THE CONSPIRATORS RIDING
FROM FINNERUP AFTER
THE MURDER OF KING
ERIC GLIPPING.

By OTTO BACHE. Canvas 99 × 148 inches.
Lent from the NATIONAL AND HISTORICAL MUSEUM IN FREDERIKSBORG CASTLE.

IN 1273 Eric, King of Denmark, being then 24, married the Princess Agnes of Brandenburg. Moody and untrustworthy, his pursuit was mainly that of pleasure, tournaments, love intrigues, and the chase. One of his highest officials was the Marshal, Stig Andersön, a man of noble birth and distinguished career, in whose absence in a campaign in Sweden, his beautiful wife was infamously dishonoured by the King. The infuriated husband, with his knights and a hundred men-at-arms, rode forthwith to Viborg, in Jutland, then the capital and seat of government, and openly proclaimed vengeance on the King. The opportunity came on 22nd November, 1286. At the close of a day's hunting, the King, with only two attendants, sought shelter for the night in the small town of Finnerup, five miles from Viborg, having to content themselves with the barn, as the hostel would not open its doors to strangers after nightfall. One of his two attendants was in league with the revengers, and omitted to bolt the door where they slept. On the hillside near was the avenging group, disguised as grey friars, and, riding down to the barn, seven of them broke in, the first to touch the King and run his sword through his body being Pablo Little, the aged father of the dishonoured lady. His companions madly followed and completed the murder by countless thrusts. Firing the barn, they then remounted and rode away in the direction of Skanderborg Castle, where dwelt Queen Agnes, and, at the castle gates, Andersön loudly made known that he had murdered the King. The greater part of the reign of the son who succeeded Eric was spent in pursuing this powerful man, in order to avenge his father's death.
