Background and personal life

Okorafor's parents traveled to America to go to school, but they could not return to Nigeria because of the Nigerian Civil War.^[d] The American-born daughter of Igbo Nigerian parents, Okorafor has been visiting Nigeria since she was very young.

During her years attending Homeswood-Flossmoor High School in Flossmoor, IL, Okorafor was a nationally-known tennis and track star,^[d] and excelled in math and the sciences. Due to her interest in insects, she desired to be an entomologist.^[d]

She was diagnosed with scoliosis at the age of 13, a condition that worsened as she grew older. At age 19, she underwent spinal fusion surgery to straighten and fuse her spine; a rare complication led to Okorafor becoming paralyzed from the waist down.^[d]

Okorafor turned to writing small stories in the margins of a science-fiction book that she had. It was the first time she had ever written anything creatively. That summer, with intense physical therapy, Okorafor regained her ability to walk, but she was unable to continue her athletic career, using a cane to walk. At the suggestion of a close friend, she took a creative writing class that spring semester, and was writing her first novel by the semester's end.^[d]
