles.

Prisoners See Daring Years

"The Daring Years," the latest Daniel Carson Goodman special, distributed by Equity Pictures Corporation, was shown to the inmates of Sing Sing Prison and was enthusiastically received.

New Borzage Film Arrives

Arthur H. Jacobs, who is presenting Frank Borzage productions through First National, arrived in New York last week with a print of "The Age of Desire," a screen adaptation of the Dixie Wilson novel.

ORGANIZE TEN ROAD COMPANIES

Will Start Tour of the Covered Wagon August 15—Film Breaking Records

Ten road companies were organized for the presentation of James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon." They will be started on tours of the leading cities of the country about August 15. Full orchestras of from twenty to twenty-five pieces are now being selected and assembled one to accompany each print on tour and the road itineraries for the companies have been laid out for practically the entire season of 1923-24.

Meanwhile, the indefinite runs of the picture in New York, Hollywood, Chicago and Boston show no diminishing of popularity and every indication points to long-run engagements in those cities. At the Criterion in New York the picture is now in its nineteenth week, having eclipsed all records for the house in both length of run and receipts.

At Grauman's Hollywood Theatre, in Hollywood, it is now playing its fifteenth week. According to Sid Grauman, the picture is a fixture there until the first of next year at least.

At the Woods Theatre in Chicago, where the picture is now in its thirteenth week, and at the Majestic in Boston, where it is playing its ninth week, the heat of the summer has caused no abatement of popular interest.

NEW STUDIO OPENS

San Diego has its first large workable motion picture studio. There have been other studios there at various times, but the very first complete plant was dedicated recently by Arthur S. Sawyer on a twenty-acre valley site at Grossmont, just outside the city.

Stage No. 1, a 256x90 foot structure, was put in operation with appropriate ceremonies and is one of the largest in California. It is the first of three to be constructed at the plant and cost $125,000. Two cement tanks, twenty-three dressing rooms, a carpenter shop, small laboratory and cutting and projection rooms are part of the building.

Film officials and stars from Hollywood attended the opening which was featured by a dance. The first producer to use the studio will be Bert Lubin, brother of Sawyer's partner, Herbert Lubin, who is to start soon on a Zane Grey story.

BLACKTON PROGRESSING

J. Stuart Blackton is making rapid progress with Vitagraph's "On the Banks of the Wabash." The all star cast is headed by Mary Carr, Burr McIntosh, James Morrison, Lumsden Hare, Mary MacLaren and Madge Evans.

The exteriors will be taken on Long Island where a special set is being constructed.

The story is laid in a little village on the Wabash river where Paul Dresser, the writer and composer of the song, was born.

Start Dust of Desire

Preparations are under way at the Joseph M. Schenck quarters of the United Studios, for the filming of Norma Talmadge's next starring vehicle, "Dust of Desire," which First National will release.

"Dust of Desire" will be rehearsed the same as a stage drama before filming is started by Directors Frances Marion and Chester Franklin. Norma Talmadge will play an Arabian dancing girl.

Looking Ahead In Hollywood

By Will C. Murphey

Rex Ingram is busy cutting "Scaramouche," and upon its completion will go to New York with Alice Terry. From there he will flit to Europe where he expects to make "The World's Illusions." Before leaving this country, however, he will make a five-reeler in the east from a story by a young Spanish writer. It is understood Ramon Novarro will make one more picture with Ingram, probably the one to be produced in Europe.

Hal Roach has signed Blanche Mehaffey, Follies beauty, as leading woman for his comedies. Roach saw the girl in the Follies, and was struck with her screen possibilities. She never has appeared before a camera, but is twenty-years-old, red headed and Irish, all of which helps. She will be featured in two reels.

Word has been received from Betty Blythe that she is just finishing "Chu Chin Cow" on Berlin, and expects to make another picture for the Graham Wilcox Productions of London before returning home in the fall. The new picture will take her to Algiers and Austria.

Ben Conlon, who has been in Hollywood for sometime left for home this week accompanied by George Hackathorne. That actor will make personal appearances in connection with the showing of "Merry-Go-Round."

Dorothy Phillips is considering two offers to make pictures in Europe from producers over there. She says she will have to decide pretty soon, and if she concludes not to go abroad, will remain in Hollywood and make a production here.

Victor Fleming, director, and Zane Grey, novelist, whose "The Call of the Canyon" is to be done by Lasky, are off on a hunting trip in Arizona during which they will map out the production, and will start work at the Lasky lot as soon as they return.

Belasco Productions, formerly located in San Francisco, has brought its production equipment to this city where its future film making activity will be confined. An all-star cast is to be assembled and work on a new production started in two weeks.

Viola Dana's next production for Metro will be a Parisian story called "The Spirit of the Rose." Oscar Apfel will direct. Plenty of underworld and Apache stuff is promised, and it will be a new type for the Metro star.

Arthur Kelly, assistant business manager of First National's own production unit at the United Studios, has tendered his resignation in order to become Charles Chaplin's personal representative.

Zena Keefe came out to the coast quite recently and was here no time before she was engaged for the lead in "The Heart of the Range." This is Miss Keefe's first picture experience in California.

Tyrone Power has just completed "The Pilot" an independent production, which is to have an early release.

Guy Russell, formerly of "Maytime" and other musical comedies, dropped into town this week and has two picture offers. He says he may abandon the stage if he likes the work.

Captain M. McKenzie has completed four short features for educational release. They are "The Land of the Everlasting Snow,"

"From Forest to Mill," "The Land of Burned Out Fires" and "Modern Whaling." They are four of twenty-five to be made for Balmac Educational Film Company.

A three year contract to play opposite Harold Lloyd in his feature comedies was signed this week by Jobyna Ralston, nineteen years old, and one of the screen's outstanding beauties. The contract was given to the young woman as the result of her work in "Why Worry," Lloyd's newest six-reel feature. Miss Ralston is recently of the stage, playing in musical comedy.

Mildred Harris, former wife of Charles Chaplin, is to wed again. Miss Harris confirmed the report this week, but refused to give out the name of her husband to be. She says he is an eastern capitalist and will arrive here in September when their plans will be announced.

Herbert Grimwood received a wire this week from Inspiration Pictures, New York, offering him the role of Savanarola in Geo. Elliott's "Romola" in which Lillian Gish will be starred. He is playing the part of Christ in "The Pilgrimage Play" here, but will close Saturday night and leave for New York on Monday.

WARNERS GET MORE PARAMOUNT RUNS

Texas Houses Added to List Booked for Forthcoming Independent Product

Following the announcement that Paramount theatres have booked the next year's product from the Warner Brothers, including first run showing at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York and houses in the Paramount chain in the South, comes the news that additional Paramount theatres have made reservations and bookings for the coming output.

For the Texas territory, W. G. Underwood, President of the Specialty Film Company, consummated the deal to place the Warner product in Paramount houses. L. Berman, President of the Independent Film Corporation in Philadelphia, succeeded in booking the forthcoming Warner features with the Stanley Circuit. "Main Street" will be the first of the Warner features to be shown.

The Warner officials attach considerable significance to these important negotiations with Paramount, as proof that the independent field is gaining the high recognition it deserves.

NOVEL SELECTED FOR BARTHELMESS

Star Will Have Modern Setting in Screen Version of Wild Apples

"Wild Apples," a novel by Grace MacGowan Cooke and Alice MacGowan, has been selected for the next Richard Barthelmess picture to be produced by Inspiration Pictures under the direction of John S. Robertson, for First National release. This production will follow "The Fighting Blade" which Barthelmess has just completed and which has been scheduled by First National for October release.

This new story, unlike "The Bright Shawl" and "The Fighting Blade" will take Barthelmess out of costume into a modern setting. Dorothy Mackaill, who has completed the leading feminine role in "The Fighting Blade," has been selected by Mr. Robertson to play an important part in "Wild Apples."

Production will start at the Fort Lee studio within the next two weeks. The story has already been published in novel form. It concerns the struggles of a young man brought up under circumstances calculated to make him a genuine snob, but who finds himself and achieves his goal.

CAREWE TO COME EAST WITH THE BAD MAN

With only a few more scenes to be taken Edwin Carewe who had been directing First National's "The Bad Man," for the past ten weeks, expects to be finished within the next seven days. Immediately after the concluding scenes are taken Carewe will pack up the negative and master film and leave for New York City.

Holbrook Blinn, the original "bad man" of both stage and film, has been finished with his part for some time and is now in New York City. Because his presence was demanded there, all his scenes were finished first. Carewe and the other members of his company have returned from Victorville where the concluding exterior scenes of the production were taken.

It is said that with the exception of a short prologue, which he found absolutely necessary, Carewe has produced "The Bad Man," exactly as it was written by Porter Emerson Browne as a stage play.

Tourneur Starts Production

Maurice Tourneur has started production of M. C. Levee's "Jealous Fools," a First National release. Earle Williams will play the husband and Jane Novak, the wife, around whom the plot revolves. Bennie Alexander and Carmelita Geraghty have been added to the cast.

Midnight Alarm Booked for Rivoli

Dr. Hugh Riesenfeld, Director General of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres in New York City has booked Vitagraph's special Production "The Midnight Alarm" for the Rivoli Theatre beginning with Sunday, August 19.

ROBERTSON-COLE STUDIOS CHANGES TO POWERS

The Film Booking Offices announce that the official name of their studios in Los Angeles, on Gower street, will no longer be known as the R-C Studios, but will be known as the Powers Studios.

PYRAMID PICTURES ISSUES STATMENT

President Smallwood Says Company Will Not Contest Action of Attorney General

The action of the Attorney General of New York in applying for an injunction to restrain Pyramid Pictures, Inc., from the sale of its proposed $2,000,000 issue of 8% participating bonds in the State of New York, will not be contested by this company and no Pyramid securities of any kind will be offered for sale.

"Our company has completed six productions up to the present time," said Mr. Smallwood, President of Pyramid, "representing a production cost of about $750,000, five of which have been released through American Releasing and the sixth is ready and will go out through the Selznick Distributing Corporation.

"The failure of the American Releasing Corporation to secure returns on our pictures in keeping with their commercial value was a principal factor in causing our company to offer to retire syndicate shares on individual productions for bonds, offering a participating in all profits to be made on the company's future activities, as well as sharing in the returns on pictures already made. This action was taken for the protection of Pyramid investors.

"Over 50% of the company's syndicate shares were converted into bonds prior to the issuance of the injunction. This Pyramid bond is in reality a profit sharing certificate offering the holder an equal share of all earnings with the company's shareholders and guaranteeing 8% interest. The security was made in the form of a bond in order that the holders might be secured by a first mortgage on all present and future assets of the company.

"Pyramid Pictures, Inc., has a number of new productions in preparation and expects to continue indefinitely to make pictures. The fact that our company loaned the American Releasing a sum of money in excess of $100,000 and that company owes us an additional sum nearly equal in amount for film rentals has not shaken Pyramid's solvency.

"Pyramid capital stock has been very closely held since the organization of the company. Less than 8,000 shares out of a total authorized issue of 200,000 shares are held by the general public. Since the resignation of Walter E. Greene as president of Pyramid in May and the return of his stockholdings to the treasury of the company, about 90% of the company's outstanding capitalization is owned by Smallwood & Co. These shares are not and will not be offered for sale."

TIGER ROSE COMPANY BACK FROM LOCATION

After working on location in Yosemite Valley, Lenore Ulric has returned to the Warner Studios to film interior scenes for the Belasco production, "Tiger Rose."

Forrest Stanley plays the leading masculine role opposite Miss Ulric and in other important roles Claude Gillingwater, Joseph Dowling, Andre de Beranger, Sam de Grasse and Theodore Von Eltz will appear. The photoplay is being filmed under the direction of Sidney Franklin.

HAYAKAWA SUES R.-C.

Hollywood—Alleging breach of contract, Sessue Hayakawa, has brought suit against Robertson-Cole Pictures Corporation for $92,000. The complaint has been on file for some time, but was not made public because it was an attachment suit.

ALL PARAMOUNT OFFICES CLOSED LAST FRIDAY

Out of respect to the memory of President Harding, all of the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation throughout the world were closed Friday, Aug 10, the day of mourning set aside by President Coolidge.

Not only were the Company's offices closed, but all theatres controlled by Famous Players also observed the day by closing from one to five in the afternoon.

Hayakawa alleges he made an agreement with Robertson-Cole July 15, 1921, whereby he was to star in a series of productions calling for, at least, four pictures a year. For this, he says, he was to receive $20,000 for each picture. After two pictures had been produced, he alleges, the company paid $40,000 to him and terminated the contract.

The company filed an answer to the charge asserting that the star was not entitled to receive any further money under the contract. The case came up in Superior Court, Hollywood, Calif., but was stricken from the calendar to be heard at a later date.

MERRY-GO-ROUND'S WEST COAST PREMIER

The western premier of "Merry-Go-Round," with Mary Philbin and an all-star cast, took place at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, and was a triumph for Universal. All of the local papers spoke of it as a picture packed with entertainment, and gave to Miss Philbin a full meed of praise for her splendid work. In fact all of the cast came in for commendation for its splendid uniform performance, and laudatory comment was handed to Rupert Julian for his exceptional handling of the story.

The premier was put on at a special performance and the Mission was packed at $3 and $5. Stars of Universal were present and introduced by Mr. Julian. Universal Exchange here had charge of the presentation and had the street in front of the theatre flooded with arc lights.

Hepworth's New York Office

The New York offices of the newly organized Hepworth Distributing Corporation have been opened in the Loew State Theatre Building, 1540 Broadway.

The Los Angeles offices are in the A. G. Bartlett Building, while the London quarters remain at 2 Denman Street, Piccadilly Circus.

TOM KENNEDY JOINS ROACH STUDIOS

Tom Kennedy is leaving the Atlantic Coast and Exhibitors Trade Review to join the forces of Hal Roach in Los Angeles. While expressing our own regret at the same time we extend our felicitations to Mr. Roach and the Pathe organization in the acquisition of a regular fellow, one who has a habit of doing better than making good in any task he takes up.

Mr. Kennedy will act as press representative on the West coast for the Roach studios and also will keep close the contact between the studios and the exploitation department of the Pathe office. And we will register a guess it is only a question of time before Mr. Roach will find even more important work for our recent associate editor.

SCORES HITS ON THREE FIRST RUNS

Three Wise Fools Has Played to Big Business in New York, Chicago and Washington

"Three Wise Fools" opened its New York engagement at the Capitol Theatre on July 22nd in the very heart of the summer's hot weather. Despite that handicap, its business kept growing so rapidly during the early part of the first week that Manager S. L. Rothafel decided to hold it over for a second week. In the middle of the second week came one of the summer's hottest waves, but the business equalled the receipts of the first week. The attendance of the theatres was also cut down by the death of President Harding. No other production that has been shown at the Capitol Theatre in the summer time has done the business that "Three Wise Fools" did.

The production opened at Balban & Katz' Chicago Theatre in Chicago and at Tom Moore's Rialto Theatre in Washington the same week and in both of these cities it duplicated the big hit which it made in New York.

PLAYERS CHOSEN

Miss Dupont and Wanda Hawley have been selected for important roles in David Smith's next production "The Man From Brodney's," Vitagraph's picturization of Geo. Barr McCutcheon's novel.

"The Man From Brodney's" is said to lend itself admirably to screen dramatization. The story is laid on the Island of Japat in the South Seas.

Jackie Finishes First Metro

Jackie Coogan has finished his concluding scene on "Long Live the King," the Mary Roberts Rinehart story which will be his first release under the Metro contract. This sequence shows the newly crowned boy king falling asleep on his throne in the midst of the long-winded reading of his coronation proclamation.

The story has been mounted most lavishly at a cost said to exceed to $650,000.00. Among the sets is the capital city of Lavonia, for which over 2,500 persons were employed, and which contained 38 buildings, representing an outlay—with extras' salaries—of $250,000.00.

Casting Board a Success

The casting board which took the place of the casting director at the Schulberg studios in Los Angeles a year ago, is such a success that practically every studio on the West Coast has adopted this method of selecting its players. The board consists of producer, director and author of the story who review the merits of all available players and choose the most desirable by the process of elimination. This does away with prejudices and favoritism.

Paul Goldman Nominated

The Republican nomination for Member of the Lower House of the New York State Legislature was unanimously accorded to Paul Goldman in the Seventeenth Assembly District. Mr. Goldman is in charge of the Educational Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the New York territory.

Christie Returns to England

Charles H. Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company is in New York and will sail on his second business trip to England and the Continent.

LESSER PLANS EUROPEAN TRIP

Will Arrange Distribution of Principal Product and Estab- lish Foreign Offices.

Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation and vice president of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., and Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is preparing for a trip to Europe. He will leave the West Coast within a few days, and will sail for England late in August.

Lesser's European tour will be for the purpose of arranging for the distribution of all products made and to be made by Principal Pictures Corporation whose productions will mount into the millions of dollars. He will also establish a foreign sales department for the West Coast, with Los Angeles as the "hub" of the enterprise.

The film official will visit all of the principal film exchanges in Europe and confer with the managers on the current and future activities of the motion picture industry insofar as First National Pictures are concerned, and attend to important business for many of the film producers in the West.

Mr. Lesser expects to remain in Europe two months and during this time, will confer with film executives in England, Italy, Spain, Germany, France and Russia.

Another important mission that Lesser will consummate while abroad is the bringing to America of all latest ideas and European effects for stage presentations. These will be utilized by the West Coast Theatre chain on the Pacific Coast. Lesser's departure from his production activities at Principal Pictures Corporation's studios in Hollywood, will not interfere with the principal production schedule as now outlined. Prior to sailing, Lesser will confer with his brother, Irving M. Lesser, manager of the New York offices of Principal Pictures Corporation. He will remain in New York two weeks before departing for London.

TRUART FRANCHISE WELL ESTABLISHED

Alexander S. Aronson, general manager of sales for Truart Film Corporation has closed a contract with Skouras Brothers, operating the St. Louis Film Exchange, St. Louis, Mo., for the franchise of the series of five Elaine Hammerstein productions, for the territory of Southern Illinois and Eastern Missouri. The first of the series is "Broadway Gold," which is to be followed by "Drums of Jeopardy," now in production.

With the consummation of this arrangement the Truart Franchise has been definitely established in approximately seventy-five per cent of the United States territory. This was accomplished between the release of the first picture under the new franchise plan.

C. B. C. WILL STATE RIGHT SNAPSHOTS

Screen Snapshots, one of the most popular of single reels, is to be distributed on the State Right Market this year, and will be handled direct through the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

Announcement to this effect comes from Jack Cohn, who originated the idea of Screen Snapshots, and in conjunction with Louis Lewyn, has made it the success it has been for three years past. During the year just past it was released through Pathe.

Owing to the fact that C. B. C. has decided to remain absolutely Independent this year regarding its feature program, Jack Cohn has decided that the demand for good short releases was as great as that for features, and accordingly decided to State Right the single reel as well.

Contracts are now being closed which will dispose of a major part of the territory at once, he says.

The first issue of the 1923-24 series will be released around August 20th and he has lined up an issue for the initial release with many great stars represented in it.

SAX SAYS THIS IS AN INDEPENDENT YEAR

"This is an 'Independent year,'" says Sam Sax, National Sales Manager for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, "and we're going to take every advantage of it, too.

"We now have 'Marriage Morals' and 'Don't Marry For Money' ready and even before our formal announcement of these pictures we had a host of inquiries on them. Three territories were sold upon a screening of these pictures. That's a pretty good indication that the market is eager for independent pictures—if they're right.

"Will Nigh assembled a cast that's unusual to enact 'Marriage Morals.' To that he added a lavish production and his own capable direction.

"B. P. Fineman has every reason to be proud of 'Don't Marry For Money.' One of the best balanced casts ever seen on the screen is seen in this picture and Fineman spared nothing on the sets.

"There are some of the reasons why picture-wise buyers like Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, Sydney Sampson of Bond Photoplays Corporation of Buffalo and Sam Grand of Federated Film Exchange of Boston bought 'Marriage Morals' and 'Don't Marry for Money' upon looking at them."

Blumberg on Buying Tour

Mr. H. H. Blumberg, Managing Director of the A. E. A. Film Co., Johannesburg, South Africa, arrived in New York for the purpose of procuring product for the coming season.

Mr. Blumberg has arranged with Arthur A. Lee, President of the Lee-Bradford Corporation, to look after the interests of the A. E. A. Film Co., in the United States. While here he will make his headquarters at the office of the Lee-Bradford Corporation.

Music Score for "Othello"

Hugo Riesenfeld has prepared a music score for "Othello," starring Emil Jannings and offered in the state rights market by Export and Import Film Company. It was under Riesenfeld's direction that the Shakespearean pictureplay was first presented, the premiere taking place at the Criterion Theatre. A cue sheet of the Riesenfeld score will be a feature of the press book on this production, which Export and Import Film Company announce for general release in the Fall.

Angeles Feature Ready

Bert Angeles has completed "Ask Daddy," a feature in which Stanley, Walpole, Ruth Gale, Buddy Armstrong and Bruce MacGowan will appear. The picture is scheduled for release September 7.

ELFELDT TO OFFER EIGHT FEATURES

Jane Thomas to Star—Novem- ber Date of First Release in New Independent Group

Eight special productions starring Jane Thomas constitute the release program of Clifford S. Elfeldt Productions. The eight productions, to be released through independent exchanges at the rate of one every six weeks, are as follows: "The Third Warning," "Something For Nothing," "The 19th Amendment," "Free," "Dangerous Men," "The Home Trail," "Beyond The Law" and "Dangerous Women." The first production will be released about Nov. first.

Production on the first feature starts on August 25. Miss Thomas accompanied by Mr. Elfeldt and his production staff will leave New York for Los Angeles on August 20.

The concern has leased a suite of four offices in the Candler Building to handle the distribution. The Elfeldt studios are located at 4500 Sunset Boulevard in Hollywood, Cal.

GRAND-ASHER TRIO COMPLETING SERIES

Three more comedies each for Monty Banks and Sid Smith and four for Joe Rock, will complete the series of a dozen two-reelers produced by each of these stars for Grand-Asher.

Here is a complete list of titles to date: Monty Banks: "The Covered Schooner," "Paging Love," "Taxi Please," "Southbound Limited," "Always Late," "The Boy in Blue," "Hot Sands," "Wedding Rings," "Home Cooking."

Sid Smith: "A Man of Position," "Making Good," "Mama's Baby Boy," "Hats," "The Lucky Rube," "Don't Play Hookey," "Hollywood Bound," "Husbands Wanted," "The Midnight Watch."

Joe Rock: "Rolling Home," "Mark it Paid," "The Sleepwalker," "One Dark Knight," "Some Nurse," "Laughing Gas," "The Love Birds," "It's a Bear."

Form New Producing Firm

The Herbert Productions have been formed on the West Coast, with offices at 933 Seward Ave., Hollywood. Production will start on August 15th, with Big Boy Williams as the star on the first production. The first picture will be made at the Universal Studios, under the supervision of George M. A. Fecke.

Rhodes Feature Started

Ben Wilson is making elaborate arrangements for the forthcoming production of "Leave it to Gerry" starring Billie Rhodes for Grand-Asher. Efforts are being made to have the set showing the interior of a Chicago mansion equal of anything that has been used in a feature picture by any concern. Work started August sixth.

New Head of Burr Publicity

Rutgers Neilson, who recently joined the publicity staff of Mastodon Films, Inc., has been placed in charge of the department by President C. C. Burr. Neilson joined the Burr organization after four and a half years as publicity editor for the Amedee J. Van Beuren Enterprises.

Short Subjects and Serials

SNUB POLLARD VISITS AUSTRALIA

Personal Appearance Increases His Popularity and Benefits Industry

Eighty Australian theatres joined in their appreciation of Snub Pollard's recent visit. B. Cowen, General Manager of Union Theatres, Ltd., Melbourne, in a letter to Pathe, said: "Allow me to bear testimony to the good effect on the picture industry in Australia of the recent visit of Mr. Snub Pollard. Although an Australian, he was known to our picture world only through his pictures, which are released through your agency.

"Popular as these made him, he is now even more popular through our public having been afforded the opportunity of personal acquaintance. His genial personality was keenly appreciated, and is now esteemed not only through his pictures but also as a man and a fellow worker in the interests of the picture industry.

"If other well known picture artists could be induced to visit Australia, it would conduce to the mutual benefit of all concerned."

Haunted Valley Brings Business

Art Kolstad, proprietor of the Rialto and Liberty Theatres, Hood River, Ore., declared that Salesman W. E. Green of the Portland branch was "an honest film hound" for selling him "Haunted Valley." Mr. Kolstad stated that business has increased about 30% over the regular Wednesday and Thursday average since he started using the serial.

To Have Baby Peggy Day

August 16 will be Baby Peggy Day at Erie Beach, near Buffalo, New York. This well known resort, only fifteen cents ferry fare from Toronto, Canada, has designated that this day be set aside in honor of the four year old Century Comedy starlet.

Mr. H. Conboy, head of the Erie Beach Amusement Company, is responsible for this idea, and on this day Baby Peggy comedies, Baby Peggy contests, and the distribution of the Baby Peggy Dolls, as well as the singing of "That's My Baby" (which was recently dedicated to Peggy) will compose part of the entertainment offered that day.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

Rolling Home, Grand-Asher

This is the story of a happy family whose experiences in finding a place to live offer some diverting incidents. Joe Rock is the star and Billie Rhodes the leading lady. They depend mostly on ingenious settings and stage fixtures. The touring home—a cottage equipped with folding showers, disappearing beds and a variety of other things which enable the housekeepers to change from parlor to bedroom to bath in a twinkling—is the scene of most of the humor. The moral of the play is that it is easier to go to jail than try to find a home when you have a family of three. This makes a rather good ending, with the family all wearing prison stripes and cheering when the warden tells them that the Governor has granted their request and they may remain in jail for two more years. It is a fairly good comedy offering.

Rustlin' Universal

Jay Morley and Margaret Morris are starred in this two-reel western drama. Judge Jennings agrees to aid the boys in playing a joke on the deputy sheriff, Jack Alden, in order to test his mettle. The Judge tells Jack that the sheriff has been murdered and that he can have the job if he catches the criminal. Jack is in love with the Judge's daughter, Helen, and the judge promises to consent to their marriage if Jack gets his man. Although he is led to believe that Helen is involved with the murderer he catches him. He is surprised to find that it is his own brother but his sense of duty forces him to give up the criminal. Jack learns that a joke has been played on him but he wins Helen and has convinced the judge of his ability to take the place of the sheriff, who has resigned. The film has action and will no doubt satisfy those who like westerners.

Dark Timber, Educational

You will get a thrill out of this. It is one of the Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales in one reel and has to do with the caretaker of a one-horse saw mill, which is closed for the summer and whose only companion is a black and tan dog. A stranger passing through the camp is confronted by the dog and immediately sets to work to get rid of him. After several well placed kicks he kills the dog. The owner is infuriated and starts out to hunt the killer. He meets him on top of a hill. A stiff fight ensues, the victor being the stranger.

From this point on the thrill starts. A Game Warden and the caretaker have an exciting ride on a sluiceway which is used for the transportation of lumber. There are many pretty views from the high trestle over which this sluiceway runs. This one reel will entertain in any house.

The Mystery Man, Pathe

Snub Pollard is a "thousand eyed detective" in this two reel comedy. When it comes to relating his exploits, he has a wonderful imagination. He is given a chance to prove his ability by catching two thieves who have made off with a bag of money belonging to his sweetheart's father. Our hero retrieves the bag and Father gladly hands over his daughter (Marie Mosquini). But Snub's happiness is short-lived, for instead of the money the bag contains a hornet's nest. A chase ensues. By accident Snub catches the thieves and is reinstated in the good grace of father and daughter. This satire on Sherlock Holmes is good entertainment. It will keep your audience smiling throughout.

A Man of Position, Grand-Asher

Sid Smith is the star of this unusually entertaining comedy. There is a certain amount of characterization in the play and a bit of human interest, which is only too often neglected in pure comedy of the screen. Smith is seen as a clerk who drudges away at his books. There are some bonds which disappear and he is falsely accused. Later he inherits a fortune and as a bell hop in a fashionable hotel (a role he plays in order to find if the girl really loves him) he vindicates himself, locating the robber of the bonds and winning the girl. There is a lot of good extravagant comedy and a good supply of gags. "A Man of Position" is an altogether fine two reel comedy offering.

Paging Love, Grand-Asher

Monte Banks does some fast work in this two reeler, the first of his series for Grand-Asher. As a "pot" he has the story of an ardent suitor who must make good as a book salesman in order to win the consent of the girl's father. The publisher turns him loose on a book that has been in stock for years, and our hero then proceeds to hustle around and provide some good knock-about comedy while trying to make the sale. There are some thrills on a skyscraper and any number of ludicrous incidents. He finally makes good. It is a good action comedy and provides fairly amusing pastime. In the support Lois Boyd, William Blaisdael and Jack Dawn appear.

The Busher, Educational

This two-reel Mermaid Comedy, supervised by Jack White, does not hold up to other comedies of the same brand we have seen. It is adapted from the "You Know Me Al" stories by Ring W. Lardner. There is an abundance of slapstick stuff on the baseball diamond which will take with the fans. Lee Moran, the Busher, portrays some wonderful curves and at times seems to be tied in a knot, while Mike Donlin, the ball player, gives him plenty of trouble. Taken all together it is a fairly good comedy.

Pathe Review No. 33

In this reel are beautiful views of the Treasure Temples of Siam, trick photographic modeling of the Man and the Little Brown Jug, and scenes depicting the different processes in the making of a bell. The intricate method of counting blood cells is also explained. The Pathecolor section shows the different species of gorgeously colored panots.

The Bad Bandit, Pathe

Milton Mouse leads Henry Cat and Farmer Al Falfa a merry chase in this Aesop's Film Fable. After traveling over hill and dale and through water and various mishaps, the farmer and Henry manage to catch the bandit, only to have him escape again. Farmer Al Falfa warns Henry to "Never Give Up the Chase" and so they start off once more.

Lots of Nerve, Universal

Henry Murdock and the dog, "Pal" are featured in this two-reel Century comedy. Pal outwits the landlady looking for the rent and aids his master in winning the girl he loves, by keeping away his rival. Pal's remarkable intelligence brings about some amusing incidents.

Be Honest, Pathe

Two monkeys, a dog, a mule and a flock of geese are the players in this "Dippy Doo Dad." The "Bad Guy" monkey has a habit of pilfering eggs which the "Good Guy" monkey tries to break him off. "Good Guy" gets the worst of it for awhile but the culprit is finally punished. Snappy titles add to the humor of the reel. The children will probably "eat it up."

Warned in Advance, Pathe

This two reel western of the Range Rider Series, starring Leo Maloney is concerned with an elopement and the mistaking of the girl in the case for the daughter of the County Judge. The picture contains humor and plenty of action.

Norma Talmadge Superb in Magnificent Production

REVIEWED BY GEORGE BLAISDELL

A MAGNIFICENT production is First National's "Ashes of Vengeance." It is a simple thing to say that it is one of the greatest subjects ever thrown on the screen. It is a difficult thing to attempt much less adequately to convey to the fortunate ones who not yet have seen it a reasonably faithful word picture of its beauty, its majesty and best of all its genuine appeal.

For behind all the wealth of staging and costuming, of delving and filming, there is a love story the romance and the charm of which will live long in any memory.

Director Frank Lloyd with one bold sweep lifts his house into the sixteenth century atmosphere right at the start of the story and holds it without a lessening of the cumulating tension straight through to the climax.

It is a brave man who will uncover his most spectacular scene in the first few hundred feet—that of the marvelous ballroom in the great castle, a replica of the famous Louvre, with its hundreds of richly garbed dancers. But the result vindicates his judgment.

Dramatic moments, situations as strong as also they are logically conceived, are packed many in each of the ten reels.

NORMA TALMADGE as Yoeland de Bruex, daughter of an aristocratic family at war with the house of Vriac, easily sustains the claims of her partisans as being the peer of the screen's best.

Miss Talmadge plays with distinction throughout a role that none but a great artist could approach with any chance of measurable success. There are a surety of touch, a deftness, a delicacy, a finish withal, that is most satisfying.

Sustaining the heroine and contributing their full share to the dramatic quality of the production are Conway Tearle as Rupert de Vriac, Courtenay Foote as Comte de la Roche and Wallace Beery as Duc de Tours.

Wallace Beery as the alternating craven and bullying Duc de Tours strongly portrays a brutal aristocrat. Josephine Crowell as Catherine de Medici, the infamous enemy of the Huguenots, recalls her previous remarkable performance in "The Birth of a Nation."

The work of the remainder of an unusually long cast testifies to the skill of the individuals and the judgment of the director.

The whole theme of the tale is conveyed in one brief subtitle, which is in effect that of a great love which outweighs a great hate.

DE LA ROCHE offends de Vriac, they fight and the latter wins, sparing his enemy's life. Later when the massacre of the Huguenots is ordered the Comte agrees to safeguard the fiancée of de Vriac if his enemy swears to act as the Comte's servant for five years.

Under the pleading of the girl de Vriac consents. In the home of the Comte the prisoner meets Yoeland, the Comte's sister. The family feud cannot stop the growing regard of the one for the other, but both conceal their feelings.

Situations of sternness and tenderness alternate. In the latter category are the scenes between the crippled little sister of Yoeland and her "Sir Knight," the servant.

WHEN the little one gives to her knight as a token a lock of her doll's hair she lays the groundwork for several moving scenes.

Yoeland, mending the doublet of de Vriac following his stiff battle on the stairs in defense of the unspeakable de Tours, finds it and assumes it is a memento of the fiancée who has betrayed de Vriac by marrying another.

The revelation of the truth later removes the last barrier between the two and brings the cancellation by the Comte of the servitude, following the appeal of Yoeland.

The subject is written by H. B. Somerville, produced by Joseph Schenck, photographed by Tony Gaudio, and edited by Hal C. Kern. And the art director—put a pin here—is Stephen Goosson.

"Ashes of Vengeance" is an action picture in the true sense of the term. And it reveals the motion picture at its highest estate.

Selecting—Booking—Playing—the Picture

Bluebeard's 8th Wife

Paramount Photoplay In Six Parts. Adapted From Alfred Savoir's Stage Play of Same Title. Scenario by Sada Cowan. Director, Sam Woods. Cameraman, Alfred Gilks. Running time, sixty-five minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Mona de Briac	Gloria Swanson
John Brandon	Huntley Gordon
Robert	Charles Greene
Lucienne	Lianne Salvor
Marquis de Briac	Paul Weigel
Lord Henry Seville	Frank R. Butler
Albert de Marceau	Robert Agnew
Alice George	Irene Dalton

Facing bankruptcy, the Marquis de Briac sees salvation ahead when John Brandon, American millionaire, falls in love with his daughter, Mona. The latter accepts Brandon, though she does not love him. She is unaware that Brandon has been married seven times before. Alice George, ex-secretary to Brandon, sends for the seven ex-wives, setting their arrival for the day before the marriage, with a view to preventing it. Mona, sets the marriage one day ahead. The seven wives arrive when the ceremony is over and Mona realizes she has wed a modern Bluebeard, determines that she will not be his eighth divorced spouse, but later changes her mind.

She writes a series of letters telling her husband that she is unfaithful to him. Brandon discovers that Mona is the author of the missives. He decides to call her bluff, enters her apartment and finds Albert de Marceau there drunk. Though her last resort has succeeded, Mona, cannot decide to let her husband believe that she has really betrayed him. She begs him to look into her eyes. He does so, sees honesty and love in her gaze and reunited, they go away upon their long delayed honeymoon.

Gloria Swanson scores again in this one. An adaptation of a lively French farce, toned down to suit the American screen, so that it registers as frisky, but certainly not risqué, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" is sure-fire laughing stuff with just enough of sentimental shading introduced to keep a suspicion of romance tinging the atmosphere.

Also Miss Swanson fits into the leading role as though the author evolved it with this particular star in view. And Sada Cowan did a right good job in preparing a scenario from the original. The continuity is perfect, the action never drags and the subtitles are terse, witty and to the point every time.

There's not a thing in the whole picture which could offend the moralists. Even the scene where wilful Mona contrives to have a youthful suitor drunk and reposing in her apartment, with the express purpose of having her husband discover him, thereby furnishing material for the divorce she wants, is staged so craftily and with such entire absence of coarseness or ill suggestion that its effect on the audience is to start them yelling in jocular appreciation.

It's all in the way these things are done that counts; your wise director, backed by clever players, can always preserve a certain delicacy of treatment when handling such subjects.

And we'll say that Director Sam Wood has done so in this particular instance. Moreover, his work throughout is of sheer 18 karat calibre. Not a hitch in the action, his grouping admirably performed, the wedding and Egyptian festival scenes are marvels of luxury and with oodles of lovely ladies disporting themselves in lovely gowns.

Which brings to mind the fact that feminine patrons are going to flock to this feature in thousands for the purpose of sizing up the magnificent costumes worn with such grace by the star, a point which exhibitors will do well to stress when exploiting it.

Nor should the showmen overlook the hot weather factor in their advertising. We know of no cooler way to while away a sultry hour than watching Gloria Swanson taking that high dive from a towering crag into the arms of old Ocean and swimming joyously until her angling admirer catches her in his line instead of the fish he had hooked.

Among the many situations which provoke unbounded merriment none is more effective than that in which the modern Bluebeard's seven ex-wives appear, just as his marriage to Mona is finished, and are duly introduced to the panic-stricken bride.

But this is only one of various trenchant humorous hits, as appetizing and numerous as plums in a pudding.

Gloria Swanson plays the part of Mona de Briac with bewitching abandon and unlimited dash, never missing a single comedy point and just now and then showing what a capable actress she is in depicting situations calling for the serious, melting mood.

Huntley Gordon is immense as the cocksure John Brandon, the millionaire who is noted for getting whatever he goes after, but who finds his eighth bride rather "a handful" so to speak, and able to best him at his own game.

Robert Agnew, a youthful actor of considerable promise, is excellent in the drunken scene and the support is adequate. There is any amount of gorgeous photography, handsome interiors and beautiful exteriors abound, and the lighting is faultless.

To sum up, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" can be listed as a good bet for any kind of theatre, large or small, a peach of a summer attraction.

Loyal Lives

Vitagraph Photoplay presented by Whitman Bennett. Story by Charles G. Rich and Dorothy Farnum. Directed by Charles Giblyn. Running time, 65 minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dan O'Brien	Brandon Tynan
Mary O'Brien	Mary Carr
Peggy	Faire Binney
Terrence	William Collier, Jr.
Michael O'Hara	Charles McDonald
Lizzie O'Hara	Blanche Craig
Tom	Chester Morris
Brady	Tom Blake
Mrs. Brady	Blanche Davenport
Judkins	John Hopkins
Terrence, as a child	Mickey Bennett

The widow Brady daily pleads with Daniel O'Brien, a letter carrier, for a letter from her son who ran away. Taking pity on her, O'Brien writes a series of letters to her himself. Michael O'Hara, a fellow-worker, proposes to Daniel that they quit the mail service and start a mail order business with their savings. Mary O'Brien tells Michael that they are going to spend their savings to educate their son, Terrence, and Daniel refuses to leave the service. Daniel finds a baby girl on his doorstep and in spite of their poverty the O'Briens decide to keep her. Seventeen years later, Michael O'Hara is a mail order king and Daniel O'Brien, retired from the service on account of physical disability, is unable to find work. His pension is so small that he is forced to mortgage his home. O'Hara helps him when he can no longer meet the payments. Peggy, the O'Brien's adopted daughter, and Tom O'Hara are secretly married because Mrs. O'Hara will not hear of the match. Widow Brady's son, a mail thief, returns and takes a room with the O'Briens. Before he leaves he puts a bill in the teapot. O'Brien gives the bill to O'Hara as a part payment of his debt. The bill is marked and O'Brien is arrested for robbing the mails, but Tom goes bail for him. Brady and his pal attempt to rob the mail train on which Terrence is clerk. Terrence dives off the train into the river with the mail bag. After a struggle with the bandit Terrence manages to get ashore but he cannot get to the nearest farm until the next day. Daniel O'Brien, upon hearing that Terrence is suspected of robbing the mails goes to his old friend, the night clerk of the postoffice, for comfort. He finds robbers looting the safe and fights them. Terrence, who has brought the mail back in the farmer's car, comes to his father's aid. One of the thieves proves to be Brady who confesses. O'Brien receives the personal thanks of Postmaster General New and the O'Haras give their approval to the marriage of Tom and Peggy.

Pathos, humor, thrills, deft human touches and a message that all can appreciate—these make a picture that all will enjoy. "Loyal Lives," the story of Daniel O'Brien, one of the 339,000 "unsung heroes," was indorsed by Postmaster General New as a faithful portrayal of the postal service, but it is, first of all, a faithful portrayal of life.

Daniel O'Brien and his family are real "folks" with their struggles, their kindness, their loyalty to each other and to the Service.

The big thrill is the train robbery and the subsequent struggle, but it is not so much the thrills as the human interest that makes the picture "big."

Mary Carr as Mary O'Brien is the perfect, loyal wife and pal, but her admirers will still find her the mother. Her adoption of the waif, her prostration when she hears that her son is suspected of robbery, her gladness at having him back, mingled with her worry because his forehead is cut, are all the language of motherhood.

Brandon Tynan gives an excellent performance as the kindly, loyal postman and is especially good in the black moments when he and his son are accused of robbery.

Faire Binney is a vivacious, piquant

Peggy. Blanche Craig as Lizzie O'Hara is as delightfully Irish as her name and contributes largely to the humor of the film. Wm. Collier, Jr., makes a clean-cut, daring juvenile. If we had the space we would commend each member of the supporting cast separately. They deserve it.

Introducing the story are some instructive scenes of the mail service. The shots of the train robbery are good and the interiors faithfully executed.

Exploitation of this picture should be very easy. Because it is a plea for the postman. Every postman will be glad to help you sell it. It will get much word-of-mouth publicity through mailmen and their families. No doubt you can arrange to have the mailmen sell tickets if you give a percentage to their sick benefit fund. In sections where Mary Carr is well-known it would be wise to feature her as playing another mother role.

The End of the Rope

Aywon photoplay directed by Charles R. Seeley. Story by Donald Buchanon. Cameraman, Vernon Walker. Footage, approximately 4600.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Ned Holly Big Boy Williams
 Jack Holly
 Mrs. Holly Florence McKee
 Vivian Ralston Vivian Rich
 Jessie Morgan Fern Ferguson

Ned Holly steals the money his twin brother, Jack, has given to their widowed mother to pay the mortgage on their home in a small western town. Ned gambles it in a crap game and finds that the dice are loaded. In a fight one of the gamblers is hurt and Ned, thinking he has shot him, rushes home to find his mother dying. Jack, who has promised to protect Ned, goes to jail in his place. When he is released he starts on a search for his brother. On his way to Temacula he saves the life of Vivian Ralston, who gives him a card to the foreman of her uncle's ranch, where he is finally engaged. Ned has fallen into his old shiftless ways and holds up a paymaster. He is photographed in the act by Jessie Morgan, who gives the picture to the sheriff. The boys identify the hold-up man as Jack. Jessie shows Vivian the picture and Vivian determines to warn the man who saved her life that the sheriff is after him. She meets Ned, whom she mistakes for Jack and warns him. Ned attempts to kiss her, but rides away when he sees Jack coming after him. Ned comes to a deep gulch over which a rope is stretched. After he gets across he cuts the rope just as Jack is crossing and he falls to the bottom of the gulch. The sheriff and his men arrive and shoot at Ned, who is killed. Jack recovers and turns to future happiness with Vivian.

Melodrama and thrills are combined in this film. The old situations of the widowed mother in poor health, the mortgaged home and the twin brothers whose characters differ so greatly are called into service once again. It seems improbable that Ned would be sent to prison when the gambler was merely hurt. Besides, the sheriff witnessed the whole fight and saw the gambler draw a gun, so even if he were shot in the struggle, it would be self-defense on Ned's part.

Although the story is weak, it contains plenty of action. Big Boy Williams is something of a gymnast. He can ride a kicking broncho, do a Douglas Fairbanks up the side of a house and in two different ways cross a guleh on a rope. He succeeds in portraying both the good-for-nothing Ned and the unselfish Jack. Vivian Ralston is a pleasing feminine support.

Those who like the oldtime western melodramatic thrillers will enjoy this one. D.R.

The Daring Years

Equity Photoplay In Seven Parts. Author, Daniel Carson Goodman. Director, Kenneth Webb. Running Time, seventy-five minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Susie La Motte Mildred Harris
 John Browning Charles Emmett Mack
 Mary Charles Bow
 Mrs. Browning Mary Carr
 Jim Moran Joe King
 James La Motte Tyrone Power
 College Boy Skeets Gallagher
 Cabaret Owner Jack Richardson
 La Motte Children Helen Rowland
 Joe Depew

John Browning, a college graduate, is his mother's idol and carefully brought up, knowing little of the ways of the world. He attends a sophomore dinner at a cabaret. Freshmen arrive and break up the entertainment and in the struggle which follows, John is hurt. Susie La Motte, a cabaret star who is in love with Jim Moran, a pug, nurses him and he becomes infatuated with her. Susie leads him on. Moran grows jealous, a fight takes place between the rivals. Moran pulls a gun which goes off and kills him. John is accused of murder, tried and sentenced to die in the electric chair. On the day of execution the prison power plant is struck by lightning and put out of order, so that the sentence cannot be carried out. In the interval, Moran's wife makes Susie admit that the slaying of her husband was accidental. With the new evidence thus presented to him the governor grants a reprieve, John's innocence is established and all ends happily.

This is a well photographed and skillfully directed melodrama, replete with heart interest, offering an unusual plot and moving swiftly to a tense and spectacular climax. There are unlimited thrills in evidence, a cabaret scene alive with color and realism—the scrap between the college freshmen and sophomores at the banquet being as natural as life and crammed with action—and the hero's march to the death chair in Sing Sing, when a lightning flash destroys the apparatus and halts the execution, is as grimly effective a bit of "suspense stuff" as has ever been screened.

Another exciting situation is the race between the auto and the train in the attempt to reach the prison with the governor's reprieve in time to save the hero's life. The motor car arrives at its goal after the scheduled hour of execution, but the bolt from the heavens has meanwhile intervened and all is well.

Mildred Harris plays the part of the siren, Susie La Motte, a role which she fills to perfection, and Charles Emmett Mack, one of David Wark Griffith's discoveries, gives a wonderfully fine performance as John Browning, the lad whose flight from a secluded home life to the garish pleasures of the outside world comes so near to ending in black disaster.

There is also a strong psychological angle developed in the conflict of ideas between the boy and his too-fond mother, which adds materially to the story's interest. In this connection the excellent work of Mary Carr as Mrs. Browning deserves particular praise. The supporting cast is all that could be desired, in fact, every member of the company may be said to contribute heavily to the film's success.

It is a picture which should draw well in any locality and can be exploited as possessing compelling atmosphere, a powerful story and fast action. The names of the principal players can be played up to good advantage.

The Love Brand

Universal Photoplay In Five Parts. Author, Raymond L. Schrock. Scenario by Adrian Johnson. Director, Stuart Paton. Cameraman, William Thornley. Running Time, fifty-five minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Don Jose O'Neil Roy Stewart
 Peter Collier Wilfred North
 Francis Collier Margaret Landis
 Charles Mortimer Arthur Hull
 Miguel Salvador Sydney De Grey
 Teresa Marie Wells

Don Jose O'Neil owns a great ranch in the Southwestern cattle country, inherited from his Spanish ancestors. An Eastern capitalist knows there is oil on the land and endeavors to persuade Don Jose to sell certain portions of it. He fails, and then, having accepted an invitation to remain visiting the ranch, employs his daughter Frances, a spoiled society beauty, to ensnare their host's affection and induce him to consent. Don Jose falls in love with Frances, who, in playing her father's game, gradually loses her heart to the man she is betraying. Teresa, a Spanish girl, daughter of the ranch foreman, has vainly loved Don Jose, learns of the plot in which Frances is engaged and exposes her to her lover. Don Jose, in a tempest of rage, threatens to brand Frances with a red-hot iron, but relents at the last moment. Frances confesses her duplicity, but admits that she now loves him. He spurns her, Frances seizes the iron and brands her shoulder to prove her truth. Don Jose is convinced and the two are wed.

This is a Western melodrama of average interest. Its strong points are the exceedingly pretty scenery—the backgrounds are impressive and there are some beautiful shots of the wide, sweeping prairie land, valleys and mountains in which the action takes place—the likeable personality of the leading man, Roy Stewart—the tense situation where the heroine bands herself with an iron in order to prove that if she did cheat her lover in the beginning of things, she has truly repented.

Its weakness lies in the somewhat marked obviousness of the plot. One has little trouble anticipating just what is going to happen to Frances Collier when she weaves her net to ensnare her father's game, and one can anticipate just what is going to happen that while angling for possession of his heart she will lose her own, and so on.

But as it stands, the film affords an hour's quiet amusement. There are some riding stunts staged which will satisfy those who thirst for the spectacular. The pursuit of the cattle thieves, for instance, is conducted with considerable dash and flashy action, and comedy seasoning is imparted by the scene where Don Jose, alone with the spoiled darling from the East, threatens to lower her pride by forcing her to indulge in cooking experiments with a rusty old stove and frying pan.

Roy Stewart's genial smile is on tap as usual. There isn't much about him which suggests Spanish descent, but he registers as a very pleasing Don Jose, for all that.

Margaret Landis seems a trifle stiff and artificial in the heroine role, but Marie Wells gives a colorful performance as the impulsive Teresa. The picture belongs in the ordinary program list. In exploiting it, feature Roy Stewart's name, the melodramatic romance and Western atmosphere.

St. Elmo

Fox photoplay from the novel by Augustus Evans. Scenario by Jules Furthman. Jerome Storm, Director. Footage 5778.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

St. Elmo Thornton..... John Gilbert
 Agnes Hunt..... Barbara La Mar
 Edna Earle..... Bessie Love
 Murray Hammond..... Warner Baxter
 Rev. Alan Hammond..... Nigel De Brullier
 Mrs. Thornton..... Lydia Knott

St. Elmo Thornton and his mother have been life-long friends of the Reverend Alan Hammond and his son Murray, who is studying for the ministry. St. Elmo thinks so much of his friend that he plans to build a church for him when he is ordained. When Agnes Hunt accepts St. Elmo's proposal of marriage, he rushes home to tell his mother the good news. Returning with his mother's engagement ring which she has asked him to give Agnes, he finds the girl in Murray's arms and overhears them planning to elope after Agnes has married him and obtained a settlement. Later, Murray is shot in a struggle with St. Elmo. Edna Earle granddaughter of the blacksmith witnesses the encounter but before the smithy can go to the woods, St. Elmo comes to the shop and demands that his horse be shod immediately. When he rides away, he drops a book which Edna finds and keeps.

His faith in humanity destroyed, St. Elmo roams the globe returning home to find that Edna is staying with his mother as a companion. She remembers him and gives him his book. Upon learning that she likes to read, he gives her access to his library. On the table is a miniature Oriental temple, Taj Mahal, in which he keeps the last letter he wrote to Agnes. By reading this he keeps alive his hatred of woman-kind. Against his will he gradually falls in love with Edna and to prove to himself that she is as untrustworthy as all women, before he goes on a journey he gives her the key to the Taj Mahal which she promises not to open within a year. He returns to find her with the key in the lock and is convinced of her guilt, but later when he accuses her, she denies that she opened the temple. Her innocence is established when St. Elmo unlocks the door and an explosion is heard. He begs her forgiveness for his doubt and declares life Augustus Evans' novel and has done it quite successfully, due chiefly to the competence of his cast. St. Elmo's love for Agnes and Murray, his bitterness upon discovering their falsity, his and Edna's efforts to fight against their love, are made real and will enthrall the average picturegoer as much as they are intended to. As a whole, John Gilbert's performance is sincere, although, occasionally, he does flourish his arms a trifle too melodramatically. Barbara La Mar as the false Agnes, Nigel De Brullier as Reverend Alan Hammond, and Lydia Knott as Mrs. Thornton, give good characterizations. The supporting cast is all that could be desired. In spite of the general competence, Bessie Love gives the impression of "making the picture." Her portrayal of wistful, demure little Edna is flawless. The photography is good, especially in the scenes of the open country.

The fact that the film is a picturization of the well-known novel and that Bessie Love plays the feminine lead will aid greatly in exploitation. The picture will be released September 30th. D. R.

Through the Flames

Goldstone Photoplay in Five Parts. Scenario by George Plympton. Director, Jack Nelson. Running time, fifty-five minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dan Merrill Richard Talmadge
 Mary Fenton Charlotte Pierce.
 Jim Hanley M. Geary
 Captain Strong S. J. Bingham
 Jerry Fenton Taylor Graves
 Marjory Arnold Ruth Langston
 Red Burke Fred Kohler
 Dan's Mother Edith Yorke
 Howard Morton George Sherwood
 Bertram Arnold C. H. Mailes
 "Sparks" Pal, the Dog

Dan Merrill joins Company 24, Fire Department. He early attracts the favorable notice of the Chief. Numerous fires have been taking place, obviously set off to cover up robberies. The chief assigns Dan to the task of running down the criminals. So as to find an excuse for mingling with the gang he suspects, Dan arranges to be fired from the force for seeming cowardice. This is done. His mother and sweetheart Mary are heartbroken over his discharge, the secret of which he dares not reveal. He becomes a member of the gang, among which Mary's weaking brother Jerry is numbered. Red Burke, leader, demands that Mary marry him, threatening to have Jerry jailed unless she consents. Dan discovers the identity of "the man higher up" who is responsible for the work of the gang. Burke beats up Jerry and learns from him what Dan's mission really is. Burke confronts Dan and accuses him of being a stool pigeon. Dan smashes the gas jet in making his escape. An explosion results. Dan rescues his mother from the blazing apartment upstairs. The gang members are all arrested. Dan is vindicated in his sweetheart's eyes and duly rewarded.

Pictures dealing with the activities of fire-fighters usually find favor in the eyes of movie fans and "Through The Flames" is not likely to prove an exception to the rule.

It is a snappy melodrama, vibrant with brisk action, pervaded with decisive thrills and offering a pleasing love story. Also, it presents an unusual plot, for the fireman hero steps outside the limits of his profession by turning amateur detective, joins a gang of crooks he suspects of burning down buildings to conceal robberies and brings them all to justice in the end.

The said hero, Dan Merrill by name, gets the sympathy of the onlookers from the outset by meekly submitting to the stigma of cowardice in pursuance of his plan for exposing the arson artists. Naturally, his mother and sweetheart mourn over his weakness, but all comes right at the finish, when he rescues the old lady from a burning apartment, brings about the capture of the thieves and covers himself with glory.

There are no slow moments in the picture, which affords Richard Talmadge a chance to distinguish himself as the intrepid Dan, a role in which he works with praiseworthy vim and scores a palpable hit.

Charlotte Pierce registers as a very captivating heroine. Fred Kohler, as Red Burke, is a genuinely hard-boiled villain. The crook types are "as tough as they make 'em." Edith Yorke shines as a most lovable personage in the character of the hero's mother and the support is adequate.

The fire scenes are remarkably well filmed and good lighting prevails. The film ought to prove a bully attraction for downtown and neighborhood houses and should be easily exploited by arranging tieups with local fire departments. G. T. P.

The Santa Fe Trail

Serial produced by Neva Gerber through Arrow Film Corporation. Written and directed by Robert Dillon. Production under supervision of Ben Wilson.

CAST

Rosalie LeCoyne Miss Neva Gerber
 Ian LeCoyne, her father James Welch
 "Jerry" Morne, a caravan guard Jack Perrin
 Arthur Rand, a trader Elias Bullock
 Moran, a gambler Wilbur McGaugh
 Kit Carson Clarke B. Coffey

There is action aplenty in "The Santa Fe Trail," a historical serial of the days of the pioneers. Among the leading characters are General Fremont and Kit Carson, the latter beloved of the younger generation and well remembered by their elders as one of their earliest and most famous heroes of "the plains."

The production, which features Neva Gerber, has its beginning in the late forties, the opening locations being in Missouri, the start of the long trek westward across the continent.

The tale is of gold, of the hunt for it and the finding of it, the seeking by the less his love, but she remembers the scene of Murray's death and flees to the Church for strength to fight her temptation to yield. St. Elmo finds her and tells her how Murray came to be killed. Rev. Alan Hammond overhears the story and after Edna leaves, he gives St. Elmo his forgiveness and tells him to take his son's place in the world. St. Elmo does so, and one day finds Edna in the church. She admits that she can no longer be deaf to the dictates of her heart. Jerome Storm has undertaken to bring to successful to learn the spot where it has been found, the battling back and forth by the finders and the conspirators, with incidental attacks by hostile Indians.

Neva Gerber spiritedly portrays Rosalie Le Coyne, whose father, played by James Welch, is the lucky goldseeker. Rosalie is in love with "Jerry" Morne, a caravan guard, a character well played by Jack Perrin.

Le Coyne is a confirmed card player, and it is his custom when he loses to make another excursion to his mines and bring back more gold. Moran, who also is in love with Rosalie, cheats the old man and plans to steal from him the map of the gold field when Le Coyne is on his way.

After the party has left Rosalie learns of the impending attack by Indians and sets forth to warn her father and sweetheart. She and Jerry are captured, and her father is left for dead. Before the cavalry arrive Kit Carson rescues Rosalie and Jerry. The captured gambler escapes. Later the girl and Jerry, traveling with Fremont, block the entrance to a canyon with an ammunition wagon in an effort to stop the Indians and the wagon is set on fire and the powder explodes.

That is a rough sketch of the way the story opens. Judging from the opening three episodes the subject is one that will have interest for the serial "fans," with especial reference to the youngsters who are so much in evidence on a Saturday afternoon in the everyday picture theatre.

The material frankly is of the "wild and woolly," with abundance of shooting and riding, villains and Indians, and all the accompanying two-fister stuff and mountain and desert background that go with it.

The Call of The Wild

Produced By Hal Roach; featuring Buck, a dog; story by Jack London; directed by Hal Roach; adapted by Fred Jackson; photographer not mentioned; running time, one hour and ten minutes.

CAST

Buck	By Himself
The Man With the Club	Walter Long
John Thornton	Jack Mulhall
Mercedes	Laura Roessing
Her Brother	Frank Butler
Her Husband	Sydney d'Albrook

For his first venture into the serious drama, Hal Roach evidently decided not to specialize but to put out a production that would have universal appeal. He did not have to go far afield for his topic—animals and the great outdoors. Selecting Jack London's "The Call of the Wild," the author's most popular story written when he was at the peak of his writing power, for his initial effort, he cut loose with a punch that registered. The result is that he has made an entertaining picture that will appeal to everyone who likes a whiff of the open with a tang of the north all through the atmosphere, and especially will it gladden the hearts of animal lovers who count in the majority.

That adapter of the book has not wandered far from the original text, which means that there is a great deal of he-man stuff all through the scenes and very little mush. All the spirit and vigor of the London classic has been retained, and it is a thoroughly interesting and novel production.

Mr. Roach introduces a new dog actor to the screen who is going to be popular. He seems to be well trained and performs intelligently. Jack London would have liked this animal even as he loved the dog of his story. He not only takes direction with marvelous readiness, but seems to enter into the spirit of the picture and enjoy it, even if in one or two scenes he looks as though he would like to know what it is all about.

There is a punch in the picture and Buck supplies the most of it in his fight with a rattlesnake, a battle with one of his own kind and his famous fifty-mile run through the snow at the head of the pack.

The director has taken advantage of his outdoor atmosphere to bring out some remarkable photography, and he also got the last ounce of comedy out of his characters. At times the comedy element borders on the farce, but the audience who witnessed the opening performance enjoyed it to the last giggle.

The action moves with a fine sweep and is animated with the utmost sincerity, never pausing once it starts on its colorful course. No chance is given for a let-down in the performance of either the dog or the humans who support him, and the director has seen to it that the comedy is introduced just at the proper place even if it is a little broad. This seems to be the chief fault of an otherwise flawless picture—the comedy approaches too near the slapstick for a production of this kind.

Broad human sympathy is expressed in a manner that grips every one who knows the worth of an animal like Buck, and this is the strongest appeal in the entire production. Jack Mulhall, as the hero worshipped by the dog, gives a neat performance; Walter Long, as the man feared by the animal whom he finally kills to avenge his master, gives a splendid contrast portrayal; Sydney d'Albrook, Frank Butler and Laura Roessing are splendid characters along comedy lines. There are several other bits played by actors whose names are not mentioned on the program but who stand out.

There are marvelous snow scenes, bleak wastes and wonderful silhouettes in sky line effects that are the real thing. Mr. Roach need have no fear for the success of his first dramatic effort. If not a great picture, it is entertaining and that is what counts. It should prove a money-maker for any exhibitor.

Legally Dead

Universal Photoplay In Five Parts. Author, Charles Furthmann. Scenario by Harvey Gates. Director, William Parke. Cameraman, Richard Fryer. Running Time, fifty-five minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Will Campbell	Milton Sills
Mrs. Campbell	Margaret Campbell
Minnie O'Reilly	Claire Adams
Jake Dorr	Edwin Sturgis
Jake's Sweetheart	Faye O'Neill
Malcolm Steel	Charles Stevenson
District Attorney	Joseph Girard
The Anarchist	Albert Prisco
The Judge	Herbert Fortier
The Governor	Charles Wellsley
Detective Powell	Robert Homans
Dr. Jay Gelzer	Brandon Hurst

Will Campbell, newspaper reporter, quarrels with his wife, leaves home and determines to prove a theory that circumstantial evidence is responsible for many unjust convictions. He commits a minor crime, lands in prison and meets Minnie O'Reilly. She is serving a term to shield her roommate. They fall in love. Both win pardons from a jail-break and saving the warden's life. Campbell gets a job in a bank but is recognized and hounded by detectives who originally arrested him. The detective is shot, dies, Campbell is arrested and sentenced to death. The girl pal of the real murderer confesses at the eleventh hour, but meanwhile Campbell has been hung. Doctor Gelzer gets his body and through the use of the new drug, adrenalin, restores Campbell to life. Will goes back home to find his wife divorced and remarried and returns to happiness with Minnie.

There are several reasons why this picture ought to go "big" and pile the coin into exhibitorial coffers. One is that the plot pivots upon a timely subject—the power of a new drug, adrenalin, to revive heart action after a person has been pronounced dead.

This scientific discovery received a lot of publicity in the daily press, with arguments for and against it, and naturally excited widespread curiosity.

Folks are still busy discussing adrenalin possibilities and will certainly flock to see a film constructed around its supposed magic, so here is a fruitful field for exploitation. Then the fact that Milton Sills plays the lead is worth while calling attention to. That popular player has a strong following of admirers in most localities, and, for the rest—"Legally Dead" can be advertised as an entirely unique and enthralling drama that never loses its grip on the spectators' feelings from start to finish.

The story is in every way a novelty and so well handled by director and players that you won't stop to consider whether it is probable or not. Conviction is established to the extent of believing it within the range of possibility, anyhow, and the suspense is so well developed and sustained that it "gets over" with tremendous effect.

A little gruesome, maybe, the hanging scene is grimly impressive, although not too prolonged or treated with unnecessary elaboration of morbid detail. And the situation where Dr. Gelzer works over the dead man, with the girl watching the indicator which will register success or failure, is marvelously well staged.

The love romance is neatly wrought out and its happy finish quite counterbalances any slight tendency to gloom that the prison and death atmosphere may have created.

Milton Sills, as Will Campbell, furnishes a character study as clean-cut as a cameo and throbbing with dynamic force. He has never appeared to better advantage during his long and successful screen career.

Claire Adams wins all hearts by her touching performance of heroine Minnie Reilly and Brandon Hurst is an extremely convincing figure as the physician whose experiment restores the dead to life. The support is excellent, good photography distinguishes the entire production and the lighting is clear and distinct.

Over the Cliff, Universal

This is the eighth chapter of the historical serial "In The Days of Daniel Boone," starring Eileen Sedgwick and Jack Mower. By the timely appearance of a group of citizens, the Regulators are dispersed and Susan is released by Jack. Henderson banishes Redmond from his home when Jack proves that he is a Tory. While Boone and his colonists are preparing to depart, Girty, disguised as an Indian, steals the original deed of the new territory. In his pursuit of Girty, Jack jumps from his horse to Girty's. The animal plunges over a cliff into the lake.

First Runs on Broadway

STRAND

- Overture—Il Guarney (Gomez)
- Odds and Ends
- Musical Toys
 - Minute Waltz (Chopin)
 - I Dream of a Garden of Sunshine (Lohr)
 - Nola (Arndt)
 - Theme
- Mark Strand Topical Review
- Prologue to Circus Days—A Morning at the Circus
- Jackie Coogan in Circus Days (First National)
- Dippy Doo Dad Comedy "Be Honest (Pathe)
- Organ Solo

Press Comments

American—Filled with fun and sentiment, and is rather more interesting in itself than most of the films in which the little star has appeared. Times—Fairly good entertainment. Actually this is what is known to the motion picture experts as an audience picture. Tribune—If you enjoy seeing Jackie Coogan doing cute things, go to see "Circus Days." World—The expression of Jackie's face under the stimulus of his first kiss should be sufficient to secure the success of the picture with anyone. Evening World—He's (Jackie Coogan) really a great actor, who all alone makes "Circus Days" something you ought not to miss. Telegram—The acting ability of Jackie Coogan is not to be questioned. Sun and Globe—One of his best pictures to date—as entertaining as a barrelful of monkeys.

CAPITOL

- Capitol Grand Orchestra—Fourth Symphony (Tschaikowsky)
- Madame Elsa Stralia—Il Bacio (Arditi)
- Ballet from "Faust"—(Gounod)
- Capitol Magazine
- Prologue—Trail of Ninety-Eight—By Robert W. Service
- The Spoilers (Goldwyn)
- Capitol Grand Organ

Press Comments

Times—A splendid fighting film, in which there are tense and gripping situations that will undoubtedly stir the audiences. Herald—It packs a greater wallop than any of its multitudinous imitators. World—As pictures of this type go, "The Spoilers" is well above the average. Journal—One of the most realistic screen fights ever shown is on view this week at the Capitol Theatre. Telegram—"The Spoilers" in its new form is a cinema masterpiece. Sun and Globe—It serves to perpetuate a rattling good story.

RIALTO

- Overture—Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody (Liszt)
- Riesensfeld's Classical Jazz
- Budapest—A post scenic
- Bin Gallini, Mandolinist—Zigeunerweisen (Sarasate)
- Rialto Magazine
- Soprano Solo—Prince Charming (Liza Lehmann)
- Gloria Swanson in Bluebeard's 8th Wife (Paramount)
- Dancers Artistique in An Original Syncopated Novelty—Runnin' Wild (A Harrington Gibbs)
- West is West (Educational)

Press Comments

American—The story is amusing and skilfully treated. World—Gloria is appealing as well as alluring. Telegram—Miss Gloria Swanson has an ideal role as the worldly wise heroine of "Bluebeard's Eighth wife."

CENTRAL

Loyal Lives (Vitagraph)

Press Comments

Sun and Globe—The picture would be noteworthy if only for the public service it renders in giving homage to this public servant, but it addition it has been directed so well by Charles Giblyn that it would prove interesting even if the spectator never received a letter in his life. World—The production is so bad that it seems almost skilful burlesque. Telegram—If you are fond of melodrama go to the Central Theatre.

SCHADE PROSPERS ON TWO-FOR-ONE IDEA

Sandusky, O.—Figuring that any receipts are velvet during the usual hot spell, George Schade, owner and manager of the house bearing his name started the two-for-one idea during his summer run.

Small printed cards were distributed broadcast announcing that the card, accompanied by one paid admission, would admit two people. For children, ten cents extra would admit two.

The method of distribution marked the ingenuity of the plan. With Sandusky noted as a summer resort, Schade made a special play for the summer resort hotels, picking out about 100 names of guests registered at the various hotels. He made sure that his selection was composed of married women who would be all the more likely to have their escorts take them to see the picture. The escort, of course, paid.

"White Shoulders" was the first picture upon which the plan was tried out and Schade reports business considerably above the average summertime gross.

EXPLOITS DUKE IN PENROD CAMPAIGN

Cleveland.—A contest which got over exceptionally well because it was brim full of human interest and appeal was staged by A. A. Malaney, exploitation man for Loew's Ohio Theatres, in connection with the showing of "Penrod and Sam" at the State.

Malaney played up "Duke," the dog in "Penrod and Sam," by featuring him in stills and ads. Then he arranged with the Cleveland Press to run a contest offering a dog like Duke to the boy who wrote the best letter describing his idea of the ideal dog—the kind he should be and the qualities he should possess. A daily story was carried, with pictures of Ben Alexander and Duke, stills from the picture, as illustrations. The response was remarkably good, and some of the letters even drew comment on the editorial page. In case a boy did not want the dog, he was allowed to select a suit of Penrod Clothes, thus furnishing a tie-up with a local department store. A $10 gold piece and twenty-five tickets to the theatre were other prizes offered.

TWO SETS OF WINNERS IN THIS DADDY STUNT

Sackville, N. B.—In the exploitation of "Daddy" at the Imperial Theatre, not a single line of extra advertising was used in putting over a stunt which drew big patronage.

The scene showing Jackie Coogan as violinist was the basis for the idea. Youngsters of Sackville were invited to enter a violin contest, extra inducements being offered in the liberal distribution of passes to get a representative gathering.

The novelty consisted in having two sets of judges. One set selected a winner based on audience applause. The other set, composed of musicians, selected a winner on merit. To both winners season passes were issued.

The same theatre has also had a successful baby contest, the entrance requirement of which was that each mother wishing to enter a baby must have attended a certain number of performances at the theatre.

NOVEL DISPLAY BREAKS NO ADVERTISING RULE

New York.—In addition to a number of other window flashes, the thirty "Happiness" Candy Stores in New York City were tied up by Eddie Bonns, manager of exploitation for Goldwyn Cosmopolitan, and by Charles Cohen, of the New York Exchange, for part of the first week and all of the second week showing of "Three Wise Fools" at the Capitol Theatre.

Profitable EXPLOITATION

Though the "Happiness" Candy Stores have never before permitted their windows to be used to advertise anything but their own goods, there was inducement in the case of "Three Wise Fools" because of the novel way in which the displays were arranged, a special sign was made for these stores. This sign was a sheet of cardboard, 15x30 inches, upon which was mounted a photograph from the production stills, of Eleanor Boardman holding in her lap a large box of bon-bons. Diagonally beneath this was a letter on Goldwyn Cosmopolitan letter head, which read as follows:

My dear Mr. Vidor:

Let me thank you again and again for giving me "Happiness" candy to use in the making of my scenes in "Three Wise Fools." It gave real "Happiness" to my work in this picture.

Sincerely yours,
ELEANOR BOARDMAN.

H. R. Whaley, publicity director for the United Retail Candy Stores, Inc., gave permission for these cards to be used in each of the thirty "Happiness" stores.

MAKES THE MOST OF ADVANCE BOOKINGS

Good showmanship consists largely in finding advantages to the public, and telling them about it, in every theatre policy, act or project—whether expedience for the theatre or deliberate planning for the public's benefit be at the bottom of one or all of them. Manager A. L. Middleton of the Grand Theatre, De Queen, Ark., has his book dated up to the end of this year, there are a few openings, of course. He shows his showmanship by issuing a card with all these dates—open dates are marked "to be selected."

The date book is a folder printed on heavy stock so it will last. It is headed "coming—specially selected Specials" and advises patrons to keep the card and notify the management if they think any of the pictures listed is not up to the mark. "No picture is too big for the Grand," it goes on, "but some stars and companies have selling policies that prohibit our buying their good pictures and leaving their poor ones alone. If you know of a real good picture you want the Grand to show on any of those dates marked 'to be selected' advise the manager."

The folder also ties up with the Grand's newspaper advertising by advising patrons to watch the "upper left hand corner of back page of De Queen Bee."

ADVANCE SHOW PAYS STATE

The State Theatre, Erie, Pa., collected some good advance publicity for the Rex Ingram production of "Where the Pavement Ends" by giving a free morning performance for 1,500 Girl Reserves two days prior to the regular showing of the picture. The Erie Times cooperated with the theatre.

SLIDES DECORATE MARQUEE

Vandalia, Mo. — You can't stop H. D. Anderson. He built a new marquee for the Orpheum Theatre, but couldn't get any art glass for it.

Finally he took all the old stock Paramount slides that he had been saving and used them instead.

REVIEWER APPLAUDS CAMEO MANAGEMENT

Every exhibitor appreciates the value of "service" in the theatre as an attraction second only to the program itself, and the successful exhibitors put that ideal into practice. However, a little reminder now and then that courtesy to patrons pays dividends is not amiss and helps to encourage the exhibitor's efforts, often very laborious and disheartening enough, in the observance that the patron must be served and that courtesy at any cost must be the rule. Therefore we reprint here an article which appeared in the review columns of the New York World. The tribute to the management of the Cameo theatre was written by Quinn Martin, motion picture reviewer of the World.

"Every time we go to this tiny Cameo Theatre we are impressed again with the excellence of its management—the painstaking care which every one in the place devotes to the comfort of its patrons. It is this kind of a theatre: We walked in, unknown, of course, and went up to the second floor to get a drink of water. We had no pennies with which to buy a drinking cup, and an usher saw our predicament. He asked to be allowed to take a nickel to the cashier and have it changed, but it developed the cashier also was out of pennies. So the usher raced back again and made his way to the projection room, where he "borrowed" a penny from one of the operators, handed it over to us and apologized for all the trouble he had caused us."

NEWSPAPER TIE-UP ON ENEMIES OF BEAUTY

Cleveland.—Eddie Carrier, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exploitation man in Cleveland, obtained a valuable newspaper tie-up in exploiting "Enemies of Women" at the Stillman Theatre with the Cleveland Press, which received more than 300 lists of the ten worst enemies of woman's beauty, during the ten days that the contest was run.

Mr. Carrier prepared a sample list of what Alma Rubens thinks are the most dangerous enemies of beauty. These were: lack of sleep; worry; over-eating; alcoholic stimulants; fat; lack of exercise; too much jazz dancing in unhealthy rooms; lack of interest in facts outside one's own occupation; lack of interest in wholesome amusements; too much and too many cosmetics.

The Cleveland Press asked its women readers to prepare their own lists of the ten worst enemies of feminine beauty. They were also asked to send, if possible, a photograph of themselves to be used in connection with the publication of the best of its lists received.

MELON-EATING DARKY A GOOD WINDOW SHOW

Simple exploitation stunts are frequently the most effective as Charles Cohen, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exploiter from the New York Exchange, found in putting on the campaign in Asbury Park for the showing of Distinctive's "Backbone" at Lyric Theatre. In the window of a prominent restaurant was placed a small negro boy armed with a knife and a smile and surrounded by several watermelons. The boy was told to eat all the watermelon he liked, but to eat it slowly to make his performance last as long as possible. The proprietor of the restaurant put cards in the window reading: "Good food is the BACKBONE of good health." At the bottom of each card was a line reading: "See 'Backbone' at the Lyric Theatre."

Fury was written all over the cutout display used in the lobby of the Kentucky Theatre billing for the First National production starring Richard Barthelmess.

Heralds were circulated by the laundries of Buffalo to advertise the showing at Shea's Hippodrome of the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan picturization of "Enemies of Women."

Two short subjects were featured in the electrical display on the marquee of Saxe's Strand, Milwaukee. An Educational comedy and the golf film starring Gene Sarazen were also played up in newspaper copy.

Manager Rice of the Auditorium, Winston-Salem, N. C., designed this attractive lattice frame as an attractor for First National's "Mighty Lak a Rose." The title was written across the top of the frame in rustic letters fashioned of compo board.

Pelts and cutouts decorated the lobby of the Garrick Theatre, Minneapolis, for the presentation of the Metro animal pictures, "Trailing African Wild Animals." In the centre of the lobby a gun case displaying rifles used by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson was featured.

A candy shop also joined the legion of stores which took advantage of the Chicago presentation of "Circus Days" as an attraction for their window displays.

The song "Circus Days" was featured in an attractive display of the Home Drug Company of Chicago. With a book, a song and plenty of colorful display material the new First National picture is well supplied with angles for merchant cooperation.

First National's "Circus Days" had its world premier at the California Theatre, Anaheim, Calif., shown above. The boys were the target of some stunts the appeal of which may be judged by the congregation in front of the California.

The campaign in Anaheim for "Circus Days" made capital of the "World Premier" line in true circus style. There were some clowns who performed out front and the crowds they drew went further to impress the populace with the importance of the event. Harry Wilson, Sol Lesser's press representative was on the scene and reports from Anaheim indicate that Harry got action.

Exploiting the short subject, "Weeping Waters," one of the Pathe Oregon Trail Series produced by Kiser Studios, was featured in the street demonstration used by the People's Theatre, Portland, Ore. The float was displayed during the demonstration in honor of the Late President Harding.

A fleet of taxis advertised First National's "Within the Law" when it played the T & D Theatre, Sacramento, Calif. The tie-up was negotiated by Manager M. B. Hustler, who got banners on 20 out of the 22 cabs operated by the company he induced to campaign for him.

A handpainted six sheet displayed in the lobby of the State Theatre, Pittsburgh in advance of the showing of Goldwyn's "Backbone." The campaign combatted a hot-weather streak and in all displays of the title these snow-capped letters were featured.

The lobby displays at the Rex Theatre, Eugene, Ore., follow a certain technic, which has its advantages. The pictures above showing arrangements for the two First National attractions make plain the reason why the Rex displays have become a regular feature of the house. The designs are made by Manager A. H. McDonald and his advertising manager, Russell Brown.

The MODERN THEATRE

Building — Equipping — Operating

B—Natural colored glass lamps possess the advantages outlined above under dipped bulbs and in addition, are permanent. They are available in many colors in any size, but of relatively high first cost.

C—Glass caps possess the advantages of colored bulbs and cost much less over a period of time but where lamps are exposed to view, are somewhat unsightly. To date, caps have been developed for use up to and including the 150-watt Mazda C lamp. These must have a well designed holding device to prevent any possibility of the cap dropping and also so constructed as to permit no "white" light to escape.

D—Glass plates are somewhat difficult to apply, needing a special holding device and are rather expensive. They are obviously of use across the mouths of only relatively small reflectors.

E—Gelatin color screens are available in a wide variety of tints and shades. They are therefore especially of service to produce delicate gradations of color. The gelatin material is rather difficult to manipulate, being affected by moisture, extreme heat or cold. The screens break easily and the life of the screen in service is rather short. The gelatin screens are inexpensive, but cumbersome to handle. Where used across the mouths of reflectors or in border and strip lights, special precautions must be taken to have a reliable holding device. By this is meant some means of preventing the gelatin from curling, opening a gap and allowing unmodified light to escape, spoiling the effect. A network of fine wire overcomes this difficulty. The means of holding the color-frame in place is also important. A drop will frequently sway as it is being raised to the flies, striking a border light and possibly breaking or knocking a screen out of place. This necessitates lowering the entire border and replacing the screen. If colored lamps are used and this happens, one or two lamps may be broken, but the effect will not be marred. If color caps are used with a good holding device, unless the shock is severe enough to break the cap, the color effect would not be spoiled. It is likely that if the cap is broken, the lamp would be broken also.

F—Fabrics or colored paper screens are at best only temporary. They should be fire-proof in character. They tend to have a very high absorption for a given color modification. They are rarely of service for general color effects, save in times of necessity, but for decorative purposes in introducing a touch of color, ornamental silk shades function well.

The Effect of Color on Appearance of Objects

In order to use colored lighting intelligently, one must have a knowledge of certain comparatively simple fun-

The Stage and Its Lighting

By A. L. POWELL
Edison Lamp Works

Part Four

FIG. 12

This Gives a Very Rough Idea of the Special Equipment Often Installed for a Particular Production. In this instance, none of the regular stage equipment is employed. In addition to twenty-eight units for lighting the cyclorama, a total of sixty lens spot lamps with concentrated filament Mazda C lamps are employed. These are individually controlled and specially positioned. They are located at each side of the proscenium arch, on the front bridge, at the entrances, in the balcony and beneath glass plates in the floor. Four arc effect machines will be noted on the front bridge.

damentals. It must be remembered that a thing is seen by the light it reflects to the eye. If light does not strike anything, one is not aware that there is light present. In the moving picture theatre nothing is seen from the projection booth to the screen, unless there is smoking in the house, then the tiny particles of smoke, as they pass through the beam of light reflect and show the sharply defined edges of the beam.

If a room were finished in a dead black and there were no objects in it to reflect light and lamps were present but not directly visible, one could scarcely tell whether these were turned on unless he could see the light sources themselves. There would be no impression of light or color. Hence, to obtain the maximum effect of light and the special color effects for a given expenditure of power, light colored surroundings which reflect well are necessary.

Colored objects appear so because they pick out certain rays from the light and reflect these back to the eye, absorbing other rays. White light is made up of all the colors of the rainbow. A red object in daylight or under ordinary artificial illumination appears red because it reflects the red rays. A yellow object reflects yellow light and also red, orange and green rays, the other colors and tints act similarly.

Now what is the effect of colored light falling on colored objects? A pure red light falling on a red object will be reflected in full value; falling on a green object will be absorbed, and the object, reflecting no light, will appear black. If it falls on a yellow object, the object will appear red, because, as mentioned above, the yellow reflects red among other colors.

There are three so-called primary colors of light which, mixed together, will give white. These are red, green and blue. Mixtures of two, or even the three primary colors in varying proportions will give all of the intermediate colors. Red and green will produce yellow; blue and green, blue-green; blue and red, purple; red and green, with more red than green, orange, and so on.

It must be remembered that light, rather than pigments, is being discussed. With pigments which act by the so-called subtractive method, the three primary colors are red, yellow and blue. With pigments, green is produced by mixing blue and yellow. References in the bibliography will give more detailed information on this question.

Certain effects produced by colored light falling on colored objects were mentioned above, and it must be borne in mind that the term "pure" was used. It is rare in practice that one encounters pure colors either in light or pigments. The general effects are, however, of the order indicated.

If one desires to go into the matter from a scientific standpoint, it is necessary to examine the light emitted by the colored lamp, or transmitted through the color screen with a spectroscope. A spectroscope is merely a prism set in some sort of tube and has the property of breaking up the light into its component parts. White light examined through a spectroscope shows us the complete spectrum or rainbow. Pure red light shows only the red part of the rainbow, the rest of the band or image appearing black. This instrument may also be used for examining the reflected light from colored objects. A very simple form of spectroscope which can be obtained at ground and illuminate it with red light, the background and the object will both reflect red light in its full value. There will be no contrast or difference in brightness, and the object will be invisible. Similarly, green light falling on a green object on a white background will cause the object to fade out.

Fig. 14 shows, in a crude manner, the effect just discussed. In this the foliage on the trees is green, the trunks and branches are red. Illuminated with red light, the foliage will appear green and the limbs red. If this is illuminated with green light (or viewed through green spectacles), the foliage fades into the background and the a very low cost is adequate for rough work.

The commercial reds (glasses, dyes and gelatin screens) are usually quite pure; the greens frequently contain blue, yellow and even a trace of red. The blues are likely to contain all the colors, blue, of course, predominating. In practice, therefore, before making the actual installation, it is desirable to experiment with both the colored light and the pigment intended for use on the scenery or decoration. By manipulation and correct choice of material, a desirable effect can be arrived at.

The action of colored light on colored material is of importance in decorative lighting and on the stage. By the proper combination of colored light and painted scenery, it is possible to entirely change a scene without manipulating any scenery. This effect is based on the following principle:

If we have a red object on a white back-bare branches appear black or a dark brown. If it is illuminated with red light, the foliage appears brownish and the limbs are practically invisible. This crude example is purposely simple but with experimentation, the principle can be extended to produce truly marvelous and startling effects.

INVITATION GOLF

C. W. Deibel of the Youngstown, Ohio Country Club, with a low gross score of 75, and David Loew of Metro, with a low net of 63, were the winners of the annual invitation golf tournament for officials and executives of the Home Office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, held August 2, at Adolph Zukor's country home, Mountain View Farm, Rockland County, N. Y. About forty golfers took part in the morning, qualifying round of twelve holes, and in the final round of 18 holes in the afternoon.

MARR & COLTON IN EXPORT FIELD

Will Place Their Product in Various Countries of the World

The Marr & Colton Company, Warsaw, N. Y., builders of concert organs, who for many years have been installing their product in America's theatres, have received numerous inquiries from foreign countries and connections have been made with an export house in New York City so that the product of this company will now be found in various countries throughout the world.

In addition to manufacturing large concert organs, they are also supplying the small theatre owners with a line of automatic pianos, organs, orchestrians and all kinds of musical merchandise. They are now able to fill the musical requirements of a small or large organization in everything known to music.

The company reports that their business has grown steadily and that present indications point to a large increase in sales and an addition to their plant.

Recent contracts for organs have been received from the following cities: Detroit, Mich.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Marshfield, Oregon; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Hamtramck, Mich.; Carnegie, Pa.; Rochester, N. Y.; Mt. Morris, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa., and Fredonia, N. Y.

WHY REMOVE HATS?

Well boys, here's one that snaps the biscuit.

It was sent to us by Thomas Butler, projectionist of the Ideal theatre in Jackson, Mich.

A projectionist's business is to watch his machine and the screen, and in doing this he is kept busy, so much so that he has very little spare time to see who is who in the audience.

Mr. Butler is evidently one of the different sort—the kind you meet once in a while, who has the interest of the show at heart.

From his peek hole in the booth he has observed, at various times, the different styles of headdress, such as bobbed hair and hats. As his illustration shows there is not much to be gained by having the women remove their hats.

A mighty good suggestion would be for the exhibitors to present to each of their women patrons a paper hat, something on the style of a dust cap, and ask that they be worn during the performance so that the mere man in back can see the picture he paid for instead of a lot of bobbed hair frilled up to take more room than the old style picture hat.

Quittner Tells How He Gets Out the Crowd

Problems of a Small Town Man

SOME ONE remarked a long time ago that one-half of the world didn't know how the other half lived. He might have added with equal truth "or worked." Also has it been suggested that "Paris is not France." And the same utterance may be applied in a comparative way to any other nation and its metropolis or one of its large cities.

Realizing New York is not the United States and also that frequently it happens a larger degree of skill is required successfully to operate a theatre in a small community than is demanded in a center of population the editor of Exhibitors Trade Review sought out an exhibitor in a small town and asked him to tell his story for the benefit of the readers of this journal.

The man approached was Joseph Quittner, who owns three houses in Middletown, N. Y., a town of 18,300 population and situated sixty-eight miles from New York.

While Mr. Quittner has been in the amusement business but a few years you will agree that in that time he has absorbed the spirit of the showman.

You will agree also as you read the story so graphically told by this exhibitor that he brings to his new task not only the enthusiasm of the business man who wins but a trained mind as well.

Graduate of Yale, 1908

The possession of the latter factor may be due to the study involved in the acquisition of a Yale sheepskin of the vintage of 1908 and to the experience acquired as an assistant corporation counsel in New York City under Mayor Mitchel, to which post he was appointed at the age of twenty-six years.

Mr. Quittner's knowledge of life may have been expanded by his experience for two years as a voluntary worker in the University Settlement in New York and as captain and assistant military attache in Switzerland for two years.

That the subject of this article believes in organization among exhibitors is proved by his membership on the Board of Directors of the Theatre Owners of New York State.

This Middletown exhibitor admits he can do almost anything around a theatre except post bills and that there is nothing too small in the day's work about an amusement house for him to tackle.

The latter remark holds with especial force when it comes to a question of music, as Mr. Quittner is equipped to play in the orchestra or to direct it and is at home in front of an organ console.

The State Theatre is a combination picture and vaudeville house, the first half of the week being devoted to vaudeville and the remainder to pictures. The State is a three hundred thousand dollar structure and contains 1,450 seats.

The Stratton Theatre, with 1,250 seats, plays pictures five days and road attractions one day. The Show Shop, seating 950, is closed at present.

Broadway vs. Middletown

The conversation with Mr. Quittner covered a large ground, of the picture likes and dislikes of those who live in smaller communities, of patronage, of advertising and exploitation and of buying pictures.

But let Mr. Quittner have the floor, while we hold the pen:

"Not necessarily will a picture that goes on Broadway go also in Middletown," said

Joseph Quittner

Mr. Quittner. "I am speaking of Middletown as of any smaller community, of a town apart from a center. Several factors enter into the situation. For one thing, it depends upon how close the town happens to be from a geographical viewpoint to the city.

"For instance, if the town is not so far removed from the city that metropolitan newspapers reach it on the day of publication or as to prevent the citizens from making frequent trips. By that I do not

Joe Quittner Says:

I find that there is a large element in a town that likes pictures of action.

We believe that we should show all the best pictures in the markets even if they don't all make money.

The theatre owner should be a very respected member of the community.

If employes go out among the public and speak in eulogistic terms of the management of a theatre it has an excellent effect upon the public.

Advertising is one of the most important elements in the operation of an amusement enterprise.

mean commuting distance. I am speaking of a place like Middletown, which is sixty-eight miles from New York."

Mr. Quittner quoted "Passion" as an example of a picture that while it was an exceptional subject in New York he admitted he would have been afraid to book it in his theatres. He added that in the case of the exceptional production, like "Robin Hood," the size of the town did not matter.

Generally speaking, Mr. Quittner said, his experience was against the booking of spectacles and the picture that is touted too much.

"I find that there is a large element in a town that likes pictures of action," said Mr. Quittner. "As a matter of fact, the tendency of the times is toward pictures of that kind and less toward those requiring exceptional production like "Robin Hood,"

"Sea stories and good westerns, like pictures that are being shown now, such as 'Girl of the Golden West,' 'Salomy Jane' and 'The Covered Wagon,' are very popular in our houses.

Action Pictures for Workers

"It was only last week the president of the central labor body came to the theatre and asked that we make provisions for showing pictures of a lighter vein for the benefit of the workers. We consequently decided that we would reduce our prices and give an opportunity of coming to the theatre to a certain class that ordinarily does not come.

"We also stated that since we were about to go into our buying policy for the year we would add to our bookings such material as would lighten the programs, enhancing the recreation value by adding subjects of action.

"We have noticed that different types of patrons came for different pictures. We draw on the suburbs for a radius of twenty miles as a general thing, and for a picture of exceptional merit we have patrons from the Pennsylvania line, twenty-five miles away. We know this because we receive inquiries from that distance.

"From the western pictures and pictures of action featuring the so-called program stars we get as a clientele those who work with their hands. Saturday nights our people are of the so-called working class. Friday nights they are largely business men.

"On the other hand we believe that we should show all the best pictures in the market even if they don't all make money. That is to develop as many theatregoers as possible. Theatregoing is a matter of habit.

"A man may acquire the habit and come regularly for four weeks in succession. Then something may come up to divert his interest and it will require a happening out of the ordinary, either in the way of exploitation or attraction, to bring him back."

Building Good-Will

Good-will, Mr. Quittner said, was a most important thing. It can't be measured in box office receipts, because there it is the type of performance that really counts.

"The manner in which one obtains good-will varies, of course," said Mr. Quittner, "with the individual and with the town and the particular status of the individual in the town. The theatre owner should be a very respected member of the community. His private life should be beyond reproach.

"In the limelight at all times and much in the position of a man holding public office, the exhibitor should be a public-spirited citizen who at all times co-operates with the city officials in anything that is good for the city.

"For instance, the mayor of Middletown once approached me in regard to the using of the theatre for a memorial service to Theodore Roosevelt. The theatre was given over.

"In addition I obtained for the sponsors of the meeting the services of former Governor Whitman, as the speaker of the day. Needless to say, both the Mayor and the city officials were deeply appreciative, and showed it by giving me a dinner the day before last New Year's.

Creating Employe Morale

"Another method of creating good-will in a small town is in your treatment of employes. There is, of course, a much more intimate relation between employer and employe in small towns than in cities. You eat with him and he with you. He sees your family and you see his. He calls you by your first name and you do the same with him.

"Yet you must know how to do this and at the same time to command your employe's respect. The only way to command his respect is to let him know you know your business. Esprit du corps is a very important thing, and if employes go out among the public and speak in eulogistic terms of the management of a theatre it has an excellent effect upon the people at large.

"Last Christmas, in appreciation of the treatment they had received as they expressed it, our employes gave us a silver cup.

"At one time our employes went on strike. They had no grievance and said so. They were satisfied with working conditions and pay, but wanted a contract signed with the union.

"Notwithstanding the house was union otherwise the strike was soon terminated, because the relations with our employes had been very harmonious. And this all tends toward good-will.

Don't Advertise Charity

"Frequently we have tendered our theatres for religious services. We know we have the indorsements of the ministers' association because they have given them to us. Shows are sent to various charitable institutions regularly.

"It must always be borne in mind that a theatre's acts of charity should never be advertised. The strength lies in the fact they are not advertised.

"Advertising, as every one knows, is one of the most important elements in the operation of an amusement enterprise.

"Advertising may be classified under two headings—the so-called stock advertising and exploitation.

"The first as a general rule is your regular weekly advertising, for which you have made either budget provision or other arrangement; newspaper, program, heralds, screen and billboards.

"Exploitation is additional advertising. This may be overdone. It varies according to the particular case, and its value lies in how little money you can really spend.

"Many times it is the idea, not the money, that carries over an exploitation drive.

Billboards Profitable

"I deem advertising of such importance that I give it my personal attention. The method of advertising varies with the locality. Billboards are important in country advertising, because the quality lithograph makes a peculiarly rapid impress upon the mind of whoever sees it.

"Billboards in the surrounding territory I personally inspect each and every time I get an opportunity. By making inquiries in the various villages I find that this kind of advertising is indeed very profitable.

"Newspapers are an excellent medium, not for any business essential, but to keep your regular customers informed as to what is going on.

"Mailing lists won't warrant the money that is spent on them unless they are carefully selected. It is not necessary to have a mailing list in a town the size of Middletown, but it is necessary to have a mailing list for the surrounding territory.

Reaching Automobile Owners

"And that is a mailing list of automobile owners only.

"This method of direct advertising produces substantial results, so much so that notwithstanding Middletown has only 18,000 population we find that our matinees in the summer are twice as large as what they are in the winter.

"We trace that to the roads being open and to the fact that people from the surrounding territory are approached so little when they come to town to do their shopping."

Screen advertising, Mr. Quittner thought, was hardly necessary to discuss, as theatre managements vary so widely in their views as to the advisability of it. It depends on the type of theatre, he said. As the State was a very high type of house he permitted no advertising whatsoever on the screen.

"In the cheaper grade of theatre the clientele does not expect so much, and it is not bored by advertising," Mr. Quittner added.

Exploitation and Waste

When it came to a matter of exploitation as the showman understands the term the Middletown man declared it was a subject that varied in its usefulness according to the resourcefulness and the ingenuity of the person creating it.

"No person can really be a successful exhibitor unless he likes his work," continued Mr. Quittner, "is full of enthusiasm, has a broad knowledge of life and psychology and of affairs in general and is resourceful at all times and alive to his opportunities."

Can a Motion Picture Be Greater Than the Play From Which It Was Taken?

By JOHN GOLDEN

CAN a motion picture be greater than the play upon which it was founded? Until a few weeks ago my answer would have been "No," but today I would say, "Yes, by all means." It is Goldwyn's picture of Austin Strong's "Three Wise Fools" which changed my opinion. And I really ought to know something about that play, for I produced it and after five years it is still being put on in stock.

"Three Wise Fools" was a good play—it pleased the public by telling an appealing story which was excellently acted. It ran for two seasons on Broadway and then had a long, prosperous road tour before it was released for stock and for the screen.

At the end of five years it has been made into a motion picture. I have seen the film version and feel compelled to state that it is better entertainment than the play. The story is fuller, completer and more rounded off—an advantage which any motion picture story has over a stage story.

It is a well-known fact that almost any play can be improved by eliminating words and adding action. This is specifically true of an ailing play which is hovering between life and death.

The first thing the play doctor does who is called in in such a case is to condense the dialogue, eliminating whole chunks of it, and increase the action.

The breath of life is breathed into it.

Less Words, More Action

Now just here is where the motion picture gets its big kick—its great advantage over the stage play. It uses few words and lots of action; instead of telling the audience about things, it shows them being done.

"Actions speak louder than words," says the old copybook maxim. Nowhere is this truer than in stage entertainment whether on the boards, acted by living actors, or on the screen upon which the shadow of living actors is projected. That is why pictures have such a great popular appeal—why the illustrated newspaper has a greater circulation than the dignified journal which eschews cuts.

The motion picture reveals to the eye of the spectator character in action; we really see human beings do things instead of hearing them say things, or reading, as in the case of the novel, what the author says his characters said and did.

If a man has cheated another and the victim retaliates, which makes the stronger impression upon you—to hear him call the man a cheat and a thief or to see him knock him down? The eye conveys more vivid impressions to the brain than the ear, except perhaps in exceptional circumstances, and in this lies the secret of the great appeal and popularity of the motion picture.

That's why I admit that Goldwyn's screen version of "Three Wise Fools" is better entertainment than my own stage version;

JOHN GOLDEN is an expert on play construction. First of all he has delivered the world's record holder, "Lightnin'," and the second world's record comedy, "First Year," under the formula "plays of humor without an unclean line." Mr. Golden has stuck to this formula so closely that he is said to have taken four years in rewriting Austin Strong's love-drama, "Seventh Heaven," now at the Booth Theatre, before producing it solely to bring it within the Golden formula.

It promises to be one of his biggest successes, now passing its four hundredth consecutive performance. That looks like standing for some particular thing, and sticking to it.

it shows action, action, and yet more action—dramatic incidents and episodes which I could not show on the stage because of the limits of space and of time.

Camera Knows No Limit

The camera knows no limit of time or of space, theatrically speaking, and gives the motion picture producer another big advantage over the producer of stage plays.

And here is another advantage which the picture possesses; the first and only company can be seen all over the country, in every city, town and village.

The great cast which Goldwyn engaged for its screen version of "Three Wise Fools" would bankrupt a producer of stage plays no matter how successful it might be, for he would have to go on paying an enormous sum in salaries year in and year out, if the play was successful and lasted that long.

The motion picture producer pays the salary for three to six months and his picture is done. Enough prints are made from it to supply the entire country.

John Golden

"Fans" as they are called from coast to coast, will see Claude Gillingwater act the role in the picture which he acted on the stage, and will see with him that sterling old "legitimate" actor, William H. Crane, Alec Francis, John Sainpolis, Brinsley Shaw and the others in the excellent cast assembled for the picture.

Salary Not Continuing

The salary cost is done away with once for all, no matter how many prints may be distributed. And any little town in the wilds of Wyoming or in the Arizona desert will see the same sterling cast that New York and Chicago saw. I managed to keep Claude Gillingwater in my production of the play during its New York run and on tour and considered myself mighty lucky to have succeeded in doing that.

Excellent as Gillingwater was in the play, I found his acting even more diverting, colorful and varied in the screen version. So, taking everything into consideration, I abide by my original statement, "Yes, we have pictures today which are better than the plays from which they were taken." If the stage version was good enough to last for five years then the screen version is enough better to last five times that long.

Appreciations of Mr. Harding

By Bobby North

Printed page or spoken word can never express the loss that has come to us with the passing of Warren G. Harding. Not alone as the Nation's chief executive, but as a man—a big, deep, understanding man.

In all things that were humanity's to enjoy, these were President Harding's to enjoy. Sports, Motion Pictures, everything that appealed to the masses—found in him a friend.

And to Warren G. Harding the Motion Picture owes much of its progress. The welfare of the industry was a matter of deep concern to him. Its art he loved and gone—the spirit of him lives and shall live in our hearts as an inspiration, a guide post on life's highway.

By Murray W. Garsson

In the death of President Harding, not only have the people of this country at large sustained a tremendous personal loss, but the motion picture industry as well.

I had the pleasure of a close personal acquaintance with him and when filming "Presidential Possibilities," while he was still a member of the Senate I was amazed to learn of his knowledge of the intimate details of our industry. He told me that he believed the motion picture was one of the big elements in the advancement of our business and social life, and that many of the contemplated and suggested restrictions upon the industry were unwarranted and unjustified. We have indeed lost a great and good friend and one who understood us.

By E. W. Hammons

President Harding was one of the most sympathetic friends the motion picture industry has ever had in high office, and we mourn his death for the great loss it means to us as well as to the country as a whole. America has lost a good president and an excellent leader, whose calm kindness should be a splendid lesson to us in these days when the world is so much in turmoil.

The Fortunes of Exhibitor X

The Fourth Week

I CANNED the orchestra and rearranged the organ policy. Ever since I've been here the orchestra, a good one, has consisted of five pieces. I let them all go meaning a cut of $213 in the payroll. I let the chief organist who was getting $100 a week go and hired a good organist at $60 and an assistant at $35, making my music bill about $95 instead of $100. And with the two organists I get a musical variety, for the assistant organist plays differently from the chief and also doubles on the piano.

Also since the bug to cut has gotten hold of me I fired the special officer, last of the uniformed Mohicans. He was getting $18 a week and all he did was argue with the patrons.

They are not fond of orchestra music here. I am giving them organ music from a regular cue sheet furnished with the picture. The more I see of accessories that go with the picture the more I am in favor of them. They are proving of real value in this case.

I believe the music change is responsible for increased attendance for the average for the first half of this the fourth week is better by about 175 than the previous weeks.

Up to this time the various cuts figure out something like this:

	Before	Now	Saving
Weekly long distance telephone calls ...	$ 25.00	None	$25.00
Ushers	41.50	$15.00	26.50
Music	313.00	95.00	218.00
Special watchman ..	17.00	None	17.00
Sign artists	26.00	6.00	20.00
Cleaning uniforms and gloves	4.50	None	4.50
Total	$427.00	$116.00	$311.00

These are how starting with little things the drain on the bankroll can be dammed. And at that I am nowhere near the bed rock basis upon which my opposition is operating.

And I haven't touched the picture policy to speak of. We are still sticking to the one feature, plain program.

There are other small details, completely overlooked, that have held the X back. I have discovered that for more than a year the evening show has been closing about 10.05—a disastrous oversight in view of the fact that the last car reaching outlying sections of the city passes the theatre door at 10 o'clock. This is the most serious error I have discovered in the entire policy. The night show now lets out at ten minutes to ten and ample time is afforded for catching it.

Since the schedule has been changed there is a noticeable difference in the night attendance. It has increased about 40 per cent. This discovery is nothing new to the theatre man, but I can not understand how it was overlooked for such a length of time.

In this, the fourth installment of Exhibitor X's story, he shows, in tabular form, the method of his reducing overhead expenses. He says that he canned the orchestra and rearranged the organ policy. This may mean something to you. The gabby special officer also got his. Another point he explains is how to make the shows close in time to meet the last suburban car. All this is good reading, for you, Mr. Exhibitor.

It may occur to my brother showman in reading this series that I have said nothing about announcing the change in policy through unusual advertising. I have purposely refrained from saying anything about it because the changes were of an intimate nature. I merely inserted a single line in the regular newspaper advertising "Under New Management."

The prices remain the same, 10, 20 and 30 cents, but the attendance figures for fifteen days passed now show the following as against previous attendance figures:

812	659	635
657	745	756
815	863	749
789	988	831
863	1100	754

I fired the special officer, getting $18 a week.

The newspaper advertising cost next attracted my attention. I found that the average weekly cost of this item was $300. I immediately cut this to $36 a week. We are reaching the same number of readers as we did previously. There is only one newspaper in the city with one circulation. If the readers who saw the $300 space did not come to the theatre when that amount of space was being used we couldn't lose any patrons by cutting down our space. And the increased attendance with less space proves that.

Plunging on Big Picture

However, I would not repeat this emergency measure elsewhere. Newspaper advertising, judiciously written and placed, is the great dependable adjunct of the successful theatre. However all the big advertising done here, and sometimes there were pages, couldn't rescue this house. The house was wrong, that's all.

The newspaper editor was giving us very little cooperation and favored giving us less after the space was cut, but I called on him personally, found he was heavily interested in the local baseball team, had some motion pictures of the team taken and showed them on the screen. No such cooperation from any theatre had heretofore been offered this newspaper editor and although less space is being used by us now he is playing ball.

I might add that when I arrived in town to take over the X the newspaper threatened to throw us into bankruptcy. It is one of the largest creditors we have.

I have decided on the picture flyer. A picture touted as one of the biggest bets of the year is offered to me at $1,500 for the week. The check for it is in the hands of the exchange. It was reviewed favorably in the trade press. It is reputed to have broken records everywhere. It is heralded as a tonic for wilting box offices.

Next week it gets its opportunity to show our box office what it can do. Will it make the trade papers out to be liars and the film salesman and producers advertising writers plain bunk artists or will it pull us a little out of the hole? Frankly I'm not sold that it will do us any good.

I've fired the ticket taker who has been getting $25 a week and one of the usherettes takes his place. He used to wear a uniform, too, but one evening I happened to be standing at the gate when a man presented a ducat and asked if it would be possible for him to pay 35 cents more and get a divan seat. The ticket taker told him that he did not think so, and was gruff about it. I stepped up and told him to get what he wanted at the box office.

Can you imagine a ticket taker driving away an extra 35 cents, pure velvet? Here's for the flyer next week.

Prominent People - Snappy Scenes - Pretty Faces

Helene Chadwick is in training for a "come back." After eight months idleness due to legal matters, Helene will return under Goldwyn's banner in Rupert Hughes' "Law Against Law."

Irving Lesser, Sol Lesser and Mike Rosenberg, the indefatigable trio, who now control Principal Pictures Corporation with assets close to two million dollars. Sol and Mike are in New York this week conferring with Irving on distribution. When that is settled Sol will sail for Europe and settle the foreign problem.

George Kleine, one of filmdom's most popular pioneers, who has just been appointed by J. D. Williams as treasurer and chairman of the board of directors for Ritz-Carlton Pictures.

Carl Anderson, president of the Anderson Pictures Corporation, who announces that the new company will begin business September 1.

During the filming of "Long Live the King" at the Metro studios, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle visited Jackie Coogan. Spiritualism was not mentioned, for Jackie hates ghost stories.

Girls will be girls. So, when the Goldwyn unit producing "The Master of Man" moved down the stream to get a scene with Conrad Nagel, Patsy Ruth Miller slipped off her shoes and stockings and went wading.

Hoot Gibson watched from a port hole while they shot some of the minor scenes for his latest Universal feature, "Out of Luck."

Arthur Edmund Carewe, the young thespian who enacted the role of "Svengali" in First National's "Trilby," gives promise of becoming one of the industry's new stars. His portrayal of the difficult Du Maurier role is vastly different from that of famous legitimate stars, but critics hail it as masterful.

Glenn Hunter appears all frilled up for his latest starring role in the Film Guild's production of "Puritan Passions," now ready for release by Hodkinson.

The Goldwyn studios are celebrating with a "Centennial" in honor of George D. Baker, who has just finished Balzac's "The Magic Skin," his 100th production.

What are the wild radio waves saying? At a recess during the filming of "George Washington, Jr.," at the Warner Bros studio. Wesley Barry, his director, William Beaudine, and the principal members of the cast tried to tune in and find out something. Burgess' bed time stories got only a smile from Wes.

The weird instrument held aloft by the prop boy is not a butterfly catcher, but a sun reflector to soften the blinding rays so that John M. Stahl may continue directing Huntley Gordon in a scene for his latest Mayer-First National attraction, "The Wanters," on the grounds of a Pasadena millionaire's estate.

Here is the first photo of Blanche Sweet as she will appear starring in First National's screen version of the celebrated stage success, "Anna Christie"

THE THIEF OF BAGDAD

1. A panoramic view of the huge sets being erected for Douglas Fairbank's filmplay to be released by United Artists. 2. This fantastic set represents the ancient city of Bagdad. 3. A bizarre, almost futuristic effect, is being achieved in the sets. The small figure on the stairs is the Thief himself, being impersonated by Doug. 4. A portion of the bizarre setting. 5. The concrete courtyard around which the sets are built covers an acre and a half.

After the completion of his first feature length comedy, Buster Keaton went a-golfing with Gene Sarazen, the lawn billiard champ. Metro almost lost a comedian when Gene showed Buster how.

Due to Duane Thompson's peculiar charm in softening the harsh, slapstick scenes, she will support Sid Smith in the new Grand-Asher comedies.

The new Hal Roach-Pathé single reel comedy, "Live Wires," gave Paul Parrott plenty of mix-up possibilities. Here's hoping he gets untangled in time to finish his next on schedule time.

It looks very much like Helen Lynch has been stealing Mrs. Mutt's stuff in this scene. Bert Lytell is just a bit dubious regarding the strength of Helen's right arm. It is all part of a scene from the latest Principal Pictures production, "The Meanest Man In The World," an adaptation of the famous George Cohan stage success.

Bryant Washburn's handshake is in congratulation of Ben Wilson's successful completion of "Other Men's Daughters," an early Fall release by Grand-Asher. Mabel Forrest, Sam Grand and Elliott Dexter are wondering what the touch is going to be. Wilson is now making the First Elliott Dexter feature for Grand-Asher.

Doesn't this little "Pick" picture make you wish you were a kid again? It is a scene from the Pathe comedy "July Days," said to contain a barrel of laughs.

And here is Viola Dana getting the finishing touches put on for her newest Metro vehicle, "Rouged Lips." Both Viola and the wielder of the carmine stick look like their roles call for cute little devils. As the P. A. will undoubtedly say: "You musn't miss this one."

Clarence Badger has joined First National. His first job under the new banner will be the direction of Colleen Moore in "The Swamp Angel."

Gene Stratton Porter, author of this novel, produced the screen version which has an all-star cast. James Leo Meehan directed the picture. It is being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Why Not Short Ones?

WE hear much these and preceding days, perhaps not so much as we did, about shorter features. Maybe the pictures are not averaging as long as they did a year ago; maybe they are.

One company specializing in one and two part subjects publicly announces that owing to the lessening footage of features it has increased its output for the coming year fully 30 per cent. That's concrete.

But there are those exhibitors who most distinctly desire long features, ten reels or twelve; who want their patrons to see the picture as it was shown at its world premiere, if you please, whether that was in Los Angeles or Chicago or San Francisco or New York or any other city.

Let's go into ancient history just a bit. Nine years ago, when the moving picture as a rule had been confined to moderate footage, there had been perhaps three subjects that equaled in length twelve thousand feet.

There were already on the market, as a pretty good guess, "Quo Vadis," which George Kleine distributed; Pathe's remarkable "Les Miserables"; and "Cabiria," which was issued in the United States by Harry Raver. There may have been one or two other foreign productions of considerable length, but they did not make the furore created by these mentioned.

Out in Los Angeles D. W. Griffith had started on "The Clansman," which shortly after its issue became known in the east as "The Birth of a Nation."

LOYD BROWN, manager of William H. Clune's Los Angeles Auditorium, seating approximately 2,900, was clamoring for real features suitable to his large house.

Brown, having seen some of "The Clansman," appealed to Griffith to make his subject longer, from four to six to nine to twelve and even thirteen reels as the story was reliably told to us at the time.

"The Clansman" was given its world premiere in the Los Angeles Auditorium and was a sensation. It is yet, for that matter.

So, after all, the first long American subject may have been the result of exhibitor suggestion.

Now, then, getting down to brass tacks, conceding there are many exhibitors who want their features not longer than six or seven thousand feet and others who want them longer.

Why should not the exchanges in the larger key centres, where three or four prints of popular subjects are carried, not have on hand for the convenience of its customers copies of a ten-thousand-foot subject, say, in its original length, in 8,000 feet and in 6,500 feet?

Prices on the varying lengths could be adjusted by the seller and buyer.

The shorter copies could be cut in the home office to the measurable satisfaction of the producers.

If out in the country there prove to be insufficient demand for the original length the reduction may be made right in the exchange, with the shorter, home-approved article as a guide.

There is, we believe, a contentious clause in the uniform contract which binds the exhibitor not to "monkey" with the footage of a subject he has booked.

The varying length will get around this controversy to the near satisfaction of all concerned.

What say you, gentlemen?

The Snowball's Rolling

THE admission tax elimination snowball is rolling steadily along, solidifying and increasing in impact as it travels. Already a squeak comes out of Washington from some of the minor officials that reductions in taxes will be unfashionable this coming season.

Which, of course, is to be expected. It is the usual thing. A sum of seventy million dollars or a good part of it annually is not a negligible figure, even in Washington.

But the sum named, accumulated by millions of pennies and two-cent pieces and nickels, is more than an annoyance. It is an impost that to many less happily situated exhibitors is a distinct menace to their business enterprise.

The national exhibitor organization declares it will co-operate with every organization and individual interested in the removal of the admission and seat taxes and inquires of theatre owners as to the attitude toward this action of their Congressmen.

The New York state organization in a statement also issued this week declares it knows no politics in the presence of the emergency and asks only an opportunity to follow any competent, sincere leadership, "which must be unanimous," in a "march that will carry the banner of thorough and complete co-operation."

There remain less than four months to complete plans that must be unified to be efficient.

Why not gather around the table and make it efficient?

WE have just had the pleasure—and that is no mere figure of speech—of a visit from Hal Roach, who had dropped into town the day before and immediately bought himself an automobile. The Los Angeles producer of comedies and features has mapped out a route over which he will travel in search of information from ex-changemen and exhibitors—of all kinds.

The first main objective will be Buffalo. From there the journey will be extended to Boston, New Haven and then to Philadelphia, Baltimore and south. It is the intention of the producer to get first hand the views of exhibitors as to what they want in the way of pictures. When he sees a theatre he is going to visit the owner.

Mr. Roach in spite of his comparative youth has been through the motion picture mill. His first work in pictures was the riding of a horse, for which he was paid $1. He was the heavy opposite Warren Kerrigan in that player's first three-reel Universal subject.

If there be any who hold the impression that it is a simple matter to create comedy they would quickly be undeceived by listening to Mr. Roach's description of the difficulties encountered at times in obtaining the desired laugh. The producer confirms the remark of John Bunny that "There is nothing more serious than comedy."

TWENTY Arapahoe Indians arrived in New York August 14 and pitched camp in the grounds of the Museum of Natural History. They were slated to sail for London, August 18, to take part in the prologue of "The Covered Wagon," which is to open in that city, September 5.

ACONGRATULATORY post card conveys the "info" that Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand is motoring through New England on a vacation, which we will make a guess is well earned.

OVER in London on August 11 Associated First National closed its second annual convention. To properly celebrate the occasion a banquet was held, at which among the speakers announced were Robert Lieber of Indianapolis, president of the American company; Bruce Johnson, of San Francisco and New York, manager of the home company's foreign department, and Dr. A. H. Giannini, of California and New York, accurately described by "Kine" as "the prominent international banker who has been so largely instrumental in placing the American kinema industry on a recognized commercial footing from a point of view of banking interests."

LAURENCE WEINGARTEN has succeeded George Landy as director of publicity for the Jackie Coogan Productions, the latter having resigned after six months' service. Mr. Weingarten will complete the campaign on Jackie's first Metro subject, "Long Live the King."

MAE MURRAY, for whom a visible public has not lost its charm and before which she shines even brighter than of yore, recently gave a free afternoon concert to an even dozen thousand of young Angelenos. Miss Murray arranged and financed the entertainment. Among the guests were children from every charitable institution in the city. Needless to say the lady when she made her appearance on the platform received an oration which repaid her.

THEODORE ROBERTS recently was the honor guest at an unusual reception in San Francisco. The veteran and his cigars were in the city as members of "The Ten Commandments" company, in which Mr. Roberts has the great role of Moses. The cast formed a box party.

Present also were a group of fifty, among them former mayors, lawyers and financiers, members of the alumnae of the old Washington Grammar School, which the guest, it is said, attended sixty-four years ago. NO!!

Just Between Ourselves

GLAD to see that Ernest H. Horstmann again is in official exhibitor harness. Announcement is made that he has taken offices at 106 Broadway, Boston, where he will be executive manager of the Massachusetts theatre owners.

"Ernie" is one of the ol' time war horses, having been national treasurer of the exhibitors for several terms. Incidentally he was a member of the Yankee Mint Julep Quartet, the members of which during the St. Louis convention of 1919—held in the memorable final week of June—congregated at the Statler bar at 4 o'clock each afternoon and with ill-concealed impatience followed the motions of the white-jacketed veteran behind the mahogany as deliberately and with a dignity befitting the sacredness of the rite he compiled the most delectable stew, deaf to the demands of the thirsty beer drinkers scattered along the line.

The others who drank the 4 o'clock toast to the passing of the old order were "Bill" Kalem Wright, then and now with Vitagraph; "Al" Black, who has owned "some bunch" of theatres in the intervening years, and—well, you get one guess as to the fourth.

MAUDE ADAMS has not given up the idea which for several years it has been reported she entertains of making pictures for children. While the famous actress states she has no intention of appearing in the productions she has discussed her plans with Barrie and Kipling with the objects of interesting these writers in permitting the filming of some of their works. She was successful. Miss Adams is quoted as believing the taste of the present generation for legitimate drama is being dulled by motion pictures and it is her aim to make the screen an aid to the stage.

FEMININE pulchritude ran wild.—Statement in contemporary describing a beauty contest. Maybe it's some new-fangled kind of wild women.

DR. W. E. SHALLENBERGER is "off ag'in," this time for the coast, with lookins on some of the key cities en route.

DOWN at Atlantic City a "motion picture actress" reports the loss by theft of $50,000 in jewels. The name given is one we do not recall having heard before in connection with pictures. Those robbers are slow. They should pick on some of the acknowledged stars. From the burglars' viewpoint that ought to mean real money.

THAT was a beautiful and an impressive ceremony in the Rialto on the afternoon of August 10, arranged by Dr. Riesenfeld and William Brandt as a testimonial from the motion picture industry in New York to the memory of the late President. Senator Walker, "Jimmie" to many men in the audience, talked simply and eloquently for fifteen minutes to a house that was crowded before the time set for the opening. The only music was an organ, a harp and a violin. The lights were dimmed throughout the thirty-five minutes of the service. It was an occasion to be remembered.

THERE'S a new "Threc Keatons" on the stage—along with a camera. It's the generation succeeding the original, which first appeared before the footlights a quarter of a century ago. But the babe in arms then is now taking the role of Dad Keaton. Natalie Talmadge Keaton and Baby Buster, thirteen months old, are the other members of the trio. One of the interesting things in connection with the picture is that the baby in a prologue portrays the character that later is seen as the adult Buster. But—will the baby shatter the reputation of his father by giving us a grin?

MELVIN G. WINSTOCK, secretary of the Portland (Oregon) Film Board of Trade, has written a book described as of a highly patriotic nature and entitled "Making a Nation." The board in a formal resolution has congratulated the author on his work, wished him abundant success and pledged its heartiest co-operation.

BLAIS.

NAMES COMMITTEE FOR THEATRE DAY

National Body to Raise Funds Through Big Smash on November 19

National Motion Picture Theatre Day, November 19, inaugurated at the recent meeting of the Officers and Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America held in Atlantic City, will give theatre owners an opportunity to utilize the resources and energies resident in their screens for their own protection and advancement.

At this meeting several interesting reports were presented from different parts of the country relative to plans for financing the national organization in an adequate way, and also strengthening the individual state and regional units.

Among them was a National Motion Picture Theatre Day as suggested by National Treasurer William Bender, of South Bend, Ind., who came to the conference fortified with a resolution that has been unanimously adopted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana. After a general discussion of the various plans and particularly all the phases of Treasurer Bender's the latter was unanimously adopted. In order not to interfere with the finances of the various state and regional units and so as to give these bodies additional revenue for the strengthening and perpetuating of the regional organizations, thereby strengthening the National Organization and permitting the Theatre Owners of the country to be adequately represented at Washington.

National Motion Picture Theatre Day will enable Theatre Owners to provide adequate funds for the National Body independently through the percentage given on the gross receipts of that day which has been set for Monday, November 19.

That day will be boosted, and exploited by Theatre Owners, special programs of rare merit provided and every move made to render it one of the best from the standpoint of patronage of the year. It will be made the occasion for the Theatre Owner coming closer to his patrons and the extra exploitation is guaranteed to so advance business that the twenty-five percent of the gross receipts given to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will leave the Theatre Owners remaining seventy-five percent even larger than would

BURR'S NEW DODGER A STRIKING NOVELTY

One of the most striking exploitation dodgers of recent years has just come to our desk from the C. C. Burr offices.

It is in four colors, about the size of a blotter, carrying a cut-out picture of a newsboy in action. Under the newsie's arm are five separate tiny newspapers, all labelled "Extra" C. C. Burr News, each describing briefly a certain Burr feature.

The five features listed include: Milton Sills in "The Last Hour," James Kirkwood in "You Are Guilty," Johnny Hines in "Sure Fire Flint" and "Chased By a Mad Elephant," and Lew Cody with an excellent cast in "Secrets of Paris."

Blazoned on a midnight blue, the dodger is captioned "Wuxtra! Wuxtra!" The newsie, himself, is Russell Griffin, C. C. Burr's new five year old star.

be the case had the day been handled in an ordinary way.

The Officers and Board of Directors are very enthusiastic over the affair and personally underwrote $20,000 to be devoted to the work of carrying out the program agreed upon.

National President Sydney S. Cohen has designated the following committee to give the matter attention and evolve definite plans to guide the Theatre Owners:

William Bender, Jr., Harry Davis, Harry Crandall, Glenn Harper, E. W. Collins, Samuel Perlin, Howard Smith, Ernest Horstmann, I. W. Rogers, J. F. Truitt, A. R. Pramer, R. F. Woodhull, Fred Seegert, A. F. Sams, Charles Rapoport, Martin G. Smith, Ray A. Grombacher, Robert Codd, Morris Needles, W. W. Watts, Fred Dolle, J. W. Walsh, A. B. Momand, H. E. Huffman, Albert Nadeau, D. J. Adams.

Four conventions have already indorsed the movement.

YEARSLEY TO HEAD POSTER DEPARTMENT

C. L. (Bill) Yearsley, for six years director of advertising and publicity for Associated First National Pictures, has transferred his activities to the poster phase of film advertising. Upon his return from a three months' vacation in September he will organize and head a special poster department for First National to design and create lithographic work which will fully reflect the exhibitor angle.

The post of director of publicity and advertising falls to Bob Dexter, for several years Mr. Yearsley's assistant, who has been in charge of the department for the past ten weeks in the absence of his chief.

"Long experience in both exhibiting and advertising fields makes Mr. Yearsley peculiarly fitted for this work," stated H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer of First National in announcing the appointment. "Posters that have both display and actual ticket-selling values are every company's objective; the main difficulty heretofore has been to secure a man with the qualifications of salesman and artist to create such paper.

"While Mr. Yearsley's tendencies have always been in this direction, it is only now that the prime importance of the work is generally recognized that we have felt we could relieve him of all other duties to assume the full burden of the Poster Department."

Mr. Yearsley's ability with a brush has been demonstrated from time to time, notably in the twenty-four sheet stands for Norma Talmadge in "Ashes of Vengeance" and "The Eternal Flame" and for Richard Barthelmess in "The Fighting Blade" and "Fury." His new position with First National will allow him complete opportunity to exercise his creative ability along these lines.

McMEIN DOING PASTEL FOR NORMA TALMADGE

Neysa McMein, the best known woman magazine cover artist in the country, who recently selected the twelve most beautiful women in America for the covers of McCall's magazine is now doing a large pastel portrait of Norma Talmadge. This portrait will be used on the November cover of McCall's magazine which begins a serial life story of "The Three Talmadges" by their mother, Margaret L. Talmadge, in the October issue.

Miss McMein's portrait will be exhibited at the Apollo Theatre, New York, during the remainder of the run of "Ashes of Vengeance" and will later be sent to Chicago to be exhibited in the lobby of the Roosevelt Theatre when the picture begins its run there.

BRANDT WRITES REGARDING TAX

Says New York Desires to Take Humble Place in the Last Rank

On behalf of the Theatre Owners of New York William Brandt, president of the organization, has written an open letter to the industry in which a plea is made of competent sincere leadership in the fight for admission tax elimination.

After reciting the circumstances leading up to the action at the Syracuse convention and referring to the former lack of unanimity among the exhibitors in backing up Congressional efforts the letter continues:

"New York knows no politics in the presence of this necessity, and only asks an opportunity to follow any competent, sincere leadership, which must be unanimous, in a progressive march that will carry the banner of thorough and complete co-operation. And, behind that banner, New York simply desires to take a humble, modest place; in the very last rank, if need be. All that we want is to put behind this movement all the support, all the influence and all the force of which the New York State Organization is humanly capable.

"Action, not words, is the necessity of the moment.

"Scattered mobs were never convincing. For the good of our investments, for the sake of our families and the hope of our children, let's do something for ourselves in an unselfish manner."

"Theatre Owners, see your United States Senators and the Congressman in your district," says a statement from the M. P. T. O. A. "Many of these officials may be your neighbors and, perhaps, close friends. Use such influence as you have personally and such as you can muster to your aid to have them stand by you with their votes in Washington to effect the repeal of the admission and seat taxes.

"Explain to these senators and members of Congress that these taxes are war measures, justified on that basis of course, but with the cause for the same no longer existing, that these tax levies should be removed.

"Tell them at these taxes are a burden to Theatre Owner and public, a source of annoyance all around and that, with the business depression you passed through, a positive detriment. Be plain with these Senators and Congressmen. They will appreciate your position and you can talk to them directly as they are also personal parts of your state and community.

"Acquaint your Senators and Congressmen with the great public service work of the Screen. Tell them that through the Public Service Department of the Theatre Owners, definite connections have been made with different departments of the National Government through which the messages of these Departments are carried on the screens of the theatres and in this way helpful co-operation of the public with the Department established and the work of each rendered easier and more effective."

United Studios Enlarge Frontage

Plans for the construction of a new properties storage building, to contain a restaurant and five stores on the ground floor, on the Melrose avenue frontage of the United Studios were announced by M. C. Levee. Furniture, draperies, "hand props" and electrical fixtures are all to be housed under one roof.

ANDERSON HEADS NEW COMPANY

*Will Distribute for Independent Producers in Thirty
Key Cities*

Into the motion picture field has entered a new national distributing organization which will begin functioning on September 1.

Conceived by Carl Anderson, the new organization was incorporated at Albany last month and will operate under the title of The Anderson Pictures Corporation, with offices in thirty key cities. It will distribute pictures for independent producers.

Carl Anderson, president of the company, is well known in the industry. He was the first manager of the Lasky Company and remained with them until Paramount was formed, when he joined the latter organization in the same capacity. He remained with Paramount until the war, during which he entered the service of the Government. At the conclusion of the war, Mr. Anderson became identified with the Educational Film Exchanges, resigning from that organization a few months ago. Since then, he has been in California completing arrangements for production.

Mr. Anderson has always been an exponent of intensive distribution, preferring to supply a large number of theatres at a moderate price, rather than a small number of theatres at a large price.

In the announcement of the new corporation Mr. Anderson says: "I believe the time is ripe for a new distributing organization. The motion picture business has been a series of steps, generally followed by the comment from some quarters that 'it can't be done.' However I have lived to see, and in fact have been actively identified with several of 'It can't be done' propositions, which proved to be financial successes.

These successes have been due to the creating of a distributing organization and personnel that succeeded, because they gave the exhibitor good service and good pictures.

"Today nearly all companies give good service; prints are delivered in good condition, advertising helps are plentiful, so that the only thing that really interests the exhibitor are good pictures.

"I realize there is not room for 'just another distributing company'—it must have something to offer the exhibitor and producer. Just wherein we will differ from the ordinary run will be shown as we make public our plans.

"We will specialize in pictures of definite exploitation merit, to which we will give intensive selling, wide distribution, with certified accounting to the producer and 'cards on the table' policy.

"The national quota on features will be arranged on a sound business value and not on motion picture figures.

"I might say," said Mr. Anderson, "here is a distributing organization with fresh ideas which will help not only the producer but the exhibitor, enabling the latter to give his patrons entertainments of quality, with a surety of profit to his theatre. It will moreover help change materially the character of conducting the business particularly for the producer."

The various executives in the Anderson Pictures Corporation are capable showmen who have spent their business years in show business and in the motion picture industry.

CAPITOL BOOKS WARNER CLASSIC

*Where North Begins Will Be
in September*

The Capitol Theatre, New York City, has booked the Warner Classic, "Where the North Begins," starring Rin-tin-tin, the Police Dog Hero, following the world's premier at Loew's State Theatre in Los Angeles and will be shown at the Capitol early in September.

Other important bookings on this Harry Rapf production are the Loew Circuit in New York's metropolitan district; Bijou, Atlantic City, West Coast Theatres Circuit, Paramount Circuit throughout the South and Southwest, Rialto, Washington, D. C., Alhambra, Milwaukee, Modern and Beacon Theatres, Boston, Gordon Circuit, Boston, Rialto or Princess Theatre, Denver, and affiliated houses in Boulder, Pueblo, Greeley and Colorado Springs; Colorado, and Joe Phillips' Rialto Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas.

PICKFORD-FAIRBANKS STUDIOS HUMMING

The Pickford-Fairbanks studios at Hollywood present scenes of intense activity these days. While Douglas Fairbanks is hammering away on "The Thief of Bagdad," Jack Pickford's company is taking a trip through the blue grass country on location for exteriors for "Valley of the Wolf" to be released through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

Due to the fact that each organization uses an orchestra during the rehearsing and shooting of the scenes a system of whistles has been arranged so that the orchestras will work in relays.

Will Crown Princess Assist?

B. P. Schulberg has asked the Crown Princess Charlotte of Monaco to assist in the preliminary activities and research work for the film version of Robert Service's novel "Poisoned Paradise," which is to be a Preferred Picture. The story is a romance of the tiny principality in which the princess spent her entire life.

Select Two Warner Pictures

The National Board of Review in their Photoplay Guide issued by the National Committee for Better Films have selected in the group of especially good pictures for the month of July the two Warner Classics of the Screen, "Little Johnny Jones" and "Where the North Begins."

New Pal Comedy Started

"Pal Puts It Over," the first of the new Pal dog comedies for Century, is now in the early stages of production under the direction of Al. Herman.

New Chief of Editorial Men

James McKay, the man who with Frank Atkinson edited "Merry Go Round," for Universal has taken up his duties as chief of the editorial department at Universal City.

Celebrities Join Press in Lauding New Feature and Work of Arliss

"The Green Goddess," long heralded feature production of the Distinctive Pictures Corporation featuring George Arliss, had its world premier at the Sam Harris Theatre, New York, on Tuesday night, August 14. The New York Times declares in its review that "The Green Goddess" marks a new era in the industry.

One of the largest first night crowds in the history of Broadway attended the opening. The motion picture and theatrical world—managers and stars alike—were there, many celebrities standing throughout the entire showing.

"The Green Goddess" was directed by Sidney Olcott, who was responsible for another big current attraction, "Little Old New York," while the continuity, which won the praise of the newspaper critics, was prepared by Forrest Halsey. Karl Breil, who wrote many of the scores for D. W. Griffith openings, supplied the musical accompaniment. Clark Robinson prepared the settings and decorative effects, while the Oriental details were supervised by Roshanara, interpreter of East Indian dances.

Comments of some of those who saw the picture on its opening night were as follows:

Irving Lesser—I think it is better than the play. I can't say that Mr. Arliss' performance is any superior to what it was on the stage, but I do think the picture contains more sustained interest.

Thomas Dowd, Capitol Theatre—As I said last night, I think it is a finished picture. I like it very, very much. It was an admirable presentation.

J. D. Williams—A great artistic success. Arthur Friend and Mr. Hobart deserve great credit for getting together an organization that can produce a picture of this kind.

Julius Brulatour—It's a marvelous picture, one of the best things Arliss has done, from any angle, but the best from the box office standpoint. It has marked emotional appeal. The Oriental atmosphere is faithfully delineated, and the melodramatic scenes are sensational.

Albert Pach, Fifth avenue photographer—I found the picture very delightful in all respects, and of course what naturally appealed to me it was admirably photographed. I think it is one of the most delightful motion picture entertainments I have ever witnessed. Another pleasure for me were the views of the mountains from the aeroplane. The whole production was an example of superior work, a complete success.

All Set to Go

Selection of the cast for "Maytime," a Preferred Picture, has been completed. The players are: Harrison Ford, Ethel Shannon, William Norris, Clara Bow, Wallace Macdonald, Netta Westcott, Joseph Swickart, Martha Mattox, Robert McKim, Betty Francisco, Edna Tichenor and Mertha Sterling.

Change of Title

Warner Brothers announce that the title of "Lucretia Lombard," the photoplay adapted from the novel of the same name by Kathleen Norris, has been changed to "Loveless Marriages."

PHOTOGRAPHY COMPLETED ON THE ACQUITTAL

Photography on "The Acquittal," the Universal-Jewel production of Rita Weiman's stage play, has been completed. The cast includes Harry Mestayer, Richard Travers, Barbara Bedford, Frederick Vroom, Ben Deely, Emmett King, Dot Farley and Hayden Stevenson.

HUNTER DOUBLES STAGE AND SCREEN

Still Playing Merton at Cort Commutes Daily to Lasky Studio

Glenn Hunter began work this week at the Paramount Long Island Studio in "West of the Water Tower," a picturization of the much-talked-of novel of small-town life in the Middle West, by Homer Croy. This will be Mr. Hunter's first picture under the long-term contract recently signed with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He will continue to play the leading role in "Merton of the Movies" at the Cort Theatre during the filming of the picture.

Rollin Sturgeon, the director, and Lucien Hubbard, production editor, have selected a stellar cast to support Mr. Hunter in his first production for Paramount. May McAvoy returns to the East to work for the first time since the filming of "Sentimental Tommy" two years ago, and will have the leading feminine role, that of Beatrice Chew. George Fawcett will play the part of her father, Charles Chew, and Ernest Torrence, who made such a success in "The Covered Wagon," will have the role of Adrian Plummer, the orthodox minister and father of Guy, Hunter's character. ZaSu Pitts will be seen as Dessie Arnhalt, Charles Abbe as R. H. Arnhalt, Ann Schaefer will play Mrs. Plummer, and Edward Elkus will play Wolf, the druggist. The other parts in the picture have not yet been cast.

The entire cast, with the exception of the star, Mr. Fawcett, who was in the East working with Sam Wood in "His Children's Children," and Charles Abbe, was brought from the Coast for this production. Mr. Sturgeon, Mr. Hubbard and Mr. Harris also came on from Hollywood. The picture will be photographed by Harry Harris and W. J. Scully will act as Mr. Sturgeon's assistant. Doris Schroeder wrote the scenario.

FILMS USED BY N. Y. BOARD OF EDUCATION

For the first time in the history of the Board of Education of New York City, definite constructive lectures on the making and operation of motion pictures will be a feature during the coming winter, according to plans of Doctor Ernest L. Crandall, Director of Lectures for that body.

Doctor Crandall has just returned to New York, after several weeks in Hollywood, spent in gathering essential data. At the Lasky studio he conferred with Cecil B. DeMille, who is now making "The Ten Commandments"; William de Mille, Herbert Brenon, James Cruze and other producers, while visits were also paid to the Pickford-Fairbanks, William Fox, Universal, United and Metro Studios.

About 4,000 lectures are delivered yearly in New York by the lecturers under Doctor Crandall's direction. These talks are given not only to school pupils but to evening classes of adults as well. It is believed that the Crandall material on motion pictures will reach for the first time a great many thousands of people whose knowledge of the cinema has been meagre heretofore.

COMPLETES EXTRA GIRL

Mabel Normand has completed Mack Sennett's latest feature, "The Extra Girl," for Associated Exhibitors. The story, which is said to be a wholesome narrative with a reasonable moral based on a timely theme, was written by Mack Sennett. The picture is laid in the little town of River Bend, Indiana, and much time was spent in

MIDNIGHT ALARM GOES INTO THE RIALTO

"The Midnight Alarm," a Vitagraph picture, will have its first public showing at the Rialto Theatre, New York City, on August 19th.

The cast headed by Percy Marmont, includes Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis, Joseph Kilgour, Maxine Elliot Hicks and J. Gunnis Davis.

The story deals with a rich little girl who lives as an outcast in the slums until her fortune is restored through the brave efforts of a fire department captain.

search of suitable old-fashioned furniture.

Ralph Graves plays the male lead and Ramsey Wallace has the role of the villain. Others in the cast are: Ramsey Wallace, Vernon Dent, Charlotte Mineau, Eric French, Carl Stockdale and Elsie Tarron. French, a Carl Stockdale and Elsie Tarron.

CARLOS WILL BRING TWO FEATURES EAST

Abraham Carlos, for fourteen years with the Fox organization, and recently starting out as a producer, leaves Los Angeles the latter part of this month for New York with "The Unknown Purple," an eight-reel production from the stage play, and "Fast Freight," featuring Richard Talmadge now in work at Universal City. Mr. Carlos is negotiating for another Broadway success and just as soon as this is completed will have a unit at work probably at the Goldwyn studio.

In "The Unknown Purple," directed by Roland West, are Henry B. Walthal, Alice Lake, Stuart Holmes, Ethel Grey Terry, Helen Ferguson, James Woods Morrison and Brinsley Shaw.

"Fast Freight," is directed by W. K. Howard, and Eileen Percy, Tully Marshall, George Nichols and Al Freeman are in the supporting cast.

Producer Sends Card of Thanks

Jack Coogan, senior, who supervised the entire production of "Long Live the King," Jackie's first picture for Metro, sent a card of thanks to every member of the cast and production staff employed on the picture. The beneficial effect on the morale of the studio force will undoubtedly be felt in the next Jackie Coogan production.

New Company to Start

The Laval Photoplay Ltd. has been organized in Canada and will make its productions in Los Angeles. L. Ernest Ouimet, Canadian motion picture exhibitor, is head of the new company and general supervisor of activities. Its first picture will be "The Vital Question" by William M. Conselman, Los Angeles newspaperman, and the initial scenes will be shot in about six weeks.

Retake for Rosita

On the eve of sending the final print of "Rosita" to New York for the premier showing at the Lyric theatre, September 3rd, Mary Pickford called together several members of the cast for a retake. Although the picture was finished two months ago, Miss Pickford felt that the retake was necessary to obtain the exact dramatic results.

Appointed Location Manager

Leo Burns has been appointed location manager for Cosmopolitan. He is now engaged in selecting locations for two pictures which are in production. Burns has been associated with Cosmopolitan as studio manager and assistant director.

UNIVERSAL AGAIN ACTIVE ON COAST

Production Schedule Will Keep Studio Busy Well Into Winter Months

After a lay-off of several weeks Universal announces a resumption of production on an elaborate scale at Universal City, work to start right away. Heading the list with stories like "Damned," Booth Tarkington's "The Turmoil," "The Tornado," "Whom God Hath Joined Together," and similar books and plays, Universal is prepared to go ahead and will keep busy well into the winter months.

"Damned," anonymously published, will be screened as a Universal Super-Jewel. "The Turmoil" will be a Hobart Henley production as was Tarkington's "The Flirt." "Custody of the Child," an original by Raymond Schrock and King Baggott, will be Baby Peggy's third Jewel dramatic feature. Baggott will direct. Louis Zellner is writing the continuity. Another Jewel production now being prepared by James N. Spearing, is "The Signal Tower," which Clarence L. Brown, who made "The Acquittal" will direct. "Up the Ladder," Owen Davis' play purchased some time ago, has been scenarized by Julius Furthman and will probably be a Virginia Valli vehicle following "A Lady of Quality."

"The Tornado," Lincoln J. Carter's melodrama, will be an all-star production, scenarized by Adrian Johnson. "Whom God Hath Joined Together," an old time stage success by Hal Reid, will be another of the same type. "The Winning Hand," one of the stories in John Russell's volume of "Where the Pavement Ends," will be a third all-star. "The Noblest Roman," a magazine story by Mary Whitesides, adapted by Harvey Gates, will be Herbert Rawlinson's next vehicle. Two stories for Jack Hoxie are George W. Ogden's novel "Claim Number One," and his short story "The Rustler of Wind River" retitled "A Man's Kingdom."

"The Near Lady," a Frank R. Adams story, and "The Thrill Girl," an original by Crosby George, are being prepared by Hugh Hoffman as star or all-star material. "Beauty at Bay," an original by Raymond L. Schrock and Emil Forst will be Mary Philbin's first Jewel starring vehicle and "Morality" by Marion Orth, Elizabeth Saxby Holding and Raymond L. Schrock will be the second.

"The Spice of Life," a racing story by Byron Morgan will be Reginald Denny's next. "The Extra Man" by Raymond L. Schrock and Edward Sedgwick, the latter to direct, will be Hoot Gibson's next. "The Red Lock," David Anderson's novel of feuds in covered wagon days will be an all-star production.

Jack Tourneur Assistant Director

Jack Tourneur, eighteen-year-old son of Maurice Tourneur, made his debut as a motion picture producing factor recently when he started work for his father as assistant to Scott R. Beal, Tourneur's assistant director. Next year, after Jack graduates from Hollywood High School, he will take up his career in the motion picture industry.

Store Aids Baby Peggy Contest

The Jones Store of Kansas City, one of the largest department stores in the middle west, will co-operate with Universal and Century in putting over a Baby Peggy contest in Kansas City.

FAMOUS TO THROW AWAY TIME CLOCK

Quality First Regardless of Hours New Slogan for Lasky Directors

"The biggest advancement in motion pictures since the beginning of the art!"

This is the way the new policy inaugurated in the production of Paramount Pictures is heralded by Walter Woods, one of the four production editors at the West Coast studio of the organization. The policy calls for the making of only fifty-two pictures a year instead of eighty which were made last year, and for the sacrifice of all else to assure quality.

"We have tried out this policy now," said Mr. Woods, who has served as production editor for "The Covered Wagon," "Hollywood" and "Ruggles of Red Gap." "We know definitely what this new policy means in the art of motion picture making.

"Mr. Lasky's present plan makes each director and his unit an individual producer. To begin with, each director selects his story because he wants to do that particular story, not because it has to be made. He is given as much time as he cares to take in the preparation of the script, in the filming of the picture and in its titling and editing.

"A director may make four pictures a year—or three—or even two, but he will not make a picture unless he feels that that picture is worthy of being placed on the screen.

"The beautiful thing about the whole scheme is that the firm is going to make worthwhile pictures without counting time or cost.

"Regarding the cost: There will be no future padding of useless scenes to make a picture expensive. Sufficient money will be spent on the production to tell the story and there is no limit, whether high or low.

"The same regards length. No attempt will be made to make long features when the story can be told in less footage, therefore 'specials' will be of as much value if under five reels as those that run seven or over in footage.

"With an organization of this kind functioning efficiently in every department—with unlimited capital to carry on the most gigantic schemes, and with the new slogans: 'Only when a story is worthy of being filmed will we film it'—it seems to me that this is the biggest advancement we have had in motion pictures since the beginning."

BLACKTON STARTS VITAGRAPH SPECIAL

J. Stuart Blackton is making rapid progress with his special for Vitagraph, "On the Banks of the Wabash" in which James Morrison plays the juvenile lead. The all-star cast includes Mary Carr, Burr McIntosh, Lumsden Hare, Madge Evans, Mary McLaren, Marcia Harris and George Neville.

The exteriors are to be shot at Roslyn, L. I., and a village is being erected by the Sound there. When it is completed it will be the largest exterior set built in the East. At the end of the picture the village is destroyed. This catastrophe will be one of the biggest thrills ever screened.

THREE WEEKS CAST

Elinor Glynn's hectic heroine will have Conrad Nagel as her tiger rug companion when Goldwyn films "Three Weeks." Abraham Lehr announced the selection of Nagel this week and also said Aileen Pringle would play the lady of the seductive eyes.

Nagel is now playing the lead in Victor Seastrom's production of Hall Caine's "Master of Man" and recently completed "The Rendezvous" with Marshal Neilan. Miss Pringle is a young society girl who recently joined the Goldwyn organization.

The adaptation of "Three Weeks" has been completed by Carey Wilson, associate editor of the Goldwyn scenario department, and the production will be supervised by Mme. Glynn. Work will be started as soon as Nagel completes his present role.

DE MILLE EDITING MARRIAGE MAKER

"The Marriage Maker," William de Mille's latest production for Paramount, is in the final stages of cutting at the Famous Players-Lasky studio. Assisting Mr. de Mille in the editing of the picture is Miss Clara Beranger, who adapted it from the stage success, "The Faun," by Edward Knoblock.

According to those who have been watching the cutting of this novel picture, it is certain to be one of the screen sensations of the year, embracing, as it does, a marvelous characterization by Charles de Roche, who plays the role of a Faun, an odd being with human form, but with the natural instincts of a wild animal.

One of the strongest casts ever assembled for a William de Mille production enacts the roles in "The Marriage Maker." Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt, supported by de Roche, Mary Astor and Robert Agnew are featured. The remaining roles were played by Ethel Wales, Bertram Johns, Leo White, Bernice Frank, Julia Faye and "Pal," the motion picture dog.

Four Yonkers Movies Merge

A merger of four of Yonkers' largest movie houses was announced this week. They are the Strand, Hamilton, Orpheum and Broadway. Michael J. Walsh of the Strand theatre heads the new organization, which will operate as the Terrace City Amusement Company. The two Proctor theatres and the Warburton are not included in the combine.

Niblo Praises Myles Standish

Fred Niblo expressed his praise and enthusiasm for Charles Ray's production, "The Courtship of Myles Standish," to be released by Associated Exhibitors. In a telegram to Arthur S. Kane, Mr. Niblo said: "In story, production, acting and direction, it surpasses anything in recent years, and I predict a sensational success."

Guests of Jack Pickford

Dr. Ernest L. Crandall, president of the Board of Visual Instruction in the State of New York, and his party were guests of Jack Pickford at the Pickford-Fairbanks studio, where they saw Jack make several scenes for his new picture "Valley of the Wolf" to be released through Allied Producers and Distributors.

Edwin Carewe in New York

Edwin Carewe is due this week at the New York office of Associated First National Pictures with a print of "The Bad Man," which he completed recently at the United Studios with Holbrook Blinn in the leading role.

Speaks to Large Audience

Burr McIntosh who plays Cap Hammond in "On the Banks of the Wabash," the J. Stuart Blackton production, to be released by Vitagraph, talks to radio fans every Monday night from the WEAJ broadcasting station. He recently told his listeners of the origin of Wabash, Indiana and hooper.

KLEINE BECOMES RITZ TREASURER

Enthusiasm Marks Re-entry of Pioneer to Active Ranks of Filmdom

Meet an old friend in a new office—George Kleine, treasurer of Ritz Pictures!

A sincere welcome is bound to greet the above announcement, made last week by J. D. Williams, president and creator of the House of Ritz.

Kleine's re-entry into the picture business in an active way cannot help but represent kindred possibilities in connection with the new organization. Incidentally, the entire industry should benefit.

Few men are better known or more highly honored in the film world than George Kleine. A pioneer, who progressed with the business—always a few visual steps ahead of the other fellow. Such is the new treasurer of Ritz.

Possessed with a vivid imagination and keen foresight his ideals have ever been high set. The Ritz "idea" is said to have completely satisfied Mr. Kleine's ideal, from the viewpoints of both production and distribution.

In an interview, following the announcement, the new Ritz financial custodian enthused in characteristic manner:

"I have known Mr. Williams since his Australian days," he stated, "having first heard of his operations through his competitors. It has been my habit for many years to follow the careers of prominent men in the film business and have always been very much interested in Mr. Williams' plans.

"From the earliest days the super-feature of yesterday has become the ordinary release of today. Maintenance of maximum merit upon a program of many releases is well-nigh impossible.

Limited Output

"It is, therefore, an inevitable conclusion that the company, which desires to offer the exhibitor genuine super-features only, those commanding a superlative merit, must be limited in the quantity of its output.

"I was therefore much interested in the plans of Mr. Williams and of Ritz pictures," continued Mr. Kleine. "My own knowledge of his character, constructive power, energy and integrity convinced me that his declaration of policy would be carried out.

"When the suggestion was made that I become associated with Ritz Pictures, this influenced me greatly. A flexible policy, carried out with sincerity and intelligent co-operation between those engaged in the work, is bound to bring results."

The entire Ritz staff, on the other hand, was equally delighted with Mr. Kleine's decision to join the organization. In making the general announcement Mr. Williams added in part:

"It is a source of great satisfaction to me and the Ritz staff to welcome George Kleine back into active work in the motion picture field as treasurer and chairman of the board of directors of the Ritz company.

"The fact that he now, after the fullest investigation and examination, has found in Ritz and what Ritz stands for an adequate opportunity for large activities is most gratifying.

"Mr. Kleine represents in pictures the stabilizing type of man that is essential to every big group. He fits Ritz. I am satisfied that I have selected the very best man it was possible to select."

The news of Mr. Kleine's appointment spread quickly to all departments of the industry and it is stated that scores of telegrams and letters of congratulations to both sides already have been received.

ENROLL AGAINST SUNDAY CLOSING

Organization to Fight Blue Laws in Principal Cities of the Country

An organization to act as a counteracting force against Sunday closing of motion picture theatres has been organized in Hollywood. It will also pay particular attention to censorship, and all blue laws aimed at curtailment of personal liberty. The organization is known as the Libertarian League and its officers are: Charles T. Sprading, president; H. F. Rossner, national secretary; Charles Lee Swarts, treasurer; John A. Wilson and Alfred W. Lumm, vice-presidents; John Martin, of Denver, and S. Silberberg of New York, directors.

The organization, national in scope, is well underway, and seems to be well financed. Charles T. Sprading, its president, is the author of many books dealing with personal liberty. He has charge of the general direction of the national campaign and expects to speak soon on the purposes of the league in the principal cities of the country.

"Our members are enrolled from every state of the union," he stated. "We have organized a lecture service bureau which is now ready for action. This bureau will be used as an educational force wherever necessary to rouse public opinion and coordinate the efforts of those whose interests are involved. The campaign proposed has three phases:

"Diffusing a knowledge of the principles of liberty and the asserted menace of blue laws, and the enrollment of acknowledged libertarians.

"Organization of the signatories to the principles of the league into political fighting units.

"Direct action in the legislative halls of the nation."

UNIVERSAL TO MAKE THE TEXAS RANGER

Work will start soon at Universal City on "The Texas Ranger," a screen adaptation of the novel by William McLeod Raine, noted writer of Western tales. Roy Stewart will be starred, and supported by a chosen cast.

The story deals with the work of the famous Texas state police, and tells the conflict between two rangers sent to bring to prison from another state a woman accused of a crime. Both love her—one seeks to aid her to escape, the other, holding his duty higher than his love, seeks to bring her to justice.

PRaises LOYAL LIVES

After seeing "Loyal Lives" Will H. Hays sent a letter of praise to Whitman Bennett, producer. Mr. Hays said: "I was delighted with 'Loyal Lives.' I liked it as a picture and I was especially interested in the subject matter."

Mr. Hays stated that the inscription quoted in the picture—"Neither snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds"—is literally true.

It is Mr. Hays' opinion that the film will do great good.

Association Approves United Artists Releases

Of the twenty-one films chosen out of 147 pictures examined in the last year by the Better Films committee of the Parent-Teachers' Association as suitable for general family viewing three are releases from United Artists. They are "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," "The Man Who Played God," featuring George Arliss, and Mack Sennett's "Suzanna," starring Mabel Normand.

Of the twenty-six chosen from the 147 examined as suitable for theatre goers of high school age Mary Pickford's new production of "Tess of the Storm Country," and Charles Ray's "The Girl I Loved," were selected.

"ETERNAL CITY" GROUP RETURNS

Leaves Rome for Home Aug. 18—Will Complete Story in Another Month

The Samuel Goldwyn George Fitzmaurice producing unit, which under the direction of Mr. Fitzmaurice, has been filming in Rome, Italy, Sir Hall Caine's "The Eternal City" for First National release will return Saturday, August 18. The company has been abroad three months. Those in the party in addition to Fitzmaurice are Bert Lytell, Montagu Love, Mr. and Mrs. Lionel Barrymore (nee Irene Fenwick), Mr. and Mrs. Richard Bennett, Barbara La Marr and her husband, Jack Dougherty; Ouida Bergere (Mrs. Fitzmaurice), who wrote the scenario in collaboration with Sir Hall Caine, and H. H. Bruenner, company manager.

According to reports received from the company, the co-operation extended by the Italian government to the producing unit, was highly gratifying. Permission was granted Fitzmaurice to "shoot" his exteriors among all the famous landmarks and ruins, and a truly Roman background is assured.

Not only were the officials anxious to extend the American company every courtesy, but prominent citizens of Rome were enthusiastic in their response to Mr. Fitzmaurice's suggestion that they act as "atmosphere" for the picture. In the bigger scenes several thousand people appear before the camera.

Four weeks more will be required by Mr. Fitzmaurice to complete this elaborate production. The interior scenes will be taken in New York and environs.

Wesley Barry to Star in George Washington, Jr.

Los Angeles.—Wesley "Freckles" Barry will be starred by the Warner Brothers in an adaptation of the George M. Cohan play, "George Washington, Jr.," which will be directed by Mal St. Clair. This is the third production in which the freckled youngster has been starred by the Warners, the other two being "The Printer's Devil" and "The Country Kid."

In the east thus far engaged to support Barry are Otis Harlan, Edward Phillips and William Courtwright. Actual production of the feature is expected to start early next month.

Apfel to Direct Dana Feature

Oscar Apfel will direct Viola Dana in her newest Metro picture "In Search of a Thrill." The cast will include Warner Baxter, Rosemary Theby, Mabel Van Buren, Robert Schable, Templar Saxe, Billy Elmer and Leo White.

Death of Mrs. Streimer

Mrs. Streimer, mother of Moe and Charles Streimer, well-known exchangemen, died at her home at 78 Van Buren street, Brooklyn, N. Y., on the evening of Aug. 11.

JULIAN RIVERO VISITS UNIVERSAL

Julian Rivero, director of Argentine Photoplays producing in Buenos Ayres recently visited Universal City to study American picture methods.

"South America has gone picture mad," said Rivero. "There are eight hundred theatres in Argentina alone devoted to the pictures, and these feature plays from the United States above all others."

The South American, who received his picture training in the United States and has made a series of feature plays in his native land, says that the continental product does not please the audience there, but that they prefer the snap and dash of the American story.

Rivero expects to make a picture in this country before returning to his own land.

KOSLOFF TO ORGANIZE NEW FILM COMPANY

Theodore Kosloff will not renew his contract with Lasky at its expiration in four months. The actor announced this week when he is through with the organization, he will be one of several men who will organize a $500,000 international film corporation with stockholders from almost every country who will make pictures for exploitation in Russia.

E. Atlswang, brother-in-law of Kosloff, known as the richest man in Russia before the revolution, is promoter and president of the corporation. Paris will be the headquarters and Kosloff will give up his career and after conferring with his principal backer, will go to Russia to further the interests of the company.

Kosloff says Atlswang has just returned from Russia where he has made a canvas of the possibilities and has signed up 320 Russian cities, each city pledged to support two theatres for the showing of the pictures made by the organization. Kosloff will have the unique position of director, actor, producer and exhibitor.

"Russia needs two things," Kosloff said in outlining his future plans, "bread and happiness. The motion pictures will help bring both. We will exhibit American made pictures, and German made pictures. We will have English actors, French designers, Russian directors. In our corporation we have Russians, Americans, French and Germans, who are financially interested."

BADGER WILL DIRECT THE SWAMP ANGEL

Clarence Badger, who directed "Potash and Perlmutter" for Samuel Goldwyn, has returned to Los Angeles from New York and will direct "The Swamp Angel" for First National release. Badger spent only three months in the East, where he casted, directed and assisted in the editing of "Potash and Perlmutter" which is also a forthcoming First National Picture.

"The Swamp Angel" is a story by Richard Connell. It is a comedy drama with several unusual twists of plot.

Edward Montagne, in collaboration with Mr. Badger, has scenarized the story.

Hal Hodes Recovering

Hal Hodes, manager of Educational's New York branch exchange, was operated on recently for appendicitis. His progress is reported to be excellent, and he hopes to be out and back on the job soon.

HAROLD LLOYD STARTS SHOOTING

First Picture as Independent Producer to Have Human Interest

Harold Lloyd has started shooting his first picture as an independent producer.

"I believe we are starting on the right track," Lloyd says. "To begin with, we have a story entirely different from any of our previous plots, although we will follow the lines of 'Grandma's Boy' in making the picture human and sincere. In 'Why Worry,' our latest Pathe release, we tried for nothing but laughs. We were in a farce atmosphere nearly all of the time and made no attempt at sincerity. In this one, however, the action will be full of human interest, we hope, yet we will make every effort to keep the comedy angle foremost."

The idea of the story for his initial independent production is credited to Lloyd himself. It is developed by his staff composed of Sam Taylor, Fred Newmeyer, Ted Wilde and Tim Whelan. Jobyna Ralston as leading lady playing opposite Lloyd, heads the supporting cast selected by the comedian's production manager, John Murphy, with the aid of Robert A. Golden, who is assistant to directors Newmeyer and Taylor.

LEAVES WARNER BROS. CONTRACT DEPARTMENT

William Horne leaves the contract department of the Warner Brothers Home Office to open the offices of the New Haven Branch of the Franklin Film Company of Boston, the franchise holders for the entire New England States. This new office was opened with the idea of giving better service to exhibitors throughout New England, particularly in Connecticut.

Mr. Horne has served with the Warner Brothers for three years. He first began his duties in their exchange and was then transferred to the Home Office Department. He has had a wide experience in all branches of the motion picture industry, was formerly with the World Film Corporation in the production end and various other capacities, and he also was connected with Inter-Ocean Films, handling the foreign rights.

AUDIENCE RECEIVED PICTURE IMMENSELY

"Previewed 'Gold Diggers' at Glendale and audience received picture immensely," H. M. Warner wired A. Warner and the Home Office staff from Los Angeles. "It is a laugh from start to finish and we are to be congratulated on having a production as great as this. It will knock them cold. Want to be in New York when Broadway gets this one."

Before shipping the film to New York this preview was arranged by H. M. Warner, and according to all of the reports from the studio, combined with the above, the Home Office is looking forward to the David Belasco production, based upon the Broadway hit by Avery Hopwood with great expectations.

Heavy Broadway Billing For If Winter Comes

A twenty-page press book and a twenty-four page exhibitors' service folio have been prepared in the exploitation campaign for Fox's "If Winter Comes" which opens at the Times Square Theatre, September 3rd.

In New York every available billboard has been plastered with the large courtroom scene. Newark, Jersey City, Yonkers, Elizabeth, Paterson, Trenton, Hartford, Bridgeport and Stamford are a few of the cities which are posterized with the announcement of the coming New York engagement. Newspaper stories and tie-ups with newspaper syndicates for the publishing of the book in serial form are other features.

CHARLES RAY MAY FACE FOOTLIGHTS

*Plans to Play The Girl I Loved on the Legitimate Stage
November 1*

If Charles Ray can make arrangements to fit in with his production plans, he intends to return for a brief space to the stage and has chosen for his vehicle "The Girl I Loved," his last picture release. Pictures have been made into plays, and stars have stepped from the screen to the footlights, but this is the first time a screen star has undertaken to appear in person in a stage version of a picture in which he has been successful.

The project is not definitely settled, but Ray aims to have George Scarborough, playwright, make the picture into a stage production, and if he can arrange it, put on the play about November 1.

Ray has had stage experience in a small way, and has had a hankering for a long time to give it another thorough trial. He thinks he can take his little flyer before he settles down to his next picture. He insists it is only an experiment and he has no intention of ever leaving pictures.

Whitehurst Signs Large Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Bill

C. E. Whitehurst, owner of the Century and the New Theatre in Baltimore, has just booked the first group of eleven releases at one of those theatres. This is regarded by Goldwyn Cosmopolitan as one of the important new big contracts because exhibitors in the surrounding territory watch Whitehurst's theatres very closely to see what pictures he books and how they go.

Negri Picture Finished

Herbert Brenon completed Pola Negri's starring picture for Lasky, "The Spanish Dancer." Production was started on June 4 and finished on the date fixed. The picture was made from the story "Don Caesar de Bazan" by Adolphe D'Ennery and P. S. T. Dumasoir and adapted for the screen by June Mathis and Beulah Marie Dix. It has a notable cast and elaborate sets. Famous will release it late in the fall.

Accident Delays Picture

Work on "The Virginian," a Preferred Picture, is being delayed by an accident to Kenneth Harlan who is playing the leading role. While Harlan was attempting to make a "hair trigger" draw and fire at the villain, the weapon exploded in the holster and wounded Harlan in the leg. The picture cannot be completed until he recovers.

Jealous Fools in Work

Maurice Tourneur started "shooting" on his third production for M. C. Levee at the United Studios when he filmed the opening scene for "Jealous Fools," an original Tourneur story, for First National release.

LUBITSCH WILL DIRECT OUR MARY

German Director May Join the Big Four—Neilan Also Selected

According to talk in Hollywood an announcement is expected shortly from Ernst Lubitsch that he has allied himself with United Artists to go into effect as soon as he completes the present picture he is making for Warner Bros. It was stated on good authority that negotiations are under way between the German director and United Artists, and from the present status they will be concluded successfully. In that case "The Big Four" consisting of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin and David W. Griffith will become "The Big Five."

Whether Lubitsch makes another picture for Warner Bros. is optional with him, and if he goes in with United, it is not likely that he will.

At the same time it is said United Artists intend to drop its subsidiary organization, Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation. In that event Associated Authors, consisting of Frank E. Woods, Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris, are expected to make new releasing arrangements upon the completion of their third picture, "No More Women."

Allied, it is said, will not be dissolved until "A Woman of Paris," the Edna Purviance picture distributed by Charles Chaplin, and three associated pictures are distributed.

On top of this Mary Pickford announced that she had signed Lubitsch to direct one picture a year for the next three years, so it looks as though the director is set for United. Miss Pickford also stated she had signed Marshall Neilan as a director, the two men to receive the largest salaries ever paid for directorial work.

The first picture for Miss Pickford under the Lubitsch direction will be "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." Marshall Neilan's first will be "Romeo and Juliet," and hopes are entertained that Douglas Fairbanks will be her leading man. Neilan accepted the star's offer by wire from New York, and will start under his new arrangement as soon as he finishes his present Goldwyn activities which have not been severed.

Miss Pickford's decision to make "Romeo and Juliet" will result in a curious complication, for Norma Talmadge announces she will also make the Shakespeare play with Joseph Schildkraut as her leading man. This will be the first time that Miss Pickford and Miss Talmadge have become outright rivals and there will probably be some extra efforts put on both productions.

Miss Pickford announces the selection of Alan Forrest and Clare Eames as her first two players for "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall." Forrest is the husband of Lot-tie Pickford.

Andrew Arbuckle Signed

Andrew Arbuckle has been signed by Jack White to appear in Mermaid Comedies for Educational release. Mr. Arbuckle has played in support of such stars as Mary Pickford, Wm. S. Hart and Charles Ray. He will make his first appearance this season on the Educational program with Lloyd Hamilton in "The Optimist."

Weekly Three-Day Run for Serial

The Walnut Theatre, Louisville, has violated its policy not to run serials and will give the "short story serial" "Her Dangerous Path" a three-day run each week.

LESSER-ROSENBERG DUE IN NEW YORK

Important Conference on Distribution Brings Sol and Mike East

The New York offices of Principal Pictures corporation are preparing for the arrival from the West Coast of Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg, president and secretary of the company.

Their visit will be the occasion for an important conference on the distribution of their product for the ensuing year.

Heretofore, the Lesser and Principal Pictures productions have been completed before any releasing arrangements were made. It is now the plan to make all distribution arrangements for an entire year's output, due to the elaborate production plans now under way at the Hollywood studios.

The past month marked the segregation of Principal Pictures Corporation and West Coast Theatres, Inc. as separate units. Sol and Irving Lesser together with Mike Rosenberg purchased the entire interests of the theatre chain in the producing concern and the two organizations are now individual in part.

This purchase, involving a sum stated as approximately three-quarters of a million dollars, brings to Principal Pictures the sole rights to the nine Harold Bell Wright books, the Geo. M. Cohan stage plays, the entire series of Harry Langdon comedies, and the series of Louis Tolhurst's inventions.

The Lessers and Rosenberg now own, in addition, the healthy real estate holdings of Principal Pictures, including the studios, business offices and all of the property, on which the Principal studios were erected.

The total assets, recently taken over, are said to be valued closely to two million.

The new arrangement in no way affects the interest of Sol Lesser in the West Coast Theatres, Inc., of which he is vice-president. It simply creates one unit for production and the other for exhibition.

It is stated that the West Coast Theatres, Inc., will now proceed to spend the money, heretofore used in production, in the building of new theatres to be added to the already long chain on the Pacific Coast.

Lesser and Rosenberg are slated to hit Broadway this week. By September 1, it is expected all distribution problems will have been consistently arranged, at which time Sol will sail for Europe and complete the plans laid down for foreign distribution.

According to reports, the studios of the Principal Pictures Corporation are a veritable beehive of production. George M. Cohan's "The Meanest Man in the World" as well as Harold Bell Wright's "When a Man's a Man" are already completed. The first three of the Tolhurst pictures and the first two of the Langdon comedies are also finished.

JACKIE GOES AHUNTIN'

Following the completion of "Long Live the King," Jackie Coogan and his family left for a four-weeks hunting trip in the Nevada mountains.

The party will travel by automobile to the edge of the Mojave desert, and there find its horses and proceed on a two days' ride to the Coogan ranch. This section is renowned for its golden trout and deer.

Annual Meeting of Canadian Motion Picture Distributors

At the annual meeting of the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors Association, Clair Hague of Toronto, general manager of Canadian Universal Films, was elected president of the association and G. E. Akers, manager of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Limited, was elected vice-president. H. V. O'Connor of Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, was chosen for the position of treasurer, and Col. John A. Cooper of Toronto was re-appointed secretary.

The following is the advisory board: Arthur Cohen, vice-president and general manager of Regal Films, Limited, Toronto; Louis Bache, Associated First National; President Clair Hague and Secretary John A. Cooper.

SELZNICK TRUST FUND EXPLAINED

To Protect Producer's Share of All Rentals by Escrow Banking

Considerable curiosity has been expressed by the industry in general, as to the plans of the Selznick Distributing Corporation for the coming year.

"Our seeming reticence has not been due to any disinclination on our part to take our friends into our confidence," says President W. C. J. Doolittle. "It has been impossible for us to explain the full scope of our ambitions, with justice to ourselves. I can say now that we will release not less than forty pictures during the coming year and probably will exceed that number by a wide margin.

"I feel that the outstanding feature of our policy for the coming season is our already functioning Producer's Trust Fund. While this plan is of vital importance to producers, it is also of more than passing interest to exhibitors.

"Careworn producers will bear me out in the statement that it has been, in the past, no simple matter to place their product with a really go-getting sales organization. And, while this has represented a difficult problem, a more serious factor to contend with has been the actual settlements, the prompt payment by the distributor of the producer's share of earned revenue.

"Our Producers' Trust Fund was a sadly needed innovation in the motion picture industry," Mr. Doolittle continues. "It was conceived by us for the specific purpose of affording producers that protection which heretofore has been denied them. Under this system they can sleep nights and devote their waking hours to the creation of really worthwhile pictures, unhampered by the financial worries which have been their portion in the past.

"They are secure in the knowledge that their money is awaiting them on settlement days, because they know that as soon as rentals are collected on their pictures by the branches it is forwarded to the Home Office where it is immediately deposited in a Trust Fund in any bank mutually agreed upon. It is inviolate to the distributor. This Trust Fund is so carefully safeguarded that, regardless of any attempt that might be made by the distributor, it cannot be drawn against except to meet payments mutually agreed to by the producers and ourselves."

KERRIGAN HEADS ALL STAR CAST

David Smith Will Produce the Man from Brodney's for Vitagraph Release

J. Warren Kerrigan will head the all star cast of "The Man from Brodney's," a David Smith production for Vitagraph. The four other leading roles have been assigned to Alice Calhoun, Miss Du Pont, Wanda Hawley and Pat O'Malley.

McCutcheon's novel which has been picture-tized by C. Graham Baker, is laid in a variety of backgrounds, including London, a small European principality and an island in the South Seas. Into these locales, McCutcheon has spun a yarn filled with mystery, drama, love and adventure.

David Smith has gathered about him a special staff of technical and art aides who are planning sets of exceptional magnitude. If suitable locations cannot be found on the Pacific coast, it is likely that Director Smith and his principals will go to the South Seas.

The all star cast and gripping story are said to make "The Man from Brodney's" a splendid box office attraction.

HODKINSON FALL OFFERINGS VARY

Four Features Differ Enough to Avoid Monotony if Run Consecutively

In order to supply a program that is varied in audience appeal the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has chosen for its fall program four features that differ in story and production; thus giving exhibitors the benefit of a continued run of Hodkinson Pictures free from monotonous repetition of the same kind of subjects.

"Radio-Mania," produced by Herman Holland and starring Grant Mitchell is a comedy drama showing a typical radio bug's endeavor to reach the planet of Mars and what happens after he does.

"The Mark of the Beast," produced by Thomas Dixon from his own story of the same name, deals with the question of good and evil and shows that both rest in the sub-conscious mind which can be held in check by will-power.

"Michael O'Halloran," a picturization of Gene Stratton Porter's popular novel of the same name, is the story of a poor newsboy whose motto "Be Square" saves the happiness of older people about him.

"Puritan Passions," an adaptation of the famous stage play, "The Scarecrow," by Percy MacKaye, stars Glenn Hunter in the role of Lord Ravensbane. He is capably supported by Mary Astor and Osgood Perkins. This Film Guild Production will be released September 2nd. The plot is an unusual one, dealing with a scarecrow who has been brought to life without a soul and used as a pawn to wreak vengeance on Gillead Wingate, the moral hypocrite of Salem.

These four productions are said to give exhibitors enough variety so that the pictures may be run consecutively and still maintain an evenly balanced program.

LUBITSCH STARTS FIRST FOR WARNER

Ernst Lubitsch has started work on his first production for Warner Brothers, and his second in America. Opening shots were taken recently of "Only a Dream," adapted by Lubitsch and Paul Berne from a Viennese play. The director is making no pretensions of turning out a big picture with sets, mobs, etc. There are only five characters in the story played by Florence Vidor, Adolph Menjou, Warner Baxter and Creighton Hale, the fifth role yet to be filled.

Dr. Erich Locke, of the Lubitsch staff, said that the drama will not be of the conventional type. There will be none of the usual fade-outs, etc. On the other hand, he stated, it is of the "thrust and parry type with numerous deft and different turns, situations built up only to be dropped with sharp twists and an undercurrent beneath the froth of Vienna of biting satire."

Which means, we take it, that it is to be a real drama done differently.

LOS ANGELES PRESS PREVIEW HUNCHBACK

Following an informal luncheon at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles newspaper folk were given a preview of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" a Universal-super Jewel before the negative of the picture was sent to New York in preparation for distribution.

The spectacle founded on Victor Hugo's

DRIFTING TO OPEN AT THE CAPITOL NEXT WEEK

"Drifting", Universal's next big Jewel release, will have its world premiere next week at the Capitol Theatre, New York City. Supporting Priscilla Dean in the leading role will be Wallace Beery, Matt Moore and Anna Mae Wong. The story concerns "Cassie Cook" a derelict of the China Coast and her struggles against her surroundings in an effort to reform and to help other girls to break away from the sinister influences of the Orient.

classic was filmed in one of the largest settings in the history of motion pictures. The Cathedral of Notre Dame, twenty blocks of Paris streets, the historic Bastille, the Court of Miracles and palace dungeons were reproduced. Seventy-five principals and four thousand extras appear in the picture. Included in the principals are Patsy Ruth Miller, Ernest Torrence, Norman Kerry, Winifred Bryson, Tully Marshall, Kate Lester, Cesare Gravina, Eulalie Jensen, Brandon Hurst and Nigel de Bruhier.

WEST COAST PRESS HELPS EXTEND RUNS

The William Fox screen version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's novel "If Winter Comes" was so well received when it opened at the Columbia Theatre, San Francisco, July 21st, that it is probable the originally planned four weeks' run will be extended.

The Los Angeles reviewers gave the picture such lavish praise that the box-office receipts were swelled into record proportions. Hundreds of letters of commendation of the picture are pouring into the Los Angeles and New York headquarters of the Fox Film Corporation.

The picture will open in New York for an indefinite engagement September 3rd.

Start Saturday Openings

Saturday openings are to be the rule at the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, which was reopened under the regime of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation on Saturday, August 11, with Oral Cloakey, famous Canadian theatre manager formerly of Winnipeg, Hamilton and Cleveland, Ohio, in charge.

The starting of shows on Saturday instead of Monday has proved to be a great success at the Pantages Theatre, Toronto, and the Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg. Incidentally, the programmes at the Ottawa Regent will be changed weekly and not twice weekly as before.

May McAvoy in New York

May McAvoy is back in New York after an absence of two years. She is to appear with Glenn Hunter in Paramount's "West of the Water Tower," which is to be made at the Long Island studio. It is Miss McAvoy's first work in the East since her memorable characterization in "Sentimental Tommy," the charming portrayal which so securely placed this wholesome young woman in the high regard of photoplaygoers.

Positively-Absolutely

"Around the Town With Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean," which has been scheduled by the Fox Film Corporation for 1923-4 release will have a celebrated cast in addition to the Ziegfeld comedy team. Parts have been assigned to Lucy Fox, Alan Hale, Arthur Hausman and Harry Short.

JAMES V. BRYSON PROMOTED AGAIN

New Universal Job—Chief of Presentation of Big Stuff

Following last week's announcement of a change in general sales managers for the Universal Pictures Corporation, comes word of two more important changes made by Carl Laemmle, president of the big film corporation, in his corps of executives.

James V. Bryson, for two years export manager of Universal, has been promoted to a newly created position as chief of presentations, to handle the country-wide showing of all big Universal productions. He is now engaged in the handling of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which will have its world premiere in the Astor Theatre, September 2.

Nat. L. Manheim, formerly an assistant general sales manager, will take Bryson's place as export manager. As assistant general sales manager, Manheim has been in charge of the sales and distribution of all Universal short subjects.

Bryson comes to his new position as well equipped as any man in the film business. He knows pictures from start to finish, having been in practically every end of the business during his long career with Universal.

Universal's venture in the presentation of big pictures was adopted early this summer. It followed a careful survey of the big picture market.

Announcing that an unusual picture has a place in the amusement firmament just as important as grand opera or high class drama instructions were issued that beginning with "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," all Super Jewels must be presented to the public in a big way.

It is predicted that the New York premiere of "The Hunchback" will be the most auspicious film opening ever held.

WILL ROAD SHOW TWO PICTURE PRODUCTIONS

Edward Manson left the Coast this week for New York to take charge of the showing of Mary Pickford's "Rosita" at the Lyric Theatre, September 3. Cutting is nearly finished and Miss Pickford plans to be in New York for the opening.

After this run, Chaplin's picture, "A Woman of Paris," starring Edna Purviance, will play the Lyric. Chaplin directed this picture, but does not appear in it.

It is understood that both of these productions are to be sent out as road shows after the New York engagements.

Kearney Leaves Cosmopolitan

Patrick Kearney has resigned as Advertising Manager of Cosmopolitan Productions to become Advertising Manager of Preferred Pictures. In making this change he will again be associated with Jerome Beatty, Director of Publicity and Advertising for Preferred, with whom he worked during his five years with Famous Players-Lasky. Mr. Kearney has left for a short vacation, and will assume his new post at the beginning of September.

Announce Release Date

August 19 is announced by Associated Exhibitors as the release date of the Leah Baird attraction "The Destroying Angel." The supporting cast includes John Bowers, Noah Berry, Ford Sterling and Mitchell Lewis. The story centers about a world famous dancer who is supposed to exert a fatal influence over the men who became enamored of her.

MAE MURRAY NOW ON FASHION ROW

New Gowns New Dances and New Settings to Enhance New Metro Film

Mae Murray, whose recently completed picture, "The French Doll," is one of the first releases of the Metro fall program, has started work on her newest Metro Picture, "Fashion Row," which is scheduled for release in December. The story was written especially for Miss Murray by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins.

Miss Murray will wear approximately one hundred different gowns in "Fashion Row," which, it is predicted, will outdo its predecessors in story, treatment, sets and gown creations.

Another important feature will be the number of new dances which Miss Murray will introduce for the first time. Her dance steps and complete dance creations are being accepted and taught by dancing masters here and in the salons of European capitols.

The story is laid in the atmosphere of a great metropolis and many New York scenes will be a part of the new production. While Robert Leonard, who will direct the feature, has not announced his plans, it is likely that parts of "Fashion Row" may be made in several of the large European cities to obtain the proper atmosphere.

"Fashion Row" is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro and is sponsored by Tiffany Productions, of which Mr. Leonard is director general.

TWO WORLD PREMIERS

"The Broken Wing," the first Preferred Picture of the season, will have its world premier simultaneously in three St. Louis theatres, West End, Lyric and Capitol, week of August 18.

"Mothers-in-Law," second of the Preferred Fifteen, had its world premier August 11 at the New Grand Central Theatre, St. Louis.

Merry-Go-Round Has

Four Broadway Showings

"Merry Go Round," the Universal Super-Jewel production is now playing at its fourth first run house on Broadway. It played for two record breaking weeks at the Rivoli, then was transferred to the Rialto, then to the Central Theatre at popular prices and is now showing at the Cameo Theatre. After its run at the Cameo, it will play an 81 day booking in the Keith, Moss and Proctor houses in and round New York City.

Near East Relief Society

Commends Pathe Picture

Pathe received the following letter from Margaret Case, Department of Motion Pictures of the Near East Relief Society:

"I wish to express appreciation of your great kindness in arranging for us to see 'Nanook of the North.' It is a tremendous picture—surely the best or its kind ever taken. Please call upon me if you ever wish any information about the Near East."

Selznick Acquires New

Films for Distribution

Myron Selznick, vice president of Selznick Distributing Corporation, announces the acquisition of three new features, all ready for immediate release. The list includes a Hugh Dierker production, "Cause for Divorce," Murray Garson's latest, entitled "Broadway Broke," and an untitled picture featuring Dinky Dean, the child actor of inherited fame from Chaplin's "The Pilgrim."

"Cause for Divorce" lists David Butler, Fritzi Brunette, Pat O'Malley and Charles Clary in the cast. Mary Carr is starred in "Broadway Broke" with a support including Macklyn Arbuckle, Billy Quirk, Gladys Leslie, Henrietta Crosman and Sally Crute.

INCREASING DEMAND FOR ORIGINAL STORY

New York.—There is a rapidly increasing demand for the original story, but, contrary to the hope held out in some quarters to any and all ambitious boilermakers, plumbers, shop girls and bricklayers, it is going to take trained brains and an inborn dramatic instinct among the host of embryo scenario writers to fill it.

So says C. Gardiner Sullivan, peer and pioneer among photodramatists, who arrived here last week from Los Angeles, where he recently signed a contract to take charge of the story and scenario end of Joseph M. Schenck's production activities.

"This is the day of the story and the director," said Mr. Sullivan. "The motion picture has already had its day of the star and of all-star casts. Of course, there will always be a screen market for good stage plays and books, but the acid test from now on for any story, regardless of whether it has been published or produced on the stage, will be the analysis of the question: 'Is it good screen material?' And it is my belief that this new attitude of producers will result in a big come-back of the original story written expressly for pictures."

NEW APPOINTMENTS ANNOUNCED BY WOODY

John S. Woody, General Manager of Associated Exhibitors, announced the appointment of Melville E. Maxwell and E. C. Fielder as Special Representatives. J. E. Flarity is named as Branch Manager at New Orleans replacing Jack Schaefer, who is transferred to Atlanta in the same capacity. Jack Winters leaves the management of Atlanta to assume control of the Pittsburgh office, replacing James Harris, who is appointed manager of Chicago.

It is understood that Mr. Woody's new appointments are in line with his plans to place the Associated sales organization on a highly efficient basis to effectively handle the line-up of Associated features for fall release.

WOMEN FANS FAVOR THE MAN NEXT DOOR

Many Exhibitors are congratulating Vitagraph on "The Man Next Door" as being "the picture beautiful" of the season. They have reported to Vitagraph that women fans are particularly enthusiastic.

The story told by Emerson Hough in his novel of the same name has been retained with all its original charm. Alice Calhoun is a favorite with women fans in her role of Bonnie Bell Wright.

The characterizations of the old cattle-men played by David Torrence and Curly, the beloved foremen by Frank Sheridan, are living impersonations of Hough's creations. James Morrison, the juvenile leading man, plays opposite Miss Calhoun.

Mermaid Girls in Spectacle

On "Mermaid Comedy Night" at the Motion Picture Exposition at Los Angeles, Jack White staged an eight-act spectacle in front of the Hamilton-White booth. White's "Mermaid Girls" in bizarre batik draperies, were the hit of the evening.

EXHIBITORS FORM EXCHANGE PLANS

*Canadian Theatre Owners to Convene in Montreal
September 6*

Developments with regard to a film distributing scheme for independent exhibitors of Canada and also concerning the formation of a Canadian branch of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association of America have been quite pronounced during the past week or two.

Incidentally an interesting turn in the activities occurred yesterday when the scene of the proposed convention of independent exhibitors of Canada was switched from Toronto to Montreal, according to a formal announcement at Montreal, when it was also stated that the convention would be held Thursday and Friday, September 6 and 7.

The names of three exchanges in Canada have been mentioned in connection with the formation of a large exhibitor distributing corporation, the exact name of which is practically the only important detail that has not been told so far.

It has been announced at Montreal that the Canadian Releasing Corporation interests have been sold to the new group and that Phil Hazza of Montreal, manager of the Equity Pictures Corporation, has been appointed general manager of the new exhibitor exchange system, with headquarters in the Albee Building, Mayor street.

The Dominion headquarters of the M. P. T. O., originally intended for Toronto, were opened in the same premises at Montreal on August 11. It is also stated that Phil Hazza has taken practically his whole Equity Pictures staff with him to the new company.

Vincent Gould, secretary of the Eastern Canada Association, attended the recent meeting of the officers and directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Atlantic City and was enthusiastic in his presentation of the Canadian situation and the spirit with which the Theatre Owners there were considering the matter of organization.

Signed applications from Canadian Theatre Owners are now at National Headquarters and are representative of theatre holdings in the Dominion. A number of the higher officials of the Canadian Government will address the Theatre Owners in convention at Montreal and the Mayor of that city will extend the official welcome.

Mr. Gould in addressing the meeting of the National Board of Directors and officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, pledged the wholehearted cooperation of the Theatre Owners of Canada in Motion Picture Theatre Day, November 19.

Thomas Free Lance Writer

Edward C. Thomas, formerly West Coast Manager of Exhibitors Trade Review, and erstwhile publicity director for Monte M. Katterjohn, the Henry Lehrman Studios, et cetera, has again entered the film industry in the role of free lance publicity writer. Thomas "enjoyed" a long vacation from his labors through the medium of an extended sick spell, followed by a rousing automobile accident which almost brought on a total eclipse.

Still Going Strong

Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," a United Artists release, broke all records for length of run of any picture in Indianapolis. It has run for four weeks at the Rialto Theatre in that city, and will be held over for two weeks more.

Dear Mr. Berman:

It is with great pleasure that I give you the daily receipts of the first week's gross of your great picture, "Human Wreckage", which played at the Royal Theatre.

Sunday, July	22	$1606.70
Monday	23	1811.47
Tuesday	24	1869.37
Wednesday	25	1920.95
Thursday	26	1945.78
Friday	27	1909.92
Saturday	28	1904.69
		$12959.88

When you stop to consider that the seating capacity of the Royal is only 850 and the net admission price was 45¢, you had a remarkable box office attraction to get that much money in one week.

The best part of it all is that it pleased one hundred per cent--the picture has been town talk, and its opening on the second week looks exceptionally promising.

With kindest personal regards, I am
 Sincerely,
Frank L. Newman

GOLDBURG JOINS "SPECIALS ONLY"

Independent Pictures Corp. Official Announces Fall Policy

Jesse J. Goldberg, president of the Independent Pictures Corporation, has just returned from a tour of the west taking in the principal exchanges from New York to California, and as far south as Kansas City.

This trip was made for the purpose of ascertaining the demands of the independent market and, incidentally, to dispose of the unsold territories on the twelve semi-western productions featuring George Larkin, Jack Livingston, Mary Wynn and Norma Shearer.

Contracts were entered into with the Tri-State Film Company of Minneapolis for Minnesota and North and South Dakota, and the Standard Film Exchange for Western Missouri and Kansas.

The result of his study of the conditions confirmed the opinion of Mr. Goldberg that special feature productions build upon a large scale and containing a cast of screen notables are in greater demand than at any time heretofore in the history of independent production and distribution.

Plan Heavy Exploitation

Independent Pictures Corporation, for the past three months, have been silently yet diligently laying their plans for the production of dramatic subjects with special exploitation possibilities and have announced that it will issue during the season of 1923-1924 six super specials.

The first of these is entitled "Indecent Clothes" by J. J. Fleming. This subject is an indictment and arraignment of the fair sex.

The second special production, "Vanity of Men" will wield the cudgels against the stronger sex and is an expose of the little acknowledged vanities that have placed men upon a pedestal, and tears off the mask of his conceit. It will be released the middle of December.

The third special has a working title of "The Hand of God," an adaptation of "The Diary of a Physician" written by Sir Samuel Warren a noted English author, physician and lawyer.

Other Announcements Later

The remaining three productions will be announced in a series of trade paper advertisements of special inserts. Each production will have a special exploitation staff so that the utmost of effort may be exerted for the benefit of exchanges acquiring these attractions and the exhibitors playing them.

It is further intended that as a part of the special exploitation campaign that where a first run cannot be secured, in first run centers of a duration commensurate with the worth and standing of the production themselves, that the attractions will be placed in theatres for protracted runs.

Mr. Goldberg, when interviewed at his office, waxed enthusiastic over the progress made by his company and its plans for the future. He said:

"The state right market has never been in a more sound or substantial condition. It is not a question of whether we can dispose of our subjects, it is only a question as to which of the exchanges operating are the most progressive, aggressive and responsible.

"My tour of the country, which has just been completed and which is always made essentially for the purpose of studying present conditions, reveals but few irresponsible or deteriorating state right exchanges.

"It does seem as though a few irresponsible ones are always with us, for as one dies out another one is born, floating on limited capital, promises and hopes. The majority of state right exchanges now in business however, are operating along business lines, properly financed and with special ideas of doing business.

"These exchanges must be supplied with worth while product in order to compete with national distributing organizations—they must have product that is equally as good as their best—and better. The theatres are co-operating as never before with state right organizations. They are giving them a fair break; they evidence a preference to do business with independent product."

Mr. Goldberg will again leave for California to supervise the production of "Indecent Clothes" and "Vanity of Men" and will be gone approximately three months. "The Hand of God" will be produced in New York City, since most of the exteriors are laid there.

ZIERLER BUYS SPECIALS

Samuel Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation of New York, has signed with C. C. Burr for his Big Four Specials for the 1923-24 season, in advance of production. The pictures involved in this transaction are "Restless Wives," "Youth to Sell," "The Average Woman" and "Lend Me Your Husband."

"Contrary to my usual method of buying pictures," said Mr. Zierler, in commenting upon the transaction, "I am contracting with Burr for his new series in advance of production because I have made money on every Burr picture I ever bought."

Doris Kenyon, who will star in "Restless Wives," is now reading the manuscript and production will start shortly. This is an adaptation of one of Izola Forrester's stories published in Ainslee's Magazine.

Weber-North Feature Draws

First run showings in representative theatres throughout the country seem assured by the splendid showing made by "Marriage Morals" on Broadway.

Tom Moore's work pleases especially, as does Ann Forrest's, and much commendation is given on the excellence of the cast throughout. The players are well selected and include Edmund Breese, Florence Billings, Harry T. Morey, Shannon Day, Tom Lewis, John Goldsworthy, Little Russell Griffin, Charles Craig and "Mickey" Bennett.

L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North are much pleased over the enthusiasm shown by the public upon the Broadway showing of Will Nigh's "Marriage Morals" at the Central Theatre.

Selig Adds Production Unit

The Selig studios have added a second production unit in an attempt to meet the releasing schedule of the Export and Import Film Co., Inc. Col. Selig reports that the third of the series of twelve two-reelers has just been completed and will be shipped East immediately. The colonel believes that all previous efforts at novel wild animal thrills have been surpassed in this series.

BREAK HUNDREDS OF MIRRORS—FRIDAY 13

Sixteen hundred pieces of mirror glass were hammered into millions of tiny bits on Friday the 13th at the Burr Glendale Studio to be used in studding with brilliancy the Alex Hall's "Mirror Mosaic" setting, especially designed for the Cafe Grotesque scenes in Constance Binney's initial picture under the Burr management.

This utter disregard for superstition and apparent extravagant waste was more than justified in the effect secured. And the pieces of mirror used were too small to be used in regular commercial trade.

The "Mirror Mosaic" setting was used for the first time on a big scale in this picture. This mammoth set occupied the entire main floor space of the Glendale Studio.

A pyramidal, or diminishing stairway, growing narrower step by step from a twenty foot width at the base to a mere speck in the distance, dominated the setting. A scroll-work cloud wing studded with bits of mirror glass was placed at the end of each step, giving the effect of a stairway ascending through the clouds.

Two large walls, composed of thousands of bits of reflecting glass, were hung twenty-five feet in the air, one at each side of the stairway. Spotlights were played upon these glittering bells as they rotated, throwing myriads of shimmering light sparks upon the glass studded scroll-work throughout the setting, thereby flooding the whole scene with millions of mysterious iridescent, intermittent light flashes.

Miss Binney, dressed in a gown covered with brilliants, performed a sole dance, descending from the heights of the sparkling stairway down to the foreground. "Bambalina" girls from "Wildflower," Nathano Brothers, comedy skaters and other specialties performed in the scene.

COMMONWEALTH ISSUES DIVERSIFIED CATALOG

The 1923-24 catalog of the Commonwealth Film Corp. is ready for the trade. It reveals a very diversified selection of product, totalling twenty features and a special series of forty single reel Post Travel pictures.

The Commonwealth program is presented concisely and appealingly. Heading the list of special attractions are to be found Gasnier, Zierler, Sloman and Edgar Lewis productions. In these are featured Miriam Cooper, Clara Kimball Young, Milton Sills, Doris Kenyon and others.

For the most part, however, selected casts seem to predominate. This is especially noticeable in the sixteen prominent story features, ranging in type from the Hal Reid form of melodrama to the modern marriage problem of recent Saturday Evening Post stories.

Joe Miller Joins Renown

During the present week, Joe Miller, well-known among the film fraternity in the upper New York state territory, has associated himself with the Renown Exchange, Buffalo. Manager Edwin O. Weinberg of Buffalo Renown has assigned Mr. Miller to do special work as field representative of the exchange.

Truart Reports Foreign Sale

Truart Film Corporation has disposed of the Elaine Hammerstein series of star productions, commencing with "Broadway Gold" to Ferdinand L. Luporini, Inc., for Italy.

POPULARITY TEST FOR C. B. C. STORIES

Screen Original vs. Adapted Script Is the Problem to Be Solved

Greatly interested in various and widespread controversies as to whether stories which have appeared in book or magazine form and have been scenarioized, or original stories which are written especially for the screen make the most successful material for feature productions. The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is putting the question to a practical test.

It has arranged to test the first two feature productions on its season's program. The first, "Yesterday's Wife," is a film version of a successful and widely read magazine story; the second, "Forgive and Forget," is an original screen story.

It is their intention to study these two features thoroughly after they are released; to ask franchise holders to give their opinions as to the possibilities of each story; to keep in touch with exhibitors everywhere so their opinion may be gained; and to weigh and contrast both from an audience and box-office point of view, in every detail.

Another thing planned is a questionnaire, which both franchise-holders and exhibitors are to distribute to the public, with a view to finding out just what the film-going public prefers to see on the screen—a picturization of a story it knows about, has read, or heard discussed; or one that comes to it absolutely new.

To Watch Results Carefully

Arrangements have already been completed for the sending of detailed reports into the home C. B. C. office in New York and it is planned that when "Forgive and Forget" is released a special road man shall be assigned to watch the progress of the two pictures and discuss the results with franchise-holders and exhibitors.

That opinions may be absolutely impartial, "Yesterday's Wife" is being distributed on the C. B. C. Columbia Pictures program, while "Forgive and Forget" is the first of the Fall series of C. B. C. Box Office Winners series.

Both are being given screening of the highest calibre, with distinguished players portraying the parts in both. "Yesterday's Wife," which is completed, has in its cast Irene Rich, Eileen Percy, Lewis Dayton, Josephine Crowell, Philo McCullough, William Scott, and Lottie Williams; while "Forgive and Forget," which is now in production, features Pauline Garon, Estelle Taylor, Wyndham Standing, Raymond McKee, Josef Swickard, Philo McCullough, Vernon Steele, and William Scott. Both are directed by Edward J. Le Saint and produced by Harry Cohn.

Results Will Guide Future

"Of course this may be a difficult thing to determine," said Jack Cohn of C. B. C. in commenting on his organization's plan. "One story may be better than another even if both are original screen stories, or both are taken from popular published stories. But we will be able, through close observation, to see which way the wind blows. Exhibitors and franchise-holders have promised to co-operate with us, as it is to their advantage as well as our own."

The result of this campaign for information will have a bearing on future C. B. C. productions, says Mr. Cohn; and while it may not be felt on immediate releases, several of which are already set, will do much to determine future programs, not only for that organization, but for other producing companies as well.

RODNER BUYS SNAPS LOEW BOOKS THEM

Following the announcement that the new 1923-24 series of Screen Snapshots, the single reel "fan magazine of the screen" would be released this year on the State Right Market through the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, franchise rights were immediately taken over for the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory.

Contracts to distribute the series in this territory were completed with Harold Rodner, of 1600 Broadway, well known as a distributor of short subjects. Mr. Rodner also releases "Out of the Inkwell" and "Felix the Cat."

He has been greatly interested in Screen Snapshots for some time, and it was partly through his influence that Jack Cohn was persuaded to refuse offers from national releasing organizations and State Rights Screen Snapshots. Mr. Rodner has watched the trend of short releases on the Independent market for some time, and feels that Screen Snapshots, one of the most novel and popular short releases on the market, has a great future this season—even greater than were its achievements during the four years it has been in existence.

It has already been booked into the Loew Houses in New York. The first issue is to be released immediately.

LESSER-COHAN HIT BREAKS HOUSE RECORD

Telegraphic reports from Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, state that "The Meanest Man in the World," adapted from the stage play of George M. Cohan, has broken all house records for Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco.

It was the initial showing of the picture and, when the week's receipts were totaled, it was found that the new attraction had netted $19,000, several thousand in excess of previous high marks.

This record is especially notable, when it is taken into consideration that the Cohan feature opened the day following President Harding's death in the California metropolis, at a time when all of San Francisco was in a depressed condition.

"The Meanest Man in the World" boasts of a selected star cast, headed by Bert Lytell, Blanche Sweet, Bryant Washburn and Maryon Aye.

It is the intention of Sol Lesser to give a premier showing of this feature in New York, immediately upon his arrival in the East this week.

New Carlos Features Ready

Abraham Carlos, head of Carlos Productions, is scheduled to leave Hollywood for New York the latter part of August. He will bring with him ready for release finished prints of "The Unknown Purple," an eight-reel feature now in the cutting stage, and "Fast Freight," a Richard Talmadge picture now under production at Universal.

Upon his arrival in New York, Mr. Carlos expects to negotiate for a Broadway success, which will be produced at the Goldwyn studios.

Graf Starts Production

Max Graf has just completed the cast for the next Graf Special feature, entitled "Half-a-Dollar-Bill." A formidable selection includes the names of Anna Q. Nilsson, Raymond Hatton, Mitchell Lewis, George McQuarrie and Frankie Darrow. Production will start this week at the Pacific studios at San Mateo. The new production is a sea story with San Francisco Bay locale. W. S. Van Dyke will direct.

ARONSON TO COVER ALL CENTRAL WEST

Alexander S. Aronson, general manager of sales of Truart Film Corporation, left last week on an extended trip about the country to confer with the Truart franchise holders. On the first leg of his trip Aronson expects to spend considerable time in Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis and Minneapolis.

In practically all of these centres first-run showings have been set for Truart product and it is Aronson's plan to co-operate with the franchised exchange in such cities where first-runs are set to put over the pictures in a big way.

It is probable that in the more important centres that an exploitation representative will be sent from the New York Office immediately prior to the showings. In key centres where the first-runs are not as yet definitely arranged, Mr. Aronson will lend his assistance in closing for same.

ELFELT AND STAR ON WAY TO COAST

Clifford S. Elfelt, head of the Clifford S. Elfelt Productions of Los Angeles and New York City, announces the completion of his plans for distribution in the independent market of eight specials, starring Jane Thomas.

Mr. Elfelt, accompanied by Miss Thomas and William A. Bowman, production manager, has left New York for the coast, stopping off in Chicago, where they will be the guests of the officials of that city at a luncheon given in their honor.

Mr. Elfelt for five years was associated with the William Fox organization, with Sydney Chaplin, Carlyle Blackwell. His experience also included an association with Universal. He has just returned from an extensive tour of the various exchange centers, where he conferred with the buyers who will release the Thomas series. The first Elfelt-Jane Thomas feature will be released November 1.

Cast Marriage Market

With Jack Mulhall and Pauline Garon in the leading roles Harry Cohn, general manager of the Waldorf studios, has completed the cast for "The Marriage Market." It will be made into a six-reel feature for C. B. C. release.

Among the notables chosen are Shannon Day, Vera Lewis, Marc Robbins, Kate Lester, Mayme Kelso and Jean de Briac. "The Marriage Market" will be produced on a lavish scale under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint.

"Forgive and Forget" has been completed at the Waldorf studios, under the direction of Howard Mitchell, with Wyndham Standing, Pauline Garon, Philo McCullough, Josef Swickard, Vernon Steele, Lionel Belmore, Estelle Taylor and William Scott.

Renown Announces Bookings

Following the successful run of Elaine Hammerstein's first Truart production, "Broadway Gold" at the Cameo Theatre, New York, Jack Bellman, manager of the Renown Exchange, which handles the distribution of all Truart product in the New York territory has booked this feature in all B. F. Keith, Proctor's and B. S. Moss houses. The same chain of theatres have also booked "Temporary Marriage" and "Bright Lights of Broadway."

Jacob Fabian has booked "Bright Lights of Broadway" into the first-run Rialto Theatre, Newark, N. J. for a week showing and Elaine Hammerstein in "Broadway Gold" and "Temporary Marriage" will have their first-run showing in the Northern New Jersey territory in the Newark Theatre, Newark.

GRAND-ASHER CAST FOR BILLIE RHODES

A selected cast has been announced by Ben Wilson for his production "Leave it to Gerry," Billie Rhodes' first feature picture for Grand-Asher.

Miss Rhodes plays the title role of Gerry Brent, a part which calls for almost continuous action, some of a very strenuous character, throughout the picture. Buster Collier, son of William Collier, one of the most popular juvenile actors on the screen today, has been chosen to play the leading masculine role of an athletic college youth who falls in love with the spirited little heroine.

Claire McDowell who has been seen in many of William DeMille's productions, plays the mother role, Kathleen Kirkham, plays the part of a wealthy society woman. Joseph W. Girard will carry the heavy role.

Work on the production was begun August 13th at the Berwillia Studio, Hollywood.

Arthur Statter adapted the original story by Adam Hull Shirk which was written especially for Miss Rhodes. Eddie Lindon and Jack Stevens are the cameramen.

Equity Feature for Philly

Ben Amsterdam has just purchased and expects to surpass all of his previous booking records with the new Equity feature, "The Daring Years." Ben did not hesitate, after closing the contract, to vouchsafe that it was a "safe" buy for any discriminating showman. A Western Pennsylvania advertising campaign will be started immediately and it is probable that the feature will land in one of the big first-run houses of Philadelphia early in September.

I. P. C. Declares Dividend

The Board of Directors of the Independent Pictures Corporation, at its monthly meeting held last week, declared a quarter annual dividend of 5% on its outstanding capital stock, payable to stockholders of record as of August 1st.

This company has been in business since January 1923 and its record of achievements and financial condition is evidenced by the action of its Board of Directors and the declaration of the dividend.

Warnock Completes The Germ

C. S. Warnock, manager of Research Pictures, San Antonio, announces the completion of "The Germ," a scientific romance which delivers a message of aid to those in need of financial assistance. It picturizes the evil characteristics, to which mankind is heir, and their possible eradication.

Mrs. Lillian Lawson Nibel sponsored the feature, which is said to sparkle with the beauty of San Antonio settings.

C. B. C. Press Books Ready

All accessories have been completed on "Yesterday's Wife," first of the series of Columbia Pictures, which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is distributing, and are all ready, simultaneous with the release of the feature.

What is promised as one of the most effective campaign books ever issued is off the press this week, replete with advertising, publicity and exploitation ideas. These have been worked up in accordance with ideas submitted first hand by franchise holders and exhibitors, and are along lines therefore that are sure to be successful. One unusual feature of the book is the beautiful cover printed in three colors.

Lackey Sales Manager

William T. Lackey, treasurer of Mastodon, is managing the New York business office, with Lester F. Scott Jr. in charge of sales.

SEES NEW DAY FOR INDUSTRY

Max Graf, Supervising Director Says Public Demands Originality

Max Graf, supervising director of the Graf Productions finds that the tendency of the film industry today is to get away from the machine made product. "The demand of the public is for the human element on the screen, for a real transcript of life, for actors who produce their effects without recourse to theatricals, conducting themselves like human beings," declared Mr. Graf recently before an informal meeting of executives of the moving picture industry.

"The best pictures of the year have had almost no story at all. But they were real pictures of life as it is and this was the cause of their success. Such a one I should say is 'The Covered Wagon.'

"Hackneyed love stories too will no longer suffice. The public demands originality. And they want to get away from the eternal parading of youth, youth, youth. They like a mixture of ages in the casts—because in life it takes people of all kinds and all ages to make things go round.

"Then there is too much unjustifiable exploitation. All-star casts are very well but the picture is the thing in the analysis for success—not casts. The public has its favorites, true, but these are often miscast merely to have their names on the billboards and electric signs. This day is fading fast."

Mr. Graf is a producer of considerable standing.

HOLLYWOOD STUDIO FOR CLIFF ELFELT

Clifford S. Elfelt has acquired the Elfelt Production Studios at 4500 Sunset Blvd. Hollywood, where the eight features starring Jane Thomas will be made. The initial release of this series will be made November 1 through independent exchanges.

The Elfelt program will call for a release every six weeks. Heading the list is "The Third Warning," which will be followed in turn by "The Nineteenth Amendment," "Beyond the Law," "Something for Nothing," "Dangerous Women," "Free," "Dangerous Men" and "The Home Trail."

Preferred Features in Canada

Dominion Films, Ltd., who distribute Preferred Pictures throughout Canada, report that the first eight Preferred features are going exceptionally well. They announce that "The Girl Who Came Back" and "Daughters of the Rich" have just been booked for the Allen Theatres. "Poor Men's Wives" and "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" have been booked for first runs in Quebec City at the Victoria.

Renalles About to Start

Renalles Inc., who recently incorporated for $250,000, opened a studio at Culver City, and announced it intended to produce without any set policy on the character of stories it would film, but will give the preference to stories written especially for the screen. The company is busy preparing its first picture which will be started in a short time.

New Company Organized

Kingston, N. Y.—A new company has been organized at East Kingston to produce one and two reel comedies, the first of which will be "Wild, Wild Women." B. J. Jones is director.

HIRSH PREPARES FOR FALL WITH NEW FILMS

In preparation for the Fall rush of business, Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film corporation, announces the acquisition of several new features and series.

Heading the list is a New Donald Crisp production, entitled "Is Love For Sale?" a special, which is expected to meet with the quick approval of state right buyers.

Hirsh has also acquired a complete new series of "Big Boy Williams" features of the western type, said to be packed with thrills and sensations. Williams is said to have startled the film colony, itself, with his daredevil stunts of recklessness.

Gaston Glass and Vola Vale head the cast of "The Midnight Flower," another Aywon special carrying a suspense theme with a clever denouement at the finish. The third series of George Larkin pictures will also be ready for Fall release and, it is expected, this year's Larkin program will even break the already high sales records held by this star the past two seasons.

ROGER FERRI JOINS ELFELT PRODUCTIONS

Simultaneous with the announcement that the eight Jane Thomas specials to be released by the Clifford S. Elfelt Productions will be released to the independent market through that firm's own distribution organization, Mr. Elfelt made known the fact that Roger Ferri has been made general distribution manager and Eastern representative.

Three years with the Exhibitor's Trade Review and two with the Moving Picture World as editor of their "Independent News" departments, places Mr. Ferri at an advantageous angle in both knowledge and experience. He will be in charge of the New York offices, located in the Candler building.

Greiver Makes Blanket

Purchase of C. B. C. Output

A blanket purchase of a company's entire season's output is an almost unheard of thing—yet a sale of this kind, just made, includes every picture which C. B. C. will produce and distribute this year.

The sale was made to Greiver Productions of Chicago, through Si Greiver of that organization, who came to New York specially for the purpose of completing negotiations for the Indiana and Northern Illinois territory. The sale represents one of the biggest transactions ever completed on the State Right Market at one time.

Truart Builds New Department

Truart Film Corporation has established an eastern scenario unit with headquarters at the New York office of the organization. The department is under the direction of Arthur Hoerl, who has just completed the adaptation of Harold MacGrath's novel, "The Drums of Jeopardy" which will be Elaine Hammerstein's second Truart production.

Start New Elliott Dexter Film

Earl Olim, technical art director for the Grand-Asher studios, has just left for northwestern Canada where he will travel through the great pine forests in search of suitable settings for a new Ben Wilson production for Grand-Asher which will feature Elliott Dexter. While he is in the north, he will also supervise the erection of two elaborate sets which will be used in the forthcoming picture, soon to begin production.

The working title for this feature will be "The Pride of Possession"; it will be directed by Ben Wilson and John Ince, who have just completed "The Love Trap" for Grand-Asher starring Bryant Washburn and Mabel Forrest.

Short Subjects and Serials

PATHE TO RELEASE SPIRITUALISM FILM

Two Reeler "Is Conan Doyle Right?" Exposes Methods of Fraudulent Mediums

A sensation in two-reel features is promised by Pathe when late in September that company will release, "Is Conan Doyle Right?"

It is said that the picture is in no way offensive to those who believe in spirit control, mediumship or manifestations of the return of the departed. In fact a portion of the picture deals with this phase and then proceeds to sound its warning in a seance climax of unmistakable power.

Spiritualism in its false garb is unmasked. A convincing picture is drawn showing to what ends spirit fakers go to attain their results and to what degrading uses they put their power.

It is said, "Is Conan Doyle Right?" is scientifically correct, that experts have attested to the methods employed and divulged in the picture.

EDUCATIONAL'S NEW SERIES OF COMEDIES

Four new series of Educational two-reel comedies will be started this month. "Yankee Spirit" with Bennie Alexander will be the first of the Juvenile Comedies. The first of Lloyd Hamilton's new group will be "The Optimist."

"Navy Blues" heads the new series of Christie Comedies and "High Life" with Lige Conley will be the first in the new Mermaid group. Three Cameo Comedies will feature Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance. The "Sing Them Again" Series will offer "Companions" introducing "Comrades," "The Curse of an Aching Heart" and "When You and I Were Young, Maggie."

"While the Pot Boils," a Wilderness Tale and "Why the Globe Trotter Trots" are a Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge are two novel offerings.

Good for Summer

The new Bray comedy distributed through Hodkinson, "Colonel Heeza Liar's Vacation" is said to be an admirable summer subject. It turns the "vacation fever" into a fantasy of farm life and comic summer adventure.

PATHE CREATES NEW SALES DEPARTMENT

Owing to important additions to its list of short subjects and to the rapidly increasing business done with this class of releases, Pathe has created a new sales department for the marketing of two-reel comedies. Stanley B. Waite, former Pathe branch manager at Boston, has been appointed Sales Manager of Two-Reel comedies. He will direct the work of special two-reel comedy salesmen attached to the different branch offices.

For the forthcoming season at least sixty-four two-reel Pathe comedies will be released. Of this grand total the Hal Roach Studios will furnish 13 "Our Gang" comedies, 13 Will Rogers, 13 Stan Laurels and probably six of another brand. The Mack Sennett Studios will supply 13 Mack Sennett comedies and six or eight Ben Turpins.

It is stated that this total will be augmented by other brands, of which announcement will be made later on.

Connected with the merchandising of these two-reel comedies the new sales department will perform active field work in further developing the popularity of Pathe-comedy nights and Pathe-comedy programs.

Fun From the Press Praised

The Dallas, Texas branch of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is receiving many letters of commendation following its intensive selling campaign of the Literary Digest's "Fun From the Press." George K. Zinsz, proprietor of the Harbor Theatre, Corpus Christi, Texas, declared that the quips bring more laughs than many comedies he has run. Mr. H. D. Morgan, Manager of the Library Theatre and Garden Airdome in Electra, Texas, said that the reel can be splendidly worked in with any length of program.

Peggy's Latest Commended

On the current list of exceptional pictures, issued monthly by the National Board of Review, is Baby Peggy's latest Century Comedy, "Little Miss Hollywood."

This is the picture in which Peggy, as a movie-struck kiddie goes to Hollywood, and although not winning fame and fortune, does see the biggest stars in the film world.

Sid Smith Starts Eleventh

Sid Smith is preparing to start his eleventh comedy for Grand-Asher under direction of Charles Lamont. The title is as yet undecided. Duane Thompson is leading woman; Jack Henderson and Fatty Alexander are in the cast also. There will be a bear in the picture this time. Recently Sid had his inning with lions and says its a toss up between them.

Jazz in Christie's Next

"Hold Everything," the new Christie two-reel comedy for Educational release has for its plot the rejuvenation of the inmates of an Old Maids Home through the medium of Jazz. Bobby Vernon plays the lead.

Repeat Engagement for Plunder

The Pearl White Patheserial, "Plunder" so far overtaxed the capacity of the Danforth Theatre, Jersey City, that Exhibitor Dunbar has booked a repeat engagement. "Plunder" will be shown at the rate of three episodes a week.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

July Days, Pathe

The "silly season" affects the kids too. Witness the trials of the amorous Mickey. Even the hoptoad which Mickey counted on to impress the lady of his heart fails to win her from his rival. In despair Mickey asks Sister's best beau for an exposition of his "methods" and does his best to apply them. But the result is disaster because the young lady has a younger brother who seems not in sympathy with the match. The village blacksmith aids

Mickey to don knightly armor (made from cooking utensils), but when our hero goes to serenade his love her mother drowns his song—and very nearly the singer—with a dishpan of water. To Mickey it's a cruel, cruel world and he "takes it out" on the village bully.

This two-reel "Our Gang" comedy is one of the funniest ever. Even the most sedate of your patrons cannot help but roar.

The Strike of the Rattler, Universal

The climax of this two-reel western depends on the heroine's talent in ventriloquy. This novel point gives the plot the virtue of being different. "The Rattler," an outlaw, is about to get even with the deputy sheriff (Pete Morrison) by making him walk off a cliff when Mary Dawson, the sheriff's sweetheart, makes a noise like a snake. "The Rattler" wheels around and the deputy is given an opportunity to jump on him. The fast riding, thrills and novelty of this picture make it one that will delight all who have a penchant for westerns.

The Flaming Forest, Universal

In the ninth chapter of the serial, "In the Days of Daniel Boone," Girty is captured by Boone and Jack, but is later released by the Regulators under the direction of Claires. The Regulators follow Boone and the settlers to their first encampment and with the aid of the Indians, attack the camp. It is soon in flames. Susan and Claire are trapped in the burning cabin. This chapter is remarkably well executed, even to the flaming arrows of the Indians. I give a splendid idea of the hardships experienced by Boone's expedition.

The Great Explorer, Pathe

This Aesop Film Fable reminds one of a certain big travel picture. Henry Cat and Milton Mouse go to Africa in a coal scuttle attached to a balloon. They have difficulty in shooting the wild animals because they persist in fleeing from the hunters. While Mouse is in a cave fighting an elephant, Henry sails back home with an elephant tusk as a trophy. Just as he is being proclaimed a hero, Mouse returns with the various animals, all meek as lambs.

Pathe Review No. 34

Beautiful views of Old Windsor, the castles of British royalty, lens lies depicting mixed traffic, and scenes showing how the sculptor makes models of the monkey are shown in this reel. There are some interesting shots of the sea gulls, pelicans and cormorants inhabiting Dead Man's Island. Pathecolor views of the Spanish-French border, the Pyrenees mountain section, put a charming finis to the reel.

Live Wires, Pathe

Paul Parrott succeeds in making a brand new house resemble a spider's web by the time he gets done wiring it. He gives the owner all kinds of shocks and ends by sending himself to Nowhere. This Hal Roach one-reeler is fairly amusing.

Felix Calms His Conscience, Winkler

In an attempt to get revenge on his rival Felix employs crooked methods, but his conscience forces him to repent. This Pat Sullivan cartoon is as good fun as anyone would want.

The SHOWMAN'S GUIDE

Selecting—Booking—Playing—the Picture

The Green Goddess

Distinctive Pictures Corporation Photoplay in Nine Parts. Released by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan. Adapted by Forrest Halsey from William Archer's Stage Play of Same Title. Director, Sidney Olcott. Photographer, Harry A. Fischbeck. Running Time, One Hour and Forty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Rajah of Rukh George Arliss
 Lucilla Crespin Alice Joyce
 Major Crespin Harry T. Morey
 Dr. Basil Traherne David Powell
 The Ayah Jetta Goudal
 Watkins Ivan Simpson
 High Priest William Worthington
 Lucilla Crespin is the wife of Major Crespin, commanding a military post in Northern India. The Major drinks heavily and his wife is correspondingly unhappy. Dr. Traherne, formerly of the Royal Air Forces, is in love with Lucilla. A native uprising in a distant settlement imperils the lives of the Crespin children, who are visiting there. The Major, Lucilla and Dr. Traherne start to the rescue in an aeroplane. The machine crashes down in the mountains, in the Kingdom of Rukh, ruled by a Rajah who is a former Oxford graduate. He is apparently cordial, but it soon transpires that he intends to hold his involuntary visitors as hostages for his three brothers who are condemned to execution for murder by the British Government. Later they are given to understand they must die. Lucilla may live if she consents to become the Rajah's queen. The Rajah communicates with the outside world by wireless. The Major and Traherne bribe Watkins, the Rajah's English valet, to send a wireless calling for aid. He betrays them and they hurl him to death over a cliff. The Major works frantically at the wireless to send a message, but is shot and killed by the Rajah. Traherne and Lucilla are doomed to be sacrificed to the Green Goddess. At the crucial moment a British air squadron arrives in response to the dead Major's message and Lucilla and her lover are saved.

"The Green Goddess!"

Another George Arliss screen triumph, another directorial target bullseye hit by sapient Sidney Olcott!

A great cast, a great picture—many folks will say even greater than the famous stage original. Because of the elaborate film trimmings. The camera puts that Oriental atmosphere across in royal style. One more instance of how the fine detail stuff counts so heavily!

Beginning with an exotic color touch, the languid air brooding over the little military post, a native indolently working the huge fan with his toes, the liquor-soaked Major seeking relaxation in the convenient decanter.

Then the plane flight, the wreck in the Rajah's domain. From then on, mystery, suspense, thrills, poignant anguish, humor that bites with a sardonic tooth, the hapless lovers entangled in Fate's net, the loyalty to race of the drunkard who "lies like a gentleman" as he dies and, crowning all—a genuinely glorious finish when the Royal Air Forces swoop like avenging hawks to the rescue and snatch the white victims from the grip of the Green Goddess.

A revel of melodrama, ground and polished to diamond-like consistency! Take the scene where the Rajah tests his prisoners' knowledge of wireless by the sending of a fake message. He watches from under sleepy lids, while the Major smokes cigarettes and chats carelessly with Doctor Traherne, never betraying himself by as much as a muscle quiver. A tense moment? We'll say it is.

And what a deep feeling of satisfaction it gives you when Mr. Cockney Watkins, traitor to his kind, is hurled to death through the window. And how your heart leaps when the British bombs tear up the earth and scatter the sacrificial priests to the four winds!

And the flawless acting of George Arliss! What a prince of scoundrels that Rajah is. Suave, debonair, sinister, the hidden fire of native hatred flashing momentarily into flame, but instantly repressed and concealed under cover of a polished phrase, a coal inhuman jest. A masterpiece of sarcastic characterization! And just the same, you can't help confessing to a sort of sneaking admiration for the Rukh monarch. The sympathetic grin comes involuntarily to one's lips when he remarks in the grand finale, as per subtitle—"Well, she probably would have been a damned nuisance anyway!"

Space does not permit due praise to the individual work of the supporting cast. Suffice it to say that Harry Morey's portrayal of the drunken Major is about the best thing he has done for the screen. Alice Joyce is serenely beautiful as Mrs. Crespin and emotionally effective.

Among the many fine photographic effects that of the arrival of the rescuing aeroplanes deserves particular mention. The Arliss-Olcott combination deserves a vote of thanks for turning out a film which represents the very acme of artistic endeavour.

Exploiting it is easy. Reference to the long run of the stage play and the star's name is sufficient. G. T. P.

Mine to Keep

A Ben Wilson Production for State Rights distribution by Grand-Asher. Adapted from the novel by Evelyn Campbell. Scenario by Arthur Statter. Directed by Ben Wilson. Length 5761 feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Victor Olney Bryant Washburn
 Constance Rives Mabel Forrest
 Clint Mobray Bryant Washburn
 Carmen Joy Charlotte Stevens
 Mrs. Joy Laurie La Varnie
 Three Little Joys Peaches Jackson, Mickey Moore, Pat Moore

Victor Olney makes elaborate preparations for his bachelor dinner. Olney is wealthy and has a reputation as a man about town. His winning of the hand of Constance Rives is a sad blow to Clint Mobray. Mobray is jealous, but he attends the bachelor dinner. A famous show girl, who is in love with Olney but has never meant anything to him more than an acquaintance, performs on the tight wire at the dinner.

She is in the act of a difficult feat when she hears that Olney is to be married. The girl swoons, with the result that her fall injures her back and it is feared that she will never walk again. Olney and Constance are married and the husband is a jealous guarder of his possession. Olney's jealousy of his wife finally drives her away from him. Mobray sees an opportunity and he caddishly tells Constance about the incident at the bachelor dinner, intimating that Olney had had an affair with the girl. This is a lie, but Constance leaves her husband and takes the injured girl away. Olney is miserable but he finally learns that the way to win his wife back is to believe in her. He finds Constance and asks her forgiveness. And as Constance has learned from the chorus girl, now recovering the use of her legs, that there never had been an affair between Olney and the girl, the wife forgives and asks forgiveness.

"Mine to Keep" has its good moments. Indeed, there are several melodramatic incidents which supply immediate suspense and they occur at the "psychological moment," keep the plot going along lines that will interest the average audience. It has audience appeal, this story of a jealous husband and a wife who is courted by a good looking chap but a not very honorable one.

The fact that the dramatic incidents such as the bachelor dinner, the thrill stuff of the auto racing with a train, the aeroplane scenes, and action when the wife deserts her jealous husband; the fact that these and other moments entirely eclipse the theme and the plot is no detriment to the picture which Mr. Wilson has produced. Any director would be better off with one incident of this order than two plots like "Mine to Keep."

It is a well directed and finely produced offering. The acting also, is in capable hands. Bryant Washburn does a lot with an ungrateful role as the jealous husband and Mabel Forrest is very pretty as the wife. The acting honors go to Wheeler Oakman—perhaps because his part as Mobray, the disappointed suitor, is the most fruitful. It is not a consistently sympathetic role, but Oakman comes close to carrying sympathy even when he acts the cad and pours the poison of lies about the husband. Kate Lester, Laura LaVarnie and Charlotte Stevens give realistic performances.

The picture will offer satisfactory entertainment to average audiences and therefore may be billed for its general appeal. The stars should be played up. Mabel Forrest has played in pictures for some time but is a comparative newcomer to featured roles. This fact should be capitalized and as she is pretty her portrait should find its way into the newspaper columns. T. K.

Little Johnny Jones

Warner Brothers Photoplay in Six Parts. Adapted from George M. Cohan's Stage Play of Same Title. Scenario by Raymond Schrock. Director, Arthur Rosson. Running Time, Seventy-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Johnny Jones Johnny Hines
 Earl of Bloomsburg Wyndham Standing
 Mrs. Jones Margaret Seddon
 Sir James Smythe Robert Prior
 Edith Smythe Molly Malone
 Robert Anstead George Webb
 Jockey Nelson Mervyn LeRoy
 Chauffeur "Fat" Carr
 Lady Jane Smythe Pauline French
 Brownie, the Dog Himself

Johnny Jones, American jockey, is engaged by the Earl of Bloomsburg to ride Yankee Doodle in the English Derby. On the voyage he meets and falls in love with Edith, daughter of Sir James Smythe. Anstead, crooked gentleman gambler, reports to the Earl that he has information to the effect that Johnny intends to throw the race and substantiates his statement by means of a fake cablegram. This takes place at a ball. Johnny's dog brings him a message from Edith that she has been kidnapped and he rushes out to find her, thereby leaving himself under suspicion. Edith is in the hands of Anstead's men on a houseboat, having overheard their plans regarding Johnny. He rescues her. On the day of the race the Earl at first refuses to back his own horse, but when Johnny places his entire pay, two thousand pounds, on Yankee Doodle, he is convinced of his jockey's good faith and bets freely on the horse. Anstead's jockey endeavours to blind Johnny in the homestretch by throwing a liquid into his face from a hollow whip, which he then throws away. Johnny's dog picks up the whip and brings it to his master, who has won the race and is accusing Anstead's jockey. The latter and Anstead are arrested. Johnny wins Edith and takes her back to America.

Nearly a score of years ago George M. Cohan, playing the lead in "Little Johnny Jones" started an entire continent singing and whistling—"Give my regards to Broadway." Both song and play went over like wildfire, and the writer will be much surprised if the film public doesn't get equally excited as the old-time playgoers in regard to the Warner Brothers' screen version of the turf classic.

For they've revamped the stuff, brought it up-to-date in many ways, still preserving the Cohan sentiment and comedy; and the result is a picture bubbling over with laughs and dealing out melodramatic wallops that land with immense effect.

The successful Cohan method of giving amusement seekers just what they want was never more in evidence than in the construction of "Little Johnny Jones." There's hokum unlimited, but the sort of hokum that wins out every time.

The burlesque note creeps in every once in a while, but the sympathetic touch holds good, the mother love idea is cleverly

York, was as enthusiastic as though an American jock and horse had actually carried Uncle Sam's colors to victory over a foreign competitor.

Johnny Hines makes the hit of his career in the leading role. His smile is irresistible, his comedy sharp-edged, his love for the old mother, who secretly follows her boy abroad to watch over him tenderly displayed, and to crown all—he rides Yankee Doodle with the vim and cunning craftmanship of a dyed-in-the-wool professional.

Margaret Seddon plays the mother with great effect, Dog Brownie is a canine marvel, Molly Malone registers as a most charming heroine and the British types are very whit as true to life as the British scenery—which is saying a lot.

The fog effects are excellent, the views of the track and grandstand at Epsom Downs wonderfully impressive and, as for the race—it must be seen to be appreciated.

There ought to be little trouble in successfully exploiting this feature. George M. Cohan's name and that of the star is a combination hard to beat from an advertising angle. G. T. P.

The Tango Cavalier

Aywon Film Corporation photoplay. Written and directed by Charles R. Seeling. Vernon Walker, Cameraman. Footage, approximately 4300.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Don Armingo.....George Larkin
 Carmelita.....Olli Kirby
 Doris Pomeroy.....Doris Dare
 Colonel Pomeroy.....Frank Whitson
 Brian Morgan.....Billy Quinn

Don Armingo, a Spaniard, comes to a dance hall on the Rio Grande, where his native dance, the tango, is being featured for Mardi Gras. There he meets Colonel Pomeroy and his daughter, Doris, at whose request he tangoes with the dancer, Carmelita, whose partner is ill. Carmelita learns that he can drive an airplane and tells him he can make some easy money by flying over the border once a week. He consents to come to the cabin at the outskirts of the town and meet Carmelita's associates the next day. Although they will not tell him the reason for the weekly trips, he promises to undertake them. Carmelita sees Don Armingo making love to Doris and compels the leader of the gang to promise to make away with her. When Don Armingo is returning from his first trip across the border, his plane is wrecked, but he is uninjured. He returns to the cabin and finds that the gang have kidnapped Doris. When a member of the party brings word that a posse is out searching for the girl, the gang escapes with Doris and ties Don Armingo and Carmelita to avert suspicion. Carmelita unties Don, but because he refuses to return the compliment she tells Doris's father, when he comes with the posse, that Don Armingo is one of the gang. He is put under guard, but escapes and saves Doris. The gang's automobile goes over a high cliff. Doris learns that her tango cavalier is a secret service man who has been tracking the gang for smuggling.

There is a dash of Spanish atmosphere in this western thriller. The plot is a time-honored one. It is quite evident that Don Armingo will prove to be a secret service man. The story seems to have been written to show up the versatility of George Larkin. Without a doubt he is versatile; he can dance a tango, kiss a girl, ride a horse and use his fists with equal ease and evident enjoyment.

And he has an engaging smile. He seems to have acquired the Spanish mannerisms, too. Doris Dare as Doris Pomeroy works too hard at being the ingenue. Her childishness is almost fanny in spots, but she can fight and kick like a little wildcat. Olli Kirby as Carmelita makes a better dancer than a vamp. Like Miss Dare, she occasionally works too hard.

The film has action and a good title for exploitation purposes. It will no doubt please the patrons of the smaller theatres, but it will hardly be satisfactory for first-run houses.

The Midnight Alarm

Vitagraph Photoplay in Six Parts. Adapted from the Stage Play of Same Title. Director, David Smith. Running Time, Seventy-five Minutes.

SYNOPSIS

Silas Carrington and Thornton are business partners. The latter appoints Carrington executor of his property and is slain by him. Thornton is supposed to have committed suicide, Springer, a servant, having helped Carrington to hide all traces of the murder. Mrs. Thornton runs away to escape from Carrington's attentions, taking her child with her. She is killed but the little one survives. Mrs. Thornton's parents, the Titwells, make every effort to find the child, but in vain. Years pass and Carrington discovers the missing girl, known as Sparkle. She and Aggie, a cripple, are running a newsstand. A love affair has developed between Sparkle and a young man named Chaser. With the intention of depriving Sparkle of her inheritance, Carrington attempts to destroy the documents which confirm her identity. Chaser and Captain Westmore of the Fire Department combine against Carrington and are successful in outwitting him after many thrilling adventures. Carrington finally dies in a midnight fire and Sparkle is free to wed the man of her choice.

Frankly melodramatic, liberally punctuated with startling situations and surcharged with speedy action, "The Midnight Alarm" responds to the demand by a very large section of movie patrons for a "sure-enough" thriller which breezes along at cyclonic pace, makes a direct appeal to the most elemental emotions and winds up by enveloping hero and heroine in a blaze of glory.

The "blaze" must be taken literally, for the fire in which the villain meets his well-deserved doom at the close registers as one of the most spectacular episodes in a picture which fairly vibrates with "big punch" scenes, as exemplified by the attempt to send a limited express crashing to the bottom of a trestle, an auto wrecked by a train and other exciting bits of realism.

The film follows closely the methods of worked out and utilized, as is the love romance. And the race scene is a whopper. It gets the crowd warmed up until a roar of applause greets the winner as he thunders into the homestretch and past the post. In fact the demonstration accorded the winner, when the feature was given its initial showing at the Strand Theatre, New the old-time stage melodramas, which, prior to the advent of the screen, provided entertainment to suit the popular taste and set the gallery gods ayelling in wild applause over the triumph achieved by virtue when opposed to unbridled wickedness.

But where the "legitimate" had its limitations in regard to matters of detail the silver sheet is not hampered by such narrow boundaries and consequently "The Midnight Alarm" with its magical photography accomplishes things undreamed of by the footlight producers.

Considered strictly from a spectacular viewpoint the feature ranks as a 100 per cent production. The plot, of course, is far-fetched, but for one spectator who may look with disapproval upon its improbabilities, there will be a hundred to accept it as entertaining stuff and let it go at that. The direction is good, even continuity being preserved despite the story's manifold complications. Better camera work could not be desired. The filming of the big fire, before alluded to, is excellent, including as it does wonderful color effects. The auto race and near wreck of the train are skillfully handled.

Alice Calhoun figures as a pretty and appealing heroine. Maxine Elliot Hicks, a juvenile of considerable talent, scores in the role of the crippled girl. Percy Mar-mont is not as convincing as he might be, as the fireman hero, but Cullen Landis shares dramatic honors with the star by his clever portrayal of Chaser.

The picture should be easy to exploit as a fast-moving, snappy melodrama, especially if the good-will of local fire companies be enlisted in advertising it.

Alias the Night Wind

Fox Photoplay Directed by Joseph Franz.
Story by Varick Vanardy. Scenario by Robert M. Lee. Footage, 4,145.
CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Katherine Maxwell	Maude Wayne
Amos Chester	Chas. K. French
Thomas Clancy	Jack Miller
Clifford Rushton	Donald McDonald

Detective	Bob Klein
Detective	Bert Lindley
E. J. Brown	H. Milton Ross
Police Commissioner	Chas. Wellesly

"The Night Wind," Bing Howard, former stock broker, is continually being trailed by Rushton, private detective, who has framed him in a bond robbery. Bing saves his best friend, Thos. Clancy from hold-up men and stays in Clancy's home while he goes to the police commissioner to try to convince him of Bing's innocence. His efforts are fruitless because Rushton has furnished evidence against Bing. Rushton's failure to catch Bing while he is at Clancy's house forces the Chief to turn the case over to "Lady Kate." By chance she aids him to escape before she knows who he is. Later Rushton shoots Bing who evades him. The doctor who attends Bing notifies the police but Bing gets away before Rushton arrives. Lady Kate captures him and takes him to her home. There he is taken care of until he is able to walk again. Rushton follows Lady Kate to her house, but before he gets in she handcuffs Bing. They all go to the police commissioner, who announces that Lady Kate is Miss Marsden, whose brother was sent to prison for bond robbery on the same sort of evidence as was brought against Bing. She has caught Rushton, who is guilty of both thefts. "The Night Wind" and "Lady Kate" find that they have fallen in love.

"Alias the Night Wind" is a crook tale with a streak of romance and plenty of action.

One wonders whether it wouldn't have been better to follow the chronological order in the beginning. The inverted opening makes for immediate fast action, but it seems improbable that Thos. Clancy, Bing's best friend, would not have known of the bond theft and that Bing was being pursued by the police under the name of "The Night Wind."

The apparent purpose of the flashback is to enlighten Clancy, but the real purpose—to enlighten the audience—is too clearly perceived. If Clancy had asked Bing for his version of the affair—assuming that Bing had fled after the theft and had told him nothing—the flashback could logically have been employed.

Nevertheless, the picture as a whole is good diversion. Lady Kate's identity cannot be suspected and Bing's accidental escape in her car before she takes over his case, lends a bit of romance and adventure that is always welcome.

William Russell makes a virile and fast-moving hero and Maude Wayne a capable "Lady Kate." The support is well given.

The interiors showing the broker's office, and all the night scenes are good.

The film may be exploited as a crook drama peppered with mystery, romance and plenty of action, featuring William Russell in a rather cyclonic role.

Where the North Begins

Produced by Harry Rapp for Warner Bros.;
Directed by Chester M. Franklin; Feat-uring Rin-Tin-Tin, German Police Dog; Story by Myrtle Owen
Photographer Not Mentioned; Running Time, One Hour and Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

The Wolf Dog	Rin-Tin-Tin
Felice McTavish	Claire Adams
Gabriel Dupre	Walter McGrail
Shad Galloway	Pat Hartigan
Marie	Myrtle Owen
The Fox	Charles Stevens
Scotty McTavish	Fred Huntley

Rin-Tin-Tin, German police dog, is lost while being transported across the Alaskan wastes when a puppy. He is adopted and raised by a wolf pack, and becomes half dog half wolf. Gabriel Dupre has been sent through a dangerous pass with furs. Shad Galloway, sends the Fox to kill and rob him. Rin-Tin-Tin rescues Dupre, and becomes his friend. Twice he rescues Dupre, and Felice McTavish, his sweetheart, finally killing Galloway and bringing the Fox to justice. When the baby of the household is missing, Dupre believes the dog has killed it, and beats him. Rin-Tin-Tin returns to his wild brethren. Dupre and Felice are married, and are happy, but for the absence of their dog friend. The doors open, and in comes Rin-Tin-Tin with a wolf mate and ten puppies.

This picture belongs in the category of productions that depends upon how much you like animals for its success. Harry Rapp evidently counted on this appeal when he made it, and he has put over a picture that will hold the average audience from the opening iris to the final fade-out, which is treated in a somewhat different manner.

The vehicle serves to introduce Rin-Tin-Tin, a German police dog, to the screen. This animal served at the front during the war, and is unusually intelligent, although not screen wise. As a result he is a trifle slow in taking direction due to inexperience. A picture or two more and he will be second to no animal actor.

The story of "Where the North Begins" might have been scooped out of the old plot barrel, but that does not hurt its entertainment value. The director has seen to it that action begins with the first iris and is maintained until the finish. Careful editing has filled in what might have resulted in a drop in the tempo, with some wonderfully beautiful photography. In fact this photography is one of the picture's chief charms, and the cameraman should have had his name on the screen.

Beautiful snow vistas, skylines, silhouettes and wintery woodland scenes pop up at just the right moment, so that there is entertainment every minute of the way through the picture.

The end is done in a light comedy vein that has more appeal than the usual He and She finish. Driven from his home, the dog wanders back to his wild kind, and the humans are mourning him. Suddenly the dog dashes in and greets his friends. A bark, and a puppy squeezes through the door. This is kept up until ten little Rin-Tin-Tins fill the room followed by a she-wolf with whom the dog has mated. This is a clever touch and got across big.

There is a plot, of course, but it is very thin. It could be forgotten entirely and there would still remain entertainment.

Claire Adams, Walter McGrail, Pat Hartigan and Charles Stevens do what is asked of them satisfactorily, but it is not a great deal. Most audiences will like this picture but they will pay very little attention to the cast. The dog will get them, and he is on the screen enough to satisfy.

"Where the North Begins" is a very human production, and will appeal especially to women and children. Persons who want entertainment put over in drama through a story by actors of the human species, will not stand up and applaud this picture—but they can't help like the dog.

So Long Buddy, Universal

Buddy Messinger's latest two-reeler depicts him as the son of a country hotel keeper. Buddy falls asleep while he is fishing "where he hadn't oughter" and dreams a lot of rollicking incidents. His sweetheart, Mary, has a prominent place in his dreams, as has Bill, his rival for her affections. Bill puts itch powder on Buddy's clothes with a rather disastrous result. A troupe of "ham" actors comes to the hotel and holds a dress rehearsal at night. Buddy gets hold of a huge false head and frightens the colored servants nearly to death. The actors in their weird costumes add to the merriment. Buddy's antics will amuse in any house.

The Pencil Pusher, Universal

Chuck Reisner is a reporter in this one-reel comedy which he wrote and directed. Sent to obtain a story from the warden of the prison, Chuck commits various offences to get behind the bars, but all his schemes are unsuccessful. The funniest incident is when he steals a uniform from the tailor who is bringing back the prisoners' suits, all neatly pressed. Chuck no sooner gets inside the prison than the inmates force him to escape with them. This comedy is moderately amusing.

Mysteries of Yucatan, Fox

That Central America has ruins of its own, as beautiful and romantic as those of the old world, is proved by this reel. These scenes of the chicle country which show the pyramids, the ancient temples where the Maya maidens were sacrificed, the nunnery and relics of the city of Uxmal, are very interesting.

Press Comments

World.—In the trite lexicon of racing films there's no such word as "lose." There were great possibilities in this story. Tribune.—It is not the plot to which we object but the lack of it. . . . The best thing in the picture is Brownie, the wonder dog. New York Times.—The acting in this production is about on a level with the story. New York American.—Little Johnny Jones will bank upon its vivid Derby scene. Although these race scenes are by no means rare in films, this can hold its own and even more. Evening Telegram.—The nearest approach to the Cohanesque style has been achieved by Johnny Hines, comedian. Sun and Globe.—Makes a rattling good entertainment provided you throw logic to the winds and check your mind at the door. Evening World.—Retains the musical comedy flavor of the Geo. M. Cohan play and Johnny Hines who plays the part of Johnny Jones succeeds fairly well.

CENTRAL

Marriage Morals (Weber & North)

Press Comments

Sun and Globe.—Handles its theme well in spite of the fact that it has been done dozens of times before. The story is competently interpreted. Evening World.—All do as well as can be expected. Evening Telegram.—Except for Tom Moore's portrayal of the role of an habitual roysterer there is little to be said about the merits of "Marriage Morals." The story has become commonplace on the screen.

THEY STOLE THE MAYOR'S THUNDER

*Carrier and Raynor Enter Cleveland Color Scheme
With "Vanity Fair" Exploitation*

First know that Mayor Kohler of Cleveland is some exploitation man on his own account. Since assuming office he has had every public building in Cleveland, every fence, bridge, traffic line, etc., painted a bright orange with black lettering.

In the public square is a bridge over a small pond which is crossed by nearly a fourth of the populace—those living on the west side—nearly every day in their journey to the down-town section. In the pond are numerous turtles and various kinds of fishes.

When "Vanity Fair" was being shown at the Hippodrome Theatre, Eddie Carrier, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exploitation man, stole Mayor Kohler's thunder and turned it to "Vanity Fair" exploitation purposes. He got hold of twenty-five large turtles with a back expanse of about twelve inches and painted their shells a bright orange with the title of the picture and the name of the Hippodrome in black letters across their backs.

As is the case with all mayors, Mayor Kohler has much opposition in Cleveland, and the newspapers which are opposed to him and to his choice of colors for decorating city property printed long articles about the fact that he was even selling the advertising rights to the backs of the turtles in the little pond in the park and letting his colors be used on them.

In addition to the turtle stunt, Mr. Carrier and William Raynor, manager of the Hippodrome, arranged a number of big tie-ups.

LEARN THE CURVES AND SEE SHOW FREE

Boys who followed the straight line were out of luck for once.

What Manager Frank L. Browne of the Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Calif., wanted was youngsters who could follow figures in curved lines, doubling lines and any other formations as outlined by 98 consecutive numbers in a diagram game puzzle.

It was all part of his exploitation for First National's "Penrod and Sam" and the Long Beach newspapers took to it willingly. They printed the diagram puzzle, the completed picture as represented by the numbers, showing some of the characters in "Penrod and Sam." The idea was taken from the press sheet but Manager Browne adapted it to his needs and actually got the newspapers to publish. That's real showmanship.

The first one hundred boys who finished the drawing and identified the actors correctly were invited to see "Penrod and Sam" at the Liberty.

DISPLAYS BY THE HUNDRED

Seven hundred and twenty-six drink dispensaries helped publicize "The Ragged Edge," when it played the California Theatre, Los Angeles, through a tieup effected by Roy Miller of the California and L. W. Barclay, Goldwynner.

The Ko-Fan company, manufacturers of a soft drink, distributed 2,000 fountain streamers reading, "If you feel on 'The Ragged Edge' drink Ko-Fan—you'll like it." The strips were used on fountain mirrors and on windows.

Profitable

EXPLOITATION

PLUNKETT STAGES COLORFUL PROLOGUE

One of the most colorful and vivacious presentations ever offered by Joseph Plunkett was his introduction of First National's "The Circus Days" at his New York Strand Theatre.

The front of a circus tent with the clowns, equestriennes and other members of the calliope company on the stage marked the opening of the prologue. The first half of the act was called a "Morning Rehearsal" as the members of the company went through their parts. Three ringed circuses were cast into the pale and the audience was outwardly enthusiastic as they had to watch a dozen different members of the troupe performing at the same time.

The rehearsal came to an abrupt end as the orchestra struck up the music for "Circus Days," a number that was introduced to New York years ago as part of a musical comedy show. The male quartet rendered this and it was followed by the Galop and Finale in which Mlle. Deganove, and ensemble and Anatole Bourmann, ballet master, carried the burden of work.

BABY PEGGY SPONSORS DALLAS MILK FUND

Jack Meredith, Universal exploiteer in Dallas, tied up with the Dallas Dispatch on a Milk Fund, which Baby Peggy, Century Comedy star, started on its merry way with a five dollar bill. (The chances are, like Coogan, Peggy would have mailed a check if she had a check account).

The idea was simply this: Meredith interested local charitable organizations in a Milk Fund for the Deserving Poor. He paid the $5 Peggy sent as a starter, and promised that the 25 local Baby Peggy Kiddie Clubs would contribute toward the Fund. 24 of the Clubs did, and checks, small and large, poured in from all parts of the city. The Milk Fund was a huge success, and Baby Peggy's name helped the box office of theatres running her comedies during the milk money drive.

POSTMEN LEND A BAND

Charlie Giegerich, special exploitation representative for Whitman Bennett, got an effective ballyhoo for the presentation of "Loyal Lives" at the Central Theatre on Broadway at 47th Street, New York, when he secured the New York Letter Carriers' Band of fifty pieces and had them play in front of the Central Theatre at eight o'clock in the evening.

All of the officials from the general post office were present to witness the first screening of the picture and after its presentation they renewed their original pledges to boost the picture.

SHEPHERD HOST TO NEWARK YOUNGSTERS

Manager D. J. Shepherd of the Branford Theatre added to his reputation as a host to children when he gave the youngsters of Newark, N. J., a treat on July seventh by running a special performance of "Penrod and Sam."

The show was run after the regular run of this picture which was exhibited at the Branford.

About 50,000 cards were distributed through the schools which were holding summer sessions, each card being good for two votes for the most popular boy who received a suit of Penrod Clothes, donated by Hahne and Company, the local department store. The card was also good for ten votes for the most popular girl, who received a complete set of Booth Tarkington's works, donated by the same firm and a Special Prize was given of a bathing suit, donated by Hahne and Company, for the young lady having the most freckles.

The show was greatly aided by the running of announcements in the Uncle George Column of the Morning Ledger which has a children's club which lends itself nicely to children's "parties."

MULLOWNEY FORMS A BOOSTERS CLAN

According to all accounts, Manager A. Q. Mallowney of the Arcade Theatre, Marston, Me., has an enterprising mind. Among other things he has built up quite a following for Charles Ray's First National attractions and this is how it happened:

In going over the directory of the county, he was amazed at the number of neighbors he had in the county by the name of Ray. He naturally concluded that they would be interested in the work of the screen star of the same name and accordingly based his exploitations on this one angle. Whenever Ray was shown in a First National attraction, Manager Mallowney wrote all the Rays, not mimeographed sheets but real hand written or typewritten letters.

The climax came when he played "The Deuce of Spades" and borrowed a searchlight for the occasion. The searchlight was directed on a poster about a half mile away on which was the caption: "The Rays are with us tonight."

He asked the co-operation of the Rays in the county to put over his shows and naturally their word of mouth advertising brought other customers. It was, as Manager Mallowney stated, his Ray of Sunshine during the bad spells last year.

WAGNER TIES UP STORES AND SCHOOLS

Nick Wagner, manager of the Perry Theatre in Erie, Pa., exploited Goldwyn's production of "The Christian" most effectively through the public schools and book stores of that city. The school authorities gave him permission to distribute "Christian" book marks in the public schools. They were used also in the book stores and in the book sections of department stores.

The Erie Dry Goods Co. gave a big window display, using copies of Sir Hall Caine's novel, oil paintings, posters and special cards. A display was also used on a counter in the book department. A. R. Womrath, Inc., arranged a special window display tie-up with the picture. The theatre lobby was decorated with six-sheet cutout, frames of stills and special cards.

On the left is one of the 24 sheet stands which the California Theatre is using in and around Los Angeles as house advertising. At the right a 24 teaser sheet used in a campaign for Goldwyn's "The Spoilers" which was started one month in advance of the presentation at the California.

A novelty herald issued by C. C. Burr for "The Last Hour," in which Russell Griffin, boy star, is featured.

The special stage setting provided for the prologue to Educational's comedy, "Roll Along" at Saxe's Strand, Milwaukee. "Roll Along" is a two-reel Christie offering—the "short subjects" are coming up in the world of showmanship.

Here are the four Syracuse, N. Y., youngsters, who most resemble Baby Peggy. Syracuse had a Baby Peggy contest and it created big enthusiasm there as it has in many parts of the country.

Meet Fay Charnik, usherette at the Criterion, N. Y., in her costume for the run of "The Covered Wag n."

Window display for Goldwyn's "Vanity Fair." A cutout from the one-sheet was the central feature.

Make Your Advertising Reach Home

The Direct Method of Motion Picture Exploitation

By Leon J. Bamberger, Ass't Mgr. Division of Exploitation, Famous Players, Lasky Corporation.

ADVERTISING material for house-to-house distribution, whether sent through the mail or delivered by boys, is, in the writer's opinion, one of the most effective means of motion picture exploitation and yet one that is not taken advantage of to the fullest possible extent.

If I were taking over the ownership or management of a non-neighborhood theatre, one of the first questions I should desire to have answered would be:

"How many homes are there in this town?" counting of course every apartment where a building houses more than one family. If mine were a neighborhood theatre, I should count the number of homes within a radius from which it might be reasonably expected that I could draw my patrons.

Every person in your town is a prospective customer at your box office for every picture you play. Why not try to sell them all when the cost to reach each prospect is so insignificant?

It is the entertainment for the family. If your message does not appeal to the entire family, you will always find individual members who are interested. You know that one person may love comedy and dislike melodrama, and vice versa. Therefore the widest distribution you can get with your exploitation, it follows that the larger attendance will be your reward.

I have seen exhibitors in cities having 10,000 homes, distribute 2,000 heralds, time and time again. Why? How about the other 8,000 families? What effort is made to bring them to the box-office? About 20% of the people read the newspapers. Because they buy them does not mean that they read them thoroughly, and they certainly do not turn feverishly to the amusement ad column to see what is playing at your theatre unless they are rabid fans.

Your ad is competing for the readers' attention with hundreds of other articles and ads. Street stunts are always effective but what percentage of the population will happen to be "downtown" when your ballyhoo appears? Lobby displays are good, but how about the countless people who do not happen to pass your theatre while it is up?

The same argument applies to all other forms of exploitation with the exception of the exploitation that goes directly into the home. There they can not miss it.

Everybody looks at their mail. Therefore I think that mail exploitation is the very best of all. Then comes house-to-house distribution. Of course, to make it really effective you must vary it with almost every picture — a herald for one, a letter for the next, a novelty card for the next, then a contest announcement, then on through the many, many novelties which can be printed at a nominal cost in your own city.

Don't figure in terms of cost. Figure in terms of percentage of sales.

Remember that in printing, the cost of the first one or two thousand pieces is always higher than additional thousands, on account of the cost of setting up.

In one case, we sent out 8,000 additional pieces for $16, or exactly 1/5 of a cent each. Isn't it worth gambling (?) that amount to give your sales talk to 8,000 families when their attention is focused on it alone?

If you sold only one out of twenty you could still take in $80 on an expenditure of $16. Figure this way on your next picture, try the method of intensive complete exploitation as above suggested, and I am sure you will be surprised at the good results.

Comparison of the New Reflecting Arc Projector with Other Types

The following report gives the results of comparative tests of the New Reflecting Arc, submitted by the American Reflecting Arc Corporation, 24 Milk street, Boston, with commonly used types of illuminators.

Description of the New Reflecting Arc

The new reflecting arc for motion picture projection makes use of a concave mirror to intercept and concentrate the light on the film instead of the condensing lenses common to all other forms of projectors.

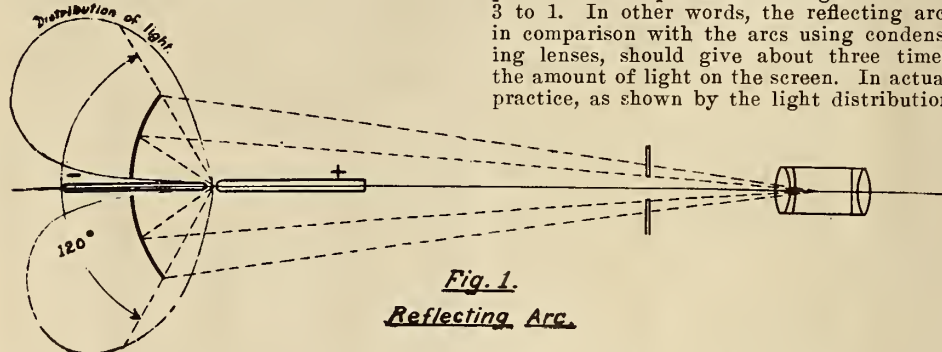

Fig. 1.
Reflecting Arc.

The carbons are situated horizontally in the optical axis of the projection system as shown diagrammatically in Fig. 1. The positive carbon is forward or nearer the film, the crater facing the mirror which surrounds the rear or negative carbon. No condensing lenses are necessary.

Figs. 2 and 3 show for comparison the common vertical arc and the high intensity arc, respectively.

Since over 80% of the light from a direct-current arc emanates from the crater of the positive carbon, the arrangement of positive carbon and optical units should be such as to utilize as much of this light as possible. The approximate distribution curve of light about the crater is given in each of the figures. As shown in Fig. 1, the mirror of the reflecting arc intercepts a large fraction of the light from the crater whereas the condenser of the other types of arc take in a much smaller fraction of the available light. The diameter of the mirror shown in Fig. 1 is 6 inches and subtends an angle of 120° at the crater. The ordinary $4\frac{1}{2}$ inch condensing lenses of the other illuminators subtend an angle of only about 70° at the crater. Theoretically, if the distribution of light were uniform the amounts of light utilized in the two cases would be in proportion to the squares of the angles or about 3 to 1. In other words, the reflecting arc, in comparison with the arcs using condensing lenses, should give about three times the amount of light on the screen. In actual practice, as shown by the light distribution curves of Figs. 1 to 3, the distribution of light is not uniform but is a maximum in a direction perpendicular to the crater surface. In the case of the vertical arc the condensers are unfavorably situated with respect to the inclined positive crater and the light emanating therefrom, so that a great deal of light is lost.

Fig. 2.
Vertical Arc.

The positive carbon of the high intensity arc is very favorably positioned with respect to the condensing lenses but on account of the small angle subtended by the lens a large amount of light is lost in the arc chamber.

The above discussion gives ample reasons for expecting a greater screen illumination from the reflecting arc than from other types for the same current used in the arc.

Experimental Results of Comparative Tests

The following tests were made to determine experimentally the gain in light when using the reflecting arc. The intensity of light at the screen, when the illuminated area is eight feet by ten and three-quarters feet was measured by a photometer in foot candles. Since the intensity of light for any current depends greatly upon the adjustments of the arc and distances between the arc and aperture plate, a large number of observations were necessary in order to obtain a true statement of facts. Each time adjustments were made for even illumination on the screen.

Fig. 4 shows the results of a comparison of the reflecting arc and the vertical arc, the former being operated on both direct current and alternating current. The observation points for the vertical arc are very much more scattered because of its greater irregularity and the variation caused by the changing position of the crater.

The curves show that for the same current through the arc, the reflecting arc gives from three to four times more light than the vertical arc. Looking at the results another way, for the same illumination of the screen, the reflecting arc requires less than one-third the current required by the vertical arc. For instance, a 16-ampere reflecting arc on direct current gives as much screen illumination as a 50-ampere direct current vertical arc. The illumination using alternating current is far less than with direct current due to the lower arc voltage, explained below, and to the fact that the positive crater shifts from one carbon to the other.

The vertical arc is ordinarily operated on direct currents of from 30 to 100 amperes or even more and does not give satisfactory results on small currents. On the other hand, the reflecting arc operates well on direct currents of from 5 to 30 amperes and little is gained in using larger currents. On alternating current the vertical arc usually operates on from 35 to 70 amperes while the reflecting arc operates satisfactorily on from 20 to 40 amperes.

Average Voltage Across Arcs

The average voltage across the direct-current arcs, using large currents, is 60. The average voltage across the reflecting arc is about 58 for currents of from 10 to 30 amperes, but is higher for smaller currents. An arc characteristic is given in Fig. 5. On alternating current the arc voltage is much less than on direct current, ranging from 30 to 40 volts. A much shorter arc is used.

In Fig. 6 is given the results of Fig. 4 replotted to a scale of power (arc voltage times arc current) in kilowatts delivered to the arc or lamp. The same gain of the reflecting arc over the vertical arc is shown here. For the same illumination on the screen less than one-third the power is required in the reflecting arc. This means not only less expense for power, an important item, but less heat in the arc box and less carbon cost.

For the same power supplied to the arc, the illumination using alternating current is about one-half that when using direct current.

The intensity of illumination given by a standard 900-watt Mazda lamp is shown in Fig. 6. The Mazda lamp is here shown even less efficient than the vertical arc on direct current. This is somewhat unfair to the Mazda lamp for the scale of abscissae representing power in the arc does not represent the total power drawn from the mains because all arcs operating on direct current require some ballast resistance or the equivalent and this ballast resistance absorbs power. The Mazda lamp operating on alternating current requires a transformer, but this transformer absorbs very little power.

Fig. 7 gives the results in the most practical form. In this figure the screen illumination given by the arcs and Mazda lamp is plotted for various amounts of power taken from the electric mains at 110 volts and takes into account the losses in the necessary ballast resistance or conversion apparatus. The two solid lines give the comparison of the reflecting and vertical arcs on direct current when ballast resistances are used. Here, as before, a saving of over two-thirds of the power is possible for the same screen illumination when using the reflecting arc. The dotted lines indicate the results on alternating current. A curve is given for the reflecting arc on alternating current using ballast resistance but an alternating current arc is seldom operated with resistance because a transformer or reactance affords much more efficient operation. The curve for the arcs on alternating current with transformer lie surprisingly near the corresponding curves for direct current in view of the inefficient results on alternating current shown in the preceding figures. This is because, in spite of the low efficiency of the alternating current arc as a source of light, the large loss in motor generator or ballast resistance does not obtain when the only conversion apparatus necessary with alternating current is the high efficiency transformer. The curve for the reflecting arc on alternating current was calculated from the results of Fig. 6 assum-

Fig. 7.

60% to 65% for the small sets of 1.5 kilowatts capacity and perhaps 70% to 75% for the larger sets. The generator is usually wound for about 75 volts. Of the power drawn from the mains, some is lost in the motor-generator set and some in the small ballast resistance. The curves of Fig. 8 show approximately what should be expected when the proper motor-generator set is used. These results are not absolute because the efficiencies of motor-generator sets vary somewhat.

If a large motor-generator set designed for, say, a 50-ampere arc is used to feed a 15-ampere arc, the motor-generator set will have a slightly lower efficiency at this light load than at full load for which it was designed. In this case the amount of power required can be obtained from the curves by adding from 5% to 10%. The loss in efficiency is, therefore, not great even if a large machine formerly used for a large arc is used for a small current arc.

Reflecting Arc More Efficient

The above tests show conclusively that the reflecting arc is a much more efficient illuminator than other types of projector. A saving of roughly two-thirds of the power is afforded by the use of the reflecting arc and this result is in agreement with what is expected from the elementary considerations of the geometrical arrangement. Certain other advantages possessed by the reflecting arc may now be described.

One of the greatest annoyances with the ing a transformer efficiency of 90%. The curve for the vertical arc on alternating current was drawn from actual power measurements using a Power's Inductor for controlling the arc.

The three points A, B and C of Fig. 7 show the illumination and power required when operating the Mazda lamp projector in three ways. Point A indicates the most efficient method of operating the lamp on alternating current using a transformer to step down the voltage to the lamp voltage of 30. Sometimes if only direct current is available an inverted rotary converter is used to convert to alternating current which can then be transformed down to 30 volts. Point B represents this case. Point C represents an extremely inefficient method of operating the lamp on direct current through resistance.

As is well known and as is borne out by the curves described above, it is highly desirable when possible, to operate arcs on direct current. When the only source of power is direct current at higher voltage than 110 or alternating power at any voltage, either single phase or polyphase, a motor generator set is necessary if direct current is to be fed to the arc. The motor-generator set may have an efficiency of from

WILL ELIMINATE DANGER OF FIRE

Carbon Butt Receptacle Invented Which Automatically Takes Care of Burnt Stubs

A valuable addition to the motion picture booth has been invented by Jos. A. Barcelona of Baton Rouge, La. It is a receptacle for carbon butts which will eliminate the danger of fire from throwing heated carbon stubs into open buckets which in many cases contain inflammable material.

The object of the invention is to provide an improved receptacle for this purpose in which these stubs will be automatically introduced in an orderly manner. Space is provided so that a great number of these stubs can be taken care of. Their removal is a simple matter through the bottom of the receptacle as occasion requires.

The illustration, which is taken from a blueprint of the invention, shows a side view. In explaining this the inventor refers to the drawing as follows: 5 designates the body of the receptacle. This is held elevated by the legs 6. By this construction the bottom 7 is spaced above the floor or supporting surface in order to permit the accumulating stubs being removed through the opening 8 in the bottom. The opening 8 is normally closed by rivets or other appropriate fastenings to the underside of the bottom 7.

Within the receptacle is a curved baffle plate 13 situated substantially centrally, toward the upper end of the receptacle, this baffle plate provides passages at its curved ends for allowing the carbon butts to escape down into the receptacle. Above the baffle plates are a pair of diagonal plates 14 and 15 secured to opposite side walls and extending downwardly from the sides towards one another. The lower ends of these diagonal plates 14 and 15 are spaced apart and are spaced above the central portion of the curved baffle plate 13.

The convex side of the baffle plates is presented upwardly and the carbon butts and stubs thrown into the upper open mouth of the receptacle are guided by the diagonal plates 14 and 15 down into the central high part of the baffle plate 13.

The stubs roll over the curved surface of the plate 13 and escape beyond the ends thereof and between the ends of said baffle plate and the side walls of the receptacle 5. The stubs then pile up in orderly fashion in the bottom of the receptacle 5 and when these stubs accumulate to the height of the baffle plate 13, the door 9 may be withdrawn to permit the collected butts and stubs to fall through the opening 8.

These stubs will be thus dumped from time to time.

NEW NOVELTY SLIDE

A slide novelty, which is used in conjunction with organs and orchestras in movie theatres, has been placed on the market by the Caldwell Advertising Company of Buffalo.

Their first release is entitled "An Old Time Movie Show," and is so constructed and designed that it will show off an organ at its best.

The slides are marketed with cue sheets and music and are placed out on a rental basis the same as films. This allows a theatre to have a new organ novelty once or twice a week at a nominal price. The company has a number of these novelties prepared for distribution.

Proposal for Combined Fire and Safety Code

The American Engineering Standards Committee announces the appointment by its Chairman, Mr. A. W. Whitney, of a committee to arrange for a thoroughly representative conference to decide whether there shall be formulated, under the auspices and procedure of the A. E. S. C. a combined electrical fire and safety code.

The committee will also make a careful study of the general situation with respect to such a code, and will outline and propose some form of policy for the consideration of the conference.

At present, two separate codes are in force: a "National Electrical Code," which prescribes methods of wiring, fixture, and machine installation with respect to fire hazard; and a "National Electrical Safety Code," which deals primarily with the personal hazards.

Since both provide guides for materials and methods of electrical construction, it is clear that either co-ordination or combination of the codes is a desideratum. Which method is best suited to the circumstances of the case is the question now under consideration.

The proposed formal conference to consider the formulation of the code, will not be called until some time after October, 1923.

The members of the committee arranging for the conference are: David Van Schaack, Aetna Life Insurance Company; Cyril Ainsworth, Penn. Dept. of Labor and Industry; F. O. Evertz, Ohio Inspection Bureau; F. M. Feiker, Society for Electrical Development; H. W. Forster, Independent Bureau; S. J. Williams, National Safety Council.

NEW REFLECTING ARC PROJECTOR

common projector is the frequent breakage of condensing lenses. This is due to the great heat liberated so close to the thick glass lens. Although the mirror is as near the arc as the lens it is so thin that breakage is negligible.

Chromatic aberration, so prominent with thick lenses, is entirely absent with mirrors.

Attention has already been called to the fact that if the reflecting arc requires less power for the same illumination on the screen, less heat is developed in the operating booth.

The reflecting arc uses small carbon and on account of the relatively small power required, the consumption of carbons is less and the carbon cost considerably reduced.

Since the carbons of the reflecting arc are in the optional axis of projection, the source of light is symmetrical with respect to the axis and adjustments for even illumination on the screen are much simpler and easier made than for the vertical arc.

CANADIAN EXHIBITORS REORGANIZE EXCHANGE

The Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Limited, with headquarters at Toronto, Ontario, has been reorganized and is being given a new start by independent exhibitors of Ontario who were originally identified with the Motion Picture Exhibitors Protective Association of Ontario, under whose auspices of the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange was established some six years ago.

J. A. Boyd, one of the shareholders of the exchange company, has been elected president of the organization and Fred Guest of Hamilton, Ontario, vice-president. Bud Lennon, for years with Canadian Universal, has been appointed general manager and J. Ferte, a former official, secretary-treasurer.

The Board of Directors includes: J. C. Brady, owner of the Madison Theatre, Toronto; Harry Alexander, owner of the Park Theatre, Toronto; Messrs. Redway and Richardson of the Crown Theatre, Toronto; J. A. Morrison of Meaford, Ontario; J. Uttenweiler, Jack T. Isbel and M. Gebertig.

No announcement has been made relative to the future policy of the exchange nor as to its coming releases.

CRONK WILL MANAGE FIFTEEN IN CANADA

J. B. Cronk, manager of the Allen Theatre at Toronto, and formerly in charge of the Allen Theatres at Winnipeg and Calgary, has been placed in charge of fifteen suburban theatres now controlled by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, seven of these having been neighborhood houses of the former Allen string. Mr. Cronk has general supervision of the theatres, a number of which seat from 1,500 to 1,800.

The Toronto theatres over which Mr. Cronk will have control include the Alhambra, Palace, Oakwood, Family, Teck, York, Capitol, Garden, Danforth, St. Clair, Bloor, Beaver, College, Parkdale and Beach.

The Famous Players Canadian Corporation has also named Clarence Robson, manager of the Hippodrome and Allen Theatres, as general manager of theatres in Eastern Canada outside of Toronto while John Hazza of Winnipeg is general supervisor of the western theatres.

INTERESTS ALLIED

Los Angeles.—Thomas Wilkes, of this city, owner of a number of theatres in the Pacific coast states, has allied his interests with Louis R. Lurie, of San Francisco, and will manage the Columbia Theatre, of the Bay City, beginning with the 1924 season. It is understood that Lurie also contemplates building a new theatre for Wilkes in this city. He owns the Alcazar in San Francisco, the Denham in Denver, and the Wilkes, of Salt Lake.

Will Grip Every Heart!

A Drama of Storm Swept Hearts and Snow Swept Places

Here is a theme of tremendous interest to every woman. She knows on how slender a thread hangs a woman's reputation and how easily it is severed by the slightest breath of scandal. It is a theme of fascinating interest.

The story of an innocent girl caught in the mesh of circumstances and her reputation torn to tatters to satisfy an ambitious judge and prosecutor. Beautiful, young, wealthy, with all her life before her, she suddenly finds that her house of cards has collapsed, through the treachery of an evil man and the insane jealousy of a wife.

A love affair, a shooting, a court trial—the trial of a woman's soul.

Here you will find melodrama, tense, sure, real — drama that will grip everyone to their seats.

Swiftly the scene changes to the North country, where the woman seeks to forget and be forgotten. Enter the rough, red-blooded characters of the vast snow wastes, where primitive instincts come in play. There, against the gorgeous background of the Great Out-of-Doors, comes incident after incident that will stir the blood and make your patrons gasp.

Comes finally retribution — retribution with a smashing surprise following scene upon scene filled with action and suspense.

If your patrons love melodrama, and who does not, don't miss this one.

Adapted from "The White Frontier," by Jeffrey Deprend; with Lewis Dayton and an all-star cast; scenario by Violet Clark; photography by Byron Haskin.

What the Boston press thinks of "THE AFFAIRS OF LADY HAMILTON"

THE BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER

"THE AFFAIRS OF LADY HAMILTON" is refreshingly different from most of the film vouchsafed to us. We are not forced to squirm in our seats while a youth of unalloyed valor and unimpeachable standards wins a too-sweet lass after ridiculously exaggerated hardships.

"Quite on the contrary, the hero of this film is a real hero, lifted out of history. He is none other than his Lordship Horatio Nelson, admiral extraordinary. His morals are not above reproach. He doesn't look as though he stepped from an advertisement for Kippy Clothes. In fact, during the latter part of the film, he appears minus an arm and an eye.

"Yet, thus handicapped," he proves a conquering lover . . .

Says THE BOSTON TELEGRAM

"A novel picture is 'THE AFFAIRS OF LADY HAMILTON,' and one which will linger long in the minds of those who are fortunate enough to see it."

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT

"The film is untrue to history, but increased thereby in dramatic intensity. Costumes and setting create an atmosphere of reality and a thoroughly exceptional cast contributes a series of brilliant impersonations.

"The producers were assuredly fortunate in their choice of Liane Haid to play the adventuress. Miss Haid not only possesses a radiant beauty; she has the gift of being now vulgar—almost uncouth, and now reserved, quietly dignified. Through her whole characterizations runs an underlying strain of coarseness such as must have existed in the nature of the real Lady Hamilton.

"The film as a whole reminds the brutally realistic drawings of William Hogarth. There is the same pitiless exposure of human passions in the raw; the same stark pessimism; the same ill-fleshed gusto. Imagine an edition of Roderick Random in which a score of graphic passages are retained verbatim, reeking with the author's philosophy; but in which matter-of-fact summaries by an unimaginative hand gloss over inconvenient transitions. Such an anomaly would be comparable to 'THE AFFAIRS OF LADY HAMILTON.'"

THE BOSTON AMERICAN

"Beauty—alluring, ensnaring, dazzling, coupled with ingenuity and a bit of womanly intuition—that is the secret of success for any woman. If you don't believe it, hie yourself to the Park Theatre and see the greatest tribute ever paid to woman and her ability in 'THE AFFAIRS OF LADY HAMILTON.'"

"Liane Haid, living up to her reputation as the most beautiful woman in London, personifies ambition and attainment of desire, showing that with persistence and the perseverance, although not always of the right motives, the ultimate goal can be reached. Lady Hamilton certainly did reach the pinnacle of success, when in the course of the picture, she climbed the lofty heights from a beginning as the daughter of a humble and obscure grocer to become the idol of the English court and the Joan of Arc of England.

"If anybody ever tells you it is always a man's brains that saves an empire, tell him he's wrong. You'll agree if you see this picture, positively the only picture where rebellions are realistically typified. And as for mob scenes, you never saw so many people in your life.

"The picture is well worth seeing. What with impassioned love scenes, soul-stirring moments and thrilling episodes, there is not much more a picture could possess."

Another record breaker for HODKINSON

The Greatest Love story of Modern History THE AFFAIRS OF LADY HAMILTON"

What the Trade Press Thinks of It

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: This production brings to the screen one of the most beautiful women, photographically, that we have seen for some time, in the person of Liane Haid, who appears in the name role, Lady Hamilton. Brilliant scenes of court life, huge mob scenes, the Battle of Trafalgar, and the like, make up a fascinating pageantry of historical romance, with more than the usual amount of lavish and massive sets . . . we distinctly enjoyed this picture.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: The story is particularly fascinating and cannot help but entertain, for it involves a romance that possesses charm, beauty and sincerity, and grips because it is convincingly interpreted by an unusually talented cast of players who knew what they were doing at every turn. The settings are truly massive in every sense, with the Battle of Trafalgar presenting a climax that is far superior to any ever re-enacted.

FILM DAILY: Splendidly cast and lavishly produced. It deals in a spectacular manner with that period of England's history made famous by Nelson's victory over Napoleon. The cast throughout is particularly capable.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: A plot rich in historical associations, enhanced by extremely fine photography and the polished work of an exceptionally clever cast, is embodied in this picture. Likely to prove a financial success.

EXHIBITORS HERALD: Excellent screen entertainment and quite above the average. The story of Lady Hamilton and her conquests is a remarkable one . . . it moves along swiftly to the rather unusual and startling end.

HARRISON'S REPORTS: Excellent. In the cities and large towns . . . "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" should prove unconditionally successful.

MORNING TELEGRAPH: This picture is of the stupendous type. Scenes are frequent and large, and elaborate sets are used. The tale has as its foundation the influence of Lady Hamilton in connection with Lord Nelson, and the consequent result for England.

THE EVENING TELEGRAM—NEW YORK

"The Man Next Door" Is a Splendid Picture

It is a big jump from cowpuncher on the western plains to a debutante in New York society, but Miss Alice Calhoun did it with ease and grace last night in a new picture by Emerson Hough, entitled "The Man Next Door" which will run only this week at the Cameo Theatre, in West Forty-second street. It is a Vitagraph production and one of the best of this season.

Miss Calhoun, playing the leading role, is the daughter of the richest ranchman in Wyoming and as a cowpuncher she looks just as pretty as she does in evening clothes. Aside from the many stars appearing in the cinema there is also one of the most remarkable dogs on the screen. His name is Peanuts, and he does everything but talk.

To carry out the dying wishes of Mrs. Wright, the ranchman, Colonel Wright (David Torrence), desires that his daughter should have an education, which she obtains and then, just as a surprise to her father, she builds one of the most fashionable mansions in this city. But her neighbors refuse to recognize her, despite her father's vast wealth. In the West all persons are neighbors, but the daughter finds this custom does not obtain in this city.

Heartbroken, she falls in love with Jimmie the gardener (James Morrison), who is merely working as a gardener to be close to the beautiful daughter of Colonel Wright. They become fast friends, despite the objections of her father, who wishes her to marry into society.

Following an elopement in which the young couple disappear for several weeks, Colonel Wright decides to go to his neighbor next door to complain against his daughter marrying their gardener. Just then the couple come in and following a little explanation, the bride is radiantly happy, when her father gives them his blessing. The gardener is almost as rich as the girl with the result that the young girl is not only taken into society but is its favorite.

Frank Sheridan as Curley, foreman of the ranch, and Colonel Wright's best friend, was humorous throughout the picture.

Larry Semon, in "Midnight Cabaret" is perhaps the best of his funny pictures. Despite his vocation as a waiter he is in love with the star of a review at a cabaret and after almost insurmountable obstacles he wins her.

THE EVENING WORLD, NEW YORK and scenically, is well up to standard set by the Capitol. "The Man Next Door," by the late Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon," is the feature offered on the Cameo screen for the week. It is a corking good story of the East and West and goes right on to prove that Kipling was right. The story, starting as it does by showing a rancher's daughter raised by cowpunchers and then sent East to a finishing school, and her discoveries in the society, has been done countless times before on and off the screen, but never quite so well as in "The Man Next Door." The company presenting the film is an excellent one and the principal roles are played by such folks as David Torrence, Frank Sheridan, James Morrison and Alice Calhoun. To Victor Schertzinger, the director, must go a great deal of the credit for the real "finish" of the picture, and Vitagraph has given it as fine a production as could be desired. It is a pity Emerson Hough did not live long enough to see his story screened, for those who do not see it will, in our opinion, miss a whole lot. Dorothy Dalton, as far as we could

O, Boy, Lead Me To It!

That's a real exploitation angle. It has the curiosity-arousing power which reaches out and pulls them in.

The picture is romantic, dramatic and sure-fire. It bubbles over with humor and finishes with a punch. As a summer feature it can't be surpassed.

In brief, the story follows the career of a girl who, brought up in seclusion, suddenly finds herself left with a tremendous fortune. She goes in for society. She is as proud as a peacock and when the dowagers and debutantes give her the cold shoulder, she starts a regular revolution. It's a circus. She beats society at its own game. She plunges into an orgy of buying; gowns, motors, lavish parties and all the rest. She soon has her up-stage friends calling for help.

Then, with the social world at her feet, she longs for new worlds to conquer. She has become a dazzling beauty and the reigning favorite. But all the luxuries money can buy will not satisfy her longing for real love. She finally selects the home-town sweetheart of her girlhood.

The cast is hand-picked. The direction is snappy. The sets are eye-filling.

"Aimed Straight at Your Heart--

Five Reviewers were sent by 'The Exhibitor's Trade Review' and this is what they say:

"The plain fact of the matter is that Mr. Griffith has given the screen an extremely good picture—good in the sense that it is able to move thousands of spectators to alternate tears and laughter; and to send them home feeling that they have been well entertained and received the full worth of their money, with something over. In trade circles, a 'good' picture is one that proves a winning box office attraction, makes a successful bid for popularity, and enables theatre owners to hang out the S. R. O. sign. What more can an exhibitor want?
—George T. Pardy.

"You may say it is a woman's picture because it always holds the spotlight upon one phase of life that is woman's chief dominion. But it is a man's picture just as much. For the picture as a whole, it is dramatic at times and interesting always."
—George Blaisdell.

"'The White Rose' has extraordinary emotional appeal. Indeed a work which so sways the emotion of the spectators is rare among the works of the stage or screen. It attacks the spectator's emotions with the violence of a tornado; and Mae Marsh's portrait—it cannot be called a performance—is one of the most moving spectacles ever developed on the screen. For an emotion stirring play and characterization, it hardly seems 'The White Rose' can be 'oversold.'" —Tom Kennedy.

"'The White Rose' is a love story of tremendous appeal. It is beautifully told and will not fail to reach the heart. The scenes in the Bayou Teche country, for scenic beauty have seldom if ever been equalled for beauty. The production will stand as another work of art for Mr. Griffith's credit."
—James M. Davis.

"It is a box office attraction. It has the suspense and the pathos, the tugs at heartstrings and the power to relieve those tugs with flushes of joy. The many millions who knew Mae Marsh in the other days will relish her work in this picture."
—Howard McLellan.

This is the only picture of the season for which the public actually paid $3.30 a seat, and they did pay it again and again as a certificate of the box office records show.

The Critics Think it is Unusual and Great

"One of the 'biggest' pictures made in years because it is so very, very human—comes as near being a REAL picture as we have seen in years"— (Don Allen in N. Y. Evening World).

"It easily ranks with the most important pictures made in America. The acting is magnificent; as fine as the screen can boast"—(N. Y. Sun)

"Try as you will to resist its appeal, it will make you smile, weep and laugh . . . We think it is the best picture Mr. Griffith has made since 'The Birth of a Nation'"—(N. Y. Journal).

"Boldly tearing away the old dual standards of morality, The White Rose is one of the finest things D. W. Griffith has ever made. It is inspiring and moving"—(Quinn Martin in N.Y. World).

"A singularly fine picture, the treatment of the big dramatic moments is superb. It is beautified and exalted by the presence of that exquisite creature, Mae Marsh, the divinely inspired"—(Robert Sherwood in N.Y. Herald)

"'The White Rose' has brought a great joy to me, as it will bring, I am sure, to innumerable other people."
—(Jane Cowl, "The Juliet of the century" and foremost actress).

"Griffith is a great poet with 'The White Rose'."
—(Max Reinhardt, the most famous European producer for the stage).

"This latest Griffith production should prove an attractive box office attraction, specially pleasing to those who have a penchant for pictures which bring a lump to the throat and a tear to the eye."—(Exhibitors Herald).

"This picture is a sermon, poem and great love drama, all in one, with laughter full of tears. It sends one home with something unforgettable, with a heart hunger for a better humanity."
—(Sophie Irene Loeb, Pres. Child Welfare Board of N. Y. and famous Publicist)

A STATEMENT---

TO THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR:

Owing to the wide-spread publicity which attended the recent signing of the contract between Truart Film Corporation and myself for the production of feature-length comedies, and the various reports in the daily press of the country concerning this contract, I desire to announce, on behalf of Truart Film Corporation, The Vitagraph Company of America and myself, that under my present existing contract with The Vitagraph Company, there remain two two-reel comedies to be produced of the standard that I have made heretofore for that company.

If earnest effort and the sincere desire to give you worthwhile attractions count for aught, then, I honestly believe that the two comedies still to be produced under my present contract will be superior to any I have ever made before.

The full details regarding my future plans of production will be announced by Truart Film Corporation immediately upon the completion of my Vitagraph contract.

"The Lonely Road"

First National Presents a Drama of Domestic Problems Featuring Katherine MacDonald
Reviewed by Beatrice Barrett

This First National picture treats interestingly of a question very much in the minds of women of the present day, whether to walk alone and earn her own living or marry and be hampered by a domineering husband. Women are going to like it for it shows up the selfishness of man, especially the man who believes the way mother does things is so much better than the way wife would like them.

It is a well handled domestic drama. There is plenty of action and strong heart appeal both where the wife is forced to give up her ambitions to a selfish husband and in the blow where it is thought her little boy will never walk again. There are also many good comedy touches. There is a good fight between the jealously crazed husband and a husky doctor.

This attraction as a box office magnet will be heightened if exhibitors also make judicious use of the fact that her leading man, Orville Caldwell, was picked by Elinor Glyn as the most physically perfect man on the American stage.

Miss MacDonald has been given a real role as Betty Austin and she will not disappoint the most particular audiences. Extremely attractive, her emotional acting is very good. She does not overact in a role that could be easily overdone. Kathleen Kirkham, as the woman who chooses the lonely road and walks alone, makes an interesting second lead.

THE EVENING SUN, BALTIMORE

Critic says that with each new production Barthelmess sets a mark that he passes in each succeeding film.

Depend on First National

WE defy any dyed-in-the-wool scoffer of the screen to sit through "The Bright Shawl" and keep his mercury of enthusiasm from popping out the top of the tube. What is there to say about such a film? "Wonderful?" That is too trite and miserable a label to paste upon this extraordinarily beautiful picture now at the Rivoli.

Richard Barthelmess and his productions are most disconcerting to the average motion picture critic. Each picture, as it's released, is declared "the best ever." A chip immediately rears itself on every critic's shoulder and—bang!—off it goes the minute he sees the picture. It's a mystery to us, how Barthelmess can maintain so consistently this high standard of picture excellence. Would to heaven that some of his contemporaries discover the secret. With each new production he sets a mark that he passes in the succeeding film.

DOROTHY GISH AND RICHARD BARTHELMESS

THIS time it is Joseph Hergesheimer's "The Bright Shawl." Passing through the hands of Edmund Goulding, scenario writer; John S. Robertson, director, and Everett Shinn, art director, "The Bright Shawl" becomes one of the most colorful, romantic productions with which the screen has ever been blessed. At Cuba in the days when it was ground underfoot by the crue Spanish regime. The titles, even, are colorful. To this production add the additionally colorful musical scene prepared by Felice Iula.

Andres Escobar. The latter is a young Cuban patriot, and with all his people, is constantly being hounded by the Spanish authorities. Before long Abbott is drawn into the net of intrigue surrounding his Cuban friends. His fighting blood aroused, his sympathies are enlisted with the persecuted Cubans.

He assumes an infatuation for La Clavel, an Andalusian dancer, who is close to Cesar Y Santacilla, a Spanish captain. From her he learns many secrets and is able to warn his friends of plans for their destruction. In the background is the beautiful Narcissa Escobar, with whom Abbott is deeply in love.

BARTHELMESS, with sideburns and a thick crop of black hair, is seen as Charles Abbott, a young American, who journeys to Cuba with his friend, DOROTHY GISH is splendid as La Clavel. The cast is large and remarkably good. Q. E. D.

TRADE MARK

PARAMOUNT will release in the season 1923-1924, fifty-two pictures—one a week.

Recently, superlatives have been overworked in describing coming motion pictures. Promises have been big. "All star casts" is a phrase that has come to mean little. "Knock-out," "wallop," "pack them in," "real special," "film epic," "box-office appeal," "capacity crowds," "real bets," "solid gold," "greatest of history" are labels pasted on almost all film productions these days.

Paramount need only point out that the entire resources of the Paramount organization previously engaged in making 80 to 100 pictures a year of the consistently high quality of all Paramount Pictures, will this season be concentrated in the making of 52 productions.

Never has it been truer that what the public wants is great stars, superbly directed in great screen stories. A simple formula, but one whose fulfillment is only possible after tremendous efforts, prophetic insight into public taste and a producing personnel of stars and artists who have proved their real value to the public.

Such effort Paramount has made. Such a personnel Paramount has. And the results will be offered to exhibitors in a product of fifty-two pictures that, by themselves, can and will make the season of 1923-24 without question the most profitable in exhibitor history.

Paramount is announcing at this time only a few of the productions for 1923, in order to provide protection to the great productions to be released later in the season, to give necessary protection to the exhibitor, to allow him to cash in on the full value of titles, stories and new production ideas, and to enable him to establish himself, without fear of interference, as the leader in the field.

THE NEW PARAMOUNT PICTURES

"The Cheat" has a happy ending. In it Miss Negri appears as the luxury-loving wife of a young American (Jack Holt) torn between her love for her husband and the riches offered her by a handsome Prince (Charles de Roche). The story is one of the most intense dramatic interest. There is not a flaw in story or production. Miss Negri has never been so beautiful, never has she had such an appealing role, never has any star worn such marvelous gowns. You need take no one's word for these statements. See it for yourself!

Gloria Swanson as "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" is an announcement that will bring in the crowds. And after they're in, they'll see a flawless representation of this famous French comedy—filled with laughs, with surprises, with gorgeous beauty, with drama, with real human-interest. This is a "big-time show, double A number 1," one of the really big money-makers of the new season. See it for yourself!

Enemies of Women

with LIONEL BARRYMORE

ALMA RUBENS and an ALL STAR CAST

Directed by ALAN CROSLAND

A glimpse of the great revels in the Prince's palace, scenes which surpass in splendor anything ever filmed.

“Enemies of Women” is established as the Sea- son's Biggest Picture “Enemies of Women” has broken records in every city where it has played.

In New York it ran four weeks at Two Dollar top at the Central Theatre, breaking all records for the house. It moved to the Rivoli, where it did $30,283—one of the biggest weeks in history. It then moved to the Rialto for a week, and so great was its success that it was held over for a second week. From there it moved to the Cameo, for an all summer run.

All the critics of the daily and trade papers have proclaimed it a masterpiece.

The author himself, great creator of “Blood and Sand” and “The Four Horsemen,” says it is the greatest picture he has ever seen.

Some Critical Opinions

"Will be a joy forever to exhibitors. The last word in box-office attractions."

—E. V. Durling in New York Globe.

"If you are looking for excitement, 'Enemies of Women' has it."

"Enemies of Women" has Set New Records Everywhere

In San Francisco "Enemies of Women" broke all records at the Imperial Theatre, and has played to capacity during the entire long run.

In Los Angeles it played to capacity for a long run at Grauman's Rialto.

Some Critical Opinions

"One of the most brilliant offerings the screen has seen in many a day. Lots of money must have been spent in making it. Well spent, too! Two words to the wise are sufficient — See it!"

—Mae Tinee in Chicago Tribune.

"One of the few pictures which come up to the promises made in advance."

—Mollie Morris in Chicago Daily News.

The Box-Office Records Tell the Story.

In its first week at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, "Enemies of Women" took in $26,189, a record for the house. It played to absolute capacity every performance during the entire run, against the strongest opposition picture in the field today. It ran eight weeks. The longest run in the history of the house.

A Remarkable Tribute from a Prominent Clergyman

"I strongly recommend to all clergymen that they witness this fascinating and awesome film.

"I further recommend that they commend it from their pulpits and urge their congregations to see it. This shall be my program next Sunday morning, and it is a program that any rational, conservative clergyman can follow.

"No minister with a mind open to truth can witness this film without finding in it a theme for a thousand sermons.

"When the makers and producers of good clean moral films such as 'Enemies of Women' actually place such a film on the market, clergymen should be the first to recognize its merit and commend it to their parishioners and to the general public."

The Reverend R. Keene Ryan

Pastor, Garfield Boulevard Presbyterian Church, Chicago

A Statement by the Author, Vicente Blasco Ibanez

"I am truly enraptured at the magnificent and artistic way in which you have interpreted my novel.

"This picture will be one of the most extraordinary that the American screen has produced.

"I consider it superior to any picture I have ever seen.

"I know you have taken the greatest care in making it, regardless of expense.

"As author of 'Enemies of Women' I congratulate and thank you."

"Enemies of Women" is the only production of one of his works which Ibanez has publicly commended.

"Enemies of Women" is one of the most costly pictures ever made. In order to insure accuracy in the foreign scenes, the entire company spent six months in Europe.

For the first time on the screen, the actual gambling halls of Monte Carlo are shown in action. Permission to take these was obtained from the government of Monaco by Senor Ibanez, who worked with the director, Alan Crosland, in the Monte Carlo scenes. There are also scenes actually taken in many beautiful locations on the Riviera and in Paris and Petrograd.

The cast includes, besides Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens, the featured players, such well known actors as Pedro de Cordoba, Gareth Hughes, Gladys Hulette, William H. Thompson and William Collier, jr.

They say in Hollywood:—

That EDWIN SCHALLERT of the Los Angeles Times is the hardest-to-please critic in America

NIFTY HOKUM

Plot works out neatly in "Girl Who Came Back"

By EDWIN SCHALLERT

(In the Los Angeles Times)

In any perfectly good fairy story all the perfectly good people never do any wrong, and though they have a terrible time, they always live happily ever afterward because something is bound to happen to all the mean giants and ogres just when everything is blackest. Which, as it turns out, is exactly what transpires in "The Girl Who Came Back". It is a neat trick play is "The Girl Who Came Back", and it is well enough acted as a whole, so that though it might be as full of holes as imported Swiss cheese, you won't bother to look for them.

Really, when the two villains shoot each other, and thus dispose of everybody who might get the happily married couple into trouble, you cannot help but smile. It is so neatly put over

While it is essentially nifty hokum, "The Girl Who Came Back" has realism and atmosphere too, lots of it, especially in the prison scenes that open the show. Tom Forman directed, and he went to some trouble apparently to get things to look right. The only thing I have against him is the oriental party which he insists on staging during a sequence laid in South Africa. It's the routine stuff with a pageant in bathing pool, girls tugging a very made-up looking raft on which the heroine is ensconced, and diving beauties splashing water over the sides of the pond. Why on earth don't directors leave that sort of stuff to C. B. De Mille, who has specialized in it for so long that you expect him to do it better than anybody else, even though he doesn't?

Outside of this one very cheap, if costly, touch, "The Girl Who Came Back" is pretty much worth while as entertainment. One of its chief attractions is that it brings back Miriam Cooper as the girl. I never knew how well she could act before. I don't think that she did, either. She's gotten away from those Griffith mannerisms, which used to spoil her performances, and some of the scenes where she is supposed to convey the impression of being utterly down and out are done with real feeling and finesse. There is no arm swinging about this, either. It's just quiet, patient and painstaking registering of thought. Really, Miss Cooper can make a new name for herself if she keeps up this sort of thing.

Joseph Dowling's portrayal of "Old 555" is exceptional for character and seems to stand out stronger than the work of the other men. Kenneth Harlan is a little too pleasant to be convincing as the man who is imprisoned on a false charge. Gaston Glass and Fred Malatesta pass, but Zasu Pitts is pretty well lost, owing to an evident lack of understanding of what she can do.

The mercury rises in the column—whew, it's hot! There's a sign in your lobby, reading: "Twenty Degrees Cooler Inside." But—is it?

Add a bit o' psychology to your fans or expensive cooling system—and do it now!

Here's a picture—a powerful melodrama that will regale the most ardent lover of thrill; that will strike the understanding heart of woman—aye, and of all who love fair play—because it's the human story of a woman's fight to regain that fragile but priceless possession: Reputation—staged in the snow-covered reaches of "the white frontier."

Nothing could be more timely now!

Rothafel again presents "Passion" at the Capitol!

The Great are not guided by precedent but think and act for themselves

Two years ago, Rothafel upset precedent two weeks in succession.

The first was in giving the laugh to an imaginative popular aversion to costume plays.—and presenting Pola Negri in "Passion" at the Capitol, world's largest photoplay theatre.

And the second was in holding Pola Negri in "Passion" for a second week!

Vindication of judgment in the first instance, by a box-office return which overwhelmingly shattered records, prompted the overriding of precedent the second week—when the first week's record-breaking business was topped!

And now Rothafel again smashes precedent! Again with the same Picture! For, recognizing its altogether superlative merit as an entertainment, and wishing to enthrall additional thousands by its wonderfully realistic depiction of an immortal topic, commencing June 24th, SAMUEL L. ROTHAFEL is presenting at CAPITOL THEATRE,

POLA NEGRI

The famous continental star

The Intimate Romance of a Wonder Woman

Now here's food for thought, Mr. Exhibitor.

Not anywhere have the possibilities of "Passion" been exhausted. The time for reshowing is ripe. The star has, since your showing, achieved tremendous popularity, and is today at the zenith of her career. And "Passion" remains her picture beyond compare.

Re: Gloverville

Dear Mr. Bruner:

You ask "Why I Run Patheserials?"

The answer to this is very simple, namely, that Pathe has had years of experience in producing serials and has made serials which are consistently good.

In playing serials, one cannot be too careful to make sure that the serial will stand up, because of the length of time it takes to play the episodes. An exhibitor may be unfortunate enough to buy a poor feature, but his salvation lies in the fact that it only plays one, two or three days and is soon forgotten by the public, and the exhibitor pockets his loss. With a serial it is different. If it does not stand up and hold the interest of the public from episode to episode it can result in ruining a valuable patronage.

In buying serials I very naturally have this in mind and must take into consideration the past performances of the producer, and I find that Pathe has been producing consistently good serials. This is why I run them.

Yours Truly,

EDISON MAZDA LAMPS

"There is a Right Edison MAZDA Lamp for Every Lighting Need"

1. Projection

Edison MAZDA Motion Picture lamps and G. E. apparatus give better pictures at savings in current bills of from 30 to 70 per cent.

2. Stereopticon

For slide projection and spotlights. All types and sizes from 250 to 1000 watts.

3. Sign Lighting

Clear, colored, and daylight lamps in all sizes; vacuum and gas-filled types.

4. Interior Lighting

All types and sizes.

5. Decorative Lighting

Frosted and white MAZDA lamps in round and straight side bulbs.

Edison MAZDA Lamps represent the highest quality obtainable. Thousands of dollars are spent yearly in checking their life, candle-power and efficiency. Edison MAZDA Lamps are dependable. Whenever you order lamps whether for projection, for interior, or sign lighting, be sure to specify "Edison MAZDA."

If you wish information on any phase of lighting in motion picture theaters you can get it without charge or obligation by writing

We challenge comparison on quality and economy

If you want an American film that's clean and uniform in speed and contrasts,—a film that will process through your plant with your developer, without changes or tests;—a film that is non-abrasion, non-frilling, non-reticulating;—a longer wearing film with a projection value which will cause your customers to demand the same film on future business, specify—

ANSCO POSITIVE FILM

When you buy Ansco film you deal direct with the Ansco Company. You are assured of prompt, courteous attention. You are certain of fresh, sparkling, raw stock.

We are prepared, at this time, for immediate shipments of film in any color and any quantity desired.

We are confident that Ansco Positive Film will prove its superlative excellence in any test you wish to put it through. We know, through past experience, that you will find it the most satisfactory and economical film you have ever had in your laboratory.

*One of our representatives will call upon request
Let us demonstrate how well we can serve you*

Kausalite Aisle Lights

Poor Aisle Lighting is Reflected at the Box Office

Is your theater afflicted with glaring, ineffective aisle lighting—do you have to use overhead lighting so that patrons can find their way to their seats? Or do you use Kausalite?—as do the finest theaters, who successful managers know the value of patronage that is satisfied in every detail, and therefore comes back!

Kausalite gives a diffused light that is ample for convenience and does not interfere with the screen. It does the work perfectly—its efficiency is reflected at the box office.

Another Theatre Added to Fox Circuit

OPEN AT LYNBROOK ON MAY 14

Another splendid theatre is to be added to the William Fox Circuit with the opening of the new house in Lynbrook, L. I., on May 14. This will be the seventeenth theatre in the Fox Circuit in the metropolitan district, and like all other Fox theatres, will be equipped with every necessity for the comfort and safety of its patrons.

The finest theatre on Long Island, and its proximity to the Merrick Road, the leading motor way through the famous South Shore section, has led to a special provision for the care of the motor cars of its patrons. A big parking station has been provided, where patrons may check their cars. The theatre is of fire-proof construction and has a seating capacity of 2,500.

The Lynbrook will be

OZITE Carpet Cushion

Makes Carpets Last Longer

Friction destroys carpets—"Ozite" reduces the friction. That is the story in a few words. When you walk on a rug laid over "Ozite", instead of grinding the fabric against the floor, the shock of your tread is softly absorbed, allowing your feet to sink into the pile with the luxurious sensation of walking on velvet. It has been thoroughly demonstrated that this so reduces the wear that it adds at least one third to the life of the carpet or rug.

A Success Wherever Used

"OZITE" Carpet Cushion is a thoroughly tested product. In Hotels, Theatres, Clubs, Stores, Offices and other public places where wear on carpets is extremely severe it has long been in use and has proved of tremendous value. Test installations under rigorous conditions have proved so successful that they resulted in thousands of yards of carpets being torn up and the old fashioned carpet lining replaced with "Ozite" Carpet Cushion. Besides those illustrated many others among America's finest establishments have adopted it, over one and one-half million yards being in constant service, and its users have been universally enthusiastic in its praise.

What Is "Ozite" Cushion?

There is nothing else like "Ozite" Carpet Cushion. The ordinary paper carpet lining, even where several thicknesses are used, is no more to be compared with it than hard rubber are to pneumatic tires. "Ozite" Carpet Cushion is a clean, perfectly sterilized product of animal hair, felted under tons of pressure and reinforced with a strengthening web. This produces a cushion of immense and permanent resilience, which will never lump, buckle or pack down hard even under the most intense wear. It can be taken up and put down just like a rug and will last a lifetime. Made in varying thicknesses from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ in., and may be used with either carpets or rugs.

Every user of Carpets and Rugs in America should know all about this wonderful product. Write for prices and full information.

Columbia Silvertip Carbons

Proper Size to Use—Direct Current Only

The following table has been worked out to show the best combinations for various operating conditions:

Amperes	Carbon Diameter
25 to 50 ..	$\frac{5}{8} \times 12''$ Columbia Cored Upper $\frac{5}{8} \times 6''$ Silvertip Solid Lower
50 to 65 ..	$\frac{3}{4} \times 12''$ Columbia Cored Upper $\frac{1}{2} \times 6''$ Silvertip Solid Lower
65 to 70 ..	$\frac{7}{8} \times 12''$ Columbia Cored Upper $\frac{1}{2} \times 6''$ Silvertip Solid Lower
70 to 85 ..	$\frac{7}{8} \times 12''$ Columbia Cored Upper $\frac{3}{8} \times 6''$ Silvertip Solid or Cored Lower
85 to 100 ..	$1 \times 12''$ Columbia Cored Upper $\frac{7}{8} \times 6''$ Silvertip Cored Lower
100 to 120 ..	$1 \times 12''$ Columbia Cored Upper $\frac{7}{8} \times 6''$ Special W-5 Silvertip Cored Lower
120 to 140 ..	$1 \frac{1}{8} \times 12''$ Columbia Cored Upper $\frac{1}{2} \times 6''$ Special W-5 Silvertip Cored Lower

Combinations for higher currents can be furnished upon request. Carbons must be clamped firmly in both the special adaptor and the holder. Adaptor and holder should be clean. Set carbons in line with lower slightly ahead of upper.

THE profits you take out of your house depend upon the highlights you put into your pictures. After all, you have but the one thing to sell—pictures in light. Inferior lighting degrades the best picture in the world to worse than mediocrity; an ordinary good reel, it reduces to a fizzle. The most you give your patrons for their money—what you provide to interest, to amuse, to educate, to thrill—they get through their eyes! And they won't keep coming back to see dark pictures. Poor lighting makes every picture poor, and will work more to keep people out of a theater than any other factor in the industry. The direct road to bright, brilliantly highlighted pictures is—Columbia Projector Carbons.

On Direct Current: Columbia Silvertip Combination Carbons present richer color values; and the narrow diameter of the silvertip negative lower permits it to burn to a sharp point, holding the arc steady and also keeping the shadow off the lens and screen.

On Alternating Current: Columbia White Flame A. C. Special Carbons yield a sharp and pure-white light, steady, brilliant, absolutely silent.

Use Columbia Projector Carbons to double the enjoyment of what you are showing and keep the profits of your house up to where they belong.

Columbia Projector Carbons are the most satisfactory source of motion picture light in the world!

Seating by the American Seating Company

A MONUMENT Conceived as a Tribute to the Ideals of Cleveland, Built by Her Citizens and Dedicated to Social Progress, Industrial Achievements and Civic Interest." Thus reads the dedication of this magnificent building, the Main Auditorium of which has a seating capacity of thirteen thousand. It occupies a whole city block, comprising one side of the great Community Centre of Cleveland. Its cost was $6,500,000. It is an enterprise and a building of which this great city may well be proud.

Bausch & Lomb Cinephor Optical Systems

Cinephor Projection Lens

CRITICAL definition to the corners—exceptional flatness of field—brilliant illumination—maximum contrast between black and white—these are important characteristics of Bausch & Lomb Cinephor Projection Lenses. Also, they always come easily to a quick, sharp focus.

Some of the above features may be found in other lenses, but in none other is the combination of all so marked. This has been convincingly demonstrated in practical, comparative theater tests before unbiased experts.

Furthermore, Cinephor Lenses are so critically tested and of such uniformly dependable quality that no selection by the purchaser is necessary. They are made in two series, to meet all requirements.

Series I—Effective Aperture, 1 23/32 in.

Admirably suited for work in the average theater. Offered in fifteen different focal lengths—in 1/4-inch steps from 4 to 7 inches, and in 1/2-inch steps to 8 inches. Price $32.50 to $35.00, depending on projection machine.

Series II—Effective Aperture, 2 7/16 in.

Meets the growing demand from large picture houses for the highest grade projection lens. Should be selected wherever a lens of longer than 5 3/4 in. is required. In 1/4-inch steps from 5 3/4 to 7 inches, and in 1/2-inch steps to 8 inches. Price, $61.00 to $65.00, depending on projection machine. Submitted on approval through supply dealers.

Cinephor Condensing System

AN increase in illumination up to 25 percent., depending on the kind of arc and operating conditions, is possible with the Cinephor Condensing System. Furthermore, the light over the entire screen is even and of maximum intensity, without any dark spot in the center of the field.

Greater latitude in fluctuation of the arc without showing discoloration on the margins of the picture is provided, as the condenser operates with a slightly larger spot on the aperture plate.

The front element of this condensing system is a parabolic condenser, with a concave spherical and convex parabolic surface. The rear element is a plano convex condenser. Both are made of heat resisting optical glass, reducing breakage to a minimum. Although these two elements can be purchased separately, they should be used together to insure the best results. No difficulty will be encountered in fitting them to all of the later types of projection machines, as their diameter—4 15/32 in.—conforms to the standard with which these machines have been fitted.

Cinephor Condensing System Complete.....$16.25

Cinephor Parabolic Condenser only 12.00

Cinephor Plano Convex Condenser only..... 4.25

A special system has also been developed for Mazda lamps. Prices on request.

Bausch & Lomb Dissolving View Balopticon for Theater Use

THE dissolving view type of projection lantern, by means of which one picture blends gradually into the succeeding one without any movement on the screen, is rapidly increasing in popularity. To meet the requirements of motion picture theaters for such an apparatus, we have produced the TLD Dissolving View Balopticon, which is offered here for the first time. While designed primarily for lantern slide projection, it may also be used to advantage for producing special color and lighting effects.

The TLD consists of two complete optical systems and light sources. The dissolving view effect is produced by our patented iris diaphragm dissolver, which gradually reduces the illumination in one picture as that of the succeeding one is increased. This is the only perfect dissolving device for use with either arc or Mazda lamps.

From both an optical and mechanical standpoint, the TLD Dissolving View Balopticon is unusually well made. The projection lenses are of our well-known Balo series, and may be secured in focal lengths of from 10 to 34 in. Each condensing system consists of two plano convex lenses with an air space between them sufficient to accommodate a water cell, which can be supplied, if desired, at an extra cost.

The lamp housings, of double wall construction, are connected with the front standards by means of a substantial optical bed, assuring absolute rigidity. Two double slide carriers, with elevating device for removing slides, are supplied, as well as doublers for abruptly cutting off the light.

TLD Dissolving View Balopticon, with 90 degree hand-feed arc lamps, iris diaphragm dissolver, and 2 5/16-in. diameter projection lens (specify focus) $345.00

TLD Dissolving View Balopticon, with 1,000-watt, 110-volt Mazda lamps, iris diaphragm dissolver, and 2 5/16 in. diameter projection lens (specify focus) $325.00

Other models of Bausch & Lomb Balopticons are described in our complete projection catalog, a copy of which will be sent you on request.

Of particular interest is the Automatic Balopticon, which automatically projects a series of lantern slides in never-ending succession. One of these machines can be used with excellent results in your lobby, in store windows, or other prominent places.

For New or Remodeled Theatre Buildings

The wonderful lighting effects produced by C-H Theatre Dimmer Equipment add to box office receipts out of all proportion to their cost.

C-H Dimmers are made in types especially adapted to the continuous long-hour duty required by the moving picture theatre today. They are designed by an engineering force specializing in electrical control dating back to the time when the old carbon filament electric lamps superseded the old gas foot-lights. By far, the majority of theatres are equipped with Cutler-Hammer Dimmers.

If you are planning a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing building—make provision for adequate C-H Dimmer Equipment to produce the pleasing effects that make audiences happy and keep the ticket office busy.

DAHLSTROM

WHEN IS A BUILDING FIREPROOF?

Is your exchange fireproof? Or, is it a building of steel and masonry filled with inflammable materials. If a fire should start in any one room could it be confined there without the use of extinguishers? If it could, then you have a fireproof building. If the doors and trim are wood, then it is not fireproof.

Dahlstrom hollow metal doors and trim are built to make the door opening fireproof as well as the walls, floors and ceilings. There is no combustible material in them and it requires a fire hot enough to melt the metal itself to permit a fire to pass them where used in a building with strictly fireproof walls, floors and ceilings.

Dahlstrom doors and trim are finished by a baked-on-enamel process which will not crack or peel. A damp cloth passed over the surface keeps them neat and clean. Any wood finish can be accurately duplicated on Dahlstrom hollow metal doors and trim.

EDISON MAZDA LAMPS

"There is a Right Edison MAZDA Lamp for Every Lighting Need"

1. Projection

Edison MAZDA Motion Picture lamps and G. E. apparatus give better pictures at savings in current bills of from 30 to 70 per cent.

2. Stereopticon

For slide projection and spotlights. All types and sizes from 250 to 1000 watts.

3. Sign Lighting

Clear, colored, and daylight lamps in all sizes; vacuum and gas-filled types.

4. Interior Lighting

All types and sizes.

5. Decorative Lighting

Frosted and white MAZDA lamps in round and straight side bulbs.

Edison MAZDA Lamps represent the highest quality obtainable. Thousands of dollars are spent yearly in checking their life, candle-power and efficiency. Edison MAZDA Lamps are dependable. Whenever you order lamps whether for projection, for interior, or sign lighting, be sure to specify "Edison MAZDA."

We challenge comparison on quality and economy

If you want an American film that's clean and uniform in speed and contrasts,—a film that will process through your plant with your developer, without changes or tests;—a film that is non-abrasion, non-frilling, non-reticulating;—a longer wearing film with a projection value which will cause your customers to demand the same film on future business, specify—

ANSCO POSITIVE FILM

When you buy Ansco film you deal direct with the Ansco Company. You are assured of prompt, courteous attention. You are certain of fresh, sparkling, raw stock.

We are prepared, at this time, for immediate shipments of film in any color and any quantity desired.

We are confident that Ansco Positive Film will prove its superlative excellence in any test you wish to put it through. We know, through past experience, that you will find it the most satisfactory and economical film you have ever had in your laboratory.

One of our representatives will call upon request

Let us demonstrate how well we can serve you

Kausalite Aisle Lights

Poor Aisle Lighting is Reflected at the Box Office

Is your theater afflicted with glaring, ineffective aisle lighting—do you have to use overhead lighting so that patrons can find their way to their seats?

Or do you use Kausalite?—as do the finest theaters, our successful managers know the value of patronage that is satisfied in every detail, and therefore comes back!

Kausalite gives a diffused light that is ample for convenience and does not interfere with the screen. It does the work perfectly—its efficiency is reflected at the box office.

Another Theatre Added to Fox Circuit

OPEN AT LYNBROOK ON MAY 14

Another splendid theatre is to be added to the William Fox Circuit with the opening of the new house in Lynbrook, L.I., on May 14. This will be the seventeenth theatre in the Fox Circuit in the metropolitan district, and like all other Fox theatres, will be equipped with every necessity for the comfort and safety of its patrons.

the finest theatre on Long Island, and its proximity to the Merrick Road, the leading motor way through the famous South Shore section, has led to a special provision for the care of the motor cars of its patrons. A big parking station has been provided, where patrons may check their cars. The theatre is of fire-proof construction and has a seating capacity of 2,500.

The Lynbrook will be

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

With an emphatically long scale of gradation it carries through to the screen the entire range of tones from highest light to deepest shadow that the cameraman has secured in the negative.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base—now obtainable in thousand foot lengths, is identified throughout its length by the words “Eastman” “Kodak” stenciled in black letters in the transparent margin.

KEYSTONE BRAND FLOOR COVERING - The Enemy of Wear and Tear

Every foot that falls on your theatre floor—and thousands of them fall at each performance—means wear and tear unless you have covered your floors with

Keystone Brand Floor Covering

Made especially for theatre floors where wear and tear is costly and continuous. Keystone is almost immune to wear. It has long been a favorite covering for theatre floors. Its color is natural and lasting, smooth, never slippery; easily washed and waterproof. Laid without fastenings.

A Word from Theatre Managers Is Sufficient

"Incidentally wish to mention that so far we are highly elated with the results from your Floor Covering and can recommend it to anyone as being the best on the market."—Universal Film Exchange, Washington, D. C.

"No doubt you have our recent order on file. For eight years Keystone Brand Floor Covering has served more than what you claim. We cannot recommend it too highly."—Smith Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"Have used Keystone as runners in my theatre for seven years and it is still in good shape. I want more of it."—Derby Theatre, Derby, Conn.

"Keystone Brand Floor Covering is absolutely the best we have ever used."—Lincoln Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.

GRAUMAN'S METROPOLITAN THEATER, LOS ANGELES. ARCHITECT: EDWIN BERGSTROM. PLUMBING CONTRACTOR: J. HOKOM

CRANE BEAUTY FOR A "FIRST-RUN" THEATER

One of the most beautiful theaters in America, Grauman's Metropolitan at Los Angeles, fills its house daily with both tourists and regular local patrons. Its impressive architecture, restful foyers and harmonious interior decorations have delighted hundreds of thousands. Charmed by an orchestra made up of musicians of unusual talent, Grauman's presentation of the newest of films direct from the studios pleases the most critical theater-goer.

For this great institution, Crane Sanitary fixtures in every comfort room, Crane drinking fountains in the lobbies and Crane valves and piping in all steam, water and drainage systems provide visible beauty and dependable quality to match the spirit of refinement in evidence in every department.

INSTALL A SIMPLEX OIL BURNING SYSTEM AND ELIMINATE ALL WORRY

Complete Theatre Oil Unit

Showing the mounting of motor fan and oil pump in one unit. Note extreme simplicity and accessibility of parts.

On the right is a complete installation in a theatre showing neatness and space saved with oil burner.

Owner Enjoys

- lower fuel cost
- lower labor cost
- certain fuel supply
- cleanliness of premises
- added advertising value

Patron Gets

- Even temperature at all times
- no dirt or dust
- no odors
- no draughts

Simplex Systems burn any grade of oil. Below are a few users:—more are contracting for installation — WHY NOT YOU?

- Loew-Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, Calif.
- Ritz Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.
- Strand Theatre, Providence, R. I.
- Emery Theatre, Providence, R. I.
- Rialto Theatre, Providence, R. I.

“The Proper Way to Heat a Theatre”— Emery Theatre.

“We installed a Simplex Oil Burner in our Emery Theatre, Providence, R. I., about three years ago.
“We have since installed the same system in our Rialto Theatre, Providence, R. I.
“The Simplex Oil Heating System has proven to be up to 100% satisfactory in heating, saving about 30% over coal heating, and we save $20.00 a week for engineer. The upkeep of the Simplex outfit is very small, much less than if we were burning coal.
“I have advised many of my friends to install the system, and up to date I have never lost any of my friends by advising them to install this system.
“We are certainly much pleased with our Simplex Oil Heating Plant, for it is the only proper way to heat a theatre.

Very truly yours,
EMERY THEATRE

Rain Insurance prevents losses when the crowd stays home

You have a new feature—a recent release that you feel sure will go big. You spend more for advertising than usual. You put on a special display and do everything possible to guarantee a crowd. Then it rains and the film is shown to small houses. A Hartford Rain Insurance Policy makes good just such losses.

Ask for full information about Hartford Rain Policies. See your local Hartford agent or your broker or write—

Cheating Old Age

The Old Studebaker

The New Studebaker

Yours For Rejuvenation

THE public-wise manager today knows that seating that was tolerated five and ten years ago is endured under protest now or altogether avoided. He is aware, too, with the other elements of attraction more or less evenly balanced, the more comfortable seats of one theatre will easily swing the decision of "where to go" in favor of the theatre with the more comfortable seating.

Fortunately the reseating and rejuvenating of a theatre is a less complicated matter than the restoring of youth to old age in man. It is entirely possible and practical.

Our Theatre Engineering Seating Department will be glad to consult with any theatre owner or manager on new installations or renewals of old.

Without obligation, this department will be glad to advise you on how your theatre can "cheat old age" successfully and revive its youth for further years of public service and increased profits.

In March, 1908, we made the first No. 1 size Projection lens. In January, 1911, we made the first No. 2 size Projection lens.

The introduction of these lenses of larger diameter than were ever made before, increased the illumination on the screen 400%, made the long throw possible, and led to the building of the wonderful theatres of today.

All the improvements in projection lenses have originated with the Gundlach Projection lenses—there are no better lenses made than

Gundlach RADIANT Projection Lenses

For every kind of machine or operating condition, long and short throws—and you can always get the lenses you need in a hurry.

You may order Radiant lenses from your dealer on approval

No. 1 Projection Lenses	$17.00
No. 2 Projection Lenses	39.00
No. 1 Jackets	3.00
No. 2 Jackets	5.00

The Ultrastigmat f 1.9—for Motion Picture Cameras

Cameras are doing things with this wonderful lens they could not do before, because it enables them to work when the light is too weak for ordinary lenses.

It is the finest lens ever made for a motion picture camera.

PRE-SELECTIVE

MAJOR FA SYSTEM

REMOTE CONTROL

After You Agree—that exceptional theater lighting as used by the most successful theatres everywhere is profitable, adding both to the permanent prestige of the house and to its immediate profits—

It Is But A Step—

to the unanimous choice of a Major System of Theatre Lighting Control to give those beautiful lighting effects both on the stage and in the auditorium. The reason is not that well over one hundred of the country's most magnificent theaters are Major Equipped,—but that the Major System is the most practical for all sizes and types of theaters; it embodies all of the better features of all other methods and extends numerous advantages not obtained in any other system, method, or switchboard arrangement. It does more for you at less ultimate cost than other kinds and profits you more at the box office.

The Major System is of unit construction, extremely flexible in both construction and operation, occupies less stage space, is noiseless and flashless, capable of extended remote control for any desired number of points and with any desired grouping of lights. It cannot injure the electrician or anyone else, neither can it damage itself by being carelessly handled. There are many other points of superiority too numerous to mention here.

If you are interested in the equipping of a new theater or the reconstruction of an old one you should have "The Control of Lighting in Theatres," a new and elaborate book on the subject. Sent Free upon request.

A Privilege

In the life of every business concern there arrives, at one time or another, the supreme opportunity. Ours came when we were chosen to design and install the complete electrical equipment in this magnificent edifice—given by George Eastman, of the Eastman Kodak Co., to the University of Rochester—"For the enrichment of community life."

We are pardonably proud of this achievement—the largest electrical installation of its kind in the world. And it gives us an opportunity to call your attention to our facilities for doing your work—perhaps not so large a job, but equally important to you.

From the insignificant push-button to the mammoth switchboard—no matter where you are located, we can serve you. The size of your installation is but a detail. Your inquiries are welcomed.

RE: CAPITOL THEATRE

Gentlemen:

With reference to your letter of May first wish to say that the Vitrolite installed in the Capitol Theatre this City, has been to our entire satisfaction. Your work was handled in a very efficient manner and we are much pleased with the result.

The cost of this building was approximately $1,400,000 and it has a seating capacity of 4250 persons. The Building occupies property 150' frontage on two main streets and about 200' in depth. The building required about eight months to complete same.

Trusting this is the information you desire,

I am,

Yours very truly,

C. HOWARD CRANE,

Per Capitol E. Hildley

Vitrolite in Detroit's Finest Theatre

When C. Howard Crane designed the luxurious $1,500,000 Capitol Square Theatre, Detroit, authorities recognized that a masterpiece of exquisitely balanced beauty and permanence had been created. Every material specified was a leader in its class. And where service requirements were heaviest—in the washrooms—snowy, lustrous Vitrolite slabs were used liberally for partitions and wainscoting—because Vitrolite marks the farthest advance in the quest for an interior structural slab material that combines beauty, sanitation and performance.

Laboratory tests show that Vitrolite possesses an unmatched range of qualifications for wall and ceiling surfacing. Non-porous. Stainproof. Instantly cleaned. Looks new after a lifetime of service. Seven times harder than marble. Wears like the Pyramids.

This Machine Must Pay for Itself in Increased Profits

Faster and faultless service at your box office means serving your people in less time, thus greatly adding to your profits. The public today goes where they do not have to stand impatiently in line and wait and wait to buy their tickets.

You can make excuses for delays or errors at the box office, but still this often results in the loss of a customer. It is unmistakable evidence of the lack of system and good service.

Universo for Your Box Office

Jack up your cash system and get acquainted with the Universo Coin Paying Machine. Speed up your cashiering. The Universo makes change in seconds, which mean pleased customers.

Here is a machine that pays any amount from one cent to a dollar by simple key selection. Pressing the amounts indicated thereon completes the transaction, no picking coins from a drawer, counting, rehandling, or checking, necessary.

Equipped to pay direct to the customer or into the hand as may be preferred. It accomplishes a result that would require three to five operations where the old head and hand method is used.

Free Trial at Our Risk

You can put a Universo in your box office for ten days absolutely Free. You can prove for yourself that a Universo will pay for itself in increased profits and you can see how rapidly you can handle a crowd without a single error in making change.

Used and endorsed by exhibitors from Main Street to Broadway.

Everything for the Theatre from Booth to Screen

ENDORSED BY EXHIBITORS— The National MAZDA Motion Picture Lamp

The 900-watt, 30-ampere National MAZDA Motion Picture Lamp. Recommended for use with the G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector in theatres having main floor seating capacities up to 1,000, or picture widths up to 16 feet, or throws not exceeding 120 feet. It gives better results than an alternating current arc, and is the equal of the direct current arc up to 50 amperes.

The 600-watt, 20-ampere lamp is similar in construction, and is recommended for very small theatres, churches, lodges, schools, etc.

The Northern Theatre 585 North High Street Columbus, Ohio

Nela Specialties Division,
National Lamp Works of General Electric Co.,
Nela Park, Cleveland, Ohio.

Gentlemen:

It will be of interest to you to know that the G-E Incandescent Lamp Equipment installed in our theatre has given even greater satisfaction than we expected.

The current saving has been remarkable and means a great saving in our operating cost. Our bills formerly averaged from $210 to $215 per month. The MAZDA Lamps have cut this down so they now average from $105 to $110 per month. We can easily figure on a saving of at least $1200 per year. This saving may sound unusually big to you, but it is actually the amount saved under the conditions in this theatre.

This fact alone would lead us to unhesitatingly recommend the outfit to any progressive exhibitor. Combined with these advantages we are now getting a much better projection than we were ever able to get with the 45 to 50 ampere d.c. arc which we had previously. In fact we now have as perfect a picture as can be found in Columbus.

Very truly yours,
THE NORTHERN THEATRE.
(Signed) I. E. Wright, Manager

IN 2,000 theatres, located throughout the country, theatre owners have tried the National MAZDA Motion Picture lamp in the new G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector—and now give it their enthusiastic endorsement. This lamp embodies these advantages—

1. Projects a picture of correct tones.
2. Has no annoying flicker—light source is constant.
3. Enables front-seat patrons to really enjoy the picture.
4. Gives off no obnoxious fumes or gas.
5. Requires no adjustment after initial setting.
6. Saves from one-third to two-thirds in current consumption.
7. Projects a better picture.
8. Has won the endorsement of more than 2000 exhibitor users.
9. Has a rated average life of 100 hours.
10. Sells for only $6.75 list.

The perfection of the National MAZDA Motion Picture Lamp and the G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector represent the result of years of laboratory development and theatre tests. The Projector consists of a lamp, a regulator, and a combined bracket and base. With this equipment the MAZDA Motion Picture Lamp can be adopted to any projection machine made in the United States.

You, Mr. Theatre Owner, want to increase your attendance and reduce your operating cost—to increase your net profits. The new National MAZDA Motion Picture lamp will enable you to do just that. Write today for more complete information and for recommendations for installations in your theatre.

THE GREATEST ACHIEVEMENT IN PIPE ORGAN CONSTRUCTION

It Brings Them Back

Successful exhibitors know that music—good music—is no longer a luxury in the modern theater. It's a profitable necessity. Patrons have been educated to expect it; it's a powerful magnet to draw them back again and again. The Smith Unit Organ is designed and built to furnish the best organ music that can be rendered. It gives complete orchestra effects. There is no limit to the range of its musical possibilities—no standard by which to measure the beauty of its tones. It simply represents the highest form of organ building—adapted with scientific care to the acoustic properties of the theater where it is installed.

Popcorn Poppers and Peanut Roasting Machines

Let a KINGERY Pile Up Profits For You!

The nickels and dimes soon grow into dollars—and with 70% profit on every dollar there's plenty of reason for installing a Kingery popcorn and peanut machine.

No additional space is required—costs practically nothing for upkeep—these machines do double duty—their attractiveness brings additional patrons to you—their sturdy, scientific construction enables you to install a Kingery and give the minimum of attention.

Gas Fuel

Kingery No. 990

Capacity, 40 quarts an hour. This is a most popular Kingery Combination; a continuous corn popper and butter koter, uniform peanut roaster, transparent display case.

Space required, 29x30 inches.

The corn popper can be operated independently of the butter koter. You can season each bag as sold.

The hopper holds twelve pounds of corn; the popcorn case, one bushel of popped corn; butter tank, one-half pound; corn popper, sixteen to forty quarts per hour; peanut roaster, one-half bushel; peanut warmer, one bushel.

Read What a Satisfied User Says:

Flemingsburg, Ky.
April 2, 1923.

Kingery Mfg. Co.,
Cincinnati, O.

Gentlemen:

Yours received in regard to the new machine I bought of you.

Want to say it is still a money-getter. I run it in the lobby of a theatre, which not only brings patrons to the show to buy corn or peanuts, but while doing so they see the photos of the show, and in many instances after buying their corn and seeing the pictures, they go to the show, and vice versa. They come to the movies and the odor from corn and peanuts makes them buy the popcorn and peanuts. Business is growing each year. Sometimes the machine of mine has cleared more money than the show. I have boys to sell during the intermission.

Thanking you for past favors, I am,

Yours truly,

(Signed) EDWARD F. BREEZE.

P. S. Last Monday I did $36.70 from 10 A. M. to 8:30 P. M.

Kingery No. 993

A popcorn Popper with Peanut Warmer which is operated by electricity. The peanut roaster is omitted, but the warmer will keep roasted peanuts hot at all times. The corn is popped and butter koted by electric heat. Machine consumes 1½ kilowatts per hour.

The machine is attractively constructed so as to lend beauty to its surroundings; case is made of nicked silver show case moulding with double-strength glass; nicked copper hood; top and back, popper cylinder and base are nicked silver.

Space required: 21½ inches long, 30 inches deep, 46 inches to top of hopper.

Uses 110 to 115 volts, alternating or direct current.

The Slide-O-Graf Jr.

(Sidewalk Projector)

The only machine made—that shows regular size movie slides in actual colors.

Stands 12 inches high, 16 inches long, takes up very little room.

Furnished complete with Flasher, 100 watt stereopticon lamp, 10 feet of cord—quickly attached to any lamp socket—direct or alternating current.

LAY YOUR PICTURES AT THEIR FEET

Feature your features on the floor of your lobby or your-sidewalk with Slide-O-Graf Jr.

This novel display flashes automatically, movie slides in color where every passerby must read them.

The most economical and effective lobby display.
Better still, project it from a store window, as a tie-up with a "book" picture.

Price complete, $27.50.

THE SUPERIOR

*You Have Tried the Rest
 Now Buy the Best*

THE SUPERIOR PROJECTOR is new all through. Not an antique with new attachments added.

Service to the Public demands the use of new and practical machines. Check up the new points below and send for illustrated catalog.

SUPERIOR FEATURES

The elimination throughout of belts and chains, and a direct motor drive.

Less parts than any other machine.

A simple enclosed speeding device.

Unit construction eliminating the use of emergency heads.

An automatic take up device assuring equal tension, and eliminating possibilities of film breakage, fire and tearing of film perforations.

A perfect framing device eliminating the possibilities of disturbing the synchrony.

The use of only nine hardened steel gears in the mechanism.

Large, roomy lamphouse, well ventilated and easy to clean.

A massively constructed burner capable of running on 100 amperes or more.

A condenser mount and housing surpassing any other in accessibility and protection to the condenser lenses.

A gun carriage pedestal allowing the entire mechanism to be revolved in a complete circle while the pedestal itself remains fixed.

A device which allows the machine to be depressed or elevated to an angle of 30 degrees.

Every part of the mechanism enclosed, free from dirt and dust, and in no way open to the effects of atmospheric conditions.

These Theatre Owners Are But Four Out of Hundreds Who Are Making Big Butter-Kist Profits
THE FAVORITE THEATRE

Windsor, Ontario.
 Holcomb & Hoke Mfg. Company,
 Indianapolis, Indiana.
 Gentlemen:

In reply to your request for my experience with the Butter-Kist Popcorn machine, I will give you a statement of my receipts for the past four weeks, as follows:—

1st week	$101.05
2nd week	102.40
3rd week	124.20
4th week	142.10

Total

.....$469.75
 You can well imagine how pleased I am with the machine. It has done considerable more than your representative told me it would do for me when I purchased it.

The remarks of my customers in regard to the quality and grand flavor of Butter-Kist popcorn are very gratifying to me. I feel positive my business will continue to increase. The machine is a wonderful invention and its appearance adds dignity and prestige to my place of business. It is without question the most profitable and best investment I ever made.

I can heartily recommend a Butter-Kist popcorn machine as a wonderful investment.

Yours very truly,
 (Signed) CLYDE W. CURRY
STRAND THEATRE
 Parkersburg, W. Va.

Holcomb & Hoke Mfg. Company,
 Indianapolis, Indiana.
 Gentlemen:

Answering your letter of recent date in regard to the Butter-Kist Machine, beg to advise I find this machine the best money maker in the show business. The people buy and enjoy eating same while watching the picture.

I have my third machine in operation now and can say to you that the profits will be tremendous. They should average around 75 cents on every dollar's worth sold.

Butter-Kist Popcorn is something that sells the year around and you can see from my books that our machine is now making us $160.00 each month, clear profit.

Any man who has a picture theatre is making a great mistake by not having one of these Butter-Kist machines. It will make more money in the theatre lobby than any place else, as, while they are buying tickets, they get the aroma of the corn and the sale is made.

Trusting that this letter will be beneficial to you, I beg to remain

Yours very truly,
 (Signed) P. W. BARRETT, Manager
THE QUEEN THEATRE
 Greenville, Ky.

Holcomb & Hoke Mfg. Company,
 Indianapolis, Indiana.
 Gentlemen:

It is with the greatest pleasure that I write you of the wonderful business I have been doing with the Butter-Kist Machine purchased from you.

The machine requires one person with it all the time and keeps him busy at that.

I have averaged something over $60.00 a week net since I received it and business is getting better all the time. And my advice to any one in the Picture Show business in a small town is to invest in one of these machines and overcome the dull season with it.

Assuring you that you have a pleased customer and if my advice to any one will be of any value to you I will be more than glad to give it.

Very truly yours,
 (Signed) F. MALLORY PITTMAN, Manager

THE BEST THEATRE
 Parsons, Kansas.

Holcomb & Hoke Mfg. Company,

 Gentlemen:

It gives us great pleasure to testify to the merits and money making possibilities of your Butter-Kist Popcorn & Peanut Machine.

We have operated same for about five years, and find it very successful and have no trouble.

There are two big street machines that sell popcorn in the same block, but the people walk by them and want the Butter-Kist kind.

Average receipts are about $14.00 a day. We cannot see how any live Movie Man can resist installing this machine.

Yours truly,
 (Signed) FESS BROS.

Lower-Priced Butter-Kist Popcorn Machine Brings Big Profits to Theatre Owners!

BUTTER-KIST now offers a new and wonderfully improved line of Popcorn Machines with the right model, exactly suited to the requirements of your theatre.

And best of all—there's a beautiful, brand-new model that sells at half what former models cost!

It's the Gold Mine—and it's a beauty. Mahogany finished cabinet—gleaming glass sides—polished nickel parts. Takes up little room. Works automatically. Produces thirty 10-cent packages an hour. Has special compartment for peanuts—an opportunity for added profits. A better machine in every way.

Butter-Kist Popcorn can make big profits for YOU! Apollo Theatre, Oberlin, Ohio, says:—

“For the past seven months our profits have averaged $159.90 per month.”

Many are making even more. And remember out of every dollar's worth you sell, you keep 65 cents as your profit!

The Gold Mine Model is your opportunity. Write now for the new Butter-Kist Easy Payment Plan. Mail the coupon to-day.

ESSENTIAL EQUIPMENT FOR YOUR THEATRE COUCH

INTERTELEPHONE SYSTEM

The illustration depicts several of our standard types of telephones and the wiring for our System B-12—a system which has been installed in many Motion Picture Theatres throughout the country.

SELECTIVE RINGING, SELECTIVE TALKING SERVICE

Any station may call any other by pressing the proper button and only the desired station will ring.

The operation of calling automatically connects for talking so that when the receiver is removed from the called station conversation may proceed.

Any number of pairs of stations in the system may converse at a time. Telephones are furnished in 10, 16 and 20 button sizes.

WIRING TABLE

Buttons on Telephone	Station Capacity	Wires in Table
10	11	15

All wires to be branched to each station.

BATTERIES

Use 2 dry cells for talking battery regardless of the number of stations.

Use 3 to 5 dry cells for ringing battery. Place batteries in a clean, dry location at a convenient point near the center of wiring.

S. H. COUCH CO., Inc.
Norfolk Downs, Mass.

Complete description of this system is contained in our Bulletin No. 74.

Write to our nearest office or sales agency for a copy of the bulletin and for prices.

We can arrange with your regular electrical contracting firm for the installation of this system or we can furnish your own electrician the necessary installation data.

More than Mere Tickets

Tickets mean more to you—the Manager of the Theatre—than they ever will mean to your patrons.

Printing, Quality, Cost, and Value all have to be considered when buying tickets. Globe Tickets give real returns for the money invested in them. They are well printed, and accurately numbered, and sold at a moderate price. Besides, the New Globe Feature, Inventory Numbering, adds much to the value of Globe Tickets, without increasing the cost.

Get some detailed information about the Globe Idea of Tickets, before ordering a new supply.

Just a Few Sub-Titles

To Help the Continuity a Bit

**** **** ****

Amongst the many problems which confront the exhibitor, the attainment of an attractive exterior for his house is of first importance.

**** **** ****

The front of the house and the lobbies must be distinctive. They must carry to the public the message of beauty, and luxury, and art which is to be found inside. To accomplish this, they must be colorful, and pleasing in form.

**** **** ****

And this distinction of appearance—this beauty of form and color—must be capable of withstanding, without change, the action of the elements and the seasons.

**** **** ****

Terra Cotta has been used more than any other building material in the construction of motion picture theatres, because it possesses these requirements, to a degree that no other material does.

**** **** ****

And another reason for this preference is that attractiveness and permanency is attained in Terra Cotta more economically than in any other material.

**** **** ****

As an epilogue, let us voice our appreciation of the pleasant relationship which exists between your industry and ours, and assure you that we wish to further this friendly spirit by being helpful to you.

Be Independent of the Weather

You can not afford to book feature films and then depend on the weather to make them pay.

Be independent of hot weather by making your house the "coolest place in town." You can do this by installing dependable, serviceable, Sturtevant Exhaust Fans.

Once installed, they are there, as long as your building stands, needing little attention—merely an occasional oiling. And when you buy Sturtevant Fans, you are getting the benefit of a big organization with over sixty years' experience in fan design and air moving apparatus, behind it.

These Exhaust Fans are made in various sizes and voltages. Our specialists on Moving Picture Theatre Ventilation will be glad to call on you; without the slightest obligation on your part, they will be glad to recommend the type of exhaust fans that are most efficient and economical for your particular conditions.

IN THE NEW AND VERY BEAUTIFUL FINISHES THAT REQUIRE LITTLE OR NO POLISHING

STOCK STYLES

There are dozens of styles in our line, including frames for posters, photos and cards. Consider these artistic metal frames, guaranteed to outlast all others 10 to 1, when remodeling or sprucing up your lobby.

NEWMAN FRAMES—MAJESTIC THEATRE, HOUSTON

SPECIAL KINDS

Brass, bronze and steel frames, designed to your order and very reasonably priced, in various finishes.

Consult with us when you need permanently beautiful frames for any special purpose. During the past 41 years we have served more than 11,000 theatres satisfactorily, and we can serve you equally well.

MARQUISE AND CANOPIES

A total of 28 unusual and low-priced designs. Furnished with or without wiring for electric lights. Any desired size. Special styles in galvanized steel or genuine copper at factory-direct-to-you prices.

BRASS RAILINGS

Brass railings and separate fittings. Velour ropes with either permanent or portable posts.

Wide-awake theatre owners who need ticket-office rails, balcony rails, box rails, orchestra rails, footlight rails, lobby ropes or railings for some special use will save money by dealing with us as the largest manufacturers in the U. S.

Write for Booklet "E." It gives our special low prices for railings, ropes, marquise, lobby frames, booths, turnstiles, wickets, exit signs, ticket mutilators and other theater fixtures.
It's free, and there is positively no obligation involved.

NEWMAN MANUFACTURING CO.

416-418 Elm St., Cincinnati, Ohio

Branch—68 W. Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

COMPO-LITE LIGHTING FIXTURES OF SUPER QUALITY

The finest line of ready-to-hang electric fixtures you ever saw or heard about. More than one hundred artistic designs—sidewall brackets, indirect ceiling fixtures, semi-indirect bowls, chandeliers and special fittings.

Eight standard finishes and special color schemes to order. Made of a compo material that's guaranteed against splitting and peeling.

Write for photographs and prices if you are interested in better theatre lighting at very reasonable cost.

PLASTIC RELIEF ORNAMENTAL WORK

Fan brackets, pilasters, capitals, ornamental rosettes, mouldings, and so on. Ask for suggestions and our estimate on a complete installation.

Mention whether or not you are interested in portable electric fountains, and in cement garden furniture.

BLACK SHADOWS

A Feature

The biggest selling book on travel in many years, dealing with the islands of the South Seas, says that the "brown skinned" girls of Tahiti, the Marquesas and Samoa are as beautiful as any women anywhere; and that this Polynesian race is one of the finest in the world.

You see these dusky beauties in "Black Shadows;" you also see the grotesque and strange belles of the Solomon Islands, as black as coal, the world's champion Marathon dancers!

Contrast! Novelty! Interest! Excitement!

PAPER PICTURES

A NNOUNCEMENTS of coming pictures are a trade necessity. Elaborate promises are justified—

If there's something more behind the announcements than the paper they're printed on.

Announcements mean little unless they're backed up by the actual film exactly as promised.

You can't run just announcements through your projection machine.

Your theatre can't live on paper pictures.

With Paramount's 1923-24 pictures (one a week) you don't need to book just promises.

Paramount's 1923-24 pictures are not paper pictures. Every one of the 11 pictures in Paramount's current announcement for the first three months of the 1923-24 season is either finished and in the exchanges, finished and on the way to the exchanges, or actually in work at the Lasky or Long Island Studio.

Paramount urges exhibitors to see for themselves that every promise made in the announcement is fulfilled—and more. Prints of "The Cheat," "Bluebeard's 8th Wife" and "Hollywood" will soon be in the exchanges. See them and know what hooking up with Paramount means to you and your business.

See the others of the first 11 of the One-A-Week Paramounts.

Then when we tell you that these are just glimpses of the riches ahead, that Paramount Pictures for the WHOLE season of 1923-24 will be consistently and progressively bigger and better, you'll realize what Paramount's new policy of producing only great, box-office specials actually means.

FRANKLIN 3730

WASHINGTON, D.C.

June 25, 1923.

Mr. William Randolph Hearst, President,
Cosmopolitan Productions,
127th Street at Second Avenue,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Hearst:

It gives me great pleasure to recommend your production "ENEMIES OF WOMEN." This picture was accepted by our public as one of the greatest that has ever come to Washington.

In analyzing the basis for tremendous drawing power and box-office receipts (which we have enjoyed during the past two weeks), we find this picture has such a variety of action, so well done, that it could not help but appeal to all. Our patrons were loud in their praise on leaving the theatre daily for the "bigness" of story, perfection of acting and direction, beauty of scenes, and the lavish scale upon which this film play was produced. We observed that, whereas the story had a good bit of spice, same was handled with "kid gloves," which is what the people apparently want in most every photoplay at the present time. The duel scene was positively the greatest I have ever seen in a picture, and this was only one of the multitude of big scenes, any one of which is what an exhibitor may feel satisfied to have in a production with confidence that it will satisfy his public.

Finally, if "ENEMIES OF WOMEN" is a sample of your coming year's output, this industry will be greatly benefited, for it is such productions that "ring the bell" of high records in box-office receipts, while satisfying the old patrons and adding new ones. Please accept my congratulations for the achievement and the privilege of exhibiting "ENEMIES OF WOMEN" at our Rialto Theatre.

With many thanks and very best wishes for your continued success, I am

Very truly yours,

A Statement from J. R. Grainger

Having just returned from a trip to each key city of the country I am prepared to state that the big first run exhibitors are not only convinced of the magnitude of our productions, but they have also contracted for early showing of our first releases. Among the prominent showmen who will play the releases of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan are:

I. Libson who has contracted for Cincinnati, Dayton and Columbus—

Balaban and Katz who will pre-release "The Spoilers" and "Three Wise Fools" at both the Roosevelt and Chicago Theatres—

William I. Goldman who will show the productions of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan at his King Theatre in St. Louis and also at the new St. Louis Theatre upon its completion—

The West Coast Theatres (Los Angeles) will play all Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases throughout their circuit—

Herbert L. Rothchild who will play all of our releases at his four San Francisco houses—

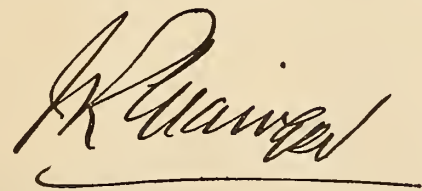

Jensen and Von Herberg who will pre-release "The Spoilers" in Seattle and also at the Rivoli in Portland—

Ruben and Finklestein who will show Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, Superior, Hibbing, Brainerd and Virginia City—

Fred Desberg will play all of the productions for season 1923-24 at the Stillman, State and Allen Theatres, Cleveland—

Rowland and Clark will play all Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan product at the State and Blackstone Theatres, Pittsburg,—also at Erie, East Liberty, and Braddock—

Tom Moore will play all Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan at his Rialto Theatre, Washington.

AL LICHTMAN - President
1650 BROADWAY
NEW YORK CITY

WE are writing these lines on the veranda of Harry Latz's Alamac Hotel at Lake Hopatcong, N. J., where New Jersey exhibitors are convening. It would do independent producers much good to hear the many kind things that are being said about their productions of the current season.

Al Lichtman would be the happiest man in the world if he heard the kind things they are saying here about his pictures. Everybody seems to have mopped up on Al's pictures.

Pictures like "Rich Men's Wives" and "Poor Men's Wives" and "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and "Shadows" seem to have made a friend of every exhibitor in the territory for Al Lichtman and his associates.

The writer was present at a discussion among nine exhibitors who were wrangling with the status of independent pictures. And up spoke Henry P. Nelson, of the Capitol Theatre, Elizabeth, N. J.:

"Say, if independent distributors gave us pictures like those Al Lichtman's firm made last year I wouldn't buy a single outside picture. The Al Lichtman pictures were 100 per cent. pictures and that is the big reason why next season I am going to use his product 100 per cent."

And H. P. is a thorough showman—a hard boiled, "show-me" type of showman who is interested in pictures from the money-making angle. It is a tribute to any firm to have an exhibitor speak of his product as Mr. Nelson spoke of the Preferred Pictures.

And the New Jersey boys are just a few who have been sold 100 per cent. on Al Lichtman. We have found them everywhere. Al Lichtman's Preferred Pictures represent an established product—consistent money-makers, and we look forward to 1923-24 as one that will see that firm and Al Lichtman right up with the institutions of our industry.

A Thrill and a Throb for Every Storm-Swept Wave J. P. McGowan and Helen Holmes in
"STORMY SEAS"

A drama that will thrill you by its sheer emotional power,—that's "Stormy Seas."

Imagine a girl stranded on a flame-swept ship while two lovers race to her relief. A spectacular drama of storm-swept seas and storm-tossed souls.

An actual shipwreck, a terrific storm at sea, a desperate fight in the stoke-hole of a liner, a startling S. O. S. call for help, a spine-tingling fire aboard a real vessel, a plunging, straining race with disaster, a dangerous, last-minute rescue;—these are but a few of the thrills which make "Stormy Seas" a winner.

Add to this speedy action a suspenseful romance and a daring climax and you have a rousing box-office melodrama.

The Most Dramatic Love Story Ever Told in Pictures

“THE AGE OF INNOCENCE”

by
EDITH WHARTON

A stirring story splendidly told, where love is the potent factor. It harkens back to the period of 1870, known and recognized as one of the most fascinating periods of fashion that we have had. Written by Edith Wharton, recently voted as one of the ten greatest women in America, “The Age of Innocence” goes far to prove that there never was and never will be an “age of innocence.” The story has a strong sex appeal, beautifully colored, dramatically told.

“BABBITT”

Another masterpiece of fiction, by the author of

“MAIN STREET”

“Babbitt,” the story of a man, his family and his one great friendship, abounds in big, eye-dazzling scenes and tense dramatic situations. In it we see ourselves, our homes, our cities and the people we know best. But something surprising and dramatic happens to George Babbitt, and that’s the story. “Babbitt” is a searching, dignified and important picture of American life today, and is bigger—if possible—than Mr. Lewis’ “Main Street.”

“THE TENTH WOMAN”

From the novel by Harriet T. Comstock

WITH A TYPICAL WARNER CAST

Nine out of every ten women will do the expected, the Tenth Woman—NEVER. She is as charmingly different as this picture is unusual. It is the story of New England, rock-ribbed in tradition, and the problem of a girl who flings herself against the cruelty of prejudice. Never in the history of the photoplay was a more satisfying picture made.

This play, produced so successfully on the spoken stage by David Belasco, deals whimsically with the experiences of four bachelors, each of whom adopt babies as a means of paying their debt to their country. The myriad complications that arise, one of which involves the assuming of the responsibilities of triplets by a cynical bachelor, make for a photoplay that will appeal to all ages and classes.

"AN UNLOVED WIFE"

by

PEARL KEATING

Enacted by a cast comprising the best known names in pictures

Mrs. Keating, in her story of "An Unloved Wife," deals with the psychological reaction of a marriage of convenience, a marriage that entails the cementing of two large business interests. It is not strange that the normal woman should rebel against the veiled slavery that the condition enforced, yet she found it impossible to break through the barrier and remain true to self in her sacrifice to conditions, when the sweetheart of her youth falls in love with her own daughter. It is a most unusual story, told in the most impressive way.

“Put it down in the book—”

“Merry Go-Round” as a picture, and “Merry Go-Round” as a midsummer record-breaker at the Rivoli were two subjects that you heard wherever film men gathered. There has been some talk of “paper pictures,” and while the talk fills the air Carl Laemmle steps forth with a PICTURE. And what a picture! Give the credit where you will, but place it emphatically on the records that there is a production that is going to give many exhibitors a smiling start on the 1923-24 season. When you find a picture proclaimed by the hypercritical reviewers for its artistic merit; by the “fillum” men for its sure-fire screen values; and by the box-office for its drawing power—Put it down in the book. Here is one of those rare productions that combine story plot and direction with all the beauties of undersea photography, such a production as those of the past that have stamped J. E. Williamson as a master submarine photographer.

Screen history was made with the sensational success of The Toll of the Sea when it was realized that the Technicolor process had at last solved the problem of presenting photoplays in color. Now color photography reaches its fullest development in The Uninvited Guest.

The combination of J. E. Williamson as producer, Ralph Ince as director and the Technicolor process as the basis of the production, insures exhibitors one of the strongest box-office attractions of the year.

A FINIS FOX PRODUCTION

It has a touching domestic drama when a wealth-spoiled husband forsakes his home for the luring eyes of a cabaret dancer.

It has thrilling fights amid the silent snows of the woods when the lover has it out with the dancer's enraged husband.

It has a strange case of double identity when another man returns in the faithless husband's place—and falls in love with his wife.

It has an exciting crook interest, an unexpected climax and a walloping big dramatic scene when they all meet in the dancer's dressing room, behind the silver curtains of a glittering cabaret.

Edna Murphy plays the wife; Vola Vale, the dancer; Allan Forrest is "The Man Between."

"Broadway Gold"
Edward Dillon Production—Truart—
Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

THIS is a distinctly high class production. There is not a discoloration in its entire length. It is a picture of which everyone concerned in its making should be proud. Edward Dillon and J. Gordon Cooper have turned out a feature filled with the ingredients of which box office records are made. An excellent cast, strikingly gowned women, an absorbing plot, beautiful sets, especially the interiors, and some very fine lighting and photographic work. What more could any picture have.

Elaine Hammerstein is the star, and she has never acted more natural than in the interpretation of the role of Sunny Duane, a prodigal daughter who comes to Gotham, joins the chorus, gets mixed up in the night life of the folks who can't stand the tragedy and is involved in an early morning tragedy and other stirring adventures, but eventually finds love and peace with the man whom she married as a favor, expecting him to die soon after the ceremony. Kathryn Williams, as a Broadway actress and confidant of Sunny, and Elliott Dexter, in the leading male role, render fine assistance.

"Broadway Gold" has been given an elaborate production. Some of the interiors, especially those showing the Black Swan Club, the Durant home on Long Island and the apartments of Wayne, are the last word in luxury. There is a full quota of thrills; in fact, one night Sunny gets mixed up in a murder, an 'auto wreck, a brilliant party in the club, and as a climax marries a man of means.

This feature should be an excellent one to offset the summer slump or to open your fall season.

REELAND REVIEWS

High class production with good audience appeal

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN

"BROADWAY GOLD"
TRUART FILMS—INDEPENDENT PRODUCTION
ENTERTAINMENT..... Of the better class
EXPLOITATION..... High grade
DIRECTION..... Splendid opportunities afforded by title and theme.
STORY..... Keeps story moving at good speed holding the necessary suspense
STAR..... An unusual love theme with the bright lights as a background
PHOTOGRAPHY..... Has certain wholesome charm
TIME..... About one hour and 10 minutes

Elaine Hammerstein's first independent picture promises another good bet for the independent exchanges. "Broadway Gold" is one of the type of better grade pictures which shows the unmistakable mark of the intelligent expenditure of sufficient money to make the line of atmosphere safe in showing to whatever kind of audience you may feel quality of the story, players and settings.

Miss Hammerstein has a pleasing personality and it is taken advantage of by the director to the largest extent in the filming of "Broadway Gold". About her the director has also built up a cast of real worth. Elliott Dexter, playing opposite the star, has an unusually difficult part to put across, but he does it splendidly. Kathryn Williams, next to Miss Hammerstein, does the best work in the film, she having a particularly fortunate role as the chorus girl, wise in the ways of Broadway. Others who aid in the portrayal of the story are Richard Wayne, Eloise Goodale, Harold Goodwin and Harry Northrup.

Briefly the story deals with a young chorus girl who at her first midnight party meets a man who becomes interested in her. Through a strange series of circumstances when he is shot by an unknown person in the apartment of this crime...

BROADWAY GOLD

The star, worn by the star and excellent night photography—The title. Exploitation Angles—The title. The gowns and hats worn by Miss Hammerstein should offer a fine fashion store. Use the tie-up with your best fashion displays. Play up the photos in the window displays. Play up the cast. Tell them about the lavish scenes on Broadway.

Drawing Power—Just the thing for modern picturegoers. Should be a box office winner anywhere.

A drama of the hour!

Love - Marriage - ?
Romance - Divorce!

EVERY woman will want to see it—the modern girl's struggle to win love and a place in the world and her fight against those vultures of society who prey on youth and beauty, coupled with the question of the sacredness of love and marriage as weighed against the present day tendencies to divorce. The every day domestic problems that every woman meets. A delightful romance with a touch of pathos that reaches the heart.

THE BROKEN WING

THE words "tremendous, marvelous and box-office knockout" have been used on pictures not half as good as "The Broken Wing".

This is the kind of picture that every exhibitor wishes he could get every week in the year.

Every person who has seen this picture has been extravagant in its praise. Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, the authors of the play from which the picture was made, were so delighted after seeing it that they sent enthusiastic telegrams of congratulation to everybody connected with the production.

Kenneth Harlan as the aviator who crashes into a Mexican village is splendid and proves that he will make an ideal "Virginian".

Miriam Cooper is a charming Senorita. Walter Long as the Mexican bandit furnishes rip-roaring comedy. Miss duPont, Richard Tucker and Edwin J. Brady complete a perfect cast.

The shots of the airplane crash, from the falling plane and from the ground, furnish remarkable thrills.

They don't make better all around entertainment than Tom Forman put into "The Broken Wing".

B. P. SCHULBERG PRESENTS A GASNIER PRODUCTION

MOTHERS-IN-LAW

GASNIER has made a picture here that is going to strike close to the mark hit by "Over The Hill." Gaston Glass plays a country boy who marries a rather wild city girl (Ruth Clifford). After a baby is born, the girl forgets her duties as wife and mother and runs away with another man. How the Mother-In-Law (described as "just a mother, with another child to love") saves the girl is part of the absorbing plot.

Edith Yorke and Josef Swickard are superb as the parents. Others in the capable cast are Vola Vale, Craufurd Kent, Doris Stone, Marie Curtis and Lou Natheau.

You'll cry a little and you'll laugh a good deal. The pathos of the country home and the struggling mother are contrasted by the excitement of the jazzy meandering of the almost-wicked wife.

The story is an original by the authors of "Rich Men's Wives" and "Poor Men's Wives"—Frank Dazey and Agnes Christine Johnston. Olga Printzlau wrote an excellent scenario.

The VIRGINIAN

HIS Owen Wister story, played on the stage for years by Dustin Farnum and William S. Hart, is an American classic. The Virginian's admonition to Trampas—"When you call me that, smile!"; the hen that adopted the puppies, the wooing of Molly, the hanging of Steve, the duel with Trampas; all are familiar.

Kenneth Harlan is a masterful Virginian and this production will place him in the front row of stars. Florence Vidor plays Molly, Russell Simpson is Trampas, Raymond Hatton is Shorty and Pat O'Malley is Steve. Others in the cast are Milton Ross, Sam Allen, Bertram Hadley and John Stepling.

Tom Forman made the picture in the heart of the cow country and it's going to be one of the big pictures of the year. Hope Loring and Louis D. Lighton wrote the continuity.

Preferred bought "The Virginian" from Douglas Fairbanks, who gave up his plans to produce it after he had decided to continue his more spectacular productions. Mr. Fairbanks' elaborate production plans were turned over to Mr. Forman to aid him in his work.

Carl Laemmle
Universal Pictures Corp.

Never before in my long experience in the motion picture field, have I seen a picture do what MERRY GO ROUND has accomplished at our Imperial Theatre, insofar that the receipts have climbed consistently, so that the second week's gross equalled the opening week, and Saturday and Sunday, the first two days of the third week, were bigger than the first two days of both the first and second weeks. All the advertising in the world would not produce these results unless the picture had audience appeal. The word of mouth advertising in this case is wonderful and it has literally become the talk of the town, crashing its way through a slow opening, adverse weather conditions and summer vacations to one of the most consistent box office attractions we have ever played. Merry Go Round is a credit to the motion picture art and a striking testimonial of Carl Laemmle's promise to deliver bigger and better pictures.

Intensive selling and wide distribution of pictures of definite exploitation merit, by an organization amply financed and fully experienced, with certified accounting to the producer and a "cards on the table" policy.

This we will inaugurate in September through thirty distributing points with eighteen new feature pictures from independent producers. Other releases are likewise subject to the absolute requirements of entertainment excellence and exploitation possibilities.

We will name our producers in a series of announcements, the first of which is

"Loyal Lives"

From "Motion Picture News"

“‘LOYAL LIVES’ should meet with universal approval. The possibilities of exploitation are many. There is a lot of ‘human interest’ stuff packed into the picture. The two biggest thrills in the picture are the mail train hold-up and the post office robbery. The camera work is A-No.1. So is the photography. The story holds the interest from first to last scene. The picture as it stands is a good one and will stand on its own merits.”

A Spectacular. Thrilling Feature Revealing the Strange Adventures of a Girl Lost in the Underworld and Her Valiant Fight to Protect and Return the Jewels She Had Stolen from Her Sweetheart

"Loyal Lives"

From "Exhibitors Trade Review"

THE big thrill is the train robbery and the subsequent struggle but it is not so much the thrills as the human interest that makes the picture BIG. Faire Binney is a vivacious piquant Peggy. If we had the space we would commend each member of the cast separately. They deserve it.

"Exploitation of this picture should be very easy, because it is a plea for the postman. Every postman will be glad to help you sell it. It will get much word-of-mouth publicity through mailmen and their families."

Twenty-four years would take you back to the beginning of the Hepworth Company, which was the first company to produce pictures in Great Britain.

It is a period of time and experience which the Hepworth Company has marked by consistent artistic and technical progress, and which has resulted in giving to the world pictures that ring with the sincerity of true Art—human, believable and healthy pictures.

Without artificiality, without recklessly lavish displays of the crude power of money, Hepworth Productions are supreme in Entertainment Value.

For 1923-1924 Hepworth will release

1923—SIX SUPER SPECIALS—1924

We will produce and release during 1923-24 six tremendous super specials with all star casts, the names of each of which will act as a one thousand horse power magnet.

The first production temporarily titled “VANITY OF MEN”

by Lois Zellner

A SENSATIONAL SOCIETY DRAMA THAT RIPS OFF THE MASK OF MAN'S CONCEIT AND EXPOSES WOMAN'S GULLIBILITY.

Each one of the cast will be recognized as a stage favorite sufficient to act alone as a box office attraction.

The second production
“INDECENT CLOTHES”

by John J. Fleming & Felicia Ormont

A TERRIFIC INDICTMENT AGAINST SOCIETY'S MODERN FASHIONS WITH ITS EVERY ACTION APPEALING TO THE BASEST PASSIONS OF MEN AND WOMEN.

Here, too, there will be a cast fit to stamp this production as a special of specials.

The third production
“THE HAND OF GOD”

(Working Title)

From “THE DIARY OF A PHYSICIAN”

by Dr. Samuel Warren

Conceded by every literary authority to be the greatest heart story written in the past 75 years. It proves to what end true love can reach.

A superlative production, with a superlative all-star cast.

"Loyal Lives"

"IT has story, cast, action, exploitation possibilities—everything that goes to make a money-making picture and is in the class with 'Over the Hill,' 'Humoresque,' and 'The Old Nest.' Here is a gripping heart interest father and mother story that brings genuine tears. Brandon Tynan and Mary Carr play the role of Dad and Mother O'Brien, respectively, and theirs is a work of art. Mary Carr is just as good as she was in 'Over the Hill' and Brandon Tynan is better than ever. It has tears, thrills and everything. If you want to start the season right hop on this one."

“Where’s My Wandering Boy This Evening?”

Two parts

Telling the cock-eyed world

A lot of people, when they are sure of a thing and want to give emphasis to a statement, say, “I’ll tell the cock-eyed world that it’s so!” Ben Turpin is a star who is celebrated for his scrambled eyes. But don’t think for a moment that that’s his only claim to fame. He’s an artist who knows what people like to laugh at and is skilled in giving them what they want.

One eye looks east while the other looks west; but each eye sees a million persons who know, like, want Ben Turpin.

That’s box office value. “Where’s My Wandering Boy This Evening?” has it.

And you can tell the cock-eyed world that it’s so!

Her Dangerous Path

with Edna Murphy

What should the girl do?

Marry a chauffeur, match bad manners with good, see her husband, a bootlegger, battling with the police and have him die in her arms?

a society youth, be ruled and brow-beaten by his domineering mother, lose both husband and baby?

an artist, and find she has models for rivals and her husband's friends her pursuers?

a rancher, and live a lifetime of excitement in a few hours, with a husband who kisses her just once?

a naturalist, get wrecked on a South Seas Island and have to defend herself from the attacks of an abysmal brute, while her husband is hunting for butterflies?

or any one of five other men and take a big chance, all for the sake of happiness?

10 big episodes - 10 big moments in a girl's life - 10 big problems of life and love.
