and Ridgway claimed to have a lease on the terms on which Wharton's solicitor had been instructed to prepare it three years before; while the defendant stood out for better terms, and denied that any binding agreement had been come to in 1849. The contention of the defendant was, first, that Crawter was not authorised to do more than discuss and advise, and that he had no authority to conclude a bargain; secondly, that, in fact, no bargain had been concluded between Crawter and Ridgway; and lastly, that the Statute of Frauds had not been satisfied. The plaintiff insisted that Crawter had authority; and that he had come to a definite agreement, evidenced by certain writings sufficient to satisfy the statute; and took the further technical point that the defendant was precluded from setting up the statute, by reason of his not having claimed the benefit of it in his answer. At the first hearing, before V. C. Stuart, the plaintiff was successful on all points, and obtained a decree for specific performance. On appeal, the Lord Chancellor intimated a strong opinion that Crawter was duly authorised to agree to a lease, and that he had, in fact, concluded such an agreement; but, on the two legal points, the decision was in the defendant's favour. It was quite clear on the pleading question, that, where a parol contract is admitted by the answer, the defendant is precluded from relying on the Statute of Frauds, unless his answer claims the same benefit as if he had raised the question by a plea of the statute. But the Lord Chancellor held, that the reason of this rule was, that, in the absence of any express reservation of the defence given by the statute, the answer itself, by admitting the contract, became a written memorandum sufficient to satisfy the statute; and that the reason and the rule alike failed to have any application when the defendant's answer was (as in this case) a denial of the existence of any contract whether parol or otherwise. The decision on this point, therefore, left the defence of the statute open to the defendant; and, upon consideration of the documents relied on by the plaintiff, the Chancellor came to the conclusion that the statute was not satisfied, and dismissed the bill with costs. The cause was again appealed to the House of Lords; and Lord Cranworth, with great candour, acknowledged that his former judgment was wrong, both in deciding the question of contract or no contract in favour of the plaintiff, and in holding that the statute was not satisfied. He was now of opinion, that, if there were a contract at all, the statute was satisfied; but having also changed his view on the facts, and come to the conclusion that there was no contract, nor, indeed, any authority in Crawter to conclude one, the upshot was, that the two errors neutralised each other, and the defendant was entitled to have the bill dismissed. The majority of the law lords agreed with this view; but Lord St. Leonards supported the judgment on the facts given by the Chancellor in Lincoln's-inn, against the opposite judgment of the same functionary on the woolsack, and stoutly maintained that Lord Cranworth had been quite right in holding that there was, at least, a parol contract, and that he was quite wrong in repudiating his own judgment on that point. Lord St. Leonards, moreover, agreed with the other Lords that the first decision was wrong in holding that the Statute of Frauds was not complied with; and consequently was of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. The judgment of the House was in accordance with the amended views of the Chancellor, and the appeal was accordingly dismissed.

It would be out of place to discuss the particular questions of fact on which the House of Lords was divided, but the point of law which was unanimously decided is of sufficient importance to render an examination of the facts on which it rests interesting and useful. It appeared that Ridgway and Crawter had talked over the terms of the contemplated lease, and that Ridgway shortly afterwards wrote to beg Crawter to draw up the agreement. To this Crawter replied by letter, that Wharton's solicitor already had instructions to prepare the agreement, and in the course of the same letter incidentally spoke of "the terms arranged with Ridgway." It was a fact that written, but unsigned, instructions had previously been sent by Crawter to Wharton's solicitor containing the terms which were to be inserted in the lease. What the House of Lords held was, that, assuming a previous parol agreement to have been actually made to the same effect as the instructions, the letter of Crawter, and the unsigned instructions together, made up a memorandum sufficient to satisfy the statute. If the two documents could be read together, all the terms were there, and one of them was duly signed. The only question was, whether the letter and the written instructions could be connected. Up to a certain point the law on this question has long been quite clear. If a letter, or other signed writing, is defective in not setting out the terms of a contract, you cannot use another unsigned document in which the terms appear unless it is referred to in the signed writing. Boydell v. Drummond (11 East, 142) is the leading case on this point. There the defendant had signed a book headed "Shakspeare Subscribers—Their signatures." A printed prospectus contained the terms of the subscription to an edition of Shakspeare which the plaintiff was bringing out; and it was held that the prospectus could not be connected by parol evidence with the signed book, because it was not referred to thereby. In Clinan v. Cooke (1 Sch. & Lef. 22) it was held, on the same principle, that an advertisement of lands to be let, stating the term of the lease to be granted, could not be brought in aid of a defective signed agreement in which the duration of the lease was accidentally omitted. On the other hand, it was equally clear, that, if a signed agreement stated that the terms were to be those contained in another specified document, parol evidence was admissible to identify the document referred to, and after such identification the two could be read together as a single document. This doctrine was expressly laid down, in Clinan v. Cooke, by Lord Redesdale, who said, that, if the advertisement had been referred to in the agreement, parol evidence would have been admissible to identify it. And in Dobell v. Hutchinson (3 Ad. & Ell. 355), letters referring to a bargain, and to the conditions of sale, were held to be sufficiently connected with a copy of the conditions which supplied the defects in the statement of the contract as contained in the correspondence. Many other cases might be cited to the same effect, where one document is referred to as a written document in some letter or other writing signed by the party to be bound. Allen v. Bennett (3 Taunt. 167) goes a step further. There a contract was signed by the seller's agent, stating price, &c., but omitting the buyer's name. The seller afterwards wrote to his agent, referring to the transaction, and mentioning the term of credit, and the buyer's name. These two signed documents were read together, the Court gathering from their terms that they related to the same transaction, although the subsequent letter did not specifically refer to the written memorandum itself. The House of Lords has now established and given precision to this doctrine. Crawter's letter referred to the fact of instructions having been given, though it did not refer to them as being in writing, nor did it appear on the face of the letter whether there were any written instructions or not. Upon this state of facts, Lord Cranworth laid it down that parol evidence was admissible to show that the instructions referred to were in writing, and to prove what they were. On this point the House of Lords was unanimous, and, on reading the two documents together, there was clearly enough to satisfy the statute.

This being so, it became unnecessary to consider the pleading point—for, the statute being satisfied, it mattered not whether the defendant was or was not at liberty to rely upon it. The doctrine of Lord Cranworth in the Court below does not, however, seem to have been doubted; and it may, therefore, still be considered law that a defendant denying a contract need not put in his answer an express reference to the Statute of Frauds. Lord Cranworth, indeed, said, in his first judgment, that it would be absurd to do so; but, nevertheless, it is, and will probably ex abundanti cautelâ continue to be, the practice of pleaders, to guard themselves in all cases by claiming in terms the benefit of the statute.

Winding-up Acts—Contributory—Transfer to Infant.

Re Electric Telegraph Company (Ireland), Reid's Case, 5 W. R. 854.

The rights and liabilities of infant shareholders in public companies have been discussed in several cases, both at common law and in equity; and the general conclusion to be drawn from the reported decisions is, that the Legislature, in the various Acts relating to such bodies, did not intend to alter the legal status of infants in respect of contracts with them as shareholders or otherwise. In the case of Newry and Enniskillen Railway Company v. Combe (5 Railw. Cas. 633), the Court of Exchequer held, that an infant had a good defence to an action for calls against him as a shareholder, the plea being that the defendant became the holder of the shares by subscription, and that, at the time of his subscribing for the shares and of the making of the calls, he was an infant, and that whilst he was an infant he disaffirmed the contract, of which the plaintiffs had notice. A plea of infancy to such an action ought always to show that the defendant had repudiated the contract, on or before his attaining full age. (See The Birkenhead, &c., Company v. Pilcher, 6 Railw. Cas. 622; and The Leeds, &c., Company v. Fearnley, 5 Railw. Cas. 644.) Equity has followed the same rule. (See Litchfield's case, 3 De G. & Smc. 143). In Reid's case, a shareholder had transferred his shares to his son, who at the date of the transfer was, and still remained, a minor. The son was subsequently made a director, and had not repudiated his shares. The company was now being wound up, and the present application was made to strike the father off the list of contributories, on the ground that the transfer to the son was valid, as he contended that mere infancy, without repudiation, was not sufficient to render it void. The Master of the Rolls refused the application, as he had no doubt that, in any case of an infant shareholder, the infant had a right to elect whether he would accept or not; and the Court, exercising its discretion for him, could not hesitate to repudiate where the company was insolvent. His Honour, therefore, held that the transfer of the shares to the son did not constitute him a shareholder.

EQUITABLE WASTE—ORNAMENTAL TIMBER—OBLIGATION TO REBUILD.

Micklethwait v. Micklethwait, 5 W. R. 861.

A novel and interesting question affecting the doctrine of the Court with respect to equitable waste arose in this case—viz. whether, if an owner in fee of an estate with a mansion-house upon it and trees planted for ornament to the house, pulls down the mansion-house without any intention of rebuilding it, a tenant for life under his will is entitled to cut down the ornamental trees. The Lords Justices held that he was entitled. The trees having been planted for ornament to the mansion-house, their Lordships considered that the doctrine of equitable waste did not require that the trees should be preserved for ornament to the estate when the house was pulled down—Turner, L. J., observing, that, where there were doubts whether trees were planted for ornament or not, the existence of the mansion-house generally furnished a criterion for determining the point. The principle of the doctrine of equitable waste was thus explained by his Lordship:—"At law, a tenant for life without impeachment of waste has the absolute power and dominion over the timber upon the estate; but the Court controls him in the exercise of that power; and it does so because it will not permit an unconscientious use to be made of a legal power. It regards such an unconscientious use of a legal power as an abuse and not as a use of it. When, therefore, the Court is called upon in cases of this description, it is bound, in the first place, to consider whether there are any special circumstances to affect the conscience of the tenant for life; for, in the absence of such special circumstances, it cannot be unconscientious in him to avail himself of the power which the testator vested in him." In the present case, the Court was of opinion that there was nothing to affect the conscience of the tenant for life, as the devisor himself had pulled down the mansion-house, and there was no evidence to show that he intended that the trees surrounding it should remain standing for ornament. There has been much more difficulty in applying than in establishing the principle enunciated by L. J. Turner. The mere contiguity of trees to the mansion-house does not of itself necessarily decide the question, whether or not they are to be considered as ornamental. According to the reported cases, timber in plantations, vistas, avenues, and in all the rides about an estate for ten miles around the house, or clumps of trees at two miles distance, may be deemed ornamental, so as to make it equitable waste to cut them down. Nor did Lord Eldon (in Lord Downshire v. Sandys, 6 Ves. 149) think the Court competent to decide on the question of taste—whether, in fact, any particular plantations or trees were ornamental or otherwise. "If the testator," said his Lordship, "had gratified his own taste by planting for ornament, though he had adopted the species the most disgusting to the tenant for life, and the most agreeable to the tenant in tail, and, upon the competition between those parties, the Court should see that the tenant for life was right, and the other wrong, in point of taste, yet the taste of the testator, like his will, binds them; and it is not competent to them to substitute another species of ornament for that which the testator designed. The question, which is the most fit method of clothing an estate, cannot be safely trusted to the Court." Observing upon this decision, Knight Bruce, L. J., said that perhaps a state of circumstances could be imagined in which the timber would, in the absence of any express direction in a will or an instrument governing the title, be protected as ornamental without reference to any former, or present, or intended residence or use, and independently of any such consideration; of which, however, his Lordship appeared to entertain some doubt. Indeed, Lord Eldon's decision in the case of Lord Downshire v. Sandys cannot be considered to support such a proposition, as in that case the mansion-house was standing; and that being so, the case is only important as showing the length to which the Court stretched the principle of equitable waste as applied to ornamental timber, and the care which it takes to carry out as far as possible the intention of settlors.

Our advertising columns contain the programme of proceedings at the Meeting of this Association to be held at Manchester. It will be noticed, that the days selected for the Meeting have been altered from the 7th and 8th to the 8th and 9th October, 1857, in consequence of the Royal Proclamation appointing Wednesday, the 7th of October, for a day of Solemn Fast.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

VII. Legal Education and Examination.

Classical Examination.—The Council some time ago received suggestions for extending the requirements at the examination of candidates for admission on the roll; and in their previous reports they stated the conclusions at which they had arrived—namely, to recommend to the judges to authorise an examination, either before or during the articles of clerkship, or before admission, for the purpose of ascertaining that the candidates possessed an adequate degree of knowledge of the Latin and French languages, and of English History, Geography, Arithmetic, and Book-keeping. A memorial to this effect has been prepared.

Prizes and Certificates of Merit.—The Examiners often regretted, that, whilst they felt compelled at each examination to reject several candidates, who were unable to answer satisfactorily one-half of the fifteen questions in the three essential departments of Common Law, Conveyancing, and Equity, they were unable to award any distinction to those who passed their legal examination in a superior manner. After much consideration, and with the concurrence of the Masters of all the courts, who are ex-officio Examiners, the Council, on the part of the society, deemed it expedient, in order to encourage the careful study of the law by the candidates for examination, preparatory to their admission on the roll of attorneys, to propose that the Examiners should select the names of such candidates, not exceeding three, under the age of twenty-six, as in passing their examination should appear to have deserved distinction, with a view to the Council presenting to such candidates a prize of books, or any other testimonial which might be deemed fit.

This proposition has been attended with beneficial results. In Michaelmas Term last, the examiners selected only one candidate for a prize of books; in Hilary Term, three were selected; and in Easter Term, three prizes were again awarded; and it having been observed that some of the candidates, though not entitled to a prize, were but little inferior to those who obtained it, the Examiners reported four more whom they deemed entitled to a certificate of merit, and this recommendation has been accordingly carried into effect. In Trinity Term two prizes and three certificates of merit have been granted; making during the year nine prizes and seven certificates of merit. The names of these candidates are stated in an Appendix to this Report.

On this subject the Council are much gratified in adding that the honourable Society of Clifford's-inn, one of the ancient Inns of Chancery, has recently come to the following resolution:—

"That, in order to promote and encourage the efficient study of the law, a sum, not exceeding twenty guineas, be given by this society in Michaelmas Term yearly, during the pleasure of the Principal and Rules, to provide one or more testimonials for such of the candidates as, in passing their examination during the year, for the purpose of being admitted on the roll of attorneys and solicitors, shall, in the opinion of the Examiners, merit distinction; and that the Council of the 'Incorporated Law Society' be requested and empowered to apply the beforementioned sum in the purchase of books for such candidates, or in any other manner they may deem suitable; the said annual gift to be distinguished as 'The Prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's-inn.'"

The Council have had under their consideration several questions from time to time on the mode and sufficiency of service of articles of clerkship, where the clerks have been engaged in other business than that of the attorneys to whom they are articled, such as agents to insurance companies, or holding appointments as coroners, clerks to magistrates or boards of guardians. These questions are properly within the province of the examiners, to whom the parties have been referred; and they have been reminded of the 12th section of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, which enacts "that the clerk must, during the whole term of service, be actually employed by the attorney to whom he is articled in the proper business, practice, or employment of an attorney or solicitor."

Questions have also been raised regarding the qualification of articled clerks to be admitted on the roll of attorneys:—1st. Whether a Master of Arts could be admitted, after three years' service, like a Bachelor of Arts, or Bachelor of Laws, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 7. This point has been decided in the negative by a judge at chambers. 2nd. Whether a gentleman in deacon's orders could be articled, examined, and admitted on the roll of attorneys and solicitors. There is no statute or decision expressly on the subject; but as deacons cannot be called to the bar, nor become proctors, the question will be submitted to the court when the candidate applies for examination and admission.

Correspondence.

EDINBURGH.—(From our own Correspondent.)

Several legal appointments are at present vacant in Scotland, although none of them are very important. The office of Registrar of Sasines became vacant some time ago by the death of Mr. Pringle, of Whytbank; and the Substitute Sheriffships of Cupar-Fife and the Western District of Perthshire became vacant about the middle of August, by the deaths respectively of Mr. Grant and Mr. Cross. Of course, whether the offices be small or great, there are always found plenty of candidates eager for appointment to them, and, accordingly, rumour has been busy in reference to these candidates. It is said that Sir William Gibson Craig has been offered the office of Registrar of Sasines, and has refused it. How far this rumour contains any truth, we cannot say. We have heard no other person named. It is also said that Mr. John Grahame, advocate, has been nominated to the Sheriff Substituteship of the Western District of Perthshire; and rumour is so consistent upon this point, that we think the fact may be taken for granted. It may be that the consent of the heads of the court which is required for the final confirmation of the appointment has not yet been obtained; but there is no probability of any difficulty upon this point, for Mr. Grahame has already shown that he is quite fit for the duties of the office—having discharged similar duties in Edinburgh for a considerable time, on behalf of one of the Sheriff Substitutes there, who was absent from bad health. The salary attached to the office is said to be £500 a year, and the duties are known to be very light. No one has been named in an equally confident way as having obtained the appointment to Cupar, and so many are spoken of that it is evident that nothing is fixed. But it is rumoured to-day that the procurators before the Court have memorialised the sheriff against appointing a young advocate to the office, and have hinted at the propriety of selecting a Sheriff Substitute from their own body. It is to be hoped, however, that the sheriff will not listen to any representation of this kind. The bar is undoubtedly the best body from which to select county judges, and the appointments which have hitherto been made from the bodies of procurators practising before the sheriff courts have not been fortunate, as, indeed, might have been expected. It is not necessary that an inexperienced advocate should be appointed—the salary, which is £700 a year, ought to be sufficient to secure a judge of respectable capacity.

Besides these appointments, which have all become vacant by death, it has been stated very confidently within the last few days, that it has become necessary to appoint a new Sheriff Substitute in Glasgow, on account of the increase of business there, with a salary of £700 a year. The appointment is in the hands of the Sheriff Principal, as should have been mentioned before, subject to a veto on the part of the heads of the Court; and the course to be followed by Sir Archibald Alison, who is the Sheriff of Glasgow on the present occasion, is looked forward to with considerable anxiety—for the two last appointments made by him are not considered very happy. It is reported that he means to move the present Sheriff of Falkirk, Mr. Robertson, to Glasgow. If so, Sir Archibald will, at all events, avoid the dangers arising from the appointment of an untried judge. It has also been stated that Sir Archibald means to appoint Mr. Charles Robertson, advocate; but there must be some mistake about this, and the other arrangement appears to be much more probable. If carried out, it would leave Falkirk open, which would give the Sheriff of Stirlingshire an appointment.

Review.

The Practice of the Court of Chancery, with an Appendix of Forms and Precedents of Costs adapted to the last New Orders. By John Sidney Smith, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law, Author of "A Treatise on the Principles of Equity." Sixth Edition, revised and enlarged. London: W. Maxwell, H. Sweet, and Stevens & Norton. Dublin: Hodges, Smith, & Co. 1857.

The sixth edition of this work, which has recently appeared, has been so extensively revised and enlarged as to be in substance a new book. More than twenty years ago the author published the first edition of his "Practice of the Court of Chancery," and, after rapidly getting through that and a subsequent edition, he issued the work in the year 1844, in the form in which it has until recently been most generally known. Mr. Smith was very unfortunate in the time which he selected for the publication of his third edition. Almost immediately after its appearance the Orders of 1845 were promulgated, by which many important alterations were made in the practice of the Court. From that time to the present the procedure of the Court of Chancery has undergone a multitude of changes, which have tended to make the old edition of our author's Practice to a great extent obsolete. The second edition of "Daniell's Practice," which came out after the Orders of 1845, and which, unlike the edition of the same work of the present year, was a careful and useful treatise, rather threw into the shade the less opportune work which had preceded it by so short, though so important, an interval; and those who still consulted Mr. Smith's book were seriously hampered by the fact that it had appeared too soon to allow of the incorporation of the materials which had been worked into the text of Daniell. Since 1844, Mr. Smith has issued two editions of a handbook embodying the recent practice, and intended to be supplementary to the old Chancery Practice. All these materials are now combined in the volume of the present year, together with such additional matter as the more recent decisions on the practice under the Chancery Improvement Acts have rendered necessary. The author is as happy in the date of the present edition as he was unfortunate in that of 1844; for, although we hope that the amendment of the Court of Chancery has not yet come to an end, there can be no doubt that the working of the modern statutes, as interpreted by judicial decisions, has brought the procedure to a condition which cannot but contain the elements of stability. The grand requisites of a work on practice are clearness and brevity of statement, and conscientiousness in collecting and comparing the innumerable decisions which form the ultimate guide of the practitioner. Under both these heads Mr. Smith's work contrasts favourably with others that have been offered to the Profession. The volume, though thick, is swelled by the quantity of matter which it contains, and not by tiresome disquisitions or inappropriate digressions on the policy of the law. Throughout, the aim of the writer has obviously been to give the greatest possible amount of information in the smallest compass; and though it may seem whimsical to attribute the virtue of brevity to a ponderous book of 1,100 pages, the reader who opens it by chance again and again is pretty certain to light upon nothing but short, explicit statements of points of practice, just sufficient to guide the practitioner, and without any pretence of a more ambitious kind.

A long experience of a treatise of this kind, by which its accuracy may be repeatedly tested in actual business, is the only certain evidence of the completeness with which all the dry details of Chancery practice have been incorporated in the text; but, so far as we can judge by the acquaintance which we have been able to make with it by mere reading, we feel tolerably safe in saying that the author has done his work in a thoroughly conscientious manner. We have looked for omissions in the quarters where they were most to be expected, and have been most agreeably disappointed in our search. An absolutely perfect book of practice is as much an impossibility as perpetual motion; but if an occasional oversight may be detected here and there by some lynx-eyed critic, we are satisfied that they will not be due to the want of honest and laborious research on the part of the author. In the portion of the work which relates to the more modern innovations of the last few years, the omissions of reported cases which we have been able to detect are extremely rare, and we have scarcely found one instance of such a character as materially to affect the general summary given in the text. On one point, indeed—namely, the practice of amending an abated or defective bill so as to dispense with supplementary proceedings—we should have been glad to find some reference to the course suggested by the cases of Price v. Hamblett (1 W. R. 363) and Stuart v. Sturgis (2 W. R. 641); but, with this exception, we know no part of the new practice on which satisfactory information as to the latest decisions may not be found in Mr. Smith's pages. We might mention a few other decisions which have not been cited, and which might with advantage have been added to the references; but they appear to have been omitted in general as being substantial repetitions of other judgments, rather than from negligence or ignorance on the part of the author; and, as our object is to describe the character of the work, and not to point out every minute particular in which we should have been disposed to add still further to the cases collected by the author, it is enough to say that no substantial point on the new practice, with the single exception which we have noticed, is left, so far as we can ascertain, without due notice in the text, and a reference to the most important decisions by which it has been established. A curious instance of the anxiety with which the author has laboured to make his work complete, is afforded by a note appended to the very short list of errata which have escaped the correction of the press. In this note, the author observes, that he has been informed by some members of the bar that the rule against giving costs personally against an unsuccessful respondent on an appeal has been departed from; but that, having searched in vain for any reported case to that effect, he had not ventured to make any variation in the statement of the practice introduced into the text of his work. We believe that Mr. Smith showed judgment in leaving the text as it stood, although he appears not to have discovered one of the cases to which his informant probably referred. The only decisions of which we are aware, in which the validity of the old rule has been called in question, are Martin v. Pycroft (1 W. R. 58, and 2 De G. Mac. & G. 785), and Langford v. May (1 W. R. 484). In the former of these (which is cited by Mr. Smith), a decision of the Court below was given refusing specific performance, on the ground that the Statute of Frauds was not satisfied. On appeal, this judgment was reversed, and it became necessary to go into viva voce evidence on an entirely distinct defence, which point was ultimately decided in favour of the plaintiff appellant. The Court gave the costs, not of the whole appeal, but only of the viva voce examination; and the Chancellor observed, that, in doing so, the Court was not interfering with the rule (if there was such a rule) that a successful appellant cannot have costs. It was therefore not a decision against the old rule, although some doubt was certainly thrown upon it. In Langford v. May (as reported in 1 W. R. 484), there was also a viva voce examination, but the costs given seem to have included the whole costs of the appeal, limited, however, to a fixed sum. This case has escaped the notice of Mr. Smith; but we do not think that it affords any sufficient ground for varying the statement in his text—that, if a decree is reversed, it is not the practice to order the respondent personally to pay costs, if he has confined himself to the appeal, and has not opened the whole case. Langford v. May was evidently an exceptional case, in which new viva voce evidence was gone into; and though it would doubtless have been cited if the author had not overlooked it, the omission is not a very serious defect, while the candid manner in which the subject is noticed is perhaps the best proof that could be given of the conscientious spirit in which the author has worked. We ought not to omit that a Chapter on Costs, which has been added to the present edition, promises to supply a want which has been often felt; and that a collection of useful precedents and forms is given in the Appendix. A full Chapter is also devoted to the now important practice in the Judges' Chambers. Altogether, the work strikes us as being most creditable to the author, and likely to take its place as a standard guide of the Chancery practitioner.

Judicial Business Report.

EVIDENCE OF MR. CHARLES JAMES PALMER ABRIDGED.

I am a member of the firm of Palmer, Palmer, & Bull, late Palmer, France, & Palmer. I am extensively engaged in agency business: in the home counties principally, and also in Hampshire. With reference to any re-arrangement of the circuits, I do not think it is necessary upon the Home, except, perhaps, in Surrey, to have another assize for civil business; but it is necessary for criminal business, especially in Kent, where of late we have had a winter assize, and sometimes in Sussex. This last winter there was one in Sussex. The criminal business in Kent is, I may say, enormous, although a large number of prisoners go to the Central Criminal Court twelve times a year. But I think that for civil business two circuits are sufficient. I do not think that there is a necessity for increasing the number of circuits for civil business, because certainly upon the Home Circuit, notwithstanding what has been said as to the Northern Circuit, the civil business has vastly decreased in point of number of causes. There are not many heavy cases, and, from my experience, I think that now very few causes go down to trial upon the Home Circuit, except in Surrey, unless there really is something to try. I can remember the time when the question of property in a hedge, a ditch, or the cutting of a bough would cause as much litigation as any mercantile question now; but that has all gone by. The time occupied in trying the civil business of the Home Circuit has undoubtedly diminished: we used to allow a week for Sussex, and at the last assizes only two days were allowed, and yet all the business was got through. From my knowledge of the Hampshire business, I do not think that a third assize is necessary. I think, as regards the Home Circuit, Hampshire might be added to it. I think Essex might be thrown into the Norfolk Circuit. The part of the Home Circuit north of the Thames, I would put into the Norfolk Circuit; and I think throughout the kingdom the circuits might be altered. The Norfolk Circuit, I believe, is the shortest in point of time, the Oxford Circuit is longer. With regard to London business, I think three judges sitting in banco would be quite sufficient. I think, that, in all cases, there ought to be an odd number of judges presiding in banco, so as to avoid the possibility of having a tie. I have a case now before me, which has gone up to the House of Lords, which was argued first before eight judges in error, and upon that case there was a tie of two fours. The case was re-argued before ten judges, and then I was informed that there was a tie of two fives; but, after some time, the Court of Error gave judgment. Nine judges gave their judgment, and the numbers were six and three. I am speaking of the case of Billiter v. Young—that case is gone up to the House of Lords. Lord Wensleydale gave an opinion in the minority. Since he has been called up to the House of Lords, that case has gone up to the House of Lords. Wherever a tie occurs in the sittings in banco, I cannot say that it amounts to a refusal of justice. It amounts, in point of fact, to an injustice, because the party who has brought up his appeal can get no final judgment upon his appeal. I cannot refer to many cases of a tie, because I admit that it seldom happens, but still it does happen. There should be the possibility, at all events, when a case goes up to appeal, of there being a binding judgment upon it. My opinion is, that three judges in banco would be quite sufficient; and I refer to the court of appeal in the Court of Chancery, where, at most, there are never more than three judges, and seldom more than two. At times, the Lord Chancellor calls in the assistance of the Lords Justices; but, as I said before, at most there are only three judges; and, taking the Lord Chancellor's Court as the highest court of appeal in the Court of Chancery, I think that three judges in the common law courts would be quite sufficient. I think that the business at chambers requires alteration in many respects. I think that a great deal of the business which now comes before the judge at chambers might go before somebody else—say one of the masters; because we know very well that there are a great many trumpery applications—summonses for times to plead, summonses for particulars, and a variety of other summonses, which take up a vast deal of the judges' time, and upon which anybody could decide. I clearly recollect its being tried once. It was in the old Serjeants'-inn Hall. Master Walker attended with the vacation judge. I believe that gave very great satisfaction. I think that it might be left to the discretion of the judges' clerk, upon granting the summons, whether that summons should be made returnable before a judge, or whether it should be made returnable before a master sitting in chambers. I think that arrangement would be acceptable. It would be upon common matters, of course. Let a matter that requires the judge's decision, by all means go before the judge. With regard to the number of causes which are tried, I think a vast number of those causes might be tried before some other tribunal. It is a difficulty certainly, now, since the County Court Act, to suggest before whom those causes might be tried. The county courts have now jurisdiction up to the amount of £50, or beyond it by consent. Take a builder's bill, or a carpenter's bill, or a bill for clothes amounting to £50, and it will be a matter of very considerable discussion and very considerable inquiry; whereas, a jeweller's account for £500 may be constituted of only one or two items; therefore, why should not the latter cause be tried before somebody? As the business at chambers now stands, I think that the time given to it is insufficient. I think that the business at Nisi Prius might be altered by doing away with the different sittings, that is to say, the second and third sitting, and so on, and giving notice of trial for a particular day; and in town causes, I would suggest that that could be carried out in this way—that the cause should be set down before notice of trial is given, and that the marshal, at the time the cause is set down, should name a day for which notice of trial should be given. The marshal or the associate can always judge pretty well what the causes are like. Set the cause down for a day named; then give notice to the opposite party that the cause has been set down, and is appointed to be tried on such a day. I think that causes of a trifling nature, for the mere recovery of debts, might be tried during the long vacation with convenience to the public and to the profession.

Money Market.

CITY, FRIDAY EVENING.

The variable aspect of news from the East Indies has imparted some degree of fluctuation to the English Funds, but the closing prices this afternoon show very little difference from this day week. The difference is an advance of from $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ per Cent. Consols at the close of business are quoted 90$\frac{1}{8}$ to 90$\frac{1}{4}$. Money is in more active demand than for several weeks past, and at very full rates. The foreign Stock Market has shown considerable activity. Prices have been generally well supported. Turkish 6 per Cents. have advanced.

From the Bank of England return for the week ending the 26th September, 1857, which we give below, it appears that the amount of notes in circulation is £19,142,120, being an increase of £240,905, and the stock of bullion in both departments is £11,276,088, showing an increase of £87,528 when compared with the previous week.

By the Parana West India Mail Packet specie has been received to the amount of £343,431, but a large amount has been sent to the continent. The payment to the public of the October dividends at the Bank, and of the life annuities at the National Debt Office will commence on Wednesday the 14th instant.

The decrease in this quarter's revenue compared with the corresponding quarter of last year, exceeds £800,000. If an increase did not appear from the Post Office, and from one or two other secondary heads, the decrease would stand for above a million. On Property Tax, the falling off is put down at £415,699. In the customs it is £499,959. In the Excise it stands at £148,000.

The returns of the Board of Trade for the month of August were favourable, but not so much so as those of previous months. In the comparative view of exports there appears some falling off in manufactured cottons in August, 1857, compared with August, 1856—not large, but significant, as indicating a check in the demand for those articles in the East India market. The decrease is £88,865, about 8 per cent. In machinery there is a material increase, and also in copper and brass. The total comparative increase of exports in the month of August is £885,518, about 8 per cent.

The returns of imported commodities show that the present advanced price has led to diminished consumption of sugar, cocoa, and several articles in general use. The very large decrease which appears in the importation of wheat and meal, and Indian corn, must be chiefly attributed to the effects of an abundant harvest and the prospect of a falling market. The decrease in August, 1857, compared with August, 1856, in the importation of flour and meal, amounts to the difference between 478,286 cwt. and 72,532 cwt., being about 85 per cent. The large importation in August, 1856, was exceptional. The year 1855 shows no more than 132,046 cwt. Of manufactured silk the decrease in importation is large. It appears that the great increase of price which has followed the deficient crops of silk in Europe has led to a falling off in consumption. On the other hand, the importation of raw silk has comparatively increased in the last month.

It is reported from France that the vintage is generally begun, and in some places is nearly over. From all parts the accounts are hitherto highly favourable. We are assured that the quality will be first-rate. Respecting the quantity, more will be known shortly, but there seems no doubt that it will be larger than was anticipated. France is the only country from which favourable reports of this year's vintage are forthcoming. It is stated that, in Portugal, the vine disease has nullified the benefit which would have been produced by the favourable weather of the present year. From Spain the accounts are less unfavourable, but it is said the result of this year's vintage will replace only in an insignificant degree the admitted deficiencies of former years. From Madeira it is reported that the cultivation of the vine is for the most part abandoned, and has given place to articles, the cultivation of which, it is hoped, will not expose the inhabitants of that island to such loss and ruin as the failure of the vine has brought upon them.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

LONDON, OCTOBER 10, 1857.

EDUCATIONAL UNION.

Last week we ventured to suggest that a very practicable means of instituting an education in common, for the two branches of the profession, might be found in the admission of solicitors or articled clerks, who should pass a voluntary examination, to attendance on the lectures given in the Inns of Court. We cannot suppose such a proposal would meet with instant approval. Like every other change, it must be canvassed before it can be adopted, and it might probably encounter opposition from different quarters. All objections, however, must ultimately resolve themselves into two—either that it would do too little, or that it would do too much. It may be said that the granting permission to a few students, who happened to enjoy a superior education, would have no practical consequences, or it may be said that its consequences would be undesirable; and then the evil apprehended would be feared in the interest of the higher or lower branch of the profession, according to the point of view of the particular objector.

Undoubtedly, considered in itself, it is a matter of very slight importance that a certain number of young men should receive instruction in the hall of an Inn of Court, instead of in the building of the Incorporated Law Society. But surrounding circumstances can give an importance to even less things than this. The attendance of students from both branches of the profession at the same lecture might mean nothing; but at the present time, and in the present crisis of the relation between the two branches, it would be indicative of a good deal. We are exactly in that position now when small things tell—when, to use a homely saying, a straw will show which way the wind blows. That some change in the relation between the two branches of the profession will come, is quite evident; but no one can say what the change will be. We are not prepared to express an opinion in what exact direction the change ought to be made. In a country like England we cannot discuss the balance of expediency without reference to the traditions, the usages, and even the prejudices of large portions of society. But one thing is evident: if the two branches of the profession are to be placed on a footing of greater equality, what will effect this will be that common opinion places the representatives of the lower, as men of thought, learning, and general education, on a level with the representatives of the higher. What persons who wish to effect a change require is, a safe ascertained instance to which they can confidently refer. Now, it would be an argument of real weight, and, what is exceedingly important, of a weight easily appreciated by every one, if it were in the power of a solicitor to point to the fact, that there were, at any rate, some of his own body who received exactly as wide and as high a legal education as the first men at the bar. Socially, also, it would not fail to raise the status of solicitors if it were known that it was always open to them to be classed with the bar during the period of study. On the other hand, the bar could not fail to reap some advantage from the introduction of their new associates. The students intending to practise as solicitors would generally be men who would afterwards hold a prominent place in their own profession; and if anything could diminish the suspicion and reality of undue nepotism, it would be that the most eminent solicitors, by receiving their higher education in common with cotemporary barristers, should have learned not only where merit lies, but in what merit consists.

It is possible that apprehensions might be entertained lest the institution of such a scheme should introduce a division into the lower branch itself. Solicitors might regret that there should be any arbitrary division drawn between members of their own ranks, and countenance given to the supposition that some portion of the body was higher and better educated than the rest. It is impossible to deny that those who chose to put themselves through the course we have suggested, would show that they were willing to submit to more trouble, and undergo a more solid preparation for their future duties, than those who refused or were not able to do so. And sometimes there might be some sort of injustice done to individuals in this way; and persons who were anxious and able to go through the course might be prevented by circumstances from doing so, and have an inferiority imputed to them which was quite undeserved. This is true, and it is an imperfection which attaches to the plan; but it is an imperfection which also attaches to every scheme of education that is more than rudimentary. Since the Law Society have established the system of giving prizes and certificates of merit, they have introduced an educational division between the foremost and the less successful of their candidates. And the inequality reaches further back than the limits within which educational systems can operate. The students who would feel qualified to seek at a comparatively early age a high legal education, would necessarily be persons who would long have enjoyed many advantages. It would be indispensable that they should have such an acquaintance with either Latin or French as would imply that they had been fortunate enough to be taught well and early. The only reason why a special examination would be advisable before this class of students was admitted to attend the lectures of the Inns of Court, would be, that it would be absurd to expect that even the majority of articled clerks could have received a preliminary education sufficiently good to enable them to feel at home in the lecture-room. The division, therefore, already exists, and must exist. Some students in their early life are more fortunate and more forward than others. It can be no hardship that this should be recognised formally, if the recognition is likely to prove beneficial to the general body, to which the more and the less fortunate alike belong.

A far greater difficulty will be practically found to be presented by the opposition of the bar. So far from thinking the proposal unimportant, we feel sure the leaders of that branch of the profession would consider it a very serious step. They would see that the exclusive prestige of the bar might be sensibly diminished by it. It could only be on public grounds, and from the honest conviction that the claim of solicitors to receive a common instruction was founded in justice, that they would yield. But if the general opinion of the professional and the lay public declared itself in favour of the concession, there is no doubt that, sooner or later, it must be made. And here, we think, an appeal to the history of the Inns of Chancery would be of no little weight. It gives a great handle to the supporters of any application if they can show that they seek substantially to revive an old thing, and not to create a new one. The Benchers of the Inns of Court may be reminded that they preside over institutions which were once accustomed to give instruction to solicitors, and to exercise a headship over affiliated societies where barristers and solicitors lived and studied together. In a foreign country such an argument might not make much impression; but in England appeals to past history and old traditions strike so directly at the sympathies of every man, that they possess a power which exceeds, perhaps, their logical value. If the general body of solicitors were to agree that the plan were desirable, and ask for its adoption at the hands of the bar, they could at once give a colour of right to their proposal by a reference to the historical position of their own Inns; and then the good sense of the bar, personal respect for the applicants, and a deference to the opinion of impartial spectators both at home and abroad, would in time insure their success.

THE NORTHAMPTON BOROUGH COURT.

Most of our readers are aware that the Act which introduced the existing county courts into our judicature, as well as the subsequent Acts which extended their jurisdiction, did not abolish the Courts of Record, which had been long established in numerous boroughs throughout the country. Before the introduction of the present system no doubt these Courts were found to be useful for the recovery of small debts; and, even if they had not been, our Legislature is usually loath to interfere with existing institutions where vested rights are concerned. Under the Common Law Procedure Act, the provisions of that statute may be extended to such courts by an order of the Queen in Council; but, as far as our information extends, very few of them have availed themselves of this privilege; and the old practice, therefore, still continues to govern the procedure of the majority of these antiquated tribunals, which of itself is no inconsiderable disadvantage. But, if we are to place any reliance on the statements contained in a pamphlet recently given to the world by Mr. Becke, a solicitor, residing in Northampton, it would appear that there are other evils connected with these tribunals of a much more formidable character.

The pamphlet contains little else than a correspondence between Mr. Becke on the one hand, and the Recorder and Registrar of the Court on the other, relating to an action, in which judgment was obtained in the Northampton Borough Court of Record, against a client of Mr. Becke. Mr. Becke's charges may be arranged under three heads—1st, that it has been the practice of the Registrar to issue writs to be served out of the jurisdiction of the Court, thereby compelling defendants either to try the question of jurisdiction, or to submit to judgment by default; 2ndly, that the costs, particularly where execution issues, are exorbitant; and, 3rdly, that the Registrar, who is a practising solicitor, frequently acts as the attorney of the plaintiff—which, if true, may well account for that functionary's anxiety to extend the area of his operations. Judging from the facts disclosed in the pamphlet, there is little room to doubt the truth of the two first charges, nor is the third at all satisfactorily met, though in the particular case which has raised this discussion it is distinctly denied.

The circumstances which gave rise to this controversy are shortly these: A few months ago, Mr. Elton, a client of Mr. Becke, received a letter from Mr. Cooke, the Registrar—who, as we have mentioned, is a practising solicitor—requiring him to pay a small debt, together with 3*s.* 6*d.*, the charge for the application. The debt not having been paid, a writ was served by Mr. Cooke's clerk, as is alleged, and apparently without dispute, out of the jurisdiction—unless, indeed, as Mr. Serjeant Clarke, the Recorder, intimates in one of his letters, by immemorial usage, the writs of this Court run in all parts of the kingdom. Judgment having been signed, Mr. Becke applied for a summons to set it aside, and was refused. Thereupon he applied to the Recorder, whose letters, we are bound to say, are characterised by the utmost straightforwardness and anxiety to do justice. In the course of the correspondence which ensued, the Recorder and Mr. Becke are informed that the cause has been removed by the plaintiff's attorney into the Court of Exchequer—a statement which turned out to be incorrect. The upshot of the whole matter, however, was, that the plaintiff abandoned his judgment and all further proceedings in the cause; and, in doing so, he appears to have been better advised than in the earlier stages of his litigation. If we may judge by the result, it seems likely enough that the whole proceeding was illegal, and that, if it had been brought before the Court of Exchequer, it would have ended in nothing but costs and disappointment to the plaintiff. It is the first time that we have heard of an assumption by these Borough Courts of jurisdiction over persons residing in all parts of the kingdom; or that evidence for fifty years of the practice of serving writs outside the municipal boundaries is sufficient to make all her Majesty's subjects in England liable to be summoned to the Borough Court of Northampton, and to have judgment signed against them for non-appearance. In justice to Mr. Serjeant Clarke, we ought to say that he intimates this rather as Mr. Cooke's than his own notion of the law. The learned Serjeant, however, is, naturally enough, disposed to adopt the theory: for it is, doubtless, highly pleasing to the soul of the Recorder, however obnoxious it may be to the reason of the lawyer.

On the question of costs, Mr. Becke certainly proves a very strong case. The debt for which the action was brought was only 1*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.*, and the costs of obtaining judgment — the action being undefended — were 1*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, more than seven times as much as they would have been under the same circumstances in the county court. Other instances of a still more monstrous character are adduced by Mr. Becke. He mentions an undefended case in which the debt was only 5*s.* 6*d.*, and the costs, including the expenses of levy, were 1*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*; and this sum did not include the fees payable on the sale of the property seized. We cannot go through the list with which Mr. Becke has furnished the public in a tabular statement appended to his brochure; but there is one instance which it is impossible to pass over. As the name of the cause and the particulars are given, there will be no difficulty in disproving the statement if it be erroneous; but should it turn out to be true, it is unquestionably high time to set in order, if not to abolish, tribunals of such an outrageously oppressive character as the Northampton Borough Court of Record. In the particular case to which we allude, the debt was alleged to be 8*s.* 10*d.*; and this included 8*s.* 6*d.* for Mr. Cooke's (the Registrar's) costs of the writ. The actual subject-matter of litigation was, therefore, a fourpenny piece; and the costs up to execution on this weighty stake, exclusive of Mr. Cooke's little bill for the writ, were forty shillings. It is possible that some explanation can be offered which may avert the odium that must necessarily be excited by the mere recital of such iniquitous proceedings as these. We cannot but hope there will be; but, should none be forthcoming, we earnestly wish Mr. Becke the same success which attended Jacob Omnium's attack upon the Palace Court, and that next session of Parliament will put an end to all these petty engines of local oppression. From these remarks we desire to except the Courts of Record of Manchester, Liverpool, Bristol, and other large towns, where they are really of use, and in some of which, the new common law procedure having been introduced, business is conducted to the satisfaction of suitors and the public advantage.

With Mr. Becke's remaining charge against the Registrar of the Northampton Court of Record we have no anxiety to concern ourselves, inasmuch as it partakes of a personal character, and it is not fair to judge without hearing the other side. We can only say, that, if the Registrar is in the habit of practising as a solicitor in the court of which he is the principal ministerial officer, it is a most objectionable course of proceeding, and one that must frequently lead to very inconvenient results. If Mr. Cooke were an officer of a county court, his doing so would expose him to a fine under the statute. But it is fair to state that Mr. Cooke denies that he was the legal adviser of the plaintiff in the cause which gave rise to this discussion, and he alleges, that, though the writ was served by his clerk, it was done after office hours, and on the clerk's own account; and further, that Mr. Becke brought a similar charge against him on a former occasion, which he failed to substantiate in an investigation held before the Mayor and Town Clerk.

Apart, however, from all personal considerations, the questions raised by Mr. Becke in his pamphlet are such as demand serious inquiry in the proper quarter, and well deserve the attention of the public.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—Oct. 3.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Evans.)

In re Colonel Waugh.

This was an audit meeting under the bankruptcy of W. Petrie Waugh, a director of the London and Eastern Banking Company, who was made bankrupt as a brickmaker, of Branksea Island, and elsewhere.

Mr. Bell, the official assignee, reported that the assets hitherto realised were of very trifling amount—not more than £1,000, being chiefly the proceeds of the bankrupt's stock in trade at Millbank and at Branksea. As the proofs may amount to upwards of a quarter of a million, there is of course no prospect of any early dividend. A sum of £10,000, the right to which is disputed between the assignees and the London and Eastern Bank, has been deposited in the Bank of England, to abide the result of an arbitration.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Holroyd.)—Oct. 6.

In re W. Hart.

The bankrupt was a wine and spirit dealer, of Charlotte-street, Blackfriars-road. This was the examination meeting. The accounts, prepared by Messrs. Paul and Turner, show a deficiency in April, 1856, of £126. The bankrupt now owes to unsecured creditors £1,575; all the property had been assigned. No trade assignee had been appointed at the meeting held for that purpose, and none was now named.

Mr. Plews appeared for the bankrupt, and Mr. Moon for the petitioning creditor, who was not desirous of taking the assigneeship.

Mr. Plews urged that the bankrupt ought not to suffer on that account. No one ought to present a petition who was not prepared to act as assignee.

Mr. Lee, the official assignee, having stated that the accounts were well kept and vouched, the bankrupt passed.

On Saturday, Oct. 3, at the Judges' Chambers, Mr. Baron Channell delivered judgment on an application for a writ of habeas corpus to bring before the court of Mr. Brent, the deputy coroner for Middlesex, a woman named Bridget Kavanagh, who had been committed to Newgate by the magistrate of Marlborough-street Police-court, on a charge of administering poison to her illegitimate child. Mr. Langham, the deputy-coroner for Westminster, who acted as solicitor for Mr. Brent, cited several cases in support of his application. The learned judge, however, consulted Mr. Corner, of the Crown Office, and learnt from him that of late numerous similar applications had been made to the judges, both at Westminster and at chambers, and in no instance had an order been made; and Mr. Baron Channell, having also cited various authorities, now observed that he had most carefully considered the case, and felt bound to say that he had no power to make the order for the writ.

We sincerely regret having to announce the death of Edward Lovell, Esq., one of the members of the firm of Messrs. Lovell, solicitors, of Wells. The deceased was clerk of the Wells County Court, and chairman of the Wells Burial Board.—Bristol Mirror.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. M. Fortescue, of the Home Circuit, Judge of the Devonshire County Court (Circuit No. 59), in the place of Mr. Praed, deceased.

It is our painful duty to announce the death, by pistol-wound, of Thomas Bentley Locke, Esq., J.P., at his residence, Hessle Mount. Mr. Locke was found dead in his bed-room on Friday morning. Mr. Locke was formerly a partner in the bank of Messrs. Harrison, Watson, & Co., which has just failed, but had, many years ago, ceased to have any pecuniary interest in that firm.—Hull Packet.

It is stated that Sir E. V. Williams, one of the Justices of the Common Pleas, and author of the "Treatise on the Law of Executors and Administrators," will be the Judge of the new Court of Probate.—Bristol Mirror.

Mr. Townsend, M.P., has been restored to his original position in a most unprecedented manner by his constituents. His bankruptcy has been superseded by a subscription of the electors, discharging all the debts and providing sufficient capital for his resumption of business, on even a larger scale. This is carrying out parliamentary reform with a vengeance, and with such an example a return to the good old plan of salaries for M.P.'s may even yet be hoped for.

Mr. J. K. Winterbottom, formerly of Stockport, has been elected town-clerk of Hobart Town, New South Wales, at a salary of £300 per annum. There were fifteen candidates for the office, five of whom were attorneys.

The Queen has appointed George B. Van Buren, Esq., of the Middle Temple, to be Attorney-General for the Island of Grenada; and Samuel Henry Frederic Abbott, Esq., to be Attorney-General for the Island of Tobago.—London Gazette, Oct. 6.

Notice has been given that the Vacation Master of the Court of Common Pleas will attend on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, to transact business at chambers.

The Insolvent Debtors' Court will sit on Saturday, the 17th inst., for bail cases and motions, and shortly afterwards the sittings for the hearing of cases will be resumed.

The following names were "proclaimed" at the Sheriffs' Court, Red Lion-square, on Thursday, Oct. 1:—Sir Robert Jukes Clifton, Bart., at the suit of Leon Solomon Demetri; Prince De Schinas, at the suit of Thomas Pratt; Richard Chapman King, at the suit of Robert C. Dewey; Josiah Bartlett, at the suit of Thomas Gardiner; W. Digby Seymour, at the suit of Edward Grove; J. E. Beale, at the suit of the same; and W. MacOubrey and his wife, at the suit of Richard Richards. The next proclamation day is fixed for the 19th instant.

TESTIMONIAL TO A SOLICITOR.

Mr. Charles E. Lewis, of the firm of Harrison & Lewis, of New Boswell-court, Lincoln's-inn, has recently been presented with a silver salver and a purse of one hundred sovereigns, by several of the officers who were removed by the passing of the Metropoitan Local Management Act, in testimony of their appreciation of his successful exertions to obtain compensation for them for the loss of their offices.

The total amount of fees received for the first nine months of the year 1856 were £193,341, or an average of £64,447 on the quarter. Under the new and reduced scale, the fees for the last quarter of 1856 amounted to £58,472, or a difference of £5,975.

Our correspondent suggests that similar returns to those relating to county courts ought to be annually obtained from the local courts of record of Manchester, Liverpool, Bristol, and other borough towns.

The French Tribunals.

The Court of Assizes of the Carreze has been occupied with a singular case of illegal arrest. The defendant Lallé was mayor of Champagnac-Lanoialle, and for seventeen years lived most happily with his wife, by whom he had not fewer than ten children. At the end of that time a pretty young woman became their servant, and he soon conceived a violent passion for her. An improper connection sprang up between them, and he persisted in maintaining it in spite of the remonstrances of his wife. At length the wife of the defendant became indignant at seeing her place in the household usurped by the stranger, and violent quarrels took place between her and her husband; sometimes even he beat her most savagely, and imprisoned her in her bedroom for days together. On the 28th of last July he again beat and imprisoned her, and she sent a message to two of her cousins—one the mayor, the other a municipal councillor of a neighbouring village—to come and rescue her. They did so, and carried her to Clerigoux. On learning what had been done, Lallé pursued the three fugitives, and he called on the police to assist him in arresting them for a robbery of 6,000f. This assertion was entirely false, and the police at the time suspected it to be so. They therefore demanded from Lallé, in his quality of mayor, not only a written authorisation to make the arrest, but that it should be stamped with the official seal of the Móirie. Lallé gave the authorisation demanded, and the three persons were arrested and kept in close confinement all night and part of the next day, when they were released by the Procureur-Imperial of Tulle, before whom they were carried. Finding the serious nature of his offence, Lallé offered to compromise the matter with his wife's relations for the sum of 1,000f. This was accepted. The matter, however, came to the ears of the authorities, and they instituted a prosecution against Lallé. The Court declared him guilty, and he was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment.

The Imperial Court of Paris has just decided upon an appeal from the Tribunal of Commerce. The facts of the case are interesting. M. Bartholy, the director of the theatre Beaumardráy, accepted, at the beginning of April last, a play in five acts, intitled "Le Naufrage de la Perouse," and, at the request of the authors, he engaged an actor, M. Durand, to perform in it, who was then out of employment. The agreement with this person was, that the engagement should be considered as commencing ten days before the performance of the piece, and that it should continue for a year. There was a further stipulation, that, from the time the piece should cease to be performed, Durand should, to the end of the year, play in any other pieces for which Bartholy should think him fit; and it was stipulated Durand's salary should be 125f. a month. The Censor refused to allow the piece to be performed, and, in consequence, Bartholy thought his agreement with Durand was rescinded, as it had been made solely on the supposition that the piece was to be played. But Durand brought an action against him before the Tribunal of Commerce to compel him to let him play at the theatre, and to give him 2,000f. damages for having refused to do so. The Tribunal of Commerce decided, that, as the engagement had been conditionally made, Durand's claim was unfounded; finding, however, that, although the piece had been refused by the Censorship in April, it was not until the 25th of May that Bartholy informed Durand he should not want his services, although Durand had kept himself at his disposal during the interval, it ordered Bartholy to pay 200f. to Durand as an indemnity for his loss of time. Both parties appealed against this judgment, but the Imperial Court confirmed it.

The Civil Tribunal was engaged on Wednesday last, in determining a rather singular case. It was an action brought by Mdlle. Geraldine, one of the principal actresses of the Théâtre des Folies Nouvelles, who applied to have a seizure of her salary, which had been made by a mercer of St. Petersburg, removed. She represented that some time ago she was singing in St. Petersburg, with great success, and that the Prince de Y——, a wealthy Russian, paid her great attention. He made her many presents, and among them two silk dresses, bought for 112 roubles, or 448f., at the shop of a mercer there, whose name is Chevalier. The Prince, it appeared, had omitted to pay for them, and Chevalier having come to Paris had obtained authorisation to seize her salary; but she maintained that the seizure was illegal, inasmuch as it was the Prince de Y—— who was responsible for the payment of the dresses. Chevalier represented that Mdlle. Geraldine alone had ordered the dresses, and that it was to her that he had supplied them. The Tribunal decided that the actress must pay the debt, and that Chevalier should be authorised to receive two-thirds of her salary until she had done so.

CAP. XLI.—An Act to revive and continue an Act to amend the Law relating to Loan Societies.

It deserves remark, in reference to this Act, that the practice which has lately obtained, in so many instances, of passing Acts of Parliament to be in force only for a temporary period, and, on their being about to expire, again prolonging their existence for another term—appears to be objectionable, inasmuch as in a hurried session there is great danger of their being forgotten; and of inconvenience, and probably litigation, arising in consequence. In the present instance, the Legislature, in the year 1835, sanctioned (by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 23) the formation of institutions "for establishing loan funds for the benefit of the labouring classes." This Act (which was perpetual) was repealed, five years after, by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110; by which "loan societies" were authorised eo nomine for a short period, which was successively continued (and, lastly, by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 110) until 1st October 1856, "and to the end of the then next session." With the last session, therefore, of the last Parliament, loan societies ceased to be recognised by law; and we believe there never was an intention to try the experiment any longer. It was, however, never contemplated that these societies should be left without any provisions under which their affairs should be properly wound up; and a short continuing Act, before Easter, should have been (but was forgotten to be) passed with this object. As it was, between Easter and the 17th August in the present year, these societies were in a most anomalous state; and the Act under discussion seeks to remedy this, by continuing the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110 till August 1, 1858, and (with reference to the hiatus of which we have spoken) by declaring that "this Act shall be deemed and taken to have effect from the expiration of the time limited for the continuance of the said Act hereby continued by the said Act of the 16th & 17th years of her Majesty, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if this Act had actually passed before the expiration of the time so limited." It would not be easy to match this specimen of "parliamentary magic," while the fact of its necessity is an amusing satire upon our system of law making. The other two sections of the Act under discussion respectively provide for the gradual winding up of the affairs of existing societies, even after (if necessary) the 1st August, 1858; and against the circumstance of the expiration of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, on that date, operating so as to revive any part of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 23. But as to this last provision, it may be observed, that, by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, "An Act for shortening the Language used in Acts of Parliament," provision was made, that, where an Act repealing, in whole or in part, any former Act, is itself repealed, such last repeal shall not revive the Act or provisions before repealed, unless words of revival be added. Now, by the 1st section of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, parts of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 23, were repealed, and therefore a repeal of 3 & 4 Vict. would not have revived any such part of 5 & 6 Will. 4. It was considered, we suppose, that the provision of 13 & 14 Vict. would not apply to the expiration of 3 & 4 Vict.; but we own to some doubt whether the difficulty presented itself to the framer of the Act under discussion.

Cap. XLIII.—An Act to improve the Administration of the Law so far as respects Summary Proceedings before Justices of the Peace.

Although the Act under discussion bears the above general title, it appears from its preamble, and an examination of the contents, to be aimed exclusively at the subject of appeals from the decisions of magistrates in point of law; and, as to these (in those cases to which the Act under discussion applies), to dispense with the necessity for first appealing to the court of quarter sessions; and, further, to give to the Exchequer and Common Pleas a share in the jurisdiction as to such cases, hitherto enjoyed exclusively by the Queen's Bench.

With this view, the Act under discussion enacts (by s. 2), that, after the hearing and determination by magistrates of any information or complaint which may be determined in a summary way, either party to the proceeding, if dissatisfied with the determination as being erroneous in point of law, may apply in writing, within three days, to the magistrates to state and sign a case, setting forth the facts and grounds of determination, for the opinion of one of the superior courts of law; and that such party (thereinafter called the "appellant") shall, within three days after receiving such case, transmit the same to the court named in the case, first giving notice in writing to the other party, (thereinafter called the "respondent.")

At the time of making application for the case, and before it is delivered to him, the appellant (by s. 3) must enter into a recognisance to prosecute the appeal without delay; to submit to the judgment of the superior court; and to pay any costs awarded thereby; and must, at the same time, pay the magistrates' clerk his fees for, and in respect of, the case and recognisances, and any other fees to which he is entitled—which fees (except such as are already provided for by law) are scheduled to, and fixed by, the Act under discussion—pending their ultimate ascertainment and regulation as provided for by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 30—viz. by the justices themselves (or by the council, in case of a borough), under the superintendence and allowance of the Home Secretary. After the appellant has entered into such recognisances, and paid such fees, he will then, if in custody, be liberated; upon the recognisance being further conditioned for his appearance to abide the judgment of the magistrates within ten days after the judgment of the superior court shall have been given, unless the determination appealed against be reversed.

There is, however (by s. 4), a provision enabling the magistrates to refuse a case, if, in their judgment, the application is frivolous, on giving the appellant, at his request, a signed certificate of such their refusal; but they cannot so refuse a case, if the application for it be made to them under the direction of the Attorney-General; and (by s. 5) in case of their refusal on the ground of frivolity, the Court of Queen's Bench may be moved for a rule, calling on them to show cause why the case should not be stated—by the result of which rule they must be governed.

Such being the provisions as to the case itself, it is further enacted (by s. 6) that the superior court named in the case shall hear and determine the question; and may reverse, affirm, or amend the determination of the magistrates; or may remit the matter to them with the opinion of the Court thereon; or may make such other order in relation to the matter, and such orders as to costs, as to the Court may seem fit. This last power, however, is subject to the qualification that no magistrate is to be liable to any costs in respect, or by reason, of the appeal.

After the decision of the superior court, the magistrates in relation to whose determination the case has been stated, or others exercising the same jurisdiction, are authorised (by s. 9) to enforce any conviction or order affirmed, amended, or made by the superior court, as the magistrates originally deciding the case might have done, had there been no appeal.

Other sections of the Act under discussion provide for the amendment of the case stated; for the exercise of the authority and jurisdiction of the superior court by a judge of such court at chambers, and in vacation as well as term; and for the issue of rules and orders by the superior courts, from time to time, as occasion shall arise, to regulate the practice and proceedings in reference to appeal cases. It is also declared, that no certiorari or other writ shall be required for the removal of any conviction, order, or other determination in relation to which a case is stated, or for obtaining the judgment or decision of the superior court under the Act; and that the Act is to apply to the determinations of the metropolitan and all other stipendiary magistrates, as well as to other justices of the peace. There is also a provision (s. 13) as to enforcing the recognisances, where the conditions or any of them are broken, in the same manner as provided for by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 45, in reference to the Metropolitan Police Courts. And, finally, the right of appeal to the Quarter Sessions, which at present exists under the provisions of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, ss. 27 et seq., is taken away from, and considered to be abandoned by, any person appealing under the provisions of the Act under discussion. The Act does not extend to Scotland, but it applies to Ireland; and, in order to make it so applicable without further trouble, the inconvenient course has been adopted of making an unaccustomed definition of the "superior courts of law." By s. 1, these for England are declared to be "the Supreme Courts of Law at Westminster;" but the term "superior courts of law" is one which has a well-known and recognised meaning. The term "supreme courts of law" has hitherto not been recognised in England; and will now be so, only in reference to the Act under discussion.

Another blemish in the Act seems to be, that, as far as s. 8, the provisions refer only to an appeal from a "determination;" in s. 9, however, as already mentioned, provisions are made for the enforcement of "any conviction or order;" while, in s. 10, the provision as to certiorari applies to the removal of "any conviction, order, or other determination." Now, either the term "determination" includes a "conviction or order," or it does not. If it does not, then all three should have been mentioned in the previous sections; for, any of the three may, it is presumed, give rise to an appeal. If it does, then there is no occasion for "conviction" or "order" to be mentioned in the 9th or 10th sections.

Another point may be raised. By s. 3 certain fees are mentioned (specified in the schedule), the payment of which is a condition precedent to the case being delivered to the appellant. One of these fees is the sum of two shillings for a certificate of refusal of the case. But by s. 4, the justice is bound to sign and deliver such certificate to the applicant on his request; and nothing is said as to the payment of any fee for it. Is it intended that the applicant must nevertheless pay the justice-clerk before he can claim the certificate? If so, it should have been so stated in express terms; and the rather, because the person making application for a case on a frivolous ground is the very person to object to pay the clerk his fee for the certificate of refusal. Moreover, how is the magistrate to recover against a pauper applicant the expenses of a rule discharged with costs? The recognisance mentioned in s. 3 applies only to the delivery of a case.

Cap. XLVIII.—An Act to make better Provision for the Care and Education of vagrant, destitute, and disorderly Children, and for the Extension of Industrial Schools.

The following is a general account of the provisions of this Act, which is an experiment, for the first time, as to how far these institutions can be made available for the purpose of enforcing the responsibility of parents to provide for the proper care of their children.

The Education Committee of the Privy Council may, upon application from the managers of any school in which industrial training is provided, and in which children are fed as well as taught, direct an examination to be made as to its conditions and regulations; and if, upon the report of the Examiner, the committee are satisfied therewith, they may grant a certificate constituting such school a "certified industrial school" within the meaning of the Act under discussion; and when any child above the age of seven, and under that of fourteen, is taken into custody on a charge of vagrancy under any Act, any two justices may make inquiry into the matter, and may, on conviction of the child, deliver him up to his parent, guardian, or nearest adult relative, on his giving an assurance in writing that he will be responsible for the good behaviour of the child for any period not exceeding twelve months; and, in default of such assurance, may order the child to be sent, for such period as they may think necessary for his education and training, to any certified industrial school, the managers of which shall be willing to receive him. The parent, also, may be ordered by the justices, at their discretion, to pay the managers a weekly sum, not exceeding three shillings, until the child attains the age of fifteen, or is discharged; but it is provided, that, after that age, no person shall be detained in any such school against his consent. And this statute further enacts, that the guardians of any union or parish wherein relief to the poor is administered by a board of guardians, may, if they deem proper (with consent of the Poor-law Board), contract with the managers of any such school for the maintenance and education of any pauper child.

Recent Decisions in Chancery.

WINDING-UP JOINT-STOCK COMPANY—CONTRACT BY DIRECTOR INTERESTED.

Sea Fire Life Insurance v. The Port of London Shipowners' Loan and Insurance Company, Ho. of Lords, Aug. 15, 1857.

The facts of this case, which were not very numerous or complicated, may be shortly stated as follows:—The respondents' company, being in a state of insolvency, assigned its business to the appellants—the latter company having been started by the managing officer of the former, for the purpose of effectuating the transfer. There was no power in the deed of settlement of the Port of London Company enabling the directors to enter into such a contract; but the deed of the other company, having been shaped expressly with a view to the transaction, contained a clause empowering the directors of that company to purchase the business of any insurance company, and generally to enter into such a contract as formed the subject-matter of the present litigation. The deed of assignment was executed by two directors of the Sea Fire Society, but there was no sufficient evidence of its execution by the other company. Both were registered under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, and subsequently were ordered to be wound up, when the official manager of the Port of London Company carried in a claim under the deed of assignment, and a covenant of indemnity therein contained, against the Sea Fire Society. The Master (Tinney) dismissed the claim on the ground that the directors of the Port of London Company had no power to enter into the contract without the sanction of a general meeting of their shareholders, which had not taken place; and because there had been no meeting of the directors specially summoned, as the provisions of the company's deed of settlement required, before entering into such a contract as the disposal and transfer of the company's business. V. C. Stuart affirmed this decision (see 2 W. R. 389); but, upon appeal, the Lords Justices reversed his Honour's decree, and allowed the claim for indemnity, upon the principle, that, there being no proof of fraud in the parties who effected the transfer, and the transferees having entered upon the business, the Court would make every reasonable presumption in favour of the validity of the transaction. The decision of the House of Lords, reversing the decree of the Lords Justices, went upon a point which had not been raised in either of the Courts below; yet the Lord Chancellor carefully abstained from indorsing the doctrine of presumption enunciated by the Lords Justices. The new point raised before the Lords was this: it was necessary, under the provisions of the deed of the Sea Fire Society, that three directors should be present to constitute a board meeting, and to exercise the authority thereby conferred upon the directors generally. Two had signed the deed of assignment, which would be sufficient if three had been present at the board meeting, when the two directors had signed. The evidence supporting the validity of the deed was, that a Mr. Collingridge, who was the promoter and managing director of both companies, was the third director present—a circumstance which passed unnoticed in the Court below, but which decided the case when before the House of Lords. Both companies, as we have already mentioned, were registered under the Joint-Stock Companies Registration Act; they were, therefore, liable to all its provisions; of which all parties dealing with either of them were bound to take notice. By the 29th section, if any director is directly or indirectly interested in any contract proposed to be made by or on behalf of the company, during the time of his directorship, he is precluded from voting as a director on the subject of such contract; and if a director is interested in such a contract, except it be in the ordinary course of business, it is to be submitted to the shareholders as therein provided; and no such contract is to have force until confirmed by a majority of the shareholders. The third director, who was alleged to be present at the execution of the deed of assignment, being a person interested in the contract, and it never having been ratified by a meeting of shareholders, the whole transaction was held by the House of Lords to be void, under the combined operation of the Act and the clause in the deed of settlement. Indeed, the Lord Chancellor seems to have considered that it would have been void even without the clause in the company's deed requiring the presence of three directors at a board meeting—"It appears to me to be perfectly clear," said his Lordship, "that there can be no remedy, either at law or in equity, against a company upon any contract entered into in which a director of the company was a party, and in which he was interested, unless the terms of the 29th section have been complied with . . . Supposing Collingridge was present, he would be a party interested; and, being a party interested, it would not be competent to him, by his presence, to give validity to the transaction; and not only would it not be competent to him to give validity to it, but the transaction would be altogether invalid—a director interested having been a party—until the matter had been brought before a general meeting, and approved." Lord Wensleydale, the only other legal peer present during the argument of the case, fully concurred in this view.

In delivering judgment, Lord Wensleydale insisted, at some length, that the deed of settlement of a company registered under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110 is notice to all the world of the provisions which it contains. As the point has never been definitively settled, though it has very often turned up in argument, and, moreover, as it is one of great importance, we give his Lordship's own words:—"The Legislature," he says, "devised the plan of incorporating these (joint-stock) companies in a manner unknown to the common law, with special powers of management and liabilities; providing at the same time that all the world should have notice who were the persons authorised to bind all the shareholders, by requiring the partnership-deed to be registered, certified by the directors, and accessible to all; and besides, including some clauses as to the managers in the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, ss. 7, &c. All persons, therefore, must take notice of the deed and of the provisions of the Act. If they do not choose to acquaint themselves with the powers of the directors, it is their own fault; and if they give credit to any unauthorised persons, they must be contented to look to them only, and not to the company at large. The stipulations of the deed, which restrict and regulate their authority, oblige those who deal with the company; and the directors can make no contract so as to bind the whole body of shareholders, for whose protection the rules are made, unless they are strictly complied with." It is a curious circumstance, that the same question—viz. whether a company's deed of settlement is notice of all its provisions to parties contracting with the company—was very largely discussed in a case which also arose under the winding up of the Sea Fire Company (Greenwood's case, 2 W. R. 210; S. C. on appeal, Id. 322). The short question there was—whether, under the provisions of this Act, shareholders in a company could limit their liability to creditors by stipulations in the deed of settlement. V. C. Stuart decided in the affirmative, substantially upon the grounds stated by Lord Wensleydale. "The deed," said his Honour, "was registered under the Act of Parliament in order that every person dealing with the company should have the means of becoming acquainted with these and the other stipulations which it contained; and, having the means of acquiring the knowledge of such important matters, the law of notice, founded in this respect on a plain principle of justice, requires that they should not be allowed, on the footing of ignorance of these stipulations, to make the shareholders' separate property liable to the demands from which it was agreed they should be exempt. . . . No judge could properly make an order extending the liability without having regard to the stipulations of the registered deed and the terms of the contract under which the creditor claimed." The principle of the Vice-Chancellor's judgment, and also of Lord Wensleydale's observations, in the present case, is the same —viz. that partnership is only a species of agency; that the directors of a joint-stock company are special agents; and that persons dealing with them had express notice of the powers and authorities of the directors, which were defined by the statute and the deed of settlement. Greenwood's case, however, having been carried to the full Court of Appeal, the Vice-Chancellor's decision was reversed; and though it was not necessary to reverse it upon the grounds stated above, the Lord Chancellor and L. J. Turner distinctly repudiated the doctrine on which his Honour founded his judgment. The Lord Chancellor did not proceed upon any distinction between joint-stock companies and ordinary partnerships; but was of opinion that the Vice-Chancellor's interpretation of the law militated against the acknowledged principles of the general law of partnership, as understood in this country; in short, that ordinary partners cannot restrict their liability to persons dealing with them, by a notice that none of the partners will be liable beyond a certain amount (see 2 W. R. 323). It is fairly questionable, however, upon the authorities, whether his Lordship has not here overstated their effect. Gallway v. Smithson (10 East, 264), and other cases, might be referred to as express authorities that a partner may restrict his liability by notice; and, indeed, in all such cases, the main difficulty has been, not to substantiate this principle, but to prove the fact of notice. Where that can be easily proved in reference to all the dealings of the partnership, as in the case of insurance societies, in which every contract for insurance is in writing, the practice of inserting a clause restricting the liability of the company to the amount of its assets is quite common, and its legality has never been questioned. We admit, however, that such cases are very different from those in which the knowledge of the contracting parties as to the provisions of deeds of settlement often is merely implied; though the Lord Chancellor did not appear to consider the distinction important for the purpose of the argument. If partnership is not a modification of agency, and if the power of a partner to bind his copartner is not merely an implication arising out of such assumed agency, probably it would be difficult to show how the copartner could restrict his liability by any notice whatever —no matter how direct and express; but if the contrary of these propositions be good law, the difficulty vanishes, and the presumption of agency may be always rebutted. If one may assume anything in favour of directors of joint-stock companies, it may be fair to assume that generally they propose to engage only in contracts within their power on behalf of their company; but the question remains, whether the other contracting parties, being aware that they may immediately inform themselves accurately of the powers and authorities of the directors to bind the company, are not to be affected with notice of all the information which they might have so acquired? In The Caledonian, &c., Railway Company v. The Helensburgh Harbour Trustees (4 W. R. 671) the Lord Chancellor, speaking of companies incorporated by Act of Parliament, laid down the rule that the Act of Parliament which incorporates such companies is the charter which prescribes their duties and declares their rights; and that all persons becoming shareholders are entitled to all the benefits held out by the Act, and liable to no obligations beyond those which are there indicated. There appears to be no reason why the rule thus applied to corporations created by Parliament, should not be applicable to the quasi corporations constituted under the Joint-Stock Companies Registration Act. Every one knows, that, as a matter of practice, few persons dealing with joint-stock companies trouble themselves with a preliminary perusal of the Act which regulates all such bodies, or of the deed of settlement of the particular company; and further, that, even if they did, it would not always be easy to discover what were the rights and liabilities of the shareholders, or the powers of the directors to bind them; but the same remark applies to companies incorporated by Act of Parliament, and it is not the policy of our law in any case to put persons, who purposely or negligently abstain from inquiry, in a better position than those who have taken care to inform themselves. Moreover, if directors are the special agents of shareholders, and parties proposing to deal with them may always inform themselves of the extent of the agents' authority, it seems reasonable that they should do so, or refrain from inquiry at their own risk. If the nature and extent of the authority is ambiguous or uncertain, its natural effect would be to deter persons from dealing, and thus to make it the interest of shareholders to frame their deeds in an intelligible manner.

Lord Wensleydale's dicta in the present case will no doubt have the effect of reviving the question which was considered to be settled in the negative by Greenwood's case—viz. whether a joint-stock company's deed of settlement is notice of all its provisions to persons dealing with the company; and we cannot help thinking—notwithstanding the disposition of the Courts in recent times to limit the doctrine of constructive notice—that ultimately the affirmation of the proposition will be held to be good law.

PRACTICE—EXCEPTIONS—38TH ORDER OF AUGUST, 1841.

Wright v. Chard, 5 W. R. 857.

In a notice of the case of Bates v. Christ's College (ante, p. 290) we collected the authorities on the interpretation of the 38th Order of August, 1841, by which defendants are allowed to decline answering a particular interrogatory, or part of an interrogatory, though they may have answered the rest of the bill. The result of the cases was, that a defendant could avail himself of this privilege of declining to answer only where the particular interrogatory, as distinguished from the bill generally, was demurrable; and that in cases where either the whole bill was demurrable, or where any section of the relief prayed was open to a demurrer, the defendant, if he answered at all, must answer fully, and could not avail himself of the indulgence granted by the Order in question. This last point was so held by the Lords Justices, affirming V. C. Stuart, though not without hesitation on the part of L. J. Turner. The case of Wright v. Chard, before V. C. Kindersley, affords another illustration of the same doctrine. There the plaintiff claimed certain property which had been, as he alleged, improperly retained by certain trustees for the defendant, Emily Vernon, a married woman, and paid over to her and her husband. As part of the relief prayed, it was asked that the married woman's separate estate should be made answerable. One of the interrogatories was as to the particulars of Mrs. Vernon's separate estate, and she declined to answer, on the alleged ground of immateriality. There is no doubt, that, if the inquiry had been immaterial, the refusal to answer would have been justified by the 38th Order of August, 1841; but the Vice-Chancellor held, that, relief being asked against the separate estate, it followed, that, if there was any right against that property, there was a right to the discovery. The interrogatory was, therefore, not irrelevant. At the same time, his Honour was of opinion that the allegations of the bill were insufficient to support the relief prayed, or, at least, so much of it as related to the separate estate. The bill, therefore, would have been open to a general or partial demurrer. Nevertheless, the defendant, not having demurred, was not permitted to refuse an answer to part of the interrogatories, the Vice-Chancellor very strongly expressing the same view of the Order which had been taken by L. J. Knight Bruce and V. C. Stuart, in the case of Bates v. Christ's College.

Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association.

The Annual Provincial Meeting of members of this Association was commenced on Thursday, at noon, in the Mayor's parlour, Town Hall, Manchester. Mr. W. S. Cookson, of London, Chairman of the Association, presided; and there was a numerous attendance, amongst the members present being, Messrs. W. Shaen, Secretary, C. J. Manning, Assistant Secretary, and W. H. Partington (Northern Circuit), Honorary Secretary of the Association; Messrs. J. Anderton, J. Clabon, E. Benham, and R. A. Parker, London; Stephen Heelis, Esq., Mayor of Salford; W. G. Moss, Esq., Mayor of Hull; Messrs. James Crossley, President, James Street, Treasurer, and F. Marriott, Honorary Secretary, of the Manchester Law Association; Mr. T. Hodgson, President, York Society; Mr. A. Cox, President, and Mr. J. Burrop, Honorary Secretary, Gloucestershire Society; Mr. C. G. Heaven, President, Bristol Society; Mr. James Radford, President, Newcastle-on-Tyne Society, and Mr. John Clayton, Town Clerk of Newcastle; Messrs. John Bagshawe, R. Worthington, John Barlow, Samuel Fletcher, T. P. Bunting, Joseph Janion, J. F. Beever, C. Gibson (Town Clerk of Salford), and Thomas Baker, Manchester; Messrs. R. A. Payne, William Radcliffe, — Hague, and Joseph Russell, Liverpool; H. S. Wasbrough, Bristol; R. R. Dees and James Radcliffe, Newcastle-on-Tyne; W. Beamont, Warrington; J. H. Shaw and R. Barr, Leeds; F. Baker, Derby; W. S. Allen and B. Chesshire, Birmingham; T. Coombs, Dorchester; T. L. Rushton and J. Watkins, Bolton; T. Nicks, Warwick, &c. There were also present some gentlemen connected with the profession, but who are not members of the Association, a general invitation to such having been given by advertisement. After Mr. W. Shaen, Secretary, had read the circular convening the meeting, and had stated the proposed order of the proceedings,

The Chairman said, he was most anxious to express the obligation under which he thought that they must all feel for the kind attention they had received from the Mayor and Corporation, and from the Manchester Law Society. To the Corporation they were indebted for so commodious and convenient a place of meeting, and for other things; while to the Society they owed the very many conveniences and arrangements which all must appreciate. Everything seemed to have been done to secure their comfort during the time they were to stay in Manchester. The Chairman then proceeded to read his opening address; of which, from its nature, we can only give the briefest outline. He described the origin of the Law Institution, and its incorporation as the Incorporated Law Society; bringing with it onerous duties for the general benefit of the profession, but which still led to its coming to be regarded as practically a Metropolitan Association, and as not having accomplished all that was desired, and might have reasonably been expected from it. Until this year, the Council had been composed of London solicitors; but now, Mr. John Hope Shaw, of Leeds, had been elected in the place of Mr. Bryan Holme. Still the Council had never manifested any preference for town over country interests; and it was impossible to look back, and dispassionately review what had been done, without feeling that the Incorporated Society had rendered excellent service to the profession. The Chairman next traced the growth of the Metropolitan and Provincial Association, out of the suggestion for a union of Provincial Societies, which was first made at the meeting of the Yorkshire Law Society, in March, 1844. The promoters of the amalgamation had not only never seen cause to regret what they did, but they had become more and more convinced that the principle was a sound, good, and beneficial one. The Law Times published bodings of the failure of the Association; but the first Report, published in January, 1848, showed that the Editor did not comprehend the Catholic principle on which it was founded. That the profession and the public had derived real and substantial advantages during the ten years that had since elapsed, could not be doubted. The Managing Committee had always been composed of members selected from leading London and country solicitors, the latter largely predominating in number, as they did in regard to the actual number of members of the Association; and the annual aggregate meetings, springing from a very happy idea, had resulted in more friendly communication between members of the profession, and mutual good to themselves and to the public. He was strongly convinced, as a result of the discussions that had taken place, that there was but one common interest in the improvements that had been advocated; that there was nothing further from the minds of any of the members than the notion that the London and the country solicitors were divided into classes, entertaining different views as to their interests; that there was nothing like jealousy between them; that the Committee had never manifested any leaning towards town interests, as opposed to country interests; and that the Committee possessed, as they deserved to do, the entire confidence of the Association. The Chairman then gave a narrative (including many extracts from articles in the Law Times, letters to the Editor from the Secretary of the Association, extracts from official documents, &c.) of what had occurred between the Editor and the Society since the meeting in Liverpool, last year, at the conclusion of which it was resolved to take steps to form a company for the establishment of a paper to represent the views and interests of solicitors as a body. He pointed out that the Editor had chosen, incorrectly, to designate as "the seven agencies" or "agency houses" those gentlemen who, residing in London, had signed certain necessary documents as a matter of convenience; and that the Editor in the same way treated those gentlemen as being the promoters of the paper, although he must have known that such was not the case, and that some leading provincial solicitors were connected with the direction. The Chairman denied, totally, that there was, or ever had been, any intention of setting up a paper to serve the purposes of the "agency houses;" and he appealed to the correspondence, published and otherwise, in proof of the correctness of his statement, that, after giving a challenge publicly, which was as publicly accepted, the Editor had, up to the present time, avoided the investigation which he himself suggested. The Managing Committee (the Chairman said) had been and were ready to prove the fallacy of all the charges made against them and the Society by the Editor of the Law Times.

Mr. J. H. Shaw said, that, having been referred to by name in the Law Times, and by the chairman in his address, he felt bound to state, that—having been unfortunately prevented from taking an active share in the deliberations and labours of the Committee—he cordially approved of all the Committee had done (Applause). If there was any blame attaching, he claimed his full share; but of any merit he felt that none could be attributed to him. The Committee had been under the necessity, disagreeable and even somewhat humiliating though it was, of vindicating themselves from the charges made; and all who had heard, or might read, the Chairman's address, must, he (Mr. Shaw) thought, conclude that a complete refutation had been given to those charges. The Editor of the Law Times, some years ago, gave him (Mr. Shaw) the wholly unmerited credit of being the founder of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association; in fact, no one individual could have formed such an Association; and he only laboured towards it, amongst many other gentlemen in various parts of the country. But he certainly could claim a larger share of the paternity of the society than belonged to the Editor of the Law Times—(laughter)—who seemed this year to have discovered that to him belonged the honour of originating the Society; for he (Mr. Shaw) had yet to learn that the Editor assisted in any way. He (Mr. Shaw) had no sympathy with the idea that the Metropolitan and Provincial Association ought now to merge in the Incorporated Society. He was happy to know that the two had co-operated for good; but each had its appropriate sphere of action; and it was for the interest of the whole profession that the two should be kept, not only separate, but in a high state of efficiency. He held, and should continue to hold, as the worst enemy of the profession, any man who—whatever his motives—attempted to sow jealousies between the Metropolitan and the Provincial Associations (Applause). The Editor of the Law Times said that there was an attempt made to destroy that paper. He (Mr. Shaw) had yet to learn that any man had a right to complain of others entering into competition in a field that by law and practice was equally open to all (Hear, hear). He had a strong feeling, and so had many others, that there should be a journal under the special management of members of their own body; not under any, but perfectly independent of every, law association or society—(hear, hear)—and which would comment freely, for censure or for commendation, upon the conduct of all such associations (Hear, hear). Did they, therefore, want to destroy the Law Times? That depended entirely upon the course which that paper might take. If the Editor sought to destroy the Metropolitan and Provincial Association—to set the metropolis and the country against each other—then there would be an interest in destroying the Law Times—only that he hoped the Editor would by such a course himself effectually destroy the paper ("Hear, hear," and laughter). But if the Editor would strive to support the interests of the profession, then, although he (Mr. Shaw) was not an admirer of the paper, he should cordially rejoice in its prosperity.

Mr. E. W. Field (London) strongly condemned the course adopted by the Law Times. It was high time (he said) that they should disown a journal which habitually held out to the public such motives as it attributed to the profession, as being those that actuated, or could actuate, any body of honourable men (Applause).

Mr. H. Richardson (Leeds) thought that, in justice, the matter could not be left where it stood. He should, therefore, move—

That the attacks made by the Law Times upon the Council of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association have not, in any degree, weakened the confidence of the members of the Association; but that that confidence still continues undiminished and in full force.

(Applause).

Mr. Payne (Liverpool) seconded the motion; and, being put by Mr. Richardson, it was agreed to unanimously, and with loud applause.

The Chairman acknowledged the vote.

Mr. Shaen said, that, though some gentlemen seemed to think that the Committee might have avoided this subject, he was convinced of the necessity of referring to it, by his recent visit to eight or ten large towns between London and Manchester, where he found much misapprehension existing.

Mr. James Anderton (London) thought that a great deal too much had been made of the Law Times and its attacks ("Hear, hear," and laughter). He would have treated it and them with silent contempt. The character of the members of the Council was too well known for the Editor of the Law Times, or any one else, to make any impression against them amongst the profession ("Hear, hear," and loud applause).

Mr. George Thorley said, he differed from Mr. Anderton; for even in Manchester much misapprehension existed, especially amongst the younger members of the profession. He knew that the Manchester Society had always received the most cordial co-operation from their metropolitan brethren. Upon the Registration Bill—which, if ever there was such a thing, might be said to be peculiarly interesting to London—the Chairman and others gave most valuable assistance while the matter was before the House of Lords. With regard to the Chancery of Lancashire, they had been told here, "You will find that Loudon men will not like it." But Mr. Field, who presided at a meeting on the subject held in London, said, in the most manly and straightforward manner, "Tell your friends in Lancashire we will to the utmost aid them. They have a full right to have their own Court, and to make the best of it they can. I only ask, that you will, in return, aid us in the reforms we think should be made in the Courts of Chancery." Such had always been their experience of the Manchester Society, in their dealings with their brethren in the metropolis.—After a little further conversation,

The Chairman said, that the next business would be to decide as to the place of meeting next year. There was an invitation from Newcastle-on-Tyne, and another from Bristol.

Mr. C. G. Heaven, Vice-President of the Bristol Society (who attended with the Secretary), presented the invitation from that city, and moved that it be accepted; the motion being seconded by Mr. Anderton.

Mr. Lambert, President of the Newcastle and Gateshead Society, offered the invitation from Newcastle, and moved that it be accepted; and Mr. Clayton (a member of the Society just named) seconded the motion.

Mr. W. Morgan (Birmingham) supported Bristol; and

The Chairman said, that, after some consideration, the Managing Committee wished to have the opinion of the meeting upon the question. Their leaning was towards Bristol for next year; mainly for the reason that they wished to visit, and to receive support from all parts of the country, and hitherto their meetings had been north of London.

In reply to Mr. Moss (the Mayor of Hull), Mr. Shaen said, he believed that the number of members of the Society must be considered as being less than 900; and

Mr. Moss then contended, that, there being about 10,000 professional men in the country, it was wise to notice the misrepresentations with regard to the Association, and to labour to extend the sphere of its action. He should like to see the motion for meeting in Bristol adopted; and the best welcome their friends could offer the Association there would be a large number of members gathered from the city and neighbourhood (Applause).

The Chairman hoped that their Newcastle friends would renew their invitation next year—(hear, hear)—if Bristol should be chosen now.

Mr. Clayton said, he and his friends felt, that, after what had passed, it would be advisable not to divide the meeting; but at once to concede to Bristol the disagreeable advantage of immediate comparison with Manchester (Loud laughter). The motion in favour of meeting at Bristol next year was unanimously adopted.

Messrs. Anderton, Shaw, and Banner, who were last year appointed to draw up rules, &c., for an institution for the relief of decayed attorneys, solicitors, and proctors, and their widows, presented their Report; Mr. Banner stating that they had confined their attention to rules and regulations for the general purposes of the institution, leaving minutiæ to be settled by the directors to be hereafter appointed. Mr. Banner read the rules; and upon the motion of Stephen Heelis, Esq., Mayor of Salford, seconded by Mr. Anderton, it was ordered that the Report be received, and that the consideration of the same be adjourned.

In reply to a question, the Chairman said that the precise time for the next meeting would be settled by the Committee, after conferring with the Bristol Society.

Mr. James Crossley (President of the Manchester Law Association) moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Cookson for his able address, and for presiding. He (Mr. Crossley) approved of placing upon record a satisfactory refutation of the charges that had been alluded to (Hear, hear). As to their metropolitan brethren, he never met an individual who had worked with them, or who had been connected with them in the Metropolitan and Provincial Association, who had any other than the highest confidence in their honour and their freedom from all selfish and exclusive views (Hear, hear).

Mr. Taylor (St. Helens) seconded the motion; which was carried, and was briefly acknowledged by Mr. Cookson.

This concluded the business of the first meeting, at a quarter-past two; and the members of the Association proceeded to the Queen's Hotel to partake of luncheon with the Manchester Law Society. Afterwards most of the visitors proceeded to the Art Treasures Exhibition; and, in the evening, many of them dined by invitation with Sir James Watts, the Mayor, at Abney Hall.—The Association meets again at ten o'clock this (Friday) morning, at the Town Hall, for the reading and discussing of papers, and for other business. In the evening, the non-resident members are invited to be the guests of the Manchester Law Association, at the annual dinner, to be given at the Albion Hotel.

VIII. Malpractice Cases and Encroachments on Professional Privileges.

During the last twelve months the Council have had under their consideration several complaints of malpractice by attorneys and solicitors, the circumstances of which they investigated. As to some of them, it did not appear that they were proper subjects for proceedings, or the evidence in support of the complaint was deemed insufficient. In five cases the complaints were brought before the court, and in four of them the attorneys were struck off the rolls; the fifth is pending before the Master, and others remain for further investigation.

In the case of attorneys practising without certificates, the prosecution for penalties must be conducted by the solicitor of Inland Revenue; but the Council, on being furnished with a statement of the evidence, usually authorise the secretary to bring the complaint before the commissioners.

The Poor-law Board having requested the opinions of the Council on a bill of costs and charges for the removal of a pauper, made by a clerk to the magistrates, not an attorney, the Council investigated the matter, and pointed out the items which it appeared to them could be charged only by an attorney. It is trusted that appointments to offices which require a considerable amount of legal knowledge and experience, should be confined to members of the profession who are regularly qualified and admitted on the rolls of the superior courts, and which courts are empowered to correct any irregularity, misconduct, or extortion.

A complaint was brought to the notice of the Council regarding the conduct of a member of the bar, who, on behalf of a large landed proprietor, was in the habit of preparing numerous leases, and having them ingrossed and executed, for a specific charge paid by the tenants. It appeared on investigation, that the fees paid by the lessees for those leases (with the exception of the fees paid to the surveyor for the plans) were received for the use of the barrister; and the Council were of opinion that he was not justified in preparing, ingrossing, and obtaining the execution of leases, for pecuniary remuneration; and that, in pursuing the course of which complaint had been made to the society, he had infringed upon the privileges of certificated conveyancers and solicitors.

On the remonstrance of the Council against this practice, the gentleman complained of explained the circumstances in which it originated, and by which he sought to justify it; but he at once acquiesced in the opinion expressed by the Council, and very handsomely discontinued the practice.

IX. Registration of Attorneys, Re-admission, and Renewal of Certificates.

The applications for renewal of certificates have been numerous in each term. The affidavits in support thereof have been considered, and in several instances, where the parties had ceased to practise for several years, an examination has been suggested to the judges, prior to the renewal of their certificates, and orders have almost always been accordingly made for that purpose.

In one of the cases, an attorney who had been suspended from practice for two years, at the instance of the Society, was allowed to renew his certificate on the production of satisfactory testimonials of subsequent good conduct. In another, where the attorney had been struck off the roll for an alleged improper interference in a criminal prosecution, but had for several years subsequently established an unexceptionable character, and was offered a partnership in a respectable firm of solicitors, the Council felt justified in merely seeing that the facts were brought before the Court, and making no opposition to the application for re-admission.

Applications have also been considered for the renewal of certificates without the usual notice, upon the parties entering into partnership or other urgent occasions; and these cases have been strictly investigated, and testimonials required of the respectability of the applicants.

In other instances where the applicants had practised extensively for several years in defiance of the stamp laws, it was considered that the renewal of the certificates should be opposed, and that it was not sufficient to pay the arrears, without a substantial fine; and this has accordingly been done.

In one of this class of cases, the facts relating to which were communicated by one of the Provincial Law Societies, an uncertificated attorney had practised in the name of another attorney who had left the country. By the 22nd section of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, attorneys are prohibited from permitting their names to be used upon the account or for the profit of an unqualified person. The agreement between the persons complained of showed that the uncertificated attorney was really participating in the profits of the business conducted in the other's name. In the absence, however, of any proof of malpractice in the name of the attorney in question, the judge granted an order upon payment of the arrears of duty.

In some instances applications have been made by members of the bar, who formerly practised as attorneys, to be re-admitted on the roll; and these gentlemen having been disbarred, and the affidavits being deemed satisfactory, no opposition has been made to their re-admission.

X. The Affairs of the Society.

The additional Buildings on the South Side of the Hall.—The designs for these buildings having been placed in the Hall last year for the inspection of the members, some few improvements have been suggested, and the works are now in a forward state; and it is expected that the new strong rooms in the basement, the offices on the ground floor, and the additional arbitration rooms, will be available for the purposes of business, if not finally completed, by Michaelmas Term next. The present offices of the secretary and clerks, which are intended for the general use of the members as conference or waiting rooms, will also be available for reading the newspapers on the lecture evenings, when the hall is occupied.

Sale of Vacant Ground.—As reported last year, the remaining old houses belonging to the Society on the south side of the new building were in a dilapidated state, and part of them were last autumn condemned as dangerous by the Commissioners, and necessarily pulled down. The ground being vacant, and the new buildings now in progress being evidently sufficient for the purposes of the Society, the Council proposed to carry into effect the resolution of the special general meeting at the time of the purchase of the property in 1847, by which they were authorised to dispose of so much of the land as should not be required; and accordingly they entered into a contract with the Directors of the Law Fire Insurance Society to sell the remaining ground for the sum of £6,700. This amount largely exceeds the original purchase money of that portion of the property; while the Society has been burdened with considerable expense for nine years in the repairs of the houses, and the rents received have been very moderate. The purchase was completed on the 4th inst., and the amount paid over to the bankers of the Society.

The accounts of the Society for the past year have been audited as usual, and placed for inspection in the Secretary's Office. The receipts for the year 1856, for entrance fees and subscriptions of members, subscriptions to the lectures and library, examination and registration fees, and rents of property, amounted to 6,662*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.*; and the payments for interest on loans, repairs, rates, taxes, salaries, law and other expenses, to 5,348*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.* The surplus income over expenditure amounted therefore to 1,314*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, out of which part of the loan account was reduced, and in the present year payments have been made to the contractors for the new building.

The library is now increased to nearly 13,000 volumes, including a large number of old, and some scarce works, which have been contributed by Messrs. Farrer & Co., Messrs. Few & Co., and the Law Society Club.

The Council would renew their suggestion, that the members of the Society should look over their collections of old works, and forward a list of such as they can conveniently spare, in order that a selection may be made to supply the defects in the Society's collection, where they will be arranged, and of easy access in case they are ever required. The new wing of the library will afford space for some years to come. The Council are glad to report that they have received from the Commissioners of Patents several volumes of their publications; and so soon as arrangements can be made, a complete collection of several hundred volumes will be deposited for reference in the Society's Library. The Society has also been favoured by the authors with donations of several valuable works. Several solicitors engaged in local, personal, and private Acts have presented copies, and others are invited to assist from time to time in completing this department of the Library.

The Lectures delivered in the hall since the last annual meeting have been as follow:—A second course on Equity and Bankruptcy, by Mr. Humphry; a second course on Common Law and Criminal Law, by Mr. Kerr; and a first course on Conveyancing by Mr. Peachey. These lectures have been attended by many members of the Society and by 192 articled clerks, being twenty more than the previous year.

Vacancies in the Council.—According to the bye-laws, ten members of the Council will go out of office at the present meeting, but are eligible for re-election; and a vacancy has occurred by the lamented decease of an old and honoured member, Mr. Bryan Holme, who was the first promoter of the Society in the year 1823, and for many years was a constant attendant at the meetings of the Council; he was also a liberal contributor to the Library, particularly in works of county history and topography.

The number of members elected since the last annual meeting has been 78, and the Council have to regret the death of 18, and the retirement of 11 members. The Society now consists of 1,600 members, of whom 1,273 are town, and 327 country members. The Council are of opinion that it will be advantageous that a limited number of members of the Society, resident and practising in the country, should be members of the Council.

Correspondence.

EDINBURGH.—(From our own Correspondent.)

There is little opportunity of discussing legal subjects in Edinburgh during the long vacation; for these reasons, that only a small proportion of the different branches of the profession is to be found in town, and that there is no common place of meeting for even this proportion such as the Parliament House furnishes during session. Accordingly little is heard of the bunch of Scotch Acts which generally become law at the end of each session of Parliament, until the Court meets in November.

Occasionally, however, an Act appears which excites more than common interest. Such is the Court of Session Act, which passed on the 25th of August, and is intended to provide a remedy for the inconvenience which has arisen from the accumulation of a large proportion of business before one of the divisions of the Court. Two ways of meeting the evil were suggested—either extending the sittings of the first division of the Court, or distributing the business equally. The Lord Advocate has chosen the second alternative, or at least a modification of it. The Lord President of the Court is, by the Act, invested with a complete control over the whole causes depending before the Court, subject only to this proviso—that the causes last inrolled shall be first transferred, unless some cause be shown why any particular cause should not. As this is a power the exercise of which may not be agreeable, it is probable that his Lordship will lay down rules for the exercise of his discretion, which will reduce the process of adjustment under the Act to a system of exact distribution, which, in our opinion, is the only just and rational system. At the same time, it must be admitted, that the Act is viewed with great disfavour by a large majority of solicitors, who look upon the privilege of selecting a particular judge or court as a right, or at all events as a great boon, which ought to be preserved to the public. As might have been expected, therefore, there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction expressed in some quarters; but as the Lord Advocate is supported by the whole bar, and by a respectable minority of solicitors, such expressions of dissatisfaction are not likely, although strongly put, to make much permanent impression, and will probably soon die away.

A much more substantial ground of complaint, however, and one which will not be allowed to drop, is founded on that provision of the Act which extends the long vacation. Formerly, the Lords Ordinary met on the 1st, and the two divisions of the Court met on the 12th of November. Now, under the new Act, the whole Court meets on the 12th of November; so that, from the 20th of July till the 12th of November there is no session of the Supreme Court. It is quite true that it was found that little practical benefit arose from the meeting of the Lords Ordinary before the rest of the Court; but the remedy was, not to abolish these extra sittings, but to provide for the whole Court meeting on the 1st of Nov. It has always been a cause of discontent that there should be so long an interruption to business as is caused by the long vacation; but, at the same time, there has always been a proper feeling of consideration for the judges, and a strong desire to break in as little as possible upon the complete relaxation which the long vacation affords; and if the present Act had accompanied the readjustment of the sittings of the Court with any provisions for the conduct of the mere formal business by the clerks, little objection would have been made. As it is, an opposition has been excited, which extends beyond the profession, and which may be found difficult to regulate; for the general public cannot be expected to understand the advantage to be obtained from a judge bringing his mind fresh and vigorous from long rest to the administration of justice. If the Lord Advocate had only given previous notice of his intention to make any such change, he would have been furnished with suggestions for improvements to accompany it, which would have rendered the change, if not acceptable, at least much more unobjectionable, by providing, at the same time, for real and substantial grievances, for which he will be compelled, under less favourable circumstances, to find a remedy.

THE SUMMARY PROCEDURE ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT, 1855.

To the Editor of THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL & REPORTER.

SIR,—Allow me to call the attention of the profession to the indorsement on the writ of summons provided to be made by this Act, and the rule of Court thereunder.

There is no provision made for interest from the date of the writ until payment, nor does the form of indorsement give the plaintiff liberty to sign judgment for the interest accrued due from the date of the writ until judgment.

The 1st section of the Act makes it lawful for the plaintiff to sign judgment for any sum not exceeding the sum indorsed on the writ, "together with interest at the rate specified (if any) to the date of the judgment;" but there is no blank left in the form of indorsement for the insertion of these words.

By the present form of indorsement, the interest due at the date of the writ is only claimed, and the plaintiff could not claim more interest if the defendant paid within four days from the service of the writ.

It seems, therefore, that, by the present form of indorsement on the writ of summons, the plaintiff loses his interest from the date of the writ until judgment, which works injuriously to the plaintiff.—I am, Sir, yours obediently,

Oct. 5, 1857. AN ATTORNEY.

JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—COLLUSION.

To the Editor of THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL & REPORTER.

SIR,—Thinking that suggestions are at all times acceptable, I take this opportunity of recording one in your Journal for adoption at the right time. It frequently occurs, that two creditors are suing a debtor at the same time, or one shortly before the other, but one of them obtains judgment first, through the debtor's desire, and the other has to go through the formula of a trial; and, in all probability, the first judgment creditor is a blind for preventing the realisation of the other. Whether it is an unfounded or a righteous claim is not for us to inquire after judgment; but my suggestion, is that a judgment creditor, where he obtains by default, should make an affidavit that his debt is a just one before judgment is signed, in order to prevent collusion between the debtor and an assumed creditor, or, at any rate, the appearance of it.—Yours respectfully, JOHN NURSE CHADWICK.

Review.

Collation of the Provisions of Foreign Codes relating to Marriage and Divorce. By JOHN FRASER MACQUEEN, of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law. 1857.

In August of last year, Mr. Macqueen, the Honorary Secretary to the Divorce Commission, went to Paris, in order to collect information as to the provisions of the Code Civil of France, of other continental codes, and of the Code of Louisiana, on the subject of marriage and divorce. The results of his inquiries were collected, early this year, in the form of a parliamentary Blue Book, for the guidance of the Legislature during the debates on the Divorce Bill. Although the primary object of this Blue Book has thus been already accomplished, the interest and importance which attach to its contents are not at an end. It is both entertaining and instructive to compare the actual provisions of the new Bill with the provisions of other systems. Such a compendium as that furnished by Mr. Macqueen provides a very valuable introduction to the study of the English Act, and gives the material for a sort of text book on the subject. When we look at a section of a new Act, we want to know what are the points it determines; and, in order to understand these points, we must know what were the alternatives between which the Legislature had to choose. A collation of foreign codes affords us the means of ascertaining the sphere of legislative choice, and throws considerable light on the real nature of the choice that has actually been made. We cannot go through even the main points of the Bill and place beside them the provisions of foreign codes with anything like fulness; but we think that we may go through some of them in such a manner as to show the kind of advantage to be derived from Mr. Macqueen's publication. We will take the points we notice in the order in which they occur in the new Divorce Act.

First, then, with regard to judicial separation. Almost every existing code permits judicial separation. When the first attempt was made, after the Revolution, to reform and settle the French law, it was determined to give a considerable latitude to divorce, but to prohibit separation altogether; a course that had previously been proposed in the English Reformatio Legum, and has actually been adopted in the Prussian Code. And if we could abandon all religious considerations, and look neither to the doctrines of the Church nor the words of the New Testament, there would obviously be much to be said in favour of putting an end at once to a tie which has, under the supposed circumstances, failed to answer the purposes for which it was contracted. The law of 1803, usually called the Code Civil, allowed the two remedies at the option of the parties; and since 1816, divorce has been altogether abolished in France. In most Catholic countries divorce is prohibited; but in Austria and Sardinia non-Catholics are allowed to apply for it. As the Divorce Act only gives to a sentence of judicial separation the same effect as that of a divorce à mensâ et thoro, without saying what that effect is, it would be beyond our present scope to compare the effect of separations in different countries. But the Act lays down the possible causes of separation, which are adultery, cruelty, or desertion for two years by either party. The French law requires, that, if adultery is the ground of the wife's application, the concubine shall have been maintained in the house of the married couple. It also adds, as a ground of separation, condemnation to a punishment involving infamy, but not mutual consent. The Code of Louisiana adds the ground of public defamation of one of the married couple by the other. But no addition to the English law is of great importance except the ground of mutual consent; and, in examining foreign codes, this is the point to which the attention of inquirers ought mainly to be turned. All codes agree with the Divorce Act in permitting the wife to enjoy her own earnings and all property subsequently acquired by her after the sentence of separation has been pronounced.

The Code Napoléon permits the same grounds of divorce as have formed, since the law of 1816, the grounds of separation only, adding that of mutual consent. We need not, therefore, recapitulate them. As the most striking instance of latitude of divorce, we may turn to the Prussian Code, which permits divorce on no fewer than thirteen grounds:—1. Adultery (and with respect to adultery, it expressly prohibits what is allowed by the new Act, the setting up by the wife of the adultery of the husband as a defence). 2. Malicious desertion. 3. Unnatural crimes. 4. Refusal of the wife to follow the husband into a new domicil. 5. Refusal to perform conjugal duties. 6. Impotence. 7. Hopeless madness of more than a year's duration. 8. Cruelty. 9. Condemnation to a punishment involving infamy. 10. Dissipation of property, or prodigality. 11. Refusal of the husband to support his wife. 12. Change of religion by one of the married couple. 13. Mutual consent. The Prussian Code and the English Act are based upon different conceptions of the extent of divorce permitted by the New Testament. The English Act supposes adultery to be the only permissible ground, and, while extending it to both sexes, requires the adultery to be aggravated if the wife applies for divorce. The Prussian Code supposes that the tie is only to be maintained while it answers the purposes for which it was contracted, and its provisions are strictly logical if this is the basis to be taken. We may remark, in passing, that the permission to the wife to plead the adultery of the husband in bar of a divorce would be a very dangerous one, if it were not for the constitution of the English full Court of Divorce. As, however, the judges will all be men of age and great experience of human life, and of that broad sense which years of judicial experience and professional practice seldom fail to bring with them, we may confidently expect that they will not permit inquiries into the conduct of the husband, totally irrelevant to the conduct of the wife, to prevent his availing himself of his remedy. Still we cannot await the first decisions on this point without some degree of anxiety.

It was to the machinery adopted in the Code Napoléon for hearing and settling claims of divorce, that Mr. Macqueen especially pointed as a source of valuable instruction, and certainly this machinery has much to recommend it. When a divorce was asked for, the application had to be made in the Court of the Arrondissement where the married couple had their domicil. The claim, detailing the facts, and put into writing, had to be carried to the judge by the demandant in person, and signed by him or her in the judge's presence. The parties were then summoned to a private audience before the judge, when the judge attempted, if possible, to bring about a reconciliation. Exactly the same machinery has been adopted, since 1816, in entertaining applications for separations; and from the statistics of the department of justice, we can ascertain how far this preliminary effort of the judge to bring about a reconciliation is likely to prove available. In 1854 there were 1,681 applications, and of these 265 were abandoned on the reconciliation of the parties. If the judge found all attempts at reconciliation useless, he drew up the record, had the claim and the documents supporting it submitted to the public officer, and referred the case to the Court at large. The Court, if it thought proper that the case should proceed, heard a preliminary statement from both parties, and also asked for a list of the witnesses intended to be called on both sides. It, then, in a public hearing, disposed of the case at once, if it was not necessary that the proofs should be given. If doubtful facts had to be proved, the depositions of witnesses were received by the Court sitting with closed doors, in presence of the public officer, of the parties, and of their counsel or friends, to the number of three on each side. The children or descendants of the parties were not allowed to be witnesses. After the proofs were given, and a written copy of them signed by the respective parties, the case was adjourned to a public hearing, when, after the public officer had given his opinion, judgment was pronounced.

The characteristic features of this machinery were—first, that, up to a very late period of the case, the parties had an opening allowed them to effect a reconciliation and withdraw their domestic unhappiness from public comment; secondly, by the depositions of witnesses being given at a private hearing, the public was not contaminated by the report of the disgusting details of adultery. The new Divorce Act goes in an entirely different direction; for in cases of divorce sought on account of the adultery of the wife, which we may presume will be the ordinary cases, the adulterer is to be a co-respondent; and as a third party is thus necessarily and publicly introduced, reconciliation will, obviously, be very difficult after litigation is once begun. And by referring all facts to the consideration of common juries, the utmost degree of publicity is secured.

Our readers will remember, that, in the debates on the Divorce Act, three points were keenly contested—whether adultery should be made a criminal offence; whether an adulterer should be liable to pecuniary damages; and whether the guilty wife should be permitted to marry her accomplice. By the Code Napoléon, the adultery of the wife was punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; that of the husband who should maintain a concubine in the conjugal residence, was only punishable by a fine, which at the highest could not exceed £80; but the accomplice of the wife was liable to be imprisoned during a term not exceeding two years, and also to pay a fine not exceeding £80. The guilty party, whether husband or wife, was not permitted to marry the accomplice. The same prohibition was also introduced into the Scotch law, by an express statute. We do not find sufficient materials in the synopsis given of other codes to state what are their contents relative to these points.

Judicial Business Report.

EVIDENCE OF MR. WILLIAM SHARPE ABRIDGED.

I am a solicitor practising in London. It was thought desirable that some of the members of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society should attend to be examined, and I and Mr. Lavie, and Mr. Murray attended on the part of the Incorporated Law Society. I have given a good deal of attention to the arrangement of the circuits in England, and I am rather more acquainted with the business in the country than those gentlemen, as I act a good deal as an agent for country solicitors, which those gentlemen, I believe, do not. The Incorporated Law Society suggest a plan for three circuits, with intervals of only two months between the first and second, and the second and third, and then an interval of four months between the end of the third and the commencement of the next year. Assuming that there is going to be a change in the circuits, as we have understood that an increase in number has been mooted, we think that this is decidedly the best arrangement which can be made. It is the only one which allows of a vacation, which I believe the legal profession generally would think ought to be continued; and it is the only one which allows a circuit to follow a term, and to be preceded by a term. We believe that any arrangement which will throw two circuits together, without an intervening term, would be pretty well useless. Unless a circuit follows a term, and is also followed by a term, it is not half the use that it would be upon any other system. We intended that all three of those circuits should transact the civil business of the country as well as the criminal. Judging from my experience as a lawyer, I think that it is desirable that there should be circuits of assize held throughout the country with intervals of three months. The time submitted by the Council of the Incorporated Law Society gives an interval of at least three months; it leaves two months from the end of one circuit to the beginning of the other, but it will give an average interval to each assize town of at least three months. The first assize town in each circuit will be about three months off from the next assize which is held in the same town. We find in London, with which we are all acquainted, that three times of sittings in a year are not sufficient. We have, in London, sittings after every term, and intermediate sittings in term besides. London is so favoured, that there are twelve times a year at which we can go to trial, and the country have only twice a year. We feel that towns like Liverpool and other large towns are really entitled to more, and are driven by the unfrequency of the assizes either to give up their just demands or to compromise, or to arrange matters, or to try in London, which is 200 miles distant. Our opinion is, that the number of circuits should be rather extended than reduced, and that the Northern Circuit might be divided into two circuits. I think that every judge who has been the Northern Circuit must know, that, at Liverpool for instance, the business is not satisfactorily done through the immense pressure of it; a considerable proportion is (practically) left undone there. I have given great attention to the question, whether, considering the London business of the judges, the number of the judges would bear reduction. My opinion is, certainly, that they would not bear reduction. As a principle, I would prefer four judges on the bench. I do not concur in the opinion which has been expressed to this Commission, that the public would be better satisfied with the decision of a single judge than with the decisions of a majority of two out of three judges. There has been a feeling, I believe, that the business in the courts in London has fallen off, in consequence of the county courts; that there has been a gradual diminution of the business of the superior courts in consequence. That is a point which I have taken considerable trouble to inquire into, and as far as our experience goes in our own practice, which is considerable, there has not been any diminution. I do not mean that a great deal of business has not been taken from the superior courts into the county courts, but that the business of the country has been increasing simultaneously, so much so, that the superior courts of common law have quite as much to do now as they had before the County Courts Act was passed. We find in our practice that there is quite as much now as before the County Courts Act was passed in 1846: again, we find that there is very much more business now than there was before 1830. Up to about 1830 there was only the Court of King's Bench which did any material amount of business. The Court of Common Pleas did much less, and the Court of Exchequer did comparatively very little indeed. There were only (I believe) eight, or some other very small number of attorneys in the Court of Exchequer who were entitled to practise there, and the business was very little indeed; but now there are three courts sitting, all of which are open to the whole bar, and all the attorneys, and they all have a very considerable amount of business; and I think it would not be saying too much to state, that there is more than double the time occupied at present in judicial business in London than there was before 1830, notwithstanding the county courts; and that there is quite sufficient increase to employ all the judges fully, notwithstanding the number of judges has been increased from twelve to fifteen. Though I do not wish to recommend a greater number of judges, I believe that there are parts of the business to which more time might be advantageously devoted; there might be a greater number of sittings for the trial of causes in Middlesex. I also think that more time might be given by the judges at chambers. Very important cases come to the judges at chambers, through the immense increase of business which has been going on during the last eight or ten years. During term the usual hour is half-past three in the afternoon for the attendance of a judge at chambers. This almost of necessity involves some haste, if there is much business to be done. The judges do the business admirably there, but yet it implies haste, whether it be in the judges or in the attorneys—the business must be done before post time. With regard to the mode of conducting the sittings at Nisi Prius in term, I think rather a larger number of days should be given. I do not think the business is badly done; some courts have two, and some three days, for which we can give notice of trial during term; if there were more frequent times, it would be an advantage. With respect to the towns for which I would recommend a third assize, I would first name Liverpool and Manchester. I think it might be a great advantage to a large town like Hull, which is a mercantile town, and a great way from York. Plymouth is a town from which the Council of the Incorporated Law Society has received a communication, and there they strongly speak that they should be glad to have assizes held, and three assizes a year. At Plymouth and Devonport, in the immediate neighbourhood, they have, as I understand, a population to the extent of 120,000 inhabitants. A month is the average time in which a case of importance can be brought to trial after it is once begun, and supposing a court open; but if much evidence is to be got up beforehand, it cannot be done in a month.

Money Market.

CITY, FRIDAY EVENING.

Yesterday the directors of the Bank advanced their rate for discount on bills from 5½ per Cent., at which it has stood since the middle of July to 6 per Cent. During the last two or three days this advance had been thought inevitable. Occurences in the money market, both at home and abroad, show an extraordinary demand, and a deficient supply. The East India Company have taken a loan from the Bank of a million, on the security of East India Bonds. The shipment of specie to India and China by the Columbo, amounts to £594,485, and the drain of gold to the continent is renewed with great activity. On the other hand, domestic affairs in the United States very much curtail remittances to this country. The English Funds have fluctuated daily. Consols close this afternoon at 89¼ to 89⅜, showing a decline of ⅜ per Cent. in the week. The discount houses have advanced their rates to correspond with the advance at the Bank. Money is in very active demand.

From the Bank of England return for the week ending the 3rd October, 1857, which we give below, it appears that the amount of notes in circulation is £19,947,275, being an increase of £805,155, and the stock of bullion in both departments is £10,662,692, showing a decrease of £613,396 when compared with the previous return.

The estimates of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in regard to ways and means for the present year, assumed a falling off in the amount to be received for customs and excise. But he nevertheless professed to act upon the principle that lower duties by promoting consumption would produce more revenue than higher duties, and the financial measures of this country are grounded upon that principle. But the daily press, which gives its support to Government, remarks, with reference to the revenue accounts of the last quarter, that we are not now watching the result of Sir Robert Peel's experiments, and that it would be absurd to expect that John Bull should pay less, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer receive more.

The reduction of the war duties on tea, coffee, and sugar has been in steady operation during the last quarter, and the result of the reduced scale may be justly compared with the amount received in the same quarter of the year 1856, but still subject to some allowance. The loss which appears under the head of customs shows that the principle, that lower duties would produce more revenue, has yielded to the pressure of present circumstances. The importation price of several articles has materially advanced, and people are unwilling or unable to increase their expenditure. The falling off in revenue may be repaired, but an increase in customs and excise does not promise a favourable result, and an increase in property tax will be very unpalatable. It seems probable the only alternative will be either an increase in the property tax, and in customs and excise duties, or an addition to the National Debt by means of a loan. This view is sustained by the fact, before mentioned, of the East India Company having taken a loan from the Bank of England. Other circumstances also tend to show that financial difficulties, and the pressure for money, are likely to augment.

By recent advices from America, it appears that the commercial panic, which has produced very disastrous results, far from having come to an end, continued in full operation. Both railways and banks are in difficulties. Railways in the United States are usually pointed out as undeniable evidence of the vigour of transatlantic enterprise, and of prosperous results therefrom, in regard to national progress. The ardour of our western cousins carries them ahead a very long way with wonderful success. After some time difficulties are sure to arise which they are not well prepared to encounter. It appears that numerous railway undertakings are making very small returns, and have drawn upon the banks heavily for support. Many banks have suspended their payments, and others of greater weight were believed likely to follow. In England, in case a bank stops payment, its credit is rarely restored. It generally winds up and comes to an end. In the United States, it appears that banks suspend payment as a matter of precaution, and resume operations when favourable circumstances come round. Of course their customers do, and must, take a similar line of conduct, as they cannot draw their deposits, nor obtain the customary aid by way of loan. In this way a vast extent of insolvency is brought into existence. After some time the banks again open for payment. Debts and claims, for or against, are adjusted as may be with customers; pecuniary accommodation is obtained as before; and thus the wheel of enterprise again goes round.

In the present crisis, the gloomy aspect of affairs has been further darkened by the grievous loss of life and treasure in the wreck of the Central America, the usual remittances from California, amounting to £400,000, having gone down in that vessel. At the latter end of last month there was not any appearance of amendment. Parties who happened to have money were obtaining from 18 to 24 per cent. for discounting the best bills, and from 3 to 5 per cent. per month was obtained upon valid notes. Apprehensions were entertained that the Boston banks might fail in sustaining themselves and the public. It was believed that suspension of payment on their part would cause immense difficulty and ruinous depreciation of property.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LAW ASSOCIATION.

Last Saturday and to-day we have presented to our readers the fullest report which our limits would possibly allow of the proceedings of the meeting held at Manchester. It will be seen that the business extended over three days, and yet only about half of the papers on the list had been read, nor had the discussions which arose been, in any instance, unreasonably prolonged.

We cannot but regret that the Chairman's opening address was principally devoted to refuting imputations upon the Managing Committee, which it seemed, however, to be unwise to leave without a distinct answer. The time of the meeting would have been far more agreeably occupied in reviewing the proceedings and anticipating the future of the Association. But on the second day more interesting topics were discussed, and the expected hospitalities of the Manchester Association had brought an accession of members to the meeting. Considering that the powerful rivalry of the Art Treasures Exhibition was operating throughout, we think that the reading and discussion of the papers was carried on with a very fair amount of zeal and diligence. So far as we can judge from necessarily brief abstracts, we should expect that the forthcoming report of proceedings, containing the papers and notes of the most important speeches and conversations, will be a valuable addition to the libraries of members of the Association. Most of the papers will admit of being read and read again with profit; and, indeed, we should say that they are, in general, rather too elaborate for the occasion which called them forth. A man who makes a speech necessarily regulates its length by the extent of his hearers' leisure, and by the attention and interest which they display. But the duration of a written paper has been fixed independently of all these circumstances, and any attempt to shorten it is apt to be abrupt and violent. It is, therefore, very desirable for the author of such an essay to consider, not how much can be written with vigour and freshness upon his subject, but how large a portion of a single morning is likely to be cheerfully surrendered to him by an audience liable to many other demands upon their attention. Besides, a man who really wished to promote the discussion of a favourite theory should aim at calling forth the opinions of others, rather than at proclaiming and vindicating his own. We are disposed to think, that, at future meetings, it would be advantageous to develope further the oral, and rather to restrict the written, element in the proceedings. But, of course, there must always be a supply of papers, so as to insure that a proper variety of topics be duly launched; and if it be found impossible or inexpedient to exhaust the list of essays, there still remains the resource of printing them for the more deliberate consideration of members at their own homes.

The important subject of the education of the solicitor, both preliminary to, and during the period of his articles, has been placed at this meeting in its due prominence. Three of the papers read were directed, more or less immediately, to this point; and readers and speakers alike declared that education is the one thing needful to insure that solicitors shall do their duty to society, and that society shall do justice to solicitors. The formation of junior societies, composed of articled clerks, and connected with the local law associations, appears to us to be a measure of very high importance; and it has this advantage, that no action or consent of Legislature, judges, or other dignified and deliberate bodies need be waited for to put it into immediate working. There is no necessity for cumbrous formalities, or large expenditure. Wherever it be possible, there should exist some authority to guide the studies which these societies of clerks may be expected to promote. At Birmingham, a Law Students' Society has flourished for the last ten years; and Mr. Johnson, formerly Secretary to this Society, has been recently appointed to the law professorship at Queen's College. It may be hoped, that, in this instance, the Professor will exercise over the Society a most beneficial influence; and the example thus afforded by Birmingham will deserve the consideration of the other great towns. The arrangements for testing the preliminary, and carrying forward the professional education of the articled clerk, must necessarily be, to a very great extent, local; and we would urge upon all authorities the extension and perfecting of such arrangements, at the same time that we do not cease to look to the Incorporated Law Society, and to the Inns of Court, to develop to the utmost those departments of metropolitan legal education over which they are respectively supreme. It was suggested at the meeting, that advantage might be taken of one of the latest improvements proposed at Oxford and Cambridge to supply, in many cases, a sufficient guarantee of adequate preliminary education of articled clerks. We allude to the plan of examining and granting certificates of literary attainment, without requiring residence, which it is expected that both Universities will soon put into active operation. Not only Oxford and Cambridge, but all other academical institutions, will do well to exert themselves to answer the demand thus made by a class most influential over society for a better education of its rising members. We are sure that those who have striven to regain for the ancient seats of learning a more national and comprehensive character, will discern and improve the opening here afforded to them; and will do their utmost to supply that "large, liberal, and enlightened education," which Mr. Lawrance insisted upon, at Manchester, as the first necessity of the profession.

Under the head of Bankruptcy, it will occur to every reader of the proceedings that the highest merit of the two papers read was the occasion given by them to several most valuable speeches. The address of Mr. Heelis recounts very plainly his own experience of the practice of bankruptcy in Manchester; and Mr. Lawrance was equally unreserved as regards the business done in London. We have thus the very best possible authority both on the provincial and the metropolitan aspect of Bankruptcy courts and offices; and we do not think it will appear that anything more practical has been said upon the subject by any of the more active and prominent law reformers who have this week congregated at Birmingham. If we wished to find a good example of the utility of gatherings like that which has taken place at Manchester, we could not possibly do better than refer to this discussion upon bankruptcy. Not only the body of solicitors, but the public also, is, or might be, informed of the actual present working of the system, as observed by those who are in hourly contact with it. It cannot be doubted that the chief speakers on this occasion possess, in a high degree, the knowledge and skill which are necessary to successful attempts at law reform. Solicitors have done much to improve our methods of procedure, and they have proposed and striven to effect much more. One result of the establishment of the Association has been, to gain for the voice of the profession a more attentive hearing; and we believe that the discussion held on Friday last, at Manchester, will do much to add to the future weight of the collective representations of solicitors. If any of our legislators want to know what are the most crying evils of the bankruptcy system, and where the most ready remedies should be sought, let them read and consider the speeches of Mr. Heelis and Mr. Lawrance, published, as we hope they will soon be, in the report of the proceedings of the Association.

We shall have other opportunities of considering, at greater length, all that was read and spoken upon many and various topics at this meeting. We think that the Managers of the Association are entitled to look back upon the occurrences of last week with unmingled pleasure, and to draw from them the happiest auguries of future prosperity, and an ever-extending sphere of usefulness. It appears to us, too, that the selection of Bristol as the next place of meeting was a wise measure. The Association honestly aims to be as catholic as its name implies; and, therefore, the utmost should be done to enlarge its influence in the South and West, as well as in the North of England.

THE BIRMINGHAM CONFERENCES.

The National Association for the Promotion of Social Science may not, perhaps, do much in the way of original discovery; but there are other modes in which it may be of use to the cause which it has taken up. In the section which to us at least appears the most important, that of jurisprudence and the amendment of the law, we have already some gratifying facts to record. We cannot pretend to have learned much from the discursive speech with which Lord John Russell opened the proceedings; but if the Birmingham meeting does not give us any new truths, it may be no less serviceable if it adds new men to the phalanx of law reformers. Lord John Russell has always shown a disposition to support the amendments which have from time to time been proposed in our jurisprudence; but, after the prominent position which he has assumed at the Birmingham meeting, it is only fair to expect that his influence will be exercised with increased energy in favour of the various projects of law reform which urgently call for the action of Parliament. We are particularly glad to find that the section has devoted a share of its attention to the important subject of land transfer, and has been the means of eliciting from Sir Fitzroy Kelly a warm declaration of his adhesion to the general principles of the scheme which was recommended by the recent Commission. The many difficulties of mechanical detail which have been supposed to be fatal to the project were estimated by Sir Fitzroy at their true value, as obstacles which require nothing more than the use of means already within our reach to surmount them successfully. The other, and the only material cavil against a general registration of title is that which is expressed by the cry that it would expose the tenure of land to all the same risks from fraud which now affect an interest in settled stock. The assertion, as we have often pointed out, is not true to nearly its full extent; for there would be much less facility for a fraudulent transfer of a specific piece of land, the possession of which is a matter of local notoriety, than there now is for a fraudulent transfer of stock. But if the fear were justified that land would not be more safe than stock, we agree with Sir Fitzroy Kelly that there is no very serious ground for alarm. No doubt fraud would be possible, as it is now, in the case both of stock and land; but Sir Fitzroy hit the true answer when he said that, practically, we never hear of it. At least, if this is not literally true, it is undeniable that we do not hear of frauds in stock more often than—perhaps not so often as—frauds connected with land.

In one point of some importance, Sir Fitzroy Kelly proposes to advance more boldly and rapidly than the Commissioners were disposed to recommend. They hesitated to make a regular inquiry, followed by a grant of a parliamentary title, the indispensable condition of registration in the first instance. Their plan was, to leave it optional with any applicant for registration whether he would come in on the terms of submitting his title to investigation, or would be content to obtain exemption from future contingencies, and to leave the previous title to consolidate and perfect itself by lapse of time. Sir Fitzroy Kelly seems rather to favour the idea of a compulsory investigation, and suggests the Incumbered Estates Court of Ireland as the model on which the necessary tribunal should be constructed. While we cordially agree in the importance of having some such court established, unless, indeed, the existing courts could be employed for the purpose, we think that the more cautious proposal of the Commissioners is the fairer and the wiser course to follow. Landowners, when they learn to see their own interests, will be the stoutest advocates of a reform which will add a goodly percentage to the market value of their property, but they are timid in any matter connected with the tenure of their estates, and nothing would be more likely to deter them from supporting a measure for the registration of title than a provision which would render a quasi-lawsuit a necessary preliminary to the application of the law to their own estates. The less there is of a compulsory nature about any Bill which may be framed to improve the transfer of land, the more likely it will be to win the support of the proprietors whose interests it will chiefly promote, and without whose co-operation no measure of the kind can ever be passed. And it must be remembered that the difference between Sir Fitzroy's views and those embodied in the Report is merely one of time. On either principle we should come to an indefeasible title at last; and the single question is, whether it is worth while, for the sake of hurrying the working of the new law when it may be adopted, to incumber it with provisions which will increase the difficulty of establishing it as part of our legal system? Important as the questions we have noticed are, they are still matters of detail rather than of principle; and without altogether coinciding with Sir Fitzroy Kelly's views upon every point, we cordially concur in his opinion, that the ultimate establishment of indefeasible titles, with an absolute power to the owner to transfer his property at will, would involve a greater amount of good than has been effected by any Act of Parliament passed within our time. We rejoice to see so able a lawyer as Sir Fitzroy Kelly taking a decided part in a movement of such vast importance; and if the Birmingham Association were to do nothing more than attract the serious attention of landowners as well as lawyers to a topic which so deeply concerns them, it would not have met in vain.

HULL COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Re Harrison, Watson, & Co).

A meeting for the choice of assignees and proof of debts under this bankruptcy was held on Wednesday in the Bankruptcy Court, at Hull, before Mr. Payne, the registrar, officiating for Mr. Commissioner Ayrton. A large body of creditors and solicitors attended to take part in the proceedings. The principal subject of discussion arose upon the tender of a proof by Mr. John Scott, on behalf of the Union Bank of London, amounting to £26,000, upon certain bills of exchange drawn by Burstall & Co., of Quebec, and accepted by the bankrupts. These bills were indorsed by Burstall & Co. to the Bank of Montreal, and by that bank indorsed and delivered to the Union Bank of London, the consideration for the latter indorsement being the acceptance by the Union Bank of certain bills drawn on them by the Montreal Bank to a like amount. It was contended in opposition to the proof that these mutual acceptances amounted to a mere exchange of paper; and that, no money consideration having passed, the proof ought not to be admitted. In reply to this argument, it was alleged that the Union Bank were the bonâ fide holders of the bankrupts' dishonoured acceptances, and that it was not imperatively necessary that there should be a money consideration, a valuable one being quite sufficient. His Honour assented to this view of the matter, and the proof was admitted. A long list of debts was proved, amounting in the whole to 308,991*l.* 11*s.* 2*d*; the amount of claims by creditors not yet proved is £10,000. Among the proofs were the Bank of Upper Canada for £6,000; Bank of British North America £47,420; Union Bank of London, £21,000; City Bank of Montreal, £5,000; London Joint-Stock Bank, £23,450; Bank of England, £15,711; the executors of Mr. C. Bamford, jun., £29,312; and Mr. C. Bamford, £35,327. The assignees chosen are Messrs. J. B. Barkworth, of Cottingham; Mr. Chapman, of Leadenhall-street, London; and Mr. Christopher Simpson, of Hull.

BRISTOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Hill.)

At the sitting of the Court, on Thursday the 8th instant, his Honour said that the Registrar had complained to him that the bills for taxation, previous to the audit sittings, instead of being delivered five days before the day appointed, in many instances only came to his hands on the very morning on which the audit was fixed. This practice led to great inconvenience, and almost necessitated a hasty examination of the accounts thus submitted for taxation. He (the learned Commissioner) wished it therefore to be distinctly understood, that for the future the rule would be strictly observed, which provided that bills of solicitors and messengers should be delivered to the Registrar for taxation five days before the audit; and if the audit were adjourned by default of any solicitor or messenger in that behalf, the parties so in default should pay the costs of adjournment.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

On Monday morning, at the Liverpool County Court, there was a full attendance of the local members of the bar, and of the legal profession generally, for the purpose of giving weight by their presence to the valedictory addresses to be made on their behalf to Mr. Pollock, on his retiring from the judgeship of that court.

After Mr. Pollock had taken his seat on the bench, and disposed of a few remaining cases on his list,

Mr. Blair expressed the regret of the profession at the retirement of Mr. Pollock from the duties, in discharge of which he had ever manifested courtesy with firmness, and which he had administered in a manner to command the esteem and regard not only of the members of the profession, but of this great commercial community in general. In retiring from his office, the members of the profession indulged in the anxious hope that the cessation from the laborious duties of the office would restore him to health, which had been thus impaired.

Mr. Lace, President of the Liverpool Law Association, on behalf of that body, then addressed his Honour. In doing so, he said he did not think it was any arrogation to say that he represented the feeling of the whole of his professional brethren. He had to offer to Mr. Pollock a resolution passed that morning by the Law Society, expressive of the very great regret that this was the last time they would see him on that bench dispensing justice, and this more especially when they considered the cause which compelled him to retire. He (Mr. Lace) had almost grown grey in the service. Some thirty or forty years ago he felt that there was a great want in the administration of justice to the poor, and he made some attempts to get a court established in connection with the business of the county magistrates, in the distribution of justice to the lower classes. At that time he was told such a thing was impracticable. Mr. Pollock had shown, that not only could justice be done by the same judge to the lower classes, but that the very highest and very nicest points of law could be decided in that court as well as in the courts above. Mr. Pollock had not only given them the advantage of sound law, but they had at all times received from him the comfort of courtesy and consideration. After some further observations, Mr. Lace concluded by reading the resolution of the Law Society, which was as follows:—

"That this Society records its deep sense of the loss which the public and the legal profession will sustain by the retirement of a judge whose conduct on the bench has been alike remarkable for the justice of his decrees as for the unwearied patience and urbanity exercised towards the suitors and practitioners in court; and this Society unfeignedly regrets the cause which has led to his retirement, and earnestly hopes cessation from judicial labour will restore his health, and enable him to enjoy a long life of happy and useful years."

Mr. Pollock, in responding to the address, said: Gentlemen, I sever, with deep regret, the connection which has for some years existed between us. On all occasions I have found that the consideration extended to me was far greater than I deserve. You will not expect me to enter into many of the topics to which Mr. Lace has alluded. Some of them are of great importance. I have laboured for them while here, and, God sparing me life and strength, I hope to labour for them hereafter.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SOCIAL SCIENCE.

The first meeting of this association took place on Monday last at Birmingham, on which occasion an inaugural address detailing the scope and objects of the association was delivered by Lord Brougham. On Tuesday, Lord John Russell presided over the section charged with the consideration of all subjects belonging to Jurisprudence and the amendment of the law. Mr. E. T. Wakefield read a paper on the Transfer of Land. He adverted to the evils resulting from the operation of the present law, especially as relates to the production and verification of title, the result of which was expense, delay, and disappointment, no matter whether the transfer was of one or one thousand acres. He advocated, as an amendment in the present law, a plan by which certificates would be granted with an indorsement of an abstract title. Mr. E. Fawcett also read an elaborate paper on the same subject. He proposed the division of the kingdom into registration districts and the appointment of registrars; that land should be registered by letters or figures on the ordnance maps; and that the certificate of title given by the registrars should be the only title demanded.

Mr. S. S. Lloyd, of Birmingham, read an interesting paper containing suggestions for a new Bankruptcy Law. Mr. Hawes and Mr. Rayner also read papers upon the same subject. Mr. Hastings, the secretary, urged an assimilation of the law of England with that of Scotland as regarded Bankruptcy. The pressure on our space compels us to hold over a more detailed report of the proceedings of this section, but in our next publication, we will give it all the attention which it deserves.

The Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford, have appointed Charles William Lawrence, Esq., of Cirencester, M.A., late Fellow, and now Steward, of New College, Oxford, the Chapter Clerk and Steward of their Society, in the room of the late Germain Lavie, Esq.

Sir Alexander Cockburn, the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, has arrived in town from a tour in Germany.

Mr. John Tyrrell is appointed Recorder of Bideford and of South Molton, in the room of Mr. Mackworth Praed, deceased.

At a meeting of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce on Monday last, a report from the Commercial Law Committeee on "The United Kingdom Writs Bill" was brought up and adopted. The Bill purports "to enable parties to bring actions into any part of the United Kingdom where causes of actions arise against parties residing in any other part of the same." It was referred back to the committee to take the necessary steps for its introduction into Parliament. The same committee also submitted a paper touching upon subjects relating to commercial law, for submission to the national conference about to assemble at Birmingham. The points embraced in the paper were the Bankruptcy Law, the Registration of Partnerships, the Judgments Execution Bill, and the United Kingdom Writs Bill. The paper was adopted, and ordered to be forwarded. The other subjects on the paper were adjourned to a future meeting.

It is said that Lord Palmerston has recently, in the most handsome manner, tendered to the Attorney-General, Sir Richard Bethell, the important office of Judge of the New Court of Probate and Divorce, but that the Attorney-General has thought proper to decline the office, considering that the circumstance of his having had the carriage of the Bills in the Lower House might lay him open to the imputation that his exertions in connection with them had not been of that disinterested character which Parliament and the public have at his hands a right to expect.—The Standard.

The resignation of Mr. Pollock, as county court judge, has called forth a general expression of regret from all classes of the community. His intellectual acumen, his extensive erudition, his patience, and his excellent temper peculiarly qualified him for the office of a judge. It is understood that Mr. Pollock's constitution is suffering merely from wear and tear, and his physicians encourage him to expect that a year's rest, spent amongst other more congenial pursuits than trying cases of debt in a county court, will restore him to his former self. Mr. Pollock was for some years a very distinguished criminal advocate in Manchester, where he divided the palm with his principal and most brilliant and successful competitor, the late Mr. Serjeant Wilkins. His appointment to the position of judge of the Liverpool County Court was made by the Earl of Carlisle, the present Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, when holding the office of Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. That appointment was made on the dismissal of Mr. Ramshay, on the termination of the prolonged and exciting inquiry which created more popular irritation in Liverpool than we ever remember to have been caused by any other local event. With regard to Mr. Pollock, we may say, with truth, that he displayed eminent ability in every department of the law, and that he obtained and deserved the general esteem and friendship of the bar. The salary of the judgeship of the court is £1,500 a year, in relinquishing which, we believe, Mr. Pollock retires with a pension of £1,000 a year.—Liverpool Albion.

Mr. J. K. Blair has been appointed to the judgeship of the Liverpool County Court, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Pollock. Mr. Blair was called to the bar in June, 1835, since when he has regularly practised on the Northern Circuit, on which he has latterly held numerous briefs. He has resided for many years in Liverpool; he has for some time, at Salford, filled the office of judge of the Court of Record; and he was very recently appointed Deputy-Recorder of Liverpool; which two offices he will now resign. Mr. Blair's promotion will be a source of satisfaction to his professional friends, amongst whom he has always been esteemed for the urbanity of his manners in every office of a public capacity which has brought him in contact with them.

The French Tribunals.

The Civil Tribunal of Paris was occupied on Saturday last with a very remarkable case. A Brazilian gentleman of considerable property, named Peres D'Oliveira, sought the intervention of the Court under the following circumstances:—He stated that he had the misfortune, in 1854, to form an intimate connection with Mademoiselle Euphémie Verger, the sister of the assassin who, it will be in the recollection of our readers, murdered the Archbishop of Paris. He had by her two children, a boy and a girl, and he caused them to be registered as his own, a course which, his advocate stated, few persons in his condition would have consented to. It was, moreover, his intention to have married Mademoiselle Verger, and for this purpose he had obtained from Brazil the necessary certificates. In the interim, however, her brother committed the atrocious crime for which he had been executed, and M. D'Oliveira felt that his marriage with the sister of an assassin was no longer possible. Nevertheless, he preserved his intimacy with Mademoiselle Verger, and would have continued to do so had he not discovered that she had appropriated the money he had given her to pay tradesmen, and had run up debts without his knowledge, which he was compelled to pay. He then resolved upon a separation, and he took the girl with him, leaving the boy under her protection. Having, however, learned that she neglected the child in the most scandalous manner, he now sought the intervention of the Tribunal, and prayed that the Court would order his son to be delivered up to him. In support of the allegation, that Mademoiselle Verger was unfit to be trusted with the care of the boy, several of her letters were read to the Court. They were all of the most violent description, and dealing in epithets by no means complimentary to M. D'Oliveira. In one she entered into the following curious calculation. She said that she had "sold herself" to him, and had stopped with him altogether 1,129 days. She estimated that ten francs a day was a moderate recompense for her services, for "a girl who passes a day with a man is worth more." She was, therefore, she concluded, entitled to 11,290 francs. He had paid for her maintenance five francs a day, and she had appropriated some sums belonging to him. These sums would make a total of 8,145 francs. Deducting these from the 11,290 francs, there remained, therefore, due to her 3,145 francs. So that, if M. D'Oliveira paid himself 2,000 francs that he said she had robbed him of, he would still remain indebted to her. On the part of Mademoiselle Verger it was represented that M. D'Oliveira had seduced her when she was a simple workwoman, living innocently with her parents. Her mistress, she stated, had one day sent her to D'Oliveira with a letter, and he had locked her up in his room, and, in spite of her prayers, kept her there until she yielded to his wishes. On his subsequent protestations of love and promises of marriage, with her mother's consent, she went to live with him. Things went on pleasantly until her brother murdered the Archbishop, and then D'Oliveira, without pity, drove her from his house, and wanted to keep the two children she had borne him. She urged that she alone had a right to the children. In the first place, the father was a foreigner, and might leave France at his pleasure, and never return; so that, if the children were in his hands, she might never see them again. In the second place, she urged that D'Oliveira had not shown any care for the children. He had not inquired after them when ill, nor had he paid for them when at nurse. She was not aware that he had possession of the girl, as she had placed it out at nurse; and as to the boy, she was ready to maintain him by her labour. Having produced various certificates in support of her allegations, she contended that the Tribunal should reject the demand of D'Oliveira, and should, moreover, order him to pay fifty francs a month towards the expense of the maintenance of his son. The Tribunal, after hearing the public prosecutor, decided that Mademoiselle Verger should retain possession of her son; that the father should have liberty to see him; and that he should be condemned to pay 50 francs a month towards the child's maintenance.

A very remarkable political trial has been instituted by the French Government before the Correctional Tribunal of Colmar, on the Rhine. The principal defendant is Count Jules Migeon, who has been a popular representative in several successive legislative assemblies, and he stands charged with corrupt electoral practices at the last election for Belfort, where he was returned by a majority of 7,000 votes over the Government candidate, M. Nicole, an advocate of the Belfort bar. Nineteen persons were to have been prosecuted along with Count Migeon, but the charges against eighteen of them have been abandoned. The indictment is a curious document, and is as follows:—Whereas it sufficiently appears against Migeon —1. That, on the occasion of the last elections, he, from the month of February to the month of June, did, in order to further his own candidature, both by himself and his agents, by means of false news and other fraudulent manœuvres, surprise and divert suffrages. 2. That he made promises to electors of public or private posts and offices, if they would vote for him. 3. That he influenced the votes of divers public functionaries, by threatening them with the loss of their situations. 4. That, both by word of mouth and in writing, he did, by himself and his agents, and particularly by writings hawked about in large quantities, and also distributed in large quantities through the post-office, circulate statements and allegations calculated to impair the honour and consideration of functionaries of all ranks and degrees in the department of the Haut Rhin, both in their private and public capacities. 5. Against Himbert—that he was an accomplice in the misdemeanors aforesaid, having aided and abetted Migeon in the preparation and circulation of the statements aforesaid. 6. Against Migeon, that he has publicly hawked and distributed, without authorisation, writings not registered, in breach of the law of July 27, 1849. 7. Against Migeon, that at Colmar, on August 31, 1856, he illegally wore in public the cross of the Legion of Honour, and also divers foreign decorations, which he had not been authorised to wear by the head of the State. 8. Against Migeon, that on the 12th of July last, at Rougemont, in the public streets, and also in a tavern kept by one Perrot, he publicly, by gestures, words, and menaces, insulted Brigadier Gauchat, of the gendarmerie, in the execution of his duty. 9. Against Migeon, that, on the 5th of the same month, at Sevenant, in the inn kept by the mayor of that place, he publicly insulted the Mayor of Bermont, the said mayor being then and there acting in the execution of his duty.

It has been elicited that a number of persons were arrested when distributing handbills in the interest of the opposition candidate, on the grounds that they could produce no passports. Although they were in the immediate vicinity of their habitual residence, and their identity might have been easily established, they were detained as vagabonds, and placed at the disposition of the Procureur Imperial. Monsieur Favre, the advocate for Count Migeon, brought to light all these circumstances by his cross-examination, and, struck by the system they disclosed, he exclaimed "This then is the liberty we enjoy." Few of the newspapers have ventured, it would seem, to report this expression of indignation. Count Jules Migeon has sat as a deputy for the department of the Haut Rhin ever since 1849. In the Legislative Assembly he took his seat on the extreme right, between M. de Persigny and Count Simeon. At that time he had been sent to the house by 50,000 suffrages. After the coup d'état of 1851 he was looked upon by the Government as a safe and valuable man, and was sent on a special mission to Alsatia to propagate Napoleonic ideas. At the elections which shortly ensued he appeared as the Government candidate for Belfort, and was returned by 25,000 votes out of 28,000 registered electors. The trial, which excites the most intense interest in all circles in France, has not yet concluded.

CAP. XLIX.—An Act to amend the Law relating to Banking Companies.

In a previous article upon "The Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1857,"* it was mentioned, that, not only insurance companies, but banking companies, were expressly excepted from the operation of the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856: and that, while companies of the former description still remain under the regulation of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, and 10 & 11 Vict. c. 78 (which Acts, as respects them, are still unrepealed), banking companies were regulated under the Act which has now come, in its turn, under discussion.

The important change is made hereby that those banking companies usually known as "Joint-Stock Banks" are now, in effect, placed under the same regulations, in general, as other joint-stock companies; for (by s. 2) the Joint-Stock Companies Acts of 1856, 1857 (i. e. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 14), are to be deemed to be incorporated with, and to form part of, the Act under discussion.

But though the machinery of those Acts is henceforward applicable to banking companies, the Act under discussion ingrafts upon it, as regards them, some very material qualifications; and amongst these, the most important of all, perhaps, is that (by s. 3) no existing or future banking company shall be registered as a limited company—the effect of which is, that, if any registered joint-stock bank shall be wound up either by the Court or voluntarily, each existing shareholder will still be liable to contribute to an amount sufficient to pay its debts and the expenses of the winding-up. The other provisions of the Act under discussion may be classed as affecting existing banks, or those hereafter to be formed, or both.

I.—As to Existing Banks.

By s. 4 every banking company, consisting of seven or more, formed under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, must, before 1st of January, 1858, register itself under penalty of the following consequences:—1, that the company shall be incapable of suing, but capable of being sued; 2, that no dividend shall be payable to any shareholder therein; 3, that each director or manager thereof shall be liable to a penalty of £5 for each day in default—to be recovered by any person, for his own use. "Nevertheless" (proceeds the Act) "such default shall not render the company so being in default illegal, nor subject it to any penalty or disability" other than those above specified.

But, besides joint-stock banks formed under the provisions of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, there also exist certain joint-stock banks formed under 7 Geo. 4, c. 46; and with a view to these (it is presumed) the 6th section of the Act under discussion provides, that "any banking company consisting of seven or more persons, having a capital of fixed amount, and divided into shares also of fixed amount, legally carrying on the business of banking previously to the passing of this Act, and not being a company hereby required to be registered," may at any time, with the assent of a certain number of its shareholders, register; on which the previous provisions under which it carried on business shall cease; saving, however, any powers previously enjoyed by such company "of issuing notes payable on demand, or of doing any other thing." And s. 18 declares that the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, shall not apply to any such banks until they severally register themselves. There are also provisions in the Act under discussion (ss. 8, 9, 10) to guard against any registration of an existing bank affecting in any way the rights or liabilities of the company previously acquired or incurred; or the liability of its shareholders before registration to contribute to its debts; or the progress of any legal proceedings commenced before the registration. But this is subject, as to judgments against the company, to the proviso that no execution shall issue against the effects of any individual shareholder or member; but that, if the assets of the company shall be insufficient, an order must be obtained for winding up the company so registering, in manner directed by the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857.

Sect. 16 provides, that, on the registration of any existing bank, all estate (real and personal), and all choses in action, held in trust for it by any person or persons, shall become vested in the company; but that no merger of estates shall take place in consequence, without the consent of the company, under their common seal.

Sect. 17 provides for the contingency of any banking company having been inadvertently registered under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, as a limited company; and—without rendering any such bank illegal, or the registration invalid—it is made liable to be wound up on the ex parte application of any creditor or member; and the contributories are made individually liable to the whole of its debts and liabilities, notwithstanding such bank has been registered as limited.

II.—As to the Formation of new Banking Companies.

By s. 13, any seven or more persons associated for the purpose of banking may register themselves as a joint-stock company—subject to the condition that the shares into which their capital is divided shall not be less than £100 each. And not more than ten persons shall, unless so registered, form themselves into a partnership for the purpose of banking.

The above is what appears to us to be the effect of this section. The actual text, for which we refer the reader to another part of our impression, has additions which seem to serve only the purpose of rendering it obscure. Thus it says, that the registration of any bank so to be formed is not to be as a limited company; but this was already enacted by s. 3. Moreover, after saying that more than ten persons shall not hereafter, unless registered, form themselves into a banking partnership, it adds "or, if so formed, carry on the business of banking." But if this last clause of the provision refers to such companies as are mentioned in the 6th section, their registration is by that section made optional. Is the 13th section, then, intended pro tanto to repeal the 6th? And yet we do not see to what other banks than those referred to in that section this clause can be meant to apply.

III.—As to Registered Banks generally.

The 11th section directs that all registered banks are to be wound up in the manner directed by the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857; and that the "Winding-up" Acts (7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108) shall have no application to such companies.

The 12th section repeals the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, as to all banks hereafter to be formed, and, with regard to any particular bank now existing, from the time that such bank registers. And to this section is appended the following clause:—"And notwithstanding anything contained in 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, or in any other Act, it shall be lawful for any number of persons, not exceeding ten, to carry on in partnership the business of banking in the same manner and upon the same conditions in all respects as any company [query, "co-partnership"], of not more than six persons, could, before the passing of this Act, have carried on such business." We apprehend the meaning of this is to authorise a firm of private bankers to consist of as many as ten members, instead of, as heretofore, six only.

The 14th section declares that no appointment of Inspectors to examine into the affairs of any banking company shall be made by the Board of Trade under the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, except upon the application of one-third at the least in number and value of the shareholders.

CAP. L.—An Act to amend the Acts concerning Municipal Corporations in England.

It formed one of the provisions (s. 75) of the Municipal Corporation Act of 1835, that the powers, at the date of that Act, vested, under sundry Acts of Parliament, in trustees for paving, lighting, &c., certain boroughs scheduled to that statute, might be transferred to the councils of such boroughs respectively, if such course seemed expedient to the trustees. This provision, as it was framed in the original Act, has been found insufficient to meet the cases to which its principles might be usefully applied; and to extend and improve it, is one object of the Act under discussion. By s. 1, the provision above referred to is, accordingly, repealed except as relates to transfers already made; but by ss. 2, 3, and 4 it is, in effect, re-enacted, with the following additions and improvements:—That the trustees may be such as are "appointed or acting under any Act for paving, lighting, supplying with water or gas, or cleansing, watching, regulating, or improving, or for providing or maintaining a cemetery or market;" that the boroughs may be either such as are scheduled to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, or such as have received a charter of incorporation since that Act passed; that the transfer is to be made under the common seal of the trustees if they happen to be a corporation, or otherwise by deed executed by two of them in behalf of the whole body; that, after the transfer, the trustees shall be discharged from all liabilities and obligations in respect of the trust; and that, on the other hand, no such transfer shall be made unless the council of the borough in question have resolved to accept the same, at a meeting convened for the purpose.

It was another provision of the same Act of 1835 (s. 15) that the overseers of every parish wholly or in part within any borough should, on the 5th of September in every year, make out the "Burgess List," to form part (in the case of a borough consisting of more than a single parish) of the general "Burgess Roll" of the borough; and should, on the same day, deliver the same to the town clerk; and should keep, between the 5th and the 15th of the same month, a copy of such list for the perusal of any person without payment of any fee. The Act under discussion (by s. 7) extends the time during which such list may be perused without payment from fifteen to twenty days, by enacting that the burgess list shall be made out and delivered to the town clerk on or before the 1st of September, instead of the 5th.

It was provided, by an Act passed to amend the Municipal Corporation Act of 1835 (viz. by 7 Will. 4, & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 6), that, in every borough in which, by reason of any neglect or informality, a new burgess roll of the borough should not have been duly made or revised, in any year, within the proper time, the previous burgess roll should continue in force till the new one should have been duly made or revised. This provision applied only to boroughs consisting of a single parish; and the Act under discussion extends it, by providing (s. 6), that, in boroughs of more parishes than one, in which, from neglect or informality, the parochial burgess list for any year shall not have been properly made or revised, such part of the existing burgess roll as contains the names of the parishioners entitled to be on the burgess list shall continue in force, until a burgess list for the parish in question shall have been duly made and revised.

By an earlier Act of Parliament, passed alio intuitu—viz. "for the more speedy return and levying of fines, penalties, and forfeitures, and recognisances estreated" (3 Geo. 4, c. 46)—all such fines, &c., and all sums of money paid in lieu or satisfaction of any of them, set, imposed, or forfeited before justices, were directed to be copied on a roll by the town clerk of cities, boroughs, and other places, and sent by him (first making oath before a justice that the roll is complete and accurate) to the sheriff having execution of process in such place, to be his authority for levying and recovering the same; and that a certificated duplicate of such roll should, by such town clerk, be delivered to the Court of Exchequer on the second Monday after the 2nd of November in each year. By the Act under discussion (s. 5), these duties are now transferred to the clerks of the peace, in the place of the town clerk, in those cities, boroughs, and places wherein the offices of town clerk and clerk of the peace are not united in the same person.

Recent Decisions in Chancery.

Lis Pendens—Notice—Codefendants.

Bellamy v. Sabine (Full Court of Appeal), Aug. 1, 1857.

This case will be for the future the leading authority on the doctrine of lis pendens, not only because it is the first case in which the effect of alienation lite pendente, as between co-defendants, is fully discussed, but because in it the entire doctrine is treated as being founded upon a principle different from that which has been generally assigned to it during the last century—since the decision of Lord Hardwicke in Worsley v. Earl of Scarborough, 3 Atk. 392 (in 1746).

The facts of the present case were very complicated; but, for the purpose of the argument on the effect of lis pendens, may be stated as follows:—A., a tenant for life of real estate, in consideration of certain covenants to pay off moneys due by him, and to pay annuities to other persons, sold his life estate to B., the tenant in tail in remainder, who sold the estates to C. in fee, and soon afterwards died, leaving D. his heir-at-law. D., in 1830, filed a bill against A. and C. to set aside the transactions of both of them with B., on the ground of fraud. The bill was dismissed as against A., but the decree declared the sale to C. to be fraudulent, and ordered C. to reconvey, free from incumbrances, upon payment of what should be found due from D. to C., upon taking an account between them. While this suit was pending, C., in 1833, mortgaged a portion of the estate to E. and F. After the decree, A. instituted a suit against all these parties for specific performance of his agreement with B.—part of the purchase money payable to him under the agreement between B. and him remaining unpaid. A decree for specific performance was made against C. and D. without deciding the question as to the priority of A. over the other incumbrancers; and the contest now was for priority between A., and E. and F., the mortgagees: A. contending that they became mortgagees subject to his rights, the mortgage having been made to them pending the former suit, which, A. insisted, gave notice of his equitable rights. V. C. Wood decided in his favour, after a very elaborate discussion of the rule of the Court as to the effect of lis pendens. His Honour considered that, as C. was bound by the decree, and as his mortgagees could only claim through him, they also were equally bound by the decree. "The least effect that can be attributed to lis pendens," said his Honour, "is, that the party who purchases pending a suit is to be bound by the result of the suit just as much as if he were a party to it." Again, "It seems to me that the effect of lis pendens must be, that you (E. and F.) are merely Sabine (C.) and no one else; whatever right you can assert against him, can only be worked out through him; and whatever right he could give you in that position, you take, with full notice of all the relief that is prayed against him." It will be seen, therefore, that the Vice-Chancellor proceeded upon the principle laid down by Lord Hardwicke in Worsley v. Earl of Scarborough—viz. that lis pendens is to be treated as notice. "It is the pendency of the suit," said his Lordship, "that creates the notice; for, as it is a transaction in a sovereign court of justice, it is supposed all people are attentive to what passes there; and it is to prevent a greater mischief that would arise by people's purchasing a right under litigation." Lord Cranworth, commenting on the decision of the Court below, says, "It is scarcely accurate to speak of lis pendens as notice, although undoubtedly the language of the Court often so describes its operation. It affects, not because it amounts to notice, but because the law does not allow to litigant parties, and give to them, pending the litigation, rights in the property in dispute, so as to prejudice the opposite party. Where a litigation is pending between a plaintiff and a defendant as to the right to a particular estate, the necessities of mankind require that the decision of the Court in the suit shall be binding, not only upon the litigant parties, but also upon those who derive title under them, by alienations made pending the suit, whether such alienees had or had not notice of the pending proceedings." There was no allegation in this case that E. and F. had actual notice of A.'s equitable rights, or any other kind of notice than such as was to be imputed to them by the pendency of the first suit, in which A. and C. were co-defendants; and the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices were all of opinion that that suit could not be considered as amounting to notice of the rights of A. as against C., his co-defendant, the equities between whom were left untouched by the suit.

On the question as to the basis of the rule of the Court respecting lis pendens, Turner, L. J., considered that it was "not founded upon any of the peculiar tenets of a court of equity as to implied or constructive notice;" and observed, that it was common to courts of law and equity. The true ground—as we apprehend it—of the decision of the Court of Appeal in this case was thus put by his Lordship:—"No case, as far as I am aware, has yet occurred in which the doctrine has been applied so as to affect the title of an alienee by virtue of a claim not interfering with the title of the plaintiff in the pending litigation. . . . Generally speaking, between co-defendants there can be no decree. Is it to be said that there is a lis pendens between them? If so, when did it commence? . . . If an alienee of a defendant is, by virtue of this doctrine of lis pendens, to be affected by the claim of a co-defendant, upon what principle is the alienee to be protected against the claim of a mere stranger? Laying out of consideration the cases in which decrees can be made between co-defendants, which are rare, and for the most part go no further than where it is necessary for the purposes of the plaintiff to adjudicate between the defendants, upon what ground is the case of a co-defendant to stand in a different position than that of a stranger? And if the doctrine of lis pendens is to be carried so far as to affect a purchaser with notice in favour of a stranger, I hardly know what title would be safe." The general result of this decision will be to restrict the effect of lis pendens to this: that neither party to the litigation can alienate the property in dispute so as to affect the opposite party; and, further, it being no longer considered that lis pendens operates by way of notice, the party sought to be affected is not put upon inquiry to the same extent that he would be if lis pendens were held to be notice of all the possible equities disclosed by, or arising out of, the suit. Indeed, the latter part of the proposition has been already authoritatively affirmed, though not upon exactly the same grounds as in Bellamy v. Sabine. In Shalcross v. Dixon (7 Law Journ., N. S., Chanc., 180), it was contended that the doctrine of lis pendens only applied to the matters actually put in issue in the bill; and Lord Langdale, in his judgment, observed, that he had never heard that lis pendens was to be notice, not only of what was charged in the bill, but of every equity which by possibility could arise out of the matters in question in the suit. The same limitation of the rule was distinctly recognised by Lord Cottenham in Houlditch v. Wallace (1 Dru. & W. 498).

It may be useful to the practitioner, while we are upon the subject of lis pendens, to note up the principal decisions relating thereto, so far as they tend to illustrate the present case. In Jennings v. Bond (2 Jo. & Lat. 720), Lord St. Leonards held, that a suit by a judgment creditor for an account of the real and personal estate of his debtor, and payment of his debts, is a sufficient lis pendens to affect an incumbrancer on the life estate of a defaulting executor in lands, the fee of which was subject to the judgments, with notice of an equity to have the life estate applied to answer the default of the executor. So, in Walker v. Smallwood (Ambl. 676), alienation by a devisee of lands charged with the payment of debts, pending a creditor's suit for sale and payment of debts was held to be void; "for though," said Lord Camden, "a general charge does not make a purchaser before the suit see to the application of the money, yet, after a suit commenced, I should hold him to it." In the Bishop of Winchester v. Paine (11 Ves. 194), mortgagees pendente lite of an equity of redemption were held to be bound by a decree of foreclosure, though not made parties; and Sir T. Plumer held, in Mewx v. Maltby (2 Swanst. 281), that a suit for specific performance of a contract to grant a lease was notice to a purchaser pendente lite. On the other hand, Lord St. Leonards, in Tennison v. Sweeny (7 Ir. Eq. Rep. 511), held, that ex parte proceedings under the Sheriff's Act (Ireland) for the appointment of a receiver were not lis pendens to affect a purchaser with notice of the judgment; and in that case his Lordship gives expression to a feeling which has long been entertained by the majority of our equity judges. Having expressed his regret that the doctrine of lis pendens had gone so far, he adds, "What can be harder than that a man should be bound by proceedings behind his back which he never heard of, and which, in all human probability, he never could have heard of. . . . I cannot agree, that, in any case, an order for a receiver would operate as lis pendens." Metcalfe v. Pulvertoft (2 Ves. & Bea. 201) restricted the effect of the maxim "Pendente lite nihil innovetur" to the rights and parties in the suit. "The effect of the maxim," said Lord Eldon, "making the conveyance wholly inoperative is founded in error. The true interpretation," he continues, "is that the conveyance does not vary the rights of the parties in that suit. . . . The lis pendens is presumptive, if not actual, notice; and the purchaser is in the same position in which the vendor stood, upon this plain principle, that the suit is to be decided according to the state of things when it was instituted; and the rights, however they may be varied by death, bankruptcy, &c., cannot be affected by the voluntary act of either party;" and, alluding to Lord Camden's decision in Walker v. Smallwood, he added, "that the general rule enunciated in the last-mentioned case—viz. that alienation pending a suit is void—must be understood with reference to the subject-matter, and not absolutely." In Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough (2 P. Wms. 490), where a third mortgagee bought in the first mortgage, pending a redemption suit by the second, the third mortgagee was allowed to tack.

It does not appear to be settled by Bellamy v. Sabine whether, in suits where the Court does make a decree between co-defendants, such suits are to have the effect of lis pendens as between the co-defendants. If the doctrine of lis pendens depends altogether upon the principle stated by the Lord Chancellor—viz. of preventing indefinite litigation—it appears to apply equally to decrees between co-defendants, where such are made, and to ordinary cases in which the issue is between plaintiff and the defendants only. If that be so, the definition of the rule given by Lord Manners, in Gaskill v. Durdin (2 Ball. & Bea. 170), would still remain good, and is perhaps as satisfactory as any other to be found in the books—viz. that a person dealing with property after bill filed, deals with it subject to such decree as might eventually be pronounced;—the effect of which would be to make the Courts more cautious than ever in dealing with the rights of co-defendants inter se.

The alleged lis pendens in the present case was prior to the passing of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, by the 7th section of which it is enacted, that no lis pendens shall bind a purchaser or mortgagee without express notice, until the suit is registered as therein directed. But even if the transactions referred to had occurred subsequently to the time when the Act came into operation, the question would remain, whether the suit was a lis pendens between the co-defendants? According to the provisions of the 7th section, the registration is to be against "the person whose estate is intended to be affected." A decree in favour of the plaintiff, against several defendants, may not only affect their respective estates, as between them and the plaintiff, but may sometimes by the decree itself affect their estates inter se. It still appears to be somewhat doubtful whether in such a case the words of the statute would not operate to affect the estate of a defendant with any charge created by the decree in favour of a co-defendant.

Trustee Act, 1850—Vesting Order.

Re Underwood, 5 W. R. 866.

This case removes a doubt which has been felt, whether the Trustee Act applies to the case of a quasi mortgage in the form of a mere trust to sell, and, after satisfaction of the debt, to pay over the surplus to the debtor.

Any mortgagee is within the general definition of a trustee. Great doubts, however, were entertained whether the provisions of the earlier Trustee Acts were intended to apply to such a case, and a crop of conflicting decisions and declaratory legislation was the result. In the existing Trustee Act, the word trust is so defined as to exclude the duties incident to an estate conveyed by way of mortgage, and no vesting order can be made in the event of a mortgagee's heir not being discoverable, except under the sections specially applicable to that case, which give jurisdiction to the Court only when the mortgagee shall have died without entering into possession, and the debt shall have been paid, or the consent of the creditor obtained to a reconveyance. In this case, the quasi mortgagee had entered into possession, and the vesting order, if made at all, could only be so made under the general clauses relating to trustees not being mortgagees. His Honour, however, held, that a security in the form above stated was not merely a security for money, but involved a trust for the mortgagor as to the surplus, and made the order accordingly.

Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association.

Friday, Oct. 9.

The members assembled this morning in the Mayor's Parlour, at the Town-hall, Mr. W. S. Cookson in the chair.

Mr. Edwin W. Field (of London) opened the day's proceedings by reading a paper entitled "Wisdom and Efficiency in the Methods of Procedure, and in the daily Workings of the Judiciary, the great need of Legal Reform, and the Paramount Service to which a Department of Justice should be addressed." They were, he said, in the city of method. Cotton twist in its materialities, he took it, was pretty much the same article as it was fifty years ago; but how changed during that time were the methods by which it was produced! The modus operandi, or procedure by which the objects of production of this city were created, was totally new, and the history of the marvellous changes in this mode was one of the most wonderful histories of the achievement of the human intellect which could be presented to their study. One principle had determined every one of the thousand changes of method which that history would detail. By a successful change, the cost of production of the new method had always been less, or the article produced had been better. The whole course of change of method in this city had been scientific. It was impossible not to institute in their minds a comparison between the principles which had guided the development of method in Manchester with those principles (if there had ever been any) which had led to the various changes of legal procedure. He then referred to the great changes of the law in the last twenty-five years. The principal changes had been in the mode of procedure; and all these had been based on guesswork, and more or less modified by the desire to effect some job. Most of the changes had been schemed by those who immediately took good places under them. Having got a place, too often the next wish was to turn the place into a sinecure. After this followed abolition of the office, release to the holder from its nominal duties, and a good compensation annuity for life. In bankruptcy, for instance, there had been a constant ringing of changes and creation of sinecures, the history of which, since the establishment of the Court of Review, would be a farce except for the dull stupidity it would from first to last display. He spoke of the power now given to courts of common law to get rid of any teazing business by compulsory arbitration, as one of the most self-condemnatory and disgraceful powers with which courts could be invested—and of the public service Mr. Case, of Maidstone, had performed in bringing the charges of these arbitrators under taxation. His object, however, he said, was not to deal with the history of the legal changes, but to improve the occasion of being at the head-quarters of method. The principle which should determine all changes in procedure was resolvable into the word "economy." He then drew the following conclusions—that to the suitor and client, procedure, or the method of the law, is incalculably of more importance than the abstract rules of the law as to the private relations of man, such as the law of debtor and creditor. That procedure should be dealt with separately from jurisprudential changes; and reforms in it should not be made by the Legislature, but left to a ministerial body. He then proposed, as the two final questions, "How shall we secure that scientific observations on the working of the methods of the law shall continually take place, and that the changes in procedure shall be based on those observations? Courts and officers being all paid now by salary, and not by fees, how shall we secure that they are all kept to their work?" He then argued in favour of the collection of legal statistics by a department of justice, and an annual tabulation of the results, such as that of the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, as the greatest of its duties. He believed the arbitrary and compelled division between the two branches of the profession, the solicitors and the bar, would not be long allowed to exist. He suggested various improvements which would be advisable in the Chancery law and the present system of bankruptcy administration. He pointed ont in detail many antagonisms in point of principle existing between one set of courts and another; and also in the same court; and insisted that it was only by such unintermitted statistical inquiries and annual reports and tabulations, that the inconsistencies at present existing would come under the attention of the Minister of Justice and the public, and all the conflicts of procedure be brought to a scientific conclusion. The point started by Hudibras would be settled in a more serious sense than the satirist intended, for it was of the first importance to the science of procedure that we should be able to pronounce unerringly on the question

> "Whether by common law, or civil,
> A man goes sooner to the devil."

As an instance of the internal conflicts in the theory of procedure adopted in court, Mr. Field referred to the rules so carefully introduced of late in all the Chancery changes, whereby the poorer suitor's affairs are conducted on a speedier plan than those of the richer. He said the Courts had entirely reversed the order of the railways, and required the poor to go by express, and the rich it was who had to travel by the parliamentary train, and to stop at every station, and long enough too. He referred to the want of personal superintendence by the judge of work in the Chancery Chambers, and said that the body of solicitors had from the first been unanimous in protesting against so much of the late changes as did not secure such personal superintendence; and that he believed matters would continue to grow worse, and the curses people bestow upon the Court of Chancery would grow deeper until the judge spent at least three days a week in chambers. Let the solicitors try to guide the public mind to the true point to which the appointment of a Minister of Justice should be addressed. Parliament was sure to overvalue the comparative importance of duties which bore on matters under the eye of the two Houses. The imperfections of Acts of Parliament were nothing compared to a thorough system of procedure carried out by an efficient and well-worked judiciary. Full work was essential to well work; and to effect this thoroughly, little else was wanted than certainty and publicity as to all the facts of the judiciary, both its machinery and its methods. This must be effected dehors the judiciary itself, and was by far the greatest public service that could be rendered by a department of justice; and in the construction of such a department its adaptation to render this service was the first thing that a statesman should consider.

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lowndes, of Liverpool, who was down on the list to read the next paper, the meeting proceeded to the discussion of the proposed rules for the management of the Benevolent Association for the relief of decayed attorneys, solicitors, and proctors, and of their widows and families.

Mr. Banner read over some of the rules, and it was ultimately agreed that rules 3, 12, and 13 be substantially the basis upon which the proposed benevolent society shall be formed; and that all the rules shall be referred to the consideration of the Managing Committee of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, with power to adopt such measures as they may deem expedient for the formation of the society.

Mr. M. D. Lowndes, of Liverpool, then proceeded to read a paper, intitled "Gleanings from old English Writers," as to the status, professional and social, of the practising lawyer before the Commonwealth. Mr. Lowndes favoured the company with many curious legal traditions from the works of William Dugdale, Sir John Fortescue, Thomas of Walsingham, and other legal writers, respecting the inns of court, and the study of the law. There was no division of the business of the lawyer before the Commonwealth; but then, as now, a lawyer in good practice was overwhelmed with business, as was shown in Chaucer's description of the serjeant. During the reigns of the monarchs previous to the reign of James I. the serjeants basked in the sunshine of royalty. Mr. Lowndes read copious extracts to show the regulations then in existence for the management of the profession, and for the avoiding of the increase of members. He then referred to the state and grandeur in which the serjeants and counsellors lived in the Temple in Elizabeth's reign, and proceeded to notice the character of the lawyer given by the dramatists of those times, quoting Shakspeare, Ben Jonson, and Massinger. On a review of the early history of the law, he considered that the upper members of the profession availed themselves of the patronage of royalty to oppress the members of the profession to which those now assembled belonged. He thought the education of the attorney was now of a better class than formerly, though not now sufficient.

The Secretary then read a paper by Mr. J. O. Watson of Liverpool, "On the Rise and Progress of Attorneys and Solicitors as a professional Body." In the course of the paper, it was suggested that an earlier examination of articled clerks should be made than at present, and he would have the establishment of public lectures on law throughout the kingdom. The expenses might be met by fees on admission. He also suggested that the law prohibiting any solicitor from having more than two articled clerks should be abolished. The policy of the law ought to be to encourage the placing of young men with attorneys of the highest character. The most important consideration was that of costs, and it was impossible to imagine any system more discouraging to men of talent than the present. He thought the Scotch system much superior to ours. In every other profession skill and experience received a large reward, but it was the opposite in the profession of the law. According to the present system, an attorney received less remuneration for bringing a negotiation to an early and satisfory conclusion. He thought the present system of taxation of costs ought to be abolished, which pressed very unjustly upon the country practitioner. As a partial remedy—with respect to costs of conveyances, he was favourable to the Scotch system of costs, but doubted if it could be made applicable to England; but it suggested a system which was adopted in the courts of equity, that the costs should be in proportion to the amount of purchase-money. In respect to other business, the taxing-master should not be confined to a fixed scale. He suggested other alterations in the law as it at present affects bills of costs. The interests of attorney and client were intimately blended, and what tended to promote the interests of one would affect the interests of the other.

The Chairman read a paper by Mr. J. P. Aston, of Manchester, on "The Establishment of an Educational Qualification for Attorneys." The writer thought less had been done in this respect in their profession than others. The only source to which attorneys could look for the elevation of their profession rested with themselves. The united efforts of the attorneys to accomplish this end was necessary. The law associations had done much, and had the power to confer greater benefits on the educational status of attorneys. Every law association should seek to establish a junior association connected with itself composed of articled clerks, and the admission should depend upon the production of a certificate that the applicant had received a certain amount of education. To create a desire to be admitted into the junior association some inducements would be necessary. The connection between the parent and junior associations should be made to be felt real, and not merely nominal. The having been a member of a junior association might be made a primâ facie recommendation for admission into the senior association.

Mr. Wells, of Hull, thought they ought to be careful, before taking articled clerks, to ascertain their antecedents, and that they had mixed in such society as would give them those principles of honour which were essential to members of their profession. He agreed with Mr. Watson, that there was no occasion for fixing a limit to the number of articled clerks. With respect to conveyances, he did not think the Scotch system could be attended with advantage in England. As to costs, he hoped there would be an alteration in the system which prevented an attorney engaged in a trial in town getting his costs. As to Mr. Aston's paper, he was glad to say the articled clerks in his town had formed an association for their own improvement; but if such a thing emanated from the profession it would be an incentive to emulation.

Mr. Lawrance, of London, thought all the papers which had emanated from provincial towns did credit to the writers. The education of the attorney was all important, and they ought to afford every opportunity for a large, liberal, and enlightened education, which is the surest mode of making a man become a valuable member of society. The best service they could render to the profession was for them to insist upon an improved education amongst those who were competing for admission into their profession. The interest of the client required beyond all question that the attorney should be highly educated, and the client would be the first to discover the ignorance of his attorney. They ought, therefore, to insist upon education, and the highest and most unblemished integrity.

Mr. Field said suggestions had been made to the Incorporated Law Society with regard to examination before articles, and legal education; but nothing had yet been done, and no answer had been sent to the communications sent; and if the Incorporated Society did not speak to the judges on the subject, they would.

The Chairman said the subject referred to had been under the consideration of the committee, who had reported to the Council, and the subject had been again referred to the committee, and they found it impossible to do all they desired. With regard to the education previous to articles, it could not be effected without legislative interference.

Mr. Allen, of Birmingham, said, some ten years ago a Law Student Society was formed, which had been of immense benefit to the profession there; and the Secretary to the Society, Mr. Johnson, had been appointed to the law professorship in Queen's College.

Mr. Field proposed a resolution again calling the attention of the Incorporated Law Society to the subject of examination before articles, and to the subject of education; and if the matter were not taken up, the Association would take steps to further the object.

Mr. S. Heelis seconded the motion, and it was adopted.

An adjournment for ten minutes then took place. Upon resuming business,

The Secretary read a paper, by Mr. C. M. Ingleby, of Birmingham, upon "The Evils of the present System of Bankruptcy Administration." The paper stated, that, 14 years ago, the system of working bankruptcies by a specially-constituted local administration was superseded by the establishment of the present district courts. The advantages which the framers of the Bill proposed to effect by the measure were the following:—1. Conducting the business by qualified public officers, whose experience would give their services an increasing value; 2. Holding meetings and keeping the accounts at certain large towns, where all interested persons might have readier access than at the places (possibly remote and inaccessible) where the bankruptcies might have occurred; 3. Keeping the records in public offices, where every one could apply for and obtain all desired information, to intrust the accounts to official assignees, to give publicity to the proceedings, and to supersede all local—and, possibly, interested—authority, uniformity of practice, &c. No object could be better; and faultless as the theory was, the practice had not been realised. Since the Act of 1849, there had been a progressive decline in the business of the court. The number of cases adjudicated upon in bankruptcy, upon an average of the ten years previous to the operation of the Act, was 1,443 per annum; but the number subsequent to its operation, on an average of the four years immediately succeeding that Act, was 786 per annum. The dividends under the old system were 64½ per cent, and the balance paid into court 8¾; while under the new system the dividends were 33¼, and the balance paid into court 3½. The monster evil of the present system seemed to be that the creditors had the least consideration. There was no doubt that the expensiveness of the court was a main cause of the business being so carefully kept out of it, and the first step towards making it suitable for its purpose was a thorough revision and reduction of all the charges to which an estate was subjected—official, professional, or otherwise The Bill introduced into the House of Lords by Lord Brougham entitled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Bankruptcy," was practically an Act to perpetuate the evils of the present system. The writer considered it impossible that much improvement would take place in legislation on the subject unti Mr. Coode's method of consolidation was adopted.

The Secretary also read a paper upon Bankruptcy and Insolvency by Mr. T. Laidman, of Exeter. The paper was devoted principally to tracing the progress of the Acts for the relief of insolvent debtors, and showed the impolicy of the present law of imprisonment for debt, save as regarded fraud. The writer argued, that no man should be imprisoned for debt before the hearing of his case; but after the hearing, if found guilty of any of the offences named in the Act of Parliament, then he should be punished with imprisonment, according to the extent of the offence committed.

Mr. Hope Shaw said there had been a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce at Leeds on this important question. Mr. Bond had read a paper, and the value and importance of the assistance of the profession was recognised by the mercantile community, and their body were ready to render the community every assistance in their power. At the meeting alluded to it was thought desirable to unite the administration of the bankruptcy and insolvency laws under one jurisdiction. The county courts had been suggested, but it was thought the Bankruptcy Court was the proper one. Then it was considered if it was not desirable to abolish the office of official assignee, and it was thought desirable the office should be abolished. Mr. Bond further recommended that all cases whatever should go into court, but he was not prepared to see the advantage of that. Then a question was raised whether there should be an itinerant judge of appeal. To that he was not at present prepared to assent, as the authority of the court might be weakened, and an undue increase of appeals might take place.

Mr. Wells said there were only two questions creditors thought fit to discuss—the best mode of getting a proper division of the property at the least expense, and whether the debtor had acted in such a way as to merit punishment in a court. He thought the cheapest mode of winding up an estate was by a trust assignment, without an appeal to the Court of Bankruptcy. He did not seek to abolish the official assignee, but he did seek to abolish the extravagant mode in which he was paid. He ought to be more under the power of the solicitor to the estate than he now was, and not to be—as he now considered himself to be—a privileged person. He suggested other alterations which would enable an estate to be wound up as cheaply in bankruptcy as under a deed of assignment.

Mr. Heelis said there were two Bankruptcy Courts in Manchester, and instead of there being similarity of practice there was diversity. One would not stir except upon petition, and the other scouted petitions altogether, and would have affidavits. The messengers and official assignees started with this proposition in each case: "How much can we get out of this?" From the laziness which seemed to pervade the courts, all tended to show that the officials did as little as possible for their money, and at the same time sought to get as much as they could. The official assignees completely ignored their duties. He did not understand, that, in accordance with the principle of the bankruptcy law, it was requisite that there should be an accountant to investigate the accounts. The official assignees were the parties appointed to get rid of the accountants, according to his interpretation of the spirit of the Act. And then, irrespective of the dissimilarity of the practice of the two commissioners, it never could have been contemplated by the Legislature that gentlemen should receive £1,800 a year for doing—what? There were two commissioners—one professed to sit on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday; and the other on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. He had been so utterly disgusted, that he had not gone near the place for some time past; but when he was in the habit of going, if he went at eleven o'clock, the commissioner was not there; and if he went at twelve o'clock, the commissioner was just arriving. All the business of the court was appointed for that hour; there was such confusion consequently as ought not to exist in a court of justice, and the business was transacted in the most slovenly manner possible. He considered that any man of ordinary legal attainments could do all the business of the Manchester Bankruptcy Courts and make an easy week's work of it. The system was rotten altogether, and he did not believe that the proposed Bill would remedy the evils he complained of.

Mr. Ryland stated that the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce had prepared a Bill for the amendment of the bankruptcy law, which went further than Lord Brougham's Bill.

Mr. Lawrance said, after many years' practice, he was quite cognisant of the many grievous defects, not to say sins, of the present system. The great grievance in the administration of bankruptcy was the expense, and, as it was a State institution, the costs ought to be charged upon the Consolidated Fund, instead of upon the suitors. Another grievance was, the universal and indiscriminate appointment of a messenger, which gave rise to a considerable amount of plunder. Many of these messengers were receiving incomes of £1,400 or £1,500 a year, for discharging no other duty than putting somebody in possession at 3*s.* 6*d.* a day. This had been brought before the attention of the Chancellor, and even he had been stimulated into a rage at the very idea of the thing. This money came out of the pockets of the creditors; therefore, beyond inflicting upon an unfortunate man the monstrous nuisance of a man in possession, it was a grievous injustice to the creditors. They all knew that a very good butler would make a very good messenger; therefore, he would not give power to a commissioner, but the petitioning creditor should have power to determine if such an expense should be entailed. The broker to the court was a simple absurdity, and formerly no such officer existed. Their mode of doing business was atrocious. If the estate was to be administered for the protection of creditors, they ought to have a voice in the mode and time in which the property was to be protected. With all possible respect for vested rights, he could not conceive, while the vested rights of other persons were dealt with most unscrupulously, why such a broker or messenger should claim compensation for vested rights when those vested rights were—to use a mild term—vested wrongs. While speaking of official assignees, they must remember the jobbery and malversation which existed under the old system. He thought Lord Brougham was entitled to great credit for laying his axe to the root of the old system. He had brought his mind to the conclusion, that official assignees, as a body, were a useful body; they were under the immediate surveillance of the Court; they gave security; and they were generally ready to defer to the advice of solicitors, and he had not found that antagonism between them and solicitors which some had been so unfortunate as to find. He thought the suggestion that official assignees should be paid partly by salary and partly by fees was a good suggestion. As regarded the mode in which commissioners did their business, he thought with his friend Mr. Heelis that the work might be done thoroughly well by much fewer hands. He thought two good men well paid would do the work well in London. The more work a man had to do the better he would do it. Confidence had been shaken by the slovenly mode in which business had been done, the tone adopted in the court, and the inordinate time occupied by the commissioners in their vacation. This must be brought about by a pressure upon the commissioners, and giving them more work to do. He then alluded to the extravagant part of the system of accountants in bankruptcy; and then said he thought the Bankruptcy Courts were unpopular with the mercantile classes because those classes did not like undue interference with the management of their estates; creditors wished to administer their own estates in their own way. Assignments were all very well when there was no dishonesty on the part of creditors as well as on the part of the debtor. It was, therefore, necessary that a judicially constituted court should exist to meet these difficulties. He did not think it practicable to amalgamate the two businesses of bankruptcy and insolvency. The attempt in London had failed, the only result being that the commissioner got an extra £500 a year, and the insolvency business went away, but the increase of salary remained. With respect to the Registrars of the court, he could not find out what they did, and he could not understand how any gentleman of education could possibly exist under the infliction of so much idleness. He thought this was an expense that might be saved. A roving court of appeal had been suggested, but he thought that a great mistake. He thought there was a great deal of work to be done in this matter by the mercantile community, and a good deal of the reform necessary must be initiated by the Chambers of Commerce. He should be happy to co-operate with any mercantile men who took an interest in law reform in its wholesome sense.

Mr. Field argued in favour of official assignees being elected by creditors, and the present disgraceful system of patronage put an end to. He thought Mr. Lawrance was wrong in wishing to throw the expenses in the Bankruptcy Court upon the public at large.

The Chairman observed, that the discussion which had taken place had been the most interesting they had ever had. Five papers had now been read and discussed, out of a list of twelve, and it was time to adjourn.

An adjournment then took place until ten o'clock on Saturday morning.

Saturday, Oct. 10.

The third meeting of members was held on Saturday morning at the Town Hall; Mr. W. S. Cookson again presiding.—The attendance was very small.

The first paper was read by Mr. T. H. Devonshire (London), on "The Statute Law Commission andS tatute-making." Mr. Devonshire gave a clever sketch of the history of his subjects, his conclusions being—1. That a complete classified index of all existing statute law should be made; 2. That every future statute should be so framed as to contain within itself a reference to all the existing statute law on the same subject; 3. That a sessional index or register be kept of every future statute, classified according to its subject-matter; 4. That the work of consolidation should follow upon and flow out of an improved system of statute making, rather than take precedence of any matured plan, or be attempted before all requisite materials are adequately arranged and digested.

Mr. T. Kennedy (London) gave a sketch of a paper he had prepared, on "The Jurisdiction and Practice of the Court of Chancery;" it being understood that the paper would be printed in the Association's proceedings.

Mr. Field thought the occasion ought not to pass without expressing their sense of obligation to Mr. Kennedy, not only for the paper which he had contributed, but for the attention which he had always devoted to the subject. The time was come when a more popular history of the Court of Chancery than we now had might be written; and there were men present in that room, than whom none in the kingdom were more able to produce such a work.

Mr. J. M. Clabon (London) read his paper on "The Insufficiency of Existing Laws to prevent Corrupt Practices at Elections." Bribery and treating (he said) dated from the beginning of the 17th century. Prior to the Rebellion, the acceptance of a seat was considered a burden, or at least a duty. But a change soon occurred; and when the Stuarts had fallen, a seat became a prize to be fought for. As a natural consequence, bribery and treating were resorted to; and in 1695 the first Act against those crimes was passed. From time to time Parliament had set to work with apparent zeal to get at a remedy; Acts had been followed by Acts to amend Acts; and Parliament had done everything but the one thing needful. Bribery and treating would never be prevented until every member was compelled to make a clean breast of it, as to the past, the present, and the future, in the presence of his peers. "The past" must include all relating to the previous session; and the declaration must be bold, sweeping, honest (Applause). The changes made by the Corrupt Practices Act, 1854, were five in number—the creation of the offence of "undue influence;" perpetual disqualification of guilty persons from voting; agents for election expenses; the election auditor; and the permission given to persons employed about the election to vote. This last provision was a serious evil, and a great prevention to purity of election. It was said, that the small comparative number of petitions after the last general election proved the good effect of the new Act. But candidates presented themselves then under a fear that was not real—the Act was to them a bugbear. But now that it had been proved what the Act was, a candidate who intended to procure his election by any means, foul or fair, would not, and need not, be prevented by any fear of the Act. The election agent was to some extent a shield to the pure candidate; but his existence and power would have no effect upon an impure one. The real remedy for corrupt practices was to operate upon the giver of a bribe, not upon its receiver.

Mr. Anderton (London) knew from his own experience that the Corrupt Practices Act was complete humbug; that it gave no advantage to the public, and very little security to the candidates. At the last election for the city of London, at which he was the auditor, the expenses of Lord John Russell were 3,222*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*; but he had no power, as auditor, to disallow a single sixpence. He had no power of saying that too many messengers or too many clerks had been employed, or of inquiring whether any of the persons so employed were voters. The aggregate expenses of the four other candidates amounted only to 3,751*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*

Mr. S. Heelis apprehended that a great deal of the difficulty would be removed if Parliament would only come to the consideration of the question of agency with something like common sense. In the case of the Bury petition, to which Mr. Clabon had alluded, the gentleman upon whom it was tried to fasten charges of bribery was a most active partisan, and had told him (Mr. Heelis) that he could not understand why the petition should have been lost upon the question of agency. A very slight alteration in the legislation upon this point would do immense good.

Mr. Leverson (London) believed the real difficulty might be got rid of if members of Parliament would agree to the declaration to which Mr. Clabon had referred.

Mr. Anderton stated that out of the whole amount expended by the five candidates at the city of London election, not £100 went into the hands of solicitors.

After some further conversation, the Chairman stated, that, in pursuance of the previous arrangement, no more papers could be read at the present meeting.

Upon the motion of Mr. Ball, seconded by Mr. Tree, it was resolved—

"That the papers which there has not been time to read at this meeting be referred to the Committee of Management of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, to deal with as, on consultation with the respective writers, they shall deem expedient."

As the result of a conversation, it was agreed that any or all of the four unread papers might be discussed at the meeting at Bristol next year, if such should be considered necessary, when the arrangements for that meeting were being made; and Mr. T. P. Bunting said, that he should be no doubt able to mature his contribution "Observations on the Law of Mortmain," he having had very little time for its preparation.

Mr. Field proposed a vote of thanks to Sir James Watts, Mayor of Manchester, for the use of the Town Hall, and for his munificent hospitality to members of the Association; and it was carried by acclamation. Votes of thanks, similarly dealt with, were passed to Stephen Heelis, Esq., Mayor of Salford, for his kindness and hospitality; to the Manchester Law Association, and to Mr. F. Marriott, its Honorary Secretary; to Mr. Cookson, President of the Metropolitan and Provincial Association, for presiding at the meetings; and to Messrs. W. Shaen and C. J. Manning, Secretary and Assistant-Secretary of the last-named Association.

The proceedings terminated shortly before noon.

The annual dinner of the Manchester Law Association was given on Friday evening, in the large room of the Albion Hotel, Piccadilly. About 150 gentlemen sat down; the principal members of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association being present as guests.—Mr. James Crossley President of the Manchester Association presided. In giving the toast, "The Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association," the Chairman said, that the usefulness and value of that Association had been sufficiently proved by its ten years' existence, and by the innumerable advantages it had secured to the Profession during that period. It had established a bond of unity, a facility of co-operation, and an harmonious system of working, that never previously existed to any thing like the same extent. From the attention it had bestowed on legal and legislative changes, it had been of considerable service to the public generally. By bringing together the various knowledge and powers of different professional men throughout the kingdom, it had very considerably increased the influence, weight, and intelligence of all. But what he regarded as its greatest service, was the good understanding it had established between the provincial and the leading metropolitan solicitors. Speaking for himself, he could unhesitatingly say, that their intercourse with their metropolitan brethren, through the agency of the Association, had always been extremely gratifying and satisfactory. To those brethren the provincial solicitors were, and must be, indebted, for taking upon themselves, in a great measure, the active working of the Association; and they had always found their metropolitan friends large-minded, liberal, and disinterested; in no respect entertaining selfish or exclusive views—but gentlemen in whom the fullest and most entire confidence could be reposed. In no respect had the Association been more fortunate, and in none were the results likely to be more useful and valuable, than in the establishment of the annual "progresses;" which concentrated so agreeably the members of the various provincial societies, and others of the profession, and which gave rise to so many valuable suggestions, important views, and able discussions.

Mr. W. S. Cookson, President of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, in responding, said, that whatever might have been the difficulties with which the Association might have had to contend, it was impossible now, after the countenance and support received last year in Liverpool, and this week in Manchester, to suppose that if the Association was true to itself it could possibly fail to accomplish the objects for which it had been formed, and which he believed it to be steadily, perseveringly, and honestly carrying out. For if integrity of purpose, unity of action, and a great object were sufficient to stimulate men to labour in a cause, assuredly the Association ought to succeed. They had, in the first place, to unite, for a common object, the whole body of their profession; and he wished that any words of his could convey his deep impression, that, if each would use, in his own sphere, the powers God had given him, a few years hence the Association would see that at this time it was but in its infancy, much as had been done; and that they were really united for great and noble objects for the benefit of the community whose servants the members of the Association were. The kind receptions of Liverpool and Manchester were the best encouragement of the members of that Association; for the provincial meetings had done very much to remove any feeling of jealousy between the different branches of the Profession in London and the provinces. No greater injury could be done to them, or through them to the public, than the creation of a feeling that there was, or was ground for, anything like jealousy or difference of interest.

Mr. E. Lawrance proposed "The Manchester Law Association." He impressed upon the young members, that on them not only the future of such Associations but the energy of the present depended; and that in no other Profession should it be more deeply engraved upon the hearts of all, that no victory was worthy of being won, which was not the result of the purest truth and the most simple honesty. Let them remember Lord Tenterden, one of the most honest and upright judges who ever adorned the English bench, and who attributed his success in life mainly to his strict adherence to truth. After alluding to the reception of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association in Liverpool and Manchester, Mr. Lawrance said that it must be highly gratifying to the members of that and the Manchester Association, that to the meetings here had been added increased lustre by the presidency of the gentleman who occupied the chair (Mr. Crossley). When they found the most unquestionable social qualities and the rarest erudition combined with the highest professional reputation—how gratifying it was to know, or to be reminded, that their laborious profession was not incompatible with the cultivation of the most extended knowledge and the most refined taste.

Mr. W. Beamont acknowledged the toast. He said that no man could really be so conscious of his own rectitude as to be indifferent to the good opinion of his fellow-men; and it was of equal importance with a society as with an individual, that it should receive the countenance of, and be appreciated by, those whose opinions were worthy of being heard. He regretted that law societies, and the Manchester Association especially, were not originated years before they were; for in that case, those ridiculous things which many of them could remember would not have existed so long. The Law Association of Manchester would recollect its name, and recollect also, that, connected with such a city, it had duties of no ordinary kind to perform. They must not let abuses creep into the law; to watch against them was one great object of the Association's existence. Nor must they for a moment allow themselves to suppose that society was made for lawyers, instead of lawyers being made for society. Let them never, while anxiously looking to discover where abuses had crept or might creep in, be guided by any selfish motive arising from the thought that lawyers were alone to be cared for in alterations or reforms. They must look to the community and its good—then their own advantage was certain, as members of that community; they must work for the good of the common weal—then their reward was sure.

"The Incorporated Law Society" was proposed by Mr. HADFIELD, M.P., and responded to by Mr. J. H. SHAW. The Mayor of Manchester proposed "The Chairman."

In acknowledging the toast, Mr. CROSSLEY said, that it was twenty years ago, when, as the first President of the Manchester Law Association, he presided at its first annual dinner; at which time he certainly never expected to preside, for the society, over such a gathering as the present.

Correspondence.

EDINBURGH.—(From our own Correspondent.)

It was mentioned recently that the office of sheriff substitute at Cupar-Fife had become vacant by the death of Mr. Grant. The office has been filled up by the translation of Mr. Taylor from Tain; and Mr. Smith, an advocate of a few years' standing, has been appointed to Tain. The only other legal news of any interest arises out of a conviction in a recent smuggling case in Leith, where, under the 236th sect. of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, seven seamen were charged with having been found on board a vessel in which some contraband tobacco was concealed; and, the charge having been proved, were sentenced each to pay a penalty of £100, or, in default of payment, to suffer imprisonment during her Majesty's pleasure. There was no allegation or proof that the men were aware of the tobacco being on board; and it is stated that the solicitor of the Customs from London, who conducted the case, had admitted that passengers might be included in the charge (as, indeed, is very evident from the terms of the statute, although he explained that the Commissioners of the Customs, in the exercise of a sound discretion, only selected that portion of the crew of a vessel in the locality of whose sleeping-place the tobacco might chance to be found. The Leith public, however, not having unlimited confidence in the discretion of the Commissioners of Customs, and being rather startled at the magnitude of the power vested in them, have stirred very actively in the matter; and at a meeting held on the 13th inst., upon the requisition of many influential merchants, and presided over by the Lord Provost, adopted important resolutions, having for their object the repeal of the offensive statute. The proceedings of the meeting were conducted with unusual good taste, every speaker taking care to point out that the prosecutor and the judges had only performed a plain duty, and that in a manner which could not be excepted to; and that, therefore, the only constitutional mode of dealing with the grievance was, to take measures to obtain the repeal of the statute. It was stated, that the whole revenue derived by Government from the duty on tobacco was under £100,000; and it was strongly urged that it would be better to abandon it altogether than to collect it under statutes which could be made engines for the perpetration of the most gross injustice.

Review.

The Laws relating to Burials: with Notes, Forms, and Practical Instructions. By T. BAKER, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. Maxwell. 1857.

With regard to the three great crises of a man's life, the parental anxiety of the State has been hitherto unequally manifested. Little or no interference has been exercised as to the manner of his birth; while sedulous care has long been taken that he shall enter decorously into matrimony; and, but of late years only, to guard against his earthly remains proving unpleasant to the survivors. The Registration Office, indeed, is a link common to the three events; but it is in reference to social economy, rather than statistics, that we are speaking. It is, then, only recently that the interment of our dead has been regulated by any general law. Before the Metropolitan Interments Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 52), the state of parochial graveyards, both in the metropolis itself and elsewhere, was abandoned, in most instances, to the discretion or cupidity of the incumbent and his sexton: and, as population increased, the evils resulting from this state of things became, year by year, more appalling; and excited the vigorous efforts of the most enlightened of our sanitary reformers. It is true that cemeteries—modern inventions compared to church graveyards—have been usually regulated by special Acts of Parliament passed at the time of their several formations; and by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 65, certain provisions usually contained in such Acts were consolidated, so as to avoid the necessity of repeating them in reference to each undertaking of this description. But these statutory provisions were quite insufficient for the occasion; and the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 52, also, being found defective, was superseded by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85—"the foundation," as Mr. Baker remarks, "of the present law for the establishment and regulation of burial grounds throughout the country." By this statute several important canons were for the first time established on a firm basis—as, for example, that old burial grounds may be closed by Order in Council; and that the approval of the Home Secretaries is a condition precedent to the opening of fresh ones. This Act, it is true, had reference only to the metropolis; but many of its provisions (including these cardinal ones) were, by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 134, made applicable to all the different parishes in England and Wales. These two Acts, therefore, require to be carefully collated before any clear conception can be arrived at as to the present law on the subject of interment, whether in the metropolis or elsewhere: and the later provisions upon the same general subject, contained in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 87, the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, and the 20 & 21 Vict. cc. 35, 81—referring, as they do, some of them to the metropolis alone, others to the metropolis in common with parishes placed without its limits, and others to parishes so situated to the exclusion of the metropolis—form altogether an olla podrida of the true relish, perhaps, for such legal epicures as ourselves and our readers, but somewhat too strong for the stomach of those of the laity who, as members of "burial boards" or in other capacities, are compelled to master their complexities. To Mr. Baker such persons owe a debt of much gratitude; for he has done for them what their representatives in the Legislature have been too lazy to attempt—viz. "to render clear the present state of the law at one view, under separate heads," by printing those sections of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85, which laid the foundations of the general enactments, and adding in each division of the subject such amendments made by subsequent statutes as affect or alter the original provisions. In fact, that part of Mr. Baker's book which does not consist merely of the text of the existing Acts bearing on his subject, printed in their chronological order—that is to say, the first eighty pages or thereabouts of the volume—form a draft from which a very neat "Burial Law Consolidation Act" could be formed with little trouble. We make a present of the suggestion to any unoccupied and ambitious member of Parliament; and he may make good use of it during the ensuing session, on the "off nights" not taken up with India. Alas! the subjects have a terrible connection just at present.

The general features, however, of this interment system, elaborated with such pains in the cluster of Acts to which we have referred, are easily mastered. And the subject naturally divides itself into those provisions which affect burial places already existing, and those which have reference to the formation of fresh ones. As to the first, then, authority is given to the Crown in Council to order, that, within a specified period, no further interments shall take place in any burial ground or place of burial mentioned in the order, in any city or town throughout England or Wales—on its being represented by the Home Secretary (with reference to the burial ground or place in question) that such course is expedient for the protection of the public health. And, further, that Orders in Council may also issue, on a similar representation, for the repair of vaults and graves by the churchwardens or others at the expense of the parish, if they have been suffered to remain in a dangerous condition, or so as to be injurious to the public health. And it may be remarked, that, to bury in disobedience to such order of discontinuance, is, by one Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 134, s. 3), made a misdemeanor; and, by another (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, s. 2), is visited with a pecuniary penalty, recoverable before two justices of the peace—a jumble of remedies which has not escaped the lynx eye of Mr. Baker; who consoles himself, however, by presuming, "that, though there may be a choice of punishment, both would not be enforced" (p. 18, n. b). Such being the way to get rid of those burying places which have given evidence of their being entitled to repose, let us next briefly describe the machinery for procuring and regulating their successors. For this purpose, the Acts proceed to manufacture "a Board"—that singular creation of modern times, without whose ministration so many of our municipal and social enterprises would speedily come to a standstill. In any parish, then, a "Burial Board," consisting of not less than three, or more than nine, ratepayers, may be appointed by the vestry at a meeting convened for that purpose; and this corporation, for so the Board is constituted (after appointing clerks, officers, and servants, at "reasonable salaries"), is to purchase the needful new burial ground wherever they can meet with a favourable site, either within or without the parish. But no such ground may be opened within one hundred yards of any dwelling-house without the written consent of the owner and occupier. If the bishop of the diocese will not consecrate the site so acquired, the Acts give an appeal to the archbishop of the province; and, when consecrated, it is to be the burial ground of the parish, in which all parties are to have the same rights as in the old ground. To the Burial Board, moreover, is intrusted the general management of all these parish cemeteries. They are to fix (with the approbation of the Home Secretary) the fees to be taken on interments; they are to sell rights of burial in vaults, and of erecting monuments; and are, to a certain extent, to take the place with regard to the new burial ground, that the incumbent occupies with regard to his churchyard. On the other hand, the Board itself is placed under the wholesome supervision of the Secretary of State; who has power from time to time to issue such regulations both in relation to the burial grounds themselves and to the places for the reception of bodies previously to interment, as to him may seem proper for the protection and maintenance of the public health and decency; and may ascertain that such regulations are effectively complied with, through the medium of an Inspector appointed for that purpose.

We have already said that we consider this book a useful one in its conception. We add, with pleasure, that it also seems to us—so far as it goes—to be well executed. We are obliged thus to qualify our commendation, because, though the subject is not one which admits of the disclosure of any profound stores of learning, and still less of any scintillations of genius, yet, had the researches "of Southwood, Smith, Walker, Chadwick, and others," of whose "enlightened efforts" Mr. Baker speaks in his Introduction, been carefully ransacked, we suspect they would have furnished some results and tables, which might advantageously have enriched the present volume. As it is, Mr. Baker's own contribution to its contents bears a very slender proportion to that afforded by the statute book itself.

Money Market.

CITY, FRIDAY EVENING.

The directors of the Bank made a further advance on Monday of one per Cent. in their rate for discount, which now stands at 7 per Cent. The pressure for money has been very great all the week. It seemed to increase rather than diminish after the above-mentioned advance, under the expectation probably that there would be a still further rise. This expectation, if it existed, has not been realised, and the demand for money, though still active, is less extensive. The arrivals of specie from Australia during the week have been large. The amount reported by the Red Jacket, the King Philip, and the Royal Charter, is about £784,000. The mail steamer which left Southampton for the Cape on Tuesday, took out £105,000 in gold. The fluctuations in the English Funds have daily been very considerable. The lowest quotation of Consols was 86½ per Cent. on Tuesday. The closing price this afternoon is 88⅜ to 88½ per Cent. showing a fall of about one per Cent. since this day week.

Further intelligence from the United States is expected with great anxiety. From that quarter will probably come an impulse for better or worse, which will be felt, not only in England, but throughout Europe.

From the Bank of England return for the week ending the 10th October, 1857, which we give below, it appears that the amount of notes in circulation is £19,990,110, being an increase of £42,835; and the stock of bullion in both departments is £10,109,943, showing a decrease of £552,749 when compared with the previous return. It should be observed, that the reserve of notes in the banking department of the Bank stands in the same account at £4,024,400, having suffered a reduction during the week of £581,640.

The past week has been a time of extraordinary excitement and anxiety. It is, however, satisfactory to be enabled to remark, that the aspect of affairs has been more favourable during the last three days than during the previous part of the week. On Saturday intelligence from America showed that the panic and embarrassment in that country had increased in a degree which must produce continued and ruinous depression in the value of stocks and shares, and almost all property The banks of Philadelphia, Rhode Island, Baltimore, and Washington had been obliged to suspend payment. Manufacturers were working short time, and discharging hands. A partial or total suspension of labour was taking place in the woollen and cotton manufacturing establishments of New England. The list of commercial failures contained a multitude of establishments, and the rate of discount obtained on the best bills ranged from 20 to 30 per cent.

An immense amount of commercial remittances is due to English houses, which is accumulating every week. It is estimated that the total of United States securities in stocks and railways held in this country is from £80,000,000 to £100,000,000 sterling, and it is confidently stated that purchases of American stocks by English capitalists continue on a large scale. Many of these stocks and railways are liable to calls already made, the effect of which is to require payments from the holders. Moreover, the opportunity of sharing in the immense profits made by discounting bills inclines men who have ready money here to send it across the Atlantic. Accordingly, in place of our receiving a million sterling from the United States, it was reported that £400,000 was being sent to New York and Boston in the present week; but this report has been modified, and a much smaller amount named. In addition to these drains and disappointments on the side of America, the pressure for money on behalf of the East Indies is heavy. The Bank of Bengal refuses to make advances on Government bills except at very short date; and it has been stated that the East India Company are again seeking, but unsuccessfully, to borrow of the Bank of England, but this report is contradicted. On the continent of Europe generally, and particularly in Hamburg, where the rate of discount has advanced to 9 per cent, and in Holland and Germany, the value of money is rising, and universal pressure prevails.

Under these circumstances, the advance on Monday, by the Bank of England, of its rate for discount, was inevitable. But although it caused an immense sensation, and although the probability of a further advance caused an almost unprecedented demand for discounts, a feeling was exhibited that the external shocks sustained by our finance will not destroy confidence, nor interrupt the general welfare of the country. Failures have been numerous, and some of them heavy, both on the Stock Exchange and in the manufacturing districts. The liabilities of firms at Glasgow, whose suspension has been announced, are alleged to amount to an aggregate of £1,500,000. It is natural to look back and call to mind the state of affairs ten years ago this present month. There is not now as then any break-up of a vast system of unsuccessful speculation; on the contrary, our trade and manufactures are believed to be in a healthful state. There is now an absence of all panic. Persons who have capital lend freely; at high rates of course. The payment of dividends at the Bank commenced on Wednesday.

The unfavourable nature of the late returns of the Bank of France exceeds the expectations entertained on this side. The harvest in France proved to be of surpassing productiveness, and yet the exportation of grain continues prohibited—not, it is said, from any anticipation of want, but to enable certain contracts to be conveniently fulfilled. If the people of France were permitted to export their surplus grain, some return of specie would probably ensue; whereas, under prohibitory regulations, the supply of bullion is so short that £37,960 has been expended in the last four weeks in premiums on purchase of gold and silver; notwithstanding which, the cash in hand at the head office and in the branches has decreased in the same time no less than £896,000, and stands at £9,022,600. The directors have now raised their rate of discount to 6½ per cent. The rate since June last has been 5½ per cent. In the interval the decrease in their stock of bullion has amounted to £2,400,000. The consequence of continuing the lower rate we find has been an increase of above a million under the head of commercial bills discounted, and also a large augmentation in bank notes issued to order, which augmented issue enables the Bank to grant this additional accommodation in discounting bills of exchange. These circumstances indicate the presence of speculative and dangerous operations in the monetary system of France. We hope it may pass away without any great pecuniary commotion. The public funds have not experienced any great depression. Trade is reported to be sound and active, both in Paris and in the provinces. The price of wheat and flour is gradually declining. A considerable fall has taken place in the price of silk, and it continues to go down; and as the recent favourable reports of the vintage are fully confirmed, the price of wine may also be expected to decline.

LONDON, OCTOBER 24, 1857.

BIRMINGHAM LAW REFORMERS.

The proceedings of the jurisprudence section of the Birmingham Association have ranged over almost every possible topic of law reform. From the minutest details of bankruptcy procedure up to the grandest schemes for the consolidation of all our tribunals, and the codification of all our law, nothing seems to have come amiss to Lord John Russell's parliament of lawyers. One gentleman extends his views to the entire amalgamation and fusion of existing courts, and suggests the appointment of a Royal Commission to settle the details of the projected reform, to introduce everywhere natural in place of artificial procedure, and to form one universal code of law and equity for all the dominions of the British Crown. The same class of ideas were developed, in another paper, into a scheme for what is termed the recordation of the law, which appears to include, in the author's conception, the creation of universal codes and "omni-competent" tribunals, the establishment of a methodical system of judicial statistics, and an elaborate and exhaustive mode of indexing the whole body of our law, which is expected to place its most hidden mysteries within the reach of every inquirer. Among the more definite projects, which belong rather to the law generally than to any special branch of it, we may notice, as an important and practical matter, the proposal to form a complete collection of judicial statistics, without which rational legislation on the administrative departments of the law is really impossible. The subject was pressed on the attention of Parliament by Lord Brougham in the course of the last session, and we are glad to see that the Association is lending its influence to the same cause. Perhaps the most novel of all the suggestions which the recent meeting has called forth, is a project for the foundation of a sort of law charity in the metropolis. The idea is to constitute a species of hospital for poor suitors, to be called "The Free Conference Hall," and to be supported by voluntary contributions, with such assistance towards building expenses as the Government may be disposed to give. The proposed society is to consist of some hundreds of barristers and solicitors, out of whom a sufficient number are to attend daily to afford to all comers legal advice and assistance, without a bill of costs; and, in certain special cases, it is intended that the institution should take upon itself the conduct of actual litigation on behalf of its unfortunate clients. This marvellous piece of philanthropy was ingeniously recommended by the supposed parallel cases of hospitals and dispensaries, and by a reference to the gratuitous spiritual consolations sometimes administered by the clergy. We may, perhaps, be rather blind; but we really do not see the justice of this comparison, and with the utmost admiration for the large benevolence of the scheme, we confess we do not think that it is likely to be carried out, or to do much good if it were. The paper is, nevertheless, of use, in pointing out the very defective provisions for the conduct of litigation "in formâ pauperis," which might be materially improved by adopting something like the practice of the Scotch courts in this respect. The objects to be kept in view are, to provide the means of obtaining justice for bonâ fide applicants who may be too poor to proceed in the ordinary way, and, at the same time, to abate the nuisance of a class of poor litigants, who are sure to be tempted by the luxury of a law-suit that costs them nothing, to besiege the Courts with multitudes of imaginary grievances and unfounded claims. The Scotch system, which involves a preliminary inquiry before leave to sue in formâ pauperis is given, is said to work extremely well; and we might probably borrow some useful hints on this, as in other particulars, from beyond the Tweed. A proposal which was made for the introduction into England of the Scotch law of Summary Diligence on Bills of Exchange is not, however, among the points in which we think our law can be wisely assimilated to that of the sister country. The Act of last year has, we think, armed the creditor with ample powers; and if it is open to any objection, it is rather on account of its harshness to debtors than its inefficiency to enforce just obligations. The Scotch system is one degree more summary, inasmuch as it dispenses even with the writ, and enables the holder of a bill to proceed at once to actual execution. We can imagine many cases under the Scotch practice where there might be a perfectly good defence, although the rapidity of the process might prevent the alleged debtor from establishing it; and thus enable a collusive holder of a bill to recover under circumstances which, if ascertained in time, would have been a bar to his claim.

The two topics to which the section addressed itself with the greatest energy were, the transfer of land, on which a general resolution in favour of reform was come to, and the present condition of bankruptcy law and the Courts by which it is administered. We hope that the discussions which have taken place on this last subject, and the labours of the Committee, who have undertaken to prepare a Bill for the amendment of the procedure, will not be without fruit. It was to be expected, that, on a matter of pure detail, such as the mode of administering the estates that fall into the hands of the Court, some differences of opinion would exist; but there is much that is common to all the proposals of the various Chambers of Commerce that have taken up the subject, as well as to Lord Brougham's Bill, on which we commented in our number of September 5. It is agreed on all hands that the costliness of bankruptcy proceedings has the effect of keeping the majority of insolvent estates out of court, and that creditors prefer what is often an unequal and unsatisfactory composition under the management of trustees to the expensive justice of the Bankruptcy Commissioners. It is quite certain that a large proportion of the costs of bankruptcy are occasioned by the employment of unnecessary and overpaid officials; and, whatever may be the ultimate shape of the draft to be prepared under the auspices of the Association, it must, like Lord Brougham's Bill, provide a more or less sweeping remedy for such abuses. But it was not only on questions of administration that the Conference seemed disposed to support a modification of the law of bankruptcy. The abolition of the distinction between traders and non-traders was rather loudly called for by many of those who addressed the section; and, although it may be prudent not to endanger the administrative reforms which are so urgently required by mixing them up with an independent question, we think that enough has transpired to show that the line at present drawn between bankrupts and insolvents is not destined long to hold its place in our jurisprudence. The theory of the bankruptcy law, if properly administered, seems to us to be more advantageous both to the debtor and creditor than the principle of the insolvency statutes; and we see no more reason for restricting its operation to traders than there was for another distinction of the same kind in the administration of a deceased person's real estate, which was removed from the Statute Book within a short time after the first legislation on the subject. In Scotland the estates of bankrupts and insolvents have already been put on the same footing, and we hope it will not be long before the example is followed here.

THE ETIQUETTE OF THE BAR.

In the last number of the Law Magazine and Law Review an article appeared on the Etiquette of the Bar, which contains remarks on the relations of attorneys to barristers, calling, we think, for some notice in the columns of this Journal. It is not our business to criticise the article generally; but we cannot avoid saying that we could have wished the subject treated in a broader spirit, with more definiteness of aim, and with a more direct and practical bearing on the difficulties which surround it. It is however, more, immediately within our province to advert to the tone in which solicitors are spoken of. They are treated as the natural enemies of the barristers, and the writer's object seems to be to expose the process by which they have gradually wrested from the bar certain portions of the domain which the bar once considered its own, and to devise means by which satisfactory reprisals may be made on the territory of solicitors. This is a mode of viewing the matter natural and perhaps suitable to the convivial disputants of a bar mess, but it is not favourable to the real adjustment of a very complicated question. On either side professional jealousies must be entirely put away.

The manner in which the writer deals with his subject is a very limited one, and on such subjects to be limited is to be wrong. He points out that local business is every year intrusted more entirely to the attorney alone. The County Courts, Courts of Bankruptcy and Insolvency, Courts of Revision, inquiries as to compensation under Railway Acts, inquiries before Admiralty Inspectors, cases and points disposed of by judges at chambers, all furnish fields of exertion and sources of gain appropriated to the attorney. The barrister is not employed because he is not wanted. One lawyer suffices, and of course the lawyer selected is the lawyer that can manage the whole business, see the client, collect evidence, and also go into court or before the presiding functionary. But, it is said, barristers suffer simply by their own choice, they are excluded merely by one of the rules of etiquette which they have made for their own guidance. The rule has not even the prestige of antiquity. Less than a century ago the distinction between the two branches of the profession was not laid down, and a play written in the reign of George III. describes how a serjeant and two counsellors attended for the purpose of getting a deed executed. If the bar, then, are injured by this rule, why should they not repeal it, and give themselves a fair chance in the sphere of local competition? This is the point to which the writer of the article referred to brings his readers, and he leaves them to answer the question for themselves, excepting so far as they may be guided by his opinion, very evidently implied, that the change might be made without any difficulty or inconvenience.

The supposition is, that, if the rule were repealed which forbids a barrister to communicate with his client directly, the balance of fortune between the local barrister and solicitor would be redressed, and everything else would remain as at present. The barrister would occupy a higher social position; he would retain all his privileges at assizes and sessions, and would have a large share of the business which now falls to the attorney. Even if, for a moment, we isolate this proposed change from the whole scope of the relations between the two branches of the profession, we very much doubt whether the calculation of what would take place is well founded. Supposing that the barrister really gained a great amount of business, and made a lucrative livelihood by the mere permission to communicate with his client, why should not every local lawyer be a barrister? It is much easier and cheaper to be a barrister than to be a solicitor. The expenditure of £150, and attendance at a few lectures, will make any one a barrister. An attorney has to pay, not only the stamp on his admission, but the stamp and generally a premium on his articles, and a yearly tax, and has also to undergo the trouble of preparing for an examination. At present, unambitious men prefer to be attorneys, although at a greater outlay of time and money, because they are almost certain of earning their bread directly they begin to practise; whereas a barrister has to wait. But if the barrister really competed with the attorney, the men who wanted to scramble cheaply into a little business would become barristers, not attorneys; and thus the prestige and social position of the bar would vanish at once in the provinces. To be a London barrister, might still place a man above one who was only a country attorney; but to be a country barrister, would give no superiority whatever. That there could be a class of men enjoying the position of barristers, and doing the work of country attorneys, is, we feel sure, a mere delusion.

Thus, if we look only to that range of professional occupation which is of such a nature that only one lawyer is required, we are obliged, if we make any change, to abandon all distinction between the barrister and attorney; and the one lawyer needed will be a man who has received a training much more closely resembling that received by an attorney than that received by a barrister. The leaders of the bar are quite aware of this, and know, that, if they relaxed the rule requiring the intervention of an attorney, the status of a barrister in the provinces would be at an end. But it would be very difficult to lay down any rule which should apply to the provinces only, and therefore the status of the whole branch of the profession would be lowered, and all the advantages arising, or supposed to arise, from a separation of the two branches, would be lost if provincial barristers were to do the work of attorneys. But even if this were not so, and the leaders of the bar were willing the rule should be repealed, we cannot admit that so important a part of the relation of barristers and attorneys is a mere piece of bar etiquette, to be altered by the bar at pleasure. Theoretically, this is certainly the case; but, practically, the general footing on which the two branches stand to each other is the result of a tacit compromise. Each permits the other to enjoy certain advantages in return for a monopoly granted to itself. If this compromise is disturbed, corresponding concessions will be demanded in favour of the branch injured by the disturbance. Barristers could only profit by the abrogation of the rule, if attorneys lost by it. Therefore, attorneys finding their position so far altered for the worse, would demand that they should be permitted to share in some of the privileges at present enjoyed exclusively by the bar. It would therefore be necessary to consider the whole subject of the relations existing between barristers and attorneys, and to examine the ground on which a separation is to be defended. If any one says that the separation is altogether a mistake, we know, of course, what he wishes, and that he is prepared to see a really great and sweeping change. But we do not think it by any means so easy to change the position of the local bar as it may seem at first sight to be. This first change would involve others, and it is in determining the position of the heads of the two branches that the difficulty would really be felt. It is only when we reflect how great the difficulty is of deciding the proper relations of the men who have arrived at the top of their respective branches, how many interests the decision involves, and how seriously it affects the condition and progress of English jurisprudence, that we can estimate the impossibility of treating any important part of the present framework of the profession as really depending on the arbitrary canons of the etiquette of the bar.

BANKRUPTCY COURT. — Oct. 17.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)

In re Henry Bunney.

The bankrupt, a solicitor, and made bankrupt as a scrivener and builder, applied for his certificate. He had carried on business at Newbury, and some years since left that place under mysterious circumstances, and in debt. He was shortly afterwards adjudicated bankrupt, and nothing was heard of him for some years; but he was afterwards traced to New Zealand, where a valuable farming stock was seized for the benefit of the creditors.

The accounts of Messrs. Paul & Turner show debts of £6,000, and assets sufficient for a dividend of 10*s.* or 12*s.* in the pound.

Mr. Dorrien, on behalf of the bankrupt, said, whatever his faults were, the creditors would reap benefit from his exertions, his estate having increased threefold since his residence in New Zealand.

The COMMISSIONER granted a second-class certificate.

DURHAM INSOLVENT COURT.—Friday, Oct. 9.

(Before H. STAPYLTON, Esq., Judge.)

Dodshon Wood, of Great Aycliffe, formerly butcher, appeared on an adjourned examination. The insolvent was supported by Mr. Meynell, barrister, instructed by Mr. Brignal. This case was adjourned from the last court, held on the 7th of August, and was fully reported in this paper at the time. The insolvent upon that occasion was opposed by his detaining creditor, and by a Mr. John Frizzel, of Greatham, farmer; and he was ordered to file an amended special balance-sheet, by inserting the date of several mortgages to Mr. G. Allison, Solicitor, of Darlington, and the application of the money received thereunder. The insolvent was also ordered to file a list of the furniture upon his premises at the time of his imprisonment. His Honour asked if these requirements had been complied with, and was answered by Mr. Brignal in the affirmative. His Honour then intimated, that it was a question with him whether he should not remand the insolvent for disobeying a judge's order, by improperly removing some hay from a field. Mr. Brignal said, he did so under the advice of Mr. George Allison, Solicitor, as he was prepared to prove by a witness in court. His Honour (looking towards Mr. Allison, who was in court): What! advise a person to disobey a judge's order?—Mr. Allison admitted that he did so advise the insolvent! His Honour, under these circumstances, decided to discharge the insolvent forthwith.—Durham Chronicle.

THE BIRMINGHAM LAW PROFESSORSHIP.

Mr. G. J. Johnson, of the firm of Tyndalls & Johnson, solicitors, delivered his inaugural address, as Professor of Law, at the Queen's College, in Birmingham, on Tuesday, the 6th inst. We hope to publish the address in our next number.

THE LONDON, MANCHESTER, AND FOREIGN WAREHOUSE COMPANY (LIMITED).

A meeting of the directors and shareholders of this company was held on Thursday at the offices, 91, Watling-street.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Costeker) having read the resolution convening the meeting,

Mr. WARD (shareholder) said, the question for the meeting was, whether the company should be wound up voluntarily or otherwise. He called attention to the expenses attendant upon proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court, and said he thought it would be a great object to the shareholders if all further loss were put a stop to by investing one of their own body with the authority necessary for winding up the company in their own way. He did not see why any "Mr. Commissioner," or any other official, should be paid for doing that which they could do amongst themselves. As it was, the shareholders might get a trifle; but if the matter went into the Court of Bankruptcy, there would not in all probability be a farthing for anybody. He did not think, upon the whole, that there was anything to find fault with in the directors. It was true, that, in the matter of the lease of the premises and some other little things, they had not acted like very wise men; but they had a large stake in the concern, and he certainly thought that nothing was morally wrong on their part.

After some discussion as to the financial position of the company, the final resolution for winding up voluntarily was put to the meeting, and it was carried by 17 to 1. The directors were then appointed official liquidators to wind up the company; and the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman, and a unanimous vote expressing the shareholders' confidence in the honesty and integrity of the late directors.

Mr. Robert Segar, Recorder of Wigan, has been appointed Judge of the Court of Record of Salford, vacated by Mr. Blair.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Francis Smith, Esq., to be Attorney-General; and Thomas John Knight, Esq., to be Solicitor-General, for the Island of Tasmania.

A conference on the Bankruptcy Laws is to be held in Birmingham, on the 17th of November. The Birmingham Chamber of Commerce intend inviting delegates from the various chambers of commerce to attend it.

Further painful revelations are taking place in connection with the Hull failures. Under the estate of Mr. Bright, the late chairman of the Hull Flax and Cotton Mill Company, debts to the amount of £101,437 have been proved, of which £86,000 was on behalf of Messrs. Harrison, Watson, & Co., the bankers. The debt of the Bank of England was only £567. Mr. Bright has been apprehended on a charge of forgery both in relation to bills of exchange and transfers of railway shares.

During the last two days a case has been before the Manchester City Court of Record. Mr. T. Wheeler, barrister applied to Mr. Monk, Deputy Recorder, at the sitting of the court, for a rule absolute against a person named Preston, a house agent and collector of rents, in Hulme, for contempt of Court. The facts were these: An action for debt had been entered, and the defendant, a person named Craine, was required to plead. By the rule of the Court, this he must do either personally or by a solicitor. He did neither, for Preston told him he would be a fool to employ a lawyer, and he (Preston) could do the job for him as well and cheaper. Whereupon he got 6*s.* 6*d.* from Craine, and, proceeding to the Registrar's office, represented himself, falsely, to be the defendant in the action, and in his name entered the plea. The charge was brought home to him, and the deputy recorder, after strongly denouncing his conduct, said he should direct an attachment, but would require it to be kept in the office; and in case Preston, during the course of the next three months, paid by such instalments as would be satisfactory to the deputy registrar, and should reimburse Mr. Wheeler's client (the plaintiff in the action against Craine) the costs of this application, the attachment would not issue; failing compliance with these terms, it would issue, and the defendant would be liable to imprisonment for an indefinite period.

At the last sitting of the Wakefield County Court, Mr. George Moore, draper, of Wakefield, brought an action against Mr. Westmoreland, solicitor, to recover the sum of £49 for time lost and expenses incurred during twenty-one days' canvassing at the late election for Mr. Charlesworth, the present Conservative member for Wakefield. The plaintiff was about to leave Wakefield to set up business on his own account, but was prevailed upon by the defendant to stop and canvass for his client, promising that whatever charge the plaintiff made should be paid. He accordingly staid and canvassed, and his bill for twenty-one days, at two guineas a day and expenses, amounted to the sum claimed, which the defendant alleged was exorbitant. It was shown that the plaintiff had been offered two guineas a day and expenses to canvass for Mr. Oliveira at Pontefract, and that, after completing his engagement at Wakefield, he did canvass for Mr. Oliveira at that rate of payment. It was also shown that Mr. Ferns, solicitor, of Leeds, was engaged by Mr. Oliveira for ten guineas a day, and that a Mr. Lamb canvassed for him for five guineas a day. The Judge said, that, as no professional man had been called to prove that the plaintiff's charge was exorbitant, he considered that the plaintiff had made out his case, and the verdict would be for £49, with costs of witnesses and attorney.

The French Tribunals.

A rather singular question was raised on Wednesday last in the Imperial Court of Paris. It is, whether a husband is compelled by law to support a wife who misconducts herself? The facts were these:—A gentleman of Montmartre married a young woman of inferior station to his own. She was unfaithful to him, and she abandoned his roof about seven years ago. It is not necessary to trace her subsequent history; suffice it to say, that it was most profligate. She lived with a number of men in succession, and became the mother of several illegitimate children. Being now abandoned by all her lovers, she demanded that her husband should receive her back, or, failing to do so, that he should make her a yearly allowance. This the husband positively refused. The Imperial Court, to which she appealed, decided in favour of the husband, and expressed its approval of his conduct.

A case interesting to travellers in France has just been decided by the Court of Cassation, the highest legal tribunal. According to a Royal ordinance, published in 1563, a hotel-keeper is bound, under penalty of a fine, to lodge travellers who stop at his house. An hotel-keeper in a country town, who refused to lodge a traveller, was prosecuted before the Court of Police, and acquitted; the traveller appealed, and the Court of Cassation rejected the appeal, founding their decision on a law passed the 13th of March, 1791, which declares that commerce is free.

The prosecution of Count Migeon before the Colmar Correctional Tribunal for electoral corruption has still continued to excite the greatest interest in all circles in Paris. The decision of the judges was received yesterday by telegraph. It appears that the Court declares itself incompetent to deal with the general charge of bribery, but it sentences Count Migeon to two months' imprisonment for wearing the Cross of the Legion of Honor without being entitled. The Count brought a number of witnesses to prove that he had not been guilty of this offence; but, notwithstanding their positive testimony in his favour, the Tribunal gave greater credence to the one or two witnesses for the prosecution. One of those incidents which so strikingly illustrate the difference between our method of judicial proceeding and that of our neighbours, occurred during the speech for the defence. M. Jules Favre declared that it was the intention of his client to prosecute the police for defamation of character. The real object, he said, of the prosecution was, not to establish that M. Migeon had been guilty of illegal acts, but to destroy his reputation, so as to render it impossible that he could be chosen as representative of the department, in which he had just obtained 18,000 votes. The allegations that M. Migeon had been condemned for debt and was a ruined man were erroneous, for he had paid the sums for which proceedings had been taken against him, and his fortune was still considerable. "In support of this latter statement," said the learned counsel, "here is a letter from his notary, who is a most respectable man; and it merits, I imagine, more credit than the reports of these men of the police." The public prosecutor remarked that he could not allow one of the principal magistrates of the country, who occupied the position of minister, to be dragged into the mud, and he demanded that the language just used should be taken down.

"Oh, willingly!" said M. Jules Favre; "I said 'these men of the police,' and I repeat it. If, in saying that, I have said anything insulting, I consent to be condemned. But what afflicts one is, that, before justice, such documents are relied on. That an attempt should be made to influence the consciences of judges by documents drawn from such a source makes one blush!" Whatever may be the various opinions of the guilt or innocence of Count Migeon, one thing is certain, that the Government have proved that they have acted far more criminally as regards electoral corruption than the man they have prosecuted.

CAP. LIV.—An Act to make better Provision for the Punishment of Frauds committed by Trustees, Bankers, and other Persons intrusted with Property.

Although the provisions contained in 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, against the crime of embezzlement, as distinct from larceny, the former being committed in respect of property which is not at the time in the actual or legal possession of the owner, are not alluded to in the Act under discussion, this last may nevertheless be considered as amending the Act of Geo. 4, so far as embezzlements by certain classes of persons are concerned, and as intended to provide for certain offences of the same general description, which, at the time when that statute passed, were either overlooked or considered not sufficiently developed for legislation. By 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 49, provisions were made against the fraudulent conversion by "bankers, merchants, brokers, attorneys, or other agents," of money or security intrusted to them with written directions to apply it to a specified purpose; and such conversion was made a misdemeanor, punishable with transportation for not more than fourteen or less than seven years (which, by the effect of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, will now resolve itself into penal servitude for not more than fourteen, or less than three years), or such other punishment, by fine or imprisonment or both, as the Court should award. And, by the same section of the same Act, it was also provided, that, if any chattel, valuable security, or power of attorney for sale or transfer of stock, intrusted to any banker, merchant, broker, attorney, or other agent for safe custody, or for any special purpose, should be by him converted, in violation of good faith, and contrary to the object of the trust, the offender should incur similar penalties. But these provisions were saddled with a proviso, which seems to have given rise more than anything else to the necessity for the Act under discussion—viz. that (by s. 50) they were not to affect any trustee in or under any instrument whatever, or any mortgagee of any property, real or personal, in respect of any act done by such trustee or mortgagee in relation to the property comprised in, or affected by, any such trust or mortgage. The other provisions of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, referring to this subject, applied exclusively to property intrusted to "factors or agents" for the purpose of sale, or remaining in their hands in the course of their business, and a fraudulent deposit or pledge of such property under such circumstances was made an offence punishable in the same way as the others already mentioned.

Such being the existing law on this subject, the Act under discussion proceeds to make fresh and additional provision against fraudulent conduct of the same general description, committed by any person falling within one or more of the following seven classes: 1. Bankers, merchants, brokers, attorneys, or agents; 2. Persons intrusted with powers of attorney for the sale or transfer of property; 3. Directors or public officers of bodies corporate or public companies; 4. Members of such bodies or companies; 5. Managers of such bodies or companies; 6. Trustees; 7. Bailees.

1. The first of the above classes (as already explained) had been dealt with, to a certain extent, by the previous statute of Geo. 4; but, instead of the enactment being, as in that statute, confined to the conversion of money or securities intrusted to such persons, with written directions to apply them to a specific purpose, the Act under discussion (by s. 2) extends the enactment to all property; and on the other hand, under this section, the trust violated must be for safe custody only. Apparently, therefore, if a banker were intrusted with a deed to raise money thereon, and were fraudulently to convert the same to his own use, he would not come under this new provision, but (if the direction were in writing) under the old. It is also to be noticed, that a misdemeanor under this new provision (and the remark is equally applicable to any of the other misdemeanors created by the Act under discussion) is less penal than one punishable under the Act of Geo. 4. Instead of penal servitude for as long a term as fourteen years, the utmost limit authorised by the Act under discussion is three years; and the imprisonment, instead of being at the discretion of the Court, must not exceed two years, with or without hard labour. Punishment by fine also would appear not to be cumulative, as in the previous statute (see s. 10).

2. The second class—persons intrusted with powers of attorney—were also dealt with in the preceding Act, but only where they happened also to fall under the first class. The Act under discussion, however, makes it a misdemeanor for "any" person intrusted with such power fraudulently to convert the property to his own use; and instead of the power being confined, as in the previous statute, to one for the sale or transfer of such stock as is in that Act mentioned, the power by the Act under discussion may be for the sale or transfer of any property whatever.

3. Directors and public officers of bodies corporate and public companies—the third class above mentioned—are now for the first time specifically dealt with; and as to these the Act under discussion provides, that, if any person falling under this description shall, with intent to defraud (s. 5), take or apply for his own use any of the corporate or common money or other property; or (s. 6) receive or possess himself thereof, otherwise than in payment of a just debt or demand, and omit a full and true entry thereof in the books and accounts; or (s. 7), destroy, alter, mutilate, or falsify any of the books, papers, writings, or securities, or make or concur in making a false entry or material omission in any account or document; or shall (s. 8) make, circulate, or publish (or concur in making, circulating, or publishing) any written statement or account which he shall know to be false in any material particular, with intent to deceive or defraud any member, shareholder, or creditor, or to induce any person to become shareholder or partner, or to intrust or advance money or property to, or enter into security for the benefit of, the body corporate or company of which the person so acting is a director or public officer,—such person shall, in any of the above cases, be guilty of a misdemeanor.

4. Members of bodies corporate or public companies are now, for the first time, by the Act under discussion, made guilty of misdemeanor by any such conduct as above specified coming within the terms of either s. 5 or s. 7.

5. The Managers of such bodies and companies are expressly brought within such of the provisions of the Act under discussion as are contained in the 6th, 7th, and 8th sections. In the 5th they are omitted; but we apprehend that a bank manager (for example) who fraudulently applies to his own use the bank money, would properly be proceeded against as a clerk or servant of the bank, under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 47; and this, though also punishable with penal servitude for fourteen years at the most, is a felony.

6. Trustees. It has been noticed that trustees, in or under any instrument, were expressly exempted from the provisions of the Act of Geo. 4, so far as the trust property was concerned. But the Act under discussion contains, as to all, the following general enactment—viz. (s. 1) that "any person being a trustee of any property for the benefit, either wholly or partially, of some other person, or for any public or charitable purpose, who shall, with intent to defraud, convert or appropriate the same or any part thereof to or for his own use or purposes, or shall with such intent otherwise dispose of or destroy such property or any part thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

By another section (s. 17) the term trustee is defined to include —1. Trustees on some express trust created by some deed, will, or instrument in writing; 2. The heir and personal representative of any such trustee; 3. All executors and administrators; 4. Liquidators under the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856; 5. Assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency. And, by another section (s. 13), no proceeding or prosecution for any offence included in s. 1, but not in any other of the Act, shall be commenced without the sanction of the Attorney-General, or, if that office be vacant, of the Solicitor-General, nor (if civil proceedings have been had or are pending) without the sanction of the court or judge before whom such proceedings were taken or are pending.

7. Bailees. It is difficult to say why the 4th section of the Act under discussion was inserted in the middle of the different misdemeanors created by the Act; nor, indeed, why it should have formed part of this Act at all. This section enacts, that "any person, being a bailee of any property, who shall fraudulently take or convert the same to his own use, or the use of any person other than the owner thereof, although he shall not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailment, shall be guilty of larceny." The object of this provision is to abolish pro tanto the principle of law which has hitherto prevailed—that, if a person obtain the goods of another without fraud, although he have the animus furandi afterwards, and convert them to his own use, he cannot be guilty of felony (see 1 Russ. on Crimes, p. 56). This principle, indeed, was qualified, in the case of a carrier, by another, which considered that a tortious opening of the pack ("breaking bulk") determined eo instanti the contract of bailment, and made an appropriation of the thing bailed a felonious stealing. This and other niceties gave rise to much complication of our criminal law on this head, and the object of the present section was to simplify it. But it comes in awkwardly among provisions to the subject-matter of which it has no special reference, and is, moreover, liable to the following criticism:—The punishment of larceny is, at present (when not complicated or committed after previous summary convictions, or after previous conviction for felony), not penal servitude at all, but two years' imprisonment. But the punishment of any of the misdemeanors created by the Act under discussion is, either imprisonment to the above extent, or penal servitude for three years. Hence, a misdemeanor under this Act will (except with regard to the forfeiture of goods to the Crown) be more penal than the felony created by the 4th section. Moreover, by another provision of the Act under discussion (s. 16), no misdemeanor against it shall be prosecuted or tried at any court of general or quarter sessions; but there is nothing to prevent the above-mentioned felony being there tried. If, therefore, any bailee be there prosecuted under s. 4, and it shall appear that the offence he has committed amounts to a misdemeanor under the Act (and there might easily arise such a case), he would, apparently, be entitled to be acquitted; or, if convicted, might move in arrest of judgment; for, though another section (s. 14) provides, that, if on a trial under the Act the offence proved amounts to larceny, he shall not thereby be entitled to be acquitted of a misdemeanor thereunder (a provision copied from the previous Act of Geo. 4), there is no similar provision as to a trial for larceny, and the offence proved resolving itself into a misdemeanor.

The sections of the Act under discussion not specifically noticed are of subordinate importance; and are, to a considerable extent, copied from the previous Act. It may be noticed, however, that, although that Act does not, generally, apply to either Scotland or Ireland, the Act under discussion applies to Ireland as well as England, though not to Scotland.

Recent Decisions in Chancery.

Bankrupt—Order and Disposition.

Shuttleworth v. Hernaman, 5 W. R. 853.

This case has raised and decided a new point on the order and disposition clause. It is quite settled that mere possession by the bankrupt with the consent of the true owner, does not necessarily place the goods in the bankrupt's order and disposition. All that can be said is, that such possession is primâ facie evidence of reputed ownership, though it may be rebutted by showing the notoriety of a trade usage to leave goods under such circumstances in the possession of a person other than the owner. Nothing turns upon the question: What were the actual terms of the agreement under which the goods were held?—but everything depends on this other question: Whether, having regard to established usage, strangers must necessarily infer that the apparent possessor is the true owner? If such an inference is the fair one, then the clause applies, and the goods pass to the assignees; otherwise not. These are the general principles on which the case of Horn v. Baker (9 East, 215) was decided, and, notwithstanding some language in Trappes v. Harter (2 Cr. & M. 153), which admits of a different interpretation, the old doctrine is still unshaken, and has recently been re-affirmed with much distinctness in Ex parte Barclay (5 De G. Mac. & Gor. 403, and 4 W. R. 80), in which the Lord Chancellor cited, with approval, the explanation of the statute given by Lord Redesdale in Jay v. Campbell (1 Sch. & Lef. 336). "The clause," said Lord Redesdale, "refers to chattels where the possession, order, and disposition is in a person who is not the owner, to whom they do not properly belong, who ought not to have them, but whom the owner permits unconscientiously, as the Act supposes, to have such order and disposition. . . . The object was to prevent deceit by a trader from the visible possession of property to which he was not entitled." Among the cases relating to machinery and utensils of trade, Lingard v. Messiter (1 B. & C. 308) is a distinct authority for the position, that, where a creditor purchases the goods of a trader, and then demises them to him at an annual rent, after marking them with his own initials, the goods held by the trader under the lease are in his order and disposition, and pass to the assignees in the event of bankruptcy. That case, however, turned somewhat on the fact that the bankrupt had formerly been the real owner, as, in such a case, it was held that he would continue to be the reputed owner until some act was done to make the change of ownership notorious to the world. It was at the same time intimated, that, if the bankrupt had been a mere lessee from the beginning, the case would, perhaps, have been different, as then the possession would not necessarily imply ownership; though, in the absence of a usage to lease goods of the kind in question, the possession under a lease would probably be held to afford sufficient presumption of reputed ownership. The actual point in Ex parte Barclay was this:—A publican had mortgaged his leasehold house, together with the articles commonly known as tenant's fixtures, but which, being removable by the tenant, were, in fact, goods and chattels. The publican remained in possession until his bankruptcy; and the Lord Chancellor held that the tenant's fixtures did not pass to the assignees, expressly on the ground that the object of the clause was to prevent fictitious credit, and that it was impossible to suppose that credit was ever given upon the faith of fixtures as distinguished from a house. Now, it was admitted that a creditor is bound to take notice that a house may be mortgaged; and, if the house was mortgaged, it might be presumed that the tenant's fixtures were, or might be, mortgaged too. In such a case, therefore, possession would not constitute reputed ownership.

Shuttleworth v. Hernaman is separated by an intelligible, though fine, distinction from the class of cases which culminated in Ex parte Barclay. The plaintiffs were the lessors of a factory of which the bankrupt was tenant. In the lease, the bankrupt had covenanted to pay his rent in advance, and always to keep £3,000 worth of machinery on the premises as security for the rent. The lien thus created would have swallowed up the whole value of the machinery as it stood at the time of the bankruptcy if the whole future rent was to be covered by it, but no rent was due at the time. The question submitted by special case to the Court was—Whether the machinery passed under the order and disposition clause? If the bankrupt had actually mortgaged his lease and machinery, the landlord would, according to Ex parte Barclay, have been entitled; but it was held in the present case that the attempt to create a lien by force of the covenant left the property in the bankrupt's order and disposition. The real difference between the two cases may be best seen from an observation of L. J. Turner, in the course of his judgment, whereby he expressly guarded himself from extending his opinion to those cases where, according to the custom of the country or district, there was a habit of keeping the machinery under the control of the landlord in this manner, no such custom having been stated in the special case.

It is customary for a publican to mortgage his tenant's fixtures together with his house: hence the judgment in Ex parte Barclay. It is not customary—or was not proved to be so—for a manufacturer to subject his machinery to the peculiar kind of lien which occurred in Shuttleworth v. Hernaman: hence the opposite result in this case.

MORTGAGOR AND MORTGAGEE—PRIORITY—POSSESSION OF TITLE DEEDS.

Perry Herrick v. Attwood.

This case (a report of which is given, ante, p. 803) raised in a new form the question, under what circumstances a mortgagee will be postponed to subsequent incumbrancers by reason of not having secured possession of the title deeds? The well-known cases of Hewitt v. Loosemore (9 Hare, 449), Jones v. Smith (1 Hare, 43), and Worthington v. Morgan (16 Sim. 547), and the older authorities on which they are founded, have pretty well settled the general principle, that, while an utter absence of inquiry for deeds is such an amount of negligence as will postpone the mortgagee, he will not be made to suffer where some sufficiently plausible explanation has been given why the deeds should not be delivered to him in the ordinary course. In the present case, the facts, as the Court gathered them from the evidence, were these:—The prior mortgagees were the sisters of the mortgagor, who owed to each of them £10,000. At the suggestion of the brother, or his solicitor, a mortgage term was created to secure the debt; but the brother being also indebted to certain family trustees, and being in treaty to arrange the matter by a mortgage of the same estate out of which the security to the sisters was carved, his solicitor prevailed upon the sisters to leave the deeds with him for the purpose of carrying out the proposed arrangement. Instead of doing so, however, the brother raised a large sum by mortgage of the estate, on which occasion the existing mortgage to the sisters was not mentioned. The plaintiffs, in whom this last security became vested, got the deeds, and now insisted, that the sisters, having left the title deeds in their debtor's hands for the express purpose of raising money on them, could not now claim priority over the plaintiffs, who had thus been entrapped into advancing money on the land. This view was upheld by the Master of the Rolls; and though it is said that the case will be appealed, the judgment can scarcely be reversed on this point, consistently with the view of the evidence taken by the Master of the Rolls, without extending, beyond what has hitherto been done, the indulgence granted in some cases to mortgagees who have not taken the precaution to obtain possession of the title deeds of the mortgaged property. A distinction was also pressed in argument between the right of a mortgagee in fee and that of a mortgagee of a term, to the possession of the deeds; but it is hard to support such a distinction without destroying altogether the security which the actual handing over of titled eeds is supposed to give to a bonâ fide incumbrancer.

Correspondence.

EDINBURGH.—(From our own Correspondent.)

As the subject of the education of the articled clerks (or, as they are called in Scotland, apprentices) of solicitors appears to be exciting much general attention in England at present, it may not be uninteresting to explain the mode in which the matter has been dealt with in Scotland, where it was much discussed about six years ago.

In this country the solicitors have long been alive to the great importance to a lawyer of a good general education, as a foundation for the subsequent legal training necessary to fit him for his profession; and the Writers to the Signet, which is the most numerous body of solicitors in Scotland, have always insisted upon maintaining a very high standard of preliminary education as a condition of any one being allowed to enter into indentures with any member of the body. One of the rules which were in existence, however, prior to 1851, was found to be so inflexible as to have deterred in some instances apprentices of the highest intellectual attainments from seeking to enter the body; and accordingly, when the matter was brought under their consideration, it elicited a very interesting discussion. This rule demanded, as a preliminary condition, that all applicants for indenture should have completed in one or other of the Scottish universities the full course prescribed in literis humanioribus, in consequence of which an Oxford or Cambridge M. A. was excluded, unless he chose to go through the prescribed course of study, which involved a loss to him of two years. Such a result was manifestly absurd, though it had probably very seldom occurred until the practice of sending Scotchmen to the English Universities had become comparatively established, which has only happened within a recent period. Various propositions were made with the view of remedying the evil; the extremes of these propositions were, that all the English and distinguished foreign universities should be included in the specification, and that the Society should not trouble itself with the question where or how an applicant for indenture got his education, but should ascertain by a stringent examination whether he had acquired the proper qualification. The Society adopted neither proposition; but while they still agreed to take attendance at the Scotch universities as evidence of sufficient qualification to enter into indenture, they adopted a resolution, that any one should be entitled to do so upon satisfying the Society that he had received a liberal education, and submitting to an examination in the following branches: English, Geography, History, Latin, Greek, Arithmetic, Geometry, Practical Geometry, and Algebra, or, in lieu of Greek, any modern language.

That this examination might not degenerate into mere formality, it was resolved that it should be conducted in writing at the sight of the Keeper and Commissioners of the Signet, who should be entitled to employ skilled Examiners to conduct the examination for proper remuneration; and that these Examiners, besides making a full and detailed report upon the whole examination, should be required to state specifically whether they considered that the applicant "is possessed of attainments equal to those which ought to be found in a person who has attended two full sessions at a Scotch university." Lastly, it was resolved that the whole papers connected with each examination should remain in the library of the Society, subject to the inspection of every member who might choose to examine them. The examination generally lasts two days; and any one that chooses to examine the papers cannot fail to be satisfied, that, as at present conducted, the examination is no sham.

With the same sound views of the importance of a good general education, the Society took the same opportunity of preventing young men from entering upon the profession before they had time to acquire such an education, and resolved that no one should be allowed to enter into indentures before he had completed his seventeenth year. A strong party wished eighteen fixed as the proper age, but ultimately agreed to accept of seventeen as a fair compromise in the meantime.

THE MANCHESTER MEETING.

To the Editor of THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL & REPORTER.

SIR,—In commenting on the proceedings of the meeting of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, lately held at Manchester, I find, from your leading article of last week, that you advocate the further development of the oral in preference to the written element in the proceedings. Perhaps, however, you will so far excuse my differing from you in opinion, when I consider that it is at all times difficult to promote discussion, upon legal questions in particular, without a previous thorough acquaintance with the subject, so as to be prepared in some degree with the relative positions and bearings in all its parts; and, for this reason, I am inclined to think, that, unless written papers be introduced, or some previous outline arranged, the discussion would partake of too desultory and useless a character to be in any way improving.

To promote, however, instructive discussion amongst the members at the different meetings, I think the present arrangement might be even further improved, by the writers of papers furnishing the Secretary, not only with the title, but also with a concise synopsis of the subject treated on, some few weeks previous to the meeting, for circulation among the members, so that each might be enabled to prepare himself by deliberately considering the various points, and discussion might then be carried on with advantage.

It is most gratifying to observe the marked progress and success of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, and its tendency to elevate the moral and intellectual character of the profession; and, may I add, that the formation of junior Law Associations is but one instance of its beneficial example being followed.—I am, Sir, yours very obediently,

Kendal, Oct. 20, 1857. CHARLES WILKINSON.

Review.

A Practical Treatise on the Law of Trusts and Trustees. By THOMAS LEWIN, Esq., of Trinity College, Oxon, M.A., and of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law, one of the Conveyancing Counsel to the Court of Chancery. Third Edition.—London: Maxwell. Dublin: Hodges, Smith, & Co. 1857.

Mr. Lewin's Treatise on the Law of Trusts and Trustees is one of the few legal works which aim at combining the scientific exposition of a branch of law, which is the character of many of our older treatises, with the minute consideration of decided cases to which the modern text-writer generally confines himself. In both departments of the work, the author has introduced considerable modifications and more considerable additions into the present edition. The earlier portion of the work has been re-cast, and the additional matter rendered necessary by the accumulation of cases since the second edition has swelled the volume to a really formidable-looking size. The proverbial evil of a large book is, however, capable of no slight mitigation by good arrangement and carefully digested means of reference. In one, at least, of these respects Mr. Lewin's work may be regarded as a model; for the completeness of the index, and the skill with which it has been framed, render the task of discovering any special point on which information may be sought as easy as it ought to be in every treatise intended for the hands of practical men. The tendency of law books to become more and more books of reference rather than books of study renders a really effective index a matter of much greater importance than some of our most distinguished writers—such as Lord St. Leonards and others—have condescended to consider it; and though the labour of compiling one is about as ungrateful as any to which a man can devote himself, it is generally possible for an author, however occupied himself, to find some one younger in the profession to whom the task may be intrusted. Mr. Lewin had the wisdom to do this, and he tells us in his preface that the credit of the index is due to Mr. Kingdon, by whom it was compiled.

In the general division of his Treatise Mr. Lewin has followed the natural order suggested by the subject considered as a matter for scientific inquiry, rather than that which would have commended itself to a writer who thought of the practical convenience of professional readers, and nothing else. After defining and classifying the various kinds of trusts, he treats of the modes in which trusts arise, whether by act of a party, or by operation of law. The second principal head relates to the trustee himself, and touches upon all such points as—the estate which he takes; the duties, powers, and rights of the trustee; and the manner in which he may be divested of his responsibilities. Finally, he treats, in a similar manner, of the estate and the rights of cestuis que trust, and the remedies which they have against their trustees. A supplementary Chapter on Pleading and Practice in reference to the law of trusts and trustees is among the useful additions to the present edition of the work. There is undoubtedly much to be said in favour of a methodical arrangement of this kind, but it is open to the inconvenience of separating matters which the practitioner is compelled to consider together, and making his calls upon the index more frequent and troublesome than they would be if the scope of the work had admitted of a more rule-of-thumb sequence of subjects. To illustrate what we mean by an example, let us suppose that land has been devised in trust for an alien, and that a lawyer has to consult Mr. Lewin's book to ascertain the effect of the will. He might light upon the section on Unlawful Trusts in the first great division of the work, and there he would find that a trust of real estate declared in favour of an alien will vest in the Crown without the form of a previous inquisition. Again, under the head "Who may be cestui que trust?" in a different part of the work, the position is laid down that the Crown may be cestui que trust; and it is added, that, in the case of an alien, a trust may be declared for an alien, but cannot be enforced for his benefit; it being contrary to law that he should plead or be impleaded touching lands, that the king on inquest found will be entitled to the trust by forfeiture, but that the forfeiture vests not in the king the legal estate but merely transfers to him the right of suing a subpœna against the trustee in equity. It is obvious that this exposition of the law is materially different from the brief statement which we first extracted, as the one asserts and the other denies the necessity for an inquisition; and a further puzzle is offered to the reader by an intimation which is added, that, where a trust is in fieri and executory, as distinguished from a trust in esse, the Court will do no act to give it to an alien who by law cannot hold lands—a dogma which seems unnecessary if the previous assertion, that no trust can be enforced in favour of an alien, be true, and which, on reference to Burney v. Macdonald (15 Sim. 14), the case cited in support, turns out to be a dictum that an executory trust for an alien cannot be enforced by the Crown, or, more accurately speaking, a doubt whether such is not the law. Now, we do not care to inquire whether this be right or wrong, though, in point of fact, it has been more than questioned; but it is certain that it is in direct opposition to the express statement of Mr. Lewin himself, as to the power of the Crown to take an alien's trust; and Macdonald v. Burney, if referred to at all, ought to have been given as an authority contra on that point. But these are not the only places where the subject of aliens turns up. In the third division, which treats of the estate of the cestui que trust, there occurs a Chapter "on the Forfeiture of a Trust," by which is meant the forfeiture, not of the office, but of the equitable interest. In a section of this Chapter, we have a third summary of the law on aliens' equitable estates. There we are again told that such a trust is forfeitable to the Crown on the principle of public policy, that the legal estate is not forfeited, but that the king must prosecute his right by subpœna, and that he may do so without office found or inquisition taken. This, it will be observed, is, in substance, the same as the second passage to which we have referred, except that it agrees with our first quotation, in holding that an inquisition is not a necessary preliminary. A reader who hit upon one of these passages would lay down the book with a somewhat different idea of the law from that which would be gathered by one who found out the others. But it is not only the statement of the law that varies, yet the list of authorities appended to the different passages is not identical; and, in justice to Mr. Lewin, we are bound to admit that in each instance the cases cited in the foot-notes will be found to contain all the dicta, not very harmonious, which he has embodied in the corresponding portion of his text. For example, it has certainly been said that forfeiture is the basis of the Crown's right to an alien's equitable interest in land; but that dictum has been overruled by the House of Lords in the case of Attorney-General v. Duplessis (1 Bligh, P. C. 415), which Mr. Lewin nowhere notices in connection with this subject. Then, again, opposing dicta may be found on the question as to the necessity of an inquisition to found the right of the Crown; but that will scarcely justify Mr. Lewin in relying exclusively on one of such dicta in one part of his book, and holding by the other in a different Chapter. Moreover, it happens that Mr. Lewin has omitted to notice the most important modern authorities on the point—Rittson v. Stordy (3 W. R. 627; 1 Jur. N. S. 771) and Barrow v. Wadkin (5 W. R. 695). The last case was not decided until May in the present year, and it may have been impossible to incorporate it into the text; but Rittson v. Stordy was decided, in the first instance, by V. C. Stuart, as long ago as July, 1855; and, as it lays down the law in direct opposition to the statements contained in Mr. Lewin's book, it ought certainly to have been noticed, although the Lords Justices, without reversing the judgment, have since been careful not to indorse the doctrine, and the Master of the Rolls, in Barrow v. Wadkin, has given a decision in favour of the views supported by Mr. Lewin.

We have noticed the discrepancies and omissions connected with this point, not so much to convey an impression that the work is generally got up in a slovenly manner—which cannot justly be said—but because they are just the defects which are almost the necessary consequence of the general mode in which the work is constructed. The logical, but inconvenient, divisions and subdivisions of the subject rendered it almost impossible to treat every point once for all in one place; and when an author has to look at the same question from slightly different points of view in different Chapters, he is unavoidably led into repetitions, and is very likely to give several imperfect and conflicting summaries of the law, instead of a single exhaustive exposition. The danger, too, of overlooking authorities is very much greater when a discussion is thus scattered over distinct sections of a work; and while one cannot but regret that a treatise on which so much pains have been bestowed should exhibit faults of so serious a kind, we are disposed to attribute them almost entirely to the insuperable difficulty of uniting in one work the advantages of scientific method and the minute accuracy required in a practical hand-book. The result is sure to be a volume too bulky and detailed for the mere student of legal principles, and not sufficiently compendious and safe for the use of the man of business. With all the defects inherent in the nature of the book, it is one which, nevertheless, will be accepted as a boon by all who are concerned with the head of equity to which it relates. It brings down the cases to a much later date than any existing publication, and contains valuable matter which has not been elsewhere collected. Caution may be necessary in using it, but it must and will be used as the most modern and most complete of existing treatises on the law of trusts. We find many of the very latest decisions on little practical points, which are often very embarrassing from the lack of definite decisions upon them in the older reports; and if we also find that some authorities of the same description have escaped the author's vigilance, their number is not such as to reflect discredit on the general care with which the treatise has been edited. The task of writing a perfect law book has, by the multitude of decisions, become quite Herculean; and if we have not yet got the best work that could be desired on the subject of trusts, there is no doubt that Mr. Lewin's present edition is, after all, the best treatise that has yet been produced.

National Association for the Promotion of Social Science.

At the meeting of this Association, held in Birmingham, on Monday the 12th instant, Lord Brougham, in his inaugural address, referring to the Society for the Amendment of the Law, said:—It would not be easy to describe the many pernicious attempts at legislation which the Society has stopped in their earliest stages—attempts tending to the injury, not to the amendment of the law, and, if ending in failure and its attendant exposure, calculated to bring the great cause of legal improvement into disrepute. But it is more pleasing to dwell upon the signal benefits that have accrued from the measures maturely digested and strenuously promoted, which have obtained the sanction first of the public assent—that is, the approval of those who are capable and well informed—and, finally, the assent of the Legislature itself. To give particular instances would only weary those who are familiar with the history of the Society. But I am bound to state, that, since its establishment in 1844, most of the Bills which I have brought forward, and of which many have been passed, making a great change in our jurisprudence, either originated in the inquiries and reports of the Society's committees, or owed to the labours and authority of that body valuable help towards, first, their preparation, next their adoption. The great measure of local judicature, and those which arose out of the common law and real property commissions, were, no doubt, adopted prior to the Society's foundation. But many of the Bills extending and improving those measures are materially indebted to its co-operation. One instance is better than any general description. Of the nine Bills presented by me to the House of Lords in 1845, and six of which are now the law of the land, two of the six were suggested by the Society, and another, the most important of the whole, and which has entirely changed the course of procedure, the Act for the Examination of Parties in all Suits, I never should have succeeded in carrying but for the Society's correspondence with all the county court judges, and their almost unanimous testimony in favour of the change. Take another instance:—Of the legal improvements in the session that has just closed, the most important are the Divorce and Fraudulent Trustees Acts. The former was mainly furthered by the inquiries of committees, by the public meeting held on the protection of married women under the presidency of Sir John Pakington, and by the Bills which the Society prepared, and which were presented the session before; while the latter (Fraudulent Trustees Act) originated in the inquiry and report of a special committee of the Society upon the subject. Nor should we pass over a very important step taken by the Government in consequence of the Society's urgent remonstrance against the grievous defects in our judicial statistics. The elaborate discussions in the committees, and their conclusive reports, aided by the indefatigable labours of Professor Levi, have had the effect of introducing a material improvement in that department; and, great as the imperfection still is, so as to make the returns not deserve the name of judicial statistics, we have now every ground for hoping, that, at length, the Legislature will have the means of ascertaining the effects of its Acts, and no longer continue to pass laws in the dark. This subject will deserve the early attention of our first department; nor is there any other matter that appears so much to press for consideration, if it be not the continued refusal of equitable jurisdiction to our local courts—a refusal not easy to be comprehended, when several years ago we found some of the first solicitors in London declaring, in a petition to Parliament, that they never should think of recommending a client to sue for an equitable debt of so little as £1,000. The various efforts made to obtain this measure of strict justice have received the aid of the Society, and much important information has been obtained, though as yet all those attempts have failed. But the Society has also afforded proof of the valuable results obtained from combined action in the two Mercantile Law Conferences which it convened and conducted in 1852 and 1857. Prior to the former year no systematic attempt had been made to obtain the opinions of the mercantile classes throughout the kingdom on the state of the commercial law. Indeed, it is comparatively of late years that the establishment of those valuable institutions, chambers of commerce, has afforded the means of selecting delegates from our mercantile towns; and when, in November, 1852, the representatives of a number of chambers met, under the direction of the Society, to discuss the assimilation of the mercantile laws of England, Ireland, and Scotland, a new era certainly began in our commercial legislation. The result of that Conference, which was presided over by myself on the first day, and by Lord Harrowby on the second, was the appointment of a royal commission to inquire into the subject which had occupied the attention of the delegates. The commissioners, all men of high reputation and tried ability, accumulated a great body of evidence, and published the results of their labours in a valuable Report, which recommended an extensive assimilation of the mercantile laws in the three portions of the United Kingdom. This Report has not been allowed to remain a dead letter: the two Mercantile Law Amendment Acts of the session of 1856 were founded upon its recommendation; and though these measures undoubtedly fall short of what might have been hoped, and still leave much to be done in the way of assimilation, they must be regarded as very useful additions to the statute-book, and are, we may trust, the precursors of further improvement. The second Mercantile Law Conference in January last is of too recent a date to enable us to dwell upon its results; there cannot, however, be any doubt that they will be as satisfactory as those of the former meeting. The objects of the second Conference were more wide and varied, its discussions extended over a longer period, and a proportionate time must be expected to elapse before its proceedings will bear all legitimate fruits. The present state of the law and administration of bankruptcy was very fully dealt with, and we have already two tangible results from that discussion. One is the Bill which I presented to the House of Lords for remedying the evils in the bankrupt law complained of by the commercial delegates at the Conference; and it is very satisfactory to find that the Chamber of Commerce in this town has prepared another measure having the same object, but more detailed in its provisions. There can be little doubt that the attention drawn to the state of our Bankruptcy Courts by the Conference in January, perpetuated as it will be by the discussions here during the next three days, will finally result in a measure carrying still further those improvements which were commenced in 1831 in this important branch of our commercial jurisprudence, and were afterwards expanded in the Consolidation Act of 1849. The subject of bankruptcy has been alluded to as the most prominent of the topics which occupied the attention of the Conference in January; but it seems certain that the effect of that great meeting will be felt in other matters—that the repeal of the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, recommended by the second Conference as well as by the commissioners who were appointed on the representation of the first, and the extension of more frequent and better means of local justice to provincial towns, so strongly and unanimously insisted on by the delegates, will result from their deliberations.

DEPARTMENT I.—JURISPRUDENCE AND AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

Lord John Russell (in the chair) said:—I have to lament, that, owing to a change in the arrangements originally made, I have the honour to appear before you to address you upon a subject on which I feel I must be unequal to the occasion. As, however, each chairman of a department will address you, I will endeavour to point out the way in which the section over which I have the honour to preside—Jurisprudence and the Amendment of the Law—may be rendered practically useful. A learned gentleman, a member of the House of Commons, and formerly Attorney-General for Ireland, Mr. Napier, whom I regret I do not see here on this occasion, has urged very strongly upon the House of Commons at different times the propriety of appointing a Minister of Justice. It has always appeared to me that he was right in his opinion on the subject; and the House of Commons have agreed not only that he is right in the general principle, but that the appointment of such an officer is a measure of urgent administrative reform. That object, however, has not yet been accomplished, though I have been informed by my learned friend, the Attorney-General, that the question has been under consideration of the Government, and that he has plans prepared for the purpose. I would make a Minister of Justice a member of the House of Commons, because it is essential to have in that assembly a person who can take into consideration the most fitting way of carrying out amendments of the law. He would point out not only those portions of the law upon which amendments were required, but, if properly appointed, be of invaluable service in carrying them through Parliament. Lord Brougham, in his admirable address last night, in speaking of the county courts, suggested that they might deal with certain cases of equity, and I entirely concur in the opinion; but I think it would be necessary that there should be some such person as a Minister of Justice to see that the courts are properly constituted for the purpose. In the course of the discussion last session on a most important subject, it was suggested, that it might be dealt with in the county courts. That subject was of the utmost moral—the utmost social—the utmost religious importance, it referring to the regulation and dissolution of the marriage tie. It was objected by those who would not accept the county courts for the purpose, that, having been established only for the recovery of small debts, so much noise and confusion prevailed that they were unequal to the subject. If that be so, it appears to be an argument for providing that they shall be properly constructed. If you wish, as I think the country does and ought to wish, that local courts should deal with more important measures than small debts, it ought to be our business to see that those courts are properly constructed. In Scotland they have a system of administration of local justice, but I do not know sufficient of its provisions to say how far they are applicable to this country. In Ireland barristers are appointed to administer justice in the counties, and they give the highest satisfaction. It will be the business of this department to consider the systems of both Scotland and Ireland, and to take care that England has a law not less efficient than those of the sister kingdoms. Were the local courts properly constructed, they would no doubt take a vast deal of legal business now performed in other courts. For my own part, I always look with considerable distrust upon those who say that justice should not be obtained excepting at a considerable price, as otherwise the fury of litigation would be so great that it would be impossible to curb it. My answer is, that no price will curb the litigation of the rich, neither should we attempt to quench the desire for justice in the poor. I do not want to detain you at any length in this place, but there are questions, at which I will barely hint, which may be fairly considered by a department for the amendment of the law. We may consider how far it is necessary that there should be a continuance of the practice in seeking redress from a court of justice, of having to go from one court to another, with no object, it would seem, but that of incurring expense. I have a paper—not exactly public—with which I have been furnished by my learned friend Sir Fitzroy Kelly, who I am happy to see attending the Conference, showing how enormous have been the expenses in the probate and testamentary courts from that cause. There have of late been great changes in these courts, but still there is a great deal too much expense—too much form—being sent down from one court to another to have the cause inquired into, and coming back again to receive process. Bentham used to call it being bandied about from one court to another; and when Erskine was once told that a client of his must go to the Court of Chancery, he expressed a hope that their Lordships would not think of sending any fellow-creature there. It is my opinion, that a cause, if commenced in a proper court, should be finished there; and I know also that that is the opinion of the present Attorney-General, a very high authority on matters of procedure. There are many commercial questions, which may be fairly considered by this department of the Association, such as the amendment of the law of bankruptcy, and other points in which all connected with commerce must feel the greatest interest. We may also, in my opinion, consider very many important points in the commercial law; and I believe we have before us materials which, after ample consideration, may guide the course of legislation next year. I now come to a question of the greatest importance. I maintain, we must not be merely satisfied with transcribing ancient laws, and calling them new; we must not put errors into new Acts of Parliament under the name of consolidation: when we attempt to consolidate we must also amend. I say this, because a Bill was introduced into Parliament last session which proposed to inflict the punishment of death for offences which no judge would think of so punishing. When we make new laws we must take care that they are such as can be executed, and are in consonance with the spirit of the times. I have come to the conclusion that the consolidation of the laws must be preceded by their amendment.

The Transfer of Land.

Mr. E. T. Wakefield read a paper on this subject. He adverted to the evils resulting from the operation of the present law, especially as relates to the production and verification of title, the result of which was expense, delay, and disappointment; this occurring whether the transfer was of one or ten thousand acres. He showed, moreover, that the evils fell most heavily upon those least able to bear them. Having pointed out the defects of the law, he proceeded to consider various remedies proposed, especially commenting upon the recommendation of the commissioners to have a certificate of title in conjunction with registration. This plan, he thought, would increase the expense, although it might diminish the delay. He advocated, as a much better plan, and free from the objections raised to the others, the granting of certificates with indorsement of subsequent deeds thereon.

Mr. E. Fawcett read a paper on the same subject, which set out by asking the pertinent question, "Why should the transfer of £1,000 worth of land cost more than £1,000 worth of railway or bank stock?" He then went on to propose the division of the kingdom into registration districts, and the appointment of registrars; that land should be registered by figure or letter upon the Ordnance and other maps; and that the certificate of title should be the only title that could be called for. Both these papers were elaborately prepared.

Mr. A. Ryland said that some inconvenience would result from the adoption of Mr. Fawcett's plan of description by letters. How would it operate, for example, in the case of a piece of land in the vicinity of a town, where one field was cut up into a hundred small pieces? The difficulty, however, might be got over by showing the dimensions of the various letters.

A Member thought the difficulty was not so much mechanical. He thought that it lay in the law regarding real property itself.

The Rev. Dr. Begg (of Edinburgh) said he could speak of the bad moral effects attending the difficulty of land transfer. He held that the question was an exceedingly simple one, and could not conceive why a simple extract from the register should not be a sufficient title. He hoped, that, whatever improvement was made in the law, it would be extended to Scotland. He wanted to see the English freehold introduced there; the 40s. freehold. At present they had simply feudal tenure. He pointed out, also, that the Scotch registration system was far from being satisfactory.

Sir F. Kelly was glad that public attention had been called to the subject of the existing evils in the system, and that they were capable of easy remedy. Although they had been led to believe in this country that the evils did not exist in Scotland and elsewhere, it was clear from what had fallen from the reverend gentleman that great complaints exist in that country as well as in England. The great difficulty was not that alluded to in the papers—namely, the cost attending the transfer of the smallest portion of land. It was an evil, however, of great magnitude. To raise a sum of money on a single acre of land, it was necessary to incur all the expense attending the purchase of a large landed estate. Various remedies had been suggested in regard to this evil. He owned he thought it time for the community to ask the Legislature to inquire why we should not be able to transfer land as cheaply, expeditiously, and as effectually as stock? If it were said that the difficulty arises from the tenure of land—that estates belonged to more than one person; that they were given for life with remainder to other persons, perhaps unborn children; that they were liable to incumbrances of all sorts, loans, mortgages, &c.; then the answer was, that all these existed as well in regard to stock as in regard to land, and yet there was no difficulty and no insecurity in the transfer of stock. The question then occurred, how could registration be effected in the most satisfactory way—first, to prevent expense; and second, injustice. He could not help thinking, now that public attention had been directed to the subject, and the Commissioners had made an elaborate report, and, now that Government had intimated their intention to bring in a Bill on the matter, that it might be of some little service to the section if he threw out one or two considerations of some importance. He thought, then, that the foundation of any measure for the registration of titles and the cheap conveyance of land should be, that the title once registered should be a parliamentary title. The party transferring would thus give to the purchaser all the security that was given by the conveyance of stock. There was no difficulty about it. With the aid of Ordnance maps, or of others, upon a still larger scale, every square foot of land in the kingdom might be completely identified and registered. Then came the question of title. The register must settle the question of title in the first person registered. He would suggest the formation of courts like the Incumbered Estates Courts of Ireland, consisting of lawyers of high eminence and ability; and let any one wishing to register his title, after due notice, establish it. With regard to four-fifths of the entire landed property in England, there was no question about the title; and he ventured to think that within two or three years the owners of almost all the landed property would proceed to the courts in question, notice would be given to opponents, if there were any, and a title afforded to the proper owner. The title, as he before observed, should be a parliamentary title, and the party in whose name it was registered should be able to transfer it as stock was transferred in the Bank of England. It would be objected probably that two-thirds of the landed property of the kingdom did not belong to any one individual, or even to one set of trustees; but then that was also the case with stock. Then they might be told there would be facilities given for fraud by trustees. No doubt fraud might be committed, and so there might be in stock; but practically they never heard of it. Besides, that could easily be provided against. Just as in the case of stock a distringas could be lodged at the Bank; so, in land, a caveat could be lodged at the registry. He thought, that, if provisions were made for the establishment of titles before a court, and then giving absolute power to him in whose name the title was established to transfer it at will, a greater amount of good would be effected than by any single Act of Parliament passed within our time.

After a few words from Mr. Wakefield, in dissent from the views of Sir Fitzroy Kelly, the noble Chairman intimated that he had a few words to say upon the subject next day, and the proceedings were adjourned.

Wednesday, Oct. 14.

Lord John Russell concluded the debate by summing up the chief arguments that had been advanced. His Lordship stated that there could be no difference of opinion as to the magnitude of the present evil, and he thought Sir Fitzroy Kelly had made it clear that there were no insuperable difficulties in applying a remedy. He thought a parliamentary title might be arrived at with safety and certainty by the means suggested, and that transfers would afterwards be made more easily than some people imagined. He gave the experience of the Incumbered Estates Court in Ireland as an illustration of this remark. When he first brought in the Bill for instituting that court, he thought it advisable to go over to Ireland in order to ascertain what practical men thought of the probability of its working. The Chancellor of Ireland told him that the Bill could never be brought to work from its being beset with difficulties, such as those which are supposed to obstruct a more simple and inexpensive mode of conveying land. Notwithstanding this prediction, the measure was afterwards taken up by Sir Robert Peel; the Act was passed, and every one knew how easily and how well it had worked. He hoped a like result would attend a measure for simplifying the conveyance of land.

The Bankruptcy Laws.

Mr. S. S. Lloyd, of Birmingham, read a paper containing suggestions for a new bankruptcy law. He was followed by Mr. Wm. Hawes, with another paper on the same subject.

Mr. Hawes was of opinion that the great evil at present consists in our not dealing severely enough with bankrupts. He thought the certificate gave too full a discharge from debt, and that bankrupts ought to be held liable to pay their debts out of any future property they might acquire, as is the case with insolvents. He also advocated a more stringent penal system in dealing with bankrupts. The paper entered at great length into the causes and frequency of fraud, containing particulars and arguments of much interest, but not strictly belonging to this subject.

The next paper was read by Mr. Rayner, as a deputy of the Huddersfield Chamber of Commerce. It advocated the abolition of the present Bankruptcy Courts, and the transference of their jurisdiction to county court judges. After setting forth the hardships felt by the traders of Huddersfield and other large towns, in having to go to Leeds for the transaction of bankruptcy business, Mr. Rayner contended that there was no reason why the several county courts should not be intrusted with its management. The paper also advocated a more simple and economical method of administering the estates.

A paper intitled "Suggestions from the Scottish System of Bankruptcy," by Mr. John Gilmour, was then read by Mr. Arthur Ryland. Papers contributed by the Liverpool and the Leeds Chambers of Commerce were afterwards read, the former of which discussed the question of bankruptcy administration in various details, and the latter advocated uniformity of practice as respects bankrupts and insolvents, whether living or dead, and recommended the abolition of official assignees, and the employment of independent accountants under the control of the trade assignees.

Mr. Jabet (of Birmingham) thought the meeting ought to confine itself to general principles, and abstain from details, on which many differences of opinion would necessarily arise. He agreed with Mr. Hawes that there ought only to be one mode of dealing with parties who failed to pay their debts.

Mr. John Smith defended the present system against many of the charges that had been made. In particular, he contended that the present law contains ample provisions for the punishment of offences committed by bankrupts against commercial morality, and maintained that bankrupts and insolvents could not be dealt with on the same principle without much difficulty.

Mr. Rayner contended, that, if the present law provided against offences in theory, its provisions were never carried out in practice, and that they ought to be made more specific and more imperative.

Mr. Hastings (the Secretary of the Association) contended that there was no course but assimilating the practice in England to that in Scotland. In the latter country the estates are administered at an average expense of 8 per cent., while in England the cost is from 30 to 50 per cent. This satisfactory result is attained in the Scotch Court by the jurisdiction being vested in the sheriffs of counties, who answer to our county court judges, and by the estates being placed in the hands of trustees nominated by the creditors in each case. He thought there would never have been a special Bankruptcy Court in this country had county courts existed at the time of its institution, and maintained that the latter are the only tribunals in which the business could be cheaply and satisfactorily performed.

Professor Leoni Levi contended, that the great expense so generally complained of arose from the Court being too little employed, the cost of a large establishment being thrown on a very small amount of business. He thought it a question worth consideration, whether more work might not be advantageously found for it.

Mr. Campbell Smith gave an explanation of the Scotch practice, and began with expressing his surprise that one-half of the kingdom should be so ignorant of the method pursued in the other. He said they worked their bankruptcies in Scotland at an expense of about 8 per cent., and, as a Scotchman, he could not understand how his English fellow-subjects could submit to the larger expenses incurred in this country. (Lord Brougham here observed that the speaker was "making English mouths water;" whereupon Mr. Smith said, it struck him that the injunction not to muzzle the ox that treads out the corn was intended as a warrant for English bankruptcy practitioners, but he thought no ox treated in that considerate manner ought to consume so much as half the corn in the course of treading it out.)

Lord Brougham stated, that there were two points of merit in the system introduced by himself in 1831, and which was still in force. One was the establishment of permanent judicial tribunals, the other the institution of official assignees. Whatever changes were made, he thought these portions of the system should be retained, though he was ready to admit the expediency of several reforms in the procedure.

At the conclusion of the discussion, Lord John Russell proceeded to review the arguments used by the speakers, and the opinions advanced in the papers. He thought it clear, from the unanimity of statements to that effect, that change was required. But he questioned whether gentlemen of the mercantile community had yet made up their minds on several important matters which lay at the root of the subject. He suggested that a committee should be formed to examine the papers, and present a report to the section next morning. It was ultimately resolved, on the motion of Mr. Arthur Ryland, that the deputies of the various chambers of commerce should be a committee for this purpose, that they should endeavour to agree on all the main points which had been the subject of consideration, and should report their opinion to the section.

Summary Diligence on Bills of Exchange.

A paper by Mr. Gilmour, on Lord Brougham's Bill for introducing into England the Scottish System of Summary Diligence on Bills of Exchange, was read by Mr. Ryland.

The Commercial Law.

Some observations by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce on questions concerning the commercial law were next read; and the section adjourned.

Thursday, Oct. 15.

The Recordation of the Law for purposes of Promulgation, Administration, and Legislation.

Mr. Arthur Symonds read a paper on this subject. A good record of the substance and the transactions of the law was a fundamental want in this country, where we have abundance of valuable material, but no means of making it available. No aid is given to inquiry or to instruction by a proper collection and systemisation of this material. There is no systematic record either of jurisprudence or administration of the law, nor is there any index of codes or chronicle either of legislation or of practice. The rude materials now existing are only useful to the actual practitioners of the law, and even they can only make use of them by great diligence and research. The country contains no law library except those of a private kind. It is no wonder, then, that legislation proceeds so slowly, and improvements in the law are introduced so seldom. The press does all it can towards giving a record of what takes place in the administration of the law, but such detached accounts are only of temporary use. It is well worth consideration whether a public recordation ought not to be instituted for the guidance of the Government and of the people. We all desire to know the law and that others should do the same, and that our legislators and administrators should have the means of becoming well acquainted with it. But we have the testimony of the Lord Chancellor that no man living either does or can know the law perfectly under the present crude system of recordation. Everybody is concerned in our devising a remedy for this state of things: a record ought to be kept, and ought to be systematically made, well indexed, and deposited in a place where it would be accessible to all interested in seeing it. Nothing would be so useful as this kind of record in facilitating the codification, the improvement, the administration, and the observance of the law.

Mr. Theobald observed, that he thought the suggestion of the paper exceedingly valuable, inasmuch as recordation was a necessary step towards codification, and, through that, towards uniformity and certainty of administration.

Lord John Russell observed that the paper was one of great value, and that it contained the outline of a system which promised to be of much service to the country.

Legal Education.

Mr. Andrew Edgar read a paper on this subject. He advocated the extension of legal education to the people in general. The great advantage of the law as an object of study is, that it deals with real things and actual interests, and not with abstract ideas. It therefore surpasses mathematics and logic, the one of which has been so much advocated by Professor Whewell, and the other by Sir W. Hamilton. A person who had studied the law would have made himself conversant with matters in which we are all interested. As a mental discipline the study of law is particularly valuable in its leading to an examination of evidence, and therefore qualifying the student for ascertaining the truth or falsehood of alleged facts in other researches. At Rome the forum was the great nursery of statesmen, and a similar use might be made of our own courts. Law is connected with so many other subjects, that a due study of it leads to something like universal knowledge.

Mr. Theobald thought legal education was very deficient in itself, and that there was no possibility of instruction in the law being obtained by a member of the general community. Nor was there anything like a complete literature of the subject.

A long conversation then ensued respecting the present state of legal education in this country, some of the speakers contending that it was all that could be desired, others maintaining that much improvement was required. It seemed generally admitted that lectures on law are at present paid at too low a rate to secure the services of first-rate men.

Lord John Russell concluded the discussion by observing, that there was only an apparent difference of opinion among the speakers, the author of the paper contending for the extension of legal education among all classes, and not saying that it was imperfectly provided for in the profession itself. He thought the learned gentleman had understated the advantages of mathematics and logic as fundamental studies when he contrasted them with the study of the law. He quoted the authority of Lord Macaulay for the fact that many of our judges had been senior wranglers at Cambridge, which showed the advantage that results from men pursuing the exact kind of study appointed at that university. With reference to the relative advantage of attending lectures and of studying actual practice in preparing for the law, his Lordship thought there ought to be an admixture of the two. He thought the truth lay, as it often does in other matters of controversy, between the two; and that a good lawyer cannot well know too much either of law or of anything else. There was one other subject on which he had a few words to say, especially as he had been placed in a position to know as much of it as most men—that was, on the amount of legal knowledge possessed by young men of our upper classes, which he pronounced to be exceedingly scanty. Gentlemen engaged in the duties of quarter sessions and of Parliament with no previous acquaintance whatever with the laws of their own country, though they were often deeply read in what took place in the senate of Athens or of Rome. The late Sir Robert Peel determined on sending his son into a pleader's office, not with the intention of his practising the law, but that he might acquire that knowledge of law which would qualify him for discharging other duties with advantage. This example might be profitably followed by all who wished to educate young men efficiently for a high position in the country.

Partnership Registration and Limitation of Liability.

Mr. West read a paper from the Bristol Chamber of Commerce on this subject. The paper set out with recounting a resolution of the late mercantile conference, to the effect that the interests of trade require all partnerships to be registered. No steps have hitherto been taken to give effect to this resolution, and it had been thought advisable to bring the subject again before the public by submitting a paper on it to this Association. The paper also advocated an extension of the principle of limited liability to private partnerships, on the ground that there was no reason why it should be restricted to companies of a particular constitution, or consisting of a particular number of shareholders. Propositions for a bill to provide registration of partnerships were then submitted in full detail, superintendent-registrars of unions being suggested as the officers in whose hands the carrying out of the measure might be placed. The paper concluded with a motion, to the effect that the meeting approved the system of registration, with the detailed propositions for effecting it contained in the scheme submitted by the Bristol Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. EDGAR contended that registration should only be adopted for important public reasons, which did not exist in the case of partnerships. The names of partners in a house of business were of no interest, except to those who had dealings with it, and he thought they could protect themselves by ascertaining beforehand who constituted the house with which they were about to have transactions. Independent of this, he thought the details of the proposed scheme were imperfect.

Mr. ARTHUR RYLAND entirely differed from the last speaker, and maintained that great injury arises from allowing men to trade under a false name without having first registered their true one. He had paid great attention to the subject, and had himself known many instances where a just claim was defeated because there were no means of ascertaining the exact names of those against whom the law required it to be made. Perhaps a firm trading as A. B. incurs a debt, and refuses to pay it. An action is brought, judgment is obtained, and the claimant proceeds to execution. Then he is met by an announcement that there is another partner in the house, and he consequently loses the time and the money he has spent in the proceeding. Justice is thus defeated, and great private injury sustained.

The representative of the Bradford Chamber of Commerce stated that the opinion in his district was decidedly in favour of registration.

Mr. W. R. LLOYD thought a hint might be taken from the Government, who always required the registration of parties engaged in a trade which dealt in exciseable articles.

After observations from Professor LEVI, who thought the evil might be diminished by treating a firm as one person, and others,

Lord JOHN RUSSELL thought the present meeting ought not to commit itself to matters of detail; and, while he was himself of opinion that very strong arguments had been used on either side, he suggested that some gentleman should propose a motion to the following effect:—"That it is the opinion of this department that it is expedient to establish a system of general registration of private partnerships." This would test the feeling of the gentlemen present, and the vote on it might be taken as an expression of public opinion.

The vote having been proposed and seconded, was carried by a large majority; Messrs. Edgar and Theobald being its only opponents.

THE FURTHER ADVANCEMENT OF LAW REFORM.

Mr. THEOBALD read a paper in which he advocated the assimilation of jurisdiction in all legal tribunals; the differences now existing between which were traced by the author to numerous accidental causes.

THE 17TH SECTION OF THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

Mr. G. W. HASTINGS advocated the repeal of this section. He pointed out the hardships of the enactment at considerable length, and contended that there was no sound objection to its repeal.

Mr. THEOBALD thought the subject required to be approached carefully, especially since so experienced a man as Lord Tenterden was known to be in favour of the enactment.

Mr. LEONI LEVI and Mr. CAMPBELL SMITH stated that no such provision existed in Scotland; and a general feeling seemed to prevail among the gentlemen present in favour of its repeal in this country.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL said, he had found the opinion of merchants and bankers in London to be so decidedly against repealing the section, that he had hesitated as to the wisdom of interfering with it. But he thought Mr. Hastings had shown sufficient ground for thinking his apprehensions unfounded.

Mr. HASTINGS then moved that the subject be referred to a general committee as one of the subjects to be taken into consideration, with the view to legislation, which was adopted.

BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. J. D. GOODMAN then brought up the Report of the committee appointed to consider the plan of bankruptcy reform. The Report stated that the members of the committee were of opinion that the various papers read before his department, together with the Scotch Act, contained sufficient materials on which to frame an efficient Bill, and proposed that another committee should be appointed to draw up the Bill, consisting of three members of the Association, and two members of each Chamber of Commerce and Trade Protection Society in the kingdom; the Bill to be presented at the next session of Parliament.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL thought the department ought not to pledge itself to introduce the Bill in the next session of Parliament; and it was ultimately determined that the committee should be named as suggested, and that it should communicate with the Attorney-General when the provisions of the new Bill had been agreed upon.

Friday, Oct. 16.

The Secretary, Mr. A. RYLAND, read the Report, which contained a record of the various papers read, and of the resolutions agreed to on transfer of land, bankruptcy, registration of partnerships, and the Statute of Frauds. The Report was agreed to.

Money Market.

CITY, FRIDAY EVENING.

The Bank of England raised their rate of discount on Monday last to 8 per Cent. It had stood at 7 per Cent. only since the previous Monday. A remarkable degree of tranquillity has existed in the Money Market under the pressure of this extraordinary rate of interest. The Bank of France raised their rate on Tuesday from 6½ to 7½ per Cent. This advance has not prevented great steadiness being maintained on the Paris Bourse. The rate of discount at Hamburg has advanced to 9½ per Cent., and the difficulty of obtaining money upon bills is reported to be very great.

The intelligence from America which caused last Monday's advance in the Bank rate of discount was accompanied by an additional long list of failures. Further information from thence, and also from the East Indies, is expected with great anxiety. The East India Company have given notice of an addition equal to four per Cent. on their bills on India. This added to a previous increase, is an effectual stop upon any drain from that quarter upon local resources in India. General stability is clearly seen in the trade and shipping interest of this country. A large portion of the dividends lately received at the Bank has been invested in stock, and the price of funds thereby maintained, notwithstanding the high rate of interest obtainable on bills. The fluctuations in the English Funds have been inconsiderable. Consols close this afternoon at 88¾ to ⅞ per Cent. The amount of specie shipped by the Indus on the 21st instant for India and China was £775,768.

From the Bank of England return for the week ending the 17th October, 1857, which we give below, it appears that the amount of notes in circulation is £20,183,245, being an increase of £193,135; and the stock of bullion in both departments is £9,524,478, showing a decrease of £585,465 when compared with the previous return. The reserve of notes in the banking department stands in the same account at £3,217,185, having suffered a reduction during the week of £807,215.

The advance in the rate of discount, on Monday, brings it up to 8 per cent.—the point at which it stood in the greatest excitement of the panic of 1847; but the state of domestic affairs in England is widely different now from then. We are at present enjoying the fruits of a productive harvest of superior quality. In 1847, famine in Ireland, and short supplies in England, made very large importations of food necessary. The demand was supplied; and a large body of speculators in corn failed in consequence of a fall in the price of wheat from 92*s.* 10*d.* per qr. in June, to 52*s.* 9*d.* in Sept. About the same time, the great East India establishments maintained by Reid, Irving, & Co., Lyalls & Co., and Cockerell & Co., suspended their payments. More than all, the almost incredible amount of railway undertakings which received the sanction of Parliament in 1846, and which involved an expenditure of £120,000,000, was to be provided for in 1847. The Bank rate of discount from January to September, 1847, was 4, 5, and 5½ per cent. In October, when the climax of embarrassment was reached, the rate of discount was advanced to 8 per cent.; but the commercial world was then too much alarmed by the apprehension of an insupportable drain of money to be satisfied with any degree of security that could be derived from a high rate of interest. Those who had plenty of money were afraid to part with it on any terms. The strain, partly real and partly artificial, became so intense that an urgent entreaty from bankers and merchants produced, on Monday the 25th of October, a letter from the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, authorising the Bank to issue notes upon security at 8 per cent., without regard to the limitation of the Bank Act of 1844. Confidence was restored by this relaxation of the law, and the panic subsided without the additional assistance offered by the Government letter being resorted to.

The Directors of the Bank have profited by experience of the working of the Bank Restriction Act: they have gradually advanced their rate for discount to its present standing, and have thereby applied a timely check to the exportation of specie, both to the United States and to the continent of Europe. Their line of policy seems to receive the approbation and support of bankers and merchants; and the result is, the tranquillity which now prevails.

The pecuniary pressure which at present weighs so heavily in this country is felt in a great degree throughout Europe. It would, therefore, be incorrect to attribute our difficulties wholly to the panic in the United States. Nor, if we join thereto the pecuniary results of the convulsion sustained in the East Indies, shall we be correct in attributing exclusively to these two causes the very great derangement which our Money Market now has to sustain. As money is scarce and dear throughout the Continent, it will, of course, be scarce and dear in England. It does not, however, admit of any doubt that the previous and recent intelligence from America has chiefly been the cause of the successive advances in the rate of discount at the Bank, and also of considerable addition to our commercial embarrassments.

The origin of the extraordinary panic and stagnation which has obtained such wonderful dimensions in the United States is derived in some degree from the influence of the newspapers. A part of the press made it its daily business during many weeks before the panic assumed its present dimensions to publish statements that certain stocks and shares were worth little or nothing, and by persevering in these denunciations from day to day created insolvency in many cases where otherwise it never would have existed. The journals are to a great extent divided into supporters of the Bulls and the Bears, and the chief organ of the Bear party has long been engaged in circulating statements for the purpose of destroying the credit of all the principal railways. But without doubt there are other causes, real and substantial, to which the panic may be traced. Many railway undertakings are unremunerative, and several banks have got into difficulties from advances they have made to railways. Where undertakings, demanding large outlay of capital, depend so much as in the United States upon mutual support and accommodation—when the feeling of want of confidence comes into action, the rapidity and extent of its destructive operation is immense. To these causes may be ascribed the present general panic. It pervades all classes, and has paralysed the whole manufacturing and mercantile progress.

The agricultural and commercial state of the country is believed to be generally sound, and to show signs of vigour and prosperity which may be favourably contrasted with indications of similar character in previous times of difficulty. The crops have been unusually productive; and, although under the united influence of large supplies and commercial pressure prices of agricultural produce decline, they continue remunerative. The planters who, on former occasions of difficulty were in debt to the merchants, are now comparatively free from embarrassment. The general community must suffer for some time, but there is no reason to expect any permanent obstacle to prosperity, nor more than a temporary suspension or diminution in the demand for the products of British industry in the United States.

LONDON, OCTOBER 31, 1857.

PROGRESS OF THE REGISTRATION QUESTION.

One result of the Conferences held at Birmingham will undoubtedly be this: that the minds of the laity, and especially of landowners, will be attracted to the consideration of a subject which has hitherto been looked upon almost exclusively as the domain of lawyers. We publish elsewhere an abstract of a paper read at the meeting by Mr. Wakefield, which places this question of facilitating the transfer of land in an aspect most interesting to the politician, by showing that it is intimately connected with social and economical improvement. Mr. Wakefield argues that the strenuous industry of the population is essential to the national prosperity; that the desire of possessing property is the most powerful incentive to exertion; and that, among all sorts of property, none is so much desired as land, and, therefore, whatever tends to give greater freedom to the acquisition of land must necessarily add to the greatness and strength of England.

We believe that opinions differ very much as to the probable effect upon ordinary conveyancing transactions of such an alteration of the law as is proposed in the report on registration. But surely it is possible to conceive, that, under a simpler and more expeditious system of land transfer, there might be a very great increase in the number of small purchases. At Birmingham the lawyers told the laymen that the practice of conveyancing might be so far freed of technicalities, as to enable land to be transferred with the same facility as stock. The immense value of such a change as this, supposing it to be practicable, was immediately appreciated by Lord John Russell, the President of the Section, and he declared himself, with a good deal of emphasis, to be an advocate of the proposed reform. Now, it appears to us to be most desirable that the importance of this incident should be adequately appreciated by all our readers. We believe that if any leading politician of any party should be induced on a leisure day to master the main outlines of this question, he would become thenceforward a supporter of the scheme of registration. Can anybody doubt that all the leading social reformers collected at the Conferences at Birmingham would, if the point were fully and clearly put to them, prove unanimous in their agreement with Lord John Russell? The difficulties which lawyers apprehend will never be appreciated by laymen; and the intelligent public, as it learns to think upon this subject, will answer professional objections with the old adage, that "where there is a will there is a way."

For our own part, we are persuaded that a great and beneficial change will sooner or later be introduced into the law of real property by the adoption of a plan of registration. We think that the national benefits of this change would be very great, and that Mr. Wakefield, in his paper, has not exaggerated the value to the community of the stimulus to productive industry that would be thus supplied. We do not leave out of view the possible operation of the scheme upon the immediate interests of practitioners. Happily, however, we are by no means singular in holding that the expediency of law reforms should be considered irrespective of these apprehended consequences. At Birmingham, the topic of land transfer was succeeded by a discussion upon bankruptcy, and here the emoluments of solicitors were dealt with in the most uncompromising spirit. In bankruptcy, says Mr. Lloyd, in a paper which we elsewhere publish, solicitors' charges constitute on an average one-third of the expense of administration, and a large proportion of these charges are made for duties, which, not being strictly professional, might be more cheaply performed otherwise, or which need not be performed at all. Now, this proposition may perhaps startle some of our readers who meet with it for the first time; but the paper containing it was prepared and read with the concurrence of many lawyers, and we believe that its conclusions will be seen on reflection to be indisputable. If it be the fact that the enormous expense of proceedings in bankruptcy renders a resort to the court the exception rather than the rule, is it not likely that a large reduction of the legal and other charges would render such proceedings, in all cases of insolvent traders, the rule rather than the exception? And can it be doubted that the practitioner would gain on the nine cases thus brought before the court far more than he would lose upon the one which now is overburdened with extravagant or unnecessary fees? A simpler and more economical procedure before tribunals which, either by the aid of the county courts, or in some other manner, should be rendered more readily accessible—this is a reform which the trading interests of the country imperatively demand, and which we believe would largely increase the emoluments of solicitors.

The instance of bankruptcy is only one of many where lawyers have wisely discerned and acted upon the principle, that what is best for the community is also most advantageous in the long run for their own order. But we have chosen this example because there are insolvent traders in every part of England; and a bankruptcy tribunal is, or ought to be, accessible in every town and district. The subject is, therefore, one that concerns provincial practitioners fully as much as it does their London brethren; and we would ask the former to consider whether Mr. Lloyd's paper does not suggest reflections which are by no means inapplicable to the subject of land transfer? Might not the "unpopularity" which is ascribed to the Courts of Bankruptcy be predicated with almost equal justice of the existing system of conveyancing? Is there not some reason to believe, that, with the small capitalist or the possessor of slowly accumulated savings, an investment in land is the exception rather than the rule? Is it not possible, that, where there is one conveyancing transaction under the existing law, there might be ten under a simpler, and cheaper, and more generally intelligible system? Is it an extravagant supposition that the social advantages described by Mr. Wakefield would result from the alteration of the law?—and even if it were clear that the lawyers would lose, instead of gaining, by such a change, could any honest and prudent adviser recommend them to insist upon their own selfish interest in opposition to the general good?

While, however, we concur in the resolution passed at Birmingham, that "the present system of transfer of land is, from the expense and delay inseparable from it, a great social evil," we are very far from regretting that the meeting did nothing more than add to their vote the safe general proposition, that the remedy for the declared evil "lies in the direction of registration." It will comfort our many friends who are, as we believe, unnecessarily disquieted upon this subject, to observe, that the great Social Conference at Birmingham has not advanced, nor, indeed, was likely to advance, to the practical discussion of the carrying out of the desired reform. The plan has been declared, and we believe justly, to be a good plan; but the all-important question is—how can it be made to work? and no adequate answer to that question has been yet produced, nor do we see at present any very strong encouragement to expect one. The readers of papers were exceedingly successful in proving that something ought to be done, but their attempts to explain what that something ought to be are ill-considered and insufficient or mistaken. It is true that the Report of the Commission contains the sketch of a Bill which was probably intended to exhibit the plan of the Commissioners in a working shape, or rather, perhaps, as a first approximation to a more deliberate and accurately finished draft. Whatever was the author's purpose, his work is by no means perfect; and a Bill of Lord Brougham's, brought in towards the end of last session, is a far less satisfactory attempt than even that of the Commission to meet the difficulties of the task. It is true that we have now got Sir Fitzroy Kelly pledged to legislative activity; but if he perseveres in urging such a measure as he described at Birmingham, he can only be regarded as a fresh and eager candidate for a place upon the long list of ambitious, but unsuccessful, law reformers. There remains among the advocates of a cheap and speedy transfer of land the eminent name of Lord John Russell. We do not undervalue the importance of his accession to the cause; and, indeed, it was one of our leading purposes in this article to call the serious attention of our readers to this fact of grave significance. But the utmost that can be expected of the distinguished politician is, that when the Bill has been drawn and settled by astute and experienced lawyers, fully alive to the magnitude of their task, he will lend his influence in Parliament to the carrying of one more great reform. The difficulties of framing the measure are very considerable, but we are perfectly satisfied that they may be overcome. The triumph, however, does not seem likely to be a speedy one; and, for the sake of our provincial friends, we are perfectly well content that ample time should be allowed for the dissipation of prejudices and the quieting of alarms, which we confidently expect will yield at length to truth and reason.

CHANCERY JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

We this day publish the new regulations for the conduct of business at the Chancery Judges' Chambers, which have been adopted by the authority of the Master of the Rolls and the three Vice-Chancellors, and which, we presume, are to come into operation on Monday next. It is, perhaps, rather surprising that although these orders bear date as long ago as the 8th of August, their effect, and so far as we are aware, their existence also was unknown to the profession until the day before yesterday. It appears, however, that these regulations introduce no novelties of procedure. They are merely intended to embody the existing rules of practice, to adjust minute diversities of method which necessarily arose in the different chambers in the absence of a written code, and to inform solicitors exactly what rules they must observe, and what precautions they must take in order to economise their own and the official time. It is further to be observed that the regulations are neither long nor intricate; and such being their character and effect, it is not necessary to urge a complaint, which otherwise, would have been but too well founded, that the profession had neither been consulted in framing these regulations, nor informed of their existence in sufficient time to become masters of their scope and tenor.

Mr. Bloxam, the Chief Clerk to Vice-Chancellor Wood, has published an edition of these regulations and the accompanying forms, and has added an introduction and explanatory notes, which will probably be found useful. We quite concur in all that Mr. Bloxam takes the opportunity of urging as to the obligation resting upon practitioners to aid the judges and their clerks in expediting the course of business. It is well observed in this introduction, that "the time allowed for each case at chambers is upon the assumption that the parties will be prepared with all proper documents and information, and will be actuated by a desire to avoid waste of time." We believe that Mr. Bloxam's confidence in the earnest efforts of the profession to give the fairest possible trial to the new practice is well founded; and we hope it will appear that the issue of these regulations and forms, explained as they have been by so competent an authority as Mr. Bloxam, will do much to assist solicitors in conducting their business in the Judges' Chambers in the most expeditious and efficient manner.

But if Mr. Bloxam, or the Vice-Chancellor whom he represents, or any other officer or judge, is of opinion that any set of rules, however well-considered, worked by any practitioners, however diligent, could enable the business at chambers to be satisfactorily performed by the existing staff, we must be permitted to declare that we hold a totally opposite conviction. No doubt, under a good system, time and labour may be economised to a very considerable extent, but still the utmost result thus obtainable will fall very far short of enabling one man to do the work of two or three; and that, and nothing less, is requisite before the official and judicial staff of the Court of Chancery can become adequate to discharge its duties. We published on the 8th of August, the very day of the date of the regulations, the Report of the Equity Committee of the Incorporated Law Society on delays and defects complained of in several offices of the court. A copy of that document was sent to the Lord Chancellor, and his attention was promised to it. Whether anything has been or is intended to be done to remove the evils so forcibly described in the report we cannot say. But of this we are quite persuaded, that small improvements like the regulations now before us, however judicious and well-intentioned, are utterly inadequate to meet the necessities of the case. The business of the Court increases every year, and is now considerably larger than it was in 1852, whan the new system began to operate. But previous to the changes of that year there were four judges, and ten masters, and ten chief clerks of masters, whereas now the number of judges remains the same, but the staff of inferior officers has been reduced from twenty masters and clerks to eight chief clerks of judges. Meantime, as we have said, the business of the Court increases, and would increase still more, but for the delays, which principally arise from that want of strength in chambers which has been so earnestly complained against by the solicitors. It results from these obstructions that the old unpopularity of the Court still clings to it; and even Lord John Russell, at the Birmingham Conferences, thought proper to quote Lord Erskine's hope that the Court he was addressing would not think of sending a fellow-creature into Chancery. Nay, more, it has actually been proposed that the administration of the estates of deceased insolvent traders should be given to the Court of Bankruptcy, and this in spite of the admitted unpopularity of that Court—an unpopularity so great that its officers are unemployed, and men of active minds wonder how they can possibly survive the endurance of so much leisure—and in spite, too, of an expense which has been lately estimated at 50 per cent. upon the amount administered in the Court.

We repeat, then, that it is essential to the efficiency of the Court of Chancery to appoint four additional judges, so that each judge may be able to sit three days in the week in court, and three days in chambers to dispose of business which it was never intended to devolve and which ought not to be devolved upon the chief clerks. It is also absolutely necessary that the number of chief clerks should be augmented. On this proposal, if ever it advance far enough, we shall, of course, encounter the usual objections of the self-styled economists, and those who demand that the number of common law judges should be reduced, are very unlikely to allow that an augmentation could properly be made in Chancery. But we fear that the Government will very hardly be persuaded to attempt anything that can provoke the vigilance that lies in wait to cut off a judge's salary. One of the greatest experiments ever made to improve procedure will be frustrated by the indisposition to act, and by the fear of being charged with a desire to job and to create patronage. The hope which Mr. Bloxam expresses of seeing a new character given to the court, was once entertained by many earnest reformers who are now beginning to despond. The success of the new practice depends not only, as Mr. Bloxam says, upon the aid given by practitioners to the staff, but also, and much more immediately upon the efficiency of that staff itself. We can venture to guarantee the first of these requisites, but we almost despair of seeing adequate means taken to secure the second.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—Oct. 28.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque.)

Groux's Improved Soap Company (Limited).

Mr. W. Flagell, broker, of Hudson's Bay House, Fenchurch-street, shareholder and contributor to the company, presented a petition for winding it up. The petition states, that, in March, 1853, an association was formed for the purpose of manufacturing soap, according to the method of one Louis Groux, and for other purposes mentioned in the deed of settlement, which bore date March 16, 1853, and was duly executed and registered according to the requirements of the Joint Stock Companies Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. The capital of the said company consisted of £50,000 in 50,000 shares of £1 each. The offices of the company were in the Minories, afterwards in King William-street. On June 25, 1856, the company was completely registered, and obtained a certificate of complete registration, with limited liability, under the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856, under the title of "Groux's Improved Soap Company (Limited)." The petitioner is a holder of 500 shares. On September 14 last, the company in general meeting passed a special resolution, requiring the said company to be wound up by the court, which resolution was duly confirmed at a meeting on the 16th instant. The petitioner, therefore, prayed that the said company might be wound up.

A report of the directors, laid before the above meeting, attributes the difficulties of the company to the entire withdrawal of Mr. Groux, the manufacturing manager; the suspension by Mr. Henry Hayward, the company's agent, of his travellers and agents; a combination on the part of Mr. Groux, the company's late secretary, and Mr. H. Hayward, to ruin the company's trade, by diverting it to a private firm of their forming. A financial statement accompanying this report showed the debts and liabilities to be £13,000, with assets of about £9,500.

Mr. Lawranee appeared in support of the petition; Mr. Doria for the directors; and Mr. Bagley for a portion of the shareholders.

The case was adjourned to a future day.

MANCHESTER BANKRUPTCY COURT.—Oct 19.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Skirrow).

Re John Potter.

This was an application to the court upon a petition presented to Mr. Whitmore Henry Parks, a creditor of the bankrupt, who is a portable weighing machine and scale beam maker, carrying on business at 56, Thomas-street, and 73, Great Ancoats-street, Manchester, an uncertificated bankrupt, praying that the Court would be pleased to order that its messenger should forthwith seize and take possession of the bankrupt's effects then being upon his premises as above described.

The petition and affidavit in support thereof alleged that the fiat was dated so far back as June, 1846, and that the proceedings of the court had been rendered altogether nugatory, so far as the bankrupt's obedience to the law was concerned; for not only had he failed to surrender or attend any of its meetings, but had committed an act of felony, not only in having become outlawed, but had embezzled and concealed his property to a large amount; and that it was only lately it was discovered by the petitioner that he was carrying on his trade at two separate establishments, despite the facts above stated, and with all their consequences hanging over him. It was deposed to that his shops were well replenished with stock so recently as the 8th inst., although his creditors had only received from his assets, at the time of his bankruptcy, 1*s.* 11½*d.* in the pound; and that immediately upon these proceedings being instituted he closed his premises in Thomas-street, and had again secreted his stock.

Mr. Richardson, solicitor on behalf of the petitioner, applied that, upon these circumstances, the messenger of the court might be instructed to effect a seizure.

Mr. Commissioner Skirrow said that the affidavit only went the length of saying that the petitioner had been informed and believed that property was seizable. It should have gone on to say who gave him that information.

Mr. Richardson—That surely could not be material; the question now being, whether the information was true.

Mr. Commissioner Skirrow—Yes; and if you can give information of property, you will be entitled to your costs for bringing the same to light.

Mr. Richardson—I beg your Honour's pardon; I trust the consideration of costs is but of minor importance in a question of this nature. Here the Court has been set at defiance; and if you read the affidavit upon which the act of bankruptcy is founded, you will see that great fraud existed on the part of the bankrupt from the first.

Mr. Commissioner Skirrow—That may be so; but where is Mr. Rowcroft, who, I see, is the trade assignee?

Mr. Richardson—He has, through his solicitors, Messrs. Chew & Sons, been duly served with notice of the present application, and also with a copy of the petition and an order of the Court to attend.

Mr. Commissioner Skirrow—Let Mr. Chew be sent for.

Mr. Richardson—Mr. Chew has given an acceptance of service; surely that is sufficient. It is now on the verge of one, and twelve o'clock is the hour named.

Mr. Commissioner Skirrow—I shall send for Mr. Chew.

The Messenger—It is a mile and a quarter from the court.

The Commissioner then retired, and at half-past one Mr. Chew arrived.

The Commissioner, addressing Mr. Chew—There is a petition presented, stating that so far back as 1846 a fiat was issued against Potter, the bankrupt, who had failed to surrender and thereby committed felony; and that the bankrupt had had notice of the present application, which of all things was a most extraordinary course, and I am sure Mr. Simons (meaning the registrar) would not have directed it.

Mr. Richardson—I entirely exculpate Mr. Simons; it was your Honour who refused to act unless it was done, although at the time it was specially named that it would defeat the very object of the petition.

Mr. Commissioner Skirrow—I am convinced the Court would not do anything so foolish.

Mr. Richardson—I again repeat that it was so, although your Honour has forgotten it.

Mr. Commissioner Skirrow—Mr. Chew you will take care that every necessary inquiry shall be made, and if you find there is any property of the bankrupt, you will act. Tell Mr. Rowcroft I shall make no order, unless I see it is the property of the bankrupt. I shall make no order on this petition; I remember a similar case at Liverpool, and I aided in obtaining £2,500 for the creditors, and allowed the costs.

Mr. Richardson—I fear your Honour has not observed all the material parts of the affidavit and petition. The very place where he failed in 1846 is the same in which it is now alleged the property may be found; and it will clearly be of no avail unless immediate steps are taken.

Mr. Commissioner Skirrow—I shall make no order on this petition; he may be indicted, for, as your petition very properly states, he has been guilty of felony

Mr. Richardson—We want the property.

Mr. Commissioner Skirrow—My officer might seize the property not belonging to the bankrupt, and then might be liable to an action.

Mr. Richardson—But if we have shown ample reasons for making the seizure, your officer would be protected in acting nder the warrant of the Court.

Mr. Commissioner Skirrow—I shall make no order.

Mr. Richardson—Very well, it is unquestionably the last time I shall trouble your Honour with any similar application.

At the West Riding Sessions, held at Knaresborough, on Monday, the 19th, the actual criminal business before the court consisted of one prisoner, who pleaded guilty of stealing a shirt, value 2*s.* The plea of the prisoner rendered the criminal business nearly nil, and yet there were in attendance on the court eight magistrates, who had travelled an average of twelve miles; forty jurymen, who had travelled an average of twelve miles; ten barristers—eight from London—and twelve officials of the court, who had travelled on an average twenty miles each.—Leeds Mercury.

The French Tribunals.

A very important question, and especially interesting to all foreigners engaged in stock transactions on the Paris Bourse, was raised before the Tribunal of Commerce on Thursday last. The facts were these:—A wealthy Italian gentleman, named Di Nuovo, some time ago went to Monsieur Gannerou, a stock-broker, and announced his intention of carrying on operations on the Bourse. He at the same time deposited 100,000 francs as security for the payment of his differences. The lodgment of so large a sum, combined with the fact that he first confined his operations to mere "continuations" (reports), which are perfectly safe, caused Monsieur Gannerou to feel the greatest confidence in him. After a while, however, he contrived to get his deposit out of Gannerou, and entered into speculations which resulted in a loss of 49,752 francs. This sum Di Nuovo declined to pay, and Gannerou brought an action against him before the Tribunal of Commerce to compel him to reimburse it. The defendant opposed the action on two grounds—first, want of jurisdiction in the Court; and, secondly, that, as it was a gambling operation, the law could not recognise it. The Tribunal, however, decided that it had jurisdiction; and "as the relations between the parties authorised Gannerou to have confidence in the defendant, especially after the deposit he had made," it condemned him to pay the sum claimed, with interest and costs.

The Civil Tribunal of Paris has just given a decision of great interest to all railway travellers. The question raised was, whether railway companies are liable for luggage not registered. The facts were:—A gentleman named Laroche arrived on the evening of the 13th of September last at the station of the Orleans Railway. As he had to wait an hour for the train by which he wanted to proceed on his journey, one of the porters of the company took his portmanteau, and told him that he would find it in the luggage-room on the starting of the train. At the appointed time, however, the portmanteau was not forthcoming, and all attempts to discover it proved fruitless. Monsieur Laroche sued the company for 500 francs as indemnity for the loss. The company disputed its liability, on the ground that it was only responsible for luggage actually registered. The Tribunal, however, decided that they were liable, and condemned the company to pay the plaintiff 300 francs, with the costs of the action.

A point of some interest to incarcerated debtors in France was raised before the Civil Tribunal last Wednesday. A person named Baron was, in January last, transferred, after confinement in several prisons, to the debtors' prison in the Rue de Clichy. He was there detained by several creditors who deposited their respective portions of one franc per diem, which the law requires for the maintenance of an imprisoned debtor. Subsequently, one of these creditors, without communicating with the others, gave the man a discharge, and withdrew the portion of the one franc a day which he had hitherto paid for his maintenance. Baron immediately demanded his release from the director of the prison, as the sum of one franc had not been made up as required by the law. The director of the prison refused, and Baron appealed to the Civil Tribunal. The court decided, that, as notwithstanding the withdrawal of one of the creditors, the money deposited by the others was sufficient to maintain the prisoner for 150 days, he was not entitled to his discharge. The appeal was therefore rejected with costs.

A very singular question as to the liability of railways in the carriage of goods of value was raised on Monday last before the Tribunal of Commerce. The case was this:—A sum of 15,000 francs in gold was sent last December from Langres, Côte-d'Or, by the Messageries Générales, to a Monsieur Laurent, residing in Paris. The sum not having reached him, he instituted an action against the Messageries Company, and recovered the amount. The company in their turn sued the Lyons Railway Company, to whom the hamper had been entrusted from which the gold had been stolen. The Tribunal reserved its judgment until the prosecution of the man who stole the money should have been concluded. On the trial, which ended in the condemnation of the thief, it was shown that he was in the service of the Messageries, and that he had abstracted the gold before the hamper was confided to the Lyons Railway Company. Notwithstanding these facts the Messageries Company proceeded with their action against the Lyons Railway, on the grounds, that, as the company had accepted the hamper on the declaration that its contents were worth 15,000 francs, without examination, it was responsible. The defendants maintained that they could not be made responsible for a robbery which had not been committed on their line, on their premises, or by their servants. The Tribunal adopted this view of the case, and dismissed the action with costs.

CAP. LV.—An Act to promote the Establishment and Extension of Reformatory Schools in England.

The part maintenance by the State of juvenile offenders at reformatory schools only dates from the year 1854, though before that time schools under the same name, for the better training of such offenders, had been established by voluntary contribution in various parts of Great Britain. By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86, however, the directors or managers of any institution of the kind were enabled (after an inspection of the school by a Government-inspector resulting in a satisfactory report of its condition and regulations), to cause such institution to be certified as a reformatory school under that Act; and thereupon to obtain from the Treasury either the whole cost of the care and maintenance of any offender detained therein, or such portion of such cost as should not be recovered from its parents or step-parents under certain other of the provisions of the Act. This same statute contained clauses for supplying such institutions with pupils; for it enabled any court, judge, metropolitan police or stipendiary magistrate, or two or more justices, before whom any person under the age of sixteen years should be convicted of any offence (either on indictment or by way of summary conviction), to direct that such offender, in addition to the sentence passed as a punishment for the offence (provided such sentence was imprisonment for fourteen days at the least), should be sent, at the expiration of his sentence, to any certified reformatory school whereof the directors or managers might be willing to receive him, there to be detained (unless the Home Secretary should in the meantime order his discharge) for any period between two and five years.

In the succeeding session, the provisions contained in the above Act for enforcing contribution by the parents or step-parents to the support and maintenance of offenders so detained in any such institution were, by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 87, modified in some of their details, though the principle of requiring such contribution to the extent of five shillings per week (if the parent or step-parent be of sufficient ability) was retained; and by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 109, further improvements were ingrafted on the system: 1. By allowing the particular school to be changed by a supplemental order of detention, at any time during the period of imprisonment imposed by the sentence; 2. By permitting the parent, guardian, or nearest surviving relative of the offender to select, under certain conditions, the certified school to which the offender shall be detained, or to which he shall be removed; 3. By throwing upon the county, city, or borough in which the sentence is passed the expense of conveying him to the school in which he is to be detained (unless in the case of an additional expense caused by such selection of another school by the parent or guardians as above mentioned, in which case such additional expense is thrown on the party applying); 4. By imposing a pecuniary penalty, and, in default, imprisonment to the extent of sixty days, on any person wilfully withdrawing, or inducing to abscond, offenders ordered to be detained; and 5. By causing a list of all such institutions, duly certified, to be from time to time published in the Gazettes.

The system, of which the above is a general account, has been still further extended and improved by the Act under discussion. The clauses as to enforcing from the parent or step-parent a weekly contribution of any reasonable sum not exceeding five shillings, are again (by ss. 8—12) remodelled; so that the sum ordered to be contributed shall vary, if needs be, with the ability of the parent or step-parent, during the period of detention. The most important provisions, however, of this Act are those which refer to the way in which these institutions may be established and supported; to the religious instruction of the pupils; and for the due care and protection of them after their discharge. As to the first object, it is now (s. 1) made lawful for any county justices in sessions, or any borough council with separate sessions, to accede to an application (made after two months notice) for an order for the payment of money in aid of any certified reformatory school already, or intended to be, established—such money to be applicable, either towards the purchase of a site, or the expenses of building, fitting-up, enlarging, or altering, as the case may require. As to the second object, the Act under discussion provides, that, on representation made by the parent or guardian, or nearest adult relative (as the case may require), any offender so detained may, at certain hours of the day, fixed by the managers or directors, be visited by a minister of the religious persuasion of the offender, for the purpose of affording him religious assistance, and instructing him in the principles of his religion. The third object above indicated (the importance of which to the usefulness of the whole system can scarcely be exaggerated) is aimed at by the 13th section. This makes it lawful "for the managers of any reformatory school, previous to making application for discharge of any juvenile offender," to place him on trial (provided half of his term of detention shall have expired) with some person "to be named in the licence hereinafter" [mentioned?] "most willing to receive and take charge of him," and to grant to the offender a licence to reside with such person for any term not exceeding thirty days, unless sooner summoned to return to the school; and it is further enacted that "such managers shall bring back such offender to the said school, provided that such offender shall not have been previously discharged from the school, by order of the Secretary of State." This section is introduced by a recital, that "it is expedient to make further provision for the due care and protection of juvenile offenders discharged from reformatory schools; but we confess we do not think the enacting part of the section carries out the announced intention. We do not, however, profess wholly to understand it. We are not aware of any provision in the previous Acts for the discharge of the offender, after application for that purpose by the managers. At the expiration of the period for which he is ordered to be detained, the offender is, of course, entitled to his discharge without application from anybody; if it be desired to obtain his discharge before the end of such period, then, it is true, an application must be made for a Secretary of State's order, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86, s. 4, recognised and confirmed by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 109, s. 5; but such application would not be made by the managers, but by the friends of the offender. We are inclined to think that the words "previous to making application for the discharge of any juvenile offender committed to such school," should be struck out altogether. Without them, the provision is quite intelligible (except that we demur to the expression "some person most willing to receive," &c.—why most willing?), though we do not think it a satisfactory one. Supposing such a licence to be granted upon the expiration of half of a five years' sentence of detention, there is no provision for its being renewed; and, therefore, the child would not, as it seems to us, be much the better for it at the time of his ultimate discharge.

CAP. LVII.—An Act to enable Married Women to dispose of Reversionary Interests in Personal Estates.

Upon the abolition of fines and recoveries, in the year 1833, by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, careful provisions were inserted in that Act for the substitution of a fresh method, by which a married woman could, with her husband's concurrence, dispose of her interest in any estate in lands. This object was attained by enacting that a married woman should, from the passing of that Act, be as competent as if she were a feme sole, to dispose, by deed, of lands or of money subject to be invested in the purchase of lands, and also to extinguish any estate, &c., provided only that her husband should concur in the deed; and provided that, upon her executing the same or afterwards, she produced and acknowledged such deed before the proper authorities—a certificate of such acknowledgment being directed by the Act to be filed of record in the Court of Common Pleas.

Lands at the disposal of a married woman being provided for by this statute, and such personal estate as comes to her during the coverture belonging, as it does, to her husband by the general rules of law regulating the relationship of husband and wife, and being disposable by him without her concurrence, there remains only to be considered such future or reversionary interest (whether vested or contingent) in, or power with regard to, any personal estate to which a married woman, or her husband in her right, is entitled under any instrument. And no way in which such interest might be disposed of, or such power released or extinguished, existed until the Act under discussion. The object, therefore, of this Act is to extend the capacity to dispose, and the manner of disposal, given by the Fines and Recoveries Act, with respect to land, to such future or reversionary interest, as above mentioned, in personal estate, as comes to the wife, or husband in her right, under instruments made after Dec. 31, 1857; and it does so by enacting, as in the former statute, that a married woman may by deed dispose of such interest, or release or extinguish such power, provided that her husband concur in the deed; that she acknowledge the deed in the same manner prescribed by the former statute with respect to lands; and that the instrument under which she is entitled does not restrain her from alienation. Another enactment in the Act under discussion is, that, subject to the provisions just mentioned, she may also release and extinguish her right or equity to a settlement out of any personal estate to which she, or her husband in her right, may be entitled in possession under any instrument made after Dec. 31, 1857, other than her marriage settlement. This, it is apprehended, has reference to the jurisdiction which the courts of equity exercise of compelling, in general, a settlement for the wife out of any equitable property coming to her, recovered during the coverture by the husband, through the medium of the court.

A singular omission seems to have been made in the Act under discussion. By s. 2, deeds executed by married women under its provisions are to be acknowledged in the manner prescribed by the Fines and Recoveries Act, with respect to lands. The persons before whom such deeds are to be acknowledged (not to speak of the Masters in Chancery, as to whom see 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80) are the judges of the superior courts, or two commissioners appointed for the purpose. But by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 73, power was conferred on the judges of the county courts, also, to receive such acknowledgments—an enactment of the existence of which the framer of the Act under discussion was probably ignorant, as no allusion to it whatever appears, and there can be no reason why the county court judges should not receive acknowledgments in the one case just as well as in the other.

CAP. LXII.—An Act for the Alteration and Amendment of the Laws and Duties of Customs.

The only sections of this Act which it seems necessary to notice, are

1. Sect. 15.—By this section it is expressly declared (in order to clear up doubts which had arisen on the subject), that the whole of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 107), and of the Supplemental Customs Consolidation Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 96), apply to the British possessions abroad, as well as to the United Kingdom and Channel Islands—except where otherwise in those Acts expressly provided; and except as to such of those possessions as have, with the sanction of the Crown, by any local Act or ordinance, entirely provided for their own customs, trade, and navigation.

2. Sect. 16.—By this section, an owner or consignee importing any bullion or coin (except small parcels imported as passengers' luggage) must deliver to the collector, or other customs' officer, a full and true account thereof, under the penalty of £20.

3. Sect. 17.—This section declares, that so much of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, as repeals 8 & 9 Vict. c. 90, ss. 9, 10, 11, and 12, shall be repealed. These restored provisions refer to commercial treaties with foreign powers, and as to the duties imposed on their vessels or produce, or on the goods imported by them.

4. Sect. 18.—By this section, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 96, s. 19, as to importing and exporting spirits into or from the Channel Islands, in boats and casks of a specified size, is repealed.

5. Sect. 20.—The term "British built ship," is declared to mean and include any ship built in her Majesty's dominions.

Recent Decisions in Chancery.

IMPLIED REPEAL OF A STATUTE BY A SUBSEQUENT "CONTRARIANT" STATUTE.

O'Flaherty v. M'Dowell, 6 H. L. C, 142.

In this case it was held that an Irish statute was repealed, as to its operation on Irish joint-stock banks, by a subsequent imperial statute, although the later contained no reference to the earlier statute. The ground of the decision was, that the provisions contained in the former Act were wholly irreconcilable with the rights given to creditors of a bank by the latter. The Lord Chancellor observed on this point, "I do not dispute the general proposition, that an affirmative statute giving a new right does not of itself and of necessity destroy a previously existing right; but it has that effect if the apparent intention of the Legislature is, that the two rights should not co-exist together." Lords Brougham, St. Leonards, and Wensleydale concurred in this view. The main contention in the case was, whether the provisions of the Irish statute were, in fact, entirely incompatible with subsequent legislation. In the course of the argument, Lord Clare's dictum in Hayden v. Carroll (3 Ridgw. Parl. Cas. 545) was very much discussed. His Lordship, in that case, was of opinion that a subsequent affirmative statute might repeal a prior one if the words were "contrariant;" but that, if there were two affirmative statutes made on the same subject, on all points on which they did not contradict each other both should stand, and might form two distinct codes. The Lord Chancellor considered that this general proposition could not be doubted; but Lord Brougham, in delivering judgment, observed, that, though the provisions of the subsequent statute might not be in direct positive contradiction, or be "contrariant" to the prior statute, they might be so entirely inconsistent with it, that they might operate as effectually against the subsistence of the prior statute—a proposition which appears to be debateable in the degree in which it may be understood as differing from the rule laid down by Lord Clare.

DISCOVERY—COMPULSORY REFERENCE TO ARBITRATION—PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

The British Empire Steam Shipping Co. v. Somes, 5 W. R. 813.

The judgment in this case is in one sense an extension, in another something like a restriction, of the received doctrine as to discovery in equity. The dispute arose out of proceedings at law, taken to recover the cost of repairing a ship. The action resulted in an order for compulsory arbitration, under the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act. The bill was filed by the defendants at law for discovery in aid of the action, or rather of the arbitration, which had resulted from it. To this bill a demurrer was put in, on the ground that discovery will not be given in aid of the proceedings before the private forum of arbitrators—a doctrine established by the case of Street v. Rigby (6 Ves. 821), where Lord Eldon laid it down, that the Court of Chancery would not exert its power of compelling discovery in aid of a domestic forum. On this point, the Court decided on the obvious principle that an arbitration enforced under the provisions of a statute by a regular tribunal was not, in any sense, a domestic forum, and that the maxim of Street v. Rigby had no application to such a case. The defendants thereupon put in their answer, but declined to furnish documents showing what they themselves had expended on the materials and labour consumed in the repairs. It is not an uncommon thing for a discovery somewhat analogous to this to be granted; of which we may mention, as an example, a case of the London Assurance v. Martinez (which, we believe, is not reported), where the plaintiffs in equity, who were sued at law on a policy of insurance of some pictures which had been destroyed by fire, extracted from the defendant all the particulars of the money and goods which he had given in exchange for the pictures, so as to obtain evidence in opposition to that which the insurer produced in the court of law as to the actual value of the goods insured. Discovery of this kind is obtained as a matter of course; and it seems a fine distinction to say, that you may force a man to betray the real value of his goods by discovering the price he gave for them, but that you cannot compel him to make known the value of the work he has done, by disclosing the cost of the materials and labour employed upon it. The Vice-Chancellor, while allowing the discovery generally, nevertheless gave leave to the defendants in equity to seal up so much of their books as tended to expose the calculations on which their business was conducted. The judgment shows some leaning towards the common law notion of discovery under the new Acts, which practically excludes everything which is not well known and capable of being pointed out before the application is made; and it may have been an element in the decision, that the Court of Queen's Bench had already refused a similar application for discovery in this very case. The judgment of V. C. Wood, however, does not go far in this direction; and it would be a great mistake to treat it as an authority for emasculating the practice as to discovery, which, however little it may be appreciated on the other side of Westminster-hall, is one of the most valuable heads of Chancery jurisdiction.

CONSTRUCTION—MONEY—THE TERMS OF AN EXCEPTING CLAUSE NOT ALLOWED TO EXTEND THE FORCE OF WORDS USED IN THE ORIGINAL GIFT.

Ludlow v. Stevenson, 5 W. R. 828.

Decisions as to what is or what is not comprised in the term "money" are common enough, and for the most part turn on the context of the will in which the phrase occurs. The present case, however, involves a principle laid down by V. C. Wood, and adopted on appeal by the Lord Chancellor. The bequest was, of all the testator's "books, plate, linen, china, wearing apparel, watches, jewels, and money (except money at testator's bankers or in the funds, or placed on security), and all other property not otherwise disposed of;" and, subject to this gift, the residue was devoted to certain purposes, the ultimate gift being to certain societies. The contention for the specific legatee was, that money, in the sense in which the testator used the term, was something large enough to include money in the funds or placed on security, as was shown by the language of the exception. Now, the testator happened to possess property ejusdem generis with money in the funds, and which yet did not fall within the words of the exception. This property consisted of foreign stock, and shares in foreign companies; and if the word money could only be interpreted by analogy to the exception, these particulars would have fallen within the general gift of "money and other property," and would not have been taken out of it by the express language of the exception. In opposition to this ingenious argument, the Court, both below and on appeal, held that the primary sense of words used in the gift could not be extended by any inference drawn from the language of the exception—the province of which was to limit, and not to enlarge the bequest. The decision, though resting on this view, is not wholly dependent on it; for there were indications in the other parts of the will that the testator considered that he had "otherwise disposed of" that portion of his property which was invested in any shape so as to bear income. The case may nevertheless be valuable, as indicating a position which may admit of many applications—viz. that the language of an excepting clause cannot fairly be appealed to to enlarge by inference the interpretation of the corresponding words in the general gift.

WILL—CONSTRUCTION—EFFECT OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST IN TRUST FOR A. FOR LIFE WITHOUT POWER OF ANTICIPATION, FOLLOWED BY A GIFT TO THE HEIRS, EXECUTORS, ADMINISTRATORS, AND ASSIGNS OF A.

Quested v. Michell, 5 W. R. 834.

Questions often arise whether gifts substantially amounting to devises or bequests of the entire ownership do or do not pass the absolute property. It has been held, for example, in Ross v. Ross (1 J. & W. 154) that a gift to A., with a gift over of so much as A. shall not have disposed of in his lifetime, passes the entire interest, as it involves an absolute control over the whole; but see on this point Surman v. Surman (5 Madd. 123), and Cowman v. Harrison (1 W. R. 96). In the present case, the form of the will was somewhat different. The first gift was in trust for A. for life, but not by way of anticipation, with a gift over to the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of A. Relying apparently, in some measure, on the restraint upon anticipation, V. C. Kindersley held, that, with respect both to the real and personal estate, the true construction was, that the will created an estate for life, with an absolute power of appointment by deed.

CANDIDATES FOR EXAMINATION.

Persons applying to be admitted attorneys are required to attend on Tuesday, November 17, at half-past nine in the forenoon, at the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, in Chancery-lane, in order to be examined. The examination will commence at ten o'clock precisely.

The articles of clerkship and assignment, if any, with answers to the questions as to due service, according to the regulations approved by the judges, must be left with the Secretary, on or before Monday, November 9.

Where the articles have not expired, but will expire during the term, the candidate may be examined conditionally; but the articles must be left within the first seven days of term, and answers up to that time. If part of the term has been served with a barrister, special pleader, or London agent, answers to the questions must be obtained from them, as to the time served with each respectively.

A paper will be delivered to each candidate, containing questions to be answered in writing, classed under the several heads of—1. Preliminary; 2. Common and Statute Law, and Practice of the Courts; 3. Conveyancing; 4. Equity, and Practice of the Courts; 5. Bankruptcy, and Practice of the Courts; 6. Criminal Law, and Proceedings before Justices of the Peace.

Each candidate is required to answer all the preliminary questions (No. 1); and also to answer in three of the other heads of inquiry—viz. Common Law, Conveyancing, and Equity.

The Examiners will continue the practice of proposing questions in "Bankruptcy," and in "Criminal Law," and "Proceedings before Justices of the Peace," in order that candidates who have given their attention to these subjects may have the advantage of answering such questions, and having the correctness of their answers in those departments taken into consideration in summing up the merit of their general examination.

Under the new rules of Hilary Term, 1853, it is provided that every person who shall have given notices of examination and admission, and "who shall not have attended to be examined, or not have passed the examination, or not have been admitted, may, within one week after the end of the term for which such notices were given, renew the notices for examination or admission for the then next ensuing term, and so from time to time as he shall think proper;" but shall not be admitted until the last day of the term, unless otherwise ordered.

In case testimonials were deposited in a former term, they should be re-entered, and the answers completed to the present time.

LEGAL EDUCATION IN IRELAND.

While the subject of legal education attracts so much attention, and gives rise to so much discussion at the meetings of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association and elsewhere, it can hardly be deemed inappropriate to give some account of the present state of legal education in Ireland.

Reversing the usual order of things, and inquiring, in the first instance, as to the means of improvement here furnished to students who desire to be inscribed on the roll of attorneys and solicitors, we do not find much that redounds to the credit of the governing bodies who take on themselves to regulate the admission to this branch of the profession. Without entering into any historical disquisition into the origin of the jurisdiction exercised by the benchers of the King's Inns over attorneys and solicitors, it will suffice to remark, that this jurisdiction is still maintained to such a degree that no attorney can even take an apprentice (or articled clerk as he would be called in England) without the permission of the benchers. Complaints have from time to time been made against what is alleged to be an encroachment on the rights of the more numerous branch of the profession, and it has been forcibly urged, that if the attorneys are to continue subject to this authority, and are to contribute, as they have always done, to the revenues of the King's Inns, they ought at least to have representatives of their own order among the benchers, and some voice in the management of this important institution. No such concession has, however, been made; and to this day no attorney or solicitor is ever selected by the benchers to fill any vacancy that may occur in their number. The property and funds, which it is asserted by the attorneys are held in trust for both branches of the profession, are under the exclusive control of one branch; and although those funds are devoted to otherwise unexceptional objects, it may safely be asserted that no provision whatever is made by them for the professional education of any but students for the bar. The only benefits derived by the attorneys from their connection with the King's Inns are the following:—They have admission to the large and excellent library of that institution, and they are, equally with the bar, entitled to dine daily, in term time, in the noble Common Hall, one-half of which is appropriated for their use. Their apprentices, however, have no such privileges. The use of the library might, one would think, be allowed to them with great propriety; for, although situated in an inconvenient quarter of the town, it contains an admirable collection of law and general literature; and access to it would be prized by many a clerk who has, at present, no means of learning anything of the law beyond its merest mechanism. The law lectures instituted by the benchers, and delivered by very competent professors four times a week, are, indeed, open to the public, and apprentices may, if they choose, attend them. This privilege is not, however, here or elsewhere, very highly valued; and we never remember to have seen an apprentice in the lecture room. Is there not, in our time, a very general dislike to volunteering into lecture rooms? and are not the best lectures of the best lecturers neglected by all whose attendance is not compulsory, or in some manner requisite to qualify for something? The apprentices know well that these lectures are not intended for their benefit; and they will never attend them until such time as a certificate of attendance shall be made a sine quâ non for admission to the roll.

It will probably astonish many English solicitors to be informed that the apprentice (or articled clerk), after serving for five years, complying with the rules, and making the required payments, can obtain his admission without any examination or other test of fitness. It seems probable, that in old times candidates for admission were examined; for even now there are certain officials who are nominated by the judges, and who are entitled to a fee of a guinea from each new attorney. The office is now, and has long been, a complete sinecure; and not a question is ever answered by, or asked of, the applicant beyond the demand of the accustomed fee. This being the case, it is not surprising that study of the law in Ireland usually follows, instead of preceding, admission to its practice. The attorney, after he has been sworn in, finds it necessary to know something as to how and when writs should be issued, petitions filed, deeds prepared, or judgments registered. His want of knowledge on these and such like subjects leads to daily conferences with his counsel; and the amount of assistance gratuitously afforded by the bar in this way would surprise London practitioners, with whom every "consultation" is a matter of solemnity, and involves an honorarium. Even with these aids, and with the aids often furnished by a quick perception and a ready mind, the first clients of the new attorney are frequently of the use to him that the patients in an hospital-walk are to the medical student. By their instrumentality he is first seriously taught his profession, and the experience thus gained forms the chief part of his education. It is true that the profession, with all these drawbacks, is not behindhand when compared with many others, and numbers many practitioners of singular ability and acuteness; but we believe that even the best of them have profited very little by any education but that afforded in early practice, superadded to those qualities which enable some gifted individuals to "pick up" knowledge with scarcely any effort, and with no actual study. Rules ought, however, to be framed, and systems constructed, otherwise than with a view to exceptional cases. It has long been the practice in England to require a large amount of legal knowledge, tested by a strict examination before admission to practise; and there can be no good reason why a different system should prevail here.

The sinecure office we have described, perhaps, could not now be rendered useful or effective; but there is an Incorporated Law Society, to whom the examination of apprentices might be intrusted, as in England. The council of that Society comprises the foremost members of the profession; it is well managed, and has all the advantages of spacious buildings within the inclosure of the Four Courts. All that it wants is increased powers, and a well-devised scheme of law lectures and examinations.

Education for the bar so nearly resembles what it is in England, that no detailed sketch of it is required. Four law lectureships exist in Dublin—two at the King's Inns, and two in Trinity College—and the lecturers are all men of high attainments. Attendance on several courses of any two lecturers is compulsory; the number of lectures to be attended, as well as of terms to be kept, being considerably lower in the case of graduates of an university. There is no examination whatever; and Irish students who are ambitious of distinction are under the necessity of studying and submitting themselves for examination at the inns of court in London, where their success in obtaining honours has been very remarkable. Advantage is generally taken of the time required for keeping terms in London, for reading in chambers there; and this is the more desirable, as few counsel at the Irish bar take pupils, or could (if in any practice) attend to their court business, and also read with pupils. There are not, at the Irish bar, any practitioners who confine themselves to pleading or conveyancing; and, no doubt, it is for such reasons as these, and from a general idea that the present system tends to assimilate the law in the United Kingdom, that the benchers of the King's Inns have resolutely refused to diminish the terms required to be kept in London by all candidates for the Irish bar.

EDINBURGH.—(From our own Correspondent.)

We took occasion last week to give a brief sketch of the regulations adopted by the Society of Writers to the Signet in 1851, in regard to the applicants for indenture. In order to complete the communication, we propose to notice here, in an equally brief manner, the regulations applicable to apprentices during the term of their apprenticeship: premising that these regulations have been in operation since 1844, and have given general satisfaction—

1. The apprentice is bound to serve for five years, and is prohibited from doing any business on his own account during that period.

2. He must, during the course of his apprenticeship, attend four courses of the law classes—viz. one of civil law, one of Scots law, one of conveyancing, and a second course of any of these he may choose.

3. At the expiration of the term of apprenticeship, he must procure and record at the Signet Office a discharge by his master.

4. He may then, upon petition, stand his private examination.

5. If he passes his private trials, he may then stand his public examination.

Each branch of law mentioned under the second head is taught from separate chairs in the university, and by separate professors. The session lasts for about five months each year, and the professor during that period devotes an hour each day to his class, either in lecturing or examination.

The private examinations, which take place at the expiry of the term of apprenticeship, are conducted by three members of the society, annually chosen. Each examiner makes a separate examination, after which they meet and make their report. The examination is strictly legal; and each examination may embrace the whole subject of Scotch law: but in practice, the examiners generally arrange to divide the subject; as, for example, one examines upon conveyancing, another upon mercantile law, another upon the forms of process. The public examination takes place in the hall of the society, before eight or ten members of the body, also annually chosen, who test the candidate's legal qualifications in any way they think fit; and the examination never degenerates into a mere form. It may appear strange, perhaps, to English solicitors that so much is required of Scotch solicitors; but it ought to be explained that they are the conveyancers of the country, and that, to a certain extent, they draw pleadings. The summons, which contains the pursuer's statement of his case, and the legal deductions meant to be maintained, and which is the foundation of the whole process, being, as a rule, always drawn by the solicitor.

The fees paid on entering into indenture amount to about £400: Of this, £60 goes for the stamp, £150 to the master, £50 to a widow's fund, and the other £140 to the library. On entering the body, about £150 more is paid: of which, £25 goes for the stamp for the commission, the rest for fees and society purposes, which need not be particularly specified.

As the long vacation is still running here, there is little legal news to communicate. The first division of the court, before rising in July, had, under a late statute, resolved to sit on the 1st of November for the despatch of business, being eleven days earlier than the ordinary statutory period; but the subsequent Act of last session has deranged all these plans, having enacted that the court of session shall meet on the 12th of November. The first division will not, therefore, meet till the rest of the court assembles, or if it does it will only be for the purpose of adjourning.

The remonstrances addressed to the Commissioners of Customs from Leith in reference to the smuggling case there, mentioned in a late number, have produced an order from the Commissioners for the release of all the men convicted, with the exception of one named Dixon, against whom the Commissioners profess to see stronger evidence than against the others. But it is to be hoped that the matter will not be allowed to end here. It seems monstrous that any form of law should exist under which a host of persons within a certain distance of the place where a crime has been committed, but not one of whom has been legally convicted of committing that crime, can be sent to prison to give the Commissioners of Customs an opportunity of exercising their discrimination in selecting the most likely criminal, which is truly the result to which the present case has been brought.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS BY MARRIED WOMEN.

To the Editor of THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL & REPORTER.

SIR,—Assist me with your views, or oblige me by publishing the views of others, if this letter provoke any replies, upon the following point connected with acknowledgments of deeds by married women:—

Is there any additional fee beyond the 13*s.* 4*d.* to the Commissioner who makes the affidavit of due acknowledgment? It is often demanded (6*s.* 8*d.*), and generally paid, on the ground that making the affidavit involves often as much trouble as taking the acknowledgment, because the affidavit has to be carefully read over, and afterwards an attendance to be sworn perhaps at two or three places to find a Commissioner in C. P. within, and not unfrequently the affidavit comes back to be re-sworn in consequence of some trifling error; but I find no fee allowed for it in the Rules and Orders, and I think none is legally payable; and the Commissioner is only doing that which the attorney ought to do, and for the attorney's accommodation, and for which he is entitled to charge to his client the fee of 6*s.* 8*d.* for attending to be sworn to affidavit; and if he like to pay this fee to the Commissioner, and the Commissioner is willing to receive it, well and good. But I am strongly impressed with the idea that no such fee is demandable; and until it is an understood rule throughout the profession that it ought to be taken by the Commissioner, I purpose refusing to receive it, because it comes out of the pocket of the attorney (he cannot charge it to his client), and the idea of professional courtesy or kind feeling in the profession is done away with if the Commissioner accepts it. Might not the attorneys in each large town, through the agency of their Law Societies, settle what the conventional rule should be among them? and this would be a guide to smaller towns.—Yours, &c.,

TRANSFER OF LAND.

To the Editor of THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL & REPORTER.

SIR,—Sir F. Kelly expresses it as his opinion, that, in two or three years, the owners of almost all the landed property in England would, if they had the power, establish their ownership, and obtain a parliamentary title.

Of course, this must be done by producing a proper abstract of title for investigation. Who is to peruse these abstracts, and advise on the titles? Has Sir F. Kelly calculated how many million sheets of abstract would be required to deduce the titles of all the property in England? Assuming all this to be done, and land to be transferable by a certificate, or entry in a book, after the manner of stock, who is to guarantee against fraud?

Sir F. Kelly says, we never hear of this, practically, in the case of stock! And why? Because the Bank of England are obliged to make good the loss to the party defrauded; and the same in the case of any public company or private bank.

Will Parliament guarantee losses of this sort by fraud and forgery?—Yours, &c.,

Review.

Principles and Maxims of Jurisprudence. By JOHN GEORGE PHILLIMORE, Q.C., Reader on Constitutional Law and Legal History to the Four Inns of Court.—London: John W. Parker & Son. 1856.

Mr. Phillimore has many of the qualities which go to make a great jurist. He has a wide knowledge of different systems, an appreciation of general principles, a dislike of mere technicalities, a sincere love of truth, and an earnest desire to render service to his generation by an unflinching exposure of abuses. What he wants is the judicial mind; the calm, dispassionate weighing and balancing of conflicting points; the self-control that puts aside the first suggestions of imagination, anger, and contempt; the habit of stating, not only the truth, but, what is so difficult, nothing more than the truth. He is probably the most abusive writer that has written, in this century, on a grave subject. He exhausts the dictionary of invective in pouring out his wrath against English judges and English law. The consequence is, that his books are entertaining, but unimpressive. The reader at once perceives with whom he has to deal—with a headstrong, impulsive, impracticable man. Very often he is right, and what he says is well worthy of attention; but very often he is only half right, unfair, narrow in the scope of his criticism. In the volume now before us, his principal aim is to show that the Roman law was immeasurably superior to the English. If it were really necessary at the present day to controvert the old maxim, that the English law is the perfection of reason, there would be some justification for the vehemence with which Mr. Phillimore insists on a proposition which is incontestable. But every one is agreed that the Roman law has all the advantage over the English, which must attach to a scientific system, when compared with an agglomeration of principles, forms, and decisions connected by little else than the bond of a historical sequence. This once admitted, we come to a further question, whether it is desirable that a nation should have no legal history of its own, but, long before it has attained the stage of thought, when a scientific system is found congenial, should adopt, in a mass, the finished product of an advanced society. In England the progress of jurisprudence has certainly been slow, but it has always maintained a correspondence with the progress of the nation. When the nation has made a great leap, law has made a leap too. The two great eras of legal change in England—the reigns of Charles II. and William IV.—followed immediately on the occurrence of great national convulsions. If, therefore, the law of a nation is to be a part of the national life, England has substantially pursued the right path. Signs are not wanting that the time is come when England may advantageously investigate her own law by the light of other systems, and when the introduction of a comprehensive and scientific character into English jurisprudence would seem natural, because connected with similar steps taken in other spheres of thought and practice. A familiarity with the Roman law will make such a change possible in a degree far beyond what any other auxiliary can offer. But we derive little benefit from hearing expressed, in varying combinations of outrageous invective, the very simple truism, that, before England attained the point when the science of law was thought of, her jurisprudence was much more unscientific than the most scientific system which has ever been known.

We will not, therefore, give our readers any specimens of what occupies so large a space of Mr. Phillimore's work—the abuse of English law—but prefer to draw attention to the legal value of his book, both in its general character, and in its contents. The notion of expounding law through a collection of its leading maxims has been already adopted by an English lawyer, and was suggested in its application to Roman law by D'Aguesseau, who saw that the title in the Digest "De Regulis Juris" might be made the framework of a very instructive commentary on Roman law. Mr. Phillimore has taken about seventy of the most important maxims of Roman law, collected instances to illustrate them, and then shown how far English law has adopted or departed from them. He has done this with much learning, liveliness of style, and clearness of thought; and no one who knows enough of Roman and English law to understand the volume can fail to derive great profit from reading it carefully and attentively. We cannot, however, avoid noticing a small but annoying defect, which certainly diminishes the pleasure of perusing it. It is full of the most extraordinary typographical blunders. There is scarcely a Latin or Greek quotation which is not disfigured by glaring mistakes; and scarcely a page where some sentence, travestied and complicated by licences of printing and punctuation, does not try the patience of the reader.

A maxim is a short summary of the leading point determined in a great many decisions of similar cases, real or imaginary. In proportion as it is expressed, at once lucidly and tersely, it fastens on the memory, and becomes rooted in the mind. The form of expression is, therefore, of the very greatest importance; and the Latin language was so admirably adapted for the purpose, that no modern language can in the least compete with it. When once the maxim is firmly grasped in the mind, its use is to form a starting point for the speedy decision of fresh cases. But all the cases submitted for decision may not be similar, but only nearly similar; and then the maxim serves as a starting point to judge of the degree of similarity. Perhaps this is the chief use of a maxim—to test the degrees of similarity in cases nearly alike. We see, perhaps, at once that the case is one where the maxim is, if not applicable, at least nearly applicable. We, therefore, have at once advanced a long way towards deciding the case; for we throw on it, so to speak, a sort of onus probandi, or necessity of exhibiting some reason why it should not come within the scope of the maxim. The exceptions to maxims thus bring out the full force of the maxim, and illustrate the success with which it has originally been framed. In fact it is generally much easier to remember the extent of the application of a maxim by bearing in mind a prominent exception than by thinking of instances where it applies. The exceptions to maxims are therefore the most important part of the subject to the student, and they may, we believe, be ranged under three heads: 1. Exceptions arising from the terms of the maxim; 2. Exceptions arising from the facts of the case; and 3. Exceptions arising from conflicting principles of law.

An instance of exceptions under the first head may be drawn from the exceptions to the maxim "Res judicata pro veritate accipitur." Here the term res judicata is so short as to be ambiguous; and until we clear up what is meant by res judicata we shall have cases apparently embraced in the rule which we shall have to exclude, or, in other words, we shall have exceptions. In the first place, judicata means judicata inter eosdem—the parties must have been the same. Then, again, the judgment must bear immediately on the points at issue. The decision of a collateral matter, from which a particular state of things might be inferred, is not conclusive as to the existence of that state of things. Then, again, a familiar distinction is drawn in international law, according as the judgment has been in rem or in personam, the decision in the former case being conclusive, and in the latter only of primâ facie validity, and in many systems not even possessing that degree of weight. We might add other limitations and distinctions which it is necessary to introduce before we arrive exactly at the meaning of the terms of the maxim, but those we have given will suffice to exemplify the exceptions which arise from verbal ambiguity. For an instance of the class of exceptions arising from the facts of the case, we may refer to the maxim, "Ratihabitio mandato æquipollet." The terms of the maxim are clear: we know what an order is, and what the ratification of an order is, but in practice doubts arise whether the order or the ratification has been given. For example, nice questions arise as to the state of circumstances which will imply a ratification. There may be acts of the principal which are ambiguous in character, as leaving unanswered a letter announcing the intention of the agent, or there may be a crisis in a person's affairs when any aid extended to him would be held to imply a corresponding obligation to recompense that aid. In all such cases we have to study the minute details of the particular case submitted to us, and it is only then that we can pronounce whether the maxim applies.

Lastly, a maxim may be inapplicable because it is contravened by a principle of law of higher force; and this may be either because it comes in collision with some positive and definite head of law, as when a maxim of private law has to yield to a maxim of public law, or because the circumstances are such that it would be contrary to good sense and the exigencies of daily life that the maxim should prevail in its full rigidity. In such cases—to speak technically—an equity is raised. A man, for instance, is bound to return what he has borrowed; but if the thing borrowed has been applied to a proper use, but to one which demands a long time to supply the place of the thing borrowed, the owner must allow the borrower sufficient time. The reader will find some valuable remarks on the general nature and import of maxims in Mr. Phillimore's book, under the heading "Regula est quæ rem quæ est breviter enarrat." It would, perhaps, have been better if Mr. Phillimore had placed at the beginning of his book the discussion on this title, which is of an introductory character. In conclusion, we must repeat, that, in spite of the many faults which lower the tone of this volume, and which will, we fear, greatly impair its effect, it is a really valuable work—sound in conception, well executed, and calculated to bring home to the minds of English lawyers the uses to which they may turn a knowledge of the Corpus Furis.

National Association for the Promotion of Social Science.

DEPARTMENT I.—JURISPRUDENCE AND AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

We propose to give abstracts of some of the more important papers which necessarily received very brief notice in our general report of proceedings published last week.

Tuesday, Oct. 13.—The Transfer of Land.

Mr. Wakefield's Paper.

The object of this paper was to direct public attention to the defective operation of that branch of our law which regulates the sale and tranfer of land, and the social mischiefs consequent thereupon; and to consider briefly some of the remedies which had been proposed. The writer first observed upon the object and expense of the abstract of title, and the investigation incident to it; and that the cost was the same for one acre as for 1,000 acres.

Mr. Sweet, in his evidence before Commissioners, gave a table of purchase-money and cost of transfer in various instances, and showed that the tax increased in inverse proportion with the value of the land, being hard on the humbler classes of purchasers, and recurring with every sub-sale. This result was not contemplated by the law, but was an excrescence of a defective law.

After showing the practical operation of the present law, the writer proceeded to remark on its social effects, observing that industrial habits are one of the great elements of civilisation and national greatness; that the most active and potent agent in the promotion of this habit was the acquisition of property; and that landed property was that, of all others, most desired by the industrial classes; and hence he argued that a state of law which, by the imposition of purely artificial obstacles, not only impedes, but actually interposes an insuperable barrier to the acquisition of property by these classes, must in effect relax one of the mainsprings of national industry, and produce many social evils.

The removal of the shackles on the transfer of land would produce many advantages—it would lessen the crowding of dwellings, and restrain emigration of skilled and industrious men.

As to Remedies.—After showing that a register of assurances would increase the expense of transfers of land, and was unnecessary for sake of security, he pointed out that the objects of a remedy should be—1, To diminish the expense incidental to the transfer of land; 2, to diminish delay; and 3, to do so without impairing security of title.

The means hitherto attempted as a remedy had been—1, A registration of assurances; 2, a registration of title; 3, a plan proposed by the author of the present paper—a certificate of title to be granted to every owner of land who should apply for it, and prove that he was owner in fee, upon which certificate was to be indorsed a memorandum of every subsequent deed; 4, a plan recommended by the late Commissioners, of certificates of title and a register of titles.

The advantages of a certificate of title would be, that, by fixing a recent date for root of title (for none would begin earlier than the certificate), the expense of abstracts, and of consequent investigation, would be diminished, and the length of conveyances reduced, as recitals would not be necessary.

The author then compared advantages of registry of title with those of indorsement on certificate of subsequent deeds, observing that registry of title would increase the expense of transfer, although it might diminish delay; would render impossible the dealing with the title deeds for purposes of deposit, and thus check the "transfer of the symbol being equivalent to the transfer of the original," which was required by the exigency of commerce, and was regarded by the author "as a valuable principle, and one of the triumphs of civilisation." On the other hand, the plan of the certificate and indorsement would widely extend this principle, impart greater value to title deeds, by greatly facilitating the use made of them by persons engaged in commerce.

Mr. Fawcett's Paper.

As a necessary step to a system of registration, it was necessary to reduce all tenures to one class—say freehold—then let the county be divided into districts for purposes of registration, to be under the jurisdiction of a chief registrar and registrars of divisions. The next step would be, to provide a plan on which every field and house should be laid down and designated by a letter or figure; on every transfer the parties to appear personally or by attorney before registrar of district, who should make transfer at once, as the steward of copyhold court did; and no description should be permitted beyond the letter or figure which stands for the field or house on the district map. And on the register should be entered a document merely stating the names of the parties, the number of the parcels on plan, the consideration, and the nature of the transaction, whether sale, mortgage, &c., and no covenants. The name of no person to appear on the register except the name of the person in whom the legal estate is vested. Deeds containing trusts to be produced to registrar, and by him stamped with office seal; and parties beneficially interested may enter caveats.

The author proposed that owners in fee might at once be placed on the register, and that heirs-at-law and devisees should, within twelve months, be required to register their lands; that a shorter period of possession with registration than is now required should give an indefeasible title; and that a certificate from the registrar should be the only abstract of title to which a purchaser should be entitled.

As to the cost of transfers, the author proposed that a fee should be paid to registrar, and that solicitors should be paid a per-centage.

The author concluded by recommending, that, until a system of registration should be adopted, the provisions of Lord Brougham's Act (8 & 9 Vict.) should be made imperative, and that no deed should be valid that was not prepared in conformity with it.

Wednesday, Oct. 14.—The Bankruptcy Laws.

Mr. S. S. Lloyd's Paper.

Mr. Lloyd commenced by observing on the unpopularity of the Bankruptcy Courts, and on the preference given in cases of insolvency to assignments; stating, on the authority of Mr. Perry's evidence before the Lords' Committee, that there were nine assignments to one bankruptcy in the years 1850 to 1853; the numbers being 29,885 estates administered by assignment, and 3,325 bankruptcies. This was a striking contrast with Scotland, where a resort to the Court was the rule, and private arrangement the exception. Mr. Lloyd attributed the difference to the fact, that, in Scotland, the control of the creditors was exercised in many matters in which in England they had no voice; and, whilst the expense in Scotland was about 8 per cent., in England it was 50 per cent. on the assets.

The author expressed his approval of codifying the law of bankruptcy, and advocated the abolition of the distinction between bankruptcy and insolvency; but it was deemed by the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce wiser to attempt the amendment of the statutes of 1849 and 1854, and Mr. Lloyd proceeded to explain the objects of the Bill prepared by that body.

It was proposed to charge the court fees, salaries, and compensations on the Consolidated Fund, leaving, as the only charges on the estates of bankrupts, the expenses of collecting and distributing the assets; to reduce the stamp now charged on petition to a small sum, and charge the remainder on the adjudication. This would be acceptable to the creditor, and increase the revenue.

The Bill also contained clauses for the objects following:—To abolish the offices of messenger and broker, and to transfer their duties to the official assignees and their servants; power to tax bills of auctioneers, valuers, and accountants, in the same manner as solicitor's bills; to remunerate official assignees by salary of £600 a year, and a commission of 1¼ per cent. on assets collected, and of 2½ per cent. on amounts paid for dividends; to limit the power of the commissioners in granting allowance to bankrupt up to certificate meeting, by requiring the sanction of the assignees; to reduce the rent payable to landlords from twelve to six months.

As to solicitors' charges—which constituted on an average more than one-third of the entire expense of administration, and frequently exceeded all other items combined—it was stated that they were made for the professed discharge of duties which appertained, not to the solicitor, but to the trade assignee or some one else. It was proposed to remedy this evil by disallowing all charges for services for which the written authority of the trade assignee should not be produced, by transferring to registrar the duty of issuing advertisements; by simplifying proof of debts; diminishing the number of public sittings; and by extending power of the commissioner to try all actions for debt at the suit of assignees.

Mr. Lloyd estimated these changes would reduce the expenses from 50 to 24 per cent.

It was further proposed by the Bill to enable the commissioners to dispose of certain business in chambers, and decide disputes on special case—to appoint a mercantile man as assessor in certain cases to assist commissioner. And as great complaints had been made of the irregularity in the attendance of the commissioners in some courts, it was proposed to enable the Lord Chancellor to appoint substitutes for commissioners, who should be paid out of the salary of the absentees.

The following objects were also provided for by the Bill:—To make solicitors of seven years standing eligible as registrars; to increase the sum which official assignee is permitted to have under his control from £1,000 to £2,000; to declare brokers, accountants, and clerks to official assignees, as well as merchants, to be eligible to office of official assignee.

As to acts of bankruptcy, the declaration of inability to meet engagements, and the affidavit for trader debtors' summons, to be filed at court of that district where trader has carried on business, and not, as now, where he resides. The levying execution on goods of a trader to be an act of bankruptcy. If creditor file affidavit of debt, and give notice thereof to trader, and demand immediate payment, then if creditor be not satisfied in fourteen days, trader to be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy; to enable Court to order money to be raised by mortgage, if bankrupt's debts can be paid by money so raised; also, under special circumstances, to postpone sale and make orders for management in meanwhile; to enable commissioner to order pensions, &c., to vest in assignees; that bankrupts, in preparing balance-sheet, shall have assistance of official assignee; and commissioner may order further assistance at expense of estate in special cases. The present system of preparing balance-sheet was strongly condemned, as tending to mislead the Court, and screen the bankrupt from merited censure.

As to proof of debts—It was proposed that creditors should deliver to official assignee a statement of their accounts with bankrupt, with a declaration added that it was a true and complete statement (false statement to be a misdemeanor). Official assignee to examine these statements, and report to the commissioner the result. Court may, on application of assignees or creditor, require further proof, or examine claimants.

As to audit and dividends—It was proposed to adopt the Scotch plan—namely, trade assignee to audit accounts of official assignee one month before each dividend, and file certificate of audit; and, if account not approved, to file the reasons for non-approval. First dividend to be paid at four months; second, at eight months; and third, if any, at ten months from adjudication, without public sitting of court. At expiration of twelve months from adjudication, a public sitting to be held for the audit of official assignee's account; and order to be then made for winding up estate. Previously to public audit, the accounts to be examined by trade assignee, and printed copy sent to every creditor of £10 and upwards seven days previously to the audit meeting. Trade assignee to be paid for his trouble. Official assignee to send dividend warrant by post, at the request and risk of creditors.

As to certificate—To abolish classification; to omit from list of offences the loss by gaming of £20 in one day, at any previous period of life, and to confine it to one year previously to bankruptcy; and to add to the offences punishable by suspension of certificate the loss of £200 by time bargains, not keeping proper books during two years, and having paid or allowed an exorbitant rate of interest.

Mr. Lloyd suggested that the power of imprisonment on withdrawal of protection should not be continued; that the Court alone should have this power; and that, where certificate is refused, the Court should be required to award some imprisonment to the bankrupt.

As to arrangements under control of Court—It proposed that the property of petitioner should vest in the assignee immediately on filing of petition; the Court, by order, to re-vest it if petition dismissed; and that no notice to creditors should be required beyond a notice in London Gazette.

As to arrangement by deed or memorandum—It was proposed to extend the power to compositions or inspection deeds, and to those cases of assignment where only part of trader's property is included.

As to the administration of the estates of deceased insolvents—The provisions of Lord St. Leonards' Bill of 1853 had been adopted.

On the Effect of Commercial Legislation upon Commercial Morality.

Mr. W. Hawes' Paper.

Mr. Hawes commenced his paper by the expression of his opinion, that the law, being the best schoolmaster, should promote commercial morality, and not tend (as he thought it sometimes did) to support commercial fraud.

Our commercial legislation encouraged criminal fraud and immorality—

1. By laws imposing prohibitory or such high taxes and duties, that profit, out of all proportion to the risk incurred, was secured by their evasion.

2. By our bankruptcy and insolvency laws, which treat honest misfortune and errors of judgment with the same obloquy as fraud, extravagance, and recklessness.

3. By our law of partnership, which throws difficulties in the way of the removal and punishment of a fraudulent partner; and

4. By incumbering the pursuit of justice with so many forms and technicalities, and involving such sacrifices of time and money, that it was often better to submit to a fraud, and to forego a right, than to attempt, by the aid of the law, to punish one, or to secure the other.

In illustration of the first division of his subject, and to show that the law afforded temptations and facilities for the commission of criminal fraud, Mr. Hawes stated that frauds were committed most readily against the Government, and next to the Government against companies, rather than against firms or individuals.

Every one engaged in home or foreign trades, subject to high or prohibitory duties, must know how constantly he was exposed to the temptation of evading them.

Look, too, at the income-tax returns. Who is there who believes in the smallness of the number of persons in trade (804 only) returning incomes for £900 and £1,000 a year? And yet this is vouched by a positive declaration, which few would make to defraud a neighbour or a friend. It should be the first duty of Government to consider how taxes might be imposed so as to obtain the largest revenue, and afford the least temptation to fraud.

The same temptation to commit fraud against and by public companies exists. Friendship, interest, and ability to take and dispose of shares decide their appointments; and the dishonesty of many of their acts he attributed to a want of independence of thought and action, to a want of a deep sense and love of justice, and to other causes. In this way, and because the business matters of companies were not conducted as between two private men, the commercial morality of public companies had been so much lowered, and their proceedings had become so notorious for want of honourable dealing, as to induce a distinguished judge to characterise them as having neither bodies to be kicked, nor souls to be damned.

On the second point of the subject, Mr. Hawes went on to observe that the first principle of our bankruptcy law was erroneous.

It adopted the fundamental principle, that a trader, failing to pay his debts, had a right to be relieved by law from present and future liability, without the consent of his creditors. Mr. Hawes proceeded to show the absurdity and injustice of the distinction between traders and non-traders, and the encouragement it gave to fraud; and that no law of bankruptcy would be based on right principles until there was a clear distinction between those who became liable to it under honest and dishonest circumstances. He believed the principle of the Insolvent Court to be the right one; and that by creditors alone ought release from debts to be given.

The law ought to interfere between creditor and debtor—

1. To protect the debtor's person from arrest.

2. To secure an equitable and speedy distribution of his assets.

3. To restrain any vindictive exercise of power by a small body of creditors.

4. To regulate proceedings under which a debtor may be brought before the Court.

5. To record the orders and decisions of the Court and creditors, and to see that no impediment should prevent the free exercise of the bankrupt's talents and industry, and the recovery of his character in trade.

6. To punish with certainty and severity any commercial fraud or dishonesty.

With respect to the way in which the law incumbered the pursuit of justice, Mr. Hawes observed, first, upon the value of the county courts; however, stating that their expenses should be reduced; and that the tendency which existed to induce plaintiffs to employ attorneys—instead of advocating their plaints themselves—could not be too much checked.

Much evil and injustice was caused by the delay of hearing causes in court, which evil ought to be removed; and all unnecessary forms and technicalities cut away.

Mr. Hawes then called attention to the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, excluding from the law's operations unwritten contracts, of which he strongly disapproved, and said that it did not lessen, but encouraged fraud.

The action of the client was restricted. The system of etiquette observed between barristers and solicitors, and the custom of remunerating a solicitor for his services by fixed rules, irrespective of real talent, could not be too soon abrogated.

By delays of law. He particularly alluded to the trial of causes in the country, which took place but twice a year, and at which great expense was incurred; and complained of the indolent habit of some judges of forcing parties in court to a reference, after all the preliminary expenses had been incurred; for it was clear, that, if the parties had not deemed the decision of a superior judge of more value than that of a junior barrister, they would not have carried their cause into court at all.

In conclusion, Mr. Hawes expressed his belief that commercial morality was yet high, despite the blotches on its fame that occasionally came to light; and hoped the time would come when every one would look to the law as his surest friend, and when all its proceedings, however varied by custom, should be based upon sound principles, and administered with such a stern regard to justice, that it would always protect the right, and punish the wrong.

Chancery Judges' Chambers.

Regulations to be observed in the Conduct of Business at the Chambers of the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors, by order of the Right Honourable Sir JOHN ROMILLY, Master of the Rolls; the Honourable the Vice-Chancellor Sir RICHARD TORIN KINDERSLEY; the Honourable the Vice-Chancellor Sir JOHN STUART; and the Honourable the Vice-Chancellor Sir WILLIAM PAGE WOOD—this 8th day of August, 1857.

I. Summonses are not to be altered after they are sealed, except upon application at chambers, and any alterations then made will be marked with the seal of such chambers.

II. Upon applications for time to answer, a printed copy of the bill and the interrogatories to be answered are to be produced.

III. Whenever any matter is adjourned from the court to chambers, or any directions are given in court, to be acted upon at chambers, whether upon a matter adjourned into court from chambers, or upon any other occasion, without an order being drawn up, a note signed by the registrar, stating for what purpose such matter is adjourned to chambers, or the directions given, is to be procured from the registrar, and left at chambers.

IV. In drawing up decrees and orders to be left at chambers, the solicitors are to take care that every account, inquiry, sale, direction to appoint receiver, and other direction to be answered at chambers, is numbered consecutively according to the form set forth in the schedule C referred to in the General Order, No. 8, of 16th October, 1852, and that the other directions are not numbered.

V. At the same time that any decree or order made in a suit instituted by bill or claim is left at chambers, a print of the bill or claim is to be left.

VI. A note stating the names of the solicitors for all the parties, and showing for which of the parties such solicitors are concerned, is to be left at chambers with every decree or order.

VII. For the purpose of procuring the direction of the judge as to the manner of serving notice of a decree or order, pursuant to the 5th General Order of 1st June, 1854,

The plaintiff is to make an ex parte application by summons, and thereupon to show by affidavit as far as he is able—

1. With respect to Infants.

The ages of the infants.

Whether they have any parents or testamentary guardians, or guardians appointed by the Court of Chancery.

Where and under whose care the infants are residing, at whose expense they are maintained, and in case they have no father or guardian, who are their nearest relations.

And that the parents, guardians, relations, or persons upon whom it is proposed to serve the notice, have no interest in the matters in question, or, if they have, the nature of such interest, and that it is not adverse to the interests of the infants.

2. With respect to Persons of Unsound Mind not found so by Inquisition.

Where and under whose care such persons are residing, and at whose expense they are maintained.

Who are their nearest relations, and that such relations, or person upon whom it is proposed to serve the notice, have no interest in the matters in question, or, if they have, the nature of such interest, and that it is not adverse to the interest of the persons of unsound mind.

VIII. A copy of every certificate by a record and writ clerk of the entry of a memorandum of service of notice of a decree or order, and of every order giving liberty to a person served with such notice to attend the proceedings, certified by the solicitor, is to be left at chambers.

IX. Upon the notice of a claim having been entered at chambers by a creditor or other claimant served upon the solicitors in the cause, the number of the entry of the claim is to be stated.

X. Every alteration in an account verified by affidavit to be left at chambers is to be marked with the initials of the commissioner or officer before whom the affidavit is sworn, and such alterations are not to be made by erasures with the knife or other instrument.

XI. Accounts, extracts from parish registers, particulars of creditors' debts and other documents referred to by affidavit, are not to be annexed to the affidavit, or referred to in the affidavit as annexed, but are to be referred to as exhibits.

XII. Every certificate on an exhibit referred to in an affidavit signed by the commissioner or officer before whom the affidavit is sworn, must have the short title of the cause or matter.

XIII. Affidavits for the purpose of enabling the judge to fix reserved bids are to state the value of the property, by reference to an exhibit containing such value, so that the value may not be disclosed by the affidavit when filed.

XIV. As soon as particulars and conditions of sale settled at chambers have been printed, two prints thereof, certified by the solicitor to be correct prints of the particulars and conditions settled at the judges' chambers, are to be left at chambers.

XV. An office copy of the affidavit of the person appointed to sell, of the result of the sale, with the bidding paper and particulars therein referred to, are to be left at chambers at least one clear day before the day appointed for settling the certificate of the result of the sale.

XVI. Receivers' accounts are to be delivered at chambers on or before the day appointed for that purpose, and, in default, the receiver will be liable to the consequences imposed by the General Order of April 23, 1796.

XVII. All accounts, copies, and papers, left at chambers, are to be written upon foolscap paper bookwise, unless the nature of the document renders it impracticable to do so.

XVIII. Where any cause originating in chambers shall, at the original or any subsequent hearing thereof, have been adjourned for further consideration, such cause may, after the expiration of eight days, and within fourteen days from the filing of the certificate of the chief clerk of the judge to whose court the cause is attached, be brought on for further consideration by a summons to be taken out by the plaintiff or party having the conduct of the cause, and after the expiration of such fourteen days, by a summons to be taken out by any other party. And such summons is to be in the form prescribed by the Order No. 1 of the 16th October, 1852, and set forth in the schedule A thereto; and the object of the application may be stated as follows:—"That this cause, the further consideration whereof was adjourned by the order of the —— day of ——, 185–, may be further considered."

This summons is to be served six clear days before the return.

XIX. Upon applications for the appointment of guardians of infants and allowance for maintenance, the evidence is to show—

1. The ages of the infants.
2. The nature and amount of the infants' fortunes and incomes.
3. What relations the infants have.

XX. Upon applications to obtain the sanction of the Court to infants making settlements on marriage, under the Act of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, evidence is to be produced to show—

1. The age of the infant.
2. Whether the infant has any parents or guardians.
3. With whom or under whose care the infant is living, and if the infant has no parents or guardians, what near relations the infant has.
4. The rank and position in life of the infant and parents.
5. What the infant's property and fortune consists of.
6. The age, rank, and position in life of the person to whom the infant is about to be married.
7. What property, fortune, and income such person has.
8. The fitness of the proposed trustees and their consent to act.

The proposals for the settlement of the property of the infant and of the person to whom such infant is proposed to be married, are to be submitted to the judge.

XXI. For the purpose of procuring the appointment of a guardian to infants under the Act of Parliament of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, and the 10th General Order of 15th November, 1856—

A summons should be taken out in the names of the infants by a next friend, in the form used for originating proceedings in chambers, intituled in the same manner as the petition or intended petition—That ——, or some other proper person or persons, may be appointed guardian or guardians of the said infants, for the purpose of making an application on behalf of the said infants [or consenting on behalf of the said infants to an application] to the Court, under the provisions of the above Act. In case the application to the Court is to be made on behalf of the infants, the guardian must be appointed before the petition is presented. If the guardian is to consent to an application, the guardian may be appointed either before or after the petition is presented.

Upon the application to appoint such guardian, the following evidence is to be adduced:—

1. The age of the infant.
2. Whether he has any parent, testamentary guardian, or guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery.
3. Where and under whose care the infant is residing, and at whose expense he is maintained.
4. In what way the proposed guardian is connected with the infant, and why proposed, and how qualified to be appointed.
5. That the proposed guardian has no interest in the intended application, or if he has, the nature of his interest, and that it is not adverse to the interest of the infant.
6. The consent of the guardian to act.
7. The nature of the intended application to the Court.

XXII. For the purpose of procuring the direction of the Judge for leave to make or consent to an application on behalf of infants or lunatics under the said Act of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, and the 10th General Order of November 15, 1856, a summons is to be taken out after the petition is presented in the ordinary form, intituled in the same manner as the petition, by the guardian of the infants or committee of the lunatic, that he may be at liberty, on behalf of the infant or lunatic, to make the application [or consent to the application] to the Court proposed to be made by the petition presented to the Lord Chancellor [or Master of the Rolls] on the —— day of ——.

Upon this application the guardian or committee should make an affidavit that he believes it to be proper and for the benefit of the infant or lunatic that the application proposed to be made should be made [or consented to], on behalf of the said infant or lunatic, and such other evidence, if any, should be adduced, as the circumstances of the case may require, to show the propriety of the application so far as the infant or lunatic is concerned, and the petition should be produced.

XXIII. For the purpose of procuring the directions of the Judge, pursuant to the 3rd General Order of November 15, 1856,

A summons is to be taken out after the petition has been answered, intituled in the same manner as the petition, that directions may be given in what newspapers the notices required by the Act are to be inserted.

The petition is to be produced on the return of the summons, and the judge's direction will be written on the petition and signed by his Chief Clerk.

XXIV. The forms set forth in the schedule hereto are to be adhered to, and only to be varied in so far as may be necessary to meet the circumstances of the case.

Money Market.

CITY, Friday Evening.

The present week has been a time of great commotion on the Stock Exchange. English Securities have fluctuated very much. The closing price of Consols this afternoon is 89¾ to 89⅞ per Cent., being fully one per Cent. better than this day week. Numerous investments on the part of the public continue to be made, which materially strengthen the market. The demand for money has been very great at the Bank and in Lombard Street. The effect of deficiencies on the part of America, upon our finances and trade, is believed to be not yet fully developed.

The amount of specie intended for shipment to India and China by the next mail packet, is said to be about £900,000, which includes a certain proportion of the additional loan of one million taken by the East India Company to be shipped to the East Indies in silver by instalments. The terms of this loan are 6 per Cent interest, and for two years certain. One half is believed to be in the course of advance by the London and Westminster Bank, and the other half by other banking establishments. The returns of the Board of Trade for the month of September, 1857, show a considerable increase in exports when compared with the month of September, 1856. A large part of this increase is attributable to an advance of price in the raw material. The increase is nearly equal to that which appeared in the month of August, but very much less than was shewn in several of the previous months of the present year.

From the Bank of England return for the week ending the 24th October, 1857, which we give below, it appears that the amount of notes in circulation is £19,766,265, being a decrease of £416,980, and the stock of bullion in both departments is £9,369,794, showing a decrease of £154,684 when compared with the previous return.

It would be unreasonable to suppose that the amount of commercial disorder which, in the United States, has brought affairs into their present position could fail to produce in this country great pecuniary difficulties and a material falling off in trade. We surely have a right to feel satisfaction and pride that our merchants, bankers, and traders have, during so many weeks, maintained a position of general stability and solvency. No surprise ought to be felt, that, at the eleventh hour, long-protracted defalcation in remittances from America is disabling many establishments, recently of acknowledged credit and stable resources, from duly meeting their liabilities.

The failure of the Liverpool Borough Bank was announced on Tuesday, and all expectation of the regular resumption of its business appears to be given up. It is mentioned that the liabilities of this bank amount to a million, all of which it is hoped will be discharged. Arrangements have been made by which the Western Bank of Scotland, at Glasgow, would be fully enabled to meet any difficulties likely to arise, but on condition that the establishment shall be ultimately wound up. The deposits in this bank are reported to amount to about six millions. In London, and other seats of trade, and also in the manufacturing districts, many large failures have occurred during the week, others are anticipated, and business is paralysed.

Nothing less serious could be expected to ensue upon the intelligence that a long list of banks in New York and Boston have suspended their payments of specie. Lately these banks were represented as the bulwarks of credit. Now they are liable to the reproaches of the daily press for having, it is said, been the cause of an immense amount of ruin by continuing so long the struggle to make cash payments. Having now failed, the public are requested to believe that universal bankruptcy, or almost universal bankruptcy, is immediately to bring about a return of prosperity. According to the adage that, when things are at the worst they must mend, this expectation may be reasonable. If the circulating medium in the United States is to do its work for some indefinite time with little or no aid from specie, some part of the hard cash due to this country will probably be remitted. Such remittances will be encouraged by the high rate of interest here, which tends to check the transmission of bills, especially of bills the intention with regard to which might be to get them discounted on this side for the purpose of returning the proceeds in gold. Banks of issue in the United States promise, of course, to pay their notes on demand, but there appears very inadequate security for the fulfilment of this promise. According to the constitution of American banks, a deposit of securities is made in proportion to their issues. These deposits have not, like gold and silver, the certainty of being available at all times and for all occasions. They consist of stocks, and shares, and mortgages. These may be good for ultimate security, but some time must elapse in the usual state of affairs before such assets can be converted into cash; and in a time of general distrust the delay is prolonged, and in the meanwhile extensive ruin takes place.

The decrease of bullion reported by the Bank in the four weeks ending the 24th instant, amounts to about £1,900,000. The arrivals from the gold-producing countries during the last two weeks have replaced only a small amount of the specie taken for exportation, the demand for which continues to some extent. According to the evidence of the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank, taken before the select committee on the Bank Act, this demand has existed and been in progress constantly, with very small intervals, during the last six years, and, according to their estimate, has amounted to £56,530,000, the larger proportion being silver for India and China. Their evidence also shows, that, large as this amount is, it is by much the smaller part of the precious metals imported during the same period, the amount of which they estimate at £135,000,000.

It is a question of great importance how the remaining very large amount has been disposed of; and the evidence of the Bank authorities throws a curious and interesting light upon that question. They estimate that the increase to the European stock of bullion in those years is £79,000,000; this includes the addition which has been made to the circulation of this country, which addition, in respect to gold, is estimated, but without any certain data, at about £14,000,000. The circulation of gold in previous years is supposed to have been from thirty-six to forty millions, and to have increased of late years to about fifty millions, which increase has been called for by the increased wealth and trade of the country. As this increase has absorbed not more than about £14,000,000 of the £79,000,000 before mentioned, the sum of £65,000,000 remains as increase to the European stock of bullion, exclusive of the gold taken into circulation in this country. Notwithstanding these facts, the demand upon the Bank has existed as before mentioned, and has reduced the stock of bullion in that establishment from between fourteen and fifteen millions, the amount held in 1851, to between nine and ten millions, the amount held in the present year.

This number closes our first volume. The completion of our edition of Statutes, with Index, &c., the completion of the series of articles on "The Legislation of the Year," and the General Index, will be published as a gratuitous Supplement before the end of the month.

The first number of our second volume will appear on Saturday next. On and from that day, the publication of this Journal will be transferred to more capacious and convenient premises, No. 59, CAREY STREET, LINCOLN'S INN, LONDON, W.C., to which address all communications should thenceforth be sent.

Subscribers' copies may be bound on the following terms:— The JOURNAL and REPORTER, in separate volumes, bound in cloth, 2s. 6d. per volume; half calf, 4s. 6d. per volume. Cloth covers can be supplied at 1s. 3d. each. Orders to be sent to the above address.

We cannot notice any communication unless accompanied by the name and address of the writer.

 It is particularly requested that any error or delay in the transmission of this Journal to Subscribers may be immediately communicated to the Editor.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 7, 1857.

THE CLOSE OF OUR FIRST VOLUME.

This day completes the first volume of our Journal; and, having thus accomplished the earliest stage our career, it may not be unseasonable to request our readers to review our past labours, to observe the principles on which we have proceeded, and to consider well whether they approve of what we have done and propose to do, to carry into effect the design of the founders of the SOLICITORS' JOURNAL. We think it will be conceded that the object of such a publication would not be answered by merely writing so as to convince solicitors that they have rights to defend, claims to urge, and grievances that demand redress. Our only useful aim must be to convince the public, and, especially, to obtain the attention of those leading organs of the press by which the public mind is influenced. Now, in order to do this, it is important that we should endeavour to look at every subject of discussion with a broad and impartial view. We must neither ourselves forget nor omit to remind our readers of the truth enunciated at the late meeting held at Manchester, that lawyers were made for society, and not society for lawyers. The maxim that the interests of the profession and of the public are identical is, we believe, well-founded. It has been adopted and constantly repeated in every declaration of the principles of this Journal, and we assume that all our readers assent to it as a general rule, and would be prepared, even at the cost of some immediate sacrifice, to acquiesce in any fair application of it to a particular case. We most earnestly deprecate any attempt, either to divide the profession into hostile sections, or to place the whole profession in antagonism to the community at large. The mischief of the first step would be that every collective effort in support of the rights of the body of solicitors must be weakened; and the impolicy of the second would inevitably be proved by ill-will and prejudices excited in the public mind at the bare suggestion of lawyers having any claim to urge. It is true that this tone of feeling, once almost universal, has already, to a great extent, died out in the minds of the most enlightened and influential laymen. That it has so far happily disappeared is due, we think, in a very great degree, to the wise and liberal spirit in which solicitors have dealt with all recent measures prepared for the amendment of law and practice.

Our meaning will be excellently illustrated by the history of the legislative changes in the procedure of the Court of Chancery. The reforms lately introduced into that court were to a very great extent either originated or cast into a practical working shape by the disinterested efforts of solicitors. It is true that the loss of the profession by these reforms was certain and immediate, while the gain was contingent and remote. But the load of unpopularity resting upon the court and all connected with it had become intolerable; and it was hoped that a full and frank confidence in promises of liberal treatment would not be misplaced, and that whatever might be sacrificed in immediate emolument would be regained under a new and fair adjustment of work and fees, and a vast increase in the business of a tribunal thus rendered expeditious and inexpensive, and no longer justly chargeable with delaying the hopes and wasting the substance of its suitors. We cannot indeed disguise the fact that these expectations have not hitherto been realised. The orders promulgated to settle the remuneration of solicitors have been received with general dissatisfaction, although it has been determined—and, as we think, wisely—to give the system a fair trial, and to raise no complaint that shall not be abundantly supported by the facts of actual experience. But besides this personal grievance, solicitors also urge a just remonstrance against the existing machinery of the court. They say that its judges and officers are too few for the work imposed upon them, and that by a narrow parsimony the efficiency of the tribunal is impaired, its advance into popularity impeded, and their own anticipation of augmented business very unfairly and unwisely frustrated.

Some of the events thus glanced at belong to the history of the past year, and the conduct of the profession in regard to them has been cordially supported by this Journal. We believe that solicitors have been guided in this matter by a sound and far-seeing policy, which has already borne some fruit, and will hereafter be completely vindicated. We are persuaded that our own best course will be to examine all future questions of law reform by the light of the same principles—to endeavour honestly to adapt law and practice to the requirements of the age—to study first the good of the community—to rely for the protection of professional interests upon the undoubted truth that society cannot dispense with lawyers—and to hope that in the long run it will show itself neither ungenerous nor unjust to a class of men who are indispensable to its very existence, and who have strenuously and disinterestedly laboured to promote its welfare.

This retrospect of our conduct, and declaration of the principles which have dictated it, will furnish, perhaps, the best answer that can be given to two letters which we this day publish on Registration of Title to Land, and to which we request the particular attention of our readers. The suggestion in the first letter that this Journal is the organ of some particular class, and that it seeks the destruction of the larger portion of the body of solicitors, is so extravagant that we can only wonder at its being entertained by any reasonable mind. Nevertheless, as the imputation appears in the letter of a respected correspondent, we will say, once for all, that this Journal is not, and, we hope, shall not become the organ of any class or clique of the profession. We emphatically deny that we have any object except the general good; and we repeat now, what we have often urged before, that the interest of the entire body of solicitors is one and indivisible; that any injury to country practitioners must be felt equally by practitioners in London; and if any class in the profession should attempt personal aggrandisement at the expense of any other class, such conduct would involve the guilt, and incur the penalties, at once of treason and of suicide.

As regards the question of Registration, it would seem that our own immediate duty is to elicit opinions and facts, and to promote the better understanding of a difficult and complicated subject. We observed, some months since, a complaint of the Yorkshire Law Society, that the Commissioners had omitted to obtain a sufficient body of evidence from country solicitors upon their proposal. To supply this deficiency, we intend to print in our Journal the questions circulated by the Commissioners; and any of our readers who will take the trouble to frame answers to them, may thus usefully contribute to elucidating the obscurities of the controversy. That the question is imperfectly understood appears, we think, from the letter of our second correspondent, who refers to the example of existing registries in support of his objections to a proposal altogether different. The same conclusion may be drawn from the alarm expressed by our first correspondent as to the supposed effects of a measure which certainly could not attain its full operation for twenty or thirty years from the time of becoming law. While upon this topic, it may be as well to add, that, as we understand the charge against us, it is that we, as the organ of some band of selfish schemers, are engaged in advocating a central, as opposed to a local, registration. Now, we certainly do not intend, for the sake of conciliating support, to pronounce any opinion at present, whether popular in town or country, upon any point of detail of the plan of registering title. It will be quite early enough to consider all such questions when a measure properly elaborated has been produced by those who have power to command attention to it. But we will venture so far as to remark that the majority of the schemes that have been framed suppose the suggested registration to be set on foot by the voluntary movement of a county, or smaller district; and if any ambitious speculator should set himself to add another to the list of projects, we think he would find his task much lightened by conceiving a local, rather than a central, registration.

We apprehend that our readers wish to see this Journal conducted with intelligence and vigour, and that, in general, whatever topic it may take in hand should be so dealt with as to win respect, not only from the lawyers who habitually read, but also from the laymen who may casually glance over its pages. There are very good reasons why the body of solicitors should desire to possess in the press an organ of established character and authority. This very question of Registration supplies perhaps the strongest possible argument in support of the views of those who set on foot this Journal. It is admitted by the Commissioners, in their Report, that their proposal cannot be properly carried out without making fresh regulations for the professional remuneration of solicitors. Here then is a question of the utmost importance, in which indeed the very existence of the profession is involved; and the success of the solicitors in obtaining an advantageous adjustment of it must depend very much upon the weight and influence of their advocates, and the disposition of the public to listen with favour to their arguments. Now there are various ways of treating the Registration controversy. For our own part we shall endeavour so to treat it as to gain for our Journal, if possible, the character of a clear-sighted and plain-spoken commentator upon all legal questions. A time may come when the profession will realise the benefit of the existence of a legal journal which has never written a single line calculated perhaps to gratify for the moment the passions and prejudices of some readers, but certain to impair the force of any appeal addressed by it to thoughtful men unbiassed by professional interests. If this Journal is to render any service to the body of solicitors, it must be allowed to apply all the discernment and all the ability it can command to every question equally, even at the risk of provoking letters like those to which we have called attention. We cannot hope to exist to any useful purpose upon the freedom sometimes accorded by religious assemblies to their preachers, of speaking as unreservedly and energetically as possible upon every topic except only that which most nearly concerns the audience.

THE DETECTION OF CRIME.

It is a curious and not a very welcome reflection that we have in this country almost no machinery at all which is fitted for the detection of secret crime. The proportion which is not detected is terrible. That this is so with regard to the lighter class of offences against property, is matter of universal notoriety. Indeed, the fact that stealing and cheating are professions, and that their members may usually count upon some years' undisturbed practice of them, would prove it conclusively, if proof were required. Even with respect to crimes involving more or less violence, such as burglary, the fact is equally notorious; but there is a kind of prejudice—half religious, half, as people say of novels, "founded on fact"—to the effect that there are exceptions to this, and, in particular, that "murder will out." Sorry as we may be to disturb so comfortable a persuasion, we cannot help feeling that it is not true; and we believe, that, even apart from secret murders, which are never recognised as such, a majority of avowed murders escape detection. Indeed, each class is certainly far more numerous than most people suppose. There can be no doubt at all that the crime for which Palmer suffered was only one of several; and it was stated at the time of his trial, and not contradicted, that what were called "suspicious" proposals were by no means unknown to insurance offices. The murder of Mrs. Bacon by her son passed unsuspected for about two years; and when we remember how much the symptoms of certain kinds of poisons resemble those of common diseases, it is impossible not to feel an unpleasant suspicion that poisoning may be a much commoner crime than we suppose. Apart, however, from undiscovered murders, no one who pays attention to the subject can doubt that the convictions for the crime bear a small proportion to the number of cases in which the coroner's jury return a verdict of wilful murder. We have lately had several assassinations of the most terrible kind, in which all attempts to detect the criminal have ended in total disappointment. A boy was murdered a month ago for his boots, in Nottingham forest; and though five or six people have been arrested, no one has been committed. The Waterloo-bridge mystery remains still as dark as ever; and we could, with very little difficulty, count up a large number of cases, within the last few years, in which the police have been entirely at fault in their investigations.

The principal interest of these considerations, in a legal point of view, arises from the light which they throw upon the character of the machinery which the law provides for the punishment of crime. It is hardly too much to say that it scarcely interests itself at all upon the subject. Any one who will take the trouble to compare our own system of criminal procedure with that of the French, may easily convince himself that the law of England is not, and for centuries past has not been, in any material degree, adapted to the discovery of crime. It appears from the Code d'Instruction Criminelle that in France the courts of law are not, by any means, mere tribunals for the hearing of causes. They are also great police offices, armed with very extensive powers. There are as many as twenty-seven Cours Impériales, each of which has, in its own district, the entire control of what is called the Police Judiciaire. The officers of the court employed in the detection of crime are the Procureur Général, the Juges d'Instruction, the Procureurs Impériales, and the inferior officers, such as agents of police, gendarmes, and the like; and when a crime is committed, this body, which, taken together, forms the Ministère Public, manages every part of the prosecution, from the first arrest of the prisoner, down to the execution of his sentence. Their functions are totally different from those of English police magistrates and prosecuting attorneys and counsel. They all stand to each other, in an official relationship, as inferiors and superiors, and constantly correspond upon the cases submitted to them. The object which they propose to themselves is, as we should say, that of getting up the case for the prosecution. As soon as a crime of any kind is committed, the Procureur Impérial, or the Juge d'Instruction, goes to the scene of it, examines all the circumstances, takes the evidence of all the persons who can furnish information upon the subject, and, if he sees grounds for doing so, arrests any one whom he suspects. When the prisoner is arrested, he is not, as with us, cautioned not to commit himself, allowed free access to legal advice, or let out on bail; but, if the offence imputed to him is what is technically called a crime, which is not quite unlike what we should call a felony, he is put into close confinement, and constantly examined, re-examined, and cross-examined upon every detail of the occurrence. As fast as he answers the questions proposed to him, the Juge d'Instruction and the other authorities check the correctness of his answers by examining the persons whom he vouches, and by confronting him with them, if they see cause to do so. This kind of inquisition frequently lasts for weeks, or even months, before the magistrates make up their mind as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. Whilst the prisoner himself is dealt with in this manner, a process almost equally severe goes on with respect to the witnesses. The Procureur Impérial habitually receives information of all that passes in his district, and if he hears that any one has either said or done anything which implies the possession of any sort of knowledge about the crime, he can compel their attendance upon him, and extort their knowledge from them by the same process of cross-examination as is applied to the prisoner himself; and if they either refuse to answer, or answer in an evasive or unsatisfactory manner, their conduct is used to excite the suspicion of the jury against the prisoner. In England, as our readers are well aware, a witness may not only know all about a crime, but every one else may know that he knows about it, and yet, by simply refusing to answer questions, or supply information, he may totally baffle the prosecution. The only evidence which can be noticed, either by the judge or by the committing magistrate, must be given in public, and subject to the rules of evidence. In order to appreciate the French system in this respect, we must suppose the prosecuting attorney in an English trial to be armed with judicial authority, and to be not only entitled, but bound, to inform the Court of his own opinion as to the prisoner's guilt, and of the grounds, whether derived from his demeanour or from other circumstances, which have induced him to form it.

We are not, of course, arguing in favour of the introduction of such a system into this country. English people would never bear so grave an interference with the liberty of an immense number of entirely innocent people, for the purpose of bringing a few more guilty ones to justice; nor do we think it at all desirable that they should. It would, however, we think, be possible to adopt some of the peculiarities of the system with advantage. We are rather too solicitous about the freedom and the privileges of notorious scoundrels; and there is surely some sense in the argument, that accused persons ought to be interrogated, inasmuch as an honest man can have no objection to give an account of himself, whilst a knave, if possible, ought to be made to do so.

Legal News.

On the 3rd ult. we published a report of the Incorporated Law Society, stating that that body had resolved to recommend to the judges to authorise an examination, either before or during articles, or before admission, in Latin, French, &c., and that a memorial to that effect had been prepared. It appears that this announcement has created much unnecessary alarm. It has been suggested that clerks already articled would fall within the scope of the proposed regulation, and thus would be compelled to submit themselves to an unexpected and perilous ordeal. We confidently affirm that there is no ground whatever for such an apprehension. It would be unjust and opposed to all precedent to give to such a rule any but a prospective operation. Common sense, without authority, is sufficient to decide this point.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Carr & Another v. Chapple.

In this case, reported in our Journal of the 27th of last June, Mr. Millward applied for a rule for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, and the damages excessive. The facts were shortly these:—a Mrs. Hockaday was entitled to about £300, which her husband was desirous of laying out to increase her income. With this view, her trustees consented to purchase some small houses in the neighbourhood of London, which would produce about £80 a year profit; this was done; and a Mr. Shepherd (not defendant) was concerned for them in the purchase. Finding the property valueless, Mr. and Mrs. Hockaday went to plaintiff, who advised them to sue the vendor. This was agreed to, and he took the cause down for trial in London. When the case was about to be called on, terms of compromise were proposed, and acceded to—viz. £200 to be paid on the property being re-assigned. This compromise not having been carried out, the trustees had taken proceedings against defendant, which had resulted in a verdict for £200, although Mr. Chapple's costs were to be paid out of any amount recovered in the action against the original vendor of the property.

Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN, who had tried the case, said it was a very proper case for a rule.

Lord CAMPBELL inquired if there was any point of law, and said, if there was, it must come on with the others of a similar character which would shortly be argued—upon being answered in the negative, he said it must take its turn—and the rule was granted on both grounds.

(Sittings in Banco, before Lord CAMPBELL, and COLERIDGE, WIGHTMAN, and ERLE, JJ.).—Nov. 5, Violet v. Simpson.

The plaintiff in this action was a solicitor at Weston-super-Mare, and he sued another solicitor, named Simpson, to recover compensation in damages for having maliciously opposed his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act. The trial took place at Bristol before Mr. Justice Coleridge, who nonsuited the plaintiff, on the ground that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Mr. M. Smith moved to set aside the nonsuit, and for a new trial. The declaration alleged that the defendant caused a person named Edalls to make a statement that the plaintiff had contracted debts fraudulently and by breach of trust, although he (the defendant) well knew that the contrary was the fact; and by reason of the premises, Mr. Law, before whom the case came, instead of giving the plaintiff his discharge under the Act, ordered him to be retained in custody for a period of sixteen months from the date of the vesting order—viz., the 3rd of March, 1851. The action was commenced on the 8th of July, 1857, and, therefore, the six years from the time the acts complained of were committed had expired; but he (the learned counsel) contended that the damage done was a continuing damage during the whole of the sixteen months, and if that were so, the action would have been commenced within the proper period.

Lord CAMPBELL.—If you consider the detention the act of the defendant, of course the statute would be no bar to the action.

Mr. M. Smith said it was the act of the defendant by reason of his malicious proceeding, and the whole amount of damage could not be ascertained until the imprisonment had terminated.

Lord CAMPBELL.—The period was fixed when the sentence was pronounced.

Mr. M. Smith.—But there might be special damage arising during the imprisonment.

Lord CAMPBELL was of opinion that Mr. Justice Coleridge did well in nonsuiting the plaintiff. There was no evidence of any wrong done to him by the defendant within the six years. If the defendant could be considered as having caused the imprisonment, why then he did wrong during the whole sixteen months; but it could not be said he caused it, for all he did was to induce another to oppose the plaintiff's discharge, and then it was for the judge to adjudicate upon the matter.

The other judges being of the same opinion, the application was refused.

BAIL COURT.—Nov. 5.

(Sittings at Nisi Prius, before Mr. Justice CROMPTON and Common Juries).

Scott v. Cannon.

Mr. Edward James and Mr. Stammers were counsel for the plaintiff; Mr. Edwin James and Mr. Serjeant Parry for the defendant.

This was an interpleader case, the question being whether certain goods were the property of the plaintiff, a solicitor residing in Lincoln's-inn, or of a person named Charles John Allen. It appeared that Allen had been a bill-broker. He had borrowed £500 of Mr. Scott, for which, upon an execution, he had afterwards obtained a bill of sale of Allen's furniture. Allen stated that he was in the habit of advertising to lend money. He applied to one Watson, a matrimonial agent, for a woman with money, and he recommended him to a woman, saying she was worth £6,000, and he gave him £15 or £20 for the introduction. They exchanged likenesses. The portraits of the ladies were kept in a drawer. The matter was done chiefly by correspondence. They married and went to Paris on their wedding tour, as his wife said she wanted to go there to see her sister, but they did not find her there. After the marriage he found that instead of his wife having a fortune she was very much involved. His mother told him that he had made a mistake, for instead of marrying a lady he had married a late lady's-maid. Before his marriage he had gone down to Cheltenham to see his intended wife, and found her keeping a maid and a carriage. When people told him of his wife's debts he said "it was false; what a wicked world it was, that people should tell such falsehoods." After his return from his tour he had £4 left out of £250. He took her upon the belief that she was going to be married to somebody else, or he should have made further inquiries. His wife's debts amounted to about £600, which he had compromised. His wife left him a week after their return from Paris. She had come to his office once since to tender herself. He thought she had had the impudence to call once beside. He had brought an action for crim. con., and the damages were assessed at £100. He had told her he kept a brougham and had £1,000 a-year. He had borrowed £100 from the defendant just before the marriage, telling him of the fortune he was about to marry, and he had obtained another £100 on his return, telling him it was all right, as he at the time believed it was; £60 per cent. was allowed on the loan. His profits before the war were £1,000 a-year for three years. The plaintiff had advanced him £1,000 since the marriage. He got deeper into difficulties until he went to Scotland to take the benefit of the Sequestration Act. The defendant put in an execution, and then the plaintiff put in his claim. Would not swear he had not himself charged 60 per cent. upon loans. The furniture was at his mother's, and he had resided more there than at his lodgings. He kept a coachman, a footman, and a phaeton, and set up a brougham to catch some one. When the woman told him she was engaged to another, he induced her to start with him and leave the other gentleman in the lurch. Mr. Scott wished Allen's mother to take possession of the furniture, and keep it for him, and it had been in her possession over since.

For the defence it was contended, that the question was whether the plaintiff having a debt had used this bill of sale colourably to protect Allen's goods for Allen. The check given by Scott for the £500 was in favour of Mrs. Allen. Mr. Scott was the trustee for Mrs. Allen under her husband's will, and Mrs. Allen was to have a portion of the interest of this £500. With regard to the matrimonial affair the biter was bitten, and that was all; for Allen, being at the time himself insolvent, was endeavouring to get hold of a girl with £6,000 in order to pay his debts. It was not till after the marriage, and a writ had been served for the wife's debt, that Mr. Scott commenced proceedings for the recovery of the £500. It was therefore submitted that this was a colourable proceeding, and not good in law.

Mr. Justice CROMPTON, in summing up, said, the question was, whether at the time the bill of sale was executed it was intended really that the property should pass to Scott to do what he liked with it, or whether it was a mere sham or juggle.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—Oct. 30.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)

In re Hall & Hall.

This was the adjourned examination meeting in the case of Henry Hall and Cheslyn Hall, solicitors, of New Boswell-court, and also described as cattle dealers, of Neasdon, in Middlesex. There have been repeated adjournments, the failure having taken place so long ago as June, 1856, but it was only shortly before the last meeting that the bankrupts filed their accounts, and an adjournment was then taken to give the assignees time to examine those accounts. The joint balance-sheet (prepared by Messrs. Young) commences on the 1st of January, 1851, and extends to the date of the bankruptcy, 26th June, 1856. The following are the items:

Dr.—To unsecured creditors, 102,641*l.* 18*s.*; to creditors partially secured by debt of 15,033*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, 23,553*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.*; to ditto secured by property, 20,082*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*; to ditto secured by lien on furniture, 1,183*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*; to liabilities, 4,853*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*; to professional earnings, 39,854*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, less counsel's fees &c. paid 13,566*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*, 26,287*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.*; to statement of affairs, capital Jan. 1, 1851, 27,340*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*; total, 205,981*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.*

Cr.—By cash, £200; by debtors, considered good, 10,841*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*; by ditto, doubtful, 1,150*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.*; by ditto, bad, 5,141*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*; by ditto, having sets-off, 1,695*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.*; by property realised, farm, blood-stock, crops, furniture, &c. (deducting rent, taxes, &c.), 15,519*l.* 12*s.*; by leases, 1,483*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*; by debt assigned, 15,033*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*; by property held by creditors, 21,779*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*; by losses, 95,162*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*; by interest and discount, 9,829*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*; by salaries and petty cash, 6,204*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*; by trade expenses, 3,715*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.*; by law charges, 648*l.* 2*s.*; by domestic and personal ditto, 17,855*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.*; by liabilities per contra, 4,853*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*; by amount to balance, 10*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.*; total, 205,981*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.*

The principal items in the statement of losses are the following:—On farm, horse-breeding, and stud, £51,033; on the Neasdon estate, £16,075; also a further sum of £12,019 on the horse-breeding and stud; on investment and sale of £10,000 Consols, 247*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.*

Mr. Lawrance, for the assignees, said it was proposed to take another adjournment in this case, as the accounts required amendment in several particulars. The trade assignees had met at Mr. Whitmore's on the preceding day, with Mr. Rivington, who represented the largest creditor, Sir Charles Rushout, and it had been determined to ask for another adjournment, to which the bankrupts did not object. The bills of costs, of which the Court had heard so much, were not yet completed; but a great many had been sent out; and it was hoped that a very few weeks more would complete that part of the business.

Mr. Whitmore, the official assignee, thought that about three weeks more would be sufficient.

Mr. Lawrance said the allowance to the bankrupts had ceased for eighteen weeks, and he did not propose to indorse any application for its renewal at that sitting. That might be a reason for making the adjournment as short as might be convenient.

Mr. Rivington, who appeared for Sir Charles Rushout, a creditor for upwards of £40,000, said that several very large items in the accounts, especially those under the head of losses, were altogether unvouched, except by the bankers' pass-books and cheque ends, from which materials a cash-book had been raised since the bankruptcy. It was contrary to all reason to suppose that men of education, like the Messrs. Hall, should incur such a large expenditure as they had done without making some occasional memoranda, none of which were produced. At any rate they might produce the farm books kept at each farm. He gave notice that at the next meeting he should require some better vouchers of these accounts.

His HONOUR said it was very improbable that the bankrupts should have carried on this large concern without having books and vouchers. It would be a strong argument against their passing at the next meeting if they did not do everything in their power to make their accounts perfect.

A further proof for £2,000 by Sir Charles Rushout was admitted, and the examination meeting was adjourned until the 19th of December.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.—Nov. 5.

(Before the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.)

In re W. G. Norman.

This insolvent, a journeyman printer, applied to be discharged. He was opposed on behalf of a creditor named Chase, to whom the insolvent was indebted on account of rent. The complaint was, that Mr. Chase's action had been vexatiously defended, and that the insolvent's arrest was a collusive proceeding.

It appeared that the insolvent had employed one Guy, an accountant, to conduct his law business, and that person, acting as clerk to Mr. Govett, an attorney, had defended the action, and was now performing the business in this Court. The detaining creditor was a Mr. Jones, a medical gentleman, who had attended the insolvent for many years; and the arrest was admitted to be a friendly proceeding.

Mr. Jones, however, upon being called, said, he was quite ignorant of the insolvent being in custody at his suit until about a fortnight after the event, neither had he employed Mr. Grayson, who appeared to be the plaintiff's attorney.

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER said, that, after the evidence of Mr. Jones, there was no course left but to dismiss the petition. There had been a clearly vexatious defence to Mr. Chase's action, through Guy and Govett, who had contrived to make three law jobs for themselves at the insolvent's expense—viz., the defence to the action, the arrest, and the business in this Court. The arrest in Mr. Jones's name without that gentleman's knowledge or sanction, was a fraud upon the Court, and upon that ground the petition must be dismissed. He (the Commissioner) hoped, however, that the insolvent would make some arrangement with Mr. Chase, and not fall again into such hands as he had lately been in. With respect to Mr. Govett and Mr. Guy, he should consult with the other Commissioners whether those persons should in future have the opportunity of playing such tricks on this Court.

Petition dismissed.

(Before Mr. Serjeant H. G. JONES and a Jury.)

Wakeling v. Adams and Another.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, Mr. H. B. Wakeling solicitor, of Great Percy-street, Clerkenwell, to recover the sum of £28, being the balance of a bill of costs for work done by plaintiff as an attorney, against the defendants, Mr. James Adams and Mr. James Dunn, formerly in partnership as metal-plate and tin-foil manufacturers, carrying on business in St. John-street, Clerkenwell.

Mr. Tindal Atkinson appeared for the plaintiff; and Mr. Honyman for the defendant Adams; the defendant Dunn appeared in person.

Mr. Tindal Atkinson, in stating the case to the jury, said: In the early part of 1854 the defendants were in partnership as metal plate and tin-foil manufacturers, and took part of a yard of Baker & Larcher, in St. John-street, Clerkenwell, to carry on their business. Baker & Larcher, instead of permitting them to do so, turned their horse into the street, and otherwise misbehaved themselves, in consequence of which Mr. Wakeling was consulted on the 12th and 19th of April, and wrote a letter to the parties, complaining of their conduct, and asking compensation, on the 24th of April, 1854; in reply to which a Mr. Hudson, as an attorney for Baker & Larcher, brought an action against the defendants Dunn & Adams, which Mr. Wakeling was instructed to defend, and the defendants also desired Mr. Wakeling to bring an action against Baker & Larcher, and also gave a retainer signed by them both for that purpose, in pursuance of which Mr. Wakeling brought one action and defended the other, and the causes were both set down for trial. The case came on for trial in June, 1854. Mr. Charnock appeared in both cases for Adams & Dunn; and when they were called on, they were ultimately referred to the arbitration of Mr. Serjeant Thomas, by the advice of Mr. Charnock. Baker & Larcher went away, and were thought to be insolvent. Dunn & Adams quarrelled, and the result was, the arbitration was never proceeded with; and Mr. Wakeling ultimately delivered his bill to Adams & Dunn, for the balance of which this action is brought.

Mr. Atkinson having stated the case to the jury, called the plaintiff's sons, who proved the retainers and the work done, and also two solicitors, who proved the reasonableness of the bill.

The defendant Dunn produced his protection from the Insolvent Debtors' Court until November, but not having pleaded it according to the rules and practice of the Court, his Honour said he could not set that up.

Mr. Honyman said the defendant Adams contended, that, although he had signed the retainer, he understood from the plaintiffs that he was not to be held liable for the costs.

The learned Judge, in summing up, observed that the question for the jury to decide was, whether there was any separate agreement between the parties; if they were of opinion that they were jointly liable, they would give their judgment for the plaintiff; if there was a separate agreement as to Adams, for Adams only.

The jury immediately returned a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed; and his Honour granted costs of counsel, witnesses, &c.

Judgment accordingly.

BLOOMSBURY COUNTY COURT.—Oct. 31.

(Before D. D. HEATH, Esq., Judge).

Roome v. White.

This was a case of new trial granted to the plaintiff, against whom a judgment had been given, in an action brought by him against Mr. Walter White, solicitor, St Paul's Churchyard.

Mr. De la Mare, solicitor, was for the plaintiff.

It appeared that a builder named Plews got a cheque cashed at Mr. Wykes's, landlord of the King's Head, Hampstead-road. The cheque was for £10, drawn by the defendant, upon the Commercial Bank of London, and made payable to Mr. Lawrence, 36, Woburn-place. The cheque, after passing through several hands, was, by the plaintiff, presented at the bank, where it was marked "No effects." Roome then brought an action against the defendant, but not being able to produce the person from whom the barman of Mr. Wykes had received it, and it being positively sworn by defendant that the cheque in question had been paid by him to a Mr. Lawrence, who turned out to be Mr. Lawrence Levy, whose clerk, in going to get it cashed, had lost it. The plaintiff lost the cause. It now, however, was differently portrayed. Mr. Plews now swore that his attention was drawn to the case by seeing it reported in the newspapers, and that the cheque produced was the same cashed by Mr. Wykes, and also cashed by Lawrence Levy in a money transaction.

Mr. Slack, clerk at the Commercial Bank, deposed that no notice of a lost check of defendant's was received at their establishment, and at the time the one in question was dated defendant had no effects.

The defendant, Mr. Levy, and his (losing) clerk, not being in this instance in attendance, the former decision was revoked, and judgment given for plaintiff.

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner PERRY).

In re H. H. Statham.

The bankrupt was an attorney and money scrivener, at Liverpool. He applied on Monday the 26th ult. for his certificate. Mr. Norris represented the assignees. From the balance-sheet, it appeared that the bankrupt's liabilities were heavy. The Commissioner thought the justice of the case would be met by granting an immediate certificate of the second class.

CONVICTION UNDER THE FRAUDULENT TRUSTEES ACT.

At the quarter sessions for the borough of Leeds on Tuesday week, before Mr. T. F. Ellis, the Recorder, Benjamin Hinchliffe, aged 39, clothier and commission agent, Pudsey, was charged with stealing nineteen ends of cloth, the property of James Hare, at Leeds, on the 19th of September. There was also a count charging the prisoner with obtaining the goods by fraudulent pretences. The indictment was laid under the Fraudulent Trustees Act, and the case excited great attention. The facts of the case, as stated on the part of the prosecution by Mr. Maude, were these:—In June or July, 1856, Messrs. Atkinson & Brush, cloth merchants, of Leeds, entered into arrangements with the prisoner to receive into their warehouse any quantity of cloth which he might send to finish, and to become purchasers if the goods and price suited them, otherwise the goods to be returned to the prisoner. In the first instance they advanced him money on account of the goods so left with them; but if they were returned, the prisoner was charged with the cost of finishing, and required to repay the money advanced, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. Several transactions took place under this arrangement, and on the 29th of August last the prisoner went to the prosecutor, who was a manufacturer at Eccleshill, and said he had an order from Messrs. Atkinson & Brush (successors to Messrs. Henry & Co.) for 100 ends of hair lists, at 6*s.* 7*d.* per yard, which he could not supply, and asked him (the prosecutor) if he could furnish them. Hare replied that he could. The prisoner examined the ends, and ordered them to be sent to Messrs. Atkinson & Brush's warehouse, the price to be 6*s.* 7*d.* per yard. They were sent accordingly, and were afterwards seen in the possession of Messrs. Atkinson & Brush, by Hare, who, however, subsequently learned that the prisoner had obtained back the goods, and otherwise disposed of them. The prosecutor would tell the jury that this was the first transaction he had with the prisoner, that he delivered the goods to the prisoner as a commission agent, and that he parted with them on the specific understanding that they were sold to Messrs. Atkinson & Brush, and that they were the parties who would be liable for the debt. The prisoner would collect the money, but would have nothing more to do with it beyond receiving his commission. In consequence of something which subsequently transpired, the prisoner was taken into custody on the 22nd of September, and on the 23rd the prosecutor went to Atkinson & Brush's, but could learn nothing of the nineteen ends. The prosecutor subsequently ascertained that the goods were disposed of at prices much below their value. They would see that the prisoner got these goods in the character of a commission agent or bailee for a specific purpose, representing, in the first instance, that they were for Atkinson & Brush, and that he then dealt with them as his own property, selling them to other persons than those for whom he received them, and for a price less than he was authorised to take, and, in doing so, he (Mr. Maude) should contend that the prisoner brought himself under the provisions of the Fraudulent Trustees Act. One section of that statute provided that any person, being a bailee of any property, who should fradulently appropriate such property to his own use, though he did not break bulk, shall be guilty of larceny.

The evidence bore out the statement for the prosecution.

Mr. Blanshard addressed the jury on behalf of the prisoner. He said, that, if the Fraudulent Trustees Act was to be applied in such cases as these, there was not a commission agent in Leeds who would escape, and maintained that the object of the section which had been quoted was to do away with the gross anomaly which had previously existed, under which a bailee (a person intrusted with the custody of property) appropriating property was not amenable to the criminal law, unless he broke what was technically called "bulk." He submitted that there was no breaking bulk in this case, each transaction being distinct and open, and he therefore maintained that the offence was not one which came within the provision of this section.

The RECORDER then proceeded to sum up.—With reference to the law, he told the jury that the only point for them to decide was whether the prisoner appropriated the property to his own use. If they were satisfied that he did, then the offence would come under the section of the Fraudulent Trustees Act which had been quoted.

The jury, after an hour's deliberation, returned a verdict of "Guilty," and the prisoner was sentenced to be imprisoned for eight months, with hard labour.

JUDGE OF THE COURTS OF PROBATE AND DIVORCE.

Under two Acts of last session, a judge is to be appointed of the Court of Probate who is to be also Judge Ordinary (i. e., working judge) of the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. The new judge is to take rank with the puisne judges of the superior courts of common law, and to receive a yearly salary of £4,000. On the first vacancy that makes such an arrangement possible, the three offices of judge of the Probate Court, judge ordinary of the Matrimonial and Divorce Court, and judge of the Admiralty Court are to be united in the same functionary. When this occurs the salary is to be raised to £5,000 a year.

The new jurisdiction cannot commence, at the earliest, before the 1st of next January: it being provided by the 2nd clause of both Acts, that they shall "come into operation on such day, not sooner than the 1st day of January, A.D. 1858, as her Majesty shall by Order in Council appoint, provided that such order be made one month at least previously to the day so appointed."

It is generally understood that Mr. Justice Cresswell is to be the judge of the New Court. This appointment will make a vacancy on the bench of the Court of Common Pleas, and Westminster Hall is already full of rumours as to the mode in which it is likely to be filled up. The names of Mr. Serjeant Shee, Mr. Serjeant Byles, and Mr. Hugh Hill, Q.C., are amongst those most prominently put forward; it is also rumoured that Sir H. S. Keating, the present Solicitor-General, may possibly put in a claim for the vacant seat. It is perhaps sufficient to remark, with regard to all these rumours, that at present there is no absolute vacancy nor indeed any likelihood of a change, at all events, during the course of the present term. The lawyers have very possibly some couple of months of gossip and speculation before them ere doubt on this point, can be changed into certainty.—Daily News.

Mr. Justice Cresswell will be the judge of the Court of Probate and Divorce, but inasmuch as the acts by which the new court is created do not come into operation before the commencement of the next year, no actual appointment can take place immediately. As yet, therefore, there is no vacancy among the judges of the Court of Common Pleas, and the statements made by some journals as to the probable successor of Mr. Justice Cresswell in that court are, to say the least, premature.—Globe.

The fact of Mr. Justice Cresswell having been appointed the judge of the New Court of Probate is confirmed by the learned judge having just appointed his cousin, Mr. Robert Nathaniel Cresswell, barrister-at-law, his secretary. Mr. Keating, the Solicitor-General, will be the new common law judge, but at present it is undecided who shall be the new Solicitor-General. —Standard.

There are all sorts of rumours afloat in legal circles in reference to the judicial changes which may be expected. It has been very well known for some months past that Mr. Justice Coleridge has been anxious to retire from the puisne judgeship in the Court of Queen's Bench, and take the position to which he has become entitled from length of service. In the event of his retirement, his seat will, in all probability, be accepted by Sir H. S. Keating, the Solicitor-General. In the case of his declining it, Mr. Welsby, the Recorder of Chester, will most likely receive an offer of advancement from the Government. Opinion seems to be very much divided as to the judge of the New Court of Probate. It is well known that in the first instance it was offered to Mr. Justice Erle, who declined it, and afterwards to Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams, who also refused the honour. It is currently reported that during the last few days it has been offered to Sir John Dodson, the Dean of the Court of Arches. In the event of Sir John's acceptance of the dignity there will be no legal vacancy in Westminster-hall to excite the hopes of gentlemen aspiring to the judicial Bench.—Weekly Dispatch.

THE LOCAL COURTS OF UPPER CANADA.

We ventured to predict, a year since, that, within a shor space of time, our local courts would be self-supporting; and we are now able to state, as a fact, that they are not only self-supporting, but give a large surplus. The judges and officers of the Upper Canada County and Division Courts do not draw one penny from the General Revenue Fund. The fund necessary to supply these institutions is wholly supplied from small fees collected from suitors in the courts. The institution of a system of local courts, presided over by trained men as judges, and acting under a uniform procedure, is due to the Honourable Mr. Draper. At first it was regarded with some jealousy, as an experiment of doubtful expediency, and for a time perhaps even the author of the measure himself was doubtful as to the result. The public, however, soon discovered the advantage of trained professional men as judges; and as the benefits of cheap and speedy justice administered in each county and township on settled principles were felt, the Division Courts and County Courts grew in favour. As the system advanced in public confidence and esteem, an extension of it was asked; and the local courts, at first very limited in powers, have now a most extensive jurisdiction. Although for some years the local courts drew from two to three thousand pounds per annum from the General Revenue, they are now paying institutions. In 1851 there was a deficiency in the fees collected in local courts, for the half-year ending 30th June, of 911*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.*, or in other words there was that amount taken from the general revenue of the country to pay the necessary disbursements on account of the courts—that is, an amount equal to about £2,000 for the whole year (1851). For the half year ending 30th June last, there is a surplus, after paying all expenses, of between £900 and £1,000; and at the close of this year the province will have drawn a revenue from the local courts of about £2,000. This is the aggregate. Several of the smaller counties do not, as might be expected, produce sufficient fees to pay their court establishments; while others, larger and more populous, give a considerable overplus. In the twenty counties in which there is a deficiency, the aggregate is 1,637*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.* for the last half-year. In the eleven counties exhibiting a surplus, the aggregate is 2,539*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* for the same period. The whole charge on the fee fund connected with the maintenance of the County and Division Courts is under £19,000 for the whole of the year. The net fees received the last half-year considerably exceed £10,000. These facts and figures afford material for reflection and observation; at present we merely refer to them as showing that the local courts are more than self-supporting, and that this important branch of the public service in Upper Canada does not cost the province one shilling to maintain. —Abridged from the Canada Law Journal.

Mr. Sergeant Kinglake, M.P. for Rochester, and Recorder of Bristol, was sworn in as magistrate of Somersetshire, at the late Quarter Sessions for that county.

The Queen has to appointed Mr. Charles Fisher to be Attorney General for the Province of New Brunswick.

At the sitting of the Court on Monday Mr. Ogle was called upon to take his seat as Tubman, he having been appointed to that ancient and honourable office, vacated by the elevation oi Mr. Lush to the dignity of Queen's Counsel.

The failure of Messrs Slade & Vining, solicitors, of Yeovil, is attributed to the non-success of some building speculations in London. Mr. Vining is one of the shareholders in the Royal Surrey Gardens Company.

St. Barbe Sladen, 14, Parliament-street, Westminster, Gent., has been appointed by the Supreme Court of Victoria a Commissioner of that Court for taking affidavits in England.—London Gazette.

In the Court of Bankruptcy a proclamation of outlawry was made on Tuesday against Thomas Dean, of Barnes, and King's Bench-walk, Temple, solicitor, who absconded after committing forgeries to a large amount.

Mr. Wordsworth, Mr. Locke, Mr. Skinner, Mr. Huddleston, Mr. Lush, Mr. Monk, Mr. Forsyth, and Mr. Manisty having been appointed of her Majesty's counsel, and Mr. Pigott having received a patent of precedence, were called within the Bar on Monday, and took their places accordingly.

In the session 1854-55 two election petitions were disposed of by the House of Commons (including those withdrawn); in 1856, two also; in the first session of 1857, three; and in the second session (after the general election), about 50. During the second session of 1857 nine members were unseated, chiefly for bribery, and the writs for two places were suspended. Out of 74 petitions presented, 33 were withdrawn.

We hear that a work very interesting to the friends of law reform, is on the eve of publication, by the excellent judge of our county court, Sir Eardly Wilmot, Bart. It contains, we understand, an analysis of the numerous Acts of Parliament introduced, and successively carried, by Lord Brougham, for the reform of our laws, civil as well as criminal, accompanied by notes and comments of the author.—Bristol Mirror.

In the Court of Queen's Bench on Monday, Mr. Garth said he was instructed by the Incorporated Law Society to move for a rule calling upon a person of the name of John Shattock, an attorney, to show cause why he should not be struck off the rolls for misconduct. Shattock was convicted of forgery at the last Liverpool assizes, and was now undergoing the punishment of three years penal servitude.—The rule was granted.

Thursday, the 12th instant, has been appointed for the nomination of gentlemen to serve the office of sheriffs for England and Wales during the next year. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, the President of the Council, and other ministers of state will attend, and the whole of the judges will be present for the purpose of submitting their nominations for her Majesty's selection and approval. The proceedings will take place in the Court of Exchequer, Westminster Hall.

The auditor's statements of the payments made in respect of the election for South Durham has been published. The two seats have cost upwards of £14,000, towards which the sitting members, Lord Harry Vane and Mr. Pease, contribute £8,000, and Mr. Farrer, the defeated candidate, £6,396. In one district, Mr. Farrer's "professional" expenses were equal to about 30*s.* on each vote polled; and throughout the whole division he paid his solicitors an average of 1*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* per vote. Lord Harry paid his lawyers at the rate of 16*s.* 4*d.* per vote; and Mr. Pease 5*s.* In hotel and miscellaneous charges, too, Mr. Farrer holds first place; his expenses under this head being £1,991; whilst those of Lord Harry Vane were £1,101; and Mr. Pease's £553.

The French Tribunals.

A very interesting case to the commercial world was raised before the Tribunal of Commerce on Monday, the 2nd instant. An action was brought by Messrs. Speilman & Co., the well-known money changers of the Rue Vivienne, against the Lyons Railway Company, to obtain payment of 739 francs 50 cents., the amount of seventeen coupons of interest on shares. The Lyons Railway Company refused to pay these coupons, because they had been lost by a M. Leroy, who, on discovery of his loss, advertised the company, and put in an opposition to their payment. On the part of the plaintiffs it was urged that they had purchased the coupons in the regular course of business, and they had no reason to suppose that they had been dishonestly obtained by the person who had sold them. It was also the custom of the trade to receive coupons like bank notes, without requiring the name and address of the person presenting them. The Tribunal condemned the company to pay Messrs. Speilman, the plaintiffs in the action, the sum claimed. M. Leroy then brought an action against the company for the amount of his loss. The facts were the same as those disclosed in the preceding case. The Tribunal rejected the claim, and gave a decision in favour of the defendants.

The Tribunal of Correctional Police has been occupied for several days in investigating the details of some wholesale forgeries lately perpetrated. The facts, as far as they have been elicited, are these:—A man, one day last week, presented at the bank of Messrs. de Rothschild a bill for 450 francs, bearing the acceptance of Messrs. B., of Geneva, with whom the bank is in the habit of transacting business. The cashier found that no notice of the drawing of the bill had been forwarded, and, on examining the bill closely, he became convinced that it was a forgery. The man was carried before the commissary of police of the district, and to him he stated that he had merely presented the bill for his brother, a respectable wine-shopkeeper of the Boulevard de Strasbourg. This turned out to be true. The wine-shopkeeper was then sent for. He said that he had received the bill from a customer in payment of a debt of fifty francs, and he had given him 400 francs change. The customer, in his turn, stated that he had received it from one M——, in part payment of the purchase of the good-will of a wholesale wine business, which that person had purchased from him. M—— was then sought for, but could not be found. Further inquiries made respecting him led to the discovery that he was a notorious swindler of Geneva, who had lately obtained supplies of goods on the false pretext that he was about to establish himself in business, and that he was not only to have remitted to him a sum of 30,000 francs from Geneva, but that he held bills on Messrs. de Rothschild amounting to between 35,000 and 40,000 francs. Among other things it appeared that this dexterous swindler had bargained with a tradeswoman in the Rue Neuve St. Eustache to purchase the good-will of her business. On the day fixed for the payment of the money he told her that he had been disappointed in the receipt of a sum of 30,000 francs, which he expected, but that it would be sure to arrive in a few days. On these pretences he prevailed on her to lend him a sum of 500 francs, with which he decamped and has not since been heard of.

The article in the penal code which provides for the punishment of the crime of adultery is by no means allowed to remain a dead letter on the statute book. A case which came last week before the Tribunal of Correctional Police forms a good illustration of this. It is rendered more interesting by the rather novel plea which the guilty parties urged in mitigation of punishment. The defendants were both young, and belonged to the middle class of society. There was no attempt to deny their guilt, which, indeed, was fully proved. In extenuation of their offence it was stated, that some years ago they had conceived a violent passion for each other, and were engaged to be married, but that family misfortunes prevented their union, and that the woman married another; that after a while they again met, and, their passion reviving, the woman, who was not happy with her husband, left him to join her lover, and had ever since lived with the latter, having a child by him. The Tribunal, unmoved by this romance in real life, condemned the woman to six months' imprisonment, and the man to three. The latter was also fined in the sum of one hundred francs.

A double murder was committed on Monday, the 2nd instant, in the house No. 59, Faubourg St. Antoine, Paris, which is occupied by a number of small manufacturers and tradesmen, and during the day the house is frequented by very many persons who have business relations with its different occupants. Among them was a man named Butel, a hawker of jewellery, who had resided there for about four years with a woman named Eugénie Léotard. These two have been the victims of this horrible crime. Butel has two illegitimate children, one of whom, aged thirteen, was apprenticed in the neighbourhood, and the other, some years younger, lived at home. In the morning, about seven o'clock, the eldest boy, who had got a holiday, came home to spend the day with his father. He knocked several times at the door, and called to his father by name, but without receiving any answer. Surprised at finding no one at home at that early hour, the boy went to speak to the porter, by whom he was assured that his father had not gone out. He then went up again, and on the stairs leading from the third to the fourth floor, where his father resided, met two men coming rapidly down. On reaching the apartment of his parent he found the door ajar, and was horror-struck at finding his father lying dead on the floor, having only his shirt and trousers on, and with a complete pool of blood round him, which had flowed from two large gashes on the head. The woman was lying on the bed, also weltering in blood. The cries of the boy brought a number of the people in the house to the spot. Some of them said they had heard a noise in the room a short time before, but imagined that it was only a domestic squabble, to which they had been accustomed, and they therefore took no notice of it. Information was immediately sent to the commissary of police, and a rigid investigation has been commenced. It is supposed that the murder has been committed from motives of personal vengeance, as no robbery appears to have taken place; and, from the state of the dress of Butel, it is thought that the murderers came while he was in bed, on pretence of wanting to buy some of his merchandise, and that he hastily got up and slipped on his trousers.

M. Lassagne, President of the Court of Cassation, one of the highest judicial functionaries in France, died a few days ago in Rome, at the advanced age of 88. He has been interred beeween Poussin and Claude Gelée, better known in this country as Claude Lorraine, to whom M. de Chateaubriand, on the occasion of his second embassy, rather tardily erected a monument. The son of M. Lassagne is advocate auditor in the Chancery of France. To him is attributed the celebrated memoir of M. le Comte de Rayneval.

CAP. LXXVII.—An Act to amend the Law relating to Probates and Letters of Administration in England.

The first thing which requires notice respecting this Act is, that it is not in operation; and that, at present, it seems quite uncertain when it will become so. By the 1st section, it is said, that, "except where otherwise specially provided," it is to come into operation on such day, not sooner than January 1, 1858, as shall be appointed by Order in Council, provided that such order shall be made one month, at least, previously to the day so to be appointed. The Act, therefore, cannot come into operation, generally, even on the 1st of January next, unless an Order in Council shall issue for that purpose on or before the 1st December next; and there do not appear to be any special provisions modifying this as to certain parts of the Act, notwithstanding the words above cited.

It may be a convenient course to separate this long and most important statute, into such parts as present themselves prominently for consideration in endeavouring to acquire an accurate conception of the whole; and of each of these some account shall be given. But to treat this statute in detail would not only require a volume to itself, but (no rules or orders having been promulgated respecting it) any such investigation would be premature, and probably of little utility. The Act under discussion, therefore, may properly be considered under the following divisions, independently of certain miscellaneous provisions which do not affect its general scope and design:—

I. As to its effect on existing courts and jurisdictions. II. As to the constitution of the new Court of Probate. III. As to those who may practise therein. IV. As to the course of procedure, in matters and causes testamentary, to be adopted—1, In the district registries; 2, in the county court; 3, in the Court of Probate itself. V. As to appeals. And of these in their order.

I.—As to the Effect of the Act under Discussion on existing Courts and Jurisdictions.

By ss. 3 and 4, the whole of the jurisdiction and authority of all courts and jurisdictions whatever in England, in relation to the grant or revocation of probate of wills and letters of administration of the effects of deceased persons, is transferred from such courts and persons, respectively, to the Crown; and jurisdiction and authority to grant or revoke the same, and to hear and determine all questions relating to matters and causes testamentary, is given to be exercised, in the name of the Crown, in a Court of Probate to be held in London or Middlesex, as her Majesty in Council shall from time to time appoint.

By s. 23, no suits for legacies or for the distribution of residues are henceforth to be entertained by any court or person whose jurisdiction as to matters and causes testamentary is abolished by the Act under discussion. But the jurisdiction in regard to such suits is not transferred to the Court of Probate. And hence such suits can henceforth only be entertained in the Court of Chancery; or (to the extent of £50), in the county court for the district in which the deceased resided at the time of death.

By ss. 89, 90, the acting judge, registrar, or other person with jurisdiction as to grant of probate or administration before the commencement of the Act under discussion, or having the custody of the documents or papers belonging to the court or person with such jurisdiction, is, on receiving a requisition for that purpose from a registrar under the seal of the Court of Probate, to transmit (under a penalty) all the documents and papers in his possession or control, relating to matters or causes testamentary, to be deposited and arranged in the district or principal registry, as the case may require.

By ss. 116—118, power is given to the College of Doctors-of-Law, incorporated 22nd June, 8th Geo. 3, to dispose of their real and personal estate, and to lay out and apply the income for the benefit of the college or its members; and also to surrender their charter to the Crown, after a resolution to that effect shall have been come to by the majority; and power is given to the Treasury, out of moneys to be provided by Parliament, to purchase or provide, if necessary, suitable buildings for the court and registries—the present building used as the public registry of the Prerogative Court being (by s. 108) vested in the registrars for the time being of the Court of Probate.

II.—As to the Constitution of the new Court of Probate.

By ss. 5—9, the Court of Probate is to have a single judge (holding office during good behaviour), being, or having been, an advocate of ten, or a barrister of fifteen, years standing, and with a salary of £4,000 a year. And by s. 23, the court is to be a Court of Record, and is to have the same power, and its grants and orders the same effect, throughout all England (and in relation to the personal estate in all parts of England of deceased persons) as the Prerogative Court has hitherto had in the province of Canterbury, and in relation to those matters and causes testamentary and those effects of deceased persons, hitherto within the jurisdiction of the said Prerogative Court; and all the duties of ordinaries generally, or of the said Prerogative Court, in respect of probates, administrations, or matters or causes testamentary, within their respective jurisdictions, are to be performed by the Court of Probate, with the exception (above noticed) as to suits for legacies and residues.

Belonging to this Court of Probate, there is to be a principal registry; and also district registries, one for each of the several districts scheduled to the Act: and each of such registries are to be presided over by registrars or a registrar, and is to have proper clerks and officers. The registrars are to hold their offices during good behaviour, and the other officers at the pleasure of the judge of the Probate Court and the Lord Chancellor; and both registrars and officers are to be, as the general rule, appointed by the judge.

Ancillary to the Court of Probate, in matters coming within the contentious jurisdiction and authority of the court, in reference to the grant or revocation of probate or administration, are the different district county courts already established. For with regard to those cases in which the personal estate of the deceased is under £200 at the time of death, or the real property under £300, the judge of the district county court may (where any contentious matter arises) make a decree for grant or revocation of probate or administration; but his decree is subject to appeal to the Court of Probate (s. 58); and a recourse for such grant need never be made to a district registry, or through any county court, but application may, in all cases, be made through the principal registry of the Court of Probate, subject, however, to this qualification—viz. that if any contentious matter arise, in respect of which the county court would otherwise have had jurisdiction, the judge of the Court of Probate may send the cause to the county court, to be proceeded with there. It is not added in the Act, but it is presumed, that, in such a case (as well as where the application for a grant is through the county court in the first instance), there will be an appeal (under s. 58) from the county court judge's decision to that of the Court of Probate.

III.—As to those who may practise in the Court of Probate.

By ss. 40, 41, all persons who, on or before the 25th Aug., 1857, had been admitted advocates in any of the ecclesiastical courts, may practise as advocates or counsel in all matters and causes whatsoever in the Court of Probate, and in any of her Majesty's courts of law and equity in England; with the same eligibility to appointments under Acts of Parliament, or otherwise, as if they had been duly called to the degree of barrister on the day when they were respectively admitted as advocates: and all serjeants and barristers shall be entitled to practise as advocates or counsel in all contentious matters and causes in the said court. It will be noticed here, that, though advocates may practise in the Court of Probate in all matters, the right of serjeants and barristers to practise therein is confined to contentious proceedings.

By ss. 42, 43, every person who, on the said 25th Aug., was actually admitted and practising as a proctor at Doctors' Commons, the Prerogative Court of York, or in any diocesan or any archidiaconal court (having previously served under articles either to an attorney or proctor), may, on application at any time before 25th Aug., 1858, be admitted a proctor of the Court of Probate without payment of any fee or stamp duty.

It is to be noticed that this time of limitation has reference to the time the Act passed, not to that at which it is to come into operation.

By s. 43, every person who, at the time of the commencement of the Act under discussion, was acting registrar or deputy-registrar in any ecclesiastical court, or was so admitted and practising as a proctor in Doctors' Commons, or in any ecclesiastical court in England or Wales, may, at any time before the 25th Aug., 1858, and without fee or stamp duty, be admitted a solicitor of the Court of Chancery, and afterwards an attorney of the superior courts. It is to be noticed that this time of limitation begins to run from the time the Act comes into operation, not from when it passed.

By s. 44, every person who, at the same time as mentioned in the preceding section, was serving as articled clerk to a proctor entitled to take him as such, may become a solicitor, and afterwards an attorney, in the same manner, and on the same conditions, as if, before that date, he had been duly articled to a solicitor or attorney.

By s. 45, all solicitors and attorneys-at-law may practise in the Court of Probate; and the laws and statutes now in force concerning solicitors and attorneys shall extend to solicitors and ttorneys practising in the said court; and the commissioners r taking oaths in the High Court of Chancery shall be comissioners for taking oaths in the Court of Probate.

In reference to this last clause, notice should also be taken of the 27th section, enabling oaths to be administered by the registrars and district registrars; by persons acting as surrogates at the time the Act comes into operation; and by any other persons appointed for the purpose from time to time by the Judge of the Court of Probate under the seal of the court. Such surrogates and persons so appointed are also to have full power "to perform such other duties in reference to matters and causes testamentary as may be assigned to them from time to time by the rules and orders" made under the Act under discussion. It is not easy to say to what duties this vague provision is intended to refer. It may be remarked, also, that no mention appears to be made as to the commissioners appointed to take oaths by the judges of the superior courts of law under the Act of Charles II.

IV.—As to the Procedure.

1. In the District Registries.—By s. 46, probate of a will or letters of administration may, on application for that purpose to the district registry, be granted in common form by the district registrar, in the name of the Court of Probate, and under the district seal, on (it is presumed, production of a will properly executed, and on) affidavit that the testator or intestate, at the time of death, had a fixed place of abode within the district; and such probate or letters of administration shall have effect over the personal estate of the deceased in all parts of England. By s. 49, notice of application of such grant is, by the next post, to be transmitted by the district registrar to the principal registry, specifying the name and description or addition of the testator or intestate, the place of his abode, and the date of his death, and such other particulars as may be hereafter directed by rule or order; and the district registrar is to withhold the grant prayed for, until he shall have received a certificate from the principal registry that no other application in respect of the goods of the same deceased person appears to have been made. And by s. 50, the district registrar, in all cases of doubt, is to transmit a statement of the matter in question to the registrars of the Court of Probate, who shall obtain the directions of the judge relative thereto. Moreover, every month, at the least, a list of all the grants made is (by s. 51) to be forwarded by the district registrar to the registrars of the Court of Probate. But the original wills are to be filed and preserved by the district registrar in a public registry to be provided for the district.

Caveats against the grant of probates or administration may, by s. 53, be lodged in any district registry (as well as in the principal registry), to correspond, in regard to the practice and procedure thereunder, with the caveats now in use in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury (as to which see Coote's Pr. p. 439); and on a caveat being entered in the principal registry, notice thereof is to be sent to the district registrar, and vice versâ.

2. In the County Court.—On a decree being made by a judge of the county court for grant or revocation of probate or administration, the registrar of the county court is (by s. 55) to transmit to the district registrar a certificate, under the county court seal, of such decree having been made; whereupon probate or administration, in compliance with such decree, is to be issued from, or recalled or varied by, the district registry. And by s. 56, the judge of the county court—subject to the rules and orders made under the Act under discussion—is to have all the jurisdiction, power, and authority to decide any disputed question, and enforce his judgment and orders in relation thereto, as in an ordinary action in the county court.

3. In the Court of Probate itself.—The practice in the principal registry with regard to the proceeding to obtain grant of probate or administration where no contentious matter arises, will be, it may be presumed, similar to that chalked out by the Act under discussion for obtaining such grant through a district registry. But the chief indication of the general practice which is to obtain in the Court of Probate is, that, by the 29th section of the Act under discussion, it is declared that, except where otherwise thereby provided, or by the rules or orders to be from time to time made thereunder, such practice is to be, so far as the circumstances of the case will admit, according to the present practice in the Prerogative Court. This practice, so far as causes testamentary are concerned, exclusive of suits for legacies and for distribution, which (as before observed) must for the future be proceeded with only in the Court of Chancery, is fully detailed in Coote's Practice, pp. 439—674. By the 30th section, however, of the Act under discussion, it is further provided, that "to the intent and end that the procedure and practice of the court may be of the most simple and expeditious character," the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench (or any one of the judges of the superior courts of law to be by him named), and the judge of the Prerogative Court, may make rules and orders for regulating the procedure and practice of the court and the duties of the registrars, district registrars, and other officers; and for determining what shall be deemed contentious and what non-contentious business; and (subject to the provisions of the Act under discussion) for fixing the time and manner of appeals; and generally for carrying the provisions of the Act under discussion into effect.

There are, however, a variety of matters on which the Act under discussion makes express provision as to the procedure to be adopted. Thus, by s. 31, the witnesses and parties in all contentious matters, where their attendance can be had, are to be examined orally, by or before the judge, in open court; liberty being, at the same time, reserved to the parties to verify their cases by affidavit; by s. 33, the rules of evidence in the superior courts of common law are to be applicable and observed in the trial of all questions of fact; and by ss. 35—38, such questions may be tried by a jury before the Court of Probate itself, or may be sent to be so tried, in the form of an issue, to any of the superior courts of law.

V.—As to Appeals.

In cases decided by the judge of a county court, the party dissatisfied with the determination of such judge in point of law, or upon the admission or rejection of any evidence in any matter or cause under the Act under discussion, may (by s. 58) appeal from the same to the Court of Probate; and the decision of that Court shall be final.

And, moreover, any person considering himself aggrieved by any final or interlocutory decree or order of the Court of Probate (other, it may be presumed, than any decree or order made on an appeal from the determination of a county court judge), may (by s. 39) appeal therefrom to the House of Lords. There is, however, a proviso, on the one hand, that no appeal from any interlocutory order shall be so made without leave of the Court of Probate itself; and, on the other, that, on the hearing of an appeal from any final decree, all interlocutory orders complained of shall be considered as under appeal, as well as the final decree.

Recent Decisions in Chancery.

JUS QUÆSITUM TERTIO.

Peddie v. Brown, 5 W. R. 871; Finnie v. The Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company, House of Lords, 13th August, 1857.

In these two appeals from decisions of the Court of Session in Scotland, the doctrine of the jus tertii was very much discussed. It is thus stated by Lord Stair, in his Instituts. (p. 95): "When parties contract, if there be any article in favour of a third party at any time, est jus quæsitum tertio, which cannot be recalled by either or both of the contractors; but he may compel either of them to exhibit the contract, and thereupon the obliged may be compelled to perform." Lord Stair takes this definition from Molina, but he cites several cases decided in the Scotch Courts to show that it is a fair statement of the law of Scotland. Thus we find cases where a gratuitous promise made in favour of a third party who was not present, and never accepted, was enforced against the promisor. In these cases, however, the promise was not dependent upon acceptance, nor did it require anything to be done on the part of him to whom it was made. In Warnoch v. Murdoch, Fac. Dec. A.D. 1759, No. 156, a man, in his marriage contract with his intended wife, contracted for the payment to her of an annuity after his death; but in case his step-mother should survive him his wife being then alive, she and her annuity were to be burdened with the payment of £12 a year (part of the said annuity) to the step-mother. After the marriage, the husband revoked by deed the gift to his step-mother; and she and the wife having both survived, the wife refused to pay the £12 annuity; whereupon the step-mother brought her action, and obtained judgment. The grounds upon which this judgment proceeded are not stated in the report, but the arguments on both sides appear to have been limited to the question of jus tertii. In Peddie v. Brown, the plaintiff had granted a lease of a colliery for nineteen years to the defendant. Subsequently, a railway was projected, which it was proposed should go through the land in question. On its being opposed by the defendant, an agreement was entered into between him and the company, whereby the company undertook to make a branch line to the colliery; but subsequent litigation having arisen between the parties, it was finally arranged to rescind this agreement, in consideration of which the company undertook to pay the defendant £5,000. In these transactions no reference was made to the plaintiff or his interest; and the defendant, having received the £5,000, two years afterwards surrendered the residue of the term, as he was entitled to do under a clause in the lease giving him an option to do so in an event which had happened. The plaintiff, by his action, claimed to have such part of the £5,000 as might be proportional to the unexpired portion of the lease, or, at all events, as much as should be necessary for the construction of the connecting line of railway. The House of Lords decided against the plaintiff, on the ground that there was neither a contract under which he could derive a right, nor was there a jus quæsitum tertio in him. It was contended for the plaintiff, that, even upon the principles of English law, he was entitled so to participate in the consideration money. The authority relied upon to support this contention was Synnot v. Simpson (5 H. L. Cas. 121), which, inasmuch as it relates to the rights of a bond creditor under a deed providing for the payment of debts, had little application to the present case. The fact that no other case on this point was cited from our Reports, shows that the plaintiff's argument was not maintainable as English law; though there is no question, that, in this country, under some contracts, a right may be acquired by persons who are not named parties. Indeed, by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 5, it is enacted, that, under an indenture executed after 1st October, 1845, an immediate estate or interest in hereditaments, and the benefit of a condition or covenant respecting any hereditaments, may be taken, although the taker thereof be not named a party to the indenture. This enactment, however, does not affect any question of jus tertii, so as to interfere with the doctrine of our courts as to volunteers. As to the Scotch doctrine, the two cases named above may be said to establish these propositions:—1st, The jus quæsitum must not be merely a jus in which the tertius is interested, but it must be a jus intended to be beneficial to the tertius; an accidental benefit, or one which might be shared in common with the public generally, would, therefore, not constitute such a right; and, 2ndly, though the tertius need not be named in the contract, he must be sufficiently described or pointed out to enable him to sue. In Finnie v. The Glasgow &c. Co., Lord Wensleydale thus describes the doctrine of jus tertii:—"Where there is an express stipulation in a contract in favour of any one, it is in effect an agreement between the parties that the stipulation shall be performed with him; and though he is not a party to the agreement, nor at any time assenting to it, he may afterwards adopt the agreement, and sue upon it." That this is very different from our English notions of law, is sufficiently manifest from what Lord St. Leonards says in Synnot v. Simpson—viz. "that a trust created even for creditors without bargain or communication with them cannot be enforced by them." In the judgments of the Lord Chancellor and Lord Wensleydale in both the above-named cases, it is not clearly stated how far their Lordships proceeded upon the principles of the Scotch law only, nor does it appear to what extent they consider that our English law recognises the jus tertii.

CHAMPERTY—PURCHASES BY SOLICITORS FROM THEIR CLIENTS.

Knight v. Bowyer, 6 W. R.

Among a multitude of other defences which were set up in this most ponderous suit, the old doctrine of champerty was once more relied on, to be once more evaded, on the strength of the authorities which have practically reduced its operation to a nullity. In the old times, when "the perfection of reason" laid it down that choses in action were not assignable, the iniquity of the offence of champerty was likely enough to strike the imagination of legislators and judges; but now that every created thing, or chance of a thing, is bought and sold, valued and mortgaged, it is no wonder that the respectable horror once entertained of buying an estate the title to which was in dispute should have gradually melted away, until "champerty" has come to mean little more than a forlorn hope, to be pleaded when there is no other answer to be given to a bill. The present position of the doctrine is rather anomalous. Lord Eldon, in Wood v. Downes (18 Ves. 120), most distinctly recognised the principle, and to some extent acted on it, although other considerations entered into that case, which really was, what the present was erroneously supposed to be, that of a purchase by a solicitor from his client. In Harrington v. Long (2 My. & K. 590) Sir John Leach most carefully recorded his approval of the broad doctrine, at the same time that he held that it did not constitute maintenance to assign the benefit of a suit, unless it were made a condition that the assignee should prosecute it. This subtle distinction at once relieved all the ordinary cases of the assignment of property in litigation from the effect of the doctrines of maintenance and champerty; and this remains, and is likely to remain, the culminating authority on the subject. Practically, champerty is a dead letter; and though the principle is always stoutly asserted by the Court, the application almost always happens to fail. It is just possible for an unlucky purchaser to continue to bring himself so exactly within the terms of the received definitions as to be past help even from a willing tribunal; but Knight v. Bowyer, though it in no way goes beyond the law of Harrington v. Long, and does not at all impeach the general doctrine (which, perhaps, could not well be done, as it is partly founded on statute), nevertheless shows that the purchase of litigated property will not very easily be construed to amount to champerty. The facts on this point were, that the creditors of Sir George Bowyer—some holding judgments, others annuities, and so on—had been engaged for some thirty years in litigation, intended to establish their respective rights to the property. Very low down in the list came three annuitants; and the solicitors of one of them bought up the interest, not of their own client, but of the other two, who were unwilling themselves to join in new proceedings, which had become necessary if their claim was to be pushed on. This, it was contended, amounted to champerty, it being the purchase of an interest in property which was already the subject of one suit, and about which it was intended to carry on another. No one affected to doubt that the purchase was made for the express purpose of asserting by legal means the rights which the original holders despaired of enforcing, and no very intelligible explanation was given of the difference between such a transaction and those which were formerly thought so objectionable when they were denounced as maintenance and champerty. But the Master of the Rolls held by Harrington v. Long; and, while it was impossible to say why the real plaintiffs had not been guilty of champerty, it was equally clear that Harrington v. Long, and many other cases, were distinct authorities in their favour. The result seems almost to be, that champerty is a vital and subsisting doctrine which never has any application to any particular case—which is, perhaps, the next best thing to a repeal of all the statutes and a reversal of all the judgments on which the ancient idea is founded.

Another point which was raised in the defence was, that the purchase was by a solicitor from his client. This, as we have stated, proved to be a mistake, but not before the argument had elicited from the Bench the express dictum that an objection of this kind is one which it is not competent for any one but the client himself to take.

ANNUAL REGISTRATION OF ATTORNEYS.

The Forms of Declaration, under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, may be had on application at the Office of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane.

The members of the profession are requested to be particular in filling them up, either by themselves, their partners, or their London agents, to send them to the office on as early a day as possible, and to attend to the following

REGULATIONS:

1. No declaration can be acted upon which does not contain all the particulars required by the Act of Parliament.

2. Every declaration must be delivered at the office six days before a certificate can be granted.

3. No certificate will be delivered out till Friday, Nov. 20.

4. In the first six days, commencing on Nov. 20, certificates will be delivered only to such London agents as shall in due time previously have sent in the declaration of themselves and their country clients, accompanied by a list thereof arranged in alphabetical order, and written on foolscap paper bookwise.

5. These six days to be appropriated among the London agents, in the following order:—The letters refer to the initial of the agent's surname or that of the senior partner in the case of a firm.

Those commencing with—

C, D, E, or F,	" 21.
G, H, I, or J,	" 23.
K, L, M, N, O, or P,	" 24.
Q, R, or S,	" 25.
T, U, V, W, X, Y, or Z.	" 26.

6. On every day subsequent to Nov. 26, the certificates will be delivered to the rest of the profession.

7. The fee of 2*s.* 3*d.*, for issuing each certificate is to be paid on taking the same away.

 It is desirable that the London agents should send in their lists soon, in order that the certificates may be completed in due time, as they are in number nearly 7,000.

METROPOLITAN & PROVINCIAL LAW ASSOCIATION.

At the Annual Provincial Meeting held at Manchester, on the 8th, 9th, and 10th ult., deputations attended from the Law Societies of Birmingham, Bristol, Gateshead, Gloucestershire, Hull, Kent, Lancaster, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Worcestershire, and from the Justices' Clerks' Society. It will, therefore, be seen that many members attended in a representative as well as an individual capacity, and this fact should be borne in mind in estimating the importance of the meeting.

The chair was taken by W. STRICKLAND COOKSON, Esq.

DUBLIN.—(From our own Correspondent.)

STATISTICS OF INCUMBERED ESTATES.

At the recent meeting of the Association for Promotion of Social Science, held at Birmingham, the difficult subject of the transfer of land appears to have been one of the prominent questions considered by the department of jurisprudence. After several papers had been read, and various opinions expressed, Sir Fitzroy Kelly declared his adhesion to the principle of transferring land free from all complications of title, after due investigation by public officials to be intrusted with ample powers and discretion. He further stated, that this scheme was not a merely theoretical one, but had been, for some years, in operation throughout a portion of the United Kingdom, and had been found to work very sati-factorily. In summing up, at the close of the discussion, Lord John Russell referred to the early difficulties which beset the "Incumbered Estates Act," the auguries of its complete failure by certain high legal authorities, and the importance of its history and present position, as affording a solution of the great transfer-of-land question.

At a time when public attention is thus called to the success or failure of the first attempt ever made on a large scale to have land easily transferred, it must be considered opportune that the close of the seventh year of their proceedings has enabled the officials of the Incumbered Estates Court to ascertain exactly, and to make known to the public, in their annual summary, what has been effected during their term of office. The "Seventh Annual Report" is a document distinguished by its brevity, and its want of details. The general results are given, and are striking enough; but it would have been better if a more minute statement had been presented, from which, for example, the annual value of the estates sold, the rates of purchase, and the quantity of land still remaining unsold could have been gathered. Perhaps, however, it is hardly fair to find fault with a document which undeniably contains much valuable information, on the ground that it does not contain more. We, therefore, proceed to examine this statistical statement item by item, merely appending such remarks as may tend to elucidate some of the passages in it.

It seems that the Incumbered Estates Court commenced operations on the 25th of October, 1849; and that from that day to the 31st of August, 1857, 4,164 petitions have been placed on the files of the court, out of which number 800 have been dismissed or withdrawn, or have been supplemental petitions. In many early cases, after a conditional order (or rule nisi, as it may be termed) has been obtained by the petitioner, cause has been shown against such order being made absolute, and the case has prematurely come to an end. This is now of unfrequent occurrence, as hostile proceedings are much more rare than at first—in fact, more than one-half of the petitions now filed proceed from the owners themselves. The number of absolute orders made for the sale of estates is 3,341; and did the report go on to say how many of these estates now remain unsold, one could better estimate the quantity of work still remaining to be done by the Commission.

The sales commenced in April, 1850, about six months after the opening of the court. The average number of lots into which the estates are divided does not appear: but it is stated that 7,270 lots have been sold in court by public auction; 1,621 lots by private contract; and 1,436 lots at various provincial towns—making a total of 10,327 lots sold. The number of deeds of conveyance executed by the Commissioners to purchasers is not co-extensive with the number of lots sold, as a purchaser will often, it seems, include two or more lots in one deed of conveyance. A vast number of engrossments, stampings, and signatures must be represented by the 7,283 conveyances which have been duly executed to purchasers. The average number would be 1,100 per annum, or, excluding vacations, &c., about 40 every week. Every such deed of conveyance has annexed to it a schedule of leases and tenancies, and a certificate of payment of purchase money, and each of the three is signed by two Commissioners, and stamped with the seal of the Court. A memorial of each deed is also so executed for registration in the General Registry Office, and all such deeds and memorials bear the customary stamp duty.

The sale of all these estates has, it appears, produced an aggregate sum of 20,475,956*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, of which large amount only £2,836,295 has been paid in by English, Scotch, or any other than Irish purchasers. Of course, it is not to be understood that the entire of these amounts have been withdrawn from other investments, to be laid out in land. It is well known that sums paid out to mortgagees have, in numerous instances, been re-invested forthwith in the purchase of estates. In many cases creditors have purchased the whole or part of the estate which constituted their security; and in such cases, when the validity of the claim has been fully established, credit has been given for the amount, as against the purchase money. In this way, demands to the amount of £2,822,589 have been satisfied to various creditors, who have also become purchasers.

It now remains to trace the application of these purchase moneys, which (except where they are set off against demands as just described) are paid in in cash to the Commissioners' account in the Bank of Ireland. There being no fees on proceedings or other deductions of any kind, the whole amount paid in is applicable to meet the demands of creditors. As soon as the schedule of creditors has been prepared and finally adjudicated on, the costs of the proceedings are first paid, and then all other claimants in their priority, and the surplus fund is paid out to the owner. The sum of £18,734,227 has been thus distributed. There now remains in court, standing to the credit of the various matters, which are not yet wound up, the sum of £366,988 in cash; also £964,236 in New Three per Cent. Stock, and £115,345 in Consols. All these amounts, when added together, will be found to fall short of the entire produce of the sales by £295,157, which deficiency is thus accounted for:—Credits have been given provisionally against purchase money to creditors who have become purchasers, but whose demands are not yet finally established, or are in course of adjustment; and in many cases of recent sales the whole of the purchase money has not yet been lodged in court.

EDINBURGH.—(From our own Correspondent.)

In your leading article on the "Birmingham Law Reformers," in the Journal of Oct. 24, after some observations on the defective nature of the provisions for the conduct of litigation in formâ pauperis in your end of the island, you proceed to remark, that "the Scotch system, which involves a preliminary inquiry before leave to sue in formâ pauperis is given, is said to work extremely well; and we might probably borrow some useful hints on this, as in other particulars, from beyond the Tweed." That our system does work very well here is undoubted; it may, however, very well be, that, if transplanted to England in its integrity, it might not flourish equally well there, seeing that the judicial institutions are very different, and on so much larger a scale. But, whether this be so or not, I think there can be little doubt, that, as you remark, in the event of any reform taking place in England, some useful hints might be gathered from the Scotch system—and I therefore propose to give you a short sketch of that system.

The foundation of the system rests as far back in history as the reign of King James I. In the year 1424, a statute was passed enacting, in words which are perhaps worth quoting for their quaintness, that, "gif thar be ony pure creature that for defalt of cunnyng or dispense can not or may not folow his cause, the king, for the lufe of God, sall ordane that the judge before quham the cause suld be determynt, purvey and get a lele and a wyse advocate, to folow sic pure creature's cause. And gif sic cause be obtenyt, the wrangar shall assyth the party scathit, and the advocate's cortis and travale." However well such a general enactment might work in primitive times, it soon, of course, became necessary that the right of admission to the "Poors Roll," as it is called, should be made matter of regulation; and accordingly, from that time to this, various Acts of sederunt have been passed by the Court, in which are to be found the rules and regulations of the system.

The staff, by which the system is carried into operation, consists, in the first place, of six advocates, who are appointed by the Faculty to be advocates for the poor. These are selected from among the junior members of the body; and as these gentlemen, during the earlier years of their professional life, have usually plenty of spare time on their hands, it is understood that these appointments are much sought after, as they afford the holders of them an excellent opportunity of seeing business and learning their profession. They hold the appointment, generally, for three or four years, but they are bound to see to an end all cases which may have been remitted to them during their tenure of office.

The Societies of Writers to the Signet and of Solicitors, each, in the same way, nominate annually four of their number to act as agents for the poor. These appointments are not, however, by any means sought after; on the contrary, they are considered a great burden; and in order that this burden may be as fairly distributed as possible, it is understood that the new members passing in each year cast lots among themselves, in order to ascertain who are to be the victims. One-half of these agents attend to the criminal business, and the rest to the civil.

By these gentlemen the cases of the poor are conducted; but, besides these, two advocates, one writer to the signet, and one solicitor, are annually appointed to act as reporters on the probabilis causa. These gentlemen have to consider the cases of the applicants, and to report to the Court whether or not they have a probabilis causa litigandi. They are always gentlemen of considerable legal experience.

When a person wishes to be admitted to the benefits of the Poors Roll (and which are—that he is entitled to the gratuitous assistance of counsel and agent, and has to pay no court fees whatever), after having given notice to the adverse party of the time and place appointed, he appears before the minister and two elders of the parish in which he resides, these being the parties who are likely to know most about him, and emits a declaration as to his circumstances and situation. This is done according to a formula prepared for the purpose, and embraces such matters as enable the Court to judge whether his circumstances are such as to entitle him to be admitted to the Poors Roll; for example, his age—whether he is married or not—the number of his children—the property he is possessed of—his trade or occupation—and the amount of his earnings, &c. The minister and elders then add a certificate as to whether the whole or any part of the statement is consistent with their own knowledge; or whether it depends on the credit of the applicant; and whether he is a person of good character, and worthy of credit.

Having obtained this certificate, one of the agents for the poor, after certain intimations have been made, presents a petition to one or other of the divisions of the court, simply stating the names and designations of the parties, and craving a remit to the reporters on the probabilis causa. The Court at this stage will hear objections to the applicant's admission to the roll, on the ground that his circumstances are not such as to entitle him to that benefit; but the usual course is to remit de plano to the reporters on the probabilis causa. The case then comes before these reporters, and the applicant has an opportunity of being heard before them, either in person, or by counsel or agent. The reporters thereafter report to the Court whether, in their opinion, the applicant has a probabilis causa litigandi, and is otherwise entitled to the benefit of the Poors Roll. The Court will not review the judgment of the reporters on the matter of the probabilis causa. If the report be unfavourable to the applicant, there is, of course, an end of the matter; but if it be favourable, his case is then remitted to an advocate and an agent, whose duty it is to conduct it to the end. The cases are remitted to them in regular rotation—a list of the counsel and agents for the poor being lodged with the clerks of court for that purpose.

Of course, if a change in the circumstances of a person on the Poors Roll should take place during the progress of the cause, the adverse party may move to have him struck off.

As to criminal cases, it has from time immemorial been a rule of the law of Scotland that no prisoner should be tried for a crime without having the assistance of counsel to defend him. Accordingly, when there are prisoners who are unable to retain counsel and agents for their defence, intimation is regularly sent from the Crown office, which conducts the prosecution, to the counsel and agents for the poor, some days before the time fixed for their trial. It is then the duty of the agent to obtain copies of the indictment, and, along with one of the counsel, to attend to the case.

Should a case, whether civil or criminal, turn out to be a heavy or intricate one, the counsel for the poor has never the slightest difficulty in obtaining the gratuitous assistance of a senior counsel.

Such are the principal regulations of the Scotch system of suing in formâ pauperis; and it certainly seems to be a very great deal more rational than that of the proposed "Free Conference Hall."

EDUCATION OF SOLICITORS.

To the Editor of THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL & REPORTER.

SIR,—I have read with considerable pleasure and profit the remarks and suggestions which recent numbers of your Journal have contained on this important question; but I shall be glad if you will permit me to draw your attention to one or two points of a practical nature, which have not been noticed by you as yet. I presume, the desirability of requiring from candidates for admission to the offices of attorney and solicitor indisputable evidence of their fitness to become administrators of the refined and complex laws of this country, and that education is one means of securing proper qualifications, are matters that may be now taken for granted; and that any points of difference remaining to be adjusted have no reference to general principles, but are mere matters of detail. So far, indeed, has the movement for a severer test advanced, that it was announced in the report of the Incorporated Law Society, which appeared in your columns a few weeks ago, that the Council had prepared a memorial to the judges, recommending an examination of candidates before or during articles, or before admission, as to their possession of a competent knowledge of Latin, French, history, &c. Although this announcement has not been discussed by you, it has created a great amount of discussion elsewhere, and of excitement and apprehension too, arising, in part, from a suspicion that it is intended to propose an ex post facto rule—a suspicion not justified, I think, by the terms of the report itself, inexplicit as it certainly is—nor by any English principle of legislation. Justifiable or not, a rumour to the above effect has obtained currency; and it is much to be desired that some announcement should appear as to the intention of the Council upon that point. If the rumour be ill-founded, every one would be set at ease; if well-founded, those who are interested in the matter would have, as they ought to have, the earliest opportunity of urging their objections. I will not at present take up your valuable space by any attempt to show the injustice of an ex post facto rule, not only because its injustice and its un-Englishness are equally apparent, but because I do not believe that one is intended. There is, however, cause for apprehension as to the effect of a merely prospective rule, if made inflexible—namely, that it will shut from all prospect of ever becoming attorneys and solicitors men who have, by the possession of good qualities, risen to positions of professional importance, and even local eminence, as managing clerks, without the possession of classical knowledge, and who have too long devoted themselves to the study and practice of the law to commence severe studies of an entirely different nature, even if they had time to do it. Is it expedient that the great inducement to the cultivation of every quality that is valuable in a clerk or solicitor should be removed from these men? Or is it necessary to the accomplishment of the object intended to be gained by any new regulations? I think not. I do not underrate the importance of a classical education. I think it is the best general guarantee that could be required of a youth that he is likely to possess qualities of mind and character fitted for the pursuit of an honourable profession; but the test, good as it is, is not perfect. That it will be liable to fail is shown by the number of educated rogues and learned villains (not always attorneys though) who are from time to time shown up to the wonder, no less than the scorn, of their fellow-men. Learning has in many instances enabled them to perpetrate their villanies, and yet avoid the operation of the criminal laws. On the other hand, it would be hard, as well as erroneous, to assume that no one who does not possess a "competent knowledge" of Latin, French, &c., is fitted for the offices of attorney and solicitor. How many solicitors and firms would cheerfully testify the truth of this! How many would admit that the successful conduct of matters of delicacy, difficulty, and magnitude is greatly promoted by the exertions of a shrewd and trusty managing clerk, who, although no classical scholar, often fills the place of his principal with credit to both, and whose integrity and industry are always to be relied on! There are few solicitors of extensive practice but would be willing witnesses to the worth of managing clerks. Instances are not unfrequent of their being taken as junior partners, with the view of securing their permanent services. Many of these men an inflexible rule requiring a classical examination would certainly shut out of the profession for the reason before given. I think it is unnecessary that this should be. I would say, in all cases let a preliminary examination precede articles of clerkship. For youths who are sent to the office before their characters are formed, let it be the classical examination, as the best guarantee that can be had that the character, when fully developed, is likely to be such as will not disgrace either the person or profession. Youths would then be specially educated for the law. For persons who have been long employed as law clerks, and have not been so favoured in their early days, an examination of a different kind would suffice. To these give liberty to apply to the judges to be excused the classical examination, on showing that they have been in the profession as clerks a certain length of time, say ten years, and furnishing satisfactory testimonials of their respectability. Let this inquiry be strict, and not degenerate into a mere matter of form, and in all cases retain the legal examination prior to admission to the roll.

Under such regulations no one could hope to get upon the roll who had not exhibited a talent for his profession. and given evidence that he had conducted himself with the greatest propriety, thus proving himself worthy to follow it; nor need any aspiring man be disheartened by the sickening thought, that, howsoever honest, industrious, and intelligent he may be, hard laws damp his ardour and check his laudable ambition, by closing against him the field in which such qualities might have brought credit and promotion to himself, and honour to his profession. Apologising for the length of these remarks, and inviting an expression of your sentiments—I am, yours respectfully,

Nov. 2, 1857. A MANAGING CLERK.

To the Editor of THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL & REPORTER.

SIR,—As a Perpetual Commissioner for taking the Acknowledgments of Deeds by Married Women, and lately a Deputy for granting Replevins, I would beg to call attention to the following "gross job" on the part of the Government, believing that no notice has been taken of the matter by the Incorporated Law Society or the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, nor am I aware that attention has been called to the subject in any of the legal periodicals.

By the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834, each Perpetual Commissioner for taking the Acknowledgment of a Deed by a Married Woman, under the Act of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, is entitled to a fee of 13*s.* 4*d.*

The registrars of the county courts were, on their first appointment, paid by fees; but under the provisions of the statute of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, they are remunerated for their services by fixed salaries, paid out of the Consolidated Fund, and, therefore, under the management of the Commissioners of the Treasury. By the 73rd section of this statute a judge of a county court is authorised to receive any acknowledgment to be made by a married woman, and in a schedule thereto is as follows:—"For taking the acknowledgment of a married woman, one pound." Thus the Government undersell the perpetual commissioners, as also the judges and the masters in Chancery, and offer an inducement to receive each acknowledgment at a less cost than the acknowledgment can be received before two perpetual commissioners. This is not as it ought to be, for the solicitor now feels it a duty which he owes to his client to apply to the county court judge to receive the acknowledgment in preference to the perpetual commissioners; and the registrars being now paid by salaries, the extra duty of attending to the receiving an acknowledgment by the county court judge is thrown upon them without any additional remuneration.

Again, I would call your attention to the provisions of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 63, whereby the powers of the under-sheriff and his deputies to take replevin bonds are abolished, and the registrars of the county courts are empowered to grant replevins, the Consolidated Fund again appropriating the benefit of the registrar's duties in being entitled to receive as fees poundage in replevins; and thus the emoluments derived by the under-sheriff and his deputies from granting replevins are for ever gone—the deputies no longer exist! and the duties are performed by other solicitors—namely, the registrars of the county courts—without fee or reward: and for what purpose? To enrich her Majesty's Treasury.

I should observe, that the fees now payable in replevins are the same in nature and amount as those previously taken by the replevin clerks.

I trust these instances of less than questionable benefit to the public and legislative interference with honourable appointments, held and awarded as due to solicitors of standing and position, will show the necessity of increased vigilance on the part of the law societies in looking to the provisions of all the Bills to be introduced in future sessions of Parliament, especially such as have reference to the county courts.

The annihilation of replevin clerks and the frittering away of the office of perpetual commissioner are objects foreign to the institution of county courts, the replevin clerks and perpetual commissioners having, for years past, their existence throughout the length and breadth of the land; and, therefore, the omission referred to in your last number, while passing in review the "Act to enable Married Women to dispose of Reversionary Interests in Personal Estates," is not so singular, the learned framer of that Act (Mr. Malins) being no doubt in ignorance of the enactment by the Act of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 73.

The public have derived no benefit from these alterations; they were uncalled for—the necessity for the change did not exist; but if it did, on what intelligible principle is it to be accounted for that no compensation was awarded for the loss of these offices, having regard to the compensation awarded to the proctors last session?—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Pershore, Nov. 4, 1857. EDWIN BALL.

REGISTRATION OF TITLE TO LAND.

To the Editor of THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL & REPORTER.

SIR,—Admiring, as I do, the great ability with which your paper is conducted, it was with great regret that I read the first article in Saturday's number, on registration. I am not singular in that feeling. I am sure it is shared in by all the subscribers in this town. The whole tenour of the article would appear to justify the remark of the Law Times, that the object of your paper is to exterminate the country attorneys. You must be well aware that registration would nearly ruin the greater portion of them.

It occurs to me that the SOLICITORS' JOURNAL should not make weapons to be used against its supporters. If it is the organ of any particular class, it should manfully avow itself as such, and look to that class alone for support.

It cannot for a moment be imagined that the "lawyers" who "read papers" at Birmingham have any considerable conveyancing business, else they would not be guilty of such suicidal conduct.

Pray excuse the freedom with which I write; as I think that you should know the opinion of your country subscribers on this subject.—Your obedient servant, ROBERT WHEELER.

2, Regent-st., Cheltenham, Nov. 2.

REGISTRATION OF TITLE TO LAND.

To the Editor of THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL & REPORTER.

SIR,—I have just read the leading article in your paper of the 31st ult., and I have rarely read one with which I was so thoroughly dissatisfied. I do not, however, propose to make any comments upon it, but simply to point out a fact with which you are either unacquainted, or have not thought fit to notice. Under the present system small purchases are in many parts of the country extremely common, and every facility is offered to them. The costs of conveyancing is seldom more than about £5 per cent. on the purchase money; as an instance, I will mention three cases in my office during the last week of small purchases of land. The purchase money ranged from £60 to £120, the total costs of the purchaser from 4*l.* 10*s.* to £6.

Whatever the advantages of the boasted plan of registration are to be, facilities to small purchases cannot be among the number. In small transactions the costs will be most oppressive.

A short time since I was requested to complete two small mortgages, both under £50; one of my clients, to his great regret, as he expressed to me, had his property lie in a register county. The cost to him was more than double the costs to the more fortunate owner in a non-registering county, my profit charge being the same in both cases.—Yours, obediently,

Nov. 2, 1857. A SOLICITOR.

Review.

The Parish Officer. By J. F. ARCHBOLD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Third edition. London: Shaw & Sons. 1858.

That Mr. Archbold's "Parish Officer" is a useful work may be gathered from the fact that it has already reached a third edition. It is characterised by those merits which are found in all the works which Mr. Archbold has published. The information they contain is exceedingly accessible. We know at once where to turn in the volume for assistance in the matter on which we are engaged. The contents are so arranged as to catch the eye, and, generally speaking, the legal instruction given is accurate so far as it goes. This is not very far; but it is not to be expected that a man who has written a portable little volume on almost every head of law should have entered on his subjects very profoundly. To do so would not come within Mr. Archbold's aim. What he wishes to provide is, the kind of work which persons engaged in practice may be glad to have at their fingers' ends whenever they require it, or which may guide those who, without a legal education, have to occupy, as public officers or otherwise, a legal position. A parish officer, with this volume in his hands, would gain a very good notion of his duties and powers; and as this is, we presume, the primary object of the work, Mr. Archbold has not written in vain.

The only great alteration made in this new edition is the insertion of a Chapter on Advowsons and Tithes, introduced for the benefit of clergymen, it having been intimated to Mr. Archbold by some of the clerical body that a slight sketch of the law on this head would be found useful. The minor changes in the book are not very important, and the work is left more nearly in the state in which it first appeared than we might have expected, as five years have elapsed since it was originally published. Directly we come to speak of these changes, we are carried into such minutiæ that it is impossible to give any notion of what Mr. Archbold has done, unless we confine ourselves to one particular heading. We will take the heading "Overseers of the Poor" as an important one, and one well exemplifying the general character of the work. Under this head, we shall find the following changes:—1. The arrangement of the book has been altered in two instances, subjects originally treated under this head being placed under other heads. 2. In four instances, forms of orders, summons, &c., have been omitted. 3. In four instances, matter has been added which ought to have appeared in the first edition, as it consists of clauses in Acts of Parliament, or Orders of the Poor-Law Commissioners, of an older date. 4. In two instances, matter is added from Acts of Parliament subsequently passed.

The section on Overseers occupies nearly eighty pages of the book, and may, therefore, be fairly taken as a specimen of the whole. Now, that, in five years, Mr. Archbold should have found nothing new to add, except a reference to two Acts of Parliament, throws some light on the character of the work. It is a very laborious and irksome task to compile such books; and when they are compiled, they are useful to a great many people. But when we judge them by a professional standard, and ask whether they really embody the law on the subject, we must not overpraise them. Any one who knows what it is to note up cases, and record the daily growth of the law, will appreciate the point of excellence aimed at by an author who, during the last five years, has found no case, and only two Acts of Parliament, bearing on so wide a subject as the office and duties of overseers. We will give one or two instances of the kind of matter which Mr. Archbold omits.

We find inserted in this new edition a notice of the order of the Poor-Law Commissioners with regard to the binding of poor apprentices—an order which, bearing date 1845, ought to have been noticed in the first edition. And we are told that the regulations to be observed upon the apprenticeship of pauper children by overseers are mainly the same as those applying to apprenticeship by guardians. But no notice is taken of the important case of Reg. v. St. Mary Magdalen, Bermondsey, in which it was held that the rules laid down in the order, excepting that as to the signature by the apprentice, were directory only, and non-compliance with them did not make the indenture void (2 Ell. & Bl. 809). Nor, again, is any notice taken of the cases of Reg. v. Inhabitants of St. George, Bloomsbury (4 Ell. & Bl. 520), and Overseers of Staverton v. Overseers of Ashburton (4 Ell. & Bl. 526), by which it was decided that the act of justices in ordering the binding of a pauper child apprentice is judicial, and it must, therefore, appear on the face of the order that the justices made it within their jurisdiction. This is exactly the sort of decision which we should have thought Mr. Archbold would have felt bound to notice, because it gives a practical hint to non-professional persons; and it is to supply instruction to such persons that the book is, in a great measure, written.

Then, again, in treating of the duties of overseers with respect to the registration of parliamentary voters for boroughs, Mr. Archbold extracts a clause from the Act (6 Vict. c. 18) by which the overseers are directed to sign the burgess list; but omits to notice the case of Clark v. Gant (8 Exch. 252), in which it was held that all the overseers must sign this list; and also omits any reference to an Act subsequently passed (16 & 17 Vict. c. 79), which enacts that the major part of the overseers may do any act required of the overseers by the 6 Vict. c. 18. The clause by which this is provided also contains a direction as to notice given to overseers much too important to be omitted. With reference to the same point, Mr. Archbold might also have noticed the case of Reg. v. Governors of Poor of Hull (2 Ell. & Bl. 182), in which it was held that the town-clerk is not entitled to charge the overseers for the duties he performs in the registration of voters. Notice might also have been taken of Morgan v. Parry (17 C. B. 334), where it was held, that, although the list is not properly signed, it is not invalid. Or, to take another point to which attention may be drawn by its happening to bear on the last paragraph of Mr. Archbold's section on Overseers, we find inserted in the new edition a clause from an Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 62) by which it is provided, that, if a collector of poor-rates is appointed by the Poor-Law Commissioners, the power of the parish to appoint a collector shall cease. This clause is added without any introduction or comment at the foot of a Chapter on Assistant-Overseers, and it hardly appears what it has to do with the subject. The fact is, that Mr. Archbold omits to notice the preceding section of the Act, which provides that collectors so appointed may be appointed to perform the duties of an assistant-overseer. The words of the Act are extremely obscure, and they ought not to be quoted without a reference (entirely omitted by Mr. Archbold) to the case of Reg. v. Greene (17 Q. B. 793), in which they received a judicial interpretation.

We might go on and point out many similar omissions. When, therefore, Mr. Archbold says in his Preface, "I think, that, throughout the whole of the present edition, the reader will find that I have taken infinite pains to render it complete and correct," we must either suppose that Mr. Archbold's notion of infinite pains is not quite so high as the words would naturally imply, or that he only aims at satisfying the practical requirements of a lay student. Probably, this is the true account of the matter. The contents of the book have such a degree of substantial correctness and fulness as to give help to a person who only wants a general notion of his duties, and is not called on to go into the niceties of technical points. There is, however, a show of something more about the book, for Mr. Archbold quotes a great many cases. But then they are old cases; and so far from having taken "infinite pains" to bring his work down to the present time, and make it tally with the present state of the law, we have seen that the many modern cases bearing on the head of Overseers have been omitted. The lawyer, therefore, cannot place more than a limited confidence in this work as a book of reference.

Money Market.

CITY, FRIDAY EVENING.

Yesterday the Bank of England advanced their rate of discount from eight to nine per cent. It has stood at eight per cent. since Monday the 19th ult. The rate of discount at Hamburg had receded, but it has again advanced to nine per cent., and there is a report of a corresponding advance having been made by the Bank of France. Consols close to-day at 88¾ to 88½ per cent., showing a decline of about 1¼ per cent. since this day week. The demand for gold for exportation has been heavy. Failures large in amount have occurred under the pressure caused by the long protracted delay in remittances from the United States.

The Bank return, published in Friday's Gazette, is now made up to the Wednesday previous. The change has been introduced this week, and therefore the accounts which we give below extend over ten days ending 4th November, 1857. The amount of notes in circulation is £20,266,745, being an increase of £500,480. The stock of bullion in both departments is £8,497,780, showing a decrease of £872,014. The reserve of notes in the banking department has fallen from £3,485,840 to £2,155,315, having sustained in ten days a diminution of £1,330,525.

The large amount of decrease in the stock of bullion and in the reserve of notes is, of course, the cause of the unprecedented rate of discount fixed by the Bank.

This measure, and the appearance of affairs in general, has caused great anxiety, and some degree of apprehension that the stability of our circulating medium may be supposed to require a similar attempt at support on the part of the Government to that which was conceded in the year 1847, when the Bank of England was authorised to extend accomodation in the way of discounting bills beyond the limit of its reserve of notes.

The returns of the Board of Trade for the month of September show that the decrease in the importation of wheat and flour, which appeared in the return of the previous month, continues in action. The quantity of wheat imported in September, 1857, amounts to 284,625 quarters against 459,116 quarters in September, 1856. In flour and meal the quantity is 67,689 cwt. in 1857 against 390,221 cwt. in 1856, notwithstanding which our corn markets have declined considerably. The prohibition of export is still maintained by the Government of France. Our markets for grain and other supplies experience depression from the state of financial affairs.

The loans taken by the East India Company, one from the Bank of England, and the other from certain joint-stock banks, the total amount of which is two millions, are expected to prevent the usual course of drawing bills by the Company upon the Government in India for supplies sent out, and it is hoped will enable both parties to stand well until the close of the present year. The terms are in proportion to the state of the money market, and if, as is believed, the loans are for two years, they will become a heavy charge upon the resources of the East India Company.

It appears that the extensive crash among the banks of the United States, particularly that of the banks of New York and Boston, noticed in our last number, has not proved to be exactly the turning point of American difficulties. Recent intelligence informs us of a further considerable decline in all sorts of securities. Great distrust continues and mercantile failures go on. The action of the banks is believed to have been chiefly the cause of the present ruin, by having afforded unlimited accommodation to speculators in stocks and shares, and in the end finding themselves unequal to sustain the powerful reaction and immense depreciation which overwhelmed their customers. Yet the constitution of these banks has received material improvement compared with that which existed prior to 1838. The convulsions which attended upon the system of banking in the United States in previous years were astonishing. It has been stated by Lord Overstone that between 1811 and 1820 about 195 banks in different parts of the Union became bankrupt, and that, bad as this instance was, it was nothing to that which took place subsequently to 1834. The most remarkable features are, first, the astonishing increase of issues of notes from about seventy millions of dollars in 1830 to about one hundred and fifty millions in 1837, then the universal crash in which every bank throughout the Union is believed to have stopped payment, and then the reaction in which the issues sank to about eighty-four millions in 1842, and to less than sixty millions in 1843. It is supposed that in this latter crash nearly 180 banks, including the bank of the United States, were totally destroyed. Previous to the year 1838 the system of banking was quite free. All individuals or associations might issue notes. Under this system the changes in the amount and value of the paper currency of the United States have been greater than in any other country, and it has produced an unprecedented amount of bankruptcy and ruin. Subsequently to the year 1838 the practice for the banks to deposit securities in proportion to their issues has come into use, and seems to have proved during several years a better protection against pecuniary convulsions. But we now see it also totally destroyed, being unable to withstand the pressure occasioned by an enormous amount of over-speculation in stocks and shares to which their system of banking had previously afforded facilities. There may be or there may not be ultimate security. It is clear there is not immediate security. This security is found in gold and silver, and in these only. And on the whole it appears sufficiently established that there is only one way in which notes can be issued so that it will be absolutely certain that they will be paid on their being presented, and that is by not permitting them to be issued except for an equivalent amount of coin or bullion.

CAP. LXXVIII.—An Act to amend 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, for facilitating the Winding-up the Affairs of Joint-Stock Companies unable to meet their pecuniary Engagements, and also the Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849.

The statutes here meant are the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, and the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108, usually called the "Winding-up Acts." Of these, the first was passed chiefly in reference to joint-stock trading or commercial companies; but it also has application to companies and copartnerships (the members whereof exceed seven in number) not coming within that description; and now the large class of joint-stock companies, which are registered under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts of 1856, 1857, are differently dealt with, and expressly excepted from the operation of the Winding-up Acts. The scheme of these Acts is, that, on any company within its provisions becoming bankrupt or declaring itself to be insolvent, proceedings may be instituted by any of the creditors in the Court of Bankruptcy, which resemble, in their general features, those which obtain in the case of an ordinary bankruptcy. But after adjudication of bankruptcy, then, by direction of the Court of Bankruptcy, an order may be sought from the Court of Chancery for directions as to the winding-up and dissolution of the company, and for settling the claims of the respective members as against each other. Such an order may also be sought independently of any bankruptcy proceedings by any contributory in any of the cases mentioned in 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, s. 4; and then an absolute order may be sought for such dissolution and winding up, either with or without any special directions; and on its being made, an official manager is appointed, who stands much in the same position with regard to the estate of the company as the official assignee does in the case of individual bankruptcy; and, in particular, it is by and against him, that, as the general rule, all legal proceedings and transactions with regard to the company are to be had and taken. From this point, however, the analogy between individual and associated bankruptcy or winding up, in some measure, ceases. In the former case, his whole estate being resigned to the creditors, the bankrupt receives his certificate, and is free. In the latter, a list of contributories is prepared, who must, in the event of the assets of the concern being insufficient, liquidate the deficiency out of their own individual resources, the principles of partnership intervening, in the case of a company, and causing this complication.

Such being the salient features of the existing method for winding up and dissolving associations and copartnerships with more than seven members, and not registered under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, the Act under discussion makes certain improvements in the system, the chief of which are the following:—1. In every case where there is a winding-up order with respect to any company, and where such course shall appear expedient, and for the benefit of the parties interested, the creditors of the company may be from time to time called together before the judge or master charged with the winding up, for the purpose of appointing one or more persons, other than the official manager, to represent all the creditors of the company in and about the proceedings, or certain of the proceedings, before such judge or master; and such person or persons may be chosen, either personally or by proxy, by two-thirds in value of the creditors who have proved or sworn to their debts, in like manner as in the choice of assignees in bankruptcy. And where the company has become bankrupt under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, the assignees of the estate and effects chosen under the proceedings are to be representatives of the creditors, without calling such meeting as above described. 2. Where the company has become bankrupt under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, before any winding-up order has been made, the assignees, acting as such representatives, may now, with leave of the Court of Bankruptcy, and after notice to, and obtaining the consent of, such creditors as the Court shall direct, and whether the whole of the assets of the company have been collected or not, take from all or any of the shareholders or members (having regard to the sufficiency of the assets and the solvency and means of the shareholders or members) such reasonable sums as they shall think fit, in discharge and satisfaction of their respective liabilities; or they may make any other compromise, composition, or arrangement in the matter. 3. In cases where, there being no adjudication of bankruptcy, there are no assignees, but representatives of the creditors have been chosen under the provision for that purpose of the Act under discussion, they may make and concur in compositions and arrangements, so far as the creditors of the company are concerned, whether for the discharge and satisfaction of the liability of all and every the shareholders and members, or of any or either of them, to the debts and liabilities of the company or otherwise. Yet, if the judge or master should require it, the consent of all, or of a certain proportion of the creditors must be expressly obtained to the compromise or arrangement in question, and the rights of the creditors are not to be affected by any such compromise or arrangement as to their right or remedy against any person other than the members and contributories of the company in question.

The immediate and avowed object of the Act under discussion was to prevent for the future such ruinous contests as have recently been witnessed in the case of the Royal British Bank; and it is to be observed, that the representative principle thus introduced is not a new one, but an adaptation only to the case of an associated partnership consisting of a large number of persons, of the provisions for arrangement and compromise, which have long formed a part of our general bankrupt law.

CAP. LXXXI.—An Act to amend the Burial Acts.

The foundation of the general system of interments which now exists, was the Metropolitan Interments Act, 1850. That statute, however, was altogether repealed by the Burials (within the metropolis) Act, 1852 (the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85); and the provisions of this last Act were afterwards extended throughout England and Wales, and were amended, in various particulars, by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 134; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 87; 18 & 19 Vict. cc. 79, 128; and, lastly, by the Act under discussion. The above enumeration corrects the recital in this last Act, which substitutes 18 & 19 Vict. c. 78, for 18 & 19 Vict. c. 79.

The provisions of the new Act may be thus classed:—1. Those which have reference to burial boards. 2. Those which have reference to places of interment. 3. Those which have reference to the performance of interments. 4. Those which have reference to the expense of interments. 5. Miscellaneous provisions. And of these in their order:—

1. Burial Boards.—The provisions as to these are contained in ss. 1, 2, 4, 5, 9 of the Act under discussion: and their effect is, that, in cases where there is a joint board for several parishes, its acts may be authorised, or approved, by the vestries of the majority of such parishes; that such joint board may, at any time before the common burial ground has been provided, be dissolved, and the agreement which has been entered into between the several parishes determined, by the vestries of such parishes (the Act does not say, but probably means, by the majority of such vestries); that, on the petition of such parties, and under such circumstances as in the Act specified, the local board of health, established under the Public Health Act of 1848, may be constituted a burial board for a district co-extensive with its own; that, within certain restrictions, a burial board may be appointed by the vestry of any district which has hitherto had no separate burial ground, and does not separately maintain its own poor; and that the appointment of a board by the vestry in the cases provided for by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128 (viz. where two or more parishes have become united, or where the inhabitants have had a joint church, burial ground, or vestry meeting), shall be subject for the future to the previous approval of the Home Secretary.

2. Places of Interment.—The provisions of the Act under discussion, as to these, are contained in ss. 3, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 23, 24, 26: and their effect is, that, with the approval of the Home Secretary, more than one burial ground may be provided by a single board, and that separate grounds (if it shall seem fit) may be provided to be used, respectively, as consecrated and unconsecrated ground; that parish lands may (with the consent of the Poor Law Board) be appropriated for the reception of the dead buried by the parish, and may be consecrated accordingly by the ordinary of the diocese, to be used only for burials according to the rites of the Established Church; that where a burial ground has been provided for any parish under any of the Church Building Acts, by money borrowed on the security of the church rates, the debt may be taken up by the burial board of the place, and thereupon the ground shall be transferred to such board by the incumbent and the ordinary; that any closed burial ground, not belonging to the parish in which it is situate, may be purchased for the parish by its vestry; that Orders in Council may, from time to time, issue for establishing regulations for the protection of the public health and decency in respect of burials in common graves, and to authorise the churchwardens and others to do such acts as may be necessary to prevent any vault or place of burial from becoming or continuing injurious to the public health; that it shall be unnecessary to erect a wall or fence between the consecrated and the unconsecrated portion of any burial ground, provided there shall be placed proper boundary marks for the purpose; that, in the case of refusal by the bishop of the diocese to consecrate a burial ground, an appeal shall lie to the archbishop of the province, who, if he shall decide that the ground is in a fit and proper condition, and the bishop shall still refuse to consecrate, may license the same for interment, which shall make it lawful to use the same as if it had been consecrated; that unconsecrated land or buildings vested in trustees for the purposes of a cemetery or burial grounds wherein burials have been prohibited by Order in Council, may be disposed of by such trustees, and the money be applied cy près; and that such closed cemeteries, if adjoining or near to any ground about to be appropriated by a burial board for the purpose of interment, may be purchased by such board.

3. Performance of Interments.—The provisions of the Act under discussion as to this, are contained in ss. 14, 16, 17: and their effect is, that every person attending the funeral of any person buried in any place of interment provided by any Act of Parliament, shall be exempted from toll, in the same manner as he would be exempted under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, within the limits of the parish or place in which such ground is situate; that the provisions contained in 52 Geo. 3, c. 146, s. 4, as to the transmission of a certificate of burial by a minister who shall perform the ceremony out of his own parish, to the incumbent of the parish wherein such burial shall take place, shall not apply to interments in any ground provided under the Burial Acts; that the interment fees charged for burying in the unconsecrated portion of any ground, shall be the same as those charged for interring in the consecrated portion, less those which are payable in respect of the incumbent, churchwarden, clerk, or sexton; and that, pending an application for consecration of any burial ground, the incumbent, or other duly qualified person, may (if he shall see fit) bury in the same, provided a certificate from the Home Secretary has been obtained, that the provisions of the Burial Acts have been complied with respecting it.

4. The Expense of Interments.—The provisions of the Act under discussion as to this, are contained in ss. 18—22: and their effect is, that so much of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85, s. 20, as requires that not only the yearly interest of money borrowed under the provisions of the Burial Acts shall be paid, but that the principal shall be gradually discharged by yearly instalments, shall be repealed; that the clauses of 10 & 11 Vict. c. 16 (the Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847), with respect to mortgages, shall be applicable to mortgages and other securities executed by burial boards; that a sinking fund shall be provided by every burial board which has raised or borrowed money, for paying off the principal, by setting aside every year not less than one-fiftieth part of such principal, out of the moneys charged by such mortgages; that, for the purpose of raising moneys, any burial board, or borough council, may grant terminable annuities, instead of making mortgages; and that any such council may also raise any money which may be required for the purpose of the Burial Acts, by making a burial rate charged on all property liable to the borough rate.

5. Miscellaneous Provisions.—Those in the Act under discussion which seem to require notice, are contained in ss. 15, 25; and their effect is, that any person wilfully destroying or injuring any register books of burials kept "according to the provisions of this Act," or any part thereof, or counterfeiting or making any false entry, or giving a false certificate respecting the same, or forging or counterfeiting the seal of any burial board, shall be guilty of felony.

As to this provision, it is noticeable that no register is directed by the Act under discussion to be kept, though distinct registers are directed to be kept by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 134; and that the subsequent provision that former Burial Acts and the Act under discussion are to be construed together as one Act (s. 30), does not seem to justify this inaccuracy. As no specific punishment is attached to the offences made felonious by the above provision, it is presumed, that, under the joint effect of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 8; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99; and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, the punishment will be penal servitude for not more than seven, or less than three years; or imprisonment for not more than two years, with hard labour and solitary confinement, and, in the case of males, whipping, at the discretion of the Court.

Finally, the Act under discussion contains a provision, prohibiting the removal of any body, or the remains of any body, which may have been interred in any place of burial (except in the case of removal from one consecrated place of burial to another, by faculty granted by the ordinary), unless a licence be first obtained under the hand of the Home Secretary, and such precautions observed as may be prescribed in the conditions of the licence.

CAP. LXXXIII.—An Act for more effectually Preventing the Sale of Obscene Books, Pictures, Prints, and other Articles.

The offence at which the Act under discussion is aimed is properly referable to the head of lewdness; which, when of an open and notorious character, is punishable by the common law with fine and imprisonment. The particular species, which consists in the public sale or exposure of indecent exhibitions, was expressly regulated by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100—an Act passed in 1851 for the improvement of the administration of criminal justice in a variety of particulars. By the 29th section of that Act, "any public selling, or exposing for public sale or to public view, of any obscene book, print, picture, or other indecent exhibition," makes the offender liable, on conviction, to be imprisoned "for any term now warranted by law," and also to be kept to hard labour during the whole or part of such term of imprisonment. It is to be noticed, with regard to the Act under discussion, that the offence itself is left precisely as it was, and is made neither more nor less penal than before, the aim of the Act being, not to punish the offender, but to prevent him from injuring others by continuing to offend. With this view, the machinery already in play with regard to common gaming-houses has been, in part, adopted; but it has been thought proper to require (in the case of a house suspected to contain obscene articles) greater precautions than in the case of a suspected gaming-house before entrance can be made by the police. Instead of a single justice of the peace, the complaint must be made to two, or, at all events, before a stipendiary or metropolitan police magistrate; and the complainant must also swear that "one or more articles of the like character have been sold, distributed, exhibited, lent, or otherwise published," within the limits of the jurisdiction of the justices or magistrate, so that they or he may be satisfied "that the belief of the complainant is well founded." Before a search warrant can issue, moreover, it is essential that the justices or magistrate should be satisfied that the articles are of such a character and description that the publication of them would be a misdemeanor, and that they are kept to be, in some way or other (as by exhibition or lending upon hire), published for purposes of gain.

It is remarkable that the Legislature, in its extreme anxiety to prevent the abuse of the powers given by the Act under discussion, has in one important particular failed to render the facilities afforded by it co-extensive with the existing law. There is no doubt, that, not only at common law, but under the 14 & 15 Vict., an indecent representation, publicly exhibited in any house, would be punishable by fine and imprisonment, though it could not be shown that it was exhibited for purposes of gain. Other objects can easily be imagined; and yet, in such cases, the wholesome provisions of the Act under discussion would be inapplicable.

Again, by s. 4 of the Act under discussion, "any person aggrieved by any act or determination of the magistrate or justices in or concerning the execution of the Act, may appeal to the next general or quarter-sessions." Is it intended that the provisions of c. 48 of this session should also apply? By that Act, as our readers will remember, it is made lawful for either party to any determination by a justice or justices of any complaint which they have power to determine summarily "by any law now in force, or hereafter to be made," if dissatisfied with the determination as being erroneous in point of law, to apply for a special case setting forth the facts and the grounds of such determination, for the judgment of such one of the superior courts of law as the applicant shall select, but that the person obtaining such case shall be held to have abandoned his right of appeal to the sessions. It is useless to speculate as to what the intention of the Legislature may have been as to this, because it is probable that the point never occurred to them; but, on the construction of the two Acts as they appear in the statute-book, it would seem that a person whose house has been entered, or property seized or destroyed, under the provisions of the Act under discussion, and who should consider himself to be aggrieved by the determination of the justices or a magistrate in some point of law, might abandon his right of appeal under s. 4, and apply for a case to be stated under the provisions of cap. 48.

CAP. LXXXV.—An Act to amend the Law relating to Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England.

As this Act is closely connected with that for amending the law relating to probates and letters of administration which lately came under discussion, it will be convenient to deal with it after a similar fashion, and to notice such of its provisions only as can be prominently classed together under the following heads:—I. As to its effect on existing law, courts, and jurisdictions. II. As to the constitution of the new Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. III. As to those who may practise therein. IV. As to the course of procedure. V. As to appeals. And of these in their order:

I.—As to the Effect of the Act under Discussion on existing Law, Courts, and Jurisdictions.

By s. 2, all jurisdiction now exercisable by any ecclesiastical court in England in respect of divorces à mensâ et thoro, suits of nullity or jactitation of marriage, or for restitution of conjugal rights, and in all causes, suits, and matters matrimonial shall cease to be so exercisable.

One exception to this general enactment is made, however—viz. in reference to the grant of marriage licences; and a common licence for this purpose may, therefore, still, as heretofore, be obtained from the ordinary or his surrogate, or a special one from the Archbishop of Canterbury. It is apprehended, however, that the grant of marriage licences is not properly part of the jurisdiction of any ecclesiastical court, but is incident to the ecclesiastical office; and, therefore, it is conceived that it would have been more accurate not to have mentioned the grant of such licences, as if it formed part of the jurisdiction no longer to be exercisable.

By the 6th section, all the jurisdiction above specified is to be exercised, in the name of the Crown, in a court of record, to be called "The Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes," though (by s. 7) no decree shall be hereafter made for a divorce à mensâ et thoro; but where formerly such a decree would have been pronounced, there is to be a decree for a judicial separation, "which shall have the same force and the same consequences as a divorce à mensâ et thoro now has." It is not easy to see the value of this mere change of name; but neither is it easy to reconcile the definition of a "judicial separation" here given with the 25th and 26th sections, by which certain consequences are directed to follow in every case of judicial separation, which certainly did not belong to a divorce à mensâ et thoro; or with s. 16, in which it is again stated that a sentence of judicial separation is to have the effect of a divorce à mensâ et thoro under the existing law, and such other legal effect as herein mentioned.

By s. 59, no action is henceforth—i. e. after the Act shall come into operation—to be maintainable in England for criminal conversation; but in lieu thereof, it is provided by s. 33 that any husband may claim damages from any person on the ground of his having committed adultery with the wife of such petitioner, and his claim shall be heard and tried on the same principles, in the same manner, and subject to the same or the like rules and regulations as such abolished actions; and the damages to be recovered on such petition are, in all cases, to be ascertained by the verdict of a jury. In all these respects, therefore, this again is merely a change of name; and, in particular, the indecency caused by a public inquiry into matters of this description before a mixed audience is preserved to its full extent. The only real change is in the concluding clause of the 33rd section, which allows the Court to direct in what manner such damages shall be paid or applied, and to appropriate the whole or a part for the benefit of the children of the marriage (not of the adulterous connection), or as a provision for the maintenance of the wife. But even here, it would seem, that, in the absence of any such direction, the intention of the Act is, that the husband shall still be paid in money the sum which a jury shall assess as an equivalent for his dishonour.

By s. 21, a wife deserted by her husband may apply to a magistrate or to the divorce court for an order to protect any money or property she may acquire by her own lawful industry, and property which she may become possessed of, after such desertion, against her husband or his creditors, or any person claiming under him; and (such order being made) such earnings and property shall belong to the wife as if she were a feme sole. But the order must be registered at the district county court, and an application for its discharge may be made by the husband, creditor, or person claiming under the husband. If property so protected be nevertheless seized or held, the specific property, together with a sum double its value, may be recovered at the suit of the wife; and during such order of protection, she is to be, with regard to property and contracts, and suing and being sued, as if she had obtained a decree of judicial separation.

By s. 16, a judicial separation (equivalent to a former divorce à mensâ et thoro) is obtainable for adultery, or cruelty, or desertion without cause for two years and upwards. By s. 27, a dissolution of marriage (equivalent to a former divorce à vinculo matrimonii) is obtainable for adultery of the wife, or for adultery of the husband if coupled with incest or bigamy, or cruelty, such as without adultery would formerly have entitled the wife to a divorce à mensâ et thoro; or for rape or unnatural offence committed by the husband.

II.—As to the Constitution of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

By ss. 8, 9, the judges of the court are to be the Lord Chancellor, the chief justices, and the senior puisne judges for the time being of the superior common law courts, and the judge of the Court of Probate; but this last dignitary is to be called the Judge Ordinary, and may sit alone and determine all matters except petitions for dissolution, or for a sentence of nullity, of marriage, or applications for new trials of questions or issues before a jury, bills of exceptions, special verdicts, and special cases. All these, except the three last, must be determined by three or more of the judges of the court (one being the judge ordinary), and bills of exception, special verdicts, and special cases must be determined by the full court (s. 39).

During the temporary absence of the judge ordinary, the Master of the Rolls, the judge of the Admiralty, a lord justice, a vice-chancellor, or any of the common law judges may, by s. 11, be appointed by the Lord Chancellor to act as judge ordinary.

The Court is to sit in London or Middlesex, or elsewhere, as appointed by Order in Council. It is to have a seal of its own, and is to be attended by the registrars and other officers of the principal registry of the Court of Probate to assist in its proceedings.

Quite independently, however, of the new Divorce Court, the Act under discussion provides (by ss. 17, 18) that applications for restitution of conjugal rights, or for judicial separation, may be also made, by either husband or wife, to any judge of assize for the county in which the applicant is resident; and such restitution or separation may be by him decreed, and order for alimony (in case of an application by the wife) may be made. Such petition, however, may be referred by the judge to any of the Queen's counsel or serjeants-at-law named in the same commission of assize or Nisi Prius; and every order made by such judge, or by a person to whom the matter shall be referred by him, shall be entered as an order of the court (apparently of the new Divorce Court) and have the same force and effect as if it had originally been made by the Court, but may be reviewed, altered, or reversed by the judge ordinary.

III.—As to those who may practise in the Divorce Court.

By s. 15 all persons admitted to practise as advocates or proctors in any ecclesiastical court, and all barristers, attorneys, and solicitors entitled to practise in the superior courts at Westminster, may practise in the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. It is to be noticed that this enactment is much less specific in its terms than those on the same subject in the Probate Act; and it remains to be seen whether this is to be regarded as a blemish or as an improvement. There is no power given to advocates or proctors to practise in matters brought before a judge of assize under ss. 17, 18, or before a metropolitan police magistrate or justices at petty sessions under s. 21.

IV.—As to the Course of Procedure.

By s. 22, in all suits and proceedings other than proceedings to dissolve any marriage, the Court is to proceed and act and give relief on principles and rules conformable, in the opinion of the Court, to those which have hitherto obtained in the ecclesiastical courts; but by s. 53, a general power is given to the Court to make rules and regulations concerning its practice and procedure, which must, however, be laid before Parliament; and the practice, in a variety of particulars, referring chiefly to the trial of questions of fact, the manner of serving petitions, and the mode of taking and procuring evidence, are specifically laid down in the Act (see particularly ss. 36—50), and may be said, generally, to be formed on the model of proceedings in the superior courts, under the Common Law Procedure Acts of 1852, 1854.

V.—As to Appeals.

By s. 55 an appeal lies from the decision of the judge ordinary, of any matter which he may determine sitting alone, to the full court; and, by s. 56, the decision of the full court on any petition for dissolution of a marriage may be appealed against to the House of Lords. If a decree for dissolving a marriage shall be made, and no appeal be lodged, then, at the expiration of the time limited for appealing therefrom (or if such a decree shall, in the result of such appeal, be confirmed), the respective parties may marry again, as if the prior marriage had been dissolved by death. But no clergyman in holy orders, on being applied to to marry such persons in his church or chapel, shall be compelled to solemnise the marriage of any person whose former marriage shall have been dissolved on account of his or her adultery; though, on the other hand, the clergyman so refusing is to permit any other minister in holy orders, entitled to officiate within the diocese, to perform the marriage service in such church or chapel.

CAP. I.

An Act to amend the Act for limiting the Time of Service in the Royal Marine Forces. [9th March, 1857.

WHEREAS, by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 63, "For limiting the Time of Service in the Royal Marine Forces," it was enacted, that no person should be enlisted to serve in the Royal Marine Forces as a marine for a longer term than twelve years, to be reckoned from the day on which the recruit should have been attested, if he should have stated himself to be then of the age of eighteen years, or if not then from the day on which he would complete the age of eighteen years, to be reckoned according to the age stated in his attestation; and it was thereby also enacted, that any marine at any time during the last six months of the term of limited service for which he should have first engaged, or after the completion of such term, might, if approved by his commanding officer or other competent authority as a fit person to continue in her Majesty's service as a marine, be re-engaged to serve for the further term of twelve years in the Royal Marine Forces; and that any marine who should be ordered on foreign service, and who was within three years of the expiration of his first engagement, should be at liberty, with the approbation of his commanding officer, to re-engage, before he embarked for such foreign service, for such period as should complete a total service of twenty-four years: And whereas it is expedient that the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral should be enabled to permit enlistment for such less terms as they may at any time or times deem expedient, and to authorise marines to re-engage for any terms within the limit of service prescribed by the said Act: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Power to the Admiralty to prescribe terms for enlistment and re-engagement of Marines.] Any person may be enlisted to serve in the Royal Marine Forces as a marine for any term not exceeding twelve years, to be reckoned as provided by the hereinbefore recited Act, as may be authorised by any order or orders of the said Commissioners in such behalf; and any marine may, subject to such approbation as in the said Act mentioned, re-engage for such term as may by any order or orders of the said Commissioners be authorised, provided the term for which he is so engaged, with the term of his service under his first enlistment, do not exceed the period of twenty-one years; and the forms of questions on enlistment in schedule A. to the hereinbefore recited Act, and the form of declaration in schedule B. to such Act, and the questions on enlistment and declaration to be made by a marine renewing his service in the schedule to the Marine Mutiny Act in force for the time being, may, when the occasion requires, be filled up with such term or number of years as may for the time being be authorised by such order or orders, instead of the term or number of years mentioned in the directions contained in such schedules.

2. Recited Act and this Act to be read as one.] The hereinbefore recited Act and this Act shall be read and construed together as one Act.

CAP. II.

An Act to facilitate the Appointment of Chief Constables for adjoining Counties, and to confirm Appointments of Chief Constables in certain cases. [9th March, 1857.

WHEREAS, by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, "For the Establishment of County and District Constables by the Authority of Justices of the Peace," it is provided (s. 4) "that it shall be lawful to appoint the same chief constable for two or more adjoining counties or parts of counties, if the justices of such counties, in General or Quarter Session assembled, shall mutually agree to join in such appointment;" and whereas difficulties have arisen in certain cases, in giving effect to the said enactment: Be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Provision above recited repealed.] So much of the 4th section of the said Act of the second and third years of her Majesty as is hereinbefore recited shall be repealed.

2. Power to Justices to appoint a person to be Chief Constable, although he may hold a similar appointment in an adjoining county.] It shall be lawful for the Justices of the Peace of any county, in General or Quarter Session assembled, subject to the provisions of the said Act, to appoint a person to be Chief Constable of their county or of part thereof, although he may hold or be appointed to the office or offices of Chief Constable of any adjoining county or counties, or part or parts of counties; provided, that the justices of each county, in General or Quarter Session assembled, shall declare their consent that the office in their appointment may be held by such person together with such other office or offices.

3. Previous appointments of Chief Constables confirmed, and all acts done by them valid.] And whereas doubts have arisen as to the validity of the appointment of Chief Constables in certain cases, every appointment heretofore made or expressed to be made by the justices of any county, in General or Quarter Session, of a Chief Constable for their county or part thereof, and all acts done under or with reference to every such appointment, either by the person appointed or by the justices of the county, or by any other persons whatsoever, shall be effectual and valid, notwithstanding any defect or informality in or in relation to such appointment; provided such appointment shall have been approved by one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State.

4. Recited Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 69, and this Act, to be construed as one.] The said Act of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, the Acts of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 69, and this Act, shall be construed together as one Act.

CAP. III.

An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the General Board of Health applying the Public Health Act, 1848, to the Districts of Ipswich, Oldbury, Stroud, Llangollen, and Dukinfield; and for altering the Constitution of the Local Board for the Main Sewerage District of Wisbech and Walsoken. [9th March, 1857.

CAP. IV.

An Act to enable the Subjects of the Ionian States to hold Military and Naval Commissions under the Crown. [9th March, 1857.

CAP. V.

An Act to authorise the Inclosure of certain Lands in pursuance of a Report of the Inclosure Commissioners for England and Wales. [21st March, 1857.

CAP. VI.

An Act to reduce the Rates of Duty on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices. [21st March, 1857.

WHEREAS, under and by virtue of the several Acts now in force relating to the Income Tax, certain rates of duty have been granted for and in respect of all property, profits, and gains in the said Acts specified, and the aggregate amount of such rates chargeable for the year commencing from the 5th of April, 1857, is the rate of 1*s.* 4*d.* for every 20*s.* of the annual value or amount of all such property, profits, and gains respectively, subject to certain deductions, abatements, and relief in the several cases in the said Acts specified: And whereas it is expedient to reduce the said rates of duty for the year commencing as aforesaid: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Reduced rate of 7d. in the Pound to be charged for the year commencing from the 5th April, 1857.] In lieu of the rates of duty chargeable under the several Acts in force relating to the Income Tax for the year commencing from the 5th of April, 1857, there shall be charged, raised, collected, and paid, for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for and in respect of all property, profits, and gains chargeable under the said several Acts, the reduced rate of 7*d.* for every 20*s.* of the annual value or amount of all such property, profits, and gains; subject to a further reduction of the rates now in force, in the same proportion that the rate of 7*d.* bears to the rate of 1*s.* 4*d.*, in the several cases mentioned or referred to in the 2nd section of the 18 Vict, c. 20:—Provided, nevertheless, that where under the last-mentioned enactment any person is now chargeable with the rate of 11½*d.* for every 20*s.* of his property, profits, and gains, he shall be chargeable, for the year commencing as aforesaid, at the rate of 5*d.* for every 20*s.* of his profits and gains.

CAP. XIX.

An Act to provide for the Relief of the Poor in Extra-parochial Places. [21st March, 1857.

WHEREAS it is desirable that provisions should be made for the relief of the poor in extra-parochial places, be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. All extra-parochial places, where no Poor-rate is levied, to be deemed Parishes for Relief of the Poor, &c., and Justices, having jurisdiction, to appoint Overseers.] After the 31st of December, 1857, every place entered separately in the Report of the Registrar-General on the last Census which now is or is reputed to be extra-parochial, and wherein no rate is levied for the relief of the poor, shall for all the purposes of the assessment to the poor rate, the relief of the poor, the county, police, or borough rate, the burial of the dead, the removal of nuisances, the registration of parliamentary and municipal voters, and the registration of births and deaths, be deemed a parish for such purposes, and shall be designated by the name which is assigned to it in such report; and the justices of the peace having jurisdiction over such place, or over the greater part thereof, shall appoint overseers of the poor therein; and with respect to any other place being or reputed to be extra-parochial, and wherein no rate is levied for the relief of the poor, such justices may appoint overseers of the poor therein, notwithstanding anything contained in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101.

2. One Overseer only may be appointed by the Justices.] If in any extra-parochial place it shall appear to the justices that two overseers cannot conveniently be appointed from the inhabitant householders thereof, or are not required for such place, such justices may appoint one only; and if it shall appear to them that there is no such householder liable or fit to be appointed, they shall appoint some inhabitant householder of an adjoining parish willing to serve to be such overseer, either with or without an annual salary, such salary, if any, to be approved of by the Poor-law Board, and to be paid out of the poor-rate of such place; and such last-mentioned appointment shall enure until the usual time of the appointment of overseers, and may be renewed from year to year as long as the justices shall find necessary.

3. Provision for the Inns of Court.] In each of the places termed the Inner Temple, the Middle Temple, and Gray's-inn, the officer for the time being acting as the under-treasurer of such inn of court, and in the place termed Charterhouse, London, the registrar shall be the overseer of such place; and in default of any such officer, the justices having jurisdiction in such inns or place respectively shall appoint some inhabitant householder therein to be the overseer thereof for the then current year, and thenceforth from year to year so long as the office of under-treasurer or registrar shall be vacant; provided that such places shall not be liable to be added to any union or other district for the purposes aforesaid.

4. Justices at the Quarter Sessions may, upon application, and with consent, annex any extra-parochial place to an adjoining Parish.] If the owners and occupiers respectively of the land comprised in any extra-parochial place owning and occupying two-thirds in value at least of such land shall express their desire in writing, signed by such major part, that such place be comprised in or annexed to any parish for the purposes aforesaid, and such parish shall consent thereto, such consent to be expressed by a resolution of the vestry, after due notice, the justices of the peace in quarter sessions assembled, or the recorder of the borough if such place be situated within a borough subject to the jurisdiction of a recorder, may make an order for the annexation of such place to such parish, and thenceforth the same shall be deemed to be part of the said parish for all such purposes.

5. Overseers may act as Guardians until there shall be Ratepayers qualified to elect.] If any such place should be added to any union, the overseer or overseers thereof shall act as the guardian or guardians of such place at the Board of Guardians of such union until there shall be ratepayers thereof qualified to elect a guardian; provided that if the Poor-law Board should direct one guardian only to be appointed for any such place, and there shall be two overseers appointed for the same, the overseer first appointed, or whose name shall stand first in the warrant of appointment, shall act as such guardian, and in the case of his decease or incapacity during the year of office the other overseer shall thenceforth act as such guardian; provided also, that no such paid overseer as aforesaid shall be authorised to act as a guardian.

6. All Powers, &c., of Overseers extended to Overseers appointed under this Act.] The overseers or overseer appointed under the authority of this Act shall have all the powers, authorities, privileges, exemptions, and protections which overseers now or hereafter shall possess, and shall be subject to all the obligations, responsibilities, penalties, and consequences which overseers are now or may hereafter be liable to.

7. Certain places excepted.] Provided, that nothing above contained shall apply to any extra-parochial place in respect whereof there shall be any agreement with any parish as to the liability of such place to contribute to the poor-rate of such parish contained in any Act of Parliament.

8. Provision for extra-parochial places adjoining Districts acting under Local Acts.] Where there is any extra-parochial place contained in or adjoining to any district comprising any parish or parishes, in which district the relief of the poor is administered under the authority of a local Act, the Poor-law Board may, with the consent of the occupiers and owners of two-thirds in value of the land comprised in such place, and with the consent of the guardians acting in that district, by order direct such place to be added, for the purposes of administration of relief to the poor, to such district, upon such conditions and subject to such provisions and regulations as shall appear to them to be necessary for such purposes.

9. Bishop may authorise Publication of Banns in Church or Chapel of the Church of England in extra-parochial place.] Where any extra-parochial place has belonging to or within it any church or chapel of the Church of England, the Bishop of the diocese within which such church or chapel shall be locally situate may, if he think fit, authorise by writing under his hand and seal the publication of banns and the solemnisation of marriages by banns or license in such church or chapel of persons residing within such extra-parochial place, and such written authorisation shall be registered in the registry of the diocese.

10. Provisions as to the keeping of Marriage Registers to extend to any Church or Chapel where Banns may be published.] Provided always, that all provisions now in force or which may hereafter be established by law relative to providing and keeping marriage registers in any parish churches shall extend and be construed to extend to any church or chapel in which the publication of banns and solemnisation of marriages shall be so authorised as aforesaid, in the same manner as if the same were a parish church, and everything required by law to be done relative thereto by the churchwardens of any parish church, shall be done by the churchwarden or chapelwarden or other officer exercising analogous duties in such church or chapel, or if there shall be no such officer, then by such person as shall be appointed in that behalf by the Bishop of the diocese.

11. Terms used in this Act.] The words used in this Act shall be construed in the like manner as in the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76; and the provisions contained therein, and in the subsequent Acts explaining and extending the same, and not repealed, shall, so far as they shall be consistent herewith, be extended to this Act.

CAP. XX.

An Act to apply a Sum out of the Consolidated Fund to the Service of the Year One thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven, and to appropriate the Supplies granted in this Session of Parliament. [21st March, 1857.

20 & 21 VICTORIÆ.

CAP. I.

An Act for the Amendment of the Cinque Ports Act. [26th June, 1857.

WHEREAS, by the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 48, intituled "An Act for the better Administration of Justice in the Cinque Ports," it was enacted (by the 5th section), that, from and after the granting of a charter of incorporation to certain parishes or places therein mentioned, amongst which was St. John the Baptist (called Margate), or any one of them, or any part thereof, certain Acts and portions of Acts therein mentioned should be and the same were thereby repealed, so far as the same concerned or affected the part comprised in such charter; and that from and after the date of such charter, no Court of Sessions to be holden for the town and port of Dover, nor any justices thereof, should have any jurisdiction or authority over or in respect of the district comprised in any such charter; and no such district shall be liable to any rate, cess, or impost to which the same or the inhabitants thereof would but for the now-reciting Act be liable as a member or liberty of Dover, save as thereinafter otherwise provided; and whereas the inhabitant householders of the town of Margate, being part of the said parish of St. John the Baptist, called Margate, have, in pursuance of the provisions of an Act (1 Vict. c. 78), intituled "An Act to amend an Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," petitioned her Majesty to grant a charter of incorporation to the inhabitants of the said town of Margate, within the limits defined in the schedule to an order of the General Board of Health, bearing date the 3rd day of July, 1851, whereby, and by means of "The Public Health Supplemental Act, 1851, No. 2," the Public Health Act was applied to the said town; and whereas notice of such petition, and of the time when the same was ordered by her Majesty to be taken into consideration by her Privy Council, was duly published in the London Gazette one month, at least, before such petition was considered, as hereinafter mentioned; and whereas her Majesty's said Privy Council did proceed to consider the said petition, and having fully considered it, have advised her Majesty to grant a charter of incorporation to the inhabitants of the said town of Margate, within the district set forth in the said order of the General Board of Health; and whereas, if such charter as aforesaid be granted, the provisions of the said recited Act, with respect to the district comprised in such charter, will take effect, and thenceforward, and until the grant of a commission of the peace and quarter sessions of the peace for such district, inconveniences may arise, unless the said recited Act be amended; and whereas it is expedient that the said recited Act should be amended, Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Sect. 5 of recited Act not to apply to any District until her Majesty shall have granted a Commission of the Peace and a Court of Quarter Sessions thereto.] The provisions contained in the 5th section of the said recited Act shall not apply or have any effect, with reference to any district comprised within any charter of incorporation to be granted to any parish or place mentioned in the said Act or any part thereof, unless and until her Majesty shall have granted a commission of the peace and a court of quarter sessions for the district comprised in any such charter, but on the grant of a commission of the peace and court of quarter sessions to any such district, the said provisions contained in s. 5 of the said recited Act shall thereupon take effect, and come into force, with respect to such district.

CAP. II.

An Act to enable her Majesty to settle an Annuity on her Royal Highness the Princess Royal. [26th June, 1857.

CAP. III.

An Act to amend the Act of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Years of her Majesty, to substitute in certain cases other Punishment in lieu of Transportation [26th June, 1857.

WHEREAS, an Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 99) was passed to substitute in certain cases other punishment in lieu of transportation; and it is expedient that such Act should be amended: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Sects. 1, 2, 3, and 4 of recited Act repealed.] Sects. 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the said Act shall be repealed.

2. Sentence of Transportation abolished, and sentence of Penal Servitude substituted.] After the commencement of this Act, no person shall be sentenced to Transportation; and any person who, if this Act and the said Act had not been passed, might have been sentenced to Transportation, shall, after the commencement of this Act, be liable to be sentenced to be kept in Penal Servitude for a term of the same duration as the term of Transportation to which such person would have been liable if the said Act and this Act had not been passed; and in every case where, at the discretion of the Court, one of any two or more terms of Transportation might have been awarded, the Court shall have the like discretion to award one of any two or more of the terms of Penal Servitude which are hereby authorised to be awarded instead of such terms of Transportation; provided always, that any person who might at the discretion of the Court have been sentenced either to Transportation for any term or to any period of imprisonment, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be sentenced either to Penal Servitude for the same term, or to the same period of imprisonment; and in any case in which before the passing of the said Act sentence of seven years' Transportation might have been passed, it shall be lawful for the Court, in its discretion, to pass a sentence of Penal Servitude of not less than three years.

3. Provisions of Acts concerning Transported Offenders to apply to Offenders under sentence of Penal Servitude.] And whereas the provisions applicable to persons under sentence of Transportation extend to persons under sentence of Penal Servitude conveyed to parts beyond the seas in those cases only where they are conveyed to and kept in places of confinement appointed under the said Act or the Act of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, and it is expedient to extend the said provisions to other cases:—Any person now or hereafter under sentence or order of Penal Servitude may, during the term of the sentence or order, be conveyed to any place or places beyond the seas to which offenders under sentence or order of Transportation may be conveyed, or to any place or places beyond the seas which may be hereafter appointed as herein mentioned; and all Acts and provisions now applicable to and for the removal and transportation of offenders under sentence or order of Transportation to and from any places beyond the seas, and concerning their custody, management, and control, and the property in their services, and the punishment of such offenders if at large without lawful cause before the expiration of their sentence, and all other provisions now applicable to and in the case of persons under sentence or order of Transportation shall apply to and in the case of persons under sentence or order of Penal Servitude, as if they were persons under sentence or order of Transportation.

4. Existing power to appoint places of Transportation to be applicable for the purposes of this Act.] The provisions and powers of the said Act of 5 Geo. 4, authorising the appointment (by her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council) of any place or places beyond the seas to which felons and other offenders under sentence or order of Transportation shall be conveyed, and all other powers of her Majesty, or the Lord Lieutenant or Chief Governor or Governers of Ireland, for the like purpose, shall extend and be applicable to and for the appointment of any place or places beyond the seas to which offenders under sentence or order of Penal Servitude may be conveyed, as herein provided.

5. Magistrates may recommit Convicts whose Licences are revoked to Penal Servitude in any Convict Prison.] And whereas by the said Act of 16 & 17 Vict. it is provided, that any convict whose licence is revoked shall be recommitted to the prison or place of confinement from which he was released by virtue of the said licence: Be it enacted, that, from and after the passing of this Act, any such convict may be recommitted by the magistrate issuing his warrant in that behalf, either to the prison from which he was released by virtue of his licence, or to any other prison in which convicts under sentence of Penal Servitude may be lawfully confined.

6. All Enactments referring to Transportation to have reference to Penal Servitude.] Where in any enactment now in force the expression "any crime punishable with Transportation," or "any crime punishable by law with Transportation," or any expression of the like import is used, the enactment shall be construed and take effect as applicable also to any crime punishable with Penal Servitude.

7. Recited Act and this to be read as one.] The said Act of 16 & 17 Vict. and this Act shall be read and construed together as one Act.

8. Commencement of Act.] This Act shall commence on 1st of July, 1857.

CAP. XIII.

An Act to facilitate the Procuring of Sites for Workhouses in certain cases. [13th July, 1857.

WHEREAS it is provided by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69, that any ecclesiastical corporation sole may dispose of, by way of absolute sale, or in exchange for any messuages, lands, or other hereditaments, any lands or buildings for the purpose of the same being used as or converted into a Workhouse, or of being occupied with a Workhouse, or for any other purpose relating to the relief of the poor which the Poor-law Commissioners might approve of, and to convey the same, and the fee simple and inheritance thereof, unto the guardians of any union or parish, or their successors, and to accept from and give to such guardians any moneys by way of equality of exchange; and whereas difficulty has arisen in carrying this provision into execution where the person who constitutes any ecclesiastical corporation sole is insane, and it is expedient to provide a remedy for such cases, Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Provision for the Acquisition of Sites for a Workhouse when the Land belongs to an Ecclesiastical Corporation Sole unsound in Mind.] If the guardians of any union or parish, or the managers of any school district, shall be desirous of purchasing or of exchanging for the purposes mentioned in the said Act, or in any Act incorporated therewith or extending or explaining the same, any land or building belonging to any ecclesiastical corporation sole, and the person for the time being entitled to such land or building by virtue of his office shall be found upon a commission issued by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as in the Act of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, to be insane, it shall be competent for such guardians or managers to petition the said Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, for leave to purchase or exchange any such land or buildings so belonging to such corporation sole, and upon such petition the said Lord Chancellor may make such order as shall seem to him to be proper; and if he shall see fit to authorise the sale or exchange of any land or building, the same shall, on behalf of such corporation sole, be conveyed to or received in exchange from such guardians or managers, as the case may be (with the consent of the ordinary having jurisdiction over such corporation sole, and with such further consents if necessary as are hereinafter mentioned), by such person as the said Lord Chancellor shall by order appoint, and the purchase-money or the money to be received for equality of exchange on behalf of such corporation sole shall (except as hereinafter mentioned) be paid into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to be placed to his account to the credit of the said corporation sole, and thenceforth all proceedings authorised by the 2nd section of the said hereinbefore first-mentioned Act shall be applicable to such sum of money paid to the account of the said Accountant-General.

2. Certain Consents to be obtained to the Acquisition.] Provided nevertheless, that if the said corporation sole shall be the incumbent of any benefice, the consent of the patron of the said benefice shall be necessary to perfect and complete such sale or exchange as aforesaid; and if the said land or building so to be sold or exchanged as aforesaid or any part thereof shall have been purchased by the Governors of the Bounty of Queen Anne for the augmentation of the maintenance of the poor clergy, or have been otherwise appropriated or annexed by or with the consent, concurrence, or direction of the said Governors to the said benefice for the augmentation thereof, the consent of the said Governors shall be necessary to perfect and complete such sale or exchange as aforesaid, and in either of such cases the said purchase-money, or the money to be received for equality of exchange as aforesaid, shall be paid to the said Governors, and the receipt of the treasurer for the time being of the said Governors shall be sufficient discharge for the said moneys, or for so much thereof as in such receipt shall be expressed to be received; and all the moneys to arise from such purchase or exchange as aforesaid shall (subject to any stipulation or agreement which the said Governors in their discretion may think proper to make for payment thereout of the costs and expenses of such sale or exchange) be appropriated by the said Governors to the particular benefice to which the said land or building comprised in such sale or exchange shall have previously belonged, and shall be applicable and disposable by them, for the benefit and augmentation of such benefice, in such and the same manner, and with such and the same powers of investment and other powers or authorities in all respects according to the rules and regulations of the said Governors for the time being, as if the said moneys or the stocks or funds which might be purchased therewith were then originally appropriated by the said Governors to such benefice out of the general funds and profits of the said Governors, or otherwise for the benefit and augmentation thereof.

3. Application of Dividends or Annual Income until Investment.] Until the said purchase money or the money so to be paid for equality of exchange as aforesaid shall have been reinvested in the purchase of land, tithes, or other hereditaments for the benefit of the said corporation sole, the interest, dividends, or annual income from time to time accruing thereon shall be applied in like manner as the rents and profits of the land or building so purchased or exchanged would have been applicable if the same land or building had not been purchased or exchanged; and the said Lord Chancellor may make such order or orders from time to time as may be requisite for the purpose of such application.

4. How Consent of Patron, &c., to be given.] The consent of the said ordinary, patron, and Governors hereby required shall be testified by the said ordinary, patron, and Governors respectively executing the deed or other assurance by which the land or building sold or exchanged shall be conveyed or assured, except that in the case of any land or building of copyhold or customary tenure which shall be conveyed or assured by surrender, such consent shall be testified by any writing under the corporate seal, or the hand and seal, as the case may be, of each of the consenting parties; which writing, if produced to the lord or steward of the manor of which the said land or building shall be holden, shall be a sufficient authority to such lord or steward for accepting from the person so appointed or ordered to convey as aforesaid a surrender of the same land and building, and such writing shall be entered, with the surrender, upon the court rolls of the said manor.

5. Provision where the Right of Patronage is in the Crown, the Duke of Cornwall, or in Persons under Disability.] In any case where upon the sale of any such land or building as aforesaid belonging to any benefice the patronage of the said benefice shall be in the Crown, or the advowson and right of patronage of such benefice shall be part of the possessions of the Duchy of Cornwall, or the patron of such benefice shall be a minor, idiot, lunatic, or feme covert, the consent required by this Act on the part of the patron of such benefice shall be testified by the execution of such deed or assurance or other writing as aforesaid by such and the same persons as by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 23, intituled "An Act to amend the Law for providing fit Houses for the Beneficed Clergy," are in like cases directed or authorised to testify the consent of the patron to the exercise of the several powers given by the said last-mentioned Act, or by certain other Acts therein mentioned or referred to, and in all other cases the consent required by this Act on the part of the patron of any benefice shall be given by the person or persons who would be entitled to present, nominate, or collate to such benefice in case the same were actually vacant at the time of giving such consent.

6. Interpretation of the Word "Benefice."] In the construction of this Act the word "benefice" shall be taken to extend to and comprise all rectories with cure of souls, vicarages, perpetual curacies, and chapelries, the incumbents of which respectively shall in right thereof be corporations sole.

7. Provisions of 7 Will. 4, and 1 Vict. c. 50, and Interpretation of Terms in 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, to apply.] The provisions of the 1 Vict. c. 50, shall be applicable to this Act, and the several terms herein used shall be construed as in the 109th section of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, and as in the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, respectively.

CAP. XIV.

An Act to amend the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856.

[13th July, 1857.

WHEREAS it is expedient that further provision should be made for the incorporation and regulation of Joint-Stock Companies, and that for that purpose the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, should be amended: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

PRELIMINARY.

1. Short Title of Act.] This Act may be cited for all purposes as "The Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1857."

2. Definition of Principal Act and Joint-Stock Companies Acts.] "The Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856," hereinafter called "the Principal Act," and this Act, shall, so far as is consistent with the context and objects of such Acts, be construed as one Act; and this Act and the Principal Act may be cited together for all purposes as "The Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857."

REGISTRY (PART I. OF PRINCIPAL ACT).

3. Penalty on Partnerships exceeding a certain Number.] The 4th section of the Principal Act shall be repealed, and in lieu thereof be it enacted as follows: If after the passing of this Act more than twenty persons carry on, in partnership, any trade or business, having for its object the procurement of gain to the partnership, then, unless such persons are included within one or more of the classes following (that is to say)—

(1) Are registered as a company under the Principal Act;
(2) Are a company incorporated or otherwise legally constituted by or in pursuance of some Act of Parliament, royal charter, or letters patent; or,
(3) Are engaged in working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the stannaries;

each one of the persons so carrying on business in partnership together contrary to this provision shall be severally liable for the payment of the whole debts of the partnership, and may be sued for the same without the joinder in the action or suit of any other member of the partnership.

4. The Registrar to give Certificate of Incorporation.] The registrar shall on payment of five shillings issue a certificate of incorporation of any company to any person applying for the same, and such certificate shall be admissible in evidence in like manner as the certificate of incorporation directed to be given by the Principal Act.

REGISTER OF SHAREHOLDERS (PART I. OF PRINCIPAL ACT).

5. Power of Limited Company to convert paid-up Shares into Stock.] Any limited company may by special resolution convert into stock any shares which have been fully paid-up; and upon such conversion being made all the provisions of the Principal Act or of this Act which require or imply that the capital of the company is divided into shares of any fixed amount, and distinguished by numbers, and all the provisions of the Principal Act that require the company to keep a register of shareholders, or to make an annual list of shareholders in the register, shall cease as to so much of the capital as has been so converted into stock.

6. Company to give Notice of Conversion of Capital into Stock.] Any company that has converted any portion of its capital into stock shall give notice of such conversion, specifying the shares so converted, to the registrar of Joint Stock-Companies, within fifteen days from the date of the last of the meetings at which the resolution was passed by which such conversion was authorised, and the Registrar shall forthwith record the fact of such conversion: if such notice is not given within the period aforesaid, the company shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such neglect to give notice continues.

7. Register of Holders of Stock.] Any company that has converted any portion of its capital into stock shall keep at the registered office of the company a register of the names and addresses of the persons for the time being entitled to such stock, and such register shall be open to inspection in the manner and subject to the penalties in and subject to which the register of shareholders is by the Principal Act directed to be kept open.

8. Remedy for improper Entry or Omission of Entry in Register of Stock.] If the name of any person is without sufficient cause entered or omitted to be entered in the register of stock of any company, such person, or any holder of stock in the company, may apply to have the register rectified in manner directed by the 25th section of the Principal Act.

9. Power of Court under 25th Section of Principal Act to decide on disputed Questions.] The Court may in any proceeding under the 25th section of the Principal Act decide on any question relating to the title of any person who is a party to such proceeding, to have his name entered in or erased from the register, whether such question arises between two or more holders or alleged holders of shares or stock, or between any holders or alleged holders of shares or stock and the company, and generally the Court may in any such proceeding decide any question that it may be necessary or expedient to decide for the rectification of the register.

10. Penalty on not forwarding Copies of Memorandum, &c., to Shareholders.] If any company makes default in forwarding copies of the memorandum of association and articles of association to shareholders, in pursuance of s. 27 of the Principal Act, the company so making default shall for each offence incur a penalty not exceeding £1.

WINDING-UP BY COURT (PART III. OF PRINCIPAL ACT).

11. Power to arrest Shareholder about to abscond or to remove or conceal any of his Property.] Where an order has been made for winding up a company under the Third Part of the Principal Act, if upon the application of the official liquidator it appears to the Court having jurisdiction in the matter of such winding-up that there is probable cause for believing that any contributory to such company is about to quit the United Kingdom, or otherwise abscond, or to remove or conceal any of his goods or chattels, for the purpose of evading payment of calls, or for avoiding examination in respect of the affairs of the company, the Court may, by warrant directed to such person or persons as it thinks fit, cause such contributory to be arrested, and his books, papers, moneys, securities for moneys, goods, and chattels, to be seized, and him and them to be safely kept until such time as the Court may order.

12. Arrested Shareholder may apply to Court for his Discharge.] Any contributory who has been arrested or whose goods or chattels have been seized under any such warrant as aforesaid may, at any time after such arrest or seizure, apply to the Court that issued the warrant to discharge him from custody, or to direct the delivery to him of any books, papers, moneys, securities for money, goods or chattels, that may have been seized; and the Court shall take such application into consideration, and shall make such order thereon as it thinks just.

13. Calls under Third Part of Principal Act to be Specialty Debt.] All calls that are authorised by the Third Part of the Principal Act to be made on a contributory, in the event of the company to which he belongs being wound up by the Court or voluntarily, shall be deemed in England and Ireland to be specialty debts due from such contributory to the company.

OFFICIAL LIQUIDATORS (PART III. OF PRINCIPAL ACT).

14. Proviso as to Appointment of Liquidators by Courts other than Court of Bankruptcy.] In cases within the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland, or of the Court of Session in Scotland, or of the Court of the Stannaries, the Court having jurisdiction shall, in the appointment of an official liquidator or official liquidators, consult the interests of both the creditors and contributories, and hear such creditors or contributories as it thinks fit to hear with respect to such appointment. It may, unless both the creditors and contributories concur in the appointment of a single liquidator, appoint one or more liquidator or liquidators to act on behalf of each of such parties. It may declare, that, in case of difference, any act may be done by a majority of liquidators; or it may require the liquidators in all cases of difference to apply to the Court. It may do anything hereby authorised to be done, either upon the first appointment of a liquidator, or at any subsequent stage of the winding-up; but, notwithstanding anything herein contained, it shall not be obligatory on the Court to appoint more than one liquidator, if in its discretion it thinks that such appointment will be most conducive to justice.

15. Provision as to Appointment of Liquidators by Court of Bankruptcy.] In cases within the jurisdiction of any Court of Bankruptcy the official assignee shall, where a liquidator is appointed by the creditors, be considered as appointed as the representative of the contributories, and where a liquidator is appointed by the contributories be considered as appointed as the representative of the creditors.

16. Extension of Power to compromise Debts.] The power of compromising debts and claims given by the Principal Act to the liquidators therein mentioned shall be deemed to extend to the compromise of any calls or debts due from any contributory or alleged contributory to the company on receipt of a smaller sum in lieu of a greater, or upon such terms as may be agreed upon, with power to the liquidators to take any security for any calls or debts so due, and to give effectual discharges on completion of such compromise, subject to this proviso, that no such compromise shall be made by any official liquidator except with the sanction of the Court, and, after giving such notice to creditors, and subject to such conditions as to obtaining the consent of creditors, or any portion of them, as the Court may direct, and that no such compromise shall be made by the liquidators appointed on the voluntary winding-up of a company, except with the sanction of a special resolution.

17. Power for Liquidators to accept Shares as a Consideration for Sale of Property of Company.] Where a company is being wound up voluntarily, and the whole or a portion of its property is about to be sold to another company, registered under this Act, the liquidators of the first-mentioned company may, with the sanction of a special resolution of the company by whom they were appointed, receive, in compensation or part compensation for such sale, shares in such other company, for the purpose of distribution amongst the shareholders of the company being wound up, or may enter into any other arrangement whereby the shareholders of the company being wound up may, in lieu of receiving cash or shares, or in addition thereto, participate in the profits of or receive any other benefit from the purchasing company; and any sale made or arrangement entered into by the liquidators in pursuance of this section shall be binding on the shareholders of the company being wound up, subject to this proviso, that if any shareholder in the company being wound up who has not voted in favour of the special resolution passed by his company at either of the meetings held for passing the same expresses his dissent from any such special resolution, in writing addressed to the liquidators or one of them, and left at the registered office of the company, not later than seven days after the date of the last of the meetings at which such special resolution was passed, such dissentient shareholder may require the liquidators to do such one of the following things as they may prefer—that is to say, either to abstain from carrying such resolution into effect, or to purchase the shares held by the dissentient shareholders or shareholder, at such price as may be agreed upon or settled by arbitration, such purchase money to be paid before the company is dissolved, and to be raised by the liquidators in such manner as may be determined by special resolution.

18. Power of Liquidators to call General Meeting.] In the case of a company being wound up voluntarily, the liquidators may, from time to time, during the continuance of such winding-up, summon general meetings of the company for the purpose of obtaining the sanction of the company by a special resolution, or for such other purposes as they think fit.

19. Power of Court to adopt Proceedings of voluntary Winding-up.] Where a company is in course of being wound up voluntarily, and proceedings are taken for the purpose of having the same wound up by the Court, the Court may, if it thinks fit, notwithstanding that it makes an order directing the company to be wound up by the Court, provide in such order, or in any other order, for the adoption of all or any of the proceedings taken in the course of the voluntary winding-up. It may also, instead of making an order that the company should be altogether wound up by the Court, direct that the voluntary winding-up should continue, but subject to such supervision of the Court, and with such liberty for creditors, contributories, or others to apply to the Court, and generally upon such terms and subject to such conditions as the Court thinks just.

20. Penalty on Liquidators not reporting Dissolution of Company to Registrar.] If the liquidators make default in reporting to the Registrar, in the case of a company being wound up by the Court, the decree declaring the company to be dissolved, and, in the case of a company being wound up voluntarily, the resolution declaring the company to have been fairly wound up, they shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 for every day during which they are so in default, and moreover shall not, while so in default, be entitled to recover any compensation for their services as liquidators.

21. Remedy for Liquidators having in their Hands undistributed Assets of the Company.] If, at the expiration of twelve months from the date of the dissolution of any company that has been wound up, there remain in the hands of the liquidators any money, shares, or other property which they have been unable, by reason of the absence or death of any persons entitled thereto, or for any other reason, to distribute amongst the parties so entitled, the liquidators shall be deemed to be trustees of such moneys, shares, or other property, within the meaning of the 11 Vict. c. 96, intituled "An Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for the Relief of Trustees," and of any Act amending the same, and may pay or transfer such moneys, shares, or other property into the Court of Chancery accordingly.

ALTERATION OF FORMS (PART III. OF PRINCIPAL ACT).

22. Proviso as to Alterations in Table B.] No alteration made by the Board of Trade in the Table marked B. contained in the Schedule to the Principal Act shall affect any company registered prior to the date of such alteration, or repeal, as respects such company, any portion of such Table, unless such alteration is adopted by special resolution.

REPEAL (PART V. OF PRINCIPAL ACT).

23. Repeal of s. 107 of the Principal Act.] The 107th section of the Principal Act shall be repealed, and in lieu thereof be it enacted, that—(1) The 8 Vict. c. 110, intituled "An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint-Stock Companies;" and (2) The 11 Vict. c. 78, intituled "An Act to amend an Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint-Stock Companies;" and (3) "The Limited Liability Act, 1855," shall be deemed to have been and still to remain unrepealed as to any company completely registered which has not obtained registration under the Principal Act, until such time as such company obtains registration under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, but from and after such time, and not before, shall be repealed as to such last-mentioned company; and, subject as aforesaid, all the Acts mentioned in this section shall be repealed.

COSTS BY LIMITED COMPANIES.

24. Provision as to Costs in Actions brought by certain Limited Companies.] Where a limited company is plaintiff or pursuer in any action, suit, or other legal proceeding, any judge having jurisdiction in the matter may, if it be proved to his satisfaction that there is reason to believe that if the defendant be successful in his defence the assets of the company will be insufficient to pay his costs, require sufficient security to be given for such costs, and may stay all proceedings until such security be given.

TEMPORARY PROVISIONS (PART V. OF PRINCIPAL ACT).

25. Provisions as to Companies completely Registered under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110.] Where any company completely registered under the said Act 8 Vict. c. 110, has obtained registration under the Principal Act after 3rd of November, 1856, but before the passing of this Act, such registration shall be as effectual to all intents as if it had taken place on or before the said 3rd of November, 1856.

26. Repeal of s. 110 of Principal Act.] The 110th section of the Principal Act shall be repealed.

27. Time within which completely Registered Companies are required to register.] Every company completely registered under the said Act 8 Vict. c. 110, including any company that has obtained a certificate of complete registration under "The Limited Liability Act, 1855," but excluding any company formed for the purpose of insurance, shall, if it has not already registered under the Principal Act, register under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, on or before the 2nd of November, 1857, or incur such penalty as is hereinafter mentioned.

28. Penalty on Company not registering.] If any company hereby required to register under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts makes default in registering on or before the said 2nd of November, 1857, then, from and after such day until the day on which such company is registered under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, the following consequences shall ensue (that is to say)—(1) The company shall be incapable of suing either at law or in equity, but shall not be incapable of being made a defendant to a suit either at law or in equity; (2) No dividend shall be payable; (3) Each director or manager of the company shall for each day during which the company is in default incur a penalty of £5, and such penalty may be recovered by any person, and be applied by him to his own use: nevertheless such default shall not render the company so being in default illegal, nor subject it to any penalty or disability other than as specified in this section.

29. Power for Companies to register at their Discretion.] Every company consisting of seven or more shareholders, having a capital of fixed amount, divided into shares, also of fixed amount, duly constituted by law prior to the passing of this Act, and not being a company hereby required to be registered, may at any time hereafter, upon compliance with the provisions of the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, register itself as a company under such Acts, with or without limited liability; subject to this proviso, that no company shall be registered as a limited company unless either the liability of the shareholders is already limited to the amount of the unpaid calls on their shares, or an assent to its being so registered has been given by three-fourths in number and value of such of its shareholders as may have been present, personally or by proxy, in cases where proxies are allowed by the regulations of the company at some general meeting summoned for that purpose.

30. Power for existing Company to register Amount of Stock instead of Shares.] Where an existing company, authorised to register under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, has had the whole or any portion of its capital converted into stock, such company shall, as to the capital so converted, instead of delivering to the Registrar the statement of capital and shares required by the Principal Act, deliver to the Registrar a statement of the amount of stock belonging to the company, and the names of the persons who were holders of such stock, on some day to be named in the statement, not more than six days before the day of registration.

31. Provision as to List of Shareholders required by s. 111 of Principal Act.] The list of shareholders required by s. 111 of the Principal Act to be delivered to the Registrar need not be made up to the day of the registration of the company, but may be made up to any day not more than six days before such day of registration.

32. Exemption of certain Companies from Payment of Fees.] No fees shall be charged in respect of the registration under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, of any company existing at the date of this Act, and required or authorised to be registered by the said Joint-Stock Companies Acts, or either of them, in cases where such company is not registered as a limited company, or where, previously to its being registered as a limited company, the liability of the shareholders was limited by some other Act of Parliament or by letters patent.

33. Grant of Certificate of Registration, and Effect thereof.] The 113th section of the Principal Act shall be repealed; and in lieu thereof be it enacted as follows:—Upon compliance with the requisitions of the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, respecting registration, the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies shall certify under his hand that the company applying for registration is incorporated as a company under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, and in the case of a limited company that it is limited, and thereupon such company shall be incorporated accordingly; and all provisions contained in any Act of Parliament, deed of settlement, letters patent, or other instrument constituting or regulating any company that has been registered under the provisions of the said 113th section, or any company that may hereafter be registered under this section, shall be deemed to be regulations of the company, in the same manner as if they were contained in a registered memorandum of association and articles of association; and all the provisions of the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, shall apply to such company, in the same manner in all respects as if it had been originally incorporated under such Acts, subject to the reservation in favour of creditors contained in the Principal Act, and to the following provisoes:—(1) That Table B. shall not, unless adopted by special resolution, apply to any such company as is mentioned in this section. (2) That no company shall have power to alter any provision contained in any Act of Parliament relating to the company. (3) That no company shall have power, without the sanction of the Board of Trade, to alter any provision contained in any letters patent relating to the company. (4) That nothing herein contained shall authorise any company to alter any such provisions contained in any deed of settlement, letters patent, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company, as would, if such company had originally been incorporated under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, have been contained in the memorandum of association, and are not authorised to be altered by such last-mentioned Acts. But nothing herein contained shall derogate from any power of altering its constitution or regulations which may be vested in any existing company by virtue of any such Act of Parliament, deed of settlement, letters patent, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company. Moreover, the repeal of the said 113th section of the Principal Act shall not affect any right acquired under the section so repealed.

An Act to continue the Powers of the Commissioners under an Act of the 17*th &* 18*th Years of her Majesty, concerning the University of Oxford and the College of St. Mary Winchester, and further to amend the said Act.* [10th August, 1857.

WHEREAS an Act was passed, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81, "To make further provision for the good Government and Extension of the University of Oxford, of the Colleges therein, and of the College of St. Mary Winchester," and the said Act has been amended by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 31: And whereas by the first-recited Act it was provided that the powers thereby conferred on the Commissioners for the purposes of that Act should be in force until the 1st of January, 1857, and that it should be lawful for her Majesty, if she should think fit, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to continue the same until the 1st of January, 1858, and no longer: And whereas her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, has continued the said powers until the 1st of January, 1858: And whereas it is expedient that the said powers should be further continued, and that the said first-recited Act should be amended as hereinafter mentioned: Be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Powers of the Commissioners continued until 1*st July*, 1858.] The powers conferred on the Commissioners by the first-recited Act, as extended by the secondly-recited Act and this Act, shall continue until the 1st of July, 1858; and all powers, which under the said recited Acts respectively might have been exercised by colleges or other bodies or persons during the continuance of the powers of the Commissioners under the first-recited Act, shall continue and may be exercised until the said 1st day of July, 1858.

2. The Foundation of Mr. John Michel may be consolidated with the old Foundation of Queen's College.] It shall be lawful for the Commissioners under the said Act of the 17 & 18 Vict. to frame such ordinance or ordinances as may appear to them expedient for consolidating the foundation of John Michel, Esq., in the Queen's College in the said university with the foundation of Robert de Eglesfield, commonly called the Old Foundation, in the said college, and for vesting the endowments, lands, advowsons, and real and personal property vested in the visitors of the said foundation of John Michel, or otherwise held for the benefit of such foundation, in the provost and scholars of the said Queen's College, and for placing the foundation so consolidated under the visitorship of the Lord Archbishop of York, the present visitor of the old foundation of the said Queen's College, and for providing for the discharge of the duties of the visitors of the foundation of John Michel as towards the existing fellows, scholars, and exhibitioners of that foundation, and for establishing in respect of such consolidated foundation, and the emoluments, property, and income thereof, any such regulations as under the said Act might be established in respect of a college of one foundation, and the property and income and college emoluments thereof; such ordinance or ordinances, if sanctioned and confirmed as required in respect of the ordinances framed by the Commissioners under ss. 28 and 29 of the same Act, shall take effect for the purposes aforesaid in the same manner as if it had been within the powers vested in the Commissioners under the said sections, and all the provisions of the said Act and the Act amending the same applicable to ordinances framed by the Commissioners under the said Act, shall be applicable to such ordinance or ordinances as may be framed under the powers of this Act.

3. Power to Colleges with Consent of Visitor to apply Property held for Purchase of Advowsons for Benefit of Colleges, &c.] It shall be lawful for any college within the University from time to time, with consent of the visitor, to appropriate and apply any property, or the income of any property, held by or in trust for the college, for the purpose that the same or the income thereof may be applied in purchasing advowsons for the benefit of the college, to the augmentation of the endowment of livings in the patronage of the college to such amount as may be by law allowed, or towards the building of fit and suitable parsonage houses on any livings in the patronage of the college, or to the foundation or augmentation of scholarships or exhibitions, or to other purposes for the advancement of religion, learning, and education within the college; and in exercise of this power the college may annex to any living in the patronage of the college (by way of augmentation of the endowment of such living) any tithe rent-charge which may be vested in the college, or any portion thereof, in consideration of the appropriation to other purposes of the college of a part of the trust property or income, not exceeding the amount which the visitor shall adjudge to be an adequate consideration for the tithe rent-charge so to be annexed; provided that this power shall not extend to property or income applicable to the purchase of advowsons for the benefit of scholars or exhibitioners on any particular foundation within a college.

4. Certain Provisions of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, incorporated with this Act and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81, so far as relates to certain Lands.] The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, except the parts and enactments of that Act with respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement, and with respect to the recovery of forfeitures, penalties, and costs, and with respect to lands required by the promoters of the undertaking, but which shall not be wanted for the purposes thereof, shall be incorporated with and form part of this Act and of the "Oxford University Act, 1854," so far as relates to land within one mile and a half of Carfax in the city of Oxford required for the erection of any buildings for the extension of the buildings of the said university or of any college or hall therein, or for purposes of utility or recreation relating to the said university or to any college or hall therein, and as if the corporate name of the university or college, as the case may be, had been inserted therein instead of the expression "the promoters of the undertaking."

CAP. XXXI.

An Act to amend and explain the Inclosure Acts.

[10th August, 1857.

WHEREAS it is expedient that "The Acts for the Inclosure, Exchange, and Improvement of Land" should be further amended and extended: Be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Fences may be dispensed with.] In any case of inclosure in which it shall appear to the Inclosure Commissioners of England and Wales to be unnecessary that all or any of the allotments to be made under the award of the valuer acting in the matter of such inclosure should be fenced, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners, by an order under their hands and seal, if they shall see fit to dispense with the erection of boundary and other fences, to direct that such allotments or any of them shall be distinguished by metes and bounds: provided nevertheless, that any person interested in an allotment may at any time fence the same at his own expense.

2. Allotments, until fenced, to be deemed a regulated Pasture.] So long as any of such allotments remain unfenced, the same shall be subject to the provisions of the said Acts relating to regulated pastures, in such manner as the valuer, with the approbation of the said Commissioners, shall by his award direct; and the owners thereof shall enjoy all such rights of common by reason of vicinage as they were entitled to prior to the setting out of such allotments.

3. Notices and Claims may be sent by Post, or left at usual Place of Abode.] Where by the said Acts notice is required to be given to any designated person, or any claim is required to be delivered to the valuer in the matter of any inclosure, such notice may be given or claim delivered either by sending it by the post in a registered letter, or by leaving it at the office or usual place of abode of such person or valuer respectively.

4. Exchanges of Land by Railway and other Companies.] For the purpose of removing all doubts as to the power of companies incorporated by special Act of Parliament for the making and maintaining of any railway, canal, docks, harbour, waterworks, or other work, to exchange land belonging to such companies under the provisions of the said Acts, be it declared and enacted, that every such company shall be deemed to be a person interested within the meaning of "The Acts for the Inclosure, Exchange, and Improvement of Land," for the purpose of exchanging land belonging to the said company, and that notwithstanding the provisions in any Act of Parliament relating to such company specially limiting the purposes to which such land belonging to the said company shall be applicable.

5. Exchange of Lands in which her Majesty is interested in reversion.] In case any person interested according to the definition contained in 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, s. 16, shall apply to the Inclosure Commissioners for an order of exchange of any land in which her Majesty, her heirs or successors, have any estate or interest in right of the Crown, in reversion or remainder expectant upon the determination of any estate for life or other larger interest, it shall be lawful for the Inclosure Commissioners to make such order of exchange, if they shall so think fit, provided that the consent of her Majesty, her heirs or successors, shall have been previously signified thereto by some writing under the hand of one of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues; and every such order of exchange which shall be made with such consent shall be valid and effectual to all intents and purposes whatsoever, and shall be binding upon her Majesty, her heirs and successors, and a duplicate thereof shall in every case be deposited in the office of land revenue records and inrolments: provided always, that, in case any such order shall, previously to the passing of this Act, have been made upon the application of any person as above mentioned, with the said consent previously signified as aforesaid, every such order shall be as valid and effectual, and be in like manner binding upon her Majesty, her heirs and successors, as if the said consent had been given under the provisions of this Act.

6. On an Exchange, Inequality of Value may be compensated by a Rentcharge.] Where the value of any land proposed to be exchanged under the Acts for the Inclosure, Exchange, and Improvement of Land, or any of them, exceeds the value of the land, rights, easements, or hereditaments for which the same is proposed to be exchanged, the difference in value may be compensated by a perpetual rentcharge of such amount as in the opinion of the valuer or Commissioners (as the case may require) will be just, to be charged upon the land for the excess in value whereof the same is intended as an equivalent, or upon such part thereof as may appear to the valuer or Commissioners (as the case may require) to afford sufficient security for such rentcharge.

7. On a Partition, Disproportion in Value of Allotments in Severalty may be compensated by a Rentcharge.] Where any land of which a partition is proposed to be made under the said Acts, or any of them, cannot, in the opinion of the valuer or Commissioners (as the case may be), be conveniently allotted in severalty in parts or shares of the like proportional values as the undivided parts or shares in respect whereof the partition is proposed to be made, the difference in such proportional values may be compensated by a perpetual rentcharge of such amount, or perpetual rentcharges of such aggregate amount, as in the opinion of the valuer or Commissioners (as the case may require) will be just, to be charged on the land or respective lands for the excess in value whereof the same is, or are intended as, an equivalent or equivalents, or upon such part or respective parts of such land or lands as may appear to the valuer or Commissioners (as the case may require) to afford sufficient security for such rentcharge or rentcharges respectively.

8. Deficiency in Value not to exceed One-eighth of the actual Value.] Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to authorise any exchange or partition, or the creation of any such rentcharge as aforesaid, where, in the opinion of the valuer or Commissioners (as the case may be), the deficiency in value of any land or other hereditaments which would require to be compensated as aforesaid, exceeds one-eighth part of the actual value thereof.

9. Amount of Rentcharge and Lands to be charged to be determined by the Inclosure Award or Order of Exchange, &c.] The amount of the rentcharge or respective amounts of the rentcharges (as the case may be) to be created under this Act, on any such exchange or partition as aforesaid, and the land or lands to be charged therewith, shall respectively be fixed and determined by the inclosure award or order of exchange or partition (as the case may require).

10. Indefeasible Title and Priority and Recovery of Rentcharges.] Every such rentcharge shall be a valid and indefeasible charge upon the land charged therewith by the confirmed inclosure award, or the confirmed order of exchange or partition (as the case may be), subject only to tithe rentcharges, land tax, local rates and taxes, quit or chief rents incidental to tenure, and charges created or to be created under any Act authorising advances of public or private money for drainage or the improvement of lands, and prior to all other charges whatsoever, and shall be recoverable in the same manner as a tithe rentcharge charged under the Act of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, "For the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales."

11. Rentcharge to go with the Land the Deficiency in Value whereof it compensates.] Every rentcharge created under this Act shall be and enure to, for, and upon the same uses, trusts, intents, and purposes, and be subject to the same conditions, charges, and incumbrances, as the land or hereditaments in respect of the deficiency in value whereof such rentcharge is made payable will stand and be limited and subject to after the confirmation of the inclosure award or the order of exchange or partition (as the case may be).

12. Protecting from Nuisances Town and Village Greens and Allotments for Exercise and Recreation.] And whereas it is expedient to provide summary means of preventing nuisances in town greens and village greens, and on land allotted and awarded upon any inclosure under the said Acts as a place for exercise and recreation: If any person wilfully cause any injury or damage to any fence of any such town or village green or land, or wilfully and without lawful authority lead or drive any cattle or animal thereon, or wilfully lay any manure, soil, ashes, or rubbish, or other matter or thing thereon, or do any other act whatsoever to the injury of such town or village green or land, or to the interruption of the use or enjoyment thereof as a place for exercise and recreation, such person shall, for every such offence, upon a summary conviction thereof before two justices, upon the information of any churchwarden or overseer of the parish in which such town or village green or land is situate, or of the person in whom the soil of such town or village green or land may be vested, forfeit and pay, in any of the cases aforesaid, and for each and every such offence, over and above the damages occasioned thereby, any sum not exceeding forty shillings; and it shall be lawful for any such churchwarden, or overseer, or other person, as aforesaid, to sell and dispose of any such manure, soil, ashes, and rubbish, or other matter or thing, as aforesaid; and the proceeds arising from the sale thereof, and every such penalty, as aforesaid, shall, as regards any such town or village green not awarded under the said Acts or any of them to be used as a place for exercise and recreation, be applied in aid of the rates for the repair of the public highways in the parish; and shall, as regards the land so awarded, be applied by the persons or person in whom the soil thereof may be vested in the due maintenance of such land as a place for exercise and recreation; and if any manure, soil, ashes, or rubbish be not of sufficient value to defray the expense of removing the same, the person who laid or deposited such manure, soil, ashes, or rubbish shall repay to such churchwarden, or overseer, or other person, as aforesaid, the money necessarily expended in the removal thereof; and every such penalty as aforesaid shall be recovered in manner provided by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43; and the amount of damage occasioned by any such offence as aforesaid shall, in case of dispute, be determined by the justices by whom the offender is convicted; and the payment of the amount of such damage, and the repayments of the money necessarily expended in the removal of any manure, soil, ashes, or rubbish shall be enforced in like manner as any such penalty.

13. Power to Commissioners to review Instructions given under s. 34 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, as to Appropriation of Allotments for Sites of Schools, &c.] Where instructions shall have been or shall hereafter be given under s. 34 of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, for the appropriation of any allotment for the site of a school, and such instructions shall not set forth with sufficient clearness for what class of children the school shall be provided, or to whom the site shall be conveyed, or in what manner and by whom the school shall be managed, visited, and inspected, the Inclosure Commissioners shall, upon the requisition of any five persons, if there be so many, or, if not, a majority of the persons interested in the land to be inclosed, call a further meeting in order to resolve upon other or further instructions; and if at such meeting any other or further instructions be agreed upon, the same, if sanctioned by the Commissioners, shall thenceforth be added to or substituted for, as the case may require, all former instructions relative to such school; and the Commissioners shall appoint (whenever needful) some person to convey the allotment for a school in pursuance of the instructions last approved.

14. Act deemed Part of "The Acts for the Inclosure, &c., of Land."] This Act shall be taken to be a part of the said Acts, and shall be construed therewith, and be deemed to be included under any reference to "The Acts for the Inclosure, Exchange, and Improvement of Land."

CAP. XXXII.

An Act for the better Supply of Water for the use of Vessels resorting to the Harbour of Refuge at Portland, and for enabling the Commissioners of the Admiralty to supply such Water; for vesting in the said Commissioners certain Lands belonging to her Majesty; and for other Purposes relating thereto. [10th August, 1857.

CAP. XXXIII.

An Act to regulate certain Proceedings in relation to the Election of Representative Peers for Ireland. [10th August, 1857.

WHEREAS, by the 40 Geo. 3 (I.), intituled "An Act to regulate the Mode by which the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons, to serve in the United Kingdom on the Part of Ireland, shall be summoned and returned to the said Parliament," certain provisions were made for regulating the proceedings in relation to the elections of Representative Peers for Ireland, and it is expedient to amend the same: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. As to Issue of Writs in future on Occasion of Seat of a Temporal Peer of Ireland being vacated.] On any seat of the twenty-eight Lords Temporal being hereafter vacated, the writ to be issued, according to the provisions of the said Act of the Parliament of Ireland, under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, to the Chancellor, Keeper, or Commissioners of the Great Seal of Ireland, shall direct him or them to cause writs to be issued by the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland to the Peers entitled to receive the same according to the provisions of the said Act, and also to every Peer in respect to whose right to vote at the election of Representative Peers the House of Lords shall have directed a certificate to be sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Ireland, stating that the Chancellor or Keeper of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom had reported to the House that the right of such Peer to vote had been established to his satisfaction, and that the House had ordered such report to be sent to the said Clerk of the Crown in Ireland; and all the provisions of the said Act applicable to temporal Peers receiving writs under the same, and to the writs issued to such Peers, shall be held to apply to temporal Peers receiving writs, and to the writs issued under this Act.

2. As to Returns to such Writs.] Any Peer of Ireland who shall have taken and subscribed in the House of Lords the oaths which are or shall be by law required to be taken and subscribed by the Lords of the United Kingdom before they can sit and vote in the Parliament thereof may make return to a writ issued under this or the said Act, in the same manner as a Representative Peer on the part of Ireland who has taken and subscribed the said oaths in the House of Lords is permitted to do under the said Act, and any Peer of Ireland receiving such writ may take and subscribe the said oaths in her Majesty's High Court of Chancery in England as well as in Ireland, or in her Majesty's Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer in England or Ireland, or in any division of the Court of Session in Scotland, or before any Lord Ordinary of the said Court, or before the lieutenant of any county in Great Britain or Ireland, or any member of her Majesty's Privy Council in Great Britain or Ireland, or any judge of a county court in England, or any sheriff in Scotland, or any British Ambassador or Minister accredited to any foreign court, or the secretary of any British embassy or mission, or the governor, lieutenant-governor, or officer administering the government of any of her Majesty's plantations, colonies, or possessions abroad, or any of her Majesty's judges residing therein, and the Registrar or other proper officer of every such Court; and every person above mentioned before whom the said oaths shall be taken and subscribed shall certify the same, and sign such certificate, which shall be transmitted by such Peer with the return in the manner prescribed in the said Act.

CAP. XXXIV.

An Act to explain an Act for the Settlement of the Boundaries between the Provinces of Canada and New Brunswick. [10th August, 1857.

CAP. XXXV.

An Act to amend an Act of the 15 & 16 Vict., intituled "An Act to amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead in the Metropolis," so far as relates to the City of London and the Liberties thereof." [10 August, 1857.

WHEREAS an Act was passed in the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 85, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead in the Metropolis," containing provisions for the appointment of Burial Boards in the several parishes in the metropolis, and conferring on such Burial Boards various powers and authorities to be exercised in some cases by the Board alone, and in other cases by the Boards with the approval of the vestries of their respective parishes; and whereas it was by the said Act enacted, that the provisions therein contained for the appointment of Burial Boards should not apply to any parish within the limits of the City of London and the Liberties thereof, but it should be lawful for the mayor, aldermen, and commons of the City of London in common council assembled, if and when they should see fit so to do, to authorise and direct the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London to exercise for the said City and Liberties all the powers and authorities vested in the Burial Boards under the said Act; and thereupon such Commissioners should have and exercise for and on behalf of the said City and Liberties all such powers and authorities as were thereby vested in the Burial Board for any parish, or which might be exercised by such Board with the approval of the vestry; and whereas the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London have been authorised by the said mayor, aldermen, and commons in common council assembled, to exercise the powers and authorities vested in the Burial Boards under the said Act, and have provided and constructed a large and spacious cemetery in the parish of Little Ilford in the county of Essex at an expense of seventy-five thousand pounds: And whereas there are more than 100 parishes within the City of London and the Liberties thereof, and it has been found impracticable to obtain the requisite consents of all the vestries of such parishes to the uniform exercise of such powers or authorities by the said Commissioners; and whereas under the provisions contained in the 37th section of the said Act (by which section power is given to the vestry of any parish, with consent of the bishop of the diocese, to revise and vary the fees payable to the incumbent under the provisions of the said Act), a table of fees to be paid to incumbents upon interments which shall take place in the consecrated portion of the said cemetery at Little Ilford has been agreed to by the major part in number of the vestries of the parishes within the City of London and the Liberties thereof, which table of fees has been approved of by the bishop of the diocese, and is contained in the schedule to this Act; and whereas it is expedient that the table of fees so agreed to should be made to apply to the whole of the parishes within the City of London and the Liberties thereof, and that the said Act should be amended by making the consent or approval of the major part in number of the vestries of the several parishes within the City of London and the Liberties thereof sufficient to enable the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London to exercise any power or authority conferred upon them by the said Act, which requires for the exercise thereof the approval or consent of all the vestries of such parishes; and also that the said Act should be amended in manner hereinafter mentioned; and whereas the purposes aforesaid cannot be effected without the authority of Parliament: Be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. The Fees in Schedule to be the Fees payable to Incumbents.] The fees enumerated in the schedule to this Act shall be the fees which the incumbents of the parishes within the City of London and the Liberties thereof shall be entitled to receive upon all interments in the consecrated portion of the said cemetery at Little Ilford, whether of the remains of parishioners or inhabitants of the said parishes, or of any other persons; and the same fees shall be in satisfaction of all claims on the part of such incumbents to fees of every description, whether in respect of burial in vaults or graves, or of the erection of monuments, gravestones, or tablets, or of monumental inscriptions in the said cemetery.

2. Approval of a Majority of Vestries in the City of London to be sufficient.] When and as often as the consent or approval of the vestries of the several parishes within the limits of the City of London and the Liberties thereof is by the said recited Act required for the purpose of enabling the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London to exercise any power or authority given to or vested in them by the said Act, or to execute any act, deed, matter, or thing under the authority of the said Act, or to confirm or render valid any act, deed, matter, or thing made or done, or agreed or proposed to be made or done, by the said Commissioners, then and in every case the consent or approval of the major part in number of the vestries of the several parishes within the said City and Liberties shall be sufficient to enable the said Commissioners to exercise any such power or authority, or to do or execute any such act, deed, matter, or thing as aforesaid, and to confirm and render valid any act, deed, matter, or thing made or done, or agreed or proposed to be made or done, by them, and shall be as valid and effectual for all the purposes of the said Act as if all the vestries of the said parishes within the City of London and the Liberties thereof had actually consented to or approved thereof, or had confirmed the same; provided, that the parishes united under the provisions of the 22 Car. 2, c. 11, or united for ecclesiastical purposes by the provisions of that or any other Act or Acts, shall, for the purposes of this Act and the said recited Act, be and be deemed one parish.

3. Certain Sections in recited Act repealed as to the City of London.] The provisions in the said recited Act contained with reference to fees payable to incumbents, churchwardens, and others for parochial or other purposes, and also with reference to the powers given to vestries of revising and varying, with the consent of the bishop, the fees payable to incumbents, clerks, and sextons, or of substituting fixed payments in lieu thereof, which provisions are comprised in the 32nd, 33rd, 35th, 36th, 37th, and 50th sections of the said Act, shall not apply to parishes situated within the City of London or the Liberties thereof.

4. Commissioners acting as Burial Board, with the Approval of the major Part of the Vestries, to settle Fees payable to Churchwardens, &c.] It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London acting as Burial Board for the several parishes within the City and the Liberties thereof, with the approval of the major part in number of the vestries of such parishes, to settle and determine whether any and what fees shall be payable to the churchwardens, or to the clerk or sexton of any parish within the City of London or the Liberties thereof, or to any trustee or other persons for any parochial or other purpose whatever, on any interment, or for any monument, gravestone, tablet or monumental inscription in any Burial ground already provided or which may hereafter be provided by the said Commissioners, in pursuance of the powers contained in the said Act, and such fees (if any) as shall be so settled and determined shall be paid to the Commissioners, and shall be paid over by them to the parties for the time being entitled to receive the same.

5. Fees to be paid by the Commissioners.] All fees payable under the provisions of this Act to incumbents of parishes within the City of London and the Liberties thereof shall be paid by the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London, by quarterly payments in each year, to such person or persons as shall by such incumbents, or the major part of them, be appointed from time to time to receive the same, and such fees shall be applied according to a scheme to be agreed upon by such incumbents, or the major part of them, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese.

6. Commissioners to settle Fees for Burial of Persons not residing in London.] It shall be lawful for the said Commissioners, subject and without prejudice to the fees payable to incumbents under the provisions of this Act, and subject to the approval required by s. 7 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, to settle a scale of fees for the burial in the cemetery of Little Ilford aforesaid of persons not residing within the City of London or the Liberties thereof, and from time to time to revise and vary the same.

7. Chaplains of Cemetery to conform to Regulations of Commissioners.] The chaplain or chaplains who for the time being shall have been or shall hereafter be appointed under the 39th section of the said recited Act by the incumbents of the parishes within the City of London and the Liberties thereof, for the performance of burials in the consecrated part of the said cemetery, shall conform to all such regulations of the Commissioners of Sewers for the City of London as shall not interfere with the performance of the funeral service according to the order of the United Church of England and Ireland.

8. Interpretation of Terms.] In this Act and in the said recited Act, so far as the same applies to the City of London and the Liberties thereof, the words "parishioner" or "inhabitant" shall mean a person inhabiting a house or dying in one of the parishes in the City of London or the Liberties thereof; and when such house shall be situated in more than one parish, the parish in which the greater part of such house is situated shall be deemed to be the parish of which the person inhabiting the same is a parishioner or inhabitant.

9. Expenses of Act.] All the costs, charges, and expenses of obtaining and passing this Act shall be defrayed out of the consolidated rate authorised to be made by the "City of London Sewers Act, 1848."

CAP. XXXVI.

An Act to supply an Omission in a Schedule to the Act to amend the Acts relating to County Courts. [17th August, 1857.

WHEREAS, by an Act passed in the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 108, "To amend the Acts relating to County Courts," after reciting that the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury had ordered that the salaries of the judges whose names were mentioned in the schedule marked (D.) annexed to the said Act should be fixed at the amounts set opposite to their respective names in such schedule, it is provided, that the judges mentioned in such schedule should continue to receive the salaries therein mentioned to be payable to them respectively so long as they should continue to be judges of the County Courts; and whereas the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury had ordered that T. Falconer, Esq., judge of the County Courts holden at Brecknock, Builth, and other places, and J. St. John Yates, Esq., judge of the County Courts holden at Congleton, Hyde, and other places, should respectively receive a salary of £1,500; and the said T. Falconer and J. St. John Yates are mentioned in the said schedule (D.), but no amounts or sums are set opposite to their respective names in such schedule: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Recited Act to take effect as to Salaries of T. Falconer and J. St. John Yates, Esqrs., when it came into Operation.] The said Act shall be read and take effect as from the time when it came into operation in the same manner as if in the said schedule (D.) the salary of £1,500 had been mentioned to be payable to the said T. Falconer, Esq., and the salary of £1,500 had been mentioned to be payable to the said J. St. John Yates, Esq.; and it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to direct and cause to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the said T. Falconer and J. St. John Yates respectively such sums as, with the payments actually made to them respectively on account of their salaries, will make up the amount of such salaries at the rate aforesaid as from the time when the said Act came into operation.

CAP. XXXVII.

An Act to repeal the 27th Section of the Superannuation Act, 1834. [17th August, 1857.

WHEREAS an Act was passed in the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 24, intituled "An Act to alter, amend, and consolidate the Laws for regulating the Pensions, Compensations, and Allowances to be made to Persons in respect of their having held Civil Offices in his Majesty's Service;" and whereas it is expedient to enforce the provisions of the said Act so far as relates to the abatement to be made under the 27th section of the said recited Act from the salaries of those civil servants of the Crown who have taken office since the 4th of August, 1829: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Sect. 27 of recited Act repealed.] The said 27th section of the said recited Act shall be and the same is hereby repealed from and after the 30th of June, 1857.

CAP. XXXVIII.

An Act to continue the General Board of Health. [17th August, 1857.

WHEREAS, by the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 95, "To make better Provision for the Administration of the Laws relating to the Public Health," it was provided that the General Board of Health should be continued only for one year next after the day of the passing of that Act, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of Parliament; and whereas, by the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 85, the said Board stands continued for one year after the day of the passing of that Act, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of Parliament; and whereas it is expedient that the said Board should be further continued: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Board of Health further continued.] The said Board shall be continued until September 1, 1858.

2. No Salary to be payable to a President holding at the Time of his Appointment any Office of Profit.] If her Majesty shall appoint to be President of the General Board of Health any person who at the time of such appointment shall hold any office of profit under the Crown, the person so appointed shall not receive any salary in respect of such office of President: and if at the time of such appointment he shall be a member of the House of Commons, he shall not by reason of such appointment vacate his seat in Parliament.

CAP. XXXIX.

An Act to regulate the Admission of Attorneys and Solicitors of Colonial Courts in her Majesty's Superior Courts of Law and Equity in England, in certain cases. [17th August, 1857.

WHEREAS, in certain of her Majesty's colonies and dependencies, including certain parts of the territories under the government of the East India Company, the system of jurisprudence is founded on or assimilated to that administered in England, and the Attorneys and Solicitors of the superior courts of law and equity in England are admitted as Attorneys and Solicitors in the courts of law and equity of such colonies and dependencies, on production of their certificates of admission in the English courts aforesaid; and it is considered just and expedient to afford facilities to the Attorneys and Solicitors of the superior courts in certain colonies and dependencies for obtaining admission in her Majesty's courts of law and equity in England: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Short Title.] This Act may for all purposes be cited as "The Colonial Attorneys Relief Act."

2. When Act to come into Operation.] This Act shall not take effect in any one or more of her Majesty's colonies or dependencies until her Majesty has, by Order in Council, to be made as hereinafter mentioned, directed the same to come into operation in respect to such colony or dependency.

3. Attorneys and Solicitors of Colonial Courts to be admitted to Courts of Law and Equity in England.] All persons who, being subjects of the British Crown, have been or shall hereafter be duly admitted and inrolled as Attorneys and Solicitors in the superior courts of law and equity in those of her Majesty's colonies or dependencies where the system of jurisprudence is founded on or assimilated to the common law and principles of equity as administered in England, and where full service under articles of clerkship to an Attorney-at-law for the space of five years at the least, and an examination to test the qualification of candidates, are or may be required previous to such admission, save only in the case of persons previously admitted as Attorneys or Solicitors in the superior courts of law or equity in England, such colonies or dependencies to be from time to time specified in and by Order in Council, as hereinafter provided, shall and may be admitted and inrolled Attorneys in all or any of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, and other courts in England, and Solicitors in the High Court of Chancery in England, subject as hereinafter provided.

4. No Person to be deemed qualified unless he shall pass an Examination, and produce a Certificate from the Judge of the Court where he was admitted.] No person shall be deemed qualified to be admitted as Attorney or Solicitor, under the provisions of this Act, unless he shall pass such examination to test his fitness and capacity as hereinafter provided, and shall produce at such examination a certificate from the presiding judge of the superior court of common law in the colony or dependency where such person shall have been duly admitted an Attorney and Solicitor, and stating the amount of the stamps which have been paid by such person on his articles of clerkship and admission to practise in such colony, in the form or to the effect as contained in Schedule (A.) hereunto annexed, and shall further make affidavit (in such manner as shall be provided by order or regulation to be made by the Judges of the superior courts of common law, and the Master of the Rolls respectively, as hereinafter provided) that he is resident within the jurisdiction of the said superior courts of law and equity in England, and that he has ceased, for the space of twelve calendar months at the least, to practise as Attorney or Solicitor in any colonial court of law.

5. Judges of Courts of Common Law to appoint Examiners.] It shall be lawful for the Judges of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas and Exchequer, or any three or more of them, as and when any person shall, under the provisions of this Act, seek to be admitted as an Attorney, and not as a Solicitor also, and for the Master of the Rolls, as and when any person shall seek as aforesaid to be admitted as a Solicitor, and not as an Attorney also, and for the said Judges or any three or more of them, and the Master of the Rolls, jointly, when any person shall seek as aforesaid to be admitted as an Attorney and Solicitor, and he and they are hereby authorised and required, at any time before he and they shall admit or issue a fiat for the admission of any such person as aforesaid, to examine and inquire by such ways and means as he or they shall think proper touching the qualification and the fitness or capacity of such person to act as an Attorney or Solicitor, or as an Attorney and Solicitor; and for that purpose it shall be lawful for him or them, from time to time, as application for admission as aforesaid shall be made, to appoint such persons as examiners, and to make such orders and regulations for conducting such examination, as he or they shall think proper; and if by any such examination any of the Judges of the said courts of common law shall be satisfied that such person is duly qualified and fit and competent to be admitted to act as an Attorney, then, and not otherwise, any one of the said Judges shall, and he is hereby authorised and required to, administer or cause to be administered to such person the oaths by law required to be administered to Attorneys in England, and, after such oaths taken, to cause him to be admitted an Attorney of such courts, which admission shall be written on parchment, and signed by such Judge, and shall be stamped with the stamps after mentioned; and if, by such examination, the Master of the Rolls shall be satisfied that such person is duly qualified and fit and competent to be admitted to act as a Solicitor, then, and not otherwise, he is hereby authorsed and required to administer or cause to be administered to such person the oaths by law required to be taken, and to cause him to be admitted a Solicitor in the Court of Chancery, and his name to be inrolled as a Solicitor of such Court, which admission shall be written on parchment, and signed by the Master of the Rolls, and shall be stamped with the stamps after mentioned.

6. Stamp Duties on Admissions.] The admission of any person as an Attorney or Solicitor under the provisions of this Act shall be stamped with the stamps by law required to be impressed on the admission of Attorney or Solicitors in England (as the case may be), and the admision first obtained shall be impressed with such further stamps shall, together with the amount of stamps paid on articles of clerkship and admission in the colony (to be ascertained as hereinafter provided), be equal in amount to the sum by law payale on articles of clerkship in England.

7. Power to her Majesty, by Oder in Council, to direct this Act to come into Operation in anyone or more Colony or Dependency.] Her Majesty may from time to time, by Order in Council, direct this Act to come into operation as to any one or more of her Majesty's colonies or dependencies, and thereupon, but not otherwise, the provisions of this Act shall apply to persons duly admitted as Attorneys and Solicitors in the superior courts of law and equity in such colonies or dependencies; but no such Order in Council shall be made in respect of any colony, except upon application made by the governor, or person exercising the functions of governor, of such colony or dependency, and until it shall be shown to the satisfaction of her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies that the system of jurisprudence as administered in such colony or dependency, and the qualification for admission as an Attorney or Solicitor in the superior courts of law and equity in such colony or dependency, answer to and fulfil the conditions specified in s. 3 hereinbefore contained, and also that the Attorneys or Solicitors of the superior courts of law or equity in England are admitted as Attorneys and Solicitors in the superior courts of law and equity of such colony or dependency, on production of their certificates of admission in the English courts, without service or examination in the colony or dependency.

SCHEDULE (A.)

To all whom it may concern, I [name and style of judge] do hereby certify, that [terms of certificate of admission granted to the Attorney in the colony], and that the said [Attorney's name] is now duly inrolled as an Attorney-at-law and Solicitor in this colony, and entitled to practise as such; and further, that no charge or accusation has been established or is pending against the said —— in such his professional character or otherwise affecting his fair fame and repute. And I find that the sum of £—— was paid on articles of clerkship when the said —— was articled, and the sum of £—— on the certificate of admission when he was admitted to practise as aforesaid. [To be signed and attested in the manner usual in other certificates granted by the judge.]

CAP. XL.

An Act to continue and amend the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 89, and also the Laws for the Suppression and Prevention of Illicit Distillation in Ireland; and to constitute the Constabulary Force Officers of Customs for certain Purposes. [17th August, 1857.

CAP. XLI.

An Act to revive and continue an Act to amend the Laws relating to Loan Societies. [17th August, 1857.

WHEREAS an Act was passed in the 3rd and 4th Vict., c. 110, "To amend the Laws relating to Loan Societies," which Act was limited to continue until the 31st of December, 1841, but has been continued by sundry Acts, and lastly by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 109, until the end of the last session of Parliament; and whereas it is expedient that the said Act of the 3 & 4 Vict. should be revived and continued for a limited time, and that Societies established under the said Act should be enabled to wind up their affairs after the expiration of such Act: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, revived and continued.] The said Act of 3 & 4 Vict. shall continue in force until the 1st of August, 1858, and this Act shall be deemed and taken to have effect from the expiration of the time limited for the continuance of the said Act hereby continued by the said Act of 16 & 17 Vict., as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if this Act had actually passed before the expiration of the time so limited.

2. After Expiration of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, Provisions to remain in force as to existing Societies, save as to new Loans.] After the termination of the period limited by this Act for the continuance of the said Act of 3 & 4 Vict., the provisions of the said Act, and all rules certified thereunder, shall, notwithstanding the expiration of the said Act, remain and be in force as regards any Society theretofore established thereunder and then subsisting, and the securities taken by such Society, until the affairs of such Society shall be wound up, and the assets thereof divided; save only that no new Loan shall be made by such Society under the authority of the said Act after such expiration.

3. Repealed Provision of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 23, not to be revived.] The expiration of the said Act of 3 & 4 Vict. shall not operate to revive any part of the Act of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 23, repealed by the first-mentioned Act; but so much of the said Act of Will. 4 as was thereby repealed shall continue repealed notwithstanding such expiration.

CAP. XLII.

An Act to amend "The Burial Grounds (Scotland) Act, 1855." [17th August, 1857.

CAP. XLIII.

An Act to improve the Administration of the Law so far as respects summary Proceedings before Justices of the Peace. [17th August, 1857.

WHEREAS it is expedient that provision should be made for obtaining the opinion of a superior court on questions of law which arise in the exercise of summary jurisdiction by Justices of the Peace: Be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Interpretation of Terms.] In the interpretation and for the purposes of this Act, the following words shall have the meaning hereinafter assigned to them; that is to say,

"Superior Courts of Law" shall, for England, mean the Supreme Courts of Law at Westminster; and for Ireland, the Supreme Courts at Law at Dublin.

"Court of Queen's Bench" shall mean, for England, the Court of Queen's Bench at Westminster; and for Ireland, the Court of Queen's Bench at Dublin.

2. Justices, on Application of a Party aggrieved, to state a Case for the Opinion of Superior Court.] After the hearing and determination by a Justice or Justices of the Peace of any information or complaint which he or they have power to determine in a summary way, by any law now in force or hereafter to be made, either party to the proceeding before the said Justice or Justices may, if dissatisfied with the said determination as being erroneous in point of law, apply in writing within three days after the same to the said Justice or Justices, to state and sign a case setting forth the facts and the grounds of such determination, for the opinion thereon of one of the superior courts of law to be named by the party applying; and such party, hereinafter called "the appellant," shall, within three days after receiving such case, transmit the same to the Court named in his application, first giving notice in writing of such appeal, with a copy of the case so stated and signed, to the other party to the proceeding in which the determination was given, hereinafter called the respondent.

3. Security and Notice to be given by the Appellant.] The appellant, at the time of making such application, and before a case shall be stated and delivered to him by the Justice or Justices, shall in every instance enter into a recognisance before such Justice or Justices, or any one or more of them, or any other Justice exercising the same jurisdiction, with or without surety or sureties, and in such sum as to the Justice or Justices shall seem meet, conditioned to prosecute without delay such appeal, and to submit to the judgment of the superior court, and pay such costs as may be awarded by the same; and the appellant shall at the same time, and before he shall be entitled to have the case delivered to him, pay to the clerk to the said Justice or Justices his fees for and in respect of the case and recognisances, and any other fees to which such clerk shall be entitled, which fees, except such as are already provided for by law, shall be according to the schedule to this Act annexed marked (A), until the same shall be ascertained, appointed, and regulated in the manner prescribed by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 30; and the appellant, if then in custody, shall be liberated upon the recognisance being further conditioned for his appearance before the same Justice or Justices, or, if that is impracticable, before some other Justice or Justices exercising the same jurisdiction who shall be then sitting, within ten days after the judgment of the superior court shall have been given, to abide such judgment, unless the determination appealed against be reversed.

4. Justices may refuse a Case where they think the Application frivolous.] If the Justice or Justices be of opinion that the application is merely frivolous, but not otherwise, he or they may refuse to state a case, and shall, on the request of the appellant, sign and deliver to him a certificate of such refusal; provided that the Justice or Justices shall not refuse to state a case where application for that purpose is made to them by or under the direction of her Majesty's Attorney-General for England or Ireland, as the case may be.

5. Where the Justices refuse, the Court of Queen's Bench may by Rule order a Case to be stated.] Where the Justice or Justices shall refuse to state a case as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the appellant to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench upon an affidavit of the facts for a rule calling upon such Justice or Justices, and also upon the respondent, to show cause why such case should not be stated; and the said Court may make the same absolute or discharge it, with or without payment of costs, as to the Court shall seem meet; and the Justice or Justices, upon being served with such rule absolute, shall state a case accordingly, upon the appellant entering into such recognisance as is hereinbefore provided.

6. Superior Court to determine the Questions on the Case: its Decisions to be final.] The Court to which a case is transmitted under this Act shall hear and determine the question or questions of law arising thereon, and shall thereupon reverse, affirm, or amend the determination in respect of which the case has been stated, or remit the matter to the Justice or Justices, with the opinion of the Court thereon, or may make such other order in relation to the matter, and may make such orders as to costs as to the Court may seem fit; and all such orders shall be final and conclusive on all parties; provided always, that no Justice or Justices of the Peace who shall state and deliver a case in pursuance of this Act shall be liable to any costs in respect or by reason of such appeal against his or their determination.

7. Case may be sent back for Amendment.] The Court for the opinion of which a case is stated shall have power, if they think fit, to cause the case to be sent back for amendment, and thereupon the same shall be amended accordingly, and judgment shall be delivered after it shall have been amended.

8. Powers of Superior Court may be exercised by a Judge at Chambers.] The authority and jurisdiction hereby vested in a superior court for the opinion of which a case is stated under this Act shall and may (subject to any rules and orders of such Court in relation thereto) be exercised by a judge of such Court sitting in chambers, and as well in vacation as in term time.

9. After the Decision of Superior Court, Justices may issue Warrants.] After the decision of the superior court in relation to any case stated for their opinion under this Act, the Justice or Justices in relation to whose determination the case has been stated, or any other Justice or Justices of the Peace exercising the same jurisdiction, shall have the same authority to enforce any conviction or order, which may have been affirmed, amended, or made by such superior court, as the Justice or Justices who originally decided the case would have had to enforce his or their determination if the same had not been appealed against; and no action or proceeding whatsoever shall be commenced or had against the Justice or Justices for enforcing such conviction or order, by reason of any defect in the same respectively.

10. Certiorari not to be required for Proceedings under this Act.] No writ of certiorari or other writ shall be required for the removal of any conviction, order, or other determination in relation to which a case is stated under this Act, or otherwise, for obtaining the judgment or determination of the superior court on such case under this Act.

11. Superior Courts may make Rules for Proceedings.] The superior courts of law may from time to time, and as often as they shall see occasion, make and alter rules and orders to regulate the practice and proceedings in reference to the cases hereinbefore mentioned.

12. "Justices" to include a Stipendiary Magistrate.] The words "Justice or Justices" in this Act shall include a magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis and any stipendiary magistrate.

13. Recognisances how to be enforced.] In all cases where the conditions, or any of them, in the said recognisance mentioned, shall not have been complied with, the Justice or Justices who shall have taken the same, or any other Justice or Justices, shall certify upon the back of the recognisance in what respect the conditions thereof have not been observed, and transmit the same to the clerk of the peace of the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place within which such recognisance shall have been taken, to be proceeded upon in like manner as other recognisances forfeited at quarter sessions may now by law be enforced, and such certificate shall be deemed sufficient prima facie evidence of the said recognisance having been forfeited; provided, that, where any such recognisances shall have been taken in England before a magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis, or by any stipendiary magistrate, all sums of money in which any person or persons shall be therein bound may, if the said magistrate shall think fit, be levied, upon such recognisance being forfeited, and on non-payment thereof, together with the costs of the proceedings to enforce such payment, in the same manner as a police magistrate of the metropolis is now empowered to recover any penalty, forfeiture, or sum of money, by s. 45 of the 2 & 3 Vict. [c. 71] intituled "An Act for regulating the Police Courts of the Metropolis," and that all and every the provisions and enactments contained in the said s. 45 shall extend to and be applicable to this Act, in as ample a manner as if they had been herein re-enacted and made part of the same.

14. Appellants under this Act not allowed to appeal to Quarter Sessions.] Any person who shall appeal under the provisions of this Act against any determination of a Justice or Justices of the Peace from which he is by law entitled to appeal to the quarter sessions shall be taken to have abandoned such last-mentioned right of appeal, finally and conclusively, and to all intents and purposes.

15. Extent of Act.] This Act shall not extend to Scotland.

CAP. XLIV.

An Act to regulate the Institution of Suits at the Instance of the Crown and the Public Departments in the Courts of Scotland. [17th August, 1857.

CAP. XLV.

An Act to make further Provision for defining the Boundaries of certain Denominations of Land in Ireland for public Purposes. [17th August, 1857.

CAP. XLVI.

An Act to appoint additional Commissioners for executing the Acts for granting a Land Tax and other Rates and Taxes. [17th August, 1857.

CAP. XLVII.

An Act to enable Ecclesiastical Persons in Ireland to grant Building Leases of Glebe Lands in certain Cases. [17th August, 1857.

CAP. XLVIII.

An Act to make better Provision for the Care and Education of vagrant, destitute, and disorderly Children, and for the Extension of Industrial Schools. [17th August, 1857.

WHEREAS Industrial Schools for the better training of vagrant children have been and may be established in various parts of England, and it is expedient that more extensive use should be made of such institutions, and that the responsibility of parents to provide for the proper care of their children should be enforced: Be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Short Title.] This Act may be cited as the "Industrial Schools Act, 1857."

2. Interpretation of Terms.] The following words and expressions shall have the meanings hereby assigned to them respectively, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction:

"Police" shall include every policeman, police constable, parish constable, tythingman, or headborough;

"Justices" shall include any two or more justices of the peace acting together, and also any person who by the Act of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, ss. 33 and 34, is authorised to do alone whatsoever is authorised by that Act to be done by any two or more justices of the peace;

"Child" shall include any boy or girl who, in the opinion of the justices, is above the age of seven and under the age of fourteen;

"Certified Industrial School" shall mean any school or institution certified under this Act;

"Managers" shall include the directors, managers, or other persons who shall have the management or control of any Certified Industrial School;

"Parent" shall include any person legally liable to maintain a child, and also any person upon whom an order for affiliation has been made and not quashed;

"County" shall include any city, borough, riding, or division of a county having a separate commission of the peace.

3. Committee of Privy Council on Education may certify any Industrial School under this Act, but not under this Act and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86.] The committee of her Majesty's Privy Council on education may, upon the application of the managers of any school in which industrial training is provided, and in which children are fed as well as taught, direct such person as they may appoint to examine and report to them upon its condition and regulations, and, if satisfied therewith, may grant a certificate under the hand of the President of her Majesty's Privy Council, or of the Vice-President of the said committee thereof, and thenceforth the school shall be a Certified Industrial School within the meaning of this Act; provided always, that no school shall be certified both under this Act and under the Act of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86.

4. Inspector to report annually.] The said committee shall direct a report of the condition and regulations of every Certified Industrial School to be made to them at least once in each year by such person as they may appoint; and if upon his report the committee is dissatisfied with the condition or regulations of the school, they may withdraw their certificate, and, upon notice in writing of such withdrawal having been given to the managers thereof, the school shall cease to be a Certified Industrial School from such time as shall be specified in the notice.

5. Children taken into Custody for Vagrancy may be sent to School while Inquiries are made.] When any child is taken into custody on a charge of vagrancy under any local or general Act, the justices, on receiving satisfactory proof in support of such charge, may, if the parent, or in case of an orphan, if the guardian or nearest adult relative, of the child cannot at once be found, and provided there be any Certified Industrial School the managers of which are willing to receive him, order the child to be sent to such Industrial School for any period not exceeding one week, and shall direct due inquiries to be made, and notice (Form A.) to be given to the parent or guardian or nearest adult relative of the child, if any can be found, or to the persons with whom the child is or was last known to have been residing, of the circumstances under which the child has been taken into custody, and that the matter will be inquired into at the time and place mentioned in the notice.

6. Justice may order Child to be discharged, or sent to a Certified Industrial School, or make Parent responsible.] At the time and place mentioned in the notice, any justices may make full inquiry into the matter, and may, if they shall think fit, order the child to be discharged altogether, or if the parent (or where the child is an orphan, then the guardian or nearest adult relative) be found, may, on conviction of such child on such charge as aforesaid, deliver him up to his parent (or, where the child is an orphan, to the guardian or nearest adult relative as aforesaid), on his giving an assurance in writing (Form B.) that he will be responsible for the good behaviour of the child for any period not exceeding twelve months, and in default of such assurance being given may, by writing under their hands and seals (Form C.), order the child to be sent for such period as they may think necessary for his education and training to any Certified Industrial School the managers of which are willing to receive him; provided, however, if within the county where the child was taken into custody, or any adjoining county, there shall be any Certified Industrial School conducted on the principles of the religious persuasion to which the parent of the child in the opinion of the justices shall belong, and the managers of such school shall be willing to receive him, such child shall be sent to such last-mentioned school, and not to any other.

7. Parent liable to Penalty for Neglect during Responsibility.] If the child, after such assurance as aforesaid being given, be brought up again on a similar charge within the period for which the parent, or, in case of an orphan, the guardian or nearest adult relative, has become responsible for his good behaviour, the justices may inflict a fine upon the parent, or guardian, or nearest adult relative as aforesaid, not exceeding forty shillings, should it be proved to the satisfaction of the justices that the last-mentioned act of vagrancy has taken place through the neglect of the parent.

8. Time passed in Industrial School to be excluded in Computation of Time under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66.] The time during which any child shall be lodged in any Certified Industrial School under this Act, shall, for all the purposes of the Act of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, and of every Act incorporated therewith, be excluded in the computation of the time therein mentioned.

9. Parent may (under Conditions) have Child sent to a School which he approves.] If the parent, or, in case of an orphan, if the guardian or nearest adult relative, objects to the Certified Industrial School to which the child has been sent or ordered to be sent, and proposes some other Certified Industrial School, and proves that the managers of it are willing to receive the child, and, if on any other than religious ground, pays, or finds good security to pay, any expenses which may be incurred in consequence of his objection, any justice of the county where the child was taken into custody shall order (Form D.) the child to be sent to the Certified Industrial School proposed by the parent or guardian or nearest adult relative as aforesaid.

10. Book to be kept in which Religious Denomination of Children to be entered.—Certain Hours to be fixed for Visits of Clergymen.] In every Industrial School a book shall be kept by the managers, to which access shall be had at all reasonable hours, in which the religious denomination of the child when admitted to the Industrial School shall be entered; and it shall be lawful, upon the representation of the parent, or, in case of an orphan, then of the guardian or nearest adult relative, of any inmate placed in such Industrial School under the provisions of this Act, for a minister of the religious persuasion of the inmate of such Industrial School, at certain fixed hours of the day, which shall be fixed by the managers for the purpose, to visit such schools for the purpose of affording religious assistance to such inmate, and also for the purpose of instructing such inmate in the principles of his religion.

11. Duplicate of Order to be given to Managers to be sufficient for Detention of Child.] A duplicate of the order under which any child is, in pursuance of this Act, ordered to be sent to a Certified Industrial School, shall be sent to the managers thereof, and shall be sufficient warrant for the detention of the child.

12. On Application of Parent, &c., Child may be discharged from School.] On the application of the parent, or, in case of an orphan, then of the guardian or nearest adult relative, or of the managers, any justices of the county in which the school is situate, or of the county where such parent resides, if satisfied that a suitable employment in life has been provided for the child, or that there is otherwise sufficient cause, may discharge (Form E.) the child from the Certified Industrial School before the full expiration of the period for which he has been sent there, or may order his removal from one Certified Industrial School to another (Form F.), or may order him to be discharged altogether.

13. Child may be discharged on good Security being found.] On good security being at any time found by the parent, or by any other person, any justices of the county in which the Certified Industrial School to which the child has been sent is situate, or of the county where such parent resides, shall order (Form G.) the child to be discharged therefrom; provided always, that the security shall be in such amount as the justices determine, or may be rejected by them altogether, on its being proved to their satisfaction that security for the child has at any time and under any circumstances been previously rejected or forfeited.

14. Child not to be detained beyond the Age of Fifteen.] No person shall be detained in any Certified Industrial School under this Act beyond the age of fifteen years against his consent.

15. On Application of Manager, the Parent may be summoned, and ordered to pay according to his Ability.] Any justices of the county in which the Certified Industrial School to which the child has been sent is situate, or in which the parent is residing, may, upon the complaint of the managers, summon the parent, and examine into his circumstances, and in their discretion may order him (Form H.) to pay to such managers, or to any person authorised by them from time to time to receive it, a weekly sum not exceeding three shillings, until the child attains the age of fifteen years, or is lawfully discharged; and on default of payment for the space of fourteen days the like proceedings may be taken for enforcing and recovering the same as are hereinafter provided for the enforcing and recovering of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by this Act.

16. Parents' Payment may be diminished or increased.] The parent or the managers may at any time apply to any justices of the county in which the Certified Industrial School is situate, or in which the parent is residing, for an order to diminish the amount of the weekly sum payable by the parent, or to increase it to an amount not exceeding three shillings per week; and the justices, on proof that the parent or the managers have given to each other (as the case may be) not less than one week's notice in writing of the intended application, and of the time and place of hearing the same, shall make full inquiry into the matter, and may diminish or increase the amount of the weekly sum payable by the parent, as they think fit, or may release him from such payment altogether (Forms I. and K.).

17. Power to Managers to permit Children to sleep out of School.] The managers may, at their discretion, permit any child to sleep or lodge at the dwelling of his parent, or of any trustworthy and respectable person, and may also, at their discretion, revoke such permission; provided always, that they shall continue to board and feed the child in all respects as if he were lodging in the Certified Industrial School.

18. Children absconding, &c., may be sent back to the School.] If any child, whether lodging in the school or elsewhere, before attaining the age of fifteen years, or being duly discharged, wilfully absconds from the school, or neglects his attendance thereat, any justice of the county in which the Certified Industrial School is situate, or in which the child is re-taken, may, by writing under his hand and seal, order him to be sent back to the school, and to be detained there until he attains the age of fifteen years, or for such shorter period as the justices think fit.

19. Penalties on Persons inducing Children to abscond, &c., or harbouring them.] Any person who directly or indirectly withdraws a child from the Certified Industrial School to which he has been sent, or induces him to abscond therefrom, previous to his attaining the age of fifteen years, or being duly discharged, or who knowingly conceals or harbours him, or in any way prevents his return, shall for every such offence be liable in a penalty not exceeding two pounds, to be recovered by summary proceedings before two justices in or near the place where the offence is committed, or where the offender may at the time being happen to be, in manner provided by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43.

20. Service of Notices.] The leaving of any summons or notice or order authorised to be issued or made by any justices under this Act at the usual or last known place of abode of the party to whom the same respectively is directed shall in every case be deemed a good and sufficient service thereof.

21. Guardians may contract with Managers.] The guardians of any union or any parish wherein the relief to the poor is administered by a board of guardians may, if they deem proper, with consent of the poor-law board, contract with the managers of any Certified Industrial School for the maintenance and education of any pauper child.

22. What is sufficient Evidence as to Certificate of School, Identity of Child, and making of Orders.] Whenever it shall be necessary to prove that any Industrial School is duly certified or sanctioned under this Act, the production of an attested copy of the certificate shall be sufficient evidence thereof; and the production of an original duplicate of the order under which any child has been sent to or is detained in any Certified Industrial School under this Act, or a copy of such order with a memorandum signed by the manager or superintendent, or master or matron of any such school, that the young person named in such order was duly received into and is at the signing thereof detained in such school, or has been otherwise disposed of according to law, and the production of an original duplicate of any order made upon the parent under this Act, or a copy thereof certified by the clerk to the justices making the same to be a correct copy, shall in all proceedings whatsoever be sufficient evidence of the due making and signing of all or any of such orders, memorandum, and certificate respectively, and of the sending, detention, and identity of the child or parent named in such orders respectively, without proof of the signatures or official characters of the justices or other persons appearing to have signed the same respectively.

23. Committee of Education to give Notice of Certified Schools.] Whenever the committee of her Majesty's Privy Council on Education shall at any time grant a certificate under this Act to any Industrial School, they shall within one calendar month cause a notice thereof to be published in the London Gazette, and such publication shall be a sufficient evidence of the fact of such Industrial School having been certified to justify any justices to commit any child thereto, subject to the provisions of this Act; and whenever the committee shall withdraw the certificate granted to any Industrial School, they shall within one calendar month give notice of such withdrawal in the said Gazette.

24. Forms in Schedule may be used.] The several forms in the schedule to this Act annexed, or any forms to the like effect, shall in all cases be sufficient; provided always, that any summons, notice, or order shall not be invalidated for want of form only.

25. Extent of Act.] This Act shall not extend to Ireland or Scotland.

B. shall be released altogether from the payment of the aforesaid weekly sum to the said Managers from the —— day of ——.

Given under our hands and seals this —— day of ——, at ——, in the county aforesaid.

CAP. XLIX.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Banking Companies.

[17th August, 1857.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law relating to copartnerships and companies carrying on the business of Banking, and hereinafter included under the term Banking Companies: Be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

PRELIMINARY.

1. Short Title.] This Act may be cited for all purposes as "The Joint-Stock Banking Companies Act, 1857."

2. Joint-Stock Companies Acts to be incorporated with this Act.] The Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, shall be deemed to be incorporated with and to form part of this Act.

REGISTRATION OF EXISTING BANKING COMPANIES.

3. Sect. 2 of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, repealed.] The 2nd section of the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, shall be repealed so far as relates to persons associated together for the purpose of banking, subject to this proviso, that no existing or future Banking Company shall be registered as a limited company.

4. Banking Companies required to register under this Act.] Every Banking Company consisting of seven or more persons, and formed under the Acts following, or either of them—that is to say,

(1) An Act passed in the 8th Vict., c. 113, and intituled "An Act to regulate Joint-Stock Banks in England;"

(2) An Act passed in the 10th Vict., c. 75, and intituled "An Act to regulate Joint-Stock Banks in Scotland and Ireland," shall, on or before the 1st of January, 1858, register itself as a company under this Act.

5. Penalty on Neglect to register.] If any Banking Company hereby required to register under this Act makes default in registering on or before the said 1st of January, 1858, then, from and after such day, until the day on which such company is registered under this Act, the following consequences shall ensue—that is to say,

(1) The company shall be incapable of suing either at law or in equity, but shall not be incapable of being made a defendant to a suit either at law or in equity;

(2) No dividend shall be payable to any shareholder in such company;

(3) Each director or manager of the company shall for each day during which the company is in default incur a penalty of £5, and such penalty may be recovered by any person, whether a shareholder or not in the company, and be applied by him to his own use.

Nevertheless such default shall not render the company so being in default illegal, nor subject it to any penalty or disability, other than as specified in this section.

6. Banking Companies permitted to register under this Act.] Any Banking Company consisting of seven or more persons, having a capital of fixed amount, and divided into shares also of fixed amounts, legally carrying on the business of Banking previously to the passing of this Act, and not being a company hereby required to be registered, may at any time hereafter, with the assent of a majority of such of its shareholders as may have been present in person, or in cases where proxies are allowed by the regulations of the company, by proxy, at some general meeting summoned for the purpose, register itself as a company other than a limited company under this Act, and when so registered all such provisions contained in any Act of Parliament, letters patent, or deed of settlement, constituting or regulating the company, as are inconsistent with the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, or with this Act, shall no longer apply to the company so registered; but such registration shall not take away or affect any powers previously enjoyed by such company of banking, issuing notes payable on demand, or of doing any other thing.

7. Existing Companies not to pay Fees.] No fees shall be payable in respect of the registration under this Act of any Banking Company existing at the time of the passing of this Act.

8. Registration under this Act not to affect Obligations incurred previously to Registration.] The registration under this Act of any Banking Company existing at the time of the passing of this Act, and hereby required or authorised to be registered, shall not affect or prejudice the liability of such company to have enforced against it or its right to enforce any debt or obligation incurred, or any contract entered into by, to, with, or on account of such company, previously to such registration; and all such debts, obligations, and contracts shall be binding on the company when so registered, and the other parties thereto, to the same extent as if such registration had not taken place.

9. Saving of Liabilities of Persons holding Shares before Registration under Act.] Every person who at or previously to the date of the registration under this Act of any Banking Company hereby required or authorised to be registered may have held shares in such company shall, in the event of the same being wound up by the Court or voluntarily, be liable to contribute to the assets of the company the same amount that he would if this Act had not been passed have been liable to pay to the company, or for or on account of any debt of the company in pursuance of any action, suit, judgment, or other legal proceeding that might, if this Act had not been passed, have been instituted or enforced against himself or the company.

10. Continuation of existing Actions and Suits.] All such actions, suits, and other legal proceedings as may at the time of the registration under this Act of any company hereby required or authorised to be registered have been commenced by or against such company or the public officer thereof may be continued in the same manner as if such registration had not taken place; nevertheless execution shall not issue against the effects of any individual shareholder in or member of such company upon any judgment, decree, or order obtained against such company in any action, suit, or proceeding so commenced as aforesaid; but, in the event of the property and effects of the company being insufficient to satisfy such judgment, decree, or order, an order may be obtained for winding up the company in manner directed by the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857.

WINDING UP OF THE BANKING COMPANIES.

11. Certain Acts not to apply to Companies registered under this Act or Acts incorporated herewith.] The following Acts, that is to say—

(1) The Act of the 11th Vict., c. 45,
(2) The Act of the 13th Vict., c. 108,
(3) The Act of the 8th Vict., c. 111,
(4) The Act of the 9th Vict., c. 98, shall not apply to companies registered under this Act or under the Acts incorporated herewith or either of them; and all companies so registered shall be wound up in manner directed by the said incorporated Acts.

REPEAL.

12. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 75, repealed.] The above-mentioned Acts, that is to say—

The said Act passed in the 8th Vict., c. 113.

The said Act passed in the 10th Vict., c. 75.

shall forthwith be repealed as respects any Banking Company to be formed hereafter, and shall, from and after such time as any company formed in pursuance of such Acts or either of them may have registered as a company under this Act, but not before, be repealed as respects the company so registered; and the articles of Table B. in the schedule annexed to the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, relating to "Shares," to "Transmission of Shares," and to "Forfeiture of Shares," and numbered from 1 to 19, both inclusive, shall, from and after such time as last aforesaid, but subject to the power of alteration conferred by the Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, be deemed to be regulations of any company formed in pursuance of the said Acts passed in the 8th and 10th years of her present Majesty; nevertheless such repeal shall not affect any penalty, forfeiture, or other punishnmet incurred or to be incurred in respect of any offence against any Acts hereby repealed committed before such repeal comes into operation; and notwithstanding anything contained in the said Act of the 8th Vict., c. 113, or in any other Act, it shall be lawful for any number of persons, not exceeding ten, to carry on in partnership the business of banking in the same manner and upon the same conditions in all respects as any company, if not more than six persons, could before the passing of this Act have carried on such business.

FORMATION OF NEW BANKING COMPANIES.

13. New Banking Companies.] Seven or more persons associated for the purpose of banking may register themselves under this Act as a company other than a limited company, subject to this condition, that the shares into which the capital of the company is divided shall not be of less amount than £100 each; but not more than ten persons shall, after the passing of this Act, unless registered as a company under this Act, form themselves into a partnership for the purpose of banking, or if so formed carry on the business of banking.

EXAMINATION OF AFFAIRS IN COMPANY.

14. One-third in Number and Value of Shareholders to apply for Inspectors.] No appointment of inspectors to examine into the affairs of any Banking Company shall be made by the Board of Trade, in pursuance of the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, except upon the application of one-third at the least in number and value of the shareholders in such company.

19TH SECTION OF JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES ACT NOT TO APPLY.

15. Sect. 19 of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47 not applicable to Companies in Scotland.] The 19th section of the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, shall not apply to any Banking Company in Scotland registered under this Act.

TRANSFER OF TRUST PROPERTY.

16. Transfer of Trust Property to Company.] All such estate or interest in real and personal property in England and Ireland, and in property, heritable and moveable, in Scotland, and all such deeds, bonds, obligations, and rights as may belong to or be vested in any person or persons in trust for any Banking Company at the date of its registration under this Act, or in trust for any other company at the date of its registration under he Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, shall immediately on registration vest in such banking or other company; but no merger shall take place of any estates by reason of their uniting in the company under this section, without the express consent of the company, certified by some instrument under their common seal.

BANKING COMPANIES NOT REGISTERED AS SUCH.

17. Liability of Banking Company that is not registered as such.] If, through inadvertence or otherwise, a company that is in fact a Banking Company has, previously to the passing of this Act, been registered as a limited company under the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, or if, through inadvertence or otherwise, a company that is in fact a Banking Company is hereafter registered under the said Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, as a limited company, any company so registered shall not be illegal, nor shall the registration thereof be invalid, but it shall be subject to the following liabilities; that is to say—

(1) Any creditor or member of the company may petition the Court to have it wound up, and the fact of its being registered as a limited company shall of itself be a sufficient circumstance on which an order shall be made for winding up the same;

(2) In the event of such company being wound up, the contributories shall, whether the company is or not registered as a limited company, be liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient to pay its debts, and the costs, charges, and expenses of winding up the same.

SAVING CLAUSES.

18. Exemption of certain existing Banking Companies from Joint-Stock Companies Acts.] The Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, shall not apply to any Banking Company legally carrying on the business of banking previously to the passing of this Act, and not hereby required to be registered, until such time as such company registers itself under this Act, in pursuance of the power hereby given in that behalf.

19. Not to affect Provisions of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 32, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 38.] Nothing herein contained shall affect an Act passed in the 8th Vict., and intituled "An Act to regulate the Issue of Bank Notes, and for giving to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England certain Privileges for a limited Period," or an Act passed in the 9th Vict., c. 38, intituled "An Act to regulate the Issue of Bank Notes in Scotland," or any other Act relating to the issue or circulation of bank notes.

CAP. L.

An Act to amend the Acts concerning Municipal Corporations in England. [17th August, 1857.

WHEREAS, by s. 75 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, "To provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," it was provided, that the trustees appointed under any Act of Parliament for paving, lighting, cleansing, watching, regulating, supplying with water, and improving any borough named in one of the schedules (A.) and (B.) to the Act now in recital, or part thereof, might, if it should seem to them expedient, transfer all the powers vested in them as such trustees by any such Act to the body corporate of such borough, and the body corporate of such borough should thenceforth be trustee for executing by the council of such borough the several powers and provisions of any such Act of Parliament; provided always, that no such transfer should be made of the powers vested by virtue of the Acts mentioned in schedule (E.) to the Act now in recital which relate to the town of Cambridge, without the consent of the chancellor, masters, and scholars of the University of Cambridge: and whereas doubts have arisen as to the construction of the said section, and it is expedient to amend the same as hereinafter provided: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Sect. 75 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76 repealed.] The hereinbefore recited enactment shall be repealed, save so far as relates to any transfer made thereunder before the passing of this Act.

2. Powers, Property, and Liabilities of Trustees for Paving, &c., may be, on the Grant of a Charter of Incorporation under 5 & 6 Will 4, c. 76, transferred to the Body Corporate of the Borough.] The trustees appointed or acting by or under any Act of Parliament for paving, lighting, supplying with water or gas, or cleansing, watching, regulating, or improving, or for providing or maintaining a cemetery or market in or for any borough named in one of the said schedules to the said Act of 5 & 6 Will. 4, or to which a charter of incorporation has been since the passing of this Act or shall be hereafter granted under the provisions of the said Act or otherwise, or any part of any such borough, and whether the powers of such trustees under any such Act do or do not extend beyond the limits of such borough, may, if it seem to them expedient, at a meeting to be called for that purpose, transfer to the body corporate of such borough all the rights, powers, estates, property, and liabilities of such trustees under any such Act as aforesaid, and such transfer shall be made in writing under the common seal of the said trustees if they be a corporation, or, if not a corporation, then by deed executed by the trustees or any two of them acting by the authority of and on behalf of all such trustees; and upon any such transfer being so made, the body corporate to whom such transfer is made shall become and be trustee for executing, by the council of the borough, the several powers and provisions of any such Act as aforesaid; and all the rights, powers, estates, and property vested in the trustees making such transfer shall vest in such body corporate, and all the liabilities and obligations of the said trustees shall stand transferred to and be borne by such body corporate, and the said trustees shall be freed and discharged from all such liabilities and obligations, but nothing herein contained shall authorise any such transfer in the case of the town of Cambridge without the consent required by the said recited enactment.

3. No Transfer to be made without a Resolution of the Borough Council.] Provided always, that no such transfer as aforesaid shall be made or take effect unless and until the council of the borough have resolved, at a meeting of such council holden and convened in manner required by the said Act of Will. 4, to accept the same.

4. Confirmation of Transfers under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 75, of Property and Liabilities.] Where, under the hereinbefore recited enactment, the trustees under any such Act of Parliament as therein mentioned have transferred to the body corporate of any borough the powers vested in such trustees under such Act, and the transfer so made purports to extend to the estates and property vested in such trustees, and their liabilities and obligations on any of such matters, the transfer so made shall be deemed to have been authorised by the said enactment.

5. All Duties imposed upon Town Clerks of Boroughs, &c., by the Act 3 Geo. 4, c. 46, to be performed by the Clerks of the Peace.] Whereas, by an Act passed in the 3rd Geo. 4, c. 46, intituled "An Act for the more speedy Return and levying of Fines, Penalties, and Forfeitures, and Recognisances estreated," certain duties are imposed upon the town clerks of cities, boroughs, or places in England: From and after the passing of this Act, all duties imposed upon town clerks by such Act shall be performed by the clerks of the peace for such cities, boroughs, and places, where the offices of town clerk and clerk of the peace are not united in the same person; and such clerks of the peace are hereby required to make all returns, issue all processes, and do and perform all other acts which are imposed upon town clerks by the said recited Act.

6. In Boroughs consisting of more than One Parish, in case the Burgess Roll for any Parish not made out in any Year, previous Burgess Roll to continue in force for such Parish.] Whereas, by an Act passed in the 7th Will. 4 and the 1st Vict., c. 78, "To amend an Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," it was enacted, that, in every borough in which by reason of any neglect or informality a new burgess roll of the said borough shall not have been made in any year within the time directed by the said Act for the regulation of Municipal Corporations, the burgess roll which was in force before the time appointed for the revision shall continue in force until such new burgess roll shall have been duly made; and whereas the said recited enactment applies only to any borough in which a new burgess roll shall not have been made as therein mentioned; and whereas it is expedient to provide as to any borough consisting of more parishes than one, wholly or in part within any borough in which a new burgess roll shall have been made out, but in which the burgess list or lists of one or more of such parishes wholly or in part within such borough shall have been omitted: Be it enacted, that, in every borough consisting of more parishes than one wholly or in part within such borough in which by reason of any neglect or informality a burgess list of any parish or of parts of any parish within such borough shall not have been made out in any year, or in case such burgess list shall not have been revised as required by the said Act for the regulation of Municipal Corporations, so much of the burgess roll which was in force before the time appointed for the revision as contains the names of the burgesses entitled to vote in respect of property within such parish or part of parish shall continue in force, and be taken to be the list of burgesses entitled to vote in respect of such property until a burgess list for such parish or part of parish shall have been revised and become part of the burgess roll.

7. Overseers of the Poor to make out Burgess Roll on or before the 1st of September in every Year.] Whereas, by the 15th section of the Act "To provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," it was enacted, that, on the 5th of September in every year, the overseers of the poor of every parish wholly or in part within any borough shall make out a list, to be called "the Burgess List," according to the provisions therein contained, and shall deliver the same to the town clerk of the borough on the said 5th of September in every year, and shall keep a true copy of such lists, to be perused without payment of any fee at all reasonable hours between the 5th and 15th of September in every year, and that the town clerk shall forthwith cause copies of all overseers' lists so delivered to him to be printed, and shall cause a copy of all such lists to be published as therein provided on every day during the week next preceding the 15th of September in every year; and whereas it has been found in populous boroughs that the several matters so required to be done by the town clerk cannot be duly carried into effect within the time so specified in that behalf: Be it enacted, that, from and after the passing of this Act, the overseers of the poor of every parish wholly or in part within any borough shall, on or before the 1st of September in every year, instead of on the 5th of September, make out a list to be called "the Burgess List," according to the provisions in the said recited section contained, and shall, on or before the said 1st of September in every year, instead of on the 5th of September, deliver the same to the town clerk of the borough, and shall keep a true copy of such lists, to be perused by any person without payment of any fee at all reasonable hours between the 1st and 15th of September in every year, instead of between the 5th and 15th of September.

8. Acts to be construed as One.] The said Act of Will. 4 and this Act shall be construed together as one Act.

CAP. LIV.

An Act to make better Provision for the Punishment of Frauds committed by Trustees, Bankers, and other Persons intrusted with Property. [17th August, 1857.

WHEREAS it is expedient to make better provision for the punishment of frauds committed by trustees, bankers, and other persons intrusted with property: Be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Trustees fraudulently disposing of Property guilty of a Misdemeanor.] If any person being a trustee of any property for the benefit, either wholly or partially, of some other person, or for any public or charitable purpose, shall, with intent to defraud, convert or appropriate the same or any part thereof to or for his own use or purposes, or shall, with intent aforesaid, otherwise dispose of or destroy such property or any part thereof, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

2. Bankers, &c., fraudulently selling, &c., Property intrusted to their Care, guilty of Misdemeanor.] If any person being a banker, merchant, broker, attorney, or agent, and being intrusted for safe custody with the property of any other person, shall, with intent to defraud, sell, negotiate, transfer, pledge, or in any manner convert or appropriate to or for his own use such property or any part thereof, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

3. Persons under Powers of Attorney fraudulently selling Property guilty of Misdemeanor.] If any person intrusted with any power of attorney for the sale or transfer of any property shall fraudulently sell or transfer or otherwise convert such property or any part thereof to his own use or benefit, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

4. Bailees fraudulently converting Property to their own Use guilty of Larceny.] If any person, being a bailee of any property, shall fraudulently take or convert the same to his own use, or the use of any person other than the owner thereof, although he shall not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailment, he shall be guilty of larceny.

5. Directors, &c., of any Body Corporate or Public Company fraudulently appropriating Property.] If any person, being a director, member, or public officer of any body corporate or public company, shall fraudulently take or apply, for his own use, any of the money or other property of such body corporate or public company, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

6. Or keeping fraudulent Accounts.] If any person, being a director, public officer, or manager of any body corporate or public company, shall as such receive or possess himself of any of the money or other property of such body corporate or public company otherwise than in payment of a just debt or demand, and shall, with intent to defraud, omit to make or to cause or direct to be made a full and true entry thereof in the books and accounts of such body corporate or public company, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

7. Or wilfully destroying Books, &c.] If any director, manager, public officer, or member of any body corporate or public company shall, with intent to defraud, destroy, alter, mutilate, or falsify any of the books, papers, writings, or securities belonging to the body corporate or public company of which he is a director or manager, public officer or member, or make or concur in the making of any false entry, or any material omission in any book of account or other document, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

8. Or publishing fraudulent Statements, guilty of Misdemeanor.] If any director, manager, or public officer of any body corporate or public company shall make, circulate, or publish, or concur in making, circulating, or publishing, any written statement or account which he shall know to be false in any material particular, with intent to deceive or defraud any member, shareholder, or creditor of such body corporate or public company, or with intent to induce any person to become a shareholder or partner therein, or to intrust or advance any money or property to such body corporate or public company, or to enter into any security for the benefit thereof, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

9. Persons receiving Property fraudulently disposed of, knowing the same to have been so, guilty of Misdemeanor.] If any person shall receive any chattel, money, or valuable security which shall have been so fraudulently disposed of as to render the party disposing thereof guilty of a misdemeanor under any of the provisions of this Act, knowing the same to have been so fraudulently disposed of, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be indicted and convicted thereof, whether the party guilty of the principal misdemeanor shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice.

10. Punishment for a Misdemeanor under this Act.] Every person found guilty of a misdemeanor under this Act shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be kept in penal servitude for the term of three years, or to suffer such other punishment, by imprisonment for not more than two years with or without hard labour, or by fine, as the Court shall award.

11. No Person exempt from answering Questions in any Court; Evidence not admissible in Prosecutions under this Act.] Nothing in this Act contained shall enable or entitle any person to refuse to make a full and complete discovery by answer to any bill in equity, or to answer any question or interrogatory in any civil proceeding in any court of law or equity, or in the Courts of Bankruptcy or Insolvency; but no answer to any such bill, question, or interrogatory shall be admissible in evidence against such person in any proceeding under this Act.

12. No Remedy at Law or in Equity shall be affected.—Convictions shall not be received in Evidence in Civil Suits.] Nothing in this Act contained, nor any proceeding, conviction, or judgment to be had or taken thereon against any person under this Act, shall prevent, lessen, or impeach any remedy at law or in equity which any party aggrieved by any offence against this Act might have had if this Act had not been passed; but no conviction of any such offender shall be received in evidence in any action at law or suit in equity against him; and nothing in this Act contained shall affect or prejudice any agreement entered into or security given by any trustee, having for its object the restoration or repayment of any trust property misappropriated.

13. No Prosecution shall be commenced without the Sanction of some Judge or the Attorney-General.] No proceeding or prosecution for any offence included in the 1st section, but not included in any other section of this Act, shall be commenced without the sanction of her Majesty's Attorney-General, or, in case that office be vacant, of her Majesty's Solicitor-General; provided, that, where any civil proceeding shall have been taken against any person to whom the provisions of the said 1st section, but not of any other section of this Act, may apply, no person who shall have taken such civil proceeding shall commence any prosecution under this Act without the sanction of the Court or Judge before whom such civil proceeding shall have been had or shall be pending.

14. If Offence amounts to Larceny, Person not to be acquitted of a Misdemeanor.] If, upon the trial of any person under this Act, it shall appear that the offence proved amounts to larceny, he shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted of a misdemeanor under this Act.

15. Costs of Prosecutions.] In every prosecution for any misdemeanor against this Act, the Court before which any such offence shall be prosecuted or tried may allow the expenses of the prosecution in all respects as in cases of felony.

16. Misdemeanors not triable at Sessions.] No misdemeanor against this Act shall be prosecuted or tried at any court of general or quarter sessions of the peace.]

17. Interpretation of certain Terms.] The word "Trustee" shall in this Act mean a Trustee on some express trust created by some deed, will, or instrument in writing, and shall also include the heir and personal representative of any such Trustee, and also all executors and administrators, liquidators under the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, and all assignees in bankruptcy and insolvency. The word "Property" shall include every description of real and personal property, goods, raw or other materials, money, debts, and legacies, and all deeds and instruments relating to or evidencing the title or right to any property, or giving a right to recover or receive any money or goods; and such word Property shall also denote and include not only such real and personal property as may have been the original subject of a trust, but also any real or personal property into which the same may have been converted or exchanged, and the proceeds thereof respectively, and anything acquired by such proceeds.

18. Act not to extend to Scotland.] This Act shall not extend to Scotland.

CAP. LV.

An Act to promote the Establishment and Extension of Reformatory Schools in England. [25th August, 1857.

FOR promoting the establishment and extension of Reformatory Schools in England, be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Power to Justices of a County or Council of Borough Sessions to grant Money in aid of Reformatory Schools.] It shall be lawful for the justices of the peace of any county, in general or quarter sessions, or for the council of any borough having a separate court of sessions of the peace, upon the application of the directors or managers of any Reformatory School for youthful offenders already established, in whole or in part, by voluntary contributions, or of the promoters of a Reformatory School intended to be so established, to make an order for the payment of money in aid of such Reformatory School, or of the establishment thereof, subject to such conditions as may be agreed upon between such justices or council, and such directors managers, or promoters.

2. Notice of the proposed Grant to be given.] Not less than two months notice shall be given by the clerk of the peace of such county, in some newspaper or newspapers commonly circulated in such county, of the day on which any motion for such order under this Act is to be considered, and the clerk of the peace of the county shall give such notice on the requisition of any five justices acting for such county; and every order by the council of any borough for the payment of money shall be made at a special meeting of such council to be called for that purpose, and notice of such intended resolution shall be given two months before the meeting of the council by advertisement in some newspaper or newspapers generally circulating within the said borough.

3. Money granted to be applied in Purchase of Site, in building, and for like permanent Objects.] The money ordered to be paid under this Act in aid of a Reformatory School shall be applicable to the following purposes—viz.

Towards defraying the expenses of purchasing the site of a School on its first establishment, or the site of any extension or new establishment for the purposes of a School already established, or the expenses of building or fitting up a School on its first establishment, or erecting, altering, or enlarging or fitting up any buildings for the extension or improvement of a School already established; and the justices or council, as the case may be, shall provide for the application of such money accordingly.

4. No Money to be granted to Schools already established, unless certified under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86.—Plans to be approved by Secretary of State.] Provided, that no money shall be ordered to be paid under this Act in aid of any Reformatory School established at the time of the grant, unless the institution has been certified by the Secretary of State under the provisions of the Act of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86, to be useful and efficient for its purpose, nor shall any money be paid under any such order in aid of any School which shall have been so certified in case such certificate shall have been withdrawn; and in every case where money is ordered to be paid under this Act, the plan and particulars of the School intended to be established, or of the extension or new establishment for the purposes of a School already established (as the case may be), shall, before payment of money under the order, be submitted to and approved of by one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State.

5. Justices or Council may contract with the Managers for the Reception of Offenders from their County or Borough.] It shall be lawful for the justices of the peace of any county in general or quarter sessions (notice having been given as herein provided in the case of an order for the payment of money), or for the council of any borough having a separate court of sessions of the peace, at a special meeting of such council called for the purpose, to appoint and empower a committee of such justices or council to enter into an agreement with the directors or managers of any Reformatory School, certified as aforesaid for the reception and keeping in such School from time to time of offenders from such county or borough sentenced to be detained in a Reformatory School, in consideration of such periodical payments as may be agreed upon with such managers or directors; and such justices or council may direct the payment of the money which may from time to time become payable under such agreement.

6. Schools may be visited by Clergymen of Religious Persuasion of Offenders.] In every Reformatory School aided by a grant of money under this Act, or in relation to which any such agreement as last aforesaid shall have been entered into, it shall be lawful, upon the representations of the parent, or in case of an orphan then of the guardian or nearest adult relative, of any offender detained in any such School, for a minister of the religious persuasion of such offender, at certain fixed hours of the day, which shall be fixed by the managers or directors for the purpose, to visit such School for the purpose of affording religious assistance to such offender, and also for the purpose of instructing such offender in the principles of his religion.

7. Moneys granted under this Act how to be raised.] All moneys ordered to be paid under this Act by any justices or council shall be raised and paid in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as moneys to be raised by the justices or council respectively for building, rebuilding, or enlarging any gaol under their respective management; and all moneys directed to be paid from time to time by any justices or council, in pursuance of any agreement under this Act, shall be raised and paid in the same manner as moneys to be raised for the ordinary current expenditure of their several gaols.

8. Contribution by Parents to the Maintenance of Offenders in a Reformatory School how to be enforced.] In every case in which any juvenile offender shall be sentenced to be detained in a Reformatory School under the said Act of the 17 & 18 Vict., or any of the Acts amending the same, by any justices of the peace in petty sessions, or by any stipendiary or police-magistrate in England and Wales, such justices or magistrate, at the time of passing such sentence, or within fourteen days thereof, may issue a summons calling upon the parent or step-parent of such offender to appear before them or him; and on the hearing of such summons, whether the party summoned shall appear or not, may examine into the ability of such parent or step-parent to contribute to such offender's support and maintenance, and may make an order upon him or her for the payment of such weekly sum (not exceeding five shillings) as shall seem reasonable during the whole or any part of the detention of such offender in such Reformatory School; and in every case in which such sentence of detention shall be passed by any court of assize or quarter sessions in England and Wales, such court shall direct any officer of the same to certify the said sentence to the next meeting of justices in petty sessions for the district or town from which such offender shall have been committed (or to any police or stipendiary magistrate of the said district, as the case may be), and such justices or magistrate may proceed to summon the parent or step-parent of such offender, and to make an order upon him or her in manner hereinbefore provided, as if the sentence had been passed by themselves or himself in due course of law.

9. Proceedings for enforcing Contribution may be taken at any Time during the Detention of the Offender.] In any case wherein no such order shall have been made as hereinbefore provided, it shall be lawful, at any time during the detention of such juvenile offender, for any two justices of the peace or any police or stipendiary magistrate in England or Wales acting for the county or borough or other jurisdiction within which the parent or step-parent of such offender shall be residing, on the complaint of any person authorised by one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State to take proceedings under the said Acts or any of them, to summon such parent or step-parent before them, and to examine into his or her ability, and to make such order for a sum not exceeding five shillings per week to be paid by him or her as aforesaid.

10. Power to remit, reduce, or increase the weekly Payments, but not to exceed Five Shillings weekly.] Provided also, that it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace or for any police or stipendiary magistrate in England or Wales from time to time, on the representation of such parent or step-parent, or any person authorised by the Secretary of State to take proceedings as aforesaid, at any time while the first order continues in force, to make further inquiry into the parent's or step-parent's ability, and to remit or lessen the amount of the weekly payment that shall have been previously assessed upon him or her, or to increase the same if they see cause so to do, so that the amount shall not in any case exceed five shillings weekly.

11. Payments how to be made.] All such payments shall be directed by the order to be made to some person to be appointed by one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State to receive such payments within the jurisdiction of the court or justices or police or stipendiary magistrate making the order, or to his agent duly authorised in that behalf, by him to be accounted for and paid over as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may direct.

12. Provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 87, in Case of Default in Payment by Parents to be applicable to the Purposes of this Act.] All the provisions of the Act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 87, which have reference to the case of default being made in the payment of any sum of money which may have become payable by any parent or step-parent under an order made by virtue of that Act, shall be applicable in every respect to every case of default in the payment of any sums directed to be paid by any order made under and by virtue of the present Act; and so much of s. 2 of the said Act of the 18 & 19 Vict. as is inconsistent with the provisions hereinbefore contained shall be repealed.

13. Provision for Care of Juvenile Offenders when discharged from Reformatory Schools.] Whereas it is expedient to make further provision for the due care and protection of juvenile offenders discharged from Reformatory Schools: It shall be lawful for the managers of any Reformatory School, previous to making application for the discharge of any juvenile offender committed to such School, to place such offender on trial with some person, to be named in the licence hereinafter, most willing to receive and take charge of him, and to grant to such offender a licence under their hands or the hand of any one of them to reside with such person for any term not exceeding thirty days, unless sooner called upon by the said managers to return to the said School, and to require such offender to return to the said School at any time during the same; and such managers shall bring back such offender to the said School at the expiration of the said term, provided that such offender shall not have been previously discharged from the School by order of the Secretary of State; and any offender who shall abscond from such person during such term, or shall refuse to return to the Reformatory School at the end of such term, or before the end of the time, when so required, shall be held to have absconded from the School, and shall be liable to the penalties in that case made and provided: Provided always, that no such offender shall be so placed out before the expiration of one-half of the term of detention to which he was originally sentenced.

14. Penalty for harbouring any young Person absconding from a Reformatory.] Any person who, knowing any young person to have been withdrawn or to have absconded from any such School or institution as aforesaid, shall harbour or conceal or assist in concealing such young person, or prevent him or her from returning to such School or institution, shall be liable to the penalty imposed by an Act of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 109, on any one wilfully withdrawing or inducing any young person to abscond from any such School, to be recovered and applied in manner therein mentioned, and failing payment thereof shall be liable to be imprisoned, as in the said enactment mentioned.

15. Interpretation of Terms.] In this Act the word "County" shall mean and include every riding, part, or division of a county, and every liberty having a separate commission of the peace; and the word "Borough" shall include every city or other place mentioned in the schedules to the Act of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76 ("To provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales"), or to which a charter of incorporation has since been granted.

16. Act to extend only to England.] This Act shall extend only to England.

CAP. LVII.

An Act to enable Married Women to dispose of Reversionary Interests in Personal Estate. [25th August, 1857.

BE it enacted &c., as follows:—

1. Married Women may dispose of Reversionary Interests in Personal Estate, and release Powers over such Estate, and also their Rights to a Settlement out of such Estate in Possession.] After the 31st of December, 1857, it shall be lawful for every Married Woman by deed to dispose of every future or reversionary interest, whether vested or contingent, of such Married Woman, or her husband in her right, in any personal estate whatsoever to which she shall be entitled under any instrument made after the said 31st of December, 1857 (except such a settlement as after mentioned), and also to release or extinguish any power which may be vested in or limited or reserved to her in regard to any such personal estate, as fully and effectually as she could do if she were a feme sole, and also to release and extinguish her right or equity to a settlement out of any personal estate to which she, or her husband in her right, may be entitled in possession under any such instrument as aforesaid, save and except that no such disposition, release, or extinguishment shall be valid unless the husband concur in the deed by which the same shall be effected, nor unless the deed be acknowledged by her as hereinafter directed: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to any reversionary interest to which she shall become entitled by virtue of any deed, will, or instrument by which she shall be restrained from alienating or affecting the same.

2. Deeds to be acknowledged by Married Women in the Manner required by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, for disposing of Interests in or Powers over Land in England or Wales;—in Ireland, as by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92.] Every deed to be executed in England or Wales by a Married Woman for any of the purposes of this Act shall be acknowledged by her, and be otherwise perfected, in the manner in and by the Act passed in the 3rd and 4th years of Will. 4, intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, and for the Substitution of more simple Modes of Assurance," prescribed for the acknowledgment and perfecting of deeds disposing of interests of Married Women in land; and every deed to be executed in Ireland by a Married Woman for any of the purposes of this Act shall be acknowledged by her and be otherwise perfected in the manner in and by the Act passed in the 4th and 5th years of Will. 4, intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, and the Substitution of more simple Modes of Assurance in Ireland," prescribed for the acknowledgment and perfecting of deeds disposing of interests of Married Women in land; and all and singular the clauses and provisions in the said Acts concerning the disposition of lands by Married Women, including the provisions for dispensing with the concurrence of the husbands of Married Women, in the cases in the said Acts mentioned, shall extend and be applicable to such interests in personal estate, and to such powers as may be disposed of, released, or extinguished by virtue of this Act, as fully and effectually as if such interests or powers were interests in or powers over land.

3. The Powers of Disposition given by this Act not to interfere with any other Powers.] Provided always, that the powers of disposition given to a Married Woman by this Act shall not interfere with any power which independently of this Act may be vested in or limited or reserved to her, so as to prevent her from exercising such power in any case, except so far as by any disposition made by her under this Act she may be prevented from so doing, in consequence of such power having been suspended or extinguished by such disposition.

4. Act not to extend to Settlements of Married Women upon Marriage.] Provided always, that the powers of disposition hereby given to a Married Woman shall not enable her to dispose of any interest in personal estate settled upon her by any settlement or agreement for a settlement made on the occasion of her marriage.

5. Not to extend to Scotland.] This Act shall not extend to Scotland.

5. Repeal of s. 10 of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107.] So much of the 10th section of "The Customs Consolidation Act, 1853," as authorises the Commissioners of Customs "to provide warehouses for the warehousing of tobacco at the ports into which tobacco may be legally imported, and to charge the importer or proprietor of such tobacco for every package of tobacco so warehoused any such sum or sums for warehouse rent as they may see fit, not exceeding what is now payable," shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

6. Proviso for Continuance of existing Warehouses for Tobacco already warehoused.] Provided always, that any tobacco warehouses which at the passing of this Act shall have been provided by the said Commissioners shall and may be continued so long as the said Commissioners may deem necessary for the warehousing of tobacco therein, on the terms and conditions applicable thereto at the time of the passing of this Act, or on such other terms and conditions as the said Commissioners may see fit, or until other warehouses are provided or approved in lieu thereof for that purpose; and on such other warehouses being provided or approved as aforesaid, the said Commissioners shall and may cause such tobacco to be removed to the same accordingly.

7. Tobacco already warehoused to remain on the Terms existing at the passing of this Act.] All tobacco already warehoused in any such warehouses, upon the terms and conditions in force at the date of the passing of this Act, shall and may remain or be so warehoused in the same or such other warehouses as the said Commissioners shall provide or approve as aforesaid in lieu thereof at the same port until the expiration of five years from the date of the last preceding warehousing or re-warehousing of the same, as the case may be, unless sooner cleared from such warehouse, either for home use, removal to any other port, or exportation.

8. Power to approve of Tobacco Warehouses for general Purposes.] Any warehouse in Great Britain already provided by the said Commissioners for the warehousing of tobacco shall and may be at any time after the passing of this Act approved for the warehousing of such goods as the said Commissioners may see fit, and in the meantime such warehouses, or such part thereof as the said Commissioners may see fit, shall remain approved for the warehousing of tobacco only.

9. Power to keep Tobacco Warehouses for any Purposes.] If any warehouse is at the time of the passing of this Act vested in the said Commissioners of Customs or their secretary, or any other person in trust for them, under any lease, agreement, or other instrument, the said Commissioners may, with the sanction of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, hold the same during the continuance of such lease, agreement, or other instrument, as approved warehouses for the reception and deposit therein of tobacco or other goods duly entered to be warehoused, or for such other purposes as the said last-mentioned Commissioners shall direct; and all sums received by the said Commissioners of Customs, either as rent for the said premises, or as charges in respect of goods deposited therein or otherwise, shall be brought to account as moneys not duties.

10. Power to enter into Agreements with Owners of Tobacco Warehouses for their surrender.] And the said Commissioners of Customs shall and may enter into such agreements with the owners of any such warehouses, or other persons willing to take the same, for the surrender or disposal thereof, upon such terms and conditions as they may see fit, subject to the sanction and approval of the said Commissioners of the Treasury.

11. Power to arrange with Warehouse Keeper of Tobacco Warehouses surrendered, or other Warehouse Keeper, for Deposit of warehoused Tobacco until cleared.] So long as any tobacco warehoused at the date of the passing of this Act shall not have been cleared as hereinbefore provided, the said Commissioners shall and may, if they see fit, enter into arrangements with the warehouse keeper or occupier of any warehouse so surrendered or disposed of, or with the warehouse keeper or occupier of any other warehouse, for the deposit of such tobacco until cleared as aforesaid, and shall and may pay such rent or charges for the warehousing thereof as may be agreed upon by the said Commissioners with such warehouse keeper or occupier in respect of the tobacco so deposited, the said Commissioners charging only to the importer or proprietor of such tobacco such sum or sums of money for warehouse rent as they may see fit, not exceeding what is payable at the time of the passing of this Act, or the said Commissioners permitting such warehouse keeper or occupier to receive such last-mentioned sum or sums shall and may pay to such warehouse keeper or occupier the difference between such sum or sums and the rent or charges so agreed upon as aforesaid.

12. Provision for warehousing future Importations of Tobacco.] After the passing of this Act, all tobacco imported into any port in the United Kingdom where tobacco may be legally imported and warehoused, and which may be duly entered to be warehoused there, shall and may be deposited in any warehouse for the time being approved by the said Commissioners for the warehousing of tobacco, on such conditions and in such manner as the said Commissioners shall direct, and under and subject in all other respects to the laws, rules, and regulations which are or may hereafter be in force relating to the importation, entry, warehousing, removal, or exportation of goods liable to duties of Customs on importation.

13. Tobacco abandoned by Importer as not worth the Duty to be destroyed.] All tobacco abandoned by the importer or proprietor as not worth the duty shall be destroyed, within such time and in such manner as the said Commissioners of Customs shall direct, at the cost and charges of such importer or proprietor.

14. Defendants in Customs Cases not to give Evidence.] The several Acts which declare and make competent and compellable a defendant to give evidence in any suit or proceeding to which he may be a party shall not be deemed to extend or apply to defendants in any suit or proceeding instituted under any Act relating to the Customs.

15. Customs Acts to extend and apply to British Possessions Abroad, except where otherwise expressly provided for in the said Acts, or by any Colonial Act.] Whereas doubts have arisen whether the several sections of "The Customs Consolidation Act, 1853," other than those containing particular provisions relating thereto, as also "The Supplemental Customs Consolidation Act, 1855," are applicable to the British possessions abroad: Be it enacted, that the said recited Acts and the several clauses therein and in this Act contained shall and the same are hereby declared to extend to and be of full force and effect in the several British possessions abroad, except where otherwise expressly provided for by the said Acts, or limited by express reference to the United Kingdom or the Channel Islands, and except also as to any such possession as shall by local Act or ordinance have provided, or may hereafter, with the sanction and approbation of her Majesty and her successors, make entire provision for the management and regulation of the Customs trade and navigation of any such possession, or make in like manner express provisions in lieu or variation of any of the clauses of the said Act for the purposes of such possession.

16. Account of Bullion or Coin to be delivered to the Officers of Customs.] The owner or consignee of any bullion or coin imported into Great Britain or Ireland shall, within ten days after the landing thereof, deliver to the collector or other proper officer of Customs a full and true account of such bullion or coin, and if such account shall not be so delivered every such importer, consignee, or owner shall forfeit the sum of £20; provided always, that this penalty shall not be levied in respect of small parcels of bullion or coin imported as a part of the baggage of passengers.

17. So much of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 106 as repeals ss. 9, 10, 11, & 12 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 90 repealed, and such Sections deemed not repealed.] So much of the "Customs Consolidation Act, 1853," as repeals ss. 9, 10, 11, and 12 of an Act passed in the 8th and 9th Vict., c. 90, shall be and the same is hereby repealed, and the said sections shall be deemed and considered not to have been repealed by the said Customs Consolidation Act.

18. Sect. 19 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 96 repealed.] Sect. 19 of "The Supplemental Customs Consolidation Act, 1855," is hereby repealed.

19. As to importing and exporting Spirits from and to the Channel Islands in Ships of Fifty Tons and upwards, and Casks of Twenty Gallons.—Not to extend to Spirits in Glass Bottles, or to Stores, nor to certain warehoused Goods exported; nor to licensed Boats of Ten Tons supplying Island of Sark.] No spirits (except rum of the British Plantations) shall be imported into or exported from the Channel Islands or any of them, or be removed from any one to any other of the said islands, or be carried coastwise from any one part to any other part of any one of the said islands, or shall be shipped in order to be so removed or carried in any ship other than of the burden of fifty tons or upwards, or in any cask or other vessel capable of containing liquids not being of the size or content of twenty gallons at the least; and all spirits imported, exported, removed, carried, shipped, or water-borne to be so shipped, removed, or carried, contrary hereto, shall be forfeited, together with the ship, and any boat importing, exporting, removing, or carrying the same; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to any spirits imported in any such ship in glass bottles as part of the cargo, nor to any spirits being really intended for the consumption of the seamen and passengers of such ship during their voyage, and not being more in quantity than is necessary for that purpose, nor to any warehoused goods exported from the United Kingdom in ships of not less than forty tons burden, being regular traders to those islands, nor to any boat of less burden than ten tons for having on board at any one time any foreign spirits of the quantity of ten gallons or under, such boat having a licence from the proper officer of Customs at either of the islands of Guernsey or Jersey for the purpose of being employed in carrying commodities for the supply of the Island of Sark, which licence such officer is hereby required to grant without fee or reward; but if any such boat shall have on board at any one time any greater quantity of spirits than ten gallons, unless in casks or packages of the size and content of twenty gallons at the least, such spirits and boat shall be forfeited.

20. Interpretation of Terms.] When any of the terms mentioned in the 357th section of "The Customs Consolidation Act, 1853," are used in this or any other Act relating to the Customs, the terms so used shall have the same interpretation and meaning as are given to them in the said section; and the term "British-built ships" shall be deemed to mean and include any ship built in her Majesty's dominions.

21. Act to be registered in Royal Courts of Guernsey and Jersey.] This Act shall be registered in the royal courts of the islands of Guernsey and Jersey respectively, and the said royal courts respectively shall have full power and authority, and are hereby required, to register the same.

22. Confirmation of certain Purchases of Land in Belfast for Erection of a Custom House, &c.] Whereas, by an Act passed in the 15th and 16th Vict., intituled "An Act to empower the Commissioners of her Majesty's Customs to acquire certain Lands and Houses in the Borough of Belfast, for the purpose of erecting a Custom House and other Offices and Buildings required for the Public Service in the said Borough," the Commissioners of her Majesty's Customs were authorised and empowered to purchase certain lands and premises in the borough of Belfast for the purpose of erecting a Custom House and other public buildings, and for improving the streets and approaches thereto: And whereas it was agreed between the corporation of Belfast and the said Commissioners, with the consent of the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, that such of the said purchases as were necessary for the improvement of the public streets should be made and paid for by and at the expense of the said corporation: And whereas the said corporation, by their agent and solicitor, entered into contracts for that purpose to the extent of £10,000 or thereabouts, in the names of the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Customs, with Adam John Macrory and others, and did provide and pay to the said Adam John Macrory the sum of 3,021*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*: And whereas circumstances having arisen by which the said corporation found it impracticable to complete the said purchases without the aid of the said Commissioners of Customs, it was proposed and agreed, that the said purchases should be completed by the said Commissioners, and that they should provide for and pay the balance of the purchase moneys above and beyond the said sum paid to the said Adam John Macrory, and the several purchases have been made and concluded accordingly by the said Commissioners of Customs; and it is intended that the site of the lands and premises so purchased shall be laid out for the improvement of the streets and approaches to the said Custom House, in accordance with the said recited Act, and that, subject thereto, the same shall be sold for building purposes; and that, in the event of the proceeds of such sale realising more than sufficient to repay the said Commissioners the purchase moneys and expenses incident to the purchases so made by them, it has been agreed that the said Commissioners shall and may pay over any balance of such proceeds which may remain in their hands to the said corporation, for and towards the purchase moneys advanced and paid by the said corporation to the said Adam John Macrory; and whereas it is expedient that the said recited purchases made by the said corporation and the said Commissioners of Customs respectively, and the payment of the purchase moneys respectively made by them, and the said recited agreements and arrangements for the re-sale thereof by the said Commissioners of Customs, and the application of the proceeds thereof should be confirmed by Parliament: Be it therefore enacted, that the same be and they are hereby confirmed accordingly.

23. Commencement of Act.—Short Title.] This Act shall come into operation on the day of the passing of this Act, except where otherwise herein mentioned; and in citing it in other Acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Customs Amendment Act, 1857."

CAP. LXIII.

An Act to authorise the Advance of Money out of the Consolidated Fund to the Magistrates and Town Council of Dunbar, for the Purpose of Improving the Victoria Harbour of Dunbar.

[25th August, 1857.

CAP. LXIV.

An Act for raising a Sum of Money for building and improving Stations of the Metropolitan Police, and to amend the Acts concerning the Metropolitan Police. [25th August, 1857.

WHEREAS it has become necessary to build new Stations and to improve the existing Stations for the Metropolitan Police, and as the expense of such building and improvement will exceed the amount which can be defrayed out of the annual receipts applicable to the purposes of the Metropolitan Police, it is expedient, that, towards defraying such expense, a sum of £60,000 should be raised as hereinafter mentioned: Be it enacted &c., as follows—that is to say,

1. Power to raise the Sum of £60,000 on Security of the Police Rates of the Metropolitan Police District.—No priority amongst Mortgagees.] It shall be lawful for the receiver of the Metropolitan Police district, by the direction of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, to borrow and take up at interest on the rates raised for the purposes of the Police within the Metropolitan Police district any sum or sums not exceeding in the whole the sum of £60,000; and for the purpose of securing any sum or sums so borrowed, with interest, such receiver may mortgage and assign over, to the person or persons by or on behalf of whom such sum or sums are advanced, the said rates; and the respective mortgagees (if more than one) shall be entitled to a proportion of the rates comprised in their respective mortgages according to the sums in such mortgages mentioned to have been advanced; and each mortgagee shall be entitled to be repaid the sum so advanced by him, with interest, without any preference over any other mortgagee by reason of any priority of advance, or the date of his mortgage.

2. Power to Public Works Loan Commissioners, acting under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 23, to make Advances.] It shall be lawful for the Commissioners acting in the execution of an Act passed in the 14th and 15th Vict., c. 23, "To authorise for a further Period the Advance of Money out of the Consolidated Fund to a limited Amount for carrying on Public Works and Fisheries and Employment of the Poor," and any Act or Acts for amending or continuing the same, to make advances to the said receiver upon the security of the said rates, and without requiring any further or other security than a mortgage of such rates.

3. Form of Mortgage.—Register of Mortgages.] Every mortgage authorised to be made under this Act shall be by deed duly stamped, truly stating the date, consideration, and the time of payment, and may be made according to the form (A.) contained in the schedule to this Act annexed, or to the like effect, or with such variations or additions in each case as the said receiver and the party advancing the money intended to be thereby secured may agree to; and there shall be kept by the said receiver a register of the mortgages made under this Act; and within fourteen days after the date of any mortgage an entry shall be made in the register of the number and date thereof, and of the names and descriptions of the parties thereto, as stated in the deed.

4. Repayment of Money borrowed at a Time agreed upon.—Interest on Mortgages to be paid half-yearly.—As to Repayment of Money borrowed when no Time has been agreed upon.—Interest to cease on Expiration of Notice to pay off a Mortgage Debt.] A time or times may be fixed by any such deed for the repayment of all or any principal moneys secured thereby, and the payment of the interest thereof respectively; and such moneys, with interest, may be made repayable by instalments or otherwise, as they may think fit; and at the time or times so fixed for payment thereof such principal moneys and interest respectively shall, on demand, be paid to the party entitled to receive the same accordingly; and if no other place of payment be inserted in the mortgage deed, the principal and interest shall be payable at the chief office of the said Commissioners, and, unless otherwise provided by any mortgage, the interest of the money borrowed thereupon shall be paid half-yearly; and if no time be fixed in the mortgage deed for the repayment of the money so borrowed, the party entitled to receive such money may, at the expiration, or at any time after the expiration of twelve months from the date of such deed, demand payment of the principal money thereby secured, with all arrears of interest, upon giving six months' previous notice for that purpose to the said receiver personally, or by leaving the same at the said office; and in the like case the said receiver may at any time pay off the money borrowed on giving the like notice, which notice may be given to such mortgagee personally, or left at his place of residence; or if such mortgagee or his residence be unknown to them, or cannot be found after diligent inquiry, such notice shall be given by advertisement in the London Gazette; and if the said receiver have given notice of his intention to pay off any such mortgage at a time when the same may lawfully be paid off by him, then, at the expiration of such notice, all further interest shall cease to be payable thereon, unless, on demand of payment made pursuant to such notice, or at any time thereafter, the receiver fail to pay the principal and interest due, at the expiration of such notice, on such mortgage.

5. Power to borrow to pay off existing Securities.] It shall be lawful for the said receiver to raise and borrow the moneys necessary for paying off any security granted under this Act, and to pay off the same; and the moneys borrowed for the purpose of such payment shall be secured and repaid in like manner as moneys borrowed in the first instance under this Act: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to authorise the paying off of any security otherwise than in accordance with the provisions thereof.

6. Transfer of Mortgages — Register of Transfers.] Any mortgagee or other person entitled to any mortgage under this Act may transfer his estate and interest therein to any other person by deed duly stamped, truly stating its date, the names and descriptions of the parties thereto, and the consideration for the transfer; and such transfer may be according to the form contained in the Schedule (B.) to this Act annexed, or to the like effect; and there shall be kept by the said receiver a register of such transfers, and within thirty days after the date of any such deed of transfer, if executed within the United Kingdom, or within thirty days after its arrival in the United Kingdom, if executed elsewhere, the same shall be produced to the said receiver, and the said receiver shall make or cause to be made an entry in such register of its date, and of the names and description of the parties thereto, as stated in the transfer; and upon any transfer being so registered, the transferee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be entitled to the full benefit of the original mortgage, and the principal and interest secured thereby; and every such transferee may in like manner transfer his estate and interest in such mortgage; and no person, except the person to whom the same has been last transferred, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be entitled to release or discharge any such mortgage, or any money secured thereby.

7. Money advanced to be paid into the Bank to the Credit of the Receiver's Account.] All moneys borrowed under this Act shall be paid by the persons advancing the same into the Bank of England, to the credit of the accounts of the said receiver kept at the said Bank, under the Act of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 44; and the moneys so paid shall be drawn out in manner provided by the said Act, and shall be applied, under the directions of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, in defraying the expenses of works for improving the cells in the Stations of the Metropolitan Police.

8. Moneys borrowed under this Act to be a First Charge on the Police Rate.] The moneys secured by the mortgages made under this Act shall be a first charge upon the sums and rates which the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis is authorised to require to be paid or to levy or cause to be levied, in the Metropolitan Police district, under the said Act of Geo. 4, and an Act of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47; and the said receiver shall make provision out of the sums from time to time paid to his account for payment of all moneys from time to time becoming payable under this Act, for discharging the moneys borrowed under the same, in priority to all other payments requiring to be made out of the said sums.

9. As to Payment of Moneys borrowed.] The moneys borrowed under this Act, with all interest for the same, shall be wholly repaid and discharged within thirty years from the time of the passing of this Act.

10. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 89, s. 2.—2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 3.—Sect. 2 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 89, repealed, but the Contribution under the Two Enactments not to exceed Twopence in the Pound on the Rental assessed.] And whereas an Act was passed in the 3rd and 4th years of Will. 4 (c. 89), "To authorise the issue of a Sum of Money out of the Consolidated Fund towards the Support of the Metropolitan Police," and by s. 2 of the said Act such issue was limited not to exceed £60,000 in any one year: and whereas by an Act of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, "For further improving the Police in and near the Metropolis," provision was made for further additions to the Metropolitan Police district, and in the case of every addition to such district after the passing of that Act the Commissioners of the Treasury were by s. 3 authorised to direct the issue out of the Consolidated Fund of an additional yearly sum not greater in each case than the amount of twopence in the pound upon the additional rental assessed to the Metropolitan Police by reason of such addition; and whereas, by an Act of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 94, the sums which were payable out of the Consolidated Fund under the said recited Acts, are made payable out of such aids and supplies as may be from time to time provided and appropriated by Parliament for the purpose; and whereas the sums which the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury are authorised to cause to be issued under the said Acts, subject to the limitation of amount contained in the said Act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, are, together with the amount authorised to be raised by means of rates in the Metropolitan Police district, insufficient to defray the expense of maintaining the police of the metropolis: Sect. 2 of the said Act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4 shall be repealed as from the 31st December, 1857, but the sums which the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall cause to be issued under and subject to the conditions of the said Act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, and s. 3 of the said Act of the 2 & 3 Vict., as amended by the said Act of the 17 & 18 Vict., shall not together in any one year exceed the amount of twopence in the pound upon the rental assessed to the Metropolitan Police in the whole of the Metropolitan Police district for the time being.

11. 10 Geo. 4, c. 44.—The Rateable Value of Buildings erected since the last County Rate Valuation to be taken into account for the Purposes of the Police Rate.] And whereas, by the Act of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 44, the sum to be paid for the purposes of the police under that Act within the Metropolitan Police district is to be ascertained, and is limited with reference to the full and fair annual value of all property rateable for the relief of the poor within the parish, township, precinct, or place, such full and fair annual value to be computed according to the last valuation for the time being acted upon in assessing the county rate; and whereas, from the rapid increase of building in parts of the Metropolitan Police district many buildings become rateable for the relief of the poor, and occasion an increase of charge for the purposes of the police, before they are included in the valuation acted upon in assessing the county rate: In computing the full and fair annual value of the property rateable for the relief of the poor within any parish, township, precinct, or place in the Metropolitan Police district, for all the purposes of the said Act of Geo. 4, and the other Acts relating to the Metropolitan Police, and this Act, the full and fair annual value on which the last poors rate has been computed of all houses and other buildings in such parish, township, precinct, or place, which shall have been erected since the last valuation acted upon in assessing the county rate, and which shall have become rateable to the relief of the poor, shall be added to the amount of the annual value of the rateable property in such parish, township, precinct, or place, according to the last valuation for the time being acted upon in assessing the county rate.

12. Overseers to make Returns of New Buildings.] The overseers of the poor of every parish, township, precinct, or place within the Metropolitan Police district shall, from time to time so often as may be required by the receiver for the Metropolitan Police district, make and cause to be delivered to the receiver for the Metropolitan Police district a true return in writing under the hands of such overseers, specifying every house or other building which shall have been erected and have become rateable to the relief of the poor in such parish, township, precinct, or place, since the making of the last valuation for the time being acted upon in assessing the county rate, and the annual value of the same.

13. Power to Receiver for Metropolitan Police District, &c., to inspect Rates.] The receiver for the Metropolitan Police district, or any person having an order for that purpose under the hand of such receiver, may inspect any poor rate made or to be made for any parish, township, precinct, or place in the Metropolitan Police district, and take copies of, or extracts from, any such rate, without payment of any fee or reward.

14. Penalty on Overseers neglecting to make Returns, or refusing to produce Rates.] If any overseer or overseers refuse or neglect to make any return when so required by the receiver as aforesaid, or if any overseer or person having the custody of any such poor rate as herein mentioned refuse or neglect to permit the receiver or any person hereby authorised to inspect such rate, or to take copies or extracts from the same, within two days after notice in writing under the hand of such receiver, for that purpose shown to the overseer or person having the custody of such poor rate, or left at his usual place of abode; every overseer or person so offending shall, on conviction thereof before two justices of the peace, or before any police magistrate sitting in a police court of the Metropolitan Police district, forfeit and pay for every such offence the sum of £10.

15. Deficiency of Police Superannuation Fund may be made good out of other Moneys applicable to the Charge of the Police.] In case the Police Superannuation Fund provided by the said Act of the 2 & 3 Vict. shall at any time be insufficient for payment of the superannuation or retiring allowances which may be ordered to be paid thereout, under the provisions of the Acts relating to the police of the metropolis, it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, by warrant under his hand, to authorise and direct the payment by the receiver for the Metropolitan Police district, out of any moneys applicable towards defraying the charge of the Metropolitan Police, of such sum or sums from time to time as may be necessary to make good the deficiency of the said Police Superannuation Fund.

SCHEDULE (A.)

16 & 17 Vict. c. 137; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 124; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 76.] Whereas, by "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1853," it was provided that that Act should not, for the period of two years from the passing thereof, extend or be in any manner applied to charities or institutions the funds or income of which were applicable exclusively for the benefit of persons of the Roman Catholic persuasion, and which were under the superintendence or control of persons of that persuasion: and whereas, by "The Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855," such charities or institutions as aforesaid were exempted in like manner from the operation of the said Amendment Act, and the exemption so extended was continued until the 1st of September, 1856, and has since been extended to the 1st of September, 1857: and whereas it is expedient that such exemption should be continued as hereinafter mentioned: Be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

1. Exemption continued until 1st of September, 1858.] That the said Acts shall not, until the 1st of September, 1858, extend or be in any manner applied to the charities or institutions aforesaid.

CAP. LXXVII.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Probates and Letters of Administration in England. [25th August, 1857.

WHEREAS it is expedient that all jurisdiction in relation to the grant and revocation of Probates of Wills and Letters of Administration in England should be exercised, in the name of her Majesty, by one court: Be it enacted &c., as follows:—

1. Commencement of Act.] This Act (except where otherwise specially provided) shall come into operation on such day, not sooner than the 1st of January, 1858, as her Majesty shall by Order in Council appoint, provided that such order shall be made one month at least previously to the day so to be appointed.

2. Interpretation of Terms.] In the construction of this Act, unless the context be inconsistent with the meaning hereby assigned—

"Will" shall comprehend "Testament" and all other testamentary instruments of which Probate may now be granted:

"Administration" shall comprehend all Letters of Administration of the effects of deceased persons, whether with or without the will annexed, and whether granted for general, special, or limited purposes:

"Matters and Causes Testamentary" shall comprehend all matters and causes relating to the grant and revocation of Probate of Wills or of Administration:

"Common Form Business" shall mean the business of obtaining Probate and Administration where there is no contention as to the right thereto, including the passing of Probates and Administrations through the Court of Probate in contentious cases when the contest is terminated, and all business of a non-contentious nature to be taken in the court in matters of testacy and intestacy not being proceedings in any suit, and also the business of lodging caveats against the grant of Probate or Administration.

3. Testamentary Jurisdiction of Ecclesiastical and other Courts abolished.] The voluntary and contentious jurisdiction and authority of all ecclesiastical, royal peculiar, peculiar, manorial, and other courts and persons in England, now having jurisdiction or authority to grant or revoke Probate of Wills or Letters of Administration of the effects of deceased persons, shall in respect of such matters absolutely cease; and no jurisdiction or authority in relation to any matters or causes testamentary, or to any matter arising out of or connected with the grant or revocation of Probate or Administration, shall belong to or be exercised by any such court or person.

4. Testamentary Jurisdiction to be exercised by a Court of Probate.] The voluntary and contentious jurisdiction and authority in relation to the granting or revoking Probate of Wills and Letters of Administration of the effects of deceased persons now vested in or which can be exercised by any court or person in England, together with full authority to hear and determine all questions relating to matters and causes testamentary, shall belong to and be vested in her Majesty, and shall, except as hereinafter is mentioned, be exercised in the name of her Majesty in a court to be called the Court of Probate, and to hold its ordinary sittings and to have its principal registry at such place or places in London or Middlesex as her Majesty in Council shall from time to time appoint.

5. Power to Her Majesty to appoint a Judge of the Court of Probate.] There shall be one judge of her Majesty's Court of Probate; and it shall be lawful for her Majesty from time to time, by letters patent under the great seal of the United Kingdom, to appoint a person, being or having been an advocate of ten years standing, or a barrister-at-law of fifteen years standing, to be such judge.

6. Judge's Tenure of Office.] The judge of the Court of Probate shall hold his office during good behaviour, provided that it shall be lawful for her Majesty to remove any such judge from his office upon an address of both Houses of Parliament.

7. Judge before acting to take the following Oath.] Every judge of the Court of Probate shall, before executing any of the duties of his office, take the following oath, which the Lord

Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls for the time being is hereby respectively authorised and required to administer:—

"I, A.B., do solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that I will duly and faithfully, and to the best of my skill and power, execute the office of judge of the Court of Probate.—So help me God."

8. Rank and Precedence of Judge, who shall appoint a Secretary and Usher.] The judge shall have rank and precedence with the puisne judges of her Majesty's superior courts of common law at Westminster according to the date of his appointment, and he shall have a secretary and usher, to be from time to time appointed and removed by him at his pleasure.

9. Salaries of Judge, Secretary, and Usher.] There shall be paid to the judge the net yearly salary of £4,000, and to his secretary the net yearly salary of £300, and to his usher the net yearly salary of £150.

10. Judge of Court of Probate to be also Judge of the Admiralty Court on the next Vacancy.] Upon the next vacancy in the office of judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England it shall be lawful for her Majesty, if she so think fit, to appoint the person then being judge of the Court of Probate to be also judge of the said Court of Admiralty, or in case the office of judge of the Court of Probate become vacant before the office of judge of the Court of Admiralty, the judge of the Court of Admiralty may, with his consent, be appointed to and hold also the office of judge of the Court of Probate; and after the union of the said two offices they shall be thenceforth held by the same person.

11. As to Increase of Salary upon Union of the Two Offices.] From and after the union under this Act of the two offices of judge of the Court of Probate and judge of the Court of Admiralty in the same person, the said yearly salary of £4,000 payable under this Act shall be increased to £5,000; and the salary now payable to the judge of the Court of Admiralty shall cease.

12. Retiring Pensions of Judges.] Her Majesty, by letters patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, may grant unto any person executing the office of judge of her Majesty's Court of Probate an annuity, not exceeding £2,000, or, if such person be also executing the office of judge of the said Court of Admiralty, not exceeding £3,500, to commence immediately after the day when the person to whom such annuity shall be granted shall resign the said office or offices, and to continue during his natural life; provided that her Majesty may, in and by such letters patent, limit the duration of payment of such annuity, or any part thereof, to such periods of time during the natural life of such person in which he shall not exercise any office of profit under her Majesty, so that such annuity, together with the salary and profits of such other office, shall together not exceed in the whole the said sum of £2,000 or £3,500, as the case may be: provided also, that no annuity granted to any person having executed the office of judge under this Act, except the present judge of the Prerogative Court, shall be valid unless such person shall have held such office for the period of fifteen years, or have held such office and any of the offices of judge in any of the superior courts of law or equity or the High Court of Admiralty for periods amounting together to fifteen years, or shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, which shall be distinctly recited in the said grant.

13. District Registries to be established as in Schedule (A.)] There shall be established for each of the districts specified in schedule (A.) to this Act, and at the places respectively mentioned in such schedule, a public registry attached to and under the control of the Court of Probate, hereinafter referred to as "The District Registry."

14. Appointment of Officers of the Court of Probate.] There shall be three registrars, two record keepers, and one sealer for the principal registry of the Court of Probate, and there shall be one district registrar for each district registry, hereinafter referred to as the District Registrar, and there shall be so many clerks and other officers for the court and the principal registry as the judge of the court, with the sanction of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, may from time to time think fit: provided, that if at any time it appear to her Majesty in Council that the duties of the registrars of the principal registry of the Court of Probate can be performed by two registrars, it shall be lawful for her Majesty by Order in Council to direct that the number of registrars for such principal registry be reduced accordingly.

15. As to Appointment of the first Officers of the Principal Registry.] Charles Dyneley, Esq., John Iggulden, Esq., and William F. Gostling, Esq., the present deputy registrars of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, shall, if willing to accept the office, be the first registrars of the principal registry of the Court of Probate; Joseph Todd and John Smith, the present record keepers of the said Prerogative Court, shall, if willing to accept the office, be the first record keepers at the said principal registry; and William John Berry, the present sealer of the said Prerogative Court, shall, if willing to accept the office, be the first sealer at the said principal registry; and George Jarvis Foster, clerk of the papers in the said Prerogative Court, shall, if willing to accept the office, be the first clerk of papers at the said principal registry.

16. Clerks and Officers of Prerogative Court to be transferred to like Offices in Court of Probate.] The other clerks and officers now employed in the said Prerogative Court shall be transferred to such situations in the Court of Probate and the principal registry thereof as the Lord Chancellor may, in that behalf, direct, so that their duties may be such as, in the opinion of the said Lord Chancellor, may be as nearly as possible similar to those which they have heretofore discharged in the said Prerogative Court; provided always, that no such clerk or other officer shall be so transferred whom the said Lord Chancellor shall consider to be, from age, infirmity, or other cause, incompetent to the discharge of his duties.

17. Existing Diocesan Registrars to be entitled to be appointed District Registrars at the same Places.] The registrar or deputy registrar (as the case may be) now executing in person the duties of registrar of a diocesan or other court exercising testamentary jurisdiction at any place at which a district registry is to be established under this Act, or where there is more than one such registrar or deputy registrar so acting, such one of them as the judge shall select shall be appointed the first district registrar for such district, save where the judge shall consider such registrar or deputy registrar, or all such registrars or deputy registrars if more than one, to be from age, infirmity, or other cause incompetent to the discharge of the duties of district registrar; provided that where there is now more than one such registrar or deputy registrar competent to the discharge of the duties, the judge may appoint them or more than one of them to hold such office of district registrar jointly, with benefit of survivorship.

18. As to Appointment to Offices.—Salaries of Officers.] The registrars, district registrars, and other officers of the Court of Probate, except as herein provided, shall be appointed by the judge: There shall be paid to the several officers mentioned in schedule (B.) to this Act the several salaries set opposite to their respective titles in the same schedule; and the said district registrars shall, for the performance of their duties under this Act, including the services of any clerks they may employ, be entitled to take in respect of the business in their respective district registries such fees as shall be fixed as hereinafter provided; and, except as aforesaid, there shall be paid to the several clerks and other officers appointed under this Act such salaries or other remuneration as the judge, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, shall from time to time in each case direct.

19. Tenure of Office of Officers.] The registrars and district registrars shall hold their offices during good behaviour, subject to be removed by order of the Lord Chancellor for some reasonable cause to be in such order expressed; and the other officers of the court may be removed by the judge, with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor.

20. Qualification of Registrars and District Registrars.] No person shall be appointed a registrar or district registrar who shall not be or have been an advocate, barrister-at-law, proctor, solicitor, or attorney-at-law, unless at the time of the passing of this Act he is performing in person the duties of registrar or deputy registrar of some ecclesiastical court in England, or is acting as articled clerk or paid clerk to a proctor in Doctors' Commons, or as officer or clerk in the office of the said Prerogative Court, or of the Prerogative Court of York, or of any diocesan court.

21. Officers of the Court to execute their Offices in Person.—Registrars, &c., not to act as Proctors, &c.] All registrars, district registrars, officers, and clerks of the Court of Probate shall execute their respective offices in person and not by deputy; and no registrar of the principal registry of the court, nor any officer or clerk in the principal registry thereof, shall during the time of his holding such office, directly or indirectly, practise as an advocate, barrister, proctor, solicitor, or attorney, or receive or participate in the fees of any other person so practising.

22. Power to Judge to cause Seals of the Court to be provided.] The judge shall cause to be made seals for the Court of Probate, that is to say, one seal to be used in its principal registry, and separate seals to be used in the several district registries, and may cause the same respectively from time to time to be broken, altered, and renewed, at his discretion; and all probates, letters of administration, orders, and other instruments, and exemplifications and copies thereof, respectively, purporting to be sealed with any seal of the Court of Probate, shall in all parts of the United Kingdom be received in evidence without further proof thereof.

23. The Court to have throughout all England the same Powers as the Prerogative Court within the Province of Canterbury—Suits for Legacies or Distribution not to be entertained.] The Court of Probate shall be a court of record, and such court shall have the same powers, and its grants and orders shall have the same effect, throughout all England, and in relation to the personal estate in all parts of England of deceased persons, as the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury and its grants and orders respectively now have in the province of Canterbury, or in the parts of such province within its jurisdiction, and in relation to those matters and causes testamentary and those effects of deceased persons which are within the jurisdiction of the said Prerogative Court; and all duties which, by statute or otherwise, are imposed on or should be performed by ordinaries generally, or on or by the said Prerogative Court, in respect of probates, administrations, or matters or causes testamentary within their respective jurisdictions, shall be performed by the Court of Probate; provided that no suits for legacies, or suits for the distribution of residues, shall be entertained by the court, or by any court or person whose jurisdiction as to matters and causes testamentary is hereby abolished.

24. Power to examine Witnesses.—As to Production of Deeds, &c.] The Court of Probate may require the attendance of any party in person, or of any person whom it may think fit to examine or cause to be examined in any suit or other proceeding in respect of matters or causes testamentary, and may examine or cause to be examined upon oath or affirmation, as the case may require, parties and witnesses by word of mouth, and may, either before or after or with or without such examination, cause them or any of them to be examined on interrogatories, or receive their or any of their affidavits or solemn affirmations, as the case may be; and the Court may by writ require such attendance, and order to be produced before itself or otherwise any deeds, evidences, or writings, in the same form, or nearly as may be, as that in which a writ of subpœna ad testificandum or of subpœna duces tecum is now issued by any of her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster; and every person disobeying any such writ shall be considered as in contempt of the court, and also be liable to forfeit a sum not exceeding £100.

25. Powers of the Court to enforce Orders.] The Court of Probate shall have the like powers, jurisdiction, and authority for enforcing the attendance of persons required by it as aforesaid, and for punishing persons failing, neglecting, or refusing to produce deeds, evidences, or writings, or refusing to appear or to be sworn, or make affirmation or declaration, or to give evidence, or guilty of contempt, and generally for enforcing all orders, decrees, and judgments made or given by the Court under this Act, and otherwise in relation to the matters to be inquired into and done by or under the orders of the Court under this Act, as are by law vested in the High Court of Chancery for such purposes in relation to any suit or matter depending in such Court.

26. Order to produce any Instrument purporting to be Testamentary.] The Court of Probate may, on motion or petition, or otherwise, in a summary way, whether any suit or other proceeding shall or shall not be pending in the Court with respect to any probate or administration, order any person to produce and bring into the principal or any district registry, or otherwise as the Court may direct, any paper or writing being or purporting to be testamentary, which may be shown to be in the possession or under the control of such person; and if it be not shown that any such paper or writing is in the possession or under the control of such person, but it shall appear that there are reasonable grounds for believing that he has the knowledge of any such paper or writing, the Court may direct such person to attend for the purpose of being examined in open court, or upon interrogatories, respecting the same, and such person shall be bound to answer such questions or interrogatories, and, if so ordered, to produce and bring in such paper or writing, and shall be subject to the like process of contempt in case of default in not attending or in not answering such questions or interrogatories, or not bringing in such paper or writing, as he would have been subject to in case he had been a party to a suit in the court and had made such default; and the costs of any such motion, petition, or other proceeding shall be in the discretion of the Court.

27. Registrars, &c., to have Power to administer Oaths.—Power to appoint, also, Commissioners to administer Oaths, &c.] The registrars and district registrars shall respectively have full power to administer oaths; and all persons who, at the commencement of this Act, shall be acting as surrogates of any ecclesiastical court, and any other persons whom the judge shall, under the seal of the court, from time to time appoint, shall respectively have full power to administer oaths and perform such other duties in reference to matters and causes testamentary as may be assigned to them from time to time by the rules and orders under this Act; and the persons so appointed shall be styled "Commissioners of her Majesty's Court of Probate;" provided that any party required to be examined, or any person called as a witness or required or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition under or for the purposes of this Act, shall be permitted to make his solemn affirmation or declaration instead of being sworn, in the circumstances and manner in which a person called as a witness or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition would be permitted so to do under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, in cases within the provisions of that Act; and any person who shall wilfully give false evidence, or who shall wilfully swear, affirm, or declare falsely in any affidavit or deposition before the Court of Probate, or before any registrar, district registrar, or commissioner of the court, shall be liable to the penalties and consequences of wilful and corrupt perjury.

28. Penalty on forging or counterfeiting Seals or Signatures of Officers.] If any person forge the signature of any registrar, district registrar, or commissioner for taking oaths, or forge or counterfeit any seal of the Court of Probate, or knowingly use or concur in using any such forged or counterfeit signature or seal, or tender in evidence any document with a false or counterfeit signature of such registrar, district registrar, or commissioner, or with a false or counterfeit seal, knowing the same signature or seal to be false or counterfeit, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and shall upon conviction be liable to penal servitude for the term of his life or any term not less than seven years, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three years, with or without hard labour.

29. Practice of the Court.] The practice of the Court of Probate shall, except where otherwise provided by this Act, or by the rules or orders to be from time to time made under this Act, be, so far as the circumstances of the case will admit, according to the present practice in the Prerogative Court.

30. Rules and Orders to be made for regulating the Procedure of the Court.] And to the intent and end that the procedure and practice of the court may be of the most simple and expeditious character, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, at any time after the passing of this Act, with the advice and assistance of the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, or any one of the judges of the superior courts of law to be by such chief justice named in that behalf, and of the judge of the said Prerogative Court, to make rules and orders, to take effect when this Act shall come into operation, for regulating the procedure and practice of the court, and the duties of the registrars, district registrars, and other officers thereof, and for determining what shall be deemed contentious and what shall be deemed non-contentious business, and, subject to the express provisions of this Act, for fixing and regulating the time and manner of appealing from the decisions of the said court, and generally for carrying the provisions of this Act into effect; and after the time when this Act shall come into operation, it shall be lawful for the judge of the Court of Probate from time to time, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor and the said Lord Chief Justice, or any one of the judges of the superior courts of law to be by such chief justice named in this behalf, to repeal, amend, add to, or alter any such rules and orders as to him, with such concurrence as aforesaid, may seem fit.

31. Mode of taking Evidence in contentious Matters.] Subject to the regulations to be established by such rules and orders as aforesaid, the witnesses, and where necessary the parties, in all contentious matters where their attendance can be had, shall be examined orally by or before the judge in open court; provided always, that, subject to any such regulations as aforesaid, the parties shall be at liberty to verify their respective cases, in whole or in part, by affidavit, but so that the deponent in every such affidavit shall, on the application of the opposite party, be subject to be cross-examined by or on behalf of such opposite party orally in open court as aforesaid, and after such cross-examination may be re-examined orally in open court as aforesaid by or on behalf of the party by whom such affidavit was filed.

32. Court may issue Commissions or give Orders for Examination of Witnesses abroad, or who are unable to attend.] Provided, that where a witness in any such matter is out of the jurisdiction of the court, or where, by reason of his illness or otherwise, the Court shall not think fit to enforce the attendance of the witness in open court, it shall be lawful for the Court to order a commission to issue for the examination of such witness on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, or, if the witness be within the jurisdiction of the court, to order the examination of such witness on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, before any officer of the said court, or other person to be named in such order for the purpose; and all the powers given to the courts of law at Westminster by the Acts of the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, and of the 1 Will. 4, c. 22, for enabling the courts of law at Westminster to issue commissions and give orders for the examination of witnesses in actions depending in such courts, and to enforce such examination, and all the provisions of the said Acts, and of any other Acts for enforcing or otherwise applicable to such examination, and the witnesses examined, shall extend and be applicable to the said Court of Probate and to the examination of witnesses under the commissions and orders of the said Court, and to the witnesses examined, as if such court were one of the courts of law at Westminster, and the matter before it were an action pending in such court.

33. Rules of Evidence in Common Law Courts to be observed.] The rules of evidence observed in the superior courts of common law at Westminster shall be applicable to and observed in the trial of all questions of fact in the Court of Probate.

34. Common Law Judges may sit, on Request of Judge of Court.] It shall be lawful for the judge of the Court of Probate to sit with the assistance of any judge or judges of any of the superior courts of law at Westminster, who, upon the request of the judge of the Court of Probate, may find it convenient to attend for that purpose.

35. Court may cause Questions of Fact to be tried by a Jury before itself, or direct an Issue to a Court of Law.] It shall be lawful for the Court of Probate to cause any question of fact arising in any suit or proceeding under this Act to be tried by a special or common jury before the court itself, or by means of an issue to be directed to any of the superior courts of common law, in the same manner as an issue may now be directed by the Court of Chancery; and such question shall be so tried by a jury in any case where an heir-at-law, cited or otherwise made party to the suit or proceeding, makes application to the Court of Probate for that purpose; and in any other case where all the parties to the suit or proceeding concur in such an application, and where any party or parties other than such heir-at-law make a like application (the other party or parties not concurring therein), and the Court shall refuse to cause such question to be tried by a jury, such refusal of the Court shall be subject to appeal as herein provided.

36. Powers of the Court for the Trial of Questions by a Jury.] When the Court shall order a question of fact to be tried before itself by a jury, the Court may make all such rules and orders upon the sheriff or any other person for procuring the attendance of a special or common jury for the trial of such question as may now be made by any of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, and may also make any other orders which to such Court may seem requisite; and every such jury shall consist of persons possessing the qualifications, and shall be struck, summoned, balloted for, and called in like manner as if such jury were a jury for the trial of any cause in any of the said superior courts; and every juryman so summoned shall be entitled to the same rights, and subject to the same duties and liabilities, as if he had been duly summoned for the trial of any such cause in any of the said superior courts; and every party to any such proceeding shall be entitled to the same rights as to challenge and otherwise as if he were a party to any such cause; and generally for all purposes of or auxiliary to the trial of questions of fact by a jury before the Court itself, and in respect of new trials thereof, and also for all purposes in relation to or consequential upon the direction of issues, the Court of Probate shall have the same jurisdiction, powers, and authority in all respects as belong to any superior court of common law, or to any judge thereof, or to the High Court of Chancery or any judge thereof, for the like purposes.

37. Question to be stated, and Jury sworn to try it.—Court, on Trial, to have the same Authority as a Judge at Nisi Prius.] When any such question shall be so ordered to be tried by a jury before the Court itself, such question shall be reduced into writing in such form as the Court shall direct, and at the trial the jury shall be sworn to try the said question, and a true verdict to give thereon according to the evidence; and upon every such trial the Court of Probate shall have the same powers, jurisdiction, and authority as belong to any judge of any of the said superior courts sitting at Nisi Prius.

38. Court may direct where Issues shall be tried.] Where the Court of Probate directs an issue, it shall be lawful for such Court to direct such issue to be tried either before a judge of assize in any county or at the sittings for the trial of causes in London or Middlesex, and either by a special or common jury, in like manner as is now done by the Court of Chancery.

39. Appeal to the House of Lords.] Any person considering himself aggrieved by any final or interlocutory decree or order of the Court of Probate may appeal therefrom to the House of Lords: provided always, that no appeal from any interlocutory order of the Court of Probate shall be made without leave of the Court of Probate first obtained; but on the hearing of an appeal from any final decree, all interlocutory orders complained of shall be considered as under appeal as well as the final decree.

40. Advocates admitted to practise.—Barristers may practise in contentious Causes.] All persons who at the time of the passing of this Act have been admitted advocates in any of the ecclesiastical courts shall be entitled to practise as advocates or counsel in all matters and causes whatsoever in the Court of Probate; and all serjeants and barristers-at-law shall be entitled to practise as advocates or counsel in all contentious matters and causes in the said court; and such persons who have been so admitted advocates and serjeants and barristers-at-law shall have respectively the same rank and precedence which they now have before the judicial committee of the Privy Council, unless and until her Majesty shall otherwise order.

41. Advocates admitted to practise as Barristers.] All persons who at the time of the passing of this Act have been admitted as advocates as aforesaid shall be entitled to practise as counsel in any of her Majesty's courts of law or equity in England, with the same eligibility to appointments, under Acts of Parliament or otherwise, as if they had respectively been duly called to the degree of barrister-at-law on the days on which they respectively were so admitted as advocates, and with the same rank and precedence which they now have before the said judicial committee, unless and until her Majesty shall otherwise order.

42. Proctors admitted to practise.] Every person who at the time of the passing of this Act is actually admitted and practising as a proctor in the courts in Doctors' Commons, or in the Prerogative Court of York, or in any Diocesan Court, or in any Archidiaconal Court, having previously duly served under articles of clerkship either to an attorney or proctor, may, upon his application, at any time within one year after the passing of this Act, be admitted a proctor of the Court of Probate, without payment of any fee or stamp duty.

43. Admission of Registrars and Proctors as Solicitors.] Every person who at the time of the commencement of this Act is acting as registrar or deputy registrar of any ecclesiastical court, or is actually admitted and practising as a proctor in the courts in Doctors' Commons, or in any ecclesiastical court in England or Wales, may, within one year after the passing of this Act, be admitted, without the payment of any stamp duty, fee, charge, or gratuity whatsoever, as a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery, upon the production of his appointment or admission as such registrar, deputy registrar, or proctor, or an official certificate thereof; and upon the production of an official certificate that such appointment or admission continued in force at the time of the passing of this Act, and upon signing the roll of solicitors of the High Court of Chancery, but not otherwise, such person shall be entitled to be admitted as a solicitor of such court, and to be afterwards in like manner admitted and inrolled as an attorney of her Majesty's superior courts.

44. Admission of Articled Clerks to Proctors as Solicitors.] Every person who at the time of the commencement of this Act has served or is actually serving as an articled clerk to a proctor entitled to take such articled clerk, and who has not been admitted as a proctor, shall be entitled to be admitted as a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery, in the same manner, and subject to the same rules and regulations, and upon the same conditions as if he had before the commencement of this Act been articled to a solicitor or to an attorney-at-law; and such admission shall entitle such articled clerk so admitted as a solicitor to be afterwards in like manner admitted and inrolled as an attorney of her Majesty's superior courts: Provided, that if any such proctor to whom any such clerk is now articled shall retire from practice after the passing of this Act, he shall and is hereby required to transfer such articled clerk to some other proctor, or to a solicitor, or to an attorney-at-law, for the unexpired term of his articles of clerkship; provided that the Court shall at any time have the same power to transfer such clerk, during the unexpired term of his articles of clerkship, to any other proctor, or to a solicitor, or to an attorney-at-law, as the judge of the Prerogative Court now has in respect to clerks articled to proctors practising in the Court of Arches.

45. Practitioners.] All solicitors and attorneys-at-law may practise in the Court of Probate, and the laws and statutes now in force concerning solicitors and attorneys shall extend to solicitors and attorneys practising in the said court; and the commissioners for taking oaths in the High Court of Chancery shall be commissioners for taking oaths in the Court of Probate.

46. Probates and Administration may be granted in Common Form by District Registrars, if it shall appear by Affidavit that the Testator, &c., had a fixed place of Abode.] Probate of a will or letters of administration may, upon application for that purpose to the district registry, be granted in common form by the district registrar in the name of the Court of Probate and under the seal appointed to be used in such district registry, if it shall appear by affidavit of the person or some or one of the persons applying for the same that the testator or intestate, as the case may be, at the time of his death had a fixed place of abode within the district in which the application is made, such place of abode being stated in the affidavit, and such probate or letters of administration shall have effect over the personal estate of the deceased in all parts of England accordingly.

47. Affidavit to be conclusive for authorising Grant of Probate.] Such affidavit shall be conclusive for the purpose of authorising the grant, by the district registrar, of probate or administration; and no such grant of probate or administration shall be liable to be recalled, revoked, or otherwise impeached by reason that the testator or intestate had no fixed place of abode within the district at the time of his death; and every probate and administration granted by any such district registrar shall effectually discharge and protect all persons paying to or dealing with any executor or administrator thereunder, notwithstanding the want of or defect in such affidavit, as is hereby required.

48. District Registrars not to make Grants where there is Contention, &c.] The district registrar shall not grant probate or administration in any case in which there is contention as to the grant until such contention is terminated or disposed of by decree or otherwise, or in which it otherwise appears to him that probate or administration ought not to be granted in common form.

49. As to Transmission of Notice of Application for Grants of Probate, &c., to District Registrar.] Notice of every application to any district registrar for the grant of probate or administration shall be transmitted by such district registrar to the registrars of the principal registry by the next post after such application shall have been made; and such notice shall specify the name and description, or addition (if any), of the testator or intestate, the time of his death, and the place of his abode at his decease, as stated in the affidavit made in support of such application, and the name of the person by whom the application has been made, and such other particulars as may be directed by rules or orders under this Act; and no probate or administration shall be granted in pursuance of such application until such district registrar shall have received a certificate, under the hand of one of the registrars of the principal registry, that no other application appears to have been made in respect of the goods of the same deceased person, which certificate the said registrar of the principal registry shall forward as soon as may be to the district registrar; all such notices in respect of applications in the district registries shall be filed and kept in the principal registry, and the registrars of the principal registry shall, with reference to every such notice, examine all notices of such applications which may have been received from the several other district registries, and the applications which may have been made for grants of probate or administration at the principal registry, so far as it may appear necessary to ascertain whether or no application for probate or administration, in respect of the goods of the same deceased person, may have been made in more than one registry, and shall communicate with the district registrars as occasion may require in relation to such applications.

50. District Registrar in case of Doubt as to Grant to take the Directions of the Judge.] In every case where it appears to a district registrar that it is doubtful whether the probate or letters of administration which may be applied for should or should not be granted, or where any question arises in relation to the grant, or application for the grant, of any probate or administration, the district registrar shall transmit a statement of the matter in question to the registrars of the Court of Probate, who shall obtain the directions of the judge in relation thereto; and the judge may direct the district registrar to proceed in the matter of the application according to such instructions as to the judge may seem necessary, or may forbid any further proceeding by the district registrar in relation to the matter of such application, leaving the party applying for the grant in question to make application to the Court of Probate through its principal registry, or, if the case be within its jurisdiction, to a county court.

51. District Registrars to transmit Lists of Probates and Administrations, and Copies of Wills.] On the first Thursday of every month, or oftener if required by any rules or orders to be made in that behalf, every district registrar shall transmit to the registrars of the principal registry a list, in such form and containing such particulars as may be from time to time required by the Court of Probate, or by any rules or orders under this Act, of the grants of probate and administration made by such district registrar up to the last preceding Saturday, and not included in a previous return, and also a copy, certified by the district registrar to be a correct copy, of every will to which any such probate or administration relates.

52. District Registrars to preserve original Wills.] Every district registrar shall file and preserve all original wills of which probate or letters of administration with the will annexed may be granted by him, in the public registry of the district, subject to such regulations as the judge of the Court of Probate may from time to time make in relation to the due preservation thereof, and the convenient inspection of the same.

53. As to Caveats.] Caveats against the grant of probates or administrations may be lodged in the principal registry or in any district registry, and (subject to any rules or orders under this Act) the practice and procedure under such caveats in the Court of Probate shall, as near as may be, correspond with the practice and procedure under caveats now in use in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury; and immediately upon a caveat being lodged in any district registry, the district registrar shall send a copy thereof to the registrars, to be entered among the caveats in the principal registry; and immediately upon a caveat being entered in the principal registry, notice thereof shall be given to the district registrar of the district, if any, in which it is alleged the deceased resided at the time of his decease, and to any other district registrar to whom it may appear to the registrar of the principal registry expedient to transmit the same.

54. Where Personalty is under £200, and Real Property is under £300, County Court to have Jurisdiction.] Where it shall appear by affidavit of the person or some or one of the persons applying for probate or letters of administration that the testator or intestate had at the time of his death his fixed place of abode in one of the districts specified in Schedule (A) to this Act, and that the personal estate in respect of which such probate or letters of administration should be granted under this Act, exclusive of what the deceased shall have been possessed of or entitled to as a trustee, and not beneficially, but without deducting anything on account of the debts due and owing from the deceased, is under the value of £200, and that the deceased at the time of his death was not seised or entitled beneficially of or to any real estate, or that the value of the real estate of or to which he was seised or entitled beneficially at the time of his death was under the value of £300, the judge of the county court having jurisdiction in the place in which it shall be sworn that the deceased had at the time of his death his fixed place of abode shall have the contentious jurisdiction and authority of the Court of Probate in respect of questions as to the grant and revocation of probate of the will or letters of administration of the effects of such deceased person, in case there be any contention in relation thereto.

55. Registrar of County Court to transmit Certificate of Decree for Grant or Revocation of Probate.] On a decree being made by a judge of a county court for the grant or revocation of a probate or administration in any such cause, the registrar of the county court shall transmit to the district registrar of the district in which it shall have been sworn that the deceased had at the time of his decease his fixed place of abode a certificate under the seal of the county court of such decree having been made, and thereupon, on the application of the party or parties in favour of whom such decree shall have been made, a probate or administration in compliance with such decree shall be issued from such district registry; or, as the case may require, the probate or letters of administration theretofore granted shall be recalled or varied by the district registrar according to the effect of such decree.

56. The Judge of the County Court to decide Causes and enforce Judgments as in other Cases.] The judge of any county court before whom any disputed question shall be raised relating to matters and causes testamentary under this Act shall, subject to the rules and orders under this Act, have all the jurisdiction, power, and authority to decide the same and enforce judgment therein, and to enforce orders in relation thereto, as if the same had been an ordinary action in the county court.

57. Affidavit of the Facts giving the County Court Jurisdiction to be conclusive, unless disproved while the Matter is pending.] The affidavit as to the place of abode and state of the property of a testator or intestate which is to give contentious jurisdiction to the judge of a county court under the previous provisions shall, except as hereinafter provided, be conclusive for the purpose of authorising the exercise of such jurisdiction, and the grant or revocation of probate or administration in compliance with the decree of such judge; and no such grant of probate or administration shall be liable to be recalled, revoked, or otherwise impeached by reason that the testator or intestate had no fixed place of abode within the jurisdiction of such judge, or within any of the said districts at the time of his death, or by reason that the personal estate sworn to be under the value of £200 did, in fact, amount to or exceed that value, or that the value of the real estate of or to which the deceased was seised or entitled beneficially at the time of his death amounted to or exceeded £300: provided, that where it shall be shown to the judge of a county court before whom any matter is pending under this Act that the place of abode or state of the property of the testator or intestate in respect of whose will or estate he may have been applied to for grant or revocation of probate or administration has not been correctly stated in the affidavit, and if correctly stated would not have authorised him to exercise such contentious jurisdiction, he shall stay all further proceedings in his court in the matter, leaving any party to apply to the Court of Probate for such grant or revocation, and making such order as to the costs of the proceedings before him as he may think just.

58. As to Appeals from County Court.] Any party who shall be dissatisfied with the determination of the judge of the county court in point of law, or upon the admission or rejection of any evidence in any matter or cause under this Act, may appeal from the same to the Court of Probate, in such manner and subject to such regulations as may be provided by the rules and orders to be made under this Act, and the decision of the Court of Probate on such appeal shall be final.

59. Not obligatory to apply for Probate, &c., to District Registries or County Court, but may in every Case be made to Court of Probate.] It shall not be obligatory on any person to apply for probate or administration to any district registry, or through any county court, but in every case such application may be made through the principal registry of the Court of Probate, wherever the testator or intestate may at the time of his death have had his fixed place of abode: provided, that where in any contentious matter arising out of any such application it is shown to the Court of Probate that the state of the property and place of abode of the deceased were such as to give contentious jurisdiction to the judge of a county court, the Court of Probate may send the cause to such county court, and the judge thereof shall proceed therein as if such application and cause had been made to and arisen in his court in the first instance.

60. Rules and Orders for regulating the Procedure of County Courts under the Act to be made by the Judges now having Authority for the like Purpose.] For regulating the procedure and practice of the county courts, and the judges, registrars, and officers thereof, in relation to their jurisdiction and proceedings under this Act, rules and orders may be from time to time framed, amended, and certified by the county court judges appointed for the time being to frame rules and orders for regulating the practice of the county courts under the Act of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, and shall be subject to be allowed or disallowed or altered, and shall be in force from the day named for that purpose by the Lord Chancellor, as in the said Act is provided in relation to other rules and orders regulating the practice of the same courts; and for establishing rules and orders to be in force when this Act comes into operation, the power given by this enactment shall be exercised as soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this Act.

61. Where a Will affecting Real Estate is proved in solemn Form, or is the subject of a contentious Proceeding, the Heir and Persons interested in the Real Estate to be cited.] Where proceedings are taken under this Act for proving a will in solemn form, or for revoking the probate of a will, on the ground of the invalidity thereof, or where in any other contentious cause or matter under this Act the validity of a will is disputed, unless in the several cases aforesaid the will affects only personal estate, the heir-at-law, devisees, and other persons having or pretending interest in the real estate affected by the will shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, and to the rules and orders under this Act, be cited to see proceedings, or otherwise summoned in like manner as the next-of-kin or others having or pretending interest in the personal estate affected by a will should be cited or summoned, and may be permitted to become parties, or intervene for their respective interests in such real estate, subject to such rules and orders, and to the discretion of the court.

62. Where the Will is proved in solemn Form, or its Validity otherwise decided on, the Decree of the Court to be binding on the Persons interested in the Real Estate.] Where probate of such will is granted after such proof in solemn form, or where the validity of the will is otherwise declared by the decree or order in such contentious cause or matter as aforesaid, the probate, decree, or order respectively shall enure for the benefit of all persons interested in the real estate affected by such will, and the probate copy of such will, or the letters of administration with such will annexed, or a copy thereof respectively, stamped with the seal of her Majesty's Court of Probate, shall in all courts, and in all suits and proceedings affecting real estate, of whatever tenure (save proceedings by way of appeal under this Act, or for the revocation of such probate or administration), be received as conclusive evidence of the validity and contents of such will, in like manner as a probate is received in evidence in matters relating to the personal estate; and where probate is refused or revoked, on the ground of the invalidity of the will, or the invalidity of the will is otherwise declared by decree or order under this Act, such decree or order shall enure for the benefit of the heir-at-law or other persons against whose interest in real estate such will might operate, and such will shall not be received in evidence in any suit or proceeding in relation to real estate, save in any proceeding by way of appeal from such decrees or orders.

63. Heir in certain Cases not to be cited, and where not cited not to be affected by Probate.] Nothing herein contained shall make it necessary to cite the heir-at-law or other persons having or pretending interest in the real estate of a deceased person, unless it is shown to the court and the court is satisfied that the deceased was at the time of his decease seised of or entitled to or had power to appoint by will some real estate beneficially, or in any case where the will propounded or of which the validity is in question would not in the opinion of the court, though established as to personalty, affect real estate, but in every such case, and in any other case in which the court may, with reference to the circumstances of the property of the deceased or otherwise, think fit, the Court may proceed without citing the heir or other persons interested in real estate; provided that the probate, decree, or order of the Court shall not in any case affect the heir or any person in respect of his interest in real estate, unless such heir or person has been cited or made party to the proceedings, or derives title under or through a person so cited or made party.

64. Probate or Office Copy to be Evidence of the Will in Suits concerning Real Estate, save where the Validity of the Will is put in issue.] In any action at law or suit in equity, where, according to the existing law, it would be necessary to produce and prove an original will in order to establish a devise or other testamentary disposition of or affecting real estate, it shall be lawful for the party intending to establish in proof such devise or other testamentary disposition to give to the opposite party, ten days at least before the trial or other proceeding in which the said proof shall be intended to be adduced, notice that he intends at the said trial or other proceeding to give in evidence as proof of the devise or other testamentary disposition the probate of the said will or the letters of administration with the will annexed, or a copy thereof stamped with any seal of the Court of Probate; and in every such case such probate or letters of administration, or copy thereof respectively, stamped as aforesaid, shall be sufficient evidence of such will and of its validity and contents, notwithstanding the same may not have been proved in solemn form, or have been otherwise declared valid in a contentious cause or matter, as herein provided, unless the party receiving such notice shall, within four days after such receipt, give notice that he disputes the validity of such devise or other testamentary disposition.

65. As to Costs of Proof of Will.] In every case in which, in any such action or suit, the original will shall be produced and proved, it shall be lawful for the court or judge before whom such evidence shall be given, to direct by which of the parties the costs thereof shall be paid.

66. Place of Deposit of original Will.] There shall be one place of deposit under the control of the Court of Probate, at such place in London or Middlesex as her Majesty may by Order in Council direct, in which all the original wills brought into the court or of which probate or administration with the will annexed is granted under this Act in the principal registry thereof, and copies of all wills the originals whereof are to be preserved in the district registries, and such other documents as the court may direct, shall be deposited and preserved, and may be inspected under the control of the court and subject to the rules and orders under this Act.

67. Judge to cause Calendars to be made from Time to Time in the Principal Registry, and to be printed.] The judge shall cause to be made from time to time in the principal registry of the Court of Probate calendars of the grants of probate and administration in the principal registry, and in the several district registries of the court, for such periods as the judge may think fit; each such calendar to contain a note of every probate or administration with the will annexed granted within the period therein specified, and also a note of every other administration granted within the same period, such respective notes setting forth the dates of such grants, the registry in which the grants were made, the names of the testators and intestates, the place and time of death, the names and descriptions of the executors and administrators, and the value of the effects; and the calendars to be so made shall be printed as the same are from time to time completed.

68. Registrar to transmit printed Copies to certain Offices.] The registrars shall cause a printed copy of every calendar to be transmitted through the post or otherwise to each of the district registries, and to the office of her Majesty's Prerogative in Dublin, the office of the Commissary of the County of Midlothian in Edinburgh, and such other offices, if any, as the Court of Probate shall from time to time by rule or order direct; and every printed copy of a calendar so transmitted as aforesaid shall be kept in the registry or office to which it is transmitted, and may be inspected by any person on payment of a fee of 1*s.* for each search, without reference to the number of calendars inspected.

69. Official Copy of whole or part of Will may be obtained.] An official copy of the whole or any part of a will, or an official certificate of the grant of any letters of administration, may be obtained from the registry or district registry where the will has been proved or the administration granted, on the payment of such fees as shall be fixed for the same by the rules and orders under this Act.

70. Administration pendente Lite.] Pending any suit touching the validity of the will of any deceased person, or for obtaining, recalling, or revoking any probate or any grant of administration, the Court of Probate may appoint an administrator of the personal estate of such deceased person; and the administrator so appointed shall have all the rights and powers of a general administrator, other than the right of distributing the residue of such personal estate; and every such administrator shall be subject to the immediate control of the court, and act under its direction.

71. Receiver of Real Estate pendente Lite.] It shall be lawful for the Court of Probate to appoint any administrator appointed as aforesaid or any other person to be receiver of the real estate of any deceased person pending any suit in the court touching the validity of any will of such deceased person by which his real estate may be affected, and such receiver shall have such power to receive all rents and profits of such real estate, and such powers of letting and managing such real estate, as the court may direct.

72. Remuneration to Administrators pendente Lite and Receivers.] The Court of Probate may direct that administrators and receivers appointed pending suits involving matters and causes testamentary shall receive out of the personal and real estate of the deceased such reasonable remuneration as the court think fit.

73. Power as to Appointment of Administrator.] Where a person has died or shall die wholly intestate as to his personal estate, or leaving a will affecting personal estate but without having appointed an executor thereof willing and competent to take probate, or where the executor shall at the time of the death of such person be resident out of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and it shall appear to the court to be necessary or convenient in any such case, by reason of the insolvency of the estate of the deceased, or other special circumstances, to appoint some person to be the administrator of the personal estate of the deceased, or of any part of such personal estate, other than the person who if this Act had not been passed would by law have been entitled to a grant of administration of such personal estate, it shall not be obligatory upon the court to grant administration of the personal estate of such deceased person to the person who if this Act had not passed would by law have been entitled to a grant thereof, but it shall be lawful for the court, in its discretion, to appoint such person as the court shall think fit to be such administrator, upon his giving such security (if any) as the court shall direct, and every such administration may be limited as the court shall think fit.

74. 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, extended to Administrators.] The provisions of an Act passed in the 38th Geo. 3, c. 87, shall apply (in like manner) to all cases where letters of administration have been granted, and the person to whom such administration shall have been granted shall be out of the jurisdiction of her Majesty's courts of law and equity.

75. After Grant of Administration no Person to have Power to sue as an Executor.] After any grant of administration, no person shall have power to sue or prosecute any suit, or otherwise act as executor of the deceased, as to the personal estate comprised in or affected by such grant of administration, until such administration shall have been recalled or revoked.

76. Revocation of temporary Grants not to prejudice Actions or Suits.] Where before the revocation of any temporary administration any proceedings at law or in equity have been commenced by or against any administrator so appointed, the court in which such proceedings are pending may order that a suggestion be made upon the record of the revocation of such administration, and of the grant of probate or administration which shall have been made consequent thereupon, and that the proceedings shall be continued in the name of the new executor or administrator, in like manner as if the proceeding had been originally commenced by or against such new executor or administrator, but subject to such conditions and variations, if any, as such court may direct.

77. Payments under revoked Probates or Administration to be valid.] Where any probate or administration is revoked under this Act, all payments bonâ fide made to any executor or administrator under such probate or administration, before the revocation thereof, shall be a legal discharge to the person making the same; and the executor or administrator who shall have acted under any such revoked probate or administration may retain and reimburse himself in respect of any payments made by him which the person to whom probate or administration shall be afterwards granted might have lawfully made.

78. Persons, &c., making Payment upon Probate granted for Estate of deceased Person to be indemnified.] All persons and corporations making or permitting to be made any payment or transfer bonâ fide, upon any probate or letters of administration granted in respect of the estate of any deceased person under the authority of this Act, shall be indemnified and protected in so doing, notwithstanding any defect or circumstance whatsoever affecting the validity of such probate or letters of administration.

79. Rights of an Executor renouncing Probate to cease as if he had not been named in the Will.] Where any person, after the commencement of this Act, renounces probate of the will of which he is appointed executor or one of the executors, the rights of such person in respect of the executorship shall wholly cease, and the representation to the testator and the administration of his effects shall and may, without any further renunciation, go, devolve, and be committed in like manner as if such person had not been appointed executor.

80. Sureties to Administration Bonds.] So much of an Act passed in the 21st year of Hen. 8, c. 5, and of an Act passed in the 22nd and 23rd years of Chas. 2, c. 10, and of an Act passed in the 1st year of James 2, c. 17, as requires any surety, bond, or other security to be taken from a person to whom administration shall be committed, shall be repealed.

81. Persons to whom Grant of Administrations shall be committed shall give Bond.] Every person to whom any grant of administration shall be committed shall give bond to the judge of the Court of Probate to enure for the benefit of the judge for the time being; and, if the Court of Probate or (in the case of a grant from the district registry) the district registrar shall require, with one or more surety or sureties, conditioned for duly collecting, getting in, and administering the personal estate of the deceased, which bond shall be in such form as the judge shall from time to time by any general or special order direct: Provided that it shall not be necessary for the solicitor for the affairs of the Treasury or the solicitor of the Duchy of Lancaster applying for or obtaining administration to the use or benefit of her Majesty to give any such bond as aforesaid.

82. Penalty on Bond.] Such bond shall be in a penalty of double the amount under which the estate and effects of the deceased shall be sworn, unless the Court or district registrar, as the case may be, shall in any case think fit to direct the same to be reduced, in which case it shall be lawful for the Court or district registrar so to do; and the Court or district registrar may also direct that more bonds than one shall be given, so as to limit the liability of any surety to such amount as the Court or district registrar shall think reasonable.

83. Power of Court to assign Bond.] The Court may, on application made on motion or petition in a summary way, and on being satisfied that the condition of any such bond has been broken, order one of the registrars of the court to assign the same to some person, to be named in such order; and such person, his executors or administrators, shall thereupon be entitled to sue on the said bond, in his own name, both at law and in equity, as if the same had been originally given to him instead of to the judge of the court, and shall be entitled to recover thereon as trustee for all persons interested the full amount recoverable in respect of any breach of the condition of the said bond.

84. Pending Suits transferred to Court of Probate—Not to apply to Appeals pending before her Majesty in Council.] All suits, whether original or by way of appeal, which at the commencement of this Act shall be pending in any court in England respecting any grant of probate or administration, shall be transferred, with all the proceedings therein, to the Court of Probate, there to be dealt with and decided according to the rules and practice of the said court, except so far as such Court may think it expedient to adopt, for the purposes of such transferred suits or any of them, the rules or practice of the court in which the same shall have been pending; to which end the Court of Probate shall, for the purposes of such suits, have all the jurisdiction, power, and authority possessed by the court from which such suit shall be transferred; but this enactment shall not apply to proceedings by way of appeal pending before her Majesty in Council, which proceedings shall be carried on and prosecuted in the same manner in all respects as if this Act had not passed; and every person who if this Act had not passed might have appealed to her Majesty in Council against any proceeding, decree, or sentence of any court respecting the grant of any probate or administration, may, notwithstanding this Act, appeal to her Majesty in Council against such proceeding, decree, or sentence: Provided also, that her Majesty in Council may remit to the Court of Probate any cause or proceeding pending by way of appeal as aforesaid, or to be brought before her Majesty in Council upon appeal as aforesaid, with such directions as the justice of the case may require.

85. Power to Judges whose Jurisdiction is determined to deliver written Judgments.] Provided, that if at the commencement of this Act any cause which would be transferred to the Court of Probate under the enactment hereinbefore contained shall have been heard before any judge having jurisdiction in relation to such cause before the commencement of this Act, and shall be standing for judgment, such judge may, at any time within six weeks after the commencement of this Act, give in to one of the registrars of the court a written judgment thereon, signed by him, and a decree or order, as the case may require, shall be drawn up in pursuance of such judgment; and every such decree or order shall have the same force and effect as if it had been drawn up in pursuance of a judgment of the Court of Probate on the day on which the same shall so be delivered to the registrar, and shall be subject to appeal under this Act.

86. Void and voidable Probates and Administrations.] All grants of probates and administrations made before the commencement of this Act, which may be void or voidable by reason only that the courts from which respectively the same were obtained had not jurisdiction to make such grants, shall be as valid as if the same had been obtained from courts entitled to make such grants: Provided, that any such grants of probate or administration shall not be made valid by this Act when the same shall before the commencement of this Act have been revoked or determined by any court of competent jurisdiction to have been void; nor shall this Act prejudice or affect any proceedings pending at the time of the passing of this Act in which the validity of any such probate or administration shall be in question: If the result of such proceeding shall be to invalidate the same, such probate or administration shall not be rendered valid by this Act; and if such proceedings abate or become defective by reason of the death of any party, any person who but for this Act would have any right by reason of the invalidity of such probate or administration shall retain such right, and may commence proceedings for enforcing the same within six calendar months after the death of such party.

87. Probates and Administrations granted before this Act comes into Operation.] Legal grants of probate and administration made before the commencement of this Act, and grants of probate and administration made legal by this Act, shall have the same force and effect as if they had been granted under this Act; but in every such case there shall be due and payable to her Majesty such further stamp duty, if any, as would have been chargeable on any probate or administration which but for this Act would or ought to have been obtained in respect of the personal estate not covered by the grant; and all inventories and accounts in respect thereof shall be returnable to the Court of Chancery, and all bonds taken in respect thereof may be enforced by or under the authority of the Court of Chancery, at the discretion of the Court.

88. Probate or Administration may be granted of Personal Estate not affected by the former Grants.] Provided that where any probate or administration has been granted before the commencement of this Act, and the deceased had personal estate in England not within the limits of the jurisdiction of the court by which the probate or administration was granted, or otherwise not within the operation of the grant, it shall be lawful for the Court of Probate to grant probate or administration only in respect of such personal estate not covered by any former probate or administration, and such grant may be limited accordingly.

89. Judges of present Ecclesiastical Courts and others to transmit all Wills, &c., to the Registry.] The acting judge and registrar of every court, and other person now having jurisdiction to grant probate or administration, and every person having the custody of the documents and papers of or belonging to such court or person, shall, upon receiving a requisition for that purpose, under the seal of the Court of Probate, from a registrar, and at the time and in the manner mentioned in such requisition, transmit to the Court of Probate, or to such other place as in such requisition shall be specified, all records, wills, grants, probates, letters of administration, administration bonds, notes of administration, court books, calendars, deeds, processes, acts, proceedings, writs, documents, and every other instrument relating exclusively or principally to matters or causes testamentary, to be deposited and arranged in the registry of each district or in the principal registry, as the case may require, so as to be easy of reference, under the control and direction of the Court.

90. Penalty for Default.] No judge, registrar, or other person who shall wilfully refuse or neglect so to transmit such records, wills, grants, probates, letters of administration, administration bonds, notes of administration, court books, calendars, deeds, processes, acts, proceedings, writs, documents, or any other instrument relating to matters or causes testamentary, shall be entitled to any compensation under this Act; and every judge, registrar, or other person so refusing or neglecting shall be liable to a penalty of £100, to be sued for and recovered, together with full costs of suit, in any of her Majesty's superior courts, by the registrars.

91. As to Depositories for safe Custody of the Wills of living Persons.] One or more safe and convenient depository or depositories shall be provided, under the control and directions of the Court of Probate, for all such wills of living persons as shall be deposited therein for safe custody; and all persons may deposit their wills in such depository upon payment of such fees and under such regulations as the judge shall from time to time by any order direct.

92. This Act not to affect the Stamp Duties on Probates and Administrations.] Nothing in this Act contained shall affect the stamp duties now by law payable upon probates and administrations; and all the clauses, provisions, rules, regulations, and directions contained in any Act of Parliament relating to the said duties, and to wills, probates of wills, and letters of administration, for securing the said duties, not superseded by or inconsistent with the express provisions of this Act, shall be in full force, and shall be observed, applied, and put in execution for securing the duties payable on probates of wills and letters of administration granted under this Act, as if such duties had been granted by this Act, and the said clauses, provisions, rules, and regulations relating thereto were herein repeated and specially enacted.

93. The Registrars to deliver Copies of Wills, &c., to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.] The registrars of the Court of Probate shall, within such period as the judge shall direct after probate of any will or letters of administration shall have been granted, deliver or cause to be delivered to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, or their proper officer, the following documents respectively; that is to say, in the case of a probate or administration with a will annexed a copy of the will and the original affidavit, and in the case of letters of administration without a will annexed such original affidavit, and in every case of letters of administration a copy or extract thereof, and in every case such certificate or note of the grant as the said Commissioners may require.

94. Sects. 8 and 9 of 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, repealed in part as to the Court of Probate.] Whereas, by an Act passed in the 53rd year of King Geo. 3, c. 127, it is enacted, that if any proctor of any ecclesiastical court shall act as such, or permit his name to be used in any suit appertaining to the office of a proctor, or in obtaining probates of wills or letters of administration, for or on account or for the profit or benefit of any person not entitled to act as a proctor, or shall permit any such person to participate in such profit or benefit, such proctor shall be subject to certain penalties therein mentioned; and it is also therein further enacted, that if any person shall, in his own name, or in that of any other person, do or perform any act whatever belonging to the office of a proctor in consideration of any gain, fee, or reward, or with a view to participate in the benefit to be derived from the office, functions, or practice of a proctor, without being admitted and inrolled, every such person shall be subject to certain other penalties therein mentioned: Be it enacted, nothing in the said Act contained shall prevent any proctor of the Court of Probate from acting as agent of any attorney or solicitor in relation to any matter testamentary, or from allowing him to participate in the profits of and incident thereto.

95. Fees to be taken by Officers of Court and by Officers of County Courts.] The Lord Chancellor, with such assistance as is hereinbefore provided as to rules and orders to be made in pursuance of this Act, shall, as soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this Act, fix a table or tables of fees to be taken by the officers of the Court of Probate, and the proctors, solicitors, and attorneys practising therein, including the district registrars, and the proctors, solicitors, and attorneys practising in district registries, and of fees to be taken by the officers of the county courts, in respect of business under this Act, and of fees to be payable in respect of searches, inspection, and printed and other copies of and extracts from records, wills, and other documents in the custody or under the control of the Court of Probate, and the judge of the Court of Probate, with such concurrence as is hereinbefore provided in respect of the amendment of rules and orders, is hereby empowered, from time to time after this Act shall come into operation, to add to, reduce, alter, or amend such table or tables of fees, as he may see fit: Provided that such tables of fees and every alteration of the same, except so far as respects the fees which are to be taken by district registrars, proctors, and others, for their own remuneration and to their own use, shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury; and every such table of fees, and every addition, reduction, alteration, or amendment to, in, or of the same, shall be published in the London Gazette; and no other fees than those specified and allowed in such tables of fees shall be demanded or taken by such officers, and proctors, solicitors, and attorneys.

96. Taxation of Costs.] The bill of any proctor, attorney, or solicitor, for any fees, charges, or disbursements in respect of any business transacted in the Court of Probate, whether contentious or otherwise, or any matters connected therewith, shall, as well between proctor or attorney or solicitor and client as between party and party, be subject to taxation by any one of the registrars of the said court, and the mode in which any such bill shall be referred for taxation, and by whom the costs of taxation shall be paid, shall be regulated by the rules and orders to be made under this Act, and the certificate of the registrar of the amount at which such bill is taxed shall be subject to appeal to the judge of the said court.

97. Fees not to be paid in Money, but by Stamps.] None of the fees payable to the officers of the Court of Probate, or of any county court, in respect of business under this Act, except the fees of the district registrars (which are to be taken as their remuneration, and for their own use), the fees of proctors, solicitors, and attorneys, and such fees as may be authorised to be taken for their own use by surrogates and commissioners for administering oaths, shall be received in money, but every such fee shall be collected and received by a stamp denoting the amount of the fee which otherwise would be payable.

98. Provisions of Acts relating to Stamps to be applicable to Stamps for collecting Fees.] The fees to be collected by means of stamps under the provisions of this Act shall be deemed "Stamp Duties," and shall be placed under the management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, to be collected and paid into the Exchequer under the same laws and regulations as those made in respect of the other duties of "stamps;" and the provisions in the several Acts for the time being in force relating to stamps under the care or management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall, in all cases not hereby expressly provided for, be of full force and effect with respect to the stamps to be provided under or by virtue of this Act, and to the vellum, parchment, or paper on or to which the same stamps shall be impressed or affixed, and be applied and put in execution for collecting and securing the sums of money denoted thereby, and for preventing, detecting, and punishing all frauds, forgeries, and other offences relating thereto, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if such provisions had been herein repeated and specially enacted with reference to the said last-mentioned stamps and sums of money respectively; but a separate and distinct account of all money received in respect of the said last-mentioned stamps for every year ending the 31st of March shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one month after the termination of such year of accounts, or, if Parliament be not then sitting, within one month after the commencement of the next session of Parliament.

99. No Document to be received or used unless stamped.] No document which under this Act and any table of fees for the time being in force under this Act ought to have a stamp in respect of such fee impressed thereon or affixed thereto, shall be received or filed or be used in relation to any proceeding in the Court of Probate, or be of any validity for any purpose whatsoever, unless or until the same shall have the proper stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto: Provided that if any time it shall appear that any such document has through mistake or inadvertence been received, or filed, or used without having such stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto, it shall be lawful for the judge of the Court of Probate, if he think fit, to order that such stamp shall be impressed thereon or affixed thereto, and thereupon, when a stamp shall have been impressed on such document or affixed thereto in compliance with any such order, such document, and every proceeding in reference thereto, shall be as valid and effectual as if such stamp had been impressed thereon or affixed thereto in the first instance.

100. Officers of the Court may be dismissed for Fraud or wilful Neglect in relation to Stamps.] If any officer of the Court of Probate, or any other person employed under this Act, shall do or commit or connive at any fraudulent act or practice in relation to any stamp to be used under the provisions of this Act, or to any fee or sum of money to be collected, or which ought to be collected, by means of any such stamp, or if any such officer or person shall be guilty of any wilful act, neglect, or omission whereby any fee or money which ought to be collected by means of a stamp under this Act shall be lost, or the payment thereof evaded, every such officer or person so offending shall be dismissed from his office or employment if the judge of the Court of Probate shall think fit so to order.

101. Salary of Judge and Compensations to be charged on Consolidated Fund.] The salary of the judge of the Court of Probate, and any retiring annuity granted to a judge of the Court of Probate under this Act, and all compensations payable under this Act, shall be charged on and payable out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom.

102. Salaries and Expenses not charged on the Consolidated Fund to be paid out of moneys to be provided by Parliament.] It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, out of such moneys as may be provided and appropriated by Parliament for the purpose, to cause to be paid all salaries payable to the registrars, clerks, and other officers under this Act, and all necessary expenses of the Court of Probate and its registries, and other expenses which may be incurred in carrying the provisions of this Act into effect (except such salary, retiring annuity, and compensations as are hereinbefore charged on the said Consolidated Fund).

103. Compensation to Registrars, &c., of existing Courts.] It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of the Treasury to grant to any archdeacons, judges, deputy judges, registrars, deputy registrars, and other persons holding office in the courts now exercising jurisdiction in matters and causes testamentary who may sustain any loss of emoluments by reason of the passing of this Act, and who are not transferred or appointed by or under this Act to offices of equal value in the Court of Probate, such compensation as, having regard to the tenure of their respective offices and appointments, and to the provisions of the Act of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77, s. 25, and of the Act of the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 98, s. 9, and the several subsequent Acts continuing the provisions of the said Acts respectively, the said Commissioners deem just and proper to be awarded: Provided that where persons whose claims in respect of offices, held for life or otherwise, are excluded by the said provisions, have executed in person the duties of such offices, the said provisions shall not be deemed to prevent the said Commissioners from granting to such persons such compensation as the said Commissioners would deem just and proper to be awarded on the abolition or reduction of the emoluments of like offices, if held at the pleasure of the Crown; and it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners to grant to all managing and other clerks who have been continuously employed in the offices of registrars of the said courts for fifteen years and upwards immediately before the passing of this Act, and may sustain any loss of emoluments as aforesaid, and are not transferred or appointed as aforesaid, such compensation as the said Commissioners may deem just and proper: Provided always, that if any person to whom any yearly sum is awarded for compensation as aforesaid is or shall be appointed to any office or situation under this Act, or in the public service, the payment of such compensation shall be suspended so long as he continues to receive the salary or emoluments of such office or situation, if the amount thereof be equal to or greater than the amount of emoluments in respect of the loss whereof compensation is awarded; and if the amount of such last-mentioned emoluments be greater than the salary or emoluments of such office or situation, no more of such compensation shall be paid than will, with such salary or emoluments, be equal to the emoluments in respect of the loss whereof such compensation is payable.

104. Persons receiving Compensation to continue to discharge the remaining Duties of their Offices.] Any person to whom compensation is awarded under this Act in respect of the loss of emoluments of any office, and who at the passing of this Act shall have been discharging or liable to discharge in respect of such office duties other than those in matters and causes testamentary, shall, so long as he shall receive such compensation, be bound to discharge such other duties on the same terms on which, whether gratuitously or otherwise, he discharged or was liable to discharge the same before the passing of this Act.

105. Compensation to Proctors.] Whereas the fees or emoluments of the persons now practising as proctors in the courts now exercising jurisdiction in matters and causes testamentary may be damaged by the abolition of the exclusive rights and privileges which they have hitherto enjoyed as such proctors in such courts: Be it enacted, that the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, by examination on oath or otherwise, which oath they are hereby authorised to administer, may inquire into and may, by the production of such evidence as they shall think fit to require, ascertain and absolutely determine the net annual amount of the profits arising from the transaction of business by proctors in matters and causes testamentary, on an average of five years immediately preceding the commencement of this Act, or of such proportion of five years as shall have elapsed since each and every such proctor was admitted to practise in such courts, and shall award to each and every such proctor a sum of money or annual payment during the term of his natural life of such amount as shall be equal in value to one-half of the net profits derived by such proctor in respect of matters and causes testamentary upon the said average of five years immediately preceding the commencement of this Act, or of such proportion of the said five years as shall have elapsed since the admission of each and every such proctor to practise in the courts now exercising jurisdiction in matters and causes testamentary.

106. Compensation to Proctors in Partnership.] And whereas divers proctors practising in the courts now exercising jurisdiction in matters and causes testamentary now are or may at the commencement of this Act be associated together in partnership: Be it therefore enacted, that in all such cases the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall inquire into and ascertain the terms or conditions of such partnerships, and shall absolutely determine and award compensation in respect thereof as hereinbefore provided to each of such partnerships, in like manner as if all the emoluments thereof had been derived by one individual, and shall apportion such compensation among the members of each such partnership, with or without benefit of survivorship, regard being had to the existing terms and conditions of the same.

107. For the Protection of the Interests of Viscount Canterbury.—2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 109.] And whereas the most reverend Charles late Archbishop of Canterbury, by virtue of the power given by an Act of the 9 Geo. 4, "To authorise the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury for the Time being to appoint a Person or Persons to the Office of Registrar of his Prerogative, without a previous Surrender of the existing Grant or Grants of the said Office," did by letters patent under his archiepiscopal seal, dated the 21st of June, 1828, with the confirmation of the dean and chapter of the cathedral and metropolitical Church of Christ, Canterbury, grant the said office of Registrar of his Prerogative to the Right Honourable Charles Manners Sutton, now Viscount Canterbury, then Charles Manners Sutton, Esquire, the eldest son and next heir male of the Right Honourable Charles Manners Sutton, late Viscount Canterbury, for his life, subject and without prejudice to the estates and interests, rights and privileges, of the Reverend George Moore and Robert Moore (who then held the said office by virtue of such grant as therein mentioned), and the survivor of them: And whereas by an Act passed in the 2nd and 3rd years of Will. 4, intituled "An Act for settling and securing Annuities on the Right Honourable Charles Manners Sutton and on his next Heir Male, in consideration of the eminent Services of the said Right Honourable Charles Manners Sutton," it was enacted, that an annuity of £4,000 should be payable out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the said Right Honourable Charles Manners Sutton, late Viscount Canterbury, during his life, and that after the decease of the said Charles late Viscount Canterbury one annuity of £3,000 be payable out of the said Consolidated Fund to the then heir male of the body of the said Charles late Viscount Canterbury, during the natural life of such heir male; and it was further enacted, that, in the event of the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury having succeeded to and being in the possession of the said annuity of £3,000, and afterwards becoming entitled to the full possession of the said office of registrar of the Prerogative of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and to the fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments thereof (provided the same should exceed the annual sum of £3,000), then and in either of the cases aforesaid the said annuity of £3,000 should cease and determine and be no longer payable to the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury: Provided nevertheless, that if the said fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments of the said office of registrar should not produce the net annual sum of £3,000 to the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury, then there should be issued and paid out of the said Consolidated Fund such a sum of money annually as, together with the said fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments, would make a clear annual income to the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury of £3,000: And whereas the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury, upon the decease of the said Charles late Viscount Canterbury, succeeded to and is now in possession of the annuity of £3,000, but he is not yet in possession of the said office of registrar: There shall be awarded to the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury, as a compensation for the fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments of the said office of registrar of the Prerogative of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, an annuity to be calculated upon the average yearly net receipts of the legal fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments of the said office during such period next preceding the time when this Act shall come into operation as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall think proper; and such annuity shall commence from the time of this Act coming into operation, if the said Charles Viscount Canterbury shall then be in possession of the said office, and if not, then from the time at which the said Charles Viscount Canterbury would have become entitled, but for the passing of this Act, to the full possession of the said office, and to the receipt of the fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments thereof, and shall be paid to the said Charles Viscount Canterbury thenceforth during his life; provided that if the said annuity by way of compensation shall exceed the annual sum of £3,000, then the said annuity of £3,000 payabl under the last-recited Act to the said Charles Viscount Canterbury shall, from and after the commencement of the said annuity by way of compensation, cease and determine, and shall not be payable to the said Charles Viscount Canterbury; and in case the annuity awarded by way of compensation shall be less than the net annual sum of £3,000, the provision contained in the said recited Act passed in the 2nd and 3rd years of Will. 4, for the payment unto the heir male of the body of the said Charles Viscount Canterbury, out of the said Consolidated Fund, of such sum of money annually as, together with the said fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments, would make up a clear income to him of £3,000, shall, from and after the commencement of the said annuity by way of compensation, be applicable to and be in force for the purpose of making up, together with the said annuity so to be awarded in lieu of such fees, perquisites, profits, and emoluments as aforesaid, a clear annual income of £3,000 to the said Charles now Viscount Canterbury during his life.

108. The Registry of Prerogative Court of Canterbury to vest in Registrars of the Court.] All the claim, title, and interest which at the time of the passing of this Act the Reverend Robert Moore, Clerk, has or is entitled to in or in respect of the building at present used as the public registry of the Prerogative Court, shall at the time appointed for the commencement of this Act vest in the registrars for the time being of the court, subject to the payment of such rents, and the performance and fulfilment of such contracts in respect thereof, as the said Robert Moore, his executors or administrators, shall be subject to at the time of such vesting.

109. Compensation to Sir John Dodson, in case he be not appointed Judge of the Court of Probate.] In case Sir John Dodson, the present judge of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury and Dean of the Court of Arches, be not appointed the first judge of the Court of Probate, there shall be paid to him during his natural life, as well by way of retiring pension as of salary as Dean of the Court of Arches, the net yearly sum of £2,000, to commence from the time appointed for the coming into operation of this Act, and to be paid out of the fund and in manner herein provided for the payment of compensations.

110. Establishments in District Registries.] There shall be a clerk or so many clerks in each district registry, and there shall be paid to such clerk or clerks such salary or respective salaries, as the judge of the court, with the sanction of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, may from time to time think fit to direct; and it shall be lawful for such judge to prescribe from time to time the qualifications which shall be possessed by persons appointed to be clerks in such district registries, and generally to regulate the establishment of such district registries with reference to the duties to be performed therein; and the clerk or clerks in each district registry shall be appointed by the district registrar, with the approval of the judge; and every such clerk may be removed by such judge, or by the district registrar with the approval of the judge.

111. Fees payable to District Registrars.—District Registrars may be paid by Salaries instead of Fees.] Each district registrar shall, out of the fees taken by him in respect of the business in his respective district registry, pay the salary or salaries of the clerk or clerks in such registry, and the residue of such fees shall be retained by such district registrar to his own use; and every district registrar shall keep an account of all fees so taken by him as aforesaid, and shall within one month after the end of each year render to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury a faithful account in writing of all such fees received by him during such year: Provided that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, at any time after the commencement of this Act, to order that the district registrars under this Act, or any of them, shall be paid by salaries instead of fees, and to fix the salaries to be payable to them respectively; and thereupon all fees payable to the district registrars so ordered to be paid by salaries shall be accounted for and paid into the Exchequer at such times and under such regulations as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall direct, and shall be carried to and form part of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom; and the salaries of such district registrars and of their clerks shall be paid out of such moneys as shall be provided by Parliament for that purpose, and no such district registrar shall be deemed to have any claim to compensation on account of any diminution of his emoluments by reason of any such order.

112. Compensation to Clerical Surrogates, &c.] It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of the Treasury to grant to every clerical surrogate or other clerical person who, at the time of the passing of this Act, shall have been appointed surrogate in either of the provinces of Canterbury or York, such compensation for any loss the said surrogates or persons may sustain by the passing of this Act as the said Commissioners deem just and proper to be awarded; the said Commissioners having regard in awarding such compensation to the circumstance of the said clerical surrogates not being able to follow any other professional employment in lieu of the said office of surrogate.

113. Persons receiving Compensation to be liable to be called upon to fill Offices, &c.] That every person to whom any compensation shall be granted under this Act shall at all times when called upon be liable to fill any public office or situation in England under the Crown for which his previous services in any office abolished by this Act may render him eligible; and that if he shall decline when called upon so to do to take upon himself such office or situation, and execute the duties thereof satisfactorily, being in a competent state of health, he shall forfeit his right to any compensation or allowances which may have been granted to him in respect of such previous services.

114. Publication of Accounts.] The Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall cause to be prepared in each year ending December 31, a return of all fees and moneys levied in such year under the authority of this Act; also a return of the annual salaries of the judge of the said Court of Probate, and of the registrars, deputy-registrars, clerks, and all others holding offices either in London or in the country districts, with an account of all the incidental expenses relating to the offices aforesaid, whether such salaries and expenses be defrayed out of fees, or out of any other moneys; also a return of all superannuations, pensions, annuities, retiring allowances, and compensations made payable under this Act in each year, stating the gross amount and the amount in detail of such charges: Provided always, that all such returns aforesaid shall be presented to both Houses of Parliament on or before the 31st of March in each year, if Parliament is then sitting, and if Parliament is not sitting, then such returns shall be presented within one month of the first meeting of Parliament after the 31st of March in each year: Provided also, that every district registrar shall keep an account of all fees so taken by him as aforesaid, and shall within one month after the end of each year render to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury a faithful account in writing of all such fees received by him during such year.

115. Judge, if a Privy Councillor, to be a member of Judicial Committee.] The judge of the court, if a Privy Councillor, shall be a member of the judicial committee of the Privy Council.

116. College of Doctors of Law may let, sell, &c., their Real and Personal Estate, and lay out Moneys in Purchase of other Estates, &c.] And whereas, with reference to the abolition of the jurisdiction hereby abolished and otherwise, it is expedient to give, confirm, or extend certain powers to or of "The College of Doctors of Law exercent in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts," incorporated under that style and title by letters patent, dated 22nd of June, in 8 Geo. 3: Be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said college from time to time hereafter to let, sell, or exchange for other real or personal estate, or both, all or any part of the real and personal estate which shall for the time being belong to the said college, either directly or through the medium of any trustee or trustees, and to lay out the moneys to be received on any such sale or exchange, or otherwise, belonging to the said college as aforesaid, in the purchase of other real or personal estate, or both, but so that the said college shall not at any one time hold or enjoy real estate of a yearly value exceeding £1,000 in the whole, and to pay, apply, and dispose of the income of all the real and personal estate which shall for the time being belong to the said college as aforesaid to or for the benefit of such body or bodies politic or corporate, or person or persons, whether being or including, or not being or including, the said college, and all or any individual members or member thereof for the time being, and generally for such purposes and in such manner as the said college shall think fit: and further, to alien and dispose of all or any part of such real and personal estate, and the proceeds of any sale thereof, either by way of donation, voluntary disposition, or otherwise, unto, between, or amongst any body or bodies politic or corporate, or any person or persons whatsoever, whether being or not being a member or members of the said college: Provided always, that no donation or other voluntary disposition of the corpus, or any part of the corpus, of the real and personal estate of the said college to any person or persons being a member or members thereof at the time of such donation or other voluntary disposition shall be effectual without the previous consent thereto of a majority of the members of the said college present at any meeting of the college, and the receipt of the treasurer for the time being of the said college shall be an effectual discharge for all gross annual and other sums which shall for the time being belong or be payable to the said college.

117. College may surrender their Charter, and upon such Surrender shall be dissolved.] It shall be lawful for the said college, at any time after a resolution to that effect shall have been come to at a meeting of the college, by a majority of the members present at such meeting, to surrender and yield up to her Majesty, her heirs or successors, at such time as in such resolution shall be determined, the charter of incorporation of the said college, and all franchises and privileges thereby conferred, or which shall for the time being belong to the said college; and upon and by such surrender the said corporation shall be dissolved, and shall cease to exist, for all purposes whatsoever (except so far as its existence may be requisite for the saving of the rights of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, and of all and every person and persons, body and bodies politic or corporate, whatsoever other than the said college); and all real and personal estate which at the time of such dissolution of the said college shall belong to the said college for its own use and benefit, either directly or through the medium of any trustee or trustees, shall thenceforth belong, for all the estate and interest therein which at the time of such dissolution belonged to the said college absolutely, to all the persons who at the time of such dissolution thereof shall be the president and fellowes of the said college, in equal shares as tenants in common, to and for their own use and benefit respectively, but subject to any charges or incumbrances affecting the same at the time of such dissolution; and all real and personal estate of which the said college at the time of such dissolution thereof be seised or possessed, upon any trust or trusts, shall thereupon become vested in the four persons who at the time of such dissolution shall be the president, and three senior fellowes of the said college, as joint tenants, their heirs, executors, or administrators, according to the nature of the real and personal estates respectively, upon the trust or trusts affecting the same respectively.

118. Treasury to provide the Buildings for Registries, &c.] It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, out of such moneys as may be provided and appropriated by Parliament for that purpose, to cause to be purchased, erected, hired, or otherwise provided, such offices and buildings as may be suitable for the district registries and depository or depositories for wills, and such buildings, if any, as may be necessary for the court and principal registry, in addition to the building by this Act vested in the said registrars, or after the determination of their interest in such building.

119. Rules and Orders to be laid before Parliament.] All rules and orders to be made under this Act concerning procedure and practice, and the table of fees to be fixed under this Act, and all alterations thereof to be from time to time made, shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one month after the making thereof if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not then sitting, within one month after the commencement of the then next session of Parliament.

CAP. LXXVIII.

An Act to amend the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, for facilitating the winding up the Affairs of Joint-Stock Companies unable to meet their Pecuniary Engagements, and also the "Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849." [25th August, 1857.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, intituled "An Act for facilitating the winding up the Affairs of Joint-Stock Companies unable to meet their pecuniary Engagements," and also to amend the "Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849," and also to make provision for the more equal distribution amongst creditors as well of the assets to arise from the separate estates or contributions of shareholders in any company as of the joint assets thereof: Be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

1. Judge or Master by Advertisement may call Meetings of Creditors to appoint Representative of Creditors.—After such Advertisement, Creditors to be deemed Parties to the Winding-up.—Assignees of Bankrupt Companies to be such Representatives.] In all cases in which an order heretofore has been or hereafter shall be made for the dissolution and winding up or for the winding up of any company, it shall be lawful for the judge or master charged with the winding up of any company, at the instance of any creditor of such company or otherwise, in all cases in which it shall appear expedient, and for the benefit of the parties interested, in and by the advertisement for proof of debts required by the 72nd section of the "Joint-Stock Companies Winding up Act, 1848," or by subsequent advertisements, or by notice transmitted to each of the creditors by post, as directed by the said two before-mentioned Acts, from time to time to call upon the creditors of the company to meet before such judge or master at such time and place as shall be fixed by him, for the purpose of appointing one or more person or persons other than the official manager to represent all the creditors of the said company in and about the said proceedings before him, or in and about so many and such of the same proceedings as to such judge or master shall from time to time seem expedient; and it shall be lawful for two-thirds in value of the creditors present at such meetings, whose debts shall have been proved before the said judge or master, or who shall previously to such meeting have lodged an affidavit of their debt before him, and who would be entitled to vote in the choice of assignees under a bankruptcy, by themselves or by some person authorised by any letter or writing under the hand of such creditor, and which letter or writing shall require no stamp duty to be paid thereon, to choose some person or persons to represent all the creditors of any such company accordingly; and the proceedings of such meeting shall be conducted before and by the said judge or master in the same manner as would be the case if the said creditors were proceeding to the election of assignees in bankruptcy; provided, that the said judge or master may reject any person or persons so chosen who shall appear to him unfit to be such representative or representatives, or may remove any such representative or representatives, and upon such rejection or removal a new choice of a representative or representatives shall be made in like manner; and from and after the issuing of any such advertisement as aforesaid all the creditors of the said company shall be deemed parties to the winding up: Provided always, that in case such company heretofore has been or hereafter shall be adjudged bankrupt, the assignees of the estate and effects of such bankrupt company shall be deemed and taken to be and they are hereby constituted (without such advertisement or meeting as hereinbefore mentioned) the representatives of the creditors for the purposes of this Act, and shall have and exercise the same rights and powers as are hereby given to or vested in such representative or representatives; and provided also, that if any such representative or representatives of the creditors shall have been chosen or appointed in the matter of the winding up of any company before the appointment of assignees under the adjudication of bankruptcy against the same company, then upon such appointment of assignees the rights, powers, and authorities of such representative or representatives shall cease and determine, and the same rights, powers, and authorities shall thereupon become vested in and may lawfully be had and exercised by such assignees as aforesaid; and such representative or representatives shall be entitled to his or their reasonable costs in the matter of the winding up of such company.

2. Where Company bankrupt, and no Winding-up Order, Assignees may compromise with Shareholders so as to bind all the Creditors.] Whenever any such company heretofore has been or hereafter shall be declared bankrupt, and no winding-up order shall have been made before such company shall have become bankrupt, the assignees may, with the leave of the Court of Bankruptcy first obtained, after notice to such creditors, and subject to such condition (if any) as to obtaining the consent of creditors, or any proportion of them, as the said Court shall think fit to direct, and whether the whole of the assets of such company shall have been collected or converted or not, and having regard to the sufficiency of the assets of the company for payment of the debts or liabilities of such company, and also to the solvency and means of the several shareholders or members of such company, or any one or more of them, or to such other matters as the said Court may deem material, accept and take from all or any or either of the shareholders or members of such company such reasonable sum or sums in discharge and satisfaction of the liability of all and every the shareholders and members, or any or either of them, to the debts and liabilities of such company, in such manner and at such times as the assignees for the time being of the estate of such company shall think fit, or make any other compromise, composition, or other arrangement in the matter; and all such sum or sums as shall be payable thereunder shall be paid to and received by the official assignee, and shall be applied as part of the estate and effects of such company; and the said Court shall, at the request of the assignees for the time being of such company, give to the several shareholders and members, or such of them as shall be so discharged, a certificate under the hand and seal of the Commissioner, setting forth the circumstances of such discharge, so far as he may deem the same material, and such certificate shall thenceforth operate to all intents and purposes as an absolute release to the shareholders and members to whom the same shall relate, and may be by them pleaded and used in bar and in discharge of any action, execution, or other proceeding by any creditor whose debt or claim is by law provable under such bankruptcy; and every such shareholder and member shall be entitled, as between himself and the other shareholders or members of the company, to credit in respect of such sum or sums as shall by such certificate be declared to have been paid by him.

3. Representatives of Creditors may concur in Proceedings, and in Compromises.—All Creditors to be bound thereby.] It shall be lawful for such representatives or representative as hereinbefore mentioned to join and concur or take part in all the proceedings in and about the winding up of the said company, or such of the same proceedings as the judge or master shall deem expedient for the interest of the creditors, and also, subject as hereinafter is mentioned, and so far as the creditors of the said company are concerned, to make or enter into, take part in, consent to, or approve of any compromise, composition, or arbitration or other arrangement, whether for the discharge and satisfaction of the liability of all and every the shareholders and members, or any or either of them, to the debts and liabilities of such company or otherwise, as such representatives or representative for the time being shall think fit; and the certificate of the judge or master shall be deemed and taken as full and sufficient evidence and proof of every such compromise, composition, arbitration, or other arrangement, and of any discharge or release which may have been thereby effected; and it shall also be lawful for such representatives or representative as hereinbefore mentioned (subject as aforesaid) to take part in, consent to, or approve of any compromise, composition, arbitration, or other arrangement which the official manager may propose to make or enter into with the debtors or creditors of the said company or otherwise in respect of its estate or affairs; and all the creditors of the said company, whether their debts shall have been then proved or not, shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, be fully and effectually bound by the acts of such representatives or representative as to all such matters as are authorised by this Act.

4. Compromise, &c., to be subject to Consent of Creditors, if required by Judge or Master.] No such compromise, composition, arbitration, or other arrangement, as in the last section mentioned, shall be valid as against the creditors of the company, unless the same be made with the consent of such representatives, and with leave of the judge or master, who shall give leave to the official manager to be heard thereon; and every such compromise, composition, arbitration, or other arrangement shall be subject to such conditions (if any) as to payment of the costs of any actions, suits, or other proceedings, and as to obtaining the consent of creditors, or any proportion of them, as the said judge or master shall think fit to direct.

5. Creditors' Rights against Third Persons not to be prejudiced.] No creditor or claimant shall be prejudiced or affected by any compromise, composition, arbitration or other arrangement hereinbefore authorised, or by carrying the same into effect, as to his right or remedy against any person other than the members and contributories thereof, to whom the same shall relate, nor otherwise than may be provided thereby; and in the event of any such compromise, composition, or other arrangement as mentioned in the 2nd and 3rd sections of this Act being made with the contributories or alleged contributories of the said company, or any or either of them, whereby, or in consequence whereof, all or any of such contributories may be or become discharged from further liability to the creditors of the said company, then and thereupon the creditors of the said company, as regards their rights and remedies against the persons, property, and effects of any persons who were shareholders of the said company at the times when the respective debts or causes of action of such creditors arose, shall be in the same position, and have the same remedies against such former shareholders as last aforesaid, their persons, property, and effects, as if such creditors had obtained execution on a judgment order or decree for the amount of their respective debts against the persons, property, and effects of the contributories of the said company who shall be or become so discharged as aforesaid, and had been unable thereby or otherwise to obtain satisfaction of such judgment decree or order, or debts, from such execution, or from such contributories beyond the amount received by such creditors respectively on account of his or their debts out of the moneys so paid or satisfied by the said contributories or any of them under such composition, compromise, or agreement as aforesaid.

6. Proceedings under this Act subject to Appeal.] All orders, directions, reports, and other proceedings of or before the judge or master under this Act shall be subject to the appeals given by the two aforesaid "Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849;" and all orders, directions, reports, and other proceedings of or before the Court of Bankruptcy under this Act shall be subject to the appeals given by the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849.

7. After Advertisements for Representative, Creditors not to sue at Law without Leave of Judge or Master, and Time is not to run against them.] When any such company heretofore has been or hereafter shall be adjudicated bankrupt, then, if or so soon as creditors' assignees shall have been appointed, or, when any such company shall not have been or be adjudicated bankrupt, then after the judge or master shall by advertisement have called on the creditors to appoint a representative or representatives as hereinbefore mentioned, no such action as is mentioned in the 73rd section of the said "Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848," shall be commenced or proceeded with, otherwise than for the purpose of making the company bankrupt, nor shall any execution or scire facias be issued or proceeded with against the person, property, or effects of any member or members for the time being of such company, or any former member or members thereof, except by leave of the Court of Bankruptcy where such company has been made bankrupt before an order shall have been made for winding up the company, or of the said judge or master where such company has not been made bankrupt before such order shall have been made; and no time which shall elapse after the appointment of creditors' assignees as aforesaid, or after the said creditors shall be so called on, shall be reckoned as part of the time which by virtue of any statute of limitations or otherwise is or shall be limited for commencing or prosecuting any action, suit, step, or proceeding against the company, or the persons being members or contributories thereof, or any former members or contributories thereof, with reference to or in respect of any debt or demand which might be discharged or affected by any such compromise, composition, arbitration, or other arrangement as is hereinbefore mentioned.

8. Court may require Security.] On the hearing of the application of any creditor of any such company for leave to commence or proceed with any such action (otherwise than as aforesaid), or to issue or proceed with a writ of scire facias or execution as aforesaid, it shall be a sufficient ground for refusing such leave if the person against whom or against whose property or effects such action, scire facias, or execution shall be sought to be commenced, issued, or proceeded with shall give or shall have given to the official assignee, in case such company shall have been declared bankrupt before an order shall have been made for winding up the company, or to the official manager in case such company shall not have been declared bankrupt before such order shall have been made, security to the satisfaction of the Court of Bankruptcy, or of the master or judge, as the case may be, for payment of such sum or sums of money, and upon such terms, and to be applied in such manner, as the said Court or the said master or judge shall require, having regard to the debts and liabilities of such company and to the circumstances of the case, and upon payment of such costs as the said Court of Bankruptcy, or the said master or judge, may think fit: Provided always, that such security to the official manager shall be subject to the consent of the representative (if any) for the time being of the creditors of such company, or if there shall be no such representative at the time of giving such security, then the same shall be subject to the consent of the representative of such creditors when appointed.

9. Creditors to be at liberty to attend Proceedings and inspect Books of Company.] The provisions contained in the 38th, 40th, and 48th sections of the Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848," shall extend to and comprise creditors or persons who have claimed to be creditors of the said company as well as contributories and alleged contributories; and after the judge or master shall have called on the creditors to appoint a representative or representatives, as hereinbefore mentioned, such creditors and persons who have claimed to be creditors shall be entitled to attend the proceedings, and to submit such proposals, and to inspect such books, as in the said sections of the said Act are mentioned.

10. Judge or Master may appoint Commissioners for receiving Evidence.] It shall be lawful for the judge or master of the High Court of Chancery in England acting in the winding up of any company to appoint any person in Ireland, and it shall be lawful for the master of the High Court of Chancery in Ireland acting as aforesaid to appoint any person in England, other than or in addition to the commissioners, judges, and other persons named in the 20th section of "The Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1849," to be commisssioners for the purposes and with the same powers and authorities as in the said 20th section of the last-mentioned winding-up Act are named or referred to in that behalf.

11. Rights of Creditor under Judgment obtained in Ireland not to be affected.] Nothing in this Act contained shall apply to or affect the rights and remedies of any creditor (unless with his own consent) under or in respect of any judgment obtained against any shareholder in Ireland, which judgment has been prior to the passing of this Act duly registered in manner required by the Act passed in the 13th and 14th Vict., intituled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Judgments in Ireland," or who shall have actually levied execution or taken proceedings to obtain an attachment; but no such creditor claiming to retain the benefit of such registered judgment, execution, or attachment, and not to be affected by any compromise under this Act, shall be entitled to receive any further dividend, or to have recourse to any other remedy or proceeding, other than such right and remedies as he may have in respect of such judgment, execution, or attachment against the lands which are affected by the same, until all the other creditors shall have been paid in full.

12. Petitions for winding up certain Mining Companies not to be filed in Court of Chancery, except upon special Application to the Court of Stannaries, &c.] And whereas the dissolution and winding up of unincorporated companies for working mines within and subject to the jurisdiction of the Stannaries can now in most cases be conveniently, cheaply, and expeditiously effected in the Court of the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries: Be it enacted, that no petition shall hereafter be filed in the Court of Chancery under the Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848, 1849, by any adventurer or shareholder in such a company, except upon special application to that Court, alleging and showing to the satisfaction of the Court that the company cannot be effectually dissolved or wound up in the Court of the Vice-Warden, or unless the Vice-Warden shall certify to the Court of Chancery that the jurisdiction and powers of his court are, under the circumstances, insufficient effectually to dissolve or wind up the same.

13. In Cases where such Petitions are filed, Proof of Debts, Sales of Effects, &c., to be effected through the Court of Stannaries.] In all cases where such a petition shall, upon such application or certificate, be filed in the Court of Chancery, the proof of debts and creditors' claims, the sale of machinery and other effects of the company within the Stannaries, and the distribution of the proceeds of such sales, shall be effected (under the general direction of the Court of Chancery), but by and through the immediate agency of the Vice-Warden or registrar of his court, unless it shall appear to the Court of Chancery to be more conducive to the interests or convenience of adventurers and creditors, or to the saving of time or expense, that such proceedings or any of them shall take place in the ordinary course and practice of the Court of Chancery under the Winding-up Acts above referred to.

14. Act to be deemed Part of Winding-up Acts.] This Act shall be taken and construed as a part of the said "Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849."

15. Interpretation of Terms.] The words shareholder, member, contributory, and alleged contributory shall be severally taken to include all contributories or alleged contributories within the meaning of the said "Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849," and also all persons who may apprehend or desire to be discharged from responsibility in respect of the debts, liabilities, or obligations of the company.

16. Short Title of Act.] In citing this Act in other Acts of Parliament and in legal instruments and in legal proceedings, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Amendment Act, 1857."

CAP. LXXIX.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Probates and Letters of Administration in Ireland. [25th August, 1857.

CAP. LXXX.

An Act to amend "The Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856." [25th August, 1857.

WHEREAS it is expedient that a further amendment should be made in "The Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856:" Be it enacted &c., as follows:—

1. Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, not to be deemed to repeal 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, &c., as respects Insurance Companies.—Proviso.] The Joint-Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, shall not, nor shall either of them, be deemed to have repealed, as respects companies already formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of insurance, under the Act passed in the 8th Vict. c. 110, or as respects companies hereafter to be formed for the said purpose, the said Act passed in the 8th Vict.

c. 110, or any other Act amending the same or relating to such companies: Provided that if any insurance company, formed under the said Act of the 8 Vict., or the directors of or shareholders in any such company have, during the interval between the passing of the said Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, and of this Act, acted as if the said Act of the 8 Vict. had, as to such company, been repealed by the said Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, then so far as affects the mutual rights and relations of the said company, its directors and officers, and late or present shareholders, and so far as affects any penalties which the said company, or its directors, officers, or shareholders, may have incurred by non-observance of the said Act of 8 Vict., the said Act of the 8 Vict. shall, as regards the actions of the said company, its directors and shareholders, during such interval as aforesaid, be deemed to have been repealed.

CAP. LXXXI.

An Act to amend the Burial Acts. [25th August 1857.

WHEREAS an Act was passed in the 15th and 16th Vict. (c. 85), "To amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead in the Metropolis;" and an Act was passed in the 16th and 17th Vict. (c. 134), "To amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead in England beyond the Limits of the Metropolis, and to amend the Act concerning the Burial of the Dead in the Metropolis;" and an Act was passed in the 17th and 18th Vict. (c. 87), "To make further Provision for the Burial of the Dead in England beyond the Limits of the Metropolis;" and Acts were passed in the 18th and 19th Vict. (cc. 78, 128), "To amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead in England:" And whereas it is expedient to amend the said Acts: Be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

1. Approval of a Majority of Vestries of Parishes sufficient for Acts done by Burial Boards acting for more than Two Parishes.] All Acts authorised to be done by any Burial Board, with the approval, sanction, or authority of the vestry or vestries of the parish or parishes for which such Board is constituted, may, where a joint Burial Board is constituted for more than two parishes, be done with the approval, sanction, or authority (as the case may require) of the vestries of the majority of such parishes.

2. Joint Burial Boards may be dissolved.] Where the vestries of two or more parishes have agreed to provide one burial ground for the common use of such parishes, such vestries may, at any time before such burial ground has been provided, determine the union between such parishes under such agreement; and upon such union being so determined, all the provisions of the said Acts and this Act shall be applicable with regard to such parishes and the respective Burial Boards thereof as if such union had not been formed, save that any expenses already properly incurred by the joint Burial Board for such parishes shall be defrayed as provided by the said Acts.

3. Burial Boards may provide more than one Burial Ground.] Any Burial Board may, if they see fit, with the approval of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, provide more than one burial ground, and may, if they see fit, with such approval, instead of setting apart a portion of any burial ground for the purpose of such portion being used as unconsecrated ground, provide separate and distinct grounds to be used respectively as consecrated and unconsecrated burial grounds: Where before the passing of this Act any Burial Board has provided more than one burial ground, or has (instead of setting apart a porion of any burial ground for the purpose of being used as unconsecrated ground) provided separate and distinct grounds as consecrated and unconsecrated burial grounds, such Burial Board shall be deemed to have acted lawfully and in accordance with the said Acts.

4. Local Board of Health may, by Order in Council, be constituted a Burial Board.] In case it appear to her Majesty in Council, upon the petition of the Local Board of Health of any district established under the Public Health Act, or upon the petition of any Commissioners elected by the ratepayers, and acting under or by virtue of the powers of any local Act of Parliament for the improvement of any town, parish, or borough, stating that the district of such Local Board of Health or of such Commissioners is co-extensive with a district for which it is proposed to provide a burial ground, and that no Burial Board has been appointed for such district, and that an Order in Council has been made for closing all or any of the burial grounds within the said district, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, in case her Majesty see fit so to do, to order that such Local Board shall be a Burial Board for the district of such Local Board, or that such Commissioners shall be a Burial Board for the district of such Commissioners, and thereupon such Local Board or such Commissioners, as the case may be, shall be a Burial Board for such district accordingly; and the powers and provisions of the Acts hereinbefore mentioned (except the provisions relating to the constitution or appointment and resignation of members of Burial Boards), and the provisions herein contained, shall extend to the district of such Board, and to such Board, or to the district of such Commissioners, and to such Commissioners, and to any burial ground and places for the reception of the bodies of the dead previously to interment which may be provided by such Board or by such Commissioners, in like manner as to any parish or parishes and the Burial Board thereof, and any burial ground, and any such places as aforesaid provided by such last-mentioned Board, save that no approval, sanction, or authorisation of any vestry shall be requisite: Provided always, that notice of such petition, and of the time when it shall please her Majesty to order the same to be taken into consideration by the Privy Council, shall be published in the London Gazette, and in one of the newspapers usually circulating in the district of such Local Board or of such Commissioners, one month at least before such petition is so considered: Provided also, that this enactment shall not apply to any such district as aforesaid exclusively consisting of the whole or part of one corporate borough within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1848.

5. Burial Board may be established for a District not maintaining its own Poor, and which has had no separate Burial Ground.] The vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, of any parish, new parish, township, or other district not separately maintaining its own poor, and which has had no separate burial ground, may appoint a Burial Board; and such vestry or meeting, and the Burial Board appointed by it, shall exercise and have all the powers which they might have exercised and had under the said Acts and this Act if such parish, new parish, township, or district had had a separate burial ground before the passing of the said Act of the 18 & 19 Vict.: Provided always, that all the powers of any other vestry or meeting and Burial Board, if any, shall then cease and determine, so far as relates to such parish, new parish, township, or district as aforesaid; and until a burial ground shall be so provided as aforesaid, and consecrated, for any new parish or district created or to be created pursuant to the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, or any or either of them, and to which the said Acts, or any or either of them, may apply, the incumbent of such new parish or district (if any burial ground has been or shall be provided under the herein recited Acts for the burial of the dead, or any or either of them, for any parish or parishes out of rates to which such new parish or district, or any part thereof, shall have contributed or contribute or be liable), shall, with respect to the burial in such last-mentioned burial ground of the remains of the parishioners or inhabitants of such new parish or district, or of such part thereof as shall have contributed or contribute as aforesaid, as the case may be, perform the same duties, and have the same rights, privileges, and authorities, and be entitled to the same fees, and also the clerk and sexton of such new parish or district shall, when necessary, respectively perform the same duties, and be entitled to the same fees, in respect of such burials, as if the said burial ground were exclusively the burial ground of such new parish or district, subject nevertheless to all provisions to which the incumbents, clerks, and sextons of original parishes are respectively subject in and by the said Burial Acts, or any or either of them: Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall affect the rights or privilges of any existing incumbent, clerk, or sexton, without the consent of such incumbent, clerk, or sexton respectively.

6. Ordinary of Diocese may consecrate the whole or Part of Land belonging to any Parish for the Burial of poor Persons.] Where the guardians of any parish or union are or shall hereafter become possessed of any land suitable to the purposes of a burial ground, and the Poor-law Board shall consent to the same being appropriated to the reception of the dead bodies of any poor persons whom such guardians shall be authorised or required by law to bury, it shall be lawful for the ordinary of the diocese wherein such land shall be situated, if he see fit, to consecrate the whole or a part of such land for burial purposes, and after consecration the guardians may lawfully direct any such dead body as aforesaid to be buried therein; and the land so consecrated shall not thenceforth be used for any other purposes than for burials according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, and shall be kept in decent order; and the fences thereof, and any building or other erection therein or adjoining thereto, used for the performance of the burial service, shall be maintained in good repair by the guardians out of the common fund of such parish or union: Provided nevertheless, that the guardians shall not be authorised to direct the body of any poor person to be buried in such grounds who, or whose husband, wife, or next of kin, shall, by letter addressed to the master of the workhouse or otherwise, have expressly desired burial to take place elsewhere.

7. Provision for Transfer to a Burial Board of a Burial Ground provided under Church Building Acts.] Where a burial ground has been provided for any parish under any of the Acts commonly referred to or known as the Church Building Acts, and the same has been consecrated, and any money expended in providing such burial ground has been borrowed on the security of the church rates, it shall be lawful for the incumbent of the parish, with the consent of the ordinary and the Burial Board of such parish, or of any borough or district in which such parish is wholly or in part comprised, by instrument in writing under the hands and seals of such incumbent and ordinary, and under the seal of the said Burial Board, to declare, that, in consideration of the payment of the debt by the said Burial Board, or of such sum as shall be mutually agreed upon, with the consent of the persons, signified in writing under their hands, to whom two-thirds of such debt is due, the said burial ground shall be vested in and be under the care and management of such Burial Board, and thereupon the same shall be vested in and be under the care and management of such Board, and shall be subject to the provisions of the hereinbefore recited Acts and this Act applicable to a consecrated burial ground or the consecrated part of any burial ground provided by any Burial Board; and any money borrowed as aforesaid, and remaining owing, and the interest due and to become due thereon, and all costs and expenses occasioned by the nonpayment thereof, or incurred in providing such burial ground, and then remaining unpaid, shall be charged on and paid out of such rates or fund as under the said last-mentioned Acts and this Act would be chargeable with the expense of providing a burial ground by such Board, and such declaration as aforesaid shall be registered in the registry of the diocese; and such Board may, with the approval of the vestry, enlarge such burial ground by the addition of ground to be used for burials otherwise than according to the rites of the Church of England, and to be used subject to the provisions of the Acts herein recited and of this Act in respect to the unconsecrated portions of burial grounds.

8. Vestry of Parish in which Burial Ground is closed may purchase such Burial Ground if not belonging to Parish.] It shall and may be lawful for the vestry of any parish in which any burial ground closed by Order in Council may be situate, and which does not belong to such parish, by resolution of the vestry at a meeting called for that purpose, to purchase such burial ground, and from the time of such purchase such burial ground shall belong to such parish, and be subject to all the conditions affecting the burial grounds of the parish in which the same is situate.

9. Burial Boards not to be appointed for united Parishes, &c., in Cases provided for by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, without Consent of Secretary of State, where One of the Places separately maintains its own Poor, or has a Burial Ground.] And whereas by the said Act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, it is enacted, that where a parish or place has been united with any other parish or place, parishes or places, for all or any ecclesiastical purposes, or where two or more parishes or places have heretofore had a church or a burial ground for their joint use, or where the inhabitants of several parishes or places have been accustomed to meet in one vestry for purposes common to such several parishes or places, it shall be lawful for the vestry, or any meeting in the nature of a vestry, of such several parishes or places, in any of the cases aforesaid, and whether any one or more of such parishes or places do or do not separately maintain its own poor, to appoint a Burial Board, and from time to time to supply vacancies therein, and to exercise the same powers of authorisation, approval, and sanction in relation to such Burial Board, and such other powers as, under the Acts therein recited and that Act, are vested in the vestry of a parish or place separately maintaining its own poor: Where any of the several parishes or places under the circumstances provided for in the said enactment separately maintains its own poor, or has a separate burial ground, it shall not be lawful for the vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, of such several parishes or places to appoint a Burial Board under the said enactment without the approval of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State; and in case it appear to the Secretary of State that any such parish or place has a sufficient burial ground, or that otherwise it would not be expedient that the powers given by the said enactment should be exercised in relation to such parish or place, the Secretary of State may direct that such parish or place shall be excepted from the operation of the said enactment, and thereupon the same shall be excepted accordingly; and the inhabitants of the remaining parish or parishes, place or places, may assemble in vestry, or in a meeting in the nature of a vestry, from time to time, and in such vestry or meeting may proceed in like manner under the said Acts and this Act in all respects as if the inhabitants of such last-mentioned parish or parishes, place or places, exclusively had a vestry for their common purposes, and were wholly unconnected with the parish or place so excepted.

10. Orders in Council may be made for regulating Burial Grounds, &c.] It shall be lawful for her Majesty, by order made by and with the advice of her Privy Council, on the representation of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, from time to time to establish such regulations as to her Majesty may seem proper for the protection of the public health, and for the maintenance of public decency, in respect of all burials in common graves in any cemeteries named in schedule (B.) to the Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85, and in respect of the like burials in any cemetery established under the authority of any local Act of Parliament; and every such Order in Council shall be published in the London Gazette; and all persons having the care of such cemeteries and burial grounds and places shall conform to and obey such regulations; and any such person who shall violate or wilfully neglect to observe any of such regulations shall, on summary conviction thereof before two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding £10: Provided always, that no such representation shall be made in relation to any cemetery or burial ground until ten days previous notice in writing of the intention to make such representation shall have been given to the person or one of the persons having the control or care of such cemetery or burial ground.

11. No Wall or Fence required between the consecrated and unconsecrated Portions of Burial Ground.—Boundary Marks to be provided.] It shall not be necessary to erect or maintain any wall or fence between the consecrated and the unconsecrated portions of any burial ground provided under the hereinbefore recited Acts and this Act, or any of them: Provided always, that in the case of any burial ground where there shall be no such wall or fence, it shall be the duty of the Burial Board having the care of such burial ground to place, and from time to time to repair and renew, such boundary marks of stone or iron as may be sufficient to show the boundaries of such consecrated and unconsecrated portions respectively.

12. Appeal.] If, upon the application in writing by any Burial Board to the bishop of the diocese for the consecration of a burial ground, declared in such writing to be in a fit and proper condition for the purpose of interment according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, which application the Board is required to make as soon as such ground is in such fit and proper condition, the said bishop shall refuse to consecrate the same, it shall be lawful for such Burial Board to appeal from such refusal to the archbishop of the province, who shall decide the matter in dispute; and if the said archbishop shall decide that the said burial ground is not in a fit and proper condition as aforesaid, then the Board shall be bound to put the said ground in a fit and proper condition; and if the said archbishop shall decide that the said burial ground is in a fit and proper condition as aforesaid, and ought to be consecrated, such decision shall be communicated in writing by the archbishop to the bishop aforesaid; and if after such communication the said bishop shall not within one calendar month consecrate the said burial ground, the said archbishop shall, under his hand and seal, license the same for the interment of bodies according to the rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, and the licence of the said archbishop, so granted as aforesaid, shall, until such burial ground be consecrated, operate to make lawful the use of the same as if it had been consecrated.

13. Power to Incumbent or Curate to bury in Burial Ground certified by Secretary of State prior to Consecration.] In any burial ground provided under the powers of the Acts hereinbefore recited or this Act, respecting which one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State shall have certified that the necessary provisions have been complied with, it shall be lawful for the incumbent or incumbents of such parish or parishes for which such burial ground is provided, or his or their curate or curates, or such duly qualified person as any such incumbent may authorise, if such incumbent, curate, or such duly qualified person respectively think fit, to bury in such burial ground prior to the decision of the bishop or archbishop upon the application for the consecration thereof.

14. Sect. 32 of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, exempting Funerals from Tolls, extended to Funerals in Burial Grounds provided for the Parish, although not within its Limits.] Whereas, by s. 32 of the Act of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, it is enacted that no toll shall be demanded or taken by virtue of that or any other Act or Acts of Parliament on any turnpike road of or from any inhabitant of any parish, township, or place, going to or returning from attending the funeral of any person who shall die and be buried in the parish, township, or place in which any turnpike road shall lie: From and after the 1st of July, 1858, or from and after the termination of any now existing lease of tolls expiring before that date: The said enactment shall extend to exempt from toll every person going to or returning from attending the funeral of any person who shall be buried in any burial ground provided for the parish, township, or place in which he died under the Acts hereinbefore recited and this Act, or any of them, or under any other Act of Parliament, although such burial ground be not within the limits of the parish, township, or place for which it may have been provided, or in which the turnpike road shall lie.

15. Persons wilfully destroying, &c., Register Book of Burials guilty of Felony.] That every person who shall wilfully destroy or injure, or cause to be destroyed or injured, any register book of burials kept according to the provisions of this Act, or any part or certified copy of any part of such register, or shall falsely make or counterfeit, or cause to be falsely made or counterfeited, any part of any such register or certified copy thereof, or shall wilfully insert or cause to be inserted in any registry book or certified copy thereof any false entry of any burial, or shall wilfully give any false certificate, or shall certify any writing to be a copy or extract of any such register book, knowing the same to be false in any part thereof, or shall forge or counterfeit the seal of any Burial Board, shall be guilty of felony.

16. Sect. 4 of 52 Geo. 3, c. 146, not to apply to Burials in Grounds provided under the Burial Acts.] Whereas, by the Act of the 52 Geo. 3, c. 146, s. 4, it is provided, that whenever the ceremony of burial shall be performed in any other place than the parish church or churchyard of any parish (or the chapel or chapelyard of any chapelry providing its own distinct registers), and such ceremony shall be performed by any minister not being the rector, vicar, minister, or curate of such parish or chapelry, the minister who shall perform such ceremony of burial shall on the same or on the next day transmit to the rector, vicar, or other minister of such parish or chapelry, or his curate, a certificate of such burial, and the rector, vicar, minister, or curate of such parish or chapelry shall thereupon enter such burial according to such certificate in the book kept pursuant to that Act for such purpose: And whereas distinct registers are by law required to be kept in the burial grounds provided under the Burial Acts: The recited enactment of the said Act of King Geo. 3 shall not apply in any case where the ceremony of burial is performed in a burial ground provided or to be provided under the Acts of her Majesty hereinbefore recited and this Act, or any of them.

17. Fees for Service done in unconsecrated Portion of Burial Ground to be identical as for consecrated Portion.] No fees shall be charged or received by any Burial Board in respect of any service done or right granted in the unconsecrated portion of any burial ground provided by such Board, but such as are identical in amount with the fees charged and received in respect of the same service or right in the consecrated portion of such ground, less any such portion of such corresponding fees or payments which may be received for or on account of any incumbent, churchwarden, clerk, or sexton, or of any trustee for or on behalf of any incumbent, churchwarden, clerk, or sexton.

18. So much of s. 20 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85, as to Payment of Money borrowed, repealed.] So much of s. 20 of the firstly hereinbefore recited Act as requires "that there shall be paid in every year, in addition to the interest of the money borrowed and unpaid, not less than one-twentieth of the principal sum borrowed, until the whole is discharged," shall be repealed, and the provisions of the other Acts hereinbefore recited to which the said section has been extended shall be construed accordingly.

19. Clauses of 10 & 11 Vict. c. 16, with respect to Mortgages, incorporated.] The clauses of the Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847, with respect to mortgages to be executed by the commissioners, shall be incorporated with this Act, and shall apply to mortgages and other securities to be executed by Burial Boards; and for the purposes of this Act the expression "the commissioners," where used in the said clauses, shall mean the Burial Board acting in the execution of the said clauses and the Acts hereinbefore recited or this Act.

20. Sinking Fund to be provided for paying off Mortgages.] Provided always, that for the purpose of providing a sinking fund for paying off the principal money borrowed on mortgages granted under any of the said Acts or this Act, the Burial Board shall once in every year set aside, out of the moneys charged by such mortgages, such sum as they think proper, being a sum equal to or exceeding one-fiftieth part of the principal money so borrowed.

21. Power to Burial Boards to borrow Money on terminable Annuities.] Any Burial Board or council of a borough may, for the purpose of raising money, instead of making mortgages under any of the said Acts, grant terminable annuities for a life or lives, or for any number of years not exceeding thirty years, to be paid out of the like moneys as provided with regard to the moneys secured by such mortgages.

22. Power to Councils of Boroughs to make a separate Rate for Burial and Expenses.] Any money required by the council of any borough for the purpose of defraying the expense of executing the Acts hereinbefore recited, or any of them, or this Act, or for paying any moneys borrowed under such Act, or any interest thereon, may be raised by such council, if they think fit, by means of a separate rate, to be called a burial rate, to be charged upon all property within such borough liable to be charged to the borough rate; and the council of such borough shall have all such powers for making and levying such rate, and all provisions shall be applicable in respect thereof, as in the case of a borough rate made under the Act passed in the 5th and 6th years of Will. 4, c. 76.

23. Orders in Council may be issued, on Representation of Secretary of State, so as to prevent Vaults, &c., being dangerous to Health.] It shall be lawful for her Majesty, upon the representation of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, from time to time to order such acts to be done by or under the directions of the churchwardens or such other persons as may have the care of any vaults or places of burial, for preventing them from becoming or continuing dangerous or injurious to the public health; and every such Order in Council shall be published in the London Gazette, and such churchwardens or other persons shall do or cause to be done all acts ordered as aforesaid, and the expenses incurred in and about the doing thereof shall be paid out of the poor rates of the parish: Provided always, that no such representation shall be made until ten days previous notice of the intention to make such representation shall have been given to the churchwardens or other persons, or one of the churchwardens or other persons, having the care of the vaults or places of burial to which the representation relates.

24. Trustees of closed Cemeteries empowered, with Sanction of Secretary of State, to let, lease, or sell Portions thereof which have not received Interments.] In all cases in which unconsecrated land or buildings is or are vested in a trustee or trustees, either under any local Act or otherwise, for the purposes of a cemetery or burial ground, and burials in such cemetery or burial ground shall by Order in Council under the hereinbefore recited Acts or any of them have been ordered to be wholly or partially discontinued, it shall be lawful for the trustee or trustees for the time being of such cemetery or burial ground, from time to time, with the sanction of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, to let, demise, or lease any part or parts in which no interment shall have taken place of such land or buildings, and to renew or accept surrenders of any leases or tenancies thereof, and to sell and absolutely dispose thereof for money in gross, or for any perpetual or other rent or rents to be made payable thereout, and by public auction or private contract, and to sell all or any such perpetual or other rent or rents for money in gross and in manner aforesaid, and for any of the purposes aforesaid to make and execute any contracts, conveyances, leases, or other assurances, and to take any measures and make any arrangements which may be deemed expedient; and upon any such lease or sale as aforesaid a grant or conveyance by such trustee or trustees alone shall be a sufficient assurance of the property thereby purported to be leased or sold, and the receipts of such trustee or trustees shall be effectual discharges for the moneys therein expressed to have been received, and shall absolve any lessee or purchaser from having to see to or being answerable for the application of such moneys; and the net moneys to be received by such trustee or trustees under any of the preceding powers shall be applied by them in discharge of any incumbrances affecting such cemetery or burial ground, and any debts which such trustee or trustees may have properly incurred in their fiduciary capacity; and any residue of such moneys shall, where such land or buildings shall have been held in trust for any parish, be applied in such manner, for the benefit of such parish, as the vestry of such parish shall direct; but where such land or buildings shall have been held in trust for the benefit of private persons, such residue shall be divided by such trustee or trustees rateably among the cestuis que trusts; and it shall be lawful for such trustee or trustees so to apply any reserved fund in his or their hands.

25. Bodies not to be removed from Burial Grounds, save under Faculty, without Licence of Secretary of State.] Except in the cases where a body is removed from one consecrated place of burial to another by faculty granted by the ordinary for that purpose, it shall not be lawful to remove any body, or the remains of any body, which may have been interred in any place of burial, without licence under the hand of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, and with such precautions as such Secretary of State may prescribe as the condition of such licence; and any person who shall remove any such body or remains, contrary to this enactment, or who shall neglect to observe the precautions prescribed as the condition of the licence for removal, shall, on summary conviction before any two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay for every such offence a sum not exceeding £10.

26. Burial Boards may in certain Cases purchase Cemeteries which have been closed.—Orders in Council to remain in force.] Where any cemetery in which burials have, by Order in Council, under the hereinbefore recited Acts or any of them, been ordered to be discontinued, is adjoining or near to any land appropriated or about to be appropriated by any Burial Board for the purposes of a burial ground, and appears to such Board eligible for the purpose of appropriating or erecting buildings for or making approaches to such burial ground, it shall be lawful for such Board, with the approval of the vestry or respective vestries, to purchase such cemetery; and where in the like case any cemetery has been so purchased before the passing of this Act, the purchase thereof shall be deemed to have been lawful: Provided always, that, notwithstanding such purchase, such Order in Council shall remain in full force and effect in relation to such cemetery.

27. Resolutions, &c., of Vestries not to be void by reason of Irregularity of Notices, &c.] No resolution or proceeding of any vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, for the purposes of the said recited Acts and this Act, or any of them, shall be void or voidable by reason of any defect or irregularity of or in notice of such vestry or meeting or any other error in form in the calling of such vestry or meeting, or in the proceedings thereat, unless notice in writing of such defect or irregularity or error shall have been given at such vestry or meeting, or within seven days after the day of the holding thereof, to the churchwardens or other persons to whom it belongs to call meetings of such vestry, or such meeting in the nature of a vestry, who shall thereupon call another meeting for the purpose of considering the previous resolution or proceeding or the matter thereof; and no such resolution and proceeding made or taken at any such vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, before the passing of this Act, which shall not have been objected to by notice in writing to such churchwardens or persons as aforesaid, shall be deemed invalid by reason of any such defect, irregularity, or error.

28. "Burial Board."] In the construction of this Act the expression "Burial Board" shall mean a Burial Board constituted under the hereinbefore recited Acts or any of them, or under this Act.

29. Construction of certain Expressions used in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 87.] That the expression "Borough" whenever used in the said Act of the 17 & 18 Vict. shall be construed to include any city, borough, port, cinque port, or town corporate named in the schedules annexed to an Act passed in the 6th year of King Will. 4, intituled "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," and to any city, borough, port, cinque port, or town corporate incorporated by charter granted or to be granted in pursuance of that or any subsequent Act; and the words "Town Council of any Borough," or "Council of any Borough," wherever used in the said Act of the 17 & 18 Vict., shall (as well with respect to all past as to future proceedings under the same Act, and for the purpose of confirming and making valid all such past proceedings) be construed to mean town council or council of any city, borough, port, cinque port, or town corporate.

30. Recited Acts and this to be as One.] The hereinbefore recited Acts and this Act shall be construed together as one Act.

CAP. LXXXII.

An Act to authorise the Embodying of the Militia. [25th August, 1857.

WHEREAS the sudden demand for the service in India of a large body of her Majesty's regular forces may render it expedient to draw out and embody the Militia or some part of the Militia of the United Kingdom: Be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

1. Power to her Majesty, &c., to cause the Militia to be drawn out and embodied.] It shall be lawful for her Majesty and for the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland respectively, at any time after the passing of this Act, and before the 25th of March, 1858, to cause all or any part of the respective Militias in England, Scotland, and Ireland to be drawn out and embodied in like manner as in the respective cases in which such militias are now by law authorised to be drawn out and embodied.

2. Provisions of Acts relating to the Militia extended to this Act.] All the provisions of the Acts relating to such respective Militias and of all other Acts now in force applicable for and in the case of the drawing out and embodying of such Militias in the cases in which the same may now by law be drawn out and embodied, and to such respective Militias when so embodied, shall be applicable for and in the case of the drawing out and embodying of such respective Militias under the authority of this Act, and to such Militias when so embodied; and all militiamen ordered to be drawn out and embodied under this Act shall be subject to the same obligations of service in all respects as if they had been ordered to be drawn out and embodied in a case now provided for by law.

3. Provisions requiring the meeting of Parliament within Fourteen Days not to apply.] So much of the Acts relating to such Militias as requires that a proclamation shall be issued for the meeting of Parliament (if the Militia be drawn out and embodied when Parliament shall be separated by an adjournment or prorogation which will not expire within fourteen days) shall not be applicable in the case of the Militia or any part thereof being drawn out and embodied under the authority of this Act.

4. Pay of Militia drawn out to commence from the Time appointed for their assembling.] The pay of the officers and men of the Militia who may be drawn out under this Act shall commence from the time appointed for their assembling or joining their respective regiments, battalions, or corps, and not from the date of the order or warrant for drawing out such Militia, subject nevertheless to the provisions for postponing the commencement of such pay in the case of any person in such Militia who may not join his regiment, battalion, or corps on the day appointed for that purpose.

5. Sect. 4 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 13 (concerning Service of Notices), to apply to this Act.] Sect. 4 of the Act of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 13, shall extend to any case of drawing out and embodying the Militia in England, or any part of such Militia, under the authority of this Act.

CAP. LXXXIII.

An Act for more effectually preventing the Sale of Obscene Books, Pictures, Prints, and other Articles. [25th August, 1857.

WHEREAS it is expedient to give additional powers for the suppression of the trade in obscene books, prints, drawings, and other obscene articles: Be it enacted &c., as follows:—

1. Justices, &c., may authorise Search of suspected Premises.] It shall be lawful for any metropolitan police magistrate or other stipendiary magistrate, or for any two justices of the peace, upon complaint made before him or them upon oath that the complainant has reason to believe, and does believe, that any obscene books, papers, writings, prints, pictures, drawings, or other representations are kept in any house, shop, room, or other place within the limits of the jurisdiction of any such magistrate or justices, for the purpose of sale or distribution exhibition for purposes of gain, lending upon hire, or being otherwise published for purposes of gain, which complainant shall also state upon oath that one or more articles of the like character have been sold, distributed, exhibited, lent, or otherwise published as aforesaid, at or in connection with such place, so as to satisfy such magistrate or justices that the belief of the said complainant is well founded, and upon such magistrate or justices being also satisfied that any of such articles so kept for any of the purposes aforesaid are of such a character and description that the publication of them would be a misdemeanor, and proper to be prosecuted as such, to give authority by special warrant to any constable or police officer into such house, shop, room, or other place, with such assistance as may be necessary, to enter in the daytime, and, if necessary, to use force, by breaking open doors or otherwise, and to search for and seize all such books, papers, writings, prints, pictures, drawings, or other representations as aforesaid found in such house, shop, room, or other place, and to carry all the articles so seized before the magistrate or justices issuing the said warrant, or some other magistrate or justices exercising the same jurisdiction; and such magistrate or justices shall thereupon issue a summons calling upon the occupier of the house or other place which may have been so entered by virtue of the said warrant to appear within seven days before such police stipendiary magistrate or any two justices in petty sessions for the district, to show cause why the articles so seized should not be destroyed; and if such occupier or some other person claiming to be the owner of the said articles shall not appear within the time aforesaid, or shall appear, and such magistrate or justices shall be satisfied that such articles or any of them are of the character stated in the warrant, and that such or any of them have been kept for any of the purposes aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said magistrate or justices, and he or they are hereby required, to order the articles so seized, except such of them as he or they may consider necessary to be preserved as evidence in some further proceeding, to be destroyed at the expiration of the time hereinafter allowed for lodging an appeal, unless notice of appeal as hereinafter mentioned be given, and such articles shall be in the meantime impounded; and if such magistrate or justices shall be satisfied that the articles seized are not of the character stated in the warrant, or have not been kept for any of the purposes aforesaid, he or they shall forthwith direct them to be restored to the occupier of the house or other place in which they were seized.

2. Tender of Amends, &c.] No plaintiff shall recover in any action for any irregularity, trespass, or other wrongful proceeding made or committed in the execution of this Act, or in, under, or by virtue of any authority hereby given, if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made by or on behalf of the party who shall have committed such irregularity, trespass, or other wrongful proceeding, before such action brought; and in case no tender shall have been made it shall be lawful for the defendant in any such action, by leave of the Court where such action shall depend, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit, whereupon such proceeding, order, and adjudication shall be had and made in and by such Court as in other actions where defendants are allowed to pay money into court.

3. Limitation of Actions.] No action, suit, or information, or any other proceeding, of what nature soever, shall be brought against any person for anything done or omitted to be done in pursuance of this Act, or in the execution of the authorities under this Act, unless notice in writing shall be given by the party intending to prosecute such action, suit, information, or other proceeding, to the intended defendant, one calendar month at least before prosecuting the same, nor unless such action, suit, information, or other proceeding shall be brought or commenced within three calendar months next after the act or omission complained of, or in case there shall be a continuation of damage, then within three calendar months next after the doing such damage shall have ceased.

4. Appeal.] Any person aggrieved by any act or determination of such magistrate or justices in or concerning the execution of this Act, may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions for the county, riding, division, city, borough, or place in and for which such magistrate or justices shall have so acted, giving to the magistrate or justices of the peace whose act or determination shall be appealed against notice in writing of such appeal, and of the grounds thereof, within seven days after such act or determination and before the next general or quarter sessions, and entering within such seven days into a recognisance, with sufficient surety, before a justice of the peace for the county, city, borough, or place in which such act or determination shall have taken place, personally to appear and prosecute such appeal, and to abide the order of and pay such costs as shall be awarded by such court of quarter sessions or any adjournment thereof, and the Court at such general or quarter sessions shall hear and determine the matter of such appeal, and shall make such order therein as shall to the said Court seem meet; and such Court, upon hearing and finally determining such appeal, shall and may, according to their discretion, award such costs to the party appealing or appealed against as they shall think proper; and if such appeal be dismissed or decided against the appellant or be not prosecuted, such Court may order the articles seized forthwith to be destroyed: Provided always, that it shall not be lawful for the appellant on the hearing of any such appeal to go into or give evidence of any other grounds of appeal against any such order, act, or determination than those set forth in such notice of appeal.

5. Act not to extend to Scotland.] This Act shall not extend to Scotland.

CAP. LXXXIV.

An Act for confirming a Scheme of the Charity Commissioners for the College of God's Gift in Dulwich, in the County of Surrey, with certain Alterations. [25th August, 1857.

CAP. LXXXV.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England. [28th August, 1857.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law relating to divorce, and to constitute a court with exclusive jurisdiction in matters matrimonial in England, and with authority in certain cases to decree the dissolution of a marriage: Be it therefore enacted &c., as follows:—

1. Commencement of Act.] This Act shall come into operation on such day, not sooner than the 1st of January, 1858, as her Majesty shall by Order in Council appoint, provided that such Order be made one month at least previously to the day so to be appointed.

2. Jurisdiction in Matters Matrimonial now vested in Ecclesiastical Courts to cease.] As soon as this Act shall come into operation, all jurisdiction now exerciseable by any ecclesiastical court in England in respect of divorces à mensâ et thoro, suits of nullity of marriage, suits of jactitation of marriage, suits for restitution of conjugal rights, and in all causes, suits, and matters matrimonial, shall cease to be so exerciseable, except so far as relates to the granting of marriage licences, which may be granted as if this Act had not been passed.

3. The Court may enforce Decrees or Orders made before this Act comes into operation.] Any decree or order of any ecclesiastical court of competent jurisdiction which shall have been made before this Act comes into operation, in any cause or matter matrimonial, may be enforced or otherwise dealt with by the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes hereinafter mentioned, in the same way as if it had been originally made by the said Court under this Act.

4. As to Suits pending when this Act comes into operation.] All suits and proceedings in causes and matters matrimonial which at the time when this Act comes into operation shall be pending in any ecclesiastical court in England shall be transferred to, dealt with, and decided by the said Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, as if the same had been originally instituted in the said court.

5. Power to Judges whose Jurisdiction is determined to deliver written Judgments.] Provided, that if at the time when this Act comes into operation any cause or matter which would be transferred to the said Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes under the enactment hereinbefore contained shall have been heard before any judge having jurisdiction in relation to such cause or matter, and be then standing for judgment, such judge may, at any time within six weeks after the time when this Act comes into operation, give in to one of the registrars attending the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes a written judgment thereon signed by him; and a decree or order, as the case may require, shall be drawn up in pursuance of such judgment, and every such decree or order shall have the same force and effect as if it had been drawn up in pursuance of a judgment of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes on the day on which the same was delivered to the registrar, and shall be subject to appeal under this Act.

6. Jurisdiction over Causes Matrimonial to be exercised by the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.] As soon as this Act shall come into operation, all jurisdiction now vested in or exerciseable by any ecclesiastical court or person in England in respect of divorces à mensâ et thoro, suits of nullity of marriage, suits for restitution of conjugal rights, or jactitation of marriage, and in all causes, suits, and matters matrimonial, except in respect of marriage licences, shall belong to and be vested in her Majesty, and such jurisdiction, together with the jurisdiction conferred by this Act, shall be exercised in the name of her Majesty in a court of record, to be called "The Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes."

7. No Decree for Divorce à Mensâ et Thoro to be made hereafter, but a Judicial Separation.] No decree shall hereafter be made for a divorce à mensâ et thoro; but in all cases in which a decree for a divorce à mensâ et thoro might now be pronounced, the Court may pronounce a decree for a judicial separation, which shall have the same force and the same consequences as a divorce à mensâ et thoro now has.

8. Judges of the Court.] The Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, the senior puisne judge for the time being in each of the three last-mentioned courts, and the judge of her Majesty's Court of Probate constituted by any Act of the present session, shall be the judges of the said court.

9. Judge of the Court of Probate to be the Judge Ordinary, and shall have full Authority, &c.] The judge of the Court of Probate shall be called the judge ordinary of the said Court, and shall have full authority, either alone or with one or more of the other judges of the said court, to hear and determine all matters arising therein, except petitions for the dissolving of or annulling marriage, and applications for new trials of questions or issues before a jury, bills of exception, special verdicts, and special cases, and, except as aforesaid, may exercise all the powers and authority of the said Court.

10. Petitions for Dissolution of a Marriage, &c., to be heard by Three Judges.] All petitions, either for the dissolution or for a sentence of nullity of marriage, and applications for new trials of questions or issues before a jury, shall be heard and determined by three or more judges of the said court, of whom the judge of the Court of Probate shall be one.

11. Who to act as Judge during Absence of the Judge Ordinary.] During the temporary absence of the judge ordinary, the Lord Chancellor may, by writing under his hand, authorise the Master of the Rolls, the judge of the Admiralty Court, or either of the Lords Justices, or any Vice-Chancellor, or any judge of the superior courts of law at Westminster, to act as judge ordinary of the said Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes; and the Master of the Rolls, the judge of the Admiralty Court, Lord Justice, Vice-Chancellor, or judge of the superior courts, shall, when so acting, have and exercise all the jurisdiction, power, and authority which might have been exercised by the judge ordinary.

12. Sittings of the Court.] The Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes shall hold its sittings at such place or places in London or Middlesex or elsewhere as her Majesty in Council shall from time to time appoint.

13. Seal of the Court.] The Lord Chancellor shall direct a seal to be made for the said Court, and may direct the same to be broken, altered, and renewed at his discretion; and all decrees and orders, or copies of decrees or orders of the said Court, sealed with the said seal, shall be received in evidence.

14. Officers of the Court.] The registrars and other officers of the principal registry of the Court of Probate shall attend the sittings of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, and assist in the proceedings thereof, as shall be directed by the rules and orders under this Act.

15. Power to Advocates, Barristers, &c., of Ecclesiastical and Superior Courts to practise in the Court.] All persons admitted to practise as advocates or proctors respectively in any ecclesiastical court in England, and all barristers, attorneys, and solicitors entitled to practise in the superior courts at Westminster, shall be entitled to practise in the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes; and such advocates and barristers shall have the same relative rank and precedence which they now have in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, unless and until her Majesty shall otherwise order.

16. Sentence of Judicial Separation may be obtained by Husband or Wife for Adultery, &c.] A sentence of judicial separation (which shall have the effect of a divorce à mensâ et thoro under the existing law, and such other legal effect as herein mentioned) may be obtained, either by the husband or the wife, on the ground of adultery, or cruelty, or desertion without cause for two years and upwards.

17. Application for Restitution of Conjugal Rights or Judicial Separation may be made by Husband or Wife by Petition to Court, &c.] Application for restitution of conjugal rights or for judicial separation on any one of the grounds aforesaid may be made by either husband or wife, by petition to the Court, or to any judge of assize at the assizes held for the county in which the husband and wife reside or last resided together, and which judge of assize is hereby authorised and required to hear and determine such petition, according to the rules and regulations which shall be made under the authority of this Act; and the Court or judge to which such petition is addressed, on being satisfied of the truth of the allegations therein contained, and that there is no legal ground why the same should not be granted, may decree such restitution of conjugal rights or judicial separation accordingly, and, where the application is by the wife, may make any order for alimony which shall be deemed just: Provided always, that any judge of assize to whom such petition shall be presented may refer the same to any of her Majesty's counsel or serjeant-at-law named in the commission of assize or Nisi Prius, and such counsel or serjeant shall, for the purpose of deciding upon the matters of such petition, have all the powers that any such judge would have had by virtue of this Act or otherwise.

18. Powers of Judges of Assize for Purposes of deciding Applications under Authority of this Act.] For the purpose of hearing and deciding all applications under the authority of this Act, the judge of assize or person nominated by him as aforesaid shall be entitled to avail himself of the services of all officers, and use and exercise all powers and authorities, which the court of assize may employ, use, and exercise for the determination of causes and other matters now usually heard and decided by them respectively; and the said judge of assize or other person shall also for the purpose have and be entitled to exercise all the powers and authorities hereby given to the Court for the hearing and deciding applications made to it, and also the powers hereby given to the Court to make provision touching the custody, maintenance, and education of children; and every order made by any judge of assize or other person under the authority of this Act may, on the application of the person obtaining the same, be entered as an order of the Court, and when so entered shall have the same force and effect, and be enforced in the same manner, as if such order had been originally made by the Court.

19. The Court to regulate Fees on Proceedings before Judges, &c.] The Court shall from time to time fix and regulate the fees which shall be payable upon all proceedings under any application to a judge of assize under this Act; and such fees shall be received in money, for their own benefit, by the persons to whom or for whose use the same shall be directed to be paid.

20. Orders may be reviewed.] Any order so entered as aforesaid may be reviewed, and either altered or reversed on appeal to the judge ordinary of the Court, but such appeal shall not stay the intermediate execution of the order, unless the judge ordinary shall so direct, who shall have power, if such appeal be dismissed or abandoned, to order the appellant to pay to the other party the full costs incurred by reason of such appeal.

21. Wife deserted by her Husband may apply to a Police Magistrate or Justices in Petty Sessions for Protection.] A wife deserted by her husband may at any time after such desertion, if resident within the metropolitan district, apply to a police magistrate, or, if resident in the country, to justices in petty sessions, or in either case to the Court, for an order to protect any money or property she may acquire by her own lawful industry, and property which she may become possessed of, after such desertion, against her husband or his creditors, or any person claiming under him; and such magistrate or justices or Court, if satisfied of the fact of such desertion, and that the same was without reasonable cause, and that the wife is maintaining herself by her own industry or property, may make and give to the wife an order protecting her earnings and property acquired since the commencement of such desertion, from her husband and all creditors and persons claiming under him, and such earnings and property shall belong to the wife as if she were a feme sole: Provided always, that every such order, if made by a police magistrate or justices at petty sessions, shall, within ten days after the making thereof, be entered with the registrar of the county court within whose jurisdiction the wife is resident; and that it shall be lawful for the husband, and any creditor or other person claiming under him, to apply to the Court, or to the magistrate or justices by whom such order was made, for the discharge thereof: Provided also, that if the husband or any creditor of or person claiming under the husband shall seize or continue to hold any property of the wife after notice of any such order, he shall be liable, at the suit of the wife (which she is hereby empowered to bring), to restore the specific property, and also for a sum equal to double the value of the property so seized or held after such notice as aforesaid:

If any such order of protection be made, the wife shall, during the continuance thereof, be and be deemed to have been, during such desertion of her, in the like position in all respects, with regard to property and contracts, and suing and being sued, as she would be under this Act if she obtained a decree of judicial separation.

22. Court to act on Principles of the Ecclesiastical Courts.] In all suits and proceedings, other than proceedings to dissolve any marriage, the said Court shall proceed and act and give relief on principles and rules which in the opinion of the said Court shall be as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the ecclesiastical courts have heretofore acted and given relief, but subject to the provisions herein contained and to the rules and orders under this Act.

23. Decree of Separation obtained during the Absence of Husband or Wife may be reversed.] Any husband or wife, upon the application of whose wife or husband, as the case may be, a decree of judicial separation has been pronounced, may, at any time thereafter, present a petition to the Court praying for a reversal of such decree on the ground that it was obtained in his or her absence, and that there was reasonable ground for the alleged desertion, where desertion was the ground of such decree; and the Court may, on being satisfied of the truth of the allegations of such petition, reverse the decree accordingly, but the reversal thereof shall not prejudice or affect the rights or remedies which any other person would have had in case such reversal had not been decreed, in respect of any debts, contracts, or acts of the wife incurred, entered into, or done between the times of the sentence of separation and of the reversal thereof.

24. Court may direct Payment of Alimony to Wife or to her Trustee.] In all cases in which the Court shall make any decree or order for alimony, it may direct the same to be paid either to the wife herself or to any trustee on her behalf, to be approved by the Court, and may impose any terms or restrictions which to the Court may seem expedient, and may from time to time appoint a new trustee, if for any reason it shall appear to the Court expedient so to do.

25. In case of Judicial Separation the Wife to be considered a Feme Sole with respect to Property she may acquire, &c.] In every case of a judicial separation the wife shall, from the date of the sentence and whilst the separation shall continue, be considered as a feme sole with respect to property of every description which she may acquire or which may come to or devolve upon her; and such property may be disposed of by her in all respects as a feme sole, and on her decease the same shall, in case she shall die intestate, go as the same would have gone if her husband had been then dead; provided, that if any such wife should again cohabit with her husband, all such property as she may be entitled to when such cohabitation shall take place shall be held to her separate use, subject, however, to any agreement in writing made between herself and her husband whilst separate.

26. Also, for Purposes of Contract and suing.] In every case of a judicial separation the wife shall, whilst so separated, be considered as a feme sole for the purposes of contract, and wrongs and injuries, and suing and being sued in any civil proceeding; and her husband shall not be liable in respect of any engagement or contract she may have entered into, or for any wrongful act or omission by her, or for any costs she may incur as plaintiff or defendant; provided, that where upon any such judicial separation alimony has been decreed or ordered to be paid to the wife, and the same shall not be duly paid by the husband, he shall be liable for necessaries supplied for her use; provided also, that nothing shall prevent the wife from joining, at any time during such separation, in the exercise of any joint power given to herself and her husband.

27. On Adultery of Wife or Incest, &c., of Husband, Petition for Dissolution of Marriage may be presented.—As to "Incestuous Adultery."] It shall be lawful for any husband to present a petition to the said Court, praying that his marriage may be dissolved, on the ground that his wife has since the celebration thereof been guilty of adultery; and it shall be lawful for any wife to present a petition to the said Court, praying that her marriage may be dissolved, on the ground that since the celebration thereof her husband has been guilty of incestuous adultery, or of bigamy with adultery, or of rape, or of sodomy or bestiality, or of adultery coupled with such cruelty as without adultery would have entitled her to a divorce à mensâ et thoro, or of adultery coupled with desertion, without reasonable excuse, for two years or upwards; and every such petition shall state as distinctly as the nature of the case permits the facts on which the claim to have such marriage dissolved is founded: Provided that for the purposes of this Act incestuous adultery shall be taken to mean adultery committed by a husband with a woman with whom if his wife were dead he could not lawfully contract marriage by reason of her being within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity; and bigamy shall be taken to mean marriage of any person, being married, to any other person during the life of the former husband or wife, whether the second marriage shall have taken place within the dominions of her Majesty or elsewhere.

28. Adulterer to be a Co-Respondent.—Cause may be tried by a Jury.] Upon any such petition presented by a husband the petitioner shall make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent to the said petition, unless on special grounds, to be allowed by the Court, he shall be excused from so doing; and on every petition presented by a wife for dissolution of marriage the Court, if it see fit, may direct that the person with whom the husband is alleged to have committed adultery be made a respondent; and the parties or either of them may insist on having the contested matters of fact tried by a jury as hereinafter mentioned.

29. Court to be satisfied of Absence of Collusion.] Upon any such petition for the dissolution of a marriage, it shall be the duty of the Court to satisfy itself, so far as it reasonably can, not only as to the facts alleged, but also whether or no the petitioner has been in any manner accessory to or conniving at the adultery, or has condoned the same, and shall also inquire into any counter-charge which may be made against the petitioner.

30. Dismissal of Petition.] In case the Court, on the evidence in relation to any such petition, shall not be satisfied that the alleged adultery has been committed, or shall find that the petitioner has during the marriage been accessory to or conniving at the adultery of the other party to the marriage, or has condoned the adultery complained of, or that the petition is presented or prosecuted in collusion with either of the respondents, then and in any of the said cases the Court shall dismiss the said petition.

31. Power to Court to pronounce Decree for dissolving Marriage.] In case the Court shall be satisfied on the evidence that the case of the petitioner has been proved, and shall not find that the petitioner has been in any manner accessory to or conniving at the adultery of the other party to the marriage, or has condoned the adultery complained of, or that the petition is presented or prosecuted in collusion with either of the respondents, then the Court shall pronounce a decree declaring such marriage to be dissolved: Provided always, that the Court shall not be bound to pronounce such decree if it shall find that the petitioner has during the marriage been guilty of adultery, or if the petitioner shall, in the opinion of the Court, have been guilty of unreasonable delay in presenting or prosecuting such petition, or of cruelty towards the other party to the marriage, or of having deserted or wilfully separated himself or herself from the other party before the adultery complained of, and without reasonable excuse, or of such wilful neglect or misconduct as has conduced to the adultery.

32. Alimony.] The Court may, if it shall think fit, on any such decree, order that the husband shall to the satisfaction of the Court secure to the wife such gross sum of money, or such annual sum of money for any term not exceeding her own life, as, having regard to her fortune (if any), to the ability of the husband, and to the conduct of the parties, it shall deem reasonable, and for that purpose may refer it to any one of the conveyancing counsel of the Court of Chancery to settle and approve of a proper deed or instrument to be executed by all necessary parties; and the said Court may in such case, if it shall see fit, suspend the pronouncing of its decree until such deed shall have been duly executed; and upon any petition for dissolution of marriage the Court shall have the same power to make interim orders for payment of money, by way of alimony or otherwise, to the wife, as it would have in a suit instituted for judicial separation.

33. Husband may claim Damages from Adulterers.] Any husband may, either in a petition for dissolution of marriage or for judicial separation, or in a petition limited to such object only, claim damages from any person on the ground of his having committed adultery with the wife of such petitioner, and such petition shall be served on the alleged adulterer and the wife, unless the Court shall dispense with such service, or direct some other service to be substituted; and the claim made by every such petition shall be heard and tried on the same principles, in the same manner, and subject to the same or the like rules and regulations as actions for criminal conversation are now tried and decided in courts of common law; and all the enactments herein contained with reference to the hearing and decision of petitions to the Court shall, so far as may be necessary, be deemed applicable to the hearing and decision of petitions presented under this enactment; and the damages to be recovered on any such petition shall in all cases be ascertained by the verdict of a jury, although the respondents or either of them may not appear; and after the verdict has been given the Court shall have power to direct in what manner such damages shall be paid or applied, and to direct that the whole or any part thereof shall be settled for the benefit of the children (if any) of the marriage, or as a provision for the maintenance of the wife.

34. Power to Court to order Adulterer to pay Costs.] Whenever in any petition presented by a husband the alleged adulterer shall have been made a co-respondent, and the adultery shall have been established, it shall be lawful for the Court to order the adulterer to pay the whole or any part of the costs of the proceedings.

35. Power to Court to make Orders as to Custody of Children.] In any suit or other proceeding for obtaining a judicial separation or a decree of nullity of marriage, and on any petition for dissolving a marriage, the Court may from time to time, before making its final decree, make such interim orders, and may make such provision in the final decree, as it may deem just and proper with respect to the custody, maintenance, and education of the children the marriage of whose parents is the subject of such suit or other proceeding, and may, if it shall think fit, direct proper proceedings to be taken for placing such children under the protection of the Court of Chancery.

36. Questions of Fact may be tried before the Court.] In questions of fact arising in proceedings under this Act it shall be lawful for, but, except as hereinbefore provided, not obligatory upon, the Court to direct the truth thereof to be determined before itself, or before any one or more of the judges of the said court, by the verdict of a special or common jury.

37. Where a Question is ordered to be tried a Jury may be summoned as in the Common Law Courts.—Rights to Challenge.] The Court, or any judge thereof, may make all such rules and orders upon the sheriff or any other person for procuring the attendance of a special or common jury for the trial of such question as may now be made by any of the superior courts of common law at Westminster, and may also make any other orders which to such Court or judge may seem requisite; and every such jury shall consist of persons possessing the like qualifications, and shall be struck, summoned, balloted for, and called in like manner, as if such jury were a jury for the trial of any cause in any of the said superior courts; and every juryman so summoned shall be entitled to the same rights, and subject to the same duties and liabilities, as if he had been duly summoned for the trial of any such cause in any of the said superior courts; and every party to any such proceeding shall be entitled to the same rights as to challenge and otherwise as if he were a party to any such cause.

38. Such Question to be reduced into Writing, and a Jury to be sworn to try it.—Judge to have same Powers as at Nisi Prius.] When any such question shall be so ordered to be tried such question shall be reduced into writing in such form as the Court shall direct, and at the trial the jury shall be sworn to try the said question, and a true verdict to give thereon according to the evidence; and upon every such trial the Court or judge shall have the same powers, jurisdiction, and authority as any judge of any of the said superior courts sitting at Nisi Prius.

39. Bill of Exceptions, Special Verdict, and Special Case.] Upon the trial of any such question or of any issue under this Act a bill of exceptions may be tendered, and a general or special verdict or verdicts, subject to a special case, may be returned, in like manner as in any cause tried in any of the said superior courts; and every such bill of exceptions, special verdict, and special case respectively shall be stated, settled, and sealed in like manner as in any cause tried in any of the said superior courts, and where the trial shall not have been had in the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes shall be returned into such Court without any writ of error or other writ; and the matter of law in every such bill of exceptions, special verdict, and special case shall be heard and determined by the full Courts, subject to such right of appeal as is hereinafter given in other cases.

40. Court may direct Issues to try any Fact.] It shall be lawful for the Court to direct one or more issue or issues to be tried in any court of common law, and either before a judge of assize in any county or at the sittings for the trial of causes in London or Middlesex, and either by a special or common jury, in like manner as is now done by the Court of Chancery.

41. Affidavit in support of a Petition.] Every person seeking a decree of nullity of marriage, or a decree of judicial separation, or a dissolution of marriage, or decree in a suit of jactitation of marriage, shall, together with the petition or other application for the same, file an affidavit verifying the same so far as he or she is able to do so, and stating that there is not any collusion or connivance between the deponent and the other party to the marriage.

42. Service of Petition.] Every such petition shall be served on the party to be affected thereby, either within or without her Majesty's dominions, in such manner as the Court shall by any general or special order from time to time direct, and for that purpose the Court shall have all the powers conferred by any statute on the Court of Chancery: Provided always, that the said Court may dispense with such service altogether in case it shall seem necessary or expedient so to do.

43. Examination of Petitioner.] The Court may, if it shall think fit, order the attendance of the petitioner, and may examine him or her, or permit him or her to be examined or cross-examined on oath on the hearing of any petition, but no such petitioner shall be bound to answer any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery.

44. Adjournment.] The Court may from time to time adjourn the hearing of any such petition, and may require further evidence thereon, if it shall see fit so to do.

45. Court may order Settlement of Property for Benefit of innocent Party and Children of Marriage.] In any case in which the Court shall pronounce a sentence of divorce or judicial separation for adultery of the wife, if it shall be made appear to the Court that the wife is entitled to any property either in possession or reversion, it shall be lawful for the Court, if it shall think proper, to order such settlement as it shall think reasonable to be made of such property or any part thereof, for the benefit of the innocent party, and of the children of the marriage, or either or any of them.

46. Mode of taking Evidence.] Subject to such rules and regulations as may be established as herein provided, the witnesses in all proceedings before the Court where their attendance can be had shall be sworn and examined orally in open court: Provided, that parties, except as hereinbefore provided, shall be at liberty to verify their respective cases in whole or in part by affidavit, but so that the deponent in every such affidavit shall, on the application of the opposite party, or by direction of the Court, be subject to be cross-examined by or on behalf of the opposite party orally in open court, and after such cross-examination may be re-examined orally in open court as aforesaid by or on behalf of the party by whom such affidavit was filed.

47. Court may issue Commissions or give Orders for Examination of Witnesses Abroad or unable to attend.] Provided, that where a witness is out of the jurisdiction of the court, or where, by reason of his illness or from other circumstances, the Court shall not think fit to enforce the attendance of the witness in open court, it shall be lawful for the Court to order a commission to issue for the examination of such witness on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, or, if the witness be within the jurisdiction of the court, to order the examination of such witness on oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, before any officer of the said court, or other person to be named in such order for the purpose; and all the powers given to the courts of law at Westminster by the Acts of the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, and of the 1 Will. 4, c. 22, for enabling the courts of law at Westminster to issue commissions and give orders for the examination of witnesses in actions depending in such courts, and to enforce such examination, and all the provisions of the said Acts, and of any other Acts for enforcing or otherwise applicable to such examination and the witnesses examined, shall extend and be applicable to the court and to the examination of witnesses under the commissions and orders of the said Court, and to the witnesses examined, as if such court were one of the courts of law at Westminster, and the matter before it were an action pending in such court.

48. Rules of Evidence in Common Law Courts to be observed.] The rules of evidence observed in the superior courts of common law at Westminster shall be applicable to and observed in the trial of all questions of fact in the court.

49. Attendance of Witnesses on the Court.] The Court may, under its seal, issue writs of subpœna or subpœna duces tecum, commanding the attendance of witnesses at such time and place as shall be therein expressed; and such writs may be served in any part of Great Britain or Ireland; and every person served with such writ shall be bound to attend and to be sworn and give evidence in obedience thereto, in the same manner as if it had been a writ of subpœna or subpœna duces tecum issued from any of the said superior courts of common law in a cause pending therein, and served in Great Britain or Ireland, as the case may be: Provided that any petitioner required to be examined, or any person called as a witness or required or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition under or for the purposes of this Act, shall be permitted to make his solemn affirmation or declaration instead of being sworn in the circumstances and manner in which a person called as a witness or desiring to make an affidavit or deposition would be permitted so to do under the "Common Law Procedure Act, 1854," in cases within the provisions of that Act.

50. Penalties for false Evidence.] All persons wilfully deposing or affirming falsely in any proceeding before the Court shall be deemed to be guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to all the pains and penalties attached thereto.

51. Costs.] The Court, on the hearing of any suit, proceeding, or petition under this Act, and the House of Lords on the hearing of any appeal under this Act, may make such order as to costs as to such Court or House respectively may seem just: Provided always, that there shall be no appeal on the subject of costs only.

52. Enforcement of Orders and Decrees.] All decrees and orders to be made by the Court in any suit, proceeding, or petition to be instituted under authority of this Act shall be enforced and put in execution in the same or the like manner as the judgments, orders, and decrees of the High Court of Chancery may be now enforced and put in execution.

53. Power to make Rules, &c., for Procedure, and to alter them from Time to Time.] The Court shall make such rules and regulations concerning the practice and procedure under this Act as it may from time to time consider expedient, and shall have full power from time to time to revoke or alter the same.

54. Fees to be regulated.] The Court shall have full power to fix and regulate from time to time the fees payable upon all proceedings before it, all which fees shall be received, paid, and applied as herein directed: Provided always, that the said Court may make such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary and expedient for enabling persons to sue in the said court in formâ pauperis.

55. Appeal from the Judge Ordinary to the full Court.] Either party dissatisfied with any decision of the Court in any matter which, according to the provisions aforesaid, may be made by the judge ordinary alone, may, within three calendar months after the pronouncing thereof, appeal therefrom to the full Court, whose decision shall be final.

56. Appeal to the House of Lords in case of Petition for Dissolution of a Marriage.] Either party dissatisfied with the decision of the full Court on any petition for the dissolution of a marriage may, within three months after the pronouncing thereof, appeal therefrom to the House of Lords if Parliament be then sitting, or, if Parliament be not sitting at the end of such three months, then within fourteen days next after its meeting; and on the hearing of any such appeal the House of Lords may either dismiss the appeal or reverse the decree, or remit the case to the Court, to be dealt with in all respects as the House of Lords shall direct.

57. Liberty to Parties to marry again.—No Clergyman compelled to solemnise certain Marriages.] When the time hereby limited for appealing against any decree dissolving a marriage shall have expired, and no appeal shall have been presented against such decree, or when any such appeal shall have been dismissed, or when in the result of any appeal any marriage shall be declared to be dissolved, but not sooner, it shall be lawful for the respective parties thereto to marry again, as if the prior marriage had been dissolved by death: Provided always, that no clergyman in holy orders of the United Church of England and Ireland shall be compelled to solemnise the marriage of any person whose former marriage may have been dissolved on the ground of his or her adultery, or shall be liable to any suit, penalty, or censure for solemnising or refusing to solemnise the marriage of any such person.

58. If Minister of any Church, &c., refuses to perform Marriage Ceremony, any other Minister may perform such Service.] Provided always, that when any minister of any church or chapel of the United Church of England and Ireland shall refuse to perform such marriage service between any persons who but for such refusal would be entitled to have the same service performed in such church or chapel, such minister shall permit any other minister in holy orders of the said United Church, entitled to officiate within the diocese in which such church or chapel is situate, to perform such marriage service in such church or chapel.

59. No Action in England for Criminal Conversation.] After this Act shall have come into operation no action shall be maintainable in England for criminal conversation.

60. All Fees, except as herein provided, to be collected by Stamps.] None of the fees payable under this Act, except as herein expressly provided, shall be received in money, but every such fee shall be collected and received by a stamp denoting the amount of the fee which would otherwise be payable; and the fees to be so collected by stamps shall be "stamp duties," and be under the management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

61. Provisions concerning Stamps for the Court of Probate to be applicable to the Purposes of this Act.] The provisions contained in or referred to by an Act of the present session of Parliament, "to amend the Laws relating to Probates and Letters of Administration in England," and applicable to the collection and payment and accounts of the fees to be received thereunder by means of stamps, and to such stamps, and the vellum, parchment, or paper on or to which the same shall be impressed or affixed, and in relation to documents which ought to have stamps impressed thereon or affixed thereto, and to the punishment of persons for such wrongful acts as therein mentioned in relation to stamps, or fees or sums of money which ought to be collected by means of stamps, shall be applicable to and for the purposes of this Act, as if such provisions as aforesaid had been contained or referred to in this Act with reference to the like matters, and the court under this Act had been mentioned, instead of the Court of Probate, or the judge thereof, as the case may be.

62. Expenses of the Court to be paid out of Moneys to be provided by Parliament.] It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, out of such moneys as may be provided and appropriated by Parliament for the purpose, to cause to be paid all necessary expenses of the court under this Act, and other expenses which may be incurred in carrying the provisions of this Act into effect, except as herein otherwise provided.

63. Stamp Duty on Admission of Proctors, and annual Certificates.] The same amount of stamp duty as is now payable on the admission of a proctor to any ecclesiastical court shall be payable by every person to be admitted as a proctor in the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, or in the Court of Probate, who shall not have been previously admitted as a proctor in the other of such courts, or in an ecclesiastical or admiralty court, and have paid the stamp duty in respect thereof; and every person who shall practise as a proctor or as a solicitor or attorney in the said Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, or the said Court of Probate, shall obtain an annual certificate to authorise him so to do, under the Stamp Duty Acts, in the same manner as proctors practising in the ecclesiastical or admiralty courts, and solicitors and attorneys practising in her Majesty's courts at Westminster, are now required to do by the said Acts or any of them, and shall be subject and liable to the same penalties and disabilities in case of any neglect to obtain such certificates as such proctors, attorneys, and solicitors are now subject and liable to for any similar neglect, and as if the clauses and provisions of the said Acts in relation to such certificates had been inserted in this Act, and specially enacted in reference to proctors, solicitors, and attorneys practising in the said Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes and Court of Probate, provided that one annual certificate only shall be required for any one person, although he may practise in more than one of the capacities aforesaid, or in several of the courts hereinbefore mentioned.

64. Compensation to Proctors.] Every person who at the time of the passing of this Act has been duly admitted and is practising as a proctor in any ecclesiastical court in England shall, at the expiration of two years from and after the commencement of this Act, be entitled to make a claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury; and the said commissioners, by examination of evidence on oath (which they are hereby empowered to administer), or otherwise, as they shall think fit, shall inquire into and ascertain the loss, if any, of professional gains and profits in respect of suits relating to marriage and divorce sustained by such proctors respectively, upon a comparison in each case of the average clear gains of the three years immediately before the commencement of this Act, arising from such last-mentioned business, and the average of the same gains during the two years immediately succeeding the commencement of this Act; and the said commissioners shall in each case, having regard to all the circumstances, award a reasonable compensation, by way of annuity, to the persons sustaining such loss, during their lives, but in no case shall such annuity exceed one-half of the annual loss so ascertained as aforesaid; and such annuities shall be paid out of moneys to be annually provided by Parliament for that purpose, and the persons receiving the same shall be subject to the provisions contained in the 19th section of the Act of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 24.

65. As to Salary of Judge of Court of Probate, if appointed Judge of Court of Divorce, &c.] In case the judge of the Court of Probate established by any Act passed during the present session shall be appointed judge ordinary of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, the salary of such judge shall be the sum of five thousand pounds per annum; but such judge, if afterwards appointed judge of the Admiralty Court, shall not be entitled to any increase of salary.

66. Power to Secretary of State to order all Letters Patent, Records, &c., to be transmitted from all Ecclesiastical Courts.—Penalty on disobeying such Order.] Any one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State may order every judge, registrar, or other officer of any ecclesiastical court in England or the Isle of Man, or any other person having the public custody of or control over any letters patent, records, deeds, processes, acts, proceedings, books, documents, or other instrument relating to marriages, or to suits for divorce, nullity of marriage, restitution of conjugal rights, or to any other matters or causes matrimonial, except marriage licences, to transmit the same, at such times and in such manner, to such places in London or Westminster, and under such regulations, as the said Secretary of State may appoint; and if any judge, registrar, officer, or other person shall wilfully disobey such order he shall for the first offence forfeit the sum of one hundred pounds, to be recoverable by any registrar of the Court of Probate as a debt under this Act in any of the superior courts at Westminster, and for the second and subsequent offences the judge ordinary may commit the person so offending to prison for any period not exceeding three calendar months, provided that the warrant of committal be countersigned by one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, and the said persons so offending shall forfeit all claim to compensation under this Act.

67. Rules, &c., to be laid before Parliament.] All rules and regulations concerning practice or procedure, or fixing or regulating fees, which may be made by the Court under this Act, shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one month after the making thereof, if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not then sitting, within one month after the commencement of the then next session of Parliament.

68. Yearly Account of Fees, &c., to be laid before Parliament.] The judge ordinary of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes for the time being shall cause to be prepared in each year ending December 31 a return of all fees and moneys levied in such year on account of the fee fund of the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, and of any other fund under the authority of this Act; also, a return of the annual salaries of the said judge ordinary, and of all persons holding offices in the said court, with all the incidental expenses of the said court, whether the salaries and incidental expenses aforesaid be defrayed out of fees or out of any other moneys; also, a return of all superannuations, pensions, annuities, retiring allowances, and compensations made payable under this Act, in each year, stating the gross amount, and the amount in detail, of such charges: Provided always, that all such returns as aforesaid shall be presented to both Houses of Parliament on or before the 31st day of March in each year, if Parliament is then sitting, and if Parliament is not sitting, then such returns shall be presented within one month of the first meeting of Parliament after the 31st day of March in each year.
